[para17] Counsel for the Board has given an undertaking that the special assessment levy will not take place until after the special meeting of unit owners, whenever it is held. Therefore, the Board argues that there is no compelling reason for the meeting to proceed on March 25 as opposed to April 6. Further, it is argued, the March 25th date is unfair to the Board because two members of the Board will be out of the country on that date and another is scheduled to be in hospital for tests. Also, the Board's solicitor will be unable to attend on March 25. Therefore, the Board submits that I should schedule the special meeting for one of the dates in April which is more convenient for the Board. I appreciate that there is a lot at stake for the individual Board members and that, particularly in light of some of the allegations made against them by unit owners, they wish to be present for the meeting. However, to grant the relief sought it would not be enough to simply direct that the meeting proceed on April 6. The meeting is already scheduled to proceed on March 25. In effect I am being asked to issue an injunction restraining the holding of a meeting which has been properly called under the Act. This is a direct interference with the rights of unit owners under the Act and should not be undertaken lightly.

[para19] The question for me to decide is whether I should intervene in that normal process and substitute my discretion for that of the unit owners at a duly constituted meeting. If I am of the view that fairness to the Board requires that the meeting be postponed, should I issue an order to that effect now and usurp the will of the unit owners who may be of a different view? I think that the answer to that question must be "No". The Act is structured to place decision making in respect of the affairs of condominium corporations in the hands of those directly affected, i.e. the unit owners. The court should be reluctant to interfere in the internal affairs of a corporation except in very exceptional circumstances. The circumstances of this case do not, in my opinion, warrant such intervention. It is for the members of the condominium corporation to decide how they wish to deal with this situation. I am mindful of the fact that not all of those people are parties to the proceeding before me. The only named respondents are the 147 unit owners who signed the requisition for the meeting. There are 441 unit owners who have been given notice of the meeting. Any order I make changing the date of the meeting will affect the rights of those individuals as well as the parties before the court. This is not a situation in which there is any evidence of irreparable harm to the interests of the Board members. If the majority of unit owners wish to proceed notwithstanding the absence of some of the Board members, I can see no basis for preemptively overruling their judgment on the matter. I am not in as good a position to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of an adjournment of the meeting as the attendees at the March 25th meeting will be. It may well be the case, for example, that some of the unit owners may not be available to attend the meeting on the April dates now proposed by the Board. There may also be difficulties with communicating the new date to all concerned or difficulties with the wording of the proxies if I simply direct that the meeting date be changed rather than allowing the matter to follow the normal process under the Act. The decision as to whether the meeting should be put off until April is, quite simply, better left to the determination of the parties involved as part of the democratic processes provided for in the legislation.

3. Conduct of the Meeting

[para20] It is clear from the material that there are strong differences of opinion between the Board and certain of the unit owners. It is also apparent that meetings in the past have been stormy and that there is a perception on each side that the tactics of the other have been unfair. The unit owners accuse the Board of bias and refusing to provide full information. The Board accuses the unit owners of being disruptive and preventing a rational and informed debate on the issues. The Board has brought forward a number of excellent suggestions for a process to be followed to avoid problems which have been experienced in the past. The Board proposes the appointment of an experienced and completely neutral chairperson for the meeting, a secret ballot for the vote on the removal of the current Board and the appointment of any replacement Board, the appointment of three scrutineers from each of the two competing camps to oversee the balloting, a controlled agenda with equal time for the Board and the disgruntled unit owners group to present their positions, and restrictions on the length of time permitted for each unit member to speak at the meeting. These are all reasonable and constructive suggestions which are likely to promote a rational debate and an informed vote. Indeed, there is a fair degree of consensus on these points as between counsel for the Board and counsel for a significant proportion of the requisitionists.

[para21] However, it is not enough for me to be satisfied that these are good ideas. I must be satisfied that the circumstances warrant a court order imposing these terms on the meeting. Again, there are rights of individuals not before the court to be considered. If I were to order that there be a three minute limit on all individual speakers at the meeting, I would be restricting the rights of individual unit owners who are not parties to these proceedings. Even if I direct that any such order has no impact on the rights of non-parties and leave it to the chair of the meeting to deal with them, the chair will be working within a structure imposed by the court and fairness to the individuals covered by the court order may well have an impact on the rights accorded to others at the meeting. The same difficulty arises if I appoint the chair for the meeting as I will be usurping the right of non-parties to either be the chair or to nominate a different chair.

[para22] Accordingly, although I recognize the importance of an orderly structure for the meeting and while I consider the suggestions made to be reasonable and directed towards that end, I do not consider that it is appropriate for me to impose these terms by court order. There is nothing to prevent counsel for the main protagonists from working out an agreement prior to the meeting as to how they propose to deal with these various issues, subject to ratification at the meeting. Such an agreement would assist in ensuring that the meeting itself is focused on the real areas of dispute and doesn't get sidetracked into bickering over the procedural issues. A key point is the acceptance by both sides, prior to the meeting, of an impartial chair person. If the parties are unable to agree on these matters, I would urge them to try mediation. However, I do not consider it necessary or appropriate for these matters to be resolved by court order.

D. ORDER

[para23] In the result, the application is dismissed. It was not, however, unreasonable for the Board to have commenced the proceeding and the process may well have been constructive in focusing the parties on some of the procedural matters which need to be addressed prior to the meeting. The Board was successful in convincing me on the principal issue of jurisdiction and has, in my view, taken a reasonable position throughout. However, whether or not to grant the relief sought is a discretionary matter and I have declined in these circumstances to intervene. In these circumstances, it seems to me that it is appropriate to make no order as to costs. However, if the parties are not satisfied that this is the appropriate costs disposition they may make written submissions on that point. No doubt the parties will be busy with preparations for the meeting in the next short while. If one party makes a written submission on costs by April 5, 1999, the other party may submit a written reply by April 12, 1999. If no written submissions are made by April 5, 1999, there shall be no costs.

Heard: March 11-13, 1998. Judgment: July 28, 1998. (45 pp.)

Counsel: Stephen Schwartz, for the plaintiffs (purchasers). Aubrey Kauffman and Glenn Grenier, for Pacific Mall Developments Inc. and Torgan Properties Inc., (vendors).

[para1] HIMEL J.:-- Pacific Mall, a condominium shopping centre, was marketed to the Chinese community of the Greater Toronto area in 1993. This project received an overwhelming reception and the units were sold out within weeks. Certain of the purchasers, however, were dissatisfied and unwilling to proceed with the transactions. They applied for and received certificates of pending litigation and most of those units have not been sold or leased.

[para2] The vendor, Pacific Mall/The Torgan Group, is suing for the balance of the purchase price, fees and expenses. On these motions before the court, they apply for orders discharging the certificates of pending litigation.

[para3] The purchasers want to have the contracts set aside and claim damages and the return of their deposits. They also move for summary judgment on the basis that the vendor did not close the transactions within the time stipulated under the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. Two of the purchasers apply for certificates of pending litigation.

BACKGROUND

[para4] The Pacific Mall project is a large commercial condominium consisting of a shopping centre located at Steeles Avenue East and Kennedy Road in the Town of Markham. Marketing of the concept was done in 1993, construction began in 1995, interim occupancy occurred for some units in August of 1996 and registration as York Region Condominium Corporation No. 890 took place on September 2, 1997. The project was targeted to the Chinese community both as owners and shoppers and received a very favourable reception. The mall, consisting of approximately 250,000 square feet, was to be a two storey enclosed structure with approximately 230 small to medium size shops on the ground floor and with a second floor consisting mainly of restaurants (the purchasers say exclusively restaurants). The design included glass back walls to enable some visibility between the two floors.

[para7] It is also the position of the vendor that from the outset, the purchasers on the second floor were made aware that they were buying a shell with a rear glass wall and no storefront overlooking the ground floor, with the idea that the purchasers would configure the floor plans of units as they wished and, in some cases, combine units. The vendor's view is that the substance of the contract was delivered. Following substantial completion, an interim closing was scheduled. Some of the purchasers interim closed; others did not. Because of the nature of condominium transactions, purchasers' interim closings are done when the unit is ready for occupancy or possession; a final closing is done when the documentation is ready for registration of title. With respect to these units, the vendor argues that Pacific Mall was ready for occupancy in August, 1996. Certain purchasers refused to interim close because they took the position that they did not agree the units were substantially completed. Other purchasers expressed certain concerns about the units, objected as to whether they were substantially complete but interim closed nonetheless. Later, they defaulted by stopping payment on post-dated cheques.

[para8] The purchasers allege that they were introduced to the Pacific Mall project by agents of Living Realty (except for Cho) and that the agents made certain material representations which caused them to enter into the agreements of purchase and sale. Those material facts included that: (1) the second floor of the mall would be for restaurants exclusively; (2) there would be public washrooms on the second floor; (3) there would be more than 40 units operating as restaurants on the second floor; (4) the purchasers were being asked to sign a standard form agreement drafted by the Torgan Group and therefore, did not need to read it; and (5) the project was to be completed by the spring of 1995.

[para9] The purchasers also allege that there was a failure to disclose material provisions in the agreements. Examples of these include: (1) that the units were subject to the declaration description and bylaws of the condominium corporation and that the agreements were examined by the purchasers, which they claim they did not read; (2) that Schedule "A" permits the units to be used for purposes other than restaurants; (3) that parking would be leased on terms which were not disclosed; and (4) that the agreement purports to take away the right to sue for various matters.

[para10] The purchasers say they relied on Living Realty agents and trusted them to bring to their attention all material information. Mr. Cho, who claims he dealt directly with Eli Swirsky of the Torgan Group, also alleges that he was told certain material facts about the project and not advised of certain provisions of the agreements which would have affected his decision about entering into this transaction.

[para11] In summary, the purchasers' position is that they did not receive what they bargained for and that the project was not constructed as represented. The main concerns are that there are no public washrooms on the second floor, the design of the second floor is not conducive to its operation as a food court, that there are no storage facilities, access for deliveries and disposal of waste is inadequate and that they were not told of an extra fee for the grease trap and fire-rated ceiling.

THE PARTIES TO THE LITIGATION

[para12] Actions were brought by the vendor against the purchasers for failure to close the transaction and seeking payment of occupancy fees and the balance of the purchase price. Statements of defence and counterclaims were filed claiming that the deposit monies should be returned, that the agreement is at an end and for damages.

[para13] There are three types of purchasers involved in the litigation. Group "A" purchasers did not complete the interim occupancy closing of their units and were sued in March of 1997. They have paid approximately 30% of the purchase price in addition to other charges and fees. In order to protect those funds paid, the purchasers sought and obtained certificates of pending litigation through ex parte motions made on October 3, 1997. The purchasers in this category are Lo/leong, 974755/Lau, Royal Lalique/Lau and Deborah Ho.

[para17] Tiao Hang Cho has brought a motion which seeks to have the vendor deposit monies in trust as he cannot register a certificate of pending litigation due to the sale of his units.

[para18] The defendants in these actions are the vendor, Pacific Mall Developments Inc. and Torgan Properties Inc. (carrying on business as The Torgan Group) and Living Realty Inc., the realtor who sold the units. Living Realty did not participate in the motions before this court.

THE NATURE OF THE MOTIONS

[para19] There are eleven sets of motions consisting of seventeen motions which were argued before me. The vendor is requesting an order discharging the certificates of pending litigation which were obtained ex parte. In the alternative, the vendor seeks an order requiring the purchasers to post security with the court for the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the units as a condition of maintaining the certificates of pending litigation. The purchasers are opposing the discharge motions and submit that if the certificates are discharged, it should only be on terms where alternate security is posted. The purchasers have also brought cross motions for summary judgment for the return of monies paid to the vendor on the basis that the vendor failed to convey title by the time stipulated under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and as a result, the agreement is at an end and all monies should be returned to the purchasers. Finally, the purchasers are requesting certificates of pending litigation on notice as against two units owned by Zhang and Sit.

[para20] In order to advance the argument of these motions, counsel made certain stipulations and agreements. The first is that they agreed that there are genuine issues to be tried between the parties. Secondly, they agreed that cross-examinations were not needed but the parties may refer to affidavits filed which are not tested. Therefore, allegations made on the affidavits should be taken as asserted. Third, the purchasers agreed for the purposes of the motion that they were not seeking specific performance with an abatement of the purchase price. They are simply seeking termination and a return of the deposit. Finally, counsel agreed that there would be one main factum and brief supplementary facta which addressed the facts that are unique to the particular case. There are also two main affidavits used on the ex parte motions to which reference was made throughout argument of these motions. It is conceded that the motion for summary judgment is on a point of law only.

THE MOTIONS TO DISCHARGE THE CERTIFICATES OF PENDING LITIGATION

(a) Factual Background

[para21] Pacific Mall moves to have the certificates of pending litigation issued on an ex parte basis on September 26, 1997 and October 3, 1997 discharged.

[para22] The events prior to the bringing of the motions for certificates of pending litigation are summarized below:

1. Pacific Mall began actions in March of 1997 for damages as against the Group "A" purchasers who refused to interim close. The actions alleged breaches of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale and the claim was for the balance of the purchase price and the interim occupancy fees which were required under the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. Group "A" retained counsel, delivered statements of defence and took the position that the properties were not substantially completed by January 18, 1995 and that the agreements were terminated and monies paid as deposits by the purchasers should be returned.

2. During June of 1997, Ms. Laidlaw, counsel acting for the purchasers, wrote to Mr. Kauffman, counsel for the vendor, advising she was taking over representation of a number of purchasers who had not closed and asked Mr. Kauffman not to deliver defences to the original counterclaim. She also asked for his indulgence as she was taking a three week vacation. (Mr. Kauffman suggests that she sought this indulgence so she could amend the pleadings, plead misrepresentation and claim specific performance which was necessary for the motion for certificates of pending litigation). 3. A settlement meeting took place on August 6, 1997.

4. Ms. Laidlaw advised Mr. Kauffman on September 15, 1997 that she was changing law firms and would be delivering pleadings on behalf of her clients.

5. On September 25, 1997 Ms. Laidlaw issued a statement of claim on behalf of Group "B" purchasers who interim closed but did not complete the final closing and sought specific performance with abatement of the purchase price and certificates of pending litigation.

6. On September 26, 1997 orders were made ex parte granting the plaintiffs and other Group "B" purchasers, leave to issue certificates of pending litigation.

7. Certificates were registered on title on September 29, 1997.

8. Mr. Kauffman spoke to Ms. Laidlaw on September 30, 1997 but she did not tell him she had obtained the certificates of pending litigation for certain of the units, intended to amend the actions started by the former counsel to now claim specific performance nor that she was moving ex parte to obtain certificates of pending litigation on certain of the other units.

9. Ms. Laidlaw amended the defence and counterclaim for Group "A" purchasers and claimed specific performance without notice at that time to Mr. Kauffman.

10. Ms. Laidlaw sent copies of the orders and certificates of pending litigation that she obtained on September 26, 1997 to Mr. Kauffman by regular mail.

11. Ms. Laidlaw filed an affidavit sworn on September 25, 1997 in support of the ex parte motions before the Master on September 26, 1997. Mr. Kauffman objects to the quality of that evidence and argues that there was no sworn evidence before the Master on:

- (a) the background of the purchasers;
- (b) the circumstances under which the purchasers learned of the transaction;
- (c) the circumstances surrounding the execution of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale;
- (d) legal representation of the purchasers between the execution of the agreements and the failure to interim close or close;
- (e) specific provisions of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, such as the "entire agreement" clause.

12. Mr. Kauffman points to the affidavit material filed by the vendor in, for example, the Leung case when the motion to vacate the certificate of pending litigation was brought. The material sets forth in detail the background of the purchaser, how the purchaser came to know about the project, the circumstances surrounding the signing of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, the information meeting, the legal representation received during the transaction, the various extensions that were negotiated, and in particular, the lack of complaint about the execution of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and its enforceability. He argues that this plaintiff is in default of several provisions of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale including:

- (a) he has failed to pay interim occupancy fees on a monthly basis;
- (b) he has failed to close the transaction and pay the balance of the purchase price, and
- (c) he has never indicated he is ready, willing and able to close the transaction.

[para23] The vendors' submission is that the motions for certificates of pending litigation did not have to proceed ex parte. However, in that counsel chose to proceed on that basis, counsel must be held to the highest standard of disclosure.

[para24] In addition to the deficiencies in the affidavit material set forth above, Mr. Kauffman points out that the evidence before the Master on September 26 and October 3, 1997 was problematic in that:

1. There was no sworn evidence about the dispute between the parties.
2. There was no attempt to disclose the position of the vendor.
3. There was no evidence of the appendices to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale being initialled or of the deposits being paid without protest (which, in Mr. Kauffman's view, affirmed the contract);
4. There was no evidence of the extensive correspondence between the parties' solicitors in connection with the closing of the transaction and availability of legal advice. 5. There was no evidence that the purchasers paid for the fire rated ceiling and grease trap;
6. There was no evidence that those who interim closed, such as Leung, had full knowledge of the physical state of the unit and the project at that time;
7. By way of example, with respect to Leung, there was no mention of his educational background and that he was a business person introduced to the project by his friend.
8. There is no reference in the affidavit material filed to the specific provisions of the agreement. In particular, the provision set out in Paragraph 20 of Schedule A prohibiting against the registration of a certificate of pending litigation was not pointed out to the Master.
9. Specifically, with reference to the affidavit material filed before the Master for the October 3 motion, Mr. Kauffman submits that it did not set forth the nature of the dispute, the circumstances of the purchasers or the vendor's position, nor did it highlight the significance of the failure to interim close for the Group "A" Purchasers with respect to a claim for specific performance.

[para25] It is the vendor's position that the registration of the certificates of pending litigation and the refusal of the purchasers to elect a remedy has resulted in prejudice. Pacific Mall cannot mitigate by marketing the units on the second floor of the shopping centre. Mr. Kauffman argues that the purchasers have taken inconsistent positions, that is, they argue the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is void and want the return of their deposits and at the same time, they argue they are ready, willing and able to close and want specific performance with an abatement of the purchase price. The vendors have requested that the purchasers elect the remedy they wish to pursue. As of October 17, 1997, they were not willing to make an election. Pacific Mall submits that not only can it not sell or lease the units which are subject to the certificates of pending litigation, but the vendor is required, as registered owner of the units, to pay monthly common expenses and taxes. In the Leung case, for example, those costs were $14,796.00 per year. The balance of the purchase price owing is $124,900.00 and the arrears of occupancy fees are $22,738.72. It is argued that it is for this very reason, demonstrated by these various examples of prejudice, that the vendor included a clause in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to which the purchaser agreed, not to register a certificate of pending litigation on title.

[para26] The purchasers' position is that the affidavit material before the Master disclosed the necessary facts and the main issues, namely: that Pacific Mall had sued some of the purchasers for failing to close, that the pleadings in the litigation were filed on the motion and there was reference to settlement discussions between counsel, that the agreements had provisions "preventing the registration of documents against title", and that the vendor would claim the purchasers had breached the agreement. It was argued that the purchasers had reason to doubt the bona fides of the vendor and exercised their right to proceed on a without notice basis.

(b) The Legal Issues

[para27] Section 103 of the Courts of Justice Act provides that a certificate of pending litigation may be issued in a proceeding in which an interest in land is in question. A motion may be made without notice in accordance with Rule 42.01(3). The following questions are relevant to whether the certificates should be discharged:

- (1) Can a claim for the return of monies under an Agreement of Purchase and Sale support a certificate of pending litigation?
- (2) What is the effect of the provision in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale which prohibits registration of certificates of pending litigation?
- (3) Did the purchasers make full and fair disclosure of all material facts when they brought their ex parte motions?
- (4) Should the court exercise its discretion in these circumstances to vacate the certificates of pending litigation?

A. Can a claim for the return of monies under an agreement of purchase and sale support a certificate of pending litigation?

The purchasers' position is that the payment of a deposit pursuant to an Agreement of Purchase and Sale for real property entitles the purchaser to a lien upon the land and to a certificate of pending litigation. Purchasers of real estate have a lien on property to the extent of payments made by them. Furthermore, they submit that a breach of fiduciary duty by the real estate agent can give rise to an equitable interest in land which will support a claim for a certificate of pending litigation. The vendor argues that the purchasers have expressly agreed to not register a certificate of pending litigation on title, that such registration would cause harm and is a ground for termination of the agreement and that Pacific Mall is irrevocably appointed as attorney for the purpose of removing the certificate from title. The purchasers' position is that this exclusionary clause does not prevent a purchaser from registering a certificate of pending litigation where a vendor is in breach of contract. Applying the rule of construction, contra proferentum, counsel argues that the provisions of the contract must be read strictly against the party who drafted the agreement and that since the clause does not prohibit the registration of a certificate of pending litigation by the purchaser where the vendor is found in default of its obligations under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, and there has been a fundamental breach of contract by the party seeking to rely on the exclusionary clause, it is unfair that the exclusionary clause should be able to survive the alleged breaches by the vendor. (See Greenbaum v. 619908 Ontario Ltd. (1986), 11 C.P.C. (2d) 26 (Ont. H.C.) at 42; George Fernicola, in Trust v. Mod-Aire Homes Ltd. et al. unreported S.C.O. File No. 21445/87, July 19, 1988 (Master) aff'd December 29, 1988 per Trainor J., Chornedy Aluminium Co. Ltd. v. Belcourt Construction (Ottawa) Ltd. (1979), 79 D.L.R. (3d) 170 (Ont. C.A.) aff'd (1980), 116 D.L.R. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.)).

A further submission is made on behalf of the purchasers that there is no evidence that they assented to clauses in the agreements which prevented the right to sue in tort and that they may be able to successfully sue in tort: Beer et al. v. Townsgate I. Ltd et al. (1998), 36 O.R. (3d) 136 (C.A.). They claim that they may be entitled to rescission [sic] of the contract and the return of the deposits on the basis of negligent misrepresentation and for damages by reason of breach of fiduciary duty owed to the purchasers by the Living Realty agents.

The purchasers have, for the purposes of these motions, abandoned their claim for specific performance. The Group "A" purchasers in their initial pleadings did not claim specific performance and it appears, elected to demand the return of the deposit and argue that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was at an end. Group "A" and "B" purchasers have not made payments required under the agreement and have refused to close. They are not "ready, willing and able to perform" and do not fulfil the basic requirements for specific performance. Thus, their ground to support certificates of pending litigation must be through a "purchaser's lien".

[para29] This remedy was recognized in an earlier line of cases including J. & P. Goldfuss Ltd. v. 306569 Ontario Ltd. (1977), 4 C.P.C. 296 (Ont. H.C.) which is relied upon by the purchaser. The more recent thinking is that "a certificate of pending litigation is not appropriate if, on a fair and reasonable evaluation of the facts at hand and the legal proposition applicable to those facts, the remedy which the plaintiff in the action hopes to attain is limited, not to a judgment in rem, but a judgment for damages or return of deposit": Kingsberg Developments Ltd. v. K. Mart Canada Ltd. (1982), 40 O.R. (2d) 348 (H.C.) at 351.

land so as to obtain a certificate of pending litigation, section 103(6)(a)(i) confers upon the court a discretion to discharge a certificate where the claim is for a sum of money in place of or as an alternative to the interest in the land claimed. In other words, this is a factor to consider in exercising discretion as to whether to give equitable relief and order the discharge. Furthermore, there is authority that a breach of fiduciary duty may give rise to an equitable interest in land and a judgment for restitution may follow to support a claim for a certificate of pending litigation. (See Davidson v. Hyundai Auto Canada Inc. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 789 (Master) which refers to International Corona Resources Ltd. v. Lac Minerals Ltd. (1986), 53 O.R. (2d) 737, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 504, 9 C.P.R. (3d) 7 (H.C.J.)). If at trial, material misrepresentations were found to have been made which induced the purchasers to enter into the contract, they may be entitled to rescission and damages. In other words, there may be a triable issue as to the interest in land. For these reasons, I would not discharge the certificates on this ground alone.

B. What is the effect of the provision in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale which prohibits registration of certificates of pending litigation?

[para32] Paragraph 20 of Schedule A of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale states:

The Purchaser further covenants and agrees ... that he will at no time register or attempt to register this agreement on title to the Unit or the said real property of which the Unit will form a part by way of caution, deposit, assignment, certificate of pending litigation or in any way whatsoever. It is expressly acknowledged that any such registration would cause substantial harm to the Vendor and it is therefore agreed by both parties hereto that any such registration or attempt at registration by the Purchaser or anyone acting for or through him, shall at the option of the Vendor, terminate this agreement and make it absolutely null and void and any deposit paid under this agreement shall immediately become due to the Vendor by way of liquidated damages and not as a penalty. In the event that this agreement, a caution, a deposit, an assignment, a certificate of pending litigation or any other instrument whatsoever is registered against or dealing with the title in contravention of this provisions, then the Purchaser hereby appoints the Vendor his due and lawful attorney for the purposes of removing the instrument from title including the giving of any discharge, the lifting of any caution, certificate of pending litigation or the assignment of any rights pursuant to this agreement ...

[para33] There are a number of cases where a clause prohibiting registration of a certificate of pending litigation has been upheld by the courts. In Reznik v. Coolmur Properties Ltd. (1982), 25 R.P.R. 43 (Ont. H.C.), Steele J. gave effect to such a provision which was clearly worded and demonstrated an acknowledgement by the purchaser that the registration of a certificate of pending litigation would cause harm to the project.

[para35] The conclusion I reach from the case law is, if the provisions of an Agreement of Purchase and Sale are clearly worded and prohibit the registration of a certificate of pending litigation, the court will give effect to such a clause even if it can be established that the vendor was in breach of the agreement or that the agreement is at an end. (See, Singer v. Reemark Sterling I. Ltd. (1992), 24 R.P.R. (2d) 125 (Gen. Div.)). In my view, paragraph 20 of Schedule A of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is clear. There being no ambiguity, the contra proferentum rule does not apply. The clause prohibiting the registration of a certificate of pending litigation was part of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and must be given effect.

C. Did the purchasers make full and fair disclosure of all material facts when they brought their ex parte motions for certificates of pending litigation before the Master?

Rule 42.01(3) provides that a motion for a certificate of pending litigation may be made without notice. Rule 39.01(6) provides:

Where a motion or application is made without notice, the moving party or applicant shall make full and fair disclosure of all material facts, and failure to do so is in itself sufficient ground for setting aside any order obtained on the motion or application.

The test of what constitutes full and fair disclosure of material facts has been considered in a number of authorities. In Pazner v. Ontario (1990), 74 O.R. (2d) 130 (H.C.J.) it was held that material facts are those of which the judge would need to be aware in making a decision.

Inaccuracies in affidavit material and facts, which, if disclosed, would not have affected the outcome have not been held to be grounds for intervention. In 830356 Ontario Inc. v. 156170 Canada Ltd. [1995] unreported (Gen. Div.) at paragraph 17, Chadwick J. set forth the test for disclosure as follows:

The test is not whether the certificate would or would not have been issued had the omitted disclosure been made but rather whether the omitted disclosure might have had an impact on the original granting of the order.

In other words, the party moving ex parte cannot file deficient material, obtain the order and then argue that "I would have obtained the order anyway".

It is the vendor's position that the deficiencies in the affidavit material might have had an impact on the Master's decision as to whether the motion should have been brought on notice, whether there was truly an "interest in land" being sought, what the effect is of the clause prohibiting registration of a certificate of pending litigation and the response of the vendor to the purchasers' allegations of misrepresentations.

To summarize, the vendor submits that the information was inadequate in that a solicitor's affidavit was filed, the affidavit material merely adopted allegations in the statement of claim, and there was a failure to swear that the contents of the pleadings were true as well as to state the source of the information. Simply referring to the pleadings in deposing that certain purchasers will not be closing, Mr. Kauffman submits, is the "lynchpin" [sic]. There was a failure to specifically draw to the court's attention the clauses in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale prohibiting registration of a certificate of pending litigation and providing to the vendor an irrevocable power of attorney on behalf of the purchasers to lift such certificate, as well as the "entire agreement" clause. While the court must take note of the time available to prepare for such motions, Mr. Kauffman submits that Ms. Laidlaw had represented the purchasers since June of 1997, that the vendor was represented and that she chose to bring these motions ex parte on September 26, 1997, nonetheless. Therefore, she should be held to the highest standard of full and fair disclosure of all material facts.

[para37] Counsel for the purchasers argues that all material facts were before the Master including that the vendor was represented by counsel, that the purchasers were not going to close the deal and that they were asserting a purchasers' lien. The purchasers' submission is that the "test of non-disclosure is whether the facts omitted would have made the order doubtful": Notarfonzo v. Goodman et al. (1981), 24 C.P.C. 127 (Ont. H.C.) at 131. With this test in mind, it is submitted that more information before the Master would only have strengthened the purchasers' case and affirmed the need for certificates of pending litigation. Mr. Schwartz argues that rule 39.01(6) does not require that the certificate of pending litigation be discharged for material non-disclosure but rather that the court has a discretion to act upon that ground alone. The court, in his view, should not hold the moving party to a standard that does not consider the timing within which the initial motion is brought. In 931473 Ontario Ltd. v. Coldwell Banker Canada Inc. (1991), 5 C.P.C. (3d) 238 (Gen. Div.), Sutherland J. refused to discharge the certificate of pending litigation under Rule 39.01(6) on this ground where the disclosures fell below the standard of full and fair disclosure but he was not able to say that disclosure of the omitted items would have made the issuance of the order doubtful. Rather, he considered the non-disclosures as a factor which he had to consider in deciding whether to discharge the certificate of pending litigation.

[para38] The case law on "full and fair disclosure of material facts" requires that the purchasers, in proceeding on an ex parte basis, must be held to a high standard. I am mindful of Cimaroli v. Pugliese (1988), 25 C.P.C. (2d) 10 (Ont. H.C.) where O'Driscoll J. found that the failure to draw to the court's attention a clause which prohibited the registration of a caution until after the transaction closed constituted material non-disclosure and Faraci v. Polo Club Development Co. Ltd. (1986), 6 W.D.C.P. 247 (Ontario Master) which held that the plaintiff failed to satisfy the onus to make full and fair disclosure. Accordingly, I find that the purchasers failed to give full and fair disclosure of the circumstances and position of the vendor and, in particular, the clause in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale prohibiting registration of a certificate of pending litigation and the "entire agreement" clause. The affidavit of Ms. Laidlaw which comprised the main evidence before the Master did not fairly describe the vendor's position nor point to the exclusionary clause in a meaningful way. However, I would not discharge the certificates of pending litigation on this ground alone. Rather, I will consider this factor in my overall consideration of the exercise of discretion to discharge a certificate of pending litigation.

D. Should the court exercise its discretion in these circumstances to vacate the certificates of pending litigation?

[para39] The Courts of Justice Act provides that the court has discretion to discharge a certificate of pending litigation (section 103(6)(a)(b)(c)). The onus is on the party seeking the discharge. How such discretion is to be exercised is discussed in Clock Investments Ltd. v. Hardwood Estates Ltd. (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 671, 79 D.L.R. (3d) 129 where Steele J. said at p. 674:

... the governing test is that the Judge must exercise his discretion in equity and look at all the relevant matters between the parties in determining whether or not the certificate should be vacated.

[para40] The specific matters considered relevant include: whether the plaintiff is, or is not a shell corporation; whether there is an alternative claim for damages; whether damages would be a satisfactory remedy; whether the land is or is not unique; the presence or absence of another willing purchaser, and harm done to the defendant if the certificate remained and harm to the plaintiff if the certificate is removed with or without security: 572883 Ontario Inc. v. Dhunna (1987), 24 C.P.C. (2d) 287 (Master Donkin).

[para41] I consider the following factors to be relevant in the motions before me:

- (1) There is no evidence that the vendor is a shell corporation.
- (2) There is nothing before me suggesting the land is unique; in fact, the parties have withdrawn their claim for specific performance.
- (3) The purchasers are applying for rescission and damages.
- (4) It would not be difficult to calculate damages.
- (5) There are no specific willing purchasers at this time.
- (6) Should the certificates remain on title, the vendor will have had the land tied up for several years (unable to sell or lease) and is responsible for condominium maintenance fees and taxes in the meantime.
- (7) The balance of harm to be done to the purchasers or vendor favours the vendor.
- (8) There was material non-disclosure of facts on the ex parte motion in that the vendor's position was not outlined properly and the specific provisions of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale prohibiting registration of the certificate of pending litigation and the entire agreement clause were not brought to the attention of the Master.
- (9) The clause prohibiting registration of the certificate of pending litigation was clearly worded.

[para42] There is a broad discretion conferred upon the court in weighing the relevant factors and deciding whether the motion is a proper one for discharging the certificate of pending litigation. Taking into account all of these factors, I find it just that the certificates of pending litigation be discharged. However, I do consider this an appropriate case to provide the purchasers with certain security pending the ultimate disposition of these actions.

THE MOTIONS FOR CERTIFICATES OF PENDING LITIGATION

[para43] The purchasers, Zhang and Sit, apply for orders granting certificates of pending litigation to be registered against title to their units (17 and 40). They submit that they meet the test under section 103. Where a motion is made on notice, the test is the same as if the motion was to discharge a certificate. The moving party must demonstrate that there is a reasonable claim to the interest in the land.

[para44] Given that these purchasers have abandoned their claim for specific performance and now sue for damages, the purchaser's lien for the deposit may not be sufficient to sustain a certificate. There is also the allegation of breach of fiduciary duty and damages. However, in the circumstances, there being no evidence that the vendor is a shell corporation, that a claim for damages as an alternative would be an unsatisfactory remedy and given the clause prohibiting the registration of a certificate of pending litigation in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, I am not persuaded that it is just in the circumstances to grant an order for a certificate of pending litigation. However, I am satisfied that security should be provided by the vendor.

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

[para45] Some of the purchasers have moved for summary judgment under Rule 20.04(4), claiming that the only genuine issue to be determined is one of law, that is, whether the vendor is in breach of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale by failing to deliver title to the purchasers by the closing date stipulated in the agreement. They submit that the date specified has passed, that being two years from the original closing date of January 18, 1995, as set out in clause 4 of the agreement. The purchasers argue that the agreement must be read as a whole. Since the vendor failed to register the declaration and description of the property by January 18, 1997 and, in fact, did not do so until September 2, 1997, the agreement must be terminated. The purchaser submits that the date of closing is a fundamental term of the purchase and sale agreement. Failure to deliver legal title to the property goes to the root of the agreement and the purchasers are entitled to treat the agreements as at an end and are entitled to a return of all the monies paid by them pursuant to the agreements.

[para46] The cases of Lee v. Leslie Centres Ltd. (1992), 23 R.P.R. (2d) 185 (Gen. Div.) and Russ-Cad Management Ltd. v. Bayview 400 Industrial Developments Inc. (1992), 24 R.P.R. (2d) 6 (Gen. Div.) seem to support the purchasers' position. Both cases held an Agreement of Purchase and Sale to be null and void where the condominium units in question had not been completed by the occupancy date set out in the agreement, nor by the proposed amendment to the occupancy date. Both found that the contra proferentum rule applied, and the latter held that a unilateral extension of the occupancy date by the vendor constituted anticipatory breach of the agreement. In those cases, unlike the one before me, there was no ultimate time limit specified.

[para47] However, subsequent to the two above-mentioned cases, the Ontario Court of Appeal released its decision in Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corp. (1992), 11 O.R. (3d) 744 (application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed without reasons August 5, 1993). In very similar fact situations and with very similarly worded agreements (though again without an ultimate time limit), the court found that the contra proferentum rule did not apply, and that a clause in an Agreement of Purchase and Sale allowing the vendor to extend the closing date because of natural disasters, strikes, "or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the Vendor" was a valid provision and not vague or contradictory. The purchasers were therefore bound by the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, despite the fact that the vendor had unilaterally extended the closing date, so long as there was no bad faith or willful negligence on the part of the vendor.

[para48] This reasoning has recently been affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Townsgate 1 Ltd. v. Klein; Townsgate 1 Ltd. v. Farber [1998]. In these cases, which were heard together, the wording of the agreement was virtually identical to that in Scanlon, and at issue was the relationship between the interim occupancy date, referred to in Rosenberg J.A.'s decision as the "possession closing date", and the final closing date, referred to as the "title closing date." A distinction is made between the two dates in the case of a condominium because of the declaration and registration requirements under the Condominium Act (R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26):

The registration process itself creates further delays that are beyond the control of the declarant [vendor]. Accordingly, the agreements of purchase and sale are structured to permit or, as in this case, to require the purchaser to take possession on an interim basis when the project is substantially complete and ready for occupancy (the possession closing). The final or title closing takes place after registration when the declarant can give title.

[para49] In these decisions, the precise wording of the agreement, as well as the intricacies of the chronology of events, are extremely important in determining the rights of the parties and whether a breach of the agreement has occurred.

THE MOTIONS ON BEHALF OF MR. CHO

[para51] In addition to his request for summary judgment, Mr. Cho applies for an order that monies he paid be returned to him or, in the alternative, the monies be paid in trust. Mr. Cho purchased two units; he did not interim close or pay occupancy fees. He did not deal with an agent from Living Realty but alleges that he dealt directly with Eli Swirsky of The Torgan Group. After Mr. Cho obtained certificates of pending litigation, the units were sold and he agreed to have the certificates of pending litigation removed from title to enable an innocent third party purchaser to close the transaction. Now, Mr. Cho argues that he has no security in the action and the court should order that monies be paid in trust. He relies on Re Mactan Holdings Ltd. and 431736 Ontario Ltd. et al. (1980), 31 O.R. (2d) 37 (Ont. H.C.) and 80 Wellesley Street East Ltd. v. Fundy Bay Builders Ltd. et al [1972] 2 O.R. 280 (C.A.) as authorities that this court has jurisdiction to grant a mandatory order requiring posting of security in lieu of the interest in land where a party seeks the return of a deposit.

[para52] I am persuaded that Mr. Cho should be in no different position to that of any of the purchasers who registered their certificates of pending litigation, are now having them discharged but are protected in their actions through security provided by the vendor.

THE MOTIONS ON BEHALF OF MR. LAU

[para53] Mr. Lau sold two units and agreed to a resolution with the vendor to enable the closing to take place. The order of Wilkins J. was that the certificate of pending litigation be discharged and upon closing of the sale, the vendor's solicitors hold the proceeds in a separate interest bearing bank account until the litigation is concluded. Although I am exercising my discretion in the other cases to discharge the certificates of pending litigation, I am also requiring that there be security posted by the vendor. Accordingly, in this case, the vendor shall provide an irrevocable letter of credit in the amount of the sale price plus interest since the sale or shall retain the separate interest bearing account pending the conclusion of the litigation.

DISPOSITION

[para54] For the reasons given, there will be an order setting aside the ex parte orders of the Master dated September 26, 1997 and October 3, 1997 and directing the discharge of the certificates of pending litigation for all Group "A" and "B" purchasers as set out in Appendix I to this judgment. There will also be an order that the Vendor, Pacific Mall and The Torgan Group, shall provide evidence of security by way of irrevocable letters of credit in amounts reflecting monies paid on deposit, and for grease traps, sprinklers, and occupancy fees as set out in Appendix II to this judgment and interest earned thereon to date.

[para55] The motions on behalf of the purchasers Zhang and Sit for certificates of pending litigation are dismissed. However, they are entitled to have the vendor provide evidence of irrevocable letters of credit in an amount reflecting monies paid as deposits and for grease traps, sprinklers and occupancy fees and interest earned thereon to date.

[para57] The motion brought on behalf of Mr. Cho for the payment of the sale proceeds into trust is allowed to the extent that the amount of the deposits, the monies paid for grease traps, sprinklers and occupancy fees and the interest earned thereon shall be paid into a separate interest bearing bank account until the litigation is concluded.

[para59] It is my intention that the properties in question not be tied up any longer. In my view, this will be of benefit to all parties. These protections are designed to facilitate that goal. Therefore, should the parties require assistance regarding matters such as security by way of letters of credit, I am available to hear submissions.

[para60] The motions for summary judgment brought on behalf of the purchasers listed in Appendix I to this judgment are dismissed.

[para61] If the parties are unable to resolve the issue of costs, counsel may contact my office to arrange for submissions to be made.

HIMEL J.

Reid Alexander Clarke, applicant, and Middlesex Condominium Corporation No. 185, respondent

Court File No. 19909/96

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) London, Ontario Desotti J. Oral judgment: February 19, 1996.

Counsel: R.A. Haas, for the applicant. M.H. Arnold, for the respondent.

[para1] DESOTTI J. (orally):-- The duty that is defined in the Condominium Act is not and has nothing to do with the issue of costs or no costs that were awarded in the Small Claims Court. This is not what this is about. The applicant brings an application in effect asking for a declaration indicating that the lien and or charge that resulted in costs assessed against the individual who had commenced the Small Claims Court action be removed from his particular unit.

[para2] Firstly, I am going to indicate that the initial endorsement by the trial judge in Small Claims Court is uncertain. The endorsement indicates that the word "with" was struck and the words "without costs" were placed in the file as part of the endorsement yet the reasons for judgment of the Small Claims Court judge clearly indicate with costs. In any event, it is the position of the respondent, Middlesex Condominium Corporation #185, that regardless of whether or not costs were on the Small Claims Court scale or there was no order as to costs that their solicitor and client costs incurred by their solicitors to defend this particular action should be borne exclusively by Reid Alexander Clarke.

[para3] They rely primarily on section 8.02 of their rules, and if I might turn to that, that rule specifically states: "Any loss, cost or damage incurred by the corporation by reason of a breach of any rules and regulations enforced from time to time by any resident et cetera shall be borne by such resident."

[para5] Had the Middlesex Condominium Corporation #185 brought an application in the first instance to enforce rules with respect to parking as a result of the continued breach of the applicant Reid Alexander Clarke, undoubtedly they would have had a very strong case. I will not comment whether they would have been successful, but certainly had they been successful in enforcing that particular duty, a duty to comply with reasonable parking requirements, first of all, an order would have issued to that effect, and secondly, undoubtedly, solicitor and client costs would have followed. But to say that that is the same as defending a Small Claims Court suit brought by Reid Alexander Clarke, and therefore, the costs incurred not within the context of the lawsuit, i.e., Small Claims Court, but the costs as result of defending that suit, which would be described as solicitor and client costs between Middlesex Condominium Corporation #185 and their own solicitor, in my view, is not only a stretch, it would be an improper interpretation of that particular section.

[para7] In this particular case, all they did was defend a Small Claims Court action. In my view, that particular defence does not come within the language in section 8.02, and in my view, to impose that sort of cost on the applicant in this particular case would be improper and improper by their own rules. Accordingly, there are two aspects of this case. The second one was a counter-application. I am ordering that an order to issue in accordance with (1)(b) and (c) and (d) of the applicant record. Secondly, I am ordering that the issues raised in the counter-application, and specifically (1)(b) be adjourned.

[para8] In determining and weighing the issue of costs, I agree with the respondent's solicitor. Much of this difficulty and problem arose and has arisen as a result of the conduct of the applicant in the first instance in his commencing what was a poorly conceived suit, and as such, I am going to order that there be no costs of the applicant. I am not going to be awarding costs for these reasons. Firstly, it is clear that the condominium corporation had to defend an action which was clearly of questionable merit. It was more of the plaintiff in the case as referred to in the reasons of judgment of the Small Claims Court judge, he really was trying to defend the honour of his girlfriend who had her car towed away and probably was acting in self-righteous indignation, but nevertheless, that corporation had to defend, and it is true that they took, in my view, as I have ruled, a heavy-handed approach, and I agree with you, but on the other side of the line, they had to defend an action that was poorly constituted by the plaintiff. They had to expend money and I am certainly in this particular case weighing the equities as counsel has asked me to do.

[para9] In my view, even though you were successful in championing your cause with respect to those costs, you also forced the condominium in the first instance through your client to incur those costs, and no one has, firstly, questioned whether the costs were properly incurred or not. So let us assume for the moment that they were properly incurred, that is an expense that has to be borne by all the condominium owners, and it was occasioned by your particular client, and frankly, he who seeks equity must do equity.

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Gans J. Heard: July 13, 1998. Judgment: August 4, 1998.

Counsel: Barry Wortzman, Q.C. and Sandra E. Dawe, for the plaintiffs. Mark A. Arnold, for the defendants.

GANS J.:--

I. Introduction

[para1] The plaintiffs developed a residential condominium project at 40 Homewood Avenue in the City of Toronto in the fall of 1972. The project was built under the then existing CMHC assisted housing program and was registered as York Condominium 75 (the "Corporation"). The condominium is comprised of 472 residential units and one unit representative of a three-storey garage (the "Garage"). The plaintiffs own a majority interest in the Garage in varying proportions, while title is held in the name of certain of the plaintiffs.

[para2] The plaintiffs commenced this action in the wake of a threat of suit for the cost of repairs to the Garage, as well as for the payment of hydro arrears. The plaintiffs seek, among other things, a declaration that as a result of certain express and/or implied terms of an agreement (the "Garage Agreement"), they are entitled to a mandatory order transferring title of the Garage to the Corporation, subject to related encumbrances and liabilities. If the plaintiffs succeed, the Corporation and not the plaintiffs will be responsible for the repair costs and hydro arrears.

[para3] It is the plaintiffs' position, notwithstanding the language of at least two agreements, namely, the Garage Agreement and an earlier agreement with the CMHC, that the Corporation was obliged at some time after 1972 and before 1992, to purchase the Garage. The plaintiffs assert that they are entitled to lead certain extrinsic evidence to establish the aforesaid express and/or implied terms, notwithstanding and as an exception to the parole evidence rule.

II. Nature of Motion

[para4] The defendants bring this motion pursuant to rule 21.01(1)(b) for an order that the Statement of Claim be struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action. In the alternative, the defendants argue they are entitled to summary judgment dismissing the action because on the facts of this case, and the law applied to same, there is no genuine issue for trial.

III. Motion - Rule 21

[para5] I accept as correct the plaintiffs' recitation of the law with respect to motions under this Rule. See the decision of Blair J. in Toronto-Dominion Bank v. Deloitte Haskins & Sells et al. (1991), 5 O.R. (3d) 417 (Gen. Div.) at p. 419. The moving party is restricted to the facts set forth in the pleadings, at which point the court is obliged to accept the matters pleaded as proven. In addition or as a corollary to the last mentioned proposition, the moving party is not entitled to rely upon any evidence contained in affidavits or adduced in the course of cross-examinations to augment its position under the Rule.

[para6] The defendants state that they are entitled to succeed under Rule 21 because s. 38 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. 26 creates a complete "legal impediment" to the plaintiffs' claim. That section provides that a condominium corporation cannot make any substantial additions to the common elements or assets of the Corporation unless the consent of unit holders holding 80 percent of the outstanding units has first been received. The defendants do not plead specifically or even inferentially that the Act was not complied with at first instance. There is but a brief reference, in the first affidavit filed in support of the motion, to "unit holder approval" in respect of a 1974 proposal to purchase the Garage. In my view, the absence of an averment in the Statement of Defence that the requisite vote of the unit holders never took place is fatal to this branch of the motion. The defendants have failed to establish on the pleading that it is plain, obvious and beyond doubt that the plaintiffs will not succeed at trial. Having regard to the ultimate disposition of the motion, I would not unilaterally grant the defendants leave to amend the pleading to correct this deficiency, even if such a request had been made of me.

IV. Motion - Rule 20 [para7] The issues surrounding the second aspect of the defendants' motion are factually noteworthy. In the fall of 1972, the plaintiffs qua developers entered into the Garage Agreement ostensibly with themselves as the declarant on behalf of the Corporation with respect to the ownership, use and operation of the Garage. In other words, at the time the agreement was concluded, there was not an independent board and the individual directors who have been joined as party defendants had nothing to do with the Corporation's management and, I dare say, with the negotiations that resulted in the completed agreement.

[para8] The relevant portions of the Garage Agreement, including certain recitals, are reproduced extensively below. The designation "Howard" is the collective reference to the plaintiffs.

(a) Howard constructed the buildings and other improvements which form the condominium units and common elements managed by the Corporation;

(b) Howard, is the registered owner of all of the condominium units of the Corporation, and the said condominium units are being sold to purchasers on the basis that Howard will lease to the unit owners parking spaces in the underground parking garage ...

(c) Pursuant to an Agreement dated the 25th day of September, 1970 between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Howard, Howard is obliged to grant an option to the Corporation to purchase the said underground Garage as set out in paragraph 11 of the said Agreement; ... 1. Howard hereby grants to the Corporation the option to purchase the Garage on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

2. Howard shall manage the Garage and be entitled to the income therefrom and be responsible for the expenses thereof, including mortgage interest, principal and taxes accruing due and payable prior to the time when the Corporation purchases the Garage. 4. The profit from the operation of the Garage, after allowing for a five per cent (5%) management fee, shall be applied by Howard in repayment of its equity in the Garage...

5. Upon Howard being repaid its equity in the Garage, which equity is hereby agreed to be the sum of Twenty-Four Thousand Eight Hundred and Forty-Five Dollars ($24,845.00), the Garage shall be offered for sale to the Corporation at the amount then outstanding on the mortgage ...

6. Howard, forthwith upon being repaid its equity in the Garage, shall notify the Corporation that its equity has been repaid and the Corporation shall have the irrevocable option to purchase the Garage within Ninety (90) days of the giving of such notice for the amount then owing on the said mortgage in favour of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

7. The Corporation's option to purchase the Garage shall be exercised as hereinafter provided within such Ninety-day period after which time the option shall be null and void and Howard shall be entitled to retain ownership of the Garage or to dispose of the Garage as it shall see fit.

[para9] As previously indicated, the plaintiffs take the position, notwithstanding the clear wording of the Garage Agreement, that the "parties" agreed the Corporation was obliged to purchase the Garage within a reasonable time after 1972, but, in any event within the first "10 or 20 years" after its execution. Mr. Wortzman, on behalf of the plaintiffs, argues in his usual forceful and eloquent fashion that the parole evidence rule should be suspended and evidence with respect to the Agreement's factual matrix should be received. Alternatively, as his factum suggests, it is the plaintiffs' position that the actual document does not constitute the whole agreement between the parties.

[para10] I have considered the cases and material to which reference was made by the plaintiffs during argument and as expressed in their prolix factum. I have also reviewed certain recent decision of this court and the Ontario Court of Appeal to which reference was not made even though an inquiry of their existence was posed by me during the course of argument. While none of the recent cases provides any new insight into the circumstances in which the parole evidence rule exceptions should be invoked, at least on the uncontroverted facts of this case, I draw the following few relevant conclusions based upon the jurisprudence with which I was presented:

1. As a general rule, if the language of a written agreement is clear and unambiguous, as in the instant case, parole evidence should not be admitted to add to, subtract from, vary, interpret or contradict the terms of the written agreement.

2. Parole evidence which is intended to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement may be admitted for purposes of rectifying a written agreement in order to establish that a mistake was made in the document or that such does not reflect the agreement of the parties at first instance. A claim for rectification is not being advanced by the plaintiffs in this case. Furthermore, the plaintiffs are not suggesting that novation has occurred or that the conduct of the board after turnover amounted to the conclusion of a new deal.

3. On a more limited basis, parole evidence may be admitted to provide the factual matrix under which the agreement was negotiated to assist in the interpretation of the agreement.

[para11] From my analysis of the matters in issue, the plaintiffs take the position that the agreement they concluded with themselves at the time the Corporation was registered does not reflect the whole deal; that notwithstanding the agreement's clear and unequivocal terms that the Corporation could only purchase the Garage after the plaintiffs had recouped their "equity", which, Mr. Wortzman advised included all operating losses incurred along the way, the Corporation was obliged to purchase the Garage before the conditions precedent were achieved; that the use in several places of the term "option" to describe the nature of the "buy-sell" arrangement was, for all intents and purposes, a misnomer.

[para12] It is against this background that the plaintiffs urge me to consider the "evidence" which they suggest is confirmatory of the deal they seek to propound, notwithstanding the fact that I was then, as I am now, of the view that none of the parole evidence rule exceptions articulated by Lambert J.A. in Gallen v. Allstate Grain Co. (1984), 9 D.L.R. (4th) 496 (BCCA) at 506 comes into play.

V. Factual Matrix

[para13] The plaintiffs filed the affidavit of Robin Bookbinder, who is an officer of one of the plaintiffs' corporations. Noticeably, Mr. Bookbinder was not in the employ of any of the plaintiffs until many years after the condominium was built and the Garage Agreement was in place. Although there is one person who appears to have been involved in the project from its inception, and who apparently authored certain correspondence that Mr. Wortzman suggests is relevant to the matters in issue, an affidavit was not filed on his behalf in support of the plaintiffs' position. I make this observation in light of Mr. Wortzman's acknowledgment to me that although this gentleman is elderly and resides in England, he was available as an affiant. In the final analysis, and, as Mr. Wortzman again acknowledged during argument, other than the gentleman to whom reference was just made, the plaintiffs do not have anyone at their disposal who can testify on a first hand basis to the matters now in issue. Mr. Bookbinder's views are based on his reading of the documents, namely, the various agreements, minutes of meetings and correspondence - whose vantage point, I would observe - is not much different from my own.

[para14] That having been said, I was directed to several documents by Mr. Wortzman which he argued were supportive of his position and which he further argued mandates further review by a trial judge.

[para15] The material, in the main, demonstrates that after the takeover the Corporation was desirous of acquiring title to the Garage sooner rather than later. This posture appears to have changed when disputes arose with the plaintiffs qua developer over alleged deficiencies in the condominium's construction, resulting in a suit and a separate arbitration proceeding. As best as I can determine, the Corporation never again evinced an intention to take up the "option" to purchase the Garage. Indeed, the plaintiffs did not until relatively recently assert the position now being advanced in the instant action. [para16] I have read and reread the documents to which Mr. Wortzman has drawn my attention. While the material supports the position that the Corporation after takeover was more than a little anxious to take title to the Garage, no one on either side of the debate appears to have maintained the view that the Corporation's right to purchase was anything other than an option, exercisable after the plaintiffs recovered their equity investment in the structure. In any event, the Corporation's short-lived desire to purchase the Garage was manifested for the first time after the plaintiffs ceased to control the board and therefore, temporally, such a desire could not have been within the contemplation of the signatories to the Garage Agreement nor formed part of the factual matrix at the time the agreement was executed.

[para17] In my view, the evidence upon which the plaintiffs seek to rely does not create a factual matrix against which the Garage Agreement must be read in order to understand it. Indeed, as previously suggested, the material to which reference was made is supportive of the interpretation advanced by the defendants, which Mr. Wortzman acknowledged was to be drawn from the wording of the Agreement itself. Furthermore, in my view, the material relied upon by the plaintiffs does not support the position that the Garage Agreement in its current form is not reflective of the deal between the "parties" at first instance. Putting the matter simply, this is not a case where any of the exception to the parole evidence rule ought to be applied.

[para19] I observe parenthetically that Mr. Wortzman also argued that because the defendants had not filed affidavits of certain former board members who were involved in the early "debate" to purchase the Garage, they had not "put their best foot forward" and should be deprived of the relief now being sought. As I indicated to counsel during the course of argument, it is my view that this expression as used in the cases applied to a situation where a party had not adduced critical and available evidence, with the intention of leading such evidence at trial. In the case before me on the Rule 20 motion, the defendants did not rely on any evidence, per se, but, the relevant documents from which they were able to assert their position. They were not in any respect obliged to lead evidence which, from their perspective, would not advance their argument. Furthermore, as previously observed, it was the plaintiffs who chose not file an affidavit of one of the earliest participants in the saga, a fact which, if not fatal to their position, was not terribly helpful.

[para21] If counsel are unable to come to an agreement with respect to the costs associated with the disposition of this motion and the action, an appointment for a further attendance before me may be arranged.

Reid Alexander Clarke, plaintiff, and Middlesex Condominium Corporation No. 185, defendant

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Small Claims Court - London, Ontario Proudfoot Deputy J. Oral judgment: August 14, 1995.

Counsel: No one appearing for the plaintiff. P.A. Ivanoff, for the defendant.

[para1] PROUDFOOT DEPUTY J. (orally):-- I am prepared to give judgment now. This is a case by Mr. Clarke against the condominium corporation which is the master corporation of the property where he owns one of the units, specifically unit 44. I am satisfied that the condominium corporation has acted reasonably and as I have indicated in my discussion of the matter with the solicitor Ivanoff, reasonably may not be perfectly.

[para2] As stated, I am satisfied that the condominium corporation has acted reasonably. They have passed a rule which is not a by-law. I think they have taken all reasonable and appropriate steps to distribute the rule, not only the initial rule, I should say, but the subsequent notices about it. I do not fault the condominium corporation in any way for the steps it took a) in passing the rule; b) notifying their members of the existence of the rule and all the subsequent notifications. There is some doubt in my mind as to whether or not Mr. Clarke may even have had notice before the first towing incident. He acknowledges he had notice before the second incident. He does not suggest that he notified his girlfriend who, as I recollect, was the recipient of Mr. Nash's towing favours on the occasion of the second tow.

[para3] I do not know whether he neglected, or wilfully was challenging the powers of the condominium directors by reason of some misapprehension as to whether or not this was a by-law that had to be registered but I think the condominium corporation was, in its own way, acting reasonably, attempting to acting reasonably, and took all reasonable steps to bring this rule and its intentions in respect to the enforcement of the rule to its members.

[para4] As I say, there is no question that Mr. Clarke had notice before the second towing incident and it may well be and I am not satisfied that he did not have notice before the first. I find that it would not be reasonable to require the condo corporation to go to the expense of putting in physical barriers or bumpers to prevent the sort of parking which does cause problems with snow removal and the use of the walkways of the sidewalk by children, so that a technical attack on the validity of the rule, in my view, fails.

[para5] Mr. Ivanoff has, in addition, raised the question of whether or not the plaintiff has suffered any damage. Even if the action had any merit, which I am holding it does not, whether it ought to have been brought in the name of the individuals who were towed away and paid the expense so that I am not sure that Mr. Clarke has any legal status to bring this action in that his payment, if he reimbursed the individuals, is a voluntary matter on his part. Perhaps as a result of his realization that he should have told those people about the rule of the condominium corporation about parking he felt guilty and felt some sort of a moral obligation because of his failure at least in the second circumstance to notify his girlfriend of the obligation not to block park on the sidewalk. In any event, for those various reasons, I think the action fails and the action will be dismissed with costs.

Docket No. C26724

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Morden A.C.J.O., Catzman and Weiler J.J.A. Heard: May 7, 1998. Judgment: May 8, 1998.

Counsel: Richard R. Arblaster, for the appellant. Howard W. Winkler, for the respondent, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 875 et al. Paul J. Green, for the respondent, Corporation of the City of Etobicoke.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- The issue in this appeal is the proper application of cause of action res judicata. There had been three earlier proceedings involving the plaintiff and the defendant corporation respecting the dispute in question. In his reasons for judgment, O'Leary J. said at p. 2:

It is admitted by counsel for the plaintiff that this issue of alleged illegality was the basis for three prior separate applications to the court brought by the plaintiff against the defendant Condominium Corporation No 875.

[para2] An examination of the material filed in the three earlier proceedings indicates that the legality of both the structure and the use of the lay-by were in issue in those proceedings. Having regard to the admission set out above and the material filed on the motion, it was clearly open to O'Leary J. to find, as he did, that the doctrine of res judicata applied to this proceeding. Even assuming, as Mr. Arblaster submitted, that there may be a discretion in cases involving a public duty not to apply the doctrine of res judicata, this is not a case in which, bearing in mind the history of the litigation between these parties, that discretion should be exercised in favour of the plaintiff.

[para3] The doctrine of res judicata does not enure to the benefit of the City of Etobicoke and its Fire Chief because they were not parties to any of the prior proceedings. In our view, however, the action was properly dismissed against those defendants on the basis of abuse of process. In dismissing the action against them, O'Leary J. said:

Once it is established that the use being made of the driveway by the Corporation and its officers and directors is legal there can be no merit in a claim against Etobicoke and its Fire Chief, Donald Ramsay based on their failure to force the Condominium Corporation and its officers and directors to stop their illegal conduct. The action is therefore dismissed against Etobicoke and Ramsay.

[para4] The plaintiff's action is a collateral attack on the decisions in the three earlier proceedings to which she was a party. It is clear that, although he did not use the term, O'Leary J. dismissed the action against Etobicoke and the Fire Chief on the basis of abuse of process. We are not persuaded that he erred in so doing.

[para6] The appeal is dismissed with costs. MORDEN A.C.J.O. CATZMAN J.A. WEILER J.A.

Pauline Shatkowsky, plaintiff, and King Rae Investments Inc., defendants

Court File No. 97-CV-128108

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) B. Wright J. Heard: October 15 and 16, 1997. Judgment: November 4, 1997.

Counsel: Melvyn L. Solmon and Stuart N. Chelin, for the plaintiff. Carol A. Bargman, for the defendant.

[para1] B. WRIGHT J.:-- This matter began as an application seeking an order temporarily lifting an execution registered with the Sheriff of the Regional Municipality of York. The execution was registered in favour of the defendant against Joseph Shaw. Joseph Shaw is the son of the plaintiff, Pauline Shatkowsky. The purpose of the application was to permit the transfer of title to 14924 Yonge Street, Suite 102, from Joseph Shaw In Trust, to his son Jeffrey Shaw In Trust.

[para2] On September 8, 1997, Mr. Justice Somers heard the application and ordered the trial of the issues between the parties. The plaintiff maintains that Joseph Shaw is a bare trustee of the property to which the execution cannot attach. The defendant contends that Joseph Shaw is not a bare trustee of the property but holds a beneficial interest in the property which, therefore, is subject to the execution.

FACTS

[para3] The plaintiff is 95 years old and presently resides in a nursing home. For many years she lived in her home at 217 Lonsmount Drive in Toronto. Due to her advanced age the plaintiff, in June, 1995, gave her son, Joseph Shaw, power of attorney over her property and personal care.

[para6] Prior to the sale of 217 Lonsmount, the title to that property was transferred to Joseph Shaw In Trust and a mortgage for $100,000 placed on the property by Joseph Shaw In Trust. All transactions were authorized by the plaintiff. Joseph Shaw provided the plaintiff with a promissory note for $100,000.

[para9] On September 5, 1996, the defendant obtained default judgment against Joseph Shaw and his company Granada Investments Limited for $822,955.26 and a Writ of Seizure and Sale issued.

[para10] In April, 1997, Joseph Shaw In Trust entered into an agreement of purchase and sale to sell Unit 102 to M.D. McDonald In Trust. The transaction was to close on May 15, 1997.

[para11] The defendant was requested to lift the execution in order that Unit 102 could be sold and then to immediately re-file the execution. The defendant refused to lift the execution which resulted in the sale aborting and this litigation which raises the question of whether the execution affects Unit 102.

Bare Trustee or Beneficial Interest

[para12] The defendant contends that there are three reasons why I should find that Joseph Shaw is not a bare trustee but has a beneficial interest in Unit 102: (1) the manner in which Joseph Shaw has handled his mother's assets points to the plaintiff having gifted her assets, including Unit 102, to her son; (2) the plaintiff did not authorize the taking of the title to Unit 102 in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust until after the filing of the execution: and, (3) the purported sale to McDonald was a sham.

[para13] A combination of the above three reasons simply means that the defendant alleges that the various transactions placing the plaintiff's assets in the name of Joseph Shaw. In Trust were fraudulent transactions for the purpose of defeating Joseph Shaw's creditors.

1. Did the Plaintiff Gift Her Assets?

[para14] There is no specific evidence that the plaintiff gave her assets to her son. The plaintiff did not give evidence. Due to her age and problems with the English language and perhaps her current health, it is not surprising that she was not called to testify by either party. However, pursuant to the Rules, the defendant had opportunity to examine her so that her evidence would be available for the court, but, the defendant chose not to examine her.

[para16] Mr. Shaw said that the monies which went to him and his companies were loans which accumulated and from time to time were supported by promissory notes. Joseph Shaw admitted that if Unit 102 was sold it was possible that he would borrow some of the proceeds.

[para18] With respect to the apparent loans to Mr. Shaw's companies there are four promissory notes, two given by Granada for a total of $120,000 and two given by 14872 Yonge Street for a total of $115,000, although the round number amounts provided to the companies by cheque seem only to total $97,000. There were other cheques written to pay for company expenses such as the lease of Mr. Shaw's car by Granada.

[para19] In argument, counsel for the defendant alleged that the promissory notes were all prepared at the same time in the office of Michael Rice and back-dated. Michael Rice was an associate of Joseph Shaw who for a period of time used Michael Rice's office. There is no evidence to support this allegation. The defendant could have called Michael Rice as a witness but chose not to call him to testify.

2. Title to Unit 102

[para21] It is admitted that the funds to purchase Unit 102 came from the sale of the plaintiffs home: 217 Lonsmount. However, the defendant alleges that the plaintiffs authorization that the title be in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust was subsequent to the filing of the execution and, therefore, the purpose was to defeat creditors.

[para22] The purchaser on the Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated June, 1996, for Unit 102, is Joseph Shaw In Trust.

[para23] Tab 19 of Exhibit 1 is a note of a telephone conversation that Solicitor Cummings had with Joseph Shaw on July 8, 1996. It reads:

Title will be "in trust" for his mother - she's going to buy this from sale of Lonsmount. Can't live in #709 anymore. Declaration Reminder: do Trust (see Lonsmount)

[para24] Prior to leaving for vacation, Solicitor Cummings dictated a letter which was sent out by his secretary to the plaintiff in care of Joseph Shaw In Trust. The letter noted that the purchase of Unit 102 was completed August 16, 1996. The letter stated: "Our full report letter (including the Trust material) will follow in due course as soon as possible after I return from vacation.

[para25] On his return from vacation, Solicitor Cummings wrote a letter to Joseph Shaw In Trust which stated in part:

I am also enclosing three copies of a Declaration of Trust in respect of the Condominium unit, which I would ask you and your mother to sign (before witnesses), at your earliest possible convenience. Would you please return two copies to me for our records.

[para27] I note that title to condominium unit 709 was taken in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust. I also note that prior to its sale the title to 217 Lonsmount was in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust. It can be implied that the title to Unit 102 would also be in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust.

[para29] The defendant has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that Unit 102 was placed in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust for the purpose of defeating creditors.

3. Proposed Sale of Unit 102

[para30] The defendant alleges that the proposed sale of Unit 102 to D. McDonald was a sham because of the alleged close relationship between the proposed purchaser and Joseph Shaw. The defendant also alleges that the $25,000 deposit cheque provided by McDonald was not a valid cheque because McDonald did not have sufficient funds in her account to cover the amount of the cheque.

[para31] In an affidavit sworn May 22, 1997, Sonia Etlin, secretary of Carol Bargman, the defendants counsel, deposes:

I am advised by William King, on behalf of the Defendant, King Rae Investments Inc. and do verily believe that the aforesaid named purchaser is a long time personal and business associate, partner and employee of the said Joseph Shaw.

[para33] Ms. McDonald testified that her parents rented a condominium unit in the same building. When she found out that Unit 102 was for sale, a decision was made to purchase the unit for her parents.

[para34] With respect to the deposit cheque dated either April 21 or 24, 1997, Ms. McDonald said that she would never issue a cheque if she did not have sufficient funds in her account.

[para35] Ms. McDonald was served with a Summons to Witness requiring her to bring to court her bank records pertaining to April, 1997. She explained that she had not read carefully the paragraph referring to the bank records and, therefore, did not bring with her those records.

[para36] Sonia Etlin gave evidence that she spoke by telephone with Ms. McDonald on two or three occasions concerning her attendance as a witness. However, there was no evidence that Ms. McDonald was reminded to bring her bank records.

[para37] If the issue of the $25,000 deposit cheque was crucial to the defendant's position, Carol Bargman, during Ms. McDonald's testimony could have requested consent from Ms. McDonald to call the bank to obtain the information. Or, if requested, I would have ordered Ms. McDonald to call her bank and have the information faxed immediately to Carol Bargman. Ms. Bargman made no attempt to obtain the bank records.

[para38] I accept Ms. McDonald's evidence that Unit 102 was to be purchased for her parents and there were sufficient funds in her account to cover the $25,000 deposit cheque.

[para40] All of the defendant's arguments were designed to show that the title to Unit 102 was placed in the name of Joseph Shaw In Trust for the purpose of defeating creditors. [para41] But, if Joseph Shaw intended to defeat his creditors, it is probable that Unit 102 would not have been placed in his name in trust even if in law an execution cannot apply to the personal debts of a trustee. I suggest if Joseph Shaw was concerned about creditors it would have been a simple matter to have his mother's property placed in the name of another family member in trust or conveyed directly to another member of the family.

[para42] I find that Unit 102 is in the name of Joseph Shaw as a bare trustee and that he does not have a beneficial interest in that property. Therefore, the plaintiff has a right to the relief claimed in paras. 1(a), (b) and (c) of the Amended Statement of Claim and I so order with costs. If counsel cannot agree on costs I may be contacted to fix costs.

My Concern

[para43] Will the plaintiff have sufficient assets to pay for her nursing home care? Her bank account balance as at May 12, 1997, was $5,379.46. Her money has been used by her son Joseph Shaw for the benefit of his family and his companies. [para44] I was not made aware of additional assets which she may have. There was evidence that some of her money may have been placed in GICs but the documentation is insufficient to determine if funds are still invested in her name.

[para45] I make it clear that I am not alleging that Joseph Shaw has mismanaged his mother's assets. Everything done may very well be legitimate. However, the evidence raises concerns.

[para46] No specific reason was given for transferring the title to Unit 102 from Joseph Shaw In Trust to Jeffrey Shaw In Trust. There is some evidence that the plaintiff may not have the capacity to give directions to her trustee. Since Joseph Shaw has power of attorney over her property, he still controls her assets.

[para47] The plaintiff's assets have been depleted in a short period of time. The promissory notes do not correlate with the amounts withdrawn from her account. There is no indication that Joseph Shaw or his companies can hope to repay the amounts allegedly borrowed. If Unit 102 is sold there is no assurance that the proceeds will be held for the plaintiff's benefit. The proceeds could be dissipated in the same manner as her other assets.

[para48] Although Joseph Shaw is the executor of the plaintiff's will, he testified that he was not a beneficiary under the will. It could be implied that Joseph Shaw has obtained his mother's assets and used them for his own benefit resulting in diminishing the assets available for the beneficiaries under her will.

[para49] The court cannot turn a blind eye to the above concerns, otherwise, justice is truly blind. There will be an order that the net proceeds from the sale of Unit 102 shall be used solely for the care of the plaintiff and for her sole benefit until further court order.

[para50] I am providing a copy of these reasons to the Office of the Public Guardian and Trustee for any action that office may wish to take in the circumstances of this case.

Marisa Marafioti (applicant/appellant), and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 775 (respondent/respondent in appeal) And between Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 775, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 769 and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 785 (applicants/respondents in appeal), and Marisa Marafioti and Frank Marafioti (respondents/appellants)

Docket No. C19279

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Morden A.C.J.O., Weiler and Goudge J.J.A. Heard: April 30, 1997. Judgment: May 2, 1997.

Appeal by the defendant unit holders from a decision finding that they breached a condominium rule by erecting a deck.

HELD: Appeal dismissed. The appellants breached Rule 21 and the judge below was justified in exercising her discretion and granting the respondent the relief requested.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited: Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, s. 31(4).

Counsel: J. Dannial E.S. Baker, for the appellants. Andrea M. Habas, for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by [para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- In our view, both appellants were in breach of the proposed Rule 21 of the condominium, the relevant portion of which is as follows:

No building or structure ... shall be erected ... placed, located, kept or maintained on the common elements.

[para2] Accordingly, the appellants were in breach of s. 31(4) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26. In these circumstances, it was clearly open to Greer J. to exercise her discretion under s. 49 and grant the relief requested by the respondent. Dr. Marafioti was directly involved in the agreement which breached the rule, as well as the declaration, and there was a proper basis for the order being made against both him and his wife. We agree with Greer J. that the decision in this case is governed by Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon et al. (1987), 44 R.P.R. 228 (Ont. C.A.).

[para4] The appeal is dismissed with costs including the costs of the motion before Labrosse J., fixed in the amount of $6,000.

Marika Property Management Inc. and Mary Khan, plaintiffs, and Santi Cappuccitti, defendant

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Brampton, Ontario MacKenzie J. January 22, 1997.

Counsel: D.A.J. D'Oliviera for the plaintiffs. No one appearing for the defendant.

[para1] MacKENZIE J.:-- The plaintiffs in this libel action are Marika Property Management Inc., an Ontario business corporation engaged in the business of property management on behalf of condominium corporations, and Mary Khan, a businesswoman who is the principal of such corporation ("Khan"). The defendant is the originator and publisher of documents being a form of a newsletter described as the Woodland Manor Monitor ("the Monitor").

[para2] The plaintiffs claim that the publication of these writings contained material and information which defamed the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs accordingly seek damages against the defendant in respect of such conduct. The defendant failed to defend this action, was noted in default and in the result, he is deemed to admit the truth of all allegations of fact made in the statement of claim, pursuant to the Rules of Civil Practice, Rule 19.02(1)(a).

[para3] Pursuant to the provisions of such Rule, the defendant is deemed to admit the following:

1. He was the author and publisher of the Monitor;
2. That in or about the month of January, 1995, he published in the Monitor the following words: (A) "Why High Cable Rates?

Cable subscribers will be paying a whopping $60.87 a month at P.C.C. 143 without a choice in the matter! Cable subscribers will have their present contract of $22.76 a month canceled [sic] and a new deal signed for $38.11 a month by the board of directors of P.C.C. 143.

The $15.35 increase is not necessary. The board of directors with the support of Marika Property Management are refusing the soon to be announced Rogers Cable group rate of $25.82 per month, and signing a new contract for an individual subscription rate that will add $15.35 a moth to their monthly cost.

Owners at Woodland Manor will not get a reduction of the monthly maintenance fee equal to the $22.76 a month group rate for cable service now paid. The new $38.11 rate charge will be in addition to the $22.76 making the new cost to householders a hard to accept $60.87 a month!

The individual subscriber rate will permit individual subscribers to cancel cable service to their unit. Without the option of erecting a TV antenna or a satellite dish, the owner who refuses the extra charges will be shut out of the customary television service.

Mary Khan of Marika Property Management has been hinting at the rate change for many months without making a commitment on paper. Above the strident complaints of owners who attended the past public meeting, the new deal is here without an explanation.

Individual owners are organizing a protest to stop the ever increasing costs of living at the Woodland Manor."

(B) "Double Jeopardy Getting a cheque out of P.C.C. No. 143 takes years! The board of directors of P.C.C. No. 143 owed one of the unit owners the deductible for an insurance damage claim. After repeated requests, the board of directors discussed the debt but never got around to issuing the cheque and mailing it out.

Repeated requests to Mary Khan of Marika Property Management and to Ms. Gina Haltzworth the P.C.C. No. 143 treasurer received no response. The only avenue was to take it to Ontario General Division Court.

On November 17th, 1994, Judge Watson decided that half way between the $1,000.00 claimed by the unit owner and the $500.00 offered by the board of directors was fair, and signed a judgment for $750.00. He did not attach an order for costs because the corporation lawyer was far costlier than the self representation by the condominium owner. The bank account of P.C.C. No. 143 was garnisheed and a cheque was promptly remitted to Ontario General Division Court in Mississauga.

In response to this judgment, Mary Khan of Marika Property Management and the board of directors want authority to change the By-Laws to permit the board to charge the cost of legal litigation back to any owner who takes the board to court. The owner will have to pay twice even when he is in the right."

(C) "Mortgage Mystery

The recently begun repairs and changes to the Woodland Manor have been costly and of the type that will impress real estate salesmen. An adequate explanation of the cost of the work and the mortgage to pay for it has never been put on paper for the information of the owners of P.C.C. 143. The tragedy is that the work was started before the mortgage had been applied for. Mary Khan of Marika Property Management had to send out a letter telling the owners of P.C.C. No. 143 that the bank wanted proof that the mortgage was authorized by 80% of the owners. There is no evidence available that this was done honestly.

Mary Khan of Marika Property Management is quick to threaten the owners of P.C.C. No. 143 that without the mortgage, each of the owners would have to pay a special assessment as high as $8,000.00.

If the Mystery of the Woodland Mortgage is never revealed, many of the owners of P.C.C. No. 143 will be interested to learn it."

(D) "Phony Security

The best way to sell security is to scare people. Instead of shutting doors, leave them open to intruders. This is what seems to be the case at P.C.C. No. 143.

The doors of lobby A and B have been closed at 10:00 p.m. each evening for many years this forced all entrance to the building at lobby B which had the watchful television camera taping all entries and exits. Marika Property Management discontinued this practice. The additional traffic opportunity was felt immediately to the disadvantage of the owners of P.C.C. No. 143.

The solution was provided by Mary Khan of Marika Property Management with additional cameras, a new lock system and a security person patrolling at night. It seems an expensive alternative to locking four doors each night. The board of directors accepted the suggestion and has paid for it handsomely.

The quality of security is so low that a gentle push of the hand will get you past the garage doors every time. This is not the kind of electronic security the board of directors has paid for, or is it?"

3. That in or about the month of April, 1995, in a further issue of the Monitor, he published the following words:

(A) "Liens Are Extra Money

A recent notice sent out by Don Francis says that the board of directors of P.C.C. 143 has failed to collect $56,308.00 of maintenance fees from unit owners. This would provide a legitimate reason to put a lien on a unit.

On closer inspection, many of the liens placed on units are of a nuisance nature. Bad bookkeeping has landed the board of directors in court because they would not believe the canceled [sic] cheques proffered by the unit owner to explain the error.

When you register 85 liens in a 175 unit complex, you have forced a lot of homeowners into power of sale situations.

The Ontario Condominium Act permits the placement of a lien on the second day of the month. If you are one day late, you can be liened. For a $50.00 fee, Mary Khan of Marika Property management will charge you a $300.00 fee for placing a lien on your property. A neat $250.00 profit on each. When you do it 85 times, it gets you $14,500.00 extra!

The tragedy is that one of the favourite lien times are around Christmas time."

4. That the words in paragraphs 2 and 3 above referred to and were understood to refer to the plaintiffs;

5. That the publication of these words resulted in injury to the credit, reputation and business of the plaintiffs and brought them into ridicule and contempt;

6. That the defendant published the words in question out of malice and spite towards the plaintiffs.

[para4] The case was called for hearing before me on the 14th of January, 1997, as an assessment for damages. In the circumstances of default by the defendant, I proceeded to deal with the case by proceeding to hearing of the claim with oral evidence being presented by the plaintiff pursuant to Rule 19.05(3). As a result of the oral evidence received at such hearing, the plaintiff has established on a balance of probabilities the following facts:

1. The defendant persisted in publishing and distributing defamatory materials in the so-called newsletters despite written warnings contained in letters by counsel for the plaintiffs;

2. That the defendant had competed with the plaintiffs to bid and obtain the property management contract in respect of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 143 (Woodland Manor) of the January, 1995 newsletter;

3. The defendant had verbally expressed to an employee of the plaintiff corporation an attitude of personal animosity and malice towards Mary Khan;

4. That notwithstanding a purported written retraction by the defendant of the libelous statements in the January and April, 1995 issues of the Monitor, the defendant published after the issuance of the Statement of Claim a further issue which was defamatory of the plaintiffs;

5. The defendant published and caused to be distributed the Monitor not only to the unit owners of the Woodland Manor Condominium (No. PCC 143) but also to unit owners of another condominium corporation managed by the plaintiffs and to the Association of Condominium Managers of Ontario;

6. As a result of such publication and distribution, Khan received numerous inquiries not only from unit holders of both the condominium corporations but also from the management of the Association of Condominium Managers of Ontario, the thrust of which inquiries went to the defendant's allegations of incompetence and lack of integrity on the part of the plaintiffs;

7. A 5-year management contract of the plaintiff corporation with Woodland Manor Peel Condominium Corporation No. 143 was terminated in December of 1996, some 3 years prior to its expiry date, and that the billings lost as a result of such termination were approximately $168,000.00 on the basis of gross monthly billings of $4,000.00 a month, with a net pre-tax profit of $50,400.00 over the unexpired term of the contract.

Issues

[para5]

1. Whether the published writings by the defendant constitute a libel of the plaintiffs.

2. If so, what damages flow to the plaintiffs from such conduct.

The Law

[para6] A broad statement of the test to be utilized in determining whether words are capable of a defamatory meaning is that defamation is the dissemination of information that tarnishes the good name of a person, causing his or her standing in the community to be impaired or causing him or her to be pitied. The focus of defamation is that the meaning conveyed by the subject words should hurt or harm the reputation of the person being disparaged, having regard to the circumstances of the communication. In determining the effect of the allegedly defamatory words, the courts have adopted as a test the natural and ordinary meaning which would be reasonably attributed to such words by ordinary sensible people without special knowledge and who are neither unusually suspicious nor unusually naive (Lewis v. Daily Telegraph, [1964] A.C. 234, at page 259).

[para7] I am satisfied that the natural and ordinary meaning that is reasonably attributable to the words published by the defendant hurts the reputation of both plaintiffs thereby causing harm to reputations for honest dealings and integrity, particularly in the business community in which both plaintiffs operate. I am further satisfied that the defendant acted in his publication of the defamatory words out of malice and spite against the plaintiffs and particularly Khan. I therefore find that the writings published constitute a libel of the plaintiffs.

In every action for libel, and in actions for slander per se, damages are presumed. Actual injury does not have to be proved. Where the slander is not actionable per se, a plaintiff can recover only if special damages are shown. The award may be compensatory or, in appropriate cases, punitive. Compensatory damages are either general or special. In addition to providing compensation for the injury to the plaintiff's reputation, they may include such injuries as mental suffering, anguish, embarrassment, humiliation in any actual or anticipated pecuniary loss or social disadvantage. In assessing damages the court may consider the character and conduct of both plaintiff and defendant, together with the nature and character of the defamatory publication, the extent of its circulation and the principles under which it was made.

[para10] Compensatory damages are awarded primarily to compensate a plaintiff for the harm caused to his or her reputation and further for any hurt or injured feelings that the publication of the libel may have caused. General damages arise by inference of law and require neither special allegation nor proof. However, actual or special damages do not arise by inference of law and, as they are intended to compensate the plaintiff for the loss suffered as a natural and approximate result of the defamatory words, they must be proven at trial.

Aggravated damages may be awarded in circumstances where the defendants' conduct has been particularly high-handed or oppressive, thereby increasing the plaintiff's humiliation and anxiety arising from the libellous [defamatory] statement...

These damages take into account the additional harm caused to the plaintiff's feelings by the defendant's outrageous and malicious conduct.

[para12] It should be noted that like general damages or special damages, aggravated damages being compensatory in nature require consideration by the trier of the conduct of the defendant prior to the publication of the libel and continuing through to the conclusion of trial. If aggravated damages are to be awarded, there must be a finding that the defendant was motivated by actual malice which increase the plaintiff's injuries or the mental distress and humiliation of the plaintiff arising from the libellous conduct.

[para13] The nature of punitive damages was also canvassed in Hill v. Church of Scientology, supra, per Cory J. at page 1208:

Punitive damages may be awarded in situations where the defendant's misconduct is so malicious, oppressive and high-handed that it offends the court's sense of decency. Punitive damages bear no relation to what the plaintiff should receive by way of compensation. Their aim is not to compensate the plaintiff, but rather to punish the defendant. It is the means by which the jury or judge expresses its outrage at the egregious conduct of the defendant. They are in the nature of a fine which is meant to act as a deterrent to the defendant and to others from acting in this manner. It is important to emphasize that punitive damages should only be awarded in those circumstances where the combined award of general and aggravated damages would be insufficient to achieve the goal of punishment and deterrence.

[para14] Applying the foregoing principles to the facts of the present case, I assess the plaintiffs' damages as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are awarded general damages in the amount of $65,000.00, comprising actual damages arising out of lost profits from the termination of the corporate plaintiff's contract with Peel Condominium Corporation No. 143 in the sum of $45,000.00 (after deducting a contingency factor of 10% of the established loss of $50,000.00) and the sum of $20,000.00 for injury and hurt to the reputation of both plaintiffs with respect to business integrity and honesty;

2. The plaintiffs are awarded the sum of $20,000.00 as aggravated damages on the basis of the defendant's actual malice and his republication of the libel, both in the context of a purported retraction and apology and of further republication to the Association representing the plaintiff's business peers. The court, however, is not persuaded that the defendant's conduct is of such an egregiously outrageous nature so as to warrant the assessment of punitive damages, having regard to the test in Walker v. CFTO Ltd. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 104, (C.A.).

[para15] The plaintiffs shall have their costs herein which I hereby fix in the amount of $8,500.00, inclusive of disbursement and applicable taxes.

Durham Condominium Corporation No. 99, applicant, and Earl Michael Brousseau and Laurie Jane Allen, respondents

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) D.S. Ferguson J. November 25, 1996.

Counsel: G.F. Vella, for the applicant. J.M. Wortzman, for the respondents.

[para1] D.S. FERGUSON J.:-- There are some troubling features in the evidence.

[para3] The provisions of Article IV of the Declaration of the applicant condominium corporation appear to conflict with that statutory requirement. Section 1(d) states that no change may be made to the common elements except with the prior written consent of the board of the corporation. Section 2(c) states that no change may be made to an installation on the common elements without the prior consent of the board and further states that this consent shall be in the sole and unfettered discretion of the board.

[para4] Neither party seeks a declaration as to the validity of those provisions which purport to govern the process for determining whether or not the Respondent will be allowed to demolish his deck and build a replacement.

[para5] 2. The parties disagree as to whether the vote required by s. 38 of the Act is that of 80% of the owners or only a majority of owners. This depends on whether or not the replacement of the deck is a "substantial" change. Both parties have asked me to determine on the facts of the case whether or not the change is "substantial". However, Article III, s. 4(b) of the Declaration provides that the board has the absolute discretion to determine this issue. There is no evidence as to whether or not the board has made this determination but it appears it has not done so.

[para6] 3. This application is apparently brought as the result of a decision of the board. There is no evidence that the unit owners were consulted. The board is asking the court to exercise its discretion under s. 49(2) of the Act by making an order that the Respondent is to demolish his replacement deck which would then leave him in the position of applying through the board for a vote of the unit holders to determine whether or not he will be allowed to build a replacement deck. If the court were to accede to this request and subsequently the unit holders voted to permit the construction of the replacement deck this would be very prejudicial to the Respondent. It seems to me that in all the circumstances of this case the outcome of the vote of the unit holders is a significant factor which the court should know before it exercises its discretion. I also note the Respondent has taken the position in paragraph 33 of his affidavit of February 14, 1996 that this matter should be decided by a vote of the unit owners and has offered to pay for all the costs of the vote. His counsel has provided written confirmation of that proposal. If a vote were held and the Respondent did not abide by the vote or refused to pay the cost then the court could be asked to impose a sanction.

[para7] I conclude it is premature to determine this matter and I am going to adjourn it sine die to be brought on by either party on 7 days notice.

[para8] If the board holds a vote then the board may bring this matter on again on the basis of additional material indicating the outcome of the vote. If the board does not hold a vote within 3 months then the Respondent may bring this matter on again seeking a dismissal of the Application. I will hear submissions on costs if and when the application is brought on again.

Passmore Gates Developments Ltd., plaintiff/defendants by counterclaim, and Yim Chee Chung, Kam Lee and Cammy Chan, defendants/plaintiffs by counterclaim, and Kevin Lo and Sincere Realty Inc., third parties

File 57054/90"Q"(B)

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Non-Jury - Toronto, Ontario O'Brien J. Heard: April 22-26, 29, 30, May 1 and 6-10, 1996. Judgment: May 30, 1996. Sale of land -- Agreement to purchase -- Breach, by purchaser -- Defences -- Misrepresentation.

Counsel: Arleen Huggins, for the plaintiff. James Adamson, for the defendants. D.H. Rogers, Q.C. and Caspar Sinnige, for the third parties.

[para1] O'BRIEN J.:-- This case arises from an abortive real estate transaction which was entered into in March of 1989 and which ultimately failed to close in August 1990. The plaintiff Passmore Gates Development Ltd. ("Passmore"), the vendor, seeks damages from the defendant Yim Chee Chung ("Chung") the purchaser. Chung counterclaims for the return of her deposit and both Chung and Passmore claim over against one of the real estate agents involved, Kevin Lo ("Lo"), an employee of Sincere Realty ("Sincere").

[para3] Chung alleges that she refused to complete the transaction because of misrepresentations made to her by Lo. The alleged misrepresentation was that although the property was in an area zoned as light industrial it was possible for her to operate a Chinese restaurant and retail outlets without zoning amendment.

[para4] Passmore's position is that Lo was acting solely as Chung's agent. It denies Lo made a misrepresentation, but if he did, he did not do so as Passmore's agent.

[para5] Lo and Passmore also allege Chung knew the property was zoned light industrial, that she purchased the units on speculation at the height of the Toronto area real estate boom and only advanced the restaurant theory when the real estate market commenced to fall in the Spring and Summer of 1990.

Issues

(1) Alleged misrepresentation

[para6] To a large extent, this involves credibility findings as to Chung's intentions, and representations she claims Lo made.

[para7] There were issues of whether Lo was agent for Passmore or Chung, or perhaps a dual agent. In view of the conclusions I have reached on credibility it is unnecessary to deal with those arguments.

(2) Lo's duty:

(a) to "qualify" Chung as a purchaser. That is, to determine her intentions, needs and abilities to complete the transaction;

(b) to advise Chung of the need to obtain legal advice before signing the purchase offer.

(3) The legal effect of clauses in the signed offer dealing with liquidated damages and penalties.

[para8] It is alleged the clauses limit damages to the deposits.

Background

The Project and the Sale Arrangements

[para9] The units in question were to be built as the second of a two-phase construction project. There were twenty units in each of two sections, all on ground level. By Spring 1989 most of the first section had been sold and Passmore planned to sell and construct the second phase.

[para10] The evidence indicates the real estate market in the Toronto area had been extremely good for a number of years and reached its peak in early 1989. It started into a very significant decline in the summer of 1990.

[para11] Passmore entered into an arrangement with Aceland Realty Inc. ("Aceland"), whereby that company was to be Passmore's exclusive agent to market the development and was to receive 2 1/2% commission on the sale of any unit. It was understood that Aceland could enter into agreements to co-operate with other real estate agents to sell units. In this case Aceland did sign such an agreement with Sincere Realty, (Lo's employer), whereby Sincere was to receive a 3% commission on all sales to Chung. It was understood by all that Passmore would eventually pay that commission.

[para12] Chung's offer of March 13, 1989 was accepted by Passmore that day. The price was one million, eight hundred twelve thousand, nine hundred and ninety eight dollars ($1,812,998.00), based on a price of $115.00 per square foot. The offer provided for an occupancy and closing date of January 18, 1990. The closing date was extended by Passmore during construction, as permitted in the agreement, and was eventually scheduled on July 27, 1990. It was then extended, at Chung's request, to July 31. Chung agreed to pay $60,000. for that four-day extension. It was extended again to August 2, but did not close.

[para13] Chung changed solicitors a number of times during that period. In July her solicitors were Fraser & Beatty. On July 31 that firm arranged for the final extension to August 2. Fraser & Beatty then advised Passmore's lawyer that Del Zotto Zorzi had been retained by Chung. On August 2, Del Zotto Zorzi advised they were no longer acting on Chung's behalf.

[para15] There was a subsequent meeting between Passmore and Chung sometime in late August or September of 1990, in an unsuccessful attempt to resolve the matter.

Chung's Background

[para16] This is of significance in view of some of the issues raised in this litigation. Chung is now 43 years old. She had a grade 9 education in Communist China and then worked for 2 1/2 years as a sewing machine operator in Hong Kong. She then came to Canada in 1973 and obtained work as a sewing machine operator. In 1979 she started her own business manufacturing ladies wear. She had three or four employees and had total sales of $16,000 that year. By 1989 she had formed Ling May Fashion Contractors Inc., she had eighty to ninety employees and sales of over two million dollars, with estimated profits of 10-25%. She operated her business on the 3rd and 4th floors of a building on Spadina Avenue, with total floor space of approximately 20,000 square feet. The annual rental was approximately $35,000.

[para17] In the years from 1983 to 1988 she purchased real estate in Toronto. By 1988 she had an equity of over one million dollars in those properties which consisted of residential, commercial and mixed residential-commercial.

[para18] Chung separated from her husband in 1979 and is the sole operator of her clothing business. She makes all decisions connected with real estate purchases.

[para19] Chung has slight difficulty speaking English but it is not a significant problem. She impressed me as an extremely intelligent and able business person.

[para20] By way of comparison, Lo is 56 years old. He came to Canada from Hong Kong in 1966. He has been a real estate agent since 1975. He has much more difficulty with English than Chung and impressed me as much less able than Chung. His knowledge of real estate matters could be described as basic or even rudimentary.

[para21] Chung had used the legal services of Kai Wing Tsang ("Tsang"), a Toronto solicitor who speaks both Cantonese ("Chung's dialect") and English. Tsang had acted for Chung since early in the 1980's. Chung did not obtain advice from Tsang prior to signing offers to purchase real estate.

[para22] Tsang testified at trial. In cross-examination he stated he believed he advised Chung to bring in offers to purchase before she signed them but said "she would not listen, she trusts few people".

[para23] During her cross-examination Chung conceded that as a business person she liked to "keep secret about her plans" and that was one of the reasons she signed purchase offers in trust.

[para24] She denied any specific accounting or legal advice in connection with the Passmore transaction but did admit that prior to that transaction she obtained accounting advice that when she bought real estate she should put the title into a separate company, and she had advice from her solicitor that he had numbered companies available to take title at the appropriate time.

[para26] Chung's evidence in cross-examination on that point was interesting. She was evasive. She admitted at one point that Tsang explained to her that she could not develop the land and that was the reason she refused to complete the deal. She admitted she "said" she could not obtain financing but she did have financing available if she wanted it. At a later point, she claimed she did not know how Tsang got her out of the deal and she did not know how he was going to get her out of the transaction. Later in her cross-examination she suggested Tsang got her out by saying she could not arrange financing but he did that without her instructions.

[para27] Later, she said it was "okay for lawyer to say something to get out of deal by saying something not true" and she did not care how he got her out of the deal.

[para28] At the same point in her cross-examination she conceded that she did not think there was any way to get out of the Passmore transaction other than to blame Lo.

[para29] She had entered into the Passmore transaction shortly after the Innisfil transaction and admitted if she had not bought Passmore she would have bought something else.

[para30] In connection with the Passmore transaction Chung said she received advice about real estate from a friend by the name of Wong. She had known him for a number of years and he ran a business in the same building on Spadina in which Chung ran her operation.

[para31] Wong had purchased an industrial condominium in another development a very short distance from the Passmore development. Chung recalled Wong advised her to buy into the Passmore development quickly before it became public knowledge and if she did so, she would be able to get a better price.

[para32] Chung agreed she was interested in purchasing quickly and had not even gone to the site to look at the area before signing the offer.

(1) The Alleged Misrepresentation

(a) Chung's Evidence

[para33] Chung alleges that although Lo did tell her the property was in an area zoned light industrial he also told her that restaurant use was permitted and that it would be possible to develop the property in the same way that Mandarin Palace and New World property had been developed. Those latter areas are Chinese restaurant/retail emporiums located in North York near the Steeles Ave. Victoria Park intersection. They are about 7-8 kilometres from the Passmore property which is in Scarborough.

[para34] Chung claimed she had the idea of developing a restaurant/emporium from about 1986. She was uncertain as to whether she would have a buffet type restaurant or a food court complex.

[para35] She testified she had the idea of offering participation in such an investment to Hong Kong residents who were anxious to immigrate to Canada as those making investments had preferred immigration status.

[para36] She claimed that when talking to Lo, before there was any discussion of the Passmore project she "direct or indirect" told him she wanted to have a food court and that "direct or indirect" Lo showed her a number of properties which might be suitable for such a project.

[para37] Chung first heard of the Passmore project from Wong who had obtained a brochure describing it after purchasing units in a nearby project.

[para38] Chung recalled three meetings with Lo in which the purchase was discussed. There was some confusion as to exactly what occurred at each meeting.

[para40] Chung was uncertain whether Lo phoned, or told her in person the builder would not accept a price of less than $115.00 per square foot, but recalled there was a meeting in which price was discussed and she decided which units she wanted by looking at a sketch of the proposed construction. She recalled some discussion about not putting the walls up in some units. [para41] At the third meeting, Lo brought the purchase offer. He told her it was the builder's form and was a standard agreement. He discussed the total price, the arrangements for down payment, further deposit payments requested, and discussed the number of units to be purchased, and the financing required to complete. Chung believed her friend and employee Cammy Chan was present during part of that meeting. Chan then discussed purchasing a unit. Chung eventually purchased a unit in trust for Chan.

[para42] The purchase agreement consists of three pages with three schedules and totals eighteen pages. Chung claimed Lo did not go through the agreement in detail but did have her initial every page.

[para44] There was confusion on the point, but when testifying in chief, Chung claimed she could not remember receiving an extract of the by-law. During cross-examination she admitted she must have received an extract of the by-law as she did have a copy of it. She admitted Lo told her the zoning was industrial and she knew what that meant. I conclude Chung did receive an extract of the by-law (filed as part of Exhibit 8 at trial).

(b) Lo's Evidence

[para45] Lo claimed he sold Wong three units in a nearby commercial condominium building. One unit for Wong and two units for a friend of Wong's from Hong Kong. A short time later, Wong phoned and told Lo Chung wanted to buy ten units in the same condominium building and wanted the units to be together. Lo discovered that that project was almost sold out. He made some inquiries and discovered the Passmore project was very close and had units available. Lo got a brochure and gave it to Wong. About a week later Wong phoned and asked Lo to visit Chung's office, which he did. Wong was also present. There was a brief discussion in which Lo asked Chung if she was ready to buy and which units she wanted (referring to a sketch in the brochure). Chung picked out the units she wanted. There was another brief discussion about price and Lo suggested making an offer at $105.00 per square foot.

[para46] Lo recalled there was no discussion about what use Chung wanted the make of the units. He assumed because Wong had purchased in an industrial condominium that Chung was also familiar with the area.

[para48] Lo claimed he also had Chung sign the zoning acknowledgement (which consisted of three lines), and read to her the first two paragraphs of the attached zoning extract which defined industrial and general industrial uses. He claimed he read those to her in English and then Chinese. Lo claimed he gave Chung a copy of the zoning extract.

[para49] Lo was adamant that there was no suggestion from Wong or Chung that Chung wanted to use the property for a restaurant. The first he heard of that was in early Summer when he, Wong and Chung were eating at a Chinese restaurant. He testified Chung said she was thinking of using her units for a that purpose. Lo claimed he was surprised. He recalled saying that if she was serious she could apply for re-zoning and did mention that he knew the owner of the New World property and that person told him he had started out with a small restaurant and had expanded. The property was in an area zoned light industrial.

[para50] Lo claimed he had some discussion with Chung about opening a cafeteria for her workers if she was going to move her manufacturing from Spadina Avenue.

[para51] When cross-examined, Lo claimed he did not ask Chung what she proposed to do with the Passmore property. He thought she might be considering moving her Spadina Avenue business there or she was buying it as an investment.

[para52] He claimed he did not discuss her proposed use because Chung was a successful business person and he respected her business ability. He had been showing Chung properties since about mid-1988. He testified that when he was showing her properties he - "did not push her, I let her think and decide if she want to buy. I make up offer- she like she buy, she no like she no buy."

[para53] He claimed he relied on this past experience in connection with Passmore.

(c) Findings On Credibility

[para54] The major evidence supporting Chung's claim that she purchased Passmore with the intention of opening a restaurant complex was given by her friend and former employee Kam Lee. Lee was working in Chung's plant at the time Chung purchased. Lee recalled there was a lot of discussion among the factory workers that Chung, "the boss" was going to buy a mall. Lee testified she asked Chung, who confirmed she was, and also told Lee she was going to open a restaurant complex.

[para55] Lee's evidence on this point was so supportive it indicated to me she was biased. She testified that she asked Chung many times what Chung proposed to do with the property. She claimed she followed Chung around the plant for a day or two and in cross-examination claimed she must have asked Chung her intentions more than ten times in a day or two.

[para56] When testifying Lee volunteered, whenever possible, that Chung told her she intended to open a restaurant. Lee gave such answers even when those answers were unresponsive to the questions asked.

[para57] Although Passmore's claim against Lee has been settled I conclude Lee was doing her utmost to help Chung with this claim. I place little reliance on Lee's evidence.

[para58] Upon completion of Chung's cross-examination I felt I could place little reliance on Chung's credibility. There were a number of serious contradictions in her testimony. On occasions she was evasive and there were instances I felt she was using language problems and failing memory to avoid damaging answers.

[para59] I will outline a few of the major contradictions. [para60] In cross-examination Chung admitted Lo told her the property was zoned industrial and she knew what that meant. She claimed Lo did not tell her if she wanted a restaurant like New World she would have to re-zone.

[para61] She was confronted with her examination for discovery in which she admitted she understood industrial zoning did not allow restaurant use unless the zoning was amended in some way.

[para63] At a further point in cross-examination Chung swore she did not know if her (proposed) restaurant got as big as New World she would have to re-zone. She was confronted with an affidavit she swore when resisting Passmore's motion for summary judgment. In that affidavit she "accepted" she knew if her restaurant ever reached the business volume of New World she would have to make an application for a zoning change.

[para64] She attempted to explain that inconsistency by blaming the lawyer who prepared the affidavit.

[para65] At the end of the exchange dealing with that issue she admitted when she bought the Passmore property she really hadn't made up her mind as to what she was going to do with it. She attempted to modify that admission in re-examination by stating she intended to operate a restaurant but hadn't made up her mind about running a buffet restaurant or a food court.

[para66] I was not impressed with that modification.

[para68] Tsang testified. I found him to be credible. He recalled the offer arrived at his office but it was merely deposited and "stayed there a long time as the property was not built". Tsang recalled he received the offer much later than the signing date of March 1989 and discussions about potential zoning problems occurred much later in 1989.

[para69] There was considerable evidence as to when Chung realized there was a zoning problem. She discussed the matter with another friend, Bill Yee, whom she knew through their joint political activity. He suggested there was a zoning problem. Chung felt he "was crazy" but eventually went with him to see David Smith a solicitor and politically active person. There were meetings at Smith's office when the zoning problems were discussed and Chung realized there was a very real problem with the zoning if she wanted to have a restaurant.

[para70] After receiving this information from Smith she contacted Henry Chu an architect whom she believed had very good political connections with some of the Scarborough politicians. She spoke to Chu sometime in July or August of 1990. He told her he would need a few days to look into the matter. Chung agreed to pay $60,000 to Passmore for a five-day extension of the closing deadline to see what Chu could do for her. He eventually advised restaurant use was not permitted and in addition there was a problem with insufficient parking. He advised a zoning change was required and it would be expensive, lengthy and unlikely to succeed.

[para71] Tsang testified that when Chung realized there was a zoning problem she transferred the file to David Smith some time in February 1990. Tsang vaguely recalled some discussions with Chung in which she discussed running a restaurant but felt those conversations were probably late in 1989.

[para72] Tsang also testified he had discussed zoning issues with Chung prior to March 1989 in connection with a purchase she had made near Niagara Falls.

[para73] There was evidence relating to two tape recorded conversations Chung secretly made. Neither were disclosed on her affidavit of documents and production although she claimed she had given them both to the counsel then acting for her.

[para74] The first was of a phone conversation she had with Lo and the other was made at a meeting she had with representatives of Passmore when attempting to settle this dispute after her refusal to complete. Both recordings were made some time in August or September 1990. She purchased separate machines from Radio Shack for the purpose of making the two tape recordings, one for telephone use, the other a small unit she placed in her pocket.

[para75] Neither recording really assisted Chung's case. The discussion with Lo was as consistent with his claim that he discussed possible zoning changes and restaurant use with Chung well after she signed the purchase offer and with a view to helping her, as it was with Chung's allegations of misrepresentation.

[para76] Lo said nothing which confirmed Chung's claim that he misrepresented the matter prior to her signing the offer. I found this of some significance as Chung obviously was trying to obtain such an admission from him during the phone conversation.

[para78] On her examination for discovery in March 1992 Chung indicated she had the tape recording of Lo's phone conversation. She was specifically asked if she had taped any other person in connection with the case and denied doing so. Chung attempted to explain this obvious inconsistent answer by claiming confusion over phone tapes and tapes of conversations made person to person. I found this explanation completely unconvincing.

[para79] I conclude Chung was not a credible witness. Where her evidence conflicts with Lo I prefer that of Lo. [para80] I am not persuaded Chung had a definite intention to operate a restaurant complex at the Passmore location when she signed the purchase offer. I conclude she did not mention any such intent to Lo when discussing the purchase nor did she discuss it with her solicitor Tsang until well after she signed the offer.

[para81] I conclude Chung made the purchase as an investment or speculation at the height of the Toronto real estate boom and refused to complete the transaction after it appeared there was a sudden substantial decline in that market. I note her admission which I have referred to above that she felt the only way she could get out of the deal was to blame Lo.

[para82] I conclude Lo did make statements to Chung about the possibility of running a restaurant and the zoning situation but none of those statements were made prior to Chung signing the offer and Chung did not rely on them when making her decision to purchase.

(2)(a) Lo's duty to "qualify" Chung as a purchaser [para83] Most of the argument made on this point was based on the assumption that when Chung signed the offer to purchase she intended to operate a restaurant. I have concluded she did not.

[para84] There is no dispute that a real estate agent may incur liability to his or her principal based on general agency and negligence principles if there is a failure to meet reasonable or generally accepted standards of skill and care.

[para85] In this case there was evidence from Alan Manchester testifying on behalf of Chung, and John Shorthill on behalf of Lo. Both are qualified real estate agents. Mr. Shorthill's qualifications are more impressive than Mr. Manchester's. Lo also testified on this issue.

[para86] All witnesses agreed there was a general duty on a real estate agent to "qualify" a prospective purchaser by inquiring as to the needs, wants and ability to pay.

[para87] Mr. Manchester's evidence on this point became somewhat esoteric as he was asked to give an opinion based on assumptions that a prospective purchaser had an intention to start a Chinese restaurant but would not disclose that purpose. On the conclusions I have reached his opinion is of little assistance.

[para90] Mr. Shorthill was asked to assume an agent was dealing with a prospective purchaser whom he knew from past experience, who had shown an interest in purchasing various types of real estate, including vacant land and farmland for investment, was successful in business with significant finances and operated a garment business occupying over 10,000 square feet and had requested an agent to visit, expressed an interest in purchasing a number of units in an industrial condominium to be built.

[para91] Mr. Shorthill testified that if an agent obtained such information nothing further was required by way of qualification of the purchaser.

[para92] I accept that opinion. I conclude there was no failure on Lo's part to qualify Chung as a purchaser.

(2)(b) Lo's duty to recommend Chung obtain legal advice

[para93] On this point Mr. Manchester testified the offer Chung signed was a vendor's form which required a lot of study and a real estate agent should have advised Chung to seek legal advice before signing it. [para94] In cross-examination he conceded he was primarily involved in residential sales and had not sold an industrial condominium in the last five years.

[para95] Mr. Shorthill's business was primarily in commercial real estate. He testified he was familiar with the form of the offer used in this case and it was a standard builder's form commonly used in the purchase of commercial condominiums.

[para96] He was asked to assume the agent reviewed the main points of the offer and had used an acknowledgement and extract of the applicable zoning in order to bring the zoning to the attention of a purchaser.

[para97] He referred to the code of ethics of the Toronto Real Estate Board which provides that an agent shall not dissuade parties to a transaction from seeking legal advice. He testified there was no positive duty to recommend such advice.

[para98] There is nothing raised in the pleadings in this case that the offer was unfair.

[para101] In that decision Trainor J. accepted the opinion of a legal expert and concluded there were occasions where the complexity of the transaction and where there was an interim agreement requiring legal interpretation both vendor and purchaser should be represented and safe practice required the conveyancing solicitor to do his utmost to encourage the vendor to seek independent legal advice. [Emphasis added.]

[para102] I am not persuaded that authority supports the argument there is a general duty on a real estate agent to advise a purchaser to seek legal advice nor the facts in this case required Lo to recommend it.

(3) Liquidated Damage Clauses

[para103] Chung's counsel argued the relevant clauses in this agreement operated to limit damages recoverable to the deposit which totalled $412,597.97.

[para104] He relied on the decision in Fraser v. Van Nus (1987), 14 B.C.L.R. (2d) 111 (B.C.C.A.). There the court held it to be a question of contract construction as to whether or not a stipulated sum of damages for contract breach limited the damages recoverable.

[para105] In that case however the relevant portion of the clause was:

The owner may at the owner's option cancel this agreement, and in such event the amount paid by the purchaser shall be absolutely forfeited to the owner by way of liquidated damages.

[para106] The court noted at p. 113:

The vendors elected to terminate the contract when the purchaser told them he would not perform. They did not protest that the purchaser must fulfil his bargain.

Schedule A:

The vendor in addition to any other remedies this agreement provides, may, at its option declare this Agreement and the Occupancy Agreement to be at an end and any deposit monies together with all monies paid for any extras or charges shall be retained by the vendor as its liquidated damages and not as penalty.

Schedule B:

The vendor retains all its rights and remedies under the Agreement against the Purchaser and shall be at liberty to sell the unit with or without re-entry and all monies previously paid by the Purchaser shall be retained as liquidated damages and not as penalty and the Purchaser shall be liable to the Vendor for its cost and expenses incurred to restore the Unit to its original condition.

[para108] In this case, when Chung failed to complete, Passmore's solicitors wrote numerous letters demanding the default (in failing to complete) be remedied and failing that, advised Passmore would avail itself of all its legal remedies.

[para109] It was suggested in argument that one of those letters, dated October 3, 1990, accepted Chung's repudiation and limited the right to damages. I do not accept that argument. That letter went on to state that a damage claim was asserted and enclosed a Statement of Claim in the action. That letter did no more than assert Passmore's claim as is stipulated in Mayson v. Clouet, [1924] A.C. 980 (H.L.) at 985:

The other party has his option. He may still treat the contract as existing and sue for specific performance; or he may elect to hold the contract as at an end - i.e. no longer binding on him - while retaining the right to sue for damages in respect of the breach committed.

[para110] I conclude the clauses in this case do not have the effect of restricting Passmore's right to recover damages for the full loss caused by Chung's breach.

[para111] I follow the approach taken in Raymer v. Stratton Woods Holdings Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 16 (C.A.) at p. 21. Finlayson J.A. noted:

To conclude that forfeiture of the deposit was intended to cover all damages for breach of contract is to give no effect whatsoever to the words 'in addition to and without prejudice to any other remedy available to the vendor'.

[para112] At the same page he noted there would be no need to refer to expenses if the deposit was intended to be exhaustive of the remedy for damages.

[para113] In my view the clauses in this contract are not intended to limit the damages recoverable. Damages

[para114] No evidence relating to damages was tendered on behalf of Chung and there were no submissions in argument related to the quantum of damages which were proved on behalf of Passmore.

[para115] There will therefore be judgment in favour of Passmore against Chung for the sum of $1,377,885.95 as outlined in revised Exhibit 7 at trial.

[para116] That exhibit includes prejudgment interest on all amounts claimed with the exception of claims for prejudgment interest on real estate commission paid on resales of Units 26 to 29 inclusive and Unit 34. Those items are shown in paragraph 6 of that exhibit. There will be prejudgment interest on those amounts (which total $30,363.00) at the rate prescribed in the Courts of Justice Act from the time each commission was paid on the relevant resale.

Conclusions

[para117] There will be judgment for Passmore against Chung for amounts indicated above in the main action. Chung's counterclaim and Third Party claim against Lo is dismissed.

[para118] Passmore's Third Party Claim against Lo is also dismissed.

[para119] I ask counsel to contact my secretary to arrange a convenient date to make submissions on costs and to deal with any mathematical errors which may have been made above.

Gordon Cummins and Catherine Cummins, applicants (respondents in appeal), and Napev Construction Limited, respondent (appellant in appeal)

Court File No. V393/94

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Divisional Court Southey, Steele and Carnwath JJ. Heard: January 19, 1995. Judgment: March 22, 1995.

Counsel: James E. Lewis, Q.C., for the appellant. Michael A. Spears, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] STEELE J.:-- This is an appeal from the decision of Dunn J. where in a well reasoned Judgment he ordered Napev Construction Limited (the vendor) to pay to Gordon Cummins and Catherine Cummins (the purchasers) an amount attributable to interest on money paid by them to the vendor relating to their purchase of a condominium unit.

[para3] After the purchasers obtained occupancy and before the final closing date, the purchasers requested the vendor to accept payment of the balance of the phantom mortgage to reduce their monthly occupancy fees under section 51(6) of the Act. Their letter agreement contained the following two clauses:

2. The amount of $129,000.00 received will be applied to the payment of your unit. As agreed by both parties, no interest is to be paid on this amount from receipt to date of final closing. At final closing, both parties will be subject to standard final adjustments including payment of interest on your initial three (3) deposits totalling $18,000.00.

3. In addition to the foregoing, when the Closing Date (as defined in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale made between Gordon J. and Catherine V. Cummins, as Purchaser and Napev Construction Limited, as Vendor (the "Sale Agreement")) has been designated pursuant to Paragraph 5 of the Sale Agreement, the Vendor shall deliver to the Purchaser a registerable transfer for the Property (as defined in undated Occupancy Agreement made between the Purchaser and the Vendor) without payment of any further consideration.

[para5] Dunn J. found that the arrangement made eminent sense to both Parties. He found that the letter agreement was an amendment to the original agreement of purchase and sale under the Act and that the money paid by the purchasers fell within the description of trust monies in sections 53(1) and 53(3) of the Act. He also found that by virtue of section 60 of the Act, the parties could not contract out of the provisions of the Act. He noted the injustice of the result where the purchasers had their occupancy fees reduced, but the vendor, having held trust money, must pay the interest thereon to the purchasers. In other words, the purchasers receive benefits both ways, while the vendor received minimal benefits.

[para6] In my opinion, Dunn J. was correct in his decision.

[para7] The applicable provisions of the Act are as follows:

51. (6) Where an agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes permits or requires the purchaser to take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser, the money paid in respect of such right or obligation to the proposed declarant shall be not greater, on a monthly basis, than the total of the following amounts;

1. The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages the purchaser is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit.

2. An amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the proposed unit.

3. The projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit.

53. (1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, despite the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account

(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by the proposed declaration on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser. 60. This Act applies despite any agreement to the contrary. R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, s. 61.

This brings me to para. 1 of s. 51(6), which is at the heart of the issue in this case. The mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee, which is almost invariably by far the largest of the three items enumerated in s. 51(6), is chargeable only in the case of a mortgage that the purchaser "is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit." Section 51(6) para. 1 does not deal with transactions in which the purchase price is paid in cash and no mortgage is to be assumed or given back by the purchaser on final closing. The reason for omitting those transactions and mandating that such purchasers be charged a lower occupancy fee than purchasers who assume or give back a mortgage is not readily apparent. Indeed, it is difficult to understand why the one class of purchasers should be afforded greater protection or be treated differently and more favourably than the other. No satisfactory reason for the distinction has been suggested by counsel, or is to be found in the texts or articles to which the court has been referred. It would indeed appear, as Dupont J. suggested in Cadillac Fairview Corp. v. Allin (1979), 7 R.P.R. 287, 25 O.R. (2d) 73, 100 D.L.R. (3d) 344 (H.C.), at p. 76 [O.R.], that the omission is simply the result of a possible oversight on the part of the legislature. ... By reason of the wording of s. 51(6) para. 1, the all-cash purchaser is placed in a better economic position than he or she would have been in had possession closing coincided with title closing. The section, viewed realistically, confers a windfall on such purchasers. They enjoy the same benefits of possession and hold the same possessory rights as a purchaser who agrees to assume or give back a mortgage on final closing; and, moreover, the carrying costs incurred by the vendor during the interim occupancy period are manifestly the same regardless of whether the purchaser is an all-cash purchaser or not. Nonetheless, for whatever reason, s. 51(6) requires that these purchasers be treated differently, and compels the vendor to accept a significantly lower occupancy rent from one class of purchasers than from another.

The Phantom Mortgage Concept

Section 51(6) evidently proved so financially detrimental to condominium developers that many of them refused to enter into transactions in which no mortgage was to be assumed or given back on final closing. Their response to this legislation was to restructure their agreements of purchase and sale in such a way as to satisfy the formal requirements of s. 51(6) para. 1 and thereby become entitled to include a mortgage interest component in the occupancy fee. To achieve this end, purchasers, in what would otherwise be all-cash transactions, were required under the terms of their agreements of purchase and sale to complete their transactions by giving back on final closing a form of mortgage that has become popularly known as a "phantom mortgage." This colourful appellation recognizes that these mortgages were to have only a passing existence and would disappear shortly, if not immediately, after final closing. They were patently not intended as a form of permanent financing.

[para10] In my opinion, this shows that without a phantom mortgage, an all-cash purchaser must be treated in a different manner than one who has agreed to a phantom mortgage. In the present case, by accepting the money to eliminate the phantom mortgage, the vendor has placed the purchaser in the same position as an all-cash purchaser. The money was received on account of the purchase price and under section 53 it must be held in trust and interest thereon must be paid to the purchaser.

[para11] For these reasons the appeal should be dismissed.

[para12] In my opinion, however, the purchasers induced the vendor to take the money in order to receive the benefit of a reduced occupancy allowance. They now claim interest under the technical wording of the Act. I think the result, while legal, is unfair.

[para13] Dunn J. saw fit not to award costs and I would not award any costs either on the motion to quash or on the appeal.

Macedon Developments (1988) Ltd., plaintiff, and Chris Bekaris and Christine Bekaris, defendants

Court File No. 74767/91Q

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Epstein J. Heard: February 14 and 15, 1995. Judgment: April 3, 1995.

Counsel: Michael Cohen, for the plaintiff. William Andrews, Q.C., for the defendants.

[para1] EPSTEIN J.:-- This case calls for the interpretation of an agreement between the parties, an agreement that pertained to a condominium apartment in Barrie, Ontario. The action arises seemingly in the context of yet another failed real estate transaction. The timing is predictable, the late 1980s and early 1990s. The plaintiff, Macedon Developments (1988) Ltd. ("Macedon"), and the defendants, Chris and Christine Bekaris (the "Bekarises"), entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with respect to the property on June 6, 1988 (the "Agreement").

[para2] The Agreement was reduced to writing in the form of a standard agreement of purchase and sale prepared by the developer. This document was signed by the parties.

[para3] The written contract was standard in many respects, including that it contemplated two closings characteristic of most condominium transactions: an interim closing, frequently referred to as an occupancy closing; and a final closing. However, the document was unique in that the actual date for occupancy closing was left blank even though the agreement of purchase and sale contained a detailed description of the rights and obligations associated with an interim closing. The written contract did specifically provide for a final closing date which was stated to be the latter of any occupancy date or a date fixed by Macedon not more than 30 days after the registration of the Declaration. Macedon eventually purported to establish May 15, 1990, as the date for an occupancy closing and subsequently February 15, 1991, for the final closing date. May 15, 1990, passed and the Bekarises took no steps toward an occupancy closing. Shortly thereafter, on August 16, 1990, Macedon formally took the position that the Bekarises were in default for not having complied with their requirements under an occupancy closing. Macedon eventually resold the condominium and commenced this action.

[para5] In response, Mr. Andrews, counsel for the Bekarises, submits that as of August 1990, the Bekarises were not in default as they had no obligations to participate in any occupancy closing. Accordingly, it was Macedon that breached the Agreement by repudiating it before the final closing date. The Bekarises claim that, under these circumstances, they are entitled to the return of their deposit.

[para6] The parties have significantly divergent views of their rights and obligations under the Agreement. This divergence stems from the fact that the Bekarises and Macedon have taken very different positions on exactly what the Agreement between them was; specifically, was there an obligation on the Bekarises to participate in an interim closing?

[para7] Even though the parties have asked the Court to interpret the facts differently, the facts themselves are not in dispute. In about August of 1987, Mrs. Bekaris received a telephone call from a Mr. Vangi, a person whom she knew from the Greek community. He told her about an attractive short-term investment opportunity in a condominium development. This type of investment is commonly known as a "flip." Mrs. Bekaris and her husband would have to advance a deposit of approximately $30,000. They would enter into an agreement to purchase a condominium apartment in Barrie, Ontario, but they would never have to take possession of it as the developer would resell it (likely at a profit) long before any closing.

[para8] Mrs. Bekaris and her husband, on the basis of this conversation, sent Macedon a cheque for $10,000 in late August of 1987 to show their interest in the proposal. Then, on May 28, 1988, they drove to Barrie where they met Mr. Sam Nitsopoulos, the then president of Macedon, and his son, Louis, who was also working for the developer. Mr. Nitsopoulos senior, in the presence of his son, gave the Bekarises the same description and assurances as had Mr. Vangi about the nature of the transaction. Mr. and Mrs. Bekaris were told "just to buy it and that (he or his son would) sell it on [their] behalf." They would never have to occupy the unit. In reliance on these assurances, without knowing anything about the nature of the proposed development, which unit they were buying, and even without reading the agreement of purchase and sale, they entered into the Agreement by signing the document and paying the remainder of the deposit.

[para10] However, there was other activity. For example, Mr. and Mrs. Bekaris were asked to attend at the sales office in Toronto to select design finishes. The couple was getting nervous about the lack of success of Macedon and the Nitsopouloses in selling the unit and so Mr. and Mrs. Bekaris took their own steps to try to sell the condominium. In October 1989, they listed it for sale gradually reducing the selling price over the ensuing months.

[para11] May 15, 1990, passed and the Bekarises took no steps toward an interim closing. Macedon purported to extend the time for the Bekarises' occupancy closing. However, patience ran out and in their letter of August 23, 1990, the solicitors for Macedon advised the Bekarises that Macedon was terminating the Agreement for failure to close on occupancy date, would be taking forfeiture of the deposit, and would be exercising remedies to recover damages.

[para12] The Bekarises were never advised of the closing date of February 13, 1991. They were not invited to tender. Instead, Macedon resold the condominium and, in June 1991, issued the claim in this action.

[para14] Against this factual background, the Agreement must be interpreted.

[para15] It is clear that the parties intended that their Agreement be reduced to writing and that the agreement of purchase and sale be the full and accurate embodiment of their understanding. However, as I have said, a problem has arisen in the interpretation of this document. The problem involves the meaning to be given to the blank space in the occupancy closing clause of the agreement of purchase and sale.

[para18] It is clear to me that the blank in the clause describing the occupancy closing is capable of both meanings: the one that a date was to be filled in when the timing became clearer; the other is that the purchasers did not intend, and therefore had no obligations, to participate in an occupancy closing. The blank clearly creates an ambiguity.

[para19] The defendants have urged me to admit the representations and assurances of the then president of Macedon that the Bekarises would not be obliged to close at the interim stage in order that the written contract may be interpreted according to the version they have submitted to the court.

[para20] Without hesitation, I accept the testimony of the Bekarises as to what was told to them on May 28, 1988, by Mr. Nitsopoulos, the man who at the time was president of Macedon. The credibility of Mr. and Mrs. Bekaris as truthful and accurate historians was not in any way impaired by cross-examination. Further, the plaintiff did not call any evidence, specifically that of Sam Nitsopoulos or his son, to contradict what the Bekarises had to say. Further, their subsequent actions, particularly ignoring the occupancy closing form letters, are completely consistent with their evidence of the May 28 conversation.

[para21] Next, I turn to whether the discussion is admissible. Normally, by reason of the application of the parol evidence rule, subject to certain exceptions, when the parties to an agreement have apparently set down all its terms in a document, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to add to, subtract from, or contract those terms. I note here that Mr. Cohen did not at any time challenge the admissibility of the statements of Mr. Nitsopoulos on May 28, 1988, as attested to by Mr. and Mrs. Bekaris.

[para22] In any event, I find the oral statements to be admissible under one of the well-recognized exceptions to the parol evidence rule that such evidence is relevant and may be admitted to dispel ambiguity. So if it is said that the oral representations that were made before the contract was signed are capable of clearing up an ambiguity, evidence can be given and in this case was given of the representations.

[para23] On the basis of the pleadings in this case, I have no doubt that this evidence is admissible to clarify the intentions of the parties in leaving the occupancy date blank.

[para24] Once this evidence is admitted under the application of the parol evidence rule, then the substantive law under that rule must then be considered. The critical parol evidence principle of substantive law was stated by Mr. Justice Martland in Carmen Construction Ltd. v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., [1982] 1 S.C.R. 958, as being that "a collateral agreement cannot be established where it is inconsistent with or contradicts the written agreement."

[para25] Mr. Cohen argues that this is what we have here, because to suggest that the Bekarises have no obligations to participate in an interim closing conflicts with the wording and obvious intention contained in several clear clauses in the agreement of purchase and sale, coupled with the subsequent occupancy date letters' to which the Bekarises did not object.

[para26] Mr. Justice Lambert, in the leading case of Gallen v. Allstate Grain Co. (1984), 9 D.L.R. (4th) 496 (B.C. C.A.), provides an extensive analysis of the principle described by Mr. Justice Martland. This analysis thankfully focuses on arriving at practical solutions to real-life problems of contract interpretation rather than becoming trapped by the archaic and sometimes unfair applications of the parol evidence rule.

[para28] This is a principle that has long been recognized by the courts. I refer to the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Tilden Rent-A-Car Co. v. Clendinning (1978), 18 O.R. (2d) 601, a case that deals with printed forms, fairness, and, as Justice Lambert described in Gallen, supra, "real life." Mr. Justice Dubin, as he then was, writing for the court, stated at page 609:

In modern commercial practice, many standard form printed documents are signed without being read or understood. In many cases the parties seeking to rely on the terms of the contract know or ought to know that the signature of a party to the contract does not represent the true intention of the signer, and that the party signing is unaware of the stringent and onerous provisions which the standard form contains. Under such circumstances, I am of the opinion that the party seeking to rely on such terms should not be able to do so in the absence of first having taken reasonable measures to draw such terms to the attention of the other party, and, in the absence of such reasonable measures, it is not necessary for the party denying knowledge of such terms to prove either fraud, misrepresentation or non est factum.

[para29] True, there is a presumption, a strong presumption, that a document that looks like a contract is to be treated as the whole contract, but it is a rebuttable presumption.

[para30] In the case at bar, I have found there to be reliable evidence that the Bekarises were told by the president of Macedon that they would not have to participate in an occupancy closing. I have found that they relied on this representation in entering into the Agreement and in signing the agreement of purchase and sale. I have also found that this evidence is admissible to dispel the ambiguity caused by the blank in the document even though the statements arguably may be in conflict with the wording of the agreement of purchase and sale. To hold otherwise would not be just.

[para32] In the result, the Bekarises had no obligations to participate in the May 15, 1990, occupancy closing. They were therefore not in default when they received the letter of August 16, 1990, from Macedon's lawyers. It follows that the notification of default upon which Macedon relies to support its claim in this action is invalid.

[para37] In my view, the Bekarises should have their costs on a party-and-party basis, as agreed upon by counsel or as assessed. If counsel wish to make submissions concerning costs or other matters, they may contact my secretary. EPSTEIN J.

Townsgate I Limited, plaintiff, and Jayme Farber, defendant

Court File No. 92-CQ-29457

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Potts J. Heard: December 14, 1994. Judgment: January 26, 1995.

Jeffrey W. Kramer, for the plaintiff. Raymond Stancer, for the defendant.

POTTS J.:--

3D INTRODUCTION

[para1] This action arose as a result of a real estate transaction which failed to close. The defendant, Jayme Farber ("Mr. Farber") entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated February 24, 1989 (the "Agreement") with Townsgate I Limited ("Townsgate") for the purchase of a condominium unit for the price of $316,000. In this action, Townsgate seeks damages as a result of what they claim to be a breach of the Agreement and by counterclaim, Mr. Farber seeks a return of the deposit, which is $40,000. At the end of the trial, I dismissed the action against Mr. Farber and allowed the counterclaim for the return of the $40,000 deposit.

[para2] An agreed statement of facts was filed. The sequence of events leading up to the failure to close the transaction are important to consider. In accordance with the Agreement, the "Closing Date" is defined in paragraph 1(b) as meaning "the 6th day of May, 1991 or as advanced or extended by Paragraphs 12 and 13(d)". By letter dated November 13, 1990 from Townsgate to Mr. Farber, the Closing Date was extended to August 29, 1991, in accordance with the Agreement.

[para3] By letter dated July 15, 1991, from Townsgate to Mr. Farber, paragraph 13 of the Agreement was invoked which provided for an "Occupancy Date" before the Closing Date. Paragraph 13 of the Agreement reads as follows:

13. If the Unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing, and the Purchaser has been approved by the Mortgagee, but the declaration and description have not yet been registered, then the Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on that date (the "Occupancy Date") on the following terms and conditions:

....

(d) the Closing Date shall be extended to a date twenty (20) days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's Solicitors to the Purchaser or his Solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the Vendor, the Purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver vacant possession of the Unit. The Vendor shall in that event be entitled to retain all monies paid hereunder for damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of redecorating as may be determined by the Vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein. (Emphasis added)

Thus, to invoke the mechanism of paragraph 13 of the Agreement to provide for an Occupancy Date, three conditions set out in that paragraph must exist:

- (1) the Unit is substantially completed, sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing
- (2) the Purchaser has been approved by the Mortgagee
- (3) the declaration and description have not been registered

[para4] The first paragraph of the letter dated July 15, 1991 is relevant and sets out as follows:

Further to our letter of November 13, 1990 the Interim Occupancy Closing Date for your unit is August 29, 1991 (the "Closing Date"). Although the Condominium has not been registered, the Unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy as set out in paragraph 13 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

At the time of the July 15, 1991 letter, the conditions in paragraph 13 of the Agreement were met. As set out above, it was emphasized that the condominium had not been registered but that the unit was substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy.

[para5] There was a further extension by letter dated August 26, 1991, from Townsgate to Mr. Farber. It was stated in this letter that:

Due to construction delays beyond our control, we are required to extend the closing date for your condominium unit to September 25, 1991 in accordance with the terms of your Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

It appears that even though the words "closing date" are used in the letter, the September 25, 1991 closing is actually the Occupancy Date. It is important to note that on August 26, 1991, the conditions set out in paragraph 13 of the Agreement were satisfied.

[para6] The declaration and description of the condominium corporation were registered on September 11, 1991. On August 26, 1991, the date upon which notice of the September 25, 1991 Occupancy Date was given to Mr. Farber, Townsgate did not know that the declaration and description would be registered on September 11, 1991 or on any date prior to September 25, 1991. Townsgate had no control over the date upon which the declaration and description would be registered. However, on September 25, 1991, the Occupancy Date, the last condition in paragraph 13 of the Agreement was not met due to the intervening registration that took place on September 11, 1991.

[para7] Although Townsgate did not have a deed available in registrable form to convey the unit to Mr. Farber, they were ready, willing, and able to provide occupancy to Mr. Farber on September 25, 1991 in accordance with the Occupancy Date contemplated by the Agreement. Townsgate did not provide notice to Mr. Farber of the registration of the declaration and description.

LEGAL ISSUES RAISED

[para8] The issue in this action concerns the interpretation of paragraph 13. More specifically, whether Mr. Farber was justified in not closing the transaction because of non-compliance with this paragraph or whether he was in breach of the Agreement as a result of his failure to attend on September 25, 1991 for the closing.

[para9] It is the position of Townsgate that Mr. Farber had no intention to complete the transaction for the condominium unit as the real estate market had collapsed just after he had signed the Agreement in February 1989. As a result of the diminished market value that Mr. Farber would have at closing, Townsgate argued that Mr. Farber is relying on a technical defence to avoid obligations. Townsgate relies on many factors to demonstrate that Mr. Farber had no intention to complete the transaction in accordance with the Agreement. Mr. Farber failed to:

- (a) attend to choose colours for the finishes to the subject condominium unit;
- (b) attend for the pre-closing inspection;
- (c) retain and instruct a lawyer to take the usual steps in respect of the closing; and
- (d) attend on September 25, 1991, the date set for the interim occupancy closing

[para10] Counsel for Townsgate urged me to consider all of the circumstances and find that Mr. Farber was in breach of the Agreement. With respect to paragraph 13, it was argued that the Agreement does not deal with a situation such as the one that arose in this case. Even though the Agreement does not contemplate this situation, it was submitted that no prejudice arose from the events occurring out of order. Therefore, the Agreement should be interpreted to deal with this situation of an intervening registration after notice of an Occupancy Date was given to Mr. Farber but before the actual Occupancy Date. It was further submitted that Occupancy Date as defined in paragraph 13 should be interpreted as being the date of notice of the Occupancy Date and in this case, as at the date of notice, all conditions were met.

[para11] Counsel for Mr. Farber stressed that Townsgate relies on the specific paragraph that they had not complied with. The July 15, 1991 letter relied on paragraph 13 of the Agreement to set the Occupancy Date. In fact, the provisions of paragraph 13 are quoted in the first paragraph of the letter. When extending this date by the August 26, 1991 letter, Townsgate was again relying on the terms of the Agreement. By letter dated October 11, 1991 from Goodman and Carr, solicitors for Townsgate, Mr. Farber was advised that as a result of the failure to attend for the purposes of closing the transaction, he repudiated the Agreement. The following portion of that letter is relevant:

Pursuant to the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, you were obliged to close the transaction of purchase and sale on the Occupancy Date, as such term is defined in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Our client had previously advised you that the transaction of purchase and sale was to close on September 25, 1991. On the said date, our client was ready, willing and able to close the transaction of purchase and sale... (Emphasis added)

[para12] Counsel for Mr. Farber argues that by the October 11, 1991 letter, Townsgate was relying on paragraph 13 of the Agreement. However, to benefit from paragraph 13, the three conditions set out above must be met in order for a vendor to demand that a purchaser take occupancy on the Occupancy Date. It is acknowledged that had the three conditions been met on the Occupancy Date, the purchaser had to move in or the purchaser would be in default under the Agreement. In this case, due to the intervening registration of the declaration and description, the third condition was not met and therefore, September 25, 1991 could no longer be the Occupancy Date. Counsel for Mr. Farber submitted that once the condominium was registered, Townsgate could have sent a letter advising Mr. Farber and then extended the completion of the transaction to a Closing Date. It was further submitted that the respective rights and obligations of a purchaser and a vendor are found in the Agreement and the rights which Townsgate is seeking to assert do not exist.

[para13] Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corp. (1992) 11 O.R. (3d) 744 (C.A.) (hereafter Scanlon) dealt with the interpretation of a virtually identical agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium. The vendor in that case notified the purchaser that the closing date for the condominium unit would be September 14, 1992 rather than November 4, 1991. The purchaser immediately sought a declaration that the vendor's unilateral extension of the closing date constituted an anticipatory breach of the agreement of purchase and sale entitling the purchaser to terminate the agreement. The purchaser was successful at first instance but this was reversed on appeal. [para14] Robins J.A. (Morden A.C.J.O. concurring) set out several principles to consider and this appears under the heading of "The Applicable Rules of Construction". This case, however, dealt with the interpretation of certain contractual provisions which were alleged to be in dispute, namely, paragraphs 13(d) and 22 (21 in the case at bar). It was held that the purpose and effect of paragraphs 13(d) and 22 were different and each were to be afforded a reasonable and distinct meaning. Further, the paragraphs were not contradictory and they did not create any ambiguity.

[para15] Robins J.A. addressed issues that arose when attempting to resolve a contradiction or ambiguity in the terms of a contract. In such a situation, he stated that the provisions should be read in light of the agreement as a whole. This case is distinguishable from the case at bar as there is no apparent contradiction or ambiguity. In the present case, the focus is on the interpretation of a single clause which appears to be clear and unambiguous. The Agreement was drafted by solicitors for Townsgate and terms were inserted for the benefit of the vendor. A situation arose which did not permit the vendors to rely on paragraph 13 of the Agreement and demand that the purchasers take occupancy. Townsgate could have contacted Mr. Farber after registration on September 11, 1991, two weeks before the Occupancy Date, and set a Closing Date. This was permitted pursuant to paragraph 12 of the Agreement which provides as follows:

12. The transaction of purchase and sale is to be completed on the Closing Date. The vendor shall have the right, from time to time, upon thirty (30) days notice in writing to the Purchaser or his solicitors to accelerate the Closing Date to any day as set out in such written notice.

[para16] Paragraph 13 has a very different application. Mr. Justice Robins commented on the purpose and effect of paragraph 13(d) in Scanlon at p. 772:

Paragraph 13(d) is manifestly designed to accommodate the delay created by the condominium registration process by effectively providing for the two-stage closing ... It does this in a somewhat indirect or circuitous manner. If the unit is at least substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on the closing date, that is, on November 4, 1991, but the project has not yet been registered, the purchaser is none the less to take occupancy on that date. (Emphasis added)

[para17] Once the declaration and description were registered and there was no longer a need for the two-stage closing, Townsgate lost the right to rely on paragraph 13 to provide for an Occupancy Date and had to arrange for a Closing Date after providing written notice pursuant to paragraph 12 of the Agreement.

[para18] Keeping in mind the principles enunciated by Robins J.A. at p. 776 in Scanlon, this is not to say that paragraph 13 is given no meaning or purpose and is effectively ruled out of the agreement, but rather, its application is for a very specific and distinct purpose. This clause deals with the situation in which the unit is ready for occupancy but, because of non-registration, the transaction cannot be concluded (See: Scanlon at p. 773). In other words, if there could not be a final closing, as long as the prerequisites to paragraph 13 were satisfied, an Occupancy Date could be set for closing and the date for finally closing the transaction would be postponed to an unspecified date twenty days after notice in writing was given that registration had taken place (See: paragraph 13(d) of the Agreement).

CONCLUSION

[para19] Paragraph 13 is clear that it applies only for the purposes for which it is intended. I am in agreement with Mr. Stancer that Townsgate sought to rely on paragraph 13 of the Agreement in declaring that there had been repudiation by Mr. Farber. However, they had no right whatsoever to rely on that paragraph after the declaration and description and been registered. The vendors drafted the agreement and should be bound by its terms. The vendors could have anticipated the situation as arose in this case and specifically provided for it in the Agreement, however, they did not.

[para20] Accordingly, I dismiss the action by the plaintiff and allow the counterclaim for the return of the $40,000 deposit plus pre-judgment interest. As agreed by counsel, costs to the defendant.

WEIN J.:--

INTRODUCTION

[para1] Given the number of condominium purchases that currently occur in the housing industry, one would think that a clear and straightforward standard contract, with terms easily understood by both the purchaser and the vendor, would by now have been developed. However, such is not the case, as is apparent from the number of times the court is called upon to interpret what should be clear and simple terms of such contracts.

[para3] The issue in this case is similar to the issue that was before this Court in Kratz v. Parkside Hill Ltd. (1992), 28 R.P.R. (2d) 150 (appeal to the Ontario Court of Appeal pending): resolution of the issue has required a close examination of the particular clauses of this agreement as compared to the clauses in the contract considered in Kratz.

[para4] The issue in this case is similar to the issue that was before this Court in Kratz v. Parkside Hill Ltd. (1992), 28 R.P.R. (2d) 150 (appeal to the Ontario Court of Appeal pending): resolution of the issue has required a close examination of the particular clauses of this agreement as compared to the clauses in the contract considered in Kratz.

FACTS

[para5] Each of the eight applicants entered into an individual Agreement of Purchase and Sale with the respondent, which was a condominium development company, for the purchase of a proposed condominium unit in a highrise residential condominium project under development in downtown Toronto. The Agreements of Purchase and Sale were signed between November 1988 and November 1989. All deposits were paid by the end of May 1990. At the time the agreements were signed, it was known and stated in the agreements that land development approvals were not in place and that the purchase was "a speculative risk investment".

[para6] While details of the purchase price and amounts of the deposit varied with the unit purchased, all applicants signed the same standard form agreement which was prepared by the developer's real estate agent. The material terms of that form relevant to this application are identical for each applicant.

[para7] As is commonly the case with condominium development projects, the agreement contemplated a two stage closing with a "Closing Date" or occupancy date contemplated when the unit was substantially completed and fit for occupancy and a "Unit Transfer Date" or title transfer date contemplated when a registrable transfer was available for transfer to the individual unit owner.

[para8] In this case, the units were finally available for occupancy in late January to early February 1994. Each of the applicants rescinded the agreement before the occupancy date and none has entered into occupancy or paid the balance due on occupancy. The project has not yet been registered and registrable transfers have accordingly not been delivered to the applicants.

[para9] The applicants contend that the respondent has breached the agreement by failing to deliver registrable transfers by what they contend is the final date for such transfer, April 30, 1994; the respondent contends that the applicants have defaulted on the agreement by failing to enter into occupancy as required and failing to pay the balance due. The applicants and respondent rely on the same clauses in the agreement in support of their respective positions; the issue, therefore, is one of interpretation of the agreement.

[para10] It may be noted that since the time the agreements were signed in 1988 and 1989, the units have fallen significantly in value as have real estate prices generally. The respondent has argued that this fact should be taken into account on this motion. However, I find that the reasons or motives of the applicants for rescinding the agreements are irrelevant to the issue of a ruling under R.14.05(3)(d) which simply involves questions of the interpretation of the agreements.

THE AGREEMENT

[para11] The agreement consisted of standard clauses setting out the purchase price, definitions and terms and conditions. Schedules to the agreement were expressly made an "integral part" of it.

[para12] The terms of the agreement and schedules relevant to the issue before the court are as follows:

Definitions:

2(a) The following terms used herein shall have the meanings below noted: ...

(iv) "Closing Date" shall mean the 30th day of April, 1992, or such accelerated or extended date pursuant to the terms hereof that the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the Purchaser in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 herein. If the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy prior to the aforesaid date the Vendor shall have the unilateral

(sic) right to accelerate the Closing Date to any other particular day, upon giving the Purchaser not less than 60 days prior written notice of such alternate day on which the Purchaser shall be able to take possession of the Unit. (xiii) "Occupancy Date" means the earlier of the Unit Transfer Date or the date on which the Unit is substantially completed and fit for occupancy. ... (xvi) "Unit Transfer Date" shall mean the day the transfer of the Unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the Purchaser or to Purchaser's solicitor pursuant to the terms of this Agreement. ... Occupancy Date and Payments

11. If the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on the Closing Date, but the Declaration, the Description, By-laws and related documents have not been registered, then this Agreement shall continue in full force and effect and the Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor the balance of the Purchase Price.

The Purchaser covenants and agrees to close the acquisition of the title to the Unit on that date specified in a notice in writing to the Purchaser's solicitor from the Vendor's solicitor that the Vendor is in a position to complete the transfer of title to the unit, which date shall be a day occurring not less than 15 days after the Notification Date.

On each of the Closing Date and the Unit Transfer Date, the Purchaser shall deliver to the Vendor or its solicitors a clear and up-to-date execution certificate in the Purchaser's name.

Unit Transfer Date

12. The Unit Transfer Date shall be the date upon which a transfer of the Unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the Purchaser or the Purchaser's solicitors and shall be the later of - (a) the Closing Date, if the Condominium plan, the Declaration and the Description have been registered, and

(b) the date specified in a notice in writing from the Vendor to the Purchaser or his solicitors, stating that the Vendor is in a position to complete the transfer of title to the Unit, which date shall be a day occurring not less than 15 days after the Notification Date.

Extensions

16. In the event that the substantial completion of the Unit shall be delayed for any reason the Vendor shall be permitted reasonable extensions of time (or times) to substantially complete the Unit and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor shall be unable to substantially complete the Unit for occupancy with such reasonable extensions of time (or times) not exceeding twenty-four (24) months in the aggregate, the deposit monies shall be returned to the Purchaser without interest provided the Purchaser is not in default hereunder and this Agreement shall be at an end, and the Vendor shall have no further liability or obligations hereunder and shall not be liable to the Purchaser for any costs or damages whatsoever. Monies paid by the Purchaser for extras and upgrades (whether or not installed) with respect to the Unit are non-refundable. In each case, the Purchaser shall execute and complete such other documents affecting title as are necessary for the Vendor to re-sell the Unit to another purchaser. If the Unit is substantially completed and fit for occupancy by the Closing Date or any extension thereof, the transaction shall be completed in accordance with the terms of this Agreement and the Vendor shall complete any outstanding details of construction required by this Agreement within a reasonable time thereafter, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and supplies. The Unit shall be deemed to be substantially completed when the interior work has been finished to permit occupancy notwithstanding that there remains other work within the Unit and common elements to be completed as more particularly detailed in Section 5 of this Agreement.

SCHEDULE "A" - OCCUPANCY AGREEMENT

[para13] The Occupancy Agreement specifies that transfer of title to the unit shall take place on the Unit Transfer Date and sets out interim occupancy terms.

[para14] In addition, with respect to transfer of title, it specifies:-

If the Vendor for any reason whatsoever is unable to register the Creating Documents and therefore is unable to deliver a registrable transfer of the Unit to the Purchaser within twelve (12) months after the Closing Date at the option of the Vendor, the Vendor may extend the date to which the Creating Documents are to be registered for a period up to twelve (12) months thereafter, by giving written notice thereof to the Purchaser, on or before the expiry of the first twelve (12) month period aforesaid. If within that time the Creating Documents are registered, the transaction shall be completed in accordance with the terms of this Agreement. If the Creating Documents have not been registered within the first twelve (12) months after the Closing Date, in the event that the Vendor does not extend the time period aforesaid, or, in the event that the Condominium Documents have not been registered within the extension period mentioned aforesaid, the Purchaser hereby consents to the termination of the Occupancy Agreement and the Agreement for such reason, and in such event, the Purchaser hereby agrees to vacate the Real Property, and deliver possession of the Real Property to the Vendor in its original state ...

[para15] The issue of interpretation upon which the applicants and respondent differ is what the term "Closing Date" in this part of Schedule 'A' means.

[para17] The respondent contends that "Closing Date" means closing date as fully defined in clause 2(a)(iv) i.e. April 30, 1992 as accelerated or extended pursuant to other terms of the agreement, so that the maximum extension for registration of the Creating Documents contemplated by the agreement is April 30, 1996, which is twenty-four months beyond the latest possible Closing Date. As it turned out, given the applicants' occupancy availability in January to February 1994, the allowable extension on this reading would be to January/February 1996.

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT

[para18] The law respecting interpretation of such agreements has been recently reviewed in the decision of this court in Kratz v. Parkside Hill Ltd. (supra).

[para19] As noted in Kratz, it is clear from the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Consolidated Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Co., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888, that the first step in interpreting the agreement is to give effect to the intention of the parties as determined from the words used in the agreement.

The normal rules of construction lead a court to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract. Consequently, literal meaning should not be applied where to do so would bring about an unrealistic result or a result which would not be contemplated in the commercial atmosphere in which the insurance was contracted. Where words may bear two constructions, the more reasonable one, that which produces a fair result, must certainly be taken as the interpretation which would promote the intention of the parties. Similarly, an interpretation which defeats the intentions of the parties and their objective in entering into the commercial transaction in the first place should be discarded in favour of an interpretation of the policy which promotes a sensible commercial result.

[para20] The contra proferentem doctrine will only apply if the application of these rules does not release the contract from ambiguity.

[para22] 1. The Closing Date as defined in the definition section was at the time of signing an unfixed date, to be set in reference to April 30, 1992. It would be earlier if the units were ready to be occupied earlier and up to two years later if extended in accordance with clause 16 of the agreement. In this case the Closing Date ultimately settled for the individual applicants on dates in January and February 1994, in accordance with the extensions permitted under clause 16.

[para23] 2. The Unit Transfer date was defined in clause 12 as the later of:

- (a) the Closing Date, if the requisite plans were registered by then, and
- (b) the date specified in a notice in writing that the vendor was able to complete the transfer.

[para24] In this case, the definition in clause 12(a) did not apply as the plans were not registered by the Closing Date.

[para26] "Closing Date" in this context would literally, as well as logically, mean whatever date had come to be settled in accordance with the definition in clause 2(a)(iv). If it meant April 30, 1992 and only April 30, 1992, the vendor would have said so. Instead, the floating date as defined in clause 2(a)(iv) was expressly incorporated and an extension of twenty-four months at the maximum was permitted. [para27] Is this literal interpretation in accord with the true intent of the parties as expressed in the agreement as a whole? In the context of the commercial atmosphere surrounding the making of the agreement, as evidenced by the whole of the contract, the literal meaning is also the most realistic. It recognizes the realities, separately referred to in other parts of the agreement, that the undertaking was a speculative risk investment, that numerous by-law amendments and approvals required by law were not in place, and that it was quite likely that occupancy would predate registration.

[para29] It may be noted that the decision of this court in Kratz v. Parkside Hill Ltd. to which extensive reference was made during the course of argument, is distinguishable from the case at bar. While the issue was the same in Kratz, the contract was not. Most significantly, the agreement in Kratz tied the extension of the date for transfer of title to the right to extend the occupancy date, whereas in the case at bar the right to extend the closing date for occupancy purposes is defined separately from the right to extend the Unit Transfer Date.

[para30] Accordingly, at this point in time and on the material introduced on this application, it cannot be concluded that the respondent has breached its duty to deliver registrable transfers to the applicants in accordance with their agreements.

[para31] In view of this finding it is not necessary for me to make a ruling with respect to the issue of interest payable.

[para32] The application is dismissed.

[para33] The respondent shall have costs of this application fixed in the amount of $2,000, plus G.S.T., payable forthwith.

Leonard Crocco, Plaintiff, and 844270 Ontario Inc., Defendant

Action No. 8719/92

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Bolan J. January 27, 1993.

Jackie E. McGaughey-Ward, for the Plaintiff. Paul C. Strickland, for the Defendant.

[para2] The plaintiff is the purchaser of two residential condominium units in Sudbury Condominium Plan No. 12. He acquired these units pursuant to the terms of agreements of purchase and sale entered into with the defendant, and dated November 10 and 11, 1989. (See tabs D and E of the defendant's motion record). These agreements were on a vendor's standard form and contained, inter alia, the following terms:

(a) The purchaser was obliged to take interim occupancy of the two units upon substantial completion of same, notwithstanding that the condominiums were not registered and titles to the units could not be conveyed. On the date of interim occupancy (the possession closing) the purchaser was required to pay the balance of the purchase money.

(b) the interim occupancy of the units was to be governed by the terms of a vendor's standard occupancy agreement.

[para3] On January 18, 1990, one day before the closing date of the two transactions, the plaintiff and defendant entered into occupancy agreements. (See Tab G of defendant's motion record) The balance of the purchase monies was not paid on the possession closing. Possession was commenced on January 19, 1990 (the "Stub Period") and the plaintiff paid occupancy fees for both units. The occupancy fee for Unit 1 was determined as follows:

(a) estimated monthly realty taxes $100.00 (b) estimated monthly common expenses 109.10 (c) estimated monthly interest 718.81 TOTAL $927.91

The occupancy fee for Unit 2 was determined as follows:

(a) estimated monthly realty taxes $100.00 (b) estimated monthly common expenses 109.10 (c) estimated monthly interest 934.44 TOTAL $1,146.54

[para4] The plaintiff does not dispute that the common expense item and the realty taxes were properly charged, but disputes the claim for interest.

[para6] Section 51(6) of the Condominium Act provides that the purchaser of proposed residential condominium units may take possession and occupancy of the units before a deed or transfer can be delivered. It contains a number of provisions during the interim occupancy period including the following:

"51(6) Where an agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes permits or requires the purchaser to take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the money paid in respect of such right or obligation to the proposed declarant shall be not greater, on a monthly basis, than the total of the following amounts:

1. The amount of interest that the purchaser would mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit.

2. An amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the proposed unit.

3. The projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit."

[para7] The effect of Section 51(6) was to place a statutory limit on the amount of occupancy charges a condominium developer could impose on a purchaser. However, in its haste to protect purchasers from unscrupulous developers charging unreasonable or excessive occupancy rent, it created a windfall for all-cash purchasers at the expense of the developers. Under Section 51(6) of the Act, the all cash purchaser (or the purchaser who arranges his own financing) cannot be required to pay the interest component of the occupation rent. It means that the purchaser is - for all intents and purposes - living rent-free over the interim occupancy period, while at the same time, retaining his or her funds to invest during the same period. The disadvantage to the developers is that it denies them income for the likely costs of carrying the unit until the date of final closing.

"Section 51(6) evidently proved so financially detrimental to condominium developers that many of them refused to enter into transactions in which no mortgage was to be assumed or given back on final closing. Their response to this legislation was to restructure their agreements of purchase and sale in such a way as to satisfy the formal requirements of s. 51(6) and thereby become entitled to include a mortgage interest component in the occupancy fee. To achieve this end, the purchasers, in what would otherwise be all-cash transactions, were required under the terms of their agreements of purchase and sale to complete their transactions by giving back on final closing a form of mortgage that has become popularly known as a "phantom mortgage." This colourful appellation recognizes that these mortgages were to have only a passing existence and would disappear shortly, if not immediately, after final closing. They were patently not intended as a form of permanent financing.

Robins J.A. continues at page 83:

"Whether a mortgage interest component can properly be charged on the basis of these agreements, as I view s. 51(6) 1, is not dependent on the precise manner in which the contemplated transactions are eventually concluded. The section focuses on the obligation of the purchaser existing under the agreement of purchase and sale to give a mortgage upon transfer of title."

[para9] In order to determine the validity of the interest component of the occupancy fee, one must look to the terms and conditions of the offer of purchase and sale. Nowhere in the offers is reference made to a mortgage. None of the usual variations of phantom mortgages can be found. It would appear that the issue was not addressed. Both offers call for the payment of a deposit of $5,000 with the balance of the purchase price payable on closing. There is a provision for interim occupancy in the event of delay which calls for payment to the vendor of, the balance of the purchase price on "possession closing." However, no cash was paid on "possession". Instead, the parties executed occupancy agreements which called for monthly payments until the transaction could be closed. The occupancy agreements refers to these payments as "rental monies". Nowhere in the occupancy agreements is reference made to a mortgage.

[para10] Section 51(6) of the Condominium Act makes it quite clear that the amount of interest the purchaser is required to pay is in respect of any mortgage he is obligated to assume or give. Section 51(6) of the Act makes no mention of sales where no mortgage is assumed or given back. As Dupont J. said in Cadillac Fairview Corp. v. Allin (1979) 7 R.P.R. 287:

"The end result in such a case is a windfall gain to the cash purchaser if he is allowed to take possession prior to closing, and a serious and unexpected loss to the developer." Phantom mortgages in condominium purchases are legal in Ontario; however their validity must be determined by looking at the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale. I have carefully reviewed the agreements of purchase and sale and the occupancy agreements in this case and nowhere is any reference made to interest on a mortgage. Even a liberal interpretation of the section would not make the interest component of the occupancy fees in this case legal.

[para12] The plaintiff will accordingly have judgment against the defendant for $17,257.06.

[para13] I do not feel that it would be proper, given the circumstances of this particular case, to award the plaintiff pre-judgment interest.

[para14] I make no order as to costs. BOLAN J.

713953 Ontario Limited, Applicant, and Peel Condominium Corporation No. 294, Respondent

Action No. RE 310/92

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Hawkins J. Heard: June 4, 1992 Judgment: June 24, 1992

M.R. Hemingway, for the Applicant. A.S. Hukowich, for the Respondent.

HAWKINS J.:-- The applicant is the developer and declarant of an 88-unit office and commercial condominium in Mississauga. The respondent is the condominium corporation. The development is 80% occupied and the vast majority of the occupants are physicians.

The applicant still owns 9 units and 151 parking units. It has leased some of the units to Arlettes Cafe & Restaurant Ltd. (the "Restaurant Company") for purposes of a cafeteria. In order for services to be installed and hooked up, work has to be performed in and upon certain of the common elements. The respondent has passed, as it is authorized to do by section 9 of the Condominium Act, a special by-law to deal with the granting of easements through the common elements by means of a licence. The respondent won't grant the necessary licence to the applicant because the applicant is in arrears in its share of common expenses. Hence, this application, by which the applicant seeks to have the court either declare that the said special by-law does not apply to the work in question, or order that the respondent issue the necessary licences. I propose to deal with the two major disputes outstanding between the parties namely parking and common expense arrears.

Parking

The applicant still owns 151 underground parking spaces. At one stage in the history of the development, the applicant was seeking certain zoning permission and in an effort to drum up support for its zoning application, its circularized occupants with a mailing containing these words (inter alia):

"the developer will make the unsold underground parking spaces available for everyone. However, they will continue to be private property, and as such they will marketed to interested parties. The developer will paint 'reserved' signs for those parking spaces which are already privately owned".

For some time, access to the applicant's parking spaces was free (without charge) and unrestricted. To what should have been the surprise of no one, the applicant's had little or no success in selling parking spaces in an area which was open and free to the world at large. Every effort by the applicant to restrict access to its parking spaces to those who had purchased them has been met by counter measures by the respondent, who takes the position that the words quoted above constitute an open-ended undertaking by the applicant that access to its unsold parking spaces will be free and unrestricted. It is not necessary for me to resolve this issue though I must confess that the interpretation advanced by the respondent does seem a little out of touch with reality.

Arrears of Common Expenses

The applicant is in arrears of common expenses in the sum of almost $100,000.00 which represents close to 25% of the respondent's annual budget. While the applicant in its material refers constantly to the "alleged" arrears there is not one jot of evidence to contradict the respondent's figures. Attempts were made to clear these arrears by a proposed transfer of one of the applicant's units to the respondent but the applicant insisted that such settlement include a settlement of the parking space dispute as well and the proposal came to nought. From this is it clear that the applicant, when it suits its purposes, is prepared to insist on a resolution of all outstanding issues but in the instant matter insists that the licence it seeks is a discrete matter which should be looked at by itself. The applicant submits that it is a mark of bad faith on the part of the respondent to insist on payment on the outstanding common expense arrears as a pre-condition to the granting of the common element in support of this application. Mr. Dabit paints himself as ann a resolution of the parking dispute as a further pre-condition I might have thought otherwise because the parking dispute is a genuine unresolved dispute. There is no dispute as to the common expense arrears. The money is owed.

The Doctrine of Clean Hands

There are two things which touch upon the doctrine of clean hands. There were earlier common expense arrears in connection with which the respondent had filed liens against the applicant's units. Those liens were prior to a large mortgage granted by the applicant to an associated corporate mortgagee. A settlement was reached concerning those earlier common expense arrears and the respondent lifted its lien. Some of the applicant's settlement cheques were dishonoured and the respondent refiled its lien but this time it found itself behind the large mortgage.

Further to the issue of clean hands, I refer to the affidavit of George Dabit sworn January 30th, 1992 and filed innocent businessman caught in the cross fire between the applicant and the respondent. What he fails to disclose in his affidavit, and which emerged on his cross-examination, is that one of the principals of the applicant is a large partner in the restaurant business. Mr. Dabit's affidavit goes beyond mere non-disclosure and contains some outright falsehoods in paragraphs 20 and 21. It emerged from its cross-examination that he had not borrowed $100,000.00 or any sums of money, that the 12% interest rate is a product of his imagination and that he is not obliged to pay rent until the restaurant opens for business.

For the reasons indicated above, this application is dismissed with costs.

A. Irvin Schein, for the Applicant/Landlord. Mark G. Quail, for the Respondents, except Rothman. Andrea M. Habas, for the Respondent, Rothman and Carr.

MACFARLAND J.:-- These applications are brought by Whitby Harbour Development Corporation as landlord against a number of tenants occupying certain units of a residential condominium project located at 360 Watson Street West, Whitby, Ontario.

The applicant is the owner and developer of the condominium project and the tenants are individually, parties to certain agreements of purchase and sale entered into with the applicant, save for one Bruce Carr about whom I shall have more to say later, for the purchase of a unit in the project.

The respondents began to occupy the units commencing at the end of February, 1991 through July, 1991.

As is usual in these projects, occupancy began from the ground floor up; the lower floors being occupied before the upper floors as they became completed.

Each of the named respondents has purported to rescind her or his Agreement of Purchase and Sale and each has failed to pay any occupation rent since at least November 1, 1991, and in the case of the Respondent Goodlet, since October 1, 1991.

The terms of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale are identical save of course for the unit numbers, price, names of the parties, etc.

The agreement is a voluminous document which contains a number of schedules.

Pursuant to the terms of that document, a purchaser is required to occupy the unit which is the subject of the agreement according to the terms of Schedule "A" to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Clause 2 of Schedule "A" provides:

"If the Unit is, in the opinion of the Vendor, substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy but the Declaration and Description have not yet been registered, then the Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor as a further deposit the balance due on the Occupancy Date as set out in paragraph 2(b) hereof, and shall take occupancy of the Unit on that date pursuant to the terms of the Occupancy Agreement set out in Schedule B hereto (the "Occupancy Agreement"), at a monthly occupancy fee payable in advance determined in accordance with the Act said monthly occupancy fee not to be credited as payment towards the Purchase Price. In addition, at that time, the Purchaser shall provide to the Vendor a series of post-dated cheques representing a further twelve (12) months' occupancy fee."

Each of the respondents occupied their respective units in accordance with that provision until October, 1991 in the case of Goodlet and November, 1991 in the case of all other Respondents.

The condominium project is still not registered but the evidence of H.E. Phelps, which I accept, is that all matter are completed which are required to be completed and registration will likely occur on Monday or Tuesday of next week - March 16th or 17th. There has been an unusual delay caused by reason of an environmental audit required as the result of a complaint received by the Ministry of the Environment. The origin of that complaint is unknown, although Mr. Phelps harbours the suspicion that it originated with one of the respondents. Certainly, there is no satisfactory evidence before me that that is so.

The delay in registration accordingly, has been somewhat longer than is usual but for a perfectly valid reason and through no fault of the applicant, I find.

The occupation rent charged to the tenant - purchasers is in accordance with the provisions of the Condominium Act and is in no way exorbitant.

The tenants take the position that because the interest rates have been fluctuating downward since they entered their agreements, the landlord has in effect, been overcharging them. They point to the landlord's letter of November 15, 1991 to Mr. Corrado Giliberto as evidence of the landlord's admission of this overcharge.

I do not accept that submission as the evidence does not support it. The landlord's charges are in accordance with the provisions of the Condominium The landlord is required by Clause 2 of Schedule "B" of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to adjust the portion of the occupancy fee consisting of interest on the closing date. In my view, the tenants are bound by that provision.

The letter to Giliberto is nothing more than a good faith gesture on the part of the landlord to tenants in good standing, to in effect move that interest adjustment date forward in the expectation that it would be of some help to the tenant to whom the offer was made in these most economically trying times. The tenants concede that it is only the interest portion of the occupancy fee which they dispute.

The tenants called no viva voce evidence as to the conditions of which they complain in paragraph 8 of the Affidavit of Gary Maidlow. The Affidavit recites "construction site conditions" and a "lack of recreational facilities".

The tenants were well aware of the terms of their respective agreements that a certain amount of construction would continue beyond the initial occupancy of the lower floors. It follows from the fact that the building was occupied in stages as the construction continued.

I accept the evidence of Mr. Phelps that the nature of the construction was minor - it involved the laying of carpet, installation of wall coverings and the like only on the occupied floors. In my view, it is unreasonable to expect these finishing touches would all have been entirely completed prior to occupancy.

Insofar as the recreational facilities are concerned, I accept Mr. Phelps' evidence that these were completed and available for use in October of 1991 - about the time these tenants decided to stop paying any occupancy rent.

In any event, paragraph 11(b) of Schedule "A" of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale provides:

"The vendor shall complete the common elements as soon as is reasonably practicable, but the failure of the Vendor to complete elements, including without limitation any amenities thereon, on or before the Occupancy Date or the Closing Date shall in no event entitle the Purchaser to refuse to take possession of the Unit and/or to close the within transaction on the Closing Date or to fail to remit to the Vendor the purchase monies required to be paid by the Purchaser hereunder."

It is no excuse for the tenants to refuse payment on this basis, particularly in view of the uncontradicted evidence that these facilities were available in October.

The delay in registration has been satisfactorily explained by the landlord.

Counsel for the tenants object to these issues being determined by the summary procedure available under Part IV of the Landlord and Tenant Act. Other actions have been commenced in the General Division by the landlord against these tenants for relief which, inter alia, includes the relief sought before me. These are actions commenced in the General Division in Toronto by certain of the tenants against the landlord for return of their deposit monies and other relief. In addition, the Respondent Rothman has commenced an application for similar relief hoping for summary judgment of that issue.

The tenants seek a stay of these proceedings pending the outcome of those other matters.

Although I expressed some doubt at the outset of these proceedings, I am satisfied that section 110(3)(e) contemplates that these proceedings are to be dealt with by the summary procedure available under the Landlord and Tenant Act.

In my view, these proceedings ought not to be delayed merely by reason of the fact that similar relief is also incidentally sought in those other actions. I am satisfied that I have jurisdiction to proceed with these applications and intend to do so. I take some comfort from the decision of the Divisional Court in RE: Lewis and Pinkofsky (1980) 28 O.R. (2d) 793 at p. 794. The tenants are in occupation and refusing to pay any monies whatever for that privilege. In addition, I accept Mr. Phelps' evidence that certain of the Respondents are causing difficulties at the development. They have posted signs and disrupt the landlord's dealings with prospective purchasers. Such actions may well come back to haunt them in the final analysis.

The deposit monies paid pursuant to the terms of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale are held in trust. The landlord has no access to or use of that money. It will remain in trust until the resolution of those issues relating to the purported rescission of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale.

The tenants have not paid the occupancy fees into court nor into any trust account; they have simply not paid them, even though they concede that they only dispute the interest portion of them.

In my view, the occupancy of the units is granted to the tenants only by virtue of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. The rescission of those agreements in my view, ends any right of occupation. These tenants no longer have a right to occupy the units in question.

Counsel for the Respondent Rothman objects to the proceeding against her client. One Bruce Carr is also a signatory to the Occupancy Agreement but not to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale relating to what I shall refer to as the Rothman apartment.

She objects because Carr was not properly served and has not been made a party to these proceedings.

In my view, the Occupancy Agreement here is merely ancillary to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. It gives no rights independent of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The fact that Carr is shown as an occupant of the unit and signed the Occupancy Agreement gives him no higher right than Rothman who is the party to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. If her right to occupy is at an end, so too is his and it matters not that he was not separately served.

That Mr. Carr was well aware of these proceedings and the fact that he received documents for Rothman cannot be disputed on the evidence before me. Indeed, he was represented by counsel at the hearing.

He was served laterally and if need be, I grant leave to the applicant and abridge the time for service in relation to Carr.

If it is necessary that he be made a party to these proceedings, and in my view it is not, then I grant an order adding him to the proceedings.

In my view, the landlord's application must succeed. There is no viable defence presented before me.

The respondents did not, as is required by the legislation, pay the arrears owing into Court.

I accept the landlord's evidence with respect to the amounts owed to date and find those amounts to be as follows:

UNIT OCCUPANT ARREARS TO MARCH 13

101 BIGGS $ 8,944.77 306 SMILLIE 13,509.22 309 GOODLET 10,302.19 403 EYRE 9,165.74 407 CATER 12,681.11 511 MAIDLOW 8,663.57 607 HERON 12,946.28 609 ROTHMAN 8,391.03 808 WINIARSKI 7,146.81 811 GRANT 8,214.26 1106 MCALPINE 10,942.52 1111 RATCLIFFE 8,649.42 1202 CROTIN 11,705.54 1207 TITIAN 14,424.07

The landlord's application therefore will succeed and an Order will issue declaring the tenancy agreements terminated; for Writs of Possession in respect of each of the units; for payment of arrears in accordance with the amounts I have determined to date and compensation at the respective per diem rates established for the respective units to the date that vacant possession is given to the landlord.

My Order will, however, be stayed until March 31, 1992 in order to give the tenants time to obtain alternative accommodation.

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Dunnet J. Heard: March 19, 1992 Judgment: April 3, 1992

Matthew Halpin, for the Plaintiffs. Michael H. Turk, for the Defendants.

DUNNET J.:-- The plaintiff moves for summary judgment against the defendant, Bayview 400 Industrial Developments Inc.

The facts as I find them are as follows:

The plaintiff carries on the business of structural steel drafting for residential and commercial development projects.

Bayview is a developer of commercial condominiums.

Gray Watters, in Trust agreed to purchase from Bayview a commercial condominium unit having the municipal address, Unit 14, 130 Saunders Road, Barrie, Ontario.

On June 16, 1988 Gray Watters, in Trust assigned the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to the plaintiff.

The purchase price of the Unit was $61,600. The plaintiff paid to Gray Watters, in Trust the sum of $7,400 for the assignment and to Bayview, the sum of $21,550 as a deposit. The Agreement provided that the balance of the purchase price of $40,050 was to be financed by the assumption of a mortgage arranged by Bayview on closing.

In August 1989, the plaintiff received permission from Bayview to commence certain tenant improvements in anticipation of occupying the Unit on the closing date of September 1, 1989. Deficiencies in the construction and design of the Unit and Building were noticed and the plaintiff retained engineers to review the structural integrity and construction of the Unit.

The report that followed detailed deficiencies including:

- a) insufficient structural strength of the walls throughout the Unit;
- b) hollow masonry in the walls of the Unit and Building where the design drawings called for solid concrete;
- c) roof openings without necessary supporting structural steel framing for the roof deck.
- d) insufficient bearing plates for the roof joists;
- e) no lateral support devices from the roof joists to the partition walls;
- f) the roof assembly, workmanship and design were deficient;
- g) interior partition masonry walls not anchored to steel columns or cross walls;
- h) improperly welded or loose structural steel bridging for open web steel joists;
- i) inadequate construction of load bearing portions of walls resulting in cracking;
- j) improper placing of diagonal braces on sloping walls.

The Occupancy Certificate required under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was delivered to Bayview on September 1, 1989.

It stated in part:

RUSS-CAD MANAGEMENT LTD. AND CARM-CAD MANAGEMENT LTD. c.o.b. DRAFCOM as Purchaser, having inspected Unit Number 14, in the Industrial Complex located at 130 Saunders Road in the City of Barrie, in the County of Simcoe, hereby accept the said unit and enter into occupancy thereof confirming the completion of the said unit in accordance with the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between the undersigned, as Purchaser, and Bayview and 400 Industrial Developments Inc., as Vendor, and confirming that no further work or rectification is required except as may be specifically noted herein. The undersigned hereby waives any claims, rights or entitlements and accepts the unit in its present condition except as noted.

Deficiencies/rectifications to be completed:

See Schedules A, B, C and D

I find that the Occupancy Certificate included the engineering reports referred to above and that they came to the attention of Bayview.

The plaintiff also forwarded copies of the engineering reports to the Corporation of the City of Barrie and the City requested from Bayview confirmation that the items specified complied with the Ontario Building Code, failing which the City would prevent further occupancy of the Building until the Building structure had been strengthened.

On November 17, 1989, an Order to Comply was sent by the City to Bayview requiring compliance with certain deficiencies on or before December 31, 1989, as follows:

ORDER NO.	DESCRIPTION OF NON COMPLIANCE SECTION & SUB-SECTION
1.	Block wall sections and piers to be 100% solid as noted on design drawings
2.	Masonry control joints to have grout removed and caulking installed
3.	Masonry demising walls to be laterally secured at top as directed by Structural Engineer
4.	Steel joists to be redesigned and adequately reinforced to support the design loads of mechanical roof-top units as per design drawings
5.	Roof top openings to be supported with steel channels as per design drawings
6.	Provide grouting for solid bearing under bearing plates of lintel beams
7.	Install missing diagonal bracing and correct those as noted by Structural Engineer
8.	Repair loose bridging in Unit 14
9.	Provide a report from Brandzel 11(1)(a) of Consultants Limited verifying that Building all work noted above has been Code Act completed and accepted
10.	Provide a report from an 11(1)(a) independent testing agency verifying of Building that walls are 100% solid where Code Act required

On February 28, 1990, the plaintiff was advised by the City that occupancy of the unit would be in violation of the Building Code Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. B.13.

In June, 1990, Bayview was charged with and convicted of failure to comply with a Work Order issued under the Building Code Act requiring restorative work to the Building and reports to be submitted by Bayview's engineers as well as an independent testing agency to verify work as completed.

In January, 1992 the City received an engineering report certifying that the design and as-built construction was in compliance with the design and construction standards of the Ontario Building Code. The City advised the plaintiff that it would withhold any recommendation for draft approval for condominium registration in order to receive its comments on or before January 31, 1992.

The plaintiff has been unable to inspect the Unit as the locks have been changed; the plaintiff has notified the City of continuing deficiencies within its knowledge. The City has not as yet given draft approval for the Unit to be registered under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C. 26.

The Agreement of Purchase and Sale contemplated the registration of a Declaration as defined in the Condominium Act, in order to convey title.

The relevant provision of the Agreement states:

5.13 The Vendor covenants to proceed with all due diligence and dispatch to attempt to register the Declaration as quickly as possible. If the Vendor for any reason whatsoever, except its own wilful default, is unable to register the Declaration so as to enable delivery of a registerable transfer to the Purchaser within twelve (12) months of the Occupancy Date then the Vendor shall have the right to extend the time for registration of the declaration for a further period twelve (12) months or to declare this Article 5.00 and the Purchase Agreement, notwithstanding any intervening acts or negotiations, at an end and all monies paid by the Purchaser towards the purchase price, subject only to the proper set off claims of the Vendor for extras, shall be returned to the Purchaser without interest or deductions, provided however, that the Vendor shall not be obligated to return any monies of the Purchaser paid in pursuance of the Purchaser's occupancy of the Unit or in pursuance of extras ordered by the Purchaser unless the parties otherwise agree in writing. If the Vendor extends the time for registration of the Declaration by a further twelve months, and the Declaration is not registered at the end of such extended period, then this Agreement shall be at an end and monies paid shall be returned subject to the conditions and exceptions in this paragraph.

In my view, article 5.13 provides that upon proper notice, Bayview could extend the time required to deliver a registerable transfer to the plaintiffs by a maximum of 2 years beyond the occupation date of September 1, 1989. No notice was delivered and, in any event, more than 2 years have elapsed from the occupancy date. It is undisputed that Bayview has failed to register the Declaration in order to convey title.

In Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation and Bramalea Limited, an unreported decision of Austin J., released November 14, 1991, the vendor attempted unilaterally to change the date of closing with respect to the purchase of a condominium.

Austin J. held:

The closing was to be on November 4, 1991, and Bramalea's letter of May 31, 1991, changing the date, constituted an anticipatory breach of the agreement. The date of closing was a fundamental term. Scanlon was therefore entitled to treat the agreement as at an end. He is entitled to a declaration that the agreement is null and void.

In that case the court heard argument on the date set for closing, being November 4, 1991. In this case the application is being heard more than 1 years after the last date of registration that I have found available to Bayview under the Agreement. The date of closing of a condominium sale is a fundamental term, the breach of which entitles the purchaser to treat the Agreement as at an end.

In Imperial Brass Ltd. v. Jacob Electric Systems Ltd. (1989), 72 O.R. (2d) 17, the plaintiff claimed rescission of a contract to purchase a computer. In granting the rescission, Dennis Lane J. held at p. 25:

I find that the defects in the software as delivered, the delays experienced, and the probability of serious further delays in completing delivery made the defendant's performance totally different from what the parties had in contemplation when they entered into the contract. In such a case the breach is fundamental and rescission and damages may be awarded: ...

I find the combined effect of the deficiencies and delays which had to be addressed constitute a fundamental breach of the Agreement.

Bayview argues that the plaintiff breached the agreement by failing to provide financial disclosure relating to the assumption of the mortgage. There is no evidence of any demand by Bayview to submit papers for approval.

Bayview also argues that the plaintiff breached the terms of the Agreement by failing to provide common monthly expenses plus monthly occupancy costs as required under the Agreement in the event the Declaration was not registered on or before the occupancy date. The plaintiff submits such expenses are not payable in that the plaintiff was unable to occupy the Unit despite the delivery of the Occupancy Certificate. Nor were they permitted the use and enjoyment of the property. I agree.

Finally, Bayview argues that the deficiencies noted in the Occupancy Certificate were, on their face, minor in nature and did not affect the plaintiff's use and occupation of the Unit. I cannot agree.

Bayview suggests that the plaintiff was permitted to take possession of the unit in August 1989 to commence improvements, failed to obtain the required Building Permit and caused damage to the premises.

Despite these allegations, I have found in all of the circumstances that the Agreement is terminated by reason of the fundamental breach by Bayview.

Bayview alleges there is no evidence that occupancy was refused. Clearly I find there is evidence that occupancy would be in violation of the Building Code Act. Moreover, even if the plaintiff breached the Agreement, and I have found otherwise, and even if the plaintiff was not prevented by Bayview from occupying the Unit, I find that the Agreement is at an end by reason of Bayview's failure to register the Declaration on or before September 1, 1990.

The deficiencies were serious. From the outset the plaintiff brought them to the attention of Bayview. Bayview had full knowledge of the deficiencies and failed to remedy them in a timely fashion. Clearly, Bayview did not provide any reasonable explanation for the delay. I find, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated May 16, 1988, is at an end because of a fundamental breach by Bayview and by reason of its failure to register the necessary Declaration.

There is no question that the plaintiff is entitled to the return of its deposit in the amount of $21,550 pursuant to the provisions of article 5.13 of the Agreement.

The plaintiff also seeks judgment against Bayview for the sum of $7,400 paid to Gray Watters, in Trust for the Assignment. The plaintiff took the Assignment, subject to all of the rights and liabilities of Gray Watters, in Trust pursuant to the Agreement, one of which was the right to terminate. Bayview was not a party to the Assignment other than to consent to it. Whatever claim the plaintiff may or may not have to the return of this sum from Gray Watters in Trust, and no such claim is before me, it is not one arising out of the Agreement between the parties to this litigation.

The plaintiff also claims interest on its deposit. Article 5.13 specifically provides that no interest is to be paid on any return of deposit. The situation before me is unlike that facing Austin, J. in Scanlon, supra, which dealt with s. 53(2) of the Condominium Act in connection with residential condominium purchases. Counsel have not directed me to any legislation giving a similar right to a purchaser of a commercial condominium.

The plaintiff is entitled to pre-judgment interest from the time its cause of action for the return of the deposit arose - that is, when it first exercised its right to terminate. In the absence of any evidence of an earlier exercise of that right, I find that the plaintiff first gave such notice when it issued the Statement of Claim on July 17, 1990. Pre-judgment interest is granted from that date at the rate of 11% per annum.

The plaintiff claims for tenant improvements, expert reports, utilities, insurance, telephone service, labour and legal fees paid prior to the commencement of these proceedings. These are amounts "paid in pursuance of the purchaser's occupancy of the Unit" and as such are specifically excepted by article 5.13.

Accordingly, the plaintiff shall have judgment against Bayview for the declarations claimed in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the Notice of Motion and the sum of $21,550 plus pre-judgment interest at 11% from July 17, 1990 to date.

I am presently not aware of any reason why costs should not follow the event. Counsel may make written submissions in order that I may fix costs.

Lou Morin and Sybil Shaver, Applicants (Respondents in Appeal), and Ontario New Home Warranty Program, Respondent (Appellant)

Action No. 845/90 Also reported at: 54 O.A.C. 347

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Divisional Court - Toronto, Ontario Rosenberg J. Heard: November 28, 1991
Judgment: February 17, 1992

Janice B. Payne, for the Applicants (Respondents in Appeal). Netanus Rutherford, for the Respondent (Appellant).

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

ROSENBERG J. (orally):-- This is an appeal by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the warranty program) from the decision and order of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal (the Tribunal) dated July 17, 1990.

The decision and order pertain to a claim made by the respondents under Section 14(1)(b) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980 c. 350 (the Act) for compensation for breach of warranty in respect of a condominium unit owned by them. Upon a request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal as to whether the Notice of Claim had been submitted within the prescribed one-year warranty period the Tribunal held in the affirmative.

The Tribunal therefore directed the appellant to inspect the respondents' condominium unit and to decide upon the merits of the claim.

