Before we turn to consider the running of the benefit of a restrictive covenant, it should be noted that even though the burden of a restrictive covenant may not run with the servient land in a particular case, a purchaser of the servient land may nevertheless be held liable for its breach. A covenantor does not breach the covenant upon agreeing to sell the burdened land to a purchaser who he knows will breach the covenant (Tophams Ltd. v. Earl of Sefton, [1965] 3 All E.R. 1 (C.A.); not appealed further at this point). In this latter situation an injunction will lie as well against the vendor to prevent the conveyance. Moreover, an action in damages may lie against the purchaser for inducing breach of contract or for the tort of conspiracy (Tophams (C.A.) and Midland Bank Trust Co. Ltd. v. Green (No. 3), [1981] 3 All E.R. 744 (C.A.)). Further, a mandatory injunction directing a reconveyance may also be obtained in these circumstances (Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Kingswood Motors (Addlestone) Ltd., [1973] 3 All E.R. 1057).

6. The plaintiff asserts a broader view of the jurisdiction of the court under Rule 20, and submits that there are factual issues which are material and can be dealt with only at trial.

7. The moving parties ask that, if a trial is necessary, there be an order for an expedited trial. The request is not opposed.

Order for an expedited trial For reasons to be briefly stated below the motion for a summary judgment under Rule 20 dismissing the whole of the plaintiff's action must in my opinion be dismissed. In view of the circumstances of this case, and the effect that a decision herein may have on development not only of the Covenant Lands but of other lands in the area, an order will issue for an expedited trial of this action. I will make that order notwithstanding my view that both sides on this motion have fallen short of the optimum use of Rule 20 of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

The moving parties put their main emphasis on the motion under Rule 21 for an order declaring that the covenant here in question does not run with the lands of the covenantee so as to be binding upon the moving parties. They speak, however, of the validity of the covenant, referring to the above-mentioned language in Sekretov, supra. In their factum the moving parties made no direct reference to Rule 20, nor does their book of authorities include any decision relating to Rule 20, but Rule 20 is invoked insofar as the moving parties request a summary judgment in their favour. No supplementary material was filed to answer the assertions in the factum of the plaintiff as to the scope of Rule 20, the alleged estoppel, or the alleged implied agency and allegedly resulting privity of contract between the plaintiff and the moving party defendants or their privies.

Neither side sought an adjournment to allow time for cross-examinations on the affidavits filed.

For its part, the respondent plaintiff argued with respect to Rule 20 that the required evidentiary basis for a determination of the issues had not been established and that summary judgment under Rule 20 should be granted only where there is no reason to doubt what the judgment of the court would be if the matter went to trial. In support of its position the plaintiff cites only Mensah v. Robinson, Ont. H.C.J., Watt J., February 22, 1989 [summarized at 14 A.C.W.S. (2d) 53, 15 W.D.C.P. 228], and Arnoldson y Serpa v. Confederation Life Association (1974), 3 O.R. (2d) 721, 46 D.L.R. (3d) 641 (C.A.), the latter a decision with respect to the predecessor, and different, rule under the former Rules of Practice. No reference was made to the leading cases of Vaughan v. Warner Communications Inc. (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 242, 10 C.P.C. (2d) 205 (H.C.J.), and Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie (1990), 75

O.R. (2d) 225, 45 C.P.C. (2d) 168 (Gen. Div.). Perhaps more importantly for these purposes there was no reference to, and no apparent awareness of, the decision of Anderson J. in 209991 Ontario Ltd. v. Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce (1988), 39 B.L.R. 44, 24 C.P.C. (2d) 248 (Ont. H.C.J.) (The C.I.B.C. case), and particularly the passage at p. 62 B.L.R., p. 266 C.P.C., where it is stated that a party who has been made a respondent in a motion under Rule 20 should recognize the seriousness of his plight and see the necessity "to put a best foot forward, as failure to do so may be fatal". Here the plaintiff respondent sought to have questions left for trial when he had not put his best foot forward on this motion.

I respectfully adopt the reasoning of Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie and, as to the latter part, that of the C.I.B.C. case, as setting forth the tests and approaches that are appropriate on a motion under Rule 20.

The respondent plaintiff is saved in this regard by the fact that the moving party defendants did not put their best foot forward on the Rule 20 motion, in that they made scant response to the submissions of the plaintiff as to implied agency that would entail privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant Upper Canada and they did not address at all the questions arising out of the above-quoted passage from the Report, referring to the decisions in Tophams Ltd. v. Sefton (Earl), [1967] 1 A.C. 50, [1966] 1 All E.R. 1039 (H.L.) and Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Kingswood Motors (Addlestone) Ltd., [1974] Q.B. 142, [1973] 3 All E.R. 1057 (D.C.).

The proposition that parties to a Rule 20 motion must put their best foot forward on such a motion and not hang back waiting for trial finds support in the Court of Appeal decision in Pollon v. American Home Assurance Co. (1991), 3 O.R. (3d) 59, 79 D.L.R. (4th) 178 (C.A.), where at p. 61 O.R., p. 180 D.L.R., Blair J.A., speaking for the court, cited with approval in that connection both Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie and the C.I.B.C. case.

Notwithstanding that, as to be amplified below, I am of the opinion that summary judgment dismissing in whole the plaintiff's action against the moving party defendants cannot be granted, there are certain of the above-enumerated other issues that can and should be disposed of under Rule 20 on this record and it is to them that I now turn.

Whether the moving party defendants are bound by estoppel to comply with the covenant

As referred to above in Item 3 under "Other issues", the plaintiff argues that the moving party defendants are by virtue of the 1987 agreements estopped from denying:

(a) notice of the covenant;

(b) notice of the lands of the covenantee intended to be benefited by the covenant; and

(c) that they are bound by the covenant on the basis of promissory estoppel, on the ground that their privies (persons not at arm's length with them) entered into the 1987 agreements which identified retained lands of the plaintiff and which recited the covenant and were clearly premised upon its validity and effectiveness in that they purported to amend the covenant or effect a partial or conditional release thereof.

The questions of notice of the covenant and notice of the lands of the covenantee intended to be benefited by the covenant have been dealt with at length above. While notice of the covenant is essential to its enforceability as a covenant running with the land, as is notice of the land of the covenantee intended to be benefited, the presence of those two factors do not under the law of Ontario overcome the deficiency where the land of the covenantee that is intended to be benefited is not identified in the deed or instrument containing the covenant. As stated, I regard Galbraith and Sekretov as binding upon me in that regard.

With respect to (c) above, i.e., the question of promissory estoppel, the plaintiff has not shown that it has been induced by a representation of the moving parties or their privies to alter its position to its disadvantage. The other parties, as then advised, appear to have regarded the covenant as binding upon them. At the least they were willing to proceed for the purposes of the 1987 agreements, as though the covenant were binding upon them. And the plaintiff was prepared, on terms, to relax or waive the covenant. There is nothing in the 1987 agreements stating that the covenant was extinguished or released for all purposes. If there had been the plaintiff would clearly have had no basis upon which to commence this action!

In the 1987 agreements the plaintiff agreed to consent, subject to strict conditions, to a departure from the height-control aspects of the covenant. The plaintiff, then as now, assumed that the covenant was enforceable. The other parties probably also thought the covenant was binding upon them but may simply have wanted to avoid litigation. Later correspondence from the previous solicitors for the defendants suggests that they regarded the covenant as valid and binding upon their clients. But still there is lacking an element essential for promissory estoppel. The plaintiff cannot show that it relied to its detriment upon a representation by the moving party defendants or their privies or changed its position based upon such a representation. Most probably it was an unpleasant surprise for the plaintiff to learn that the moving party defendants, differently advised, were taking the position that the burden of the covenant did not run with the lands and that the covenant was not otherwise binding upon them but that does not supply the missing element. Anyone who has read this far will doubtless be delighted to learn that I do not feel compelled for these purposes to say a great deal about the law of promissory estoppel. In Tudale Explorations Ltd. v. Bruce (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 593, 88 D.L.R. (3d) 584, Grange J., speaking for the Divisional Court, at p. 596 O.R., p. 588 D.L.R., cited with approval the following passage from Snell's Principles of Equity, 27th ed (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1973) at p. 563:

Where by his words or conduct one party to a transaction makes to the other an unambiguous promise or assurance which is intended to affect the legal relations between them (whether contractual or otherwise), and the other party acts upon it, altering his position to his detriment, the party making the promise or assurance will not be permitted to act inconsistently with it.

Here, the plaintiff did not alter its position to its detriment. Since the building contemplated by the 1987 agreements was not proceeded with, the conditions were not met, and the agreement has no effect upon the present positions of the parties.

Accordingly a declaration will issue that the moving parties are not estopped from asserting that the covenant is not binding upon them. Whether the plaintiff has waived the covenant

With reference to Item 4 under "Other issues" above, it is my opinion that there is no genuine issue for trial on the question of whether the plaintiff, by entering into the 1987 agreements waived the covenant in such a way as to prevent it from now seeking to enforce the covenant. In my opinion it clearly did not. In the 1987 agreements the plaintiff agreed to the construction on the Covenant Lands of an 11-storey building provided that it was to be used as condominium residences and provided that the plans met the approval of the plaintiff. That agreement was premised upon the validity and effectiveness of the covenant. It does not establish the validity and effectiveness but neither does the entry into of such agreement constitute any sort of waiver of the covenant beyond the variation or relaxation specifically provided for in the 1987 agreement.

A declaration to that effect will issue under Rule 20.

Whether the covenant is wholly invalid

As noted in Item 1 under "Other issues" above, the moving party defendants submit not only that the covenant here in question does not run with the land but also that it is not a valid covenant because of the failure to identify lands to be benefited. Sekretov, supra, at p. 165 O.R., p. 261 D.L.R., is cited as authority for that proposition. It is true that in referring to the decision of the trial judge, Schroeder J.A. states, at pp. 162 and 165 O.R., pp. 258 and 261 D.L.R., respectively, that the covenants "were adjudged and declared to be invalid" and that:

The principal ground upon which the learned Judge held the purported restrictive conditions to be invalid was that the covenantee did not specify in the covenant with which the servient land was intended to be burdened the dominant land to be benefited thereby.

[Emphasis added]

I do not take those statements to mean that such covenant is a nullity but only that it is not valid and enforceable as a restrictive covenant running with the land. Although the covenant does not qualify as a restrictive covenant under the law of property, it may still have validity under the law of contract and give the original covenantee (which our plaintiff is) a right of action against the original covenantor. This rather obvious point is made in the above-mentioned Report at pp. 28 and 29, after a discussion of Sekretov, in the following statements:

Of course, as we have noted above, the plaintiff, being the original covenantee, could succeed against the original covenantor, but not against his assignee.

It should be noted however, that since privity of contract exists between them, the original covenantee will retain a contractual right of action against the original covenantor, notwithstanding the conveyance.

It follows that the covenant was valid in contract at least to the extent of giving the plaintiff a right of action in contract against the defendant Heritage Properties Limited, had the latter breached the covenant. It appears from the record, however, that Heritage did no building on the Covenant Lands and that when it conveyed to the defendant Crazy Horse Developments Limited it took from Crazy Horse a covenant in the exact terms of the covenant in the Victoria Deed and so on the facts Heritage did not breach the covenant but complied with it exactly.

That leaves to be considered Items 2 (chaining) and 5 under "Other issues" above.

The alleged chaining effect

The plaintiff's position on this issue was outlined above as Item 2 under "Other issues". A real difficulty with the "chaining" concept being advanced here is that it depends upon a crucial implied term, namely, that each transferrer, in exacting the covenant from his transferee, is acting as the agent of the plaintiff, so as to effect a direct contractual link, i.e., privity of contract, between the plaintiff and the successive transferees. That is an arguable point. Why else would an intermediate transferrer exact such a covenant from his transferee? If the intermediate transferrer retained no land in the area he would have no affirmative interest in obtaining a covenant from his transferee, only a defensive desire not to make himself liable in contract to his transferrer. Does that make the intermediate transferrer the agent of the plaintiff when he exacts the covenant from his transferee? Possibly, but in my opinion it cannot be said that on this point there is not a genuine issue for trial. It is possible that the draughtsman, having failed to specify the lands of the covenantee intended to be benefited by the covenant, made a further error by wording the covenant in such a way as to make it useless to the plaintiff except as against Heritage Properties, the direct transferee from the plaintiff. A better way to have drawn the provision is exemplified in Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Kingswood Motors, supra, where the original covenantor agreed not to part with the subject lands without having required the purchaser from him to have entered into an agreement with the original grantor, Esso. There would then be either privity of contract between Esso and the transferee or a clear breach of contract by the original covenantor.

The chaining concept faces another problem on the facts: the second transferee of the Covenant Lands, after having conveyed the Covenant Lands to Upper Canada, in a deed containing the required covenant, had its corporate registration cancelled, and so, subject to revival, its corporate existence terminated before the commencement of this action. If in exacting the covenant from Upper Canada, Crazy Horse was acting as the agent of the plaintiff and effecting a direct contract between the plaintiff and Upper Canada, the subsequent cancellation of the registration of Crazy Horse would have no effect. Otherwise the link in the chain is broken, subject to the possibility that under the applicable Ontario corporations statute, Crazy Horse can be revived at the behest of the plaintiff. There is nothing in the record as to that possibility. The usual remedy against a covenantor who has already conveyed away the subject property is damages, but in the next section I refer to the Esso case as a decision ordering a reconveyance of the subject lands where they were conveyed in breach of a covenant to a party not dealing at arm's length with the party who conveyed the land in breach of the covenant to exact an agreement. I deal further with that below.

In my opinion it cannot be said on the record that there is not a genuine issue for trial on the question of the implied agency of the successive transferrers.

The simple assertion on behalf of the moving parties that there is no privity of contract between either of them and the plaintiff does not face up to the possibilities, and I here say no more than not unreasonable possibilities, that through a combination of (i) implied agency and (ii) the view taken in Esso, supra, of a transfer that omits the covenant where the transferrer and the transferee were not at arm's length, the plaintiff may have an action in damages against Upper Canada and the moving parties and, perhaps a right to a mandatory injunction for a reconveyance to Upper Canada. On this record I am not convinced that those propositions cannot survive scrutiny. There is little dispute as to the facts. I do not say that this issue and the one discussed below need necessarily have gone to trial. On a fuller record and with approaches by both counsel that addressed these issues, the matter might have been disposed of on this motion. As this record is, there are relevant and material issues as to which it cannot be said that there are not genuine issues outstanding, for disposition after a trial or, perhaps, after a further motion to be heard on further materials, cross-examinations, and submissions of law as to the remaining issues.

Item 5, under "Other issues" above

Reference is made to the last above-quoted excerpt from the Report, as though such excerpts were repeated here. As indicated, neither that excerpt or any decision referred to therein was referred to by either counsel or in any of the material filed, although that section of the Report was cited by counsel for the plaintiff. It is stated in the excerpt that, even where the burden of a covenant does not run with the subject land, a purchaser of that land from the covenantor may be held liable for a breach of the covenant -- possibly in tort for inducing breach of contract -- and, further, in certain circumstances, such as where the subject land is conveyed, not at arm's length, without compliance with a contractual obligation to exact a covenant from the transferee, a mandatory injunction may issue to require a reconveyance to the covenantor. As to the mandatory injunction to reconvey, see Esso, supra. It may be that Esso, where the covenant was one obligating a gasoline retailer to purchase all of its petroleum products from the covenantee, is a decision that would not be followed in Ontario with respect to a covenant restricting the height of building on the subject land and purporting to require each transferee of the subject land to exact a similar covenant from his transferee. I have had no submissions and have been referred to no authorities on the point. The House of Lords' decision in Tophams Ltd. v. Sefton (Earl), supra, is cited in the Report as authority for the proposition that a covenantor does not breach the covenant upon agreeing to sell the burdened land to a purchaser who he knows will breach the covenant. The covenantor had covenanted that during the lifetime of the Earl of Sefton he would not "cause or permit" the subject land to be used other than for horse racing and related uses. The issue was dealt with as a matter of construction of the covenant, with the majority in the House of Lords holding that what of the covenantor/transferrer and therefore the latter was not "permitting" a changed use if he was then powerless to prevent it. The minority in the House of Lords (Lords Reid and Wilberforce) and the majority of the Court of Appeal placed their focus on an earlier point in time, stating in effect that by conveying to someone that it knew would not comply with the covenant the covenantor was, when he still had control of the situation, "permitting" the new use, contrary to the covenant. I make bold to express the hope that the majority view will not be followed in Ontario or will be confined narrowly to its particular facts, so as not to justify the broad generalization made with respect thereto in the Report. But that is not our issue. On this branch of the case our problem is that the relevant statements of law in the Report have not been addressed. I have knowledge of them; they appear to have a possible bearing on the outcome and I am accordingly not in a position to say that there is no genuine issue for trial, in the sense that I cannot on this record dispose of all of the questions that may be relevant and material.

For example, it may be that the approach of our courts in R. v. York (Township), supra, and in Galbraith and in Sekretov with regard to when covenants run with the land represents a sharp distinction between matters of property law and matters of contract and could lead Ontario courts to confine a trade case such as Esso to trade cases and not to building restrictions.

Whether to allow a further motion under Rule 20

The importance of the decision of Anderson J. in the C.I.B.C. case, supra, is that it puts the parties on notice that on a Rule 20 motion they should fire the guns they have because otherwise the decision could go against them at that stage with no recourse except an appeal. With respect, I believe that to be the general rule. This, however, may be an exceptional case. Many of the facts are documentary and not subject to dispute. Both parties have failed to put enough into the motion. The objective of Rule 20 to avoid trials where they are not necessary, remains. In the circumstances the motion will be dismissed as to: (i) the issue of the implied agency with respect to the sub-covenant; and (ii) the issues arising from the above-quoted excerpt from the Report, but without prejudice to either party bringing on another motion under Rule 20 with respect to those issues.

Disposition

Accordingly, I have endorsed the motion record as follows:

For handwritten reasons to be released when typed and checked, order to go:

- (i) declaring that the burden of the covenant here in question does not run with the lands referred to in such reasons as the "Covenant Lands" or with any part thereof;
- (ii) declaring that the agreements entered into in 1987 between the plaintiff and predecessors in title of the moving parties (not at arm's length with the moving parties) with respect to the Covenant Lands do not estop the moving parties from asserting that they are not bound by the covenants here in question;
- (iii) declaring that the plaintiff in entering into the said 1987 agreements did not waive, for purposes other than as specified in such agreements, whatever its rights were and are to enforce the covenants here in question;
- (iv) ordering an expedited trial, subject as hereinafter stated;
- (v) dismissing the balance of the motion for summary judgment without prejudice to the right hereby granted to either party to bring a further motion for judgment after the filing of further materials, including cross-examinations, on affidavit material relating to the remaining issues and filing factums dealing, at the least, with (i) the question of implied agency as asserted by the plaintiff with regard to the sub-covenant herein, and (ii) the propositions referred to in the passage quoted in the reasons from pp. 28 and 29 of the Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land (1989) of the Ontario Law Reform Commission;
- (vi) providing that the order herein for an expedited trial is to be stayed, subject to an agreement of counsel to the contrary, to allow time for a further motion as referred to in (v) above.

Costs

To date success is divided with the moving parties having achieved the main result they sought and having at the least significantly narrowed the issues. Given the disposition above and the possibility of a further motion, submissions as to costs may be made to me, orally or in writing, forthwith if it is decided not to proceed with a further Rule 20 motion and subsequent to such further motion if it is proceeded with.

Order accordingly.

Her Majesty the Queen, plaintiff, and Huang and Danczkay Limited, defendant

[1998] F.C.J. No. 796 Court File No. T-2463-93

Federal Court of Canada - Trial Division Toronto, Ontario Wetston J. Heard: March 31, 1998 Judgment: June 5, 1998 Counsel: Marie-Thérèse Boris, for the plaintiff. Paul Bleiwas and Earl I. Miller, for the defendant.

[para1] WETSTON J.:-- The Plaintiff, her Majesty the Queen (the "Minister"), appeals the decision of the Tax Court of Canada, dated 17 June 1993, whereby the Defendant's appeal in respect of its 1980, 1981, 1983 and 1985 taxation years was allowed. The defendant, Huang and Danczkay Limited (the "taxpayer"), is a Canadian-controlled real estate company, incorporated under the laws of Ontario.

[para2] The parties have agreed that the following facts are not in dispute:

1. The Defendant, an Ontario corporation, incorporated in 1971, is a Canadian-controlled private corporation ('c.c.p.c.') owned equally by Michael Huang and Bela Danczkay.
2. The Defendant carries on the practice of consulting engineer and the business of real estate development and property management.
3. In 1979, the Silver Creek-Cedarwood Partnership ('Silver Creek-Cedarwood'), a limited partnership, constituted under the laws of Alberta, was formed by B.P.M. (Mill St.) Developments Limited, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Defendant, as general partner, and Michael Huang and Bela Danczkay as limited partners ('the Promoters'). In 1979, 350 additional units were issued to the public for $10,000 per unit payable $1,500 at closing and the balance of $8,500 by way of a promissory note payable in yearly instalments of $2,500, $2,500, $1,000, $1,000, $750 and $750, together with interest on the unpaid balance at the rate of 11 1/2% per annum calculated and payable yearly.
4. Silver Creek-Cedarwood was organized to acquire certain lands and to construct, own and operate apartment projects on such lands (the 'Projects'). By an agreement dated November 29, 1979 (the 'Transfer Agreement') Silver Creek-Cedarwood acquired the Projects in consideration for it assuming the liability of $1,700,500 owing by the vendor to the Defendant. 5. By agreement dated November 29, 1979 (the 'Development Agreement') among Silver Creek-Cedarwood, the Defendant and the Promoters, i) the Defendant agreed to complete the projects for $9,522,976 and provide certain initial services essential to Silver Creek-Cedarwood as described in paragraph 6 below, and ii) the Promoters and the Defendant agreed to provide certain covenants and guarantees in connection with the Projects.
6. Pursuant to the Development Agreement, the Defendant agreed to provide to Silver Creek-Cedarwood initial services described in the table below for the consideration set out therein.

Silver Creek Cedarwood Total CMHC mortgage insurance fee $ 79,300 $ 66,536 $ 145,836

CMHC mortgage application fee 7,350 7,735 15,085 Interest during construction and lease-up 1,493,823 1,217,282 2,711,105

7. The total cost of the Project and initial services to Silver Creek-Cedarwood was $14,920,000. In accordance with the Development Agreement, Silver Creek-Cedarwood issued to the Defendant a promissory note in the amount of $3,107,300 (the 'Purchase Money Note'). The terms and conditions of the Purchase Money Note provide for the principal to be paid over a period of six years, together with interest at the rate of 11 1/2% per annum. In addition, the Purchase Money Note includes a right of set-off in the event the Defendant defaults on its obligations under the Development Agreement.

8. In 1980, the Stonehill Partnership, a limited partnership, constituted under the laws of Alberta, was formed by 444222 Ontario Limited, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Defendant, as general partner, and Michael Huang and Bela Danczkay as limited partners. In 1980, 450 additional units were issued to the public for $10,000 per unit, payable $2,500 at closing and the balance of $7,500 by way of promissory note payable in yearly instalments of $2,500, $1,500, $1,500, $1,000 and $1,000, together with interest on the unpaid balance on the rate of 12% per annum calculated payable yearly.

9. The Stonehill Partnership was organized to acquire, complete and operate two apartment projects in Scarborough, Ontario (the 'Stonehill Project'). On June 30, 1980, Stonehill Partnership acquired from the Defendant land upon which the Stonehill Project was to be constructed, and partially completed buildings for an agreed purchase price of $7,000,000.

10. By agreement dated June 30, 1980 (the 'Stonehill Development Agreement') among the Stonehill Partnership, the Defendant and the Promoters, i) the Defendant agreed to complete the Stonehill Project and provide certain initial services essential to the Stonehill Partnership for a fixed price, and ii) the Promoters and the Defendant agreed to provide certain covenants and guarantees in connection with the Stonehill Project.

11. Pursuant to the Stonehill Development Agreement, the Defendant agreed to provide to the Stonehill Partnership initial services described in the table below for the consideration set out therein.

12. The total cost of the Stonehill Project and initial services to the Stonehill Project was $17,264,000. In accordance with the Stonehill Development Agreement, the Stonehill Partnership issued to the Defendant a promissory note in the amount of $4,044,000 (the 'Purchase Money Note'), and agreed to deliver to the Defendant mortgages for the remainder of the cost. The terms and conditions of the Purchase Money Note provide for the principal to be paid over a period of seven years, together with interest at the rate of 12% per annum calculated and payable yearly. In addition, the Purchase Money Note includes a right of set-off in the event the Defendant defaults on its obligations under the Stonehill Development Agreement.

13. In 1981, the Burnhill Partnership, a limited partnership, constituted under the laws of Ontario, was formed by Lachesis Developments Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Defendant, as general partner, and Michael Huang and Bela Danczkay as limited partners. In 1981, 400 additional units were issued to the public for $10,000 per unit, payable $1,250 at closing and the balance of $8,750 by way of promissory note, payable in yearly instalments of $2,200, $1,150, $1,150, $1,300, $1,450 and $1,500, together with interest at the rate specified by formula.

14. The Burnhill Partnership was organized to acquire, construct and operate a 238 suite apartment project in Scarborough, Ontario (the 'Burnhill Project'). On October 21, 1981, Burnhill Partnership acquired from the Defendant beneficial title to the land upon which the Burnhill Project was to be constructed for an agreed purchase price of $1,190,000.

15. By agreement dated October 21, 1981 (the 'Purchase and Development Agreement') among the Burnhill Partnership, the Defendant and the Promoters, i) the Defendant agreed to construct the Burnhill Project and provide certain initial services essential to the Burnhill Partnership for a fixed price, and ii) the Promoters and the Defendant agreed to provide certain covenants and guarantees in connection with the Burnhill Project.

16. Pursuant to the Purchase and Development Agreement, the Defendant agreed to provide to the Burnhill Partnership initial services described in the table below for the consideration set out therein.

Total Project

CMHC mortgage insurance fee... $ 77,826 CMHC mortgage application fee... 14,400 Interest during construction and lease-up... 1,429,976 Mortgage guarantee fee... 96,688 Realty taxes, insurance and other... 119,000 Legal fees relating to mortgage financing... 20,000 Landscaping... 154,700 Leasing Services... 261,800 Cash flow guarantee... 450,924 Administrative services... 238,000 Mortgage brokerage fee... 63,070 Mortgage rate buydown fee... 1,221,797 Purchase money note rate buydown fee... 359,093 ----- $4,507,274 =====

17. The total cost of the Burnhill Project and initial services to the Burnhill Partnership was $13,996,000. In accordance with the Purchase and Development Agreement, the Burnhill Partnership issued to the Defendant a promissory note in the amount of $3,599,000 (the 'Purchase Money Note'). The terms and conditions of the Purchase Money Note provide for the principal to be paid over a period of six years, together with interest at the rate specified by formula. In addition, the Purchase Money Note includes a right of set-off in the event that the Defendant defaults on its obligations under the Purchase and Development Agreement.

18. As part of the Purchase and Development Agreement, the Defendant undertook to obtain condominium registration for the Burnhill Project by January 1, 1984, failing which it agreed to reduce the purchase price by $1,589,000.

19. The Defendant was unable to comply with certain municipal requirements for condominium registration and as a result the purchase price of the Burnhill Project was reduced by $1,589,000, in accordance with the Purchase and Development Agreement.

20. In computing its net income for the 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 taxation years, the Defendant deducted the uncollected portion of the Silver Creek-Cedarwood Purchase Money Note and the Stonehill Partnership Purchase Money Note.

21. In computing its net income for the 1983 taxation year, the Defendant deducted the uncollected portion of the Burnhill Partnership Purchase Money Note.

22. For each of the 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1985 taxation years, the Defendant included in computing its income the amount deducted in computing its income for the immediately preceding year in respect of each of the Purchase Money Notes.

23. By Notices of Reassessment dated July 8, 1988, the Minister of National Revenue disallowed the Defendant's deduction and included in income the full amount of each of the Purchase Money Notes in the year each of the said Notes was received, on the basis that section 3 and subsection 9(1) of the Act precluded the Defendant claiming a deduction in respect of the uncollected portion of each of the said Notes.

24. By Notice of Confirmation dated September 1, 1989, the Minister of National Revenue disallowed the Defendant's notice of objections for the 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1985 taxation years and confirmed the reassessments as issued. The Wrap-around mortgages were given by two of the limited partnerships [Stonehill and Burnhill] to the Defendant. The Defendant argued that these Wrap-around Mortgages should be given the same income treatment for tax purposes as the Defendant gave to the Purchase Money Notes.

[para4] The Minister argues that the notes and mortgages were earned by the defendant in the years in question and must be included in the computation of the defendant's income for tax purposes pursuant to ss. 9 & 12 of the Act and in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). The Minister says that the defendant has confused the recognition of income in the taxation year in which it is earned with a situation where the defendant may be entitled to a reserve for amounts not received or for contingent future payments.

[para9] Mr. Rosen was of the opinion that the various obligations attached to the notes and mortgages do not affect the earning of the income, and thus the timing of their recognition as income earned. Rather, it is submitted that these obligations are conditions which affect only the collection of the note or the mortgage receivable. It is suggested that if a real cost arising from one of these obligations was incurred at a later date, a separate provision could be made at that time to address amounts paid out at that time.

[para10] The Defendant argues that the notes and mortgages were receivable only in accordance with the payment schedules set out in the development agreements, and then only if the Defendant continued to meet its obligations under each development agreement. Because of these continuing conditions precedent, therefore, it is argued that the defendant did not have an immediate, absolute and unconditional right to sue for the uncollected portion of the notes and mortgages in any of the particular taxation years in issue.

[para11] The Defendant argues that the uncollected amounts outstanding under the notes and mortgages ought not to have been included in its income for tax purposes for those years. It is submitted that it should not have originally included them, subject to a reserve to account for the outstanding obligations attached to them. Moreover, it is argued that to have included the notes and mortgages in income as receivables did not present an accurate picture of the Defendant's profit, for any of the years at issue, regardless of whether a reserve was applicable for the continuing obligations, or if the obligations were regarded merely as contingent payables.

[para14] Mr. Wardell testified that the fundamental criteria that must be met in order to recognise profit for real estate transactions under Canadian GAAP, is that the profit must be determinable, i.e. that the collectibility of the sales price is reasonably assured, and that the earnings process is virtually complete, i.e. that the defendant is not obligated to perform any significant activities after the sale to earn the profit. With recourse to FAS No. 66 and the CIPREC guidelines, Mr. Wardell has indicated that neither of these two criteria have been met in this case. This is because the cash down payments involved were not sufficient, and the defendant was required to perform various obligations prior to the notes and mortgages becoming fully payable. He also notes that the Defendant retained the risk of ownership as general partner in each MURB project, and guarantor of cash flow pursuant to the purchase and development agreements. Accordingly, the Defendant should not have accounted for the notes and mortgages as receivables in the years they were generated, rather than as per the schedules upon which they were to have been due.

[para15] The Supreme Court of Canada has recently set out the following principles, to be applied on a case-by-case basis, to the computation of profit under ss. 9 & 12 of the Act: Canderel Limited v. The Queen 98 DTC 6100 at 6110:

(1) The determination of profit is a question of law. (2) The profit of a business for a taxation year is to be determined by setting against the revenues from the business for that year the expenses incurred in earning said income: ... (3) In seeking to ascertain profit, the goal is to obtain an accurate picture of the defendant's profit for the given year. (4) In ascertaining profit, the defendant is free to adopt any method which is not inconsistent with (a) the provisions of the Income Tax Act ; (b) established case law principles or rules of law; and (c) well-accepted business principles.

(5) Well-accepted business principles, which include but are not limited to the formal codification found in G.A.A.P., are not rules of law but interpretive aids. To the extent that they may influence the calculation of income, they will do so only on a case-by-case basis, depending on the facts of the defendant's financial situation.

(6) On reassessment, once the defendant has shown that he has provided an accurate picture of income for the year, which is consistent with the Act, the case law, and well-accepted business principles, the onus shifts to the Minister to show either that the figure provided does not represent an accurate picture, or that another method of computation would provide a more accurate picture.

[para16] In my opinion, the above passage indicates that, in determining profit, a Court should determine whether the case at hand can be resolved through a purposive approach to the relevant provisions of the Act, and to the established principles of case law. In certain cases, it may not be necessary to resort formally to the various well-accepted business principles as an interpretive aid: Canderel, supra at 6109. "However, when no specific legal rule has been developed, either in the case law or under the Act, the taxpayer will be free to calculate his or her income in accordance with well-accepted business principles, and to adopt whichever of these is appropriate in the particular circumstances, is not inconsistent with the law, and... yields an accurate picture of his profit for the year": Canderel, supra at 6107.

[para17] Paragraph 12(b)(1) of the Act, as it was then drafted, provides:

(1) There shall be included in computing the income of a defendant for a taxation year as income from a business or property such of the following amounts as are applicable: ... (b) any amount receivable by the defendant in respect of property sold or services rendered in the course of a business in the year, notwithstanding that the amount or any part thereof is not due until a subsequent year, unless the method adopted by the defendant for ...

[para18] The parties have agreed that recent amendments to this provision have no bearing on the issue of whether the notes and mortgages constitute a 'receivable'. Use of the term 'receivable' has been considered recently by Cullen J. in West Hill Redevelopment Company Limited v. The Queen, 91 DTC 5430 (F.C.T.D.), where a defendant who took back mortgages from purchasers of its condominium units at interest rates below the prevailing market rates was required to include in income the face value, rather than the fair market value, of such amounts secured by the mortgages as receivables pursuant to paragraph 12(1)(b). Cullen J. determined, at 5433, that the mortgages were receivable within the meaning of the subsection. He did so because 'receivable' has been interpreted to mean that a defendant has an unconditional legal, though not necessarily immediate, right to receive an amount in question: The Queen v. Imperial General Properties Ltd., 85 DTC 5045 (F.C.A.) & M.N.R. v. Colford 60 DTC 1131 (Ex. Ct.).

[para20] Accordingly, an amount is to be characterized as 'receivable' only if there is at present an immediate, absolute and unconditional right to collect it, even though it may not be actually collected until some time in the future. In this case, however, the notes and mortgages were subject to the condition precedent of being in compliance with the obligations contained within each of the purchase and development agreements. These obligations included the construction and development of the projects into functioning MURBS and the management and initial leasing of the development properties. In addition, the defendant would be required to honour the cash flow guarantees for the period of the development agreements, make pay-outs in relation to initial services as they fell due, and to ultimately discharge the underlying institutional mortgages. If these obligations, which extended over the period of each development agreement, were not fulfilled, the defendant would not have an immediate, absolute and unconditional right to collect the amounts receivable for a particular period as set forth in the payment schedule under the notes and mortgages.

[para21] In my opinion, the cash flow guarantee obligation did not have the character of a contingent payable, as has been suggested by the Minister. While it is uncertain what the full affect of this obligation would eventually be, in terms of the money to be paid out by the Defendant to honour it, it is nonetheless clear that this obligation was part of purchase and development agreements that required specific performance after an accounting. Similarly, in order for the mortgages to be receivable by the Defendant, as set forth in the payment schedule, over the period of the purchase and development agreement, the Defendant was required to fulfil its ongoing obligations in respect of the underlying mortgages. This obligation was an integral part of the purchase and development agreement and related directly to its right to receive payments under the development mortgages.

[para25] Moreover, the earnings process for each agreement was not virtually complete at the conclusion of each agreement, as the Defendant retained the risk of ownership as general partner in each MURB project, and as guarantor of cash flow, commitments which necessitated the Defendant's involvement after the sale to earn its profit. As such, it would present a less accurate portrayal of the Defendant's profit, as a real estate developer, if the uncollected portions of the notes, and the mortgages, were treated as receivables in the taxation years during which each purchase and development agreement was concluded.

Tax Court of Canada London, Ontario Brulé T.C.J. Heard: October 20, 1998 Judgment: December 11, 1998

The Appellant, in person. N. Goulard, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeal from the assessment made under the Excise Tax Act, notice of which is dated December 16, 1994 and bears number 08PD0101904 is dismissed in accordance with the attached Reasons for Judgment.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] BRULÉ T.C.J.:-- This appeal, pursuant to the informal procedure respecting the appellant's claim that he was not liable for Goods and Services Tax (GST) on the sale of a property, was heard at London, Ontario, on October 20, 1998. The appellant was the only witness.

Facts

[para2] The appellant, Nicholas Koppert (NK), purchased real property located at 4701-2 Glacier Drive, Whistler, British Columbia (the "Property") on February 15, 1990. The Property was considered a strata unit and the appellant made the Property available for both long and short-term rentals. When the appellant rented the Property on a short-term basis, he collected and remitted GST in respect of the short-term rentals. A short-term rental is considered a rental for less than 60 days. The appellant sold the property on December 2, 1992 for a price of $205,000. The appellant did not collect from the purchaser and remit GST in respect of the sale price of the Property. The Minister issued an assessment on the basis that the sale of the Property was a taxable supply and the appellant should have collected GST from the purchaser and remitted such GST on such supply.

Issue

[para3] The sole issue is whether the sale of the Property was a taxable supply or whether the Property was a "residential complex", the sale of which is exempt from GST pursuant to section 2 of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act (the "Act").

Appellant's Position

[para4] The appellant claims that the Property is comparable to a residential condominium and that he rented the Property to tenants on both a short-term (less than sixty days) and on a long-term basis (more than sixty days). The appellant submits that the rentals were not all or substantially all short-term rentals. The appellant makes this calculation by comparing the number of days the Property was rented on a short-term basis to the number of days that it was rented on a long-term basis.

Respondent's Position

[para5] The Minister submits that all or substantially all of the rentals of the Property were on a short-term basis. The Minister further submits that "all or substantially all" should be calculated by the total revenue method. The total revenue method compares the total revenue from short-term rentals with the total revenue from long-term rentals (over 60 days).

Analysis

[para6] GST is payable on all taxable supplies made in Canada by a registrant. The term "taxable supply" is defined in subsection 123(1) of the Act which reads as follows:

""taxable supply"

"taxable supply" means a supply that is made in the course of a commercial activity;"

[para7] The phrase "in the course of a commercial activity" is defined in subsection 123(1) of the Act and reads as follows:

""commercial activity"

"commercial activity" of a person means

(a) a business carried on by the person (other than a business carried on by an individual or a partnership, all of the members of which are individuals, without a reasonable expectation of profit), except to the extent to which the business involves the making of exempt supplies by the person,

(b) an adventure or concern of the person in the nature of trade (other than an adventure or concern engaged in by an individual or a partnership, all of the members of which are individuals, without a reasonable expectation of profit), except to the extent to which the adventure or concern involves the making of exempt supplies by the person, and

(c) the making of a supply (other than an exempt supply) by the person of real property of the person, including anything done by the person in the course of or in connection with the making of the supply;"

[para8] The three paragraphs of the definition of "commercial activity" expressly exclude the making of an exempt supply. Therefore, if the supply being made is an exempt supply, it does not fall within the definition of commercial activity. If the supply is not made in the course of a commercial activity then it is not a taxable supply. Exempt supplies are set out in Schedule V of the Act. More specifically Part I deals with real property. Section 2 of Part I of Schedule V of the Act reads as follows:

"Schedule V - Exempt Supplies Part I - Real Property

2. A supply by way of sale of a residential complex or an interest therein made by a person who is not a builder of the complex or, where the complex is a multiple unit residential complex, an addition thereto, unless the person claimed an input tax credit in respect of the last acquisition by the person of the complex, or in respect of the acquisition or importation by the person, after the complex was last acquired by the person, of an improvement to the complex."

[para9] It must be determined whether the Property that the appellant sold was a "residential complex". The definition for a "residential complex" is set out in subsection 123(1) of the Act and reads as follows:

"residential complex"

"residential complex" means

(a) that part of a building in which one or more residential units are located, together with (i) that part of any common areas and other appurtenances to the building and the land immediately contiguous to the building that is reasonably necessary for the use and enjoyment of the building as a place of residence for individuals, and

(ii) that proportion of the land subjacent to the building that that part of the building is of the whole building,

(b) that part of a building that is

(i) the whole or part of a semi-detached house, rowhouse unit, residential condominium unit or other similar premises that is, or is intended to be, a separate parcel or other division of real property owned, or intended to be owned, apart from any other unit in the building, and

(ii) a residential unit, together with that proportion of any common areas and other appurtenances to the building and the land subjacent or immediately contiguous to the building that is attributable to the unit and that is reasonably necessary for its use and enjoyment as a place of residence for individuals,

(c) the whole of a building described in paragraph (a), or the whole of a premises described in subparagraph (b)(i), that is owned by or has been supplied by way of sale to an individual and that is used primarily as a place of residence of the individual, an individual related to the individual or a former spouse of the individual, together with

(i) in the case of a building described in paragraph (a), any appurtenances to the building, the land subjacent to the building and that part of the land immediately contiguous to the building, that are reasonably necessary for the use and enjoyment of the building, and (ii) in the case of a premises described in subparagraph (b)(i), that part of any common areas and other appurtenances to the building and the land subjacent or immediately contiguous to the building that is attributable to the unit and that is reasonably necessary for the use and enjoyment of the unit,

(d) a mobile home, together with any appurtenances to the home and, where the home is affixed to land (other than a site in a residential trailer park) for the purpose of its use and enjoyment as a place of residence for individuals, the land subjacent or immediately contiguous to the home that is attributable to the home and is reasonably necessary for that purpose, and

but does not include a building, or that part of a building, that is a hotel, a motel, an inn, a boarding house, a lodging house or other similar premises, or the land and appurtenances attributable to the building or part, where the building is not described in paragraph (c) and all or substantially all of the supplies of residential units in the building are part by way of lease, licence or similar arrangement are, or are expected to be, for periods of continuous possession or use of less than sixty days;"

[para10] Both the appellant and respondent agree that the issue is whether the exclusionary words at the end of the definition of "residential complex" apply to the building or part that meets all of the following conditions: 1) the building must be a hotel, motel, inn, boarding house or other similar premises, 2) the building is not described in paragraph (c) above and 3) all or substantially all of the rentals of "residential units" in the building are for less than 60 days.

[para11] With respect to whether the Property was a hotel, motel, inn, boarding house or other similar premises, the respondent submits that the Property should be considered a similar premise. Based on the evidence at trial, it is my opinion that the Property is to be considered a similar premise. The appellant had an arrangement with Whistler Chalets Limited ("Whistler") in which the condominium could be rented for the weekend, the week or other periods of time. It was available to the public for temporary accommodation. The occupants would either be mailed the key or could pick up the key at a place arranged by Whistler. Whistler provided cleaning services upon the departure of each occupant.

[para12] The second requirement is that the building is not described in paragraph 123(1)(c) "residential complex" which refers to a building that is used primarily as a place of residence of the individual or a related individual. The appellant admits that the Property was not used primarily as a place of residence for himself or a person related to him.

[para13] With respect to whether all or substantially all of the rentals were for less than 60 days, both the appellant and respondent agree that all or substantially all is to be interpreted as 90% (for Revenue Canada's position). The appellant submits that this calculation should be based on a comparison of the number of days that the property was either rented on a short-term or long-term basis. The respondent submits that the calculation should be based on a comparison of the gross revenues generated by short-term rentals of the Property as opposed to long-term rentals.

[para14] The appellant owned the Property for approximately 34 1/2 months. During this period, the Property was used for short-term rentals aside from a long-term rental that consisted of a 6 1/2 months lease. Aside from the records of the monthly payments, the appellant did not produce any evidence to substantiate this lease. To prove the existence of the lease, the appellant relied upon his personal records of rent payments received.

[para15] As to the gross revenue method, the evidence before the Court was that the gross revenue from short-term rentals in 1990, 1991, and 1992 was $24,633.00, $36,529.00 and $16,475.00 respectively. The gross revenue from long-term rentals for 1990, 1991 and 1992 was $5,200.00. This amount was from the 6 1/2 months rental in 1992. Therefore, the percentage of gross rental revenue that came from the long-term rental was 6.3%. (The total gross revenue from long-term and short-term rentals was $82,837.00. The gross revenue from the long-term rental, namely $5,200, represents 6.3% of the total amount.) The appellant submits that in establishing whether the Property meets the all or substantially all requirement under the gross revenue method, the revenue from 1990 is not relevant to the calculation as this period was prior to the introduction of the GST. Even if this submission was to be accepted by the Court, it would not alter the outcome that over 90 % of the rentals of the Property were for less than 60 days. (The total gross revenue from long-term and short-term rentals for the 1991 and 1992 years was $58,204. The gross revenue from the long-term rental, namely $5,200, represents 8.9% of the total amount.) In the Court's opinion, upon the facts before it, the gross revenue method should be adopted and as a result it is my opinion that all or substantially all of the rentals were for periods of less than 60 days.

E.C. Defreitas, for the Appellant.
Sean O'Donnell, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeals from the assessments made under the Income Tax Act for the 1992, 1993 and 1994 taxation years are allowed, with costs, if any, and the matter is referred back to the Minister of National Revenue for reconsideration and reassessment on the basis that the expenses incurred by the Appellant with respect to a condominium unit on Sandhurst Circle, Scarborough, Ontario, were not personal or living expenses and are deductible in computing the Appellant's income.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] RIP T.C.J.:-- The appellants, Elizabeth M. Amato and Eugenio Amato, wife and husband, have appealed their assessments for 1992, 1993 and 1994 on the basis that when they acquired a condominium unit in May 1987, they had a reasonable expectation of profit from this property and that the expenses incurred by them during the years in appeal, which were disallowed by the Minister of National Revenue ("Minister"), were incurred by them for the purpose of gaining or producing income from a business or property. [See Note 1 below]

Note 1: The Minister also alleged that the expenses were not reasonable in the circumstances. However there was no evidence from either the appellants nor the respondent with respect to this issue.

[para2] In May 1987 the appellants purchased a condominium unit located at Sandhurst Circle in the City of Scarborough, Ontario. The purchase price for the property was $138,000. The appellants borrowed $57,000 with security being a mortgage on their home in Markham, Ontario and their bank advanced $88,000 with security being a first mortgage on the Scarborough property.

[para3] The appeals were heard on common evidence. Mrs. Amato testified on behalf of herself and her husband. The Amatos and their two children emigrated to Canada from Uruguay in 1977. Since they could not speak English, the Amatos were unable to secure employment in the field they were trained in, Mrs. Amato as a teacher of physical education and Mr. Amato as an electrician. They obtained positions as building superintendents. Soon their skills were recognized and it was suggested to them that they start a building maintenance business. This they did, and they were successful. Mrs. Amato testified that the business now employs approximately 60 people, some of whom are part-time.

YEAR TOTAL RENTAL EACH APPELLANT'S LOSS SHARE - 50%

1987 $ 1,478 $ 739 1988 $ 5,378 $2,689 1989 $ 2,934 $1,467 1990 $ 2,382 $1,191 1991 $ 2,196 $1,098 1992 $17,438 $8,719

[para7] One of the assumptions of fact that the Minister considered when he made the assessments was that the Scarborough property was vacant throughout 1993 and 1994. Mrs. Amato recalled that it was very difficult to rent the property during those years. She said people were losing jobs and that the people applying to rent the unit were not reliable. She said they either had poor credit ratings or their references from previous landlords were not favourable. She and Mr. Amato decided to renovate the unit so as to get a better grade of tenant.

[para8] The appellants advertized the unit for rent in newspapers throughout the years in appeal. Although the appellants did not claim the costs of advertising as an expenses, Mrs. Amato stated she gave receipts to an official of Revenue Canada. The asking price for the unit was $1,100 per month. She stated that at time of trial the unit is being rented for $1,000 per month. She also indicated that they are now making a profit of about $10 per month on the unit.

[para9] According to Mrs. Amato, the intent in acquiring the Scarborough property in 1987 was so that she and her husband would have some income on their retirement. They did not intend to sell the property and, indeed, have not attempted to sell the property. She stated that they are making efforts to reduce the mortgage on the property.

[para10] Mrs. Amato stated that at least on one occasion a tenant left the unit in a "mess" and the Amatos incurred unexpected costs to repair the unit.

[para12] The respondent's position is that there was no reasonable expectation of profit on the acquisition of the property and since there was no reasonable expectation of profit, the Amatos had no source of income from the property. Respondent's counsel acknowledges that there was no personal element in the acquisition of the property.

[para13] In Moldowan v. The Queen, 77 D.T.C. 5213, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, Dickson, J. (as he then was) held that in order to have a "source of income" the taxpayer must have a profit or a reasonable expectation of profit. On page 5215 he explained that:

There is a vast case literature on what reasonable expectation of profit means and it is by no means entirely consistent. In my view, whether a taxpayer has a reasonable expectation of profit is an objective determination to be made from all of the facts. The following criteria should be considered: the profit and loss experience in past years, the taxpayer's training, the taxpayer's intended course of action, the capability of the venture as capitalized to show a profit after charging capital cost allowance. The list is not intended to be exhaustive. The factors will differ with the nature and extent of the undertaking: The Queen v. Matthews (1974), 28 D.T.C. 6193. One would not expect a farmer who purchased a productive going operation to suffer the same start-up losses as the man who begins a tree farm on raw land.

[para14] Respondent's counsel submitted that the appellants had at least eight years of losses on the property, no experience or training in holding real estate, no intended course of action to demonstrate that the property could be successful and they failed to show that the property, as capitalized, can show a profit. He added that the property has not proven to be capable of producing a profit over the long term. Thus, he submitted, the property could not be said to be a source of income to the Amatos in the years in appeal.

[para16] The question before me is whether or not the appellants had a reasonable expectation of profit and the determination of that question is an objective determination to be made from all of the facts. This is what was stated by the Supreme Court in Moldowan, supra. The appellants at bar were immigrants to Canada. They carry on a successful business. In making various investment and business decisions they rely upon the advice of their bank manager. They, themselves, do not believe they had the expertise to make such decisions. It was the bank manager who suggested to them that they acquire a rental property. He sat down with them and advised them, among other things, how much they could afford to pay for the property and how much rent they would have to receive from the property to meet their mortgage obligations. They acquired the property for a price which the bank manager said would be appropriate. They had confidence in their bank manager.

[para17] At the time of the acquisition of the property, it is clear to me the appellants had a reasonable expectation of profit from the property. In considering whether there is a reasonable expectation of profit in the minds of taxpayers, as opposed to their hope of profit, one ought to consider, in addition to the criteria set down in Moldowan, their background and their source of counsel in deciding to invest. To the appellants, a bank manager is a competent and knowledgeable individual who could advise them how to make an affordable, secure and profitable investment. That they incurred losses since 1987, including the years in appeal, and, for example, that they had no investment background or training, do not, on the specific and peculiar facts of this appeal, negate the appellants' reasonable expectation of profit from the property over the long term.

Nathoo v. Diamond Robinson Management Ltd.

Between

Ashie Nathoo, claimant, and Diamond Robinson Management Ltd.

Vancouver Registry No. C95-19006

British Columbia Provincial Court
(Civil Division)
Vancouver, British Columbia
Burdett Prov. Ct. J.

Heard: March 27, 1997.

Judgment: filed June 5, 1997.

(6 pp.)

Action to recover a deposit paid for the purchase of a condominium unit. On the basis of a floor plan, the claimant entered into a contract with the defendants to purchase the unit. When the building was completed, the claimant inspected his unit. He complained of various finishing deficiencies, poor workmanship, water damage and an obvious seam in the centre of the living room carpet. He also noticed significant changes to the plans, such as a reduction in his usable bedroom space, a hall closet moved to the living room, and a whirlpool for the use of tenants placed directly in front of his patio. The contract provided for the vendor to make minor variations to the plans and specifications at the vendor's discretion. The contract also provided that if there was a dispute concerning deficiencies, the matter was to go to an independent architect for a binding opinion. The claimant decided he no longer wanted to purchase the unit and sought the return of his deposit.

Counsel:

Ashie Nathoo, appearing on his own behalf.

T. Sutcliffe, for the defendant.

1 BURDETT PROV. CT. J.:— Dr. Ashie Nathoo was the purchaser of one unit in a pre-sold condominium tower at 488 Helmcken Street. The description and plans Dr. Nathoo was shown and upon which he based his decision, were marked as Exhibit 3.

2 The building was to be constructed at the corner of Richards and Helmcken Streets in Vancouver, have fourteen floors, and a variety of different floor plan options from which a purchaser could choose. A brochure was provided which listed a number of features the development would have, such as the quality of appliances, cabinetry and fixtures, as well as the facilities in the building the owners would have at their disposal.

3 Dr. Nathoo chose a unit on the second floor, with a floor plan described as "Unit W." He entered into a contract (Exhibit 1) with the defendants to purchase the unit for $178,000. Under the contract Dr. Nathoo paid an initial deposit of $500, a second deposit when the subject conditions were removed and then ten monthly payments of $534 from August 1, 1994 until May 1, 1995.

4 When the building was finally completed, Dr. Nathoo inspected unit 201. Wayne Lee, a representative of the defendants, accompanied Dr. Nathoo as he inspected suite 201. Dr. Nathoo noticed a number of deficiencies, and Mr. Lee noted some of them down on the "Completion Inspection Certificate" (Exhibit 4). Twenty-five items were listed, many of which could be characterized as finishing deficiencies: unfinished details, cracks in drywall, scratches on finished surfaces and obvious damage done by the trades. Dr. Nathoo described the quality of workmanship as poor. There was substantial water damage done to the suite while the building was under construction, and some of the items on the list related to unfinished repairs to the suite due to the water damage.

5 Dr. Nathoo noted other problems: there was an obvious seam running in the centre of the living room carpet, the floor plan had changed, there was an additional window, different doors were placed in closets, the kitchen cupboards were poorly installed, and a Jacuzzi for the use of the residents of the building was now located directly in front of his patio.

6 Dr. Nathoo testified that in his discussion with Mr. Lee about the state of unit 201, Mr. Lee refused to replace the carpet, or replace the drywall. It was Dr. Nathoo's evidence that the inspection was rushed and he was not given the opportunity to note down all of his concerns. He later completed an addendum to the deficiency list on his own (Exhibit 5).

7 Mr. Lee denied that the meeting was cut short, and indicated that Dr. Nathoo could have taken as much as time as he wished. He did agree that he refused to replace the carpet, and described it as up to industry standard. Mr. Lee testified that some of the other items which Dr. Nathoo described as substandard workmanship were up to industry standards, as far as Lee was concerned.

8 Dr. Nathoo and Mr. Lee's meeting ended with Mr. Lee promising that a number of repairs would be carried out. Dr. Nathoo returned to the suite ten days later. Some of the repairs had been done, some repairs were poorly done, and some of the deficiencies had not been remedied at all.

9 Vincent Loo was the assistant property manager of the project. It was his opinion that the workmanship on the project was "good." He agreed that there were changes to the floor plan to unit 201, in particular the closets were changed, both in location and dimensions. It was his opinion that the changed designed "improved the flow" of the unit. A glass block window was added to the closet in the master bedroom to bring natural light into the unit. He explained that several large, box-like protrusions in the master bedroom were necessary for boxing in the sprinkler system. He agreed that the original plans called for double bi-fold doors on the closets and single doors were installed. Mr. Loo was of the same opinion as Mr. Lee: that a visible seam running down the centre of the living room was well within the industry standard. He was not aware of that when the decision was made to move the outside Jacuzzi to the location just off Dr. Nathoo's suite.

10 After viewing the suite and re-inspecting it ten days later, Dr. Nathoo decided that he was no longer interested in purchasing the unit. Correspondence was exchanged between counsel for the defendants and Dr. Nathoo at the date set for the completion of the conveyance of unit 201. Dr. Nathoo did not complete the transaction. His evidence was he no longer wanted the suite due to the combination of poor workmanship, deficiencies and changes to the plans. He testified that unit 201 was not at all similar in quality of workmanship or materials as the display unit he originally viewed before he entered into the contract. He seeks the return of his deposit.

ISSUES

11 Were the changes to unit 201 "minor," or so significant that Dr. Nathoo was entitled to rescind the contract? Were the deficiencies and poor workmanship so substantial as to constitute a fundamental breach of contract?

ANALYSIS

12 The contract provided under clause 2.5:

2.5 The Purchaser acknowledges and agrees that:

(a) the Vendor may from time to time in its discretion, or as required by any governmental authority or the Vendor's mortgagee, make minor variation to the plans and specifications pertaining to the Property plans or the development of which the Property forms a part (including architectural, structural, engineering, landscaping, grading, mechanical, site service or other plans) or pertaining to any recreational amenities within the development or any other amenity situate within the development from the plans and specifications existing at the inception of construction of the development or as they exist at the time the Purchaser has entered in this Contract of Purchase and Sale or as same as may be illustrated in any sales brochure, models in the sales office or otherwise and the Purchaser shall have absolutely no claim or cause of action against the Vendor for any such changes, variances or modifications nor shall the Purchaser be entitled to any notice thereof. With respect to change in area, minor variation shall mean any change not exceeding 3 per cent of the area represented to the Purchaser at the date hereof; and

(b) the Vendor may substitute such other materials in the construction of the Property and the development (including common areas) from time to time from those specified or contemplated in the aforesaid plans and specifications, provided that any substituted material is equal to the material originally indicated in the said plans and specifications.

Clause 5.7 is also relevant:

5.7 If the purchaser is in breach of his obligation hereunder, the Deposit paid by the Purchaser shall be absolutely forfeited to the Vendor as liquidated damages (and not as a penalty), the parties agreeing that such amount constitutes a genuine and reasonable pre-estimate of the damages suffered by the Vendor as a result of such breach.

Deficiencies

13 I examined photographs (Exhibit 4a) of some of the deficiencies and areas where Dr. Nathoo claimed poor workmanship was exhibited. The photographs clearly show slipshod and sloppy workmanship. A lock was installed on the bedroom after Dr. Nathoo complained that the passage set had no locking mechanism. The lock is cheap, flimsy and poorly installed. A new passage set with a lock should have been installed. The kitchen cabinet installation was poorly done, with no fillers installed where a cabinet could not fit. The installer simply left an empty space. The cabinet in the bathroom had an obvious chip missing from it.

14 Mr. Lee agreed that there was substantial water damage in the suite, but asserted that the drywall did not need to be replaced. I find Dr. Nathoo's concerns about the drywall to be reasonable. The suite needed to be painted again. I do not accept Mr. Loo or Mr. Lee's assertion that the visible carpet seam in the centre of the living room was within acceptable industry standards.

15 I do not intend to go through all of the deficiencies. I accept Dr. Nathoo's evidence concerning the deficiencies and poor workmanship. I specifically reject Mr. Lee's evidence where it conflicts with Dr. Nathoo's. Mr. Lee was a poor witness. He was evasive during cross-examination. He had a poor recollection of the events, and during a substantial amount of his testimony it was obvious that he was trying to reconstruct what happened with Dr. Nathoo by referring to his usual conduct during inspections with purchasers. I place little weight on his testimony and no weight on his opinion on what are construction industry standards.

16 Counsel submitted that each of the deficiencies could have been remedied. He argued that Dr. Nathoo had a remedy under clause 5.3 of the contract. This clause provides that if there is a dispute concerning deficiencies, the defendant was to obtain the opinion of an independent architect. This opinion was to be binding on the claimant and the defendant.

17 Although the deficiencies were widespread, and Dr. Nathoo was justified in believing that Mr. Lee had no intention of having most of them fixed, Dr. Nathoo had the protection of clause 5.3. All of the deficiencies were capable of being repaired. His proper course, had the deficiencies been the only problem, was to invoke clause 5.3 and have the matter go to an independent architect. The deficiencies and poor workmanship alone did not constitute a fundamental breach of the contract.

Modifications

18 I will set out the changes to the unit, and the complaints Dr. Nathoo has of them. Four box-like projections were installed on the master bedroom walls. The usable space in the bedroom has decreased. The closet door has a single bi-fold door at the end of the closet. Access is impossible to the far end of the closet if any clothes are hung in it. The closet now has a large glass block window in it. Dr. Nathoo's concern was that his clothes would fade with exposure to the sun. The Jacuzzi used by all residents has been moved to a location directly in front of his patio. Anyone using the Jacuzzi has a direct view into unit 201.

The unit has lost a large degree of privacy. The hallway closet was moved from a location directly opposite the front door, to a location in the living room. The closet shape changed from a standard box to a triangle. Dr. Nathoo's complaint was that the original location of the hall closet was the proper one. It is impossible to hang any clothes in the closet as the triangular shape prevents the door from closing.

19 Counsel for the defendants relies on the authorities of Topnotch Ltd. v. Welldone Ventures Canada Inc. Developments, 48 C.L.R. 159; Richards v. Law Development Group (Georgetown) Ltd., [1994] O.J. No. 2914 and Three Developments (Kingswood) Ltd. v. George Gogos, 45 R.P.R. (2d) 121.

20 Although counsel did not refer to it, I found the decision of Lau v. 1755 Holdings Ltd., [1995] B.C.J. No. 1663 to be particularly helpful. Both Mr. Justice Warren's decision at trial and the decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal [1996] B.C.J. No. 2441 confirming the trial judgement, discuss the relevant law in British Columbia.

21 The test for fundamental breach of contract is set out in the decision of Hunter Engineering Co. v. Syncrude Ltd. et al [1989] 1 S.C.R. 426. Madam Justice Wilson stated that the test for fundamental breach was whether or not the plaintiff has been deprived of substantially the whole benefit which was the intention of the parties that he should obtain from the contract. The Hunter decision concerned a conveyer belt, and Madam Justice Wilson pointed out, that as defensive as it was, it could be repaired and could continue to function as a conveyer belt. Mr. Justice MacEachern made the following comment in considering the Hunter decision:

I think there is a substantial difference between a piece of machinery that can be repaired or some other item of commerce and a residence where someone is going to move in and live and hopefully enjoy it. We are all entitled to some preferences in the ambiance in which we live and I think windows and heating are of particular importance.

22 In the Lau decision a similar term in the contract allowed for minor changes in the plan. There, a number of windows were deleted from the plans, built-in book shelves were deleted, recessed lighting was not installed, nor a high-quality carpet. The entrance to the building did not contain the type of fountain and reflecting pool as described in the promotional brochure. The balcony railings were cement rather than glass. Mr. Justice Warren concluded that the changes and omissions were not so trivial or inconsequential that they could be described as minor. He found that those changes amounted to a fundamental breach of contract.

23 In this case the changes to unit 201 were not insignificant. One closet could only be partially used. The hall closet was moved to an entirely inappropriate location in the living room. It was completely unusable due its shape. The boxes extending into the bedroom substantially diminished the usable space. The placement of the Jacuzzi directly outside Dr. Nathoo's unit substantially altered the privacy and quiet enjoyment of his suite. These changes cannot be described as minor variations to the plans. They could not be remedied by repairs. I conclude that unit 201 was not substantially in accordance with the plans Dr. Nathoo had seen before construction, the plans upon which he based his decision to purchase the unit. The changes were so essential as to amount to a fundamental breach entitling the claimant to rescission.

24 The claimant is entitled to the return of his deposit of $8,366.00, prejudgment interest from May 10, 1995 until today, fees of $120.00 and any reasonable expenses associated with the conduct of this action.

Vancouver Registry No. CA020760

British Columbia Court of Appeal McEachern C.J.B.C., Rowles, and Ryan J.J.A. November 8, 1996. Contracts -- Performance or breach -- Fundamental breach -- What constitutes a fundamental breach.

This was an appeal of an award of damages for breach of contract. The respondents purchased units in a condominium building. They were shown detailed brochures and unit plans which they relied on in making their purchase decisions. They paid deposits. Upon occupation, they discovered that significant changes had been made to the plans. Windows were smaller or missing and heating equipment was different. The respondents were granted damages for breach of contract. The trial judge found that the appellant holding company committed a fundamental breach when it altered the unit plans during construction. The holding company appealed the award on the basis that the trial judge erred in applying the test for fundamental breach.

HELD: The appeal was dismissed. There was sufficient evidence for the trial judge to find that there was a fundamental breach of contract. The changes to the units could not be repaired. They deprived the respondents of the benefits promised by the holding company.

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) McMahon J. February 15, 1996.

Real property -- Condominiums -- Purchasers -- Disclosure to -- Completion dates -- Breach of duty of disclosure -- Remedies.

The defendant moved for a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale was not binding for failure to deliver a disclosure statement that complied with the Condominium Act and an order striking out the plaintiff's pleadings. The defendant received a disclosure statement which did not contain the proposed dates for the completion of certain amenities. He later rescinded the agreement. The plaintiff submitted that the failure to include these dates was not a material defect.

HELD: The application was granted and the claim dismissed. Section 52(6)(f) of the Act, which provided for the insertion of completion dates in the disclosure statement, was mandatory. Lawful disclosure was never delivered in accordance with the statutory requirements. It was therefore open to the defendant to rescind the contract.

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Taliano J. January 23, 1996.

Securities regulation -- Definitions -- Security, investment contract defined -- Trading in securities -- What constitutes -- Sale of land.

This was a motion by the plaintiff for summary judgment. The plaintiff sued for damages resulting from the defendant's failure to close an agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant entered into the agreement with the plaintiff to buy a condominium unit. A lease management agreement provided that the defendant would have the use of the unit for 120 days per year. For the balance of the year, the unit was to be controlled and managed exclusively by the plaintiff promoter and any profits which were generated were to be divided between the promoter and the defendant according to a previously agreed formula. The defendant's argument on this motion was that the agreement of purchase and sale and the lease management agreement were void for non-compliance with the Ontario Securities Act, which required a trader in securities to be registered as a dealer and further required the filing of a prospectus before trading in a security. The plaintiff submitted that the transactions were not governed by the Act.

HELD: Motion dismissed. The Securities Act regulated the trading of a "security" and that term included any "investment contract". An investment contract for the purposes of the Securities Act meant a contract, transaction or scheme, whereby a person invested his money in a common enterprise and was led to expect profits from the efforts of the promoter or third party. The purchase agreement and the lease management agreement in the present case appeared to meet the test for a "security". Accordingly, there was a triable issue which should be determined at trial.

New Westminster Registry No. S029846

British Columbia Supreme Court, New Westminster, British Columbia, Boyle J. Heard: November 27, 1997. Judgment: filed December 11, 1997.

Counsel: J. Michael Le Dressay, for the plaintiffs. John Kaminsky, for the defendant.

[para1] BOYLE J.-- The Plaintiffs purchased a newly constructed home from the Defendant in April 1994. The Defendant had just entered the home construction business. This was his first project.

[para2] One day, three months later, one of the Plaintiffs was washing the family car in the driveway, just in front of the attached garage. Water began leaking through an adjacent foundation wall into the basement.

[para4] Upon notification, the Defendant made a genuine effort to remedy the problem but without success. Eventually the Plaintiffs made their own arrangements and, after some further failure, the problem was solved.

[para5] Other defects, cracks in the foundation wall, also became apparent. At the time of purchase the cracks did not affect the structural integrity of the home but, when they were discovered subsequently, they, together with the water problems, were extremely unsettling to the Plaintiffs who had bought the residence as a "step up" into a quality "executive home".

[para8] The Plaintiffs paid $256,000. They listed for sale (after reductions without offers) at $259,000. They sold for $239,000. An appraisal was filed giving a $272,000 market value at the time of sale. The appraiser was not asked to factor in the troublesome history in order that the Plaintiffs could establish a value had the home been trouble-free.

[para9] The action is in tort and in contract. In tort, the Plaintiffs claim misrepresentation, in particular by alleging the Defendant "intentionally covering leaks and cracks in the foundation with tar and insulation in such a manner that the leaks and cracks were not visible to the Plaintiffs ... to induce the Plaintiffs into completing the contract without reservation ..."

[para11] The Defendant in answer submits the home was completed in a workmanlike manner in accordance with the local building code and established standards. [para12] The Defendant says "the Plaintiffs purchased a completed house without inducement or representation ... or cover up or concealment ..."

[para14] The evidence did not show the Defendant was aware at the time of sale the foundation wall would leak. He was aware of the cracks.

BASEMENT LEAKAGE

[para15] These reasons will deal first with the leaking wall.

[para18] The Defendant then concluded the seepage would have to be stopped from the outside. Extensive excavation was done. Tar was sprayed on the exterior foundation wall and, upon the Plaintiffs' insistence, rubber matting panels were glued onto the outside walls. Some drainrock was placed over mesh covering the perimeter drain, a load of unwashed sand was placed on top of that and the excavated fill was replaced.

[para20] The Plaintiff (Mr. Jackson) and Defendant had been at odds over the technique to follow on the outside. The Defendant wanted to apply a one inch thick coat of tar. The Plaintiff insisted on a sheathing of rubber membrane which had been recommended to him by a municipal building inspector.

[para21] The Defendant gave way to the Plaintiff but the rubber material he obtained came not as continuous sheathing but in panels which had to be glued individually to the wall and to one another. They were intended for use on roofs, not for exterior basement walls which were, as here, subsequently back filled.

[para22] Although the rubber substance was applied at the Plaintiffs' insistence, the fact the wrong kind was used frees the Plaintiffs from a shared responsibility for an inappropriate product being employed. The plaintiff did enquire of suppliers for a suitable product but did not find a source, nor even an identifying brand name. He left it then to the Defendant.

[para23] The Plaintiff had run a hose at a trickle on the backfill after the Defendant had completed his work. His purpose was to improve compaction. The Defendant argued that had contributed to failure by being undertaken too soon with the consequence the panels pulled away from the wall.

[para25] The Plaintiffs did endorse the panels the Defendant found but they did so, I infer, simply because they were rubber. The Plaintiffs were entitled to rely upon the Defendant to have obtained the recommended material.

[para26] When the wall continued to leak, the Defendant refused to do more repair work on the ground he was not responsible for the consequences of following the Plaintiffs' insistence.

[para27] The Plaintiffs then, on their own, retained a firm (Water Seal) specializing in problems of this kind. Once more the ground was excavated, water-proofing was applied, drain rock was trucked in and backfill again was used to level the surface.

[para30] That consultation led to a subcontractor (Fichtner) who was called in to sandblast the interior of the leaking wall and to apply a hydraulic barrier, again Xypex.

[para32] The Plaintiffs then went to a second engineering firm, Lang. Lang put them on to a water-proofing contractor Magna. That firm again excavated, this time even more extensively than the others including jack-hammering one-half the floor of the two-car garage.

[para33] The Magna invoice describes the work done by it:

. Remove one-half of garage floor. . Five feet of driveway across the front of the house, remove and replace front steps (they had been sinking anyway not being held to the main house by rebar). . Found crack in front corner of garage. . Found water in garage that came through crack. . Found water under the driveway main (improper fill was used to backfill up against foundation wall - (the evidence was it was sand and impervious clay; the former was capable of blocking the drains. In November 1995, the drains had been cleaned and found clogged at the sump). . Repaired all cracks that were found. . Replaced fill with proper drain rock, connecting perimeter drains. . Warranty five years.

[para36] With that unhappy history, the Plaintiffs claimed:

The Defendant breached the agreement in failing to construct the foundations of the house or, alternatively, in failing to repair damage to the foundations to the house which occurred during construction so as to render the foundations sound, water-proof and fit for their purpose generally.

[para37] I concluded the leaking wall fell within Strata Plan N.W. 2294 v. Oak Tree Construction Inc. (1994), 93 B.C.L.R. (2d) 50. In that case a condominium leaked. The claim against the builder in Oak Tree was framed on the basis of an implied warranty.

[para38] The Court held at p. 52:

In relation to latent defects in a building intended for habitation but which is not complete when the purchase and sale commitment is made, the law imposes on the builder, in favour of the purchaser, an implied warranty ... that the building will be fit for its purpose, namely habitation.

"Is implied by operation of law and not by the agreement of parties through the operation of the 'officious bystander' test.

... where the parties agree that the house will be completed, then the law implies the further agreement that it shall be completed in an efficient and workmanlike manner ... It is also important to note that the test is not 'substantial completion' but 'completion'.

The question of whether completion has occurred is a question of fact.

The warranty implied by operation of law cannot be excluded except by clear contractual terms."

[para40] In Oak Tree the builder developed the project, built the building and sold the units to the owners. The same steps were followed here.

[para41] The standard form agreement of purchase and sale in this case provided:

There are no representations, warranties, guarantees, promises or agreements other than those set out herein, all of which will survive the completion of the sale.

[para42] That is no more a bar to this action than was a term in Oak Tree which provided: "There is no warranty by or on behalf of the developer in respect to the development, including lots or common property."

[para43] The Plaintiffs' realtor added to the agreement of purchase and sale, a warranty against structural defects but its inclusion does not infer the exclusion of the implied warranty of completion, a warranty of "habitability" as it is described by Taylor J.A. (as he then was) in Oak Tree at p. 55.

[para44] The pleadings in this action lack some precision but they are sufficiently clear to (with amendment at trial) encompass the implied warranty.

[para46] That gives weight to recognition of the obligation in the Defendant's own mind of what is conveyed legally by the implied warranty.

[para48] It would be unfair to the Defendant to leave an impression he had sought to build anything other than a good quality home. He wanted to create a good reputation and he did his best to that end but he must bear the responsibility for the condition of the leaking wall.

[para49] The Plaintiffs are entitled to their expenses in bringing the leaks to an end but excluding the work done by Water Seal ($1,765.50) and Fichtner ($925.55) because the Defendant should not be held responsible for their failure when he did not engage their services.

[para50] The Plaintiffs are entitled to compensation from the Defendant for:

Flashing $50.12 Compactor rental 40.00 Stucco repair 267.50 Front steps 749.00 Rocky Mountain Landscaping 1,155.00 Drain cleaning 203.30 Magna Pacific 4,810.00

Straight Line Maintenance 887.35

Lang Engineering 224.70

Delco Exteriors 235.40

[para51] Both landscaping costs are included. They are intermingled with successful and unsuccessful remedial work on the wall.

[para52] Interest at the Registrar's rates from date of payment. Perhaps counsel can agree on a common date.

FOUNDATION CRACKS

[para53] Turning to the issues arising from the cracked wall:

[para54] The home had the appearance of completion when the Plaintiffs came upon it and decided to buy. However, it had the latent problem of leaking and also the cracks in foundation wall which were not apparent.

[para55] The Defendant had an experienced supervisor overseeing the job but he himself spent a good deal of time on the site. He was well aware of the cracks.

[para56] My impression was that the Defendant hoped to gain sufficient experience to act as supervisor himself in the future. For the time being his lender required a site manager because the Defendant's previous work had been limited to renovation.

[para57] During construction two cracks which are the subject of this branch of the claim appeared. One was in what is described as the southeast corner of the garage. The other was in the southwest corner.

[para58] Both were beneath the slab floor. The southwest crack was at a point bearing no load. It was hidden from view by backfill.

[para59] The southeast crack was at a load bearing point. It would have been immediately apparent to anyone entering the basement except that it was covered by styrofoam insulation. It was so severe that the wall required reinforcing by building a second wall behind and beyond the section that was cracked.

[para60] When the reinforcing wall was completed, it was approved as safe and secure by an engineer and a building inspector.

[para62] Although the foundation was safe and secure after the reinforcing work was done, the southeast crack itself was not filled and remained apparent from inside the basement but for the styrofoam which concealed it. Photos exhibited show a startling break in the wall.

[para63] The consequence of the misstatement of location of the major crack was that the Plaintiffs were not particularly concerned about it. I was satisfied the Plaintiffs relied on what they had been told and shown and the Defendant knew it.

[para64] The reasons for that were:

[para66] The Plaintiffs were unaware until after this litigation commenced of the crack in the southeast corner. They saw it after the styrofoam covering it had been stripped away. To them it was not just a crack. It was a "fissure".

[para67] It had been open to them to make further enquiry having seen the disclosure statement but they did not. That was not unreasonable in the circumstances. They had no inkling of the crack behind the styrofoam and no reason to tear the styrofoam off the wall, the entire wall being insulated. Being alerted by disclosure of one crack, it was reasonable to infer there were no others.

[para68] The Plaintiffs testified - and I accepted - they would not have purchased the house if they had seen the crack in the southeast corner - even given reassurance of the approved reinforcement. They were in a buyers' market. The home was in a small, controlled, high standard subdivision under development by various builders. They had a choice.

[para69] The Defendant was frank in his response to questions concerning the hidden crack. It was securely covered by styrofoam insulation. Asked whether he "didn't want people to see it", he replied: "that is probably true". He added that the local building bylaw required insulation and that the crack would be covered in any event.

[para70] His position was there was no onus on him to show prospective purchasers the crack in the basement wall. Disclosure was all that was required. Enquiry was up to them. The wall was structurally sound with the reinforcing work approved.

[para71] He was anxious to sell. There had been no offers. His financing was tight.

[para72] His answers were so straightforward they led me to conclude the misdescription of location in the disclosure statement was not deliberate. It, however, was a negligent misrepresentation. It led the Plaintiffs to make a purchase they would not have made had they known the true location of the major crack which would have been easily observable upon removal of the covering insulation.

[para73] They were entitled to see and judge for themselves. The Defendant's argument about onus once there was disclosure fails because the disclosure was a misdirection.

i a false statement negligently made;

ii a duty of care on the person making the statement to the recipient. A duty of care does not arise unless:

(a) the person making the statement is possessed of special skill or knowledge on the matter in question;

(b) the circumstances establish that a reasonable person making that statement would know that the recipient is relying upon his skill or judgment;

iii reasonable reliance on the statement by its recipient; and iv loss suffered as a consequence of the reliance.

[para76] The Plaintiff is not confined to his/her contractual remedies. A remedy is available for pre-contractual representations.

[para77] Because neither crack reduced the soundness of the structure at the time of purchase, it cannot be said the Plaintiffs bought a home with foundations that were not sound "and fit for their purpose generally".

[para78] The Plaintiffs cannot recover damages on that basis.

[para79] The question then is: can they recover damages for their loss on resale on the ground of negligent misrepresentation? (It was not argued that they could have remained in the home, repairs complete, and suffered no resale loss. In any event, it was not unreasonable for them to wish to be free of the ghosts of disarray that haunted them).

[para80] The foundation wall leaks are not a factor in this branch of the claim because there was no misrepresentation with respect to them (or representation either so far as that goes).

[para81] The issue on the loss as claimed is whether it has been proven the subsequent purchaser paid $30,000 less than the price listed and well below the appraisal value because of the history of the cracks the Plaintiffs disclosed to that purchaser or were there other factors such as (for instance) a falling market that accounted for the difference?

[para82] It is not unreasonable to conclude a factor in the modest sale price received by the Plaintiffs was the history of the home. However, no evidence was called from the buyer or would-be buyers to verify that this was so. (Either party could have called that person).

[para83] Nevertheless I concluded the matter of proof could be decided on the circumstances without direct evidence. There is no other reasonable inference than that the large gap between market value and sale price was contributed to by the history of the home. No evidence showed the contrary.

[para84] Because the leaks are not within the reach of the negligent misrepresentation, their affect upon the price offered by the subsequent purchaser cannot be taken into account when calculating damages.

[para85] A buyer is unlikely to have separated the defects between leaks and cracks and so, notionally, 50/50 is a fair attribution of the loss between the two faults.

[para86] The Plaintiffs will receive $5,000 for their claim of lost value.

[para87] The Plaintiffs claimed at trial (on grounds there is no need to dwell upon here) $1,500 in lost rent. That claim is dismissed. It was neither set out in the statement of claim nor particularized on request made at discovery.

[para89] Costs at Scale Three.

The Owners, Strata Plan No. LMS44, plaintiff (respondent), and RBY Holdings Ltd., Pacific Crematorium Limited, and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd., defendants (appellants)

Vancouver Registry No. CA017934

British Columbia Court of Appeal Vancouver, British Columbia Macfarlane, Taylor and Finch J.J.A. Heard: May 27, 1994. Judgment: filed June 30, 1994.

Counsel: Brian J. Wallace, Q.C. and Kelly R. Doyle, for the appellants. J. Rogers, for the respondent.

[para1] THE COURT:-- This appeal concerns the interpretation of a restrictive covenant affecting the use of premises owned by the appellants in a commercial/industrial condominium development in an industrial park.

[para2] The appellants use the premises for the operation of a mortuary, and propose to carry on a crematorium business there as well.

[para3] Madam Justice Newbury held that the operation of a crematorium or the carrying on of a mortuary business upon the premises contravened the Statutory Building Scheme which is registered in the Land Title Office and which charges the premises in question.

[para4] The provision in the Statutory Building Scheme which is the subject of interpretation in these proceedings reads as follows:

... no Lot will be used for any purpose whatsoever other than manufacturing, processing, storage, wholesale, office laboratory, profession, or research and development purposes permitted by the Municipality ...

[para5] The appellants submit that Madam Justice Newbury gave too strict an interpretation to the words of the restrictive covenant. The appellants contend that the storing of human remains on the premises for embalming and/or subsequent transportation out is "storage" within the meaning of the restrictive covenant, and that cremation is a "process".

[para6] Madam Justice Newbury held that the words must be given their true meaning (i.e. the meaning that would be ascribed by an ordinary intelligent person in construing the words in a proper way in light of the relevant circumstances).

[para7] In Hutton v. Watlin, [1948] 1 Ch. 398 (C.A.), a decision on which Mr. Wallace particularly relies, Lord Greene, M.R., said that a restrictive covenant should be construed from the point of view of the "purchaser", that is to say the person whose use it restricts. Mr. Wallace says we should construe the words with which we are here concerned in the context of the appellants' business and the terms of the Cemetery and Funeral Services Act, S.B.C. 1989 Ch. 21, which would, of course be in the minds of its principals, and the particular meaning which the words "process" and "storage" have to them. While Lord Greene's words might, in isolation, seem to support that approach, they must, of course, be considered with proper regard to the whole context. What Lord Greene says (at p. 403) is this:

The true construction of a document means no more than that the court puts upon it the true meaning, being the meaning which the other party, to whom the document was handed or who is relying upon it, would put upon it as an ordinary intelligent person construing the words in a proper way in the light of the relevant circumstances. This document, on the face of it, was intended to be handed to the purchaser, and it is produced by the purchaser. Indeed, the whole tenor of the document indicates that it is to be the purchaser's document. What then would the purchaser when she received the document have thought it meant as an ordinary reasonable person, intelligently understanding the English language and construing it in the light of the relevant circumstances.

Taking that passage as a whole it seems to me that the Master of the Rolls was speaking of examining the covenant from the purchaser's viewpoint only in the sense that it is not to be construed in the context of the particular point of view of the person who drew it. That statement does not, however, mean that the covenant is to be construed in the light of the special knowledge, or point of view, of any particular purchaser. That would require that the clause be given a different meaning according to the situation of each particular purchaser reading it. In saying that the court is to give the document such meaning as the purchaser would give it "as an ordinary reasonable person, intelligently understanding the English language and construing it in the light of the relevant circumstances", Lord Greene makes it plain that the words are, in fact, to be construed objectively and from the perspective of purchasers as a class, rather than from the point of view of particular purchasers. The manner in which a funeral director might understand the words "process" and "storage" cannot be determinative in construing the words with which we are here concerned unless they would be so understood generally by "the ordinary reasonable person intelligently understanding the English language", construing the clause "in the light of the relevant circumstances".

[para8] Construed objectively, the words seem to contemplate two sorts of activity, the first encompassing the words "manufacturing, processing, storage, wholesale" and having to do with the handling of goods, material or merchandise, and the second encompassing the words "office, laboratory, profession, or research and development purposes", which have to do with the rendering of services. It seems inconceivable that anything done by one human being to another could come within the first class of activities, and we do not understand how the fact that a human body, rather than a living person, is involved would make a difference. It is plain that the second part of the passage with which we are dealing, that concerned with services, could not encompass services of the sort offered by these appellants, nor, indeed, was that suggested in argument before us.

[para9] Madam Justice Newbury said she could not agree that "processing" in this context can be distorted and expanded so as to include the consumption by fire of the human body. She said:

... The body is not being 'processed', it is being consumed or destroyed by fire. Further, no commercial goods or materials result. The residue of ashes is obviously not a commercial product which I infer is contemplated by paragraph 7. (For the same reason, I would not regard an incinerator used to burn garbage as 'processing' garbage.) As the Court held in Tenneco Canada Inc. v. The Queen [1988] 2 F.C. 3 at 9, citing Federal Farms Ltd. v. M.N.R. [1966] Ex. C.R. 410] the normal meaning of 'processing' requires that goods be made more marketable. Here we do not have 'goods'; we do not have 'marketable goods', and, in my view, we do not have 'processing' -- we have consumption or destruction of the human body. ...

As far as 'storage' is concerned, the same reasoning applies. First, since I read paragraph 7 to be referring to the storage, manufacture or processing of commercial goods or products of some kind, the word is not applicable. Second, I infer that the word in this context is intended to refer to longer-term storage rather than the temporary moving of a human body into the premises for embalming and shipment out. The purpose of bringing the bodies onto the premises is not to 'store' them but to prepare them for burial or cremation.

In our view that is a correct interpretation of the words "processing" and "storage" in light of all the circumstances.

[para10] We also agree with Madam Justice Newbury when she said:

I should also note the argument made by Mr. Fraser during the August hearing that the words "purposes permitted by the municipality" in paragraph 7(b) of the scheme indicate that the draftsman intended the uses permitted under the building scheme to be coextensive with those contained in the municipal zoning by-law from time to time. Since the by-law in force at the time expressly permitted the operation of "crematoriums and mortuaries" under the "light industrial" classification, he argues that it can be inferred that the draftsman had no intention of prohibiting such uses.

The obvious response to this argument, of course, is that if that had been the intention of the draftsman, the first four lines of paragraph 7(b) of the scheme would have been completely superfluous.

[para11] We do not agree, however, that the words "permitted by the Municipality are intended to modify only the phrase "and development purposes". However, that difference does not in any way affect the conclusion to which we have just referred.

[para12] We are in substantial agreement with the balance of the reasons of Madam Justice Newbury and would dismiss the appeal.

[para13] The pronouncement of judgment on this appeal was postponed until June 30, 1994 to give the appellants time within which to comply with the terms of the injunction, or to apply to the trial court to relax its terms so that the appellants could fulfill their contractual obligations before ceasing its business on the premises. Esther Ruth Dirksen, claimant, and Jess Chi Shum Au, Alice Tai Png Au and Francis Cheung, defendants

Vancouver Registry No. C94-07297

British Columbia Provincial Court (Civil Division) Vancouver, British Columbia Martinson Prov. Ct. J. Heard: November 28, 1996. Judgment: filed December 18, 1996.

Counsel: Esther Dirksen, appeared in person. R. Press, for Mr. Au and Mrs. Au. Shannon M. Larter, for Francis Cheung.

[para1] MARTINSON PROV. CT. J.:-- This is a claim by Esther Dirksen for deceit or alternatively fraudulent, negligent or innocent misrepresentation, against Jess Chi Shum Au, Alice Tai Png Au and Francis Cheung, the listing real estate agent. Ms. Dirksen purchased a condominium in April, 1994 from Mr. and Mrs. Au. They did not disclose any water damage problems to her. Neither did Mr. Cheung. Mr. and Mrs. Au completed a Disclosure Statement on February 8, 1994 with the assistance of Mr. Cheung. The following two questions in the Disclosure Statement were answered "no":

K. Are you aware of any damage due to wind, fire, water?

M. Are you aware of any roof leakage or unrepaired damage?

[para2] Shortly after the purchase Ms. Dirksen had recurring water problems. Investigation revealed that the property had been originally listed in the Spring of 1993 and since then had twice been taken off the market due to water damage. The last time was in November, 1993. Mr. and Mrs. Au were also having considerable difficulty selling the property. The evidence showed that when water problems were discovered Mr. Au contracted the Strata Corporation to arrange to have the problems fixed. Steps were taken by the Strata Corporation to do repairs.

[para3] In February, 1994 Mr. and Mrs. Au replaced the carpet. Mr. Au said that this was done to make the unit sell better as the carpet was old and it would also make the unit look bigger. He said that potential buyers complained about the small size of the kitchen. The carpet installer was called as a witness to say that he didn't see any rotting. Ms. Dirksen said that she discovered plastic stuffed between the wall and floor.

[para4] Ms. Dirksen sold the property at a profit in the spring of 1995. She outlined a number of renovations she completed which added to the value of the property. When she listed the property on February 15, 1995 she also answered "no" to the same two questions on the Disclosure Statement. However, she starred each and said: "Floor and deck leaks were repaired in the fall of 94. No further leaks have since occurred. Invoices are available".

DISCUSSION

[para5] I will first consider whether there has been a negligent misrepresentation. In Brar et al. v. Mutti, [1994] B.C.J. No. 2426, B.C.S.C., October 24, 1994, New Westminster Registry No. C914347, Davies J. considered the requirements of an action for negligent misrepresentation set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Queen v. Cognos Inc. (1993), 99 D.L.R. (4th) 626 (S.C.C.) They are: (1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee; (2) the representation must be untrue, inaccurate or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making the misrepresentation; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on the negligent misrepresentation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted. All five criteria must be established. (1) Duty of Care

[para6] Proximity was an issues. There was a sufficient relationship of proximity to create a duty of care between Ms. Dirksen and Mr. and Mrs. Au. It was argued that there was not a sufficient relationship of proximity to create a duty of care between Ms. Dirksen and Mr. Cheung. Mr. Cheung had not met the Claimant and had no communication with her. He was not asked about water problems by her or her agent.

[para7] In Bango v. Holt et al B.C.S.C. [1971] 5 W.W.R. 522 it was decided that a quasi-fiduciary relationship between a potential purchaser and real estate agent can arise under the doctrine of Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller. In this case Mr. Cheung was the listing agent who showed the property and had considerable knowledge about the water problems, to the extent that he had to remove the property from the market twice. He assisted in the completion of the Disclosure Statement. He dealt with Ms. Dirksen's agent. In these circumstances there is sufficient proximity to create a duty of care.

(2) A misrepresentation that is untrue, inaccurate or misleading

[para8] Were there representations? In Brar et al v. Mutti B.C.S.C., October 21, 1994, New Westminster Registry No. C914347, Davies J. found that silence can be a negligent misrepresentation. Neither the owners nor Mr. Cheung mentioned the water damage to either Ms. Dirksen or her agent. The defendants collaborated in the writing of the Disclosure Statement. Both those actions amounted to representations that there were no water problems. The fact that the Disclosure Statement was not incorporated into the contract does not make the content any less a representation.

[para9] Were the representations untrue, inaccurate or misleading? In my view they were untrue, inaccurate and misleading. I am satisfied that the leakage and water damage problems experienced by Mr. and Mrs. Au were major. Ms. Dirksen has the onus of proving there is a nexus between the water problems that she had and those experienced by Mr. and Mrs. Au. Ms. Dirksen gave extensive evidence about the nature and location of the leaks she had and the times when they occurred. That evidence, combined with the evidence as to the nature of and timing of the water problems Mr. Au and Mrs. Au had, makes it more likely than not that they are related.

[para10] The defendants did not call evidence to rebut that evidence. In the absence of expert evidence to the contrary I am satisfied that the leaks were related. I was referred to the case of Haag et al v. Marshall B.C.C.A. 61 D.L.R. (4th) 371. In that case no satisfactory evidence of causation was presented when it could have been. In this case I have found that there was satisfactory evidence of causation.

(3) The representor must have acted negligently in making the misrepresentation

[para11] The defects causing the water problems were latent defects. In Gronua v. Schlamp Investments Ltd.; Canada Trust Co., Third Party 52 D.L.R. (3d) 631 Manitoba Queen's Bench, Solomon J. said at p. 636 that "latent defects are those not readily apparent to the purchaser during ordinary inspection of the property he proposes to buy". The defects in this case were ones that would not be obvious to Ms. Dirksen and her bother-in-law at the time they viewed the property.

[para12] Viewing the actions of the defendants most favourably, it was unduly optimistic in the circumstances to represent that there were no water problems. There was no suggestion that any of the defendants have an expertise in the detection and repair of water damage. No expert evidence was called on behalf of any of the defendants to support the view that the tests that were conducted and the repairs that were done did in fact solve the problem.

[para13] Because of the history of the water problems and their lack of expertise it was not reasonable to answer "no" on the Disclosure Statement. The Defendants were much more concerned about selling a property that had been on the market for nearly a year than they were in accurately representing the state of affairs with respect to water problems. Ms. Dirksen was misled by this absence of disclosure. Failure to make disclosure was negligent.

[para14] This case is different on its facts from those being considered by Mr. Justice Boyle in Arsenault v. Pederson B.C.S.C. Boyle J., [1996] B.C.J. No. 1026. The repairs in that case were distant in time and did not occur during the course of unsuccessful efforts to sell the property.

(4) The representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on the negligent misrepresentation

[para15] I am satisfied that Ms. Dirksen saw the Disclosure Statement before she removed the inspection condition. If the Disclosure Statement had disclosed the problem she would not have removed the condition. Even in the absence of a Disclosure Statement, I am satisfied that she would not have purchased the unit if she had been told about water problems.

(5) The reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damage resulted.

[para16] I am satisfied based on the evidence presented that Ms. Dirksen suffered damage as a result of the negligent misrepresentation. The value of the property would have been from 7% to 10% less with the water damage. She paid $182,000.00. I assess the actual value at $167,000.00. [para17] The misrepresentation must be material. In C.R.F. Holdings Ltd., Comor Supplies Ltd. and Faessler v. Fundy Chemical International Limited and Smerchanski 33 B.C.L.R. 291, B.C.C.A., Craig J.A. discussed the importance of a representation being material, not merely an incidental factor. He quoted Hinchey v. Gonda [1955] O.W.N. 125 (H.C.) where it was said at p. 127:

A misrepresentation, to be material, must be one necessarily influencing and inducing the transaction and affecting and going to its very essence and substance. Misrepresentations which are of such a nature as, if true, to add substantially to the value of the property, or are calculated to increase substantially its apparent value, are material.

In my view the misrepresentations in this case meet that test.

CONCLUSION

[para18] There will therefore be a Payment Order against all three defendants, jointly and severally for $10,000.00, interest pursuant to the Court Order Interest Act from April 9, 1994 and filing and service costs of $150.00.

Vancouver Registry No. A941209

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Allan J. Heard: December 10th, 1996. Judgment: filed January 8, 1997.

Counsel: J.C. Grauer, for the plaintiff. P.A. Spencer, for the defendants, Sills, Leach and Gardner. A. Wade, for the defendant, Fawcett. R. De Filippi, for the Third Parties.

[para1] ALLAN J.:-- The plaintiff Corporation of the District of North Vancouver ("the District") seeks to enforce a portion of a covenant granted under s. 215 of the Land Title Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 219 ("the Covenant"), and registered against strata lots owned by the defendants in a residential building known as Carlton At The Club ("the Building"). Paragraph 4(e) of that Covenant contains an age restriction which requires each suite to be occupied as a residential unit for a single household comprised only of persons over 19 years and including at least one "Older Citizen". An Older Citizen is described as a person who is at least 50 years of age. The age restriction does not apply to ownership of the units. [para2] Pursuant to Rule 18A, the District seeks a declaration as to the legal enforceability of the age restrictions in the Covenant. The following issues fall to be determined on this application:

(1) whether the age restriction in the Covenant is discriminatory and contravenes s. 5 of the Human Rights Act S.B.C. 1984, c. 22; (2) whether the age restriction is intra vires or ultra vires the powers of the District; (3) whether the Covenant is obsolete and should be cancelled pursuant to the provisions of s. 31 of the Property Law Act R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 340.

[para3] It was agreed that this application would deal only with those questions. Other issues raised by the defendants in the action, including estoppel, acquiescence, and reliance on the plaintiff's actions or inaction, were not argued on this application.

Background: [para4] In April 1988, the third party, Co-operators General Insurance Company, and the North Shore Winter Club approached the District with a proposal to develop land occupied by the Club. The proposal included the construction of a residential building for rental occupation by "active senior citizens" who would become members of the Club and the provision of "congregate care". Congregate care involves services for senior citizens who do not require physical care but share communal and activity needs. The plan envisaged the tenants joining the Club which would provide them with certain services, including food services.

[para5] The land was not zoned for the proposed Building. On August 17, 1989, following public hearings and a review process, the District approved the necessary rezoning and entered into an Agreement and s. 215 Covenant with the Club and the Developer. In 1990, the third party Marksearch Properties Ltd. became a partner in the development. On February 15, 1990, the Developers wrote to the District "to reaffirm our unswerving commitment to stand by the restrictions set out in the Section 215 Covenant for this proposal." [para6] Subsequently, the Developers sought the stratification of the building to individual strata lots instead of rental units. The District approved that conversion in January 1992. At the same time, the Developers also sought the elimination of the age restriction in the Covenant. The District considered that request but rejected it for a number of reasons: the Developers were fully aware of the age restrictions when they entered into the project; the original premise was to provide relatively affordable housing for older people; and a reduced parking ratio had been approved on the basis that senior units would generate less demand for parking.

[para8] The defendants Ms. Sills, Ms. Leach, and Mr. Gardner purchased their units in 1992. Ms. Sills and Ms. Leach, who are under the age of 50, occupy their suites. Mr. Gardner and his wife, who are both over the age of 50, purchased their suite as an investment with the intention of renting it but encountered difficulties finding a tenant who satisfied the age requirements imposed by the Covenant. Mr. Gardner was informed by the advertising department of a local newspaper that his proposed advertisement was unacceptable if it restricted the age of potential tenants. The defendant Ms. Fawcett purchased her unit in 1993. She is under 50 and resides in her suite.

Whether the Covenant is discriminatory and contravenes the Human Rights Act:

[para9] The Covenant prohibits occupation of the residential units by persons under the age of 19 or persons over 19 but less than 50 unless they live there with at least one other person aged 50 or over.

[para10] The Human Rights Act, as amended, defines "age" as "an age of 19 years or more and less than 65 years". Age is not an enumerated ground of discrimination with respect to the purchase of property under s. 4. Section 5 deals with the issue of discrimination in rental premises. At the time the Covenant was registered, age was not a prohibited basis of discrimination under that Act. The relevant portions of s. 5 now provide:

S. 5 (1) No person shall

(a) deny to a person or class of persons the right to occupy, as a tenant, space that is represented as being available for occupancy by a tenant, or

(b) discriminate against a person or class of persons with respect to a term or condition of the tenancy of the space, because of the . . . age of that person or class of persons

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply (b) as it relates to . . . age, (i) if the space is a rental unit in residential premises in which every rental unit is reserved for rental to a person 55 years of age or older or to 2 or more persons, at least one of whom is 55 years of age or older, or

(ii) a rental unit in a prescribed class of residential premises, and

(c) as it relates to a physical or mental disability, if

(i) the space is a rental unit in residential premises,

(ii) the rental unit and the residential premises of which the rental unit forms part,

(A) are designed to accommodate persons with disabilities, and

(B) conform to the prescribed standards, and

(iii) the rental unit is offered for rent exclusively to a person with a disability or to 2 or more persons at least one of whom has a physical or mental disability, as the case may be. (emphasis added)

[para11] Section 5(2)(b)(i) is not applicable. Mr. Grauer, counsel for the District, submits that the units in the Building fall within "a prescribed class of residential premises" within s. 5(2)(b)(ii) because they are "prescribed" in the Covenant. Counsel for the defendants say that such a class cannot be prescribed by Covenant but must be "prescribed" by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Section 24 of the Act provides:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations including but not limited to regulations prescribing the standards for the purpose of section 5.

[para12] I am unable to accept the plaintiff's interpretation that s. 24 applies only to s. 5(2)(c)(ii)(B) which refers specifically to "prescribed standards" and not to s. 5(2)(b)(ii). Mr. de Filippi, counsel for the third parties, who took no position on this application, directed the Court's attention to s. 29 of the Interpretation Act which provides that in an enactment, "'prescribed' means prescribed by regulation." The Lieutenant Governor in Council has not made regulations prescribing standards relating to the Building. Accordingly, I conclude that the strata lots are not "in a prescribed class of residential purposes" and that neither of the exemptions provided by s. 5(2) are applicable.

[para13] Mr. Spencer, counsel for the defendants Sills and Leach, submits that the restrictive Covenant violates s. 5(1) of the Act insofar as it requires an owner offering his or her unit for rent to discriminate against potential renters on the basis of age.

[para15] The Covenant did not breach the Act when it was registered. However, there is no question that the conduct of the owners of the units, if they choose to rent their premises, is subject to the subsequent amendments which prohibit discrimination on the basis of age. I conclude that the Act does not require that the age restriction in the Covenant be struck (or read down in particular instances to permit the owners to rent their units to persons under the age of 50). Instead, the owners are burdened with the obligation of complying with both the Covenant and the Act. Is the portion of the Covenant which purports to impose an age restriction on occupancy of the units ultra vires the powers of the District?

[para16] The relevant portions of s. 215 of the Land Title Act provides as follows: s. 215(1) A covenant described in subsection (1.1) in favour of . . . a municipality . . . as covenantee, may be registered against the title to the land subject to the covenant and is enforceable against the covenantor and the successors in title of the covenantor

(1.1) A covenant registrable under subsection (1) may be of a negative or positive nature and may include one or more of the following provisions:

(a) provisions in respect of

(i) the use of land, or (ii) the use of a building on or to be erected on land.

[para17] The defendants submit that the age restrictions in the Covenant are ultra vires the power of the District because they go beyond the restrictions imposed by the Rezoning By-law and exceed the authority of s. 215 of the Land Title Act.

[para19] Should the terms of the Covenant be restricted to the narrow compass of the relevant bylaws which govern the use of land? The wording of s. 215 of the Land Title Act envisages a restrictive covenant governing the use of land or "a building". The issue then becomes whether "the use of a building" can include the age of its occupants or is restricted to such things as commercial, industrial, or residential use of the property. The defendants submit that the District has the power to regulate the "use" of the land or the building but not to regulate the identity of the users.

[para20] In Faminow v. Corporation of District of North Vancouver (1988), 24 B.C.L.R. (2d) 49, the Court of Appeal allowed the District's appeal from a decision quashing a zoning by-law governing the use of single-family residential buildings. Relying on the authority of Bell v. The Queen, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 212, the chambers judge in Faminow had held that the District's power to regulate "use" did not empower it to regulate who, or how many persons, could occupy a unit. In Bell, the Court held that a by-law which restricted occupation to "family" and then defined "family" by reference to consanguinity, marriage and adoption only, was invalid.

[para21] In Faminow, the Court of Appeal held that the by-law in question was not unreasonable or inequitable in its consequences and ought not to have been quashed. According the District had not exceeded its powers in enacting it. The Court preferred the reasoning in Smith v. Tiny (1980), 27 O.R. (2d) 690 [affirmed 29 O.R. (2d) 661, leave to appeal to the S.C.C. refused 29 O.R. (2d) 661n.] In Smith, the Court concluded that the decision in Bell "must be interpreted in light of the particular by-law prohibition in issue in the case and the court's conclusion as to the unreasonable and inequitable consequences which flow from it."

[para22] In this case, the issue is whether the District had the power to impose the age restrictions in the Covenant rather than in a zoning by-law. I was not referred to any cases dealing with the powers of a municipality to govern the uses of land or buildings by covenant. However, I see no reason why the District's powers incorporated in a covenant pursuant to s. 215 of the Land Title Act should be more restricted than its authority to enact by-laws under s. 963(1)(c) of the Municipal Act which regulate, within a zone, the use of land, buildings and structures.

[para23] While many of the present owners are unhappy with the age restriction, it appears that the majority purchased their units on the basis of that restriction. Similarly, while some of the defendants may argue (in another forum) that they were given to understand the age restrictions would be removed or not enforced, there was no evidence before me that any of them were unaware of the Covenant. I do not consider the age restriction which is designed to create a community of older people to be unreasonable or inequitable. I conclude that the terms of the Covenant do not exceed the powers of the District.

Is the Covenant obsolete?

[para24] Section 31 of the Property Law Act provides:

(1) A person interested in land may apply to the Supreme Court for an order to modify or cancel a charge or interest against the land, registered . . . and being . . . a restrictive or other covenant

(2) The Court may make an order sought under subsection (1) on being satisfied that the application is not premature in the circumstances, and that

(a) by reason of changes in the character of the land, the neighbourhood or other circumstances the court considers material, the registered charge or interest is obsolete;

(b) the reasonable use of the land will be impeded, without practical benefit to others, if the registered charge or interest is not modified or cancelled; . . . (d) modification or cancellation will not injure the person entitled to the benefit of the registered charge or interest; or

(e) the registered instrument is invalid, unenforceable or has expired, and its registration should be cancelled.

[para25] Mr. Wade submits that the Covenant is obsolete because of numerous changes in the character of the land. For example, the concepts of affordable rental housing for seniors and congregate care were abandoned and anyone can now purchase the units; the Building was stratified in contrast to the original proposal of rental housing; and the concept of linking a congregate care facility with the Club's dining facilities was abandoned.

[para26] A judicial finding that those changes have rendered the Covenant obsolete would, in my respectful view, make a mockery of the municipal approval process. The Developers proposed the concept of seniors' housing and the District granted the necessary rezoning and building permits on the basis of the anticipated social benefits flowing from that concept. The Developers received certain concessions, such as reduced parking capacity, on the basis that seniors would require less parking spaces. In my respectful opinion, public policy mitigates against a conclusion that developers may receive benefits and concessions on the basis that they will construct a specific project with agreed-upon restrictions, and then have the restrictions removed because they had constructed a different project.

[para27] I would not cancel or modify the Covenant pursuant to s. 31 of the Property Law Act.

[para28] In summary, I have reached the following conclusions:

(1) the age restriction in the Covenant is not discriminatory and does not contravene the Human Rights Act; (2) the age restriction is intra vires the powers of the District; and (3) the Covenant is not obsolete and should not be struck pursuant to s. 31 of the Property Law Act. ALLAN J.

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Taylor J. Heard: November 27-December 1, December 4-8, 11-15, 18-22, 1995; January 15-19, 22-24 and March 4, 1996. Judgment: filed November 22, 1996.

Counsel: H.W. Wiebach and P.E. Norell, for the plaintiff, Pinewood Recording Studios Ltd. C.A. Wallace, for the defendants. C.G. Haddock, for the third parties. L.M. Candido, for the plaintiff, Grimham Enterprises Ltd.

[Ed. note: A Corrigendum was released by the Court December 9, 1996; the correction has been made to the text and the Corrigendum is appended to this document.]

[para1] TAYLOR J.A.:-- This is an action about sound, its production, propagation and effects.

[para2] These two actions were heard together by way of a Consent Order made December 28th, 1994. The first is a claim by Pinewood Recording Studios Ltd. ("Pinewood") against City Tower Development Corp. ("City"), Ledcor Industries Ltd. ("Ledcor") and LMT Construction Ltd. ("LMT"). All of the third party proceedings as between the defendants in the first action were discontinued shortly before the trial pursuant to an agreement by which all of those defendants were represented by the same counsel. All defenants and third parties in both actions are represented by the same counsel. By agreement of counsel it is not necessary to distinguish between the remaining defendants and/or third parties in terms of any division of liability nor any third party claims over. Collectively, therefore, they will be referred to as the defendants unless specifically identified.

[para3] Pinewood seeks damages against the defendants in nuisance, negligence and trespass. Simply stated the general issue is whether the defendants took reasonable steps in the construction of a residential tower to avoid unreasonable levels of sound and debris intruding into Pinewood's recording studio located at 1119 Homer Street, in the City of Vancouver ("the Premises").

[para4] The second action is a claim by Grimham Enterprises Ltd. ("Grimham") for rent unpaid by Pinewood from August 1st, 1993 to July 31st, 1994 in the agreed amount of $299,021.33 together with interest on arrears provided for in Pinewood's lease less any abatement that Pinewood is entitled to by reason of the premises being unusable for the purposes for which Pinewood had leased them. The defendants are third parties in this action. As in the first action, by agreement of counsel it is not necessary to distinguish between the defendants as third parties in terms of any third party claims over.

[para5] Pinewood's alter ego and directing mind is Geoffrey Turner. Mr. Turner has been involved in the development and operation of sound recording studios since 1957. In 1976 Pinewood leased the Premises and under Mr. Turner's direction Pinewood developed it into two studios. In 1989 Pinewood entered into a further lease with Grimham for 1111 Homer Street, a portion of which was being used as administrative offices and the rest of which was either vacant or sublet to other tenants. The purpose of this additional space was to provide for future expansion of the operations of Pinewood.

[para6] Although not qualified as an expert in terms of sound and its transmission, Mr. Turner, who has had much practical experience, described his requirements for a sound recording studio as being a structure that provides an acoustical environment in which sound can be produced and recorded free from outside interference. A studio must be colourless in terms of other sound and the aim of construction is not so much to sound proof, a feat that is impossible, as it is to reduce the transmission of sound from outside to inside or vice versa.

[para8] The development of these studios involved the construction of a free standing room within the building itself. That room was detached from the exterior walls of the structure by an air gap of 1 inch to 2 inches. The walls of the studios were comprised of a series of layers including drywall, insulation and sound board panelling, the final and interior layer of which was covered with a variety of materials to reduce sound transmission.

[para9] The flooring of the studios consisted of a layer of sand sandwiched between two layers of concrete and was covered with a neoprene-like carpet. Upon this carpet was then built a series of rising steps which were designed to trap sound within the studio.

[para10] The ceiling consisted of joists, the undersides of which were covered with a material and on top of which were laid fibreglass insulation. Above this was the roof of the building.

[para11] In this generally described manner both Studios A and B were constructed in 1976.

[para12] The exterior south wall of Studio B lay along the property line adjoining the site owned by City, upon which a tower complex was to be built by Ledcor.

[para13] The exterior south wall of the Premises was constructed of masonry brick and mortar. In some areas the mortar on the exterior surface had been scraped off and was flush with the blocks. In other areas the mortar had not been scraped off and it protruded by reason of the weight of blocks laid upon the mortar during construction. In 1976 the interior side of this wall was clean of any protruding mortar. Both Mr. Vassallo and Mr. Turner inspected the wall prior to the studio construction and neither found any cracks in the wall. All debris or loose material was cleaned off before construction.

[para15] In 1986 the nature of the work being done in Studio B changed to what is described as post-production work on films. This work involved the replacement of dialogue on films recorded on location. This process, known as audio dialogue replacement ("ADR"), is to eliminate extraneous sounds that may have been picked up during the filming on location. As well, other sounds are then mixed onto the film track.

[para19] In order to accommodate this ADR work renovations to Studio B were necessary. In 1986 under Mr. Turner's direction, Mr. Vassallo removed the interior walls of Studio B.

[para20] The evidence of both Turner and Vassallo, which I accept, was that after the internal walls were removed the interior south wall was without cracks or water stains and there was no debris found at its base. All that could be observed was some dust.

[para21] Again in a somewhat similar manner to the 1976 construction the walls were rebuilt. An air gap was left between the masonry wall and the first interior wall so that there was no contact between the two. A series of attached walls were then constructed and surfaced with materials that deadened or trapped internally created sound.

[para22] As well, the interior of Studio B was built to accommodate a large screen and speakers. A control booth outside but visible to the studio was constructed to provide sound isolation so that any equipment noise in the studio would not be recorded in the control booth.

[para23] Mr. Turner and Mr. Vassallo testified that no nails were used in this construction. Walls were assembled and drywall and sound board were attached by using screws and glue. The purpose of this was to provide rigidity to suppress any reverberations caused by loud sound.

[para25] The floor was rebuilt to provide a series of sound traps designed to absorb sound created in the studio.

[para26] The ceiling was also reconstructed, changing the direction of joists, laying down plywood and then 60 inches of fibreglass insulation which was crushed to 50 inches in depth.

[para27] Changes were also made to the electrical wiring to ensure radio transmissions were not recorded and the interior surface of the walls was painted with a conductive paint so as to obscure any cellular phone transmissions.

[para28] The result, Mr. Turner testified, was a studio in which the work of Pinewood could be done without outside interference.

[para29] Decibels ("db") are the measure of loudness of sound. Steven Coomb, an expert who testified as to noise control measures, describes it as being a logarithmic scale similar to the Richter scale used to measure earthquakes. Small changes in db measurements result in substantial differences in loudness. An example is that a 10 db change is a change of some 50% in loudness.

[para30] Decibels are measured on two scales: Scale A, which is the approximate average likeness to what humans hear, and Scale C, which is a reading without bias. C Scales are used to provide a common basis to rate equipment in the "sound business". Measurements referred in these reasons are on the C Scale.

[para31] In August of 1991 Robert Strachan, an electrical engineer, conducted an assessment of traffic noises for City pursuant to the requirements of the City of Vancouver. He determined that for an 18 minute period at 1:30 p.m. on August 16th, 1991 the average ambient traffic noise at a location near City's premises was 65.5 db.

[para34] Mr. Turner instructed Mr. Strachan to take the sound measurements in February of 1992 so that he would have a starting reference point for what in February of 1992 he viewed as the potential interference with Pinewood's operation that might develop as a result of the construction of the tower complex on the City site.

[para35] Beyond these measures, neither Pinewood nor its landlord, Grimham, took any steps to physically protect the building other than engaging in discussions and correspondence to which I shall subsequently refer.

[para36] In 1991 Turner became aware of the potential development on the City property, as a consequence of soil testing being done on the site. Mr. Don Ho who, together with his wife, is the owner of City testified that in 1991 he began the process of public hearings to obtain a permit to construct the tower complex. Pinewood was never notified of these hearings. However, on December 12th, 1990 Pinewood's solicitor at the time, Mr. Flader, wrote to City's architect expressing the concerns of Pinewood as to the potential effects of construction of the tower complex upon Pinewood's operation. In his representations to the City of Vancouver, Mr. Ho did not provide the City with a copy of that letter nor did he make the City of Vancouver aware of the concerns of Pinewood. Rather he informed its staff that neighbourhood residents and property owners were in favour of the development.

[para37] On September 27th, 1991 Grimham's property manager, Knowlton Realty, wrote to Mr. Ho reiterating the concerns of Pinewood as to the effects of demolition upon its operation. By that time City had entered into a contract with Ledcor for the development and construction of the tower complex. That construction contract was described by Mr. Ho as being one of a "guaranteed maximum price". Later the terms of that contract were varied to provide a cost-savings sharing arrangement.

[para38] On December 19th, 1991 Turner and Mr. Ho met for the first time in Pinewood Studio. Along with Mr. Ho was a Mr. Johnson of Ledcor. Both Mr. Ho and Mr. Turner testified in this trial. Mr. Johnson was not called.

[para39] Mr. Ho agrees that at that meeting he was informed of three concerns of Pinewood being: (1) dust; (2) noise in the studio; and (3) the manner of construction of the studio and the need to preserve air gaps between outer and interior walls.

[para40] There is a conflict between the evidence of Mr. Turner and Mr. Ho as to what was discussed beyond those three general areas. Mr. Turner testified that he asked that the wall of the building next to the studio be demolished by hand and that plywood be erected as a "first line of defence against sound." He said he requested of Mr. Ho that, when City's northern wall was about to be built, a covering of neoprene be laid against the wall. He testified that he offered to contribute to the cost of these measures. He did not, he said, receive any agreement on his requests and he had the sense that Mr. Ho and Mr. Johnson were maybe listening to his concerns without any commitment.

[para41] Mr. Ho denies these aspects were discussed. Mr. Ho described himself as being a chartered engineer who has for himself and others built numerous buildings in Canada over the past 13 years. He testified that the term "neoprene" was new to him. Mr. Ho testified that Mr. Turner requested access to the City site be kept as far away from Pinewood Studio as possible. He also testified that Mr. Turner informed him that while passing trucks would cause Pinewood no interference, trucks idling directly outside may. This latter aspect, he agrees, was raised in the context of an assertion by Mr. Turner that low frequency sounds caused more trouble to the studio than high frequency sounds. Mr. Ho said he did not believe this assertion. Mr. Ho and Mr. Turner agree that there was some discussion about scheduling the work of construction to accommodate Pinewood's recording schedules. Apart from that, Mr. Ho says that Mr. Turner was not interested in what City or Ledcor could do for him but merely wished to express his concerns.

[para42] Having heard both Mr. Turner and Mr. Ho I am satisfied the suggestions of Mr. Turner in terms of steps to be taken with respect to plywood and neoprene were, in fact, made. In his examination for discovery at Q.275-286 Mr. Ho, when asked about Mr. Turner's suggestion that the wall be demolished by hand, responded that he did not recall that being discussed. At trial he testified that he did recall a consideration of demolition by hand. His further response in cross-examination was "I did not instruct Ledcor to get quotes for demolition by hand, I left it as a construction matter to Ledcor."

[para44] I have little confidence in the evidence of Mr. Ho where it conflicts with that of Mr. Turner unless supported by others. I conclude that Mr. Turner, in fact, did raise the concerns that I have referred to in the meeting of December 1991.

[para45] Mr. Ho's approach to this project was that as long as whatever Mr. Turner requested was not an unusual method of construction and did not interfere abnormally, he was prepared to accommodate him. In short, Mr. Ho was going to build as it suited himself.

[para47] It was argued by the plaintiffs that this was because City was negotiating a guaranteed maximum price contract with Ledcor. Little evidence was led in this respect. However, by the time of the December 1991 meeting, Ledcor was without question aware of the nature of both Pinewood's business and the construction of the studio. I am satisfied that following the December 19th, 1991 meeting both City and Ledcor, through their representatives, were aware of the studio, its construction and the concerns for the maintenance of that state of construction.