THE FACTS:

The respondents are the present owners of a condominium unit known as Unit 209 in a condominium building municipally known as 2019 Carling Avenue in Ottawa, Ontario.

On April 29, 1985, the declaration and description of the condominium building were registered under the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, as Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 283.

Prior to April 29, 1985, the land, on which condominium building is situate, was owned by Twenty-Nineteen Carling Terrace Ltd., the developer. The developer was, at all material times, a registered vendor under sections 6 and 7 of the Act, and the condominium building was enrolled under the developer's registration number pursuant to the Regulations under the Act.

On or about June 28, 1985, the developer transferred the title of Unit 209 to Peirvest Inc. As of that date, the unit was completed and ready for occupancy. The transfer to Peirvest Inc. was by way of a distribution of corporate assets. Peirvest Inc., as a 20-percent shareholder or joint venturer, received five units and assumed certain mortgage liabilities and other liabilities in consideration of the transfer. It is not alleged, nor was it argued before us, that the transfer was a sham; nor can it be said on the facts as recited that the transfer was an arm's length transfer. While the representative of Peirvest who gave evidence was not sure if a Certificate of Possession had been completed, and the appellant was not able to produce a copy of the Certificate of Possession, for the purpose of these reasons, it is assumed that a Certificate of Possession was completed and filed with the appellant on or about the 28th day of June, 1985. In fact, the appellant's computer so indicated.

Between June 28, 1985 and October 17, 1986, the unit remained vacant. Peirvest Inc. possessed the keys to the unit and had exclusive control over access to the unit. Peirvest Inc. first attempted to sell the unit but when the unit could not be sold after a reasonable period of time, it was listed for sale or rent.

On or about October 17, 1986, Peirvest Inc. transferred title to the respondents and the respondents moved into the unit on November 5 or 6, 1986. By letter dated August 10, 1987, the respondents gave written notice of a claim for breach of warranty to the appellant. By letter dated September 27, 1989, the appellant rendered a formal decision wherein it disallowed the respondents' claim on the ground that the prescribed one-year warranty period had commenced on June 28, 1985 and, therefore, had expired prior to the date of the respondents' notice of claim.

The respondents requested a hearing before the Tribunal pursuant to section 16(2) of the Act. That hearing resulted in the decision appealed from herein. The Tribunal's reasons, in essence, are found in the last two paragraphs of their decision, which are as follows:

The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act is remedial, consumer protection legislation and should be liberally construed, as was suggested by Mr. Justice R.E. Holland in the Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. case, reported at 65 O.R. (2d) at p. 365.

Accordingly, this Tribunal concludes that the Applicants are the first occupants of the unit and should be inequity protected in their claims under the Act. Since their notice to the Plan was within one year of their acquisition of the unit, the Tribunal directs that the Program inspect the unit and decide upon the merits of the various claims made by Morin and Shaver.

STANDARD OF REVIEW:

By virtue of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 274, the standard of review under section 11(5) is as follows:

An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both, and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the registrar or of the Tribunal or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing in whole or in part in accordance with such direction as the court considers proper.

DECISION:

We should not be taken as necessarily agreeing with the reasons of the Tribunal but, by virtue of section 11 (supra), we have considered fact and law. By section 1(g) of the Act, "owner", means "a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and his successors in title." In our view, Peirvest Inc. was not a person who acquired this home for occupancy. They acquired this home as a distribution of corporate assets and for the purpose of resale. It was only after they were unable to sell that they listed the property for sale or rent:

Accordingly, we agree with the Tribunal's conclusion. This Act is consumer protection and should be liberally construed in order to provide that protection. Our decision is based on the particular facts before us.

The appeal is dismissed.

---Following submissions as to costs:

I have endorsed the record of the Appeal Book, "For oral reasons given, the appeal is dismissed with costs fixed at $3,000.00."

Action No. A 109/90 Also reported at: 22 R.P.R. (2d) 102

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto Weekly Court McRAE J. Heard: February 11, 1992 Judgment: February 13, 1992

McRAE J. (orally):-- This is an application for:

a) a declaration that two agreements of purchase and sale dated June 28, 1988 entered into between the applicant and the respondent have been terminated effective November 5, 1990;

b) An order returning the deposits given by the applicant to the respondent pursuant to these agreements in an aggregate amount of $40,000 with prejudgment interest thereon in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act from and including November 5, 1990. The grounds relied on by the applicant are that there have been two material changes to the disclosure statement required by the Condominium Act.

The facts disclose that on June 28, 1988, the applicant agreed to purchase two condominium units in a building to be built by the respondent at which time the applicant received the mandated disclosure statements. The disclosure statement appears at page 39 of the record and contains as item 6 therein the following notice:

6. PUBLIC ACTIVITY CENTRE

The Corporation will be required to lease to the City of York for $1.00 per year part of the common elements consisting of space on the upper lobby level having a minimum area of 360 square metres for a public activity centre for various indoor functions which may include a senior citizen activity centre and a day nursery.

The site plan agreement entered into on July 19, 1989, one year later, by the developer and the Corporation of the City of York provides on page 22 in the supplementary record as item No. 13 under Public Activity Centre:

13. The Owner agrees to lease to the City a public activity centre on the site, at no cost to the City, prior to the final registration of any Plan of Condominium relating to the site and the terms and provisions of the lease shall be subject to the satisfaction of the Council for the City. The Owner also agrees to include the following interior and exterior finishes at no cost to the City, in association with the Public Activity Centre:

It is agreed between the Owner and the City that the Owner shall have the option of paying to the City the sum of $225,000.00, in lieu of providing the aforementioned public activity centre, and shall have the right to make any necessary application for an approval from the Committee of Adjustment or Council for a variance, or amendment to the by-law, which would permit the exercise of such option. The said sum of $225,000.00 shall be paid to the City prior to the submission of the application and shall be held by the City in escrow in an interest bearing account pending final approval of the application. In the event that the application is not finally approved, the City will return the said sum of $225,000.00 with interest earned.

The owner opted to apply to the Committee of Adjustment for the variance which was accepted, and the owner paid the City $225,000 instead of installing the activity centre as suggested in the disclosure statement. The builder used the 360 square metre space for five additional condominium units. No amendment to the disclosure statement was supplied to this purchaser as a result of this change.

The applicant argues that there are two material changes to the disclosure statement. The deletion of the public activity centre and the increase in the number of units from 408 to 413 with the concomitant decrease in the applicant's percentage interest in the building. The applicant says therefore that he is entitled to the relief he seeks, that is, to terminate the agreement. The test of what is a material change adopted by Justice Borins in Budinsky et al. v. The Breakers East Inc. is the following at page 43:

Therefore, in my view an amendment to a disclosure statement is required when it is necessary to correct an error, omission or defect in the contents of the statement prescribed by s. 52(6)(7) where the amendment is of such significance as to be likely to influence the decision of a reasonable purchaser to purchase the condominium unit or to alter the character of the disclosure statement.

I in my turn adopt that definition of a material change.

It is obvious that the test is an objective test. I have looked at the changes objectively and have concluded that the changes are not a material change as anticipated in the legislation. A reasonable person would quickly conclude that this change was minor and was clearly beneficial to purchasers. It is not without some significance that no suggestion of an economic loss has been presented to me. This was not a deletion of private amenities but a deletion of a public amenity available to all the residents of the City of York. The benefits to purchasers are clear. First of all the public would no longer have access to the main lobby of the building. It is significant that the municipality is not limited to using the public activities area for a senior citizen activity centre or a day care centre, other public activities could be undertaken in the space. The owners at the same time would be required to carry a very disadvantageous lease for a rent of $1.00 per year. They would be required to maintain the premises, to pay for utilities including heat and to clean the premises. In my view the application fails on this first ground.

The applicant also argues that the increase in the number of apartments from 408 to 413 is a material change since the regulation requires the number of units be specifically declared. Section 52(6) requires that the disclosure statement contain a general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreation and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities. The disclosure statement reveals that there will be 408 residential units but it also provides that the declarant, the owner, reserves the right prior to registration either to combine any of the residential units into one or more larger units or to divide any of the units into a number of smaller units so long as there in no event be more than 416 residential units in the condominium and so long as the percentage interest of such combined or divided units is equal in total to the units which they replace. In other words the disclosure statement reveals that up to 416 apartments can be installed but only by subdividing other apartments so that the applicant's percentage interest is not decreased.

Five apartments in a space allotted for the public activity centre would decrease the applicant's percentage interest. However, it seems to me that this decrease of percentage interest which has been said to be approximately in the amount of three parts per one hundred thousand is so trivial as to not constitute a material change. In addition the effect of this decrease in the applicant's percentage interest is more than offset by the small decrease estimated at $3.78 a month in the charges that the condominium corporation will be required to levy as a result of levies coming from these additional units. Therefore I have concluded that on both grounds the application fails. It is dismissed.

Costs fixed at $3,500 in total to the respondent.

Walter Dick and Anne Dick, Plaintiffs, and Ernest Dennis, Defendant

Also reported at: 20 R.P.R. (2d) 264

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Windsor, Ontario Brockenshire J. September 27, 1991

Charles O. Spettigue, for the Plaintiffs. James K. Ball, for the Defendant.

BROCKENSHIRE J.:-- This is an action by vendors for specific performance of an agreement of sale of a condominium or alternately for damages. The defence disputed liability and also called for a review and reconsideration of some of the basic law of remedies relating to real property transactions. In the end my conclusion is that the Plaintiff must succeed despite the most able submissions of Mr. Ball, the defence counsel, for the reasons herein detailed.

FACTUAL SITUATION:

The Plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Dick, are husband and wife who purchased adjoining residential condominium units in Bayview Towers, a new nine storey, 32 unit building in Leamington, one for their use, and the second for potential resale - both with a view to profit and to having control over who would be their next door neighbours.

The second Unit, 902, purchased in June of 1989 and immediately listed for resale, was repeatedly shown, and upgraded to make it more attractive, without attracting an offer.

The Defendant, Mr. Dennis, who was in his 50's, with a management position at a Leamington plant, a wife of over 30 years, and a matrimonial home of some 25 years, was experiencing unfortunate matrimonial difficulties, and was looking for a condominium for himself.

Robert McCormick, president of Wigle Realty which had the Dick listing, knew the Dick's, knew Mr. Dennis and his family, and lived in Bayview Towers himself. He became the middle man to bring together the willing sellers and the willing buyer, in an agreement of purchase and sale which he drafted. The Dicks and Mr. Dennis did not meet or speak directly to each other until after the agreement was executed. Both communicated their wishes and limitations to Mr. McCormick, who then developed a "scenario" to accommodate the positions of both.

A particular difficulty was the position of Mr. Dennis. He needed a place to stay very quickly, and had no ready funds. A precipitating factor in his matrimonial problems had been the transfer by his wife of the family savings of some $290,000.00 to her own name.

The document produced on September 21, 1990 was a standard Ontario Real Estate Association Condominium Re-sale Agreement form, offering $190,000.00, $5,000.00 as a deposit, the balance subject to adjustments payable on closing on May 31, 1991, but with alterations and additions which became the subject of this action.

Despite closing being scheduled for May 31, 1991, the blank as to vacant possession was filled in to provide for vacant possession October 1, 1990. There were typed in, four paragraphs as follows:

"It is understood and agreed that the above mentioned deposit of monies shall be forfeited to the vendor in the event that this transaction does not close and further, the purchaser agrees to give vacant possession of the said premises in the event this transaction does not close, fifteen (15) days following receipt of written notice from the vendor.

The purchaser further agrees to pay an occupancy charge of one thousand five hundred dollars ($1,500.00) per month, commencing October 1, 1990 and said charge to be payable on the first day of each month until said transaction is closed or otherwise terminated. Said charge to include common fees and taxes; all utilities shall be at the expense of the purchaser.

In the event that the purchaser closes earlier than the date herein set for closing, the vendor agrees to reduce the purchase price by five hundred ($500.00) for each month.

The vendor agrees that in the event that the purchaser has not received his matrimonial settlement, in order to close on the date herein set out, the vendor shall grant the purchaser a sixty (60) day extension with the same occupancy charge."

This document was reviewed by Mr. Dennis, and signed by him. Mr. McCormick suggested Mr. Dennis might get legal advice before signing. In fact the lawyer acting for Mr. Dennis in his matrimonial matters was near by. That lawyer had advised that a settlement was likely by May 31, resulting in the specified closing date. However, Mr. Dennis decided the agreement was self explanatory, and declined obtaining legal advice.

Mr. McCormick then presented the offer to the Dicks, who countered by increasing the price to $192,500.00. Mr. Dennis accepted the counter offer by initialling the change, produced the deposit and first occupancy payment, (which had been calculated as roughly equivalent to the carrying costs), received the keys, and moved in.

Then, in mid November, two unexpected things happened. Mr. Dennis worked out a reconciliation with his wife, and he was told that the plant of his employer was closing, resulting in the loss of his job. He advised the Dicks and McCormick of these events, and that he was moving back home, returned the keys, and moved out. The view of Mr. Dennis was that on his reading of the contract, the result of his action would be the loss of his deposit, and occupancy fees paid to date, but no more. The Dicks viewed the matter differently, and commenced this action for specific performance, or alternately damages. They also relisted the unit, but it remained unsold at trial.

EVIDENTIARY MATTERS:

This action turns on the interpretation of a written contract admittedly executed by the parties. Considerable viva voce evidence was allowed as to the understandings of the parties, despite the parol evidence rule. My basis for this is the relaxed approach to such rule, at least in real estate matters, espoused by Mr. Justice Thompson in the trial of Barnett v. Harrison, and impliedly accepted in the appeals to the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court of Canada [Footnote: [1971] 3 O.R. 821, affirmed by the Court of Appeal at [1973] 2 O.R. 176, and by the Supreme Court of Canada at 33 DLR (3d) 272, without mention of the evidentiary point.] and the special sub-set of that relaxed approach taken in the cases hereinafter referred to, on the meaning of the word "deposit". Considerable further evidence was allowed, not relating directly to the interpretation problem, to provide background and to test the credibility of the witnesses. My conclusion on credibility was that all of the witnesses, while subject to the frailties of memory and inherent bias, were honest and straight forward, and attempting to honestly and clearly set forth their recollections.

THE FORFEITURE CLAUSE:

The words "Or otherwise terminated", appear in the printed deposit provision, and were repeated by the realtor in his typed clause providing that occupancy fees would continue until "said transaction is closed or otherwise terminated". Mr. and Mrs. Dick were at a loss as to what "otherwise terminated" could mean, as the only termination they contemplated was closing they regarded this as a "done deal". The realtor felt it could cover things like mutual releases or frustration. The phrase appears only in relation to the occupancy charge and deposit, and would not be significant except for the support the Defendant sees the phrase as giving to his position, set out below, that the forfeiture clause contemplated termination other than by closing.

Mr. Dennis testified in chief, that he felt that the contract provision "the above mentioned deposit money shall be forfeited to the vendor in the event that this transaction does not close", limited his liability to loss of his deposit if he failed to close the deal. He had not asked the realtor to build in an escape clause, or a clause limiting liability. He did not discuss this clause at all with the realtor, but says the realtor said nothing inconsistent with his belief. He was surprised to see this "relief" in the offer, but while he then had no plans to go back to his wife, felt if it happened, this would be a way out of the deal. This position was greatly weakened in cross-examination when he testified that it never crossed his mind, when signing the offer, that if he went back to his wife he could get out of the contract, and that he knew the Dicks would not accept a rental, or a rent to own type of offer. He had no answer when asked whether a prudent person would give up a $190,000.00 contract for $5,000.00.

The Dicks and the realtor had no thought that these words would allow Mr. Dennis to escape with the loss of nothing but his deposit.

There therefore is no basis for rectification nor was it sought.

Mr. Dennis's belief, which he admits is his own interpretation, is quite simply wrong. In my view the words plainly provide for an absolute forfeiture of the $5,000.00, even if the fault be that of the vendors or of some external source. This forfeiture (which could be reviewed under s. 111 of the courts of Justice Act, 1984), does not purport to release the parties of the legal obligations arising on the failure to close.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES:

It was pleaded and extensively argued that the forfeiture clause should be interpreted as limiting the damage in the event of breach to the $5,000.00 "deposit" which should be treated as "liquidated damages". Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre v. New Garage in England, [1915] A.C. 79 (H.L.), and Loscal Holdings v. Brassos in Canada, (1980) 111 D.L.R. (3d), 598 (Alta. C.A.), and the cases collected in each make it clear that despite what the parties may call such a sum, it is a question of construction to be decided upon the terms and circumstances of the particular contract, what it actually is.

The contest here is between a "deposit" and "liquidated damages". There is no suggestion that the sum is a penalty, or that there be any relief against its forfeiture.

A deposit has been defined in Howe v. Smith, (1884) 27 CH.D. 89, and Soper v. Arnold, (1889) 14 A.C. 429 (H.C.), as a guarantee that the contract will be performed, that the buyer means business. Liquidated damages are a genuine pre-estimate by the parties of the damages or an agreed limitation on the damages recoverable. [Footnote: Anson's Law of Contract, 24th Edition pp. 550-551, as quoted in Lozcal Holdings v. Brassos, supra.] Here the evidence unquestionably points to the $5,000.00 being a true deposit.

Firstly, the parties and the realtor were all sure the deal would close. A reconciliation was not regarded by anyone as a real possibility, and the plant closure was completely unforeseen.

Secondly, there was no thought whatever of pre-estimating or of limiting damage in arriving at $5,000.00. It was simply all that Mr. Dennis could put his hands on. The realtor had suggested $10,000.00, but Mr. Dennis, in view of his wife's actions, could only put together $5,000.00, and that by borrowing to the limit of two credit cards. The Dick's simply did not question or object to that amount, so it stayed.

Thirdly, the Dicks, the realtor and Mr. Dennis never in their evidence, characterized the $5,000.00 as anything other than a true deposit - as Mr. Dick put it, to show good faith in making a deal. The only unusual aspect was that it was understood to be non-refundable.

POSITION OF THE REALTOR:

It was argued that the realtor prepared the contract as agent for the vendors, and so the "contra proferentum" rule should apply against him. I do not see any ambiguity that would call for the invocation of that rule. However, if ambiguity should be found elsewhere, I would find on the facts here that the agent, in preparing and presenting the offer, was in fact acting as the agent of the purchaser. The purchaser sought him out, provided him with intimate details of his affairs, and relied on him to prepare an offer for him, fitting his circumstances, that the vendors would accept. That in fact is what happened. This case fits squarely within the recent line of cases including Wypych v. McDowell, 11 R.P.R. (2d) 87, Lee v. Chow, 12 R.P.R. (2d) 217, and Calandra V. B.A. Cleaners, 73 O.R. (2d) 449.

CONCLUSION ON LIABILITY:

My conclusion is that the Defendant is liable for breach of his contract of purchase, and that his liability is not limited to the amounts paid to the date of the breach.

REMEDY:

The Plaintiffs were put to their election and elected specific performance as the remedy sought. The Defence argued strongly that specific performance was not appropriate, and further that the Plaintiffs had in fact suffered no loss. Remedy is considered under the following sub-headings.

(a) EVIDENCE - The Plaintiffs called Mr. Fred Mitchell, a duly qualified and experienced real estate appraiser who testified that this was a one of a kind building in a limited market. The only comparative for an opinion on a present market value were therefore sales of other units in the building. He found five or six original sales, and two re-sales of two bedroom units (such as 902) and some thirty sales in all. He did not factor in the intended sale to Mr. Dennis. By arithmetic calculation, he arrived at $164,000.00 as a fair market valuation on Unit 902 as of August 30, 1991. He knew the floor plans of the two bedroom units were the same, but had no other information on the units. He had not inspected the other units and did not know the relationship, if any between the buyers and sellers, the marketing efforts exerted these sales, the length of time on the market, the effect of changes in the buildings reputation on sales, nor that the developer gave discounts to multiple buyers. His opinion was not bolstered by a comparative income approach or construction costs evaluations. He felt there would be a 5% margin for error in his figure.

Additionally the Plaintiffs lead evidence of the Dick's relisting of the property, which was extensively advertised and shown in open houses without attracting another buyer. There was evidence that the $192,500.00 price was still fair in mid-november 1990, but thereafter the market became a buyers' market, and while open houses still attracted people, they were not people who could afford to buy.

(b) DAMAGES- The argument of the Defence was that the damages should be measured at the date of the breach, at that date the value had not decreased, and as the vendors retained the property and the deposit, they suffered no loss. While this position on timing is supported by many cases, going back to Laird v. Pim, (1841) 7 M. & W. 474, 171 E.R. 852, it ignores the principal of Wroth v. Tyler, [1973] 1 All ER. 897, apply in Ontario in Metropolitan Trust v. Pressure Concrete [Footnote: (1973) 37 D.L.R. (3d) 649, and on Appeal, (1975) 9 O.R. (2d) 375.] that a damage award should put the Plaintiffs in as good a position as if the contract had been performed even if to do so required assessing damages at a time subsequent to the breach.

(c) SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE - The Defence argument is a specific performance is not an appropriate remedy for the vendor of real property. Historically, it was granted to prospective purchasers because of the unique nature of the land in question. However, all the vendor is seeking is money, and the appropriate remedy is damages. This argument, advanced without reference to specific authority, in fact echoes the argument extensively developed by Professor Sharpe, in his in his text and elsewhere. [Footnote: Sharpe injunctions and specific performance - Toronto, Canada Law Book 1983, also R. Sharpe "Specific relief for contract Breach", study no. 5 in Reiter and Swan, studies in contract law-Toronto-Butterworths, 1980.] Professor Sharpe in his argument acknowledges the support in the authorities for the vendors right to specific performance, but he attacks the arguments used in Eastern Counties Rwy. Co., v. Hawkes, (1855) 5 H.L.C. 331, 10 E.R. 928, and in Hillingdon Estates, [1952] ch 627, to support the remedy - inadequacy of damages, reciprocity of remedy (as a purchaser would be so entitled) and conversion (calling on equity to enforce the completion of a transaction deemed equitably completed on execution of the agreement). His careful review, Sharpe, supra pp. 319-324, in my view, supports his conclusion - not that the remedy should not be available to vendors, but that "the vendor's case for specific performance is ordinarily much weaker than that of the purchaser" and "should the Courts be prepared to reconsider the virtually automatic award of specific performance of contracts for the purchase and sale of real estate, the vendor's right will be found to be somewhat wanting", Sharpe, supra, p. 324.

(d) CONCLUSION - I have carefully considered the caution put forward by Professor Sharpe. In my view if specific performance is to be granted today to a vendor of real property, it must be because a damage award might not provide an adequate remedy, even if calculated to the date of the trial, and not simply for historical reasons coupled with an election by the vendor.

The historical reasons - tied in to a previous agrarian society, where land represented wealth, and "a man's home was his castle" leading to the assumption of uniqueness of parcels of real estate, are being challenged and sometimes found wanting in actions by purchasers. [Footnote: See, for instance, Chaulk v. Fairview Const. Ltd. (1977) 3 R.P.R. Civfld C.A., and other cases collected by Paul Perell in Remedies and the Sale of Land-Toronto, Butterworths, 1988.] The reasons based on reciprocity and conversion, while perhaps providing an intellectual basis in the abstract for the remedy, do not help in deciding on its use in an individual case.

However, here, the property is in a limited market and extensive sales efforts since June of 1989 have produced only one prospective buyer - the Defendant. The property is unique in that it is a top floor, two bedroom Condominium in the only building of its kind in the marketing area. There is an obvious question of what kind of offer might eventually be forthcoming. The property was bought for re-sale, and attracts substantial monthly carrying costs. It produces no income. The vendors have no use for the Unit themselves. In these circumstances, should not the obligations of ownership and risks of eventual resale be transferred to the buyer despite his repudiation of his contract?

The vendors here did not use the claim for specific performance as a mere ploy to give themselves an option until trial against the vagaries of the market, but set out, as suggested in Asamara [Footnote: Asamara Oil Corp. v. Sea Oil & General Corp. [1979] 1 S.C.R. 633, varied [1979] 1 S.C.R. 677.] to attempt to mitigate the loss by relisting the property. The evidence of their realtor of attempts to re-sell give strength to their claim for equitable relief.

On the other hand the evidence on damages is weak. We have only one appraisal. Mr. Mitchell undoubtedly did his best, but acknowledges that he was faced with the problem of lack of comparative sales. An appraisal pre-supposes a willing and able buyer, and on the evidence of the realtor, prospective buyers in the limited market area are, in these economic times, simply unable. We have no satisfactory evidence of how long it might be before the Unit will sell. That would depend on the evidence, on future changes in the economy.

No contrary evidence was offered by the Defence, and on the balance of probabilities I accept the appraisal figure of $164,000.00 as a fair measure of current value, as of August 31, 1991, and in this factual situation fix that date just before the trial commenced, as the time for assessment. However, while that finding might dispose of changes in market value to the date of trial, and together with a further finding that the Defendant is liable for accrued occupation charges, would see the financial position of the Plaintiffs protected to that date, such findings would do nothing to protect the Plaintiffs against the inevitable continuing interest, taxes, fees and expenses until the Unit is sold, and would do nothing to protect either the Plaintiffs or the Defendant against changes in the market value between now and the time of the sale. No one knows how long it might be until a sale is achieved, and no one can now say whether either party might reap a windfall by a dollar figure now being assessed for the Defendant's breach.

In my view, the sentence quoted by Professor Sharpe "damages would not place him in the same situation as if the contract had been performed, for in that case he would have entirely got rid of his land, and he would have in his pocket, the net sum for which he had agreed to sell it" [Footnote: Eastern Counties Ry, C.O. supra.] is entirely applicable to the facts of this case.

JUDGMENT - For the foregoing reasons, specific performance of the contract of purchase and sale is hereby ordered, with closing to take place on or before 30 days from the entry of Judgment. The contract, while repudiated by the purchaser, has never been terminated. A term of the contract was that the purchaser pay an occupancy charge of $1,500.00 per month until the transaction is closed. Performance of such term is a part of this Order. The Plaintiffs are to have prejudgment interest on all occupancy payments in arrears from the respective due dates at 10% and on the balance due on closing from May 31, 1991. Costs to the Plaintiffs.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 698, Applicant, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 562, Respondent

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Gibson J. January 10, 1992

J.H. Wigley, for the Applicant. J. Fine, for the Respondent.

GIBSON J.:-- The basic issue on this application under Rule 14.05 (3)(d) is the determination of a point of law as to whether the visitors to Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation 698 (MTCC 698) may use the "down" ramp, which is on the common elements of MTCC 562, and park in the loading bays of the property owned by MTCC 698. The answer involves the interpretation of several agreements made over a period of years between various corporate entities.

There is not a great deal of dispute as to the actual facts surrounding this application but the chronology is a bit complicated.

In 1978 C.B.S. were the owners of a parcel of land situated between Yonge Street on the east, Davenport on the south, McMurrich on the west, and extending northerly to a point part way up in the block in question (with the exception of a small parcel of land at Davenport and Yonge).

The City of Toronto authorized C.B.S. to develop three buildings [* See paper copy for illustration of building A, B and C appended to judgment *] non different portions of the site (see the sketch which was Exhibit B. to the Stevenson affidavit which makes the configuration clearer).

a) Building "A" 18 Davenport Road (a senior citizens building fronting on Davenport).

b) Buildings "B1" and "B2" - a condo apartment building at 15 McMurrich Street (fronting on McMurrich) which ultimately became MTCC 562.

c) Building "C" - a mixed use commercial residential building fronting on Yonge Street. The northerly portion became an apartment condominium - 900 Yonge Street (which subsequently became MTCC 698). The southerly portion is a commercial building, now owned by 890 Yonge Street.

From the outset access to the various buildings was to be via McMurrich Street only.

The 15 McMurrich portion of the site was conveyed to Glenarm Investment (jointly owned by C.B.S. and Cadillac Fairview, the latter was retained to market and manage the project). C.B.S. retained a series of rights of way so that persons could reach the 890 and 900 Yonge portion of the site via the McMurrich access area. After construction of 15 McMurrich for a condo apartment building, MTCC 562 was formed.

The property fronting on Yonge Street was transferred to 900 Yonge Street Limited, who ultimately constructed on the northerly portion a condominium building (which became MTCC 698) and transferred the southerly portion to 890 Yonge Street Limited for commercial development.

All three buildings were connected to a central landscaped podium at the second storey level. Access was through these underground areas, and there were underground parking spaces for all three buildings below the podium. To reach the underground parking, persons and vehicles entered off McMurrich, and had to pass a central point overseen by the concierge at 15 McMurrich for security purposes.

The vehicle entrance off McMurrich Street is split into two parts - the most southerly entrance is marked with a "visitors only" sign. There are no signs over either of the two most northerly entrance and exit ramps. A series of photographs to the Stevenson affidavit portray the configuration just described.

Originally, to proceed with the development, a development agreement was executed by C.B.S., MTHC (who ran the senior citizens home) and the City of Toronto. As part of the agreement, C.B.S. and MTHC agreed to provide permanent vehicular access to the site from McMurrich Street. This agreement, dated May 17, 1979, was registered May 21, 1979 in the Land Registry Office.

To deal with shared garage and other facilities, and repair, operation, and management of all the proposed buildings, a Shared Facilities Agreement (SFA) was executed December 9, 1981 and registered May 13, 1982 by C.B.S. (who at the time was the owner of the Yonge Street portion of the site, which in part became MTCC 698), MTHC, Glenarm (representing the project at 15 McMurrich, which later became MTCC 562) and two large mortgagees. The overall effect was to create certain rights in respect of shared facilities among the parties either directly or to their successors in interest.

To further clarify and elaborate on each parties' respective rights and obligations in connection with shared facilities, a Shared Facilities Amending Agreement (SFAA) was entered into November 27, 1985 and registered December 23, 1985. The parties to this agreement were MTCC 562 (owners of 15 McMurrich), 900 Yonge (representing the owners and successors entitled to respective portion of this area - later MTCC 698), and 890 Yonge Street representing the interest of owners and successors entitled to the southerly commercial portion.

The purpose of SFAA agreement was to address certain issues which were the subject of litigation between MTCC 562 and Belmont Property (the builder of 890 and 900 Yonge) and the settlement was reflected in this agreement.

A Yonge Facilities Agreement (YFA) dated December 30, 1985, entered into by 890 Yonge and 900 Yonge, allocated obligations under SFA and SFAA.

On January 1, 1990 (registered January 4, 1990) a Yonge Facilities Amending Agreement (YFAA) was executed to further clarify the rights and obligations of the parties involved in the Yonge Street property. The parties to this agreement were MTCC 698, representing the northerly portion of 900 and 890 Yonge (the owners of the commercial southerly portion), and 900 Yonge Street, representing its own interests.

Since January 1, 1990, visitors to MTCC 698 were allowed access across the shared garage of MTCC 562 to MTCC 698's own property. MTCC 698 allowed them to park the cars in the loading bays and ramps at the rear (or west edge) of the MTCC 698 property pursuant to the terms of YFAA.

However, on January 16, 1990, MTCC 562 refused such access for visitors' vehicles to MTCC 698 (and still does) notwithstanding such visitors had been vouched for by unit owners of MTCC 698.

It was stated expressly in SFAA that where there is any conflict between SFA and SFAA that the terms of SFAA were to prevail.

The above agreements contain a three stage dispute resolution mechanism:

"1. The Shared Facilities Manager shall, within thirty days, resolve any matter of dispute relating to or arising out of the agreement as between the parties to the agreement.

2. If the Shared Facilities Manager is unwilling or unable to resolve the matter or dispute to the mutual satisfaction of the parties, it should be referred to the Project Committee for its consideration and resolution (composed of four members - two appointed by MTCC 562, one by the owner of 900 Yonge and one by the owner of 890 Yonge).

3. In the event the Project Committee is unwilling or unable to resolve the dispute to the mutual satisfaction of the parties, the agreement may be submitted to arbitration under the Arbitration Act." (The underlining is mine).

When the dispute arose as to the right of access of visitors' vehicles to 900 Yonge via the shared facilities, a letter from MTCC 698 was sent to the President of MTCC 562 in an attempt to work out a settlement. In addition, a Notice of Dispute was delivered to the Shared Facilities Manager, asking that the dispute be resolved.

Since no action was taken by the Manager by February 20th, MTCC 698 delivered a formal notice (by letter) to MTCC 562 requesting the convening of the Project Committee. While there was a meeting scheduled for March 5, 1990, the solicitor for MTCC 562 advised that their representatives would not attend, so that the meeting was not held as there was not a quorum.

MTCC 698, by letter dated April 9, 1990, suggested that the matter proceed to arbitration, under SFAA, but MTCC 562 made no response.

I cannot accede to the submissions of counsel for the respondent that the application should be dismissed on the basis that 890 Yonge Street and 900 Yonge Street were not parties to the application. I would be very surprised if they were not aware of the application and if they had felt it appropriate, or necessary, with respect to their rights to appear, they could have asked leave to be heard. I am satisfied that the real issue between the parties before me can be properly dealt with without the presence of those other two corporations.

While it could be held that the application should be dismissed or stayed because the dispute resolution provisions of the SFAA were not satisfied, I do not agree that such should be the case. In my view, neither party has really tried to use its best efforts to resolve this dispute through good faith negotiation. In my view, the respondent did not make the two members of the Project Committee available on the date of the scheduled meeting, or appear to try to co-operate to try and set up a timely meeting and it never replied to the written request by MTCC 698 for arbitration. Further, while MTCC 698 tried to invoke it, there is some evidence that MTCC 698 was trying to get around the announced situation that there was not to be any visitor parking in that condominium.

The real issue is whether, considering all the various agreements, particularly SFA and SFAA, and the fact that MTCC 562 is not a party to YFA and YFAA, does MTCC 698 have the right over the objections of MTCC 562 to demand that lawful visitors to MTCC 698 are entitled to drive over the respondent's property, and allow such vehicles to park in the loading bay areas on the property of MTCC 698 and 890 Yonge Street.

I have attempted to carefully review the relevant agreements and other documents. I agree with Mr. Wigley that Article 4.3 of SFAA appears to envisage visitors' vehicles having the right of passage over the Visitors' Emergency Ramp, and this concept appears to be reinforced by the provisions of MTCC 562 Bylaw No. 4. However, with some reluctance, I have concluded that the overall effect of SFAA, when one considers all of its provisions, particularly the definition of "parking space", those entitled to use "parking spaces", and the detailed plan or scheme of access to and use by vehicles to the complex, the right of park visitors' cars as sought by the applicant is not warranted in law. In my view the intent of the operative agreement (SFAA) was only to provide legal and proper parking at 900 Yonge Street. By definition, a "loading bay" is specifically not to be included within the definition of a "parking space" and the loading bays on the Yonge Street lands are specifically mentioned.

It appears that at one time the parties attempted to negotiate an arrangement whereby MTCC 562 receive some compensation for the arrangement MTCC 698 felt that it was entitled to, but they were unsuccessful, perhaps due to the position taken by the applicant, or the amount demanded by the respondent (or a combination of the two). Since the problem has arisen as a result of an agreement executed prior to MTCC 698 coming into existence, the parties may wish to again discuss a practical solution to the present impasse. The parties may speak to the issue of costs by a conference call if they wish on some mutually convenient day at 9.30 a.m. Counsel should speak to my secretary, Maie Grieve, (327-5295) to arrange this appointment.

My sincere apologies to the parties and their counsel for my lengthy delay in giving my judgment in this case. Unfortunately since mid July I underwent two surgical procedures, together with hospitalization and convalescence (one scheduled and one not) and I, unfortunately, fell behind in my judicial duties.

Century 21 Heritage Ltd., Plaintiff, and Napev Construction Limited, Defendant

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Davidson J. Heard: November 26, 1991 Judgment: December 7, 1991

Sean Dewart, for the Plaintiff. Maurice Neirinch, for the Respondent.

DAVIDSON J.:-- The plaintiff's claim as a Real Estate Broker is for commission on a quantum meruit basis for services performed for the defendant, an owner and developer of condominium units in Mississauga.

The plaintiff's representative, Ernst Kreibom, drew up an exclusive listing agreement giving it the right to sell units in the condominium for a commission. The listing agreement was signed by the parties but it is agreed by counsel that it is not valid and cannot be enforced as it does not comply with sales agreement for the unit has become irrevocable.ess Brokers' Act. It is not dated. It does not contain a provision that it will expire on a certain date specified therein as required by those sections.

The parties, relying on its validity, did begin to implement its provisions. The plaintiff did work which I shall enlarge upon and that is the basis of the claim. The listing agreement provided for commission of 1 1/4% of the purchase price of each unit sold payable on a date when the

The plaintiff's claim relates to a certain nineteen units sold with 1 1/4% of the purchase prices amounting to $35,375.00. At the time the agreement was signed in late June or early July 1986 the land was vacant.

The defendant's solicitors drew up an application to reserve called a Reservation, to be used by the plaintiff in the marketing of the condominium project. In effect this Reservation would be signed by an interested purchaser who would pay a deposit, a percentage of the estimated purchase price approximating $3,000. This would give the purchaser the right to reserve an opportunity to purchase a specified unit with an estimated purchase price. Even if accepted by the defendant, the Reservation did not constitute a binding agreement of purchase and sale, it simply reserved the right to the purchaser to submit an offer to purchase the unit. As well, the purchaser could withdraw the application to reserve if certain documentation was not forthcoming by the defendant by a specified date.

It appears from the evidence that the reservations, if sufficient in number, would be acted upon by the defendant who would then proceed with the construction of the condominium project and the arranging of the requisite financing.

Evidence of the efforts of the plaintiff under the agreement was given by the plaintiffs' licensed salesman, the aforesaid Mr. Kreibom. This included his drafting of an advertising flyer which was printed and distributed in the approximate number of 50,000; the informing of thirty residential sales personnel in the plaintiff's employ; the holding of an open house and wine and cheese party at the adjacent subdivision clubhouse; the staffing of a sales office on the property by Mr. Kreibom who said he averaged four hour a day, seven days a week on the job, although perhaps not always on the site and also staffed by his co-employee, a licensed salesman, Mr. Broos and by a secretary employed by the plaintiff. His evidence is that the onsite office was open and staffed from noon to 9:00 p.m. through the week and a few hours Sundays.

Additionally, Mr. Kreibom and Mr. Broos kept cards of the identity of prospective purchasers and maintained a series of records filed as exhibits mostly in Mr. Kreibom's writing, some in Mr. Broos' writing, amounting in all to at least 290 names of potential purchasers.

Additionally, Mr. Kreibom drafted a letter subsequently sent out relating to a proposal of enlarging some units and targeting as recipients corporate officers and medical doctors. As I understand it, the enlargement did not take place.

Mr. Kreibom also drafted the letter subsequently adopted for sending out by the defendant to persons who had signed the reservations that I referred to which letter advised of the arranging of appointments to present the actual agreement of purchase and sale.

The defendant terminated the plaintiff's services by letter of October 15, 1986 reinstated the plaintiff by letter of October 21, 1986, apparently following upon a meeting of the parties on October 16 and terminated again by letter dated November 21, 1986. Those letters contained complaints of non-performance by the plaintiff and alleged lack of interest. Mr. Kreibom, in his evidence, denied some of the allegations specifically and others generally and outlined the work that he and others had done as I have referred to above.

The defendant called no evidence as to allegations of the plaintiff's non or poor performance. The listing agreement did not call for full-time activity by the plaintiff or its representatives.

I find the evidence of Mr. Kreibom credible and I accept it. It seemed to me that he did not seek to exaggerate, rather he seemed to moderate the importance of some of his and others efforts while acknowledging the defendant's own contribution in promoting the project and the incurring of expense and advertising in similar ventures. The latter, of course, was the defendant's responsibility under the contract.

By November 2, 1986 the plaintiff's sales report showed that 59 or close to one-half of the total units were covered by applications for reservations, 49 of those directly through the plaintiff, 10 through the defendant, the latter being obliged to refer prospective purchasers to the plaintiff. As at that date the defendant was not then in a position to produce agreements of purchase and sale to these purchasers, although it may have been so capable about November 21, 1986, the date of the final termination.

Accordingly, although terminated, I find on the evidence it was not justified on the grounds that had been set out in the defendant's letters. There is no evidence to support those grounds and I have the evidence of Mr. Kreibom, which is contrary to the suggestions.

The 19 units sold, which I referred to earlier, followed from 19 purchasers who had signed applications to reserve prior to the termination of the plaintiff's services and arising from the efforts of the plaintiff's representatives. The actual signing of the agreement of purchase and sale, however, was brought about by the efforts of one Jim Hewitt, who was employed by the defendant as sales manager as of January 30, 1987 and following, and prior to that as an unlicensed sales representative of Remax Limited, a real estate broker who had been appointed by the defendant when the plaintiff was terminated.

Hewitt's compensation from the defendant by his contract was 1 1/4% of the purchase price for each unit sold. In his evidence he estimates something less than 50% of the units were sold up to January 30, 1987, that is while Remax was the agent and he was an employee thereof and the rest of the sales took four months after that until all units were sold.

Mr. Hewitt's work included the arranging for signing of agreements of purchase and sale as well as the obligation to deal with the purchasers and the trades after the signing and right up until the time the purchaser took possession. His contract stipulated he would be at the site six hours per day Monday through Thursday and seven hours on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

While it may be inferred that he did more for his 1 1/4% than was required to be done by the plaintiff, it is apparent that he started off with many reservations already signed and, of course, the plaintiff by its contract was required to continue to act as liaison between the vendor and the purchaser until the purchaser has taken physical possession. I find it difficult on the evidence to determine what material differences there might have been between the respective obligations of the plaintiff and Mr. Hewitt. Suffice to say that although the 1 1/4% was payable to the plaintiff when the purchase agreement became irrevocable, its services were to continue after that date.

The relevant sections of the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act are s. 23 which reads:

"23. Subject to section 32, no action shall be brought to charge any person for the payment of a commission or other remuneration for the sale, purchase, exchange or leasing of real estate,

(a) unless the agreement upon which the action is brought is in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith or some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized; or

(b) unless the broker or his salesman has obtained an offer in writing that is accepted; or

(c) unless the broker having been authorized in writing to list the property,

(i) shows the property to the purchaser, or

(ii) introduces the purchaser to the vendor for the purpose of discussing the proposed sale, purchase, exchange or leasing."

As previously stated (a) is not relevant here by reason of ss. 32(3) and 35(2)(a). The plaintiff's counsel's position is that (c) applies as the defendant did authorize the plaintiff in writing to list the property and (i) or (ii) are present here. He reasons that if the authorizing in writing had to be valid, there would be no need for (c) because it would be covered by (a). I do not agree with that position. "Agreement" as used in (a) might not necessarily be a listing agreement. It could be just a simple agreement for the payment of a commission for the sale of real estate. (c), on the other hand, specifically is an authorization to list and, as acknowledged by both counsel, is not valid for the reasons given.

In my opinion, accordingly, s. 23(c) is a defence to the plaintiff's action. If I am wrong in that I would go on and say that on the evidence I would have found on the balance of probabilities that it was a reasonable inference and I would make the inference that the requirements of (ii) have been established. This is accomplished by the plaintiff's representatives having procured the 19 reservations previously referred to.

Next it is plaintiff's counsel's position that (b) applies, namely that the plaintiff has "obtained an offer in writing that is accepted" He relies on Cash v. George Dundas Realty Ltd., (1973) 1 O.R. 241, the decision of the Court of Appeal. The court there considered what in modern conveyance practices is required of an agent to enable him to assert that he has "obtained an offer in writing". The facts of that case briefly were that the plaintiff's agent and the president of the defendant agreed the defendant would pay the plaintiff a commission of 5% of the sale price in the event the plaintiff obtained a purchaser for the defendant's hotel. It was not in writing by way of a listing agreement and no claim was made under the present s. 23(c) of the Act. The plaintiff brought together the vendor and an individual who became the ultimate purchaser of the hotel. The plaintiff arranged to have the agreement of purchase and sale drafted by the purchaser's solicitor September 6, 1986 and on that date the vendor and the purchaser, the purchaser's solicitor and the plaintiff met and reviewed the draft agreement of purchase and sale. Although there is a dispute as to what took place at that meeting, the purchaser, vendor and plaintiff went to the vendor's solicitor's office with a copy of the draft offer prepared by the purchaser's solicitor.

The following Monday, September 9, the vendor and purchaser met in the office of the solicitor for the vendor and executed a revised agreement of purchase and sale dated September 9. It was stated by the court, and there were listed, several significant differences between the agreement of September 6 and that of September 9.

"In modern day conveyancing practices the role of the agent being neither that of an owner nor purchaser, we cannot expect him to earn his entitlement by reaching decisions of policy in the negotiations of offers and counteroffers. Not being a solicitor his role as a draftsman may not always be required, or perhaps even tolerated, particularly in any complex commercial real estate transactions.

What then does cl. (b) require of a real estate agent when it stipulates that he must 'obtain' an offer in writing? The agent cannot establish the terms of the transaction as he is not an owner or a purchaser, nor is he the agent of either for these purposes. He cannot draw the agreement (unless requested to do so by one or both of the parties) as he has been supplanted frequently in this function by lawyers as was the case here. In commercial transactions involving the purchase, not only of real estate but of associated fixtures and personal property, complex tax ramifications frequently require the drafting to be done by a specialist in one or more fields of the law and effectively preclude the participation of the real estate agent.

In the inevitable give and take of negotiations and exchange of ideas in preparation for the sale of a property, such as a large hotel for the price of $550,000, the real estate agent can at most be a conduit and a catalyst and, after the initial launching of negotiations, may only perform these limited roles, if requested or permitted by the principals.

Thus, we must look in a practical way for the meaning intended by the Legislature of the word 'obtain' in this section of the statute. Clearly the agent cannot succeed under cl. (b), if he is a mere instrumentality concerned in some pre-contractual stage with simply introducing the parties. The cataloguing of the possibilities embraced in or contemplated by this section is neither possible, nor useful, even if possible; the vendor cannot hide behind the statute when as here he agreed that the agent might earn a commission if he 'obtains' a purchaser; takes advantage of the agent's good offices to meet the purchaser; meets with the purchaser and agent to discuss a draft agreement arranged by the agent through the purchaser's solicitor; and allows the agent to deliver the draft to the vendor's solicitor for revision in the light of discussions held between the vendor, the purchaser and the agent, as well as amendments or additions proposed by the solicitor for the vendor himself. In such circumstances, the simple denial by the vendor of any intention to pay a commission to the agent cannot frustrate the agent in asserting his claim under cl. (b) when an acceptable offer by these processes is thereafter produced and executed in a direct sequence of events in which the real estate agent plaintiff is intimately involved.

Therefore, in construing the wording of cl. (b) and giving to it its plain meaning in the context of the buying and selling of real estate, I am of the opinion that the plaintiff broker 'has obtained an offer in writing' which the vendor accepted, when he obtained a draft offer from the purchaser's solicitor, arranged a meeting of the parties to discuss the draft, and thereafter delivered this draft in the company of the two principals to the vendor's solicitor, who made certain technical adjustments thereto and added some terms to the lengthy first draft prepared by the purchaser's solicitor."

In my opinion there is a marked material difference between the facts in Cash and the facts before me. The plaintiff's position here was terminated by the defendant before the form of purchase and sale agreement came into existence or, at the best, contemporaneously therewith. The plaintiff thereafter had nothing to do with obtaining an offer in writing that was accepted. It is not as though the defendant, without further expense on its part, secured a binding agreement of purchase and sale from purchasers. In fact, as I have recited, the defendant immediately retained another real estate broker in substitution of the plaintiff, kept that broker on for a short time; apparently resulting in some offers being secured and accepted and, thereafter, with Mr. Hewitt as its employee, proceeded to secure offers to purchase and accept them in respect to all of the units in the condominium project including the 19 units covered by the aforesaid Reservation. In doing this the defendant incurred an expense based upon a similar commission percentage of 1 1/4% and, as I have stated, the differences between the work which was required of the plaintiff and that of Mr. Hewitt cannot be assessed by me as being materially different.

In essence, it seems to me, on the facts before me, that the plaintiff's services were in the category of mere instrumentality concerned in some pre-contractual stage. That it introduced the parties, in conjunction with the substantial outlays of monies by the defendant for promotion, that the plaintiff's services then ceased and there was a substantial hiatus between that and the formality of the agreements of purchase and sale being obtained and accepted. Additionally, of course, there was the recited intervention of Remax and Mr. Hewitt and the requirement of services to complete the agreement of purchase and sale as to price, terms of payment, closing dates and financing.

The final position of the plaintiff's counsel is that the defendant should be estopped from denying the plaintiff's entitlement to payment for its services under a quantum meruit basis as both parties proceeded on the footing of a valid contract existing, and that the court should act so as to prevent unjust enrichment. That included the stated intention of the defendant in the Reservation to proceed promptly with the construction of the condominium. Nothing, in the evidence, suggests the defendant did otherwise. There is not a pleading of unjust enrichment. It was not until after action was commenced that the defects in the exclusive listing agreement were relied upon by the defendant.

Reference was had to Donald Dyer Real Estate Ltd., v. Credit Mountain Land Co. Ltd. (1975) 7 O.R. (2d) 449, decision of the Court of Appeal, and to Deglman v. Guaranty Trust (1954) 3 D.L.R. 785, decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

In Dyer it is apparent that some form of representation is necessary to bring into operation an estoppel. In my view the actions of the defendant here in carrying out its obligations under the presumed valid listing agreement do not amount to such representation as would estop it from denying the plaintiff's claim.

In Dyer I read from the decision at page 453 per Mr. Justice Arnup who delivered the judgment of the court and I quote:

"The plaintiffs' case here is not that Dyer Real Estate provided services for which it has not been paid. The essence of the complaint is that Dyer Real Estate had been deprived of the opportunity to provide services, from which it would have earned commissions. The doctrine of quantum meruit does not apply. Nor does the doctrine of unjust enrichment, which has been applied in some cases where a defendant has received benefits which it is unjust for him to retain without paying for them."

In the case at bar the plaintiff was to get offers to purchase to earn its commission. The plaintiff was deprived of the opportunity to perform the services from which it would have earned the commissions. Nor can it be said in my view that this defendant received benefits which it is unjust for it to retain without paying for them. It has paid for them, albeit to someone else. Even if unjust enrichment is a factor I would have reference to the Deglman decision.

At page 788 in the reasons of Mr. Justice Cartwright I quote:

"There remains the question of recovery for the services rendered on the basis of a quantum meruit. On the findings of both Courts below the services were not given gratuitously but on the footing of a contractual relation: they were to be paid for. The statute in such a case does not touch the principle of restitution against what would otherwise be an unjust enrichment of the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff. This is exemplified in the simple case of part or full payment in money as the price under an oral contract; it would be inequitable to allow the promisor to keep both the land and the money and the other party to the bargain is entitled to recover what he has paid. Similarly is it in the case of services given.

This matter is elaborated exhaustively in the Restatement of the Law of Contract issued by the American Law Institute and Professor Williston's monumental work on Contracts, 1936, vol. 2, s. 536 deals with the same topic. On the principles there laid down the respondent is entitled to recover for his services and outlays what the deceased would have had to pay for them on a purely business basis to any other person in the position of the respondent." And then two quotes from the reasons of Mr. Justice Cartwright at page 795:

"In my view it was correctly decided in Britain v. Rossiter (1879), 11 Q.B.D. 123, that where there is an express contract between the parties which turns out to be unenforceable by reason of the Statute of Frauds no other contract between the parties can be implied from the doing of acts in performance of the express but unenforceable contract."

And a further quote on that page:

"In the case at bar all the acts for which the respondent asks to be paid under his alternative claim were clearly done in performance of the existing but unenforceable contract with the deceased that she would devise 548 Besserer St. to him, and to infer from them a fresh contract to pay the value of the services in money would be, in the words of Brett L.J. quoted above, to draw an inference contrary to the fact."

Continuing with the quote:

"In my opinion when the Statute of Frauds was pleaded the express contract was thereby rendered unenforceable, but the deceased having received the benefits of the full performance of the contract by the respondent, the law imposed upon her, and so on her estate, the obligation to pay the fair value of the services rendered to her." Here, in the case before me, the plaintiff did not fully perform the obligations of its contract, although prevented from doing so by the defendant's termination, and the defendant did pay for the services on a purely business basis, albeit to another person. In the end result, therefore, I have concluded that the plaintiff's action must be dismissed.

I did not make any comment in my reasons for decision on any adverse interest which may be suggested from the defendant's conduct because I do not think it was material to the considerations I was giving in the reasons that I arrived at. Nor in the question of costs do I ascribe any ulterior motive to any of the conduct of the defendant. In my view this was a situation in which the defendant did make a decision terminating the plaintiff.

I have found that the preferred reasons for that did not hold up on the evidence that I heard. I ask myself is that an element to be considered in determining whether or not I should deprive the successful party of costs. In my view it is not. It is true that the action is pursued by the trustee in bankruptcy and obviously for benefit of creditors but a trustee in bankruptcy presumably is acting in the best interests of everyone and it is a considered decision on its part to proceed.

I do not believe there are any special circumstances here. I cannot lose sight of one of the elements I felt of material difference in the cases I have cited which is that the defendant did incur and did pay for the very costs which was being pursued by the plaintiff in the sale of the condominium units.

Putting all of that together it is my view that costs should follow the event and the plaintiff's action is accordingly dismissed with costs to be assessed.

York Condominium Corporation No. 71, Applicant, and Glenn Joseph Sullivan and Marcel Parent, Respondents

Ontario District Court - York Judicial District Toronto, Ontario O'Connell D.C.J. May 11, 1990

B. Widman, for the Applicant. N. Qualer, for the Respondent, Sullivan. J. Ward, for the Respondent, Parent.

O'CONNELL D.C.J.:-- This is an application by the Condominium Corporation for orders as set forth in the application and the amended Notice of Application pursuant to Section 49 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, Chapter 84, and amendments thereto.

The Applicant applies pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act Section 49(1) for the orders requested by reason of the fact, that the owner of the unit, Glenn Joseph Sullivan, and his tenant have allegedly not complied with the rules of the Corporation. There is filed in support of the application, the affidavit of Mary Salvadore, the affidavit of Brian McGee, the affidavit of Donald Wayne Jansen, the factum of the Applicant, the owner of the tenant, the cross-examinations and the authorities. I heard substantial and learned submissions on the issues raised by Counsel for the Applicant and for the Respondents. Attached to the affidavit of Brian McGee as Exhibit B, is a copy of the rules passed by the Board of Directors on September 12th, 1988 pursuant to Section 29 of the Act. The rules have not been amended and paragraphs 10(b), 12, 13, 16, 17, 20 and 21 as set forth in the affidavit of Brian McGee are made effective in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Attached to the same affidavit is Exhibit C. Exhibit C is a copy of the rules of the Corporation passed by the Board of Directors on March 14th, 1989. These rules were passed pursuant to Section 29 of the Condominium Act and are effective in accordance with the provisions of the Act. These rules and in particular paragraphs 1(a), 1(d), 10(a), 19 and 54 are as set forth in the affidavit of Brian McGee.

The issues that arise are:

(a) Did the tenant Parent, he being the tenant of Sullivan, do and continue to do acts which were acts prohibited in law under the rules? and

(b) Is the owner Sullivan responsible for the behaviour of his tenant, when the owner is notified of the breach of alleged rules and takes no steps to correct the conduct of his tenant?

It is submitted, that several of the complaints have been corrected. The restraining order is being sought so that this type of complaint does not reoccur. Complaints corrected are: there is no longer any parking in the visitors area, there is no longer any parking in the fire route area, and there is no longer a derelict vehicle parked in the driveway.

It is agreed by Counsel that the tenant Parent, parks a commercial vehicle in his driveway, a vehicle which is owned by his employer. Attached to the affidavit of Marcel Parent sworn on the 31st of October, 1989 and marked as Exhibit A, is a true copy of two photographs of that vehicle which the tenant admits that he has parked on the driveway portion of the exclusive common element in front of the townhouse occupied by him. The tenant denied knowledge of the rules until he was served with the application. The owner is obliged under the Act to furnish the Corporation with the lessee's acknowledgment to comply with the rules. The owner was aware of the concern of the Corporation by reason of the facts as set forth in the letters attached to the affidavits.

The owner has the same right to apply to the Court as the Corporation does. Under Section 29(1) of the Act, rules can be passed by the Corporation for the use of the common elements and for the purposes as set forth in the Act. Under Section 12(2) of Act, the Corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements. Under Section 12(1), the Corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with the Act, the declaration, the bylaws and the rules. Under Section 29 of the Act, the Board has the right to make such rules respecting the use of the common elements to promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property, all for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units.

It is submitted by the applicant Corporation that the declaration, bylaws and rules are vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner and he is not only bound by their term and their provisions, but he is entitled to insist that other unit owners are similarly bound (York Condominium Corporation No. 288 v. Harbour Square Commercial Inc. (1988) 49 R.P.R. 264).

In this application, the purpose of the rule is not an issue. The issue is, is the commercial aspect insofar as it relates to the vehicle, the only difference between the commercial van as described in the affidavit of Mr. Parent and a regular van, is the lettering on the van as shown in the photograph. The tenant through his Counsel, submits that this van, i.e. the commercial van, does not offend Section 29(1) of the Act in that its presence does not amount to an unreasonable interference with the common elements. The Respondent Sullivan, the owner, submits that this rule does not fall within the scope of Section 29 of the Statute as it does not promote safety, security or welfare of the owners for the purpose as set forth, that is, preventing unreasonable interference with the use and the enjoyment of the common elements of the units. The rule does not restrict a vehicle that is passenger type in nature.

It is clear to me, that the owner and/or his tenant is bound by rules passed by the Corporation. It is the obligation of the owner to ensure that the tenant complies with the rules as the tenant's relationship is with the owner and not of the Corporation. The definition of owner, includes tenants, and the declaration imposes upon an owner, a duty to comply with the declaration, bylaws and rules and to cause his tenant to comply with such. The liability upon the owner does not exceed the terms of the declaration, bylaws or rules.

In my view, it is irrelevant as to whether the unit is occupied by owner or tenant. The owner has the same rights as given to the Corporation. The Corporation has a right to pass the rules. The rules are for the general benefit of the owners. After the rules were passed, the second set of rules having been passed on March of 1989, the commercial vehicle was moved to the driveway of the unit and was there when the application was commenced. It is clear from the authorities, that the owner of a unit is responsible for this behaviour of a tenant of that unit and an order compelling compliance with the rules of the Corporation will issue against such owner (York Condominium No. 216 v. Nalevka, Rose Budd and William Budd unreported decision of Haley, D.C.J., December 17th, 1982).

It is likewise clear that the declaration, bylaws and rules of the Corporation are vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the individual unit owner who are bound by them as other unit owners are. The rules passed pursuant to the provisions of Section 29 of the Act, if valid, are for the use of the common elements and units, or any of them to promote the safety, security and welfare of the owners and of the property, or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units (Section 29(1)). Rules passed must be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the Act, the declaration and its bylaws. Under Section 31, each owner is bound by and shall comply with the Act, the declaration, bylaws and the rules.

It is clear that under Section 29, that the Corporation has the power to make rules to promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property, or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units. Considering the words used in Section 29 of the Act, is the presence of a commercial vehicle, such, that it would prevent unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units? Or, does it effect the safety, security or welfare of the owners this being a residential-type complex?

The Statute dictates how a condominium dwellers lifestyle is to be governed. Rules are passed pursuant to the Statute and must serve the purposes set forth in Section 29(1).

The relief sought here is as set forth in the application and the supplementary application, that is for an order which is discretionary in nature.

I am satisfied that the Board through its managers gave notice to the owner of the unit, that the owner received such notice and that the owner on the basis of the factum filed, conversed with the tenant as to the complaints, some of which have been answered save and except for the vehicle described as a commercial vehicle.

It would in my view, that is to allow this commercial vehicle to be parked contrary to the rules, interfere with the use and enjoyment of the other units and/or their occupants. If tenants of owners were allowed to park commercial vehicles as this tenant admitted he did, in the area immediately adjacent to the unit, then such would amount to a breach of the rules passed pursuant to the provisions of Section 29(1). It is obvious that the rule is breached as it relates to commercial vehicles. It is obvious to me, that the parking of such vehicles would be unsightly and thus interfere with the use and enjoyment of the elements, common to units in the complex.

It is obvious to me, that the rule serves one of the purposes as set forth in the section. Thus, it is operative and is for the benefit of all unit owners. Thus, it is reasonable and consistent with the Act, the declaration and the bylaws.

Accordingly, the application is allowed and the order will issue as against both owner and tenant as requested under paragraphs 1(c),(d), (e) and (h) of the application and paragraphs 1(K) and 1(1) of the supplementary application. The costs relative to the appearance on August 22nd, were reserved to the Judge hearing the application. An order should issue against the owner for costs of the August 22nd, 1989 hearing payable to the Corporation on a solicitor and client basis. I make no order as to costs as against the tenant under the circumstances as described.

Ontario Supreme Court - Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Blair, Morden and Grange J.J.A. Heard: December 20, 1989
Judgment: January 12, 1990

Karl D. Jaffary, for the Appellant. Jonathan H. Fine, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

BLAIR J.A. (orally, endorsement):-- The judge of first instance appointed an inspector to investigate the affairs of the appellants and the condominium corporation purportedly under s. 40 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. There was no finding that the appellants or the condominium corporation fell within the meaning of "person" under s. 40(2) of the Act. That subsection refers to an "investigation of the affairs of any person in receipt of money mentioned in subsection (1)"; s-s.(1) provides that "[e]very person in receipt of money paid to or for the benefit of the [condominium] corporation shall, make available for examination by the corporation or any owner or mortgagee, all records relating to the receipt and disposition of such money." On the wording of the provision we do not think that the corporation itself could be "such person". Moreover, there was no finding upon any of the disputed issues that would justify such an investigation. Certainly, there can be no justification for awarding costs in advance of such findings.

The appeal must be allowed, the order below set aside, and the matter referred back to the District Court so that findings appropriate to the issues may be made. This may require the ordering of the trial of an issue or the directing of a reference.

The appellants will be entitled to the costs of the appeal. The costs of the first and second hearings will be in the discretion of the judge presiding at the second hearing.

Court File No. C23797

Court of Appeal for Ontario, Morden A.C.J.O., McKinlay and Laskin JJ.A. January 21, 1997

* Application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed with costs July 10, 1997 (La Forest, Gonthier and Major JJ.). S.C.C. File No. 25897. S.C.C. Bulletin, 1997, p. 1366.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Divisional Court dismissing an appeal from a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal that denied claims under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31.

Larry J. Levine, Q.C., and Kevin D. Sherkin, for appellants. Brian M. Campbell, for respondent. Michael A. Spears, for intervenor, Durham Condominium Corp. No. 120.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

MCKINLAY J.A.: -- This is an appeal, with leave, from a decision of the Divisional Court dismissing an appeal from the decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal denying claims by the appellants for compensation pursuant to the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31, for deposits paid and damages incurred on account of agreements to purchase condominium units, which agreements the appellants state were not completed because of default by the vendor developer.

The appellant, Sunforest Investment Corporation in trust, as trustee for eight individual investors, entered in agreements to purchase eight residential condominium units from the vendor, The Markan Group. The appellant, Paul Wing, agreed in his own name to purchase one unit.

The appellants acknowledge that they entered into the agreements for investment purposes, intending to rent the units when they became available for occupancy. The vendor represented to the purchasers that the units were covered by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program and that registration fees had been paid. Registration and enrolment numbers were provided for each condominium purchased. There were three areas of dispute before the Appeal Tribunal:

(i) that the purchases, being made for investment purposes only, were not covered by the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act;

(ii) that the appellants, rather than the developer, failed to perform the contract by failing to apply for mortgage financing and failing to provide the vendor with financial information as required by the agreements of purchase and sale for the purpose of obtaining mortgage financing for each unit; and

(iii) that there was no evidence that the purchasers actually paid the deposit moneys as alleged.

(i) Application of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act

The Appeal Tribunal dismissed the appellants' appeal on the basis that the appellants' purchases were not covered by the Warranty Program and the Divisional Court agreed with the reasons of the tribunal. The Divisional Court relied on a portion of the reasons of the tribunal in which the tribunal quoted the reasons of Carthy J.A. in the decision of this court in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (1991), 1 O.R. (3d) 513, 15 R.P.R. (2d) 113 (C.A.), leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada refused October 17, 1991, where he said at p. 519:

... there is an apparent lack of harmony between the nature of these transactions and this protection afforded by the Act.

The Marchant case, and the decision of this court in Brownstones East Limited Partnership v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 545, 93 D.L.R. (4th) 400, which followed it, both involved investments in limited partnerships which held all of the units in large condominium projects. The investments were similar to a share interest in a corporation. It was in this context that the decisions were made, and to which the reasons were addressed. Both cases involved the question of whether the agreements of purchase and sale of interests in the partnerships resulted in the vendor under the agreement being a "vendor" within the terms of the Act, thereby requiring registration under the Act and the payment of premiums to the Warranty Program. Avoiding the requirement to pay premiums in both cases resulted in savings of very substantial amounts of money to the developers involved.

The relevant provision of the Act is s. 14(1)(a), which reads:

14(1) Where

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

For recovery under s. 14(1)(a), it is necessary that the vendor under the agreement of purchase and sale be a "vendor" within the definition of "vendor" in s. 1 of the Act, which reads

... a person who sells on his ... own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner ...

The Marchant and Brownstone decisions were based primarily on the uncontested fact that there was no sale of a "home" involved in either case, but rather the sale of a partnership interest. The result, as detailed above, was that the vendors of the partnership interests did not have to register under the Act, and did not have to pay premiums to the Program.

This case is quite different. The purchases involved units each of which was a "home not previously occupied" within the above definition. The definition also requires that the home be sold to an "owner", who is defined in s. 1 as "a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy". The tribunal held that since these units were acquired for rental purposes, they were not acquired "for occupancy", because such occupancy must be that of the purchaser. It is obvious that the Act does not specifically say that, but the respondent takes the position that the words of Carthy J.A. in Marchant that "there is an apparent lack of harmony between the nature of [the transactions in that case] and protection afforded by the Act" supports its view that "occupancy" must be occupancy by the purchaser. In my view, had the legislature intended such a result, it could have said so in clear terms.

I agree with Holland J. in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 362, 50 R.P.R. 186 (H.C.J.), that even where condominiums are purchased for tax shelters, they are purchased for occupancy and, therefore, the vendor of a condominium which has not been previously occupied must be registered and pay premiums under the Act. If that is so, the purchaser is protected by the provisions of the Act. In this case, the administrators of the Warranty Program required coverage, and accepted premiums pursuant to the provisions of the Act, but now wish to decline payment of the appellants' claims. They cannot have it both ways. Either the units are covered, in which case premiums must be paid and appropriate claims honoured, or the units are not covered, in which case premiums need not be paid and no claims may properly be made.

It follows that I would allow the appeal, subject to satisfactory resolution of the other two areas of dispute between the parties. The tribunal seems to have assumed the correctness of its decision on the applicability of the Act to the agreements in this case and thus did not deal with the other two disputes which were argued before us.

(ii) Failure to Perform Contract by not Qualifying for Mortgage Financing

The Program denied the claims of the appellants on the alternative basis that they had failed to qualify for assumption of the first mortgage against the property, and thus the agreement became null and void. As stated by the tribunal, counsel for the appellants argued that it would be an abuse of process to hear evidence on this point since Corbett J., on a motion for summary judgment in an action brought by them against the vendor, gave judgment in their favour for the total amount claimed. He was of the view that the doctrines of issue estoppel or res judicata should be applied by the tribunal.

The tribunal did not consider it appropriate to apply either doctrine in this case, since the tribunal was not a party to the proceedings before Corbett J., although it was notified of the proceedings when commenced. I agree. However, at the hearing before the tribunal, there was in fact substantial evidence adduced on this point. On the uncontradicted evidence of counsel acting for the appellants on the original transactions, it is clear that the appellants did all that was required by the agreements with respect to mortgage financing. The vendor at no time purported to declare the agreements null and void and forfeit the deposits, and neither did it at any time do all that was required of it to close the transaction. There was more than sufficient evidence adduced by the appellants before the tribunal to support their position that the vendor was in default under the agreements. No evidence was adduced by the Warranty Program. That being the case, there is nothing to be gained by sending the matter back for a determination of this issue.

(iii) Failure to Prove Payment of Deposits

It was the position of the Warranty Program that the payment of deposits under the agreements was not proven before the tribunal. On this issue also the Program adduced no evidence. However, there was substantial evidence by the appellants as to payment of the deposits. Indeed, the tribunal, in dealing with the issue of application of the Act to these agreements, stated that deposits were paid by the individual investors. Given the correspondence between solicitors for the parties, and the oral evidence before the tribunal, there can be no doubt on this issue. However, I am of the view that damages in excess of the deposits were not proven.

Result

I would allow the appeal, with costs, set aside the order of the Divisional Court, and grant judgment in favour of the appellants for all amounts paid as deposits on account of the agreements involved, plus interest on those amounts. I would award costs to the appellants before the Divisional Court and on the motion for leave to appeal to this court.

Appeal allowed.

No. C21028

Court of Appeal for Ontario, Doherty, Weiler and Laskin JJ.A. December 12, 1996

APPEAL from a summary judgment of White J. ((1995), 22 O.R. (3d) 244, 44 R.P.R. (2d) 29) dismissing an action for rescission.

Douglas Thomson, for appellants. Donald D. Hanna, for respondents. The judgment of the court was delivered by DOHERTY J.A.: -- The appellants purchased certain property in Etobicoke in September 1988. In November 1988, they were told of the presence of Varsol and oil contaminant in the soil and the groundwater on the property. Some four-and-a-half years later, in February 1993, the appellants commenced this action claiming rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale and damages on the basis that the contaminants rendered the property of no value. The appellants and respondents brought motions for summary judgment in December 1994. White J. dismissed the appellants' motion, granted the respondents' motion and dismissed the action ((1995), 22 O.R. (3d) 244, 44 R.P.R. (2d) 29). The appellants now seek an order setting aside the dismissal of their action and a further order directing that the matter proceed to trial.

On the motion before White J., the appellants took the position that this was an appropriate case for summary judgment. They took the same position on their motion for leave to appeal to the Divisional Court from the decision of White J. and in the notice of appeal filed in this court. The appellants claim that a trial is needed to resolve various factual disputes that first appeared in their factum filed on this appeal. In my view, the appellants' eleventh hour attempt to rescue their action with the submission that this was not an appropriate case for summary judgment cannot succeed.

The property is located at 347 Royal York Road in Etobicoke and was zoned for industrial use. It had a long history of industrial use and the respondents had operated a factory on the property under the name Venco Metals ("Venco"), since 1974. Venco manufactured metal stamps and used Varsol to clean the machinery used in that process. Between 1979 and 1985, the dirty Varsol was dumped on the ground behind the factory. In 1985, the owner of the adjoining property complained about the presence of oil and Varsol in its sump pump pit. Representatives from the Ministry of the Environment and the City of Etobicoke investigated and determined that the dirty Varsol was likely migrating from the respondents' property to the neighbour's property through the groundwater. The respondents retained Monenco Consultants Ltd. ("Monenco") to investigate the problem and to advise as to what steps should be taken to control and eliminate the contamination. A short time later, in November 1985, Varsol and other solvents were classified as registerable hazardous waste material by O. Reg. 322/85 passed pursuant to the Environmental Protection Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 141. Monenco reported that the soil and groundwater were contaminated with Varsol and oil and recommended that certain wells be installed on the property to capture the contaminant and control its spread. The respondents installed the recommended system in 1985 and retained Monenco to monitor the condition of the soil and groundwater.

Mr. Tony Tolomei, who controlled both corporate appellants, became interested in purchasing the property late in 1987. His carpet business was located about 100 metres from the property, and he had previously purchased and developed two other smaller properties in the area. Mr. Tolomei knew that Venco operated a manufacturing plant on the property, but he did not know the specific nature of that business.

Mr. Tolomei negotiated the purchase of the property with George Arndt, the Director of Finance for one of the respondent companies. On January 8, 1988, the parties entered into an agreement of purchase and sale calling for the sale of the property for a price of $1,250,000. The appellants' solicitors drew up the agreement. The sale was originally to close in July, but was delayed until September 6, 1988 at the request of the respondents. Although Mr. Arndt was well aware of the contaminant in the groundwater and soil, he made no mention of it to Mr. Tolomei either before entering into the agreement in January or prior to closing in September. The appellants were unaware of the existence of the contaminant in the soil and groundwater before the closing of the transaction.

Mr. Tolomei wanted to build a multi-storey residential condominium on the property. In their statement of claim, the appellants pled that Mr. Tolomei told Mr. Arndt of the proposed condominium development. The respondents' statement of defence pled that at some time after the agreement of purchase and sale was signed, Mr. Tolomei informed Mr. Arndt that a condominium development was a possibility. In his examination for discovery and on the cross-examination on his affidavits filed on the motion for summary judgment, Mr. Tolomei admitted on at least three separate occasions that he did not tell Mr. Arndt or anyone connected with the respondents about his intended use of the property. Mr. Arndt made no reference to this issue in his affidavit and he was not cross-examined.

White J. found at p. 251 O.R., p. 37 R.P.R.: The vendor had no indication from the purchaser that the purchaser did not intend to continue the extant use of the property as a factory.

White J. was entitled to make that finding on a motion for summary judgment. In the face of Mr. Tolomei's repeated express admission that he did not tell anyone connected with the respondents about his proposed use of the property, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, I do not think a reasonable trier of fact could come to any conclusion but that reached by White J.

When he agreed to buy the property, Mr. Tolomei knew that the property was zoned for industrial use, and he knew that a factory had been operated on the site for many years. Mr. Tolomei also knew that the property would have to be re-zoned before he could proceed with his condominium development. Despite these facts, Mr. Tolomei chose not to investigate the property prior to agreeing to purchase it, or to make the agreement conditional upon appropriate re-zoning. The agreement of purchase and sale contained the following terms:

2. . . . Vendor agrees to give written consent for a building inspection by any governmental authority.

6. Purchaser shall be allowed until 11:59 p.m. on the 15th of June, 1988 to examine title to the property, at his own expense, to satisfy himself that there are no outstanding work orders affecting the property, that its present use may be lawfully continued . . .

8. Purchaser acknowledges having inspected the property prior to submitting this Offer and understands that upon Vendor accepting this Offer there shall be a binding agreement of purchase and sale between Purchaser and Vendor.

9. Vendor and Purchaser agree that there is no condition, express or implied, representation or warranty of any kind that the future intended use of the property by Purchaser is or will be lawful except as may be specifically stipulated elsewhere in this Agreement.

22. Notwithstanding any terms or conditions outlined in the printed portion herein, any provisions written or typed into this Offer shall be the true terms and shall supersede the printed portion in respect to the parts affected thereby. This Agreement shall constitute the entire agreement between the Purchaser and Vendor and there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this Agreement or the property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing. This Agreement shall be read with all changes of gender or number required by the context.

(Emphasis added) Although the respondents gave the appellants full access to the property between January and September 1988, the appellants did nothing to determine the suitability of the property for the proposed use. Nor, as provided for in the agreement of purchase and sale, did the appellants obtain the respondents' consent to an inspection of the property by any governmental authority. According to Mr. Tolomei he did not even bother to visually inspect the property before the closing date.

In August 1988, the appellants did ask the respondents for permission to conduct certain soil tests on the property. The respondents gave that permission. For reasons which had nothing to do with the respondents, the tests were not done until after closing and the appellants did not receive a report from their consultant until December 1988. Although the tests were done to determine the feasibility of erecting a multi-storey building on the property, they clearly revealed the contaminant in the soil and groundwater.

In May 1988, some three months before the closing, Monenco wrote to the respondents indicating that their recent tests showed a substantial increase in the amount of contaminant captured by some of the wells installed in 1985. In August 1988, Monenco reported to the respondents that the system installed in 1985 was not functioning properly and had probably not been adequately maintained. Monenco told the respondents that the contaminant continued to migrate off the property and that the current system might not be adequate to collect and control the contaminant. Monenco also expressed concern about the nature of the discharge into the municipal sewage system. The respondents did not tell the appellants about either the May letter or the August report. They passed the August report on to the Ministry of the Environment after the transaction closed. The respondents were in contact with the Ontario Ministry of the Environment between November 1988 and April 1989. The Ministry made it clear that the property should be cleaned up and asked to be kept advised. No order was ever issued by the Ministry directing the cleanup and no cleanup has ever been undertaken.

The appellants were told of the contaminant problem in November 1988 by officials from the Ministry of the Environment. They continued to attempt to develop the property and brought a re-zoning application in June 1989. The appellants' efforts to develop the property were finally abandoned in 1991 when, according to Mr. Tolomei, the economy precluded any further attempt to develop the property. Since purchasing the property, the appellants have used it as a carpet storage facility and have also allowed other businesses to store property on the premises. Part of the former factory was also leased to a wholesale carpet seller.

The appellants did not plead that the property as purchased could not be used for industrial purposes. They led no evidence to that effect on the motion for summary judgment. The environmental audit prepared by the appellants' expert in October 1991 and April 1992 did not suggest that the property could not be used in its current condition for industrial purposes. Nor does the report suggest that the contaminant posed any ongoing danger to persons or property. According to the appellants' experts, if the property was developed for residential use, the contaminated soil would have to be taken to specially designated landfill sites, and this would substantially increase the cost of excavation. The report went on to indicate that the property could be used on an as is basis as a parking lot, yielding annual revenues of between $24,000 and $48,000 a year.

The evidence produced on the motions supports the conclusion that the presence of the contaminant did not render the continued use of the property for industrial purposes dangerous or illegal. The Ministry of the Environment and the City of Etobicoke have been aware of the contaminant since 1985. Neither had taken any steps to order a cleanup or curtail the industrial use of the property by Venco. Even after the Ministry became aware that the containment system installed in 1985 appeared to be inadequate, no steps were taken to prohibit the continued use of the property. While the Ministry of the Environment clearly wanted the contaminant cleaned up, there is no suggestion that absent a cleanup, the property could not be used for industrial purposes. The Ministry has never issued any order against the property and appears to have shown no interest in the contaminant for many years.

In oral argument, counsel for the appellants submitted that the classification of the contaminant as "hazardous industrial waste" in a regulation passed pursuant to the Environmental Protection Act established that any use of the property posed a danger. He also argued that the contaminant rendered the property "valueless". The evidence does not support the first submission and flatly contradicts the second. Counsel referred to no statutory or other authority which suggests that the presence of a contaminant characterized as hazardous under a regulation compels the conclusion that the continued use of the property for industrial purposes is dangerous or illegal. The appellants' own evidence established that the property had value in its existing state. The most that can be said on this record is that the presence of the contaminant could significantly increase the costs of developing the property for use as a residential condominium.

Much of the argument on the motion turned on whether the presence of the contaminant should be classified as a latent or patent defect in the property. I agree with the respondents' primary submission that it was neither. In 688350 Ontario Ltd. v. Piron, [1994] (Gen. Div.), Epstein J. said at paras. 132-133:

A defect is generally understood to mean something that constitutes a failing, short-coming, fault, or imperfection. This is obviously a subjective concept. To adopt a phrase, one person's defect may be another person's ideal.

Obviously to make a determination of whether something is a defect in the quality of land, the intended use of the land must be taken into account.

In this case, the respondents agreed to sell, and the appellants agreed to buy industrial property. Unlike the situation in 688350 Ontario Ltd., supra, the respondents were not told of the appellants' intention to use the property for a very different purpose. The respondents had no reason to believe that the appellants would use the property for any purpose other than an industrial one. The question of whether the contaminant constituted a defect in the property must be considered in this context. This record offers no support for the contention that the contaminant impaired the continued use of the property for industrial purposes. The appellants got exactly what they bargained for -- industrial land. Their undisclosed intention to use the property for residential purposes does not alter the bargain the appellants made, or create a latent defect in the industrial property which the appellants agreed to purchase.

If I am wrong and the presence of the contaminant was a defect, I agree with the conclusion of White J. (at pp. 249-51 O.R., pp. 35-37 R.P.R.) that the defect was a patent one. It would have been readily discoverable by the appellants had they exercised reasonable vigilance in the circumstances. In deciding whether the appellants exercised reasonable vigilance, it must be remembered that the appellants were buying industrial land on which they proposed to build a residential condominium. A reasonable inspection of the property, reasonable inquiries of the respondents, and reasonable inquiries of the local and provincial authorities would have put the appellants on notice of the existence of the contaminant. Indeed, had the appellants pursued the taking of soil samples with reasonable diligence after the respondents had permitted them to take those samples, they would have learned of the existence of the contaminant before closing. Instead, the appellants chose not to disclose their intended use of the property and to take no steps to satisfy themselves that the property could be used for that purpose.

In reaching the conclusion that the defect, if any, was patent, I do not find it necessary to determine whether Mr. Tolomei actually saw the pipes and shed installed on the property in 1985 by Monenco. Instead, I agree with White J. (at p. 250 O.R., p. 36 R.P.R.), that on a reasonable inspection, these would have been apparent to the appellants, and would, along with the other circumstances, such as the location of the property, have caused inquiries to be made concerning their purpose.

The appellants submit that the question of whether the contaminant could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable vigilance can only be properly decided after a trial. I disagree. The standard to be applied is an objective one and the motion record fully revealed the factors relevant to that assessment.

The appellants also submit that apart from the characterization of any defect as latent or patent, the vendors had a duty to bargain in good faith and breached that duty when they failed to advise the appellants of the information provided by Monenco in the spring and summer of 1988. The existence of a duty to bargain in good faith in an arms-length commercial transaction involving the sale of real property is debatable: see annotation of J. Lem to Justice White's decision at 44 R.P.R. (2d) 29 at pp. 30-31. In any event, I can see no evidence on this record of any basis for a finding of bad faith against the respondents. They made no misrepresentations. They gave the appellants ready access to information concerning the property and full physical access to the property, even to the extent of permitting investigations which were not required by the agreement of purchase and sale. Furthermore, they had no knowledge that the appellants intended to radically change the use of the property. I cannot agree that the failure to disclose information which did not affect the continued use of the property for industrial purposes, and which could have been obtained by the appellants through their own reasonable efforts, constitutes bad faith.

Two additional matters require brief reference. Apart entirely from any contractual obligation arising out of an agreement of purchase and sale, a vendor of real property may have a duty to warn a purchaser of dangers in or on the property which pose a risk of physical harm to persons or property: F. Coburn and G. Manning, Toxic Real Estate Manual (1996) at p. II-v to II-xiv. That principle has no application here. As indicated above, there is no evidence that the contaminant posed a risk of harm such as to render the use of the property for industrial purposes dangerous.

I would also stress that this action is not about the obligation, if any, of the respondents to contribute to, or fund exclusively, any cleanup of the property which may be undertaken by the appellants or ordered by the appropriate governmental authorities. The appellants have taken no steps to remove the contaminant and no cleanup has been ordered. If and when the appellants undertake a cleanup, or a cleanup order is made, the respondents' liability for costs attributable to that cleanup may have to be addressed in the appropriate forum. This action does not address those potential obligations.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Re Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 and Ontario New Home Warranty Program

28 O.R. (3d) 394

Ottawa Court File Nos. 00953/95 and 1056/95

APPEAL and application for judicial review of a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal.

James Davidson, for appellant. Netanus T. Rutherford, for respondent.

SOUTHEY J.: -- There are two issues in this case. The first is whether a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal adjourning sine die an appeal to it from a decision of the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Program") is appealable. The second is whether that decision of the Tribunal should be set aside on the appeal, if one lies, or on an application for judicial review.

The appeal before the tribunal was from a decision of the Program rejecting claims for compensation arising out of four alleged defects in a building owned by the appellant condominium corporation. The Tribunal, at the request of the Program, adjourned the hearing of the appeal sine die pending the final disposition of an action brought by the condominium corporation in the Ontario Court (General Division) against the general contractor, the architect and others involved in the construction of the building for damages arising out of the same defects.

The appeal to the Tribunal was brought under s. 11(1) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21, which reads as follows:

11(1) Any party to proceedings before the Tribunal may appeal from its decision or order to the Divisional Court in accordance with the rules of court.

The Divisional Court is given broad powers on an appeal under s. 11(5), which reads:

(5) An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal, and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar or of the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with such directions as the court considers proper.

Although there appears to be an unrestricted right of appeal from decisions of the Tribunal, it has been held by this court differently constituted that similar provisions respecting other tribunals confer a right of appeal only from final decisions or orders: see Canadian Union of Public Employees v. Ontario Hospital Assn. (1991), 35 C.C.E.L. 43 (Div. Ct., Davidson J.), applying Roosma v. Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. (1988), 66 O.R. (2d) 18, 53 D.L.R. (4th) 90 (Div. Ct.).

The decision of the Tribunal in this case did not dispose of the claims of the condominium corporation. The decision is clearly an interlocutory one, not a final one. No valid reason was given for distinguishing the authorities above, and the appeal must be quashed for the reasons given in those cases.

I now turn to the application for judicial review. The decision of the Tribunal to adjourn its hearing pending the outcome of the court action was based on the well-recognized principle that the possibility of inconsistent decisions in multiple proceedings dealing with the same issues should be avoided. As to the choice of the forum in which the claims should be heard, the Tribunal quoted from one of its earlier rulings, which included the following passage from the decision of Davies J. in Cooper v. Cooper, [1952] 2 All E.R. 857 at p. 861, [1953] P. 26:

. . . there is in many respects a co-equal jurisdiction between courts of summary jurisdiction, on the one hand, and the High Court, on the other . . . The principle, as I have always understood it, which applies to such cases, is that if on the same issue between the same parties there is an actual conflict of jurisdiction, or a reasonable likelihood or probability of such a conflict of jurisdiction, the inferior court, as a matter of obvious convenience and public policy, should not proceed with the hearing of the summons.

As to the standard of review, this is a case in which there is no privative clause, there is a broad statutory right of appeal and the issue (whether proceedings before the Tribunal should be stayed) is one respecting which the Tribunal has no greater expertise than the courts. The appropriate standard of review in those circumstances, in my opinion, is that of correctness: see the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Pezim v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Brokers), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 557 at p. 590, 114 D.L.R. (4th) 385 at pp. 404-05.

The duty of the Tribunal in this case was to hold a hearing. Section 16(3) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31, reads as follows:

16(3) Where a person or owner gives notice in accordance with subsection (2), the Tribunal shall appoint a time for and hold the hearing and may by order direct the Corporation to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Corporation ought to take in accordance with this Act and the regulations, and for such purposes the Tribunal may substitute its opinion for that of the Corporation.

That statutory duty, in my opinion, overrides the general rule against multiplicity of proceedings that was applied by the Tribunal.

I agree with the submission of counsel for the appellant that one of the purposes of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act is to provide a quick, summary procedure which can be pursued by the consumer at less expense than litigation in the courts. The decision of the Tribunal would defeat that purpose.

The importance of the warranties imposed on vendors by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act is demonstrated by s. 13(6) of the Act which provides that the warranties apply despite any agreement or waiver to the contrary and that they are in addition to any other rights the owner may have and to any other warranty agreed upon.

Section 13(1) of R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 892 under the Act provides that the Program is subrogated to all rights of recovery of a person to whom payment in respect of a claim has been made out of the guarantee fund under the Act. The Program may maintain an action in its own name against any person against whom the action lies in respect of such right of recovery.

Section 13(5) of the regulations requires any person who has been paid money out of the guarantee fund to notify the Program of any action that has been brought against any person who caused or contributed to the damages that resulted in the payment out of the guarantee fund.

These regulations obviously contemplate the prosecution of an action in respect of the defects leading to a claim after the Program has made payment out of the guarantee fund. The decision of the Tribunal requires a reversal in that order of proceedings. The Tribunal's decision to adjourn its hearing was a discretionary one, and should not be interfered with unless it was clearly wrong. After anxious consideration, and with the greatest respect for the Tribunal, I have decided that the decision was clearly wrong for the foregoing reasons.

An order will go setting aside the decision of the Tribunal and directing it to resume its hearing under s. 16(3) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and to deal with the matter on the merits without awaiting determination of the action brought by the condominium corporation.

The parties may make submissions in writing within 15 days as to the disposition and amount of costs.

Order accordingly.

Abdool et al. v. Anaheim Management Ltd. et al.

21 O.R. (3d) 453 Action No. 556/93

Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court, O'Brien, Moldaver and Flinn JJ. January 10, 1995

APPEAL from a judgment of Montgomery J., (1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 39, 16 C.P.C. (3d) 141 (Gen. Div.), refusing to certify the proceeding as a class action. Gavin MacKenzie and Jeremy J. De Melo, for appellants.

Robert J. Potts and Roger J. Horst, for respondent, Goldman, Sloan, Nash & Haber.

R.C. Heintzman and J.W. de Vries, for respondent, Deloitte and Touche.

H.S. Swartz, for Toronto-Dominion Bank and Adelaide Capital Corp.

O'BRIEN J.: -- This appeal is from the decision of Montgomery J. refusing to certify the proceeding as a class action pursuant to the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6. (The decision is now reported Abdool v. Anaheim Management Ltd. (1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 39, 16 C.P.C. (3d) 141.)

The Class Proceedings Act, 1992 is recent legislation and came into force January 1, 1993.

Montgomery J. dealt with another application to certify a class action during the same week that he heard this matter. That other matter is now reported: Bendall v. McGhan Medical Corp. (1993), 14 O.R. (3d) 734, 106 D.L.R. (4th) 339 (Gen. Div.).

This appeal raises the following issues:

- 1) Factors to be considered in a certification application.
- 2) The discretion available to a court asked to certify a proceeding.
- 3) The involvement of Securities Act (R.S.O. 1990, c. S.5) legislation on the transaction.

Facts

The plaintiffs were investor-owners in a tax-driven real estate project involving the purchase of units in a condominium in Mississauga. There were approximately 325 units in the building. Some were purchased individually and some by multiple owners.

The project was a financial failure. All plaintiffs lost money. Some have been sued and others have maintained their investment and thus avoided lawsuits against them, but seek to recover financial losses.

There are 150 plaintiffs named in the proceeding in which certification was sought. All were represented by one solicitor. Those plaintiffs estimate there are approximately 300 members in the proposed class.

One of the investors, and a named plaintiff, Irwin Lerson, has been proposed as the representative plaintiff under the Act.

The developers, Anaheim Management Ltd. and Anaheim Properties (Ontario) Limited ("Anaheim") have not defended the proceedings.

The real estate brokers involved in selling the units, Martin Capital Group and RLM Investments Incorporated (the "brokers"), did not appear before Montgomery J. and took no part in the application.

Most of the investors were directed to a pre-arranged source of financing provided by Central Guaranty Trust Company ("Central") through a combination of mortgage financing and promissory notes. That company encountered financial difficulties; there was a court-ordered winding up, and all mortgages, promissory notes and other financing documents have been assigned to Adelaide Capital ("Adelaide") and the Toronto Dominion Bank ("TDB"). Proceedings to collect on those documents have been commenced by those two corporations against many of the plaintiffs in these proceedings.

The solicitors for Anaheim were Goldman, Sloan.

An accounting firm, Deloitte & Touche ("Deloitte"), now known as Touche Ross, reviewed the financial forecasts Anaheim prepared for the project and wrote one letter in which they commented on that forecast.

The named investor-owners have commenced proceedings in their own names and now seek certification under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992. The proceedings are against the developers, the brokers, Central, Goldman, Sloan and Deloitte.

There are three categories of investor-owners: (i) those who still own units or interests in units and against whom no actions have been commenced.

(ii) those who are currently subject of proceedings commenced by Central's assignees on the mortgages, promissory notes and other financial documents.

(iii) those against whom judgments have been obtained in respect of the financial documents.

The investor-owners purchased the units on sales presentations which indicated the units were tax shelters, and for a payment of $1,000 they would eventually acquire title to the units. The total sales price of each unit was $161,450. It is alleged that the sales presentation was that the mortgage and financing charges would be offset by income to be received from the luxury condominium units. The investor-owners would not occupy the units and all would be rented from a rental pool to be managed by the developer. The developer would manage the condominium and guaranteed rental payments for a period of time.

The investor-owners were told they could only be permitted to make the investment if approved by Central. This involved an investigation of their assets and income.

The project was not successful. The rental income was insufficient to meet expenses and the investors were called upon to meet the financial obligations they had undertaken in the mortgages, promissory notes and other financial documents signed by them.

The essence of the investors' claim is that there were misrepresentations as to the financial arrangements and the financial projections. They allege various relationships existed among all defendants, including those of principal and agent, partnership, joint venture and syndicate.

There are also allegations of breach of fiduciary duties, breach of the Securities Act and an allegation of solicitor-client relationship as between the investors and solicitors acting for the developers.

The relief claimed includes general, exemplary and punitive damages, rescission of the contracts and financial documents, including mortgages and promissory notes, and a stay of all proceedings against them.

Each of the named plaintiffs asserts a claim for $300,000 for general damages.

The Decision Appealed From

(a) As it related to the solicitors

Montgomery J. held the claims against the solicitors depended on specific, individual facts including questions of whether any representations had been made to the investors or relied upon by them.

(b) As it related to Capital

He held the pleadings failed to disclose any cause of action as against Capital. He related the application for certification to an application under rule 21.01(1)(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which is an application to strike a pleading as disclosing no cause of action, and to rule 25.06(1) relating to minimum disclosure required in pleadings. He noted plaintiffs' counsel declined his invitation to adjourn the application to amend and expand pleadings and concluded the pleadings failed to show any connection between investors and Central which permitted the loans to be attacked.

(c) As it related to Deloitte

He concluded each investor's case against that company rested upon individual reliance on alleged misrepresentations which were contained in a single letter. He held the claims, as pleaded, did not raise common issues, and procedural fairness to Deloitte required individual discovery and production of the plaintiffs. He also held the class proceeding was not the most effective way of disposing of the action.

In his reasons Montgomery J. also indicated Lerson, the proposed representative plaintiff, would not fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class. He gave no specific reasons for that conclusion.

Consideration of Issues Raised

(1) Factors to be considered in certification Those factors specifically mandated in the Act are outlined in ss. 5 and 6 as follows:

5(1) The court shall certify a class proceeding on a motion under section 2, 3 or 4 if,

(a) the pleadings or the notice of application discloses a cause of action;

(b) there is an identifiable class of two or more persons that would be represented by the representative plaintiff or defendant;

(c) the claims or defences of the class members raise common issues;

(d) a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues; and

(e) there is a representative plaintiff or defendant who,

(i) would fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class,

(ii) has produced a plan for the proceeding that sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the class and of notifying class members of the proceeding, and

(iii) does not have, on the common issues for the class, an interest in conflict with the interests of other class members.

(2) Despite subsection (1), where a class includes a subclass whose members have claims or defences that raise common issues not shared by all the class members, so that, in the opinion of the court, the protection of the interests of subclass members requires that they be separately represented, the court shall not certify the class proceeding unless there is a representative plaintiff or defendant who,

(a) would fairly and adequately represent the interests of the subclass;

(b) has produced a plan for the proceeding that sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the subclass and of notifying subclass members of the proceeding; and

(c) does not have, on the common issues for the subclass, an interest in conflict with the interests of other subclass members.

(3) Each party to a motion for certification shall, on an affidavit filed for use on the motion, provide the party's best information on the number of members in the class.

(4) The court may adjourn the motion for certification to permit the parties to amend their materials or pleadings or to permit further evidence.

(5) An order certifying a class proceeding is not a determination of the merits of the proceeding.

(6) The court shall not refuse to certify a proceeding as a class proceeding solely on any of the following grounds:

1. The relief claimed includes a claim for damages that would require individual assessment after determination of the common issues.

2. The relief claimed relates to separate contracts involving different class members.

3. Different remedies are sought for different class members.

4. The number of class members or the identity of each class member is not known.

5. The class includes a subclass whose members have claims or defences that raise common issues not shared by all class members.

The Class Proceedings Act, 1992 was enacted after long legislative consideration. In 1982 the Ontario Law Reform Commission published a three-volume analysis dealing with the matter and made many suggestions for reform.

In 1990 the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform delivered its report containing numerous recommendations. That report was tabled in the legislature in the summer of 1990.

In argument, counsel referred to those reports. Those reports included investigation of legislation and decided cases in the United States.

Those studies are a useful background in considering the intent of the legislation although they are not binding.

It seems clear the three main objects of the class proceeding legislation are:

(i) judicial economy, or the efficient handling of potentially complex cases of mass wrongs;

(ii) improved access to the courts for those whose actions might not otherwise be asserted. This involved claims which might have merit but legal costs of proceeding were disproportionate to the amount of each claim and hence many plaintiffs would be unable to pursue their legal remedies;

(iii) modification of behaviour of actual or potential wrongdoers who might otherwise be tempted to ignore public obligations.

(2) Discretion in certification

Appellants' counsel, in argument, relied on the apparent mandatory wording of s. 5(1) of the Act, specifying "the court shall certify" if certain requirements are met. I am not persuaded the approach to be taken is that simple.

Section 35 of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 provides that the rules of court apply to class proceedings.

Rule 1.04(1) of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides:

1.04(1) These rules shall be liberally construed to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every civil proceeding on its merits.

I do not accept the submission that any complex, multiple-party lawsuit is entitled to certification merely because that is the "preferable procedure" for resolving common issues which may be involved in the litigation. In my view, some consideration must be given to individual issues involved in the litigation, the purposes of the Act, and the rights of the parties seeking, and opposing, certification.

In some cases, those rights may be best served by the normal court procedures involving production, discovery and cross-examination.

The court considering certification may consider alternative, or combinations of, remedies available under the rules. Some of these include:

-- intervention by non-parties pursuant to rule 13.01;

-- the appointment of a single judge to case manage and direct proceedings of two or more cases involving complicated issues pursuant to rule 37.15(1);

-- consolidation of cases under rule 6.01;

-- applications for interpretation of contracts or instruments under rule 14.04; -- determination of issues before trial by means of Rule 20 (summary judgment procedures), or Rules 21 and 22, which provide for determination of points of law, or special (or "test") cases. The latter procedure is usefully used when there are few facts in dispute or the facts can be agreed upon.

While s. 15 of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 provides for discovery rights, they are available only after discovery of the representative plaintiff, and with leave of the court.

Section 25 of the Act also provides for participation of individual class members but that is available only after the court has determined common issues. In effect, there is a bifurcated hearing with various procedures for further hearings, references or other procedures. These procedures are available only on court order or on consent and after determination of common issues.

While access to the courts is obviously a worthwhile aim of the Act, it is to be noted the Law Reform Report commented on the concern that frivolous claims might be advanced and defendants "blackmailed" into settling them because of potential legal costs.

Under the Act, once certification is granted, class plaintiffs face little, if any, exposure to legal costs. Contingency fees are permitted for plaintiffs' counsel and s. 31 of the Act provides for the court to exercise its discretion regarding costs, and indicates class members are not liable for those costs except with respect to the determination of their own individual interests.

The relative weight to be given common and individual issues is a vexing matter.

In the reported decision of Abdool, supra, Montgomery J. noted at p. 51:

The Class Proceedings Act, 1992 was designed to remove some of the barriers to class actions that existed before its enactment. It was not intended to be used in circumstances where the individual issues to be determined predominate those issues common to the proposed class.

For this reason a class proceeding is not the most effective mechanism for resolution of this action and cannot be certified.

In Bendall, supra, Montgomery J. considered some of the American cases and Rule 23 of the U.S. Federal Rules dealing with class actions. (The relevant portion of that rule is annexed at Sch. 1 to these reasons [see pp. 467-68 post].)

One of the elements enumerated as a prerequisite to certification as a class action under the U.S. Federal Rule is rule 23(a), a portion of which is:

The court finds that the question of law or fact common to the members of the class predominates over any question affecting only the individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods of the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

In the reported decision in Bendall, supra, at pp. 746-47, Montgomery noted:

While the American cases are helpful as a reflection of a 30-year history of class actions one must not lose sight of vital differences. Predominant issue is not a factor in our Act. It is critical under Federal Rule 23. The Ontario legislature had the benefit of a draft bill prepared by the Law Reform Commission after lengthy study and reflection on the American history of class actions. Ontario chose to emphasize the common issues.

(3) The Securities Act issues

The essence of this allegation is that Anaheim, Central and the brokers were "salesmen", "promoters" and "dealers" within the definition of sections of the Securities Act, the condominium sales were "trades" within the meaning of that Act, and a prospectus was normally required.

The plaintiffs allege those parties relied on the "sophisticated investor" exemption permitting sales of security interests greater than $150,000 which is contained in s. 72(1)(d) of the Act. They claim that reliance was a sham, was invalid, and a prospectus was required. They claim the failure to file rendered all debts incurred in the purchase invalid. Conclusions

(1) The Security Act Issue

That issue is not specifically mentioned in Montgomery J.'s decision. It was apparently not stressed during argument before him.

While advanced on this appeal, it was not strenuously argued.

The point was precisely dealt with in a subsequent decision of Ground J. in his decision in Bossé v. Mastercraft Group Inc.

The decision, as yet unreported, was released on May 6, 1994. In it, Ground J. dealt with a factual situation almost identical to that in this case. It is interesting to note the matter was dealt with under Rule 20 as a motion for summary judgment.

Ground J. held the financial institutions involved could not be "issuers" or "promoters" within the meaning of the Securities Act and even if there had been a failure to comply with that Act the validity or enforceability of the loan transactions would not be affected. He granted summary judgment against the investors involved and dismissed their counterclaims against the financial institutions involved.

In my view, the Security Act issue raised in this proceeding is completely answered in the decision of Ground J. (The decision is now under appeal.) I rely on that decision and dismiss that ground of appeal.

(2) Factors considered

In dealing with this issue, I have outlined above my views as to the general approach which should be taken.

In considering the goals of the Act, Montgomery J. noted at p. 47 that the total claims of all plaintiffs was approximately $100 million and that fact eliminated the goal of the Act in permitting advancement of small individual claims.

With respect, I think that statement is in error. The goal is to permit advancement of small claims where legal costs make it uneconomic to advance them. The total amount of the claims is not the consideration. Here, however, each individual claim advanced in the pleadings was $300,000, plus claims for exemplary and punitive damages and claims for rescission.

The correct approach would have been to indicate that as each plaintiff had a very substantial claim the goal of the Act in advancing small claims was not met by the individual plaintiffs.

Montgomery J. also indicated at p. 48 that Lerson did not fairly and adequately represent the interest of the class sought to be certified. He did not give specific reasons for that conclusion other than not being satisfied on the evidence.

The evidence, which he carefully outlined in his decisions, indicated Lerson had expertise as an accountant with a tax specialty. He was familiar with tax shelters and had business interests in real estate. He had little involvement in dealing with the developer or the brokers and made the purchase largely on the recommendation of his business partner. He had no contact with the developer's lawyers, but had his own lawyer, whom he did not consult.

The evidence referred to indicated Lerson probably did not have the "typical involvement" in the purchases that other plaintiffs had.

In my view the "representative plaintiff" referred to in s. 5(1)(e) need not have typical experience with other plaintiffs. I think it sufficient that he has no conflict of interest and is shown to be an individual who will fairly and adequately advance the class claims.

I do not believe the decision turned on the matters of the total amounts of claims involved or in the personal experience of the proposed representative plaintiff, Lerson.

(3) The proceedings against Capital

In his decision, Montgomery J. held the pleadings did not disclose a cause of action against that defendant.

He approached that question relying on the approach to be taken under rules 21.01(1)(b) and 25.06(1).

That was a logical approach to take. He carefully reviewed the pleadings. I am not persuaded there was an error in approach or in the conclusion reached.

He further held each potential class member would have unique circumstances for entering into the investment and would have to be individually examined for documentary and oral discovery. He found a class action was not "preferable".

While he did not specifically say so, the unique circumstances would indicate there were problems in establishing common issues.

(4) Proceedings against Goldmans

In considering the potential claim against Goldmans, Montgomery J. noted the individual issues regarding each plaintiff would be determinative of liability. I believe he was correct in that conclusion. Again, there were no common issues.

I conclude Montgomery J. was correct in his determination of the issues as against Capital and Goldmans. That, in itself, is probably sufficient to dispose of this appeal.

In argument appellants' counsel was referred to s. 7 of the Act, which is as follows:

7. Where the court refuses to certify a proceeding as a class proceeding, the court may permit the proceeding to continue as one or more proceedings between different parties and, for the purpose, the court may,

- (a) order the addition, deletion or substitution of parties;
- (b) order the amendment of the pleadings or notice of application; and
- (c) make any further order that it considers appropriate.

He candidly conceded that an application for certification was probably an "all or nothing" matter and if a plaintiff's application failed as against any of the potential defendants the certification should probably be refused.

Pursuant to s. 7, when certification is refused, the court may then make various orders for the conduct of the non-certified proceedings.

Assuming the "all or nothing" approach to certification is correct, the conclusions that the pleadings failed to disclose a cause of action against Capital and that there were no common issues as against Goldmans would be a valid reason for denying certification of the proceedings against all defendants.

(5) The proceedings against Deloitte

In the event the above assumption is incorrect, I deal with the claim as against Deloitte.

In considering that claim, Montgomery J. explored the case authority dealing with misrepresentation. He referred to the decision in Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1964] A.C. 465, [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.). That decision indicates in an action for misrepresentation a plaintiff must prove that a representation was negligently made and the plaintiff reasonably relied upon it. He concluded reliance seemed to be an essential element of that cause of action.

He then made the statements referred to above that "a class proceeding was not the most effective mechanism for resolution of the action and that individual issues appeared to predominate" (emphasis added).

While I agree with Montgomery J.'s conclusion as to misrepresentation, I do not agree that an action for misrepresentation cannot be subject to certification as a class proceeding.

In this case there are common issues involving the question of whether the single letter was a misrepresentation. If so, there was a common issue as to whether it was negligently made and, finally, a common issue as to the effect of a disclaimer contained in that letter.

The issue of reliance of any misrepresentation did raise a very significant individual issue which required determination.

The matter of certification of a class proceeding where misrepresentation was involved is considered in Peppiatt v. Nicol (1993), 16 O.R. (3d) 133, 20 C.P.C. (3d) 272 (Ont. Gen. Div.), per Chilcott J.

A class action was certified in that proceeding. There, the alleged misrepresentations involved statements made in connection with the sale of memberships in a golf club to be constructed.

Chilcott J. rejected submissions that allegations of misrepresentation precluded certification.

In that case, it appears the alleged misrepresentations were contained in sales material which had limited distribution. It does not appear the issue of individual reliance was raised.

In my view, questions relating to misrepresentation could be the subject of certification of a class proceeding in some cases.

The issue, then, would be whether class proceedings would be a "preferable procedure" for dealing with those common issues under s. 5(1)(d) of the Act.

I conclude in this proceeding they would not.

I believe the preferable approach would be to consider the matter with a view to the aims of the legislation, the requirements contained in ss. 5 and 6 of the Act, and the relative merits of other procedures available under the rules for dealing with the common issues raised. The court should also consider the relative importance of common and individual issues as one of the factors in determining whether to certify or not.

On that approach, while I disagree with some of his reasoning, I agree with the result reached by Montgomery J. that class proceedings should not be certified as against Deloitte.

As this matter involves the interpretation of recent legislation I make no order as to costs.

SCHEDULE 1

Rule 23 of the U.S. Federal Rules

23(a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

(b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

(1) the prosecution of separate actions by or against individual members of the class would create a risk of

(A) inconsistent or varying adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would establish incompatible standards of conduct for the party opposing the class, or

(B) adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would as a practical matter be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the adjudications or substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests; or

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (c) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

MOLDAVER J. (concurring): -- The plaintiffs appeal from the decision of the Honourable Mr. Justice Montgomery dated August 9, 1993 (now reported at (1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 39, 16 C.P.C. (3d) 142) dismissing their motion for, inter alia, an order certifying the action as a class proceeding pursuant to the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6 (the "Act").

My colleague O'Brien J. has set out the facts giving rise to the application for certification. He has also reproduced in full many of the relevant sections of the Act. There is no need to replicate his work. However, for the purposes of these separate reasons, I have considered some additional facts and sections of the Act.

Very briefly, the action arises from the sale and financing of units in a condominium project consisting of approximately 325 units. The plaintiffs are individuals who purchased units as tax-sheltered investments. The defendants are the developer and owner of the project (Anaheim), the developer's solicitors (Goldman, Sloan), the assignees of the trust company (Guaranty Trust) that financed most of the purchases (Toronto Dominion Bank and Adelaide Capital), the real estate brokers who solicited the purchases (Martin Capital Group Inc. and RLM Investments), and the accounting firm that reviewed the financial forecast distributed to the plaintiff investors (Deloitte Touche). The action is based on allegations of misrepresentation, negligence and breaches of statutory and fiduciary duties allegedly owed by the various defendants to the proposed class.

Analysis

Although we have been invited to determine many of the issues and uncertainties surrounding the proper interpretation of the Act, and in particular, ss. 5(1) and 6, I think it unwise to do so except where necessary to resolve what I believe to be the central issue before us. I would define that issue as follows: Having regard to the particular facts and circumstances of this case, did Montgomery J. err in concluding that a class proceeding would not be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues.

Having framed the matter that way, let me say at the outset that I have not been persuaded that Montgomery J. erred in refusing to certify the action. Instead, for reasons which will become apparent, I am satisfied that he arrived at the correct result. However, I would not wish to be taken as necessarily agreeing with all of the reasons which he advanced in support of his conclusion.

I propose to deal briefly with several concerns arising from Montgomery J.'s reasons before turning to the central issue. For the sake of simplicity, I would refer to these concerns as "secondary issues".

Secondary Issues

Dealing first with the defendants Adelaide Capital Corporation ("Adelaide") and Toronto Dominion Bank ("Toronto Dominion"), I have difficulty accepting Montgomery J.'s conclusion that the pleadings revealed no cause of action against these defendants.

The principles to be applied when considering whether pleadings support a legal cause of action are as follows:

- (a) All allegations of fact, unless patently ridiculous or incapable of proof, must be accepted as proved;
- (b) The defendant, in order to succeed, must show that it is plain and obvious beyond doubt that the plaintiffs could not succeed;
- (c) The novelty of the cause of action will not militate against the plaintiffs; and
- (d) The statement of claim must be read as generously as possible, with a view to accommodating any inadequacies in the form of the allegations due to drafting deficiencies.

In concluding that no cause of action had been made out against Adelaide or Toronto Dominion, Montgomery J. stated at pp. 47-48:

There is no allegation of misrepresentation by the broker. The plaintiffs allege that the Trust Company was part of a partnership syndicate or joint venture for purposes of selling the investments in the project. They further allege an agency relationship between the vendor promoter and the Trust Company.

The plaintiffs allege a principal-and-agent relationship between the Brokers and other defendants and claimed the Brokers were agents of the Trust Company. However, there is no allegation that the Brokers made any misrepresentation. No material facts have been stated to support the basis of any type of relationship between the trust company and other defendants.

With respect, having particular regard to the first and fourth principles applicable to pleadings, I am satisfied that a generous reading of the claim as a whole supports the conclusion that the broker did make material misrepresentations. In this regard, I think that when paras. 18 through 23 of the claim under the heading "Representations" are read together with paragraphs 24-26 under the heading "Complaints re Performance", various misrepresentations are brought home to the brokers [See Appendix "A" at end of document.]

As to the relationship between Central Guaranty Trust and the defendants, in my opinion, material facts supportive of the relationships alleged have been set out in paras. 27 and 28 of the claim. In particular, as regards the brokers, para. 28 states that the brokers were agents of the defendants both individually and collectively and that an agency agreement to this effect was entered into between the various parties prior to the solicitation of the class plaintiffs.

For the purposes of these reasons, it is not necessary to decide whether the pleadings raised additional causes of action against Adelaide and Toronto Dominion. I have engaged in the foregoing analysis simply to point out that I am not persuaded that Adelaide and Toronto Dominion could escape certification on the grounds that the pleadings did not disclose a cause of action against them.

Montgomery J. also refused certification because he did not consider that Mr. Lerson, the proposed representative plaintiff, could fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class, as required by s. 5(1)(e)(i) of the Act. Montgomery J. gave no reasons for so concluding. I am not at all certain that he was correct in holding that Mr. Lerson would not fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class. Indeed, I find the reasoning of my colleague O'Brien J. persuasive on this issue. However, I do not consider it necessary to finally resolve this matter.

As regards the defendants Goldman, Sloan, Montgomery J. concluded that certification should be refused because (a) there were no common issues to be determined as required by s. 5(1)(c) of the Act and (b) a class proceeding was not the preferable procedural path to follow as required by s. 5(1)(d) of the Act.

While I will have more to say about the s. 5(1)(d) considerations, I would not wish to be taken as accepting Montgomery J.'s view that the claim raised no common issues against Goldman, Sloan. It may well be that the pleadings set out in para. 32 did just that [See Appendix "B" at end of document.]

Finally, with respect to the defendant Deloitte Touche, Montgomery J. was of the view that no common issues had been raised and further, that the Act "was designed to remove some of the barriers to class actions that existed before its enactment. It was not intended to be used in circumstances where the individual issues to be determined predominate those issues common to the proposed class" (p. 51) (emphasis added).

With respect, I disagree that the pleadings raised no common issues against Deloitte Touche. In my view, they raised two common issues:

- (1) Did the Deloitte letter amount to a misrepresentation and if so, was it made negligently? and
- (2) If the answer to question 1 is "yes", was Deloitte entitled to rely upon the disclaimer clause contained within that letter?

Likewise, I must respectfully disagree with Montgomery J.'s statement that the Act was not intended to be used in circumstances where the individual issues to be determined could be said to predominate the common issues. As will be seen, while I am of the view that individual issues ought not to be completely ignored when considering whether a "class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues" as required under s. 5(1)(d) of the Act, I cannot accept that the legislature intended to incorporate the predominate issue test into the Act.

I now propose to set out my reasons for concluding that Montgomery J. did not err in refusing certification in this case.

Pivotal Issue: Analysis and Conclusions

In his able argument on behalf of the appellants, Mr. McKenzie submitted that it was proper for the court, when considering the requirements of s. 5(1)(d) of the Act, to take into account and weigh the three major goals of class actions. It will be recalled that s. 5(1)(d) requires that "a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues".

The three goals of the Act have been neatly summarized by Mr. McKenzie at p. 34 of his factum as follows:

- (1) Access to Justice -- permitting the advancement of meritorious claims which have previously been uneconomical to pursue because the damages for each individual plaintiff are too small for each claimant to recover through usual court procedures.
- (2) Judicial Economy -- resolving a large number of disputes in which there are common issues of fact or law within a single proceeding, avoiding inconsistent results, and preventing the court's resources from being overwhelmed by a multiplicity of proceedings.
- (3) Modification of Behaviour -- modifying the defendants' behaviour so as to inhibit misconduct by those who might ignore their obligations to the public.

I agree with Mr. MacKenzie's statement of the goals, save for his use of the word "meritorious" under the heading "Access to Justice". I am not at all certain that on a motion for certification, the moving parties must show a "meritorious" claim. Indeed, s. 5(5) of the Act would suggest the contrary. It reads:

5(5) An order certifying a class proceeding is not a determination of the merits of the proceeding.

Apart from that, accepting as I do that Mr. MacKenzie is correct in his submission that the three major goals of the Act should be considered and weighed when determining whether the requirements of s. 5(1)(d) of the Act have been met, my analysis of these factors has caused me to conclude that, on balance, the case at hand is not a proper one for certification.

Dealing first with the goal of "Access to Justice", there is nothing in the record which would even remotely suggest that it would be economically unfeasible for the plaintiffs to pursue their individual claims. Indeed, on the face of the record, the contrary would appear to be the case.

Each plaintiff has sought as against each defendant general and special damages not to exceed $300,000. Each plaintiff has also sought punitive or exemplary damages against each defendant. Finally, as against Adelaide and Toronto Dominion, each plaintiff has sought rescission of contract, which, if successful, would relieve against individual liability for amounts well in excess of $150,000.

In view of this, and in the absence of some evidence which would suggest that the cost of litigation would be prohibitive to the individuals, irrespective of the sizeable dollar figures at stake, I am not at all satisfied that, absent certification, these plaintiffs or any of them would be denied access to the justice system.

In my view, the legitimate purpose of enabling those members of the public to gain access to the justice system, which, but for certification, would otherwise be unfeasible, cannot be overstated. By the same token, great care must be taken to ensure that certification is truly necessary to give effect to this goal.

As a rule, certification should have as its root a number of individual claims which would otherwise be economically unfeasible to pursue. While not necessarily fatal to an order for certification, the absence of this important underpinning will certainly weigh in the balance against certification.

I propose next to deal with the matter of "Judicial Economy". In assessing this goal, I am of the view that s. 5(1)(d) must be read together with s. 6 of the Act, which reads:

6. The court shall not refuse to certify a proceeding as a class proceeding solely on any of the following grounds:
 1. The relief claimed includes a claim for damages that would require individual assessment after determination of the common issues.
 2. The relief claimed relates to separate contracts involving different class members.
 3. Different remedies are sought for different class members.
 4. A number of class members or the identity of each class member is not known.

5. The class includes a subclass whose members have claims or defences that raise common issues not shared by all class members.

It will be recalled that earlier in these reasons, I concluded that it was not the intention of the legislature to incorporate a "predominate" issue test into s. 5(1)(d) of the Act. Neither, however, did the legislature intend that individual issues should be completely ignored. Had that been the case, there would have been no need for s. 6 of the Act, which, on its face, clearly relates to five separate individual issues, several of which may be said to impact on the question of judicial economy.

Section 6 of the Act directs that the court, in coming to its decision to certify or not, shall not refuse certification solely if any one of the five delineated grounds is found to exist. Implicit in this, however, is the recognition that a court is entitled to consider the grounds referred to in s. 6 and where two or more of them are found to exist, the cumulative effect of these may legitimately be factored into the s. 5(1)(d) equation.

That being so, consideration of those factors in the context of this case reveals the existence of four of the five grounds, namely:

(a) The relief claimed includes a claim for damages that would require individual assessment after determination of the common issues;

(b) The relief claimed relates to separate contracts involving different class members;

(c) Different remedies are sought for different class members;

(d) The class includes a sub-class whose members have claims or defences that raise common issues not shared by all class members.

Again, while not necessarily fatal to certification, the presence of four out of five of the grounds referred to in s. 6 of the Act weighs in the balance against certification.

In the context of the question -- how cost efficient will it be to resolve the common issues -- I think it necessary to look at the case as a whole but with particular emphasis on at least two important features, namely:

(1) If the action is certified, how likely is it that the court will feel constrained, in the interests of justice, to allow for discovery of most, if not all, of the individual plaintiffs, pursuant to s. 15(2) of the Act, after the representative party has been discovered? And
(2) Where, as here, a number of individual plaintiffs seek certification, is the case such that a determination of the class issue or issues will essentially resolve once and for all the question of liability of the various parties, irrespective of which side wins or loses, or is it such that even if the plaintiffs succeed on any one or more of the common issues, a series of trials on individual issues will, of necessity, be required to finally determine the question of liability?

Returning to the first of these considerations, it is important to note that the plaintiffs have pleaded breach of fiduciary duty as against each of the defendants. From my review of the record, it is apparent that save and except for a handful of plaintiffs who apparently retained the firm of Goldman, Sloan, in all other instances, as against the various defendants, including Goldman, Sloan, the existence of a fiduciary relationship, if any, will be dependent upon the nature of the particular dealings and relationship which the individuals may have had with the respective defendants.

That being the case, I fail to see how, if the action was certified, the "common fiduciary obligation issue" could possibly be determined absent discovery of just about every single plaintiff. Such a state of affairs could hardly be said to support the judicial economy goal.

As for the second consideration, it would appear that if some or all of the common issues are determined in favour of the plaintiffs, this would be but the beginning, not the end, of the liability inquiry. Thereafter, separate trials would be required in connection with each of the plaintiffs to determine the matter of detrimental reliance, the absence of which each and every defendant will seek to rely upon.

Again, looked at from this perspective, the judicial economy goal which would otherwise favour certification is far from evident.

Nonetheless, when considering the matter of judicial economy, it seems apparent that the court should also consider the alternatives to certification, which in this case, would be (a) a whole series of separate actions; or (b) the joining together of the separate actions into one large action.

Either of these alternatives would of course mean that each defendant could seek to discover the individual plaintiffs. While the prospects of this would seem to tell against judicial economy, I have, earlier in these reasons, attempted to show how individual discoveries would most likely be required even in the event of certification, given the fiduciary duty component of the pleadings.

Beyond that, given the significance of the particular facts and circumstances which may have caused the individual plaintiffs to purchase the condominium units and bearing in mind the common thread of detrimental reliance which runs through every case, while multiple discoveries might impact negatively on judicial economy in the short run, this could prove otherwise in the long run.

While it may be somewhat unfair to use Mr. Lerson, the proposed representative of the plaintiff, as an example, I do so only to explain the point. As the record indicates, Mr. Lerson was cross-examined on the affidavit he prepared in support of certification. As a result of his testimony (and without wishing to be seen as prejudging the matter) it would appear that Mr. Lerson's task of establishing detrimental reliance will be a most difficult one.

It is impossible to know how many other plaintiffs will fall into this category. However, I strongly expect that after discoveries, there will be a marked reduction in the number of claims left outstanding. By that, I have in mind that some of the plaintiffs may seek to abandon their claims; others may be forced to do so following upon motions for summary judgment; still others may choose to monitor a particular case similar to their own through discoveries and/or summary judgment proceedings before deciding whether or not to continue.

By these means, I am confident that judicial economy will more than likely come out ahead if certification is refused.

For all of these reasons, I have not been persuaded, on balance, that a resolution of the common issues following upon certification would lead to greater judicial economy.

That then leaves the third goal namely, "Behaviour Modification."

I think it fair to say that Mr. MacKenzie did not stress this goal in his submissions. That aside, I agree with the submissions made by the defendants that since the type of transaction giving rise to the various claims is now governed by the provisions of the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.5 (as amended), this alone would suffice to modify the future behaviour of the defendants. What's more, if some or all of the actions are continued on an individual basis and the claims are found to be meritorious, the court will be in a position to modify the behaviour of the defendants in its award of damages.

For all of these reasons, the plaintiffs have failed to meet their onus of establishing, in accordance with s. 5(1)(d) of the Act, that a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues. That being the case, this appeal must be dismissed.

For the reasons given by O'Brien J., I too am of the view that there should be no order as to costs.

APPENDIX "A"

EXCERPT FROM THE STATEMENT OF CLAIM Representations

18. The essential ingredients of the investment were represented by the Broker and the Vendor-Promoter as follows:

- 1) The only cash commitment that each Class Plaintiff would have to make, because of the way in which the deal was structured, was $1000.00 per Unit;
- 2) That each Class Plaintiff would only be permitted to make the investment if approved by Central Guaranty Trust;
- 3) That it was a condition of the purchase and of financing by the Trust Company that the units be rented as part of a rental pool operated by the Anaheim Group, and not be lived in as a residential unit, which would together provide the funds with which to pay the financing charges to be paid to the Trust Company.
- 4) That no Class Plaintiff would have to pay either the mortgages or promissory notes, but that they would be paid from the rents obtained from the rental pools;
- 5) That Anaheim would guarantee the payment of rents, for a period of time, and would furthermore subsidize the interest which would be payable to the Trust Company so that the interest charges to the Investor-Owners would be largely covered by the income from the property.

19. The Class Plaintiffs were repeatedly advised by the Vendor-Promoter and the Broker that the unit was a "tax shelter investment", and they relied on the confidential offering memorandum as well as on the verbal misrepresentations made to them.

20. The Class Plaintiffs relied on the representations of the Vendor-Promoter and the Brokers concerning the cost to them of purchasing the Unit, including the cost of any financing, and agreed to do so only on the basis of making a one thousand dollar down payment per Unit, and upon being advised that the Unit could be maintained for only nominal carrying costs.

21. In particular, the Vendor-Promoter advised them in written representations and through the Brokers that it had an arrangement in place with its financial institution, the Trust Company, whereby the effective mortgage interest rate charged to them would be only 8.5% for the first three years based on a "services agreement" between these two Defendants and the intended investors. They were advised that they only had to make a thousand dollar down-payment, and that this special financing arrangement would greatly reduce the size of the mortgage payments.

22. The Class Plaintiffs was further advised that the Vendor- Promoter's property management company, Anaheim Properties (Ontario) Limited, and later Orange Properties Ltd., would arrange for the rental of the unit on their behalf, so that the effective cost to them including mortgage payments and maintenance fees would be extremely nominal each month.

23. The Class Plaintiffs state that it was very clear to the Brokers and the Vendor-Promoter that they only induced to purchase the Unit as a tax shelter and investment on the terms that they had been led to believe would be given, and that they could not afford the investment unless these arrangements were in place. Complaints re Performance

24. Material misrepresentations were made repeatedly to the Plaintiffs, and included a confidential document, entitled: "Anaheim Towers -- West Tower, Notes and Assumptions to Cash Projections, dated February 2, 1987. Specifics of these misrepresentations are set out below:

- 1) The financing provided by the Trust Company was at a much higher interest rate than those the Class Plaintiffs were led to believe that they would be committed to;
- 2) The "fixation" of these rates was done some two years after the signing of the agreements by the Investor- Owners to purchase Units in the Project, and was in any event at rates higher than those which could have been obtained had either Anaheim or the Trust Company acted in a commercially prudent manner;
- 3) The guarantee period of Anaheim commenced and was running for six months while the Units were deemed "habitable" but were not in fact rentable, due to ongoing construction;
- 4) Anaheim failed to maintain the interest rates at the ceiling which was promised, and as a consequence the full cost of the financing charges have fallen onto the Class Plaintiffs to pay;
- 5) The relationship between the various Defendants by Counterclaim was such that a partnership syndicate or joint venture was formed in the selling of investments in the Project, or alternatively the relationship between the various Defendants not made distinct, so that it was the Class Plaintiff's reasonable belief that a partnership, syndicate or joint venture was formed in the selling of investments in the Project, and neither the actual relationships nor the actual intended remuneration and fees which were to be obtained by the Defendants were disclosed at the time Class Plaintiffs made their commitment to invest in the Project;

6) The Units were rented for the amounts which had been promised to each Investor-Owner after completion, in technical compliance with the agreements, but the renters of the Units were given an initial two months free rent;

7) The projections of rental income were unrealistic because while the Project had been sold as an investment to the Class Plaintiffs as a luxury condominium, the class of property that was finally built was not luxury, and as a result the failure to obtain the promised levels of rental income have meant that the Class Plaintiffs have had to make up the deficiency between the rental incomes and the financing charges.

8) The projections of rental income were in any event unrealistic, and as a result the failure to obtain the promised levels of rental income have meant that the Investor-Owners have had to make up the deficiency between the rental incomes and the financing charges.

As a result of these misrepresentations, and as the plaintiff knew or ought to have known that the Class Plaintiffs would rely on these misrepresentations, the Class Plaintiffs were induced into entering a contract with the plaintiff. The Defendants are therefore not entitled in equity to rely on the contract so entered into.

APPENDIX "B"

EXCERPT FROM THE STATEMENT OF CLAIM

32. The Class Plaintiffs state and the fact is that a relationship of solicitor and client existed between them and the law firm of Goldman, Sloan, Nash & Haber (the "Firm") for the following reasons:

1) The Firm was retained in respect of the closing of each and every closing of the purchase of the Units, to act for both the vendor and purchaser. The Class Plaintiffs state that the Firm was in a conflict of duty and interest in acting for the purchasers, being the Class Plaintiffs, and the Vendor-Promoter and the Trust Company, and further failed to advise the Class Plaintiffs notwithstanding their assumption of the responsibility of solicitor in respect of this transaction to the Class Plaintiffs.

2) Alternatively, due to the failure to adequately meet disclosure requirements of the Vendor-Promoter, and the other misrepresentations of the Vendor-Promoter through the Broker, the Firm had such knowledge of the circumstances of the transaction, and in particular that the Class Plaintiffs had not been given the opportunity to obtain independent advice due to the failure to provide disclosure in a timely manner, that the Firm became a trustee de son tort.

3) In the further alternative, the Firm advised the Class Plaintiffs during the course of completing the transaction as to their rights and obligations under the agreements which had been signed, and thereby assumed the role of solicitor to each and all of the Class Plaintiffs.

FLINN J. (concurring in the result): -- This appeal is from the decision of Montgomery J. [(1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 39, 16 C.P.C. (3d) 142] refusing to certify the proceeding as a class action.

I have had the benefit of reading the reasons of my colleagues O'Brien J. and Moldaver J. I agree that the appeal ought to be dismissed without costs. I adopt the reasons of each of them save that I respectfully disagree with the views of Moldaver J. and his comments as to the cause of action against Adelaide Capital Corporation and Toronto-Dominion Bank in what he describes as "secondary issues". However, I incline to his views that the statement of claim raises common issues against the defendant Goldman, Sloan, Nash & Haber. I do not find those two observations material to the result.

Appeal dismissed.

INTRODUCTION

Although this litigation is complex, involving a claim, cross-claim, third party claim and fourth party claim, at the heart of the litigation are two crucial issues. The first is whether the acknowledged rule that the terms of letters of credit, which are important financial documents in the domestic and international banking communities, must be strictly complied with should be loosened in situations where important governmental policies and programs are alleged to collide with the rule. The second issue is whether the reasoning and decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Canadian National Railway Co. v. Norsk Pacific Steamship Co., [1992] 1 S.C.R. 1021, 91 D.L.R. (4th) 289, the leading case dealing with recovery in negligence for economic loss, should be applied to protect a guarantor of a letter of credit who suffers financial loss when the holder of the letter of credit uses it for purposes not authorized by its terms.

A. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Unfortunately, the factual background in this case is quite complicated. Nevertheless, an understanding of the relationships among the various parties and the chronology of events is crucial to the resolution of the two principal legal issues set out above and related issues. In an attempt to promote that understanding, I propose to divide this part of the judgment into two parts -- the parties and their dealings, and a summary of the litigation itself.

(1) Factual Background -- The Parties and Their Dealings

The defendant, Ontario New Home Warranty Program ("ONHWP") is the non-profit corporation designated to administer the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 (the "Act"). The Act establishes a consumer protection scheme for the purchasers and owners of new homes, including condominiums. Under the Act, every vendor or builder of a new home must be registered and must satisfy certain financial, technical and ethical criteria. Vendors are also required to provide certain statutory warranties to home buyers under the Act. ONHWP administers a compensation plan for purchasers or owners of new homes who lose their deposits or who have breach of warranty claims. The plan is funded by builders, not the Government of Ontario.

The third party, Real Estate Investment Counsel Ltd. ("REIC"), is a builder that registered under the Act to build a condominium complex in Aurora, known as the Anderson Place Townhouse Development. In support of its application for registration, REIC submitted an irrevocable letter of credit dated October 2, 1987, an executed vendor/builder agreement dated November 30, 1987, and a guarantee from two of the principals of REIC, William Salmon and Bruce Stewart, dated December 21, 1987.

The letter of credit, which was required by ONHWP, was issued by the third party, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce ("CIBC") to ONHWP in the amount of $300,000 as security for deposits. It was an express condition of the letter of credit that if ONHWP wished to draw upon the credit, it must certify that the moneys were to be used pursuant to the obligations incurred by ONHWP in respect of deposit receipts from Anderson Place. The letter of credit permitted partial draws.

The plaintiff, Howard Robinson ("Robinson"), was the holder of a second mortgage against Anderson Place. On October 6, 1987 he gave CIBC a guarantee for REIC's liabilities to CIBC up to the sum of $300,000. Robinson was a valued customer of CIBC. Neither REIC nor its principals Salmon and Stewart had a close relationship with CIBC. It is clear that CIBC was willing to issue the letter of credit because of Robinson's guarantee behind it.

The registration of REIC was granted on January 19, 1988. Sometime that year construction began on Anderson Place. On December 28, 1989 the condominium's declaration and description were registered. This marked the point at which the vendor's exposure for deposit claims ceased. Deposit claims relate to a purchaser's financial loss caused by the vendor's failure to perform the agreement of purchase and sale. In fact, no deposit claims were made against the Anderson Place project.

December 28, 1989 also marks the point at which the vendor's exposure for warranty claims commences. Under the Act, a vendor must warrant that the homes or condominium units it has sold are constructed in a workmanlike manner and are free from defects in material, are fit for habitation, are constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code, and are free of major structural defects.

In a letter dated April 20, 1990, the solicitors for REIC advised ONHWP that the project had been registered and that the sales of a majority of the units had been finalized. They requested the release of the letter of credit provided as security for the deposits. On June 20, 1990 ONHWP responded that there were unrectified construction deficiencies and that, therefore, it would release the letter of credit only if it was replaced by an irrevocable letter of credit in the amount of $75,000 to cover warranty claims.

ONHWP took this position because, as early as the autumn of 1989, it had begun receiving written claims from unit owners in Anderson Place for breaches of warranty. ONHWP held several condominium inspections and conciliation meetings, which it stated REIC did not attend. On September 27, 1990 it informed CIBC that it had determined that the builder/vendor REIC was not living up to its obligations and therefore it was not prepared to return the letter of credit.

In December 1990 the Board of Directors of Anderson Place submitted a technical audit detailing numerous warrantable defects in the common elements of the condominium, along with written claims for breaches of warranty pertaining to the common elements.

At this juncture in the chronology, Robinson re-entered the picture. In June 1991 his solicitor telephoned ONHWP and informed it that Robinson was the guarantor of the letter of credit. The solicitor requested that it be released because the time for deposit claims had expired without any claims being made. In effect, Robinson was taking the position that the raison d'être for both the letter of credit and his personal guarantee had disappeared; hence his exposure under the guarantee should disappear as well.

A solicitor in ONHWP's legal department informed Robinson's solicitor that the matter was not free from doubt, that there was a similar case before the courts, and that ONHWP wanted to await a decision in that case before deciding what to do about the letter of credit in this case. However, ONHWP's solicitor also promised to review the file since the facts were different than those in the other case which did not involve a guarantor. On August 8, 1991 Robinson's solicitor wrote ONHWP's solicitor to confirm the telephone conversation and to request that action be taken.

On August 19, 1991 Greer J. released her decision in Lakewood-by-the-Park v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1991), 5 O.R. (3d) 527, 49 C.L.R. 241 (Gen. Div.). She held that the Act permitted ONHWP not to release a letter of credit for deposits until it received a replacement letter of credit for warranty deficiencies or, in the alternative, permitted ONHWP to transfer the letter of credit for deposits to one covering warranty deficiencies.

The next event in the chronology is a crucial one. On April 13, 1992 Willie Moskowitz, the Director of Building Services for ONHWP sent a demand for a payment of $201,531 from the letter of credit to CIBC. In his draw letter Moskowitz certified that:

... monies drawn are to be and/or have been expended pursuant to obligations incurred or to be incurred by us in respect to deposit receipts as related to registration on behalf of the application re: Anderson Place, Aurora, Ontario.

CIBC immediately honoured Moskowitz's demand since it complied in every respect with the terms of the letter of credit. ONHWP received the $201,531 on April 15, 1992.

Unfortunately, the underlined passage in Moskowitz's letter was false. There were no obligations incurred by ONHWP in relation to deposit receipts. Moskowitz claimed that he had signed a form letter placed in front of him by a secretary without checking the file on Anderson Place and ascertaining whether or not the letter was accurate. As soon as it was called to his attention that the certification in the draw letter was not true, he stated that he advised the bank by telephone of the error and sought to return the funds. [See Note 1 at end of document.] On April 16, 1992 ONHWP returned the bank draft to CIBC with a covering letter asking for confirmation that the security still stood in favour of ONHWP in the full amount of $300,000. CIBC refused to accept the draft and returned it to ONHWP [See Note 2 at end of document.] which placed the funds in an interest-bearing account pending resolution of the matter.

It appears that by the spring of 1992 REIC was (and remains today) an inactive and insolvent company. Therefore, after CIBC complied with ONHWP's demand, CIBC turned to Robinson and demanded $201,531 on his guarantee. This caused Robinson's solicitor to write to ONHWP placing it on notice that Robinson would be making a claim for damages against ONHWP.

ONHWP then advised REIC in a letter dated April 30, 1992 that it would release funds from the letter of credit upon receipt of replacement security in the amount of $400,000 for warranty payments. According to the letter, by that date over $215,000 worth of remedial work on the units in Anderson Place had been carried out and there was an estimated $137,000 worth of remedial work still to be done on the common elements. It is clear at this juncture that ONHWP had formed the opinion that it was entitled, in the absence of replacement security, to retain the $201,531 that it had already received from the letter of credit and use these funds to meet warranty deficiencies even though the terms of the letter of credit specify that it is for deposit deficiencies. Recognizing that this was ONHWP's position, Robinson issued his statement of claim in this action on May 4, 1992.

On August 21, 1992, CIBC advised ONHWP that the letter of credit would expire on December 2, 1992. Consistent with its view that it was entitled to the full $300,000, ONHWP attempted to draw the balance of $98,469 in the letter of credit at a CIBC branch in Guelph. After being reminded that one of the terms of the letter of credit required demands to be made at a CIBC branch on King Street in Toronto, on December 1, 1992 ONHWP made a second attempt to draw the balance. The letter stated that ONHWP had expended moneys to meet warranty obligations. Because the terms of the letter of credit refer to deposit obligations, on December 2, 1992 CIBC refused to honour the call. The letter of credit expired that day.

(2) Factual Background -- The Litigation

The above chronology of events has given rise to a large number of claims which I will attempt to summarize in very brief fashion.

The main action involves Robinson as plaintiff and ONHWP as defendant. Robinson claims $201,531 for the alleged wrongful act of ONHWP in drawing on the letter of credit for a purpose other than the one specified in its terms and conditions and for providing a false certification of the purpose for which it was drawing on the credit.

ONHWP counterclaims for a declaration that it is entitled to make a demand on the letter of credit and to obtain moneys from it where warranty claims have been allowed and paid for by ONHWP. In the alternative, ONHWP seeks a declaration that it is entitled to obtain replacement security in order to fund warranty claims.

There are also claims by ONHWP against REIC and CIBC. ONHWP is seeking either damages or an order that REIC post replacement security in favour of ONHWP for breaches of warranty and, should REIC not comply, it seeks a declaration that ONHWP is entitled to keep the letter of credit which will be deemed to apply to warranty obligations.

Against CIBC, ONHWP claims damages in the amount of $98,469, the balance of the letter of credit, for the attempted draw that CIBC refused to honour. It also seeks a declaration that it is entitled to keep the $201,531 already drawn on the letter of credit as well as the $98,469 balance, as indemnity for warranty violations. Finally, in the event that the court finds ONHWP liable to Robinson, it seeks contribution or indemnity from CIBC.

CIBC requests an order dismissing ONHWP's claims against it. It has also brought a fourth party claim against Robinson seeking reimbursement, pursuant to Robinson's guarantee, if ONHWP is successful in obtaining a judgment against CIBC. In argument, counsel for Robinson conceded liability on the fourth party claim if ONHWP was successful in its third party claim against CIBC.

B. ISSUES

Although the chronology of events is long and complicated, and although the litigation is complex, at bottom there are, in my view, only three issues that need to be addressed:

1. Is ONHWP entitled to summary judgment against REIC?
2. Is ONHWP entitled to convert the letter of credit which on its face is stated to be available to meet deposit obligations into a source of funds to meet warranty obligations?
3. If the answer to Q. 2 is "No", then is there any legal basis on which Robinson can recover for the loss he has incurred under his guarantee?

I will consider these issues in turn.

Issue 1 -- Summary Judgment Against REIC?

This is the easy issue. ONHWP seeks one of two orders against REIC, either an order requiring REIC to post replacement security in the form of a bond or irrevocable letter of credit in the amount of $400,000 to cover the warranty obligations of REIC to ONHWP, or judgment against REIC in the amount of $395,000 for moneys spent by ONHWP to repair the deficiencies in the Anderson Place project.

It is clear that ONHWP is entitled to seek these remedies in this court. Section 19(1) of the Act authorizes ONHWP, if it believes that a builder or vendor is not complying with the Act, to apply to this court for an order directing the builder or vendor to comply: see Lakewood, supra, at p. 529 O.R., pp. 243-44 C.L.R.

On the merits, I am of the view that ONHWP is entitled to either of the orders it is seeking. Without going into any detail, it is obvious from the record that REIC has violated both the Act and the vendor/builder agreement it signed in 1987. It is also clear from the record that ONHWP has complied with the Act in its attempts to require REIC to meet its legal obligations. ONHWP has also complied with the procedural requirements for obtaining a summary judgment.

The real villain in this litigation is REIC which appears to have ignored or shirked its professional, financial, legal and moral obligations. Accordingly, ONHWP is entitled to the two remedies it seeks against REIC.

Unfortunately, this villain appears to be inactive and insolvent; it has also been invisible in the course of the litigation. Accordingly, although ONHWP succeeds against REIC, that success is meaningless in a practical sense. What this litigation is about is who is responsible for picking up the pieces of the financial mess left by REIC's post-construction disappearance from the Anderson Place project. Answering that question requires consideration of the other two issues in this case.

Issue 2 -- Letter of Credit

In its counterclaim, ONHWP seeks a declaration that it was entitled to make a demand on the CIBC letter of credit and to obtain moneys from it where warranty claims had been allowed and paid for by ONHWP. In its third party claim, ONHWP also claims damages for the balance of funds under the letter of credit. In both of these claims, ONHWP is in effect asserting that it is entitled to convert a letter of credit for deposit purposes into a letter of credit for warranty purposes.

It is perhaps useful at this juncture to set out the relevant terms of the letter of credit in issue in this litigation. The addressee of the letter of credit is ONHWP and the letter of credit provides in part:

Pursuant to the request of our customer, the said Real Estate Investment Counsel Limited, we, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, hereby establish and give to you an Irrevocable Standby Letter of Credit in your favour in the total amount of $300,000.00 which may be drawn upon us by you and which demand we shall honour without enquiring whether you have the right as between yourselves and our said customer to make such demand and without recognizing any claim of our said customer.

Provided, however, that you are to deliver to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, International Department, Toronto, Ontario, at such time as a written demand for payment is made upon us a certificate signed by you agreeing and/or confirming that monies drawn pursuant to this Standby Letter of Credit are to be and/or have been expended pursuant to obligations incurred or to be incurred by you in respect to Deposit Receipts as related to registration on behalf of Real Estate Investment Counsel Limited re: Anderson Place, Aurora, Ontario. (Emphasis added)

CIBC asserts that it honoured ONHWP's demand for $201,531 on April 13, 1992 because ONHWP certified (falsely as it turned out) that the money would be used to reimburse ONHWP for deposit expenditures. CIBC asserts that it did not honour ONHWP's demand for the $98,469 balance on December 1, 1992 because the demand stated that it was for warranty expenditures.

In taking these positions, CIBC's principal argument is that letters of credit must be strictly construed -- by banks and by the courts. I agree with CIBC's position and argument.

The letter of credit is a documentary instrument that plays a role of great importance in business and commerce. It is carefully and precisely regulated by the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (U.C.P.), a publication of the International Chamber of Commerce. The letter of credit and its regulation by the U.C.P. have been approved as part of Canadian law in many cases, notably Bank of Nova Scotia v. Angelica-Whitewear Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 59, 36 D.L.R. (4th) 161. In that case, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized the desirability of "as much uniformity as possible in the law with respect to these vital instruments of international commerce" (p. 83).

One of the basic features of letters of credit is that they are specific undertakings by a bank to pay if certain conditions stated in the letter of credit, and only those conditions, are met. The classic, although somewhat esoteric, formulation of the requirement that the terms of the letter of credit must conform precisely to the instructions of the client is found in Lord Goddard's judgment in J.H. Rayner & Co. v. Hambros Bank Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 694 at p. 703, [1943] K.B. 37 (C.A.):

The bank, if it accepts the mandate to open the credit, must do exactly what its customer requires it to do, and if the customer says: "I require a bill of lading for Coromandel groundnuts," the bank is not justified, in my judgment, in paying against a bill of lading for anything except Coromandel groundnuts, and it is no answer to say: "You know perfectly well machine shelled groundnut kernels are the same as Coromandel groundnuts". For all the bank knows, its customer may have a particular reason for wanting "Coromandel groundnuts" in the bill of lading. At any rate, that is the instruction which the customer has given to the bank, and if the bank wants to be reimbursed by the customer, it must show that it has performed its mandate. . . . The question is: what was the promise which they made to the beneficiary under the credit, and has the beneficiary availed himself of that promise?

The Supreme Court of Canada said much the same thing in Angelica-Whitewear, supra. Le Dain J. expressed the Canadian position in these terms, at pp. 93-94:

The documentary requirements under a letter of credit are determined by the terms and conditions of the credit, as supplemented by the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, which contain detailed rules respecting the requirements and interpretation of documents to be tendered with a draft.

The fundamental rule is that the documents must appear on their face, upon reasonably careful examination, to be in accordance with the terms and conditions of the letter of credit. . . .

There must be strict compliance with the terms and conditions of the letter of credit. This rule has been laid down in a number of English cases and followed in Canada. . . . The case that is most often cited for the rule of strict documentary compliance is Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Dawson Partners, Ltd. (1926), 27 Ll. L. Rep. 49, where, in a frequently quoted passage, Viscount Sumner said in the House of Lords at p. 52:

It is both common ground and common sense that in such a transaction the accepting bank can only claim indemnity if the conditions on which it is authorised to accept are in the matter of the accompanying documents strictly observed. There is no room for documents which are almost the same, or which will do just as well. Business could not proceed securely on any other lines. The bank's branch abroad, which knows nothing officially of the details of the transaction thus financed, cannot take upon itself to decide what will do well enough and what will not. If it does as if it told, it is safe: if it declines to do anything else, it is safe; if it departs from the conditions laid down, it acts at its own risk.

See also Royal Trust Corp. of Canada v. Royal Bank of Canada, Ont. Gen. Div., per Borins J., released April 1, 1993 [summarized in 39 A.C.W.S. (3d) 247].

Based on these cases, CIBC's two decisions concerning the letter of credit in this case were entirely lawful. ONHWP's first demand was certified (falsely) to be for "deposit receipts" -- precisely what the letter of credit said. Thus, CIBC honoured the call. ONHWP's second demand was for "warranty obligations" -- a very different subject matter not covered by the letter of credit. Thus CIBC refused to honour the call. In both situations, in my view, CIBC made the correct decision supported by the Canadian law relating to letters of credit. [See Note 3 at end of document.]

ONHWP tries to overcome the case law relating specifically to letters of credit by arguing that the important public purposes of the Act suggest a liberal interpretation of its provisions, including specifically an interpretation that does not require ONHWP to pay out large amounts of money because the builder is a shell company, insolvent or cannot be located. ONHWP also argues that letters of credit are a valuable tool for ensuring the financial responsibility of builders.

I am sympathetic to these propositions. The Act does have important public purposes, especially the protection of purchasers of new homes and condominiums. And, although the Act makes no reference to letters of credit, it is clear that its provisions are broad enough to permit ONHWP to insist on obtaining letters of credit from builders.

However, it does not follow that, in utilizing letters of credit as a means of securing the admirable public purposes of the Act, ONHWP is free to ignore the clear law on letters of credit. ONHWP's argument on this point boils down to this: the important public purposes of the Act entitle ONHWP and the courts to infer the convertibility of letters of credit for deposits to letters of credit for warranties in spite of the rule of strict construction of these financial documents. I do not agree with this submission, for two reasons.

First, the Act says nothing about letters of credit. Even assuming that the Ontario legislature could enact provisions dealing with letters of credit issued by federally incorporated banks, there is not a word in the Act dealing with this subject matter. Accordingly, the better inference, in my view, is that if ONHWP wants to utilize letters of credit, as it is entitled to do, then it should be held to a utilization that complies with the Canadian law relating to letters of credit.

Second, ONHWP can achieve its public purposes under the current law of letters of credit. That is because it is ONHWP, not the banks or its customers, which controls the contents of the letter of credit. If ONHWP wants to insist that builders instruct their banks to provide a convertible letter of credit as a pre-condition to registration, it can do this. Indeed, that is precisely what ONHWP has done since 1990; it now requires a convertible letter of credit covering both deposit and warranty claims. So it is possible for ONHWP to perform its important statutory role and comply completely with the law relating to letters of credit. Since 1990, ONHWP itself has shown how easy it is to achieve this happy balance.

I want to make one other observation on this aspect of the case. It is, of course, appropriate to consider fully and carefully the important public purposes of any statute, including the provincial Act in issue in this litigation, and to try to promote the worthwhile goals of the statute. One should not lose sight, however, of the important domestic and international purposes of financial documents like letters of credit. In many situations, a bank must decide whether to honour a demand on quite short notice. In this case CIBC had to make its decision on the second demand in less than 24 hours. The case law says that the only way for a financial institution to make its decision is to pay if the draw letter contains the right words. In my view, that is a safe and sensible method.

In Angelica-Whitewear, Le Dain J. rejected an argument that letters of credit should be interpreted with an eye to the underlying contract that led to the issuance of the letter of credit. He said, at p. 70:

The fundamental principle governing documentary letters of credit and the characteristic which gives them their international commercial utility and efficacy is that the obligation of the issuing bank to honour a draft on a credit when it is accompanied by documents which appear on their face to be in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit is independent of the performance of the underlying contract for which the credit was issued.

In a similar vein, it would be wrong to create a requirement that financial institutions add to their decision-making context a knowledge of statutes from many jurisdictions and an analysis and appreciation of the underlying purposes of the statutes. That, in my view, would undermine the rationale for, and method of operation of, letters of credit.

For these reasons, I conclude that ONHWP is not entitled to convert the letter of credit which on its face is stated to be available to meet deposit obligations into a source of funds to meet warranty obligations.

Issue 3 -- Can Robinson Recover for the Loss he has Incurred on his Guarantee?

It is now time for the plaintiff Robinson to reappear on the stage of this litigation. Having determined that ONHWP was not entitled on April 15, 1992 to obtain the $201,531 from the letter of credit, the next question is whether, factually and legally, this had any effect on Robinson.

The factual component of the question is easy to answer. To this day, ONHWP retains the $201,531 and it will be entitled to use it if it is successful in this litigation. Meanwhile, Robinson has honoured his guarantee to CIBC for $201,531 plus interest. If he loses this litigation, he will forfeit this amount to the bank.

Before turning to Robinson's legal arguments, it would perhaps be useful to set out two other important factual points. First, the relevant portions of Robinson's guarantee state that he guarantees:

. . . the liabilities which Real Estate Investment Counsel Limited . . . has incurred or is under or may incur or be under to the Bank . . . the liability of the Guarantor hereunder being limited to the sum of

-- Three Hundred Thousand -- 00/100 dollars with interest from the date of demand for payment.

Second, in 1987, when CIBC issued the letter of credit, ONHWP had no knowledge that Robinson was a guarantor of the $300,000 secured by it. However, on April 13 - 15, 1992, when ONHWP made its demand for, and received, $201,531, it was aware of Robinson and his guarantee.

Robinson makes two principal arguments in support of his position that he is entitled to damages in the amount of $201,531 plus interest. [See Note 4 at end of document.] I would label these arguments negligent misrepresentation, and economic loss flowing from ONHWP's negligence. [See Note 5 at end of document.] I will deal with these arguments in turn.

(1) Negligent Misrepresentation

Robinson contends that, in guaranteeing the letter of credit, he relied on what he claims was the representation of ONHWP to CIBC that ONHWP would act in accordance with the terms and conditions specified in the letter of credit. Robinson says that he suffered a loss when ONHWP subsequently misrepresented the reason it was drawing on the letter of credit and received $201,531 as a direct consequence of the misrepresentation.

There are five required elements for a successful negligent misrepresentation claim set out in the famous case of Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1964] A.C. 465, [1963] 2 All E.R. 575, and affirmed most recently by the Supreme Court of Canada in Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87 at p. 110, 99 D.L.R. (4th) 626:

The required elements for a successful Hedley Byrne claim . . . (1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee; (2) the representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making said misrepresentation; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent misrepresentation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

In my view, elements (2) and (3) are clearly present in this case. The representation made by ONHWP to CIBC on April 13, 1992 -- that the $201,531 was for deposit claims -- was untrue. And Moskowitz, the officer acting for ONHWP, was negligent in simply signing the letter prepared by his secretary without checking to determine the accuracy of the representation made in it.

However, I believe that element (4) is clearly missing in this case, for at least three reasons. First, ONHWP's misrepresentation on April 13, 1992 was made to CIBC, not to Robinson. Second, Robinson gave his guarantee on October 6, 1987, four and one-half years before ONHWP's misrepresentation. Third, the text of Robinson's guarantee (set out above) says nothing about letters of credit; it is an open-ended guarantee of all liabilities up to $300,000 incurred by REIC, both before and after October 6, 1987. Having given an open guarantee in 1987, Robinson cannot now claim that he relied on a misrepresentation relating to a specific liability in it, especially when the misrepresentation was made several years later.

For these reasons, I see no nexus between Robinson's guarantee and the misrepresentation made by ONHWP on April 13, 1992.

(2) Economic Loss flowing from Negligence

Robinson contends that the necessary factors for finding liability in negligence are present on the facts of this case. Robinson suffered the damage of losing a large sum of money, and this damage was caused by the negligent act of ONHWP in making an erroneous (and, as I have determined, unlawful) demand on the letter of credit. ONHWP knew that Robinson was the guarantor of the letter of credit and therefore owed him a duty of care. There was proximity between them on the principle set out in Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562, [1932] All E.R. Rep. 1 (H.L.), that is, reasonable foreseeability on the part of ONHWP that Robinson would be affected by its action in drawing on the letter of credit. Furthermore, there was proximity in causation.

ONHWP argues that the starting point should be recognition that awards for pure economic loss are generally limited to cases involving contractual relationships and that courts have extended liability for pure economic loss to tort cases only in very limited circumstances. ONHWP submits that the facts of this case do not fit any of the existing categories for which courts have made awards for loss in tort cases, and there is no justification to extend the categories to include a guarantor in Robinson's situation. (a) The Law

Courts have traditionally been reluctant to find for the plaintiff in tort cases involving pure economic loss. Until recently, there were only three categories of cases in which it has been found that there was sufficient proximity to justify such an award. In the cases establishing each of these categories, the courts overcame their reluctance to make awards for pure economic loss to a large extent because of the clear duty of care arising out of the proximate relationship between the parties. In Hedley Byrne, supra, there was an undertaking by a professional and a correlative reliance on his opinion. In Rivtow Marine Ltd. v. Washington Iron Works, [1974] S.C.R. 1189, 40 D.L.R. (3d) 530, a manufacturer and a distributor of cranes knew that the plaintiff relied on them for advice concerning the operation of the cranes and therefore had a clear duty to warn the plaintiff of the necessity of repairs as soon as they became aware of defects in the cranes. And in Kamloops (City) v. Nielsen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2, 10 D.L.R. (4th) 641, a statute imposed a responsibility on a municipality towards the owners and occupiers of land.

ONHWP is correct in arguing that Robinson's claim does not fit any of these categories. However, that is not the end of the matter. In 1992 the Supreme Court of Canada revisited the question of pure economic loss in Canadian National Railway Co. v. Norsk Pacific Steamship Co., supra, and set out analytic criteria that could be used to extend the categories for pure economic loss. Although the court built into the analysis means for limiting the extension of liability to prevent indeterminate and inappropriate or unreasonable liability, it did hold that the categories of economic loss are not closed. Accordingly, it is necessary to go beyond determining whether a specific situation comes within one of the existing categories and perform the analysis set out by the court to determine whether there should be a new category.

In Norsk Pacific Steamship, McLachlin J. enunciates a two- step analytic process. The first step qualifies the plaintiff to recover its economic loss, while the second step considers whether there are policy reasons to limit the defendant's liability. With respect to tort actions, in the first step a court should look to proximity as the qualifying factor. This criterion can serve both to justify the awarding of pure economic loss and to avoid indeterminate liability. In McLachlin J.'s words, at p. 1153:

In determining whether liability should be extended to a new situation, courts will have regard to the factors traditionally relevant to proximity such as the relationship between the parties, physical propinquity, assumed or imposed obligations and close causal connection. And they will insist on sufficient special factors to avoid the imposition of indeterminate and unreasonable liability.

In discussing the varied "traditional" factors, McLachlin J. indicates that they sometimes justify liability because they indicate proximity of causation of harm and other times because they establish sufficient proximity of relationship. She states, at p. 1152:

The matter may be put thus: before the law will impose liability there must be a connection between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiff's loss which makes it just for the defendant to indemnify the plaintiff. . . . In tort, the [link] is proximity. Proximity may consist of various forms of closeness -- physical, circumstantial, causal or assumed -- which serve to identify the categories of cases in which liability lies.

Viewed thus, the concept of proximity may be seen as an umbrella, covering a number of disparate circumstances in which the relationship between the parties is so close that it is just and reasonable to permit recovery in tort.

If a court finds sufficient proximity in the first step of the analysis, it must then turn to the second step where it must decide whether to deny recovery for pure economic loss on policy or pragmatic grounds unrelated to the proximity analysis. The kinds of questions a court must ask in this second step are set out in this passage from McLachlin J.'s judgment, at p. 1155:

Are there practical reasons why the recovery of economic loss should be confined to cases where the plaintiff has sustained physical damage or injury or relied on a negligent misrepresentation? Will extension of recovery of economic loss to other situations open the floodgates of liability, prove so uncertain as to be unworkable, or have an adverse economic impact?

(b) Application of The Norsk Pacific Steamship Analysis to this Case

In my opinion, Robinson has brought himself within the first step of the analysis in Norsk Pacific Steamship. There is sufficient proximity between Robinson and ONHWP in both senses of the word as employed by McLachlin J. -- relational and causal.

With respect to the ONHWP-Robinson relationship, although ONHWP had no knowledge of Robinson's guarantee when it became the beneficiary of the letter of credit in 1987, that is not the relevant time frame. The act of which Robinson complains is Moskowitz's demand letter dated April 13, 1992 which drew $201,531 from the letter of credit. That letter included a clear falsehood (that the money was to meet deposit claims) and it was the falsehood alone that enabled ONHWP to obtain the money. The falsehood, as ONHWP admits, arose because of the failure of its officer Moskowitz to check the contents of a letter which had been prepared by a secretary for his signature. Moskowitz's act, in my view, constitutes clear negligence.

The question, though, is: did ONHWP owe a duty of care to Robinson on April 13, 1992? I believe that it did. In June 1991 Robinson informed ONHWP that he was the guarantor of the letter of credit. This was confirmed by letter on August 8, 1991. Throughout the autumn of 1991 and winter of 1992, Robinson's solicitor regularly contacted ONHWP's solicitor, expressing his concern about the possibility that ONHWP might try to obtain funds under the letter of credit even though the "deposit" basis for it had expired years before.

On January 23, 1992 Robinson's solicitor wrote to ONHWP's solicitor, saying this about his client:

His position is only that of an unrelated third party who has guaranteed the bank's obligations pursuant to the enclosed Letter of Credit. Our question of you is how your client could ever provide a truthful certificate in the words required by the third paragraph of the Letter of Credit.

The third paragraph is the one containing the words "in respect to Deposit Receipts". ONHWP's solicitor did not reply to this letter. On February 24, 1992 Robinson's solicitor wrote again to ONHWP's solicitor, reminding him of his earlier, and as yet unanswered letter, and asking him to review the matter. Again, there was more silence from ONHWP's solicitor. [See Note 6 at end of document.] Then on April 13, 1992 it sent its demand letter containing the false certification to CIBC. CIBC, relying on the certification, released $201,531 to ONHWP.

In my view, the best way to determine whether there is a duty of care is to ask the 60-year old question from Donoghue v. Stevenson: who is my neighbour? In the circumstances described above, I have no hesitation saying that on April 13, 1992 Robinson and ONHWP were neighbours in a negligence law context. They both had an interest in the same letter of credit. And they both knew of the other's interest. In short, they were more than foreseeable neighbours; they were actual neighbours clearly in each other's sight. In these circumstances, the "relational" component of the definition of proximity in Norsk Pacific Steamship is met. It follows that ONHWP owed Robinson a duty of care not to commit a negligent act with respect to the letter of credit. And, as discussed above, it breached that duty by sending a false demand letter without checking adequately, or at all, about the accuracy of the crucial passage in the letter.

I turn now to the "causal" component of the definition of proximity in Norsk Pacific Steamship which McLachlin J. described as "a connection between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiff's loss" (p. 1152). I believe that there is such a connection in this case.

Although it could be argued that Robinson would suffer a loss only if CIBC was forced to turn to him as guarantor because of the inability of the principal debtor, REIC, to meet its obligations, the reality in April 1992 was that if ONHWP obtained funds from the letter of credit, Robinson would end up reimbursing CIBC for these funds. As early as June 1990, ONHWP was aware of serious defects in the Anderson Place project and was trying, unsuccessfully, to obtain from REIC replacement security for the original letter of credit. And in June 1991, ONHWP became aware of, and was then repeatedly reminded of, Robinson's position as guarantor. So, for many months ONHWP had actual knowledge of REIC's financial instability and Robinson's exposure. In my view, on April 13, 1992 ONHWP knew that if it obtained funds under the letter of credit, Robinson would suffer a loss in precisely the same amount. This loss was a very direct, and highly probable (i.e., well beyond just reasonably foreseeable), consequence of ONHWP's act -- a negligent act, I have found -- of sending a letter with a false certification.

It remains only to consider the second step in the Norsk Pacific Steamship analysis, namely, to ask the question whether there are any pragmatic or policy reasons, divorced from proximity, for denying recovery. My answer is a clear "No".

In this case, there is no risk of indeterminate or unreasonable liability, which is often a concern in economic loss situations. Liability to a guarantor is fixed by the amounts of the payment which has been guaranteed. It cannot expand beyond that amount. Moreover, there is fairness in repaying money that was obtained improperly to the party who, in reality, ended up paying the money.

Furthermore, it is unlikely that a decision in favour of the plaintiff in this case will encourage frivolous claims (the old floodgates fear). It is presumably uncommon for beneficiaries of letters of credit to misrepresent the reason for which they are drawing on the credit. And, if they do, then it is just that the gates to recovery by those injured by their negligence be open.

Finally, in terms of policy considerations it needs to be restated that ONHWP changed its practice with respect to letters of credit in 1990. It now requires letters of credit from builders covering both deposit and warranty deficiencies. Thus, this type of litigation should not arise again because ONHWP itself has remedied the situation.

On this aspect of the case, ONHWP attempted to inject into the analysis the fact that Robinson was not only a guarantor of the letter of credit; he was also an investor (to the tune of a $550,000 mortgage) in the Anderson Place project. ONHWP argued that since he probably signed the guarantee to protect his investment, this constituted, at a minimum, a policy reason for being cautious about allowing him recovery against ONHWP.

I disagree. The fact is that he guaranteed a certain amount (up to $300,000) of certain types of debt. One of those debts was "deposit obligations" under a letter of credit. Whatever his motivation in entering into these formal legal commitments (and protecting a large investment may well be a very sensible motivation), he is entitled to rely on the fact that all parties will be governed by the law relating to the documents he has executed. I have found that ONHWP violated the law relating to letters of credit, that it did so negligently, and that Robinson suffered a large financial loss as a direct consequence of the negligent violation. I do not see how any of that is diminished by Robinson's motivation for providing his guarantee.

For these reasons, I conclude that Robinson should recover from ONHWP for the economic loss he suffered as a direct result of ONHWP's negligence.

C. DISPOSITION

The plaintiff Robinson is entitled to judgment against the defendant Ontario New Home Warranty Program in the amount of $201,531 together with interest of $6,179.83 to September 30, 1992 and further interest at the CIBC's prime rate from time to time. [See Note 7 at end of document.]

The defendant Ontario New Home Warranty Program is entitled to judgment against the third party Real Estate Investment Counsel Limited in the amount of $395,000 together with appropriate interest for moneys spent to repair the deficiencies in the Anderson Place project. In the alternative, the third party Real Estate Investment Counsel Limited may post replacement security in the form of a bond or irrevocable letter of credit in the amount of $400,000 to cover its continuing obligations to the defendant Ontario New Home Warranty Program.

The third party Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce is entitled to an order dismissing the claim of the defendant (plaintiff by third party claim) Ontario New Home Warranty Program against it.

No order is required with respect to the fourth party claim brought by Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce against Robinson.

No orders are made against the defendant Willie Moskowitz or the third party A. Ross Bumstead.

Costs may be spoken to, if necessary, bearing in mind who are the successful parties in the various claims.

Judgment accordingly.

Note 1: Although Moskowitz is a named defendant in this action, in fact Robinson has abandoned his claim against him. In effect, Robinson has accepted Moskowitz's mistake explanation and is not pursuing a claim grounded in fraud against either Moskowitz or his employer, ONHWP.

Note 2: Apparently, this was done in accordance with normal banking practices. In argument, both Robinson and ONHWP specifically disclaimed making any attack on CIBC for its refusal to accept the funds and reinstate the letter of credit on April 16, 1992.

Note 3: It should be noted that ONHWP relied heavily on the decision of Greer J. in Lakewood, supra. In that case a developer of a condominium apartment building posted a letter of credit in favour of ONHWP to protect the purchasers' deposits. There were no claims brought for deposits. After the building was constructed and all the units sold, the developer brought a motion for summary judgment to force the return of its letter of credit which ONHWP had not drawn on. ONHWP maintained that it needed the letter of credit to cover possible warranty claims and brought a cross-motion for a mandatory injunction to prevent the return of the letter of credit unless it was replaced by a new letter of credit.

Greer J. agreed with ONHWP and in effect permitted the letter of credit to be converted from its stated deposit base to a warranty base.

It is important, in my view, to note that in Lakewood the dispute before Greer J. was one involving only ONHWP and the builder. There was not a bank refusing to honour a call on a letter of credit. Accordingly, the argument and Greer J.'s decision were focused on interpreting the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. Although that Act makes no specific reference to letters of credit, Greer J. held that a purposive interpretation of the Act (to protect the public by placing the burden of covering the losses associated with the construction of new homes and condominiums on builders and vendors) permitted the convertibility of the letter of credit in that case.

In this case, both Robinson and CIBC bring to the court's attention the Canadian law relating to letters of credit, including the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Angelica-Whitewear. In that decision, the court held that the fundamental principle governing letters of credit and the characteristic which gives them their commercial utility is that the issuing bank is obliged to honour a call on a letter of credit when the call is accompanied by documents which appear on their face to be in accordance with the terms and conditions of the letter of credit. Conversely, the bank is obliged not to honour the call if there is a discrepancy between the certifying documents tendered in support of the call and the terms and conditions of the letter of credit.

Note 4: Robinson does not advance three other arguments: (1) contract, presumably because there is no privity of contract between ONHWP and him; (2) breach of statutory duty, presumably because he has no rights or obligations under the Act; and (3) fraud, presumably because he accepts that Moskowitz's demand letter on April 13, 1992 resulted from a mistake (a negligent one, Robinson says), not any fraudulent intent or conduct.

Note 5: In oral argument, although not in his factum, counsel for Robinson also raised an argument grounded in unjust enrichment. Since counsel for ONHWP was taken by surprise by this argument, since it is possible to resolve this case on the basis of the other arguments raised by Robinson, and since, on the merits, I see no grounds for applying this equitable remedy in what is essentially a commercial case turning on the legal principles relating to letters of credit and negligence, I will not address it specifically in these reasons.

Note 6: ONHWP's counsel at the hearing on this case was not its solicitor throughout the pre-hearing dealings between the parties. Indeed, its solicitor was from one firm and its counsel was from another.

Note 7: The plaintiff sought punitive damages in the amount of $20,000. In my view, this is not a case for making such an award.

Action No. 93-CU-64221-CP

Ontario Court (General Division), Montgomery J. August 9, 1993

MOTION for an order pursuant to the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, certifying the proceedings as a class action.

C.N. (Dino) Karbaliotis, for plaintiffs (class plaintiffs).

Howard S. Swartz, for defendants, Adelaide Capital Corp. and Toronto-Dominion Bank.

Robb C. Heintzman and Wendy A. Kelley, for defendant, Deloitte & Touche.

Robert J. Potts and Roger J. Horst, for defendant, Goldman, Sloan, Nash & Haber.

MONTGOMERY J.: -- This motion is for an order pursuant to the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, certifying as a class action proceedings on behalf of all persons who purchased a unit in a condominium project owned by Anaheim Management Ltd. known as Anaheim Towers. Due to a court ordered winding up of Central Guaranty Trust Company, the Toronto-Dominion Bank and Adelaide Capital Corporation (the assignees) are parties by virtue of the assignment of debt instruments.

The Facts

The plaintiffs are investor-owners in a tax drive project who purchased units (the "Units") in the Anaheim Towers Project (the "Project") at 25 and 35 Trailwood Drive, Mississauga, Ontario. There are approximately 325 units in the project, many of which are owned by multiple owners. Multiple units are owned by one investor-owner in some cases.

One hundred and fifty investors have retained plaintiffs' counsel.

The units are condominiums which were purchased by the investor-owners. The purchase of the units was financed for the most part by Central Guaranty Trust Company (the "Trust Company") through a combination of mortgage financing and "Equity Line" promissory notes.

The majority of investor-owners were directed to a pre-arranged source of financing, being the Trust Company. The financing provided by the Trust Company was provided through these vehicles:

(a) mortgages were given by the Trust Company and secured against the individual units, or in the case of the limited partnership, secured by guarantee of the investor-owners of the debt with regard to a particular unit; (b) "equity line" promissory notes, unsecured by any real or chattel property, were given by the investor-owners to the Trust Company.

(c) further financing was arranged for some of the investor-owners with the Trust Company by way of collateral mortgages on other property owned by individual investor-owners or alternatively through guarantees obtained from spouses or business associates of the investor-owners.

There are different categories of investor-owners:

(a) those who are currently still owners of a unit or interest, or have sold their interest against whom no action has been commenced in respect of the financing given by the Trust Company or by the assignees of the Trust Company, the Toronto-Dominion Bank or the Adelaide Capital Corporation (the "assignees");

(b) those who currently are the subject of proceedings commenced by the Trust Company or the assignees, in respect of the promissory note or mortgage given by them to obtain financing in this project;

(c) those who have judgments against them with respect to the promissory notes or mortgage given by them to obtain financing from the Trust Company in this project, and whose units or interest have been seized in execution and sold, and possibly with deficits arising out of such sale.

With respect to the separate purchases of the units by the investor-owners, different circumstances governed each transaction:

(a) each investor-owner dealt with different people and had their own set of conversations;

(b) at least some of the investor-owners saw or had some advertisements;

(c) at least some of the investor-owners consulted or dealt with or through an investment broker as part of the process in deciding to make the investment;

(H.C.J.)

Action No. 28525/88 and 31517/88

ONTARIO High Court of Justice Philp J. January 5, 1990.

Civil procedure -- Summary judgment -- Entitlement -- New home warranty corporation claiming indemnity from architects and consultants for defective design construction and supervision -- Subrogated rights derived from owner -- Subject to six-year limitation period -- Unclear when cause of action arose -- Not to be decided on motions for summary judgment -- Professional Engineers Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 13, s. 47 -- Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 20.01(3).

Courts -- Abuse of process -- Multiplicity of proceedings -- Court holding that new home warranty corporation had notice within one-year limitation period of warranty claims -- Corporation bringing subrogation actions -- Defendants defending on basis of six-year limitation period -- Different issue -- Actions not abuse of process -- Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350.

Limitations -- Contract -- Indemnity -- New home warranty corporation entitled to indemnity from builder under agreement and regulation -- Limitation period not beginning to run until corporation made payment to owner -- Revocation of builder's registration certificate not abrogating duty to indemnify -- Subsequent amalgamation of builder and other corporations no defence -- Business Corporations Act, 1982, S.O. 1982, c. 4, s. 178 -- R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 728, s. 1, para. 4.

The plaintiff corporation was established by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, to administer a guarantee fund for the protection of new home buyers. It received complaints from a condominium corporation and individual unit owners about defects in construction by the builder from 1980 onwards. The builder had registered under the plan in 1979. In doing so, it agreed to indemnify the plaintiff for any defects for which the plaintiff was liable. In 1987 the plaintiff was held liable to the condominium corporation for the defects. The plaintiff commenced two actions in 1988, one against the successor of the builder, which had been amalgamated with other corporations, and the other against the architects and consulting engineers for indemnity. The action against the architects and engineers was based on negligence. The defendants brought these motions for summary judgment dismissing the actions on the ground that they were brought beyond the six-year limitation period.

Held, the motions should be dismissed.

(1) The builder's successor was required to indemnify the plaintiff under the agreement with the plaintiff and under R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 728, s. 1, para. 4. Limitations do not begin to run for a claim for indemnity until judgment enforcing the right of indemnity has been rendered. Hence, the action was timely. The fact that the builder's registration had been revoked was irrelevant, since the agreement did not abrogate liability upon revocation. Further, the fact that the builder did not have notice of the previous proceedings and did not take part in them did not exonerate the builder. In any event, the builder was not prejudiced by its inability to defend the claim in the initial stages. The amalgamated corporation was liable by reason of s. 178 of the Business Corporations Act, 1982, S.O. 1982, c. 4.

(2) Nor was the action against the successor to the builder an abuse of process. The previous action against the plaintiff was concerned with the issue whether the plaintiff had notice, within the one-year limitation period specified in the Act, of the defects. The action against the successor to the builder was concerned with the issue whether the action was barred by the six-year limitation period.

(3) The subrogated claims against the other defendants derived from the rights and liabilities of the builder by reason of s. 17 of R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 726. Those rights and liabilities included the six-year limitation period from the time the cause of action arose and, as distinct from the builder, the other defendants did not receive a benefit when the plaintiff paid the owner. It was unclear when the limitation period began to run against the other defendants, and there was a genuine issue to be tried. Hence, the matter should not be disposed of on a motion under rule 20.01(3). The fact that the defendant professional engineer had the benefit of a one-year limitation defence under s. 47 of the Professional Engineers Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 13, was not relevant, since the section permits the trial judge to extend the period in appropriate cases.

Brian Campbell, for plaintiff.

J. David Sloan and Alexandra Chyczij, for defendant, 567292 Ontario Limited (moving party).

S. Stieber, for defendant, John Stephenson Consultants Ltd. (moving party).

J. Norton, for defendants, Volgyesi & Propst Inc., Andrew Volgyesi and Stephen Propst (moving parties).

PHILP J.:-- The defendants in these two actions are moving under rule 20.01(3) for a summary judgment dismissing the plaintiff's actions on the ground that the actions are barred because they were commenced more than six years after the cause of action arose.

The plaintiff is a corporation created by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 ("the Act"). Its objects under the Act include, firstly, the administration of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan, and secondly, the establishment and administration of a guarantee fund from which compensation can be paid to an owner of a new home or condominium if the owner has a cause of action against the vendor for damages for breach of warranty: ss. 2, 13 and 14 of the Act.

The plaintiff commenced its first action against the defendants on May 12, 1988, for damages of $1,030,695, being the sum of money it was required to pay to York Condominium Corporation No. 528 (Y.C.C.) by reason of an order of the Divisional Court, made on June 22, 1987. The plaintiff paid Y.C.C. this money on November 24, 1987.

The plaintiff commenced a second action on September 13, 1988, against Andrew Volgyesi and Stephen Propst (V. & P.). The plaintiff discovered upon receipt of the statement of defence of the defendants, Volgyesi & Propst Inc. (V. & P. Inc.), in the first action that it was incorrectly named. Hence the need to sue the individual architects in the second action to protect its claim for damages.

The plaintiff's claim against the defendants is based upon subrogation rights it is alleged to have acquired by s. 17(1) of R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 726 of the Act. In addition, it claims against the defendant 567292 Ontario Limited ("567292") by reason of s. 1, para. 4 of R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 728 of the Act which provides for indemnification by 567292. As well, the predecessor to 567292, High City Holdings Limited ("High City") entered into a vendor/builder agreement dated May 4, 1979, in which it agreed to indemnify the plaintiff for any payment such as that the plaintiff eventually made to Y.C.C.

The payment ordered to be made by the plaintiff to Y.C.C. was for the damages resulting to Y.C.C. as the owner of a new condominium built in 1979-80 by High City. Because of alleged defective workmanship by High City and, perhaps, defective design construction and supervision by V. & P. and the defendant John Stephenson Consultants Limited (Stephenson), the building developed unusual cracks, excessive efflorescence on exterior masonry, and penetration of water into the condominium units.

The building was completed either by March 13, 1980, or by August 13, 1980. The evidence is not clear which date is the correct date of completion, but for the purposes of these motions, it probably does not matter. The Act provides for a one-year warranty given by High City to the owner to run from the date of completion of the building.

Complaints from the owner and unit owners were received by the plaintiff from time to time from December 15, 1980 to June 21, 1982. By March 12, 1981, it had received a deficiency list from Y.C.C., the owner, and letters from the individual owners of units 202 and 303. By August 12, 1981, it had received a further notice from Y.C.C. dated May 25, 1981, complaining of water leaking through slabs.

The plaintiff inspected on October 9, 1981, and found "water damage caused by improper application of insulation on cold water pipes". It wrote to High City on October 19th requiring it to complete work on "warranted items". Following further complaints from unit owners, the plaintiff reinspected on May 5, 1982, and, on June 30, 1982, wrote to High City pressing it to effect repairs in respect to the complaints made by the unit owners.

On or shortly after September 16, 1982, the plaintiff received a report from Construction Control Limited (C.C.L.), a firm of consulting engineers retained by Y.C.C. to make further inspections in an effort to determine the cause of the water penetration.

In August, 1983, High City denied responsibility for the deficiencies complained of. One of its reasons was the alleged failure of the unit holders to give notices of complaint within the one-year limitation period which High City stated expired on March 12, 1981.

On August 4, 1984, Y.C.C. made a claim against the plaintiff and in the plaintiff's "decision", dated December 19, 1984, it denied the claim, stating that none of the deficiencies was covered by the Act. Y.C.C. appealed the plaintiff's decision to the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal ("C.R.A.T.") pursuant to s. 16 of the Act. On October 21, 1985, C.R.A.T. allowed only part of Y.C.C.'s appeal. Y.C.C. then appealed C.R.A.T.'s decision to the Divisional Court. On June 22, 1987, the Divisional Court allowed Y.C.C.'s appeal, reversed the decision of C.R.A.T., and gave judgment against the plaintiff in favour of Y.C.C. for $762,287.04, plus 12% interest [see Re York Condominium Corp. No. 528 and Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1987), 60 O.R. (2d) 662, 41 D.L.R. (4th) 142, 44 R.P.R. 209]. As mentioned earlier, on November 24, 1987, the plaintiff paid the sum of $1,030,695 to Y.C.C. pursuant to that judgment.

For the May 12, 1988 statement of claim to be valid, it must have been issued within six years from when the cause of action arose. In other words, the cause of action must have arisen since May 12, 1982.

There are two issues arising from these facts to be determined on these motions:

1. Is the plaintiff's claim an abuse of process because of the findings of the Divisional Court in their decision of June 22, 1987?
2. Had the six-year limitation period expired by the time the plaintiff issued its statement of claim on May 12, 1988? Also, can the plaintiff rely on the date of payment to Y.C.C. as the beginning of the limitation period by reason of (a) indemnification by 567292, and (b) subrogation rights against all defendants? Abuse of process

The Divisional Court dealt with the one-year warranty period provided by the Act and whether or not the defendant in that action, which is the plaintiff in this action (Warranty Program), had notice within the one year of the date the warranty took effect, as provided in ss. 13, 14 and 15 of the Act, and s. 4 of Reg. 726. That issue, in my opinion, is not the same issue presented in these actions. The question to be resolved in these actions involves the six-year limitation period under the Limitations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 240, and whether or not the six years had expired when the statement of claim was issued. The answer depends on criteria that are not necessarily the same as those under consideration by the Divisional Court. The Divisional Court was dealing with the notice required to be given by condominium unit owners, as set out in s. 4 of Reg. 726. That section required "written notice to the Corporation setting forth in reasonable detail information relating to the claim". Its finding that the plaintiff in these actions knew well within the one-year limitation period that there were claims made under the warranty set out in s. 12 (1) of the Act does not resolve the question before this court as to when the six-year limitation started to run. The Divisional Court made no finding on that issue. The answer to that question depends on the facts and law concerning the symptoms and details of the problems, and when the plaintiff had sufficient facts to enable it to present a claim against other tortfeasors not involved with the Act.