[para48] Over the Christmas period of 1991 Mr. Turner recognized the problems that he would face during construction and decided to attempt to relocate some of his operations to a studio in North Vancouver. This relocation decision was made because of the ADR work being done on demand by Pinewood's clients and the fact that Mr. Turner could not, in his opinion, tolerate the interruptions he expected from even an accommodating neighbour. As history would prove to Mr. Turner, while the North Vancouver studio provided an environment free from interruptions, the viability of that studio was limited by reason of its location.

[para49] Having heard nothing from Mr. Ho as a consequence of the December 1991 meeting Mr. Turner wrote to him on January 13th, 1992 and followed up with various phone calls, none of which were responded to. On February the 18th he had sound testing done by Mr. Strachan and on February 19th he had a solicitor write a letter to Mr. Ho which in part stated:

While my client is greatly concerned about the potential adverse effect upon his premises and business, he does not wish to be uncooperative. We would like you to take whatever steps may be required to prevent any potentially adverse impact on our client's premises and business.

That correspondence is of some consequence relating to the context of the September 18th, 1991 letter from Mr. Turner to Grimham's Property Manager, Knowlton Realty, a copy of which letter was provided to Mr. Ho with Knowlton's September 27, 1991 letter. In the September 18 letter, Mr. Turner stated:

The studio design called for a 1" air gap between the studio wall and the outside wall for isolation. If this gap is bridged by falling debris, caused by vibration or sudden shock, the effectiveness of the isolation will be reduced to a point where we will be able to hear traffic in the studio under normal conditions. It will be extremely difficult to fix this problem, because it will require major construction inside the facility, which will shut us down for several weeks.

At that point in time only the most unusual of noises such as an overhead clap of thunder or a siren directly outside the studio could be heard inside. Certainly, the ambient noises recorded by Mr. Strachan on August 16, 1991 did not penetrate the studio.

[para50] A further meeting was held on March 3rd, 1992. Again Mr. Ho and Mr. Johnson attended at Pinewood Studios. Mr. Turner toured them again through Pinewood Studios and reiterated to Mr. Ho those concerns that he had expressed in the December 1991 meeting. Mr. Turner testified that he sensed a lack of interest by both Mr. Ho and Mr. Johnson. Certainly, none of the requests of Mr. Turner either made in the December 1991 meeting or reiterated in the March 1992 meeting were acted upon.

[para51] Shortly after the March meeting Mr. Ho approached Mr. Turner to seek permission to drill under the Premises to secure anchor bolts necessary for the construction of foundations. Grimham had left that decision to Pinewood. Mr. Turner testified that he "gave him permission to drill if he would accept responsibility for any damage". Mr. Ho, according to Mr. Turner, did not respond to this caveat and merely insisted that Mr. Turner sign a document giving Pinewood's consent to the drilling. Turner declined to sign on those terms and that position was confirmed in a letter to Ledcor's solicitors dated May 1st, 1992.

[para52] Because Mr. Ho would not accept the caveat attached to the permission it was necessary to revise the plans to provide a different manner of construction. This caused both delay and some expense to the project as it required a stepping of foundation descending an additional level into the ground to attain the required number of parking stalls.

[para53] The significance of all of this in terms of Pinewood is that it caused a distinct negative shift in City's attitude towards Pinewood. City's reluctance to accommodate Pinewood was exemplified as late as 1994 by City's refusal to permit Pinewood to go onto the City site to conduct sound testing in order to confirm that repair work, which I shall subsequently discuss, had been successful. The reason given by Mr. Ho and his solicitors for this refusal can only be described as puerile. Likewise, when later faced with the problem of sound bridging caused during construction by debris and cement deposited between the north wall of the City tower and Pinewood's south wall, the response of Mr. Ho was "I did not give Ledcor instructions. It was up to Turner to tell exactly what he wanted removed." Given that Mr. Turner had made it explicitly clear as to what he thought was wrong that answer is specious at best.

[para54] Finally, Mr. Ho testified that he stopped "dealing reasonably with Mr. Turner" because of what he perceived was Turner's blackmailing demand for $300,000.00 and because Turner had said that if it wasn't paid "He'd make my life miserable." It was the view of Mr. Ho that this was the amount of money demanded by Turner for a consent to drill under the Pinewood Studio. Mr. Turner agrees that he may well have demanded that sum but it was for compensation of the loss which he contemplated arising by reason of his having to move a portion of his business to North Vancouver.

[para55] On April 9th, 1992 Mr. Johnson of Ledcor notified Pinewood that demolition of the buildings on the City site would occur between April 15th and May 15th and he requested a copy of Pinewood's recording schedule. Dates were provided and assurances given to Pinewood that Ledcor would seek to "coordinate" activities with the schedule as far as practical. [para56] At this point in time Ledcor engaged Vince Kehoe to be site superintendent. As Mr. Turner testified he felt that now he had someone to whom he could talk. At that point Mr. Turner anticipated a period of three to four months of dust and noise during demolition and excavation but was of the view that once the wall on City's north side had been constructed "most of our problems would disappear." It had always been Mr. Turner's view that once the concrete wall was erected on City's north boundary it would improve his own studio's acoustical isolation. That theory was confirmed in the evidence of Mr. Yanchar and Mr. Keuhn.

[para57] Prior to demolition, plywood hoarding was erected around the site to protect the public. No instructions were given by either Mr. Ho or Mr. Johnson to Mr. Kehoe to cause any plywood to be placed between the Premises and the two-storey building to be demolished. Likewise, Pinewood did not take any action to protect itself in this respect nor did it take steps with respect to ensuring the dust that may have arisen during demolition did not interfere with its operations. The evidence is that the air conditioners for the Premises were equipped with filters. Demolition of the two-storey building next to Pinewood began on April 24th, 1992. Mr. Kehoe instructed those responsible for the demolition to simply "be careful" in reference to Pinewood's south wall.

[para58] The demolition was observed at various times by Mr. Kehoe and by Mr. Randy Kiss, an engineer at Pinewood. Mr. Kehoe testified that the north wall which was "slightly reinforced" was torn down by a backhoe operator in pieces. He, himself, did not see any contact with the Pinewood wall but he agreed that he was not constantly watching. Mr. Kiss observed an incident in which he saw a portion of the wall near Homer Street being pulled inward and breaking off causing the remainder to snap back beyond its previous position. He said he returned to Studio B expecting to find damage to the screen but was surprised to find none. He did not inspect the wall. He did not tell Mr. Turner about the incident until much later when in 1993 a step crack was located in the Premises' south masonry wall.

[para59] When Mr. Turner observed the step crack in 1993 he also observed masonry debris along a structural beam which ran perpendicular to the south wall. That beam led to a bathroom near the other side of the building where minor cracking was also observed.

[para60] A re-recording engineer, Mr. Hoogenboom, who worked freelance at Pinewood between 1990 and 1993 testified that up until he left in 1993 he felt thumps against the south wall and felt the building shake during construction. Brian Wilson, a structural engineer, made an inspection of the wall in 1992 following demolition. In the course of his inspection of Pinewood's south wall Mr. Wilson noted it had been painted. His evidence was that there was "nothing significant that I saw, no cracking that I can recall." However, Mr. Wilson agreed that he was not looking for cracks at the time. By the time the step crack was discovered, City's north wall had been constructed to a level above that of Pinewood's. I am satisfied that the step crack which has been described occurred in the circumstances described by Mr. Kiss. If I am incorrect in this finding, then at the very latest the crack occurred during construction in the circumstances described by Mr. Hoogenboom.

[para61] Mr. Kehoe testified that before demolition he could see between City's north and Pinewood's south walls which were approximately 2-1/2 inches apart and that he observed points of mortar contact between the two. The evidence given later with respect to examinations of the debris between the City's new north wall and the studio's south wall was that one could not look into the space which was then 6 inches wide without a high-intensity light. Mr. Kehoe further testified that he had taken photographs of his observations yet those photographs were never produced in evidence. I do not accept that there was contact between the old walls prior to demolition nor that the step crack could have existed prior to demolition.

[para62] During the demolition and subsequent excavation Mr. Turner and others noticed an increase in dust when changing air conditioning filters. Excavation was completed by October of 1992.

[para63] In mid-1992 construction began at the south end of City's site. During this initial period there was little disturbance of the operations at Pinewood. The staff of Pinewood communicated well with Mr. Kehoe's on-site office and I find that there was a genuine attempt by both to cooperate despite City's having to redesign its foundations. I pause to say here that despite my observations in respect of the failure of Mr. Ho and Mr. Johnson to adequately instruct Leducor on how to avoid interference with Pinewood's operations, Leducor was well served by Mr. Kehoe. Despite my rejection of his evidence with respect to mortar contacts between the old walls, Mr. Kehoe impressed me as a man who at least tried to accommodate Pinewood.

[para64] As the construction on the City site moved closer to Pinewood, Tracey Tomicki, who had established a good rapport with Mr. Kehoe and who had the major responsibility of dealing with Mr. Kehoe's office in terms of scheduling, left Pinewood's employment.

[para67] In July of 1992 prior to the commencement of construction, Brian Wilson, a civil engineer, who is an expert in geotechnical design and structural inspection and who, in fact, examined the south wall of Pinewood, was asked by Leducor to inspect the City site because of concern about vibrations caused by drilling anchor rods.

[para68] Based on his technician Brian Boltd's measurement, Mr. Wilson concluded any vibrations were below assessed construction noises as being marginally higher than levels capable of causing damage. Later in April of 1993 he background noises. Such an opinion is of little assistance as it represents only a snap-shot of a particular moment in time.

[para69] In December of 1992 Mr. Kehoe was aware that Pinewood had commenced these proceedings. Following February of 1993, after Ms. Tomicki's departure from Pinewood, Leducor was not provided with a written schedule of Pinewood's recording sessions; rather Mrs. Turner would call to inform Mr. Kehoe of recording sessions. Because of the nature of the construction, particularly concrete pours which had to be continuous, Pinewood often could not be accommodated.

[para71] The creation of the wall did not fulfill Mr. Turner's expectations. On inspection it was observed by Mr. Turner and others that pieces of wood appeared to be jammed between the two walls. The consequence of this was that sound was being transmitted from the construction site into Pinewood's external south wall.

[para76] Mr. Turner complained to Mr. Kehoe. Pieces of wood jammed between the walls were removed. However, there was no change within the studio.

[para77] As a consequence, a sound engineer, Allan Lees, was engaged by Ledcor to record sounds in Studio B while a hand drill was operated on the City property. These tests were conducted on June 8th - 10th, 1993. Mr. Lees reported to Mr. Kehoe that he thought "Much of the sound heard in the studio came through bridges and their removal would improve the situation." On June 21st, 1993 Ledcor cut five holes in City's north wall at the garage level. It then began to remove debris. In a report dated June 25th, 1993 Mr. Lees concluded that "Removal of the debris and concrete bridges between the adjoining walls was very effective in reducing transmission." He also concluded there were no airborne noises getting into Studio A or B.

[para78] In late June 1993 after the removal the debris, Mr. Kehoe and Mr. Turner examined the holes cut in City's wall. Mr. Turner poked into the remaining pea gravel and felt something hard. Mr. Kehoe assured him that it was "native soil."

[para79] The sound intrusions continued. Further material was removed and in July of 1993 Mr. Lees reported no further remedial work was necessary. He assumed all bridging material had been removed and there was nothing more to be done. History was to show Mr. Lees to be wrong again. Pinewood continued to be plagued by sound intrusion.

[para82] The significance of the sound bridging becomes clear upon reviewing the evidence of Carl Yanchar. He described the theory behind sound studio construction as being that one seeks to "split mass." If, however, one joins the air space between the two walls it is like returning to a single wall. His evidence was that where there are multiple points of contact, removal of individual points of contact will not substantially resolve the problem of sound transmission until the last point of contact has been eliminated.

[para83] The purpose of creating the air gap between the exterior and internal walls is to "minimize the effect by which the interior walls are set in motion by externally generated sound." Mr. Yanchar testified that the two principles of sound isolation are:

1. separation of mass, i.e. the walls; and
2. sealing on the walls.

[para84] Despite the interior air gap Mr. Yanchar opined that a 20 inch connection between two separated walls can reduce sound isolation by as much as 25 db. As one removes points of contact there will be a gradual minor improvement until the last point of contact is removed at which point significant improvement will be observed.

[para85] It was also Mr. Yanchar's view that cracks such as the step crack should not be ignored as they tend to grow. He expressed the view that a step crack is more significant in terms of loss of sound isolation than a linear crack. He also testified that the greater the width of the crack the greater will be the loss of sound isolation. Mr. Yanchar did not measure the step crack in width.

[para86] In February of 1994 Mr. Wilson inspected two cracks inside Pinewood's premises. The first was an old crack of no consequence to these proceeds. The second was the step crack located near the top of the south wall. He concluded that such a crack impairs structural functioning but would only be a matter of concern if it were 1 mm or greater in width. He estimated this crack to be approximately .1 mm in width but said that he could be off by up to 100%. He was unable to express an opinion on the acoustical effects of such a crack but agreed that a stiffer wall would provide more sound attenuation than one with a crack.

[para87] Mr. Larry Kinakin, an engineer, was retained by Ledcor to inspect the exterior of Pinewood's Studio for any cracks in June of 1992. He did observe a stepping crack in the area that has been described by others in this case but said that he would not comment on a minor crack caused by shrinkage. Mr. Kinakin did not examine the interior of Pinewood's Studio and nor did he measure the crack that he saw. At that point in time no one was aware of the step crack. I do not conclude from his evidence that the step crack in issue was caused by shrinkage.

[para88] When provided with a description of the manner in which Studio B's ceiling was constructed from bottom to top, Mr. Yanchar expressed the view that such a ceiling would have a sound attenuation of between 55 and 60 db. Thus, he concluded that rain could not be heard but thunder overhead directly might. Mr. Yanchar testified that assuming a floor rating of approximately 30 db such a ceiling and roof would provide a sound attenuation of between 85 and 90 db directly at the roof. Expressed conversely a sound would have to be in that range to be even heard in Studio B on the assumption that the source of the noise was directly at the roof level. It is to be recalled that the preconstruction and post repair measurements of Mr. Turner put the floor rating at between 30 and 32 db.

[para89] Mr. Yanchar said that in his visit to the studio in July of 1995, with the doors closed and listening for traffic sounds he could hear nothing. I am satisfied that on this and other evidence that normal traffic sounds could not be heard in the studio assuming that its sound attenuation was not compromised.

[para90] Despite Mr. Turner's protests, after July 1993 Ledcor took the position that it had removed the bridging material and that whatever intrusions were being heard by those in Studio B were no longer of its concern. In October of 1993 Mr. Turner with the assistance of Mr. Vassallo cored through the Premises' foundations near a loading ramp to the rear of Studio B. A report prepared by Mr. Bruce Peters establishes that a considerable amount of debris consisting of concrete spillage and wood forms was in the gap between the two exterior walls. Mr. Kehoe was requested to view this and did so. [para91] Mr. Kehoe testified that he observed more debris and, as a consequence, instructions were given to cut further holes in City's north wall. All of the material in the gap was to be removed down to the native soil. Mr. Kehoe testified that even at the bottom of the footing for the wall, forming material and concrete were located. By February of 1994 this work was accomplished. Much of the delay was in attempting to get Leducor's subcontractor, LMT, to do this work. Those attempts were abandoned and Leducor arranged to do that work on its own.

[para92] The examination for discovery evidence of James Taylor, the representative of LMT, was that while it was common to leave debris between external walls and then cover it with pea gravel it would have been an easy matter at no additional cost to have taken steps to avoid that occurring. LMT was simply not instructed to ensure that there was no debris left. Mr. Kehoe testified that it was only when the wall was almost completed that he became aware of the need for an air gap, yet on his examination for discovery his answer was somewhat different:

A. Nothing could be in that cavity in the line of form work or concrete?

Q. That is something you are aware of at all material times?

A. Yes.

[para93] Thus, while attempts were made to accommodate the recording sessions with varying degrees of success, there appears to have been little appreciation of the more fundamental and long-term concerns of Pinewood in terms of maintaining the integrity of its sound attenuation.

[para94] Leducor was aware of the significance of sound transmission into the Premises as evidenced by its correspondence to LMT on June 29th, 1993:

We understand that Pinewood Studios are continuing to press their damage claim against our firms claiming that the noise and excessive vibrations has seriously affected their business. The delay in completion of removal of the concrete only enhances Pinewood Studios Limited claim and leaves LMT Construction and Leducor open to further potential costs.

[para95] In April of 1994 Pinewood sought permission of City to conduct sound testing. By that time the repair to the step crack had been completed by Mr. Vassallo using a steel beam to prevent further expansion.

[para96] Despite the tardiness in response to Turner's concerns about continuing bridging between June of 1993 and October 1993, City, through its solicitors, declined permission for him to enter upon City's premises to conduct such non-destructive testing.

[para97] The purposes of that testing were set out in a letter, dated April 12, 1994, from the solicitor for Pinewood, Mr. Wiebach, to Mr. Doyle, solicitor for City. These were identified as being:

1. To pinpoint the location of bridges in the wall and thus localize repairs within the Studio.
2. To establish a "noise floor" against which the effectiveness of repairs could be assessed.

The results were to be provided to the defendants.

[para98] The responses to these requests for testing are not those that does anyone credit. In cross-examination Mr. Ho said that he supposed that he could have asked the property manager for permission but he could not give permission as he was not the Strata Council. He did not inquire of the property manager in any event. Those answers were not those given to Pinewood's solicitor for the stonewalling of its request to do the testing. Indeed, different and more obscure reasons were provided for the refusal to permit this testing. Mr. Ho's conduct and what instructions he gave to his counsel do him little credit.

[para100] Mr. Turner and Mr. Vassallo testified that because of Pinewood's inability to pay for repairs in 1993 by reason of its decline in revenues, an agreement was reached whereby Mr. Turner promised to pay Mr. Vassallo when he had the money. Mr. Vassallo testified that his understanding of the arrangement was that after 6 months there would be interest at 10%. The evidence of Mr. Turner was that he agreed to pay Mr. Vassallo $65,000.00 plus taxes when he was in the position to do so. No account was rendered and apart from this figure no particulars of the cost of repairs was provided. Mr. Vassallo was asked to do the work because of the Studio's unique nature and his familiarity with it. Mr. Turner also testified that he had used staff members to do some of the repair work. He estimated this staff work to account for approximately $9,000.00 in time. Not all of the work contemplated in the figure of $65,000.00 has been completed.

[para101] Mr. Turner further testified that he wished to complete rebuilding Studio B at a cost which he estimates is $175,000.00. The consequence of such repair, it would appear, bearing in mind Mr. Turner's evidence with respect to the functioning of the studio, would be essentially to correct the acoustical misalignment that I conclude is more of an annoyance than a hinderance to the work of the studio. Drawings filed as exhibits indicate substantial changes to what was in place prior to April 1992.

[para104] The North Vancouver Studio was developed in 1992 at a cost of some $230,000.00. Its purpose was to provide a recording environment free from the disturbances that interfered with Pinewood's Homer Street operations. Its location, however, was not ideal as actors and producers preferred a downtown location.

[para105] Fundamental to this action is the extent to which sound, for whatever reason, entered the studio. Pinewood has been in the sound recording business since 1976. Following the renovations done in 1986/87 the work done in Studio B was predominantly involved with film production. Much evidence was led by both the plaintiff and the defendants as to what effect, if any, external sound both before and during construction had within the studios.

[para106] The evidence as to sound intrusion came from a multitude of witnesses. Fundamental to an appreciation of their evidence is the premise that the purpose of such a studio is to provide an environment that minimizes the intrusion of outside noise.

[para107] As noted earlier, there is no such thing as soundproofing and, thus, it is not uncommon to hear unusual but infrequently occurring external sounds. Without reciting the evidence of each of the many who testified as to when and what they may have heard I find that both before and after the construction the studios in the Premises did, in fact, accomplish that stated purpose and only the occasional loud externally caused sounds penetrated the studio before April of 1992. I do not accept the evidence of those who would assert that they heard commonplace sounds such as ambient street noises while in the studios.

[para108] In this respect I specifically refer to the evidence that established a "floor reading" in Studios A and B taken before demolition and then taken after the repairs in June of 1994. These floor readings separated by some three years vary by approximately 1 db, a difference indistinguishable to all but the most sensitive ear. That is significant in terms of the "pink noise test" generated by Pinewood following repairs that created a wide band of sound at 100 db's in Studio B. That sound could not be heard a meter outside of the studio.

[para109] In July of 1993 despite his optimism as to the removal of sound bridging material, Mr. Lees concluded that it was bridging sound and not airborne sound that could be heard in Studio B. His test revealed that the noise level in the Studio did not increase when cement trucks were mixing outside.

[para110] Much evidence was led as to what if anything happened to equipment in Studio B particularly during the period of April 1992 to May 1994. Witnesses who testified were both current and former employees and were led by both the plaintiff and the defendant.

[para112] Mr. Turner testified to problems that he believed were caused by the exposure of a multitude of switches and controls to an increase in dust levels. His view was that while there are always problems with switches, as a consequence of construction they increased 10 fold. I am satisfied that Mr. Turner regards himself not merely as a technician but as an artist who demands of himself and others perfection not easily attained. What transpired between April of 1992 and May 1994 was unquestionably an upsetting interference with his work and that has, in my opinion, caused him to focus on the construction as a source of all wrong.

[para114] Mr. Kiss, an engineer employed by Pinewood, testified as to the stress caused by outside interferences. He testified that there was a change in the way equipment functioned but that such problems were not insurmountable and were corrected either easily or by having the maintenance staff repair the problem. He testified that switches that made noise, described as popping sounds, were of various ages.

[para115] Mr. Hoogenboom testified that occasional external sounds could be heard in Studio B before 1992 but they did not interfere with his work. During construction his work was interfered with and from time to time he would ask someone to go out to the City site to ask that the work there be stopped. He testified that sometimes it would not. He noticed no appreciable difference in the way in which equipment operated during the construction period.

[para117] Marshall Freund, Pinewood's maintenance manager from 1988 to mid-1995, testified that during construction equipment was covered with plastic but the incidence of maintenance did not increase over that period. He said that the equipment at Pinewood was of some vintage and that because of the modular nature, equipment components could be easily switched in the case of failure. He agreed that there was more dust during construction and that, while that should theoretically increase wear, the equipment was kept clean.

[para118] When Mr. Freund was confronted with an undated statement that he wrote regarding the state of equipment repairs, he testified that he had been asked by Mr. Turner to provide a statement as to what could have happened to the studio equipment as a result of the construction. Despite the opinions expressed in that letter I am of the opinion that Mr. Freund was a disinterested and frank witness.

[para119] Ruth Mahon worked as a recorder at Pinewood from 1991 until April of 1992. She primarily recorded foley sounds although she did some ADR work. She testified that in her use of equipment she would sometimes hear sounds caused by switches and would work around them or call in maintenance.

[para120] I conclude on the evidence that whatever effect dust drawn into the studio during construction may have had in terms of accelerated wear on Pinewood's equipment its effect was minimal in both the short and long term.

[para121] The plaintiff claims against the defendants in nuisance, negligence and trespass. Each are distinct causes of action, although, as I shall later conclude in these reasons, the tort of trespass so far as this action is concerned is subsumed into the tort of negligence. [para122] Simply stated, the claim of nuisance is founded upon the transmission of sound and dust from the City property to the Premises.

[para123] The claim of negligence is founded upon the acts of the defendants that were injurious to the plaintiff's property. These acts, it is said, include the impact on Pinewood's south wall which caused the step crack and the bridging of both the external and internal walls resulting in external sounds entering the plaintiff's premises.

NUISANCE

[para125] Nuisance is the interference with an occupier's interest in the beneficial use of his/her land. See National Capital Commission v. Pugliese, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 104 at 115. The law with respect to nuisance imposes a duty upon those who interfere with their neighbours' use and comfort to take reasonable and proper care and use reasonable skill to ensure that the nuisance is reduced to a minimum. See Andreae v. Selfridge and Company Ltd., (1937), [1938] 1 Ch. 1 (C.A.).

[para126] However, there is a caveat placed upon that general principle: if a plaintiff's use of property is abnormally sensitive, recovery may be denied because the standard to be applied in the assessment of whether there has been unreasonable activity causing interference is an objective one. Therefore, conduct must be governed only with reference to normal or ordinary persons, not idiosyncratic or abnormal use by a plaintiff (see A.M. Linden, Canadian Tort Law, 5th ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1993), at 518).

As time goes on new inventions and new methods enable land to be more profitably used ...

Thus the measure of reasonableness of the steps taken to reduce nuisance to a minimum must be assessed in the context of those new "inventions" and "methods" of reducing interference.

[para130] City constructed its complex to make a profit. It was argued by the defendants that, apart from adjusting its construction scheduling, there is no obligation on a defendant to expend funds to reduce or eliminate the consequences of conduct that might interfere with the neighbour's enjoyment of land, regardless of whether the neighbour's use is ordinary or extraordinary.

[para131] In Russell Transport Ltd. v. Ontario Malleable Iron Co., [1952] 4 D.L.R. 719 (Ont. H.C.) McRuer C.J.H.C. dealt with the difference between the term "reasonable" as it is used in nuisance actions as opposed to negligence actions. At page 731 he commented with respect to the former:

But here 'reasonable' means something more than merely 'taking proper care'. It signifies what is legally right between the parties, taking into account all the circumstances of the case, and some of these circumstances are often such as a man on the Clapham omnibus could not fully appreciate.

On the other hand, if the defendant has taken no reasonable precautions to protect his neighbour from injury by reason of operations on his own property the defence of reasonable user is of little avail.

[para132] In that case, the defendant had continued to operate a smelter and had adopted "no method of modern smoke or fume control." Motor vehicles stored nearby were damaged by the emissions from the smelter. Parenthetically, Chief Justice McRuer did not find the plaintiff's storage of automobiles to be a "particularly delicate trade or operation."

[para133] In my opinion, in the assessment of whether the defendants took reasonable steps, consideration must be given to what those steps and their cost might reasonably be.

[para135] The defendants argue that the operation of a sound recording studio is a use that is extraordinarily sensitive and, as such, whatever interference occurred does not constitute nuisance.

[para136] In Nor-Video Services Ltd. v. Ontario Hydro (1978), 19 O.R. (2d) 107 (Ont. H.C.J.) Robins J. considered the issue of a cable television operation that had been interfered with by hydro cables. Reception of a television signal had been impaired despite attempts by Ontario Hydro to find a solution. Hydro's defence, in part, was that the cable operation was an abnormally sensitive one and, thus, interference could not amount to nuisance. At page 117 Robins J. noted that:

The notion of nuisance is a broad and comprehensive one ...

And then went on to hold:

...The category of interests covered by the tort of nuisance ought not to be and need not be closed, in my opinion, to new or changing developments associated from time to time with normal usage and enjoyment of land. Accordingly, I would reject the defendant's submission and hold that television reception is an interest worthy of protection and entitled to vindication in law.

He then went on to consider the argument that Nor-Video had devoted its property to an unusually sensitive use and could not by doing so make a nuisance out of conduct or activity which would otherwise be harmless. I agree with Robins J. when at page 118 he stated:

... As a matter of general legal principle it is undisputed that an interference with something of abnormal sensitiveness or delicacy does not of itself constitute a nuisance. The law does not extend protection through nuisance to hypersensitive individuals or industries; it is against interferences to what objectively can be considered ordinary uses of property or enjoyments of life that protection is afforded.

... cannot recover damages ... for that portion of their claim resulting from their abnormal sensitivity to cedar wood dust.

[para138] However, he did conclude that damages were recoverable on the basis of interference with the plaintiffs' normal enjoyment of life.

[para139] A similar assessment of the issue of sensitivity was conducted by Cohen J. in Kenny v. Schuster Real Estate Co., [1990] B.C.J. No. 1420 (19 June 1990), Vancouver C874184 (B.C.S.C.), in which he followed Royal Anne Hotel Company Ltd. v. Ashcroft (1979), 8 C.C.L.T. 179 (B.C.C.A.), concluding that the plaintiff was entitled to recovery for nuisance arising out of transmission of noise and cooking fumes from the defendant's restaurant to the plaintiff's condominium, as she was not "an overly sensitive person."

[para141] The recording of sound is not unique, but a lack of uniqueness does not entail a lack of sensitivity. The evidence in this trial was that there are some 14 studios engaged in the sound business in the Lower Mainland area. However, only three of those are engaged in the type of work done by the plaintiff. These studios are not at all similar to the reception of television signals whether by cable operator or by an individual.

[para142] On a review of all of the evidence I conclude that the plaintiff's operations were unusually sensitive in nature. The manner of construction of such a studio shows the need to operate in an environment that minimizes sound intrusion and permits only occasional interference from the outside.

[para143] The conclusion that Pinewood's operation is unusually sensitive is not determinative of the issue of nuisance. In Mandrake Management Consultants Ltd. v. Toronto Transit Commission (1993), 102 D.L.R. (4th) 12 at 19 the Ontario Court of Appeal set forth four factors to be considered when determining whether or not usage of property constituted nuisance. These are:

(a) the nature of the locality in question; (b) the severity of the harm; (c) the sensitivity of the plaintiff; (d) the utility of the defendant's conduct.

[para144] Here the locality is changing from one of small businesses, some of which have ceased to operate, to a high density residential area with some commercial shops. The evidence given at the trial was that between 1992 and 1994, in addition to City's development, two other residential towers were constructed in the same city block as City and Pinewood's locations. Clearly, it was an area whose time for redevelopment had come.

[para146] Having concluded that the plaintiff's use of its land was unusually sensitive, the final question to be considered is the utility of the defendants' conduct. This area was destined for redevelopment. Although no consideration was given to the use of sound baffles, the defendants constructed the City project in accordance with generally accepted construction practices. Points of ingress and egress from the construction site were dictated by the City of Vancouver. The construction site operated generally within noise level standards set down by the City of Vancouver. As I have noted, measurements were taken to ensure compliance with the noise limit and generally these were complied with although without question from time to time they were exceeded.

[para149] As well, the plaintiff benefited from the construction of a higher, denser and more rigid wall than existed before.

[para150] The law of nuisance requires a balancing of the interests of neighbours and the lawful use of their respective property. I conclude that the balancing of these competing interests is such that City's use of land and the attendant interference as a consequence of its development does not constitute actionable nuisance. The claim of nuisance is dismissed.

NEGLIGENCE

[para151] The plaintiff claims, further as well as in the alternative, negligence. That negligence allegedly resulted in the compromise of the Premises' structural integrity. The particulars of this allegation are set forth in paragraph 23 of the plaintiff's Further Amended Statement of Claim filed May 15th, 1995. In summary, the acts of negligence are said to be:

1. The striking of the plaintiff's south wall causing:

(a) cracks within that wall; and

(b) the dislodgement of masonry and plaster within the internal airspace causing physical contact between the south wall and Studio B's interior wall.

2. The depositing of forming material and concrete spillage between the City site's north wall and the plaintiff's exterior south wall so that a permanent physical contact was constructed between the two.

[para152] The plaintiff says the combination of (1.) and (2.) resulted in sound being transmitted from the defendants' construction site into the plaintiff's recording studio thus compromising the work that was being done in those rooms. This transmission is said to be made possible through "sound bridging." The result was interference with production, loss of reputation and consequent loss of income.

[para153] Negligence is the "failure to use the care a reasonable man would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances and the degree of care required depends on the danger or risk involved." See Thompson v. Fraser, [1955] S.C.R. 419 at 425.

[para155] Be that as it may, the general tenor of those concerns, which I have previously discussed, was renewed in March of 1992 when Mr. Ho and Mr. Johnson again attended upon the Premises.

[para156] Thus, the defendants were specifically warned of the dangers of bridging and were aware of what consequences would flow from such bridges. They were also told of the consequences of damage to the Premises' south wall. The operations of the plaintiff's studio were, in fact, interfered with when the bridging occurred both between Pinewood's south wall and Studio B's wall and between Pinewood's and City's external walls. This could not be said to be an unforeseen consequence. What transpired cannot in any sense be said to be a consequence of an "unforeseen and unexplained failure" of the construction of the studio. See Munshaw Colour Service Limited v. Vancouver (1962), 38 W.W.R. 335 at 338 (S.C.C.).

[para158] The importance of the integrity of the south wall and the risk of debris falling into the internal air gap was clearly explained to the defendants' representatives prior to demolition. In the September 18, 1991 letter, a copy of which was given to Mr. Ho, those concerns were specifically referred to.

[para159] Later when Mr. Kehoe assumed his duties in early 1992, Mr. Turner reiterated these concerns to him. Mr. Kehoe's evidence was that he simply instructed those demolishing the wall not to come in contact with Pinewood's wall. No steps were taken to provide any form of buffer despite the fact the backhoe operator was manoeuvring his bucket into a 2-2 inch space from a distance of some 20 feet away. On more than one occasion, on the basis of the evidence of Mr. Kiss and Mr. Hoogenboom, violent contact was made with the south wall during the course of either demolition or construction.

[para160] The defendants are liable in negligence for the bridging that occurred both externally and internally in relation to Pinewood's south wall.

ADDITIONAL COMMENTS AS TO NUISANCE

[para162] Having concluded that the plaintiff's operations fall within the caveat respecting nuisance by reason of their sensitivity, it should be noted that where negligence is in issue, then the caveat has its own exception which would result in a liability in nuisance concurrent with liability in negligence. See Grandel et al. v. Mason, [1953] 1 S.C.R. 459.

[para163] Here, as a consequence of the negligent conduct of the defendants which resulted in the south wall being damaged and in the creation of the sound bridging, in addition to liability in negligence for foreseeable damage and loss, there is a concurrent liability in nuisance for the interference caused by the transmission of sound, whether airborne or groundborne, from the City site to the Premises. Thus, to the extent that the defendants' negligence resulted in the creation of a conduit that permitted the transmission of construction sounds into the Premises, and particularly Studio B, the defendants are liable to the plaintiff in nuisance.

[para164] As this limited liability in nuisance is concurrent with liability in negligence any damage that may have arisen under nuisance is compensated for under the tort of negligence.

TRESPASS

[para165] The plaintiff also claims a tort of trespass. Because of what I have concluded in terms of the negligence, in my opinion the claim of trespass is subsumed into the claim of negligence. Any damage that might have arisen under trespass is compensated for under the tort of negligence.

DAMAGES

[para166] The Plaintiff operated a sophisticated studio that played a significant role in post-production film work.

[para167] Much evidence was lead as to the specific films and television movies that have had their sound components recorded at Pinewood. Mr. Turner, as the alter ego of Pinewood, evidenced to me both a pride in his studio's work and an embarrassment over the consequence of the disturbance to production. While I have generally accepted his evidence in preference to that of those who sought to contradict it, I conclude that Mr. Turner is possessed of a degree of righteous indignation at the way he was treated, quite apart from the effects of the negligence of the defendants upon his operation. His voice at times was that of one crying in the wilderness as he sought to impress others, and in particular Mr. Ho, with his concerns. As he testified, he found in Mr. Kehoe a person with whom he thought he could talk about these concerns. Indeed Ledcor was fortunate to have such a person on its staff who despite the pressures in the early stages of construction attempted to accommodate Pinewood in terms of its scheduling. Regrettably, those taking Mr. Kehoe's directions did not always follow them and in the hurly burly of a construction site some of Mr. Turner's concerns went unattended.

[para168] Pinewood claims the following damages:

1. Loss of revenue; 2. Loss of future revenue; 3. Cost of repairs; 4. Cost of repairs and replacement of Pinewood equipment; 5. Expense mitigation in relation to the North Vancouver studio; 6. Aggravated, exemplary and punitive damages.

[para169] A Judge approaching this task of assessment is to be reminded of the comments by McEachern C.J.B.C. in Begusic v. Clark, Wilson & Co. (1991), 57 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 at 290 (B.C.C.A.):

The assessment of damages is not a precise science; it is not even a calculation.

Elsewhere in Begusic, Chief Justice McEachern referred to the well known instruction of Lord Blackburn in Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Company (1880), 5 App. Cas. 25 at 39 (H.L.) wherein he said the measure of damages should be:

... that sum of money which will put the party who has been injured, or who has suffered, in the same position as he would have been in if he had not sustained the wrong for which he is now getting his compensation or reparation.

[para170] Quite apart from the evidence of Pinewood's financial statements which I will shortly review, there are in this case two external factors which complicate the assessment of loss of revenue, both past and future.

[para171] The first is the evidence given by Mr. Tom Crowe, Manager of the Community Affairs for the B.C. Film Commission. Mr. Crowe testified that the Film Commission, in promoting film production in British Columbia, obtains from producers the amount of money spent in connection with film production in British Columbia. This is done on a voluntary basis and Mr. Crowe believes that the Commission does not necessarily know of all of the film productions. No figures are kept as to what proportion of the total film expenditures is made up of "post- production expenditures". Mr. Crowe believes that 80% of film production expenditures in British Columbia represents return business. The film production figures include feature movies, TV movies and pilot and special projects. The figures reveal a burgeoning industry in British Columbia:

1990 $188,490,000.00 1991 $176,014,000.00 1992 $211,219,000.00 1993 $285,965,000.00 1994 $401,970,000.00

Production expenditures for 1995 to early December exceeded the 1994 figures. Additionally, Mr. Crowe testified that the advertising or commercial expenditures were not included in these figures and were reportedly in the range of $40,000,000.00 to $50,000,000.00 per year. [para172] The second factor was the development of other facilities which do the same work as Pinewood. In 1990, Post Modern Studios entered the field which to that point had been the almost exclusive preserve of the plaintiff. In 1991, Sharp Sound began to do similar work. Thus, beginning in 1990 competition developed.

[para173] The equipment in these studios varied. Pinewood uses analog equipment (i.e. tapes) whereas others use digital equipment (i.e. computers). From the evidence given by the various producers, including Connie Dolphin, Gary Winters and Gary Hall, the choice of equipment and, therefore, the studio appears to be as much a matter of personality as anything else.

1. PAST LOSS OF INCOME

[para174] During the period of 1986 to 1994 Pinewood's income, making allowances for rebates given and assigned to the year in which they were earned, was as follows:

1986 - $562,172.00 1987 - $861,675.00 1988 - $1,053,798.00 1989 - $1,615,232.00 1990 - $1,516,270.00 1991 - $1,628,661.00
1992 - $1,079,441.00 1993 - $1,442,121.00 1994 - $ 953,862.00

The 1995 sales figures, net of taxes, and without any rebate adjustment was $1,094,454.00.

[para175] The fiscal year end for Pinewood is September 30 and the evidence establishes there is often a time lag between work done and billing sent out and recorded.

[para176] The work of Pinewood was categorized as either "series" when no one was present except the staff of Pinewood or "other" when actors and producers were present. Generally, "other" work was done upon demand, often on very short notice, whereas "series" work could be scheduled at Pinewood's convenience.

[para177] I accept the evidence of Mr. Turner that quite apart from interruptions that caused Pinewood delay, as a studio run by an artist proud of its reputation, Pinewood, was reluctant to undertake work that would inevitably be interrupted resulting in the loss of credibility. I accept as well his evidence that over time bookings dropped off. While a portion of that may have been due to new competition from the other studios I conclude that a portion was a result of the gradual loss of reputation by reason of intrusion of sound in the studio and the attendant interruptions and delays.

[para179] While some of that would inevitably go to new studios, given the early reputation of Pinewood, grudgingly acknowledged by Mr. Winters as being "better than anyone else in Vancouver" despite different technologies and the emergence of other studios, I am satisfied that Pinewood's reputation would have persisted into the 1990's. Pinewood, therefore, would have shared in that additional work. Mr. Turner testified that he expected to generate a gross income in 1992 of some $2,000,000.00. While that, in my view, is somewhat optimistic it is not unreasonable to conclude that the income of Pinewood would continue to grow as the film industry also continued to expand.

[para180] During the period of 1991 to 1992, Cannell Film, a major client, left Pinewood for another studio. As I observed both Mr. Turner and Mr. Gary Winter, Cannell's post-production Director, it was apparent that these two men had a clash of personalities. Despite Mr. Winter's protestations that Cannell's departure was purely economic, I am satisfied on the evidence of Mr. Gary Hall who was in charge of the actual production for Cannell in Vancouver, that Pinewood was the preferred studio. I conclude that it was more a function of the personalities as opposed to production quality which led to the loss of Cannell's work. Be that as it may Pinewood's billings to Cannell dropped from $667,500.62 in 1991 to $21,381.42 in 1992. Yet notwithstanding such a loss, Pinewood's gross income fell by less than $550,000.00. Thus, without the loss of Cannell, income levels for the year ending September 30, 1992 would have exceeded $1,600,000.00. [para181] More significantly, while Pinewood had by 1993 returned closer to 1991 levels of income it was not, however, garnering any of the substantial growth that was occurring within the industry as a whole. By the September 1994 year end its income had fallen by more than a third from the previous year taking into account adjustments for rebates.

[para182] The loss of a reputation for quality does not occur immediately. Miss Tomicki testified that to mask the problems of sound intrusion, clients were, at times, told that the studio was booked when that was not the case. I am satisfied that the breach of the south wall and the internal bridging occurred in the time frame following April of 1992. It was during this period that Pinewood sought to mask its problems resulting from sound intrusion. However, the full impact of the sound intrusion on ADR production did not begin to show until some time following February 1993 when, as a result of the defendants' negligent acts, the footings and wall of the Premises and City's complex were joined.

[para183] Reputations are slowly built and, generally, if the quality of work declines reputations are slowly destroyed. [para184] Following its renovations in 1986 Pinewood's financial statements showed a steady increase in revenue as it moved into the new area of ADR. Its work was done in the presence of clients and its reputation in that field was gradually being established. Pinewood did not advertise. It relied upon word of the quality of its work being passed among those in the industry. As interruptions developed they became costly both in terms of time and the annoyance of clients. In 1993 the decline of Pinewood's reputation began. As succinctly put by plaintiff's counsel, the phone stopped ringing. It was the work done outside the presence of clients that permitted Pinewood to work around the interferences.

[para185] As a consequence of the decline in work that occurred in late 1993 and 1994, Pinewood reduced its staff. As Mr. Turner described, though Pinewood's recording work was returning to normal after July of 1994, the work did not immediately return. That began only after the middle of 1995 when, according to Mr. Turner, he was deluged with work by reason of his reduction in staff due to the decline of 1993 and 1994. Staff in this industry must be both technically and artistically competent to do the work of a studio such as Pinewood. Such staff additions do not occur overnight and it took time to redevelop the staff to handle this increase in work.

[para186] By September 30, 1995 Pinewood's gross income had increased to $1,094,454.00 of which almost half was generated in the last three months of that fiscal year.

[para187] It costs money to earn money. The evidence is that in the years of 1989 to 1991 when there was no interruption, recording costs amounted to approximately 45.5% of gross income.

[para188] In assessing loss of past income I conclude the following:

1. Between 1991 and 1994 the film industry in British Columbia saw a 128% increase in reported expenditures.
2. Between 1990 and 1991 Pinewood's gross income increased. It fell in 1992 by reason of the loss of Cannell as a client, then increased in 1993 and then dropped by one-third in 1994. 1995 according to billings was an increase of approximately 15% over the 1994 fiscal year.
3. Despite natural fluctuations in the business no other cause can be ascribed to the decline in income levels during 1994 and 1995, as compared with the 1993 year income levels, other than a loss of business caused by the interference of Pinewood's operations. Given the offsetting factor of increased competition and the significant growth in the film industry following 1992 I find there would have been a substantial net growth in Pinewood's business had there not been the sound intrusions.
4. By September of 1995 Pinewood had rebounded to production levels consistent with 1993 but the ability to handle more work was constrained by having a reduced staff.
5. In order to meet with this increased business Pinewood would have been required to continue in its pattern of substantial technical investment which, according to the evidence of Mr. Turner, was estimated to be $750,000.00 between 1988 and 1992 and which decreased thereafter.
6. Pinewood's overhead, including administration, apart from recording production costs, remained relatively fixed despite losses in income.

[para189] In his written argument the plaintiff's counsel postulated a multitude of scenarios as to the past and future income loss. Based upon various assumptions of growth, he argued that Pinewood's loss would continue almost indefinitely into the future. Calculations were provided to a ten year point. The evidence, however, is that Mr. Turner is the driving mind behind this enterprise and he had previously expressed a desire to retire.

[para190] As well, Pinewood had secured space for future expansion at 1111 Homer Street. This space was surrendered by reason of its financial problems due to the loss of work. Pinewood's surrender of that space was offset somewhat by its acquisition of the North Vancouver studio, but that studio was not entirely satisfactory. [para191] I have no doubt that prior to December of 1991 Pinewood had no other plans than to develop its 1111 Homer Street premise. Despite this it is apparent that the area in which Pinewood was located was one undergoing urban development and Pinewood's leases with Grimham had a provision for a 2 year notice to vacate in the event Grimham elected to demolish the premises.

[para192] I find that Pinewood's gross income to its September 30 year end for the years of 1992 to 1995 was as follows:

1992 - $1,079,441.00.

In this year there was no significant interference in Pinewood's work except for the loss of the Cannell work.

1993 - $1,442,121.00.

During this year there was recovery of work from other sources with a commencement of the decline in the later part of the year due to the construction. 1994 - $953,862.00

This was a period during which the full impact of construction upon Pinewood's ability to perform and its reputation was being felt.

During this period the full impact was felt with recovery of work levels beginning by late 1995.

[para193] I am of the view that but for the negligence of the defendants the gross income of Pinewood in those same periods would have, in rounded figures and without consideration of the industry growth, developed into the following levels:

1993 - $1,600,000.00 1994 - $1,700,000.00 1995 - $1,800,000.00

All of these figures are based upon September 30 year ends. [para194] By 1995 producers who had used other facilities would then be able to compare those studios with Pinewood. Some of the personalities in the industry would have changed and inevitably some of the work would have returned to Pinewood, subject to the general fluctuations that occur within this industry.

[para195] As well, I conclude that the industry would not be fully apprised of Pinewood's return to pre-1993 quality of work levels until 1995. As a consequence I conclude that much of the growth in the industry and, in particular, that 20% which according to Mr. Crowe was new work, would have bypassed Pinewood. I therefore conclude that it did not share as it should have in the growth that occurred in the film industry following 1992. I also conclude that had it so shared, it would have had the capacity to do the work and expand in an orderly manner.

1992 - $1,079,441.00 (actual) 1993 - $1,800,000.00 1994 - $2,000,000.00 1995 - $2,100,000.00

[para198] Thus there was a total past loss of gross income to September 30, 1995 of $2,409,563.00.

[para199] In order to earn income Pinewood incurred recording costs averaging 45.5% of gross income between the years 1989 and 1991. I am of the opinion that general production costs as a percentage of gross income would have been stable during the period up to September 30, 1995. As a consequence the net past loss of income to September 30, 1995 is in the amount of $1,313,211.90. [para200] In order to meet the demands of the increased volume of work Pinewood would have continued its policies of investing in new equipment. The evidence of Pinewood's maintenance man, Mr. Freund, was that the equipment ranged up to 15 years in age. With the age comes repair and/or replacement. The financial statements of Pinewood indicate a pattern of acquiring new production equipment. Using that as an indicator I find that in order to meet the demands of the increase of business that would have naturally occurred but for the defendants' negligence, Pinewood would have continued to invest additional money which I conclude, quite apart from the investment in the North Vancouver studio, would be in the amount of $250,000.00. Accordingly this sum would be deducted from any income resulting in a loss up to September 30, 1995 of $1,063,211.90.

[para201] There are contingencies in every business and one of those arises out of the fact that Mr. Turner was the alter ego of Pinewood. It is evident from his one attempt to sell the business that he was considering retirement and would have sought a role as a consultant. That would have removed Mr. Turner as a driving force behind Pinewood. While a new owner would bring a new direction that takes time to take effect. As well there are fluctuations that occur with loss and gain of clients and the loss and replacement of staff. I am of the view that a contingency discount of 10% should be applied in the circumstances and accordingly the past loss of income is set at $956,890.80.

1993 (30.5%) $291,851.69 1994 (33.9%) $324,385.98 1995 (35.6%) $340,653.13 ----- $956,890.80

[para203] These percentages are calculated by dividing the gross income for each year that should have been earned by the total of the gross income that should have been earned over that 3 year period.

2. FUTURE LOSS OF INCOME [para204] Counsel for Pinewood, in his submissions, put forth a further series of scenarios as to what the future loss might be following September 30, 1995. While an interesting theoretical exercise, I am satisfied that the catch-up process to which I have referred is not one which would go on indefinitely. I am satisfied that Pinewood will eventually attain the level of income that it should have attained taking into account normal growth, the effects of a rapidly expanding film industry in British Columbia and increased competition. From my observation of those members of the staff of Pinewood both past and present I am convinced that this studio is motivated to achieve high quality production. Nevertheless, Pinewood will have to work hard to get where it should have been and to attain its fair share of that industry growth. Until that point is reached Pinewood will experience an ever decreasing loss.

[para205] That loss will continue for a short period of time as Pinewood rebuilds its staff and regains its fair share of the market that but for the negligence of the defendants it would have enjoyed. In my opinion, to attain the position in the market place that it would have had but for the events of 1992- 1994 it will take Pinewood a period of approximately four years from September 30, 1995. With each passing year the loss will decline as the capacity is filled and the work returns to Pinewood.

TOTAL - $1,500,000.00 These figures require a discounting to present day values.

[para207] Pursuant to the provisions of B.C. Reg. 352/81 made under s. 51 of the Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 224, a discount rate of 3.5% is applied to these future income losses. Accordingly, the present day values of these losses are set at:

Loss Present day value

1996 - $600,000.00 $600,000.00 1997 - $450,000.00 $434,782.61 1998 - $300,000.00 $280,053.21 1999 - $150,000.00
$135,291.41 ----- TOTAL $1,500,000.00 $1,450,127.23

[para208] From these losses must be taken production costs at 45.5% of gross income. Accordingly I conclude that the net income loss in present day values that will be suffered by Pinewood in the four years after September 30, 1995 is in the amount of $790,319.34. [para209] I also consider it appropriate to apply a contingency with respect to future unknowns. Because the gaze into the future is less clear than into the past I consider it appropriate to apply a contingency of 15%; therefore, the present day value of future loss of net income is fixed at $671,771.44.

3. COSTS OF REPAIRS TO PREMISES

[para210] I have already commented on the arrangement between Mr. Vassallo and Mr. Turner and the paucity of evidence as to the cost of what repairs were done and what remains to be done. It was Mr. Vassallo's evidence that the total repair cost was to be $65,000.00 of which he believes some $40,000.00 has already been consumed. Given Mr. Turner's evidence that Studio B now operates essentially as it did in 1991 with the exception of a minor shift of its acoustic centre, I am not satisfied that the defendants must bear Mr. Turner's estimated cost of a further $130,000.00 to complete Studio B. That, in my opinion would not be reasonable. Turner testified that City's north wall, once properly completed, would enhance sound attenuation. If not increasing it, the wall has certainly maintained the sound attenuation levels of 1991. I do not accept on the evidence before me that such expensive repairs are necessary given the evidence of Mr. Turner and Mr. Kiss's evidence as to how Studio B and the Premises generally now function.

[para211] I do accept the evidence of Mr. Vassallo as to what was done and as to what has yet to be done. As well, I accept the evidence of Mr. Turner that in addition to Mr. Vassallo's 1994 estimate of $65,000.00, Pinewood used staff time of a value of $9,000.00 in effecting repairs. Given the effluxion of time since 1994 and that there will be an increase in costs to effect the necessary repairs, I fix the cost of repairs completed and to be completed at $85,000.00 inclusive of applicable taxes. No allowance is made for interest on any unpaid sums to Mr. Vassallo.

4. COST OF REPAIRS TO EQUIPMENT

[para212] Because of my ruling with respect to nuisance I do not award any sum under this head of damages. I note that there was much conflict in the evidence as to the incidence of repairs as a consequence of the construction of the City project. The evidence of Marshall Freund, the plaintiff's maintenance man, was that he did not notice any increase in the frequency of equipment replacement or repairs after construction started. He did notice an increase in the amount of air blown dust during construction. But he testified that while this is theoretically capable of causing an increase in wear, he kept the equipment clean.

[para213] In the undated statement which Mr. Freund says he had been asked by Mr. Turner to prepare, Mr. Freund referred to the wear of tape heads and that "perhaps the increased dust was a factor." I would not, based on that evidence and that of the other staff, conclude that there was an increase in equipment wear even if liability in nuisance based on transmission of dust had been established.

[para214] As well, Pinewood was aware of the dust that would be created during the construction. Apart from the use of plastic over equipment when not in use, a greater attention to cleaning the air conditioning filters and the filters of the equipment itself would have ameliorated whatever complaints Mr. Turner had regarding dust. I do not draw from the evidence that there was any increased frequency in this activity during the construction period. The evidence also established that much of Pinewood's equipment was older. Thus, even if Pinewood had established nuisance based on the transmission of dust and an increase in equipment wear resulting from the defendants' construction, I would have denied Pinewood relief under this head based on its failure to take adequate steps to protect itself from dust.

5. NORTH SHORE STUDIO

[para215] Pinewood constructed the North Shore studio to shift some of the ADR work away from the Premises. That facility remains operational and, in turn, will serve Pinewood well as work returns to it which exceeds the limited capacity available at the Premises given the surrender of the additional space. It was designed for ADR and performed those functions in addition to Studio B. I do not conclude that there has been a loss from that, rather the creation of an asset.

6. AGGRAVATED AND PUNITIVE DAMAGES

Aggravated damages are awarded to compensate for aggravated damage. As explained by Waddams, they take account of intangible injuries and by definition will generally augment damages assessed under the general rules relating to the assessment of damages. Aggravated damages are compensatory in nature and may only be awarded for that purpose. Punitive damages, on the other hand, are punitive in nature and may only be employed in circumstances where the conduct giving the cause for complaint is of such nature that it merits punishment.

Aggravated damages will frequently cover conduct which could also be the subject of punitive damages, but the role of aggravated damages remains compensatory.

[para217] As noted by the Court of Appeal in Huff v. Price, supra, at page 153, aggravated damages are an augmentation of compensatory damages and are awarded in circumstances of high-handedness or wilful or reckless indifference to the plaintiff's rights. Despite being compensatory, they have nothing to do with actual loss. Punitive damages are awarded to punish the defendant and set an example to others who might act in a similar manner. The conduct that gives rise to such awards must, in the words of MacIntyre J., be "harsh, vindictive, reprehensible and malicious."

[para220] Prior to LMT constructing City's north wall, Mr. Kehoe was well aware of the need to maintain an air gap. He gave no instructions to LMT in this regard.

[para222] In my opinion, such conduct falls within those circumstances in which an award of aggravated damages is appropriate, as were described at page 153 in Huff v. Price, supra. I know of no impediment in the law to limit such damages to personal litigants. Corporate entities can also suffer humiliation and loss of self-confidence within the community in which they operate. I am of the view that such damages should be set in the amount of $50,000.00.

[para223] In considering an award of punitive damages the following factors are to be taken into account assuming the described threshold of conduct has been passed:

1. the moral culpability of the defendant;
2. the amount of the damage award, excluding punitive damages; and
3. the profit, if any, made by the defendant from his/her wrongdoing.

See Huff v. Price, supra, at p. 154.

[para224] Punitive damages must not doubly compensate a plaintiff. The purpose is to punish and teach so that such conduct is not repeated.

[para225] Here there is no evidence as to the extent to which the defendants profited by their wrongful acts. Ledcor did not obtain any estimates for hand demolition of the wall. It would have taken time and manpower to hand-demolish it but I did not understand Mr. Kehoe's evidence to be that it was impossible, merely difficult.

[para227] The evidence of Mr. Taylor of LMT is that it would have cost no more to erect devices to protect spillage. The evidence is that the defendants ultimately incurred substantial expenses in removing the debris and concrete from the 6 inch space between the north and south walls.

[para228] In upholding an award for punitive damages of $45,000.00, Mr. Justice Lambert in Epstein v. Cressey Development Corp. (1992), 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 52 (B.C.C.A.) concluded at page 59 that going ahead with intentional trespass was "arrogant or high-handed conduct" on the part of the defendant developer. This conduct had two aspects. The first aspect was in not taking sufficient care before work was begun to ensure that the work could be completed without the trespass. The second was in deciding to go onto the property to stop erosion without even contacting the plaintiff.

[para230] Counsel at the conclusion of argument requested liberty to speak to the issue of costs once judgment was rendered. They may arrange that. CLAIM FOR RENT AND COUNTERCLAIM FOR ABATEMENT

[para231] On July 14th, 1993 Pinewood's solicitor wrote to Grimham's solicitor. For reasons expressed in that letter Pinewood concluded that it could not develop the 8,000 square feet of additional space that it had been renting at 1111 Homer Street against future expansion. Pinewood wished to surrender that area and sought a rent reduction in large part because of its financial problems which it alleged arose as a result of the construction next door.

[para232] That space was surrendered and Pinewood did not make any rent payments over the next year. Pinewood and Grimham are in agreement that the amount owing as of the time of trial including interest amounts to $299,021.33.

[para233] As against this claim, Pinewood seeks a set off by way of abatement pursuant to the terms of its lease of the Premises.

[para235] Those repairs which, in fact, were completed by Pinewood, were done in July 1994. Pinewood claims an abatement of all or some of the unpaid rent. A claim based upon quiet enjoyment was abandoned.

[para239] I have earlier concluded that Pinewood's operations were interrupted to the extent that loss of production and income occurred with the attendant consequences to reputation. It was only by mid-1995 that production billings returned to pre-construction levels. At no time, however, did Pinewood cease, other than momentarily, operations in the premises at 1119 Homer Street. There were disruptions and cancelled sessions but, as each of Pinewood's staff testified, they tried to work around the interference. Sometimes work was done without the client present. Often work would be done after or before construction work disturbances. But at no time did the use of the premises cease. The Premises continued to be used on a daily basis and it is for those interruptions and their consequences that the plaintiff is to be compensated by the defendants.

[para240] The test for abatement under paragraph 11 of the lease is not the same as that for negligence. Under paragraph 11 it is the restriction of use of a portion of the premises not a restriction in the amount of time that a premises can be used that triggers abatement.

[para242] The losses of income incurred by Pinewood were not such as to deprive it of its ability to pay rent. Financial statements of Pinewood reveal that in each year substantial deductions were taken for non-cash expenses of amortization, yet Mr. Turner's reasons for not paying any rent during that one year period was on the basis of the entire premises being affected by the interruptions.

[para243] I am not satisfied that the Premises or any part of them were not useable during the period in which the rent was not paid. In addition, because Pinewood has already been compensated for its loss of income for that period it would be inappropriate to allow Pinewood's claim for abatement. In view of the fact that Pinewood's compensation is for those very interruptions caused by the cracks and bridging, Pinewood's counterclaim against Grimham for abatement is dismissed.

[para244] Grimham shall recover judgment against Pinewood in the agreed amount of $299,021.33. It was my understanding from counsel that an agreement was reached that this was the total sum including interest due as of the commencement of this trial. Based on this understanding there will be judgment in the amount of $299,021.33.

[para245] There shall be a further order that Pinewood pay interest pursuant to Article 6.17 on that sum from November 27, 1995 to the date of this judgment. [para246] If that sum does not include interest, interest pursuant to Article 6.17 under the lease shall commence on the 1st day of the resumption of rental payments by Pinewood to Grimham to the date of judgment. If my understanding as to the dates for the calculation of interest is not correct, counsel may speak to this issue.

[para247] As mentioned before, counsel wished to speak to the issue of costs once this judgment has been rendered and they may arrange that.

SUMMARY

[para248] Action No. C925558 Vancouver Registry Pinewood v. City Tower

1. Pinewood shall recover from the defendants damage by way of past loss of income in the amount of $959,040.00 together with Court Order Interest as follows:

(i) on the sum of $291,851.69 from September 30th, 1993;

(ii) on the sum of $324,385.98 from September 30th, 1994;

(iii) on the sum of $340,653.13 from September 30th, 1995.

2. Pinewood shall recover from the defendants damages for future loss of income in the amount of $671,771.44.

3. Cost of past and future repairs in the amount of $85,000.00.

4. Aggravated damages in the amount of $50,000.00.

5. Court Order Interest on the sum of $40,000.00, being the amount of actual repair work done from September 1st, 1994.

6. Costs may be spoken to if necessary.

SUMMARY

[para249] Action No. A933928 Vancouver Registry Grimham v. Pinewood.

1. Grimham shall recover judgment in the amount of $299,021.33. If that sum is inclusive of interest under Article 6.17 of the Lease there shall be an order of interest under Article 6.17 from November 27, 1995 to and including the date of this judgment. If that sum does not include interest then Grimham is entitled to interest under Article 6.17 from the 1st day Pinewood recommenced the payment of rent up to and including the date of judgment. Counsel may speak to this issue if necessary.

2. Costs may be spoken to if necessary.

The Owners, Strata Plan NW243, petitioners, and Kurt Lee Hansen and Linda Muriel McGlogan, respondents

Vancouver Registry No. C963919

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Master Donaldson (In Chambers) Heard: August 7, 1996. Judgment: filed November 13, 1996.

Counsel: Patrick A. Williams, for the petitioners. Kurt L. Hansen, appearing on his own behalf.

[para3] The bylaws of the Strata Corporation were amended by special resolution dated the 25th of November, 1985 which includes the following provisions:

"151.1 An owner shall not

(e) do any act or permit any act to be done, or alter or permit to be altered his strata lot in any manner which will alter the exterior appearance of the structure comprising the strata lots without the consent in writing of the Strata Council;

(f) do anything or permit anything to be done on his strata lot or on the common property which will or would tend to increase the risk of fire or the rate of insurance premiums with respect thereto; (k) do or permit anything to be done that may cause damage to trees, plants, bushes, flowers or lawns and shall not place chairs, tables and other objects on the lawns and grounds so as to damage them or to prevent growth or to interfere with the cutting of the lawns or the maintenance of the grounds generally;

(w) do any act or thing or neglect or fail to do any act or thing which would render invalid any insurance and maintained by the Strata Corporation or which would increase the premium therefor."

[para4] Strata Lot 56 is a ground level strata lot and it is agreed that the Owners of Strata Lot 56 have exclusive use of common property serving as a patio. Within that area the respondents installed a hot tub sometime after June of 1995. It should be noted that the patio area is surrounded on all sides, either by a portion of the exterior wall of the building, a 6 ft. high solid fence or a 4 ft. high lattice fence/gateway. To suggest that it is open to the use of other owners of the strata plan is ludicrous. It is fully enclosed and clearly for the exclusive use of the Owners of Strata Lot 56 and any guests or invitees.

[para7] In the affidavit of Mr. Ellis he states that the concerns in his letter of the 2nd of June, 1995 are "valid and real" and further states that the Strata Corporation plans to paint all the buildings this year, and "I am convinced the Strata Corporation will suffer increased costs of painting and suffer inconvenience as the result of the presence of the hot tub". He further states that "the continued presence of the hot tub unreasonably interferes with the use and enjoyment of the common property by other owners."

[para8] Mr. Hansen in his affidavit points out that there have been no noise complaints whatsoever, that there was no evidence at the hearing on the 7th of August, or prior, of any insurance risk, increased or otherwise, as a result of the placing of the hot tub.

[para9] There was no evidence at the hearing or otherwise of any increased cost or inconvenience relating to the proposed painting. There was no evidence at the hearing or in any affidavit of any attempt by others to use the area, much less that its presence, in fact, unreasonably interferes with the use and enjoyment of the common property by other owners.

[para10] On the 21st of November, 1995 a bylaw was passed which specifically excludes the installation of a hot tub. This bylaw was passed well after the hot tub was installed.

[para12] I am satisfied that they are all distinguishable, in that the respondents have exclusive use of the common property, on and within which the hot tub has been placed. Its placement clearly does not bring it within the definitions of "building exterior", "walls", and is much more similar to the shed which was the subject of the decision of Buchbinder v. Strata Plan VR2096 (1992) 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 325.

[para13] Subsequent to the placement of the hot tub, the Strata Corporation has passed a bylaw which prohibits hot tubs. No authorities were provided which would indicate that the Strata Corporation can properly prohibit in a retroactive way the placement of a hot tub on common property which is clearly designated as being for the exclusive use of one of the strata units. No where is it indicated that the bylaws passed by Strata Counsel must be logical or, indeed, even sensible, when subjected to scrutiny after the fact. If a bylaw has been properly passed by a Strata Council it affects all members of the Strata Corporation and the Strata Council is able to take the steps it deems necessary to enforce that bylaw. I have made reference to the "background" and the purported concerns of the Strata Council, or perhaps more particularly the property manager, were referred to by both the petitioner and respondents in their material and argument. As the bylaw was passed subsequent to the placement of the hot tub I am satisfied that in the absence of authority to the contrary, the bylaw does not have retroactive effect and therefore this hot tub need not be removed by the respondents.

[para14] The petition therefore is dismissed. So far as the issue of costs are concerned, the respondents are entitled to their costs. In the usual course, the Owners of Strata Lot 56 would be required to pay a portion of the legal fees and the costs I have just ordered be incurred by the petitioners. I am satisfied that the Owners of Strata Lot 56 should not be required to bear any such fees, expenses or costs.

Vancouver Registry No. A941493

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Huddart J. (In Chambers) Oral judgment: September 29, 1995.

Counsel: Deborah A. Satanove and Bruce E.B. Gailey, appearing on behalf of the petitioners. Richard J. Olson and Robert Lonergan, appearing on behalf of the respondent Radium Valley Vacation Resort Ltd. Walley P. Lightbody, Q.C., appearing on behalf of the respondent The Owners, Strata Plan N-50.

[para1] HUDDART J. (orally):-- The petitioners seek the appointment of an administrator of the respondent strata corporation under Section 71 of the Condominium Act and a forensic audit of the books of account of the strata corporation to determine the cause of and the responsibility for the substantial accumulated deficit of the strata corporation. In support they provide a great many affidavits, most of which explain the petitioners' concerns and suggest reasons for them. Responding affidavits also contain largely opinion.

[para2] Three documents are really helpful. the report of Touche Ross to the Strata Council dated August 5, 1994, the report of Strataco Management Ltd. to this court filed on March 31, 1995, and the plan of action in response to those reports approved by the Strata Council on July 8, 1995. Those documents show clearly that Radium Valley Vacation Resort Ltd. has made many serious mistakes in its management of the strata corporation under its contract to perform virtually all the duties of the Strata Council. They also establish that the management company has had difficulty in distinguishing its obligations as agent for the Strata Council from its obligations under agreements related to time-shared lots.

[para4] The struggle between competing groups in the strata corporation goes back at least to 1989. This application is only the latest in the series of expensive battles. It is unlikely to be the last before the parties run out of money. The fundamental difference in vision will be fought out in the companion proceeding between some home owners and the developer over the use of vacant land adjacent to the home owners' area of the strata corporation's total area.

[para6] This court has intervened on at least six previous occasions. An attempted arbitration has failed. Meanwhile the strata corporation has suffered an accumulated operating deficit of about $400,000. Until the Strata Council commissioned the review by Touche Ross nothing seems to have been done to deal with it, other than a modest per capita assessment in 1991 that may not have been lawful. The budgeting process has been hopelessly inadequate. The evidence gives no reason to conclude that the process will succeed for the coming year. The external accountants were of little assistance.

[para7] Volunteer members of the Strata Council including some of the petitioners have come and gone. Today there are six members on the Strata Council, two representing the home owners and their 59 lots, one representing the vacation home owners' 10 lots, and three the recreational vehicle owners' 11 lots. On an earlier application Mr. Justice Meredith doubted the legality of such a division given the absence of separate sections in the Constitution of the Strata Corporation.

[para9] That plan contained two owners' resolutions that were unacceptable to the petitioners, firstly, a resolution authorizing an assessment to be paid to the management company as trustee for the developer and the lessee associations as their interests might appear, rather than to the Strata Corporation and, secondly, a resolution approving the 1994 financial statements. The plaintiffs obtained an injunction from Madam Justice Allen to prevent any resolution authorizing payment of any assessment to the management company and/or a resolution approving the financial statement.

[para10] The hearing of this petition was adjourned pending an extraordinary general meeting to be held on or before August 5, 1995. At that meeting the strata council was unable to obtain a seconder for its resolution to terminate the management contract in accordance with its terms, and was able to obtain approval for an assessment only sufficient to pay third parties. So the democratic process in which the Strata Council had vested confidence failed for reasons the evidence does not reveal beyond the differences between the two groups. [para11] The evidence does not give me confidence that the best efforts of the Strata Council will produce any better result at the annual general meeting to be held on November 25 at Radium. Meanwhile Mr. Lindsay had resigned and Valerie Davis, the principal of the developer and of the management company has become chair of the Strata Council. Indeed that happened before the extraordinary general meeting which she chaired.

[para12] Demonstrated inability to manage is sufficient cause for the appointment of an administrator. The only problem is that of cost. To date the Strata Corporation has become liable for $101,000 for the professional fees of Touche, Ross, Strataco, and Connell Lightbody.

[para13] Ms Satanove says the time has come to stop the accumulation of legal costs, to appoint an administrator, to give the Strata Corporation the opportunity to be reorganized by a professional, and to pay the $50,000 that the administrator will charge. The Strata Council asks for one more chance, the annual general meeting. The developer agrees, but says that if an administrator is appointed the administrator should be for a limited term and with limited powers.

[para14] The plaintiffs say that anything less than an administrator with the full powers of a Strata Corporation for one year will not work. I do not agree. I have decided that only the appointment of an administrator has any hope of bringing order to the affairs of the Strata Corporation, but I do not think that the democratic government of the community should be over-ridden entirely by this court. The developer owns or controls 27 of the home lots and the 80 time-shared lots, subject to its agreement as lessor with the lessees of the time-share units. Because the developer does not have confidence in Strataco's objectivity and for reason, in my view, having reviewed the report, I will not appoint Strataco as the administrator.

[para15] If counsel cannot agree on which of the other two management companies proposed by the petitioners should be appointed I will insert one of them arbitrarily into the order. If counsel cannot agree on the remuneration for the administrator I will fix the remuneration on the basis of written submissions presented with the orders proposed by each party.

[para16] The administrator will have all the powers and responsibilities of the Strata Council until January 31, 1996, but none of the powers of the Strata Corporation, that is of the owners. It will have liberty to apply for directions and further powers on two days' notice to counsel for those represented on this hearing. I anticipate that in the course of carrying out its duties the administrator will consult the Strata Council and its committees. On or before January 31 the administrator is to report to this court with such recommendations as it sees fit to make for the continued governance of the Strata Council and the Strata Corporation.

[para17] To assist the administrator and the parties at the least expense to all, I will hear any motions in this proceeding pending the receipt of that report. In this way I hope to relieve the concern of the petitioners that the court's partial solutions will continue to fail. I will not direct a financial audit at this time. Undoubtedly the administrator will take such steps as it considers appropriate to deal with such claims as the Strata Corporation may have against others and such claims as others may have against the Strata Corporation. I appreciate that counsel may have some questions or some comments.

Vancouver Registry No. A950508

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Holmes J. Heard: June 30, 1995. Judgment: filed July 6, 1995.

On his own behalf and for Shirley Ann Macdonald, Claimants: I.A. Macdonald. Counsel for the Defendant: P. Shier.

[para1] HOLMES J.:-- This is an appeal from a decision of Judge Rodgers of the Provincial Court of British Columbia awarding damages to the claimants Macdonald against the defendants Burge.

[para2] The appeal was by way of trial de novo in this Court.

[para3] The Macdonalds claim damages against the Burges of $3,848.46. The claim represents the amount they paid as "special assessment for repairs" as owners of one of 113 strata units, contained in five residential buildings, within a condominium complex in West Vancouver known as Strata VR 510.

[para4] The Macdonalds purchased their strata unit from the Burges under an Agreement for Sale of January 18, 1992 and took possession May 1, 1992. They claim the Burges negligently misrepresented a known future liability for repair costs and failed to disclose latent defects in the Strata Corporation buildings known to them.

[para5] The Macdonalds never met the Burges prior to the offer and acceptance as recorded by the Agreement for Sale of January 18, 1992. Mr. Macdonald thought they had on one occasion but on the evidence of other witnesses I find he was mistaken.

[para6] Some history is required for an understanding of what gave rise to the Macdonald's claims. Mr. Burge was the Chair of the Maintenance and Repair Committee of the Strata Council. His committee determined that extensive repair work was required to the five residential buildings comprising the complex. They were 14 years old, and repair costs were in excess of $150,000 a year. His committee proposed the building be upgraded to resolve continuing repair and maintenance problems and that the substantial monies required be borrowed and repaid by special assessment on the strata owners.

[para7] The proposal was presented to the October 30, 1991 Annual General Meeting of owners and the Special Resolutions required for implementation were defeated.

[para9] Mr. Burge appreciated the repair and maintenance issues, and its future financial consequence to owners, was of importance to prospective purchasers. He provided Ms. Higgins with a copy of the 1991 Annual General Meeting Minutes which outline the problem, the solution proposed, and recorded the defeat of the necessary Resolutions to implement the proposal suggested by Mr. Burge's committee.

See L.S. re special assessment for maintenance.

[para11] Following defeat of the proposal advanced by Ms. Burge's committee at the 1991 Annual General Meeting the Strata Council pursued an alternative plan which involved proceeding with repairs to only one of the five buildings and then use that experience to test the repair technique proposed, its effectiveness, and determine the cost of proceeding to repair all buildings. The building chosen for this project was the one containing the Burge unit.

[para12] An Extraordinary General Meeting was held January 16, 1992 and a Special Resolution to implement the project, at a cost not to exceed $90,000, was approved. It was to be funded by two special assessments of the owners, the first in February 1992, the second in May 1992. These two assessments in respect of the Burge unit totalled approximately $800. Mr. Burge advised the Macdonalds he would pay these assessments, and he did.

[para13] The Macdonalds viewed the subject strata unit in the afternoon of January 18, 1992 in the company of their realtor, Ms. Hassam. Ms. Higgins testified on that occasion she spoke to the three of them and in the context of explaining evident leaks and repair problems with the Burge unit told them of the background to the repair and maintenance problems in the complex, the proposal that had been put forward by Mr. Burge's committee, and the rejection of it by the owners.

[para14] Ms. Higgins said she read them the gist of the Resolutions from the Annual General Meeting of October 30, 1991 Minutes, explained the differences between the "A" and "B" Resolutions proposed, and the fact of their defeat.

[para15] Copies of the Minutes were not given to the Macdonalds nor Ms. Hassam at that time as they were just viewing the unit and had made no commitment of purchase.

[para17] The Macdonalds decided very quickly they wished to purchase the unit and the Agreement for Sale was prepared by Ms. Hassam for presentation to the Burges. It is of consequence that the only conditions on the offer were:

Purchaser receiving and perusing and being satisfied with the By-Laws and Financial Statements of the Strata Corporation by January 19, 1992.

An addendum was added to the Agreement for Sale confirming:

Vendors will pay special assessment fees due in February 1992 and May 1992.

[para18] Ms. Hassam on behalf of the Macdonalds met in the evening of January 18, 1992 with Ms. Higgins and the Burges to present the offer to purchase.

[para19] Ms. Higgins testified there was again a full discussion at this time as to what had transpired at the October 30, 1991 Annual General Meeting regarding repair work, the fact it had been turned down, and the new plan proceeding in respect of only the one building. Mr. Burge had his complete file on the table where they sat discussing the matter. The file contained notices, minutes of meetings, statements, and his complete file from the Repair and Maintenance committee in a large three ring binder. Ms. Higgins explained the matter and Mr. Burge was there to answer questions and supply detail or documents he had, but none were requested by Ms. Hassam apart from the By-Laws and Financial Statements referred to in the Agreement for Sale.

[para20] Ms. Hassam does not recall discussion about the repair issue, but agreed it was possibly discussed. I accept there was a discussion as recalled by Ms. Higgins and Mr. Burge.

[para21] Mr. Hassam appeared not to believe she would fail to take any documents offered and give them to the Macdonalds. The evidence was not that she was offered a bundle of documents and declined to take them, but that a discussion about the repair problem was held, and she could have any documents Mr. Burge had regarding the matter upon request. The evidence is she did not request any documents or further information.

[para23] His initial reaction however when he learned that he was to be assessed for the future repair work to be undertaken on the remaining four buildings in the complex confirms his belief he was not to be assessed for any of that work as Mr. Burge had paid the assessment for his building. He must have realized his fundamental misconception had he looked at any of the materials concerning the repair work distributed to owners in advance of meetings to vote approval, which I am satisfied he received as it was mailed to all strata owners.

[para24] I conclude Mr. Macdonald's misunderstanding as to his liability as owner for future repair costs to all buildings comprising the Strata Corporation was not the result of any misrepresentation by the Burges or Ms. Higgins. It may well be however that his lack of basic knowledge as to the operation of the Strata Corporation in raising funds for future repair resulted in his not appreciating the significance of what Ms. Higgins outlined as to the status of the repair issue.

[para25] I accept the evidence of Mr. Burge and Ms. Higgins that the Macdonalds and their agent Ms. Hassam were advised of the incipient problem faced by the Strata owners as a result of the rejection of the October 30, 1991 Resolutions containing Mr. Burge's committee recommendations.

[para27] The evidence does not support Mr. Burge having misrepresented anything material to the repair issue. The information he gave was accurate, no relevant information was withheld deliberately or negligently. Nothing was hidden. Indeed Mr. Burge went to great lengths in respect to the repair issue to place it clearly before all the owners so they had information on which to make their decisions.

[para29] The allegation of non-disclosure of a latent defect known by the seller Mr. Burge is misconceived in the context of this matter. It is not a listing of the myriad of defects in the five strata corporation buildings which is at issue. The issue is the communication, or lack thereof, that there was a serious problem of deferred repairs and maintenance, which would require remedy sometime in the future, and would then be of substantial expense.

[para30] I have found that "information" was not "latent", nor could it be considered a "defect" in this matter. The information was communicated, documents were offered and readily available for detail if requested from Mr. Burge, or by minimal diligence from the Strata Corporation itself.

CBR# 319

The Owners, Strata Plan NW 498, Plaintiff, and Edwin Janzen doing business under the firm name and style of Janzen Roofing and the said Edwin Janzen, and Tania Maria Janzen, Defendants

Vancouver Registry No. A921983

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Maczko J. Heard: May 24 - 27, 1994. Judgment: filed September 15, 1994.

[para1] MACZKO J.-- The plaintiff is a strata corporation with a condominium complex in Richmond. The plaintiff contracted with the defendant that the defendant would put a new roof on one of the buildings in the complex. The roof was completed by 1988 and by 1991 it had failed and water began to leak into some of the apartments below. The defendant refused to repair or replace the roof and this is an action for damages for breach of contract.

[para3] The plaintiff summarizes its claim as follows:

(a) that the Plaintiff relied upon the Defendant for the design and installation of the new roof to Building A, which design was faulty and led to premature failure of the roofing system he installed, such that he is liable to the Plaintiff for breach of contract and in negligence;

(b) that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant required the Defendant to install the new roof in accordance with manufacturer's specifications, which the Defendant failed to do;

(c) that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant included various terms by implication, such as the design of the new roof would be reasonably fit and suitable for the purpose it was supplied, namely, a flat waterproof roof, that the work would be carried out with reasonable care and skill, and the roof would be constructed in a good workmanlike manner with proper installation techniques and materials, which the Defendant also failed to do;

(d) that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant contained an express guarantee that the new roof would be maintenance free and leak-proof for ten years following installation, which guarantee has been breached by the premature failure of this roof;

(e) that the specific deficiencies of the new roof included a lack of compliance with the manufacturer's specifications for the membrane being installed (.e.g. failure to utilize a two-ply system where indicated, failure to utilize ballast or torch down the entire membrane, failure to use a base sheet, failure to torch around fire or perimeter walls), use of unsoldered vents, and insufficient insulation above existing tar and gravel roof causing condensation within the roofing system.

I find that the plaintiff's claim has been made out in every respect.

Contract Formation

[para4] The defendant argued that the plaintiff has not proved that there was a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant.

[para5] I find that a contract was formed and the evidence of that is overwhelming. The defendant gave a quote for doing the roof. On June 16, 1988, the strata council accepted the quote. That acceptance must have been communicated to the defendant because he started and completed the work and provided a guarantee.

Breach of Contract

[para6] I have been convinced by the evidence that it is bad practice to put a new roof over an old roof and that an old roof should be stripped off before a new roof is installed. The defendant said that he gave the owners two options at different prices. One involved going over the old roof and the other involved stripping off the old roof and putting on a new one. He said the owners chose the cheaper option.

[para7] The defendant gave no advice to the plaintiff regarding the cheaper option, i.e., putting a new roof over the old one is a bad practice and may create problems. In my view he should have given that advice. If he did not know it was bad practice then he should have, and if he simply does not agree with that position then his opinion does not conform to what I find to be the standard in the industry. Even if he thinks that going over an old roof is an acceptable option, he should have informed the owners of the other view and the risks which are generally accepted in the industry so that the plaintiff could make an informed choice. I find that the defendant was negligent in that respect.

1. there may have been a leak in one or more of the valve boxes which put water into the boxes and then leaked under the membrane;

2. there was a snow build-up which caused snow to be blown under and up the caps on the vents and then melted with the result that water flowed under the membrane;

3. water came from the side of the roof from under the mansards which must have leaked.

None of these theories had any credible support in the evidence.

[para9] Based on the extent of the water damage, it seems improbable to me that sufficient water could come from the snow theory or from the mansard theory. A leakage in the valve boxes could cause enough water to discharge; however, there is no evidence that that ever happened other than the suggestions made by Mr. Turner, a former janitor. I do not accept his evidence on that point. He was clearly hostile to the strata corporation because he was fired for disloyalty and misconduct. His evidence was contradicted by others in significant respects and I accept the evidence of those other witnesses.

[para10] In any event it is the defendant's obligation to provide what he contracted to provide which is a roof fit for the purpose. Here he contracted to provide a roof and gave a 10 year guarantee in the following terms:

There is a 10 year guarantee on the installation of 4MM 100 percent Polyester Granulato Roofing System on 10160 Ryon Road, Richmond, B.C. completed on the 18th of July, 1988 by Janzen Roofing.

Due to the slowness of Dibiten Canada, the 10 year warantee [sic] has not yet arrived. In order to satisfy you, I sent a warantee [sic] of another customer as a sample. An identical is being issued to the above address.

[para11] After problems in the roof appeared and the defendant was contacted, he backed up his guarantee by stating "this guarantee will be honoured if there is a problem with the roof." This comment was recorded in the minutes of the strata council dated May 15, 1991. The comment purports to record a discussion between the defendant Mr. Janzen and Mr. Ellis, the property manager at that time.

[para12] The defendant takes the position that the roof has not failed and that the moisture problems and leaks that were experienced were not caused by failure of the roof system. Having heard the defendant's and the plaintiff's explanations for the possible cause of the leaks, I have concluded that the plaintiff's explanation for the leaks is far more likely. The extent of the moisture under the new membrane covered approximately 1,000 sq. ft. according to the defendant. I do not believe his explanation for the leaks could have caused such extensive damage. It is far more likely that the leaks occurred somewhere in the roof system as suggested by the plaintiff's experts and I accept the evidence of the plaintiff's experts.

[para13] One likely cause is that the metal vent boxes were not all soldered on the verticle seam. Mr. Janzen said that they were all soldered; however, two independent inspectors gave evidence that they inspected the roof vents and they saw a number of roof vents that were not soldered on the verticle seam. Mr. Janzen said they were not telling the truth. I accept the evidence of the plaintiff's experts. They had no reason to lie and I do not see how they could have been mistaken in saying what they actually saw. These men were experts specifically trained to inspect and look for the types of problems they described. I do not believe they could look at a vent and not be able to tell whether or not it had been soldered.

[para14] We also had the evidence of Mr. Turner, the former janitor at the strata complex. In spite of his obvious hostility to the plaintiff, he said that after moisture started dripping into the suites he went on to the roof and he said he could see pin holes in the vents and he could see water running into it. He said he coated six of the vents with tar which stopped the water from coming into the suites right away. Based on the evidence I have heard, those unsoldered vents were capable of causing the leaks as described. However, there were a number of other problems which might have caused the leaks as well.

[para15] The defendant used a single ply roofing system and the membrane material was purchased from Dibiten. The company produces a manual which instructs roofers on how the product should be applied. Dibiten also stipulates that the failure to follow the specifications will void the warranty. The defendant failed to follow the instructions in a number of respects: X4&1. The specifications provided that the Dibiten membrane should be torched down so that all parts of the membrane are bonded to the surface below or, as an alternative, the membrane can be loose laid but, if that method is used the membrane must be ballasted by laying down gravel at a rate of 1,000 lbs per 100 sq. ft. The defendant followed neither of these procedures. He followed the procedure of loose laying the membrane in strips and overlapping the edges by 4 inches. The bottom strip was nailed and the top strip was torch bonded to the layer strip but only to the extent of the 4 inches. The Dibiten specifications do not provide for this procedure. The defendant said that he had attended a seminar in 1983 put on by Dibiten. He said he was told that the loose laid method which he used was acceptable, but this was not in the manual. I find his explanation improbable and there was no evidence from Dibiten to support his contention.

2. The specifications provided that a fibreglass sheet should be laid down before laying the membrane so that the membrane can be bonded to it. This was not done.

3. The specifications provided that two-ply membrane should be used on flashings. This was not done.

4. The specifications provided that on vents two-ply flashing should be used with a 6 inch overlap of Dibiten. This was not done.

5. All stacks and vents require two-ply flashing. This was not done. The specifications even provided drawings on how the two-ply flashing should be applied. The procedure was not followed.

6. The specifications describe in detail and show a diagram on how firewalls should be treated. Two-ply membrane should be applied with the membrane going over the top of one wall of the firewall and torched down. The defendant used only one-ply, brought the membrane only to the top edge of the firewall and nailed it. It was not torched down.

There are other respects in which the specifications were not followed. However, I have listed enough of them to illustrate that the defendant did not follow proper procedures and he did not do a good job. [para16] On my reading of the warranty conditions, Dibiten would be within its legal rights to deny the warranty because its product was improperly applied. Indeed, a warranty has never been supplied by Dibiten for the roof in question.

[para17] The defendant acknowledged that the purpose of the various specifications to which I have just referred is to ensure as far as possible that a roof will be waterproof. The defendant expressed the view that they were, in his opinion, not necessary. I reject his view. It is important to an owner to obtain a manufacturer's warranty. The roof must follow the specifications to get that warranty. Failure to follow the specifications and the failure to obtain the manufacturer's warranty is, in my view, a fundamental breach of this contract.

[para18] However, apart from the breach and apart from the specifications, I find that the defendant did not follow sound roofing practices as described by the plaintiff's experts, one of whom said that as an inspector he would not have approved this roof as applied by the defendant. The roof is showing a number of problems. The system is deteriorating rapidly and will cause problems inside the building with rotting wood if it is not repaired.

[para19] On January 9, 1992, the defendant acknowledged to the chairperson of the strata council that the roof system had failed and needed to be replaced. This acknowledgment was confirmed in a letter written to the defendant. The membrane is stretching and bridging over corners so that if anyone stepped on it it would break. Nails are pushing up from the fibreboard and pushing up the membrane. No stripping was used on vents and this is considered to be bad practice and did not conform to the specifications provided by Dibiten. Stripping means that the flange of the metal vent box is placed on top of the membrane and then a second piece of membrane is laid on top of the flange and brought up the side of the metal vents and torched on.

The Warranty

[para20] The defendant said that he hand-delivered a conditional 10 year warranty to Century 21, the property managers for the plaintiff, on or about August 15, 1988, a month or so after the roofing job was completed. Mr. Morrison, the property manager at that time, said he never saw the conditional warranty until the litigation started. His evidence is supported by the fact that after it is alleged that the conditional warranty was delivered, he wrote to the defendant asking for the guarantee. He said the only document he received was a letter of October 19, 1988, which set out the terms of the guarantee referred to on page 5 of this judgment. It would seem very odd that Mr. Morrison should be asking for the guarantee if the warranty had already been received.

[para21] The defendant said he worked out of his home and his home was his business address. The document which purports to be the conditional warranty is dated August 15, 1988, and shows the defendant's address as 157th Avenue, Surrey. However, the October 19th guarantee shows the defendant's address as 108th Avenue, Surrey. The defendant did not move from 108th Avenue to 157th Avenue until November 1989. The defendant's explanation was that he was using two addresses and had two sets of stationery in 1988. One was on 108th Avenue where he was living and the other was 157th Avenue to where he moved in October, 1989. He said he was using the 157th address for two years and that it was the address of a friend and he subsequently bought the house on 157th Avenue from this friend. When asked to give his friend's name he said the person's name was Tim and his last name was a dutch name but that's all he could say at that time. The following day of the trial I asked the defendant some further questions about the discrepancy in the addresses and this time he said that he purchased the property from a Chinese couple and the name of his friend was Eddy Sunset. I do not accept his explanation.

[para23] A similar problem arose with regard to the quotations given by the defendant. He claims that he gave two options, one with the old roof being torn off and one without and that the plaintiff chose the cheaper option. Both quotes were dated July 29, 1988. However, one quote was on the 157th Avenue letterhead and the other was on the 108th Avenue letterhead. I do not accept his explanation for these documents and I find that the defendant is not a credible witness.

[para24] After problems with the roof appeared, there was a series of meetings which included different people at different times in which the parties attempted to discover the cause of the leaks. The meetings culminated in an agreement that an independent expert would be appointed to assess the problem and the defendant agreed to be bound by his findings. This agreement was confirmed in a letter from Mr. Ellis to Mr. Janzen on June 24, 1991. The letter stated "It was further understood that you would accept the findings of the inspector during review of the cut tests". At discovery Mr. Janzen said he had never seen the letter before. However, at trial he said that he contacted Mr. Ellis after he received the letter and informed him that he did not agree with that statement in the letter. During cross-examination he agreed that his statement on discovery was not true.

[para25] Mr. Weldon, an expert and an inspector from Acqua-Thermal Consultants Ltd., was selected and he prepared a report. The defendant then refused to accept the findings of Mr. Weldon and the problems with the roof remained unresolved. [para26] Another example of the defendant's lack of credibility was with regard to the cut tests that were performed by Acqua-Thermal. During his examination in chief, the defendant claimed that he recalled the day the tests were performed and meeting Mr. Weldon on that day, and he claimed to relate the substance of the discussion that he had with Mr. Weldon at that time. However, at his discovery he denied ever meeting Mr. Weldon on the roof or anyone from that firm. When the obvious discrepancy was put to the defendant he said "I do remember that we did cut tests but I don't specifically remember with whom I was up there." Again, I do not accept his evidence on this point.

[para27] I find that the defendant has breached his contract with the plaintiff to supply a roofing system which was fit for the purpose and I find that the defendant has not fulfilled his 10 year guarantee. The roof failed in less than 3 years and the defendant has made no attempt to rectify the problem.

[para28] The plaintiff claims $51,146 as damages which is the cost of a new two-ply roof, and the cost of inspection $1,070. If I awarded the amount claimed, the plaintiff would receive a new roof which was better than the one for which it had contracted. The contract with the defendant provided that the old roof would not be torn off and this meant a lower price. If I awarded $51,146, the old roof would be torn off. The plaintiff is only entitled to what it lost. In this case the plaintiff spent $37,550 on the roof and $1,070 for inspections and I award damages in those amounts.

Vancouver Registry: No. 92-10210

British Columbia Provincial Court Vancouver, British Columbia Martinson Prov. Ct. J. Heard: March 2 and 16, 1994. Judgment: April 8, 1994.

Counsel for the Claimant: J. Anderson. Counsel for the Defendant: J. Clee and B. Nelson.

[para1] MARTINSON PROV. CT. J.:-- This is a claim by Joan Morrison for negligent misrepresentation with respect to her offer to purchase a condominium unit in downtown Vancouver. She states that Eddie Yan represented to her that the unit had a storage locker and that she relied on that representation. She did not close and lost her deposit. She is claiming the return of that $5,000.00 deposit. The Defendants acknowledge that there was not a storage area but say that no such representation was made. Alternatively, they argue that even if there was, there was not reliance on it.

[para2] The issues to be determined are:

1. Was there a representation that there was a storage locker? 2. If there was, was reliance placed on it?

THE EVIDENCE:

[para3] The unit in question is a 450 square feet bachelor apartment but has a balcony that Ms. Morrison planned to enclose. It also had access to a private patio area. Ms. Morrison testified that it was small but she felt that she could close in the balcony and it would be fine. She said that while she and her realtor, Agnieska Hedller, were being shown the unit by Mr. Yan, she asked him about a storage locker because there was only one closet. She said he took them down where the cars are. They went to a door and he put a key in and said it was the wrong key. He said "I must have the wrong key, this is the storage room. This is the storage area." He said it was the usual apartment size. She learned that she might not be able to enclose the balcony and the storage became vitally important to store things like vacuum cleaners in.

[para4] A concern arose about leakage. She felt there was a water leakage problem. Mr. Lau, who owns the unit, said there was a small mark but he has never had any problem with leakage. Ms. Kowalski, the manager, said that there is no problem on the side of the building that this unit is on.

[para5] During the course of her discussions with Ms. Kowalski, Ms. Morrison discovered that there was no storage space. She decided to not go through with the deal. She said that Ms. Hedller recommended that she not proceed.

[para6] Ms. Morrison agreed that she did not make the offer subject to confirmation that there was a storage area and made no effort to actually see it. She said she "regrets that very much".

[para7] Ms. Hedller testified on behalf of Ms. Morrison. She said the question of a storage locker was not raised in the unit but she said they went downstairs. There was a door and Mr. Yan said it should be a locker. He tried the key and it wouldn't open. He did not say anything else. She never confirmed that there was a storage locker. She was asked if she would have included it in the offer and she said "of course".

[para8] Ms. Hedller said she did not advise Ms. Morrison to rescind the contract. She also said that Ms. Morrison would have preferred a storage locker but it was not included in her request. She did not say she needed a storage locker before she made the offer.

[para9] Mr. Yan said that the property was listed in September 1991. He had been in it several times and noticed no water problem. On December 7th he showed the unit to Ms. Morrison and Ms. Hedller. He said the viewing took about thirty minutes. There was no discussion about a storage area in the unit. They went downstairs to look at the common facilities. He was not asked about storage.

[para10] He said they looked at the parking facility and laundry facilities. There were two other doors and he did not know what they were. He used the common key. Ms. Morrison asked if it was a storage locker. He said he did not know and "would have to get back to her to confirm". If there was one it might be there but he didn't know if there was one.

[para11] He said that early the next morning Ms. Hedller called to say that she had an offer to present. Neither Ms. Morrison nor Ms. Hedller asked about the storage facility. He had not had time to check it out. There was no further conversation about it before the contract of purchase and sale was signed. He provided, as required, copies of the strata corporation by-laws and financial statements. He said they do not show storage units. He agreed in cross-examination that storage areas are shown on the strata plans but said they do not indicate that they relate to individual units.

[para12] He later learned that Ms. Morrison did not want to complete because of a water leakage problem. He said there was no evidence of such a problem. There was one small brown mark on one of the walls. They offered to solve the problem if there was a problem but she was not interested.

WAS THERE A REPRESENTATION THAT THERE WAS A STORAGE LOCKER?

The Claimants position:

[para13] I was referred to two cases: Maddocks v. Garneau B.C.S.C. July 2, 1986, New Westminster Registry No. C841013 [1986] B.C.J. No. 2734; and Pellatt and Pellatt v. Collis et al. B.C.S.C. November 16, 1984, Penticton Registry No. 343 P 81. In the Pellatt case Mr. Justice Locke considered the nature of the duty of a real estate agent and, in particular, the duty in the making of ambiguous statements. He referred at p. 8 to this statement in Bango v. Holt ([1971] 5 W.W.R. 522 at 528):

It is well established in this province that a quasi-fiduciary relationship between potential purchaser and real estate company does arise under the doctrine of Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, [1964] A.C. 465 [1963] 3 W.L.R. 101, [1963] 2 All

E.R. 575. That legal duty has been recognized in this Court by Maclean J. in Dodds v. Milman et al. (1964), 47 W.W.R. 690, 45 D.L.R. (2d) 472, and Dryer J. in Hopkins et al. v. Butts et al. (1967), 65 D.L.R. (2d) 711. The doctrine of Hedley Byrne v. Heller has been quoted also with approval in our Court of Appeal, though distinguished in Mutual Mortgage Corp'n. Ltd. v. Bank of Montreal et al. (1965), 53 W.W.R. 724, and most recently in Windsor Motors Ltd. v. Powell River (1969), 68 W.W.R. 173, 4 D.L.R. (3d) 155. I quote from the judgment of Branca J.A. at p. 177:

In the Hedley Byrne & Co. case it was held that, quite apart from a contractual or fiduciary relationship a negligent though honest misrepresentation, whether verbal or in writing, might form the basis of an action for damages for financial loss, as the law implies a duty of care when and where a party seeking information from one possessed of special skills trusted that person to exercise due care and the party who makes the representations knows or should have know that reliance was being placed on his skill and his judgment.

[para14] It was argued that the evidence of Ms. Morrison should be accepted. If it is, there was a representation that was admittedly false.

The Defendants' Position:

[para15] The Defendants argued that there was no representation. Mr. Yan testified that there was not. Ms. Hedller, the Claimant's own witness, does not support her version of the conversation.

WAS THERE RELIANCE ON ANY REPRESENTATION?

The Claimant's Position:

[para16] It was argued that there was in fact reliance on the representation. Ms. Morrison took steps such as selling her bed. She said that she required the storage space because of the small size of the unit. It was further argued that the fact that she did not pursue the question of the storage area with Mr. Yan shows that she did in fact rely on what he said.

[para17] I was referred to this comment in the Pellett case at p. 7 on the issue of reliance:

... It does not lie in the mouth of a wrongdoing vendor to assign the importance of which of the representations made by vendor to purchaser is a cause of the sale.

Defendants' Position:

[para19] In support of that proposition I was referred to Roberts and Whieldon v. Corrigan and Corrigan et al., [1993] B.C.J. No. 1671, B.C.S.C. July 15, 1993, (Kelowna Registry No. 14402) in which Mr. Justice Melnick said at p. 7:

It is clear to me from all of the evidence, notwithstanding the conflicts in it, that the Corrigals made no misrepresentation as to the condition of the roof or the home upon which the Plaintiffs relied. If so, they surely would have included such representation as a specific term of their offer to purchase. They did not do so and the contract of purchase and sale clearly indicated that there were no representations made by the Corrigals as vendors other those contained in the document.

[para20] I was also referred to Guy v. Wagner et al., [1987] B.C.J. No. 138, B.C.S.C. February 9, 1987 (New Westminster Registry No. C841842) and Davie v. Huckschlag et al., [1993] B.C.J. No. 1653, B.C.S.C. July 5, 1993 (Vancouver Registry No. C910767) in which claims were dismissed in spite of the fact that there were misrepresentations found and damages suffered because there was no reliance on the representations.

[para21] The evidence of Ms. Morrison was characterized as self-serving. The Defendants argue that she signed the contract of purchase and sale because of the location, the terrace and the view. She wrongly felt that there was a water problem and did not want to purchase the property because of that. That aspect of her claim was abandoned as she was unable to prove it. Now she wants to get her deposit back based on the fact that there was no storage closet.

[para22] I was referred to the letter sent to Mr. Yan in which Ms. Morrison said that she was not completing the deal because of "the leak from the roof" into the suite. There was no mention of the storage locker.

CONCLUSION:

[para23] In a civil case such as this, the Claimant must prove the claim on a balance of probabilities. That is, the Claimant must prove that it is more likely than not that the Claimant's version is the correct one. The British Columbia Court of Appeal has described the burden of proof in a civil proceeding as being the requirement to demonstrate "a greater probability that what (the Claimant) alleges is more correct than the contrary", R. v. Findlay (1944) 60 BCR 481.

[para24] Ms. Morrison must therefore satisfy me that it is more likely than not that the representation was made. For the following reasons I am not satisfied it was made. First, Ms. Morrison's evidence on the point is contradicted not only by Mr. Van but also by her own witness, Ms. Hedller. Second, she did not include the presence of a storage locker as a specific term of her offer. Third, it is clear from the evidence as a whole that Ms. Morrison did not complete the deal because she had a concern about water leakage, not because of the storage locker. Her claim that there was water leakage is unfounded and was not pursued in this case.

[para26] The claim is dismissed.

Ocean Park Towers Ltd., Plaintiff, and Conrad Hanson, Defendant

Vancouver Registry No. C914909

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Williamson J. Heard: May 31, June 1, 2, 1994. Judgment: June 24, 1994.

Counsel for the Plaintiff: George E.H. Cadman. Counsel for the Defendant: Frank D. Corbett.

[para1] WILLIAMSON J.:-- In mid-June 1989 the defendant, president of a bank in the State of Washington, was enjoying a bicycle ride around the inner harbour area of Victoria, British Columbia. He noted with pleasure the beauty of the area and observed a number of condominium towers being built along the water. He also observed a sales office on a site on the Esquimalt side of the harbour where construction had not yet started. His interest piqued, he entered into a discussion with a sales representative for Ocean Park Towers, the proposed development. Ocean Park Towers was, he was told, to consist of two eight storey towers with six suites on each floor - a total of 96 units.

[para3] On June 17th, 1989, Mr. Hanson signed an offer to purchase on a standard British Columbia Real Estate Association form. The offer concerned suite 739 in the Ocean Tower - a suite known as a type "C" suite, located on the water side of the building.

[para4] The agreement provided for four different deposit payments: on signing, on 30 days, on 120 days and on 10 months. The sale price was $343,000. The plaintiff accepted the offer. Mr. Hanson returned to his home in Washington.

[para6] The second contract had similar staggered payments of deposits. The purchase price was $328,000. The plaintiff accepted the offer.

[para9] In April, 1991, Mr. Hanson completed the sale of the contract entered into June 17th, 1989, and took possession of suite 739. However, he declined to complete on the second contract.

[para10] The plaintiff commenced this action for specific performance or in the alternative for damages. As it turned out, the plaintiff was able to sell suite 742 in July of 1993. The selling price was $275,000, $53,000 less than the sale price of the December 30th, 1989 contract with the defendant. The plaintiff says there can be no doubt that the defendant entered into a binding contract and, as the plaintiff ended up having to sell the property later for less money, the defendant is liable for the loss.

[para11] The defendant says he is not bound by the contract. He says he was induced to enter the contract by a series of misrepresentations made by agents of the plaintiff. He says Sandra DesLisle misrepresented the quality of the view from suite 739, a factor which he says was critical to him and to his wife, misrepresented the efforts the plaintiff was prepared to make to assist him to rent the unit out, misrepresented the amount of rental income he could expect, and misrepresented the finished quality of the product.

[para12] The requirements for establishing that there has been a negligent misrepresentation have been conveniently set out by McLachlin, J.A. as she then was, in Kingu v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. (1986), 10 B.C.L.R. (2d) 15 at p. 23:

The question then is whether the requirements of tort liability on the basis of Hedley Byrne are satisfied in the case at bar. Those requirements may be summarized as follows:

- (1) A false statement negligently made;
- (2) A duty of care on the person making the statement to the recipient. A duty of care does not arise unless
 - (a) the person making the statement is possessed of special skill or knowledge on the matter in question, and
 - (b) the circumstances establish that a reasonable person making that statement would know the recipient is relying upon his skill or judgment;
- (3) Reasonable reliance on the statement by its recipient;

(4) Loss suffered as a consequence of the reliance.

[para13] Keeping this statement of the law in mind, I turn to the alleged misrepresentations. First, the defendant claimed there was a misrepresentation with respect to the quality of the construction and finish. He said he was concerned about ponding of water in some of the common areas, that the final colour of the exterior of the building was not as represented in drawings, and that there were some imperfections in the finish of the suite. In his final submission, defendant's counsel did not stress this argument.

[para14] The defendant, as is set out above, originally intended to purchase two units. He went through with the purchase of one, but did not complete on the second. He made it clear in his testimony that he completed the purchase of unit 739 because there were no misrepresentations with respect to that suite. He got, he said, what he bargained for. As the quality was acceptable in unit no. 739, it is difficult to see how the quality could have been unacceptable in unit no. 742, particular with respect to the alleged "ponding" and the concern about exterior colour. The evidence in this regard did not come near to showing false statements or reliance upon them. I find this claim unproven.

[para15] Second is the alleged misrepresentation concerning rent. This has two aspects. First, the defendant says that Mr. Moyes said that if unit 739 were to be rented he thought it would bring in approximately $1,500 a month. Subsequently, in the December discussions leading to the offer to purchase unit 742, Ms. DesLisle told the plaintiff she thought that figure was approximately right, but that unit 739, being slightly less desirable, would bring in a slightly lower rent. It was also claimed the sales people spoke of the possibility of Ocean Park finding tenants for the defendant. This claim, then, concerned alleged representations by both Moyes and DesLisle.

[para16] I find these discussions did not amount to a misrepresentation. First, both Moyes and DesLisle were talking in approximate terms. Second, construction on the two towers had not yet commenced at the time. Any prediction as to the rental market sometime hence, when the towers were completed, would of necessity be speculative. The defendant, president of a bank in the State of Washington, would understand that. Finally, the defendant went through with the purchase of unit 739 despite the fact that he intended to rent it out for three to five years. If any misrepresentation on the subject of rent was not such as to deter him from the purchase of that unit, it could not be enough to allow him to get out of his agreement to purchase unit 742.

[para17] I turn now to the subject of view. This is the alleged misrepresentation upon which the defendant places most emphasis. He testified that view was critical. The quality of the view moved him to ask Moyes if he could purchase in the Ocean Tower rather than the Park Tower as the best view units were already sold in the Park Tower. The defendant discussed view at great length with both Moyes and DesLisle. He also walked around the site himself, observing where the towers were going to be placed, in order to best ascertain what the view might be.

. Elegant twin eight storey sculptured towers with viewpoints over Victoria's Inner Harbour and the Olympic snow capped mountains . View balconies are tucked into each suite . Patio doors and windows allow 180 degree views

[para20] There was some evidence that given the height of the buildings unit 742, on the 7th floor, would be above other buildings in the vicinity. I do not, however, accept that this meant it would be higher than Park Towers. The Towers were to be essentially identical, and the seventh floor was not the top floor.

[para23] The defendant agreed that he had received the disclosure statement. He also testified that he had read it, but, as he put it, "I did not read it in any great detail".

[para25] In rejecting all of the alleged misrepresentations, I add that when the defendant wrote to the plaintiff on March 7, 1991, announcing he would not complete the purchase of suite 742, he made no reference to any of the misrepresentations claimed above. He simply said that having seen "the condominium project in person a few weeks ago my wife and I decided not to purchase unit 742F".

49. (1) In this Part the word "developer" means a person who, as principal, sells or leases, or offers or proposes to offer for sale or lease, subdivided land or more than 4 time share interests in one time share plan, but does not include a purchaser from the developer, or any subsequent purchaser, where the purchase is in respect of not more than 4 lots, 4 strata lots, one cooperative unit within a subdivision or 4 time share interests in one time share plan.

50.(8) No person, and no person on behalf of a developer, shall sell, lease or offer for sale or lease in the Province subdivided land, or more than 4 time share interests in one time share plan in respect of land, situated without the Province unless

(a) he is the holder of a valid and subsisting agent's licence and is acting on behalf of a developer, or is a licensed salesman employed by that agent;

62. No promise or agreement to purchase or lease any subdivided land or time share interest is enforceable against the purchaser or tenant by a person who has breached any of the provisions of this Part, or by a successor in title of that person.

[para27] I add that as set out in s. 1 of the Act, "subdivided land" includes land that has been divided into five or more strata lots.

[para28] The gist of these sections is that while a developer may act on its own in offering for sale or selling subdivided land, if the developer elects to have other people assume that role on its behalf, those people must be licensed real estate agents, or licensed sales people employed by such agents.

[para29] Was Mrs. DesLisle "the developer" who as principal was offering for sale the Ocean Park strata units, or was she a person acting on behalf of the developer?

[para30] The evidence disclosed that the developer Ocean Park Towers retained a company called Swiftsure to market the suites in the two towers. Swiftsure had an interest in Ocean Park. Swiftsure in turn retained Eden Holdings to undertake the on-site marketing. This consisted of having an on-site sales trailer, with representatives present to meet with the public, provide them with information, and to, if possible, get them to sign an offer to purchase. The offer to purchase, in both cases before the Court in these proceedings, was on a standard British Columbia Real Estate Association form. The sales person filled in the blanks, had the prospective purchaser sign, and witnessed that signature by signing on a line indicating "Sales Representative". For each successful sale, Swiftsure was paid a commission of 5 percent and Eden Holdings a commission of 3.5 per cent.

[para31] Mr. Eden, the principal of Eden Holdings, testified. He said he had no interest in Ocean Park Towers Ltd., although in cross examination he said he was a director of the company (thus Ocean Park Ltd. must have known of the arrangement). He testified that Eden Holdings retained both Mr. Moyes and Ms. DesLisle to act as sales representatives. Neither Moyes nor DesLisle, on their own evidence, are real estate agents or licensed sales persons as defined by the Act.

[para32] Ms. DesLisle was not paid a salary by Eden Holdings Ltd. The scheme was that for each successful sale resulting from an offer to purchase which she brought to Ocean Park Towers, she would be paid $1,000 as a referral fee. She had no experience in real estate; her normal profession is that of a music teacher. She worked under the above arrangement with Eden Holdings for about a year and managed to bring eleven successful offers to purchase. Mr. Moyes had the same arrangement as Ms. DesLisle except that he was paid $1,500 for each sale he brought.

[para34] I find that she was a person who, on behalf of the developer, offered for sale an interest in subdivided land. As she is neither the holder of a valid and subsisting agent's licence, nor a licenced salesperson employed by such an agent, Ocean Park Towers Ltd., in so using her services, was in breach of s. 50(8) of the Real Estate Act. It follows that s. 62 of the Act governs and the agreement for the purchase and sale of suite 742 is not enforceable against the defendant purchaser by Ocean Park Towers Ltd.

[para35] The plaintiff's claim is dismissed. The deposit paid pursuant to the offer executed December 30, 1989, together with Court Order Interest at the registrar's rate prevailing from time to time, will be returned to the defendant. The defendant will have his costs at scale 3.

The Owners, Strata Plan No. LMS44, Plaintiff, and RBY Holdings Ltd., Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd., Defendants

Vancouver Registry No. A923876

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Newbury J. Heard: October 12, 1993. Judgment: filed October 22, 1993.

Counsel for the Plaintiff: J.E. Rogers. Counsel for the Defendants: K.R. Doyle.

[para1] NEWBURY J.:-- The applications which were the subject of this hearing first came before me on June 25 of this year. The first was a motion by the plaintiff strata corporation for the determination of a question of law as to whether the use of certain premises in the strata development operation of a mortuary and crematorium would violate the terms of a statutory building scheme to which the land is subject; and the second was for a permanent injunction restraining such use in future. I addressed the Rule 34 question in obiter in an oral judgment delivered on July 30, but because of deficiencies in the plaintiff's Statement of Claim and doubts concerning its capacity to sue, I ruled at that time that both applications must be dismissed. The plaintiff was at liberty to re-apply once the requirements of the Condominium Act had been met and the necessary changes to its Statement of Claim had been made.

[para2] The deficiencies have now been remedied by the filing of an amended Statement of Claim, the terms of which were contested and adjudicated upon in late August. At that time, I issued an interim injunction restraining the defendants from carrying on the business of a crematorium in and about the subject property. I also indicated that counsel would be restricted on this occasion to bringing forth new facts that might be relevant, arguing cases not previously argued, and addressing the question of the appropriate remedy should the plaintiffs succeed on the question of law.

[para3] As stated in my earlier reasons, the facts of this case are simple: on June 19, 1992, RBY Holdings Ltd. ("RBY") purchased Unit 102 of Strata Plan LMS44, a development in Delta known as "Tilbury Corporate Centre", from Prudential Development Corporation ("Prudential"), a company that had developed the Centre and stratified it into 19 strata lots. Like all the other lots, or "Units", comprising the development, Unit 102 was and is subject to a statutory building scheme registered in the Land Titles Office. For purposes of this application, the key provision of the building scheme is paragraph 7(b), which provides:

"no Lot will be used for any purpose whatsoever other than manufacturing, processing, storage, wholesale, office, laboratory, profession or research and development purposes permitted by the Municipality and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, no Lot will be used for any junk or salvage purposes or any other purpose which could or would be offensive to other occupants of the Lands or the public by reason of odour, fumes, dust, smoke, noise or other pollution bearing generated as a result thereof of which would be hazardous by reason of danger of fire or explosion;"

At the time of RBY's purchase, the applicable zoning by-law of Delta permitted the use of the premises for crematorium purposes. The by-law has since been amended to prohibit such use expressly, but I am advised the amendment will not affect the entitlement of the defendants to operate a crematorium in the premises as a non-conforming use.

[para4] There is evidence that suggests that in their negotiations with Prudential, RBY's principals, Mr. Young and Mr. Little, were less than forthcoming about their plans for the use of the premises; indeed, in a separate action, Prudential alleges that those plans were misrepresented and is seeking rescission of the sale. Since those allegations are not before me, it is sufficient to relate here that immediately after completing the purchase, RBY let it be known that it intended to carry on business as a mortuary and crematorium in Unit 102 through two corporations (apparently related) Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd. ("Personal Alternatives"). The latter company obtained a business license from the Municipality of Delta to operate a mortuary in the premises and began business there some months ago, providing services in connection with funeral arrangements, restoring human remains in a "cool room" and embalming human remains in a "preparation room". Although Mr. Little previously deposed that human remains were kept on the premises for periods generally not exceeding 48 hours, his most recent affidavit states that in about 40% of its cases, the company keeps human remains on site for periods of up to a week.

[para6] None of the defendants has commenced any cremation activities at the site as yet, although RBY was permitted to install the necessary gas line across the strata corporation's common property in accordance with an order of Scarth, J. made in a third action, #A923494. In making that order, Scarth, J. was careful to state that he had not dealt with the question of the intended use of the premises, which he indicated should be the subject of a separate application. That was the application that I first heard in June, 1993.

[para7] Despite suggestions given in August by counsel for the defendants that they were likely to be filing affidavit evidence of a Mr. Snickars, an official associated with the Registrar under the Act, concerning the "implications" of my earlier judgment, no such new evidence was forthcoming. Perhaps Mr. Fraser reconsidered the relevance of such opinion evidence. At the start of the hearing on October 12, however, Mr. Doyle applied for an adjournment so that he would have an opportunity to serve a subpoena on an officer of Intrawest Development Corporation, the original owner of the Corporate Centre lands, who sold to Prudential in 1990. Evidently this officer had been involved in drafting the statutory building scheme in question here. Despite the numerous exceptions that do exist to the parol evidence rule (see e.g. the list of exceptions noted by the Court in Gallen v. Allstate Grain Co., Ltd. (1984) 9 D.L.R. (4th) 496 (B.C.C.A.) at 506-7), I acceded to Mr. Rogers' argument that where a document is clear, or at least unambiguous, on its face, evidence of negotiations prior to or after the signing of the contract will not be admitted to create an ambiguity. As noted in Fridman, The Law of Contract in Canada (1976) at 246, "Where the contract as written is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence can be admitted to resolve such ambiguity. But it must be an ambiguity that exists in the language as it stands, not one that is itself created by the evidence that is sought to be adduced." (See also the judgment of Lord Wilberforce in Prenn v. Simmonds [1971] 3 All E.R. 237 (H.L.), quoted by Gibbs, J. (as he then was) in Cominco Ltd. v. C.P. Ltd. (1988) 24 B.C.L.R. (2d) 124 at 133, and Hillside Farms Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority (1977) 3 W.W.R. 749 (B.C.C.A.) at 753.

"Manufacturing, Processing or Storage"

[para8] I turn then to the substantive questions before me whether the use of Unit 102 as a crematorium and/or mortuary contravenes the statutory building scheme and if so, whether a permanent injunction should be granted. In approaching the first question, I again emphasize that I am considering only the question of law of whether the first part of paragraph 7(b) of the building scheme prohibits such uses. I am not considering whether the proposed uses would constitute a nuisance or otherwise offend the strata corporation's by-laws, those being questions of fact that would clearly require a full trial. Nor am I concerned with questions of "offensiveness", injurious affection, community standards, or municipal zoning considerations, which were argued at length by Mr. Doyle. As indicated in my earlier reasons, I assume for purposes of this application that the proposed activities would not constitute a nuisance, send smoke into the air, or otherwise offend applicable rules and by-laws. Those considerations are irrelevant to the purely legal question of the construction of the first part of paragraph 7(b) of the building scheme i.e., whether the use of the lot as a crematorium and/or mortuary is a use for a purpose other than "manufacturing, processing or storage".

"The defendants argue that the storing of human remains on the premises for embalming and/or subsequent transportation out, is 'storage' within the meaning of this paragraph [7(b)] and that cremation is a 'process'. In this regard, counsel for the defendants notes the use of the word 'process' in the Cemetary and Funeral Services Act, and in the 'Guidelines for an Application of a Certificate of Operation to Establish a Crematorium' issue by the Registrar thereunder. He also cites cases that stand for the proposition that restrictive covenants must be construed restrictively and that documents must be given their 'true meaning', i.e., the meaning that would be ascribed by 'an ordinary intelligent person in construing the words in a proper way in light of the relevant circumstances'.