In my view, therefore, the plaintiff's actions do not create an abuse of process so as to enable me to dismiss its claims.

Issue estoppel does not apply because the parties in these actions are not the same parties in the Divisional Court decision. The plaintiff is the only party common to both actions.

Indemnification by 567292

Before dealing with the limitation issue, I should deal with the argument presented by the plaintiff that its claim against the defendant 567292 is based on indemnification and that the limitation period does not start running until the plaintiff actually paid out the money being sought in these actions or, alternatively, until the judgment was given against the plaintiff. The plaintiff's claim against 567292 is based, firstly, on the defendants' covenant in the vendor/builder agreement dated May 4, 1979, which reads as follows:

4.4(2) The Vendor shall diligently perform his warranty obligations under the Act, including his obligations in respect of each warranty certificate issued by the Corporation, and shall indemnify and save harmless the Corporation and its insurers from any loss which they or any of them may suffer by reason of the Vendor's failure to do so. In addition, the Vendor shall indemnify and save harmless the Corporation and its insurers in respect of any, loss which they or any of them may suffer owing to any major structural defect which appears within one year from the effective date of any warranty, notwithstanding that the claim in respect thereof is made against the Corporation after the first anniversary of such effective date.

Secondly, s. 1., para. 4 of Reg. 728 provides that:

4. The registrant shall indemnify and save harmless the Corporation ... from any loss which [it] may suffer by reason of his failure to diligently perform ... all obligations imposed on him under the Plan.

The registrant in this case was High City, which subsequently merged with other companies into the present company, 567292.

The payment by the plaintiff to the condominium owner, as required by the Divisional Court judgment, discharged the liability of 567292 to the owner. Hence, the plaintiff should have the right to recover such payment from the wrongdoer which has been unjustly enriched by reason of such payment. Under these circumstances, the limitation period should start to run when the defendant has been so enriched.

The action is taken against 567292 pursuant to the agreement to indemnify, as well as the statutory indemnification provided by s. 1, para. 4 of Reg. 728. In a claim for indemnity, the limitation period does not start to run until payment is made: see 28 Hals., 4th ed., pp. 300-1, para. 669, "Contract to Indemnify":

Upon a contract to indemnify, the statute of limitation runs from the time when the plaintiff actually suffers the loss, not from the time when the event happens which causes the loss.

In Peterson Steels Inc. v. Arctic Steamship Line (1980), 114 D.L.R. (3d) 157, [1981] 2 F.C. 192, 21 C.P.C. 235, after citing several authorities, Addy J. stated at p. 159: "The better view seems to be that the right to claim indemnity arises only after judgment against the person claiming indemnity has been rendered or the nature and extent of the claim has been otherwise determined."

The Supreme Court of Canada dealt with this issue in the case of Morin v. Canadian Home Assurance Co., [1970] S.C.R. 561, [1970] I.L.R. Paragaph1-350. Fauteux J. at p. 565, concluded:

Obviously the prescription of an action cannot begin to run before the right to institute it originates. In the case at bar, whether it be an action for recovery or a subrogatory action, the right of respondent company to resort to it could not originate before the date of the payments which it made pursuant to the insurance policy and because of Gilles Morin's fault.

Counsel for 567292 argues in response to the above principle as follows:

1. The vendor/builder agreement, which contains the indemnification claim, was no longer valid by the time this action was commenced; and
2. It would be an abuse of process to allow the plaintiff to litigate this claim because of its failure to notify the defendant of the prior action between the plaintiff and Y.C.C.

With regard to the first argument, the defendant claims that its agreement to indemnify the plaintiff ended with the revocation of its registration certificate on July 8, 1982, in accordance with para. 5.1 of the vendor/builder agreement which reads, in part, as follows:

The termination of this agreement upon the termination of the Vendor's registration under the Plan shall not affect the liability of the Vendor to the Corporation under the Plan or in respect of any deposit receipt, performance guarantee or warranty certificate which has been issued by or on behalf of the Corporation prior to such termination or which the Corporation may be obligated to issue after such termination.

The defendant argues that this section of the agreement makes no mention of indemnification. The section talks only of the termination not affecting liability in respect of any deposit receipt, performance guarantee or warranty certificate.

I cannot agree with this argument. In my view, the plain reading of the section provides that the termination of the vendor's registration does not affect the liability of the vendor to the corporation under the plan and then because of the use of the word "or", the other three specific areas are also not affected. The vendor's obligation to indemnify, in my view, therefore, continues in effect after revocation of its registration.

The second argument of counsel for 567292 is that by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to give notice to the defendant of the proceedings before C.R.A.T., and the appeal to the Divisional Court, the defendant has been denied the opportunity to take part in the earlier proceedings and to defend the claim in the initial stages.

Counsel further submits that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting its claim against 567292 by virtue of the expiry of the limitation period and the prejudice which would result to the defendant in being unable to assert claims in third party actions for compensation or indemnification against various subcontractors.

These appear to be two separate arguments. In any event, I fail to see how the defendant has been prejudiced by its inability to defend the claim in the initial stages. It was not a party to that earlier decision and, in my view, is not bound by the earlier decision. The plaintiff, as argued by its counsel, had no obligation under the plan to notify the defendant of the earlier proceedings, nor do the Act and regulations set out any way in which the defendant could have been made a party. Some of the correspondence filed indicates that the defendant did, in fact, have earlier knowledge of the problems asserted by Y.C.C. Letters from the plaintiff to High City indicated the plaintiff's intention to continue to hold the defendant responsible for rectification of the various problems.

I conclude, therefore, that the claim against 567292 for indemnification does not start to run until the judgment of the Divisional Court, namely, June 22, 1987. The plaintiff's action against 567292 is therefore not prescribed.

The defendant 567292 also argued that it is not bound by the covenants of High City. In my view, s. 178 of the Business Corporations Act, 1982, S.O. 1982, c. 4, is a complete answer to this argument. It reads as follows and is self-explanatory:

178. Upon the articles of amalgamation becoming effective:

(b) the amalgamated corporation possesses all the property, rights, privileges and franchises and is subject to all liabilities, including civil, criminal and quasi-criminal, and all contracts, disabilities and debts of each of the amalgamating corporations.

Subrogation claim against the defendants V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson

The claim against V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson is not as clear. It depends upon the right of the plaintiff to be subrogated to the rights of recovery of the owner to whom it made payment. Section 17(1) of Reg. 726 under the Act confers this right of recovery upon the plaintiff. It reads as follows:

17(1) The Corporation shall be subrogated to all rights of recovery of a person to whom payment in respect of a claim has been made out of the guarantee fund under the Act and may maintain an action in its own name or the name of the person against any other person against whom the action lies in respect of such rights of recovery.

(2) The Corporation is entitled under its rights of recovery to conduct legal proceedings, including an action for damages, the quantum of which shall be limited to the amount paid out of the guarantee fund by the Corporation to the person whose rights are subrogated to the Corporation, including any legal costs, plus all costs incurred by the Corporation in the subrogated action.

The plaintiff argues similarly that the limitation period does not begin to run against V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson until the payment was made to Y.C.C. or until the Divisional Court judgment of June 22, 1987: see Morin v. Canadian Home Assurance Co., supra.

In my view, the Morin case does not go that far. It deals with indemnification as a form of restitution. The plaintiff's right to subrogate imposes upon it the same rights and liabilities that are held by the person to whom it made payment, namely, Y.C.C. Similar to the Morin case, the payment to Y.C.C. by the plaintiff discharged the builder, 567292, from liability to the owner. In respect to the defendants V. & P. and Stephenson, however, such payment by the plaintiff did not discharge them from liability. The Y.C.C. was paid its claim, but the liability, if any, of V. & P. and Stephenson to it was not affected. The plaintiff's subrogated rights are no greater than those of Y.C.C. and the commencement of the six-year limitation period must be determined from the time the cause of action arose, which is when the defects were discovered. It does not commence on the date of payment.

The Ontario Court of Appeal dealt with this question in the case of Royal Insurance Co. of Canada v. Aguiar (1984), 48 O.R. (2d) 705, 16 D.L.R. (4th) 477, 8 C.C.L.I. 300 (C.A.). In that case, A., while operating an uninsured automobile in January, 1981, negligently caused injury to L.&C. L.&C. were insured under a standard policy with the plaintiff insurer, Royal Insurance Company, and they claimed against it under the uninsured automobile coverage. The claim was settled and, in March, 1983, Royal Insurance issued a writ claiming reimbursement from A. The Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 218, provided that where an amount is paid in respect of uninsured motorists' coverage, the insurer is subrogated to the rights of the person to whom such payment is made. The Highway Traffic Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 198, provided that actions for injuries arising out of automobile accidents must be brought within two years. The trial judge held that the rights of the insurer were no greater than those of the insured persons and, therefore, the Royal Insurance claim based on subrogation was defeated by the two-year limitation period set out in the Highway Traffic Act. Royal Insurance appealed to the Ontario Court of Appeal arguing that under the law of restitution, Royal Insurance was compelled to discharge the liability of A. and was therefore entitled to reimbursement from A. Mr. Justice Zuber rejected this argument stating that one of the conditions that must be met in a claim for restitution is that the payment made must have discharged the liability of the defendant. He cites Fridman and McLeod, Restitution (1982), c. 11, where they state at pp. 359-60 that "it is fundamental to any restitutionary action that in order to ground recovery, such benefit must have been received by the Defendant". In the Royal Insurance case the payment by Royal Insurance to L. & C. did not discharge A. from liability. In other words, A. did not receive a benefit when Royal Insurance paid L.&C. L.&C. were paid their claims, but the liability of A. to L. & C. was not affected. A. would still have been liable to the Royal Insurance Company if negligent, as subrogee, had the claim been made in time.

It is difficult to reconcile the Morin case with the Royal Insurance case. Both deal with subrogatory actions, although the Morin case talks of a restitutionary claim as well. Suffice it to say that the main distinction between the claims against 567292 and the defendants V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson is that the plaintiff claims against 567292 by reason of its agreement to indemnify the plaintiff under the vendor/builder agreement, and by s. 1, para. 4 of Reg. 728. The claim against V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson, on the other hand, is founded in negligence and hence the subrogatory rights and liabilities of the plaintiff are derived from the rights and liabilities of Y.C.C., which includes the six-year limitation period from the time the cause of action arose.

In the case at bar, the payment by the plaintiff to Y.C.C. does not discharge the potential liability of V. & P. Inc. and Stephenson. The plaintiff therefore, under its subrogation rights of Y.C.C., is burdened with the same liabilities of Y.C.C., which includes the limitation period of six years.

Limitation period

There remains therefore the need to determine when the six- year limitation period started to run against Y.C.C. in order to determine whether the plaintiff's claim against V. & P. and Stephenson has been prescribed. If it is clear on the facts, then, as a matter of law, that issue can be determined on this motion pursuant to rule 20.01(3). If, on the other hand, there is a genuine issue to be tried, I must dismiss the motion for summary judgment and direct that the issue be tried.

The plaintiff argues that the cause of action arose after it received the September 16, 1982 report from C.C.L. Only then did it have sufficient material facts necessary to sustain an action. The defendants argue that the cause of action arose when the plaintiff or the owners at Y.C.C. received notice of the claims from the unit owners.

I have read carefully the pleadings and the affidavits filed and considered carefully the argument of counsel, and I must conclude that the determination of the commencement of the limitation period depends on mixed facts and law. On all the evidence before me, there is sufficient conflict and doubt in my mind as to the facts that I cannot make the necessary finding or determination without a full trial. I cannot answer the question of when the plaintiff knew or ought to have known that there were defects, or sufficient defects, for the limitation period to start running.

In Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse (1986), 31 D.L.R. (4th) 481, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 147, 75 N.S.R. (2d) 109, Le Dain J., who delivered the judgment of the court, said at p. 535 as follows:

I am thus of the view that the judgment of the majority in Kamloops laid down a general rule that a cause of action arises for purposes of a limitation period when the material facts on which it is based have been discovered or ought to have been discovered by the plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable diligence ...

The issue created by the facts in the case at bar is what are the "material facts" on which the cause of action is based and when should they have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence. In other words, when had the plaintiff or owner acquired sufficient knowledge of the facts that give rise to the cause of action? The defendants take a different inference from the facts than the plaintiff does. There is a clear dispute between the parties as to what facts the plaintiff or owner must have known. As in Riviera Farms Ltd. v. Paegus Financial Corp. Ltd. (1988), 29 C.P.C. (2d) 217 (Ont. H.C.J.), some of the disputes here are "about inferences or conclusions of fact that should be drawn from different pieces of primary evidence". At p. 221, Campbell J. concluded: "It is not, however, the job of the Court on this kind of motion to decide which competing inferences should be drawn from disputed facts or, indeed, from primary facts that are not in dispute. That is the job of the trial Judge."

I agree with Mr. Justice Campbell and, accordingly, dismiss the motions brought by the defendants for summary judgment against the plaintiff. There is a genuine issue that needs to be tried.

I might add that counsel for Stephenson has also argued that Stephenson has the added defence of a one-year limitation period under the Professional Engineers Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 13, s. 47(1). I note, however, that s. 47(2) allows the trial Judge to extend that limitation period:

47(2) ... if the court is satisfied that there are apparent grounds for the proceedings and that there are reasonable grounds for applying for the extension.

For the trial judge to be so satisfied it is necessary that he or she hear the evidence at trial. This determination cannot be made on this motion. The trial judge, after hearing the viva voce evidence, will be in a much better position to decide whether or not he or she should exercise his or her discretion to extend the limitation period: see Victoria County Board of Education v. Bradstock, Reicher & Partners Ltd. (1984), 46 O.R. (2d) 674, 44 C.P.C. 314 (Div. Ct.). In that case, Mr. Justice Southey, at p. 679, stated:

Another reason for not granting leave under Rule 124 in this case is that the trial judge will probably be in a better position to determine whether it is just to extend the limitation period under s. 28 (2) than would a judge hearing the matter in motions court on affidavit evidence.

A cross-motion was served by the plaintiff but the parties agreed that, because of the short notice, it was not argued before me at the hearing. I therefore have not dealt with the issues raised in the cross-motion in these reasons.

Conclusion

The three motions by the three parties will therefore be dismissed with costs to the plaintiff to be paid by the three defendants on an equal basis as if one motion.

Motions dismissed.

Re Ontario New Home Warranty Program and Marchant Building Corp. et al. Re Platinum I Property Ltd. Partnership et al. and Ontario New Home Warranty Program

(H.C.J.)

68 O.R. (2d) 577

Action No. RE949/89 & RE2366/88

ONTARIO High Court of Justice Steele J. May 12, 1989.

TWO APPLICATIONS, heard together, for a declaration that certain builders must comply with the Ontario New Home Warranty Program and for a declaration that the program did not apply to them.

Brian M. Campbell, for Ontario New Home Warranty Program.

L. David Roebuck, for Marchant Building Corporation et al.

STEELE J.:-- There are two applications before me that substantially deal with the same matters. The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (O.N.H.W.P.) asks for a declaration that each of the respondents is acting or has acted as a vendor or builder without being registered contrary s. 6 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (the Act), and directing them to comply with the Act and prohibiting them from acting as a builder on named lands or from selling condominium units of condominium projects built thereon.

The applicants, the Platinum I Property Limited Partnership and others (Platinum), ask for a declaration that the Act does not apply to the applicants with respect to the named condominium projects. The issue in both applications is the same but the O.N.H.W.P. application covers more projects than that of the Platinum application.

Counsel for O.N.H.W.P. submitted that the facts of these applications are similar to those in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 362, 50 R.P.R. 186 (Ont. H.C.J.). I have reviewed the application records in the White Oaks case and find that while they both purport to provide tax shelters, there are substantial differences therein: the most notable being that in White Oaks the purchasers were directly buying an undivided interest of the beneficial ownership in land with a clear statement that they were not to be deemed a limited partnership. I will not set out the other differences. White Oaks is not binding on me relating to the present applications. However, it sets out the scheme of the Act and decided that "owner" under the Act includes the situation where the owner intends that the unit be occupied by a tenant. I agree with the conclusions therein. The present case involves an ingenious tax-driven investment scheme relating to the building of condominium units. This scheme provides for an investor to subscribe for one or more "interests" in a project and become a limited partner in the entire project in accordance with an offering memorandum prepared pursuant to the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 466. The "interest" is defined as:

... an undivided beneficial ownership interest in the limited partnership represented by an initial capital contribution equal to the subscription price of each interest.

The number of "interests" is equal to the number of condominium units (unit). A specific unit is allocated to each "interest" at a price specified. The price varies according to the size or desirability of the unit.

The ownership of an "interest" entitles an investor to an appropriate share of any net income or loss of the limited partnership in a fiscal year. The net income consists of rental income from leases of the total units less the total operating expenses. The owner of an "interest" may vote at limited partnership meetings. A subscriber for an "interest" pays the subscription price by either paying 25% in cash at the time of subscription and financing the balance through a lender arranged by the limited partnership, or by financing 100% in such manner in the first instance.

Ownership of an "interest" entitles (but does not oblige) the investor to exchange his "interest" for actual title to his allotted unit after the condominium corporation has been registered and after such unit has been leased to tenants. To effect such exchange the investor must file an election. The consideration for the transfer of the unit to him is the surrender of his "interest" and possibly the payment of certain sums to compensate continuing limited partners for any recapture of capital cost allowance due to the specific transfer. Platinum submits that the scheme is for ownership interest in a limited partnership only with the intention that the entire project be leased for a number of years, and that the transfer of title of the unit is only an incidental financial protection.

O.N.H.W.P.'s position is that the purchase of an "interest" is in substance a purchase agreement in respect of a new home under the Act, because the investor may acquire title of a unit, and the subscription price is equivalent to the price of such unit, and that on subscribing for an "interest" the subscriber must tender a deposit.

Platinum submits that the Act does not apply primarily because they are not a "vendor" within the meaning of the Act.

The Act provides that no person shall act as a "vendor" or a "builder" unless he is registered.

In the present case, Marchant Building Corporation is the builder under a contract with the limited partnership.

Under the Act the units are "homes" (s. 1(d)). Marchant is a "builder" if it is under a contract with a "vendor" or "owner" (s. 1(a)). Selling includes entering into an agreement to sell (s. 1(l)).

The Act defines "owner" and "vendor" as follows:

1. In this Act,

(g) "owner" means a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and his successors in title;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner;

In my opinion, the investor is an "owner" under the Act if the limited partnership is a "vendor". Whether or not the unit is occupied by a tenant before he acquires title is immaterial: see the White Oaks case. He has entered into an agreement that gives him the right to acquire title and therefore the agreement itself falls within the definition of "sell". He becomes the beneficial owner the moment he signs the subscription agreement to acquire his "interest".

The limited partnership has title to the project. When the subscriber paid for his "interest" he became one of the partners owning the project. However, the agreement also provides for the transfer to him of a specified unit. In my opinion, this was a sale by a vendor. The limited partnership was the "vendor" and the subscriber was the "owner" within the meaning of the Act. A partnership can "sell" a home to one of its individual partners. That is what is provided for in this case.

For these reasons it is declared that each of the respondents in the O.N.H.W.P. application are acting as a "vendor" or "builder" without being registered, contrary to s. 6 of the Act, and they are ordered to comply with the provisions of the Act, including not building until they have so complied.

There are some provisions in the regulations under the Act, particularly those that relate to deposits that are not entirely appropriate to the facts of this case, but this does not alter my conclusion.

The application of Platinum is dismissed.

O.N.H.W.P. is entitled to its costs in both applications.

Judgment accordingly.

Re Reiners et al. and Mercer et al.

66 O.R. (2d) 641

Action No. 9174/88

ONTARIO District Court of Ontario West D.C.J. December 23, 1988.

MOTION to declare void the election of certain directors for a condominium corporation.

D.S. Strashin, for applicants.

L. Radomsky, for respondents.

WEST D.C.J.:-- On this motion the court has been asked to declare void the election of certain directors of a condominium corporation.

The facts are not in dispute. Prior to November 7, 1988, the applicants were the directors of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 7. The Corporation controls a complex of 217 town house units located at 475 Bramalea Rd. in the City of Mississauga. On November 7, 1988, a special general meeting of the Corporation was held pursuant to the requisition of certain owners to consider among other matters the removal of the directors. No issue was taken as to the validity of the meeting.

One hundred and twenty-six owners were represented at the meeting in person or by proxy. One hundred and nineteen ballots were cast with respect to the applicants Reiners, Gould and Armstrong and 117 ballots were cast with respect to the applicants Geer and Leblond. In each case a majority of the votes cast were in favour of removal. The number in favour ranged from 80 to 86 owners.

The outcome of this motion depends upon the interpretation placed upon s. 15(8) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980 c. 84. This subsection reads as follows:

15(8) Any director may be removed before the expiration of his term by a vote of owners who together own a majority of the units and the owners may elect, in accordance with the by-laws dealing with the election of directors, any person qualified to be a member of the board for the remainder of the term of the director removed.

It is the position of the applicants that s. 15(8) should be interpreted as requiring that those voting in favour of removal in each case must constitute a majority of the owners.

The position of the respondents is that as long as the owners voting at the meeting represent a majority of owners, actions taken at the meeting should be determined by a simple majority of votes cast.

Neither counsel was able to cite any authority to the court dealing with this issue.

The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines "vote" as:

The collective support of a special number or class of persons in a deliberative decision, election, etc.; a resolution or decision passed by, or carried in, an assembly as the result of voting; an expression of opinion formerly [sic] adopted by a meeting of any kind.

Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed.) defines "vote" as:

... the expression of one's will, preference, or choice, formally manifested by a member of a legislative or deliberative body, or of a constituency or a body of qualified electors, in regard to the decision to be made by the body as a whole upon any proposed measure or proceeding or in passing laws, rules or regulations, or the selection of an officer or representative. And the aggregate of the expressions of will or choice, thus manifested by individuals, is called the "vote of the body".

These definitions appear to support the proposition that "vote" refers to the action taken. The manner in which the vote is taken is controlled by s. 22(6) of the Act which reads:

22(6) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, all questions proposed for the consideration of the owners at a meeting of owners shall be determined by a majority of the votes cast.

As well, Words and Phrases Legal Maxims refers to Re Young and Glanvilles Ltd. (1918), 39 D.L.R. 629, [1918] 2 W.W.R. 352, 13 A.L.R. 265 (Alta. C.A.), as authority for the proposition that the words "... majority vote ..." mean a vote by a majority of the electors actually voting, not of those entitled to vote".

I therefore conclude that the requirement of majority representation contained in s. 15(8) relates to the constitution of the meeting in question. Once the meeting is validly constituted actions taken thereat are to be determined by a majority of the votes cast.

In the result the motion is dismissed with costs.

Motion dismissed.

Re Ontario New Home Warranty Program and Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. et al. and two other applications (H.C.J.)

65 O.R. (2d) 362

ONTARIO High Court of Justice R.E. Holland J. August 22, 1988.

APPLICATIONS, heard together, for the interpretation of a statute.

B. Campbell, for Ontario New Home Warranty Program.

L.J. Levine, Q.C., for Meadows of White Oaks II Limited et al. and Philmor (L'Esprit) Development Corporation.

Stephen Schwartz, for Carlyle Residences Inc.

R.E. HOLLAND J.:-- These three applications were heard together for interpretation of the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (the Act), and as to whether certain companies (the companies) must register pursuant to the provisions of the Act.

Facts

Ontario Home Warranty Program is a non-profit, non-share corporation, incorporated under the laws of Ontario designated pursuant to the Act to administer the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan.

The Act provides a scheme for warranty coverage, deposit refund coverage and compensation.

Vendor/builders of new homes are required to provide warranty and deposit coverage to purchaser/owners, failing which claims can be made to the warranty programme. If the claims are valid in respect of a breach of warranty, or failure to complete a purchase agreement, payment of such claims are made from the warranty programme guaranty fund. All vendor/builders of new homes in Ontario must be registered under the Act. The warranty programme has the authority to review the financial statements of applicants, their past conduct, and their technical ability, to determine whether registration will be granted. Terms and conditions may be imposed on the registrant sufficient to give effect to the Act.

A vendor/builder of new homes shall not commence construction prior to being registered with the warranty programme and paying all prescribed fees.

The companies are engaged in the construction and sale of condominium units in the Province of Ontario. For example, The Carlyle Residences Inc. is building a condominium project in the City of Mississauga consisting of four separate buildings each containing 341 units. By January, 1988, the first building was already 80% sold. The companies are not registered.

The position of the director of registration

For some years the director of registration for the programme had interpreted the legislation as excluding coverage where units were sold to investors who are not intended to occupy the units themselves but rather rent the units out to tenants. There has been a change of policy and the programme has now taken the position that registration is required.

The position of the companies

The companies take the position that they are not covered by the Act because the agreements of purchase and sale under which the units are sold indicate the clear intention to provide the purchaser with a tax shelter investment and under no circumstances will a purchaser ever occupy a unit on closing. Units will be rented since should a purchaser occupy his or her unit then the tax benefit would be lost and the whole intent and purpose of the agreement of purchase and sale would be nullified.

The agreements of purchase and sale

The agreements of purchase and sale are similar. I will consider the specific provisions of the "White Oaks" agreement. The parties are described in the general agreement as "Purchaser/Owner" and "Vendor". The general agreement provides for the purchase of a specific condominium unit.

Reemark Group Management is described as rental agent in the general agreement. The purchaser/owner acknowledges having read and understood the terms and conditions of the unit purchase agreement, trust agreement, development agreement, services agreement, rental management agreement, guaranty agreement and appliances lease, "which agreements ... form integral parts of" the general agreement and "agrees to comply with and be bound by each and every condition contained therein ...".

The unit purchase agreement provides for the sale and conveyance of the beneficial ownership of the unit. The agreement provides for the payment of a deposit and the assumption of a mortgage. The deposit is to be returned in the event that the purchase agreement is terminated by either party. The purchaser has the option to self-manage the unit following registration of the transfer. There is no provision that prevents the purchaser from occupying the unit. The projects are designed to be sold as tax shelters and should an owner choose to occupy his or her unit then the tax benefits would be lost.

Law

The Act contains the following provisions: 1. In this Act,

(a) "builder" means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner;

(d) "home" means,

(iii) a condominium dwelling unit, including the common elements, or

and includes any structure or appurtenance used in conjunction therewith, but does not include a dwelling built and sold for occupancy for temporary periods or for seasonal purposes; (g) "owner" means a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and his successors in title;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner;

6. No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

11(2) When a vendor enters into a contract for the sale of a home to an owner or for the construction of a home for an owner, the vendor shall deliver to the owner such documentation and notices respecting the Plan as are prescribed by the regulations.

12. A builder shall not commence to construct a home until he has notified the Corporation of the fact, has provided the Corporation with such particulars as the Corporation requires and has paid the prescribed fee to the Corporation.

15. For the purposes of sections 13 and 14 [which deal with warranties and compensation], a condominium corporation shall be deemed to be the owner of the common elements of the condominium and the warranties take effect on the date of the registration of the declaration and description.

The companies are builders as defined by the Act and the condominium units are "homes" not built, "for occupancy for temporary periods" such as a hotel.

The problem is raised by the definition of the word "owner". Counsel for the companies submit that the homes are not acquired for occupancy by the owner but rather for rental by the owner.

I do not understand why the words "for occupancy" were included in the definition of "owner" since it surely would be unusual for a person to acquire a home for anything other than occupancy. These particular homes will be occupied presumably by tenants. If the term "occupancy" was intended to be limited to occupancy by the owner, then the words "by the owner" could have been added. In the absence of any such words it appears to me that the purchasers come within the definition of "owner". In coming to this conclusion I accept that the legislation itself is remedial and should be liberally construed. However, the legislation should be given a strict interpretation in determining the class of persons to which the Act applies: Clarkson Co. Ltd. v. Ace Lumber Ltd. (1963), 36 D.L.R. (2d) 554, [1963] S.C.R. 110, 4 C.B.R. (N.S.) 116 (S.C.C.).

A condominium corporation can make a claim in respect of the common elements.

Conclusion

I conclude that the Act does apply and would apply even if a purchaser were absolutely prohibited from occupying a unit. In the present case even though it could well be financially unwise for a purchaser to occupy a unit there is no such prohibition and the Act clearly applies.

The companies must therefore register pursuant to the Act. There will be no costs of the application.

Judgment accordingly.

Re Key et al. and St. George Holdings Co. Ltd. et al.

[1972] 3 O.R. 326-329

ONTARIO [HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE] KEITH, J. 1ST JUNE 1972.

APPLICATION under s. 23(2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77.

J.A. Ronson, for applicants.

B. Sischy, Q.C., for respondent, St. George Holdings Co. Ltd.

C.L. Morris, for respondents, Frank Gigal, Willard Kerr, Terrence Joseph McDonough and Sidni F. Marquis.

KEITH, J.(orally):-- This is an application brought by the owners of three units of a property at 190 St. George St., Toronto, the original owner of which was the respondent St. George Holdings Co. Limited, and which has been brought since July 28, 1971, under the provision of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77.

To state the problem shortly, the three applicants who are owners of residential units within the entire 12-story building, seek an order of the Court under s. 23 of the statute, which reads as follows:

23(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration or the by-laws is not performed, the corporation, any owner, or any person having an encumbrance against a unit and common interest may apply to the Supreme Court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty, and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances. (3) Nothing in this section restricts the remedies otherwise available for failure to perform any duty imposed by this Act.

This power in the Court becomes important, having regard to the provisions of s. 12 of the Act, which reads as follows:

12(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

(3) The corporation, and any person having an encumbrance against any unit and common interest, has a right to the compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

The complaint of the three applicants, put very shortly, amounts to this. That at the time of the registration of the Declaration that is required to be registered to bring a property under the Condominium Act, in its accompanying description it appears that on the first level, the four units that face Lowther Ave. are shown as four totally independent units, and it is indicated that the location in which the walls that would separate those units one from the other and from the common walls belonging to the entire building, ought to be located on certain boundary lines. In point of fact, the evidence is that as between units one and two, and units three and four, the walls were never at any time fully constructed as shown on the description, but were left open pending any offers for the sale of one or two units or, indeed, for all of the four units, to a prospective purchaser. What is now proposed is that, without in any way increasing the total area that should be encompassed by these four units within the boundaries as shown, the area available to the units should be subdivided interiorly in a somewhat different fashion than that shown on the original plan that was filed at the time the property was brought under the Condominium Act. The effect of doing this will provide a common foyer or hallway for the occupants of units one and two, and a similar foyer or hallway to the occupants of units three and four. I am informed and the evidence supports this, that it is proposed that units one and two taken somewhat together in this manner, and units three and four also taken in the same manner, will be occupied by dentists for the practice of their profession, and that the object of subdividing the interior area is to make a useful and proper or suitable waiting room that would serve the dentists, whether the particular dentist was in the area that belongs to unit one or the area that belongs to unit two, and similarly with respect to units three and four.

It is urged on me that under the provisions of s. 12 of the Act, each owner being bound to comply with the Act, the declaration and the by-laws, and having a right to the compliance by the other owners with the Act, the declaration and the by-laws, and the boundary lines being shown as they are on the registered plan, that I have really no alternative, under s. 23(2), but to make an order that they be complied with. Of course, the result of that order would make it impossible for the contemplated internal layout of the units one and two, and units three and four, to be accomplished.

No question arises with respect to the use to be made of the actual units, as this is a permissible use and has been from the inception of the whole project. There were some reasons advanced as to why this proposed use would be inimical to the interests of the residential holders, but I doubt that unless it is shown that their real interest in the common elements of the condominium has been affected (and this has not been shown), that one should be particularly impressed with what I suspect are largely fanciful objections to the use being made.

In my view, there is no substance to this application. The proposal does not in any way detract from the amount of common element available to each and every unit holder. What it does is something that I think has always been contemplated, and, in my view, is quite permissible so long as the total obligation is not varied with respect to the occupants of the condominium as a whole. Thus when unit one, for example, is required to contribute a certain percentage to the operating costs of the condominium, no rearrangement of the interior partitions can change that without the approval of the unit holders in their entirety. That is not to say that, as between the owners of units one and two, for example, they themselves may not make contributions as they see fit. It is the over-all picture that must be regarded.

In the result, I have come to the conclusion that the application must be dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Louise Filion Morest, Appellant, v. Her Majesty the Queen, Respondent

[1992] T.C.J. No. 130

Action No. 91-2146(IT)

Tax Court of Canada Montreal, Quebec Rip T.C.J. Heard: January 13, 1992 Judgment: February 21, 1992

Serge Fournier, for the Appellant. Marie-Andrée Legault, for the Respondent.

RIP T.C.J.:-- The appellant, Louise Filion, has appealed from assessments of tax for 1986, 1987 and 1988, electing to proceed under the informal procedure provisions of the Tax Court of Canada. The Minister of National Revenue ("Minister") disallowed the appellant, in computing her income, to deduct purported rental losses with respect to a real property she owned at the time in the State of Florida on the basis the real property was not maintained in connection with a business or with a reasonable expectation of profit: paragraphs 18(1)(a) and 18(1)(h) of the Income Tax Act ("Act").

At all relevant times Ms. Filion was a public relations officer with Canadian National. In 1981 she was married to Yves Morest, a real estate agent in Quebec. She and Morest were of the view in 1981 that she ought to acquire a rental property in Florida. They spent about three weeks looking at various properties in the State, in particular in the Fort Lauderdale, Pompano and Sunrise areas. Filion testified she was looking for a real property of quality construction in a good secure area which would have a profit earning capacity. Filion said she sought the advice of Morest and real estate agents in Florida, in particular a Mr. Knopf of Keyes Realtor, to ensure the real property to be purchased was attractive from an income point of view. [TRANSLATION] "Profitability was very important", she insisted. She was informed by agents, there was, in Florida, a high season, as well as a low season for renting real property and she could expect a profit by renting for 25 weeks a year. A table was prepared at the time which showed the rents she could expect to receive from a condominium unit in Sunrise Village, near Fort Lauderdale.

December and January 8 weeks at $450.00 $3,600.00 October and November 8 weeks at $350.00 $2,800.00 February 1 week at $450.00 $ 450.00 March 4 weeks at $450.00 $1,800.00 May and June 2 weeks at $275.00 $ 550.00 July and August 2 weeks at $275.00 $ 550.00 ----- Total 25 weeks $9,750.00

Filion considered her potential clientele for the real property to be family and people she knew in Quebec. She wanted to create what she called a [TRANSLATION] "regular clientele" who would rent for about four weeks at a time and return the following year.

The real property was acquired in June, 1981 for the purchase price of $74,000.00 (U.S.). Filion paid a deposit of $16,000.00 (U.S.) and the balance was financed by a Florida bank, secured by a first mortgage, with interest at 12.5% per annum, amortized over 29 years. No profit was foreseen for 1982 as only 20 weeks of occupancy was anticipated for that year once the unit was ready to accept guests. Mr. Knopf had suggested the appellant find a long term tenant "until we get organized" and then rent monthly or weekly.

Filion authorized Knopf to rent the real property for "around $700.00 a month more or less" for one year, with an option for a further year if the tenant wished. Filion stated she actually wanted short term tenants but real estate agents in the area did not accept short term mandates and this was the reason for a one year term. However, in the June 22, 1981 edition of Le Soleil, Filion herself placed an advertisement offering to rent the real property on the same terms.

In 1982, Filion said she made efforts to bring the real property to the attention of the public who would visit Florida as tourists. She prepared a brochure, advertised in Quebec and Florida newspapers and called people who previously had expressed an interest in the real property. In order to cover operating costs she asked real estate agents in Florida and Canada to look for clients. She indicated the years 1982 to 1984 inclusive was the period to obtain a [TRANSLATION] "regular clientele".

The appellant's problems began early. Various clients who stayed on the property in 1983 and 1984 did not return as anticipated. Apparently, according to Filion's evidence, it became cheaper to travel from Quebec by charter and stay in tourist areas and near the Caribbean such as the Dominican Republic and Venezuela rather than Florida. At the same time Canada was experiencing a recession. Also, new construction, which Filion stated was unforeseen in 1981, took place around Sunrise and potential clientele preferred newer facilities. This resulted in vacancies and reduced rent from the real property. Also, she said, some people would make a reservation and not show up; she would retain the deposit, if any.

In 1986 Filion requested an agent in Florida, Roger Roy, who had a French Canadian clientele to attempt to rent the real property. She also made inquiries with a travel agent in Quebec who sent people to Florida. She had some success with Roy but no leads came from the travel agent.

Subsequently, in 1989, Filion sought long term tenants. One tenant entered into a one year lease but all his postdated cheques, except his first cheque, were returned for insufficient funds.

The persons who, in 1981, advised Filion a profit could be made on the real property, later on told her they had not foreseen new construction and an unfavourable economy, she testified. Filion insisted her rates for the unit were competitive but if people wanted to deal, she was prepared to deal since she preferred the real property be occupied rather than vacant.

Filion testified she stayed at the real property not more than five weeks during the time she owned the real property. When in Florida, she would stay at a hotel.

In 1981, Filion said, she not only projected gross rentals but also projected expenses. No projection of expenses was produced at trial. She stated that annual expenses for the years in appeal were $10,000.00 to $12,000.00 per annum, not including depreciation, and for 1981 would have been "a little less". These expenses included condominium fees, utilities, mortgage interest and escrow, insurance and taxes. Her losses for the years in appeal were the following:

1986 $7,019.00 1987 $11,867.00 1988 $9,444.00

For the earlier years her losses from the real property were the following:

1981 $8,744.00 1982 $11,565.00 1983 $10,065.00 1984 $11,932.00 1985 $11,321.00

For the period 1981 to 1988 Filion's total revenue from the real property was $12,619.00 and expenses (not including depreciation) totalled $101,576.27. As of December, 1988 the mortgage on the real property was $57,782.00 (U.S.). The real property was sold in 1989.

The respondent's counsel cross examined Filion as to whether she purchased the real property to sell. On October 27, 1981 Knopf had sent Filion a letter enclosing copies of a brochure offering the real property for sale; the letter described, in part, the marketing of the real property.

In November 1981 Knopf wrote Filion advising her that he had been offering the real property for rent at $600.00 per month without success and informed her the competition in the area was offering rentals at $525.00 per month. He confirmed that "I am still placing ads for sale". Filion stated that she was obligated to authorize an agent to sell the real property in order to retain the services of a real estate agent in Florida. She had no intention to sell, she insisted.

In 1989 Filion rejected recommendations of Roger Roy, her real estate agent in Florida at the time, that she rent the real property. Apparently, by then she wished the real property to be sold. She did not wish to rent, she informed Roy, unless it was for a long period of time since in her view the real property tends to deteriorate faster when rented on a short term basis and she loses control of the occupant. She indicated to Roy that "occasionally, she rented the house for a few weeks to friends".

Counsel for the appellant submitted there were three factors responsible for the losses incurred by his client: the recession of the early 1980's [Note 1 appended to judgment], the proliferation of inexpensive charter trips to the Caribbean and unforeseen construction in the area. Were it not for these factors, he argued, Filion would have rented the real property as anticipated and projected rentals would have been realized. When Filion saw that there were problems in renting the real property she adjusted her plans and sought out realtors to rent the real property. The projections in 1981, he concluded, were reasonable, the [TRANSLATION] "regular clientele" she anticipated in 1981 was realistic at the time.

The appellant relied on the following reported cases: Ahluwalia v. M.N.R., 87 D.T.C. 592, Baker v. M.N.R., 87 D.T.C. 566, Paikin v. M.N.R., 87 D.T.C. 6 and McNeil v. The Queen, 89 D.T.C. 5516.

In Ahluwalia, the rental of a unit in Florida owned by the taxpayer was handled by the condominium owners association. The taxpayer paid off his first mortgage on the unit within seven years of purchase and his revenues from the real property increased from $3,150.00 in 1979 to $20,400.00 in 1986. Unforeseen repair costs was the root of his losses. In Baker one of the reasons for the losses was the discovery of the existence of a mortgage after acquisition of the real property. The taxpayer in Paikin obtained an open and fixed rate mortgage to enable him to pay down the mortgage as funds were available and had a full-time tenant, the taxpayer's mother, paying rent at fair market value. The trial judge in McNeil considered that since the real property in question had been approved by the Minister as a class 31 multiple unit residential building there was an implication that the Minister accepted that the real property was to be used for investment purposes. Also there were a number of combined factors affecting the rentability of the real property: unsightly excavation on adjoining property, unpleasant attitude by other occupants in the building and a condominium by-law precluding further rental of units. None of the factors found in these four cases are present in the instant appeal.

I am not satisfied Filion would not have sold the real property at any time after acquisition had a favourable price been offered. There is no evidence to corroborate that a real estate agent would not accept a mandate to find short term tenants or that no real estate agent would accept a mandate to rent without, at the same time, being authorized to sell the real property.

No friend or family member testified that he or she, in 1981, expressed a serious interest to Filion to rent the real property while vacationing in Florida. While Filion may have discussed her potential purchase with friends, I am not satisfied that such discussions could have served as a basis on which one would acquire a real property with the reasonable expectation of earning a profit from such a potential clientele. And if this clientele would not be realized, Filion, residing in Quebec and otherwise employed, would have to seek out clientele for a property hundreds of miles away. Such efforts would not, in ordinary circumstances, be susceptible of success.

I also have doubt that the projected rentals were reasonable. Filion's attempt in 1981 to rent the real property through Knopf were for rents in excess of the market value at the time. I am not confident that the rentals at market value would have generated a profit, taking into account the carrying costs of the mortgage, condominium costs, taxes, repairs and maintenance, insurance and utilities, let alone depreciation.

For these reasons, the appeals are dismissed.

APPENDIX

Note 1: I note that in the middle of the year 1981, the interest rates in Canada were very high and that their peak was not yet in sight; Mrs. Filion was surely aware of the economic situation in Canada when she bought the real property.

Lambton Condominium Corp. No. 16. v. Plowright

Between

Lambton Condominium Corporation No. 16, plaintiff, and Dennis Plowright also known as Denny Plowright, and Andrew Spriet and Marga Murdoch carrying on business in partnership as Pier 17 Docks, defendants

Court File No. 11662/92

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division)
Killeen J.

Heard: September 24, 25, 1997.

Judgment: December 22, 1997.

(16 pp.)

This was an action for a declaration that a lease had expired. The defendants, Plowright and others, built a condominium on riverside property. Prior to the registration of the condominium, they leased docking rights to a partnership, Pier 17. Plowright and the others controlled Pier 17. Pier 17 paid $100 rent per annum for a 20-year term. The plaintiff corporation was created when the condominium was registered. The lease was detailed in clear language in disclosure statements to prospective unit owners. The corporation accepted rental payments and repair contributions from Pier 17. The corporation brought an action for a declaration that the lease had expired. It sought damages for trespass and unjust enrichment from the operation of the docks by Pier 17. The corporation contended that the lease expired as it was not ratified within 12 months of execution by the corporation's independent board of directors. It claimed that Plowright and the others failed to disclose their common interest in the condominium builder and Pier 17 after the independent board was elected.

Counsel:

Peter Dobbie, for the plaintiff.

Elizabeth Hewitt, for the defendant.

1 KILLEEN J.:— The plaintiff, Lambton Condominium Corporation No. 16 ("L.C.C."), has sued Pier 17 Docks ("Pier 17") for declaratory and related relief as follows:

- 1) a declaration that a lease between Sundaze Developments Inc. and Pier 17 Docks, dated September 19, 1986, has expired as of October 1, 1987, pursuant to s. 39 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26;
- 2) a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the lands included in the lease;
- 3) consequential damages for trespass or unjust enrichment from October 1, 1987.

The Facts

2 In 1986 or earlier, a limited company known as Sundaze Developments Inc. ("Sundaze") decided to construct a 17-unit condominium building on a property it owned on the edge of the Ausable River at Grand Bend. At that time and subsequently the controlling interest in Sundaze was held by the three defendants in this action, namely, Dennis Plowright, Andrew Spriet and Marga Murdoch.

3 Before proceeding further with the condominium development, the three defendants made a decision on behalf of Sundaze to lease the docking rights in front of the property on the Ausable River to a partnership known as Pier 17 which they created for themselves in equal shares.

4 The actual lease from Sundaze to Pier 17 is dated September 19, 1986, and was registered on title on October 2 as Instrument No. 584670 in the land registry office in Sarnia. The demised lands under the lease are shown outlined in yellow on Ex. 8, an engineer's plot plan which outlines the complete site, including the condominium building which was actually constructed. The lands consist of a long dock or walkway running along the bank of Ausable River together with a retaining wall running along its course and, as well, the tenant was given exclusive use of an eight-car parking lot south of the west end of the dock along with rights of way to the parking lot and the dock for the purposes of the lease.

5 The lease contained a generous rental rate for the tenant. Pier 17 was only required to pay $100 in rent for a 20-year rental term expiring on September 30, 2006. However, Pier 17 had to develop the dock for the leasing of docking spaces to boat owners by constructing six finger slips along the dock and water and electrical outlets. Also, Pier 17 was responsible for business and real property taxes, utility charges and prescribed shares of ordinary maintenance expenses on the dock and retaining wall.

6 Under para. 4.18 of the lease, Pier 17 also gave Sundaze a special "first right to lease dockage" at a discounted rate of 90% of regular annual docking charges.

7 It would seem that Pier 17 commenced operating the docking facilities in the 1987 season, well before the condominium building was ready for registration under the Condominium Act. There were 17 docking spaces available at the dock.

8 The building was completed in 1987 and the Declaration was registered on September 15, 1987, thereby formally creating L.C.C. as a legal entity under the Act. The turnover to an independent Board occurred at the October 31 Board meeting when a new Board took over consisting of Marlene Bennett as president, Read Hilton as secretary, Diane Voll as treasurer, and Andrew Spriet and Marga Murdoch, two of the defendants, as vice-presidents.

9 There can be little doubt that the three fresh directors knew at the turnover, and probably much earlier, that the three defendants held the benefit of the Pier 17 lease on the docking rights. As well, such knowledge must also be attributed to all purchasers of units from time to time.

10 I have already noted that the lease itself was registered on title as early as October 2, 1986, about a year before the building was registered under the Act. Also, one must observe here that the lease was disclosed in clear language in the Declaration and Disclosure Statement, called for under the Act, as well as in each agreement of purchase and sale for an individual unit.

11 The Declaration discloses the lease and its rights in the following way:

4.5 Prior Lease of Waterfront

A portion of the Common Elements described as Parts 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, Plan 25R-4697, are subject to a lease or/and right-of-way registered prior to the Declaration in favour of Pier 17 Docks. This lease covers the use of the waterfront for the purpose of contracting out the use of dock space on the Ausable River and includes a right-of-way providing for the use of eight parking spots at the West end of the site and the use of certain portions of the Common Elements for the purpose of access to the parking spots and the waterfront. This lease and right-of-way is for a twenty year term from the 1st day of October, 1986 and does not contain any provision for renewal.

12 The Disclosure Statement contains a very lengthy passage about the lease:

WATERFRONT

The waterfront area, being the land boarding the Ausable River upon which the retaining wall is constructed, while owned by the Condominium Corporation and forming part of the Common Elements will be subject to a Lease registered in favour of a third party prior to the application of the Condominium Act to this property. That Lease will run for a twenty (20) year term and will allow the Tenant the exclusive right to control the use of docking space on the Ausable River adjacent to the property.

The Lease also permits the Tenant and those individuals to whom it contracts docking space, the right to use eight (8) parking spots on the west end of the property for parking cars and to use certain areas for the purpose of walking between the parking spots and the docking areas.

Pursuant to the terms of this Lease, the Tenant will be required to pay for its share of the upkeep and maintenance on the retaining wall, the sidewalks and the parking areas. The Tenant will be required to pay for the cost of all water and hydro supplied to boaters and there will be separate meters installed for these utilities.

The effect of this Lease is that the leasing or contracting out of dockage space along the Ausable River adjacent to the property for the period of twenty (20) years will be controlled by the Tenant rather than the Condominium Corporation. The Lease does contain a provision allowing owners of Units within the Condominium to have the first right to obtain dockage space at a discount of 10% over that charged the general public.

Other than the requirement for contributing to repairs and maintenance and to paying for all utilities used, the Lease does not provide a rental income to the Condominium Corporation. The rent payable by the Tenant pursuant to the Lease is payable in a lump sum at the commencement of the Lease and no further rent will be received by the Condominium Corporation.

A copy of this Lease document will be delivered with the Disclosure Statement.

Finally, the Lease Agreement provides that there shall be no fence or structure constructed separating the Leased premises from the balance of the Common Elements, other than decorative structures.

13 It should be added that the Disclosure Statement, on its front page, contains a highlighted warning under which purchasers are advised to retain independent counsel so that they will be fully familiar with their rights and obligations under the Act and their agreements of purchase and sale.

14 The standard agreement of purchase and sale for this project also contained, in para. 7.01(f), another fair-disclosure passage about this lease and indicated that it was registered on title. The uncontradicted evidence of Mr. Spriet, a defence witness, was that when a sale agreement was concluded with a prospective purchaser, that purchaser received a "package" of materials, including the Declaration, Disclosure Statement and a copy of the lease.

15 Two unit owners, David Greig and Jane Few, testified at trial on behalf of the plaintiff. Their combined evidence really did not advance the plaintiff's case beyond what was already contained in the basic documentation filed at trial.

16 Mr. Greig bought a unit in October, 1988, and went on the Board in 1989. While he said that he knew nothing about the lease when he bought his unit, he acknowledged that he had a lawyer at the time of purchase. I have to say that his expressed lack of knowledge about the lease struck me as incredible, given the disclosure of the lease in the closing documents and his retention of a lawyer then.

17 While Mr. Greig and some other members of the Board from time to time seemed to be in doubt about what the lease contained in the 1988 - early 1990 period, there is no doubt they knew it existed and knew full well that Pier 17 was operating the docking facilities independently of the condominium corporation. They also knew that Pier 17 was owned and operated by the three defendants, Spriet, Murdoch and Plowright. This unalterable fact is reflected in the minutes of the Directors' meetings (Ex. 1) and the evidence of both Mr. Greig and Ms. Few.

18 One should note, here, that Ms. Murdoch and Mr. Spriet stayed on the Board after the October, 1987, turnover for several years and certainly did not hide their positions as owners of Pier 17.

19 The minutes for the June 11, 1989, meeting are helpful on the awareness of the Board. In those minutes the Board was wrestling with some repairs to the brickwork on the dock at an estimated cost of $1,200. The Board decided to go ahead and Ms. Murdoch raised the point that Pier 17 should pay 50% under the lease provisions. For some unexplained reason, the Board did not have a copy of the lease even though it had been registered on title in 1986 and copies were provided to purchasers of units in the condominium building.

20 These repairs were in fact done in 1989 and Pier 17 issued a cheque on June 15, 1990, for $1,000 which covered a $600 or one-half contribution to the repairs together with $400 towards apparent rental payments owing under the lease for 1987 through to 1990. Ironically, these rental payments were erroneously paid at the behest of Mr. Spriet who mistakenly thought that the lease called for $100 annual rental payments. L.C.C. cashed this cheque on June 18 and has not seen fit to return the clearly erroneous overpayment to Pier 17. In fact, of course, the lease called for but one payment of $100 for the entire 20-year lease and this rental payout probably was paid, as called for, on October 1, 1986, to the developer, Sundaze.

21 There is no doubt that the new unit owners and directors raised questions about the lease from time to time between 1988 and the spring of 1992. Even though the Board minutes show that a few directors were asking about the lease, I conclude that, by not later than May 21, 1990, the Board had finally got a copy from its lawyers. The April 8 minutes indicate that the chairperson, Diane Voll, was to get a copy from the lawyers and the May 21 minutes confirm, by silence, that this must have been done.

22 On June 15, the condominium had received the Pier 17 cheque for $1,000 and cashed it. As I have said, it includes $600 to cover one-half of the prior year's dock surface repairs and demonstrates that Pier 17 and L.C.C. were acting as if the lease existed and that they were acting under it. L.C.C., of course, had become a successor in title, or statutory assignee under the lease in virtue of its takeover of the condominium building from Sundaze in September, 1987, through registration of the Declaration.

23 It was not until February, 1992, that the Board decided to get a legal opinion about the validity of the lease. This initiative was undoubtedly precipitated by some new directors, including Ms. Few, who had registered some criticisms after she had purchased a unit in July, 1991, and gone on the Board in September as treasurer. By this time the Board had received some bad news about major repair costs to the retaining wall. The consulting engineering firm of Golder Associates had issued a report in late 1990 which said that the retaining wall would require major repairs, sometime in the next five or ten years, and costing about $360,000.

24 The current action was, in fact, started on June 26, 1992, after that legal opinion was obtained.

The Legal Issues and Their Resolution

25 Mr. Dobbie, for the plaintiff, L.C.C., rests his case against the defendants on the applicability of sections 39 and 17 of the Act to the facts of this case. I will deal with his two liability arguments under these sections and then move on to the damages questions.

26 Section 39 reads as follows:

39(1) The corporation may by by-law terminate, on giving sixty days notice in writing, any agreement between the corporation and any person for the management of the property entered into at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of a majority of the units.

(2) Every agreement for the provision of services on a continuing basis, every lease of the common elements or part thereof for business purposes and every agreement for the provision of recreation facilities to the corporation on other than a non-profit basis entered into by a corporation after the 1st day of June, 1979 and at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of a majority of the units that does not expire within twelve months after its effective date shall be deemed to expire twelve months after its effective date unless, within the twelve month period, the agreement is ratified by the board at a time when the majority of the board members were elected after the declarant ceased to be the registered owner of a majority of the units.

27 Mr. Dobbie points out that the Act is a sui generis consumer protection law for purchasers of condominium units. It is aimed, in relevant part, at preventing "profiteering" by predatory developers of condominium projects across Ontario.

28 On his approach, s. 39(2) of the Act should be construed such that the lease entered by the developer corporation, Sundaze, with the three-person partnership, Pier 17, comprised of the defendants, Spriet, Plowright and Murdoch, is caught by the language of s. 39(2) and must be "deemed" to have expired 12 months after its effective date of October 1, 1986.

29 Ms. Hewitt, on the other hand, argues that Mr. Dobbie's interpretation of the reach of s. 39(2) is so broad as to constitute an attempt at a blatant re-writing of the subsection.

30 I agree with Ms. Hewitt's approach to this subsection and conclude that the words of the subsection cannot rationally bear the weight of the construction which Mr. Dobbie wishes to impose upon them.

31 Section 39(2) is a rather lengthy and awkwardly worded proviso but, in my view, its gist is this. It provides that leases or other agreements entered by a condominium corporation before the takeover by an independent Board will be deemed to have expired unless ratified by the independent Board within the 12-month period after the lease or agreement was entered and became effective.

32 In this case, the following facts are beyond dispute:

(1) The developer, Sundaze, owned the lands on which the condominium building was constructed and concurrently held the dockage rights which it leased to Pier 17 under the lease signed on September 30, 1986.

(2) This Pier 17 lease became effective by its terms on October 1, 1986, whereas the condominium corporation, L.C.C., only came into existence on September 15, 1997, with registration.

(3) In the intervening year after October 1, 1986, Pier 17 had set up the dock and its slips and was operating it on its own behalf to the knowledge of prospective purchasers of condominium units.

33 During argument, Mr. Dobbie argued that Sundaze, and its principals, were attempting to do an "end run" around s. 39(2) by granting the lease to three of its own principals acting as the partnership, Pier 17, and that it would be somehow unconscionable to allow Sundaze and the partnership to get away with this stratagem.

34 First, I note that there is no evidence supporting Mr. Dobbie's argument that the Sundaze-Pier 17 lease was an artificial stratagem constituting an end run around the statute. So far as I can see, the transaction was a perfectly legitimate business transaction and was fully documented in an above-the-board manner, including execution and registration of the lease and disclosure for income tax purposes. A few years later, in 1991, Revenue Canada re-assessed the transaction with the result that the partnership was effectively required to pay additional taxes arising from the amortization of this lease. However, Revenue Canada did not question the legitimacy of the lease or the Pier 17 partnership itself.

35 One of the defendants, Mr. Spriet, testified at the trial about the circumstances of the creation of the lease. He said that he and his partners in Sundaze assumed in 1986 that they had a right to make a business decision with respect to the dockage rights and that the decision they made would be unfettered by their plan to proceed with the condominium development. They essentially had three options for such dockage rights: first, the full dockage rights could be sold outright to someone immediately for a given lump-sum price; second, they could be sold later to unit owners after the condominium building was constructed with various pricing models on an individual basis or, third, they could be leased, as they were, to a third party well before the condominium corporation was created.

36 Mr. Spriet said that the decision made by him and his partners to set up a partnership and lease to that partnership for 20 years was a pure business decision. He and his partners simply felt that this lease structure would buttress their investment in the overall project and guarantee a reasonable return over the 20 years of the lease, after which the rights would revert to the condominium unit owners within the legal framework of the condominium building itself.

37 It is a fruitless exercise to attempt to identify grossly excessive profits from this lease over the years - even assuming such an exercise would be material.

38 The financial statements produced by the defence show that in the 1987-96 period, the gross revenues were $108,990, or about $11,000 per year, and the profit was around $59,000. Assuming these figures held up for the balance of the lease, the profit for 20 years would be about $100,000 and divisible in three portions.

39 One of the plaintiff's own witnesses, Ms. Jane Few, conceded in her evidence that she was familiar with other condominium projects in the area in 1986 where docking slips were readily sold for $10-15,000 each. Thus, the 17 slips at this dock might well have been sold in 1986 for upwards of $170,000 if Sundaze and its principals had elected that option.

40 During argument, Mr. Dobbie conceded, as I understood him, that, if Sundaze had sold the dockage rights in 1986, such a transaction could not be impeached now. I have to confess that I cannot see how the option which was chosen - a bona fide lease transaction well before the condominium corporation came into existence - can be challenged under s. 39.

41 Mr. Dobbie has submitted that after September 15, 1987, when L.C.C. was registered and received separate legal existence and status, L.C.C. became the successor landlord under the lease in place of Sundaze by operation of law. He argues, therefore, that L.C.C. effectively became a primary party to the lease within the contemplation of s. 39(2).

42 I cannot accept this argument, however ingenious it may seem.

43 As I read the Act, the registration of the Declaration on September 15, 1987, makes L.C.C. a statutory successor in title to Sundaze under the lease. It does not have a "relation-back" effect and deem L.C.C. to have originally entered the lease on September 30, 1996.

44 It is to be remembered here that the key language of s. 39(2) is that which refers to "Every agreement...every lease ... entered into by a corporation. ..." (Emphasis added.) Unless the English language can be totally stretched out of reasonable shape and meaning, that language must be restricted to agreements or leases actually entered into by the condominium corporation after it came into existence and not those entered into by a separate predecessor in title.

45 Ms. Hewitt put forward an argument which tellingly highlights the unreasonableness and even absurdity of the plaintiff's interpretive position. She points to the later clause in s. 39(2) which requires that any agreement or lease entered into by the first-directors' Board "shall be deemed to expire twelve months after its effective date" unless the later-created independent Board ratifies it within that period.

46 Here, she submits, the lease was signed on September 30, 1996, and commenced on October 1, its obvious "effective date". If Mr. Dobbie's interpretation were accepted, this lease would be deemed to have expired on October 1, 1997, a date when the independent Board did not even exist. This result creates both an absurdity and a patent injustice. Thus, she argues that well-accepted principles of statutory construction demand that Mr. Dobbie's interpretive approach be rejected.

48 Ms. Hewitt has also raised a final counter-argument based on common-law and equitable principles of ratification and estoppel. These arguments have some considerable merit from a factual perspective because there was, I find, full and appropriate disclosure of the dockage lease from the outset and the turnover Board and its successors did accept lease payments and contributions to repair costs. However, as it seems to me, these judge-made principles could not override any statutory rights provided under s. 39(2). Thus, in my view, s. 39(2) renders such principles moot.

49 The relevant portions of s. 17 are as follows:

17(1) Every director of a corporation who has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any contract or transaction to which the corporation is or is to be a party, other than a contract or transaction in which the director's interest is limited solely to his or her remuneration as a director, officer or employee, shall declare his or her interest in such contract or transaction at a meeting of the directors of the corporation and shall at that time disclose the nature and extent of such interest including, as to any contract or transaction involving the purchase or sale of property by or to the corporation, the cost of the property to the purchaser and the cost thereof to the seller, if acquired by the seller within five years before the date of the contract or transaction, to the extent to which such interest or information is within his or her knowledge or control, and shall not vote and shall not in respect of such contract or transaction be counted in the quorum.

(2) Subsection (1) does not require the disclosure of any interest in any contract or transaction unless the interest and the contract or transaction are both material.

(3) The declaration required in subsection (1) shall be made at the meeting of the directors at which the proposed contract or transaction is first considered, or if the director is not at the date of the meeting interested in the proposed contract or transaction, at the next meeting of the directors held after he or she becomes so interested, or if the director becomes interested in a contract or transaction after it is entered into, at the first meeting of the directors held after he or she becomes so interested, or if a contract or a proposed contract or transaction is one that in the ordinary course of the corporation's business would not require approval by the directors or owners, at the first meeting of the directors held after the director becomes aware of it.

(4) If a director has made a declaration and disclosure of his or her interest in a contract or transaction in compliance with this section and has not voted in respect of the contract or transaction at the meeting of the directors of the corporation, the director, if he or she was acting honestly and in good faith at the time the contract or transaction was entered into, is not by reason only of holding the office of director accountable to the corporation or to its owners for any profit or gain realized from the contract or transaction, and the contract or transaction is not voidable by reason only of the director's interest therein.

(5) Despite anything in this section, a director, if he or she was acting honestly and in good faith, is not accountable to the corporation or to the owners for any profit or gain realized from any such contract or transaction by reason only of holding the office of director, and the contract or transaction is not by reason only of the director's interest therein voidable,

(a) if the contract or transaction is confirmed or approved by at least two-thirds of the votes cast at a meeting of the owners duly called for that purpose; and

(b) if the nature and extent of the director's interest in the contract or transaction are declared and disclosed in reasonable detail in the notice calling the meeting.

50 Mr. Dobbie's argument under this section has similarities to and relationships with his s. 39 argument. He argues that, because L.C.C. became a party to the lease as successor landlord when the corporation was created on September 15, 1987, the three defendant directors, Spriet, Murdoch and Proudfoot had a duty of disclosure of their common interest in the Pier 17 lease at a meeting of the turnover Board.

51 I cannot agree with his excessively expansive reading of s. 17, whether considered alone or contextually in the light of the general thrust and purposes of the Act.

52 While s. 17(1) calls for disclosure by a director of "any interest in any contract or transaction to which the corporation is or is to be a party", the later language of s. 17 makes it abundantly clear that the declaration of interest relates to a "proposed contract" which is coming before the Board for first consideration and was not intended to apply, by relation back, to otherwise valid contracts which the corporation takes over through successor rights under the Act.

53 This interpretation is consistent with the interpretation I have given to s. 39 and comports with the sense of other sections of the Act.

54 For example, in s. 51(1), one finds a clear proviso which does reach or relate back in time to affect agreements of sale entered into by the declarant developer. Here, there is express mention that the "proposed declarant" must include in any agreement of purchase and sale certain protective provisos for future unit purchases, failing which these provisos will be "deemed" to be included. Again, s. 52(1) also reaches the prospective declarant by saying that an agreement of purchase and sale will "not be binding on the purchaser" until the declarant provides a current Disclosure Statement to that purchaser.

55 In the result, I conclude that s. 17 did not require the defendant partners to disclose their interest in the Pier 17 lease at any meeting of the Board, either before or after the turnover meeting.

56 I re-emphasize here that the evidence satisfies me that all the members of the first Board, along with the later turnover Board and its successors, knew full well that the three partners enjoyed the complete benefit of the Pier 17 lease. Two of these three partners stayed on the Board for several years and certainly did not hide their interests in the lease at all.

Damages

57 I must assess the plaintiff's claim for damages notwithstanding my findings on liability.

58 Mr. Dobbie's position was that, based on his s. 39 argument, the Pier 17 lease expired on October 1, 1987, that is, one year after its effective date. He asks, therefore, for damages based on unlawful possession and loss of profits since that date. Mr. Dobbie has helpfully presented a detailed summary of his claim based on the profit-and-loss statements of the defendants' earnings from the lease over the years. He arrives at a figure of $90,733 using the net profit figure of $59,828 appearing in the defendants' statements from 1987 to 1996 and adding additional sums totalling about $31,000 for amortization and legal fees which the defendants claimed for income tax purposes.

Disposition

60 The plaintiff's action must accordingly be dismissed. I would have thought that costs should follow the event but, if counsel cannot agree, they may make submissions on costs, in writing, within the next 15 days.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: LANARK CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION
NUMBER 10 -and- 105 NORTH STREET LIMITED

BEFORE: The Honourable Mr. Justice Charles T. Hackland

COUNSEL: JOHN E. SUMMERS, for the Applicant

KEITH A. MACLAREN and JASON
DUTRIZAC, for the Respondent

HEARD: Ottawa, January 6, 2005

ENDORSEMENT

[1] The applicant is a condominium corporation and is owner of property described as Part 2 on registered Plan 27R-6582 in the County of Lanark. The respondent is the owner of the adjacent property, described as Part 1 on the registered Plan 27R-6581. The respondent has had the benefit of a right of way, in particular a roadway, over Part 2, being the applicant's land. There are issues between the parties as to whether this is a valid right of way and whether the right of way is overburdened by the usage being made of it by the respondent.

[2] The applicant seeks a declaration that the right of way is invalid for non-compliance with the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, C. P.

13 or, alternatively, because the description of the right of way is too vague to properly convey a right of way.

[3] There was no Planning Act approval for this right of way which was alleged to be created by the registration of the condominium declaration in June of 1997. Prior to the enactment of amendments to the Condominium Act in 1998 such approval was required, unless section 40(1) of the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1990, C.L.4, as amended, applied. Section 40(1) allowed for the creation of an easement by registration of a condominium declaration as long as the easement was "expressly intended to be an easement through the common elements and to benefit other land owned by the declarant". Unfortunately, the condominium declaration containing the easement or right of way in question does not describe the location of the right of way other than to provide that it is "over Part 2" of the applicant's lands and it is said to be "for the sole purposes of providing ingress and egress for vehicular and pedestrian access to and from [the Respondent's] lands". Accordingly, the applicant argues that the grant is so vague that it can not be said that section 40(1) of the Land Titles Act applies, i.e. it can not be said that the right of way was intended to be "through the common elements". Moreover, it is said that the vagueness in the description prevents the creation of a right of way at common law.

[4] While the applicant's position might ultimately be found to be correct, I can not make this decision on a motion under Rule 14.05(3) because there are disputed facts in the affidavit materials and still other important facts that are not before the Court. The available evidence satisfies me that at all material times there has existed a roadway which benefits the condominium on Part 2 as well as the senior citizen's complex subsequently constructed by the respondent on Part 1. An important triable issue exists as to whether the grantor of the right of way intended to make the grant in respect of this roadway and simply failed to accomplish this through inadequate drafting of the condominium declaration. If this is what occurred, a trial judge, after hearing all of the relevant evidence, might be persuaded to grant rectification or equitable relief to the respondent.

[5] The respondent, by way of cross-motion, seeks a stay of this application on the basis that the issues between the parties must be arbitrated pursuant to the provisions of a Joint Use and Maintenance Agreement which the parties entered into in August of 1999. This agreement deals with the management of the easements as set out in the registered declaration and the "Shared Facilities", which are defined in the agreement to include "a private roadway" as well as utilities and certain shared recreational facilities. The provisions in question are the following:

"WHEREAS

D. Lanark Condominium Corporation NO. 10 and North Street have entered into this Agreement on a non-profit basis for the purpose of providing for the mutual maintenance, repair, replacement and cost sharing of the Shared Facilities situated on their respective lands and to define their respective rights and obligations with respect thereto.

5. In the event of any dispute between the parties hereto with respect to any matters arising from or pertaining to this Agreement, and such matter cannot be resolved between the parties, the matter in dispute, upon notice by one party to the other stipulating that it requires the matter to be submitted to arbitration, shall be submitted to a single arbitrator, mutually agreed upon and the decision of the arbitrator shall be binding upon the parties hereto."

[6] The question is therefore whether the issues in this application constitute a dispute between the parties "arising from or pertaining to this Agreement...", keeping in mind that the purpose of the Agreement, fairly construed, is to govern the use of the private roadway (and other shared facilities) and to define the parties "respective rights and obligations with respect thereto."

[7] I see no merit in the applicant's argument that the arbitration clause in the agreement can not apply retroactively to issues which existed before the agreement was signed. There is nothing in the agreement to suggest such a restriction and no valid policy reason to support such an interpretation. It would seem to be very clear that the question of whether the respondent is overburdening the right of way by using it to provide access to a more intensive use building than originally contemplated by the grantor or/and by using it to provide access to an adjoining property owned by the respondent, falls squarely within the arbitration clause.

[8] The more difficult issue is whether the question of the validity of the right of way itself can be said to fall within the scope of the arbitration clause. I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that the essentially legal question of whether a valid right of way was ever created in the first place is outside the scope of the matters which the parties intended to be governed by the Joint Use and Maintenance Agreement. To determine whether a right of way exists in the first place is an inherently different issue from matters pertaining to its usage. I note as well that if the applicant's position is ultimately successful, municipal easements might also be invalidated and therefore the municipality and indeed other possible third parties who are not party to this agreement may be effected. I do not think the parties to this agreement ever intended such matters to fall within the arbitration clause.

[9] In the circumstances, I direct that there be a trial of this Application. The applicant will serve a Statement of Claim on the respondent and such other parties as should properly be involved within 30 days of the release of these reasons and matters will then proceed in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure. As neither party has succeeded in terms of the relief claimed, costs will be left to the trial judge.

[10] I wish to express the Court's view that the parties' interests would be well served by including the arbitral issue of overburdening in this proceeding or in agreeing to mediate/arbitrate all issues so as to avoid the many difficulties associated with concurrent proceedings.

On appeal from Hoilett D.C.J.

Real property — Condominiums — Application of statute.

Appeal by Quinto from a judgment. At issue was whether the Condominium Corporation should have proceeded under the Landlord and Tenant Act rather than under the Condominium Act.

HELD: Appeal dismissed. The Condominium Corporation could only have proceeded under the Condominium Act.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Condominium Act.
Landlord and Tenant Act.

Counsel:

No counsel mentioned.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

1 TARNOPOLSKY J.A. (endorsement):— On the application to admit fresh evidence we do not find the evidence not to be discoverable prior to the proceedings below and so the appeal is dismissed.

2 In our opinion the sole issue in this appeal is whether the applicant Condominium Corporation should have proceeded under the Landlord and Tenant Act rather than pursuant to the Condominium Act. However, the former Act does not provide for application by the Condominium Corporation and so the only Act under which the applicant could have proceeded is the Condominium Act. In our opinion the evidence before Hoilett J. was properly before him. The appeal is accordingly, dismissed with costs to the respondent by the appellant Hinds with this hearing and the earlier hearing of the Court. There shall be no order as to costs of the motion before Robins J.A.

Peel Condominium Corp. No. 449 v. Hogg

Between

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 449, applicant, and Amy Elizabeth Frances Hogg, respondent

Court File No. A4625/96

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division)
Carnwath J.

Heard: January 16, 1997.

Judgment: January 30, 1997.

(11 pp.)

The applicant Condominium sought to enforce its no pets rule set out in its disclosure statement and declaration. The respondent was a unit holder who owned and kept a dog in her unit. In previous years, the applicant had not enforced the rule and several unit holders, including the respondent's predecessor in title, owned pets. The respondent pleaded laches and acquiescence.

Counsel:

Jonathan H. Fine, for the applicant.

Lesli Bisgould, for the respondent.

1 CARNWATH J.:— Peel Condominium Corporation No. 449 was created October 23, 1991 and is located at 155 Hillcrest Avenue, Mississauga, Ontario. Amy Hogg owns suite 2103, in which she lives with her dog, Jazz. Peel Condominium seeks to enforce the no-pet provision set out in its disclosure statement and declaration.

2 The issue to be decided is whether the acts of the original declarant, The Carlyle Residences (III) Inc. estops Peel Condominium from requiring Ms. Hogg to remove her pet from her residence.

NARRATIVE HISTORY INCLUDING MY FINDINGS OF FACT

3 Carlyle Residences was the original developer and declarant of the condominium. Ms. Hogg purchased her suite from Carlyle on October 28, 1993. She consulted a lawyer prior to her purchase and received a reporting letter following closing. She is one of 341 unit owners. As required by the Condominium Act, Ms. Hogg received the disclosure statement following which she had a ten-day cooling-off period to cancel her Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The disclosure statement noted in two places that the declaration provided that no animal, including those usually considered pets, should be allowed upon the common elements or kept or allowed in any residential unit. Indeed, the declaration as registered, prohibits the keeping of animals on the property.

4 Carlyle Residences' representatives controlled the board of directors of the condominium corporation until November 1995, at which time the first unit owner board of directors was elected. Carlyle Residences continued to manage the property until June 1996. During the time that Carlyle controlled the declarant's board of directors and continued to dispose of its unsold units, neither the board of directors, nor its related property manager (Carlyle Management Services Inc.), took any steps to enforce the no-pet provisions of the declaration. Therefore, at the time the unit owner board of directors took over in November, 1995, there was a significant pet problem in the building with dozens and dozens of suites occupied by pets and their owners.

5 Ms. Hogg did not have a dog when she bought her unit in October of 1993, but acquired Jazz in July of 1994 at a time when the condominium was still controlled by the declarant's board of directors. She concedes she did not make any inquiries as to whether pet ownership was permitted but she was aware of many pets living openly in the building. Because of the number of animals she observed, she believed pets were allowed. For the two years following July of 1994, Peel condominium never complained about Jazz, despite Ms. Hogg's open ownership; the dog was taken out three or four times a day through the lobby and past the security desk. Carlyle Management Services and its employees saw the dog on countless occasions, both in Ms. Hogg's unit and out of it, and never indicated there was a problem with having dogs in the building in general, or with Jazz in particular. The uncontroverted evidence is that Peel Condominium took no steps prior to April of 1996 to enforce the pet prohibition in the declaration, that pets lived openly in the building since 1990 and that many people were unaware of the prohibition.

6 Following its election in November of 1995, the first unit owner board of directors turned its attention to the pet problem. A decision was taken to require offending unit owners and residents to remove their pets, pursuant to the condominium corporation's perceived legal duty to require compliance with the declaration. In April 1996 the board sent a series of up to five letters to offending owners, granting the opportunity to voluntarily comply with the declaration. Ms. Hogg refuses to comply. Since the beginning of the campaign, most of the offending unit owners have voluntarily removed their pets upon terms negotiated between the board and the owners. It is Peel Condominium's position that Ms. Hogg is the only unit owner known to the condominium corporation that flatly refuses to comply with the declaration. Ms. Hogg acknowledges she has not made any attempt to call a meeting of owners to consider the question of amending the declaration. She understands that keeping Jazz in her unit is contrary to the declaration and that by accepting the deed, she agreed to be bound by the provisions of the declaration; she nevertheless requests an order that she be permitted to keep Jazz in her unit.

THE LAW

7 Registration of a declaration pursuant to the Condominium Act creates a condominium corporation, which is a corporation without share capital whose members are its unit owners from time to time. Its affairs are managed by a board of directors. The declaration is similar to articles of incorporation of a business corporation and is the constitution of the condominium corporation.

The declaration can be amended only with the consent of all the unit owners and mortgagees. The following judicial statement underscores the importance of the declaration:

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound.

There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

Re Carlton Condominium Corporation No. 279 and Rochon et al. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545 at 552 (C.A.)

8 Ms. Hogg relies upon a private arrangement made between the declarant, Carlyle Residences, through its board of directors, with some but not all other unit holders, to the prejudice of the condominium corporation and the unit owners in compliance with the declaration. This private arrangement I find to have been created either by acts and statements of the original declarant encouraging the introduction of pets in order to sell units, or by acquiescence on the part of the original declarant from 1990 to November of 1995. The ability of the original declarant to bind subsequent unit owner boards of directors was also considered in Re: Carlton Condominium Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon et al. referred to above:

The scheme of the Act is to permit the declarant as "the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land ... "(s. 1(1)(l) to create the corporation by filing the said declaration and description (emphasis added). As it sells off the units, it loses control of the corporation to the purchasers who, as the owners of the units, become the new shareholders. I do not believe that the declarant can unilaterally change the declaration, cause the corporation to change it, or excuse individual unit owners from compliance therewith ... the declarant ... can never be a bona fide purchaser of a unit and it is these "unit owners" that the Condominium Act is intended to protect.

9 Under the Condominium Act the condominium corporation and each unit owner has a right to the compliance by all owners with the Act the declaration and the by-laws and rules of the corporation. Indeed, the condominium corporation has a duty to require compliance; where compliance is not forthcoming the condominium corporation has a right to apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty and the court may exercise its discretion, order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

THE RESULT

10 I am invited by Ms. Hogg, through her counsel, to exercise my discretion by applying the equitable doctrines of laches and acquiescence as they apply to the facts of this case. In considering the exercise and my discretion, I am helped by the criteria considered by Herold J. in Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 776 v. Gifford [1989] O.J. No. 1691 Action No. M176258/89, Ontario District Court, York Judicial District, Toronto, October 11, 1989. Some of the relevant consideration found by Herold J. requiring consideration included the following:

- 1) The nature of the total development -- for example, is it a high-rise or townhouses? Does it consist of senior only or mixed residential?
- 2) What are the reasonable expectations of the other occupants of the development?
- 3) How seriously do other occupants take this particular issue as opposed to other issues?
- 4) Does the conduct of the unit owner in question interfere with others?
- 5) Have there been any complaints by other unit owners?
- 6) What is the relationship between or amongst the various interested parties?
- 7) What is the actual wording of the covenant which is being enforced -- are similar pets allowed, for example, while dogs are disallowed?
- 8) What are the advantages of requiring compliance compared to the advantages of permitting noncompliance?

11 Herold J. found that the reasonableness of a no pets clause was more apparent in the case of a high-rise apartment than in the case of townhouses. I agree and note that the building in question is 22 storeys high. How serious of the other occupants were with respect to this issue can be measured by the immediate action taken by the unit owners' board of directors shortly after the condominium corporation was turned over. There is little or no evidence to suggest the conduct of the unit owner interfered with others or that there were any significant complaints by other owners. The wording of the covenant is unequivocal - no pets. The major advantage permitting Ms. Hogg to keep Jazz in her unit would be to permit her to retain a dog of which she is extremely fond. The major advantage of requiring compliance to quote Herold J.:

... appears to me to be that a message will be sent out by the board to the unit owners that the declaration and by-laws are in place for a good reason and they will be enforced, and a message will also be sent by the court that where the board acts reasonably in carrying out its duty to enforce the by-laws and declaration, the board will be supported by the court. To permit non-compliance in this case would clearly open the door to numerous, possibly very legitimate, requests by other unit owners to exempt them from certain other requirements in the Declaration and by-laws on the basis that each case should be decided on its own merits. While I do not disagree that each case must be decided on its own merits, at least by the Court if not by the Board who appears to have no discretion, the general message surely must be that enforcement will be expected and exceptions will be rare and will require a Court Application in any event. A longer term result of this position will surely be that people will only move into the building if they are prepared to live by the rules of the community which they are joining -- if they are not they are perfectly free to join another community whose rules and regulations may be more in keeping with their particular individual needs, wishes or preferences.

12 This last comment by Herold J., I find, to be particularly appropriate with regard to the matter before me. Considering the factors mentioned above, I exercise my discretion in favour of enforcing the declaration in granting the relief requested by the condominium corporation.

13 An order will go directing Amy Elizabeth Frances Hogg to comply with the declaration of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 449 and more particularly with articles III.6 and IV.5.D and requiring her to permanently remove the dog Jazz from suite 2103 and from the common elements of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 449.

14 My current view is that this is not a case for costs and therefore, unless representations are made to me within 20 days of the date of release of these reasons by either party claiming costs, there will be no costs of this application.

McDonough v. York Condominium Corp. No. 41

Between

John T. McDonough, applicant, and

York Condominium Corporation No. 41, known as Markham Glen, respondent

Ontario District Court - York Judicial District

Toronto, Ontario

Gotlib D.C.J.

Heard: April 26, 1990.

Application for an order restraining the condominium board from destruction of the common swimming pool. Due to ongoing problems with security and vandalism at the pool, the board called a meeting of the owners in 1988 and held a vote regarding temporary closure of the pool. A similar discussion was held in 1989 regarding permanent closure of the pool. The applicants argued that insufficient notice was given regarding permanent closure of the pool, that the requisite consent of the owners to a material alteration to the common expenses was not obtained, that a temporary closure of the pool in 1988 was beyond the Board's powers, and that there was a discrepancy as to the amount of money available for restoration of the pool.

Counsel:

Brian P. Horgan, for the applicant.

Mary Kodric, for the respondent.

1 GOTLIB D.C.J. (orally):— The Court is ready to proceed in Reasons for an Order in the matter of an application by John T. McDonough, as applicant, against York Condominium Corporation No. 41, known as Markham Glen.

2 The Court proceeded in conjunction with an amended application record dated August 18, 1989. There are numerous requests contained in that application beginning with an Order restraining the respondent board from destruction of the swimming pool; ordering an estimate of repair costs for the pool, prepared by an outside auditor; requesting an Order that the respondents call a general meeting, presided over by an outside inspector; for redeliberation on a motion to close the pool, on due notice and including a secret ballot; for the appointment of J. Brian Sheedy of the firm of Deloitte & Touche as the inspector; and for other relief as therein set out.

3 Before I proceed further, I would like to raise some questions. The application contains about ten affidavits and exhibits, and all of those affidavits appear to be xeroxed copies.

(Discussion between Court and counsel.)

4 I go on with my Order. The subject matter of this dispute arose in the annual meetings of the Condominium Corporation as early as 1983, and the Court had filed with it certain letters which have been called ballots, but indicating that the subject of vandalism at the swimming pool attached to the property, has been under review at least since that time. This application under the Condominium Act concerns the closure of the swimming pool of the corporation. The respondent corporation is a condominium known as Markham Glen and contains 210 dwelling units and is located at 180 Markham Road in Scarborough. The applicant is the owner of unit 1505 in that development.

5 There is clear indication as early as 1983 that there was frequent vandalism, and more recently the swimming pool guard was attacked and refused to return and could not be replaced for 3 weeks. The pool itself has been kept open only during the months of July and August, in any event; the development has been in place for some 20 years.

6 The issues surround the conduct of the board of directors in calling the meeting and taking a vote to close the swimming pool. This has led to a loss of tempers. The matter has descended into name calling, and, for the purposes of this judgment, I choose to ignore those factors. There appears to be a great deal of anger and much irrationality in the conduct of the parties, which serves only to add fuel to the fire.

7 The Court here will deal with the legislation which affects the facts as they appear before the Court. The first and the most important is the Condominium Act, R.S.O., 1980, as amended, and the first section I will deal with is section 12; it contains the very trite obligation of the corporation. Section 12:

"(1) The objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation.

(2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules."

8 That latter section, of course, contemplates management by the corporation of defaulting owners or owners who are not complying with the rules.

9 I go on to section 20(1) which reads:

"(1) At least ten days written notice of every meeting of the owners specifying the place, the date and the hour thereof and the nature of the business to be presented shall be given to each owner or mortgagee entitled to vote, personally or by prepaid mail addressed to him at the address provided under subsection (2)."

10 Subsection (2) reads as follows:

"(2) The corporation shall maintain a record upon which shall be entered each owner or mortgagee who notifies the corporation of his entitlement to vote and of his address for service, and the notice of a meeting required by subsection (1) shall be deemed to be sufficiently given if given in accordance with subsection (1) to those persons entered on the record twelve days before the date of the meeting."

11 Section 22 reads as follows:

"(1) All voting by owners shall be on the basis of one vote per unit and, where two or more persons entitled to vote in respect of one unit disagree on their vote, the vote in respect of that unit shall not be counted.

(2) On a show of hands or on a poll, votes may be given either personally or by proxy.

(3) An instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointer or his attorney, and may be either general or for a particular meeting."

12 The legislation goes on indicating other requirements, such as: a proxy need not be an owner; an owner is not entitled to vote if he is in arrears for more than 30 days of any contribution required; and unless otherwise provided, all questions are to be determined by majority of the votes cast; and that no owners are entitled to vote in respect of a unit that is intended for parking or storage purposes.

13 Section 24(1) is again trite:

"(1) Every director and officer of a corporation shall exercise the powers and discharge the duties of his office honestly and in good faith."

14 Section 38(1) is more important, probably the most important section for the purposes of this case.

"(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation."

15 I comment on that section at this time, so that the parties to this hearing will understand that I take the view, in law, that 80 per cent of the owners means 80 per cent of those who have attended a meeting to vote. That presupposes a valid notice given in sufficient time and with sufficient documentation to allow owners to consider the matter to be voted on at a meeting. It is inconceivable that 80 per cent of all of the owners would be required for a valid vote. There are those who do not wish to be involved in controversy for whatever private reasons they may have. There are those who are simply disinterested and do not care, and there are a hundred reasons why persons may choose to not be involved. Those who are unavailable may appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf, and therefore I judge that 80 per cent of the owners means 80 per cent of the owners present at a meeting of which they have been duly notified and furnished with supporting documentation.

16 Section 40(2) and section 40(4) have been referred to; I should include subsection (1). They read as follows:

"(1) Every person in receipt of money paid to or for the benefit of the corporation shall, upon reasonable notice and during normal business hours, make available for examination by the corporation or any owner or mortgagee, all records relating to the receipt and disposition of such money."

17 Subsection (2) has been relied upon:

"(2) Upon application to a judge of a county or district court by the corporation or any owner or mortgagee, the judge, if satisfied that the application is made in good faith and that it is prima facie in the best interest of the applicant to do so, may make an order, upon such terms as to the costs of the investigation or audit or otherwise as he considers proper, appointing an inspector to make such investigation of the affairs of any person in receipt of money mentioned in subsection (1) and to make such audit of accounts and records of such person as the judge considers necessary."

18 Subsection (4) refers to trust monies and reads as follows:

"(4) All money referred to in subsection (1) shall be held by the person in receipt thereof in trust for the performance of the duties and obligations in respect of which the money is paid, and he shall pay such money into a separate account at a chartered bank or trust company or a loan company or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office and shall designate the account as a trust account in the name of the corporation."

19 This section has been raised by the applicant, and I will rule on its principle in the facts before me, but it seems to me that that section applies to accounting for money received. The issues before this Court do not imply or suggest that there has been any misappropriation of funds or misspending. What is in issue before this Court is the interpretation of financial statements and the allocation and methods of dealing with monies to be raised; I do not believe that section 40 applies to the case before me.

20 The last part of the legislation I wish to deal with is section 49(1), which reads as follows:

"(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty."

21 Subsection (2) reads as follows:

"(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances."

22 I go on to the creating documents of this condominium and refer, first of all, to the Declaration, and I refer to page 5 of a booklet comprising the condominium documents, under the heading "Common Expenses." Part II subsection says:

"(2) Each owner, including the Declarant, shall pay to the Corporation his proportionate share of the common expenses, which shall include payments towards any separate fund or funds, as may be provided for by the by-laws of the Corporation, and the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses may be regulated by the Board of Directors of the Corporation pursuant to the by-laws of the Corporation."

23 I go on the Part VI of the Declaration:

"(1) The Corporation may by a vote of members, who own Eighty (80) per cent of the Common Elements, make any substantial additions, alterations, or improvements to or renovation of the Common Elements or make any substantial change in the assets of the Corporation."

24 Subsection (3) of that Part reads as follows:

"(3) For the purpose of this clause VI, the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall decide whether any addition, alteration or improvement to, or renovation to the common elements or any change in the assets of the Corporation is substantial."

25 Moving on to Part VII, it reads:

"(2) The Corporation shall repair the Common Elements after damage, which includes repair to all exterior doors ... all at its own expense."

26 The next part of the condominium documents that is of importance is set out in By-Law Number 1, Article III, part 6:

"No public notice or advertisement of meetings of members, either annual or general, shall be required, but a printed, written, typewritten or otherwise mechanically reproduced notice in which is stated the day, the hour and place of the meeting, together with an agenda of the business to be transacted thereat, shall be either delivered or mailed by ordinary mail with postage prepaid to each member and to all mortgagees who have notified the Corporation of the registration of its mortgage, at least ten days (exclusive of the day of delivery or mailing, but inclusive of the day for which notice is given) before the date of every meeting, addressed to such address as is given by the member or mortgagee to the Corporation for the purpose of notice ..."

27 It then goes on with other and further particulars of the notice.

28 I deal, lastly, with the matter of budget, which is referred to as Article X of the by-laws and is headed "Assessment and Collection of Contributions Towards the Common Expenses." Part I deals with the annual budget:

"The board shall, at least thirty (30) days prior to the commencement of each fiscal year, prepare and adopt a budget for the corporation for the next ensuing fiscal year, setting forth in categories estimates of the amount of the common expenses of the corporation for such year and allocating and assessing such common expenses for such fiscal year among the owners according to the proportion in which they are required to contribute to the common expenses as set forth in the Declaration. In preparing the budget the board shall estimate the amount of income to be received by the corporation from the use, operation or rental of any of the common elements. In addition to all expenses, charges and costs of the maintenance, repair or replacement of the common elements and any other common expenses, charges or costs, which the board may incur or spend, there shall be included in the annual budget provision for the following:

(a) A Contingency Fund, which fund shall be used and applied from time to time towards meeting the deficits and such other common purposes as the corporation may deem necessary;

(b) A Reserve Fund, which shall include moneys received to be accumulated in the Reserve Fund as provided for in paragraph 3 of this Article X and to be used or expended for major maintenance items, which occurs less frequently than annually and for major items of repair or replacement made necessary by damage, deterioration, or obsolescence."

29 Part 2 deals with the contingency fund. Part 3 deals with the reserve fund:

"The moneys in the Reserve Fund shall be accumulated and when the amount in the Reserve Fund reaches $21,100.00 the board shall no longer be required to include any minimum amount to be credited to the Reserve Fund in the budget, but shall administer the Reserve Fund with a view to maintaining it at that level. When the Reserve Fund reaches $21,100.00 the interest on it may be transferred by the board of directors to the amount maintained by the corporation to satisfy common expenses, but otherwise the interest shall be accumulated in the Reserve Fund."

30 Part 4 reads as follows:

"Contingency and Reserve Funds Part of Common Expenses. The Contingency Fund and the Reserve Fund shall be deemed part of the common expenses and in the event of sale by the owner, such owner shall not be entitled to any refund of the whole or any part of the contributions or deposits made from time to time by him to the Contingency Fund or Reserve Fund, but all his interest in the unexpended portion of each of the said Funds, if any, shall be transferred and enure to the purchaser of the unit with whom the owner will make necessary adjustments."

31 Part 5 is a lengthy part and deals with copies of budget and notices of assessments indicating that those are to be delivered or mailed by first-class mail to each owner not more than 21 days after the beginning of the fiscal year and provides for the payment of the monthly instalments. Part 6 goes on to deal with special assessments:

"Special Assessments. If at any time during the course of any fiscal year the board shall determine that the annual assessment of contributions are inadequate by reason of the revision in the Board's estimates of either expenses or income the board shall prepare and cause to be delivered to each owner and to each mortgagee who has notified his interest to the corporation a revised budget for the balance of such fiscal year and thereafter monthly contributions shall be determined and paid on the basis of such revised budget."

32 It is quite apparent from the reading of the Condominium Act and the documents creating the condominium that there is a heavy onus on the board of directors; running a 210 unit building is not an easy job. The operation of a condominium development is the ultimate exercise in community cooperation and democratic procedure, and many condominium boards have chosen to employ professional managers to relieve a volunteer board of very onerous duties and very time-consuming negotiations.

33 The Court has reviewed the extensive pleadings. The application here consists of 138 pages, 10 affidavits and exhibits appended to them; in the respondent's material, the Court has before it 4 affidavits. There is also a factum, which has been filed on behalf of the applicant; the facts seem to turn on a number of complaints by this applicant. There are some allegations that are simply unbelievable and if a trial of an issue were to be held, evidence would have to be heard. As to the certain events which occurred and inaccuracies in reporting the events that occurred at the 1989 annual meeting of the condominium, those are simply put one way by the applicant and another way by the respondents, and there is no way for this Court to test the credibility of the persons making those depositions. Suffice it to say, on April 11th, 1989, the annual meeting of Markham Glen was held. Among the matters discussed, moved and voted on was a motion put forth by the board of directors of Markham Glen to close the swimming pool, a common element for that season. It is clear, however, from the materials before the Court that the matter of the closing of the swimming pool for the season was not listed on the agenda giving notice of the meeting, so those who might have been concerned about the closing of the pool for the summer were not aware that such an issue would be discussed. The discussion came up either under new business or under the budget discussion. It is not material for the purposes of this order where such discussion came up, but it was discussed, and a vote was taken, and the decision was taken to close the pool for the summer. The board took the position that it was not a material alteration to the common elements to close the pool for the summer. That, of course, is strenuously disagreed with by the applicant. I find, however, on the basis of the section which I have read from the condominium documents, that the board was in a position to make that decision. However, that being the case, the notice was still improper, the vote was improper, and even if an 80 per cent vote of the owners present at the meeting was not required, it being a temporary closure of the pool, the matter was sufficiently important to have listed it as an agenda item and to have supplied more details prior to the meeting so that unit owners could have considered it properly. I find that the vote was improperly taken at the meeting, and, accordingly, the pool was improperly closed for the summer of 1988.

34 It may well be that the president was inaccurate in reporting the events of the 1989 annual meeting, but I consider the demand by the applicant that a letter be circulated by the president, acknowledging that he was wrong in reporting events of the meeting, to be inappropriate. There were two conflicting versions of what happened, and unless the Court is asked to adjudicate on the credibility of the parties giving the evidence and examine them viva voce on a trial of an issue, I find it pointless to decide that either party was right or wrong and that a letter of apology, even if the president were wrong, is inappropriate and only has served to exacerbate the arguments between the parties. The matter of closing the swimming pool for 1989 arose again, and this was officially announced by a proper agenda and discussed at the meeting. A vote was taken at the meeting, and the applicant said he got an amendment passed. It is a strange amendment, but an amendment it is, and all that that did was state a proposition of law that the vote to close the pool is invalid if 80 per cent of the owners have not voted for it. The applicant has attacked the vote at that meeting, and, as a result, the respondent circulated a questionnaire and says that as a result of the response to the questionnaire, 80 per cent of the owners responding have voted to close the pool, and it is barely 80 per cent. The applicant attacks the questionnaire saying it was biased and confused the voters and did not clarify the issues.

35 Throughout these proceedings, the applicant has imputed sinister motives to this lay board of directors. It is apparent that a lot of temper has gone back and forth, but a lay board is just that. Members are usually ordinary people and may or may not have professionals on it who attempt to run the condominium corporation in their free time. If those people are retired, so much the better. They have more free time. If they carry on other jobs, of which I have no evidence, then that is something to fit into their spare time. Despite all of the allegations, I find no sinister motive on the part of the board of directors of this condominium; and the allegations that the annual meeting in the spring of 1989 was delayed on purpose, simply does not hold water. Mr. Rossiter gave his reasons for that, which I accept.

36 The applicant alleges bias on the part of the president of the board and indicates that he should be impartial as chairman of the meeting and alleges that the letter summarizing the proceedings of the annual meeting of May 10, 1989 was both misleading and misrepresentative. The letter, as I have said, contained a questionnaire asking owners to vote for either motion, that is, to keep the pool open or to close it. This, I find, was an informal way of the board getting an opinion as to whether the pool ought to be carried on. It is a common element, and the board of directors are under a duty to maintain it, to perform that duty in the best possible way, bearing in mind a commitment to all the condominium owners. I find, however, that their attempts to close the pool by reason of extravagant maintenance costs arising out of vandalism and new security needs was not properly carried out for the 1989 meeting.

37 It is the Court's view that what ought to have been done was that a budget should have been prepared and various estimates obtained in support of the costs alleged in the budget for repairing and maintaining the pool. It may well be that a consultant's opinion would be in order to discuss security requirements, accepting the report that a pool guard was assaulted and wouldn't return for 3 weeks. Physical assault is a much more serious matter than property damage. I think that is so serious that the board was correct in proceeding with great caution in the continuance of the pool. The board ought to have obtained a report on security from an outside person. They ought to have obtained three estimates for the repairs to the pool. They ought to have had three maintenance cost budgets. All these ought to have been included in the main budget, delivered to the unit owners with ample notice prior to the meeting with the notice of the meeting to discuss the closure of the pool by reason of the dangers involved in this day and age and with the expense involved in maintaining it.

38 I have already expressed the view that the owners on due notice are entitled to have proxies. They are entitled to attend or not attend and not vote, but every effort should be made by the board to fully inform the owners, so that those who are concerned can consider the matter and all the relevant facts and attend, if they wish, to make an informed vote. I have already said, also, that 80 per cent of those present at the meeting is what is required. It is an absolutely thankless and hopeless job to expect to communicate with and get responses from 210 people, and I do not think that the provisions in the Condominium Act or the by-laws were intended to impose that burden on a volunteer board.

39 The applicant requests a secret ballot; and I have grave difficulty in understanding the request. The applicant, on the one hand, wanted to examine the ballots received by the board of directors in 1989, and, in fact, I made an order requiring the respondent to deliver copies of those ballots to the applicant's counsel on or before April 23rd, 1990. Why the applicant should be entitled in one breath to say, 'I am entitled to see the ballots,' and to say in the next breath, 'This should be a secret ballot,' I have some difficulty in comprehending. I think that if the vote is to be taken at a meeting either by ballot or by a show of hands, there would be absolutely no difficulty. The real difficulty is having an informed electorate; there is a duty on the board to gather together and furnish unit owners with the materials so that the owners may vote in an informed way. Every kind of questionnaire is subject to scrutiny; I cannot imagine that there is one that anyone can design that would satisfy everybody, and, therefore, full disclosure of all relevant information would satisfy the need to be informed and would result in a simple conclusion to this agonizingly difficult matter by vote.

40 Mrs. McDonough, as shown by her affidavit, discovered how hard it is to get people out to provide information that is required, and work people being as busy as they are in the summer months in Metropolitan Toronto have to be given enough time to come in and inspect; it is not an easy matter. If three estimates and three reports could be obtained in under 3 months or 4 months, I would be very surprised, but that is not for me to decide. That is for the persons interested to pursue those matters and get them as quickly as they can because they are important in this context.

41 Not only is the swimming pool important for the amenities of those living in the condominium, but it also goes to the market value. The maintenance of security goes to the market value. We, unfortunately, live in a big city and big metropolitan area where crime is rampant. It is fuelled by drug problems, and anything can happen in a public area such as the swimming pool. I can see that the board of directors is taking its obligations very seriously in its attempt to deal with the difficulties that they have encountered in terms of vandalism and assault. I do not think those efforts should be minimized by the applicants. In fact, there should be some assistance to the directors in carrying out their duties, aside from criticism.

42 There is no doubt that the questionnaire is inappropriate, that insufficient information was furnished to the condominium owners for the meeting in May 1989, and so that vote is therefore nullified. A further vote is therefore required with the materials that I have enumerated to be furnished, and while the required notice of the meeting is 10 days, I would order, in the circumstances and in the inflammatory nature of the events that have transpired, that at least 30 days' notice of the meeting be given.

43 The annual meeting will be perforce late, this year. This is now April 26th. If the board of directors is to gather the information that I have ordered and is to give 30 days' notice of a meeting, it cannot be held early in the season, but I have no doubt that if it is done in this manner, it will resolve the issue for once and for all. It is absolutely vital that the voters be disclosed so that the respondent board can be satisfied that the persons voting are entitled to vote. Tenants are not entitled to vote. A proxy can vote.

44 As to the issue of intimidation, I am confident that with this Order that matter will die down. Unit owners are adult property owners, and their views should be respected; if there is any degree of harassment or haranguing from either side, I am sure that the unit owners will know how to deal with that. It has become a largely political issue, which is unfortunate, because a swimming pool can be a valuable asset to the condominium owners.

45 There has been some question about the interpretation of the audit statements and questioning whether there was $20,000.00 or $30,000.00 allocated and available to restore and maintain the pool for 1989. I believe that those matters are solved by having an outside chartered accountant, who is experienced in condominium accounting, deal with the matter, or, in the alternative, and I find it an appropriate alternative, the chartered accountants who deal with the audit of the respondents' accounts could be asked to attend a meeting and speak to that matter.

46 I find that the allegation that the respondent board was wrong in insisting on an assessment instead of a month by month instalment payment for any excess charges incurred to renovate the pool to be without foundation. Under the condominium documents and under the Condominium Act, the respondents have a discretion to decide whether it is appropriate to make an immediate assessment or whether or not to spread it over monthly payments as part of the common monthly assessment. This lay board, having to choose, did so and decided on an assessment. The allegation that they were $42.00 wrong in their assessment is of no consequence. It is a matter of interpreting the statements, and that can be done by the auditor attending the special meeting, which I trust will be called, or an annual general meeting to discuss the pool closure.

47 The president has made up his mind that the pool ought to be closed. He is certainly entitled to that view. He is not entitled to enforce that view on any other unit owners. The meetings have not been conducted in accordance with any established rules of order and have, in fact, been fairly informal all these years. It is not unusual for people who get along reasonably well to adopt informal proceedings, but in a case of a violently disputed matter, such as here, the closure of the swimming pool permanently the board must take the right steps and serve the right notices. I do not think it is important whether this board followed Robert's Rules of Order, or any other rules of order, but in the circumstances it is vital for the board, at its next meeting, to adopt some rules of order. Robert's is possible. It is American. There are others. It is regrettable that the operation of the board has come to that place; I order the board to do so at this time.

48 I find that the members of the board of directors have acted in good faith, although without following the statute. They have been ill-informed. They have carried out their fiduciary duties to the best of their ability insofar as this Court can observe from the affidavits filed. They were faced with a very angry owner who made very serious allegations about the conduct of the meeting and the manner in which the vote was carried on. The fact is that he was right about some issues and absolutely wrong about others. The interpretation of these by-laws and the Condominium Act is not exactly an easy matter. His demand that the president of the respondent issue a statement to all the owners of Markham Glen that he misreported the motion and its amendment at the annual meeting of May 10, 1989, I find to be entirely unreasonable. It may well be, and I make no finding of fact, that there was a misreporting of the events, but I attribute no sinister motive to the manner of the report. The amendment, if that is exactly how it was done, simply stated the law, and the result would have been the same without the amendment. Either the vote is approved by 80 per cent of the owners, or it is not, and that is a matter of law to be determined, obviously by the Court.

49 The applicant is, indeed, entitled to have the board comply with the Condominium Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

50 There are many decided cases to assist me. The ones referred to by counsel, Stutz v. York Condominium Corporation No. 422 (unreported), Mandel C.C.J. 1983 and York Condominium Corporation No. 460 v. Civobel & West Hill (unreported) C.A. 1982 are not really on the point. Those cases called for an inspector to make an investigation and an audit. That implies an allegation of impropriety in terms of handling of money. That is not the case before me. The real issue is the interpretation of the financial statements. There is no suggestion anywhere in all the allegations before me that there has been any mishandling of money. York Condominium Corporation No. 460 v. Civobel involved money and the establishment of a trust fund, which is not an issue before me.

51 In fact, there are ten points aside from those raised in the application, which were argued before me on behalf of the applicant, and I will deal with those arguments now.

52 The first is that the chairman of the board entertained a motion without notice; I have already ruled and found in favour of the applicant.

53 The applicant says, also, that the board closed the pool for 1988 without the consent of 80 per cent of the owners. The board, I have found, was within its discretion to decide that the temporary closure did not constitute a change in the common elements. I have already ruled that the board of directors did not follow any established rules of order.

54 I decline to make any finding based on the conflicting evidence before me that the board incorrectly reported the events at the annual meeting of May 10th, 1989 I find that to be a matter of minor consequence in any event.

55 The applicant argues a contravention of York Condominium By-law Number 1, Article X, Part 6, in demanding an immediate assessment. I have ruled that it is in the discretion of the board to choose between an immediate assessment and spreading it over monthly payments.

56 The applicant, fifthly, asks for the appointment of an inspector based on the fact that the May 10th, 1989 meeting was improperly held and the meeting was improperly conducted and improperly reported in the minutes, and all this leads to support for the appointment of an inspector.

57 Sixthly, the respondent was, it is alleged, in error by $47.65 in the total annual assessment; I have already ruled that in the absence of various estimates the amount of money being small, it is not of any real consequence.

58 The applicant alleges bias on the part of the president and vice-president of the board against the pool. It is clear that they feel that closing the pool was the best course of action. The allegation is that neutral scrutineers were not made available by the respondent, and this, I find, is not ordinarily required, where there is an amicable relationship between the owners and the board.

59 The applicant alleges that the respondents disregarded fair voting practices; I have already ruled on the questionnaire. In reply, the respondent says the respondent corporation depends on the board of directors and, for the most part, the majority rule binds all parties, and that the pool is one example of cooperative effort. The respondent alleges that in 1988 no one complained to it about the temporary closure of the pool and says that in 1988, and I have already ruled in support of that submission, that the closure was not the equivalent of a change in common elements.

60 For the respondent, it is said that no rules of order were used in 1989 because there was no requirement that rules be used; for 18 years the board of directors used the same format successfully; this was not an autocratic decision which should fail by reason of the failure to use rules. I have already ruled that in the unfortunate present circumstances, rules of order are to be adopted by the board at the next annual meeting to avoid any further difficulty with dissenting owners. I agree that there is no obligation anywhere in the Condominium Act requiring a board to follow certain rules of order, but in the particular circumstances of this hotly contested issue, which has taken up so much time and so much emotion, I find that is and appropriate resolution.

61 I agree with the respondent that this common element is not being singled out. It is subject to more vandalism than other common elements and must be treated seriously.

62 There is no question of the board threatening owners with a special assessment; I have found that it is within the power of the board to insist on a special assessment in appropriate circumstances.

63 What then is to be done in this set of circumstances? I presume the board will now proceed with an annual meeting for 1989. I have already ruled on the form of notice which must contain the full agenda. I have already ordered the supplying of estimates for repair and maintenance and a consultant's report on security. The last question remaining to be resolved is the question of who will conduct the meeting and count the votes.

64 I am not as fortunate as Judge Mandel was in the Stutz case. He had before him three names of inspectors. I know nothing of the qualifications of Mr. J. Brian Sheedy. Is he an auditor? Is he a consultant? Is he a clerk in the office of Deloitte &

Touche? I would think that the board of directors should have some say as to the person appointed to conduct the meeting, and I order the appointment of an inspector for the purpose of conducting the meeting and counting the votes either to be taken by ballot at the meeting or by a show of hands at the meeting. I am not prepared to designate the inspector at this time, as I have no information, and while section 40 contemplates an investigation of financial wrong-doing, which is simply not the case before me, I am prepared to appoint an inspector under section 40 for the purpose of examining the audit of the budget for 1990 and for conducting the meeting and counting votes to be taken at that meeting. The inspector will also be required to ensure that notice has been given in accordance with this Order and that appropriate material has been supplied to each owner. In the result, both counsel are ordered to each obtain the names and qualifications of two persons and to appear before me at a later date so that I can select the inspector and hope that this highly charged dispute can now be settled. Obviously, it will not occur this week. I will ask counsel to forward those names to me at their earliest convenience, if possible by May 17th. I can deal with the selection on that date or very soon thereafter. I require personal signed consents by each of the persons proposed that they are prepared to act as such an inspector.

65 I endorse this application: Inspector appointed. Counsel to submit two names each with curriculum vitae and consent. Order to go that notice of annual meeting for 1990 be sent to unit owners 30 days prior, accompanied by three estimates as to cost of pool repairs. Consultant's report as to security needs and pool closure to be listed as agenda items. Vote to be taken at meeting requiring 80 per cent of owners present at meeting to vote to close the pool in order for the board to proceed with pool closure. Inspector to preside at meeting. Respondent auditor, or other professional auditor, to be present to explain budget. Oral reasons dictated.

66 As I said at the beginning, and I repeat it again, there has been a lot of ill-will created by this dispute. I have seldom seen so many angry people, and, in fact, I believe that both counsel have, unfortunately, lost their objectivity as well, and that has only added fuel to the fire. It is very important for counsel to remain objective otherwise the matters before the Court get obscured by lengthy arguments and an adoption of personal views of their client.

67 I think the applicant has been at least partly right. The applicant has tried to kill a flea with a sledgehammer. The respondent, I have found, has been in error in many respects, and I have found that the vote taken in 1989 was not a proper vote, proper information having not been available to those at the meeting, and, therefore, I have directed that a further vote be taken on special terms at the next annual meeting, whenever it is held, bearing in mind the amount of material that has to be collected before that meeting can be held.

68 I find fault on the part of both the parties in their conduct of this matter and I therefore decline to award any costs to either side.

Peel Condominium Corp. No. 338 v. Young

IN THE MATTER OF the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C26, Section 49, as amended

Between

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 338, applicant, and Ling Kwong Junlly Young and Mei Ha Pang, respondents

Court file No. A4000/95

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division)
Brampton, Ontario
Webber J.

March 28, 1996.
(10 pp.)

This was an application by a condominium corporation for an order to require the respondent unitholders to remove their dog. The Youngs purchased a condominium in 1992. The condominium was governed by a declaration that forbade pets that weighed in excess of 25 pounds. The Youngs' dog exceeded this limit. The Youngs were aware of this restriction as they received the declaration from their lawyer and they signed an acknowledgment.

Counsel:

Richard J. Worsfold for the applicant.
Peter P. Chang for the respondents.

1 WEBBER J.:— The applicant, Peel Condominium Corporation No. 338 (Peel), seeks the following relief:

- (a) an order that the respondents adhere to and perform the duties and restrictions imposed on them by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C26, Section 49, as amended, and the Declaration of the Condominium Corporation, Article IV(2)(d);
- (b) for an order requiring the respondents to remove the dog housed in unit 1705, 50 Kingsbridge Garden Circle, Mississauga, Ontario;
- (c) if required, an order terminating the occupancy of the respondents.

2 The respondents purchased a condominium, unit 1705, 50 Kingsbridge Garden Circle, Mississauga, in November of 1992. The condominium was governed by a declaration registered on title on May 25, 1989. The declaration is found at tab 2B in the applicant's record. Article IV(2)(d) on page 5 of the said declaration states, in part, "Pets must not exceed 25 pounds at maturity". When the respondents took possession of the condominium unit, they brought with them their dog. There is no issue that the dog weighs well in excess of 25 pounds.

3 The respondents, at the time of the purchase, were represented by a solicitor. They received a copy of the declaration. In addition, they signed a direction and acknowledgement dated November 19, 1992 (see p. 11 of the brief of undertakings of the respondents). Paragraph 5 of that document read as follows:

I/We acknowledge reviewing the declaration, description, by-laws and regulations of the Condominium Corporation herein and acknowledge your advice to review same from time to time as these are the documents which, by and large, govern our use of the property purchased herein.

4 In addition, they also received their solicitor's reporting letter dated November 18, 1992 (see p. 3, brief of undertakings of the respondents). Paragraph 14 of that reporting letter states as follows:

In the event that you have purchased a condominium we would remind you of the special nature of condominiums with respect to, among other things, governance, common elements, by-laws and rules and regulations. We would remind you to carefully read and review all of the documents received from the condominium corporation which are enclosed herein.

5 The applicant relies upon the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. 26, in this application. Section 3(3)(b) provides that the declaration may contain provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units in common elements. The applicant's position with reference to the relief sought is founded upon s. 31(1) and (2). Those sections read as follows:

31.-(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

6 The applicant's position, simply put, is that the owner has not complied with the declaration. The condominium corporation, therefore, has the responsibility under s. 12(3) "to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules".

7 Section 49(1) provides as follows:

Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty. R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, s. 49(1), revised.

8 Peel expressed its concern, by letter dated August 30, 1994, about the dog (see applicant's record, tab 2C). Certain other correspondence took place between the parties, but, unfortunately for all concerned, no resolution was reached.

9 Counsel for Peel submits that, on the face of these documents and facts, the order sought should be granted because, clearly, the respondents are in breach of the declaration.

10 The respondents raise a number of issues as to why the order sought should not be granted:

(1) They submit that there have been no complaints about the dog. In my view, complaints are not required but, in any event, there is the evidence of concerns, as mentioned earlier. Further, a supplementary affidavit, upon which no cross-examination was conducted, by one Gary Williams, the chairman of the Board of Directors, raises concerns about the dog in paragraphs 6 and 11 of that affidavit. This issue does not provide a basis upon which to refuse the order sought.

(2) The respondents, in their responding material, indicate their close relationship and affection for the dog. The dog forms part of their life and they take the position that they must have the dog live with them because of the nature of that relationship. I have no doubt that they are greatly attached to the dog, but that fact does not provide any legal basis for denying the order sought. As noted below, this issue can be considered as a discretionary matter.

(3) The respondents took the position that the application presently before me was not properly authorized. The respondents rely on s. 16(2) of the Act, which states:

No business of a corporation shall be transacted by its board except at a meeting of directors at which a quorum of the board is present.

This issue was never raised until the argument. It is answered, in my view, by the affidavit of Mr. Williams at paragraph 11, where he indicates that the board of directors instructed the property manager to commence this application. There is no merit to this submission.

(4) The respondents take the position that they had no knowledge of the restriction contained within the declaration. I cannot accept this as a basis upon which to deny the order sought. The respondents received the declaration, signed an acknowledgement and received their lawyer's letter, which dealt with the declaration. I can only conclude that they chose either not to read the declaration or they chose to ignore the same. Further, I find their position contradictory when they contend that they knew dogs were allowed but they were not aware of the 25-pound rule.

Gilbert D.C.J., as he then was, in York Region Condominium Corp. No. 585 v. Gilbert, released January 23, 1990, makes the comment as follows:

It seems to me that a prohibitive pet restriction could be contained in the Declaration or the bylaws or the rules of a condominium corporation provided that the prohibitive pet restrictions is brought to the attention of a purchaser of a condominium unit prior to the closing of the sale and purchase of the unit.

I agree with his comment and conclude that they had, or should have had, knowledge of the restriction.

(5) The respondents submit that it is an implied term that such a restriction should be reasonable. Counsel for the applicant does not disagree but contends that the restriction is, in fact, reasonable. I agree. The declaration gives to all owners the right to bring dogs into the premises, provided they do not weigh more than 25 pounds. This restriction is more reasonable than a blanket denial of pets within the condominium unit.

(6) The respondents request the Court exercise its discretion in favour of the respondents on all of the facts. The subject of discretion has been canvassed in detail by Herold D.C.J., as he then was, in a case which also involved a restriction in a declaration. In Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 776 v. Gifford, released October 11, 1989, Herold J. began his analysis at p. 6. He listed a number of criteria on page 6 of that judgment which are applicable to the case at bar. On the basis of a consideration of those criteria, he refused to exercise his discretion in favour of the condominium owner for the reasons given therein.

Both counsel cited a number of decisions, all of which dealt with either a by-law or a rule, as opposed to a declaration, which is involved in this case. There was only one other case which was referred to that involved a declaration; namely, that of Nipissing Condominium Corp. No. 24 v. Ferris, a decision of Hogg J. released June 23, 1993. In that fact situation, there was a declaration which prevented any pets in the building. The dog in question was described as "a therapy, utility animal and, more particularly, it is a hearing-assist dog". Hogg was aware of the decision of Herold J. but refused to exercise his discretion in favour of the condominium but did so in favour of the owner. Without specifying the reason why he exercised his discretion in favour of the owner, Hogg J. concluded, on the facts of the case, that his discretion should be exercised in favour of the owner. The dog in this case, as noted above, is much needed by the respondents but not to the same extent as the dog was in the Gifford case decided by Herold J. Nor is the dog in this case as necessary to the respondents as the dog was referred to in the decision of Hogg. The most important criteria, as discussed by Herold J., was the issue of advantages of requiring compliance compared to the advantages of preventing non-compliance. At p. 7 of his decision, he states as follows:

... that the Declaration and by-laws are in place for a good reason and they will be enforced, and a message will also be sent by the Court that where the Board acts reasonably in carrying out its duty to enforce the by-laws and Declaration the Board will be supported by the Court.

On the basis of the facts of this case, the criteria as enumerated by Herold, I conclude that the discretion should not be exercised in favour of the owner.

11 I am of the opinion that my decision in this regard finds support in the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545. In that case, Mr. Justice Finlayson, speaking for the court, at p. 552, states as follows:

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound. There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

12 Under all of the circumstances, the applicant is entitled to the relief sought in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the notice of application. As discussed with counsel, if the respondents do not respond to the finding of the Court, then it may be necessary for the matter to come back before the Court to deal with the relief sought in paragraph (c). This portion of the application is adjourned without date, returnable on 5 days' notice.

13 Counsel may address the issue of costs by fax. My endorsement on the application reads:

Order to go as asked in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the notice of application. Relief sought in paragraph (c) is adjourned without date returnable on 5 days notice.

Windisman v. Toronto College Park Ltd.

Toronto College Park Ltd. v. Windisman et al.

[Indexed as: Windisman v. Toronto College Park Ltd.]

Court File No. 93-CQ-38966

Ontario Court (General Division),
Sharpe J.,

February 13, 1996

The defendant was the vendor and declarant of a multi-purpose, including residential, condominium project in downtown Toronto. Marketing of units began in 1986, and the defendant required purchasers to take interim occupancy during the spring of 1989. Final closings were in August and September 1990. In accordance with the Condominium Act and the agreements of purchase and sale, the defendant charged purchasers an interim occupancy fee. The fee was based on a mortgage to be given back on closing (sometimes based on a "phantom mortgage", where the purchaser was not giving back a mortgage) and on reasonable estimates for municipal taxes and projected common area expenses. The defendant was obliged by s. 53(3) of the Act to pay interest on the purchaser's deposits at the prescribed rate during the interim occupancy period.

As at the time of the final closings, there were several unsettled legal and factual issues and pending cases about the interpretation of the Condominium Act. Uncertain was the right of a developer to include in the interim occupancy fee a charge for a phantom mortgage. The precise rate for interest to be paid on the purchaser's deposit was uncertain because of a dispute about the interpretation of the governing regulation. Final assessments for realty taxes had not been determined, and the defendant had launched assessment appeals. The defendant was unsure about whether it would be required to contribute to the condominium corporation's reserve funds. In resolving these uncertainties: the defendant included a charge for "phantom mortgages", it paid interest on deposits on residential units at the lower of the contending interest rates, it did not pay interest on deposits for parking and storage units (under the condominium declaration, these units were available only for those residing in the residential units and were owned by the owner of the residential units) and it made a contribution to the reserve fund. The defendant alleged that this "final closing package" was designed to close the transaction upon fair and equitable terms, balancing the interests of the purchaser and the developer. It contended that the final closing package conferred a benefit on the purchasers.

After the final closing and after it was determined in Ackland v. Yonge-Esplanade Enterprises Ltd. that developers must pay interest at the higher of the contending interest rates, in proceedings under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, the plaintiff sued on her own behalf and on behalf of some 544 purchasers of units. The class claimed $617,031.75 for underpaid interest on the residential units, and it claimed $881,996.97 for unpaid interest on deposits for parking and storage units. The class claimed further that the interest should be paid on a compound basis, which the defendant disputed. The defendant also disputed the claim for interest on deposits for parking and storage units and took the position by way of defence and counterclaim that it should be permitted to readjust the terms of the final closings because had it known of its obligation to pay interest at the higher rate, it would have been entitled to require the purchasers to close on less favourable terms. The defendant alleged that in the circumstances the purchasers had been unjustly enriched and that there should be an adjustment for the realty tax charge, an adjustment on account of the payment to the reserve fund, and also for some claimants an adjustment of the mortgage interest charge.

Held, there should be judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendant was required by s. 53 of the Act to pay interest on the deposits for parking and storage spaces during the interim occupancy period. Under this section, with certain exceptions, all money received from a purchaser on account of a sale "of a proposed unit for residential purposes" was to be held in trust in a separate account, and where a purchaser enters into possession before a deed is delivered, the declarant must pay interest at the prescribed rate. Subject to this obligation to pay interest at the prescribed rate, the declarant is entitled by s. 53(4) to any interest earned on the money held in trust. The Act did not define "residential unit" and the Act's only reference to parking and storage units was in s. 22(7), which provided that no owner is entitled to a vote in respect of a unit that is intended for parking or storage purposes. The plain and ordinary meaning of the phrase "residential purposes", the context of the statute as a whole, an analysis of the purpose and scheme of the whole Act, and case-law about the purpose of s. 53 all supported the conclusion that purchasers were entitled to interest on the deposits paid for and parking and storage units. As a matter of statutory interpretation, this interpretation was sufficiently certain; it is not necessary to test the interpretation against every conceivable factual setting and statutory interpretation is very much a case-by-case exercise. The defendant, however, was not required to pay interest on deposits on a compound basis. Neither the Act nor the regulation could be read as imposing an obligation to pay compound interest. Moreover, the Act explicitly abrogated the ordinary duties of the trustee and entitled the developer to retain interest earned on deposits which exceeded the interest to be paid. In the face of these provisions, it was difficult to find a basis in law or in equity to impose a duty to pay interest on a compound basis.

The defendant was not entitled by the contract to readjust for municipal taxes, the amount paid to the reserve fund, or for mortgage interest. No provisions in the contract or in the closing documentation assisted the defendant. The notation "E. & O. E." (errors and omissions excepted) and the undertaking to readjust did not apply in circumstances where the defendant's own argument was that it deliberately developed a fair and equitable final closing package. The non-merger clause was not relevant to the issues at hand.

The principles of unjust enrichment also did not avail the defendant. An analysis of the facts showed that no benefit was conferred upon the members of the plaintiff class or detriment suffered by the defendant. If this was incorrect and there was a benefit conferred, there were clear juristic reasons which would entitle the plaintiff class to retain the benefit, namely, the closings of the contracts and the statutory entitlement of the plaintiff class to interest. It would be a startling result if a party, having assessed the risks and decided to complete a transaction on certain terms in light of those risks, could elect to reopen the transaction when one or more of the risks does not turn out as that party hoped. The law's general policy favouring security of transactions means that the courts will not grant restitutionary recovery where the parties have entered into a contract and that contract has not been held unenforceable or rescinded for a reason recognized by either law or equity.

SHARPE J.: —

Introduction

This class action concerns the statutory right of purchasers of condominium units for residential purposes to be paid interest on their deposits during the interim occupancy period. The plaintiff sues on her own behalf and on behalf of some 544 purchasers of units in two condominiums, collectively known as "The Liberties", developed by the defendant Toronto College Park. Upon the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, Winkler J. ordered that there be an expedited trial of the common issues he had earlier certified as appropriate for determination by way of class proceeding. The trial was significantly facilitated by virtue of an agreed statement of facts. Only three witnesses were called, and there are few, if any, factual issues to be resolved.

Background

The Liberties condominiums form part of a major development project undertaken by the defendant in the area bounded by Bay, College, Yonge and Gerrard Streets in downtown Toronto. The overall development is multi-purpose. The condominiums involved in this action are comprised of dwelling units, parking and storage units, certain units owned by the condominium corporation and designated for non-residential purposes (recreational and other similar uses) and the usual common elements.

The defendant was the vendor, declarant and proposed declarant (hereafter "developer") within the meaning of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. The defendant began to market the units in 1986 and 1987 and required the purchasers to take interim occupancy during the spring of 1989. Interim occupancy continued for approximately 18 months until final closing in August and September 1990. In accordance both with the Condominium Act and the agreements of purchase and sale, the defendant charged the purchasers an interim occupancy fee comprised of an amount for mortgage interest the purchaser would have to pay on final closing in respect of a mortgage to be assumed, an amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the unit and the projected common expense contribution for the unit.

The defendant was required by s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act to pay interest on the purchasers' deposits during the interim occupancy period. The Act requires that interest be paid at a rate prescribed by regulation. The regulation fixes the rate at one per cent below the rate paid on the Province of Ontario Savings Office ("P.O.S.O.") savings accounts. At the time of interim occupancy, there was uncertainty as to whether the Act required developers to pay interest on deposits at the "lower Trillium" rate or at the "higher Trillium" rate offered by P.O.S.O. The defendant paid interest at the "lower Trillium" rate on the deposits for the dwelling units and paid no interest at all on deposits for parking and storage units.

It is conceded by the defendant that by virtue of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ackland v. Yonge-Esplanade Enterprises Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 97, 95 D.L.R. (4th) 560, it ought to have paid purchasers at the higher Trillium rate on their deposits for dwelling units. The amount owing to the plaintiff class on this account is $617,031.75. The plaintiff contends that the defendant was required by statute to also pay interest on the deposits for parking and storage units. It is agreed that if the plaintiff class succeeds on this point, the amount owing on account of parking and storage unit interest is $881,996.97. The plaintiff further argues that all interest should have been paid on a compound basis.

The defendant disputes the entitlement of purchasers of parking and storage units to be paid any interest on their deposits, and also disputes the plaintiffs' contention that the interest on deposits should be compounded. Moreover, the defendant takes the position that in light of the plaintiffs' claim for interest under the statute, it should be permitted to revisit the terms upon which the final closings were accomplished on the ground that had it known of the obligation to pay interest at the higher Trillium rate, it would have been entitled to require the purchasers to close on less favourable terms. In particular, the defendant asserts the right to readjust the amounts charged during interim occupancy for taxes and as well, to a credit in its favour on account of payments made following closing to the condominium corporation's reserve funds. There is also a claim to readjust for the amount of mortgage interest charged some members of the plaintiff class.

Issues

1. Is the defendant required by s. 53 of the Condominium Act to pay interest on the deposits for parking and storage spaces during the interim occupancy period?
2. Is the defendant required to pay interest on deposits on a compound basis?
3. Is the defendant entitled by contract or under the law of unjust enrichment to revisit the adjustments on final closing with respect to:
 - (a) municipal taxes?
 - (b) the amounts paid to the condominium corporations' respective reserve funds?
 - (c) mortgage interest?

Findings and Analysis

1. Is the Defendant Required to Pay Interest on Deposits for Parking and Storage Units?

The relevant statutory provision is s. 53 which provides as follows:

53(1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, notwithstanding the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a chartered bank or trust company or a loan company or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office until,

- (a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto, or
- (b) delivery of prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

(2) Where an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) is terminated and the purchaser is entitled to the return of any money paid under the agreement, the proposed declarant shall pay to the purchaser interest on such money at the prescribed rate.

(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him.

(4) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), the proposed declarant is entitled to any interest earned on the money required to be held in trust under subsection (1).

The Act does not define "residential unit" but the phrase also appears throughout ss. 51 to 55, the part of the Act which stipulates the terms upon which condominium units may be sold and leased by developers.

The only reference in the Act to parking and storage units is the following:

22(7) No owner is entitled to a vote in respect of a unit that is intended for parking or storage purposes.

The facts with respect to the parking and storage units purchased by members of the plaintiff class are as follows. Under the terms of the declarations, parking and storage units could be purchased only by purchasers of dwelling units at The Liberties. The parking units are in the underground garage and the storage units are contained within each building but physically separate from the dwelling units. A City of Toronto by-law requires the provision of specified minimum parking facilities for such buildings. The number of dwelling units exceeded the number of parking and storage units. The defendant required purchasers of dwelling units to enter separate agreements of purchase and sale for the parking and storage units. These were entered at a later time, after all the dwelling units had been sold. However, purchasers took title to their dwelling and parking and storage units in one single deed or transfer. Purchasers of dwelling units were required to pay a deposit of 25 per cent of the purchase price, while purchasers of parking and storage units were required to pay a deposit of 100 per cent of the purchase price of those units prior to interim closing.

Ownership and use of parking and storage units is strictly limited to those who reside in the dwelling units. The declarations of the two condominium corporations clearly provide that only owners of dwelling units may own parking and storage units, and further provide that no one may even use a parking unit who does not reside at the Liberties:

4.02 Ownership and Use of Parking Units

(a) No Parking Unit may be transferred to, or owned by, any person, other than the Declarant, who is not, or does not concurrently with the delivery of such transfer become, a registered Owner of a Dwelling Unit or of a dwelling unit in Phase b and no Parking Units shall be leased to, or used by, any person who does not reside in a Dwelling unit or a dwelling unit in Phase B. Furthermore, no Parking Unit shall be transferred or leased to, or used by, any person who is not a registered owner of a Dwelling Unit unless and until such person has:

(i) delivered to the Corporation an agreement, in a form prescribed by the Corporation, covenanting that such person, and any others permitted by such person to use such Unit, shall comply with the act the Declaration, the By-laws, the Rules and Reciprocal Agreements, including the provisions of this section; and

(ii) provided the Corporation with his name and full address.

A similar provision applies with respect to storage units.

In argument, Mr. Fine contended that the concluding sentence of s. 4.02(a), commencing with "Furthermore" permitted owners of parking units to transfer them to persons who do not reside in the condominium. In my view, the language of the document simply will not bear that interpretation. It is clear from the underlined words which precede that sentence that parking units cannot be leased or transferred to anyone who does not reside in The Liberties. The sentence following relied upon by Mr. Fine deals with transfers to non-owner residents, but does not permit lease or transfer to a non-resident.

In light of these facts, are the agreements of purchase and sale for parking and storage units entered into by members of the plaintiff class agreements "for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes" within the meaning of s. 53(1)?

I turn first to the plain and ordinary meaning of the phrase "residential purpose". Those words, in my view, are clearly capable of embracing units for parking and storage in condominiums such as those involved in this case. The Oxford English Dictionary definition of "residential" includes the following: "connected with, pertaining or relating to, a residence or residences (in a general or specific sense)". Spaces to park a car and store items in close proximity to the place of other domestic functions and activities are common elements of a residence. Residences, including apartment-type residences in multiple-dwelling buildings, almost always provide space for parking and storage. The exigencies of modern life require that parking and storage facilities be made available to be used in connection with one's dwelling. Parking and storage units may, accordingly, be regarded as incidental or ancillary aspects or elements of a residence and, accordingly, in my view, may be said to fall within the ordinary meaning of the phrase "used for residential purposes" in the present context.

While clearly not dispositive of the issue before me, it is significant that with reference to another legislative scheme designed to protect consumers, the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.7, the phrase "used for residential purposes" has been interpreted to include a parking space rented by the tenant of an apartment complex. In Lewis v. Westa Holdings Ltd. (1975), 8 O.R. (2d) 181 (Co. Ct.) at p. 187, Judge Dymond dealt with the case of a tenant injured while using her parking space:

The parking space was as much a part of the residential premises as would be a garage attached to a private home, or an allocated trunk space in the basement of an apartment building, or even perhaps a milk-box in the wall of an apartment building. It was an adjunct of the residence itself, exclusive to the tenant and used by her for "residential purposes", that is, in connection with her normal living and not for business purposes.

I adopt Judge Dymond's treatment of the relationship between a parking space and a residence.

I turn from the plain and ordinary meaning of the words of s. 53 to the context of the statute as a whole. Is there anything in the Act itself which indicates that the deposits for parking and storage units should be either included or excluded from the protective reach of s. 53?

The defendant relies upon certain other provisions of the Act in support of its argument that no interest was payable on the deposits for parking and storage units. As already noted, the Act does not define "residential" or "residential purpose". Parking and storage units are not defined either, and they are specifically mentioned only in s. 22(7), supra, in relation to voting rights. It is argued that this provision in effect creates a category of condominium unit distinct from residential units and that this category must be maintained consistently throughout the Act, thereby precluding an interpretation of "unit for residential purposes" which includes parking and storage units. In my view, this argument reads far more into s. 22(7) than is warranted. Looking at the Act as a whole, it is apparent that the legislature chose not to create a scheme dependent upon rigid definitional categories. Rather, one finds an Act which establishes legislative distinctions appropriate to the particular issue at hand. In my view, s. 22(7) adopts the category "unit intended for parking or storage purposes" in relation to voting rights and nothing more.

It is, of course, imperative that the Act be interpreted as a consistent and coherent whole, but that does not mean that because one category of unit is distinguished from all others with respect to one issue, that category must forever remain a distinct category for all issues. Indeed, given the manner in which the Act deals with the myriad issues of condominium law, such an approach could lead to serious distortions. Accordingly, I reject the contention that the provision denying voting rights to owners of parking units means that agreements of purchase and sale for such units may not fall within s. 53 with respect to the developer's obligation to pay interest.

A similar argument advanced by the defendant relies on s. 34 dealing with the requirements imposed upon condominium corporations with respect to audits. Section 34(11) provides that the section "does not apply where the property consists of less than twenty-five units for residential purposes". It was submitted that if agreements for the purchase of parking and storage units were held to fall within s. 53, then parking and storage units would have to be distinct "units for residential purposes" and counted as such for the purposes of this provision with the result that audits would be required in situations not intended by the legislature. The need to interpret the Act in a coherent and consistent manner does not preclude interpreting a phrase which appears in various parts of the statute in a manner which accords with the context and purpose of the provision being interpreted. In my view, it is clearly possible, given the context and purpose of these provisions, to hold that "unit for residential purposes" in s. 53 includes parking and storage units purchased in connection with a dwelling unit, but at the same time hold that a parking and storage unit should not be separately counted as a distinct unit "for residential purposes" when determining the number of units required to invoke the audit requirements of s. 34.

I turn next to the purpose of the Act as a whole and of s. 53 in particular. In my view, this consideration strongly supports the interpretation advanced by the plaintiff class. The Condominium Act provides a comprehensive scheme designed to protect consumers of condominium units. The Act recognizes an imbalance of bargaining power and seeks to redress that imbalance in favour of consumers: Ceolaro v. York Humber Ltd. (1994), 37 R.P.R. (2d) 1 at p. 73, 53 C.P.R. (3d) 276 (Ont. Gen. Div.), per Winkler J. The appropriate approach to interpreting the Condominium Act was described as follows by Krever J. in Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 11 v. Shenkman Corp. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 194 at p. 209, 14 D.L.R. (4th) 571 (H.C.J.):

The Condominium Act was, without question, remedial legislation. . . . As remedial legislation one is obliged to give it such a large and liberal interpretation as will best attain the object of the Act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit: see s. 10 of the Interpretation Act.

The protective purpose of the Act with respect to purchasers was emphasized by the Court of Appeal in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280.

This does not, of course, mean that the Act must always be interpreted in favour of the consumer. With reference to the interim occupancy fee provisions, the Court of Appeal held in Albrecht v. Opemoco Inc. (1991), 5 O.R. (3d) 385 at p. 393, 85 D.L.R. (4th) 289, that the Act "strikes a balance between developers and purchasers". Similarly, with reference to the disclosure provisions of s. 52, Robins J.A. stated in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 at p. 145, 96 D.L.R. (4th) 449 (C.A.), that the provision should be interpreted "in a manner that properly balances consumer protection and the commercial realities of the condominium industry".

The specific purpose of s. 53 has been the subject of judicial comment. It forms an important element of the consumer protection package and over the years has been tightened to deal with the increasingly sophisticated stratagems devised to circumvent the Act's legislative purpose: Grandby Investments Ltd. v. Wright (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 341, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 313 (S.C.); Dunkelman v. Neighbourhood Developments Ltd. (1985), 33 A.C.W.S. (2d) 288 (Ont. H.C.J.); Berman v. Karleton Co. (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 176, 28 C.P.C. 168 (H.C.J.); Lamb v. Costain (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 657, 40 R.P.R. 83 (H.C.J.); Hashim v. Costain Ltd. (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 790 (H.C.J.).

The obligation to pay interest on deposits during the interim occupancy period imposed by s. 53 is an exception to the usual situation where the vendor of real estate is not required to pay interest on the purchaser's deposit. The Ackland case, supra, holds that this exception was created by the legislature to protect condominium purchasers from developers delaying final closing and financing the project with the deposits. The obligation to pay interest on the deposit creates an incentive to bring the project to completion with minimal delay.

In light of these general and specific statutory purposes, the case for finding that deposits on parking and storage units are caught by s. 53 in the situation of The Liberties development is strong. It is difficult to see why a consumer should receive the protection of the Act when buying a dwelling unit but not a parking and storage space to be used in connection with the dwelling. It would be surprising if the legislature intended to deny the legislative protection just described with respect to purchases of parking and storage units in the factual setting presented by this case.

In argument, counsel for the defendant conceded that it followed from his submission that no interest is payable on parking and storage units that a developer could, in the case of a single agreement for a dwelling and parking unit, allocate a disproportionate portion of the deposit to the parking unit and thereby reduce the extent of its obligation to pay interest. In my view, an interpretation that would produce such a result is plainly unacceptable. It would open an obvious loop-hole in the statute's protective provisions. At best, such an interpretation is suggestive of a technical and narrow approach often associated with taxing legislation which is completely inconsistent with the legislative purpose just described.

The defendant placed particular emphasis on what I will label the uncertainty argument. It was submitted that the only acceptable definition of the phrase "unit for residential purposes" is one that on its face provides developers with an immediate and obvious answer to whether or not a deposit falls within s. 53. In the defendant's submission, the phenomenon of mixed use condominium developments means that the only interpretation up to this task is one that simply and cleanly excludes agreements for the purchase and sale of parking units from consideration. How could a developer know, counsel asked, how to deal with a deposit on a parking unit in a development which included both residential and commercial units? What if a purchaser bought both a dwelling and commercial unit together with a parking unit. How would the developer decide whether to treat the deposit as falling under the protection of s. 53? This situation should, counsel submitted, be regarded as the "litmus" test for any interpretation -- if it does not provide a clear answer, the interpretation must be rejected. This argument was bolstered by reference to the other consumer protection provisions applicable to sales of units for residential purposes found in ss. 51-55, and in particular to s. 55 which makes it an offence to knowingly contravene s. 53(1), requiring the developer to hold deposits on units for residential purposes in trust.

In my view, this argument is lacking in substance. In the first place, it exaggerates the degree of uncertainty that is encountered if deposits for certain parking units are protected by s. 53. In the vast majority of cases, it would be readily straightforward for a developer to determine whether a parking unit was being purchased in conjunction with a dwelling unit. Secondly, the defendant's argument aspires to an unrealistic if not impossible degree of certainty. One can certainly imagine situations where it might be difficult to determine the purpose for which the parking unit was being purchased and the defendant's "litmus test" scenario is one example. However, for virtually every statute on the books, it is possible to concoct such troublesome hypotheticals. Uncertainties like this represent run-of-the-mill interpretive questions routinely encountered with statutes of this kind. The suggestion that no interpretation should be accepted that cannot provide an immediate and obvious answer to all such hypotheticals would set an impossible and unworkable standard of clarity in legislative drafting and interpretation. It is plainly not the case that a court is precluded from adopting an interpretation of a statute unless it can confidently predict how that definition will operate in every other conceivable factual setting. Statutory interpretation is very much a case-by-case exercise. While the court must carefully consider the overall legislative scheme with a view to interpreting any particular provision in a coherent and sensible manner, it will frequently be the case that further interpretation and refinements will be required in subsequent cases with reference to different facts.

The Supreme Court of Canada has held that certainty in statutory interpretation can only be achieved in relation to an instant case: R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606 at pp. 638-39, 93 D.L.R. (4th) 36 at pp. 56-57, per Gonthier J.:

Legal rules only provide a framework, a guide as to how one may behave, but certainty is only reached in instant cases, where law is actualized by a competent authority. In the meanwhile, conduct is guided by approximation. The process of approximation sometimes results in quite a narrow set of options, sometimes in a broader one. Legal dispositions therefore delineate a risk zone, and cannot hope to do more, unless they are directed at individual instances.

By setting out the boundaries of permissible and non-permissible conduct, these norms give rise to legal debate. They bear substance, and they allow for a discussion as to their actualization. They therefore limit enforcement discretion by introducing boundaries, and they also sufficiently delineate an area of risk to allow for substantive notice to citizens.

Indeed, no higher requirement as to certainty can be imposed on law in our modern state. Semantic arguments, based on a perception of language as an unequivocal medium, are unrealistic. Language is not the exact tool some may think it is. It cannot be argued that an enactment can and must provide enough guidance to predict the legal consequences of any given course of conduct in advance. All it can do is enunciate some boundaries, which create an area of risk. But it is inherent to our legal system that some conduct will fall along the boundaries of the area of risk; no definite prediction can then be made. Guidance, not direction, of conduct is a more realistic objective.

The fact that penal consequences may follow should a developer fail to observe the trust provisions does not alter my view as to the manner in which the statute should be interpreted. As the Court of Appeal stated in R. v. Budget Car Rentals (Toronto) Ltd. (1981), 31 O.R. (2d) 161 at p. 167, 121 D.L.R. (3d) 111 at p. 117, per Howland C.J.O.:

Among these principles is the often-quoted principle that a penal statute must be construed "strictly". That this is so is surely beyond dispute, but it is important that it should be clear what the principle really means, and what it does not mean. What it does mean is that where a person is charged with an offence created by a statute, the conduct of that person which gives rise to the charge, or the conduct of someone for which that person may be held answerable, must be such as can be clearly and unmistakably demonstrated to fall within the kind of conduct which is proscribed by the statute. What the principle does not mean is that because a statute is "penal" or contains provisions to which penal consequences for breaches are attached, the meaning that is to be given to language used in the statute is to be determined in accordance with a rule of construction that is somehow "stricter" than, or is to be applied more stringently than, the ordinary rules which apply to determine the meaning to be given to language used in statutes.

I hardly need add that if the developer wants to be certain of complying with the law in situations which appear close to the line, there is an easy solution: pay the purchaser interest on the deposit. An interpretation that might cause developers to err on the side of caution in a relatively small number of situations where the import of the statute is not clear is a small price to pay for an interpretation which so clearly accords with the overall purpose of the statute in the vast majority of cases.

For these reasons, I find that the defendant was required by s. 53(3) to pay members of the plaintiff class interest on deposits for parking and storage units during the interim occupancy period and that there is owing to the plaintiff class $881,996.97 on that account.

2. Is the Defendant Required to pay Interest on a Compound Basis?

The plaintiff class submits that the defendant is required to pay interest on the deposits on a compound basis. First, it is submitted that interest during the interim occupancy period should be compounded, and second, it is submitted that "equitable interest" should be paid on interest outstanding from the date of final closing to payment.

Section 53, supra, does not explicitly require the developer to pay compound interest. R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121, s. 33, stipulates the rate of interest, and provides as follows:

33. The rate of interest under subsections 53(2) and (3) of the Act on money held in trust under subsection 53(1) of the Act shall,

- (a) for the six months immediately following the last day of March of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of April of that year; and
- (b) for the six months immediately following the last day of September of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of October of that year.

It is argued by the plaintiff class that since s. 53(3) requires the developer to hold the deposits on trust, interest should be calculated on a compound basis to preclude the trustee from profiting at the expense of its beneficiaries. The developer will be able to invest the deposits to obtain compound interest and as trustee should pass that benefit on.

In my view, neither the Act nor the regulation can be read as imposing an obligation to pay compound interest. The Regulation imposes very detailed requirements with respect to the calculation of interest and fails to stipulate compounding. Moreover, the Act explicitly abrogates the ordinary duties of the trustee with respect to the use of the deposits. Developers are permitted to use the deposits and are required to pay interest at 1 per cent lower than the rate stipulated. The legislature has imposed a trust, but relieved the trustee of some of the usual obligations with respect to use of the trust funds. The Act also contains a specific provision dealing with the right of the developer to retain interest earned on deposits which exceeds the amount of interest prescribed by the regulations: s. 54(4).

In the face of these specific provisions, it is difficult to find a basis in law to impose a duty to pay interest on a compound basis. Moreover, it appears to be widely accepted in practice that interest is to be calculated on a simple interest basis. A leading text, A. Loeb, Condominium Law and Administration, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1989), pp. 5-22.3 to 5-22.4, indicates that interest is to be calculated as simple interest, and the evidence in this case indicates this to be the industry practice. It is also worth noting that although there have been several reported cases dealing with the obligation to pay interest, the point of compound interest does not seem to have been even argued in any of these cases. For these reasons I find that the defendant was not in breach of its statutory obligations in failing to pay compound interest and I reject the plaintiff's claim in that regard.

I also reject the claim of the plaintiff class to equitable interest on the amount owing. Having dismissed the contention that there is an entitlement to compound interest while the money is subject to the statutory trust, it is difficult to see why compound interest should be required thereafter. Moreover, in my view, the conduct of the defendant is not comparable to that found in the cases relied upon by the plaintiff class. In Brock v. Cole (1983), 40 O.R. (2d) 97, 13 E.T.R. 235 (C.A.), a solicitor was found to have committed an obvious breach of trust and to have wrongfully withheld payment thereafter. Equitable interest was also awarded in Claiborne Industries Ltd. v. National Bank of Canada (1989), 69 O.R. (2d) 65, 59 D.L.R. (4th) 533 (C.A.), but there the court found a fraudulent conspiracy justifying an award of exemplary damages. The conduct of the defendant in the case at bar is not in the same category. While I have found in favour of the plaintiff class, it is my view that circumstances are more akin to a commercial claim for which the usual prejudgment interest rules are appropriate.

3. Is the Defendant Entitled by Contract or under the Law of Unjust Enrichment to Revisit the Adjustments on Final Closing?

The defendant asserts by way of defence and counterclaim that it is entitled to reopen the adjustments made on final closing in view of the claims asserted by the plaintiff class for interest. The defendant does not now advance these claims with a view to compelling members of the plaintiff class to make payments to it, but only to the extent necessary to reduce or eliminate the interest claim.

It is the position of the defendant that the terms of the final closings were more favourable to the plaintiff class than strictly required by the agreements of purchase and sale. The defendant submits that in closing the transactions on these allegedly favourable terms, it conferred a benefit upon the members of the plaintiff class that they should not be permitted to retain in addition to the interest claim. It is the defendant's position that it has, in effect, already given the plaintiff class the benefit of favourable closing terms and that if the members of the plaintiff class were now to receive further interest payments, they would be getting a "windfall". The defendant relies upon the adjustment on closing for real property taxes, payments it made to the condominium corporations' reserve funds following closing and the calculation of the mortgage interest component of the interim occupancy fee with respect to 25 purchasers.

I will consider the specifics of each of these items below, but turn first to the general question of whether the defendant has the right at this stage to reopen the terms upon which these transactions were closed.

Mr. Ian Galloway, president of the defendant and Mr. Martin Cukierman both gave evidence as to the circumstances of the final closings and the terms of the final closing package which supplemented the facts agreed to. At the time of final closing, the defendant faced a number of uncertainties. First and perhaps most serious was the "phantom mortgage" issue. Until the decision of the Court of Appeal in Albrecht, supra, the right of the developer to levy as part of the interim occupancy fee a charge for interest, where the purchaser was not entering a vendor take-back mortgage was uncertain. The interest component of the interim occupancy fee represented a significant amount for The Liberties development, approximately $11 million. The second uncertainty was the question of whether interest had to be paid at the higher or lower Trillium rates. At the time of final closing there were no judicial decisions on this point. There were a number of decisions in the period from May 1991 to January 1992. The Court of Appeal rendered its decision in Ackland, supra, in October 1992 and the matter was not finally resolved until the Supreme Court of Canada refused leave to appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal in May 1993. The third item of uncertainty was the matter of realty taxes. At the time of final closing, final assessments of the units for realty taxes had not been determined. As will be indicated, assessment appeals launched by the defendant were pending and accordingly the defendant did not know for certain the amount of its liability to taxes for the interim occupancy period. A fourth uncertainty identified by Mr. Galloway was the question of the condominium corporation's reserve funds and whether, in light of the extended interim occupancy period, the defendant would be required to contribute to those funds. Another uncertainty in the period leading up to final closing was the question of how long it would be before the defendant would be in a position to accomplish final closing. This was obviously known to the defendant by the time of the closings, but getting the closings done was clearly a matter of significant concern to the defendant. It was clearly in the defendant's interest to bring about the closings as smoothly as possible.

It is the defendant's position that in the face of these uncertainties, it developed a final closing package designed to close the transactions upon fair and equitable terms, balancing the interests of the purchasers and the developer. The defendant says that it attempted to complete the transactions in a manner that would put the purchasers in the same position they would have been in had interim and final closing been simultaneous. This is the principle identified by the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Albrecht, supra, over a year after the closings at issue here.

I will consider below the validity of the defendant's contention that the final closing package conferred a benefit upon the purchasers. Assuming for present purposes that the defendant is able to establish that a benefit was conferred, does the defendant have the right to reopen those transactions and readjust the terms of closing in view of the statutory claim for interest now advanced by the plaintiff class?

(a) Contract

The very purpose of a closing is to bring closure on a transaction and achieve finality in the legal relations between the parties. Contractual provisions and undertakings on closings may preclude finality from prevailing where a mistake has been made. It is, however, important to note that this is not a case of mistake nor is it a situation where circumstances unknown to the defendant at the time of the final closing have taken them by surprise. It is clear that the defendants carefully calculated the various risks and uncertainties, and decided to extend certain terms to the purchasers to bring about the final closing of a large number of transactions in a relatively short space of time. Included in the various risks considered by the defendant was the matter of how much interest was owed to the members of the plaintiff class (although it would appear that the defendant did not take very seriously the risk that it might have to pay interest on the parking and storage deposits).

In asserting the right to reopen the closings, the defendant relies on contractual provisions, namely, the notation "E. & O. E." (errors and omissions excepted), the exchange of undertakings to readjust and the non-merger provision contained in the agreement of purchase and sale. The undertaking to re-adjust was in the following terms:

1. to readjust any item or items on the statement of adjustments if necessary forthwith upon demand including the payment of our proportionate share of any supplementary realty tax bills.
2. notwithstanding transfer of title to the unit, all my acknowledgements contained in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale shall remain in full force and effect and my obligations thereunder to be performed hereafter shall remain in full force and effect.

The non-merger provision of the agreement of purchase and sale is as follows:

Non-Merger -- All the acknowledgements of the Purchaser and the respective obligations of the Purchaser or the Vendor to be performed after either the Occupancy Date or the Closing Date shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding the delivery of possession of the Unit or the transfer of title to the Unit, as the case may be.

In my view, none of these apply to the circumstances of the present case. The E. & O. E. notation by its very terms applies to errors or miscalculations. Similarly, the undertaking to adjust applies to errors made in determining the amounts owing upon final closing or where there is a specific agreement to re-adjust upon obtaining information not yet known: Governor's Hill Developments Ltd. v. Robert (1993), 33 R.P.R. (2d) 67 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Handsaeame v. Dyck (1982), 26 R.P.R. 9, 20 Alta. L.R. (2d) 279 (Q.B.). In my view, it is clear that there was no error or miscalculation to which either the undertakings to readjust or the "E. & O. E." notation could apply. It is a central element of the defendant's argument that it deliberately developed a fair and equitable final closing package which benefited the purchasers. In light of that submission, it is not open to the defendant to now say that there is an error to correct.

I fail to see what relevance the non-merger clause has to the issues at hand. Moreover, the claim of the plaintiff class is based on statute, not contract (a point reinforced by the defendant's successful objection at trial to any consideration being given to an alternative contractual argument to interest advanced by the plaintiff class). The argument of the defendant is, in effect, that a contractual provision permits it to avoid or reduce the obligations owed by statute to the members of the plaintiff class. Any contractual claim by the defendant to deprive the plaintiff class of the benefits of the Act is precluded by s. 61: "This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary."

Accordingly, I find that the alleged benefits conferred upon the members of the plaintiff class were deliberately calculated in view of a variety of uncertainties, including that of the amount of interest payable on deposits, and that there is no contractual basis upon which the terms of final closing can be revisited.

(b) Unjust Enrichment and Equitable Set-off

Equity permits a party to reduce or eliminate the claim of another by way of set-off where some equitable ground can be shown for being protected against the adversary's demands: Telford v. Holt, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 193, 41 D.L.R. (4th) 385. In order to establish a claim for unjust enrichment a party must establish that a benefit has been conferred, a corresponding deprivation on the part of the party asserting the claim and the absence of any juristic reason, such as a contract or disposition of law, which entitles the other party to retain the benefit: Pettkus v. Becker, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 834, 117 D.L.R. (3d) 257.

1. Was a benefit conferred upon the members of the plaintiff class?

It is necessary to consider each of the alleged benefits in turn. However, it should be noted at the outset that while the defendant claims it attempted to resolve these uncertainties in a fair and equitable manner as between itself and the purchasers, in fact the various uncertainties were resolved largely in the defendant's favour. It was assumed that the $11 million phantom mortgage interest issue would be resolved in the defendant's favour; the defendant paid the lower rate of interest on deposits thereby saving just over $600,000 (excluding the interest with respect to the parking and storage deposits); the tax issue was resolved by the flow-through approach which ensured that the defendant would be fully reimbursed for taxes. Only with respect to the reserve fund issue, a matter of approximately $270,000, did the defendant pay out money it might not in the end have to pay and there, the money was paid not to the purchasers but the condominium corporations.

(i) Municipal Taxes

The defendants claim to have conferred a substantial benefit upon the plaintiff class with respect to the manner in which taxes were dealt with in the final closing package. As already indicated, the defendant was entitled by the Act and by the agreements of purchase and sale to levy a charge for taxes as part of the interim occupancy fee. However, the actual amount of taxes for which the defendant would be liable to the city for the period of interim occupancy was uncertain at the time of interim occupancy. Section 53(6) of the Act limits the municipal tax component of the interim occupancy fee to "an amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the proposed unit". At the commencement of interim occupancy, the defendant adopted what appears to have been a wide-spread practice of developers and estimated taxes at 1.5 per cent of the purchase price. Apparently through inadvertence, no amount was charged with respect to taxes attributable to the parking and storage units.

The defendant knew well before final closing that the 1.5 per cent estimate of taxes was high. It received supplemental property tax assessments for 1989 in December 1989 and assessments for 1990 in January 1990 which showed that the actual taxes would be lower than the 1.5 per cent estimate. Moreover, the defendant retained a tax consultant who advised prior to final closing that the assessments themselves "were approximately 20 per cent over and above what they should have been" (Defendant's Written Submission, para. 190). Appeals against the assessments were launched in January and March 1990.

To its credit, the defendant did not assert the right to adjust for taxes on the basis of the 1.5 per cent estimate but decided to adopt a "flow-through" approach. This was accomplished by claiming against the purchasers the taxes the defendant had actually paid, and permitting the purchasers to carry on the assessment appeals as owners. If a purchaser decided to continue the appeal and the appeal was successful, the purchaser would reap the benefit.

It is agreed that the defendant has fully recovered every cent it paid during the interim occupancy period for realty taxes. The defendant contends, however, it was legally entitled to estimate the taxes as of final closing in accordance with the industry standard of 1.5 per cent of the purchase price. Having closed on the "flow-through" basis, the defendant argues that it conferred a benefit upon the plaintiff class for the difference, namely, $495,435.86. It should be noted that this amount includes an item of $108,159.06, the amount the defendant claims those purchasers who elected not to continue the appeals would have recovered had they done so.

In my view, the defendant's argument on this point is completely lacking in substance. First, while the final amount of the taxes remained uncertain by the date of final closing, in light of the assessments, the appeals against those assessments and the advice the defendant received from the tax consultant, the defendant clearly could not have believed that the estimate of 1.5 per cent was still a reasonable one. On the basis of what the defendant knew at the time of closing, it is my view that it would not have been justified in asserting 1.5 per cent of the purchase price as "an amount reasonably estimated" for municipal taxes. The agreement of purchase and sale explicitly provides that the occupancy fee "may be revised by the Vendor either retroactively or prospectively, or both, from time to time based on revised estimates of the items which may be lawfully taken into account in the calculation thereof". Contractual discretion of this kind must be exercised in accordance with objective standards, honesty and good faith: Greenberg v. Meffert (1985), 50 O.R. (2d) 755 at p. 761, 18 D.L.R. (4th) 548 (C.A.), per Robins J.A.

Second, even if I am in error in finding that at the time of final closing the defendant could not have adjusted for taxes on the basis of the 1.5 per cent estimate, I find that the statutory and contractual right to act on the basis of a reasonable estimate of taxes has no application now that the amount of the taxes are actually known. The defendant asserts the right to readjust for taxes in light of what it now knows about the plaintiff's right to interest, but asks the court to permit it to ignore what it now knows about taxes. If the defendant were now permitted to claim almost half a million dollars more for taxes than it spent, then in my view, rather than avoiding an unjust enrichment in favour of the plaintiff class, the court would be creating one in favour of the defendant.

Third, it is clear that no benefit has been conferred upon the plaintiff class and no detriment has been suffered by the defendant. The defendant, as it was entitled, was fully reimbursed for taxes during the interim occupancy period. The defendant's argument really amounts to this: we now know that we owe the purchasers interest because of the Act and the manner in which it has been interpreted by the courts. Had we known that at the time, in order to reduce our liability under the statute, we likely could have got away with over-estimating the taxes and we should be permitted to do so now. This is plainly not an argument a court should accept.

For all of these reasons, I find that there has been no benefit conferred by the defendant upon the plaintiff class which is capable of being the subject of an unjust enrichment or equitable set-off claim.

(ii) Reserve Fund Contributions

Following final closing, the defendant made contributions to both Condominium Corporation's reserve funds in the amounts of $216,520 and $94,054 respectively (a total of $310,574) whereas the "expected and required amount in the reserve fund at turnover meeting" was $28,000 and $12,625 respectively. The extra contributions (in total $269,949) were made in view of the lengthy interim occupancy period. It is the position of the defendant that it was not legally required to make these contributions, although it thought that a claim might be made and it decided to make the payments so as to be seen by any court to have acted fairly and to remain faithful to the principle it adopted with respect to the final closings, namely, that the parties should be put in the same position they would have been in had interim and final closings been simultaneous. Had that occurred, the purchasers would have been required to contribute to the reserve funds, and the amounts contributed by the defendant were calculated on that basis.

In my view, the defendant has failed to establish any basis for asserting a counterclaim or set-off with respect to these funds.

The first and most obvious point is that the money was paid to the condominium corporations, not to the members of the plaintiff class. The condominium corporations are separate legal entities with a legal personality and interests distinct from that of the purchasers. The reserve fund contributions were not dealt with on final closing. Moreover, the Act provides that all agreements of purchase and sale of units for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain "a provision that the vendor will not collect from the purchaser any money on behalf of the corporation": s. 51(1)(d). Allowing the defendant to set off its contributions to the reserve funds would permit it to do indirectly what the law does not permit it to do directly.

Second, if one considers the claim in terms of unjust enrichment, the extent to which an enhancement of the reserve fund enriched the purchasers is questionable. The condominium corporations are precluded by statute from distributing the reserve fund to owners prior to dissolution of the condominium: s. 36. Already, 40 per cent of the original purchasers have sold their units. It may be theoretically possible for the vendor of a condominium unit to claim an adjustment on account of the reserve fund, but the defendant's own evidence is to the effect that this is not the usual practice and the Toronto Real Estate Board standard form agreement for condominium units contains a provision excluding such an adjustment. Hence, the likelihood of any purchaser benefiting directly is remote. While it was in the purchaser's interest to have the reserve fund enhanced so as to be available for future contingencies, it is difficult to see how a benefit of that kind could be measured for purposes of an unjust enrichment claim.

Third, it is clear that the defendant made a conscious decision in light of its perception of the legal requirements and the potential for claims it might face to pay money to the condominium corporations after the closing. That decision was taken on the basis of what the defendant then perceived to be in its best interest vis-à-vis the condominium corporations and without discussion with the members of the plaintiff class as to their rights and liabilities.

In these circumstances, in my view, it would be plainly inequitable and unjust now to force the members of the plaintiff class to accept on a dollar-for-dollar basis the remote benefit of an enhancement made to the reserve fund in lieu of the cash payment of interest to which they are by statute entitled.

For these reasons, I find that the contribution made by the defendant to the reserve funds of the condominium corporations following final closing does not represent a benefit in the hands of the plaintiff class which can form the subject of a counterclaim or set-off.

(iii) Mortgage Interest

The defendant also claims the right to readjust the mortgage interest component of the interim occupancy fee with respect to 25 purchasers. The basis for this claim is that interest was charged at a lower rate than that which the defendant was entitled to charge. The amount ($20,044.62) does represent a benefit in the hands of the purchasers, although in light of what follows with respect to the "absence of a juristic reason" element of the unjust enrichment test, I note the following. It is the evidence of representatives of the defendant that this undercharging of interest was part of the deliberately planned final closing package. The undercharging of interest was part of the defendant's business response to the various contingencies and uncertainties that have been outlined.

2. Juristic reason entitling the plaintiff class to retain any benefit.

Even if I am wrong and there has been a benefit conferred, there are clear juristic reasons which entitle the plaintiff class to retain that benefit, namely the closings of the contracts of purchase and sale and the statutory entitlement of the plaintiff class to the interest.

A vital function of a contract is to permit the parties to allocate and assume risks with regard to their future legal positions. As already indicated, the defendant faced a number of uncertainties or risks as it considered how to bring about final closing, and it made a deliberate calculation of those risks in determining the final closing package. It would be a startling result if a party, having assessed the risks and decided to complete a transaction on certain terms in the light of those risks, could elect to reopen the transaction when one or more of the risks does not turn out as that party hoped. The defendant wanted the advantage of a final closing but now seeks to reverse ground and reopen the transactions in view of the fact that it wrongly predicted one of the known uncertainties. A contractual right is recognized as a juristic reason entitling a party to retain a benefit conferred: Pettkus v. Becker, supra. The law's general policy favouring security of transactions means that the courts will not grant restitutionary recovery where the parties have entered into a contract and that contract has not been held unenforceable or rescinded for a reason recognized by either law or equity: P.D. Maddaugh and J.D. McCamus, The Law of Restitution (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 1990), at p. 46. Another important reason not to permit the defendant to reopen the transactions is the fact that the plaintiff's claim to interest rests upon statute. The statutory rights conferred upon consumers by the Condominium Act cannot be bargained away: s. 61, supra. The principle established by the decision of the Privy Council in Kiriri Cotton Co. v. Dewani, [1960] A.C. 192 at p. 204, [1960] 1 All E.R. 177, is applicable by analogy. That case holds that if a statute imposes a duty of observing the law on one party -- "it being imposed on him specifically for the protection of the other" -- the other party can recover a payment made in a violation of the statute where both parties were acting under a mistake as to its application. It would seem to follow that there can be no claim based on unjust enrichment if the party upon whom the duty is imposed for the protection of the other seeks restitutionary recovery.

Accordingly, I find that even if there was a benefit conferred, there are juristic reasons to permit the members of the plaintiff class to retain the benefit.

Conclusion

Accordingly, the plaintiff class is entitled to the following:

1. Judgment against the defendant for interest on dwelling unit deposits in the amount of $617,013.75.
2. Judgment against the defendant for interest on parking and storage unit deposits in the amount of $881,996.97.
3. Prejudgment interest on these amounts from September 4, 1990, being the mid-point date of the closings at the rate prescribed by the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, namely 13.9 per cent.

After the commencement of this action, the defendant instructed the City of Toronto to withhold payment of tax refunds owing following the successful tax appeals continued by members of the plaintiff class. Those funds together with interest to August 31, 1993 have since been paid into court to the credit of this action. The plaintiff class seeks and is entitled to the following relief in that regard:

- (a) An order that the money paid into court to the credit of this action by the City of Toronto on account of tax refunds be paid out to Andrew Frei, solicitor for the plaintiff class, to be held in trust subject to further order concerning distribution.
- (b) An order requiring the defendant to provide any further necessary written directions and sign any necessary documentation in order to direct the City of Toronto to pay into court all refunds, plus accrued interest, in respect of appeals of municipal taxes for 1989, 1990, and 1991.
- (c) An order requiring the defendant to pay to Andrew Frei, in trust, any tax refunds received to the extent that the defendant has received or shall receive such refunds, such funds to be held in trust subject to further order of this court concerning distribution.
- (d) Judgment against the defendant for prejudgment interest on the moneys referred to in para. 4(a) from August 31, 1993 at the rate of 5.1 per cent.

All other claims, counterclaims and set-offs as between the plaintiff class and the defendant are dismissed.

As this trial effectively disposes of the issues between the parties, I will remain seized of this matter and invite the parties to make submissions as to costs and any further necessary orders, including the terms on which the matter should be referred back to Mr. Justice Winkler as contemplated by his order directing this trial of an issue.

Judgment accordingly.

Camrost York Development Corp.]

Court File No. RE-5181/95

Ontario Court (General Division),
Sharpe J.

October 3, 1995

Prior to their respective purchases of lands from the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, CYD Corp. and CH Ltd. agreed that the lands to be purchased by CYD Corp. would be subject to an easement and right-of-way that would serve the adjoining lands to be purchased by CH Ltd. The purpose of the easement was to permit loading and for garbage removal on the adjoining lands. As it would cost CYD Corp. approximately $250,000 to construct the easement, CH Ltd. agreed to pay an annual fee of $25,000 for use of the easement. The agreement was carried forward in the transfer between the Commissioners and CYD Corp. The easement was constructed, and CYD Corp. developed its lands by the construction of two condominiums. After the registration of the condominiums under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, CYD Corp. conveyed the lands subject to the easement and right of way to the condominium corporations. However, it assigned the right to the annual easement fee to QQ Inc., a related company. The condominium corporations brought an application to determine their entitlement to the annual fee, and they contended that the right to the fee ran with the land as payment for the use of the easement. The respondents CYD Corp. and QQ Inc. contended that the fee was a personal right of CYD Corp. and its assigns.

The appropriate interpretation of the instrument was that the annual fee was a personal right. Several points supported this interpretation. First, under the transfer, the fee was to be paid to the "transferee" but there was no reference to "successors and assigns", as there was in other parts of the instrument; this suggested a personal right. The point that the right was personal was fortified by the provision stating: "Transferee shall be entitled to assign and/or direct that the said fee by [sic] payable to any other person, whether or not such person has rights in the lands being transferred." A clear distinction was here drawn between title to the land and entitlement to the fee. Further, the provision allowing the owner of the dominant tenement to end the easement also distinguished between the owner of the servient tenement and the owner of the right to the annual fee. Moreover, the transfer, while it expressly made the burden of the easement run with the land, was silent about the fee running with the land. Next, looking beyond the language of the parties, an investigation of the factual background to the transactions supported the respondents' position.

Turning next to the legal basis of the claim to the fee, the right to the annual fee was not the type of entitlement that, in law, could run with the land and pass to a successor in title. The requirements for establishing that a benefit of a covenant runs with the land are: (i) the transferee obtains the same legal estate as the transferor; (ii) it was intended that the covenant would pass automatically; and (iii) the covenant relates to the land transferred -- it must "touch and concern" the land. In this case, neither the second requirement, which was missing on the evidence, nor the third requirement was satisfied. The proposition that covenants to pay a periodical sum do not run with the land was supported by a long line of authority.

Finally, the applicants' argument that they were owed a fiduciary duty by the condominium developer was without merit. The grant of easement and agreement that the easement be paid for by way of annual fee was completed long before any units in the condominium had been marketed and was obvious from the title documents.

APPLICATION to determine the entitlement to a fee for the use of an easement and right of way.

Robert Wright, for applicants.

Mark S. Hayes and Beth G. Beattie, for respondents.

SHARPE J.: — This application is brought to determine the entitlement to a fee of $25,000 a year for the use of an easement and right of way (the "easement"). The easement is over lands formerly owned and developed by the respondent Camrost York Development Corporation ("Camrost") but now owned as part of the common elements of the applicant condominium corporations. The transfer by which Camrost acquired title to the lands also created the easement and provided for the payment of the annual fee. The issue to be resolved on this application is whether the right to the fee is a personal right of Camrost and its assigns or whether the right to the fee runs with the land and hence passed to the applicants upon their acquisition of title to the lands.

Facts

In May 1988 Camrost acquired from the Toronto Harbour Commissioners certain lands for the purpose of developing two condominium highrise towers. The 1988 transfer to Camrost was preceded by negotiations and dealings involving Camrost, Copthorne Holdings Ltd. ("Copthorne") and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners with respect to the use and development of other adjacent lands then owned by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. Copthorne required the construction of a passerelle and easement to serve the land immediately adjacent to that being acquired by Camrost. That easement is the subject of this application. The purpose of the easement was to permit loading and unloading and for garbage removal at the adjacent property. Camrost advised Copthorne that the construction cost of the easement would be approximately $250,000. It was agreed that Copthorne would not pay a lump sum to Camrost but rather that Copthorne would pay Camrost an annual fee of $25,000 for the use of the easement. An agreement to this effect was entered in July 1987. The 1988 transfer between the Toronto Harbour Commissioners and Camrost carried this arrangement forward by reserving the easement and providing for the payment of an annual fee. The provisions of the transfer which create the easement and provide for the annual payment are as follows (emphasis added to passages crucial to this application):

Reserving unto the Transferor, its servants, employees and assigns a non-exclusive easement and right-of-way in, over, along and upon the lands described as Part of Block D, Plan E-640 and designated as Part 1 on Plan 63R-4062 for the benefit of those lands described as Part of Blocks D, E and F, Plan E-640 and designated as Parts 3 and 4 on Plan 63R-1166 (the "dominant tenement") for the use by the owners and occupants from time to time of the dominant tenement and that of their assigns, agents, employees and invitees including without limitation all persons requiring access from time to time to the buildings located on the dominant tenement and all vehicles necessary for all uses to which the said buildings are put, for the purpose of loading and unloading material at the adjacent loading docks and for access to garbage compactors for the purpose of removing garbage, the foregoing easement and right-of-way shall be subject to the following conditions:

1. There shall be payable to the Transferee an annual fee of Twenty-Five Thousand ($25,000.00) Dollars for the use of the easement and right-of-way, such fee to commence upon the substantial completion of the easement area such that it is sufficiently complete for its permanent use (after construction of the parking garage) by the Transferor (it being understood that this will not require the top coat of paving material to be laid) and shall be payable quarterly in arrears. The said fee shall be increased at the end of each five (5) year period by an amount equal to the percentage increase during such five (5) year period in the Consumer Price Index for all items, as determined by Statistics Canada or successor index or agency. Upon written notice to the Transferor, the Transferee shall be entitled to assign and/or direct that the said fee by [sic] payable to any other person, whether or not such person has any rights in the lands herein transferred. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the said fee shall not be payable during any period of interruption of use, after substantial completion of the easement area, due to an exercise by the Transferor of its rights pursuant to paragraph 4 herein.
2. Parking on the right-of-way shall be prohibited and the enforcement of such prohibition shall be the responsibility of and under the sole jurisdiction and authority of the occupant of the dominant tenement. The occupant of the dominant tenement shall maintain the right-of-way at all times in good repair and free from ice, snow and other obstruction and agrees to indemnify and keep indemnified the Transferee, its servants, officers, employees, agents, successors and assigns of, from and against all manner of loss, damages, expense, suits, claims, liens and demands arising out of the use of the said right-of-way. The Transferee shall be responsible for the maintenance and repair of all reinforced concrete structural elements forming part of or supporting the right-of-way. If the Transferee disposes of its interest in the right-of-way or the structural elements supporting same then the foregoing responsibility shall be those of its successors in title and the Transferee shall be forever discharged from any further obligations or liability.
3. Failure to pay the fee required pursuant to paragraph 1 herein within fifteen (15) days after notice of non-payment is delivered by the Transferee to the owner and the occupant of the dominant tenement or persistent failure of the occupant to carry out its obligations pursuant to paragraph 2 herein shall give rise to a right of termination of the easement and right-of-way. In order for an event to constitute a failure to carry out an obligation under this paragraph, the owner and the occupant must have received notice in writing from the Transferee setting out the alleged failure and the owner or the occupant must have failed to correct the same within a reasonably practicable period dependent upon the type of obligation and external factors which may prevent immediate correct. Such termination shall not render the party enjoying the same liable for payment required to be made hereunder, except for the period concluding on the date of termination. Termination may be effected by registration on title of evidence of failure to comply with the provisions of this paragraph and of such notice of non-payment or persistent failure to carry out obligations. Upon written notice to the owner of the servient tenement and assignee of the fee payable, if any, by both the owner and occupant of the dominant tenement that the right-of-way is no longer required and the delivery of an appropriate release and abandonment thereof in registrable form and payment to the effective date of release of the right-of-way to the owner of the servient tenement, there shall be no further liability for any further payment.
4. The use of the easement and right-of-way may be interrupted from time to time:
 - (a) To permit the Transferee or its successors to fulfill the repair obligation contained in paragraph 2 herein. The Transferee shall give the owner and occupant of the dominant tenement, no less than thirty (30) days prior notice in writing of any such repairs unless such repairs constitute an emergency.
 - (b) To permit the construction or reconstruction, from time to time, of a parking garage or other structures on the lands herein transferred, provided that the Transferee uses its best efforts, subject to force majeure, to complete the construction of such structures in a timely fashion giving reasonable priority, having regard to normal construction practice, to completing construction in the easement area, in establishing its sequence of operation for such construction. The Transferee shall give the owner and occupant, no less than thirty (30) days notice in writing prior to commencing such construction.
5. The easement and right-of-way shall be subject to encroachment in an area extending not more than five hundred (500mm) millimeters south and west from the northerly and easterly boundaries respectively of the easement area to the extent necessary for the purpose of constructing and maintaining supporting columns or walls for an overhead passerelle connecting the structures located on the dominant and servient tenements.

RESTRICTIONS

AND THE SAID Transferee, its successors and assigns hereby covenants to and with the Transferor, its successors and assigns, to the intent that the burden of this covenant shall run with and bind the lands transferred to the Transferee herein, and every Part thereof, and shall run with and be for the benefit of the lands owned by the Transferor and hereunder described as the Dominant Tenement, that:

1. No building or other structures shall be erected upon the lands for use other than as residential premises and ancillary facilities thereto including a public square, general retail space and parking and that such residential premises and parking shall be governed by the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, Ch. 84, and amendments thereto, or any legislation passed in substitution therefor.
2. There shall be no change in the design or appearance of the exterior of any buildings erected on the lands, without the prior written approval of the Transferor or its successor in title to the Dominant Tenement, which may affect the aesthetics of such buildings.

The easement area was completed in October 1990. The condominiums were marketed by Camrost pursuant to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, in July and October 1991. Upon registration of the declarations required by the Condominium Act the land over which the easement is exercised became the property of the applicant condominium corporations.

In October 1994 Camrost assigned its right to the annual fee to Queen's Quay, a corporation within the Camrost corporate structure. Although invoices have been rendered, the fee has not been paid due to a dispute among the various prospective payors. That dispute is not the subject of nor is it relevant to the present application.

Position of the Parties

The applicants take the position that as the fee is described as being for the use of the easement, entitlement to the fee passed to them upon acquiring title to the lands over which the easement is enjoyed.

The respondents take the position that it was intended that Camrost would retain entitlement to the fee as the fee was the payment to Camrost for the construction of the easement. They submit that the language of the transfer makes it clear that the right to claim the fee was intended as a personal right to be enjoyed by Camrost or its assignee and, moreover, that in law such an interest does not run with the land and pass to the party who acquires title to the land.

Analysis

(1) Terms of the Transfer

The applicants argue that as the transfer provides for the payment of a fee "for the use of the easement", the right to the fee passes with title to the land. It is their submission that the parties owning the lands which bear the burden of the easement are entitled to the fee for its use. It is further submitted that, at the very least, the language of the transfer is ambiguous and that any doubt should be resolved against the respondent Camrost which, as a party to the transfer, must bear, or at least share, responsibility for its drafting. The contra proferentem principle is relied on. The applicants further contend that the transfer gives rise to an obligation on them to maintain and repair the easement, and that as the party responsible for repairs, they should enjoy the benefit of the annual fee.

While the terms of the transfer creating the easement and the obligation to pay an annual fee for its use are not crystal clear, it is my view that, on balance, an interpretation favouring the respondents is the appropriate one.

The first point to note is that the instrument provides that the annual fee is to be paid to "the Transferee" without any reference to the "successors and assigns" of the transferee. The omission of the words "successors and assigns" supports the contention that the right to receive the fee is a personal right rather than one which passes with title to the land over which the easement is exercised. The omission of any reference to "successors and assigns" is to be contrasted not only with standard usage in such instruments with respect to interests attaching to title in land, but also with other parts of the transfer itself where reference is made to "successors and assigns". The point is fortified by the terms of para. 1 which expressly provides that the "Transferee shall be entitled to assign and/or direct that the said fee payable by [sic] payable to any other person, whether or not such person has any rights in the lands herein transferred". This provision, in my view, indicates that the right to the fee is a right personal to the transferee. As the transferee is given the right to assign to another party having no interest in the land, clear distinction is drawn between title to the land and entitlement to the fee. It is difficult to imagine how the transferee could retain the right to assign the fee to a party who had no interest in the land if the right to the fee were an entitlement passing with title to the land.

A second indication that there is a distinction to be drawn between ownership of the land and entitlement to the fee is to be found in para. 3. There, it is provided that if the owner of the adjacent land, described as the "owner of the dominant tenement", no longer requires the right of way, "upon written notice to the owner of the servient tenement and assignee of the fee payable, if any" to that effect, the owner of the dominant tenement is discharged from further liability for the annual fee. Again, if entitlement to the fee were to pass to the owner of the land, it is difficult to see why notice to both the owner and the party entitled to receive the fee would be required.

A third point is that the concluding portion of the transfer dealing with the easement clearly provides "that the burden of this covenant shall run with and bind the lands transferred to the Transferee herein". However, nothing is said as to entitlement to the fee running with the lands and enuring to the benefit of the owner of those lands from time to time. This language is entirely consistent with the position of the respondents and, indeed, reinforces that position to the extent that it demonstrates a distinction in the minds of those drafting the instrument between the burden of the easement which does run with the land and the benefit of the annual fee which does not.

At first blush, it may seem that if a fee is to be paid for an easement, it should be paid to the owner of the lands which bears the burden of the easement. Upon analysis, however, it is apparent that there is nothing unusual in the subsequent owner of a property which is subject to an easement receiving nothing by way of compensation. Ordinarily where a previous owner sells an easement, the successor in title must bear the burden of the easement without compensation. The existence of the easement will be a factor affecting the price the successor in title pays for the property. The applicants would have no claim against Camrost if it had been paid a lump sum for the easement prior to transfer of title to the applicants. I fail to see how the fact that payment for the easement is to be made over time makes any difference.

As noted, the applicants submit that they are responsible for the maintenance and repair of the structural elements supporting the easement. This is disputed by Camrost which takes the position that it remains responsible for these matters. The language of the transfer with respect to maintenance and repair is anything but clear. Paragraph 2 provides that the owner of the dominant tenement is responsible for ordinary maintenance, including ice and snow removal, while the "transferee" is responsible "for the maintenance and repair of all reinforced concrete structural elements forming part of or supporting the right of way." Paragraph 2 goes on to deal with responsibility in the event the "transferee disposes of its interest in the right of way or the structural elements supporting same". Responsibility for maintenance and repairs shifts to the transferee's "successors in title". The language here is ambiguous. A distinction is drawn between the transferee's interest in the right of way and its interest in the structural elements. If by "interest in the right of way" it is intended to refer to the transferee's right to receive the fee, then Camrost's position is supported. On the other hand, the reference to the transferee's "successors in title" becoming responsible for repairs supports the position of the applicants. In the end, this provision is unclear and, in my view, difficult to understand. It is surely odd, however, that each party should so vigorously insist that it is responsible for what might well prove to be a significant liability. Taken alone, this element of the terms of the transfer would seem to favour the position of the applicants. However, it must be considered in light of the rest of the instrument as well as in the light of the dealings between Camrost and Copthorne, which strongly suggests that Camrost remains liable for these repairs so long as it receives the annual fee, and that if entitlement to the fee is assigned, liability for the repairs is to be assumed by the assignee. Moreover, the position taken by the respondents on this aspect of the matter would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the respondents later to insist that the applicants are responsible for repair and maintenance of the structures necessary for the right of way.