On the question of 'storage', he cites Capital Regional District v. Mattison, [Victoria Registry No. 87/0901, October 8, 1987 (S.C.B.C.)], a decision of Mr. Justice Drake, suggesting that storage 'implies a certain degree of permanence' and cannot be used to describe the display of perishable merchandise outside a shop in portable form. As far as 'processing' is concerned, he points out that the OED definition includes 'something that goes on or is carried on', 'a continuous and regular action or succession of actions taking place or carried on in a definite manner', 'a particular method of operation in any manufacture', and that 'process' is defined to mean 'treating by a special process'. Applying this to the facts, Mr. Doyle argues that cremation subjects the human body to a 'process' by which its state is changed to what the layman would call ashes and bone fragments. Further, he says that the normal intelligent person reading the statutory building scheme would conclude that a mortuary business is 'storing' human remains and that, accordingly, Mr. Little properly concluded that his proposed uses would be permitted.

Neither counsel cited the case of Bourne v. Norwich Crematorium Ltd. [1967] 2 All E.R. 576, a decision of the Chancery Division, which I brought to counsels' attention and on which I received written argument. In Bourne, the defendant was appealing to the General Commissioners of Income Tax against an assessment for the profits of its crematorium. The issue was whether the furnace chamber and chimney tower of the crematorium were 'industrial buildings or structures' under the Income Tax Act, which defined an industrial building or structure as one in use 'for the purposes of a trade which consists of the manufacture of goods or material or the subjection of goods or materials to any process'. Mr. Justice Stamp found that the furnace chamber and chimney tower were not so qualified and stated as follows:

'I would say at once that my mind recoils as much by the description of the bodies of the dead as "goods or materials" as it does from the idea that what is done in that crematorium can be described as "the subjection of" the human corpse to a "process"...

...In my judgment it would be a distortion of the English language to describe the living or the dead as goods or materials. The argument, of course, goes on inevitably to this : that just as "goods and materials" is wide enough to embrace, and does embrace, all things animate and inanimate, and so includes the dead human body, so the other words to which a meaning must be given, namely "subjection" and "process", are words of the widest import. Parliament cannot, so the argument as I understood it runs, have intended to exclude from the definition a process whereby refuse or waste material is destroyed or consumed by the fire, and putting it crudely, for it can only be put crudely, the consumption by fire of the human body is a process. I protest against subjecting the English language, and more particularly a simple English phrase, to this kind of process of philology or semasiology. English words derive colour from those which surround them. Sentences are not mere collections of words to be taken out of the sentence, defined separately by reference to the dictionary or decided cases, and then put back again into the sentence with the meaning which you have assigned to them as separate words, so as to give the sentence or phrase a meaning which as a sentence or phrase it cannot bear without distortion of the English language.'

And further:

'... I conclude that the consumption by fire of the mortal remains of homo sapiens is not the subjection of goods or materials to a process within the definition of "industrial building or structure.'

This judgment has been cited on numerous occasions by numerous courts for the general rule of construction that 'one must not at the end of the day distort that which has to be construed and give it a meaning which in its context one does not think it can possibly bear'.

In my view, both this general principle and the specific holding of the Court in Bourne are applicable here. If one considers the context of the statutory building scheme and the particular development in question here, it is clear that what the draughtsman had in mind was a building to be used for commercial purposes and that the manufacturing, processing and storage in question would have referred to raw or semi-processed materials or goods to be processed for resale or other commercial use.

I cannot agree that 'processing' in this context can be distorted and expanded so as to include, in Mr. Justice Stamp's words, 'the consumption by fire of the human body'. The body is not being 'processed', it is being consumed or destroyed by fire. Further, no commercial goods or materials result. The residue of ashes is obviously not a commercial product which I infer is contemplated by paragraph 7. (For the same reason, I would not regard an incinerator used to burn garbage as 'processing' garbage.) As the Court held in Tenneco Canada Inc. v. The Queen [1988] 2 F.C. 3 at 9, citing Federal Farms Ltd. v. M.N.R. [1966] Ex. C.R. 410] the normal meaning of 'processing' requires that goods be made more marketable. Here we do not have 'goods'; we do not have 'marketable goods', and, in my view, we do not have 'processing' -- we have consumption or destruction of the human body. I would respectfully concur with Mr. Justice Stamp in concluding that it would be a distortion of the wording used in the scheme to conclude that cremation is within the ambit of 'processing'.

As far as 'storage' is concerned, the same reasoning applies. First, since I read paragraph 7 to be referring to the storage, manufacture or processing of commercial goods or products of some kind, the word is not applicable. Second, I infer that the word in this context is intended to refer to longer-term storage rather than the temporary moving of a human body into the premises for embalming and shipment out. The purpose of bringing the bodies onto the premises is not to 'store' them but to prepare them for burial or cremation. I have already noted Mr. Justice Drake's comments to the effect that 'storage' generally implies something less transient or fleeting and suggests that this is not storage in the sense that a commercial parking lot, with cars going in and out, is not normally described as a place for the 'storage' of cars."

[para10] Mr. Little's most recent evidence that human bodies are being kept on the premises for periods of up to one week in many cases, does not in my view assist the defendants with my conclusion that paragraph 7 refers to the storage, manufacture or processing of commercial goods or products of some kind. As for the new evidence that Personal Alternatives sells urns and caskets, I agree that if it were storing such items alone for later use or resale, that would be a permitted use. However, the fact that the company does so only in conjunction with a cremation or burial contract takes this activity outside of the ambit of "storage" in the context of the building scheme.

[para11] I should also note the argument made by Mr. Fraser during the August hearing that the words "purposes permitted by the municipality" in paragraph 7(b) of the scheme indicate that the draftsman intended the uses permitted under the building scheme to be coextensive with those contained in the municipal zoning by-law from time to time. Since the by-law in force at the time expressly permitted the operation of "crematoriums and mortuaries" under the "light industrial" classification, he argues that it can be inferred that the draftsman had no intention of prohibiting such uses.

[para12] The obvious response to this argument, of course, is that if that had been the intention of the draftsman, the first four lines of paragraph 7(b) of the scheme would have been completely superfluous. Grammatically too, I note that the list of permitted uses listed in paragraph 7(b) ends with "or research", followed by "and development purposes permitted by the Municipality", which phrase therefore seems intended to modify only the phrase "and development purposes". On a more basic level, it is obvious that the form and wording of the zoning by-law are very different from those of the building scheme.

[para15] It follows that a declaration will go pursuant to Rule 34 that the use of Unit 102 for the operation of a crematorium or for carrying on the business of a mortuary contravenes the statutory building scheme. Within the word "mortuary" I include the bringing of human bodies or other remains onto or off the site, the presence and preparation of bodies for burial (for example by embalming) or for cremation, and related activities normally carried on by a mortuary. I would not include, however, funeral arranging or counselling without the presence of bodies or remains on-site, as these would be permitted by the scheme as "office" or "profession".

Permanent Injunction

"The provisions hereof have been instituted for the general benefit of all owners of all parts of the Lands from time to time and each such owner, in agreeing to buy any part of the Lands acknowledges such general benefit and the personal benefit attaching to that part of the Lands purchased and agrees that their being in violation of the restrictions herein set out will constitute an injury and damage to all the owners of the Lots from time to time impossible to measure monetarily and, as a result, any or all the other owners of the Lots from time to time shall, in addition to all of the other remedies in law and in equity, be entitled to a decree or order restraining or enjoining any breach of any of the provisions hereof and any owner in breach of any such provisions and named in an application for such an order will not plead in defence thereto that there would be an adequate remedy at law."

In addition to relying on this "deemed damage" clause, counsel for the plaintiff filed affidavits of various strata lot owners deposing as to perceived actual damage. These include the statements of Mr. Sheren (as of May 17, 1993) that since the defendants' announcement of their intention to establish a crematorium and mortuary on their premises, average sale prices for units in the same building have fallen, resulting in loss to Mr. Sheren's company; that the two Units adjacent to Unit 102 have not sold; and that the "reputation of the development has definitely been negatively affected". Ms. Sellers, an officer of the company which owns Unit 107, deposes inter alia that to her knowledge every unit that has been sold since her company's purchase has sold for less per square foot than the purchase price and that when her company sells (which it is attempting to do) she expects to incur a loss. Mr. Sully, a prospective purchaser, deposes that he was told by the leasing agent for the Centre that the three or four unsold units can be obtained cheaply because of a "black mark" on the development by reason of the proposed crematorium.

[para17] Mr. Lam, the owner of Unit 108, deposes that the employees in his sandwich preparation and distribution business quit their jobs after indicating that they would rather quit than work at that location. He has had difficulty in hiring skilled replacement employees because of the proximity of the intended crematorium and mortuary. He says that "Oriental employees will not be associated with or locate anywhere near a place of death including funeral homes, crematorium or cemeteries". Mr. Lam expresses the concern that if he decides to sell his unit, it is very unlikely any Oriental purchaser would be prepared to purchase it a fact that "effectively excludes a substantial portion of the parties who might otherwise be interested in purchasing my location." In his most recent affidavit, Mr. Lam says that he had plans for expansion of his business into Unit 113 in the Centre, but put such plans on hold when he heard of the defendants' success in obtaining a license to operate a mortuary in their unit.

[para18] Mr. Rogers on behalf of the plaintiff acknowledges that it is difficult to prove strictly damages of the kind described by the strata owners i.e. to approve that they are not due to market conditions and contends that for this very reason, injunctive relief is the only just remedy. In fact, he says, this situation was anticipated by the draftsman of the building scheme when paragraph 15 was included. I do not understand him to suggest that the clause requires that the Court automatically grant injunctive relief, but that injunctive relief is normally granted for the breach of a negative covenant relating to the use of land without proof of monetary damage (see, e.g., Frisby v. Clearview Developments Ltd. (1990) 48 M.P.L.R. 188 (B.C.S.C.)) and that the existence of the deemed damage clause should be an important factor in the Court's consideration. On the latter point, I find the following passage from Sharpe on Injunctions and Specific Performance (2d) at 7.750 under the heading "A Suggested Rationale", to be useful:

"An approach that might facilitate analysis here is to consider two categories. In the first, the nature of the plaintiff's interest is such as to give rise to an entitlement to specific performance but that interest is for some reason difficult to establish or the plaintiff wishes to be sure that it is accepted and admitted by the defendant. The agreement sets out the reasons for the inadequacy of damages so that, in case of breach, the agreement can be referred to as evidence to establish the plaintiff's case for specific performance. In this type of case, it is difficult to see why the Court should not pay careful attention to the agreement. There is a strong parallel here to the rule relating to the enforcement of liquidated damage clauses. Where the clause represents a reasonable and genuine attempt to estimate actual damages and it is fairly bargained, such a clause will be enforced. Difficulty and cost of proof of damages are thereby avoided, resulting in saving not only to the parties but also to the judicial system, the benefits of which have long been recognized. While liquidated damage clauses must be distinguished from penalties, which are not enforced, it is difficult to see stipulation of specific performance as constituting a penalty. It is surely a contradiction to suggest that performance of the very obligation promised is punitive in nature."

Although the author is here discussing specific performance, the same principles would seem to be applicable to a prohibitory injunction.

[para20] In any event, the circumstances of RBY's acquisition of Unit 102 and the terms of the building scheme are only two of the factors that must be considered by the Court in deciding whether injunctive relief should be granted. The cases cited by both counsel make it clear that the Court must consider as well the benefit to be gained by the plaintiff and the harm to be suffered by the defendants as a result of the granting of such relief. In this regard, I note that because of the proceedings in this action and in the action heard by Scarth, J., the defendants have not been in a position to construct the retort and stack and make the other major changes to Unit 102 that would be required to bring a crematorium into operation. However, Mr. Little deposes that the sewer hook-up and exhaust fan installation made after Scarth J.'s order apparently cost $50,000 and that an additional $50,000 was subsequently spent on advertising and marketing. Should the defendants be required to relocate their mortuary business to other premises, much of this expenditure would be lost and the defendants would suffer further expense and inconvenience. According to Mr. Doyle they would have a difficult time in locating a property where the applicable zoning by-laws would permit such businesses. Against this major loss and inconvenience, argues Mr. Doyle, must be balanced the claims of the plaintiff, which he says are unsubstantiated as yet, in the form of diminution in the value of the common property and of the individual members' lots, and the difficulties experienced by them in retaining employees and customers.

[para21] I have some sympathy for the defendants' position, but in the final analysis, I do not think that the equities against granting injunctive relief outweigh the more substantial equities arising from the fact of the breach of the negative covenant, the existence of paragraph 15 in the building scheme, and the circumstances of the defendants' purchase of Unit 102. To continue down the path of a trial to establish monetary damages suffered by the plaintiff would in my view be fruitless and would not tip the balance in the defendants' favour. Those cases cited by the defendants in which the courts have declined to grant injunctive relief to enforce negative covenants such as paragraph 7(b) are cases where an innocent defendant would have been forced to demolish a building (see Trawick and Trawick v. Mastromonaco (1983) 24 Alta. L.R. (2d) 389 (Q.B.) and Wrotham Park Estate Co. v. Parkside Homes Ltd. et al. [1974] 2 All E.R. 321 (Ch. Div.)) or where a covenant could not be enforced "as of course": see Arbutus Park Estates Ltd. v. Fuller et al. 1977 74 D.L.R. (3d) 257 (B.C.S.C.). These are very different from a situation such as this, where the injunction is a prohibitory rather than mandatory order and where proceedings were sought before major physical changes were made.

[para23] At the close of argument in the last hearing, Mr. Rogers suggested that the injunction should also prohibit any advertising or "signage" using the words "crematorium" or "mortuary". These words appear in the names of two of the defendants, so that any such prohibition would prevent even the presence of signs bearing their names. I agree with Mr. Doyle that the scheme, or at least paragraph 7(b) thereof, is concerned only with the substantive use of the property, and not with advertising or use of trade names per se. I doubt that this Court has any authority on the basis of paragraph 7(b) to enjoin the use of the words "crematorium" or "mortuary" by the defendants in their signage on the property subject of course to other applicable by-laws and regulations.

Stay

[para24] Counsel for the defendants urges that if an injunction is granted, this Court should stay the Order pending the defendants' appeal from this judgment. It is trite law that this Court does have jurisdiction to stay its own orders (although a stay would more commonly be obtained in the Court of Appeal) and that in considering such an application, the Court must consider the factors it would consider in connection with an interlocutory injunction, as well as any special circumstances: see Hong Kong Bank of Canada v. Touche Ross & Co. (1988), 18 B.C.L.R. (2d) 55 (B.C.C.A.); Man. (A.G.) v. Metro. Stores Ltd., [1987] 3 W.W.R. 1 (S.C.C.) at 15-17; Canadian Commercial Bank v. Royal Oak Inn, [1989] B.C.J. No. 65 (Vancouver Registry No. CA009541, dated January 9, 1989) (B.C.C.A.). The cases also make it clear that "unless justice requires it, a successful litigant should not lightly be deprived of the fruits of success". Re Philip's Manufacturing Ltd. (1992), 67 B.C.L.R. (2d) 385 (B.C.C.A.) at 388. As Mr. Rogers points out, in this case there is no suggestion that the defendants were not aware of the existence of the negative clause in paragraph 7 of the building scheme or that they were lulled into a sense of "false security", to make the expenditures they have. If ultimately the defendants succeed on appeal, they will have been forced to wait some considerable time before commencing business as a crematorium, and will have had to close down their mortuary operations in Unit 102. I am hopeful that the resulting expense and inconvenience can be softened to some degree by an order that the injunction against carrying on the business of a mortuary will not come into effect until a later date.

[para25] As far as the plaintiff is concerned, it has taken promptly all legal proceedings required to have this matter determined as soon as possible. In the meantime, the corporation and its members say they have suffered damages, albeit difficult to determine the quantum thereof. They seek to rely on a document which contemplated that no person contravening the negative covenant would raise as a defence the argument that damages would be an adequate remedy. The members of the plaintiff are small business men and women to whom loss of custom or employees, or diminution in property values, are major considerations. All in all, I am not convinced that having come as far as they have, they should be deprived of the fruits of their victory in this Court by the granting of a stay. Obviously, the defendants will be able to seek a stay in the Court of Appeal when they commence their appeal proceedings there.

Timing of Injunctive Relief

[para26] Mr. Doyle has asked that any permanent injunction be delayed for a period of ninety days in order to permit the defendants to relocate their business. It is now October 22. Ninety days would take the parties past the middle of January, 1994. Given the long period of notice that the defendants have had, I feel that ninety days is too long. Instead I will order that the portion of the permanent injunction relating to the mortuary operation will not come into effect until January 1, 1994. From and after that date, both crematorium and mortuary operations will be prohibited.

[para27] The costs of this application will be for the plaintiff.

Victoria Registry No. 902776

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Macdonell J. Heard: November 5, 1991 Judgment: November 26, 1991

Counsel for the Plaintiffs: Nicholas W. Lott. Counsel for the Defendant: Brian C. Roberts. MACDONELL J.:-- The plaintiffs' claim is for damages resulting from the defendant's failure to disclose that the house purchased by the plaintiffs from the defendant was insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation.

The circumstances briefly are that in the years 1981 and 1982 the defendant company was constructing a number of condominium apartment units in Courtenay. As motel space was at a premium, the defendant company decided to buy a house to accommodate its workmen. The house was fairly old and needed a lot of renovations, but was suitable for the defendant's needs. As the project came to an end the defendant determined to sell the house, and in April of 1982 it published an ad in the local press offering the house for sale or rent.

A Mr. Linden Peterson, an employee of the defendant company, expressed an interest in the house after he was told by the defendant's foreman, Clarence Kolowdziejak (referred to herein as "Clarence"), that the house was for sale. Mr. Peterson got the keys and looked at the house and thought it had potential. He arranged to have an appraiser look at it for financing purposes, who reported favourably on the house. Mr. Peterson went back, looked at the house again, and saw a plug in the siding which he removed and discovered urea formaldehyde foam insulation. He testified he got another appraisal firm, Cunningham & Rivard and told them about the urea formaldehyde, and as a result the appraisal firm recommended against taking a mortgage on the property. According to Mr. Peterson, he told Clarence on the job site that he was not interested in purchasing because of the urea formaldehyde insulation. He said that Clarence was surprised at there being this type of insulation. Apparently there had been no previous discussion between Peterson and Clarence about how the house was insulated. Mr. Peterson never made an offer for the house, which would have had to be made to Mr. Butler, the president of the defendant company, nor did he tell Mr. Butler of the presence of the urea formaldehyde foam.

The next persons interested in the house were the plaintiffs, who saw the ad for the property in the local press. Ms. Flynn called the telephone number contained in the ad and spoke to Mr. Butler in Victoria. He in turn told her to meet Clarence, who would be showing the house. Clarence took Ms. Flynn, the first plaintiff, around and made no representations. She then got in touch with Mr. Hopp, the other plaintiff, for the purpose of looking at the house, which they did. The two of them went through the house with Clarence. The plaintiffs did not ask Clarence how the house was insulated, nor did he tell them. There was some discussion about extra insulation in the ceiling and they saw that there was some pink insulation being put in the basement. There was never a disclosure as to the urea formaldehyde insulation. Neither of the plaintiffs would have purchased the house had they known that it was insulated with urea formaldehyde foam because of the adverse publicity that was in the news media at the time. The plaintiffs then proceeded to close the sale, and the two of them lived in the house until February of 1983. Thereafter they rented the house until 1990. In that year they decided to sell the house and listed it for sale and in due course an offer was received dated January 21, 1990. The contract of sale warranted on the part of the vendors that the property had not been insulated with urea formaldehyde insulation. The prospective purchasers went to obtain financing. The firm of Cunningham & Rivard again did an appraisal and the presence of urea formaldehyde foam insulation was disclosed and the sale fell through. The plaintiffs have not been successful in selling the property since then and have now moved back into it.

The plaintiffs ask for damages for deceit or fraud and rely on Section 6(3) of the Limitation Act to justify the Action not being taken until 1990 when the insulation was discovered.

The measure of damage is agreed between counsel if liability is found to be the amount of the cost of repair.

The case for the defendant is that Mr. Butler knew nothing about the insulation of the house, made no representations, nor were any questions asked by the plaintiffs as to the presence of formaldehyde foam insulation. The foreman Clarence was called for the defence and agreed that he did show the house to several people, but was not sure that they were necessarily the plaintiffs. He said he remembered Peterson, but he categorically denied that Peterson told him that the house was insulated with urea formaldehyde foam. He said that he had inspected the house before it was bought by the defendant but did not recall seeing white plugs in the exterior of the wall. He also said that in 1981 he knew nothing about urea formaldehyde insulation. He categorically denied that Peterson ever told him about the urea formaldehyde foam and said that Peterson did not tell him he had an appraisal to this effect. Mr. Steve Butler, president of the defendant company, testified that he knew nothing about it and that nothing had ever been disclosed to him.

What the case boils down to is whether to accept the evidence of Mr. Peterson over that of Clarence. If Peterson's evidence is accepted, is Clarence, as the foreman of the defendant and the person instructed to show the place, the agent of the defendant, and is his knowledge imputed to the defendant? I have carefully considered the evidence of Peterson, and that of Clarence, and conclude that the evidence of Peterson is to be preferred to that of Clarence for the defendant. Clarence was very vague about what happened as he candidly admitted it was almost ten years ago. It is my view that his memory is not as reliable as that of Peterson, who came across as a careful and reliable witness. Peterson had a very good reason to remember the event, as it was the presence of the urea formaldehyde insulation that was the cause of his being unable to buy the property. It is unlikely, in my view, that Peterson would not have told Clarence of the reason he was not buying when they saw each other at the job site. I find, therefore, that Peterson did disclose to Clarence the existence of the urea formaldehyde foam in the house, although this information was not forwarded on to the defendant company. Nevertheless, the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal and accordingly the plaintiffs succeed.

As far as the limitation defence is concerned, the position taken by the plaintiffs with respect to discovery on inspection was that they lived in the place for only a short period of time and for almost eight years they were away from Courtenay and the house was rented. Consequently, they were not in a position to go into possession to discover or inspect the house for any signs of foam insulation. Neither of the plaintiffs had any experience in construction and saw nothing to alert them to the form of insulation, unlike Mr. Peterson, who was a boat builder and finishing carpenter and very experienced in construction. As well, the first appraisal failed to discover the presence of the offending foam. As it happened, the siding on the house wore over the years and at the time of trial, photographs of the exterior of this modest house show plug marks indicative of some form of insulation being installed from the outside, but this is not determinative of it being urea formaldehyde because other methods of insulation can be installed the same way. I conclude on the limitations issue that, in the circumstances, time does not commence to run against the plaintiffs as those facts on which a reasonable man would take appropriate advice and which would give rise to a reasonable prospect of success, were not within their knowledge until 1990.

On the issue of damages, the plaintiffs have called a witness in the restoration business who estimated the cost of the removal of the foam to be $25,269.31. This amount is hotly contested by the defendant, which is in the contracting business. It is my view that the contractor employed to prepare the estimate is not sufficiently experienced in construction to give a reliable estimate. On looking at the estimate, it is my view that it is extravagant and unrealistic and I accept the evidence of Mr. Butler that $7,500.00 is a reasonable amount to repair the damage, plus an allowance of 10% for overhead and profit, plus an allowance for G.S.T. There will be judgment accordingly and costs.

There will be prejudgment interest at the rate set by the Registrar from time to time from the discovery of the insulation.

Durham Condominium Corporation No. 120, plaintiff, and Ontario New Home Warranty Program, defendant

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Motions Court - Toronto, Ontario Jennings J. Heard: September 21, 1998. Oral judgment: September 23, 1998.

Counsel: Michael Spears, for the plaintiff. John Terry, for the defendant. [para1] JENNINGS J. (orally):-- In the proceedings before the Tribunal, Durham and Program agreed that 40% of the units were occupied prior to sale and accordingly Program was liable for only 60% of the cost of repairs to the units. The issue before the Tribunal was whether Program was liable for only 60% of the cost of repairs to the common elements or 100% of that cost. The issue had apparently been determined in Durham's favour some three weeks earlier by the Divisional Court in Carlton 394, although Durham's counsel was unaware of that decision and Program's counsel did not bring it to the attention of the Tribunal. The Tribunal ruled that the 40/60 ratio should apply to the common elements. Durham appealed that decision to the Divisional Court.

[para2] Program's counsel persuaded Durham's counsel to consent to an application to stay Durham's appeal pending the decision of the Court of Appeal in Sunforest, with counsel consenting to an order permitting Durham to intervene in the Sunforest appeal. Program's counsel stated in his affidavit in support of his motion to stay the Durham appeal that the same issue raised to the Durham appeal was raised in the Sunforest appeal. [para3] Program's counsel proposed that program would pay Durham $120,000 (60%) on execution of a Release and a further $105,000 (40%) if the appeal "of a dispute between the parties" (agreed by counsel to mean the issue of pro rata application) was unsuccessful. The Release was "in consideration of payment of $120,000 forthwith and an additional $105,000 only if the Warranty Program loses the appeal in the Court of Appeal". The appeal was dismissed and the Court of Appeal did not deal with the issue of pro rating common element repair costs. Counsel argued the issue of pro rata application before the Court of Appeal. Program now says it was expected by the parties that the Court of Appeal would deal with that issue and only if Program lost on that issue would it pay a further $105,000.

[para5] Program's counsel on the appeal was clearly mistaken as to the similarity of issues in the Sunforest and Durham matters as was virtually conceded by its counsel on this motion. That was a mistake of fact.

[para6] Agreements to settle made by counsel within their authority should not be lightly interfered with. Misapprehension of the facts is not a ground for re-opening a Settlement Agreement:

Scherer v. Paletta (1996), 2 O.R. 524

Cambrian v. Horner (1989), 69 O.R. (2d) 433

[para7] Program's counsel characterized the issues as being the same in the two matters in his affidavit. He obtained Durham's consent to a stay in the face of a pending motion. He prepared the Settlement agreement providing for payment out if the Sunforest appeal went against Program.

[para8] I do not think it is appropriate to go behind the agreement and hold it to be inapplicable because that same counsel hoped the Court of Appeal would deal with the particular issue the resolution of which the court found unnecessary to its decision.

[para9] The motion for summary judgment is allowed.

[para11] Costs payable to Durham fixed at $8,500 plus taxable disbursements and G.S.T.

Ching-Lee Chien and Ching-Ting Chien, applicants, and Law Development Group (Thornhill) Limited, respondent

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Hoilett J. June 30, 1998.

Counsel: Kevin D. Sherkin, for the applicants. Robert L. Love, for the respondent.

[para1] HOILETT J.-- A joint reading of the two facta filed sets out fairly comprehensively the factual context. The facts, however, are not in dispute and a brief rendition of those facts are sufficient for a disposition of this matter. The parties entered into an agreement of purchase and sale wherein the applicants agreed to purchase unit D27 in "building D", forming schedule "C" at Tab C of this record. Sch. "C" outlines the unit as bargained for; 445 s.f. of commercial space with two sides of the unit framed by plate glass, an unencumbered floor space and a wide corridor in the east, shared with the Bank of Hongkong. The doors to D27 were to be located at the N/W corner of the unit.

[para3] The purpose for which D27 was intended to be a fast food take-out facility and the applicant avers that the wide corridor with the easy access between the bank and D27 was an important consideration in the decision to purchase the unit; the anticipation being that for the luncheon crowd there was a natural and easy flow of traffic between the bank and D27. The building as completed completely eclipsed that prospect. Similarly, two sides of plate glass promised greatly enhanced visibility, a prospect that was also aborted.

[para4] I am of the opinion that this application is to be disposed of based on the principle stated by Moldaver J. (as he then was) in Stefanovska et al. v. Kok (1990), 12 R.P.R. (2d) 80, and adopted by Day J. in Coppard Farm Estates Inc. v. Gupta (1994), 42 R.P.R. (2d) 302; that principle being that when that which is delivered is materially different from that bargained for the diminished party is entitled to be relieved of the obligation. In the present case I am of the opinion that the cumulative effect of the "variations" resulted in a material shortfall to the applicant who, in the circumstances, is entitled to a return of its deposit together with interest and costs. The language of Clause 15 of the Agreement must be reasonably construed and may not be read to impair materially what was bargained for even if, as the respondent submits, the market value remained substantially the same, concerning which Mr. Warren Stewart's opinion is dubious at best.

C21283

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Robins, Catzman and Doherty J.J.A. Heard: May 31, 1996. Oral judgment: June 7, 1996.

Counsel: Keith M. Landy, for the appellants. Barbra H. Miller, for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by [para1] THE COURT (oral endorsement):-- Summary judgment was granted in favour of the respondent on the basis of the motions court judge's conclusion that, on a proper interpretation of the agreements of purchase and sale, the appellants were obliged to satisfy themselves with respect to zoning requirements before they signed the agreements. That in turn involves the conclusion that the purchasers of these retail condominium units, which were then under construction, lost their right to make inquiries about zoning as soon as the agreements were signed.

[para2] In our view, that is not a reasonable and practical interpretation of paragraph 19 of Schedule "C" to the agreements, nor is it one that is compelled by the language which the respondent chose to employ in framing that paragraph. As we read that paragraph, the appellants were entitled to satisfy themselves with respect to zoning requirements subsequent to the execution of their agreements. We accept the submission of counsel for the appellants that, in the absence of any provision in the agreement setting a specific time limit for that purpose, it was open to them in the circumstances to do so, as they did, before the agreements closed.

[para4] The appellants are entitled to their costs here and below. Costs in the court below are fixed in the sum of $4,000 and in this court in the sum of $3,000.

Governor's Hill Developments Limited, Plaintiff, and Katherine Ruth Robert, Defendant, Johnston & Daniel Limited Realtor, Third Party

Action No. 92-CQ-26645A

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Eberle J. Heard: June 3, 1993. Judgment: July 12, 1993.

R. Freedman and R.P. Hoffman, for the Plaintiffs. D. Rothwell, for the Defendants. D.B. Garrow and P. Gutelius, for the Third Party.

[para1] EBERLE J.:-- "Vendor agrees to pay the G.S.T. on penthouse #19".

[para2] On that sentence hangs the tortuous tale in this case, leading to motions for summary judgment brought by all the parties to this litigation.

[para6] How did the dispute arise? It arose because the vendor made a mistake in drafting the statement of adjustments. The clerk who drew it, evidently confused about the G.S.T., entered the sale price as $724,299.07, rather than the correct, and only, figure in the Agreement, i.e., $775,000.00. She had arrived at that figure by deducting the amount of the G.S.T. from the purchase price. That was certainly a mistake. Then she deducted the $50,000.00 deposit; and there was a minor adjustment for the taxes, leading to a balance due on closing of $675,245.61. Unfortunately, no one on the seller's side caught this mistake until several months later. In the meantime, the transaction closed and the defendant paid the sum of $675,245.61, although her solicitor felt something was wrong. He so indicated to the clerk who had drawn the statement of adjustments, when she later called him to explain the error (see Colacitti cross-examination, page 40). The defendant now takes the position that she has paid all that she was required to pay.

[para8] On what I conceive to be the central and determinative issue, the answer is clear. If the Agreement had not contained the disputed sentence about the vendor paying the G.S.T., the purchaser would have had to pay the $775,000.00 purchase price plus another 7% for the G.S.T. The effect of the disputed sentence is, in my opinion, to make the purchaser responsible for paying only $775,000.00, with the vendor assuming responsibility for paying the G.S.T. The language chosen simply cannot mean that the purchase price, clearly stated in the Agreement both in words and in figures, is not the purchase price; but rather that the purchase price is only $724,299.07. That figure nowhere appears in the Agreement. Language which was chosen to ensure that the purchaser did not pay more than $775,000.00 in total cannot mean that the purchaser should only pay far less than $775,000.00. The Agreement, by the way, was drawn up by or on behalf of the defendant; Although I cannot see any ambiguity in the language, if there were any, it should be interpreted against her.

[para9] In my opinion, the Agreement can bear no other interpretation than that the defendant was required to pay $775,000.00. The defendant's interpretation reduces the stated purchase price by 7% That could only be done by ignoring the purchase price clearly stated in the Agreement. Yet the defendant agreed on her cross-examination at pages 15, 16 and 238 that the purchase price was $775,000.00, consisting of a $50,000.00 deposit and a further $725,000.00 on closing. This evidence alone appears to destroy the defendant's position.

[para10] She also said at Q. 1571 to 1574 that the agent said that Governor's Hill would absorb the G.S.T., that accordingly she, the defendant, would not have to pay it; and that the agent said nothing else about the G.S.T.

[para11] The defendant bases one of her arguments on the fact that the vendor had always sold its new units at prices which included the G.S.T. I can see no force in that argument. I do not know how those agreements were drawn, but if they contained a sentence similar to that in this case, the meaning and effect would be as in this case. If they did not, then the agreement of purchase and sale would have obliged the purchaser to pay the G.S.T. on top of the sale price.

[para12] Nothing that I have been referred to in the lengthy cross-examinations contradicts the facts recited above. The defendant admits that the purchase price she was to pay was $775,000.00, not less. Thus it is clear that the statement of adjustments contained a mistake in showing the purchase price as $724,299.07. It was argued that this created a "unilateral mistake", as recognized in contract law. I cannot agree, for the purchaser must have known that the statement of adjustments contained a mistaken purchase price. No one, in my view, could honestly think otherwise. If the purchaser did not notice the error at the time of closing, she must have known instantly upon it being raised later, that the price shown in the statement of adjustments was not the purchase price shown in the Agreement. Again, in my view, no one could honestly think otherwise. The mistake is not in the contract itself, but in its performance. The question is simply -- has the defendant fully performed her contractual obligations or not?

[para13] Counsel argued strenuously that, if the wife were to pay $775,000.00 for penthouse #19, and if the plaintiff then paid the G.S.T. to the government, that would in reality amount to the defendant "paying" the G.S.T., for the plaintiff would merely be mailing the defendant's money to the government. Ingenious, perhaps; but nonsense. If there were any merit to it, the defendant should keep on using it to reduce the purchase price by successive amounts of 7% until she could get the penthouse for nothing! Not at all. The defendant knew that the Agreement meant that the vendor would "absorb" the G.S.T. The language utilized can in my opinion have only one meaning - the meaning contended for by the plaintiff. The defendant similarly has no basis for complaint against the agent who drew the Agreement accurately, and in accord with the defendant's wishes and instructions.

[para14] The defendant also points to the fact that the consideration inserted in the transfer of the land was $724,299.07. This is correct, but irrelevant. The amount of consideration is shown in the transfer for purposes of calculating the land transfer tax payable on the transaction, and for no other purpose. Land transfer tax is not payable upon G.S.T., but only upon the net purchase price, apart from the G.S.T. Land transfer tax is not a tax upon tax. This argument is without merit.

[para15] That disposes of the matter between the plaintiff and the defendant. I shall mention only briefly some of the other arguments made. The defendant did not change her position to her detriment at all by closing the transaction. That position was ordained when her offer was accepted; and she became obliged to close according to the true meaning of the Agreement. Nor did her closing the sale of the other condominium the same day constitute a change of position to her detriment; that closing, too, was ordained when she had earlier accepted an offer on that unit. She did not change her position in any way in reliance upon the statement of adjustments. On the other hand, if she were to succeed in this matter, she would receive a windfall of approximately $50,000.00.

[para16] The defendant's undertaking to readjust was executed by her in consideration of the closing of the transaction. This is a common conveyancing technique of long standing. I was not favoured with any authorities dealing with the meaning and effect to be given to such an undertaking, but I am satisfied that it should not be regarded as a mere formality. This is an appropriate case in which to give it the effect it purports to have. I hold that it entitles the plaintiff to claim the $50,700.93 it seeks here, and requires the defendant to pay. Further, I hold that the undertaking to readjust should, at least in this case, be viewed as establishing conclusively that the closing of the transaction was not intended by the parties to stand in the way of any justified correction of the amounts shown in the statement of adjustments.

Third Party Claim

[para17] In the event that the plaintiff succeeds against the defendant, the defendant claims against the real estate agent who was involved in both the sale by the defendant of another unit in the same complex, and in the purchase by the defendant of penthouse No. 19. The claim as pleaded is for contribution or indemnity for any amount which the defendant may be required to pay to the plaintiff, or for damages of $50,700.93. The main allegations pleaded are as follows:

"6. The third party as the authorized agent of the plaintiff, vendor represented to the defendant as purchaser under the Agreement that the price of $775,000.00 was inclusive of G.S.T. and that the amount payable by the defendant would be approximately $724,300.00 payable by way of a deposit of $50,000.00 and approximately $674,300.00 on closing subject to adjustments only for realty taxes.

10. The third party knew that the defendant was relying and reasonably relying upon the representations of the third party and that the defendant would not have agreed to the purchase price and the sale price in the two transactions unless the net proceeds by down-sizing was not less than $100,000.00 after all costs and expenses incidental to the two transactions".

[para18] Since these allegations depend upon oral representations allegedly made by an employee of the third party to the defendant or to her husband, it is necessary to look briefly at the evidence of the defendant and her husband in their affidavits and cross-examinations.

In paragraph 19 of the husband's affidavit, he says:

"19. My wife and I were not under any pressure to sell our existing residence and in accepting a price of $882,000.00 we relied upon the representation that the price of $775,000.00 for penthouse #19 was inclusive of G.S.T. and that Governor's Hill Developments Limited would pay the G.S.T. that was part of that price."

20. We would not have accepted a sale price of $882,000.00 and would have terminated the Agreement on or before February 29th, 1992 if calculations with the broker had not indicated that the net proceeds of down-sizing would be not less than $100,000.00 after all costs and expenses incidental to the two transactions."

[para19] There are two issues here: one is, what if any representations were made by the agent to the defendant or her husband about the purchase price and the G.S.T.? and the other concerns whether or not the agent represented to the defendant that, as a result of the sale of the unit they then owned and the purchase of penthouse #19, they would realize a net cash gain of $100,000.00.

[para20] Turning to consider the purchase price and the G.S.T., there is really no evidence that the agent made any representation whatever that the amount of the G.S.T. would be deducted from the purchase price. What was said was that the G.S.T. would be "absorbed" by the plaintiff; i.e., that the defendant would not have to pay the G.S.T. on top of the purchase price of $775,000.00. This is what the defendant said at Q. 1571 to 1574 of her cross-examination previously mentioned. This is also what the husband said in paragraph 19 of his affidavit, quoted above. The offer drawn on behalf of the defendant was submitted and accepted. It was the husband who alone decided that the purchase price to be offered for penthouse #19 should be $775,000.00. The evidence of the defendant already referred to in the main action establishes the absence of any merit in this aspect of the third party claim. I do not need to repeat the previous discussion of this point.

Costs

[para23] In the result, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the Defendant for $50,700.93, together with pre-judgment interest at 7.7% per annum from May 1st, 1992 until today; and post-judgment interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act. The third party claim fails and is dismissed. Accordingly, the successful parties are both entitled to their costs against the defendant. I believe that these costs can be fixed rather than referred for assessment. Prior to the argument and at my request, each counsel supplied me with the figure for costs he would be seeking if successful in this matter. Counsel for the defendant sought $20,000.00 in costs if he were to be successful. I consider that to be an appropriate measure of the costs which the defendant ought to pay to the successful parties.

[para24] Accordingly, I fix the costs to be payable by the defendant to each of the other parties at $20,000.00.

Action No. RE 1228/92

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Hawkins J. Heard: September 3, 1992 Judgment: October 7, 1992

Alan J. Butcher, for the Applicants. Gary Caplan, for the Respondent.

HAWKINS J.:-- These are three applications in which the purchasers of condominium units seek declarations that the agreements are null and void and for relief consequential to such declarations.

The units are in the same building and the vendor is common to all three matters as are many of the facts. None of these purchasers ever occupied the units personally but they did occupy, at different times, through tenants. Significant dates and figures are as follows:

The "Wong" Purchase - Unit 1710

Price: $158,040.00 Deposits paid: $ 39,510.00 Contract occupancy date: 15 Sept. 1990 Actual occupancy date: 27 Nov. 1990 Monthly occupancy charge: $ 1,653.75 Contract closing date: 30 Jan. 1991 First extended closing date: 20 Dec. 1991 Tenanted: Dec. 1990 - April 1992

The "Lam" Purchase - Unit 1604 Price: $166,950.00 Deposits paid: $ 41,738.00 Contract occupancy date: 15 Sept. 1990 Actual occupancy date: 23 Nov. 1990 Monthly occupancy charge: $ 1,742.87 Contract closing date: 30 Jan. 1991 First extended closing date: 20 Dec. 1991 Tenanted: Dec. 1990 - Late 1991

The "Lam/Lo" Purchase - Unit 1714

Price: $174,000.00 Deposits paid: $ 43,500.00 Contract occupancy date: 15 Sept. 1990 Actual occupancy date: 23 Nov. 1990 Monthly occupancy charge: $ 1,784.28 Contract closing date: 30 Jan. 1991 First extended closing date: 20 Dec. 1991 Tenanted: Dec. 1990 - April 1992

The vendor was unable to close by the contract closing date (30 Jan. 1991) and fixed a new closing date of 20 Dec. 1991. The vendor purported to extend the closing dates further as follows:

The Wongs, through their solicitors, advised the vendors by letter dated 2 April 1992 that they would not be completing the transaction as a result of the vendor's unilateral extensions of the closing date after 20 December 1991.

The Ian Lams gave a similar notice to the vendors though not until the day before the latest extended closing date (April 23/April 24). Lam/Lo took a different tack. Upon receipt of the vendor's solicitors letter of 3 February 1992, purporting to fix a closing date of 27 February, Lam/Lo solicitors advised by letter dated 11 February 1992 that their client was willing to close on the previously-fixed date of 13 February, 1992 but not later. This offer was unequivocally rejected by the vendor.

The issues raised by these applications are:

1. Did the vendor have the right to extend the closing date beyond 20 December 1991?
2. Was there any conduct on the part of the purchasers to prevent them from treating these extensions as a repudiation by the vendors?

Issue One

The contractual occupancy date in all three agreements was 15 September 1990. Paragraph 8 of Schedule D to the agreement enables the vendor to extend the occupancy date for one or more periods of time such periods not to exceed eighteen months. The power in the vendor to extend the closing date is quite different. It is found in paragraph 5 of Schedule D in these words:

". . . in the event that the documents creating the Condominium Corporation have not been registered prior to the Closing Date the Closing Date shall be extended to a date designated by the Vendor or its solicitors as the Closing Date which date shall be not less than fifteen (15) days after notice in writing thereof is given by the Vendor or its solicitors to the Purchaser or its solicitor".

I find that the power to extend the closing date is exhausted by its single exercise. The wording itself refers to extension to "a date" not "a date or dates". Multiple extensions of time, when contemplated, were clearly provided for as in the case of extensions of the occupancy date as indicated above. If there is any uncertainty about the power to extend the closing date (and I think there is not) it should be interpreted contra proferentum. The answer to issue number one is "no". Issue Two

Both the Wongs and the Ian Lams let seven authorized extensions go by without protest, protesting only the eighth unilateral extension, in the Wongs case some twenty-two days before that final extended date and in the Ian Lams case on the very eve of the final extension date. In King et al. v. Urban and Country Transport Ltd. (1973) 1 O.R. (2d) 449 (C.A.) Arnup J.A. had this to say (at p. 456):

"Normally . . . when both parties let the time go by, and one of the parties wishes to reinstate time as of the essence, it is necessary to serve a notice upon the other party, fixing a new date for closing, which must be reasonable, and stating that time is to be of the essence with respect to the new date".

I find therefore that the applicants Jim Hop-On Wong, Ivy Wong, Mary Lam and Ian Lam, had, by their silence and inaction in the face of seven consecutive extensions by the vendor, elected to treat to the agreement of purchase and sale as still valid and subsisting and that it was incumbent on them to reinstate the essentiality of time by naming a new and reasonable date for closing. Their applications are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The applicants Manchi Lam and Ching-Chi P.Lo are more fortunate. Their letter of February 11, 1992, in response to the vendor's fourth closing extension names a new date for closing being the previous closing date named by the vendor (February 13, 1992). Although that date is only two days away from the date of these purchasers' letter, the vendor's letter in response dated February 13 makes no issue of the shortness of the purchasers' notice but simply takes the imperious position that the closing is to be 27 February 1992 and that is that!

I find that Lam/Lo had the right to restore the essentiality of time to the agreement by naming a new reasonable closing date themselves, which they did, and that the vendor's rejection of that closing date relieved Lam/Lo from any need to tender on their proposed closing date.

Judgment is to issue in favour of Manchi Lam and Ching- Chi P. Lo declaring that the agreement of purchase and sale between them and Reemark Sterling II Limited dated 8 April 1988 is null and void.

Lam/Lo had tenants in the unit from December 1990 to April 1992, this tenancy being terminated by notice from Lam/Lo. It is appropriate that Lam/Lo pay occupancy fees up to the time that their tenant vacated. The material indicates that Sam/Lo have been arrears of occupancy fees from January 1992. These arrears amount to:

Jan/Feb/Mar 3 x $1,784.28 = $5,352.84 Apr. 1 - 19 19 x $58.66 = $1,114.54 ----- Total $6,467.38

The Lam/Lo deposits total $43,500.00. Against this figure is set off the occupancy fee arrears ($6,467.38) for a net in favour of Lam/Lo $37,032.62.

Judgment to issue for that sum together with pre-judgment interest thereon from 19 April 1992 and costs.

If I have misunderstood the figures in arriving at the above sums I may be spoken to as I may be concerning the issue of costs.

Lee v. Leslie Centres Ltd.

Between Nelson Lee, Che Jick Tam and Anne Lee, Applicants, and Leslie Centres Ltd., Respondent Action No. RE 205/92

Also reported at: 23 R.P.R. (2d) 185

Alan J. Butcher, for the Applicants. Paul A. Konikoff, for the Respondent.

MONTGOMERY J.:-- This application is for a declaration that an agreement of purchase and sale, executed September 8, 1988, is null and void, and for return of the deposit of $102,000 plus interest.

THE FACTS:

The applicants are purchasers under an agreement of purchase and sale. The applicants agreed to purchase units in a commercial condominium development for the sum of $510,000.

The agreement provides in paragraph 5(c) that the units shall be ready for occupancy on the 28th day of September, 1989. The wording of paragraph 5(c) is as follows:

"The Occupancy Date" shall be the 28th day of September 1989 or such extended or accelerated date pursuant to the terms hereof, and as provided for in paragraphs 2., & 25. to 36.

Paragraphs 2., & 25. to 36. provide for a licence governing the occupation of a completed unit from the occupancy date until final closing. None of the terms in those paragraphs provide for an extension of the occupancy date.

The respondent relies on paragraph 19 under the heading "Delays": 19. In the event, completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lockouts, fire, lightning, tempest, availability of labour, fixtures or building materials, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties, municipal occupancy certificate or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the vendor, the vendor shall be permitted, from time to time, extensions of time as required by it for completion and the Occupancy Date shall be extended from time to time accordingly.

The agreement provides that time is of the essence.

The units were not completed by September 28, 1989, the occupancy date set out in the agreement. Nor were the units completed by September 28, 1990, the proposed amendment to the occupancy date. To this date the units still remain incomplete and there is no evidence that construction has even commenced on the property.

The respondent contends that even if it is in default, the applicants are in default for failing to provide financial information on time.

Reliance is placed upon the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Shaw Industries Ltd. et al. v. Greenland Enterprise Ltd. et al. (1991), 16 R.P.R. (2d) 1. At p. 9 Southin J.A. said:

The underlying reason for this is that a party to a contract for the sale of land, who is in essential default, cannot be heard to complain of the wrongdoing of the other until he has given the other the opportunity to do right and is himself ready to do right. To cast stones, one must be without sin or at least have expiated one's sin.

I distinguish that case on the facts.

I conclude that there was no default on the part of the applicants here. Mr. Lee said in cross-examination that he was told by the agent that the financial information would be required some time in the future. There is some evidence based on information and belief to the contrary; that is not good enough. It was incumbent upon the respondent to produce firsthand evidence if it could. There were no letters from respondent's solicitors to purchasers' solicitors demanding or even requesting financial information.

I am satisfied the sole default is that of the respondent.

It is 2-1/2 years since the date fixed for closing. It is unreasonable now to try and fix a fresh date for closing on a commercial purchase where construction has not even started.

I see no solace in paragraph 19 of the agreement for the respondent. The contra proferentem rule applies against the respondent.

There is no need to tender here as no building has been built.

A declaration will issue that the agreement is null and void.

The respondent shall forthwith return the deposit of $102,000, together with interest at 10 percent per annum, from the date of deposit.

Costs to the applicant fixed at $1,500.

Evelyn Grimble and Wayne Grimble, Applicants, and 662092 Ontario Limited, Respondent

Action No. 6977/90

Ontario Supreme Court Judicial District of York Region - Newmarket, Ontario Shearer L.J.S.C. July 6, 1990

Jonathan H. Fine, for the Applicants. G.M. Caplan, for the Respondent.

SHEARER L.J.S.C.:--

ISSUE:

The applicants seek a determination of their rights under an Agreement of Purchase and Sale. By consent at the opening of the argument, it was agreed that paragraph 10 of the applicant's written argument should be incorporated into the final order resolving this matter, thereby disposing of that issue.

The remaining issue is whether the applicants (hereinafter called the tenants), are responsible for the carrying expenses of the Respondent, a condominium corporation (hereinafter called the landlord) in maintaining the condominium from the time the tenants occupied their condominium unit until the formal closing of the transaction.

The contract between the parties consists of two documents: an "Agreement of Purchase and Sale", accepted on March 8/89 and an "Interim Occupancy Agreement" dated Feb. 20/89 (which latter document amended the former by "adding thereto" certain clauses). These two documents are hereinafter referred to as "the contract".

The contract contains the following articles: 3.05 The sale price herein has been calculated on the basis of the Unit having an area of approximately 1,039 square feet at a sale price of $200.00 per square foot. As soon as the Unit has been substantially completed the Vendor shall calculate the actual area of the unit and the sale price shall be adjusted at the said rate.

3.06 In the event the Declaration has not been registered on or before the Occupancy Date, the provisions of article 5.00 shall apply, and the Purchaser shall, during the period of such occupancy, pay in advance to the Vendor the sum of $ ONE THOUSAND, TWO HUNDRED NINETY-EIGHT DOLLARS AND SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS ($1,298.75) DOLLARS per month as an occupancy licence fee, which monthly license fee will not be credited towards payment of the purchase price. This amount is based on $15.00 per square foot annual as occupancy licence fee (plus $ per square foot annual estimated cost common area expenses which are subject to year end adjustment.)

It should be noted that the monthly "occupancy licence fee" (hereinafter called "rent") was determined by charging the tenants at the rate of $15.00 for each square foot of their unit.

It is the interpretation of article 3.06 that creates the conflict between the parties. The tenants argue, first, that the paragraph clearly states that $1,298.75 represents their full monthly liability. If that argument is rejected the tenants submit that the clause is ambiguous and that evidence extraneous to the contract should be admitted in order to establish that their interpretation is correct.

The landlord contends that section 3.06, when read in conjunction with other sections of the contract, make the intention of the parties clear, namely, that the tenants' liability is not restricted to payment of their rent, but includes also the carrying costs of the unit.

It is trite law that provisions of a contract should not be considered in isolation. The contract as a whole must be looked at in order to interpret any particular term and no terms should be taken as meaningless. Applying these principles to the contract in issue, I find the following articles to be helpful in determining the matter before me. For clarity, I omit portions of the various sections.

Section 3.07 states: "Realty taxes ... hydro, water and gas rates, fuel, estimated common expenses and mortgage interest ... occupancy licence fee ... and insurance ... shall be apportioned ... and ... be paid ..." on the closing date.

Section 5.02 states: "The Purchaser shall ... pay ... the balance of the purchase price with adjustments ... as set out in article 3.00." (This reference invokes the provisions of 3.07 above).

Section 5.12 "The Purchaser shall assume sole responsibility to the absolute exoneration of the Vendor for all realty taxes ... hydro, water, electric and heating costs, charges and expenses, attributable to the Unit." ... The Purchaser agrees that the occupancy license is to be ... "completely carefree to the Vendor". (The underlinings are mine).

These last 5 words are couched in simple English, uncluttered by legalese, and can be readily understood by laymen.

After a careful reading of the agreement as a whole and relying particularly on the above-mentioned articles, I am compelled to find that there is no ambiguity in the contract and that the intention of the parties is clear, namely, that the tenants are obliged to pay, in addition to the monthly rent, the carrying charges incurred by the landlord during the tenants' term of occupancy prior to closing.

In my view, poor draftsmanship on the part of the landlord in the preparation of the contract was partly responsible for motivating the applicants to bring this motion. For this reason, I make no order as to costs.

Re Indian Park Association and Langs et al.

33 O.R. (3d) 522

Nos. G17626-96 and G-17406/96

Ontario Court (General Division), Eberhard J., April 24, 1997

APPLICATION for a declaration that the applicants were not bound by a building scheme.

Martin Scisizzi and Orlando V. DaSilva, for applicants and for respondents in counterapplication. Chrisandra Firth and Howard Hamilton, for respondent/ counterapplicant.

EBERHARD J.: -- Since 1974, the DeMartini family through corporations named Kitwee, Modco, and Monica have developed the Sugarbush properties along the Horseshoe Valley Road in the Corporation of the Township of Oro, County of Simcoe. Phase I and II were developed by Kitwee and Modco in 1974. Registered on title of each lot of Phase I and Phase II is an agreement between Kitwee and Modco and Indian Park Association setting out the intention to create a building scheme including covenants restricting the use of privately owned lots. Each deed conveying an individual lot within Phase I and Phase II refers to the restrictions set out in the registered agreement. Kitwee and Modco conveyed the common lands in Phases I and II to the Indian Park Association, which association each lot owner was required to join. Bylaw No. 1 of the Indian Park Association, in its original form, obligates each lot owner to pay dues of membership which are used to support the various objects of the corporation including maintenance of common areas. Bylaw No. 1 in its original form also included land use restrictions that were recorded in the registered agreement and referred to in each deed. The directors of Indian Park Association are elected from the membership comprised of each lot owner.

Registrations are under the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 230.

In 1988, the DeMartini family, through the Monica Corporation, undertook the development of Sugarbush, Phase III. By agreement between Monica Corporation and the Indian Park Association, additional lands were conveyed to the Indian Park Association and Monica Corporation purported to bind its successors to membership in the Indian Park Association, to payment of dues associated with membership and compliance with association rules. This agreement was registered against each lot in Phase III. The agreement of purchase and sale used by Monica respecting each lot in Phase III included an acknowledgement by the purchaser that the agreement between Monica Corporation and the Indian Park Association, and the bylaws of Indian Park Association had been read. Notwithstanding that the bylaws are in the nature of restrictions on the use of privately owned land, restrictive covenants were not registered against each lot in Phase III.

Conflicts have developed. The applicants are a group of lot owners or former lot owners of Phase III who challenge the authority of the Indian Park Association to restrict their use of privately owned lots as well as the authority to collect dues. I find as a fact that the purchasers of lots in Phase III, as a consequence of the clause in the agreements of purchase and sale, must be taken to have had actual notice of an agreement which purports to bind them to membership in the Indian Park Association. Such membership requires payment of dues and compliance with land use bylaws.

The Applications

The applicants seek a declaration that the bylaws do not bind private lots in Phase III; a declaration that the owners of lots in Phase III are not bound; and that the owners of Phase III are either not members or are at liberty to terminate their membership in Indian Park Association. As an alternative, the applicants seek to wind up the Indian Park Association on the basis of the common law remedy for oppression or on the statutory basis that it is just and equitable to do so.

In the companion application, Indian Park Association moves for an injunction against the Langs to prevent them, as lot owners in Phase III, from parking a school bus on their property contrary to the bylaws of Indian Park Association. It is conceded that by parking a school bus as they have, the Langs are in breach of the bylaw.

The Issues

The issues in both applications are:

(a) Whether the bylaws of Indian Park Association with restrictions on the use of private lands are binding and enforceable upon the lands in Phase III; and,

(b) Whether the restrictions are valid as part of a building scheme.

I begin by underscoring those matters that I am not deciding. I have not been asked to determine whether there is a valid building scheme in relation to Phase I and II nor whether the bylaws of Indian Park Association are binding upon those lands. I must necessarily comment upon Phase I and II since theirs is the history of the Phase III arrangement. However, no relief is sought on behalf of any party in relation to Phase I and II in this litigation and I do not purport to decide what I am not asked.

I also decline relief by way of winding up the Indian Park Association. I have reviewed the cases cited by the applicant (Ebrahimi v. Westbourne Galleries Ltd., [1972] 2 All E.R. 492, [1973] A.C. 360 (H.L.); Rogers v. Agincourt Holdings Ltd. (1976), 14 O.R. (2d) 489 at p. 493, 74 D.L.R. (3d) 152 (C.A.); Kay v. Nipissing Twin Lakes Rod & Gun Club (1993), 7 B.L.R. (2d) 225 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Sobrinho v. Oakville Portuguese Canadian Club (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 581 (H.C.J.); Sass v. St. Nicholas Mutual Benefit Assn. of Winnipeg, [1937] S.C.R. 415, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 761; Naneff v. Con-Crete Holdings Ltd. (1995), 23 O.R. (3d) 481, 23 B.L.R. (2d) 286 (C.A.)) and find that the actions of the Board of Directors on behalf of the majority shareholders are not of such a quality as to justify remedy sought. I have directed my mind to the nature and purpose of the association, its circumstances of operation and the effect of dissent upon effective continuation. I have considered the reasonable expectations of members of the Association. I have considered whether the actions of the Board of Directors in purporting to enforce bylaws have been "high handed" or harmful to Phase III residents such that peace cannot be maintained between the residents while the Association continues to exist. In these considerations I have had a predisposition antagonistic to the concept that majority rule is sufficient justification. My imagination allows many examples of instances when the power of the majority over the rights of the individual or the interests of society might well demand external sanction. This was not such a case. If the bylaws are valid, the efforts of the Board of Directors were not unlawful though perhaps at times unnecessarily accusatorial. The proper remedy here is to determine whether the Phase III applicants are justified in their resistance to the enforcement of bylaws. If so, they should be relieved of obligations which are not properly theirs. If, however, it is the determination of the court that the bylaws do bind them, then the Board of Directors was proper in its effort to encourage compliance.

I proceed, therefore, to a determination of the enforceability of the bylaws.

Land Use Restrictions

Restrictions on the use of private land do not bind the land at law unless they fall within recognized categories: Ontario Law Reform Commission, Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land (1989), at p. 22. Such categories include a chain of personal covenants, devices involving the use of a rent charge, benefit claimed under a deed, certain positive covenants made in favour of public bodies, site plans and plans of subdivisions registered on title and more recently, covenants governed under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26. These categories do not apply to the present case. Counsel for Indian Park Association has also conceded that the conditions for the running of the burden of a restrictive covenant in equity have not been met in present situation. I do note, however, that one of the requirements for the running of the burden of a restrictive covenant concerns notice. In equity

"A bona fide purchaser for value who acquires land without notice of a restriction, takes the property free of that restriction. . . .". This requirement is of limited relevance in Ontario because the equitable doctrine of notice has been replaced by the concept of statutory notice. Under the Registry Act the purchaser for value takes free of prior unregistered instrument unless the purchaser had actual notice before registration of the instrument under which he claims. Moreover, under the Land Titles Act, priority of registration prevails, despite actual or constructive notice. Thus, whether the lands is subject to the Registry Act or, the Land Titles Act, in order to protect the interest of the covenantee, the covenant should be registered on the title to the servient tenement.

Having conceded non-compliance with the requirements of restrictive covenants, Indian Park Association relies on the argument that the restrictions are valid as part of a "building scheme". A "building scheme" involves the sale of building lots according to a plan and subject to restrictive covenants.

A building scheme may exist, therefore, when restrictive covenants are imposed during the course of development with intent that once the scheme has crystallized on the sale of the first lot or unit, the vendor will be bound by the scheme and the restrictions will be mutually enforceable by the purchasers of the several lots or units. In essence, once a building scheme has been established, equity treats the development as having its own local law.

The traditional requirements accepted in Ontario are as follows:

(1.) that both the plaintiffs and defendants [that is, the owner of a lot seeking to enforce a restrictive covenant and the owner of a lot against whom he or she seeks enforcement] derive title under a common vendor; (2.) that previously to selling the lands to which the plaintiffs and defendants are respectively entitled the vendor laid out his estate, or a defined portion thereof (including the lands purchased by the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively), for sale in lots subject to restrictions intended to be imposed on all the lots, and which, though varying in details as to particular lots, are consistent and consistent only with some general scheme of development; (3.) that these restrictions were intended by the common vendor to be and were for the benefit of all the lots intended to be sold, whether or not they were also intended to be and were for the benefit of other land retained by the vendor; and (4.) that both the plaintiffs and the defendants, or their predecessors in title, purchase their lots from the common vendor upon the footing that the restrictions subject to which the purchases were made were to enure for the benefit of the other lots included in the general scheme whether or not they were also to enure for the benefit of other lands retained by the vendors.

A more liberal approach which has been rejected in Ontario nevertheless assists in understanding the concept of building schemes. English law requires only that the area of the scheme be clearly defined and that there be an intention to impose a scheme of restrictions, for the benefit of the purchasers and their successors, that would be mutually enforceable by them: McGarry and Wade, The Law of Real Property, 5th ed. (1984), c. 14 at pp. 791-92.

In 1988, the developer Monica could have created a building scheme. Monica owned all the lands laid out for sale in lots in Phase III. Land use restrictions such as those in place in Phases I and II were consistent and consistent only with some general scheme of development and the vendor intended benefit of such restrictions to be for all of the lots intended to be sold. By placing in the agreements of purchase and sale the requirement that the purchaser read the bylaws of Indian Park Association and the agreement between Monica and Indian Park Association binding Monica's successors to membership and compliance, the vendor Monica ensured that each lot was purchased upon the footing that the restrictions were made to enure for the benefit of other lots included in the general scheme.

However, I am not satisfied that Monica accomplished the goal of establishing a valid building scheme. This is so for several reasons:

First, I compare the method and documentation pursued by Monica in 1998 to that which was put in place by Kitwee and Modco in 1974 in relation to Phases I and II. The 1974 Kitwee agreement registered on title referred to the establishment of a "building scheme". Intention can be inferred without mention, but the 1988 Monica agreement recorded no such overt notice of such an intention. The 1974 intention to establish a building scheme was supported by the registration of restrictive covenants on title and reference to them in every deed. A purchaser in Phase III was given notice of an agreement expressing the developers "wish" that

All lot and block owners . . . be members of I.P.A. and to enjoy the benefit of such membership and to be subject to compliance with the provisions of letters patent, bylaws, rules and regulations of the association as amended from time to time;

I.P.A. agreed

To amend its bylaws to admit any registered owner . . . subject to compliance with provisions of letters patent, bylaws, rules and regulations of the association as amended from time to time.

And:

Monica on behalf of itself, its successors and assigns agrees to abide by the bylaws, rules and regulations of I.P.A. in effect from time to time.

Indian Park Association argues that Monica created a building scheme that was flexible and placed in the hands of the lot owners their own power to impose land use restrictions as needed and agreed. The Association argues that all a purchaser needed to know was the nature of current restrictions imposed by Bylaw No. 1 and the mechanism for change contained therein and in the letters patent. Counsel for Indian Park Association could not, however, cite a single case in which a flexible land use restriction scheme had been validated nor indeed a single case in which land use restrictions imposed as part of a building scheme were not also registered on title.

The applicants have cited s. 118 of the Land Titles Act as the appropriate means in 1988 of registering restrictions on these lands.

118(1) Upon the application of the owner of land that is being registered or of the registered owner of land, the land registrar may register as annexed to the land a condition or restriction that the land or a specified part thereof is not to be built upon, or is to be or is not to be used in a particular manner, or any other condition or restriction running with or capable of being legally annexed to land.

(2) The land registrar may register as annexed to the land a condition, restriction or covenant that is included in a transfer of registered land that the land or a specified part thereof is not to be built upon, or is to be or is not to be used in a particular manner, or any other condition, restriction or covenant running with or capable of being legally annexed to land.

(3) Upon the application of the owner of land that is being registered or of the registered owner of land, the land registrar may register as annexed to the land a covenant that the land or a specified part thereof is not to be built upon, or is to be or is not to be used in a particular manner, or any other covenant running with or capable of being legally annexed to land.

(10) Where a condition or restriction has been registered as annexed to land, the condition or restriction is as binding upon any person who becomes the registered owner of the land or a part thereof as if the condition or restriction had been in the form of a covenant entered into by the person who was the registered owner of the land at the time of the registration of the condition or restriction.

Clearly, that section sets out a co-ordinated scheme for the registration of restrictions running with or capable of being legally annexed to land. Indian Park Association submits, however, that s. 74 is equally effective to give notice of any "unregistered estate, right, interest or equity" referred to in a notice or restriction registered pursuant to that section.

74(1) Any person entitled to or interested in any unregistered estates, rights, interests or equities in registered land may protect the same from being impaired by any act of the registered owner by entering on the register such notices, cautions, inhibitions or other restrictions as are authorized by this Act or by the Director of Titles.

(2) Where a notice, caution, inhibition or restriction is registered, every registered owner of the land and every person deriving title through him, excepting owners of encumbrances registered prior to the registration of such notice, caution, inhibition or restriction, shall be deemed to be affected with notice of any unregistered estate, right, interest or equity referred to therein.

It is argued that registration of the agreement between Monica and Indian Park Association is sufficient notice to bind the land. I disagree.

Where a means of accomplishing notice is specifically set out, validation of an alternate, less specific means would introduce into land law an unwelcome uncertainty.

Moreover, I am not satisfied that notice by means of the registration of an agreement to comply with restrictions as amended from time to time is effective. Information recorded at the land titles office would be insufficient to notify a purchaser of the current state of the restrictions. We know, for instance, that some purchasers of Phase III lots were presented with copies of bylaws that were obsolete as the result of prior amendment. Even if the current bylaws could be ascertained, the purchaser would be forced to consider whether the bylaws as passed were valid and within the powers of the corporation. We know for instance that the Association concedes that its definition of "family" is beyond its jurisdiction and yet a restriction based on that definition appears in the current bylaws. Since the letters patent of Indian Park Association have been amended to allow changes in the bylaw with less than 100 per cent approval, a purchaser could not be certain that his obligations to the members of the association would remain stable. Nor could a purchaser be certain that his obligation would be limited to current lots since Indian Park Association has demonstrated its willingness to open its membership to Phase III and two more phases of development are currently pending.

The uncertainty arising from this scheme is such that it flies in the face of both common law and statutory policies. The strict common law rules suggest that courts were concerned that restrictive covenants could tend to render land inalienable and persons dealing subsequently with land would have great difficulty in ascertaining the existence of such covenants, because they do not normally have a physical manifestation: Ontario Law Reform Commission Report, p. 21.

Recording statutes, the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. R.20, and the Land Titles Act, were developed to comprehensively address these notice concerns. I am persuaded that the specificity required by these statutes is designed to ensure that notice of restrictions will be given to all owners under a building scheme. Under the Land Titles Act, priority of registration prevails despite actual or constructive notice. Anyone dealing subsequently with the land must be able to discover the existence and extent of obligations under the building scheme from the public record. This is consistent with the approach of the courts where there is a defect in registration such as a failure to adequately describe the subject lands. If the lands have not been adequately described, it will not matter that the vendor had an intention to create a building scheme, or that the original purchasers were aware of that intention: Shen Investments Ltd. v. Mosca, [1968] 2 O.R. 162, 68 D.L.R. (2d) 372 (H.C.J.).

The requirement in such an example that the area of a building scheme be defined with specificity reflects a concern with notice:

. . . there must be a defined area within which the scheme is operative . . . purchaser of one parcel cannot be subject to an implied obligation to purchasers of an undefined and unknown area. He must know both the extent of his burden and the extent of his benefit. Not only must the area be defined, but the obligations to be imposed within that area must be defined. Those obligations need not be identical. For example there may be houses of a certain value in one part and houses of a different value in another part. A building scheme is not created by the mere fact that the owner of an estate sells it in lots and takes varying covenants from various purchasers. There must be notice to the various purchasers of what I may venture to call the local law imposed by the vendors upon a definite area.

I find therefore that Monica did not succeed in establishing the building scheme which it may have intended because the specificity of notice was insufficient to permit anyone dealing subsequently with the land to be able to discover the existence and extent of the scheme from the public record.

The Bylaws

I also find that the land use restrictions contained in the bylaws of Indian Park Association are unenforceable against Phase III residents because such bylaws are ultra vires of the powers of the corporation. The objects of Indian Park Association are recorded in its letters patent as follows:

- (a) To acquire the ownership of certain lands and premises in the Township of Oro, in the County of Simcoe and the Province of Ontario and to manage, maintain, develop and improve such lands for the mutual benefit of the members of the corporation;
- (b) To manage and maintain any services for the mutual benefit of the members of the corporation;
- (c) To erect and maintain a building or buildings on the said lands for the mutual benefit of the members of the corporation;
- (d) To promote social activities among the members;
- (e) To advance the interests and welfare of the members of the corporation; and
- (f) To assess and collect from the members of the corporation such sums of money as the corporation may deem necessary from time to time for the purpose of carrying out the aforesaid objects . . .

The letters patent in their original form set out an amending formula requiring confirmation by 100 per cent of the members present in person or by proxy at a meeting of the members called for that purpose.

Upon its incorporation, the Association enacted "Bylaw No. 1" which enumerated several provisions relating to the transaction of the business and affairs of the Association. Bylaw No. 1 included, in particular, the following provisions:

1. Definitions

(iii) Land means all the land situate . . . in the Township of Oro . . . more particularly described as Part 1 on a Plan of Reference filed . . . as Number 51R-3329 . . . except for all lots as hereinafter defined . . . [i.e. the common lands with the Phase I and II lands]. (v) Lot means each of a total of 157 lots according to Plans of Subdivision filed or to be filed . . . [i.e., the privately owned lots with the Phase I and II lands].

2. Membership (i) Admission to Membership. Each owner of a lot shall ex officio be a member of the Corporation [i.e., the Association] . . .

(ii) Termination of Membership. Subject to the letters patent the interest of each member in the Corporation is not transferable and shall lapse and cease to exist . . . in the case of each of the other members, upon the transfer of the beneficial ownership in their respective lots. . . .

(iv) Rights of members. Each member shall be entitled to use and enjoy the Land in a reasonable manner, provided that if any member fails to pay his share of the common expenses or other charges contemplated herein when same are due, or fails to comply with the restrictions herein contained, such member shall not be entitled to use the land until such payment is made or the restrictions are complied with.

10. Duties of the Corporation . . .

(i) to manage, maintain, develop and improve the Land . . .

(ii) to manage and maintain the water supply and distribution system to the Lots . . . unless and until the Township assumes the management and maintenance of same.

(iii) to collect and receive all contributions towards the common expenses from the lot owner . . .

(iv) to effect compliance by the members with this and subsequent By-laws of the Corporation, the agreement dated August 30, 1974 between Kitwee . . . and the Corporation, each and every covenant given by each member and contained in the transfer to him of his Lot and each and every covenant notice of which is registered against the Lots.

(v) to advance the interest and welfare of the members.

Although the Association's letters patent did not enumerate, as one of its objects, the imposition of restrictions on the use and enjoyment of privately owned lots within the Phase I and II Lands, Bylaw No. 1, nevertheless, included the following lot use restrictions:

14. Provisions Respecting the Lots: The use of the Lots shall be in accordance with the following restrictions for the enhancement in value of all of the Lots and Land and the better enjoyment thereof by the members:

(i) No garage or fence shall be constructed or erected on any Lot save and except each lot owner may construct and install a pool which can be fenced in accordance with the by-laws and zoning restrictions of the Township of Oro.

(ii) . . . no improvements, alterations or additions to any Lot or to the exterior of any premises thereon shall be made, performed or constructed without the prior written approval of the board, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld.

(iii) No trees shall be cut down other than those which are dead or diseased . . .

(iv) No motor vehicles of any kind other than snowmobiles or motorcycles shall be parked on any Lot, . . . only snowmobiles may be driven on or over the land owned by the Corporation or parked on such lands.

(v) There shall be no littering on any Lot . . .

(vi) No animal shall be kept or brought on any Lot other than domestic animals normally regarded as pets.

(vii) No signs advertising any Lot for sale or rent shall be placed thereon with the prior written approval of the board which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld.

(viii) The beneficial ownership in and to any Lot shall not be transferred by sale, gift, bequest or otherwise, other than to a person who shall acknowledge, in writing, to the Corporation his membership therein and accordingly his obligations to observe this and any other By-laws of the Corporation.

Without amending the objects of the Association enumerated in its letter patent, the Association entered into an agreement with Monica whereby the Association agreed to amend its bylaws to admit into membership any registered owner of a lot in Phase III. In November 1988 before executing the Monica agreement and before there were any Phase III members of the Association, the Indian Park Association purported to establish a new set of by-laws entitled By-Law No. 1 at the general annual meeting contained a number of additional provisions including, among other things, a change in the restrictions on the use of lots within Phases I, II and III some of which were more onerous as follows:

1. Board approval must be obtained for the construction or installation of any structure of all new dwellings prior to receiving a building permit, excepting those homes built by the developer.

6. No pool or fence shall be constructed or erected on any Lot.

7. Except in authorized garages, Lots may not be used to store the following: unlicensed vehicles, boats, trailers, mobile vans, non-permanent structures not approved by the Board, heavy equipment, machinery, garbage and debris. These items will be removed at the Owner's expense.

14. Lots cannot be used for commercial ventures. Home occupations are permitted as long as lots are not advertised for commercial use. 16. The beneficial ownership in and to any Lot shall not be transferred by sale, gift, bequest or otherwise, other than to a person who shall acknowledge to the Association his membership therein and accordingly his obligation to observe this and any other laws of the Association.

17. Lots shall be used for single family use only. For the purpose of this By-law "family" means one human being or two or more human beings related by blood, marriage or legal adoption or a group of not more than three human beings who need not be related by blood or marriage living together as a single housekeeping unit . . .

The letters patent of the Association were never amended to give the Association power to pass bylaws restricting the use and enjoyment of any privately owned lots within Phase III.

The Association, like all non-share capital corporations, was granted a corporate Charter at the discretion of the Lieutenant Governor for the purpose of carrying out objects, "of a patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, educational, agricultural, scientific, artistic, social, professional, fraternal, sporting, or athletic nature or of any other useful purpose". In addition to deriving its powers from the objects listed in its letters patent, the association has additional specific power prescribed by s. 23 of the Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.38, as "ancillary and incidental", and therefore necessary to the attainment of the stated objects. Section 129 of the Corporations Act empowers the Association to pass specific and limited bylaws. Neither the objects of the association nor the Corporations Act empowers the Association to,

(a) impose a mandatory membership scheme on residents; or

(b) pass and, thereafter, attempt to enforce, bylaws which restrict the property and civil rights of the association members.

Restriction on civil rights and property rights, when it legitimately occurs, is typically accompanied by legislation of considerable specificity. As discussed above, to restrict the use of land, vast bodies of law have developed to control and regulate what may be restricted and how the restrictions can be accomplished. In a context of condominiums, the respective rights, obligations and limitations of those who submit to restriction and those who impose it are carefully regulated by detailed legislation. Restrictions emanating from public bodies are regulated by many substantive and procedural requirements. A mechanism for review of restrictions is available.

It cannot be imagined that a non-share capital corporation without the benefit of these vast bodies of supporting law could take upon itself the power to restrict use of privately owned land of its members under the general object "to advance the interest and welfare of the members of the corporation" appearing in a list of specific objects which make no mention of the use of private lands. Neither could it be imagined that the general duty of the corporation "to advance the interest and welfare of the members", in a list of duties concerned with managing common land, managing the water supply, collecting contributions for common expenses and effecting compliance with bylaws, could support the much more significant duty to control the use of privately owned lands.

A general object to advance the interest of members of a corporation must be read together with the other objects in order to understand what is intended: Kay v. Nipissing Twin Lakes Rod & Gun Club, supra, at p. 229. A general clause is not a licence to pursue a direction that is not consistent with the total objects of the corporation.

I find that in so far as the bylaws purport to restrict the use of private land, they are manifestly outside of the objects of the corporation.

Consequently, by reason of my finding in relation to land use restriction and in relation to bylaws, this court declares that the bylaws of Indian Park Association are not enforceable to bind the private lots of Phase III.

Personal Obligation

The applicant has also asked for declarations that the owners of the lots of Phase III are not bound by the bylaws of Indian Park Association at all, and that they are not members, or if they are, that they may terminate their membership.

I began this judgment with a finding that the original purchasers of Phase III had actual notice of an agreement between Monica and Indian Park Association. By that agreement, Indian Park Association received certain lands in the Phase III development which they took responsibility for managing for the benefit of members. Registered owners of Phase III were admitted into the benefits of membership in the Association subject to compliance with the provisions of the letters patent, bylaws, rules and regulations of the association as amended from time to time. I have ruled that the bylaws are ineffective to permit Indian Park Association to restrict use of private lands. However, that is not the end of the relationship. Because of the agreement between Monica and Indian Park Association, membership is an incident of ownership of a lot. Common lands are under the control of the association. Financial obligations of a member are set out in Bylaw 1 as amended:

Default of payment.

Where a member is in default in his obligation to pay his contribution toward the operating expenses the Association may, thirty days after payment is due, register a notice of lien against his lot. Such lien shall be deemed to be a mortgage under the Mortgages Act R.S.O. 1980 Ch. 296 and any amendments to the Act. The association shall have, in addition to any other rights which it may have, such rights afforded to the mortgagee under the provisions of this Act. The board shall advise each mortgagee of any lot against which a notice of lien is registered of such registration if that mortgagee is on register with the association. The cost of enforcing the association's rights on non payment of contributions towards operating expenses, including legal fees calculated on a solicitor and his own client basis, shall be borne by member in default.

The rights of members are tied to payment:

(iv) Rights of members.

Each member who pays his share of expenses and abides by all the bylaws and covenants shall be entitled to use and enjoy the common Land, and facilities in a reasonable manner. If any member fails to pay his share of the common expenses or other charges set by the board when due, or fails to comply with the restrictions and obligations set out in the bylaws, such member shall not be entitled to use the land until such payment is made or the restrictions or the obligations are complied with. These provisions bring again to the forefront a concern obvious since the outset of this proceeding. Indian Park Association, through its argument and through the bylaws as indicated, takes the position that mandatory membership necessary in order to preserve the integrity of the Sugarbush neighbourhood. The terms of the bylaw setting out financial obligations of a member and the imposition of a lien in default of payments, makes continued membership unsatisfactory for those who merely do not wish to partake in the benefits of membership and do not perceive that their membership payments are used for any purpose beneficial to them. Therefore, they require a declaration that their membership is terminated or terminable though they may well continue to share aesthetic and environmental values with other members of the Indian Park Association. It may be quite ironic that such persons seek termination of their membership in an organization that they might gladly join if it were a voluntary neighbourhood association seeking only to maintain the aesthetic and environmental qualities of the common lands and raise enough money through association dues to maintain some common facilities.

In light of my finding that the bylaws restricting use of private land cannot be enforced, a clause converting a debt to a lien and deeming it to be a mortgage cannot coexist with a scheme demanding mandatory membership. The bylaws cannot bind the land. In so far as the default of payment clause set out purports to claim an interest in land upon default of payment, it is void.

I inquired of counsel for the applicants during argument whether purchasers of Phase III lots may be bound personally on the basis of the agreements of purchase and sale which they signed. It was suggested that any personal obligation arising thereby merged upon the closing of the sale. No argument was made that a personal, contractual liability persists. Further, counsel for the applicant argued that Indian Park Association could not enforce such a personal obligation as there was no privity of contract and no exception to the rule against enforcement for third party beneficiaries. No argument was made to the contrary.

I am left therefore with no basis upon which to enforce a requirement for mandatory membership in Indian Park Association upon lot owners of Phase III. I find that membership of Indian Park Association which the Association was obliged by contract with Monica to grant to the lot owners of Phase III is terminable upon the resignation of the members. With such termination, of course, will end any rights of the former members to share in the use and enjoyment of common lands and facilities just as non-paying members will not be entitled to use the common lands and facilities pursuant to cl. (iv) quoted above. Other consequences of cessation membership are not argued and I do not, at the request of counsel, decide. Clearly, subject to cl. (iv), lot owners of Phase III have had available to them the benefits of membership, whether they choose to exercise them or not. In making a finding that the membership is terminable upon resignation, I specifically do not suggest thereby any requirement for the review of the expenditures of the Board of Directors to determine whether Phase III residents enjoyed their "fair share" of the Association expenditure. This judgment is not based on an acceptance of the argument that the expenditures of the association oppressively favoured members other than the applicants.

The Injunction

In the companion application, as indicated earlier, the injunction issue is solely dependent on the enforceability of bylaws relating to restrictions of use of private land. In light of my findings, the injunction is denied.

The Litigation

During argument, counsel expressed the view that once the enforceability issue was determined, new negotiations might yield final resolution of other issues raised in the claims. If argument is required on outstanding issues, the matter may be heard on a date arranged through the trial co-ordinator. A pretrial is suggested.

Costs may be addressed by conference call, on consent, arranged through the trial co-ordinator.

Order accordingly.

DeSoto Developments Ltd. v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program *

Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court, Montgomery, Carruthers and Campbell JJ. April 29, 1992

* Note: An appeal from the following judgment of the Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court, to the Court of Appeal for Ontario (Robins, Carthy and Laskin JJ.A.) was dismissed on December 5, 1994. See 21 O.R. (3d) 738

APPEAL from an order of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal pursuant to s. 17(4) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

J. Ivan Marini, for applicant.

Brian M. Campbell, for respondent.

THE COURT:--This is an appeal from an order of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal (the Tribunal), dated February 11, 1991, pursuant to the provisions of s. 17(4) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 (the Act).

The appellant (DeSoto), in December 1985, was registered as a "vendor/builder" under the Plan provided for in the Act and administered by the respondent corporation (the Program). R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 728, passed under the Act, outlines the "terms and conditions of registration of builders and vendors" registered under the Plan and s. 1 para (4) reads as follows:

1. The following are conditions of every registration under the Plan:

4. The registrant shall indemnify and save harmless the Corporation and the insurers for the time being under any contract or contracts of insurance establishing the guarantee fund, from any loss which they or any of them may suffer by reason of his failure to diligently perform or cause to be performed all obligations imposed on him under the Plan and under any agreement made by him with the Corporation in respect of the Plan.

On September 20, 1988, the Registrar of the Plan issued a notice of proposal pursuant to the provisions of s. 7 of the Act to revoke the registration of DeSoto on two grounds. Then, on December 20, 1989, after DeSoto had initiated an appeal from that proposal to the Tribunal, the Registrar issued a revised notice of proposal to revoke DeSoto's registration for further reasons. These included the following:

(a) that the Appellant had a record of breaches of warranty sufficient to warrant the revocation of its registration, pursuant to the provisions of Section 8(2) of the Act. It was alleged that the Appellant's breaches of warranty and refusal or failure to rectify same, resulted in the "Warranty Program" paying a total of $173,530.52 from the Compensation Fund established under the Act, to compensate the owners referred to in the revised Notice of Proposal, or as payment for work arranged by the "Warranty Program" in lieu of compensation. The "Warranty Program" further invoiced the Appellant for the said amount plus a 15% administration fee;

(b) that the Appellant did not have sufficient technical competence to consistently perform the warranties under the Act;

(c) that the Appellant breached a condition or conditions of registration, pursuant to the provisions of Section 8(2) of the Act, in that its breaches of warranty and failure to indemnify the "Warranty Program" constituted breaches of the conditions of registration prescribed by Ontario Regulation No. 728, Section 1, paragraphs 3 and 4.

DeSoto appealed this further proposal of the Registrar. A date for the hearing of the appeal was set by the Tribunal, and it caused a written notice thereof to be given to DeSoto. That notice reads, in part, as follows:

TAKE NOTICE that, in accordance with the requirements of the Applicant, pursuant to Section 9(4) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, Chapter 350, before the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal, at the Tribunal's chambers, 10th Floor, 1 St. Clair Ave. West, Toronto, on Tuesday, the 7th day of February, 1989, at 9:30 o'clock in the forenoon, or so soon thereafter as the matter may be reached, and so from day to day until the hearing is concluded.

THE PURPOSE of such hearing is to enable the Tribunal -- to determine whether it will by order direct the Registrar to carry out his proposal or refrain from carrying out his proposal and to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Registrar ought to take in accordance with this Act and the Regulations thereunder.

The hearing took 15 days during the months of July and December 1990. At its conclusion the Tribunal directed the Registrar to carry out his proposal to revoke DeSoto's registration under the Plan. In addition, the Tribunal ordered DeSoto to pay $221,139.80 to the Program. This amount is composed of $192,227.44 paid by the Program on account of claims made against DeSoto, and, $28,912.36 as administrative costs of the Program in connection therewith.

The single issue raised before us was whether the Tribunal possessed jurisdiction to order DeSoto to pay that amount of $221,139.80.

Counsel were in agreement that if the Tribunal did have such jurisdiction, it had to be found in either, or both, of s. 9(4) or 9(5) of the Act, and particularly, s. 9(5). Those sections read as follows:

(4) Where an applicant or registrant requires a hearing by the Tribunal in accordance with subsection (2), the Tribunal shall appoint a time for and hold the hearing and, on the application of the Registrar at the hearing, may by order direct the Registrar to carry out the Registrar's proposal or refrain from carrying it out and to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Registrar ought to take in accordance with this Act and the regulations, and for such purposes the Tribunal may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar.

(5) The Tribunal may attach such terms and conditions to its order or to the registration as it considers proper to give effect to the purposes of this Act.

In our view, neither of those sections provide any power to the Tribunal to require DeSoto to pay the amount in question. And this is particularly so given the fact that the Tribunal upheld the Registrar's decision to revoke DeSoto's registration under the Plan. We recognize that the Tribunal, in ordering that a registration be maintained, might wish to attach as a term or condition of doing so a requirement which relates to the registrant's obligations under para. 4 of s. 1 of Reg. 728. However, such term or condition cannot go so far as to require payment of an amount maintained by the Program to be owing to it. That must be the subject of a civil action taken in the appropriate provincial court.

In passing, we note that the Tribunal should include in its notice of hearing all of the forms of relief which it is intended will be considered at its hearing, in any event of its right or power to do so. In the present instance, the notice made no reference to the prospect of DeSoto being required to pay any amount of money; nor was it raised during the course of the hearing. See York Condominium Corp. No. 216 v. Dudnik (1991), 3 O.R. (3d) 360, 79 D.L.R. (4th) 161 (Div. Ct.).

For these reasons, this appeal is allowed and that portion of the Tribunal's order whereby DeSoto is required to pay $221,139.80 to the Program is struck out. DeSoto shall have its costs of this appeal fixed in the amount of $2,500, being the amount agreed upon by counsel.

Appeal allowed.

WINKLER J.:--

I. INTRODUCTION

[para1] In March of 1987 the Corporation of the City of York (the "City" or "City of York") called for proposals for the development of a parcel of land on Hickory Tree Road in the former Town of Weston. The Proposal Call contained information relating to the history of the site, on which the Town of Weston Sewage Treatment Plant (the "Plant") had been situated and operational until 1960-61. As a result, the proponent was asked to address certain environmental questions concerning the possible generation of methane gas on or adjacent to the site.

[para2] A developer, the Charles Group, later York Humber Limited ("YHL"), presented a development proposal for a residential high-rise condominium development which came to be known as River Ridge. The proposal was accepted by the City and, in August of 1987, an Agreement of Purchase and Sale was executed between the City and the Charles Group.

[para6] Construction of the building, including the methane gas system, began in January 1989. The development was ready for occupancy in November 1990 with title closing scheduled for the fall of 1991.

[para7] The purchasers, either terminated their Agreements of Purchase and Sale prior to closing or refused to complete their agreements with YHL at the time of final closing.

[para9] YHL responds by stating that these facts were not material and that the agreement is not an encumbrance. The entire building envelope has been excavated and all soil relocated off-site. The methane gas system is in place and the approvals of the City and MOE have been obtained. No methane gas has ever been detected in the building or in the methane gas system. YHL seeks damages for breach of contract.

[para10] It should be noted that, at the outset of the trial, it was made clear that Mr. Charles was no longer involved with this matter. The reason for this is that YHL is in receivership and a receiver was appointed. Counsel who are said to be appearing for YHL are, in fact, taking instructions from the receiver appointed to YHL.

II. THE NATURE OF THIS PROCEEDING

[para11] This proceeding involves six separate actions on ten separate Agreements that were entered into between the vendor, YHL, and the purchasers from June to October 1988. By an order of Mr. Justice Keenan, made on June 30, 1992, the applications were converted into actions, and the trial of these separate actions was ordered to proceed as one. Counsel agreed that the trial proceed with the purchasers as plaintiffs and YHL, as defendant/plaintiff by counterclaim.

[para12] In this action, the purchasers seek a declaration that their agreements are not binding and the return of their deposits, with interest. YHL seeks damages for breach of contract.

[para13] Many of the facts are not in dispute. Counsel agreed upon the basic facts concerning the background leading up to the proceedings including much of the facts relating to the individual purchasers. Facts concerning the history of the site, events surrounding the Agreements, construction of the River Ridge development, as well as the circumstances leading up to the decision by the purchasers not to complete their Agreements, are largely not contentious. In addition, counsel have agreed on the facts relating to damages and mitigation.

[para14] The trial, however, extended over three months, twenty-two witnesses were called by the purchasers, two witnesses were called by the vendor, and written submissions totalling over 600 pages were filed.

[para15] Although by the end of trial it was clear that there was very little dispute factually, in serious contention in this proceeding are the legal consequences which flow from these facts.

III. BACKGROUND FACTS

A. YORK HUMBER LIMITED AND THE RIVER RIDGE SITE

[para16] The site overlooks the Humber River and adjacent parkland and is located in a commercial/residential area south of Weston Road and north of the Humber River in the Lawrence Avenue - Weston Road area of Toronto. It was originally owned by the City of York.

[para19] YHL is an Ontario company incorporated in June of 1988 for the specific purpose of purchasing the River Ridge site from the City of York. The Charles Group, headed by Louis Charles, had been involved in planning the project since mid-1987 and were the principals in YHL. The Charles Group were experienced developers and YHL became the River Ridge development vehicle.

B. ENVIRONMENTAL OVERVIEW AND THE QUESTION OF METHANE GAS

[para20] The history and prior use of the site had been a concern in terms of the appropriateness of the site for high rise development for some time. These concerns centred around the possible presence of methane gas on or near the site.

[para22] The following chronology is useful relating to the environmental assessment of and the development conditions attached to, the River Ridge site. But first it should be noted that, because the properties of methane gas, it is colourless, odourless and lighter than air, the method of testing for its presence is by drilling boreholes and inserting gas probes. Boreholes are also used to obtain subsurface soil samples to ascertain the presence of methanogenic materials such as domestic garbage or topsoil. If inert fill is encountered, such as concrete, sand or clayey silt, it is an indication that the site has "clean fill or till" that is, no putrescible or methanogenic materials are present and, therefore, there is no methane gas being generated.

C. CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

1959 Trunk sewers are installed in a sewer easement (the "Metro Easement") running north-south through the site, about one-third in from the east property limit. The sewer easement is about sixty feet wide and was excavated to bedrock and back-filled with inert fill.

1960 - 61 Town of Weston Sewage Treatment Plant, comprising 10 reinforced concrete digester tanks, plus clarifiers and settling ponds, ceases operation.

1971 - 72 The plant has been removed, leaving in place the floor slabs of the plant and the broken concrete bases of the tanks. The site has been graded over so that there is no visible evidence of the former treatment plant.

1972 - 1987 There is no evidence of significant quantities of new fill imported to the site apart from up to two metres of concrete rubble (inert fill) placed over the eastern third of the site since 1985. By 1982, the fill mass has developed a substantial vegetation cover.

1979 Dominion Soils Investigations Inc. ("Dominion Soils" or "DSII") carried out investigative work for the Borough of York in September 1979.

The investigation consisted of drilling a series of twelve boreholes to depths ranging from three to fifteen metres across the site. The locations of these boreholes are shown on Drawing 87*1596-1. DSII found that the site was underlain by heterogeneous earth fill consisting mainly of silt, sand, clayey silt, occasional boulders and gravel. Some construction rubble, such as glass, concrete and brick fragments, were also present in the fill.

1980 Warnock Hersey Professional Services Limited ("Warnock Hersey" or "WHPSL") carried out a second investigation for the Borough of York Planning Board in June of 1980.

This investigation also consisted of putting down twelve boreholes, to depths ranging from 6.1 to 11.3 m. The locations of these boreholes are also shown on Drawing 87*1596-1. The results of the boreholes are not shown on the stratigraphic sections of Drawing 87*1596-2 as borehole logs were not prepared in sufficient detail to allow their inclusion. WHPSL found that the site was covered by a thick deposit of fill material which varied in depth from approximately 6.1 to 12.2 m. They found that the fill material was comprised mostly of silt, clay, sand and broken shale, with variable and random amounts of construction rubble and topsoil material. No garbage or sanitary fill was encountered in any of the twelve boreholes.

WHPSL also carried out methane gas tests in the twelve boreholes. Only in Borehole B (outside the building site) was an explosive level of methane detected. In only one other borehole, Borehole F which has since been excavated, was a significant, but not explosive, concentration of methane gas detected.

1980 Morrison Beatty Limited and Gore & Storrie Limited ("Morrison, Beatty" or "MBGS") jointly carried out a "preliminary investigation" of an area of land of which the site is a part (2.43 acres) for the MOE as part of a study of fifty-four old waste disposal sites in Central Ontario. MBGS methane testing found traces of methane in only three of twelve one metre deep holes, none of which were located on the site of the River Ridge project.

March 1987 The City of York Proposal Call was made public and contained the following information: history of site, summary of soil investigations, requirements relating to soil conditions, and, responsibilities of proponent.

September 1987 The Charles Group (later YHL) delivered a Development Proposal which included the recommendation of Dyche and Associates, Inc. (consulting engineers) for the installation of an interceptor trench to contain and then release any methane gas through vent pipes.

December 1987 The Charles Group retained Bruce A. Brown Associates Limited ("Brown Associates"), consultants in Environmental and Applied Earth Sciences, to carry out a proposal for the installation of a methane gas system.

March 1988 City of York passed By-law 1318-88 under The Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P-13 amending the zoning by-law to include specific conditions applicable to the construction of the condominium project, including the requirement that prior to the issuance of any building permit, approval shall be obtained from the Ministry of the Environment pursuant to Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E-19.

April 1988 Brown Associates submitted the Environment Report which found, in part, at page 17:

An investigation comprising ten boreholes was carried out at the subject site, and revealed that the soils at the site consist predominantly of inorganic clayey silts and sandy silts, with trace amounts of construction rubble and topsoil. The fill soils overlay shale bedrock at elevations 110.5 to 112.5 m within the main fill area, i.e. at depths of 5 to 9 m.

The field work, and subsequent chemical analyses, revealed that, at the borehole locations, significant quantities of domestic or sanitary waste were not present. The vast majority of the soils on the site are inorganic. The results of the current investigation were very consistent with the results of the previous three investigations carried out at the site. Except for some recently placed rubble, it does not appear that any significant quantities of fill have been placed since the 1960's.

June 1988 Sales campaign begins.

July 1988 MOE's July 11, 1988 report to the City of York on the Brown Associates' Environmental Report directed that further testing be carried out in the area east of the Metro Easement and recommended that:

. to ensure public safety, and since section 45 approval is required, the proponent enter into a registered development agreement with the municipality where the owner agrees to the following:

. to design and construct environmental controls (a methane gas system) approved by MOE;

. use a consultant to oversee construction and certify installation;

. require all subsequent owners be made aware of wastes, the details of the methane gas system and agree to operate it to ensure public safety.

August 1988 Brown Associates submitted a Supplementary Environmental Report reporting, in particular, on soil investigations carried out on the lands east of the Metro Easement. At page 3-4 it reports, in part:

Analysis and Conclusions

The recent field investigation has indicated that the soils to the east of the building envelope are the same as were encountered in the boreholes put down within and near the building envelope; i.e. almost entirely inorganic clayey silt and sandy silt soils, with very minor inclusions of rubble and topsoil.

A total of 42 boreholes have now been put down across the site, located on both sides of the sewer easement, and no evidence of sanitary or domestic refuse has been encountered, with the exception of a localized zone in the bottom of Borehole 108.

No boreholes were put down within the sewer easement for fear of damaging the sewer installations. With regard to the soils within the sewer easement, we would refer to the proposal call made by the City of York for the development of the site wherein they cite information received from the Commissioner of Works for the City of York and the Director, Water Pollution Control, Metropolitan Works Department concerning the history of the site. From this information the City concluded:

(a) The operation of the Weston Sewage Treatment Plant was suspended in 1961 and finally dismantled in the late 1960's and early 1970's. The area comprising the sewer easement and the portion west of the sewer easement were backfilled with inert fill and the entire area was filled using inert fill. No garbage or incinerated material was known to be dumped within these areas.

(b) It appears that a portion of the site east of the sewer easement and west of the former Works Building was subject to dumping of incinerated ash up to around 1953-1956 (when the nearby Wilby Crescent incinerator was closed) and thereafter the occasional dumping of trash (rough garbage) up to 1960 by municipal forces.

Our own research confirms the City's conclusions.

From the preceding, we would infer that no deleterious soils are present within the sewer easement.

Additionally, from the preceding, we would infer that no waste was disposed of on the east side of the sewer easement since 1960, in excess of the 25 year time limit stipulated by Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act. All the boreholes put down by this firm and by others indicate that the east portion of the site has not been used as a rough garbage dump, except with reference to the surface mounds of predominantly broken concrete, and that predominantly inorganic soils have been [sic] disposed of over this area.

In conclusion, we are of the opinion that the soils outside the building envelope are not of a sufficiently deleterious nature to warrant their wholesale excavation. With the exception of two localized areas meriting special treatment, we believe the soils outside the building envelope can be left in place, as the building perimeter defenses against methane gas migration and concentration would effectively vent any traces of methane gas which may flux in that direction.

September 1988 YHL and the City of York entered into the Environmental Agreement on September 6, 1988, and it was registered on title on September 26, 1988. The development agreement provides, in part:

10. The Developer acknowledges and agrees to enter into a confirmation agreement, confirming that this Agreement has been entered into as a condition of condominium approval under s. 50 of the Planning Act, 1983, S.O. 1983, c.1, as amended.

11. The Developer shall cause the Condominium Corporation to agree with the City to be bound by the provisions of this Agreement, and further agrees that it shall be a condition of condominium approval that the Condominium Corporation shall enter into an agreement with the City in terms similar to this Agreement.

13. Upon the registration of a declaration and description of the Proposed Development with respect to the Lands, the Developer will be released from the provisions of this Agreement, provided that the Condominium Corporation has entered into an agreement with the City as set out in paragraph 11.

September 22, The MOE granted approval under Section 45 of 1988 the Environmental Protection Act in consideration of YHL's commitment in the Environmental Agreement. The approval was based on the following information provided to the MOE that:

. YHL intends to acquire the property . YHL plans to construct two twenty storey residential condominium towers, with approximately 408 suites on the property

. YHL intends to construct in accordance with the procedures set out in both of Dr. Brown's reports (April, 1988 and August 8, 1988) dealing with the methane gas system

. YHL entered an agreement (the "Environmental Agreement"), dated September 6, 1988, with the City in which it is agreed that:

. best efforts will be used to register the agreement on title the day the lands are purchased from the City

. Dr. Brown or another engineering consultant will be retained

. the methane gas system will be constructed

. prior to occupancy, YHL will have the engineering consultant inspect and certify that the methane gas system was constructed substantially in accordance with the plans and specifications and inspect and certify that the proposed development has been constructed substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Environmental Report

. YHL to cause the engineering consultant to provide the City with a report describing the clean-up of the lands and certifying the lands are acceptable to accommodate occupancy

. YHL to cause the engineering consultant to monitor and report on the methane gas system in the manner specified

. YHL to cause the Condominium Corporation to be bound by the agreement and a condition of condominium approval will be that the Condominium Corporation entered into a similar agreement with the City

In addition, the MOE required that:

. due to the proximity to the Humber River, YHL had to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the water quality of the river was not adversely affected by the planning, construction, and maintenance of the condominium towers

. an on-site inspector or environmental consultant be present at the time of excavation of the contaminated material to ensure that excavation and disposal of the material met environmental guidelines

September 26, YHL acquired the River Ridge property from the 1988 City of York for approximately $5 million

January 1989 Construction commenced.

July - August YHL, the City of York and the Royal Bank of 1989 Canada (as mortgagee) entered into a Site Plan Agreement on July 19, 1989 registered on title on August 1, 1989.

October 1990 Construction completed, except for certain common areas which were all completed by July 1991.

The Methane Gas System Operation Manual, which was prepared by Bruce A. Brown Associates was delivered to YHL.

November 1990 Occupancy closings begin with Purchasers.

April 1991 Draft Plan Condominium approval.

July 1991 Confirming Agreement entered into between YHL and the City. It was required because:

. YHL signed and registered an Environmental Agreement whereby they agreed to construct a methane gas system and retain the services of an environmental engineer to monitor the system on a periodic basis.

. YHL applied under the Condominium Act for approval of the registration of a declaration and description against title to the lands. . The Commissioner of Planning of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto has imposed, as a condition of the approval, that YHL execute an agreement with the City for ongoing maintenance and monitoring of the methane gas system.

. Pursuant to paragraph 10 of the Environmental Agreement, YHL agreed with the City to confirm that the agreement has been entered into to satisfy the condition of condominium approval.

. YHL confirmed and agreed with the City that the Environmental Agreement was entered into as a condition of condominium approval and undertook to the City not to transfer any unit in the condominium to be created upon registration of a declaration and description against title to the lands until the registration of an agreement pursuant to paragraph 11 of the Environmental Agreement whereby the condominium corporation agreed with the City to assume YHL's obligations under the Environmental Agreement.

August 23, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation 1991 No. 983 ("MTCC No. 983") created by registration of declaration and description by YHL.

August 26, Assumption Agreement entered into between MTCC 1991 No. 983, the City and YHL. It provided that, whereas:

. by an agreement made on September 6, 1988 between YHL and the City and which was registered YHL agreed to construct a methane gas system and to retain the services of an environmental engineer to monitor the system on a periodic basis

. pursuant to paragraph 11 of the Environmental Agreement, YHL agreed to cause the condominium corporation to be created upon the registration of the lands under the Condominium Act to assume and to be bound by the provisions of the Environmental Agreement as a condition of condominium approval

. YHL entered into a Confirming Agreement with the City dated June 7, 1991 confirming that the Environmental Agreement was entered into as a condition of condominium approval and undertaking not to convey any unit in the condominium until registration of an agreement by the condominium corporation to assume the Environmental Agreement

. the declaration and description of the project have been registered and the condominium corporation created therefore having the authority to manage the land

. the Corporation has agreed to assume all of the obligations of YHL under the Environmental Agreement in fulfilment of YHL's obligations under both the Environmental Agreement and the Confirming Agreement

. the Environmental Agreement provides that YHL will be released from its obligations under the Environmental Agreement upon the assumption of such obligations by the Corporation.

Given the above:

. the corporation assumed all of YHL's obligations under the Environmental Agreement and agreed with the City to be bound by the obligations thereunder as if it were the original contracting party

. the corporation indemnified and saved YHL harmless from all losses, claims, actions, damages and liability in connection with the duties and obligations to be performed by the Corporation under the Environmental Agreement

. the Corporation acknowledged and confirmed that this agreement had been entered into as a condition of obtaining condominium approval

. the agreement enured to the benefit of and was binding upon the parties, their respective successors, and assigns.

September - October 1991 Final closings with purchasers

December 1991 YHL delivers Methane Gas System Operation Manual to Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 983 D. BACKGROUND OF THE SITE

1. Background of Site - Environmental

a) Proposal Call

[para23] In or about March, 1987 the City of York issued a Proposal Call for the redevelopment of lands owned by the City on Hickory Tree Road. At page 2, it states:

This is a proposal call for the sale and development of land presently owned by the Corporation of the City of York. The proposal will include a design for the development of the site, to which the proponent will be committed. Final approval of the sale is contingent on approval of a site specific rezoning and the Official Plan Amendment. The proponent will be responsible for the rezoning and Official Plan Amendment applications and all other approvals and permits required thereafter.

History

To assist in assessing the subsurface conditions on the site, the Commissioner of Works for the City of York and the Director, Water Pollution Control, Metropolitan Works Department, were requested to report on the use of the lands over the past several years when under their respective jurisdictions. From this information, the following conclusions can be made.

"(a) The operation of the Weston Sewage Treatment Plant was suspended in 1961 and was finally dismantled in the late 1960's and early 1970's. The area comprising the sewer easement (Parts 4, 5, and 6 on the legal survey, Appendix Item 2) and the portion of the site west of the sewer easement (Parts 1, 2, and 3) were backfilled with inert fill and the entire area was filled using inert fill. No garbage or incinerated material was known to be dumped within these areas.

(b) It appears that a portion of the site east of the sewer easement (Parts 8, 9, and 10) and west of the former Works Building, was subject to dumping of incinerated ash up to around 1953-1956 (when the nearby Wilby Crescent incinerator was closed), and thereafter the occasional dumping of trash (rough garbage) up to 1960 by municipal forces."

[para25] Referenced in the Proposal Call are two investigative studies conducted on the lands at the request of Planning Staff, City of York. The first was a preliminary report dated September 1979, prepared by Dominion Soils. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the suitability of the site for high rise development and to determine possible limitations. As the Proposal Call states at page 5:

This report had recommended certain design criteria as a result of the soil borings and analysis and had noted that the matter of the possible presence of methane gas should be further investigated

Subsoil Conditions

Details of the stratification in the boreholes are shown on each borehole log and can be summarized as follows:

Fill - The area is underlain by heterogeneous earth fill consisting mainly of silt, sand, clayey silt, occasional boulders and gravel. Some rubble, such as glass, concrete and brick fragments were also present in the fill. The fill extends to depth between 20.5 to 40 ft. below the present grade, i.e. to between elevations 348.9 and 357.5 ft.

Borehole No. 4 encountered obstruction at depths of 17.5 and 23 ft. below the ground surface, possibly on the remains of the old pump and boiler room structure of the former Sewage Treatment Plant.

In Boreholes 1 and 8, traces of chemicals were encountered at depths of approximately 23 and 29 ft. below the ground surface, respectively.

Shale Bedrock - The fill is underlain by the shale bedrock. The surface of the rock appears to be stepped or sloping from north to south. On the most northerly boreholes (Boreholes 7, 8, 9), the rock surface is at Elevation 355 to 357.5 ft. and in the remaining boreholes it is at an average elevation of 351 +/- ft.

The rock was cored in Boreholes 1, 3, 7, 8 and 10 to depths between 4.5 to 8 ft. below the rock surface, using diamond drilling techniques. In the other boreholes, it was possible to penetrate the rock with the augers. To the depths investigated, the horizontally and thinly bedded shale is weathered and is of very poor quality, as indicated by R.Q.D. values of 0 to 23 percent. Interbedded in the shale are occasional limestone bands.

[para27] The second study submitted on June 16, 1980 was prepared by Warnock Hersey. The purpose of this study was to determine the presence and possible hazard of the methane gas within the subsoil. Warnock Hersey also conducted borehole testing across the lands. It is quoted in the proposal call at page 6 as concluding:

Methane gas is absent or is in trace amounts over the major portion of the site. At localized areas, higher concentrations of methane gas are present. The sources of the methane is randomly located pockets of topsoil fill and organic layers at the base of the sewage disposal facilities. Such sources are capable of producing only low concentrations of methane gas. Sanitary land fill which can produce high concentrations of methane gas was not encountered.

It is our opinion that some precautions are required in design of the proposed structures to ensure that dangerous levels of methane do not develop in the basement levels. We do not believe that an elaborate protection system using a membrane and positive ventilation is warranted.

[para28] The MOE subsequently engaged Morrison Beatty to prepare a further soil investigation report in September, 1980. The Proposal Call itself notes, at pages 6-7:

This firm had conducted 10 boring tests on the site and 2 further test holes on adjacent lands in September of 1980. The study results found traces of methane gas in only 3 of the 12 holes tested. None of these three holes are located on the site.

This study notes that the previous soil studies indicate that large quantities of organic waste are not present at the site and that methane gas generation may be limited to the known areas of organic waste (e.g., garbage dump, sludge drying beds, digesters). This study had recommended the following:

- If building development is planned, a comprehensive field study will be required to identify the extent of organic wastes at the site; to assess the methane production from such wastes; and to evaluate the impact of the methane on the proposed structures. Permanent, multi-depth gas probes are required for this study, and monitoring of methane concentration and ground and atmospheric pressures should be carried out monthly between October and May.

After further discussions, the Ministry of the Environment had advised the City of York that it would favourable [sic] consider the development of these lands, subject to the conditions outlined in Section 4.2. [emphasis added]

[para29] After referring to these three reports, the Proposal Call then sets out the conditions that would apply to the development of the site including: requirements relating to soil conditions, amendments to the Official Plan and Site Plan Control. These will be discussed next under the heading "Development Conditions".

(b) The Charles Group

[para30] The Charles Group originally became interested in the development of the site in the spring of 1987. In or about September, 1987, having obtained a copy of the Proposal Call and discussed the matter with the City of York, the Charles Group submitted a development proposal. The proposal was for a residential high-rise condominium development with a variety of indoor recreational amenities as well and underground levels of parking.

[para31] The Charles Group's development proposal was selected by the City. Brown Associates was then retained by the Charles Group to carry out investigations of the lands.

(c) Environmental Report - April 7, 1988

[para32] Apart from the general background documents referenced in the Proposal Call, the only definitive source of evidence regarding the site is the work of Dr. Brown and Brown Associates. Brown Associates carried out a comprehensive field investigation on the lands including an examination of secondary sources (e.g., aerial photos), borehole testing and complete excavation of the entire building site into the bedrock, as well as excavation into forty percent of the Metro Easement. Moreover, Dr. Brown's findings are entirely consistent with each of the earlier studies. The results of Brown Associates' historical review were reported in an Environmental Report dated April 1988. At pages 2 and 3 of the report it states:

In 1947, the Weston Sewage Treatment Plant was already on site, having been initially constructed in 1926, it was originally located somewhat south of the limits of the subject property. In addition to the Plant, a series of rectangular settling ponds were present. Some fill had been placed over the eastern area of the site, but in general, the balance of the site was fairly heavily vegetated.

By 1954, the fill area had expanded, with considerable fill being placed to extend the table land in the area of the present day Motor Licence Bureau located east of the site. The sewage treatment plan was substantially larger, consisting of eight circular digesters, clarifiers and settling ponds which were located in the western area of the site. The square settling ponds noted in the 1947 photographs were no longer present. It appears that a ninth tank was under construction in 1954.

By 1956, a tenth tank is under construction. The face of the fill soils appears to be abrupt and steep. The surface of the fill appears to have low scrub vegetation growing on it, implying that little addition of fill has occurred since 1954. The damage by Hurricane Hazel, including evidence of a flood channel taking out many homes immediately across the river, is apparent in this photograph.

By 1959, some fill seems to have been actually removed from the site. The Motor Licence Bureau has now been constructed east of the site over fill soils. Trunk sewers were being installed in the parkland west of the site, and the other sections of the sewer under construction are visible on the other side of the river valley. A sewer easement presently runs north-south through the site, located about one third of the way in from the east property limit.

By 1962, additional fill has been placed on the site, right up to the edge of the sewage treatment plant. Some of the tanks in the plant appear to be empty, implying that the Plant is now out of service. A triangular patch has appeared in the parkland west of the site, possibly representing an area of further fill placement.

By 1966, the fill soils on site appear to have been moved around somewhat, although there is no evidence of additional fill having been imported. A berm appears to have been constructed along the east edge of the plant. Several tanks in the plant are empty. Construction of gabions along the northeast river's edge has commenced downstream of the site.

By 1968, all tanks in the plant are empty. No additional fill appears to have been placed.

By 1970, the plant still stands idle. The fill mass has grown low scrub vegetation, implying that little or no new fill has been imported.

By 1971, the plant has been removed. Typically, these demolition contracts involved removing the structure down to grade, leaving in place the floor slabs of the plant and the bases of the tanks. The fill mass has been flattened and soil regraded over the site of the former treatment plant.

By 1972, all evidence of the treatment plant has been removed.

Since 1972, no evidence has been found to suggest significant quantities of new fill imported to the site, with the exception of up to two metres of concrete rubble which has been placed over the eastern third of the site since 1985. By 1982, the fill mass has developed a substantial vegetation cover.

A survey of the site performed in 1984 by William J. Plaxton, OLS, indicated that the site was gently undulating, with an overall slope to the south toward the Humber River, with ground surface elevations ranging from 115 to 125 m, referenced to Geodetic datum.

The series of aerial photographs examined indicated that the bulk of the fill on the site was imported prior to 1963. As such, based on the information we obtained, Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act would not be applicable to the subject site. The only recent importation, positively identified, of fill, is the concrete rubble placed over the eastern portion of the site in the last few years. This material is considered inert fill and therefore exempt from the EPA.

The nature of the fill that was imported to the site was predominantly inorganic soil materials, probably excavated from other sites in the municipality. No evidence of domestic garbage was noted. Although it is understood that some uncontrolled dumping has occurred sporadically over the years at the site, it is believed that the vast majority of the fill material at the site comprises inorganic soil.

[para33] Brown Associates conducted borehole testing by advancing ten boreholes around the building site. The contents of the boreholes were examined and methane gas readings were monitored from January to April, 1988. The Environmental Report contains the following, at pages 6-17:

Summarized Subsurface Conditions:

The following paragraphs contain a brief summary of the conditions encountered in the boreholes. Where pertinent, the results of the previous investigations are incorporated. For more details, the reader is referred to the individual Boring Logs attached to the rear of this report.

Boreholes 101 to 109, located on the main fill mass, encountered a heterogeneous mixture of predominantly cohesive and cohesionless inorganic fill soils, comprising mostly either clayey silts or sandy silts, throughout the entire borehole depth, until encountering shale bedrock. The fill soils ranged in thickness from 5 to 9 m and possessed minor amounts of topsoil and construction rubble (brick, concrete, wood, etc.), but with one exception were not observed to contain significant quantities domestic or sanitary refuse. These results are very consistent with the results of the previous investigations.

It is important to note that the zones of cohesive or cohesionless soils were not observed to be continuous from one borehole to the next. Given the random manner in which the fill soils were placed on the site, it is considered improbable that such continuous layers would actually exist.

In the bottom of Borehole 108, located just west of the sewer easement and outside of the proposed building envelope, about 1.2 m of fill soil contaminated with organics, metal, coal, ceramics and possessing a slight petrochemical odour, was encountered. The significance and possible origin of this zone is discussed in the following section.

Furthermore, the boreholes did not encounter any evidence of the former sewage treatment plant. Such evidence would have been present at the bottom of fill soils, and would have consisted either of concrete rubble as a result of the demolition of the buildings and tanks, or a highly organic layer representing sludge which might have been spread over the ground surface. In regards to the sludge, it is important to note that the plant stood idle for about a decade prior to its demolition in 1971. The aerial photographs taken during the decade that the plant stood idle indicated that, toward the end of the 1960's, the tanks were in fact empty and did not contain any sludge at all. In any event, any minor amount of sludge that might have remained in the tanks would have been exposed to the atmosphere, and would have thoroughly decomposed to its constituent parts through oxidation and freeze/thaw cycles.

Shale bedrock of the Georgian Bay formation was encountered across the site at elevations ranging from 110.5 to 112.5 m, sloping toward the south, toward the Humber River. As the site was once eroded by the river, the surface of the bedrock may be expected to form a series of steps or ledges, as opposed to being smooth. This is consistent with exposed bedrock surfaces across the valley from the site.

Groundwater was encountered at various depths within the fill deposit, indicative of perched water conditions. This is as expected as isolated zones of relatively impervious clayey silt fill soils would tend to prevent the facile downward migration of precipitation, creating a number of pools of groundwater having very limited extent, but present at higher elevations than the true groundwater regime across the site which is believed to be slightly above the bedrock surface.

Borehole 110, located on the tableland to the north and above the main fill mass, encountered from grade about 3.5 m of sandy silt fill soils, with little or no foreign matter, overlying competent glacial tills. Bedrock was encountered at a depth of 6.5 m (elevation 117.5 m), considerably above the bedrock level within the main fill mass to the south. At some unknown point south of the Borehole 110 it is thought likely that a near vertical ledge in the bedrock is present, leading down to the bedrock level over the bulk of the site. This ledge will likely be present continuously along the northern part of the site near the proposed limit of excavation, but its exact location may vary. Groundwater was not encountered in Borehole 110.

Methane Gas Monitoring Results and Analysis

Since the completion of the field work on January 9, 1988, measurements of the buildup of methane gas in the standpipes installed in Boreholes 101 to 109 have been made using a Gascope Combustible Gas Indicator, Model 60. The results of the readings up to April 7, 1988 have been summarized in tabular form at the rear of this report. These results indicate that except for Borehole 108, the concentration of methane gas inside the standpipes was well below the minimum explosive concentration of 4%. In Borehole 108, however, concentrations in excess of 5% have been measured. It should be noted that the methane gas trapped in the top of the standpipe installed in this borehole dissipated very rapidly after uncapping, implying that the standpipe was not in direct communication with a large volume of gas, but was instead acting as a reservoir for a small volume of gas which had migrated to the standpipe. As well, the standpipe in Borehole 109, located only about 15 m away, contained only a slight methane gas concentration, leading to the inference that the source of the methane gas buildup in Borehole 108 is localized in extent.