(2) Intention of the Parties

The history of dealings between Camrost and Copthorne leading up to the creation of the easement and the inclusion of the easement in the transfer from The Toronto Harbour Commissioners strongly supports the position taken by the respondents. The uncontradicted affidavit evidence filed by the respondents indicates that it was always the intention of Camrost and the other parties involved that Camrost and its assigns would retain their entitlement to the annual fee so long as the easement was used, whether or not Camrost or its assigns had any interest in the lands over which the easement was enjoyed.

In effect, Camrost sold to Copthorne the right to an easement. The price for the easement was based largely on the fact that Camrost had to expend a considerable sum in structural work required for the easement. Rather than pay Camrost a lump sum for the easement, Copthorne agreed to pay Camrost an annual fee. That fee was tied to the use of the easement as a form of security to Camrost. If Copthorne, or its successor in title, did not pay the fee, the right to enjoy the easement could be denied.

Had Camrost simply sold the right of an easement to Copthorne for a lump sum payment, the applicants would clearly have no claim to that sum. In my view, it makes no difference that payment by Copthorne is structured as an annual fee rather than as a lump sum. In essence, the transaction is the same, and there is no reason in law or in equity to deny Camrost or its assigns the right to be paid for the right it sold, particularly as Camrost had to spend a considerable sum in constructing the structural elements necessary for the enjoyment of the easement.

Accordingly, it is my view that if one looks beyond the language of the transfer creating the easement to the intention of the parties, the evidence clearly supports the position of the respondents.

(3) Does the Right to an Annual Fee Run With the Land?

As there is no privity between the applicants and the owners of the dominant tenement, it is necessary to consider whether the benefit of the right to receive the annual fee for the use of the easement is an entitlement which, in law, is capable of passing with title to the successors in title of Camrost, the original "transferee" in the instrument creating the easement.

The applicants contend that the right to the fee does pass with title as it is expressly tied to the use of the easement. Counsel cites the Condominium Act, s. 2(4), which provides that "upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act". Reliance is also placed on the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.34, s. 15(1), which provides as follows:

15(1) Every conveyance of land, unless an exception is specially made therein, includes all houses, outhouses, edifices, barns, stables, yards, gardens, orchards, commons, trees, woods, underwoods, mounds, fences, hedges, ditches, ways, waters, watercourses, lights, liberties, privileges, easements, profits, commodities, emoluments, hereditaments and appurtenances whatsoever to such land belonging or in anywise appertaining, or with such land demised, held, used, occupied and enjoyed or taken or known as part or parcel thereof, and, if the conveyance purports to convey an estate in fee simple, also the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, yearly and other rents, issues and profits of the same land and of every part and parcel thereof, and all the estate, right, title, interest, inheritance, use, trust, property, profit, possession, claim and demand whatsoever of the grantor into, out of or upon the same land, and every part and parcel thereof, with their and every of their appurtenances.

These provisions beg the question of what interests are appurtenant to the land. The respondents argue that in law, an affirmative entitlement to future payments is not an interest which is capable of running with the land and passing to a successor in title. It is the respondents' position that as the right to the annual fee is not an interest which attaches to the land, the interest is not one to which the above-noted statutory provisions apply.

The requirements for establishing that a benefit of a covenant runs with the land are described as follows by Ziff, Principles of Property Law (1993), p. 307:

(i) the transferee obtains the same legal estate as the transferor; (ii) it was intended that the covenant would pass automatically; and, (iii) the covenant relates to the land transferred -- it must "touch and concern" the land.

The respondents contend that neither the second nor third requirements are met. The issue of the intent of the parties has already been canvassed at length, and as indicated above, it is my view that the intention of the parties was that the benefit of the covenant to pay the fee not pass with the title to the lands but only if expressly assigned by Camrost. That finding is, in my view, fatal to the claim that the applicants acquired the entitlement to the fee as it is clear there has been no assignment of that right to them by Camrost.

With respect to the third element, Prof. Ziff elaborates as follows (at p. 307):

The requirement that the covenant "touch and concern" the dominant land [here the lands of the applicants] is important throughout the law of covenants. This requirement limits the variety of restrictions that can pass from owner to owner. To touch and concern the land, the covenant must either (a) relate to the mode of occupation; or (b) directly, and not in some collateral manner, affect the value of the land. Restrictions on the use to which land is put is an example of a valid restriction.

It is to be noted that the discussion focuses on restrictions and it is clear that, in general, affirmative covenants requiring the expenditure of money or the doing of some act do not run with the land: Parkinson v. Reid, [1966] S.C.R. 162, 56 D.L.R. (2d) 315.

The proposition that covenants to pay a periodical sum do not run with the land is supported by a long line of authority. The principle was enunciated in Milnes v. Branch (1816), 5 M. & S. 411, 105 E.R. 1011 (Q.B.), and considered at length by the English Court of Appeal in Grant v. Edmondson, [1931] 1 Ch. 1, [1930] All E.R. Rep. 48. At issue in that case was an interest classified as a "rentcharge". There, it was held that the successors in title to the original beneficiary of a rentcharge were not entitled to sue for payments due unless the right to receive those payments had been specifically assigned to them. The trial judge, Clauson J., put the point as follows ([1930] 2 Ch. 245 at p. 254):

In technical language, the question is whether the benefit of the covenant runs with the rentcharge at law. For many years the general opinion of legal practitioners, as reflected in the ordinary text-books, has regarded as sound the doctrine that the benefit of a covenant (for example, for payment of the rentcharge) cannot run with a rentcharge at law, but the covenant must be treated as a covenant collateral or in gross.

The Court of Appeal agreed after a very detailed review of the authorities. Lawrence L.J. stated (at pp. 20-21):

... it appears to me that Clauson J. was right in concluding that for many years past Milnes v. Branch has been accepted by the profession as having established the proposition that a covenant to pay a rentcharge does not run with the rent. Thus, in Burton on Real Property, 7th ed. (1850), p. 347: "In particular it seems that the covenant of the grantor runs neither with the land nor with the rent; but is merely a personal engagement between the parties. Milnes v. Branch"; in Pollock on Contracts, 8th ed. (1911), p. 249 (4): "An agreement to grant an annuity charged on land implies an agreement to give a personal covenant for payment; but by a somewhat curious distinction the burden of a covenant to pay a rentcharge does not run with the land charged, nor does the benefit of it run with the rent"; in Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. xxiv. (1912), p. 517, cl. 1021: "The due payment of a rentcharge is frequently secured by the covenant of the landowner who creates it. The burden of such a covenant does not run with the land so as to bind subsequent owners of the land; nor, it seems, does the benefit of the covenant run with the rentcharge so as to entitle subsequent owners of the rentcharge to sue," citing Milnes v. Branch and other cases; and in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 13th ed. (1929), p. 98, in the notes to Spencer's Case, Milnes v. Branch is cited at length for the proposition that a covenant to pay the rentcharge does not run with the rent.

Lawrence L.J. added (at p. 26):

Whatever may be the foundation of the rule, and whether it rests on the broader principle that (except as between lessor and lessee) no covenant can run with an incorporeal hereditament, or whether it rests on the narrower principle that a covenant to pay a rentcharge is a collateral covenant or a covenant in gross which does not touch or concern the rentcharge or whether it rests on no principle and is merely arbitrary, I am of opinion that it is too firmly established to be disturbed by this Court.

As noted, Grant v. Edmondson dealt with an interest known as a "rentcharge". The right to receive a periodic sum from land may be classified as either an annuity or a rentcharge. The distinction between the two is that a rentcharge includes the right of distress for non-payment: see Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed. (1982), vol. 39, p. 563. It is clear that the fee in the case at bar does not constitute a rentcharge, as it does not include the right of distress for non-payment. However, I see no reason why the broader principle of Parkinson v. Reid, Grant v. Edmondson and Milnes v. Branch should not apply to an interest of the type at issue in this case, particularly as no authority has been cited to me in support of the proposition that an interest of this nature is capable of running with the land.

I conclude, therefore, that even if the applicants had satisfied the requirement that there was an intention to create a covenant that would run with the land, an interest of the kind at issue in this case is not capable of running with the land and that, absent a specific assignment of the right from original party to the covenant, the applicants have no claim to the fee.

(4) Fiduciary Duty

The applicants rely on the principle established in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280 (C.A.), that the owner-developer of a condominium owes the unit purchasers a fiduciary duty with respect to dealings in the interests appurtenant to the condominium. In my view, that case is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. Here, the grant of the easement and agreement that the easement be paid for by way of annual fee was completed long before any units in the condominium had been marketed. The deal was struck at the same time Camrost itself acquired title to the lands on which the condominium was to be developed. At that point, Camrost was at liberty to dispose of its rights to those lands as it saw fit. The fiduciary duty enunciated in the York Condominium case arises after unit-holders have acquired an interest in the condominium to protect them from the developer dealing with the property to their detriment and for its own benefit. Here, the easement was created before any unit-holders had acquired any rights and its existence was disclosed in the required disclosure statement.

The applicants complain that the existence of the fee was not disclosed, but as the fee represented the price of the easement sold long before the condominium came into existence, I see no reason why it should have been disclosed. In any event, the fee was hardly something Camrost concealed as its existence is obvious from the title documents.

Conclusion

In my view, the claim of the applicants to entitlement to the fee for the easement fails, both in fact and in law. Although there is no cross-application by the respondents for a declaration of their entitlement, counsel submitted that as it necessarily follows from dismissal of the application that the respondents are entitled to the fee, a declaration to that effect would serve to clarify the issue in the future. I see no reason to refuse that request, and, accordingly, there shall be a declaration:

- (a) that the entitlement to the annual fee for the use of the easement does not run with the land and does not rest with the owner from time to time of the said land;
- (b) that Camrost or its assignee has all the right, title and interest to the annual fee for the use of the easement;
- (c) that the applicants have no interest in the annual fee for the use of the easement.

If the parties are unable to agree as to costs, I may be spoken to.

Order accordingly.

Brockenshire J.

Heard: November 1, 1995.

Oral judgment: November 3, 1995.

(13 pp.)

The Condominium Corporation applied for an order that the respondents had breached an article of the Condominium Declaration, and an order requiring that they comply. Although the fact situations varied in the three cases, basically each of the respondents lived in condominium units whose windows had been altered. The Corporation wished to stick window strip mullions on the exterior of the windows to make them look the same as windows of other units in the building. The respondents refused to allow this to happen.

Counsel:

J.D. Pappalardo, counsel for the applicant.

J.D. MacMillan, counsel for the respondents.

1 BROCKENSHIRE J. (orally):— I have before me three applications brought by York Condominium Corporation No. 35 against three of the unit holders from that corporation, Steponas, Smylie, and Mosseau. The basic factual situation in all three of the applications is the same. There are some variances in the particulars.

2 I have undertaken to deal with these applications in my court because another matter before me was adjourned leaving available time. I appreciate and thank counsel for their assistance in leading me through three complex sets of documentation and attempting to explain to me the situation. Factual errors which I may make I would attribute to my own lack of knowledge to the background and inability to read the material before commencing and my reasons will be subject to a reserved right of correction should it prove necessary.

3 The relevant part of York Condominium Corporation No. 35 is a townhouse development. The townhouses have apparently from the photographs small backyards enclosed to a large extent by fencing and on the back of the units a door leading out and windows. The subject problem relates to the windows.

4 I am told that these units were constructed and registered sometime in the early 1970's, I have heard the date 1971, and that included in the particulars in the condominium plans duly registered were drawings of the proposed windows. I am further told that in fact the windows were not installed during construction in accordance with those drawings. There has been some suggestion that what went in was cheaper than what was called for.

5 In any event, what I have heard was a particular problem is shown in a series of photographs as Exhibit "E" in the Application Record in the Steponas matter where apparently the original windows had an upper and lower portion. The upper portion was divided by a strip running vertically. The lower portion was separated from the upper by a strip running horizontally and one-half of that lower portion had a slider type window in it so there was another divider running vertically across the bottom part.

6 I have heard and the affidavits indicate that for what I presume was a variety of reasons, a number of the owners in the condominium have made changes in the windows. They have done it at their expense. The changes I have heard of included doing away with the slider portion in the bottom for safety or aesthetic reasons and doing away with the divider in the top to give more of a picture window effect.

7 I have heard that the Condominium Corporation became concerned that the changes being carried out by the various owners was detracting from the uniformity in appearance of the units. That the Board in its wisdom pondered this difficulty for several years and finally in 1994 collectively started to take some action, exhibited apparently by minutes and resolutions of the Condominium Corporation.

8 The proposal of the Condominium Corporation was to attempt to create uniformity by installing at its expense strips on the outside of windows that had been altered which would be glued on to the new windows to make them look similar to the old windows. The Condominium Corporation, I presume, did this in the utmost of good faith with the purpose and intent of improving the general appearance of the entire development and further was prepared to do it at the general expense of the Condominium Corporation meaning expense of all of the people in the condominium.

9 I am told that a number of the condominium owners who had changed windows accepted that offer. The three parties brought before the court in these three applications did not accept the offer.

10 Fortunately, the same counsel appeared for all three which allowed for uniformity in treatment and brevity in argument.

11 The factual situation of the three is somewhat different. I am advised that the Smylie's purchased their unit in 1985. The windows in their unit had been altered before they purchased. They did nothing to the windows except that Mr. Smylie, who happens to be a glazier, in 1994 replaced a broken window on agreement with the Condominium Corporation who in fact paid for the installation of the replacement. Mr. Smylie is described as both a glazier and a artist. In his view the proposed strips which the Condominium Corporation would like to stick on his windows are offensive in appearance. He resists on the basis of de minimis, which is common to all three of the objectors, on the basis of laches, and on the basis of an implied acceptance by the Corporation both in not pointing out in an estoppel certificate that there could be a problem with the windows installed, and in accepting his work in continuing the variation if you will and paying for the bill in 1994.

12 Steponas moved in 1991 and they did not change their windows. Somebody before them probably did change the windows because the windows were not like the others that were installed by the contractor when the condominium was built. Interestingly though, the windows in the Steponas units are exactly as depicted in the Condominium Declaration Plans. So the argument of Steponas in addition to de minimis and laches is that they would have no way whatsoever of knowing that there was non-compliance. In fact from their position their windows complied exactly with what they were supposed to get from all of the registered documents.

13 Mosseau acquired her unit in 1991 and made a change in the windows at about the same time. Her argument is that if the Condominium Corporation had done anything about the other windows she relies particularly on Smylie, she would have known and had brought home to her that she could not and should not make a change and would not have put herself into the position she did. She in effect argues that the Condominium Corporation has slept on its rights to her disadvantage. Despite what must have been obvious work being done on this unit in 1991, the Condominium Corporation did nothing, apparently, to stop the work.

14 The Condominium Declaration makes maintenance of common elements a duty of the Corporation. I heard evidence that the outside windows of these units, per the efforts of some surveyor obtained no doubt at large expense, backed by the surveyor's opinion, would be a common element. The inside of the windows would go with the units.

15 Section 8(b) of the Condominium Declaration resolves the obvious problems that can arise in favour of the Condominium Corporation by providing that each unit holder shall, in addition to maintaining his unit, take care of repairs and replacements of all windows servicing his unit. The Condominium Corporation has of course the usual general power and authority to deal with and to regulate the common units. There is a provision under 9(a)(3) stating in part that no window shall be installed, removed or otherwise altered without the prior written consent of the Corporation. The position of the Corporation is that prior written consent was not given in the three separate instances of the changes in the three windows in the three units here before me.

16 The application that is brought before me in an attempt to arrive at a resolution of the impasse between the three unit holders and the Condominium Corporation, is an application for an order declaring the respondents have breached article 9(a)(3) of the Declaration, and an order requiring that they comply. In other words, that the unit holders be required to put the windows of their units back to the original condition of all of the other windows in the development.

17 There is an alternate application to the court for an order that the respondents not interfere with the installation of window strip mullions on the exterior of their unit windows. I heard no clear authority being cited for the power of the Condominium Corporation to install these strips on windows. Certainly I heard nothing of an attempt to amend the Declaration so as to amend the property description.

18 There is some reliance on general principles of condominium living, particularly reliance on York Condominium Corporation No. 118 v. Glidden et al., York County Court, Grossberg J. August 3, 1979; and York Condominium Corporation No. 216 v. Borsodi, (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 99 at 106-109 Ct. which indicate and support generally the concept that inherent in the condominium concept is the principal that because condominium unit holders live in close proximity and share facilities in common, in order to promote the welfare of the majority of the owners, individual unit owners may be required to give up a certain degree of freedom of choice that they might otherwise enjoy in separately, privately owned property.

19 There was some reliance on York Region Condominium Corporation No. 585 v. Gilbert, Ont. Dist. Ct., Gilbert D.C.J., January 23, 1990 in which the court indicated that a restriction in a declaration may even have a degree of unreasonableness and still withstand attack in the courts.

20 My difficulty is that these cases are referring to and relying on provisions in the Declaration and when one becomes a unit owner one accepts what is in the Declaration. What is proposed here is a change from what is in the Declaration but not a change formally processed as such, but rather a change based upon the practicalities of the circumstances. The other argument is that it is within the general powers of the Condominium Corporation in managing the common units to make such alterations.

21 To my mind it is one thing, in the process of managing a common unit such as a parking area, to put in strips or bumpers or otherwise deal with it. It is something else to come and say in the course of managing a common unit which is the outside skin of a window, that we are going to put in effect, in the face of the owners, something which obstructs their view and which they find visually offensive.

22 The argument is that this would be for the general welfare. I can appreciate that as a view taken by the Condominium Corporation and I can appreciate these particular unit holders having a different view. And when I look at the photographs showing how circumscribed is the view in another sense of these back windows due to the fencing I feel the onus is on the Condominium Corporation to show that this proposal is for the general welfare, and I do not feel that onus has been met.

23 The de minimis argument is to my mind completely obvious. On first reading the factums, my first question to counsel was, is this a matter of principal. It appears that it is. It appears there has been stand-off. It appears that the parties rather than resolving it physically in the backyards have come to the court seeking an interpretation, for which they are to be commended. The cost of bringing three separate applications with all of the paper and documentation entailed therein in my view horrendously outweighs anything that either side could hope to gain.

24 The argument of laches, I am told by Mr. MacMillan, is supported in the case of activities of a condominium corporation by one case only. A decision in Marafioti v. Metropolitan General Condominium No. 775, a decision of Greer J., and reported in 39 R.P.R. (2d) at p. 47; a decision issued in May 1994. Greer J. addressed the general proposition about a six year delay by a corporation in bringing an application and whether it was now estopped. She looked to a definition of estoppel in the C.E.D. She looked to other cases including Farrell v. Manchester in the Supreme Court of Canada. In the particular case before her she felt the six year delay seemed like an inordinate time to wait but included in the particular case before her there was nothing to lead her to believe there was acquiescence.

25 In the case before me certainly there is objective, solid evidence of acquiescence in the case of Mr. Smylie when the Condominium Corporation paid in 1994 to replace a window which was not in compliance with the general scheme.

26 I have indicated that in the Mosseau situation where a change was made in 1991 shortly after acquiring the property without the required consent under 9(a)(3) but without any objection whatsoever, that surely there was acquiescence.

27 In the Steponas case, where apparently his window had been changed long before he acquired the property in 1991, which change would have been completely obvious to the management, but where no objection to the change was brought to the attention of he or his solicitors on his purchase in 1991. In my view, there was acquiescence.

28 I fully appreciate and I think I have earlier indicated that the Condominium Board on behalf of all the unit holders is probably attempting in good faith in the cheapest and simplest way resolve what they view as a problem. But also, in my view, it must be recognized that these units are people's homes and that while when they have agreed to live in a condominium development, they are accepting that there will be a uniformity and that there will be general rules and regulations, nevertheless, it does not in my view lie within the authority of the Condominium Corporation to sleep on its rights so that people acquire or feel they have acquires a proprietary right to the amenities which they are enjoying.

29 If with all three of these people the Condominium Corporation had indicated when they were first acquiring that there was a problem, that they may be asked to do something, that they may be asked to join with others in creating uniformity, these people would have been in a position to make a decision of whether to live there or not. In my view they have been lulled into a sense of security.

30 I do not find any general authority for the Condominium Corporation to directly force installation of these stick on strips on their windows. In my view the proposal to instead ask the court to order these people to take out their existing windows and to install windows which would meet the original scheme smacks of an abuse of authority.

31 For those reasons I dismiss all three applications.

This was a ruling with respect to whether the plaintiff was covered under a policy of insurance issued by the defendant G Co. to the defendant S Corp. The plaintiff G owned a townhouse in the S corp. complex. G rented the unit to C, whose daughter was injured when she fell on the driveway leading to the unit which was common property reserved for the exclusive use of the C's. Both G and S Corp. were found liable. The insurance policy provided for payment if S Corp. was found negligent with respect to someone's injury and section 54 of the Condominium Act extended that coverage to an owner such as G. The defendant argued that G's liability only arose by virtue of an oral tenancy agreement with the C's.

LAMPERSON J.:— The parties have asked this court by way of special case to say whether the plaintiff, Ghag Enterprises Ltd. (Ghag) is covered under a policy of insurance issued by the defendant, Gerling Global General Insurance Company (Global), to Strata Corporation K-68 (Strata K-68).

Ghag was the owner of a town house (Unit 43) in the Strata K-68 complex. The driveway leading to the unit was common property reserved for the exclusive use of the occupants of Unit 43. Ghag rented that unit to Mr. and Mrs. Cater whose 8-year-old daughter was injured when she fell off her bicycle because of a deep indentation in the driveway. Houghton J. found both Ghag and Strata K-68 liable. Damages must still be dealt with. The specific questions which Ghag and Global have asked this court to answer are:

- (a) whether the common property of Strata Corporation K-68 is covered by insurance as provided by the defendant, Gerling Global General Insurance Company;
- (b) whether the defendant, Gerling Global General Insurance Company, is required to indemnify the plaintiff for liability and damages in Action No. 13822 of the Kamloops Registry brought on behalf of Malia Lynn Cater;
- (c) whether Gerling Global General Insurance Company is required to indemnify the plaintiff for its actual costs incurred in defending the proceedings brought under Action No. 13822 of the Kamloops Registry on behalf of Malia Lynn Cater;
- (d) whether the defendant, Gerling Global General Insurance Company, is required to indemnify the plaintiff for all actual costs incurred in these proceedings.

These questions raise two issues:

- (1) Is Ghag insured;
- (2) Did Ghag assume a contractual obligation thereby excluding himself from insurance coverage.

(1) Is Ghag Insured

The driveway was common property belonging to the strata corporation even though it was reserved for the exclusive use of the occupants of Unit 43. Section 34(1)(d) of the Condominium Act, R.S. c. 61 imposes upon the Strata Corporation a duty to keep common property and common facilities in a state of "good and serviceable repair." Subsection (2) provides that the strata corporation may obtain and maintain insurance for other perils including liability. Section 54 deals with the subject of insurance and provides:

" 54.(1) The Strata Corporation

(a) shall obtain and maintain insurance for the buildings, common facilities and any insurable improvements owned by the Strata Corporation to their replacement value against fire, and against other perils as are usually the subject of insurance in respect of similar properties; and

(b) may obtain and maintain insurance against other perils including liability to the amount it considers advisable.

(3) notwithstanding the terms of the policy,

(a) the Strata Corporation;

(b) the owners and tenants, from time to time of every strata lot shown on the strata plans; and

(c) all persons normally occupying the strata lot shall be deemed to be included as named insured on a policy of insurance in force under subsection (1). "

In this case, the insurance provided for the payment of damages if the strata corporation was found negligent with respect to someone's injury. Section 54(3) of the Condominium Act extends that coverage to an owner such as Ghag. He is therefore covered by the policy of insurance. Defence counsel has argued that the coverage applies only to incidents which happen in common facilities as opposed to common property. The Condominium Act makes such a distinction. That is apparent from the Condominium Act. The distinction would, in my opinion, be important if we were dealing with the loss of property, but is immaterial when dealing with liability in tort.

(2) Did Ghag Exclude Itself from Coverage by Assuming a Contractual Obligation

The insurance policy provides coverage for liability incurred as a result of the commission of a tort and does not cover a situation where a person incurs liability as a result of a contract. Dominion Bridge Co. v. Toronto General Insurance Company 40 D.L.R. (2d) 840 has determined that if a plaintiff can claim damages both under a contract and by the tort of negligence, the obligations of an insurer to indemnify an insured for negligence is vitiated, and consequently the insured is not covered by the policy. Global argues that Ghag's liability arises by virtue of an oral tenancy agreement which it entered into with Mr. and Mrs. Cater. I do not agree with that contention. It seems to me that Malia Lynn Cater's claim for damages is founded in tort only since there is no privity of contract between her and Ghag. The situation may be somewhat different with respect to her parents, who are also plaintiffs. However, the tenancy agreement was oral and there is no evidence of the terms which were agreed to. Thus, the requirement to keep the premises safe is imposed upon the landlord by the Occupiers Liability Act and the Residential Tenancy Act. A perusal of the judgment of Houghton J. shows that he relied on those Acts to impose liability on both defendants and that he was not directly concerned with any tenancy agreement. It should also be noted that the statement of claim alleges a tort and not a breach of contract. It seems to me that the Occupiers Liability Act and the Residential Tenancy Act impose upon an owner certain duties much in the same way that the Motor Vehicle Act imposes certain duties upon drivers. I have concluded therefore this is a case where Ghag is liable in tort and not in contract vis a vis Mr. and Mrs. Cater.

The answers to the questions posed by the parties are as follows:

(a) Strata K-68 is covered by insurance with respect to acts of negligence regardless whether that act was committed in a common facility or on common property.

(b) Global is required to indemnify the plaintiffs for liability and damages in the action brought on behalf of Malia Lynn Cater.

(c) Global is required to indemnify the plaintiff for its actual costs incurred in defending the action brought by Malia Lynn Cater.

(d) Global is required to indemnify the plaintiff for all actual costs incurred in these proceedings.

Heard: November 21, 1994.
Judgment: filed December 5, 1994.
(11 pp.)

Petition for declaratory relief. The petitioner was the developer of a strata-titled residential condominium project which was designed to be in six phases. Following the completion of the first phase and the sale of the units therein, the strata council of the respondent corporation was duly convened pursuant to the Condominium Act. What came out of the meeting was a special resolution by which the council passed a bylaw stating that no owner was allowed to permit any person, including himself, under the age of 50 years to occupy any strata lot for a period in excess of 21 days in any calendar year. The original disclosure statement on the basis of which the units were offered for sale referred to the complex as an adult-only building with no one under the age of 19 and at least one resident over the age of 50. However, prior to the closings on the strata lots of the phase one owners, an amended disclosure statement was filed with the Superintendent of Real Estate and the latter statement did not contain any reference restricting the use of the property to those over 50. The petitioner now sought a declaration that the bylaw adopted by the strata council was void, on the grounds that it was contrary to section 29 of the Condominium Act.

1 HARVEY J.:— The petitioner applies for the following orders:

(a) an Order that Bylaw 131(3) of the Strata Corporation comprised of the owners, Strata Plan KAS 1079 (the "Strata Corporation"), which was added to the Bylaws of the Strata Corporation by special resolution passed on April 15, 1993, is void and of no force and effect;

(b) in the alternative, a declaration that Bylaw 131(3) of the Strata Corporation will not bind the owners of Strata Lots in phases 2 through 6, inclusive, of the residential development known as "Skyway Village" located on land described as:

PID 017-691-141
Lot B
Section 2
Township 8
Osoyoos Division
Yale District
Plan KAP46743, except Plan KAP47687 and KAS1079
(Phase 1); and,

(c) an Order that the Petitioner recover from the respondents the costs of this proceeding.

2 In bringing this petition, the petitioner relies upon ss. 27, 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 and s. 5 of the Human Rights Act, S.B.C. 1984, c. 22, as amended.

ISSUES

1. Is Bylaw 131(3) ultra vires as contravening s. 29 of the Condominium Act?
2. Is Bylaw 131(3) as adopted by the strata council ultra vires as being discriminatory?
3. Does s. 27 of the Condominium Act prevent application of Bylaw 131(3) to the owners of strata lots in phases 2 through 6?

FACTS

4 The Petitioner is a developer and the registered owner of lands in the City of Vernon upon which Skyway Village, a strata titled residential development, is to be constructed. The design and development of Skyway Village is by way of a phased residential development in six phases. The respondent strata corporation is currently comprised of the owners of the 24 strata lots in the first of the six phases. When completed the development will be comprised of a total of 106 strata lots in the six phases.

5 The original developers of Skyway Village were 415731 British Columbia Ltd. and Western Rim Projects Ltd. Following the completion of phase 1, the original developers encountered difficulties and were unable to proceed with phases 2 through 6. The petitioner purchased the lands comprising Skyway Village (not including phase 1) from the original developers on November 5, 1993, after the original developers ran into financial difficulty.

6 The respondents rely upon a disclosure statement dated February 20, 1992 which referred to the complex as an adult only building, with no one under the age of 19 and at least one resident over the age of fifty. On June 23, 1992 an amended disclosure statement primarily dealing with phases 1, 2 and 3 of Skyway Village was filed by the original developers with the superintendent of real estate. This disclosure statement did not contain any reference restricting the use of the property to those over 50. I find as a fact that the purchasers of the units in phase 1 were aware of this change prior to closing on their strata lots.

7 Once the strata council was duly convened pursuant to the Condominium Act the strata council passed Bylaw 131(3) which states:

(3) No owner shall permit any person (including himself) under the age of fifty (50) years to occupy any strata lot by him (her) for a period in excess of 21 days aggregate in any calendar year. For the purpose of this sub-section 3, a person who uses his strata lot for overnight accommodation shall be deemed to have occupied the strata lot for one day for each occasion that he (she) uses the strata lot for his (her) overnight accommodation. Any variation is subject to approval in writing from the strata council.

8 The respondents submit that the Bylaw was passed in order to preserve their community as an "adult only" community as was originally marketed. The petitioner claims that the respondents are trying to change the nature of the development into a seniors only complex despite purchasing strata lots in a development that at that time had no such restriction.

ANALYSIS

Contravention of the Condominium Act

9 The petitioner submits that the Bylaw as passed by the strata council contravenes the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 (the "Act") on the basis that the Bylaw restricts the devolution, transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing in land. Sections 29 and 30 state:

Dealings in Strata Lots

29. Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate to prohibit or restrict

(a) a devolution of a strata lot; or

(b) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot, or to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

Restriction on Leasing: General

30. (1) A strata corporation administering a strata plan that is wholly or partially residential may, by bylaw, limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased by the owners.

(2) A bylaw under subsection (1) shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced.

10 In the decision of this court in Cowe v. Strata Plan (1994), 92 B.C.L.R. (2d) 327, Madame Justice Saunders, in determining that a strata council did not have the ability to limit the rental of units to those owners who had personally occupied the unit for at least twelve months stated at page 330:

The starting and ending point on this issue is the statute itself. Sections 29 and 30 of the Act are a pair of statutory provisions that work together. Section 29 of the Act ensures there are no prohibitions or restrictions on leasing a strata lot covered by the bylaw except a bylaw passed under s. 30 of the Act. In the absence of s. 30, the Rental Limitation Bylaw in this case would be ultra vires the legislation. The bylaw relied upon by the Strata Council to refuse Ms. Cowe the opportunity to rent her strata lot must be within the parameters of s. 30.

Section 30(1) permits a strata corporation to "limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased." Section 30(2) says that such a bylaw "shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced." The respondents contend s. 30(2) is not a comprehensive provision, and that the word "shall" should be read to mean the two requirements that follow, the number of rentable strata lots and the manner in which the limitation is enforced, are minimum requirements. They contend s. 30 permits other restrictions to be inserted into the s. 30 bylaw such as that found in the bylaw impugned in this action. I do not agree.

In my view, s. 30 only permits a quantitative restriction or prohibition on the leasing of residential strata lots by owners. The permissive subsection, s. 30(1), refers only to a limitation of the number of rentable strata lots. The mandatory subsection s. 30(2), then requires not only the number of strata lots that may be leased to be established, it also requires the manner of enforcement to be established. In my view, s. 30(2) does not go further to permit the Strata Council to discriminate between owners that may rent their strata lot.

11 I accept the submission of the petitioner that as a result of Bylaw 131(3), the petitioner would be prevented from selling, transferring, leasing or otherwise dealing with any strata lots in any manner that would result in occupancy of any strata lot by any person less than the age of fifty years for more than 21 days per year. This effectively restricts the devolution of the strata lots by the petitioner, or the transfer, leasing or otherwise dealing with the strata lots by the petitioner. I do not find that the Bylaw falls within the ability of strata councils to enact bylaws pertaining to the use of the land, because its application is in all practical senses intended to control who owns and lives on the property.

HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

12 While I find that Bylaw 131(3) is contrary to sections 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act, I propose to consider as well the other substantive argument of the petitioner, that the Bylaw is in violation of the Human Rights Act, S.B.C. 1984, c. 22 in that it discriminates on potential tenants on the basis of age. The Human Rights Act does not explicitly exclude the possibility of discrimination on the basis of age. For example, s. 4 deals with the sale of property, and age is not one of the enumerated grounds on which discrimination is prohibited. Thus, a provision dealing with a sale of property which had restrictions based on age, would not contravene the Human Rights Act.

13 In contrast, s. 5 deals with the rental of property. The relevant portion is as follows:

5.(1) No person shall

(a) deny to a person or class of persons the right to occupy, as a tenant, space that is represented as being available for occupancy by a tenant...

because of the race, colour, ancestry, place of origin, religion, marital status, family status, physical or mental disability, sex, sexual orientation or age of that person or class of persons, or of any other person or class of persons.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply...

(b) as it relates to family status or age,

(i) if the space is a rental unit in residential premises in which every rental unit is reserved for rental to a person 55 years of age or older or to 2 or more persons, at least one of whom is 55 years of age or older, or

(ii) a rental unit in a prescribed class of residential premises...

14 While section 4 does not include age as one of the enumerated grounds upon which the sale of property can be limited, it is included in section 5. The only exception is for restrictions for people over the age of 55, which is not the case here. The strata council would likely not have been in violation of the Human Rights Act if the Bylaw had stated "55 years of age" instead of 50 years of age, or if Skyway Village was "a prescribed class of residential premises", in other words, a designated senior complex.

15 For the reasons stated supra I find:

1. The Bylaw is ultra vires as contravening section 29 of the Condominium Act and it does not fall into the exception provided in Section 30.

2. The Bylaw is ultra vires in that it is contrary to section 5 of the British Columbia Human Rights Act and does not fall into the exception in section 5(2).

16 In keeping with the answers to the first and second issues, it is not necessary to consider whether Bylaw 131(3) would bind the owners of strata lots in phases 2 through 6 of Skyway Village.

17 The petitioner is entitled to costs of the petition on scale 3.

Vancouver Registry No. A923876

Judgment: filed July 30, 1993.
(15 pp.)

Application for determination of a question of law and a mandatory injunction. The defendant was the purchaser of a unit in an industrial and commercial real estate development. It sought to use the unit for the purpose of carrying on business as a mortuary and crematorium. The unit was subject to a statutory building scheme which provided that none of the strata units may be used for any purpose other than manufacturing, processing and storage. The plaintiff strata corporation asked the court to determine whether the defendant's use was consistent with the building scheme requirements. The main action was commenced to obtain redress for damages suffered by those owners as a result of the defendant's wrongful user of its unit. While there was evidence that the plaintiff obtained a special resolution authorizing the proceedings, no written consents of the owners required under section 15(7)(b) of the Condominium Act could be produced.

NEWBURY J.:—

1 I heard two contested motions in this matter on June 25 -- first, the plaintiff's application for a determination under Rule 18A or the resolution of a "point of law" under Rule 34 relating to the interpretation of a statutory building scheme which is registered against the subject strata plan; and second, a motion for an order permanently enjoining the defendants from operating a mortuary or crematorium in and about unit 102 of the property. The property, located in Delta, is known as "Tilbury Corporate Centre". I understand it is of a type similar to many industrial parks in the Delta area -- that is, it is used for industrial/commercial purposes such as warehousing and food preparation and is fairly removed from the retail or downtown part of Delta.

2 Since counsel addressed themselves mainly to the substantive issues regarding the use of the unit, I propose to deal first with the point of law. I will assume, for purposes of this part of the discussion, that the plaintiff has standing to sue as it has. I will return later to that question, however, which will technically make my determination of the point of law dicta for purposes of the present application.

3 The facts of this case are simple: on June 19, 1992, RBY Holdings Ltd. purchased Unit 102 of Strata Plan LMS44. The Unit was then, and is now, subject to a Statutory building scheme registered in the Land Title Office which provides that none of the units (or "lots") may be used for any purpose whatsoever other than "manufacturing, processing, storage, wholesale, office, laboratory, profession or research and development purposes permitted by the municipality" and that "No lot will be used for any junk or salvage business or any other purpose which could or would be offensive to other occupants of the lands or the public by reason of odour, fumes, dust, smoke, noise or other pollution being generated as a result thereof or which could be hazardous by reason of danger of fire or explosion".

4 I am advised that at the time of the purchase, the municipal zoning by-law did permit the use of the premises for crematorium purposes, although it was later changed to do so. It seemed to be common ground that the defendant would be permitted to operate, despite the by-law amendment, as a nonconforming use.

5 Subsequent to their purchase, RBY Holdings Ltd. indicated that it wished to carry on business as a mortuary and crematorium in Unit 102 through two corporations (apparently related) --Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd. The last-mentioned company has obtained a business license from the municipality to operate a mortuary in Unit 102. (I note, parenthetically, that Mr. Rogers on the plaintiff's behalf did not raise before me any question arising under section 46 of the Condominium Act in this regard.) In furtherance of its wish to carry on the business of a crematorium as well, the defendants sought permission from the strata corporation for the right to install the necessary gas line over the common property to Unit 102. Mr. Justice Scarth of this Court granted a mandatory injunction to RBY in action number A923494 to permit such installation, although his Lordship was careful to state that in granting the injunction he had not dealt with the intended use of the premises and that the question of whether that use was permitted under the zoning by-law (or, presumably, under the statutory building scheme) should be the subject of a separate application.

6 I understand that the necessary installations or servicing were carried out even before this judgment was rendered and that since approximately August, 1992, Personal Alternatives has been carrying on business from Unit 102, i.e., administering the provision of funeral arrangements for the disposition of the remains of deceased persons. Prior to receiving the mortuary license, Mr. Little's affidavit states that human remains were on the site only transitorily for the purpose of being transferred into cremation caskets and were then transported off-site to crematoria. Since that time, the company has been able to store human remains in a "cool room" for periods generally not exceeding 48 hours, and the "occasional" embalming of human remains has been undertaken in a "preparation room". Mr. Little states that funeral and memorial services are not conducted on-site.

7 The affidavit material also discloses that all the necessary approvals have been received for the crematorium company to begin operations other than those that were specifically dependent upon completion of the required installations, which may now have been completed. However, cremation activities have not begun as yet.

8 In its Statement of Claim, the plaintiff seeks a declaration that the proposed use of Unit 102 as a crematorium or mortuary by any of the defendants contravenes the strata corporation's by-laws and the provisions of the building scheme registered against the property. The by-laws state that an owner shall not use his lot in a manner or for a purpose that will "cause a nuisance or hazard to any occupier of a lot". Because the question of whether the proposed uses of the property would constitute a nuisance or otherwise offend the by-laws is a question of fact which I would be reluctant to decide upon without the benefit of a trial, I propose to limit my consideration to the question of law posed under Rule 34, i.e., to whether the operation of a crematorium and/or mortuary violates the first part of paragraph 7(b) of the building scheme, assuming (as I must do under Rule 34) for purposes of this judgment that these activities will not result in the emission of odour, fumes, dust, smoke, or other pollution which could be hazardous. If this latter factual issue becomes relevant, it seems doubtful it would be appropriate for a determination under Rule 18A.

9 I am left, then, with the question, which I agree is one of law, of whether the building scheme permits the uses proposed by the defendants for Unit 102 of the Tilbury Corporate Centre. A great deal of argument was addressed to me on the questions of nuisance, offensiveness, injurious affection, community standards, and the "not in my backyard" syndrome, which the defendants say is operating here. All of these are irrelevant to the legal question of the construction of the first part of paragraph 7 (b). The question is whether the use of the lot for crematorium or mortuary purposes will be a use for a purpose other than "manufacturing, processing or storage". (None of the other permitted uses was seriously pursued by counsel, and rightly so, in my view).

10 The defendants argue that the storing of human remains on the premises for embalming and/or subsequent transportation out, is "storage" within the meaning of this paragraph and that cremation is a "process". In this regard, counsel for the defendants notes the use of the word "process" in the Cemetery and Funeral Services Act and in the "Guidelines for an Application of a Certificate of Operation to Establish a Crematorium" issued by the Registrar thereunder. He also cites cases that stand for the proposition that restrictive covenants must be construed restrictively and that documents must be given their "true meaning", i.e., the meaning that would be ascribed by "an ordinary intelligent person in construing the words in a proper way in light of the relevant circumstances".

11 On the question of "storage", he cites Capital Regional District v. Mattison, a decision of Mr. Justice Drake, suggesting that storage "implies a certain degree of permanence" and cannot be used to describe the display of perishable merchandise outside a shop in portable form. As far as "processing" is concerned, he points out that the OED definition includes "something that goes on or is carried on", "a continuous and regular action or succession of actions taking place or carried on in a definite manner", a particular method of operation in any manufacture", and that "process" is defined to mean "treating by a special process". Applying this to the facts, Mr. Doyle argues that cremation subjects the human body to a "process" by which its state is changed to what the layman would call ashes and bone fragments. Further, he says that the normal intelligent person reading the statutory building scheme would conclude that a mortuary business is "storing" human remains and that, accordingly, Mr. Little properly concluded that his proposed uses would be permitted.

12 Neither counsel cited the case of Bourne v. Norwich Crematorium Ltd. [1967] 2 All E.R. 576, a decision of the Chancery Division, which I brought to counsels' attention and on which I received written argument. In Bourne, the defendant was appealing to the General Commissioners of Income Tax against an assessment for the profits of its crematorium. The issue was whether the furnace chamber and chimney tower of the crematorium were "industrial buildings or structures" under the Income Tax Act, which defined an industrial building or structure as one in use "for the purposes of a trade which consists in the manufacture of goods or material or the subjection of goods or materials to any process". Mr. Justice Stamp found that the furnace chamber and chimney tower were not so qualified and stated as follows:

13 "I would say at once that my mind recoils as much by the description of the bodies of the dead as "goods or materials" as it does from the idea that what is done in that crematorium can be described as "the subjection of" the human corpse to a "process" ...

... In my judgment it would be a distortion of the English language to describe the living or the dead as goods or materials. The argument, of course, goes on inevitably to this: that just as "goods and materials" is wide enough to embrace, and does embrace, all things animate and inanimate, and so includes the dead human body, so the other words to which a meaning must be given, namely "subjection" and "process", are words of the widest import. Parliament cannot, so the argument as I understood it runs, have intended to exclude from the definition a process whereby refuse or waste material is destroyed or consumed by fire and, putting it crudely, for it can only be put crudely, the consumption by fire of the human body is a process. I protest against subjecting the English language, and more particularly a simple English phrase, to this kind of process of philology and semasiology. English words derive colour from those which surround them. Sentences are not mere collections of words to be taken out of the sentence, defined separately by reference to the dictionary or decided cases, and then put back again into the sentence with the meaning which you have assigned to them as separate words, so as to give the sentence or phrase a meaning which as a sentence or phrase it cannot bear without distortion of the English language."

And further:

"I conclude that the consumption by fire of the mortal remains of homo sapiens is not the subjection of goods or materials to a process within the definition of "industrial building or structure"

This judgment has been cited on numerous occasions by numerous courts for the general rule of construction that "one must not at the end of the day distort that which has to be construed and give it a meaning which in its context one does not think it can possibly bear".

14 In my view, both this general principle and the specific holding of the Court in Bourne are applicable here. If one considers the context of the statutory building scheme and the particular development in question here, it is clear that what the draughtsman had in mind was a building to be used for commercial purposes and that the manufacturing, processing and storage in question would have referred to raw or semi-processed materials or goods to be processed for resale or other commercial use.

15 I cannot agree that "processing" in this context can be distorted and expanded so as to include, in Mr. Justice Stamp's words, "the consumption by fire of the human body". The body is not being "processed", it is being consumed or destroyed by fire. Further, no commercial goods or materials result. The residue of ashes is obviously not a commercial product which I infer is contemplated by paragraph 7. (For the same reason, I would not regard an incinerator used to burn garbage as "processing" garbage.) As the Court held in Tenneco Canada Inc. v. The Queen, the normal meaning of "processing" requires that goods be made more marketable. Here we do not have "goods", we do not have "marketable goods", and, in my view, we do not have "processing" -- we have consumption or destruction of the human body. I would respectfully concur with Mr. Justice Stamp in concluding that it would be a distortion of the wording used in the scheme to conclude that cremation is within the ambit of "processing".

16 As far as "storage" is concerned, the same reasoning applies. First, since I read paragraph 7 to be referring to the storage, manufacture or processing of commercial goods or products of some kind, the word is not applicable. Second, I infer that the word in this context is intended to refer to longer-term storage than the temporary moving of a human body into the premises for embalming and shipment out. The purpose of bringing the bodies onto the premises is not to "store" them but to prepare them for burial or cremation. I have already noted Mr. Justice Drake's comments to the effect that "storage" generally implies something less transient or fleeting and suggest that this is not storage in the sense that a commercial parking lot, with cars going in and out, is not normally described as a place for the "storage" of cars. In the result, I would conclude that the operation of a mortuary does, and the operation of a crematorium would, contravene the terms of the building scheme registered against Unit 102. Subject to the issue of standing, I would have granted a declaration under Rule 34 to that effect and likely granted the prayer for a permanent injunction on that basis.

17 Another issue raised by counsel for the defendants concerned the applicability of paragraph 7 as a whole. Mr. Doyle notes that paragraph 7 refers to the use of any "Lot" and that "Lot" is defined to mean "any portion of the Lands constituting a single legally subdivided area in accordance with the requirements of the Land Title Act". He argued that the deposit of a strata plan to subdivide land into strata lots under the Condominium Act takes place under that statute and not under the Land Title Act.

18 However, this ignores section 2 of the Condominium Act, which states that "land may be subdivided into strata lots by the deposit of a strata plan, and the strata lots so created...may subject to this Act evolve or be disposed of in the same manner and form as any land the title to which is registered in a land title office."; and section 3 of the Act which states that "this Act, except Parts 7 and 8, applies to the Condominium Act unless inconsistent therewith." The two statutes interlock with the effect that a strata lot is treated to all intents and purposes like any other lot under the Land Title Act, subject to the additional restrictions and obligations contained in the Condominium Act.

19 Further, the statutory building scheme is registered under section 216 of the Land Title Act and from that date on, subsection 3 provides that the restrictions contained therein run with and bind all the land affected and every part of it without further registration. To suggest, then, that this building scheme does not apply to the strata units of Strata Plan LMS44 would effect a ridiculous result in contravention of this provision. I would therefore have not acceded to this objection.

20 I turn then to the more difficult question of the plaintiff's standing to sue as it has in this case to enforce the provisions of the building scheme relating to the use of Unit 102.

21 The question of in what capacity the corporation has sued to enjoin the breach of the building scheme -- whether on a matter relating to the common property or about matters "affecting individual strata lots" -- is not expressly addressed in the plaintiff's pleadings. Paragraph 21 of the Statement of Claim states that the proposed use of the premises by the defendants "contravenes the restrictions contained in the building scheme" and paragraph 22 states that the members of the plaintiff (not the strata corporation itself) have suffered damages as a result. (Paragraph 20(a) refers to "unreasonable interference" to the common property but this is framed to refer to an alleged breach of the by-law which I am not concerned with here.) Neither the pleadings nor the affidavit evidence indicate that the strata corporation is here concerned about damage it has suffered or will suffer as a result of the breach of the building scheme in its capacity as the owner of the common property or common facilities of the strata corporation. For example, there is no allegation that hallways or the parking lot of the building have been adversely affected or would be adversely affected by the proposed uses, or that other owners will be interfered with in their enjoyment of the hallways or parking lot. Thus I have no choice but to proceed on the basis that the claim is one made by the strata corporation on behalf of the other unitholders, and therefore falls under section 15(7)(b) of the Condominium Act.

22 That section enables the strata corporation to sue on their behalf if it has been authorized by special resolution of the owners and consents in writing signed by the owners who are affected have been obtained. Presumably, the purpose of this provision is to ensure that the strata corporation's funds are not used to benefit individual owners or pursue individual causes not concurred in by most unitholders.

23 Mr. Doyle argues that on the affidavit evidence before me, it is not clear that a special resolution was, in fact, passed at the meeting of the unitholders held on March 31 of this year. The minutes which were attached to the affidavit of Mr. Schuss, however, refer to the approval and continuation of legal proceedings against the owners of Unit 102 and to the approval and acceptance of the "lawyer's report... including approval for the continuation or approval of legal proceedings" against them, which was affirmed by a vote of 13 to 2. From this, it is reasonable to infer that the required special resolution was passed. I do not think it is fatal to the resolution that the phrase "special resolution" does not appear in the minutes. There is no allegation of which I am aware that proper notice of the meeting was not given, and indeed Mr. Doyle was present as proxy for his client.

24 I have not been provided, however, with the written consents referred to in subparagraph 15(7)(b) of the Act. When I asked Mr. Rogers about this, he replied that these could easily be prepared and filed, but evidently none existed at the time of the hearing and likely none have been prepared as yet. Mr. Rogers fell back on the argument that the strata corporation may under section 15 sue to enforce the building scheme insofar as the common facilities are affected. But again there is no allegation in the pleadings that the breach of the building scheme (as opposed to a breach of the by-laws) affects the common property. The damage claim is that members of the plaintiff have suffered damage in the form of loss of property value, problems with their employees and problems with customers visiting the premises.

25 In my view, it is not for the Court to remedy the deficiency in the pleadings or in the evidence, or to "wink" at the plaintiff's failure to comply with this procedural requirement. If it is an easy matter for the plaintiff to obtain the written consents required by this Act, then the plaintiff should do so and should have done so before the action was commenced.

26 Without argument, I would not want to reach any conclusion as to whether the action, insofar as it is concerned with matters affecting the individual strata lots, may be voidable or struck out because of this deficiency. But given that there is doubt on this point, and given that the pleadings are deficient insofar as an action in connection with the common property is concerned, it is clearly not appropriate for me to proceed further and consider the granting of injunctive relief before that question is addressed.

27 Quite apart from the questions of a prima facie case and the balance of convenience, the plaintiff as a creature of statute must have satisfied the statutory conditions to pursue this aspect of its claim and, I would have thought, does not otherwise have the capacity to do so. It would be inappropriate, to say the least, for this Court to grant an injunction, permanent or otherwise, or even a ruling under Rule 34 when the plaintiff's capacity to advance its claim is questionable.

28 With some reluctance, then, I conclude that the plaintiff's present application for injunctive relief and for the Rule 34 determination must be dismissed at this time. The defendants will have their costs of this application.

29 So that this is no doubt, however, I do wish to make it clear that if the plaintiff should at some point in the future dot its 'i's' and cross its 't's', both in terms of the pleadings and meeting the requirements of the Act, it will be at liberty to apply to me or any other Judge of this Court for a declaration under Rule 34 and/or a permanent injunction enjoining breach of the building scheme. I will not be seized of this matter, but will try to make myself available if possible. Counsel should communicate with the Registry in this regard. Obviously, such an application would eliminate the necessity of the seven-day trial which I understand is scheduled in this matter.

30 Anything further, counsel?

MR. ROGERS: My Lady, if we can arrange it through the Registry and get our 'is' dotted and our 't's' crossed, is Your Ladyship available in the month of August?

THE COURT: I am here until about 24 August.

MR. ROGERS: Thank you.

MR. DOYLE: I think based on your reasons, my friend and I should be able to agree on what orders flow from this. If not, we may be able to get before you again.

Judgment: filed November 16, 1994.

These were motions with respect to a condominium matter for the appointment of an interim administrator or expert, for a trial and for an order that the petition stand as a statement of claim, and for leave to cross-examine deponents on their affidavits filed in support of the first motion.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

British Columbia Supreme Court Rules, Rule 32A.

Counsel for the Petitioners: G.W. Ghikas.

Counsel for the Respondent: W.P. Lightbody, Q.C.

1 MEREDITH J.:— Counsel appeared to settle the formal order arising out of my reasons for judgment dated September 20, 1994. Mr. Lightbody makes the cogent point that the reasons do not accord with the relief sought in the several notices of motion that I should apparently have been considering rather than the petition. I must reconsider the order.

2 I had before me three notices of motion.

3 The first notice of motion was for the appointment of an "interim administrator". Under s. 71 of the Condominium Act an administrator "shall, to the exclusion of the Strata Corporation, have the powers and duties of the Strata Corporation or such of them as the court orders". The petitioners, at this stage, do not seek the appointment of someone to exercise the powers of the Strata Corporation. I am at a loss to know what is meant by "interim administrator". But the notice of motion does apply for the appointment of "an expert pursuant to Rule 32A of the Rules of Court". For the reasons which follow I appoint Strataco Management Ltd. an expert under the provisions of the rule to perform the functions I will enumerate in a moment.

4 The second notice of motion was of the petitioners supported by the affidavits to be read in support of the previous motion together with an affidavit of Deborah A. Satanove sworn August 18, 1994 to which an extensive report of Deloitte & Touche is exhibited. The relief sought in that notice of motion was:

- (a) that there be a trial of this proceeding generally;
- (b) the petition shall stand as the statement of claim;
- (c) the respondents have 14 days from the date of this order to file a statement of defence; and
- (d) the pre-trial procedures of discovery of documents and examinations for discovery as set out in the Rules of Court shall apply.

5 It seems to me that the petition would be wholly inappropriate to stand as a statement of claim for the reasons which I shall give. Thus, the motion must be denied. However, the petitioners will be at liberty to initiate an action should they be so advised. The motion must therefore be dismissed.

6 The third motion was that of the respondent Strata Corporation for leave to cross-examine the deponents Rigby, Harris, and Sedman on their respective affidavits filed in support of the first motion. I think little or nothing is to be achieved by the cross-examination at this time until the issues are defined. The motion is therefore denied. However, the respondent will be at liberty to renew the application when Strataco Management Ltd. has rendered its report or earlier by leave of the court.

7 I have said that I consider the relief sought in the petition and the facts asserted therein are inappropriate to stand as pleadings. However, the petition is a proceeding under the Supreme Court Rules. I therefore, am entitled to make an appointment of Strataco Management Ltd. as an expert under the provisions of the rule in the proceedings initiated by the petition, even though I doubt that the petition is the proper method of proceeding under the circumstances.

8 I think a distinction is to be drawn between oppression, that is to say, acts legally done but oppressive to the petitioners on the one hand, and acts illegally done, that is to say in this case, what may be in contravention of the provisions of the Condominium Act.

9 In paragraphs 10 to 16 of the petition, the petitioners seem to concede the legal propriety of the by-law governing membership on council. The objection seems to be that the developer has used its position to weight the membership of council against the petitioners. Perhaps the petitioners concede that the constitution of the council conforms to the requirements of the Condominium Act. In that case there would be no argument as to the legal propriety of the appointments. Perhaps the several prospectuses issued by the developer contemplated the organization that exists whether that organization conforms to the requirements of the Act or not. But I think the matter bears examination if only because the money of the petitioners is being used, it seems, to subsidize the operations of the developer (a conclusion I draw based on the Deloitte & Touche report). I conclude that the statement of claim should state clearly the facts upon which the plaintiff relies and the relief it seeks so that the defendant can state clearly its position with respect to the facts. The issues will thus be identified. If the facts are not sufficiently clear in the Deloitte report, it may be that amendments to the statement of claim will be necessary if new facts are adduced on discovery.

10 I think that the order arising out of these reasons should recite the four affidavits read in support including that of Deborah Satanove.

11 Then the order should say that Strataco Management Ltd. be appointed an expert to enquire into and report to the court by March 15, 1995 (not February 15 as formerly), its opinion and recommendations concerning:

- (1) The financial affairs of the respondent;
- (2) The adequacy of the record keeping of the respondent;
- (3) The adequacy of the management of the respondent; and
- (4) Such other matters as Strataco Management Ltd. may deem appropriate to draw to the court's attention.

12 The plaintiffs will be at liberty to apply to the court for directions in relation to the duties of Strataco Management Ltd. as an expert, and will be at liberty to extend the time of the report if necessary.

13 The fees and disbursements of Strataco Management Ltd. shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be paid by the respondent as an administrative expense and the fees of Strataco Management Ltd. shall be $75 per hour (or $500 per day) plus disbursements and out-of-pocket expenses.

14 The costs of the application are reserved pending consideration of the report of Strataco Management Ltd.

Petition for an order restoring the applicants' right to rent out strata units in a residential condominium complex held in their names. A bylaw passed by the respondents, who were the other members of the strata corporation, was at the heart of this petition. It was challenged by the petitioners on the grounds, inter alia, that the bylaw was not properly adopted in that there was no compliance with the provisions of section 26(2) of the Condominium Act and that the sections 29 and 30 of the Act did not permit a prohibition of leases of strata units. With respect to the first ground, it was not disputed by the respondents that 14 days notice of the meeting at which the impugned bylaw was passed was not given; nor was it disputed that the details of the proposed bylaw change were not specified with the notice of the meeting.

Counsel for the Petitioners: Ronald A. Morrison.

Counsel for the Respondents: Elaine T. Cameron.

1 BOYLE J.:— The petition was brought by some of the strata title holders in a residential condominium complex (Emerald Court) who wish to retain or regain their right to rent out strata units held in their names. A bylaw passed by other members of the strata corporation ("the Respondents") was challenged by the Petitioners because it bars owners from renting.

2 The Fetterlys owned two units. As I understand it, they have sold one but wish to continue renting out the other as they have done in the past.

3 The numbered companies own several units bought from the owner/developer, JLK Investments Inc. ("JLK"), president of which is John Kuebler. Mr. Kuebler supports the Petitioners.

4 JLK holds title itself to ten units and 32% of the voting rights in the strata corporation. It is protected by a special agreement and is able to rent its own units. In the immediate term, the issue therefore does not trouble JLK but, presumably, if its units are put on the market in future, the right to rent would be a sales feature.

5 The Fetterlys became title holders March 12, 1993. The numbered companies became title holders November 25, 1993.

6 When the Fetterlys bought, the bylaws of the strata corporation did not restrict leasing out by title holders.

7 On August 31, 1993, at a meeting of the strata corporation, the minutes show a bylaw passed which read:

"No Emerald Court Strata lots are to be sold or re-sold for rental purposes. As of August 31, 1993, owners shall not lease their Strata lots to another person or to other persons, nor shall they allow a rental agency to act on their behalf to lease Emerald Court Strata lots."

8 The Petitioners challenge the by-law on several grounds:

1. S. 26(2) of the Condominium Act ("the Act") provides there shall be no amendment of bylaws without approval by special resolution. A special resolution as defined in s. 1 of the Act requires passage by not less than three-quarters of all persons entitled to vote. The vote must be taken at a general meeting of which there has been 14 days notice specifying the purpose of the special resolution.

It is not disputed there was not 14 days notice of the meeting at which the impugned bylaw was passed, nor is it disputed the details of the proposed bylaw change were not specified with the notice of the meeting.

2. There is an issue about vote counting. The Petitioners, supported by Mr. Kuebler, say he was at the meeting and did not vote the ten JLK units in favour of the bylaw. The Respondents, by affidavit, say he did. If JLK did not vote for the bylaw, it could not have passed because the necessary three-quarters majority could not have been achieved without those votes.

That issue could not be resolved without examination and cross-examination.

The Petitioners raised an alternative argument on the voting. The minutes show it was necessary for the chairman to vote to break "an equality of votes." The Petitioners ask, How can there be a three-quarters majority when, without the chairman's vote, there was equality?

3. The Petitioners say ss. 29 and 30 of the Act provide strata units may be leased absent a bylaw regulating that practice. They agree s. 30 permits a bylaw limiting the number of residential leases but argue it does not permit prohibition.

Sections 29 and 30 read:

"29. Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate to prohibit or restrict

(a) a devolution of a strata lot; or

(b) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot, or to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

30. (1) A strata corporation administering a strata plan that is wholly or partially residential may, by bylaw, limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased by the owners.

(2) A bylaw under subsection (1) shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced."

The Petitioners say the bylaw is prohibitory and therefore ultra vires.

4. The petitioning numbered companies argue they are protected by s. 31(4) of the Act:

"31(4) Where an owner developer sells a strata lot that is leased to a tenant, or that he intended to lease to a tenant, pursuant to the disclosure statement, the purchaser may lease or continue to lease the strata lot to a tenant for the period disclosed in the statement. Thereafter the purchaser is not entitled to lease or continue to lease the strata lot except under the bylaws of the strata corporation."

9 The Respondents raise several factual arguments in reply to the petition. In part, those arguments rest upon statements the Respondents aver were made by Mr. Kuebler but which he denies. The Respondents say he assured respondent owners at two meetings and some owners personally, prior to the August 31, 1993, general meeting that there would be no rentals in the building and that he did not intend to rent out units.

10 Turning seriatim to the questions raised:

1. The method of serving notice of the general meeting at which the challenged bylaw was passed was by slipping it under the doors of the various suites.

[para1]S. 129(1) provides:

"Unless otherwise specifically stated ... delivery of any notice ... shall be well and sufficiently given if mailed to the owner ... and if left with him (or her) or some adult person at (the address of the strata lot)."

S. 129(1) does not bar other forms of delivering notice and I find no failure of service insofar as delivery goes as a result of the method employed. That point is too narrow in these circumstances. Service was not challenged at the time by those Petitioners who now challenge it but who were at the meeting at which the bylaw was discussed extensively.

Content of the notice is another matter. The Respondents agree the notice did not advise of the proposed bylaw change but aver it was a live and known issue well before the August 31, 1993, meeting and, in fact, the issue had been put to a vote at the First Annual General Meeting. At that meeting belief was a simple majority could decide the question. When the question was put, renting was rejected but not by 75%. Consequently, on review of the Act, an extraordinary general meeting was called. It is that meeting and the vote there that is at issue here.

Against the Petitioners' position that there must be and was not strict compliance with s. 7 of the Act which requires that notice of the meeting must specify the purpose of a special resolution, the Respondents argue that not only was the issue live and known but also that Mr. Kuebler and the Fetterlys waived any right to objection or the right of anyone taking title after them regarding notice because Mr. Kuebler and Monty Fetterly were present at the meeting, took part and voted. (Although how he voted is in issue, there is no issue that Mr. Kuebler did vote).

[para2]S. 125(2) of the Act provides:

"Unless a poll is requested (which was not done in this case), a declaration by the chairman that a resolution has, on a show of hands, been carried is conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of votes recorded in favour or against the resolution."

Although that section has the appearance of finality, I did not conclude it prevented a subsequent challenge on the basis that a member's vote was miscounted (as so sworn) even though there is no present evidence of an objection being raised by that member at the time of the vote. Nor did I conclude the statute's mandatory requirement for specification of the content of a special resolution could be waived by attendance and discussion. It is a precondition necessary to passage.

There appear to be no cases directly on the question of degree of strictness to be applied in carrying out the notice requirements of the Act. The Petitioners argue the very strict rules applying to municipal cases should be followed. The Respondents argue the less stringent corporate cases should set the precedent.

To accept something other than strict compliance with the requirement under the Act for specifying, with the meeting notice, the "purpose of the special resolution" would be to allow the circumstances of each case to determine its outcome and to set a precedent which would open the way in other instances for argument, dissension and litigation which could be avoided readily by scrupulous attention to the simple requirements of the definition.

There is a good deal of sympathy due the Respondents for their argument that they are volunteers doing their best but strict compliance would make their task less complicated.

Dealing with neighbours requires give and take but the ground rules must be clear.

2. Vote counting: as noted above, cannot be dealt with on affidavits.

3. Prohibition: the Respondents do not disagree the Act does not permit prohibition of leasing but they argue the bylaw does not have the final effect of prohibition because s. 32 of the Act allows for an appeal against a strata corporation's refusal to permit lease of a unit. It reads:

"32(1) Where

(a) the owner developer is unable to obtain the owners' consent under section 31(5); or

(b) an owner is prevented from leasing by a bylaw under section 30; and

(c) hardship results to the owner developer or owner,

he may appeal to the strata council for permission to lease his strata lot, and the council shall not unreasonably refuse the appeal.

(2) Where an owner developer or owner appeals to the strata council, the council shall hear the appeal within 21 days after the date the owner developer or owner requested the strata council to hear the appeal, and, if the strata council has not delivered its decision within 7 days after hearing the appeal, the appeal shall be deemed to have been allowed.

(3) The strata council may on an appeal authorize the lease of one or more strata lots in contravention of the bylaw, or permit alteration of a rental disclosure statement without the consent of the owners."

The Respondents say the bylaw need not use the term "limit" when the limit is zero - subject to a right of appeal when the bylaw is read together with s. 32 of the Act.

Von Schottenstein v. Owners; Strata Plan 730 (1985) 64 B.C.L.R. 376 at 384 supports the Respondents argument:

"Mathematically, if one is to limit a number, there must be something more than zero remaining and less than 100%. However, because of the provisions of s. 32, I think there is something more than zero in the sense that there is always a right of appeal. Section 43 (dealing with oppression) has, as well, left the Court with rather startling powers of intervention."

In Re: Mattiazzo and Boffo and the Owners, Strata Plan No. Vr. 1144, (unreported Vancouver Registry No. A850287, March 21, 1985), it was held a strata corporation bylaw which prohibited leasing was ultra vires because of that prohibition. The Court was alive to the s. 32 appeal provision but did not find that provision saved the bylaw. It was not enough to say: each would-be owner/lessor can appeal under s. 32 where the bylaw was void.

[para13]I respectfully follow Mattiazzo.

[para14]The bylaw is ultra vires and of no force and effect.

4. The s. 31 argument, numbered (4) herein, need not be dealt with.

15 In this case the practical answer is the same as the legal answer: Do it again. In doing it again, a clear direction will be given by a properly conducted meeting on adequate notice and by, I suggest, a poll on request.

16 It will avoid as well the cost and time of further litigation.

17 The order will be that the challenged bylaws - and specifically bylaw 1.1 - is void and never was valid. The order will not include the relief sought in the items B, C, D, E and F of the prayer but this is not to endorse the conduct sought to be enjoined therein. It is only to indicate that this order is to restore the legal state of affairs before the bylaw was purported to be passed without entering into procedural matters and without making findings not necessary or appropriate to the arguments made.

18 As a footnote, nothing in these reasons is intended to find or to imply a finding regarding the conflicting averments concerning what was said by or to Mr. Kuebler by anyone at any time or to find or to imply a finding how Mr. Kuebler did or did not vote at the impugned meeting.

19 I am reluctant to order costs where the Respondents acted to the best of their non-professional knowledge and it is possible they were misled. However, counsel may speak to costs if they cannot agree.

Cummins v. Napev Construction Ltd.

Action No. A2651/94

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Dunn J. April 13, 1994.

Real Property -- Condominiums -- General -- "Phantom mortgages", legal status of advance payment of mortgage principal, applicability of section 53 of Condominium Act.

Application for an order directing the respondent to pay interest on money received from the applicant pursuant to section 53 of the Condominium Act. The applicants agreed to purchase a residential condominium unit and the agreement of purchase and sale provided for a "phantom mortgage" as part of the purchase price. This mortgage was given to allow the respondent vendor take advantage of the provisions of section 51(6) of the said Act. Subsequently, after the occupancy closing had taken place, the parties entered into a "new" agreement incorporating the applicants' proposal to pay off the balance of the first mortgage principal prior to final closing in order to reduce their monthly occupancy fee. Pursuant to the latter agreement, the respondent allowed the applicants to pay the sum of $129,000 to be applied to their unit. As agreed by the parties, no interest was to be paid on this amount from receipt to date of final closing. However, the parties did not at the time advert their minds to the operation of section 53 of the Act.

HELD: Application allowed. Order made requiring the respondent to pay to the applicant interest on the sum of $129,000 from the date of payment to the date of final closing. With the words of section 60 of the Condominium Act, the Legislature obviously intended that the provisions of the Act were to prevail notwithstanding the wishes of the parties, as evidenced by their agreement. In this case, the respondent received the principal amount of the "phantom mortgage" and, by virtue of section 51 of the Act, was obliged to deposit it in trust with an entitlement to interest earned on it. At the same time, it was obliged by the Act to pay interest to the applicant at the rate prescribed under the Act.

Appeal from a judgment finding the appellant was not justified in treating her agreement to purchase a condominium as being at an end and that she was obliged to complete the transaction. A work order was placed on the parking garage of the building in which the condominium was located two days before the expiry of the time period within which requisitions were to be made. However, no requisition was made within the time stipulated in section 9 of the agreement for the purchaser to satisfy herself that there were no outstanding municipal work orders affecting the real property. The trial judge held that the requisition made by the appellant after the expiry of the time stipulated in section 9 was out of time. The appellant argued that section 9 of the standard agreement of purchase and sale only applied to work orders in existence at the time the agreement was signed.

Robert A.L. Shour, for the Appellant.

Patricia Conway, for the Respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

1 THE COURT (endorsement, dismissing the appeal with costs):— This is an appeal from the decision of Roberts J. reported at (1992) 28 R.P.R. (2d) 16. In a very unique set of circumstances, Roberts J. held that the appellant was not justified in treating her agreement to purchase a condominium as being at an end and was obliged to complete the transaction.

2 The decision of the trial judge is premised on three major conclusions which the appellant challenges.

(1) The requisition submitted by the appellant was out of time.

3 A work order was placed on the parking garage of the building in which the condominium was located two days before the expiry of the time period within which requisitions were to be made. No requisition was made within the time stipulated in s. 9 of the contract for the purchaser to satisfy herself that there were no outstanding municipal work orders affecting the real property. The appellant argued that s. 9 of the standard agreement of purchase and sale only applies to work orders in existence at the time the agreement is signed. On this interpretation, the time limit for requisitions in s. 9 would not apply to a work order placed on the property after the agreement was entered into and the appellant's requisition would not be out of time. We find that s. 9 does apply to a work order which has not been placed on the property at the time the contract is entered into but is placed on the property during the time period within which requisitions can be made. We agree with the trial judge that the requisition was out of time.

(2) The work order did not go to title.

4 We agree with the trial judge's conclusion that the work order did not affect the title to the property. It was only in the event that the condominium corporation did not do the work, that the city performed the work and placed a lien on the property for the cost of the work that title would be affected. There was no likelihood this would happen here. The purchaser was therefore not entitled to rely on clause 13 respecting defects in title to avoid the contract.

(3) The objection to the work order was sufficiently answered.

5 The condominium corporation at all times intended to satisfy the work order. The appellant was a member of the board of directors of the condominium corporation. She was aware of the by-law concerning parking garages and knew that there was a real possibility that a work order would issue. There was an emergency fund in place which had in excess of $800,000 in it whose very purpose was to satisfy the work order. Although the exact cost of the repairs was not known prior to the closing date, the estimated cost for painting was $84,000 plus the cost of some signs. This cost was to be shared amongst the 539 condominium units in 33 Harbour Square as well as the unit holders at 55 Harbour Square. In addition, the appellant had an estoppel certificate that if an assessment of unit holders was made during that year the purchaser would not be liable to pay for it. When the work was completed the costs referable to the unit amounted to $181.65. In the unique set of circumstances of this case we agree with the trial judge's conclusion that the objection to the work order was sufficiently answered.

6 It might also be pointed out that the eventuality which arose in this case could have been the subject of a special clause which would have given the purchaser the right to requisition the removal of an outstanding municipal work order up to and including the date of closing or a clause indicating that the purchaser was entitled to raise any work orders discovered by a subsequent search after the expiry of the requisition date. The appellant is a real estate lawyer and the owner of another condominium in the building. She could have protected herself by inserting a special clause in the agreement and did not do so.

7 There is no issue with respect to the quantum of damages awarded.

8 The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

500 Glencairn Ltd. v. Farkas

Between

500 Glencairn Limited, Plaintiff, and Freda Farkas, George Farkas and Roman Gofman, Defendants

Action No. 51347/90

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division
Toronto, Ontario
Then J.

January 31, 1994.

This was an action for damages for breach of an agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium. The defendants obtained interim possession and made interim occupancy payments for some time until they stopped payments. They later took the position that the agreement was rescinded by reason of material amendments to the disclosure documentation contained in the reciprocal agreement which was registered. The defendant F purchased the unit to resell it at a profit, but was unable to do so. He said that he wished to rescind the agreement because of the quality of the building which he had inspected and found only minor deficiencies. The defendants submitted that the plaintiff failed to mitigate.

Richard Storrey, for the Plaintiff.
Martin Banach, for the Defendants.

1 THEN J.:— This is an action for damages by the plaintiff for an alleged breach of an agreement of purchase and sale made by the defendant Freda Farkas said to be acting as trustee or agent on behalf of the defendants, George Farkas and Roman Gofman, whereby the plaintiff, 500 Glencairn Limited on June 13, 1988 agreed to sell and the defendant Freda Farkas on June 12, 1988 agreed to purchase Unit 310 at 500 Glencairn Avenue along with two parking units for a purchase price of $391,900.00 subject to adjustments.

Background

2 The plaintiff is the developer and vendor of units in a condominium development located at 500 Glencairn which is comprised of 40 residential units, 60 parking units and a commercial use component. The defendant Freda Farkas resides in Toronto and is the spouse of her co-defendant George Farkas who is a chartered accountant also residing in Toronto. The remaining defendant is one Roman Gofman who is a real estate agent and also resides in Toronto. It is common ground that the defendants received a disclosure statement which is exhibit 1, Tab 5 in this proceeding and did not purport to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale as a result.

3 The defendants obtained interim possession of Unit 310 on October 4, 1989 pursuant to the agreement of purchase and sale. The defendants also assumed the obligation pursuant to the agreement of purchase and sale to make interim occupancy payments to the plaintiff. These payments commenced on October 4, 1989 and in respect of these payments the defendants provided a series of 12 post-dated cheques to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,913.49. The cheques payable November 1, 1989 up to and including February 1, 1990 were cleared but the defendant Gofman caused payment to be stopped with respect to the March 1, 1990 payment and thereafter.

4 On April 18, 1990, the declaration and the description for the condominium development was registered and accordingly notice was given to the defendants that final or title closing under the agreement of purchase and sale would take place on May 11, 1990. The defendants advised that title would be taken in the name of Freda Farkas and Roman Gofman.

5 On May 11, 1990, the defendants took the position that the agreement of purchase and sale could be and was thereby being rescinded by reason of alleged material amendments to the disclosure documentation provided upon the execution of the agreement of purchase and sale. The alleged material amendments to the disclosure documentation were said to be contained in the reciprocal agreement registered by the plaintiff on April 18, 1990. The closing which was to take place on May 11, 1990 did not occur.

The Facts

6 The defendants takes the position that the reciprocal agreement (exhibit 1, Tab 22) constitutes a material amendment to the disclosure statement and that accordingly the defendant is entitled to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale in accordance with s. 52 of the Condominium Act as that section is explained by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1993), 10 O.R. (3d) 120. The specific provisions of the reciprocal agreement (exhibit 1, Tab 22) in comparison with the initial disclosure document (exhibit 1, Tab 5) will be referred to extensively in due course. For present purposes it will be sufficient to express my agreement with the plaintiff's submission that after reading the disclosure documents, any reasonable purchaser would have known the following:

(a) that there was a commercial component to the project,

(b) that the physical location of the commercial component and other items were shown on the plans which were part of the disclosure documents,

(c) that the commercial development would own and have access to certain parking spaces in the underground parking garage and that access to those spaces would be over certain portions of the condominium building,

(d) that the property would be subject to various easements, rights of way and/or licenses relating to the operation of the residential and commercial components,

(e) that the easements, rights of way and licenses would be more particularly described by reference plans and the condominium plans,

(f) that the condominium corporation would be entering into a reciprocal agreement which would deal with all necessary matters relating to the sharing of certain facilities,

(g) that the reciprocal agreement would deal with matters in addition to matters of access and easements,

(h) that the reciprocal agreement would provide that the condominium corporation would be responsible for the maintenance, replacement, repair and operation of the shared facilities,

(i) that the reciprocal agreement would specifically provide for proportions in which the condominium corporation and the owner of the commercial development would share in the cost of the maintenance, replacement, repair and operation of the shared facilities, and

(j) that the actual proportion of expenses to be borne by the condominium corporation and the commercial development were not set out in the disclosure documents but would be set out later in the reciprocal agreement.

7 In addition, Mr. Ezer, the president of the plaintiff and its majority shareholder, gave uncontradicted evidence that the financial burden on the condominium corporation regarding their share of the expenses of the shared facilities is relatively insignificant and more specifically Mr. Ezer testified that the purchaser of Unit 410, which is identical in all respects to Unit 310 but one floor higher, completed his sale and that the financial burden as disclosed in the disclosure statement was exactly the same regardless of the subsequent allocation of costs of the shared facilities in the reciprocal agreement.

8 Mr. Farkas, who was the only one of the defendants to testify at trial, acknowledged at trial that when he subsequently received the reciprocal agreement, shortly before the time set for final closing, he and his solicitors poured over the agreement looking for anything in it to use as a vehicle to avoid continuing on with the agreement of purchase and sale. This position was identical to the one taken by the defendant on discovery.

9 Both at trial and on discovery, the defendant indicated that his reason for purchasing Unit 310 was to resell the unit at a profit. The defendant Gofman on his discovery stated that one of the reasons why the defendants did not close in May of 1990, was that they could not resell the unit at a profit having attempted to do so from January 1990 until March 1990 and having dropped the asking price for the unit some $72,000 from that which had been agreed by them in the agreement of purchase and sale.

10 Moreover, at trial Mr. Farkas stated that he had, during the time that he purchased Unit 310, also purchased two other condominium units. In his evidence upon discovery, the defendant Farkas stated that he had purchased only one other condominium unit. Having regard to all of the evidence, I am prepared to find as a fact that Mr. Farkas was a speculator in real estate. Mr. Farkas also testified that he wished to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale with respect to Unit 310 because of the quality of the building. Not only is the evidence of Mr. Farkas as to his involvement in the purchase of condominium units at the time of his purchase of Unit 310 somewhat contradictory, but, in September 1989 the evidence discloses that both Mr. Farkas and Mr. Gofman attended to inspect Unit 310 prior to interim closing and that the defendant Gofman signed the purchaser's certificate acknowledging that he had inspected the unit and that the deficiencies were of a minor nature and specifically noted and corrected. There was no indication by the defendants of any substantial complaint regarding the building or the unit. On all of the evidence, I do not accept the evidence of Mr. Farkas that the motivation behind his desire to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale pertains to the poor quality of the building or the unit.

11 Mr. Farkas on discovery also conceded that although he was claiming that the allocation of the shared facilities as set out in the reciprocal agreement constituted a material amendment he had no idea as to what his financial burden was going to be with respect to the shared facilities at the time he received the disclosure documents and that he was not really interested in that issue. Indeed he acknowledged that he had not even read that part of the disclosure statement dealing with reciprocal agreement which provided the description of the shared facilities.

12 Further, Mr. Farkas acknowledged that he knew that there was to be a commercial component to the building and that some arrangements would have to be entered between the condominium corporation and the owner of the commercial space regarding certain matters. These arrangements would have to include matters such as parking and access to common facilities as between the condominium corporation and the commercial development. He knew that there would have to be a sharing of expenses.

13 Mr. Farkas indicated that he knew that if he had any problems, questions or concerns regarding the disclosure statement he could those 10 days regarding the commercial development or the reciprocal agreement.

14 Mr. Farkas conceded in cross-examination that s. 20(g) of the agreement of purchase and sale obliged the defendants to take title subject to the reciprocal agreement.

15 Mr. Farkas also acknowledged that the defendants knew or should have known that the reciprocal agreement would deal with matters of mutual concern beyond matters such as access and easements.

The Issues

1. Does the reciprocal agreement constitute a "material amendment to the disclosure statement"?
2. Does the reciprocal agreement constitute an unpermitted encumbrance pursuant to the agreement of purchase and sale?

3. Can all of the defendants be held liable or is the plaintiff required to elect which of the defendants should be held liable?
4. (a) If the plaintiff had a duty to mitigate damages, did it discharge that duty?
- (b) What is the proper way to assess the plaintiff's damages and as of what date should the damages be assessed?
5. What, if any, is the quantum of damages in this case?

1. Does the reciprocal agreement constitute a material amendment to the disclosure statement?

16 Section 52 of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

52(1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the first day of June 1979 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

(2) The purchaser, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the unit, may rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within 10 days after receiving the disclosure statement or, where there has been a material amendment thereto, within 10 days after receiving the material amendment.

17 In Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., supra, Robins J.A. on behalf of the Court of Appeal at p. 149, has stated the test that the purchaser must satisfy before availing himself or herself of the right to rescind within 10 days after receiving the "material amendment" to the disclosure statement:

I view the term "material amendment" as broad enough to include any change that should be reflected in the disclosure statement and would not limit it to the correction of errors, omissions or defects as Borins J. does. Subject to that reservation, the basic thrust of these approaches is essentially the same: the declarant must deliver an amended disclosure statement if the change is likely to influence the decision of a purchaser to purchase the condominium unit.

In the interests of consistency, I would determine the materiality of a change or amendment to the originally-delivered disclosure statement by reference to a test similar to that which I formulated earlier to determine the materiality of an alleged defect in a disclosure statement. Would a reasonable purchaser regard the change or amendment as sufficiently important to his or her decision to purchase that, had the disclosure statement contained the new or amended information at the time it was delivered, the purchaser would not likely have one ahead with the transaction but would have rescinded the agreement within the ten-day period? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the developer is obliged to deliver an amendment to the disclosure statement and the purchaser has ten days from the date of delivery within which to rescind.

Amendments that substantially change a purchaser's anticipated use and enjoyment of the unit or the amenities associated therewith or that adversely affect the value of the unit, are, I would think, clearly material amendments that revive the rescission period. A reasonable purchaser could objectively assert that he or she would not have proceeded with the deal had this information been available at the time of the original disclosure statement. (emphasis added)

18 It is the position of the defendant that certain features of the reciprocal agreement viewed both individually and cumulatively constitute material amendments to the disclosure documentation in the sense outlined by Robins J.A. in Abdool, supra, such that it was open to the defendant to invoke the right to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale set out in s. 52(2) of the Condominium Act and, the defendant having done so, the agreement of purchase and sale is at an end.

19 It will be convenient at this stage to set out both the defendants' and plaintiffs position with respect to certain of the impugned aspects of the reciprocal agreement in order to assess whether in the circumstances the defendant has met the test for rescission outlined in Abdool, supra.

20 It should be made clear that the summaries of the position of the parties which follow are gleaned from the written materials submitted to the court by counsel. Many of the matters referred to were significantly amplified in argument and in fairness to the excellent arguments advanced by both counsel in support of their respective position I wish to indicate that I have not overlooked the points raised in oral argument. However, in my view, the written materials have so succinctly captured the essence of the position of the parties on the crucial first issue that I find it unnecessary to elaborate further on the arguments of counsel or the facts of this action in order to come to a determination on the first issue.

(i) The defendants submit that Schedule C of the reciprocal agreement lists the easements and rights of way in favour of the commercial building. Schedule E of the reciprocal agreement lists the shared facilities that are owned by the condominium corporation which must be shared with the commercial units. However, it is the defendants' submission that it is impossible to determine easements, rights of way or shared facilities by looking only at the disclosure documentation without reference to Plan 66R-15797 and that accordingly the receipt by the defendants of the reciprocal agreement in conjunction with Plan 66R-15797 constitutes a significant material amendment to the disclosure documentation.

21 It is the plaintiff's submission that the plans which were part of the disclosure documentation do provide some detail as to the shared facilities and indeed a reasonable purchaser would not have expected anything more. Reference Plan 66R-15797 could not have been attached to the disclosure statement because that plan was not created until after the building was erected and the plan could be finalized. It is the plaintiff's submission that a reasonable purchaser would not have expected the detailed reference contained in Plan 66R-15797 to have been attached to the initial disclosure document.

(ii) The defendants submit that the allocation of the costs of the shared facilities is in itself material. It is the position of the defendants that the allocation came into being as well as the rationale for the allocation in November or December of 1989, in accordance with a letter from Fairfield Management which is contained at tab 13 of exhibit 1 and that this information should have been brought to the attention of the defendants by the plaintiff.

22 It is the plaintiff's position that the disclosure documents made it quite clear that the allocation of shared costs would be set out later. The defendants accepted this state of affairs and cannot now be heard to say that the failure to disclose the precise allocation is a matter so material that they can invoke their right to rescind now that the amount of allocation has been made known to them. The plaintiff submits that if the defendants thought that the allocation of such costs was material, they could and should have exercised their right to rescind within the original 10 day period after the receipt of the disclosure documentation. The plaintiff submits that in the circumstances, unless the allocation of shared costs is in itself unreasonable, the defendants ought not to be in a position to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale.

(iii) The defendants submit that the failure to include the costs that the condominium corporation had to pay for facilities owned by the commercial development in the budget statement is material.

23 The plaintiff submits that some of the costs are included in the budget statement which is part of the disclosure documentation, as for example, the maintenance item; but that given the relatively insignificant amounts involved in this item, it cannot be said that the failure to specifically include all of these costs would have caused a reasonable purchaser to rescind the agreement.

(iv) The defendants submit that it is material that the disclosure documentation and the budget statement did not disclose that the condominium corporation was responsible by virtue of s. 3.03(a) of the reciprocal agreement to replace, repair, maintain and operate the shared facilities and was also responsible for outlays which would be classified as capital in nature for shared facilities they did not own, the largest one of which was the outside parking lot. Moreover, the defendants submit that the budget statement failed to disclose that the condominium corporation would receive an administration fee of $12,000 per annum as set out in paragraph 3.03(n) of the reciprocal agreement and that the fee was non-reviewable over time.

24 It is the plaintiff's position that s. 3(e) of the disclosure statement does provide that the condominium corporation had the obligation to replace, repair, maintain and operate the shared facilities. The plaintiff submits that the word "replace" also clearly implies that an expense might be capital in nature. In the plaintiff's submission the fact that the budget statement failed to disclose that the condominium corporation would benefit by receiving a non-reviewable administration fee of $12,000 per year is irrelevant.

(v) The defendants submit that s. 3.03 of the reciprocal agreement places various burdens on the condominium corporation as to reasonableness of repairs and obtaining quotations but if the condominium corporation fails in its duties as seen by the commercial development, the commercial development does not have the same obligation as to the reasonableness of repairs and quotations. The plaintiff submits that the condominium corporation has the right to take initiatives and do the repairs by virtue of s. 3(e) of the disclosure statement. The embellishment of that obligation and the corresponding obligations of the commercial development do not constitute a material amendment to what was disclosed in the disclosure documentation.

(vi) The defendants submit that the disclosure documentation fails to advise that pursuant to s. 5.01 of the reciprocal agreement, the condominium corporation may in circumstances be liable for 50% of the realty taxes notwithstanding that there is no commercial component to the taxes.

25 The plaintiff submits that the realty taxes with respect to the condominium corporation are assessed separately from the commercial component.

(vii) The defendants submit that the disclosure documentation and especially the budget statement failed to disclose that there would be cost sharing of joint insurance as set out in Article 6 of the reciprocal agreement. The defendants also submit the disclosure documentation fails to reveal that if there is a default for any reason by the condominium corporation, in addition to what one could consider would be the normal remedy of a lawsuit or arbitration, the commercial unit may register a lien as set out in s. 10 of the reciprocal agreement on the property of the condominium corporation. This, the defendants submit, would have the effect of having each owner personally liable up to their proportionate interest in the condominium as set out in s. 7 of the Condominium Act. This state of affairs, the defendants submit, could have some impact on refinancing or a sale.

26 The plaintiff submits that s. 3(f) of the disclosure statement did say that the reciprocal agreement would provide "for certain arrangements between the condominium corporation and the owner of a commercial development with respect to matters of insurance". The plaintiff submits that the fact the disclosure statement did not expressly say that there would be a cost sharing of joint insurance would not, in the plaintiff's submission, be material to a reasonable purchaser. Moreover, s. 3(g) of the disclosure statement specified that each owner would agree to pay their share based upon the percentage allocation for common expenses set out in the declaration in respect of the lands and all amounts for which the condominium corporation was responsible under the reciprocal agreement. According to the plaintiff, there is no evidence that the omissions in the disclosure documentation complained of by the defendants would have any effect or impact on refinancing or a sale.

(viii) The defendants submit that the disclosure documentation failed to disclose that pursuant to s. 11 of the reciprocal agreement the purchaser must not only obtain a consent of a subsequent owner to be bound by the reciprocal agreement but all mortgagees, chargees and other encumbrances must also sign a consent. The defendants submit that this section has a substantial effect on the ability to obtain financing or being able to sell the property to one who needs financing.

27 The plaintiff submits that paragraph 3(g) of the disclosure documentation pointed out that the reciprocal agreement would provide that it will bind the owners from time to time of the residential units. According to the plaintiff, any mortgagee or chargee of a unit is an owner. It was also the evidence of Mr. Ezer that these stipulations have had no impact on purchasers being able to obtain financing.

(ix) The defendants submit that the disclosure documentation failed to disclose that pursuant to s. 11.06 of the reciprocal agreement, the commercial Unit can be relieved of all liability by any sale (as opposed to a sale at fair market value to a bona fide purchaser) which could lead to a situation that the commercial unit could sell the property to a shell company without assets and in a declining market so that the value of the mortgagees on the property would be greater than the value of the commercial property and thus effectively shifting the entire burden of costs onto the condominium corporation.

28 The submission of the plaintiff is that the reciprocal agreement binds all subsequent owners of the commercial development and that the argument advanced by the defendants is of a theoretical nature and is not material in the relevant sense.

(x) The defendants submit that the letter from Fairfield Management Limited (exhibit 1, tab 13) states that the surface parking lot is exclusively for the usage of the commercial tenants and their customers but goes on to state that it is expected that evening visitors as well as service vehicles will use the lot. The defendants accordingly submit that the condominium corporation is burdened with costs associated with the parking lot without correspondingly having a legal right to use the parking lot. It would therefore follow that the condominium corporation must pay for those items in schedule A "surface parking" of the agreement which they have no right to use.

29 The plaintiff submits that the condominium corporation has the right to use the parking lot by virtue of ss. 1.01(k), 3.01 and exhibit E of the reciprocal agreement. Moreover, as a matter of practicality Mr. Ezer testified that the residents and their visitors do use the parking lot.

(xi) The defendants submit that schedule E of the reciprocal agreement states under the heading pertaining to maintenance staff that the "site superintendent hired by the condominium corporation is to be responsible for the following duties relating to commercial space". This responsibility, it was submitted by the defendants, was not disclosed in the budget or the balance of the disclosure documentation and accordingly it is now apparent that the condominium corporation must pay 80% of the maintenance staff relating to the commercial development. This according to the defendants constitutes a material amendment.

30 The position of the plaintiff is that the budget in the disclosure documentation provided for amounts pertaining to maintenance staff. The reciprocal agreement provided for the basis of allocation and the Fairfield letter (exhibit 1, tab 13) sets out the basis for the allocation which the plaintiff submits is in itself a reasonable one. It is the plaintiff's submission that none of these matters would have been material to a reasonable purchaser and certainly on the facts of this case were of no material import to the defendants based on their admissions at trial and on discovery.

(xii) The defendants submit that 60 parking units at a percentage of .07 per unit is allocated pursuant to Schedule D (allocation of common expenses of the declaration). The other 9 parking units are owned by the commercial development. On the basis of the disclosure documentation, each parking spot owned by the condominium was therefore to pay .07% of the total of all common expenses. On the other hand, the defendants submit the percentage as set out in Schedule E of the reciprocal agreement as to the costs of the underground garage allocates only 12% of the garage costs to the commercial unit. The parking spots owned by the unit holders and the parking spots owned by the commercial unit at the end of the day do not end up paying the same costs for their parking spaces and in addition the disclosure statement states that there are 69 parking units and therefore on a strict allocation the residential complex has been overburdened by at least one parking space.

31 The plaintiff submits that the commercial development lost one of the 9 parking spaces set out in the disclosure documentation as it had to be used for utilities and accordingly the final allocation was done on the basis of the final result, that is, 60 residential parking spots and 8 commercial spots. The ratio therefore is 60 to 8 which constituted the basis of Fairfield Management allocating 88% of the expenses to the residential complex and 12% of the expenses to the commercial development.

32 Based on all of the alleged discrepancies (and not just those which have been summarized) between the disclosure documentation and the reciprocal agreement, the defendant advances essentially two arguments.

33 First, the defendants submit that given its content the entire reciprocal agreement was material and that accordingly its very omission as part of the disclosure documentation rendered the disclosure documentation inadequate.

34 In answer to that argument, the plaintiff submits that there is nothing in the Condominium Act generally or in s. 52 specifically nor in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Abdool, supra, which mandates that any and all agreements which provide further clarification to the disclosure documents must be appended to the disclosure documents. It is Mr. Storrey's submission that the position being put forward by the defendants in essence is that notwithstanding the defendants obtained disclosure documentation which said that there would be a reciprocal agreement to be created later which would set out in addition to the disclosure documentation matters of relevance, the defendants would nevertheless be entitled to not rescind at that point in time even though they considered the lack of specificity in the disclosure documentation to be material, but were entitled to take that position later upon receipt of the reciprocal agreement. It is Mr. Storrey's position that that approach cannot be correct in law and ought to be rejected by this court.

35 I agree with the position taken by Mr. Storrey on this point. In my opinion, the reasonable purchaser was entitled to take the position, if he saw fit, that the original documentation was inadequate if he considered that there were material omissions within the meaning of Abdool, supra. However, the reasonable purchaser is not entitled upon receipt of the reciprocal agreement to which reference is made in the original documentation to take the position that in light of the further disclosure made in the reciprocal agreement that the original documentation is no longer adequate. I agree with Mr. Storrey that in this case on the basis of the original disclosure documentation as compared to the reciprocal agreement, the issue for this court is whether or not the reciprocal agreement constitutes a substantial or material amendment to the disclosure documentation within the meaning of Abdool, supra, so as to provide the reasonable purchaser with a right of rescission under s. 52(2) of the Condominium Act. That issue in turn in my opinion stands to be determined by examining those matters which the defendants claim have been substantially amended and it is to that issue which I now turn.

36 I agree with the defendants contention that some of the matters found in the reciprocal agreement were not specifically adverted to in the disclosure statement and that to that extent it may be said that the reciprocal agreement contains "amendments". However, the disclosure statement was not intended to cover each and every matter contained in the reciprocal agreement and does in my view, in any event, provide a summary of the significant features of the reciprocal agreement while specifying that the reciprocal agreement will embellish or amplify those matters adverted in the disclosure documentation. It would have been abundantly clear that the disclosure documentation would be amplified by the reciprocal agreement and that the purchaser was being asked to accept disclosure for the purposes of s. 52 of the Condominium Act on that basis. Moreover, in my opinion, I agree with the submission of the plaintiff that none of the matters raised by the defendants can properly be considered to be "material" in the sense outlined by the Court of Appeal in Abdool, supra, such that a reasonable purchaser would regard any of the alleged changes or amendments as sufficiently important that they may not have decided in the first instance to proceed with the purchase. I do not accept that any of the amendments or changes that the defendants have referred to in the reciprocal agreement would substantially change a purchaser's anticipated use and enjoyment of the unit or would adversely affect the value of the unit so as to entitle the purchaser to rescind.

37 Moreover, on the facts of this case, it would appear quite evident that the defendant Farkas did not view the disclosure statement to be of significance to his objective of reselling the unit at a profit. On the other hand, the evidence is clear that Mr. Farkas examined the reciprocal agreement very carefully in an attempt to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale by attempting to locate material amendments to the disclosure documentation. There appears little doubt that this enterprise was motivated by a substantial decline in the value of condominium units and not by any concern on the part of the purchaser that the reciprocal agreement had affected changes depriving the purchaser of substantial use or enjoyment of the property or had occasioned a loss of value in the property. It must be clearly understood that in the circumstances of this case whether Mr. Farkas was a speculator or not is irrelevant to a determination of the first issue if the reciprocal agreement constitutes a material amendment to the disclosure documentation. I have found that none of the matters contained in the reciprocal agreement constitute a "material amendment" within the tent posited by Robins J.A. in Abdool, supra.

2. Does the reciprocal agreement constitute an unpermitted encumbrance?

38 Of relevance to the resolution of this issue is s. 20 of the agreement of purchase and sale which reads as follows:

20. The purchaser agrees to accept title to the purchased units subject to each and every of the following:

(g) a reciprocal agreement with respect to the commercial development for access, easements and other matters of mutual concern provided the title is good and free from all encumbrances except as herein provided the purchaser agrees to accept title subject to all restrictions, easements, conditions or covenants that run with the land and subject to all rights, licenses and easements now registered or to be registered for the supply and installation of telephone services, electricity, gas, sewers, water, television and/or cable facilities and other usual services and further subject to any registered agreements and the terms of the condominium documents in their final registered form. ... (emphasis added)

39 On this point I accept the defendants reliance upon the decision of the Divisional Court in Valentini v. Reedco Wellington, 69 O.R. (2d) 346, as standing for the proposition that the word "encumbrance" has a broad meaning which entails making lands subject to a charge or liability and that an encumbrance imposes obligations and potential costs on an owner.

40 I do not however accept the defendants' submission that in the circumstances of this case the words "and other matters of mutual concern" as they are found in s. 20(g) of the agreement of purchase and sale ought to be construed pursuant to the eiusdem generis principle so that the encumbrances would be confined to such things as licenses and rights of way since these are within the same class of items as easements and access. Rather, on this issue, I accept the plaintiff's submission that when the agreement of purchase and sale is looked at in context, the eiusdem generis interpretation ought not to prevail. In my opinion, when properly viewed in the context of the entire agreement of purchase and sale, it would be evident to any reasonable purchaser that "other matters of mutual concern" referred to all necessary matters, including matters of cost, relating to the sharing of certain facilities between the condominium corporation and the owner of the commercial development. I am fortified in this interpretation by the evidence of Mr. Farkas who testified that the defendants knew or should have known that the reciprocal agreement was to deal with matters of mutual concern beyond matters such as access and easements. I am not persuaded that the reciprocal agreement is a document which confers unilateral benefits to the vendor only. Rather, I am prepared to find that, on balance, it deals with matters of mutual benefit to both the residential development and the commercial development including matters of costs and that it was these matters contained in the reciprocal agreement pertaining to the sharing of certain facilities between the residential and commercial development that were contemplated by the phrase "other matters of mutual concern" found in s. 20(g) of the agreement of purchase and sale.

3. Which of the defendants should be held liable?

41 It is the position of the defendants that because Mrs. Farkas signed as an agent of her principals, that is to say her husband, the defendant George Farkas, and Roman Gofman, the plaintiff must elect against which of the defendants to obtain judgment.

42 On this issue, in his evidence in chief, the defendant, Mr. George Farkas, made it quite clear that the true partners in the transaction were he and Mr. Gofman and that in signing the agreement of purchase and sale, his wife was doing so not only without knowledge, but also on behalf and under the direction of the defendant George Farkas. In such circumstances, I accept Trident Holdings Limited v. Danand Investments Limited et al. (1988), 64 O.R. (2d) 65, a decision of the Court of Appeal relied upon by the plaintiff, for the proposition that the principals directing the actions of a bare trustee are liable to third parties when the bare trustee is acting as an agent for those principals and under their direction. On the facts of this case, I am prepared to find that Mrs. Freda Farkas was acting as a bare trustee for her co-defendants and that as such the defendants George Farkas and Roman Gofman are liable notwithstanding that they did not sign the agreement of purchase and sale.

43 However, in respect of the liability of Mrs. Farkas, the plaintiff also relies upon the proposition that a bare trustee if held to be acting as an agent for other beneficiaries can also be liable where the agent also benefits as a principal in the transaction. In support of this proposition, the plaintiff relies upon Dolly Varden Mines Limited (N.P.L.) v. Sunshine Exploration Limited et al. (1967), 64 D.L.R. (2d) 283 where at pp. 295-297 the following is found:

It is, of course, clear that Sunshine Ex. did act in this matter as an agent of Sunshine Ex. did act in this matter as an agent of Sunshine but that does not mean it could not be liable as a principal if in fact it did act as a principal, and if the documents disclose an intention that it should so act, and be liable as a principal. ... From these cases it appears that an agent may be liable under a contract in place of or in addition to its principal and the question of his liability will depend in any given case upon a construction of the documents. ...

Furthermore, Sunshine is also liable for the performance of the covenants of the operator jointly and severally with Sunshine Ex. and as a guarantor of the covenants of Sunshine Ex. Such liability arises as far as Sunshine is concerned from the agency agreement which is executed by all of the parties and in so far as any variation was made in the terms of the principal agreement... (emphasis added)

44 On the facts of this case, the plaintiff submits that the defendant Freda Farkas was also going to directly benefit by this transaction by her taking title to a 50% undivided interest as tenant in common with Mr. Gofman and in addition she personally undertook the obligation to pay interim occupancy charges (ex. 1, tab 8).

45 In my opinion, the taking of title and the agreement to accept personal liability to pay the monthly occupancy charges is inconsistent with the defendant Mrs. Farkas acting solely as a bare trustee by signing the agreement of purchase and sale on behalf of her principals. Rather, these actions are consistent with her receiving a direct benefit from the transaction as a principal to that transaction. Consequently, I agree with the submission made by the plaintiff that the defendant Freda Farkas can also be held liable with the co-defendants and that the plaintiff accordingly is not obliged to elect whether to take a judgment against Freda Farkas or judgment against her co-defendants, George Farkas and Roman Gofman.

4. If the plaintiff had a duty to mitigate damages, did it discharge that duty?

46 At this stage, the plaintiff has, prior to judgment elected, if successful, to obtain his remedy for breach of the agreement of purchase and sale by way of damages and has thereby abandoned his claim to specific performance. Moreover, the plaintiff has conceded that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Asamera Oil Corp. v. Sea Oil & General Corp., [1979] 1 S.C.R. 633 is authority for the proposition that the mere assertion of a claim for specific performance does not oust the common law duty of the plaintiff to mitigate damages. The plaintiff does not seriously dispute that the plaintiff was required in this case to mitigate its damages and the action has properly proceeded on the footing that the plaintiff was required to mitigate damages as a matter of law.

47 The nature of the duty on the plaintiff to mitigate damages and the corresponding onus on the defendant to demonstrate that the plaintiff has not taken reasonable steps to discharge that duty has been set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Dobson v. Winton and Robbins Limited, [1959] S.C.R. 775 as follows at p. 783:

In a common law action there is a duty upon the plaintiff to mitigate his damages and whether the course taken is a reasonable one is a question of fact; (Mayne on Damages, 11th Edition, pp. 147-8).

It is difficult to understand what more the plaintiff could have done in this case and he did adduce a considerable volume of evidence showing a reasonable attempt to mitigate his damages and, having done so, it is for the defendant to show that those steps were not such as a reasonable man would have taken in mitigating his damages and in disposing of the property; (Mayne on Damages, 11th Edition, p. 150).

48 In seeking to discharge the onus upon it to demonstrate an absence of mitigation on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant advances several specific omissions on the part of the plaintiff which the defendants submit are incompatible with any reasonable attempt at mitigation. In this respect the defendants submit that:

- (a) the plaintiff failed to place the unit on an MLS listing until August 27, 1991;
- (b) the plaintiff failed to advertise the unit;
- (c) the plaintiff refused to deal with any inquiries in regard to the unit referring the matter to the defendants who at all times and in their Statement of Defence had stated that the agreement was at an end;
- (d) the plaintiff failed to sell the property in the late summer and early fall of 1990; and
- (e) the plaintiff failed to rent the property.

49 While I am prepared to acknowledge that Unit 310 was not listed on MLS until August 27, 1991, I am not prepared to find that this fact assists the plaintiff in establishing a lack of mitigation. In coming to this conclusion I have examined Ex. 3 which the plaintiff has filed in order to demonstrate the efforts he made to either rent or sell all of the units in the project. I accept the evidence of the plaintiff that prior to August 1991 he exposed all of the units including 310 to prospective purchasers through the listing broker, Royal LePage. In this respect, I accept Mr. Ezer's evidence that from time to time he listed two or three units in order to attract purchasers to the building and that he instructed the agents to show all of the units in the building, including 310, as available for either rent or sale. I am prepared to find that the fact that an offer to rent 310 was received in September 1990 and that an offer to purchase in December 1990 supports the evidence of Mr. Ezer. I am further prepared to find that Mr. Ezer made reasonable efforts to both rent and sell Unit 310 prior to August 31, 1991. The fact of listing in August of 1991 does not in my opinion detract from the reasonableness of the steps to sell or rent Unit 310 prior to that date.

50 With respect to the issue of advertising, Mr. Ezer testified that given the close proximity of the project to synagogues and in view of certain features of the project including Sabbath elevators, effort was made to reach the Orthodox Jewish community through advertising in the Canadian Jewish News as well as in other newspapers and other media both prior to and after May 1990 which is the date when the agreement for the defendants' purchase of Unit 310 was to have closed. I am prepared to find on the basis of the evidence of Mr. Ezer which is uncontradicted and which is confirmed by Exhibit 3, tab 6 and tab 10, that Royal LePage engaged in extensive advertising with respect to the units in the project and that Mr. Ezer also engaged in some advertising on his own. The defendant has not shown a failure to mitigate because of a failure to advertise.

51 The defendant submits that in refusing to deal with inquiries with respect to either the rental or sale of Unit 310 and further in referring such inquiries to the defendant, the plaintiff acted unreasonably in failing thereby to mitigate his damages. I do not accept this submission. The plaintiff was entitled to pursue its remedies by way of specific performance and could not unilaterally either rent or sell the unit without forfeiting its right to specific performance. While I appreciate that the defendant in turn had the right to insist that the agreement was at an end, I cannot accept that the plaintiff, by referring prospective purchasers or renters to the defendant, failed to mitigate his damages. On the contrary, in my opinion, the plaintiff acted reasonably in the circumstances by referring inquiries to the defendant. Such action was all that the plaintiff could reasonably do by way of mitigation and still preserve his right to specific performance. It should be noted that the defendant did not respond to either communication with respect to an offer to rent or an offer to sell. It is unfortunate that the offer to rent made on September 12, 1990 could not have been effected on a without prejudice basis as was the rental from March to November 1992. In my opinion, it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to take the initiative to do so; by communicating the offer to rent in September 1990 and the offer to purchase in December 1990 the plaintiff took steps which were reasonable in the circumstances.

52 The defendant next submits that the plaintiff ought to have sold the unit for $175,000 in the late summer and early fall of 1990. I accept the submission of the plaintiff that to do so would not have been compatible with mitigation but on the contrary would have been clearly improvident.

53 It should be noted that the defendant agreed to purchase the unit for $391,900 but, prior to closing, the defendants themselves listed the unit for sale for $357,000 in January 1990 and subsequently reduced the listing price to $319,500 in March of 1990. It is obvious that the market was in a period of rapid decline and as was conceded by Mr. Farkas at trial, there were no purchasers in early 1990 or at the time of the alleged breach in May 1990.

54 I accept the evidence of Mr. Ezer who testified that Unit 404 which was sold in October of 1990 for $270,000 when the extra parking space is factored out was comparable to Unit 310 when allowance is made for the respective size and locations of the units. I accordingly accept the evidence of Mr. Ezer that the offer of $175,000 made for the purchase of Unit 310 was inordinately low and that it would have been improvident for the plaintiff to have accepted the offer. I accordingly find that the failure by the plaintiff to accept the offer does not constitute a failure to mitigate damages but on the contrary was a reasonable course of action in the circumstances.

55 I moreover am prepared to find that the action of the plaintiff in communicating the offer to the defendant was a reasonable step compatible with mitigation in the circumstances. There were no further offers to purchase Unit 310 and in the context of the sale of only 3 of the units in the project between May 1990 and November 1992. I cannot say that the plaintiff acted unreasonably in refusing to sell the unit for $175,000 in October 1990.

56 Finally, the defendant takes issue with the failure of the plaintiff to rent the unit in September 1990. I have already found that it was not unreasonable for the plaintiff not to unilaterally accept the offer made to rent the unit in September of 1990 because to have done so would have caused the plaintiff to lose the right to specific performance which the plaintiff was entitled to maintain. In my opinion, the plaintiff acted reasonably in communicating the offer to rent to the defendant and thereby reasonably discharged its obligation to mitigate the damages in all of the circumstances.

57 On all of the evidence, I cannot find that any of the alleged failings of the plaintiff viewed either individually or cumulatively assist the defendant in demonstrating that the plaintiff has failed to discharge his obligation to mitigate his damages. In the circumstances, I find that the plaintiff has taken all reasonable steps to mitigate his damages.

4. (b) What is the proper way to assess the plaintiff's damages and as of what date should the damages be assessed?

58 The defendant submits that damages ought to be assessed at the date of breach. The plaintiff however submits that in circumstances when the real estate market is declining the defendants ought not to be permitted to "cap" their liability but rather damages ought to be assessed at the date of trial in conformity with the principle that the plaintiff be put in the same position it would have been in if the breach had not occurred. I accept the position of the plaintiff which in my opinion is supported by the decision of Eberle J. in Victoria Queen Investments Ltd. v. The Savarin Ltd. (1979), R.P.R. 32. I accept as apt to the circumstances of this case what was stated by Eberle J. at p. 41-42:

There is an issue as to whether the second date is the appropriate date or not. The traditional date for assessing damages of this kind has been the date of breach. That would, in my view, be the end of June or early part of July 1976. There is no evidence of the value of the property at that time; though, from the evidence, I would conclude that it was worth more then than it was towards the end of 1977.

In support of its claim the defendant relies on the Pressure Concrete case, which I have referred to, which applied the date of assessment of damages, namely the trial, as the date on which to take the market value and therefore the Court ascertained the difference between that market value and the contract price.

There is another line of authority exemplified recently by the 100 Main Street case, supra, in which the date of assessment was not taken but the date of the breach.

It appears to me that the distinction between those two cases is whether or not the party in the position of the plaintiff has kept the contract alive following its breach or repudiation by the opposite party; i.e., kept it alive, as by asserting a claim for specific performance. That was done in the Pressure Concrete case; it was done in this case; it was not done in the 100 Main Street case.

In my view I should follow the Pressure Concrete case. It seems to me that not to do so would be to leave the defendant vendor, who counterclaims for damages, at the risk of the decline in value of the property after the date of the breach, and that to do so would not give the defendant proper compensation in damages, according to the principle that the damages should put that party in the position it would have been in if there had not been any breach of the contract.

59 In my opinion, it is appropriate to assess damages at the date of trial in the circumstances of this case.

5. What is the quantum of damages?

60 The plaintiff has filed as exhibit 5 in this proceeding a schedule of damages and a revised schedule of damages. The Revised Schedule of Damages is reproduced below:

REVISED SCHEDULE OF DAMAGES

Damages

Purchase Price	$391,900.00
Occupancy Costs (etc.)	125,246.40

$517,146.40
Less Deposits	97,975.00

419,171.40
 Less Interest on deposits (see attachment) 23,387.58

 395,783.82
 Less Value today 207,321.26

 188,462.56
 Add Real Estate brokerage fee to sell
 (5% of value today) 10,366.06

 198,828.62
 Less Rental income ($1,250 per month from May 1, 1992 to Nov. 1, 1992 = 6 x $1,250) 7,500.00

 Total damages $191,328.62

61 In my view, the general approach taken by the plaintiff to the calculation of damages is correct. However, I differ with the plaintiff as to the quantum of total damages as well as the quantum of some of the items involved in the calculations for reasons which I will outline.

62 In view of my finding that the Reciprocal Agreement does not constitute a "material amendment" to the disclosure documentation the defendant is not entitled to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale.

63 The purchase price is correctly taken from the agreement of purchase and sale to be $391,900.00 and I am prepared to confirm this figure in the revised schedule of damages as properly due to the plaintiff with respect to the purchase price of Unit 310.

64 The amount of $125,246.40 with respect to occupancy costs is derived by the plaintiff by calculating $3,913.95 per month by 32 months representing the time period from March 1, 1990 to November 1, 1992. The monthly amount for occupancy cost was agreed to by the parties to commence from the period of interim closing in October 1989. The defendants honoured their obligation by means of postdated cheques which were cashed by the plaintiff until the defendants ordered payment to be stopped in March 1990 on the basis that such payments were illegal "phantom mortgages". That argument has been formally abandoned. In my view, the defendants have been entitled to possession of Unit 310 from March 1990 to November 1992 and have been liable for the occupancy costs throughout this period. I confirm that $125,246.40 is properly and correctly due to the plaintiff with respect to occupancy costs.

65 From this total amount of $517,146.40 must be deducted $97,975.00 which constitutes deposits made by the defendants in respect of the agreement of purchase and sale.

66 Also to be deducted is the amount of $23,387.58 which constitutes interest on the deposits mandated by section 53 of the Condominium Act. The calculations of the amount is appended to the revised schedule of damages and the defendant takes no issue with it. I confirm that $23,387.58 is properly deducted.

67 Also to be deducted is the value of the condominium unit today. The plaintiff has suggested four methods to calculate the amount value of Unit 310. The first is based on the sale of Unit 503 for $165,000 in October 1992. Since the unit is 1,000 sq. ft. the plaintiff calculates that it was sold for $165 a sq. ft. and that accordingly Unit 310 is worth (165 x 1,250 sq. ft.) $206,250.00.

68 The first calculation does not take into account the two parking spaces allotted to Unit 310 and the second method which does take the parking spaces into account determines that the unit is worth $213,750.00.

69 The third method is based on the sale in February 1992 of Unit 410 which is identical to Unit 310 and also has two parking spaces. The price for Unit 410 was $220,000.00.

70 The fourth method is based on the current listing of Unit 201 at $225,000. This unit is identical in size and parking amenities to 310.

71 The amount claimed by the plaintiff in the revised schedule of damages appears to be based on a calculation of current value by means of the first method, i.e. $165 per sq. ft. While this method is based on current data, units 503 and 310 are not comparable either in size or location. In my view, this assessment of current value is too low bearing in mind that Unit 310 is bigger and has a preferable location as a corner unit with a southerly view.

72 The fourth suggested method of assessing the current value of Unit 310 is based on the current list at $225,000 of Unit 201 which is identical in size and parking amenities to Unit 310. While Unit 201 is comparable as to size with Unit 310, it is not comparable as to location within the project. The southerly view favours Unit 310. Moreover, the list price of Unit 210 does not represent what a purchaser would be willing to pay.

73 I prefer to base the current value of Unit 310 on the third suggested method, i.e., on the purchase price of Unit 410.

74 While the estimate of current value of Unit 310 based on the purchase price of Unit 410 is less current than some of the other comparables, that estimate nevertheless is based on what a purchaser was willing to pay for an identical unit. In my view, the current value of Unit 310 is most fairly based on the purchase price of Unit 410 and accordingly I am prepared to deduct $220,000 as indicative of the current value of the unit.

75 It follows that the brokerage fee to sell the unit, which I agree ought to be included will be calculated at 5% of $220,000.

76 Finally, I accept that the rental income from May 1, 1992 to November 1, 1992 in the amount of $7,500 as calculated in Ex. 5 ought also to be deducted.

77 I have accordingly proposed a schedule of damages as follows:

Damages

Purchase Price	$391,900.00
Occupancy Costs (etc.)	125,246.40

17,146.40
Less Deposits	97,975.00

419,171.40
Less Interest on deposits	23,387.58

395,783.82
Less Value today	220,000.00

175,783.82
Add Real Estate brokerage fee to sell (5% of value today)	11,000.00

186,783.82
Less Rental income ($1,250 per month from May 1, 1992 to Nov. 1, 1992 = 6 x $1,250)	7,500.00

78 There shall be judgment for the plaintiff in the amount of $179,283.82 with costs of the action.

79 There shall be an order for pre-judgment and post-judgment interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act.

New Westminster Registry No. C900733

British Columbia Supreme Court
New Westminster, British Columbia
Hogarth J.

Heard: October 15 - 18 and 25, 1991

Judgment: November 26, 1991

(34 pp.)

The plaintiff brought claims for rescission and damages pertaining to contracts for the sale of two condominium units by the defendant to the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed that the provisions with regard to parking in interim agreements were a misrepresentation which was merged into a condition of the contracts which was breached.

Counsel for the Plaintiff: R. Pawliuk and S. Jermyn.

Counsel for the Defendant: C.A. Wallace.

HOGARTH J.:— This matter concerns claims for rescission and damages pertaining to contracts for the sale of two condominium units by the Defendant to the Plaintiff upon the basis that the Plaintiff did not get the accompanying parking space that was bargained for as a condition of each contract.

The Plaintiff is a development company, owned by Milan Jacobec, (Jacobec) and is engaged in the purchase of older apartments and buildings and renovating them into condominium units. The Defendant is a company which independently of the Plaintiff constructed a condominium apartment building at 1235 West Broadway in Vancouver.

Early in November 1989, the Plaintiff was in need of office space and Jacobec was attracted to the premises of the Defendant which was then in the process of construction. The building, when finished, was to consist of several floors of strata titled residential condominium units with lower floors of commercial offices and, when it attracted the attention of the Plaintiff, had reached the point where sales of the units were under way. One residential unit, #502, was a display suite and was used as a sales office as well as an advertisement.

Stella Kai was one of the salespersons employed by the Defendant's real estate agent and it was she who dealt with Jacobec exclusively when he expressed an interest in the purchase of a unit. There is a considerable amount of variance between the evidence of Kai and Jacobec and what follows are my conclusions after a consideration of all the evidence.

Jacobec indicated to Kai in the first instance that he wanted to buy a unit to use as his office but Kai advised that all the commercial units had been sold. It was then discussed and suggested that although the remaining units were for residential purposes, a "home" office would be an acceptable use that might be carried on in any of the remainder.

The residential units were being offered for sale on the basis that one parking space in the covered parking lot of the building was included in the sale price of any unit but, by paying a premium of $8,000, a second space could be obtained. There can be no doubt that parking as a concomitant to the purchase of a unit was important as the street parking was restricted in the area and without appropriate private parking the sales would be much less attractive.

Jacobec was interested in more than two parking spaces but was told that the only way that that could be arranged was by the purchase of more than one unit as the limit was two for each. He decided that a second unit might well be a good investment in any event and, after attending the parking lot and selecting four spaces in close proximity, he made two separate offers with regard to two units - #301 and the display suite #502.

The offers were made November 10, 1989, on printed Interim Agreement forms provided by Stella Kai from a number on a table in the office. In all of these in the space allotted for the insertion of the terms and conditions some specific terms were typewritten which, with respect to parking, read:

"Purchase price includes () parking stalls # . This allocation is 99 year lease"

The purchase price, including the extra parking was $301,000 for Unit #301 and $385,000 for Unit #502, the display suite. The closing date for Unit #301 was December 15, 1989, but for Unit #502, it was delayed until February 15, 1990.

The parenthesis for the parking allocation with regard to Unit #301 was "21 & 22" and for Unit #502 "23 & 20".

The day after the offer was preferred, an addendum to each agreement was prepared and executed by the Plaintiff a portion of which read:

"Purchaser has received, read and accepted the disclosure statement" and it further provided that the parking stalls were changed to 23, 24, 25 and 26. Jacobec accepted the changes so far as the spaces were concerned but due to his own haste received, but never read, the Disclosure Statement. Later the offers were accepted by the Defendant.

By the time of the sales to the Plaintiff (on October 23), the owners of Strata Plan VR 2506 (in substance the Defendant) had passed a resolution that the right to the use of certain parking stalls, including those sold to the Plaintiff, be granted to the Defendant, "for a term of 99 years or until the Strata Corporation is dissolved.....". It is of importance to note that this resolution made no provision that the grant could not be determined on reasonable notice or that there was to be a lease of the spaces.

It is further important to note that the Strata Council of the Strata Corporation had not been elected at that time or by the time the sales to the Plaintiff were made, however, the penthouse, the commercial units and two other residential units had been sold.

The Disclosure Statement, dated August 8, 1989, referred to in the addendum which had not been read by Jacobec, insofar as parking was concerned set forth some matters of material importance. It provided that upon the filing of the Strata Plan, the Defendant intended to have the Strata Corporation enter into an agreement, a form of which was attached, providing that a number of the stalls (which included those sold to the Plaintiff) would be for the exclusive use of the Defendant. The document further provided that the Defendant had the right to allocate parking stalls to various purchasers by way of partial assignment of this agreement with respect to any one or more stalls. The agreement contemplated by the Disclosure Statement provided that the Owners granted to the Defendant the "exclusive use and enjoyment" of the parking stalls "for a term of 99 years from the day of 1989, until the day of 2088" or "until the Strata Corporation dissolved or certain other irrelevant events might occur."

The agreement further stated that the "Strata Corporation warrants and represents that it has by unanimous resolution resolved that the within grant shall not be determinable whether on reasonable notice or otherwise."

This agreement was entered into on October 23, concurrently with the passing of the resolution I have earlier set out that purported to authorize it.

The Plaintiff was to get an assignment of this agreement insofar as its specific parking spaces were concerned (23 - 26, as set out in the addendum to the interims) and the form of the assignment was attached to the Disclosure Statement. This assignment, among other clauses, carried the proviso that the Plaintiff had acknowledged and agreed that if at some future time the agreement assigned were to be modified or terminated so as to affect the rights of the Plaintiff, all claims against the Defendant of any nature or kind were effectively waived.

Jacobec asserts that he expected that the provisions with respect to parking would be secured by a lease that provided the Plaintiff with irrevocable tenure on the allotted spaces for 99 years. During the course of his evidence I remarked that I had never seen such a document but he advised me that he had and said that he could provide me with a pro-form copy. Unfortunately he has not done so but counsel has suggested that it is a customary way of dealing with common property and I shall refer to the matter again as I have some doubt considering the problems with respect to the alienation of title to common property under the Condominium Act (post).

No action was taken by the Plaintiff to rescind either of the contracts within three days of receiving the Disclosure Statement (as permitted by Statute) or otherwise, until well into February following.

The sale with respect to Unit #301 was closed by the Plaintiff's solicitors, the title transferred and the Unit leased by the Plaintiff to Jacobec's secretary. There is a complete lacuna in the evidence as to what was said, done or signed with regard to the documents pertaining to the parking stalls at the time of the closure of the sale of this unit. Certainly there were no filings in the Land Titles Office with respect to the parking stalls, a matter which will be of later importance, however, there is some suggestion that the assignment contemplated by the Disclosure Statement was executed by the Defendant but this seems to have been mislaid. As there was no concern expressed by the solicitor for the Plaintiff on the completion of the arrangement, I can only conclude that the Plaintiff was satisfied with the matter at that time or that it had been overlooked.

It is of major significance to note, with regard to the closure of the sale of Unit #301, that there has been no evidence adduced to the effect that there was any covenant in the documents effecting the conveyance at the time of the closing of the sale that contained an obligation on the part of the Defendant to provide anything with respect to parking and the sole basis of the litigation is the covenant in the interim.

In February, prior to the completion of the second sale, the Plaintiff had second thoughts about the purchases. For reasons not supported by the evidence, he became suspicious of the financial worth of the Defendant and its ability to complete the project. He was aware of some deficiencies in the construction and a day or so before the finalization, he attended the building and noticed several items still uncompleted.

The next day, February 14, his solicitor upon his instructions wrote to the solicitor for the Defendant enclosing all sale documents required to transfer the unit but with a covering letter advising that the Plaintiff had serious misgivings concerning the purchases. These were based on specified items set out in the letter and advised that unless the Defendant rectified the matters on or before the next day (February 15, the closing date), the Plaintiff might well elect to rescind both agreements.

The matters referred to were enumerated threefold. First, much of the workmanship was shoddy and matters of construction not completed; second, there was a serious discrepancy between the parking promised in the Interim (a "99 year lease") and the documents provided which did not secure the use of the parking spots for 99 years; and third, that there had been no designation of the limited common property on the strata plans so that it conformed with the Disclosure Statement.

It was, of course, quite preposterous to suggest that the Defendant could attend to these matters before the next day even if justifiably required and the letter clearly indicates that the Plaintiff wished to be in a position to say that it was ready, willing and able to complete if the Defendant had met its obligations which it failed to do, thus justifying rescission. In any event, this right was eventually claimed and it is common ground that it hinges on a combination of the second and, in part, the third, of the above three concerns.

The solicitors for the Defendant took issue and confirmed that the Plaintiff did not intend to go through with the transactions and, as a consequence, the Defendant sold Unit #502 on March 1, at a much lesser price than the Plaintiff had agreed to pay. All remaining units were still unsold by the end of April when they were transferred to the participants in the Defendant Corporation.

Towards the end of March this litigation was commenced, based on allegations of the Plaintiff that there were misrepresentations, some since abandoned, which involved the nature of the parking that the Plaintiff was to receive and claiming the right to rescission of both contracts as well as damages. The Defendant has denied that any such misrepresentations were made and has counter-claimed for specific performance or damages for breach of contract as well as a declaration that the deposit with respect to Unit #502 be forfeited.

I think it important to comment that the Plaintiff has pleaded its case on the basis that there were two separate contracts for the purchase of separate units, as opposed to one contract for the purchase of two units, the performance of which was separated in time as to each and of significance there is no allegation of fraud.

It is further worthy of note that the Defendant has not pleaded that the completion of the sale of Unit #301 without objection has raised a waiver or an estoppel of the right to claim relief as pleaded although such was nonetheless raised in argument.

THE ISSUES

The Plaintiff says that the provisions set forth in the interim agreements with regard to parking were a misrepresentation that were merged in the interims into a "condition" of the contracts which was breached and as a consequence the Plaintiff is entitled to rescission of the contracts and damages.

The Defendant says that even if the covenants were "conditions", there was no breach thereof because the Plaintiff got substantially what it bargained for.

From these contentions two major issues emerge:

1. Was there a misrepresentation which became a "condition" of the contracts which was not substantially fulfilled?
2. If the answer above is in the affirmative, is the Plaintiff entitled to rescission and damages with respect to both the contracts bearing in mind that the one with regard to suite #301 was completely performed and title passed whereas title had yet to pass with regard to the other?

ISSUE 1:

WAS THE PARKING PROVISION A "CONDITION" WHICH WAS NOT SUBSTANTIALLY FULFILLED?

In order to appropriately deal this issue, it is necessary to refer to some aspects of the Condominium Act R.S.B.C. Chap. 61, which govern the transactions or are otherwise of concern.

At the outset, pursuant to the provisions of s. 118(2) of the Act the "owner developer", in this instance the Defendant, is to exercise all the powers and duties of the Council of the Strata Corporation until such time as it is elected. Thus, wherever the powers of the Strata Corporation are referred to, these are the powers of the Defendant so far as the case at bar is concerned.

Section 118(1) and (2) read as follows:

"118 (1) The powers and duties of the strata corporation shall, subject to any restriction imposed or direction given at a general meeting, be exercised and performed by the council of the strata corporation.

(2) The owner developer shall exercise the powers and duties of the strata council until a council is elected by the owners."

Further, apart from the units themselves, the remaining portions of the premises such as hallways and parking spaces and the like are known and defined by Section 1 as "common property", which, of course, is for the use of all owners subject to conditions controlled by the Statute.

This section further defines the concept of "limited common property" which applies to common property specifically designated under s. 53(1) and (2) of the Act for the use of one or more of the Strata Owners, as opposed to all of them.

"1. 'Common property' means so much of the land and buildings comprised in a strata plan that is not comprised in a strata lot shown on the strata plan, and includes pipes, wires, cables, chutes, ducts or other facilities for the passage or provision of water, sewage, drainage, gas, oil, electricity, telephone, radio, television services, garbage, heating and cooling systems and other services contained within a floor, wall or ceiling of a building shown on the strata plan, where the centre of the floor, wall or ceiling forms the common boundary of a strata lot with another strata lot or with common property.

"Limited common property' means common property designated under section 53(1) and (2) for the use of one or more strata lot owners."

"53. (1) A strata corporation, by special resolution, may designate an area as limited common property for the use of one or more strata lot owners and may remove the designation.

(2) An owner developer may, when the strata plan is tendered for registration, designate areas on the plan as limited common property for the exclusive use of one or more strata lot owners."

Section 5 of the Act provides that all parking spaces of units intended to be used for residential purposes are not to be designated as separate strata lots but are to be included as part of the strata lot of one unit or else as part of the "common property". This is of significance as it superficially prevents parking spaces from being dealt with exclusively for the benefit of the buyers as though they had title to them and thus the right to unfettered and unrestricted possession unless they were specifically said to be a part of the title to the strata lot.

"5. Garages, parking spaces, storage areas and other areas or spaces related to the use of a strata lot that are intended for residential use shall not be designated as separate strata lots but shall be included as part of the strata lot or as part of the common property."

I am somewhat concerned that by virtue of the way that this section deals with "parking places" as either part of the title to the strata lot or as "common property", that it may be that a disposition by lease is unavailable for any part of the "common property".

Under the provisions of s. 17, contracts for the control of the "common property" are limited to matters affecting its security and maintenance and are to be determinable on three months notice.

Section 20 provides that the "common property" is declared to be owned by the owners as tenants in common and cannot be dealt with separately from the title to the unit the owner owns, except as the Act further provides.

"Common property" may be disposed of under s. 20 by special resolution of the Strata Council and by s. 21 all such dispositions shall be registered in the Land Titles office and, save and except leases of less than 3 years, shall be deemed a subdivision of land, a matter of great importance with respect to the alienation of title by way of lease or otherwise.

In conjunction with the definitions of "common property" and "limited common property", by s. 117(f) the Strata Corporation may grant any one owner the right to the exclusive use of common property and, unless the resolution providing for same unanimously provides otherwise, such a grant is determinable on reasonable notice. I would distinguish this disposition from a lease as a statutory licence.

"117. The strata corporation may

(f) grant an owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of common property, or special privileges for them, the grant to be determinable on reasonable notice, unless the strata corporation by unanimous resolution otherwise resolves."

Should the Strata Corporation choose to exercise the power under s. 117(f), granting an exclusive use of parking stalls, it must do so by a special resolution passed under the provisions of s. 53(1) which designates an area as "limited common property". But there is an important proviso in this subsection as it says that such a designation is a designation that may be removed. It is further provided by s. 53(6) that no such resolution has any effect unless it is filed in the Land Title Office.

Thus, there are four ways in which parking spaces can be dealt with when the units are sold. First, they can be included in the title to the unit as envisaged by s. 5; second, it may be they can form the subject of separate leases under s. 20; third, they can be declared as "limited common property", either determinable for exclusive use or otherwise, under ss. 117(f) and 53(1) and (2) or; fourth, they can be simply left as common property for the benefit of all on a catch as catch can basis and subject to the By-laws of the Council as made and amended from time to time.

It is conceded that there never was any disposition of the title to the parking stalls under ss. 5 or 20 by title, lease or any other alienation of interest and equally no resolution which provided that notice could not terminate any grant of their use of common property under s. 117(f); in addition, there was no designation of the parking stalls as "limited common property" under s. 53(1) and no filing ever made of any kind in the Land Title Office dealing with any restrictions on the use of "common property" whatsoever.

As there were no dispositions of the "common property" under any of the above provisions, the Plaintiff says that at any time its use of this portion of the "common property", that is, the parking stalls, was never free of interference or exclusive and could be determined by reasonable notice as the Strata Council had not otherwise resolved. The Plaintiff says that the Resolution of October 23, 1989, is no more than an ordinary resolution of the Strata Corporation which does not provide any irrevocable exclusive use of the parking stalls to the Defendant that could be assigned to the Plaintiff and what is worse, if such a use were interfered with, the Plaintiff, by virtue of the terms of the assignment, had no recourse against the Defendant by virtue of the disclaimer in the assignment.

There can be no doubt it was never envisaged by either party that the parking places would be included as part of the title to the units as s. 5 suggests. The property where the spaces were located was clearly "common property" separate from the title to the units and, thus, this aspect of the matter requires no further consideration.

Equally, I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the Defendant covenanted to provide parking spaces by a "99 year lease". A lease is an interest in land as opposed to a licence and could only be achieved by the processes envisaged by s. 20 of the Act involving the disposition of a portion of the "common property". Although I am not without some doubt, this might have been effected if all the contingencies involved in the alienation of "common property" under s. 20 had been dealt with but the Defendant knew full well that the Resolution of October 23, 1989, which granted the Defendant the "right to the exclusive use and enjoyment" of the parking stall, did not authorize the execution of a lease and no lease was envisaged.

I would point out that according to one authority, the device of a "lease" in the sale of condominiums has been used in order to avoid the problems pertaining to the restrictions on the alienation of title to parking stalls under the prohibition contained in s. 5. In granting the "lease" for a term of 99 years the developer can assure the purchaser an exclusive use that cannot be achieved under the "licence" arrangements (and I use the word "licence" in a very general sense) that pertain to common property limited or otherwise. (See Pavlich Condominium Law in British Columbia (1983) p. 81). In any event, whatever the obstacles might have been to effect a "lease" of the parking spaces under the provisions of s. 20, which deals with the disposition of common property, the Defendant certainly did not commence to overcome them by the Resolution of October 23, 1989. This Resolution did no more than give the Defendant a "right to exclusive use and enjoyment" of the stalls, albeit purportedly for a period of 99 years, as part of the "common property" which were and would eventually be held by all owners as tenants in common and subject to all the qualifications of the Act. It was this, and only this, that the Defendant could assign to the Plaintiff.

The deficiencies in the Defendant's commitment to the Plaintiff might well have been substantially overcome if the Defendant had made some effort to create the parking stalls as "limited common property" under s. 53, not determinable on notice by a resolution under s. 117(f). Such a process at least would have given the Plaintiff the succour of the exclusive use of the spaces assigned to him even though not under lease, and even though susceptible to variation by virtue of the provisions of s. 53(1) that empower the Council to revoke the designation of "limited common property".

Although I am not without some reservations as to whether the Plaintiff was really concerned at the time the interims were signed as to the precise nature of the parking arrangements he was to get, and probably would have been perfectly satisfied with parking stalls held as "limited common property" designated for his "exclusive use", without any provision for notice of termination, I have come to the conclusion that notwithstanding my reservations, the parking that was to be granted to him was not that agreed upon. It was in the last analysis, nothing more than a purported restricted allotment of common property that so far as tenure was concerned was worthless and could be abrogated at any time by the Council leaving the Plaintiff, by virtue of the disclaimer in the assignment, with no recourse against the Defendant.

Of course, if he had read the Disclosure Statement he would have immediately realized that not only was he not getting a lease but that there had been no declaration of the creation of "limited common property" and the least enquiry would have revealed that there had never been any resolution under the provisions of s. 117(f) that the grant of the stalls could not be determined on notice. In addition, had his solicitor paid homage to the problem on the closing of the sale of #301, he would have easily determined the true state of affairs by virtue of the lack of any filing in the Land Title Office creating a lease or creating "limited common property" that would have permitted exclusive use for 99 years.

Thus, it could be said that the Plaintiff was the author of his own misfortune, but I have concluded that in the absence of a plea of waiver or estoppel, the fact is that it was represented by the Defendant that what he was to receive was a lease and unless the Defendant can show that this covenant was fulfilled literally or in substance by the appropriate documentation, the Plaintiff is not estopped from claiming that it has been breached. I am of the view that the Plaintiff was entitled to assume that the Disclosure Statement set forth the particulars of the "lease" and the Defendant cannot thrust upon the Plaintiff the responsibility to clarify what was in the first instance its misrepresentation. Nor can the Defendant take advantage of the apparent oversight of the solicitor for the Plaintiff in failing to detect the defect unless it can be shown equally that the discrepancy was drawn to his attention.

Again, I note that the Defendant has not pleaded that the fact that he signed the addendum and otherwise completed the transaction, amounts to an estoppel or waiver of his right to assert a claim for relief. But even if this had been pleaded, (and I note the Defendant has argued it in any event) in my view there is little to show that the Plaintiff accepted the arrangement proposed by the Defendant to the extent that he is thereby estopped from asserting otherwise. It is clear that he did not read the Disclosure Statement as his endorsement on the addenda suggests, and equally clear his solicitor did not concern himself with the lack of a lease, but that does not mean that he accepted the arrangement that was proposed. If there had been an express waiver or if he had signed the assignment which would have indicated same by implication, the whole situation would then take on a different hue. Looking at the transaction as a whole, he was entitled to assume that the Disclosure Statement reflected the interims and the fact that he signed the addenda, which suggests that he accepted an alternative, although some evidence of waiver, does not raise a bar to relief, particularly in the light of the fact it was not pleaded.

The Defendant contends that s. 42 of the Act which gives the Plaintiff relief from any inequitable treatment indicates that in substance the Plaintiff received what it bargained for. That Section reads as follows:

"42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

- (a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or
- (b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself."

The Defendant says that any problems that might arise in the future could be dealt with under the provisions of s. 42 which gives the Court the power to grant equitable relief and thus any deficiencies are really marginal. The Defendant cites the case of Carney v. Owners, Strata Plan VR 634 (1981) (1981) 30 B.C.L.R. 324 (B.C.S.C.) as authority for this proposition.

I am of the view that the subsequent case of Hill v. Owners of Strata Plan NW 2477 (C of A, CA012112, Van Reg, July 4, 1991) is an answer to this contention. In this case the Owner Developer agreed to provide an extra parking place to the purchaser in the interim. The purchasers knew there was a problem with regard to the acquisition of a second space before the sale was closed and could not convince the Strata Council to allot the second space to them as the Owner Developer had promised. They closed the sale and later, after a number of developments, applied for equitable relief under s. 42.

The Court, having emphasised that no "limited common property" had been created by the Owner Developer, held that equitable relief ought to be refused, as to permit the Owner Developer to make any such arrangements without providing the appropriate restrictions on use, and then to allow relief under s. 42, would leave it open to the Owner Developer to make all kinds of commitments with respect to "common property" that would tie the hands of the Strata Council which was endowed by Statute to deal with same for the benefit of all the owners.

The same principle would be applicable to the Plaintiff's situation in the case at bar should problems arise, and although the facts are somewhat different, equitable relief, although perhaps possible, would be somewhat remote because of this case. Thus, the Defendant's contention that it assuages the sting of the failure of the Defendant to comply with the covenant, or that it is only inconsequential because of its availability, is of no avail.

The evidence established that parking was of importance to any sale and, in addition, substantial premiums would be paid for additional parking space. Ms. Kai, The Defendant's agent, was well aware that the Plaintiff wanted additional spaces and the Plaintiff was entitled to assume that the word "lease" assured it of tenure and nature of such space without interruption for the period anticipated. This was a material misrepresentation and as parking was fundamental to the agreement it was a "condition" of the contract and it was breached, indeed, it was never intended that it be fulfilled.

Accordingly, the Plaintiff did not get what he bargained for so far as the tenure to the parking was concerned or any arrangement substantially the same.

ISSUE 2:IS THE REMEDY OF RESCISSION AVAILABLE WITH REGARD TO EACH CONTRACT?

The Plaintiff contends that as a consequence, it is entitled to rescission and damages with regard to the completed agreement and rescission with respect to the second.

I think it can be said to be quite trite law that where there has been a material misrepresentation which induced the contract in the first instance, which may or may not have been structured as one of the terms of the contract, and where the matter has arisen prior to the completion of the performance of the contract, the offended party has an option to treat the contract at an end and to claim rescission as at least one form of relief, particularly where the term is a "condition" as opposed to a "warranty" in the legal sense. Such is the situation with regard to Unit #502 as that contract had never been completely performed before the condition which reflected the misrepresentation was breached, or to put it more accurately, before it was discovered. I award the Plaintiff rescission of that agreement. I would point out that similar relief at law as opposed to equity would be available by virtue of there being a breach of a "condition" in any event, as opposed to a "condition" which was consequent on a misrepresentation which induced the contract whether it was the result of a misrepresentation or not. Such a determination also disposes of the Defendant's counter-claim for specific performance.

But in dealing with Unit No. 301, the situation is somewhat different because the contract had been performed, the title to the unit transferred to the Plaintiff, including, at the very least, a right to participate in the parking areas as "common property" held as a tenant in common with the other owners, possession delivered and the sale closed. Thus the question arises as to whether the purchaser can have rescission, as opposed to damages, with respect to a contract, the performance of which has been completed upon the basis that a misrepresentation has been made and a consequent condition of the contract was breached.

The law in such a situation, at least where the contract deals with the sale of lands, restricts the right of rescission to certain specific situations. It appears from the principles referred to in the case of Short v. MacLennan and MacLennan (1958) 16 D.L.R. (2d) 161 (S.C.C.), that in the absence of fraud, or an error "in substantialibus", there can be no rescission after performance unless the subject of the misrepresentation has been included as a condition of the interim agreement, or arises independently of it and, in either event, is designed to survive the deed of conveyance or is specifically contained in it: the theory being that the condition is merged with the deed of conveyance so that all matters may be considered at an end. These are the concepts referred to in substance in the quote from Duff J. in Redican v Nesbitt at p. 163 as follows:

"The vendee may rely after completion upon warranty, contractual condition, error in substantialibus, or fraud. Once the conveyance is settled and the estate has passed, it seems a reasonable application of the rule to hold that as to warranty or contractual condition resort must be had to the deed unless there has been a stipulation at an earlier stage which was not to be superseded by the deed, as in the case of a contract for compensation. Bos v. Helsham (1866), L.R. 2 Ex. 72. Misrepresentation which is not fraudulent, and does not give rise to error in substantialibus, could only operate after a completion as creating a contractual condition or a warranty. Finality and certainty in business affairs seems to require that as a rule, when there is a formal conveyance, such a condition or warranty should be therein expressed and that the acceptance of the conveyance by the vendee as finally vesting the property in him is the act which for this purpose marks the transition from contract in fieri to contract executed; and this appears to fit in with the general reasoning of the authorities."

Thus, if there is an absence of fraud, and no such collateral condition, the Plaintiff has to show that there was an error "in substantialibus".

The principles have been dealt with in Di Castri, The Law of Vendor and Purchaser (3d) at para. 936, who notes that the doctrine favours the vigilant and not the indolent, and Fridman, The Law of Contract (2nd) at p. 735, wherein he says that an error "in substantialibus" in dealing with realty transactions is to amount to a failure of consideration, a smaller quantity of land or a different kind of tenancy.

A problem concerned with the principle and similar to the case at bar, arose in the case of John Bosworth v. Professional Syndicate 97 D.L.R. (3d) 112 (Ont. High Ct. Robbins J.). The Plaintiff sold some land to the Defendant and in the contract of sale covenanted that it was zoned M2 (industrial-commercial) and honestly believing that that was the case. The conveyance was completed and title passed. Later it was found that the M2 Zoning had never been effected and, in effect, the property was zoned for solely industrial use, a matter that had been apparently overlooked by the purchaser's solicitor at the time of closing. The purchaser requested the Court to rescind the transaction.

The Court said (at p. 121) that when a conveyance is prepared, executed and delivered by a grantor to a grantee, there is a presumption that the conditions of the sale have been merged in the conveyance. This depends on the intentions of the parties according to the facts. If there is a stipulation that is intended to operate as an independent collateral agreement, then there is no merger, but generally speaking, a purchaser is restricted to those conditions and warranties set forth in the conveyance.

The Court refused rescission.

An analogous situation was considered by this Court in Ruscheinsky v. A. Spencer Co. (1948) 2 W.W.R. 392. In this case the Plaintiff bought and took possession of a grocery store and was assured that the landlord had consented to the transfer of the monthly tenancy, a matter which was critical to the sale so that the Plaintiff could obtain the benefit of certain rental regulations. Such a consent had never been obtained and relief was claimed by way of rescission on several grounds, including failure of consideration.

Coady J. cited Kerr on Fraud and other authorities in which it was said that rescission is available, notwithstanding completion of performance, if there was a complete difference between what was represented and what was taken, so as to constitute a failure of consideration. In another cited authority, Kennedy v. Panama, New Zealand and Australian Royal Mail (1867) LR 2 Q.B. 580, it was held that there was to be a difference in substance between the thing bargained for and obtained.

Coady J. held, (at p. 397) that there was not only a difference in substance between what the Plaintiff got and what he was supposed to get, but there was an entire failure to secure one of the things he bargained and paid for (seemingly the consent of the landlord to the transfer) and, after reviewing the question of rescission further, ordered that it be granted. It is to be noted that the doctrine of error "in substantialibus" was not specifically discussed.

There is clearly a material difference between a claim for rescission after performance and that which takes place prior thereto and it would appear that in the absence of fraud, insofar as the breach of a condition is concerned, one of two matters must be established: either that the condition was such that its performance was intended to survive the conveyance of title, or that it was a matter of error "in substantialibus", that is, the Plaintiff did not receive substantially what was bargained for.

I do not believe it can be said that viewing the contract in the case at bar as a whole, the condition that the Defendant supply a 99 year lease for the parking could be said to be severable from the sale of each of the units in question to the extent that it was a covenant that acted independently of the covenant to transfer title. The parking went with the unit and the only reason that it was referred to by way of a separate condition was because it had never been made a part of the title to the units in the first place, obviously so there could be flexibility in the sale of parking spaces as to location and number. It was never intended, except in the literal sense, that the Plaintiff would have parking without title to the unit to which it pertained, that is, that it could have a 99 year lease on the parking but no title to the unit; they were part and parcel of the same transaction. If such were the case looked at reciprocally, if the Plaintiff had not received title to the units, he nonetheless could claim title to the parking which was absurd. Therefore, it was not a separate and distinct condition and when the title to the unit was passed, it cannot be said that the covenant to supply the lease survived the conveyance as a separate obligation. Thus, the provision was merged into a title to the "common property" shared as a tenant in common with the other owners when the conveyance was effected as provided by s. 5.

Can it be said that in the case at bar, the failure of the Plaintiff to get the lease for the parking was an error "in substantialibus" bearing in mind the above authorities?

I do not hesitate to say that I am affected by the fact that it was not the failure to get the parking that has brought about the litigation; the real triggering event was the conclusion that the Plaintiff had made a bad bargain; and in addition his predicament is apparently the result of the failure of his solicitor to be vigilant at the time of the closing of the sale.

In my view, this indicates that the "lease" was not the substantial part of the title that the Plaintiff would have the Court to believe, but is merely the excuse to get out of the transaction leaving the Defendant with the substantial drop in the market which has not been shown to be the result of the nature of the parking in any way. In addition, there is no evidence to show that, de facto, the Plaintiff will not have exclusive use to two parking spaces and such a situation draws a great deal from the argument that there has been a substantial failure of consideration.

But apart from the above, the contract has to be read as a whole to determine whether there was an error in substantialibus, that is, did the Plaintiff receive something substantially different from what he bargained for when the totality of the sale is considered?

He bargained and paid an additional sum for a unit with two parking spaces exclusively and indeterminable for his own use. He received a unit with two parking places in name only which he might well have to share at some future time with his other tenants in common or which might well be relocated or, alternatively, might well, de facto, be what he bargained for. There is no evidence that there is not enough parking for all the units in the building so it could be said that he did not get any parking at all, it was just that the parking is not indeterminably exclusive, or might well not be, depending how he makes out with the Strata Council at some future time, and I think it fair to assume that all owners will be dealt with equitably and in good faith as the Act requires.

It is a difficult point to resolve but I have come to the conclusion that although he did not get in its entirety what he bargained for, and although the parking provided was in substantial breach of the covenant with respect to that item, when considering the pith and substance of the sale, as well as the way in which the litigation was formulated, the deficiency was not sufficient to come within the rule which would allow rescission, and the Plaintiff must confine his remedy to damages.

I have not heard from counsel as to the calculation of damages from this perspective, but it seems to me that an order should go to the Master directing an appraisal of the value of the unit at the time of sale with a lease of the nature that was envisaged and a similar appraisal as to its value on the basis of what was received, the difference if any being the quantum. In this regard, I would grant liberty to apply if the formula is unacceptable.

There will accordingly be an order:

1. Setting aside the agreement pertaining to Unit #502 and, upon the exchange of the appropriate documentation, the return of all monies paid as deposit on the sale or otherwise thereunder with Court Ordered Interest from the date of the sale to the date of payment at the rate set by the Registrar at the date of sale and from time to time until payment; and
2. As to Unit #301, damages in the amount determined by the Master with Court Ordered Interest determined in the same manner; and
3. Dismissing the Defendant's counter-claim for specific performance with regard to Unit #502; and
4. Costs to the Plaintiff.

Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 347 v. Trendsetter Developments Ltd. et al.

9 O.R. (3d) 481; Action No. 626/91

Court of Appeal for Ontario, Robins, McKinlay and Arbour JJ.A.

Judgment: August 27, 1992

APPEAL from an order of the General Division declaring that the appellants could not vote at a meeting of unit owners of a condominium corporation.

Colin D. McKinnon, Q.C., and Kathryn Sabo, for appellants.

Janice B. Payne, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

MCKINLAY J.A.:—The appellants, Trendsetter Developments Limited (Trendsetter), Thomas C. Assaly and Thomas C. Assaly Corporation Ltd. (Assaly Corp.), appeal a decision of the Ontario Court (General Division) dated July 22, 1991 wherein Isaac J., sitting in motions court, declared that the appellants Thomas C. Assaly and Assaly Corp. are not entitled to vote at meetings of unit owners of the Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 347 (the condominium) in their capacity as unit owners, and that the appellant Assaly Corp., as mortgagee, is not entitled to exercise a mortgagee's right to vote pursuant to s. 48 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26) (the Act) [see (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 300, 20 R.P.R. (2d) 9]. The decision of the motions court judge has been stayed pending appeal. Two applications were heard together, but only Application 52779/91 is the subject of this appeal.

The condominium was incorporated pursuant to the Condominium Act by registration by Trendsetter of a declaration and description on August 29, 1986. The property involved is a high-rise condominium in the City of Ottawa, known as the Kent Towers, which contains 219 residential units and seven commercial units. From its inception, the project was intended to be a mixed residential and commercial building. The appellant Trendsetter was amalgamated with Assaly Corp. on September 1, 1988, pursuant to the Business Corporations Act, 1982, S.O. 1982, c. 4 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. B.16), and was continued under the name Thomas C. Assaly Corporation Ltd. (Assaly Corp.). Thomas C. Assaly is the president and controlling shareholder of Assaly Corp.

Assaly Corp. owns two residential and seven commercial units in Kent Towers. One residential unit was obtained by foreclosure and the other as a result of a breach of the agreement of purchase and sale by an investor. The commercial units are provided for in the declaration of the condominium, and are subject to its provisions as well as to the provisions of the Act. Each investor was aware of the intention to have commercial units.

At the time of trial, Assaly Corp. held virtually all of the second and third mortgages registered against the condominium units. Each of the Assaly Corp. mortgages contains a clause permitting the mortgagee to exercise the unit owner's right to vote. A trust company holds first mortgages on all units, payment of which is guaranteed by Assaly Corp. Those mortgages also provide for exercise by the mortgagee of the unit owner's right to vote. There was some dispute during argument as to the number of mortgages held by Assaly Corp. at the time of the appeal hearing; however, neither counsel was able to provide adequate information as to the precise holdings. Counsel were informed by the court that this appeal would be decided on the basis that Assaly Corp. held in excess of 15 per cent of the junior mortgages on the units -- a fact agreed to at the time of the hearing before the motions court judge.

Thomas C. Assaly personally owns 53 residential units, and it is not disputed that those units were purchased by him at fair market value. A majority of the other units are owned by individual investors who take advantage of the substantial tax benefits of ownership, as does Thomas C. Assaly with respect to his 53 units. Very few units are owner-occupied.

At the material time, the board of directors of the condominium were Gayle Duggan, Taxiarchis (Mike) Chatzipantazis, Thomas G. Assaly, Ashwin Shingadia and Gillian Brown, all of whom own residential units in the building. Thomas G. Assaly is the son of Thomas C. Assaly, and is employed by the Assaly group of companies.

Thomas C. Assaly has a controlling interest in Assaly Holdings Ltd., which in turn has a controlling interest in both Assaly Corp. and in a company called Asgo Management Ltd. (Asgo). Asgo became the manager of the condominium for a term of five years from October 15, 1986 by virtue of a management agreement entered into between Asgo and Trendsetter at a time when Trendsetter, as developer, was owner of 100 per cent of the units. Thomas C. Assaly makes all significant decisions on behalf of Assaly Corp. and on behalf of Asgo.

THE DISPUTE

In the spring of 1991 a dispute arose among the directors with respect to the future management of the condominium. The majority of the board of directors, consisting of Duggan, Chatzipantazis and Shingadia, were of the view that the management contract with Asgo should not be renewed on its expiry on October 14, 1991. Assaly and Brown were in favour of renewal of the Asgo contract, Brown proposing that she be hired as salaried managing director.

By letter dated June 7, 1991 Assaly Corp., in its capacity as mortgagee of no less than 15 per cent of the units, wrote to unit owners enclosing a notice, pursuant to s. 18(2) of the Act, of a special meeting of owners to remove Duggan, Chatzipantazis and Shingadia from the board of directors because they did not support the renewal of the Asgo agreement. It also sent to owners a notice indicating its intention to exercise the voting rights of all units against which it held mortgages. There was a dispute between counsel on the appeal as to whether Assaly Corp. at that time held mortgage security over at least 15 per cent of the units. As stated above, counsel were unable to satisfy us as to the then current status of the mortgages, and thus we are dealing with the issues on appeal as if Assaly Corp. does in fact hold mortgages over 15 per cent of the units.

Assaly Corp. had two reasons for calling the meeting of unit owners: first, it wished the renewal of the Asgo management contract, which was a profitable one, on its expiry on October 14, 1991; and second, it did not want to jeopardize the renewal of contracts which Asgo held with individual unit owners to manage their particular units.

Mr. Thomas C. Assaly, in cross-examination on his affidavit filed in the proceedings, stated that the appellants wished to maintain control over the management of the property to produce the best possible results for all investors. Gayle Duggan, in her filed affidavit, stated that the board of directors had encountered difficulties in dealing with Asgo as the condominium manager, particularly when Asgo or the appellant found themselves in a position adverse to the respondent.

THE ISSUES

Four issues were argued on appeal:

- (i) whether Thomas C. Assaly, as shareholder of the developer, could be a bona fide unit owner of condominium units under the Condominium Act ;
- (ii) whether Thomas C. Assaly's position as controlling shareholder of Assaly Corp. imposes a fiduciary duty upon him which prohibits him from exercising a right to vote as unit owner;
- (iii) whether Assaly Corp. is under a fiduciary duty which prohibits it from exercising its right to vote as unit owner; and

(iv) whether Assaly Corp. as mortgagee of a majority of the units of the condominium is entitled to vote under s. 48 of the Condominium Act?

(i) Controlling shareholder of declarant as bona fide owner of condominium units

The learned motions court judge held that Thomas C. Assaly was not entitled to vote at the meeting called by the mortgagee. At p. 34 of his reasons [p. 317 O.R., pp. 26-27 R.P.R.], he stated as follows:

The principles laid down in cases such as York Condominium No. 167, Peel Condominium Corp. No. 199, and Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279, supra, are, first, that the Act was intended to benefit unit owners who are bona fide purchasers, secondly, that declarants and their successors and assignees stand in a fiduciary relationship to unit owners, and finally, that they may not use their positions to further their own economic interests at the expense of bona fide unit owners.

The decision by Thomas C. Assaly Corporation Ltd. to invoke the machinery of s. 18(2) of the Act in order to remove from office the majority directors of the board because they had the temerity to vote against renewal of the management agreement with Asgo Management Limited is, in my respectful view, nothing short of a massive use of its position to further its own economic advantage. This is the type of conduct which Carruthers J., in a different factual context, excoriated in Peel Condominium Corp. No. 199, supra, and I find it no less reprehensible here.

It follows from the foregoing that I accept the submissions of Mr. Davidson for the applicant that Thomas C. Assaly is not entitled to vote at the meeting.

The first and third principles referred to above involve the question of whether or not Thomas C. Assaly is a bona fide purchaser of his 53 units. The second principle relates to his position as the controlling mind of Assaly Corp. and of Asgo.

It is not disputed that Thomas C. Assaly paid fair market value for the units which he purchased in his personal capacity. The appellant argues that because he paid fair market value he is a bona fide purchaser within the terms of the Act, stating that s. 1(1)(1) refers to a "bona fide purchaser" as one "who actually pays fair market value". That is not a completely accurate reference to s. 1(1)(1). The section defines a "declarant" as follows:

(1) "declarant" means the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in the description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land, and includes any successor or assignee of such owner or owners but does not include a bona fide purchaser of a unit who actually pays fair market value or any successor or assignee of such purchaser .

It is clear from that provision that, for any successor or assignee of the "declarant" to be exempt from the statutory obligations of a declarant, he must not only pay fair market value, but he must also be a bona fide purchaser. As stated above, payment of fair market value is not in issue in this case. However, the question whether Thomas C. Assaly was a bona fide purchaser is one of some difficulty. Although the motions court judge did not address the issue directly, it appears from his conclusions that he was of the view that Thomas C. Assaly could not be a bona fide purchaser because of his position in Assaly Corp. and in Asgo. He also appears to have considered that the calling of a meeting of unit holders by Assaly Corp. as mortgagee, pursuant to s. 18(2) of the Act, could be attributed to Thomas C. Assaly in his personal capacity. He relied on the decisions in Peel Condominium Corp. No. 199 v. Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Ltd. (1989), 68 O.R. (2d) 513, 5 R.P.R. (2d) 70 (H.C.J.); York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280 (C.A.); and Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 v. Rochon (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545, 38 D.L.R. (4th) 430 (C.A.).

The Sanrose decision involved the failure of a developer to sell 57 out of 270 units in the Fairways condominium development in Mississauga in accordance with the requirements of s. 51(1)(b) of the Act, which requires sale by a declarant "without delay". In that case, the units left unsold were owned by the declarant corporation, by two individual defendants who were the individuals behind the original development plan, and also by other "persons or entities" with whom they had a "connection or association". However, the question at issue in our case -- whether persons who have purchased units in their individual capacity must be treated in the same way under the Act as corporate declarants controlled by them -- was one that it was unnecessary to decide in the Sanrose case.

The declaration in Sanrose contained the following provision:

No person or company or persons or companies acting in consort or under common control shall be allowed to buy more than 1% of the total number of units.

No such provision is found in the declaration in this case. In Sanrose, the trial judge made several statements as to the intent of the Act and the intent of the declaration and by-laws of the condominium involved, but all were made in the context of the declarant's statutory duty to sell, and the above-quoted provision in the Sanrose declaration.

In the Rochon case, this court considered whether a private arrangement made between the purchaser of a unit and the declarant, prior to the sale of all of the units, was binding upon other purchasers -- a substantially different situation from the one before us. In that case, Finlayson J.A. stated [at p. 554 O.R., p. 439 D.L.R.]: "He (the declarant) can never be a bona fide purchaser of a unit and it is these 'unit owners' that the Condominium Act is intended to protect." Although that is a reasonable interpretation of the Act, it does not answer the question whether the controlling shareholder of a corporate declarant can become a bona fide purchaser of a unit.

Cases were cited to us addressing the issue whether a purchaser of particular property was a bona fide purchaser for value. I do not consider those cases to be of assistance in resolving the issue in this case. They arise most frequently in the context of alleged fraudulent conveyances and negotiable instrument cases. One question common to both is whether or not true value was paid for the conveyance or the bill. The second is, in the fraudulent conveyance cases, whether the intent of the transfer was to defraud, hinder, or delay creditors of the transferor and, in the negotiable instrument cases, whether the holder of the bill took with any notice of defect in title of previous holders. The context is substantially different in cases dealing with the statutory scheme established under the Condominium Act. In my view, once the payment of fair market value is determined, s. 1(1)(1) of the Act requires a further determination of whether the transaction was a true sale rather than merely a transfer to a nominee, and whether there was any underlying intent which would be inimical to the purposes of the Act.

It was argued by the respondent that where, as here, the purchaser is one and the same person as the controlling mind of the corporate declarant, the transaction is a mere sham to avoid the deemed covenant in s. 51(1)(b) of the Act that the declarant will "take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included in the property without delay". Such an interpretation of the Act would go much further than the common law of this province in piercing the corporate veil, and would preclude any developer controlling a closely held corporation from purchasing units in a condominium developed by that corporation, regardless of the purpose of the purchase.

Thomas C. Assaly purchased his units for investment purposes, and for the tax advantage which he could derive personally from their purchase -- the same reasons why most other owners purchased their units. The evidence indicates additional reasons for Mr. Assaly's purchases, not necessarily shared by other unit owners. These were the stabilization of prices of the units in the project, and the furthering of the interests of Asgo in maintaining its management contracts. There is no evidence that he acted as a mere nominee of Assaly Corp. in purchasing his units.

The remaining question is whether there are any facts in this case which indicate any underlying intent on the part of Mr. Assaly which would be inimical to the purposes of the Act. One of the main objectives of the Act is to place control of the condominium in the hands of the owners at the earliest possible date. However, nothing in the Act prohibits any individual from owning a sufficient number of units in the project to put him in control. Such a prohibition could be written into the declaration, as was done in the Sanrose case, but that was not done in this case. In any event, ownership of 53 out of 219 residential units does not of itself constitute control.

I see no facts surrounding his purchase of residential units which would preclude Thomas C. Assaly from exercising a vote as bona fide owner of each of his units.

(ii) Does the controlling shareholder of a declarant owe a fiduciary duty to owners, and if so, does that duty prohibit him from exercising a right to vote as unit owner?

The respondent takes the position that Thomas C. Assaly owes a fiduciary duty to the owners of units in the condominium as a result of his being the controlling mind of the declarant, and must, therefore, act in their interests alone when their interests are in conflict with his own. The only condominium case cited for that proposition was the decision of this court in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd., supra. The relevant portion of that decision involved extra parking spaces remaining after parking spaces had been allocated to all residential units in the project. The developer declarant, prior to the registration of the declaration, proposed to sell the extra parking spaces and retain the proceeds. Its position was that, although the extra spaces were part of the common elements, they remained the property of the developer until registration of the declaration and could be disposed of by it at will. Wilson J.A., writing for the court, stated at p. 467 O.R., p. 289 D.L.R.:

With respect, I can see no reason why as a matter of simple contract law the parties cannot contract with reference to the Act and declaration prior to the registration of the declaration and in anticipation of its registration. Indeed, I think they must be taken to have done so where units in a condominium project are sold prior to registration since the condominium is substantially a creature of statute. It would be wholly unreal to view those transactions as agreements for the sale of separate pieces of real estate. This being so, I think the Court may look, and indeed must look, to the provisions of the Act and the declaration in determining the rights of the parties under the agreements of purchase and sale. I think they must also look to the general law of real property as to the status of a purchaser once his offer has been accepted. I do not think the position of the owner-developer remains unchanged after he starts to sell units. I think that at that point he has committed the character of the project to that of condominium under the Act and declaration. I think he has also placed himself in a fiduciary relationship to the unit purchasers not only with respect to their units but also with respect to the interests appurtenant thereto. He therefore holds the property in trust for the unit purchasers, present and prospective, and for the condominium corporation which will come into being upon registration of the declaration. I believe he is under a duty to protect the interests of all unit owners, present and prospective, and cannot put his own interests in conflict with theirs even although he himself continues to be an owner as long as any units remain unsold.

That decision supports the extension of principles of real property contract law to contracts involving the purchase of condominium units. I see nothing in the words quoted that indicates the imposition of a fiduciary duty upon a person who is himself a bona fide purchaser of units. Had an individual, owning a controlling interest in a condominium management corporation unconnected to the declarant, purchased the same number of units as Mr. Assaly, I cannot conceive of any voting issue being raised. I see no reason to treat Mr. Assaly differently from such a purchaser.

However, even if Mr. Assaly were subject to a fiduciary duty, it would not preclude his voting at meetings of unit holders. It would merely require that, in so doing, he vote in the interests of all unit holders, since it would be to all that he owed the duty, and not to a few. It is quite possible in this case that Mr. Assaly's interests correspond to those of the unit holders as a whole. There is no evidence of the views or interests of the unit holders as a group; the evidence merely indicates the opinion of some of the directors that Mr. Assaly would not vote in the interests of all unit holders.

Two potentially conflicting considerations are of importance in dealing with condominiums -- the first, that condominiums are creatures of statute, and courts should be cautious about reading into the statute rights and duties which the legislature did not see fit to include; and the second, that condominium corporations, unlike business corporations, are made up of individuals who make their homes in the premises operated by the corporation, or whose tenants do, and the fate of the corporation is of vital importance to them in their everyday lives. The efficient operation of the building is in Mr. Assaly's interests, as well as in the interests of the other owners.

It is my view, on the facts of this case, that Mr. Assaly does not owe a fiduciary duty to other unit holders, and can vote in any way he chooses as the bona fide purchaser of 53 residential units. However, in so stating, I wish to make it clear that, in assessing situations such as this, one must look carefully at the facts. For example, if Mr. Assaly had purchased sufficient units to effect control of shareholders' meetings, the court might take a different view of the issue of fiduciary duty.

(iii) Does Assaly Corp. owe a fiduciary duty to unit owners which prohibits it from voting at meetings of unit owners?

The appellant concedes that a fiduciary duty is owed by the Assaly Corp. as declarant with respect to unsold residential units. Assaly Corp. owns two residential units -- one obtained as a result of a breach of an agreement of purchase and sale by an investor, and the other by foreclosure under a mortgage held by it.

Section 51(1)(b) of the Act states:

51(1) Every agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain,

(b) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included in the property without delay other than any units mentioned in a statement under clause 54(1)(c) . . .

That provision does not cease to be effective merely because an agreement of purchase and sale has been aborted. The declarant continues to be bound by the deemed covenant to sell the unit involved "without delay". There can be no doubt on the facts of this case that the declarant has not fulfilled that covenant and, consequently, is subject to a fiduciary duty which precludes it from voting with respect to that unit other than in the interests of the unit owners as a whole.

Different considerations apply to the residential unit which was obtained as a result of mortgage foreclosure. Before Assaly Corp. took mortgage security over that unit, it had fulfilled the covenant to sell, and was no longer subject to any fiduciary obligation. Following default under the mortgage and subsequent foreclosure, it became owner not through its capacity as declarant, but as mortgagee; thus it would become a bona fide purchaser for value of the unit, and have the same right to vote as any other unit owner.

Commercial units, of which Assaly Corp. owns seven, are treated differently under the Act. The deemed covenant to sell under s. 51(1)(b) is limited specifically to residential units. The declaration does not stipulate that the commercial units be sold. On the contrary, purchasers of residential units would have been aware of the existence of commercial units, and should have anticipated the likelihood of their retention by the declarant for commercial rental purposes. I see no reason, pursuant to the statute or otherwise, why the declarant should not be at liberty to vote as owner of the commercial units.

(iv) Right of junior mortgagee to vote pursuant to s. 48 of the Act

Assaly Corp., at the time of trial, held virtually all second and third mortgages of the condominium units. As stated above, it is assumed for the purposes of these reasons that it held mortgage security over at least 15 per cent of the units, which entitled it, pursuant to s. 18(2) of the Act, to call a meeting of the owners of the condominium corporation at any time, subject only to the provisions of s. 48 of the Act, which reads:

48. Where a mortgage of a unit and common interest contains a provision that authorizes the mortgagee to exercise the right of the owner to vote or to consent, the mortgagee may exercise the right, and, where two or more such mortgages contain such a provision, the right may be exercised by the mortgagee who has priority.

The mortgages held by Assaly Corp. in this case do contain a provision authorizing the mortgagee of the unit to vote. The motions court judge concluded that Assaly Corp. was not entitled to vote the units over which it held mortgage security. In doing so, he stated: first, that he was following the decision of Philp J. in Keyes v. Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 876 (1990), 73 O.R. (2d) 368, 11 R.P.R. (2d) 169 (H.C.J.); second, that he was following the principles laid down in the decisions cited earlier in these reasons; and third, that the intent of the Act indicated that Assaly Corp. as mortgagee should not be entitled to vote.

The motions court judge did not elaborate on his second and third reasons. However, I find nothing in the cases referred to earlier which in any way clarifies the issue of a mortgagee's voting rights. Nor do I see anything in the Act which would indicate that a mortgagee, which also happens to be a declarant, is, therefore, precluded from exercising its statutory rights as mortgagee.

The issue of a mortgagee's right to vote was addressed by Philp J. in the Keyes case. He stated that the purpose of s. 48 of the Act was to protect the rights of mortgagees, who have an investment in the mortgaged units and, following the unreported decision of Krever J. in Mann v. Canada Mortgage & Housing Corp., Ont. H.C.J., released May 21, 1982, held that the right of the mortgagee to vote in no way depends upon default under the mortgage. I am in complete agreement with that portion of the decision in Keyes and the reasoning on which it is based.

Philp J. went on in Keyes to consider the rights of junior mortgagees to vote in a situation where a first mortgagee does not avail itself of the opportunity. On that issue, he stated, at p. 579 O.R., p. 181 R.P.R.:

The words of s. 48 speak only of the right being exercised by the mortgagee who has priority, which, in my view, would be the first mortgagee. There is no provision for the right to be transferred to a mortgagee with lesser priority in the event that the first mortgagee decides not to exercise its right to vote. As well, paragraph (c)(i), contained in all mortgages and reproduced above, contemplates the mortgagee giving the mortgagor notice if it does not intend to exercise its vote, thereby enabling the mortgagor to exercise the right to vote. If, therefore, the developer does not have the first mortgage, he will not have the right to exercise the vote contained in the second mortgage, in my view, according to s. 48.

While s. 48 is not as clear as one would like, I am unable to agree with Philp J.'s interpretation of it. There can be no doubt that the first part of the section, down to the words, "the mortgagee may exercise the right", gives to any mortgagee, whose mortgage document contains the appropriate authorization to vote, the right to exercise that vote if it wishes to do so. The ambiguity lies in the words, "where two or more such mortgages contain such a provision, the right may be exercised by the mortgagee who has priority". Section 22(1) permits only one vote per unit at a meeting of unit owners. Consequently, only one mortgagee could vote a unit regardless of the number of mortgages registered against it. The latter part of s. 48 is permissive, and allows the mortgagee with priority to vote if it wishes to. It does not, however, prohibit voting by junior mortgagees if the senior mortgagee does not wish to avail itself of its rights. To hold otherwise, would be to limit the opening part of s. 48 to first mortgagees only; but the wording of that part indicates no such limitation. If the opening part were specifically limited to first mortgagees, then the latter part would be redundant. In addition, to construe the section in that way would limit the rights of the mortgagee and mortgagor to contract for the assignment of the owner's right to vote. To effect such a result, the Act would have to do so in very clear terms. I am satisfied that the legislature had no such intent, and that the right of a mortgagee to vote a unit arises by virtue of its agreement with the unit owner. However, it can be exercised only within the terms of that agreement, and only if a prior mortgagee does not avail itself of its right to vote.

RESULT

In result, I am of the view that the appellants are entitled to declarations that:

- a) Thomas C. Assaly is entitled to vote at unit owners' meetings as owner of the 53 residential units registered in his name.
- b) Assaly Corp. is entitled to vote at unit owners' meetings as owner of seven commercial units and one residential unit. It is entitled to vote in a fiduciary capacity only with respect to the one residential unit it owns as a result of the aborted agreement of purchase and sale.
- c) Assaly Corp. is entitled to exercise its rights as mortgagee to vote at unit owners' meetings, within the terms of its mortgages, but only in situations where prior mortgagees do not avail themselves of their prior right to vote.

I should like to comment on a matter which I consider to have confused the issues in this appeal. The disputes between the parties arose at a meeting of directors of the condominium corporation, but the issues in the appeal deal with matters which do not involve directors at all, but involve the rights and duties of registered unit owners and mortgagees. There is no doubt that all directors must act at all times in the interests of the condominium corporation as a whole. Their position is the same as the position of a director of any other corporation, and nothing in the Act reduces their responsibilities. Unit owners, however, are in a position similar to that of shareholders of a corporation -- they act in their own personal interests unless something in the general law or in the Act requires them to do otherwise. In this case, the proposed purpose of the unit owners' meeting is to replace some of the directors. If that is done within the terms of the Act and of the declaration and by-laws of the corporation, there can be no complaint. However, once new directors are appointed, they owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation and not to any other individual or organization. If they fail in the exercise of that duty, they are subject to the full force of the law.

I would set aside the judgment below, and in its place give judgment in favour of the appellants in accordance with these reasons. The appellants are entitled to their costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

York Region Condominium Corp. No. 771 v. Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc.

Action No. RE1446/92

Ontario Court (General Division),
Rosenberg J.

August 28, 1992

The applicant was the condominium corporation of a condominium containing both residential and commercial units. The respondent owned a commercial unit where it operated a successful Chinese restaurant. Under the condominium declaration, the respondent was required to pay 6.0501 per cent of all common expenses. Under the declaration, common expenses included water or sewage charges unless separately metered for each unit. The corporation's first year budget stated that excessive water consumption by retail units would result in a charge back to the unit. After the condominium corporation incurred expenses for water usage far in excess of anticipated, it installed a separate meter for the restaurant and discovered that the operation of the restaurant used great amounts of water. The applicant sought an order requiring the respondent to pay for the excess consumption of water. To the respondent's argument that water was not separately metered for each unit, the applicant stated that this was both physically and economically impractical and that the respondent was not prejudiced since the rest of the units would pay their share after the water metered to the respondent.

The philosophy of a condominium development is that the common expense proportions cannot be examined under a microscope. It is only where there is flagrant excessive use that there should be an adjustment. The respondent was using almost twice what all of the other units together used and the separate metering was necessary to prevent an unjust enrichment or windfall to the respondent and an undue hardship to the balance of the unit owners. It would not make sense to force the condominium corporation to go through the expense of metering all other units.

York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 337, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 660, 29 R.P.R. 86 (C.A.), consd

APPLICATION for an order that the owner of a commercial condominium unit pay for excessive water consumption.

Jonathan H. Fine, for applicant.

David E. Wires, for respondent.

ROSENBERG J.:—

Nature of the application

The applicant, York Region Condominium Corporation No. 771 ("YRCC 771"), is a mixed use condominium corporation. The respondent is the owner of a commercial unit. The project contains both commercial units and residential units. The respondent operates a successful Chinese restaurant known as Bayview Gardens. In the course of the respondent's operation in food preparation and in other aspects of their operation they use an extraordinary amount of water. The applicant seeks to have a determination of whether or not the respondent is responsible for their metered water charges and if so requires an order that they pay these charges.

The project

The total project is composed of two buildings containing a total of 58 residential units and 45 commercial units together with parking, storage and locker units. There is a five-storey building, the commercial building, which fronts on Highway 7 and contains commercial and retail businesses. There is also a four-storey building, the residential building, which is located to the rear of the commercial building containing commercial and retail businesses on level 1 and residential units on levels 2, 3 and 4. The project is municipally known as 350 Kings Highway No. 7 East in the Town of Richmond Hill.

The respondent

The respondent is the owner of unit 1, level 1, and operates a Chinese food restaurant known as Bayview Gardens in the commercial building. By virtue of the declaration the respondent is required to pay 6.0501 per cent of all common expenses.

The problem

York Region Condominium Corporation (YRCC) 771 has incurred expenses for water usage far in excess of what should be the case. This has put the condominium corporation in a desperate financial position. At the time of the application there was $22,460.35 owing to the Town of Richmond Hill in respect of water and sewage charges which amount was overdue. The applicant was not in a financial position to pay the bill and the Town of Richmond Hill threatened to shut off the water service to the buildings if the bill was not paid immediately. This would work to the detriment of both the applicant and the respondent and at the hearing I suggested to the respondent that the sum of approximately $30,000 be advanced to the applicant by the respondent as a loan without prejudice to the respondent's rights pending my decision in this matter.

The budgeted amount for the first year of water charges for the total project was $30,000. The estimate by the applicant which is not disputed by the respondent is that the respondent's own usage for the first year resulted in charges of $57,293.74.

The reasons for the excessive water consumption

The respondent's restaurant contains approximately 250 seats and is quite successful. The respondent employs some 40 people on staff and the restaurant is open seven days per week. The respondent has its own special method of preparing food and in particular Chinese dried vegetables and seafood. One of the special methods consists of running water over the food and soaking it in water for hours at a time which makes the meat and seafood tender and tastier. This process continues throughout the day, starting with the dim sum preparation at 6:30 a.m. Running water over the food in this manner is a very important part of food preparation and the respondent attributes its success in part to this special method of food preparation. The respondent does not intend to change this practice.

In addition, all of the compressors for the respondent's walk-in coolers are cooled by water. This results in water running through the compressors 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Had the compressors been air cooled this water usage would not have occurred. In addition the restaurant dishwasher is in use constantly throughout the day.

The restaurant also has the normal water use such as water to their customers, hot tea in teapots, cleaning and cooking and steaming of food, etc.

The discovery of the respondent's excess water use

The Town of Richmond Hill required that one bulk meter for water consumption be installed and it was up to the condominium to install check meters if necessary to measure individual consumption.

Shortly after the Bayview Gardens restaurant began operating in the fall of 1990, YRCC 771 noticed a dramatic increase in the amount of the water bills. After installing a check meter to monitor and determine the Bayview Gardens restaurant's individual usage, YRCC 771 discovered that most of the water which YRCC 771 was being charged, was used by the Bayview Gardens restaurant.

The condominium documents

The first year's budget of the condominium corporation distributed to purchasers of the condominium units including the respondent contained the following note in reference to the estimate of the $30,000 for the first year's water and sewage charges.

Water

Represents the cost of water for normal household requirements and for normal requirements for cooling Condominium Corporation. Any excessive consumption by any Retail Unit will result in a back-charge being effected by the Condominium Corporation to such Retail Unit.

(Emphasis added)

The condominium corporation is now asking the court to require the respondent who owns a retail unit which has an excessive consumption of water to pay for such excess.

The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 as amended, s. 1(1) (h) defines common expenses as follows:

(h) "common expenses" means the expenses of the performance of the objects and duties of a corporation and any expenses specified as common expenses in this Act or in a declaration . . .

The schedule to the declaration provides the following:

Common expenses shall include the following:

All sums of money levied or charged to the condominium corporation on account of any or all public and private supplies of insurance coverage, taxes, utilities and services including without limiting the generality of the foregoing. Levies or charges for

.....

(iii) water or sewage unless separately metered for each unit.

The respondent points out that water has not been "separately metered for each unit" but only for its unit and a few other retail units and therefore the common expenses include water and sewage by virtue of the wording of the declaration. The applicant responds by pointing out that it is impractical both physically and economically to have a separate meter for each of the units in the building and that as far as the respondent is concerned the respondent is in no different position than if all of the units were separately metered since the rest of the units are willing to pay their share of the water in full after the water metered to the respondent is paid for by the respondent.

In the case of York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 337, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 660 (C.A.), the court was considering a dispute between two condominium corporations. The recreation facilities were common and shared by the two corporations. The corporations by agreement shared the cost of repairs. There was a structural deficiency and the original developer was being sued with regard to the structural deficiency in the recreation facilities. The recreation facilities, however, required that money be spent on them so that they could be used and the one corporation refused to pay its share of the cost on the grounds that it did not come within the language of its obligation to "repair". Cory J.A. (as he then was) in determining that the cost of correcting the structural deficiencies should be paid and in finding in favour of the applicant stated as follows [pp. 340-41 O.R., pp. 663-64 D.L.R.]:

As far as possible and with due regard for the particular mutual covenants of the individual owners the courts should bring a broad and equitable approach to the resolution of their problems.

Although this case does not deal with individual condominium owners within a single condominium, it is concerned with the relationship between two condominium corporations which form integral parts of a composite plan for condominium living. The development plan contemplated the mutual enjoyment and use of the pool by the occupants of both condominium corporations. The mutual enjoyment of a facility calls for a mutual obligation of repair.

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

I agree with the approach suggested by these reasons. It would not make sense to force the condominium corporation to go through the expense of metering all other units separately to collect the amount attributable to the excessive water use of the respondent.

The respondent's main contention in opposition to the application was that if it paid the full metered water cost to its premises that it would also be paying as part of its common expense payment a portion of the water consumption of other unit holders. The respondent also argued that it pays for its own waste disposal and therefore is paying not only its own cost of waste disposal but some part of the cost of waste disposal of other unit owners and that a similar argument applied with regard to gas and power.

The philosophy of a condominium development is that the common expense proportions cannot be examined under a microscope. The persons occupying a unit on the first floor cannot avoid any cost of the elevator because they don't use it. Similarly, a family with a large number of members may use a lot more of the utilities than a single person. Different retail units have different requirements of various services in the condominium. It is not until there is a flagrant excessive use such as the present one that there should be an adjustment. If this unit owner were using eight per cent or even 15 per cent of the total water usage of the condominium corporation an adjustment would not be required. However, this unit owner is using almost twice what all of the other units together use and the separate metering becomes necessary to prevent an unjust enrichment or windfall to the respondent and an undue hardship to the balance of the unit owners.

The argument by the respondent that there should be deducted from the amount payable by it for water metered to its own unit therefore fails. Some of the other water is used for the respondent's benefit including watering the lawn and cooling water to go into its air conditioning system.

Similarly with garbage it should not be necessary to determine whether a scrap of paper or a can came from its premises or somewhere else. The general expenses of the condominium corporation should be shared in the proportion specified in the declaration even though this may not be the precise proportion in which the unit owners benefit from these expenses.

It was argued that since the water is being metered to the respondent's premises, they should have as a credit their share of the water charges included in the common expenses that they pay. However, the response to this, which I accept, is that they are deriving benefit from the balance of the water in the total condominium. Similarly electric charges and waste disposal are common expenses of the total project and should be continued to be shared by the respondent even if the respondent might establish by a detailed analysis that after paying for their own they do not receive a six per cent benefit from the water, electric, gas and waste disposal included in the common expenses.

The figures that I have in the factum do not exactly correspond to the metering and if the parties cannot agree on the amount to be repaid by the respondent to the condominium corporation and on the question of interest and costs I will accept written submissions. Judgment accordingly.

Order accordingly.

Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (Ont. C.A.)

1 O.R. (3d) 513 15 R.P.R. (2d) 113

Ontario Court of Appeal McKinlay, Griffiths and Carthy JJ.A. February 11, 1991

Real property -- Condominiums -- Purchase of interest in partnership -- Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act -- Whether applicable.

Appeal from an order holding that the appellants must register condominium projects under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. In order to provide tax deferrals, the agreements of purchase and sale provided for the purchase of an interest in a limited partnership at a price related to the value of a chosen condominium unit. The investor obtained the right to obtain title to the unit once the condominium was registered and the unit had been rented. The trial judge held that a sale occurred when the agreement between the limited partnership and an investor was signed. As these agreements were signed prior to construction, the condominium was not previously occupied and the Act applied.

HELD: Appeal allowed. The agreement with the limited partnership did not make an investor the beneficial owner of a condominium unit. The agreement gave an interest in a limited partnership but there was no real estate to which the agreement could attach. The option to obtain title only became an interest in land after registration and rental of the unit. At that time the investor's interest was irrelevant, because the Act had no application to property previously occupied. The essence of the agreement was a tax deferral. The agreement was not an agreement to sell a condominium unit within the meaning of the Act.

Action No. RE 1199/90

ONTARIO
High Court of Justice
Philp J.

June 18, 1990.

S. Inc. was the developer of a condominium. S. Inc. held 92 vendor-take-back mortgages. The mortgages contained a clause providing that:

The Chargee is hereby irrevocably authorized and empowered to exercise the right of the Chargor as an Owner of the said lands to vote or to consent or to not vote or to refuse to consent in all matters relating to the affairs of the said Corporation without in any way consulting the Chargor in the manner in which the vote shall be exercised or not exercised and without incurring any liability to the owner or anyone else because of the manner in which such vote or right to consent in the affairs of the Corporation was exercised or not exercised.

Unit holders in the condominium who leased their units to third parties were required to enter into a management agreement with J.R.H. Paragraph 12 of the management agreement stated:

The Manager is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the right of the Owner ... to vote or to consent in all matters relating to the affairs of the Condominium and the Manager shall be entitled to exercise such right to vote or consent unless the Owner gives prior written notice of his intention to exercise such rights in respect of any specific meeting of members of the Condominium, at least 48 hours prior to such meeting.

When S. Inc. no longer owned the majority of the units in the condominium, a meeting ("the turn-over meeting") was called pursuant to s. 26(1) of the Condominium Act to elect a new board of directors. Prior to the meeting, J.R.H. wrote to the over 200 absentee owners who had entered into the management agreement advising them that they were obligated to provide J.R.H. with a signed proxy which would be exercised on their behalf. Neither the letter nor the enclosed proxy form mentioned the owner's right to give 48 hours' notice of his intention to exercise his own vote at any specific meeting. Fifty-one owners returned executed proxies in favour of J.R.H., although seven of those were subsequently revoked and ten more were from owners who had authorized their mortgagee to exercise their voting rights. Notice was also sent to all mortgagors advising them that S. Inc. intended to vote on behalf of the mortgagors at the meeting.

The applicants challenged the validity of the 34 proxies given to J.R.H. and the validity of the reservation of voting rights clause contained in the mortgages. They obtained an order enjoining the respondents from holding the turn-over meeting pending resolution of those issues.

1. A person holding a proxy is merely an agent acting for the person giving the proxy and as such, is subject to the instructions of the giver, who may withdraw his or her authority at any time. While the proxy signed by the absentee owners was a proper one, the condition which J.R.H. attempted to put upon its withdrawal could not be upheld. If an owner attended at any meeting intending to vote, his attendance superseded the proxy he gave to J.R.H. J.R.H. apparently acknowledged that right, but its acknowledgment was not communicated to the absentee owners. J.R.H. had a positive duty to communicate with all absentee owners to advise them of their rights to attend the turn-over meeting and to vote regardless of any proxy signed by them. If J.R.H. did not send this notice, it could not exercise the proxy given to it because of the misleading portion of paragraph 12 of the management agreement.

2. The authority for the reservation of voting rights clause in the mortgages was found in s. 48 of the Act, which provides that where a mortgage of a unit contains a provision that authorizes the mortgagee to exercise the right of an owner to vote or to consent, the mortgagee may exercise the right. It was not necessary that the mortgage be in default before S. Inc. could exercise the right to vote. Section 48 was clear and unambiguous and made no mention of such a precondition. Any inconsistency between s. 48 and s. 26(1) could be rationalized. Section 48 was enacted for the protection of the mortgagee. S. Inc. had a substantial financial investment in the condominium by reason of the mortgages given back to it and should not be denied the protection provided by s. 48 merely because it was the developer of the condominium.

Section 48 provides for the exercise of voting rights only by the mortgagee who has priority, i.e., the first mortgagee. There is no provision for the right to be transferred to a mortgagee with lesser priority in the event that the first mortgagee decides not to exercise its right to vote. If S. Inc. does not have the first mortgage, it will not have the right to exercise the vote contained in the second mortgage.

Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219

APPLICATION challenging validity of proxies given by condominium unit owners to developer and of reservation of voting rights clause in mortgages given by unit owners to developer.

Patricia M. Conway, for applicants.

Allan Sternberg, for respondents.

PHILP J.:— The issue before the court on this application and cross-application involves the validity of, first, proxies given by owners of condominium units to the respondent, J.R.H. Real Estate Ltd. (J.R.H.), pursuant to a management agreement between J.R.H. and the unit holders and, secondly, reservation of a voting-rights clause contained in the mortgages given by owners of condominium units to the respondent developers, Strasscorp Holdings Inc. (Strasscorp).

Strasscorp developed a highrise condominium at 1001 Bay Street in Toronto containing 564 residential units. On February 23, 1990, the respondent, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation 876 (M.T.C.C. 876) was created by the registration of the declaration and description required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. At that time, Strasscorp was still the registered owner of all the units in the building and, accordingly, controlled the initial board of directors. During the week of April 2, 1990, title to over 400 units was transferred from Strasscorp to purchasers and, by April 4, Strasscorp no longer owned the majority of the units. Accordingly, pursuant to s. 26(1) of the Act, M.T.C.C. 876, by an April 25 letter to all registered owners, called a meeting to elect a new board of directors. The date of the meeting, commonly called the "turn-over meeting", was set for May 16, within the 21 days required by s. 26(1).

On the day called for the meeting, May 16, the applicants obtained an order from Mr. Justice McKeown enjoining the respondents from holding the meeting pending resolution of the above-mentioned issues concerning the validity of the proxies and the reservation of voting-rights clause. No notice of motion for a restraining order was given to the respondents nor their solicitors, who were known to the applicants' solicitors at that time. The solicitors for the respondents were advised of the order after 5 p.m. The meeting had been scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Needless to say, it did not proceed. Counsel for the respondents argues that the without-notice motion was not necessary and should not have been brought. It has caused the respondents considerable expense to postpone the arrangements that had been made. I curtailed argument on this objection in order to focus on the more important issues which I will now discuss. If necessary, I shall allow further argument on this objection, as well as the question of costs, at a later date.

Issue 1 -- Validity of proxies given to J.R.H.

The units in 1001 Bay Street were marketed and presold beginning in the spring of 1986. Purchasers, under the terms of their agreements of purchase and sale, agreed to occupy their respective units in person from the interim occupancy date when the units were substantially complete. This took place around the spring of 1988. They also agreed not to sell, transfer or assign their agreement of purchase and sale without the consent of the vendor, which consent could be arbitrarily withheld. Some purchasers preferred not to occupy their units but, rather, to lease them to third parties. The consent of Strasscorp to do this could only be obtained if the purchasers agreed to enter into a management agreement with J.R.H., the president of which was one Henry S. Strasser whose listed address is the same as the address of Alexander Strasser, the president and only director of Strasscorp. The only other director of J.R.H. is listed as Jane M. James.

The terms of the management agreement include paragraph 12, which reads as follows:

12. (a) The manager is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the right of the Owner, as an owner of the Property, to vote or to consent in all matters relating to the affairs of the Condominium and the Manager shall be entitled to exercise such right to vote or consent unless the Owner gives prior written notice of his intention to exercise such rights in respect of any specific meeting of members of the Condominium, at least 48 hours prior to such meeting.

(b) This authorization is being given to the Manager, subject to any rights to vote or consent held by any mortgagee(s) of any mortgage(s) held on the Property.

(c) The manager shall not be responsible to the Owner for the exercise of the right to vote or consent, or for any failure to exercise such right, nor shall the Manager be under any obligation to vote or consent.

(d) The Owner shall, upon acquiring title to the Property, execute a proxy in favour of the Manager in the form specified or provided by the Manager, in respect of the Owner's right to vote or consent either generally or for any specific meeting, forthwith upon the request of the Manager.

On April 17, 1990, J.R.H. wrote to each of the over 200 absentee owners that entered into the management agreement advising them that they were "obligated to provide J.R.H. with a signed proxy which we will exercise on your behalf ". They were told to fill out the enclosed proxy form and send it back without delay. Neither the letter, nor the enclosed proxy form, mentions the owner's right to give 48 hours' notice of his intention to exercise his own vote at any specific meeting. The form attached to the letter appoints the manager of J.R.H. to be the proxy of the registered owner to vote on the owner's behalf "at any meeting of members of MTCC 876". Fifty-one owners returned executed proxies in favour of J.R.H., of which seven subsequently revoked their proxies intending to attend and vote at the turn-over meeting. Ten of the 51 proxies were from owners who had authorized their mortgagee to exercise their voting rights. Accordingly, there are only 34 proxies with which we are concerned in this issue. An additional 51 owners replied that they intended to attend and vote at the turn-over meeting.

The material before me also indicated that, in any event, J.R.H. did not intend, nor did it ever intend, to act on any proxy given by an owner who attends the turn-over meeting, or any other meeting, and indicates a preference to exercise his or her vote personally.

The law is clear that a person holding a proxy is merely an agent acting for the person giving the proxy and, as such, is subject to the instructions of the giver, who may withdraw his or her authority at any time. See Cousins v. International Brick Co., [1931] 2 Ch. 90 (C.A.), at p. 102, where Lawrence L.J. said:

Every proxy is subject to an implied condition that it should only be used if the shareholder is unable or finds it inconvenient to attend the meeting. The proxy is merely the agent of the shareholder, and as between himself and his principal is not entitled to act contrary to the instructions of the latter.

The proxy signed by the 51 absentee owners is a proper one. The difficulty arises from the attempt by J.R.H. to put a condition upon its withdrawal. In my view, the condition cannot be upheld. If the owner attends at any meeting intending to vote, his attendance supersedes the proxy he gave to J.R.H. J.R.H. has apparently acknowledged this right, but their acknowledgment has not been communicated to the absentee owners. While I find the proxy to be valid, the lack of proper advice being conveyed to the owner creates a positive duty upon J.R.H. to communicate with all absentee owners to advise them of their rights to attend the turn-over meeting and to vote regardless of any proxy signed by them. If this notice is not sent by J.R.H., it is my order that it cannot exercise the proxy given to it because of the misleading portion of paragraph 12 of the management agreement; nor can it exercise any right purported to be given to it under paragraph 12(1).

Issue 2 -- Validity of the reservation-of-rights clause contained in the mortgage

The agreements of purchase and sale entered into by the owners and the developer all provide for several options to finance the purchase. The purchaser, after payment of a deposit, can give back to the vendor/developer on closing a first mortgage for a specified amount to be repayable on demand. As an alternative, the purchaser may assume a first mortgage to be arranged by the vendor and give back a second mortgage to the vendor for a specified amount, to be repayable on demand. The third option, of course, is to pay cash. The material before me indicates that at least two of the applicants in this case paid the full price on closing.

The agreements of purchase and sale all contain the following clause:

The mortgage may provide an assignment to the Mortgagee of the Purchaser's right to vote at all meetings of members of the condominium corporation provided that nothing herein contained, including the exercise by the Mortgagee of the right to vote, shall render the Mortgagee as a mortgagee in possession, any right to vote assigned to the Mortgagee does not entail any representation, express or implied, that the Mortgagee shall be in any way responsible to protect the interest of the Mortgagor, and the Mortgagee shall not be responsible for any exercise of the right to vote or any failure to exercise the right to vote.

The final count appears to be that the developer, Strasscorp, holds 92 vendor-take-back first mortgages and 66 vendor-take-back second mortgages behind C.I.B.C. Mortgage Corporation's first mortgages. All mortgages (including the C.I.B.C. first mortgages) contain the following clause relating to the exercise of the right to vote:

(C) The Chargee is hereby irrevocably authorized and empowered to exercise the right of the Chargor as an Owner of the said lands to vote or to consent or to not vote or to refuse to consent in all matters relating to the affairs of the said Corporation without in any way consulting the Chargor in the manner in which the vote shall be exercised or not exercised and without incurring any liability to the owner or anyone else because of the manner in which such vote or right to consent in the affairs of the Corporation was exercised or not exercised and provided that:

(i) The Chargee may at any time or from time to time give notice in writing to the Chargor and the said Condominium Corporation that the Chargee does not intend to exercise the said right to vote or consent and in that event, until the Chargee revokes the said notice, the Chargor may exercise the right to vote. Any such notice may be for an indeterminate period of time or for a limited period of time or for a specific meeting or manner.

(ii) The Chargee shall not by virtue of the assignment to the Chargee of the rights to vote or consent, be under any obligation to vote or consent or to protect the interests of the mortgagor or to give the notice contemplated by clause (i) above.

(iii) The exercise of the rights to vote or consent shall not constitute the Chargee a Mortgagee in possession.

The material indicates that Strasscorp subsequently allowed the demand mortgages held by it to be extended for a period of six months before demand is made.

On May 9, a notice in accordance with s. 20(3) was sent to all mortgagors over the signature of Strasscorp and C.I.B.C. advising the mortgagors that Strasscorp and C.I.B.C. intended to vote on behalf of the mortgagors at the turn-over meeting to be held on May 16. The notice refers only to the mortgages given to Strasscorp and, subsequently, "transferred to C.I.B.C.". I take that to mean only the first and second demand mortgages taken back by Strasscorp on closing, totalling 158 mortgages. The authority for the reservation of voting-rights clause in the mortgagees is found in s. 48 of the Act, which reads as follows:

48. Where a mortgage of a unit and common interest contains a provision that authorizes the mortgagee to exercise the right of the owner to vote or to consent, the mortgagee may exercise the right, and, where two or more such mortgages contain such a provision, the right may be exercised by the mortgagee who has priority.

Counsel for the applicants submits that Strasscorp, as the developer of the condominium, cannot exercise the owner's right to vote, in spite of the clause contained in the mortgage, for the following alternative reasons:

1. The mortgagee's right to vote can only be exercised if the mortgage is in default.

2. Even if that proposition cannot be upheld, s. 48 must be interpreted to exclude the developer as a mortgagee for the purposes of the turn-over meeting. If the mortgagee in s. 48 includes the developer, then the section would defeat the intent and purpose of the Act and, particularly, s. 26, which provides for the take-over meeting.

3. In any event, s. 48 provides that where there are two or more mortgages containing the same reservation of voting rights provision, "the right may be exercised by the mortgagee who has priority".

I shall deal with each of these propositions.

1. The purpose of the Act is to protect owners of condominiums, she argues, and s. 48 is inconsistent with that intent. The protection given by the section to mortgagees is only needed if the mortgager is in default. She cites the case of Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Ltd. v. Don-Com Venture Capital Corp. (1983), 44 O.R. (2d) 218, 24 B.L.R. 192, 30 R.P.R. 284 (Co. Ct.), a judgment of the Hon. Judge West, in support of this argument. In that case, Judge West held that a proxy granted by an owner of a unit within a condominium corporation and expressed to be irrevocable was invalid. In that case, the agreement of purchase and sale provided that, as part of the consideration of the purchase of the unit, the purchaser agreed to irrevocably grant to the plaintiff the right to vote at all meetings of unit owners and to deliver on closing a proxy to that effect. The reservation of voting rights by the developer-vendor was contained in the transfer of title to the unit to the purchaser. It reserved to the developer-vendor the purchaser's right to vote at all meetings of owners. In addition, a proxy was executed and delivered by the purchaser on closing. The proxy was expressed to be irrevocable without the prior consent of the vendor. The learned judge reviewed the meaning of proxy as being merely the agent of the shareholder who makes the appointment. He refers to the quotation made by Lawrence L.J. in Cousins v. International Brick Co., supra, referred to above. In that case, the articles of association provided for votes to be given personally or by proxy. If given by proxy, it cannot be revoked except by a notice in writing received by the company before the meeting at which the proxy to be exercised is held. Luxmoore J., on p. 95, said:

The right of the shareholder to vote in person must, in my judgment, and in the absence of any special contract between himself and the company expressly precluding the right to vote in person where a proxy has been validly given, be paramount to the right of the proxy to vote in respect of the shares in question.

On appeal, Lord Hanworth M.R., on p. 101, stated that "[i]n the absence of clear words taking away the shareholder's personal right to vote after he has put in force the proxy system, that personal right remains and the shareholder is able to attend and give his own vote accordingly to his own volition and the proxy has no right to prevent it".

In the Sanrose case, supra, Judge West found that the proxy given to the plaintiff (developer) by the defendant (purchaser) and expressed to be irrevocable without the consent of the plaintiff, was not enforceable against the defendant. In his view, if the defendant chose to attend the meeting, the right of the plaintiff to act as its proxy is superseded. That case dealt with the reservation of the right to vote being contained in the transfer of title. In the case at bar, the reservation is contained either in a management agreement or in the mortgage given back to the vendor, or to the C.I.B.C. Mortgage Corporation. The reservation contained in the management agreement is analogous with Sanrose and I agree with Judge West's reasoning that it cannot prevent the owner from attending at the meeting and exercising his or her vote and thereby supersede the proxy given to the realty company. I have already expressed this opinion above.

The reservation in the mortgage in the case at bar, however, is expressly allowed by statute and, in my view, therefore comes within the exception referred to by Luxmoore J. at trial and Lord Hanworth M.R., on appeal in the Cousins case, supra.

Judge West, in obiter in Sanrose, supra, suggests that s. 48 allows the mortgagee to exercise the voting rights of the owner if it provides for such rights in the mortgage, and then only if the mortgage is in default, so that there would be no separation of ownership of a unit from ownership of the common interest in keeping with s. 7(5) of the Act. Section 7(5) of the Act states that: "The ownership of a unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interest, and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a unit from a common interest is void."

Judge West reasons that the reservation contained in the transfer of title of the voting rights of the owners effectively frustrates the owner's right to vote, and hence, separates the ownership in the common elements, which can only be exercised through voting. If, however, the mortgagor defaults in payments under the mortgage, then the mortgagee will become the legal owner of the unit and no separation of interest would occur. With great respect, I cannot agree with this reasoning. In my view, s. 7(5) contemplates a potential separation of ownership by transfer of title which may result in the owner losing his right to use the common elements, thereby destroying his enjoyment of his ownership in the unit. The giving of its voting rights to a mortgagee does not, in my opinion, separate the owner's interest in the common interests. In any event, Judge West's comments concerning s. 48 are obiter, since the instrument reserving the right to vote in Sanrose was the transfer of title and not the mortgage and s. 48 has no application.

In the unreported decision of Mann v. Canada Mortgage & Housing Corp. of Mr. Justice Krever, Ont. H.C.J., dated May 21, 1982, Krever J. stated, in considering s. 48 of the Act, as follows:

I cannot ... accept the submission that section 48 is limited in such a way that it only applies where the mortgage is in default. The section contemplates a mortgage containing the terms the mortgages in question before me do contain and I therefore say that there is nothing in the statute that inhibits the parties from contracting in the way that they did. I am obliged to give the statute a large and liberal interpretation by reason of the provisions of the Interpretation Act and it seems to me that section 48 was enacted in order that the rights of the mortgagee might be protected.

Subject to what I may say later concerning the last clause of the section dealing with two or more mortgages, I find that the wording of s. 48 is clear and unambiguous and the plain meaning of it does not include a mortgage that is in default. If the legislation had intended that the exercise of the right to vote by the mortgagee could only take effect if the mortgage was in default, it would have so provided. I conclude therefore that the applicants' first proposition to read in mortgage in default must fail.

2. Counsel for the applicants submits that the Condominium Act is consumer protection legislation and should be interpreted in that light. The plain wording of s. 48, she argues, is inconsistent with the general intent of the Act to protect the condominium owner and, particularly, s. 26. By including the developer as a mortgagee in s. 48, the clear intention of s. 26(1) is subverted. Section 26(1) reads as follows:

26(1) The board elected at a time when the declarant owns a majority of the units shall, not more than twenty-one days after the declarant ceases to be the registered owner of a majority of the units, call a meeting of the owners to elect a new board, and such meeting shall be held within twenty-one days after the calling of the meeting.

The clear intention of this section, she argues, is to take the control of the condominium out of the hands of the developer when he no longer owns a majority of the units and put it into the hands of the unit owners. By ceasing to be the registered owner of a majority of the units, the section implies that he also loses voting control which should pass, at that time, to the owners. If he retains the majority vote by reason of a reservation clause in mortgages, as allowed by s. 48, then the purpose of s. 26 cannot be carried out. The developer would retain control and there would be no turn-over as contemplated by the section.

While I agree that there appears to be an inconsistency between s. 48 and s. 26, it can be rationalized. Section 48 is enacted for the protection of the mortgagee, whoever he, she or it might be. In this case, the developer has a substantial financial investment in the condominium by reason of the 158 mortgages given back to it by the various owners. He, therefore, should not be denied the protection provided by s. 48 merely because he is the developer of the condominium. Section 26, on the other hand, specifically requires the developer to turn over to the new board elected at the meeting all the records, documents and instruments listed in s. 26(3), as well as an audited financial statement, within 60 days of the meeting [s. 26(4)]. The Act in several sections places duties and obligations upon the developer which he must carry out by reason of the Act, regardless of the number of votes that he may have acquired by reason of the mortgages which he holds. Section 17 of the Act may also give assistance in preventing a conflict of interest between the developer and the corporation affecting the management of the corporation. Section 49 requires the performance of any duty imposed by the Act and provides for a remedy by application to a District Court.

In any event, as I stated above, the meaning of s. 48 is clear. If the Legislature had intended that a mortgage given back to a developer should be excluded from the right to exercise the owner's vote or consent, it would have so provided.

I cannot, therefore, agree with the applicants' second proposition.

3. The latter portion of s. 48 provides that where two or more mortgages contain a reservation of voting rights, "the right may be exercised by the mortgagee who has priority". Ms. Conway argues that this clause means that C.I.B.C. Mortgage Corporation, which holds the first mortgage, has the priority and the right to exercise the vote, if it wishes to do so. The wording does not leave it open for the second mortgage in priority to receive the right in the event that the first mortgagee declines to exercise it. Mr. Sternberg, on the other hand, argues that the clause should be interpreted to mean that if there are more than one mortgage, the right to vote will devolve down from the mortgagee with the highest priority to ones below if the first mortgagee declines to exercise its right. In any event, he argues, the right to vote does not belong to the unit owner or the mortgagor. It has been transferred to the mortgagee by reason of the reservation clause contained in the mortgage, he argues. No cases have been cited to me to support either side of this argument and I must look, therefore, at the wording of the section. The Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, provides that every Act shall be deemed to be remedial and I must give the section such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act, according to its true intent, meaning and spirit.

The words of s. 48 speak only of the right being exercised by the mortgagee who has priority, which, in my view, would be the first mortgagee. There is no provision for the right to be transferred to a mortgagee with lesser priority in the event that the first mortgagee decides not to exercise its right to vote. As well, paragraph (c)(i), contained in all mortgages and reproduced above, contemplates the mortgagee giving the mortgagor notice if it does not intend to exercise its vote, thereby enabling the mortgagor to exercise the right to vote. If, therefore, the developer does not have the first mortgage, he will not have the right to exercise the vote contained in the second mortgage, in my view, according to s. 48.

In my view, therefore, the reservation-of-rights clause contained in the mortgage is valid.

I, therefore, conclude that, according to my calculations, Strasscorp will have 92 votes by reason of the first mortgages held by it, plus 35 votes by reason of the 35 units still owned by it and, indirectly, the 34 proxies held by J.R.H., unless the owners of the units attend the meeting and exercise their right to vote.

In view of the need to submit further argument concerning the ex parte order obtained by the applicants and the issue of costs, the date of the turn-over meeting, which had tentatively been set for July 5, should be held in abeyance. I will be happy to discuss this further with counsel, preliminarily at any rate, by conference telephone call.

Order accordingly.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 776 v. Gifford

Between

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776,

John R. Gifford and Marion M. Gifford, Respondents

Action No. M176258/89

Ontario District Court - York Judicial District

Toronto, Ontario

Herold D.C.J.

October 11, 1989

Jay J. Roy, for the Applicant.

Paul H. Reinhardt, for the Respondents.

 HEROLD D.C.J.:— John R. Gifford and his wife, Marion, reside in Suite 210, 955 Millwood Road, Toronto, a five-storey condominium project containing 106 units for seniors, in East York. The condominium is registered as Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776.

John Gifford served overseas during the Second World War and suffered a disabling stroke in 1971. Since 1971 he has been almost totally confined to a wheelchair and for the past six years he has relied upon "Chien," his 15-lb. poodle for companionship and therapeutic and emotional support.

Last year John and Marion moved into their new condominium apartment and this year they were instructed by the Board of Directors to remove the dog. The Board of Directors has candidly acknowledged that if anyone's personal situation deserves some sympathetic attention it is that of Mr. Gifford's and the Board has also acknowledged that at no time has there ever been any complaint that the dog in its behaviour or cleanliness has ever posed a problem or been a nuisance.

The Declaration of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776 deals with animals in connection with individual units at Article III.1(e) and in connection with the common elements at Article IV.5. Articles III.1(e) and IV.5 provide as follows:

(i) Article III.1(e) provides:

"No animal, livestock, or fowl of any kind other than:

(i) a "dog guide" as defined by The Blind Persons' Rights Act; or

(ii) a pet, being one cat; caged birds except for pigeons; tropical fish; and small caged animals usually considered to be pets shall be kept or allowed in any unit.

No animal, which is deemed by the board, in its absolute discretion, to be a nuisance shall be kept by any owner in the unit. Such owner shall, within two (2) weeks of receipt of a written notice from the board requesting removal of such animal, permanently remove such animal from the property. No breeding of animals for sale shall be carried on, in, or around any unit."

(ii) Article IV.5 provides:

"Animals - No animals, livestock, or fowl or any kind other than:

(a) a "dog guide" as defined by The Blind Persons' Rights Act; or

(b) a pet, being one cat; caged birds except for pigeons; tropical fish; and small caged animals usually considered to be shall be kept or allowed upon the common elements, unless being carried or on a leash excluding those parts thereof, of which any owner has the exclusive use. No animal that is deemed by the board in its absolute discretion to be a nuisance shall be kept by an owner on the common elements. Such owner shall, within two (2) weeks of receipt of a written notice from the board requesting removal of such animal, permanently remove such animal from the property. An owner shall immediately pick up and dispose of all dropping of his pet. No animal will be permitted on such parts of the common elements as may be designated from time to time by the board or the Manager."

There is no issue about the fact that the dog in question is not a "dog guide" nor is there an issue with respect to the fact that the owners were notified to remove the dog and have to refused to do so.

Pursuant to s. 12(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. (1980) the Board of Directors has a duty to effect compliance by the unit owners with the Act and the Corporation's Declaration, by-laws and rules. The Board of Directors has no discretion in this regard. Where the Board attempts to enforce the Declaration and the unit owner refuses to comply the Corporation itself or any owner or person having a registered unit mortgage may apply to the District Court for an order requiring compliance and pursuant to Paragraph 49(2) of the Act:

49(2) "The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances."

Both parties acknowledge that the Court therefore has a discretion as to whether or not to enforce compliance with the Declaration, by-laws and rules but of course such discretion must be exercised judiciously.

In order to understand and appreciate the factors which must be considered in determining how the discretion is to be exercised some additional background information is necessary. Unlike many condominium corporations, this particular condominium was not simply a developer's plan and a developer's opinion as to what is good and what is not, finding its way into a Declaration. Rather, it is my understanding that perhaps 70% of the 154 occupants in the building were members of or associated with a senior citizens group which call itself "Stay-at-home-in-Leaside." These people saw a need for a senior citizens condominium project; a nucleus of the group had close dealings with the developer throughout all stages of the project. In particular the group had input into the building design and the condominium documents, including the Declaration and by-laws.

It has been stated by the Applicants and not disputed that the prohibition which is found against dogs was a provision which was purposely included in the Declaration with the prior knowledge, consent and approval of the seniors group.

Mr. and Mrs. Gifford were not members of the original group but purchased their unit as it were, on the open market. They were, apparently, advised prior to closing, by a real estate agent representing the condominium developer that small dogs were permitted. The Giffords were advised by their solicitor of the provisions of the Declaration prohibiting dogs. Apparently they concluded, incorrectly, as it turns out, that the representations made to them by the agent for the vendor were accurate and they elected to close the transaction in the face of the written Declaration. The Giffords argue that this representation made by the agent representing the condominium corporation at the time the project was being sold is a major factor that ought to be taken into account in determining whether or not the Court's discretion should be exercised in their favour at this time.

The Giffords also argue that the provision in the condominium Declaration prohibiting dogs other than seeing-eye dogs, and possibly the provision of the Condominium Act which enables the corporation to pass such Declarations and by-laws are contrary to the Ontario Human Rights Code. In other words, they argue that permitting a blind person to have a guide dog in the building but not permitting other persons who are ill or disabled to have a dog discriminates against the latter. The Giffords were not of the opinion that blind persons should be refused the right to have their guide dog in the building --rather, they suggested that because they are so permitted that others should be permitted as well.

The Condominium Corporation argued that while many cases can be made to justify giving serious consideration to an exception to the Declaration, by-laws and rules, to accede to such requests would create uncertainty and havoc whereas to maintain a firmness in enforcing the Declaration and by-laws as the Condominium Act requires them to do puts everyone on an equal footing and lets everyone know exactly where they stand in relation to the corporation and in relation to each other. The condominium corporation argues that this is a most desirable state of affairs particularly in a building comprised mainly of seniors, many of whom would like to make an exception in his or her particular case with respect to certain of the Declaration, by-laws or rules.

I intend to deal first with the human rights issue and thereafter with the manner in which I feel my discretion should be exercised in this case.

I have reviewed in detail the Blind Persons' Rights Act, R.S.O. (1980) C. 44 and Human Rights Code, Statutes of Ontario, 1981, C. 53, and the cases cited by counsel. Counsel for the Giffords argues that pursuant to s. 46(2) of the Human Rights Code, the Code prevails over the Declaration. In fact, s. 46(2) only provides that it prevails over an Act or Regulation unless the Act or Regulation specifically provides that it is to apply notwithstanding the Code. The Declaration is neither an Act nor a Regulation of the Legislature and as such, s. 42 does not apply.

It was conceded for the purposes of argument and if it had not been I would have found that Mr. Gifford suffers from a handicap as it is defined in the Human Rights Code. His counsel argues that the provisions in the Declaration which prohibit Mr. Gifford from having a dog amounts to:

"a requirement, qualification or factor (which) exists that is not discrimination on a prohibited ground but that would result in the exclusion, restriction or preference of a group of persons who are identified by a prohibited ground of discrimination" to use the words of section 10 of the Code. I cannot agree. Nowhere in the Declaration, either expressly or by necessary implication, is there a provision that persons suffering from the handicap from which Mr. Gifford suffers is not permitted to reside in the subject premises. The Declaration provides that no person (handicapped or otherwise) shall have a prohibited pet in the property. Mr. Gifford is, as he should be, on an equal footing with all other occupants on this issue. Even if this were not so I would have found that the exception contained in s. 10(1)(a) of the Code which excepts those requirements, qualifications or factors which are reasonable and bona fide in the circumstances would apply for the reasons that will be dealt with in my comments dealing with the exercise of discretion. To suggest that Mr. Gifford was discriminated against because the Declaration provided for "dog guides" within the meaning of the Blind Persons' Rights Act is ludicrous in the extreme. The latter Act clearly requires the Condominium Corporation to permit dog guides and the corporation would quite properly have been subject to a penalty if it had failed to do so. The Act also provides in section 1(2) thereof that it applies "notwithstanding any other Act or any Regulation, by-law or rule made thereunder." Accordingly, I cannot find and do not find that the Giffords have been discriminated against contrary to the provisions of the Human Rights Code.

My review of the relevant cases dealing with the discretion available to the Court in applying section 49 of the Condominium Act has led me to conclude that the relevant criteria in this case would include among other things, the following:

(1) The nature of the total development--for example, is it a high-rise or townhouses? Does it consist of seniors only or mixed residential?

- (2) What are the reasonable expectations of the other occupants of the development?
- (3) How seriously do other occupants take this particular issue as opposed to other issues?
- (4) Does the conduct of the unit owner in question interfere with others?
- (5) Have there been any complaints by other unit owners?
- (6) What is the relationship between or amongst the various interested parties?
- (7) What is the actual wording of the covenant which is being enforced--are similar pets allowed, for example, while dogs are disallowed?
- (8) What are the advantages of requiring compliance compared to the advantages of permitting non-compliance?

It seems clear to me that the reasonableness of a no pets clause is more apparent in the case of a high-rise apartment than in the case of townhouses. It is clear from the evidence that a great majority of the occupants agreed to a no pets clause and they considered it to be of sufficient importance that it was included in the Declaration which can only be amended on unanimous agreement rather than in the by-laws or the rules which can be changed more easily. When the occupants who assisted in the drafting of the Declaration expressed their opinions so strongly on the issue of no pets they obviously expected that all other occupants would comply. Surely it was on this basis among others, that people decided to purchase units in the building in question.

It is not disputed that the conduct of the Giffords in this case does not appear to have actually interfered with any other owners and there have been no complaints. All of the parties appear to be on a fairly equal footing in that they are all seniors and would therefore each to some degree suffer some of the disabilities of old age (together with, of course, the many benefits) although it is not disputed that Mr. Gifford may suffer to a greater extent than most. The covenant which is being enforced does not seem to me to be one which is arbitrary or unfair. For example, as stated above, dog guides are permitted and as well, certain caged birds, tropical fish, small caged animals and even one cat would be permitted provided, of course, that if any animals actually being on the premises are considered a nuisance they shall be removed. This is not simply a blanket arbitrary "no pets" clause but one which was given some serious consideration and for reasons which appeal to the majority, found its way into the Declaration.

Obviously, the major advantage of permitting non-compliance in this case would be that Mr. Gifford would be permitted to retain a dog of which he is very fond and upon which he may even be to some extent dependant. Another advantage is that he will be able to remain in this building which appears to be a very desirable one with very likable neighbours rather than having to move out as he has indicated he might do if he is not permitted to keep his dog there. The major advantage of requiring compliance, on the other hand, appears to me to be that a message will be sent out by the Board to the unit owners that the Declaration and by-laws are in place for a good reason and they will be enforced, and a message will also be sent by the Court that where the Board acts reasonably in carrying out its duty to enforce the by-laws and Declaration the Board will be supported by the Court. To permit non-compliance in this case would clearly open the door to numerous, possibly very legitimate, requests by other unit owners to exempt them from certain other requirements in the Declaration and by-laws on the basis that each case should be decided on its own merits. While I do not disagree that each case must be decided on its own merits, at least by the Court if not by the Board who appears to have no discretion, the general message surely must be that enforcement will be expected and exceptions will be rare and will require a Court Application in any event. A longer term result of this position will surely be that people will only move into the building if they are prepared to live by the rules of the community which they are joining--if they are not they are perfectly free to join another community whose rules and regulations may be more in keeping with their particular individual needs, wishes or preferences.

Considering all of the factors which I think should be considered in exercising discretion, I have come to the conclusion that my discretion should be exercised in favour of enforcing the Declaration and granting the relief requested by the Condominium Corporation.

Before leaving this matter, however, I should deal with what I believe was, in this particular case, a very potentially compelling reason for wishing to come down on the side of the unit occupants. I have no doubt on the basis of the material before me that they were seriously misled by the developer's real estate agent on the issue of their right to keep the dog in question and they relied upon the misrepresentation made to them to their substantial detriment. The law is clear, however, as a result of the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al. (1987) 59 O.R. (2d) at p. 545, that the Declaration, by-laws and rules of a condominium corporation are vital to the integrity of the title required by a unit owner and that there is no place for a private arrangement between the declarant developer and an individual owner. To the extent that a private arrangement such as the one Mr. Gifford claims he had with the developer's agent existed it must be fully disclosed in the Declaration which is presumably read by every other unit owner before he or she agrees to take a unit. This is not to say that the Giffords do not have a cause of action arising out of the misrepresentation but rather that their cause of action is against the real estate agent and perhaps her principal or principals but not against Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776 with whom she had no connection whatsoever.

For all of these reasons an Order will go directing John R. Gifford and Marion M. Gifford to comply with the Declaration of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776 and more particularly with Articles III.1(e) and IV.5 thereof and requiring them to permanently remove their dog from Suite 210 at 955 Millwood Road, East York, and from the common elements of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776 located at the same municipal address. In my view this is not a case for costs and accordingly, unless representations are made to me within twenty days of the date of release of these reasons in which either party claims to be entitled to costs, there will be no costs of this Application.

British Columbia Court of Appeal
Macfarlane, Taggart and Anderson JJ.A.

May 3, 1989

Counsel for the Appellant: D.W. Donohoe.
Counsel for the Respondents: S.H. Tick.

MACFARLANE J.A. (for the Court, dismissing the appeal):— This is an appeal from the decision of a chambers judge fixing the compensation payable respecting an encroachment by A.L.M. Investments Ltd. et al (the developers) on lands owned by the owners Strata Plan NW 2320 (the owners). The decision was made pursuant to s. 32 of the Property Law Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 340 which provides in part:

Encroachment on adjoining land

32. (1) Where, on survey of land, it is found that a building on it encroaches on adjoining land - - the Supreme Court may on application

g(b) vest title to the land encroached on or enclosed in the owner of the land encroaching or enclosing, on making the compensation that the court determines;

The developers had constructed phases one and two of a condomimum project in 1985 and 1986. The owners occupy that part of the project. In planning the development of phase three adjoining the owners' property, an architect sited a new building across the phase line separating the first development from the new development. There was no advantage or gain to the developer from doing so as no higher density was achieved having regard to the whole project and the applicable municipal by-laws and regulations.

The siting has increased the common area within the rest of the development to the same extent as the encroachment on the owners' land reduced the common property in that particular area. The owners' share the new common property although their easy access to it is reduced.

The new condommum complex encroaches upon the owners' property by 99.9 square metres or about 1000 square feet. This ground area is occupied by three floors of the new building together with decks or patios adjoining the various strata units located within the encroachment. The floor area constructed within the area of this encroachment comprises 239 square metres including balconies and 213.57 square metres excluding the balconies.

Pursuant to s. 32(1)(b) an order was made vesting title in the developers to the land encroached upon. Title was registered June 13, 1988. The chambers judge fixed compensation at $9,990 in a judgment pronounced June 16, 1988. Counsel agreed the assessment was intended to be nominal, and was based upon a concession by the developers that they would pay that amount.

The only evidence before the chambers judge as to value was that given by a real estate appraiser who filed two reports on behalf of the owners. The appraiser was present at the hearing but was not cross-examined by counsel for the developers. The developers did not produce any evidence as to value.

The reports of the appraiser were dated March 28, 1988 and June 2, 1988 respectively. They referred to five comparable sales, two of them in 1988 and three in 1987. In the end, it was the appraiser's opinion, having regard to a rising market in 1988, that the land value, based on the comparable and current market conditions, should be regarded as $215 per square metre. Applying that figure to the land taken by these developers, the value was achieve an extra 113.67 square meters of buildable space and concluded that the developer would pay an extra $24,439.05 (113.67 x $215 per square metre). The appraiser's estimate to value was put in this way:

Estimate of value for:

1) 99.99 sq. meters under TCRD2 restrictions:
99.99 sq. meters x $215.00 per sq. metre
= $21,478.50
Add: Required amount of land necessary to obtain extra
113.67 sq. meters of floor area:
113.67 sq. meters x $215.00 per sq. meter
= $24,439.05
Total value of land component which could achieve a total floor area of 213.57 sq. meters

 213.57 sq. meters x $215.00 per sq. meter
 = $45,917.55
 Add: Estimated cost of site preparation, Architect and Engineering fees and landscaping say
 $20.00 per sq. meter x 99.9 sq. meters = $
 1,988.00

 $47,905.
 ROUNDED TO
 $48,000.00*

*This cost for land does not include the developers profit from the sale of the
 213.57 sq. meters of floor area.

The chambers judge declined to accept the appraisal evidence as a basis for fixing compensation for these reasons:

With respect to the fair compensation I find the real estate appraisal to be of minimal value, primarily because it does not address the reality of the 1000 square feet at issue here. Neither am I able to accept the elaborate calculations and the assumptions made as having any relation to the circumstances here. I am prepared to concede that the valuation done by the appraiser may be appropriate to some kinds of expropriation, but I cannot find there to be a rational application of those principles of value to a 1000 square foot rectangle in the middle of a condominium development. Nonetheless the respondents are entitled to be compensated for something of value which they once had and no longer have.

I have concluded that, in fairness, I can go no further than Mr. Tick's concession of $100 per square meter multiplied by the 99.9 square meters.

There will therefore be an award of $9,990 as compensation to the respondents.

I think the chambers judge was entitled to treat the appraiser's valuation as inflated. No authority has been cited to us that would justify the appraiser's opinion that increased density in one part of the site is a proper basis for concluding that a developer would pay more in the market place for the 99.9 meters in question. The evidence of the architect is that there was no gain to the developer in the way in which construction was done. The overall density continued to be based upon a floor space ratio of one as required by the applicable municipal by-laws and regulations. Thus there would be no reason for a prospective buyer to pay more for this small area.

But there is authority to justify application of the per square meter value of the whole site in fixing the price of the small piece taken. That authority from the Alberta Court of Appeal was not put before the chambers judge. There were three cases cited by counsel for the appellant and they are: The Queen v. Bonaventure Sales Ltd. (1980) 22 L.C.R. 164 at 165; Re: Cochm Pipelines Ltd. and Ratray et al 1980 117 D.L.R. (3d) 442 at 446; Re: Patson Industries Ltd. v. City of Calgary (1983) 30 L.C.R. 190 at 191.

Bonaventure is the leading case. In that case McGillivray, C.J.A. has this to say at pp. 164-165:

... What was expropriated were two strips off the boundaries of the two parcels. They were not, of course, willing buyers or willing sellers of those strips. It is not reasonable to convert those strips into a saleable area of land for purposes of evaluation of that land per se

... We are all of the opinion that the only method of arriving at the fair market value was to take a fair market value of the whole of each parcel and then attribute the per acre value to the acreage taken

... we are of the opinion that the Board proceeded on a wrong principle in two respects: (a) in treating the land taken from two parcels as one; and (b) in equating strips taken with saleable acreage and treating it as saleable acreage to be valued by itself.

The owners contend that the chambers judge in this case ought not to have rejected the appraisal evidence because it did not deal with parcels comparable in size to the 99.9 square meters which had been encroached upon. The owners contend that the chambers judge should have applied the approach recognized by the Alberta Court of Appeal in the Bonaventure and in the other cases.

If the Bonaventure approach had been applied the valuation would have been in the order of $21,000, as indicated in the first part of the appraiser's summary. The trial judge chose to regard the encroachment as a technical trespass however, and to fix an amount which reflected the relatively nominal nature of the matter. A sum of $9,990 would not normally be regarded as nominal compensation, but the task of the chambers judge in fixing compensation in this case was facilitated by the developer's concession that $100 per square meter would be appropriate. I am not persuaded that the chambers judge erred in fixing compensation on a nominal basis. The circumstances are unusual. This was a multi-phase condominium development. In the end there would be no interior lot lines between the separately constructed phases. There would be one condominium corporation owning the whole of the property. The owners, who were involved in this case, would be co-owners of all common property in the whole enterprise. The lot line in question would no longer exist and there would not have been any continuing encroachment, even if a vesting order had not been made. The owners now have a legal interest in an equivalent area of common property to that which was encroached upon, although they do not have as convenient access to it. I think that $9,990 was an appropriate compensation in the circumstances.

There was some argument with respect to additional compensation for injurious affection and on the basis that the owners desire to separate the project into two parts, was hampered by what had occurred in this case. An application was made to adduce some evidence with respect to the latter matter. I am not persuaded that that evidence ought to be admitted nor that any extra compensation ought to be awarded on the basis of injurious affection. I would dismiss the appeal.

ZELINSKI D.C.J.:— The Applicant ("Corporation") seeks an Order requiring the Respondents to comply with its By-Law Number 7 ("The By-Law"), a declaration that the Respondents are in contravention of The By-Law, and an injunction restraining the Respondents from continuing to contravene The By-Law.

The Respondents respond that The By-Law is unreasonable, not properly the subject matter of a by-law made pursuant to The Condominium Act (the "Act") and, in any event, neither properly enacted nor registered, and therefore ineffective.

A rule, in identical language to The By-Law, was, at an earlier date, made by the Board of Directors of the Corporation. Its validity and enforceability is not before me.

The Facts

602809 Ontario Limited (the "Numbered Company") is the owner of Unit 22 of the Corporation. Ciro Excavating and Grading Ltd. ("Ciro") operates as a gravel trucker out of Unit 22, and is associated with and a tenant of Numbered Company. No issue arises out of the application of The By-Law to both Respondents if I conclude that it is valid and enforceable.

Units in the Corporation are intended to be owned and occupied for commercial/industrial purposes. During the period when its units were being sold, the Corporation's promotional brochures indicated the existence of oversized parking bays, ample paved parking and shipping areas, as well as a choice of methods to accommodate truck deliveries. In the agreement of purchase and sale entered into between Corporation and Numbered Company, heightened doorways particular to the requirements of Ciro's trucks were contracted for, and in Schedule 'B' of this agreement, in which construction specifications are set out, it was stated that "All asphalt paving to be heavy duty". In the responding affidavit of Ciro Barillari, ("Barillari") the president of both Respondents, he states that this suggests that operations such as his own were contemplated and invited. In any event he continues, when he purchased his unit "All parties knew or ought to have known of the nature of my business and the size and operation of my vehicles".

As part of Ciro's operations it would appear that between 7 and 11 double-axle trucks, each having a net weight in excess of 17500 lbs., are commonly parked overnight in an interior parking lot owned by Corporation and operated as part of its common elements. Except for entry/exit roadways, this parking area is surrounded by the buildings which contain the condominium units. Ciro has used this parking lot for its parking needs continuously since becoming a tenant.

In the affidavit of Robert T. Moore ("Moore"), a property manager in the employ of the Applicant's Management Company, he states:

- (a) that he has had ongoing management problems relative to the common elements because the owners and their visitors park their vehicles on fire routes and in undesignated areas;
- (b) that a large area of asphalt has necessarily been repaired at great cost despite the fact it "is only four years old";
- (c) that the owners feel that this "was very early" and "that it is from very heavy trucks that are continually being parked on the common elements", and
- (d) that "the reason the Corporation passed the By-Law was to cut down future asphalt repairs to the common elements as well as keeping heavy vehicles off the parking area at the time of night specified in the By-Law".

Barillari responds that the need for asphalt repair can be attributed to "poor asphaltting and soil compaction". He points out that numerous cars and trucks with their licence plates removed that have been parked in the lot for months without being moved. This, he states, is the reason why parking on fire routes or in undesignated areas becomes necessary. Based on instructions he has given to his drivers he indicates that such parking is not done by his employees. Moreover, he states the offensive parking is not likely to occur during the proscribed hours, as this is the quiet time for the use of the parking lot.

He also indicates that trucks not owned by him are parked overnight when loaded. He points out that these trucks will be able to continue to park overnight despite the fact that their loaded weights are in excess of 17500 lbs., since The By-Law has reference only to vehicle weights. As such he contends The By-Law discriminates against Ciro.

The By-Law and earlier rule, use exactly the same language, namely:

No owner shall park, place or leave any vehicle on the common elements between the hours of 11:00 p.m. and 5:00 a.m. whose vehicle weight exceeds 17,500 lbs.

Ciro argues that even if asphalt repairs are necessitated by truck usage, it is not parking but driving which does damage. He contends that the damage will only be exacerbated if it becomes necessary for him to remove his trucks in the evenings and to return them in the mornings.

The cause for the asphalt decay is conjectural on the parts of both Moore and Barillari. Neither has established any reasonable basis for the opinions they state. Notwithstanding this, it is significant that the asphalt repairs were made in an area which is not adjacent to the Respondents' premises, and not where Ciro's trucks are customarily parked.

Passage of The By-Law

On July 8, 1987 the Board of Directors of the Corporation passed the rule which is in the language of The By-Law. The owners were advised of this on June 8, 1987. On August 13, 1987 formal notice of a Special General Meeting, to be held August 16, 1987, was sent out by Moore, under cover of a letter bearing the letterhead of his employer, Bonita Management Ltd. ("Bonita"). A copy of the proposed by-law and an agenda was provided, as well as a proxy to be used by owners unable to attend the meeting. The formal notice was signed by Moore as follows:

York Region Condominium Corporation No. 545 Per: "Robert Moore" (C/S) ----- Bonita Management Ltd.

I do not know whether a corporate seal was in fact impressed, and if so whether it was the seal of Corporation or Bonita. The material filed indicates that Moore was not the the Corporation's Secretary. He is shown to have been present at the relevant owners' meeting by invitation as a representative of Bonita. At this meeting, and on other occasions, he was "recording secretary" on request. He has also acted as "secretary" on request. However, on June 4, 1987, in the minutes of the meeting of Directors when the rule was made, Mr. F. Pellegrini was described as the Corporation's Secretary. In the minutes of an earlier meeting Mr. T. Pica was described as Secretary. In the copy of the by-law and certificate which were registered as By-Law No. 7, Mr. Pellegrini signed as Secretary.

The word "Proposed" continues to be part of the heading describing The By-Law which was renumbered as By-Law No. 7 in the material registered on September 2, 1987.

The purpose of the meeting as set out in both the notice and the agenda was the "Discussion and voting on proposed, by-law No. 6". The copy of the by-law to be discussed, and all other materials, refer to "Proposed By-Law No. 6". (Emphasis added).

Numbered Corporation received its copy of the notice of the owners' meeting on or about August 15, 1987. The notice was preceded, on June 23, 1987, by Barillari's written objection to what he perceived to be the discriminatory intention of the rule. He referred to contemplated damages if it was enforced.

The minutes of the relevant meeting records the passing of The By-Law, as By-law No. 6, in the following language:

Mr. Moore advised the meeting that a motion would have to be made and seconded in order to discuss the proposed by-law addition.

On motion by Mr. Stefano, (Unit No. 15), seconded by Mr. Ciro Barallari [sic], it was agreed to nominate the proposed by-law No. 6 for discussion.

The Chairman then opened the by-law for discussion from the floor. Various views were expressed by opponents and proponents of the proposed by-law.

After allowing approximately 45 minutes for discussion, the Chairman then called for a vote on the matter and requested that all of the unit owners Utilize the ballots which were issued to them upon registration.

The Chairman then appointed Mr. Gerry Stefanuto, (Unit No. 15), and Mrs. Barrone, (Unit No. 1) as Scrutineers.

Following the tallying of the ballots, the Chairman announced that the by-law had been by a margin in excess of 51% as required by the Condominium Act of Ontario. Mr. Stefanuto, (Unit No. 15), moved that the ballots be destroyed, and this motion was seconded by Mrs. Barrone, (Unit No. 1), and carried on a show of hands. (Emphasis added)

There is no indication of any prior meeting of the Board of Directors of Corporation at which The By-Law, or any variation thereof, was passed. In his affidavit Moore states:

9. This By-Law was passed properly and was made by more than 51 percent of the members of the Corporation owning the common elements. (Emphasis added).

Arguably, the suggestion that The By-Law was "approved" by the owners, and its registration while still "proposed" is inconsistent with this statement. The language of the minutes is equally consistent with consideration having been given to the by-law under discussion by the owners, its approval and the expectation that it would be properly passed so that it would cease to a "proposed" by-law (which seemingly means it remains to be enacted).

The Law

In Re Basmadjian v. York Condominium Corporation No. 52 (1981) 32 O.R. (2d) 523 at p. 526, Maloney J. sets out the priorities governing the application of the Act, the by-laws and the rules of condominiums in the following language:

A condominium corporation is governed by the Condominium Act, 1978 and its declaration, by-laws and rules. The Act sets out what must be contained in the declaration (s. 3(1)) and what may be contained in the declaration (s. 3(3)). Section 28(1) contains a list of the matters which the condominium corporation has power to adopt by by-laws (s. 3(5)). In addition, s. 60 provides that the provisions of the Act will apply notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary. Next to the provisions of the Act the declaration is to have priority. The declaration is subject to the Act and s. 3(5) provides where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the Act prevails and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly. The declaration can be amended only with the consent of all the unit owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests unless an application is made to a Judge pursuant to s. 3(8) of the Act, whereas by-laws can be amended or passed by a vote of only 51% of the unit owners. Counsel for the applicant likened the priority given to the declaration in the Condominium Act, 1978 to a constitution, amendment of which is subject to stringent safeguards. I accept this submission and it is clear that the declaration has priority over the by-laws. Section 28(1) provides for the passing of by-laws "not contrary to this Act or to the declaration" and also s. 28(4) of the Act provides:

28(4) 'The by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act and the declaration'.

The validity of any by-law, therefore, must be examined in the light of the priority given to the provisions of the Act and the declaration. A by-law may be upheld only if it falls within the matters contained in s. 28(1) and if it is reasonable and consistent with both the Condominium Act, 1978 and the declaration.

I am satisfied that, while knowledge or deemed knowledge of the intended use of "a condominium is germane to subsequent questions of reasonableness, contemplated or actual usage is not a bar to the enactment of valid by-laws, governing such use, and does not prevail over such by-laws, unless the use is specifically provided for in the Declaration. This is the conclusion reached by Finlayson J.A. in Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon et al. 44 R.P.R. 228 at p. 236, stated as follows:

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound. There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

S. 28 of the Act sets out the manner of enactment, appropriate scope and required confirmation of by-laws as well as the requisite reasonableness and registration of by-laws. It reads:

28-(1) The board may pass by-laws, not contrary to this Act or to the declaration,

- (a) to govern the number, qualification, nomination, election, term of office and remuneration of the directors;
- (b) to regulate the meeting, quorum and functions of the board;
- (c) to govern the appointment, remuneration, functions, duties and removal of agents, officers and employees of the corporation and the security, if any, to be given by them to it;
- (d) to govern the management of the property;
- (e) to govern the maintenance of the units and common elements;
- (f) to govern the use and management of the assets of the corporation;
- (g) specifying duties of the corporation;
- (h) to govern the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses;
- (i) authorizing the borrowing of money to carry out the objects and duties of the corporation; and
- (j) respecting the conduct generally of the affairs of the corporation.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), a by-law passed under subsection (1) is not effective until it is confirmed, with or without variation, by owners who own not less than 51 per cent of the units at a meeting duly called for that purpose.

(3) A by-law relating to the remuneration of a director or directors shall fix the remuneration and the period for which it is to be paid.

(4) The by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act and the declaration.

(5) When a by-law or special by-law is made by the corporation, the corporation shall register a copy of the by-law or special by-law together with a certificate executed by the corporation that the by-law was made in accordance with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, and until the copy and certificate are registered the by-law is ineffective. 1978, c. 84 s. 28.

Section 7 of the Act provides, in part, as follows:

7-(1) The owners are tenants in common of the common elements.

(2) An undivided interest in the common elements is appurtenant to each unit.

*** **

- (4) Each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements subject to this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.
- (5) The ownership of a unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interest and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a Unit from a common interest is void.
- (6) Except as provided by this Act, the common elements shall not be partitioned or divided.

Paragraph 5 of Article I of the Declaration provides:

5. Common Interest and Common Expenses

Each owner shall have an undivided interest in the common elements as a tenant in common with all other owners.

Paragraph 1) a) and b) of Article IV of the Declaration provides:

(1) Use of Common Elements

- (a) Subject to the provisions of the Act, the Declaration, the by-laws and the rules, each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the common elements, except as herein otherwise provided.
- (b) Driveways shall be used only for the purpose of motor vehicle ingress and egress and no obstructions to such driveways are permitted.

Reasonableness of The By-Law

Summarizing, to be enforceable a by-law must be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration of the Corporation (S. 28(4)). Each owner is a co-owner of the common elements and entitled to enjoy the whole of the common elements provided, in turn, that its use is also reasonable (S. 7 and S. 29(1)).

In this instance, one of the stated objectives for enactment of The By-Law was to cut down on future asphalt repairs, based upon the view of a majority of the owners that repairs already made were required too early as a consequence of "very heavy trucks that are continually parked on common elements". As previously stated, this is conjectural. There is nothing in the material before me to establish that the cause of the asphalt damage can be attributed to Ciro, or its trucks, or to the use of the parking lot by trucks of the designated weight during the designated hours. If loss or damage caused by Ciro or its trucks can be established there is provision in By-Law No. 1 (Article XV) to seek indemnification for such damage.

The other stated objective which was intended to be addressed by The By-Law is the keeping of "heavy vehicles off the parking area at the time of night specified in The By-Law". There is no basis upon which this, in and of itself, has any merit. It does not justify any impairment of the right of an owner to use the common elements of which it is a co-owner.

Finally, The By-Law is not one of general application which can be readily identified as controlling improper parking on fire routes or in undesignated areas. The By-Law is specifically directed at Ciro, and as such is discriminatory.

Absent a proper, lawful motive, intended to remedy a meaningful problem which cannot reasonably be dealt with in other ways, a discriminatory by-law which impairs the statutory and declared rights of any condominium owner is unreasonable. No proper, lawful motive is indicated in this instance.

On the basis of the foregoing, I am of the opinion that The By-Law is unreasonable and invalid by reason of its contravention of S. 28(4) of the Act.

Improper Subject Matter

S. 28(1) enumerates those items which are the proper subject-matter of by-laws, whereas S. 29(1) deals with rules which may be made:

... to promote the safety or welfare of the owners and of the property or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units.

The Respondents argue that the restrictions contemplated in The By-Law fall within the scope, of rules even though the procedures to make rules are less stringent than those governing the enactment of by-laws.

I am of the opinion that the subject-matter of The By-Law falls within the scope of S. 28(1)(d) (management of property), S. 28(1)(e) (maintenance of common elements), and S. 28(1)(f) (use and/or management of assets) and, as such is intra vires of the Corporation.

Passage and Registration

The By-law was never passed, as a by-law, by the Board of Directors of the Corporation prior to its confirmation by the owners. Such passage and confirmation are statutory requirements. (S. 28(1) and (2))

A valid by-law, properly passed, is not effective until so confirmed by the required percentage at a meeting "duly called for that purpose". (S. 28(2)). Notice to the owners was sent by the manager. As such, it was not given in compliance with paragraph 6 of Article VI of By-Law No. 1 which requires that the secretary "... shall give or cause to be given all notices required to be given ...". In the result, the owners' meeting was not duly called.

The minutes of the owners' meeting are not specific. Given their most generous interpretation, it is clear that it was By-law No. 6 that was under consideration at the owners' meeting. A previous By-Law No. 6, which relates to assessments, was already in existence. S. 28(5) of the Act requires that a copy of each by-law together with a certificate executed by the corporation, to the effect that the by-law was made in accordance with the Act, must be registered for that by-law to be effective. In this instance the by-law and the certificate which were registered both referred to By-Law No. 7.

I do not believe that the number allocated to a by-law diminishes the fact that it is the content of the by-law which is enacted. I am also of the opinion that normally it would be improper for me to look behind the Secretary's Certificate. However, the accuracy of the certificate is in issue. I believe "copy" means a true copy and that a renumbered By-Law No. 7 is not a true copy of The By-Law which was approved by the owners who were dealing with By-Law No. 6. On this same basis, the certificate is not accurate.

Counsel for the Respondents argues that Article VIII, paragraph 2 of the By-Law of the Corporation requires that "all deeds, transfers, assignments and obligations on behalf of the Corporation may be signed by the President or a Vice-President together with the Secretary or any other director". As such he contends that the Document General, signed by the Corporation's solicitor, is not properly registered. I do not consider that the Document General which is a prescribed form attached to documents which are registered, is a deed, transfer, assignment or obligation. In my view it is the documents which are registered which are governed by Article VIII if they fall within the class of items mentioned. Whether by-laws or certificates are such documents need not be determined by me in this instance because S. 28(5) requires that not only must the y be registered, the certificate must be executed by the Corporation. In the absence of a general or specific resolution of the Directors authorizing the secretary to execute the certificate in question on behalf of the Corporation, I am of the view that it is not so executed.

The By-Law has not been enacted and it is still unregistered and therefore ineffective at this time.

Application denied.

I have heard no argument as to costs. Either party may apply to the Local Registrar for an appointment to deal with that matter within 21 days, in default of which costs of the Application to the Respondents.

Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 75 v. Campeau Corp.

Between

Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 75, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 88, Audrey Bayles, J. Victor Bond, Quentin Bond, Audree Gingras, Keven Mills, James Luff and William Trischuk, Plaintiffs, and Campeau Corporation, Defendant, and Antamex Limited, J. McBride & Sons Ltd., Dominic & Giovanni Floor Finishing Ltd., Duron Ontario Ltd., B.M.H. Contracting Ltd. and John J. Lunz, Third Parties

Action No. 12510/81

Supreme Court of Ontario - High Court of Justice
Ottawa Non-Jury
Trainor J.

Heard: June 30, 1988
Judgment: October 24, 1988

- A.T. Hewitt, Q.C. and C.F. Reil, for the Plaintiffs.
J.R. Sigouin, Q.C. and J.S. Cavanagh, for the Defendant.
G. Doak, for Antamex Limited.
D.C. Kardash, for J. McBride & Sons Ltd.
J. Webster and D.G. Menzies, for Duron Ontario Ltd.

TRAINOR J.:— This action brought by the plaintiff Condominium Corporations and two unit owners, Audrey Bayles and James Luff, is for damages arising from defects in design, construction and subsequent repair.

The statement of claim alleges numerous deficiencies most of which were settled prior to trial. I was not made aware of the terms of settlement.

The unresolved issues are stated by the plaintiffs to be the following:

It is the Plaintiffs' submission that the Defendant, Campeau Corporation, as the owner, developer and builder of the condominium project known as Strathmore Towers, owed a duty to the Plaintiffs to construct the project in accordance with sound building practice and in a good and workmanlike manner. The Plaintiffs contend that Defendant, Campeau, breached its duty to the Plaintiffs in the following manner:

- a. It neglected to follow its own specifications and the mandatory practice direction under CSA standard A23.1-1973 respecting the placement of cast in place concrete contrary to sound building practice;
- b. It failed to finish the concrete slabs in the garage in a good and workmanlike manner;
- c. It utilized a design in respect of the expansion Joints in the garage which was deficient in that it called for the use of inferior materials and did not provide for the proper sloping of the slabs away from the joint;
- d. It failed to provide windows to the condominium towers which were completely weather tight and impervious to moisture penetration contrary to its own specifications and sound building practice;
- e. It failed to provide screens which were structurally sound and able to be conveniently and easily removed by the class of persons one would normally expect to be handling them on a day to day basis, contrary to sound building practice.

A legal issue is raised by the defendant as to whether the corporations are limited in their recovery of damages assessed with respect to deficiencies in the common elements, to the number of original purchasers of units who are owners as of the date of trial in proportion to the number of units constructed. The evidence is that only Audrey Bayles falls within this category. There are conflicting decisions in Ontario on this issue.

York Condominium Corporation No. 76 v. Rose Park Wellesley Investments Ltd. et al. (1985), 48 O.R. (2d) 455; Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 11 v. Shenkman Corp. Ltd.; Grainger et al., Third Parties (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 194.

A second legal issue arises with respect to the liability of the defendant in negligence to James Luff, a subsequent purchaser.

In view of the determination I have made of the other issues raised, I need not resolve the above matters.

The theory of the defendant's case is that there were no design defects; construction was in accordance with the plans and specifications and in accordance with the standards of the day; that the work was done in a proper manner in that any deficiencies were repaired by 1978; the problems the plaintiffs allege were the consequence of poor maintenance. It also alleges delay.

In 1973 the defendant's engineers and architects prepared plans and specifications for the construction of a twin tower condominium development and parking garage. Garage construction commenced on 20 May 1974 and was completed in the spring of 1975. Sales of individual units began in early 1975 and the condominium corporations were registered on 18 February 1976 (#75) and 8 November 1976 (No. 88).

The parking garage, the subject of the majority of remaining complaints, is a split level, above grade structure of concrete column and slab construction. It is a free standing building connected to the towers by walkways. It is unheated. Corporation No. 75 has jurisdiction over levels 1, 3, 5 and 7 of the garage and Corporation No. 88 over the even levels 2 to 8. Levels 7 & 8 are open to the elements and used mainly for guest parking.

The concrete slab specifications called for an exposed slab. However, the defendant, a pioneer at the time in exposed slab coverings, altered the specifications during construction as it was entitled to do. As a consequence, the third party Duron Ontario Ltd. (Duron), under a purchase order from the defendant, applied a wearing surface and sealant, known as duronite, to levels 3 through 6.

Duronite is a coal tar epoxy. In 1974 and 1975 the application of duronite was a three-stage process. Firstly, the concrete slab was washed with acid to etch the surface thereby permitting the formation of a mechanical bond between the concrete and the epoxy. Secondly, the epoxy coal tar in liquid form was applied to the etched concrete with a 1/8" squeegee, to a depth of 40 mills or 1/8 of an inch. Thirdly, silica sand was broadcast over the wet epoxy. The duronite was then left to dry overnight and the following day loose sand was swept from the surface.

Duronite was marketed in the 1970's as a wear surface impervious to moisture. The product had flaws because it was subject to pinholes caused by sand particles being dislodged by vehicular traffic and to cracking caused by shrinkage properties different from that of the concrete and by concrete cracking. These facts were known to both Duron and the defendant in 1974.

However, in the 1970's duronite was as good a product as the market sold except for a much more expressive cover, sold under the trademark, Scotch Clad. Scotch Clad was not popular in the construction industry.

The life expectancy of an exposed slab in the 1970's was 5 to 6 years. If the slab was covered with duronite and properly maintained its life expectancy was 10 to 20 years. In the 1980's duronite was improved by the addition of a polyurethane membrane and a tiecoat.

I remind myself that the standards of construction applicable to this case are those of the early 1970's. This building was constructed 14 years ago and the unconscionable delay in bringing the case to trial has caused the parties, and more particularly the witnesses, difficulty in remembering precisely the sequence of events during construction and repair, and even greater problems in defining the knowledge and practice of the construction industry more than a decade ago.

For example, contrary to the opinion expressed by Mr. Oliver, an engineer and architect called by the plaintiffs, what appears today to be a trite proposition, that de-icing salt, used extensively in snow control in the Ottawa area, has a devastating impact on reinforced concrete slabs used extensively in parking garages, was not fully appreciated by the construction industry in the 1970's.

The 7th and 8th levels of the garage were not treated until the spring of 1975 because of the onset of winter. In June, 1975, Duron acid washed these levels, routed and sealed shrinkage cracks, re-caulked expansion joints where required and applied two coats of polymer sealer, a water resistant product. This work constituted a second change to the specifications. The changes enhanced the quality of the structure.

In 1976, the condominium declarations were registered and the corporations assumed control of the garage and other common elements. They contracted management out to the defendant from 1 December 1976 until 1 January 1978. The defendant was replaced as manager by A.H. Fitzsimmons & Co. Ltd., and that company was later replaced by Graven Management. In 1977, because of unit owners' complaints, Mr. Oliver's engineering firm was retained by the Corporation. He inspected the common elements for defects in workmanship and materials. On inspection he observed the expansion joints being repaired by the defendant. He had no complaint, at the time, about the original design, construction or method of repair of these joints. His only comments were as follows:

- (1) the work must be done properly;
- (2) heating cables at the drains be operational;
- (3) where joints are vulnerable to leaks drain pipes might be added to control drip.

At trial he said the expansion joint design was substandard even though he agreed it was widely used.

Additionally, he found the westerly side of level 8 to have considerable spalling due to rainfall during the slab pour, or because of frost damage. He observed pooling that from observation he thought was caused by inadequate slab slope. He said, in his report and evidence, that "the spalling would continue at an increasing rate because of freeze-thaw cycles that would have a more severe impact on the upper levels than on the levels that had been properly sealed and provide a dense surface." (Emphasis mine). Mr. Oliver recommended that a rubberized membrane be installed with a wearcourse of rubberized asphalt. He agreed the procedure would be expensive. If put in place the membrane would constitute a betterment, not called for in the specifications. In his report, he does not make reference to slab slope but to a depression that he says should be built up.

Mr. Oliver further observed spalling in the westerly downramp of the upper levels. The reference to spalling denotes pitting or deterioration of the upper surface of the slab. He found that the duronite on lower levels had lifted or debonded in a number of areas of the garage. He recommended that the areas of debonding (the failure of the bond between the surface of the concrete and the duronite as opposed to delamination (separation of the upper surface of the concrete with the duronite in tact) be inspected, marked and repaired. He agreed that the proper method of repair was that contained in the work order of 8 May 1978 from the defendant to Duron. The repairs were completed in 1978.

The work order reads:

To provide all labour, material and services required to complete the following Work:

A) Upper Deck

1. Chip out all spalled concrete to a sound surface.
2. Apply Duron epoxy adhesive.
3. Patch with high strength concrete.
4. Clean, sand, and vacuum entire surface.
5. Apply 2 coats of Duron polymer sealer.
6. Install new deck drains at low points of concrete slab.

B) Other Decks

1. Remove all loose Duronite.
2. Clean, sand, and vacuum exposed concrete.
3. Supply and install new Duronite to these areas.

At trial, Mr. Oliver's opinion was that the duronite problems were caused by lack of proper air entrainment in the concrete resulting in a soft concrete surface insufficient to hold the harder duronite. He said that insufficient air entrainment prevented the concrete surface from expanding and contracting during freeze-thaw cycles thereby reducing the life expectancy of the concrete surface.

A further contributing factor to the debonding, spalling and delaminations found by Mr. Oliver was the lack of a maintenance program. He said lack of maintenance accentuates the damage.

In the summer of 1978, the repair work authorized by the defendant's work order dated 8 May 1978 was carried out by Duron. Mr. Sam Tatta, a supervisor with Duron, Mr. Joe Reitani, a foreman with Duron, and Mr. Colton, the president of Duron, testified as to the condition of the garage and the corrective and remedial work completed.

Mr. Tatta recalls working on levels 7 and 8, in 1978. He found that water was pooling and not going to the drains. He said this was corrected. In addition, he observed spalled concrete. The spalling was corrected by chipping out the bad concrete to a solid surface; acid washing the areas and then applying two coats of polymer sealer. He said the conditions he observed were not unusual for parking garages. In his experience the combination of sun, weather, vehicular traffic and salt destroy the waterproofing quality of the polymer sealer so that a new application is required every two years.

Mr. Reitano worked on the top levels of the garage and on the duronite repair in 1978. He described the principal areas of duronite repair and replacement as those where vehicular traffic was heaviest. His evidence is consistent with the evidence as a whole. He said that removing pitted and cracked duronite, cleaning the concrete surface and applying new duronite was a normal or usual procedure. The secret he said was to do the repair at an early stage. He described the problem as similar to cancer. Once the concrete is exposed because of duronite pitting, cracking or debonding in a given area, the condition spreads rapidly. He said maintenance is essential.

Mr. Colton was another impressive witness. He proved to be knowledgeable and fair-minded. He testified that six or seven years ago major repairs were required in many parking garages in the Ottawa area because of the ravages of de-icing salt. The necessity of such repair continues today, even with improved construction methods. Duron, perhaps more than any other company, completed repairs to salt-damaged garages. Mr. Colton testified that of 25 parking garages with which he is familiar and that are similar to the subject, this garage was at least as good as most and better than many. He said this is particularly the case where slabs were left exposed. Duronite, he said, is waterproof provided, by proper inspection and maintenance, pinholes and cracking are not allowed to develop.

Mr. Colton testified that in 1974 the building industry lacked an appreciation of the impact of salt and water in combination with freeze-thaw cycles, on concrete. According to this witness salt does not impair the duronite surface. However, if pinholes develop and are not repaired, or salt and water are otherwise allowed to accumulate around and under the duronite, or if the concrete surface is cracked or otherwise unsound, then rapid deterioration occurs.

Mr. Colton's view was that regular inspection, repair and cleaning of garage floors is essential to this normal life expectancy. In his opinion the duronite floors on levels 3 to 6 served the plaintiffs well. He said that the repair his company performed in 1978 was contributed to by faulty concrete but the flawed concrete was corrected when the repair work was performed.

He said the practice in 1974 was not to use entrained air whether or not the surface was covered by duronite or polymer sealer. It was his view that even today air entrainment is undesirable where duronite is applied because the surface of the concrete becomes too soft as a result of the entrained air. On the other hand, today, air entrainment is desirable on levels such as 7 and 8 where polymer sealer is applied.

Mr. Colton felt that the defendant's reputation in 1974 and 1975 was that of a good builder and a pioneer in concrete slab protection.

Following the repairs in 1978 the plaintiff, on 29 November 1978, indicated satisfaction with the work but requested extended warranties which were provided by Duron.

Approximately one year later the corporations complained to the defendant that the work performed by Duron and the expansion joint repair completed in 1977 by that company were unsatisfactory. In 1978, following the repair, CMHC inspected and approved the project for final advance. The defendant declined to do further work and no one asked Duron to honour its guarantee.

CMHC inspectors were not called at trial. The fact of approval and final advance is therefore of little assistance to me in determining the issues raised in this action.

In 1979, Mr. V. Midgley became the site manager for Fitzsimmons. In October, 1980, approximately two years subsequent to the Duron repair work, he was authorized by the corporations to retain the services of Robert Halsall and Associates Ltd., consulting engineers. Mr. Malholtra, an engineer with the firm, inspected the garage in the fall of 1980. He testified that in general terms the garage was in good condition for its age and use. He said about 30% of the duronite had cracked and lifted allowing water and salt to pool, and that on levels 7 and 8 a sealer was not evident although the floors had been sealed. The following tests were performed:

- (1) A visual inspection;
- (2) the depth of the concrete slabs was measured;
- (3) chloride content was measured;
- (4) corrosion activity was determined.

Contrary to Mr. Midgley's testimony Mr. Malholtra found the concrete cover over the rebar in the slabs to be quite adequate. However, on level 3, in the southeast corner, he found excessive corrosion activity and some delamination as a result of corrosion in the rebar. This type of delamination, where rusting increases the circumference of the steel causing expansion that eventually results in the upper part of the slab cracking and lifting, was minimal. It had occurred where the duronite had pitted and cracked in the most heavily travelled areas of the garage.

Mr. Malholtra found low to medium corrosion activity on the remaining levels that was quite acceptable.

The expansion joints, he said, leaked at a number of locations most noticeably on levels 7 and 8. The expansion joints allow the slab to contract and expand without breaking. A water bar, consisting of rubber inserted into the edge of the slab on each side of the joint in such manner that the pieces of rubber overlap, prevents water from escaping through the joint to the level below. Styrofoam insulation is inserted to fill the opening to just below the slab surface. A sealant is then placed over the styrofoam. This witness did not think the expansion joint was suitable but said that design was outside his field. He recommended that the joint be raked out and a proper sealer installed.

He also noted spalling on levels 7 and 8, principally on level 8, and suggested removal of the delaminated concrete topping and re-sealing.

Mr. Malholtra set up a series of priorities to be undertaken by the Corporations from the fall of 1981 through 1983. He noted that there are no easy solutions to garage problems and that garage maintenance is a continual problem. Regular inspection and repair is required and he said penetrating sealers must be renewed periodically. The total estimated cost of his program was $147,500 over three years or $145 per unit per year. He said cleaning and continuous maintenance are absolutely essential to retard salt damage.

The Corporations postponed repairs until 1982 and 1983 when they contracted with Ottawa Structural Concrete Services Ltd. to do some of the work recommended. The work involved repairs to delaminated concrete, removing debonded duronite and application of a sealer. On level 8, the total area was sounded, and spalling repaired by crack filling and sandblasting the surface. A sealant was applied. As well the expansion joints were repaired with evazote.

According to Mr. Midgley the repaired areas continued to give minor problems while other areas that were not repaired continued to deteriorate. The corporations' cash outlay for repairs was $7,668 in 1982 and $58,000 in 1983.

In 1985, repairs costing $330,955.71 were undertaken pursuant to recommendations and contract documents prepared by Vanco Structural Services Inc.. Duron was the successful bidder and did the work.

The plaintiffs acknowledge that the Vanco contracts constitute improvements far superior to that contemplated by the original specifications. They included the installation of a waterproof membrane and a new wear surface on levels 3 through 6.

The plaintiff corporations had not incurred any expenditure for repairs until 1982. Between August, 1982 and 3 June 1985 they spent $418,339.31. They claim $140,500 or about one-third of that amount which is approximately the cost of repair estimated by Halsall in 1981. In fact Mr. Midgley's breakdown per corporation was based on the Halsall reports. It is as follows.

Corp. 75 Corp. 88

- 1) Duronite repair $21,500 $21,500
 - 2) Expansion Joint 13,375 13,375
 - 3) Level 7 and 8 30,000 39,000
- $64,875 $73,875

The figures do not add up to $140,500 as claimed, however the total figure is a reasonable one at which to assess damages related to the garage having regard to the total repair cost.

Mr. Henry Vander Velde is a partner in Vanco Structural Services Inc.. The condition survey report prepared for the plaintiff corporations in August, 1984 is under his signature. He was assisted by P.M. James. Mr. James was called by the plaintiffs as a witness but the far more experienced and qualified person Mr. Vander Velde was not. He was called by the defence.

I prefer Mr. Vander Velde's evidence with respect to concrete specifications, salt damage and the knowledge of the construction industry and standards in 1974 and 1975 to that of any other witness other than Mr. Colton. He is not a professional engineer. He has a degree from Algonquin College in civil technology but more importantly he spent about 15 years with Adjelian & Associates who were the consulting engineers for the defendant. He has been directly involved in the design and inspection of major construction projects most of his working life and conducted inspections during the building of the subject condominiums and garage.

It was his view that the specifications for garage slabs called for finished trowelled slabs containing 3% air maximum. He said that where 3% air or less is called for it was not the practice in the industry to call for air entrainment testing.

He testified that Adjelian & Associates were heavily involved in the design and preparation of specifications for garages similar to the subject and that the specifications in question were typical. He said Adjelian worked frequently with the defendant but were firm as to their requirements and did not roll over for a client.

Mr. Vander Velde inspected five to six similar structures per year in the late 1960's and during the 1970's. 70% of Vanco's work is the repair of parking garages. He said that duronite was available in the mid-1960's and 1970's but constituted an additional construction expense. Once applied, he testified, it is essential to inspect it for cracking and pinholing, debonding or delamination, and to repair immediately on discovery of such flaws. He said duronite's purpose is two-fold. It is a wearing surface and protects against moisture. If pinholes and cracking are not repaired the condition is worse than that encountered with an exposed slab because the water and salt penetrate into the slab and cannot be easily removed because of the duronite cover.

He said that the water bar used during construction of the expansion joints was common. There were known problems but few substitutes. It was an acceptable Joint in the 1970's, according to this witness.

Mr. Vander Velde was of the view that maintenance and cleaning are fundamental as is proper drainage. He said that compared to other garages of the same age in the Ottawa area, this garage was in good condition.

Inspection in 1984 revealed to him that 75% of the duronite was in good condition after ten years. He said that the rough concrete found on level 8 was likely caused by rainfall before the concrete had set. The latter problem is one that leaves little choice, according to Mr. Vander Velde, but to accept the condition and take preventative action to avoid future water penetration. He said that in 1974 most garages had inadequate drains whereas today flood tests are done and then drains drilled at the low spots.

Mr. Vander Velde testified that polymer sealer provides reasonable protection against salt and water penetration if it is applied properly and renewed periodically. However, he thought the specification called for entrained air for levels 7 and 8, though he considered it to be a gray area at the time.

In the Vanco report the following statement is made regarding pitting and debonding of the duronite. It reads, "this is indicative of water being trapped below the wearing surface, most likely having entered through the numerous pinholes found in the wearing surface, and undergoing freeze-thaw cycling. The considerable extent of the freeze-thaw damage is, in our opinion, clearly related to the inadequate air content and distribution found in the concrete".

The plaintiffs argue that this evidence supports their theory of lack of air entrainment as specified. I do not agree. The witness was clear in his evidence that 3% air or less was called for in the trowelled surface to which duronite was applied. The witness said in his evidence that if the duronite is allowed to remain pitted and cracked the trapped water (and salt which draws water to it) present a more serious condition than an exposed air entrained slab surface. An exposed slab would require air entrainment of 6% to 7% to allow the slab surface to expand and contract with less danger of surface delamination. The lack of air entrainment became a factor once the duronite became pitted and cracked allowing salt laden water to become trapped under and around the duronite.

The test cores taken by Vanco on all levels showed an average air entrainment of 2.9%. On the assumption that proper air entrainment served to lessen the ravages of the freeze-thaw cycle for exposed concrete it is difficult to explain why, only 12,000 square feet or 1/4 of the area of levels 7 and 8 located at the north-west corner of level 7 had failed but the rest of the surface had not.

Mr. Frank Privora, a graduate civil engineer, worked with Mr. Oliver's company, with Canada Cement and others, before opening his own consulting firm. He considered Adjelian & Associates to be the leaders in highrise design and specification. It was his view that the use of duronite on levels 3 through 6, and the use of polymer sealer on levels 7 and 8 brought the slabs into the category of non-exposed slabs requiring 3% or less air entrainment.

His view was that both duronite and polymer sealer must be kept clean and inspected after cleaning. He said a garage such as the subject should be swept once a month and then washed two, three or four times after the spring thaw with a low pressure hose. He said duronite would last indefinitely if this procedure was followed and cracks or pinholes sealed as they appeared.

Mr. Privora indicated that all slab over column garages develop cracks. Some of the cracks can be seen others cannot. The cracks form the routes or passages for the corrosive process. He said that the chloride ion in addition destroys the alkaline in concrete where moisture and oxygen are present.

His view was that air entrainment in the subject slabs was not required under the specifications. It would serve only to weaken the concrete. The solution, he said, is waterproofing. Mr. Privora testified that the standard construction practice at the time was to build exposed concrete slabs. The building industry had little knowledge about the impact of salt on these buildings. It was in the late 1970's and early 1980's that safeguards began to be taken.

Mr. Privora agreed that the evazote expansion joint designed by Halsall was an improvement, even though it failed in part following installation. It was his view that the original expansion Joint was commonly in use in the 1970's and that any expansion joint will leak or fail if not maintained by cleaning and repairing. Mr. Malholtra and Mr. James expressed the same view.

Mr. James assisted Mr. Vander Velde in preparation of the Vanco report which was described as a fact finding mission and not one set up to find fault. He found dirt in the expansion joints and other evidence of poor housekeeping.

He said the core sample survey conducted indicated a significant departure from specification regarding air entrainment. This departure, he felt, contributed to the surface delaminations he observed, or they may have been the result of poor workmanship.

Mr. James joined Vanco in 1984. He became licensed in Ontario, as a structural engineer more than a year after the Vanco report. The inspection of this garage was his first experience with such structures. He found debonding of the duronite as well as delaminations. He said that it was difficult to determine whether leaks in the expansion Joints were the result of poor design or poor maintenance. He found that the concrete patches on level 7 had deteriorated. He said this should not occur if the repair work was properly done. However, he agreed that salt combined with freeze-thaw cycles could have caused the defect, or careless snow removal may have been the cause. Mr. James was not prepared to say that poor housekeeping was the chief cause of the conditions he found.

The Parking Garage

The plaintiffs appear to rest their case in contract and negligence. They have not pleaded or argued breach of warranty. I have concluded from conflicting evidence that they must succeed or fail in warranty alone, and that the real issue in the case is whether repairs were completed in a good and workmanlike manner but failed because of lack of proper maintenance, including inspection, cleaning and repair or whether the failure of the repairs was caused by poor workmanship or inadequate materials.

The contract with the unit holders is found in the agreement of purchase and sale signed by the defendant and Audrey Bayles. She purchased unit 1608 together with an individual interest in the common elements on 1 May 1975 for $37,900.

In the agreements, purchasers acknowledge inspection of the premises and all pertinent documents, including the plans and specifications. It is agreed for the purposes of this action that the contracts with all other original purchasers were in identical terms. She took occupancy on 17 May 1975, the date of substantial completion.

The agreement provides in part that:

7.a) If the subject Unit or Common Elements be as yet unstarted or be in the process of construction, the Vendor covenants to complete the same in accordance with the plans and specifications, all work and services to be done and performed in a good and workmanlike manner appropriate to the style and the nature of the Unit, notwithstanding which the Vendor may substitute other materials for those specified and may alter the said plans and specifications provided that any such substitutions and changes are acceptable to the mortgagee.

15.b) The Vendor covenants to give on the closing of this transaction a written warranty in its usual form which, with respect to the Unit shall expire one year from the date of interim occupancy, and with respect to the common elements shall expire one year from the date the Condominium is declared. The warranty shall be in respect of the structural soundness and quality of the Unit and Common Elements, and the Purchaser will accept such warranty in lieu of any other warranty or guarantee, expressed or implied, in respect to the quality or nature of workmanship and materials, it being understood and agreed that there is no representation, warranty, guaranty, collateral agreement or condition precedent to, concurrent with, or in any way affecting this Agreement or the subject land or dwelling other than as expressed herein. The said warranty shall not be transferable or assignable and shall not be enforceable by the Purchaser in any manner unless and until all monies payable by the Purchaser under this contract have been paid to the Vendor in full without holdback whatsoever. Notwithstanding the foregoing or anything contained in the said warranty, the Purchaser waives any right to any claims against the Vendor for damage to any ceilings or walls due to normal shrinkage or nail popping, and the Purchaser agrees that this Agreement may be pleaded by the Vendor in estoppel of any such claims by the Purchaser.

16 The Purchaser agrees that he will submit to the Vendor in writing before the scheduled date of possession a complete report on his "take-over" inspection of the real property duly signed by him and the field superintendent or other duly authorized representative of the Vendor and except as to items specifically listed in such report the Purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to have accepted the unit. The Purchaser agrees that he shall not submit any such report on his take-over inspection or other complaints to the Vendor unless he shall first have contacted the Vendor or its representatives before the scheduled date of possession by the Purchaser to arrange for a mutually convenient pre-inspection appointment. The Purchaser agrees that such pre-inspection is to be conducted jointly with the Purchaser and the Field Superintendent or other duly authorized representative of the Vendor and that he shall be deemed not to have submitted such a report and to have accepted the unit as then constructed in the absence of a joint pre-inspection report duly signed as aforesaid.

17 Should the Purchaser claim that the said Unit is defective or not in accordance with the contract in respect to materials, workmanship, construction or otherwise, or should any dispute arise between the Vendor and the Purchaser over any matter whatsoever relating to this transaction then the Vendor shall have the option of repaying to the Purchaser all monies paid hereunder, subject to paragraph 18 hereof, and all right, title and interest whatsoever hereby created or then existing in favour of the Purchaser, shall forthwith cease and determine, and the Unit hereby agreed to be sold shall revert to and vest in the Vendor and this Agreement shall be considered null and void; and the Purchaser shall do all such acts and execute all such assurances, deeds, releases and other documents as may be necessary at the Purchaser's expense to re-vest title to the said Unit in the Vendor. In the event the Purchaser shall fail or refuse to execute and/or deliver any such documents so requested within seven (7) days of such request, then the Vendor hereby stands irrevocably constituted as the Purchaser's attorney with power to execute and deliver to the Vendor such release and/or quit claim for and on behalf and in the name of the Purchaser.

There is no evidence in the record of occupancy prior to substantial completion, of deficiency lists prior to occupancy or of disputes covered by paragraph 17 of the agreement.

The warranty set out in paragraph 15(b) was given to Audrey Bayles on 17 May 1985, and to all other unit holders on their respective occupancy dates.

The warranty is entitled "Home Owners Guarantee". Pursuant to the warranty the defendant guaranteed that the condominium and garage:

... has been constructed in a thorough and workmanlike manner in accordance with accepted Home Building Standards. Inspection by local building authorities and by our trained personnel guarantees to you that all local codes, hydro regulations and municipal by-laws and where applicable, National Housing Act standards in existence at the time of construction have been complied with.

.....

Campeau will, at its option, either replace or repair free of costs, any defect which occurs under ordinary use and care, within one year from the date of delivery as shown above subject to the limitations hereinafter expressed. Such defects must be brought to Campeau's attention in writing within the one year period hereinbefore set out.

This guarantee shall be void where such defects were caused by acts of the purchaser or by your failure to implement the suggestions and recommendations set out in the booklet supplied with and supplementary to this certificate.

Campeau does not assume liability or responsibility for:

- (a) Damage due to reasonable wear and tear or damage caused by termites or other insects, fire, lightning, tempest or other acts of God, or through negligence of the occupier of the home.
- (b) Conditions resulting from condensation or contraction or expansion common to the type and grade of materials used.
- (c) Checking or cracking of plaster or dry wall or nail-popping.
- (d) Latent defects inherent in the type and grade of materials used.
- (e) Minor depressions in grounds or driveway caused by setting of sewer, plumbing or utility ditches or ground grading.
- (f) Cracks common to concrete and masonry work.

In no event shall Campeau be liable hereunder for an amount in excess of that necessary to replace or repair the defective material or workmanship.

In view of the findings that I am about to make the defendant's liability, if any, for repairs to the expansion joints in the garage and the problems of delamination, debonding and spalling fall outside the terms of the individual contracts of purchase and guaranty. The plaintiffs' success or failure with regard to these claims is to be resolved by reference to additional warranties provided at the time of repair work, assuming that the deficient pleadings can be rectified.

The garage and condominium towers, in so far as the issues that were left to me to try are involved, were built in a good and workmanlike manner in accordance with the plans and specifications and the knowledge and practice prevailing in the industry in the mid-1970's.

The garage was and is today structurally sound. It was as sound a building as most garage structures built in the Ottawa area in the early and mid-1970's. It was designed and the specifications prepared by Adjelian & Associates, the foremost experts in the field, and the defendant's forces, including its sub-trades, built the garage in a competent manner, in accordance with the plans and specifications, and in accordance with the standards of the day.

The garage has served its purpose since occupancy commenced in early 1975. Not a single unit holder complained about its utility in spite of the uncontradicted evidence of leaks, delaminations, spalling and repair. There is an abundance of evidence of complaints from the various boards of directors from 1976 onward. There is no evidence of self-help on their part until 1982, nor did they implement any improvements to their maintenance program until very late in the game.

On the other hand, the defendant and its sub-trades cooperated throughout in attempting to fulfil their contractual commitments and to satisfy the boards' demands.

Contrary to Mr. Oliver's evidence, professional and non-professional, appreciation of the ravages of de-icing salt was minimal in 1974 and the products available to combat its effects were few and far from a perfect solution.

Adjelian & Associates employed the most knowledgeable of the experts, Mr. Vander Velde, to conduct inspections during construction. In addition the defendant contracted with Duron, specialists in concrete slab protection. I have little doubt on the evidence that had duronite and polymer sealer not been used to protect the slabs in this garage from salt-laden water (and the contractor was entitled to leave the slabs exposed under the contract documents) that given the skimpy maintenance program employed, the defects complained about, even with air entrainment, would have been substantially increased and structural failure likely by 1985.

When I speak of the lack of a maintenance program I am not being critical of anyone, until 1978. In the years 1974 through 1977 the boards of management of the plaintiff Corporations, the defendant and other professionals did not appreciate the absolute necessity for constant surveillance, regular removal of salt and water and speedy repair of defects in order to preserve the integrity of the concrete slabs. The defendant, however, did repairs from 1975 through 1978 as and when required and without regard to its limited warranty.

The main thrust of the plaintiffs' argument and evidence regarding the garage is that government standards for air entrainment called for in the specifications were not followed and the resulting and continuous repairs became necessary.

The C.S.A. standard relied upon includes Table 6 and Table 8. Its essential requirements are set out under the following heading:

9.4 Selecting Entrained Air Content

9.4.1 Where concrete is subjected to frequent cycles of freezing and thawing in the presence of moisture or de-icing salts it shall be air entrained in accordance with Table 8.

Table 8 specifies air entrainment in the range of 5 to 6%. The concrete slabs in the garage were in the main less than 3%.

The position taken by the plaintiffs fails to take into account two important considerations.

Firstly, the slabs in question were trowelled slabs and the specifications in the contract call for:

4.2.4 Air Entrainment

Exposed or exterior concrete - See Table 6, CSA A23.1

Non-exposed concrete 3% to 5% air. Finished-trowelled slabs and toppings in two-course slab construction - 3% air maximum.

(Emphasis added)

Secondly, 9.4 of the standard which the plaintiffs say applies, calls for air entrainment in the area of 6% where the slab is exposed to (1) frequent cycles of freezing and thawing, (2) in the presence of moisture or de-icing salts.

The concrete slabs in this garage were covered with duronite on levels 3 through 6 while levels 7 and 8 were treated with two coats of polymer sealer, a water repellent material. The purpose of air entrainment is to compensate for absorption of water, and its expansion and contraction during freeze-thaw cycles. Duronite, properly maintained, is waterproof, as is the sealer, thereby rendering air entrainment redundant. In addition, duronite, on the evidence I accept, is to be applied to a hard surface for maximum bonding. That is best achieved by 3% or less air.

Thirdly, the practice in the trade in the early 1970's was not to increase the quantity of air artificially in this type of structure. If I am in error in my interpretation of the standards I cannot say that the defendant's interpretation, that air entrainment was not required, having regard to the practice of the day and the fact that the concrete quality was in the control of experts, was unreasonable or one that constituted a breach of contract, or otherwise caused the garage to fall below standard.

Fourthly, 75% of the duronite did not debond or delaminate and yet the average air entrainment throughout the slabs was less than 3%. It can hardly be said with authority that the cause was insufficient air entrainment. The same is true of the level 7 and 8 spalling!

Delaminations, in the sense of salt corrosion damaging the rebar causing the concrete to break away due to expansion, were confined to about 500 square feet of a garage having a gross floor area of 160,000 square feet. In the remaining and much larger area (about 25 to 30%), where duronite lifted, it generally took the top surface of the concrete with it. This condition was the result of pinholes caused by the removal of silica sand during normal wear and tear of vehicular traffic or perhaps, in the area of the ramps, from trap rock protruding through the epoxy again caused by normal vehicular travel. Another cause was the development of cracks in the duronite from expansion and contraction or from the concrete cracking in the normal course of events. The pinholes or cracks allowed moisture and salt to reach the concrete, become trapped and cause damage to the concrete during freeze-thaw cycles, or as Mr. Privora said, they permit the salt to weaken the alkaline in the concrete.

Similarly, the expansion joint design met the standards of the day. Mr. Oliver did not like the design. He said it was substandard. However, during the expansion joint repair in 1977 he inspected the work yet failed to express the opinion to the people who hired him that he expressed 11 years later, at trial. In 1977, he thought eavestrough might assist. At trial he denied this but when confronted with his earlier report, during cross-examination, he conceded he had made the suggestion. His evidence indicates to me that he had difficulty separating current standards from those acceptable in another decade. His suggestion of eavestrough indicates, as other witnesses testified, that leaks do occur at expansion joints because of the movement of the slabs and normal traffic. The only remedy is detection and repair.

Halsall and Associates, in 1982, designed a much improved evazote expansion joint. It was unavailable in 1974, was more expensive and unfortunately it also leaked soon after installation.

Duron did not pour the slab surfaces in 1974 and 1975 prior to installation of the duronite. Its forces inspected the floors and then prepared them for the duronite. I am satisfied that floors 3 through 6 were constructed according to specification and that Duron did its work in an appropriate manner. The duronite failed in part because there was not in place a satisfactory maintenance program with the consequence that water and salt entered cracks and pinholes, penetrated the concrete and during freeze-thaw cycles damaged the concrete surface.

The expansion joints failed for the same reasons; lack of inspection, cleaning and repair.

Level 7 presents a more complex problem. The spalling that occurred to the westerly half of that level was caused by rainfall shortly after or during the concrete pour. Nevertheless the defendant's responsibility, if any, for the repairs undertaken by the plaintiffs in 1982 and 1985, must rest in extended warranty and not breach of the original contract or guarantee, as the condition was corrected by the 1978 repair.

In summary, the garage deficiencies were not caused by the fault of the defendant but by the lack of a proper maintenance program. Nonetheless the defendant repaired the defective areas without charge to the plaintiffs even though the majority of the repairs were beyond the one-year period of guarantee.

By 9 June 1977, the defendant acknowledged that it would correct the following deficiencies complained about by Corporation No. 75, even though its guarantee or warranty had expired in February, 1977.

- (a) Sealing of expansion joints in the garage;
- (b) repair the duronite to an acceptable standard;
- (c) exterior caulking of windows;
- (d) check improper fitting screens.

On 3 November 1977, Corporation No. 88 complained about the following matters relevant to the issues.

- (a) Floor drainage piping ruptured;
- (b) repair of expansion joints (item ongoing);
- (c) spalling on level 8 due to rainfall;
- (d) repair of duronite.

The complaints from Corporation No. 88 are in substance taken from the Oliver report of 1977.

Leaving the window claims aside, during 1977 and 1978 all of the requested repairs were made.

The expansion joint repair was completed by Duron in 1977. On 9 November 1978, Duron completed its work with respect to spalling, debonding and delamination. It guaranteed its work, in writing, against defects in material and workmanship. Delay has contributed to a great deal of uncertainty in this area. In 1977, Mr. Oliver advised the Corporations to attempt to obtain an extended warranty on the repairs. The plaintiffs sought and obtained warranties from both Duron and the defendant. I am satisfied on the evidence that a one-year warranty was received by the defendant for the expansion joint repair and in addition they received a one-year warranty for the duronite and polymer sealer repair from Duron. A two-year warranty had been sent to the defendant by Duron but this was altered to a one-year warranty in accordance with the practice in the industry. This one-year warranty was forwarded to the plaintiffs but the warranty for two years was not. For the purpose of this judgment I assume the plaintiffs were entitled to a two-year warranty but did not receive it.

On 29 November 1978, Corporation No. 88 reported some of the work as satisfactory, but other parts such as the expansion joint repair in 1977 unsatisfactory.

The attitude of the board of directors of the corporations becomes readily apparent upon reading the various letters of complaint. For example the board of Corporation No. 88 cannot understand why duronite was not provided, during the repair, on levels 7 and 8 at no cost to them, even though it was not specified in the work order, constituted an improvement and was not a part of the original specification. They requested aluminium paint to be renewed for connections that had rusted even though this had occurred in the garage in the normal course of events over time. In other instances they blame frozen drainage pipes in an unheated garage on the defendant where there is no evidence that the plaintiff corporations ever inspected the pipes or the heating cables, and where there is evidence that the electricity was not turned on.

There is uncontradicted evidence that the defendant did repairs and attempted to resolve the corporations' complaints. The plaintiff corporations, on the other hand, from 1976 until 1982 did not make any expenditure for repairs or maintenance save that the garage was cleaned once a year by sweeping it down with a machine and broom during 1979 and 1980. In 1981 students swept the garage. In 1983 or 1984 for the first time it was scraped, swept and washed. This lack of suitable maintenance prevailed in spite of Mr. Malholtra's warning to the plaintiffs in 1980, and Mr. Oliver's warning in his report in 1977 that spalling would continue at an increasing rate if the floor was not kept sealed. Mr. Oliver told the boards of the two corporations that more floor drains were required and that more frequent sweepings and washings were essential or the damage would be accentuated. The defendant installed the drains but inspection and maintenance was not stepped up.

I am satisfied on balance that the work done and materials used by Duron in 1977 and 1978 satisfied its obligation under the work order. I accept Mr. Colton's evidence in this regard. The work was completed in a proper manner. He said his company was never called back under the warranty it gave. I reject Mr. Midgley's evidence that, in 1979 Duron was asked to repair but refused to do so because the problem was delamination and not debonding. The plaintiffs were advised on 18 December 1978 that the only warranty in effect was the Duron warranty for the 1978 repair. For reasons, unexplained, the plaintiffs did not call on Duron to inspect and repair the continuing problems and areas of complaint even though the defendant refused to undertake further repair. As of that date, the Duron warranty was still in effect. I am satisfied that had the repairs failed because of poor workmanship or materials, a contention I reject, as opposed to lack of maintenance, Duron would have remedied the defects.

Screens and Windows

The allegation with respect to the screens is that they were defectively designed and could not be closed properly. At trial Mr. Midgley, the president of the current management company, said the screens could not be removed without twisting the frames and as a consequence 75% of the total screens supplied have to date been replaced. He said that the defendant's assistance with the problem was sought but was not forthcoming.

Mr. Midgley was not on the site until 1979, some four years after occupation and at least two years following registration. His evidence is contradicted by Gaston Vinette, a customer services manager for the defendant.

James Luff, in 1981, found the screens in his unit to be somewhat difficult to take out. He said that even though the screens are warped to a degree, he has not had them replaced.

Audrey Bayles found her screens difficult to remove so she left them off.

Mr. Matthew, a unit holder since 1977, and president of Corporation No. 88 in 1979, said the screens did not fit.

Mr. Greer, the director of engineering for Antamex, the window and screen manufacturer, gave the court a detailed explanation of the window and screen design. The screen is removed by first removing a stop, then the window, followed by the screen.

He testified that the screens in his opinion could be removed without twisting or unduly bending the frame with the stop in place. However, removal of the stop increased the size of the opening thereby facilitating screen removal. His company was never contacted about this complaint.

Mr. O'Connell, a veteran of 32 years in the window and screen business, confirmed Mr. Greer's evidence.

I accept their evidence and conclude that the alleged design defect has not been established. Furthermore, I cannot accept the evidence that the defendant refused to reveal the fact that Antamex was the designer, manufacturer and supplier. The windows and screens were under warranty and the defendant would have no reason to refuse to call upon its subcontractor if complaints were received during the one-year warranty period. In any event, with a little ingenuity Antamex could have been discovered, or perhaps the screen removal puzzle otherwise resolved. The picture I have formed is of a condominium management team that is quick to complain but slow to act.

In addition, screen replacement by the plaintiffs was not started until 1981 and was completed in 1985, ten years post occupancy, and well beyond the warranty provided by the defendant and its subcontractor.

The second area of complaint, made by the plaintiffs but not pleaded, is that the vertical mullion joints of the windows in a number of units leaked. The problem was corrected according to Mr. Midgley, when in 1979 and 1982 the corporations paid St. Lawrence Caulking and Supply Ltd., $4,733.40, and Queensway Caulking Ltd., $8,160.00, to caulk the vertical mullions.

The plaintiff Audrey Bayles asks for payment for damage to the inside of her apartment because of moisture penetration that she discovered in 1979. Campeau repaired the problem but by 1981 it recurred. It is apparent that caulking the vertical mullion joints did not correct the problem in this unit. In 1981 this plaintiff paid a decorator $26 to repair water damage around the windows, and $75 to repair the ceiling.

In 1987 the same problems reappeared. The estimate for corrective repair is $395.

Mr. James Luff purchased unit 1405 in September, 1978 from a previous owner but rented the unit until 1981. In July, 1981 he discovered a water damage problem and spent $1,237.50 having it repaired. The apartment had been redecorated in 1978. There has been no recurrence of the problem since 1981. It appears therefore with respect to this unit, water problems occurred between 1978 and 1981. During the period the defendant had undertaken and replaced caulking and this appears to have solved the problem prior to the caulking of the mullion joints.

In August, 1982, Queensway, in addition to caulking mullion joints, replaced old caulking and caulked other areas of the windows and precast.

I am not satisfied that the plaintiffs have made out a case in this area for these reasons.

(1) I accept the evidence of Mr. Greer and Mr. O'Connell that Antamex designed, supplied and installed water-tight windows. Visual inspection of the vertical mullion joints reveals that water penetration through the joint, even without caulking, is unlikely. Caulking of the interior mullions is a simple task, carried out by experienced crews thousands of times and inspected by Mr. O'Connell, an expert who has been in the business most of his working life. Once caulked, water cannot enter. I find that the mullion joints were properly caulked during window installation.

(2) It was accepted by Mr. Midgley that the penetration of water could have been the result of failure of any one of premature caulking, failure of precast joints, roof leaks and condensation buildup inside the windows.

(3) The two specific complaints of damage inside the units were made long after the contractual warranty period. Caulking used in the early 1970's was known to dry up and fail in time. It is a continuing maintenance problem in any building. I am satisfied that the original caulking installed by J. McBride & Sons Ltd. was done in a workmanlike manner, and that the defendant acted reasonably throughout in repairing problems that arose in this area from 1975 until at least 1978 or 1979.

It is unnecessary for me to decide the legal issue raised by the plaintiff James Luff as to the liability of a builder to subsequent purchasers in negligence. I have some doubt that cases such as Anns v. London Borough of Merton, [1977] 2 All E.R. 492, and City of Kamloops v. Nielsen (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 641, have any application to claims that by their very nature are warranty claims involving patent defects and not substantial construction errors of a latent nature. A subsequent purchaser should not be entitled to enjoy the benefits of a reduced purchase price and as well be entitled to damages from a third party builder.

The damages claimed for defective screens, for caulking the vertical mullions and for interior repairs should be reduced because they were not wholly established, and because they constituted improvements.

I reduce the damages claimed for screens by one-half, and for caulking the vertical mullions to $4,733.40 for Corporation No. 75 and $1,980 for Corporation No. 88. The claims made by Audrey Bayles and James Luff should also be reduced by half because of depreciation and betterment.

The action and the third party proceedings are dismissed.

TRAINOR J.

1 GOODMAN J.A. (endorsement):— In our opinion, the trial judge was in the best position to determine the question as to the reasonableness of the various third party proceedings instituted and continued to their conclusion by the defendant, who is the appellant in these proceedings. We are not persuaded that we should interfere in any way with the discretion which the trial judge has exercised in awarding costs. We are of the opinion that the award is one of costs based on the individual liability of the plaintiff and defendant for the third party costs, but as between themselves on a 50-50 basis.

2 Accordingly, the appeals are dismissed, but in the circumstances of this case, there will be no costs of the appeal and the application for leave to appeal.

REINERS v. MERCER,

66 O.R. (2d) 641 ONTARIO (Dist. Ct. -- West D.C.J.) December 23, 1988 Corporations -- Condominium corporation -- Application to declare void election of directors -- Majority of votes of owners present favouring removal of directors -- Application dismissed, majority of votes cast determining -- Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, ss. 15(8), 22(6). This was an application for an order declaring void the election of certain directors of a condominium corporation. Prior to November 7, 1988, the applicants were directors of the corporation. On that date, a special general meeting was held pursuant to the request of certain owners to consider the removal of directors. No issue was taken as to the validity of the meeting. The majority of the votes cast were in favour of removal. A majority of the owners was present. HELD: The application was dismissed. The requirement of the majority representation contained in s. 15(8) of the Condominium Act related to the constitution of the meeting. Once the meeting was validly constituted actions taken thereat were to be determined by the majority of the votes cast.

York Condominium Corp. No. 288 v. Harbour Square Commercial Inc.

respondents/defendants

No. 308467/87

Ontario District Court - Judicial District of York
Davidson D.C.J.

May 6, 1988.

Counsel:

Peter Downard, for the plaintiff.
Alden Dychtenberg, for the defendant Harbour Square Commercial Inc.
Judith Bell, for the defendant Jay-Cor Holdings Ltd.
Harvey Mandel, for the defendant Harbour Square Deli Ltd.
Edwin Upenieks, for the defendant Gundel's Holdings Inc.

1 DAVIDSON D.C.J.:— This is a motion for summary judgment on one of the claims in the statement of claim being a claim for an order pursuant to s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, directing the defendants to comply with the declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations of the plaintiff and thus permanently refrain from trespassing upon the common elements of the plaintiff including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the space in front of and adjacent to the front wall and windows of commercial unit 1, level 1 of the plaintiff condominium.

2 The statement of claim seeks other relief including an interlocutory injunction, damages for trespass, punitive and exemplary damages and prejudgment interest. All defendants have filed statements of defence and Harbour Square Deli Ltd. (Deli) and Harbour Square Commercial Inc. (Commercial) cross-claim against other defendants.

3 It is the position of counsel on behalf of the plaintiff that there is no genuine issue for trial as between the plaintiff and the defendants in respect to the claim directing the defendants to comply as claimed in the statement of claim and the motion for judgment.

4 The plaintiff corporation in downtown Toronto on the waterfront contains 539 residential units and three commercial units.

5 The defendant, Commercial, is the owner of a commercial unit of the corporation, unit 1, level 1.

6 The defendants, Jay-Cor Holdings Ltd. (Jay-Cor), Gundel's Holdings Inc. (Gundel's) and Deli have separate leases of separate parts of the unit from Commercial at which each carry on businesses (Jay-Cor carries on a grocery business, Gundel's, a restaurant business and Deli, a restaurant business). Deli purchased its business from Jay-Cor by agreement July 21, 1986 and took over operation of the business in October 1986.

7 The plaintiff corporation is divided into units and common elements by the corporation's declaration which provides that the common elements of the corporation are all of the properties owned by the corporation except its units.

8 The declaration also provides that the bounds of the unit extend no further than the floor, ceiling, windows and walls of the unit. The front boundary of the unit is the unit side face of its front windows.

9 The declaration provides further:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, this declaration and the by-laws and any rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto, each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the common elements, except as herein otherwise provided."

10 The rules and regulations of the corporation enacted pursuant to by-law No. 1 of the corporation provides:

"No unit owner shall do, or permit anything to be done, in his unit ... which will in any way ... obstruct or interfere with the rights of other owners, or in any way injure or annoy them."

11 Further, the rules and regulations provide:

"The owner shall not place, leave or permit to be placed or left in or upon the common elements (except those of which he has the exclusive use) any goods or things."

12 The declaration defines "exclusive use" common elements and they do not include the space in front of the front wall and windows of the unit.

13 The rules and regulations also require:

"The sidewalks entry, passageways and stairways used in common by the owners shall not be obstructed by any of the owners or used by them for any purpose other than ingress and egress to and from their respective units."

14 Finally, the declaration and the Condominium Act by s. 31(1) and 49(4) provide all owners and tenants of units must comply with the declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations of the corporation and that an owner who leases his or her unit remains jointly and severally bound with his or her tenant to satisfy this obligation.

15 I now deal with the alleged violations in respect to the various defendants.

Jay-Cor

16 Jay-Cor, as early as 1983, installed several tables and chairs on the common elements directly in front of the unit it leased for its business.

17 Jay-Cor advised the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation in 1984 that they wished to obtain a liquor licence for the portion of the common elements which they had begun to use in the restaurant business. The board indicated that it was indifferent to the use but was concerned that it had no legal right to allow the use and that it would be required to end Jay-Cor's use of the common elements if residents of the corporation complained about that use. The board decided that it would tolerate the use pending claims and caused Jay-Cor to be advised that it could proceed at its own risk. There does not appear to be any contradiction of this position asserted on behalf of the plaintiff.

18 As at April 25, 1984, the director of property management on behalf of York Condominium Corp. No. 510, located adjacent to the plaintiff condominium, objected to the liquor licence application for the patio area, taking the position that it was the board's view that the location of the licence patio was much too close to private residential land use. It is apparent that the director of property management for the plaintiff and for York Condominium Corp. No. 510 is one and the same person, John Oakes, and, indeed, John Oakes authored the letter on behalf of the plaintiff corporation on March 29, 1984, to Jay-Cor stating, inter alia: "The views of the Board at this point are reasonably supportive of your proposed use for this patio."

19 No objection was filed by the plaintiff corporation with the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario. The evidence, however, is as well per Keith Edwards of the plaintiff corporation on a cross-examination of his affidavit at p. 52, question 222 that the plaintiff corporation did not receive any written notice of the proposed patio liquor licence application. In any event there was no other formal objection to Jay-Cor from the plaintiff, to the use of the patio area and a liquor licence for the patio area was issued by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario on July 9, 1985.

20 Jay-Cor used the outdoor premises during the summers of 1984, 1985 and 1986 without any other written objection from the plaintiff. In 1985 Jay-Cor had also begun to use the common elements in front of that part of the unit in which it ran a market and continued to do so through the summer and fall of 1987.

21 About October 1986 Jay-Cor sold that part of the business which included the licensed patio to Deli.

Deli

22 Deli continued with the use of the outdoor patio upon the purchase of the business from Jay-Cor for the rest of the outdoor eating season of 1986. No objection was taken.

23 On May 21, 1987, the plaintiff corporation wrote to Deli that it was to spruce up the patio area and, accordingly, Deli expended a sum of money in repainting the fence, potting flowers and in a general clean-up in anticipation of the summer 1987 season.

24 On June 24, 1987, the plaintiff corporation wrote to Deli requesting it to stop using the patio area. The letter recites receiving numerous complaints about the use of the common elements and July 15, 1987 was given as the date for it to stop using or placing material on any part of the common elements in default of which the plaintiff indicated that it would be forced to take legal action.

25 By letter July 7, 1987 Deli requested a meeting with the plaintiff corporation as it had spent close to $1,000 for the clean-up and felt that there was a misunderstanding which might be discussed at a board meeting. There was apparently no response to this request.

Gundel's

26 In the summer of 1985 Gundel's installed tables and chairs on the common elements in front of its unit where it carried on a delicatessen business and that has continued through the summer and fall of 1987.

27 The use has been augmented by an antique cart to service the patio area and the number of tables and chairs was doubled to 8 and 24 respectively. During the operative summer months the furniture is apparently taken indoors at night, a free-standing sign remains outdoors and it is said that the patio is favourably received by Gundel's customers.

28 In its use of these common elements it is apparent that Gundel's has provided for weekly window washing and sidewalk sweeping and general maintenance of that area.

29 It is apparent from a number of photographs filed on the motion that the outdoor utilization is carried on in a colourful attractive and pleasing manner. It appears to me to be fully in accord with the accepted standard of dozens, if not hundreds of other outdoor eateries and markets.

30 Although there may not have been, and appear not to have been at least in the case of Gundel's, any complaints to the defendants from anyone about the use of the premises, it is apparent that the board of directors of the corporation began receiving complaints by early 1987 and as at April 29, 1987 letters were directed to all of the defendants by the plaintiff corporation advising them of the complaints and reminding the defendants that they occupied the common elements "strictly at the pleasure of the Board of Directors".

31 In May of 1987 at the Eleventh Annual General Meeting of the corporation in response to complaints, the president agreed to ask the defendants who were contravening the regulations to remove their goods from the common elements. Thereafter, by a letter dated June 24, 1987 to Jay-Cor, Deli and Gundel's, those defendants were required to "[s]top using or placing material on any part of the common elements" and a letter of even date went to Commercial advising it of the requirement. The only reply was from Deli previously referred to.

32 Although it is suggested by the defendants that the portions being used by them are not positively delineated as "common elements", I am satisfied on the material and as recited above that, indeed, the defendants are occupying the common elements for the purposes of their outdoor business.

33 By s. 31(1) and 49(4) of the Condominium Act, a duty is imposed on every owner and lessee in a condominium corporation to comply with the Act and the declaration by-laws and rules of the condominium.

34 Section 7(4) provides "[e]ach owner may make reasonable use of the common elements subject to this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules." By Section 7(6) "[e]xcept as provided by this Act, the common elements shall not be partitioned or divided."

35 By ss. 9(1), 1(1)(x) and 38(1), there is required that a special by-law requiring confirmation by the owners of at least two-thirds of the units must be passed before any part of the common elements may be leased or any easement or licence regarding the common elements granted. Before the common elements may be altered, improved, renovated or expanded, the approval of owners of 80 per cent of the condominium units is required. There has been no special by-law passed by the plaintiff corporation which would permit any of the dealings with the common elements in the way that has been done by these defendants.

36 As was stated in the decision Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 v. Rochon (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545, per Finlayson J. at p. 552:

"The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound."

37 And further at p. 555:

"A condominium corporation is a creature of statute and has no greater authority than as set out in the Condominium Act."

38 The defendants all submit, in part, that their use of these areas is only seasonal and in the case of one defendant, not only seasonal but during daylight and early evening hours. To my way of thinking this is not a distinction which would take the use out of the declaration, rules and regulations and the Act.

39 The main thrust of the defence would appear to be that all defendants were given express consent by the board of directors to use the elements in the way they have or, at worst, there was silent acquiescence, that all defendants have expended and continue to expend monies in maintaining these common elements and that the plaintiff should be thereby estopped from denying a defendant's right and entitlement to continue such use.

40 As to the consent having been given by the board of directors it is apparent that it has been given on a "use at your own risk" basis to Jay-Cor and as regards Deli and Gundel's without a request of the plaintiff corporation for approval and, as far as I can see, without any apparent consideration flowing from the defendants to the plaintiff corporation. Even so, the authority of Carleton, supra, would appear to me to restrict the use of the common elements in the manner undertaken by the defendants unless it was shown to be within the authority of the Act, declaration, by-laws, rules or regulations.

41 The Act, by s. 61 provides: "This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary."

42 Additionally, it would appear any detriment for expense in maintenance would be balanced by a corresponding benefit use of a rent free space with a view to profit.

43 Even if it could be said that the conduct of the plaintiff and the reliance thereon by the defendants to its detriment could be said to have been demonstrated here (and I do not feel on the evidence that it has), to give effect to an estoppel defence and to permit the occupation and use of the common elements to be carried on would be in direct violation of the statutory duties of the condominium corporation and the statutory obligations of the defendants.

44 The condominium corporation is created by the statute. The statute is for the benefit of a section of the public, that is, on the grounds of public policy.

45 I have reference to the decision Maritime Electric Company v. General Dairies Limited, [1937] 1 All E.R. 748, p. 591, a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In that case the plaintiff, an electrical power company, subject to the Public Utilities Act, R.S.N.B. 1927, c. 127, was required to furnish certain services by which its charges were strictly prescribed. The statute prohibited, under penalty, any giving of the service or receiving same at a less rate than prescribed. Owing to an error made by the plaintiff, the services were under-charged and when the plaintiff sued for the difference between the amounts paid and the correct amounts, the defendant pleaded estoppel. It is apparent in that decision that the under-charging arose by error or mistake and not by an agreement between the parties. At p. 596, Lord Maugham stated:

"The sections of the Public Utilities Act which are here in question are sections enacted for the benefit of a section of the public, that is, on grounds of public policy in a general sense. In such a case (and their Lordships do not propose to express any opinion as to statutes which are not within this category) where as here the statute imposes a duty of a positive kind, not avoidable by the performance of any formality, for the doing of the very act which the plaintiff seeks to do, it is not open to the defendant to set up an estoppel to prevent it. This conclusion must follow from the circumstance that an estoppel is only a rule of evidence which under certain special circumstances can be invoked by a party to an action; it cannot therefore avail in such a case to release the plaintiff from an obligation to obey such a statute, nor can it enable the defendant to escape from a statutory obligation of such a kind on his part. It is immaterial whether the obligation is onerous or otherwise to the party suing. The duty of each party is to obey the law."

46 Similarly in Western Fish Products Ltd. v. Penwith District Council, [1981] 2 All E.R. 204, the Court of Appeal held that in respect to a local planning authority operating under a statute, an estoppel could not be raised to prevent such statutory body exercising its statutory discretion or performing its statutory duty.

47 In my opinion, the principles applicable in those decisions are equally applicable in the case before me and I conclude that the defence of an estoppel would not prevail even if its ingredients were established.

48 In the final analysis, therefore, I am of the view that there is no genuine issue for trial in respect to this claim asserted by the plaintiff and judgment will go in favour of the plaintiff against all the defendants in the wording of Item A in the notice of motion.

49 If the parties are unable to agree on the disposition of costs, an appointment may be arranged for submissions at counsels' convenience.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 624 v. Ramdial

IN THE MATTER OF an Application under Section 49 of The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980 Chapter 84, as amended

Between

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation Number 624, Applicant, and
George Ramdial, Nilufar Ramdial and Lana Salmon, Respondents

Action No. M159582/88

Ontario District Court - York Judicial District
Toronto, Ontario
Hudson D.C.J.

January 29, 1988

Joyce Harris and Howard W. Winkler, for the Applicant.

Irvin A. Rosen, for the Respondents.

HUDSON D.C.J. (orally):— Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial are the owners of 20 Dean Park Road, Penthouse No. 4, in Metropolitan Toronto, Condominium Corporation Number 624. There are 432 units in this condominium.

Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial have entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with Lana M. Salmon to sell their penthouse to Ms. Salmon for $133,000. The closing date provided in the agreement is December 1st, 1987, but I am advised that this has been extended to February the 1st, 1988.

On January 21st, 1988, the Condominium Corporation learned that Ms. Salmon had a 13 year old child and that it was intended that Ms. Salmon and her 13 year old child would occupy the penthouse after the purchase was completed.

The declaration of the Condominium Corporation provides in Section 35 as follows:

s. 35 - "Adult Occupancy No unit owner or lessee of a unit shall permit anyone under the age of 16 years to ordinarily reside in such unit. Any unit resale or lease by anyone other than the declarant must be consented to by the Board of Directors within 15 days of their receipt of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale or lease, or alternatively, the Corporation may purchase or lease such unit on the same terms and conditions as set out in the said Agreement of Purchase and Sale or lease."

Section 35 was passed pursuant to Section 3(3)(b) of the Condominium Act, which provides as follows:

3(3)(b) "..... a declaration may contain,

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;"

And also:

"(c) provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests"

The Corporation commenced this application for an injunction to prevent the sale because of the duty imposed upon it by Section 12(3) of the Condominium Act as follows:

12(3) "The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules."

Not only does the Corporation have a duty to effect compliance and, therefore, a duty to commence this application, but the owners of the units have a right to have the corporation perform its duty, and it is provided in Section 12(5) of the Condominium Act as follows:

12(5) "Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules."

In addition to the above, Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial are bound by Section 35 of the declaration because of Section 31(1) of the Condominium Act, which provides as follows:

31(1) "Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules."

In Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al 59 O.R. (2d) 545 is a case in which the developer of the condominium corporation made a special arrangement with a prospective purchaser of a penthouse so as to allow the prospective purchaser to put a television dish on the roof of the condominium. This was a privilege not afforded to the other unit owners.

Mr. Justice Finlayson, speaking for the Court of Appeal, at page 549 wrote:

"The Condominium Act was passed to permit individuals to be owners of the freehold estate in residential units in a building as opposed to tenants in an apartment building. This means that they have disposable real property which is an investment and not simply an expense. Its purchase can be financed by mortgage or lien in the same manner as any piece of real estate. The unit owners are tenants in common and have all the rights of any owner of land within the description of their unit (s. 1(1)(q) and (z)). By the nature of the building, there are certain 'common elements' which are defined by s. 1(1)(g) as 'all the property except the units'. It is therefore necessary that there be detailed agreements with respect to the maintenance, operation and occupation of these common elements so that the responsibilities and privileges of each unit owner are clearly established."

Section 2(1) of the Ontario Human Rights Code provides:

2(1) "Every person has a right to equal treatment with respect to the occupancy of accommodation, without discrimination because of age family status"

Age is defined as follows in Section 9(1)(a):

9(1)(a) "'age' means an age that is 'eighteen years or more"

Therefore, in my opinion, Section 35 of the condominium declaration is not contrary to the Human Rights Code, because the declaration only restricts the occupancy of anyone under the age of 16.

Family status is defined as follows, in Section 9(1)(d):

9(1)(d) "'family status' means the status of being in a parent and child relationship".

Counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial has submitted that Section 35 of the declaration is contrary to the Code because it is discriminating against a mother and her child in preventing them from occupying the unit.

I disagree. The discrimination is not against parent and child. If the child is 16 years of age or older, then the child can occupy the unit with her or her parent or parents. The discrimination is respect to age, not with respect to family status.

Re Royal Insurance Co. of Canada and Ontario Human Rights Commission et al 51 O.R. (2d) 797 dealt with a case where a parent wanted to have his 16 year old child included in the parents' car insurance policy. The Royal Insurance Co. wanted an additional premium and the parent objected on the basis that it was discriminatory and, therefore, improper as being against the Human Rights Code. The parents' objection was that the additional premium was based on family status and was discriminatory.

Mr. Justice Montgomery, speaking for the Divisional Court, wrote at page 800:

"I am of the view that the complaint does not raise the family status ground of discrimination. It is not the parent and child relationship that causes the increase in premiums. Rather, it is the fact that the occasional driver is under 25 years of age. All parents are treated identically with respect to the rates of occasional drivers."

In my opinion, in the case at bar, Mrs. Salmon's child cannot occupy the unit in this Condominium Corporation because of the child's age and not because of the fact that it is her child as opposed to a stranger.

Therefore, in the result, an order will go requiring the respondents to comply with Section 35 of the Declaration of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation Number 624. There will be an injunction as requested in paragraph (c). I will also make an order abridging the time for service of this notice of application.

The reason I am making that order is because the Condominium Corporation only learned of the fact that Mrs. Salmon had a 13 year old child on January the 21st, and the application had to be dealt with today because, I am told by counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial, the solicitor acting for Mrs. Salmon would not consent to a postponement or a further postponement of the closing of the transaction.

If it had been possible to obtain a postponement of the closing of the transaction, I would have adjourned this hearing so as to provide an opportunity to have counsel for the Human Rights Commission appear and make submissions, but the application had to be dealt with today.

I will endorse the application record, order to go in terms of (a), (b) and (c).

I am sorry for the respondents and I appreciate that this is difficult for them but they are, after all, the authors of their own misfortune. They knew the provisions of the declaration with respect to adult occupancy and they chose to either disregard or to run the risks of an adverse judicial decision.

What about costs?

-- (Reporter's Note: Submissions made to the Court by counsel, re: costs, reported but not transcribed.)

THE COURT: It would appear to me from Section 35 of the declaration, that somewhere it should be provided that any agreement of purchase and sale or agreement to lease should be submitted to the Board of Directors for approval.

MR. ROSEN: Excuse me, sir. That was done in this case but it was only done last week.

THE COURT: Well, is it not supposed to be submitted for approval in a reasonably prompt manner?

MRS. HARRIS: Section 35 provides that it be within 15 days of receipt.

THE COURT: Of their receipt; I think that is the Board of Directors.

MRS. HARRIS: Yes, you're right. You're right.

-- (Reporter's Note: Further discussion between the Court and counsel, reported but not transcribed.)

THE COURT: Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial were unable to advertise in the papers that the building was for adult occupancy. They were advised by the Human Rights Commission that such a provision was contrary to the Human Rights Code.

In my opinion, they would clearly have been well advised to consult with the Directors of the Condominium Corporation before agreeing to sell their penthouse to a lady with a child under 16 years of age.

However, they were not acting in a completely irrational or unreasonable fashion after having been advised by the Human Rights Commission and after having been refused by the newspapers. This is a matter of first impression. This precise issue has apparently not come before the Courts prior to this.

In addition to all of that, Mr. and Mrs. Ramdial are clearly going to suffer a loss; if only by virtue of the fact that they are now the proud owners of two units.

I think, in fairness, there should be no costs.

Now, Mr. Rosen, in future you will have a precedent to which you can refer your clients.

MR. ROSEN: Thank you, sir.

MRS. HARRIS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You're welcome.

BROOKE J.A. (orally):— We are all of the view that the motion to quash must succeed.

We think any issue between the parties is moot. We are also persuaded that the record before the District Court judge is so deficient and incomplete that it would be wrong to let this appeal proceed, based as it is on five issues not raised before the District Court judge. These issues include important questions as to the constitutional validity of some sections of the Ontario Human Rights Code, which issues we think it likely will find their way here on a proper record one day. The record is deficient and incomplete because the appellant did not appear and make submissions to the District Court judge and, further, when the judge expressed the view that it would be best to adjourn the proceedings to hear from counsel for the Ontario Human Rights Commission, the parties refused to adjourn and insisted on proceeding rather than defer the closing of the transaction.

In the circumstances then, the motion succeeds, the appeal is quashed and the respondent, who is the appellant, will pay the costs.

Boychuk v. Essex Condominium Corp. No. 2

Between

Norman Boychuk, Diane Boychuk, Robert Clark, Sally Clark, Clay Hackett, Myrna Hackett, Ronald Doherty, Cheryl Doherty and Rose Marie Rankin, Plaintiffs, and Essex Condominium Corporation No. 2, Defendant

Ontario District Court - Essex County
Windsor, Ontario
Zalev D.C.J.

March 16, 1987

M.W. Shulgan, for the Plaintiffs.

R.J. Reynolds, for the Defendants.

ZALEV D.C.J.:— In this action the Plaintiffs claim a declaration that the work contracted by the Defendant for the purpose of roof replacements required the consent of 80 percent of owners of units in the Defendant as prescribed by s. 38 of the Condominium Act; a declaration that the requisite consent of the owners of units in the Defendant was not obtained before contracting the said work; a declaration that assessments purported to have been levied under the Condominium Act by the Defendant against the Plaintiffs' units are invalid; a declaration that the liens registered on behalf of the Defendant against the Plaintiffs' units as a result of the Plaintiffs' failure to pay the said assessment are invalid; and an order directing that the said liens be vacated.

The Defendant counter-claims for a declaration that the assessments levied by the Defendant against the Plaintiffs' units are valid; a declaration that the lien registered on behalf of the Defendant against the units owned by the Plaintiffs are valid; against each of the Plaintiffs the sum of $2,000.00 and prejudgment interest on account of common expenses.

It was not necessary to hear any evidence, the parties having filed an agreed statement of fact. Those facts are as follows:

1. The Defendant is a condominium corporation duly constituted under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. It consists of 125 residential condominium units and common elements apportioned amongst 23 buildings, each building contained under a common roof, as follows:

4 Buildings of 4 Units
8 Buildings of 5 Units
8 Buildings of 6 Units
3 Buildings of 7 Units

2. The Plaintiffs are the owners of the following units in the Defendant:

NAME UNIT

Norman Boychuk & Diane Boychuk 81
Robert Clark & Sally Clark 64
Clay Hackett & Myrna Hackett 65
Ronald Doherty & Cheryl Doherty 3
Rose Marie Rankin 33

3. Since approximately 1982 numerous and repeated problems have been experienced with the roof of each of the said buildings. Intermittent repairs have been made to the roofs on an "as needed" basis. It then became evident that all roofs required replacement.

4. During 1984 the Board of Directors of the Defendant addressed the necessity to resolve the continuing problems with the roofs of the condominium premises. A number of consultants were hired to conduct investigations into the nature of the roof problems and a number of contractors were invited to submit tenders setting forth the costs to be incurred to resolve the problems. The tenders presented to the Defendant ranged from approximately $250,000.00 to approximately $790,000.00. After consideration of all tenders a contract was awarded to Gauthier Roofing who was the contractor that submitted the lowest tender.

5. The Board of Directors of the Defendant conducted general meetings on a regular basis to keep the owners of units in the condominium corporation advised of the results of their ongoing investigation into this matter.

6. The Board of Directors of the Defendant conducted a general meeting of unit owners on August 30, 1984.

7. The reason for the meeting was to advise of a proposal under consideration intended to resolve the roof problems whether roof repairs would be effected.

8. The names of unit owners in attendance at that meeting were not recorded. The minutes of the said meeting reflect that owners of approximately 60 units out of the 125 were present and that of that number approximately 80% were in favour of effecting roof repairs under a plan which would provide all roofs to be repaired during the Fall of 1984. At the conclusion of the August 30, 1984 meeting the individuals in attendance were advised that another meeting would be conducted on September 11, 1984 and a notice to that effect dated September 5, 1984 was prepared.

9. A general meeting of the Defendants Corporation was conducted on September 11, 1984 after notice. Again no record was maintained of the names of owners in attendance at that meeting however the minutes of the meeting reflect that a show of hands indicated that the owners of 58 units of the 125 units were represented. Therefore, the meeting was attended by less than 50% of the unit owners. The purpose was to consider complete arrangements for roof work. It was said by Marnie Sadler, resident, that approximately 56 unit owners had expressed a willingness to pay an amount for roof work as noted by signatures recorded to that effect. At that meeting motions to the following effect were passed:

- (a) the Defendant would open a special account to receive funds for roof repairs;
- (b) owners were requested to pay $1,000.00 into the account prior to October 15, 1984 and $1,000.00 prior to November 15, 1984.

10. In addition to the above mentioned there were General Meetings conducted July 24 and August 7, 1984 and a Board meeting conducted September 11, 1984. There are no other Minutes of meetings conducted as meetings of the Board of Directors of the Defendant or as General Meetings of owners of units in the Defendant Corporation to reflect motions being passed to relate to the following:

- (a) to effect roof repairs;
- (b) to authorize a representative of the Condominium Corporation to contract with a roofing contractor to effect repairs;
- (c) to pass a by-law, resolution or other similar enactment to levy a special assessment for common fees or increase common fees.

11. The roof of each building is part of the common elements of the Defendant.

12. The Plaintiffs did not remit payment of the sum of $2,000.00 into the account opened by the Defendant for roof work however a payment was made on behalf of the Plaintiffs, Hackett, by their mortgagee.

13. At the time the work was contracted the Defendant's reserve fund amounted to approximately $50,000.00.

14. The Defendant registered liens against the units owned by each of the Plaintiffs on January 11, 1985 claiming that each of the Plaintiffs were in default of making payment of the $2,000.00 "special assessment" levied by the Defendant.

15. The work has been completed by Gauthier Roofing and it has been paid.

16. All owners of units other than the Plaintiffs have paid the assessment.

17. The extracts from the Defendant's Declaration and By-Laws are validly enacted and the Minutes of meetings conducted as General Meetings of the owners or as meetings of the Board of Directors of the Defendant accurately reflect the nature of the business said to be conducted at such meetings.

The parties have also filed an agreed bundle of documents (Exhibit 2) which includes the declaration, By-law No. 1, Minutes of Meetings of Directors and Owners, various notices, and the contract with Gauthier Roofing.

The first question to be decided is this: Did the Board have the authority to enter into the contract with Gauthier Roofing and to pay Gauthier Roofing the sum due to it on completion of the work?

It is submitted by the Plaintiffs that such work (to use a neutral term) constituted "substantial addition, alteration, improvement to or renovation of the common elements" within the meaning of s. 38(1) of the Condominium Act, and such was not authorized by a vote of 80% of the Unit owners as required by that section.

The Defendant submits that this work was ordinary maintenance or repair effected under the Defendant's duty to maintain the common elements under s. 41(3) of the Act. Counsel referred to two cases in which s. 38(1) was considered.

In Dyer v. York Condominium Corporation No. 274, 14 R.P.R. 154, Hollingworth J., held that the expenditure of $23,800.00 for caulking to prevent water seeping into the building which caused damage to the floors and walls of the individual units was not within s. 38(1). It was held that this was not a substantial addition, alteration, or improvement, but was maintenance within the meaning of s. 41. The Court adopted the meaning of maintenance in s. 41(3) as set out in Webster's New World Dictionary: to keep up, or to keep in a certain condition, e.g. good repair, to preserve.

In Ronita Properties Limited, v. York Condominium Corporation No. 320 (January 27, 1981, unreported) Cornish C.C.J., considered the expenditure of $140,000.00 to repair leaking roofs. There were 70 units in the Condominium. The Honourable Judge Cornish held that this was not within s. 38(1).

In considering the meaning to be ascribed to the words in the Act, I bear in mind two fundamental principles. The first is s. 10 of the Interpretation Act, and the second is set out in Driedger, the Construction of Statutes, p. 67:

"...The words of an Act are to be read in their entire context in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act and the intention of Parliament."

In reviewing the whole Act I find a number of different expressions used in relation to work done on or to the Condominium property, and these are:

"Repair" - s. 4(3)(e) and 42(1)

"Maintain" - s. 4(3)(e), s. 41(1), and s. 41(3)

"Maintenance" - s. 28(1)(e)

"Major Repair" - s. 36(1)
"Replacement" - s. 36(1)
"Addition" - s. 38(1)
"Alteration" - s. 38(1)
"Improvement" - s. 38(1)
"Renovation" - s. 38(1)
"Repair after damage" - s. 41(1)
"Repair of improvements" - s. 41(1)

I have also reviewed a great many cases in which all of these terms have been considered by Courts in England and across Canada in cases involving settled estates, real property assessment, landlord and tenant, and municipal By-laws. I do not think it necessary to cite them. They are of assistance in a general way only in showing how the Courts have approached the problem of interpreting words which in some contexts may be synonymous and often overlapping. I proceed on the basis that what is "major" and what is "substantial" are questions of fact to be decided on the evidence in each case. In determining whether or not the work done on or to the property is "repair", "maintenance", "addition", "alteration", etc., it is necessary to look at the state of the property before the work was done, consider the work done as a whole, and compare that with the result.

From the date of the declaration and By-law No. 1, I infer that these buildings were erected about the year 1970. The roof problems are described in some detail in the Minutes of various meetings in 1983 and 1984. I do not think it necessary to set out an exhaustive definition of the key words in s. 38(1) because I have concluded that what was done here fits within the general concept of maintenance. The words most aptly describing the work are "major repair and replacement" of common elements in s. 36(1). S. 36(2) requires the Corporation to set up one or more reserve funds. S. 36(1) defines a reserve fund as a fund set up by the Condominium Corporation for "major repairs and replacement of common elements... including...roofs...." Dictionary definitions support the conclusion that maintenance includes repair.

The words "addition" and "alteration" in s. 36(1) connote something added to the structure or some changes in the structure. "Improvement" carries with it the idea of betterment of an existing facility or enhancement in value, not merely replacement of something which was already there and worn out. Whatever "renovation" may be, in my view it does not include replacement of a leaky roof.

I draw some support from my approach from the Judgment of our Court of Appeal in York Condominium Corporation No. 59 vs. York Condominium Corporation No. 87, 42 O.R. (2d) (337). While it does not deal directly with the words of the Act, the Judgment of Cory J.A., at page 340 sets out what I regard to be a proper approach to the issues in this case:

"There is thus now, as there was in 1972, a statutory basis for the declaration to provide what are the common expenses, the occupation of common elements and an allocation of the obligation to repair them. This is just what the declarations in question did in this case. As well, s. 41 of the Act imposes upon Corporations an obligation to repair after damage and to maintain common elements.

As far as possible and with due regard for the particular mutual covenants of the individual owners, the Courts should bring a broad and equitable approach to the resolution of their problems."

And at page 341:

"Although this case does not deal with individual Condominium owners within a single Condominium, it is concerned with the relationship between two Condominium Corporations which form integral parts of a composite plan for Condominium living. The development plan contemplated the mutual enjoyment and use of the pool by the occupants of both Condominium Corporations. The mutual enjoyment of a facility calls for a mutual obligation of repair.

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the Court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

The Declarations of the parties make reference to the 'maintenance' and 'repair' of the recreational facility. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines these words in part as follows:

'Repair' - to restore to good condition renewal or replacement of decayed or damaged parts or by refixing what has given away; to mend;

'Maintain' to keep in repair;

There is nothing in these definitions that would restrict or narrow their meaning as contended by the Appellant. Rather, giving these words their original meaning, they are quite sufficient to encompass the repairs required to the roof of the pool. There is no reason why the Appellant should not be obligated to pay its share for the 'renewal or replacement of the decayed or damaged parts'."

Having concluded that s. 38 does not apply to this case, I turn to the second question: Was the assessment of $2,000.00 per unit validly enacted?

The Plaintiffs' submit that the provisions of the Act and the Corporations procedural By-law were not followed and that the purported assessment cannot be enforced against the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs' rely on Article 6.05 of By-law No. 1 which provides:

"The members, by a vote of members who own sixty-six and two-thirds percentage of the common elements, may make By-laws:

(h) Regulating the Assessment and collection of contributions toward common expenses."

The Plaintiffs submit that proper notices of meetings were never sent to the owners, a proper quorum of owners was not present at any meeting of the owners when this matter was discussed, no vote was ever taken, and no By-law was ever passed authorizing such an assessment. Further, the signing of the Gauthier Roofing contract was never properly authorized by the Board.

It is to be noted that the Declaration and By-law No. 1 were drafted in accordance with the Act as it stood in 1970. Substantial amendments were made to the Act and were in force at the time the Board and owners were considering the roof problems in 1983 and 1984. In my view it was then open to the Board of Directors to pass a By-law under s. 28(h) of the Act which authorizes the Board to pass By-laws to govern the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses. S. 28(2) provides that such a By-law is not effective until it is confirmed by the owners who own not less than fifty one percent of the Units at a meeting duly called for that purpose.

At a meeting of the Board on August 23, 1984 a motion was made and carried "to ask each unit owner to pay $2,000.00 and to use the $50,000.00 reserve fund to effect all above discussed roof repairs." The discussion immediately preceding concerned with the work to be done and which eventually was done by Gauthier Roofing. Obviously, this appears to be a mere resolution and not a By-law.

Meetings of the owners were held on August 30, 1984 and September 11, 1984 at which time the roof work and the assessment were discussed. I am prepared to assume that sufficient notice of these meetings was not given. It is clear that there was no confirmation within s. 28(2) by the Unit owners.

With respect to the contract with Gauthier Roofing, the Board dealt with that matter at its meeting on August 23, 1984. A motion was made and carried as follows:

"Contracts for roofs be awarded to Gauthier Roofing to be done in accordance with the specifications drawn up by Glenn Lemire and subject to negotiation of price pending actual number of Units per block being reroofed."

At the Board meeting of September 11, 1984 a motion was made and carried that "we contacted Gauthier Roofing and instruct them to begin the Romero block immediately."

It should be borne in mind that it was necessary for the Board to act quickly to have the work done before bad weather set in. The contractor's price was dependant on doing all units together and not piecemeal. Further, it has to be remembered that the Board members are not lawyers. There was no suggestion that they were acting in bad faith. In these circumstances what was done should be accepted if there was sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Act and By-law. Given the relationship of the parties, this is not a case for a narrow technical analysis. I am satisfied that the motions passed by the Board are sufficient authorization for execution of the contract with Gauthier Roofing on September 15, 1984. I also conclude that failure to call the Board's Assessment resolution a By-law is immaterial if there was proper confirmation of it by the owners.

Article 6.07 of By-law No. 1 provides that any member may at any time waive notice of any meeting and may ratify, approve and confirm any and all proceedings taken or had thereat. In my view this supplements the Act and is not void for being inconsistent with or repugnant to the Act. It is agreed that ninety six percent of the owners have paid the $2,000.00 Assessment for the roof work. I can think of no more emphatic way of voting in favour of the Assessment. I find that the Assessment was validly passed. Even if this work was properly characterized as being within s. 38(1), this would be a complete answer to the Plaintiffs' submissions. The action must therefore be dismissed.

It follows that the liens for such Assessment were validly registered against the title to the Plaintiffs' Units and the Defendant is entitled to the relief claimed in the counterclaim.

Costs will follow the event unless counsel wish to make submissions with respect to costs, in which case I may be spoken to.

Re York Condominium Corp. No. 528 and Ontario New Home
Warranty Program

60 O.R. (2d) 662

ONTARIO
HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE
DIVISIONAL COURT
GRIFFITHS, EBERLE AND ROSENBERG JJ.

22ND JUNE 1987.

The appellant notified the Ontario New Home Warranty Program within a year after its warranty took effect of water penetration and efflorescence relating to its building. The cause of the problem and appropriate method of correcting the defects were not found until after the end of the year-long limitation period. The programme denied liability on the ground that the claim was barred by s. 13(4) of the Ontario New Homes Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350.

APPEAL from a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal holding that certain claims under the Ontario New Homes Warranty Plan were statute-barred.

J. Hahn, for appellant.

B. Campbell, for respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

ROSENBERG J.:—

Nature of application

The appellant appeals to this court pursuant to s. 11 of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 274, from the decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal (the "Tribunal") rendered October 21, 1985. Section 11(5) of the said Act reads as follows:

11(5) An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal, and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar or of the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with such directions as the court considers proper.

Background

The appellant is a condominium corporation created under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, in connection with a 40-unit condominium apartment project. The appellant alleges certain construction deficiencies in the building of the condominium project by the developer. The developer is no longer available to pay any damages that the condominium corporation may be entitled to recover and, accordingly, the condominium corporation seeks to recover the maximum amount available from the fund established under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (the "Act"). The said Act provides the following:

13(1) Every vendor of a home warrants to the owner,

(a) that the home,

(i) is constructed in a workmanlike manner and is free from defects in material,

(ii) is fit for habitation, and

(iii) is constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code;

.....

(4) A warranty under subsection (1) applies only in respect of claims made thereunder within one year after the warranty takes effect, or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed.

.....

15. For the purposes of sections 13 and 14, a condominium corporation shall be deemed to be the owner of the common elements of the condominium and the warranties take effect on the date of the registration of the declaration and description.

(Emphasis added.)

Section 14 provides:

14(1) Where,

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract;

(b) an owner has a cause of action against a vendor for damages resulting from a breach of warranty; or

(c) the owner suffers damage because of a major structural defect as defined in the regulations for the purposes of section 13, and the claim is made within four years after the warranty expires or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

(Emphasis added.)

Section 23(1)(g) provides:

23(1) The Corporation may make by-laws,

.....

(g) providing for the establishment and maintenance of the guarantee fund and governing procedures for claiming and determining claims for compensation from the guarantee fund;

Under R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 726, authorized by s. 23(1) of the Act, the corporation provided in s. 4 thereof:

4(1) Each person with a claim under the Plan shall give written notice of the claim to the Corporation.

(2) Forthwith upon receipt by the Corporation of such notice, the Corporation shall furnish the claimant with such forms as it or the insurers may reasonably require for the purpose of establishing and verifying the claimant's loss.

(3) If the Corporation fails to furnish such forms, the claimant is entitled to make his claim by giving written notice to the Corporation setting forth in reasonable detail information relating to the claim.

(4) Promptly after receipt by the Corporation of all information reasonably required to be furnished to it in respect of the claim and after determination of any disputes between the claimant and the vendor as to the liability of the vendor, the Corporation shall serve notice of its decision under section 14 of the Act.

(Emphasis added.)

The major issue is whether a claim of the appellant is barred by virtue of s. 13(4) of the Act as a result of its not having been made within one year after the registration of the condominium. In its decision, the Tribunal refused to order the Ontario New Home Warranty Program to pay to the appellant $762,287.04 plus interest, or in the alternative, to order that the respondent repair the construction deficiencies.

The basis for their refusal was that the claims were not made within the one-year limitation period and further, that the respondents were not estopped from raising the limitation period as a result of responsibilities that they had assumed and letters that they had written after the expiration of the limitation period.

Facts

The declaration and description of the appellant were registered on August 13, 1980. Accordingly, the limitation period terminated at midnight on August 12, 1981.

The Condominium Act requires that the building be substantially completed and that there be a certificate of the architect to that effect at the time that the declaration is registered. Accordingly, it can be assumed that all major construction had been completed as of August 13, 1980.

At the time of the registration of the declaration creating the condominium corporation and subjecting the project to the Condominium Act, the developer was, as the developer invariably is, the owner of all of the units in the condominium project and, accordingly, in control of the board of the condominium. The practical effect of this is that the limitation period starts to run at a time when no claims will be made because the developer would at the outset be making claims against itself. The developer is required to eventually turn over the affairs of the corporation to an independent board elected by the unit owners. The timing of this will depend on how quickly units are sold. Until there is an independent board created, the only practical way in which notice can be given of defects in construction or breaches of the warranties of the builder is through the complaints of individual unit owners. Even after the independent board has been elected, it will take some time for them to become familiar with the management process and to determine their obligations under the various statutes and to make claims, if they are appropriate, under the Act. This is of some significance since one of the issues before us is whether the appellant's obligation of notice within a one-year period is fulfilled if the symptoms of problems are the subject of written notice to the respondent or whether it is required that the details of the actual defects giving rise to the symptoms and even the method of curing those defects must be contained in the notice.

By January 23, 1981, the new condominium board was submitting deficiency lists to the developer with copies to the respondent. The appellant refers to these deficiencies as water penetration and efflorescence. These lists were submitted in writing and complied with the regulations in that regard. However, the wording used was not specific. The following complaints were made in writing during the one-year period that could refer to the efflorescence, water penetration and the wall defects:

- (1) Outside walls to clean, remove stain
- (2) Grouting to repair in places
- (3) Retaining wall beside garage entrance, water leak between sections.
- (4) Leak through ceiling (when raining) on to ramp just inside garage door
- (5) Ceiling leak at Bay-41/42
- (6) Basement:

Ceiling tiles damaged by water. Seal leaks and replace tiles.

- (7) Fifth Floor:

Ceiling tiles damaged by water. Seal leaks, replace tiles.

- (8) Stain on outside walls to be removed.

Note: In addition there are a number of places in the garage and basement where leaks in foundation and floors are suspected at times of heavy rain or spring thaw.

- (9) Grouting to be inspected and repaired as necessary.
- (10) Leak at garage entrance (ceiling) to be located and sealed.
- (11) Leaks in garage ceiling at bays 32, 35, 41 and 42 to be sealed.
- (12) Leaks in wall at NW, SW and SE corners of garage to be sealed.
- (13) Basement:

Replace tiles damages by condensation.

- (14) Fifth Floor:

Replace ceiling tiles damaged by condensation.

- (15) General:

Stucco has fallen off in some places.

On February 17, 1981, one of the tenants wrote with regard to Unit 303: "I write to advise you that water damage has occurred in the above Condominium." The writer, however, expressed an opinion as to the cause of the water damage, as follows: "The water damage can be found in the Dining Room ceiling and is caused by faulty workmanship on or around the balcony pertaining to the 4th Floor Condominium (Condo 403)."

After the expiration of the warranty period, the respondent wrote to the developer on a number of occasions of which the following, extracted from some of their letters, are examples:

June 30, 1982

Once again the people of this condominium are experiencing water problems in their suites from areas that would appear to be associated with the balconies above. These complaints date back to February of 1981 and fall within the builder's first year warranty period, so it is incumbent upon your firm to perform such work as is necessary to avoid further water problems.

September 24, 1982

On September 16, 1982 an investigation was made by Construction Control Ltd. in regards to the water problems being experienced by the residents of the above condominium.

I was present during part of the time and observed the testing being done therefore, I concur with the finding of Construction Control.

One of the basic problems is the construction of the brickwork, the assembly of which is completely contrary to the Ontario Building Code regarding cavity wall construction, a cavity wall being any wall that has a space between the inner and outer wythe as is the case at 30 Flen Elm where the space between appears to be approximately 1 inch in the area observed. The Ontario Building Code, under section 4.4.5.14(1)-(3) states that "where the space is not filled, such walls shall conform to the requirements for cavity walls".

In this case the masonry is:

- (1) not parged on the back of the face wythe.
- (2) not vented to allow for dispersal of moisture entrapped between wythes.
- (3) there is no through wall flashings as required by the code.

There is also an absence of vapor barrier in some locations which again is contrary to the code.

The visual result of the existing conditions is the extreme efflorescence on the masonry and the ingress of water into areas of the building.

Further testing on a balcony slab indicates that water is penetrating at the recess in the slab which accommodates the insulation.

As these conditions were existing within the first year of the condominium's registration, and as they were noted to your firm and also to the New Home Warranty Program, it is, under the terms of your registration, the responsibility of your firm to properly make the necessary corrections to the matters at fault. Should you not do so then the New Home Warranty Program will assume your responsibility and proceed to rectify the situation where required. Should we be obliged to do this, your firm will be invoiced for all warranted work done by us, plus administrative costs (and interest where applicable), the recovery of which will be pursued by all legal means.

I would strongly suggest that a meeting be held with all interested parties within the next few days and that you call the writer upon receipt of this letter so that arrangements may be made. Should we not hear from you by the 30th, of September 1982 the New Home Warranty Program will have no choice but to act in this matter.

October 14, 1982

[Referring to the letter of September 24, 1982]

... In the letter, a copy of which is enclosed, I noted four problems with the walls of the building, all four of which contravene the Ontario Building Code. It is our mandate, that when a condominium addresses complaints to us, we order the builder to make corrections, or if he fails to do so the New Home Warranty Program assumes the warranty obligations.

November 16, 1982

Thank you for your attendance and co-operation at our meeting of the 15th.

It is my understanding that High City Holdings will start remedial work directly on two suites, 309 and 213.

- (1) Balconies -- The balcony floors will be thoroughly cleaned of all substances to allow for bonding of a traffic membrane. This membrane to be turned up at the wall and bonded to prohibit water from penetrating through the wall. Also holes will be drilled horizontally through the edge of the slab into the depression containing the insulation to allow for drainage of trapped moisture.
- (2) Walls -- The exterior brick walls of both suites will be drilled at the concrete floor slab line and wicks and/or pipes inserted at appropriate intervals to allow for venting of entrapped moisture. I would suggest these holes be sloped from below the slab line up into the cavity being careful to see that the pipe/wick is at the floor line when inserted and not above it.

It is also my understanding that these actions taken are to be monitored to judge their effectiveness and if it appears that the desired results are not obtained then further steps will be taken. Should it prove effective then High City Holdings will at the arrival of good weather next year institute a like action on all remaining masonry walls. Prompt attention need also be paid to correcting problems within the suites where damage has occurred.

Further work is to be done on the foundation walls at suites 106 and 206. The area to be dug up, waterproofed and caulked where necessary and the grade raised at the wall to increase drainage away from the building.

I would appreciate a reply to this letter informing me of your agreement to all points raised.

December 9, 1982

Further to my letter to Mr. Wurman of September 24, 1982, I must now add one more Code violation to the many that now exists regarding the masonry walls.

On December 7, 1982, a Borescope examination was done in five different locations on the building and while it showed cavities in all walls it also showed a new problem which is the total lack of ties between the inner and outer wythes.

This violates the Ontario Building Code Section 9.20.9.2. - 9.20.9.3.(1) and, if you will, 9.20.9.7.(1).

I am having a difficult time understanding how so many things could go wrong with a relatively simple, straightforward part of the construction.

I also spoke with Mr. Serota and informed him of the fact that the New Home Warranty program has now taken over the responsibility of your warranty in effecting the immediate repairs to suites 213 and 309. All costs will be invoiced to your firm with appropriate surcharges as described in my letter of December 2, 1982.

April 6, 1983

This letter is further to previous correspondence and your condominium corporation's dealings to date with Mr. Dade of this office.

I am informed by Mr. Dade that two matters of major concern to York Condominium Corporation No. 528 remain outstanding, those are; (1) water entry associated with the balcony slab/ wall junction detailing and (2) excessive efflorescence on the exterior masonry walls. It is our opinion that the rectification of these two matters should be attended to by High City Holdings Limited under the provisions of their warranty. To that end, I have today notified them that they are required to commence the repairs by May 2, 1983.

As you are aware, the Warranty Program has investigated the cause of both problems. Mr. Dade feels we are now sufficiently prepared to solve those matters and, should High City Holdings fail to honour their warranty obligations, please be assured that the Warranty Program will do so in their stead.

I trust if you have any questions regarding the Warranty Program's intentions you will contact either Mr. Dade or myself.

(Emphasis added.)

The matter was first heard by the respondent as required under s. 16 of the Act and in its decision, dated December 19, 1984, it dealt with the complaints as separate and unrelated and stated as follows:

In further review of the claims, it has become evident that there are five items to be considered and, for simplicities sake the Warranty Program has identified them as follows.

- 1) Efflorescence
- 2) Balcony slabs
- 3) Exterior wall construction
- 4) Vapour barriers
- 5) Vertical cracks in brickwork

With regard to item 1, the decision of the respondent was as follows:

(1) The problem of staining and efflorescence was reported to the Warranty Program prior to the first year anniversary of the registration of the condominium declaration and was addressed by us as a vendor's warranty matter. The masonry contractor had not in our opinion, properly cleaned the brickwork after construction as good building practice would require. In addition, some efflorescence had occurred. The Warranty Program arranged and paid for the proper cleaning of the brickwork during October 1983 at a cost of $27,100.00.

(Emphasis added.) From this, it can be seen that the warranty programme treated the efflorescence as having been the subject of proper notice during the limitation period but treated it as the problem and not as the symptom of the problem. When this matter came before the Tribunal on June 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 19 and 20, 1985, they found:

We feel free and confident to state at the outset that this building was extremely shoddily constructed in many ways and we can make that a finding of fact for whatever it is worth. For example, the manner in which the vapour barriers were installed (or not installed) in the walls of the building was, in a word, disgraceful. The fact that this appalling shoddiness was approved in the periodical inspection reports both by the architects and the municipal inspectors is very hard to view with other than the gravest misgivings as to either the competence or integrity of such functionaries in the discharge of their duties -- duties owed to parties whom we deem to have been injured or who will in the future be injured, namely, present and ultimate owners and occupants of the units and common elements of 30 Glen Elm Ave. As well, the fact that water has entered and may in the future enter many of the units causing expense, inconvenience and loss of property value to the owners and the occupants and their successors (as well as the condominium corporation itself in respect to any common element affected), is deplorable as are the stains and marks of efflorescence and other deficiencies referred to in evidence, particularly in the highly impressive expert presentation of Mr. Tony Alexander, P.Eng. who was called on behalf of the appellant and which must surely rank as one of the most informative and persuasive of its type preserved in the Tribunal's annals.

(Emphasis added.)

The evidence of Mr. Tony Alexander was as follows:

Q. Mr. Alexander, with regards to this condominium, in your opinion, what way, if any, does the defects in the vapour barrier contribute towards the deficiencies of water penetration and efflorescence.

A. I think that the incomplete vapour barrier allows warm humid air to escape to the cold side of the insulation. In winter time this creates a problem in that the water vapour in the warm air will condense on the cold side of the insulation and form lenses of ice that will subsequently melt during a period of warmer weather. The resulting water would tend to travel back into the building during times of the year when the ambient air temperature outside is above freezing point.

Then you have a problem -- the problem of the warm humid air travelling on through the wall with the water, under certain conditions of temperature -- exterior temperature, condensing in the exterior brick work and then it would evaporate to the outside as water taking with it soluble salts which would be deposited on the outside surface as efflorescence.

Q. Mr. Alexander, did the plans call for a vapour barrier?

A. Yes.

And further:

Q. Mr. Alexander, in your opinion, what is the solution to this cause of water penetration and efflorescence?

A. I think there is only one permanent solution and that is to restore the exterior masonry to the condition called for in the architectural and engineering drawings; namely, a solid masonry wall.

Q. Okay and now, to make it solid, what does that entail? Does that entail taking the bricks down and putting up the mortar and then putting bricks back up?

A. Well, it entails filling the cavity and it entails installing wall tiles if they are, indeed, missing. That has been established at some locations -- at the location of the tile. The only way that I can see to achieve that would be to take down the outer skin of brick and put it up again which is quite a horrendous undertaking.

Q. In terms of cost, what would it cost to do that?

A. We prepared an approximate cost estimate. I believe it was 1983 and at that time we came up with an approximate cost of about $925,000.00. Today it would be higher than that.

Q. I'm sorry. Today it would be what?

A. I said, today it would be higher than that -- possibly, something in excess of $1,000,000.00.

In a decision of December 18, 1984, the respondent dealt with the balcony leaks, as follows:

(2) Regarding balcony related leaks, this matter as well was reported in the few units during the first year of registration. It is the Warranty Program's understanding of the problem that it is caused by the fact that the design calls for the masonry walls to rest on the structural, concrete floor slabs with no provisions in the design to prevent water entering the wall assembly from the higher surface of the balcony topping and, thus into the adjoining suite. (This condition is also contributing to the problem of efflorescence explained in Item 1).

Of the 40 units making up York Condo Corp 528, we are aware of 4 units which have such water entry problems.

(Emphasis added.)

In essence, the respondent dismissed all of the claims, except the efflorescence, on the basis that they were not made within the limitation period and refused to deal with the efflorescence on the basis that it had paid for cleaning off of mortar droppings, efflorescence, etc., associated with the original construction. The respondent further held that any further efflorescence that may have occurred was not a result of substandard workmanship or defective material, did not render the building unfit for habitation and did not result from construction not in accordance with the Ontario Building Code. With regard to the individual unit leaks, they refused to deal with these on the grounds that "the leaks are to the best of our knowledge due again to the failure of the design to anticipate water entry or the effect of the balcony drainage pattern".

When the matter came before the Tribunal, the Tribunal in their reasons repeated much of the correspondence that I have set out and the majority decision stated:

It will be noted that some of those letters were written to the vendor and developer, High City Holdings Ltd. As has already been indicated it is our opinion that High City Holdings Ltd. was a rather villainous entity. Our opinion, further, is that Mr. Dade and Mr. Maling, by means of their letters, were endeavouring to persuade or otherwise induce High City Holdings Ltd. to somehow do its honourable duty by these unit holders and the condominium corporation upon whom it had fobbed or otherwise conveyed the results of its shoddy incursion into the construction field. The purpose of their letters to the abominable developer was without question an honourable purpose -- simply, and on behalf of the present appellant and the unit holders who are not parties to these proceedings, to induce it to remedy the perceived defects in its construction of this building. None of the interested parties to this appeal would have other than applauded their efforts, especially had they produced the results which they intended, that is, to have brought about the restoration or cure of the problems to which they referred. However, they did not because the developer either would not or could not undo its structural misdeeds before being overtaken by nemesis. It is not clear to us whether this took the form of bankruptcy, the absconing of its officers and principals, or just what, but, as appears, the High City entity has now, metaphorically speaking, disappeared from the screen.

This left Mr. Dade and Mr. Maling, like so many letter-writers before them, as well as their employer, the warranty programme, in an ostensibly compromised and certainly embarrassing position. This was vis-a-vis the appellant and the unhappy unit holders. Now the latter have taken the position that the warranty programme is bound by their assertions or undertakings (set forth in the letters) as to the liability of the warranty programme or by their assertions (in the letters) that the warranty, in the cases of these claimants, was viable.

We repeat, the indiscretions (as the warranty programme has no doubt come to see them) contained in the Dade/Maling letters were intended to effect a good purpose. Equity, were it to come to some involvement in this issue (which it does not) would smile or at least look without disfavour upon that innocent fact at the outset. The claimants, both known and suspected in this case, now pin their hopes to the notion that the warranty programme, having putatively accepted liability for these problems in that correspondence, and having done so in writing, is in fact liable. That notion, so logical and straight forward in the mind of any simple right-thinking non-specialist observer, especially one who perceived a substantial financial benefit from it, becomes significantly less so when passed through the mind of a lawyer. For those who have received the alleged advantage of a legal education will know that a warranty which was bestowed in the first instance by an Act of provincial Parliament and which, upon the terms upon which it was created, has already expired, terminated, lapsed and died, cannot be brought back to life by a mere letter, no matter how well-intentioned or indiscreet. Parliament decreed that the warranty would die at midnight at the end of its first year of existence. Once dead, only Parliament can bring that warranty back to life. Nothing, no matter how well-intentioned and foolish, written or stated by an employee, agent or official of the warranty programme can alter or impede the inevitable operation of an Act of the provincial legislature.

But equity presents a possible exception to that general rule. This is the doctrine of estoppel. Had the warranty programme, by the letters to which exception has been taken, somehow induced the applicant of any other claimants to sustain a detriment in reliance upon the assertion set out in the letters referred to, then, on the authority of the rule in Re: Wentworth Condominium Corporation No. 45, a ruling released by the Tribunal April 17, 1985, the respondent would have been estopped from relying on s. 15 of the Act and from maintaining that the warranty had expired when the claim was made.

But that is not the case in this instance. Neither the appellant nor any of the unit holders (who are not parties to this appeal) suffered any detriment springing from any reliance they may have placed upon the respondent's letters. This was because their rights under the warranty were already dead when the first of such letters went out. He who lies on the ground cannot fall. He who is already dead cannot be slain. He whose rights are already dead cannot sustain a detriment -- other than disappointment -- from the communication to him of erroneous information, no matter how well or ill-intentioned. Consequently, the Dade/Maling letters upon which the appellant has placed some reliance and which are no doubt of considerable embarrassment to the respondent are of no effect at law. And that is why this appeal in respect to the bulk of the claims to which it relates must fail.

We feel that it must go without saying that we have a very great deal of sympathy with the appellant and the unit holders who are involved in this unfortunate matter. We wish them well in whatever further proceedings they may decide to undertake elsewhere. We are very pleased to be able to allow them the relief referred to in respect of the cleaning or repairing of the efflorescence, referred to above, as well as to the crack to which mention has been made.

We agree that they are the victims of a "raw deal" from the vendor. However, we are unable to find that the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, save as to the extent mentioned, is available as a tool to help them.

The minority decision found, with regard to the balconies:

"Since this problem was admittedly communicated to the ONHWP within the first year of registration, the ONHWP has a responsibility to repair the problem balconies to prevent further water penetration."

In addition to the letters which have been referred to that were written by the respondents, the respondents actually attempted to correct the wall deficiencies by filling the wall cavity to turn the wall into a solid wall. These efforts, however, were unsuccessful.

The Tribunal may well have been correct in their view of the estoppel argument with regard to the letters. Even the wall repairs undertaken might not support a finding of estoppel. Because of my views on the limitation period itself, it is not necessary to determine this issue.

In addition to the officers of the condominium corporation and some of the unit owners, two experts testified at the hearing before the Tribunal. The condominium corporation called on Mr. Alexander on their behalf and the respondent's expert was Mr. Tibor Pal. Neither Mr. Ray Dade nor Mr. Robert Maling, who had written the various letters on behalf of the respondent testified with regard to why these letters were written or why they had undertaken certain work to correct the wall deficiencies. The Tribunal's findings with regard to the motives of Mr. Dade and Mr. Maling were apparently based on reasons given by the respondent in its initial decision and on argument presented by counsel at the hearing.

Credibility

Normally, in an appeal such as this, it is not essential to determine credibility since the findings with regard to credibility of the Tribunal who saw the witnesses and their demeanour would be preferable. However, as the Tribunal did not make findings of fact in a number of areas because of their decision on the limitation period, it is necessary to review the evidence and determine questions of credibility. In doing so, I have considered the Tribunal's remarks praising Mr. Alexander and their obvious respect for his opinion. The only question of credibility before the Tribunal and before us arises in comparing the evidence of Mr. Alexander and Mr. Pal. The Tribunal obviously preferred the evidence of Mr. Alexander and in effect confirmed his evidence by their findings with regard to the workmanship in the project. This is also shown by the chairman's attitude towards the evasive answers given Mr. Pal on many occasions. At one point after the chairman had directed a question to Mr. Pal, he commented on the answer as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: That's an awfully evasive answer to my question. It, certainly, doesn't apply that you've been listening to it for focusing your attention on my question. I don't understand how a person can answer a simple question in such an evasive manner.

Having reviewed the evidence of Mr. Alexander and Mr. Pal, I accept the evidence of Mr. Alexander over that of Mr. Pal with regard to the problems in this building.

With regard to the finding by the respondents that the balcony problem was caused by improper design and not by faulty workmanship, I accept the evidence of Mr. Alexander, which was as follows:

Q. ... Do those failures to build that balcony as shown in the drawings, in any way, contribute to water penetration?

A. Well, I think that all of those factors contribute to water penetration.

Q. If the balconies had been built as shown on the drawings and had all the things that they should have, would there be any water penetration?

A. From the balconies, no.

Mr. Alexander estimated the cost of restoring all of the balconies to a sound condition to be slightly in excess of $200,000.

Decision

During the one-year limitation period, the respondent knew that there was water penetration into the building that was complained of in a number of ways. In addition to the deficiency lists submitted, it was advised in writing by various unit owners that water was coming into their units. Since the balconies were common elements and the walls were also common elements, the water could only be entering through common elements. The condominium corporation for the purposes of this appeal, and in accordance with the relevant statutes, are deemed to be the owners of the common elements, although in actual fact the unit owners own the common elements as tenants in common.

The notices did not specify the cause of the water penetration or the efflorescence. The notices in some cases specified remedies, such as cleaning, and causes, such as leakage through the balcony above. Nevertheless, the notices were satisfactory so long as they indicated the symptoms of the problem which they did. While the language was not what might be desired with hindsight, the respondent knew well within the one-year limitation period that there was a problem of efflorescence on the walls and that there was water penetration into the structure in various places. There is no evidence that indicates whether or not the leakage in the garage is connected to the wall defects. However, the garage is part of the main structure and is protected by the same walls as the units but at a different level. Accordingly, water penetration into the garage, which is clearly indicated in some of the deficiency lists, is on the balance of probabilities a result of the same defects as the water leakage in other parts of the structure which is indicated by the efflorescence on the outside of the structure. The pictures of the efflorescence show that the efflorescence is at all levels of the structure, including the wall of the garage. It would be impractical and unfair to expect the unit owners and the condominium corporation to advise the respondents within the one-year period not only of the symptoms of the problem but the cause of the problem and the appropriate method of correcting the defects.

In actual practice as happened in this case, the symptoms were noted, extensive investigations were undertaken, including opening up the wall, some methods of repair were attempted, such as the adding of flashing to the point where the balconies attach to the structure. It is only through this type of inspection, consultation with experts, and trial and error with regard to attempted remedies, that the appropriate method of correcting the deficiencies can be determined.

Accordingly, I would set aside the decision of the Tribunal and in its place I would give judgment in favour of the appellant against the respondent for $762,287.04, plus interest at 12% per annum from the date of the respondent's original decision in this matter, namely, October 21, 1985, at which time it should have granted the application and either performed the repairs or paid the balance of its guarantee, which is limited to $20,000 per unit, less the amount that it had previously expended, which net amount is $762,287.04. The appellant shall also have its costs of these proceedings.

Judgment accordingly.

Suleck v. Cairns Homes Ltd.

Between

John A. Suleck and Clarissa M. Sulek, Plaintiffs, and Cairns Homes Limited and Nu-West Group Limited, Defendants

Action No. 8301-07360

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench
Judicial District of Calgary
Medhurst J.

March 20, 1986

G.T.H. Locke, Esq., for the Plaintiffs.

G.F. Scott, Esq., D.G. Samuelson, Esq., for the Defendants.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

MEDHURST J.:— In 1981 the defendant Cairns Homes Limited ("Cairns") owned two building lots each containing approximately five acres in the Woodlands district in south Calgary overlooking Fish Creek Provincial Park. The defendant company intended to develop these two lots by constructing a condominium complex of high quality units called Wood Ridge Estates. The first phase was to be developed on Lot 4 Block 1 Plan 7811621 consisting of 44 units. The second phase was to be built on completion of the first phase on Lot 3 Block 1 Plan 7811621 and was to consist of 36 units.

In the summer of 1981 the plaintiffs approached a sales agent for the defendant Cairns with a view to purchasing one of the units to be built in this complex. Plans were shown to the plaintiffs of the four different units Cairns proposed to construct as well as the site location of the units that were available for sale in Lot 4. The plaintiffs were interested in buying one of the units and in July and in October paid a deposit of $100.00 as evidence of this interest. Prices however had not been set and the development had not advanced to the stage where an agreement could be made. Nevertheless during the fall the plaintiffs had several meetings with the sales agent for Cairns, Dale Burke, concerning a proposed purchase. The first phase of the development was being constructed on Lot 4. The plaintiffs inquired about the development to be built on Lot 3 which adjoins and lies to the east of Lot 4. They were told by Mr. Burke that it was going to be developed with units similar to those being constructed on Lot 4 and would be the second phase of the Wood Ridge Estates development. The plaintiffs at one point suggested that perhaps they should wait for the development on Lot 3 but were told that this development would not proceed until Lot 4 was completed and that the price for the units would likely be higher.

Early in 1981 the plaintiffs received from the sales agent a marketing package containing information about the phase I development as well as an offer to purchase form for completion. These documents were taken by the plaintiffs to a lawyer who reviewed them. Reference was made by the lawyer to the Lift Station and Utilities Joint User Agreement which had been executed by Cairns as the proposed developer of Lot 4 and Lot 3. This agreement provides for sharing the costs of providing sewage facilities by the owners of the two parcels. It contemplates a development on both lots. On February 9, 1981 the plaintiffs offered to purchase unit 24, for $210,900.00 and this offer was accepted by the defendant Cairns. This agreement (Exhibit 1) contains clause 14(b) on page 7 and clause 22 on page 10 which clauses purport to limit the plaintiffs remedies to those set out in the agreement.

Over the next several months the construction of condominium unit 24 purchased by the plaintiffs was completed. In addition to the construction of the standard plan provided in the purchase the plaintiffs installed extra and further improvements at an additional cost of approximately $20,000.00. The total cost of the unit with improvements and extras was $230,900.00. The plaintiffs took possession in the summer of 1981 and received a transfer of title in October of that year.

In December of 1981 the plaintiffs learned that the defendant Cairns had sold Lot 3 which was to have been developed as the second phase of the project and that a multifamily development was to be constructed in its place. Evidence was presented by the defendant Cairns that there had been a significant change in the economy of Calgary in the summer of 1981. Interest rates had escalated and a large percentage of the units built on Lot 4 had not yet been sold. As a result, Mr. Grozell, President of Cairns stated that a decision was made not to proceed with the phase II development on Lot 3 and to sell the land.

Lot 3 together with the architects plans and the City Development Permits which the defendant Cairns had obtained were sold to B. F. Klassen Construction (Canada) Limited. This company then applied to the Development Appeal Board for permission to increase the density of the development on Lot 3. Although the plaintiffs and others appeared at the hearing in opposition to this change of zoning, the approval was given. Lot 3 was later developed with 88 multifamily townhouse units.

The plaintiffs contend that this change in the development of Lot 3 from 36 quality condominiums to 88 multifamily units with a higher density constitutes a misrepresentation of the agreement they had made and this gives rise to rescission. They now seek to rescind their agreement of purchase or in the alternative damages for breach of contract. The defendants deny that these was a misrepresentation of an agreement with respect to the property or any breach of contract.

It is the submission on behalf of the plaintiffs that they purchased a quality condominium in the centre of a complex that was to have 44 units in the first phase and 36 units in the second phase. The development was to be private and secluded for upper income families appealing to retired couples or couples without children. As a result of the failure of the defendant Cairns to develop Lot 3 as intended with condominiums of compatible size and quality as on Lot 4 the plaintiffs contend that their lifestyle has been changed and the value of their property has been reduced. In short, it is said that the area is not the district that was represented and the plaintiffs are now entitled to redress.

For the defendant Cairns it is said that such representation was not intended to be either a term of the contract or a collateral term. Furthermore the statements made, it is said, were true as to the future intentions of the contractor at the time they were made and therefore there was no breach or misrepresentation. If such a representation did constitute a collateral agreement, it is said to be unenforceable by virtue of the Statute of Frauds.

Statements that are made during the course of negotiations leading to an agreement may or may not become terms of the contract. Parties do not always reduce all the terms of their agreement to writing. It is possible that an agreement may be comprised of partly written terms and partly oral terms. It is always necessary in distinguishing issues of this kind to determine whether the statements made became a part of the contractual relationship between the parties.

In the language of the House of Lords in Heilbert, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton [1913] A.C. 30 at 43 there must be an intention to warrant the truth of the fact asserted.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the statement made by Dale Burke as to the intended development on Lot 3 was a representation that was intended to have contractual effect. Reference was made to a recent decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal. Gallen et al v. Butterley, Nunweiler and Allstate Grain Company Ltd. 53 B.C.L.R. In this case the plaintiffs, experienced farmers, contracted with the defendant grain company to buy buckwheat seed and to sell the crop. An employee of the defendant company assured the plaintiffs that the seed was a fast growing crop and would smother weeds. The agreement contained a clause stating that the defendant "gives no warranty as to the productiveness or any other matter pertaining to the seed sold to the producer and will not in anyway be responsible for the crop." Weeds grew and destroyed the crop. The plaintiffs succeeded in an action for damages for breach of contract notwithstanding the clause in the agreement. Lambert, J.A. in writing the majority judgment said at p. 51:

It is not necessary to distinguish, in this case, between conditions, warranties and other contractual terms that may give rise to claims in damages. But what must be done in this case is to distinguish between a warranty, where the breach gives rise to a claim for damages, and a bare and innocent misrepresentation, which may give rise to a claim in equity for rescission, but does not give rise to a claim for damages.

The distinction does not turn on whether the recipient of the representation acted on it. The distinction turns on whether the representation became a part of the contractual relationship between the maker and the recipient. That, in turn, depends on the intention of the parties, as derived from objective evidence, including, but not limited to, evidence that tends to show whether the representation was intended to be acted upon and was in fact acted upon.

The majority of the court held that the oral representation as to the quality of the seed was intended to be acted upon and to form part of the contract and was a warranty. They held that the oral warranty was intended to prevail. Seaton, J.A. in a dissenting opinion stated that the evidence fell short of that which was required to warrant the accuracy of the statement.

The court as well considered the application of the parol evidence rule in deciding on the admissibility of the oral statement and its affect on the exclusion of liability clause in the agreement. This rule provides that subject to certain exceptions extrinsic evidence is not admissible to add to, subtract from, vary or contradict terms of a written document. The oral representation was admitted in this case on the basis that the document did not contain the whole agreement or that it was part of a separate collateral contract.