The low concentrations of methane gas in most of the standpipes confirms our belief that large quantities of methanogenic material are not buried in the fill soil mass on site. Most probably, the sources of the gas are minor inclusions of topsoil that were imported to the site when filling of the site was underway with predominantly inorganic soils excavated from construction sites.

Because of the lack of evidence of major organic deposits with the fill mass, and the low observed methane gas concentrations, it is difficult to draw any firm conclusions regarding the migration patterns of methane gas within the fill soils. Methane gas, being less dense than air, tends to rise to escape at the surface of the fill, and will do so unless impeded by an impervious soil mass of fine grained or frozen soils. When such a resistance is encountered the gas will then migrate laterally through layers or zones of more pervious material (sandy or cohesionless soils) until finding a conduit to the atmosphere. The lack of continuous sandy soil layers in the fill mass prevents a rational deduction of a preferred migration path for the gas. Due to the heterogeneity of the fill soil mass, it is believed that, rather than expand further resources on field explorations, laboratory testing and modelling, which would likely be inconclusive, it is more efficient to design passive protective systems for the proposed structure which will guard against any methane gas from migrating into the substructure of the buildings.

The proposed structure, like many others in the Toronto area, will be founded entirely on the Georgian Bay Formation, which is known to be moderately "gassy". All of the fill within the building envelope will therefore be removed from the site. The small volumes of methane generated from the rock are probably much greater than would be generated by the limited quantities of topsoil incorporated into adjacent fill materials.

Mitigation of Methane Gas Hazard:

As discussed earlier, the great majority of the fill soils at the site are inorganic sands, silts and clays mixed with very minor amounts of topsoil and construction rubble. The traces of methane observed in the standpipes installed in the boreholes are believed to originate primarily from minor inclusions of topsoil in the soil mass. However, it is known that local zones of more contaminated material exist in the fill mass, and these can generate higher levels of methane.

Within the building envelope, all of the fill soils will be excavated, thereby removing the source of potential gas generation from beneath the structure. The remaining fill soils surrounding the structure will therefore be the prime source of methane gas, and the majority of the soils are only slightly methanogenic. However, in the vicinity of Borehole 108 a zone of contaminated soil and groundwater was found outside of the building envelope. The soil and groundwater chemistry as reported elsewhere in this report dictate that the building excavation must be extended to remove this pocket of material.

The exact lateral extent of this zone is unknown at this time. It is recommended that a series of boreholes be put down around Borehole 108 so as to better define this zone. It is pointed out that as of May 1, 1988, the costs of disposing of such material in a sanitary landfill such as Keele Valley may rise from $18 to $50/tonne. By advancing these boreholes prior to construction, the owner will be able to assess the likely costs of removing this zone if the average concentrations of parameters of concern permit sanitary landfill disposal. We will be submitting under separate cover a detailed cost estimate for this work.

All of the investigations carried out to date on the site did not encounter evidence of sludge or wastes which may have been spread over the site when the treatment plant was demolished. As discussed earlier, aerial photographs taken in the 1960's indicate that the tanks were empty of sludge prior to demolition. Therefore, it is not surprising that a layer of such materials was never encountered in any of the dozens of boreholes put down across the site. In the unlikely event that some sludge is actually present beneath the proposed structure, it should be noted that it will be excavated and disposed of appropriately during the excavation operations. Although sludge is not expected to be present, it is unlikely that the remnants of the plant itself will be encountered. This is not of any environmental concern, as concrete rubble is classified as inert fill and is therefore exempt from the Environmental Protection Act.

Conclusions:

Historical research carried out for the site did not reveal any evidence of waste having been disposed of on the site during the last 25 years. Based on the available historical data Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act is not considered to be applicable to this site.

An investigation comprising ten boreholes was carried out at the subject site, and revealed that the soils at the site consist predominantly of inorganic clayey silts and sandy silts, with trace amounts of construction rubble and topsoil. The fill soils overlay shale bedrock at elevations 110.5 to 112.5 m within the main fill area, i.e. at depths of 5 to 9 m.

The field work, and subsequent chemical analyses, revealed that, at the borehole locations, significant quantities of domestic or sanitary waste were not present. The vast majority of the soils on the site are inorganic. The results of the current investigation were very consistent with the results of the previous three investigations carried out at the site. Except for some recently placed rubble, it does not appear that any significant quantities of fill have been placed since the 1960's.

A single isolated zone, at the bottom of Borehole 108, was encountered which possessed significant levels of contamination. It is believed that this zone resulted from an isolated incident of illicit dumping of liquid industrial waste, which purportedly occurred in the past when the site was unsecured. The lateral and vertical extent of this zone is not well defined, and a supplementary field investigation, coupled with chemical analyses, is recommended to identify the quantity of material in this zone which may have to be disposed of in a licensed landfill.

The boreholes did not encounter any evidence of the former treatment plant; neither sludge from the tanks nor rubble from the demolition of the structure was observed. The absence of evidence of sludge was as expected, as aerial photographs taken while the plant was idle prior to demolition showed that the tanks were empty of sludge. The rubble resulting from the demolition of the plant, if still on site as is probable, would not be an environmental problem as such material is classified as an inert fill and exempt from the Environmental Protection Act.

The results of methane gas monitoring in wells installed in the boreholes indicated that, except in Borehole 108, explosive levels of methane gas did not accumulate in the wells. The low levels of methane that were measured in some of the other boreholes are believed to have originated from the presence of topsoil buried in the fill soils.

[para34] Brown Associates Environmental Report was submitted to the MOE. Dr. Brown testified that he had indicated separately as well as through his Environmental Report that further testing should be conducted in the area east of the Metro Easement. The MOE shared this view and required that additional testing be conducted in areas outside the building envelope.

(d) Brown Associates Supplementary Environmental Report - August 8, 1988 ("Supplementary Report")

[para35] Brown Associates proceeded to advance eight additional boreholes on July 25 - 27, 1988 in order to sample the subsoil conditions and to measure the buildup of methane gas in the boreholes. The Supplementary Report contains, at pages 2-5, the following:

Summarized Subsurface Conditions:

All boreholes encountered a heterogeneous mixture of predominantly cohesive and cohesionless inorganic fill soils, comprising mostly either clayey silts or sandy silts, throughout the entire borehole depth, until encountering shale bedrock. The fill soils ranged in depth from 6.4 to 11.5 m below grade and possessed minor amounts of construction debris (brick, concrete, wood, etc.) and topsoil, and were not observed to contain detectible amounts of domestic or sanitary refuse. The zones of cohesive and cohesionless fill soils were not observed to be continuous from one borehole to the next, consistent with random fill deposition. In Borehole 115 at a depth of about 3 m, a void was encountered, extending to a depth of about 6 m. As it proved impossible to continue sampling at the bottom of the void, the borehole was relocated a few metres to the south, where Borehole 115A was advanced, with sampling beginning at a depth of about 3 m.

The soil conditions encountered in the current investigation were consistent with those encountered in our first investigation and with the soil conditions encountered during earlier investigations carried out by other firms.

Methane Monitoring Results:

On August 4, 1988 the levels of methane gas in these wells, in addition to the wells installed during our first investigation, were measured using a Gascope Combustible Gas Indicator, Model 60. These results, as well as the results of earlier measurements in the first series of monitoring wells including testing under winter conditions, are summarized in tabular form at the rear of this report.

These results indicate that low levels of methane gas were detected in all the monitoring wells, both old and new, with the exception of Borehole 108, where an initial gas concentration of 7.5% was observed, of the same magnitude as previous initial measurements in this borehole.

The low concentration of methane gas in the monitoring wells installed during the current field work is consistent with the largely inorganic fill soils that were encountered in these boreholes. These soils are not methanogenic, and the low levels of methane gas observed are believed to be consistent with the random inclusions of small pockets of topsoil observed in the boreholes.

Analysis and Conclusions:

The recent field investigation has indicated that the soils to the east of the building envelope are the same as were encountered in the boreholes put down within and near the building envelope; i.e. almost entirely inorganic clayey silt and sandy silt soils, with very minor inclusions of rubble and topsoil.

A total of 42 boreholes has now been put down across the site, located on both sides of the sewer easement, and no evidence of sanitary or domestic refuse has been encountered, with the exception of a localized zone in the bottom of Borehole 108.

No boreholes were put down within the sewer easement for fear of damaging the sewer installations. With regard to the soils within the sewer easement, we would refer to the proposal call made by the city of York for the development of the site wherein they cite information... Our own research confirms the City's conclusions.

From the preceding we would infer that no deleterious soils are present within the sewer easement.

Additionally, from the preceding, we would infer that no waste was disposed of on the east side of the sewer easement since 1960, in excess of the 25 year time limit stipulated by Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act. All the boreholes put down by this firm and by others indicate that the east portion of the site has not been used as a rough garbage dump, except with reference to the surface mounds of predominantly broken concrete, and that predominantly inorganic soils have been disposed of over this area.

In conclusion, we are of the opinion that the soils outside the building envelope are not of a sufficiently deleterious nature to warrant their wholesale excavation. With the exception of two localized areas meriting special treatment, we believe the soils outside the building envelope can be left in place, as the building perimeter defences against methane gas migration and concentration would effectively vent any traces of methane gas which may flux in that direction.

For protection of the building, the continuous soil quality monitoring program would provide direction to the excavation contractor to follow any zone of deleterious soils beyond the required excavation limits. For example, the site boundary shoring west of borehole 108 will be extended to permit the soils around that borehole to be selectively removed.

Then, after describing the proposed mitigative system, the Supplementary Report, at page 5, continues:

It should be noted that even if all the soil within the site limits were to be excavated, we are of the opinion that this methane gas mitigation system would still be necessary, as the fill soils extend beyond the property lines, and could not be removed without trespassing. These soils could possibly generate methane gas which could migrate to the easement walls, under unusual adverse circumstances.

(d) MOE Approval under Section 45 of Environmental Protection Act

[para36] In the initial Proposal Call, the City of York had indicated that the MOE's primary concerns were with respect to the application of Sections 45 and 8 of the Environmental Protection Act ("EPA"). Section 8 was not applicable.

[para37] Section 45 (now s. 46) of the EPA provides as follows:

45. No use shall be made of land or land covered by water which has been used for the disposal of wastes within a period of twenty-five years from the year in which such land ceased to be so used unless the approval of the Minister for the proposed use has been given. 1971, c. 86, s. 46.

[para38] As stated earlier, in the course of the MOE's review of the application to amend the Official Plan and Zoning By-law 1-83, they reviewed the Environmental Report. By letter dated July 11, 1988 to the City of York, the MOE stated:

The subject report indicates that between 1968 and 1971 the old sewage treatment plant and its tanks were removed and, "the fill mass was flattened and the soil was regraded over the site of the former treatment plant". Based on cross sections provided (refer to drawing No. 87-1596-2 cross section A-A), wastes are found in the boreholes sampled in this area. From this we conclude that by regrading and moving waste onto the area of the former treatment plant approval under Section 45 of the EPA will be required.

[para39] After receipt of the Supplementary Report, the MOE, in a letter dated September 22, 1988, granted approval for the development under Section 45 of the EPA, subject to certain specified conditions which will be dealt with later.

(e) Excavation and Construction

[para40] Construction commenced in January, 1989. During construction, the footprint of the buildings was excavated to bedrock including the location of borehole 108.

[para41] Brown Associates provided full consultant engineering services for the development of the River Ridge property, including the design and construction supervision of the methane gas system, and full-time field supervision throughout the entire excavation and foundation placement.

[para42] All of the contents of the building envelope (which includes the three underground levels of parking) were excavated into bedrock. All soils within the building envelope were removed and disposed of off site. The remains of the Weston Sewage Treatment Plant were contained within the building envelope and were, in the course of excavation, completely removed and disposed of off site at a licensed landfill known at Keele Valley.

2. Background of Site - Development Conditions

[para43] Prior to the Charles Group becoming involved with the site, based on the possible presence of methane gas, governmental sensitivity at various levels had been expressed concerning the suitability of the site for proposed high rise development and possible conditions to be placed on such use.

[para45] The City, in its Proposal Call, placed inter alia, the following restrictions on development of the site. In part, the restrictions are stated in the proposal call, at pages 7-8:

4.2 Requirements Relating to Soil Conditions

Based on the soil investigations done, and on the Ministry of the Environment evaluation, some restrictions will apply to the development. The Proponent should note that the Ministry's primary concerns are with the application of Sections 45 and 8 of the Environmental Protection Act; it is recommended that the proponent become familiar with these sections of the Act. Following are the restrictions which apply:

(1) That any development of the subject property to be limited to the westerly portion of the subject property (Parts 1, 2 and 3) and that the balance of the site to be used for amenity space and possible [sic] some surface off-street parking.

(2) Site Plan Approval pursuant to Section 40 of the Planning Act, 1983 will not be granted and no building permit will be issued until such time as a proper comprehensive geotechnical report is prepared to:

(a) Identify the extent of fill and any organic waste on the subject property.

(b) Assess the methane gas production from the site using multi-depth gas probes so that methane gas concentrations and ground atmospheric pressures are measured on a regular basis over a 6 month period which shall include the winter months.

(c) Evaluate the impact of methane gas on the proposed structures including the foundation and caissons.

(d) Recommend and design a ventilation system to control and remove all methane gas and to monitor methane gas generation.

(e) The terms of reference for this study and the findings and recommendations of this report when completed, shall be acceptable to City and the Ministry of the Environment.

(3) No building permit shall be issued until the plans, including a report from the geotechnical engineering firm, have been submitted and approved by the Ministry of the Environment. The geotechnical engineering firm shall certify the adequacy of the plans.

(4) That the building(s) shall not be occupied until such time as the ventilation system has been inspected and tested and until a statement is submitted to the City and the Ministry by a qualified geotechnical engineer stating that the system as been properly installed and is in proper operating condition.

(5) Proponent will be responsible for submitting reports prepared by a qualified independent firm, evaluating the performance of the ventilation system. The firm, the interval of the reports, and the length of time for which reports will be required, must be acceptable to the Ministry of the Environment. [Emphasis added]

[para46] On or about August 21, 1987, the Charles Group entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale with the City of York for the purchase of the lands for a purchase price of $5,119,258.00. The agreement provided, at page 4, that:

15. The Purchaser acknowledges having read and examined the "Proposal Call for Redevelopment of Hickory Tree Road Site", including all documents attached to or issued with that Proposal Call, issued by the Vendor, and agrees to accept the property subject to all matters disclosed therein.

Attached to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale as one of the documents listed in Schedule "C" was the site plan.

[para47] On March 21, 1988 the City passed By-law No. 1318-88 amending the City's general zoning By-law 1-83 to permit the development of the site. The By-law requires a comprehensive geotechnical study; MOE section 45 approval prior to issuance of a building permit; and a restriction on occupancy until any required ventilation system is satisfactorily installed and operating. The relevant portions of the by-law are:

3. The buildings shall be located within the area marked as "Buildable Area" on the site plan attached as Schedule "B" hereto so as to provide the minimum setbacks shown on the site plan.

14. The foundation of the buildings erected on the site shall be designed by a qualified engineer, and such design shall be based on a comprehensive geotechnical study to be prepared by a qualified professional engineer and approved by the Commissioner of Buildings of the City of York.

Prior to the issuance of any building permit for any building on the site, approval shall be obtained from the Ministry of the Environment pursuant to Section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 141, for the construction of the building.

18. No portion of any building shall be occupied until any required ventilation system has been inspected and tested and until a qualified geotechnical engineer provides a certification that the system has been properly installed and is in proper operating conditions to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Buildings for the City of York.

[para48] By letter dated July 11, 1988, the MOE made recommendations to the City with respect to amendments to the Official Plan and Zoning By-Law 1-83. The letter provided, in part, as follows:

Since Section 45 approval was required, this office would recommend that the proponent enter into a registered development agreement with the municipality where the owner agrees to:

- a) design and construct all necessary environmental controls based on the concept design approved by the Ministry;
- b) obtain the services of a consultant to oversee their construction, and certify their installation; and,
- c) require all subsequent owners to:
 - i) be made aware of the presence of wastes, the environmental control works, their maintenance and operational requirements; and,
 - ii) agree to maintain, monitor and operate the works as required to ensure public safety.

[para49] By agreement made September 6, 1988, YHL and the City of York entered into a development agreement in respect of the site. This development agreement, is referred to as the "Environmental Agreement", in which the City of York incorporated the development conditions from the Proposal Call and the recommendations of the MOE made in the July 11, 1988 letter referred to above.

[para50] Prior to September 6, 1988, the plans and specifications for a passive methane ventilation system had been filed by Brown Associates on behalf of YHL with the City and the MOE.

[para52] Before moving on, a number of points concerning the Environmental Agreement, which is a development agreement are appropriate.

[para53] The Environmental Agreement is an agreement between YHL, referred to in the agreement as the "Developer" and the City of York. It was executed by Louis Charles on behalf of YHL. It was registered on title on September 26, 1988.

[para55] Dr. Brown testified that this was the first time, to his knowledge, that a development transaction was structured so that the content of the Environmental Agreement was placed in a "stand alone" agreement. Previously, he said, these points were addressed as part of a development agreement. His rationale for the approach was that it was because the City was the vendor of the lands and city officials were more cautious than other vendors may have been. In any event, the new approach became the norm in other deals, thereafter, he stated.

[para56] The relevant provisions of the Environmental Agreement can be summarized as follows:

- . the developer is required to install the "Proposed Ventilation System" which includes the passive methane gas ventilation system and the active methane gas monitoring system;
- . occupancy is restricted until the system is tested, monitored and certified;
- . the developer is required to cause the condominium corporation to be bound by the provisions of the Agreement;
- . once the condominium corporation agrees with the City to be bound by the provisions of the Agreement, the developer will be released from obligations under the Agreement.

[para57] The text of the Agreement provides in part;

WHEREAS L.C. Holdings Limited is the proposed purchaser of certain lands from the City described in Schedule "A" attached hereto (hereinafter called the "Lands"), part of the same having been used previously as a sewage treatment plant;

AND WHEREAS L.C. Holdings Limited has given an irrevocable direction to the City to convey the Lands to the Developer;

AND WHEREAS the City has zoned the Lands to permit the construction of two residential condominium towers thereon (hereinafter called the "Proposed Development"); AND WHEREAS the Developer shall cause the construction of the Proposed Development and the creation of a condominium corporation (hereinafter called the "Condominium Corporation") under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c.84, as amended.

AND WHEREAS the Developer has filed plans and specifications for a passive methane ventilation intercept system with the Ministry of the Environment and the City (hereinafter called the "Proposed Ventilation System");

AND WHEREAS the Developer has filed two environmental reports with the Ministry of the Environment dated April 1988 and August 8, 1988, which were prepared by its consulting engineer, Bruce A. Brown Associates Limited (hereinafter called the "Environmental Report");

NOW THEREFORE, THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH that in consideration of the mutual covenants herein contained, the parties agree each with the other as follows:

1. The Developer agrees to use its best efforts to register this Agreement on title on the day it purchases the Lands from the City.
 - 2.(a) The Developer agrees that the City assumes no responsibility for the Proposed Ventilation System and hereby undertakes to indemnify and save the City harmless from any claim of any nature whatsoever, including costs, whether arising out of negligence or otherwise and whether involving property damage or bodily injury including death or both resulting from this Agreement, or arising from any approvals to construct the Proposed Development or the use of the Lands for the Proposed Development.

(b) In this Agreement, City includes any agents, officers or employees of the City. 3. The Developer shall retain the services of Bruce A. Brown Associates Limited or another "Engineering Consultant" (hereinafter called the "Engineering Consultant") acceptable to the City's Commissioner of Buildings (hereinafter called the "Commissioner").
 4. The Developer shall cause the construction of the Proposed Ventilation System, as approved by the Ministry of the Environment.
 5. Prior to the occupancy of the Proposed Development, the Developer shall cause its Engineering Consultant to:
 - (a) inspect and certify that the passive methane ventilation intercept system that is constructed is substantially in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Proposed Ventilation System (hereinafter called the "Ventilation System").
 - (b) inspect and certify that the Proposed Development has been constructed substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Environmental Report and,
 - (c) provide the City with an environmental report which describes the clean-up of the Lands and certifies that the Lands are acceptable to accommodate the occupancy of the Proposed Development.
 6. The Developers shall cause its Engineering Consultants to monitor the Ventilation System at regular intervals as follows:
 - a) the methodology of such monitoring shall be reviewed by the Ministry of the Environment and concurred in by the City, acting upon the advice and in accordance with the recommendations of the Engineering Consultant, prior to the commencement of the construction of the Proposed Development,
 - b) the monitoring shall commence after the Engineering Consultant has completed the inspection and certification referred to in paragraph 5(a), for a period of twelve (12) months at one (1) month intervals,
 - c) thereafter, the Engineering Consultant shall next inspect the Ventilation System at six (6) month intervals for two (2) further years or for such longer period as may be desirable after consideration of the reports referred to in paragraph 9 and consultations with the Commissioner and the Ministry of the Environment.
 7. Prior to occupancy of the Proposed Development, the Ventilation System shall be monitored for at least three (3) months as provided by paragraph 6(b).
 8. Upon the Engineering Consultant detecting gas at any point within the Ventilation System at concentrations of three (3%) percent or greater, monitoring shall be conducted the following two (2) days. If gas concentrations within the Ventilation System remain in excess of three (3%) percent for three (3) successive days, then the entire Ventilation System shall be reviewed by a qualified consultant, and the Developer shall cause any corrective works required to be carried out.
 9. The Developer shall direct the Engineering Consultant to document the monitoring results and Ventilation System performance details in an annual technical report which report shall also identify any problems with the Ventilation System and recommend corrective action. The said report shall be submitted to the Developer with copies being sent to the Ministry of the Environment, City Fire and Building Departments, the Developer's Insurer(s) for the Proposed Development and any corporation or public body that the City may deem appropriate. Any deficiency identified or any recommendation for further action(s) contained in such reports shall be remedied by the Developer, at its expense, forthwith or as required given the nature of the recommendations.
 10. The Developer acknowledges and agrees to enter into a confirmation agreement, confirming that this Agreement has been entered into as a condition of the condominium approval under s.50 of the Planning Act, 1983, S.O. 1983, c.1, as amended.
 11. The Developer shall cause the Condominium Corporation to agree with the City to be bound by the provisions of this Agreement, and further agrees that it shall be a condition of condominium approval that the Condominium Corporation shall enter into an agreement with the City in terms similar to this Agreement.
 12. This agreement shall enure to the benefit of and be binding upon the parties hereto and their respective successors and assigns.
 13. Upon the registration of a declaration and description of the Proposed Development with respect to the Lands, the Developer will be released from the provisions of this Agreement, provided that the Condominium Corporation has entered into an agreement with the City as set out in paragraph 11. [Emphasis Added]
- [para58] The section 45 approval under the EPA was granted in a letter from the Minister of the Environment to YHL dated September 22, 1988, in consideration of a number of conditions including, that the condominium would be constructed in accordance with the procedures set out in Brown Associates' Environmental Reports, the Environmental Agreement and the conditions referred to therein. The MOE also specified:
- An on-site inspector or environmental consultant must be present at the time of excavation of the contaminated material to ensure that excavation and disposal of this material meets environmental guidelines. This consultant shall also carry out additional responsibilities as outlined in the Environmental Report.

It is to be noted that there will be a subsequent agreement under Section 50 of the Planning Act [S.O. 1983, c. 1 now R.S.O. 1990, c. P-13, s. 51] in connection with the proposed condominium. We would strongly advise the municipality and the developer to consult with Ministry staff concerning that agreement, prior to it being executed. This prior consultation will enable Ministry staff to be aware of all of the specifics of the proposed agreement and to comment thereon.

[para59] As a result, by agreement made July 19, 1989, YHL, the City and the Royal Bank of Canada (the "Vendors Mortgage") entered into a Site Plan Agreement pursuant to section 40 of the Planning Act S.O. 1983, c. 1 [now R.S.O. 1990, c. P-13, s. 41]. By this agreement YHL agreed to construct the buildings and provide other facilities on the site in accordance with the plans and drawings submitted by the owner for the development of the site. Such plans were on file with the City and available for review. Furthermore as owner, YHL agreed to retain a qualified professional engineer to design and carry out all necessary engineering required for the development of the site including the supervision of construction and the certification with respect to completion of the work.

[para60] On June 7, 1991, YHL and the City entered into the Confirming Agreement. The agreement was registered on title on July 17, 1991. By this agreement YHL "confirms and agrees" with the City that the Environmental Agreement has been entered into as a condition of condominium approval. YHL agrees not to transfer any unit in the condominium, to be created upon registration, until registration of an agreement pursuant to paragraph 11 of the Environmental Agreement, that is, an agreement by which the condominium corporation agrees with the City to assume YHL's obligations under the Environmental Agreement.

[para61] By letter dated August 9, 1991, the City confirmed to the Commissioner of Planning of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto ("Metro Toronto") that the five conditions imposed by the City on the development had been satisfied as of that date and that the City had no objection to Metro Toronto releasing the condominium for registration.

[para62] The Condominium Corporation, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Plan No. 983 ("MTCC No. 983"), was created by registration of Declaration on August 23, 1991.

[para63] By agreement made August 26, 1991, the MTCC No. 983, the City and YHL entered into the Assumption Agreement. It was registered on title August 29, 1991. By the terms of this Agreement, which was entered into pursuant to the Environmental Agreement and the Confirming Agreement, the condominium corporation assumed all of YHL's obligations under the Environmental Agreement and agreed with the City to be bound by the terms thereof. YHL is released from its obligations under the Environmental Agreement. In addition, the condominium corporation agreed to indemnify YHL from all losses, claims, actions, damages and liabilities in connection with the duties and obligations under the Environmental Agreement. Further, the Agreement provides:

The Corporation acknowledges and confirms that this agreement has been entered into as a condition of obtaining condominium approval.

This agreement shall enure to the benefit of and be binding upon the parties hereto and their respective successors and assigns.

The Assumption Agreement was executed on behalf of the condominium corporation by Louis Charles.

E. THE SALES CAMPAIGN

[para64] The River Ridge sales campaign began in or about June, 1988. In point of time, this was after the submission of the Environmental Report but prior to the submission of the Supplementary Report. The sales office was located at 250 Madison Avenue, in the Davenport/Spadina area of the City of Toronto. Martin Atkins Limited, Real Estate Broker, was retained by the Charles Group to market and sell the River Ridge condominium units to the general public.

[para65] Prior to the commencement of sales, YHL distributed a sales brochure promoting the development and offering prospective purchasers the opportunity to obtain an appointment to visit the sales centre. Newspaper advertisements were placed during the month of June leading up to the first day of sales on June 25, 1988.

[para68] Between June 25 and July 4, 1988, eight of the ten Agreements relevant to these proceedings were entered into.

[para69] The remaining two Agreements were executed by the following purchasers on the following dates: (1) July 29, 1988, Joan and Giulio Ceolaro; and, (2) October 23, 1988, Catherine deBournet.

[para70] Prior to entering into their respective Agreements of Purchase and Sale, none of the purchasers received any information with respect to the history and prior use of the property; governmental requirements concerning testing; the requirement for a methane gas system; restrictions relating to these, such as occupancy and reporting; and the requirement of MOE approval under section 45 of the EPA in respect of the site.

[para71] Each of the purchasers, except Michael and Johanne Guida admit the receipt of the condominium documents, which include a disclosure statement, pursuant to the requirements of the Condominium Act. There was no information disclosed in either the Agreements of Purchase and Sale or the condominium documents regarding the existence of the methane gas system and the prior use of the site. No subsequent disclosure statement was provided to the purchasers containing this information.

E. VENDOR - PURCHASER COMMUNICATIONS

[para72] This is a general chronology applicable to all purchasers. To the extent that events relating to a particular purchaser deviates from these they will be dealt with in the context of the individual purchasers below.

[para73] On February 13, 1990, YHL wrote to the purchasers to advise:

We regret to advise you that there will be a delay in occupancy of your condominium suite in River Ridge. Unfortunately, there have been delays in construction which we were unable to control. We have requested the General Contractor to provide us with a new occupancy schedule which will permit us to notify you of your new occupancy date. Of course, we will try to give you as much advance notice as possible.

[para74] On May 4, 1990, YHL wrote to purchasers with respect to the selection of the suite finishings. The letter provides: We are pleased to inform you that under the terms of Schedule B of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, the Vendor hereby gives notice to the Purchaser that the Purchaser may now choose the broadloom, kitchen and bathroom finish packages from the Vendor's samples.

The letter of May 4, 1990 then specified an appointment date.

[para75] When purchasers attended at the offices of YHL, they were given a River Ridge Colour Selection Form to complete in respect of their suite. These forms were completed in or about May, 1990. The form which was signed by each purchaser specified:

Colours of all materials are as close as possible to builder's selection but not necessarily identical due to variance in manufacturing or supplier.

Materials actually installed shall be as close as possible in quality and quantity but not necessarily identical to the items specified.

[para76] On October 4, 1990, YHL wrote to purchasers to advise them of their occupancy date and the scheduled date of their Ontario New Home Warranty Program inspection. The letter also informed purchasers that on the day prior to occupancy, they would be required to deliver post-dated cheques for their monthly occupancy fees. The letter dealt with title closing as follows:

Title Closing

The Closing Date for completion of this transaction is scheduled to occur after the registration of the Condominium Declaration and Plan in accordance with the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Our lawyer will notify your lawyer as soon as the Condominium has been registered and shall provide registration particulars so that your lawyer may attend to the title search. Notice of the Closing Date shall also be provided, and all closing documentation together with the Final Statement of Adjustments will be forwarded to your lawyer in advance of the Closing Date. Please ensure that you advise us or our lawyer of the name of your lawyer on the attached sheet or as soon as you have retained one so that all documentation and information may be delivered in a timely manner.

[para77] This letter also contained a schedule entitled "Calculation of Occupancy Payments" which set out the following: annual interest on principal amount of vendor take back mortgage, annual realty taxes, and monthly common expense charge, and the total monthly occupancy payment.

[para78] On October 26, 1990, YHL wrote to the purchasers to give notice of an amended occupancy fee having confirmed with the City of York Tax Department that the figures originally quoted were incorrect. This resulted in a decrease in the monthly occupancy fee figure.

[para79] When purchasers attended at the River Ridge project to inspect their suites under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program, they were given a Certificate of Completion and Possession to complete. Any items to be corrected or completed would be listed on the certificate. YHL was expected to sign the certificate as was the purchaser. [para80] The Vendor Certificate stated:

The Vendor hereby certifies to Ontario New Home Warranty Program as follows:

1. The home described on the face hereof is substantially completed and is ready for possession by the Purchaser(s) on the date of possession indicated on the face hereof subject only to the completion of seasonal work and items of a minor nature and to surface defects in workmanship and materials accepted by the Purchaser(s), all of which are more particularly described on the face hereof.

2. The Vendor will grant possession of the home to the Purchaser(s) on the date of possession.

[para81] The Purchaser Certificate specified:

The undersigned Purchaser(s) hereby certifies to Ontario New Home Warranty Program that the Purchaser(s) has/have inspected the home described on the face hereof and such home is substantially completed and is ready for possession by the Purchaser(s) on the date of possession indicated on the face hereof subject only to completion by the Vendor of seasonal work and items of a minor nature and to surface defects in workmanship and materials accepted by the Purchaser(s), all of which are more particularly described on the face hereof.

The Builder/Vendor warrants that the home is constructed in a workmanlike manner and free of defects and material for one year from the date of possession. A COMPLAINT MUST BE REPORTED TO BOTH THE VENDOR AND THE WARRANTY PROGRAM IN WRITING WITHIN THE FIRST YEAR OF OCCUPANCY.

[para83] The next standard letter between YHL and purchasers was dated April 24, 1991. In this letter, YHL informed the purchasers that the general contractor had completed all deficiencies as noted in the Architect's Inspection Reports. The letter requested purchasers to check their initial Ontario New Home Warranty Program Inspection Report to confirm whether there were any outstanding deficiencies, and invited purchasers to list separately other deficiencies which became apparent after occupancy. The letter further provides:

York Humber will not dismiss its responsibility to satisfy the purchasers' deficiencies and will endeavour to complete this work in a timely manner.

Under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program we have 1 year to complete the deficiencies but it is certainly our intention to complete all our responsibilities before that time.

[para84] The next standard communication between vendor and purchaser was a letter dated August 29, 1991 from YHL's solicitors, McCarthy Tétrault directed either to the purchaser or the purchaser's solicitors. The August 29, 1991 letter advised purchasers that on August 23, 1991 the Condominium Declaration had been registered and set out a closing schedule for the purchaser's unit. The closing dates were between September 23 and September 26, 1991.

[para85] On September 2, 1991, McCarthy Tétrault wrote to purchasers or purchasers' solicitors enclosing documentation with respect to the final closing.

F. THE METHANE GAS SYSTEM

[para86] Dr. Brown was called to testify by the vendor as both a fact witness, having been the principal environmental consultant for the project, and as an expert. He and his environmental firm, Brown Associates, wrote numerous reports regarding their investigative work. As well, Dr. Brown and his firm designed and supervised construction of the methane system employed at the River Ridge project. They supervised the excavation and soil removal from the project.

[para87] Dr. Brown was tendered and accepted as an expert in three key areas: (1) contaminant hydrogeology, (2) geotechnical engineering, and (3) urban planning as it relates to environmental matters.

[para88] Dr. Brown's credentials are noteworthy. Dr. Brown graduated from Queen's University in 1968 with a Bachelor degree in Science in the areas of Geological Sciences, Urban Planning, and Chemistry. He subsequently obtained a doctorate from Oxford University in Geochemistry followed by post-doctoral teaching at University College in London, England.

[para89] Dr. Brown has over twenty years experience as a principal of Brown Associates, a firm which specializes in the assessment of methane and hydrocarbon vapours and the protection of buildings and structures. In that capacity, Dr. Brown has practised as a contaminant hydrologist, a geotechnical engineer, and in urban planning.

[para90] In addition, Dr. Brown has been a qualified professional engineer in Ontario since 1972, and a member of both the Canadian Institute of Planners and the Ontario Professional Planners Institute. He was a member of the Planning Board for the City of North York for 5 years and Chairman of the Planning Advisory Committee for the City of North York for three years.

[para92] There was no dispute as to Dr. Brown's expertise with respect to the assessment of lands for methane production or the design and installation of appropriate mitigative systems. He testified that, since 1972, he has designed forty to forty-five mitigative systems of a significant scale to protect buildings. He also stated that he has assessed some three hundred properties where methane gas production was an issue.

[para94] Mr. Beatty received a Bachelors of Science degree in Water Resource Engineering from the University of Guelph in 1968. Prior to that, in 1964, he received a diploma as a Certified Engineering Technician from Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. Although he received no education in respect of methane gas, its properties and modes of transport through soils, his field of study was limited to ground water, his evidence was that, through his work on landfill sites, he has gained experience with methane.

[para95] Mr. Beatty's qualification as an expert witness was limited to contaminant hydrogeology. He is not qualified as a geotechnical engineer (i.e., the field of engineering related to the design and construction of buildings), nor is he qualified as an urban planner as it relates to environmental matters.

1. History of the Site

[para96] In both his expert report and at trial, Dr. Brown gave evidence regarding the history of the River Ridge site and lands adjacent thereto. He testified that Brown Associates reviewed all available secondary sources including aerial photographs and earlier environmental studies in order to understand the site history.

[para97] The City owned the lands prior to the purchase by YHL on September 26, 1988 and presumably before the incorporation of the City of York, the Town of Weston. The evidence indicates that the City used the lands for two purposes: the Weston Sewage Plant (up to 1961) and the operation on adjacent property of the Wilby Crescent incinerator (up to about 1953-56). It is therefore apparent that the lands of which the River Ridge site forms a part, were under municipal control up to the date of sale to YHL.

[para98] In his testimony, Dr. Brown reviewed a collection of aerial photographs of the area containing the site. From these photographs he was able to determine the type of fill deposited on the site. It was his opinion that from these photographs he was able to determine that the fill was not domestic garbage, a finding consistent with the site having been under the control of the local municipality. Dr. Brown testified that he would not have expected domestic garbage to be present at the site because the local municipality did not have responsibility for domestic garbage, and that Metropolitan Toronto, which was responsible, did not have access to the site.

2. The Nature of the Site

[para99] Reference has previously been made to the Environmental Reports prepared by Brown Associates which detail the specific investigative work carried out on the site. In his evidence at trial, Dr. Brown reviewed the investigative findings with respect to the site. Referring to Exhibit 9, a map of the entire site, a summary of Dr. Brown's findings regarding the contents of the land is as follows:

. the most westerly portion of the site, described as a panhandle, was entirely original, unimpaired soil;

. the building envelope, which was outlined in pink on Exhibit 9, was centred on nine clarifier/digester tanks from the former Weston Sewage Plant, and that all of the plant was within the footprint of the underground part of the building. Prior to excavation, Dr. Brown was aware that the Plant was largely de-commissioned, and was buried with about 40 feet of predominantly inert fill. In the course of excavation, Dr. Brown established that most of the fill material was inert fill which met residential guidelines and could be used off-site. He also found localized zones of impaired soils which were associated with residual sludge found in the remaining tanks. This material required special handling and would have to be deposited in a licensed landfill. Dr. Brown had documented the specifics of the excavation and the disposal of fill materials;

. with respect to the Metro Easement, the green-coloured area on Exhibit 9, Dr. Brown testified that in the early 1960s when the Weston Sewage Treatment Plant was closed, Metro Toronto installed new storm and sanitary sewers that would by-pass the old plant. These new pipes were installed in the Metro Easement close to bedrock. Dr. Brown said that controlled inert fill material was placed on top of the pipes. He said that "controlled" materials means homogenous fill brought from outside the site. From his own examination during excavation, about 40% of the soil on the easement was removed during construction, Dr. Brown had determined that the fill material in the Metro Easement was quite homogenous, composed of predominantly silt and clay material. He testified that as the fill was inert there was no potential for methane gas production, and that because the fill in the Metro Easement was of low permeability, it would act as an impediment to methane gas migration;

. with respect to the lands east of the Metro Easement, coloured orange on Exhibit 9, and referred to in evidence as "the orange area", Dr. Brown testified that fill had been brought to the area in the 1950's and 1960's. From his investigation of secondary sources, he determined that no fill material had been deposited on the site in the last twenty-five years.

Dr. Brown further testified that based on the borehole logs made with respect to the orange area, his opinion was consistent with that of Warnock Hersey; the fill was heterogenous as it came from different locations, that the fill was predominantly inert fill from municipal works (concrete, bricks, glass, and wood), and that there were zones of top-soil which was consistent with the presence of surplus materials from public works. He concluded that there was a possibility that methanogenic material might be randomly located in the orange area.

Dr. Brown testified that the possibility of the orange area producing significant quantities of methane gas was very, very remote. He said that small quantities of gas might be produced in small, limited lenses or pockets. He said his finding was also consistent with that of Warnock Hersey. Once the pockets of gas are released, the methane will not be replenished, unlike large, active landfill sites. He testified that, for significant methane to be produced, he would have expected to find putrescible material indicating the presence of domestic garbage (e.g., orange peels, glass, tin cans, etc.) He would also expect to find in soil samples a gross, distinct odour, and to find leachate contamination in the ground water. He also said he would have expected to find readings of methane in the bore holes at concentrations well above the upper explosive range of 15%). Further, once the source of methane had been tapped into, he would have expected to have methane continuously coming off in significant quantities. None of these expectations were found in any of the testing done by Brown Associates or, indeed, by anyone else;

. with respect to the upper part of the site, Dr. Brown said there were no fill materials at or above the embankment that forms the northern portion of the site.

[para100] In cross-examination, Dr. Brown confirmed that his opinion based on the aerial photographs and the bore hole logs as to the nature of the fill deposited on the site was completely substantiated when Brown Associates proceeded to excavate the entire area of lands on which the project was built. He stated that Brown Associates had been 98% accurate with respect to the volumes of soil, rock etc. which had to be removed from the overall site and deposited off-site.

[para101] In cross-examination, Dr. Brown was asked about his findings with respect to the lands east of the orange area. He said that based on secondary sources and from his testing in the orange area, he was satisfied that he had an accurate understanding of all the fill areas, both with respect to delineation and content. He said there was no evidence to suggest that the fill area beyond the orange area was any different in nature than that found in the orange area. Dr. Brown's opinion was that there will not be any significant flux of methane migrating to the building.

[para102] One of the three specified purposes for Mr. Beatty's report was to provide a review of "the potential methane gas impacts at the site". In this regard, Mr. Beatty did not perform any primary investigative work as a basis for his opinion but relied entirely on secondary sources and the results of Dr. Brown's investigations.

[para103] Mr. Beatty did not examine any soil samples, take any methane readings from the lands adjacent to the building (the Metro Easement or the orange area), nor did he conduct any primary investigative research at the site concerning the contents of the landfill or its outer limits. Accordingly, he conceded that he was unable to offer an expert opinion as to the quantity of methane gas that could be produced on adjacent lands, nor could he offer an opinion regarding the pattern(s) of methane migration.

[para107] Mr. Beatty was critical of Dr. Brown's report in that, he stated, methane gas monitoring had not been conducted in a "systematic or continuous manner" on site. This view was based on Mr. Beatty's statement that the only monitoring had occurred in January to April, 1988 and once in August, 1988. However, apparently unknown to Mr. Beatty, Brown Associates had tested for methane at time of installation of the methane gas system and when the system was inspected and calibrated thereafter. Also, there was continuous monitoring on the site since work began in 1988, during construction, and after the system was in place in April, 1990. All of this "without incident". Therefore, Mr. Beatty's criticism on this score is unfounded in fact. In any event, there is no evidence that any methane has been detected at the building in the underground parking areas or in the stand pipes since construction began, a fact which Mr. Beatty does not address in his expert report.

[para108] Mr. Beatty, in his report notes a reference in the July 11, 1988 MOE letter to the effect that "testing to date is inconclusive in defining where definite locations of soil contamination may exist". This statement taken out of context ignores the fact that subsequent testing was conducted, referred to in the Supplementary Report, and MOE approval ultimately granted. Mr. Beatty's report creates a negative impression concerning the content of the Metro Easement, as containing sewage sludge. All of this is contrary to the evidence and is unsupported in fact.

[para110] Mr. Beatty's conclusion, in his expert report, that there is a high probability that methane will be produced in adjacent areas and could migrate towards the condominium development is unsupported on the evidence. He did no primary investigative work on which to base this opinion, as contrasted with Dr. Brown who, in addition to his primary work, had the advantage of visual inspection of the site during excavation to verify his conclusions as to the nature of the site. In cross-examination, Mr. Beatty conceded that he could offer no expert opinion as to the quantity of methane gas that could be produced on the site; moreover, Mr. Beatty acknowledged that there was no evidence to suggest that the building was uninhabitable or that there was any danger of harm or injury. For all of these reasons, whenever Mr. Beatty's opinion concerning the nature of the site varies from that of Dr. Brown's, I accept the opinion of Dr. Brown.

C. Development Conditions: The Approvals Process

[para112] It was Dr. Brown's evidence that he was involved in the discussions with the City of York and the MOE regarding the conditions that would be imposed on the development of this site. He testified that because the City of York was the vendor of the land, added scrutiny was given to this development. For this reason, the City imposed several conditions on the development before agreeing to sell the land, before allowing the development to be constructed, and before allowing people to take occupancy of the project.

[para114] The purchasers led no evidence to counter Dr. Brown's testimony that there had been proper compliance with all development conditions. Mr. Beatty's evidence in cross-examination was that he assumed that the developer in this case had complied with all of the requirements of the City, the MOE and Metro Toronto. Based on the foregoing, I find that all of the development conditions were properly met.

D. River Ridge Methane Ventilation and Monitoring Systems

[para116] The passive methane collection and venting system is a system of perforated pipes below ground connected to a series of vertical stand pipes above ground to collect any methane gas and to vent the gas to the atmosphere. As stated, at page 15 of Dr. Brown's expert report:

All evidence shows that the only possible direction of migrating methane would be from the south [sic "east"], across the Metro Easement, and hence the standpipes are located on the appropriate side of the building.

Thus the piping ventilation system forms a line of defence along part of the southern and easterly side of the building.

[para117] Dr. Brown described the River Ridge building as having seven levels of protection from the possibility of methane migrating into the structure. They are:

1. thirty-six methane detectors strategically located in the areas of the underground parking garage (e.g., inside enclosed spaces);
2. mechanical air exchange in the parking levels with complete air exchange every fifteen minutes;
3. an eight to nine inch concrete wall made of 8,000 pounds per square inch concrete with steel reinforcing bars;
4. coating of sprayed bitumen on the external surface of the underground structure;

5. Hitek, a corrugated or waffle-like plastic and a spun filament polyester geotextile, affixed to the exterior underground surface;
6. clear limestone backfill and limestone chimneys;
7. low permeability backfill in the Metro Easement.

[para118] The methane detectors in the underground parking levels are calibrated to detect methane at 0.2%, which is 1/25th of the lowest explosive level of methane of 5.0%. These same detectors, like light bulbs, will ultimately require replacement. It is important to note, however, that the detectors become even more sensitive as they age.

[para120] Dr. Brown explained the reasons why he recommended the installation of the methane ventilation and monitoring systems. He said that the summer testing program of the orange area found limited but definite zones of methane gas. He could not wait four seasons to obtain a building permit. Therefore, Dr. Brown made a conservative estimate that the presence of methane gas in the orange area might be worse in the winter, assuming that there was more topsoil in the orange area and therefore more methanogenic material. He decided to put in a defence system because the soils in the Metro Easement were not enough to guarantee a high level of comfort for the project.

[para122] Further, Dr. Brown testified in cross-examination that the systems installed at the project were sufficient in his expert opinion to protect the building even if the fill in the orange area and in the land adjacent to the east were 100% municipal, curbside garbage.

[para123] Any suggestion on the part of the purchasers that these systems were negligently designed or installed, or that the River Ridge project is in any way unsafe, was totally unsubstantiated.

[para124] A second stipulated purpose of Mr. Beatty's expert report was to assess the effectiveness of the "methane mitigative system".

[para125] Mr. Beatty attended at the site on one occasion only on May 5, 1993 to examine the methane gas system. As Mr. Beatty's report makes clear, he could not see very much of the methane ventilation system because, except for the stand pipes, it is beneath the ground. He also said that he was shown a few of the methane monitors in the underground parking levels, but at the time he did not have the Monitor Location Plan so he could not see all of the 36 monitors in place. In the result, most of what he has to say regarding the methane gas system is based on Dr. Brown's reports.

[para126] In his report, Mr. Beatty describes the initial proposed methane gas system, referring to Brown Associates' Environmental Report. It is at this point that Mr. Beatty makes reference to the positive air pressure ventilation system designed for the underground parking levels. Subsequently in his report, Mr. Beatty describes as an "uncertainty" the fact that the garage is ventilated with exhaust fans that create a negative pressure.

[para127] This statement by Mr. Beatty is explained by a change in proposed ventilation system from positive to negative pressure set out in the Supplementary Environmental Report, where Brown Associates clearly indicate that the system design will incorporate negative ventilation. The Supplementary Report states: "The underground levels of the structure will be provided with negative ventilation to exhaust unwanted gases, whether they originate from automobiles or from outside the building....The details of the methane gas mitigation system have been provided separately to the Ministry in the form of drawings prepared by the architect and the mechanical consultant." Mr. Beatty appears to have overlooked this change when preparing his expert report.

[para128] However, in cross-examination, Mr. Beatty conceded that he knew that Dr. Brown had to move from a positive to a negative ventilation system in the underground parking level because, in consultation with the mechanical engineers, it was determined that a positive ventilation would blow car exhaust into the building. Mr. Beatty said he was also aware that the exhaust fans in the garage provided an air exchange every 15 minutes. Finally, Mr. Beatty was aware that the Ministry of the Environment had approved Dr. Brown's system design and had granted Section 45 approval on that basis. Mr. Beatty did not refer to any of this information in his report.

[para130] Mr. Beatty also agreed that one part of the mitigative system was the design and installation of the underground parking garage. He acknowledged that he had no experience with respect to designing the structure of the building to prevent methane gas from entering. This evidence thus falls into the same category as that concerning the exhaust system.

[para132] Mr. Beatty testified in cross-examination that prior to testifying in chief, he was aware that the drainage sheet and geotextile filter did not go all the way to the surface because of potential problems with clogging. In any event, he agreed that as he did not understand the purpose of the drainage sheet and geo-textile filter and he would defer to Dr. Brown's opinion.

[para133] Mr. Beatty conceded that, because of the uncertainties he had about the system, he was unable to come to a firm opinion regarding the effectiveness of the mitigative system. Mr. Beatty had never designed a system similar to that designed by Dr. Brown; he had only evaluated the work of other engineers on one or two prior occasions; it was not his common practice to examine methane systems installed by other engineers.

In summary, having reviewed Mr. Beatty's report carefully, I am completely satisfied with the safety and efficacy of the River Ridge Project and in particular, the methane monitoring and ventilation systems. I am bolstered in my view by the approvals given by the Minister of the Environment and the City of York for the project. [para136] The third area addressed by Mr. Beatty was the potential for on-going costs and liabilities of the system. Mr. Beatty indicated that the replacement cost of the system was in the order of $100,000 to $200,000. In cross examination he conceded that he did not know the cost of the system. In any case, the system Dr. Brown testified, would last the lifetime of the building since it was a "passive" system. This evidence was not refuted. Thus replacement cost is not a concern. Dr. Brown stated, at page 17, of his expert report:

The methane systems employed at the River Ridge site are designed to last the life of the building. I do not foresee any significant replacement costs. The methane ventilation system has no mechanical components that would require replacement or maintenance. It is a "passive" as opposed to "active" system. It is also a "breathing system": as changes in air pressure occur the effect will be a "breathing" of the air in the exterior ventilation system which has a flushing effect. In terms of the "active" methane monitoring system, it is very unlikely that it would ever require replacement to the extent suggested by Mr. Beatty ($100,000 to $200,000), if at all. In my opinion, if replacement became necessary (however unlikely) the cost would be nominal because the monitoring system is mostly wiring which could be retained; the only working parts which could be replaced are the annunciator panel and the detector heads which cost about 2% of the figures suggested by Mr. Beatty in his report.

[para139] Mr. Beatty, in final analysis, took issue only with respect to the specific design which Dr. Brown incorporated into the methane gas system. His evidence was that he, Mr. Beatty, could design a system which would ensure the safety of residents of the building. Therefore, given that a safe system could be designed to protect the building from any methane gas risk, the only remaining question is the integrity of Dr. Brown's design. I accept Dr. Brown's expert opinion concerning this point.

[para140] Mr. Beatty testified that he assumed that the requirements of the MOE, the City, and Metro Toronto had been met for the development to proceed and be occupied. He stated that a developer was entitled to rely on the advice of its environmental expert, the approval of the MOE and the City as to the safety of the methane gas system. With all of this I agree.

[para141] Counsel for the purchasers made a point that the system had not been tested by Dr. Brown. It is clear that the methane monitoring system was tested and calibrated. The methane ventilation system is passive and no suggestion was ever made by the purchasers' counsel as to how and whether it could be tested. In the absence of such evidence, I am satisfied that Brown Associates did everything required in respect of testing the methane gas system, which Dr. Brown testified, was performed during construction.

5. No disclosure required to unit purchasers

[para142] In cross-examination, Dr. Brown was asked questions about his understanding of the recommendation of the MOE in the letter of July 11, 1988 that the owner require all "subsequent owners" to be made aware of the presence or requirements concerning the methane gas system. Did "subsequent owners" include the purchasers? Dr. Brown testified that "subsequent owners" referred to the condominium corporation which would become the subsequent owner of the site. He stated that he did not interpret this provision as a disclosure clause, but rather as a form of heirs and successors clause. He testified that in the circumstances, the condominium corporation would become the future owner and operator of the system. Dr. Brown freely conceded that he was not aware of any legal meaning attached in law to the term "subsequent owners". He stated, however, that in his dealings with the MOE and City officials they had been satisfied with the disclosure he made to the condominium corporation and there was no suggestion or recommendation that unit purchasers be notified.

[para143] Dr. Brown stated in cross-examination that had the MOE or the City wanted individual unit purchasers to have information about the site or the methane systems, this requirement could have been imposed; for example, they could have required disclosure in the Articles of Incorporation of the condominium. Dr. Brown indicated that this had been done elsewhere.

[para144] I accept Dr. Brown's evidence regarding the reference to "subsequent owners" in the MOE letter. In any event, no evidence was led by the purchasers to establish that the MOE or the City had imposed a requirement of disclosure of these matters to unit purchasers. Accordingly, I find that no such requirement had been imposed on the vendor.

IV. ISSUES OF LAW

[para145] Three main issues of law were argued on the facts in this case which are common to all of the purchasers. In addition, there were several other, "purchaser specific" issues relating to individual purchasers. These are addressed later. The three main issues, which will be dealt with below are:

1. Were the disclosure requirements under section 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 met by YHL?
2. Did YHL owe a fiduciary duty to the purchasers of the condominium units?
 - a. if yes, did they owe a duty to continually disclose material information, at which point is this information deemed material?
 - b. if yes, was that duty breached by not disclosing the nature of the site including the governmental requirements and the possible need for a methane gas system?
3. Does the existence of the Environmental Agreement, the Confirming Agreement, and the Assumption Agreement constitute a cloud on title?
 - a. are the agreements encumbrances?
 - b. if yes, are they permitted encumbrances?
 - c. if they are encumbrances and they are not permitted encumbrances, did the purchasers accept them by neglecting to object to the title in a timely fashion?

A. ISSUE NO. 1: DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS PURSUANT TO SECTION 52 OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT

[para146] Counsel for the purchasers, Mr. Fine, argued that YHL failed to meet the disclosure requirements imposed in the Condominium Act by failing to include, in the disclosure statement, details about the nature of the building site, the government requirements, the potential hazards of methane gas, the assumption of liability by the condominium corporation, the need for a methane gas system and the costs inherent therein. As a result of such failure, it was argued that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is not binding upon the purchasers.

[para148] Subsection 52(6) requires full and accurate disclosure of certain information, the details of which are contained in the section. The relevant portions of the section read as follows:

(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

.....

(b) a general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities;

.....

(d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of the common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39;

(e) a budget statement for the one year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and the description.

(7) The budget statement mentioned in clause (6) (e) shall set out,

(a) the common expenses;

(b) the proposed amount of each expense;

(c) particulars of the type, frequency and level of the services to be provided;

(i) any services not included in the budget that the declarant or proposed declarant provides, or expenses that he pays and that might reasonably be expected to become, at any subsequent time, a common expense and the projected common expense contribution attributable to each of those services or expenses for each type of unit;

[para149] Section 39 of the Act (referred to in Section 52(6)(d)) states, in subsection 39(1), that the condominium corporation may terminate, with sixty days notice in writing, any agreement between the corporation and any person for the management of the property which was entered into when the declarant owned the majority of units and the majority of the board of the corporation were elected. Subsection 39(2) states that all agreements for the provision of services on a continuing basis which were entered into by the corporation at a time when the declarant held a majority of the units and a majority of the board were elected are deemed to be 12 month contracts starting from the date their effective date. These contracts can be extended if the board, elected after the declarant no longer holds a majority of the units, ratifies them.

[para150] The test to apply in determining the degree of disclosure required was articulated in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 at 138-39 (Ont. C.A.) where Robins J.A. stated: I approach this question first by reference to the applicable burden of proof. In my opinion, when a purchaser who has had the opportunity afforded by the cooling off period to consider the disclosure statement and the accompanying documentation, and has decided to go through with the transaction, subsequently seeks to rescind from his or her otherwise binding agreement of purchase and sale on the basis of the deficiency of the disclosure statement, the onus is on the purchaser to show that the disclosure statement fails to satisfy the requirements of the Act to the degree that the agreement must be declared non-binding.

To discharge this onus and prove the materiality of the complaint, in my opinion, the purchaser is obliged to establish objectively that had the information that was not disclosed, or that was inaccurately or insufficiently disclosed, been properly disclosed in the disclosure statement at the time it was delivered to the purchaser, a reasonable purchaser would have regarded the information as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that he or she would not likely have gone ahead with the transaction but would instead have rescinded the agreement before the expiration of the ten-day cooling off period. [emphasis added]

[para151] It is clear, therefore, that the onus is on the purchasers to prove that there was a material non-disclosure.

[para152] In addition to the initial disclosure statement, there is an obligation on the developer to amend the Disclosure Statement where material information comes to light after the disclosure statement is distributed. The test to be applied in determining when such an amendment is necessary is similar to the general test for disclosure. In Abdool, Robins J.A. stated, at page 149:

Would a reasonable purchaser regard the change or amendment as sufficiently important to his or her decision to purchase that, had the disclosure statement contained the new or amended information at the time it was delivered, the purchaser would not likely have gone ahead with the transaction but would have rescinded the agreement within the ten day period? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the developer is obliged to deliver an amendment to the disclosure statement and the purchaser has ten days from the date of delivery with which to rescind. [emphasis added]

[para153] It was argued that the initial disclosure statement ought to have disclosed the following information, pursuant to s. 52(6)(b) of the Act, as information pertaining to a general description of the property or proposed property:

A. the information contained in the Proposal Call with respect to:

1. the history and former use of the property and the lands adjacent to it;
2. previous testing that had been carried out in respect of the site and the surrounding area;
3. the governmental requirements [site plan approval] for testing including:
 - a. Identification of the extent of fill and any organic waste;
 - b. Assessment of the methane gas production from the site;
 - c. Evaluation of the impact of methane gas on the proposed structures;
4. the requirement to recommend and design a ventilation system to control and remove all methane gas and to monitor methane gas generation;
5. the restrictions on occupancy;
6. the requirement for the submission of reports evaluating the performance of the ventilation system;
7. the requirements of the Ministry of the Environment including the requirement for approval in respect in the site under s. 45 of the Environmental Protection Act.

B. the retaining of Brown Associates to carry out the work for which Brown was retained;

C. the actual testing carried out by Brown Associates and the results thereof (to date), including Brown's recommendations.

[para154] It was further argued that YHL should have delivered amendments to the disclosure statement from time to time, which should have contained, and fully and accurately disclosed, the following information, pursuant to s. 52(6)(b) of the Act, as information pertaining to a general description of the property or proposed property:

A. the actual testing carried out by Brown and the results thereof, including Brown's recommendations;

B. the various other governmental approvals and requirements that were required in relation to the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System, including the installation, maintenance, testing and monitoring thereof;

C. the Minister's conditions of approval under s. 45 of the Environmental Protection Act;

D. the existence of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System on the property;

E. the existence and terms of agreements providing for, inter alia:

1. the installation, maintenance and monitoring of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System;
2. the assumption by the future condominium corporation of YHL's obligations contained in the Environmental Agreement;
3. the indemnification and saving harmless by the condominium corporation of both the City of York and YHL as set out in the Environmental Agreement and the Assumption Agreement;
4. the release of YHL from its obligations under the Environmental Agreement; and,

5. the providing of inspection and calibration services with respect to the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System on a continuing basis (the "Enmet Agreement");

F. that YHL would cause the condominium corporation to:

1. assume YHL's obligations and give the above-noted indemnities as set out in sub-paragraphs ii. and iii. immediately above;
2. enter into the Enmet Agreement;

G. the cost of maintenance and monitoring of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System, and that such costs would be part of the common expenses of the condominium corporation;

H. the information on page 2 of the Operation Manual.

[para155] It was submitted that YHL should have delivered amendments to the disclosure statement from time to time, disclosing, pursuant to ss. 52(6)(e) and 52(7)(a) of the Act, the potential financial liability of the condominium corporation for:

A. the ongoing:

1. maintenance, repair and replacement of; and,
2. monitoring and reporting with respect to,

the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System;

B. the indemnification of the City of York contained the Environmental Agreement; and,

C. the indemnification of YHL contained in the Assumption Agreement, all of which would be common expenses of the condominium corporation.

[para156] It was also submitted that YHL should have delivered an amendment to the disclosure statement, disclosing, pursuant to s. 52(6)(d) and s. 39 of the Act, a brief narrative description of the significant features of:

A. the Enmet Agreement; and,

B. the Environmental Agreement, as these agreements were agreements for the provision of services on a continuing basis within the meaning of s. 39 of the Act.

[para157] It was conceded that the cost of maintenance of the system was a negligible amount. Counsel argued, however, that the fact of requiring maintenance of such a system is material information that the purchasers should have had in order to make an informed decision when entering into the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. If the developer was unable to disclose the information at that point then an amendment should have been distributed advising the purchasers of the existence of the system, the reasons for it and the condominium corporation's corresponding liability.

To declare that otherwise binding agreements are unenforceable solely because of the disclosure statement is obviously a very serious matter. Depending, of course, on the real estate market, the adverse economic impact of such declarations on developers is manifest. Accordingly, it seems to me apparent that not every defect in a disclosure statement will warrant a declaration that an agreement is not binding. Before a defect can have that effect it must be of such substance as to render the disclosure statement defective in a material respect.

Agreements should not be rendered unenforceable by technical deficiencies or immaterial omissions in a disclosure statement. Contracting parties, it must be remembered, owe one another a duty to act reasonably and in good faith and to perform contracts honestly made.

[para159] The deficiencies complained of by Mr. Fine are numerous. As was stated in Abdool at page 146 it is necessary to:

...construe s. 52 in a manner that properly balances consumer protection and the commercial realities of the condominium industry and, if adopted, would require a disclosure document incompatible with the underlying aim of the section.

The vagueness of the requirements and the absence of statutory guidelines mandate a broad and flexible approach -- not a rigid or stringent one -- in determining whether a given disclosure statement is adequate.

In Abdool, it was alleged that there were several details missing from the disclosure statement. It was argued that, taken as a whole, there was inadequate disclosure. The Court of Appeal dismissed this approach and stated that the disclosure statement must be viewed in the context of the other documents provided. The Court held that there was no material non-disclosure requiring that the agreements be set aside.

[para160] The test of materiality is objective. Would a reasonable purchaser have regarded the information as being so important that he or she would not likely have completed the transaction? Counsel for the purchasers concedes in argument that the materiality must be measured at the time that the development has been completed for occupancy. The facts at that time, and now, militate against a finding of materiality. The methane gas system is in place shielding the development from the direction of any possible methane gas migration. The monitoring system has been tested and calibrated. Enmet is under contract to maintain the system. The building has, in Dr. Brown's opinion, in the form of the methane gas system, seven lines of defence. This system has received the approval of the MOE and the City of York. All requirements of those bodies have been met and complied with. There is no danger to health or safety, nor is there any disruption or interference with the use or enjoyment of the individual purchasers' unit or the common elements. Although the Operation Manual for Methane Gas System states that the "only possible (but remote) danger" is that some methane gas might enter the underground area of the building, no methane gas has ever been detected in the building or the system. The methane gas system, Dr. Brown testified, was inserted in the development out of an abundance of caution, assuming a worst case scenario. If there is any migration of methane gas, the methane gas system, he asserts, will effectively vent it off. The system is, he said, no different than any other mechanical system in a large building. The Environmental Agreement and related agreements were normal development agreements, although they were structured here as stand-alone agreements. The Enmet agreement, providing for the monitoring and maintenance of the system, is a normal maintenance agreement, the ongoing cost of which purchasers' counsel concedes was insignificant.

[para163] Counsel for the purchasers argued that the prior use and history of the site and the presence of the methane gas system has a stigmatic effect on the development resulting in a diminished value for the units. This, he submits, renders these facts material. Barry Lebow, a real estate appraiser, was called as an expert witness by the purchasers. He stated that, although there was no stigma attached to the development at this time, it could occur in future. He relied, in giving his opinion, on his experience dealing with properties containing Urea Formaldehyde Foam Insulation ("UFFI") and the stigmatic effect of this product on value of such properties. Mr. Lebow admitted, in cross examination, to having no knowledge of methane gas; to not having conducted an appraisal on the development; and, that UFFI was a known carcinogenic and, therefore a restricted material subject to government regulation. He relied for his opinion on the statement from the Operation Manual referred to above and discussions with several friends.

[para164] Mr. Lebow had no knowledge of methane gas. The statement from the manual was taken totally out of context. There is no valid parallel between methane gas and UFFI and his comparison lacks any recognition of the presence of the methane gas system or its function. He conducted no appraisal, and he acknowledged that no stigma exists now. In addition, the residents of the building at River Ridge are protected from the dangers of gas with a system approved by the MOE and the City, whereas the buildings with UFFI cannot be. In my view, therefore, Mr. Lebow's opinion has no support in fact or otherwise and I give no weight whatever to it. I conclude that the history of the site, the nature of the property, the presence of the methane gas system, and the entire circumstances of this development, has not produced any stigmatic effect resulting in reduced values for these units. The reduced values have been the result, solely, of the fall in the condominium market in Toronto.

[para165] Finally, although the test is objective, I am given comfort in my conclusion that these matters are not material by the conduct of some of the purchasers in these transactions. Kimberly Baird was an associate real estate broker with Re/Max Professionals Inc. He learned of the methane gas issue in February or March, 1991, and of the system in May or June, 1991. He first raised the issue as a basis for not closing in a letter from his solicitors Fine and Deo dated October 4, 1991.

[para168] A number of purchasers, after being informed of the methane and land use issues, indicated that they would close their transactions if they could achieve an acceptable abatement in purchase price. [para169] Each of the purchasers in their evidence stated that, had they known the facts, details of which are set forth in the Agreed Statement of Facts, paragraphs 147 and 148, they would not have gone ahead with the transaction. Paragraphs 147 and 148 state:

147. Prior to entering into their respective Agreements of Purchase and Sale, none of the purchasers received any of the information contained in the Proposal Call with respect to:

- a. the history and former use of the property and the lands adjacent to it;
- b. previous testing that had been carried out in respect of the site and the surrounding area;
- c. the governmental requirements [site plan approval] for testing including:
 - i. Identification of the extent of fill and any organic waste;
 - ii. Assessment of the methane gas production from the site;
 - iii. Evaluation of the impact of methane gas on the proposed structures;
- d. the requirement to recommend and design a ventilation system to control and remove all methane gas and to monitor methane gas generation;
- e. the restrictions on occupancy;

- f. the requirement for the submission of reports evaluating the performance of the ventilation system;
- g. the requirements of the Ministry of the Environment including the requirement for approval in respect in the site under s. 45 of the Environmental Protection Act;

148. With the exception of Stella Guida, Michael and Johanne Guida, and Kim Baird, who obtained certain information about the existence of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System prior to September, 1991, it was in August/September 1991 that any of the purchasers first received or were aware of any information about any of the following:

- a. the information set out in para. 147 above;
- b. the retaining of Brown to carry out the work for which Brown was retained;
- c. the actual testing carried out by Brown and the results thereof, including Brown's recommendations;
- d. the various other governmental approvals and requirements that were required in relation to the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System, including the installation, maintenance, testing and monitoring thereof;
- e. the Minister's conditions of approval under s. 45 of the Environmental Protection Act;
- f. the existence of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System on the property;
- g. the existence and terms of agreements providing for, inter alia:
 - i. the installation, maintenance and monitoring of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System;
 - ii. the assumption by the future condominium corporation of YHL's obligations contained in the Environmental Agreement;
 - iii. the indemnification and saving harmless by the condominium corporation of both the City of York and YHL as set out in the Environmental Agreement and the Assumption Agreement;
 - iv. the release of YHL from its obligations under the Environmental Agreement; and
 - v. the providing of inspection and calibration services with respect to the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System on a continuing basis (the "Enmet Agreement");
- h. that YHL would cause the condominium corporation to:
 - i. so assume YHL's obligations and give the above-noted indemnities as set out in sub-paragraphs ii. and iii. immediately above;
 - ii. enter into the Enmet Agreement;
 - iii. the cost of maintenance and monitoring of the Methane Gas Ventilation and Monitoring System, and that such costs would be part of the common expenses of the condominium corporation;
- j. the information on page 2 of the Operation Manual.

[para170] Dealing with the purchasers' evidence, first, the test as enunciated in Abdool is objective. The evidence regarding each purchaser's subjective motivation for not closing is, therefore, irrelevant. Secondly, in any event given the just stated evidence, I reject these purchaser statements. An objective analysis implies that a purchaser would be accurately and fully informed. The evidence was clear that the purchasers were not properly informed concerning the matters in paragraphs 147 and 148. Moreover, they did not take any steps to inform themselves with the result that their reaction to the information contained in these paragraphs was made without fully understanding the situation. A reasonable purchaser, so informed, would not, in my opinion, regard this information as so important as to not proceed. Accordingly, their evidence in this regard is not useful.

[para171] Counsel argued that these subjective views are relevant. He relies on the passage from Abdool wherein Robins J.A. makes reference to certain idiosyncratic circumstances which may render a point material to an individual purchaser. At page 149 Robins J.A. stated:

Amendments that substantially change a purchaser's anticipated use and enjoyment of the unit or the amenities associated therewith or that adversely affect the value of the unit, are, I would think, clearly material amendments that revive the rescission period. A reasonable purchaser could objectively assert that he or she would not have proceeded with the deal had this information been available at the time of the original disclosure statement. However, given the lifestyle aspects of condominium living, there may well be situations in which the individual circumstances of a particular purchaser may render an amendment which is not material to other purchasers, and which indeed may be acceptable to other purchasers in a given project, none the less material to this purchaser. The extent to which subjective considerations may reasonably be asserted in determining the materiality of the new or amended information is not before the court in these appeals and need not be considered. [emphasis added]

In my opinion, this statement refers, for example, to an amenity such as a gymnasium. If a purchaser decided to execute an Agreement of Purchase and Sale mainly because the complex had a gymnasium which this purchaser was planning to use a great deal for physical conditioning rather than pay a membership fee at a fitness club and the gymnasium was never built then there may be cause for refusing to complete the transaction for this one purchaser. To apply this proposition to the facts at hand would be a far stretch that would not do justice to the intent of Mr. Justice Robins' words.

[para172] The circumstances surrounding the land use and methane gas system issues is not a material fact within the meaning of the test in Abdool so as to entitle the purchasers, by reason of the non-disclosure, to refuse to complete their Agreements of Purchase and Sale with YHL. Further, the contention that disclosure in the form of amendments to the disclosure statement on an ongoing basis is impractical and contrary to the intentions of the statute.

[para173] In this proceeding, the non-disclosure boils down to one point: should the purchasers have been advised that the building was to be constructed next to a landfill site and that a methane gas system is required? The answer to this question is that, as a matter of public relations, it would have been wise to have done so. As a matter of law, however, there was no material non-disclosure of which warrants rescission of an otherwise valid contract.

B. ISSUE NO. 2: FIDUCIARY DUTY

[para174] Counsel for the purchasers argued that YHL owed an ongoing duty to the purchasers, because a fiduciary relationship existed between them and YHL, to disclose information about the nature of the site and the existence of the methane gas system as the information arose so that they could make an informed choice. This is, he stated, a significant purchase for most people and they have a right to know what they are buying before they buy it. This duty, it was argued, covers all material information from the inception of the project.

[para175] In Frame v. Smith, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99, Madam Justice Wilson, in dissent, identified three general characteristics of a fiduciary. These characteristics were subsequently approved in Lac Minerals v. Corona, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 574 at 599. They are: (1) The fiduciary has scope for the exercise of some discretion or power.

(2) The fiduciary can unilaterally exercise that power or discretion so as to affect the beneficiary's legal or practical interests.

(3) The beneficiary is peculiarly vulnerable to or at the mercy of the fiduciary holding the discretion or power.

[para176] I was referred by counsel to several cases dealing with fiduciary duties in the context of a condominium development. The first of these was the decision in York Condominium Corporation No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458 (C.A.) leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458n. In Newrey numerous purchasers had entered Agreements of Purchase and Sale. The developer still held title, however, and sold some of the parking spaces. The Court held that the developer owed a fiduciary duty to the purchasers after they had entered Agreements of Purchase and Sale in respect of the common elements, while it held title to the property. Madam Justice Wilson stated at page 467:

I do not think the position of the owner-developer remains unchanged after he starts to sell units. I think that at that point he has committed the character of the project to that of condominium under the Act and declaration. I think he has also placed himself in a fiduciary relationship to the unit purchasers not only with respect to their units but also with respect to the interests appurtenant thereto. He therefore holds the property in trust for the unit purchasers, present and prospective, and for the condominium corporation which will come into being upon registration of the declaration. I believe he is under a duty to protect the interests of all unit owners, present and prospective, and cannot put his own interests in conflict with theirs even although he himself continues to be an owner as long as any units remain unsold. [emphasis added]

The Newrey decision was followed by the Alberta and Saskatchewan Courts of Appeal in Condominium Plan No. 86-S-36901 (Owners) v. Remai Construction (1981) Inc. [1992] 1 W.W.R. 66 (Sask. C.A.) and Terrace Corp. (Construction) Ltd. v. Condominium Plan No. 752-1207 (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 324 (Alta. C.A.). The Ontario Court of Appeal, in Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 347 v. Trendsetter Developments Ltd. (1992), 9 O.R. (3d) 481 acknowledged the fiduciary duty of a developer as described in Newrey.

[para177] In Remai the developer and unit purchasers agreed that the caretaker's suite would be considered common property. The developer surreptitiously sold the suite to the condominium corporation as a separate unit while still controlling the condominium corporation. The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal held that the developer owed a fiduciary duty to the purchasers in respect of their individual units and the common elements. By selling the caretaker's unit contrary to a common intention that it be part of the common elements, the developer breached this duty.

[para178] The decision in Terrace Construction, like the decision in Newrey, dealt with parking spaces. In Terrace Construction, the developer, while controlling the condominium corporation and, therefore, the management company, arranged for a 99 year lease of certain parking stalls to be executed between the developer and the management company. The lease was disclosed to individual purchasers. The Alberta Court of Appeal held, however, that this constituted a breach of fiduciary duty resulting in the lease agreement being voidable.

[para180] Counsel argued that the nature of the purchase transaction and the relative positions of the developer and the purchaser results in a fiduciary relationship being created. In terms of the nature of the purchase transaction he identified the following elements of the transaction which make it unique and complicated:

1. the concept of a condominium is a relatively new and not well understood one;
2. the condominium transaction is complex because of the documentation and the legislation (three statutes apply: the Condominium Act, the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O-31, and the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L-7) that affects a purchaser's rights and obligations;
3. closing is conditional upon Registration, which is dependant upon the approval of third parties (ie. environmental requirements); and
4. registration is often not achieved until many years after the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is signed, and at a time when the purchaser has already taken possession of the unit.

[para181] It was submitted that a developer of a condominium complex is analogous to a promoter of a corporation. In making this submission, counsel stated that the developer stands in a relatively advantageous position to the purchaser in several respects:

A. when units are sold in the conceptual stages of the project, the developer has the power to influence the course of events to its advantage and to the prejudice of the purchasers;

B. the developer may be aware of material information regarding the project that a purchaser could not reasonably obtain on a timely basis;

C. the ability to describe a proposed residential condominium building in a disclosure statement assists the condominium developer in pre-selling and pre-renting proposed units prior to construction and, as in this case, even prior to obtaining the land;
 D. the purchaser is required to take possession of the proposed unit and a condominium developer can generate revenue prior to the time that title is passed to the purchaser; and,

E. a condominium purchaser is often effectively committed to the completion of the transaction at or before the interim occupancy closing, having sold his previously occupied residence in order to pay the required substantial deposit prior to his obligation to assume occupancy:

- a. at a premature stage in the construction;
- b. prior to a proper vetting of the building;
- c. not having received title; and,

d. not knowing with certainty whether the transaction will eventually be completed. [emphasis in original] [para182] The purchaser stands in a disadvantageous position, he urges, because of the following factors:

A. where a developer elects to market proposed units during the conceptual stages of a project:

- 1. a purchaser has no alternative, but to rely and be dependant upon, and to put his or her trust and confidence in, that developer at all times;
- 2. to carry out what it has undertaken to do; and,
- 3. for complete and accurate disclosure of all information about the project;

e.g. such a purchaser would not have the opportunity, prior to entering into the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to hire a consultant to conduct a home inspection, in the same way that the purchaser of a re-sale property could do.

B. there is no certainty as to if or when the condominium purchase transaction will be completed, and accordingly:

- 1. the transaction of purchase and sale may never be completed; or,
- 2. the purchaser may remain a tenant for an undetermined amount of time, thereby foregoing the rights and benefits of ownership of real property that an owner would enjoy e.g. the ability to sell or mortgage the property. [emphasis in original]

[para183] Counsel suggested that the stringent requirements surrounding prospectus documents in the context of a promoter/investor relationship is analogous to the disclosure requirements of a developer in the developer/purchaser context. He relied upon the following authorities to explain the nature of a fiduciary duty and for the proposition that the onus is upon the fiduciary to establish that the duty has been met: Hogar Estates Ltd., in Trust v. Shebron Holdings Ltd. (1979), 25 O.R. (2d) 543 (H.C.) and D'Atri v. Chilcott (1975), 7 O.R. (2d) 249 (H.C.). In addition, counsel referred to the D'Atri decision as authority for the proposition that a fiduciary duty is owed by a real estate agent to the person on whose behalf they are selling of property. It was submitted that a developer in the position of YHL should have no less of a duty towards purchasers of condominium units.

[para184] Counsel further submitted that YHL had a high and continuing duty to disclose all material facts within its knowledge from time to time, the existence of which might, in any material degree, affect the nature, extent, and quality of the subject matter of the purchase, so that the purchasers had the fullest information upon which to make an informed decision regarding the purchase of a residential condominium unit in this project.

[para185] By not disclosing all of this, he concludes, YHL breached the duty it owed to the purchasers and such breach renders the Agreement of Purchase and Sale voidable at the purchaser's option. [para186] Counsel on behalf of the vendor, Mr. Richardson distinguished Newrey, Remai, Terrace Construction, and Trendsetter on several bases. He pointed out that in each of these cases relied on to establish a fiduciary duty between the condominium developer and the purchaser, the purchasers were seeking to have their rights under the condominium legislation recognized. The unit holders were seeking to have their rights to the common elements upheld by having transactions which deprived them of some portion of the common elements set aside. They were seeking to have their contractual rights enforced. Thus a fiduciary duty was found to exist so that the developer was found to hold items that were part of the common elements in trust for the unit holders. In the instant case, the purchasers seek to impose a broad fiduciary duty to disclose information on a continuing basis commencing at the point of sale. This duty is immeasurably broad and difficult to define. The cases do not support the proposition advanced by the purchasers. Those decisions, he submitted find a duty to be present in those fact specific situations. They have no parallel to the facts of this case.

[para188] Counsel for the vendor relied on the decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Litwin Construction (1973) Ltd. v. Pan (1988), 52 D.L.R. (4th) 459 (B.C.C.A.). That case involved a 33 unit townhouse complex which was purchased as an income tax shelter. The relationship between the parties was promoter/investor. After the transaction was started the rental housing market deteriorated and the real estate market suffered a sharp decline. The investors refused to complete. The investors claimed that the promoter failed to disclose certain information about the investment, such as the requirement for a prospectus under the real estate legislation. The Court held that no fiduciary duty was owed by the promoter to the investor. Fiduciary duties should only be found to exist in limited circumstances, and only rarely in commercial relationships. The Court discussed the nature of a fiduciary relationship at pages 473-74:

The highest standard is the fiduciary standard. It arises where the obligation that is undertaken or imposed is the obligation of loyalty or selflessness arising from the fiduciary having entered a relationship where the other party is entitled to expect that the fiduciary will act in the other party's interests, or in the interests of both parties (where those interests coincide), to the exclusion of the fiduciary's own separate interests (where those interests are opposed), and where the fiduciary has the power to affect the other party's interests in a legal or practical sense, giving rise to a position of vulnerability in the other party.

[para189] As with those decisions relied upon by Mr. Fine, the Litwin decision is readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In Litwin the parties were in a commercial, promoter/investor, relationship which renders the decision of limited applicability. Although some of the purchasers in this matter may have been investors embarking on a commercial transaction, there were also those who were buying a family home. These were not purely commercial transactions, as was the case in Litwin. The general caution expressed by the Court regarding the high standard applicable to a fiduciary and that it should only be applied in limited circumstances is noteworthy, but, on its facts it lacks any parallel to the present case as support for the contention that no fiduciary duty exists here.

[para192] There can be no doubt that there is a need to protect potential purchasers in condominium transactions, especially where the units are purchased while the building is at its conceptual stage. The developer is the party in the preferred bargaining position. The purchasers enter into this environment with some uncertainty. They may not get precisely what they had in mind because things change during the construction of a building. The amendments to the Condominium Act were introduced to address problems faced by purchasers because of the inequality of bargaining power and to protect them from unscrupulous developers. The Act provides a comprehensive scheme designed to protect consumers. On the facts of this case, to go outside of that scheme and impose a broad fiduciary duty is not justified. The courts have seen fit in limited, well defined situations, within the rights conferred by the Act, to impose such a duty. In those cases the purchasers were seeking enforcement of rights provided by the Act. Here, the purchasers seek to establish rights beyond those provided in the Act. No authority has been proffered by the purchasers to support this extension and I decline to do so.

[para194] The developer was not a fiduciary in these circumstances. Even if the developer was a fiduciary, there was no material non-disclosure, therefore there was no breach of the duty. Counsel for the purchasers stated that the test to determine materiality in the context of fiduciaries is the same as in the context of statutory disclosure requirements. Given the discussion of that in the previous section, my findings concerning materiality there are dispositive of the issue here. In addition, to find that an ongoing duty to disclose information as it arises would place too onerous a duty on a developer, both in terms of uncertainty and impracticality.

C. ISSUE NO. 3: DID THE DEVELOPERS OFFER A CLEAR TITLE TO THE PROPERTY?

[para195] The crux of this issue is whether the three agreements which were registered on title, the Environmental Agreement, the Confirming Agreement, and the Assumption Agreement, constitute encumbrances on title which are not "permitted encumbrances" within the meaning of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. It is submitted, by counsel for the purchaser, that they are and, hence, the developer failed to deliver clear title to the property, contrary to the agreement, giving the purchasers a right to rescind. In addition, Mr. Fine argued that the purchasers were under no obligation to object to title pursuant to the requirements of the agreement because there was nothing the developer could do to remove the agreements from title.

[para196] The clause which is said to constitute an encumbrance is the save harmless clause in which the condominium corporation agrees that it:

shall indemnify and save York Humber harmless from all losses, claims, actions, damages and liability in connection with the duties and obligations to be performed by the corporation under the Environmental Agreement.

The relevant clause in the Environmental Agreement states that YHL agrees:

to indemnify and save the City harmless from any claim of any nature whatsoever, including costs, whether involving property damages or bodily injury including death or both resulting from this Agreement, or arising from any approvals to construct the Proposed Development or the use of the lands for the Proposed Development.

This imposes broad liability on the condominium corporation. The fact of its existence is evidence of the need for it. There is a danger, albeit remote, that methane will enter the building and that there will be harm as a result of it. Given the seven levels of protection, however, it is highly unlikely that anything would occur. Still, it is argued, the possibility exists.

[para197] Counsel for the purchasers argued that the agreements were encumbrances because they imposed obligations against the owner of the lands, including financial obligations, exposing the owner to potentially wide and unlimited liability. Moreover, they released rights against both the City and YHL which may otherwise have been available and potentially beneficial. In support of his argument counsel referred to several cases wherein a court found that an agreement was an encumbrance.

[para198] In response to the argument made on behalf of the purchasers, counsel for the vendor stated three propositions:

1. the agreements do not constitute an encumbrance;
2. if the agreements are an encumbrance, they are permitted encumbrances; or
3. even if they are encumbrances and are not permitted encumbrances, the purchasers should have objected to title within the required ten day period.

[para199] The meaning of "encumbrance" is contained in the Condominium Act at section 1(1) which states:

"encumbrance" means a claim that secures the payment of money or the performance of any other obligation, and includes a charge under the Land Titles Act, a mortgage and a lien.

It was argued for the purchasers that the agreements constitute an obligation and thus fall within the definition of encumbrance in the Condominium Act. Counsel for the vendors argued that the agreements do not impose any new obligation on the condominium corporation or the purchasers. Although the case law presented examining the meaning of encumbrance is not useful in determining whether these particular agreements are encumbrances, I am of the view that these agreements constitute an encumbrance within the meaning in the Condominium Act.

[para200] I am, however, of the opinion that they are permitted encumbrances within the meaning of that term as found in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The relevant portions of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale are:

C.15(2)

Title Matters

...

(2) Permitted Encumbrances:

The Purchaser shall:

(a) accept title to the Unit and to the Condominium subject to any mortgage referred to in subparagraph C.15(4) and the following:

(i) the provisions contained in the Condominium Documents;

(ii) all registered or unregistered subdivision, development or site plan agreements with any one or more of The Corporation of the City of York, The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto or any other governmental authority having jurisdiction over the Unit and the Condominium, or any municipal by-laws affecting the Unit and the Condominium;

(iii) easements, rights-of-way, licences or agreements for the installation and maintenance of public or any other utilities, including without limitation, telephone and cable television and otherwise as may be required by the Vendor to service the Unit or any other part or parts of the Condominium;

(iv) agreements which may be necessary for the operation of the Condominium, the administration of the affairs and carrying out of the duties and obligations of the Corporation; and

(v) all leases, service or maintenance contracts and licence rights to occupy portions of the common elements, if any, which are in accordance with the Condominium Documents;

(b) satisfy himself as to the due compliance with the provisions of any such agreements, instruments or matters referred to in subparagraph (a) and not require releases of the Unit or the Condominium with respect thereto; and

(c) whether before or after the Closing Date, assume or accept, or permit, grant or consent to, whatever rights or easements shall be required for telephone, cable television, utilities, municipal or other services and utilities provided that such do not materially adversely affect the use of the Unit by the Purchaser as a private residence.

(3) Title to Unit:

Provided that the title to the Unit is good and free from all encumbrances except as described in this Agreement, and except for any restrictions or covenants registered on title, provided the same are complied with, and except for the restrictions, conditions, and covenants set out in the Condominium Documents; title shall be examined by the Purchaser at his expense and he shall not call for the production of any title deed or abstracts, proof or evidence of title, or any copies thereof. The Purchaser shall be allowed until 10 days after notice has been given by or on behalf of the Vendor (which notice shall also stipulate the Closing Date, which shall be a Business Day occurring not less than 10 days nor more than 120 days after the date on which such notice was given) to the Purchaser of the registration of the Creating Documents to examine such title at his own expense and if within that time he shall furnish the Vendor in writing with any valid objection to title which the Vendor shall be unwilling or unable to remove and which the Purchaser will not waive, this Agreement shall, notwithstanding any intermediate acts or negotiations in respect of such objections, be terminated and the Deposit, but not any Occupancy Fee, shall be returned, and the Vendor shall have no further liability or obligation and shall not be liable for any costs or damages. Save as to any valid objection so made within such time, the Purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to have accepted such title. [emphasis added]

The agreements in issue are clearly development agreements and operational agreements and thus "permitted encumbrances" for the purposes of clause C.15(2)(a)(ii) and (iv) of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Dr. Brown's evidence is clear that the content of the three agreements in question is commonly incorporated into one development agreement. These obligations commonly flow through to the condominium corporation, Mr. Beatty affirms. Thus, the mere fact that the agreements stand alone in this case does not mean that they are not development agreements for the purposes of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The MOE refers to these Agreements as development agreements and YHL is referred to in them as the developer. The methane gas system is an operating system in the building.

[para201] It was argued on behalf of the vendor that, even if these agreements were encumbrances and they were not permitted, the purchasers did not requisition information and object to title within the 10 day period specified in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Counsel for the purchasers argued that he was not required to object within the time period because there was nothing that could be done by the developer about the agreements. He also urged that one does not have to object within the requisition period in these circumstances in order to have a valid objection to title. In support of this proposition, counsel referred to Brown v. Laffradi, [1961] O.W.N. 263 (H.C.) which states that, if there is a latent defect in title then, even if the requisition is made after the required time has elapsed, it is a valid objection. At page 264 Justice McLennan said:

In my opinion it is clear on the evidence that while the requisition was late in point of time, no objection was taken on that ground and the right to raise it was waived by the solicitors for the vendors: Re Marchmont Co. & Midanik, [1947] O.W.N. 363. In any event the defect was latent and the objection to title whether made within the time stipulated or not is valid: Re Mountroy Ltd. & Christiansen, [1955] O.W.N. 318, affirmed 540. The defect is not a trivial one in my opinion, even although the amount of land involved is exceedingly small. The purchasers ought not be compelled to purchase a property which might involve them in a legal proceeding.

The problem in Brown was that the main wall of the building extended 4 inches over a right of way conveyed to the adjacent landowner. Due to this problem the bank would only advance the mortgage funds when the problem was corrected. Therefore, although this involved an "exceeding small" piece of land, it was a flaw in the title which had immediate ramifications on the purchaser's ability to get financing. It is clearly distinguishable from this case.

[para202] Based on the evidence and arguments put before me I find that these agreements are encumbrances within the meaning of the Act. They are, however, "permitted encumbrances" under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Finally, the purchasers did not object to title within the requisite period of time and, if these were encumbrances which were not "permitted", the purchasers would not now be in a position to object to title.

D. MISCELLANEOUS ISSUES OF LAW

1. Duty to disclose arising from status of a vendor of real property

[para203] Counsel for the purchasers argued that YHL had a duty to disclose the methane gas system as a vendor of real property. Counsel stated that the vendor of resale property has a duty to disclose a potentially dangerous situation to a proposed purchaser even if the potential danger does not constitute an immediate risk or hazard to the owners. A vendor has a duty not to conceal a potentially dangerous situation. For support of this proposition counsel referred the court to the decision of Sevidal v. Chopra (1987), 64 O.R. (2d) 169. In that decision there was radioactive soil in the backyard that did not pose an immediate danger but it had the potential of being dangerous. The court held that the vendors had the duty to disclose this fact to the purchasers.

[para204] The Sevidal decision is very different from the facts of this case. It dealt with a serious health risk; radioactive soil. Although not an immediate danger because buried, if the soil was disturbed it would proved to be dangerous. Evidence of the seriousness of the situation is that the government was planning to dig out all of the radioactive soil and ship it to a special disposal site. In addition, in Sevidal the court found that the vendors concealed the information about the soil and they were held liable in deceit. In the case at bar, although the purchasers were not told of the potential methane gas problem, the developer did work within the requirements of the government agencies to minimize the chances of it ever being a problem. There is no evidence about active concealment and there is no claim that YHL should be held liable in deceit. Radioactive soil in the backyard is a far cry from small pockets of methanogenic soil in one part of the property which will likely never reach the inside of the building because of the system in place.

[para206] A recent decision of Mr. Justice McCombs was referred to called Godin v. Jenovac, (October 27, 1993), [unreported] (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)). This decision, like Caleb, dealt with a residential sale and methane gas. In Godin, the purchasers went to the vendors house, told the vendor that they lived in the area, and bought the house. These purchasers then found out that there was a large landfill site very close to the house which required an active gas control system and was monitored on a regular basis. In fact, this landfill site had been a domestic garbage dump. Prior to the execution of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale there was an explosion on the perimeter of the site, about one quarter of a mile from the house, which injured two people which may have been caused by methane gas leaking from the site. There had, however, been no evidence of any migration of the gas from the site. Mr. Justice McCombs decided that the properties had not suffered a loss in value by reason of their proximity to the landfill sites. In addition, he concluded that there was no practice within the real estate industry to disclose the proximity of the landfill sites. Relying on Marathon Realty Co. Ltd. v. Ginsberg (1981), 18 R.P.R. 222 (Ont. H.C.), aff'd (1982), 24 R.P.R. 155 (Ont. C.A.) Mr. Justice McCombs said, at 13:

Even if a circumstance such as the proximity of the landfill sites might have a negative effect on the value, there is no general duty to disclose unless there is a health or safety risk.

He stated further that there was no evidence that the proximity of the landfill site posed a health hazard or other danger and there was no evidence from which it could be concluded that the proximity of the landfill site had a negative effect on the value of the property.

[para207] Mr. Beatty testified that he was unable to evaluate the risks inherent in methane gas given his limited knowledge of the site. Moreover, he acknowledged that there was no evidence to suggest that the building was uninhabitable or that there was any danger of harm or injury. This coincides with the testimony of Dr. Brown. Based on these two experts' opinions, therefore, there is no evidence that there are any immediate or potential health and safety risks at the River Ridge project resulting from the nature of the site.

[para208] I agree with counsel for the vendors that there was no obligation by YHL as the vendor of real property to disclose the methane gas system.

2. Misrepresentation

[para209] Counsel for the purchasers argued that there were material misrepresentations made by YHL that led the purchasers into executing the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. In particular, the written submissions on behalf of the purchasers stated:

1. that there would be floor to ceiling glass and floor to ceiling sliding glass doors leading out to the sun rooms;
2. "the spectacular glass walled rotunda includes an indoor sunken skylit swimming pool and lavish roman whirlpool". In fact, the pool does not fit this description and has no skylighting whatsoever and is not a swimming pool, but a wading pool being approximately three feet deep;
3. pedestrians walking on sidewalks or footpaths to and from the condominium project to the adjacent parkland. There are no such walkways;
4. the sales brochure indicates that the property of the condominium project has no barrier between it and the Humber River. In fact, there is a wire fence that surrounds the project, and but for two gates, completely obstructs any access from the condominium project to the adjacent parkland.

[para210] In addition to the above complaints, counsel for the purchasers stated that misrepresentations were made to one of the individual purchasers, Mr. Vecchione. These allegations are dealt with below in the section dealing with the individual purchasers.

[para211] Counsel for the purchasers asserted that, where there have been material misrepresentations a purchaser is entitled to refuse to complete their agreement of purchase and sale or, alternatively he or she is entitled to an abatement or damages as a result of the misrepresentations. He stated that an innocent misrepresentation is made when a party to a contract induces the other party to enter into the contract by false representation of material facts. A party who entered a contract on the basis of an innocent misrepresentation has a right of rescission because he or she did not get what was bargained for. In addition, counsel for the purchasers argued that the purchasers were under no duty to investigate. [para212] In response to this argument counsel for the vendor submitted that clause C.29 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is a complete answer. The relevant portion of that clause states:

C.29 Interpretation, etc. - ... The purchaser acknowledges that he has read the entire offer including Schedule A, B, C, D and E. There is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this Agreement, the Building, the Condominium or the Unit, except as set forth herein and in the Condominium Documents and no promise or representation by any sales person or in any sales brochure shall be of any effect except as aforesaid... [emphasis in original]

It was submitted, therefore, that the purchasers cannot complain of any representations made orally by the sales representatives or in the sales brochures. The vendor was bound only to provide that which was in the relevant schedules. Even if the purchasers could rely on those representations, it was submitted that these were not material misrepresentations that induced the purchasers to enter into the contract. It was argued that there was no evidence that it was not possible to swim in the pool; that the lack of skylights meant it was dark; or that the view or lighting in the individual units was obstructed because the windows did not start exactly at the floor. In addition, counsel argued that the evidence was that there were gates conveniently placed in the perimeter security fence providing access to the parklands. Every resident had a key to the gates.

[para213] Clearly, the purchasers did not give this project a chance. They did not attend at the building on their dates of occupancy. They lacked actual knowledge of the nature of the completed development. The building manager, Mr. Lamrock, on the other hand, was there and related details about the status of the building on or about the occupancy dates. He explained that the amenities were functional, security was in place, some common areas were not quite finished but, generally, everything promised was there. Mr. Lamrock was a forthright and direct witness. He had an intimate knowledge of the development at all times material to this proceeding. I find his evidence to be credible. For these reasons, where there are conflicts between the evidence of the individual purchasers and that of Mr. Lamrock, I prefer Mr. Lamrock's evidence.

[para216] The advertising material stated that the pool would be skylit. It is not. It does, however, have a bank of south facing windows and none of the purchasers complained that there was a lack of light in the pool area. In addition, clause C.29 prohibits the purchasers from relying on this as a misrepresentation. In any case, it is not material. I find that the purchasers were not induced to enter the contract on the basis of these representations.

[para217] The purchasers complained that the sidewalks and walkways that were promised were not present when they saw the building. There was no evidence that after they saw the building these walkways and sidewalks were not installed. Even if the sidewalks and walkways were never installed I do not view this as a material misrepresentation.

[para218] The purchasers complained that there was no access to the parklands or the river from the building site because of a fence erected around the site. Mr. Lamrock testified that there is a fence but there are gates. At the relevant time purchasers were provided with keys for the gates so that they could use them freely. Access was not, therefore, barred. I find that there was no misrepresentation with respect to access to the park.

[para220] The complaints made about the general condition of the building were based on inspections which took place prior to the completion of the building. Clause C.29 bars the purchasers from relying on representations made other than those contained in schedules A, B, C, D, and E. Even if the foregoing items were found to constitute misrepresentations they were of such minor nature as to be insufficient to be considered material so as to warrant rescission or damages. Given the nature of this development I am not convinced that there were misrepresentations and the purchasers' claims in this regard must fail.

C. Inadequate Pleadings

[para221] Counsel for the vendor argued that the pleadings delivered on behalf of the purchasers did not plead fiduciary duty with sufficient clarity with the result that this could not be relied on at trial.

[para222] The pleadings provide the particulars of fiduciary duty asserted without saying expressly that breach of fiduciary duty is being alleged. In the prayer for relief, however, damages for breach of fiduciary duty are sought. The relevant paragraphs of the Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim are:

1. THE PLAINTIFFS CLAIM: ...

IN THE ALTERNATIVE

d. damages against the defendant York Humber Limited for breach of contract, breach of common law warranty, breach of statutory duty, misrepresentation and for breach of fiduciary duty in the amount of $100,000 with respect to each plaintiff

...

DUTY TO DISCLOSE METHANE GAS VENTILATION INTERCEPT SYSTEM

19. The defendant, as vendor and as the developer/declarant of this residential condominium project, owed a continuing duty to fully and accurately disclose to the plaintiffs:

a. that the land upon which the condominium project was to be built and the land adjacent to it, was at one time, a sewage treatment facility and landfill site, which if built upon, would necessitate the installation of methane gas ventilation intercept system, and the possible adverse consequences thereof;

b. that there was a possible danger of methane gas leakage into the building, ignition and explosion, thereby rendering the building potentially dangerous;

c. that the Province of Ontario and the City of York required the installation, maintenance, testing and monitoring of a methane gas management system for the collection, venting and detection of methane gas;

d. the existence and terms of agreements providing for, inter alia:

i. the installation, maintenance and monitoring of a methane gas intercept ventilation system;

ii. the assumption by the future condominium corporation of the provisions of an agreement made this 6th day of September, 1988 between York Humber and the City, which agreement was registered in the Land Registry Office for the Registry Division of Toronto Boroughs on September 26, 1988 as Instrument No. TB 543180 (the "Environmental Agreement"), as a condition of condominium approval;

iii. the indemnification and saving harmless of the defendant by the future condominium corporation from all losses, claims, actions, damages and liability in connection with the duties and obligations to be performed by the Corporation under the Environmental Agreement; and,

iv. the release of the defendant from its obligations under the Environmental Agreement.

e. that it would cause the future condominium corporation to be created upon the registration of the Lands of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, as amended:

i. to assume and be bound by the provisions of an agreement made this 6th day of September, 1988 between York Humber and the City, which agreement was registered in the Land Registry Office for the Registry Division of Toronto Boroughs on September 26, 1988 as Instrument No. TB543180 (the "Environmental Agreement"), as a condition of condominium approval;

ii. to indemnify and save York Humber harmless from all losses, claims, actions, damages and liability in connection with the duties and obligations to be performed by the Corporation under the Environmental Agreement, and that the defendant would be released from its obligations under the Environmental agreement upon so doing.

20. The defendant breached this duty by failing to disclose these matters to the plaintiffs. Consequently, the plaintiffs were entitled to treat the agreement as not binding on them and are entitled to the relief sought.

In addition, soon after the trial started, Mr. Fine presented Mr. Richardson with a statement of issues clearly setting out the characteristics of a fiduciary relationship, that it was being asserted here, and that he was seeking damages for breach of fiduciary duties. The book of authorities prepared on behalf of the purchasers clearly contained the leading cases on fiduciary duty. At all times counsel for the vendor was clearly aware that this argument would be made.

[para223] Counsel for the vendor was not justified in making this argument and it must fail.

V. PURCHASERS [para224] Common issues relating to the purchasers have already been dealt with above. All that remains to be dealt with are issues unique to the individual purchasers.

[para225] All of the purchasers testified that they expected to buy a condominium which coincided with the advertising materials. That is, a luxurious condominium with features including a beautiful view of the river and park, 24-hour security, recreational facilities and floor to ceiling windows. Most had general complaints about the fact that the windows were not floor to ceiling, the pool was only three feet deep, and access to the park was obstructed by a fence. These general complaints were dealt with above under the "Misrepresentation" heading.

A. CATHERINE DEBOURNET

[para226] On October 23, 1988 Catherine deBournet made an offer to purchase Suite 106S for $258,700 which offer was accepted by YHL on November 1, 1988. Mrs. deBournet was told by the sales representative that the suite had a nice view of the park and the river. The sales representative also showed Mrs. deBournet the location of her unit on the floor plan at the sales office. At the same time, her husband Mr. deBournet, bought a unit in the same complex.

[para227] Mr. deBournet inspected, together with a family friend Lysanne Boyer, the premises on Mrs. deBournet's behalf on January 15, 1991 and had three major complaints:

1. the closet in the third bedroom was not deep enough for clothes hangers;
2. one bathroom door opened inward rather than outward; and
3. the view of the river and park was blocked by pillars.

Mrs. deBournet was never inside the unit and did not witness these deficiencies herself.

[para228] The developer was advised of these complaints and responded as follows:

1. the closet was constructed pursuant to the architect's plan and there was nothing that could be done with it; 2. the bathroom door would be corrected to open outward; and
3. the pillars were an integral architectural feature and had always been part of the development, that were illustrated in the design presentation drawings and project model.

[para229] The solicitors for YHL took the position that Mrs. deBournet was required to take occupancy on the date provided. Mr. Deo, acting for Mrs. deBournet, wrote to YHL in February of 1991 and stated that when the closet and bathroom are repaired his client will move in. It was not possible to repair the closet and there were no further communications between YHL and Mrs. deBournet until she brought an application to determine her rights under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale in August of 1991.

[para230] Lysanne Boyer, who is an architect and consultant engaged in the construction industry, testified that the view was only obstructed by the pillars in one of three rooms with windows overlooking the river and valley. She also admitted that the unit was habitable despite the complaints regarding the closet and bathroom door.

[para231] Mr. deBournet admitted in cross examination that if the deficiencies were repaired they would consider closing the transaction and they were prepared to negotiate an abatement to account for the pillars.

[para232] The deBournets purchased two units. One unit was supposed to be for them to live in while the other was for their teenaged son who could not remain at home because he did not get along with his brother but they wanted him living close by. In 1988 the son was 15 years of age. The combined purchase price of the units was approximately $600,000. The combined occupancy fees were $8,000 per month. The deBournets' combined income at the time was approximately $110,000. The deBournets had previous experience in the condominium market having sold another unit prior to occupying it. Mr. deBournet was employed by a bank and had done research into the condominium market.

[para233] The explanation regarding the reasons for purchasing the unit are untenable. The assertion that this was purchased for their personal use is not substantiated. The cost involved exceeded their ability to pay. The occupancy date had never been changed by YHL. The unit was habitable. It is clear from all the evidence that this was a speculative venture. In my view the circumstances surrounding the deBournets' personal finances and the fact that the decline of the condominium market reduced the value of the unit, were the sole motivating factors in Mrs. deBournet's refusal to close. The objective was to extricate from an ill advised business venture. Therefore Mrs. deBournet is obliged to complete the Agreement of Purchase and Sale with YHL.

B. KIMBERLEY BAIRD

[para234] Mr. Baird made an offer to purchase Suite 503N for $187,000 on June 25, 1988. The offer was accepted on July 4, 1988. At the time he entered into the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, Mr. Baird was an associate real estate broker.

[para235] Mr. Baird was a forthright witness who admitted that he purchased the unit as a speculative venture. After taking occupancy he rented the unit to a tenant. He was aware that the value of the unit had deteriorated due to the falling condominium market from the time that he had entered the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. He had other involvement in the condominium market buying units as investments. He was a knowledgeable investor.

[para236] All of the issues on which Mr. Baird relies to extricate himself from the Agreements of Purchase and Sale are common issues that are discussed above. Mr. Baird, therefore, given the reasons above, is obliged to complete the Agreement of Purchase and Sale with YHL.

C. JOAN AND GIULIO CEOLARO

[para237] Mr. and Mrs. Ceolaro made an offer to purchase Suite 1611S for $207,900. This offer was accepted on August 9, 1988.

[para238] Mr. and Mrs. Ceolaro secured this unit for their daughters and their husbands. In addition the two couples held another unit. The daughter, Francesca Pintucci was a forthright witness who admitted that the units were purchased to live in over the short term but as an investment in the long term. She and her husband lived in the unit from December 1990 to September 1991. They closed on the other unit which they subsequently sold. Mrs. Pintucci admitted that the unit was habitable when she inspected it. Mrs. Pintucci stated that the existence of the methane gas system was the most important reason for not closing the transaction. This statement must be viewed in light of the fact, however, that the two couples closed on the other unit.

[para239] On the evidence no valid basis was established for refusing to complete the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and these purchasers are obliged to do so.

D. TASSO ERACLES

[para241] Mr. Eracles was a reliable witness. He is a property manager who purchased the unit as an investor. He testified that he was aware that the real estate market was falling. He completed the occupancy closing in January 1991 and rented the unit to a tenant. Mr. Eracles testified that the unit was habitable. There were some minor problems but not enough to keep him from closing. He said that he would have closed had he been able to obtain an abatement. In fact, he instructed his solicitors to seek an abatement of the purchase price.

[para242] Given the evidence it is clear that the only issues concerning Mr. Eracles are those which are common to all purchasers. He is, therefore, obliged to complete his Agreement of Purchase and Sale with YHL.

E. PAUL DELLACAMERA

[para243] Mr. Dellacamera offered to purchase Suite 503S for $192,000 on June 30, 1988. On July 4, 1988 the offer was accepted.

[para244] Mr. Dellacamera's main complaint had to do with the ongoing construction with respect to the common elements on the occupation date. It was admitted that the interior of the unit was in satisfactory condition for occupancy. It was also admitted that he was aware that the condominium market had fallen by the fall of 1990.

[para245] Mr. Dellacamera had an occupancy date of November 8, 1990. He refused to move in given the condition of the common elements. This date was, therefore, extended to November 12, 1990 at which point he refused to move in. An extension to November 28, 1990 was granted to which neither Mr. Dellacamera nor his lawyer responded. He knew he was in breach of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale not to take occupancy. In February of 1991 he decided not to complete the agreement because he felt he was being asked to take possession of a premises which, in his opinion, were not finished yet he was not prepared to close when he knew everything was completed. He, therefore, commenced an application seeking a declaration that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was not binding on him.

[para246] Mr. Dellacamera made no effort to inspect the project common elements at the occupancy date. He knew there was an occupancy permit and that other purchasers were moving in. Mr. Lamrock, the property manager for the project, testified that safe, unimpeded access was available. Mr. Dellacamera put forward no valid reason for refusing to complete the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and he is obliged to do so.

F. STELLA GUIDA

[para247] Ms. Guida made an offer to purchase Suite 903N for $181,000 on June 25, 1988. On July 4, 1988 the offer was accepted. At the time Ms. Guida was a title searcher for Goodman & Carr. Ms. Guida claims she had no general knowledge that the real estate market was declining. She admitted, however, that she knew that her unit had decreased in value between 1988 and 1991.

[para248] Ms. Guida was originally scheduled to inspect her unit on November 15, 1990 and to take occupancy on November 22, 1990. On November 17, 1990 she inspected her unit and made a list of deficiencies. As a result of the inspection, the inspection and occupancy dates were rescheduled for November 29 and December 6, 1990. Subsequently the dates were rescheduled for December 8 and 12, 1990. On December 8, 1990 Ms. Guida, again, inspected her unit. She said that little had changed from the first inspection and she left a list similar to the first one prepared. Ms. Guida agreed that most of the items on the list were finishing items.

[para249] The law clerk at McCarthy Tétrault and the law clerk at Goodman & Carr arranged a new occupancy date of January 21, 1991. Ms. Podlesny, the law clerk at Goodman & Carr agreed that this new occupancy date had been set. Just prior to this date, Ms. Guida was on vacation. She returned on January 21, 1991 and was, then, advised of her occupancy date. Ms. Podlesny attempted to schedule another inspection with Toni Menna at YHL. This task was never completed and a new occupancy date was never set. No further steps were taken to arrange an inspection. Ms. Guida's file was transferred to the litigation department of Goodman & Carr in early February 1991. There was no further correspondence between Ms. Guida and YHL until Ms. Guida's solicitor, demanded the return of her deposit by letter dated April 18, 1991. The reason stipulated in the letter was that the vendor defaulted by failing to substantially complete the unit within the time period in the agreement. Ms. Guida agreed that she did not know what state her unit was in at the time the letter was written because she had last inspected on December 8, 1990. A letter dated April 25, 1991 was written by McCarthy Tétrault which stated that on January 16, 1991, Ms. Podlesny had been advised that the deficiencies in Ms. Guida's unit had been rectified and it was ready for occupancy. Neither Ms. Guida nor her solicitors responded to this letter.

[para250] Ms. Guida stated that she did not close for several reasons including the existence of the methane gas system, the fact that it was not a luxury building, the recreational facilities did not exist, etc. She agreed, however, that in the April 18, 1991 letter her solicitor only alleged that the unit had not been substantially completed.

[para251] As previously mentioned, Ms. Guida conducted a sub-search near the end of November 1990 and discovered the Environmental Agreement. Her concerns about the information in that agreement were not communicated to YHL until the letter dated October 4, 1991 from Mario Deo to YHL.

[para252] In view of the testimony of Ms. Guida and Ms. Podlesny, as well as the other evidence before me, I find that Ms. Guida was not justified in breaching the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. There was no evidence that, on January 21, 1991, the unit was not substantially complete and the other complaints regarding the building had not been rectified. In addition, it would appear that Ms. Guida did not want to close in that she made no real effort to re-inspect as she was required to do. I do not accept her stated motive for not closing. Accordingly, Ms. Guida is obliged to complete her Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

G. JOHANNE AND MICHAEL GUIDA

[para253] Mr. and Mrs. Guida made an offer to purchase Suite 1703N for $188,000 on June 25, 1988. The offer was accepted on July 4, 1988. Mr. and Mrs. Guida claim that they purchased this unit as a residence.

[para254] Five weeks prior to the purchase of the River Ridge unit Mr. and Mrs. Guida purchased a condominium unit at the Park Mansion for $263,650. The combined price of this unit and the one in issue is $451,650. They purchased the Park Mansion unit as a residence also but Mrs. Guida testified that they planned to sell it after they purchased the River Ridge unit. Mr. and Mrs. Guida, at the time had a combined family income of approximately $70,000.

[para256] On November 21, 1990, Mr. and Mrs. Guida signed an exclusive listing agreement with Winick Realty Corp. to list their unit for sale for $217,800, almost $20,000 more than the purchase price.

[para257] The main basis on which the Guidas seek to avoid the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is their claim that they were not provided a copy of the condominium disclosure statement at the time of entering the Agreement of Purchase and Sale or, for that matter, since then.

[para258] The Guidas claimed that a solicitor, Mr. Donnelly, was acting for them in the purchase transaction and that they left all of their documents with his receptionist after receiving them at the sales centre. Mr. Donnelly did not indicate that the condominium documents were missing.

[para259] Mr. and Mrs. Guida claim that they never received the condominium documents. They claim that they did not know, until they met with their new solicitor, Mr. Deacon, around March of 1991, what a disclosure statement was, that they were supposed to have received it when they signed the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and, that they had a statutory right of rescission. These purchasers stated that YHL was not notified, until March 1991, that they had not received the condominium documents. Mr. Deacon wrote, in a letter to McCarthy Tétrault, that Mr. Guida told him that because of the hectic atmosphere at the sales office and the large number of purchasers, the vendor's representatives had run out of copies of the disclosure documents and were unable to provide them with them. This was the first day of the sales campaign on which it is suggested that copies had run out.

[para261] The Guidas' evidence is that they did not read the documents provided carefully; did not know what a disclosure statement was and yet they were sure that they had not received one; and, that the vendor had run out of copies. They had, just prior to this transaction, purchased another condominium and received a disclosure statement. In the present transaction they had delivered the documents to their solicitor as they had the Park Mansion documents and neither they, nor their solicitor, noted the absence of the statement. Mr. Donnelly, the solicitor, did not testify.

[para262] Considering all of the evidence of these purchasers, I cannot accept their evidence that they did not know what condominium documents were, the significance of them, or that they were supposed to receive them. I do not accept their evidence that they did not receive the condominium documents. I draw the inference that they received the disclosure statement and delivered it to Mr. Donnelly. It may not have been with the documents when they were transmitted to their new solicitor.

[para263] Accordingly, I must find that Mr. and Mrs. Guida breached the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

H. LOUIS NEMES

[para264] Mr. Nemes made an offer to purchase Suite 604S on June 19, 1988 for $191,000. This offer was accepted on July 4, 1988.

[para265] Mr. Nemes claims that he purchased this condominium as a residence for he and his wife and that they planned to sell their family home of 30 years and move into the Suite. Mr. Nemes entered into three other agreements for units in the River Ridge complex. He signed the agreements for Suite 2009 for which title was taken by his daughter. He signed the agreement for Suite 1909 for which title was taken by Angelo Maiolo. He assumed an agreement for Suite 406 for which title was taken by his wife on closing.

[para266] Mr. Nemes has extensive experience in purchasing real estate in Toronto. He has been involved in the purchase and construction of modular homes, the purchase, renovation, and resale of residential homes, and the purchase of condominium units as long-term investments. At the same time that he entered into the River Ridge agreements, for example, he and his wife entered into three Agreements of Purchase and Sale for units at the Liberty on Bay project. His son purchased a unit in a separate deal.

[para269] Mr. Nemes stated that he decided not to close the deal after he found out about the methane gas system. Regardless of this information, however, his daughter, wife, and son closed their deals on the Suites in their names. The reason they closed is that they were able to get a 15% abatement. Mr. Nemes stated that he was willing to close provided an abatement was obtained.

[para270] Mr. Nemes was, obviously, an investor who speculated on the purchase of this unit. If an abatement was offered he claims he would have closed. He claims that the general complaints about the building were not the reason for not closing. I must find, therefore, that he was not justified in breaching the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

I. VENANZIO VECCHIONE

[para271] On June 28, 1988 Mr. Vecchione made an offer to purchase Suite 2004S for $210,500. The offer was accepted on July 4, 1988. On June 28, 1988, Mr. Vecchione also entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale for Suite 705 for $116,500. He bought this unit as an investment and subsequently closed the transaction.

[para273] Mr. Vecchione had three main complaints about his suite:

1. it was too hot;
2. the window frames were the wrong colour; and
3. the windows were leaking.

[para274] Mr. Vecchione's complaints with respect to the temperature of the suite stemmed from his claim that he was supposed to be able to independently control his heating and the cooling system in his suite and that the slanted windows in the sunroom and living room heat up the suite.

[para275] Mr. Vecchione expected the independently controlled heating and cooling system because of his visits to other condominium projects, his interpretation of Schedule "B" of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, and the representations of the sales representatives. Mr. Vecchione agreed, however, that of the three condominium projects he had been in only one had the type of system he referred to; the Agreement of Purchase and Sale does not stipulate that there will be a separate heating and air conditioning system for each unit, and the sales representative simply repeated the items set out in Schedule "B"; he did not complain about the heating in his other unit, and that the agreement says that the mechanical system will be insufficient to cool some units during certain times of the day due to prolonged penetration of sunlight.

[para276] Mr. Vecchione claims that he was never informed that the slanted windows would be installed in his unit although he agreed that they were shown in the sales brochure. In addition, he admitted that he was aware that clause C.9 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale provides that the vendor, without notice to the purchaser, can make changes to the plans and specifications provided the changes do not, in the aggregate, materially affect the size of the unit and substitute other items or materials for those provided for in the plans and specifications or in Schedule "B" provided that such other items or materials are equal to or better than the materials described in the plans and specifications or in Schedule "B".

[para277] Mr. Vecchione was advised by a representative of YHL to cover the windows and open some of them to alleviate the heating problem. Mr. Vecchione did this but did not cover the slanted windows. He said he was aware of the provision in the disclosure statement requiring unit holders to cover all the windows with coverings sufficient to interrupt sunlight. It was argued on his behalf that these slanted windows were skylights and that it defeats the purpose of a skylight to cover it with window coverings. In addition, the agreement refers to windows and doors, not skylights.

[para278] Mr. Vecchione complained about the window frames. He testified that in the dining room and bedroom they were beige while in the sunroom and living room they were white. An attempt had been made to paint the window frames in the dining room white but this did not work well. In the end, Mr. Vecchione claimed he ended up with window frames of three colours. Mr. Lamrock testified that, on inspection, the windows in the three rooms were the same colour. [para279] Mr. Vecchione said the windows in his unit started to leak in April 1991. The engineering firm and the contractor attempted to find and repair the problem. He said that the problems improved somewhat and that YHL agreed to address the remaining problems.