The basic determinant in deciding whether a representation is a term of a contract is the intention of the parties objectively assessed. Certain decisions are of assistance in providing guidance in this regard. In Rickview Construction Co. Ltd. v. Raspa (1976), 11 O.R. (2d) 377 (C.A.) the Court of Appeal of Ontario was concerned with the following clause in an agreement of purchase and sale of a vacant lot in a residential subdivision:

It is understood and agreed that this is a vacant lot and the purchaser has the privilege to erect a single family dwelling on plans approved by the borough of Etobicoke. Being a fully served lot. . .

The vendor's agent had assured the purchaser that "It is a fully serviced lot. You have everything that is required, sewers, sanitary sewers and everything". After completion the purchaser discovered that the lot was not fully serviced and brought an action for damages for breach of contract.

Arnup J.A. in delivering the judgment of the court considered whether the representation was a term of the contract and said:

In my view, the clause here in question is not a "mere representation". Such a representation, if made innocently (i.e., without fraud) gives no cause of action for damages after closing although it turns out to be untrue ...

To elevate a "mere representation" to the category of a "warranty" it is not enough to show that the statement, originally made orally, has been included in the written contract. Such inclusion simply puts it beyond dispute that the representation was made: Waxman v. Yeandle, [1953] 2 D.L.R. 475 at 478 (C.A.).

What is required to lead a Court to construe a provision as a warranty has been expressed in a number of ways. In Waxman v. Yeandle, at p. 479, Roach, J.A., said:

In order to succeed in this action the plaintiff would have to prove that the defendants contracted with him that the representation was true and that in the event of its turning out to be untrue they would indemnify him against any loss that might thereby be occasioned to him.

At pp. 479-80 he said:

I am unable to conclude from the language used in the paragraph in question that it was the intention that that paragraph should constitute a warranty. A person can be made liable if he warrants the truth of a representation, but it must be made abundantly clear that the warranty was in fact given.

In the Richview Construction case the court held that the written term in the contract was a warranty but that it subsequently merged in the conveyance or transfer of title and the purchasers were denied a remedy.

In Carman Construction Ltd. v. C.P. Rail [1982] 1 S.C.R. 958, a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada the following statement is found at p. 966:

A collateral warranty is a contract collateral to the primary agreement. Its existence must be established, as in the case of any other contract, by proof of an intention to contract. In Anson's Law of Contract (25th ed.), the following passage appears at p. 126:

But all of these factors are at best only secondary guides and they are subsidiary to the main test of contractual intention, that is, whether there is evidence of an intention by one or both parties that there should be contractual liability in respect of the accuracy of the statement. The question therefore is: On the totality of evidence, must the person making the statement be taken to have warranted its accuracy, i.e. promised to make it good? This overriding principle was laid down in Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton [[1913] A.C. 30]:

The respondent telephoned the appellants' agent and said "I understand you are bringing out a rubber company". The reply was 'We are'. The respondent asked for a prospectus, and was told there were none available. He then asked 'if it was all right', and the agent replied 'We are bringing it out'. On the faith of this, the respondent bought shares which turned out to be of little value. The company was not accurately described as "a rubber company", although this assurance had not been given in bad faith. The respondent claimed damages for breach of contract.

The House of Lords held that no breach of contract had been committed. There had been merely a representation and no warranty. There was no intention on the part of either or both of the parties that there should be a contractual liability in respect of the accuracy of the statement.

The effect of a claim for rescission is to determine that the contract is one that ought not to be enforced. This is said to be on the basis that the purchasers received something entirely different from that which they agreed to buy. This was the basis used by the Alberta Court of Appeal in Alessio v. Jovica Marchuk and Melton Real Estate Ltd. [1974] 2 W.W.R. 126 in deciding that the failure of a vendor to advise the purchaser of a building lot that a building permit would not issue until a sewage pump was installed constituted an error in "in substantialibus".

In my view the representation alleged by the purchasers even if established as a term of the agreement, would not be sufficient to justify the rescission of the contract in the event of a breach. The representation when made was a statement of intention of something that was to happen in the future. There is no evidence that it was made for the purpose of deceiving the purchasers. At the time it was made it was a true statement of the defendant Cairns intention with respect to the property. The representation or statement of the defendant Cairns intention with respect to Lot 3 can only be considered as being a warranty or a collateral term. This determination involves considering the intention of the parties at the time on the basis of all the evidence presented. It cannot be said by the purchasers that they received something different from that which they agreed to buy. The dispute is not over the subject covered by the purchase. It concerns development on an adjoining lot.

In this instance the plaintiffs first approached the defendants' agent for the purpose of considering the purchase of a condominium that was to be built on Lot 4. This was designated as phase I of the Wood Ridge Estates development and the plaintiffs were told that 44 units would be constructed on this lot. The plaintiffs were shown the building plans and the site plans relating to Lot 4 which was then in the process of being developed. It was only in response to the plaintiffs question concerning Lot 3, which was to the east of Lot 4, that the agent, according to the plaintiffs, stated that Lot 3 was going to be developed with condominiums similar to those being constructed on Lot 4. The agent, Dale Burke, stated that it was his understanding that phase II was supposed to be developed in a way compatible with phase I but he had no recollection of discussing phase II with the plaintiffs. He said he may have shown the plaintiffs the colored drawings concerning the proposed phase II (Exhibit 27). Mrs. Sulek however stated that in discussing the possibility of buying a unit in phase II she was told that they would probably be more expensive and they would not be available until all units in phase I had been built. It is these statements that the plaintiffs now say constituted a contractual term of the agreement made to purchase a condominium unit from the defendant Cairns in phase I.

The subsequent written documents executed by the plaintiffs and by the defendant Cairns contain no reference to any representation concerning the development on Lot 3. There is no evidence that the matter was discussed further either by the plaintiffs with their solicitor when reviewing the documents or by the plaintiffs with any of the defendants' representatives prior to receiving title. One would have thought that if such a term was present to their minds that they would have been concerned about limitation clauses 14(b) and 22 found in the agreement for sale (Exhibit 1).

There is in my view an absence of any evidence to support the plaintiffs contention that statement by the sales agent was a term of the sales agreement or was itself a collateral agreement. The statement by Mr. Burke in answer to the plaintiffs' question was in reply to a request for information only concerning the proposed development on Lot 3. It was a statement made of the defendant Cairns intended use of the lot at that time. There is nothing to suggest that this statement induced the plaintiffs to enter into a contract to purchase a unit on Lot 4. The existence of a plan of something to be developed in the future does not amount, in my view, to be a representation that the land is to be developed in a particular way.

There is no evidence of an intention on the part of either or both of the parties that there would be contractual liability in respect of the accuracy of the statement made by Mr. Burke. In my view the statement was not intended to be a term of the contract nor was it intended as a term of any collateral contract.

After consideration of all the evidence I find that the plaintiffs have failed to establish the existence of a contractual agreement with respect to phase II as alleged and accordingly the plaintiffs' claim is dismissed.

If I had held that the defendants were liable under a breach of a term of an agreement it would have been necessary to assess the damages. In this regard the evidence presented by the two real estate appraisers who testified is in conflict.

Eric M. Johnson testified on behalf of the plaintiffs and concluded that although there had been an overall drop in value in the condominium market in Calgary during the period in question, the reduction in value of the Wood Ridge Estates property was considerably greater. This disproportionate drop, in his view, was due to the high density development of townhouses immediately adjacent to Wood Ridge Estates. Mr. Johnson estimated the value of the plaintiffs' property as of January 1986 to be $125,000.00. This conclusion was reached on the basis of comparable sales of units in Wood Ridge Estates during 1985. In considering the city wide average drop of condominium properties in Calgary for the period, Mr. Johnson stated the plaintiffs' property should have had a value of $148,000.00. This further drop of $23,000.00 to the plaintiffs' property he said is the result of the "inharmonious" townhouse development on Lot 3.

Gary Atkinson who testified on behalf of the defendants, stated that in his opinion the value of the plaintiffs' property in October 1985 was $145,000.00. Both appraisers used the direct sales comparison approach in arriving at the current value but Mr. Atkinson made certain adjustments to the amount of the sales and only compared units of the same type as the plaintiffs. He stated that the extra improvements added in the construction of the condominium in 1981, resulted in the unit having increased value today. He also stated that in his view the location of the plaintiffs' unit, which overlooks the Fish Creek Provincial Park, as well as having an excellent view of the mountains to the west, made it more valuable than the other units used in the comparisons. He did not think the location of the townhouse development on Lot 3 had any negative affect on the value of the development on Lot 4.

Mr. Johnson had discounted both the location of the plaintiffs' unit and the extra improvements as adding anything to the present value of the plaintiffs' unit. The question then is whether the drop in value of the plaintiffs' unit was more than normal and if so can it be attributed to the development of the higher density townhouses on Lot 3.

Valuation is always somewhat arbitrary but it seems to me from the evidence that the excellent location of the plaintiffs' unit and the added improvements should result in giving it greater value than other units used in the value comparison.

For these reasons I am not satisfied that the development on Lot 3 has resulted in a greater than normal drop in value of the units on Lot 4.

The plaintiffs' claim is dismissed with costs.

Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 106 et al. v. Mastercraft Development Corp. Ltd.

49 O.R. (2d) 638

ONTARIO
COURT OF APPEAL
ZUBER, MORDEN AND CORY JJ.A.

31ST JANUARY 1985.

The appellant was the developer and declarant of the respondent condominium corporation. Under the declaration the appellant was entitled to the exclusive use of those parking spaces not required to be assigned to individual unit owners and was entitled to assign its rights thereto to any unit owner. It sold the rights to some of them to individual unit owners and it transferred the remainder to its successor to whom it also sold the remaining units in the building. The respondent then brought an action to recover the amount received by the appellant for the sale of the parking spaces to the unit owners and the deemed sale thereof to its successor. It was successful at trial. On appeal, held, the appeal should be allowed.

The transfer of the parking spaces was not contrary to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, while the appellant remained the owner of units in the condominium, because provision was made for it in the declaration. The effect of the declaration was to permit the appellant to deal with the surplus parking spaces and, hence, to retain the proceeds of sale.

York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280; leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused O.R. and D.L.R. loc. cit., 38 N.R. 129n, distd

APPEAL from a judgment holding that the appellant developer was liable to the respondent condominium corporation for moneys paid for parking spaces.

Robert I. Steinberg, for appellant.

Robert J. Winogron, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

CORY J.A.:— The issue on this appeal is whether the condominium corporation, Carleton Condominium Corporation ("Carleton") or the developer, Mastercraft Development Corporation Ltd. ("Mastercraft"), is entitled to the proceeds and the deemed proceeds from the sale of certain outdoor parking spaces which are part of a condominium development.

Factual background

Mastercraft was the developer and declarant of Carleton Condominium Corporations 84 and 106 located at 2650 and 2630 Southvale Cres., Ottawa. Corporation 84 is comprised of 85 units and was ready for occupancy in May of 1975. It was declared a condominium by registration of a declaration on July 29, 1976. Corporation 106 comprises 84 units, was ready for occupancy in May, 1976, and was declared a condominium by registration of a declaration on April 6, 1977. The two buildings were developed as a single project known as Hawthorne Ridge. They share certain common elements including an indoor parking garage with 169 spaces, that is, one space for each unit and an outdoor parking area with 54 spaces of which 20 were reserved by the declarations for visitor parking.

Mastercraft owned a substantial number of units in the project until May of 1981, and continued to act as manager of the project until July of 1981.

The registered declarations with regard to the common elements state that:

Subject to the provisions of the Act, this Declaration and the by-laws and any rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto, each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the common elements, except as herein otherwise provided.

They go on to provide for certain "exclusive use" common elements so that each owner of a unit would be entitled to the exclusive use of (a) his unit's balcony, (b) one indoor storage space to be allocated by the condominium corporation, and (c) one indoor parking space to be allocated by the condominium corporation with the right to assign his right to the exclusive use of the parking space to any other unit owner in the project.

Article III(2)(d) of the declaration has a particular significance in this appeal. It reads in part as follows:

The Declarant shall be entitled to the exclusive use of the balance of the parking spaces ... and shall be entitled to assign its rights to any of such parking spaces to any other unit owner or successor in title to any unit owner ...

Pursuant to individual agreements Mastercraft assigned its right to the exclusive use of 19 outdoor parking spaces to 19 individual unit owners of the complex. These agreements were made between May 25, 1975 and March 28, 1980. The first parking space was sold for a consideration of $1,000 and the balance of $1,500 each. In most instances the sales of the outdoor parking spaces were dealt with in the agreement of purchase and sale relating to a unit in the complex, but some were dealt with by subsequent agreement. In each case Mastercraft did not purport to assign ownership of the parking space but rather assigned the right to its exclusive use to the purchaser. Some purchasers have since resold their rights to other unit owners.

By written agreements dated February 6, 1981, Mastercraft agreed to sell to R & R Western Estates Limited its remaining 49 units in Condominium 106 and 29 units in Condominium 84, together with the exclusive right to their 76 related indoor parking spaces. The total purchase price was $3,237,000 which amounts to $41,500 per unit. The agreements did not deal with the right to the exclusive use of the remaining 14 outdoor parking spaces. Those rights were subsequently conveyed by Mastercraft to the same purchaser for a consideration of $1 by agreement made on the same date as the closing of the sale of the condominium units. Although it would appear that Mastercraft received only $1 for these 14 parking spaces the trial judge fixed a value of $1,500 for each of them. This valuation was, I believe, reasonable in light of the prices obtained by Mastercraft for the other outdoor parking spaces. The trial judge fixed the total value of the outdoor parking spaces at $49,000, $28,000 for the 19 spaces dealt with between May 25, 1975 and March 28, 1980, and an additional $21,000 as the deemed value of the last 14 spaces, transferred on April 30, 1981. It is the disposition of this amount that constitutes the major issue between the parties. A rudimentary arithmetic calculation leads to the observation that one parking space is not accounted for. Both sides conceded it has disappeared but no one was particularly concerned with the loss. Perhaps it was an inevitable casualty of the rigorous Ottawa winters. In any event, it was conceded that the missing space need not concern the court.

In addition to the parking spaces there was a minor outstanding difference between Mastercraft and Carleton Condominium. At the trial Mastercraft was held liable to Carleton Condominium for $1,367.68 being one-half the amount of certain condominium fees which it did not collect from two unit owners during the period of its management.

Issue as to failure to collect condominium fees

The trial judge found that there had been a failure to collect on behalf of Mastercraft but that Carleton Condominium had failed to properly mitigate its damage and thus he arrived at the figure of $1,367.68 as being one-half the fees which the defendant had not collected.

There was evidence upon which the trial judge could find that Mastercraft failed to properly collect condominium fees during the time in which it was a unit manager. In addition there was evidence upon which the finding could be made that Carleton failed to properly mitigate its damages when it took over the management of the project. In these circumstances the conclusion that Mastercraft owed to Carleton Condominium the sum of $1,367.68 should not be varied.

Issue as to Mastercraft's liability for $49,000, the value of sales and deemed value of sales of rights to outdoor parking spaces

Reasons of the trial judge

The trial judge made careful reference to the term of the declarations which provided that the declarant was to be entitled to the exclusive use of the "balance" of the parking spaces set out earlier. The provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 (the Condominium Act, 1970) are of great importance in the resolution of this case.

Following a reference to the Condominium Act, 1970, particularly ss. 3(2) and 7, the trial judge stated:

It has been argued in this case that the interest of the declarant in the parking spaces is not a separation of ownership but really a right to assign the use of them. If you follow the argument of the defendant through to its logical conclusion, you could have the developer owning rights in the common elements but not owning any unit in the building. Thus, when all units were sold the developer would be left, as in this case had the transfer not been made to Rampart, with no units but many parking spaces. This would leave the developer with a permanent right in respect to the building. In other words, the developer could continue to rent parking spaces after it ceased to have other rights in the building. This seems to me not to be logical within the context of the Condominium Act.

The case of York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal, 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280, is binding upon me, unless it can be distinguished. In that case Madam Justice Wilson J.A. gave the judgment of the court. The case is very similar to the present case, except in that case, the declaration did not provide specifically that the declarant was entitled to the exclusive use of the balance of the parking spaces. As in the Newrey Holdings case, by signing an agreement of purchase and sale each unit purchaser, in the present case, would acquire in equity:

"(1) the unit described in this Agreement of Purchase and sale;

(2) the right to the exclusive use and possession of one parking space; and

(3) the right to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be assigned to him."

Madam Justice Wilson said in her decision at p. 467 O.R., p. 289 D.L.R.:

"I do not think the position of the owner-developer remains unchanged after he starts to sell units. I think that at that point he has committed the character of the project to that of condominium under the Act and declaration. I think he has also placed himself in a fiduciary relationship to the unit purchasers not only with respect to their units but also with respect to the interests appurtenant thereto. He therefore holds the property in trust for the unit purchasers, present and prospective, and for the condominium corporation which will come into being upon registration of the declaration. I believe he is under a duty to protect the interests of all unit owners, present and prospective, and cannot put his own interests in conflict with theirs even although he himself continues to be an owner as long as any units remain unsold."

On the basis of that decision and because I do not think the condominium declaration can affect the legal rights of the parties as set out in the Act, there will be judgment for the plaintiffs in respect of the moneys paid to the defendant for the parking spaces. Now I should clarify that. I understand that the first parking space sold for $1,000. Since it was the first one sold it is reasonable that it be sold for a lesser amount. I would fix the amount at $1,000 for that space and $1,500 for the other parking spaces disposed of, including those sold to Ramparts.

It is to be observed that the decision of the trial judge was founded upon the reasons given by this court in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280. However, although factually similar, that case is distinguishable on the basis of the wording of the declaration now before the court compared to that of the declaration considered in that case. York Condominium Corp. v. Newrey recognized that the rights of the parties must be determined by reference to both the Act and the declaration. When those references are made in this case they appear to support the position of Mastercraft.

Reference to the Condominium Act, 1970

Condominium property is composed of the designated "units" and the "common elements". The Condominium Act, 1970, s. 1(1) (g), defines common interest in this way:

(g) "common interest" means the interest in the common elements appurtenant to a unit;

All the parking spaces, whether indoor or outdoor, fall within that definition. The owners of the units are tenants in common of the common elements: see s. 7(1) of the Condominium Act. Subject to the declaration and by-laws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements: see s. 7(4) of the Act. Section 7 of the Act provides in part:

7(1) The owners are tenants in common of the common elements.

(2) An undivided interest in the common elements is appurtenant to each unit.

(3) The proportions of the common interests are those expressed in the declaration.

(4) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements.

(5) The ownership of a unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interest, and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a unit from a common interest is void.

(6) Except as provided by this Act, the common elements shall not be partitioned or divided.

The Condominium Act by s. 3(2)(b) and (c) contemplates that common elements may be specified for the exclusive use of one or more unit owners and that such a specification may be set out in the declaration.

3(2) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection 1, a declaration may contain,

.....

(b) a specification of any parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated units and not by all the owners;

(c) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

There is a necessity for a designation of an exclusive use common element. In this case, the balcony attached to each unit, the indoor storage space and one indoor parking space were designated as exclusive use common elements. The list put forward as exclusive use elements in this development can well be expanded. It might include, for example, the exclusive use of a locker in the athletic facilities. To designate certain common elements as being for the exclusive use of certain unit owners is not only rational but essential in the concept and operation of a condominium.

By s. 1(1)(l) owner is defined as follows:

(l) "owner" means the owner or owners of the freehold estate or estates in a unit and common interest, but does not include a mortgagee unless in possession;

The owners so defined are tenants in common of the common elements and an undivided interest in the common elements appurtenant to each unit. By s. 7(4) of the Act, subject to the Act, declaration and by-laws, each owner may make a reasonable use of the common elements. By s. 7(5) the ownership of the unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interests and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a unit from a common interest is void.

The result of this reference to the Act is that, contrary to the conclusions of the learned trial judge, Mastercraft, as the developer, could not own any rights in the common elements if it was not also the owner of at least one unit in the condominium. Mastercraft could not continue to rent parking spaces after it ceased to own units in the building. Mastercraft was an owner of units in the condominium when it transferred its rights in the outdoor parking spaces to the purchaser of its remaining units. The transfer of the parking spaces then did not breach the provisions of the Condominium Act nor was it contrary to the aims or objects of that statute.

It remains to be considered whether or not the terms of the declaration are such that Mastercraft could transfer the interest in the parking spaces and retain any funds which it obtained for them. This requires a consideration of the declaration.

Reference to the declaration of rights of Mastercraft and comparison with the declaration of rights in York Condominium v. Newrey

In York Condominium Corp. v. Newrey, supra, it was argued that the developer could sell the rights to the additional outdoor parking spaces before the condominium declaration was registered. It was contended that the property was the developer's to deal with as he saw fit prior to registration of the declaration. This argument was accepted by the trial judge but rejected by this court. It was never disputed that the additional parking spaces were common elements.

Of great significance in this case was the wording of the declaration. The declaration and the comments of the court regarding it are set out at pp. 465-6 O.R., pp. 287-8 D.L.R., of the reasons where this appears:

"(c) Each owner is entitled to the exclusive use and possession for the parking of a motor vehicle of one parking space in the underground parking garage to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;

(d) Individual unit owners shall also be entitled to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by such owner, the location of which is to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;"

The additional parking spaces in issue in the litigation are, of course, the spaces referred to in para. (d).

It seems to be implicit in the decision of Galligan J. that until the declaration was registered the purchasers of units had no interest in the additional parking spaces, that those remained in the ownership of the developer who was free to deal with them as it saw fit. I do not see how this can be so in face of the provisions of the Act and the declaration. Section 7 of the Act provides that the owners of units are tenants in common of the common elements (s-s. (1)) and that subject to the Act, the declaration and the by-laws each owner may make reasonable use of them (s-s. (4)). It seems to me that as soon as a unit purchaser enters into an agreement of purchase and sale of a unit he becomes the equitable owner of the unit and the interests appurtenant thereto even although the agreement cannot be closed until registration of the declaration. By signing an agreement of purchase and sale each unit purchaser acquires in equity:

(1) the unit described in his agreement of purchase and sale;

(2) the right to the exclusive use and possession of one parking space to be designated by the condominium corporation;

(3) the right to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by him and designated by the condominium corporation.

In my view, the respondent developer could not, either before or after the registration of the declaration, deal with any part of the common elements so as to defeat the unit purchasers' equitable interests in them.

With respect, I can see no reason why as a matter of simple contract law the parties cannot contract with reference to the Act and declaration prior to the registration of the declaration and in anticipation of its registration. Indeed, I think they must be taken to have done so where units in a condominium project are sold prior to registration since the condominium is substantially a creature of statute. It would be wholly unreal to view those transactions as agreements for the sale of separate pieces of real estate. This being so, I think the Court may look, and indeed must look, to the provisions of the Act and the declaration in determining the rights of the parties under the agreements of purchase and sale.

It can be seen from the foregoing that the court was clearly of the view that both the Act and the declarations must be reviewed in order to determine the rights of the parties under the agreements of purchase and sale. In that case the declaration was reviewed and it was found that there was nothing contained in its terms that would give the developer the right to deal with the parking spaces. The sole argument put forward on behalf of the developer was that it could rely on the paper title it possessed before the registration of the declaration in order to deal with those spaces. It was never contended that the declaration authorized the developer to deal with the surplus parking spaces.

It will be remembered that in the present case the declaration specifically provides that the declarant (Mastercraft) was to be entitled to the exclusive use of the balance of the parking spaces and was entitled to assign its right to any such parking spaces to any other unit owner or a successor in title to a unit owner of the condominium corporation. It authorizes Mastercraft to deal with the outdoor parking spaces that remained after allocating 20 of such spaces for visitors' parking. This declaration gives the developer the very authority that was missing from the declaration in York Condominium Corp. v. Newrey, supra, where no authority was given the developer to deal with surplus parking spaces.

The required reference to the Act and declaration leads to two conclusions. First, nothing was done by Mastercraft that in any way infringed the provisions of the Act. Second, the declaration specifically authorized Mastercraft to deal with the surplus spaces. It follows that Mastercraft was entitled to deal with the outdoor parking spaces as it did and was entitled to retain the proceeds which it received for those spaces and is not obligated to pay to Carleton Condominium Corporation either the funds which it received or the funds which it was properly deemed to have received when it sold its remaining units and its interest in the parking spaces.

To that extent the appeal should be allowed with costs and the judgment at trial varied by deleting the sum of $49,000 from the award to the plaintiff thus reducing it to the sum of $1,367.68. Carleton should have its costs of the trial on the county court scale.

Appeal allowed.

LANDMARK MONTEREY CONDOMINIUM COUNCIL ET AL. v. COMO,

9 Admin. L.R. 269 BRITISH COLUMBIA (Co. Ct.) December 5, 1984 Administrative law -- Duty of fairness owed by condominium corporation to respondent resident -- Scope of duty owed depending on circumstances -- Levying of two fines on respondent -- Respondent not present at hearing -- Fine based on possibly inaccurate complaints set aside -- Respondent entitled to be heard -- Fine based on late payment of maintenance assessment upheld -- Duty of fairness owed to respondent satisfied by advance notification of deadline -- Appeal allowed in part. This was an appeal by way of trial de novo from the imposition of two fines by the appellant condominium corporation pursuant to its by-laws. One fine of $25 was levied because the respondent's children allegedly played with matches in a stairwell. The second fine of $15 was imposed because the respondent paid his monthly maintenance assessment after its due date. Regarding the first fine, the respondent never was invited to any hearing regarding the alleged violation. The respondent had been notified by letter of the deadline for the maintenance assessment and the consequences of late payment. The respondent alleged that the appellant acted unfairly in its enforcement of the by-laws for the respondent was not given prior notice of when and where the appellant would consider the alleged breaches. HELD: The respondent's appeal was allowed in part. The $25 fine was set aside and the $15 fine upheld. The appellant's authority was administrative in nature and one of its duties was the enforcement of by-laws. Since the appellant had other responsibilities its procedural mechanism to enforce by-laws had to be simple. The procedure applicable to the appellant consistent with its duty of fairness required that when the appellant was informed of the conduct of the respondent's children it should have given the respondent an opportunity to be heard. It was improper for the appellant to levy a fine based on complaints that may have been inaccurate. However, the second fine was different, for no facts were in dispute and no assumptions were made. The respondent was informed in advance of the consequences of non-payment of the fine by its due date and the appellant's letter to the respondent fulfilled its duty of fairness. The second fine was a case of the respondent failing to meet an obligation he knew or ought to have known he was required to meet.

Shoihet v. 110 Bloor West Development Corp.

Between

Earle I. Shoihet, Plaintiff, and

110 Bloor West Development Corporation Limited, Priene Limited and 377806 Ontario Limited, Defendants

Action No. 58993/80

Judgment: June 27, 1984.

David S. Wilson, Esq., for the Plaintiff.

F.P. Morrison, Esq., for the Defendants.

1 TRAINOR J.:— This is an action for equitable damages arising out of a contract for the purchase and sale of a condominium unit in a complex developed by the defendants. At the end of the trial, the plaintiff elected damages instead of specific performance.

2 The plaintiff is a solicitor, aged 40, with thirteen years experience, much of it in the real estate field. The defendant, 110 Bloor West Development Corporation Limited is a developer. Its shares are owned by the other defendants, the registered owners of the lands in question. There is no issue that the defendant 110 Bloor West was the agent of the other defendants and had authority to enter into the agreements that are the subject of this action.

3 The parties signed an agreement of purchase and sale and an interim occupancy agreement on the 17 March 1979 with a closing date of 20 June 1980. The condominium complex was comprised of four floors of commercial space and seventeen floors of residential development containing 156 individual units. The purchase price of the plaintiff's unit was $161,000, with a deposit of $11,270 and the balance to be paid partly in cash and partly by way of mortgage.

4 The development was under construction at the time of purchase. It was handy to the plaintiff's leased residence at 44 Charles Street and the plaintiff visited often. The plaintiff leased the Charles Street property in May 1979, renewing the lease in October 1979 to end 31 January 1981. He continues to live at this address today. Strikes, involving sub-trades both on and off the condominium location, altered the progress schedule. As a consequence, closing dates for many of the units had to be changed. It may also be said that the defendants were less than efficient in finalizing arrangements with the plaintiff for Hudac inspections and apartment finish selection concerning choices of paint, floor tile, broadloom, appliances, cupboards vanity type, and others contemplated by the contracts. On several occasions inspection was frustrated because the notice sent by the defendants was late in arriving, or the premises were not ready for occupancy. Finish selection was delayed because of a misunderstanding. Other circumstances that were aggravating to the plaintiff included the defendants' failure to answer correspondence and its failure to accomplish much in the way of progress between Hudac inspections.

5 The interim closing date contemplated by the contract was changed from time to time. The procedure adopted in the initial stages was that the vendor would advise of the change and the plaintiff would go along without communication one way or the other. In September 1980 these changes were arranged by the vendors' solicitor, Mr. Johnston, advising the plaintiff's office of the new date and then confirming the advice by mail. The arrangement may seem to be a casual one, however, it is better understood when the terms of the contracts are examined. It was an arrangement satisfactory to the parties until the 1 October 1980 interim closing date.

6 In the month of September the main reasons for delay in inspection and closing were twofold. Firstly, the cupboards took five to six weeks to manufacture and deliver following selection made on 19 August 1980. The plaintiff was not happy about the delay as he thought he had made the selection at an earlier date. His letters of 15 and 19 September 1980 make it clear that he was aware of the problem. On 5 September 1980 the plaintiff had written to the defendants' solicitors as follows:

... I did not expect to close this transaction until the end of September at the earliest. Accordingly, I did not make the necessary moving arrangements nor have I sub-letted my apartment.

Furthermore, I have written Mr. Villiers on August 8th, August 14th and September 2nd with a view to finalising my discrepancies concerning my interior finish. To date I have not received a reply. More particularly in my letter dated August 8th, 1980 I asked Mr. Villiers to give me one months notice prior to the interim closing date so I could make the necessary arrangements as above.

I have some difficulty understanding the position the plaintiff took on 1 October 1980 in view of this correspondence. Secondly, it appears the kitchen cupboards arrived some time prior to 1 October 1980. They were expected on 17 September 1984 and although the exact date of arrival is uncertain it does not appear that they were in the unit on 24 September 1980. Mr. Sorichetti, the defendants' construction superintendent was candid in his evidence. He made no attempt to minimize the errors his office and staff made nor did he try to blame matters on the size of the project and the number of unavoidable delays they encountered. He said that he was embarrassed by the fact the unit was not ready for occupancy on 1 October 1980 when he attended with the plaintiff to complete the final inspection. He said the unit could and should have been completed as the work involved was about six and one-half hours in total involving several different trades. It was his opinion that even though the work to be done was minimal, the unit was not ready for a Hudac inspection, nor was it ready for occupancy on the morning of 1 October 1980. He concluded it was not therefore substantially complete, within the meaning of those words as they appear in the contracts.

7 On 19 September, Mr. Johnston telephoned the plaintiff's office and set 1 October 1980 as the interim closing date. His letter confirming his conversation stated that time would remain of the essence. On 24 September 1980, the plaintiff wrote to the defendants advising:

My interim closing date has been set for October 1st, 1980 and I expect my apartment to be fully completed on that date.

8 At 8:30 a.m. on 1 October, the plaintiff and Mr. Sorichetti attended at the unit and found the finishing incomplete. The parties differed to a minor extent with respect to the work that still had to be done. I prefer the evidence given by Mr. Sorichetti that I have referred to earlier.

9 The lower kitchen cabinet was in place but had to be fastened to the wall. The countertop could then be installed and the sink hooked up. The appliances, (except for the refrigerator), had to be brought to the unit from the storage area in the building and hooked up. In the two bathrooms, the vanity tops had to be installed and the bathroom fixtures installed and hooked up to the plumbing already in place. Shelving in a closet or cupboard in the bedroom had to be installed.

10 Mr. Sorichetti indicated to the plaintiff that the unit was not ready for a Hudac inspection and suggested it be postponed for a day or two. The plaintiff agreed. The two men then parted. Mr. Sorichetti returned to the unit, to determine the trades necessary to complete the work. He then instructed these trades to stay with the work in that unit until it was finished. Later, Mr. Sorichetti called Mr. Johnston to advise him that the Hudac inspection had not been completed.

11 Mr. Johnston then called the plaintiff's office and advised that the closing date was postponed until 7 October 1980. Mr. Johnston's office is in Whitby. He used Toronto offices near the development to conclude interim closings. He arranged several closings for specific dates so that both he and his secretary would have a full days work when they came to Toronto. It was for this reason he chose the 7 October 1980.

12 The plaintiff's secretary telephoned Mr. Johnston about noon on 1 October 1980 and advised that the plaintiff would be attending on him at 4 p.m. to interim close another unit purchased by one Murray. The message made no reference to the plaintiff's purchase. At 4 p.m. the plaintiff arrived and in about ten to fifteen minutes the Murray interim closing was completed.

13 The plaintiff then tendered the following documents on Mr. Johnston:

14 (1) A certified cheque for the balance to close as set out on the readjusted statement of adjustments.

15 (2) Post-dated occupancy cheques as stipulated in the contracts.

16 (3) Eight pages of requisitions covering matters of title, conveyance and building construction with this condition:

...On the condition that we receive from you today full and satisfactory answers to our letter dated September 26 and September 30, 1980 (delivered herewith)...

The letter in which this stipulation is made contains the following postscript:

17 I am not prepared to extend the closing to October 7, 1980 as you requested when talking to my secretary.

18 Mr. Johnston, in a classic understatement said that he was taken by surprise. The plaintiff told him he had retained a Mr. Scott as counsel and that Johnston was to deal with Scott. The plaintiff left and Johnston telephoned Scott after having the keys to the plaintiff's unit delivered. Scott was aware of the situation and waived tender of the keys. Mr. Johnston testified that if the plaintiff had been prepared to turn over the cheque he was prepared to hand over the keys.

19 Mr. Sorichetti learned of the tender about 5 p.m. He immediately went back to the condominium unit and found that all of the required work was complete except for removal of cartons and shavings the tradesmen had left behind.

20 The parties did not attempt further contact to resolve their differences. The plaintiff commenced this action for specific performance in early October and registered a lis pendens. Six months later the defendants, by letter, purported to terminate the contract. They have retained the deposit throughout.

21 The plaintiff testified that this condominium met all of his requirements and he knew of none comparable in the area he had chosen to reside. He said that when he tendered, then sued, his purpose was to prod the defendants into action. The defendants on the other hand say they were ready to close on 1 October 1980. It is remarkable that not even a telephone call was made by either in an attempt to resolve the stalemate.

22 In spite of the positions asserted by each side their willingness to complete the interim closing must be judged in the light of these important facts:

23 (1) The plaintiff made his tender conditional on the defendant's satisfying numerous requisitions with "full and satisfactory answers" that very day. The tender was made at 4:15 p.m.

24 (2) The defendants required that the plaintiff sign a document entitled "Undertaking and Release". Mr. Johnston sent the document to the plaintiff prior to the interim closing as he did with all other purchasers who were going to complete all or part of the finishing work on their units. The document provides in part that:

I, EARL I SHOIHET have inspected my unit, Unit No. 910, at 110 Bloor Street West (hereinafter referred to as "the Unit") and I HEREBY ACKNOWLEDGE that the Unit has been completed to the degree that has been specified by me. I HEREBY FURTHER ACKNOWLEDGE that the Unit has been constructed in a good and workmanlike manner to my complete and full satisfaction and in accordance with the agreement of purchase and sale between myself and ONE TEN FLOOR WEST DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION LIMITED.

IN CONSIDERATION of the completion of the Unit to my satisfaction, I HEREBY RELEASE ONE TEN BLOOR WEST DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION LIMITED, PRIENE LIMITED and 377806 ONTARIO LIMITED, their successors and assigns, from any further responsibility to complete the Unit, to repair any deficiencies to the Unit, or to do any further work of any nature or any sort to the Unit.

I HEREBY INDEMNIFY ONE TEN BLOOR WEST DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION LIMITED, PRIENE LIMITED and 377806 ONTARIO LIMITED from any and all damage, liability, causes of action or any harm or expense whatsoever that may be caused to them by virtue of my workmen or myself completing work on the Unit.

According to Mr. Johnston, it was a requirement on interim closing that this document be delivered in executed form.

25 (3) A further significant fact, particularly in light of the above requirement, was that no one representing the defendants ever told the plaintiff on 1 October 1980 or thereafter that his unit was complete and ready for occupancy; nor did the plaintiff take any steps to find out.

26 It is of fundamental importance to a resolution of the legal issues in this case, to understand the agreements they had entered into. The contracts contemplated the purchase of a condominium unit and other amenities that are not in issue in these proceedings, for a fixed price. Construction was incomplete on the date agreements were signed but specifications were set out, so that a prospective purchaser knew in some detail, at the beginning, what the end product was to be. The agreements further provided for two closing dates if certain things had not been accomplished, such as the registration of the Declaration and bylaw of the Condominium Corporation, at the time the plaintiff's unit was substantially completed. At the first closing the purchaser was to pay over the balance of the purchase price, as adjusted, deliver occupancy cheques in post-dated form at a predetermined amount and "execute and deliver" to the defendant any documents required by it to the extent that such was possible or practical.

27 The vendor in return was to allow the plaintiff possession of the unit as a licensee in possession. Final closing was to take place in accordance with specific terms after certain events had taken place. It was only prior to final closing that requisitions on title had to be satisfied and a deed delivered.

28 The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 imposes obligation and duties on both parties. Section 51 stipulates that certain covenants are implied in any agreement. As a result the defendants had an obligation to register the declaration without delay; to take all reasonable steps to sell the residential units; to deliver a deed without delay. There are other obligations. The legislation is designed to prevent unscrupulous developers from taking advantage of a rising market as the contract itself provides that the defendant need only return the deposit with interest if the Declaration has not been registered by closing or if a certain number of units have not been sold by a specified date.

29 In simple terms, a vendor cannot take advantage of a purchaser by his own default or neglect.

30 The contract documents provide for an inspection of the unit by the parties and completion of a Hudac New Home Warranty Program Certificate of Completion and Possession. It is apparent from the lengthy name that the inspection and certificate are for the protection of both parties. The agreements provide that completion of the inspection and certificate are conditions of the vendor's obligation to give occupancy and to complete the transaction.

31 Further, the contract says:

17. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements or registration of the Condominium is delayed by reason of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war or unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever, the Vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension of time for completion and the date of closing shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit and close this transaction within such extended time for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser, other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him with interest and without deduction and this agreement shall be null and void. If the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on or before the date of closing or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event the Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit. (emphasis mine)

32 The plaintiff sued for specific performance on 7 October 1980. His statement of claim alleges that the defendant was in default because it failed to have the unit ready for occupancy on the interim closing date and because it failed to satisfy the numerous requisitions insisted upon by the plaintiff. At trial the plaintiff, for the first time, said he did not rely on the defendant's failure to answer any of the requisitions except the one relating to substantial completion.

33 I have concluded that this action must fail with respect to specific performance or equitable damages.

34 The plaintiff elected damages in lieu of performance. Those damages include a claim for the difference between the original purchase price of $161,000 and the value of the unit in today's market of $217,212, or $56,212. The plaintiff also claims $1,108 paid for land transfer tax at the time of registration of the lis pendens; $347.20 for tiling; and $11,270 being the deposit.

35 In order to succeed in his claim for market value the plaintiff must establish that he was entitled to specific performance. The agreements that governed the relationship between the parties provided a remedy in the event of the defendant's failure to substantially complete by interim closing. Keeping in mind that it was the purchaser who insisted on substantial completion and occupancy on 1 October 1980 his rights under the contract were to put the agreements at an end and to have his deposit returned with interest. The defendants, in the circumstances of this case, were not entitled to invoke para. 17 of the agreement and thereby to insist on a 1 October 1980 closing because they had not taken reasonable steps to complete construction by the morning of 1 October 1980 and because they failed to notify the purchaser later in the day that substantial completion had been achieved. However, the defendants did not insist on the closing date. On the contrary, they asked for a few days to complete, and requested postponement of closing to 7 October 1980. Therefore, by contract, the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance on 1 October nor was he so entitled on the date the writ was issued.

36 Further, the inspection required by the agreement as a condition to possession and completion of the transaction had not been accomplished. Again, the defendants, on 1 October could not rely on this fact to avoid the contract and they did not. I have found as a fact that the parties agreed to postpone the inspection for a day or so. Even without this finding, the uncontradicted evidence is that a postponement was requested by the defendants. Putting the plaintiff's case at its highest, no response was made by the plaintiff. It is clear therefore that the defendants on either version of the facts sought no advantage from their delay.

37 At the opening of trial I reserved on a motion by the defendants to amend their defence by adding a paragraph asserting that the parties agreed on an extension to 7 October 1980. There is evidence that supports this position arising from the fact that the inspection date was extended and because of the way in which this and prior extension had been arranged. I have decided to refuse the motion because of its timing and the substantial change it makes to the existing pleadings. The evidence with relation to extension is nevertheless relevant to the question whether the plaintiff acted reasonably in the position he took.

38 Assuming the plaintiff was ready to close and that his tender was proper, was his only remedy the return of his deposit? I think not. He was entitled to close, complete construction and sue for damages or claim damages arising from delay in completion while affirming the validity and binding effect of the agreement.

39 There are other reasons why the plaintiff's action was ill advised. The tender that he made was a conditional tender, where the conditions were not only improper in the sense that the defendant had no obligation to perform the vast majority of them at or before interim closing, but they were, to the plaintiff's knowledge, impossible to perform in the time frame allowed. I do not mean to imply that the plaintiff could not requisition on 1 October 1980, but he had no right to insist on answers as a condition of interim closing.

40 Blanco v. Nugent, [1949] 1 W.W.R. 723.

41 The plaintiff is an experienced solicitor. He acted on his own behalf on 1 October 1980 with the advice of counsel. Closing dates were extended on a number of occasions by Mr. Johnston in the same manner as that attempted on 1 October 1980. The plaintiff knew, at 8:30 am. that the Hudac inspection could not be completed and he agreed to allow the defendant a day or so to finish up. By noon that day he was aware of Mr. Johnston's call purporting to extend closing to 7 October 1980. He did nothing to indicate his intention to tender. Instead, the plaintiff arranged with Johnston to interim close another transaction with the defendants involving a condominium unit in the same building as the plaintiff's. His office arranged the closing at 4 p.m. The plaintiff failed to indicate, either that he would not extend his own closing to the 7th, or that he was going to tender subject to requisitions, but that is what he did.

42 However aggrieved the plaintiff felt by the defendants' conduct, he had a responsibility to deal fairly and reasonably with Mr. Johnston. The plaintiff's conduct was not that of a fair minded, responsible solicitor. He now seeks equity in this Court but comes to it without clean hands. I cannot condone his actions. On this ground alone, the plaintiff fails in his action for specific performance.

43 The defendants say that, in spite of the position the plaintiff put them in, they were ready to close and they tendered. I think not. The defendants had an obligation to advise the plaintiff of substantial completion and to arrange a new inspection date. They did neither.

44 In addition, the evidence disclosed that the "Undertaking and Release" would be insisted upon at interim closing. That document goes far beyond anything contemplated by the agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant had no right to insist on the plaintiff signing and delivering such a broadly worded document in circumstances where the Hudac inspection had not been made and the completion certificate remained unsigned.

45 On 1 October 1980, there was no valid tender made by either side. Subsequent to that date neither party sought to arrange a further inspection nor did they attempt to set a new closing date on reasonable notice.

46 On 1 October 1980 the defendants wrote a letter to all unit purchasers addressing problems unrelated to the particular facts of this case. The letter concluded with these words:

5. Closings

Closings for 110 Bloor West have been occurring on a regular basis to the present time and occupancy of the building is well underway. We intend to complete all transactions of purchase and sale in the immediate future; should there be any further questions which you may have please have your solicitor contact our solicitor Mr. Patrick Johnston at 686-2628.

On 12 March 1981 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff as follows:

Take notice that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between Earle I. Shoihet and 110 Bloor West Development Corporation Limited dated the 17th day of March, 1979, is forthwith terminated as you have refused to complete the above noted transaction on an interim and/or final basis, contrary to the Interim Occupancy Agreement and contrary to the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

47 No closing date was set for final closing nor did any party tender either before or after 12 March 1981. The parties, instead, were entrenched in irreversible litigation.

48 The plaintiff contends that in these circumstances the agreement remains valid and subsisting and he now has the right to set a closing date. I do not agree.

49 The plaintiff has elected damages in lieu of specific performance. In view of my determination his election is perhaps academic but, more importantly, the plaintiff chose the litigation route in circumstances where the remedy he sought was not only unavailable to him but by his own conduct he put it out of reach. The decision to sue crystallized the parties positions. The plaintiff had no right to anticipate that his action would bring matters to a head in circumstances where his position with respect to requisitions was totally unreasonable.

50 In cases where neither party can be said to be ready, willing and able to close on a stipulated date each party is entitled to set a new closing date on reasonable notice to the other. Almost four years have gone by and this has not been done either as to interim or final closing. Both sides were aware of the rising market situation and they did nothing. The plaintiff had the legal right, as did the defendants, to set a new closing date provided that they did so within a reasonable time. Four years is unreasonable. As a consequence the plaintiff has lost any right to now stipulate a closing date. The agreements are null and void.

51 In Zender et al. v. Ball et al. (1974) 5 O.R. (2d) 747, a case in which neither side was ready, willing or able to close and where they treated the contract as at an end, although neither was entitled to do so, Pennell J. said this at p. 758:

Both parties have treated the contract at an end; however, I think neither was entitled to do so. There has been a long delay since the original closing date and neither party has done anything to perfect his position and entitle himself to rely on the provisions of the contract. It would appear, therefore, that the Court should rescind the contract at this time and place the parties in the position they were in before they entered into it.

The deposit was in the form of a guarantee for the performance of this contract by the purchaser; however, a vendor who is also in default cannot take the position that he is entitled to both the land and the deposit of the purchaser. When a prospective purchaser makes a deposit on an agreement of purchase and sale, he creates an equitable interest in the subject property in an amount equal to what he had paid towards the purchase price, and he is entitled to a lien on the property if the sale goes of by a failure to complete not caused by himself.

For the reasons given, I think there should be judgment for the return of the deposit money.

52 The deposit, together with interest payable under the provisions of the Condominiums Act, is to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff. In addition, the plaintiff is to be reimbursed the sum of $347.20 expended on tiling the unit. That sum is payable without interest.

53 The defendant has been substantially successful in this action. However, an award of costs might encourage other developers to overreach in their demands for documents such as the release sought in this case, or to be careless or sloppy in fulfilling commitments to purchasers. The penalty of no costs will deter these defendants and hopefully others from reacting to the bad judgment of one party with their own lack of judgment. A trial is and should be the avenue of last resort. Legal costs are onerous compared to the cost of a telephone call or letter. The parties will learn that lesson by absorbing their costs.

Judgment: May 24, 1983.
(50 pp.)

Clifford F. Shnier, for the Plaintiff.
R.J. Arcand, for the Defendant.
David R. Rothwell, for the Third Party.
D. Gordon Bent, for the Fourth Party Zentil Plumbing & Heating Ltd. & Co..
Barry B. Papazian, for the Fourth Party John Garay & Associates Limited.

1 SUTHERLAND J.:— This matter involves the trial of certain of the issues arising in an action brought by the plaintiffs for damages in respect of alleged deficiencies in the construction of two condominium projects in the Borough of Etobicoke in Metropolitan Toronto, the issues here in question being between the plaintiffs, the defendant, the third party and two of the fourth parties, namely Zentil Plumbing and Heating Ltd. and Co. and John Garay and Associates Limited. The issues are set forth in a statement of "Agreed Issues to be Tried" signed by the solicitors for those parties.

2 The defendant, York-Hannover Limited, was formed by the amalgamation, pursuant to The Business Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 53, of the former defendant Deltan Realty Limited and other corporations. By order dated January 21, 1981 Master Sandler ordered that the pleadings be deemed to be amended to reflect the amalgamation, and that the styles of cause of the main action and the third party proceedings thenceforth reflect the amalgamation and show York-Hannover Limited as defendant.

3 The trial proceeded on the basis of a "Statement of Agreed Facts" signed by the solicitors for all those parties, as supplemented by the documents filed as exhibits, namely, copies of the declaration and descriptions relating to the formation of the plaintiff condominium corporations, and a sample copy of the form of agreement of purchase and sale entered into by original purchasers of units in either of the condominium projects. It was common ground that there were no material differences in the form and contents of the declarations and the descriptions relating to the two condominium corporations.

4 It was also agreed that for these purposes the relevant version of The Condominium Act is that appearing in R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended by S.O. 1972, c. 7, 1973, c. 121 and 1974, c. 133, and that the 1978 amendments conferring upon condominium corporations the power and authority to bring actions for damages to or deficiencies in individual units have no application to the case.

5 The substantive parts of the statement of Agreed Issues to be Tried are as follows:

AGREED ISSUES TO BE TRIED

The Plaintiff, Defendant, Third Party and the Fourth Parties, Zentil Plumbing & Heating Ltd. and John Garay & Associates Limited as the only parties concerned agree upon the terms of the issue or issues to be tried as follows:

(a) Do the alleged defects and deficiencies referred to in paragraphs 8(w), 8(x), and 10(g) of the Plaintiffs' Statement of Claim relate to common elements, or are the vertical fan coil units and the valves within them within the boundaries of the condominium units as defined in the Declarations and Descriptions?

(b) If the alleged defects and deficiencies do not relate to common elements, may the personal claims of individual unit owners be asserted in a class action or not? Directions as to the constitution and ascertainment of the class, and directions as to conduct of those personal claims will be required if the answer is affirmative.

DATED at Toronto, this 23rd day of June, 1982.

6 The substantive parts of the Statement of Agreed Facts are as follows (with added parenthetical references to the exhibits):

STATEMENT OF AGREED FACTS

1. The Plaintiff, York Condominium Corporation No. 161 (Y.C.C. 161) was created under The Condominium Act by the registration August 19, 1974 of Instrument No. B437003, the Declaration and Description, and is municipally known as 812 Burnhamthorpe Road, Etobicoke. A copy of the Declaration and Description will be filed by the Plaintiff at the trial. [Filed as Exhibits No. 1 and No. 2]
2. The Plaintiff, York Condominium Corporation No. 144 (Y.C.C. 144) was created under the Act by the registration June 3, 1974 of Instrument No. B428046, the Declaration and Description, and is municipally known as 820 Burnhamthorpe Road, Etobicoke. A copy of the Declaration and Description will be filed by the Plaintiff at the trial. [Exhibits No. 3 and 4]
3. The Plaintiff, Jaroslav W. Frei departed this life January 12, 1981, and by the Order of Master Sischy dated May 7, 1982, the cause of action insofar as it was brought by the late Doctor Frei was continued at the suit of John Cleave, on behalf of himself and all other members of Y.C.C. 161, such Order to be deemed effective nunc pro tunc as of January 21, 1981, and without prejudice to the right of the Defendant and Third Party to plead that the action insofar as it was brought by the later Doctor Frei had abated. Both Jaroslav W. Frei and John Cleave were original purchasers from the Defendant and John Cleave remains an owner of a unit in Y.C.C. 161.
4. The Plaintiff, Kenneth Molyneux was an original purchaser from the Defendant and remains an owner of a unit in Y.C.C. 144.
5. A typical Agreement of Purchase and Sale representative of original sales of units will be filed by the Plaintiff at the trial. [Exhibit No. 5]
6. The Defendant, York-Hannover Limited, is a limited company incorporated under the provisions of the Ontario Business Corporations Act and is the successor to Deltan Realty Limited which was the Declarant of both Y.C.C. 161 and Y.C.C. 144 as well as being the vendor on all the original unit sales. The Defendant was not the manager of either building.
7. The Third Party, Sardina Investments Limited, was amalgamated with and continued as Del Corporation Limited by Articles of Amalgamation dated June 30, 1978, and was at all material times the sole general contractor retained by the Defendant to build both Y.C.C. 161 and Y.C.C. 144. The Third Party was neither vendor of units nor manager of either building.
8. The Fourth Party, Zentil Plumbing & Heating Ltd. and Co. was, at the material time, a limited partnership carrying on business as a plumbing and mechanical contractor, and by a contract with the Third Party dated July 26, 1971 and an addendum thereto dated June 2, 1975, the Fourth Party Zentil agreed to perform all the plumbing and mechanical work in accordance with the plans and specifications therefore.
9. The Fourth Party, John Garay and Associates Limited is a private Ontario corporation and was retained as a consulting engineer inter alia to prepare plumbing, mechanical and electrical specifications for the proposed condominium apartment buildings that became Y.C.C. 161 and Y.C.C.
10. Paragraphs 8(w), 8(x), and 10(g) of the Plaintiffs' Statement of Claim refer to vertical fan coil units (and the valves within such units at Y.C.C. 161) which were installed, two per suite, by the Fourth Party, Zentil, in each of the 216 suites in each building.
11. The vertical fan coil units installed are themselves in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Fourth Party, Garay, but the quality of workmanship of installation is reserved for subsequent evidence. A set of the mechanical plans will be filed at the trial by the Plaintiff.
12. The function of the vertical fan coil units is to heat the suites by warming air blown over a coil filled with hot water in the winter, and to cool the suites by cooling air blown over a coil filled with cold water in the summer.
13. In one season, a boiler or boilers in the penthouse mechanical room of each building delivers hot water through risers to each fan coil unit, and in the opposite season, a chiller in the penthouse mechanical room delivers cold water through the same risers to the fan coil units. There are three risers running through each line of fan coil units: a supply riser; a return riser; and a condensate drain pipe.
14. A control permits the occupants of each suite to regulate both heating and cooling as required from each vertical fan coil unit.
15. Periodic maintenance is required by the occupants of each suite who are required to remove the lower grill over the air-intake access to the vertical fan coil unit in order to remove and replace a filter in the grill assembly.
16. Some periodic maintenance may be required to a degree which is disputed by the occupants of each suite to ensure the free flow of water which may accumulate in a condensate pan, placed horizontally in the fan coil unit, which has a drainage hole and detachable drainage tube.
17. Facility of access to thoroughly clean the condensate pan is the subject matter of paragraphs 8(w) and 10(g) and the quality of the two valves in each of the vertical fan coil units is the subject matter of paragraph 8(x), the valves being integral parts of the vertical fan coil unit installed by the Fourth Party, Zentil, but fabricated by a supplier who is not a party to the action.
18. The Declaration of each building is identical in all material respects and provides, inter alia, as follows:

I INTRODUCTORY

(1) Definitions - The following terms used herein have the meanings set out below, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) common elements means all the property except the units;

(b) common interest means the interest in the common elements appurtenant to a unit;

(e) unit means a part or parts of the land included in the description, and designated as a unit by its boundaries and all the material parts of the land within this space at the time the declaration and description are registered.

(f) The definition of "unit" for the purposes of the duties to repair and maintain under Section 16 and 17 of the Act and this declaration shall extend to all improvements made by the Declarant in accordance with its architectural plans notwithstanding that some of such improvements may be made after registration of the declaration;

(g) Other terms used herein shall have ascribed to them the definitions contained in the Act, as amended from time to time.

(4) Boundaries of Units and Monuments

The monuments controlling the extent of the units are the physical surfaces mentioned in the boundaries of units in Schedule "C" attached hereto.

IV UNITS

(1) Occupation and Use

The occupation and use of the units shall be in accordance with the following restrictions and stipulations save and except Unit 6, level 1;

(d) No owner shall make any structural change or alteration in or to his unit or make any change to an installation upon the common elements, or maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements, except for maintenance of those parts of the common elements which he has the duty to maintain, without the consent of the board.

VI MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRS

(1) Each owner shall maintain his unit, and, subject to the provisions of this declaration, each owner shall repair his unit after damage, all at his own expense. The owners of units 3, 4, 8 and 9 on levels 21 and 22 having fireplaces constructed as part of their units shall be responsible at their own expense for the cleaning and/or sweeping where necessary, of the chimney appurtenant to such fireplace and unit.

Each owner shall be responsible for all damages to any and all other units and to the common elements, which are caused by the failure of the owner to so maintain and repair his unit, save and except for any such damages to the common elements for which the cost of repairing same may be recovered under any policy or policies of insurance held by the corporation.

7 The corporation shall make any repairs or maintenance (hereinafter referred to as repairs) that an owner is obligated to make and in such an event, an owner shall be deemed to have consented to having repairs done to his unit by the corporation; and an owner shall reimburse the corporation in full for the cost of such repairs, including any legal or collection costs incurred by the corporation in order to collect the costs of such repairs, and all such sums of money shall bear interest at the rate of twelve per cent (12 per cent) per annum. The corporation may collect all such sums of money in such instalments as the board may decide upon, which instalments shall be added to the monthly contributions towards the common expenses of such owner, after receipt of a notice from the corporation thereof. All such payments are deemed to be additional contributions towards the common expenses and recoverable as such.

(2) Repairs and Maintenance of Common Elements by the Corporation

The corporation shall repair and maintain the common elements which include repair and maintenance to all doors which provide the means of ingress to and egress from a unit and to all windows, save and except maintenance of interior surfaces of windows, all at its own expense.

IX INSURANCE

(1) By the Corporation

The corporation shall be required to obtain and maintain to the extent obtainable from the insurance industry, the following insurance, in one or more policies: -

(a) Insurance against damage by fire with extended coverage and such other perils as the board may from time to time deem advisable, insuring: (i) the property, excluding the units;

(3) By the Owner

It is acknowledged that the foregoing insurance is the only insurance required to be obtained and maintained by the corporation and that the following insurance, or any other insurance, if deemed necessary or desirable by any owner, may be obtained and maintained by such owner:

(a) Insurance on any additions or improvements made by the owner to his unit and for furnishings, fixtures, equipment, decorating and personal property and chattels of the owner contained within his unit.

SCHEDULE "C"

1) Monuments controlling the extent of units described and numbered in the Description, save and except for Unit 6, Level 1, are the physical surfaces and fully described as follows:

(a) Each unit is bounded vertically by:

(i) the upper surface of the concrete floor slab beneath the unit.

(ii) the under surface of concrete ceiling.

(b) Each unit is bounded horizontally by the interior surface of the unfinished concrete, masonry or block walls. In the vicinity of pipe spaces between certain units, unit is bounded horizontally by the back side of dry wall.

(c) In the vicinity of windows, window frames and exterior doors, the unit boundaries shall be the unfinished interior surfaces of such windows, window frames and doors.

(d) Provided that any pipes, wires and cables used for power, water and drainage which are within any walls or floors together with any furnace ducts and controls which may be within any unit shall be excluded from such unit.

19. The locations of the vertical fan coil units are within the boundaries of the Units as defined in the Declaration and as shown in the Description of each building. They are enclosed in drywall so that the only portions normally visible are the supply air grill, the return air grill and the thermostat control.

20. With respect to a possible class action for personal claims of individual unit owners:

(a) Certain original purchasers have now sold their units either before or after institution of proceedings;

(b) Resale purchasers have no contractual relationship with the Defendant;

(c) Expense has been incurred with respect to some but by no means all vertical fan coil units while some vertical fan coil units have not occasioned any expense to date.

(d) Individual unit owners have not, to date, been obliged to opt into or out of a class action for personal claims;

(e) The Plaintiffs' proposed rectification work is said to be for the same work at a uniform cost per vertical fan coil unit, but the other parties dispute the necessity of all or parts of the proposed work and where valves have been replaced already or in those few cases where access has been facilitated already, either less work or no work may be required even in the event that the Plaintiff succeeds in establishing liability for the alleged deficiencies.

These agreed facts are respectfully submitted by the undersigned parties through their respective solicitors, this 24th day of June, 1982 for trial before The Honourable Mr. Justice Sutherland June 29, 1982.

8 Paragraphs 8(w), 8(x) and 10(g) of the plaintiffs' Statement of Claim state as follows:

8(w) The valves above and below the coil in the heating and air-conditioning units are defective and frequently break, causing extensive damage to the walls and carpeting in the suites. Approximately ten percent of these valves have already been replaced, and it has become necessary to order the replacement of the remainder to avoid additional accumulation of damages.

8(x) The installation of the heating and air-conditioning units in all the suites is defective thereby rendering the units unserviceable. As presently installed access to the condensate pan and to the heat exchanger and water delivery systems is not possible except by cutting through the drywall and the surrounding sheet metal. It is estimated that the cost of remedying this defect will be approximately $38,970.00.

10(g) The installation of the heating and air-conditioning units in all the suites is defective, thereby rendering the units unserviceable. As presently installed, access to the condensate pan and to the heat exchanger and water delivery systems is not possible except by cutting through the drywall and the surrounding sheet metal. This is a major design and construction deficiency affecting accessibility to about 440 heating and air-conditioning units.

9 The first of the agreed issues to be tried amounts in effect to the question of whether the fan coil units in each condominium unit within the condominium projects form parts of the common elements of the respective separate condominium units in which they are found, and so not parts of the common elements, the two categories being mutually exclusive.

10 At trial there was a preliminary issue based on the wording of paragraph (a) of the Agreed Issues. It was argued that because paragraph (a) states in part: "Do the alleged defects ... relate to common elements or are the vertical fan coil units ... within the boundaries of the condominium units as defined in the Declarations and Descriptions?", it would follow that if I found that the vertical fan coil units were within the boundaries of the condominium units I would have no alternative but to hold that the fan coil units were not common elements.

11 Although paragraph (a) is unhappily worded, and so could have borne that interpretation, I rejected the argument because to have accepted it would have resulted in a deal issue between the parties being decided on the basis of an unfortunate slip in the wording of the "Agreed Issues". It is common ground that the fan coil units are situated within the boundaries of the condominium units. That has never been in issue. The real issue is whether the vertical fan coil units are within the exceptions provided by paragraph 1(d) of Schedule "C" to the Declaration, which states:

Provided that any pipes, wires and cables used for power, water and drainage which are within any walls or floors, together with any furnace ducts and controls which may be within any unit shall be excluded from such unit.

12 The plaintiffs contend that the vertical fan coil units and the valves within them are all common elements, and Mr. Shnier pointed out that, if that view were upheld and liability were established, the full measure of compensation would be recoverable by the condominium corporations, notwithstanding significant turnovers among the owners of the units since the cause of actions first arose. See the judgment of Gray J. in Loader et al. v. Rose Park Wellesley Investments Ltd. et al. (1980), 17 C.P.C. 150, at pp. 160 and 161. That case also stands for the proposition that under the old Act the condominium corporation was the only appropriate plaintiff where common elements were the subject of the litigation.

13 The plaintiffs argue, firstly, that the plain meaning of the words in sub-paragraph (d) of clause (1) of Schedule "C" to the declaration would exclude the fan coil units and, secondly, in the alternative that, at the very least, it is not clear that they are not excluded and, therefore, that the ambiguity should be reserved in favour of the plaintiffs, on the basis of the doctrine of contra proferentum.

14 The plaintiffs referring to paragraphs 11 through 14 of the agreed facts, state that the fan coil units are connected by a series of risers, namely a supply pipe running vertically through the buildings, and that the risers are aligned vertically because the fan coil units on one floor are directly below fan coil units on the floors above. It is asserted by the plaintiffs that the coil part of the fan coil unit is no more than a narrower pipe, filled with hot or cold water, depending on the season. Moreover, the whole system is changed over from heating to cooling, and vice versa at one time, with the unit owners having no ability to opt out of that decision but only the ability to use their controls to increase or decrease the amount of heating, or cooling, taking place in their units.

15 Counsel for the plaintiffs asserts that the coil in a fan coil unit is a "pipe" as that term is used in paragraph 1(d) of Schedule "C" and that, as the fan coil units are fully enclosed in dry wall except for air grills, the coils are "within ... walls" and so constitute the sort of pipes referred to in the first part of paragraph 1(d).

16 With respect to the meaning of the word "pipe", Mr. Shnier referred to dictionaries, including (a) the Webster International Dictionary, where the third meaning given for the word is:

3. A hollow tube of any length and thickness and of whatsoever material - metal, earthenware, etc., whether consisting of a single length or in a continuous series joined end-wise ...;

and (b) the Concise Oxford Dictionary, Sixth Edition, where the first meaning of the noun "pipe" is:

1. Tube of wood, metal, etc. especially for conveying water, gas, etc.

It is asserted that the coil in a fan coil unit is a tube for the conveying of water and is therefore a pipe, and further that there is nothing in the declarations or in any of the other documents pertaining to the existence of the condominium corporations to suggest that a coil is not a pipe, or that "water" there has its meaning confined to domestic water supply and excludes heating water.

17 Counsel for the other parties represented all contended that the coils in fan coil units, while within dictionary definitions of "pipes", were simply not pipes within the meaning of paragraph 1(d), where pipes mean water pipes, waste drain pipes and the risers, among others, but not the coils. These parties further argued strongly that what are in issue are fan coil units which are units and consist of coils, valves, fans, and fan motors, and not simply of coils. Against the plaintiffs it was also argued that the fact that the fan coil units were housed in dry wall did not mean that they were "within any walls or floors" as would have to be the case to bring "pipes" within the exclusion in paragraph 1(d). Mr. Rothwell argued that whether or not dry wall was used as a housing for the fan coil units could not be determinative of whether the fan coil units formed part of the common elements.

18 On this issue Mr. Papazian, for fourth party, John Garay & Associates Limited, also argued that the fan coil units serve, and are for the benefit of, the individual condominium units and not the building as a whole, and therefore that they should not be held to be common elements. This argument loses some, but I think not all, of its force when one recognises that under the declaration there are some common elements that are for the exclusive enjoyment of the occupants of particular units - parking spaces and balconies being the most obvious.

19 A parallel argument that could have been made is that, under s-ss. 24(1) and 24(2) of the old Act it was provided that an agreement of purchase and sale for a condominium unit was not binding on the purchaser, unless common elements that were for the exclusive benefit of one or a few condominium units were identified in documents delivered to the purchaser. Nowhere in our declaration or in descriptions or in any schedules thereto are the fan coil units (which obviously are for the sole benefit of the housing units in which they are situated) identified as exclusive-use common elements. The form of agreement of purchaser and sale used for the sale of units in both buildings (exhibit 5), does not identify exclusive-use common element. Instead, by its clause 13, the purchaser acknowledges that the documents required by the "old Act" have not yet been registered and that the agreement of purchase and sale is "conditional upon such registration". In the declaration, Schedule "F" sets forth the parking spaces that are for the exclusive use of the owners of the respective units, and, since the parking areas are common elements, this provides an example of compliance with the requirement of s. 24 of the old Act that exclusive-use common elements be identified. The same information as to parking spaces is set forth in graphic form in exhibit E attached to the description (filed as exhibits 2 and 4 in this action). Schedule "F" to each declaration also states that on levels 1 to 22 ownership of a unit confers the right "to exclusive use or possession of such patio or balcony to which there is direct access from such unit". I suppose the draftsman, if he considered fan coil units to be common elements might be forgiven for not so declaring in Schedule "G", because, as a practical matter, the location of the fan coil units wholly within the dwelling units makes it virtually impossible for anyone other than the occupant of that dwelling unit to enjoy possession or assert any control over such units. However, the plaintiffs, in addition to the onus of showing that the fan coil units are within the exclusions in paragraph 1(d), faces the added difficulty that the fan coil units, if part of the common elements, are either (a) not exclusive-use common elements (which is absurd) or, (b) exclusive-use common elements but not distinguished as such, which means that under the provisions of s. 24(2) of the old Act, the agreements of purchase and sale with respect to the individual dwelling units were not binding upon the purchasers referred to therein. It is not easy to accept that the developer can have intended the latter result.

20 The defendant and its supporter argued that the fact that the fan coil units are attached to common elements, the risers, does not make them common elements any more than toilets, dishwashers, basins, sinks, bath tubs, and stoves - all attached or connected to common elements - are themselves common elements. The plaintiffs' reply was that the fan coil units, unlike the other items just mentioned, are not merely receptacles attached to common elements, they are integral parts of the heating (cooling) system, and so included in "pipes". But are they "pipes"?

21 It is stated in paragraph 11 of the argued facts that "a set of mechanical plans will be filed at trial by the plaintiff" but such mechanical plans were not made exhibits at the hearing, and so I have had to take a round-about route to determine the physical relationship between the risers and the coils. In paragraph 13 of the agreed facts, it is stated that three risers run through each line of fan coil units". I take the phrase "line of fan coil units" to mean that a fan coil unit in any condominium unit on one floor is located more or less exactly above a fan coil unit in the condominium unit on the floor below, and so on throughout the floors, so that when the risers are stated to be "running through a line of fan coil units" that does not mean that, for example, the water arriving via the supply riser from the boiler in the penthouse mechanical room at a fan coil unit on the ground floor will have been through the coil of every fan coil unit in the "line of fan coil units" of which that ground floor fan coil unit is a part. It is not stated that hot water cannot get to a ground floor fan coil unit without going through the coils of all the fan coil units stacked above that ground floor unit. To put it another way, the risers are stated to run through a line of fan coil units, but it is not stated that the coils in the fan coil units are part of the risers, and I believe that they are not, for three reasons, as follows:

(1) In paragraph 13, where it states that "there are three risers running through each line of fan coil units", there is no differentiation between the way the three risers run through the line, whereas if the coil formed part of the supply riser the return riser would not run through the line of fan coil units in the same way, but would merely be a general return riser receiving the water after it left the lowest fan coil unit in the "line" and returning it to the boiler (or the chillers as the case may be).

(2) In such an arrangement there would be no purpose for valves in connection with each fan coil unit, indeed they would be counterproductive if they permitted an upstream owner to affect the rate at which supply water (hot or cold) became available to downstream fan coil units of other owners. The pleadings do make it clear that there are two valves in connection with each fan coil unit.

(3) It is stated in paragraph 16 of the agreed facts that the condensate pan "has a drainage hole and a detachable drainage tube" which I take it leads to the riser known as the condensate drain pipe, which is one of the risers said in paragraph 13 to be "running through each line of fan coil units".

22 I conclude that the fan coil units, although connected to risers that are "pipes", referred to in paragraph 1(d) of Schedule "C" are not themselves, nor are their coils, "pipes" within the meaning of paragraph 1(d). That term should be given its plain meaning, which would exclude the fan coil units from the meaning of "pipes", even though the coils in the fan coil units are acknowledgedly within the dictionary definitions of pipes. In my view there is no ambiguity on this narrow question and so there is no reason to consider the doctrine of contra proferentum with respect to it.

23 On the first test in paragraph (d) the fan coil units would be common elements if they were "pipes" and if they were "within any walls or floors". On the view I take of the first element I need not deal with the second element. However, I am of the opinion that, although the fan coil units are enclosed in dry wall they are not "within any walls or floors" as contemplated by paragraph 1(d).

24 That brings us to the second branch of the plaintiffs' argument with respect to paragraph 1(d), to the effect that the fan coil units are common elements because they are "furnace ducts and controls which may be within any unit", and so "shall be excluded from such unit". It will be recalled that individual units and common elements are mutually exclusive. It is especially with regard to this interpretation that the plaintiffs pressed their contra proferentum argument, stating that there is ambiguity and that the ambiguity must be resolved in favour of the plaintiffs.

25 The observations made above with respect to s. 24 of the old Act, and the fact that neither the declarations (exhibits 1 and 3) nor the descriptions (exhibits 2 and 4) refer to fan coil units as common elements, or, more importantly, as exclusive or restricted use common elements - even although not to do so if they were in fact exclusive-use or restricted-use common elements could render agreements of purchase and sale unenforceable - apply with equal force to this argument on the second branch of paragraph 1(d) of Schedule "C".

26 The plaintiff again refers to dictionary definitions, noting that Webster, supra, defines a "duct" as a "channel for fluid, that the Concise Oxford Dictionary, supra, gives as a primary meaning of duct that of "a channel for fluid" and that a boiler is sometimes "a vessel for water heated by a furnace". It is contended for the plaintiffs that the fan coils are "ducts" and because connected with the boilers (at least in winter) they are "furnace ducts" within the meaning of the second branch of paragraph 1(d), and so excluded from the dwelling units and thus are common elements. The plaintiff asserts further that the controls in each dwelling unit are the "controls" referred to in paragraph 1(d) and so excluded, and that a fortiori the fan coil units are also excluded and so are common elements.

27 The plaintiff argues that nothing in the declarations or the descriptions states that the fan coil units are not "furnace ducts", and that if those who drafted the declarations had wanted to include the fan coil units as parts of the individual dwelling units (i.e. excluded from the common elements) as was done in the case of the declaration with respect to a condominium building at 110 Bloor Street West in Toronto, they could have done so. In that case the declaration stated that:

The Units shall include the fan coil air cooling and heating equipment from shut valve to shut off valve and where applicable the fire place and fire and shall not include such pipes, wires and cables located within the above-mentioned boundaries that provide service to more than one unit.

28 The defendant and its supporters of course argue that the above quoted provision was inserted out of an abundance of caution to state the obvious. They also argue that the quotation reflects the proper distinction between the fan coil units themselves and on the other hand those "pipes ... located within the above-mentioned boundaries, that provide ... service to more than one unit" and that the latter are, properly, stated to be common elements.

29 The plaintiff argued that the fan coil units and the "furnace ducts", are integral parts of an integrated heating system instead of mere receptacles such as basins, bath tubs, toilets, and dishwashers. In this regard my observations above about the pipes "running through a line of fan coil units" are applicable and tend to support the view that the fan coil units may be viewed as separate from the common elements that service more than one unit.

30 The plaintiffs argue that paragraph 1(d) is, at best, ambiguous and that the ambiguity should be resolved in favour of the plaintiffs on the basis of the doctrine of contra proferentum. Implicit in this is the assertion that, because the declaration is referred to in the agreements of purchase and sale it is incorporated by reference and therefore is a contractual document. The declarations are very much the creations of the developer and their terms are settled by the developer and proffered to each original purchaser of a unit, with the purchasers having to "take it or leave it".

31 With respect to the doctrine of contra proferentum Mr. Shnier referred to two passages from the third edition of the Canadian Encyclopedic Digest, and to the reports of three cases. The two passages are as follows:

497. Where a contractual provision is sufficiently ambiguous that it is reasonably capable of more than one construction, it will be construed against the party responsible for drafting and tendering the contract and in favour of the opposite party. But if there is reasonable certainty as to the proper meaning of a provision, even though some difficulty in construction may exist, there is no warrant for employing this rule. The rule applies to complicated contracts, deeds and standardized business documents since care in draftsmanship may be expected in such cases, but the rule does not extend to informal contracts such as contracts formed from correspondence nor to printed forms which have been substantially amended bilaterally before execution. The rule applies with particular force to exceptions to or reservations from the primary covenants of deeds. [Footnotes and footnote references omitted]

499. If alternative constructions of contractual provisions are possible, the courts will avoid interpretations that are absurd, unjust or even improbable. Similarly, the courts will shrink from interpretations which would render a party's promises meaningless, the transaction void or would involve illegality such as contravention of a statutory prohibition, since it will be presumed that the parties did not intend to violate the law. [Footnotes and footnote references omitted]

32 The principal argument of the defendant and its supporters is that paragraph 1(d) is not ambiguous. As was stated vigorously and almost poetically by Mr. Arcand (without any apology to Gertrude Stein), "A fan coil unit is a fan coil unit is a fan coil unit; it is not a pipe or a wire or a duct but a fan coil unit." It was also pointed out that although incorporated by reference in the agreements of purchase and sale the main purpose of the declarations was not to embody contractual provisions between the developer and original purchasers of units. It is the basic document, after the statute, in determining the rights of unit holders inter se and vis-a-vis the condominium corporation. Many of its provisions are required by statute. It is an on-going document that can be amended, albeit that under the old Act that took the affirmative votes of the holders of all the units.

33 The decision of the Court of Appeal in Chin v. Jacobs et al., [1972] 2 O.R. 54 involved at the appellate level a clear application of the "rule" of contra proferentum to construe a manifestly ambiguous term against the employers who had the employment contract drawn up. Mackay, J.A. also stated that the Court of Appeal was not convinced that the trial judge was in error in holding against the employers. The trial judge referred to contra proferentum but also to the fact that of the other two possible interpretations one should be rejected as being improvidently generous to the employee, and the other should be rejected with the aid of contra proferentum, as being unfair to the employee.

34 In John Lee & Son (Grantham) Ltd. et al. v. Railway Executive, [1949] 2 All E.R. 581, Evershed M.R. construed a contract of indemnity against the party that proffered the contract, stating that the rule of contra proferentum should be applied, but the principal ground for his decision, it appears to me, is found in the statement that "because of the extravagant result which the former view involves, I think that the latter construction is the one which the court ought to adopt." (my emphasis). In the same judgment Evershed M.R. also stated that "as a matter of construction of this kind other cases provide a very uncertain guide and each document must be construed according to its own terms."

35 The decision of Ferguson J. in Township of Red Lake v. Dawson, [1964] 1 O.R. 324, while expressly stating that the contract there under consideration should be construed against the municipality that prepared it, referred also to several legal principles of much more fundamental importance than the contra proferentum rule, and I am convinced that the rule played but a small part in adding to the already sufficient reasons for the decision.

36 To return to the above-quoted excerpts from the Canadian Encyclopedic Digest, it will seem that ambiguity is there distinguished from difficulty of interpretation. Furthermore, in the second of the two passages quoted above, it is pointed out that the courts will shrink from an interpretation which would involve illegality, or render a party's promises meaningless. In that connection I refer again to the effect under s. 24 of the old Act of having exclusive-use common elements not described as such in the contracting documents of an Ontario condominium.

37 Even assuming that the declarations are contractual documents to which the contra proferentum rule would apply, and although the second part of paragraph 1(d) of Schedule "C" presents some difficulties of interpretation, when I consider the document as a whole, I do not find the clause to be ambiguous. I hold that the fan coil units are not parts of the common elements but form part of the dwelling units in which they are located.

38 Under the old Act, as interpreted by the courts, a condominium corporation was the only proper plaintiff to bring an action in respect of the common elements, but was not a proper representative plaintiff to bring a class action on behalf of the rights of unit holders relating to their separate units. Under the current Condominium Act the condominium can sue to recover for damages not only to the common elements but also to the several units.

39 The second main issue is whether the claims of individual unit holders, referred to in paras. 8(w), 8(x) and 10(g) of the plaintiffs' statement of claim, may be asserted in a class action.

40 It was conceded by the plaintiffs during the trial of these issues that, if a class action were allowed the class would have to be limited to those unit purchasers who purchased their units from the developer and who still own their units. When counsel for the third party and counsel for the defendant objected to the lateness of this concession, Mr. Shnier referred to the Court of Appeal judgment in Naken et al. v. General Motors of Canada Ltd. et al. (1978), 21 O.R. (2d) 78, where, although an appeal from the Divisional Court decision striking out the statement of claim in a class action was dismissed, leave was granted to the plaintiffs to deliver an amended statement of claim restricting the class as specified by the Court of Appeal. Mr. Shnier argued that it is clearly not too late to limit the class in this action, and I agree with him.

41 There is a further difficulty with respect to the determination of the class. There is no express warranty that the units and common elements will be completed in a workmanlike manner. Indeed in the form of agreement of purchase and sale (exhibit 5), that was conceded by all parties to be a standard form of agreement used with respect to the units in both buildings, it is stated, in cl. 12, as follows:

This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale. It is agreed and understood that there is no representation, warranty, collateral term or condition affecting this agreement, the building or the unit, other than expressed herein in writing.

This is an attempt to exclude all other warranties. It was common ground at the trial of these issues that an implied warranty to build in a good and workmanlike manner applies only in respect of dwellings not completed at the time they are agreed to be sold. See Croft v. Prendergast, [1949] O.R. 282 (C.A.), and the cases referred to therein. The appropriate class could be further limited to those who purchased before their units were completed. Given the nature of condominium ownership where each unit owner owns his unit and has an interest, as tenant in common, in the common elements, the fixing of the time of completion could be very difficult to determine. The plaintiffs contend that the class can be described now on a formula basis, as those unit owners who purchased from the developer before the completion of relevant construction and who still own their units, and that once the date of completion is established the records of the condominium corporation will easily provide the answers as to who is in the class. That may determine eligibility but there could still be problems with respect to persons who might wish to opt out of the class.

42 The plaintiffs' case was vigorously argued by Mr. Shnier. In brief, his argument was that subject to the above mentioned limitations of the class, this case was appropriate for a class action because the allegation of faultiness in the design and quality of the valves, and the improper housing of the fan coil units, are common grievances affecting everyone in the class. Mr. Shnier contends that the complaint is not with leakage but with faulty valves and faulty housings, i.e. that a unit holder does not have to have experienced leakage yet in order to have been damaged, because the fault is that he now owns a fan coil unit to which he does not have proper access for maintenance, and in one building so many valves have leaked that all the valves can now be said to be faulty, whether or not they have leaked to date. The plaintiffs assert that the complaint is the same for all members of the classes and that this case can be distinguished from York Condominium Corp. No. 148 v. Singular Investments Ltd. (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 31, where Henry J., after reviewing the requirements for a class action as listed by Morand J. in Farnham v. Fingold, [1972] 3 O.R. 688, held that a class action should not be allowed because there were different breaches of contract and different negligence allegations with respect to different units. Clearly in this case the focus has been narrowed and the scope of individual differences has been reduced, but the question remains whether there are not sufficient remaining individual differences to make the class remedy inappropriate given the limitations of the present Rule 75. Henry J., at page 35, states as follows:

... If I could briefly summarize the thrust of the authorities cited by Morand J., it is this: that the class action is designed to create a fund which will normally be identified as a global amount of damages in which all those who are members of the class will have some interest to greater or lesser degree, but that the division of the fund among them will be a matter to be determined by some mechanism set up under the supervision of the Court. This is quite different in my view from the creation of such a fund by determining the individual amounts of damages suffered by the members of the class which must be determined before the total fund can be identified; moreover, in the determination of that particular series of issues, the Court may be called upon to deal with distinct relationships in law, whether it be contract or tort, as between the defendant and the individual owners. In the circumstances it appears to me that the matter does not fall within the concept of a class action at all.

The plaintiffs contend that in this case individual assessments will not be required, asserting that a single contract can be let to a builder who will make all the fan coil units accessible, and that the cost can be divided among the unit owners in the class, and that the same reasoning applies to the replacement of valves. Clearly this is closer to the mark than were the various contracts in the Singular Investment case, but does it go far enough?

43 The defendants and their supporters argue that being able to let single contracts is not the issue and does not constitute the global "fund" referred to in the cases. They say that individual unit holders have a duty to mitigate their damages, if any, and that will involve assessments. They assert that they should not be deprived of discovery as to mitigation, and as to actual harm, if any, suffered by way of leakage. Further the defendants argue that the valves in question have been installed and working for eight years, and that there have been no problems with most of them and, accordingly, that the design of the valves is not faulty. As to the last point, the plaintiffs reply that the assertions of the defendants go to the question of the faultiness of the design of the valves, but that question is itself a triable issue that can best be resolved in a class action.

44 As to the overall repair contracts the defendants contend that many unit owners may not want to replace valves that have given them no problems; and, even if they were awarded damages, there is nothing to prevent a unit holder from pocketing the money and keeping the valves he has. Furthermore, some of the valves have been replaced and access to some of the fan coil units has been provided.

45 The defendants contend that the measure of damages cannot be derived by mathematical calculations or on a pro rata basis, but that individual assessments will be required and maintenance will be a differentiating issue.

46 The nature of the groups that might form the classes was also considered. The defendants and their supporters contend that the policy considerations relating to "mass wrongs" need not be brought to bear in this case. The unit owners can readily get in touch with each other. The amounts involved are sufficient to have made joint action by joinder of parties appropriate and practical, and in those circumstances the defendants would not be deprived of discoveries.

47 There was discussion of whether the plaintiffs should have revised their actions when the amendments to the Condominium Act came into force, and proceeded by having the condominium corporations act as plaintiffs in respect of both the common elements and the individual units. The defendants said that should have been done but the plaintiffs argued that such proceedings would have been attacked as attempting to give retroactive or retrospective effect to the new provisions. I do not decide the matter but I would have thought that in this regard the amendments could be regarded as procedural law and so applicable.

48 If a class action were to be allowed it could only be under Rule 75 which provides that:

75. Where there are numerous persons having the same interest, one or more may sue or be sued or may be authorized by the court to defend on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all.

49 I have read the cases cited by counsel and I think that the following excerpt from the Ontario Law Reform Commission Report on Class Actions (1982), vol. 1, p. 25, affords a good summary of the law in Ontario before the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in General Motors of Canada Limited v. Naken, unreported, pronounced February 8, 1983, the excerpt from that commission's report being as follows:

As will be explained in greater detail below, damage class actions have been allowed to proceed to trial where the full liability of the defendant to the class can be determined without resort to individual proceedings because of the existence of common proof. Consequently, where, in a class action, the damages claimed are a lump sum owing to the class, which can be established by common evidence, the action will be permitted to proceed in class form. A damage class action also will be allowed to be maintained where the amount of damages claimed on behalf of each of the class members is identical. Finally, the court will not dismiss a damage class action where the amount claimed for each member of the class is readily ascertainable, for example, by mathematical calculation.

50 I cannot agree with the plaintiffs that there will not be a need for individual assessments, and for differences based upon mitigation or the lack of it. In this regard the following statement of Jessup J.A., in Farnham v. Fingold, [1973] 2 O.R. 132, at p. 136, is instructive:

[W]here the members of a class have damages that must be separately assessed, it would be unjust to permit them to be claimed in a class action because the defendant would be deprived of individual discoveries, and, in the event of success, would have recourse for costs only against the named plaintiff although his costs were increased by multiple separate claims.

51 Before the Court of appeal decision in Naken, the prevailing view in Ontario, as expressed in decisions such as Loader et al. v. Rose Park Wellesley Investments Ltd. et al. (1980), 17 C.P.C. 150; and York Condominium Corporation No. 228 et al. v. Tenen Investments Ltd. et al. (1977), 17 O.R. (2d) 579 was that, because of the likelihood of different defences a class action was not the appropriate form in which to litigate complaints of deficiencies in construction of individual units in a condominium. The court of Appeal judgment in Naken was urged by the plaintiff, along with the judgment of Stark J. in Cobbold v. Time Canada Limited (1976), 13 O.R. (2d) 567, as indicating that the courts were now prepared to take a more generous view of what could be accomplished by way of class actions under Rule 75.

52 In my view those cases did not go far enough to assist the plaintiffs in this matter. This case involves too many individual elements to bring it within the jurisprudence as to a "common fund" or within even the extended meaning of the "same interest" under Rule 75. In my opinion the matter has been put beyond question by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. Naken et al., supra.

53 Denial of discovery would clearly be a prejudice to the defendants and to the third and fourth parties here represented. Moreover this is not a case where the amount of the "fund" is ascertainable by the means of relatively straightforward computations; individual claims, involving more than computation, involving assessment would have to be added up if it were attempted to arrive at a find. Similar or the same, calculations would be required in order to determine the participation of individual claimants in the overall find. The difficulties affect both ends of the process. There is no readily determined find at the beginning; and there is no readily calculable basis, such as the number shows of a class of a corporation's share capital owned by each putative member of the class or the time remaining on the respective magazine subscriptions of the claimants, for determining the share of individual claimants if a global amount were capable of being recovered.

54 It was argued strongly for the plaintiff that declaratory judgments on a class action basis as to the general questions of design and construction in the matter of valves and in the matter of the accessibility of the condensate drain pans in the fan coil units would prove convenient and appropriate, and that given declaratory judgments on those issues, the assessment of individual differences would not be difficult. With respect, I believe that in this case the declaratory judgments even if obtained, and that is problematical, would not settle a sufficiently great proportion of the issues involved to constitute the degree of convenience called for by the cases; too much would be left to individual assessments. This case is not analogous to cases where declarations are sought as to the statutory rights of a case of persons, where the declarations would virtually resolve the only issues reasonably expected to require adjudication. See Chastain et al. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, [1973] 2 W.W.R. 481 and Shaw et al. v. Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver, [1973] 4 W.W.R. 391, and the leading case of Duke of Bedford v. Ellis, [1901] A.C. 1.

55 Accordingly I have answered the question in the negative, stating that claims in respect of the alleged construction deficiencies may not be asserted in a class action.

56 Notwithstanding that I have had the benefit of written submissions as to the costs of the trial of the two issues dealt with herein, I believe that the question of costs with respect to such issues should be left for disposition by the judge dealing with the main action. The written submissions will be available to such judge and that judge will be able to consider them against the background of the whole action.

RE SCOFFIELD AND STRATA CORPORATION N.W. 73 ET AL.,

(1983) 145 D.L.R. (3d) 574 BRITISH COLUMBIA (C.A.) 1983 Condominiums -- Rules -- Procedure -- Fairness -- Condominium council holding meeting and imposing fine on appellant for illegally keeping a cat on her premises, without first informing appellant in any way -- Council found to have acted without fairness -- Appellant discharged from payment of fine and lien discharged -- Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61, s. 42. This was an appeal from a judgment which found that a strata corporation properly imposed a fine on the appellant and placed a lien against her property. The condominium council imposed the fine after holding a meeting concerning complaints that the appellant was illegally keeping a cat on her premises. The appellant was never informed in any way of the complaint. HELD: The appeal was allowed. The appellant was discharged from paying the fine and the lien was discharged. There was a minima requirement of fairness that the appellant receive some notice to know why the council was meeting and to know that she faced the risk of a fine. The council had thus acted without fairness. Under s. 42 of the Condominium Act it was possible for an owner to come before the Court alleging that an act of the strata corporation was unfairly prejudicial to the owner.

R. v. SOUTHDOWN BUILDERS LTD.,

(1981) 57 C.P.R. (2d) 56 ONTARIO (Co. Ct.) 1981 False advertising -- Strict liability offence -- Accused failing to show due diligence -- False statement not insignificant -- Condominium owners seriously prejudiced -- Busy executive lax in his responsibilities -- $10,000 fine -- Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C23, s. 37(1)(a). The accused corporation was charged with false advertising contrary to s. 37(1)(a) of the Combines Investigation Act. A brochure intended to promote the sale of condominiums owned by the accused stated that the units were equipped with individual heat and air-conditioning controls that were "guaranteed trouble-free for ten years by G.L. leaders in their field". In fact, the condominium purchasers received only a one-year warranty and an additional four years for the refrigeration unit. The main witness for the defence was L, a director of the accused, who testified that he honestly thought that a ten-year warranty would be given and that he had nothing to do with the brochure. The defence also argued that the difference between the actual warranty given and the promised warranty was not a substantial matter. HELD: The accused was convicted and fined $10,000. The offence was one of strict liability. For a successful defence, the accused had to show due diligence on a balance of probabilities. Persons in control of the day-to-day operations of a corporation must exercise a degree of supervision and control. If L honestly believed that a ten-year service contract would somehow be thrown into the deal, that belief was unreasonable. In not knowing of the brochure, L showed no control over the advertising activities of the accused. In short, a busy executive was lax in his responsibilities. It was perfectly clear on the evidence that the condominium purchasers were severely prejudiced by not being given a ten-year service contract.

YORK CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION NO. 167 ET AL. v. NEWREY HOLDINGS LTD. ET AL.,

(1980) 14 R.P.R. 62 ONTARIO (H.C.J.) 1980 Condominium -- Common elements -- Whether janitor's suite included in common elements -- Whether developer entitled to retain proceeds of sale of parking spaces -- Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, s. 77. This was an action by the condominium corporation for a declaration that the janitor's suite was part of the common property and that the corporation was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of 34 parking spaces. The defendant developer counterclaimed for wrongful termination of a management agreement. The purchasers took control of the corporation from the defendant on October 8, 1974. It made no mortgage payments on the janitor's suite, but did pay rent to the defendant for some months. There was never any agreement that the unit would form part of the common property. Of the 34 parking spaces in question, only one was sold after October 8. The management agreement had been made between the defendant and the corporation when the corporation was still controlled by the defendant.

HELD: The declaration was refused and the counterclaim was dismissed. The janitor's suite did not become part of the corporation property unless there was a common intention that it would. The plaintiff did not establish on a reasonable balance of probability that such an intention existed. The defendant could not be prohibited from selling additional parking spaces prior to registration of the declaration on October 8 and was entitled to retain the proceeds of such sales. After registration, however, the defendant became merely a tenant in common with other unit owners. The proceeds of the space sold after that date should therefore be divided in proportion to the number of units held by the defendant and the other owners. The evidence relating to the counterclaim suggested that the defendant had not exercised its management duties in good faith. This justified termination of the agreement without notice.

Dyer v. York Condominium Corp. No. 274

Between

Kenneth F. Dyer, plaintiff, and York Condominium Corporation No. 274, defendant

Ontario Supreme Court - High Court of Justice

Toronto Motions Court

Hollingworth J.

Heard: May 27, 1980.

Oral judgment: May 27, 1980. Reasons: June 16, 1980.

(6 pp.)

Counsel:

Paul Bannon, for the plaintiff.

John Hahn, for the defendant.

1 HOLLINGWORTH J. (orally):— This is a motion in which the plaintiff applicant asks for an interim injunction restraining the defendant Condominium Corporation from making any addition, alteration, improvement to or renovation of the common elements of the defendant at the property known as 75 Graydon Hall Drive in Don Mills.

2 This is a rush application and the fact that the Condominium Corporation was only served with papers in the matter last night at 10:30 perhaps accounts somewhat for the paucity of material before me.

3 Very briefly, the Condominium Corporation Board of Directors felt that the caulking on the outside of the building was in need of repair. Apparently because of the problems with the caulking, water is seeping through the outside of the building into various units causing damage to the floors and walls of the said individual units. Apparently complaints have been received by the Corporation over a six month period and as a result of these complaints and the damage which has been occasioned as indicated and after discussion with experts, the Board of Directors acted and hired a company called Day Restoration Limited who agreed to make the repairs involving thirty days' worth of work at a cost of $23,800. I am advised that the work has already been started, swing stages are up on the roof and major portions of the old caulking have been removed.

4 The plaintiff takes grave exception to this and asks for an injunction to stop the Corporation from having the caulking done. The plaintiff's counsel invokes Section 38 of The Condominium Act and states that there should have been a meeting because the work is "substantial" and because of that aspect a meeting should have been held to have the approbation of the condominium owners or at least 80% of the owners. He also points out that it may well come under Sections 42 and 41(3) but again Section 42 deals with substantial damage and Section 41 deals with repair after damage and also maintenance.

5 Counsel for the defendant states that Section 38 is only applicable for substantial alterations and that if there are dissenters that under Section 38(4) the Corporation must buy back the unit from the dissenter. He says that Section 41 is the operative section and either for repairs or maintenance it is incumbent upon the Corporation to proceed with the work. That is their job, so long, of course, as it is not of a substantial nature.

6 I would have to consider in any case after a hearing of the facts, whether or not there is either a prima facie case or a serious issue to be tried and then consider the matters of irreparable harm and balance of convenience.

7 From the facts which I have gleaned from the affidavit material filed before me, I must make a finding first of all whether there is any substantial work done in connection with the "addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements". Section 38(1) deserves to be quoted. It reads:

The Corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80% of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the Corporation and the Corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the Corporation.

8 In reply, Mr. Bannon seemed to indicate that it was not necessary that the word "substantial" be read into this latter part of the subsection and he says "and the Corporation may by a vote of the owners, make any other addition, alteration or improvement to the renovation of the common elements." What he has read is correct but he has forgotten the fact that the word "and" immediately before that indicates that it is conjunctive and therefore that this part refers to the "substantial" quoted above. I have no hesitation in saying that Section 38(1) deals only with substantial "addition alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements" and I find as a fact in this case that the caulking is not a "substantial" addition or alteration or improvement.

9 I now turn to Section 41 which talks about repairs and maintenance, and as Mr. Bannon correctly says, the words again and again are repair after damage. I find again that there is no repair after damage in this connection and I take it, although it does not say it, that "after damage" would imply damage from some act of God, some storm or tempest.

10 Turning to subsection (3) the Corporation shall maintain the common elements and going to the dictionary, the Webster's New World Dictionary refers to maintenance, inter alia, as "to keep or keep up" or "to keep in a certain condition", e.g. good repair, to preserve. That is the case with the caulking in this particular matter against Section 42(1) which reads:

Where damage to the building occurs the Board shall determine within thirty days of the occurrence whether there has been substantial damage to 25% of the building.

I find as a fact that that section is not applicable here. There has been no substantial damage to 25% of the building and again, as I have said above, I feel that this is really a matter of maintenance and that the Corporation shall maintain the common elements.

11 The next thing I have to determine is whether or not, after finding that there has been no substantial damage and substantial alteration as a result of what the Corporation is doing, a meeting should be held. There is a conflict in the evidence whether or not owners under Section 19(1) have instructed the Board to call and hold a meeting of the owners, I find there is not sufficient evidence before me that 15% of the owners have called for a meeting but it is generally conceded by both counsel that if there is no substantial damage, and I find as a fact that there hasn't been, then it is not incumbent upon the Board of Directors to call a meeting but if the owners had taken the initiative then a meeting would have been called. Such has not been the case.

12 I therefore find that the Board has acted quite properly. They were confronted with a situation in which caulking needed to be done to prevent substantial damage to various owners of the condominium from the seepage of water into their individual apartments and they have done so quite properly in my opinion.

13 I therefore find that regardless of how one looks at it, whether it is a prima facie case or a serious issue to be tried, that in either case that such has not been met, and that would end the matter except that I must consider the matter of irreparable harm and balance of convenience.

14 I find that in this particular case there was no irreparable harm to the plaintiff. There would be irreparable harm to the owners of the condominium if this work were not done and individual owners of the condominium found that their apartments were ruined by the seepage of rain and the same argument could be applicable regarding the balance of convenience.

15 I therefore find that the plaintiff fails; he will not be given an injunction and this motion is therefore dismissed with costs to be taxed.

Re Peel Condominium Corp. No. 73 and Rogers et al.

21 O.R. (2d) 521
 ONTARIO

ONTARIO
 COURT OF APPEAL
 HOWLAND, C.J.O., BROOKE AND WILSON, J.J.A.

12TH OCTOBER 1978.

APPEAL from an order dismissing an application brought pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77.

John Barkwell, for appellant.

George A. Rogers, appearing in person.

 The judgment of the Court was delivered by

BROOKE, J.A.:— Peel Condominium Corporation No. 73 (the Corporation) appeals from the dismissal of its application brought pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 (the Act), as amended by 1974, c. 133, s. 13. By that section it is provided:

PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES

23(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration or the by-laws is not performed, the corporation, any owner, or any person having an encumbrance against a unit and common interest may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty, and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

(2a) The lessee of a unit is subject to the duties imposed by this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, on an owner, except those duties respecting common expenses, and this section applies in the same manner as to an owner and where the lessee is in contravention of an order under this section, the court may terminate the lease.

(3) Nothing in this section restricts the remedies otherwise available for failure to perform any duty imposed by this Act.

The Corporation sought an order requiring the Rogers to take down four cedar trees. The Rogers took possession of their townhouse unit in the summer of 1974 and the next year planted the trees in the garden area adjacent to their unit. By art. VII(b) of the declaration the Rogers had been granted exclusive use of the small garden area adjoining their unit. The Corporation contended that as that area was a part of the common elements such exclusive use did not include the right to plant trees as this was prohibited by the provisions of the declaration to the effect that with certain express exceptions the unit owners could not make additions, alterations, improvements or renovations to the common elements without the prior written consent of the board.

Article XV of the declaration imposes upon the unit owner a duty to comply with the declaration, by-laws, and rules and regulations of the Corporation. The relevant provisions of the declaration relied upon by both parties were:

Article VII

.....
 (b) The owner of each unit shall have the exclusive use, subject to the provisions of this declaration, the by-laws of the corporation and the rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto, of the heating system located in each such unit, including without limitation the furnace controls and ducts and shall also have the exclusive use, subject to the provisions of this declaration, the by-laws of the corporation and the rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto of an enclosed patio or small garden area designated by being numbered the same as the number of such unit and the letter "A" following such number as designated on Part 1 (Sheet 2) of the Description and shall also have the exclusive use of the balcony to which his unit shall give sole access.

.....
 Article XI

.....
 3. Maintenance of Common Elements: The common elements shall be maintained by the corporation, save and except for any enclosed patio or small garden area, inner surface of any window, or inner surface of doors leading out of any units and any balconies to which any unit shall give sole access to, which excluded portions of common elements shall be maintained by each owner having the exclusive use thereof.

4. Additions, alterations or improvements by owners: No owner shall make any structural change in or to his unit or any change to an installation upon the common elements, maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements (except for any inner surface of any window, or inner surface of doors leading out of any unit, of which such owner has the exclusive use) without the prior written consent thereto of the board. Any such change shall, if approved by the board, be made in accordance with the provisions of all relevant municipal and other governmental by-laws, rules, regulations or ordinances, and in accordance with the conditions, if any, of such approval by the board.

Section 14 of the Act authorizes the Corporation to make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements by the vote of members owning a specified percentage thereof and to make other additions, alterations, improvements or renovations by a vote of a majority of the members.

On the return of the Corporation's application, after considering the evidence given viva voce by Mr. Rogers, the affidavit of the Corporation's property manager, some correspondence between the parties, and the relevant documents, the learned Judge of the County and District Court dismissed the application. He did so because he was of the view that the Corporation "has not shown that the area where the trees are located are not within 'the exclusive use' area contemplated". This finding was right. The evidence is clear that the four trees were planted within the area of the small garden over which the Rogers had exclusive use. But with respect, as that area was a part of the common elements, the issue was whether the Rogers' exclusive use was limited by the provisions of art. XI, para. 4 above so that he was duty bound not to plant the trees there. In other words was the planting of the trees an alteration of the common elements for which he required the consent of the board?

The evidence led by the Rogers as to the circumstances surrounding the planting of the trees was not really contradicted. Indeed the Corporation's manager who made the affidavit was not called upon to give evidence, and no doubt could not have testified in relation to the time when the events transpired, because he was not then employed there. In his evidence Mr. Rogers asserted that before he had purchased the unit he had received a copy of an earlier form of the declaration which gave him the exclusive use of "an enclosed patio or deck and small garden area". He relies on the passages conferring upon him exclusive use of the garden area and he says he "took this place with the understanding I had a garden area and could put some trees in".

Counsel for the Corporation contends that in the circumstances the Rogers' right to plant trees in this part of the common elements has been taken away by clear language or by necessary implication. He relies upon the words of art. XI, para. 4 and s. 14 of the Act referred to. He submits that in considering the provisions of the declaration the Court should have regard to the underlying principles of the concept of a condominium, and in particular that there may be curtailment of individual rights normally associated with private property if the majority interest in the common elements is to be maintained. The principle cannot be doubted, but in my view it should not be used to reduce the grant of an exclusive use of the garden area to simple occupation of a piece of ground. This is, in my opinion, the effect of counsel's submission. The construction contended for is a strained one. I think that reasonable people would, as this man did, understand that if they were granted exclusive use of a garden area they could have a garden there. If it had been intended to restrict its exclusive use to a grassy area the declaration could have so provided. A garden is a place where one can plant flowers, fruit or vegetables: see the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed., vol. I, p. 832, col. 1. By custom it is a place where shrubs and trees are planted for privacy and shade. It may be that having regard to the powers of the Corporation under the Act and the declaration, specific by-laws or rules could have been passed restricting the use of the garden area, for example, as to the height or type of plants or trees. The declaration should be interpreted so as to give meaning to it as a whole. In my opinion the prohibition in art. XI, para. 4 against alterations without the consent of the board, contemplated some more far-reaching change than the normal planting of trees or shrubs in a garden area. Section 7(4) of the Act provides that:

7(4) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements.

The planting of the four cedar trees in question constituted a reasonable use of the common elements of which the respondents had been given exclusive use.

There is a second reason why I think the appeal should be dismissed. As was pointed out by Sheard, Co. Ct. J., in York Condominium Corporation No. 297 v. Chris Karl Wiesner and Janet Mary Wiesner (an unreported judgment of the County Court of the Judicial District of York, dated July 28, 1978), s. 23 authorizes the Court to exercise its discretion in granting the relief provided by the section. The quality of the evidence before the Court is always of significance in the exercise of such discretion. In my opinion the respondent George A. Rogers' evidence given under oath and tested by cross-examination remained undenied. In the absence of a clear finding by the trial Judge that the evidence of the respondent George A. Rogers was unacceptable, in my view the Corporation's case resting on the affidavit of the manager is deserving only of little weight. The evidence of the respondent George A. Rogers that he purchased the property with the understanding that he had exclusive use of the garden and could plant trees there is consistent with the interpretation of the declaration he contends for.

Accordingly, the appeal should be dismissed and the respondents will have their disbursements.

Appeal dismissed.

COUNTY COURT

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF PEEL

MISENER, CO. CT. J.

16TH MARCH 1978.

APPLICATION to enforce a condominium declaration.

W. A. Harrison, for applicant.

L. D. Pringle, for respondents.

MISENER, CO. CT. J.:— This is an application brought by Peel Condominium Corporation No. 78. The declaration that by statute creates that corporation prohibits all owners, tenants and residents of units from keeping dogs, cats, reptiles or rodents in their units or on any part of the common elements. The condominium itself consists of 204 units. Some 22 of the owners have ignored that prohibition and continue to resist the attempts of the corporation to persuade them otherwise. The corporation seeks the assistance of this Court.

The facts essential to a determination of this matter are straightforward enough. The lands and premises in question were, prior to August 28, 1975, owned by Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited. I shall refer to that company hereafter as "Bramalea". On that date, August 28, 1975, Bramalea registered the declaration that I have referred to above in the Land Titles Office in Brampton. However, prior to August 28, 1975, Bramalea entered into written agreements of purchase and sale with most, if not all, of the respondents. According to those respondents who filed affidavits opposing this motion, they were severely misled by the agents of Bramalea. None of them were told that pets were or would be prohibited. Some of them were actually assured that pets would be permitted. Some were not only so assured but as well shown a copy of a proposed declaration that contained no prohibition against the keeping of pets. None of the respondents actually completed his purchase prior to October 7, 1975, but most are firm that neither they nor their solicitors were ever aware of the terms of the declaration that, as I have said, was in fact registered on August 28, 1975, until some time after completion. From that I assume that none of the solicitors who acted for these purchasers took the trouble to peruse the declaration at the Land Titles Office.

Needless to say, some of the respondents swear that, had they known of this prohibition, they would never have made their purchases.

In support of the motion, Mr. Harrison relies upon some four sections of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended. Firstly, s. 3(2)(c) provides that a declaration may contain provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements. Section 9(1) provides that the registration of a declaration creates a corporation without share capital whose members are the owners from time to time. By virtue of s. 12, each owner is bound by the declaration and each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with the declaration. Since each owner has a right to compliance by other owners with the declaration, the latter by necessary implication are under a duty to comply. Section 23(1) [am. 1974, c. 133, s. 13(1)] gives the corporation status to apply to the County Court for an order directing the performance of any duty imposed by the declaration or by the Act, and s. 23(2) expressly grants to that Court the right to direct performance of that duty. On the facts of this case, Mr. Harrison says that there is no reason why the Court should not exercise its discretion to compel compliance with the declaration since it is clear on the material filed, that that is the wish of the board of directors of the corporation.

Mr. Pringle, on behalf of the respondents, resists the motion on three grounds. In spite of his most able submissions, I think that the applicant is entitled to the relief it requests and I think I can best give my reasons for that conclusion by dealing with Mr. Pringle's grounds one by one.

Firstly, he says that the prohibition in question is simply ultra vires the corporation. The Act that creates the corporation sets the limits of its powers. Section 3(2) permits the inclusion of "provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements". Section 18 of the declaration here in question reads as follows:

All present and future owners, tenants, and residents of units ... shall not keep dogs, cats, reptiles or rodents in their units or on any part of the common elements.

Mr. Pringle says that that provision is not one "respecting the occupation and use" but rather is one that seeks to regulate the conduct of the owner. Regulation of conduct is not permitted by the Act, and so s. 18 of the declaration is beyond the power of the corporation and therefore void.

I do not agree. It may be that s. 18 of the declaration regulates conduct, but it surely is as well a provision respecting the use of the units and common elements. The word "respecting" surely means "relating to" or "concerned with" or "with reference to". I cannot think that the word "occupation" restricts the ordinary meaning of the word "use" although I readily acknowledge that certain observations made by Howland, J.A. (as he then was), in Re York Condominium Corp. No. 42 and Melanson (1975), 9 O.R. (2d) 116 at p. 122, 59 D.L.R. (3d) 524, might appear to give support to the opposite conclusion. But in my view "occupation" refers to the manner or nature of the physical possession in itself whereas "use" refers to the enjoyment of the premises once physical possession has been acquired. In my view, they are concepts essentially so different that a conjunctive interpretation in the sense that the regulation must relate both to occupation and to use before it is intra vires has the effect of making the phrase meaningless, and I have the gravest difficulty in contemplating how any provision could, strictly speaking, relate to both occupation and to use.

The second ground raised by Mr. Pringle is this. He says that s. 7 of the declaration provides in clear terms that each unit shall be occupied and used only as a residence for a single family and for no other purpose. That section, he says, is in its very terms free from restriction of any kind and it follows therefore that such occupation must carry with it all the incidents that the law confers upon the family. One of those incidents is the right to keep pets. Section 18 of the declaration then purports to derogate from that right and this it cannot do.

My difficulty is in understanding the logic of this argument. Mr. Pringle says that the main reason preventing a derogation from the apparent common law right of the "single family" to keep pets is the York Condominium case, supra, but I have not been able to find such a declaration in that judgment. Moreover I see no "blatant inconsistency" (to use Mr. Pringle's phrase) between ss. 7 and 18 for the reasons I have attempted to give earlier. Section 7, in my view, relates to occupation. Section 18 relates to use. I see nothing inconsistent in a section restricting the nature of the occupation and then further restricting the use to which those in proper occupation may put to the premises.

Finally, he says that there is here a manifest error in the declaration itself, and that this manifest error should be corrected by expunging s. 18 of the declaration altogether. That argument takes these lines. Firstly, he says that, as a matter of fact, the respondents were grossly misled by Bramalea, the developer. Section 24b [enacted 1974, c. 133, s. 14] imposes on the proposed declarant (i.e., the developer) the obligation to deliver over to the proposed purchaser, upon the execution of the agreement of sale, a copy, inter alia, of the proposed declaration, and, at least 10 days before delivery of the deed, to deliver over a copy of the declaration or confirmation that the declaration is identical in all substantial or material respects to the proposed declaration previously delivered. Bramalea certainly did not comply with that section, and indeed actively misled whether innocently or otherwise, some of the respondents by delivering over a proposed declaration without any restriction on the keeping of pets at the same time verbally assuring them that pets were in fact permitted. Mr. Pringle says that the difference between the proposed declaration and the declaration actually registered constitutes a "manifest error or inconsistency in the declaration" as those words are used in s. 3(6) [enacted ibid., s. 2(2)] of the Condominium Act, and by virtue of the same section, may be corrected by a Judge of the County Court.

Again I find myself unable to agree with that submission. I do agree that in determining whether or not there is a manifest error or inconsistency, the contents of any proposed declaration may well be relevant, but in a factual sense I cannot think that there is here "error or inconsistency". There is nothing to suggest that Bramalea made an error or that the vast majority of the ultimate purchasers thought so at any time, let alone at this stage. Rather, the developer consciously chose to change the proposed declaration, deliberately inserting the impugned s. 18 into the declaration that represented the final draft and which, as I have said, was duly registered. On any ordinary understanding of the words, I do not think that anyone would say that as a result of that "a manifest error or inconsistency in the declaration" arose. It may be unfair or unjust. It may even be manifestly unfair or unjust. But it is not an error.

Mr. Harrison seeks to answer this last objection of Mr. Pringle by invoking a host of concepts ranging from a submission that the statutory remedy of rescission provided by s. 24b exhausts the remedies available to those alleged to have been misled to a submission that any remedy that might have been available is extinguished by the doctrine of merger upon the delivery of the deed. In the view that I have taken, it is happily unnecessary for me to consider any of these concepts. I would point out, however, that, whatever the remedies, they are surely remedies against Bramalea, not against the condominium corporation, and to seek relief by way of an amendment to the declaration would result in the imposition of something akin to vicarious liability to the serious detriment of the majority of the shareholders of the condominium corporation.

Section 23(2) of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

23(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty, and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

I think that the relief provided by that section is a discretionary one. The relief is sought by the corporation itself. By the very terms of the statute, the corporation has the duty to effect compliance by the owners of units with the Act, and the declaration. Moreover, s. 12 specifically gives the corporation a right to the compliance by the owners with the Act and the declaration. When I add to that statutory duty and statutory right the fact that, on the material filed, the great majority of the owners have adhered to the prohibition set out in s. 18 of the declaration, then it seems to me that I am duty bound, in the judicial exercise of that discretion, to give the corporation the assistance of the Court.

Accordingly, there will be an order directing the respondents to comply with s. 18 of the declaration as registered, and specifically directing them to remove any dog, cat, reptile or rodent from any unit occupied by them and from any part of the common elements within 30 days of the date of service upon them of a true copy of this order as issued and entered.

I do not think that this is a proper case for costs.

Order accordingly.

YORK CONDOMINIUM CO. No. 104 v. SUPREME AUTOMATIC WASHING MACHINE CO.,

(1978) 18 O.R. (2d) 596

ONTARIO (H.C.J.) 1978

Condominium leasing laundry premises to operator of washing machine -- Issue of renewal of lease -- Management seeking declaration that unregistered lease invalid and renewal clause ineffective -- Applicant claiming also that lease ultra vires the management -- Management found to be agent for owner -- Authority to lease not ultra vires -- Lease itself invalid for lack of registration as against individual owners -- Interim order issued -- Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, ss. 1(1) (n), 9(4). The original management of the condominium in question leased the laundry premises to the respondent in April 1973 for two years. The lease contained a clause providing that unless notice was given to the lessee to the contrary, it should be extended automatically for a further five years. The new management informed the lessee in February 1975 that it wished to terminate the lease on May 31, 1975. The lessee insisted on its right to renew the lease and this led to the present application for a declaration that the renewal term of the lease was invalid. The application was based on two grounds: (1) since the lease was not registered in the Land Titles Office, the registered interests of the members of the corporations had priority over the renewal terms contained in the lease as there was no actual occupation pursuant to the renewal terms until the original demise had expired; (2) the lease was not binding because it was ultra vires the condominium corporation to pass by-laws allowing the corporation to lease common elements.

HELD: Dealing with the second point first, the Court found that the by-law was not ultra vires. Under s. 1(1)(n) of the Condominium Act "property" included any land added to the common elements. The term "property" in s. 9(4) was not confined to what was owned by the corporation, so that the leasing of common elements would be included in an authority to manage the property and consistent with the objects of the corporation. As to the priority of the interests of individual owners over the renewal term, the Court found that there was no dispute over the binding effect of the original tenure of the lease. In order to protect a renewal term a lease had to be registered, which was not the case here. Therefore, the first ground taken by the applicant was valid. However, since the parties seemed to contemplate the trial of an issue it was difficult to tell what order should issue. The Court decided to wait until spoken to about it by the parties.

(1976), 9 O.R. (2d) 116

COURT OF APPEAL
KELLY, HOULDEN
and HOWLAND, J.J.A.

14TH APRIL 1975

Section 10(1)(b) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, empowers a condominium corporation to make by-laws "governing the use of units or any of them for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units", and s-s. (1)(c) gives a similar power to make by-laws "governing the use of the common elements". The power to make by-laws under cl. (b) of s. 10(1) is more restrictive than the power under cl. (c) in that the by-law must be directed to the prevention of unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units. A by-law governing the allowing or keeping of animals in the units or common elements is properly within the scope of s. 10(1)(b). However, a by-law prohibiting the keeping of all animals in or about the property goes far beyond the scope of s. 10(1)(b) as it prohibits the keeping of animals which could not be the cause of unreasonable interference. Moreover, although a corporation could prohibit animals generally from being allowed upon the common elements, where the by-law makes the prohibition applicable to both common elements and units, the by-law is not severable and must be quashed.

APPEAL from an order of Pennell, J., made pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, requiring the appellant to remove his dog from his condominium unit.

L.D. Pringle, for appellant.

Geoffrey G.R. Pacey, for respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

HOWLAND, J.A.:— This is an appeal by Bruce Melanson (Melanson) from an order of Pennell, J., dated September 26, 1974, made pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 (the Act), requiring Melanson to remove from his condominium unit the dog being kept therein within ninety (90) days of service of the order upon him.

York Condominium Corporation No. 42 (the Corporation) was created on August 18, 1971, by the registration of a declaration and description pursuant to s. 9 of the Act. Under s. 3(2) of the Act a declaration may contain:

(c) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

Paragraph (a) of art. XII of the declaration provided:

No unit shall be occupied by more than a single family and shall be used only as a residence for such single family and for no other purpose.

On August 18, 1971, the Corporation enacted By-law Number One. Section 11(1) [since am. 1974, c. 133, s. 8] of the Act provides:

11(1) The by-laws may provide for the making of rules by the owners respecting the use of the common elements for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the units and common elements.

In accordance with this provision, para. (a) of art. III of this by-law made the following provision for the passing of rules respecting the use of the common elements:

The owners, by a vote of members who own fifty-one per cent (51%) of the common elements, may make rules respecting the use of the common elements for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the units and common elements.

By-law Number One was duly registered and became effective on August 18, 1971.

On August 19, 1971, By-law Number Two was enacted by the Corporation. It included the following provision:

The following rules and regulations shall be observed by the owners and the term owner shall include the owner or any other person occupying the unit with the owner's approval: ...

14. No animal shall be allowed upon or kept in or about the property.

Paragraph 14 is hereafter referred to as the "prohibitive paragraph".

By-law Number Two was duly registered and became effective on September 9, 1971. Both By-law Number One and Bylaw Number Two were enacted by Delzotto Enterprises Limited as the owner of all the units and the sole member of the Corporation.

Melanson is the owner of one of the units. By letter dated August 6, 1974, from the solicitors for the Corporation, Melanson was directed to remove his dog from the condominium complex on or before August 23, 1974. An application was then made by the Corporation to enforce compliance with By-law Number Two.

The issue in this appeal is whether the Corporation has exceeded its statutory powers in enacting the prohibitive paragraph, or if it did have the power, is the prohibitive paragraph enforceable? As the Corporation is a statutory creation, the relevant rights and duties of an owner and of the Corporation must be found in the Act. The following provisions are relevant:

2(6) Upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act.

6(2) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of his unit.

7(4) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements.

9(12) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

12(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

(3) The corporation ... has a right to the compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

In creating a condominium corporation, a developer has to consider carefully what restrictions it is going to impose on the user of the units and common elements because such restrictions will affect the character of the condominium and the marketability of its units. The prohibitive paragraph could have been included in the declaration pursuant to s. 3(2) of the Act, just as the declaration provided that each unit should be used only as a single-family residence. However, the objection to so doing is that under s. 3(3) of the Act the declaration may be amended only with the consent of all owners and all persons having registered encumbrances against the units and common interests. In the case of a restriction such as the prohibitive paragraph this could be a formidable task.

Here the prohibitive paragraph was embodied in a by-law. This provides greater flexibility. Since no higher percentage was specified in the declaration, under s. 10(1) of the Act the making of such by-laws only required the vote of members owning 66 2/3% of the common elements. If the prohibitive paragraph in question falls within the Corporation's power to make by-laws, the fact that it is described in By-law Number Two as a rule or regulation does not, in my opinion, affect its validity as a by-law. It is true that the prohibitive paragraph, whilst embodied in By-law Number Two, is referred to as a rule or regulation. In pursuance of s. 11(1) of the Act, By-law Number One authorized the owners, by a vote of members owning 51% of the common elements, to make rules, but such power was limited to rules respecting the use of the common elements. By-law Number Two draws a distinction between the units, the common elements and the property. The by-law does not contain a provision that the word "property" shall have the same meaning in the by-law as in the definition of property in s. 1(1)(n) of the Act, i.e.: "the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description". In my view, however, this is the only proper interpretation to be given to the word in the prohibitive paragraph. Consequently, the attempt to impose restrictions respecting the units would go beyond the powers of the members under By-law Number One to make rules.

Under s. 10(1) the Corporation has power to make by-laws:

- (b) governing the use of units or any of them for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units;
- (c) governing the use of the common elements;

Under s. 10(2) such by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration.

In order to fall within the Corporation's power to make by-laws under s. 10 of the Act, four matters have to be considered:

- (i) are the words "governing the use" in s. 10(1)(b) and (c) of the Act broad enough to include the making of a by-law regulating the allowing of animals upon or the keeping of animals in or about the property?
- (ii) are the words "no animal" in the prohibitive paragraph so broad as to be beyond the powers of the Corporation under s. 10(1)(b) of the Act?
- (iii) is the prohibitive paragraph reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration as required by s. 10(2) of the Act?
- (iv) is the word "animal" in the prohibitive paragraph so broad that even if the Corporation had power to enact the prohibitive paragraph it is incapable of enforcement?

"Govern" is defined in The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed., vol. I, at p. 816, to mean: "To rule with authority ... to regulate the affairs of (a body of men)."

A careful distinction has to be drawn between the power to regulate or govern and the power to prohibit. In City of Toronto v. Virgo, [1896] A.C. 88, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had to consider whether under a power to pass by-laws "for ... regulating and governing hawkers or petty chapmen, and other persons carrying on petty trades", the Council might prohibit hawkers from plying their trade at all in a substantial and important part of the city. Lord Davey stated, at pp. 93-4.

No doubt the regulation and governance of a trade may involve the imposition of restrictions on its exercise both as to time and to a certain extent as to place where such restrictions are in the opinion of the public authority necessary to prevent a nuisance or for the maintenance of order. But their Lordships think there is marked distinction to be drawn between the prohibition or prevention of a trade and the regulation or governance of it, and indeed a power to regulate and govern seems to imply the continued existence of that which is to be regulated or governed.

Several cases in the English and Canadian reports were referred to in illustration of the respondent's argument ... through all these cases the general principle may be traced, that a municipal power of regulation or of making by-laws for good government, without express words of prohibition, does not authorize the making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner.

In Re Karry and City of Chatham (1910), 21 O.L.R. 566, the Court of Appeal had to consider whether a by-law of the City of Chatham, stipulating the hours when eating houses should be closed, was a "regulation" authorized by the Municipal Act which provided that the Council could pass by-laws "for limiting the number of and regulating such houses". Magee, J.A., pointed out at p. 573: "The partial prohibition, it has thus long been recognised, may well come within the powers of regulation."

In Re R. v. Napier, [1941] O.R. 30, [1941] 1 D.L.R. 528, 75 C.C.C. 191, the statute authorized the passing of by-laws "For licensing, regulating and governing bill posters ...". A by-law had been passed prohibiting the distributing of bills by leaving them in or on parked motor-cars or by handing them to persons on the street. Hogg, J., concluded at p. 34 O.R., pp. 531-2 D.L.R., that:

... the prevention of such activities in connection with this trade or calling is not of such a degree that it can be said to be practically a prohibition of the entire business or trade of bill distributors. There is still left to them the large field, which seems to constitute the greater part -- or at least as great a part -- of this business, namely, of leaving bills at the residences and other buildings in the municipality.

Here the power of the Corporation is to make by-laws "governing the use of units" and "governing the use of the common elements". In this appeal, the prohibitive paragraph as to allowing animals upon or keeping them in or about the units or common elements, is only a partial prohibition of the use of the units or the common elements. It would properly fall within the power to regulate the use of the units and common elements. In my view the word "governing" in s. 10(1)(b) is broad enough to include the restriction respecting animals in the prohibitive paragraph. It would be quite different if the power in s. 10(1)(b) and (c) of the Act had been to make by-laws governing the allowing or keeping of animals on the units or the common elements. In that event the prohibitive clause would have been ultra vires of the Corporation as it would have been a prohibition rather than a regulation.

It should be pointed out that the power to make by-laws under s. 10(1)(b) and under s. 10(1)(c) is with respect to "the use" of units and the common elements, whereas s. 3(2) (c) stipulates that the declaration may contain provisions respecting "the occupation and use" of the units and common elements.

As Lord Radcliffe pointed out in Arbuckle Smith & Co., Ltd. v. Greenock Corp., [1960] 1 All E.R. 568 at p. 574:

"Use" is not a word of precise meaning, but in general it conveys the idea of enjoyment derived by the user from the corpus of the object enjoyed.

Robertson, C.J.O., in R. v. Lou Hay Hung, [1946] O.R. 187, stated at pp. 191-2:

The words "occupy" and "occupant" have a variety of shades of meaning. No doubt, we commonly speak of the "occupants" of a dwelling-house, meaning thereby all persons who, at the time, live there. We use the word in even a wider sense when we speak of the "occupants" of premises, meaning thereby all the persons who happen to be within them at the particular time. Primarily, however, "to occupy" means "to take possession" ...

Possession is a primary element but occupation includes something more. As Lord Denning explained in Newcastle City Council v. Royal Newcastle Hospital, [1959] A.C. 248 at p. 255: "Occupation is matter of fact and only exists where there is sufficient measure of control to prevent strangers from interfering ...".

Under s. 3(2)(c) of the Act, the right to include a provision in the declaration respecting occupation of the units would embrace such matters as restricting the use to single-family residences. On the other hand, the right to restrict the keeping of animals in such units as incidental to such single-family use would seem properly to fall within the power to make by-laws governing the use of units.

It will also be noted that the power to make by-laws is more restrictive under s. 10(1)(b) of the Act than it is under s. 10(1)(c). Under s. 10(1)(b) the power can only be exercised "for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units". This brings me to a consideration of the second question, whether the words "no animals" in the prohibitive paragraph are so broad as to be ultra vires of the Corporation.

The word "animal" is very comprehensive. The definition in The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed., at p. 68, includes: "1. A living being, endowed with sensation and voluntary motion, but in the lowest forms distinguishable from vegetable forms ... 2. One of the lower animals; a brute or beast, as distinguished from man." Black's Law Dictionary, 4th ed., defines "animal" as "Any animate being which is endowed with the power of voluntary motion. An animate being, not human." In The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, supra, at p. 181, it is noted that the word "bird" is defined as "any feathered vertebrate animal" and at p. 705, that "fish" is defined as "In pop. language, any animal living exclusively in the water ... In scientific language any vertebrate animal provided with gills throughout life, and cold-blooded; the limbs, if present, being modified into fins."

The words "no animal" in the prohibitive paragraph are wide enough to include not only cats and dogs but such animals as hamsters, canaries and goldfish. Can it be said that the broad prohibition against any animal being allowed upon or kept in or about the units is for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units? In my opinion it cannot. I am unable to conclude that goldfish, for example, would cause such unreasonable interference. Section 6(2) of the Act makes it clear that subject to the Act, the declaration, and the by-laws, each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of his unit. One of the incidents of such ownership is the right to keep pets. The declaration does not contain any prohibition against the keeping of animals in the units. It is appreciated that it is important in a condominium development, particularly a condominium apartment building, to prevent the owner of a unit from unreasonably interfering with the use and enjoyment by others of their units and of the common elements. As Driver, Assoc. J., stated in Sterling Village Condominium, Inc. v. Breitenbach (1971), Fla., 251 So. 2d 685 at p. 688:

Every man may justly consider his home his castle and himself as the king thereof; nonetheless his sovereign fiat to use his property as he pleases must yield, at least in degree, where ownership is in common or cooperation with others. The benefits of condominium living and ownership demand no less.

The owners of 66 2/3% or more of the common elements may wish to pass a by-law to protect themselves against unreasonable interference by way of vicious, malodorous, dirty or noisy animals, or pollution of the common elements. However, the prohibitive paragraph in question goes far beyond the limited powers in s. 10(1)(b) to govern the use of units and would have the effect of prohibiting animals in or about the units which could not be the cause of unreasonable interference.

In my view, the prohibitive paragraph in question, in so far as it governs the use of units, is beyond the powers of the Corporation.

It should be observed that the powers of the Corporation under s. 10(1)(c) are to govern the use of the common elements and there is no limitation on the exercise of this power as in the case of s. 10(1)(b). It would seem that under s. 10 (1)(c) the Corporation could prohibit animals generally from being allowed upon the common elements.

If access to the units can only be obtained by passing through the common elements, then even if the portion of the prohibitive paragraph governing the use of the units were invalid, the owner of a unit might be prohibited from bringing animals into the units. The question arises whether the portion of the prohibitive paragraph which regulates the use of the units is severable from the portion which regulates the use of the common elements, or whether the entire prohibitive paragraph is ultra vires of the Corporation.

As Craies points out in his text on Statute Law, 6th ed. (1963), at p. 335, there is some difference of judicial opinion as to whether a by-law is severable or divisible. In Strickland v. Hayes, [1896] 1 Q.B. 290 at p. 292, Lindley, L.J., stated:

There is plenty of authority for saying that if a by-law can be divided, one part may be rejected as bad while the rest may be held to be good.

On the question of severability, decisions respecting the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to quash a municipal by-law in whole or in part under s. 283(1) of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 284, are of assistance. In Re Morrison and City of Kingston, [1938] O.R. 21 at p. 27, [1937] 4 D.L.R. 740 at p. 745, 69 C.C.C. 251, Middleton, J.A., said:

It is not, I think, competent to the Court to quash part of a by-law, unless it is clearly severable from the provisions that remain.

This statement was approved by the Court of Appeal in Re Musty's Service Stations Ltd. and Ottawa, [1959] O.R. 342, 22 D.L.R. (2d) 311, 124 C.C.C. 85, where Aylesworth, J.A., in delivering the judgment of the Court, concluded that the invalid provisions of the by-law were integral and indispensable parts of the by-law and were not severable from the rest of the by-law.

In so far as the prohibitive paragraph itself is concerned, in view of the fact that the prohibition is made applicable to the property which includes both the units and the common elements, I do not think it is possible to sever the portion of the paragraph which deals with the units from the portion which deals with the common elements even if s. 10(1)(c) was wide enough to permit the restriction so far as the common elements were concerned.

Having reached this conclusion it is not necessary to consider the third question which arises as a result of s. 10(2) of the Act which provides:

10(2) The by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act and the declaration.

Nor is it necessary to consider the fourth question, that the word "animal" in the prohibitive paragraph is so broad that even if the Corporation had power to enact the prohibitive paragraph it is incapable of enforcement.

Paragraph 14 of By-law Number Two is, in my view, beyond the powers of the Corporation in its entirety. It is not necessary to express any view as to the validity of the remaining provisions of By-law Number Two as para. 14 is severable from the remaining provisions of the by-law.

The appeal should be allowed, the order of Pennell, J., set aside and in its place there should be an order dismissing the application brought by the applicant by its notice of motion dated August 27, 1974. The appellant should have his costs of this appeal and of the application before Pennell, J.

Appeal allowed.

ONTARIO
HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE
MORDEN, J.

MAY 3, 1974

Section 29(2) (am. 1971, Vol. 2, c. 2, s. 1; 1972, c. 118, s. 3; 1973, c. 168, s. 6) of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, prohibits the entering into of an agreement for the sale of land where the vendor retains abutting lands, except in specified situations. However, s. 24 (re-enacted 1972, c. 7, s. 1; am. 1973, c. 121, s. 1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, provides that, inter alia, ss. 29 and 34 of the Planning Act do not apply to dealings with units and common interests and descriptions made for the purposes of the Condominium Act. Since until there is registration there can be no unit and common interests to which the Condominium Act applies, the effect of the Planning Act is only excluded upon registration of the condominium project. Moreover, since condominium developments may involve vertical division of the units on one horizontal plane as well as strata interests in buildings, there is no policy reason for excluding the operation of the Planning Act from proposed condominium developments. The application of the Planning Act to proposed condominium development cannot turn on the nature of the development, i.e., be inapplicable to strata development but applicable to development involving vertical divisions on one horizontal plane. Therefore, for a contract for a sale of a condominium unit not to run afoul of s. 29 of the Planning Act, the agreement should contain an express condition that it is to be effective only if the provisions of the Planning Act are complied with or only in the event that the relevant description is registered under the Condominium Act.

APPLICATION under Rules 611 and 612 of the Rules of Practice for an order determining the rights of the parties under a certain agreement.

A.B. Rosenberg, Q.C., for applicant.

V.L. Palermo and R.T.J. Velanoff, for respondent.

MORDEN, J.:— This is an application by Crossroads Apartments Limited under Rules 611 and 612 for an order declaring and determining the rights of the parties under an agreement dated May 1, 1973, made between the applicant and the respondent, Derek G. Phillips. The agreement reads:

RECORD OF RESERVATION

The undersigned, CROSSROADS APARTMENTS LIMITED, hereinafter referred to as the Developer, acknowledges the receipt of $200.00 from Derek Phillips hereinafter referred to as the Purchaser, as a reservation deposit in connection with Home #2010 Unit #10 (2as), Level #19, Crossroads Condominium Homes at a price of $33,275. Building C.

The conditions of this Reservation Agreement shall be:

1. That the Purchaser upon being notified by the Vendor, or his Agent shall, within 15 days of such notification, inspect the model suite presentation of the Vendor. After such inspection the Purchaser may elect to proceed with his purchase and complete the formal documents required or he may cancel the Agreement and the deposit monies shall be refunded forthwith without interest or deduction.
2. This Agreement is further conditional upon the Purchaser and the Vendor entering into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale satisfactory to both parties, which shall provide (among other things) for an additional deposit by the Purchaser. Failing both parties entering into such Agreement within a period of 20 days after the notification to inspect the model suite (as referred to in paragraph 1 above) this agreement shall be null and void and the deposit refunded forthwith.

Dated at Toronto this 1st day of May, 1973.

"D.G. Phillips" Purchaser [Indecipherable]

(Crossroads Apartments Limited)

The applicant filed in support of its application an affidavit sworn by its manager, Barry Siskind, in which he deposed as to the circumstances relating to the coming into existence of this record of reservation.

This affidavit indicates that the purpose of the application is to determine "whether or not the record of reservation in all of the surrounding circumstances is a legally enforceable document in so far as the Respondent is concerned".

An affidavit has been filed on behalf of the respondent sworn by himself in which events and documents coming into being subsequent to the date of the record of reservation are referred to, particular reference being made to an undated agreement of purchase and sale signed by the respondent but not by the applicant. In the statement of fact and law filed on behalf of the respondent he asks for an order "declaring that the record of reservation ... is an enforceable agreement by the Applicant and does create an interest in land" and further "for an order declaring that the offer to purchase [the aforesaid agreement of purchase and sale] ... is an enforceable agreement by the applicant and does create an interest in land". The basic submission is that each of these documents is enforceable by both parties.

Obviously the respondent had attempted to enlarge the issues to be determined in the motion and also the range of facts before the Court. Mr. Rosenberg has facilitated matters by agreeing that for the purpose of the motion he does not dispute the facts set forth in the respondent's affidavit, even though many of them are put in the form of hearsay assertions, and he agrees that they may be considered by the Court and that the issues to be determined may be correspondingly expanded.

I believe that the material facts giving rise to the issues to be decided may be stated in relatively short compass. The record of reservation quoted above was executed on or about May 1, 1973. The respondent furnished the applicant's sales agent with a deposit cheque in the amount of $200 at that time. The document related to a unit in a 218-unit project on the west side of Muirhead Rd. in the Borough of North York "which is intended to be registered as a condominium" (Siskind affidavit, para. 2). I shall consider later in these reasons what this means in the light of the relevant statutory provisions. In the course of construction of the project building the applicant encountered strikes and shortages of material that caused delay and increase in costs above estimate. This has prevented it from registering the project although it had been intended that it would be registered "long before this date [January 21, 1974]" (Siskind affidavit, para. 5).

The respondent inspected the model suite referred to in a notification to inspect dated August 27, 1973, within seven days after its receipt and indicated his willingness to purchase the suite pursuant to the terms of the record of reservation. Following an apparent attempt by the applicant, or its sales representative, to increase the purchase price by $5,000 to $6,000 above the price set forth in the record of reservation, the respondent's solicitor and the applicant's solicitor engaged in telephone and letter communication. A document entitled "CROSSROADS APARTMENTS LIMITED AGREEMENT OF PURCHASE AND SALE" (referred to above) was sent by the applicant's solicitor to the respondent's solicitor. It provided for a purchase price of $32,375 (not $33,275, as stated in the record of reservation), a deposit of $8,945, the assumption by the respondent of an N.H.A. insured first mortgage in favour of the Provincial Bank of Canada (the "lending institution") for the amount of ... $23,230.00 more or less as determined by C.M.H.C. for the lending institution, repayable approximately $183.46 monthly for principal and interest at the rate of 9 1/4% per annum together with 1/12 of the estimated annual taxes, said mortgage having 5 years to run ...

The following provisions were not filled in or completed: that relating to a second mortgage (which could have been deleted "if not applicable"), and those for the amount payable on closing, the date of the offer, the irrevocable date and the closing date. The respondent's solicitor telephoned the applicant's solicitor and questioned him regarding the missing terms. He was advised that they would be inserted on receipt of the executed offer and he was further advised that "only a further $500.000 [for the deposit] would be required and not the $8,945.00 as indicated in the Agreement" (Phillips affidavit, para. 22). The respondent signed the agreement of purchase and sale in the presence of his solicitor, initialled the change in the purchase price from $32,375 to $33,275 and made no other changes in it. On or about October 2, 1973, the agreement together with a cheque for $500 was mailed by the respondent's solicitor to the applicant or its representative.

By a letter dated October 3, 1973, the applicant's solicitor wrote to the respondent's solicitor wishing to advise that certain specified particulars were inadvertently omitted from the agreement which should form part thereof. The provisions respecting the second mortgage, the amount payable on closing and the provision respecting termination if the purchaser were unable to sell his house (none of which had been completed) were all to be deleted and a provision specifically identifying the parking space and a provision that the closing date was to be January 18, 1974, were to be inserted. The letter concluded: "The irrevocable date is Friday, October 5th, 1973 at 4:00 p.m. Executed copies of the Agreement must be delivered to our client on or before such time for acceptance."

The agreement was never executed by the applicant. The transcript of the cross-examination of Barry Siskind indicates that it was the applicant's intention to enter into the agreement with the respondent with the correct price and changes which had been made to the body of the contract (Q. 94). It was not executed because the applicant had not received a cheque for the proper amount of the deposit, $8,945 (Qq. 95 to 96). "... I did know that the amount of the deposit was to be equal to the amount of the purchase price less the $200.00 that Mr. Phillips had already given us, less the amount of the first mortgage" (Q. 99). It may be noted that this is not in accord with the evidence respecting the oral communication referred to above relating to the deposit being $500. I mention this to complete the narration. In my view, the discrepancy is not material to the ultimate disposition of this application.

The applicant submits that the record of reservation did not create an enforceable obligation by reason of: (a) non-compliance with s. 29 [am. 1971, Vol. 2, c. 2, s. 1; 1972, c. 118, s. 3; 1973, c. 168, s. 6] of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, and (b) lack of intention, appearing on its face, to create a binding contract. The respondent submits that: (a) the Planning Act, by reason of s. 24(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, is not applicable and that the record of reservation is binding according to its own terms or as supplemented by the conduct of the parties following May 1, 1973, or, in the alternative, the agreement of purchase and sale, in the light of the surrounding circumstances, created an enforceable obligation.

I turn first to the record of reservation. In my view, both of the applicant's submissions are entitled to succeed. Section 29(2) of the Planning Act, if I may summarize it in so far as it is applicable to this matter, prohibits the entering into of agreements of sale of land where the vendor retains abutting land, except in certain specified situations, set forth in cls. (a), (c), (d), and (e) thereto. Substantially the same prohibition is contained in s. 29(4) respecting agreements and transfers, etc. of "a part of any lot or block of land" within a registered plan of subdivision. These prohibitions are buttressed by s. 29(7) which provides:

29(7) An agreement, conveyance, mortgage or charge made, or a power of appointment granted, assigned or exercised in contravention of this section or a predecessor thereof does not create or convey any interest in land, but this section does not affect an agreement entered into subject to the express condition contained therein that such agreement is to be effective only if the provisions of this section are complied with.

This application has proceeded on the basis that the vendor is retaining abutting land and that the unit in question is self-contained and above ground.

In Coke upon Littleton (London, 1832), p. 486, it is said that "a man may have an inheritance in an upper chamber, though the lower building and soile be in another, and seeing that it is an inheritance corporeall it shall passe by livery" and this common law position was recognized in Iredale v. Loudon et al. (1908), 40 S.C.R. 313, where title to an upper room in a building was acquired under the Statute of Limitations. It would thus appear that the Planning Act prohibition would be applicable to the sale of such an interest. Further, the Condominium Act in s. 6(1) provides that:

6(1) Units and common interests are real property for all purposes.

but it should be stated now that is not applicable, as such, until registration of the declaration (s. 3) and description (s. 4) and in this regard reference is made to s. 2(6) which I shall discuss shortly.

The key provision in this application is s. 24 of the Condominium Act, as re-enacted by 1972, c. 7, s. 1, and amended by 1973, c. 121, s. 1. It reads:

24(1) Section 29 and clause b of subsection 1 of section 32 of The Planning Act do not apply in respect of dealings with units and common interests.

(2) Subject to subsection 3, the provisions of section 33 of The Planning Act that apply to plans of subdivision apply mutatis mutandis to descriptions under this Act, and a description shall not be registered unless approved or exempted by the Minister of Housing.

(3) Before making an application under subsection 1 of section 33 of The Planning Act, the owner of a property or someone authorized by him in writing may apply to the Minister to have the description or any part of the description exempted from such section 33, or from any provision thereof, and where in the opinion of the Minister such exemption is appropriate in the circumstances, he may grant the exemption.

(4) Section 34 of The Planning Act does not apply in respect to descriptions made for the purposes of this Act.

The respondent takes the basic position that s-s. (1) excludes the record of reservation from the Planning Act prohibition. This would be so if the concluding language therein can be read as "proposed units and common interests" rather than "registered units and common interests". In my opinion, the latter interpretation is the correct one. Until there is registration there can be no unit and common interests to which the Act applies. I refer to the following provisions therein:

1(1) In this Act,

(g) "common interest" means the interest in the common elements appurtenant to a unit;

(i) "declaration" means the declaration specified in section 3, and includes any amendments;

(j) "description" means the description specified in section 4;

(o) "registered" means registered under The Land Titles Act or The Registry Act;

(r) "unit" means a part or parts of the land included in the description and designated as a unit by the description, and comprises the space enclosed by its boundaries and all the material parts of the land within this space at the time the declaration and description are registered.

(2) For the purposes of this Act, the ownership of land includes the ownership of space.

2(6) Upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act.

4(1) A description shall contain,

(a) a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the horizontal surface of the land and the perimeter of the buildings;

(b) structural plans of the buildings;

(c) a specification of the boundaries of each unit by reference to the buildings;

(d) diagrams showing the shape and dimensions of each unit and the approximate location of each unit in relation to the other units and the buildings;

(e) a certificate of a surveyor that the buildings have been constructed and that the diagrams of the units are substantially accurate and substantially in accordance with the structural plans; and

(f) a description of any interests appurtenant to the land that are included in the property, prepared in accordance with the regulations.

(2) A description shall not be registered unless it has been approved in accordance with the regulations.

If there be any doubt that the definition of "unit" set forth in s. 1(1)(r), to which the "common interest" is "appurtenant" (s. 1(1)(g)) is such that "units" have to be specified in registered descriptions (it could not be argued that registration relates only to the "comprises" and the "means" part of the definition) s. 2(6) makes the matter clear. It is only upon registration that the Act comes into play and a proposed unit becomes "a unit". It cannot be a unit to which the Act is applicable at any time short of registration. This, in my view, is a complete answer to the respondent's contention, which was supported by submissions of a policy nature.

The policy considerations were to the effect that the Planning Act provisions respecting the purpose of controlling the process of subdividing land (which perhaps may be fairly gleaned from the matters set forth in s. 33(4) of the Act as well as such matters as conformance of the draft plan to the official plan and the adequacy of utilities and municipal services, to mention only a few) really have no practical or reasonable application to the sale of space in a building which is in all likelihood no different from an apartment building in which the various parts are leased to tenants. This latter activity, it is submitted, does not form a legal (apart from leases for 21 years or more) or policy point of view have any bearing on the requirements or purpose of subdivision control policy. I must say that in a substantial majority of situations I would think that this is a valid observation. However, it is not sufficient to weigh successfully against the interpretation of s. 24(1) in the statutory context set forth above. Further, it overlooks two other aspects of the legislation. First, sss. (2) and (3) of s. 24 of the Condominium Act indicate a legislative recognition that in some cases Planning Act policies, specifically those set forth in s. 33 [am. 1971, Vol. 2, c. 2, s. 3; 1972, c. 118, s. 5; 1973, c. 168, s. 9], may be applicable to a proposed condominium development and, secondly (and this may well relate to the first aspect), some condominium developments may involve vertical division of units on one horizontal plane. There is nothing in the Act (popular notions of the condominium concept may well be something else) restricting it to strata interests in buildings. This point has been touched upon by Lacourciere, J., in Re Macval Enterprises Ltd. and Township of Nepean et al., [1972] 2 O.R. 458 at pp. 461-2, 25 D.L.R. (3d) 682 at pp. 685-6, and by Lerner, J., in Re Lambert Island Ltd. and A.-G. Ont., [1972] 2 O.R. 659 at p. 668, 26 D.L.R. (3d) 391 at p. 400.

If I am right that the Condominium Act is applicable to the vertical division of units on one horizontal plane, perforce ground level, then the inapplicability of the respondent's policy argument becomes apparent. With respect to a proposed development involving such vertical division a developer could escape the clear policy results intended by the Planning Act by use of the label on his plan "Proposed Condominium" and the inclusion, in the proposal of a common interest (for example, a small parking area) appurtenant to the units. The application of the Planning Act to a proposed condominium development cannot turn on the nature of the development, i.e., be inapplicable to strata development but applicable to development involving vertical divisions on one horizontal plane. It has to apply to all proposed condominiums.

I appreciate the practical consequences of this holding as far as the development, particularly the financing thereof, of condominium projects is concerned. I would think that the difficulties imposed by the Planning Act could be met by appropriately worded conditional provisions in agreements of purchase and sale of proposed units. I shall return to this point later in these reasons but note now that there is nothing in the record of reservation indicating an intention that it is to be subject to compliance with the Planning Act: Murray Elias Ltd. v. Walsam Investments Ltd., [1964] 2 O.R. 381, 45 D.L.R. (2d) 561; affirmed [1965] 2 O.R. 672n, 51 D.L.R. (2d) 590n, and clearly there is no express provision therein that it is conditional upon compliance with s. 29: Rogers et al. v. Leonard (1973), 1 O.R. (2d) 57, 39 D.L.R. (3d) 349.

As far as the second point respecting the record of reservation is concerned it is clear to me that it discloses the intention of the parties that further terms, including an additional deposit, would be negotiated by them and then embodied into a written agreement of purchase and sale. It was not intended to be a binding agreement in itself. Further I do not see how it could be made binding by the subsequent conduct of the parties. By its own terms it looked to the entering into of such an agreement, otherwise it would be null and void. The conduct, involving the discussion of terms outside those contained in the document, cannot be resorted to to explain any possible ambiguities therein (as in Canadian Dyers Ass'n Ltd. v. Burton (1920), 47 O.L.R. 259, referred to by counsel for the respondent) and is of no assistance in converting it into an enforceable agreement.

The applicant raised in the statement of fact and law filed on its behalf the question as to the effectiveness of the record of reservation by reason of the lack of a corporate seal thereon. Mr. Rosenberg during the hearing of the motion withdrew this point and submitted that the application should be decided on the basis that the record was properly executed by a duly-authorized officer of the applicant.

As far as the agreement of purchase and sale is concerned it too falls short of resulting in an enforceable agreement. It never did set forth such essential terms as the correct deposit as alleged by the respondent. As to those terms settled orally, also as alleged by the respondent, reference can be made to para. 18(d) thereof which provides that:

... there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement, or condition affecting this agreement ... other than as expressed herein in writing.

Further, there has been no compliance with s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, R.S.O. 1970, c. 444.

In addition, it is not clear to me that the Planning Act hurdle discussed above has been successfully cleared by this document. Paragraph 11 therein should be considered. It reads:

This Agreement is subject to compliance with Section 29 of The Planning Act and the parties agree irrevocably that the exemption by virtue of Section 24(4) of The Condominium Act shall be conclusively deemed compliance with this provision and compliance with Section 29 of The Planning Act.

On its face this is a confusing provision. First, what is the exemption by virtue of s. 24(4) of the Condominium Act? It, as re-enacted by 1972, c. 7, s. 1, reads:

24(4) Section 34 of The Planning Act does not apply in respect to descriptions made for the purposes of this Act.

Section 34 makes it an offence to subdivide and offer for sale, agree to sell or sell land "by a description in accordance with an unregistered plan of subdivision". I do not think that the inapplicability of this offence-creation section to "descriptions made for the purposes of this Act" has any bearing on the issue of enforceability of the agreement since the basic prohibition against grants of land not being described in accordance with and being within a registered plan of subdivision provided for in s. 29(2) of the Planning Act, is still applicable. However, it is possible that para. 11 was drawn prior to the amendment of s. 24 of the Condominium Act by 1972, c. 7, s. 1 (apparently a correcting amendment), when s-s. (4) referred to s. 29 of the Planning Act. If it is so read then it is difficult to give it effect together within s. 24(1) which, prior to the 1972 amendment, made s. 26 of the Planning Act (concerned with grading or clearing lands held by a municipality) inapplicable to "dealings" with units and common interests (obviously an error in reference) and, after the amendment, made s. 29 so inapplicable. The best light which could be put on para. 11 (and there may well be no warrant for this) is that it should be read as referring to "the exemption by virtue of" s. 24(1) of the Condominium Act, as it now reads.

What is this "exemption"? As indicated above it becomes effective, i.e., the transfer prohibition contained in s. 29 of the Planning Act becomes inapplicable, only upon registration of the declaration and description. Until such time the Planning Act prohibition remains in force. The situation is an awkward one, to say the least. Prior to such registration the only practical method of avoiding contravention of the Planning Act with respect to the transfer of land is to obtain the consent to the transaction by the committee of adjustment. I refer to ss. 29(1), (2)(e), (4)(d), and 42(3) of the Planning Act. Although s-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 24 in the Condominium Act indicate that, in the absence of an exemption granted by the Minister, a proposed description is to be processed in the same manner as a proposed plan of subdivision under s. 33 of the Planning Act down to approval by the Minister, this is as far as they go. It is not provided that an approved description is to be registered under the Planning Act (s. 33(14)) and thereby make the exception provided for in s. 29(2) (a) of the Planning Act (the land being "described in accordance with [and being] within a registered plan of subdivision") applicable. The requirement of registration is set forth only in the Condominium Act.

It is difficult to see how "the exemption by virtue of section 24(1) [if we can read it as intending this subsection] shall be conclusively deemed to be compliance with section 29 of The Planning Act". I do not think that it is open to parties to a contract to deem something to be in compliance with, i.e., not to contravene, a public law if in fact what is contemplated cannot independently be considered compliance. Further, how can the mere existence of the so-called exemption be considered a form of compliance by the parties? As I have said, s. 29 of the Planning Act ceases to be applicable upon registration of the declaration and description -- which brings the Condominium Act, including s. 24(1), into play.

In summary, s. 29 of the Planning Act is applicable until such registration but not after. For a contract not to run afoul of it I would think that it should contain an express condition that the agreement is to be effective only if the provisions of the section are complied with (see Planning Act, s. 29(7)) or, in the event that the relevant description is registered under the Condominium Act, upon such registration. It may be this latter requirement can properly be implied from what is in para. 11 of the agreement, although one reading of the language would indicate that the mere existence of the Condominium Act subsection, without the required steps having been completed to invoke it, is to be regarded as compliance. Having regard to the confusing statutory reference in the agreement and the issues just discussed I think it can be said that whether or not the Planning Act prohibition has been effectively circumvented is not completely free from doubt. As may be gathered, this is not the most obvious bar to the enforceability of the agreement.

In the result, an order may issue declaring that neither the record of reservation nor the agreement of purchase and sale are enforceable agreements and that neither of them create interests in land. I may be spoken to on costs.

Order accordingly.

BCCA 585 Vancouver Registry No. CA024327

British Columbia Court of Appeal Vancouver, British Columbia Esson, Prowse and Mackenzie JJ.A. Oral judgment: October 7, 1999. Released: October 28, 1999.

Counsel: C.A. Wallace, for the appellants/respondents, Spaceworks Architects (A Partnership), Peter Reese, and Thaddeus Young. D.A. Garner, for the appellant/respondent, Gordon Spratt & Associates Ltd. D.P. Church and I.G. Schildt, for the respondent/appellant.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by [para1] ESSON J.A. (orally):-- This is an action in which the plaintiffs, who are owners of a substantial condominium structure, seek damages arising from a serious case of the leaky condo syndrome. The defendants include the developers, contractors, and a consultant consulted by the owners before the action was brought. For present purposes, I need refer only to the appellants who are respectively the architects and an engineering firm which was involved in some aspects at least of the design of the building and in inspection during construction. The architects were the overall designers.

[para2] Those defendants applied under Rule 18A for a ruling that the action as against them was barred by limitation. The building was completed in 1986. The writ was issued in December 1995. It is clear then that the action can be held to be brought within time only by invoking the postponement provisions set out in s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act.

[para3] The application under Rule 18A was heard by Madam Justice Humphries who reserved her decision and ultimately gave a ruling which is somewhat unusual. She found that two discrete aspects of the plaintiff's claim, one dealing with the roof of the building and one with the stucco surface, were indeed barred, i.e., that the plaintiffs were unable to establish that they could meet all of the conditions of s. 6(4), and particularly the provision regarding their means of knowledge. [para4] With respect to the balance of the claim, which is the bulk of the overall claim, the summary trial judge found that it would be unfair or unjust to rule on the basis of the evidence which she had heard. She therefore referred those aspects of the limitation issue to the trial judge for determination. That ruling of course was an exercise of the discretion conferred upon her by the plain words of Rule 18A. The judge gave extensive reasons for that decision. In spite of the vigorous submissions of counsel for the appellants, I am satisfied that was an appropriate exercise of the discretion and that there is no basis upon which this Court can interfere.

[para5] That brings me to the cross-appeal by the plaintiffs. It is directed to the ruling that two aspects of the claim are statute-barred. The submission essentially is that, if the plaintiffs had sought legal advice in November 1989, they would not have been advised that there was a reasonable prospect of success in an action in negligence for repairs to a defective building. On this point, the judge held that the cost of replacement, which is the basis for those two aspects of the claim, was not one for pure economic loss but rather, as she put it, were actual repair costs resulting from physical damage. In this Court, the defendants have not sought to uphold that basis of decision, but nevertheless contend that the decision was correct in substance. In their factum, the plaintiffs put the matter this way:

In light of these cases, the reasonably competent notional legal advisor in November 1989 would not have provided a favourable opinion concerning the prospects of a successful legal action. Indeed, this would likely have remained the gist of any legal advice provided to the Respondent prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Winnipeg Condominium (1995), 121 D.L.R. (4th) 193 (S.C.C.) in which the Supreme Court of Canada held that the cost of remedying such defects would be recoverable if the defects were such that they caused a reasonable apprehension of danger. That is the Respondent's allegation in this action. In this respect, it should be noted that Manitoba Court of Appeal in Winnipeg Condominium dismissed the plaintiff's claim largely on the basis of the decision in D&F Estates. [para6] Accepting that the claim is one for pure economic loss, I do not accept that a reasonably prudent legal advisor in 1989 would have advised against joining the architect and engineer. The argument based on Winnipeg Condominium is essentially based on the contention that the law was settled in 1973 in Rivtow Marine Ltd. v. Washington Iron Works et al (1973), 40 D.L.R. (3d) 530 (S.C.C.) and that a prudent lawyer would not have considered it to have been changed until the decision of the Supreme Court in Winnipeg Condominium was known. That argument essentially ignores the general thrust of Canadian tort law in the years since Rivtow was decided. I need only refer to Kamloops v. Nielsen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2 (S.C.C.) as an example of the case authorities and writings which any prudent advisor would have had in mind in 1989. As a matter of interest, I note that the Winnipeg Condominium case itself was begun in 1989 considerably earlier in the year than the relevant date in this case. I do not suggest that is an important circumstance, but is part of the picture.

[para7] I would therefore dismiss the appeal and the cross-appeal. ESSON J.A.

[para8] PROWSE J.A.:-- I agree.

[para9] MACKENZIE J.A.:-- I agree.

[para10] ESSON J.A.:-- The appeal and cross-appeal are dismissed.

Marco Polo Properties Ltd., petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 1328, respondent

Vancouver Registry No. A991371

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Davies J. (In Chambers) Oral judgment: August 5, 1999. Released: August 27, 1999.

Counsel: J. Bleay, for the petitioner. J.G. Mendes, H.D. Neun and L. Ridgway, for the respondent. [Ed. note: A Corrigendum was released by the Court September 14, 1999, the correction has been made to the text and the Corrigendum is appended to this document.]

DAVIES J.:--

Introduction

[para1] The respondent's 194-unit condominium development in Surrey, British Columbia has become what is commonly known as a "leaky condo" development. The project was developed by the petitioner in 1994 and the petitioner still owns 24 units in it.

[para2] At its annual general meeting on February 18, 1999, a majority of the respondent's owners passed a budget resolution requiring that each unit owner pay a proportionate share of a $2,467,000 assessment intended to fund the repair of the waterproof envelope of the buildings comprising the project. That payment was required to be made in one lump-sum payment due on April 1, 1999.

Issues

[para3] The petitioner challenges the validity of this budget resolution, raising three issues for determination:

Firstly, did the repair assessment require the approval of 75 percent of the unit owners in the development by way of a special resolution, rather than a mere majority by ordinary resolution;

Secondly, do the respondent's bylaws and the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c.34 (the "Act") allow a requirement that the amount assessed for the repair of the building envelope be paid in one lump-sum payment, rather than by equal monthly instalments; and

Thirdly, were the respondent's actions in assessing the repair assessment oppressive and unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner under section 42 of the Act?

Background

[para4] The respondent's condominium development is comprised of a 16-story high-rise containing 128 units known as Grandview Court, and a 66-unit 4-story wood frame structure known as Parkview Court.

[para5] The development has suffered from water ingress since it was completed in 1994. The petitioner and the contractor which built the development attended to annual repairs of the leaks from 1994 to October of 1998. Since that time the respondent strata council has been spending monies on temporary repairs and other measures to mitigate water ingress and damage.

[para6] In May of 1998, the respondent retained R.D.H. Building Engineering Limited (R.D.H.) to investigate the project's water ingress problems. R.D.H.'s report on Grandview Court was delivered in September 30, 1998. Among other things, it stated:

Evidence found during our investigation, coupled with reports of water ingress into suites, indicates significant moisture problems with the building envelope of Grandview Court.... [I]t is our opinion that even with ongoing and extensive maintenance, acceptable long-term performance of current wall and window assemblies is unlikely.

[para7] R.D.H.'s report on Parkview Court was delivered on October 19, 1998. It stated, among other things, that:

Our investigation, and problems reported by owners, clearly indicate significant problems of water penetration. Deterioration of sheathing and framing, resulting from rain penetration has occurred in several areas of the building.... Deterioration of structural members, such as balcony joists, is a serious condition and compromises the life safety of occupants. Such damage must be repaired as a matter of urgency.

And further that:

Remedial work to date appears to have been carried out but on a piecemeal basis. While this work may have, at least temporarily, corrected some of the problems it does not address fundamental issues of wall design and should not be viewed as a viable long-term solution.

[para8] On October 21, 1998, the respondent retained Levelton Engineering Limited, another engineering company specializing in building envelope repairs, to provide a second opinion. On November 13, 1998, Levelton Engineering Limited delivered a report, which concluded:

Levelton believes that the investigation performed by RDH was in general accordance with good practice. Levelton agrees with RDH that the deterioration of the wall assembly will be progressive and that water ingress problems will become more serious as time goes on. Based upon the data contained in [the Grandview report] it is therefore Levelton's opinion that aggressive intervention such as described in the recommendations section of the RDH report is warranted.

[para9] Following receipt of those reports, the respondent's strata council convened extraordinary general meetings on November 16, 1998 and December 19, 1998 at which special resolutions were proposed for an assessment of sufficient funds in the amount of approximately $2.4 million to complete the remedial work determined as being necessary by R.D.H. under a Plan B option.

Those resolutions each failed to obtain the approval of 75 percent of the unit holders. The petitioner voted all of its units against the assessments on both occasions and was joined by some other unit holders in so doing.

[para10] When the respondent held its annual general meeting on February 18, 1999, its council once again proposed a special resolution for an assessment of sufficient funds to carry out the remedial work proposed by R.D.H. under Plan B. Council had determined that the work must be immediately undertaken for the present well-being of the development and to avoid future repair cost increases. Council also proposed an ordinary resolution which would make the same repair costs payable in one lump-sum payment as part of the respondent's annual budget for 1999-2000 if the special resolution failed to obtain the approval of 75 percent of the unit holders.

[para11] The February 18, 1999 special resolution failed to obtain the required 75 percent approval of unit holders. The petitioner voted against that special resolution as did seven other unit holders. One unit holder abstained, while 86 voted in favour. The ordinary resolution was then proposed and passed, with 86 unit holders voting in favour, seven against, and 25 abstentions.

[para12] Since April of 1999, the respondent has received reports of fungal contamination in several areas of the development. The evidence establishes that such contamination may pose a serious health hazard to the occupants of the development, increasing the urgency of the remedial work to repair the building envelope as proposed by R.D.H.

[para13] On May 17, 1999, the petitioner filed this petition challenging the validity of the repair assessments against it. No repairs have been undertaken, pending determination of the issues raised by this petition.

Discussion and Analysis

ISSUE 1: Did the repair assessment require the approval of 75 percent of the unit holders in the development by way of a special resolution, rather than a mere majority by ordinary resolution?

[para14] The petitioner says that the repairs deemed necessary by R.D.H. are "unusual and extraordinary expenses" which may only be funded through assessments approved by special resolution under section 49 of the Act or by payments from the "contingency reserve fund" required to be established and funded by each strata corporation under section 35(1)(b) of the Act.

[para15] The respondent says that in the special circumstances of this development the contemplated repairs are not "unusual or extraordinary expenses". It says they are expenses of a nature which have historically been required annually so that they need not be funded by the contingency reserve fund. It also says that it is not the amount of the costs of repairs which determines whether a repair is unusual or extraordinary, but rather the nature of the repairs as an ongoing annual item of cost to these owners. It says further these repairs are urgent and that prudence dictates that remedial measures which will alleviate future repair and maintenance costs can be undertaken as an annual budgetary item. The respondent also says that it is mandated by the Act to carry out such repairs and that the will of the majority ought not to be defeated by a self-interested minority so as to preclude the majority from acting responsibly, in accordance with its legal obligations under the Act. [para16] It is common ground that there are insufficient funds in the respondent's contingency reserve fund to undertake the repairs and that the establishment of a fund sufficient to do so in the future would take many years unless special levies are made, which special levies would also require special resolutions under section 4 of the Regulations to the Act.

[para17] The applicable sections of the Act relating to the submissions of the parties are sections 1, 14, 34(1)(d), 35, 40, 49, 116(b), (d) and (f), and 128(1) and (11). Those sections provide as follows:

[para18]

Section 1:

'Contingency reserve fund' means a fund for the expenditures, other than annual, of the strata corporation for repair, maintenance, and replacement of the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation, including if applicable, without limiting this definition, the roof, exterior of the buildings, roads, sidewalks, sewers, heating, electrical and plumbing systems, elevators, laundry and recreational facilities.

Section 14:

Subject to this Act, the strata corporation is responsible for the enforcement of the bylaws, and the control, management and administration of the common property, common facilities, and the assets of the corporation.

Section 34(1)(d):

A strata corporation must do all of the following:

(d) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation.

Section 35:

(1) A strata corporation must do all of the following:

(a) establish a fund for administrative expenses sufficient for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of premiums on policies of insurance and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation;

(b) establish a contingency reserve fund not exceeding an amount calculated in the manner set by regulation and determine the annual levy for the contingency reserve fund; and the levy must, if the amount of the reserve is less than 25% of the total annual budget of the strata corporation, be not less than 5% of that budget; and the strata corporation must hold the fund as a reserve fund to pay unusual or extraordinary future expenses;

(c) determine the amounts to be raised for the purposes set out in this section and notify the strata lot owners of those amounts;

(d) raise the amounts so determined by levying contributions on the owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their respective strata lots in the manner provided for in the bylaws.

(2) A strata council must not make expenditures out of the contingency reserve fund without a special resolution, unless the strata council considers that the expenditure is necessary to meet an emergency.

(3) Unless otherwise provided in the bylaws, there must be no reduction of the contribution of the owner developer under subsection (1)(d) for strata lots owned by the owner developer. (4) Unless otherwise provided in the bylaws, the contributions levied under subsection (1)(d) become due and payable on the first day of each month.

Section 40:

If a strata corporation fails to fulfil an obligation under this Act or bylaws, the owner of a strata lot, or a registered mortgagee, may apply to the court for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation to perform the obligation.

Section 49:

Unless otherwise provided by a bylaw added to Part 5, a strata council must not, except in emergencies, authorize, without authorization by a special resolution of the strata corporation, an expenditure of more than $500 which was not set out in the annual budget of the corporation and approved by the owners at a general meeting.

Section 116(b), (d) and (f):

A strata corporation must do all of the following:

(b) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the fixtures and fittings, including the elevators, swimming pool and recreational facilities, if any, and other apparatus and equipment used in connection with the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation;

(d) maintain and repair, including renewal where reasonably necessary, pipes, wires, cables, chutes and ducts existing in the parcel and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of more than one strata lot or common property;

(f) maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a strata lot, including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings.

Section 128(1):

The strata lot owner's contribution to the common expenses of the strata corporation must be levied in accordance with this bylaw.

Section 128(11):

At each annual general meeting after the first annual general meeting, the strata corporation must prepare an annual budget for the following 12 month period and, after that, all owners must, subject to subsections (2) and (3), pay a monthly assessment in accordance with their unit entitlement.

[para19] I am satisfied that in the circumstances of this case the inclusion of the remedial cost to repair the waterproof envelopes of the buildings in this development was properly included in the respondent's annual budget under section 35(1)(a). That section requires that a strata corporation must:

establish a fund for administrative expenses sufficient for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of premiums on policies of insurance and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation.

I emphasize "and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation."

[para20] In my opinion, included in those other obligations is the respondent's duty to repair, required by sections 14, 34(1)(d), and 116(b), (d) and (f).

[para21] As to the importance of that obligation to repair, I refer to the decision of this court in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden [1996], B.C.J. No. 2360 (Q.L.) (B.C.S.C.), in which Bauman, J. said (at paragraph 17):

The strata corporation has certain essential duties under the Act to maintain common property, common facilities, and assets of the corporation. These are fundamental duties, and I perceive, their execution by the strata corporation is critical to the realization of the condominium concept - that is people living together in individually owned units within a common shell.

[para22] I do not agree with the petitioner's submission that such repair costs can only be funded through an assessment by a special resolution under section 49 or through the contingency reserve fund. While those are available means of funding, they are not exclusive.

[para23] The attempts of the respondent's strata council to obtain approval of 75 percent of the owners prior to February 18, 1999 was required under section 49 prior to February 18, 1999, because the repairs had not been addressed as a budgetary item in the 1998-1999 budget. That was not, however, the case on February 18, 1999, when the issue was addressed as a budget assessment.

[para24] I am also of the opinion that the use of funds from the contingency reserve fund is not mandatory upon the respondent because section 35(1)(b) mandates that those funds be used to create a fund for unusual or extraordinary future expenses. Aside from the practical problem of the contingency reserve fund having insufficient funds to pay for the repairs, the repairs now needed are not future repairs, they are required imminently and on an urgent basis, and have continued as such on an annual basis since the project was completed.

[para25] While the Act does contain specific provisions requiring the passing of special resolutions to obtain funding for expenditures deemed necessary by the strata corporation, there is no such specific reference to remedial or repair work which is identified as being necessary as part of the annual budget process required to be undertaken by a strata corporation. I am not prepared to read into the Act such a requirement, notwithstanding the amount of the assessment in issue in this case. In my opinion, unless the Act specifically requires the approval of 75 percent of the unit holders before an assessment can be made, the general democratic principles of condominium living and administration should prevail.

[para26] In support of this principle, I adopt the following statement of this court in Sterloff v. Strata Plan VR2613 [1994], B.C.J. No. 445 (Q.L.), wherein Wilson, J. stated (at paragraph 35):

Pursuant to its bylaws, the strata corporation must control, manage, and administer the common property for the benefit of all owners. It seems to me that in carrying out that mandate, the corporation, among other things, must endeavour to accomplish the greatest good for the greatest number.

[para27] I believe I am also supported in my conclusion that in the absence of a specific requirement for a special resolution, the principles of democracy should apply to the rights and obligations of the owners of units in the strata corporation, by section 40 of the Act which provides that:

If a strata corporation fails to fulfil an obligation under this Act or bylaws, the owner of a strata lot, or a registered mortgagee, may apply to the court for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation to perform the obligation.

[para28] Surely it cannot be the case that if there is a duty to repair a condition of a strata corporation which is dangerous to the health, safety and well-being of an owner or owners; which is enforceable by court order, it must not be open to a reluctant strata corporation to say, we cannot comply with such a court order because a minority of our members refuses to allow us to do so.

ISSUE 2: Do the respondent's bylaws and the Act allow a requirement that the amount assessed for the repair of the building envelope be paid in one lump-sum payment, rather than by equal monthly instalments?

[para29] The petitioner argues that sections 128, 35(1)(d) and 35(4) of the Act require that an annual assessment under section 35 must be paid in equal monthly instalments.

[para30] The respondent argues that there is no such specific requirement and that a strata corporation should be left free to determine whether a fund such as the one in issue is to be collected at the beginning of the year or at some other time during the year, presumably as the expenditure of the funds becomes necessary. It points to the urgency of the situation in support of the logic of allowing the majority of the owners the discretion to set the date upon which an assessment will fall due.

[para31] Notwithstanding my sympathy for the immediacy of the problem faced by the respondent, I am persuaded that section 35(1)(d) and 35(4) of the Act must be read to require that the total budgetary items approved in an annual budget under section 35(1)(d), which in this case includes the repair assessment of $2,467,000, "become payable on the 1st of each month", i.e. by monthly instalments. I have no evidence that the respondent's bylaws have amended the statutory bylaws set forth in the Act to provide otherwise.

[para32] I am satisfied that until such time as there is an amendment to its bylaws, the respondent cannot require payment of the funds assessed under section 35(1)(d) other than by equal monthly instalments.

[para33] Having said that, however, I am not prepared to say that the assessment against the petitioner of its proportionate share of the repair costs in this case is invalidated by reason of the requirement of a lump-sum payment. The remedy to which the petitioner is entitled is one rectifying the assessment to provide that it may be paid in equal monthly instalments over the one year term of the budget in the same manner as all other assessments approved in the budget by ordinary resolution on February 18, 1999. The petitioner shall, therefore, be immediately responsible for the monthly payments due between February 1, 1999 and August 1, 1999.

ISSUE 3: Were the respondent's actions in assessing the repair assessment oppressive or unduly prejudicial to the petitioner under section 42 of the Act?

[para34] The petitioner argues that in assessing the building envelope repair costs by way of ordinary resolution after having three times failed to obtain the necessary 75 percent approval of the unit holders for that assessment by way of special resolution, the respondent was acting oppressively and that its actions were unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner's interests under section 42 of the Act.

[para35] Section 42 of the Act provides that:

An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter if the owner alleges

(a) that the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself or herself, or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself or herself. [para36] Section 43 of the Act grants the court broad powers to remedy conduct which is determined by the court to be oppressive or unduly prejudicial.

[para37] The petitioner relies upon the decision of this court in Blue Red Holdings v. Strata BR857 (1994), 42 R.P.R. (2d) 49, in arguing that the actions of the respondent in assessing the repair costs by ordinary resolution was procedurally unfair and oppressive to the interests of the petitioner, which was entitled to rely upon the respondent's recognition that a special resolution was required.

[para38] I do not agree with that argument. In my opinion, the respondent was obligated to seek approval of the repair assessments by special resolutions prior to its February 18, 1999 annual general meeting, because the assessment related to a new expense which had not been adopted by the budget of the previous year. Section 49 applied in that situation unless the repairs were deemed by the respondent's strata council to be required on an emergency basis.

[para39] While that argument might have been available to the respondent, I do note that the reports of R.D.H. and Levelton at that time had not yet raised the serious health issues related to fungal contamination which is now in evidence.

[para40] The attempt to pass the repair assessment by special resolution at the February 18, 1999 Annual General Meeting prior to proceeding an ordinary budget resolution vote is more troubling in that it could be viewed as a means of attempting to deny the petitioner a right to rely on a special resolution on a matter of significant cost. I have, however, already determined that the repair assessment under section 35(1)(a) was a valid assessment, and while I have determined that the lump-sum aspect of the assessment is not maintainable, it does not follow that the assessment was oppressive or unfairly prejudicial as against the petitioner under section 42.

[para41] In Vold v. Strata Corporation No. 202 (1993), 31 R.P.R. (2d) 129 (B.C.S.C.) at 134, when considering whether the affairs or powers or acts of a corporation have been exercised in a manner oppressive or unfairly prejudicial, Melvin, J. determined that the court should look at the cumulative effect of the conduct complained of. In this case, unlike the situation in Blue Red Holdings, the majority was not acting in a such manner as to impose obligations upon an owner without reciprocal benefit. The petitioner is not being required to contribute to repairs to any greater extent than any other unit holder for the units which it owns and the petitioner will receive the full benefit of the repairs to each of its units.

[para42] In my opinion the respondent's attempt to obtain approval by way of special resolution was simply a wise attempt to obtain such approval because of the large amounts in issue, and to attempt to preclude litigation such as this. The assessment by way of ordinary resolution was the legitimate reaction by the respondent to the petitioner's unwillingness to contribute its proportion of the share of the repair costs, and by so doing, thwart the pressing needs of the respondent to protect the health and safety of all of its unit holders and comply with the statutory duty to repair. I see no evidence of procedural bad faith or any attempt to single out the petitioner for unfair treatment.

[para43] It cannot be said that the cumulative effects of the respondent's actions are prejudicial to the petitioner. The petitioner is simply being required to pay its proportionate share of the cost of remedying an urgent health and safety problem. It will benefit equally with all other owners for those rectification efforts.

[para44] In addressing this issue of oppression and prejudice as alleged by the petitioner, one cannot help but wonder at the motivation of the petitioner in seeking to preclude these urgent and necessary repairs from proceeding, and by so doing, cause the respondent to be in breach of the duty to repair it owes all owners, including the petitioner, under the Act. Although the petitioner has the right to vote its unit entitlement as it sees fit, I see no basis in this case to interfere with the efforts of a substantial majority of the owners of the project to comply with those obligations which the respondent has for the health and safety of all concerned.

Costs

[para45] The respondent has been largely successful in this matter. The petitioner has been largely unsuccessful. The respondent is entitled to two-thirds of its costs against the petitioner on Scale 3. The petitioner is entitled to no costs.

CBR# 168

Martha Morales Lopez and Martha Angelica Lopez, plaintiffs, and Michael Shea and Bonnie Shea, defendants

Vancouver Registry No. C972091

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia E.R.A. Edwards J. Heard: May 19, 1999. Judgment: filed May 25, 1999.

Counsel: Julien A. Dawson, for the plaintiffs. Christopher R. Bacon, for the defendants.

[para1] E.R.A. EDWARDS J.:-- The defendants apply under Rule 18A for summary dismissal of the action.

[para2] The plaintiffs allege the defendants fraudulently misrepresented the condition of a condominium unit they sold the plaintiffs in April 1993 for $205,000 by "actively concealing" a latent defect in the fabric of the building. The plaintiff's seek "recession" (sic) of the purchase contract and damages.

[para4] Apart from $1300 water damage to a sofa, the plaintiff's main claim is for the $43,000 loss they sustained when they sold the unit in June 1997. Between 1994 and 1997 the plaintiffs were subject to special assessments by the strata corporation totaling about $2600 for leak related repairs to other buildings in the condominium complex. This amount they also claim as damages.

[para5] The plaintiffs' position is that had they been aware of the crack at the time of purchase they would not have bought the unit and incurred the special assessments or the loss on resale.

[para6] The plaintiffs did not inquire about the repair history of the unit or the complex before their purchase and did not read the strata council minutes which disclosed leak problems with the foundations of two of the seven buildings in the complex. Neither was the building in which the unit they purchased is located.

[para7] The evidence of the defendants, corroborated by the condominium property manager, is that these leak problems in the other buildings had been resolved by 1989. The property manager also deposed that there was no recurrence of the problems in the other buildings until August 1994.

[para8] Having alleged fraud, the onus is on the plaintiffs to prove the defendants knew of and concealed the foundation leak at the time of sale. [para9] The evidence on which they rely to do so is the following:

(a) The evidence of the plaintiff Ms. M.M. Lopez and her common law husband Mr. Faber that after the leak developed in March 1995 the gyproc wall was removed in May 1995 to reveal the leaking crack which had apparently been repaired earlier.

(b) The hearsay evidence of an as yet unidentified repairer who Mr. Faber deposed had told him on inspecting the leak there were several cracks and "the patch-like appearance of the lighter concrete indicated an earlier negligent attempt to repair the cracks."

(c) The hearsay evidence of a neighbour, Mr. Allen, who Ms. M.M. Lopez deposed told her the defendant, Mr. M. Shea, unsuccessfully attempted to repair "the crack" in February 1993.

[para10] From this evidence, evidence that the neighbour Mr. Allen had repaired a similar crack in 1993 and the fact the defendants had been the only occupants of the unit from its initial purchase, the plaintiffs would have the court infer that the defendants knew of the crack, repaired it negligently and deliberately covered it with the gyproc wall to hide the repair.

[para11] The defendant Mr. M. Shea deposed that he constructed the gyproc wall in 1988 and repositioned it in 1989 in order to finish the lower level of the unit and that he neither noticed any cracks nor repaired the concrete wall.

[para12] On discovery Ms. M.M. Lopez acknowledged that she and Mr. Allen "assumed" Mr. Shea had repaired the crack in 1993.

[para13] Mr. Allen deposed that the crack he repaired was adjacent to another unit, not 202 the one in question here, that he never discussed with the defendants and was unaware of any leak in unit 202 or any repairs to unit 202 related to the foundation before 1993. He further deposed he had never advised Ms. M.M. Lopez that a leak or repairs had occurred to unit 202 while occupied by the defendants. [para14] The plaintiffs have no direct evidence that the defendants repaired the crack. At best they have evidence of a repair to a crack which prevented it from leaking for two years after they purchased the unit. This was longer than the effect of the initial repair done by the repairer they hope to call as an expert to say the earlier repair was negligent and "bound to fail". His repair had to be redone within about one year.

[para15] Ms. M.M. Lopez deposed in May 1999 she was confident that the repairer could be located, although counsel acknowledged neither the plaintiffs nor the repairer's former employer now knew his name. There is no certainty he could be qualified as an expert on crack repair if identified and brought to testify at a trial.

[para16] For the plaintiffs to succeed in proving fraud, the court would have to conclude on the basis of the possible "expert" testimony that the repair, if not done by Mr. Shea, would have been obvious to Mr. Shea when he installed the gyproc wall and that it also would have been obvious to the defendants that the repair was "bound to fail" and cause a leak.

[para17] The fact it did not leak for at least two years from the date of the plaintiffs' purchase and for perhaps as long as six years (if the court were to find Mr. M. Shea repaired it when the gyproc wall was last installed in 1989) or even longer if the court were to find it had been repaired when the foundation was initially constructed, leads to the inference the defendants did not know at the time they sold to the plaintiffs that the repair was bound to fail.

[para18] Even if the court found the defendants knew of the crack, and concealed the fact it had been repaired and even if it were obvious to an expert the repair was bound to fail, that does not prove fraud on the part of the defendants in concealing a repair which had not yet failed in 1993.

[para19] The plaintiffs' case rests on the proposition that an expert might say "it was obvious to any lay person the repair would fail" and that the court would prefer that evidence to the evidence that it had not failed until 1995.

[para20] In light of the fact the plaintiffs pleaded fraud without that expert evidence and in the two years since have not obtained that evidence, it is extremely unlikely the court would find the defendants were aware of the leak at the time of sale. On the evidence before the court now, interpreted most favourably to the plaintiffs, the defendants were obliged to disclose not a potential leak but the fact of the repaired crack.

[para21] For the plaintiffs to succeed the court would therefore have to conclude that if the plaintiffs been advised "a foundation crack has been repaired and is not leaking" they would not have purchased the unit.

[para22] The facts the plaintiffs did not make any inquiry about previous repairs or risk of problems before purchase and did not commence this proceeding for rescission immediately upon learning of the leak and the crack, but only much later after the leak was repaired and when other parts of the complex deteriorated resulting in the special assessments mentioned above, indicates such a conclusion is not consistent with the plaintiffs' action, or rather inaction, in 1993 and 1995. In 1993 they sought no information about past problems in the unit or complex. In 1995 when they learned of the leak they were content to have it repaired at no cost to them.

[para23] The plaintiffs' counsel argued it would be unjust to decide the case without a trial at which the repairer might (or might not) give evidence which, even if it corresponded to the "best case" the plaintiffs could hope for, would not overcome their inability to prove that the alleged fraudulent mis-representation resulted in them purchasing the unit, that is that they would not have purchased it with knowledge of the repaired crack. Whatever the repairer told them, it did not move them to allege fraud when they learned of his opinion. Nor did they record or verify his advice in order to do so if repairs were ineffective.

[para24] I conclude the case can be decided on the basis of the affidavit and discovery evidence presently before the court, even if there might be more evidence favourable to the plaintiffs, since that evidence would not prove the damages alleged were a consequence of the alleged fraudulent misrepresentation.

[para25] Even if the expert's evidence proved the defendants knew of the repaired crack and that the repair would fail, since the crack was eventually repaired, at no cost to the plaintiffs before they resold the unit, the facts, at their most favourable to the plaintiffs, would not support the claim to rescission. Further, the special assessments and loss on resale are not damages in any way referable to the cracked foundation. They are referable to the deterioration of other parts of the complex after the defendants sold and which they cannot therefore have concealed.

[para26] To order this case to trial would simply expose the parties to further and unnecessary expense.

[para27] The action is dismissed. The defendants are entitled to costs on Scale 3.

Chung Hing Kok, Shun Ngan Kong, Samson Laser & Production Co. Ltd. and Simon Lam Tai Lam, plaintiffs, and The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 463, defendant

Vancouver Registry No. A980143

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Tysoe J. Heard: March 31, 1999. Judgment: filed April 21, 1999.

Counsel: Richard J. Olson, for the plaintiffs. Peggy M. Tugwood, for the defendant.

[para1] TYSOE J.-- The Plaintiffs apply by way of a Rule 18A summary trial for the relief claimed in the Statement of Claim. In short, the Plaintiffs seek a declaration that two bylaws of the Defendant are unenforceable or, alternatively, a declaration that the two bylaws have not been applied in accordance with their terms.

BACKGROUND FACTS

[para2] The Defendant is a strata corporation whose members are the owners of the strata lots which comprise a retail shopping centre in Richmond, B.C., known as Parker Place. The Plaintiffs, Chung Hing Kok and Shun Ngan Kong, are the owners of one of the strata lots in the centre (the "Plaintiffs' Unit" or the "Unit"). The Plaintiff, Samson Laser & Production Co. Ltd. ("Samson Laser"), is the lessee of the Unit and the Plaintiff, Simon Lam Tai Lam, is the guarantor of the lease.

[para3] At the times material to this action the Bylaws of the Defendant included a bylaw relating to a change in the usage of strata lots (the "Use Bylaw"), the relevant portion of which reads as follows: ... no owner or occupier of a strata lot shall change the nature of his business without first obtaining the written approval from the strata council. The strata council must promptly consider any request for 'change of use' and will base their decision on the following considerations:

1. (a) No owner or occupier of a strata lot shall be allowed to change the nature of his business to a business the primary nature of which is actively carried on in one or more strata lots in the same section of the shopping centre (definition of 'section below').

(b) Consideration #1a) above will be applicable in all cases except whereby all other shop owners of the same trade, in active operation, agree to the proposed change ...

[para4] Up until 1997 the Plaintiffs' Unit was used for the sale of Buddhist items. Although the materials are not explicit in this regard, I gather that Mr. Kok and his wife purchased the Unit at some point in the first few months of 1997 because there were requests for change of use approval made in January 1997 by a Mr. Wong who was identified in the correspondence as the owner of the Unit.

[para5] On January 3, 1997 Mr. Wong applied to change the use of the Unit to music CDs, audio equipment, accessories and computers. On January 11 Mr. Wong was advised that the Defendant's strata council (the "Strata Council" or the "Council") had approved the change to the sale of music CDs but not the sale of the other items. On January 12 Mr. Wong applied to change the use of the Unit to a book store and music shop. The Strata Council rejected Mr. Wong's application because the owner of another unit had objected on the basis that Mr. Wong's proposed use was similar to his unit's usage. Mr. Wong wrote to the mall manager on January 22 and, after referencing the approval to change the use to the sale of music CDs, he stated that the Unit would remain as a business selling Buddhist items until May 1 before the type of business would be changed.

[para6] On March 1 the owner of another unit (the "Competing Unit"), who had an authorized use of audio and video equipment and laser discs, applied to revise his use to include audio and video hardware and software, including music discs. The change or expansion of usage was approved by the Strata Council, which did not notify the owner of the Plaintiffs' Unit about the proposed change.

[para7] In April Mr. Kok, who had then become the owner of the Plaintiffs' Unit with his wife, applied to change the use of the Unit to the business of a travel agent. This change was approved by the Strata Council but Mr. Kok was not able to finalize a lease arrangement with the prospective tenant. On May 5 Mr. Kok wrote to the Strata Council cancelling the travel agency usage and applying to operate a candy store. The Council rejected the application because another owner objected on the basis of conflict of interest.

[para8] On June 25 Mr. Kok and his wife entered into an offer to lease with Samson Laser. On the same day Mr. Kok delivered to the office of the mall manager a letter from Samson Laser stating that it intended to sell music discs and software and gift items related to music.

[para9] On June 28 Mr. Kok was in attendance at a function took place on July 8 and the Council considered the change of and a member of the Strata Council. He asked the mall manager if the Council had approved the use of the Plaintiffs' Unit for the sale of music CDs and the mall manager responded that it should not be a problem but it still had to be considered by the Council. Mr. Kok has deposed that two days later he telephoned the member of the Strata Council who had overheard this conversation and that this person told him his application had been approved by the Council. The Defendant did not file any affidavit evidence from this member of the Strata Council but there had been no meeting of the Council between June 28 and June 30 at which Mr. Kok's application could have been approved.

[para10] Mr. Kok and his wife entered into a lease with Samson Laser on July 4. Samson Laser opened business selling music CDs on September 6 and has been carrying on this business to date.

[para11] The next regular meeting of the Strata Council use request for the Plaintiffs' Unit. Two days later the mall manager sent to the owner of the Competing Unit the usual form of letter which is sent to owners of other strata lots which carry products similar to the ones entailed in a change use of request. The letter stated that the consent of the owner of the Competing Unit was required for strata council consideration because the applicant for the change of use was proposing to carry products which are similar to the ones now carried in the Competing Unit. The owner of the Competing Unit responded to this letter by objecting to the change of use which involved software related to music. On July 19, the day after Mr. Kok wrote a letter to the Strata Council requesting a written reply to his application, the mall manager notified him that the application had been rejected.

[para12] On July 31 Mr. Kok made another request to change the use of the Plaintiffs' Unit to the sale of music CDs. The Strata Council reconsidered the matter at its next meeting on August 14 and confirmed its previous decision in view of the objection from the owner of the Competing Unit. Mr. Kok was notified again that his application was rejected.

[para13] When Samson Laser opened its business on September 6, the mall manager resorted to the bylaw relating to violations of the Defendant's Bylaws (the "Fine Bylaw"), which reads as follows:

Violation of By-Laws (Ref. Condominium Act Sec. 127)

An infraction of (sic) violation of the By-laws of LMS 463 or any of the Rules and Regulations established pursuant to these By-laws on the part of an owner, his employees, his agents, invitees or tenants, may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Strata Corporation, as follows:

- First Violation - warning letter;
- Second Violation - $50.00 fine;
- Further Violation - maximum $150.00 fine per occurrence.

Any costs or expenses so incurred by the Strata Corporation shall be charged to the owner. Such charges shall be immediately paid by owners.

[para14] The mall manager sent a warning letter to the Plaintiffs' Unit on September 6 and then sent letters levying daily fines for the rest of the month. He sent a new warning letter on the first day of each successive month and letters levying fines on the remaining days of each month. As at the end of February 1999 the fines total $75,465.11, inclusive of late payment charges. The Defendant has not attempted to exercise any other remedy to enforce compliance with the Use Bylaw.

[para15] Mr. Kok and his wife first took steps to terminate Samson Laser's tenancy. On October 9, 1997 Madam Justice D. Smith ordered Samson Laser to deliver up vacant possession of the Unit. After Samson Laser filed a notice of appeal and a notice of motion seeking a stay, the parties negotiated a settlement, one term of which was that the parties would jointly challenge the Defendant in connection with the change in use. This action was commenced in January 1998 and this Rule 18A summary trial was initiated by notice of motion dated December 18, 1998.

ISSUES

[para16] The Notice of Motion seeks the relief claimed in the Statement of Claim, which is as follows:

- a) a declaration that the Use Bylaw is ultra vires the Condominium Act [See Note 1 below] (the "Act");
- b) a declaration that the Use Bylaw is unenforceable as a restraint of trade;
- c) in the alternative, a declaration that the Defendant is estopped from enforcing the Use Bylaw;
- d) in the further alternative, a declaration that the Strata Council has applied irrelevant considerations in applying the Use Bylaw to the Plaintiffs;
- e) a declaration that the Fine Bylaw is ultra vires the Act;
- f) in the alternative, a declaration that the Fine Bylaw is unenforceable;
- g) in the further alternative, a declaration that the Fine Bylaw has not been applied by the Defendant in accordance with its terms;
- h) damages; and
- i) costs.

Note 1: Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 64.

[para17] Several things occurred at the hearing of the summary trial in relation to the issues to be decided. First, counsel agreed that the issue of damages was not before me. Second, counsel did not make submissions on costs and counsel for the Defendant asked that the matter of costs await my decision. Third, counsel for the Plaintiffs made a submission that the Court should relieve against the penal nature of the fines pursuant to s. 24 of the Law and Equity Act. [See Note 2 below] Fourth, I raised the point of whether an argument could be made that the Plaintiffs have not breached the Use Bylaw because the Strata Council did approve the change of use to the sale of CDs in January 1997 and there was no intervening change in use before the business was changed from the sale of Buddhist items to the sale of music CDs.

Note 2: Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253.

[para18] The first two points cause no difficulty and those issues may simply be deferred. I have concluded that as neither of the third or fourth points were pleaded, it would not be appropriate for me to deal with them in the absence of amendments to the Statement of Claim.

DISCUSSION

(a) Validity of the Use Bylaw

[para19] The Plaintiffs argue that the Use Bylaw is ultra vires the Act for the following reasons:

- a) it is not authorized by s. 26(1) of the Act;
- b) it is prohibited by s. 29 of the Act;
- c) it represents an unlawful delegation to the Strata Council.

[para20] Subsection 26(1) reads as follows:

A strata corporation must have bylaws providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation.

[para21] Counsel for the Plaintiffs makes two points about s. 26(1). First, he says that the section refers to strata lots in the plural and does not authorize bylaws in respect of the use of a single strata lot. Second, he says that the word "and" following the words "strata lots" is conjunctive and that the section only permits bylaws in respect of the use of strata lots in conjunction with the assets of the strata corporation. I do not find these arguments to be persuasive.

[para22] The Use Bylaw does affect the strata lots generally. It has not singled out one strata lot. It applies to all of the strata lots, although its application may affect the strata lots differently.

[para23] Further, it cannot be successfully maintained that the Legislature did not contemplate the imposition of a use restriction against a strata lot in view of s. 131(2) of the Act, which reads:

When the purpose for which a strata lot is intended to be used is shown expressly or by necessary implication on or by the registered strata plan, an owner must not use his or her strata lot for any other purpose, or permit it to be so used.

As the Legislature contemplated that the use of a strata lot can be restricted on the strata plan, it follows that the use of strata lots can similarly be restricted in the bylaws. Apart from the Plaintiffs' submission regarding s. 29, there is nothing in the Act to prevent it. The Defendant introduced evidence to the effect that it is usual for shopping centre leases to contain use clauses, both for the benefit of the landlord and the tenant, and this is also reflected in the authorities. [See Note 3 below] The Use Bylaw in the present case, which was passed by 75% of the owners who voted on the resolution, protects owners of strata lots from other owners starting a competing business. In my view, the Use Bylaw was passed for a legitimate purpose connected to the operation of strata lots as a shopping centre and there is no reason to construe s. 26(1) in a narrow fashion to detract from the plain and ordinary meaning of the words which allow for bylaws providing for the use of the strata lots.

Note 3: See, for example, Krahn Enterprises Ltd. v. Big Apple Imports Ltd., [1993] 1 W.W.R. 364 (Man. Q.B.) and the discussion in H.M. Haber, Landlord's Rights and Remedies in a Commercial Lease (Toronto: Canada Law Book Inc., 1996) at pp. 88 - 90.

[para24] If I were to accept that the word "and" is conjunctive, it would logically follow that the next "and" in the subsection (i.e., the one following the word "facilities") is also conjunctive and that would unduly restrict the meaning of the subsection. In my view, the "and" in question was intended to be disjunctive so that bylaws can deal separately with strata lots (as well as dealing separately with the common property, common facilities or other assets of the strata corporation).

[para25] The next argument of the Plaintiffs is that the Use Bylaw is prohibited by s. 29 which reads as follows:

Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate

- a) to prohibit or restrict
 - (i) a devolution of a strata lot, or
 - (ii) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot,
- (b) to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

The Plaintiffs say that the Use Bylaw restricts the use to which strata lots may be put and this constitutes a restriction on the devolution and the transferring, leasing and mortgaging of the strata lot.

[para26] In my view, s. 29 was not intended to prevent bylaws, which have been enacted for some other proper purpose, from incidentally having the effect of making a strata lot less desirable to some heirs, purchasers, lessees and mortgagees. Like many other features of a strata lot, a use bylaw may make the strata lot less desirable to some persons but more desirable to other persons. This does not constitute a prohibition or restriction on the devolution, transferring, leasing or mortgaging of the strata lot because the owner is still entitled to devise, transfer, lease or mortgage the strata lot to any other person.

[para27] In addition, there is no evidence demonstrating that the Use Bylaw restricts the devolution, transferring, leasing or mortgaging of any strata lot. In Marshall v. Strata Plan No. NW 2584, [See Note 4 below] the strata corporation passed a bylaw providing that only persons at least 55 years old could reside in the development. Henderson J. held that expert evidence was necessary to demonstrate that the age bylaw restricted the value of the strata lot and he declined to give effect to the argument.

Note 4: Marshall v. Strata Plan No. NW 2584 (1996), 27 B.C.L.R. (3d) 70 (B.C.S.C.).

[para28] The Plaintiffs' final argument regarding the validity of the Use Bylaw is that it represents a delegation of the power to regulate the use of strata lots to the Strata Council. They submit that there is no provision of the Act which permits a strata corporation to delegate the power to the strata council. However, it is my view that the Legislature clearly intended such a delegation. The Act provides that the bylaws of a strata corporation shall be the bylaws set out in Part 5 of the Act unless the strata corporation adopts other bylaws. Subsection 118(1), which is part of the Part 5 bylaws, reads as follows:

Subject to any restriction imposed or direction given at a general meeting, the powers and duties of the strata corporation must be exercised and performed by the council of the strata corporation.

In other words, the powers and duties of the strata corporation are delegated to its strata council pursuant to this bylaw (subject, of course, the members of the strata corporation being required to vote on any resolution required by the Act or the bylaws). Although the Defendant did not adopt the Part 5 bylaws, its Bylaws contain a provision virtually identical to s. 118(1). As contemplated by the Legislature, the powers and duties of the Defendant have been delegated to the Strata Council.

[para29] Before I leave this topic, I should mention that I was referred to the text Condominium Law & Practice in British Columbia, [See Note 5 below] in which the authors discuss use bylaws. They state that the commonly held view of s. 26(1) is that strata corporations may regulate land use through their bylaws but they then set forth five arguments against this commonly held view. Some of these arguments were utilized in whole or in part by the Plaintiffs. I have considered all of these arguments and none of them cause me to conclude that the commonly held view is wrong.

Note 5: Fairweather and Ramsay, Condominium Law & Practice in British Columbia (1998).

[para30] I hold that the Use Bylaw is intra vires the Act.

(b) Restraint of Trade

[para31] During his submissions, counsel for the Plaintiffs stated that he was not pressing his argument on this topic.

[para32] As I stated above, it is usual for shopping centre leases to contain use clauses and they have regularly been enforced by the courts. I refer only to the authority cited by counsel for the Defendant, Halifax-Dartmouth Bridge Commission v. Imperial Oil Ltd. [See Note 6 below]

Note 6: Halifax-Dartmouth Bridge Commission v. Imperial Oil Ltd. (1980), 14 R.P.R. 69 (N.S.S.C.).

[para33] The Plaintiffs argue that the current situation is different from a leased shopping centre where the property is owned by a landlord who may be presumed to wish to develop a thriving community. They say that this situation is more similar to owners of properties on a street who cannot control the use to which their neighbours put their properties.

[para35] The Use Bylaw does not constitute an improper restraint of trade.

(c) Estoppel

[para36] The Plaintiffs submit that the Defendant is estopped from enforcing the Use Bylaw because a member of the Strata Council told Mr. Kok that the Council had approved his application to change the use of the Plaintiffs' Unit to the sale of music CDs.

[para37] There are three flaws in this submission. First, Mr. Kok was not told by the Strata Council or its agent, the mall manager, that his application had been approved. He was allegedly told by a member of the Strata Council who did not have actual or ostensible authority to bind the Defendant. Second, the Use Bylaw provides that any change in use must be approved in writing and Mr. Kok was not advised in writing that his application had been approved. Mr. Kok was aware of this requirement because he wrote to the Strata Council on July 18 requesting a written reply. He would not have written this letter if he was relying on the statement allegedly made by the member of the Strata Council. Third, the lease which Mr. Kok and his wife entered into with Samson Laser provided that Samson Laser was responsible for obtaining all necessary approvals for its business, including any approval of the strata corporation. As Mr. Kok and his wife were not accepting responsibility to obtain the approval of the Strata Council for the use to which Samson Laser intended to put the Unit, they cannot be said to have relied on the oral representation in entering into the lease.

[para38] I find that the Defendant is not estopped from enforcing the Use Bylaw.

(d) Irrelevant Considerations

[para39] The Plaintiffs argue that the Defendant simply relied on another tenant voicing its objection to the proposed change in use and that this was not the proper consideration under the terms of the Use Bylaw.

[para40] There is no direct evidence of the discussion which took place at the meeting of the Strata Council on July 8, 1997 with respect to the Plaintiffs' Unit. However, the mall manager has deposed in his affidavit about the normal practice of the Defendant with respect to the Use Bylaw. He stated that no owner is allowed to change the nature of his business where the primary nature of the new business is actively carried on by another owner and that the standard form of letter is sent to competing owners.

[para41] In my view, the Plaintiffs have not proven on a balance of probabilities that the Defendant applied irrelevant considerations in applying the Use Bylaw in this case. The evidence is that the Strata Council considered Mr. Kok's request at its meeting held on July 8, 1997 and that the mall manager sent the standard form of letter to the owner of the Competing Unit on July 10, 1997. The owner of the Competing Unit did not provide his consent to Mr. Kok's proposed change in use and Mr. Kok's request was not approved.

[para42] Although it would be preferable for the wording of the standard form of letter to more closely conform to the wording of the Use Bylaw, the evidence does not establish that the Strata Council relied solely on an objection from another owner. The standard form of letter represents an inquiry under clause 1(b) of the Use Bylaw as to whether all other shop owners of the same trade are prepared to agree to the proposed change. The letter is sent out by the mall manager after the Strata Council has considered the change of use request.

[para43] The evidence does not disclose what was considered by the Strata Council at its July 8 meeting. The minutes of the meeting simply acknowledge receipt of the letter requesting approval to sell music related software and note that the Plaintiffs' Unit had been previously approved as a travel agent.

[para44] In the absence of any evidence that the Strata Council applied irrelevant considerations at its July 8 meeting, I cannot give effect to the Plaintiffs' submission in this regard. If it were necessary for me to draw inferences from the evidence available to me, I would conclude that the Strata Council did apply proper considerations. The letter to the owner of the Competing Unit was sent two days after the July 8 meeting. I would infer that having determined that the primary nature of the business proposed to be carried on at the Plaintiffs' Unit was actively carried on by the owner of the Competing Unit, the Strata Council decided that its approval could not be given unless the owner of the Competing Unit agreed to the proposed change.

(e) Validity of the Fine Bylaw

[para45] The Plaintiffs submit that the Fine Bylaw does not comply with s. 50 of the Act, which reads as follows:

If a strata corporation wishes to impose a fine of more than $25 for a breach of a bylaw, rule or regulation, it must amend the bylaws in Part 5 and the resolution must recite the bylaw, rule or regulation and the amount of the fine.

The Plaintiffs argue that the last phrase of s. 50 means that there cannot be a generic fine applicable to the breach of any bylaw. I agree with this argument.

[para46] Section 50 is very clear that a fine of more than $25 can only be imposed if the resolution amending the Part 5 bylaws recites the bylaw. If it were intended that the strata corporation could impose fines exceeding $25 without identifying the bylaw to which each such fine applies, the last phrase of s. 50 would be unnecessary and the section would have ended after the reference to "Part 5". Meaning must be given to these last words of s. 50, and the plain and ordinary meaning of the words is that the amending resolution must specify each bylaw to which a fine greater than $25 will apply.

[para47] I do not believe that the Legislature intended to allow strata corporations to impose blanket fines in excess of $25 without considering the differences in the bylaws. The seriousness of breaches of the bylaws will vary according to the nature of each bylaw, and one would think that the amount of the fine should be proportionate to the seriousness of the breach. In addition, breaches of bylaws can be isolated events or they can be continuing in nature, and one would think that this should be reflected in the imposition of the fine. It is my view that the Legislature intended to require the strata corporation to direct its mind to each bylaw when setting fines in excess of $25 and to set an appropriate fine depending on the seriousness and nature of the breach.

[para48] The Defendant relies on the decision in Lau v. Strata Corporation No. LMS 463, [See Note 7 below] a case which involved the Defendant and the very bylaw now under consideration. Taylor J. concluded that the strata corporation had the authority to impose fines under the Fine Bylaw. Although his Reasons for Judgment make passing reference to s. 50, it does not appear that any argument was made regarding the validity of the Fine Bylaw. I do not consider the Lau decision to be binding on me with respect to this point.

Note 7: Lau v. Strata Corporation No. LMS 463, [1996] B.C.J. No. 1728 (Q.L.) (B.C.S.C.).

[para49] I find that the Fine Bylaw does not comply with s. 50 of the Act and is ultra vires. (f) Enforceability of the Fine Bylaw

[para50] The Plaintiffs did not make a separate argument under this topic. Included as part of the written submission under the previous heading was a one sentence argument that there are no words in the Fine Bylaw that make an owner liable to a fine. The Fine Bylaw does state that the costs or expenses are to be charged to the owner and this raises the issue of whether the fines constitute such costs or expenses. I will deal further with this point under the next heading.

[para51] Having already concluded that the Fine Bylaw is ultra vires and without the benefit of additional submissions, I make no further determination as to the enforceability of the Fine Bylaw.

(g) Fine Bylaw Not Properly Applied

[para52] The Plaintiffs argue that the Fine Bylaw does not authorize daily fines and that the only occurrence of a breach was when the use of the Plaintiff's Unit changed on September 6, 1997 without the approval of the Strata Council. This submission is contrary to the decision of Taylor J. in the Lau case, which I consider to be binding on me in this regard.

[para53] However, there is another problem with the Fine Bylaw which was not argued in the Lau case. For ease of reference, I will repeat the wording of the Fine Bylaw:

Violation of By-Laws (Ref. Condominium Act Sec. 127)

An infraction of (sic) violation of the By-laws of LMS 463 or any of the Rules and Regulations established pursuant to these By-laws on the part of an owner, his employees, his agents, invitees or tenants, may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Strata Corporation, as follows:

- First Violation - warning letter;
- Second Violation - $50.00 fine;
- Further Violation - maximum $150.00 fine per occurrence.

Any costs or expenses so incurred by the Strata Corporation shall be charged to the owner. Such charges shall be immediately paid by owners.

The heading of the Fine Bylaw references s. 127, not s. 50. Subsections (1) and (2) of s. 127, which are part of the Part 5 bylaws, read as follows:

1) An infraction or violation of these bylaws or any rules and regulations established under them on the part of an owner, the owner's employees, agents, invitees or tenants may be corrected, remedied or cured the strata corporation.

2) Any costs or expense incurred under subsection (1) by the corporation

(a) must be charged to that owner, and

(b) must be added to and become a part of the assessment of that owner for the month next following the date on which the costs or expenses are incurred, but not necessarily paid by the corporation, and become due and payable on the date of payment of the monthly assessment.

[para54] It appears that the Fine Bylaw is an attempt to combine a resolution required under s. 50 and a replacement of the model bylaw represented by s. 127. The problem which arises is that s. 50 and the s. 127 bylaw address two totally different things. Section 50 deals with fines and the s. 127 bylaw deals with the costs incurred by the strata corporation to correct, remedy or cure a violation of the bylaws. Section 50 is penal in nature to discourage violations, while the s. 127 bylaw is intended to reimburse the strata corporation for the costs which it incurs. Each has a different objective and cannot be combined with the other.

[para55] I return to the wording of the Fine Bylaw. It first states that a violation of the Defendant's Bylaws may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Defendant. Thereafter follows fines in respect of second and further violations. It concludes with the phrase that any "costs so incurred by the Strata Corporation shall be charged to the owner". However, there is no evidence that the Defendant incurred any costs to correct, remedy or cure the violation of the Use Bylaw by the Plaintiffs. The amounts which were purportedly assessed as fines were not incurred by the Defendant. The imposition of fines does not serve to correct, remedy or cure violations of the Bylaws but, rather, their purpose is to discourage violations of the Bylaws.

[para56] I conclude that the Fine Bylaw has not been applied in accordance with its terms because the Defendant has not incurred the costs which have been charged to Mr. Kok and his wife as fines and the fines do not serve to correct, remedy or cure any violation of the Bylaws.

CONCLUSION

[para57] My conclusions regarding the relief claimed in the Statement of Claim (other than the issues of damages and costs) are as follows:

a) the Use Bylaw is not ultra vires the Act;

b) the Use Bylaw is not unenforceable as a restraint of trade; c) the Defendant is not estopped from enforcing the Use Bylaw;

d) it has not been proven on a balance of probabilities that the Strata Council applied irrelevant considerations in applying the Use Bylaw to the Plaintiffs;

e) the Fine Bylaw is ultra vires the Act;

f) no further determination is made with respect to the enforceability of the Fine Bylaw;

g) if it is valid and enforceable, the Fine Bylaw was not applied in accordance with its terms.

[para58] Counsel may make arrangements through Trial Division for a hearing in respect of the costs of this summary trial or, if both counsel are agreeable, submissions on costs may be made in writing directed through Trial Division.

SATANOVE J.:-

INTRODUCTION

[para1] This lawsuit involved two actions which were heard together. They both arose out of the partial construction of a phased condominium project known as Farrington Cove. Farrington Cove is located near Pender Harbour on the Sunshine Coast.

[para2] In action A953088 the contractor Astro Contracting Ltd. ("Astro") claimed against the owner, Farrington Cove Properties Ltd. ("Farrington Co.") for money owing under two construction contracts, one of which was the subject of a builders lien filed by the plaintiff on July 26, 1995. By way of counterclaim Farrington Co. sought a set-off against the amounts claimed by the plaintiff, and damages for incomplete work, deficient work, double billing and over charging. The defendant's pleadings also sought damages for a breach of fiduciary duty and judgment against Mr. Keim personally.

[para3] In action C961116 the principal of Astro, Mr. Keim, together with his wife and Astro, claimed against Farrington Co. for failing to complete the sale to them of one of the units in Farrington Co. The defendant denied any binding agreement to sell the unit and in the alternative, sought to keep the deposit.

ACTION NUMBER A953088

[para4] In 1989 Farrington Cove was a 15 acre property with minimal development. George Magnus, an Englishman residing in Hong Kong with a summer home in British Columbia introduced the property to Mr. Hamilton Ho, a Hong Kong resident and investor. Mr. Ho bought and held the property in condominium units in phases with a view to targeting wealthy using the name of Farrington Co. Mr. Ho wanted to build 100 Hong Kong or Vancouver residents as potential purchasers.

[para5] Mr. Magnus introduced Mr. Ho to Mr. Keim who had built Mr. Magnus' home on Pearson Island. Mr. Ho retained Mr. Keim's company Astro to construct the project.

[para6] At all times Mr. Magnus was the liaison or intermediary between Mr. Keim and Mr. Ho. Mr. Keim only met with Mr. Ho on two occasions. The agreements reached between the defendant and the plaintiff were negotiated through Mr. Magnus. Although Mr. Keim sent documents directly to Mr. Ho, Mr. Magnus testified that they were reviewed by him and discussed between Mr. Ho and him before Mr. Magnus replied.

[para7] Mr. Ho did not testify and the defendant did not seriously contest that Mr. Magnus was the defendant's agent from 1989 to 1995. I find that whatever arrangements or statements were made by Mr. Magnus during this time were binding on the defendant.

[para9] Two site plans were tendered into evidence: the one shown on the front cover of the Jensen Surveying & Engineering Ltd. ("Jensen") infrastructure design drawings, and the one prepared by Mr. Yurick and dated July 23, 1990.

[para10] There was a dispute about which site plan superseded the other, but I find that it was clear on the evidence that the site plan on the Jensen drawings preceded Mr. Yurick's drawing. The site plan used by Jensen in its key plan appears in drawings dated February, 1990 and shows building orientation and road alignments which were subsequently changed and reflected to some extent in the Yurick drawing. The phase 3 drawings which were certified by the structural engineers on April 23, 1993 show a site plan similar to the Yurick drawing, not the Jensen drawings.

[para11] It is important to note that at this stage Mr. Ho had a style of project in mind that he was trying to develop. His model was "Isola Bella", a condominium complex in Hong Kong in which Mr. Ho owned a unit. I mention this because when Farrington Co. was purchased by Tangran Developments Ltd. ("Tangran") in 1995, the new owners had quite different ideas about the type of complex which would be suitable for the property and their marketing concept. In many respects, this difference in vision lay at the heart of the dispute and it was necessary to analyze the defendant's counterclaim for defects and deficiencies in this context.

[para12] Quotes were provided by the plaintiff for various aspects of the work. Prices were negotiated and fixed for the following services, each of which were the subject of a separate quotation and letter to the defendant:

1. site preparation; 2. seawall construction and backfilling; 3. surplus materials; 4. grading; 5. peninsula road; 6. clearing and excavation; 7. excavation for relocating road; 8. clearing and burning; 9. infrastructure; 10. retaining wall and foundations; 11. villas 1, 2, 5 & 6; 12. villas 3 & 4; 13. retaining wall and foundations for units 7 - 14; 14. completion of unit 2; 15. completion through dry wall of units 1 & 5; 16. foundations for units 51 - 54; and 17. construction of units 7 - 14.

[para13] Other services were agreed to be done for cost plus a 15 percent fee.

[para14] Work was done by the plaintiff from November, 1989 to January, 1995. The defendant was always slow in paying its accounts but by November, 1994 it was seriously delinquent and after January, 1995 it stopped paying altogether.

[para15] The defendant's refusal to pay in 1995 was not explained or justified to the plaintiff at the time. Later Mr. Keim learned that Mr. Ho was in the process of selling the project to another developer.

[para16] Mr. Magnus was asked to cease his involvement in early 1995. Before he did he strongly advised Mr. Ho to pay the outstanding accounts to Mr. Keim as they were legitimately owing.

[para17] In the meantime the Keims had to obtain a high interest mortgage over their home in order to pay their sub-trades. Ultimately their home was sold to discharge the mortgage.

[para19] The plaintiff cooperated with the requests for information until a request was made for Astro's financial records relating to its fixed price contracts. Astro refused to release these, taking the position that the defendant was not entitled to them.

[para20] In July, 1995 Astro filed its builders lien for $217,374.44. In August, 1995 Astro was dismissed from the project. In September, 1995 it started this action and in November, 1995 the defendant filed its counterclaim.

[para21] Although the pleadings disclosed numerous issues between the parties, many of these had paled by the end of trial.

[para22] The defendant had pleaded that both Mr. Keim and Astro were liable for breach of fiduciary duty to the defendant. Despite the able submissions of counsel I found no duty or relationship to have existed between Mr. Keim or Astro and Mr. Ho other than the usual duty and relationship that existed between a general contractor and an owner. The fact that Mr. Ho was an off-shore businessman of little experience in construction did not create the special relationship required to invoke a fiduciary duty. [para23] In any event I found Mr. Ho relied on others such as Mr. Magnus, Mr. Alexander (an engineer) and Mr. Ho's employees in his San Francisco office to assist him in trying to develop a profitable project. Astro was retained for its construction expertise, not as a project manager. Astro was not responsible for the financing, profit projections, or marketing of the project.

[para24] Astro was hired to perform discrete services which I have listed earlier. These services were the subject of separate contracts which, while not in standard form, were contained in writing in the form of letters from the plaintiff to the defendant.

[para25] The terms of these contracts, both express and implied, were largely undisputed by the parties. Pursuant to the contract to construct units 7 - 14 the plaintiff was prima facie entitled to its builders lien for the amount claimed, and pursuant to the infrastructure contract the plaintiff was prima facie entitled to $66,000 for the balance of the fixed price plus GST. The plaintiff conceded that $46,481.95 should be deducted from these amounts for accounting errors. The other accounting errors alleged by the defendant were unsubstantiated on the evidence.

[para26] The real issues were whether any of the contracts were breached by the plaintiff, and the extent to which the defendant was entitled to set off against the amounts owing to the plaintiff any damages caused to the defendant.

[para27] Specifically:

1. Did the plaintiff breach the infrastructure contract by:

a) failing to build the infrastructure in a proper and workmanlike manner? b) failing to build the infrastructure in accordance with plans and other directions provided by the appropriate engineering professionals? and c) failure to obtain the required approvals and certifications?

2. Did the plaintiff breach the contracts to construct units 1 - 6 by failing to complete or build them in a good, workmanlike manner with materials that were reasonably fit for their purpose?

3. Did the plaintiff overcharge for the value of completed work under the retaining wall contracts and the contract to construct units 7 - 14?

4. Did the plaintiff double bill the defendant by charging as extras certain items which were included in the fixed price contracts?

a) The Infrastructure Contract

[para28] Mr. Keim testified that by the time of termination of the plaintiff's services, all infrastructure set out in the letter agreement of August 1, 1990 had been completed except for the installation of two concrete castings for the underground hydro works which could not be done until the nearby road had been completed.

[para29] It was common ground that whatever was built by the plaintiff as infrastructure was not in accordance with the blueprinted, allegedly final design drawings of Jensen, the engineers which were hired by the plaintiff to design the infrastructure.

[para30] The issue was whether these drawings (exhibit 40) were issued to the plaintiff for construction purposes or whether he was told by the engineers to use a single sketch, exhibit 15, as a guide for construction and to make field changes as appropriate.

[para31] Much evidence was led about which plans were issued when and which plans were actually used by the plaintiff in construction. On examination for discovery Mr. Keim conceded that exhibit 40 was the set of infrastructure plans that was approved by the Sunshine Coast Regional District ("SCRD") and the Ministry of Transportation and Highways ("MOTH") and that he was supposed to adhere to it. Elsewhere in his examination for discovery he alluded to changes made by the engineers on a separate drawing given to him for construction purposes. This drawing was not produced at the discovery and was not disclosed on a list of documents until May, 1997.

[para32] At trial the plaintiff denied ever receiving exhibit 40. He said he received exhibit 16, the predecessor to exhibit 40. It was undisputed that exhibit 16 was merely a set of preliminary drawings not to be used for construction purposes.

[para33] A peculiar aspect about exhibit 40 was that it was based on the same key plan and site layout as appeared in exhibit 16. Exhibit 16 was prepared in February, 1990 and by the time the infrastructure contract was entered into, the site plan had been revised substantially.

[para34] Mr. Jensen explained that as a design evolved and revisions were made to meet approval with the governing bodies, new original drawings were not usually prepared because of the expense. Instead blueprints of the original design were modified to reflect the revisions. Therefore, it was not surprising to him that the front cover and key plan of exhibit 40 still showed the old site layout.

[para35] Another peculiar aspect of the plans was that exhibit 40 was not signed nor sealed by Jensen, nor stamped "for construction", nor marked with the approvals of MOTH, Garden Bay Waterworks or SCRD.

[para36] This latter point is important because it was unclear from the evidence what parts of the infrastructure as designed (not as built) did receive approval. Part of the source of confusion was that Mr. Wong, the project engineer employed by Jensen, did not testify. Mr. Jensen's evidence was largely a reconstruction of events based on Mr. Wong's file.

[para37] The documents indicated that some approvals were received after the fact. For example the sewage disposal system design of West and Associates was approved by B.C. Environment, Waste Management Branch on July 20, 1993. The Provincial Electrical Inspector approved the electrical work and B.C. Hydro approved the power lines. The geotechnical, structural and mechanical engineers accepted the work in place. However, the watermain was not certified by Jensen and was never approved by Garden Bay Waterworks. Only a portion of the sanitary pipeworks to the treatment plant were certified by Jensen.

[para38] In conclusion, I cannot find that exhibit 40 contained the final design drawings for the infrastructure. However, this does not assist the plaintiff very much because it agreed to build the infrastructure in accordance with approved plans and specifications. It appeared to have constructed the infrastructure before any final plans were approved by MOTH or Garden Bay Waterworks.

[para40] Mr. Panzer also itemized a number of deficiencies in the sewer and drainage systems, waterworks and roads.

[para41] In most respects Mr. Panzer was a reasonable expert witness who answered questions directly and qualified his estimates as preliminary when appropriate.

[para43] Mr. Christopher Ho (no relation to Mr. Hamilton Ho) confirmed in his testimony that the defendant had created a new site plan, exhibit 45. The configuration of the roads had changed and 31 multi-family units were planned along with single detached family cottages. The putting green and swimming pools had been removed.

[para45] The plaintiff's main claim was for breach of contract in that it failed to receive an infrastructure which had been approved by MOTH and Garden Bay Waterworks. Mr. Ho testified that the defendant could not receive approval from MOTH for the entrance way built by the plaintiff. There was no evidence that the waterworks ever received approval either.

[para46] Considering all the evidence on a balance of probabilities, I find that the plaintiff was in breach of the infrastructure contract in that it failed to construct the infrastructure according to a design which had been or could have been approved by the appropriate authorities. I further find that this was a fundamental breach of the infrastructure contract and that the defendant was entitled to terminate the infrastructure contract in August, 1995.

[para48] In addition, the defendant was entitled to be put into the same position it would have been if the plaintiff had carried out the infrastructure contract properly. Mr. Panzer estimated that the cost of changing the entrance way to meet MOTH approval was $60,000. He estimated that $77,500 would be required to rectify the bends in pipe, rock protrusions and to build a constant slope structure.

[para49] The defendant also claimed $20,000 for individual unit connections but I do not find that the infrastructure contract called for these. Mr. Keim always billed these as an extra and they were paid for as an extra.

[para50] I allow the defendant's claim for defects and deficiencies in the infrastructure contract at $137,500.

[para51] The defendant also claimed for the failure to complete work which had been billed and paid for under the infrastructure contract. This work was itemized as roads, curbs, sanitary sewers, forced sanitary, manholes, force main pump, watermain, service connection, tees, bends, storm drainage, ditching, telephone and cable. The value of this incomplete work was assessed by Mr. Murray, a quantity surveyor, at $282,000. The defendant conceded $50,000 of this was not paid under the infrastructure contract and therefore it claimed $232,000.

[para52] There were two major problems with this claim. Firstly, a number of the items did not form part of the fixed price infrastructure contract, such as the spur roads and service connections.

[para53] Secondly, Mr. Murray's calculations were not trustworthy and his opinions appeared tainted with bias.

[para54] Mr. Murray's report was prepared for the defendant in June, 1995 shortly after the defendant took over Farrington Co. Mr. Murray's mandate was to look for overcharging and double billing without telling Mr. Keim.

[para55] The tone of his report matched his mandate. He implied that Mr. Keim grossly over billed and double billed but at trial said he was unable to prove this and that the billing discrepancies he did find did not suggest dishonesty on Mr. Keim's part.

[para56] He said the opinions in his report were his but the measurements and calculations were done by a quantity surveyor in training. He said he checked the trainees work, then later said he did not check all of it.

[para57] In his report he said the February, 1990 drawings were approved by the municipality. In cross examination he said he did not know where this information came from.

[para58] In his report Mr. Murray said the credit provided by the plaintiff for lumber removed from the site was "probably low". In cross examination he said he did not know how much lumber had been removed or what price had been received. He finally admitted he had no facts on which to base this part of his opinion.

[para59] At trial Mr. Murray appeared very confused by which drawings he received and when. This was eventually sorted out and he admitted that he was given a revised site plan by the defendant (exhibit 41) but used it only to check the phasing of the project.

[para60] At page 10 of his report Mr. Murray said $90,000 worth of work was outstanding on the sanitary sewers, but his itemization of that work only amounted to $79,000. He estimated $16,000 for curbs but appendix C showed the figure of $13,760.40. He recommended allowances of $54,000, $20,000 and $50,000 for completing excavation, storm lines and ditching but then said it was not possible to measure the extent of the work which was required.

[para61] Mr. Murray did not bring his working papers to court so the complete calculations in the appendices to his report could not be checked by the plaintiff. However, in my view the plaintiff successfully challenged a sufficient number of Mr. Murray's calculations and conclusions to make me lose confidence in his report and opinions. He "short changed" the value of the work completed by the plaintiff with respect to the retaining walls and construction of units 7 - 14 by using incorrect measurements and lower rates for the completed work.

[para62] In my opinion it would be unsafe to rely on Mr. Murray's opinion of the state of completion of work, or the value of completed work, or the state of deficiencies in the completed work.

[para63] The only reliable evidence with respect to breach of the infrastructure contract was found in Mr. Panzer's report.

[para64] I conclude that the extent of the damage suffered by the defendant for breach of the infrastructure contract should be set at $137,500.

b) The Contract for Construction of Units 1 - 6

[para65] The fixed price for this contract was $710,000 plus GST. When the plaintiff's contract was terminated, units 2, 3 & 4 had been completed and units 1, 5 & 6 had been completed to the drywall and insulation stage. Even Mr. Murray took no real issue with the extent of the completed work.

[para66] The defendant's complaint was that the construction of these units was so deficient it was less expensive to demolish the units than repair them. I am also cognizant of the fact that the new ownership preferred to start again with a different design and style of residences for the property.

[para67] The defendant relied on a report of Mr. Wandling and Mr. Elias dated August 7, 1997 which itemized the deficiencies they found on their inspection of units 1 - 6 in August, 1997, two years after the plaintiff left the site. The general character of these deficiencies was leakage and water damage.

[para69] Based on the evidence before me the defendant has made out its claim for $50,423.79 for the demolition cost of units 1 - 6. c) Retaining Walls and Construction of Units 7 - 14

[para70] The defendant claimed that the plaintiff overcharged for work on the retaining walls by $77,665, work on units 1 - 6 by $8,300 and work on units 7 - 14 by $178,600 for a total of $264,565.

[para71] There were two flaws in this claim. Firstly, the defendant relied on the opinions of Mr. Murray contained in his report of June, 1995 and I have found this report to be unreliable.

[para72] Secondly, the nature of the contracts between the plaintiff and defendant were for a fixed price. If the actual value of the work was less than the contract price, then the plaintiff had negotiated a profitable contract. The court will not interfere with a commercial contract negotiated by two experienced businessmen of similar bargaining positions.

[para73] The only time the value of the work in place becomes relevant is if the breach by the plaintiff was so serious that the defendant was entitled to treat the contract as at an end. (Angus v. Pinalski, supra, and R.F.M. Electric Ltd. v. University of British Columbia, supra.)

[para74] The contracts at issue in this part of the defendant's counterclaim were substantially completed and the defendant was not claiming for any deficiencies in the work. I cannot find any fundamental breach of the retaining wall or unit 7 - 14 contracts up to the time these contracts were terminated by the defendant in August, 1995.

[para75] Therefore the defendant was not entitled to claim the difference between actual value of the work completed and the amount invoiced and even if it were, I would not have accepted Mr. Murray's evidence of value.

d) Double billing

[para76] The defendant provided me with a chart which compared invoices for certain work which were rendered under fixed price contracts with invoices allegedly for the same work which were rendered on a cost plus basis.

[para77] The plaintiff tendered evidence to dispute only two of these invoices. I accept Mr. Keim's explanation that $13,105 was incurred as an extra for seawall stabilization because the geotechnical engineer required additional work after the seawall construction had been completed according to plan and according to the letter agreement of February 9, 1990.

[para78] I also accept the plaintiff's submission that it never charged a 15 percent fee for the labour provided by the plaintiff itself. This was evidenced by the Summaries of Extra Costs which formed part of exhibit 13 at tabs 31 and 33.

[para79] The plaintiff conceded the double billing of the guest parking lot paving and this amount of $16,810.77 was already included in the $46,481.95 it had conceded for accounting mistakes.

[para80] The remainder of the double charges which were claimed was not disputed by the plaintiff, in evidence or in submissions, and therefore I find that the defendant is entitled to the sum of $49,063.59 as a further set off against the plaintiff's claim.

ACTION NUMBER C961116

[para81] The plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Keim and Astro pleaded that they had made an oral agreement in August, 1994 with the defendant through Mr. Magnus for the purchase of unit 6. Unit 6 was partially completed and the price was to be $50,000. The completion date was to be the earlier of December 31, 1995 or on completion of the phase 1 stratification.

[para82] The evidence at trial did not prove on a balance of probabilities that the plaintiffs had a binding and enforceable contract for the purchase of unit 6.

[para83] Mr. Keim testified that he discussed taking one of the units himself at the beginning of the project. In July, 1994 Mr. Keim told Mr. Magnus that he wanted unit 6 for a summer home and retirement. He told Mr. Magnus that he had done lots of extra work for which he had not been paid and that it would be a good idea to have him living on site during the rest of the phases. Mr. Magnus discussed it with Mr. Ho and advised Mr. Keim that he could have a unit but that he would have to pay $50,000 for the cost of the shell. He would have until December, 1995 to pay and the $50,000 would be deducted from invoices rendered by Astro to the defendant.

[para84] Mr. Keim said as a result of this agreement he proceeded to finish unit 6 and spent $49,329.66 on finishing it. By way of credit on an invoice dated December 1, 1994 Astro paid $25,000 towards the down payment.

[para85] Mr. Keim's evidence was contradicted in a number of ways:

a) On cross examination Mr. Magnus said he could not recall when the deal was to complete and that no date for the payment of the balance of $25,000 was agreed. b) Mr. Keim said on his examination for discovery that the contract was not made until after September, 1994. c) Mr. Keim's solicitors wrote to the defendant's solicitors demanding that the deal complete by October 31, 1995. There was no mention in the letter of the completion date of December 31, 1995. d) The parties to the contract were always alleged to be Mr. and Mrs. Keim. In September, 1998 the plaintiffs' amended their statement of claim to add Astro as a party to the contract. e) The total value of unit 6 as of August, 1994 was in excess of $200,000.

[para86] In order to find any enforceable contract, there must be certainty of terms. It was questionable on the evidence whether the Keims and/or Astro were parties to the alleged contract. It also was not clear whether $50,000 was the price or a mere down payment. The alleged consideration included work for which the plaintiff never charged, but Mr. Keim's evidence as to the nature of this work was very vague. The date for completion was not established on the evidence.

[para87] Further, in order to enforce a contract for the sale of land, the contract must be in writing or partly performed. It was common ground that there was no written agreement for unit 6, but the plaintiffs relied on a notation on an invoice that $25,000 was being deducted as payment toward unit 6.

[para88] I accept the Keim's evidence that they thought they had a deal to purchase unit 6 and that they consequently caused Astro to make a down payment of $25,000 and to expend a further sum towards finishing the unit for which Astro was not reimbursed by the defendant. Unfortunately, the evidence was insufficient to establish the necessary consensus ad idem between the parties or the certainty of terms required to find a legal contract.

[para89] Nonetheless it would result in an unjust enrichment of the defendant if I did not order it to return the deposit monies of $25,000 and to reimburse Astro for the $49,329.66 labour and materials it expended on the unit without compensation. Astro acted to its detriment through the Keim's belief that they had a contract. Although unit 6 was ultimately demolished, the defendant was still enriched at the time the plaintiffs made the improvements, without juristic reason. (Pettkus v. Becker, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 834 (S.C.C.))

[para90] The plaintiff Astro shall have judgment in this action against the defendant for $74,329.66.

CONCLUSION [para91] I find that Astro is entitled to judgment and a declaration of builders lien in the sum of $217,374.44. I find that Astro is also entitled to a judgment against the defendant for $74,329.66.

[para92] I find that the defendant is entitled under its counterclaim to judgment against Astro for:

$137,500.00 breach of the infrastructure contract $ 50,423.79 breach of the units 1 - 6 contract $49,063.59 double billing $46,481.95 mistaken accounting ----- $283,469.33 TOTAL

[para93] Although the plaintiff's judgment slightly exceeded the amount awarded to the defendant, success was more or less equally divided. Under the circumstances it would be appropriate for each party to bear its own costs.

Robert Blair Hewitt, plaintiff, and Strata Corporation N.W. 1282, defendant

Chilliwack Registry No. S0006408

British Columbia Supreme Court Chilliwack, British Columbia McKinnon J. Heard: March 24 and 27, 1997. Judgment: filed May 13, 1997.

Counsel: D.D.E. Lacusta, for the plaintiff. D. Stander, for the defendant.

[para1] McKINNON J.:-- The plaintiff applies pursuant t R. 18A for judgment against the defendant strata corporation in the sum of $10,896.04 which amount represents fines and assessments made against him by the corporation. This amount was paid to the defendant "under protest" upon sale of the plaintiff's unit in August, 1996. The plaintiff also seeks an order that the defendant produce legal accounts billed to the defendant by its solicitor, which is part of the sum assessed.

[para2] The plaintiff was a resident and owner of a strata unit in the defendant's complex from June, 1993 to August, 1996. In 1994, the council imposed fines totalling $1,300 for alleged breach of various bylaws ranging from having an unleashed dog to "damaging the reputation of the strata."

[para3] The defendant also commenced action in November, 1995 for defamation consequent upon the plaintiff's refusal to apologize for alleged remarks said to be injurious to the reputation of the complex.

[para4] Costs of the defamation action of $6,398, incurred by the council, were added to the defendant's assessment pursuant to s. 13(2) of the Strata Bylaws.

[para5] A certificate of default in the sum of $7,698 was filed against Mr. Hewitt's unit in July, 1995 and a formal demand for payment was made the following January. Having received no response, the council proceeded to enforce payment with a petition, at which point Mr. Hewitt retained counsel.

[para6] A cross-petition was filed alleging irregularities in the assessment of the penalties. The strata council ultimately accepted that procedural fairness had not occurred in that Mr. Hewitt had not been given notice that penalties could be assessed and imposed at the council meeting. Settlement discussions occurred between counsel, then with Mr. Hewitt directly when his counsel ceased to act.

[para7] An agreement was eventually reached whereby the petition and cross-petition would be dismissed and the lien withdrawn from the plaintiff's unit. There is disagreement as to what was intended by this agreement and specifically whether the council had the right to "reintroduce" the penalties subsequently after proper notice to Mr. Hewitt. I consider that issue resolved by the clear wording employed by Mr. Hewitt in returning the discontinuance notice. On October 20, 1995 he returned the endorsed notice with the following covering letter:

Dear Mr. Stander;

The attached Notice of Discontinuance is delivered to you today for filing in accordance with the Settlement agreed to on Oct. 11.

The terms of the settlement are:

1. The Strata Council discontinues it's petition against me.
2. I discontinue my cross-application against the Strata Council.
3. The Strata Council withdraws its fines and ensures that any future fines are levied only after proper notice to me, in accordance with the case authorities which Mr. Maddock, has argued are applicable to the Strata Corporation's business.

Each party discontinues this proceeding against the other party without costs to either party.

Sincerely,

R. Blair Hewitt, B.A.

[para8] That letter and discontinuance reflected the position of defendant's counsel that among other things provided that: "our client would withdraw the current fines, and ensure that ANY FUTURE FINES ARE LEVIED ONLY AFTER PROPER NOTICE TO YOU, [my emphasis] in accordance with the case authorities which Mr. Maddock has argued are applicable to this Strata Corporation's business."

[para9] Mr. Casey Langbroek, manager of the Strata, deposed that the noted resolution was purely to correct the procedural irregularity with no intent whatever to abandon the substantive issues. Indeed the defamation action remained extant. On October 30, 1995 Mr. Hewitt was given written notice of a Strata meeting to be held November 3, 1995 to discuss issues. [para10] The plaintiff failed to attend the November 3, meeting at which it was determined the fines and legal fees previously assessed should be reconsidered and a further meeting for that purpose was scheduled for November 10. In a letter to Mr. Hewitt dated November 6, he was specifically informed that the meeting on November 10 would consider fines and costs of $10,091.04. The November 3 minutes were also enclosed and he was urged to attend.

[para11] The plaintiff failed to attend and the figures earlier provided to him were then assessed and he was so advised in a letter dated November 16, 1995. He and his counsel (involved for part of the proceedings) both deposed that they considered the discontinuance as precluding further action for these sums. I am unable to accept that Mr. Hewitt could have reasonably held that view.

[para12] Mr. C. Maddock, acting on a limited retainer, negotiated discussion and potential resolution. On October 11, 1995 he instructed counsel for the defendant that Mr. Hewitt would settle if:

1. the Strata Corporation will CANCEL [my emphasis] all fines;
2. you will attend upon removal of the lien filed pursuant to Section 37(3) of the Condominium Act;
3. you will discontinue this proceeding, without costs;
4. Mr. Hewitt will discontinue his cross-application, without costs.

[para13] Mr. Stander, for the Strata council, responded with the letter referred to above which does not accept these terms and specifically rejects "cancellation" of fines. There is nothing sharp or misleading about Mr. Stander's response. He clearly sets out that the council retained the right to proceed with fines, "after proper notice...."

[para14] Mr. Maddock obviously was thinking of the terms in his letter and not those ultimately concluded between Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Stander, when he suggested to Mr. Hewitt that he need not attend the council meeting. There is nothing whatever in the resolution that suggests a "release" and give the explicit language contained about the possibility of future claims, there is nothing that Mr. Hewitt could reasonably have concluded as equating to a release.

[para15] Possibly Mr. Hewitt misconstrued the wording of Mr. Stander's letter to him dated October 11, 1995 which contains the phrase, "The settlement offer which you refer to is the same offer made TO [my emphasis] Chris Maddock...." It may be that Mr. Hewitt read that but inserted in his mind the word "BY" and thus came to believe he was dealing with his former lawyer's proposal. The settlement offer made BY Mr. Maddock was, however, clearly rejected by Mr. Stander. That is the most charitable view I could take of Mr. Hewitt's position which in any event does not advance his cause. His confirming letter to Mr. Stander suggests to me that he well knew there would be no "cancellation."

[para16] Mr. Hewitt was given the opportunity to contest the allegations of continuing misconduct and might well have persuaded the council in that regard had he attended the meeting, or had he sent a representative. He chose instead to rely upon the discontinuance which cannot under any reasonable interpretation be considered a "release." In the result, find the council was entitled to assess the fines in accordance with the Act but it remains to consider whether the assessment of legal fees relative to the defamation action are so authorized.

[para18] The defendant argues that given the particular provisions of the Condominium Act, it is entitled to assess Mr. Hewitt for its legal costs in prosecuting him for defamation, regardless of the ultimate trial outcome. It is akin to requiring a party to pay the ongoing legal costs of the other side before Court resolution. That is certainly an unusual proposition that would have to be clearly legislated.

[para19] If I understand the defendant's position, it claims that s. 127 of the Act is authority for the imposition and collection of the legal costs associated with the as yet unresolved defamation action. That section reads:

127. (1) An infraction or violation of these bylaws or any rules and regulations established under them on the part of an owner, his employees, agents, invitees or tenants may be corrected, remedied or cured by the strata corporation. ANY COSTS OR EXPENSE SO INCURRED BY THE CORPORATION SHALL BE CHARGED TO THAT OWNER [my emphasis] and shall be added to and become a part of the assessment of that owner for the month next following the date....

[para20] It is contended that by combining the provisions of s. 37(3) and (8) with the ratio of Owners, Strata Corporation V.R. 873 v. Crumley 40 B.C.L.R. 80, against the intent of the Act, one can find authority for the defendant's proposition. I am unable to do so.

[para21] The provisions of s. 37 deal with the enforcement of legitimate liens filed against an owner's unit. This would reference the fines/assessments levied against Mr. Hewitt for (mis)conduct not disputed. Section 127 provides for the collection of costs associated with "correcting, remedying, or curing," a breach of bylaws. Crumley interprets "legal costs of a proceeding" as set out in s. 37(8) to mean the taxable party-and-party costs of proceedings taken by a strata corporation pursuant to s. 37(3) to obtain judgment against an owner for the amount owing by him or her for arrears of monthly assessments.

[para22] I am unable to see where any of that could lead to the drastic right claimed for the council. One only has to consider what would happen if Mr. Hewitt successfully defended the defamation action to question the logic and fairness of this contention.

[para23] Even if one could accept that defamation was a breach of the bylaws, rules or regulations, surely it must first be proved, and only then could one consider the assessment and collection issue.

[para24] I find there is no authority under the Condominium Act to assess the legal costs of the ongoing defamation action, extracted from the plaintiff on sale of his unit, and grant judgment in his favour in the amount associated with those accounts. If counsel cannot agree on the sum then they have liberty to apply. The plaintiff's claim for judgment for the fines/assessments is as indicated dismissed. Given the divided success, each side will bear its own costs.

[para25] Since I have accepted the plaintiff's argument respecting the legal fees, it is unnecessary to deal with the claim for disclosure of the accounts.

[para26] Judgment accordingly.

The Owners, Strata Plan NW961, petitioner, and John Herberto Martins Leal and Joanne Terese DaSilva-Leal, respondents

Vancouver Registry No. A961398

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Davies J. Heard: May 8, 1996 Judgment: June 13, 1996. Filed: June 18, 1996.

Counsel: Patrick A. Williams, for the petitioner. Respondents appearing on their own behalf.

[para1] DAVIES J.:-- The petitioner applies for relief pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, Chapter 61 and Amendments thereto, concerning the respondents' construction of an enclosure on the patio adjacent to the respondents' strata lot.

[para2] The condominium complex comprising Strata Plan NW961 consists of six strata lots, each of which has a patio or balcony area attached to it. All of the patio areas are a part of the common property of the complex, however, by reason of proximity to the individual strata lots which they abut and historical usage, each separate patio area has been effectively treated as the exclusive property of the strata lot to which it attaches.

[para3] Notwithstanding that de facto treatment as exclusive property, the evidence indicates that from time to time the owners of Strata Plan NW961 through annual or other meetings of the owners have retained and exercised jurisdiction over the individual patio areas as common property. The formality of the exercise of that jurisdiction has been haphazard and inconsistent which is not surprising given the relatively small number of strata lots in the complex.

[para4] The informality to which I refer is evidenced by paragraph 6 of the Petition which states that:

" 6. The bylaws of the Strata Corporation were amended by special resolution dated January 25, 1996, registered March 4, 1996 in the Land Title Office under Number BK062902. Included in the registration was Rule and Regulation Number 4 which provided:

An owner shall complete an application form and receive the approval of the Council for the installation of a patio cover and abide by the terms of the application.

Until the passage of this resolution, good taste, together with Council or Owners approval dictated the parameters within which owners were to conduct themselves when covering the patios. "

[para5] The January 25, 1996 amendment to the petitioner's by-laws postdates the disputes in issue and was obviously an attempt by the owners of the petitioner other than the respondents to gain further advantage or authority in exercising jurisdiction over the subject patio. That it was aimed solely at the respondents in relation to the matter before me is beyond dispute.

[para6] In seeking a declaration that the respondents are in breach of the petitioner's by-laws, the petitioner relies upon:

(a) section 115(d) of the Condominium Act which provide that:

" 115. An owner shall... (d) use and enjoy the common property, common facilities or other assets of the strata corporation in a manner that will not unreasonably interfere with their use and enjoyment by other owners, their families or visitors.";

(b) resolutions passed at meetings of its owners on April 26, 1995, September 7, 1995 and December 12, 1995

and

(c) the aforesaid January 25, 1996 by-law amendment.

[para7] The specific breaches alleged are that:

(a) the enclosure constructed by the respondents on the subject patio unreasonably interferes with the use and enjoyment of that patio as common property by other owners; and

(b) the respondents did not obtain the necessary approval of the petitioner's other owners to allow its construction.

[para8] In response to these alleged breaches, the respondents say that not only is the enclosure constructed on "their" patio not an unreasonable interference with the use of that common property by others, but that it was in fact approved by Ms. Fowler and Mr. Murphy, two members of the petitioner's strata council prior to construction. They say further that in the circumstances of this case, the other owners have acted oppressively and unfairly prejudicially in their dealings with the respondents over this issue including the passage of the above referenced resolutions and the January 25, 1996 by-law amendment and in these subsequent enforcement proceedings.

[para9] While a general allegation has been made that the subject patio cover is an "eyesore", in my judgment there is no evidentiary support for that allegation especially in the circumstances of all of the other owners' enclosures in respect of which no complaint has been made.

[para10] The only potential "unreasonable interference" which I consider has evidentiary support is that involving the complaint of Ms. Fowler who is the present president of the petitioner's strata council. Ms. Fowler has deposed that:

" The owners to the east of my strata lot have also erected a covering; however it is clear plexi-glass and does not interfere with my enjoyment of my strata lot or the common property. "

[para11] From the photographs exhibited in the affidavit material, it is clear to me that the only substance to Ms. Fowler's complaint is that the enclosed patio cover on the subject patio interferes with her view.

[para12] Support for my analysis that this is really a dispute effecting only Ms. Fowler's strata lot is found in the resolution of the petitioner which gave to the respondents an option to remove the present roof portion of the subject patio enclosure and replace it with a smoked plexi-glass cover.

[para13] In response to that option, as noted above, the respondents say that they believed that they had the approval of Ms. Fowler and also of Mr. Murphy to construct the existing roof structure. They also say that the roof in its present state, which is a combination of grey shingles and clear plexi-glass was and is needed to protect their privacy.

[para14] As to the allegation of approval by Ms. Fowler and Mr. Murphy, the fact is that even if such approval had been given and the evidence is contradictory on this point, such approval could not bind the other owners who by resolution had reserved to themselves the approval process. [para15] As to the privacy issue, it is clear that the smoked plexi-glass solution would give privacy protection and at the same time deal with Ms. Fowler's concerns. In addition, I was advised by the respondent, John Leal, that the cost to remove the existing cover and replace it with a smoked plexi-glass cover would be approximately $600.00.

[para16] In determining the issues in this case and particularly the allegation of oppressive and unfairly prejudicial conduct under s. 42 of the Condominium Act made by the respondents, I have considered Gray v. Strata Plan VR840, (1994) 41 R.P.R. (2nd) 79, a decision of this court, in which Mr. Justice Errico considered that issue in resolving issues involving a patio enclosure.

[para17] As in Gray, I do not find that the owners of this strata corporation acted oppressively. While enforcement of control over other patio areas had previously been less formal, it was not a control which had ever been abdicated. The respondents were aware of that when the resolutions were passed.

[para18] In my judgment, the owners of this strata corporation attempted to balance legitimate but competing interests of two owners and in my judgment in the circumstances of this case, the cover of the enclosure as constructed does unreasonably interfere with Ms. Fowler's enjoyment of her strata lot and as such, contravenes s. 115(d).

[para19] The inexpensive option of curing the problem by replacing the patio cover with a smoked plexi-glass cover is one with which the respondents could have and should have complied. In not doing so, the respondents have acted unreasonably and without due regard to the interests of others.

[para21] As to the issue of the costs of the bringing and hearing of this petition and notwithstanding my comments with respect to the respondents' unreasonableness in not complying with the petitioner's resolutions, I am also troubled by the manner in which the owners of the petitioner used their power in this matter. I say that not with respect to the reservation of their right to approve the design of the patio cover but in relation to the uneven application of the petitioner's by-laws generally and the attempt to gain advantage by the passage of the by-law amendment. I am also concerned that personal animosity as between Ms. Fowler and the respondents and also between some other owners and the respondents in relation to ancillary matters were brought into this dispute. In my view, that exacerbated the situation unnecessarily.

[para22] Accordingly, while the petitioner has been largely successful in result, I bear all of these matters in mind in assessing costs. In so doing, I have determined that the respondents shall pay the petitioner's costs of this petition on a lump sum basis of $1,000.00 inclusive of disbursements and that such costs shall be the respondents only requirement to contribute to the petitioner's costs. The petitioner may not in any other way assess any additional portion of its costs in pursuing these issues against the respondents either by way of strata fee or strata expense assessments or otherwise.

Shane Gray and Sherry Gray, Petitioners, and The Owners Strata Plan No. VR840, Respondent

Vancouver Registry No. A941539

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Errico J. Heard: August 5, 1994. Judgment: September 27, 1994. Filed: September 29, 1994.

[para1] ERRICO J.:-- This petition is brought by the owners of a strata lot against the Strata Corporation for relief under sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act R.S.B.C. (1979) c. 61.

[para2] Section 42 reads as follows:

"An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself."

[para3] The relief sought in the petition is for an order that the decision of the Strata Council denying the petitioners' request to be allowed to enclose with glass the patio area of the petitioners' strata lot be set aside as oppressive or unfairly prejudicial. The facts alleged in the petition include a statement that the petitioners' strata lot contains an open patio area. The reference to the area being part of the petitioners' strata lot is not accurate. In fact, the area in question is limited common property for the use of the petitioners as the owners of strata lot M2 and as such is owned by all of the owners of the respondent strata corporation.

[para5] The applicable by-law of the respondent strata corporation is section 138(4)(b), (6) and (7):

"(4)(b) No alteration shall be made to the boundary wall or between a Strata Lot and an adjacent limited common property balcony or patio, including the windows and sliding glass door, if this will have the effect of incorporating the balcony or patio in whole or in part into the Strata Lot or of providing an encroachment by the Strata Lot on to any part of the balcony or of failing to provide a complete closure between Strata Lot and balcony.

(6) No balconies shall be enclosed in glass without prior written permission of the Strata Council. All glass enclosures must conform to the plans set out in Development Permit #83-02 issued by the Municipality of West Vancouver.

(7) No alterations or installations of fixtures shall be made to limited common property balconies or patios without prior Council approval. Such approval not to be unreasonably withheld."

[para6] In April 1993 the former owner of strata lot M2 applied for permission to enclose the patio, the limited common property in question, and on July 6th the Strata Council denied permission. I do not have any particulars of the nature of the closure requested. Shortly after that the petitioners purchased the strata lot, and on December 29th, 1993 requested Council approval for their enclosure of the entire length of the exterior area of their strata lot. The sketch plan accompanying the request shows an area substantially larger than the area of the limited common property. On February 4th, 1994 the petitioners wrote the Strata Council for permission to enclose the limited common property for the use of their strata lot. Enclosed as part of the renewal application was a letter from a glass installation firm to the effect that in their opinion mounting of the glass on the existing slab should be no problem. On February 7th the Strata Council met and in a letter to the petitioner from the property manager, the petitioners were advised as follows:

"Council feels that as the proposed enclosure would be unique to the Seastrand and would impact on the visual appearance, it would be appropriate to refer your request to the Owners for attention. This Council will do at the Annual General Meeting to be held March 16, 1994."

[para7] At the Annual General Meeting held March 16th, 1994, after discussion expressing concerns about the visual impact to the south side of the building, overall height and possible increased heating costs, a motion was passed that the request for a patio enclosure for suite M2 not be approved at this time and that the matter be referred to council for further study. The minutes that record this motion then continues with the following:

"This motion was put forward with the understanding that the Owners of M2 would have a professional engineering study undertaken to determine the base stability and the requirements for new footings and/or concrete pad. As well, the Owners of M2 would provide an architectural rendering giving Owners a better perspective of the visual impact. Once the above information has been received by Council, an Extraordinary Meeting will be called so that all Owners may have the opportunity of reviewing the material before reaching a decision."

[para8] It would appear that the petitioners were aware of those requirements. In paragraph 7 of his affidavit, Mr. Gray makes reference thereto. The position of the petitioners was, and is, that they believed that they had fulfilled all of the necessary requirements prior to February 4th, 1994.

[para9] By letter of February 4th, 1994, prior to the meeting, the petitioners wrote the Strata Council that if they did not receive a favourable response on February 11th they would deal with the matter through legal counsel. By letter of April 15th, 1994 a letter from the petitioners' solicitors advising that unless the permission was received by April 22nd, 1994 they would take proceedings under the Condominium Act.

[para10] By letter of April 28th, 1994 in reply to the petitioners' solicitor, Mrs. Guernsey, the property manager, confirmed that the petitioners had attended the meeting of March 16th, 1994 and that the Council, upon receipt of what was requested in the meeting of March 16th, would convene a extraordinary General Meeting to deal with the question.

[para11] It appears from the foregoing that while the petitioners have not received the permission they have requested, there has as yet been no express refusal. I think that the situation that existed at the time of the commencement of this proceeding and at this time is that the permission sought has been withheld pending receipt of the information mentioned in the minutes of the Annual General Meeting of March 16th.

[para12] Counsel for the petitioners submits that the Strata Council should not have referred the matter to the General Meeting of the Strata Owners and that the further requirements imposed at the meeting of March 16th, 1994 could not be imposed upon the petitioners as they made applicatio by February 4th, 1994. He further submits the refusal of Council to make a decision and grant permission and to refer the matter to the Annual General Meeting, was an action that Council was not authorized to make.

[para13] Section 118 (1) of the Condominium Act reads as follows:

"The powers and duties of the strata corporation shall, subject to any restriction imposed or direction given at a general meeting, be exercised and performed by the council of the strata corporation."

[para14] I do not read that section as limiting the restrictions imposed or direction given by a General Meeting to be limited to those in place prior to a matter coming before a Strata Council for decision or action. I am in agreement with counsel for the respondent that such interpretation would be applicable to a by-law of the Strata Corporation and not to a restriction or direction referred to in section 118.

[para15] Was then the action of the Strata Corporation i refusing to grant the permission requested and requiring the report and architectural depiction an exercise of their powers in a manner oppressive to the petitioners, or were those actions unfairly prejudicial to the petitioners?

[para16] In considering what constitutes "oppressive" and "unfairly prejudicial" in section 42 of the Condominium Act, reliance may be placed upon the interpretation of those words as they appear in section 224 of the Company Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 59. This approach was used by Lander J. in Esteem Investments Ltd. v. Owners, Strata Plan No. VR 1513 (1987), 21 B.C.L.R. (2d) 352. This judgment was successfully appealed (1989), 32 B.C.L.R. (2d) 324, but the Court of Appeal did not comment on or disapprove of the application of decisions interpreting section 224 of the Company Act. Similarly in Vold et al. v. The Owners, Strata Corporation 202, [1993] B.C.J. No. 344, February 16th, 1993 No. 3441/92, Victoria Registry, Melvin J. found that there was an analogy between the strata corporation owner and shareholders of a corporation and considered decisions involving "oppression" as it applies to the rights of shareholders.

[para17] Lander J. in Esteem Investments applied the decision in Nystad v. Harcrest Apartments Limited et al (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 39, where McEachern C.J.S.C. concluded that there would be no oppression remedy open to an injured minority shareholder when the directors have acted in good faith. McEachern C.J.S.C. at page 45 adopted the definition of "good faith" in Black's Law Dictionary 5th edition as follows:

"'Good faith' according to Black's Law Dictionary, 5th ed. (1979), has no technical meaning but is a term used 'to describe that state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud, and, generally speaking, means being faithful to one's duty or obligation', or, 'An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render transaction unconscientious'. This definition leaves little room for a lack of probity or fair dealing and it therefore appears that there may be no 'oppression' remedy open to the injured minority shareholder when the directors have acted in good faith."

[para18] In Nystad, McEachern C.J.S.C. also considered th words "unfairly prejudicial" as being broader than the term "oppressive" and that the focus considering the words "unfairly prejudicial" is on the effect of the injured shareholder of the impugned conduct.

[para19] In Esteem Lander J. also considered the decision of Fulton J. in Diligenti v. RWMD Operations Kelowna Ltd. (1976) 1 B.C.L.R. 36 (S.C.) as follows:

"In Diligenti, Fulton J. utilized the dictionary definitions of the words 'prejudicial' and 'unfairly' and concluded at p. 46: 'It is significant that the dictionary definitions support the instinctive reactions that what is unjust and inequitable is obviously also unfairly prejudicial.'"

[para20] In considering then the actions of the Strata Corporation in acting as it did on the request of the petitioners, can it be said that those actions were oppressive to the petitioners or that it was unfairly prejudicial to them?

[para21] I have concluded that those actions are not oppressive. There is no suggestion in the evidence that the Strata Corporation, either through the actions of the Strata Council or through the General Meeting, did not act in good faith. The action of the Strata Council in referring the matter to the Annual General Meeting and the decision of the Annual General Meeting to defer a consideration of the application for permission until certain other requirements were provided, in my view, do not indicate any lack of good faith.

[para22] Were those activities unfairly prejudicial to the petitioners? The petitioners have not been permitted, to this time, to enclose their patio when a majority of the other strata lot owners have been allowed to enclose their balconies and where the owners of strata lot 1, the other strata lot that is on the ground level, have been allowed to so enclose their patio.

[para23] In considering the question of unfairly prejudicial, consideration must be given to the effect of the enclosure of the petitioner's patio on the other owners. This particular area has, in my view, some uniqueness in that it is in the front or view portion of the property and, mor importantly, is immediately adjacent to an area of common property enjoyed by the other strata owners as a garden and recreation area. The requirement of the Strata Corporation for there to be an architectural depiction of the proposed enclosure is not unreasonable in those circumstances. Nor is the requirement for some structural reports unreasonable when there is at least a question as to the stability of the concrete slab upon which it is proposed to be constructed. In considering whether the prejudice to the petitioners is unfair, I must consider the effect of this proposed enclosure on all of the other strata lot owners and on considering that I do not find that the refusal to grant the permission pending the provision of the requirements of the March 16th Annual General Meeting to be unfairly prejudicial.

[para24] Accordingly, the petition must be dismissed with costs to the respondents.

British Columbia Court of Appeal McEachern, C.J.B.C., Locke and Proudfoot J.J.A. Heard: March 3, 1992 Judgment: April 7, 1992

Counsel for the Appellant: Charles F. Willms. Counsel for the Respondents: William E. Knutson.

PROUDFOOT J.A. (for the Court, allowing the appeal):-- This is an appeal from a decision pronounced July 5th, 1990, dismissing the petition of the appellant without giving reasons.

The Facts

The appellant, through a company known as Inzan Inc., of which she is the sole shareholder, purchased a strata unit at 1559 Mariner's Walk, Vancouver, British Columbia, Strata Plan VR2096. The purchase was made in March, 1988. The appellant has resided in the unit from the date of purchase. The unit was transferred to the appellant by the company after purchase by her on March 20th, 1990.

On April 11, 1988 at the annual general meeting of the Strata Corporation, a by-law was passed effecting changes to the exterior of the complex. It was called the "Building Exterior By-law" and read in part:

No visible changes to the building's exterior are permitted. These changes include but are not limited to the following: any change which requires approval from the City of Vancouver; changes to the colouring and/or finish of the building's exterior; any additions or deletions of a permanent or semi-permanent nature; enclosures of common and/or limited common property and awnings or canopies. [Emphasi added]

Strata lot owners would be given notice if the by-law had not been complied with and would have to remove the offending structure within 30 days after notice. A penalty would be imposed for non-compliance. The by-law applied to any changes made after December 14, 1987.

In March, 1990, the appellant erected an aluminum garden shed on a patio area outside her residence at 1559 Mariner's Walk. The appellant concedes in her factum, paragraph 2, that the area where the shed was erected is "limited common property". There is disagreement between the parties as to whether the shed is fixed or free-standing. The respondent takes the position the shed was bolted down to the appellant's patio and against an exterior wall and stairway. The appellant argues there was no admissible evidence to support the respondents' position that it is attached. (2365

The only evidence available relating to this aspect is found in an affidavit filed by Elizabeth Barnes, dated June 26, 1990, where she states:

4. I am informed by Ron Jaworski and do verily believe that Mr. Jaworski attended at the subject property in April 1990 to inspect the aluminum shed and noted that it had been bolted down to the patio.

This hearsay evidence is dealt with in a supplementary affidavit of Zenna Buchbinder dated July 4th, 1990, with the following reply:

5. The garden unit in question is a chattel and not a fixture or any kind of change to the building exterior, I have not made any changes to the exterior of the building nor have I added any fixture to the common or limited common property.

The matter is also referred to in paragraph 2 of the appellant's reply factum in the following terms:

2. . . . there was no admissible evidence before the Chambers Judge that the garden shed was bolted down to the Appellant's patio. In fact, the garden shed was not bolted to the patio or the building.

In April, 1990, the appellant was notified by the Strata Council that the shed was erected in contravention of the by-law and would have to be removed.

The appellant filed a petition seeking several declarations. However, on this appeal the only issue pursued is whether or not the Chambers Judge erred in ruling that the garden shed breached the building exterior by-law. In her petition, she sought a "declaration that the by-law does not cover the garden shed".

Appellant's counsel argues that the plain and ordinary language of the by-law is the proper construction that the court should place on its meaning and that a free-standing structure does not fall within the by-law and there is, therefore, no breach. He relies on the Rules of Statutory Interpretation as enunciated in the case of Great Western Railway Company v. Carpalla United China Clay Company, Limited, (1909) 1 Ch. 218 (C.A.) at p. 236:

A written instrument must be "construed according to its sense and meaning, as collected in the first place from the terms used in it which terms are themselves to be understood in their plain, ordinary, and popular sense, . . .

Respondents' counsel argues that the interpretation cannot be so constrained but must be viewed as well within the entire circumstances, including the purpose for the initial introduction of the by-law, as stated in the Leckie affidavit, "to maintain and preserve the exterior appearance and landscaping of the Lagoon complex".

To support that argument, respondents' counsel cites the case of Fairwood Greens Homeowners' Association Inc. v. Young, 26 Wash. App. 758 (1980), 614 P.R. (2d) 219. In my view, that case does not assist the respondent. Dore, J. makes these comments (at p. 223):

. . . Restrictions being in derogation of the common law right to use land for all lawful purposes will not be extended by implication to include any use not clearly expressed, Burton v. Douglas County, supra, nor will they be aided or extended by judicial construction, Gwinn v. Clearer, supra; Granger v. Boulls, 21 Wash. 2d 597, 152 P. 2d 325 (1944) . . . It would seem to me that a more convincing argument can be made for the appellant's position that the by-law cannot be invoked to specifically forbid strata owners from assembling garden sheds on a patio in that there is no mention of garden sheds within the by-law.

Respondents' counsel then asks the Court to examine the purpose of the by-law. The Minutes of the Annual General Meeting of April 11th, 1988, recorded under heading 9.2 "Changes to Exterior of Building By-law" state as follows:

The main "draw" to the lagoons was the design. This by-law would prevent its unnecessary change.

This purpose was referred to earlier when dealing with the Leckie affidavit. Here, the respondents argue that even if the by-law does not specifically, or generally, prevent the appellant from erecting the garden shed, the principle of community can be applied. The case of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 702 v. Sonshine et al. (1989), 8 R.P.R. (2d) 183 is relied on to support that proposition. In the Metropolitan case, an owner, in contravention of a by-law, affixed a canopy to the exterior wall of his unit. The by-law provided a method for owners to obtain their canopy if a sufficient number of owners could be convinced the canopy was an acceptable amenity. Haley, D.C.J. made these comments about the principle of community (at p. 187):

One has to keep in mind that condominium living works on a principle of community, and that such decisions affecting the common elements must reflect community concerns and not the wishes of particular unit owners. I do not think this is a question of whether the rule is reasonable.

This is not analogous to the situation in the case at bar. The principle of community living has only been applied where there has been a clear infraction of a condominium by-law. The argument advanced is that when people join a condominium development they agree to abide by the declaration of community living. In the case at bar, a garden shed being placed on a patio was not specifically prohibited by the by-law. The intention may have been to maintain the integrity of the complex (the aesthetics), however, it would be unreasonable to conclude that, based on the principle of community living, condominium owners should assume they are not entitled to place any object on their patios. The respondent, in my view, does not advance a convincing argument on the breach of the principle of community living unless the appellant has been found to be in contravention of a specific by-law.

If that principle exists, and has application in the case at bar, it must still be ascertained where the appellant was in breach of the "no change to building exterior" by-law. The by-law prohibition refers to "building's exterior". "Exterior" is defined in The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, Third Edition (1978) as:

Outer; pertaining to or connected with the outside; visible on the outside.

A question can be posed, does this merely include the building walls or does it extend to cover the patio area where the garden shed was placed?

In the City of New Orleans v. Impastato (1941), 3 SO (2d) 559, 561 (Supreme Court of Louisiana) alterations were made to the rear of a building. The court states (at p. 561): The word "exterior", as applied to a building, clearly means all of the outer surfaces thereof as distinguished from its interior or the portion enclosed by the outer surfaces.

In my view, the patio is not incorporated within the definition of building exterior. It is not part of the outer walls. The building exterior could only refer to the walls as the word "exterior" modifies building and does not extend to cover a patio adjacent to that building. Accordingly, it is not a contravention of the by-law to erect a storage shed and place it on the patio. The situation would be considerably altered if the shed were attached to the building specifically to a staircase or a wall.

The next consideration involves the word "changes". I refer specifically to the words, "additions . . . of a permanent or semi-permanent nature". Respondents' counsel argues that this shed is an addition. That argument cannot succeed. There is no evidence that supports the proposition that the shed is attached to anything, it is a free-standing structure.

Although In re Blgrave's Settled Estates, (1903) 1 Ch. 560 (C.A.), has a different fact pattern it nevertheless provides some useful comments when dealing with additions to property. Collins, M.R. said (at p. 563):

Mr. Dibdin does not, and cannot, contend that something added to the building which is not attached to it, such as furniture and loose chattels, can be said to be an addition to the building. But why not, if his main argument is correct? The plant is not any more than the furniture an addition of like to like, but is merely something that adds to the amenities of the building. Into what categories are you to divide the additions? You can only get three gradations--namely, loose chattels which are not attached at all, fixtures which are attached in a certain sense, and actual structural additions. Which of those is meant? It seems to me that it would be very difficult to divide off any possible alternative short of an actual structural addition. Prima facie it seems to me that the addition meant by the section is a structural addition to the building, and that it is not satisfied by putting wires into a building or putting an engine into an engine-house. [Emphasis added I adopt those words. This shed is not an addition of a permanent or semi-permanent nature within the wording of the by-law.]

Finally, is this shed "an enclosure of common or limited property?"

If it is, the respondent argues it would be prohibited under this by-law. While it can be argued that the shed encloses the portion covered by the shed, it is stretching logic well beyond the reasonable to conclude that this shed is an enclosure of the common or limited property. That argument cannot succeed.

Respondents' counsel presents one further argument referred to in paragraph 14 of respondents' factum:

The Appellant at no time had the permission of the Respondent to erect the shed, and had been informed it was contrary to the by-law.

The case of The Owners Strata Plan No. 51 v. Davies, unreported S.C.B.C. Decision 2134 (Duncan Registry) May 17, 1988 is cited in support of this argument. The by-law in the Davies' case required the "approval of the Strata Corporation in order to place or park anything on common property". In the case at bar, approval was not required to make use of a garden shed on limited common property. That argument cannot succeed on this basis.

In summary, this garden shed does not fall within the specific prohibitions of the by-law. It is not a change to the building's exterior and is not an addition to or an enclosure of the limited common property. To give such a broad interpretation to the by-law would make matters even more difficult for condominium owners trying to interpret ambiguous and generalizing by-laws. If the Strata Council wants to prohibit garden sheds, or similar free-standing structures, they can easily adopt such a course of action.

Accordingly, the appeal is allowed.

Zerakhanu Fazal Lalji-Samji, Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan VR-2135, Respondent

[1992] B.C.J. No. 176

Vancouver Registry No. A913001

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Meredith J. Heard: January 10, 1992 Judgment: January 14, 1992

Counsel for the Petitioner: E.A. Dolden. Counsel for the Respondent: J.A. Bleay. MEREDITH J.:-- I conclude this appeal from the decision of His Honour Judge Gillis should be allowed.

The petitioner is the owner of a strata lot in the Strata Plan above mentioned. A rug in the lobby of the building constituting common property was ruined when bleach from a box belonging to the plaintiff leaked onto it. The petitioner says that the Strata Corporation either did or should have insured against the risk. If insurance had been effected the insurer standing in the shoes of the Strata Corporation would have no claim against the petitioner. This is so because under the terms of the Condominium Act the owners are "deemed to be included as the named insured". Thus had the Strata Corporation placed the insurance as it was obliged to do there would be no claim against the petitioner because the petitioner was a beneficiary under the policy.

The obligation of the Corporation and the benefit conferred on the owners are set out this way in the Act:

54.(1) The strata corporation (a) shall obtain and maintain insurance for the buildings, common facilities and any insurable improvements owned by the strata corporation to their replacement value against fire and against other perils as are usually the subject of insurance in respect of similar properties;

...

(3) Notwithstanding the terms of the policy, (a) the strata corporation; (b) the owners and tenants from time to time of every strata lot shown on the strata plan; and (c) all persons normally occupying the strata lots shall be deemed to be included as the named insured on a policy of insurance in force under subsection (1).

Counsel for the respondent conceded in argument that the conclusion contended for by the petitioner as above is correct. He then said that insurance against leakage of this sort was not "usually the subject of insurance in respect of similar properties". Although there is no evidence on the point, I conclude that "leakage of contents" (the actual exclusion in the insurance policy taken by the Strata Corporation on behalf of the owners) being an obvious and ominous peril (take a leakage of water for instance) would be usually the subject of insurance in respect of similar properties.

The appeal is allowed.

R.J. Miller & Associates (1986) Ltd., Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan No. K577, Respondent

Kelowna Registry No.: 7096

British Columbia Supreme Court Kelowna, British Columbia Lamperson J. Heard: July 6, 1990 Judgment: August 1, 1990

Counsel for the Petitioner: Barry M. Davies. Counsel for the Respondent: Brian R. Henderson. Counsel for Mr. Solski: David L. Polley.

LAMPERSON J.:-- The petitioner seeks an order pursuant to s. 42 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 restraining the respondent strata corporation from selling certain common property which fronts the petitioner's strata lot because such a sale would be unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

The strata complex is a former hotel which is situated on Abbott Street in the city of Kelowna and which fronts the city park and Okanagan Lake. Some time ago, the hotel was subdivided under the Condominium Act. The main floor consists of two commercial strata lots, one of which belongs to the petitioner and houses professional offices and the other of which houses a restaurant known as the Mad Greek Restaurant. The upper floors contain 18 apartments which are classified as residential lots.

The petitioner's offices have floor-to-ceiling windows and overlook a courtyard, an unused swimming pool, the park and Okanagan Lake. Although there is a common walkway, people visiting the petitioner's offices customarily go through the courtyard. The net result is that the petitioner's offices have a rather elegant ambience. None of the other strata lots, including the Mad Greek Restaurant, benefit from this courtyard. Accordingly, the strata corporation entertained offers from persons wishing to purchase the courtyard. The petitioner made an offer in an attempt to protect his interest. Mr. Solski, the owner of the Mad Greek Restaurant made a higher offer which was accepted by the respondent. It is clear that Mr. Solski intends to build some sort of a structure in the open space. There is some suggestion that it might be a cabaret or nightclub but the evidence is not clear in that regard. The result would be that the petitioner's offices would look onto a 4-foot common walkway and a wall. The access to the petitioner's office would be indirect and I suspect rather unattractive and awkward. The offices would be at the back of the building. The petitioner purchased this strata lot because of its unique location and the ambience which it provides. The unique and pleasant character of its offices will be destroyed if, in fact, a building is constructed within the vacant space.

The respondent argues that the relief sought by the petitioner is extreme in that it would take away rights held by the strata corporation and its members, and that the petitioner must have been aware that the strata corporation was entitled to sell common property and that therefore it should have considered that possibility when purchasing its Lot 2.

There is no question that a strata corporation may dispose of common property provided it complies with the requirements of s. 20 of the Condominium Act. For the purposes of this hearing, the petitioner has not argued that the respondent failed to meet those requirements. The petitioner simply relies on s. 42(b) which states:

"42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself."

Section 43 provides:

"43. On an application to court under section 42, the court may make the interim or final order it considers appropriate, and, without limiting the generality of that power, may

(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution; and (b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs."

Thus, the question is whether the strata council's actions are unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner. Lander J. dealt with this issue in Esteem Investments Ltd. v. Owners, Strata Plan No. VR 1513 21 B.C.L.R. (2d) 352. In his reasons, he stated that the cases pertaining to s. 224 of the Company Act are relevant in interpreting the term "unfairly prejudicial." The British Columbia Court of Appeal reversed Lander J., but not on this point.

Fulton J. considered the meaning of "unfairly prejudicial" in Diligenti v. R.W.M.D. Operations Kelowna Ltd. (1976) 1 B.C.L.R. 36. At page 45 he stated:

"There has been no interpretation, in this context, of the words 'unfairly prejudicial.' Turning to the dictionaries for assistance, I find the following definitions in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed.:

'Prejudice . . . I. Injury, detriment, or damage, caused to a person by judgment or action in which his rights are disregarded; hence, injury to a person or thing likely to be the consequence of some action . . .

Prejudicial . . . I. Causing prejudice; detrimental, damaging (to rights, interest, etc.) . . .

Unfair . . . Not fair or equitable; unjust . . . Hence, unfairly.'

It is significant that the dictionary definitions support the instinctive reactions that what is unjust and inequitable is obviously also unfairly prejudicial."

That opinion was endorsed by McEachern C.J.S.C. (as he then was) in Nystad v. Harcrest Apartments Limited (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 39.

In my opinion the character of the petitioner's offices would change dramatically for the worse if a building were constructed in what is now a courtyard, and would result in the petitioner suffering a substantial loss. The other strata owners would benefit substantially at considerable cost to the petitioner. I do not think that it is fair to assert that the petitioner should have expected that the common property would ultimately be sold with the result that its offices would be in the back of the building. Accordingly, I have decided to enjoin the respondents from disposing of the common property in question without the consent of the petitioner, or alternatively, the consent of the court.

Margaret Roche-Heywood, Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan No. 953, Respondents

Victoria Registry No.: 89 1819

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Murphy L.J.S.C. Heard: May 4 & 7, 1990 Judgment: June 21, 1990

Counsel for the petitioner: P.W. Klassen. Counsel for the respondents: W.R. Lambert.

MURPHY L.J.S.C.:-- The petitioner applies to this Court for a declaration that 1. The powers of the Strata Corporation have been exercised in a manner that is or may be unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

The petitioner also applies for an order that:

1. The strata corporation vary the bylaws of the corporation to allow window coverings of the type installed in the petitioner's suite;
2. The strata corporation is prohibited from enforcing the bylaws of the corporation concerning window coverings as against the petitioner;
3. Costs.

The applications are made pursuant to sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.61;

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself.

43. On an application to court under section 42, the court may make the interim or final order it considers appropriate, and, without limiting the generality of that power, may

(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution; and

(b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs.

The issue is whether the bylaw is unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner, under s. 42(b). At the conclusion of the petitioner's argument, Mr. Lambert, on behalf of the respondent strata owners, submitted that relief under s. 42(a) was not claimed in the petition. Mr. Klassen, counsel for the petitioner, replied that he was only seeking relief under s. 42(b). I mention this as Mr. Klassen in his argument had covered both the matters of oppressive acts and unfair prejudice. On reading the petition, in preparing these reasons, I notice that the petition refers to section 42 without specifically mentioning either subsection. In any event, in view of Mr. Klassen's position, the matter falls to be decided under section 42(b).

In reciting the facts that follow, I have borrowed from the petitioner's brief as to the facts I consider relevant and are not in dispute:

1. The petitioner is the owner of and resides in Suite 701 - 640 Montreal Street, Victoria, British Columbia (hereinafter referred to as the "Suite"). The Suite is one of two penthouse units located on the 7th and uppermost floor of the condominium building located at the above address (hereinafter referred to as the Building). The unit is part of Strata Corporation No. 953 (hereinafter referred to as the "Strata Corporation"). The building is situated between the waterfront on Victoria Harbour and Montreal Street.

2. The construction of the building is such that on both the Montreal Street side and the water side, that the front walls of the two penthouse units are set back from the front wall of the floor below, thereby affording a tiered appearance.

3. Prior to February 1988, there were balconies both on the Montreal Street and waterfront sides of the Suite. In 1988 the petitioner made application to the Strata Council for a permission to enclose the balcony areas with glass to construct a sunroom. Permission was granted.

4. Having constructed the enclosures the petitioner found it necessary to provide window coverings for the newly created windows. After seeking advice of a professional the petitioner chose horizontal venetian blinds of a colour that blended with the other window hangings in the building. 5. At the time of installation of the blinds, there was a provision governing the installation of replacement drapes. The bylaws provided:

Sec. 137: ... Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes of such colour and material as approved by Council.

6. The blinds were installed in or about March 1988. By letter dated October 31, 1988, the strata council through its manager instructed the petitioner to remove the blinds within 30 days. This was the first communication the petitioner received regarding the blinds.

7. The petitioner responded by letter dated November 15, 1988, apologizing to strata council and explaining her reasons for selecting the venetian blinds, and seeking permission of the strata council.

8. The strata council responded by letter dated January 17, 1989 stating that the strata council could not give approval. After further correspondence between the parties and their solicitors, the petitioner was advised by letter dated May 19, 1989 that a general meeting would be called to consider a change to the bylaws.

9. On or about July 6, 1989, the petitioner received a notice of meeting for July 25, 1989 proposing to amend bylaw 137 to read:

137. ... Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes, or fabric or fabric covered vertical blinds, or venetian (horizontal) blinds of such colour and material as may be approved by Council.

The petitioner did not attend the meeting.

10. The meeting was held and at the meeting bylaw 137 was amended in such a fashion as to permit vertical blinds, but not horizontal blinds.

11. After the meeting of July 25, 1989 the strata council renewed its demand that the blinds be removed. The petitioner filed the within petition on September 11, 1989. 12. Subsequent to issuance of the petition a further meeting was held to reconsider, but the form of the bylaw remained as amended at the July 15, 1989, meeting.

With respect to the bylaws of a strata corporation, the Act provides:

26. (1) The strata corporation shall have bylaws providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation, and the bylaws shall be the bylaws set out in Part 5 until they have been altered or repealed under this Act at the time of alteration or repeal.

and:

28. (1) The bylaws set out in Part 5 have force and effect from the time of the deposit of the strata plan in the land title office until amended or repealed under sections 26 and 27.

Under Part 5 of the Act, headed "Bylaws", section 115 sets out the duties of an owner. Subsections (c) and (g) are relevant:

(c) repair and maintain his strata lot, including windows and doors, and areas allocated to his exclusive use, and keep them in a state of good repair, reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire, storm, tempest or act of God excepted;

(g) comply strictly with these bylaws, and all other bylaws of the strata corporation, and with the rules and regulations adopted from time to time;

The duties of a strata corporation are set out in section 116. Subsection (f) is relevant:

(f) maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a strata lot, including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings;

The bylaws of the respondent strata corporation ultimately adopted are all of the sections in Part 5 of the Condominium Act, i.e. sections 115-132, with additional bylaws numbered consecutively from 133 to 145. There was no alteration or repeal as provided for in section 26, nor were they amended or repealed as provided for in section 28(1). I do not know why the Legislature has chosen to use the word "altered" in section 26 and the word "amended" in section 28. In effect, the bylaws, set out in sections 115-132 were neither amended nor repealed; they were added to. In any event, there was no issue taken with the procedure resulting in the addition to the statutory bylaws. I proceed on the basis, therefore, that sections 115-132 of Part 5 of the Condominium Act, together with the additional bylaws 133-145, are the bylaws under the general provision of section 26, which provide that, "the strata corporation shall have bylaws providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots..."

Mr. Lambert, on behalf of the strata corporation, concedes that the first sentence in bylaw 137, which I have not quoted, does not apply. The question is, therefore, whether, in the circumstances, the corporation should be prohibited from enforcing the existing bylaw and whether the bylaw should be varied. I previously referred to it but I shall repeat it: the exterior of the buildings." This section excludes the Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes, as approved by Council.

Statutory bylaw section 115(c) of the Condominium Act provides that the owner shall, "repair and maintain his strata lot, including windows and doors...". Bylaw 116(f) being section 116(f) of the Act provides that the strata corporation shall maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, ...including the decorating of the whole of windows from the strata corporation's duty to maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, but it is responsible for the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings. As to decorating, I interpret this to include the windows and any window coverings when drawn or exposed to the outside.

So far as it goes, the bylaw is not unfairly prejudicial to any of the owners even though the effect is to control the interior colour of the drapes. However, an owner can overcome this, presumably, by installing drapes of a colour and material of his or her own choosing on the interior side of the existing sun drapes, without violating the bylaw or, in the case of the amended bylaw, vertical blinds. However, when the blinds are closed or the drapes are drawn the exterior side, depending upon the colour, would not necessarily be in harmony with the colour of the sun drapes approved by council. In such a situation there could be no violation of the bylaw if the sun drapes next to the windows would not have been removed. However, in keeping with the intent of the bylaw, the sun drapes would have to be drawn at all times that the interior drapes or vertical blinds were drawn or closed as the case may be.

An owner, on the other hand, could remove the sun drapes and replace them, under the new bylaw, with drapes of a colour and material of his own choosing, leaving the council the right to approve colour and material of the liner exposed to the outside. The same would apply to the fabric of the vertical blinds exposed to the outside.

The original bylaw referred to both the drapes and the windows as then existing . To provide that interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed identifies specific sun drapes and specific windows. The petitioner, in this case, after receiving permission to enclose the balcony areas with glass, thereby creating sun rooms, installed horizontal venetian blinds in newly constructed windows and, if I recall, windows which previously had no drapes. Following that, the bylaw was amended to allow the installation of vertical blinds subject to the approval of council as to material and colour. However, at the time of installation there were no sun drapes to remove as none had been there before. The existing windows became interior windows or were removed altogether. At the time of granting permission to enclose the balcony areas the bylaw should have been amended to provide for the installation of drapes or vertical blinds, or whatever, next to the newly created windows. Failing that, permission should have been granted only on condition that drapes similar to the ones already existing would be installed in the newly created windows.

The bylaw, as it existed at the time the horizontal blinds were installed by the petitioner, was of no force and effect with respect to the newly created windows. Consequently, the corporation's demand at this time that the blinds be removed is an exercise in its responsibility for the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the building in a manner that is unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

The council is prohibited from demanding that the blinds be removed or taking any steps or action to remove the said blinds or to have them removed. The council is directed to vary the relevant bylaw to allow window coverings in all suites of the material and colour installed in the petitioner's suite. In the alternative, should the council wish to maintain a 'vertical' approach in all windows the bylaw should be amended to provide for same in all existing windows and future enclosed glass areas provided it pays to the petitioner the cost of replacing the installed horizontal blinds with vertical blinds. Any new bylaw, or any alteration or amendment to the existing bylaw, should make it clear that the council has the right to approve the colour and material of the drape or slats exposed to the outside when drawn or closed.

The parties shall have liberty to apply with respect to any proposed change in the bylaw.

The petitioner shall have her costs of these proceedings.

Margaret Roche-Heywood, Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan No. 953, Respondents

Victoria Registry No.: 89 1819

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Murphy L.J.S.C. Heard: May 4 & 7, 1990 Judgment: June 21, 1990

Counsel for the petitioner: P.W. Klassen. Counsel for the respondents: W.R. Lambert.

MURPHY L.J.S.C.:-- The petitioner applies to this Court for a declaration that 1. The powers of the Strata Corporation have been exercised in a manner that is or may be unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

The petitioner also applies for an order that:

1. The strata corporation vary the bylaws of the corporation to allow window coverings of the type installed in the petitioner's suite;
2. The strata corporation is prohibited from enforcing the bylaws of the corporation concerning window coverings as against the petitioner;
3. Costs.

The applications are made pursuant to sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.61;

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself.

43. On an application to court under section 42, the court may make the interim or final order it considers appropriate, and, without limiting the generality of that power, may

(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution; and

(b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs.

The issue is whether the bylaw is unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner, under s. 42(b). At the conclusion of the petitioner's argument, Mr. Lambert, on behalf of the respondent strata owners, submitted that relief under s. 42(a) was not claimed in the petition. Mr. Klassen, counsel for the petitioner, replied that he was only seeking relief under s. 42(b). I mention this as Mr. Klassen in his argument had covered both the matters of oppressive acts and unfair prejudice. On reading the petition, in preparing these reasons, I notice that the petition refers to section 42 without specifically mentioning either subsection. In any event, in view of Mr. Klassen's position, the matter falls to be decided under section 42(b).

In reciting the facts that follow, I have borrowed from the petitioner's brief as to the facts I consider relevant and are not in dispute:

1. The petitioner is the owner of and resides in Suite 701 - 640 Montreal Street, Victoria, British Columbia (hereinafter referred to as the "Suite"). The Suite is one of two penthouse units located on the 7th and uppermost floor of the condominium building located at the above address (hereinafter referred to as the Building). The unit is part of Strata Corporation No. 953 (hereinafter referred to as the "Strata Corporation"). The building is situated between the waterfront on Victoria Harbour and Montreal Street.

2. The construction of the building is such that on both the Montreal Street side and the water side, that the front walls of the two penthouse units are set back from the front wall of the floor below, thereby affording a tiered appearance.

3. Prior to February 1988, there were balconies both on the Montreal Street and waterfront sides of the Suite. In 1988 the petitioner made application to the Strata Council for a permission to enclose the balcony areas with glass to construct a sunroom. Permission was granted.

4. Having constructed the enclosures the petitioner found it necessary to provide window coverings for the newly created windows. After seeking advice of a professional the petitioner chose horizontal venetian blinds of a colour that blended with the other window hangings in the building. 5. At the time of installation of the blinds, there was a provision governing the installation of replacement drapes. The bylaws provided:

Sec. 137: ... Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes of such colour and material as approved by Council.

6. The blinds were installed in or about March 1988. By letter dated October 31, 1988, the strata council through its manager instructed the petitioner to remove the blinds within 30 days. This was the first communication the petitioner received regarding the blinds.

7. The petitioner responded by letter dated November 15, 1988, apologizing to strata council and explaining her reasons for selecting the venetian blinds, and seeking permission of the strata council.

8. The strata council responded by letter dated January 17, 1989 stating that the strata council could not give approval. After further correspondence between the parties and their solicitors, the petitioner was advised by letter dated May 19, 1989 that a general meeting would be called to consider a change to the bylaws.

9. On or about July 6, 1989, the petitioner received a notice of meeting for July 25, 1989 proposing to amend bylaw 137 to read:

137. ... Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes, or fabric or fabric covered vertical blinds, or venetian (horizontal) blinds of such colour and material as may be approved by Council.

The petitioner did not attend the meeting.

10. The meeting was held and at the meeting bylaw 137 was amended in such a fashion as to permit vertical blinds, but not horizontal blinds.

11. After the meeting of July 25, 1989 the strata council renewed its demand that the blinds be removed. The petitioner filed the within petition on September 11, 1989. 12. Subsequent to issuance of the petition a further meeting was held to reconsider, but the form of the bylaw remained as amended at the July 15, 1989, meeting.

With respect to the bylaws of a strata corporation, the Act provides:

26. (1) The strata corporation shall have bylaws providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation, and the bylaws shall be the bylaws set out in Part 5 until they have been altered or repealed under this Act at the time of alteration or repeal.

and:

28. (1) The bylaws set out in Part 5 have force and effect from the time of the deposit of the strata plan in the land title office until amended or repealed under sections 26 and 27.

Under Part 5 of the Act, headed "Bylaws", section 115 sets out the duties of an owner. Subsections (c) and (g) are relevant:

(c) repair and maintain his strata lot, including windows and doors, and areas allocated to his exclusive use, and keep them in a state of good repair, reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire, storm, tempest or act of God excepted;

(g) comply strictly with these bylaws, and all other bylaws of the strata corporation, and with the rules and regulations adopted from time to time;

The duties of a strata corporation are set out in section 116. Subsection (f) is relevant:

(f) maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a strata lot, including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings;

The bylaws of the respondent strata corporation ultimately adopted are all of the sections in Part 5 of the Condominium Act, i.e. sections 115-132, with additional bylaws numbered consecutively from 133 to 145. There was no alteration or repeal as provided for in section 26, nor were they amended or repealed as provided for in section 28(1). I do not know why the Legislature has chosen to use the word "altered" in section 26 and the word "amended" in section 28. In effect, the bylaws, set out in sections 115-132 were neither amended nor repealed; they were added to. In any event, there was no issue taken with the procedure resulting in the addition to the statutory bylaws. I proceed on the basis, therefore, that sections 115-132 of Part 5 of the Condominium Act, together with the additional bylaws 133-145, are the bylaws under the general provision of section 26, which provide that, "the strata corporation shall have bylaws providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots..."

Mr. Lambert, on behalf of the strata corporation, concedes that the first sentence in bylaw 137, which I have not quoted, does not apply. The question is, therefore, whether, in the circumstances, the corporation should be prohibited from enforcing the existing bylaw and whether the bylaw should be varied. I previously referred to it but I shall repeat it: the exterior of the buildings." This section excludes the Interior sun drapes next to the windows shall not be removed unless they are replaced by similar drapes, as approved by Council.

Statutory bylaw section 115(c) of the Condominium Act provides that the owner shall, "repair and maintain his strata lot, including windows and doors...". Bylaw 116(f) being section 116(f) of the Act provides that the strata corporation shall maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, ...including the decorating of the whole of windows from the strata corporation's duty to maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, but it is responsible for the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings. As to decorating, I interpret this to include the windows and any window coverings when drawn or exposed to the outside.

Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 32, appellant, and Camdev Corporation, Adjeleian, Allen, Rubeli Limited, and the Corporation of the City of Ottawa and Rosto Construction Ltd., respondents

Docket No. C32384

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Osborne A.C.J.O., Catzman and Charron JJ.A. Heard: September 7, 1999. Judgment: September 22, 1999.

Counsel: James Davidson, for the appellant. Nancy Brooks and Gordon Cameron, for the respondents. The following judgment was delivered by [para1] THE COURT:-- The appeal turns on whether the exclusionary clause, contained in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale of unfinished condominium units, is sufficiently clear to exclude the common law warranty of construction implied by law in the sale of uncompleted housing property.

[para2] Forget J., on a motion brought pursuant to Rule 21.01(1)(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure for the determination of certain questions of law, held that the clause was sufficiently wide to exclude the common law implied warranty. Consequently, he held that the appellant, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 32 ("C.C.C. No. 32"), did not have the benefit of the common law implied warranty of construction with respect to common elements in its action against the respondent developer and builder, Camdev Corporation, for damages for defects in construction of the common elements.

[para3] We agree with this conclusion. In light of this finding, it was not necessary for the motions judge to determine the question of duration of any liability under an implied common law warranty and we do not propose to deal with this additional issue. We also find it unnecessary to determine the second question of law raised on the motion as to whether C.C.C. No. 32 could assert the common law implied warranty with respect to all units, including those to which the warranty did not extend because the units were completed when sold, so as to allow for full recovery of damages to the common elements.

[para4] It is clear there is no implied warranty of fitness for human habitation upon the purchase of housing property that is already completed at the time of sale. The common law doctrine of caveat emptor governs with respect to the sale of real property and the purchaser must generally seek protection either by express warranty or by independent examination of the premises. However, in the case of unfinished premises, the common law implies a warranty of construction since there is no opportunity for inspection of the finished premises at the time of sale. See Fraser-Reid v. Droumtsekas, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 720.

[para5] The parties to an agreement of purchase and sale of unfinished housing property are nonetheless free to make their own bargain. Hence, they are at liberty to exclude the application of any common law implied warranty by the terms of their contract. And, as stated by this court in Fraser Jewellers (1982) Ltd. v. Dominion Electric Protection Co. (1997), 34 O.R. (3d) 1 at 10, an exclusionary clause should prima facie be enforced according to its true meaning, with relief being granted only if the test in Hunter Engineering Company Inc. v. Syncrude, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 427 is met:

Relief should be granted only if the clause, seen in the light of the entire agreement, can be said, on Dickson C.J.C.'s test to be "unconscionable" or, on Wilson J.'s test, to be "unfair or unreasonable". The difference in practice between these alternatives, as Professor Waddams has observed, "is unlikely to be large": Waddams, The Law of Contract 3rd. (1993), at p. 323

[para6] In this case, the agreement of purchase and sale contained the following clause:

It is hereby expressly understood and agreed that other than a written one-year guarantee to be issued by the Vendor to the Purchaser, which guarantee shall be personal to the Purchaser and shall be non-assignable to any subsequent Purchaser, there are no warranties or conditions either oral or written save those expressed in this Agreement.

[para7] In performance of this clause, a written one-year guarantee was delivered to the purchasers on closing. It contained, amongst other provisions, the following clause:

This is the only guarantee made or authorized with respect to your home and is in lieu of all other guarantees expressed or implied and of all other obligations and liabilities on part whether with respect to materials or workmanship in the home, damages suffered by the purchaser or others or to his or their effects or otherwise. No guarantee is made beyond the time limited above even though the claimed defect does not become apparent within such period.

[para8] The appellant argues that the clause contained in the agreement of purchase and sale is not wide enough to exclude the common law implied warranty since it refers only to "oral" or "written" warranties. While it is conceded that the further written warranty delivered on closing is wide enough to exclude "implied" warranties, it is argued that this clause is unenforceable against the purchasers since it was given unilaterally by the vendor without consideration.

[para9] We see no merit to the appellant's latter argument. In our view, it is clear under the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale that the parties agreed that the only warranty given by the vendor was the written one-year guarantee to be issued by the vendor. The written guarantee in question was issued in accordance with the terms of the agreement and accepted by the purchasers upon closing the transaction. Indeed, claims were made under this guarantee. Hence the written guarantee forms part of the bargain between the parties and, by its terms, it clearly excludes any implied warranty of construction.

[para10] Finally, we agree with the motions judge that there is no reason why the exclusionary clause in the written guarantee should not be enforced according to its plain meaning. It is not unconscionable, unfair or unreasonable.

[para11] We would dismiss the appeal, confirm the motions judge's answer to the first question of law, and make no comment on the second question.

[para12] On consent of the parties, the costs of the motion and the appeal (including airfare) are in the cause.

Niagara North Condominium Corporation No. 7, applicant, and Peter Goodhew and Gail Goodhew, respondent

Court File No. 39,595/97

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) St. Catharines, Ontario Dandie J. December 18, 1997.

Counsel: James D. Almas, for the respondents. No counsel mentioned for the applicant.

[para1] DANDIE J.:-- At issue is what interpretation should be placed upon two perhaps competing sections of the Condominium Declaration namely part IV Units (1) occupation & use (sub.para. (e)) which paraphrased states that plans for alterations or repairs to a unit are to be submitted for approval and the Board SHALL approve the plans unless the proposed alterations or repairs or the manner of carrying them out are likely to damage or impair the value of any other unit or the common elements. The respondents rely upon this section to place a burden upon the applicant to establish that the installation of a wall unit air conditioner by the respondents has damaged or impaired the value of any other unit or the common elements and part VII Maintenance & Repairs, para (4) Additions or Improvements by Owners which paraphrased reads that prior consent in writing of the Board is required and that any such change shall be in accordance with any condition set by the Board. Approval was obtained in writing to the installation of a air conditioner through the wall under a window which looks out onto the unit's outdoor balcony. The location required by the Board was not acceptable to the respondents who then spoke with two members of the Board of Directors, who in their minds at least, came away with the understanding that it would be in order to place the air conditioning unit in an alternate location. The applicants' position is that consent in writing to th alternate location was not obtained and that the respondents' conclusion that they had received verbal consent to the change was not warranted having regard to the evidence as the applicant understood the conversations to be. I expressed the opinion that the conflicting evidence as to what was said concerning approval of the alternate location could only be resolved by a trial of an issue. The respondents argued that it was not necessary to resolve the conflicting evidence because part IV Units occupation and use should prevail, and there being no evidence that the alternate location has damaged or impaired the value of any other unit or the common elements, the application should be dismissed.

[para2] The applicants' position is that the integrity of the by-laws and regulations is essential and there is good reason to enforce the rules and regulations, that the respondent not having complied, they ought to be forced to comply.

[para3] The respondents' position is that the location where they installed the air conditioning unit is superior to the location demanded by the Board and that the Board has not established that the air conditioner in its present location has damaged or impaired the value of any other unit or the common elements.

[para4] I have examined the photographs submitted by the respondents and find that according to the photographs there does not appear to be any perceived damage or impairment of the value of the common elements. I find that it is incumbent upon the applicant to establish impairment or damage, that they have not done so and the application is dismissed.

[para5] I may be addressed in writing as to costs, Respondent by Jan 14 98, applicant 10 days after (Jan. 25, '98), reply if any 10 days after (Feb. 4, '98).

Jane Barnes and Wendell Green, plaintiffs, and Highland Park Development Corporation, defendant

Court File No. C41564/97

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Himel J. Heard: January 22, 1998. Judgment: February 18, 1998.

Counsel: Reginald Bradburn, for the plaintiffs. G. Slemko, for the defendant.

[para1] HIMEL J.:-- This is a motion for a declaration that an agreement of purchase and sale for a condominium is void and that the plaintiffs properly terminated such agreement, or in the alternative, that the agreement is void as a result of the defendant having breached it by attempting unilaterally to extend the closing date thereunder by a period in excess of 120 days. The plaintiffs also move for summary judgment under Rule 20.01(1) and Rule 20.04 of the Rules of Civil Procedure asserting that the only genuine issue for trial is an issue of law, namely, the interpretation of a clause in the agreement of purchase and sale and that if the legal issue is determined in their favour on this motion, judgment should be granted.

THE FACTS

[para2] The plaintiffs, Jane Barnes and Wendell Green, entered into an agreement on October 12, 1995 to purchase property, Unit 64, Level 1, known as townhouse 143 at 455 Apache Court, Mississauga, Ontario, from the defendant, Highland Park Development Corporation. The offer was accepted on October 12, 1995. The plaintiffs paid a deposit of $8,500.00 to the defendant. The unit had not yet been built and clause 4 of the agreement provided that the occupancy date would be April 23, 1996. Construction of the unit was delayed as a result of a bricklayers' strike which lasted almost three months and the plaintiffs' solicitor was informed of this delay by the defendant's solicitor. The defendant's solicitor wrote to the plaintiffs' solicitor on June 19, 1996 advising that the strike had ended but did not provide a new closing date. On July 18, 1996, the defendant's solicitor wrote that the new "interim occupancy date" was September 16, 1996. On August 19, 1996, the plaintiffs' solicitor wrote the defendant's solicitor by facsimile transmission and ordinary mail stating that they were terminating the agreement.

[para3] There was no response by the defendant until September 3, 1996 at which time, the defendant wrote to state that it was refusing to accept the termination.

[para4] The relevant documentation to be considered in the interpretation of the clause in the agreement of purchase and sale includes:

1. The agreement of purchase and sale dated October 12, 1995.
2. Provisions of Ontario Regulation 894 made under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. 031 which were appended to the agreement and form part thereto as Schedule "G". The pertinent portion of Schedule "G", as appended to the agreement of purchase and sale provides:

EXTENSION AND TERMINATION

5.(i) If the Vendor cannot close by the Closing Date in the Agreement because additional time is required for construction of the Unit, the Vendor shall extend the Closing Date one or more times as may be required by the Vendor by notice in writing to the Purchaser as soon as reasonably possible and in any event prior to the Closing Date or extended Closing Date, all extensions in the aggregate not to exceed 120 days. However, the Vendor shall not extend Closing if the parties have specifically agreed in writing that the Vendor cannot, and the Purchaser does not waive this covenant.

(ii) The Vendor shall take all reasonable steps to construct the Unit without delay.

(iii) If the Closing Date in the Agreement has been extended for 120 days and the Vendor still requires further time for construction of the dwelling, unless subsequent to the Closing Date in the Agreement, the parties otherwise agree the Purchaser may terminate the Agreement within the 10 days immediately after the 120 days have elapsed by delivering or mailing notice in writing to the Vendor at the address shown above (which notice may also be given between solicitors), and upon the giving of such notice this Agreement shall be at an end and all sums paid by the Purchaser shall be returned without interest or deduction. However if the Purchaser does not terminate as above, Closing shall be deemed to be extended to a date 5 days following completion of the dwelling as required by the Agreement but, unless the parties otherwise agree, not later than a further 120 days after the initial 120 day period ...

(iv) Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in it, this Agreement shall not be terminated by the Vendor by reason of failure to complete the dwelling as specified in the Agreement within a period of time or by a date specified in the Agreement, extended as above, unless the Purchaser consents to the termination in writing or the Agreement is ended pursuant to 5(iii) above.

(v) Where there is conflict or ambiguity between the Agreement and this Schedule, this Schedule shall prevail.

Clause 23 of Schedule "F" is also relevant to these proceedings. That clause provides:

23. Any notice required to be delivered pursuant to this Agreement to the Purchaser may either be delivered personally or be delivered by prepaid mail or facsimile transmission addressed to the Purchaser's solicitor or the Purchaser at his last known address and, in the case of the Vendor, any notice required to be delivered pursuant to this Agreement must be delivered personally or sent by facsimile transmission to the Vendor in the care of its solicitors. In the event that such notice is mailed as aforesaid, it shall be deemed to have been received by the party to whom it is addressed on the third business day following the date of its mailing. In the event of a pending or actual mail stoppage, all notices shall be delivered or sent by facsimile transmission.

THE ISSUES

[para5] According to the plaintiffs, the issues to be decided are these: 1. Did the letter delivered via facsimile transmission comply with the termination provisions of Schedule "G" and Ontario Regulation 894?

2. Did the plaintiffs properly terminate the agreement by the delivery of their notice to the defendant by ordinary mail on August 19, 1996?

3. Did the defendant commit an anticipatory breach of the agreement?

[para6] According to the defendant, the issues to be decided are as follows:

1. Did the plaintiffs' failure to object to the extension of the closing date until one (1) month after the extension was made disentitle the plaintiffs from subsequently relying on Schedule "G" to the agreement to terminate the agreement?

2. Are the plaintiffs entitled to rely upon the delay caused by the bricklayers' strike and their own conduct in failing to make finishing selections to terminate the agreement?

3. Was notice of the plaintiffs' intention to terminate delivered outside of the ten (10) day period contemplated by the Ontario New Homes Warranties Plan Act addendum attached to Schedule "G" to the agreement, such that the said notice was not effective?

POSITION OF THE PARTIES

[para7] The plaintiffs take the position that under the agreement of purchase and sale the defendant had to meet a closing date of no later than 120 days from the date of April 23, 1996 and that the aggregate extension period expired on August 21, 1996. The plaintiffs argue that they complied with Schedule "G" of the agreement by delivering notice of termination to the defendants by facsimile transmission on August 19, 1996 or by ordinary mail which was sent on August 19, 1996. They argue that Schedule "F" of the agreement provides in paragraph 23 that any notice that is mailed is deemed to have been received on the third business day following the date of mailing, namely, August 22, 1996. They submit that paragraph 5(iii) of Schedule "G" of the agreement provides that if the closing date in the agreement had been extended 120 days and the vendor still requires further time for construction, the plaintiff may terminate the agreement within 10 days after the 120 days has elapsed by delivering notice in writing. They submit that, at that point, the agreement was at an end and all sums paid by the purchaser were to be returned without interest or deduction. The plaintiffs submit that paragraph 5(iii) is part of consumer protection legislation and should be given a broad liberal interpretation to benefit the plaintiffs (see: Wong v. Greyrock (Saddlebrook) Building Corp. (1993), 34 R.P.R. (2d) 215 (Ont.Gen.Div.) at 220). They submit that proper notice to terminate was given by both facsimile transmission and by ordinary mail. The plaintiffs also argue that the defendant attempted to extend the closing date unilaterally to September 16, 1996 which is 145 days from the original closing date and, therefore, committed an anticipatory breach of the agreement.

[para8] The defendant's position is that had the defendant been aware that the plaintiffs wanted to adhere strictly to the 120 day period provided by Schedule "G", the defendant could have pulled workers from elsewhere to complete the plaintiffs' unit. Counsel submits that a party cannot cancel a contract without giving notice so as to allow the other party an opportunity to comply (see Three D Developments Kingswood Ltd. v. Marshall (1994), 39 R.P.R. (2d) 241 (Ont.Gen.Div.)). The defendant also argues that the vendor is not responsible for delays caused by strikes and that the plaintiffs contributed to the delay by not attending on two previously arranged occasions to make finishing selections provided in the agreement.

[para9] The defendant submits that it rejected the plaintiffs' purported termination because no notice was received within the ten day window following the 120 day period after the original date of closing under Schedule "G" to the agreement. The defendant relies on a decision of the Ontario New Homes Warranty Program dated January 15, 1997 which denied a claim by the plaintiffs and found that the notice to terminate was not made within the proper 10 day notice period under paragraph 5(iii) of Schedule "G", Ontario Regulation 894. Finally, the defendant's counsel takes the position that the date which determines the window for the termination period following the 120 days should be interpreted under the agreement of purchase and sale to be,

"... the later of:

(i) the "Occupancy Date"; or

(ii) a date 14 days after the Vendor's solicitor notifies the Purchaser or his solicitor of the registration of the Condominium and requests a formal closing with a specified date for closing; ..."

WHETHER THE CASE FALLS WITHIN RULE 20.04

[para10] As a preliminary matter, it must be determined whether there are any issues of fact more appropriately dealt with at a full trial than in a summary judgment application. The relevant facts in this case are not in dispute. There is no factual dispute that needs to be resolved in order to determine the main legal issue in this action. That issue, whether the contract was properly terminated by the applicant, can be determined by answering the following questions:

1. Was it open to the plaintiffs to avail themselves of the termination procedure set out in clause 5(iii) of Schedule "G", given that:

(a) the major cause of the delay was an event beyond the control of the respondent, specifically a bricklayers' strike;

(b) the plaintiffs did not make any objections to the delay during the strike or at the time the occupancy date was extended by the July 18, 1996 letter;

(c) the plaintiffs were partially responsible for the delay because they did not meet with the defendant to make "purchasers' finishing selections" for the unit; and

(d) the "closing date" as defined in Schedule "G" was not the same as the proposed occupancy date of April 23, 1996?

2. If it was open to the plaintiffs to avail themselves of cl. 5(iii), did they follow the proper procedure for a valid termination?

THE AVAILABILITY OF CLAUSE 5(iii)(a) Delay caused by strike:

[para11] There appears to be no dispute that the bricklayers' strike was the major cause of the delay in completion of the townhouse unit. The issue is whether this delay disentitles the plaintiffs from relying on the termination procedure set out in clause 5(iii). In support of this argument, counsel for the defendant relies on changes made to the Regulations under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act as a result of O. Reg. 117/91, s. 1. Regulation 117/91 amended R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 892, s. 17. The provision upon which the applicant seeks to rely provides:

17(11) Subsection (5) does not apply to a period of delay in occupancy caused by strike, fire, flood, act of God or civil insurrection.

Subsection 17(5) provides that, in certain situations, a vendor may become liable to a purchaser for living expenses and other costs if the purchaser is unable to occupy the unit within five days of the "confirmed occupancy date". The term "confirmed occupancy date" is defined in subsections 17(6) and 17(7).

[para12] The provisions contemplate that a vendor will be responsible to a purchaser for living expenses that a purchaser may incur because a unit is not ready on the promised occupancy date. That was not the case in this action. The applicants here are not seeking damages for living expenses, and it therefore appears that s. 17(11) is not relevant.

[para13] It may be that the defendant is arguing that, by analogy, the terms of clause 5(iii) should be read in such a way as to relieve the vendor from strict compliance with the 120-day deadline given that the reason for the delay was a strike. In essence, the defendant is asking the court to find that there is an implied term of the agreement of purchase and sale that the vendor is relieved of the effect of a delay in occupancy caused by a strike or other intervening act beyond the vendor's control. This reasoning is akin to the long line of common law cases dealing with the doctrine of frustration. The doctrine applies where a supervening cause prevents the contract from being performed. Where frustration applies, both parties are discharged from performing the contract. In this case, the vendor asserts that the supervening event should not lead to a discharge of the contract, but merely a delay in its performance. Viscount Simon L.C. explained the underlying rationale for the doctrine of frustration in the following terms:

... The most satisfactory basis, I think, on which the doctrine can be put is that it depends on an implied term in the contract of the parties. This was the basis adopted in Taylor v. Caldwell (3 B. & S. 839) which is practically the first case of the modern line of authorities. It is the view taken in many later cases ... It has the advantage of bringing out the distinction that there can be no discharge by supervening impossibility if the express terms of the contract bind the parties to performance notwithstanding that the supervening event may occur. Discharge by supervening impossibility is not a common law rule of general application, like discharge by supervening illegality; whether the contract is terminated or not depends on its terms and the surrounding circumstances in each case ...

See Joseph Constantine Steamship Line, Limited v. Imperial Smelting Corporation, Limited [1942] A.C. 154 (H.L.) at 163.

[para14] What is clearly contemplated is that the parties are entitled to allocate the risk of unforeseen, intervening events that may either frustrate or delay performance of the contract. In this case, the contract contains no force majeure clause which would relieve the vendor of liability due to delays caused by labour disputes. Further, the wording of clause 5(iii) is quite clear: it will apply if the closing date has been "extended for 120 days and the Vendor still requires further time for the construction of the dwelling". Nowhere does clause 5(iii) provide for additional delays if the vendor is unable to finish the construction due to circumstances beyond its control; instead, it implies that the vendor will be held strictly to the terms of the contract. Such an interpretation makes sense in a commercial context. It is the vendor who is in control of building the project and it is the vendor who is best able to estimate how long it will take to complete. Furthermore, the vendor can delay closing up to 120 days after its original estimate. It must also be remembered that clause 5(iii) does not render the vendor liable in damages for its delay, nor must it pay interest on the deposit monies.

(b) Plaintiffs' lack of objection:

[para15] The defendant asserts that it should not be bound to strictly comply with the closing date because the plaintiffs did not object to the extension beyond the 120-day period. In a letter addressed to the plaintiffs' solicitors, dated July 18, 1996, the vendor advised the purchaser about the postponement of the occupancy date in the following terms:

Pursuant to paragraph 5 of the Warranty Program schedule "G" to the Agreement and the notice provisions set out in paragraph 23 of Schedule "F", you are hereby notified that September 16, 1996 is the new date for interim occupancy.

The plaintiffs did not respond to this letter until August 19, 1996, at which time they purported to terminate the agreement pursuant to clause 5(iii).

[para17] The classic definition of waiver was expounded by Lord Denning in W.J. Alan & Co. Ltd. v. El Nasr Export and Import Co., [1972] 2 All E.R. 127 (C.A.) at p. 140:

The principle of waiver is simply this: If one party, by his conduct, leads another to believe that the strict rights arising under the contract will not be insisted on, intending that the other should act on that belief, and he does act on it, then the first party will not afterwards be allowed to insist on the strict legal rights when it would be inequitable for him to do so ...

[para18] Upon receipt of the July 18 letter, the purchasers had the option of either accepting the new occupancy date or rejecting it. In order to accept the date, they needed to do nothing but wait until the unit was ready and move in. The process of rejecting the new date (and thereby terminating the contract) was set out in clause 5(iii), which required them to notify the vendor after the 120-day had elapsed. That is precisely what the purchasers purported to do. The purchasers' silence after receiving the July 18 letter cannot be taken as a waiver of the rights-under clause 5(iii). Given that the contract provided a specific mechanism by which the purchasers could reject the offer of a new closing date (i.e. by terminating the agreement), the purchasers' silence after the July 18 letter could not reasonably be construed as a waiver of any rights. It should also be noted that the July 18 letter does not ask for a reply and does not suggest that, if the extended date is unsatisfactory to the purchasers, the vendor could redirect its resources and have the unit completed on time.

[para19] The facts of this case may be distinguished from those in Three D Developments Kingswood Ltd. v. Marshall (supra). In that case, the court did not consider any contractual provision prescribing the method whereby the purchaser could terminate if there was a delay in the occupancy date. Further, the purchaser in that case, after receiving notice of the delayed occupancy date, instructed his solicitor to search the title on the property. When the purchaser requested he be released from the transaction, he explained that he would be relocating to another city to take up a new job. The court held that the purchaser had not treated the contract as at an end when the occupancy date was extended and, further, his subsequent conduct (in ordering his lawyer to search title) indicated that he planned to complete the transaction.

[para20] In the case at bar, the purchasers gave no indication that they planned to complete the transaction; they waited, as they were permitted to do under the contract, until 120 days elapsed and then gave notice of termination.

(c) Delay making "purchasers' final selections":

[para21] The defendant argued that the plaintiffs' delay in meeting with employees of the defendant to make final selections for the unit, such as choosing the colour of the ceramic tile, places part of the responsibility for the delay on the purchasers. According to a letter from the vendor's solicitors to the purchasers' solicitors, Exhibit "H" to the affidavit of Peter Plastina, the purchasers missed two appointments in August, which were scheduled so that the purchasers could make their selections. If there was any delay attributable to the purchasers, it arose after the occupancy date of September 16, 1996 had already been named by the vendor. That date itself is beyond the 120-day period. The purchasers' conduct may have caused the vendor to be unable to make the unit available until after September 16, but that is irrelevant to these proceedings. As of July 18, the occupancy date had been set at a date beyond the 120-day period, and the purchasers were entitled to rely on clause 5(iii). Further delays after July 18 are irrelevant with reference to the provision of clause 5(iii) allowing the purchasers to terminate the agreement.

[para22] It should further be noted that, had the purchasers met with employees of the vendor and made selections for the unit, that conduct may well have been viewed as implying a waiver of the purchasers' rights under clause 5(iii).

(d) Definition of "closing date": [para23] Clause 5(iii) allows the purchasers to terminate the agreement if the vendor needs more time to complete construction after the "Closing Date in the Agreement" has been extended for 120 days. The respondent argues that the phrase "Closing Date in the Agreement" should be read in light of clause 3 of the agreement of purchase and sale, which provides:

3. This transaction of purchase and sale is to be completed on the Closing Date which is to be the later of:

(i) the "Occupancy Date"; or

(ii) a date 14 days after the Vendor's solicitor notifies the Purchaser or his solicitor of the registration of the Condominium and requests a formal closing with a specified date for closing; provided that the Vendor shall have the option of advancing the Closing Date on sixty (60) day written notice to the Purchaser.

Clause 4 of the agreement provides that the "Occupancy Date" shall be April 23, 1996. The respondent contends that April 23 was not the "Closing Date" for the purpose of clause 5(iii) in Schedule "G". Rather, the "Closing Date" could fall sometime later, i.e. the date 14 days after the vendor's solicitor notified the purchaser of the registration of the condominium. The logical conclusion from this argument is that "Closing Date" is wholly within the control of the vendor. If the "Occupancy Date" is delayed, then the vendor can simply delay notifying the purchaser of the registration of the condominium. On that interpretation of "Closing Date", the vendor could delay occupation for an indeterminate amount of time and the purchaser would never be able to invoke clause 5(iii).

[para24] It must be noted that Schedule "G" was incorporated into the agreement of purchase and sale pursuant to R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 894 (as amended), s. 12, which requires that schedule to form a part of every such agreement. The Regulations are pursuant to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. "Closing date" is not defined in those Regulations nor in the Act, but it seems plain from the terms in clause 5 of Schedule "G" that the Regulation is designed to protect purchasers in the event the vendor fails to complete the unit in a timely fashion. Clause 5(i) provides that the vendor can extend the "Closing Date" up to 120 days, but also allows the parties to opt out of this clause, which would mean the purchaser could hold the vendor to strict compliance with the deadline initially agreed upon. Clause 5(ii) provides that the vendor shall take all reasonable steps to complete construction. Clause 5(iv) provides that, in spite of any delays, etc. on the part of the vendor, the purchaser must consent before the agreement can be terminated.

[para25] The purpose of this clause is clearly to protect the purchaser from undue delays in construction of the unit. If the parties agree, the purchaser is entitled to hold the vendor to strict compliance with the original occupation date. The vendor is required to avoid undue delay in construction. Even if the purchaser is entitled to terminate the agreement, he or she can refuse to do so and the vendor may be bound to complete the transaction.

[para26] Therefore, "Closing Date" as used in the schedule must refer to what is known in the agreement which must mean the initially agreed upon occupancy date. Any other definition of "Closing Date" would render meaningless the protections provided to purchasers in clause 5.

[para27] If that is the case, there is clearly a conflict between the meaning of "Closing Date" in clause 5 of the schedule and "Closing Date" in clause 3 of the agreement. In the event of a conflict between the schedule and the agreement, clause 5(v) of the schedule provides that the schedule shall prevail. It seems clear, therefore, that the meaning of "Closing Date" which is implicit in Schedule "G" prevails. The "Closing Date" for the purposes of clause 5(iii), therefore, was April 23, 1996. The vendor was entitled to extend that date by 120 days. If the vendor extended that date for more than 120 days, the purchasers were entitled to terminate the agreement provided they followed the process set out in clause 5(iii).

CONCLUSION

[para28] In my view, the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on clause 5(iii) in terminating the agreement. Although the cause of the delay may have been beyond the control of the vendors, the agreement contemplated that it was the vendors who would bear the risk of such contingencies. The plaintiffs' failure to object to the July 18, 1996 letter advising of the extended closing date did not constitute a waiver and did not give rise to an estoppel. The plaintiffs' failure to make final selections during August was irrelevant, as the closing date had already been extended beyond the 120-day period. Finally, the definition of closing date in cl. 3 of the agreement does not apply to the provisions of Schedule "G", which clearly contemplates "Closing Date" to mean the original occupancy date.

THE PROPER PROCEDURE FOR INVOKING CLAUSE 5(iii):

[para29] Clause 5(iii) allowed the purchasers to terminate the agreement by providing notice "within the 10 days immediately after the 120 days have elapsed by delivering or mailing notice". The 120-day delay from the initial April 23, 1996 closing date elapsed on August 21, 1996. The purchasers' solicitors sent a facsimile to the vendor's solicitors on August 19, 1996, purported to terminate the agreement. On the same day, the purchasers' solicitors mailed a notice to the same effect.

[para30] The facsimile transmission was not sent within the 10 days immediately after the 120-day period. However, the mailed notice may well have been. Clause 23 of Schedule "F" of the agreement provides that delivery of notices to the vendor must be done personally or via fax. However, clause 5(iii) of Schedule "G" specifically allows the purchaser to mail notice of termination. Given the provision in clause 5(v), that, where there is a conflict, Schedule "G" shall prevail, it was open to the purchaser to mail the notice. Clause 23 in Schedule "F" also provides that any notice mailed between the parties is "deemed to be received by the party to whom it is addressed on the third business day following the date of its mailing". There seems to be no conflict between this part of clause 23 and the provisions of Schedule "G" and it is therefore applicable to mailing notice of termination under clause 5(iii). If that is the case, then, regardless of when the notice was received by the vendor's solicitors, it was deemed to be received on August 22, 1996. That date falls within the 10 days immediately after the 120-day delay period.

[para31] In my opinion, the plaintiffs have properly terminated the agreement of purchase and sale and are entitled to summary judgment pursuant to Rule 20.04(4).

DAMAGES

[para32] The plaintiffs in this case have applied pursuant to Rule 20.04(3), which allows the court to order a trial on the issues of damages. The prerequisite to ordering such a trial is that "the court is satisfied that the only genuine issue is the amount to which a moving party is entitled". This provision requires the court to be satisfied that there is a genuine issue regarding damages before ordering a trial on the matter. It therefore appears to be open to the court to deny a motion under Rule 20.04(3) if it is convinced that there is no genuine issue regarding the amount to which the plaintiffs are entitled.

[para33] In this case, clause 5(iii) makes it clear that, upon the purchasers' exercise of the termination clause, the vendor is required to return the deposit, without interest. In essence, the clause contemplates rescission of the contract. Rescission is available at common law where there is an innocent misrepresentation or a mutual mistake regarding an essential term of the contract. When rescission occurs, the general rule is that the contract is at an end. For a sale of goods contract, the vendor would be entitled to the return of the property sold and the purchaser would be entitled to the return of the purchase price paid. As noted by G.H.L. Fridman in Restitution, Second Edition, (Carswell, 1992) at p. 200:

The nature and effect of rescission of a contract are such that the innocent party (or both parties if both are innocent) should be restored to the position in which such party was (or both parties were) prior to the making of the contract. The policy of the law is to prevent either party obtaining an undue advantage or an unjust enrichment ... there ought to be a complete restoration between the parties of whatever tangible benefits either party has received from the other under the contract that is rescinded.

By analogy, clause 5(iii) contemplates rescission in that the vendor keeps the real property and the purchasers get their deposit back.

[para34] The damages claimed in the statement of claim do not flow from any breach of contract. It is clear from the contract that any "breach" by the vendor regarding a delayed closing date would be resolved under the provisions of clause 5(iii). At the point that the plaintiffs exercised their rights under clause 5(iii) the contract was terminated and any subsequent actions on the part of the defendant cannot be viewed as a breach of contract.

[para35] The plaintiffs in this case have asked for a declaration that the contract was terminated on August 22, 1996. Upon making such a declaration, it follows as a matter of law that the plaintiffs are only entitled to the return of their deposit. Therefore, there appears to be no genuine issue regarding damages that would necessitate a trial.

[para36] Regarding interest, clause 5(iii) makes it clear that, upon termination, the deposit is returnable "without interest or deduction". The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to interest prior to the date of termination, August 22, 1996. Clause 5(iii) makes no mention of when the vendor must return the deposit. In that case, it may be assumed that the vendor would be afforded a reasonable amount of time to return the money. Pre-judgment interest, therefore, will run from two weeks after the termination date of August 22, 1996.

[para37] Accordingly, summary judgment is granted in favour of the plaintiffs as follows:

- (a) The deposit of $8,500.00 will be paid to the plaintiffs;
- (b) Pre-judgment interest is granted to the plaintiffs from September 2, 1996 pursuant to the Courts of Justice Act;
- (c) All other claims in the Statement of Claim are dismissed.

[para38] With respect to costs of the motion and application, as agreed upon by counsel, they may file written submissions with me within 15 days following the date of release of this judgment.

Doc. Nos. 4347/89 and 4583T

Ontario Supreme Court - High Court of Justice Master Browne Oral judgment: June 7, 1990.

Counsel: P.C. Strickland, for the plaintiffs. A. Steele, for the defendants.

[para1] MASTER BROWNE (orally):-- On these references there is one issue that remains outstanding and is common to both transactions. The issue is to adjust the figures between vendor and purchaser for the purpose of closing a condominium purchase and sale pursuant to previous judgments directing a reference to determine such amount. Each party, vendor and purchaser, has submitted a statement of adjustments. There is basic agreement that the statements of adjustment prepared on behalf of the purchasers are an adequate reflection of the amount required to close except for one issue: that is the entitlement to credit to the purchasers for occupancy fees. This involves a consideration of phantom mortgages, the wording of the agreement of purchase and sale and, in particular, s. 51(6) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, which provides for the vendor an entitlement to occupancy fees. There are three elements spelled out in that section. The amounts payable for estimated or projected common expenses and the amount reasonably estimated for municipal taxes are not in dispute. What is in dispute is the amount pursuant to s. 51(6):

"The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit."

[para2] There is great similarity in the material before me and that considered by Rosenberg J. in Albrecht v. Opemoco Incorporated (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 151. The phantom mortgage provisions in that decision included a right of election whereby the purchasers could elect to give the mortgage. That is absent on the facts before me, and it is argued that it is a material distinction. I do not agree with that position. The provisions dealing with the phantom mortgage are found in Schedule A, para. 14 of the agreement of purchase and sale, which spells out that the mortgage will have an interest rate fixed by formula, repayable interest only monthly and be due 30 days after the closing date. The provisions also include:

"The Vendor shall be under no obligation to complete the sale of the Unit unless the Purchaser shall have first deposited in escrow with the Vendor's solicitor a certified cheque sufficient in amount to pay the entire principal balance of the Vendor Take Back Mortgage. It is understood that such certified cheque is to be applied by the Vendor's solicitor to discharge the Vendor Tak Back Mortgage at any time after closing upon demand by the Vendor."

[para3] That is substantially similar to the provisions in the phantom mortgage considered by Rosenberg J. He sets out a similar paragraph on p. 156.

[para4] In his judgment, he traces the history of the Condominium Act in Ontario and the treatment of occupancy costs. He reviews the aim of the legislation in addressing occupation costs, which might have been, without legislated safeguards, too onerous from a purchaser's point of view. As he indicates and as is indicated in the quoted reasons by Dupont J., the amendments to the Act and the section now for consideration permit in certain fact situations, of which Rosenberg J. gives examples, a purchaser to benefit in a windfall sense. It is not disputed that a developer has costs of construction and carrying costs of the development down to closing and an entitlement to, at the practical level, recover something on account of that cost. However, as the examples given illustrate, there remain situations where the purchasers may, in certain fact situations, be beneficiaries of a windfall. [para5] The facts before Rosenberg J. may have been more compelling than the facts before me, but I find there is sufficient dovetailing and overlapping of the facts in both cases to make those reasons not only persuasive, but binding upon me. The headnote characterizes the phantom mortgages in the Albrecht decision as being clearly a sham to avoid s. 51(6). The quoted provision from the agreement of purchase and sale supports that same conclusion which I make. I find that the credits shown upon the statements of adjustments are proper, and I have endorsed my procedure book:

"For oral reasons given the purchasers are to be given credit for refund of occupancy fee re: interest component of the phantom mortgage."

[para6] In the result funds shall be paid into court subject to further order and in particular not to be paid out until all costs of the plaintiffs have been satisfied. Plaintiffs may apply for a vesting order at the costs of the defendant.

[para7] The statement of adjustments prepared by plaintiffs is approved.

[para8] Balance to close is adjusted further as follows:

"Re Ormond:

Balance payable as per the statement: $70,950.00 Less refund to purchaser: $21,090.33

$49,859.67 Less costs assessed as per judgment: $ 4,963.60

$44,896.07 Less reference costs to date: $600.00

Revised or adjusted balance Payable into court to close: $44,296.07

Re Granovsky:

Balance payable as per the statement: $72,375.00 Less refund to purchaser: $5,922.73

$66,452.27 Less costs assessed as per judgment and order made this date: $5,123.07

$61,329.20 Less reference costs to date: $600.00

Revised or adjusted balance Payable into court to close: $60,729.20"

[para9] There will be an interim report prepared incorporating those findings.

Kerry Turner and William Turner, applicants (respondents), and Ontario New Home Warranty Program, respondent (appellant)

Court File No. 230/97

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Divisional Court O'Leary, Campbell and Salhany JJ. Heard: September 15, 1997. Oral judgment: September 22, 1997.

Counsel: Carol Street, for the applicants (respondents). Douglas Christie, for the respondent (appellant).

Reasons for judgment were delivered by O'Leary J., concurred in by Campbell J. Separate reasons were delivered by Salhany J.

[para1] O'LEARY J. (orally):-- This is an appeal by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program from a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal which awarded a sum of money to the applicants who had been the purchasers of a condominium unit. The agreement of purchase and sale under which the purchasers agreed to buy the unit provides that the vendor for reasons beyond its control can extend the time for occupancy. The agreement also provides:

2. (b) The purchase and sale of the Unit shall be completed on the later of the occupancy date, or on a date fixed by the Vendor not more than 30 days after registration of the Declaration, or such later date as permitted by this agreement.

[para2] The vendor fixed Jan. 29, 1991 as the closing date. The agreement of purchase and sale makes no provision for a further fixing or extension of the closing date. On Jan. 29, 1991 the vendor could not close the transaction because a large lien had been registered which it could not discharge. It is irrelevant that the purchasers could not close as well on Jan. 29, 1991 because the vendor's failure to remove the lien was the cause of the purchasers' inability to close because they could not raise the necessary mortgage.

[para3] Accordingly the transaction was at an end on Jan. 29, 1991. The purchasers were entitled to call the deal off and look to the vendor for repayment of the moneys paid to it.

[para4] The purchasers then fall within s. 14(1) of the Ontario Home Warranty Plan in that they had a cause of action in damages against the vendor because of the vendor's failure to perform the contract. The amount of those damages was the amount that the purchasers had already paid to the vendor on account of the purchase price.

[para5] It was argued by the appellant that the purchasers showed a lack of good faith by failing to permit an extension of the closing date on Jan. 29, 1991 in that they so refuse because the price of the condominium unit had greatly decreased over the prior months. The evidence in that regard does not convince me that the purchasers acted for that reason or indeed that in any other way they were acting in bad faith when they abandoned the condominium unit within a day or two of Jan. 29, 1991 and called the transaction off.

[para6] Accordingly then the appeal is dismissed.

O' LEARY J. CAMPBELL J. -- I agree.

[para7] SALHANY J. (orally dissenting):-- With regret I must dissent from my colleagues. I would allow the appeal and dismiss the application for compensation. In my view, the jurisdiction of the tribunal to pay out of the guaranteed fund to a purchaser lies in s. 14(1) (a) of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan. That section only authorizes payment where the purchaser has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for:

(a) financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor; or (b) the vendor's failure to perform a contract.

The purpose of the legislation, in my view, is to compensate a purchaser for the acts of the vendor over which the purchaser has no control, such as the bankruptcy of the vendor or the inability of the vendor to close. To put it another way, it is the actions of the vendor which must cause the loss suffered by the purchaser.

[para8] It is true that in this case the vendor was unable to close on a specific date because there were liens on the property. However, at some later time, the vendor was able to close but the purchasers were not prepared to do so because, understandably, the price of the unit had fallen dramatically. That fall in value had nothing to do with the actions of the vendor. The value would have fallen in any event, even if the purchasers had closed the transaction on the agreed date of closing.

[para9] The position of the respondent is that the purchasers were entitled to walk away from the agreement because the vendor failed to close on the date set out in the agreement of purchase and sale and, that in the specific circumstances of this case, there was no obligation on the purchaser to extend the date of closing. In my view, the fact that the purchaser may have been entitled in law to walk away from its contractual obligations vis -à-vis the vendor entitled it to recover from the vendor its deposit. But it did not give the purchaser the right to recover damages from the vendor for breach of contract, which is the jurisdictional basis for the tribunal to make the award under s. 14(1)(a) of the Act.

[para10] The purchasers did not bring an action to recover the amount of its deposit. Had they done so, been successful and unable to recover from the vendor, then it might have been open for them to seek recovery under the plan on the basis of the bankruptcy of the vendor.

[para11] I am not suggesting that the purchasers had any obligation to do so. Simply, had they done so and been unable to recover because of the vendor's lack of funds, then the purchaser might have been able to recover because of the bankruptcy of the vendor. In such instance, the purchasers would have fallen clearly within a s. 14(1)(a). [para12] For these reasons I would allow the appeal and dismiss the application before the tribunal with costs.

Almel Inc., applicant (appellant), and Halton Condominium Corporation No. 77, respondent (respondent in appeal)

No. C14754

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario McMurtry C.J.O., Osborne and Charron JJ.A. Heard: February 6, 1997. Judgment: February 28, 1997.

Counsel: P. David McCutcheon for the appellant. B. Duxbury for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- This appeal concerns the interpretation of a grant of right of way to the appellant, Almel Inc., over the property of the respondent, Halton Condominium Corporation No. 77. The appellant, which operates a gasoline and service station on the subject property, intends to add a car wash facility, and wishes to use the right of way as a turning area for vehicles using the car wash. The appellant also wishes to grade and pave or gravel a portion of the right of way in order to facilitate this intended use.

[para2] In the proceedings below, the appellant sought a declaration that it is entitled to make use of the right of way as proposed. The respondent contended that the proposed use went beyond the scope of the grant and that, in any event, the right of way had been extinguished since it no longer served its original intended purpose. Although the motions judge was of the view that the right of way had not been extinguished, she dismissed the appellant's application on the ground that the proposed use went beyond the scope of the grant.

[para3] The governing principles are not in issue. When a right of way has been created by express grant, the scope of permissible use depends on the words used. The circumstances existing at the time of the grant may also be looked at to construe the nature and extent of the rights conveyed. See Laurie v. Winch, [1953] 1 S.C.R. 49. In the case of a general grant, as here, the permissible use is not limited to the original use. Although the owner of the dominant tenement cannot alter the type of use of the right of way beyond its original scope, the burden on the servient tenement can be reasonably increased so long as the use is of the same general nature, and it can reasonably be said to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the grant.

[para4] The right of way was granted by the respondent's predecessor in title by an indenture dated November 16, 1955. The indenture granted "a right-of-way in perpetuity in common with the vendors, their heirs and assigns, over, along and upon a strip of land ..., the said right-of-way being for the purpose of ingress, egress, and regress only and not for the purpose of erecting any building, buildings, pumps, or outlets." The right of way is thirty feet wide and runs the full depth of the appellant's property. It is situated between the properties of the appellant and the respondent. [para5] At the time the right of way was granted, the appellant's property was vacant land intended to be used for a gasoline and service station. Since the mid-1950s, the appellant's property has been used commercially as a gasoline and service station. The respondent's property was used for commercial purposes at the time of the grant. The Top Hat Restaurant was located approximately five feet from the right of way; the Top Hat Motel was also located on the property, further away from the right of way. In the mid-1970s, the restaurant and motel were demolished, and a condominium was built that still exists today.

[para7] At the outset, it should be indicated that we see no merit to the respondent's contention that the right of way has been extinguished. Before a right of way created by grant can be extinguished, it must be demonstrated that the party entitled to it had a settled intention to abandon the right of way: Tehidy Minerals Ltd. v. Norman, [1971] 2 All E.R. 475 (C.A.); Liscombe v. Maughan (1928), 62 O.L.R. 328 (C.A.). The evidence does not in any way support such a finding.

[para8] In our view, the appeal must be allowed. First, there is nothing in the wording of the grant that would restrict the appellant from using the right of way in the manner proposed. Second, the addition of a car wash to the appellant's business will not bring about a change in use of the right of way. The intention is still to use the right of way "for the purpose of ingress, egress, and regress". And, since it must be assumed that the grant was intended to be effective for the purposes for which the property was designed to be used or was actually used, the right of "ingress, egress and regress" includes a right to stop for a reasonable time for the legitimate business purposes of the appellant. See McIlraith v. Grady, [1968] 1 Q.B. 468 (C.A.). Third, we are of the view that while the addition of the car wash to the gasoline and service station may result in an increased burden on the servient tenement, in the sense that the right of way will likely be used more frequently, the intended use remains of the same general nature, and can reasonably be said to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the grant.

[para9] The appeal is therefore allowed, the judgment below is set aside and in its stead it is hereby declared that the appellant is entitled to use the right of way as a turning area for vehicles using the car wash and that it is entitled to grade and pave or gravel a portion of the right of way in order to facilitate such use.

[para10] The appellant is entitled to its costs on the appeal and in the court below.

CBR# 299

Skyrise Developments Limited, plaintiff, and Louis Aldrovandi and Gianna Aldrovandi, defendants

Court File No. 93-CQ-40341

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Hawkins J. Heard: November 5-8, 18 and 22, 1996. Judgment: February 6, 1997.

Counsel: Howard Gerson, for the plaintiff. Christopher Dockrill, for the defendants.

[para1] HAWKINS J.:-- This is an action by a condominium developer for damages occasioned by the Defendants' failure to complete the purchase of a condominium unit. The Defendants counterclaim for the return of their deposit and "extra" monies paid under the contract.

[para2] The unit in question (Suite 1604) is located in a luxury high-rise development in the Yonge/Steeles area.

[para3] The Defendants, Louis and Gianna Aldrovandi are in what is frequently referred to as their "golden years". He is 70, she is 63 and they have been married 40 years. Mr. Aldrovandi has a technical school education and a background in heavy construction equipment.

[para4] They have resided in the same house in Scarborough since 1969. In 1986 a daughter died. Mr. Aldrovandi's work takes him away from home frequently. The daughter had been a comfort to and company for Mrs. Aldrovandi. Following the child's death, Mrs. Aldrovandi began to feel uncomfortable and uneasy about staying alone in the house at night. Although the daughter's death had absolutely nothing to do with lack of security, the Aldrovandi's had a security system installed following the death of their daughter.

[para5] Against this background, Mr. and Mrs. Aldrovandi, on 15 May 1989, entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for the subject property with occupancy for 12 December 1991, some 2-1/2 years down the road. The price was $458,300. [para6] By letter dated 5 November 1991, the Aldrovandis were advised that the unit would be ready for occupancy on time, i.e. 12 December 1991, and they were given all the necessary information to arrange a pre-occupancy inspection.

[para7] The response to that was a letter from the Plaintiff's solicitor, dated 21 November 1991, almost peremptory in tone, asking for a reduction in purchase price based on the decline in condominium prices. It worked. The vendors agreed to a reduction of $83,300 (just over 18%).

[para8] The Defendants did not take occupancy on 12 December 1991. Instead their solicitor wrote a letter on that very day complaining of the lack of a security system and a number of complaints having to do with unfinished entrance, lack of carpet in the corridors, dirt and dust and continuing construction.

[para9] The vendor's solicitors responded four days later, making it crystal and unmistakably clear that in their view the complaints, even if valid, did not excuse the purchasers from their occupancy obligations. [para10] It is appropriate to emphasize that "occupancy" does not require the purchasers to move in. Rather, it involves essentially financial obligations.

[para11] The stern letter from the vendor's solicitors brought a response from the purchasers' solicitors dated 27 December 1991. The substance of the purchasers' complaints had shifted from the physical state of the building to an alleged representation, at the time the agreement of purchase and sale was entered into (May 1989), that approximately 70% of the units had already been sold. The purchasers complained that it would take another three months (say, March 1992) for even 30% occupancy to be obtained. They did not want to live in an incomplete and deserted building and asked for an extension of occupancy date for approximately three months.

[para12] By letter of 25 March 1992, the purchasers were directly advised by the vendor's solicitors that their failure to comply with the occupancy requirements had put them in breach and that the agreement was, therefore, terminated.

[para13] The purchasers' solicitors responded to that letter of 16 April 1992, alleging a representation given at the time of the agreement of purchase and sale that the purchasers would not have to take occupancy until the building was fully occupied.

[para14] The issues to be determined are as follows:

1. Was the unit, as of 12 December 1991 "substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy"?
2. Was there a misrepresentation in May 1989 that the building was 70% sold?
3. Was there a representation in May 1989 that the Aldrovandis would not be required to take occupancy until the building was fully occupied?
4. Was there, at 12 December 1991, a lack of security sufficient to excuse the purchasers from their contractual obligation to occupy?

[para15] The unit was inspected on 6 December 1991 and a Township of Vaughan Provisional Occupancy Certificate was issued that same day. Mr. Doug Overholt, the Senior Building Inspector for the Township, testified that a Provisional Occupancy Certificate permits occupancy. The inspection is concerned with essential services and safety but not with aesthetics and not with a security system which has nothing to do with the building code.

[para16] I am satisfied that the unit satisfied the Township's requirements for occupancy and also the contractual requirement that it be "substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy".

[para17] Mrs. Sylvia Gold was the real estate agent who dealt with the Aldrovandis. She is no longer connected with the vendor. She had no present memory of her dealings with the Aldrovandis, which is not at all surprising, considering the number of purchasers she must have dealt with both before and after May 1989. There were 2 buildings connected with this project. "Phase I" fronting on Yonge Street, was open for sale in 1987 or 1988. "Phase II" (the subject phase) fronting on Clarke Avenue was open for sale in 1989. By May 1989 only 8-10 contracts had been signed according to Mrs. Gold. She says that she never told the Aldrovandis or anyone else in May 1989 that Phase II was then over 70% sold. She said she may have made such a remark about Phase I which was, at that time, about 70% sold.

[para18] Mrs. Gold is equally firm in her testimony that she never told the Aldrovandis that they did not have to comply with the occupancy terms of the agreement until a certain level of occupancy had been attained. She conceded that security was generally an important consideration and often discussed with prospective purchasers. There was to be a "security pad" in each unit, card readers for the garage and an "enter phone" system in the lobby.

[para19] At trial Mrs. Aldrovandi said it was Mrs. Gold who raised the issue of security. Mrs. Aldrovandi could not recall any of the details of what was discussed.

[para20] As at 29 November 1991, the vendor's Site Superintendent had certified that the security system was 90% complete. The president of the installer ("S.I.S.") testified that the remaining 10% related to some security cameras and equipment which related only to some penthouse suites and had nothing to do with general security. The general manager of the security guard company ("Probe") testified that 14 hour a day security was scheduled up to 14 December 1991 and thereafter 24 hour per day.

[para21] Mrs. Raisa Galperin and her husband had an occupancy date of 13 December 1991. They moved in on 7 January 1992. Mrs. Galperin was in the building practically every day between those two dates, keeping an eye on upgrading being done in her unit. She says that glass and marble were installed in the lobby and it was so beautiful she invited friends in just to see it. She testified that there were security guards in place and that her security card worked perfectly. She said there were lots of workmen about but also lots of superintendents. She felt quite safe.

[para22] Elio Gigone is a semi-retired contractor and an acquaintance of the purchasers. He accompanied them on the pre-occupancy inspection. He described a plywood and tarpaulin tunnel in place. He said that he was not interested in looking at other than the unit itself.

[para23] Mrs. Aldrovandi described the building as a "construction site". I should emphasize that there were no significant complaints about the unit itself. She had no memory of any conversation where anyone told her she would not have to occupy until a certain level of occupancy was reached.

[para24] Mr. Aldrovandi, in his evidence, admitted that no one told him that he did not have to move in until the building was full.

[para25] I am satisfied that the purchasers had second thoughts about making the move as occupancy date drew near and wanted either to avoid the transaction altogether or at least postpone it as long as possible. There is no question that construction was still ongoing at their occupancy date, but, nevertheless, the unit was "substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy". The ongoing work in the common areas may have left something to be desired aesthetically, but it did not prevent access to the unit.

[para26] The Plaintiffs claim, therefore, succeeds and the counterclaim fails.

Damages:

[para27] In calculating the damages, I think it appropriate to use the original sale price ($458,300). The reduced price offered without quarrel by the vendors ($375,000) was conditional on the purchasers' completing occupancy closing by the scheduled date of 12 December 1991. They did not, and I am of the view that the reduced price vanished for all purposes.

[para28] The unit was re-sold on 30 November 1992 for $263,000. I am satisfied that the vendors exercised reasonable efforts to mitigate damages and that the resale price was reasonable.

[para29] I agree with the submissions of counsel for the Defendants that the claim of the Plaintiff for both prejudgment interest on the principle loss on resale and loss of use of money on a proposed "vendor take-back" mortgage represents "double dipping".

[para30] I assess the Plaintiff's damages to 4 November 1996 at $248,195.15 all as set out in column A of figure 8 of the Defendants' written submissions, a copy of which is annexed to these reasons. [para31] Plaintiff is entitled to whatever order is necessary to release any security lodged to release the property from a certificate of pending litigation. If counsel are unable to agree on the updated damage figures to the date of these reasons, I may be spoken to.

[para32] Plaintiff is to have its costs after assessment. As judgment was reserved and the question of costs was not addressed, I may be spoken to as well.

Landmark of Thornhill Limited, plaintiff, and Bosko Milic, defendant

Court File No. 09428/90U

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) McGarry J. Heard: January 18 and June 3, 1996. Judgment: September 10, 1996.

Counsel: Patricia Conway and Jennifer Roberts-Logan, for the plaintiff. Michael Czuma, for the defendant.

[para1] McGARRY J.:-- The plaintiff is claiming specific performance related to an agreement of purchase and sale date the 30th day of May, 1988 with respect to a condominium project developed by the plaintiff in Thornhill. The claim is based upon an agreement of purchase and sale dated May 30, 1988 (the "agreement") filed as Ex. 3, Tab 2. The defence acknowledges having signed the agreement which calls for the purchase of the unit described as unit 17, level 12, being suite 1218 in building B, Bayview Avenue and Green Lane. The purchase price was $274,300. The closing was to take place as defined in the agreement being the 31st day of July, 1990 or a date when the condominium was substantially completed by the plaintiff. The defendant provided the plaintiff with deposits totalling $54,860. It is further agreed that the closing date which was scheduled for October 25, 1990 was aborted and as a result, the plaintiff suffered a loss which is calculated at Ex. 3, Tab 14 as being $69,591.14 as of the 8th day of March, 1995. Counsel for the defence did not raise the issue of mitigation nor the calculation of damages and thus, the plaintiffs claim is established as of that date.

[para2] The defence is to the effect that the defendant attended at the plaintiffs sales office and signed the agreement; however, it is alleged that the plaintiff failed to provide the defendant with a disclosure statement contained in Ex. 3, Tab 1. In addition, the defence claims that the unit when built was not of a quality as had been advertised and that a firehall had been built on adjoining lands. The defence alleges that these lands were described as being used for recreational purposes rather than for a firehall. It is claimed by the defendant that he relied upon these representations, when coupled with a lack of a disclosure statement, the defence claims there is a right of rescission of the contract.

[para3] The plaintiff called various witnesses who stated that it was in the normal course of their sales to provide purchasers with an agreement of purchase and sale and thereafter a disclosure statement as contained in the exhibit. Having listened to the plaintiff's representatives and the defendant, I am satisfied that in fact the defendant did receive the disclosure statement and thus, this right of rescission is not available to him. I feel that I am supported in this conclusion when I review the letter of the defendant's real estate solicitor dated October 11, 1990 at Ex. 3, Tab 8 wherein he advises the defendant as follows:

Further to your attendance in my office on October 11th, 1990 I confirm your instructions that we are to take no further action whatsoever with respect to the above noted transaction, and that you are fully aware of the consequences to you in the event you fail to complete the interim closing of this transaction. In this regard I enclose a copy of the Direction and Acknowledgment that we reviewed following our exhaustive discussion of this matter, and which you signed in my office.

[para4] Of course if you have any further questions relating to the aforementioned, I trust that you will not hesitate to contact me.

[para5] In addition, the defendant acknowledged executing the "Direction and Acknowledgment" which basically states that he has directed his solicitor to take no further action and that he understands the consequences of not closing the transactions including the fact that he would be sued for damages as a result of his failure to complete the interim closing.

[para6] The defence did not call the real estate solicitor and I draw an adverse finding as clearly he would have enlarged on his comments in his letter to the defendant.

[para7] The defendant gave evidence with respect to discussions between himself and representatives of the plaintiff company concerning the quality of the building and I can state that whenever there is a conflict between his evidence and that of the witnesses for the plaintiff, I accept their evidence which again is supported by photographs filed as various Exhibits being 7, 8, 9 and 10. This would indicate that the project when built was of high quality. The location of the firehall does not provide any legal grounds for rescission.

[para8] In giving his evidence, the defendant testified to the effect that he had been involved in a number of real estate transactions and in my view in light of his circumstances, it was very likely his intention to purchase the condominium and sell it in the near future for a profit as he had done previously. The timing of this particular transaction could not have been worse for the defendant as evidenced by the fact that the subsequent sale in May of 1992 resulted in a price of $189,000.

[para9] In all of the circumstances, I find that the plaintiff acted appropriately and that the agreement of purchase and sale is binding upon both parties and consequently, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment in the sum of $69,591.14 with interest running from the 8th day of March, 1995 in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act.

[para10] Subject to submissions in writing by counsel for the parties within the next 30 days, I award costs to the plaintiff on a party and party basis.

[para1] ROBINS J.A. (endorsement):-- Under the terms of the agreements of purchase and sale in issue, the purchaser (respondent) was obligated to assume a first mortgage by way of payment for the balance of the purchase price. The vendor was accordingly entitled to receive a monthly occupancy fee which included the mortgage component provided for in s. 5(6)(1) of the Condominium Act. Article 5.01 of the agreement provided for an "adjustment" to cover any costs the vendor might sustain "in connection with the discharge and discontinuance" of the first mortgage arranged by the vendor (appellant) should the purchaser request that the transaction be completed "without the assumption of a first mortgage" and discharge of the first mortgage applicable to the purchaser's units could not be obtained until the final closings after the project had been registered. Throughout the period of interim occupancy the purchaser remained obliged to assume the mortgages contemplated by the agreements. The vendor's receipt of the mortgage component of the occupancy fee cannot be considered in violation of the s. 5(6)(1). Until closing, the agreement provides for the financing of the transaction, in part, by way of the first mortgage. Article 5.01 does not amend the payment provisions. It does no more than require the purchaser to pay the vendor's costs in, procuring the discharge of the mortgage on the purchaser's units. It is to be borne in mind that the purchaser has had the benefit of occupancy during the interim period. The statements of adjustment anticipates the assumption of first mortgages also. To conclude that this component of the occupancy fee should be recovered by the purchaser in the circumstances of this case and in, the light of these contract provisions is to produce a patently unfair and unanticipated result.

[para2] Accordingly, the appeal will be allowed, the order of O'Connell J. will be set aside and in place thereof an order will issue dismissing the respondent's application and directing that, that Bratty and partners pay the monies held in trust pursuant to the order of Rosenberg J., plus accrued interest to the appellant.

[para3] The appellant is entitled to the costs of the fixed at $3500.00 and the costs in the court below fixed at $1000.00.

Townsgate 1 Limited, Plaintiff, and Brian Klein, Defendant

Action No. 92-CQ-29472

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Davidson J. November 8, 1994.

J.W. Kramer, for the Plaintiff. L.M. Shelson, for the Defendant.

[para1] DAVIDSON J.:-- This action involves the interpretation of certain sections of an Agreement of Purchase and Sale of a condominium unit wherein the plaintiff was vendor and the defendant was purchaser.

[para2] The contract was entered into by the vendor's acceptance of the purchaser's offer dated March 6, 1989. At that time no construction had commenced.

[para3] The closing date by paragraph 1(b) means "the 14th day of May, 1991 or as advanced or extended by paragraphs 12 and 13(d)."

[para4] Paragraph 12 is not relevant in the facts of this case. The paragraphs of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale which require interpretation are as follows -

"13. If the unit is substantially completed, sufficient to permit occupancy on closing, and the purchaser has been approved by the mortgagee, but the declaration and description have not been registered, then the purchaser shall occupy the unit on that date ("the occupancy date") on the following terms and conditions:

(d) The closing date shall be extended to a date twenty (20) days after notice in writing is given by the vendor's solicitors to the purchaser or his solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered. If the purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the vendor, the purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver vacant possession of the unit. The vendor shall in that event be entitled to retain all monies paid hereunder for damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of redecorating as may be determined by the vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein;

21. If the completion of the unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightening, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the vendor, the vendor shall be permitted extensions of time from time to time for completion and the closing date shall be extended accordingly. If the vendor is unable to complete the unit and close this transaction within such extended time or times for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the purchaser other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him and this agreement shall be null and void. If the unit is substantially completed by the vendor on or before closing or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transactions shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the vendor has not fully completed the unit or the common elements and the vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event the purchaser acknowledges that the failure to complete the common elements on or before closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the unit."

[para5] By letter dated November 13, 1990 the vendor advised the purchaser inter alia -

"However various circumstances completely beyond our control, such as the recent electricians' strike, and construction delays, have forced us to extend the closing date of your condominium to September 5, 1991."

[para6] There is no issue that this was a legitimate extension of the closing date pursuant to Section 21 of the agreement aforesaid.

[para7] By letter dated July 15, 1991 the vendor wrote to the defendant advising inter alia -

"Further to our letter of November 13, 1990 the Interim Occupancy Closing Date for your unit is September 5, 1991 (the closing date). Although the condominium has not been registered the unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy as set out in paragraph 13 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale .. To arrange a time and date to move into your unit please contact Eileen Buchanan at 787-0256 as soon as possible."

[para8] By letter dated August 27, 1991 the plaintiff wrote to the defendant advising inter alia -

"Due to construction delays beyond our control we are required to extend the closing date for your condominium unit to October 8, 1991 in accordance with the terms of your Agreement of Purchase and Sale...

Please contact Eileen Buchanan 787-0256 to arrange for a pre-delivery inspection in compliance with Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act."

[para9] It is the position of the plaintiff that this was a proper notice of extension under paragraph 21 of the agreement.

[para10] On September 12, 1991 the vendor wrote to the purchaser advising inter alia -

"This letter replaces the letter of August 26, 1991

Due to further construction delays beyond our control, we are required to further extend the closing date for your condominium unit to October 31, 1991 in accordance with the terms of your Agreement of Purchase and Sale ...

Please contract Eileen Buchanan at 787-0256 to arrange for a pre-delivery inspection in compliance with Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act."

[para11] It is the position of the plaintiff that this notice was a proper extension pursuant to paragraph 21 of the agreement.

[para12] In fact the transaction did not close on October 31, 1991 and it is acknowledged by the defendant through counsel that if the court determines that that was a legitimate closing date binding upon the purchaser then it is conceded that the plaintiff/vendor was willing and able to close the transaction as at that date.

[para13] By letter dated October 25, 1991 the solicitors for the vendor advised the purchaser that the condominium project was registered September 11, 1991 and it gave notice that the final closing of the subject transaction would take place November 18, 1991 and confirmed the interim occupancy closing would occur as originally scheduled (October 31, 1991).

[para14] The purchase price in the Klein transaction was $321,000. In fact upon the purchaser's failure to close the transaction the vendor relisted the property for sale and ultimately obtained a purchaser dated April 26, 1993 closing June 1, 1993 at a price of $182,000.

[para15] The plaintiff's claim is for the price difference after crediting the deposit of $40,000 plus occupancy costs, plus interest.

[para17] In Scanlon, the vendor notified the purchaser that the closing date for his unit would be September 14, 1992 rather than November 4, 1991. The purchaser responded with an application seeking a declaration that the vendor's unilateral extension of the closing date was an anticipatory breach entitling the purchaser to end the agreement. The purchaser's successful application was reversed on appeal.

[para18] As recited in the facts of this case, the purchaser did not take exception to the first extension but contends that it is not open to the vendor to extend the interim occupancy date as it purported to do in the letter of August 27, 1991 and the "replacement letter" of September 12, 1991. In my opinion on the basis that paragraph 13(d) and 21 serve different purposes, I am of the view that the vendor is entitled to rely on paragraph 21 in the circumstances in the case at Bar. It is to be noted in that paragraph "extensions" is plural. It is followed by "and the closing date shall be extended accordingly". On the evidence of Mr. Zagdanski, an Officer and Director and principal participant in the development on behalf of the plaintiff, the plaintiff wa faced with numerous and ongoing construction delays.

[para19] Leading up to the first extension of the closing date to September 5, 1991 he testified as to an electricians' strike coupled with very wet Spring conditions giving rise to water problems and hampering foundation construction. He testified that all of the builders in projects underway were anxious to have all the trades and suppliers of material giving them first priority. Everyone was in a backlog position and in August of 1990 there was a precast concrete supply deficiency causing a further delay.

[para20] He testified that the necessity of extending the closing date to October 8, 1991 by letter of August 27, 1991 was by reason of a strike of trim carpenters lasting up to two weeks and being compounded again by the backlog problem in the construction industry.

[para22] There was not any contradiction of the evidence of Mr. Zagdanski and my assessment of his evidence was that it was reliable and I accept it. It may well be that the various times set for completion and interim occupancy date were perhaps optimistic but I accept that it was done bona fide and in a timely way to keep the purchaser advised. Indeed, I cannot conceive of any reason why the vendor would not proceed as expeditiously as possible to put itself in a position to close the transaction.

[para23] I note as well that on all the correspondence going to the purchaser he was asked to contact the vendor's representative and given a telephone number if he had any questions and to arrange moving times and to attend for a pre-delivery(?) inspection. The purchaser at no time responded to any of these notices. [para24] In fact, Mr. Klein testified that he had decided between May and July of 1991 that he was not going to close the transaction but at no time did he so advise the vendor. At no time did he make any arrangements for funding, moving or obtaining the services of a lawyer.

[para25] He acknowledges that by the time August 27, 1991 letter had been received by him and he having decided not to close, that thereafter nothing done by the vendor caused any prejudice to him.

[para26] On the evidence I find as a fact that the delays encountered by the plaintiff requiring it to extend the date for closing and the interim occupancy date clearly came within paragraph 21 of the agreement and were beyond the control of the vendor.

[para27] In the result I find that although the facts in the case at Bar are modestly different from those in Scanlon, the principles in Scanlon apply, notwithstanding and the plaintiff was not in breach of the contract of purchase and sale and is entitled to judgment. [para28] On the question of damages, it is agreed by counsel that the price difference on the resale after adjustments for deposits received and G.S.T. is $106,803.98 and that the total occupancy costs to which the plaintiff would be entitled, amounts to $10,756.37.

[para29] As to loss of interest the plaintiff has calculated it on the basis of the prime rate plus 1/2% which was the amount it was obliged to pay to its bank. This calculation of interest is $44,407.49.

[para30] In regard to interest, the plaintiff's representative having testified as to the rate which I find to be reasonable in the circumstances, justifies the fixing of the amount for interest as calculated by the plaintiff.

[para31] In the final analysis therefore the plaintiff will have judgment for $161,967.84.

[para32] Counsel may arrange an appointment to speak to prejudgment interest and costs if they are unable to agree to same.
[para33] I am advised that the amount of the deposit is held in the trust account of Goodman and Carr and there will be an order releasing the deposit and any accrued interest to the plaintiff.

Action Nos. C9292 and C9259

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Houlden, Grange and McKinlay JJ.A. Heard: February 23, 1993. Judgment: March 16, 1993.

P. Daryl Wilson, for the Appellants. Nick W. Fursman, for the Respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by THE COURT (orally, endorsement):-- The appellant in both of these cases entered into an agreement to sell (to each of the respondents) individual condominium units in a residential condominium highrise built in London, Ontario. Each respondent took possession on the day agreed in the respective Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The vendor purported to terminate the agreement for nonpayment of occupancy fees, which were defined in the agreement as taxes, common element expenses, and interest payments on mortgages in favour of the vendor, representing the unpaid portion of the purchase price.

In response, the purchasers commenced actions for specific performance, each action resulting in summary judgment in favour of the plaintiff. On a reference to determine the amount payable on closing, the Master stated in oral reasons that the plaintiffs were entitled to a credit for amounts paid on account of the interest portion of the occupancy cost from the time of taking possession, based on the decision of the Ontario High Court of Justice in Re Albrecht, et al. v. Opemoco Inc. et al. (1989) 70 O.R. (2d), 151. This court in Re Albrecht, et al. v. Opemoco Inc. et al. (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) reversed that decision, and held that the interest component was properly recoverable by vendors of condominium units.

All parties to these appeals agree that, in light of this court's decision in Albrecht, the portion of the Master's decision dealing with interest, and his report incorporating that decision, were incorrect. The Master's report was confirmed by Thompson L.J.S.C. We have been informed that at least one of the respondents has not only failed to pay the interest component from the time of the confirmation of the report, but has also failed to pay taxes and common element expenses. Under the circumstances, we are of the view that these cases must be referred back to a judge of the General Division to determine, on the basis of all the facts, the appropriate date of closing and the appropriate adjustments on closing as of that date.

One-half of the taxed costs of each appeal will be to the appellant; the costs of the reference will be in the discretion of the judge hearing the reference.

Herb Kratz, Plaintiff, and Parkside Hill Limited, Defendant

Action No. 91-CQ-12732

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto Weekly Court J. Macdonald J. Heard: October 1, 1992 Judgment: November 5, 1992

Charles Wagman, for the Applicant/Plaintiff (Defendant by Counterclaim). Stephen Schwartz, for the Respondent/Defendant (Plaintiff by Counterclaim).

J. MACDONALD J. (orally):-- Herb Kratz purchased a residential condominium unit from Parkside Hill Limited. When the agreement of purchase and sale was signed, construction had not yet started. The agreement contemplated a two-stage closing. The first, or "occupancy closing" was to take place on substantial completion. The second, known commonly as the "title closing" and described in the agreement as the "unit transfer date" was to take place either on the occupancy closing or later, if necessary. It is common ground that the occupancy closing took place on February 25, 1991, and that the plaintiff went into occupation.

The defendant registered the condominium documents on November 21, 1991 and was in a position for title closing on December 17, 1991. The dispute herein is whether the agreement required that title closing take place on or before October 31, 1991. Matters came to a head when the defendant wrote to the plaintiff on October 23, 1991 and stated that it anticipated registration of documents sometime between November 8th and 11th, 1991 and a title closing on December 11, 1991. The plaintiff replied by means of a letter from his counsel dated November 7, 1991 which stated that the agreement required that title closing take place on or before November 1, 1991, and that the plaintiff was entitled to avoid the transaction.

Litigation followed and each party now seeks summary judgment pursuant to Rule 20 enforcing the agreement by awarding damages allegedly flowing from breach of it. In addition, the defendant counter claims as a result of the plaintiff's tenant being in occupation of the unit on and after November 1, 1991.

For purposes of these motions, the parties agree as follows:

- a) the agreement of purchase and sale was prepared by the defendant's solicitors in a standard form which was then proffered to the plaintiff;
- b) the intention of the parties is to be determined entirely from the written agreement;
- c) what the parties seek in reality is an interpretation of the agreement such as might take place pursuant to Rule 14.05(d);
- d) the issue of the plaintiff's occupation of the unit on and after November 1, 1991 is to be left aside, pending interpretation of the agreement.

The law respecting interpretation of such an agreement is found in the reasons of Estey J., for the majority of the Supreme Court of Canada, in Consolidated-Bathurst Export Limited v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Company, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888. The interpretation takes place in two steps. The first step is giving effect to the intention of the parties, as determined from the words they have used. As Estey J. said at page 901:

... the normal rules of construction lead a court to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract. Consequently, literal meaning should not be applied where to do so would bring about an unrealistic result or a result which would not be contemplated in the commercial atmosphere in which the insurance was contracted. Where words may bear two constructions, the more reasonable one, that which produces a fair result, must certainly be taken as the interpretation which would promote the intention of the parties. Similarly, an interpretation which defeats the intentions of the parties and their objective in entering into the commercial transaction in the first place should be discarded in favour of an interpretation of the policy which promotes a sensible commercial result.

If, after application of these rules, the contractual wording still shrouds in ambiguity the agreement achieved by the parties, the second step is the application of the contra proferentum doctrine. As described by Estey J. at p. 899 S.C.R., the doctrine establishes:

... that where an ambiguity is found to exist in the terminology employed in the contract, such terminology shall be construed against the insurance carrier as being the author, or at least the party in control of the contents of the contract.