[para280] The construction placed on representations made by YHL concerning the heating and cooling of the units would require that the suites have individual heating and cooling devices. The evidence concerning the documents provided by the developer, the nature of the cooling and heating systems of the building, and the evidence of Mr. Vecchione, does not support this claim. Accordingly, I find that he breached his Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

J. PAULINE WAITE AND WILLIAM MCNABB

[para281] On July 4, 1988 Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb offered to purchase Suite 1703S for $203,000. This offer was accepted on July 6, 1988.

[para282] Ms. Waite testified that she purchased the unit as a long-term investment and as a residence for her mother-in-law. She intended to sell the unit in five to ten years for a profit. Ms. Waite testified that she was aware that the condominium market had dropped in February of 1991.

[para283] Ms. Waite stated that she expected the condominium to meet the expectations set out in the sales brochure and, in particular, she expected to be able to walk through the valley. Neither Ms. Waite nor Mr. McNabb inspected or took occupancy of their unit. In December 2, 1990 Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb attended at the site despite the fact that their inspection date was not scheduled until December 13. As a result of this visit they became aware that the floor to ceiling windows were not present, that a fence was in place outside the building, that there was no gatehouse and that the building was in no state to be occupied. They did not visit their unit on December 2, 1990. On that date, however, they signed an exclusive listing agreement to sell their unit and an exclusive listing agreement to lease their unit with Winick Realty Corp. The inspection dates were, subsequently, rescheduled for January 19 at which point Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb did not inspect nor did they complete the occupancy closing scheduled January 21.

[para284] Six letters were sent by YHL and McCarthy Tétraut without response from Ms. Waite and her solicitor Mr. Velanoff concerning the interim and final closing. Ms. Waite stated that two reasons for not closing were Mr. Winick's refusal to let her interview prospective tenants, and the information she received about the cultural background of certain tenants. She stated the information about the methane gas was also a factor in her decision not to close. On October 4, 1991 Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb, through their lawyer Mr. Deo, advised McCarthy Tétraut that they were not going to close the transaction and the reasons were listed.

[para285] Aside from complaints about the general condition of the building, Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb had few complaints; they never even saw their unit. One of Ms. Waite's reasons for not closing smacks of discrimination and sounds like it is contrary to human rights legislation; the other reason is the methane gas system which has already been discussed. I therefore find that Ms. Waite and Mr. McNabb breached the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. VI. DISPOSITION OF PURCHASERS' CLAIMS AND VENDOR'S COUNTERCLAIM

[para289] The methane gas system, with its seven levels of protection, is in place. The debate between the experts, Dr. Brown and Mr. Beatty, who were called to testify by the vendor and purchasers respectively, has narrowed to a difference as to the design of the system. Dr. Brown's design has received the approval of the MOE and the City. I am satisfied that the system is sound.

[para290] It is in this context that the purchasers assert a material non-disclosure, first regarding the condominium documents under the Condominium Act, and alternatively, on the basis of a broad fiduciary duty said to exist between developer and purchaser. These arguments are appealing conceptually. The essential underpinnings to support these assertions are, however, absent on the evidence before me. Hence I reject this line of argument.

[para291] More interesting is the submission that the development agreements, the Environmental Agreement and related documents, are encumbrances on title which the vendor, because of its contractual obligations, is unable to remove. Unfortunately for the purchasers, the vendor has a complete answer in that the development agreements are permitted encumbrances for the purposes of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale.

[para292] There are the several alleged material misrepresentations concerning the swimming pool, the floor to ceiling windows, etc. There is no evidence to establish these complaints, but in any event, the provision in the condominium documents regarding representations addresses this question conclusively.

[para293] This leaves only the individual purchasers' evidence which, instead of establishing their respective positions, in final analysis, proved the vendor's case. What emerged from this testimony was that the purchasers had no interest nor intention in completing their transactions. Strong indicia of this were refusals to inspect; refusals to respond to accommodation in the form of extended occupancy dates; in many cases an almost total absence of any knowledge concerning the unit; premature listing of the unit for re-sale; failure to communicate with the vendor or to follow up their complaints; a lack of knowledge of the factual basis for their complaints. The environmental issue was very much an afterthought.

VII. DAMAGES

[para296] The parties have agreed to the quantum of damages in the purchasers' worst case scenario. That is, where the purchasers are unsuccessful on every point and are found liable to the vendor for damages incurred as a result of the purchasers' breach of contract. There are, however, two remaining issues which require determination. These are mitigation and the applicable date of assessment.

A. MITIGATION

[para297] There are two issues related to mitigation. First, were the units listed for sale at an appropriate price? Second, should the units should have received special treatment in terms of marketing?

[para298] Counsel for the purchasers argued that the units were priced too high and, therefore, they did not sell. As a result, he asserted that YHL did not properly mitigate their damages because, if the units had been priced lower they would have sold more quickly so that the market decline would not have had such a marked adverse effect on the ultimate selling price of the units. Counsel argued that, because the units were overpriced there was a two year delay in the sale of the units because if they had been properly priced they would have sold a lot sooner.

[para300] I accept these submissions of counsel for the vendor.

[para301] The purchaser's counsel questions the manner in which the units were marketed by the agent. It is asserted that the units should not have been placed in the general pool with other units which the vendor had for sale. It was submitted that the resale units should have been given special treatment in terms of marketing emphasis. Counsel for the vendor replied by stating that there was no duty to treat the units in a special manner, all that was required was their best efforts to sell.

[para302] The duty to mitigate does not require that the vendor to use greater efforts to sell these units than it used to market other units in the building. I reject the argument of purchasers' counsel on this point.

[para304] For these reasons I find that YHL acted reasonably with respect to their duty to mitigate properly. There will be no reduction of damages on the grounds of a failure to mitigate.

B. DATE OF ASSESSMENT

[para305] The key to calculating damages in these circumstances is the determination of the relevant date for the assessment of the damages. Counsel for the purchasers argued that the date of assessment ought be to the date that the purchasers breached their agreements. Counsel for the vendors argued that the appropriate date is the date the units were sold or the date of trial for those units that were not sold.

[para306] Counsel for the vendor referred to decisions which stand for the proposition that, in a falling market, the appropriate date of assessment is the date of trial. These decisions are 100 Main Street v. W.B. Sullivan Construction Ltd. (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 401 (C.A.), Rice v. Rawluk (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 696 (Gen. Div.), Mid Park Construction (1988) Ltd. v. Krofchick (1992), 28 R.P.R. (2d) 80 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), and Wilcox Lake Enterprises Inc. v. Starr (1993), 30 R.P.R. (2d) 75 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)). These decisions reflect the policy that a wrongdoer should not benefit because of falling market conditions. Although, traditionally, the general rule has been that damages are assessed at the date of breach, it is stated in these cases that, where this rule would result in unfairness due to adverse market conditions, the assessment should be made at the time of resale or trial, whichever is first. Counsel for the vendor stated that in real estate matters, where there is a sporadic market, it is the norm to use the date of resale or trial to calculate damages.

[para307] These transactions occurred in a declining market. The appropriate date for assessment of damages, for the reasons provided in the authorities, is the date of resale or trial, if unsold.

VII. CONCLUSION

[para309] The methane gas system at River Ridge was designed by and constructed under the supervision of a leading expert in the field. The design of the system has withstood careful scrutiny. The system has received the approval of the Ministry of the Environment and the City of York. There is no danger to the safety and health of the inhabitants of the development. Methane gas has never been detected in the system or the building. In the final analysis, the system is no different from any other mechanical system in a large building.

[para310] The value of the condominium units has diminished in the period since the Agreements of Purchase and Sale were entered into in 1988. This is, unfortunately for the purchasers, the result of the recession and the vagaries of the real estate market.

[para311] In the result, the purchasers' claim for a declaration that the agreements of purchase and sale are not binding or, alternatively damages for misrepresentation are hereby dismissed. The vendor's actions for damages for breach of contract shall succeed.

[para312] I wish to express my gratitude to all counsel for the thoroughness of their preparation and the clarity of their presentation.

[para313] Counsel may attend, by appointment, to speak to costs.

Reasons for judgment were delivered by Finlayson J.A., concurred in by Labrosse J.A. Separate reasons were delivered by Weiler J.A.

[para1] FINLAYSON J.A.:-- The appellants, Cam-Valley Homes Limited and Cam-Valley Developments Ltd. appeal from the judgment of Madam Justice Epstein, dated June 10, 1999 in which she permanently enjoined Cam-Valley Homes Limited (successor in title to Cam-Valley Developments Ltd.) from developing for residential purposes certain lands adjacent to the condominium corporations Peel Condominium Corporation No. 447 ("PCC 447") and the respondent Peel Condominium Corporation No. 505 ("PCC 505"). PCC 505 cross-appeals from the trial judge's decision that the adjacent lands are not held in trust by Cam-Valley Homes for the respondent. The trial judge's reasons are reported at (1999), 28 R.P.R. (3d) 186.

Facts

[para2] At the return of the application in appeal on June 10, 1999, the condominium corporations sought a declaration that they were the beneficial owners of the adjacent lands registered in Cam-Valley Homes' name, and ancillary orders requiring the transfer of the disputed lands. It was common ground that the application could not deal with the damages claim, which was put over for a subsequent trial. In the absence of oral evidence the basic issue was the proper interpretation of the disclosure statement, declaration and reciprocal agreement and whether the adjacent lands were held in trust for the condominium corporations. A permanent injunction was neither sought in the notice of application nor argued in court.

The disputed lands

[para3] The adjacent lands that are in dispute comprise approximately two acres. They are referred to in the judgment as the Outdoor Recreation Area Lands ("ORA Lands"). The property makes up a part of Parcel Block II-1, Section M-199, in the City of Mississauga. Cam-Valley Homes is the assignee of these lands from Cam-Valley Developments.

[para4] PCC 447 is a high-rise, residential tower comprising 164 units. Cam-Valley Developments registered PCC 447 on October 3, 1991. PCC 505 comprises 56 townhouses adjacent to the property and in close proximity to PCC 447. Cam-Valley Homes finished PCC 505's 56 residential units in 1995. The units were sold between 1993 and 1994 and were registered on October 3, 1995.

[para5] PCC 447 and PCC 505 are part of an overall development: the Granite Gates Community in Mississauga. Between 1991 and 1993, the Granite Gates community was expected to comprise up to 750 units with a possible Outdoor Recreation Area ("ORA") consisting of four tennis courts, an outdoor pool and a putting green to serve the various residential projects within the Granite Gates community. Instead of the envisioned ORA, other recreation facilities have been provided for the Granite Gates Community.

Findings of the trial judge

[para6] These findings are clearly and succinctly set out in paragraphs 7 to 16 of the reasons. The trial judge found that this was a multi-phased condominium development, the concept being that each phase would be created as an independent condominium corporation with a different style and density, resulting in a unique urban community with a rural atmosphere.

[para7] The overall project was conceptualized and marketed as a woodland community with a recreation complex nestled among a grove of trees at its centre. Each condominium corporation would have an interest in, use of, and responsibility for, the ORA, which was to be conveyed to the condominium corporations when the last corporation was registered. The concept of an attractive wooded area centred around the ORA was used as a marketing tool by the developer. Purchasers relied upon representations made by the developer with respect to the overall nature of the development around the ORA.

[para9] PCC 505 objected to the proposed townhouse development in place of the ORA and attempted to preserve its rights with respect to the ORA Lands. With the prospect of initiating negotiations to resolve the dispute, Cam-Valley Homes razed the forest on the ORA Lands, precipitating the application in appeal. The trial judge found that damages would be wholly inadequate to compensate the respondents, not only for the loss of the wooded area which they believed would be part of their community, but also for the loss of enjoyment of the overall character of their neighbourhood.

Supplementary affidavits from unit owners

[para10] There is no affidavit in the record from any unit owner in PCC 447. PCC 447 has withdrawn from this appeal and abandoned its cross-appeal. In a letter to the Registrar of this court dated October 25, 2000, a new counsel for PCC 447 enclosed a notice of change of solicitors and explained that his client was only joined in the original application at the opening of the hearing below and did not take an active part in the proceedings. Another corporation, PCC 489, comprised of townhouses, had originally joined with PCC 505 in filing a caution with respect to this dispute but it has since indicated that it does not intend to pursue the matter.

[para11] The statements from PCC 505 unit-owners are very general. They state that some of them were shown a model of the development; some were told that the ORA Lands might be maintained as a preserve for wild life; some say they paid a premium for a townhouse adjacent to the ORA Lands; and others say they were told that there would be outdoor recreational facilities built on the lands in question. PCC 505's own witnesses concede that they understood the outdoor recreational facilities might never be built and there is no mention of any oral representation that the subject lands would be conveyed to PCC 447 or PCC 505 in the event that they were not used for the ORA.

[para12] An affidavit provided by Alfred Roberts is interesting. Roberts and his wife reside in one of the units in PCC 505. He is a retired architect and a former director on the board of PCC 505. His affidavit is evidence of the residents' lack of interest in the ORA. In fact, his affidavit suggests that there is support to scrap the recreation centre plans in favour of building $500,000 homes because the high quality of the housing development proposed for the property will enhance the present value of the condominium units. Roberts indicates that he had no interest in seeing the recreation centre built because "the maintenance costs would be unreasonable and divisive." He relays his understanding from the various salespersons for the developer that "it was unlikely that the outdoor recreation area would be built, in particular because the residents in the high-rise [PCC 447] which had already been completed were reluctant to participate in the costs associated with such a recreation area."

[para13] Roberts goes on to suggest that the board of PCC 505 has pursued a risky and expensive strategy that is detrimental to all PCC 505 unit-owners. Roberts' cross-examination by opposing counsel on his affidavit did not attack any of the above statements.

Analysis

[para14] The affidavit evidence of representations made by salespersons regarding the conveyance of the ORA Lands is of little assistance in this case. There is no serious suggestion that the representations were false at the time they were made. All indications are that the developer intended to go through with a much grander scheme but market forces compelled it to undertake a more modest development. Any representations that were made could only serve to concentrate the attention of prospective purchasers on the disclosure documents required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 and its amendments, wherein the developer's obligations with respect to the ORA Lands are set out in detail. For the purposes of this case, they are the Disclosure Statement, the Proposed First Year Budget, the Proposed By-Law No. 2 (Reciprocal Agreements) and the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

[para15] The Disclosure Statement for PCC 447 was used as the model before the trial judge and in this court. It places PCC 447 in Phase I and proposes that Cam-Valley Homes construct up to seven more condominium corporations in later phases. The Disclosure Statement then states that the construction timetable for future phases will be totally at the discretion of the declarant and that the declarant does not warrant that any phases will ever be constructed except for PCC 447. If the other proposed phases are not built, the common expenses for PCC 447 may increase in the future. The key clause for our purposes is:

The Declarant intends that the Proposed Corporations will all be operated and managed in a manner of co-operation between the Proposed Corporations. Each of the Proposed Corporations will be given a proportional interest (based on the number of dwelling units in each Corporation) as tenants in common in the outdoor recreation area to be constructed on Block II, Plan M-199, as outlined in this Disclosure Statement .

Precisely where on Block II of Plan M-199 the ORA is to be located is nowhere delineated on any drawing or in any document.

[para16] The Disclosure statement and related documents provide for the construction of "common facilities" and the execution of a "Reciprocal Agreement" for the sharing of the costs of the common facilities and the Gateway Entrance by the corporations. There is a description of the facilities that are to be built on the ORA Lands with the proviso that they will not be built until after the Terraced Apartments are built and in the event that they are not the ORA may never be constructed. The Terraced Apartments were not built.

[para17] The Proposed First Year Operating Budget states that the ORA may be constructed on Part Block II, Plan M-199 "if, and when the last Phase is constructed". It states unequivocally that "[t]he Declarant is under no obligation to complete the Outdoor Recreation Area".

[para18] The Proposed By-Law No. 2 (Reciprocal Agreement) deals with four common facilities: the Gateway Entrance, shared common element areas, outdoor road network and the ORA, collectively the "Common Facilities". Article 4.03 provides:

In the event that Cam-Valley does not proceed with the construction and registration of all Proposed Corporations or does not construct any of the Common Facilities contemplated herein, then this Agreement shall be deemed to be amended to delete references herein to any Common Facilities not constructed and Cam-Valley shall be under no obligation to construct or create same or shall Cam-Valley suffer any liability with respect thereto.

[para19] The Agreement of Purchase and Sale also contains a significant clause in "Schedule F - Phased Developments". Schedule F is an integral part of the agreement. It says:

The purchaser acknowledges that the Vendor and/or its successors and assigns and/or any related companies may in the future construct another building or buildings on parts of the Lands and the Purchaser agrees not to object to such construction nor deem such construction as an inconvenience or nuisance, or make a claim for damages or injuries or otherwise. The Purchaser hereby consents to any re-zoning required by the Lands in order for the Vendor to proceed with its future plans and hereby agrees not to object to any re-zoning and Committee of Adjustment applications brought by the Vendor. [Emphasis added.]

[para20] The agreement also defines "Lands":

3. a. "Lands" means that that certain parcel or tracts of lands and premises in the City of Mississauga described as part of block HH and II, Registered Plan M-199, Mississauga.

[para21] And the agreement contains the standard clause:

38. It is agreed that there is no representation or warranty other than as expressed herein in writing.

[para22] After reviewing these documents in detail, the trial judge concluded that the developer did not have to convey the ORA Lands to the condominium corporations until the ORA was completed and that the developer was under no obligation to construct an ORA of any nature on the Lands. She also said (at para. 39) that only if the ORA was built would there be an obligation on the developer to convey the ORA Lands:

The documents, if read with care, also contain provisions to the effect that only if the [ORA] is built would [Cam-Valley] have to convey the Lands to the participating condominium corporations.

[para23] In the next paragraph the trial judge refers to the arguments of PCC 505 as an "attempt to counter the logical conclusion based on this wording (that they are not entitled to a conveyance of the [ORA] Lands) by relying on the principles set out in Middlesex Condominium Corporation No. 87 v. 600 Talbot Street London Ltd. (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 22 (C.A.)." At para. 42, the trial judge recites the submissions of counsel for PCC 505 that the documents in issue "clearly describe the [ORA] as part of the common facilities of the development and that reasonable purchasers would justifiably assume that the centre would be built and that the Lands would be conveyed. As such, following the lead of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Middlesex, the Declarant should be required to do just that."

[para24] In response to that submission, the trial judge recognized that in Middlesex the trial judge made a "strong finding" that there was an original intention that the asset in question (a superintendent's suite) would be one of the common elements. She then stated "I am not in a position to make such a finding in relation to the [ORA]".

What is of particular interest is that in Newrey Wilson J.A. described the position of a developer, once sales of units started to take place, as follows:

I think he has placed himself in a fiduciary relationship to the unit purchasers not only with respect to their units but also with respect to the interest appurtenant thereto. He therefore holds the property in trust for the unit purchasers, present and prospective, and for the condominium corporation which will come into being upon registration of the declaration. I believe he is under a duty to protect the interests of all unit owners present and prospective and cannot put his own interests in conflict with theirs even although he himself continues to be an owner as long as any units remain unsold.

[para26] The trial judge sums up Middlesex and Newrey by stating that while they stand for the proposition that a declarant is bound not to prefer its interests over those of the unit owners, the Court of Appeal has made it clear that the starting point must be the reasonable intention of the parties based on the evidence. She then concludes at para. 47 with the following remarks:

I have found that the evidence in this case does not support a finding that the Declarant intended that the purchasers believe the [ORA] was to be built and that the Lands would be conveyed and that a reasonable purchaser would assume that such would be the case.

[para27] The trial judge should have ended her analysis right here. Up to this point, she was correct. Instead, she commenced a fresh analysis based on the lack of clarity in the documentation. She stated that her findings above do not extinguish the rights of PCC 505 and PCC 447 because she finds that with two exceptions "the various documents do not contain any terms under which the Developer reserves to itself the right to build on the Lands if it abandons its plans to build [the ORA]".

[para29] This is strange language. It suggests that Cam-Valley was attempting to conceal from prospective purchasers that it intended from the outset to develop the lands in question for a use other than an ORA. The history of the Granite Gates Community and the earlier findings of the trial judge belie such a conclusion. There is no suggestion that the developer was other than genuine in its original intention to build an ORA although its scope had not been settled. There is no evidence that the developer was acting in bad faith in reconfiguring the project because of market considerations over which it had no control. Whatever the frailty of language in the disclosure documents, it is clear to me that the language which is presently so controversial was designed to alert prospective purchasers that if the ORA did not go forward, the developer could use the lands for further development.

[para30] Accepting for the purpose of this analysis that the wording in the disclosure documents is ambiguous as to the status of the ORA Lands if they were not developed as originally planned, this ambiguity cannot support an action for specific performance or for an injunction. On any construction of the language, the affirmative obligation to convey the ORA Lands to the participating condominium corporations only arises in the event that the ORA is constructed. The ORA was not built and it is clear from the Budget and the Reciprocal Agreement that the developer was under no obligation to do so.

[para31] It must be remembered that the ORA Lands were not part of the land belonging to the condominium corporations. We are not dealing with a straightforward designation of common elements as in Middlesex and Newrey. The ORA Lands were retained by the developer and were to be conveyed to those condominium corporations that wanted to enter into a reciprocal agreement for sharing the costs of the construction of the common facilities and the carrying charges on the completed ORA. Where, as the trial judge found, the land did not have to be conveyed to the participating condominium corporations because the ORA was not going forward, the developer was free to deal with the ORA Lands as it chose. The affirmative obligation to convey the ORA Lands to participating condominiums no longer existed. Nothing further had to be said or done to enable the developer to retain title to the vacant land. It was only because the developer required a modification of the zoning to build additional units that it had the purchasers of qualified units agree in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to any re-zoning required by the ORA Lands. This was included in order for the developer to proceed with its future plans without objection to re-zoning and Committee of Adjustment applications brought by the developer. The purchasers also agreed, interestingly enough, "not to object to such construction nor deem such construction as an inconvenience or nuisance, or make a claim for damages or injuries or otherwise".

Finally, I turn to an important point that, in my view, can clearly be made by the facts of this case. It is based on the vulnerability of the purchaser in the course of a purchase of a condominium unit from the Developer. The point is that a developer should not be allowed to rely on obscure or unclear contractual provisions in the condominium documentation in such a way as to defeat the reasonable expectations of the purchaser. Such would be contrary to the principles of good faith and fair dealing between contracting parties, contrary to the consumer protection objectives of the Act and to the developer's fiduciary obligations to purchasers of units. [Emphasis added.]

[para34] I do not believe that this accurately sets out the relationship in law between the developer and the purchasers of condominium units to the extent that the passage can be taken to say that there is a fiduciary relationship between a developer and a prospective purchaser of condominium units. A prospective purchaser cannot be the fiduciary of the developer in any accepted equitable sense; otherwise the developer could not negotiate with the buyer at all. Furthermore, the trial judge's emphasis on the Condominium Act as having "consumer protection objectives" does not reflect the balance that this court has said exists between that goal and the commercial realities of the condominium industry. The basis of the relationship is set out more accurately by Robins J.A. for this court in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120. He held on behalf of the court at p. 145:

While I may generally agree with the learned judge's critique of the legislation, I am unable to accept his approach to the current disclosure requirements. In my respectful opinion, this approach fails to construe s. 52 in a manner that properly balances consumer protection and the commercial realities of the condominium industry and, if adopted, would require a disclosure document incompatible with the underlying aim of the section.

[para35] The objective of consumer protection is attained by the requirement of full disclosure under s. 52 of the Condominium Act and must be seen in the context of the full disclosure package. As Robins J.A. stated at p. 145:

The vagueness of the requirements and the absence of statutory guidelines mandate a broad and flexible approach -- not a rigid or stringent one -- in determining whether a given disclosure statement is adequate. As I indicated earlier, the disclosure statement cannot be viewed as separate from and unrelated to the other documents called for by s. 52(6) and (7); it must be seen in the context of the entire disclosure package. The narrative section of the disclosure statement can realistically be expected to do no more than highlight or summarize the most important features of the condominium documents and assist purchasers in comprehending those documents by directing them to the full text.

He said at p. 136:

These disclosure provisions must of course be given a construction consistent with their consumer protection objectives. However, in judging the adequacy of the disclosure for the purpose of deciding whether an agreement is binding, the rights of both parties to the agreement must be taken into consideration. The purchaser is clearly entitled to the information called for by the Act in order to make an informed decision about his or her condominium purchase. At the same time however, once the 10 day period has expired, the vendor is entitled to assume that it has a binding agreement of purchase and sale and to rely on the certainty of that agreement in developing the project and conducting its business affairs.

[para37] The trial judge does not have any difficulty accepting that the general law of real property applies to condominiums. She relies on Wilson J.A.'s comments in Newrey at p. 467:

It would be wholly unreal to view those transactions as agreements for the sale of separate pieces of real estate. I think [the court] must also look to the general law of real property as to the status of a purchaser once his offer has been accepted. I do not think the position of the owner/developer remains unchanged after he starts to sell units. I think that at that point he has committed the character of the project to that of condominium under the Act and declaration.

[para38] However, to the extent that Wilson J.A.'s statement can be read along with her earlier statements in Newry to hold that the developer is in a fiduciary relationship with prospective unit holders, this position is unsupported by the general law and is contradicted by recent decisions: see Simone v. Daley (1999), 170 D.L.R. (4th) 215 (Ont. C.A.); and see generally Martel Building Ltd. v. Canada, [2000] S.C.J. No. 60, 2000 SCC 60. I think that the weakness of the trial judge's analysis is that she fails to draw a bright line between the status of the respective developer and purchaser prior to executing a binding agreement of purchase and sale and the obligation of the contracting parties to complete the closing of the sale in good faith.

[para39] The trial judge continues in her analysis by stating that "I start with the principle that contracting parties owe one another a duty to act reasonably and in good faith and to perform contracts honestly made". She relies on LeMesurier v. Andrus (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 1 at 7 (C.A.) where the court dealt with a dispute between a vendor and purchaser over the removal of an objection to title prior to the closing of the sale. The purchaser had complained that the private driveway was not fully within the property lines and the vendor, in response to a requisition on title had moved the curb of the driveway to a point within the property line and obtained a quit claim from the neighbour. However, the purchaser would not close and repudiated the contract. In an action for specific performance that was converted into an action for damages, Grange J.A. for the Court of Appeal held that the conduct of the purchaser was "capricious or arbitrary". He further stated at p. 7:

Vendors and purchasers owe a duty to each other honestly to perform a contract honestly made. As Middleton J. put it in Hurley v. Roy (1921), 50 O.L.R. 281 at 285, 64 D.L.R. 375 at 377: "The policy of the Court ought to be in favour of the enforcement of honest bargains".

[para40] LeMesurier is referred to by Robins J.A. in the same context at p.136 in Abdool. However, the concern in LeMesurier was with the parties' conduct in performing an executory contract: one already made. The trial judge appears to have taken this authority a step further by applying the principles in LeMesurier to the pre-contractual phase of the parties' relationship and, in particular, to the time that the agreements were being prepared by the developer.

This notion that the developer has an obligation to incorporate all the purchasers' "reasonable expectations" into the disclosure documents is unrealistic and unsupported by authority. LeMesurier does not decide that arm's length parties owe each other a duty of good faith during the bargaining phase of their relationship. In fact, there is supporting case law that there is no duty to bargain or negotiate in good faith: Mannpar Enterprises Ltd. v. Canada (1999), 173 D.L.R. (4th) 243 at 265-267 (B.C.C.A.) and Weiss v. Schad, [1999] O.J. No. 4356 at para. 123 (Sup. Ct.). As Iacobucci and Major JJ. Stated for the court in Martel Buildings, supra, at p. 24:

As a final note, we recognize that Martel's claim resembles the assertion of a duty to bargain in good faith. The breach of such a duty was alleged in the Federal Court, but not before this court. As noted by the courts below, a duty to bargain in good faith has not been recognized to date in Canadian law.

The developer has the resources to craft a carefully written series of documents and insert in the mass of inter-related clauses any contingency or qualification upon which it might later want to rely. The purchaser, who is entitled to rely upon the developer's obligations of good faith and fair dealing and upon the purposive application of the Act, cannot be expected to invest the amount of resources necessary to decipher the intricacies of the voluminous documentation that is fundamental to the relationship between the developer and the purchaser.

The element of trust that the prospective purchaser is entitled to have in terms of the fairness of the developer's drafting of the documents that record the transaction between the parties is in keeping with the fiduciary relationship identified by Wilson J.A. in Newrey. It follows that the purchaser is entitled to expect that if the developer wants to reserve certain material matters to its own unqualified discretion, such reservations must clearly and distinctly be set out in the documents.

[para42] Despite the fact that the trial judge had expressly found that Newrey did not apply to the facts of this case, she relied upon the good faith principle therein. Unfortunately, as with LeMesurier, she took the principle a step too far by applying it to the pre-contractual phase of the parties' relationship, i.e., before any sales of units have taken place.

[para43] In my respectful opinion, the fiduciary aspect of the relationship between a developer and the purchasers of units is not fully understood. The developer does not hold the condominium property in trust for the purchaser of the unit, it holds the title to the unit in trust for the prospective purchaser who has executed an agreement of purchase and sale to purchase a unit. The developer's good faith obligation, or duty, is to carry out the terms of the agreement and deliver whatever title the contract between the parties calls for. This obligation or duty is circumscribed by the documentation required by the Condominium Act. The purchaser, for his or her part, has an equitable interest in the unit by virtue of the agreement that is signed; an equitable interest that equity will enforce by specific performance. However, there is no overarching fiduciary duty arising out of the relationship of a vendor and purchaser as such. The suggestion by the trial judge that a prospective purchaser is entitled to repose some element of trust in the developer that it will deal with the purchaser's reasonable expectations in the disclosure documents introduces an element of paternalism that is totally unjustified in such a relationship. As I have indicated, the protection of the consumer rests with compliance by the developer with the disclosure provisions of the Condominium Act. It is inappropriate to refer to the unit holder as a fiduciary in any circumstance. The prospective purchaser is protected by the statutory requirement of full disclosure, not the extension of fiduciary principles to the bargaining process. After executing an agreement of purchase and sale, he or she is entitled to rely on the good faith of the developer to carry out the agreement honestly.

[para44] In Simone, supra, this court dealt with a sale of a house where the vendor became bankrupt and the deal could not be completed. The trial judge held that the vendor had been acting in "a fiduciary capacity" and that his breach of the agreement of purchase and sale constituted a "misappropriation" and "defalcation" under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. In reversing the trial judge, Blair J. sitting ad hoc and speaking for the court said at pp. 222-223:

The relationship between the parties was that of vendor and purchaser, and in my opinion the existence of such a relationship does not, in itself, give rise to fiduciary duties. Nor does the fact that the vendors and purchasers happened to be friends, elevate the relationship to a fiduciary level. The normal contractual relationship between a vendor and purchaser is not characterized by the reposing of a trust or confidence by one person in another and a consequent dependence resulting therefrom, which the authorities indicate give rise to a fiduciary duty. It is true that the vendor acts as trustee of the title for the purchaser pending completion of the transaction. However, to the extent that there may be an obligation of the vendor "to take steps to deal with the title in a manner harmful to the purchaser's beneficial interest", as the trial judge concluded, it is only in the sense of an obligation to be in a position to deliver title on closing. Breach of the obligation to convey the title, on tender of the purchase price at closing, is remedied by damages, or, in appropriate circumstances-because of the equitable requirement to hold title-by the equitable remedy of specific performance. There is no need to resort to the fiduciary concept. [Emphasis added.]

[para45] The trial judge accepted that there was no basis upon which she could order the appellants to convey the ORA Lands to PCC 505. However, she was sympathetic to the respondent and elected to grant a remedy that the respondents did not ask for and which the remaining respondent PCC 505 does not consider to be adequate. Indeed, I believe it is an undesirable remedy from the standpoint of all parties. If the appellants were obliged to convey the ORA Lands under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, they would be entitled to receive a Reciprocal Agreement whereby the respondent corporation would be obliged to contribute to the carrying costs of the ORA Lands. By simply freezing the lands with an injunction, the trial judge denies the use of the ORA Lands to all parties. The appellants cannot build on it and would have considerable difficulty in selling it. The remaining respondent may have succeeded in preventing further development of the ORA Lands, but it has no right to use them nor has it any say in their maintenance.

[para46] Injunctions are not intended to be punitive. The applicants sought an interim injunction to maintain the status quo while its rights were adjudicated. This made sense, but they are clearly not happy with the status quo as a permanent solution.

[para47] I think the error in this case was in the attempt to fashion an ad hoc remedy in equity where there was a perception that the language of the documentation under s. 52 of the Condominium Act constituted inadequate disclosure. However, the remedy for inadequate disclosure in an appropriate case is either rescission or damages. The language of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale does not constitute an obligation to convey the ORA Lands in the circumstances that prevailed here. It is not the function of the court to replace the absence of an obligation with a remedy based on an unstated expectation of the purchaser grounded on some result driven concept of equity. As Blair J. stated in Simone at p. 224:

A fiduciary obligation must be grounded in the nature of the relationship which exists between the parties, however, and not on the result in law or equity which it is sought to reach. The courts have cautioned against this latter approach and the resort to what has been referred to as "false indicators of a fiduciary relationship", one of which may be the presence of conduct which attracts judicial sanction: see Hodgkinson v. Simms, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 377, 117 D.L.R. (4th) 161, per Sopinka J. and McLachlin J., at p. 463.

[para48] Rescission was not asked for in these proceedings and since the claim for damages is not before us, I decline to make any comment as to its appropriateness.

Disposition

[para49] For the reasons set out above, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment below and enter a judgment dismissing the application with costs. I would dismiss the cross-appeal. I would award the costs of the appeal and cross-appeal to the appellants.

FINLAYSON J.A. LABROSSE J.A. -- I agree.

[para50] WEILER J.A. (concurring in the result):-- I have had the benefit of reading the reasons for judgment of Finlayson J.A. I concur with his disposition but, with respect, I am of the opinion that the Developer owes a duty of good faith to the PCC 505 condominium owners.

I. OVERVIEW

[para52] Peel Condominium Corporation 505 ("PCC 505"), the respondent and appellant by cross appeal, claims that in its marketing and disclosure documentation the Developer represented that it would build recreational facilities on the ORA land and would then transfer the facilities and land to PCC 505 condominium owner and others. Consequently, PCC 505 seeks a declaration of title to the ORA land or its proportionate share. The Developer asserts that it was made clear to prospective purchasers that it was not obliged to build any recreational facilities on the ORA land and that only if the facilities were built did it have an obligation to transfer the ORA land. Epstein J. found for the Developer on these two points.

[para53] On appeal to this court, Finlayson J.A. agrees with these two findings of Epstein J. I am also in agreement with these two findings.

The purchaser acknowledges that the Vendor and/or its successors and assigns and/or any related companies may in the future construct another building or buildings on parts of the Lands and the Purchaser agrees not to object to such construction nor deem such construction as an inconvenience or nuisance, or make a claim for damages or injuries or otherwise. The Purchaser hereby consents to any re-zoning required by the Lands in order for the Vendor to proceed with its future plans and hereby agrees not to object to any re-zoning and Committee of Adjustment applications brought by the Vendor. [Emphasis added.]

I am of the opinion that Schedule F refers to those parts of the ORA land that the Developer had already disclosed it would be developing. Consequently, the agreement does not automatically reserve to the Developer the right to develop the ORA land in its own interests in the event that no recreational facilities are built.

[para56] If I accept Finlayson J.A.'s interpretation of Schedule F, however, I would nevertheless uphold Epstein J.'s imposition of a duty of good faith on the Developer. The imposition of a duty of good faith obliges the Developer to exercise its ownership rights with respect to the ORA land with candour and in a reasonable manner taking into consideration the interests of the PCC 505 condominium owners in having the land left in its natural state.

[para59] In the result, I agree with Finlayson J.A. that Epstein J. erred in granting a permanent injunction against the Developer and that it should be set aside. I would also refuse to grant PCC 505 an interest in the ORA land because I am of the opinion that, at this time, damages are an appropriate remedy. Although I concur that the appeal should be allowed, my basis for doing so is quite distinct from that of Finlayson J.A. and, for this reason, I have written this opinion.

II. ANALYSIS

[para60] It is helpful at this juncture to briefly review the first three findings of Epstein J. She found:

At para. 37: "While I find the wording of the contractual documentation to be confusing the repeated references to the uncertainty surrounding the construction of the Outdoor Recreation Area are sufficient to alert a prospective purchaser to the possibility that the development may include a recreational centre scaled down from that originally contemplated or may not contain such a facility at all."

Further at para. 38: " a reasonable purchaser knew or ought to have known that there was a possibility that there might never be a recreation centre on the Lands."

Consequently, Epstein J. held she was not in a position to make a finding that the ORA would be one of the common elements.

(2) In addition, at para. 43: " only if the Outdoor Recreation Area were to be constructed would the Developer have any obligation to convey the Lands."

(3) At para. 48: "With two exceptions the various documents do not contain any terms under which the Developer reserves to itself the right to build on the Lands if it abandons its plans to build an Outdoor Recreation Area I do not see how the wording of the documents permits the Developer to deny that the owners, present and prospective, have some interest in the Lands.

The clause that automatically amends the documents in the event that the Developer decides to change the nature of the project justifies the Developer in saying that it does not have to build but not that it can appropriate the Lands for itself. In short, I find that the Developer intended that the purchasers believe that the Lands would not be used for residential development and that a reasonable purchaser would assume that the Lands, if not used as a recreational facility, would not be otherwise developed." [Emphasis added.]

[para61] Epstein J. further stated at para. 53: "[The Developer] never intended a reasonable purchaser to conclude that it planned to develop the [ORA] Lands for use other than as a recreation facility". Epstein J. supported her third finding on the basis of a fiduciary duty owed by the Developer, as well as a duty of good faith, and in reliance on the consumer protection objectives behind the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1990, c. C-26 ("the Act").

[para62] As indicated, I agree with Finlayson J.A. that the first two findings made by Epstein J. are correct. My reasons will focus on her third finding.

A. Would a reasonable purchaser conclude that the ORA land would remain in its natural state if not developed as a recreational facility?

[para63] At para. 29, Finlayson J.A. finds that the language in the disclosure documents: "was designed to alert prospective purchasers that if the ORA did not go forward, the Developer could use the lands for further development." By this, he means all of the land, including the ORA land. This finding is based on his interpretation of two sentences found in Schedule F to the agreement of purchase and sale. These two sentences were the two exceptions considered by Epstein J. before making a finding to the opposite effect. In Schedule F, the purchaser first acknowledges that the vendor can construct other buildings on "parts of the `Lands'". "Lands" is defined to include all of the land for the project, including the land for the proposed ORA. Second, the purchaser agrees not to object to such construction or to any necessary rezoning.

[para64] Lands is defined as follows:

"Lands" means that certain parcel or tract of lands and premises in the City of Mississauga, in the Regional Municipality of Peel, described as Part of Block HH and II, registered Plan M-199, Mississauga. [See Note 1 below]

Note 1: The evidence filed in support of the application indicates that registered Plan M-199 was not included in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. In addition, the site plan purchasers received with their Agreement did not refer to Blocks HH and II.

[para65] Epstein J.'s interpretation of Schedule F is found in para. 51:

First, the provisions of the contractual documentation concerning the possible use of the Lands that if the Lands were developed at all they would be used for a recreation facility and the clause in schedule "F" of the agreement of purchase and sale together with that in the disclosure statement, are capable of reconciliation. These latter clauses make reference to the possibility that the Developer may, in the future, construct another building or buildings on parts of the Property. It seems to me that they could be interpreted as referring to those parts already identified by the Developer as intended for residential development. [Emphasis in original.]

[para66] In my opinion, Epstein J.'s interpretation of Schedule F that changes could be made to those "parts" of the property already identified for development accords with the general principles of contractual interpretation. In interpreting the wording of a document, the intention of the parties at the time the document was entered into is a factor to consider with respect to the construction to be placed on the wording of the document: see Chitty on Contracts, vol. 1, General Principles, 28th ed. (London: Sweet and Maxwell, 1999) at 604. When the purchase and sale of a condominium takes place, the expressed intention of the Developer concerning "recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply that to the provision of amenities" must be contained in the Disclosure Statement: see s. 52(6) of the Act.

[para67] The Disclosure Statement is intended to be a readable description outlining what is in the other documents:

Hidden Valley Condominiums Inc. v. Vercaigne (1997), 12 R.P.R. (3d) 227 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)). [See Note 2 below] The adoption of a contextual approach to the interpretation of schedule F also requires recognition that purchasers and their lawyers would normally expect a developer to comply with s. 52(6)(b). Therefore, any reservation of a right by the Developer to build on the ORA should be specifically disclosed in the Disclosure Statement. In order to ascertain the intention and expectations of the parties it is necessary to have regard to the Disclosure Statement in interpreting Schedule F. I recognize, however, that the question of whether the Developer is in breach of its statutory obligation of disclosure under the Act is not before us.

Note 2: Feldman J. held, on facts similar to the case at bar, that the Developer was in breach of its disclosure obligations pursuant to s. 52 of the Condominium Act. An appeal from the decision of Feldman J. was abandoned on February 21, 1998. In Hidden Valley, the plaintiffs were the developers, marketers and declarants of a resort condominium project that was located close to recreational facilities. The plaintiffs did not have control over those recreational facilities, but, through inter-corporate relationships, did have control over a hotel. The promotional materials for the condominium units indicated that the hotel was to be upgraded by the addition of an outdoor swimming pool and new boat docks facilities. Hidden Valley maintained that their intention was to build the second pool and docks, even though they were not technically obliged to do so. It was also their understanding that as the resort was zoned for commercial use, the units were not for residential purposes and accordingly, there was no need to provide a disclosure statement pursuant to the Condominium Act. However, based on legal advice as to an abundance of caution, the plaintiffs provided the purchasers with all the documentation required for residential units and in particular the Disclosure Statement as required by s. 52 of the Act. Because of the recession, occupancy of the hotel was down in 1991, and there was already a lot of construction on the site, so by the closing date they had not built the second pool. The plaintiffs then proposed offering the purchasers extra amenities and cash in lieu of constructing the second pool. Several of the purchasers wanted to rescind the contract on the ground that the disclosure statement was deficient regarding the pool, the boat docks, and access to the hotel facilities. When the purchasers failed to close, the plaintiffs sold the units to others at a considerable loss. The plaintiffs brought an action for damages for the losses sustained as a result of the defendants' failure to close.

[para68] The relevant portion of the Disclosure Statement provides:

The Declarant also owns the lands adjacent to the Phase IV Lands (Additional Property) and currently proposes to register pursuant to the Condominium Act on part of the Additional Property, up to three (3) more Condominium Corporations. The project is proposed to consist of three (3) highrise towers (Adjacent Corporations) containing 154 dwelling units (Phase I) now registered as Peel Condominium Corporation 447 (PCC 447); about 186 dwelling units (Phase II) proposed; about 280 dwelling units (Phase III) proposed, in addition to the 56 townhouses of Phase IV. The Declarant may increase the number of units to the allowable limit of the current zoning or rezoning of the site may be required in order to construct a different number of units proposed and the building types, sizes and heights proposed. The Declarant may reduce or increase the number of phases and/or combine two or more buildings into one (1) condominium corporation. In the event that the Vendor cannot sell any of the buildings as condominiums some of the future phases may be rental apartments or may be downscaled to lower density housing. The exact and the final number may be substantially more or less than indicated herein.

The Declarant also intends to construct a townhouse community (Phase V) located on Block OO which is situated on the North side of the Collegeway.

The Declarant reserves the right to combine any one or more proposed phases into one condominium corporation and to register them as such rather than register them as two or more separate condominiums.

The construction timetable for the other phases will be totally at the discretion of the Declarant and the Declarant does not warrant that any other phase will ever be constructed. The Declarant is under no obligation to complete any portion of the project other than Phase IV. If the other phases are not built, common expense payments for Phase IV may increase in the future. [Emphasis added.]

[para69] The Disclosure Statement describes lands adjacent to the Phase IV Lands as Additional Property on which the Developer proposes to build three more Condominium Corporations (Adjacent Corporations) and the references to zoning or rezoning of the site and changes in the density of development must be read in this context. A further townhouse community is projected on another part of the property, Block 00. The word "proposed" means "suggested" or "offered" for consideration: Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary, (New York: Grammercy Books, 1989) S.V. There is no suggestion of development on the ORA lands in the Disclosure Statement.

[para70] The Disclosure Statement makes reference to the Reciprocal Agreement to be entered into by the condominium owners. In the Reciprocal Agreement, Adjacent Corporations is defined as, "the highrise and/or townhouse buildings to be built on the Future Phase Lands and currently intended to be registered as condominiums". The word "currently" means "presently, at the moment": Webster's, supra, S.V.

[para71] The reference to "proposed phases" in the disclosure statement and to "highrise and/or townhouse buildings currently intended to be registered as condominiums" in the reciprocal agreement support the interpretation of Epstein J. that the "parts of the Property" described in the agreement of purchase and sale were intended to be land on which the Developer proposed to build at the time that the documents were signed. This was not the ORA land.

[para72] Where, as in Schedule F, the wording "parts of the Lands" is more general than the specific wording in other documentation, there is ambiguity. In such cases, the court is entitled to look to the surrounding circumstances in interpreting the wording of the document. Here, the surrounding circumstances include the oral or affidavit evidence of the parties concerning the circumstances under which the agreement of purchase and sale was signed. The evidence of the PCC 505 unit purchasers that the property was marketed as being centred around the ORA, an attractive wooded area, is uniformly consistent and unchallenged. Some purchasers were told that the ORA lands might be maintained as a preserve for wildlife; while other purchasers stated they paid a premium for a townhouse adjacent to ORA lands. As noted by Finlayson J.A. at para. 7, the "[p]urchasers relied upon representations made by the Developer with respect to the overall nature of the development around the ORA." Thus, part of the Developer's representation was that unit holders were buying an urban home with a wooded area at its centre. On part of the wooded area, according to the Developer, amenities such as tennis courts or a swimming pool might be built or they might not be built. Although it is clear the Developer would not be liable if it did not build the amenities, there is no suggestion that if the amenities were not built, the Developer was entitled to cut down all of the trees and build townhouses.

[para73] The sequence of events also confirms the interpretation given to Schedule F by Epstein J. PCC 505 was registered October 3, 1995. However, it was only in 1996 that the directors of PCC 505 were advised that the Developer's plans for the ORA had changed. Thus, it was only after the units in PCC 505 were marketed and sold that the Developer changed its mind and decided that the ORA land would be used to build an additional 25 townhouses. [See Note 3 below]

Note 3: Finlayson J.A. states at para. 8: "By the time units in PCC 505 were marketed and sold, the Developer decided that the recreational and social core of the development, the ORA, would be used for another townhouse development." It seems to me that the reasons of Epstein J. indicate the opposite. The Developer originally decided to build a series of condominium towers. However, in 1991, after PCC 447, the first tower consisting of 164 units dwelling was constructed, the Developer decided that instead of more towers, townhouse units would be built. PCC 489 registered May 22, 1994, comprised 24 townhouses. PCC 505, registered October 3, 1995, consisted of 56 townhouses. Another project of 34 townhouses, the fourth phase, and a second tower of 134 units, the fifth phase, were approved. The direction of the project changed to less towers and more townhouses prior to the building of PCC 505. The Developer did not, however, disclose its intention to build 25 townhouses on the ORA lands until after PCC 505 was marketed, sold and registered.

[para74] The wording of the Disclosure Statement and Reciprocal Agreement, the evidence of the purchasers with regard to the circumstances under which they entered into agreements to purchase, and the sequence of events, all support the interpretation placed on Schedule F by Epstein J. Undoubtedly, the reference to the right of the builder to change its plans concerning "parts of the property" was meant to be a reference to those parts already intended for development and reserved to the Developer flexibility concerning the mix or type of housing that was to be built on those parts. It was not intended to reserve to the Developer the right to develop and build on the ORA if no recreational facilities were ever built. Thus, while the words in Schedule F could be interpreted so as to bear the construction put on them by Finlayson J.A., I am of the opinion that the construction adopted by Epstein J. more accurately reflects the intention and understanding of the parties at the relevant time.

[para76] In accordance with her interpretation of the documentary evidence, Epstein J. made a finding that Cam- Valley "never intended a reasonable purchaser to conclude that it planned to develop the ORA Lands for use other than as a recreation facility". In other words, a reasonable purchaser would not have concluded that if the ORA was not built, the Developer could use the lands for its own profit as opposed to leaving them in their natural state. This finding is reasonably supported by the evidence and is entitled to deference. I would uphold it.

B. What is the basis for the imposition of a duty on the Developer to take into account the interests of the unit holders in PCC 505 in developing the ORA land?

[para78] Epstein J. rejected PCC 505's submission and held that as argued, the factual basis for the imposition of a fiduciary duty was lacking. She found that the Developer did not unequivocally represent that the ORA land would be proportionately transferred. It was only if the recreational amenities were built that the Developer had an obligation to convey the ORA lands and the Developer did say it might not build any recreational facilities. Epstein J. thus distinguished the decision in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458 (C.A.) on the factual basis that in that case there was a clear finding that the area at issue, a superintendent's suite, would form part of the common elements. She stated at para. 44:

The fiduciary argument as advanced by the applicants is similarly flawed. The authority relied upon of York Condominium Corp No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458 [See Note 4 below] also involved a superintendent's suite. The Court of Appeal found that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that there was a common intention that the suite would form part of the common elements of the corporation and that a prospective purchaser would be justified in assuming that the suite would be one of the common elements. The Court felt justified in overcoming the potential problems created by the actual registered title and ordered a conveyance of the suite of the corporation.

While the Middlesex and Newrey cases stand for the proposition that the declarant is bound not to prefer its interests over those of the group of unit owners, the Court of Appeal has made it clear that the starting point must be a finding as to the reasonable intentions of the parties based on the evidence.

I have found that the evidence in this case does not support a finding that the Declarant intended that the purchasers believe the Outdoor Recreation Area was to be built and that the Lands would be conveyed and that a reasonable purchaser would assume that such would be the case.

Note 4: This is a reference to Re Middlesex Condominium Corp. No. 87 and 600 Talbot Street (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 22 (C.A.). That case held that where the reasonable interpretation of the evidence is that, notwithstanding the registered title, the declarant intended a reasonable purchaser to believe, or to justifiably assume, that the disputed area (a superintendent's suite) was a common element or an asset of the corporation, the declarant will be required to convey the unit to the corporation. Section 52 of the Condominium Act did not change this common law right. The court also held that it is a question of fact whether the disputed area was intended to be part of the common elements.

[para79] Accordingly, Epstein J. was of the opinion that the factual basis for the imposition of a fiduciary relationship between the Developer and the unit holders of PCC 505 was lacking at this point.

[para80] However, Epstein J. states at para. 55:

an important point that, in my view, can clearly be made by the facts of this case is based on the vulnerability of the purchaser in the course of a purchase of a condominium unit from a Developer. The point is that a developer should not be allowed to rely on obscure or unclear contractual provisions in the condominium documentation in such a way as to defeat the reasonable expectations of the purchaser. Such would be contrary to the principles of good faith and fair dealing between contracting parties, contrary to the consumer protection objectives of the Act and to the developer's fiduciary obligations to purchasers of units. [Emphasis added.]

[para81] At this point in her reasons, Epstein J. had made a factual finding that the Developer intended a purchaser to believe, and reasonable purchasers would have believed, that if no recreational amenities were built, the ORA land would be left in its natural state. Based on her factual finding, she had a starting point in the evidence for considering whether the Developer could nevertheless ignore the interests of the unit holders of PCC 505. Epstein J. based the imposition of the Developer's duty not to prefer its interests over those of PCC 505 condominium owners on three principles: 1) a requirement of good faith and fair dealing between contracting parties; 2) the consumer protection objectives of the Act; and 3) the Developer's fiduciary obligations.

[para82] The imposition of a duty of good faith and a fiduciary duty are closely related. There is, however, at least one important difference. If, for example, A owes a fiduciary duty to B, A must act only in accordance with B's interests when A exercises its powers or exercises a discretion arising out of the relationship: see Newrey Holdings; Hodgkinson v. Simms (1994), 117 D.L.R. (4th) 161 (S.C.C.).

If, on the other hand, A owes a duty of good faith to B, A must give at least as much consideration to B's interests as it does to its own interests before exercising its power. Thus, if A owes a duty of good faith to B, so long as A deals honestly and reasonably with B, B's interests are not necessarily paramount: see e.g. Freidman v. Mason, [1958] S.C.R. 483.

1. The Developer's fiduciary obligations

[para83] Finlayson J.A. takes issue with the imposition of a fiduciary obligation on the Developer on the basis that it does not accurately set out the relationship between a developer and a prospective purchaser of condominium units. Epstein J., however, speaks of "purchasers" in her judgment and not prospective purchasers. As I have indicated, it was only after PCC 505 was sold that the Developer disclosed its intention to use the ORA for its own purposes. In any event, on the basis of Newrey Holdings, once the developer begins to sell units in the project, a fiduciary duty towards prospective purchasers can be imposed depending on the factual circumstances of the case.

[para84] In Hodgkinson at 174-75, the Supreme Court held that the existence of a contract does not necessarily preclude the existence of fiduciary obligations between the parties. In some cases, such as those involving principal and agent, the legal incidents of the contractual relationship give rise to a fiduciary duty. In others, by statute, agreement, or based on some unilateral undertaking, or, as in Hodgkinson, a representation that one party has an obligation to act for the other's benefit and cannot have regard to its own interests. Here, Epstein J. found that if no amenities were built, a reasonable purchaser would conclude that the ORA would not be developed but would be left in its natural state.

[para85] Whether or not a fiduciary duty exists is a question of fact: Hodgkinson; Lac Minerals v. International Corona Resources Ltd., [1989] 2 S.C.R. 574 at 648. Factors in the evidence that would support the imposition of a fiduciary duty on the Developer not to prefer its interests over those of the unit holders at this stage include:

1. the fact that the Developer had a discretion whether or not to build recreational facilities on the ORA;
2. the Developer exercised power and control over the ORA;
3. PCC 505 unit holders were obliged to rely on the Developer's discretion respecting the ORA after they purchased their units;
4. the credence and reliance the unit holders were likely to give the Disclosure Statement combined with what they were told at the time of purchase; and the Developer possessed information concerning the future development of the project not readily accessible to the PCC 505 purchasers.

[para86] Although Epstein J. mentions the Developer's fiduciary duties, she earlier rejected the existence of a fiduciary relationship in the circumstances of this case. The tenor of her reasons at paras. 56 to 59 leads me to conclude that she imposed a duty on the Developer not to act solely in accordance with its own interests on the basis of a requirement of good faith.

2. The duty of good faith

[para87] The Developer submits that no duty of good faith is owed to the condominium owners in PCC 505. Finlayson J.A. relies on Martel Building Ltd. v. Canada, 2000 S.C.C. 60. In that case, Iacobucci and Major JJ. commented at para. 73 that no overarching duty to bargain in good faith at common law has yet been recognized by Canadian courts.

[para88] Martel was concerned with whether there was a duty of good faith in pre-contractual negotiations. In Martel, it was contended that the Government of Canada, acting as a tender-calling authority, had a duty to bargain in good faith and was negligent in discharging that duty by not providing Martel, the bidder, with adequate information about the government's bargaining position respecting the renewal of a lease. Martel sued in tort. The Supreme Court reviewed a number of policy considerations that weigh against imposing a duty of care on parties negotiating a contract. First, the primary goal of negotiation is to achieve the most advantageous financial bargain. Second, economically efficient conduct could be deterred and, in some circumstances, is a valid rationale against extending liability. The Supreme Court stated at para. 67:

It would defeat the essence of negotiation and hobble the marketplace to extend a duty of care to the conduct of negotiations, and to label a party's failure to disclose its bottom line, its motives or its final position as negligent. Such a conclusion would of necessity force the disclosure of privately acquired information and the dissipation of any competitive advantage derived from it, all of which is incompatible with the activity of negotiating and bargaining.

[para89] Negotiations respecting the purchase of condominiums involve a very different atmosphere than the paradigm of a freely negotiated commercial contract between two equally sophisticated parties as in Martel. The developer is by statute mandated to disclose its "bottom line" because it is required to give full and accurate disclosure of information that a purchaser would regard as material to his or her decision to purchase in the Disclosure Statement.

[para93] If Finlayson J.A. is correct in his interpretation of Schedule F, that the developer would have a right to develop the ORA land, then the question that arises is whether the Developer is free to develop the ORA land without taking into consideration the reasonable expectations of the PCC 505 condominium purchasers concerning the ORA land the Developer engendered. The decision in Martel does not deal with the question of whether there is an implied duty of good faith on the parties in the performance of an existing contract.

[para94] That issue did, however, arise in three cases on appeal from the Quebec Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court. In the Civil Code context, the Supreme Court held that there was an implied duty of good faith: see Houle v. Canadian National Bank, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 122; Bank of Montreal v. Kuet Leong Ng, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 429; and National Bank of Canada v. Soucisse, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 339. The three cases, affirmed in Bank of Montreal v. Bail Ltée, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 554, deal with the interpretation of article 1024 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada as it existed at the time. Article 1024 simply stated:

The obligation of a contract extends not only to what is expressed in it, but also to all the consequences which, by equity, usage or law, are incident to the contract, according to its nature.

[para95] Equity may also be the foundation for an independent doctrine of good faith in the performance of a contract at common law. As noted by Grange J.A. in LeMesurier v. Andrus (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 1 at 7 (C.A.):

As Middleton J. put it in Hurley v. Roy (1921), 50 O.L.R. 281 at 285: "The policy of the Court ought to be in favour of the enforcement of honest bargains ". The approach may be merely an example of the development of an independent doctrine of good faith in contract law at least in the performance of contracts, one explicitly set forth in the American Uniform Commercial Code and in the American Restatement and exhibited, although perhaps in disguised form, in many English and Canadian cases - see the lecture of Professor Belobaba, Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada (1985), p. 73, particularly the examples set forth on p. 83 et seq. [Emphasis added.]

Note 5: An example of the application of the doctrine of good faith in disguised form is the decision of Grange J.A. in Steps Investments Ltd. v. Security Capital Corp. (1976), 14 O.R. (2d) 259 (H.C.J.). In that case, Grange J. held that the vendor ought to have brought to the attention of the purchaser the significance of a proposed change to an agreement for the sale of shares. At p. 272, he stated:

It is not unreasonable, in my view, in modern commercial relations, to require the parties, where an important amendment is being made, to ensure that knowledge of such amendment comes to the other side. I do not mean that a party must overcome obtuseness in his opposite number but he must at least give him a real opportunity to appreciate the change. And if the circumstances are such that the amendment might readily be missed he should be particularly reluctant to assume such knowledge.

Robins J.A., after reviewing this passage in Downtown Key West Development Corp. v. Massey Ferguson Industries Ltd. (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 327 (C.A.) at 338; leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused, [1996] S.C.C.A. No. 258, (1996), 96 O.A.C. 233, agreed with the approach of Grange J.A. on the basis of "equity and fair dealings".

[para96] Given the current state of the law, it is hardly surprising that the Supreme Court in Martel specifically left the question of the existence of an implied duty of good faith at common law in the performance of existing contracts to be definitively decided another day. The trend, as noted by the Supreme Court in Houle, is towards a just and fair approach to rights and obligations. Concurrent with this development is the requirement to exercise a contractual right with candour and in a reasonable manner based on an implied duty of good faith. [See Note 6 below]

Note 6: See The Hon. Justice Charles D. Gonthier, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity: The Forgotten Leg of the Trilogy, or Fraternity: The Unspoken Third Pillar of Democracy" (2000) 45 McGill L.J. 567 at 583-84, subtitled "Good Faith in Contracts".

[para98] In addition to a lack of bargaining power, the employee lacks the information necessary to achieve more favourable contractual terms. Iacobucci J. holds that the law ought to encourage the employers who exercise their right to terminate an employee to do so in a manner that minimizes the damage to the employee, both economically and in personal terms. To ensure that employees receive adequate protection from employers, Iacobucci J. holds employers to a duty of good faith and fair dealing in the manner they dismiss employees. Breach of this duty by conduct that is not candid or reasonable can be compensated for by adding to the length of notice the employer is obliged to give the employee upon termination.

[para99] Another relationship upon which the common law imposes a duty of good faith because of a disparity in access to information is that between an insurer and an insured. When an insured applies for insurance, it is really only the insured that is aware of certain information that is of critical importance to the insurer's assessment of the risk. The disparity in access to relevant and essential information led to the imposition of a duty of good faith on an applicant for insurance by requiring the prospective insured to communicate all relevant factors to the insurer: see Carter v. Boehm (1766), 97 E.R. 1162; Coronation Insurance Co. v. Taku Air Transport Ltd., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 622 at 636ff. The passage of various insurance statutes has not displaced this longstanding common law duty of good faith.

[para100] Purchasers of condominiums share many of the same characteristics of both these special relationships. The purchaser of a condominium enters into a contract with a developer that is basically dictated by the developer and is not the result of the exercise of bargaining power between two equals. This power imbalance continues so long as the developer is developing the project. In addition to the lack of bargaining power, the condominium purchaser lacks the information necessary to achieve more favourable contractual terms with the developer. It is only the developer that is aware of the information with respect to the risks concerning the project and the extent to which those risks may require further modification of the projected development. While the developer has the right to change the development, just as an employer has a right to terminate an employee, that right must be exercised with candour and reasonableness, taking into consideration the interests of the condominium owners. The fact the Developer intended a reasonable purchaser to conclude the ORA land would be left in its natural state if no recreational facilities were built, the imbalance in bargaining power, combined with the disparity of access by PCC 505 condominium owners to relevant and essential information concerning the development of the ORA land, makes the imposition of a duty of good faith on the Developer a logical extension of the common law.

[para101] Indeed, having regard to the fact that a fiduciary duty, a much higher duty, has been imposed on condominium developers at common law (depending on the factual circumstances of a particular case), it would be logical to exact a duty of good faith from condominium developers when circumstances warrant. At the very least, the circumstances of this case warrant the imposition of such a duty on the facts as found by the trial judge. The existence of the Act in no way stands in the way of the imposition of such a duty. Both the insurance cases and the fact a fiduciary duty can be imposed notwithstanding the existence of the Act illustrate that the common law and statute law can be, and often are, interwoven.

III. REMEDY

Should a declaration of ownership be granted?

[para102] The appropriate remedy for breach of a duty of good faith appears to be an increase in damages within the context of a broader action: United Grain Growers.

[para103] Although PCC 505 alleged that the Developer breached its fiduciary duty, PCC 505 does not appear to have alleged the breach of the lesser duty of good faith. The original application does contain claims for damages for failing to construct the recreational facilities on the ORA, punitive or exemplary damages for the Developer's highhanded conduct in cutting down the trees, and a declaration that PCC 505 is entitled to damages against the Developer for breach of the disclosure statement pursuant to s. 52(5) of the Act.

[para104] Bearing in mind that the issue of damages is yet to be argued, I would, if necessary, grant leave to PCC 505 to amend its pleadings, if it desired to claim damages for breach of a duty of good faith with liberty to the Developer to respond. Assuming an amendment to the pleadings is made to claim damages at common law for breach of a duty of good faith, the damages, if any, could be assessed at the same time or immediately after PCC 505's other claims for damages have been heard.

IV. CONCLUSION

Baer v. Condominium Plan 9123697

Between Grania Mary Baer, plaintiff, and The Owners: Condominium Plan 9123697, defendant

Action No. 9703 10188

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Lewis J. Heard: January 12, 2000. Judgment: May 4, 2000. (40 paras.)

Counsel: D.C. McGreer, for the plaintiff. S.J. Hammel and S.L. Hawes, for the defendant.

MEMORANDUM OF JUDGMENT

[para1] LEWIS J.:-- The Plaintiff is seeking, against her Condominium Association, the Defendant, general damages in the sum of $300,000.00, plus special damages for prescription charges, psychological fees, moving expenses and for repair to her condominium unit so that it may be sold, or compensation for the market value of a similar unit in St. Albert, as well as costs of the action. In defending the action, the Defendant counterclaimed for unpaid condominium fees and special assessments made by the Defendant with interest and costs.

[para2] Counsel for the Plaintiff and Defendant filed the following agreed statement of facts on the second day of the trial:

1. The Plaintiff purchased a two bedroom Condominium with a parking stall in a new Condominium Development on February 13, 1992 municipally described as Suite 207, 3 Perron Street, St. Albert for $99,000.00.

2. The Condominium Development is known as Whelehan Place. It consists of 62 dwelling units and is located in downtown, St. Albert.

3. The Plaintiff's suite is located on the main entrance level of the building, just off the lobby area, and above an underground multi-level parkade.

4. The Owners of all the Units in the Condominium Building, of which the Plaintiff is one, collectively have sued the Developers, Engineers and Architects of the building for deficiencies in the construction of the building overall, as well as consequential in-suite damage. The Plaintiff is named individually in that action for the particular damage caused to her suite. That action is tentatively scheduled for trial for November, 2000. The claim in that broader action is for the cost of correcting structural problems with the roof, foundation, parkade, building air pressure and balance and insufficient firewall installed within the common walls of the complex.

5. The deficiencies that the Plaintiff identifies as affecting her suite arise from deficiencies which date back to construction of the building in 1991.

6. The Plaintiff stopped eating, sleeping or spending any extended periods of time in her suite by April 1995. She has not occupied it in any manner since December 18, 1996.

7. From December 18, 1996 to December 31, 1997, the Plaintiff stayed at the apartment building Campus Towers in Edmonton at the expense of the Defendant.

8. The Plaintiff and the Defendant have not reached an agreement on the repair of the Plaintiff's suite. The Plaintiff's suite cannot be lived in because of its present state of disrepair.

9. The Condominium Association imposed the following special assessments:

i. $75,000.00 levied on the unit owners due in two instalments on November 7, 1995 and December 7, 1995. The Plaintiff's portion was $1004.10. [Changed in handwriting to July, Aug. and September '95.]

ii. $75,000.00 levied on the unit owners due in three instalments on April 7, 1996, May 7, 1996 and June 7, 1996. The Plaintiff's portion was $1,011.15.

iii. $75,000.00 levied on unit owners due in three instalments on November 1, 1997, December 1, 1997, and January 1, 1998. The Plaintiff's portion was $990.00

10. The Plaintiff paid the Condominium Fees and Special Assessments levied on her suite up to September 30, 1996.

11. The Plaintiff owes the Association Condominium Fees for her unit since September 30th, 1996 as follows:

a) Monthly condominium fees to January 31, 2000 $5,852.00

b) Interest at 18% $2,337.16

c) Last Special Assessment $ 990.00

d) Interest on Special Assessment $ 468.16

$9,647.31

12. The monthly Condominium Fees for the Plaintiff's unit since 1995 have been approximately $145.00.

13. The Plaintiff put $25,727.00 as a down payment on the purchase of her suite in 1992 and she financed the balance of the purchase price with a mortgage from the Treasury Branches.

14. The appraised value of the Plaintiff's suite (June, 1999) is $65,000.00 before repairs and $78,000.00 after repairs.

15. The current balance outstanding on the Plaintiff's mortgage is approximately $66,182.00.

16. The Plaintiff has continued to make her monthly mortgage and property tax payments of $649.00 ($530.00 mortgage and $119.00 taxes) up to the present time.

[para3] The Plaintiff, according to her testimony, purchased condominium unit number 207 in Whelehan Place on December 10, 1991, for $99,000.00, putting $25,000.00 down as a deposit and financing the balance through a mortgage with the Treasury Branch. She took possession of her condominium in February 1992.

[para4] Sometime in 1993, the Plaintiff noticed her coffee table was listing, which was caused, as she testified, by the floor sinking. She contacted the builder and repairs were made to the area under the floor in about September 1994 to correct the listing. By October 24, 1994, she noticed the corner of her sunroom had a large crack. Again the builder was contacted. At about this time she noticed a crack in the living room wall, as well as the fact that the closet doors did not close properly. Repairs were done by the builder in about December of 1994. In early 1995, she noticed black areas on her carpet, as well as on the walls. She started to experience eye infection, vomiting and just simply felt terrible. She felt there was mould throughout her condominium unit she testified. There was also water infiltration on the main floor.

[para5] The Plaintiff moved out of her condominium unit in April of 1995, except for occasions when she returned to her condominium to bathe or dress, finally moving out permanently in 1996 and not returning to the unit. The unit has been unoccupied since.

[para8] Other problems were identified in the Plaintiff's condominium unit; the infiltration of air in areas around the baseboards, around the door off the corridor and around her bedroom window.

[para9] Problems were identified with the building itself, as follows:

1. Improperly waterproofed wood and concrete foundations, resulting in the infiltration of water into the parkade and into the wood sub-floors of the building, resulting in rotting and failure of the sub-floors in three units, including that of the Plaintiff. Commencing in the summer of 1995, carrying on to May 1996, the foundation was re-waterproofed and the sub-floors repaired at the same time;

2. Various areas of the foundation rotted or failed as a result of water infiltration and improperly constructed wood foundation systems. Some of these foundation sections have been reconstructed and fortified, whereas other areas of the building foundation where there may be rotting have not been repaired because of the financial constraints of the Defendant;

3. Deficient construction and design of the roofing system has resulted in the infiltration of outside water and leakage due to condensation causing drywall damage and other interior damage to various condominium units;

4. Improperly balanced ventilation system, resulting in back drafts and air circulation problems throughout the building;

5. The building did not meet applicable Fire Code requirements existing at the time the building was constructed;

6. Various insulation deficiencies, resulting in freezing of pipes and significant heat loss from the building and particular units.

[para10] Other units were experiencing problems similar to those of the Plaintiff resulting in the Defendant retaining a project manager, Simco Management, on December 16, 1994. About March 16, 1995, the Defendant retained Reid Jones Christopherson (R.J.C.), consulting engineers, to assess the building's problems and advise as to what should be done.

[para11] Defendant's Counsel provided a chronological history of the problems raised by the Plaintiff and other owners of condominium units in the building. This historical chronology of events is very helpful in understanding the seriousness of the problem faced by the Plaintiff, as well as other owners in this condominium project. This history of events which is attached as Appendix "A" was prepared from the exhibits entered at trial. The reference to the specific exhibits has been deleted in the appendix reproduction as such reference is of no assistance without each of the exhibits at hand to refer to.

[para12] The Plaintiff had a friend of hers, who was an electrical engineer, look at her suite in late 1995. He made some suggestions as to how the Plaintiff handle correction of the problems. On December 1, 1996, she hired another engineering friend, a Mr. Jones, to do a detailed report on her unit. She was not happy with what the Condominium Association was suggesting, in view of its engineering report from R.J.C. of December 6, 1996. As the Plaintiff said, she did not agree with the repair proposal of R.J.C. and she wanted her own engineer's report. She directed that no repairs were to be made to her unit without her consent; as she testified, she "wanted answers first and then repairs". She testified she wanted Mr. Jones' report and "what Bill would recommend I would trust". The only problem is that she did not provide the Defendant with a copy of Mr. Jones' report until about mid 1998, although available by the end of December 1996. The Plaintiff had called Mr. Jones prior to December 1, 1996, when, in December 1995, the floors were being dug up, asking him over to view the situation in her condominium.

[para13] In any event, there has been a standoff between the Plaintiff and the Defendant since the first half of 1997. The Plaintiff started this action on May 27, 1997. Nothing has been done with respect to the Plaintiff's condominium unit since early 1997. The Plaintiff has refused to let the Defendant into her condominium unit since about that time.

[para15] Plaintiff's Counsel argues that the Defendant was negligent in that it:

1. Failed to adequately respond to, investigate, report on and correct the problems in the Plaintiff's suite that the Plaintiff brought to their attention;
2. Failed to do so within a reasonable time;
3. Failed to provide an engineer's report, so that the Plaintiff could make a fully informed decision on the board's proposal for repair of building deficiencies and in-suite damage; and
4. Failed to date to provide a proper plan to repair the building deficiencies adversely effecting the Plaintiff's suite.

[para16] Defendant's Counsel identifies the issues to be determined in this trial as follows:

1. The extent of the obligation of the Condominium Association to repair and maintain the common property of the condominium project to permit the Plaintiff's quiet enjoyment of her unit;
2. Did the Condominium Association fail in its obligation to repair and maintain the common property;
3. If the Condominium Association failed in its obligation to repair and maintain the common property:
 - (a) Can the Plaintiff establish the existence of any contamination in her unit arising from that breach;
 - (b) Is there any evidence that contamination in her unit caused or aggravated the physical and mental illness the Plaintiff alleges she suffers from;
 - (c) If the Plaintiff has suffered damages as a result of the negligence or breach of statutory duty of the Condominium Association, has she properly mitigated her damages.

[para17] The Plaintiff did suffer from health and psychological problems. Her family doctor identified the health problems as being a swelling of the eyelids and pink eye. Her psychologist identified the psychological problems she has suffered because of her feeling "homeless" and the agony of this legal action. But the question is whether these health problems are directly caused by her condominium problems, or only partly caused by such problems, or not at all. As was pointed out in the evidence, the Plaintiff went through a divorce of her 25 year marriage in late 1989 or 1990, experienced two suicides in her family, as well as other problems. There is no question that the Plaintiff has experienced an extremely sad and almost unbearable situation over the past 10 years. She has the sympathy of everyone, including her close associates and friends, who have assisted her over these many years with her problems, some of whom testified at this trial. The Plaintiff has been very fortunate to have the cadre of friends and associates who have helped her. Otherwise, as her psychologist pointed out, she may not be here today, because of her suicidal tendencies at one point.

CAUSE OF ACTION

[para18] Under s. 30 of the Condominium Property Act of Alberta, the Condominium Association has a statutory duty to keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property of the condominium building.

[para19] As well, the bylaws of the Defendant corporation provide:

Rule 8: Duties of the Corporation

The Corporation shall:

- A) control, manage and administer the Common Property for the benefit of all the Owners and for the benefit of the entire Condominium Corporation;
- B) do all things required of it by the Act, these By-Laws, and any other resolutions of the Corporation in force from time to time;
- J) maintain and keep in a state of good repair, as may be required as a result of reasonable wear and tear or otherwise the following:
 - a) all outside surfaces of the Units, including without limiting the generality of the foregoing, exterior walls, exterior of the roof and all roofing materials, eavestroughs, exterior drains, exterior beams and trim, but excluding all Unit screen doors, doors, windows, mailboxes, door bell buttons, and light fixtures and their bulbs attached to the exterior of the Unit, all of which shall be the responsibility of the Unit Owners.

[para20] The Defendant has a statutory duty, as well as a contractual duty, under the bylaws of the Condominium Association to keep in a good state of repair the common property of the condominium building. Failure to do this may give rise to an action in negligence and a damage award if such damages can be proved.

[para21] I am satisfied that the Defendant took all of the steps it could to correct the problems. It hired a project manager and an engineering firm to determine the deficiency problems. The Defendant was never advised of any health problems associated with the Plaintiff's occupation of her condominium unit until after she had moved out of her condominium unit. Even then, such health problems could not be traced to the condominium unit with certainty. A number of repair proposals were made by the Defendant to the Plaintiff to repair her condominium unit in 1996 and 1997, and subsequently, all of which the Plaintiff rejected.

[para22] The Plaintiff did not report any health problems associated with living in her condominium unit to the Defendant until November, 1995. This was months after she had moved out of her condominium unit and into other accommodation. As soon as the Defendant learned of this situation, it took immediate steps to test the Plaintiff's condominium unit for gases, including carbon monoxide as well as mould and fungus.

[para23] Dr. Climenhaga, an ophthalmologist, to whom the Plaintiff's family physician, Dr. Morison, referred her, saw the Plaintiff on February 5, 1996. In his report dated the same date as he saw her, Dr. Climenhaga could not attribute the Plaintiff's blepharitis (swollen eyelids) to anything in her condominium unit. He said that the blepharitis was related to the skin and her mascara may be causing the problem. This did not change the Plaintiff's use of mascara. In his subsequent report dated October 18, 1999, Dr. Climenhaga did state that "it is impossible for me to relate any of her complaints of the blepharitis to the environment". This referral by Dr. Morison of the Plaintiff was made as Dr. Morison was of the view that the environment conditions in her condominium unit were the cause of her health problems.

[para24] The tests done by Northwest Utilities Limited and the Capital Health Authority in January and February, 1997, indicated no levels of carbon monoxide (CO) in the Plaintiff's condominium unit. I accept this evidence and find that there were no dangerous levels of gas including CO in the Plaintiff's unit. I do not accept Mr. Jones' evidence of his CO tests of the unit which indicated on one occasion a dangerous level of CO. He had made his tests after purchasing a CO tester from Canadian Tire and then expressed concern as to the accuracy of the tester suggesting that he redo the test, during the course of the trial, with a more accurate tester. This suggestion was refused in view of the number of other tests that had been done by third parties. Therefore, in view of this finding, I reject Plaintiff's counsel's argument that the strict liability rule enunciated originally in Ryland v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330; 37 L. J. Ex. 161 and applied in Frederic v. Perpetual Investments et al [1969] 1 O.R. 186-190 and Bisdams v. Brunette Holdings Ltd., [1993] O.J. No. 3378, .C.J. applies here as the Plaintiff has not proven the escape into her condominium unit of a harmful substance, that is, a dangerous gas or gases, or mould or fungus.

[para25] Although the tests of the soot or carbon deposits on the carpet and wall were not satisfactorily done, nothing negative could be determined from the testing done by the Alberta Research Council. As well the tests for mould or fungus in the Plaintiff's unit were negative. I am satisfied on the evidence, and find that there was no mould or fungus in the Plaintiff's unit.

[para27] Steps were taken by the Defendant to alleviate the infiltration of air into the Plaintiff's condominium, as well as other condominiums, with a balancing of the air system. As well, the roof was repaired to alleviate a water leakage problem.

[para31] As the Plaintiff's psychologist said, she suffers from homelessness and the issue of this lawsuit hanging over her.

[para33] I find that no negligence has been proven on the part of the Defendant in correcting the deficiencies to the building when these were brought to the Defendant's attention. It is interesting that none of the other condominium unit owners moved out of their condominium units, but had similar, and in some cases worse problems than the Plaintiff. I find that the Defendant acted in a reasonable and timely fashion to the concerns of the condominium owners' problems, including the Plaintiff. I find that the evidence does not establish any negligence on the part of the Defendant in carrying out its duties to maintain the condominium units, including the Plaintiff's condominium unit in a good serviceable state of repair, specifically the common areas which the Defendant is responsible for. In fact, I find that the Defendant went out of its way to accommodate the Plaintiff, but to no avail, due to the lack of assistance and co-operation of the Plaintiff.

[para34] If I am wrong in finding that there is no negligence on the part of the Defendant, then what damages flow if the Defendant was negligent? Certainly no mould problems were detected in the investigations done by the experts, that is, Span-Gas, or Northwestern Utilities, or the Capital Health Authority. No dangerous CO levels level were detected by Northwestern Utilities, or the Capital Health Authority, nor by Koliger Schmidt. The latter firm being an expert in interior air quality.

[para35] Consequently, the Plaintiff has not proven any injuries suffered by her because of the conditions in her condominium unit, and thus no damages could be awarded to the Plaintiff. The only damage the Plaintiff has suffered is to her unit, which she has steadfastly refused to let the Defendant make repairs to. Therefore, I find that the Plaintiff is the author of her own unfortunate set of circumstances and would award no damages to her for the repair necessary to her condominium unit if I had found the Defendant negligent in its duties.

[para36] As I have said, the Defendant is responsible for the common areas of the building, not for the damage to the individual condominium units unless such damage is caused, however it occurs, by the common areas such as the escape of gases from common area to a particular condominium unit or units, causing damage to that unit or its occupants.

[para37] The Defendant is not an insurer of the Plaintiff. The Defendant is obligated to do what is reasonable in carrying out its statutory duty. Wright v. Strata Plan No. 205 [1998] B.C.J. No. 105 (B.C.C.A.), affirming [1996] B.C.J. No. 381 (B.C.S.C.).

[para38] Alternatively, as Defendant's Counsel argues, the Plaintiff has an obligation to mitigate. In this case, she has done just the opposite, that is, created road blocks and certainly done nothing to mitigate her damages. Therefore, on this basis also, she would not be entitled to any damage award.

[para40] I would allow the Defendant's claim for unpaid condominium fees, including interest, to whatever date Counsel calculated this interest in its agreed statement of facts, all of which totals $9,647.31, which the Defendant will have judgment against the Plaintiff for, including costs of this counterclaim under the appropriate column of Schedule "C" of the Rules of the Court. This claim was not disputed by the Plaintiff.

APPENDIX "A"

DATE DESCRIPTION

October 24, This is the first occasion on which 1994 the Plaintiff complains to the Defendant and the builder about cracks in her walls and other construction deficiencies, including dampness in her unit, but no health concerns of her own are identified to the Defendant.

December 16, Simco Management is hired by the 1994 Defendant as project manager.

March 16, By this time, a number of deficiencies 1995 had been identified in the condominium building, and RJC is retained by the Defendant to assist in the investigation and repair of identified deficiencies.

March 30, Defendant proposes that an engineering 1995 study of the building be commissioned and work commences shortly thereafter.

April 4, 1995 A survey of owners is taken by the Defendant in order to identify construction and design deficiencies with the building.

April, 1995 Plaintiff moves out of her unit, no longer sleeping, eating or spending extended periods of time there, although she returned for clothes and baths on occasion.

May 23, 1995 Problems with the floors in units 201 and 203 are identified due to infiltration of water. These units are located on the same floor as the Plaintiff's unit.

May 29, 1995 The Plaintiff again complains to the Defendant about defects in her condominium unit, but no concern is raised by the Plaintiff with the Defendant about her health, infiltration of contaminants or blackening of carpets at this time.

June 20, 1995 Engineering proposals on how to deal with the dry rot associated with infiltration of water are addressed, and the first special levy is imposed to pay for foundation waterproofing work.

July 1995 The Plaintiff complains of blackening around the edges of her carpet and the same problem is identified in other units in the building.

July 1995 A further survey of owners is taken to identify the existence of building deficiencies, but the Plaintiff does not respond to this survey, presumably due to the fact that she is in Ireland.

Summer, 1995 Waterproofing on the foundation commences and this work, which is not concluded to this date, carries on into 1996. Work is also commenced on determining the cause of the soot and blackening of the carpets and walls in the units. RJC attributes the cause to fireplace malfunctioning, but also investigates the possibility of air balance problems as a cause of this problem.

October 1995 The Plaintiff reports 12 incidents of to October Blepharitis (swelling of the eyelids) to 1996 her physician, all of which incidents occur after the Plaintiff has moved out of her condominium unit.

October 28, RJC reports on the progress of foundation 1995 waterproofing work and investigations of soot problems.

October 30, Plaintiff obtains a report from her 1995 physician attributing her Blepharitis symptoms with allergies to mould. At no time is the existence of mould ever identified in the Plaintiff's unit, although numerous reports are commissioned to investigate this. The Span-Gas reports of January 31, 1996 and February 8, 1996 are negative, but these reports are not provided to the board. Also Capital Health Authority's report of February 8, 1996 is negative on this possibility.

November 1, A second special levy is approved by the 1995 Defendant to finance costs of investigation and repair.

November, The Plaintiff asks a friend, Mr. Ted 1995 Chambers, to look at her unit. He indicates that there is no obvious cause of blackening of carpets and no sign of moisture. Reference is made to air flow coming into the unit from below the baseboards of the walls and indicates possible infiltration of carbon monoxide (CO). Mr. Chambers does not prepare a report until September 1996 and the Defendant is not advised of his findings.

November 8, The Plaintiff complains about exclusion of 1995 in-unit damage as a repair priority. The Defendant explains that damaged units are not considered hazardous to health and are to be deferred to the Spring of 1996. If there were direct links to health problems, the board indicated that it would do the repairs immediately.

November 16, The Defendant approves a recommendation to 1995 have soot from the Plaintiff's unit analyzed by Alberta Research Council and repairs priced for the Plaintiff's unit.

December 4, The Plaintiff advises the Defendant that: 1995 She will be hiring her own engineer to conduct investigations; She must monitor any repairs; No one is to enter her unit without her permission.

December 4, At a board meeting, the following is 1995 discussed: An attempt to test carpet samples from the Plaintiff's unit has failed because of the inability to reach the Plaintiff; Repairs to the Plaintiff's unit will be deferred until receipt of the Plaintiff's engineer's report.

December 7, Bill Jones attends the Plaintiff's unit. 1995 Fireplace back draft is noted. Nothing is reported to the board in this regard.

December 7, RJC reports continued work on cleaning of 1995 stains and testing of fireplaces.

December 8, The board advises the Plaintiff that 1995 repairs to her unit will be deferred pending receipt of her engineer's report.

December 1995 The Plaintiff seeks assistance of the Capital Health Authority to investigate problems with suite.

January 5, The Plaintiff advises RJC (for the first 1996 time) of her suspicion that contaminants are entering her unit through the walls.

January 5, RJC conducts further testing of unit at 1996 the Plaintiff's request and reports to the Plaintiff that air leakage could have occurred through unsealed pipe penetration from parkade. Also advises that door sweeps should be removed.

January 10, RJC reports to the Board of findings with 1996 respect to the Plaintiff's unit as stated above. Also notes that dirt accumulations are evident due to master bedroom window not closing.

January 15, RJC reports to the Plaintiff that 1996 Northwest Utilities Limited (NUL) found no CO in unit and that fireplace was functioning properly.

January 16, Notice of assessment and condominium fee 1996 arrears issued to the Plaintiff.

January 18, RJC reports on work done to address 1996 problems with, among other areas, the Plaintiff's unit, including: Completion of a study with NUL, City of St. Albert and a mechanical contractor about soot and carpet blackening problems; Fireplaces not primary source of blackening; Board of Health found no unusual health concerns with the unit; Some of the problem will be corrected by air balancing.

January 23, RJC's report on January 18, 1996 1996 circulated to owners.

January 29, Plaintiff undergoes allergy tests. Tests 1996 determine allergies to moulds and household dust.

January 31, The Plaintiff commissions an investigation 1996 by Span-Gas. The tests reveal: No airborne yeast or mould in the unit; Elevated general biological contaminant which is not identifiable. This report not provided to the board.

February 5, The Plaintiff is referred to an 1996 ophthalmologist by Dr. Morison for assessment of her Blepharitis problem. Dr. Morison indicates that Plaintiff is "convinced" that the cause is something in her unit. Dr. Climenhaga is told by Plaintiff that she thinks mould in her apartment is causing her problem.

Dr. Climenhaga advises that the Blepharitis problems from which the Plaintiff is suffering is likely caused by her eye makeup. Plaintiff continues to wear mascara.

In follow-up report of Dr. Climenhaga on October 18, 1999, he states that it is impossible to relate the Plaintiff's eye condition to her apartment and reassures the Plaintiff as to the health of her eyes.

February 7, The Capital Health Authority reports no CO 1996 found in tests of Plaintiff's unit.

February 8, Span-Gas reports particle counts in the 1996 Plaintiff's unit are good and are not a concern.

February 8, The Capital Health Authority reports 1996 directly to the Plaintiff that: It investigated the Plaintiff's unit on January 12 and 15, 1996; No CO was found by NUL or Capital Health Authority on either day; Blackening of carpets is not due to mould or yeast; There is no dampness in the unit; The Span-Gas report of elevated bacterial counts was likely from outside air coming into unit through the open windows; High level of construction in the area at the time could have contributed to the elevated counts; No further work is warranted.

February 9, RJC reports to the board on its 1996 investigation of the Plaintiff's unit, including the following: Tests of fireplace showed no back draft; No CO found even with the fireplace operating; Windows open and dust and dirt were entering the unit; One small penetration into the unit was found and should be sealed (this was done shortly thereafter); The building lobby has dust and dirt that could be carried into the Plaintiff's unit; Construction activity in vicinity could contribute to this problem. RJC recommends: Air duct cleaning and balancing; Door sweeps be removed; The penetration sealed. That work is done shortly thereafter.

February 27, Tissue wipes from the Plaintiff's unit are 1996 submitted to Alberta Research Council for examination. The Alberta Research Council reports no findings of organic or inorganic contaminants.

March 13, Span-Gas issues a follow-up report at the 1996 request of the Plaintiff indicating that: Carpet samples are taken from the unit No mould or yeast in excess of that of occupied residences was found; Although not tested, the soot in the unit resembles automotive emissions; Air is flowing into the unit from base of walls. This report was not provided to the board prior to litigation. The third special levy is approved.

May 29, 1996 RJC reports to the Plaintiff that: Her unit has been effectively sealed off; The unit will continue to be monitored for further soot formation. No further soot formation is subsequently observed.

July 17, 1996 A proposal is made on repairs to Plaintiff's unit, including cleaning and repairing of sub-floor, once special assessment and condominium fees are paid. No repairs are authorized by the Plaintiff.

July 31, 1996 Report on construction process made to the owners. This report identifies repairs that would take place with the Plaintiff's unit.

September 19, The Plaintiff pays her condominium 1996 arrears. The board immediately gives directions to have repairs carried out.

October 4, The Plaintiff retains Counsel, Mr. Kevin 1996 Mott, who requests that the board pay the Plaintiff for temporary alternate accommodations.

October 10, The property manager advises Mr. Mott that 1996 the board can now carry out repairs to the Plaintiff's unit and asks for a meeting to arrange a course of action. No response is received until November 14, 1996.

October 17, The board confirm directions to proceed 1996 with repairs to the Plaintiff's unit without delay.

November 7, The ITV television station is asked by the 1996 Plaintiff to contact the property manager about the problems with her unit for a Trouble-Shooters episode.

November 12, ITV Trouble-Shooters episode airs. 1996

November 13, The board again requests a meeting with 1996 the Plaintiff to carry out repairs.

November 14, Mr. Mott agrees to meet with the property 1996 manager and a meeting takes place on November 21, 1996.

November 26, Mr. Mott forwards a proposal to the board 1996 for investigations of the Plaintiff's unit prepared by AD Williams (dated October 10, 1996).

December 4, RJC responds to the proposal by AD 1996 Williams for investigation of the Plaintiff's unit. It reports on a proposed manner of investigation and repair. The RJC report is forwarded to Mr. Mott.

December 5 Negotiations regarding alternative - 19, 1996 accommodations for the Plaintiff during repair end in selection of Campus Towers. The Plaintiff or her Counsel fail to respond to the proposal made by RJC for investigation and repair of the Plaintiff's unit.

May 27, 1997 This action commenced. No response is made by the Plaintiff regarding the repair procedure that had been proposed by RJC.

October, 1997 The fourth special levy is imposed.

November 20, The Condominium Association again proposes 1997 a plan of repair to Mr. Mott for his client's acceptance. Upon discontinuance of this action and a release, repairs will commence. This offer is rejected.

November 24, Mr. Mott advises that only inspections 1997 could be done to the Plaintiff's unit and that no repairs be carried out without authorization.

December 31, The Condominium Association, through its 1997 Counsel, confirms that the Plaintiff will not allow any repairs to proceed on her unit. On that basis, the Plaintiff is advised that the Condominium Association will no longer fund her alternative accommodations.

March 11, Mr. Mott advises that the Condominium 1998 Association should not enter

March 24, The Condominium Association, through its 1998 Counsel, again outlines a proposed repair procedure for the Plaintiff's unit, seeking authorization for those repairs and agreeing to fund alternative accommodations during the repair procedure. No discontinuance of the action is required. No authorization is granted to carry out these repairs.

June 10, 1998 A proposal is made by the Condominium Association that engineering experts for the Plaintiff (Jones) and Defendant (RJC) meet to discuss acceptable repair procedures. This proposal was never accepted.

Condominium Plan No. 762 0380 v. Edmonton (City)

Between The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 762 0380, plaintiff, and The City of Edmonton, defendant

Action No. 9603 11780

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Cooke J. Heard: September 5, 2000. Judgment: February 12, 2001. Filed: February 13, 2001. (116 paras.)

Counsel: Louis M.H. Belzil, for the plaintiff. Roger Hofer, for the defendant.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

COOKE J.:--

FACTS

[para1] All of the evidence in this action was presented by way of an Agreed Statement of Facts pursuant to Rule 230 of the Alberta Rules of Court. The parties agreed that documents found by the Court to be relevant and otherwise admissible should not be taken to have proved the truth of the facts or statements contained therein except where agreed to by the parties.

A. The Parties

[para2] The Plaintiff is a condominium corporation under the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. C-22 ("CPA"). It was established in 1976 and is commonly known as Academy Place.

[para3] The Academy Place condominium building is a mixed use condominium located at the corner of 100th Avenue and 116th Street in the City of Edmonton. The building itself is a 17 floor high rise with a basement. The basement, main and second floors of the building have a total of 22 commercial units. The remaining 105 residential units are located on the 3rd through 17th floors of the building.

[para4] The City of Edmonton is a municipal corporation contained under the Municipal Government Act, S.A. 1994, c. M-26.1 ("MGA").

B. The Condominium Property Act

[para5] Under the CPA, a condominium corporation is formed upon registration of a condominium plan with the Registrar of the Land Titles Offices. A condominium plan depicts individual units in the condominium building. The common property of the condominium is defined as all of those portions of the condominium building shown on a plan not otherwise comprised in a unit. The condominium plan shows the individual unit factors for each unit in the condominium building. Pursuant to s. 4(2) of the CPA, the common property in a registered condominium plan is held by owners of all of the units as tenants in common in shares proportional to their respective units.

[para8] Condominium units in Edmonton are liable to be assessed property taxes owing to the City of Edmonton. The City levies its taxes based on its assessment of an individual unit including that unit's undivided share in the common property. Common property of a condominium corporation is not separately assessed.

[para9] Pursuant to the provisions of the CPA, Academy Place Condominium has duly enacted bylaws registered as instrument 792037957. The said bylaws were registered February 20, 1979, and have been in force continuously since that time.

C. The Subject Units

[para10] The present action concerns arrears of condominium fees on the following units in Academy Place: Units 1, 3, 7, 9, 17, 18 and 19. Each of these units fell into condominium fee arrears at various times between May 1, 1990 and October 1, 1990. Each of these units has been continuously in arrears since that date, and no payments have been received on the amounts owing. The City has paid monthly assessments on all of the subject units since April 1999, which funds have been received and segregated by the Plaintiff pending conclusion of these proceedings. The parties have agreed that the payment and acceptance of these amounts shall not constitute an admission or concession in these proceedings.

[para11] The same units each fell into arrears of property taxes at the same time as they fell into arrears of condominium fees. Property taxes were not paid June 30, 1990 for the 1990 property tax assessment and have not been paid since.

[para12] Pursuant to the provisions of the CPA and the bylaws of the Plaintiff, caveats in respect of unpaid condominium fees were filed at the following times against the following units:

Date Units

July 3, 1990 Units 17, 18 and 19 July 4, 1990 Unit 9 January 29, 1991 Units 1, 3 and 7

[para13] Pursuant to the provisions of the Tax Recovery Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. T-1 ("TRA"), tax notifications were registered against each of the units on May 30, 1992 by the Defendant.

[para14] At the time each of the units fell into condominium fee and property tax arrears they were owned by an Alberta corporation, Oskar Swiss Development Ltd. ("OSDL"). OSDL went into bankruptcy on February 16, 1993 at which time it continued to hold fee simple title to all of the subject units. According to the Statement of Affairs filed in the bankruptcy, the subject units were the only significant listed assets of the bankrupt.

[para15] The same Statement of Affairs shows the Plaintiff as a secured creditor of OSDL for unpaid condominium fees, and the Defendant as a preferred creditor of OSDL for unpaid property taxes.

[para16] On March 1, 1993 the Defendant gave notice of its intention to offer the lands for sale at public auction to be held April 22, 1993. Notice of the public auction was given in respect of all units. The sale also was advertised in the local paper as required by law.

[para17] The lands did not sell at the public auction and as a result notices were sent April 23, 1993 advising OSDL of the Defendant's intention to move to final acquisition under the TRA. Notices were sent in respect of all units in identical form.

[para18] On July 9, 1993 the Defendant received notice of the bankruptcy of OSDL, including notice of a stay of proceedings. This is the first notice the Defendant had received of the bankruptcy proceedings.

[para19] On July 12, 1993 the Plaintiff and Defendant each filed Proof of Claim in the bankruptcy proceedings.

[para20] The status of the title of the subject units did not change until September 21, 1994 when the Defendant executed transfers of land pursuant to the TRA.

[para21] The said transfers were registered on October 6, 1994. The Registrar of the Northern Alberta Land Registration District issued new titles in respect of the subject units. These titles each state that the City of Edmonton is the owner of an estate in fee simple as to the unit specified therein and as to a specified undivided portion of the common property as well. Opposite the word "consideration" is the statutorily mandated notation "Tax Forfeiture".

[para22] The Defendant's claim for unpaid property taxes was disallowed by the trustee in bankruptcy in February, 1997.

[para23] No monies were distributed either to the Plaintiff or the Defendant as creditors as a result of the administration of the bankruptcy of OSDL.

[para24] The Plaintiff commenced the present proceedings against the Defendant on May 31, 1996. As of that date the Defendant held title to the subject units in the manner described in paragraph 21.

D. Assessment of Common Area Expenses

[para25] Since the Plaintiff has been incorporated it has assessed condominium fees. The Plaintiff's earliest record referring to the assessment of condominium fees dates from 1977. The records for the Plaintiff concerning the assessment of condominium fees, to the extent they have been located, were summarized in a table attached to the Agreed Statement of Facts and marked as Exhibit 13.

[para26] To the knowledge of the current Board of Managers of the Plaintiff, and based upon a review of the corporate records, the Defendant's challenge to the validity of the resolutions assessing condominium fees prior to July, 1996 is the first and only challenge to the validity of these resolutions.

[para27] Basing the rates of assessment on the foregoing, the total arrears in condominium fees owing in respect of the subject units as of September 5, 2000 were:

- i. Arrears to September 5, 2000: $341,739.59
- ii. Interest calculated at the rate prescribed by bylaw 44: (18% simple P.A.) $330,301.81
- iii. GST on the above: $ 47,042.90

Total: $719,084.30

[para28] As at September 6, 2000 the outstanding property taxes due to the City on these units amounted to $331,244.28.

E. Use of Units by The City of Edmonton

[para29] The Defendant has keys for each of the subject units in Academy Place. It received the keys in February, 1996 from the trustee in bankruptcy of OSDL after advising the trustee that it had taken title to the units.

[para30] Prior to February, 1996, the Plaintiff had no knowledge that the Defendant had taken title to the subject units. By letter dated February 13, 1996 and received by the Defendant February 16, 1996, the Defendant was advised of the arrears in condominium fees owing in respect of the subject units.

[para31] The usual practice of the Defendant when receiving tax forfeiture properties is to have tenants pay utility bills and maintenance costs. If there are no tenants in the property, the Defendant itself, if necessary, will pay utility costs and undertake repairs to preserve structural integrity of its tax forfeiture properties.

[para34] The outstanding condominium fee arrears and interest and the outstanding taxes exceed the value of the units at this time.

THE ISSUE

[para35] The issue in these proceedings is whether the Defendant, by reason of the exercise of its tax recovery powers, became liable in debt for all of the arrears of condominium fees and interest pursuant to s. 31(2) of the CPA, including those arrears which accrued due prior to its taking title as well as those which accrued due subsequent to that event?

[para36] At the heart of the Plaintiff's claim is s. 31(2) of the CPA, which reads:

31(2) A contribution levied as provided in subsection (1) is due and payable on the passing of a resolution to that effect and in accordance with the terms of the resolution, and may be recovered by an action for debt by the corporation

(a) from the person who was the owner at the time when the resolution was passed, and

(b) from the person who was the owner at the time when the action was instituted, both jointly and severally.

[para38] The Plaintiff relies upon s. 31(2)(b) in respect of its claim for arrears and interest which accrued due prior to October 6, 1994. Those arrears total $178,910.29, without regard to interest. They accrued due while the units were held by OSDL. Given the provisions of s. 31(2)(b), the Plaintiff takes the position that the Defendant is liable for those arrears and associated interest as the Defendant was the owner of all of the subject units on May 31, 1996, the date when this action was commenced.

[para39] The defence raises the following four questions:

(a) Is the City an "owner" under the CPA and therefore liable for contributions which have been levied but remain unpaid?

(b) Is s. 31(2) of the CPA inconsistent with the TRA and the MGA? If so, what is the effect of this inconsistency?

(c) Does the City's failure to obtain leave under s. 69.4 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 invalidate its title to the subject units?

(d) Were any valid resolutions levying condominium fees passed by the Plaintiff during the fiscal years prior to 1996 - 97 and is interest payable on any such assessments which were properly levied?

ANALYSIS

A. Validity of the Assessments

[para40] I will address the fourth question first, namely whether the resolutions passed levying contributions during the fiscal years prior to 1996 - 97 are valid and whether interest is payable on any contributions which were properly levied but which have not yet been paid.

[para41] Section 31(1) of the CPA reads:

31(1) In addition to its other powers under this Act, the powers of a corporation include the following:

(a) to establish a fund for administrative expenses sufficient, in the opinion of the corporation, for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of any premiums of insurance and for the discharge of any other obligation of the corporation;

(b) to determine from time to time the amounts to be raised for the purposes mentioned in clause (a);

(c) to raise amounts so determined by levying contributions on the owners in proportion to the unit factors for their respective units;

[Note an amendment to (c) in September 2000 is not relevant to the deliberations in this action.]

[para42] Section 31(2) refers to the passing of a resolution to levy contributions on the owners.

[para43] By virtue of sections 26, 30 and 31 of the Act and articles 20(i) and 44 of the bylaws of the Plaintiff, it is clear that it is the Board of Managers that has the duty to assess the estimated common expenses for the ensuing year. All matters at a meeting of the Board shall be determined by a majority vote with a casting vote to the chairman in addition to his original vote. As well, a quorum for a meeting of the Board shall be a majority of the members of the Board. Article 16 states that a resolution of the Board in writing signed by all of the members shall have the same effect as a resolution of the Board duly convened and held.

[para44] It is the Defendant's position that there is insufficient evidence of the passing of any resolutions levying contributions on the owners prior to July 17, 1996. The Defendant argues that s. 31(2) of the CPA imposes onerous obligations on subsequent owners in terms of unpaid condominium fees. As a result, it is imperative that there be strict compliance with the CPA by the condominium corporation.

[para45] A distinction must be drawn between the existence of corporate decisions and evidence thereof (Roman Hotels Ltd. v. Desrochers Hotels Ltd. (1976), 69 D.L.R. (3d) 126 (Sask. C.A.)). A decision which is not recorded in the minutes may be proven by other means.

[para46] I have examined the 33 documents in Exhibit 14 appended to the Agreed Statement of Facts. While they leave something to be desired in terms of draftsmanship in the context of the requirements of s. 31(2), it is apparent that the Board initiated action each year with respect to the determination of a levy. In some years that action was to set the levy at a percentage increase over a previous year. In other years it was the preparation of a schedule setting forth each unit and its respective assessment levy. These documents are some evidence of the existence of the corporate resolutions made. While no evidence exists for some years as to whether the procedural requirements of notice and quorum were met, I am not prepared to speculate that there were such deficiencies as would allow me to find that in terms of s. 31(2) no resolution was passed. On this point the defence fails with respect to the amount of the levy.

[para47] The bylaws of the corporation clearly call for interest to be paid on all assessments or payments in arrears at the rate of eighteen percent per annum. Section 33 of the CPA provides that if any such interest is owing by an owner to the corporation, the corporation may recover that amount in the same manner as a contribution and for that purpose the interest amount is to be regarded as a contribution under s. 31.

For interest to be payable on unpaid contributions the resolution must say so if it is to be enforced. It is not enough that bylaws of the owner provide for payment of interest, at least it is not enough when suing a subsequent owner as in the present case. The bylaws are not binding on a successor owner retroactively. In any event, the resolutions imposing the assessment did not incorporate the bylaws into the resolution by reference.

[para49] I agree that the bylaws cannot bind a subsequent owner retroactively. Accordingly, the Defendant cannot be held liable for interest on condominium assessments which accrued due prior to the City taking title to the units. However, I am of the view that interest can be claimed on assessments levied after the Defendant acquired title as the City was bound by the bylaws of the condominium corporation.

B. Whether the Defendant is an "Owner"

[para50] I turn now to the interpretation of the word "owner" as set forth in s. 31(2) of the CPA, particularly in the context of the TRA and the MGA.

[para51] The Plaintiff's position is that the Defendant is an owner within the meaning of s. 31(2). Section 1(n) of the CPA defines an owner as the person who is registered as the owner of the fee simple estate in a unit.

[para52] The Defendant submits that, by virtue of the manner in which it acquired title to the units under the TRA, it does not own an estate in "fee simple" but rather some lesser estate.

[para53] As the term "fee simple" is not defined in the CPA or by reference to any other legislation, it must be defined by reference to the common law.

[para54] "Fee simple" is described in Black's Law Dictionary, 6th ed. (St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1990) at 615 as meaning:

Typically, words "fee simple" standing alone create an absolute estate in the devisee and such words followed by a condition or special limitation create a defeasible fee. Absolute. A fee simple absolute is an estate limited absolutely to a person and his or her heirs and assigns forever without limitation or condition. An absolute or fee-simple estate is one in which the owner is entitled to the entire property, with unconditional power of disposition during one's life, and descending to one's heirs and legal representatives upon one's death intestate. Such estate is unlimited as to duration, disposition, and descendibility.

[para55] R.E. Megarry and H.W.R. Wade, in their text The Law of Real Property, 6th ed. (London: Stevens & Sons Ltd., 2000) at pp. 54 and 55 (see also Shon Yee Benevolent Assoc. of Canada v. British Columbia (1991), 55 B.C.L.R. (2d) 370 at 376 (S.C.)), describe the fee simple as "the most ample estate which can exist in land" and further suggest that "Pre-eminent among a fee simple owner's rights are his rights of alienation and his right to everything in, on or over the land."

[para56] In contrast to the fee simple absolute estate, Megarry and Wade define the fee simple defeasible and fee simple determinable (collectively referred to as "modified estates") respectively as follows (at pp 64-75):

Determinable fee: A determinable fee is a fee simple which will automatically determine on the occurrence of some specified event which may never occur.

A fee simple upon condition: Akin to but distinct from a determinable fee is a fee simple which has some condition attached to it by which the estate given to the grantee may be cut short.

[para57] The nature of the Defendant's interest in the subject units must be determined with reference to the TRA.

[para58] Prior to the coming into force of the current MGA on January 1, 1995, the Defendant's powers, rights and obligations in regard to taxation were set out in the Municipal Taxation Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. M-31, as amended, and the TRA.

[para59] It is common ground that the Defendant obtained title to the units pursuant to the TRA. As required by the TRA, each title was endorsed with the words "Final Acquisition and Tax Forfeiture".

[para60] The Plaintiff argues that the words "Final Acquisition and Tax Forfeiture" which appear on the various certificates of title and are a statutory requirement of both the TRA and the MGA, are simply an indication that no consideration in the usual sense passed upon the transfer of title from the defaulting taxpayer to the City of Edmonton.

[para61] The Plaintiff submits that no significance should be attached to these words in terms of diminishing the status of the Defendant's fee simple estate. I do not agree. These words were meant as a form of notice that the title is distinguishable from other titles and that there may be outstanding rights or interests affecting the land.

[para62] Under the TRA, provision is made for the recovery of municipal property taxes in the following manner:

* In March of each year, the municipality is to file with the Registrar a tax arrears list of all parcels with tax arrears of greater than one year (s. 3).

* The Registrar is to place tax recovery notifications on the certificates of title (s. 4).

* The municipality is to offer every parcel with a tax recovery notification on title for sale by public auction within three years from registration of the notification (s. 9).

* A parcel that is not sold at the first public auction may be sold only after it has been finally acquired by the municipality (s. 18(1)).

* If not sold at the public auction, the parcel is finally acquired by the municipality one year after the auction (s. 20(1)).

* The municipality may take title and thereupon becomes the owner of an estate in fee simple of the parcel free from all but certain prescribed encumbrances and any subsisting right under the TRA to redeem the parcel (s. 20(1)). Such final acquisition title is to be marked "Tax Forfeiture" by the Registrar (s. 20(2)).

[para63] The TRA and the MGA both provide for redemption rights on the part of the defaulting taxpayer and certain trust obligations on the part of the municipality.

[para64] Section 426 of the MGA states in part:

426(1) If the tax arrears in respect of a parcel of land are paid after the municipality becomes the owner of the parcel under section 424 but before the municipality dispose of the parcel under section 425(1), the municipality must notify the Registrar.

(2) The Registrar must cancel the certificate of title issued under section 424(2) and revive the certificate of title that was cancelled under section 424(2).

[para65] Section 428.2(1) and (2) read:

428.2(1) Despite anything in this Division, where a parcel of land has been offered for sale at a public auction and the certificate of title for the parcel has been marked "Tax Forfeiture" by the Registrar, the municipality may request the Registrar to cancel the existing certificate of title for the parcel of land and issue a certificate of title in the name of the municipality on the expiry of 15 years following the date of the public auction.

(2) On the issuance of a certificate of title in the name of the municipality, all responsibilities of the municipality under this Division to the previous owner of the parcel of land cease.

[para66] It should be noted that in the present case the redemption period under the TRA would not have expired until April of 1997, being approximately 11 months after filing of the Statement of Claim. However, it is clear from s. 435, the continuation provision of the MGA, and from the Transitional Regulation, A.R. 372/94 under the Act that a 15 year redemption period as provided for under that Act applies to the units in question.

[para67] Sections 427 and 427 of the MGA deal with the disposition of the proceeds from the sale of property, whether before or after the final acquisition of the property by a municipality. Section 427 states in part:

427(1) The money paid for a parcel of land at a public auction or pursuant to section 425

(a) must be deposited by the municipality in an account that is established solely for the purpose of depositing money from the sale or disposition of land under this Division, and

(b) must be paid out in accordance with this section and section 428.

(3) If there is any money remaining after payment of the tax arrears and costs listed in subsection (2), the municipality must notify the previous owner that there is money remaining.

(3.2) If the municipality is not satisfied that there are no debts that are secured by an encumbrance on the certificate of title for the parcel of land, the municipality must notify the previous owner that an application may be made under section 428(1) to recover all or part of the money.

[para68] The Alberta Court of Appeal in Bailey v. Parkland (County) No. 31 (1986), 71 A.R. 256, 45 Alta. L.R. (2d) 225 at 227 agreed with counsel for the appellant in that case that the County:

stands in the relationship of a trustee or a fiduciary to the owner whose lands have been sold for or are the subject of a tax sale, to see that the land is not sacrificed and to exercise great care in the best interests of the owner.

[para69] The Defendant argued that it is not the fee simple owner because the defaulting taxpayer is to receive the ultimate surplus of the sale proceeds, if any, and because any market value increase in the value of the land accrues not to the final acquisition title holder but to the defaulting taxpayer.

[para71] Rather than attempt to characterize this as something less than a fee simple estate, I prefer to explain it on the basis of legal and equitable ownership.

[para73] My view is that Bailey v. Parkland (County) No.31, supra is authority that this is the position of the municipality until such time as it moves to the next step in the enforcement procedure under s. 425(1)(b) of the MGA, acquiring the land in effect by purchase, or s. 428.2(1), acquiring the land at the end of the redemption period, at which point the municipality becomes both the legal and equitable owner of the land.

[para74] As indicated by the authors of Anger and Honsberger's Law of Real Property, vol. 1, 2nd ed. (Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Books Inc., 1985) at 99:

The rights of the owner of the fee simple may, however, be restricted. Thus, the estate may be subject to a condition, a collateral or an executory limitation, or to the terms of a trust. Moreover, it is subject to rules of public policy such as the rule against perpetuities, to restrictions such as the law of nuisance, and to modern statutory restraints, such as family disinheritance and matrimonial property legislation, environmental protection statutes, planning and zoning legislation, expropriation by the State, aeronautics legislation, and to the right of the Crown to minerals.

[para75] While the right of redemption in the defaulting taxpayer and the trust obligations imposed on the Defendant suggest that the taxpayer retains an equitable interest in the property, they do not derogate from the legal interest held by the City. That interest is a fee simple estate in the property. The Defendant is the owner of the freehold estate in possession of the lands.

[para76] I find support for my conclusion in the TRA itself. Section 20(1) of the Act declares that every parcel for which there is a subsisting tax notification or caveat is finally acquired by the municipality on the expiry of one year from the date of the sale. The section then provides that "the municipality may take title to the parcel and thereupon becomes the owner thereof subject" to various encumbrances and the former owner's right of redemption [emphasis mine].

[para77] Section 1(h) of the Act defines "owner" as "a person who is registered under the Land Titles Act as the owner of a freehold estate in possession of land." Section 1(u) of the MGA defines an "owner" as the person who is registered under the Land Titles Act as the owner of the fee simple estate in the land. Subsections 424(1) and (2) of the MGA further provide:

424(1) The municipality at whose request a tax recovery notification was endorsed on the certificate of title for a parcel of land may become the owner of the parcel after the public auction, if the parcel is not sold at the public auction.

(2) If the municipality wishes to become the owner of the parcel of land, it must request the Registrar to cancel the existing certificate of title for the parcel of land and issue a certificate of title in the name of the municipality.

[para78] The Defendant in the present case chose to take title to the units. It was described in the certificate of title for each unit as the owner of an estate in fee simple. Section 66(1) of the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-5 provides that every certificate of title is conclusive proof against all persons that the person named therein is entitled to the land included in the certificate for the estate or interest therein specified.

[para80] I find that the Defendant prima facie falls within the definition of "owner" of the units for purposes of s. 31(2) of the CPA.

C. Inconsistency Between CPA and TRA/MGA

[para81] The Plaintiff placed great emphasis on the definition of "owner" in the CPA, the TRA and the MGA. While I agree that the Defendant would seem to fall within the definition of "owner", I am concerned that the result of this determination leads to an inconsistency between s. 31(2) of the CPA and the historic thrust of tax recovery legislation.

[para82] In this case it would mean that the City, while fulfilling its statutory duty under the TRA to recover taxes in the sum of $331,244.28 incurred a debt of $719,084.30.

[para83] I am compelled to the view that there is an inconsistency by s. 348 of the MGA, which reads:

348 Taxes due to a municipality

(a) are an amount due to the municipality

(b) are recoverable as a debt due to the municipality

(c) take priority over the claims of every person except the Crown.

(d) are a special lien

(i) on land and any improvements to the land, if the tax is a property tax, a special tax or a local improvement tax

[para84] As well, s. 39 of the TRA provides that the Act supersedes all provisions inconsistent therewith in any other Act.

39 Subject to section 41, the provisions of this Act supersede all provisions inconsistent therewith and contained in any Act or Ordinance whether that Act or Ordinance is one of general application or relates to one municipality only. [Section 41 has no relevance to this matter.]

[para85] The goal of statutory interpretation is to determine the intention of the legislature. While the starting point must be the words used in the statute, the provision in question should be interpreted with the context of that provision in mind.

[para87] In Central and Eastern Trust Company v. Borland (1981), 36 A.R. 260, 14 Alta. L.R. (2d) 376 Master Funduk held that the charge for unpaid condominium fees created by filing of a caveat is wiped out by an order for foreclosure obtained by a prior mortgagee. At p. 379 he suggested that:

If a mortgagee who obtains title to the lands by a final order of foreclosure is liable in debt for the outstanding condominium fees, there may be an absurdity in the charge the Condominium Property Act gives to secure the debt being wiped out by the final order of foreclosure. The mortgagee, as owner, is liable in debt and the charge no longer exists. However, if there is such an absurdity it is a matter for the legislators, not the court, to resolve.

[para88] In Adler, Furman & Associates Ltd. v. Condominium Plan CDE 13442, [1983] A.J. No. 290 Master Funduk considered a situation where a second mortgagee became the registered owner of certain condominium units by way of a foreclosure action commenced by the first mortgagee. The foreclosure order stipulated that the new title was to issue free and clear of all encumbrances, including the caveat filed by the respondent for unpaid condominium contributions. The respondent filed a further caveat. Master Funduk, applying a previous decision of Bowen J. in Owners Condominium Plan No. 772, 1595 v. Greenacre Homes Ltd., Alta. Q.B., Edmonton No. 8203-22545 (unreported) held that the new caveats were valid charges on the land. On appeal ((1984) 37 Alta. L.R. (2d) 338, [1984] A.J. No. 734 (Q.B.)), Bowen J. stated at para. 13:

The Act is clear that the right of action in debt and the right to file a caveat follows the new owner when title is transferred. It may be that the foreclosure and vesting order in registering the title free and clear of all encumbrances does take away the respondent's rights against the appellant, but only in so far as they were trustees on that title. It does not and could not take away the respondents' rights in debt as against the appellants in the guise of new beneficial owners on the title.

In view of this court's decision in Greenacre one wonders how the vesting order was given free and clear of all encumbrances which would include the original caveats. This order was not appealed, although the respondents were given notice of it. I note that Master Funduk makes it clear that, in future, caveats filed by a condominium association will remain on title.

[para89] On further appeal ((1985) 37 Alta. L.R. (2d) 341 (C.A.)), Moir J.A., who delivered the judgment of the court, expressed the view that liability for condominium fees is not wiped out when a second mortgagee tenders on a first mortgagee's foreclosure application and gains title to the property. At para. 2 he stated:

The liability for condominium fees was clearly imposed on both the past and present registered owners of the condominium by s. 31(2) of the Condominium Property Act in this province. In our view, nothing in the Condominium Property Act (particularly s. 31) in any way undermines the indefeasibility provisions so clearly expressed in, and which underly [sic], the Land Titles Act of Alberta.

[para90] There is additional caselaw which confirms that the condominium corporation's claim for unpaid contributions can be advanced against a mortgagee after foreclosure (see Condominium Plan No. 8110301 (Owners of) v. Sohal (1984), 35 Alta. L.R. (2d) 23, [1984] A.J. No. 411 (Q.B.); Condominium Plan No. 82R42988 v. Royal Bank of Canada, supra). If there was any question of this, the matter has been clarified by the recent addition of s. 31(9) to the CPA (S.A. 1996 c. 12, s. 32), which came into force on September 1, 2000. Subsection 31(9) provides that notwithstanding s. 31(6), which equates the priority of a caveat filed in respect of unpaid contributions to that of a mortgage, the corporation's caveat is to remain on the title even if the property has, subsequent to filing of the caveat, been acquired by foreclosure, by an action for specific performance or by public auction conducted under those sections of the MGA dealing with the recovery of taxes relating to land.

[para91] It seems clear that the legislature intended that the debt for outstanding condominium contributions should apply to a mortgagee who has obtained title to the property through foreclosure and to a party who has obtained title through means of a public auction on sale of the property for outstanding taxes. These parties are in a position to avoid any debt liability. Section 31(2.1) of the CPA provides that an unpaid condominium contribution may be paid by a mortgagee who may add that amount to the amount owing under the mortgage. In addition, s. 31(3) stipulates that an estoppel certificate is to be provided by the condominium corporation on the request of a purchaser or mortgagee.

[para92] The City is in an entirely different position in that it cannot avoid liability unless it fails in its obligation to pursue tax recovery. It is significant that subsections 31(3) and (9) of the CPA do not refer to municipalities which have taken title to the property through tax forfeiture.

[para94] Assume a condominium has a market value of $60,000.00 but bears unpaid condominium fees of $40,000.00 and unpaid taxes of $25,000.00. The successful bidder will only bid the market value of $60,000.00 on condition that the condominium fees are paid, given that the condominium corporation's caveat would otherwise remain against the title. The effect of s. 31(9) of the CPA is to give a preference to the condominium corporation over the municipality with respect to the $5000.00 in unpaid taxes.

[para95] However, consider the position where the property is not sold at a tax sale but rather the municipality becomes the owner pursuant to s. 425(1)(b) or s. 428.2 of the MGA. Section 427(1) provides for a scheme of distribution for the money paid for parcels acquired under s. 425(1)(b). Under this scheme, taxes are given priority. Section 428.2(4) provides that the municipality obtains the title free and clear of all but the enumerated encumbrances, which do not include condominium fees.

[para96] If s. 31(9) of the CPA has created an anomalous tax recovery result where the municipality disposes of the land by tax auction sale as opposed to acquisition under s. 425(1)(b) or s. 428.2, as I have described above, it does not fall to the Court to resolve that anomaly.

[para97] Returning to the fundamental issue of inconsistency between the CPA and the MGA, municipalities are in a priority position in terms of overdue taxes. Pursuant to s. 348 of the MGA the taxes due a municipality are a special lien on the land. To allow the Defendant to recover its overdue taxes through the tax forfeiture process but then to impose a debt liability on the City for the overdue condominium contributions levied prior to it taking title to the property, would be to defeat its priority position and special lien.

[para98] In order to avoid this inconsistency between the CPA and the MGA, I would interpret the term "owner" as it appears in s. 31(2)(b) of the CPA as excluding a municipality which has taken title to the parcel through the tax forfeiture process but which has not yet obtained an absolute fee simple interest in the land on expiry of the redemption period (i.e. become the beneficial as well as the legal owner). This exclusion or limitation would operate in a similar manner as s. 434.1(1) of the MGA which prohibits any action against a municipality with respect to the state and condition of land shown on the tax arrears list unless the municipality aggravates the condition of the land after it gains the right to possession of the land or becomes the owner of the land under s. 424.

[para99] Under the MGA, if the land remains unsold at the end of the redemption period and the municipality requests the Registrar to issue a new certificate of title in the name of the municipality, the municipality must deposit in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Fund the lesser of the fair market value of the land and the amount of the remedial costs. Rather than imply a similar provision in the present case, I prefer to leave the matter to the legislature to resolve.

[para100] I recognize that my decision leaves open the question whether a purchaser of the subject lands from the Defendant would assume the liability for unpaid condominium fees. Again, I would suggest that that is a matter which should be addressed by the legislature. I would note, however, that such an outcome would not be inconsistent with s. 31(9) of the CPA.

[para101] Although I am prepared to limit the operation of s. 31(2)(b) as it relates to municipalities which have taken title on a tax forfeiture, I do not believe that a similar limitation is warranted with respect to s. 31(2)(a). Once the Defendant acquired title to the units in question, it was bound by the bylaws of the condominium corporation as would be any other owner. The contributions levied by way of resolution of the Board are an obligation of each owner, including the City. According to the parties' Agreed Statement of Facts, the Defendant ordinarily arranges for the tenants of tax forfeiture properties to pay utility and maintenance costs. If the City has not leased out the property, it takes responsibility for these costs itself. The condominium fees should be treated in a like manner.

D. Failure of the Defendant to Obtain Leave Under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act

[para102] The Defendant argues that because it failed to obtain leave under s. 69.3 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"), its title to the subject condominium units is not valid. However, I note that the Defendant became aware of the bankruptcy proceedings in July of 1993 and first pleaded a defect in its title on September 4, 1997. Nevertheless, it has taken no steps to reconvey the title to the subject properties to the trustee in bankruptcy. Nor does it appear that the City's title to the units has been challenged by the trustee.

[para103] Section 69.3 specifies in part that:

69.3(1) Subject to subsection (2) and sections 69.4 and 69.5, on the bankruptcy of any debtor, no creditor has any remedy against the debtor or the debtor's property, or shall commence or continue any action, execution or other proceedings, for the recovery of a claim provable in bankruptcy, until the trustee has been discharged.

(2) Subject to sections 79 and 127 to 135 and subsection 248(1), the bankruptcy of a debtor does not prevent a secured creditor from realizing or otherwise dealing with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed, unless the court otherwise orders, but in so ordering the court shall not postpone the right of the secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security, except as follows

[para104] The Defendant suggests that the proper procedure for the City to have followed was to apply under s. 69.4 for the stay to be lifted. Section 69.4 states:

69.4 A creditor who is affected by the operation of sections 69 to 69.31 or any other person affected by the operation of section 69.31 may apply to the court for a declaration that those sections no longer operate in respect of that creditor or person, and the court may make such a declaration, subject to any qualifications that the court considers proper, if it is satisfied

(a) that the creditor or person is likely to be materially prejudiced by the continued operation of those sections; or

(b) that it is equitable on other grounds to make such a declaration.

[para105] Forfeiture of property for non-payment of taxes was held to be a "remedy" for purposes of s. 69.3 in Re Westline Ranch Ltd. (1987), 65 C.B.R. (NS) 16 (B.C.C.A.), aff'd 60 C.B.R. (NS) 200 (B.C.S.C.).

[para106] The Defendant cites Amanda Designs Boutique Limited v. Charisma Fashions Limited (1972), 17 C.B.R. (NS) 16 (Ont. C.A.) in support of its contention that remedies which are pursued by a creditor when a stay is in place are ineffective to confer on the party pursuing those remedies any rights to the property involved. Kelly J.A., who delivered the judgment in that case, stated at pp. 19-20:

The object of the Bankruptcy Act is to ensure that the property of an insolvent person or corporation be made available for the benefit of creditors rateably subject only to the priorities established or recognized by the Act. It is inherent for the accomplishment of this purpose that, upon the Act coming into operation with respect to the property of a particular debtor, the rights of a creditor to pursue his own remedy, otherwise than as provided by the Act itself, should be suspended. In my opinion, for the attainment of this purpose, it is essential that, after the Act imposes its operation on or in respect of the property of a debtor no act or proceeding not recognized by the Act should improve the position of a creditor or confer upon him any right not held by him at the time the Act comes into effect with respect to the debtor [emphasis mine].

And further at p. 25:

From a consideration of the foregoing I conclude that proceedings taken or continued in violation of s. 40(1), even though irregular, rather than null and void, in the sense that probably they are capable of being regularized ex post facto by the granting of leave nunc pro tunc, unless and until so regularized (and then subject to any conditions which may be imposed as a condition of granting the leave) are ineffective to confer upon the party taking them any rights to property levied or leviable by a sheriff.

[para107] The concern of the court in Amanda Designs Boutique Limited, supra was with actions taken by an unsecured creditor. The BIA defines a creditor as a person who has a claim, unsecured, preferred by virtue of priority under s. 136 or secured, provable as a claim under the Act (s. 2(1)). Any claim or liability provable in proceedings under the Act by a creditor is a provable claim. A secured creditor includes a person holding a mortgage, hypothec, pledge, charge, lien or privilege on or against property of the debtor as security for a debt due or accruing due from the debtor (s. 2(1)). Although a secured creditor may decide to prove his or her claim in the bankruptcy, the creditor may act as a stranger to the bankruptcy by realizing on the security. The BIA does not affect the secured creditor's treatment of their security. The policy of the Act is not to interfere with secured creditors except as necessary to protect the estate as to any surplus on realization of the security.

136(1) Subject to the rights of secured creditors, the proceeds realized from the property of a bankrupt shall be applied in priority of payment as follows:

(e) municipal taxes assessed or levied against the bankrupt, within the two years immediately preceding his bankruptcy, that do not constitute a preferential lien or charge against the real property of the bankrupt, but not exceeding the value of the interest of the bankrupt in the property in respect of which the taxes were imposed as declared by the trustee

[para109] As Marshall J. observed at QL p. 3, s. 136 is confined to the assets that come into the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy and are available for distribution among the unsecured creditors. In view of its special lien for overdue taxes, a municipality in Alberta falls within the exception found in s. 136(1)(e) and its status as a secured creditor and priority are unchanged by the bankruptcy (see New Brunswick v. 786371 Ontario Ltd., [1999] N.B.J. No. 17 (N.B.C.A.)).

[para111] I am aware that the Defendant filed a Proof of Claim in the bankruptcy proceedings and that this Proof of Claim was disallowed. However, this did not occur until February 1977, some two and a half years after title to the subject units was registered in the name of the City. As I indicated previously, the Defendant's title to the units does not appear to have been challenged by the trustee in bankruptcy.

[para112] I am of the view that the City did not require leave to exercise its security outside of the bankruptcy (Imperial Lumber Co. v. Johnson, [1923] 1 D.L.R. 1125, (1923) 3 C.B.R. 707 (Alta. S.C.A.D.; L.W. Houlter and C.H. Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act 1994 (Scarborough, Ontario: Carswell, 1993)). Even if I am wrong in this regard, I am of the view that the Defendant's title is valid unless and until challenged by the bankruptcy trustee.

CONCLUSION

[para113] The Plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence of the resolutions passed by its Board of Managers in which annual contributions were levied to satisfy s. 31 of the CPA. Interest on the condominium fee assessments was dealt with only in the bylaws of the Plaintiff corporation. While that is sufficient to establish liability on the part of the Defendant for interest on contributions levied after the City took title to the subject units, there is no liability for interest on fees assessed prior to the City taking title in the absence of an express resolution calling for interest.

[para116] The Plaintiff shall have its costs of this action.

Crawford v. London (City)

Between Thelma Crawford, plaintiff, and The Corporation of the City of London, defendant, and Ruebsam Engineers Inc. and Stevens Kroetsch Architects Inc., third parties

Court File No. 30707/99

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Gillese J. Heard: April 19, 2000. Judgment: May 29, 2000. (31 paras.)

Counsel: C. Scott Ritchie, Q.C. and C.M. Wright, for the plaintiff. B. McCall, for the defendant. No one appearing for the third parties.

[para1] GILLESE J.:-- This is a motion for leave to appeal the decision of Justice Haines dated February 3, 2000, the effect of which was to permit the plaintiff to continue the within action under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992.

Facts

[para2] In the late 1980s, six separate condominium developments were erected on Jalna Boulevard, Conway Drive, Deveron Crescent and Trafalgar Street in the City of London.

[para3] On or about July 20, 1995, the City of London, through its Fire Prevention Division, required that all fireplaces installed in these condominiums be rendered inoperative as they presented significant fire hazards. In total, the directive affected 999 individual condominium units and 6 condominium corporations.

[para4] All wood burning fireplaces in the condominium complexes in question were converted to insert fireplaces at the expense of the individual unit owners.

[para5] The six condominium corporations have made no claims and have expressly stated that they will not bring any claims under the Condominium Act.

[para6] The plaintiffs allege that the Building Inspectors and Plans Inspectors as the City of London breached their duty to properly inspect drawings, construction plans, and the construction of these condominiums and approved building plans which were deficient and which did not comply with the Ontario Building Codes.

[para7] Thelma Crawford, the proposed representative plaintiff, was the owner of three condominium units which contained the defective fireplaces and which were located in different condominium corporations.

[para8] In addition to the current owners, the class consists of a large number of former condominium unit owners who paid to replace the defective fireplaces in 1995.

[para9] The plaintiff, Thelma Crawford seeks certification as the representative plaintiff in a class proceeding under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 on behalf of "[a] 11 persons who own or owned condominium units in which they were required to convert wood burning fireplaces to gas insert fireplaces" as a result of alleged deficiencies in the installation of the wood burning fireplaces.

[para10] The defendant, the Corporation of the City of London, brought a motion under Rule 20 for an order declaring that the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 did not apply to the special damages claim in this action.

[para11] Justice Haines held:

A plain reading of s. 37(a) of the CPA seems to preclude the application of that CPA where it can be said that the proceeding the plaintiff is seeking to pursue under the CPA may be brought by the plaintiff in a representative capacity under another Act. In such circumstances, a plaintiff or applicant must proceed under the other Act. This is not the case here. The plaintiff, a unit owner, cannot maintain a representative action under any, Act on behalf of current or former owners of any of the units in any of the subject condominium corporations. It may be that the unit owners will not be able to claim for damages to the common elements, but in my view that does not preclude the plaintiff from pursuing an action under the CPA for the damages the unit owners are entitled to claim.

Both counsel made submissions as to why one procedure was preferable to the other. These submissions may be important on a motion for certification but, in my view, are not relevant to the inquiry required under s. 37(a) of the CPA where the question is whether the subject proceeding is one which a plaintiff or applicant is permitted to bring in a representative capacity under another statute. If the answer to the question is "yes" the CPA does not apply. But if the answer is "no", as is my finding here, the action may be commenced under the CPA.

The Relevant Legislation

[para13] Section 37(a) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, states:

37. This Act does not apply to,

(a) a proceeding that may be brought in a representative capacity under another Act.

[para14] Section 14(1) of The Condominium Act provides;

14.(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of an owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such actions brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in proportion in which their interests are affected.

The Requirements for Leave to Appeal

[para15] Rule 62.02(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Regulation 194, provides that leave to appeal an interlocutory order of a Judge shall not be granted unless,

(a) there is a conflicting decision by another judge or court in Ontario or elsewhere on the matter involved in the proposed appeal and it is, in the opinion of the judge hearing the motion, desirable that leave to appeal be granted; or

(b) there appears to the judge hearing the motion good reason to doubt the correctness of the order in question and the proposed appeal involves matters of such importance that, in his or her opinion, leave to appeal should be granted.

ISSUE #1: Rule 62.02(4)(a) - IS THERE A CONFLICTING DECISION?

[para16] Counsel are agreed that there is no decision directly in conflict with that rendered by Justice Haines. However, defendant City argues that Justice Haines was guided by different legal principles than in other cases decided on s. 37 of the CPA thus, for the purpose of Rule 62.02(4)(a), it can be said that there are conflicting decisions.

[para17] The first decision that the defendant City points to is Millgate Financial Corp. v. B.F. Realty Holdings Ltd. [1994] O.J. No. 1968. In Millgate, s. 37(c) of the CPA, 1992 was found to exclude the application of the CPA, 1992 when a previous proceeding had been commenced in another province. I do not find the legal principles used in Millgate to be at odds with those used by Justice Haines. In Millgate, Justice Farley held that the word "proceeding" in s. 37 could not refer to a "class proceeding". He held that the word "proceeding" refers to and includes litigation. Clearly, Justice Haines does not treat the word "proceeding" as if it refers to class proceedings. He also treats it as referring to litigation.

[para18] In para. 32 of the Millgate case, Justice Farley states:

Thus, it would appear to me that the CP Act should receive a broad interpretation which, of course, would allow it to fulfill what its proponents say are its obvious benefits. However, if it is to be broadly interpreted to achieve that end, I do not see how one can narrowly interpret the definition of proceeding in s. 37(c).

[para19] In the passage quoted, Justice Farley adopted the principle that the word "proceeding" in s. 37(c) is to be interpreted broadly. Given that Justice Haines took a broad view of the word proceeding in s. 37(a), I find his approach consistent with the approach of Justice Farley. Therefore, I find no inconsistency in the principles used by Justice Haines with those used in Millgate.

[para20] The defendant City then points to Stern v. Imasco Ltd., [1999] O.J. No. 4235 and argues that the test employed by Justice Haines is substantially different from that used by Justice Cumming in Stern. In Stern, Cumming J. held that s. 37(a) did not apply to an action that might be brought by way of oppression remedy. The defendant argues that Justice Cumming established a "hallmark test" to be applied when considering s. 37(4) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992. The defendant submits that the hallmark test is as follows:

To be a representative proceeding under another statute, the alternative proceeding must be binding on the members of the class. The court must be able to ascertain the binding effect of the decision at the outset of the litigation.

[para21] My reading of Stern does not accord with the view proposed by the defendant City. I accept that Cumming J. states, in para. 68 of the Stern decision, that:

The hallmark of an action "brought in a representative capacity" under a statute is a declaration made expressly by the court, or implicitly by the statute, at the front and of the proceeding that the complainant's action will govern the rights and obligations of the members of the specifically defined represented class.

However, in my view, the sentences quoted are Justice Cumming's view of how to determine whether an action is brought in a representative capacity. It is not a test to determine whether s. 37(a) applies. In my view, the factors which drive Justice Cumming to his conclusion that s. 37(a) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 did not constitute a bar to a class proceeding that alleged a claim based upon oppression within the ambit of the CBCA are found in paras. 71-77. In those paragraphs, he draws attention to the obligation of the class representative and class counsel to act in the best interests of the class as a whole, including absent class members. He notes the court's broad discretion to determine the conduct of the class proceeding and the significant policy objectives underlying the Class Proceedings Act. He specifically notes, in paras. 73 and 74, the following:

Where the criteria of the CPA are met such that certification would be given, then a claim of oppression under the CBCA should logically be able to be brought by way of a class proceeding. A purposive interpretation is to be given to the CPA. The utilization of the CPA is complementary and facilitative to achieving the objectives of the oppression remedy provisions of the CBCA.

As well, the statement of claim in the instant situation includes asserted claims beyond the claim of oppression. It would be anomalous and counter-productive to the policy goals of the CPA if there could be a class proceeding in respect of non-oppression claims and yet the claim of oppression had to be pursued as a separate action because of s. 37(a) of the C.P.A.

I share the general observation of Blair, J. in Re First Marathon Inc., [1999] O.J. No. 2805 (S.C.J.) at para. 27, cited by defendant's counsel, that "[c]lass action proceedings and the statutory procedure created for dealing with and approving corporate arrangements are two quite different procedures with two quite different purposes." However, it does not follow that a class proceeding can never be procedurally appropriate in respect of an oppression action.

[para23] The reasoning of Justice Cumming set out above is consonant with that of Justice Haines. Justice Haines uses a purposive approach to the CPA. He notes that the statement of claim in this matter includes claims beyond those that a condominium corporation could bring. It is implicit in his reasoning that it would be counter-productive to the goals of the CPA if there could be a class proceeding in respect of some claims and yet the claim had to be pursued under the Condominium Act.

And, it is clear that he concludes that the statutory procedure created for dealing with condominium actions has different purposes than class action proceedings and that a class proceeding can be procedurally appropriate in respect of actions involving condominiums. Thus, I cannot conclude that there is a difference in the legal principles that guided Justice Haines from those that Justice Cumming followed.

[para24] In conclusion, I find there is no conflicting decision within the meaning of r. 62.02(4)(a). As a consequence, there is no need to consider whether it is desirable that leave to appeal be granted.

ISSUE #2: Rule 62.02(4)(b) - IS THERE GOOD REASON TO DOUBT THE CORRECTNESS OF THE ORDER IN QUESTION?

[para25] The defendant City argues that there are two grounds that provide good reason to doubt the correctness of Justice Haines' order. First, it argues that Haines J. interpreted s. 37(a) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 so as to read into it the words "by the plaintiff". That is, the defendant says that Haines J. interpreted s. 37(a) as if it reads as follows:

This Act (i.e. CPA, 1992) does not apply to a proceeding that the plaintiff may bring in a representative capacity under another Act.

[para26] The actual wording of s. 37(a) does not have the underlined words "the plaintiff". The defendant City argues that where the words of the statute are precise and ambiguous, the court may not depart from the plain meaning of the words unless to do so would lead to absurd consequences and that there is a presumption against reading words into a statute.

[para27] The second ground argued by the defendant City is that the effect of Justice Haines' decision is contrary to the purpose of s. 37(a) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, which is to exclude from its ambit those actions for which there are special statutory representative proceedings. Section 14(1) of the Condominium Act is such a special provision, so that argument runs, in that it creates a substantive right in condominium corporations to bring "class actions" on behalf of unit owners. Thus, the defendant City argues since condominium corporations are the only entity with the right to bring an action for the full extent of the damages, the effect of Justice Haines' decision is to create a situation in which multiple actions may be brought on the same facts. In effect, the defendant City argues that the order of Justice Haines leads to a situation where a condominium unit owner has a right to commence a class proceeding even if his or her condominium corporation has already commenced an action. It argues that where special provision has been made for condominium corporations to bring a representative action for the full extent of the damages without the complexity and expense of the procedure set out in the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, the provisions of the Condominium Act are frustrated by the commencement of a class proceeding.

[para28] The reality is that a remedy under the Condominium Act is not available to this class for a number of reasons. First, a condominium corporation must bring an action under the Condominium Act and the six condominium corporations in question have refused to bring such actions. I note that there is no mechanism under the Condominium Act to force a condominium corporation to advance a claim on behalf of the unit owners and that it appears that the condominium corporations are in conflict with the unit owners based on the defendant City's proposed third party claims against the condominium corporation. Second, an action under s. 14(1) by a condominium corporation can be brought only on behalf of current owners. There is no provision in s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act that allows a representative action to be brought by a condominium corporation on behalf of former unit owners. Third, this proceeding involves a claim initiated by a single unit owner with condominium units in two different condominium corporations. Under s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act, a single unit owner cannot advance a representative action for the members of a single condominium corporation much less for individuals who own units in different condominium corporations.

[para29] In my view, the inquiry required by s. 37(a) is "Is this action a proceeding that may be brought in a representative capacity under the Condominium Act?" It is only when the answer to that question is affirmative that the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 does not apply and the proceeding cannot be brought pursuant to its provisions. Since this proceeding cannot be brought in a representative capacity under the Condominium Act, s. 37(a) of the CPA does not apply. There is nothing in the approach or result of the decision of Haines J., therefore, that gives me reason to doubt the correctness of his decision. There is no need to consider the second arm of the test in r. 62.02(4)(b).

Conclusion

[para30] Accordingly, the motion for leave to appeal is dismissed.

[para31] Counsel may make written submissions as to costs, both entitlement and quantum, within 20 days of the release of these reasons.

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Finlayson and Carthy JJ.A. and Simmons J. (ad hoc) Heard: September 15, 2000. Judgment: October 16, 2000. (28 paras.)

On appeal from the judgment of Justice Roydon Kealey dated November 19, 1999.

Counsel: John A.M. Judge and Adrian C. Lang, for the appellant. Kenneth Radnoff and Beverly Johnson, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] FINLAYSON J.A.:-- The appellant, Claude-Alain Burdet in Trust (the "Trust") appeals the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Kealey declaring that 18 condominium units, 16 of which are presently owned by the Trust, are entitled to a total of three votes instead of the 18 stipulated by s. 22(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. C.26.

Facts

[para2] Condominium Corporation No. 396 ("Condo 396") was developed in 1987 by 648578 Ontario Inc. (the "developer"). It is a 33 unit commercial condominium complex located at 112 Nelson Street in Ottawa with units on Levels A, 1 and 2. The respondent, Sheila Eberts ("Eberts"), purchased one unit in 1987 and has since leased it out as commercial space. The Trust purchased 18 units in 1997 and has since sold two of those units to third parties. The 16 units currently owned by the Trust are located on Level A, which is the basement. The trustee, Dr. Burdet, personally owns an additional three units located on Levels 1 and 2.

[para3] When Condo 396 was first advertised for sale, the development application of February 2, 1987, described the 33 units as "15 industrial commercial units and 18 storage units". However, when Condo 396 was first registered by Declaration, it provided that the 18 Level A units were unrestricted in use which entitled each unit to one vote in accordance with the Condominium Act. At that time, all 33 units were owned by the developer.

[para4] Before title to any of the units was transferred, an amendment to the Recitals of the Declaration was made on December 10, 1987 and registered in Land Titles. It clarified that Condo 396 contained 33 commercial units. Notwithstanding this change in the Recitals from when she purchased her unit in 1987, Eberts proceeded to close the sale without objection and without exercising her right of rescission. The trial judge found that she was not aware of the clarification made to the Declaration but it is clear from her cross-examination on her affidavit that she did concede that she was aware of the change. In any event, since the change to the Recitals was registered under the Land Title system, she is deemed to have knowledge of it.

[para5] In December 1987, the developer entered into agreements of purchase and sale for all 33 units. Eberts was one of the purchasers, acquiring unit 1 on level 2. On December 11, 1987 the 18 Level A units were transferred to 685310 Ontario Inc. in trust for Soloway, Wright, a law firm. These basement units were used to store files and records. On January 25, 1988, Soloway, Wright entered into an undertaking stipulating that as long as it remained the owner of the Level A units, it would not exercise more than three votes.

[para6] On May 20, 1988, Condo 396 brought an application pursuant to s. 3(8) of the Condominium Act, against the developer in the Ontario Court (General Division) for a declaration that the Level A storage units did not have voting rights. During the hearing of the application, Susan Gibson, a lawyer at Soloway, Wright, gave evidence that her firm was not prepared to restrict its ability to pass title to the 18 units, each with a separate vote. Ms. Gibson also gave evidence that the undertaking was provided to demonstrate the firm's "good faith" that it had no intention of controlling Condo. 396. No consideration was given for Soloway, Wright's voluntary limit to its voting rights.

[para7] The application was denied by Flanigan J. on June 14, 1988. In his brief endorsement, he stated:

[para8] After the application failed, on January 25, 1989 Soloway, Wright entered into a settlement stipulating that it would take steps to permanently reduce the voting rights of the Level A units from 18 to three if all the necessary consents were obtained from the unit owners and the Declaration amended. However, the necessary consents were not obtained, the settlement letter was not registered on title against the Declaration or included in the archives of Condo 396, nor was it appended to any minutes of the unit owners' meetings.

[para9] On June 30, 1989 Condo 396 registered By-Law No. 4 against the Declaration which purported to reduce the 18 Level A voting rights to three. By-Law No. 4 was registered despite the fact that it had not been approved by the unit owners at a special meeting as required by s. 28(2) of the Condominium Act and consents had not yet been obtained from all unit owners. The By-Law could have no effect until an amendment to the Declaration was registered on title with the necessary consent of all unit owners, in light of s. 28(1) of the Condominium Act, which stipulates that a by-law must not be "contrary to this Act or to the declaration".

[para10] Over a period of several months in 1990, Dr. Burdet personally purchased two units on Level 2. In both instances, Dr. Burdet received an estoppel certificate with no mention of the purported changes to the 18 Level A voting rights. There was evidence that Dr. Burdet was present at the annual general meetings from 1991 to 1995 where the change to the voting scheme was approved. He attended his first meeting on April 18, 1991. At that meeting, Eberts contends that the minutes of the meeting reveal that all signatures had been previously obtained to amend the Declaration but, because they had been misplaced, the signatures had to be obtained again. In his affidavit, Dr. Burdet claims he did not receive all of the necessary signatures from the owners and mortgagees. In addition, he asserts that none of the documents he received were originals. Thus, he alleges that he did not, nor did anyone else, have the proper authority to register the amendment to the Declaration.

[para11] On January 31, 1997, Dr. Burdet's Trust acquired the 18 Level A units from Soloway, Wright. At the annual general meeting on February 26, 1997, Dr. Burdet took the position that he held 18 votes for the units and became the president. No amendment was made to the Declaration to limit the voting rights of 18 Level A units. In 1997, the Trust sold two Level A units to third parties.

[para12] Eberts brought an application to amend the Declaration to provide that the voting rights of all 18 Level A units be permanently reduced to three votes, that alternatively the "settlement" with Soloway Wright be enforced, and in the further alternative that the respondent Trust and the owners of its units from time to time be prevented from exercising more than three votes. On November 19, 1999, Kealey J. granted the application and ordered the voting rights of the 18 Level A units be reduced to three.

Reasons of the applications judge

[para13] In ordering that the voting rights of the Level A units be reduced to three votes, the applications judge found that Soloway, Wright's settlement agreement was binding on all present and future unit owners. He also found that Dr. Burdet, a director of Condo 396, accepted responsibility for completing the formalization of the January 1989 agreement to reduce the voting rights of the basement units to three votes. He further found that the appellant Trust's conduct was unfair and that equity required the court's intervention under s. 3(8) of the Condominium Act to invoke the doctrine of proprietary estoppel. He reasoned that the Trust had notice of the reduction of voting rights for the 18 Level A units as arranged in the settlement agreement. He further held that it would be unfair to allow the 18 basement storage units (which made up 16 percent of the common elements) to have the power to control the entire condominium.

[para14] These additional findings were made by the applications judge:

Burdet's action or inaction which thwarted the amendment to the declaration repeats the initial wrongfulness by the developer and re-activates the detriment to the applicant insofar as her proprietary interest is concerned. The applicant and other unit holders ceded their rights to fully litigate the developer-owners December 1987 conduct in exchange for the agreement of limited voting rights for Level A. Burdet, as an owner director of the Corporation, further lulled the applicant and others by apparently accepting the responsibility of completing the formalization of the January 1989 agreement, while he did nothing for a year. Then, in direct conflict with such a commitment, he with the express intent of controlling the Corporation, purchased the 18 basement units and voted himself in as president.

Generally, equity is available to avoid injustice and protect the interests (property or otherwise) of society and individuals especially where such injustice arises as a result of unfair, unscrupulous and opportunistic conduct which accords advantage to the actor over the reasonable, fair and lawful expectancy of another when all is taken into account. Here, in my view the doctrine of proprietary estoppel applies to the facts.

Issues

1) Can the express provisions of the Condominium Act be overridden by principles of contract or equity to reduce the number of votes for the 18 Level A units to three?

2) Do the principles of proprietary estoppel apply?

Analysis

Issue 1: Application of principles of contract and equity to condominium voting rights

[para15] The application under appeal is misconceived. Condominiums are creatures of statute. The rights of the parties are governed by the documents authorized by the Condominium Act and can be changed only in the manner provided for therein. In this case there were a number of attempts to change the ratio of voting rights to condominium units without complying with the provisions of the Condominium Act. They all had to fail.

[para16] The first was the undertaking given by Soloway, Wright which was a unilateral agreement between a unit owner and the condominium corporation. This was ineffective because s. 60 of the Condominium Act provides that the "Act applies despite any agreement to the contrary."

[para17] The second attempt was the ill-advised application before Flanigan J. which he properly dismissed on the ground that the requested declaration exceeded his jurisdiction under s. 3(8) of the Act. Subsection 3(8) is restricted to amending a declaration where the motions judge "is satisfied that an amendment is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency in the declaration arising out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration."

[para18] The third attempt was the passing of By-Law No. 4 which could not prevail because it was inconsistent with the Declaration.

[para19] The fourth attempt was the application under appeal which should have been dismissed for the same reason as the one before Flanigan J. Private agreements cannot override the provisions of the statute and equity can only prevail over an express statutory scheme in the rarest of circumstances of which this is not one. Moreover, s. 3(8) of the Condominium Act allows a judge to amend a declaration, but only for a collective purpose. The section cannot be used to enforce against third parties agreements between individual unit holders. Nor can the equitable doctrine of proprietary estoppel be utilized in the face of clear statutory direction.

[para20] In this case, the Declaration stipulated that there are 33 units. Subsection 22(1) of the Condominium Act provides:

All voting by owners shall be on the basis of one vote per unit and, where two or more persons entitled to vote in respect of one unit disagree on their vote, the vote in respect of that unit shall not be counted.

The wording of s. 22(1) is clear. To simply reduce the voting rights of the 18 Level A units to three would be contrary to s. 22(1). What is necessary is an amendment to the Declaration re-classifying the controversial units as storage space so as to make it clear that they are not units at all within the meaning of the Act.

[para21] Section 60 of the Condominium Act makes clear that regardless of the equitable nature of Soloway, Wright's settlement agreement, or the "unfair, unscrupulous and opportunistic" conduct of the appellant Trust, the agreement cannot supersede the express provisions of the Act: Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 347 v. Trendsetter Developments Ltd. (1992), 9 O.R. (3d) 481 at 490 (C.A.). Furthermore, ss. 3(4) and (5) of the Condominium Act provide that any amendment to a declaration that is inconsistent with the terms of the Act will be void and of no effect:

3(4) Subject to subsection (5), the declaration may be amended only with the consent of all owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests.

3(5) Where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly.

[para22] I accept the appellant's submission that the combined effect of ss. 3(4), 3(5), 22(1) and 60 reflect the underlying policy of the Condominium Act which embraces the principle of one vote per unit. This right is fundamental and necessary to prevent any abuse that would be caused if contracting out of the Act were otherwise permitted.

Issue 2: Application of principles of proprietary estoppel

[para23] Proprietary estoppel is a form of promissory estoppel. It is commonly supposed that estoppel cannot give rise to a cause of action, but proprietary estoppel appears to be an exception to that rule: see Lord Denning in Crabb v. Arun District Council, [1976] 1 Ch. 179 at 187-188 (C.A.). But there must be an estoppel. The basic tenets of proprietary estoppel are described in McGee, Snell's Equity, 13 ed. (2000) at pp. 727-28:

Without attempting to provide a precise or comprehensive definition, it is possible to summarize the essential elements of proprietary estoppel as follows:

(i) An equity arises where:

(a) the owner of land (O) induces, encourages or allows the claimant (C) to believe that he has or will enjoy some right or benefit over O's property;

(b) in reliance upon this belief, C acts to his detriment to the knowledge of O; and

(c) O then seeks to take unconscionable advantage of C by denying him the right or benefit which he expected to receive.

(iv) The relief which the court may give may be either negative, in the form of an order restraining O from asserting his legal rights, or positive, by ordering O to either grant or convey to C some estate, right or interest in or over his land, to pay C appropriate compensation, or to act in some other way.

[para24] One has only to look at the above to understand that estoppel has no application to the facts of this case. This is a claimant (Eberts) who is an owner of one unit attempting to obtain relief against another owner (the Trust) based on some representations said to have been made by the Trust's predecessor in title (Soloway, Wright) to the developer of the condominium project; a representation, if it amounted to anything, that was not made to Eberts and on which she did not rely nor act to her detriment. Eberts bought her unit in 1987, long before Dr. Burdet or the Trust was involved and as the record seems to indicate, even before Soloway, Wright acquired its title. Accordingly, there was no inducement or representation made by the developer or Soloway, Wright to Eberts upon which she could have acted to her detriment. Furthermore, the representation was simply that Soloway, Wright would not vote its full units while it remained an owner of the units in question. It did not purport to be binding on its successors in title. As a conclusionary point, this issue was litigated before Flanigan J. and was terminated adversely to Eberts. This judgment, if not res judicata, is at least issue estoppel against Eberts.

[para26] In his reasons, the applications judge held that "Burdet's action or inaction repeats the initial wrongfulness by the developer and reactivates the detriment to the applicant and other unit holders insofar as her proprietary interest is concerned". This finding is in error on a number of levels. The developer had not wronged Eberts. If it had, Dr. Burdet had nothing to do with it. There was no detriment to Eberts to re-activate. Ebert's proprietary interest remained unchanged from the day she signed her application to purchase her unit to the present day.

[para28] Accordingly, for the reasons stated, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment below and enter a judgment dismissing the application. The appellant should receive its costs, here and below.

FINLAYSON J.A. CARTHY J.A. -- I agree. SIMMONS J. (ad hoc) -- I agree.

Court File No. 99-CV179022

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Lamek J. Heard: October 16-17, 19-20, 2000. Judgment: January 18, 2001. (39 paras.)

Counsel: Angela Assuras, for the plaintiff. Fred Levitt, for the defendant.

[para1] LAMEK J. (endorsement):-- In this unhappy action, the plaintiff, Vernon Evered ("Evered") seeks repayment of an amount of $20,000 U.S. that he had advanced to discharge the mortgage on a condominium owned by the defendant, Bernice Binstock ("Binstock") in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. In effect, he seeks to repudiate a written agreement entered into by the parties on November 9, 1997 on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration flowing from Binstock. In a last-minute amendment to his Statement of Claim, he seeks further alternative relief, to which I shall refer later.

[para3] A romantic and sexual relationship soon developed between them. They spent several months together in Fort Lauderdale, Florida in the Winter of 1997-8, living in a condominium owned by Binstock. She had bought the condominium in 1994 for approximately $27,000 U.S. and it was subject to a mortgage held, originally, by California Federal Bank and later, by First Nationwide Mortgage.

[para4] While the parties were in Florida, their relationship began to deteriorate. From the evidence I have heard and from the letters written by Evered to Binstock (which were in evidence), it is apparent to me that Evered was given to bouts of intense jealousy. He was greatly upset when Binstock received a call from and went to visit a former lover who was dying. He was very suspicious about calls to Binstock from "Terry" who was said by Binstock to be a decorator friend with whom she had never had any romantic involvement. In short, I am satisfied that Evered was extremely possessive, suspicious and jealous in the relationship.

[para5] In April, 1998, the parties returned to Toronto where they maintained separate residences. It appeared that the relationship was over. But while they were still in Florida, there had been discussions about Binstock's financial situation. Evered had said that he wanted to "help her" with the condominium and had mentioned the possibility of an interest-free loan. He was outraged when, on their return to Toronto, with their relationship apparently at an end, Binstock asked if she could still have the loan. He refused.

[para6] Notwithstanding their estrangement, Evered sent a birthday card to Binstock on her birthday in August, 1998. He wrote her a letter on September 21, 1998. I read that letter as manifesting considerable concern for and tenderness towards Binstock. She obviously took the same message from it because in late October (Evered had been in England) she telephoned him and the relationship was resumed.

[set out entire agreement]

[para8] I accept the evidence of Binstock that although she actually typed the document on Evered's computer, the text of the agreement, with the exception of the second sentence in the third paragraph, was language dictated by Evered. I attach no significance to that, however Binstock's Statement of Defence alleges, somewhat half-heartedly, that she was afforded neither the time to consider the agreement or the opportunity to obtain independent legal advice. I am satisfied that she knew exactly what she was signing and understood the agreement and its ramifications and implications.

[para9] The agreement was executed by the parties before a notary on the morning of November 9, the day on which Evered was to be admitted to hospital for installation of his pacemaker. Upon leaving the notary's office, they went to the Toronto-Dominion Bank, where Evered had an account, and obtained a U.S. dollar draft for $20,716.85 in favour of the mortgagee of Binstock's Florida condominium. The funds for the draft came from Evered's account. They then went to the Sheraton Centre and mailed the draft to the mortgagee. Evered then reported to the hospital. At his request, Binstock did not accompany him into the hospital.

[para10] Following Evered's discharge from hospital, the parties spent the Winter together in Florida, again at Binstock's condominium. In accordance with their agreement, Evered paid two-thirds of the monthly expenses (taxes, insurance, maintenance) giving Binstock $200 per month. He continued to do so until April, 1999.

[para11] In May and June, 1999, an unfortunate situation arose that led to the ultimate break-up of the parties' relationship. On May 15, Evered gave to Binstock a cheque drawn on his account with the Toronto-Dominion Bank in the amount of $1,000 U.S. in payment of his share of the condominium expenses for the following six months. His expectation was that Binstock would simply send the cheque to Florida where it would be deposited in the account that she had opened for the payment of condominium expenses. In fact, the defendant considered that there would likely be less delay in arranging for the payment of expenses if she deposited the cheque in her account in Toronto and then had the money sent by electronic transfer to Florida. When she went to deposit the cheque at the Bank of Montreal, she was told, after the bank's stamp had been endorsed on it, that there was some question as to whether the funds to be credited and transferred to Florida would be U.S. or Canadian dollars. She therefore retrieved the cheque. She says that she told Evered about the difficulty. He says he was told only that the cheque had not been honoured. He stopped payment on the cheque. In the meantime, Binstock had deposited the cheque into her account at the C.I.B.C. But when it was cleared through to Evered's bank, it was returned because of the stop payment order.

[para12] Evered then, on June 4, issued a replacement cheque to Binstock, this time in the amount of $800 U.S. This time Binstock went to the Toronto-Dominion Bank on which the cheque was drawn and tried to cash it, intending to use the proceeds to buy a bank draft to send to the account in Florida. Evered's cheque recited on its face that it was for deposit into Binstock's Florida account, giving the number of that account. The teller at the Toronto-Dominion Bank offered to call Evered to seek approval for the cheque's being cashed but Binstock declined that offer, retrieved the cheque and mailed it to her account in Florida.

[para14] There is not a scrap of evidence that Binstock had any intention of making any use of either of the two cheques for any purpose other than that for which they were given to her. Evered, in my view, gave way to utterly unfounded suspicion of the motives and objectives of Binstock. But from that point, the situation and the relationship were beyond salvage.

[para15] In mid-June, 1999, a written proposal - looking very like an ultimatum - was made by Evered. It was rejected.

[para16] Evered now says that there was a total failure of consideration for his advance, entitling him to repudiate the agreement and recover the monies advanced. He says that Binstock failed to convey an interest in the condominium, contrary to her agreement. Binstock makes two responses. First, she says that Evered instructed her that he did not want his name on the title to the condominium. In not making a formal transfer of his two-thirds interest, she was simply complying with his stated wishes. According to Binstock - and in this regard her evidence is corroborated by Evered's evidence and actions, - Evered, throughout their relationship, was very concerned that there be no indicia of cohabitation between them. He was clearly anxious lest Binstock acquire any rights against his estate. His not wanting any public record of his co-ownership of the condominium with Binstock is entirely consistent with that concern and with his not wanting a deed to the property. Second, Binstock says that she was prepared at all times to have Evered's name on the title (as she put it "give him a deed") if he had asked for it.

[para17] It is apparent to me that what Evered wanted - and the desire intensified as the relationship cooled - was some formal acknowledgment of and protection for the two-thirds interest that he had bought. In his testimony, he referred to his wanting "a lien" in the nature of a mortgage interest. But it is plain from the evidence that he at no time took any steps or sought any advice as to how he could achieve his objective. No proof of Florida law was offered by either party to show what, if anything, could have been done, whether by registration of the agreement or some other document on title or by any other means.

[para18] Binstock argues that there has not been a total failure of consideration on her part. On the contrary, Evered has received exactly what he bargained for. So far as Binstock is concerned, Evered acquired a two-thirds interest in the condominium and the right to have his heirs share pro rata in the proceeds of the sale of the condominium after the death of the survivor of the parties. And he lived in the condominium for several months in the Winter of 1998-9, after the agreement had been made, including some weeks without Binstock.

[para19] This is not, in my view, a case for repudiation or rescission of the agreement. There has not been a total failure of consideration. There is no basis on which Evered may simply get his money back and walk away.

[para20] Equally, there is no basis for a finding that Binstock at any time breached the agreement. No evidence of any breach was adduced. There were merely the allegations that Binstock failed to transfer formally to Evered the interest that he had acquired; I have already dealt with that matter.

[para21] And beyond any question, even if there were an entitlement to compensatory damages or other relief, Evered has failed to show any basis for an award of punitive or exemplary damages.

[para22] The action is dismissed.

[para23] I refer now to the defence and counterclaim of Binstock. It is not necessary to consider the substance of several of the defences raised but I refer to them because they may have a bearing on the disposition that I may make as to costs.

[para24] The pleadings raised several; defences, all but one of which were abandoned, either formally or by inaction, during the course of trial. No evidence whatsoever was adduced to support the plea that the $20,000 U.S. was a gift. It was only when I asked, during argument, whether Counsel intended to continue to assert that position that Counsel for Binstock advised me and Evered's Counsel that that defence was abandoned. Similarly, at the end of the trial, Mr. Levitt told me that he was abandoning the assertion that this Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the action. The choice of law position raised in the pleadings (i.e. that Florida law applies to the argument) was not argued and there was no evidence of what the allegedly applicable Florida law would be.

[para25] The only defence came down to the proposition that would feed the counterclaim - that the only breach of the agreement was by Evered when he ceased to pay the agreed contributions to the monthly expenses of the condominium. That breach began with the month of May, 1999, and has continued to this day. At a monthly amount of $200 U.S. the arrears total $3,600 U.S. Binstock counterclaims that amount.

[para26] She also seeks declarations that she is entitled to accept Evered's breach and treat the agreement as at an end, no interest being conferred on Evered and there being no obligation to return the $20,000 U.S. or any part of it.

[para28] The other relief for which Binstock counterclaims causes me much more concern. In the circumstances of this case, I am reluctant not only to deprive Evered of any interest in the condominium but also to order that his advance is totally lost. He may, in some respects, have acted badly towards Binstock but I am satisfied that in respect of this advance, he was, to a considerable extent, motivated by a genuine desire to assist Binstock. Nothing in the evidence persuaded me that the plaintiff committed any breach - let alone a fundamental breach - of the agreement, that would justify giving to Binstock the remedy she sought in her counterclaim.

[para29] In the course of argument, Mr. Levitt suggested that if I were not disposed to grant the relief that his client sought, I should declare the agreement to be subsisting. I pointed out to Mr. Levitt that he had not sought such resolution in his pleading and although it would probably flow as the inevitable consequence if I did not grant the relief sought by either party, it would make more sense if such a disposition were expressly sought, in the alternative, in the Statement of Defence and Counterclaim. After conferring with his client, Mr. Levitt moved for leave to amend. Ms. Assuras, for Evered, asked for time to consider whether she should adduce further oral evidence or set out in an affidavit the prejudice that Evered would suffer if leave were given to amend. I confess that I did not see what evidence could be led to respond to the newly-claimed relief but I gave her twenty-four hours to consider. I tried to make it clear that I would not insist on an affidavit and that any evidence could come before me by whatever means should be most appropriate and convenient.

[para30] The trial resumed at 4 p.m. on Thursday, October 19 to hear submissions with respect to the prejudice, if any, that would flow from the granting of leave to amend. Ms. Assuras required that a court reporter be in attendance, although she did not propose to adduce any testimony. At that late hour, no reporter was available and the matter was therefore put over until 9 a.m. on Friday, October 20, when Ms. Assuras made her submissions.

[para31] She urged me not to allow the requested amendment although she raised nothing that, in my view, amounted to prejudice. I explained to her that, in my opinion, the amendment was probably not necessary as it merely addressed the situation that would arise if I were to refuse to grant the main remedy sought respectively by the plaintiff and the defendant. I granted leave to amend, giving oral reasons therefor, and then entertained the submissions of Counsel as to the counterclaim. Thereafter, Ms. Assuras delivered her reply submissions in the main action and, at the end, filed a proposed amended Statement of Claim, in which Evered sought, in the alternative, essentially the same relief as that sought in the amended Counterclaim i.e. that the agreement continue in effect. Mr. Levitt raised no objection and did not allege prejudice. The amendment was allowed.

[para32] If, as I have concluded, neither party has the right to declare the agreement at an end, Evered does not get his money back and Binstock does not get to keep the money free of any interest of Evered in the condominium. The result is that the agreement goes on and is to be performed in accordance with its terms. This is not an unreasonable result. On its face, the agreement is not conditional upon or co-terminus with the continued relationship between the parties. Indeed, in his evidence at trial, Evered acknowledged that it was his understanding that the agreement would continue to bind him and Binstock even if they were no longer together. In all the circumstances, the only possible outcome of this action that will not do extreme damage to one or another of the parties is a declaration that the agreement, subject to certain terms, is still in effect and continues to bind the parties. But before considering the terms on which the agreement is to continue, I pause to address an issue raised in the plaintiff's amended Statement of Claim: that the plaintiff, having been deprived of the use of the condominium, should be compensated for that deprivation by an award of damages in the amount of $10,000.

[para33] I do not see Evered's entitlement on the basis asserted to damages in the amount claimed or in any amount. Evered's rights and obligations under the agreement continued (as he himself understood) whether he and Binstock remained together or not. And if they were not together, then (subject to what I shall say later), it may be that Evered will be or will feel unwelcome in the condominium. That was surely in the cards as a possibility at all times from the date of the agreement. I do not see that a situation that was - or should have been - always in the contemplation of the parties gives rise to a damage claim when it actually comes to pass.

[para34] In my judgment, the agreement continues but should be subject to the following terms. First, that the parties promptly obtain advice from Florida counsel as to how Evered's interest in the condominium can best be protected and that they follow that advice.

[para35] Second, Evered's obligation to contribute two-thirds of the monthly expenses of the condominium can be satisfied in whatever way the parties may agree. He may choose to make regular payments, whether monthly, quarterly, or annually. Or the parties may agree that the obligation does not have to be satisfied on an ongoing, regular basis but may be accrued and deducted from the share of the proceeds that will eventually go to the Evered's estate. This may have some attraction but would have to have some provision built into it for interest to be paid by Evered or his estate on the unpaid amounts. And no matter how the expense obligation is satisfied, the parties should have an agreed method to quantify of the expenses and any changes that may occur from time to time.

[para36] Finally - and I do not make this a term of any Judgment - it is unfortunate that Evered, a part owner of the condominium and an ongoing contributor to its maintenance, should be precluded from using it. It would be unrealistic to impose a regime for making the condominium available for the parties at different times - and I sincerely hope that that would not be necessary. The parties are adult people who clearly at one time felt great affection and regard for each other. Now that this litigation is at an end, I do hope they can see their way clear to make a reasonable accommodation for their separate use of the condominium.

[para37] As for sale of the condominium, the time of sale is addressed in the agreement which will continue to govern unless a sale occurs beyond the parties' control (e.g. by a receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, or taxing authority) or by further agreement between the parties.

[para38] The question of the costs of the trial has troubled me. On the one hand, Binstock appears to have been successful, although not on the basis originally claimed. On the other hand, Evered has, no doubt, been put to considerable unnecessary expense because his Counsel had to prepare to meet evidence and arguments referred to in the pleadings that never materialised at the trial and of whose abandonment Mr. Levitt gave little or no warning prior to trial. The statement of defence upon which Binstock went to trial contained everything but the kitchen sink - and I would not have been surprised to find even that receptacle lurking in there somewhere. I do not blame Binstock for that lack of focus; she was in the hands of her solicitors. But there is no justification for requiring Evered to pay Binstock's costs. In the result, therefore, I make no Order as to costs. Each party will bear his or her own costs of the litigation.

Francis v. Condominium Plan No. 8222909

Between Brent Francis, Stan George Wong and Cynthia Ewanus, plaintiffs, and The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 8222909, defendant

Action No. 9803 02960

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Master Quinn Heard: June 12, 2000. Judgment: June 27, 2000. (27 paras.)

Counsel: Carmen L. Plante, for Brent Francis. Louis Belzil, for the defendant.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

[para1] MASTER QUINN:-- This is an application by the defendant condominium corporation for security for costs.

Background

[para2] The defendant corporation is made up of 221 condominium units. 211 units are located in a high rise building and 10 units are located separate from the high rise building. These 10 are townhouses. The plaintiff Brent Francis owns eight of the townhouses.

[para3] In September 1994 the corporation amended its by laws to grant a 65% rebate of condo fees to townhouse owners. The amended by law was registered September 14, 1994. When the plaintiffs purchased their townhouses they were provided with the amended by laws.

[para4] The assessment of condominium fees was made on a unit factor basis which caused townhouse owners to be liable for more than what was thought to be their proper share. The by laws were amended to permit this situation to be corrected by allowing a 65% rebate to the townhouse owners on condominium fees.

[para5] At the time the by laws were amended all of the units were owned by the developer. By December 1996 the developer was no longer involved and management of the condominiums affairs was being performed by a Board of Managers.

[para6] The Board of Managers received a legal opinion that the amended by laws were ultra vires, because the Condominium Property Act did not allow assessment of fees on anything other than unit factors.

[para7] At that time an amendment to the Condominium Property Act had been passed by the legislature (in May 1996) but it had never been proclaimed. It is still not proclaimed.

[para8] The Board of Managers took the position the amended by law was ultra vires. The plaintiffs took the position the amendment was intra vires.

[para9] A standstill agreement was reached between the Board and the townhouse owners that the matter would not be put before the courts and they would abide the outcome of the as yet unproclaimed legislation. It was thought that at least some of the problems between the plaintiffs and the Board would be resolved when the legislation was proclaimed.

[para10] Under the standstill agreement the corporation would continue to collect only the amount of $163.43 per townhouse unit, which was the amount payable pursuant to the amended by law.

[para11] Brent Francis had purchased eight townhouses as a business venture, and he wanted to sell them. He requested estoppel certificates for his units.

[para12] The estoppel certificates the Board provided were not what Mr. Francis wanted. They indicated the rebate was invalid and that further condominium fees were owing in respect of each townhouse.

[para13] When the standstill agreement was made everyone involved apparently expected it would be proclaimed soon.

[para14] The delay apparently became intolerable to Mr. Francis because he could not get estoppel certificates he wanted and that situation made it difficult for him to sell his townhouses because he could not tell prospective purchasers there was no danger of arrears of condominium fees being claimed from them.

[para15] In any case the plaintiff townhouse owners have commenced this action which has been amended twice. The amended amended statement of claim was filed April 25, 2000.

[para16] The plaintiff Brent Francis lives out of the jurisdiction and there is no evidence he owns assets in the province. He does own the condominiums, but there is no evidence of the amount of his equity in them.

[para18] The plaintiff submit the problem they are having arose from the amendment to the by laws of the condominium corporation and that the condominium corporation should have commenced legal proceedings for determination of the question as to the validity of the amendments. If matters had occurred in that fashion the present plaintiffs would have been supporting the view that the by laws as amended were valid and they would not have been required to furnish security for costs.

[para19] Both the plaintiffs and the defendant in the present circumstances are suffering the consequences of the actions of the developer of the project which was in control when the by laws were amended.

[para20] Both the plaintiffs and the defendant corporation have an interest in obtaining closure on the debate about the validity of the amended by laws.

[para21] If the said by laws are ultimately found to be valid the plaintiff Brent Francis will not be required to pay any costs and any security he was required to furnish would be released to him.

[para22] On the other hand if the said by laws are found to be invalid he will have lost this action and costs would normally be assessed against him.

[para23] I am of the opinion that security for costs should be furnished by Brent Francis. I am none the less inclined to give some favorable consideration to the argument that he was in an invidious situation due to the non-proclamation of the amendments to the Condominium Property Act and the failure of the condominium corporation to take any action to determine the validity or non validity of the aforesaid by law.

[para24] The condominium corporation was in a much better position than Francis was to just wait to see what would eventually happen.

[para25] Moreover, this case is mostly a question of law, and the trial should not have to last as long as the defendant corporation thinks.

[para27] Costs of the present application will be in the cause.

Lear v. Klapstein

Between Karey Lear and Karey Lear Realty Ltd., plaintiffs, and Grant Klapstein and Cove Properties Ltd., defendants

Action No. 9803 09457

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Ritter J. Judgment: May 5, 2000. Filed: May 8, 2000. (62 paras.)

Counsel: Robert M. Curtis, Q.C., for the plaintiffs. Gerhard Seifner, for the defendants.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

RITTER J.:--

I. Introduction

[para1] This matter involves a claim by the Plaintiffs for real estate commissions they say are owing to them by the Defendants respecting two condominium developments developed by the Defendants and for which the Plaintiffs had an exclusive listing but which listing was purportedly terminated by the Defendants. The Defendants have advanced a counterclaim alleging that they over paid the Plaintiffs, and that the Plaintiff should re-imburse the Defendants for part of the real estate commissions previously paid. Little evidence was advanced with respect to the counterclaim and no real argument was made regarding it. If the Defendants are not abandoning the counterclaim, it is my determination that it is dismissed.

[para2] This matter involves the interpretation of a contract, the determination of the nature of the relationship between the parties, and the question of the manner in which the contract was allegedly terminated. The matter also engages consideration of the Parole Evidence Rule as both parties led evidence regarding the negotiations surrounding the creation of the contract, and each party suggests that there are vague and uncertain terms in the contract that require parole evidence for their interpretation.

[para3] In order to arrive at my decision, it is my view that a fairly detailed analysis of the factual matters giving rise to this action is required. In addition, it is my intention to consider several areas of law and relate factual considerations to those areas. Finally, I will deal with the question of damages and costs.

II. Factual Matters

[para4] The Plaintiff, Karey Lear, is a licenced real estate agent. She conducts her business through a company incorporated and wholly owned by herself, being Karey Lear Realty Ltd., the other Plaintiff.

[para5] The Defendant, Cove Properties Ltd., is also a corporation operating under the laws of the Province of Alberta and is wholly owned by the Defendant, Grant Klapstein. The Defendant, Cove Properties Ltd., is in the business of the development and sale of condominium properties throughout Alberta, and more particularly, in the city of Edmonton, in the province of Alberta.

[para6] The Plaintiffs became to be involved in four of the Defendant's projects. The first project the Plaintiffs became involved in was a project known as the Glenora Court. This was a condominium developed by the Defendant and located in central Edmonton. The Plaintiff, Karey Lear, initially became involved by working for the person that the Defendants had given an exclusive listing agreement to. Ultimately, this person terminated his relationship with the Defendants and the Defendants approached Karey Lear to act as their representative in the sale of the remaining units in Glenora Court. As a result of their negotiations, the parties entered into a Letter of Agreement, dated the 1st of February 1994, which appointed Karey Lear as the exclusive listing agent for Glenora Court. The agreement also provided that Karey Lear was to be paid commissions calculated at 2.5 percent of gross sales plus G.S.T. If an outside realtor was involved, the commission would be 3 percent to the selling agent and 1 percent to Karey Lear as the listing agent. Commissions were payable: 25 percent at the time of the formal Offer to Purchase being signed and down payment being made, and 75 percent on the closing date.

[para8] During the course of this arrangement Laara Tanner, another realtor, was engaged by the Defendant, Cove Properties Ltd., to provide assistance to the Plaintiff, Karey Lear. She was initially paid $500 for each sale that she was directly involved in.

[para9] In early 1996, the Defendant, Grant Klapstein, discussed with the Plaintiff, Karey Lear, a project that Cove Properties Ltd. was developing in Calgary. This property was to be known as the Summit at Peterson Hill. Ms. Lear and Mr. Klapstein looked at the property site in January or February of 1996; and after some discussion, Ms. Lear agreed to work the property by attempting to sell the condominium units to be built on that property. Consequently, Ms. Lear was engaged by the Defendants to see to two projects at the same time. That is, the Glenora Court property and the Summit property in Calgary. In the spring of 1996, Ms. Lear spent Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays in Calgary, and Mondays, Tuesdays, and Wednesdays in Edmonton.

[para10] No written agreement was entered into with respect to the Summit property. Ms. Lear testified that the parties had an oral agreement which would have entitled her to 3 percent of net purchase prices.

[para11] The Summit development did not proceed as Cove Properties Ltd. could not get the necessary approval from the Development Appeal Board in Calgary. By the time it was obvious that the Summit project was not going to proceed, Ms. Lear had spent four days a week during the months of March, April, and May of 1996 in Calgary. Subsequently, she spent some time there in June, as well, in order to return deposits, deal with disgruntled prospective purchasers, and the like.

[para12] After this project was cancelled, the Plaintiff, Karey Lear, had discussions with the Defendant, Grant Klapstein, during which she raised her concerns that she had devoted considerable time, effort, and expense in going to and from Calgary relative to the Summit property without any possibility of compensation. Ms. Lear testified that Mr. Klapstein told her not to worry, that she would be well compensated for her efforts as he was in the process of the commencement of a new condominium project on the Whitemud Crossing area of Edmonton, Alberta, called the Chateaux at Whitemud Crossing. Ms. Lear says that Mr. Klapstein told her that she would make significant money on the sale of the Chateaux project, and this would make up for any losses that she might have experienced at the Summit project. She says that she was told that she would receive a 3 percent sales commission and that the entire project was hers. This encompassed some 58 units in a manner (apartment-style condos) and 18 villa units (duplex-style condos).

[para14] The Chateaux property was initially marketed from a sales site located on commercial premises, near the property. Ms. Lear and Ms. Tanner used floor plans, drawing books, samples, and other promotional material to sell the product. In the spring of 1997, the show home for the villa portion of the Chateaux project opened.

[para15] On the 12th of February 1997, Ms. Lear and her company entered into a Letter of Agreement with Mr. Klapstein and his company. This agreement states that Ms. Lear was appointed as the exclusive listing agent for the Chateaux project at Whitemud Crossing. Commissions were payable to Ms. Lear's company.

[para16] Commissions are stated to be 3 percent of the purchase price, exclusive of G.S.T. The agreement also provided that if a Chateaux unit was sold by an outside realtor, the developer would pay a flat fee of $1,500 to the selling agent, and the 3 percent commission would continue to be paid to the listing agent.

[para17] The commissions were stated to be payable: 50 percent upon the Purchase Agreement being signed and the down payment being made, and 50 percent upon the closing date. There is no termination clause in the agreement, and it also contains no notice provision.

[para18] Ms. Lear says that there was no termination provision contained in the Letter of Agreement because the parties agreed that she was to sell all of the units developed by the Defendants in the Chateaux project. Mr. Klapstein testified to the effect that so long as Ms. Lear remained the exclusive listing agent, she would be receiving commission on all sales. He says it was clearly his understanding that that did not derogate from his right to terminate the arrangement with the agent at will.

[para19] In the spring of 1997, Ms. Lear and Mr. Klapstein spoke about another project being developed by Cove Properties Ltd. in west Edmonton, called Country Club Court. Ms. Lear says that they entered into an oral agreement whereby she would act as the exclusive listing agent for this condominium project as well. The terms and conditions were to be exactly the same as the terms and conditions relating to the Chateaux project. Initially, a sign was placed at the site of Country Club Court directing people to make inquiry at the Chateaux sales office. From the time that this sign was placed until the date the Defendants "terminated" Ms. Lear's contract, Ms. Lear had secured three reservation agreements which related to Country Club Court. It is noteworthy that reservation agreements do not constitute a Purchase Agreement. They are documents that reserve a particular unit for a proposed purchaser in contemplation of a project proceeding. This is done in exchange for a very small deposit which is refundable to the proposed purchaser should the purchaser decide not to proceed at the time the project is developed to a point where Purchase Agreements are available. If the purchaser does decide to proceed, the deposit forms part of the purchase deposit.

[para20] Through 1997, Ms. Lear and Laara Tanner continued with the marketing of both the Chateaux project and the Country Club project. In July of 1997, new players arrived on the scene. The defendant, Cove Properties Ltd., engaged Tim Coutu to act as its general manager. Mr. Coutu was introduced to Ms. Lear in late July of 1997; and at approximately the same time, Ms. Lear was informed that a new sales person would be placed at the site of the Country Club Court development. Ms. Lear was also informed by Mr. Klapstein that her commissions in the Country Club Court development would be reduced to 2 percent with this new person receiving the other 1 percent of the total 3 percent sales commissions to be paid to selling agents. As a result, Ms. Tanner's commissions for this project were reduced to $600 for each unit sold.

[para21] Ms. Lear testified that she was reluctant to go along with this arrangement as the money she was to receive was being reduced. Further, she felt that between herself and Ms. Tanner, they would be able to sell both the Country Club project and the Chateaux project.

[para23] During the month of August 1997, Ms. Lear had a "misunderstanding" with the new sales person at Country Club Court. This occurred as a result of a telephone call that she received from this person during which this person indicated she would be unable to work a particular day and asked Ms. Lear to cover for her. Ms. Lear was already covering for Ms. Tanner at the Chateaux and simply couldn't be at two places at once. Ms. Lear suggested to the Country Club sales person that if she had difficulty regarding care of her children, she should arrange to have someone on standby to provide for that care when something unforeseen arose. Alternatively, she should arrange to have someone cover for her when she suddenly was unable to work.

[para24] Also during the month of August of 1997, Mr. Coutu and Mr. Klapstein became concerned about the hours that the show home at the Chateaux was open. When the show home became available for occupancy by the sales team of Ms. Lear and Ms. Tanner, they initially worked between 3 to 7 on weekdays and 1 to 5 on weekends. Mr. Klapstein and Mr. Coutu wanted the show home to be open between 1 and 7 during the week as they were concerned that the building crew who were there were being bothered by prospective purchasers between the hours of 1 and 3.

[para25] Ms. Lear responded to this concern by indicating that between the hours of 1 and 3, she and Ms. Tanner normally dealt with prospective purchasers by having private meetings with them so as to conclude deals. She also raised a concern that there was yet no signage on the property indicating the hours that the show home was open, and this simply invited people to expect the show home to be open whenever they drove by the property.

[para26] The matter was resolved by Ms. Lear agreeing to keep a record of how she spent her time between 1 and 3 and to provide that record to Mr. Klapstein and Mr. Coutu on a monthly basis.

[para27] On September 30th, 1997, Ms. Lear was called to Grant Klapstein's office for a meeting. When she arrived, Mr. Coutu was there, but Mr. Klapstein was not. Mr. Coutu presented her with an envelope which contained various letters, mostly emanating from the sales person at the Country Club. These letters were critical of Ms. Lear.

[para28] Mr. Klapstein subsequently arrived, and Ms. Lear asked Mr. Klapstein and Mr. Coutu whether they wanted to hear her side of the story. Mr. Coutu responded that they did not. In fact, in attempting to retrieve the envelope and a daytimer, Mr. Coutu assaulted Ms. Lear.

[para29] If I were called upon to decide whether or not there was cause for termination of an employment relationship, I would conclude that there was nothing even approaching cause in Ms. Lear's conduct of her duties. The reasons advanced by the Defendants for termination of Ms. Lear's services are trifling and spurious. I am satisfied that the real reason for termination of Ms. Lear's services was that Mr. Coutu, for whatever reason, felt it necessary to assert his authority and, for whatever reason, Mr. Klapstein backed him in his actions. In fact, Mr. Klapstein now says that he regrets the manner in which Ms. Lear's contract was terminated. Further, at a subsequent date, Mr. Klapstein tried to re-engage Ms. Lear, which makes it abundantly clear that there was absolutely no reason for the act of termination.

[para30] I recognize that the termination of either an employment or contractual relationship is often fraught with emotion and difficulty. So-called experts have attempted to advise corporations and institutions as to how to terminate an employment relationship or a contractual relationship, but it is a rare case where a termination flows smoothly. At the same time, I have never heard of as high-handed, undignified, and mean-spirited termination as that which Ms. Lear was subjected to. Most of the conduct that goes to this conclusion emanated from Mr. Coutu, but Mr. Klapstein accepted that conduct; and because of that, he is identified with it.

[para33] Throughout her involvement with the Defendants, Ms. Lear had, through her corporation, maintained private listings, particularly with respect to re-sale housing. The Defendants were aware that she maintained those private listings, and in some instances encouraged them. That was because some of the listings related to people who were potential customers of the Defendants but were not able to purchase a condominium from the Defendant development corporation until these persons had sold their own home.

[para34] On one previous occasion, Ms. Lear entered into negotiations with a condominium developer to represent that developer respecting a development that potentially conflicted or competed with the developments of the Defendant, Cove Properties Ltd., which were then underway. At that time, Ms. Lear spoke with Mr. Klapstein and asked him as to whether he had a concern about her representing both him and the potential competitor. I am satisfied that on the evidence, Mr. Klapstein made it clear that he did not want Ms. Lear to represent other developers who competed with Cove Properties product.

[para36] As a result of an introduction by this realtor to the ownership of Abbey Homes Ltd., Ms. Lear was engaged to complete the last few sales that remained to be completed with respect to an existing project owned by Abbey Homes Ltd.

[para37] After that, Ms. Lear entered into further arrangements with Abbey Homes Ltd., whereby she continued to represent them in the sales of new condominium developments. These arrangements have continued to the date of trial; and at the date of trial, Ms. Lear was in discussion with the management of Abbey Homes Ltd. respecting representing them in the sale of further condominium properties that they are proposing to develop in the city of St. Albert, Alberta. I am satisfied that all of the product supplied by or proposed to be supplied by Abbey Homes Ltd. is to a significant extent competitive with the product supplied by Cove Properties Ltd., and comprising the Chateaux project and the Country Club project. I will deal with the money that Ms. Lear has made as a result of her representing Abbey Homes when I discuss damages near the conclusion of these Reasons.

III. Legal Analysis

The Nature of the Contract Between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Relating to the Chateaux Project

[para38] I am satisfied that the relationship between Ms. Lear and her corporation, and Cove Properties and Mr. Klapstein as reflected in the Letter of Agreement, dated the 12th of February 1997, and referenced earlier in these Reasons, did not constitute an employer-employee relationship. Ms. Lear does not contend that it constitutes such a relationship. Instead she suggests that the relationship is an agency relationship but one which cannot be terminated by the unilateral action of the Defendants.

[para39] As a general rule, an agency relationship may be terminated if either party decides to do so. In his text, The Law of Agency, 7th edition, Butterworths, Toronto, 1996, G.H.L. Fridman, Q.C. states at p. 389:

Since the relationship of principal and agent has been created by agreement between them, it follows that the relationship may be determined by both parties agreeing to the discharge of that relationship. It will also be determined if either party withdraws his original agreement. This will occur where the principal gives the agent notice of revocation of the agency or the agent gives the principal notice of renunciation. Any such notice may be given in any form: a deed or document in writing is unnecessary, even if the original authority was contained in a deed.

[para40] However, there are exceptions to these general principles. In some cases an agency relationship may be irrevocable. It is a well-established principle that an agency relationship may not be terminated by the principal without the agent's consent where the agent has been granted authority to act on the principal's behalf where there is an element of protection of an interest of the agent. In those cases, the authority is given for valuable consideration and is security in respect of a liability of the principal to the agent. (Re Hartt Group Ltd. and Land Securities Ltd. 7 D.L.R. (4th) 89 (NB QB)) I am also satisfied that the security interest may also be something of a more intangible nature such that the forbearance to pursue what one would normally expect to receive or giving up a right that one has or the parties may perceive that one has can constitute the security interest required in order to make an agency relationship irrevocable without the consent of the agent. For example, in Richardson v. McClary (1906) 16 Manitoba Reports 74 (CA), the Plaintiffs, who were entitled to a commission for finding a purchaser for the Defendant's farm, placed in their hands for sale, consented to forego the commission upon the Defendant giving them the special sole right to sell the land for a fixed higher price within a time named. The Defendant purported to terminate this relationship prior to the expiration of the time named. The Court found consideration in the Plaintiffs giving up their right to commission on a first sale in exchange for the special sole right to sell the land for a fixed higher price. In that situation, the agency could not be revoked at the will of a principal.

[para41] I am also satisfied that an agency relationship may not be terminated at the principal's will when the agent goes to the principal indicating their concern about expenditures, time, and effort that the agent has incurred respecting previous potential sales, and the principal responds by advising the agent that they will be well compensated by the fact that the principal is about to conduct the sale of another project, and the agent will receive an exclusive listing to that project.

[para42] The consideration is found in the agent's and principal's resolution of something they perceive to be a potential problem. It matters not whether in law the agent would have been successful in pursuing its claim. Consideration may arise with respect to resolution of potential claims.

[para43] There is a evidentiary dispute between the parties as to what occurred in terms of the resolution of the Summit expense issue. Ms. Lear testified that it was clearly understood that she would receive the commissions from the Chateaux project as compensation for her potential claim for losses that she incurred with respect to the Summit project. Mr. Klapstein testified that there was discussion about her expenses incurred with respect to the Summit and an indication that she would be receiving commissions from the Chateaux project. He recalls an indication that she would be receiving at least $100,000 and points to the fact that to the point of her termination, she had earned and was ultimately paid commissions exceeding $95,000, which is very close to the number that he recalls being mentioned, and which number was confirmed by Ms. Lear.

[para44] The Letter of Agreement, ultimately entered into between the parties states, "Karey Lear is appointed as the exclusive Listing Agent for The Chateaux project at Whitemud Crossing." Ms. Lear points to the fact that the Letter of Agreement relating to the previous development, Glenora Court, states that she was appointed as the exclusive listing agent for Glenora Court. The word "project" is omitted. She further points to the fact that there was no expiry date contained within the Chateaux agreement and says that that was because it was contemplated that there would be no expiry date.

[para45] The Letter of Agreement relating to this project was prepared by the Defendant, Cove Properties Ltd. The contra proferentem rule dictates that if there is an ambiguity, the ambiguity is to be resolved by adopting the meaning least favourable to the party who authored the contract. (Alex Duff Realty Ltd. v. Eaglecrest Holdings Ltd. et al (1983) 26 Alta L.R. (2d) 133 (CA)) It is Mr. Klapstein's interpretation of the Letter of Agreement that the word "project" simply means that Ms. Lear was appointed exclusive listing agent for the Chateaux project until her agency was terminated. Ms. Lear testifies that the word "project" was inserted for the purpose of indicating that she was to be the exclusive listing agent for the entire project at Whitemud Crossing.

[para46] In my view, there is an ambiguity as to the meaning of the word "project," and parole evidence is invited. Further, the contra proferentem rule dictates that the ambiguity be resolved in the favour of Ms. Lear as Mr. Klapstein's company drafted the document. I am satisfied that on the evidence, the parties agreed that Ms. Lear was to be the exclusive listing agent, and it was at that time understood that she would be selling all of the units at Whitemud Crossing. Subsequently, when Mr. Coutu was hired and immediately took a disliking to Ms. Lear, Mr. Klapstein forgot or ignored what had occurred in his negotiations with Ms. Lear a year earlier. In consequence, I conclude that the listing as contemplated by the Letter of Agreement relating to the Chateaux was not one which Mr. Klapstein and Cove Properties Ltd. could unilaterally terminate.

[para47] I am, however, satisfied that the circumstances relative to the Country Club condominium project were different. At the time this project first came to Ms. Lear's attention, she had already received the compensation for her interest in relation to foregoing pursuit of Summit expenses by way of the Chateaux Letter of Agreement. Further, Ms. Lear expended minimal, if any, effort in preparing this project for sale; and consideration of any real significance cannot be found in those efforts. I am, accordingly, satisfied that this oral listing could be terminated at the will of Mr. Klapstein and Cove Properties Ltd.

Section 22 Real Estate Act

[para48] Section 22 of the Real Estate Act R.S.A. 1980 Chapter R-4.5 provides:

22 No action shall be brought to charge a person by commission or otherwise for services rendered in connection with the sale of land or an interest in the land unless

(a) the brokerage agreement on which recovery is sought in the action or some note or memorandum of it is in writing signed by the party to be charged or by that person's agent lawfully authorized in writing, or

(b) in the case of a trade in real estate, the person sought to be charged

(i) has as a result of the services of a real estate broker employed by that person for the purpose effected a sale or lease of land or an interest in it, and

(ii) has either executed a transfer or lease signed by all other necessary parties and delivered it to the buyer or lessee, or has executed an agreement of sale of land, or an interest in it, signed by all necessary parties, entitling the buyer to possession of the land or any interest in it, as specified in the agreement, and has delivered the agreement to the buyer.

[para49] This provision was not expressly pled in the Statement of Defence; and at the commencement of the defence, the solicitor for the Defendant applied for an amendment for its pleadings to plead this provision. This amendment was objected to by the solicitor for the Plaintiff.

[para50] I am satisfied that the amendment is to be allowed. I am satisfied that the solicitor for the Plaintiff is not caught off guard, and substantially all evidence necessary to deal with this provision that was available to the Plaintiff has been adduced during the course of the trial.

[para51] At the trial, I indicated that I would reserve my decision with respect to the amendment and provide it in the course of these Reasons. I also indicated that if I allowed the amendment to the defence, I would allow a Plaintiff amendment to claim commissions on the basis of quantum meruit as they relate to the Country Club project. Having indicated that the amendment to the defence is to be allowed, the quantum meruit amendment to the claim is allowed as well.

[para52] I now turn to the question of what effect Section 22 has with respect to the Plaintiff's claims. First, I am satisfied it has no effect whatsoever in relation to any claim emanating from the Chateaux project. That is, because there is a written agreement between the parties. I am satisfied that that agreement is sufficient to constitute the type of agreement that is contemplated by Section 22 of the Real Estate Act.

[para53] Second, I come to the conclusion that Section 22 is a further bar to the Plaintiff's claims with respect to the Country Club project. Simply put, the services of Ms. Lear have, at most, effected the sale of three or four of the Country Club condominiums; and I will specifically deal with those in the damage portions of this decision.

Mitigation of Damages

[para54] It is the Plaintiff's position that the general requirement that a party who has suffered a loss as a result of a breach of contract is required to take whatever steps they can to reduce their damages suffered is not applicable in her circumstances. She is of the view that as an agent, she was not required to devote all of her working time exclusively to the Defendants and would have been able, with the assistance of employees, to take on the extra work that she ultimately obtained through Abbey Homes Ltd. even if she had continued to complete the Chateaux contract. This position is reflective of the general principles relating to mitigations of damages as they apply to agents. In McGregor on Damages, 14th edition Sweet & Maxwell Limited 1980, the learned author states at page 162:

The fact that the Plaintiff has made a similar service contract does not necessarily entail that he has avoided the loss. He will have not done so if he would have been capable of carrying out both contracts simultaneously, as will very frequently be the case where the plaintiff, especially if a company, would perform the contract by employing others to do the actual work. If, on the other hand, the defendant has bargained for the plaintiff's exclusive services, any other service contract made by the plaintiff on the defendant's breach will be a substituted contract, and the benefit derived from it will be taken into account in assessing the damages against the defendant.

[para55] I am satisfied that the latter portion of this expression of the principal applies in this matter. I am satisfied that Ms. Lear knew full well that she was not in a position to take on work from competitors of Cove Properties Ltd. while she was the exclusive listing agent with respect to the Chateaux project. This is because she had previously been so informed by Mr. Klapstein when she raised the issue while working on the Glenora Court project and because to do otherwise would place her in an obvious conflict-of-interest position.

[para56] Further, I am satisfied that the relationship between the parties was such that Ms. Lear owed the Defendants a fiduciary duty. I am satisfied that Ms. Lear, herself, recognized that she owed the Defendants a fiduciary duty as on the previous occasion when she considered taking a listing from a competitor, she checked with Mr. Klapstein and upon his indication of disapproval, did not proceed to do so. In consequence, I am satisfied that at least some of the commissions earned by Ms. Lear, subsequent to the termination, go towards mitigation of her damages. I will deal with exactly how much of her earned commissions go to mitigation in the next portion of this decision, which will deal with damages.

IV. Damages

[para57] There is no real dispute between the parties as to the mathematics of the commissions earned. At the conclusion of the trial, I indicated that what I would be doing in relation to damages would identify months of particular years, identify the project, and leave it to the parties to calculate the exact numbers from that identification.

[para58] As I have previously stated, Ms. Lear is entitled to commissions from the Chateaux project. She has been paid for some of that project already, but clearly has not been paid the agreed upon commission for all of the project. It is my decision that Ms. Lear is entitled to commissions for each and every sale of the Chateaux project in accordance with the Letter of Agreement relating to that project less the portion of the commission that she had agreed to pay to Laara Tanner.

[para59] It is also my decision in terms of mitigation the commissions earned by Ms. Lear for the Californian Manor II (an Abbey Homes Ltd. project) for the months of May, June, July, August, September, and October of 1998 are to be deducted as mitigation. Commissions earned with respect to the Californian Manor II for the month of November 1998 are not to be deducted as no commissions respecting the Chateaux were payable for the months of November and December of 1998; and while commissions were payable in the month of January 1999, I am satisfied that the work that would have been done to earn these commissions would have been substantially completed before the month of November 1998.

[para60] With respect to the Country Club Court project, at the time Ms. Lear's contract was terminated, three reservation agreements has been signed relative to this property. One of the parties did not complete. A second party ultimately completed, but purchased a different unit. It is noteworthy that the price on the different unit is exactly the same as the price on the unit that was reserved. I am satisfied that Ms. Lear earned her commission on a quantum meruit basis with respect to this property. She is, accordingly, entitled to her commission with respect to the Bleviss sale, less the amount of money she would have paid to Ms. Tanner, less 1 percent that was to be taken by the sales person who actually worked the Country Club Court project. The third reservation agreement related to Don and Mona Gross, and Ms. Lear has received a commission on a referral basis with respect to these purchasers. Again, I am satisfied that Ms. Lear has earned her commission on a quantum meruit basis, and the parties should therefore calculate her damages with respect to this sale on the basis of 3 percent of the sale price, excluding G.S.T., less 1 percent that is payable to the person who worked at the Country Club project and the money that was payable to Ms. Tanner.

[para62] Finally, the Defendant, Grant Klapstein, has raised the question of whether he is a proper party as his company owned the developments involved. I am satisfied that with respect to the Chateaux project, he is, since he is named in the contract. Therefore, Judgment is granted against Mr. Klapstein for the amount reflecting commissions payable less the appropriate deductions earlier referenced for the Chateaux project.

URIANSZ J.

[1] This case raises for the first time the interpretation and application of ss. 132 and 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. c.19 (the "Act"), and their relationship to each other.

The Facts

[2] The defendant, York Condominium Corporation No. 472 ("YCC 472"), is one of two buildings in an upscale condominium complex known as Granite Place in Toronto. The defendant, William Verrier, was the president of the Board of Directors of YCC 472 at the time of the events.

[3] The plaintiffs, William McKinstry and Beverly Ann Dempster, are long-time residents of the complex and who, from time to time, have purchased, renovated, and resold condominium units in the complex and elsewhere.

[4] The plaintiffs purchased suite 302 in YCC 472 with the intention of renovating and reselling it. They became the registered owners of suite 302 on August 10, 2001. Suite 302 was somewhat notorious in the building. Ms. Dempster described it as "unique in its decoration". There were loud colors on the walls and floors. The electrical and plumbing services and some internal walls had been altered. Significantly, the master bedroom and the main bathroom had been made into an open area and a Jacuzzi had been installed. Some heating vents and air-conditioning intake vents had been blocked. Carpeting had been glued to the balcony damaging it, and tinting had been applied to the windows. Radiator leaks had damaged some of the wood flooring. The unit had been on the market for some seven months. The plaintiffs bought it for $380,000.

[5] Suite 302 was on the southwest corner of the building. The living room was on the west side, overlooking a parking lot. The master bedroom and the bedroom/den were on the south side, overlooking a cemetery. The unit's terrace was on the west side connected to the living room.

[6] With the knowledge and consent of building manager, the plaintiffs proceeded with dismantling the alterations made by the previous owners and rectifying the plumbing and electrical services. They testified the wall between the bedroom and the bedroom/den, had been moved a couple of feet to the east by the previous owners, and had to be torn down because it was blocking a vent. When the plaintiffs removed that wall, the plaintiffs remarked that the resulting larger space would make an attractive living room with a southern view, and that the existing living room could be split to create a bedroom and bedroom/den on the west side. They made the decision to reconfigure the suite on August 22. They considered the new layout so attractive that they decided to live in the unit rather than sell it, and listed their own residence for sale.

[7] The plaintiffs proceeded to erect the metal studding framework for the walls of the new layout. Their work on the renovation continued until September 5 when the Board of Directors of YCC 472 ordered them to cease the work immediately. Thereafter, on September 10, 2001, the Board of Directors resolved that it would not approve the plaintiffs' proposed reconfiguration of suite 302 and required the plaintiffs to complete their renovation in accordance with the suite's "as constructed" layout; that is with the living room facing west and the bedroom and bedroom/den facing south.

[8] On September 11, the next day, the plaintiffs agreed to comply with the Board's requirements. They removed the metal studding framework they had already installed and completed the renovation of the suite in accordance with its original layout. However, they no longer wished to live there. After completing the renovation they sold the suite 302 for $530,000.

[9] The house rules of YCC 472 provide that planned alterations that are expected to take longer than four weeks require the written approval of the Board of Directors. The building manager can approve renovations expected to take less than four weeks. It is not contested that the plaintiffs' renovation, with the reconfiguration of the suite, would have taken longer than four weeks. The plaintiffs recognize that they proceeded without express Board approval of the renovation. They claim that there was an established past practice of the Board not enforcing the house rules regarding renovations and so they had a reasonable expectation that the rules would not be enforced strictly in their case. They claim that the building manager of YCC 472 had approved their construction. They claim that Mr. Verrier, the president of the Board, represented to them that the Board that would approve their plans. They claim that by relying on the approval of the building manager and the representation of Mr. Verrier, they incurred construction, financing, and legal costs, suffered a loss of profit on the resale of the suite, and had to pay capital gains tax on the sale proceeds. They also seek punitive damages.

[10] The position of the defendant Verrier is that he acted as president of the Board of Directors at all times and that he is not personally liable for the plaintiffs' claims. At the end of the trial the plaintiffs consented to a dismissal of their claims against him.

[11] The position of the defendant YCC 472 is that its refusal to approve the plaintiffs' proposed reconfiguration of the unit was a reasonable exercise of its authority. Mr. Verrier and another director testified that the decision was based on three concerns. First and primarily, the Board was concerned that the relocation of the living and dining room areas of suite 302 would increase the noise heard in the bedrooms of the unit owners on the floors immediately above and below the suite. Second, the Board did not want to set a precedent. The Board was concerned that if it permitted this renovation, it would have to approve other future major renovations and that uncontrolled major changes to the standard unit layouts would result in a reduction in the value of all units in the building. Third, the Board was concerned that major deviation from the "as constructed" layout of walls would interfere with designed airflows, perhaps leading to excessive heat, and that future purchasers of the unit might be able to hold the Board responsible for such deficiencies because it had approved the changes.

[12] The plaintiffs also claim that YCC 472 failed to fulfill its obligation to correct deficiencies in the windows and terrace of the unit. YCC 472's position is that the deficiencies were caused by unapproved alterations made by the previous owners, and were apparent at the time the plaintiffs purchased the unit.

[13] The defendants take the position that the court lacks any jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs' claim because the plaintiffs did not resort to mediation and arbitration as required by s. 132(4) of the Act which provides:

Every declaration shall be deemed to contain a provision that the corporation and the owners agree to submit a disagreement between the parties with respect to the declaration, by-laws or rules to mediation and arbitration in accordance with clauses (1) (a) and (b) respectively.

[14] The plaintiffs take the position that the defendants have waived the application of s. 132(4) by not raising it earlier.

[15] As well, the plaintiffs are seeking an oppression remedy pursuant to s. 135 of the Act. They claim that the Board's refusal to approve the reconfiguration of the unit was unreasonable, beyond the authority of YCC 472, and that it was oppressive, unfairly prejudicial to them, and unfairly disregarded their interests. They claim compensation under s. 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998. Section 135 provides:

(1) An owner, a corporation, a declarant or a mortgagee of a unit may make an application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order under this section.

(2) On an application, if the court determines that the conduct of an owner, a corporation, a declarant or a mortgagee of a unit is or threatens to be oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the applicant or unfairly disregards the interests of the applicant, it may make an order to rectify the matter.

(3) On an application, the judge may make any order the judge deems proper including,

(a) an order prohibiting the conduct referred to in the application; and

(b) an order requiring the payment of compensation.

[16] The defendants take the position that the mediation and arbitration requirement of s. 132(4) applies to s. 135 and that the plaintiffs cannot resort to the oppression remedy until they have exhausted mediation and arbitration. The plaintiffs submit that s. 132(4) does not apply to s. 135, and that even if they cannot proceed with their ordinary claims because of their failure to arbitrate, they can nevertheless proceed under s. 135.

Interpreting Sections 132 and 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998

[17] It is appropriate that I express a first impression of these provisions before applying them to the facts of this case.

[18] Section 10 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.11 requires that these provisions be given a fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation.

Subsection 132(4)

[19] The Legislature's objective in enacting s. 132 is to enable the resolution of disputes arising within a condominium community through the more informal procedures of mediation and arbitration. To attain this objective, the phrase "with respect to the declaration, by-laws or rules" in s. 132(4), which applies to disagreements between owners and the condominium corporation, should be given a generous interpretation. It applies, in my view, to disagreements about the validity, interpretation, application, or non-application of the declaration, by-laws and rules. It must be noted that s. 132(4) does not require owners and condominium corporations to submit disagreements with respect to the Act to mediation and arbitration.

[20] The first issue is whether s. 132(4) applies where the initiating party wishes to claim damages resulting from the disagreement as well as resolving the dispute. The term "disagreements" in s. 132(4) should be interpreted broadly to encompass claims for damages arising from the subject matter of the disagreement. Such a broad interpretation is most consistent with the provision's objective of resolving disputes by informal procedures rather than by court action. A great many disagreements about declarations, by-laws and rules will be about responsibility for expenditures or about damage caused by failings or neglect. Imposing mediation and arbitration to resolve these disagreements, but requiring court action to claim money somehow at issue because of the disagreement, would frustrate the provision's aim to have disputes resolved quickly and efficiently.

[21] The Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17 applies to arbitration required by s. 132(4). The terms of s. 132(4) refer to "arbitration in accordance with clauses (1)(a) and (b)" of s. 132. Subsection 132(1) refers to arbitration under the Arbitration Act, 1991. In any event, s. 2(3) of the Arbitration Act, 1991 provides that the Arbitration Act, 1991 applies to arbitration conducted in accordance with another Act, unless provided otherwise. Section 6 of the Arbitration Act, 1991 indicates that a court's ability to intervene in matters governed by the Arbitration Act, 1991 is extremely limited.

[22] That the Arbitration Act, 1991 applies supports an interpretation of s. 132(4) as encompassing a claim for damages. The Arbitration Act, 1991 ensures the parties' rights to fair procedures, has a number of provisions that make it clear duplication between an arbitration and court action is to be avoided, and provides a process for enforcement of an arbitrator's decision.

[23] Section 138 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43 lends further support for the interpretation that arbitration under s. 132(4) may decide claims for damages by providing that "[a]s far as possible, multiplicity of legal proceedings shall be avoided". It makes little sense to have two separate proceedings, one to resolve the disagreement and a second to deal with damages arising from the disagreement.

[24] Counsel for the defendants, relying on Weber v. Ontario Hydro, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 929, submitted that s. 132(4) of the Condominium Act, 1998 deprives the court of any jurisdiction to deal with matters to which it applies, just as the mandatory arbitration clause does in the labour regime. I find that this is not entirely the case. The distinction is that the Arbitration Act, 1991 does not apply to arbitrations pursuant to the mandatory arbitration provision of the Labour Relations Act, R.S.O. 1995 c. 1, whereas it does to arbitrations pursuant to the Condominium Act, 1998. The Arbitration Act, 1991 contemplates situations where the court may entertain a proceeding about matters subject to arbitration. Subsection 7(1) of the Arbitration Act, 1991 does provide that the court shall, on motion, stay a proceeding that is commenced in respect of a matter to be submitted to arbitration. However, s. 7(2) provides that the court may refuse to stay a proceeding for a number of reasons, such as undue delay in bringing the motion to stay the proceeding or the matter is a proper one for default or summary judgment. Thus it is clear that matters subject to arbitration may proceed in court in some circumstances.

[25] Section 7 of the Arbitration Act, 1991 has been applied in the context of other statutory regimes. For example, in Boucher v. Soo Homes Inc. (1980), 16 R.P.R. 119, the court had before it an action where there had not been compliance with s. 17(4) of The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, 1976, S.O. 1976, c. 52 [now Ontario New Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31] which provided:

Every agreement between a vendor and prospective owner shall be deemed to contain a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court [now Divisional Court, as of R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31], and the Arbitrations Act applies.

[26] Stortini D.C.J. found that the defendant had waived its right to arbitration by failing to move for a stay of action prior to delivery of its statement of defence. He relied upon Cole v. Can. Fire Ins. Co. (1908), 15 O.L.R. 336, a decision of the Divisional Court of Ontario that held that the power given to the court to stay proceedings under the Arbitrations Act is upon an application after appearance and before pleading or any other step in the proceedings. He concluded that a motion to stay brought after delivery of the statement of defence must be refused. In Cole, Riddell J. states, at p.338, that the fact that the right to arbitration is given by legislation does not make that right, when given, any higher than if it had been obtained by private contract. Riddell J. also states that if the defendants choose to put in a pleading rather than move for a stay, they must be held to have elected that method of having their rights determined, and to have waived the provision for arbitration.

[27] Boucher was followed more recently in Chewins v. El-Equip Inc., [1996] O.J. No. 1865 (Ont. Gen. Div.). The principles articulated in these cases should apply in the context of the Condominium Act, 1998.

Section 135

[28] The legislative objective of s. 135 is to grant the court the jurisdiction to protect condominium owners, corporations, declarants, and mortgagees from unfair treatment. The text of s. 135 has much in common with the corporate oppression remedy. Section 248 of the Business Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. B.16 provides:

(1) A complainant and, in the case of an offering corporation, the Commission may apply to the court for an order under this section.

(2) Where, upon an application under subsection (1), the court is satisfied that in respect of a corporation or any of its affiliates,

- (a) any act or omission of the corporation or any of its affiliates threatens to effect a result;
- (b) the business or affairs of the corporation or any of its affiliates been or are threatened to be carried on or conducted in a manner;
- (c) the powers of the directors of the corporation or any of its affiliates have been or are threatened to be exercised in a manner, that is oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to or that unfairly disregards the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer of the corporation, the court may make an order to rectify the matters complained of.

[29] Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi v. Westbourne Galleries Ltd., [1972] 2 All E.R. 492 (H.L.) at 535 indicated that a statutory provision such as this provides a bridge to the principles of equity and gives the court a broad jurisdiction to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations:

Acts which, in law, are valid exercises of powers conferred by the articles may nevertheless be entirely outside what can fairly be regarded as having been in the contemplation of the parties when they became members of the company.

[30] This passage shows that the parties' reasonable expectations are worthy of protection, and reasonable expectations have become a benchmark in the application of the corporate oppression remedy. Farley J. observed in 820099 Ontario Inc. v. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1992), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113 at para. 129:

Shareholder interests would appear to be intertwined with shareholder expectations. It does not appear to me that the shareholder expectations which are to be considered are those that a shareholder has as his own individual "wish list". They must be expectations which could be said to have been (or ought to have been considered as) part of the compact of the shareholders.

[31] The Supreme Court of Canada adopted the following often-quoted description of the corporate remedy in Loewen, Ondaatje, McCutcheon & Co. c. Sparling (1992), 97 D.L.R. (4th) 616 at 631-632 from D.H. Peterson, Shareholder Remedies in Canada (Toronto: Butterworths, 1989) at para. 18.1, p. 18.1. :

The oppression remedy may be considered the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of corporate law. It is a relatively new creature of statute, so it is little developed. It is broad and flexible, allowing any type of corporate activity to be the subject of judicial scrutiny. The potential protection it offers corporate stakeholders is awesome. Nevertheless, the legislative intent of the oppression remedy is to balance the interests of those claiming rights from the Corporation against the ability of management to conduct business in an efficient manner.

[32] After quoting this passage, the Supreme Court said of the corporate remedy in the Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44:

This remedy thus requires an interpretation consistent with its purpose. Cory J.A., as he then was, summarized this principle in Sparling v. Royal Trustco Ltd., supra, at p. 693: "Here the C.B.C.A. has sought to provide a remedy. An interpretation which gives effect to the remedy is preferable to one which seeks to restrict or eliminate the remedial provision of the Act." And at p. 694: "Where a statute provides a remedy, its scope should not be unduly restricted. Rather, the courts should seek to provide the means to effect that remedy."

[33] This interpretative principle and the foregoing passages apply to s. 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998. This new creature of statute should not be unduly restricted but given a broad and flexible interpretation that will give effect to the remedy it created. Stakeholders may apply to protect their legitimate expectations from conduct that is unlawful or without authority, and even from conduct that may be technically authorized and ostensibly legal. The only prerequisite to the court's jurisdiction to fashion a remedy is that the conduct must be or threaten to be oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the applicant, or unfairly disregard the interests of the applicant. Once that prerequisite is established, the court may "make any order the judge deems proper" including prohibiting the conduct and requiring the payment of compensation. This broad powerful remedy and the potential protection it offers are appropriately described as "awesome". It must be remembered that the section protects legitimate expectations and not individual wish lists, and that the court must balance the objectively reasonable expectations of the owner with the condominium board's ability to exercise judgment and secure the safety, security and welfare of all owners and the condominium's property and assets.

[34] I reject the defendants' submission that the words "is or threatens to be" in s. 135(2) limits the remedy to conduct that is present or prospective. Section 4 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.11 provides that "the law shall be considered as always speaking and, where a matter or thing is expressed in the present tense, it is to be applied to the circumstances as they arise, so that effect may be given to each Act and every part of it according to its true intent and meaning". Moreover, s. 135(3) allows the court to prohibit the conduct or to make an order requiring the payment of compensation. Prohibiting the conduct would be appropriate where the conduct is threatened or taking place. Ordering compensation would be appropriate when the conduct has already taken place.

The Relationship of Subsection 132(4) and Section 135

[35] While s. 132(4) applies to "disagreements" and s. 135 applies to "conduct", there are circumstances where both provisions might seem to apply. For example, where an owner and a condominium corporation disagree about the meaning and proper application of the rules, the owner might allege that conduct that the corporation was taking or was threatening to take on its view of the rules was oppressive. Subsection 132(4) would apply to the disagreement, and s. 135 would apply to the threatened conduct. There is much scope for overlap as s. 135 could be invoked to impugn a decision or course of action purportedly taken or threatened to be taken under the declaration, by-laws or rules.

[36] This leads to the question of whether s. 132(4) requires an applicant to submit to mediation and arbitration the subject matter of a s. 135 application where the conduct or threatened conduct is related to the declaration, by-laws or rules. The question is of considerable importance to the ambit of both sections. The Arbitration Act, 1991 provides for the binding determination of the dispute between the parties. That is, if the arbitration were required before a s. 135 application could be brought about conduct or threatened conduct related to the declaration, by-laws or rules, then s. 135 would not be practically available in many cases. On the other hand, if resort to mediation and arbitration were not required, then the legislative goal of resolving disputes within the condominium corporation by these informal procedures would be significantly circumscribed.

[37] There are several reasons why I conclude that s. 132(4) does not require an applicant under section 135 to first resort to mediation and arbitration where the conduct complained of is related to a disagreement with respect to the declaration, by-laws or rules.

[38] First, section 135 states, without qualification, that an application may be made to the Superior Court of Justice.

[39] Second, many section 135 applications will be about a broad pattern of conduct, only a part of which is subject to s. 132(4). For example, a s. 135 application may complain of conduct both with respect to "the declaration, the by-laws or rules" and other conduct. I have already noted that s. 132(4) does not apply to disagreements between the parties with respect to the Act. A s. 135 application may be about conduct related to both the Act and by-laws. Making one part of such a broad application subject to mediation and arbitration would result in multiple proceedings.

[40] Third, the legislative intent that s. 132(4) does not apply to applications under s. 135 is apparent from the statute itself.

Sections 132 and 135 are in Part IX, titled "Enforcement", of the Act. Another section in that Part, subsection 134(1), contemplates an application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order enforcing compliance with any provision of the Act, declaration, by-laws or rules. Subsection 134(2) states: "If the mediation and arbitration processes described in section 132 are available, a person is not entitled to apply for an order under subsection (1) until the person has failed to obtain compliance through using those processes". There is no similar provision in s. 135 (or in ss. 130(1), 131(1), and 133(2) which also contemplate applications to the Court). The pointed inclusion of an explicit requirement to exhaust mediation and arbitration in s. 134, but not in s. 135, implies the Legislature did not intend that applicants seeking the oppression remedy must first resort to mediation and arbitration.

[41] Fourth, s. 135 applies to conduct or threatened conduct, and under section 135(3)(a) the court may prohibit the conduct. This makes clear that parties may resort to s. 135 with respect to conduct that has not taken place as yet, in order to prevent it from taking place. Such an application must be brought with dispatch and determined promptly in order to be effective. The time required to schedule and proceed with mediation and arbitration are not compatible with the dispatch that many section 135 applications would require.

[42] I conclude that a s. 135 applicant does not have to first resort to mediation and arbitration even though the conduct complained of may be related to a disagreement about the declaration, by-laws or rules.

Application to this Case

[43] In this case the plaintiffs proceeded by way of action and invoked the court's jurisdiction under s. 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998 by way of an amendment to their statement of claim. The defendants responded by pleading in their Amended Amended Statement of Defence that the condominium Board acted within its authority and reasonably. In closing argument the defendants, for the first time, argued that this court was without jurisdiction to give a remedy under section 135 because the plaintiffs had proceeded by way of action and s. 135 contemplates the making of "an application". I did not have the benefit of extensive argument of this issue, and neither side provided any authorities. Defendants' counsel did not provide any policy reason why it was important that a s. 135 applicant must proceed by way of application. Nor did defendants' counsel identify any prejudice to the defendants resulting from the fact the plaintiffs proceeded by way of action in this case. The defendants have had full discovery of the plaintiffs' position. In the circumstances of this case I regard the defendants' argument as unduly technical. I consider that the plaintiffs have made an application to the court under s. 135 within their action.

[44] In this case, the defendants must be taken to have waived the application of s. 132(4) as they raised it for the first time in their Amended Statement of Defence, amended February 2003, after all examinations for discovery had been completed. That was too late for the defendants to raise the issue. In any event, the plaintiffs' s. 135 application, brought within their action, is not subject to s. 132(4).

[45] The foregoing results in the situation where the plaintiffs are claiming damages for causes of action, such as detrimental reliance, and applying for relief under section 135 in respect of the same conduct. There is only one dispute between the parties. Section 135 is broad enough to encompass all the claims except for punitive damages. As I have concluded that all the plaintiff's claims, however characterized, must be dismissed I do not distinguish between the plaintiffs' action and s. 135 application in my analysis of the evidence and issues.

The Merits of the Plaintiffs' Claims

The House Rules

[46] Article VII of YCC 472's house rules deals with "alterations, traditions and renovations" in the following terms:

(1) Any owner/tenant having alterations done in his or her suite shall not permit anything to be done that will obstruct to interfere with the rights of other owners/tenants or in any way have a detrimental effect on other suites in the common elements. Noise and nuisance should be kept to a minimum. It is also an imperative that the appearance of the building be protected and that its structural integrity be safeguarded. Any owner/tenant having work done is expected to follow not only the letter of this Article but also its spirit.

(2) Any owner/tenant planning alterations must have his/her plan approved in writing by the manager before any work is begun. Depending on the nature of the alterations, Board approval may be required and the manager will advise the owner/tenant accordingly. If the planning alterations will take longer than four (4) weeks, written Board approval is required.

(7) In the event that there is a change in or deviation from the plans approved by the manager or the Board, as the case may be, such change or deviation, however slight, cannot be proceeded with until the manager has approved the change or deviation in writing.

(8) Management has the right to monitor work being done in a suite. In enforcing the declaration and house rules, the manager or a member of the building staff may enter the suite and may order that work be halted.

(Underlining added)

[47] I am satisfied that these rules are a proper exercise of the Board's authority, granted by s. 58 of the Condominium Act, 1998.

Alleged Approval of the Renovation by Building Management

[48] The evidence of the building manager, Mr. Bill Colucci, and of building maintenance staff, Mr. Ernesto Frugoni, that they did not represent to the plaintiffs that their plans to reconfigure the suite was acceptable was uncontradicted. Mr. Frugoni explained he did not see it as his role to discuss the project with the plaintiffs at all. Rather, his duty was to make periodic inspections and make reports to building management.

[49] At one point of her cross-examination, Ms. Dempster indicated that Bill Colucci had given approval to the plaintiffs' reconfiguration plan on or about August 22. When pressed for details, she indicated that she was not in the suite when Mr. Colucci allegedly gave approval. A few answers later, she indicated that she did not even have personal knowledge that Mr. Colucci was there at that time, and suggested the question be addressed to Mr. McKinstry. Mr. McKinstry did not testify that Mr. Colucci expressed any approval of the plans to reconfigure the suite.

[50] The plaintiffs pointed to the notices Mr. Colucci had posted in the building advising other residents of the construction. Certainly building management was aware of the fact that the plaintiffs were renovating suite 302. Building maintenance and management were there from time to time and other residents and board members must be taken to have read the notices. Mr. Verrier himself visited the suite on at least one occasion before August 22 while demolition was taking place.

[51] A critical observation is that when Mr. Colucci posted the notices on August 14 and 21, he could not have been aware of the plaintiffs' proposed reconfiguration of the suite, as the plaintiffs testified that they did not decide to reconfigure the suite until the afternoon of August 22. The plaintiffs simply could not have understood these notices as approval of the reconfiguration of the layout of the suite.

[52] Mr. Colucci had discretion under the house rules to approve alterations that would take less than four weeks. The notice dated August 14 indicates that the work was expected to take approximately three weeks. Mr. Colucci testified that this information came from the plaintiffs. The notice dated August 21 advises that there will be construction noise "over the next few weeks" and that demolition will take place on August 22, when noise may be louder than at any other time. There was no evidence whatsoever that Mr. Colucci expressed approval of a renovation expected to take more than four weeks and which involved the reconfiguration of the suite.

Alleged Approval of the Renovation by President of the Board

[53] Ms. Dempster testified that at a meeting of August 22, about 4:30 p.m., she discussed with Mr. Verrier the plan to relocate the walls in the suite. She said that Mr. Verrier wanted clarification and suggested that Mr. Frugoni provide her with the floor plan of the original layout of the suite so that she could indicate on it where they planned to place the walls. She said that he asked that this be prepared by the time he returned from vacation just before the next Board meeting. She said that Mr. Verrier told her that as long as Mr. Colucci and Mr. Frugoni remained involved, Board approval would be a formality.

[54] Later that day, Ms. Dempster sent Mr. Verrier an e-mail at 8:47. The e-mail was in evidence. Ms. Dempster testified that Mr.

Verrier then left a voice-mail telephone message for her at 10:30 p.m. that night. Ms. Dempster testified that Mr. Verrier said in the voice-mail that the plaintiffs had obviously gone beyond what was required and there should be no problem with the renovation. She testified that the plaintiffs' decision to live in the unit rather than sell it was based on the approval of their plan to reconfigure the suite given in the voice-mail. Mr. McKinstry testified that Ms. Dempster conveyed to him the content of Mr. Verrier's voice message, and he relied on the message to proceed with erecting the partition walls in the existing living room area.

[55] Mr. Verrier agreed in his testimony that he met with Ms. Dempster on August 22, and he agreed that he left her a voice-mail late that evening in which he said that as long as building maintenance and property management were content that all requirements were being met, then it was alright with him. However, Mr. Verrier testified that when he left this message, his understanding was still that the plaintiffs intended to restore the suite to the basic standard layout, and that he did not learn of their plans to reconfigure it until his return from vacation on September 5.

[56] I do not accept Ms. Dempster's versions of the meeting and of Mr. Verrier's voice message for several reasons.

[57] First, if Mr. Verrier had said in the afternoon meeting with Ms. Dempster that Board approval was a mere formality, his voice-mail added little. Yet, Mr. McKinstry did not testify about understanding that the reconfiguration plan had been approved at the afternoon meeting. He was clear that he understood from his communication with Ms. Dempster that the approval was given in the voice-mail later that night. I consider it highly likely that had Mr. Verrier said to Ms. Dempster in the afternoon that the Board's approval was a mere formality, she would have conveyed that to Mr. McKinstry.

[58] Second, if Ms. Dempster had disclosed the plaintiffs' decision to reconfigure the suite at the afternoon meeting, and if Mr. Verrier had said at that meeting that Board approval was a mere formality, I would expect that Ms. Dempster would have made some reference to these communications in her later e-mail. That is not the case. The second paragraph refers to the "changes that we thought we'd have to make to bring the structure, plumbing, electrical, and vent/ducts back to the original suite design". The fourth paragraph said the plaintiffs had "requested a copy of the original suite plumbing/electrical/vent/duct drawings.... We will sign off that this is the plan that we are using (returning to)." The sixth paragraph referred to the "extended time we'll require to bring this back to Granite Place intention (6-8 weeks)". It is possible to read these statements of intention to return to the original design as limited to the building services and not applying to the layout of the walls. But the e-mail makes no reference to the decision to reconfigure the walls, a matter that was supposedly discussed with Mr. Verrier. To the contrary the e-mail also says "only today did we finalize with a designer where we would need to position the walls to ensure we could utilize the original facilities". This single oblique reference to the walls' position is interesting. The walls placed in their original "as constructed" location would utilize the original facilities. The plaintiff's planned placement of the walls was not a question of need but a matter of the plaintiffs' wishes. The further statement "we've been working from the visual within the suite to be able to assess just how extensive this renovation (in the true sense of the word!) will be" implies no final plan had been adopted.

[59] Had the matter of a major relocation of the walls been discussed at the afternoon meeting, and had Mr. Verrier assured her that the Board's approval was a formality, I consider it certain that Ms. Dempster would have recapitulated that in the e-mail. I find the content of the coyly worded e-mail is inconsistent with what Ms. Dempster says took place at the afternoon meeting.

[60] Third, Ms. Dempster's memory of the meeting does not seem strong. She initially said that Mary Wasser, Ernesto Frugoni, and "Bill", meaning Mr. McKinstry, were also at the meeting. She admitted in cross-examination that Mr. McKinstry was not at the meeting.

[61] Fourth, Mr. Frugoni's testimony does not support Ms. Dempster's version. Mr. Frugoni did recall a meeting with Ms. Dempster and Mr. Verrier in Ms. Wasser's office. However, he could not say when the meeting he had in mind took place, but he was emphatic it was after the new wall dividing the living room had been partially constructed. Since I accept the plaintiffs' evidence that they did not start construction of the new walls until after August 22, I conclude that Mr. Frugoni recollected a different and later meeting. What is helpful in resolving the credibility issue is Mr. Frugoni's testimony, which I accept, in which he seemed to vividly recollect that he did not learn of the new walls until he saw the new wall dividing the living room almost completely built. I accept his testimony that no one told him new walls were going to be built in the apartment. This is inconsistent with Ms. Dempster's testimony that she indicated the plaintiffs' plans at the August 22 meeting with Mr. Verrier where Mr. Frugoni was present.

[62] Fifth, I consider it unlikely that Mr. Verrier would informally indicate approval of a major project without the submission of a construction plan and without the Board's sanction one day after he circulated his Chairman's Report, reviewed above, that "no contractor will be allowed access to the building until a renovation plan has been approved by Management."

[63] Finally, I found Mr. Verrier's testimony credible. I do not accept plaintiff's counsel submission that Mr. Verrier's testimony at trial was impeached on numerous occasions as inconsistent with his examination for discovery. The matters on which Mr. Verrier was challenged were of such inconsequence that I found it difficult to understand what was alleged to be inconsistent.

[64] I find as a fact that Ms. Dempster did not disclose the plaintiffs' plans to reconfigure the suite at the August 22 afternoon meeting and Mr. Verrier did not say at that meeting that Board approval of their plan to reconfigure the suite would be a formality.

[65] This finding of fact has a determining effect on the question of whether Mr. Verrier conveyed approval in his voice-mail left later that night. Since Ms. Dempster did not indicate the walls were to be relocated at the afternoon meeting, and her later e-mail did not do so either, it may be concluded that Mr. Verrier did not know of the plaintiff's plans when he left the voice-mail. Whatever he said in that voicemail could not have related to the plaintiffs' plan to reconfigure the layout of the suite.

[66] I conclude that Mr. Verrier did not indicate the Board would approve the plaintiffs' plan to reconfigure the suite, or indicate that as long as the building manager and building maintenance were kept involved, the plan to reconfigure the suite would be acceptable.

Unfairness

[67] It remains to consider whether the Board's refusal to permit the plaintiffs to reconfigure the unit, while within the Board's legal authority, was oppressive or conduct that unfairly prejudiced them or unfairly disregarded their interests.

[68] The plaintiffs assert an interest worthy of protection, as their claim relates to the use and enjoyment of their property. They point out that the floor layouts attached to the condominium's declaration show only demising walls and not internal walls. As such, they say they had a reasonable expectation that they would be able to rearrange the internal walls however they wished. I note that the plaintiffs' decision to purchase the unit was not dependent on getting approval to reconfigure it. Their communications to building management prior to August 22 are liberally sprinkled with references of how they "would be bringing this back to the original intended design". The impact of the Board's decision was that they had to revert to what was their original plan. I accept that once they had adopted the plan to reconfigure the suite, they decided to live there, and that the Board's decision greatly disappointed them. The Board's decision clearly interfered with how the plaintiffs wished to use and enjoy their property.

[69] I have already explained why the plaintiffs could not have an objectively reasonable expectation that the house rules regarding renovations would not be enforced. In this case, I am satisfied that the three reasons given by the Board for disapproving the plaintiffs' proposed renovation are each a reasonable and legitimate concern of a condominium board saddled with the responsibility of balancing the interests of individual unit holders against the welfare of other unit owners and the building itself.

[70] It is true, as the plaintiff points out, that the layout of a condominium unit cannot prevent the occupants from creating noise that disturbs other residents. It is also true that at several locations in the building, as it was designed, bedrooms are located immediately above or below living rooms. These situations arise at points between groups of floors in the building that have different unit layouts. Nevertheless, the concern that a living room beneath a bedroom contributes to noise disturbance is far from arbitrary, and in my view, a reasonable one. The units within a condominium abut each other closely, and Mr. Verrier explained that the mechanical aspects of the building, pipes, vents and so forth, conduct sound from one unit to another. Limiting the instances where a bedroom is above or below a living room to those points in the building where the floor layout changed from one group of floors to another group of floors may not eliminate noise problems but may reasonably be considered to reduce noise problems.

[71] It is also true that one or two single units in the building had been turned into double units. There was no evidence as to whether these projects had been approved or not. The earlier renovation of suite 302 by the previous owners had not been approved. However, there was no change of rules in midstream that discriminated against the plaintiffs. Mr. Verrier was a new president of a new Board. The Board passed a resolution decrying the earlier unapproved construction projects, and gave all tenants notice of an intention to stiffen the enforcement of the house rules. There was no evidence that the plaintiffs were treated any differently than any other unit holder would have been. I regard as a legitimate consideration, the Board's concern that if it approved the plaintiffs' reconfiguration of their unit, the Board would have to treat other unit holders in the same way, and that this could diminish the overall value of the building because of haphazard and uncontrolled renovation. Suite 302 is an apt example. The plaintiffs emphasized the unconventional renovation of the previous owners. The unit was on the market for a prolonged period and the plaintiffs bought it for what seems an attractive price. The plaintiffs also emphasized that the previous renovation created hazardous conditions because building services were not handled properly.

[72] I also consider as reasonable within the purview of the Board, its concern that relocating the internal walls of a unit might potentially interfere with the building's services, such as ventilation. I do not accept the plaintiffs' submission that it was up to the Board to retain experts in this regard.

[73] Nor did the plaintiffs persuade me that YCC 472's decision not to rectify the deficiencies in the windows and the terrace, since those deficiencies were due to unapproved alterations made by the previous owners of the unit, was oppressive, unfairly prejudicial to them, or unfairly disregarded their interests.

[74] The plaintiffs have not satisfied me that the Board's conduct in this case considered as a whole was oppressive, unfairly prejudicial to them, or unfairly disregarded their interests.

Damages and Compensation

[75] The plaintiffs claim a loss in the value of the suite. They argue that if the living room had a southern view, the suite would be worth some $80,000-$120,000 more. I did not find the testimony or report of the plaintiff's expert persuasive in this regard. The expert had never been inside the suite and did not appreciate its actual layout before he prepared his opinion. For example, he had not considered that the plaintiffs' proposed reconfiguration would not have permitted access to the terrace from the living room. In any event, suite 302 eventually sold for $402 a square foot, which compares favorably with the highest comparable unit identified by the expert as having sold for $404 per square foot. I was not persuaded that a reconfigured suite 302 would have had a greater market value.

[76] The plaintiffs claim a loss of the capital gains exemption for a permanent residence because they decided not to live in suite 302 as a result of the Board's decision. While they may have lost the capital gains exemption on suite 302, they did enjoy the capital gains exemption on the unit in which they lived. As they led no evidence of the capital gain on that unit during the relevant time, they have failed to place before the court sufficient evidence to calculate any damage suffered in this regard.

[77] The plaintiffs testified that they installed a multitude of fixtures and accoutrements of superior quality in suite 302 because they planned to live there. Mr. McKinstry did indicate his opinion that the cost of an upgrade in quality of a fixture could not be recovered in a subsequent sale. He was not qualified as an expert so his opinion was not strictly admissible. In any event, he did not state that there would be no enhancement in the selling price where an entire renovation was done with superior quality fixtures.

[78] Had I been persuaded that the plaintiffs' claim had merit, I would assess their damages in the amount of $21,500. The evidence was that there was some $8,500 to $9,500 in lost construction costs, and about $13,000 in additional financing charges, condominium fees, and property taxes.

Conclusion

[79] The plaintiff's action and application under section 135 of the Condominium Act, 1998 are dismissed.

[80] The parties may schedule a date, through my secretary, to address costs.

CONCLUSION

CAMERON J.:--

MOTIONS

[para1] These are motions by the defendant B.G. Schickedanz Homes Inc. ("Schickedanz") to:

(a) Set aside under rules 37.14(1)(a) and 39.01(6) the ex parte order by Mr. Justice Nordheimer on August 9, 2000 granting a certificate of pending litigation ("CPL") against a condominium unit in a project under construction (the "Unit") which the plaintiff had agreed to purchase, on the grounds:

(i) The plaintiff ("Ms. McGrath") failed to make full and fair disclosure of all material facts in her affidavit dated August 4, 2000 filed in support of her ex parte motion ("the Original Affidavit");

(ii) Certain paragraphs in the Original Affidavit contain hearsay which is not admissible under rules 4.06(2) and 39.01(4), unqualified opinions and reference to settlement discussions; and

(iii) Absence of evidence of uniqueness of the Unit.

(b) Discharge the CPL under s. 103(6) of the Courts of Justice Act and rule 42.02 on the grounds:

(i) Inadmissible evidence was used to obtain the ex parte CPL;

(ii) Ms. McGrath claimed damages as an alternative to an interest in land;

(iii) The agreement of purchase and sale between Ms. McGrath and Schickedanz respecting the Unit (the "Agreement") contains a covenant by Ms. McGrath not to register the CPL; and

(iv) The Unit is not sufficiently unique to support a claim for specific performance.

(c) Strike out under rule 25.11 paragraphs in the Original Affidavit which:

(i) Contain hearsay and do not comply with rules 4.06(2) and 39.01(4);

(ii) Disclose settlement discussions; and

(iii) Constitute unqualified opinions.

FACTS

[para2] Under the Agreement, dated February 14, 1999, Ms. McGrath agreed to purchase, and Schickedanz agreed to sell, the Unit, then under construction, for $160,000. The Unit was an architect designed 1400 square foot two-storey apartment with a loft built on top of two bungalow units, one of fifty-two similar units in a project of two hundred and eight units in the former City of York in northwest Toronto. The purchase price included a parking space in an underground garage. An amendment, made on signing the Agreement, provided for an additional four-piece bathroom and an additional closet in the master bedroom and deletion of a walk-in closet.

[para3] The Agreement provided for deposits totalling $8,000 by May 12, 2000, with $500 allocable to the parking space.

[para4] Under the Agreement, the rescission date was March 2, 1999 and the purchase and sale was to close November 30, 1999.

[para5] An amendment to the Agreement dated August 6, 1999 provided for a second parking space and a further non-refundable deposit of $8,000. The copy attached to the Original Affidavit was signed by Ms. McGrath but not by Schickedanz. The copy in Schickedanz's motion record was signed by Schickedanz.

[para6] An amendment dated October 10, 1999, and apparently amended by Ms. McGrath on January 6, 2000, unsigned by Schickedanz, provided for a central vacuum ($401.25), gas supply for two future fireplaces ($299.60) and extension of drain and water lines to the loft for future three-piece bathroom ($695.00). These items were installed although the January 6 amendment appears to have deleted the gas supply lines.

[para7] The Original Affidavit refers to payment of $6,000 for two gas fireplaces but there is no amendment referring to them. Mr. Fernandes acknowledged they were installed. I note this admission notwithstanding deletion of the gas supply on January 6, 2000.

[para8] The Original Affidavit of Ms. McGrath supporting her ex parte motion to obtain a CPL exhibited the Agreement but not the 65 pages of Disclosure Statement and Condominium By-Laws, Rules, Management Agreement, Budget Statements, and Declaration ("Condominium Documents") referred to in the Agreement which showed the Declarant to be B.G. Schickedanz Central Inc. ("Central").

[para9] Closing of the purchase and sale was conditional on registration of the Condominium Documents and compliance with the Planning Act.

[para10] Ms. McGrath was obliged to take possession of the Unit on substantial completion of the Unit and pay an occupancy fee until closing, which would follow registration of the Condominium Documents.

[para11] Clause 16 of the Agreement provided:

NO REGISTRATION

16. The Purchaser covenants and agrees not to register this Agreement or any certificate or notice of this Agreement or a caution or any other document evidencing this Agreement against title to the Dwelling Unit or Parking Unit(s) without having first obtained the written consent of the Vendor to such registration, which consent may be arbitrarily and unreasonably withheld. In addition, the Purchaser further covenants and agrees not to give, register, or permit to be registered any encumbrance against the Dwelling Unit and/or Parking Unit(s), and the Purchaser covenants and agrees not to list for sale, advertise for sale, entertain any offers to sell, nor assign his interest under this Agreement, or in the Dwelling Unit and/or the Parking Unit(s) nor directly or indirectly permit any third party to list or advertise the Dwelling Unit and/or Parking Unit(s) for sale at any time until after their respective Title Closings have taken place, without the written consent of the Vendor, which consent may be arbitrarily and unreasonably withheld. Should the Purchaser be in default of his obligations under this paragraph, the Vendor may as agent and Attorney of the Purchaser, cause the removal of notice of this Agreement, caution or other document evidencing this Agreement, from title to the Dwelling Unit and/or Parking Unit(s). The Purchaser hereby irrevocably nominates, constitutes and appoints the Vendor as his agent and attorney in fact and in law to cause the removal of notice of this Agreement, any caution, or any other document whatsoever from title to either or both the Dwelling Unit and Parking Unit(s).

[para12] Clause 17 of the Agreement contained an agreement by the purchaser that:

This Agreement (and all of the purchaser's rights hereunder and all monies paid hereunder) is subordinate to and postponed to any mortgages arranged by the Vendor, and any advances thereunder and to any easement to provide services and access to the relevant Condominium, and to any lands or property adjacent thereto and owned by the Vendor Purchaser hereby irrevocably appoints the Vendor as his agent and attorney to execute any consent or other documents required by the Vendor to give effect to this paragraph.

[para13] In paragraph 13 of the Agreement Ms. McGrath, as purchaser of the Unit, agreed to comply with the provisions of the proposed Condominium Documents, including the Declaration, following the scheduled Occupancy Closing.

[para14] Occupancy was never called for by Schickedanz and never occurred before Schickedanz terminated the Agreement.

[para15] The 65 pages of unindexed Condominium Documents require approval by the board of directors to changes in the common elements. However the Condominium Documents do not take effect until their registration on title.

[para16] On June 15 or 16, 2000, Mr. Fernandes told Ms. McGrath that all amendments to the Agreement must be approved by him and that no one else could approve amendments on behalf of Schickedanz.

[para17] Schickedanz has no employees and there is no evidence of its assets or other businesses besides selling condominium units for Central.

[para18] A Schedule to the Agreement of Standard Features in the units in the project contains warranties on structure, workmanship and materials, apparently in accordance with the Ontario New Home Warranties Programme ("ONHWP") and provides that enrollment in ONHWP is paid for by the purchaser on closing.

The Skylights

[para19] Ms. McGrath was told that skylights were an available extra or upgrade "where possible".

[para20] On April 15, 2000 Mr. Dan Farrell, Customer Service Manager of Schickedanz who also does site construction superintendence, was told by Ms. McGrath that she was purchasing skylights from an independent supplier to install in the Unit. Ms. McGrath says she obtained Mr. Farrell's oral permission to install the skylights. Mr. Farrell denies giving such permission. When the skylights were available, Ms. McGrath says she obtained Mr. Farrell's oral approval again to install the skylights and her contractor installed them. Another employee of Schickedanz, Mr. Buck, was advised by Mr. Farrell that he had Mr. Farrell's permission to install the skylights. Mr. Farrell never objected to the installation of the skylights and never advised Ms. McGrath that he did not have the authority to grant permission. Indeed, Schickedanz's sales office clerk advised Ms. McGrath to speak to Mr. Farrell for such consent. The skylights were installed on April 26, 2000. On June 15, 2000 Mr. Fernandes acknowledged their installation and advised Ms. McGrath that approvals for changes must be obtained from him.

[para21] I am satisfied that Schickedanz agreed to the installation of the skylights and held Mr. Farrell out as authorized to give such consent.

The Loft Bathroom

[para22] On October 10, 1999 Ms. McGrath signed an amendment to the Agreement respecting certain additional modifications noted above. These proposed modifications included extension of water supply and drainpipes to the loft for a future three-piece washroom in the loft. The document recited that $1,396.35 was paid with the amendment. The amendment was not signed by Schickedanz. Mr. McGrath's cheque dated October 10, 1999 for $1,396.35 accompanied the proposed amendment. Mr. Farrell mistakenly thought Schickedanz had agreed to the washroom and instructed Schickedanz's contractor to effect the changes covered by the "amendment", including the necessary water and drainpipe extensions for the loft bathroom. Schickedanz's workforce subsequently lifted a corner tub into the loft. Ms. McGrath says Mr. Fernandes was aware of piping extension and installation of the tub and did not object. Mr. Fernandes denies any such knowledge or consent. The cheque has not cleared Mr. McGrath's account, which Ms. McGrath did not mention in her Original Affidavit. There is no suggestion Schickedanz presented the cheque for payment.

Fireplaces

[para23] Schickedanz orally agreed to install two gas fireplaces, in addition to the gas lines for them covered by the unsigned "amendment". Mr. Fernandes says Ms. McGrath paid $6,000 for the fireplaces but still owes $1,340 for some related extras.

Occupancy Date

[para24] The original occupancy date was clearly extended to May 26, 2000 but the amendment to the Agreement effecting the change was not in evidence. Schickedanz failed to give Ms. McGrath occupancy on May 26, 2000. At a meeting on June 16, 2000 the parties signed an amendment to the Agreement extending the Occupancy Date to June 28, 2000. Under the amendment Schickedanz agreed to pay Ms. McGrath $100 per day from June 16, 2000 until the Unit was available for possession.

Order to Comply and Termination

[para25] The installation of the skylights was contrary to the Ontario Building Code. The City of Toronto issued to Central an Order to Comply dated June 20, 2000 in respect of the skylights and the loft bathroom.

[para26] On June 21, 2000 Schickedanz demanded payment from Ms. McGrath of $5,340 to restore the Unit to its original condition and remove the Order to Comply by July 5, 2000.

[para27] On July 6, 2000 Schickedanz declared the Agreement terminated by reason of Ms. McGrath's default in installing the skylights and the loft plumbing and tub.

[para28] On July 7, 2000 Ms. McGrath replied denying the Agreement could be terminated and asserting that the City would approve the skylights. Schickedanz's architect filed new plans permitting the City of Toronto to revoke the Order to Comply respecting the skylights. A building permit for the skylights will be issued on the architect affixing his stamp to the drawings filed with the application for the building permit.

[para29] Schickedanz blocked in the loft piping. The Order to Comply was withdrawn.

[para30] Following settlement attempts, on August 2, 2000 Schickedanz reaffirmed its position that the Agreement was terminated and advised Ms. McGrath that it would treat Ms. McGrath's deposit as forfeited, attempt to resell the Unit and claim damages. Schickedanz demanded removal of the loft tub.

[para31] Ms. McGrath responded with this action and the ex parte motion for the CPL. In the action she claims specific performance, damages and a CPL.

[para32] Virtually all the units in the development have been sold but there is at least one unit of the same model now for sale.

[para33] Section 103 of the CJA provides:

(1) The commencement of a proceeding in which an interest in land is in question is not notice of the proceeding to a person who is not a party until a certificate of pending litigation is issued by the court and [registered on title]

(6) The court may make an order discharging a certificate;

(a) Where the party at whose instance it was issued,

(i) Claims a sum of money in place of or as an alternative to the interest in the land claimed;

(ii) Does not have a reasonable claim to the interest in the land claimed; or

(iii) Does not prosecute the proceeding with reasonable diligence;

(b) Where the interests of the party at whose instance it was issued can be adequately protected by another form of security; or

(c) On any other grounds that is considered just, and the court may, in making the order, impose such terms as to the giving of security or otherwise as the court considers just.

A CPL is an injunction preventing an owner from dealing with the land pending the determination of the claims of the plaintiff: See Allan Candy Ltd. v. CIBC Mortgage Corp., [1994] O.J. No. 1300 per Crane J.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE

Disclosure Requirements

[para34] Ex parte motions are a very serious matter. They can have a devastating effect on an absent responding party. The Court relies upon the applicant for full and frank disclosure of all the relevant facts in the supporting affidavit material as required by rule 39.01(6). There is a heavy onus on counsel to make sure all the relevant facts are before the Court: See 830356 Ontario Inc. v. 156170 Canada Ltd., [1995] O.J. No. 687 per Chadwick J. Great injustice may be done if the requirement of honesty and candour is not strictly enforced: See Swallow v. The Midlands Corp. (1993), 14 O.R. (3d) 687 per Master Peppiatt at p. 694.

[para35] The Agreement was an exhibit to Ms. McGrath's Original Affidavit but the affidavit failed to refer to paragraph 16 in the Agreement headed in capital letters "No Registration" contained in the 11-page Agreement, to which were attached schedules respecting Standard Features, floor plans and locations and amendments.

[para37] In this case I am satisfied from the endorsement of Mr. Justice Nordheimer that counsel fulfilled his duty to the Court to address the issue of paragraph 16 of the Agreement and to raise the defendant's allegations of termination of the Agreement by reason of the plaintiff's alleged breaches of the Agreement.

Lack of Evidence of Uniqueness

[para38] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath's affidavit failed to provide any evidence as to the unique character of the Unit and that Mr. Justice Nordheimer was wrong to assume that merely because an interest in land was claimed by a purchaser under an agreement that a CPL should be granted. The defendant argued that the entitlement to specific performance is an important element in determining the entitlement to a CPL: 572383 Ontario Inc. v. Dhunna (1987), 24 C.P.C. (2d) 287 per Master Donkin. The defendant further argues that specific performance is not granted as a matter of course, and damages will not be considered an inadequate remedy, unless the real property which is the subject of the proceeding can be shown to be unique. In these days of the mass production of apartments of similar design in large buildings and houses of similar design in large subdivisions, a single unit or house among many of the same design cannot be said to have a peculiar or special value or to be irreplaceable: See Semelhago v. Paramadevan (1996), 136 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.); Konjevic v. Horvat Properties Limited (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 633 (C.A.).

[para39] However the historical remedy of specific performance for loss of a bargain to purchase real property has not been negated. I agree with the statement by Low J. in 940060 Ontario Ltd. v. 529566 Ontario Ltd., [1999] O.J. No. 355 at para 14:

The presumption of uniqueness has not yet been replaced by a presumption of replaceability, and that what the Supreme Court did in Semelhago was to open the door to a critical inquiry as to the nature and function of the property in relation to the prospective purchaser.

[para40] In the context of the requirement for disclosure on an ex parte motion, the applicant for a CPL must give some evidence of uniqueness to support a claim for specific performance. This information is material to the issue of entitlement to a CPL.

[para41] The Unit was not comparable to the purchase of the custom-built house on a ravine lot considered in Tropiano v. Stonevalley Estates Inc. (1997), 36 O.R. (3d) 92 (Gen. Div.) nor land purchased for expansion of the use of the purchaser's adjoining property considered in 1072456 Ontario Ltd. v. Ernst & Young Inc. (1997), 10 C.P.C. (4th) 351, per Master Clark.

[para42] Ms. McGrath did give some evidence of uniqueness in paragraph 5 of her Original Affidavit:

I have made changes to the property, including the installation of two skylights and I have also installed wiring for a stereo system throughout the property.

[para43] The signed amendments attached to the Agreement exhibited to the Original Affidavit refer to removal of a walk-in closet in the master bedroom and installation of a smaller closet and a four-piece bathroom en suite.

[para44] The Original Affidavit refers to written amendments, not signed by Schickedanz, to have the defendant rough-in a central vacuum system, provision for a rough-in of gas pipes for future fireplaces, provision of piping for a loft bathroom and a tub in that bathroom. The latter two items were implemented by Schickedanz's workforce.

[para45] There was some evidence in the Original Affidavit which established that the Unit would be different from the 51 other units of a similar basic design in the Project and that these differences were obtained by Ms. McGrath. Accordingly there was evidence of uniqueness.

Improper Evidence

[para46] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath's Original Affidavit is based on unqualified opinions and hearsay, contrary to rules 4.06(2) and 39.01(4) and asks that this Court expunge paragraphs 8, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17 and 18 of the Original Affidavit.

[para47] Any defects in paragraph 8 are not apparent and were not referred to in argument.

[para48] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath's Original Affidavit improperly disclosed settlement discussions in paragraphs 12, 13 and 14. I have not been persuaded of any detriment to Schickedanz because of the disclosure. On the contrary, paragraph 12 and part of paragraph 13 put squarely before Mr. Justice Nordheimer the positions of the parties in this dispute and the need for urgency in obtaining the CPL. I would expunge paragraph 14 as being part of the "without prejudice" negotiation.

[para50] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath's Original Affidavit gave double hearsay evidence in paragraph 17 respecting Schickedanz's financial status which she obtained from her husband without giving the source of his information. I would delete the first sentence of paragraph 17. The balance of the paragraph is a statement of her concern that a judgment for damages may not be collectable. In as much as the Declarant, Central, is a different entity from Schickedanz, and there is no obligation to hold the deposit in trust pending closing, I find some evidence to support this concern.

[para51] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath offered opinions which she was not qualified to render. In paragraph 18 Ms. McGrath speculated that the market value of the Unit had increased and that she expected that any claim for damages may not be collectable. It was clear from the Original Affidavit that Ms. McGrath was a secretary and not a qualified appraiser. No Judge reading the affidavit would have been misled by this assertion. The statement of expectation is a fact and also a possibility. I decline to expunge it.

[para52] Schickedanz complains that despite knowing the names of Schickedanz's employees in the sales office and at the site, Ms. McGrath failed to give their names in her Original Affidavit. I agree that such particulars are desirable. They add credibility to the affidavit. However they are not material and their absence did not prejudice Schickedanz.

[para53] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath's Original Affidavit failed to point out that under Schickedanz's published list of available extras attached to the Agreement skylights could only be installed "where possible" and Ms. McGrath offered no evidence to support the conclusion that their installation was possible. In the absence of the meaning of "where possible" and considering Mr. Farrell's oral agreement and the subsequent City of Toronto building permit allowing the skylights, I consider the omitted facts immaterial.

[para56] Schickedanz complains that the name of the Owner of the project, Central, was not disclosed. The name of the vendor, Schickedanz, was disclosed. I am not persuaded that the name of the true owner is material to obtaining a CPL. Schickedanz held itself out as having the authority of the owner to sell. The names of Schickedanz and the owner, Central, are so similar as to be evidence that Schickedanz was for all purposes of the sale the agent of Central and Central is bound by the Agreement made by its agent.

[para57] Schickedanz complains that Ms. McGrath failed to disclose in the Original Affidavit that her husband's cheque for $1,396.35 dated October 10, 1999, in respect of extras in a signed amendment of that date, had not cleared her husband's account. This issue is irrelevant to a CPL. There is no evidence to suggest that the absence of clearance of the cheque is for any reason other than Schickedanz's failure to present the cheque. There is no evidence that it was not honoured because of some default by Mr. McGrath or Ms. McGrath.

[para58] Schickedanz complains that the Original Affidavit failed to raise the absence of approval by the condominium board of directors to the installation of the skylights, as would be required in the Condominium Documents on change of a common element. I am satisfied that with respect to a building still under construction and before registration of the Condominium Documents, this provision is inapplicable. There is no evidence that Central would have obtained such approval once the building permit was obtained by Schickedanz's architect. At that point Central owned the shares of the condominium corporation and controlled the election of the board of directors. Further this issue is not material to the obtaining of a CPL. It may be relevant to the issue of damages.

[para59] I am not persuaded that any material evidence was withheld, and if it was, such failure was not made with the intention of misleading the Court.

[para60] I expunge paragraph 14 and the first sentence of paragraph 17.

[para61] I dismiss the motion to set aside the CPL. There was sufficient disclosure on the ex parte motion.

MOTION TO DISCHARGE

Interest in Land

[para62] Under the Agreement, Ms. McGrath was entitled, and obliged, to occupy the Unit from the date of substantial completion until the closing date for the purchase of the Unit. On the closing date the parties were obliged to close and title would pass to Ms. McGrath. Schickedanz argued that Ms. McGrath had no right to an interest in land. The argument, as this Court understood it, rested on an alleged lack of uniqueness of the Unit and on the agreement by Ms. McGrath in the Agreement not to register a lien against the title to the Unit. In effect, Schickedanz argues that the Agreement was only a personal agreement between the parties and did not give rise to an interest in land.

Contract Prohibition Against CPL

[para63] The purchaser's undertaking, in clause 16 of the Agreement, not to register a lien in respect of the Agreement is an inherently reasonable clause. It is intended to prevent a purchaser of one of many units in a project from registering notice of the purchase and assertion of a lien which would impair the vendor's ability to obtain construction financing or access agreements. It is also intended to prevent resale prior to closing where a lien right could arise. The vendor Schickedanz has chosen to treat Ms. McGrath's alleged breaches of the Agreement as conduct constituting repudiation of the Agreement entitling Schickedanz to accept that repudiation, and terminate the agreement, thus entitling Schickedanz to resell the Unit.

[para64] Schickedanz cannot unilaterally terminate the agreement, or accept termination, and yet continue to rely on a clause inserted for its benefit which is detrimental to the purchaser's rights. There is nothing in the Agreement which allows the clause to survive termination.

[para65] Schickedanz has referred me to Reznik v. Coolmur Properties Ltd. (1982), 25 R.P.R. 43, (S.C.O.), per Steele J. where a similar clause was at issue when the purchaser sought a CPL. In that case the purchaser sought to terminate the agreement and obtain a return of his deposit. The ONHWP applied to that case and covered return of the purchaser's deposit if it was wrongly retained by the vendor.

[para66] Schickedanz is covered under the ONHWP and the evidence of Mr. Fernandes suggests that purchasers' deposits are insured for $20,000, an amount less than the total of Ms. McGrath's investment for deposits and extras.

[para67] However, in this case it is the vendor Schickedanz which seeks the protection of a clause in a contract which it chose to terminate. It cannot have its cake and eat it too.

[para68] Clause 17 of the Agreement contains a postponement of any claim by Ms. McGrath to mortgages and access agreements arranged by Schickedanz. The harm alleged by Schickedanz in registration of the CPL may be non-existent because of the postponement.

[para69] I prefer to consider the exercise of my discretion as permitted by the CJA s. 103 and as exercised by Sutherland J. in Greenbaum v. 619908 Ontario Ltd. (1986), 11 C.P.C. (2d) 26 at 46 (S.C.O.).

Discharge of CPL

[para70] The onus is on a defendant to persuade the Court that the CPL should be discharged: 1072456 Ontario Ltd. v. Ernst & Young Inc., (1997), 10 C.P.C. (4th) 351 at 358 (Ont. Ct. Gen. Div.). The Judge should examine the whole of the evidence as it stands after cross-examination, without deciding disputed issues of fact and credibility, and consider whether the plaintiff's case constitutes a reasonable claim to the interest in land claimed: Ibid. at 359.

[para71] In exercising its discretion to discharge or vacate a CPL the Court should consider all the circumstances including:

- 1) Whether the plaintiff is a shell corporation;
- 2) Whether the land is unique;
- 3) The intent of the parties in acquiring the land;
- 4) Whether there is an alternative claim for damages;
- 5) The ease or difficulty in calculating damages;
- 6) Whether damages would be a satisfactory remedy;
- 7) The presence or absence of another willing purchaser;
- 8) The harm done to the plaintiff if the certificate is allowed to remain; or to the plaintiff if the certificate is removed, with or without security.

See 572383 Ontario Inc. v. Dhunna, above, and cases cited therein at p. 291.

[para72] Mr. Fernandes refused to answer questions on cross-examination respecting the assets, liabilities or financial condition of Schickedanz. He also testified that all the sales staff are employees of Central and that Schickedanz has no employees. I am not persuaded that Schickedanz is any more than a shell corporation. There is a very real possibility that Schickedanz is without assets and was set up to protect Central's assets from liabilities arising out of sale agreements.

[para73] I am satisfied that Ms. McGrath purchased the Unit for the purpose of residing in it with her husband. She made a substantial investment in modifications to the standard plan for the Unit, including two gas fireplaces for $6,000, indoor vacuum, $3,000 for the skylights, stereo wiring, en suite bathroom in the master bedroom, modified cupboard and other features in accordance with the options listed on Schedule B to the Agreement.

[para74] These changes could have made the property unique to Ms. McGrath. I exclude any consideration of the loft bathroom in this issue of uniqueness as it is not permitted by the applicable building by-law or legislation.

[para75] There is an alternative claim for damages. However I do not see why this should deprive Ms. McGrath of specific performance if she is entitled to specific performance. In view of her right to payment until possession she may have a legitimate claim for damages in addition to, and not as an alternative to, specific performance. It is not clear that the claim for damages is limited to the same loss as that for which specific performance is sought.

[para76] I have no evidence or argument respecting calculation of damages.

[para77] There is no evidence of the existence of another willing purchaser. There is evidence of the availability of other units with a similar floor plan but there is no suggestion that any of them have any of the custom features obtained for the Unit by Ms. McGrath.

[para78] In balancing the harm to Ms. McGrath if she does not obtain the CPL against the harm to Schickedanz if the CPL is permitted to remain, I am satisfied Schickedanz's legitimate interests are probably protected by the terms of clause 17 of the Agreement while the CPL will protect Ms. McGrath's rights to the Unit pending resolution of the action. In any event, Schickedanz's termination of the Agreement triggered registration of the CPL. Schickedanz must live with the consequences of that position.

CONCLUSION

[para79] I dismiss the motion to discharge the lien.

[para80] Costs may be spoken to.

Sherritt v. 690624 Ontario Inc. (c.o.b. Kings Terrace Condominiums)

Between Donna Ann Sherritt, plaintiff, and 690624 Ontario Inc., operating as Kings Terrace Condominiums, Bruno Megna, Rocco (Roy) Megna, Megna Real Estate and Insurance Limited and Milica Bjekic, defendants

Court File No. 1867/97

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Cavarzan J. Heard: May 23-25 and 29, 2000. Judgment: July 21, 2000. (47 paras.)

Counsel: George Gligoric, for the plaintiff. John V. Kranjc, for the defendants.

[para1] CAVARZAN J.:-- The plaintiff entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for the purchase of a condominium apartment unit on December 3, 1996. After extensive renovations were made to that unit by the vendor according to the plaintiff's specifications, the plaintiff took possession on February 28, 1997. She resided there until about May 14, 1997, when she vacated the unit and refused to complete the purchase.

[para2] In this action, the plaintiff claims from the corporate defendant the return of her deposit of $5,500, and from the corporate defendant and the various individual defendants damages for breach of contract and for innocent and fraudulent misrepresentation. She claims damages for inducing breach of contract from the defendants Bruno and Rocco Megna. Exemplary or punitive damages are claimed against all defendants.

[para3] At the opening of trial I permitted the amendment of the statement of claim to include a claim for rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale. Also at the opening of trial, the counterclaim of the corporate defendant was dismissed without costs on consent of the parties.

BACKGROUND

[para4] The defendant corporation had undertaken the conversion of a five-storey, 36-units, 30 years old apartment building into a condominium development. The plan was to renovate each unit in accordance with the new owner's specifications, after it had been sold. Depending upon the speed with which the units were sold, the renovation of the common areas of the building was to be completed within one or two years of the commencement of sales. Model units were completed in the building as vehicles for illustrating graphically to potential purchasers the results of a completed renovation.

[para5] The plaintiff and her companion James Sherritt, whom she has since married, attended at an "open house" at another of the defendant corporation's condominium conversion projects. There they met the defendant Milica Bjekic, an agent for the defendant Megna Real Estate and Insurance Limited. She alerted them to the existence of the condominium conversion project at 2373 King Street East, named Kings Terrace Condominiums, and subsequently met them there to show them a model suite.

[para6] A brochure (Exhibit 3) describing the Kings Terrace project was received by the plaintiff, probably from Milica Bjekic. On one side it showed a photograph of the building and a floor plan of a unit. The printed text touted condominium living as "a better way to live", and described the project as "all new, with customers [sic] needs in mind". It advertises "three floor plans, with balconies, to choose from". In the text printed on the reverse side the following appears:

Totally renovated spacious units with two appliances and whirlpool.

Ceramic floor tiles in bright and efficient kitchens and baths.

New aluminum thermal paned windows.

Well maintained and secure building.

[para7] The plaintiff and Sherritt were not able to view unit 46, the unit which they ultimately chose, before signing an agreement of purchase and sale for that unit on December 3, 1996. It was still occupied by a rental tenant. Instead, they viewed a similar unit.

[para8] The agreement of purchase and sale was made conditional on the purchasers obtaining mortgage approval by January 17, 1997, and, I understand, on the sale of the plaintiff's house. A ten-day cooling-off period was also written into the agreement, during which the purchasers could review the condominium by-law and regulation (Exhibit 5). If the purchasers did not approve, they could give written notice to the vendor during that period thereby terminating the agreement.

[para9] By an amending agreement, the mortgage condition was extended for two weeks to January 31, 1997, at which time the plaintiff waived all conditions.

[para10] Appendix B of the agreement of purchase and sale referred to an "occupancy date" and a "closing date". Purchasers were required to take occupancy if the unit is "substantially completed" and "notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements". Section 3(c) of Appendix B provides as well that "the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials."

[para11] The closing date, defined in s.1(c) of Appendix B can be either the occupancy date or a date designated by the vendor's solicitor at least 30 days after the vendor's solicitor notifies the purchaser or purchaser's solicitor of the registration of the condominium and requests a formal closing with a specified closing date, whichever date is later.

[para12] On December 18, 1996, James Sherritt was deleted as a purchaser by an amendment to the agreement of purchase and sale, because of differences between him and the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified that she intended then to move into the unit alone.

[para13] Immediately upon occupying the unit, the plaintiff began to complain about items of unfinished work in her unit, about the condition of the common areas of the building, and about the general management of the development. Despite attempts by the vendors to rectify all of the alleged defects in unit 46, repairs and renovations were never completed to the plaintiff's satisfaction. I will canvass some details of this dispute later in these reasons; suffice it to say for now that that dispute gives rise to issues of credibility.

[para14] By letter of April 1, 1997, the solicitor for the vendor advised the solicitor for the plaintiff that the condominium had been registered. He set the closing date for May 2, 1997. From that point on, the plaintiff took the position that she would not close the transaction until all her complaints about her unit and about the building generally were addressed to her satisfaction. As stated above, she vacated the premises on or about May 14, 1997.

[para15] The plaintiff had been among the first to purchase a unit at Kings Terrace Condominiums. At that time, some eight to ten others had been sold. The remaining 25 or 26 units were sold by mid-1997. The refinishing of the common areas occurred in late 1997 to early 1998, after the workers had completed the renovation of the units and the installation of a fire suppression system throughout the building. The paving of the outside parking area was the last common element completed. This was in the latter part of 1997, when no further construction vehicles and delivery trucks were attending on the property.

THE ISSUES

Did Milica Bjekic make misrepresentations which induced the plaintiff to enter into this agreement of purchase and sale?

[para16] Mr. Gligoric suggested in his closing submissions that this is a case about unequal bargaining power. He put his client's position rather colourfully by asserting that the defendants were thumbing their noses at the law and that, in this case, the seller's greed exceeds the customer's needs.

[para17] The evidence does not support that characterization of the case. The plaintiff is an experienced adult who had previously owned residential properties in Hamilton and in Caledonia. She together with James Sherritt, another experienced adult who had also previously owned residential property, initiated the hunt for a condominium dwelling unit. They were not content with what was offered at the Connaught Gardens Condominiums which they visited first. They did approve of the units at Kings Terrace.

[para18] Ms. Bjekic admitted that she had told them about the freedom from grass cutting, snow shovelling, and other aspects of outside maintenance, enjoyed by those who chose the "condominium lifestyle". She denied, however, having suggested to the plaintiff that the refinishing of all the common areas would be completed before the closing of the plaintiff's purchase. Her testimony, which I accept as credible and reliable, was that she told prospective purchasers that the common areas would not be completed until all the units had been sold and construction work in the building's units had been completed.

[para19] In her testimony, the plaintiff attributed all of the statements printed on Exhibit 3 to Ms. Bjekic as part of her sales pitch to the plaintiff. Ms. Bjekic testified that she did not hand out those brochures. They were available at the sites of the various condominium projects on stands in the model units. Nothing turns on whether or not Ms. Bjekic handed the brochures to these prospective purchasers. I have already noted above that she probably did hand them to the plaintiff.

[para20] No reasonable person would interpret literally the statement "All new, with customers needs in mind" when he or she knows that the reverse side of the brochure refers to "Totally renovated spacious units". When cross-examined, the plaintiff admitted that she had discussed the nature of the renovations which could be done to unit 46, including floor tiles, countertops, and choice of colours, prior to signing the agreement of purchase and sale.

[para21] With respect to the representations on the brochure (Exhibit 3), she acknowledged that Kings Terrace was adjacent to park land, that it backed onto green space and bicycle paths, that it was close to shopping, and that there was, indeed, an outstanding view from the balcony of unit 46 overlooking the Red Hill Ravine. She acknowledged as well that the unit had been renovated, although she insisted on saying "redone" as if that negated the suggestion that renovation had occurred. She agreed, nevertheless, that new thermopane windows had been installed, as well as new ceramic floors in the entrance hallway, bathroom, and kitchen. New sinks, taps, and cupboards were installed in the kitchen, although this work was not 100% complete on February 28, 1997. The bathroom was equipped with a new toilet, newly-tiled walls, a new mirror, and a new heat lamp. One wall of the bedroom had been moved and rebuilt according to her specifications. This necessitated the relocation of a heating register. The bedroom was then newly carpeted. New carpeting was installed in the living room. The building's original plaster walls were repaired, but not to her satisfaction.

[para22] In my view, the statements made on the brochure do not even qualify as puffery. They are statements of fact which reflected the reality evident to any prospective purchaser.

[para23] As for equality of bargaining power, this hardly qualifies as a case where it can be said that an inexperienced and vulnerable isolated individual was stampeded into a bad deal by high pressure sales tactics. The agreement of purchase and sale had a built-in ten-day cooling off period. The plaintiff had ample time to read the documentation provided to her and to consult a solicitor. She did, in fact, take the agreement of purchase and sale to her solicitor. The agreement was further conditional on the purchaser being approved for mortgage financing and on the sale of her house at 11 Martha Street. She testified that she had no intention of going through with the condominium purchase unless she first sold her house. The house was listed for sale for $105,000; it sold for $98,500. The purchase price for unit 46 was $63,400 with an initial down payment of $500.

[para24] The agreement of purchase and sale contained provisions alerting the purchaser to the nature of the transaction. Paragraph 2(b) of Appendix A cautions that as the unit is not newly constructed, it is not enrolled under and is not covered by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program. The plaintiff insisted that she was led to believe the contrary, although she did not say by whom. That is simply not credible. She claimed not to have been aware of the content of paragraph 2(b) but admitted that she was aware of paragraph 2(f) on the same page which cautioned that the unit purchased would not be identical to the model unit.

[para25] Paragraph 20 of Appendix B to the agreement of purchase and sale contemplated on-going work in the building:

20. The Purchaser shall not interfere with the completion by the Vendor of other Units and the common elements, in accordance with the plans and specifications. Until all the Units are completed and sold the Vendor may make such use of the unsold Units and the common elements as may facilitate such completion and sale showing of the Units and the display of signs.

[para26] Mr. Gligoric submitted that paragraph 3(c) of Appendix B conflicts with paragraph 20 in that it requires the Vendor to complete outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing. That paragraph favours the purchaser and ought to be read contra proferentem in view of the fact that the agreement is a document prepared by the vendor. Paragraph 3(c) provides in part that:

(c) If the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on the Occupancy Date, the Purchaser shall take occupancy notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. (Underlining added)

[para27] In my view there is no conflict between the two paragraphs. The document must be read as a whole. A reasonable time for completing outstanding work will necessarily be shorter for work on the units; it will necessarily be longer for work on the common elements. It makes no sense logically or practically to finish common areas if workers must use the common areas to transport construction materials and equipment and for the removal of debris.

[para28] The evidence does not support the allegation that Milica Bjekic made misrepresentations which induced the plaintiff to enter into the agreement of purchase and sale. Neither is there any credible evidence that either Bruno Megna or Rocco Megna made such representations. There is no need to consider, therefore, the distinction between innocent misrepresentations and fraudulent misrepresentations.

[para29] It is reasonable to infer, as suggested by Mr. Kranjc, that the plaintiff and James Sherritt had intended to try the condominium lifestyle together. By the time the plaintiff moved into the unit, however, she and Sherritt had had differences and the condominium lifestyle may not have held the same appeal for her.

Is the plaintiff entitled to rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale?

[para30] In Cheshire, Fifoot & Furmston, Law Of Contract (11th ed.) rescission is discussed as a remedy for misrepresentation. At p. 75 it is stated that:

It is a fundamental principle that the effect of a misrepresentation is to make the contract voidable and not void. This means that the contract is valid unless and until it is set aside by the representee. On discovering the misrepresentation the representee may elect to affirm or to rescind the contract.

A contract is affirmed if the representee declares his intention to proceed with the contract or does some act from which such an intention may reasonably be inferred.

A contract is rescinded if the representee makes it clear that he refuses to be bound by its provisions. The effect then is that the contract is terminated ab initio as if it had never existed.

[para31] My finding that there is no credible evidence to support the allegation that the plaintiff was induced to enter into the contract by misrepresentations, effectively rules out the remedy of rescission.

[para32] I am aware, however, that rescission is used in a second sense. Footnote 11 at p. 275 of Cheshire, Fifoot & Furmston notes that:

Unfortunately the word "rescission" is also often used to describe the position where a party elects to treat a contract as discharged because of a breach of one of the essential terms. But there the contract is not rendered void ab initio. The further liability of either party to perform the outstanding contractual obligations is terminated, but causes of action that have already arisen by virtue of the breach remain remediable by an action for damages.

[para33] In law, a party to a contract is entitled to treat herself as discharged from further liability where her co-contractor, without expressly or implicitly repudiating his obligations, commits a fundamental breach of contract. Macdonell J. in Eagle Dancer Enterprises Ltd. v. Southam Printing Ltd. (1992), 6 B.L.R. (2d) 45 (B.C.S.C.) reviewed the law on fundamental breach. At p.52 he summed up as follows:

The proper approach for determining whether a fundamental breach occurred can be found in the case of Poole v. Tomenson Saunders Whitehead Ltd., 16 B.C.L.R. (2d) 349, [1987] 6 W.W.R. 273, 18 C.C.E.L. 238, 43 D.L.R. (4th) 56 (C.A.), where Wallace J. A. (per curiam) states, at p. 358 [B.C.L.R.]:

"The common theme, emphasized by every court, when determining whether a breach of contract justifies the innocent party terminating the contract rather than confining his remedy to the damages caused by the breach, is that the breach must be tantamount to the frustration of the contract either as a result of the unequivocal refusal of one party to perform his contractual obligation or as a result of conduct which has destroyed the commercial purpose of the contract, thereby entitling the innocent party to be relieved from future performance."

[para34] At p. 53, Macdonell J. adopts the following from p. 534 of G.H.C. Fridman, The Law Of Contract In Canada, (2d) ed. (Toronto Carswell, 1986)

The basic test comes down to the simple, if not obvious one of deciding what is the real purpose of the contract, the true benefit intended to be obtained by the injured party, the extent to which the misperformance by the defendant goes beyond falling short of what was desired by the victim of the breach and involves the complete denial to him of any benefit from the performance that was provided.

[para35] Here there was no unequivocal refusal of one party to perform its contractual obligations. Clearly, there were difficulties between the plaintiff and the defendants and their construction staff in arranging mutually convenient times to complete necessary work in the unit. The sum total of the plaintiff's complaints by the time the closing date became imminent amounted to plaster walls that needed to be refinished, periodic condensation on the windows, levelling of the kitchen cupboards, and the regrouting of the bathtub. All of these repairs were minor. I accept the testimony of the Megnas that they were always ready and willing to complete them. I accept the evidence of the two experts who testified. Both had done independent inspections of the unit. In essence, they agreed that the defects alleged were minor and that the total cost of correcting them would be less than $1,000.

[para36] The conduct of the defendants cannot be said to have destroyed the commercial purpose of the contract. Renovations of unit 46 began within two days after the conditions on the agreement of purchase and sale were waived on January 31, 1997. The plaintiff attended at Unit 46 on February 1, 1997, at which time a floor plan showing how the bedroom wall was to be relocated was approved by the plaintiff. I accept the testimony of Rocco Megna that the floor tiles were installed as one of the last steps in the renovation of the unit, on or about February 20, 1997, and that the change in colour was the plaintiff's decision as reflected in the "Materials Chosen" form signed by her on February 11, 1997.

[para37] Work on the common areas began in mid-1997 and was completed between late 1997 and early 1998. The parking lot was paved in late 1997, and other exterior repairs, such as replastering and painting of the covered outside parking area were also completed at that time.

[para38] The holes in the hallway ceilings had been made to facilitate the installation of a fire suppression system for the building. This system was inspected and the holes were closed by mid-1997. This work was a necessary part of the conversion of an apartment building into a condominium project. These holes in the common area hallways and the generally unkempt condition of the parking areas around the building were featured prominently in exhibit 8, a videotape made by the plaintiff on April 15 and 16, 1997.

[para40] With respect to the plaintiff's complaints about other deficiencies, I find them to be exaggerated and made for effect. For example, she alleged that the kitchen appliances were not in the unit on February 28, 1997, when she took possession. According to her, she intercepted appliance delivery men who were delivering appliances to another unit and prevailed upon them to deliver them to her unit. Exhibit 18, however, is an invoice from a furniture supplier showing delivery of a stove and refrigerator to Unit 46 on February 28, 1997.

[para41] Bruno Megna testified that complaints about the absence of a kitchen sink and of appliances on February 28th, which he denied as false, came to light only after this litigation was commenced.

[para42] A storage area within the building and two parking spaces were always available for Unit 46. Bruno Megna testified that the two parking spaces for that unit were at the entrance to the parking area adjacent to King Street. The plaintiff had complained, however, that the door of the car in an adjacent parking space would strike her car. Megna was not cross-examined on this testimony. I accept it as credible and as another illustration of the plaintiff's tendency to distort the facts for effect.

[para43] A videocamera at the front entrance of the building is permanently trained on the locked front door. Unit owners could monitor the entrance by tuning into Channel 3 on their cable T.V. service, and admit visitors only after visual identification. Bruno Megna testified that this system was installed by Rogers Cable in the mid-1980's and maintained by that company. He denied that the system was not operating, as asserted by the plaintiff. On cross-examination, he maintained that this feature made the building secure. He was not otherwise challenged on this matter, and I accept that testimony as credible.

[para44] Rocco Megna testified that the windows throughout the building had been replaced with new thermo-pane windows in 1996 and 1997. There have been no complaints about condensation from the owners of any of the other units. Roy Cooke who did an independent inspection of Unit 46 on June 12, 1997, found no evidence of condensation on the windows. He suggested that the simplest way to relieve excess humidity in the unit was to install a ceiling exhaust fan or to leave the patio door open 1/4 inch. I am unable to credit the plaintiff's testimony that the unit's windows were defective.

[para45] In my view there has been no fundamental breach of contract entitling the plaintiff to rescind it. She took possession of the unit when it was substantially renovated in accordance with the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale. She occupied it for some three months. She was entitled to insist that all of the minor deficiencies be corrected. If not corrected she may have been entitled to an award of damages; she is not entitled, however, to walk away from her obligations under the agreement and demand the remedy of rescission.

Is the plaintiff entitled to exemplary or punitive damages?

[para46] This claim is entirely misconceived. There is no evidence of the type of egregious conduct on the part of any of the defendants which would attract an award of exemplary or punitive damages. On the contrary, the evidence shows that they acted honourably and in good faith.

RESULT

[para47] The plaintiff's claim is dismissed. I may be spoken to on the matter of costs, if necessary.

Gibraltar Mortgage Ltd. v. Ogilvie and Co.

Between Gibraltar Mortgage Ltd., plaintiff, and Ogilvie and Company and Edward Tapuska, defendants

Action No. 9801-03645

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Hawco J. Judgment: filed March 2, 2001. (36 paras.)

Counsel: Allan J. Sattin, for the plaintiff. Gwen K. Randall, Q.C., for the defendant.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT HAWCO J.:--

INTRODUCTION

[para1] The plaintiff hired the defendant Edward Tapuska to prepare and register a mortgage covering four separate parcels of land. Mr. Tapuska did prepare and register the mortgage against all but one of the parcels. He admits liability for failing to have registered the mortgage against parcel two ("the farmlands"). The only issue before the Court is whether the plaintiff has suffered any damages from Mr. Tapuska's negligence and if so, to what extent. I am satisfied that as a result of Mr. Tapuska's inadvertence, the plaintiff has suffered damages in the amount of $137,000.

FACTS

[para2] The plaintiff is a private mortgage lender carrying on business in Calgary, Alberta. The defendant law firm at all times material to this action performed legal services for the plaintiff. Mr. Tapuska was the partner in the defendant law firm who performed the services.

[para3] By letter dated April 4, 1994, Derryvale Farms Limited and the plaintiff entered into an agreement for a construction mortgage of $1.1 million, to be secured over four parcels of land, including the farmlands. The funds were to be used to complete a condominium project in Vulcan, Alberta.

[para4] The proposed mortgage represented 60 percent of the appraised value of all of the security totalling $1.9 million as determined by appraisals obtained by the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the commitment letter. Included in the appraisals was an appraisal of the farmlands in the amount of $137,000.

[para6] Without having received the instructions to do so, Mr. Tapuska included in the mortgage, section 51(4) which reads:

At all times there shall be sufficient funds unadvanced under this Mortgage and retained by the Mortgagee to complete the construction and/or renovation of the project on the Property as well as a hold back of (10 percent) with respect to work already completed.

[para7] The plaintiff advanced $752,000 of the mortgage funds to Derryvale by September of 1994. By October of 1994 the condominium project was in financial trouble and the plaintiff commenced foreclosure proceedings on October 23, 1994. An order for sale of the property was ordered on March 22, 1995.

[para8] One offer in the amount of $400,000 to purchase the property on which the condominiums were to be built was received from Westland Capital Corp. This offer was rejected by the plaintiff, which then purchased the property in the foreclosure proceedings for $482,000 by order dated May 11, 1995. The purchase price was based upon an appraisal from Reliance Appraisal Consultants Ltd. dated January 23, 1995. A deficiency judgment was entered for $138,000 against Derryvale with respect to the mortgage.

[para9] Once the plaintiff had acquired title to the other three properties, it considered that it had three options: sell all of the property as it was; rent it for a period of time and then sell it; add value to the properties as they then existed and sell them. The commercial property was sold relatively quickly. The farm residence was rented for a period of time and then sold. With respect to the third parcel of land upon which the condominiums were under construction, the plaintiff decided to complete construction and then sell the properties. That was done over the next five years and, as of the date of trial, all units but two were sold.

[para10] It was the evidence of Mr. Darrell Cook, the president of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff became aware prior to the foreclosure proceeding that the farmlands had not been included in the security documents. It was his view at that time that there was no point in having then included them because the total property and project was encumbered far beyond its value. It appears to be agreed that as of the date of trial, the plaintiff had received a total of $1.208 million for the condominiums which it had developed and sold. The residence and commercial lots brought in an additional $156,000, for a total on the 3 parcels of land of $1.364 million. It cost the plaintiff some $657,000 to develop the condominiums and a further $190,000 in foreclosure and property expenses. In addition, there were further costs of approximately $25,000 relating to further foreclosure costs and legal fees. The total cost to the plaintiff in foreclosing, developing and selling all three parcels therefore appears to have been some $872,000. The "gain" to the plaintiff then would have been approximately $492,000. However, the plaintiff having advanced the debtor some $825,000, the loss to the plaintiff at the end of the day was approximately $333,000.

DAMAGES

[para11] The plaintiff's position was that its loss was $137,000, being the value of the property not included in the mortgage documentation. Had the farmlands been covered by the mortgage, the plaintiff could have sold them for $137,000. Its deficiency of $138,000 would have been reduced by that amount and that was therefore the damages sustained.

[para12] The defendants' position was that, by virtue of the plaintiff having developed and sold the condominium project, it had reduced its losses to the extent that there were no damages suffered.

[para13] Ms. Brenda Pask of Clark Valuation Services Ltd. provided an opinion on the damages suffered by the plaintiff, as did Mr. R.T. Stainthorpe of Deloitte and Touche. It was Ms. Pask's opinion that two scenarios were possible. In the first, had the plaintiff had security on everything (including the farmlands) and had it sold everything as of the date of the foreclosure, it would suffered a net loss as against the monies advanced under the mortgage, of $334,000. Against this, she measured the actual loss as sustained, that is, without the farmlands and with the plaintiff having completed and sold the condominiums. That, as pointed out above, resulted in a net loss to the plaintiff of approximately $333,000. Under this scenario, there was therefore no loss or a minimal loss.

[para14] A revised first scenario whereby the farmland was included in the security and sold for a lesser amount than what it had ultimately been sold for would have resulted in the plaintiff suffering a greater loss than it ultimately did sustain. Again, this would result in the plaintiff suffering no loss.

[para16] The point which the defendant sought to make with Ms. Pask's evidence was that no matter how one looked at all of the figures, at the end of the day, given that the plaintiff had elected to develop and sell the condominium project, it did not lose any money by virtue of Mr. Tapuska's negligence. Even if the farmlands had been included, the plaintiff would still have sustained a loss because the amount it would have received for all of the properties would not have covered the amount of monies advanced. However, the loss which it did sustain, having elected to develop the properties was less than it would have sustained had the farmlands been included and all of the properties sold at the time of foreclosure.

[para17] In rebuttal to Ms. Pask's evidence, Mr. Stainthorpe was of the opinion that there were a number of errors in the Clark report. Firstly, while it recognized that the project suffered large losses, it did not recognize that those losses would have been reduced had the farmlands been available for foreclosure and sale.

[para18] Secondly, the Clark report did not factor in the interest costs related to the financing of the condominium project. Ms. Pask did not do so because in her view the plaintiff would have incurred financing costs regardless of whether sufficient security would have been in place at the time of foreclosure. She also seemed to be influenced by the fact that any financing which would have been provided to the plaintiff would have come from a related company. In Mr. Stainthorpe's view those financing costs, which would have been approximately $340,000, should have been taken into consideration.

[para19] Thirdly, Mr. Stainthorpe took issue with the item "disbursements" in the amount of $189,000 in all of the Clark scenarios. These were foreclosure costs and property expenses taken by Ms. Pask to have been incurred relating to the condominium project. In her report, Ms. Pask had assumed they would have been the same had the project been sold at the date of foreclosure or was developed and sold over several years. It was Mr. Stainthorpe's opinion that those costs used by Ms. Pask were overstated by approximately $130,000 because if the project had not been developed, but had been sold on foreclosure, only approximately $59,000 would have been incurred in foreclosure costs and property expenses.

[para20] It was Mr. Stainthorpe's opinion that which ever way it is viewed, the plaintiff's loss was $137,000. He based that opinion on two methods of calculation. In the first method, he simply looked to the deficiency and judgment received by the plaintiff. That judgment determined that the plaintiff's loss was $138,000. If the farmland had been available at the date of foreclosure, the deficiency would have been reduced by $137,000.

[para21] In the second method, he assumed that the plaintiff would have received an income of $153,834, had the mortgage of $1.1 million not gone into foreclosure. His calculation of the losses sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the mortgage having gone into foreclosure, and having taken into consideration the monies which it did receive from all of the lands which were covered was $569,000. That loss would have been reduced by $137,000 had the plaintiff been able to realize upon the farmland at its appraised value.

ISSUES

[para22] There are two issues involved in this case. Firstly, when should the plaintiff's loss be calculated? Should it be calculated at the time of the foreclosure or at the date of the trial? Secondly, if the losses are to be calculated at the date of trial, has the plaintiff suffered any damages.

DECISION

[para23] In my respectful view, the proper date for calculation of plaintiff's damages should be as of the date of foreclosure. That would place the plaintiff's damages at the sum of $137,000. However, even if the appropriate date is as of the date of trial the plaintiff's losses still are $137,000. There would, in addition, be additional damages of $6,580.50, being legal fees incurred.

REASONS

[para24] The defendants argue that a plaintiff has a duty to mitigate its losses so long as it is a reasonable course of action in the circumstances. In this case, there may not have been any duty to take over the project and develop it. However, having done so, the plaintiff has diminished its losses to the extent that it has suffered no damages.

[para25] The plaintiff's response to this is that once the sale of the lands takes place pursuant to the foreclosure proceedings, the damages are suffered. The fact that the plaintiff acquires title is not relevant. Any sale is as if the purchaser is a third party. What the plaintiff then does to or with the property has no bearing on the damages sustained. It is a new and unrelated venture. As Master Funduk stated in American Savings and Loan Assn. v. Stechishin, [1993] A.J. No. 830, at paragraph 30:

I should have thought that it was settled law that a sale to a mortgagee is not an order of foreclosure and so the purchasing mortgagee need not account for the land after it buys it.

[para26] It is clear that there was no duty on the plaintiff in this case to take over and develop the properties upon which it had foreclosed. But having done so, is it now obliged to look to what occurred thereafter to determine what loss, if any it sustained? In my respectful view, the answer is no.

[para27] The defendant has relied upon a number of authorities to advance its position on mitigation. One of those authorities is Redpath Industries Ltd. v. The Ship "Cisco" et al (1993), 110 D.L.R. (4th) 583 (Fed.C.A.). At page 606, Desjardins, J.A. quotes the following passage from Cockburn v. Trusts and Guarantee Co. (1917), 55 S.C.R. 264, at page 267:

As James, L.J. indicates, the second principle does not impose on the plaintiff an obligation to take any step which a reasonable and prudent man would not ordinarily take in the course of his business. But when in the course of his business he has taken action arising out of the transaction, which action has diminished his loss, the effect in actual diminution in the loss that he has suffered may be taken into account even though there was no duty on him to act.

[para28] It should be noted that in Cockburn, Duff, J. went on to quote with approval the following:

The subsequent transaction, if to be taken into account, must be one arising out of the consequences of the breach and in the ordinary course of business.

That principle was again adopted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Epeco of Canada Ltd. v. Windmill Place (1978), 82 D.L.R. (3rd) 1. It was also accepted in 1874000 Nova Scotia Ltd. v. Adams (1997), 146 D.L.R. (4th) 466, where the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal accepted that where a client has undertaken a complete reorganisation of his business and has begun a new venture, any success he had ought not to be credited to the account of a negligent chartered accountant firm.

[para29] That is how I view what occurred here. The plaintiff was not in the business of developing and selling condominiums. It was a financier. The role that it assumed should not be characterized as one arising in the ordinary course of its business. Had it lost even more money because of its venture, I suspect the defendants would not be quite as ready to argue that the plaintiff's damages should be increased.

[para30] The plaintiff's damages are therefore set at the value of the property which was not covered by the mortgage as of the date of the foreclosure proceedings. That value is $137,000. Interest should be payable on that amount from the date of the deficiency judgment.

[para31] In the event that I am wrong in my application of the principles of mitigation in this case, I would still set the damages at $137,000. However, in that event, interest would not begin to run until October 31, 2000, which is the date used by Mr. Stainthorpe in his calculations.

[para32] I come to this conclusion because I accept Mr. Stainthorpe's calculation of damages as opposed to that prepared by Ms. Pask. I agree with Mr. Stainthorpe that financing costs were incurred and should have been taken into consideration by Ms. Pask in her calculations. I also agree with him that the costs in the amount of $189,000 accepted by Ms. Pask were overstated by approximately $130,000. I also note that Ms. Pask admitted that another disbursement in the amount of $30,000 which she had deducted in the "planned results" of the second scenario ought not to have been deducted because of the foreclosure. Taking into consideration these matters, in the second scenario prepared by Ms. Pask there would have been a loss of some $157,000 rather than a gain of $10,000 as she had indicated.

[para33] According to Mr. Stainthorpe's opinion, which I accept, either one of two methods could have been used to calculate the effect upon the plaintiff, had it been able to realize upon the farmlands. Whichever method was used, the loss to the plaintiff as a result of its inability to realize upon the farmlands was $137,000.

[para34] The plaintiff had also claimed damages in the amount of $75,000 by virtue of clause 51(4) having been inserted into the mortgage and not having been followed. It was argued that had Mr. Tapuska withheld 10 percent of the funds advanced from time to time, the plaintiff's losses would have been reduced by $75,000. I have difficulty with the plaintiff seeking to reap an additional benefit which, had its instructions been followed, would not have been forthcoming, after successfully recovering $137,000 because Mr. Tapuska had failed to follow its original instructions. That portion of the claim is denied.

[para35] The parties have agreed that there is a valid claim for extra legal fees in the amount of $6,580.50. Those are allowed.

[para36] The plaintiff is entitled to its costs.

Counsel: V.A. Archer, for the applicant. D.F. Pawlowski, for the respondent.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

[para1] MASTER FUNDUK:-- There is a delightful comment by Wilson J. in Spencer v. Continental Insurance Company, [1945] 3 W.W.R. 161 (B.C.S.C.) about a judge occasionally being tempted to avert his nostrils in applying his mind to a case, p. 180. Shakespeare expressed the point somewhat differently in Hamlet.

[para2] I could not improve on Ms. Archer's excellent and compelling analysis of the facts and the law so I will be reasonably brief and deal only with some of the major arguments.

[para3] The Respondent built a residential condominium project. It sold units to buyers (unit owners) by written contracts. Units would have specific parking stalls which went with the unit.

[para4] There are 32 common property stalls, that is, stalls that do not go with any particular units. These are common property and so subject to the control of the Applicant. It is of course the Applicant's responsibility to maintain the stalls and to maintain them as common property.

[para5] The initial board of managers of the Applicant, stocked with the Respondent's employees, purported to give a 100 year "licence" of the common property stalls to the Respondent for the magnificent sum of $10.00. Why would the Respondent, the developer, want to have a 100 year licence for 32 common property stalls? The answer is simple - money. The Respondent then offered to lease or sell the stalls to unit owners.

[para6] To try to keep any possible complaints out of the courts the same board of managers, stocked with the Respondent's employees, purported to enter into an agreement with the Respondent requiring any disputes to go to arbitration. To the untrained eye the sole signatory for each party appears to be the same. Everything was done the same day.

[para7] When the turnover happened the new board of managers demanded that the initial board, stocked with the Respondent's employee's, turn over all records. The records do not have a board resolution by the initial board for the disputes resolution agreement.

[para8] The new board is quite naturally dissatisfied with what happened and this lawsuit is the result of that.

One

[para9] The purchase contracts between the Respondent and unit owners cannot bind the Applicant regarding the common property. Very simply, A and B cannot by contract bind C. The Condominium Property Act does not change that basic principle of common law.

[para10] I do not agree that the alleged knowledge of unit holders can somehow bind the Applicant. Very simply, their knowledge is irrelevant.

[para11] S. 20 of the Act creates the corporation and says that it "consists of" unit owners. I do not agree that the corporation is the unit owners or that the unit owners are the corporation. Each exists as a person in law. A commercial corporation has shareholders but that is not appropriate to a condominium corporation given its special nature. The legislation limits who can have a legal status tied to the condominium corporation and chooses the neutral "consists of" instead of using descriptions like "shareholders" or "members" but the intent can still be gleaned from the legislation. The unit owners are members of the condominium corporation regardless of the synonyms used to describe their status.

[para12] A condominium corporation is a person in law and unit owners are persons in law. It is as simple as that. The unit owners cannot in law bind the condominium corporation.

[para13] In a commercial corporation the board of directors owes a duty to the corporation. There may be, at least in some situations, a fiduciary duty by directors: 155569 Canada Ltd. v. 248524 Alberta Ltd., 77 Alta. L.R. (3d) 231 (C.A.), para. 89. It can hardly be argued that a board of managers of a condominium corporation does not owe a duty to the corporation. It owes a duty to act honestly, in good faith and in the best interests of the corporation. When the board of managers are all employees of the Respondent they might in any given situation be in a conflict of interest and so owe a fiduciary duty to the condominium corporation.

[para14] I seriously doubt that any reasonable person would say that giving away some of the Applicant's common property for 100 years for $10.00, regardless how it is dressed up, is in the best interests of the Applicant. Why stop there? Perhaps the initial board of managers could have also given the Respondent an exclusive 100 years "licence" for the common hallways so the Respondent could set up toll booths and charge a toll to users of the hallways.

[para15] My function today is not to decide on the legality of the "licence" agreement or the arbitration agreement. The Respondent applies for an order to stay the lawsuit and require arbitration.

[para16] But if the arbitration agreement is not valid, for whatever reason, there cannot be arbitration. Here the Applicant disputes the arbitration agreement itself so the comments of Viscount Simon in Heyman v. Darwins Limited, referred to in Kathed Holdings Ltd. v. Theologian Management Ltd., [1996] A.J. 657 (Q.B.) are appropriate.

[para17] The Respondents who are individuals are the alleged employees of the Respondent. They are not parties to the arbitration agreement. I agree with Ms. Archer's position that this too is a ground for not directing arbitration: 1974347 Ontario Inc. v. Schlater, [1997] A.J. No. 67 (Q.B.).

[para18] I do not find it necessary to deal with all the arguments raised by Ms. Archer although I find them all compelling individually and collectively. The bottom line is whether the initial board of managers was just a puppet of the Respondent (not an independent board) which acted contrary to a board's duties and with of course the Respondent's complicity. If so the two agreements may not be legally effective [para19] The application is dismissed with costs to the Applicant on Column 5, the payment of which is not stayed.

Canada West Insurance Co. v. Guardian Insurance Co. of Canada

Between Canada West Insurance Company and Citybest Auto Centre Inc., plaintiffs, and Guardian Insurance Company of Canada, defendant

Action No. 9801-05891

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Kent J. Heard: July 11, 2000. Judgment: filed August 4, 2000. (11 paras.)

Counsel: P.R. Mack, for the plaintiff. D.G. Davies, for the defendant.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] KENT J.:-- On May 4, 1996, there was an explosion at Citybest Auto Centre Inc., an auto repair business housed in an industrial condominium complex. Several third party liability claims were made against Citybest. They were paid by Canada West, Citybest's commercial liability insurer. Guardian had issued a policy of insurance to the condominium corporation. Canada West and Citybest bring this action seeking a declaration that Guardian is liable for a pro rata share (50%) of the claims and damages in accordance with that declaration. Guardian moves for summary judgment dismissing the claim on the basis that Citybest is not an insured under its policy.

[para2] The relevant portions of the Guardian policy are as follows:

1. The name insured is Association;
2. The business conducted by the insured at the risk location is a commercial condominium owner. By others as: offices, ret computers, private truck repair; and contractors' strg.

The word "Insured" means any person qualifying as such under Section II - WHO IS AN INSURED, of the form.

SECTION II - WHO IS AN INSURED

1. If you are designated in the Policy Designation as:

c. An organization other than a partnership or joint venture, you are an insured. Your executive officers and directors are insureds, but only with respect to their duties as your officers or directors. Your stockholders are also insureds, but only with respect to their liability as stockholders.

[para3] There was an endorsement to the policy entitled "Limitation of coverage to the designated premises" which reads in part:

This insurance applies only to "bodily injury", "property damage", "personal injury", and "medical expense", arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the premises described in risk location number 1.

[para4] The by-laws of the owners of the condominium corporation require the corporation to obtain "public liability insurance with respect to liability claims arising out of the common property, a unit, the actions of an owner "

[para5] Guardian's argument is that under Section II, Citybest is simply not an insured. Even if you define stockholder in Section 1 (c) to include condominium owners, the coverage is only with respect to its liability as a member. The incident at issue did not arise in Citybest's role as stockholder but as a repairman.

[para6] Canada West and Citybest have two arguments. The first is that Citybest is an insured under the policy by virtue of the combined effect of provisions of the Condominium Property Act and the condominium by-laws. Section 38 of the Act provides that the condominium corporation shall maintain insurance on the units. Owner is defined as the fee simple or lease holder of a unit. An owner is also a member of the association by virtue of Section 20 of the Act which provides that the condominium corporation consists of the owners of the units. That makes Citybest a stockholder as defined in Section II of the Guardian policy. The policy does not restrict the location to any particular part of the property. Finally, the by-laws require the corporation to have liability insurance for claims arising out of a unit, or the actions of an owner. Taking all of the factors, Citybest is an insured.

[para7] The second argument is that the endorsement set out above refers to ownership of premises. If liability is triggered by ownership, then Citybest, an owner, must be covered.

[para8] This is a summary judgment application so I must be satisfied beyond doubt that the claim will fail. There is no case law that is particularly helpful in determining the meaning and therefore the applicability of the policy. In my view, when Section 38 of the Act requires the corporation to have insurance, that does not mean that the policy obtained covers any situation. It is the policy which determines who is an insured.

[para9] Section II of the policy does not include individual unit owners because they are not referred to, except in their capacity as members of the corporation, not in their capacity as business operators. It is as a business operator that Citybest's loss occurred. The endorsement is intended to address the geographical limits of the policy, not to extend the meaning of insured beyond that which is contained in Section II.

[para10] That leaves the by-laws. Canada West argues that because the by-laws say that there is to be liability coverage, that means the policy must cover the owners for liability claims. That conclusion does not follow. It is the policy which determines what the coverage is. Citybest is not an insured under the policy.

[para11] In the result, the application is granted and the claim is dismissed.

Tymchuk v. Carrington Properties Ltd.

Between Mark Tymchuk, on behalf of himself and all other members of a class having claims against the other defendants, plaintiffs, and Carrington Properties Ltd., Main Street Developments Ltd., 563940 Alberta Ltd., 548016 Alberta Ltd., 563941 Alberta Ltd., Randall Klapstein and Kenneth Ferchoff, defendants

Action No. 9803 03242

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Master Breitreuz Heard: January 17, 2000. Judgment: April 10, 2000. (12 paras.)

Counsel: Mark Kirwin, for the plaintiffs. Dennis Pawlowski, for the defendants.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

[para1] MASTER BREITKREUZ:-- This is an application by the defendants under Rule 159 for summary judgment dismissing the plaintiffs' action, and a cross application by the plaintiffs to amend their statement of claim by adding a paragraph as shown in the draft amended statement of claim attached to the notice of motion.

[para2] The lawsuit involves the purchase by the plaintiffs of various condominium units in a condominium complex developed by the defendants. The purchase agreements included exclusive lease agreements purporting to grant to the purchasers the exclusive use of one covered stall or the exclusive use of one ordinary stall, i.e. with no roof over it, or both, for 100 years. The purchase agreement "is a large binder with hundreds of pages and this agreement would have been part of that." (Page 40 of Kenneth Ferchoff's cross examination on December 14, 1998.)

[para3] The cross-examination also showed that the defendants named as parties were not the only persons involved in this complicated maze, and one can easily understand the frustration and confusion caused to the plaintiffs and their counsel in attempting to determine who the correct defendants are. The transcript shows that three other numbered companies and the Randall Klapstein family trust were the sole shareholders of some of the numbered companies named as defendants. Regardless of the maze of corporate permutations and combinations which seems to have run rampant throughout this scheme, it appears that Randy Klapstein and Kenneth Ferchoff, and perhaps one other Ferchoff, were the directors of these various numerous corporations.

[para4] I think it is fair to say that the corporate conglomeration was so confusing and complex that even the corporate officer who swore the affidavit in support of the application and who was cross examined on his affidavit was unable to fully appreciate and understand the intricacies of the corporate structure. It is not surprising that there is a great deal of doubt as far as the purchasers are concerned regarding who they were dealing with, which makes it difficult for the purchasers and their counsel to determine against whom they ought to be enforcing their rights.

[para5] It may be that very little turns on who ought to ultimately be liable for the alleged breach of contract because it would appear that a number of the entities fit the proverbial strawman classification, but it may be relevant if it turns out that liability does attach to one or more of these entities who in fact have some substance to them. In my view the unravelling of this corporate scheme in the context of the documentation presented to the various purchasers to show who the principals were and who the agents were, and whether in the circumstances of the transaction generally, the purchasers should be permitted to produce evidence to challenge the defendants' evidence in that respect, is a triable issue.

[para6] In addition to the above issue is the question of whether the vendors, whoever that may ultimately be found to be, were selling something they could not sell because they did not own it, and could not own it, because it didn't exist in law.

[para7] This issue deals with the failure to properly designate the parking stalls. The plan that was submitted to Land Titles Office did not delineate the parking stalls in the condominium plan registered at Land Titles Office as required by s. 6(2) of the Condominium Property Act. The result of this is that the current executive and membership of the condominium corporation will not recognize these exclusive use lease agreements except for current original purchasers. This means that when the plaintiffs sell their condominium residences the exclusive use leases will not "run with the land", or I suppose in this context it would be accurate to say "run with the space". It is alleged that this decreases the value of the individual condominium units and that is a loss for which the law ought to give an award of damages.

[para8] Another issue which also deals with the alleged defect in the purchasers' titles to their parking stalls is the allegation that the condominium corporation, when the defendants/developers/vendors were also the condominium corporation, no exclusive use lease agreements were entered into for the benefit of the condominium corporation. At the relevant time when the defendants/developers/vendors were in control of the condominium corporation, the directors of it were Randall Klapstein and Kenneth Ferchoff (p. 44 of Ferchoff transcript).

[para9] Accordingly there is a vital link missing to perfect the title of the purchasers to these exclusive use leases.

[para10] The defendants have not persuaded me that the plaintiffs' case is so weak that it does not merit a trial.

[para11] The application of the defendants is dismissed and the application of the plaintiffs to amend the statement of claim to add paragraph 10 as reflected in the draft amended statement of claim attached to the notice of motion is allowed.

[para12] Counsel have asked me to leave the matter of costs open. If any further argument or discussion regarding costs needs to be made before me, it must be made within 30 days of the date of this decision.

York Condominium Corp. No. 511 v. Best Deal Motors & Collision Centre Inc.

APPLICATION UNDER Section 49 of The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 as amended and Rule 14.05(2) of The Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194

Between York Condominium Corporation No. 511, applicant, and Best Deal Motors & Collision Centre Inc., respondent

Court File No. 00-CV-195796

Ontario Superior Court of Justice E.M. Macdonald J. Heard: October 19, 2000. Judgment: February 6, 2001. (13 paras.)

Counsel: Marc Koplowitz, for the applicant. Thomas S. Kent, for the respondent.

[para1] E.M. MACDONALD J.:-- In this application, York Condominium Corporation #511 ("York") seeks orders compelling the Respondent Best Deal Motors ("Best Deal") to remove within five days of any order of this court all vehicles which are said to be improperly stored or parked on the common elements of York's property. Other relief sought seeks to restrain the officers, directors, employees and customers of Best Deal from improperly parking vehicles on the common elements of York's property without prior written approval from its Board.

[para2] This application is brought after a history of a long-standing dispute between the parties over the use of parking spaces at this commercial condominium complex located at 2899 Steeles Avenue West in Toronto. The site is zoned for industrial and related uses. There are 31 units in the complex, 3 of which are owned by Best Deal. Best Deal is in the collision and repair business. It says that the nature of its business is such that on occasion, tow trucks deliver damaged vehicles after hours and deposit them proximate to the relevant auto storage repair shop doors, usually at the back or near the back of the premises.

[para3] The history includes 2 previous applications to this court. The first occurred in 1989. At that time, there were allegations that Best Deal was unlawfully posting signs on the common elements. The second application occurred in 1991 and alleged that Best Deal had caused damage to the common elements as a result of parking derelict and used motor vehicle parts on the common elements.

[para4] York's by-laws set out the parameters for the orderly and legal use of the common elements. Although issues were raised by Best Deal suggesting that the by-laws have not been administered in accordance with the provisions of the Condominium Act of Ontario R.S.O. 1990 c. C.26, I am unable to find that the enactment of the by-laws offends the Condominium Act. It is clear that York has been experiencing increasing problems for many years regarding parking at the complex which has designated parking spots for the use of the owners, their employees, tenants, and visitors. These problems are exacerbated by the admitted "extreme shortage of parking spots at the site." The property manager of York admits to this in his affidavit.

[para5] York says that it is forced to bring this application because Best Deal has continued to act in violation or breach of its by-laws, rules, and regulations as they relate to the parking of motor vehicles on the common elements.

[para6] In its factum and from the submissions of Mr. Kent, it was apparent that Best Deal believes that this application is not really about a fight over parking spaces. Best Deal believes that the motive which underlies this application is to force Best Deal out of business or, alternatively, force Best Deal to sell its 3 units and relocate its business which has outgrown the site. Best Deal says that it is virtually impossible to operate its expanding business in compliance with the wording of the relevant by-laws and rules. Best Deal questions the interpretation of these by-laws and rules by the board of directors and the management of York.

[para7] Essentially, Best Deal alleges that the enforcement of the regulations and by-laws has not been even-handed. Best Deal feels that it is being targeted by the management. It cites, among other things, irregularities in the maintenance of the records of York particularly for minutes of meetings wherein issues of parking were presented to the condominium owners and votes were taken on issues related to the number of parking spaces.

[para8] While I have some sympathy with Best Deal's complaints that the decisions of the Board appear to be arbitrary and that it has faced costly litigation pursued by Mr. Koplowitz who may be conflicted [See Note 1 below], I am unable to conclude, in the face of the evidence of parking problems, that this application should be dismissed.

Note 1: Mr. Koplowitz is a relative of Mr. Majer Lewkowicz who is one of three Directors of York. Mr. Lewkowicz owns, with his wife, three units in the complex. Mr. Koplowitz had been counsel to York for many years. I add that the matter of the alleged conflict of interest was never formally pursued by Best Deal.

[para9] From York's perspective, the principals of Best Deal are unreasonable. York alleges that they abuse the system and that customers frequently complain of too many cars being parked on the lots, the blocking of shipping doors and the blocking of fire routes. The materials contain pictures which show the layout of the complex, the existing parking signs and the roadways behind the units. Best Deal says that the parking signs are confusing and contradictory. Best Deal says the York seeks to restrict Best Deal to parking no more than 6 vehicles (2 per unit) anywhere on the common elements unless Best Deal applies for special parking privileges or applies in writing for special dispensation.

[para10] It is apparent that Best Deal believes that the board will not act in an even-handed fashion if Best Deal were to make such requests. It is clear that the relationship between the parties is not a cooperative one. The goodwill, that would be necessary in order to permit the latitude and flexibility that Best Deal believes it is entitled to, is absent. I cannot find any evidence that York's board has contravened the Condominium Act. In concluding as such, I have considered the factors that are frequently referred to as being considerations that the court may take into account when exercising its discretion in an application such as this. See, for example, Peel Condominium Corporation #449 v. Hogg, [1997] O.J. No. 623 OJ.

[para11] I now turn to the estoppel by conduct argument which was raised by Best Deal in defense of the application. In essence, it is this. York is said to have permitted Best Deal to grow its business since 1987 which was prior to the adoption of the by-law in issue. Initially, Best Deal had 2 units. In 1992 it acquired a third unit from Mr. Majer Lewkowicz. Best Deal says that it was not until February 2000 that York demanded that Best Deal cease and desist in its conduct with respect to parking spaces and deal with the accumulated parking tickets. Best Deal submits that the so-called "house rules" are directed at it only and that York has allowed Best Deal to build its business and then passes rules which, in effect, make the orderly operation of its business extremely difficult.

[para12] Best Deal says that York's approach to these difficulties infringes upon Best Deal's rights under the Condominium Declaration and effectively threatens to put it out of business. It is said that this very situation demonstrates the unreasonableness and unfairness of the by-laws and rules and refers to the "politics of the situation" which includes the allegations of a lack of even-handedness in the treatment of unit owners with respect to dispensations. Best Deal believes that this application is "spurned on" by Mr. Koplowitz.

[para13] With all of these factors in my mind and noting that there is evidence that these allegations of breach of the parking regulations and by-laws have indeed occurred, I am unable to conclude that the doctrine of laches or estoppel by conduct should apply in these circumstances to the benefit of Best Deal. I strongly disagree that the totality of the evidence is that there is "no real evidence of a parking problem". Aside from this evidence, there is a need to maintain the integrity of the Condominium Act and the rights and safety of all other owners. The history of the parking problem justifies this application. Accordingly, the application is granted. Relief shall go in accordance with paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 on pages 3 and 4 of the Notice of Application. If the parties wish to, they may make oral submissions on costs at a time convenient to them and the court.

Apartments International Inc. v. Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 1170

Between Apartments International Inc., applicant, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1170 and H & R Property Management Ltd., respondents

Court File No. 00-CV-200580

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Cullity J. Heard: December 19, 2000. Judgment: January 3, 2001. (11 paras.)

Counsel: Michael A. Sears, for the applicant. Jonathan H. Fine, for the respondents.

[para1] CULLITY J.:-- The applicant is a tenant of a number of residential condominium units governed by the provisions of the Condominium Act (the "Act"). The units are part of a condominium project located at 7, King Street East, Toronto which comprises 314 residential units and six commercial units. The applicant's units are said to be owned by individuals who acquired them as investments. The respondents are the corporation created by the Act in respect of the project and the corporation's agent who manages it.

[para2] A dispute has apparently arisen with respect to the entitlement of the applicant and other tenants to operate what are described as "hotel - type" operations involving sub- leases. I have not been informed of the details of the dispute or of an application by the condominium corporation that is pending with respect to it. In the present application, the applicant seeks a number of orders pursuant to section 49 of the Act enforcing provisions of the registered declaration with respect to the project and the rules made by the Board of the corporation relating to access to, and use of, the common elements of the property including recreational areas and amenities. The respondents have challenged the standing of the applicant to apply pursuant to section 49 and, with the consent of the parties, this question was argued before me as a preliminary matter on the basis of the few facts to which I have referred and which are not in dispute. The procedure is, perhaps, unusual on an application but, given that the issue is one of statutory interpretation that, I believe, can be decided on a slender factual basis to which I have referred and that its determination may assist the parties in resolving their dispute - or, at least, to save costs by shortening the proceedings - I thought it appropriate to permit the matter to be dealt with in advance of the rest of the application.

[para3] Section 49 of the Act is as follows:

(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

(3) Where the owner of a unit who has leased the unit defaults in the owner's obligation to contribute to the corporation towards the common expenses as provided under sub-section 32(1) and subsection 41(7), the corporation may by written notice to the lessee require the lessee to pay to the corporation, and upon receipt of such notice the lessee shall pay, out of the rent due under the lease, an amount equal to the default and such payment shall constitute payment toward rent under the lease and the lessee shall not by reason only of such payment to the corporation be in default of the lessee's obligation under the lease.

(4) The lessee of a unit is subject to the duties imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules on an owner, except those duties respecting common expenses, and this section applies in the same manner as to an owner and, where the lessee is in contravention of an order under this section or where the lessee fails to pay, pursuant to a notice given under subsection (3), the court may terminate the lease.

(5) Nothing in this section restricts the remedies otherwise available for failure to perform any duty imposed by this Act.

(6) Where the owner of a unit leases the unit, the owner shall notify the corporation that the unit is leased and shall provide to the corporation the lessee's name and the owner's address. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, s. 49.

[para4] The applicant's position is that the words "and this section applies in the same manner as to an owner" in subsection 49(4) permit a tenant to make an application under subsection 49(1) as that procedure is expressly made available to the owner of a unit. In support of that submission, counsel relied also on cases in which has been said that the Act is remedial legislation that should be given a large and liberal interpretation to achieve its objects and is, as well, consumer protection legislation that must be interpreted to strike a fair balance between the rights of the corporation, the owners of units and tenants. He further submitted that it would be neither fair nor reasonable for a tenant to have to persuade its landlord to apply pursuant to section 49(1) if a condominium corporation was in breach of its duties under the Act or its rules.

[para5] Although I have given careful consideration to Mr. Spears' submissions, I do not believe they represent a correct interpretation of the legislation. Subsection 49(1) is both remedial and procedural. The remedy it provides is an order for the performance of a duty and the authorized procedure is an application. The substantive rights and duties for which the remedy and procedure are provided are spelled out correlatively in sections 12 and 31:

12(1) The objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation.

(2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(4) The declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects, responsibilities and duties.

(5) Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, s. 12.

31(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(3) The corporation, and every person having an encumbrance against any unit and common interest, has a right to the compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(4) Each person in occupation of a proposed unit is bound by and shall comply with the rules proposed by the proposed declarant where those rules are reasonable and consistent with this Act.

(5) Each person in occupation of a proposed unit has a right to the compliance by each other occupant of a proposed unit with the rules proposed by the proposed declarant.

(6) The proposed declarant has a duty, until registration of the declaration and description, to effect compliance by occupiers of proposed units with the rules proposed by the declarant. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, s. 31.

[para6] There is no reference to tenants in these sections. If the reference in subsection 49(4) to the application of the section "in the same manner as to an owner" is to have the effect for which the applicant contends, it would not just be the remedial and procedural provisions of subsection 49(1) that would be made available to the tenant but also the provisions of sections 12 and 31 that confer the substantive rights for which the remedy and the procedure are provided. I do not believe the words I have quoted are apt to have this quite far-reaching effect.

[para7] The words quoted appear in the subsection in the context of duties expressly imposed upon tenants and remedies conferred on the persons mentioned in subsection 49(1) in the event that a tenant does not comply with the terms of a written notice under subsection 49(3), or an order pursuant to subsection 49(2). There is, in my view, nothing in subsection 49(4) that supports an inference that tenants are to have the rights of owners of units under the Act. This is obvious in connection with certain rights such as a right to attend, and vote at, meetings of unit owners and I see nothing in the Act to distinguish such rights from those that the applicant seeks to enforce on an application pursuant to subsection 49(1).

[para8] As I understand it, the scheme of the Act is to create a new form of property ownership and to spell out carefully the rights and duties of the owners of units inter se and with respect to the condominium corporation that is created by the Act and which they control. Except as provided or authorized, by the legislation, an owner of a unit has the normal legal incidents of the owner of a freehold interest in real property. One of these incidents is the power to grant leases unless this is restricted by the declaration or (possibly) otherwise in accordance with the Act. I do not discern a legislative intention to confer on tenants statutory rights against the corporation or unit owners, or to alter the legal relationship between landlords and tenants except as provided in subsection 49(3). The duties referred to in subsection 49(4) are imposed on tenants for the protection of unit owners and, as I have indicated, I see nothing in the subsection or elsewhere in the Act that discloses an intention to confer rights on tenants. To describe the Act as consumer protection legislation begs the question, in this case, of the identity of the consumers intended to be protected. The power to enforce the duties of the corporation is that of the owners of the units so that, in the absence of an express or implied obligation to exercise it in the terms of the lease, the landlord's co-operation will be required.

[para9] For the above reasons - which I believe reflect the substance of the submissions of counsel for the respondents - I am of the opinion that the procedure in subsection 49(1) is not available to the tenant to enforce rights given to the owners of units and I so hold.

[para10] I note - although it has no bearing on my decision - that I was informed by counsel that the argument based on the inclusion of particular words in subsection 49(4) would not be available under the provisions of the new legislation when it is proclaimed in force.

[para11] I may be spoken to with respect to costs or, if counsel so agree, I will receive written submissions within 14 days of the release of these reasons.

Raymond v. Peel Condominium Corp. No. 27

Between Laverne Raymond and Gervais Howell, and Peel Condominium Corporation No. 27

Court File No. 00-CV-191276

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Wein J. June 30, 2000 (21 paras.)

Counsel: Granville O. Cadogan, for the applicants. Ritchie J. Linton, for the respondent.

[para1] WEIN J. (endorsement):-- This application for an Order vacating a lien is based on a dispute concerning the responsibility for the cost of repairs to certain common elements of the condominium.

Underlying facts

[para2] The applicants purchased the condominium property on February 3, 2000. On the closing date, they were sent an Estoppel Certificate alleging that there was $1,630.00 owing as a result of violations by the vendor. The corporation ultimately placed a lien on the premises for the repairs. The question that arises is whether, under the Condominium Act and the particular bylaws of this condominium, it was the corporation's duty or the unit owners' duty to repair and maintain the common elements in question.

[para3] It should be noted that prior to the purchase in question, the purchaser's solicitor wrote and requested an Estoppel Certificate in respect to the unit. In response, the management corporation responsible for the condominium conducted an inspection of the unit, a routine practice undertaken so that any deficiencies can be dealt with prior to the sale of any unit. The inspection disclosed certain deficiencies on the common elements which were noted in the Estoppel Certificate issued on the closing date. In particular, the violations included removal of walkway stones, replacement of damaged driveway asphalt, removal of garbage at the rear of the unit, and relocation of the privacy fence, to specify 12 feet from the townhouse. The Certificate also indicated the amount required to effect compliance, based on an estimate from the corporations standard contractors, and requested that funds be held back pending rectification.

[para4] The vendor of the premises, Wellesley Raymond, indicated in his affidavit that he had lived at the unit for 11 years and that at the time he purchased it in 1989, no violations had been brought to his attention. However, it appears that other damage to the common elements had been noted on an earlier Estoppel Certificate when he purchased the unit. With respect to the current damages, his affidavit indicated that the walkway stones existed at the time he purchased the unit and he had not changed them. He indicated that the stones were consistent with walkways in front of other units.

[para5] With respect to the driveway problems, he suggested that the cracks represented normal wear and tear. As well, the oil stains were said to be a common occurrence. Further, he indicated that the fence was already installed when he purchased the property and formed part of a larger network of fences. For these reasons the purchaser refused to pay for the repairs or to hold back money in the sale.

[para6] Because the purchaser denied the responsibility to have the unit owner do the repair and maintenance, the corporation ultimately placed a lien on the property.

Governing Legislation

[para7] Under Section 31 of the Condominium Act, owners are bound by the Act, Declaration, by-law and rules.

[para8] The Condominium Act gives the corporation a duty to effect compliance by the owners with the Act, declaration, by-laws and rules: Section 12(3). Section 29(3) indicates that the rules shall be complied with and enforced in the same manner as the bylaws.

[para9] Under Section 31(4) of the Act, where an owner defaults in the obligation to contribute towards common expenses, including expenses relating to repairs done to the owner's unit by the corporation, a lien for the unpaid amount may be placed against the unit.

[para10] The critical section in the legislation is Section 41. It reads as follows:

41. (1) For the purposes of this Act, the obligation to repair after damage and to maintain are mutually exclusive, and the obligation to repair after damage does not include the repair of improvements made to units after registration of the declaration and description.

(2) Subject to Section 42, the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage.

(3) The corporation shall maintain the common elements.

(4) Each owner shall maintain the owner's unit.

(5) Despite subsections (2), (3) and (4), the declaration may provide that,

(a) each owner shall, subject to section 42, repair the owner's unit after damage;

(b) the owners shall maintain the common elements or any part of the common elements;

(c) the corporation shall maintain the units; or

(d) each owner shall maintain and repair after damage those parts of the common elements of which the owner has the exclusive use.

(6) The corporation shall make any repairs that an owner is obligated to make and that the owner does not make within a reasonable time.

(7) An owner shall be deemed to have consented to have repairs done to the owner's unit by the corporation under this section and the cost of such repairs shall be added to the owner's contribution toward common expenses.

[para11] It is clear from subsection (5)(d) of that section that a Declaration may provide that each owner is to repair damage to parts of the common elements over which the owner has the exclusive use.

[para12] Article VI of the Declaration relating to this condominium states that:

Each owner shall be responsible for all damages to any and all other units and to the common elements, which are caused by the failure of the owner to so maintain and repair.

Article I prohibits alterations to exclusive use areas of the unit without the written permission of the Corporation.

Article II of the Declaration also clarifies that if an owner makes any changes, he shall be responsible for the cost of removal and replacement of the same, if necessary; and that any physical damage to common elements caused by an owner shall be repaired at the cost and expense of the unit owner.

Accordingly for this Condominium, the owners are responsible for the cost of any damage or alteration to the exclusive use areas, such as those involved in this case.

[para13] Under section 41 (6), the corporation is to make repairs that an owner is obligated to make, if they are not made within a reasonable time.

[para14] Of critical importance, in my view, is the wording of subsection (7), which indicates that an owner is deemed to have consented to repairs done to the owner's unit by the corporation and the cost of such a repair shall be added to the owner's contribution toward common expenses. The critical phrase is "done to the owner's unit".

[para15] In this case, the by-laws do provide that the owner is to maintain and repair exclusive-use areas of the common elements. Where that occurs, the question arises as to whether or not the costs can be added to the owner's contribution. This is the only logical reading of subsection 7 in the context of the Declaration applicable to this Corporation. "Done to the owner's unit" must include areas required to be repaired by the owner, where those are specifically included under the by-laws or Declaration of the particular corporation. Otherwise, the obligation on the corporation to make such repairs could not be reimbursed, as stated in the declaration.

Findings

A) Jurisdiction

[para16] The action by the unit owners was originally brought in Small Claims Court. The motion, however, was not set down, presumably because the plaintiff determined that the Small Claims Court lacked jurisdiction. The defendants have asked for costs of responding to the motion in Small Claims Court.

[para17] It is clear from the Courts of Justice Act, Section 23, that the Small Claims Court does not have the jurisdiction to make an order requested in this case. It is the Superior Court of Justice that has jurisdiction. Accordingly, the original application was brought in the wrong jurisdiction.

B) Authority to Claim the Lien

[para18] Given the by-laws applicable in this particular case, I am of the view that a lien could properly be placed on the property in respect of damage alleged to the common areas that were required to be maintained and repaired by the unit owner. As this was the alleged situation in this case, the lien was properly registered.

C) Comment on Affidavit Material Filed

[para19] Although not directly relevant to the issues on the Motion, it must be noted that the affidavit filed by the vendor of the unit in question indicates that the fence and sidewalk stones had been previously in place, since the original date of purchase. They were not referred to as deficiencies in his purchase, and the affidavit indicates that there was no damage beyond normal wear and tear done in this regard. The material filed indicates that the damage to the driveway was at most minimal, and can be characterized as normal wear and tear. There is, at the very least, a viable argument to be made that the corporation had, in effect, waived any right to claim for damages for repairing or replacing these elements. The management of the Corporation had changed in the interim years, so it is understandable that they may not have been aware of these facts, assuming the affidavit to be correct.

[para20] By contrast, the affidavit is silent with respect to the garbage said to have been in the backyard. In these circumstances, had there been a triable issue on this material, it might well have resulted in finding that the applicants were only responsible for the $150.00 cost (plus GST) of removing the garbage at the rear of the unit. If necessary, however, there would have to be a trial on this issue.

Costs

[para21] On agreement of both counsel at the hearing, costs are to be fixed by me. Given the scope of the argument and the prior appearance at Small Claims Court, costs should be set in the amount of a total of $900.00, payable by the applicants.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 781 v. Reyhanian

Between Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 781, applicant, and David Reyhanian, respondent

Court File No. 99-CV-181839

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Lamek J. Heard: July 6, 2000. Judgment: July 11, 2000. (21 paras.)

Counsel: Michael Spears, for the applicant. David Shiller, for the respondent.

[para1] LAMEK J.:-- This motion by the respondent was heard as a preliminary motion prior to the hearing of the applicant's motion for an Order holding the respondent in contempt of an Order made by Mesbur, J., dated December 30, 1999. For ease of reference, I shall refer to the respondent (the moving party today) as "Reyhanian" and to the applicant (today's responding party) as "MTCC 781".

[para2] Reyhanian moves for an Order striking out several paragraphs in certain of the affidavits filed by MTCC 781 in support of its contempt motion, striking out another of those affidavits in its entirety, and (in the alternative) permitting Reyhanian to enter and inspect the condominium unit of Douglas Workman, who is the deponent of certain of the affidavits in support of the contempt motion and the major complainant about certain activities of Reyhanian which led to the Order of Mesbur, J. A brief summary of the proceedings to date will be useful.

[para3] Reyhanian bought a unit in the residential condominium building known as King's Landing (MTCC 781), acquiring title in late October, 1999. He undertook certain renovations of the unit and, in the first half of November, 1999, moved approximately 60 pigeons into his unit, housing them, apparently, in one or the other or both of two solarium areas in the unit. Complaints were received by the board of directors of MTCC 781. The board - as it was empowered to do - declared the birds to be a nuisance and required Reyhanian to get rid of them. He refused to do so and MTCC 781 therefore made an application for a mandatory order requiring Reyhanian to remove the pigeons from his unit and to comply fully with the Condominium Act and with the Declaration and House Rules of MTCC 781. I quote from the reasons of Mesbur, J., on that application:

The respondent [Reyhanian] contends that the birds are intelligent and well-trained and pose no risk. He also says that there is no proof to connect his birds to the complaints of the other unit holders. With respect, I disagree. The letters [in the evidence] link the problems to the arrival of these pigeons. In the evidence there is ample proof, on the balance of probabilities that the respondent's pigeons have been on the common elements of the building. This is in clear contravention of Declaration 7, and House Rules 11 and 12 of Metro 781. The board has determined, in its absolute discretion that the animals are a nuisance pursuant to the Declaration. The board has also, in its absolute discretion pursuant to the House Rules, deemed the birds to be a nuisance. I disagree with the respondent's view that the rules are ridiculous, and in any case, following the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in YCC No. 382 v. Dvorchik should not substitute my own opinion about the propriety of a rule enacted by the board unless the rule is clearly unreasonable or contrary to the legislative scheme. The rules and declaration are, in my view, reasonable. The board has unfettered discretion acting on written complaints, to deem the birds a nuisance. It has done so. It has requested, pursuant to Rule 17, the removal of the birds. Respondent has failed to do so. The board has therefore been obliged to bring this application. I note that the respondent did not avail himself of the dispute mechanism contemplated by Rule 18, and did not choose to file any material on this motion. While I am sure he views his birds as extraordinary, and talented, their presence at the condominium is deemed a nuisance and they must be removed. Order to go in terms of paragraphs (a) (b) (c) and (e) of Notice of Application. (emphasis added)

[para4] Counsel before me agreed that the Order that was taken out should not have referred (as it did) to the removal of "all pigeons" being kept by the Respondent in the unit but only to all racing or homing pigeons. The Order was so varied on consent.

[para5] It is now alleged that at the beginning of February, 2000, the pigeons were, indeed removed from Reyhanian's unit but that he has subsequently introduced another large number of pigeons that are kept in the solarium areas of his unit but are also permitted to fly outside the unit and onto the balcony of that and other units. The balconies are common elements of the building. It is also alleged that Reyhanian has operated, on his balcony, a device with open flames, resulting in attendances by the Toronto Fire Department and the issue to MTCC 781 of a Notice of Violation by the Department. A Notice of Violation has also been issued against Reyhanian by the Animal Services branch of the Public Health department of the City of Toronto, apparently on the basis of unsanitary conditions observed by officers of that branch in the course of inspections of Reyhanian's unit and balcony in May, 2000. Once again, Reyhanian has filed no material in response to that filed by MTCC 781.

[para6] In support of its contempt motion, MTCC 781 has filed three affidavits of Kenneth Knights, the resident property manager of the building, sworn respectively on January 21, 2000, May 8, 2000 and May 19, 2000, and two affidavits of Douglas Workman (the owner of the unit immediately above that of Reyhanian) sworn respectively on April 30, 2000 and June 12, 2000. Other material has also been filed in support of the contempt motion but it is not in issue today and I therefore do not now refer to it.

[para7] As I have said, Reyhanian has filed no material in response to the contempt motion. Reyhanian's counsel, Mr. Shiller, cross-examined Kenneth Knights on his three affidavits on June 1, 2000, and Douglas Workman on his affidavit sworn on April 30, 2000, on June 7, 2000. On neither of those occasions did Mr. Shiller raise any objection to any of those affidavits or reserve any right to challenge the propriety or the admissibility of them or of any part of them. By contrast, when Mr. Shiller, on June 26, 2000, cross-examined Workman on his affidavit sworn on June 12, 2000, he stated his objection to the filing of that affidavit and expressly reserved his right to take the position that it was improper and should not be received into evidence. Mr. Shiller takes no issue with the admissibility of Workman's earlier affidavit, sworn on April 30, 2000.

[para8] I begin with Reyhanian's attack on certain matters in the Notice of Motion in the contempt motion. He seeks an Order striking out the following matters:

The motion is for

h) An Order directing the Respondent to maintain and/or repair his unit, in particular the two solariums and the carpeting, underpad and sub-floor of the unit bedroom as required by Article 9 of the Declaration and General House Rule No. 229;

i) An Order restraining the Respondent from contacting in any way, any member of the Applicant's board of directors:

j) An Order restraining the Respondent from threatening or harassing any resident of or person on the premises at 460/480 Queen's Quay West, Toronto;

k) An Order restraining the Respondent from interfering with or attempting to interfere with management, security, cleaning or other personnel in carrying out their duties at 460/480 Queen's Quay West, Toronto;

l) An Order directing the Respondent to forthwith list on a multiple listing service and sell, with vacant possession, Unit 10, Level 6 Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Plan No. 781 and its appurtenant common interests and municipally known as unit 703E, 460 Queen's Quay West, Toronto within four months of the date of the Order, any such transaction to close within a reasonable time of such sale and in any event not more than three months from the date of such sale and to forthwith vacate the said premises upon the completion of such sale transaction;

m) An Order directing that in the event that any sale and closing thereof as may be directed by this Honourable Court, is not accomplished in the time limited therefor, then, upon filing proof of such default, by way of affidavit:

(i) the Applicant shall have leave to issue a Writ of Possession directing the Sheriff of the City of Toronto to take possession of Unit 10, Level 6, municipally known as unit 703E, 460 Queen's Quay West, Toronto and to give possession of the said unit without delay to the Applicant;

(ii) the Applicant shall have leave to issue a Writ of Seizure and Sale directing the Sheriff of the City of Toronto, to seize and sell Suite 703E, 460 Queen's Quay West, Toronto and to pay out the proceeds according to law .

[para9] Mr. Spears, for MTCC 781, attempts to justify these items in the relief sought by reference to Rule 60.11(5) which provides:

In disposing of a motion [for a contempt Order], the judge may make such order as is just, and where a finding of contempt is made, the judge may order that the person in contempt,

(d) do or refrain from doing any act;

and

(f) comply with any order that the judge considers necessary

[para10] It is Mr. Spears' contention that I thus have the jurisdiction, whether I find Reyhanian in contempt or not, to make other Orders of the kind sought in the Notice of Motion. That submission has not yet been argued fully before me and I make no ruling on its validity. For the purposes of today's motion, however, there is at least sufficient doubt about the issue to justify leaving in place, for the moment, the matters in the Notice of Motion quoted above.

[para11] To a considerable extent, the same thinking justifies a dismissal at this time, of that part of Reyhanian's motion to strike out paragraphs from the affidavits in support of the contempt motion. That attack is based on two grounds, the first of which is that many of the impugned paragraphs are irrelevant and are included only to add prejudicial colour to MTCC 781's position. It is certainly true that many of the paragraphs deal with matters and allegations that have no direct contact with the only matter relied on by Mr. Spears as providing a particular ground for a finding of contempt - the re-introduction of pigeons into Reyhanian's unit. It is also true that Mr. Spears also argues that in other respects Reyhanian's conduct has breached the Declaration and House Rules of MTCC 781 and thus constitute contempt of that part of Mesbur, J.'s Order that required that Reyhanian "comply with the Condominium Act and the Declaration and House Rules" of MTCC 781. Again, I make no ruling at this time that any particular act or event constitutes a breach or contempt of any part of Mesbur, J.'s Order but until such time as all of those matters have been fully argued the question of relevance cannot be determined. If contempt can be found in acts other than the pigeon issue or if Rule 60.11(5)(f) has the scope and meaning for which Mr. Spears contends, the paragraphs that are said to be irrelevant cannot be so characterized. If, on the other hand, I conclude after argument that the only possible ground for a finding of contempt is the alleged re-introduction of the pigeons and that without a finding of contempt Rule 60,11(5)(f) confers no jurisdiction upon me to make the other "ancillary" Orders that are sought, the impugned paragraphs may be seen to be irrelevant. And lest there be any doubt, I emphasize that at this point I have reached no conclusion as to whether there has been any act or conduct amounting to a breach or contempt of Mesbur, J.'s Order.

[para12] The other ground upon which Mr. Shiller argues that many of the paragraphs in the affidavits of Knights should be struck out is that they contain hearsay. His attack has two prongs: first, he says as a matter of substance, hearsay is not admissible in support of a contempt motion. And second, even if hearsay were admissible, the impugned paragraphs here do not satisfy the requirements of form that must be observed. I shall address the second aspect of the argument first.

[para13] Overall, Mr. Shiller rightly points out that contempt issues are treated very seriously by our Courts and that contempt is only to be found and punished when it is established in accordance with the strictest rules and with strict regard for the rights of the alleged contemner. As Ferrier, J., said in Re Toronto Transit Commission and Ryan (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 266:

An allegation of contempt of court, whether civil or criminal, has a public dimension and attracts the procedural protections relating to offenses for which persons may be deprived of their liberty. An application in respect of the contempt of court is strictissimi juris and as a result calls for the most scrupulous attention of the courts to ensure adherence to all necessary safeguards.

[para14] One of those safeguards deals with the kind of evidence that may be adduced in support of allegations of contumacious conduct. Generally, affidavits should contain matters of the deponent's personal knowledge only. Rule 60.11(3) provides a limited exception to the general rule:

(3) An affidavit in support of a motion for a contempt order may contain statements of the deponent's information and belief only with respect to facts that are not contentious, and the source of the information and the fact of the belief shall be specified in the affidavit.

[para15] Initially, it was Mr. Shiller's contention that the Rule made it mandatory that the affidavit recite the formula "I am informed by X and do verily believe". He seemed to resile somewhat from that position as the argument progressed and in my view he was wise to do so. I cannot think that there can be many - if in fact there are any - situations today where a failure to recite verbatim a magic verbal formula can have the effect of invalidating the substance of a pleading or of an affidavit. Certainly, I do not believe that this is such a situation. In this case, Mr. Knights, in the first paragraph of each of his affidavits, states his belief in the truth of matters about which he has been informed. And where the source of information is not expressly identified in the same paragraph in which the statement is made the provider of the information can easily be discerned from the context or from documents exhibited to the affidavit and referred to as source or corroborating material. I do not consider the impugned paragraphs to be inadmissible for any formal defect.

[para16] The more important issue is whether hearsay (or information and belief) evidence is admissible at all in support of the contempt motion. The question becomes whether the matters upon which such evidence is tendered are "contentious". Mr. Shiller referred me to certain dictionary definitions, I did not consider them particularly helpful - or, at least, not to his position. The Dictionary of Canadian Law, for example, defined "contentious" as "contested". In my view, none of the matters that are said to be hearsay is disputed or contested in the sense that the truth of it has been challenged or contradicted. At no time has Reyhanian delivered any contradictory material or any material setting out a different version of the same matters. He is, of course, under no compulsion to give evidence and if he does not do so, no inference will be drawn against him. But if he does not give evidence, the evidence adduced by MTCC 781 stands uncontradicted and, if of sufficient weight, may well provide the basis for a finding against him. I may say that I have read carefully the transcripts of the cross-examination of Knights and of others on their affidavits. Even there, I do not see a dispute about the truth of any of the matters in issue. To a considerable extent the cross-examination focussed on the ability or inability of deponents to distinguish between racing or homing pigeons and other common-or-garden pigeons or to determine whether the fouling of balconies and railings was done by Reyhanian's pigeons or by other wild pigeons. These may be live issues for the contempt motion and may properly give rise to questions about the sufficiency of the evidence on that and other points. But that goes not to the admissibility of the evidence but rather to its ability to satisfy the burden and standard of proof in such a case.

[para17] I add this further point: Mr. Shiller, on receipt of the affidavits that he now attacks, made no objection to their form or content. He brought no motion attacking them. Instead, he proceeded to schedule and to conduct cross-examinations of the deponents of those affidavits. If it were necessary for me to address the point, I would be inclined to hold that Mr. Shiller had taken a fresh step in the proceeding and had lost his right to complain about the contents of the affidavits I do not so hold because, on the view that I have taken of the issues raised by Mr. Shiller, it is not necessary for me to do so. And if the affidavits were clearly improper, I would be reluctant to view them as admissible merely because counsel had not made timely objection to them. For the reasons set out above, the motion to strike out parts of the affidavits of Knights is dismissed.

[para18] With respect to that part of the motion that seeks an Order striking out the affidavit of Workman sworn on June 12, 2000, the situation is different. The usual practice, of course, is that affidavits upon which a moving party intends to rely are to be served with the Notice of Motion (Rule 39.01(2)). Here MTCC 781 served Workman's affidavit sworn on June 12, 2000, 5 days after he had been cross-examined on his earlier affidavit. The June 12 affidavit addressed two matters: certain allegedly threatening words and actions by Reyhanian at or immediately after Workman's cross-examination on June 7; and four instances of Reyhanian's having interfered with Workman's enjoyment of life in his condominium unit. Of those events, two allegedly preceded June 7, one occurred after that date and one was said to be a recurrent and continuing situation. It is not clear to me - and no explanation was offered - why three of the matters had not been raised in Workman's earlier affidavit.

[para19] In any event, it does not seem to me to be appropriate to permit old - or new - allegations to be added ad infinitum. As for the allegations of threatening behaviour on June 7, I have recognised, of course, that they could not have been included in any earlier affidavit but I do not see that they add anything substantial to the case. Mr. Shiller cross-examined on this affidavit but, as I said earlier, at the outset of that cross-examination he expressly reserved his right to challenge the propriety and admissibility of the affidavit. In my view, the challenge was well-founded. The affidavit sworn June 12, 2000 is struck out.

[para20] There remains only Mr. Shiller's request for an Order under Rule 32.01(1) permitting the inspection of the Workman condominium unit which lies immediately above that of Reyhanian. He argues that because allegations have been made that noise and smell from his unit are detectable in the Workman unit and are impairing the Workmans' enjoyment of their unit, it is necessary that Reyhanian or experts on his behalf be given access to the Workman unit to confirm or to dispute those allegations. I do not accept that argument. The alleged unpleasant experiences of the Workmans are not said to be continuous. Unless ongoing monitoring is to be permitted, the most that any expert could say is that on the occasion that he or she was there, no smell or sound was detected either at all or as emanating from Reyhanian's unit. Also, the board of directors of MTCC 781 has already deemed Reyhanian's pigeons to be a nuisance - as they are empowered to do. I do not see that and at best inconclusive report on the conditions prevailing on a particular day in the Workman unit can have any bearing on the propriety of continuing a situation that Mesbur, J., has already ordered be brought to an end. This aspect of Reyhanian's motion is also dismissed.

[para21] I shall deal with the costs of this motion when I hear the contempt motion next week.

Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 244 v. Habcom Ltd.

Between Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 244, plaintiff, and Habcom Limited, Ian Johns, Sarah Jennings, V.K. Mason Construction Ltd., Adjeleian Allen Rubeli Limited, Gary C. Burr, Jannock Limited and Jannock Limited carrying on business as Canada Brick, Wantage Developments Inc., Bank of Montreal and 1048307 Inc., defendants

Court File No. 94-CV-080450

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Ottawa, Ontario Case Management Master Beaudoin May 3, 2000. (13 paras.)

Counsel: Christopher Moore, for the defendant/moving party, Wantage Developments Inc. Daniel Leduc, for the plaintiff/respondent party Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 244.

CASE MANAGEMENT MASTER BEAUDOIN:--

THE NATURE OF THE MOTION

[para1] The defendant, Wantage Developments Inc. brings this motion for summary judgment to dismiss the claims as against it. They also seek an order as to costs of the within action and of the motion as against the plaintiff and or the defendants Habcom Limited, Ian Johns and or Sarah Jennings. Counsel for the remaining defendants have not appeared on the motion, the court has been advised that he supports the position taken by the defendant Wantage on this motion.

HISTORY OF THE PROCEEDINGS

[para2] The within action was commenced by the plaintiffs on the 27th day of January 1994. They seek damages with regard to the number of building deficiencies against the developer, the general contractors, sub-contractors and designers. The claims relating to this specific defendant, Wantage, are referred to in paragraphs 1b, 26, 27 and 28 of the statement of claim. Although characterized by the moving party as a claim for specific performance, the claim is more properly identified by the plaintiff as a claim for declaration and performance of the trust. The defendant Wantage is the registered owner of unit number 25 of the plaintiff condominium corporation. The plaintiff seeks a declaration that Wantage holds that unit in trust for the plaintiff and further seeks an order directing a transfer of that unit to the plaintiff or damages for breach of trust in lieu of the transfer.

LEGAL BASIS FOR THE PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM

[para3] In support of their claim and in response to this motion, the plaintiff, cites the following passage from Waters, Law of Trusts in Canada 2nd ed. (1984), pp. 1034-1053, in their Memorandum of Fact and Law:

All property belonging to a trust, however much it may be changed or altered in its nature or character, and all fruits of such property, continue to be subject to the trust as long as the property can be ascertained. We submit that in this case, the trust property in question is ascertainable. A beneficiary, such as is claimed in respect of the Plaintiff here, may bring its action for breach of trust in order to assert its rights, or, the beneficiary can turn to another remedy, namely, the pursuit of the wrongly alienated or misappropriated trust property.

Again, the beneficiary is seeking compensation for the loss to the trust, but instead of requiring the trustee to compensate the trust out of its own pocket, the beneficiary's object is to make good the loss by recovering the trust property.

[para4] As appears from the affidavit of Albert Wong, in support of this motion, Wantage entered into an agreement of purchase of Unit 25, Level 1, CCC #244 with the defendant Habcom Limited the 18th of July, 1991. The purchase price for the subject unit was $150,000.00 with a closing date of August 15th, 1991. He deposes that there were no indications from the vendor that there were any difficulties with respect of this property and that the vendor represented that it was legal and beneficial owner of the subject property and that there were no restrictions on the conveyance of that property. He further deposes that there was no evidence on the title as to any interest in this property other than the legal interest as represented by the vendor. Further, Wantage received a statutory declaration by Stephen C. Guest, on behalf of the vendor which, provided that during Habcom's ownership, no other person had indicated they had an interest in the property, that Habcom had complied to date with the by-laws of the Condominium Corporation. Further, and in advance of completing this transaction, Wantage obtained an Estoppel Certificate from the Condominium Corporation dated August 13th, 1991 which certificate made no mention of any interest on the part of the Condominium Corporation in the subject unit. That certificate was executed by Richard C. Monk, President, Condominium Corporation No. 244. Mr. Wong further deposes that the corporation was aware, long before the transaction was completed, of his intention to purchase the subject property and that no steps were taken by the corporation to indicate any objection to the transfer of the title of this property to Wantage.

[para5] In response, Gerald Wright deposes on behalf of the plaintiff that there are a series of different references in the condominium documents and other documents to the special use of Unit 25 including: a recreational unit, a pub, a lounge and a meeting room. He acknowledges that Habcom had the legal title to the unit and had the ability to sign and deliver a deed transferring Unit 25. It goes on to state in paragraph 6 of his affidavit:

However, the competing and different references to Unit 25 in the condominium documents registered on title should have raised the same questions we had upon retaining counsel in the fall of 1993, which led to this lawsuit. Those questions should have led to more specific inquiries by the Wantage prior to completing the transaction with Habcom. (emphasis mine)

Mr. Wright also deposes that the level of contributions or common fee expenses was a very small fraction of that paid by the owners of residential units. This small amount he argues, should have constituted notice to the purchaser that there was a limited use of the unit that was being purchased. In answer to Mr. Wong's assertion that Wantage had no information that the corporation took the position that Habcom was not entitled to convey Unit 25, he refers to a series of letters between Mr. Monk, the then President, and Wantage's own lawyer. All of that correspondence commences in October of 1991 some two and half months after the closing of the transaction. All of the correspondence addresses the issue of whether or not Wantage can operate the premises as a restaurant. It is clear that the premises were being operated as a restaurant known as "The Birdcage" at the time of Wantage's purchase. In fact, all of the correspondence deals with the issue whether or not Wantage will be able to continue to use the unit for that purpose. As he himself deposes the Corporation didn't raise questions itself until retaining counsel 2 years later.

[para6] In summary, the plaintiffs argue that Wantage had knowledge of the limited purpose for which the unit could be used, that fact and the lesser common expense fee should have given it notice that Habcom held the property in trust for the corporation. It is conceded that Wantage could not have had actual knowledge of such a trust if one existed. To succeed, the plaintiff has to establish that the plaintiff had constructive knowledge of the trust and that this constructive knowledge is sufficient to permit it to follow the declaration of that trust and a return of the property.

THE LAW

Rule 20.04(4) provides:

Where the court is satisfied that the only genuine issue is a question of law, the court may determine the question and grant judgment accordingly, but where the motion is made to a master, it shall be adjourned to be heard by a judge.

[para7] In Haick v. Smith (1988), 27 C.P.C. (2d) 193 (Master) it was held that the Master need only adjourn an issue of law to a judge where it is "genuine", meaning "arguable", with conflicting authority or no authority on the point. Otherwise the Master has jurisdiction to grant summary judgment.

Rule 24.04(2) sets out the test for summary judgment. It provides:

Where the court is satisfied that there is no genuine issue for trial with respect to a claim or defence, the court shall grant summary judgment accordingly.

[para8] The determination of this question, namely whether or not there is a genuine issue for trial, has given rise to a number of appellate decisions. In this regard, the plaintiff relies on the Court of Appeal's decision in Aguonie v. Galion Solid Waste Material Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161 at p. 173; where it was held that a motion's judge on a Rule 20 summary judgment motion should not resolve issues of credibility, draw issues from conflicting evidence, or from evidence that is not in conflict where more than one inference is reasonably available.

[para9] More recently the Supreme Court of Canada in Guarantee Company of North America v. Gordon Capital et al. (1999), 178 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.) considered this test at page 10, where the court held:

The appropriate test to be applied on a motion for summary judgment is satisfied when the applicant has shown that there is no genuine issue of material fact requiring trial, and therefore summary judgment is a proper question for consideration by the court. Once the moving party has made this showing, the respondent must then "establish his claim as being one with a real chance of success".

The Guarantee (supra) was decided by Bellamy J. in Moore v. Ogilvy Renault, [2000] O.J. 983, at paragraph 9, Justice Bellamy states:

The moving party always has the onus of satisfying the court that there is no triable issue. The responding party, on the other hand, has the responsibility to put its best foot forward and to provide evidence from which the motions judge can conclude that there is a genuine issue for trial.

In taking a hard look at the merits, the court is entitled to assume that if a case is to proceed to trial the respondent would present no additional evidence: Rogers Cable T.C. Limited v. 373041 Ontario Ltd. (1994), 22 O. R. (3d) 25 (Gen. Div.).

[para10] The plaintiff concedes, on the basis of the authorities submitted to the court, that the remedy that it seeks will cease to be available once the property gets into the hands of the bona fide purchaser for value without notice but argues that constructive notice is sufficient. In support of this position, the moving party relies on a passage from the Waters text, found at page 1046:

If that third party is a bona fide purchaser for value, no proprietary remedy in equity is available, but a third party, who gave value but actually or constructively knew the facts or who knew nothing of the facts but was a donee, would be subject to recovery by an action either at law-where the claimant is able to sue at law - or in equity

In this case, the only fact that this moving party may have had constructive knowledge of this is the limited use of the unit. It is quite another step to suggest that that knowledge constituted constructive knowledge of a trust-giving rise to a beneficial interest in the unit on the part of the Corporation. More importantly, it seems to be well-settled law in the Province of Ontario that actual notice is required in dealing with interest in real property. In Cohen v. McClintock (1978), 19 O.R. (2d) 623 (H.C.), Cory, J., as then was, dealt with whether or not a conveyance of a property in trust constituted only constructive notice or actual notice of the trust. At issue was whether that conveyance of real property was a contravention of the Planning Legislation. At page 628 he stated:

I have been advised by both counsel that for many years it has been accepted by the profession that in considering title to real estate, the description of a predecessor in title as "trustee" constitutes only constructive notice and not actual notice of the trust. The practice was derived from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re McKinley and McCullough (1919), 46 O.L.R. 535, 51 D.L.R. 659. There a motion heard first by Mr. Justice Middleton in Weekly Court. At p. 536 O.R., p. 660 D.L.R. of his reason, the following appears:

In my view, the Registry Act protects the registered owner against all unregistered equities, and in fact gives to the owner an absolute title, unless he has, before registration of the instrument under which he claims actual notice of the adverse right.

On the appeal of his decision, Merideth, C.J.O., at pp. 539-40 O.R., p. 662 D.L.R., stated:

The cases referred to by my brother Middleton, if any authority for the proposition were needed, establish that a purchaser for value without notice, whose conveyance is registered, is not affected by constructive notice of any prior instrument affecting the land or any interest in the land unless the instrument is registered or he has actual notice of it or of the existence of the interest.

That a person who has notice of an instrument has notice of its contents is undoubted, but it is only constructive notice.

In the case of a trust of land, the trust at all events if it is an express trust, must be evidenced by an instrument in writing, and there being no such instrument registered it is to be adjudged fraudulent and void against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees for valuable consideration without actual notice.

And finally, at p. 541 O.R., pp. 66304 D.L.R., of his reasons, the following paragraph:

All that the purchaser in this case had actual notice of was that the land was conveyed to the grantee "in trust" and but for the provisions of the Registry Act he would have been affected with notice, but only constructive notice, of fact and instruments, to a knowledge of which he would have been led by an inquiry for the instrument or other circumstances creating the trust; and such notice as that does not now affect the title of purchaser for value whose conveyance is registered.

[para11] Cory, J. went on to apply that decision in the Re Cohen (supra) case.

[para12] In conclusion, in order to succeed, and to follow the property into the hands of a subsequent purchaser, the law is clear that this purchaser had to have actual notice of the trust. In the within case, the purchaser may have constructive knowledge a restrictive covenant affecting his use of the property. Even if that constituted constructive knowledge of a trust; that would be insufficient to allow the plaintiff the remedy it seeks. The court is entitled to assume that the respondent has no further evidence to present and concludes that there is no triable issue.

[para13] For these reasons, the moving parties' motion for summary judgment is granted. Insofar as the moving party has sought costs of this motion and of this action not only from the plaintiff, but the "Habcom" defendants, the court will invite the parties to make written submissions as to costs within 20 days of the release of this decision.

ROY J.:-

I. OVERVIEW

[para1] In Eastern Ontario, the mere mention within legal circles of the "infamous cement case" evoked incredulous head shaking. Small wonder!

[para2] The case involved approximately 137 plaintiffs suing 3 main defendants, who in turn sued 30 insurers. The subject matter of the litigation involved deteriorating residential concrete foundations. The homes in question were located in eastern Ontario, from Rockland to Hawkesbury, and east into Québec up to Montebello.

[para3] The trial commenced on September 8, 1997 and continued until mid-December 1998. A special courtroom was required to accommodate the number of parties and their counsel. On the first day of trial, there was approximately 50 counsel in attendance representing various interests and, most days, anywhere between 15 to 40 counsel would be present.

[para4] Due to the bilingual nature of the proceedings, interpreters were required and special interpreter equipment was needed to accommodate counsel. Over the course of the next 16 months, some 110 witnesses were called of which 15 were experts. Close to 600 exhibits, representing tons of paper, were put into evidence. Massive amounts of expert evidence were introduced, representing the opinions of leading world experts in concrete. Thousands of photos were utilized as evidence showing, from every possible angle, the deteriorating concrete over the last ten years.

[para7] Most homes were purchased in 1986 and 1987. The plaintiffs started experiencing problems with their foundations within the year of the purchase. The real tragedy is that all but approximately 29 of the plaintiffs have been coping with this problem now for over 10 years. They really can't enjoy their homes and don't have the use of the basements. With the concrete in their foundations continually deteriorating, would the walls collapse before being replaced? They are in an extremely difficult situation. They can't sell, can't rent, and can't finance to repair. Most plaintiffs did not have sufficient funds to abandon their homes and live elsewhere. The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Program") informed all but approximately 29 plaintiffs that their written notices were past the limitation period and, therefore, not entitled to consideration by the Program.

[para8] Thus, their only avenue for redress was the justice system. Without the benefit of class action procedure, it was difficult for the system to respond. A judge was appointed to case manage the action. Consolidation was ordered for all actions and attempts were made to reduce and simplify the issues. Orders were made to expedite discoveries of factual and expert evidence. For whatever reason, many initiatives taken to simplify and expedite the trial were not very successful. Although the damage incurred by the plaintiffs was obvious, it was difficult for the justice system to respond adequately and efficiently without the full cooperation of all counsel.

[para9] At the very outset of the trial, it became obvious that no consensus existed amongst counsel on how to deal with the evidence regarding liability, assessment of damages, and the issues in the actions between the defendants and their insurers. Basically, the first week was spent dealing with preliminary motions and setting out the trial procedure. Given that the plaintiffs had been waiting over ten years for some form of redress, the Court decided to sit continuously until all the evidence was called on all issues involving all of the parties.

[para10] The defendant Bertrand had undertaken third party proceedings against five insurers. They, in turn, all responded to the plaintiffs' claims. Therefore, in accordance with the Rules, they were entitled to participate fully in the proceedings.

[para11] Seven insurers (the group of seven) represented most of the defendants forming contractors. They too were entitled to participate fully. Thankfully, all of the parties came to an agreement regarding these defendants and they were released from the action after approximately 100 days of trial.

[para12] The defendant Lafarge had undertaken third party proceedings against eighteen (18) insurers. They had not defended the main plaintiff action. Accordingly, they were not entitled to participate in the proceedings of the main action. Nevertheless, considering that they would be bound by the findings of fact in the main action, a limited number of these parties were allowed to cross-examine witnesses in the main action. Such examination would be restricted to evidence affecting issues in their action with the defendant Lafarge.

[para13] A trial with so many parties, so many counsel, and so many issues can be quite a challenge for a presiding Judge. By and large, I was very fortunate and grateful to receive the cooperation of most counsel. Without their assistance, the trial would have been much more laborious and still longer. Unfortunately, the conduct of a few counsel made life very difficult for everyone involved. One counsel in particular was litigating a case which was beyond her experience and competence. She has rendered a great disservice to her clients. A few counsel seemed to think that the strength of their case depended on the quantity rather than the quality of the evidence. Finally, throughout the trial, it became apparent that a few counsel, perhaps with their eye on another forum, were either continually raising needless objections or refusing to make admissions, thereby requiring the calling of unnecessary witnesses.

[para14] What I have to do is decide which of the defendants is responsible for the faulty concrete; assess the plaintiffs' damage; and determine if the responsible defendants can be indemnified by any of their insurers.

[para15] The challenge for the Court is to attempt to filter from this massive amount of evidence, only the relevant facts. From the thousands of pages of written submissions, I will attempt to deal with all issues as succinctly as possible. The innocent plaintiffs have been waiting for justice for too long. They deserve a decision that is clear and straightforward. I am sorry that I was not able to complete my judgment sooner.

II. BACKGROUND

[para16] The plaintiffs are the present owners of homes whose concrete foundations were poured primarily during the years 1986 and 1987. The concrete for all of the foundations was supplied by the defendant Bertrand. The defendant Lafarge supplied the cement powder and fly ash (FA) used in the batching of the concrete.

[para17] Within a year or two after the pouring of the concrete foundations, the homeowners started having problems with their foundations and made the following observations: excessive white powder often referred to as efflorescence on the concrete walls; parging on the outside walls, cracking and detaching itself from the concrete wall and falling off; concrete which was crumbling and deteriorating; excessive moisture in the basement; mildew and mould forming on the inside walls.

[para18] In the years between 1988 and 1992, the plaintiffs complained about their problems to the defendant Bertrand, to some of the other defendant sub-contractors and to the Program. Some attempts were made to repair the foundations, but these proved to be temporary and totally ineffective. Obviously, the parties did not fully appreciate the seriousness of the problem. It was not until some time in 1992 when the Program, after having received a large number of complaints, decided to hire experts to investigate and test the concrete. These experts concluded that the concrete in the foundation was seriously deficient and, as a result, a major structural defect existed. Accordingly, the Program decided that the only viable solution was to replace the foundations.

[para19] Unfortunately, most of the plaintiffs were not able to have their foundations replaced or repaired by the Program. They were beyond the 5-year limitation period when they realized the seriousness of the problem and notified the Program. Their only alternative was to start an action against the defendants.

III. ISSUES

[para20] This Court is being asked to decide the following issues:

1. What caused the problem?
2. Are the defendants liable?

In Contract? In Negligence?

If yes, how is the negligence to be apportioned?

3. What are the plaintiffs' damages?
4. Are the defendants entitled to indemnification from their insurers?
5. Are the plaintiffs entitled to pre-judgment interest and costs?
6. Are the plaintiffs entitled to costs?

IV. INTRODUCTION

1. The Parties:

A. The Plaintiffs

[para21] The plaintiffs are approximately 137 homeowners. The action involving all of the parties was a result of a consolidation order of a number of actions made by the case management judge of a number of actions. Within the action, there were various groups of plaintiffs represented by different counsel. The groups are as follows:

(i) The Alie Plaintiffs

[para22] They are the present owners of approximately 58 single-family residences and 20 condominium units (PCC 2). The trustee represents several of the homeowners in bankruptcy. Further, the trustee of the Estate of Gilles Turpin, a bankrupt, is claiming a loss of money on the sale price of four homes.

(ii) The Marcil Plaintiffs

[para23] They are the present owners of approximately 18 single-family residences, which they occupy as their homes with their families.

(iii) The Ontario New Home Warranty Program Plaintiffs

[para24] The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 (the "Act") establishes a consumer protection scheme for purchasers and owners of new homes, including condominiums. Through the subrogation provisions of the Statute, the Program represents the interest of 28 homeowners and one Condominium Corporation with 12 units (PCC 5). The Program, having either replaced or repaired the foundations of these homes, has a subrogated interest.

(iv) The Duval Plaintiffs

[para25] They are the present owners of four single-family residences.

(v) Independent Plaintiffs

[para26] There are five independent plaintiffs who are the present owners of single family residences.

B. The Defendants

[para27] There are two main defendants in these proceedings and they are Bertrand & Frère Construction Co. Limited (Bertrand) and Lafarge Canada Inc. (Lafarge).

(i) Bertrand & Frère Construction Co. Ltd. ("Bertrand")

[para28] Bertrand is the ready-mix operator who manufactured and supplied all of the concrete in the plaintiffs' foundations. Bertrand has been in the ready-mix business since 1960.

(ii) Lafarge Canada Inc. ("Lafarge")

[para29] The large multi-national corporation, Lafarge Corporation, owns Lafarge Canada Inc. Lafarge supplied Portland cement and St-Clair/Belle River Type C FA products to Bertrand. Bertrand used these products in the batching of its concrete that found its way into the plaintiffs' foundations.

(iii) Other Defendants

[para30] There are other defendants in these proceedings and they are:

1. Raymond Bertrand, a director of Bertrand.
2. The general and forming contractors.

[para31] Settlement was reached with several general contractors and forming contractors.

C. The Insurers

[para32] The third and fourth parties were the insurers.

* The defendant Bertrand started third party proceedings against five insurance companies.

* The defendant Lafarge started fourth party proceedings against eighteen insurance companies.

2. The Facts:A. The Plaintiffs' Evidence

[para33] The plaintiffs are the present owners of homes whose foundations were poured primarily during 1986-87, and possibly one foundation was poured in 1988. This action involving all of these parties is a consolidation of a number of actions by plaintiffs involving defendant and third parties. In order to facilitate the identification of individual plaintiffs, a numbering system was devised at trial (see Ex. 1A and 1B). The defendant Bertrand supplied all of the concrete in the plaintiffs' foundations. With possibly one exception, all of the concrete contained cement powder and FA supplied to the defendant Bertrand by the defendant Lafarge.

[para34] Within a year or two, the homeowners started observing problems with their concrete foundations. The problems and deterioration varied somewhat from house to house, but by and large they can be summarized as follows:

- * A fluffy white powder referred to as efflorescence was seen on the exterior surface of the foundation walls above grade and on exposed areas of the interior walls.
- * Substantial deterioration of the parging was present at the exposed exterior surfaces.
- * There was a deterioration and disintegration of the concrete on both the exterior and interior walls above grade.
- * An unusual softness and dustiness existed in the concrete in the foundation walls.
- * Also, observed was a soft layer of brownish coloured concrete on both the interior and exterior foundation walls.
- * There was cracking of some foundation walls in areas around corners or near windows.
- * Many interior foundation walls were wet and there was evidence of water penetration and leaking into the basement.
- * Most basements experienced high moisture and humidity. Many homeowners attempted to correct the problem by installing dehumidifiers and air exchangers.
- * Black moulds were observed in most foundation walls, especially in finished basements.
- * Many foundations had efflorescence and crumbling concrete in the interior foundation walls near the basement floor level.

[para35] At trial, some fifty (50) or so plaintiffs were called and confirmed the above observations. Further, a summary of the homeowners' observations given as a result of interrogatories is found in Ex. 19. The evidence of a large number of experts who testified confirms the plaintiffs' observations. Finally, all of the plaintiffs and many of the experts put into evidence large numbers of photographs confirming the plaintiffs' observations. At trial, the parties agreed that the evidence given by the plaintiffs who testified would be representative of those plaintiffs not called.

[para36] In the years between 1987 and 1992, the plaintiffs made complaints to the defendant Bertrand or to contractors who had either poured the concrete or installed the parging. Obviously, it was impossible for any of the parties involved to fully appreciate the seriousness of the problem. Attempts were made to repair or replace the parging. Some repairs were made to the foundations with latex or epoxy. All of the repairs proved to be just temporary and totally ineffective. The parties were not aware of the nature, extent and seriousness of the problem until the summer and fall of 1992 when the Program became involved with this matter.

[para37] The Program is a non-profit corporation that has the responsibility for administering the Act. This legislation establishes a consumer protection scheme for purchasers and owners of new homes, including condominiums. Under the Act, every vendor and builder of new homes must be registered under the Program and must enroll each proposed home or condominium building before the start of construction. The Act requires every vendor to provide owners of new homes with a certain specified warranty regarding the quality of construction. An owner who claims that a vendor/builder has breached a statutory warranty, may make a claim to the Program, which in turn is empowered to decide whether there has been a breach of warranty or whether there should be any payments made out of the guarantee fund to cover costs of remedial work. The guarantee fund is funded by the vendors/builders.

[para38] The Act is intended as a consumer protection plan for the benefit of people buying new homes. As consumer legislation, it must be construed in a liberal way to give effect to its central and important purpose. It is intended to remove from the consumer the need to engage in expensive and time consuming multi-party litigation to determine, on the basis of negligence and breach of contract, who is responsible for the defect in question. Through the subrogation provisions, responsibility for any Court proceeding to determine liability among various construction parties, with all of the costs, delays and procedural wrangling, is allocated to the Program.

[para39] Under the Act and Regulations, claims for ordinary defects must be made in writing to the Program within one year after the owner takes possession of the home. Owners who have more serious problems and make a claim for major structural defects must do so within five years of the date the home was completed and ready for possession.

[para40] The Program first became aware that there was a widespread problem with some residential foundations in Eastern Ontario on or around June 1992. Their field representative, Mr. Paul Rochon, noticed a trend in the homeowners' complaints that he was investigating in a number of homes east of Ottawa. Apparently, the Program received complaints from as many as 230 homeowners. Unfortunately, the vast majority of those complaints were received outside the five-year warranty period. The Program ultimately determined that 28 homeowners and 1 Condominium Corporation were entitled to warranty coverage, should it be determined that the foundation problems reported to the Program within the warranty period constituted a major structural defect.

[para41] The employees of the Program visited the home and had discussions with the parties, including the defendants. The Program retained the engineering firm of e to investigate the matter and test the concrete. The experts submitted a progress report in August 1992 (Ex. 228A). The report concluded that the concrete had serious deficiencies such as high absorption characteristics, comprehensive strengths well below the Ontario Building Code's requirement, lack of air entrainment, abusive amounts of water, low durability features including little or no resistance to freeze-thaw cycles, and a lower than preferred original aggregate quality. A second expert retained confirmed these findings. Accordingly, the Program decided that the only viable solution was to replace the foundations. The 28 plaintiffs either had their foundations replaced or agreed to a cash settlement and the owners of the condominiums had their foundation repaired.

[para42] The balance of the plaintiffs who were not covered by the Program had to retain counsel who in turn retained the services of experts. They became aware of the seriousness of the problem when their experts submitted their reports starting in the fall of 1992.

[para43] In my opinion, this case underscores a serious flaw in the Ontario New Home Warranties Act. As mentioned earlier, the Act was intended as a consumer protection plan for the benefit of people buying new homes. Unfortunately, it benefited only 29 of the 137 or so plaintiffs. Why? Because the five-year limitation period is too rigid and inflexible. An owner who has a serious problem has to make a claim within five (5) years of the date that the home was completed and ready for possession. As this case illustrates, the owner may not appreciate that there is a serious problem within five years of the completion. The discoverability rule which makes limitation periods more flexible likely would not apply here. The Ontario Government, which has responsibility for this legislation, should give serious consideration to making the limitation period in the Act more consumer friendly. This case clearly illustrates how an inflexible, fixed period has denied the majority of the plaintiff's, who have a legitimate claim, the benefits of the Act.

B. The Defendants' Evidence

(i) Admissions by the Defendants

[para44] Admissions by Bertrand: Bertrand acknowledged that it supplied concrete to all of the plaintiffs' foundations. Bertrand also admitted that all of the foundations of all of the plaintiffs required total replacement except for Prescott Condominiums No. 2 (PCC 2) and No. 5 (PCC 5) and the foundation of the plaintiff Saumure (M-78).

[para45] Admissions by Lafarge: Lafarge admitted having supplied Bertrand with Portland cement powder during the period 1986 to 1991. Lafarge further admitted having supplied Bertrand with Type C FA which came from two Detroit Edison electrical generating stations known as St-Clair and Belle River commencing on May 28th, 1986, through the relevant time period and ending in 1991.

[para46] Admissions by all Defendants: All of the defendants admitted the contents of Bertrand's delivery slip summarized in Ex. 11 and 12. All of the defendants further admitted the homeowners' observations as contained in Ex. 385.

(ii) Bertrand's Evidence

[para47] Bertrand operates a quarry and sandpit and is well-known in Eastern Ontario and Western Quebec. They have been in the ready-mixed concrete business since 1960. They enjoyed a good reputation, especially with the forming contractors. Over the last 25 years, they have never encountered any serious problem with their ready-mixed concrete. In 1986, Bertrand operated two plants: one in L'Original, Ontario and the other in St-Isidore, Ontario. Both of Bertrand's ready-mix plants and the aggregate used in the manufacture of concrete had been approved by the Ministry of Transportation in Ontario ("MTO").

[para49] From 1960 to 1983, Bertrand got its cement powder from Lafarge and other suppliers. For several years prior to 1986, Bertrand got its cement powder from a company called Miron. In the spring of 1986, Raymond Bertrand, a Director of Bertrand, met with Mr. Walter Smith, the Sales Manager for Lafarge for the Ontario region and Cal Hutter, Distribution Manager for the Ontario region of Lafarge. They convinced Bertrand to purchase cement powder and a new product Type C FA from Lafarge. Bertrand was told not only was FA cheaper, but its use would result in having a better and more workable concrete. Bertrand was told by the representative from Lafarge that it could replace cement powder by FA pound, for pound up to 40%. Bertrand was advised that the only draw back in the use of FA was that the concrete would be browner in colour and might have some efflorescence which would occur once and which could easily be washed off with water.

[para50] Bertrand used FA commencing May 29, 1986 until December 1, 1986. FA was not used during the winter months, that is December to March. Bertrand recommenced the use of FA on April 1, 1987 and continued until October 13, 1987. Bertrand resumed the use of FA April 1, 1988 until some time either in April or May 1988 when FA was discontinued. It resumed the use of FA in September 1988 until some time in 1991. According to Bertrand, it followed its very same mix design after 1986, as before except that it substituted FA for 20% of the cement powder. Except for a few loads, all of the concrete supplied to the plaintiffs was from Bertrand's L'Original plant. The St-Isidore plant was not equipped to substitute FA for cement powder.

(iii) Lafarge's Evidence:

[para51] Lafarge Corporation is a large multi-national corporation, well known throughout the world and with its head offices in France. It owns the defendant Lafarge Canada Inc. Lafarge Corporation had world sales of approximately $16 billion in 1997, derived primarily from the manufacture and sale of cement powder. In Ontario, the defendant Lafarge has a plant at Bath, Ontario that manufactures and sells Portland cement.

(a) Fly Ash ("FA") - A Brief History

[para52] A number of the experts who testified in this matter indicated that the use of FA dates back to Roman days. They maintain that the Romans used volcanic ash mixed with lime to produce the mortar and concrete used to build their aqueducts. In Canada, the use of FA in concrete is governed by the National Standard CAN/C.S.A. A23.5, see Ex. 274. This Standard governs the use of all supplementary cementing materials including FA. FA is defined in the Standard as:

The finely divided residue that results from the combustion of pulverized coal and which is carried from the combustion chamber of a furnace by the exhaust gases.

Generally, there are two types of FA, Type F and Type C. Type F FA is produced from burning anthracite or bituminous coal or what is referred to as hard coal. Type C FA is produced from the burning of lignite or sub-bituminous coal often referred to as soft coal. For our purposes, the type of FA used was Type C. The source of the FA was the Detroit Edison Thermal Generating Plants at St-Clair and Belle-River. Type C FA is referred to as a pozzolans. What this means is that when mixed with Portland cement and water it forms compounds possessing cementing properties.

[para53] Apparently FA has been used widely since the 1930's. In the western United States, primarily Type C FA has been used, and in eastern Canada mostly Type F FA. In 1984-85, when Type C FA was first introduced in Ontario, ready-mix operators would not have been familiar with this product and, in fact, Mr. Bertrand testified at trial that he had never heard of FA prior to meeting with the Lafarge representatives in 1986.

(b) Marketing of FA

[para54] In January 1985, Lafarge entered into a joint venture with a company called DBO Marketing to promote the sale and distribution of Type C FA to ready-mix companies. By an amendment to this agreement in July 1986, Lafarge acquired virtually the entire joint venture. The FA was transported from the Detroit Edison plants to a Lafarge facility located in Woodstock, Ontario. The FA then would be trucked from Woodstock to its respective customers across Ontario. As mentioned earlier, Lafarge started delivering FA to Bertrand in 1986.

(c) Testing of FA

[para55] Lafarge starting doing some testing of Type C FA in 1984 (see Ex. 380, vol. 1, tab 1). Lafarge also was involved in laboratory tests of Type C FA in an attempt to simulate and/or accelerate field conditions in order to evaluate the FA. These studies are referred to as the "Elmhirst Thesis" (see Ex. 380, vol. 2, tab 7), the Claude Bérard study at the Lafarge's Montreal Research and Technical Centre (see Ex. 380, tab 12) and the Lafarge Coppee Study in France (see Ex. 380, tab 9 and 11). Further, a number of ready-mix companies, mostly located in southern Ontario, made some limited use of Type C FA in their concrete and this was monitored by the companies and Lafarge. A few problems were encountered such as efflorescence and low strength, but nothing major or extensive, as was the case here in Eastern Ontario.

[para56] To assist Bertrand in introducing FA to its concrete mix, Lafarge sent a technical representative by the name of Blair to assist for a couple of days. A limited number of cylinders of concrete containing various percentages of FA were tested for compressive strength. Bertrand was told by Lafarge that it could substitute FA one-for-one for up to 40% of the cement powder in its concrete mix. It was also advised that its concrete may have a darker colour and may have some white powder which might easily be washed off the foundation walls. No other pertinent information or warning about FA was given by Lafarge to Bertrand prior to its introduction into the concrete mix.

[para57] When Bertrand advised Lafarge that it was getting complaints about the concrete from the plaintiffs, Lafarge sent representatives to investigate the matter. Basically, Lafarge concluded that Bertrand was having quality control problems and that its sand used in the concrete was too fine. Further, Lafarge indicated that the parging on the outside wall of the concrete foundation had not been done properly.

C. Evidence Not in Dispute

[para58] With few exceptions (Saumure M-78, Tremblay M-80), the evidence of all of the witnesses, including the experts, was consistent that all of the plaintiffs' foundation will have to be removed and replaced. The defendant Lafarge suggested at the opening of the trial that the plaintiffs' foundations would not have to be replaced, but could be repaired. Unfortunately, such evidence was not called and the only expert evidence before the Court is that the plaintiffs' foundations will have to be replaced, except for the condominiums and the plaintiffs' M-78 and M-80. The reasoning for such drastic remedy is as follows:

* The air void system in all of the plaintiffs' foundation is inadequate and fails to meet the minimum requirements of the Ontario Building Code and minimum CSA standards.

* Most of the leading experts called on behalf of all of the parties appear to agree that the deterioration of the concrete walls will continue unless they are replaced. Such concrete walls do not meet the Building Code requirements, and ultimately over time there is a risk of sudden collapse.

* The moulds observed in most of the plaintiffs' basements are hazardous to the health of the occupants.

V. WHAT CAUSED THE PROBLEM?

Two Theories: Freeze-thaw or Sulfate Attack

[para59] Many months were spent in this trial listening to evidence from the foremost concrete experts in the world giving opinion evidence as to the likely cause of the deterioration of the plaintiffs' foundation. Two competing theories emerged:

1. Damage due to cyclic freeze and thawing which occurs when concrete becomes critically saturated and, in the absence of an adequate air void system, breaks down and deteriorates during these cycles.

2. Damage resulting from some sort of attack brought about by the chemical composition of Type C FA and commonly referred to as internal sulfate attack.

[para60] The experts for some of the plaintiffs and for the defendant Lafarge, agreed that the damage was due to freeze-thaw mechanism, but for different reasons. The plaintiffs' expert maintained that the concrete could not withstand freeze-thaw damage because FA was inserted during the batching. Lafarge experts maintained that FA had nothing to do with the poor quality of the concrete, but rather the cause was Bertrand's over use of water and poor quality aggregate. The proponents of the second theory, sulfate attack, were the defendant Bertrand and some of the plaintiffs' experts.

[para61] My findings as to what caused the problem will be the determining factor in apportioning liability. Central to the whole issue of liability is the role played by the inclusion of FA in the mix. If the Court accepts the Lafarge theory that FA was not the cause of the problem, then it would have to likely reject the theory of sulfate attack and would conclude that freeze-thaw caused the problem and no liability rests with Lafarge.

[para62] On the other hand, if the Court concludes that FA was the cause of the problem, then certainly Lafarge would have to assume some of the liability. All of the experts called agree that the defective concrete lacked proper air entrainment, had low compressive strength and a high absorption level. Where the experts disagree is what caused the problem? Is it freeze-thaw or sulfate attack, and did the FA trigger both or either one of these mechanisms?

1. Is it freeze-thaw?

[para63] The experts who were the main advocates of the theory of freeze-thaw mechanism were Dr. N.K. Becker who testified on behalf of the Alie plaintiffs, Mr. Ryell of Trow Consulting Engineers Limited (TROW) who testified on behalf of the Program plaintiffs and Mr. Niels Thaulow of G.M. Idorn Consultants who testified on behalf of the defendant Lafarge.

[para64] The mandate of the Program's experts was simply to determine whether a major structural defect existed and whether foundations required replacement. Mr. Ryell of TROW identified the mechanism of deterioration as freeze-thaw damage and pointed to the lack of air entrainment, low compressive strength and high absorption of the concrete as a major cause of deterioration. Nevertheless, he was not prepared to rule out other possible factors and conceded that it was possible for sulfate attack and freeze-thaw damage to be occurring simultaneously and that the combination of the two mechanisms of deterioration would make the concrete conditions worse than if only one mechanism was occurring.

[para66] Niels Thaulow of Idorn Consultants, who testified on behalf of Lafarge, was adamant that the deterioration was attributable to freeze-thaw. His evidence differed from that of Dr. Becker in that, in his opinion, the Type C FA did not contribute whatsoever to the deterioration of the concrete. He offered a variety of possible causes of the freeze-thaw deterioration, including poor quality of the sand used by Bertrand, the insufficient use of air entraining agents resulting in concrete that was not successfully air entrained, the presence and use of limestone fines by Bertrand, and the excessive use of water resulting in high water/cement ratios in the poured concrete.

(i) How Freeze-Thaw Cycle Can Do Damage to Concrete

[para67] Most of the experts who testified at this trial indicated that a number of factors have to be present for concrete to suffer damage as a result of freeze-thaw. They are:

- * the concrete has to be exposed to temperatures from minus 6 degrees to plus 2 degrees;
- * the concrete has to have an inadequate air void system; and,
- * the concrete has to be critically saturated.

(ii) The Freeze-Thaw Cycle

[para68] The most probative evidence on freeze-thaw cycle was submitted by the National Research Council (NRC) in a report dated September 11, 1996 (Ex. 407). Between November 20, 1995 and May 14, 1996, temperature and humidity measurements were monitored in concrete walls of three houses affected by deteriorating concrete. NRC concluded that for concrete to suffer a freeze-thaw cycle, the temperature must cycle from about plus 2 degrees Celsius to minus 6 degrees Celsius and have a dwell time at these temperatures of at least an hour. Most of the experts questioned at trial agreed with this conclusion except for Mr. Thaulow who gave an opinion that concrete actually freezes at minus 2 degrees Celsius. Based on the NRC report, the period in which temperatures of minus 6 degrees Celsius can be anticipated is between December and mid-March. Results indicated that the above grade portion of the basement walls in two of the houses was subject to as many as five freeze-thaw cycles per winter. The third house basement, poorly insulated and hot inside, did not suffer any cycles. Testing of the cores indicated that they had little freeze-thaw resistance. Given what most Canadians in this part of the country know about our winters, and given the location of the plaintiff houses, the NRC report simply confirmed that certain exposed areas of these concrete walls would be subject to a number of freeze-thaw cycles during the winter months. Conversely, large areas of basement walls and floors would not be subject to freeze-thaw cycle. How is it then that certain areas not subject to freeze-thaw cycle exhibited signs of deterioration?

(iii) Dr. Becker's Theory - FA the Proximate Cause:

[para69] In Dr. Becker's opinion, the proximate cause of the inherent lack of freeze-thaw durability of the concrete is the introduction of Type C FA as a partial replacement for normal Portland cement concrete into the Bertrand mix at its L'Original plant starting May 29, 1986. In his opinion, there were two ways that FA created the conditions in the concrete and enabled that deterioration to occur. The first was by entrapping air which misled the ready-mix operator into believing that there was a sufficient level of entrained air in the concrete. This caused the operator to reduce the amount of air entraining agent and resulted in the production of non-air entrained concrete that could not withstand repeated freezing and thawing without deteriorating.

[para70] Secondly, when FA was used, according to Dr. Becker, a large amount of additional water had to be added to allow the concrete to be poured easily. This additional water increased the water/cement ratio and caused the concrete to become more porous and to absorb large quantities of water, thus making it much easier for the concrete to become critically saturated. Walls that are critically saturated, or in other words filled with water, cannot withstand repeated freezing and thawing without the presence of an adequate air void system.

(a) FA and Air Entrainment

[para71] Dr. Becker, in his evidence and report (Ex. 270), referred to the Type C FA from St-Clair and Belle River as "quirky". The evaluations reports produced by Lafarge Canada confirmed that FA is not a product that is manufactured for use in concrete. It is a waste by-product generated by coal-fire power plants. Consequently, its properties and qualities can vary significantly from plant to plant, and from day to day, as a consequence of variation in the coal source, the degree to which it is pulverized, the precise manner in which it is burnt, and the operational efficiency of the specific scrubbers from which the FA is collected. Dr. Becker gave evidence that the test data contained in the Elmhirst Thesis (Ex. 276) represented the main laboratory test data relied on by Lafarge. The data clearly indicated that Type C FA from St-Clair and Belle River had entrapped large quantities of air in the concrete when used in conjunction with the water reducing agent, such as "prokrete N", used by Bertrand during the 1986-88 period.

[para72] The only equipment available to Bertrand to measure the total amount of air in concrete was a pressure vessel. This is the only device used to measure air content at most ready-mix plants. The air tests used by Bertrand did not distinguish between entrained and entrapped air. The entrapped air is not beneficial for concrete and is different from the entrained air. The entrained air is beneficial to the concrete as it provides air bubbles of the correct size and spacing to absorb the pressure created when water in the concrete freezes and expands. The entrapped air, which has neither the proper size nor spacing, does not have any beneficial qualities and has, in fact, harmful qualities which increase the amount of damage caused by freezing and thawing. Unfortunately, it is quite possible that what Bertrand was measuring was entrapped air and not entrained air.

[para73] The propensity of Type C FA to entrap air into concrete is also confirmed by certain field tests performed by Dan Brouwer of Red-D-Mix, a subsidiary of Lafarge. Dr. Becker's opinion is also confirmed by several tests performed by Dave Brand an employee of Lafarge in Sarnia in 1985. Mr. Thaulow testified that if an insufficient amount of air entraining agent were added to the concrete, no beneficial air entraining effect whatsoever would be produced. Tests obtained by Idorn confirmed that, in all of these plaintiffs' foundations where FA was substituted for cement powder in amounts of approximately 20%, the air void system was inadequate and did not meet the requirements of the Building Code or CSA Standards of 5 to 8%. Tests showing that the concrete contained unreacted air entraining agents confirm that Bertrand was adding the agent to the concrete. This is consistent with Dr. Becker's theory that FA, when used with the water reducing agent, entrapped air in Bertrand's concrete, causing Bertrand to reduce the amount of air entraining agent that it added to its mixes. Also, consistent with Dr. Becker's theory, is the fact that proper air entraining was observed in non-fly ash concrete at the St-Isidore's plant during the same period.

[para74] Finally, in support of Dr. Becker's evidence regarding FA's effect on air entrainment, there is CSA Standard A 23.5 at section A 4.3.1 which reads as follows:

The amount of air entraining add mixture required to obtain optimum air content normally increases appreciably when FA and natural posylin are used in concrete.

[para75] In summary, therefore, Dr. Becker's theory is that the defendant Bertrand, not being familiar with FA and not having been warned of the effects of FA on the air entraining system, would be batching concrete with an inadequate air void system. Consequently, the concrete would be unable to resist the freeze-thaw cycle when it became critically saturated.

(b) FA and High Water/Cement Ratio

[para76] If concrete is batched at a high water/cement ratio, the porosity and permeability of the concrete will increase. Such concrete will have numerous small, interconnected capillaries that will allow the concrete to absorb water and more easily become critically saturated. Generally, critical saturation occurs when all of the concrete capillaries and pores are filled in excess of 91% of their capacity. When water freezes in critically saturated concrete, it expands and can cause damage to the concrete unless there is an adequate air void system. All of the experts who examined and tested this concrete concluded that it was very porous. It was the evidence of the plaintiffs' experts and the expert for Lafarge that the water/cement ratio in the concrete was considerably higher than the .66 that had been Bertrand's target.

[para77] It was Dr. Becker's evidence that the addition of FA caused Bertrand to add additional amounts of water, thereby increasing the water/cement ratio. Dr. Becker seems to be in a minority with this opinion. The consensus of a number of other experts is that because of the spherical shape of FA particles, this reduces the water demand.

(iv) Niels Thaulow's Theory - Freeze-thaw (Lafarge)

[para78] The experts who testified on behalf of Lafarge indicated that, in their opinion, the process of deterioration was attributable to freeze-thaw. Niels Thaulow, a prominent Danish expert, was the main witness for Lafarge. Basically, his evidence was that the deterioration was due to a process of freeze-thaw in poor quality concrete. FA was not the cause, as he observed deterioration in concrete that was batched with or without FA. In his opinion, the poor quality of the concrete was attributable to:

* high water content caused by Bertrand's use of fine sand, which increased the water demand required to maintain a given slump in its mix;

* because of the high water/cement ratio, the concrete had high porosity and absorption;

* the concrete was not properly air entrained and, therefore, could not withstand freeze-thaw when it became critically saturated;

* because of the high absorption and high porosity, it easily became critically saturated and because it was not properly air entrained, it deteriorated when it went through freeze-thaw cycles;

* the soft brown outer layers of the concrete were attributed to a process called bicarbonation.

[para79] Mr. Thaulow's evidence reduced to simple terms would be as follows: the strength and durability of concrete are directly related to the water/cement ratio. The more water that is added to the concrete at the time of batching, the more porous and permeable it will be and the less strong it will be. The more permeable the concrete, the more easily it will become critically saturated. Mr. Thaulow defines porosity as the quantity of pores in the concrete. He indicates that permeability refers to the rate with which water may be transported through the concrete.

[para80] Mr. Thaulow testified that Idorn made extensive examination of thin sections of some hundred cores representing some 45 houses. The results of these examinations are contained in numerous reports presented to the Court (see Ex. 508). The examinations identified such things as the composition of the concrete, the porosity of the concrete, the carbonation of the concrete, the air voids in the concrete, the location of cracks in the concrete, and the absorption capacity of the concrete. Micro-observations of the paste in the interior of the concrete revealed that it was highly porous and cracked. Using a method called fluorescence microscopy (green tone), Mr. Thaulow testified that he was able to establish the relationship between porosity and water/cement ratio at the time the concrete was poured. He concluded that the water/cement ratio was considerably higher than was permitted under the CSA Guidelines.

[para81] He further established the relationship between water/cement ratio and absorption. Based on these examinations, he concluded that because Bertrand used excessive water, the concrete had a high water/cement ratio, low strength and high water absorption. In his opinion, this concrete would be very vulnerable to critical saturation.

[para82] He also identified that the concrete had a very poor, even non-existent air void system to resist freeze-thaw cycles. Accordingly, this concrete was non-frost resistant and would deteriorate if exposed to cycles of freezing and thawing in critically water-saturated conditions. He further testified that from his field observation, the damaged concrete easily could be critically saturated because he had observed ponding around the foundations. Ice and water were observed on the inside walls, and efflorescence occurred on the walls and slab.

[para83] Like Dr. Becker, he concluded that the damage to the concrete was due to freeze-thaw action on poor quality concrete. Where he differs with Dr. Becker is that he attributes the increased water demand and high water/cement ratio, not to the use of FA, but to the fineness of the sand and limestone crusher fines used by Bertrand in its concrete mix. Mr. Thaulow testified that from his field observation and SEM work (Scanning Electron Microscopy) the concrete, with or without FA, shows identical distress. Evidence submitted by Lafarge of the Idorn testing of the thin sections of samples taken by Lafarge led Mr. Thaulow to conclude that samples containing Type C FA and those without FA exhibited the same properties.

[para84] Mr. Thaulow further testified that the soft pliable appearance of the carbonated space on the ends of the core samples taken from the foundation was the result of a combination of high concrete porosity and exposure conditions. In his opinion, there was no evidence that carbonation zones were any deeper or softer in samples with FA than in samples without FA.

2. Sulfate Attack - FA is the Proximate Cause (Mr. Wib Langley, Dr. Robert Day, Mr. Laberge and others)

[para85] Experts called by the defendant Bertrand reached the conclusion that the primary cause of deterioration of the concrete was not freeze-thaw, but rather some form of attack resulting from the chemical composition of the concrete containing Type C FA. This opinion was advanced mainly by Mr. Wib Langley, an engineer with many years' experience in dealing with concrete, and supported by evidence of petrographers and scientists, experts in chemical analysis such as Messrs. Cornelius, Balinski, Erlin and Hime. Also, in support of the sulfate attack theory were Dr. Robert L. Day, an expert in concrete called by one of Bertrand's insurers, Chubb Insurance Co. of Canada, and Mr. Laberge, the expert called on behalf of the Marcil plaintiffs. All of these experts are in agreement that the substance which triggered the sulfate attack would have been the insertion of Type C FA in the concrete. They testified that the source of the chemical reactions, which deteriorate the concrete, is as a result of high sulfates and alkalis in the mix.

[para86] To understand the process one has to look at the composition of materials used to produce concrete. The main item used in the production of concrete is Portland cement. The production of Portland cement is a very controlled process. A product called gypsum, which is high in sulfate, is deliberately added during the production process to avoid flash setting resulting from the C3A (tricalcium aluminate) in the cement reacting with the water. The reaction of these two compounds (gypsum and C3A) forms ettringite, which occupies a larger volume than originally occupied by gypsum and C3A. If the formation of the ettringite takes place in the first couple of days or when the concrete is still in the plastic state, there is sufficient space in the concrete to allow for the expansive ettringite. What the cement producer attempts is the proper balance between the gypsum and the C3A so that after a proper reaction there is no sulfate left over to react after the first couple of days. If the required balance is not achieved and there are more sulfates than desirable, one is left with what is called over-sulfated cement. Excess sulfates then can continue to react with the aluminates released after the initial reaction. Hydration then occurs forming expansive deleterious compounds (such as ettringite) in the concrete once it has hardened. Over time and with moisture, a destructive mechanism known as sulfate attack occurs.

[para88] Lafarge purchased its FA from Detroit Edison on an "as is basis". Only Lafarge tested the FA. Apparently, weekly grab samples of the FA were taken as it was being loaded onto tankers for delivery. The only tests of the weekly samples were for the fineness and the loss on ignition. At the end of the month, the combined weekly samples were tested for chemical and physical components of the FA. According to Mr. Langley, the main expert for Bertrand, the tests showed a substantial variation in the sulfates and the alkali contents of the FA for the period from April 1986 to October 1987. (See Ex. 371). It was the evidence of a number of experts called, such as Mr. Langley and Dr. Day, that Lafarge testing of the FA was inadequate and that likely many thousands of tons of FA delivered to ready-mix operators were never tested. It was their evidence that the testing referred to above and the testing for the levels of SO₃ were not in accordance with the CSA specification (CSA A23.5-M86) (Ex. 274). It was also the evidence of the experts that no testing was done to determine if there was a balance between sulfate and calcium and other aluminates in the FA.

[para89] Bertrand's experts testified that the FA had sulfate levels higher than that of Portland cement and calcium or other aluminates levels equal or lower than in Portland cement. As a result, the mix of FA and Portland cement would result in a cementitious component that would be equivalent to a Portland cement that was over-sulfated. According to their evidence, concrete made with over sulfated cement could be a source of problem which could well worsen depending on the increase in sulfate. It was the evidence of the experts that the problem would not develop immediately, but over the passage of time and therefore was consistent with the evidence of the plaintiffs, as to the deterioration of their concrete foundations over the years.

[para90] Bertrand's experts testified that they did some sulfate profiles from cores taken from the plaintiffs foundation. It was their conclusion that there was sufficient sulfate to cause sulfate attack in the concrete. They concluded that the additional sulfate was contributed by the FA and was available for delayed reaction after the concrete had hardened. Petrographers and chemical engineers such as Balinski, Erlin and Hime testified that they observed ettringite and gypsum intergrown in the concrete samples examined.

[para91] According to Bertrand's experts, the efflorescence which was a source of complaint by most of the plaintiffs was examined and showed high levels of sodium sulfate, indicative of sodium salts being present in the hardened concrete. They testified that the levels of sodium and sulfate were higher than those normally found in concrete. If the sodium sulfate reacts with calcium hydroxide, it can result in a production of gypsum and ettringite. The movement of moisture can draw the sodium sulfate towards the surface of the concrete. According to the experts, a concentration of these salts occurs at the evaporation front, that is, anywhere from the surface to one inch inside the concrete. Concrete, therefore, at that location is exposed to very high concentrations of sodium sulfate which apparently can form compounds such as thenardite or mirabilite and may convert from one phase to another depending on a number of factors. The conversion from thenardite to mirabilite can trigger expansive forces that cause the surface of the concrete to deteriorate. Some of the experts have referred to this mechanism causing damage near the surface of the concrete as salt crystallization.

[para92] One obvious question is, why is there no problem with the concrete which was batched by Bertrand using FA after 1988? The answer by Bertrand's expert is that the chemical composition of the FA after 1988 became less variable and, in fact, Lafarge was selling what it called the new Type C FA.

[para93] Dr. Robert L. Day, a professor at the Department of Civil Engineering at the University of Calgary, was called by Chubb Insurance. He did a visual inspection of over 75 houses. His observations, testings and conclusions are contained in Ex. 475A to 475D. With some exceptions, such as horizontal surfaces, he concluded that the freeze-thaw was not the primary mechanism of deterioration. One reason for this conclusion was that scaling and efflorescence was found in locations where freezing is not possible. In his opinion, the primary destruction mechanism for these houses, which exhibited moderate and severe attack, was associated with localized precipitation of soluble salts from within the porous structures of the concrete. He concluded that a sulfate-based efflorescence was an important element of the problem. Further, spalding or scaling of the depths of one to five millimetres on the inside wall was attributed to a mechanism of physical sulfate attack where precipitates build up beneath the surface of the concrete and over time cause volumetric expansion and cracking of the concrete. It was his opinion that this form of deterioration is not characteristic of freeze-thaw attack.

[para94] Looking at all of the ingredients in the Bertrand concrete, such as water, coarse aggregate, fine aggregate and cement, he concluded that all of these ingredients were in compliance with the codes and standards and were not a factor in the damage. He focused his investigation then on the Type C FA. In his conclusion, he reported that sulfates, aluminates, and alkalis contributed by the cementing system produced by the Lafarge Portland cement and the Lafarge FA were present in sufficient quantities to produce potentially large expansion. These expansions were due to a physical sulfate attack, the result of crystallization or precipitation of salts within the porous structure of the concrete that tried to occupy more space than was available to accommodate them.

[para95] Jacques Laberge, an engineer called on behalf of the Marcil plaintiffs, agrees with Mr. Langley and Dr. Day that the primary mechanism of deterioration is internal sulfate attack. He also concludes that the mechanism of freeze-thaw may have been an aggravating factor in certain areas of the concrete foundation. Where he differs in his evidence, from both Mr. Langley and Dr. Day, is that he concludes that the high level of sulfates and alkalis was present not only in the FA but in the Portland cement. Accordingly, he states that it is possible that there would be a sulfate attack even in concrete that did not contain FA.

3. Is it freeze-thaw or sulfate attack? Did the FA cause the problem?

(i) Why Focus on FA?

[para96] It would be impossible for the Court to determine which of the two competing theories, freeze-thaw or sulfate attack, caused the deterioration in the concrete without looking at the role played by the FA in the concrete mix. As discussed earlier, all of the experts, save those called by Lafarge, concluded that the FA was the source of the problem, either in the freeze-thaw or the sulfate attack theory.

[para97] As mentioned earlier, I heard from the foremost concrete experts in the world. Most of these experts had impressive curriculum vitae and were experienced and knowledgeable. They were the leading experts in the world in their respective specialties. Their evidence, in both their written reports and viva voce evidence in Court, was lengthy, detailed and, at times, overwhelming. Written submissions by counsel for the parties involved thousands of pages. The challenge for this Court was to wade through the massive evidence and the lengthy written submissions by counsel without becoming hopelessly confused. Throughout the process, it seemed every time an expert gave an opinion or attempted to set a general rule, he was faced with an exception either through cross-examination or from another expert. For example, with possibly one exception, all of the concrete in the plaintiffs' foundations contained FA. Yet, it was the evidence of a number of experts that some foundations apparently had damage and did not contain FA. Further, this same FA apparently had been used in the concrete in foundations placed in homes in southern Ontario with no apparent damage. Also, FA was used in the Bertrand concrete from 1988 to 1991, again with no apparent problems.

[para98] It was also the evidence of a number of experts that the cause of the problem was not the FA, but the quality and the fineness of the sand. Why is it then there is no problem with the concrete using the same sand, either before 1986 or after 1988? In reviewing and weighing all of this evidence, I had to constantly remind myself that very often in life, for every general rule, there is an exception, and that the exceptions do not make the general rule. Or then again, I recall the admonition of the medical professor to his students "Follow your diagnosis".

[para99] In determining whether FA was the cause of the problem, the Court has to first of all look at the ingredients which went into Bertrand's ready-mix before and after 1986. Evidence of witnesses, including experts, confirmed that the concrete contained the following ingredients:

- * fine aggregate (which was sand or at times sand mixed with limestone fines)
- * coarse aggregate (stone)
- * water
- * Portland cement
- * FA (after 1986)

[para100] With respect to these ingredients, witnesses, including experts, confirmed the following:

* The source of Bertrand's sand came from a pit called the "Malo pit" which was MTO approved. Bertrand had been using this sand on and off since the 1970s apparently with no problem, and continued using it until some time in late 1988. It was also Bertrand's evidence that when the sand was too fine it blended limestone fines with the sand. Bertrand apparently had been doing this since 1978 without any problems.

* Bertrand's coarse aggregate was approved for use by MTO and apparently Bertrand had never encountered any problems.

* The water used by Bertrand in its concrete was tested by a number of experts and deemed to be satisfactory for concrete use.

* It was the evidence of most experts, save for Mr. Thaulow and possibly Mr. Laberge, that the production of Portland cement is a very controlled process. Portland cement has been extensively tested in the past and its characteristics and properties in concrete are well known and predictable.

* As discussed earlier, it was the evidence of most experts that the production of FA in 1984-86 was completely uncontrolled. Its properties at that time could be extremely variable and were dependent upon a number of factors over which Lafarge had no control, as it was buying the FA on an "as is" basis.

[para101] Given the fact that Bertrand had been using this mix prior to 1986 without FA and apparently without any problem, it would be logical, as most experts have done, to focus on the FA. Basically, the experts are lined up in two camps: Messrs. Becker, Langley, Day, etc. who maintain that FA is the cause of the problem, and on the other side Mr. Thaulow who claims that FA played no role in the deterioration of the concrete. Those who say that FA caused the problem are themselves divided: those claiming that the deterioration of the concrete is due to freeze-thaw and those who claim that it is as a result of sulfate attack. Mr. Thaulow, who claims FA played no role, has testified that the cause of the concrete deterioration is freeze-thaw.

[para102] Basically, for the Court to conclude that FA played no part in the deterioration of this concrete, the Court has to accept the evidence of Lafarge's expert Mr. Thaulow.

(ii) Analysis of Mr. Thaulow's Evidence

[para103] It is important to scrutinize Mr. Thaulow's evidence closely in light of the other factual and expert evidence presented to the Court over these many months. Basically, his evidence is that FA was not the cause of the problem, but rather the fineness of the sand which caused Bertrand to use too much water, thereby affecting the durability and the porosity of the concrete. Given this premise, the question has to be asked, "Why did Bertrand not have any problems with its concrete before 1986 or after 1988 when it was not using FA?". In response to this, Lafarge alleges that Bertrand changed its source of sand in 1986 at the same time that it started using FA. The Court heard evidence that Bertrand's source of sand had been from the Malo pit for a number of years prior to 1986. In 1985, it was using sand from another source referred to as the Lacoste sand. In 1986 and for the following years, Bertrand's evidence was that it used mainly sand from the Malo pit, and that if the sand used was too fine, it was mixed with limestone fines. This practice was used by Bertrand for a good many years prior to 1986. The question is again asked, "If the Malo sand is the source of the problem, why did Bertrand not experience problems with its concrete when it was using Malo sand prior to 1986 or after 1988 when FA was not used in the mix?".

[para104] Looking at all of the evidence, the only reasonable conclusion for the Court is that the mix design of Bertrand was the same before and after 1986, except that FA was used after 1986.

[para106] The green-tone method is actually measuring porosity of the concrete. The tests done by Idorn was on concrete that had been placed anywhere from 5 to 10 years. It was the evidence of a number of experts that the porosity in concrete is less a function of water/cement ratio as concrete ages. The porosity could well be caused by such things as chemical reaction, leaching of efflorescence, poor compaction or large amounts of entrapped air.

[para107] Other experts have testified that hydration could well affect the porosity of concrete. It was Mr. Thaulow's evidence that according to the green-tone method the water/cement ratio at the time of placement ranged from 0.55 to 1.14. Concrete poured with this high a water/cement ratio has been referred to by many experts as "soup". It was their evidence that concrete with such a high water/cement ratio would have shown signs of serious segregation; in other words, such ingredients as aggregate in the concrete would have started to segregate from other ingredients. There is no evidence before the Court of wholesale segregation in the plaintiffs' foundations.

[para108] The Court has serious concerns about the reliability of the green-tone method in testing the water/cement ratio of concrete that has been placed for so many years. If the Court was to accept Mr. Thaulow's evidence that the use of fine sand by Bertrand increased the water demand on the concrete, then concrete poured without FA should be in worse shape than concrete poured with FA because it was the consensus of most of the experts that the use of FA generally reduces water demand.

[para109] It was Mr. Thaulow's evidence that he observed deterioration in foundations of plaintiffs' homes which did not contain FA. A closer scrutiny of this evidence would lead the Court to question this conclusion. Mr. Thaulow's evidence was that Idorn's testing of thin sections of 3 or 4 plaintiffs' foundations did not indicate the presence of FA. This evidence was disputed by the plaintiffs' expert, more specifically Mr. Erlin who found evidence of FA in these same foundations. There was also evidence that a few foundations had some concrete from Bertrand's St-Isidore plant which did not contain FA. The overwhelming evidence before the Court would indicate that all of the plaintiffs' foundations showing signs of deterioration did contain FA, except for the plaintiffs' M-78 and the non-plaintiff Menard. The evidence from experts who examined both of these homes is that although the concrete showed some signs of superficial scaling, the damage or distress to these foundations was not of the magnitude of all the other plaintiffs' homes which required replacement. Accordingly, the only reasonable conclusion for the Court is that all of the plaintiffs' foundations showing distress and serious damage requiring full replacement contained FA.

[para110] Mr. Thaulow also testified that Idorn's testing demonstrated that the depth of carbonation was the same for concrete with or without FA. As indicated earlier, some of the samples in which Idorn indicated there was no FA did, in fact, have a percentage of FA. Further, a closer scrutiny of Idorn's samples with and without FA clearly indicates a much greater depth of carbonation in those samples containing FA.

[para111] Mr. Thaulow also testified that the use of FA in concrete does not affect the air entrainment. Dr. Becker and a number of other experts disagree with that conclusion. In fact, another expert for Lafarge, Mr. Elmhirst, concluded that the use of FA tended to increase entrapped air. Finally, CSA Standard A23.5 section A4.3.1 advises those using FA that this could increase appreciably the amount of air entraining add mixture required.

[para112] The defendant Lafarge alleged that it marketed Type C FA to its customers in southern Ontario without receiving any complaints from these customers. Records, ordered produced at trial, indicate that there were, in fact, complaints from these customers, such as efflorescence, cracking, scaling and some strength problems, but none of these problems were of the magnitude experienced by the plaintiffs. It is also in evidence that these customers were using a different mix than that used by the defendant Bertrand. It is well known and agreed to by all experts that the quality of the aggregate in southern Ontario is far superior to the aggregate in eastern Ontario. Further, these ready-mix producers from southern Ontario were using cement powder from Woodstock and not from Bath, Ontario. Many of the customers were also using slag mixed with the cement powder and the FA. Accordingly, it is difficult to make comparisons when the ingredients used in the mix are not the same.

[para113] Finally, Mr. Thaulow gave evidence in a number of areas which are clearly in conflict with the overwhelming evidence heard at trial. He testified that:

* In his opinion the freezing point of water in concrete is minus 2 degrees C, rather than minus 6 degrees C which was the evidence of all the other experts.

* Concrete containing sodium sulfate can become critically saturated if it is in contact with air at 77% relative humidity, when all other experts indicated that concrete is not fully saturated unless 91% of all the voids in concrete are full of water.

* In his opinion, there is no significant difference in the chemical properties of Type C or Type F FA, which is in conflict with all other experts, including Lafarge's' own experts.

* In his opinion, ordinary Portland cement is not chemically balanced, as was the evidence of other experts including Lafarge's.

* He did not feel that the quantity or composition of efflorescence exhibited in this case was unusual. Most other experts testified they had never seen the amount of efflorescence observed on the plaintiffs' foundations.

* He admitted seeing damage in areas not subject to freezing and thawing in only four homes, which is clearly in conflict with the evidence of the plaintiffs and most of the other experts.

Contrary to the evidence of a number of other experts:

* His tests show ettringite intergrown in the paste of concrete is not necessarily associated with the stress.

* He disagreed with the evidence of a number of experts that the conversion of thenardite to mirabilite results in volumetric expansion.

[para114] Lafarge argued that if FA was the cause of the problem, why did Bertrand not have any problems with its concrete after 1988 even if it continued using FA from 1988 to 1991. Evidence heard at trial is far from conclusive on these issues. There has been some evidence that Bertrand reduced the percentage of FA in the mix. Further, there is also some evidence that the FA became far more stable and consistent after 1988. Further, there is some evidence that Bertrand used more air entraining add mixture to the concrete. None of the above factors are necessarily conclusive, but they all clearly show there was a change in the mix after 1988.

(iii) Conclusion - FA

[para115] Given all of the above, the Court has to be very cautious in accepting Mr. Thaulow's conclusions as to the role played by the FA in the deterioration of the plaintiffs' foundations. Contrasting his evidence with that of the experts Becker, Langley, Hyme, Erlin, Day, and others as to the causal connection between the insertion of FA in the concrete and the deterioration of the plaintiffs' foundations. I have no difficulty in concluding that their evidence is far more logical and probative.

[para116] Clearly there is nothing inherently dangerous about FA. Most experts have testified that FA has been used safely and continues to be used in concrete without any problems. Nevertheless, in this case, in reviewing all of the evidence, the Court is led to the inescapable conclusion that, in 1986 and 1987, the addition of Type C FA to the Bertrand concrete ingredients greatly affected the quality and performance of the concrete and resulted in a product which was unsuitable for residential foundations.

[para117] If I had any doubts about the role played by the FA in the concrete, which I do not, I only have to consider the following factors that really make the case against the FA overwhelming:

* Bertrand basically had been using the same mix design since 1960 up until 1986 with no problems.

* Bertrand had two ready-mix plants, one in L'Original and one in St-Isidore. Both used basically the same mix design, except the L'Original plant used FA and St-Isidore did not. There were no problems whatsoever with the concrete from the St-Isidore plant.

* Bertrand did not use FA during the winter months and none of the foundations poured in the winter had any problems.

* Some of the concrete poured by Bertrand from the L'Original plant did not contain FA, i.e. flat surfaces and they had no problem.

* Bertrand poured concrete for two houses on the same street in L'Original, Ontario. One of the foundations had no FA and no problems; the other had FA and serious problems.

[para118] Because these facts lead to an obvious conclusion, and make the causal connection between FA and the concrete problems is no reason to reject them.

[para119] Given all of the above evidence, the Court can arrive at only one conclusion. The insertion of Type C FA in Bertrand's concrete in 1986 was the critical event that triggered the plaintiffs' foundation problems.

(iv) Conclusion - Freeze-Thaw or Sulfate Attack?

[para120] Having determined that FA is the cause of the problem, I have to decide whether the mechanism for deterioration is freeze-thaw or sulfate attack or both.

[para121] All of the experts are unanimous in concluding that this concrete was not properly air entrained and, therefore, could not withstand freeze-thaw processes. As mentioned earlier, two other factors have to be present for concrete to suffer damage as a result of freeze-thaw. It must be exposed to temperatures from minus 6 degrees to plus 2 degrees and it must be critically saturated. Much of the concrete in the plaintiffs' foundations would not be exposed to such temperatures. Further, most of the concrete in the plaintiffs' foundations could not possibly become critically saturated. In other words, damage was observed in vertical walls where the Court could not possibly conclude that such walls would have 91% of their pores filled with water.

[para122] Therefore, if the concrete exhibits damage in areas where it could not possibly be due to freeze-thaw, then the Court must conclude that the damage was caused by a chemical reaction called sulfate attack. This conclusion, of course, is supported by the expert evidence of Mr. Langley, Dr. Day and other experts called by the defendant Bertrand. Their expert and scientific evidence discussed earlier explains how it was that this concrete became over sulfated. Consistent with this conclusion is the following evidence:

- * The volume and composition of the efflorescence observed by all of the witnesses.
- * The deterioration, observed by most of the witnesses, occurred both inside and outside, above and below grade.
- * The inconsistent chemical composition of Type C FA purchased by Lafarge during the years 1986 to 1988.
- * The ettringite and gypsum found interwoven in the paste of the concrete by the experts which are a sign that sulfate attack is at hand.
- * A depth of carbonation on both the inside and the outside of the concrete walls above and below grade.
- * The slow, but methodical deterioration of the plaintiffs' foundations over a number of years.

4. Conclusion

[para123] All of the above evidence leads the Court to conclude that the primary mechanism of deterioration of the plaintiffs' foundations was sulfate attack.

[para124] Having come to this conclusion, I also accept the evidence of many experts that there are areas of the plaintiffs' foundations that have suffered damages as a result of both sulfate attack and freeze-thaw. For example, in areas at ground level where observations were made of water ponding, it would be reasonable to conclude that the concrete would become critically saturated and be exposed to temperatures that would make it vulnerable to freeze-thaw.

[para125] The evidence before me clearly demonstrates that the areas of the plaintiffs' foundations, which were undergoing both freeze-thaw and sulfate attack, appeared to be more seriously damaged.

VI. LIABILITY

[para126] The plaintiffs' claim against the defendants Bertrand and Lafarge is in negligence, and also for breach of contract against the defendant Bertrand.

1. In Contract

[para127] Based on the evidence heard at trial and the admissions made by the defendant Bertrand, most of the plaintiffs who purchased their concrete directly from Bertrand could establish a contractual link with Bertrand. Further, as a result of settlements entered into by the plaintiffs and some of the defendants' general contractors and forming contractors, the contractual rights existing between Bertrand and these contractors were assigned to the homeowners. There are, however, a number of plaintiffs who will be unable to establish a contractual link with the defendant Bertrand (see Appendix "D" of the Plaintiffs' Submissions and Tab 2 of Bertrand's Submissions). Given that the plaintiffs have a claim in negligence against both Bertrand and Lafarge, the Court will deal with the issue of breach of contract only with the plaintiffs who can establish a contractual link, either directly or through settlement, with Bertrand. There are also a number of defendant contractors who either filed defences, but did not appear at trial, or did not file defences and were noted in default.

[para128] At the opening of the trial, Bertrand admitted supplying concrete to all of the plaintiffs and that the foundation of the plaintiffs, with few exceptions, would have to be replaced. The defendant Raymond Bertrand also admitted at discovery (see Ex. 254B) that the concrete supplied by the defendant Bertrand to the plaintiffs' homes was unacceptable.

[para129] Finally, all of the experts who testified at trial were unanimous that this concrete did not have an adequate air-void system, had low compressive strength, high absorption and, therefore, was not fit for its intended purpose. Clearly this evidence supports the conclusion that there was a fundamental breach of the agreement between Bertrand and the plaintiffs with whom it had the contractual link.

[para130] Based on the evidence and Bertrand's admission, the concrete supplied to the plaintiffs did not meet the minimum requirements of the Ontario Building Code or CSA standard and, therefore, constitutes a breach of s. 15(1) of the Sale of Goods Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. S.1, I find this product did not reasonably meet its intended purpose.

2. In Negligence

[para131] The plaintiffs allege negligence by both defendants, which can be summarized as follows. The defendants added FA to Bertrand's concrete which was then supplied to the plaintiffs for their foundations without having done adequate testing. There was also a lack of notice to the consumer about possible problems with FA.

(i) Lafarge

[para132] Basically, the allegations of negligence against the defendant Lafarge are twofold:

1. That it marketed a product without having done adequate testing; and
2. That it failed in its duty to warn the consumer of possible problems with FA.

[para133] Regarding the first item, one would expect in the latter part of this century that it would be obvious, basic, common sense that a product would not be marketed without adequate testing to ensure its intended use and the protection of the ultimate consumer. That message should be clear to everyone, more so to multi-national corporations like the defendant Lafarge. The question obviously is, "Was Lafarge's testing of Type C FA prior to marketing adequate?".

[para134] I have already reviewed Lafarge's testing; it was as follows:

* The Norm Elmhirst 1985 Thesis (Ex. 276)

* A report from Lafarge Coppee in France (Ex. 380)

* A report dated March 1986 from Claude Bérard of Lafarge Research and Technical Centre in Montreal (Ex. 277)

[para135] Lafarge also relied on a MTO study of testing done in 1986 of FA, but this study was not released until 1988.

[para136] The Elmhirst Thesis was a laboratory study using concrete that had high strengths, low slump, and low water/cement ratio. This concrete, of course, differs considerably from the concrete that is used to pour foundations in eastern Ontario, which often is lean concrete having a high slump and a high water/cement ratio using a very different aggregate. Elmhirst also determined that the FA tended to entrap air and suggested further studies, something that was never done.

[para137] The Lafarge Coppee testing in the lab consisted of a motor bar expansion test on cubes. It found abnormally high levels of sodium and suggested further studies, something that was not done. The Bérard Report was also a lab study that was very limited and dealt basically with motor cubes.

[para138] The requirements for the use of supplementary cementing materials are set out in the National Standard of Canada A23.5 (Ex. 274). Section 5.1 sets out the requirements and general states:

A supplementary cementing material shall be drawn either from a lot that is sampled and tested prior to use or from a source that, by test on its production, has demonstrated that it consistently meets the requirements of this standard.

[para139] As mentioned earlier, Type C FA was a relatively new product in 1986. Lafarge was buying the FA from Detroit Edison on an "as is basis" and, therefore, this product was not being tested on its production. Given that the product had not demonstrated that it consistently met the requirements of the standard, the product had to be sampled and tested prior to its use. The evidence before me clearly indicates that Lafarge's testing protocol at its Woodstock plant did not comply with the standard. Lafarge took a weekly grab sample of FA from the storage silo as the FA was being loaded into the tanker for transport to a Lafarge customer. Apparently, part of that sample was tested for loss on ignition and fineness. The remainder of the sample was mixed with other weekly samples to form a composite sample that was then tested on a monthly basis for properties such as sulfur trioxide content. The standard states clearly that the product must be tested prior to its use. Here Lafarge was just taking the sample at the time that the product was being shipped to its customer. Further, what was being tested on a monthly basis was a composite sample. It was quite possible for customers to be using the product one-month prior to testing. Given that Type C FA was a new product in 1984-86, and given that Lafarge was buying the product on an "as is basis", one would have expected that it would at least have followed the relatively relaxed requirements of the standard.

[para140] Counsel for Lafarge have argued that Detroit Edison FA had been in use since 1984, and its records demonstrated that it had consistently met the requirements of the applicable standard. Accordingly, it did not have to test the FA prior to its use. The Belle River FA could not possibly meet this criterion because the plant did not become operational until June 1986. Accordingly, it had to test the FA prior to its use. Not surprisingly, Lafarge testing picked up substantial fluctuations of the sulfates and alkali level in the FA (see Ex. 371).

[para141] I have no difficulty in concluding that Lafarge's protocol for testing in 1986 did not meet the requirements of the standard.

[para142] Along with the guidelines contained in CSA A23.5 for the use of supplementary cementing materials, is Appendix "A" entitled "Guidelines for the Use of Supplementary Cementing Materials in Concrete". Section A10 provides for the evaluation of supplementary cementing materials. Section A10.2 reads as follow:

Minimum performance requirements for supplementary cementing materials are provided for in this standard. They are expressed in values derived from laboratory testing under standardized conditions, not intended to simulate job conditions. Data obtained in such a way are not to be expected to accurately predict the performance of concrete in the field. Their usefulness lies in assuring that minimum performance is met and that maximum uniformity of the product is maintained by the supplier.

[para143] Section A10.4 reads as follows:

In all applications of supplementary cementing materials, it is strongly recommended that adequate testing and trial batching be performed to establish their effects on concrete to be placed.

[para144] What is being suggested by these two sections is, again, really basic common sense. The FA should be tested in the field using the ingredients of the ready-mix supplier. It has been suggested by Lafarge that, in fact, there was field-testing with FA with ready-mix suppliers in southern Ontario. In fact, the Court would conclude that basically Lafarge was monitoring the concrete after it was poured, and not field-testing. The question that has to be asked is: "Is this field-testing or monitoring that was done with ready-mix suppliers in southern Ontario adequate field-testing that gives Lafarge the comfort that the FA could be used safely with the Bertrand mix?". There is no doubt that it does not. The clear wording of the section recommends that the testing of the FA in concrete under field conditions be done with the ingredients to be used in the Bertrand mix. The Court is left wondering why Lafarge did not do this. After all, Bertrand was to be the first eastern Ontario ready-mix supplier to use FA, and Lafarge would be aware that the aggregates in eastern Ontario were of inferior quality to aggregates used in southern Ontario. I can only conclude that Lafarge did not follow what was recommended in the standard.

[para145] The Court heard evidence that, in 1984, attempts were made to convince Bertrand to use slag in its cement mixes. Apparently, field tests were conducted at Bertrand's plant for about six months by a representative of a subsidiary of Lafarge. Eventually, Bertrand decided it was too complicated to use slag as a substitute for cement powder.

[para147] Appendix "A" of CSA A23.5 sets out the responsibilities of the various parties in a construction project when supplementary cementing materials are used. It is clear that the Guidelines presume close cooperation between the various parties when using supplementary cementing materials. For example, section A2.2.2 reads as follows:

The owners should be familiar with these materials and their effect on the properties of concrete to avoid improper use. In evaluating these materials, he may seek the advice from the supplementary cementing materials supplier, concrete consultants, or qualified inspection and testing companies.

Again what the standards set out is just basic common sense. Unfortunately, the evidence before the Court establishes clearly that the cooperation and advice between the various parties was basically non-existent.

[para148] When Lafarge convinced Bertrand to use FA in its mix, the only information relayed to Bertrand was that the FA could be substituted with the cement powder on a 1:1 basis up to 40%; that there could be some efflorescence on the concrete after it set and it could be washed off easily; and that the colour of the concrete could be affected when FA was used in the mix. Given that FA was a new product with which Bertrand was totally unfamiliar, why would Lafarge not meet its obligation and duty and warn Bertrand of the following:

- * That FA was being bought from Detroit Edison on an "as is basis" and may well have variable chemical properties;
- * That it (Lafarge) had not performed any field-testing with the Bertrand aggregate and, therefore, Bertrand should either do field-testing itself or monitor closely, with the assistance of either the owners or the subcontractors, the performance of the concrete;
- * That problems had been experienced with the use of Type C FA in southern Ontario;
- * That the provisions of section 4.2.1 and section 4.2.2 of Appendix "A" regarding water requirements exist; and
- * That the provisions of section 4.3.1 regarding air content states:

The amount of air entraining add mixture required to obtain optimum air content normally increases appreciably when FA and natural pozzolans are used in the concrete.

[para149] Lafarge also knew that Bertrand tested the air content of its concrete with a device that did not differentiate between entrained and entrapped air. Why did they not advise of their laboratory testing indicating that the use of FA tended to entrap air?

[para150] Not only was there no cooperation, advice, or warning between the various parties, but Bertrand failed to notify or warn the owners and contractors that it was using a new product in its concrete in the Spring of 1986. It also follows that Lafarge, by not having done adequate testing of this new product, was not in a position to properly warn Bertrand of any potential problems.

[para151] Considering all of the evidence, there is no doubt that Lafarge did not meet its obligation to the consumer when marketing a new product (see Hollis v. Dow Corning Corporation, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 634 and Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Limited v. St. John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210).

[para152] Because of Lafarge's failure to meet its obligation towards the consumer, it then can be held liable not only to those with whom it had a contractual relationship, but also to the consumer of the concrete containing FA (Winnipeg Condominium Corp. No. 36 v. Bird Construction Ltd., [1995] 1 S.C.R. 85).

[para153] Given the risks involved, the Court is left somewhat perplexed as to why a large multi-national corporation like Lafarge, with a huge customer base, would market a new product without having taken all reasonable steps to assure its performance. Throughout the trial, this defendant has maintained that FA is not the cause of the problem and that there was adequate testing of Type C FA before its introduction to the Bertrand concrete.

[para154] The Court heard some evidence that in 1985, when Lafarge went into a joint venture with DBO Marketing, that it was going to "aggressively" promote the sale and distribution of Type C FA. It also heard that in the years 1985-87 the demand for cementitious material (cement powder) produced by Lafarge was greater than Lafarge's ability to produce Portland cement from both its plants in Bath and Woodstock.

[para155] There is also evidence that Lafarge was able to obtain FA from Detroit Edison at $2.00 a ton. The cost of producing Portland cement was in the range of $40.00 a ton. At trial, it was suggested by Lafarge that the trucking of FA raised the cost of this product to a point where it was just as expensive as Portland cement. Although the Court has not heard any detailed evidence of the cost of trucking, it is unlikely that that cost alone would raise the price of FA to the cost of Portland cement when delivered to the consumer. Based on this evidence, it would appear that FA would have been the ideal product for Lafarge in the years 1985-87. It would have a greater profit margin for Lafarge than its cement powder and, at the same time, help alleviate a demand for cementitious material from its customer base, which Lafarge could not meet with only Portland cement.

(ii) Bertrand

[para156] The defendant Bertrand was a small, relatively unsophisticated ready-mix producer in eastern Ontario. Its clients were mostly small contractors or homeowners purchasing concrete mainly for foundations. In business since 1960, it had experienced no problems with its concrete. Why then, in this context, would Bertrand be so easily seduced by Lafarge and allow the insertion of a new product Type C FA in its mix?

[para157] Bertrand's position, throughout the trial, is that it relied exclusively on the advice and expertise of its cement and FA supplier, Lafarge. Given Lafarge's size, sophistication, and access to resources, Bertrand's reliance on Lafarge is not all together surprising. What is of great concern to the Court is that Bertrand, having been provided so little information by Lafarge, was prepared to rely on it exclusively. Basically, it engaged in a policy of "willful blindness".

[para158] Bertrand had observed, just a few short years before, the testing that had taken place before the introduction of slag in its mix. Yet in 1986, it was prepared to blindly insert Type C FA into its mix, a product about which it knew nothing and had been provided virtually no information by Lafarge. Bertrand made no inquiries from other ready-mix operators who had used Type C FA in southern Ontario. It did not consult any independent engineers or government agencies, or at least review the CSA standards dealing with supplementary cementing materials. What is even more surprising is that Bertrand introduced FA into its mix against the advice of one of its senior control officers and plant manager, Mr. Cliff. Finally, and more perplexing to the Court is, why would Bertrand not enlist the assistance of its customers in monitoring the performance of its concrete after the introduction of FA? Bertrand did the very opposite. It did not tell anyone that it had introduced FA into its concrete.

[para159] Raymond Bertrand testified that the sole reason for introducing FA into his concrete was to produce a better product. His decision not to tell any of his clients appears to contradict that motive. On the evidence, the more logical explanation is that Bertrand would save money by substituting cement powder with FA, thereby increasing its profits. The profit motive, not unlike Lafarge's, is what explains Bertrand's action. That decision by both defendants turned out to be a terrible mistake for which the plaintiffs are still suffering.

[para160] Bertrand breached its duty of care to the plaintiffs. Given its type of business, it was altogether foreseeable that the concrete it was selling to the plaintiffs would end up in their foundations. The law is clear that a manufacturer has a duty to take reasonable care in the manufacture of its products and to ensure that it is free of defects (Farro et al. v. Nutone Electrical Ltd. et al. (1990), 72 O.R. (2d) 637 (C.A)).

[para161] In my opinion, given that Bertrand was provided so little information about FA and appeared to be very keen in inserting this product into its mix, it should have embarked on a program of independent testing. Bertrand could have enlisted the services of consulting engineers to do durability testing on concrete with FA. Further, Bertrand could have exhibited more caution when it inserted FA into its concrete. With the assistance of its clients, it could have used FA only in concrete intended for areas that were not critical, i.e. flat surfaces like sidewalks, patios, or where it could easily be monitored and replaced if necessary.

[para162] For the reasons set out above, the Court finds Bertrand negligent.

(iii) Raymond Bertrand's Personal Liability as a Director

[para163] Raymond Bertrand was a Director of the defendant Bertrand & Frère. Some of the plaintiffs are making claims against Raymond Bertrand personally. Allegations against Raymond Bertrand are set out in the Statement of Claim. The basis for these allegations are that Raymond Bertrand was solely responsible for the introduction of FA into Bertrand's concrete. He accepted Lafarge's advice about FA against the opposition of his plant and control manager, Mr. Cliff. He made no attempt to obtain independent expert advice regarding FA and proceeded to market concrete containing FA without doing any field-testing. Finally, he sold FA to his customers without advising them that he had introduced a new product, i.e. FA, to the concrete.

[para164] The general rule is that officers and directors of corporations are immune from personal liability for the actions of the corporation. This principal appears simple enough, the difficulty is in applying the developing jurisprudence to the facts. The issue of personal liability of officers and directors is reviewed recently in the Court of Appeal decision of Adga Systems International Ltd. v. Valcom Ltd. (1999), 43 O.R. (3d) 101. The judgment in that case by Carthy J.A. begins as follows:

This appeal presents for consideration once again the troublesome issue of the liability of officers and directors of a corporation for acts done in pursuance of a corporate purpose.

The question for the Court in Adga Systems was whether the respondents (officers and directors) can be sued for their actions as individuals, assuming those actions were generally directed to the best interests of their corporate employer. What also has to be kept in mind in Adga Systems is that the Court of Appeal did not decide the question on the merits, but rather determined only if there existed a cause of action requiring a trial to determine the merits of the action.

[para165] The Court then proceeded to review, in some detail, the existing jurisprudence on this issue. It is obvious from the jurisprudence that the law has evolved somewhat from the principle that an officer or a director of a corporation will not be held personally liable if he is acting within the scope of his authority and in the best interest of the corporation. Nevertheless, the Courts have attempted to limit the personal liability. One of the cases quoted in Adga Systems is Normart Management Ltd. v. West Hill Redevelopment Company Ltd. (1998), 37 O.R. (3d) 97 (C.A.). In that case, Finlayson J.A. reached the following conclusion at p. 102:

It is well established that the directing minds of corporations cannot be held civilly liable for the actions of the corporations they control and direct unless there is some conduct on the part of those directing minds that is either tortious in itself or exhibits a separate identity or interest from that of the corporations such as to make the acts or conduct complained of those of the directing minds.

[para166] The problem for trial judges is that in most actions against corporations, there are claims and allegations against officers and directors personally. Therefore, as it was stated by Finlayson J.A. in Montreal Trust Co. of Canada v. Scotia McLeod Inc. (1995), 129 D.L.R. (4th) 711 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 720:

The decided cases in which employees and officers of companies have been found personally liable for actions ostensibly carried out under a corporate name are fact-specific.

Basically what the Court found in Adga Systems International Ltd. is that where properly pleaded, officers who are employees can be liable for tortious conduct even when acting in the course of their duty. What I have to decide is whether the facts in this case support the pleadings and allegations.

[para167] There is no doubt that Raymond Bertrand was acting in his capacity as an officer and director of Bertrand, and never in his personal capacity. Accepting that his motive for his decision to insert FA in concrete was to increase corporate profit, he certainly was acting within his authority. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that withholding to its customers the fact that FA had been inserted in the concrete, constituted a fraudulent misrepresentation. I have a problem with that conclusion. Undoubtedly, the corporation owed a duty to its customers and I have made a finding that the corporation breached that duty. I cannot conclude that the breach of duty amounts to fraud. No one in this case has alleged that FA is inherently a bad product, or that Bertrand knowingly marketed a deficient concrete.

[para168] Basically, I cannot conclude that Raymond Bertrand's conduct exhibited a separate identity or interest from that of the corporation, or that his conduct was tortious. Accordingly, the claim against Raymond Bertrand personally will be dismissed.

3. Apportionment of Degree of Negligence as Between the Defendants

[para169] The grounds upon which findings of liability against both defendants Bertrand and Lafarge are based on my earlier comments in this section. I do not intend to repeat them. Although I have found negligence against both defendants, I have no difficulty in concluding that the defendant Lafarge must bear the majority of the responsibility for the damages incurred by the plaintiffs.

[para170] I do not intend to review in detail the respective negligence of both defendants, but some of the reasons for my conclusion in apportionment are as follows:

* It was Lafarge's decision to market the Type C FA without adequate testing. In reviewing the circumstances surrounding the sale of FA by Lafarge to Bertrand, it would be reasonable that Bertrand would rely on Lafarge's skill and judgment as to the quality of the product being sold. Bertrand is a small ready-mix operator in eastern Ontario, selling mostly low quality concrete to a rural population. Lafarge is a large multi-national corporation with unlimited resources and whose expertise is cementing materials.

* Lafarge failed in its obligation to assist Bertrand in the introduction of FA into its concrete mix. Lafarge did not provide Bertrand with adequate assistance when FA was first introduced in the mix in the spring of 1986. Lafarge also failed to do adequate field-testing with the Bertrand mix or to perform any durability test.

* Lafarge also did not provide Bertrand with the necessary information as to the properties of FA as set out in CSA A23.1 (Ex. 274). They, in fact, started after 1991 to provide information on FA to the ready-mix operators (see Ex. 351).

[para171] In comparing the respective negligence of both defendants, I conclude that Lafarge should bear 80% of the responsibility and Bertrand 20%.

VII. DAMAGES

[para172] According to the evidence before me, including the admissions by the defendants, it is obvious that all of the plaintiffs' foundations, with some exceptions, will have to be removed and replaced. For a number of the plaintiffs, this has already taken place.

[para173] Due to the nature of the evidence called at trial by the various groupings of plaintiffs, and because there are varying issues involving different plaintiffs, I will have to deal separately with groups of plaintiffs.

1. Marcil Plaintiffs

(i) Evidence and Findings:

[para174] The evidence involving the assessment of damages of the Marcil plaintiffs was not admitted at trial. Unfortunately, the construction expert called by counsel for the Marcil plaintiffs was not qualified as an expert. Accordingly, counsel for the Marcil plaintiffs accepted the estimate of damages put forward by the defendants Bertrand and Lafarge and contained in Ex. 297. These estimates of damages were prepared by the firm, Brunette & Cadieux Construction Inc. ("B&C"). Not included in the total price of replacing the foundations are the costs associated with the removal and replacement of the footings and the basement floors, and an allowance for accommodation for the owners when they will have to move out during construction.

(a) Footings

[para175] I have already determined that the primary mechanism of deterioration of this concrete is caused by sulfate attack. The excess sulfates and alkali come from the insertion of FA into the concrete. Consequently, if the walls of the foundation have to be replaced because they contain FA, I do not see why the footings should not also be replaced as they also contain FA.

[para176] It has been suggested by the defendant Bertrand that the footings do not suffer from chemical reaction because they are not subjected to wetting and drying cycles. On the other hand, there is evidence before the Court that some areas of walls have suffered deterioration even if they have not been subjected to wetting and drying cycles. Given the evidence of the experts as to the process of deterioration involved in sulfate attack and the fact that the processes can be very slow, I see no reason why the innocent plaintiffs should take the risk of having new foundation walls resting on concrete footings which may possibly deteriorate over time. The expert for the defendants, B&C, has estimated the cost of removal and replacement of the footings in each of the Marcil plaintiffs' estimates. That amount, therefore, should be added to the total of the replacement costs.

(b) Basement Floors

[para177] The basement floors did not contain FA and, therefore, would not be subjected to deterioration as a result of sulfate attack. The Court also heard evidence that the walls and footings of the foundation can be replaced without replacing the floors. Therefore, the total replacement cost estimate should not include an amount for the removal and replacement of the basement floor.

(c) Accommodation Allowance

[para178] The estimates, prepared by B&C for the defendants, state that the time required to complete the work for the plaintiffs will vary anywhere from 30 to 45 days. The estimates also indicate that, in most cases, the residents will have to move out of their houses for a period of between 15 and 20 days. These plaintiffs, therefore, should be entitled to an allowance for accommodation, for food and lodging, during the time they have to move out of their homes.

[para179] The Court heard evidence from various sources about reasonable accommodation costs. These amounts can vary from $270 a day from the expert Naoum, called on behalf of the Alie plaintiffs, to an amount of $50 a day paid by the Program to the homeowners whose foundations were replaced. I also heard evidence that hotel and motel costs in the area of the plaintiffs' homes could vary from $50 to $88 a day. Altogether, the evidence was not very satisfactory on this issue. Nevertheless, the Marcil plaintiffs should be entitled to reasonable accommodation costs during the 15 to 20 days they will have to vacate their homes. In my opinion, taking into consideration the number of adults, children, pets, etc., of the various homes, I would fix an amount of $100 a day as reasonable costs for food and lodging.

[para180] All the Marcil plaintiffs, therefore, will be entitled to a per diem of $100 for food and lodging during the 20 days they will have to vacate their homes, except the Marcil plaintiffs whose basement already has been replaced.

(d) Loss of Capital Value

[para181] It has been argued by counsel for Marcil that the Marcil plaintiffs should receive an amount for loss of capital value. Unfortunately, the evidence to support this claim is unsatisfactory. Accordingly, it is impossible for the Court to assess any value for the loss of capital value.

(e) Conclusion

[para182] The Marcil plaintiffs will be entitled to damages in accordance with the B&C estimates after adding on the amount for removal and replacement of the footings and the per diem for accommodation.

(ii) Saumure Residence (M-78)

[para183] The concrete in this residence did not contain FA. The best evidence before the Court would lead to the conclusion that this foundation did not exhibit the same distress as the other plaintiffs' residences. The defendant Bertrand denied this foundation needed replacement and I have no difficulty in concluding that the defendant's position was justified. The foundation did have some defects, but these were not related to defective concrete. Apparently, this plaintiff has received some compensation for the defects.

[para184] Accordingly, the claim for damages of the Saumure residence will be dismissed.

(iii) Tremblay Residence (M-80)

[para185] The concrete in the foundation of this residence contained FA. There is an admission on the part of the defendants that the concrete is defective and has to be replaced. The problem with this residence is that the foundation was constructed in the water table. It became obvious at trial that other parties should be defendants in this action. The matter was adjourned to allow service of the pleadings on the other defendants.

[para186] Before the end of trial, a settlement was reached between the plaintiffs and the other defendants for the sum of $21,000. Because of the settlement, the Court never heard the circumstances of the construction or what remedies may have been possible to cure the water table problem had the concrete not been defective. In other words, this Court never heard evidence which would assist it in apportioning liability between the defendants Bertrand and Lafarge and the other defendants.

(iv) Marcil Residence (M-72)

[para188] These plaintiffs replaced their foundations, footings and basement floor in May of 1996. They submitted a claim for damages of $96,905.66 (see Ex. 102). The defendants take issue with some items included in the Marcil plaintiffs' damages. One of the items included in the plaintiffs' claim is replacement of the basement floor. I have already ruled that the basement floors did not require replacement. The defendants suggest they be given a credit for $5,000, which is reasonable.

[para189] Also included in the plaintiffs' claim are some 1041 hours at $15.00 per hour for labour costs. Apparently, the labour was furnished by the plaintiffs themselves, their friends and relatives. The defendants dispute this amount on the basis that the plaintiffs are really not out-of-pocket for these labour costs, and that the claim should have been advanced by the individual who furnished the labour. Undoubtedly, as was so often the case in the Marcil plaintiffs' claim, the evidence presented to the Court could have been more helpful. Nevertheless, it would not be unreasonable for the Court to conclude that there would be considerable labour involved in the removal and replacement of a foundation of an existing home. Further, the defendants should not get credit for labour furnished by friends and relatives of the plaintiffs. Courts generally follow the well-known tort principle that a tortfeasor is not entitled to benefit from a gratuitous payment made by a third party to the plaintiff. I do find the hourly rate somewhat excessive, and I would award labour costs in this matter of $10,000.

[para190] The defendants also dispute an amount of $2,460 for accommodation. Apparently, the plaintiffs resided at their parents during construction. Again, I do not see why the defendants should benefit from a benefit made by the parents to the plaintiffs, and I would award the Marcil plaintiffs the same accommodation costs as the other plaintiffs, that is $100 a day for 20 days. Accordingly, the accommodation claim should be reduced to $2,000.

[para191] There is a further claim for storage for $465. Apparently, this furniture was stored on their property and that amount was never paid. The plaintiffs' claim, therefore, should be reduced by that amount.

[para192] Finally, the plaintiffs reached a settlement with the forming contractor and received the sum of $15,000. The plaintiffs' claim against these defendants should be reduced by that amount.

[para193] The plaintiffs' claim should also be reduced by the amount of $239.59 for photographs and $190.05 for coffee breaks. The above amounts, therefore, should be deducted from the total claim of $96,905.66, and the defendants should reimburse the Marcil plaintiffs the sum of $69,936.02.

[para194] There also may be settlements between the Marcil plaintiffs and other defendants that have not been brought to the Court's attention. The defendants, of course, would be entitled to a credit for any of these settlements.

2. Alie and Duval Plaintiffs

[para195] These plaintiffs called Mr. Andy Naoum of Capital Engineering ("Naoum") as an expert witness to give evidence as to the cost of replacing the foundations of their homes (see Ex. 253, Vol. 1 and 2). The defendants Bertrand and Lafarge called Mr. Roch Cadieux ("Cadieux") of the firm of B&C to give evidence regarding the replacement of the plaintiffs' foundations (see Ex. 262 and Ex. 513, Vol. 1 and 2). The evidence of these two experts differed sharply in areas such as time to complete the work and accommodation costs, brick replacement, engineering and supervision costs, and such items as backfill, floors and footings and garages. I intend to deal with each individual item later.

[para196] In reviewing the curriculum vitae and backgrounds of each of these experts, I have come to the following conclusion. Cadieux's work experience in the construction industry is far more impressive than Naoum's. The latter basically gained his experience having been involved with the Program plaintiffs in the replacement of the 28 foundations back in 1993-1994. Cadieux has been involved with the construction industry since 1962. Naoum's experience in preparing cost estimates is very limited. Cadieux has had his own construction company since 1984 and, in fact, was involved in the replacement of foundations for the Program plaintiffs in 1993. He has been preparing cost estimates for his company throughout those years. Cadieux's methodology and preparation in arriving at his cost estimates are far more scientific and precise than Naoum's. I have no difficulty in concluding that more probative value should be put on Cadieux's cost estimates than Naoum's. Therefore, after making a number of adjustments on items which I will discuss below, I would accept Cadieux's costs estimates for these plaintiffs' homes over that of Mr. Naoum's.

(i) Time to Complete the Project and Accommodation Allowance

[para197] I have already ordered that the Marcil plaintiffs be paid an accommodation allowance of $100.00 per day for at least 20 days. In my opinion this should be the minimum for the Alie and Duval plaintiffs. Naoum's evidence as to the time to complete the work and accommodation allowance is clearly excessive. On the other hand, Mr. Cadieux may well be too conservative, especially as to the time that the plaintiffs' will have to vacate the premises while the work is going on. These plaintiffs will be compensated in accommodation allowance for a minimum of 20 days at $100.00 per day. The plaintiffs where Cadieux's estimate for time exceeds 40 days to complete the work will be entitled to accommodation allowance of one half the number of days to complete the work, i.e. plaintiff Bissonnette (A-8) 50 days to complete the work should be entitled to 25 days accommodation allowance. Accordingly, the Cadieux cost estimates will be adjusted to include the accommodation allowance referred to above.

(ii) Brick Replacement

[para198] There were considerable differences in approach and costs between the two experts regarding the homes with outside brick walls. Naoum estimates are based on the theory that all of the brick would have to be removed and replaced with new brick. He stated this was the practice of all of the contractors during the replacement of the Program plaintiffs' homes.

[para199] Cadieux's estimate is premised on the theory that, with few exceptions, brick could be left undamaged during construction. He testified that although some bricks may well be damaged, they could be individually replaced. With few exceptions, his inquiries determined that most of the type of brick used in the plaintiffs' homes was still being manufactured. For those homes where the brick was no longer being manufactured, that brick would have to be totally replaced with new brick.

[para200] As stated earlier, Cadieux's experience in the field of construction, including masonry, is far more extensive than Naoum's. There is no doubt that, if these homes had to be lifted and transported any distance, it is unlikely that a brick wall would survive that kind of displacement. But this is not what is being proposed here. It was Cadieux's evidence that the plaintiffs' foundations could be replaced just by supporting or lifting the home a few inches. This can be done without even disconnecting the services. The brick wall can be supported in such a way as to leave most of it undamaged. It is quite possible that the bottom rows of bricks may suffer some minor damage. If the brick is still being manufactured, there is no reason why the walls could not be repaired with similar brick with very little esthetic effect on the whole wall.

[para201] Given the above circumstances, and considering the cost and the wastage of perfectly good bricks, I would accept the solution proposed by the defendants' witness, Cadieux, as to brick replacement.

(iii) Engineering and Supervision Costs

[para202] The parties, through their experts, disagree as to the necessity of having engineering and supervision work during the replacement of the foundations. Naoum, on behalf of the plaintiffs, testified that engineering assistance is necessary to deal with the contractors, obtain bids, review specifications, supervise the work and ensure that safety standards are maintained throughout. He has included an amount of 10% of the contract, which apparently is the industry norm for engineering and supervision costs.

[para203] Cadieux's cost estimates include an amount for engineering services with respect to design and approval of a support system for the house, but he has no blanket provision by way of a percentage allocation. The defendants maintain that it is not usual to have an on-site engineer for residential work and that supervision could be done by municipal building inspectors.

[para204] I have no difficulty in concluding that the plaintiffs should be allocated an amount for engineering and supervision costs. The removal and replacement of a foundation on an existing house is not ordinary residential construction. The plaintiffs' houses are going to have to be either raised or supported while the foundation is being replaced. In many cases, the brick walls also will have to be supported. Most of these houses probably have finished basements along with balconies and landscaping which may be attached to the house. The innocent plaintiffs are facing a predicament not of their doing. They deserve the satisfaction and comfort that corrective measures are done right. Replacing a foundation on an existing house is not a simple straightforward operation. It is reasonable that the plaintiffs should be entitled to have this work performed under the supervision of a competent engineer.

[para205] There appears to be agreement amongst the parties that the industry standard for engineering and supervision costs is 10%. Here there are a large number of plaintiffs in different groupings. There will be, obviously, some similarities and repetition in each project. It is reasonable, therefore, to conclude that there will be some economies of scale. I am convinced that these plaintiffs will not all have a different engineer. I am sure that a professional taking on a number of projects would reduce this rate from the standard 10%. Accordingly, I would award the Alie, Duval, Marcil plaintiffs and independent plaintiffs a fee of 7% of the cost of the work for engineering and supervision costs.

(iv) Contingencies

[para206] Generally contracts of this nature have an amount for contingencies. The amount, usually a percentage of the contract, is to ensure that the homeowner is protected for items which are unforeseen and involved extra cost. Both experts for the plaintiffs and defendants, Naoum and Cadieux, have in their estimates an amount for contingencies. The plaintiffs' expert is of the opinion that 5% is a reasonable amount for contingencies. The defendant expert has a fixed amount in the range of $2,500 to $3,000. In my opinion, the amount put aside by Mr. Cadieux is far too conservative. Considering the type of work that has to be performed on these homes, it would not be difficult to anticipate that all sorts of unforeseen events may well occur. If the Court is going to err, it should err in favour of the innocent plaintiffs. In my opinion, it therefore would be reasonable to have a 5% contingency amount set aside on each one of these contracts. This 5% allowance should also apply to the Marcil plaintiffs and the independent plaintiffs.

(v) Granular B Backfill and Landscaping

[para207] The plaintiffs' expert, Mr. Naoum, is of the opinion that the quality of the backfill around the foundations, the patios, the walkways, driveways, is of poor quality and should be replaced by granular B backfill. He estimates this cost would be approximately $2,000 per home. I am not aware of any reliable evidence in this trial that the existing backfill is inadequate. Clearly to replace this backfill with granular B backfill would constitute betterment. In my opinion, the approach taken by the defendant expert from B&C is reasonable. I would reject the claim for granular B backfill.

(vi) Footings and Floors

[para208] I have already made a determination as to liability regarding these items for the Marcil plaintiffs and I would apply these conclusions to these plaintiffs.

(vii) Detached Garages

[para209] The Alie plaintiffs claim an additional amount of damages to replace the garage floors for the plaintiffs who have detached garages. This claim is supported by evidence that is most unsatisfactory. Originally, this item was not included in the plaintiffs' expert Naoum's estimate. Subsequently, these estimates were revised to include various amounts from anywhere between $15,000 to $40,000 to effect repairs on detached garages. There are no work sheets or estimates to support these amounts. Clearly this evidence appears to be an afterthought and based only on Mr. Naoum's judgment.

[para210] The Court wants to make every effort to ensure that the plaintiffs are fully compensated for all of their losses. Nevertheless, awards cannot be based on speculation. It may well be that some of the plaintiffs may incur additional costs involved with repairs to detached garages. Yet I cannot make awards based on guesswork and unreliable evidence. Accordingly, the plaintiffs' claim for damages for the detached garages will be rejected.

(viii) Cost Adjustment

[para211] After making the adjustments referred to above, I then would accept the estimates of B&C as being more reliable and representative of the cost of the repairs to the plaintiffs' homes. Considering these estimates were prepared in 1997, I also would deem it reasonable that there be a 3% upward adjustment per year up to the year when the work will be completed.

(ix) Apportionment of Settlement Funds Received from Plaintiff Contractors

[para212] During the course of the trial, the Alie plaintiffs reached settlements with various contractors. The total amount of the settlements was $73,801.19. The parties agreed that the defendants would be entitled to a credit to be deducted from the plaintiffs' damages. Counsel for the Alie plaintiffs have suggested these funds be credited on a pro-rata basis in accordance with their table at Tab 3 of their Supplementary Written Submissions. That proposal appears to be fair, and I would order the apportionment of the settlement funds accordingly.

(x) Alie Plaintiffs with Special Problems:

(a) The Turpin Actions (A-58 to A-61)

[para213] The former owner of these four properties, Gilles Turpin, declared personal bankruptcy in 1997. The four homes A-58 to A-61 were sold under power of sale. The Trustee in Bankruptcy is claiming damages for the difference between fair market value if the homes would have had good foundations, and the amount received on the sale. Expert evidence is found at Ex. 580A,

B, C and D. The total amount of the loss is $104,500. This amount is not disputed by the defendants. Accordingly, the Trustee will be entitled to the sum of $104,500.

[para214] The Trustee makes a further claim of $82,906.45, which is alleged to be expenses incurred during the marketing period. This amount is disputed by the defendants. The only way the Trustee can successfully claim the full amount is if I make a finding that Turpin's bankruptcy was attributable solely to the loss of rental income from these four properties. The evidence before me indicates otherwise. It is clear that Mr. Turpin was encountering serious financial problems with his construction business as early as 1994. Further, much of the debts and unsecured creditors, at the time of bankruptcy, had nothing to do with the four houses. Undoubtedly, the loss of rental income was a contributing factor in his bankruptcy, but was not the sole reason. Accordingly, I would find that the loss of rental income did not contribute any more than one third to his bankruptcy. The Trustee will be entitled to 1/3 of $82,906.45.

[para215] The plaintiff also makes a further claim for hardship and inconvenience. I do not accept the plaintiff's submission that this plaintiff should get an increased amount because of increased hardship. I am of the opinion that he should get a decreased amount for two very important reasons. I am not aware of any evidence that indicated the plaintiff Turpin lived in any of these four homes. Secondly, there is the difficulty in relating the lack of rental income to his financial problems. In the circumstances, therefore, I would award this plaintiff the sum of $2,500 for hardship and inconvenience.

(b) The Village of L'Orignal Recreation Facility (A-62)

[para216] The loss claimed by this plaintiff is set out at Ex. 250 and totals the sum of $19,893.70. The defendant Bertrand does not dispute this amount. The defendant Lafarge disputes the damages on the basis that the foundation was never replaced. The fact is that this plaintiff received defective concrete, and the moving of the offices and the demolition of the building had something to do with the bad concrete. The plaintiff's damages here are reasonable and will be allowed.

(c) Royal Leduc (A-40)

[para217] This plaintiff had his foundation, basement floor and footings replaced in 1996. He has submitted an account for the work done totalling $43,073 and work yet to be completed estimated at $49,000, for a total cost of $92,073.00 (see Ex. 70). The defendants dispute a number of the items listed in Ex. 70 and suggests that this plaintiff's claim be reduced to $54,998. The plaintiff argues that the items listed in Ex. 70 are not out of line with their expert Naoum's estimate, especially when items such as engineering, contingencies, accommodation, G.S.T., and a detach garage are added on. The problem is that none of these costs were either expended by Leduc during the construction or claimed by him in Ex. 70. Nevertheless, I have to keep in mind that I am not aware of any estimate by any of the experts that provided for the complete replacement of these foundations for less than $55,000.

[para218] In reviewing item by item in Ex. 70, I would make the following findings. The defendant disputes Mr. Leduc's hourly rate of $20.00 per hour for what was basically labour work. I would agree that the hourly rate should be reduced to $10.00 per hour. There is a claim for $22,000 to replace all of the stones and brick. The evidence does not support that finding, although repairs will be necessary in the areas where the stones and brick are cracked. I would reduce that amount to $7,500. The items for the broken windowsill and the landscaping are to remain as is. The item of $5,000 for repaving the driveway should be reduced to $3,500. The items for repairing the basement are to remain as is at $8,000. The defendant disputes all of the items for repairing the upstairs of the house. I would think it reasonable to conclude that, given the type of repairs involved in lifting a house and replacing the foundation, there would be some damage to the upstairs of the house. I have also heard evidence as to the damage caused by the high humidity associated with the faulty concrete in the foundations. Accordingly, I would award an amount of $5,000 for repairing the upstairs of the house. Unfortunately, the evidence does not support any other findings for allocating amounts as I have done for the other plaintiffs.

(d) The Choinière Action (A-18)

[para219] The plaintiff Choinière started an action against a notary public by the name of Roland Carrière who practiced with the law firm of Shelby, Houle, Assaly and Morrissette. The plaintiff's claim alleges professional negligence against Carrière in that he failed to properly register the plaintiff's home under the Program. Obviously, when the problems became apparent with the foundation, the plaintiffs' claim was rejected by the Plan. The defendants Bertrand and Lafarge and their insurers were brought into the action by way of third and fourth party actions. Settlement was reached between the plaintiff Choinière and Mr. Carrière wherein the latter purchased the plaintiff's home for $70,000. One of the terms of settlement was that the plaintiff irrevocably assign their interest in their action to Mr. Carrière. The defendant Bertrand consented to the settlement, but preserved its right to challenge the validity of the assignment to Carrière.

[para220] The defendants Bertrand and Lafarge challenged the validity of the assignment and argued that the plaintiff Carrière's claim should be dismissed for the following reasons.

* The assignment to Mr. Carrière is invalid and unenforceable as being contrary to the laws of Champerty and Maintenance. Also, it is against Public Policy in Ontario in that the assignment is of a bare cause of action in tort.

* The plaintiffs have been fully compensated and, therefore, have suffered no damages.

* Further, Carrière purchased the plaintiffs' home "as is" and should not be entitled to any windfall in that if he is allowed to recover he would end up with a new foundation, which is substantially more than what he bought.

* With the assignment, the plaintiffs Choinière lost their status to sue.

[para221] A leading Canadian authority in respect to assignment and dealing with Champerty and Maintenance is Fredrickson v. I.C.B.C. (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 145 (C.A.), affirmed in [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1089. McLachlin J.A. does a complete review of the jurisprudence. To quote her at page 152:

It is frequently said that a bare cause of action in tort is not assignable. This rule is based mainly on strictures of the common law against maintenance and champerty. Anglo-Canadian jurisprudence has never countenanced trafficking in litigation.

Then she goes on to state as follows. "The exact ambit of the rule is illusive." She then cites the jurisprudence indicating the exceptions to the rule, and at page 156 states as follows:

I would summarize the effect of these cases as follows. An assignment of a cause of action for non-personal tort is generally valid if the assignee has a sufficient pre-existing interest in the litigation to negate any taint of champerty or maintenance. In determining if this test is met, the Court should look at the totality of the transaction: Trendtex, per Lord Roskill at p. 531. A property interest ancillary to the cause of action assigned is sufficient to support an assignment, but not essential. A genuine pre-existing commercial interest will suffice. The term "commercial interest" is used in the sense of financial interest; it need not arise from commercial dealings in the narrow sense. Assignment of a cause of action to a stranger will not be permitted, nor will the Court uphold an assignment made for the purpose of obtaining more than what the assignee is legally entitled to.

[para222] In the Choinière matter it is obvious that the assignee, Mr. Carrière, had a property interest ancillary to the cause of action and a genuine pre-existing commercial interest in the litigation. One could hardly categorize Carrière's status as that of a stranger meddling in other peoples litigation.

[para223] If Mr. Carrière is entitled to have his foundation replaced, will he receive a windfall? In my opinion, all he will receive is an adequate foundation, something every other plaintiff in this action is asking for. Had there not been a settlement between Choinière and Carrière, and an assignment to Carrière, obviously the plaintiffs Choinière would have been entitled to damages to have their defective foundation replaced. Having come to an agreement to the satisfaction of both parties, I fail to understand why Carrière would not be entitled to the benefit of the assignment from the plaintiffs. I consider it to be in the interest of the administration of justice to have parties negotiate settlement to minimize the litigation. Finally, given the nature of the settlement and the assignment, I do not accept the defendants' position that Carrière was the only one who could sue.

[para224] In conclusion, therefore, this plaintiff will be entitled to the same remedies as the other plaintiffs outlined earlier, except that Roland Carrière will not be entitled to any award for hardship, inconvenience or mental distress.

3. New Home Warranty Program Plaintiffs

[para225] As mentioned earlier in this judgment, the Program replaced the foundation of some 28 plaintiffs and one condominium corporation (PCC No. 5). The Act then provides that the Program has a right of subrogation. Basically the Program's claim can be divided as follows:

- * As a subrogee for the homeowners, the foundations were either repaired or replaced.
- * In its own name for the cost incurred. They were in addition to and incidental to the cost of replacing the foundation.

[para226] Mostly these costs are for experts, such as engineers, and for administrative fees.

(i) Program's Subrogated Claim:

[para227] The Program's costs for replacing the defective foundations are detailed in Ex. 229A to 229L. The Program has summarized these costs at page 119 of their written argument. They are in three categories: foundation replacement costs of $2,148,864.17; accommodation costs of $71,478.50; and basement finishing costs of $29,452.29 for a total of $2,249,794.96.

(a) Is the Program's Claim a Nullity?

[para228] The defendant Lafarge argues that the Program's claim is a nullity because the program has no jurisdiction to sue in its own name. Actually, the Program plaintiff started a number of actions from 1995 to 1997. Some were in its own name and some were in the names of the individual plaintiffs. By an order of this Court in September 1997, all of these actions were consolidated and proceeded together at trial. In summary, the defendant Lafarge maintains that although regulations allow the Program to sue in its own name, such regulations are beyond what is permitted by the Statute. They also argue that by allowing the Program to sue in its own name, they are in fact curtailing the right of the defendants to the full discovery process. They also state that, by having a number of actions against the defendant, this is an abuse of process.

[para229] What Lafarge is advocating on this issue of nullity is somewhat confusing. The Program is a creature of Statute and in this case it is the Ontario New Home Warranty's Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. 0.31. The jurisdiction of the Program is found within the Statute. Section 23 confers jurisdiction onto the Program to make by-laws. Section 23(1)(m) states:

The Corporation may make by-laws subrogating the corporation or named insurer to any right of recovery of a person in respect of a claim paid out of the insurance under the Plan and costs and providing the terms and conditions under which an action to enforce such rights may be begun, conducted and settled.

Section 13(1) of Regulation 892 of the 1990 Revised Regulation of Ontario states:

The Corporation shall be subrogated to all rights of recovery of a person to whom payment in respect of a claim has been made out of the guarantee fund under the Act and may maintain an action in its own name or the name of the person against any other person against whom the action lies in respect to such rights of recovery.

[para230] I fail to understand how this by-law confers onto the Program powers that are not given by s. 23(1)(m) of the Statute. The Court notes that s. 23(1)(m) is not referred to in the defendant Lafarge's written argument. Possibly it was not aware of the provisions of s. 23(1)(m) and hence the confusion about the Regulations. Given my earlier comments, I conclude that the provisions of s. 13(1) of Regulation 892 are consistent with the powers granted by the Statute.

[para231] Lafarge also argues that by allowing the Program to sue in its own name, its right to discovery is undermined. Given the discovery provision of our Rules, I reject Lafarge's argument on this issue, especially in this case where the evidence of most of the plaintiffs was similar. In fact, the parties came to an agreement that answers should be given by way of written questions and answers.

[para232] Lafarge's argument, that because various actions were started this was an abuse of process, has very little merit. The only reasons the plaintiff Program started actions in different names were because of Lafarge's objections and out of an abundance of caution. Given that the consolidation order was made at the start of the trial and all of these actions were tried together, it is difficult for the Court to appreciate that the defendant was in any way prejudiced or that this was an abuse of process.

(b) Replacement Costs and the G.S.T.

[para233] The defendants accept as recoverable damages the amounts claimed by the Program for replacement costs totalling $2,148,864.17, except any individual claim which exceeds $100,000. In this case, two claims exceed that amount: the claim for Lalande 096 for $107,020.74 and the claim for Martineau 099 for $105,009.80. There is no dispute amongst the parties that Ontario Regulation 118/91 provides that the maximum amount payable to an owner is $100,000, and for the condominium $50,000 times the number of condominium dwelling units in the project. In this case, it would mean 24 units times $50,000 or a total of $1.2 million.

[para234] Clearly the amount $100,000 was exceeded in the cases of plaintiff 0-96 and 0-99 and, therefore, the defendants argue they should not be made to pay any more than $100,000. The Program plaintiffs state that these amounts include the G.S.T. and that the G.S.T. should not be included in the $100,000 limit. Unfortunately, the defendants' written submissions are silent on the question of the G.S.T.

[para235] Over the past two decades the Regulation setting out the maximum limit have been amended from $20,000 to $50,000 to $100,000. The plaintiffs state that all of these amendments are made at a time before the G.S.T. was in existence. Obviously, these amendments were made to correspond with the inflationary increases in the costs of housing over the years. When the last amendment upping the limit to $100,000 was made in October 1989, it is unlikely that the G.S.T. was contemplated because it did not come into effect for another year. It is also not difficult for this Court to conclude that when the G.S.T. was enacted, the legislators did not intend to reduce the upper limit of compensation to these plaintiffs by 7%. In other words, it is unlikely that one year the provincial government would up the limit to $100,000 and the federal government would reduce it by 7% the following year. Given that this legislation is intended to protect the consumer, it would be inconsistent for this Court to interpret the actions of the government to the detriment of the consumer. I agree with the interpretation made by the Program that the limit is exclusive of the G.S.T. Accordingly, I find that the limit of $100,000 imposed by the Regulation does not include the G.S.T.

(c) Payments Made in Excess of the Statutory Limit

[para236] The defendants argue that they should not be liable for any payments by the Program to the plaintiffs that were in excess of the $100,000 statutory limit. Clearly the Act's s. 14 provides payment to the owners out of the guarantee fund subject to such limits that are fixed by the Regulation. The latest Regulation is 118/91 which provides for a maximum of $100,000. In reviewing the summary of the Program's claim set out at page 119 of its written argument, only one plaintiff's home exceeded $100,000 once the G.S.T. had been deducted from the amount set out for foundation replacement costs.

[para237] According to the evidence of Mr. Reid who testified on behalf of the Program, all tenders for the replacement of the foundation exceeded the $100,000 limit. The Program took the sensible approach of proceeding with the work and compensating the owner for the full amount of the cost even though it marginally exceeded the $100,000 limit. Should the Program now be penalized for having acted reasonably towards this plaintiff?

[para238] Obviously if the plaintiff was pursuing this action himself, he would be entitled to full compensation. In fact, many of the Alie and Marcil plaintiffs will have claims exceeding $100,000. I have already discussed the purpose of the legislation, that is the protection of the consumer. Clearly Regulation 118/91 setting the $100,000 limit needs to be updated to correspond with today's new housing prices. I am also convinced that the $100,000 limit was not intended for the protection of a third party tortfeasor, but rather to regularize relationships and disputes between vendors and owners.

[para239] I have already made findings and apportionment of negligence against the defendants Lafarge and Bertrand. Should the defendants benefit from a reasonable ex-gratia payment made by the Program to one of the plaintiffs? There is ample jurisprudence to suggest that such a payment does not accrue to the benefit of the third party tortfeasor. Meyers and The City of Guelph v. Hoffman, [1955] O.R. 965 (H.C.) and Coderre et al. v. Ethier et al. (1978), 19 O.R. (2d) 503 (H.C.). Also, I have to consider that the action by the Program is a consolidation of a number of actions, including the action taken in the plaintiff's own name. He would be entitled to full compensation. Therefore, the defendants should pay the Program any amount over $100,000. Alternatively, the defendant could pay the plaintiff Lalonde (0-96) the amount over $100,000, then the plaintiff would reimburse the Program that amount.

(d) Accommodation Costs and Basement Finishing Costs

[para240] The defendants' object to reimbursing the Program for payments to the plaintiffs for accommodation costs of $71,478.50 and basement finishing costs of $29,452.29. The basis of their objection is s. 13(2) and s. 6(6) of Regulation 892. Section 13(2) of the Regulation provides that the Program's subrogated action shall be for the following items:

- * The amount paid out of the guarantee fund to the homeowner claimant.
- * Legal costs and all costs incurred by the Program in the subrogated action.

[para241] In reviewing the summary of payments at page 119 of the Program's written argument, four plaintiffs received payments in excess of $100,000 when payments of accommodation costs and basement finishing costs were included. Once the G.S.T. is deducted from these payments, only two plaintiffs that is 0-96 and 0-99, exceed $100,000. Accordingly, the defendants argue that such payments could not have been out of the guarantee fund because they are in excess of $100,000.

[para242] The defendants also rely on s. 6(6) of Regulation 892 and it reads as follows:

Liability under subsection (3) or (4) is limited to damage to the home only and liability under subsection (5) is limited to damage to the common elements only and there is no liability for any other damage, direct or indirect.

[para243] The defendants argue that the regulations do not authorize the Program to make any payments for accommodation costs or pay amounts in respect to what they called indirect damages such as basement finishing costs.

[para244] In reviewing the defendants' objection to the payments made by the Program and in interpreting the Statutes and Regulations, it is wise to be reminded that the major purpose of the Statute is to protect the purchasers of new homes. In order to effect the purposes of the Act, a broad and liberal interpretation of its provision is appropriate. (Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Lukenda (1991), 2 O.R. (3d) 675 (C.A.).)

[para245] I have already decided that the other plaintiffs would be entitled to reasonable accommodation costs. The basis of the award is just common sense. How could you possibly lift a house, disconnect the services, take out the old foundation, and replace it without the occupants moving out? In relation to the basement finishing costs, how could you replace the foundation in a finished basement without incurring damages and costs to refinish the basement? In fact, there is an admission on the part of the defendants for the other plaintiffs that reasonable accommodation and basement finishing costs are justified. Why should these plaintiffs be denied reasonable accommodation costs of $50.00 per day or reasonable refinishing costs of their basements? Obviously the Program took the sensible position to make these payments to the plaintiffs while the damage to their homes was being repaired. Should the Program be penalized for having taken a reasonable and compassionate approach towards the plaintiffs? Granted there is no specific regulation permitting payment of accommodation costs. In my opinion, the initiative taken by the Program is consistent with the major purpose of the Act. If expenditure is necessary and reasonable to properly repair the damages to the homes, it follows that the Program be reimbursed by the defendants.

[para246] The reimbursement by the defendants to the Program for payments made for accommodation and basement finishing is also consistent with the principle that gratuitous payments made by a third party would accrue no benefit to the tortfeasor. The jurisprudence on this issue has been referred to above. As cited earlier, only two plaintiffs' payments exceed the $100,000 limit and I would make the same finding and make the same award as I made earlier. Accordingly, the Program will be entitled to be reimbursed a sum of $71,478.50 for accommodation costs and $29,452.29 for basement finishing costs paid to the plaintiffs as set out at page 119 of their submissions.

(ii) Additional Costs Incurred by the Program:

(a) Engineering Costs

[para247] The Program is claiming engineering costs in the amount of $744,364.40 divided as follows: the investigative phase $278,424.81; and the replacement phase $464,939.59. A summary of these engineering costs can be found in Ex. 319. Basically these costs were paid to two firms: Proctor & Redfern and Trow Consulting. The defendants object to the payment of these amounts on the grounds that the Regulations do not provide for the payment of engineering costs, either by way of subrogation or otherwise.

[para248] I have no difficulty in allowing this claim and rejecting the defendants' objection. It would be impossible for the Program to fulfill its mandate in accordance with the Statute and meet its obligation towards the plaintiffs without encountering engineering costs. Once the Program receives complaints from the homeowners, it is obligated to investigate and determine whether the complaints have any validity. How else is this to be accomplished but by hiring engineers to determine if the concrete was defective and to determine if, in fact, there was any major structural defect. I can't perceive any alternative for the Program but to hire engineers to make that determination. Obviously the Program could not just proceed to repair or replace these foundations. It had to determine if the concrete was defective and propose a solution to the problem. Not only were engineering costs necessary to make that determination, but the evidence of these experts was necessary in order to prove the Program's claim in Court.

[para249] As with the issue of accommodation and basement costs, the damages to the homes could not have been repaired without incurring engineering costs. I have already decided that engineering costs were justified for the other plaintiffs, given the nature of the repairs that had to be effected on their homes. Accordingly, I find that the engineering costs associated with the replacement phase are also justified. On the evidence, I am not satisfied that there is any basis for concluding that any of these engineering costs are excessive and, therefore, the Program will be entitled to be reimbursed the full amount of the engineering costs.

(b) Administrative Fees

[para250] The Program is also claiming a 15% administrative fee on all the damages. This fee represents the Program's estimate of its administrative costs and of investigating and processing the claims of the homeowners in this matter. It argues that a 15% administrative fee is standard in the construction industry to cover overhead expenses. The Program has charged this 15% administrative fee in the past and it has received approval of the Courts (see Re Andy Dimatteo Construction Ltd. and Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1994), O.C.R.A.T.D No. 51 (C.R.A.T.) and (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 104 (Div.Ct.). Further, Ontario Regulation 691/94 compels vendors/builders to pay an administrative fee of 15% on any amount that is paid out of the guarantee fund.

[para251] The defendants object to the payment of 15% administrative fee for the following reasons:

* Ontario Regulation 691/94 and the jurisprudence pertaining to the 15% administrative fee applies to vendors and builders, and not to subrogated