In Indemnity Insurance Company of North America v. Excel Cleaning Service, [1954] S.C.R. 169 at pp. 179-180, the Supreme Court described the rationale for the doctrine, in a passage also quoted by Estey J. at p. 900 S.C.R.:

The basis for such being that the insurer, by such clauses, seeks to impose exceptions and limitations to the coverage he has already described and, therefore, should use language that clearly expresses the extent and scope of these exceptions and limitations and, in so far as he fails to do so, the language of the coverage should obtain

In a passage also quoted by Estey J. at p. 901 S.C.R., Lindley L.J. stated in Cornish v. Accident Insurance Company (1889), 23 Q.B. 453 (C.A.) at 456, that the contra proferentum doctrine applies in the following circumstances:

In a case on the line, in a case of real doubt, the policy ought to be construed most strongly against the insurers; they frame the policy and insert the exceptions. But this principle ought only to be applied for the purpose of removing a doubt, not for the purpose of creating a doubt or magnifying an ambiguity, when the circumstances of the case raise no real difficulty.

The reasons quoted above refer to insurance interpretations. However, as was said by Meredith J.A. in Pense v. Northern Life Assurance Co. (1907), 15 O.L.R. 131 (C.A.) at 137:

There is no just reason for applying any different rule of construction to a contract of insurance from that of a contract of any other kind ...

The relevant provisions of the agreement are as follows:

2. (a) The Purchaser shall occupy the unit on the first day of May, 1990, or such extended or accelerated date pursuant to the terms hereof that the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the purchaser (the "Closing Date");

(b) The transfer of title to the Unit shall be completed on the later of the Closing Date or a date established by the Vendor in accordance with paragraph 21 (the "Unit Transfer Date").

3. The meaning of words and phrases used in this Agreement, its Schedules and Appendices shall have the meaning ascribed to them in the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 and any amendments thereto (the "Act") unless otherwise provided for as follows:

...

(g) "Unit Transfer Date" shall mean the day a Transfer of the Unit for registration is delivered to the Purchaser or the Purchaser's Solicitors.

13. The transaction of purchase and sale shall be completed on the Closing Date or an extension thereof as may be permitted under this Agreement, at which time vacant possession of the Unit will be given to the Purchaser. The Vendor shall be entitled upon giving at least 45 days written notice to the Purchaser or his Solicitor, to accelerate the Closing Date provided the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on such earlier date.

Upon registration of the Condominium, the Vendor's Solicitor shall designate a date not less than 21 days nor more than 60 days after registration of the Condominium Documents as the Unit Transfer Date by delivery of written notice of such date to the Purchaser or his solicitor.

21. In the event substantial completion of the Unit shall be delayed for any reason other than the wilful neglect of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted reasonable extensions of time (not exceeding eighteen (18) months in the aggregate) to substantially complete the Unit and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor shall be unable to complete the Unit for occupancy within such reasonable extensions of time, all moneys to the extent provided for in paragraph 21, shall be returned to the Purchaser and this Agreement shall be null and void and the Vendor shall not be liable to the Purchaser for damages. If the Unit is substantially completed for occupancy by the closing Date or any acceleration/extension thereof this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work required by this Agreement within a reasonable time after the Closing Date, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. The Unit shall be deemed to be substantially completed when the interior work has been finished to permit occupancy. The Purchase acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before the Closing Date shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

24. (paraphrased) If the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on the Closing Date, but it is not possible to make that date the Unit Transfer Date, the plaintiff's occupancy shall be pursuant to an Occupancy Licence in the form of Schedule "E" to the Agreement.

38. (paraphrased) Each of the provisions of this agreement is independent and severable, and the unenforceability of any provision does not impair the rest of the agreement.

Schedule E

E.1. The transfer of title to the Unit shall take place on the Unit Transfer Date upon which date, unless otherwise expressly provided for hereunder, the terms of this licence shall be determined.

E.10. The Vendor covenants to proceed with all due diligence and dispatch to register the Condominium Documents. If the vendor for any reason whatsoever is unable to register the Condominium Documents and therefore is unable to deliver a registrable transfer to the Purchaser within eighteen (18) months after the Closing Date, the Purchaser or Vendor shall have the right after such eighteen (18) month period to declare, on giving sixty (60) days written notice to the other, that this Occupancy Licence and the Agreement, notwithstanding any intervening act or negotiations, will be at an end. The Purchaser shall give up vacant possession and pay the Occupancy Licence Fee to such date, after which the agreement and Occupancy Licence shall be terminated and all moneys paid to the Vendor on account of the Purchase Price shall be returned to the Purchase subject to any repair and redecorating expenses of the Vendor necessary to restore the Unit to its original state of occupancy, reasonable wear and tear excepted. The Purchaser agrees to provide the Vendor with a release of this Agreement in the Vendor's standard form.

It will be noted that paragraph 2(a) of the agreement says that the occupancy closing shall be on May 1, 1990 or a later date "that the unit is substantially completed by the vendor for occupancy by the purchaser", and that the date of the occupancy closing is defined as the "closing date". Paragraph 2(b) says that the title closing shall be on the later of the occupancy closing date or a "date established by the vendor in accordance with paragraph 21". The substance of the dispute arises at this juncture. The plaintiff states that the title closing date may only be postponed to the extent permitted by paragraph 21, namely up to 18 months "in the aggregate". While paragraph 21 does not mention the date from which the said 18 month period is to be measured, it is the plaintiff's position that the phrase "18 months in the aggregate" must refer to any delay by the vendor in establishing the dates of either the occupancy closing or the title closing and as a result, the period of aggregate permissible delay runs from May 1, 1990. Consequently, the plaintiff contends that the defendant was obliged to complete the title closing on or before October 31, 1991. Nothing turns on the fact that a letter from the plaintiff's lawyer dated November 7, 1991 mentioned that closing was required on or before November 1, 1991.

The defendant's position is that the terms of paragraph 21 address only occupancy closing issues and as a result, the reference in paragraph 2(b) to paragraph 21 is mere surplusage respecting the timing of the title closing, and should not be given effect. The defendant contends that paragraph E.10 is directed to the time period in which the defendant may complete the title closing, and it may take place up to 18 months after the occupancy closing, which may be up to 18 months after May 1, 1990 pursuant to paragraph 21. Consequently, the defendant says that it has up to May 1, 1993 to convey title.

My conclusions are as follows. Paragraph 2(b) establishes that the title closing date shall be either the occupancy closing date or such later date as established by the defendant "in accordance with paragraph 21". It is true that paragraph 21 establishes various provisions which apply to occupancy closing. However, nothing in paragraph 21 prevents any of those provisions from also being used to define or limit the defendant's discretion in determining when title closing will take place. The parties have agreed in paragraph 2(b) to apply the timing provision in paragraph 21 to the title closing date as well and as a result, the use of the word "aggregate" becomes particularly significant. When imported into paragraph 2(b), it connotes collecting into one period the sum total of all delay by the vendor in setting the date of either occupancy closing or title closing.

The dominant purpose of this agreement was to convey title to the plaintiff. The commercial context was that the defendant was building the unit for the plaintiff and of the two, only the defendant had any control over construction progress and closing dates. In my opinion, the parties reflected both the purpose of this transaction and the circumstances in which it was taking place by establishing a finite and determinable limit upon the defendant's ability to postpone the passing of title. There is only one date specified in the context of closing dates, and that is May 1, 1990. It is the only date from which a finite and determinable limit upon the defendant's discretion may be measured. It was the intention of the parties that the aggregate period of permissible delay was 18 months measured from this date.

To be understood correctly, paragraph E.10 must be read in context. Paragraph 24 gives rise to Schedule E. It establishes an occupancy license if the title closing does not take place at the same time as the occupancy closing, and provides that such an occupancy license is governed by the provisions of Schedule E, including paragraph E.10. Part of paragraph E.10 addresses occupancy issues but it goes on to address title closing issues as well. If the defendant is unable to deliver a registrable transfer to the plaintiff within eighteen months after the "closing date" (which is defined by paragraph 2(a) as the occupancy closing date, and which may be later than May 1, 1990) then a mechanism is established to end both the occupancy license and the agreement. To the extent that paragraph E.10 addresses the ending of an occupancy license, it is compatible with the rest of the agreement. However, in addressing termination of the agreement itself if the defendant is "unable to deliver a registrable transfer" within eighteen months of the occupancy closing, it appears to state that it is permissible for the defendant to delay the title closing for eighteen months after the occupancy closing. This is clearly inconsistent with the provisions of paragraphs 2 and 21. It is also inconsistent with paragraph 24, which describes Schedule E as containing the terms of the occupancy license, and nothing more. To the extent that ambiguity arises from this apparent dilution of the defendant's obligation to convey title within 18 months of May 1, 1990, these words must be interpreted against the interests of the defendant and in a manner favourable to the plaintiff, pursuant to the "contra proferentum" doctrine. I conclude therefore that the defendant was obliged to complete the title closing on or before October 31, 1991.

There is no inconsistency between the sixty day notice period for termination of the occupancy license in paragraph E.10 and the termination of the agreement of purchase and sale on another date. The agreement distinguishes between occupancy rights and ownership interests and in addressing occupancy rights, paragraph E.10 provides the time necessary for a person in occupation to re-establish a residence.

The plaintiff therefore succeeds on his summary judgment motion and I grant a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale between the parties dated October 25, 1988 ended on November 10, 1991, being the date upon which the defendant is deemed by paragraph 40 to have received the letter from the plaintiff's lawyer dated November 7, 1991. I order the defendant to return the plaintiff's deposit, which is agreed to be in the amount of $42,300 and to pay prejudgment interest on that amount at 8.8% per annum from November 10, 1991. I also dismiss the counterclaim except as it relates to the obligations of the plaintiff, defendant by counterclaim to pay for occupancy of the premises on and after November 1, 1991, given that payments pursuant to the occupancy license ended as of October 31, 1991.

The summary judgment motion brought on behalf of the defendant, plaintiff by counterclaim is dismissed. On consent, the dismissal is without costs and without prejudice to its right to bring a further summary judgment motion respecting the obligations of the plaintiff, defendant by counterclaim to pay for occupancy of the premises, as mentioned above.

The plaintiff shall have his costs, of both the action and counterclaim, to the extent it has been dismissed, fixed in the amount of $3,500.

Symphony Place Corporation, Landlord, and Pier One Restaurants Limited, Tenant

Action No. L33201/92

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Non-Jury Sittings - Toronto, Ontario Sheard J. April 22, 1992

D.E. Klukach, for the Applicant/Landlord. S.H. Starkman, for the Respondent/Tenant.

SHEARD J.:-- This is an application for possession of a condominium apartment unit, brought by the landlord/vendor, Symphony Place Corporation, against Pier One Restaurants Limited, described in the landlord and tenant application as the tenant. The matter involves a certain amount of complexity and what could be described as interesting questions. These questions are in a subject in which there is, I am told, no helpful authority, which is somewhat surprising to me, but I am certainly not aware of any useful authority that can come to assist me in this matter. It might be helpful for me to give a brief summary of what appear to me to be the significant facts.

Under the date of August 26, 1987, an agreement in writing was made between Pier One Restaurants Limited, as purchaser, and Symphony Place Corporation, as vendor, to purchase suite number 2401 in the condominium apartment building, price of $330,000. A deposit of $49,500 was paid at the time of the making of the contract, and the cash balance (the sum of one dollar) was to be paid on closing, subject to adjustments, with the rest of the purchase price being made up of a first mortgage in the principal sum of $280,499.

The controlling officer and shareholder of Pier One Restaurants Limited is Mr. Carl Hoffman. He and his wife have been living in the apartment unit from the date of approximately April of 1990. There has been no issue made of the fact that some of these proceedings refer to Pier One Restaurants Limited, and in other proceedings Carl Hoffman is the party.

The occupancy date, at which point, as mentioned, Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman took possession, was April 21, 1990. Thereafter, until the closing date, which was February 21st, 1991, an occupancy fee of $3,653.85 per month has been payable, at the request of the vendor, Symphony Place Corporation. In fact, a dispute has arisen and in consequence of that the occupancy fee has not been paid since about February of 1991. In that month the last payment was made by Mr. Hoffman.

On April the 29th, 1991, an action was brought in this court in which the plaintiff is Carl Hoffman and the defendants are Symphony Place Corporation and the Rose Corporation. The latter entity is described in the action as the developer, promoter and author of the sales literature related to the subject property. In that action relief of various kinds is sought, but in particular the plaintiff claims specific performance of the agreement of purchase and sale subject to an abatement of the purchase price, and various other abatements, relating to the allegation that the size of the apartment unit is approximately 25 percent less than the plaintiff alleges it should have been when he entered into the contract; that is to say that the area of the unit is, in fact, about 920 square feet when the plaintiff alleges it should have been 1220 square feet. That is a deficiency of approximately one-quarter. In addition, other allegations or claims are made by the plaintiff including that the completion of the unit, which the plaintiff describes as a "luxury unit," does not meet the standards of a luxury unit and, in addition, that the possession of the unit is seriously interfered with by the fact that access to outside platforms or balconies required to be used by window cleaners must be made through the subject unit which gives rise to interference with his quiet enjoyment of the apartment. There are other allegations, but it is not necessary for me to mention anything further in the context of what I am dealing with at the moment.

As it happens, I am informed that the defendants were noted in default in July of 1991. I am informed that there are some pending proceedings in which the defendant will seek to have the noting in default set aside and file a Statement of Defence and a Counterclaim. In the material that was put before me today in connection with the landlord and tenant application is a draft Statement of Defence and Counterclaim to the action in which Carl Hoffman is the plaintiff and Symphony Place Corporation et al. are the defendants.

At the outset today Mr. Starkman, who appears for Mr. Hoffman, raised two preliminary procedural objections. The first of these is that the notice served by the landlord was fatally deficient by reason of the fact that it did not comply with ss. 97(1)(d)(ii) of the Landlord and Tenant Act. That subsection reads as follows:

"A notice of termination of tenancy shall be in writing and shall inform the tenant that the tenant need not vacate the premises pursuant to the notice, but that the landlord may regain possession by application for a writ of possession to be obtained from the local registrar of the Ontario Court (General Division), which application the tenant is entitled to dispute."

The notice in this case was served on Mr. Hoffman on November 27, 1991, in Form 6, a printed form under the Landlord and Tenant Act. The form of notice was, in fact, a photocopy of the face page of Form 6, but by an apparent oversight the reverse side of the form was not photocopied, and, as a result, the reference on the face of the notice, "please refer to notes on back of this form," became meaningless because the back of the form was blank. Mr. Starkman's submission was that the requirements of the Act were stringent, and failure to comply with this mandatory provision in s. 97 meant that the Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the application since it has not been properly brought before the Court.

In response to that submission, Miss Klukach made reference to the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re Bhagwandin an Wright, 65 O.R. (2d) 204. In the course of the judgment of Mr. Justice Lacourciere -- he who appears for the landlord in this application made reference to indeed the very section which was then numbered 99 instead of its present number of s. 97, although his reference was to another subsection, ss. 99(1)(d)(i) in particular -- but in the course of his reasons, Lacourciere J.A. referred to s. 27(d) of the Interpretation Act reading:

"where a form is prescribed, deviations therefrom not affecting the substance or calculated to mislead do not vitiate it."

In the particular facts of that case, the Court of Appeal per Lacourciere J.A. came to the conclusion that the deficiency in that case was not fatal to the proceedings. He said:

"In our view, the test for the sufficiency of the notice of termination is that particulars be given so that the tenant is not misled," and he quoted from a judgment of Chief Justice Laskin in Atkinson v. Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada where Laskin C.J.C.,

"speaking for the majority of the court on the issue of the validity of a notice of termination, made it clear that validity should not rest on a narrow technicality, and that subtleties ought to be and are disregarded as out of place in the interpretation of validity of a notice. Although the court was dealing with a predecessor of the Act, we see no reason to depart from that recommendation."

Here I think it is manifest that there is no prejudice to the tenant ensuing from the fact that the notice did not contain the advice specified under s. 97. Considering that Mr. Hoffman has commenced proceedings, to which I have made reference, and is indeed still in possession some many months after the notice was served on him, I do not consider the fact that the notice failed to contain the information referred to in s. 97 renders the notice ineffectual, and on what appears to be the view of the Ontario Court of Appeal and the application of ss. 27(d) of the Interpretation Act, with respect, I reject the argument submitted by Mr. Starkman.

The second procedural objection raised by Mr. Starkman has to do with the grounds on which this application is founded. In the form of the notice, as is standard, twelve reasons are set out. Reason number twelve is the reason upon which this application is brought, that being:

"The tenancy arose by virtue of an agreement of purchase and sale of a proposed condominium unit and the agreement of purchase and sale has been terminated."

In the notice the following particulars are set out under Schedule "A":

"The landlord, as vendor, and the tenant, as purchaser, entered into a written Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated August 26, 1987 for the purchase of the subject property. The closing date for the purchase was fixed for February 20, 1991. The tenant failed, neglected or refused to complete the purchase of the transaction on that date. The landlord tendered the closing documentation on the tenant's solicitor on February 20, 1991. The landlord has commenced an action against the tenant for the tenant's breach of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale has been terminated."

I have to ask you, by the way, when it says the landlord has commenced an action, has it?

MR. STARKMAN: No.

MS. KLUKACH: No, it is the tenant that commenced. The landlord had

THE COURT: Yes, all right.

MS. KLUKACH: It's a long story.

THE COURT: That's all right. I don't want to interrupt.

The reference to the landlord has commenced an action in that notice appears to have been in error. I will not expound on that now. As has been mentioned, the principal relief sought by Mr. Hoffman in the action in which he is plaintiff is specific performance of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale with an abatement, with indeed a substantial abatement.

The position of the landlord, not surprisingly, is that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is terminated, has been terminated because the purchaser failed to close on the closing date of February 20th, 1991. This is indeed a major issue between the parties. Mr. Starkman has mentioned that in the draft Statement of Defence, among the various forms of relief sought by the landlord and indeed as item (a), in an alphabetical series of items of relief extending to alphabetical (i), in the counterclaim is specific performance of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, and looking at that element in the counterclaim, and in the plaintiff's claim, on each side is a request to the Court for an order for specific performance of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale that was to have been closed on February the 20th, 1991. In the case of Mr. Hoffman, the specific performance that he is seeking is, of course, subject to substantial abatement, so it can hardly be said that the two principal parties to this litigation are ad idem as to the relief, even though nominally they appear to be seeking the same relief, although in the case of the landlord, the claim for specific performance in the counterclaim is one of a number of claims for relief.

It is submitted by Ms. Klukach that it is not necessary for me to enter into the hearing of evidence to determine whether, in fact, the Agreement of Purchase and Sale has been terminated and that it is sufficient that since there is no factual issue that the sale was not closed on the closing date that it is sufficient to proceed on the assertion by the landlord/vendor that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, at least from its point of view, is terminated. Mr. Starkman submits, if I understand him, putting his submissions in a nutshell, that the matter of whether or not the Agreement of Purchase and Sale has been terminated must be decided but that this is not the appropriate forum in which that should be decided; that it should be left for decision in the litigation in which his client is the plaintiff.

The notice of application brought by the landlord as originally framed asks for payment of arrears of rent in the amount of $10,697.04. On analysis, it appears that that figure was arrived at by taking common expenses for a period of twelve months, at $472.08 a month, equalling $5,664.96, realty taxes for twelve months, at $340.66 a month, equalling $4,087.92, and a reserve fund contribution of $944.16. The reserve fund, as can be seen, is equal to two months common expenses. Arithmetically those figures add up to $10,697.04. They would appear to be premised on a wrong conception of "rent owing" by Mr. Hoffman, and indeed, when I raised the subject on my return to court after perusing this material over the lunch hour, Ms. Klukach acknowledged that that was in error and provided me with a copy of a notice of motion bearing today's date and containing an affidavit made by another lawyer in her firm, sworn today, in which is requested leave to amend the claim for payment of arrears to the amount of $40,192.35. That figure arithmetically is eleven times the monthly occupancy fee of $3,653.85.

In the Agreement of Purchase and Sale there is a Schedule "D" which is captioned "Occupancy Licence." It reads in part as follows:

"1. (a) The Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor on the Possession Date an amount equal to the balance due on closing together with such adjustments as in the sole discretion of the Vendor are to be adjusted and collected on the Closing Date. (b) During the period from the Possession Date to the Closing Date, the Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor as a monthly Occupancy Fee, payable monthly in advance, a sum calculated in accordance with the Act. It is acknowledged that all the components of the monthly Occupancy Fee are estimated only and are subject to increase or decrease in the sole discretion of the Vendor and any readjustment shall be made 30 days after the Vendor's demand therefor, with a final readjustment to be made on the Closing Date. It is understood and agreed that such occupancy fee is not to be credited against the purchase price."

I have to say that I have difficulty with the proposition that the appropriate monthly amount to be described as arrears of rent is the same $3,653.85 amount as the occupancy fee. It is apparent from the contract, the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, that the occupancy fee is subject to adjustment or final adjustment on closing and, as is described in Schedule "D", it is an occupancy fee in which the components are estimated only. It does not seem to me that that amount meets the definition of an agreed rent, and while that by itself may not be fatal to dealing with the matter, as I considered the matter further, it would seem to me that what is being sought here is to fit within the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act a situation that the Landlord and Tenant Act is not designed to accommodate.

Section 110(3)(e) reads:

"A judge hearing an application shall not direct the issue of a writ of possession unless the judge is satisfied that one or more of the causes for termination of a tenancy agreement specified in section 108 or 109 exists or that, (e) the tenancy arose by virtue of or collateral to a bona fide agreement of purchase and sale of a proposed unit within the meaning of the Condominium Act and the agreement of purchase and sale has been terminated."

It does not appear to me that that provision contemplates the factual situation that appears to exist here, where there has been a failure to close, but against the background of a position taken by the tenant in which the tenant has brought an action to seek judicial vindication of his position and seeks relief including the performance, not the abandonment, the performance of the contract, as he alleges it to be. It might be argued that what is to stop any tenant from bringing such proceedings, on specious grounds, thereby escaping the sanctions and the procedures that could otherwise be brought under the Landlord and Tenant Act. I do not think that is a question that I must answer in the circumstances and particular facts of this case.

I think in this case, where the action has been brought by the tenant for whatever reasons -- it has not been responded to by the landlord, but presumably that will happen or an attempt will be made by the landlord to defend the action that was commenced by the tenant in February of 1991 -- I do not think that the application under this particular subsection of the Landlord and Tenant Act is appropriate, and I think that the result of me proceeding further to entertain this application would be a disruptive procedure and would not be in the proper interest of either party. I am mindful of the fact that a deposit of $48,500 was paid at the outset by Mr. Hoffman's company, which may be of some comfort to the landlord in terms of the ultimate outcome of these matters, but I cannot see that the facts here can be warped into ss. 110(3)(e) and the matter proceeded on as a landlord and tenant application for possession with relief in the form of a monetary judgment. I do not lose sight of the fact that if a judgment were given in the amount sought, some $40,000, and the sale was ultimately closed, and that is within the ambit of possibilities, Ms. Klukach's response to me in questions put to her was that there would normally be some adjustment of the occupancy fee and that adjustment would be placed in doubt if the occupancy fee were equated with and treated as arrears of rent.

I therefore must dismiss this application. I would express the view now that because of the novelty of the matter, this is not an appropriate case for costs. I will hear Mr. Starkman on that.

-- Reporter's Note: Submissions to the Court by counsel re costs reported but not transcribed.

THE COURT: Well, I'll consider the subject of costs. X7 We'll take a brief indulgence. I'll think about that overnight. I don't know. As I say, if a transcript of this is ordered, I'll reserve the right to fine-tune this a bit and I felt it was in your interests for me to put together such reasons as I could now rather than keep you waiting and I will in any event make my endorsement between now and tomorrow morning and in that endorsement will be the costs disposition.

Marotta Holdings Limited, Applicant, and 912564 Ontario Inc. and Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Respondents

Action No. RE1000/91

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Hayes J. Heard: May 26, 1992 Judgment: June 23, 1992

Mario Merocchi, for the Applicant. Alden M. Dychtenberg, for the Respondent, 912564 Ontario Inc.

HAYES J.:-- This is an application for an order rectifying the register with respect to Units 122, 123 and 124, Level A Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Plan No. 863 and for an order rectifying the legal description in certain instruments relating to Units 122, 123 and 124 which are parking spaces.

The Respondent the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce did not appear although duly served.

The Applicant entered into separate Agreements of Purchase and Sale with Concetta Morelli in trust for Units 8, 9 and 10 on Level 5 being office condominiums. These Agreements of Purchase and Sale do not make any reference to Units 122, 123 and 124 nor do they make any statement with respect to parking spaces. The purchaser directed that title be taken in 912564 Ontario Inc.

When the applicant purchased the properties in question the transfers to him included Units 122, 123 and 124 (parking spaces) with Units 8, 9 and 10 the office condominiums.

The applicants position is that the transfers to 912564 Ontario Inc. through inadvertence included the parking units. The applicants position is that it never agreed to sell the parking units to Concetta Morelli and they were mistakenly included in the transfer, charges and assignment of charges.

John Peruzza the Real Estate agent of the applicant discussed the deal with Mr. Marotta the owner of Marotta Holdings Limited and he indicated that the parking units were extra and told him to quote $25,000 per unit. Peruzza stated in his cross-examination that Mr. Morelli asked what was included in the units and he told him the parking units were extra and if the purchaser wanted underground parking he would have to pay extra. If he did not pay extra there would be common area parking above ground.

The Agreements of Purchase and Sale were apparently prepared and completed after this discussion and they do not include any reference to parking spaces. Peruzza stated that where parking spaces were included they are ordinarily set out in the agreement.

Giovanni Morelli the husband of Concetta Morelli in his cross-examination agrees he was not shown any parking units by Peruzza and he did not have any discussions with him concerning the parking spaces. He states: "I assumed the units came with parking". Further in his cross-examination he acknowledges that in his conversation with Mr. Marotta about price there was no discussion about parking units being included.

This discussion was before the agreements were signed. The Morellis simply assumed parking units were included. They acknowledge that they did not have any discussions with anyone with respect to parking prior to signing the Agreements of Purchase and Sale.

The reference line in a number of documents in the real estate transaction including letters and various directions, warranties, and undertakings and statement of adjustments refer only to the office condominiums.

Anthony Maniaci solicitor for the vendor forwarded transfers of the office condominium units and he states through inadvertence he included in the transfers the parking units. The letter of September 13th, 1990 from Mr. Maniaci to the solicitor for the purchaser enclosing the transfer refers only to the office condominiums.

Allan Mandel solicitor for the purchaser following his examination of the search report received by him and having received the transfers noted above was aware that the transfers were to convey a greater interest that is parking space than provided for in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale.

Allan Mandel contacted his client and after some time he was advised that his client only assumed that parking was included with the office condominium units. He did not contact Mr. Maniaci. He submitted a letter of requisition for each Agreement of Purchase and Sale with a title line which included the parking spaces.

The Statement of Adjustments did not include any adjustments relating to the parking units. Following the closing the purchaser was assessed condominium charges with respect to the parking units.

The transfers, declaration of possession and mortgage related documents were executed by the vendor and it is stated through inadvertence included the parking units.

Mr. Mandel's reporting letter to his client did not make any reference to the parking units as being part of the property to which they had received title. Mr. Mandel believes this was an oversight on his part.

Anthony Maniaci solicitor for the vendor was advised of the error by Mr. Marotta in November of 1990 after the vendor returned from Florida and discovered the parking cards had been released for the parking units.

Shortly thereafter, Mr. Maniaci advised Mr. Mandel the parking units had been inadvertently conveyed to the purchasers and they should be reconveyed but the purchasers refused.

The problem of denial of any mistake and conflicting testimony has been considered by the Supreme Court of Canada in:

Hart v. Boutilier (1916) 56 D.L.R. 620 (S.C.C.) at p. 626 Davies J.

"On this point there is a sharp conflict between the parties and as the trial judge remarks if there was nothing else in the case except the conflicting evidence of two equally credible witnesses there could be only one result and the plaintiff must fail. But the mere fact of there having been a conflict between the evidence of the contracting parties as to what property was mutually agreed to be sold one affirming and the other denying that the description of the land and the deed sought to be reformed omitted a part of the land mutually agreed to be included in it would not suffice to bar the plaintiff from the relief he sought.

If as in the case before us the trial judge Harris J. felt himself compelled not to believe the defendant and if as he found, "All the other evidence documentary and otherwise pointed irresistibly and convincingly to the fact that the contract was as the plaintiff contended" and was so mutually understood by the parties, the mere denial of the defendant of that fact should not prevail to prevent the reformation being granted and Duff J. at page 230

"It is germane to the question arising on thi appeal to observe that the mere fact of denial by the defendant that he had any intention other than that expressed in the Deed is not in itself a sufficient ground for denying relief to the plaintiff".

I have reviewed all of the circumstances, the documents, the affidavit material, and the cross-examinations of the deponents.

The purchaser's position that they assumed parking was included when they also state there was no discussion about it, the evidence of John Paruzza that he advised Giovanni Morelli that the parking units were extra and Giovanni Morelli's evidence that there was no discussion with the vendor about the parking units does not have any rational basis with respect to the agreement of the parties prior to the signing of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. I do not accept the evidence of the Morellis. I find that the Agreements of Purchase and Sale for only the office condominium units represent the complete agreement of the parties.

In arriving at this conclusion, I have taken into account the relevant experience of the vendor in these transactions as compared to the purchaser's lack of experience.

I am satisfied that the Agreements of Purchase and Sale represent the common intention and mutual agreement of the parties and also that the parties had such common intention prior to the signing of the agreements.

The reporting letters by Mr. Mandel and his title opinion contained therein do not indicate that the purchasers acquired any title in the parking units.

I have considered the circumstances and the time within which the error in the transfers and other documentation was discovered and I do not consider that lapse of time to be a bar to this application or the relief sought.

The transfers and other documentation including the parking units represent a mistake with respect to what I have found to be a mutual understanding as to what was being purchased, that is the office condominiums only as is clearly set out in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. In determining if rectification should be granted, I have considered the various authorities submitted and I have concluded that there must be "convincing proof".

See: Peter Pan Drive In Ltd. v. Flambro Realty Ltd. (1978), 22 O.R. (2d) 291 (H.C.J. Eberle J. 295 and 296 affirmed by the Ontario Court of Appeal at (1980) 26 O.R. (2d) 746.

I have considered the authorities indicating the restraint that must be used in granting rectification. In this matter upon all of the material, cross-examinations and documents I am satisfied that there is convincing proof that the transfers and related documentation did not correctly express the common intention and mutual agreement of the parties.

There will therefore be judgment for the Applicant granting the application for the relief set out in the application as follows: 1(a), (b), (c) and (d).

It is the intention of the Court to assess the costs on this application. Therefore I shall be pleased to receive submissions as to nature and quantum of the order for costs on or before 2 weeks from the date of this judgment.

York Condominium Corporation No. 206, Plaintiff, and Almeida & Almeida Landscaping Co. Ltd. et al., Defendants

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Non-Jury Sittings - Toronto, Ontario Dunnet J. March 17, 1992

M.A. Cummings, for the Plaintiff. M. Narea, for the Defendants.

DUNNET J. (orally):-- The plaintiff moves for an injunction restraining certain unit owners from holding a special meeting today at eight o'clock p.m. at Ste. Charles Garnier Catholic School. The plaintiff claims that the requisition purportedly given pursuant to s. 19(1) of The Condominium Act and presented to the Board of Directors on January 31, 1992, failed to be properly executed by 15% of the unit holders. The plaintiff calls into question the propriety of the requisition and submits that the requisition document contains forgeries, signatures of renters, people purporting to be owners, signatures of children, and signatures obtained by false pretences, the use of intimidation and obtained under the threats. These allegations are in my view very serious.

Approximately twenty-six of the one hundred and twenty unit owners are represented in court today and their spokesman Miguel Narea requests an adjournment of the motion in order that all interested home owners be present and represented. The spokesman submits, in the alternative, that the meeting scheduled for today proceed.

In view of the serious allegations calling into question the propriety of the requisition, I am prepared to grant the injunction on the plaintiff's undertaking as to damages restraining the unit owners from holding the meeting scheduled for today at eight o'clock p.m.. I order that such meeting be adjourned and to held within thirty days from the date of this order on ten days notice properly given. I order that on the undertaking of Miguel Narea to so act, he maintain and register for fourteen days from the date of this order for execution by any unit owner a requisition for a meeting of share holders pursuant to s. 19(1) The Condominium Act requiring the Board of Directors to hold such a meeting of holders, provided not fewer than eighteen unit holders execute the register.

In the interim, there will be an order that all affected parties be given an opportunity on reasonable notice of one day to examine, during business hours 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. documents to which they are entitled pursuant to The Condominium Act.

I will endorse the record:

For oral reasons given today, the motion is granted on terms."

MS. CUMMINGS: Thank you.

Rogers Cove Limited, Plaintiff, and John A. Slood, Defendant

Action No. 1738/91

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Guelph, Ontario Langdon J. Heard: September 9 and 10, 1991 Judgment: September 18, 1991 James L. Robinson, for the Plaintiff. Gordon P. Maxwell, for the Defendant.

LANGDON J.:-- Rogers Cove Limited developed a condominium report near Huntsville. Before registration was complete, it sold a unit to Slood. The agreement was signed September 12, 1988. On signing Rogers Cove delivered to Slood the Disclosure Statement required by section 52(1) of the Condominium Act.

Slood retained solicitors who, by letter dated September 15, 1988, notified Rogers Cove's solicitors that they were acting. The deal has not closed.

On September 28, 1989, Rogers Cove mailed to Slood's residence a material amendment to the Disclosure Statement. A copy was not sent to Slood's solicitors. The accompanying letter referred to this document as "revised Disclosure Documents". The letter said nothing about any rights of rescission nor did it specify in what respects the original was changed.

The original Disclosure Statement consisted of 14 pages of fine print. The amended Disclosure Statement also consisted of 14 pages of fine print which, on a cursory examination, were indistinguishable from the original.

The amended Disclosure Statement differed from the original in the following respects: Change No. 1 - p. 1, pars. 2: The following sentence was added:

"the lands are shown on a copy of the Declarant's Proposed Plan of Subdivision attached to this Disclosure Statement."

but a copy of the plan was not attached.

Change No. 2 - p. 1, par. 3 of the amended Disclosure Document is reproduced; the underlined words were not in the original document which is otherwise identical.

"Rogers Cove will consist of successive phases of multiple unit residential developments, serviced single family lots and ancillary and related uses.

Change No. 3 - p. 2, par. b: Under the heading "Amenities and Shared Facilities:" The original Disclosure Statement specified as part of the shared facilities

"part of the waterfront, the swimming pool, tennis courts and park area".

The amended Disclosure Statement deleted any reference to those facilities. As well, a scheme in the original providing for payment of the costs of shared facilities by successive condominium corporations was deleted. The amended Disclosure Statement specified parking spaces and walkways which were not mentioned in the original.

With the exceptions noted above the original and amended Disclosure Statements were identical.

Slood received but did not immediately read his amended Disclosure Statement. He gave it, to his solicitors March 28, 1990. On April 3, 1990, they wrote to Rogers Cove's solicitors purporting to rescind the agreement.

The material parts of the Condominium Act are as follows:

52(1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the 1st day of June, 1978 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

52(2) The purchaser, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the unit, may rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within ten days after receiving the disclosure statement or, where there has been a material amendment thereto, within ten days after receiving the material amendment.

52(3) A person may rescind an agreement of purchase and sale under subsection (2) by giving written notice of the rescission to the declarant or proposed declarant or to the solicitor of the declarant or proposed declarant.

52(6)(b) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(b) a general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provisions of amenities; (emphasis added)

The Special Case stated under R. 22 asks three questions:

(1) Did the delivery of Exhibit "F" to the defendant on the 28th day of September, 1989 give rise to a right of rescission under s. 52(2) of the Act? (Exhibit "F" is the amended Disclosure Statement).

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is yes, had that right expired prior to April 3, 1990?

(3) If the answers to Questions 1 and 2 are yes and no, respectively, did the letter of April 3, 1990 constitute a valid exercise of the Defendant's right of rescission under the Act? The amended Disclosure Statement is clearly a "material amendment" within the meaning of S. 52(2). Change No. 2 was clearly capable of changing the entire character of the development, from multiple unit residential (buildings) exclusively to include serviced single family lots. The removal from the shared amenities of "part of the waterfront, the swimming pool, tennis courts and park area" also represents very substantial alteration to a resort community.

Considering the enormous potential for change embraced by these altered words, the visual representation of the proposed changes upon a copy of the plan of subdivision which was referred to but not enclosed could reasonably be considered indispensable to a buyer's understanding both of the nature and of the extent of the proposed changes.

The purpose of a Disclosure Statement (or amendment) is obvious:

"to permit the purchaser to be able to make an informed decision ... to rescind or affirm ..." per Carruthers, J. in Benner et al. vs H.L.S. York 52 O.R. (2d) 243 at 246. See also Blenus Wright, J. in Abdool et al. vs Somerset Place released July 24, 1991 unreported, especially at pages 9 to 13.

Sloot's counsel objected to Sloot being served with the material amendments. He argued that once Sloot's solicitor identified himself as acting for the purchaser, the document should have been sent to him and that the ten days should not run until after he had received it. To accept such contention would be to validate his rescission dated April 3, 1990 even if receipt of the material amendment mailed to Sloot September 28, 1989 was complete.

I find no merit in this contention. S. 52(1) specifically provides that the agreement is not binding until the Disclosure Statement is delivered "to the purchaser".

S. 52(2) give to the purchaser a right to rescind ten days after receiving the material amendment.

In contrast, s. 52(3) permits a person to rescind by giving written notice "to the declarant or proposed declarant or to the solicitor of the declarant or proposed declarant". From the express wording of the provisions I conclude that service of the Disclosure Statement or material amendment is to be made on the purchaser. One way of doing that might be to serve the solicitor but the purpose is to serve the purchaser. That was done or at least commenced.

Mr. Sloot's counsel also objected that neither the material alteration nor the covering letter specifically referred the reader to rights of rescission. Clearly, such a mention would be desirable, but the statute does not require it. Subsection (6) to (9) of s. 52 specify what must be contained. Sloot's counsel also objected that the material alteration should at least have directed the buyer specifically to the areas of the disclosure statement which were changed. A detailed comparison of two sets of 14 pages of fine print for alterations or omissions is more than the average purchaser is likely to undertake; witness Mr. Sloot. Again, the answer is that the statute does not require specific direction to changed areas.

On the admitted facts, I conclude that Rogers Cove began but did not complete delivery of the material amendment. On receipt of the material amendment as sent, Sloot had two options.

(1) Despite the omission of the copy of the Plan of Subdivision, he could decide, on the basis of the material submitted, that he either did or did not wish to rescind the agreement and act, if necessary, within ten days to enforce his statutory rights.

(2) Alternatively, he could insist on receiving the copy of the Plan of Subdivision before making his decision. In this case, the statutory ten day period would not begin to run until after he had received it.

For Sloot to choose the first option and decide, as he did, to rescind without first receiving the Plan of Subdivision entails on admission that he had received sufficient information on which to base a decision and implies a waiver of his right to receive the Plan of Subdivision.

The view that I have taken that receipt of the material alteration was incomplete, was not advanced by the parties.

Thus the three questions were not framed with a view to the conclusions I have reached.

The answer to question one is a qualified yes. Receipt of Exhibit F did give rise to a statutory right to rescind under s. 52(2), but only because Sloot, by his conduct, waived receipt of the Plan of Subdivision.

In his letter of April 3rd purporting to rescind the agreement, Sloot's counsel did object to non-receipt of the Plan of Subdivision; but Sloot made his decision despite non-receipt.

The answer to question 2 is likewise a qualified yes. Having made the choice he did, his attempt to exercise his statutory rights was too late.

The answer to question 3 is likewise a qualified yes. By reason of its lateness, Sloot's letter of rescission was not a valid exercise of his statutory right to rescind the agreement. However, the material which was delivered made it clear that Rogers Cove was unilaterally attempting to alter the terms of the agreement. The original disclosure statement is to be considered incorporated by reference into that agreement. It follows that Rogers Cove intended ultimately to convey something materially different from that for which Sloot had contracted. That entitles Sloot to rescind as he did altogether independent of the statute. I consider that the rights of rescission conferred in s. 52 are in addition to and not in substitution for a purchaser's rights in equity to rescind an agreement.

Therefore, the letter of April 3rd, while not a valid exercise of a statutory right to rescind, was a valid exercise of the equitable right to rescind.

I therefore order that Sloot's deposit be repaid to him, together with interest as provided in The Condominium Act. The action for specific performance or damages in the alternative is dismissed with costs.

Faye Carroll, James Christopher Carroll, Russell Stephen Carroll, Douglas William Carroll and Alene Mathews, Plaintiffs, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 560 and W.H. Bosley & Co. Ltd., Defendants

Action No. 270015/86U

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Ferrier J. Heard: January 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 1992 Judgment: March 31, 1992

Loretta P. Merritt, for the Plaintiffs. Barry Brown, Q.C., for the Defendant.

FERRIER J.:-- The short set of stairs in the foyer at 89 Elm Avenue, Toronto did not conform to the Ontario Building Code. Faye Carroll, a 49 year old real estate agent, had a serious fall down those stairs when she was leaving the building on September 20, 1985. She broke her hip, and, despite successful surgery immediately following the accident, she required a total hip replacement almost five years later.

The building is a luxurious old mansion in the Rosedale district of Toronto which had been converted in about 1980, to a condominium with four apartment units. Faye Carroll fell after exiting the ground floor unit, described as unit 1 West.

The Premises Generally:

Much of the original character of the building was retained when it was converted to condominium units. The building has been described by various witnesses as charming, luxurious and first class. It was very well maintained at all relevant points in time. The condominium owners were concerned about safety and on at least two occasions had made corrections to remedy what they perceived to be unsafe conditions. The first of these related to the exterior front walk leading from the public sidewalk to the building. Beautiful tiles had to be replaced by interlocking paving stones because the tiles were slippery when wet. Exterior lights at the side of the building were upgraded to provide more lighting because it was considered that the existing lighting was insufficient in that area.

Three of the apartment units have access from the street through what was the original front door to the mansion. The fourth unit has access from the side of the building. All units have access by way of a rear door.

Gaining access to the three units through the front door of the building involves entering through the front door onto a marble foyer and turning to the right. At that point, one faces a two riser set of steps up to a landing. (From the marble floor, there is one riser up to a step and a second riser to the landing.) It was on these steps that the accident occurred. One is then in front of the door to unit 1 west which enters onto the landing. The stairs then continue upwards to the left at right angles to the landing. It is these upper stairs that are used to gain access to the two units which are at upper levels. When one exits from the ground floor unit, one traverses the landing, descends the two riser set of steps to the marble floor, and exits the building to the left through the main front door.

All the physical elements in the foyer, including the stairs, the carpet on the stairs, the marble flooring, the landing and the front door to the premises were, at all relevant times, in an excellent state of repair and well maintained.

The Accident:

The plaintiff was a real estate sales person engaged in residential sales in the employ of W.H. Bosley & Co. Ltd. It was her habit to venture forth each morning to inspect residential properties at open houses which were held at the instance of the listing agents for the properties. On the morning of September 20th, Faye Carroll had inspected several properties and the ground floor unit at 89 Elm Avenue was the last property on her list for the morning. She arrived at the premises shortly before noon. It was a bright, sunny day. She entered the building through the main door at the front, crossed the marble floor, ascended the stairs to the landing, crossed the landing and entered the ground floor unit.

She inspected the apartment unit that was for sale and spent a few minutes chatting with Dorothy Elliott, the listing agent. She stayed a total of about ten to fifteen minutes. When she left, she exited through the front door of the unit, traversed the landing, stepped off the landing and fell to the marble floor two steps down. She described the sensation as "stepping into air".

It is apparent from her evidence that she thought there was one step down when in fact there were two. She stepped down, expecting to be at the level of the marble floor. In fact, her stride was such that her foot was beyond the edge of the first step and six inches above the floor. She fell to the marble floor and experienced immediate severe pain. She had suffered a sub-capital fracture of the right femur. She was screaming with pain and Dorothy Elliott and others came to her aid. She was immediately taken to hospital. Other than the plaintiff, no one witnessed the accident.

At the conclusion of her visit with Dorothy Elliott in the ground floor unit, and immediately before exiting the unit before the accident, Faye Carroll said "I have to dash" or "I must dash" or "I must fly". She testified that her words were a figure of speech, a way of politely concluding her visit and that she was not in a hurry.

The police report filed as exhibit 2 in the action shows Dorothy Elliott as a witness interviewed by the police. The police report does not specifically attribute words to Dorothy Elliott in reference to the accident but the report does state that the plaintiff was walking out the door.

Dorothy Elliott testified that at the conclusion of her conversation with the plaintiff, Faye Carroll said "It's late, I've got to go" or "I've got to fly" and she "ran" out the door of the ground floor unit. This witness indicated that the plaintiff was going very quickly as opposed to strolling as she made her way toward the door exiting the unit. She did not see the plaintiff fall. In her evidence, at various points, she described the plaintiff as running, nearly running, going very quickly, going faster than quickly but she "was not running the Boston Marathon".

The foregoing is the only evidence concerning the speed with which Faye Carroll exited the unit and headed toward the landing and the stairs.

I accept the evidence of Dorothy Elliott that the plaintiff was walking very quickly when the plaintiff left the unit, but Dorothy Elliott did not see the plaintiff traverse the landing. Dorothy Elliott gave her evidence in a forthright and emphatic manner on this point and admitted in cross-examination that she had used various words to describe the pace of the plaintiff including the word "running" and on balance conceded that the plaintiff was not, in fact, running; but she maintained her evidence that the plaintiff was indeed moving at a very fast pace.

Dorothy Elliott was employed as a commissioned sales person with W.H. Bosley & Co. Ltd. That company had been a defendant in the proceedings but the action against that defendant was settled shortly before trial. Dorothy Elliott had been examined for discovery. She could fairly be said to be not a totally disinterested witness, in view of the fact that at one point her long time employer was being sued. Having observed the demeanour of Mrs. Elliott in the witness box and the demeanour of the plaintiff on this point, a serious point in the evidence, I accept the evidence of Dorothy Elliott over that of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was walking at a very fast pace when she exited the ground floor apartment. I also conclude from the evidence that she maintained that pace when she traversed the landing.

The Foyer Area:

The building faces north onto Elm Avenue and the front door has a large glass panel comprising a substantial portion of the surface area of the door. This permits a substantial amount of natural light to enter the foyer area and onto the marble flooring. There are also two windows of a smaller size adjacent to the door which also permit light to enter the foyer area. These windows are above a wall unit which contains interior mail boxes and the windows are located above the landing in question. In the ceiling, there is a flush mounted light fixture which has been described as a crystal chandelier but which is not of the type that hangs down from the ceiling.

The carpet on the stairs, the landing, and the stairs leading to the units above is a dark maroon colour with a white checkerboard pattern. The squares in the checkerboard are approximately one and one-half inches square. The risers on the stairs in question are approximately six inches high and the tread is approximately 11 and one quarter inches wide. The width of the landing is eighty-eight inches and the distance from the door of the ground floor unit to the edge of the landing is fifty-eight inches or approximately five feet. From the lowest riser to the far wall of the foyer is about seven feet.

There are no handrails on the stairs in question, although on the north side of the stairs is the wall unit above-described which is affixed to the wall and which stands on the landing, the steps and the floor. It could not be readily grasped with the hand in the event of a misstep by someone using the stairs. At the other end of the landing, more than seven feet distant, there is a newel post which stands on the step six inches below the level of the landing. This newel post is the conclusion of the railing which serves the upper stairs leading to the units above.

The officer who prepared the police report was not called as a witness. His report indicates that the conditions at the scene were "semi-dark". The plaintiff testified that her recollection after the fall was that someone turned on the chandelier in the foyer but that until that was done, the area was dim or dimly lit. Ms. Bancroft testified that the foyer was dimly lit when she was there. Mr. O'Callahan testified on behalf of the defence that the power to the chandelier and to the electrical facilities in the foyer could only be turned on or off by access to a switch in an electrical panel at the rear of the building and that the chandelier was always left on twenty-four hours a day. Other defence witnesses confirmed that the chandelier was always on and the foyer was always adequately lit.

On balance, I find that the plaintiff's recollection is inaccurate and that the chandelier was, in fact, turned on on the day in question. I also find on balance that the area was reasonably well lighted at the time of the accident.

Photographs of the interior of the ground floor unit depict a bright and very well lit apartment unit with numerous large windows. When one leaves the ground floor unit, one leaves a brightly lit apartment living room area, passes through a small, darker foyer in the unit, out the door of the unit, across the dark carpet on the landing and the stairs, and down the two steps onto the bright marble floor. One also faces the substantial ambient light entering from the front door of the building. The wall of the foyer directly ahead is covered in light coloured material.

I accept the evidence of those witnesses called on behalf of the defence who are present and former owners of units in the building that, over the course of the approximately five years prior to the accident, many people of widely ranging ages from very young to elderly, had entered and exited the building through the front door and had used the two riser stairs ("the stairs") without incident.

Although precise numbers were not given in evidence, it is reasonable to conclude from the evidence that the stairs had been used on a few hundred occasions by non-residents of the building. Some of these visitors were accessing the ground floor unit and others were accessing the units on the upper floors. There was no evidence of any prior complaint about the condition of the stairs or about any danger in connection with the stairs. None of the unit owners called by the defence, all of whom had used the stairs, perceived any danger. Bonnie Bancroft, also a real estate agent, had been at the premises earlier on the day in question. She testified that she had difficulty when exiting down the stairs and through the foyer. She said she had a sense of vertigo and a slight feeling of panic -- she was affected by the light, the pattern in the carpet and the different surfaces experienced in a matter of a few seconds. She is a personal friend of the plaintiff and had been a co-worker.

It is important to note that the view of the stairs in question had by persons descending the upper stairs is substantially different than the view had by persons exiting from the ground floor unit. When one descends the upper stairs to the landing and the stairs in question, one can readily perceive that the stairs in question are a two riser set of steps. The evidence of the owners in the upper level units to the effect that they and their guests never had difficulty negotiating the stairs is, accordingly, not particularly helpful.

The Ontario Building Code:

Various provisions of Regulation 87 under the Building Code Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 51, as amended, are relevant:

1.1.39. "dwelling unit" means a room or suite of rooms used or intended to be used as a domicile by one or more persons and usually containing cooking, eating, living, sleeping and sanitary facilities;

3.4.8.1. Except when stated otherwise, these requirements apply to both interior and exterior exits.

3.4.8.2. The finish for treads and landings of interior and exterior stairs and ramps accessible to the public shall have non-skid finish or be provided with non-skid strips.

3.4.8.3 Every flight of interior stairs shall have at least 3 risers...

3.4.8.5.(1) Every exit ramp or stairway shall have a handrail on at least one side and where 44 in. or more in width shall have handrails on both sides.

9.8.2.2. Except for interior stairs within a dwelling unit, at least 3 risers shall be provided for interior stairs.

9.8.3.3. Interior stairs not contained within dwelling units and exterior stairs for buildings

9.8.7.1. Except as permitted in Articles 9.8.7.2. and 9.8.7.3., a handrail shall be provided on at least 1 side of stairs less than 44-in. in width, and on 2 sides of stairs 44-in. in width or greater.

9.8.7.2. Handrails are not required for stairs within a dwelling unit that have fewer than 3 risers. 9.8.7.3. Only 1 handrail is required on exterior stairs more than 44-in. in width and having 3 or more risers provided such stairs serve not more than 1 dwelling unit.

A "flight of stairs" is not defined in the Regulation but the Shorter Oxford Dictionary defines a flight as "the series of stairs between any two landings".

In the context of the building code, a reading of the above provisions draws one to the following conclusions in reference to the two riser stairs in question:

(1) the stairs are a flight of stairs.

(2) the stairs are a flight of interior stairs not within a dwelling unit.

(3) the construction of the stairs is in breach of the Regulation under the Building Code, in particular s. 3.4.8.3 and s. 9.8.2.2. in that there are only two risers rather than the required three. (4) the construction of the stairs is in breach of Regulation 87 in that there are no handrails on either side of the stairs: s. 3.4.8.5.(1) and s. 9.8.7.1.

It is arguable that the newel post may qualify as a handrail but the Building Code requires handrails on both sides of the stairs.

Jacob L. Pauls testified on behalf of the plaintiff. He is an expert in construction and design safety. He has had extensive experience in advising on the safe construction of public and residential buildings with emphasis on means of ingress and egress, fire safety, safety for disabled persons and design safety as it pertains to use of buildings by persons. Included in his expertise is significant consulting and advisory experience concerning stair safety. He has been an advisor in the development of building codes. His evidence, to a large extent, explained the reasons for the above noted provisions of the Ontario Building Code. He described the three main criteria concerning the safe construction of stairs as follows: (1) the ability to see the stairs as one approaches and uses them;

(2) the physical geometry of the stairs, including depth and horizontal measurement; and

(3) the ability to reach and grasp handrails.

Surface covering of the stairs and the surrounding area, the lighting over the stairs and the surrounding light are relevant in the first factor. Handrails perform three functions:

(1) as an indication or signal of the very presence of stairs;

(2) as support for the person using the stairs; and

(3) as a device offering an opportunity to recover in the event of a misstep or a fall.

Mr. Pauls testified that the reason for the requirement of at least three risers is because the risk of fall is many times higher on "limited riser" stairs which these stairs are. When a person is approaching limited riser stairs, especially when descending, there is a significant perceptual problem. A person either fails to see the limited riser stairs or misjudges the number of risers. Mr. Pauls described limited riser stairs as being at the worst end of the extreme in stair danger. He was uncompromising in his evidence that these kinds of stairs should not be built.

In his opinion, there were several other factors in the foyer area that made the stairs unsafe. The first is the lack of handrails. The newel post and the wall unit on the north side of the landing were inadequate substitutes for handrails. Handrails are meant to be capable of being grasped by the hand. In his opinion, the lack of adequate handrails on these stairs was a significant deficiency.

Although the amount of light emanating from the chandelier was relevant, and low light would have produced greater danger, the other features in the foyer, especially the large amount of ambient light entering from the front door, resulted in the danger persisting even if the chandelier was indeed turned on at the time of the accident.

The other factors include the type of pattern in the carpet. The pattern itself made it difficult to discern the fact that there were two risers. There were no markings on the edge of the steps to clearly indicate their existence.

Mr. Pauls indicated that the natural light flooding the marble floor and the wall of the foyer, faced by a person descending the stairs, was the predominant light in the area. The large amount of light emanating from the marble floor and the wall and the front door added to the perceptual difficulties.

Mr. Pauls indicated that the experience of Faye Carroll in negotiating the steps was a classic example of an "air step" -- stepping into air rather than onto solid ground.

The plaintiff was wearing shoes with a 2 inch heel and was wearing tinted glasses at the time of the accident. In the opinion of Mr. Pauls, neither of these two factors contributed to the accident.

Mr. Pauls' opinion was that these were unusually dangerous stairs. His evidence was that changes could readily be made to make them safe. Freestanding handrails could be installed to meet the Building Code requirements. The visibility of the nosings (edges) of the steps could be improved by highlighting them with an appropriate stripe. Improved lighting focusing on the steps themselves was another measure. Obviously, none of these changes would have involved significant expense.

In the opinion of Mr. Pauls, the failure to comply with the Building Code was the major cause of the accident and if the Code had been complied with the occurrence could have been prevented.

I accept the evidence of Mr. Pauls that the stairs in question were unsafe for the reasons described by him. No expert witnesses were called by the defence to contradict his evidence or opinion.

Liability:

The duty of care owed by the defendant is found in s. 31 of the Occupiers' Liability Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 322: An occupier of premises owes a duty to take such care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that persons entering on the premises, and the property brought on the premises by those persons are reasonably safe while on the premises.

This statute imposes an affirmative duty upon occupiers to take reasonable care for the safety of people who are permitted on the premises. The statute does away with the old common law position that an occupier was only liable for unusual dangers of which he was aware or ought to have been aware: Preston v. Canadian Legion (Kingsway Branch No. 175) (1981), 123 D.L.R. (3d) 645, 29 A.R. 532 (C.A.) and Waldick et al. v. Malcom et al. (1991), 83 D.L.R. (4th) 114 (S.C.C.).

The duty under the statute does not change but the factors that are relevant to an assessment of what constitutes reasonable care will necessarily be very specific to each fact situation -- thus the proviso "such care as in all circumstances of the case is reasonable": Waldick et al. v. Malcom et al., supra. A breach of a statutory provision designed for the safety and protection of members of the public and which is an effective cause of an accident, imposes at least a prima facie liability on the person in breach: Sterling Trust Corp. v. Postma and Little (1964), 48 D.L.R. (2d) 423 (S.C.C.) and Schofield et al. v. Town of Oakville, [1968] 2 O.R. 409 (Ont. C.A.).

The provisions of the Building Code Act above referred to clearly are enacted for the safety and protection of users of stairs.

Cartwright J. in Sterling Trust, supra, adopted two observations made in the House of Lords in Lochgelly Iron and Coal Company Limited v. M'Mullan, [1934] A.C. 1, as follows:

In such a case as the present the liability is something which goes beyond and is on a different plane from the liability for breach of a duty under the ordinary law, apart from the statute, because not only is the duty one which cannot be delegated but, whereas at the ordinary law the standard of duty must be fixed by the verdict of a jury, the statutory duty is conclusively fixed by the statute. ...

I cannot think that the true position is, as appears to be suggested, that in such cases negligence only exists where the tribunal of fact agrees with the Legislature that the precaution is one that ought to be taken. The very object of the legislation is to put that particular precaution beyond controversy.

Cartwright J. also said:

If the burden could be discharged simply by showing that the person upon whom it lay neither intended nor knew of the breach, the protection which it is the purpose of the statute to afford would in most cases prove illusory.

Evidence of prior safe use of the stairs is relevant but not determinative: Crerar v. Dover and Dover, [1986] 2 W.W.R. 562 (B.C.C.A.) and Oakley v. Metropolitan Toronto (Municipality) (unreported, O'Driscoll J. May 3, 1988). Considering the provisions of the Building Code and the breach of those provisions, and considering the other factors referred to which created an unsafe condition, I find the defendant liable in negligence for failing to meet the duty of care imposed by the Occupiers' Liability Act.

Contributory Negligence:

The major element to be considered is the rapid pace of the plaintiff in leaving the premises. A less significant element is the fact that she was wearing tinted glasses, admittedly for only cosmetic purposes. These glasses must have had some effect, however slight, on the ability of the plaintiff to negotiate the steps in question, bearing in mind all of the other circumstances that existed in the foyer. I do not accept Mr. Paul's opinion in respect to the glasses. The evidence does not satisfy me that the shoes worn by the plaintiff had any causative effect to the mishap. I conclude that the plaintiff was not exercising sufficient care in the circumstances and I assess the contributory negligence of the plaintiff at 35%.

General Damages:

Prior to the injury, the plaintiff was a healthy and reasonably active 49 year old woman. The day following the injury, she underwent surgery and a pin and plate were installed across the fracture to hold it in position. After about a one week stay in hospital, she was transferred to St. John's Convalescent Hospital, remaining there for about three months. During her period at St. John's, she was involved in a rehabilitation programme. On leaving St. John's at the end of the year, she went to her son's home in Austin, Texas over the Christmas period and then went to Florida for the purpose of recuperation.

In June, 1986, she returned to work part time as a real estate agent. In February, 1987, the plaintiff resumed work full time and continued into 1988. She had had some continuing discomfort and pain in the hip and in June, 1988, the pin and plate were removed. She was off work again for about two and one-half months and in September, 1988 she returned to work as a real estate agent. She continued in this regard until May, 1989 when she left her then employment for reasons unrelated to her injury and went to work for another broker but was not active through the period May to December, 1989.

She was still having pain and discomfort in connection with her hip and in August, 1989, a bone scan revealed a cold spot indicating the possibility of avascular necrosis of her hip. No such indication had been turned up in any of her intervening examinations. Her hip continued to deteriorate and in February, 1990, it was recommended that she have a total hip replacement. She obtained a second opinion and decided to undertake the surgery. In July, 1990, she had a non-cemented total hip replacement and after about a week to ten days in hospital, spent about six to seven weeks at St. John's Convalescent Hospital. By late October, 1990, she was advised by Dr. Silverstein to try to return to her normal activities. From March to May, 1991, she went with her mother and sister on a driving trip to visit relatives in the United States and she participated in the driving.

By the time of trial, her condition was such that she was able to return to work and resume most of her normal activities. Nevertheless, she is likely to have some continuing discomfort in the hip or groin area and her future activities will be restricted as a result of the injury. She will have to avoid vigorous sport activities and excessive walking or standing. She should avoid excess strain to her hip in activities such as skiing, body contact or other competitive sports. She is advised to avoid work that involves excess strain to the hip, such as work that involves a lot of stair climbing, climbing ladders, squatting, and bending.

The evidence also establishes that during the period of time from the date of the injury to the date of trial, Faye Carroll has been in pain or discomfort in varying degrees of severity with very few totally pain free periods. She has been taking pain medication throughout almost the entire period. She has not had an easy time of it.

There is no doubt that the hip replacement was necessitated directly as a result of the original injury. The medical evidence also establishes that there is a significant likelihood that she will require a hip revision in the future. The evidence establishes a high probability that this will be required somewhere in the range of ten to twenty years from the date of the hip replacement, July, 1990. On the evidence, I conclude that this is likely to occur approximately fifteen years hence, or approximately sixteen and one half years from July, 1990.

The medical evidence indicates that the plaintiff should be able to go without a cane by now and that her walking should be largely unrestricted by now.

I assess the plaintiff's general damages for the fractured hip and its consequences including pain, loss of enjoyment of life, the total hip replacement and the probability that she will require a further hip replacement at $90,000.

I should add that the plaintiff was involved in a minor motor vehicle accident in 1987 but the evidence does not establish that that incident had any impact on the problems suffered by the plaintiff as a result of her fractured hip.

Income loss to date of Trial:

Faye Carroll worked as a real estate agent starting in 1965, when she got her license and worked as such except during the years 1973, 1980 and 1981, and 1984. I accept her evidence that she had decided by September, 1985 that her future career was going to be in real estate until her retirement. This was a viable career option and is consistent with the testing and assessment undertaken after the injury by Cameron Webber, a vocational rehabilitation specialist called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff.

The only income figures available showing the income earned by the plaintiff up to 1985 were as follows:

1980 - $23,379 (non-real estate sales) 1981 - $32,309 (non-real estate sales) 1982 - $7,715 (unemployment insurance) 1983 - $2,145 (unemployment insurance) 1984 - $19,115 (non-real estate sales) 1985 - $19,984 (of which approximately $7,000 was related to real estate sales with a net income after expenses of $13,476 total for the year).

1986 - Nil 1987 - $10,296 (net after expenses - real estate sales) 1988 - $17,499 (gross before expenses-real estate sales) 1989 - $5,215 (gross before expenses-real estate sales)

The plaintiff earned no income in 1990 and 1991. The plaintiff thought that she should change her career plans and pursue a career in life insurance sales and, in the first two months of 1990, she took a course leading to that end, but concluded for valid reasons that it was not a wise choice for her. She had the total hip replacement in July that year and has not worked since.

It should be noted that in 1980 and 1981, up to February, 1982, the plaintiff was involved in business development and public relations and research work in some way connected with real estate but she was not involved in direct real estate sales. In 1982 and 1983, she earned no income whatever from employment and this was not satisfactorily explained in her evidence. In 1984, her income was derived from a company that she had incorporated in the business of closet space systems. Her taxable income in 1985 was also comprised of income from that source (although earned in 1984) and she had earned no income in 1985 until she joined Bosley in April, 1985. Her closet space business had ceased in 1984. In the six months prior to the accident, she had earned $7,000 with Bosley Real Estate. Tax returns either were not filed or were not available for some of the above-mentioned years. In some instances, only T-4 slips were available and in those cases it was not established to what extent expenses were incurred to earn the income.

After the accident, when she did return to work, she went into commercial real estate sales on a part time basis. She had no background in commercial sales. She indicated in her evidence that she did this because it was more of a 9:00 to 5:00 job with less physical demands. She earned no income for the eight month period that she undertook this endeavour. When she did return to residential real estate sales, she earned approximately $10,000 net after expenses over the course of approximately one year. This was at Sadie Moranis Real Estate. In May, 1989, she resigned from that position and went to work for another broker but made little effort to work. It was during this period after May, 1989 that her hip was seriously deteriorating and causing considerable pain and discomfort.

Against this background, I must assess an amount that the plaintiff would probably have earned had the accident not occurred, during the period from the date of the accident to the date of trial. In assessing this amount, I must have regard for the income earning history of the plaintiff in the years prior to the accident. In my view, it is appropriate to take an average of the income earned from 1980 to 1985 inclusive. That average is approximately $15,550 per year. In my view, recognizing that it is impossible to be precise, the plaintiff in this case had a demonstrated earning capacity as at the date of the accident in the amount of approximately $15,550 per annum.

Her loss to the date of trial is that figure multiplied by 6 1/3 years (the time period from the date of the accident to the date of trial) plus an amount for inflation. I calculate that sum to be $112,642 allowing an inflation rate of 5% per annum. Her income in the sixth year would have been $19,845. Because one cannot be precise, and because not all expenses should necessarily be deducted, in my view it is appropriate to round off the figure to $115,000 and the sixth year to $20,000 (which then is her present earning capacity on a full time basis.) From the $115,000 should be deducted her actual earnings during the period, which were approximately $33,000. Because no figures were produced for the expenses for 1988 and 1989, I can only allow an amount considered reasonable in the circumstances. I feel $7,000 is reasonable in the circumstances, for net earnings of $26,000. Deducting that sum from $115,000, the plaintiff's loss is $89,000.

I have considered the evidence of Howard Rosen, a Chartered Accountant, business valuator and appraiser. He was called as an expert in litigation accounting and business valuation to give evidence concerning the economic losses arising from the injuries in this case. One can take approaches slightly different than those taken by Mr. Rosen and I have done that in consequence of the argument of counsel for the defendant. However, even acceding to the argument of the defendant, the results nevertheless fall into the same range as those determined by Mr. Rosen. His figure was a loss to the date of trial of $91,900 (after deduction of the actual earnings). He did not, however, take into account the question of further mitigation by the plaintiff. In my view, this is a case where the plaintiff ought reasonably to have mitigated her damages further by part or full time employment to produce the equivalent of about a year and a half's income. Accordingly, the figure for loss of income to the date of trial should be reduced by approximately that sum and I therefore assess the plaintiff's loss under this heading at $65,000. As to future income loss, the evidence does not satisfy me that the plaintiff will not be able to work to age 65. It may be that she would prefer to retire earlier than that, but I do not find that there will be any medical necessity for her to do so. On the other hand, I do not feel that the plaintiff will be able to work as a real estate agent on a full time basis. She does have other options but real estate is a reasonable career path for her, and in my view, such a finding is warranted even though she will only be able to work part time.

Once again, I have considered the analysis and calculations and the evidence given by Mr. Rosen. By applying the appropriate discount, he determined that the present value of the plaintiff's expected life earnings to age 65, assuming an income level in 1992 of $22,700 per annum, is $191,742. As indicated, in my view the appropriate income figure for 1992 is approximately $20,000 net after expenses. On Mr. Rosen's discount figure of 8.4468 the present value of her income to age 65 would be $168,936.

Based on the medical evidence, I conclude that the plaintiff's capacity to work full time as a real estate agent has been reduced as a result of the injury by 40%. Her loss is, accordingly, $67,600 (rounded).

Future Medical Expenses:

I have already indicated that the plaintiff will require revision surgery. Estimates have been given by various medical experts as to when that revision surgery will be necessary. As indicated, it is my view that the probability is that it will be required fifteen years hence. In this context, I have also reviewed the figures presented by Mr. Rosen. He based his calculations on a 1990 O.H.I.P. expense of $15,918. Assuming that revision surgery was necessary fifteen years from July, 1990, the present value of the cost of such surgery is $10,990 with some slight downward adjustment to take account of mortality figures. At the twenty year level, the present value of the cost of the surgery would be approximately $9,500 with about a five percent downward adjustment for mortality figures. Because I have found that the surgery is likely to be necessary at a point fifteen years hence, I assess the present value of the cost of that surgery at $10,000.

I should add that in arriving at the figures for past and future income losses, I have considered positive and negative contingencies. In this case, they include the possibility of periods of unemployment, additional illnesses, fluctuations in the real estate market activity and the other normal contingencies of life including the possibility that the plaintiff might be able to work beyond age 65 and might be able, at some point, to work full time. In my view, all of the contingencies, negative and positive, even out to such a degree that no further adjustment should be made for them.

Special Damages:

The special damages are detailed in exhibit 26. The plaintiff maintains her claim for all of the special damages listed in the five page summary except that the O.H.I.P. figure was adjusted to an amount of $32,180.14. The total special damages claimed, accordingly, total $51,395.97.

I have reviewed exhibit 26 to determine whether or not the expenses claimed are reasonable and causally connected to the injury. Using that test, and bearing in mind the nature of the injury and its effect on the plaintiff, I allow all of the expenses claimed with the exception of the following: Private Nursing costs - $7,765.

Some of these costs were incurred while the plaintiff was in hospital and some were incurred while the plaintiff was at home following the removal of the plate and pin. While at home during this period, she was not confined to bed.

Transportation Costs:

Two of the expenses claimed under the heading of taxi fares are for limousine expenses. In my view these are not reasonable. In addition, many of the taxi fares were incurred at a time when the plaintiff was able to drive. I allow $100 for taxi fares and I allow mileage for the use of the plaintiff's own vehicle at $129.50 as claimed.

Parking:

I do not consider this to be a reasonable expense in the circumstances.

Long Distance Telephone Charges: The evidence indicates that the plaintiff was in the habit of calling her mother and her children extensively by telephone prior to the accident. In my view, the expenses claimed are not reasonable in the circumstances. I allow $300.00, a reduction of $948.29.

Accordingly, the sum of $10,307.24 should be deleted from the special damages claimed with the resultant assessment of $41,088.73, of which $32,182.14 is for O.H.I.P.

Family Law Act Claims:

The balance of the claims relate to damages for the three sons of the plaintiff and for the plaintiff's mother. None of these plaintiffs gave evidence and in my view the evidence does not support an award to any of these parties.

Summary of Damages:

The following then is a summary of the damages:

General Damages $ 90,000.00 Past Pecuniary Loss: Income $ 65,000.00 O.H.I.P. $ 32,182.14 Other Special Damages $ 8,906.59
Future Pecuniary Loss: Income $ 67,600.00 O.H.I.P. $ 10,000.00 ----- TOTAL $273,688.73

Therefore, judgment for the plaintiff is for 65% of that amount, being $177,897.67 (O.H.I.P.'s share of this is $27,418.39).

I will hear counsel on the effect, if any, of the settlement with the defendant Bosley upon the recovery under this judgment, pre-judgment interest, costs and any other matter considered needing clarification.

Jane Bondy, Applicant, and P.C. Cove Builders Inc. and Pilots' Cove Estates Inc., Respondent

Action No. 90-GD-13838

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Windsor, Ontario Zalev J. December 5, 1991 Charles R. Gascoyne, for the Applicant. W.A. McClelland, for the Respondent.

ZALEV J.:-- On August 17, 1989, the Applicant Jane Bondy ("Bondy") as purchaser, entered into a written contract with the Respondent P.C. Cove Builders Inc., ("Cove Builders"), as vendor, for the purchase of a proposed condominium unit in the third phase of a condominium development in the village of St. Clair Beach. The purchase price was $249,000.00 with $20,000.00 down and the balance, subject to adjustments, to be a mortgage given back to Cove Builders on the date of closing. The whole mortgage balance was due 30 days after closing. Bondy also agreed to pay the sum of $17,000.00 for extras.

In the event that substantial completion of the unit was achieved before the registration of a declaration and description, they agreed to an interim closing following which Bondy would occupy the unit and pay a monthly occupancy fee based upon Cove Builder's estimate of mortgage interest, taxes and common expenses. The occupancy fee was not to be credited against the purchase price.

The unit was substantially completed in May 1990 and Bondy occupied the unit from about May 15, 1990 to August 25, 1990. During that period she paid occupancy fees of $9701.

On September 4, 1990. Bondy's solicitors wrote to Cove Builders' Toronto solicitors advising that if the condominium documents were not registered and the deal closed on or before September 28, 1990, she would consider the agreement null and void. The condominium documents were registered on October 11, 1990. On October 23, 1990, the Windsor solicitor for Cove Builders wrote to Bondy's solicitor advising of registration, fixing closing for on or before October 31, 1990 and enclosing draft documents including the transfer and mortgage back. The mortgage back was to be discharged on closing. On October 25, 1990, Cove Builders' Windsor solicitor delivered a notice to Bondy's solicitors requiring closing on November 14, 1990 together with a statement of adjustments showing the whole balance due by certified cheque with no provision for a mortgage back. On November 6, 1990, Bondy's solicitor telephoned Cove Builders' Toronto solicitor and said the agreement had been rescinded by the letter of September 4, 1990. That letter had never reached Cove Builders' Toronto solicitor.

Bondy deposes that it was on November 12, 1990 that her solicitors discovered that the title was registered in the name of the respondent, Pilots' Cove Estates Inc. ("Cove Estates") and not in the name of Cove Builders. This is contradicted by the record which shows that Bondy's solicitor received a draft transfer, charge, statutory declaration and undertakings, all in the name of Cove Estates enclosed in a letter dated October 23, 1990. Both Cove Builders and Cove Estates are Ontario Corporations. All the shares of Cove Builders are owned by Cove Estates. The officers and directors of each corporation are the same.

On November 14, 1990, Bondy instructed her solicitor to treat the agreement as null and void. The closing documents were tendered on Bondy's solicitors that day. The transfer showed Cove Estates as the transferor. Bondy's solicitors refused to close, taking the position that Cove Builders with whom Bondy contracted, never had title. This position was confirmed by Bondy's solicitors by letter to Cove Builders' Windsor solicitor on November 14, 1990 after tender was made.

This is an application by Bondy, inter alia, for a declaration that she has properly rescinded the contract, and for an order for repayment of the sums paid to Cove Builders.

In the view I take of the matter, I need only deal with one issue on this aspect of the application whether or not Bondy had a right to repudiate, and did repudiate, by reason of the fact that Cove Builders never had title to the unit. There is authority for the proposition that if a vendor is able to make good title before the day fixed for completion, the contract can be enforced by the vendor - see re Bryant and Barningham (1889) 44, c. 218, at pg. 223. However, for the purposes of this application, I will accept that where a vendor has no title, as opposed to an imperfect title, the vendor may terminate the agreement. But, on discovering the vendor's lack of title, the purchaser is bound to repudiate with "reasonable promptness" or "forthwith" - see Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, (7th) pg. 1067.

I find that Bondy did not repudiate forthwith or with reasonable promptness on discovering Cove Builders' lack of title. Firstly, it is inconceivable that Bondy's solicitors were not aware of the state of the title at least 30 days prior to closing as that is the deadline provided in the contract for delivery of requisitions on title. In any event, I find that they were aware of the title on receipt of the draft documents accompanying the letter of October 23, 1990. The knowledge of the solicitors is imputed to Bondy. I find that Bondy did not repudiate forthwith or with reasonable promptness. Even accepting Bondy's affidavit (which I do not) that the first knowledge of the title being in Cove Estates was on November 12, 1990, the result would be the same. With closing fixed for November 14, 1990, Bondy was bound to repudiate immediately. Waiting until tender was made on November 14, 1990, was not forthwith or within a reasonable time in those circumstances.

The applicant relied on Caplan v. Coles (1982) 27 R.P.R. 83, a judgment of the British Columbia Supreme Court. That case is distinguishable in that the purchaser was entitled under British Columbia statutes to a conveyance from, and the benefit of the covenants of, the vendor named in the contract. In any event, it has not been shown that the vendor's covenants were material - see also Victorian Homes (Ontario) Inc., v. DeFreitas, per Rosenberg J. March 6, 1991, (unreported).

The claim for the said declaration and order on this ground therefore fails.

Bondy took the position that Cove Estates was not a registered vendor under the new Homes Warranty Act. Cove Builders was so registered. The contract of sale was with Cove Builders. In these circumstances Bondy was entitled to the benefits of the Act through Cove Builders which complied with all requirements of the Act. Bondy was not entitled to rescind on this ground.

Bondy also took the position that the disclosure statement was erroneous and insufficient. The purpose of the disclosure statement is to permit the purchaser to make an informed decision as to whether to elect to rescind or affirm the contract of sale. An objective standard is to be applied in determining whether or not the disclosure statement complies with the Condominium Act. It is significant that Bondy occupied the unit and paid the expenses for some 3 months without making any complaint. In my view the disclosure statement here meets the objective standard.

Bondy also submits that registration of the description and declaration by Cove Builders was a condition precedent which Cove Builders failed to perform.

Paragraph 8(j) of the contract states that the contract is conditional upon registration, failing which the contract is null and void. The description and declaration were not registered by Cove Builders, but were registered by Cove Estates. Bondy says that does not comply with the contract. As Cove Estates had title, the contract provision was satisfactorily performed.

Finally, Bondy submits that the mortgage back to the vendor was a sham or phantom mortgage disentitling the vendor to charge interest as part of the interim occupancy charges. This submission was based on the Judgment of Rosenberg J. in Albrecht v. Opemoco (1989) 70 O.R. (2d) 151. I reserved judgment as an Appeal from that judgment was then pending in the Court of Appeal. On November 28, 1991, the Court of Appeal gave judgment allowing the Appeal and upholding the validity of this type of mortgage. This submission therefore fails.

In the result the application is dismissed with costs to the Respondent to be assessed.

Joe F. Scanlon, Applicant, and Castlepoint Development Corporation and Bramalea Limited, Respondents

Action No. RE1412/91

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto Weekly Court Austin J. Heard: November 4, 1991 Judgment: November 14, 1991

Angela M. Costigan, for the Applicant. Stanley B. Bush, for Bramalea Limited.

AUSTIN J.:-- Scanlon agreed to buy a condominium from Castlepoint. Castlepoint assigned the agreement to Bramalea. Construction did not proceed as quickly as planned. Bramalea changed the closing date from November 4, 1991, to September 14, 1992. Scanlon asks the court to declare the agreement void and to order repayment of his deposits.

The claim is made by way of application. It is put on two bases:

(1) The change of closing date was an anticipatory breach of contract which entitled Scanlon to terminate it.

(2) Castlepoint did not make the disclosure required by s. 52 of the Condominium Act, and as a result the agreement is not binding on Scanlon.

The basis of the anticipatory breach argument is that closing was fixed at November 4, 1991, by the agreement. It was apparent by May 1991 that construction would not be sufficiently advanced by November so Bramalea unilaterally changed the date to September 14, 1992. Bramalea's position is that while November 4, 1991, was originally set for closing, the agreement permitted it to extend the time for performance and thereby postpone the date for closing. Scanlon says that the relevant provisions of the agreement are contradictory, that contra proferentum applies, and the agreement must be interpreted in a manner more favourable to him.

The agreement was drafted by or on behalf of Castlepoint. Bramalea admits that it is bound by it. The relevant terms, in logical order, are as follows:

12. The transaction of purchase and sale is to be completed on the Closing Date.

....

1. The following definitions shall apply to this Agreement:

....

(b) "Closing Date" or "Closing" means the 4th day of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d).

....

13. If the Unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing, but the declaration and description have not been registered, then the Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on that date (the "Occupancy Date") on the following terms and conditions:

....

(d) the Closing Date shall be extended to a date 20 days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's Solicitors to the Purchaser or his Solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the Vendor, the Purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver vacant possession of the Unit. The Vendor shall in that event be entitled to retain all monies paid hereunder for damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of redecorating as may be determined by the Vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein;

....

22. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted extensions of time from time to time for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit and close this transaction within such extended time or times for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him and this Agreement shall be null and void. If the unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on or before Closing or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after Closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event the Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before Closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

By coincidence, this matter was heard on November 4, 1991. The condominium was not ready for occupation on that date. According to Scanlon, one looks first to clause 12. It provides for completion of the purchase on the "Closing Date." That term is defined by s. 1(b) as November 4, 1991, "or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)." Paragraph 13(d) is inapplicable because the Unit was not substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991. Therefore, the date is not extended; it remains at November 4, 1991.

Bramalea's argument is that clause 22 overrides the November 4, 1991, date in the event of delay. The delay may be the result of almost any cause whatever. Counsel for Bramalea acknowledged that, whatever the cause, it would be limited by what was reasonable and by what was in good faith.

The first issue is whether, in these circumstances, there is a conflict or contradiction in the terms of the agreement. If there is, the second issue is how it is to be resolved.

In my opinion, there is a contradiction. Clauses 12 and 1(b) provide for a closing on November 4, 1991, subject to clause 13(d). Clause 13(d) does not apply in the circumstances. The closing is therefore fixed for November 4, 1991. Clause 22, on the other hand, gives the Vendor the right to virtually unlimited extensions. Clause 22, therefore, conflicts with or is contradictory to clauses 12 and 1(b). If it had been the intention of the parties that clause 22 override the others, then 1(b) would have read, "or as extended by Paragraphs 13(d) and 22.

In such circumstances, the agreement is to be interpreted "against" the party who drafted it, in this case, Castlepoint and Bramalea. Chin v. Jacobs et al. (1972), 24 D.L.R. (3d) 636 (Ont. C.A.) at pp. 641-642. I therefore find that clauses 12 and 1(b) apply. The closing was to be on November 4, 1991, and Bramalea's letter of May 31, 1991, changing the date, constituted an anticipatory breach of the agreement. The date of closing was a fundamental term. Scanlon was therefore entitled to treat the agreement as at an end. He is entitled to a declaration that the agreement is null and void.

In these circumstances it is not necessary to deal with the question of the adequacy of the disclosure made by Castlepoint.

Scanlon is entitled to the return of his deposits, with interest. There is an issue as to the rate of interest. That matter and the question of costs, entitlement and quantum, may be addressed by letter. In the meantime, Scanlon is entitled to issue a certificate of pending litigation and to register the same against the lands in issue.

York Condominium Corporation No. 166, Applicant, and Rafael Nunez and Graciela Nunez, Respondents

Action No. 12725/90

Ontario District Court - York Region Judicial District Newmarket, Ontario Loukidelis D.C.J. Heard: April 5 and 12, 1990
Judgment: April 20, 1990

J.A. Rogers, for the Applicant. M. Herman, for the Respondents.

LOUKIDELIS D.C.J.:-- At the conclusion of the hearing, I indicated that I would reserve my decision and would attempt to give brief written reasons as soon as possible.

The applicant corporation seeks a declaration that the respondent owners are in breach of certain provisions of the declaration, by-law and rules of the corporation.

There were three main complaints:

1. Undue noise emanating from the respondents' unit being unit five, level 12 and being described as unit 1205, contrary to Rule 9.
2. The improper storage of furniture and other items on the unit balcony.
3. The keeping of a vehicle in the corporation garage which is not in operating condition, contrary to parking rule three.

The matter has unfortunately been somewhat complicated by racial overtones -- at least in the minds of the respondents. I will refer to this point later in my judgment. The respondents obviously felt that they were not being treated fairly and this has exacerbated a tense situation. The respondents have for the past several months been attempting to sell their unit and leave the building but have been unsuccessful to date.

Undue Noise: I find on the evidence that the complaints made by various other unit owners to the condominium board concerning the noise emanating from unit 1205 were indeed, valid complaints. I find also that on several occasions, the complaining neighbours were unable to contact the occupants by telephone or by knocking on their door.

Other than the odd domestic dispute which disturbed some of the neighbours, the obvious problem was the playing of loud stereo music and drums throughout several evenings and particularly after 11:00 p.m.. I find on the evidence that the loud music and the drum playing was done by their son, Roberto. Roberto, who is 15 years of age, has a learning disability and has no perception of time. He readily admitted that he has played the drums and that he turned the stereo up quite loudly. Mrs. Nunez, in her evidence, indicated that Roberto was supervised most evenings when she and her husband were out working. I simply do not accept her testimony on that particular point. I find that the child was left by himself an average of three or four evenings a week. The evidence of Roberto is consistent with the evidence of the complaining' neighbours that they were unable to attract his attention on several occasions, either because he did not wish or was afraid to answer the door or simply did not hear the knocks on the door or the telephone. The respondents, of course, are responsible for any occupant in their unit including their children. Notwithstanding the complaints they received, the respondents continued to leave Roberto unsupervised and allowed the incidents to continue. As indicated, I must accept the affidavit evidence and viva voce evidence of the complaining neighbours concerning the noise. The evidence of Mr. Graf, on behalf of the respondents, does not sway me to find that the complaints were unfounded. In addition, I find that on some occasions, drums were being played in addition to the stereo and Mr. Graf did not take this into account in his tests.

Balcony Storage:

While technically in breach of the rules by storing items on the balcony for brief periods of time, the respondents in my view, had a reasonable excuse in that on two occasions, they were having the rugs cleaned and the only sensible place to store many of the items temporarily, was on their balcony.

I find that the photos of the overcrowded balcony taken in November, 1989, do not properly depict the condition of the balcony at the time the complaints were made in August of 1989. This was a temporary breach and does not in my view, require a court declaration.

Storage of Motor Vehicle:

The evidence concerning the "inoperable vehicle" raised some very interesting sidelights. The corporation manager and the president allege that the vehicle was not properly licensed and sat as a derelict vehicle with the same flat the over several weeks or months.

The evidence indicates that in fact, at the time of their concern, the vehicle was properly licensed. i.e. the owners had proper plates for same. Mr. Nunez also claims that he, in fact, has driven the vehicle in the past few weeks and that the flat tire shown in the photographs, is a recurring problem caused, he suspects, by vandals. That is no doubt possible. I must accept his evidence corroborated by his bills that he indeed had the flat tire fixed on two occasions. However, the question of the rear license plate being properly attached to the vehicle, I find to be opposite to what Mr. Nunez claims. I accept the evidence of Mr. Kenny on this point. While Mr. Nunez had the proper licenses, they probably were not properly attached.

As I indicated however, during the hearing, little turns on this point except perhaps the matter of credibility. On all the evidence, I am not satisfied that there has been a breach of the parking rule and would make no order in this regard.

Returning now to the question of any possible racial prejudice, I accept the evidence of Mrs. Nunez that their son, Roberto, who as I indicated has a learning disability and appears to be a very sensitive lad was the object of a racial slur by someone at the condominium swimming pool who was in charge. He was referred to by such person as "brown boy".

A second incident Which took place in the lobby shortly after the respondents moved in again concerned their son, Roberto and the now president of the corporation, Mr. Russon. I accept the evidence of Roberto and his father in that Mr. Russon spoke sharply to Roberto whom he did not know at that time with the words, "Hey, boy, what are you doing here?" I accept that while the tone and words were impolite, I do not find that they were racially motivated as Mr. Nunez claims. As indicated, the Nunezs had just moved in and Roberto was not known to Mr. Russon.

Unfortunately, the above two incidents upset the respondents and set the tone of their relationship with the corporation and some of their neighbours.

In addition, there appeared to be an uneven application of some rules such as,

- (a) the storage of signs in parking areas,
- (b) other owners storing items on their balconies,
- (c) the fact that the hours for the use of the service elevator were not extended to them on the first day that they moved in.

When one is conscious of prejudice, matters such as those referred to above are often taken as acts of prejudice.

Mr. Kenny admitted on cross-examination that indeed the same procedure was not followed exactly in all complaints. I am not, however, prepared to find that this fact was proof of racial prejudice on his part or on the part of the corporation.

Having found the respondents did, in fact, breach Rule 9 of the condominium corporation, I would make the requested order requiring the respondents to comply with Rule 9 of the applicant corporation.

The applicant also seeks solicitor/client costs. I quite agree that on an application such as this that an offending owner, particularly where the offence is repeated, should be liable for the costs of any action taken against him on a solicitor/client scale.

However, in this case, the corporation was successful on only one of three points. In addition, having found that indeed there was a racial slur aimed at the respondents' son at the swimming pool by an employee of the corporation, I would allow the applicant one-third of its costs on this application on a solicitor/client scale.

In summary therefore, I make the following order: 1. That the respondents be required to comply with Rule 9 of the applicant condominium corporation.

2. Requiring the respondents to pay to the applicant, one- third of its assessed costs on a solicitor/client basis.

Berry et al. v. Indian Park Association

44 O.R. (3d) 301

Docket No. C28753

Court of Appeal for Ontario Abella, Laskin and Rosenberg JJ.A. May 3, 1999

Michael M. Miller, for appellant. Martin Scisizzi, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

LASKIN J.A.: -- Sugarbush is a rural community near the Horseshoe Valley Ski Resort. It was developed in three phases. The homes in Phases I and II form a recreational cottage community. The homes in Phase III, which were built much later, form a modern residential subdivision. The appellant Indian Park Association maintains a recreation centre and other common areas in the community for the benefit of all the residents. The Association's by-laws require every resident of Sugarbush to be a member of the Association. The by-laws also contain a number of restrictive covenants, restricting how owners can use their land. The Association claims that these land use restrictions are enforceable because they are part of a valid building scheme covering all the lots in Sugarbush.

The respondents are a group of aggrieved neighbours who live in homes in Phase III of the Sugarbush community. They object to being required to join the Association and to being required to comply with the land use restrictions in the Association's by-laws. These owners applied to court to be relieved of their obligations under the by-laws. In a judgment dated April 24, 1997 [reported 33 O.R. (3d) 522, 12 R.P.R. (3d) 315], Eberhard J. declared that the challenged by-laws of the Association were not enforceable against the lots in Phase III. She held that there was no valid building scheme over Phase III and that the challenged by-laws exceeded the powers of the Association in its letters patent and in the Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.38.

The Association appeals and submits that Eberhard J. erred both in failing to find a valid building scheme and in holding that the Association exceeded its powers in passing the by-laws in question.

The Facts

The homes in Phases I and II of the Sugarbush community were built in 1974 and 1975 by two developers, Kitwee Developments Incorporated and Modco Investments Ltd. Phase I consists of 94 lots, Phase II of 63 lots. Kitwee and Modco built small, rustic, wooden chalets on these lots. These chalets were built for seasonal use by those who skied at Horseshoe Valley. They had few amenities and were located in quiet, wooded and somewhat isolated surroundings.

Under a development agreement with the local municipality, Kitwee and Modco provided the part-time residents of Sugarbush with a number of services that the municipality was unable or unwilling to provide, including snow and garbage removal and the supply of clean water. To maintain these services and to allocate their costs to the residents, Kitwee and Modco applied to turn Phases I and II into a condominium. However, their application was rejected. Kitwee then created a "mock" condominium scheme by incorporating the Association as a non-share capital corporation.

On August 30, 1974, Kitwee, Modco and the Association signed an agreement (the Kitwee agreement) which expressly established a building scheme governing the management of the land in Phases I and II. Under the Kitwee agreement, the Association undertook to manage and maintain for the residents the water supply and distribution system and the sewage disposal system. Kitwee also transferred some land in Sugarbush to the Association to be used for a common parking lot and a recreational centre. In addition, Kitwee and Modco agreed with the Association that when they sold lots in Phases I and II they would impose on the purchasers a number of restrictive covenants affecting how lot owners could use and enjoy their land. These land (or lot) use restrictions were contained in the Association's by-laws and were registered against title to each lot in Phases I and II. They provided:

Provisions Respecting the Lots: The use of the Lots shall be in accordance with the following restrictions for the enhancement in value of all of the Lots and Land and the better enjoyment thereof by the members:

(i) No garage or fence shall be constructed or erected on any Lot save and except each lot owner may construct and install a pool which can be fenced in accordance with the by-laws and zoning restrictions of the Township of Oro. (ii) . . . no improvements, alterations or additions to any Lot or to the exterior of any premises thereon shall be made, performed or constructed without the prior written approval of the board, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld.

(iii) No trees shall be cut down other than those which are dead or diseased

(iv) No motor vehicles of any kind other than snowmobiles or motorcycles shall be parked on any Lot . . . only snowmobiles may be driven on or over the lands owned by the Corporation or parked on such lands.

(v) There shall be no littering on any Lot

(vi) No animal shall be kept or brought on any Lot other than domestic animals normally regarded as pets.

(vii) No signs advertising any Lot for sale or rent shall be placed thereon without the prior written approval of the board which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld.

(viii) The beneficial ownership in and to any Lot shall not be transferred by sale, gift, bequest or otherwise, other than to a person who shall acknowledge, in writing, to the Corporation his membership therein and accordingly his obligations to observe this and any other By-laws of the Corporation.

When Phases I and II were built in 1974 and 1975 no further development within the Sugarbush community was contemplated. However, in 1988 the directors of the Association negotiated with Monica Interior Designs Ltd., the owner of the adjoining land, to amalgamate its land with the original Sugarbush community. Instead, however, of adding to the existing seasonal cottage community, Monica developed its land into a modern residential subdivision, consisting of year-round homes with amenities including private driveways, garages, lawns and basements. Monica's development became Phase III of the Sugarbush community. Phase III consists of 178 lots on which Monica has built 82 permanent homes. In November 1988 before any Phase III lots had been sold, the Association passed new by-laws, containing even more onerous restrictions on the use of lots in Sugarbush. These new restrictions included:

1. Board approval must be obtained for the construction or installation of any structure of all new dwellings prior to receiving a building permit, excepting those homes built by the developer.

6. No pool or fence shall be constructed or erected on any Lot.

7. Except in authorized garages, Lots may not be used to store the following: unlicensed vehicles, boats, trailers, mobile vans, non-permanent structures not approved by the Board, heavy equipment, machinery, garbage and debris. These items will be removed at the Owner's expense.

10. Only vehicles used for normal passenger transportation should be parked on the lots. Commercial trucks and other commercial vehicles may not be parked within Sugarbush.

14. Lots cannot be used for commercial ventures. Home occupations are permitted as long as lots are not advertised for commercial use.

.....

17. Lots shall be used for single family use only. For the purpose of this By-law "family" means one human being or two or more human beings related by blood, marriage or legal adoption or a group of not more than three human beings who need not be related by blood or marriage living together as a single housekeeping unit

In August 1991 Monica and the Association signed an agreement ("the Monica agreement") by which the Phase III lands were brought under the umbrella of the Association's management of Sugarbush. Monica agreed "on behalf of itself, its successors and assigns" to abide by the Association's by-laws, rules and regulations. In turn, the purchasers of lots in Phase III became members of the Association and also undertook in their agreements of purchase and sale to comply with the Association's by-laws, rules and regulations.

Although the Phase III development has commonly being considered part of the Sugarbush community, it differs in significant ways from the development in Phases I and II. Phase III was built years later and by a different developer than Phases I and II. The Phase III land was developed as a modern permanent residential subdivision. The developer, Monica, built large, brick homes with basements and private driveways. The homeowners use municipal garbage collection. The land in Phases I and II was developed as a seasonal, recreational cottage community. The developers, Kitwee and Modco, built small, wooden cottages without basements or private driveways. The cottagers use common parking lots and garbage dumpsters. The Monica agreement covering Phase III does not refer to the establishment of a building scheme. The Kitwee agreement, covering Phases I and II, does refer to the establishment of a building scheme. Finally, the Association's restrictive covenants are not registered on title to the land in Phase III, but are registered on title to the land in Phases I and II.

These differences led to disputes between Phase III residents and the Association, which was controlled by the residents in Phases I and II. The Phase III residents complained that many of the services provided by the Association and for which they paid yearly maintenance fees, were irrelevant to them. For example, the Association provides garbage collection, sewage disposal, water supply and distribution, and snow removal from garbage dumpsters and common parking lots. The Phase III residents contributed to the costs of these services which they did not need and which benefited only the residents in Phases I and II. Eventually, many of the Phase III residents stopped paying their maintenance fees and these court proceedings were launched.

First Issue: Are the Phase III lands part of a valid building scheme?

The Association seeks to enforce its by-laws, including those containing land use restrictions, against the owners of land in Phase III. These by-laws amount to restrictive covenants, restricting the way in which the owners may use their property. Because no privity of contract exists between the Association and the Phase III owners, the Association cannot enforce its by-laws under contract law.

But restrictive covenants relating to land are also governed by property law. In some circumstances, property law principles permit restrictive covenants relating to land to be enforced despite the lack of privity of contract. For example, one exception, in equity, provides that if certain conditions are met, both the burden and the benefit of a restrictive covenant may be annexed to the land and so "run with the land". This exception, which originates in the case of Tulk v. Moxhay (1848), 41 E.R. 1143 (Ch.), does not apply here. The Association concedes that the restrictive covenants in its by- laws do not run with the Phase III lands under the principles in Tulk v. Moxhay.

The Association relies on another equitable exception by which restrictive covenants relating to land may be enforced. This exception concerns building schemes. A restrictive covenant imposed for the purpose of land development may be enforceable despite the lack of privity of contract, if the land is included within a building scheme. A building scheme may exist when restrictive covenants are imposed during the course of development with the intent that once the scheme has crystallized on the sale of the first lot, the vendor will be bound by the scheme and the restrictions will be mutually enforceable by the purchasers of the various lots. [See Note 1 at end of document] The rationale for building schemes rests on the notion that because the restrictions are imposed for the general benefit of the development, all owners have a common interest in their enforcement. This underlying notion of community of interest imports reciprocity of obligation. [See Note 2 at end of document] Thus, under a valid building scheme, restrictive covenants are enforceable by and against the original purchasers and their assignees.

The Association submits that the Phase III land is included within a valid building scheme and thus it may enforce the land use restrictions in its by-laws against homeowners in Phase III. The Association frames this submission on two different footings -- either the Phase III development became part of the pre-existing Phase I and II building scheme or an entirely separate building scheme exists for Phase III. The latter footing has no merit whatsoever. The Association has sought to enforce the same set of restrictions against Phases I, II and III; it has never treated the Phase III land as a separate scheme. The Association always considered that only one building scheme existed, which comprised Phases I, II and III of the Sugarbush community. Thus I focus on whether the Phase III development, when built in 1988, became part of an existing building scheme. As did the trial judge, I assume without deciding, that a valid building scheme exists for Phases I and II.

Elliston v. Reacher, [1908] 2 Ch. 374 at p. 384, affirmed [1908] 2 Ch. 665 is still the leading case on the requirements of a building scheme. In that case Parker J. set out four requirements that must be met to enforce restrictive covenants as part of a valid scheme.

. . . it must be proved

(1) that both the plaintiffs and the defendants derive title under a common vendor;

(2) that previously to selling the lands to which the plaintiffs and defendants are respectively entitled, the vendor laid out his estate, or a defined portion thereof (including the lands purchased by the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively), for sale in the lots subject to restrictions intended to be imposed on all the lots, and which, though varying in details as to particular lots, are consistent and consistent only with some general scheme of development;

(3) that these restrictions were intended by the common vendor to be and were for the benefit of all the lots intended to be sold, whether or not they were also intended to be and were for the benefit of other land retained by the vendor; and

(4) that both the plaintiffs and the defendants, or their predecessors in title, purchased their lots from the common vendor upon the footing that the restrictions subject to which the purchasers were made were to enure for the benefit of the other lots included in the general scheme whether or not they were also to enure for the benefit of other lands retained by the vendors.

Although its strict requirements have been relaxed in some jurisdictions, Elliston v. Reacher has been consistently applied by courts in Ontario including this court. [See Note 3 at end of document] However, the requirements of Elliston v. Reacher co-exist with the provisions of the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 230, which permit restrictive covenants to be registered and thus annexed to land. Sections 118(1), (3) and (5), the provisions of the Act in force when this case arose, [See Note 4 at end of document] prescribed the procedure and requirements for registration:

118(1) Upon the application of the owner of land that is being registered or of the registered owner of land, the land registrar may register as annexed to the land a condition or restriction that the land or a specified part thereof is not to be built upon, or is to be or is not to be used in a particular manner, or any other condition or restriction running with or capable of being legally annexed to land.

(3) Upon the application of the owner of land that is being registered or of the registered owner of land, the land registrar may register as annexed to the land a covenant that the land or a specified part thereof is not to be built upon, or is to be or is not to be used in a particular manner, or any other covenant running with or capable of being legally annexed to land.

(5) The first owner and every transferee, and every other person deriving title from him, shall be deemed to be affected with notice of such condition or covenant, but any such condition or covenant may be modified or discharged by order of the court on proof to the satisfaction of the court that the modification will be beneficial to the persons principally interested in the enforcement of the condition or covenant.

The trial judge considered Elliston v. Reacher and s. 118 of the Land Titles Act and found that Monica did not establish a building scheme over the Phase III land. I think that for two main reasons the trial judge was correct in her finding. First, Monica did not apply to register the land use restrictions now sought to be enforced as restrictive covenants under s. 118 of the Land Titles Act. Instead, it simply registered notice of the Monica agreement (which included the Association's letters patent and by-laws as schedules) under s. 74 of the Land Titles Act. The trial judge held, and I agree with her, that registration of notice of the agreement did not have the effect of annexing the land use restrictions in the Association's by-laws to the Phase III lots. Monica's failure to register the restrictions on land use as restrictive covenants under s. 118 of the Land Titles Act stands in sharp contrast to the action taken by Kitwee concerning the land in Phases I and II. In 1974 Kitwee applied to the land registrar under s. 118 of the Act to annex to the Phase I and II lands the restrictive covenants underpinning the building scheme. The land registrar exercised his discretion by registering these restrictive covenants. I think that there is much to be said for the recommendation of the 1989 Ontario Law Reform Commission Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land (at p. 158):

In the event that the formal requirements [of registration of a building scheme] are not satisfied, the instrument should be deemed conclusively not to create a land obligation or a development scheme (although, in such a case, the instrument might create a personal covenant or other obligation).

At least Monica's failure to register the land use restrictions as restrictive covenants affords strong evidence against the establishment of the building scheme over Phase III.

Second, apart from s. 118 of the Land Titles Act, the requirements of Elliston v. Reacher have not been met. The first requirement is a common vendor. There is no common vendor. The Association and the owners of Sugarbush received title to their lands from three vendors, Kitwee, Modco, and Monica. Some courts, however, have relaxed the requirement of common vendor and instead focused on the other requirements of the Elliston v. Reacher. [See Note 5 at end of document]

Even if I were to ignore the common vendor requirement, the second requirement in Elliston v. Reacher has not been satisfied. Under the second requirement, before selling any land, the vendor must have laid out its property for sale in lots subject to restrictions intended to be imposed on all the lots and consistent with a general scheme of development. In 1974 and 1975 when Sugarbush was conceived and developed by Kitwee and Modco, Phase III was not laid out or defined as part of the Sugarbush community. Indeed, Phase III was not even contemplated at the time.

Moreover, I cannot find in the record any evidence that Monica intended to establish a valid building scheme and to impose the Association's by-laws on all Phase III lot owners. Again the contrast between what Kitwee did in 1974/75 and what Monica did in 1988 is instructive: in 1974 and 1975 Kitwee registered on title to the Phases I and II lands an agreement between it, Modco and the Association, which expressly recited that "the parties hereto have agreed to the establishment of a building scheme for the better enjoyment of and the enhancement of the value of the said lands." The Monica agreement contains no express intention to establish a building scheme. Although such an intention might be inferred in an appropriate case, all that the Monica agreement recited was that Monica "wished" all Phase III lot owners to become members of the Association. This wish falls short of intending to impose the Association's by-laws on each owner.

Also, the Phase III development is not consistent with the scheme of development established in Phases I and II. The scheme developed in Phases I and II preserves Sugarbush as a recreational cottage community; Phase III is a modern residential subdivision. Counsel for the respondent owners accurately described Sugarbush as an "incongruous marriage" between Phases I and II on the one hand, and Phase III on the other. The benefits of the building scheme are not shared by the Phase III residents.

In summary, the restrictive covenants were not registered under the Land Titles Act, and the Association has not met the Elliston v. Reacher requirements for establishing the existence of a building scheme. Accordingly, the Association must fail on this first issue.

Second Issue: Are the Association's by-laws restricting land use and requiring mandatory membership enforceable?

In every agreement of purchase and sale between Monica and a purchaser of a lot or home in Phase III, the purchaser agreed to abide by the rules of the Association. The Association therefore submits that its by-laws are binding on Phase III owners. The trial judge rejected this submission. She held that the Association exceeded its powers in passing by-laws that restricted the use to which Phase III owners could put their property and that required all owners to become members of the Association. She therefore concluded that the Association could not enforce its by-laws restricting land use and that the Phase III owners had the right to terminate their membership in the Association. I agree with her conclusion.

In addition to imposing a mandatory membership scheme the Association's by-laws, in effect, restricted members from:

- installing a swing set on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- placing a dog house on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- building a patio on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- building a deck on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- installing a shed on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- building a garage on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- planting trees on their land without the approval of the Association's directors;
- painting their house without the approval of the Association's directors;
- renting space in their home to a temporary lodger without the approval of the Association's directors;
- altering, improving, or adding to their property without the approval of the Association's directors;
- installing a pool on their land;
- paving their driveway;
- building fences;
- parking boats, trailers, mobile vans or other recreational vehicles on their land; -- resigning from the Association;
- transferring their membership in the Association unless they transfer ownership of their homes.

The Association is a non-share capital corporation. Its powers to require mandatory membership and to impose these land use restrictions must be found in its letters patent or in the Corporations Act. The objects of the Association set out in its letters patent are:

- (a) To acquire the ownership of certain lands and premises in the Township of Oro, in the County of Simcoe and Province of Ontario [i.e., the common lands of Sugarbush and not privately held lands] and to manage, maintain, develop and improve such lands for the benefit of the members of the Corporation;
- (b) To manage and maintain any services for the mutual benefit of the members of the Corporation;
- (c) To erect and maintain a building or buildings on the said lands [i.e., the recreation centre];
- (d) To promote social activities among the members;
- (e) To advance the interests and welfare of the members of the Corporation; and
- (f) To assess and collect from the member of the Corporation such sums of money as the Corporation may deem necessary, from time to time, for the purpose of carrying out the said objects.

(Emphasis added)

The Association submits that subparas. (a) and (e) give it the power to impose the by-laws challenged by the owners. I disagree. Far more specific language would be required to give the Association the power to pass by-laws restricting how owners can use their own land or indeed the power to require every owner to become a member of the Association. Eberhard J. made the same point in the following passage in her reasons [at p. 536 O.R.]:

It cannot be imagined that a non-share capital corporation without the benefit of these vast bodies of supporting law could take upon itself the power to restrict use of privately owned land of its members under the general object "to advance the interest and welfare of the members of the corporation" appearing in a list of specific objects which make no mention of the use of private lands. Neither could it be imagined that the general duty of the corporation "to advance the interest and welfare of the members, in a list of duties concerned with managing common land, managing the water supply, collecting contributions for common expenses and effecting compliance with bylaws, could support the much more significant duty to control the use of privately owned lands.

A general object to advance the interest of members of a corporation must be read together with the other objects in order to understand what is intended. A general clause is not licence to pursue a direction that is not consistent with the total objects of the corporation.

I find that in so far as the by-laws purport to restrict the use of private land, they are manifestly outside of the objects of the corporation.

Equally, nothing in either s. 23 of the Corporations Act (the section giving the Association powers incidental and ancillary to its objects) or in s. 129 (the section giving the Association's directors the power to pass by-laws consistent with the Association's objects) assists the Association's position. The challenged by-laws are beyond its powers and therefore unenforceable.

Even if the Association had the power to pass these by-laws, I doubt that it could enforce them against Phase III owners. No privity of contract exists between the Association and these owners and, absent a valid building scheme covering Phase III, the Association does not have standing to enforce its by-laws.

Conclusion

For these reasons I would dismiss the Association's appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Counsel Holdings Canada Limited v. The Chanel Club Limited et al.

43 O.R. (3d) 319

Docket No. C27207

Ontario Court of Appeal Labrosse, Charron and Feldman JJ.A. March 5, 1999

NOTE: An appeal from the above-cited judgment of the Ontario Court (General Division) (Adams J.), reported at 33 O.R. (3d) 285, to the Court of Appeal for Ontario was dismissed on March 5, 1999. The court's endorsement was as follows:

BY THE COURT: -- This appeal involves a question of priority to the proceeds from the sale of property, The contest is between Counsel Holdings' first mortgage (registered) and ONHWP's subrogated rights of purchasers (unregistered) to recover their deposits paid under purchase agreements of condominium units of which Counsel Holdings had notice.

It is undisputed that Counsel Holdings has first priority under its mortgage except to the extent that it had actual notice of a prior interest. ONHWP relies on the purchase agreements to impute notice to Counsel Holdings. Paragraph 26 of the purchase agreements expressly subordinated the rights of purchasers to Counsel Holdings' mortgage. ONHWP argues, however, that Counsel Holdings cannot claim the benefit of the subordination clause because it is not a party to the purchase agreements.

In our view, the issue is not one of privity of contract but of notice. The trial judge correctly held that notice of an interest that is expressly stated to be subordinate to the mortgage is not actual notice of a "prior" interest and, therefore, cannot defeat Counsel Holdings' registered interest. Counsel relied on the case of Euroclean Canada Inc. v. Forest Glade Investments Ltd. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 769, 16 D.L.R. (4th) 289 (C.A.). However, that case is not of assistance to the appellant as it does not deal with the issue of notice.

Alternatively, ONHWP argues that, as a matter of construction, the subordination clause does not apply to the purchasers' equitable liens because the liens do not arise from the contract but by operation of law. The trial judge was correct in rejecting this argument. The purchasers' claim to their deposits clearly arose under the purchase agreements and any rights flowing therefrom are subject to the terms of those agreements, including the subrogation clause.

The ground of appeal with respect to the deposits being subject to a trust claim, an argument that the trial judge held to be without merit, has been abandoned.

In the result, we agree with the trial judge's conclusions on the two issues raised on appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

40 O.R. (3d) 252

Docket No. C24850

Ontario Court of Appeal Finlayson, McKinlay and Labrosse JJ.A. June 19, 1998

NOTE: An appeal of the judgment of the Ontario Court (General Division) (Beaulieu J.), reported at 29 O.R. (3d) 161, to the Court of Appeal for Ontario was dismissed on June 19, 1998. The court's endorsement was as follows:

BY THE COURT: -- The appellant appeals the decision of Beaulieu J. [reported (1996), 29 O.R. (3d) 161, 135 D.L.R. (4th) 525, 2 R.P.R. (3d) 267] awarding the respondents damages for breach of contract of their respective condominium purchase agreements with the appellant.

The trial judge rejected the defence that the agreements were frustrated by an unanticipated event, namely the failure to get municipal approval for the project. Additionally, he found that the conduct of the appellant caused or contributed to the non-performance of the agreements.

It is apparent to us that the risk of the City of Toronto not approving the development was a direct concern of the appellant going into the negotiations of the individual condominium agreements. After all, the agreements were executed before the appellant even owned the property. To perform the agreements, the appellant had to get development approval and as experienced developers they must have been aware that their preferred design for the project could be rejected. This risk was alleviated to some extent by the terms of the agreements, in particular cl. 38, an escape clause which permitted the appellant to terminate the agreements without liability on or before June 30, 1988, in the event that municipal approval of the development was not obtained. The appellant also protected itself with cls. 25(h) and 26 which permitted it to make major design changes.

It can scarcely be said that cl. 38 did not contemplate specifically what happened in this case. The appellant was assuming the risk after June 30, 1988 that the municipality might not approve the project. For their part, the respondents made commitments to purchase units, and if the development was not going to proceed as planned as of June 30, 1988 (as was the case since development approval was not obtained), had cl. 38 been triggered, then they could have retrieved their deposits and re-entered the market rather than risk that the units may never materialize. However, only the appellant had the ability to terminate without liability under cl. 38 and it did not do so. Accordingly, the trade-off to the appellant of acquiring the privilege of locking the respondents into the agreements past June 30, 1988 was the assumption of the risk that the project might not be approved.

Accordingly, the trial judge was entitled to find as he did that the appellant could not argue that what occurred was "entirely beyond what was contemplated by the parties".

The appellant argues that, nonetheless, what happened here was not a normal approval process. The appellant found itself in a "war" with the City over the development philosophy for the entire harbourfront property -- it was beyond any normal contemplation. The trial judge gives no indication that he did not appreciate the detailed evidence respecting the appellant's problems in negotiations with the City. Additionally, he was entitled on the evidence to find that the conduct of the appellant in failing to respond reasonably to the letter from the Chairman of the Land Use Committee and the subsequent hard line taken with the City contributed to the failure to obtain the requisite approvals for the development.

The trial judge held that the appellant made a conscious decision to waive the termination right in the escape clause and therefore assumed the risk of liability inherent in the agreements to construct and deliver possession of the units without first obtaining approval for construction. He considered all of the clauses relevant to termination (cls. 6(c), 26, 30(1) and 37) and concluded that none of them relieved the appellant from liability.

The trial judge further held that the appellant failed to use reasonable efforts and failed to take all reasonable steps to obtain the municipal approval required for the proposed project. He also held that the appellant could not rely on its refusal to negotiate with the municipality, which the trial judge found to be unreasonable, to excuse itself from the performance of the agreements.

It is essentially on the basis of these findings that the trial judge concluded that the appellants breached the agreements and that the doctrine of frustration could not assist the appellant. The alleged unanticipated event was not "so fundamental as to be regarded by the law both as striking at the root of the agreement and as entirely beyond what was contemplated by the parties when they entered into the agreement": see Leitch Transport Ltd. v. Neonex International Ltd. (1979), 27 O.R. (2d) 363, 8 B.L.R. 257 (C.A.).

The trial judge awarded damages intended to place the respondents in the same position as they would have been had the agreements been performed. The respondents had not only paid the necessary deposits required under the agreements, they had committed themselves to the balance of the purchase price until the proposed date of possession. Accordingly, they should be compensated for the value of their investments as found by the trial judge.

With respect to the appropriate date to assess the damages, the trial judge rejected the extended possession dates provided for in the agreements and the date of the breach of the agreements. (The appellant did not argue that the date of the breach was the appropriate date and we need not consider it.) The trial judge found that in the circumstances, the date specified in the respective agreements for delivery or possession of the units to the respondents was the appropriate date: see Ritcher v. Simpson (1982), 24 R.P.R. 37, 37 B.C.L.R. 325 (S.C.). He then based his assessment on the calculation provided by the appellant's expert witness.

There was ample evidence to support the trial judge's findings and conclusions referred to above. We see no proper basis to interfere.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Urbanetics Limited v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program

31 O.R. (3d) 284

No. 307/94

Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court, O'Driscoll, Borkovich and Corbett JJ. November 14, 1996

APPEAL pursuant to s. 11(5) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21.

Glenn R. Solomon and David Paul Preger, for appellant/ respondent in cross-appeal. Brian Campbell, for respondent/appellant in cross-appeal.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

ODRISCOLL J.: --

I. Nature of Proceedings Under s. 11(5) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21, as amended ("M.C.C.R.A."), Urbanetics Limited ("Urbanetics") appeals to the Divisional Court from an order of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal ("Tribunal"), dated April 11, 1994, following 31 days of hearings.

Section 11(5) of the M.C.C.R.A.:

11(5) An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal, and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar or of the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with such directions as the court considers proper.

In the order under appeal:

(i) Teron International Urban Development Corporation Ltd. ("T.I.U.D.C.L.") was ordered to pay to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Program") the sum of $166,750 within 90 days of the date of the issue of the order;

(ii) that if that sum were paid as directed, the Registrar of the Program should not carry out his proposal, dated September 10, 1990, to refuse to renew the registration of Urbanetics under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 (the "Act"), ss. 7, 8 and 9;

(iii) that if that sum were not paid as directed, the Registrar should carry out his proposal.

The Program cross-appealed and asked that the decision of the Tribunal "be set aside and that the issue of damages and vendor's liability be referred back to the Tribunal to determine the proper quantum of damages for breach of warranty, and the extent of the vendor's liability for breach of warranty".

On September 19, 1996, at the conclusion of argument, the members of the court recessed, returned and announced that the appeal was allowed with reasons to follow. At that time, counsel agreed that because the appeal had been allowed, the cross-appeal was rendered moot and is dismissed.

II. Summary of Facts Relevant to Appeal

1. William Teron (father) and Chris Teron (son) are officers and/or directors of both Urbanetics and T.I.U.D.C.L.

2. T.I.U.D.C.L., registered as a vendor and a builder under the Act, was the vendor and builder of a condominium project consisting of two six-storey buildings and several townhouses. Counsel for the appellant told us that William Teron lives in one of the buildings.

3. Upon completion, there were a number of deficiencies brought to the attention of T.I.U.D.C.L. by unit owners; it appears that all were remedied satisfactorily by T.I.U.D.C.L. The only difficulties that remained extant were experienced by Carlton Condominium Corporation No. 256 ("C.C.C. 256"), the owner of common areas, with regard to common elements and principally waterleaks to the "curtain walls" of the two buildings.

4. Despite some repairs and the commissioning of reports, C.C.C. 256 continued to complain of "curtain wall leaks".

5. Meetings and negotiations took place amongst the Program, T.I.U.D.C.L. and C.C.C. 256. However, on June 3, 1988, T.I.U.D.C.L. received a copy of a letter from the Program addressed to C.C.C. 256 advising C.C.C. 256 to place for quotation the items listed in Schedule "A" thereto and that the Program would pay all reasonable costs. The letter from the Program stated that the specifications should be developed from the Morrison Hersfield Report ("M.H. Report"), a study commissioned and paid for by T.I.U.D.C.L.

6. T.I.U.D.C.L. took the position that C.C.C. 256 did not carry out the instructions given by the Program to obtain specifications and a tender based on the M.H. Report. T.I.U.D.C.L. further claimed that instead, C.C.C. 256 obtained a new recommendation from the architects stating that all the windows and every pane of glass on all four sides of both six-storey buildings should be pulled out and replaced -- this recommendation included replacing:

(i) all of the sliding doors about which no complaint had ever been made; (ii) many of the windows on the other three sides about which no complaints had ever been made; and

(iii) all of the repairs that T.I.U.D.C.L. had done up to that point.

7. T.I.U.D.C.L. further took the position that C.C.C. 256 had completely ignored the instructions of the Program. However, in August 1989, the Program advised C.C.C. 256 that it had reviewed the specifications and found them to be in order.

8. On August 1, 1990, the Program issued a cheque in the amount of $1,301,154.61 to settle C.C.C. 256's claims against the Program. On the same day, the Program invoiced T.I.U.D.C.L. for a total of $1,542,465.66 (which includes the Program's 15 per cent administration fee).

9. The Program paid out $1,325,934.69 notwithstanding the fact that the limit of its statutory or regulatory liability was $920,000.

10. T.I.U.D.C.L. did not pay the amount demanded by the Program because it took the position that the Program had acted beyond its powers and because of the course of conduct adopted by the Program.

11. Counsel for the appellant told us that the Program was suing T.I.U.D.C.L. for $1.5 million.

12. T.I.U.D.C.L. allowed its registration to lapse under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31).

13. By letter, dated September 10, 1990, the Registrar sent a notice of proposal to the appellant, Urbanetics Limited, stating: The Registrar gives notice of his proposal (the "Proposal") to refuse to renew your registration for the reasons shown on the reverse side of this notice.

The reasons on the reverse side of the notice state:

The past conduct of Mr. Chris Teron and Mr. William Teron directors and officers of Urbanetics Limited affords reasonable grounds for belief that the applicant's undertakings will not be carried out in accordance with law and with integrity and honesty, to WIT:

As directors and officers of Teron International Urban Development Corporation Ltd., Mr. Chris Teron and Mr. William Teron permitted that company to violate its statutory obligations which led to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program having to pay out of its Guarantee Fund the total sum of $1,524,824.89 for warranted repairs. This all being contrary to the provisions of Section 4(4) subsection (2) of the Vendor/Builder Agreement executed by the above company.

14. Urbanetics appealed to the Tribunal. The 31 days of hearing took place between September 1991 and November 1993. On April 11, 1994, the Tribunal's reasons for decision and order (83 pages) were released.

III. Findings of the Tribunal

The tribunal therefore finds that the amount for which Teron International should have been liable for the completion of the remedial work by the Program was $166,750.00.

Another consideration which the Tribunal considers important in this case is the fact that the Registrar, the exercise of whose discretion we have to consider, is the very person in the Program who has to take a large part of the responsibility for decisions which we have found to be peculiar to say the least, and whose conduct at the final meeting with the Terons was such that we would not think it should be standard procedure. With all of these considerations in mind, the Tribunal has reached the conclusion that it should now form its opinion upon the critical question and as provided by s. 16(3) of the Act substitute that opinion for that of the Registrar set out in the proposal.

The Tribunal does not find that the conduct of William Teron and Chris Teron in refusing to cause Teron International to pay $1,524,824.89 to the Program affords any reasonable grounds for belief that the applicants' undertaking will not be carried out in accordance with law and with integrity or honesty. While we have set out above certain criticisms of Teron International (and therefore of the two men who substantially control that company), none of these encompass any dishonesty or lack of integrity. The conduct of the matter by the Program was such that the only course available to the Terons to dispute the position of the Program and resist this very large and, in the result, unjustified claim was to do exactly what they did. We must, therefore, find that the sole ground upon which the Registrar bases his Proposal cannot be supported.

6. Question of the order which should be made herein

Upon the foregoing finding, the Tribunal would probably be justified in simply making an order directing that the Registrar not carry out his proposal. However, there are reasons why we should consider an alternative to this conclusion. It is our view that, upon the findings which we have made, the Program would now be justified in demanding payment from Teron International of the sum of $166,750 and, if the same were not paid within a reasonable time, to put this failure forward as the basis of a new proposal to the same effect as this one except for the amount involved. We have to consider whether we have jurisdiction to make such an alternative order herein. In his argument in reply, as noted above, Mr. Campbell strongly submitted that we have such jurisdiction and for reasons which we shall outline briefly we accept his submission.

It does not seem right to require the Registrar to have to issue a new proposal and perhaps have to come back to this Tribunal a second time with such proposal based on a fact situation which has been established after such a long and thorough hearing. It is also perhaps important on this point to keep in mind that, while considerably the greater of the criticism for the mismanagement of the whole matter rests with the Program, the applicant is not free from blame. If it had carried out the recommendations of Morrison Hershfield with dispatch, that should have been an end of the whole matter. Also, if as soon as it got a copy of the letter of June 3, 1988, it had gone after the Program and insisted that proper instructions for quotations and tender be issued on the basis of the Morrison Hershfield Report, the Program would likely have corrected the mistake in accordance with its own decision to proceed on that basis. On the other hand, if the Program had refused to put it right in those circumstances, it would have been clear to everyone at that time, that the total responsibility for the mishandling of the matter rested with the program.

Therefore, we are of the view that the provisions of s. 16(3) of the Act give us authority to make the order hereunder:

16(3) . . . and may by order direct the Corporation to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Corporation ought to take in accordance with this Act and the regulations, and for such purposes the Tribunal may substitute its opinion for that of the Corporation.

Accordingly we have concluded that the order we should make is that the Registrar should renew the registration of Urbanetics Limited on condition that there be paid to the Program on behalf of Teron International Urban Development Corporation Ltd., the sum of $166,750.00 within a reasonable time.

By virtue of the authority vested in it by s. 16(3) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, the Tribunal directs that:

(1) There shall be paid to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program on behalf of Teron International Urban Development Corporation Ltd., the sum of $166,750.00 within 90 days of the date of the issue of this order;

(2) That in the event, the said sum of $166,750.00 is paid as directed, the Registrar shall not carry out his proposal;

(3) That in the event the said sum is not paid as directed, the Registrar shall carry out his proposal.

IV. Relevant Sections of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act

6. No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless the person is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

7(1) An applicant is entitled to registration by the Registrar except where,

(c) the applicant is a corporation and,

.....

(ii) the past conduct of its officers or directors affords reasonable grounds for belief that its undertakings will not be carried on in accordance with law and with integrity and honesty . . .

8(2) Subject to section 9, the Registrar may refuse to renew or may suspend or revoke a registration for any reason that would disentitle the registrant to registration under section 7, if the registrant were an applicant, or where the registrant has a record of breaches of warranties or of failure or unwillingness to complete performance of contracts or is in breach of a term or condition of the registration.

9(1) Where the Registrar proposes to refuse to grant or renew a registration or proposes to suspend or revoke a registration, the Registrar shall serve notice of the proposal, together with written reasons therefor, on the applicant or registrant.

(2) A notice under subsection (1) shall state that the applicant or registrant is entitled to a hearing by the Tribunal if the applicant or registrant mails or delivers, within fifteen days after service of the notice under subsection (1), notice in writing requiring a hearing to the Registrar and the Tribunal.

(4) Where an applicant or registrant requires a hearing by the Tribunal in accordance with subsection (2), the Tribunal shall appoint a time for and hold the hearing and, on the application of the Registrar at the hearing, may by order direct the Registrar to carry out the Registrar's proposal or refrain from carrying it out and to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Registrar ought to take in accordance with this Act and the regulations, and for such purposes the Tribunal may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar. V. Conclusions

1. As seen in the Tribunal's reasons for decision and order, supra:

The Tribunal does not find that the conduct of William Teron and Chris Teron in refusing to cause Teron International to pay $1,524,824.89 to the Program affords any reasonable grounds for belief that the applicants' undertaking will not be carried out in accordance with law and with integrity or honesty . . . We must, therefore, find that the sole ground upon which the Registrar bases his proposal cannot be supported.

2. In its reasons (Appeal Book, p. 84), the Tribunal found that the amount of the remedial work for which T.I.U.D.C.L. should have been liable was $166,750.

3. In our view, because the sole ground alleged by the Registrar "cannot be supported" (i.e., it was dismissed), and because of the wording of s. 7(1)(c)(ii) and s. 8(2) of the Act, the Tribunal should have ordered that the Registrar's proposal not be carried out unless some other legal basis existed that authorized a condition to be attached to the "dismissal".

4. It is true that s. 9(5) of the Act states that "the Tribunal may attach such terms and conditions to its order or to the registration as it considers proper to give effect to the purposes of this Act". In its reasons for decision and order (Appeal Book, p. 91) the Tribunal said: "It does not seem right to require the Registrar to have to issue a new proposal and perhaps have to come back to this Tribunal a second time with such proposal based on the fact situation which has been established after such a long and thorough hearing."

5. The factum of counsel for Urbanetics states:

It is respectfully submitted that the Registrar cannot use the threat of refusal to renew a registration as a method of trying to collect an unpaid debt arising under the Act.

It is respectfully submitted that the Tribunal erred in law in imposing the condition upon the renewal of the registration of the Appellant solely for the purpose of expediency rather than to give effect to the purposes of the Act.

I agree with those statements set out in the factum.

In Village Shopping Plaza (Waterdown) Ltd. v. Hamilton- Wentworth (Regional Municipality) (1981), 34 O.R. (2d) 311 at p. 315, 127 D.L.R. (3d) 354 (Div. Ct.):

The power to impose terms and conditions must, however, be exercised within the perspective within which the statute is intended to operate: Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121 at p. 140, 16 D.L.R. (2d) 689. The stated objective of the Act is the maintenance of the escarpment and the control of compatible development. The Commission's own staff agreed that the applicants' proposed development conformed to its policies. In the absence of any express or necessarily implied statutory authorization, the Commission was not, in my view, entitled to oblige the applicants to satisfy Hamilton-Wentworth's road widening policy as a condition of issuing a development permit.

6. The Tribunal in this case concluded that the sole allegation must be "dismissed". In my view, the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to tag the impugned condition onto the dismissal.

7. In my view, s. 16(3) of the Act has no relevancy to the case at bar because s. 16 deals with a hearing before the Tribunal of a "person or owner affected" by a decision of the Corporation. Section 14(1) of the Act speaks of "a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home". Under s. 1(g) of the Act an "owner" means "a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and the successors in title". The s. 16 hearing before the Tribunal is for a "person affected" and/or an "owner". The s. 16 hearing is not about a hearing sought by a "builder" or "vendor" as defined respectively in s. 1(a) and (n) of the Act.

8. It will be noted that in Re 982681 Ontario Ltd. (Griffin Construction) October 6, 1993, the Tribunal, with the same presiding chairperson who presided in the case at bar, said at p. 7:

It is also important to note that the stricture placed against the applicant by the statute is not that a registration should not be granted to a company if there is an unpaid debt to the Program by one of its officers or directors or by another company of which such officer or director was also a director or officer or in which he was in some way a principal. In other words, the Registrar cannot use this proceeding simply as a method of trying to collect an unpaid debt of this kind. The stricture placed against a corporate applicant is that it should not receive its registration if the "past conduct of its officers or directors affords reasonable grounds for belief that its undertakings will not be carried on in accordance with law and with integrity or honesty". So the registration should not be refused simply because the Program has not been paid. It should only be refused if the conduct of Mr. Griffin in dealing with the earlier problem leading to the $2,075 debt is such as to lead a reasonable person to conclude that he is less than honest and lacks integrity.

VI. Result

The appeal is allowed; the order of the Tribunal, dated April 11, 1994, is set aside. An order will issue directing the Registrar of the respondent to register or renew, without condition, the registration of Urbanetics Limited.

The cross-appeal is dismissed as being moot.

VII. Costs

After announcing that the appeal would be allowed, counsel were asked for submissions as to the quantum of fixed costs. Counsel for the appellant submitted that an appropriate amount would be $7,500; counsel for the Plan submitted that the figure should be $5,000.

The respondent shall pay to the appellant its costs fixed at $5,000.

Appeal allowed.

Peel Condominium Corp. No. 199 v. Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Ltd. et al.

10 O.R. (3d) 640

File Nos. 418/89 and 419/89

Court of Appeal for Ontario Robins, McKinlay and Labrosse JJ.A. September 23, 1992

NOTE: On an appeal and a cross-appeal from the judgment of Carruthers J. of the High Court of Justice, reported at 68 O.R. (2d) 513, to the Court of Appeal, the appeal was dismissed with costs and the cross-appeal was dismissed without costs on September 23, 1992. The judgment of the court endorsed on the appeal book was as follows:

We are of the opinion that there is ample evidence to support the trial judge's conclusion that the appellant Sanrose failed in its duty to take all reasonable steps to sell the units owned by it in the condominium project in issue. The proceedings against the appellant Town-City Realty Ltd., contrary to the view of the trial judge, fall within the provisions of s. 49 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and were not a nullity by reason of non-compliance with s. 14(2).

On the basis of the facts found by the trial judge, he was entitled to grant the relief he did in favour of the respondent against the appellants. We are not persuaded that there is any basis upon which this court can properly interfere with his disposition. The judge exercised his discretion in referring the matter to the local judge rather than appointing a receiver. There is no error in principle in this respect and we would not interfere. In the result the appeal will be dismissed with costs. The cross-appeal will be dismissed without costs.

Lakewood by the Park Ltd. v. Ontario Home Warranty Program (Gen. Div.)

5 O.R. (3d) 527

ONTARIO Ontario Court (General Division) Greer J. August 19, 1991

MOTION by plaintiff for summary judgment; CROSS-MOTION by defendant for a mandatory injunction. Sandra L. Secord, for plaintiff.

Philip P. Healey, for defendant.

GREER J. (orally):-- This is a motion by Lakewood by the Park Limited (Lakewood) for summary judgment. There is also a cross-motion by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the program) for a mandatory injunction to prevent the return to Lakewood of a letter of credit held by the program on its behalf, unless replaced by a new letter of credit. The cross-motion was heard prior to the motion.

The cross-motion was heard on June 7, and on August 9, 1991. Lakewood is a developer registered under the program. Lakewood and the program had entered into a vendor builder agreement with respect to the construction of a condominium apartment building. The agreement had been entered into on May 27, 1987. It was agreed by the parties that in order for Lakewood to begin construction of the building, a building permit had to issue and that a building permit would only issue where the builder was registered with the program. We are, in these reasons for judgment, dealing with the cross-motion only. It was also agreed by the parties that the condominium building had been completely constructed and that as of August 9, 1991, all of the units of the building had been sold. The project was registered on October 26, 1990.

Under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, a builder is required to post a letter of credit for the deposits of purchasers in order to protect the deposits of purchasers in the event that something should go amiss in the construction of the building.

Lakewood brought on a motion for summary judgment in order to force the return of its letter of credit with respect to the deposits because it said that the project was now registered and that all of the units were sold. The program took the position that it could reasonably require a letter of credit for deficiency problems. It appeared on the evidence, and in more particular on the affidavit of Mr. Humphrey, that there were indeed such deficiency problems.

The program also took the position that the letter of credit could be reduced as deficiencies were corrected, but that it did not have to return the letter of credit while there were deficiencies. The program, as of August 9, 1991, was asking only for a reduced letter of credit in the amount of $104,000, or in the alternative, to keep the letter of credit, which it presently holds, and have the amount of that credit reduced.

There was a jurisdictional question raised by Lakewood with respect to my authority to hear this motion. Reference was made to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and, in particular, s. 19(1) of the Act, which reads:

19.(1) Where it appears to the Corporation that any vendor or builder does not comply with any provision of this Act or the regulations, notwithstanding the imposition of any penalty in respect of such non-compliance and in addition to any other rights it may have, the Corporation may apply to a judge of the High Court for an order directing such person to comply with such provision and, upon the application, the judge may make the order or such other order as the judge thinks fit.

In particular, counsel drew my attention to the words "upon the application" and also the words which were in the margin of the Act and which read "Restraining order". In s. 19, I do not believe that the word "application" is used in the sense that it means an originating notice of application. I am satisfied that the wording of s. 19 is broad enough that the legislature intended, in using the words, "in addition to any other rights it may have", that such a motion could be brought on as the program has done. The words in the margin (and I may be using an incorrect term here), I believe can be called "moon gloss" in that they are simply helpful to counsel when they are looking through the sections of the Act, that they have no legal meaning at all, and that the headings or marginal notes are not part of the statute.

Counsel for both parties made reference to various sections of the Act. There was no dispute that Lakewood was a builder within the meaning of the Act. The Act quite clearly is there for the protection of the purchasers with respect to their deposits, but it is also there for protection against claims and warranty claims. The Act, in my view, is there to ensure public protection. It is dedicated to serving the public interest and is therefore open to a broad liberal interpretation of its provisions.

Section 7(1) of the Act deals with the registration of vendors and builders as follows:

7.(1) An applicant is entitled to registration by the Registrar except where,

(a) having regard to his financial position, the applicant cannot reasonably be expected to be financially responsible in the conduct of his undertakings ...

The section also makes reference to the case of an applicant who does not have sufficient technical competence to consistently perform the warranties. Section 7(2) states that:

(2) A registration is subject to such terms and conditions to give effect to the purposes of this Act as are consented to by the applicant or imposed by the Tribunal or prescribed by the regulations.

R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 728 of the Act sets out terms and conditions of registration of builders and vendors. Section 1 para. 3 of the regulation states:

3. The registrant shall diligently perform or cause to be performed all obligations imposed on him under the Plan and under any agreement made by him with the Corporation in respect of the Plan.

Section 13(1) of the Act sets out the warranties which are given by every vendor of a home which the vendor warrants to the owner. Section 13(1) reads as follows:

13.(1) Every vendor of a home warrants to the owner,

(a) that the home,

(i) is constructed in a workmanlike manner and is free from defects in material,

(ii) is fit for habitation, and

(iii) is constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code;

(b) that the home is free of major structural defects as defined by the regulations; and (c) such other warranties as are prescribed by the regulations.

Section 14(1) of the Act sets out that:

14.(1) Where,

(b) an owner has a cause of action against a vendor for damages resulting from a breach of warranty; or

(c) the owner suffers damage because of a major structural defect as defined in the regulations ... and the claim is made within four years after the warranty expires or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

The owner has remedies under the vendor builder agreement which are also available to it. Under those remedies, the builder must indemnify and save harmless the corporation.

Counsel also made reference to ss. 8 and 9 of the Act which set out the revocation of registration and the refusal by the registrar to renew a registration. Section 8(2) states:

(2) ... where the registrant has a record of breaches of warranties or of failure or unwillingness to complete performance of contracts or is in breach of a term or condition of the registration.

Counsel for the program has stated that the registrar has moved under this section of the Act, but made it clear that it would be a lengthy period of time before that matter was even heard.

In looking at the various remedies that are given to the owner under the Act or under the agreement, I am of the view that these remedies may end up being hollow in the event that the builder is bankrupt, insolvent, or is a shell company against which execution could not be levied as there would be no assets against which to levy. Given this, and the most recent attempt by the legislature to ensure that all vendor builders of high rise condominiums provide protection for the public in purchasing condominiums, the program issued Bulletin No. 19, which I brought to the attention of counsel on the second day of this motion.

Bulletin No. 19 supersedes an earlier bulletin, but makes it quite clear that it only applies to most vendor builders of high rise condominiums who are enrolled under the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act after March 31, 1989. Those vendor builders will be required, as a condition of continued registration, to provide the program with a number of things which are set out in the Bulletin. It is interesting to note that the guidelines to the Bulletin outline a very clear analysis of what is expected with respect to site review and reporting by a third party inspection of the building or by the original design architect or engineer.

In addition, it is also clear that the legislature, in issuing this Bulletin, was attempting to codify what it had expected to be done by vendor builders. In certain respects, it is holding vendor builders to perhaps a higher standard of care now in completing deficiencies, before they walk away from buildings.

I am advised by counsel that the program now requires vendor builders to obtain convertible letters of credit to cover deficiencies and warrant claims. It is therefore clear to me that this program is an evolving program of evolving legislation to protect the public.

Ms. Secord, in her argument on behalf of her client's position, was well organized and prepared. Ms. Secord pointed out that her client had been rated as excellent by the program in the early or late 1970s. I did, however, have difficulties with this as a present rating when I read the affidavit of the inspector, Mr. Humphrey and the transcript of the examination of John Garay, the vendor builder. It appeared to me that there were a number of major deficiencies which were set out by Mr. Humphrey in his site reviews. I found Mr. Garay to be less than forthright in his examination, given the fact that he was a builder of many years' experience and given the fact that he had been in the 1970s considered or rated as excellent with respect to some of his earlier buildings.

Lakewood contends that there was no initial request made for security for the deficiencies. The difficulty which the program is faced with under the old system, if I may call it that, is that the Act provides for an immediate letter of credit with respect to the deposits, but does not provide for a convertible letter of credit, which is now the type of letter being used. The Act does, in my view, provide for the program to ask for additional letters of credit, which, from a practical point of view, would not be asked for at the beginning of the project. It would have been premature under the old rules to ask for a letter of credit prior to the building being out of the ground. It is only when most of the building has been constructed, if not all of the building, that deficiencies appear. Deficiencies can be either major or minor. I was not impressed with Mr. Garay's statement in his affidavit that there were no such deficiencies. It appeared that Lakewood, even after the affidavit was sworn by Mr. Garay, corrected certain deficiencies which the inspector had noted. The legislature now makes it clear that there must be a convertible letter of credit posted and it now has the vendor builder use third party guarantees. It is not in the public interest to have the plan, when things go wrong, pay out large amounts of money because the builder is a shell company, insolvent, or cannot be located, or that the guarantees given by the individuals or the corporation are worthless. The public has a right to be protected and as the number of condominiums being built increases each year, it is incumbent upon the legislature to continue to revise its bulletins and its statutes in this regard.

Counsel made reference to a number of cases. Although I have reviewed them all in preparing these reasons for judgment, I only make reference to a few of them. It should be noted that the granting of mandatory injunctions is not granted lightly. Lakewood's counsel made reference to the case of Chitel v. Rothbart, a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal (1982), 39 O.R. (2d) 513, 141 D.L.R. (3d) 269. In that case, it sets out that Mareva injunctions are recognized in Ontario and may be granted if certain criteria are met. Counsel for the program was simply asking for a mandatory injunction, although counsel for Lakewood seemed to categorize it as a Mareva injunction. In any event, the principles in the Chitel case are useful, and these are that the plaintiff should make full and frank disclosure of all matters in his knowledge which are material for the judge to know; the plaintiff should give particulars of his claim against the defendant, stating the ground of his claim, the amount thereof and fairly state the points made against it by the defendant; the plaintiff should give some grounds for believing that the defendants have assets here; and the plaintiffs should give some ground for believing that there is risk of the assets being removed before the judgment or reward is granted. The plaintiff must give an undertaking as to damages. While these criteria clearly deal with a Mareva injunction, and in that particular instance there was a question of whether there was the risk of removal of the assets, the general principles apply.

In this instance, the program has made full and frank disclosure of all matters. These were brought up to date. The fact that the letter of credit had been reduced to $104,000 as of August 9, 1991 was important. The program has set out the particulars of the deficiencies and its concern if such a mandatory injunction is not made with respect to the letter of credit. If the letter of credit is tendered and there are deficiencies, the condominium owner's only recourse is to go against the program for these deficiencies.

There is no proof that the personal guarantee or the guarantee of the company could be acted upon by the program in the event of the program having to pay monies out for repairs. I am also mindful that the granting of any injunction must be just and convenient. In the case of Carlton Realty Co. v. Maple Leaf Mills Ltd., a judgment of the Ontario High Court of Justice (1978), 22 O.R. (2d) 198, 93 D.L.R. (3d) 106, the court points out at p. 201 O.R., pp. 109-10 D.L.R., that:

Interim injunctions should not be freely granted by a Court. An injunction is an extraordinary remedy. However, in proper cases they are granted and they are the appropriate remedy, in effect, to preserve the status quo until the trial of an action.

The court at p. 203 O.R., p. 111 D.L.R., also points out that:

Each case must be considered on its own merits and then the discretion of the Court must be exercised.

Further on p. 203 O.R., p. 111 D.L.R., the court states:

Damages are a very serious factor to be considered. An applicant must show that he will suffer harm that cannot be adequately compensated in damages if the injunction is not granted. This is usually referred to as irreparable harm. Again, this is a question of degree in the Judge's mind. Clearly, if damages, although not readily ascertainable at the time of the application, are an adequate remedy an injunction should not and will not be granted.

The court also noted at p. 203 O.R., p. 112 D.L.R.:

When both parties will suffer, then the problem surely becomes one of weight.

The cases which were referred to me by the counsel for the program, in certain instances, dealt with issues of recurring breaches. There can be an analogy made to those recurring breaches, not necessarily recurring deficiencies, with the number of deficiencies which have appeared in the building.

In the case of Ontario (Attorney General) v. Grabarchuk (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 607, 67 D.L.R. (3d) 31, an Ontario Divisional Court decision, the court noted at p. 614 O.R., p. 38 D.L.R.:

As between private parties, the justice and convenience on an interlocutory injunction is usually decided in the light of a number of elements. These include the balance of convenience and the irreparability of the apprehended damage ...

The criteria are then to assist a Court to decide whether to grant a party some kind of relief other than damages, that is, to interpose a kind of relief rather than the usual relief sought in the law Courts, which is damages.

Counsel for the program also made reference to the recent case of Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Lukenda (1989), 3 R.P.R. (2d) 238 (Ont. H.C.J.), which was affirmed by the Ontario Court of Appeal in (1991), 2 O.R. (3d) 675, 47 O.A.C. 388. This is the most recent decision of our courts with respect to the program. The issues, while not the same as the ones at bar, dealt with a third party guarantee. The Ontario Court of Appeal reviews the purposes of the legislation on pp. 676-77 O.R., pp. 389-90 O.A.C., of the judgment. At the bottom of p. 676 O.R., pp. 389-90 O.A.C., the court notes:

The major purpose of the Plan Act is to protect purchasers of new homes by requiring that vendors and builders be screened for financial responsibility, integrity and technical competence. To assure public protection, it provides for warranties, a guarantee bond and compensation in the event of loss by a purchaser resulting from dealings with a registrant. In order to effect the purposes of the Plan Act, a broad and liberal interpretation of its provisions is appropriate.

If we look at the provisions of s. 7 of the Act, it is clear that the whole question of the financial responsibility of the vendor and builder is in the mind of the legislature. In the Lukenda case, the Court of Appeal held that the corporation had the corporate power to make the vendor builder provide a third party guarantee. That is not the issue in this case, but there is an analogy with respect to letters of credit. The whole question of integrity deals with deposit claims and the guarantees and statements made by the builder; and the whole question of technical competence certainly deals with warranty claims and the question of deficiencies.

I am satisfied that the program has, and the Act provides the program with, authority to require additional letters of credit in addition to the letter of credit with respect to the deposit. An order will go for the mandatory injunctive relief sought by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program. If Lakewood chooses to file a new letter of credit for $104,000 with the program, the program may surrender its old letter of credit which dealt with deposits. In the event that Lakewood chooses not to file such a new letter of credit, the program may transfer the present letter of credit to a letter of credit covering deficiencies. I will leave the practicalities of this to Lakewood and the program.

The legislature intended the public to be protected and there has been an evolution of this legislation and an evolution of the administration of the plan over the years since Lakewood entering into the original building agreement. There would be no protection for owners if the program had to go against a shell company or an insolvent builder or had to call upon the guarantee of a builder that had no backing to it.

Cross-motion granted.

4 O.R. (3d) 655

Action No. 55534/90Q

ONTARIO Ontario Court (General Division) Sutherland J. August 27, 1991

MOTIONS by the defendants (applicants) for a determination of a question of law and for an order dismissing the plaintiff's action.

Richard Storrey, for plaintiff (respondent).

P. David McCutcheon, for defendants (applicants).

SUTHERLAND J.:-- These motions are brought by the defendants Jasmac Canada Inc. and One St. Thomas Limited, under rules 21.01(1) and 20.01 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, O. Reg. 560/84, in the plaintiff's action to enforce a covenant relating to, and purporting to restrict the use of, a valuable parcel of land in the City of Toronto.

The plaintiff is a body corporate created under the Victoria University Act, 1951, S.O. 1951, c. 119, and is responsible for the management and administration of Victoria University. All real and personal property used or occupied by Victoria University is vested in the plaintiff.

It is common ground that, as pleaded by it, the plaintiff, by a deed (the Victoria Deed) dated May 19, 1981, and registered as Instrument No. CT 478787, conveyed to the defendant Heritage Properties Limited the whole of Lots 21 and 22 and part of Lot 23 on the north side of Charles Street West according to a plan filed in the Land Registry Office for the Registry Division of Toronto (No. 63) as Plan No. 97, and part of Charles Street West which lands are hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Transferred Lands".

It is also common ground that, as pleaded by the plaintiff, the Victoria Deed contains covenants on the part of the defendant Heritage Properties Limited as follows:

AND the Grantee COVENANTS with the Grantor, its successors and assigns, that, as a covenant running with the land, it will not erect or cause to be erected at any time on any portion of Lots 21, 22, 23, 24 or 25, Plan 97, Toronto, or on the part of Charles Street West closed by City of Toronto By-Law 38/70, any building having a height in excess of 20 metres, and the Grantee covenants and agrees to secure and register a similar covenant from any purchaser or assignee of the Grantee.

The height of the said building shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the City of Toronto By-law, 20623, as of the date hereof, including the application of such by-law to such permissible heights for stair tower, elevator shaft, chimney stock or other heating, cooling or ventilating equipment, or window washing equipment, located on the roof of such building, or any fence, wall or structure enclosing such elements.

It is noted that, although the first of the above-quoted covenants purports to run with the land, no dominant tenement, or land for the benefit of which that covenant was taken, is described or referred to in the covenants. It is also an accepted fact that no dominant tenement, or benefited land, is described or referred to anywhere else in the Victoria Deed.

It is noted that the lands whose use is purported to be affected by the above-quoted covenant (hereinafter sometimes called the "Covenant Lands") include but are more extensive than the Transferred Lands conveyed by the Victoria Deed.

According to the pleadings it is common ground (and for purposes of the rule 20.01 motion, I find) that:

1. all of the defendant corporations were incorporated under the laws of Ontario with their head offices at the City of Toronto;
2. by a deed dated April 2, 1982, and registered on May 5, 1982, as Instrument No. CT531040, Heritage Properties Limited conveyed the Covenant Lands and other lands to the named defendant Crazy Horse Developments Limited. An affidavit annexed to Instrument No. CT 531040 shows that simultaneously abutting land under the land titles system was transferred by Heritage Developments to Crazy Horse Development;
3. in 1985 Crazy Horse conveyed the Covenant Lands and other abutting lands to the defendant Upper Canada Land Corporation (Upper Canada);
4. the deeds or transfers referred to in paras. 3 and 4 above contained covenants in substantially the same terms, as between the respective grantors and grantees, as the above-quoted covenant from the Victoria Deed;
5. the defendant Crazy Horse Developments Limited was dissolved on June 2, 1986, for failure to comply with the Corporations Tax Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 97;
6. by a deed dated August 14, 1987, and registered as Instrument No. CT893555 Upper Canada in turn conveyed the Covenant Lands and other, abutting, lands to the defendant One St. Thomas Limited; 7. the last-mentioned deed, from Upper Canada to One St. Thomas Limited did not contain a covenant like or comparable to the above-quoted covenant from the Victoria Deed;
8. the defendant Jasmac Canada Limited has filed with the City of Toronto a development application covering the Covenant Lands and other, abutting, lands wherein it seeks approval of an 11-storey hotel development, and it is uncontestably true that an 11-storey building would exceed the 20-metre height limit specified in the above-mentioned covenants;

9. The defendant One St. Thomas Limited is the registered owner of the Covenant Lands and the defendant, Jasmac Canada Inc., is the beneficial owner of those lands.

Moreover, it is pleaded by the plaintiff that Upper Canada was holding the lands as trustee for One St. Thomas Limited at the time it conveyed the lands to the latter and that One St. Thomas Limited is bound by the covenants given by its trustee, Upper Canada, in the deed from Crazy Horse Developments to Upper Canada.

In the action the plaintiff claims:

- (a) a declaration that none of the defendants are permitted to erect or cause to be erected on the Covenant Lands any building having a height in excess of 20 metres;
- (b) a permanent injunction restraining the defendants or any of them from erecting or causing to be erected upon the Covenant Lands any such building;
- (c) its costs of the action; and,
- (d) such further and other relief as may seem just.

The plaintiff pleads and asserts that the first of the above-quoted covenants in the Victoria Deed is a valid covenant which runs with the Transferred Lands and binds all subsequent transferees of those lands, including any and all of the defendants.

In the alternative the plaintiff pleads that the covenant in question was for the plaintiff's benefit and that each transferee of the Transferred Lands in taking a like covenant from its transferee was doing so as required, as the agent of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff further pleads that each of the defendants acquired its interest in the Transferred Lands with "express knowledge" (which I take to mean actual knowledge) that the lands were subject to the said covenant in favour of the plaintiff and accordingly that all of the defendants are bound by the same covenant or a covenant to exactly the same effect.

In their statement of defence the defendants One St. Thomas Limited and Jasmac Canada Inc. deny that the first above-quoted covenant is a valid covenant which runs with the land and binds all subsequent transferees, including themselves. Those defendants state that the covenant does not bind the lands because:

- (a) there is no privity of contract or estate between the plaintiff and these defendants;
- (b) there is no covenant in the deed or otherwise between these defendants and the defendant, Upper Canada Land Corporation;
- (c) the objects of the restrictive covenant are unattainable or obsolete by reason of changes and proposed changes to the neighbourhood including changes proposed by the plaintiff, and the restrictive covenant ought to be modified accordingly;
- (d) the restrictive covenant was granted in respect of Lots 21 to 25, Plan 97 Toronto and other lands, but the deeds dated May 29, 1981, April 2, 1982 and December 16, 1985 conveyed only the subject lands, being Lots 21, 22 and part of Lot 23.
- (e) the dominant tenement for the benefit of which the covenant was given is not ascertainable from the deeds referred to in the statement of claim.

The moving party defendants also plead that even if that covenant was binding upon them, which they deny, the plaintiff is still not entitled in equity to the relief it seeks because, by an agreement dated May 28, 1987 (the May 1987 agreement) with Upper Canada, the plaintiff consented to the erection on the Transferred Lands of a residential condominium building having a height of up to 133 feet and agreed, in return for a donation of $300,000, to delete the registered restriction. These defendants plead that the plaintiff is thus estopped from claiming the declaration and the injunctive relief it seeks in the action.

The moving party defendants also deny that the successive transferees of the Transferred Lands were required in law, as agents for and on behalf of the plaintiff, to obtain from their respective transferees a covenant identical to the covenants in the Victoria Deed.

And the moving party defendants also counterclaim for damages for inducing breach of contract and for wrongful interference with contractual relations or, in the alternative, for slander of title, for punitive damages and for declaratory relief to the effect that the original covenant and the subsequent covenants in the same terms are not binding upon them and do not run with the Transferred Lands or the Covenant Lands.

These defendants also plead and assert that the plaintiff owns other development land nearby which is proposed to be developed as a hotel and that the plaintiff seeks to hinder them in proceeding with their hotel development in order to obtain a more favourable rezoning for the hotel proposed for its own lands. In its reply and defence to counterclaims the plaintiff repeats its allegations, denies that the May 1987 agreement gives rise to any waiver or estoppel of its claims to a declaration and an injunction based on the covenant, and asserts that these defendants have affirmed the existence and validity of the covenant:

- (i) by requesting a further agreement, the draft of which acknowledges the May 1987 agreement (and the related donation agreement of the same date) which agreements assume the validity of the covenant;
- (ii) by requesting a release of the covenant; and
- (iii) by requesting an amendment to the May 1987 agreement to permit Jasmac's proposed hotel developments.

It is pleaded and argued by the plaintiff that such requests show clearly that these defendants had actual notice of the covenant and treated it as valid and enforceable and it is pleaded, and submitted, that they are accordingly estopped from denying the validity and enforceability of the covenant. The motions

As stated in their notice of motion, the moving parties bring these motions for:

(a) a determination of the following question of law:

(i) whether the plaintiff can enforce a restrictive covenant where the deed or document containing the restrictive covenant does not explicitly refer to the lands to be benefited.

(b) judgment for dismissal of the plaintiff's claim with costs or, in the alternative, for an order directing that the action proceed to trial in whole or in part;

(c) their costs of this motion and action on a solicitor-and- client basis; and,

(d) such further and other relief as this Honourable Court may deem just.

In the factum served and filed on behalf of the moving party defendants the main question is expressed somewhat differently, making it clear that the issue is whether the covenant set out in the Victoria Deed is one that can be enforced by the plaintiff against the moving party defendants. The later formulation makes no specific reference to the question of whether the covenant is one that runs with either the Transferred Lands or the more extensive Covenant Lands, and it tends to blur the distinctions between that question and the question of whether the covenant has any validity in contract, either directly as against Heritage Properties Limited or indirectly against the subsequent transferees by virtue of the asserted "chaining" effect of the covenants in all but the last of the subsequent transfers of the Covenant Lands (which include the Transferred Lands in all such cases). That formulation of the question also blurs the distinction between what relief or remedy is sought under rule 21.01 and the dismissal of the action, as sought under rule 20.01. The formulation in the factum is as follows:

Is the restrictive covenant set out in the ... (Victoria Deed) ... which does not describe the lands to be benefited, a valid restrictive covenant which can be enforced by the plaintiff against the defendants, One St. Thomas Limited and Jasmac Canada Inc.

(Emphasis added)

As stated, the question is whether the covenant can be enforced in any way against the moving party defendants, i.e., as a covenant running with the Covenant Lands (or the included Transferred Lands) or in any other way. In view of the plaintiff's alternative arguments that the covenant is enforceable on the basis of the "chaining" of like covenants or on the basis of an estoppel arising in connection with the May 1987 agreement (and the related donation agreement) and in view of the differences between Rule 21 and Rule 20 with respect to the admissibility of evidence and the tests to be applied, it is preferable to isolate, as the main issue under rule 21.01(1), the question of whether the covenant is one that runs with the above-mentioned lands of the defendants or any part thereof.

Rule 21

Under Rule 21 questions of law may be determined prior to trial where such determination will dispose of all or part of the action or substantially shorten the trial or substantially reduce costs. For convenience I set out clauses 21.01(1)(a) and 21.01(2)(a) of the rule:

21.01(1) A party may move before a judge,

(a) for the determination, before trial, of a question of law raised by a pleading in an action where the determination of the question may dispose of all or part of the action, substantially shorten the trial or result in a substantial saving of costs ...

.....

21.02(2) No evidence is admissible on a motion,

(a) under clause 1(a) except with leave of a judge or on consent of the parties ...

Facts for purposes of the Rule 21 motion

For the purposes of Rule 21, in determining a question of law, the court is to have regard to the pleadings and, as stated by Callaghan A.C.J.H.C. in Barnes v. Kaladar, Anglesea and Effingham (Townships) (1985), 52 O.R. (2d) 283, 6 C.P.C. (2d) 75 (H.C.J.), at p. 285 O.R., p. 77 C.P.C., primarily to the pleadings of the opposite party. Here, the task is simplified because many of the relevant facts pleaded by the plaintiff have been admitted by the moving party defendants and many are based on registered deeds or transfers copies of which were admitted on consent and would have been admitted with leave had such consent not been forthcoming. Accordingly, I may state that for purposes of the Rule 21 motion the statements in numbered paras. 1 through 9 above are assumed to be correct, as are the factual statements in the parts of the preceding paragraph above. Moreover, it is established for all purposes of these motions that the moving party defendants had notice of the covenant and of the identically worded covenants in the deeds or transfers of the Covenant Lands to the transferees down to and including the covenant in the deed to Upper Canada.

The threshold test under Rule 21.01

It was held by Van Camp J. in Byrne v. Goodyear Canada Inc. (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 800, 125 D.L.R. (3d) 695 (H.C.J.), at p. 801 O.R., p. 696 D.L.R., following the decision of Lief J. in Piuti v. Toronto (Board of Education) (1974), 6 O.R. (2d) 172 (H.C.J.), that under the predecessor rule, i.e., Rule 124 of the Rules of Practice, R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 540, the decision requested of the court must not be contingent on the resolution of any dispute as to facts. That principle was applied to a motion under rule 21.01 by Callaghan A.C.J.H.C. in Barnes, supra, where it was also confirmed that the court should not allow itself to be led into the realm of the hypothetical as it would be if it were placed in the position of advising a plaintiff as to the validity of its cause of action when the facts which form the substratum of the alleged cause of action were in dispute. In Barnes the following statement by Mr. Justice Orde, for the Court of Appeal, in Fisher v. Albert (1921), 50 O.L.R. 68, 64 D.L.R. 153 (S.C.), at p. 72 O.L.R., pp. 156-57 D.L.R., with respect to the predecessor rule was approved by Callaghan A.C.J.H.C. at p. 286 O.R., p. 78 C.P.C., with regard to rule 21.01(1)(a):

Its object was to provide either for the disposal of the whole action or some important phase of it, by dealing with some question of law upon a state of facts admitted for the purposes of the motion In Seede v. Camco Inc. (1985), 50 O.R. (2d) 218, 50 C.P.C.

78 (H.C.J.), affd (1986), 55 O.R. (2d) 352 (C.A.) [leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (1986), 55 O.R. (2d) 352n, 71 N.R. 82n], Flinn L.J.S.C. (at p. 220 O.R., p. 81 C.P.C.), after stating that Rule 21 had broadened the right of access to the court on a preliminary motion, stated with respect to the motion before him that:

There is no factual dispute and the pleadings are closed. I therefore think it appropriate to consider the provisions of Rule 21 satisfied and to deal with the matter.

In Seede, success on the motion resulted in the dismissal of all of the claims of one of the claimants but, as is clear from the wording of clause 21.01(1)(a) and from Barnes, supra, Rule 21 may be used to dispose of part of an action. See also to the same effect, with respect to the predecessor rule, the judgment of Rosenberg J. in City National Leasing Ltd. v. General Motors of Canada Ltd. (1984), 47 O.R. (2d) 653, 12 D.L.R. (4th) 273 (H.C.J.), revd in part on other grounds (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 626, 28 D.L.R. (4th) 158 (C.A.), affd [1989] 1 S.C.R. 641, 58 D.L.R. (4th) 255. Here, there can be framed a question of law on the facts raised by the pleadings of the plaintiff and agreed facts, and the determination of the question would dispose of an important part of the action, at the least.

The degree of certainty required with respect to the determination of a point of law before trial makes it desirable to reframe the above-quoted questions to break out and isolate for separate treatment the question that is most clearly a question of law arising upon the pleadings of the plaintiff and admitted facts, and that I do under the next heading.

Whether the covenant runs with the Transferred Lands where no benefited lands are identified in the Victoria Deed

The question that is most clearly a question of law free of any dispute as to relevant facts is the question of whether under the law of Ontario a restrictive covenant will run as to burden with the purportedly servient lands where the deed or other instrument containing the covenant does not identify the lands of the grantor that are intended to be benefited by the covenant. It is to that question that I now turn. The moving parties submit that on the authorities the question must be answered in the negative, i.e., that, because the Victoria Deed did not describe or identify any lands of the plaintiff that were intended to be benefited by the covenant, the burden of the covenant does not run with the Transferred Lands or with the Covenant Lands or with any part of either. It is submitted that, failing such identification of the lands to be benefited, the covenant is merely a personal covenant and is not enforceable against a successor in title of the covenantor. In support of this proposition the moving parties cite: British United Automobiles Ltd. v. Volvo Canada Ltd. (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 725, 114 D.L.R. (3d) 488 (H.C.J., Osler J.); Canadian Construction Co. v. Beaver (Alberta) Lumber Ltd., [1955] S.C.R. 682, [1955] 3 D.L.R. 502; R. v. York (Township), [1960] O.R. 238, 23 D.L.R. (2d) 465 sub nom. 125 Varsity Rd. Ltd. v. York Township (C.A.); Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., [1961] S.C.R. 639, 29 D.L.R. (2d) 153; McGregor v. Boyd Builders Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 424, 54 D.L.R. (2d) 112 (H.C.J., Lief J.); and Sekretov v. Toronto (City), [1973] 2 O.R. 161, 33 D.L.R. (3d) 257 (C.A.).

On behalf of the respondent plaintiff it is submitted that none of the decisions relied on by the moving parties have held a covenant expressed to run with the servient lands to be unenforceable against a successor to the covenantor where such successor had actual knowledge of both the covenant and the benefiting lands. It is further submitted that, while the covenantee must own land capable of being benefited, such benefited land may be ascertained from the deed creating the covenant or from circumstances surrounding its execution which make the identity of the benefited lands, or dominant tenement, readily apparent. In support of the later proposition reliance is placed upon Tulk v. Moxhay (1848), 2 Ph. 774, 41 E.R. 1143 (L.C.), a leading early case, if not the leading early case, establishing that negative covenants would run with the lands in equity, but a decision which later authorities have refined and narrowed. The plaintiff also relies for the same propositions on the decision of Wilberforce J. in Marten v. Flight Refuelling Ltd., [1962] Ch. 115, [1961] 2 All E.R. 696 (Ch. D.), a decision that was expressly stated by Schroeder J.A. in Sekretov, supra, at pp. 166-67 O.R., pp. 262-63 D.L.R., not to reflect the law of Ontario, as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., supra, and in Canadian Construction Co. v. Beaver (Alberta) Lumber Ltd., supra. For support of his contention that where the transferees of the Covenant Lands have actual notice of both the covenant and the lands to be benefited by the covenant there is not a requirement that the lands to be benefited be identified in the deed containing the covenant, counsel for the plaintiff cites the following excerpt from p. 26 of the Ontario Law Reform Commission's Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Lands (Toronto: 1989) (the Report) which excerpt appears in the part of the Report entitled "Covenants Running With Freehold Land in Equity" under the sub-heading "(b) The Running of the Burden", and is as follows:

For the burden of a restrictive covenant to run with the land in equity, five requirements must be satisfied:

- (1) the covenant must be negative in operation;
- (2) the covenantee must own land for the benefit of which the covenant was given;
- (3) the covenant must touch and concern the land of the covenantee; (4) the covenant must be intended to run with land belonging to the covenantor; and
- (5) the assignee of the covenantor must not be a bona fide purchaser for value of the legal estate without notice of the covenant.

There can be no issue as to requirement (1) above, because that requirement has been a sine qua non for the running of restrictive covenants at least since Tulk v. Moxhay, supra. Nor is there any issue as to that part of requirement (2) above that requires that the covenantee own land capable of being benefited by the covenant: London County Council v. Allen, [1914] 3 K.B. 642, [1914-15] All E.R. 1008 (C.A.); R. v. York (Township) (C.A.), supra; Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., supra, British United Automobiles Ltd. v. Volvo Canada Ltd., supra. With respect to requirement (4) listed above, it is clear from the terms of the covenant that it was intended to run with land belonging to the covenantor, Heritage Properties Limited, i.e., the Covenant Lands (which include the Transferred Lands). Nor can it be said with reference to requirement (5) above that any of the assignees of the original covenantor, Heritage Properties, were without notice of the covenant, whether by virtue of registration of the Victoria Deed and the subsequent deeds and transfers, the negotiations and correspondence with regard to the May 1987 agreement or by the imputation, to the beneficial owner, of knowledge possessed by the trustee for such beneficial owner.

Of the five requirements set forth in the above excerpt from the Report what remains for consideration are (i) that part of requirement (2) relating to the identification of the covenantee's land for the benefit of which the covenant is taken and (ii) requirement (3), i.e., that the covenant must "touch and concern the land of the covenantee". It is not asserted by the moving parties that the nature of the restriction sought to be imposed by the covenant is not such that it would touch and concern adjoining or nearby land of the plaintiff if such were identified. The focus is therefore on the non-identification of benefiting lands in the Victoria Deed.

That must be the issue in respect of which the above excerpt from the Report is cited on behalf of the plaintiff.

It will be noted from the excerpt that nowhere therein is it stated that the land of the covenantee that is intended to be benefited by the covenant must be identified in the deed or other instrument in which the covenant is set forth. Requirement (3) speaks of "the land of the covenantee" but that is as close as the brief excerpt comes to a suggestion that the land of the covenantee must be identified. Apparently it was for that slender ray of encouragement -- by omission -- that the excerpt was cited.

The subsection of the Report dealing with the running of the burden of restrictive covenants affecting freehold land extends to slightly more than six pages and consists mainly of discussions of each of the five requirements referred to in the excerpt.

It is, to say the least, surprising that in the factum filed on behalf of the plaintiff the above excerpt is quoted without more and that in the book of authorities filed on behalf of the plaintiff, p. 26 of the Report is included without any of the immediately following pages, where the enumerated five requirements are discussed. Indeed, on the very next page of the Report there appears the following quotation from the judgment of Schroeder J.A. for the Court of Appeal in Sekretov v. Toronto (City), supra, at pp. 165-66 O.R., pp. 261-62 D.L.R.:

The law of Ontario and of the other common law Provinces plainly require that the dominant land for the benefit of which a restrictive covenant is imposed in a deed from the covenantee to a purchaser of other lands of the covenantee must be ascertainable from the deed itself; otherwise, it is personal and collateral to the conveyance as being for the benefit of the covenantee alone and not enforceable against a successor in title to the purchaser.

In the reasons of Schroeder J.A. in Sekretov, supra, at p. 166 O.R., p. 262 D.L.R., the above-quoted passage is followed immediately by the statement that:

This was laid down by Judson J. in Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., supra, in the plainest terms, the minimum requirement being, as the learned jurist stated, that the deed itself must so define the land to be benefited as to make it easily ascertainable.

The language used in the Madawaska Club case clearly excludes any motion of annexation to dominant land by implication.

However, the plain implication in the judgment of this Court in affirming the trial judgment was that a restrictive covenant contained in an agreement which omits all reference to any dominant land, although it sets out the restrictions placed upon the servient land, is unenforceable by the covenantee against a successor in title of the covenantor, since such an agreement expresses no intention that any other lands should be benefited by the covenant. A covenant running with the land cannot be created in this manner and in the absence of any attempted annexation of the benefit to some particular land of the covenantee, the covenant is personal and collateral to the conveyance as being for the benefit of the covenantee alone. To the same effect is the 1965 decision of Lief J. in McGregor v. Boyd Builders Ltd., supra. There, as here, the covenant was expressed to be a restrictive covenant the burden of which ran with the land of the covenantor, and there, as here, no land of the covenantee was described in the deed. The decision was of particular interest because the covenantee owned nearby land capable of benefiting from the covenant. Lief J. cited Reid v. Bickerstaff, [1909] 2 Ch. 305, 78 L.J. Ch. 753 (C.A.), for the proposition that the mere fact that the covenantee owns adjoining land is not sufficient to establish that the covenant was imposed for the benefit of such adjoining land. Lief J. further held that the failure to designate the dominant lands in the deed containing the covenant was fatal to the covenantee's expressed intention to have the burden of the covenant run with the identified lands of the covenantor. The decision in McGregor was expressly approved by the Court of Appeal in Sekretov, supra.

The decisions in Galbraith and Sekretov are binding upon me and constitute a sufficient basis for a declaration that the covenant here in question does not run with the lands of the covenantor so as to make any of the Transferred Lands or any of the Covenant Lands subject, for that reason, to the covenant in the Victoria Deed. A declaratory judgment to that effect will issue pursuant to Rule 21.

It is true that many of the decisions referred to above and relied on by the moving parties were not decided only, or primarily, upon the ground that the lands to be benefited by the covenant were not identified in the deed containing the covenant. Thus in British United Automobiles Ltd. v. Volvo Canada Ltd., supra; R. v. York (Township), supra, Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., supra, and probably Sekretov, the covenantee owned no nearby land capable of benefiting from the covenant. In Galbraith there was the further factor that the covenant in question was held not to "touch and concern" the land. And in Sekretov the covenant was also held to be void for vagueness. Moreover, in the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Canadian Construction Co. v. Beaver (Alberta) Lumber Ltd., supra, the principal judgment was based on a matter of construction of the particular wording of the covenant, and it was held that the covenant was intended to be a personal covenant and not a covenant running with the land. Notwithstanding those matters, it has been clearly stated in decisions that are binding upon me, principally in Galbraith and Sekretov, that a purported restrictive covenant does not run with the lands of the covenantor, so as to bind successive owners of the covenantor's lands unless the lands of the covenantee to be benefited by the covenant are described in the deed or instrument containing the covenant. The approval in Sekretov of the decision of Lief J. in McGregor is important in this connection, because in McGregor the covenantee owned nearby land capable of being benefited and the burden of the covenant itself was expressed to be intended to run with identified lands of the covenantor.

As was pointed out by Schroeder J.A. in Sekretov, at p. 167 O.R., p. 263 D.L.R., the result is in accord with the policy reflected in the Land Titles Act, now s. 118(4) of R.S.O. 1980, c. 230 [then s. 129(4) of R.S.O. 1970, c. 234], which provides, among other things, that a restrictive covenant shall not be registered unless the covenantee owns land to be benefited and that land is mentioned in the covenant. See also the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 445, s. 22(1).

Counsel for the plaintiff submits that the decision in Besinnett v. White (1925), 58 O.L.R. 125, [1926] 1 D.L.R. 95 (C.A.), stands for the proposition that where the subsequent purchaser of the servient lands has actual notice of the covenant and of the lands intended to be benefited by the covenant he is put upon his inquiry and cannot escape being held bound in equity by pointing out that the covenant and the lands to be bound thereby are not apparent from the registered title to the (servient) lands purchased by him. Besinnett would appear to have stood for that proposition and also for the proposition that an equitable interest in the lands to be benefited, even an equitable interest under an oral agreement, was a sufficient interest in the dominant land to give the person entitled to such equitable interest a right to enforce a restrictive covenant otherwise enforceable. Besinnett is still cited for the last-mentioned proposition but that is not the aspect of the case that is of relevance here, except that it reflects a more flexible attitude toward the court's equitable jurisdiction than is reflected in later cases such as Galbraith and Sekretov, supra.

The facts in Besinnett material to the first proposition above may be simply stated. At the time of trial there were three lots, being a hardware store, and immediately to the south a vacant lot and immediately to the south of that a residential lot with a residence on it. At the time of trial the defendant White owned the hardware store and the vacant lot, and the plaintiff, Mrs. Besinnett, owned the residence. The plaintiff in 1919 had conveyed the vacant lot to one Brown, White's predecessor in title, taking in the conveyance a covenant from Brown [p. 126 O.R., p. 96 D.L.R.]:

... not to erect on the said premises a store or workshop and to use the said lands as a residence only.

The lands to be benefited by the covenant were not identified in the deed from Besinnett to Brown but the court was satisfied that the covenant was taken to benefit the residential lands immediately to the south of the vacant land. In 1924 White purchased the store and the vacant land from Brown with actual knowledge of the covenant. White proceeded to install gas pumps on the heretofore vacant land, contending that he was not bound by the covenant because there was "nothing on the face of the registered conveyance which would establish the validity of the covenant". The court upheld and enforced the covenant stating that it was taken to benefit identified land and that the defendant White had actual notice of it. Middleton J.A. cited with approval the decision in Formby v. Barker, [1903] 2 Ch. 539, [1900-3] All E.R. Rep. 445 (C.A.) including a statement of Vaughan Williams L.J., at p. 551 Ch., p. 449 All E.R., to the effect that the identity of the lands intended to be benefited "can be inferred from surrounding circumstances". The last statement will be seen to be clearly contrary to what was subsequently held in Galbraith, supra, and in Sekretov, supra, to mention only two of the Canadian decisions referred to above.

Counsel for the plaintiff takes comfort from the fact that Besinnett v. White was cited by Laskin J.A. in Russo v. Field, [1970] 3 O.R. 229, 12 D.L.R. (3d) 665 (C.A.), a decision subsequent to Galbraith, supra, but before Sekretov, supra. In Russo, at p. 245 O.R., p. 681 D.L.R., Laskin J.A. cited Besinnett as follows:

If there is actual notice of a restrictive covenant, whether by virtue of or apart from registration of the document in which it is included, the person having such notice cannot escape by contending that the covenant must disclose on its face that it is enforceable: see Besinnett v. White, 58 O.L.R. 125, [1926] 1 D.L.R. 95.

With respect, I agree that the foregoing excerpt correctly states one of the propositions affirmed in Besinnett v. White. However, in my respectful opinion, that proposition does not express or embody the governing law in Ontario on the question of whether or not a negative covenant expressed to run with the lands of the covenantor and which touches and concerns identified [lands] of the covenantor will run with the lands of the covenantor where no lands of the covenantee are identified in the deed or instrument embodying the covenant as being the lands of the covenantee for the benefit of which the covenant is taken. Although the Court of Appeal decision in Russo v. Field was released in 1970, it appears from the report that none of Canadian Construction Co. v. Beaver (Alberta) Lumber Ltd., supra (1955, S.C.C.); R. v. York (Township), supra (1960, Ont. C.A.); Galbraith v. Madawaska Club Ltd., supra (1961, S.C.C.) and McGregor v. Boyd Builders Ltd., supra (1965, Ont. H.C.J.) were considered by the court.

Russo v. Field was a case relating to restrictive covenants in leases of parts of a shopping centre. The defendant, Menat Construction Ltd., owner of the shopping centre, leased retail premises in the centre to the plaintiff under a lease which:

- (i) recited that it was the intention of the lessor to see to it that the various businesses in the centre would be non-competitive with each other; and
- (ii) contained a covenant by the plaintiff limiting his use of the premises to the business of a hairdresser and beauty salon; and
- (iii) contained a covenant by the lessor not to "suffer or permit any of the other stores to carry on the business of a hairdresser and Beauty Salon" [p. 243 O.R., p. 679 D.L.R.].

Later the defendant lessor entered into a lease of the adjoining premises in the centre with Henry and Ann Field. Under that lease the lessees covenanted not to use their premises [p. 242 O.R., p. 678 D.L.R.] "for any purpose other than to manufacture wigs and to retail wigs and associated items and service wigs", and the lessor covenanted with the Fields not to "suffer or permit ... any other store in the shopping centre to carry on the principal business of manufacturing and retailing wigs and servicing wigs" [emphasis added].

In Russo the land was under the Land Titles Act [then R.S.O. 1960, c. 204]. A notice of lease had been filed in the land titles office with respect to the plaintiff's lease and that notice was filed before the Fields entered into their lease. When the Fields opened for business the plaintiff sued for an injunction and damages. At trial the plaintiff obtained an injunction against the defendant Field and damages against the former lessor (the property having been sold in the interval). The appeal was allowed, MacKay J.A. dissenting. The main issues were: (i) whether in fact the wig business constituted prohibited competition with the hairdressing and beauty salon business of the plaintiff; and (ii) whether the registration of the plaintiff's notice of lease, which itself said nothing about the restrictive covenant, constituted the required notice to the defendant Field of the restrictive covenant in the plaintiff's lease.

The issue that is uppermost in the case at bar was not really an issue in Russo v. Field. It was quickly established that the plaintiff's leased premises were the "lands" of the covenantee to be benefited by the landlord's covenant, that restrictive covenants can run with leasehold lands, that the burdened lands were all the other lands in the shopping centre (or at least those leased after the plaintiff's lands), and that the covenant touched and concerned the plaintiff's leasehold property and the property of the landlord in the shopping centre. The real issues were the two referred to as such above and only the question of notice has the remotest bearing on our issues. The majority in the Court of Appeal held that the business carried on by the defendant Field did not constitute a breach of the non-competition covenant. MacKay J.A. was of the opinion that it did. The three judges of the Court of Appeal were of the view that the plaintiff's registration of her notice of lease constituted notice to the defendant Field of the contents of the plaintiff's lease, including the non-competition clause running as to burden with the landlord's shopping centre lands including the premises leased to Field. In the Supreme Court of Canada ([1973] S.C.R. 466, 34 D.L.R. (3d) 704) the plaintiff was successful in reversing the majority finding of the Court of Appeal as to whether the businesses were competitive but the Court of Appeal was upheld as to the notice issue. Russo v. Field in the Supreme Court of Canada cannot reasonably be regarded as a reversal of that court's decisions in Canadian Construction Co. v. Beaver (Alberta) Lumber Ltd., supra, and Galbraith, supra, to the effect that for a restrictive covenant to run with the lands, the lands of the covenantees to be benefited by the covenant must be identified in the deed or other instrument containing the covenant. The above-quoted brief reference to Besinnett v. White in the reasons of Laskin J.A. in Russo v. Field, a case scarcely concerned with the identification of the lands of the covenantee to be benefited, clearly does not displace the Court of Appeal in Sekretov, supra, a later decision dealing directly with the point here in issue.

As stated, a declaration will issue that the covenant here in question does not run with the lands of the covenantor so as to be binding, for that reason, upon the present owners of the Covenant Lands.

Other issues

1. The moving party defendants appear to be taking the position that, because it does not run with the land, the covenant is invalid and without effect. In fairness it may be that the moving party defendants assert only that the covenant is not binding upon them and imposes no liability upon them.

2. The plaintiffs assert a "chaining effect" whereby the successive transferees when they in turn transfer the Transferred Lands are required to obtain, as agents of the plaintiff, an identical covenant from their respective transferees. The plaintiffs thus assert that by virtue of such agency there is privity of contract between the plaintiff and the successive transferees of the Transferred Lands down to and including Upper Canada and that the further conveyances did not represent a change in beneficial ownership with the result, it is submitted, that subsequent beneficial owners, being the moving parties, are also bound in contract. This issue gives rise to sub-issues as to the meaning of the covenant, as to implied agency and as to the remedies available to the plaintiff as well as issues as to the jurisdiction under Rule 20.

3. The plaintiff asserts that by virtue of the May 1987 agreement, in which the land of the plaintiff is identified and in which the parties not at arm's length with the moving parties obtained a conditional modification of the covenant here in issue, the moving parties are:

(i) estopped from denying knowledge of the lands to be benefited and knowledge of the covenant; and

(ii) estopped from denying that they are contractually bound by the covenant.

4. The moving parties also assert an estoppel or waiver effect of the 1987 agreements, arguing that since the plaintiff has consented to the construction on the Covenant Lands of an 11-storey building, so long as it is used for condominium apartments and is built in accordance with plans approved by the plaintiffs, it cannot now be bound to assert the original covenant.

5. Although it was not raised by either party, there is at pp. 29 and 30 of the above-mentioned Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land a statement that could give rise to an issue in this case, that is:
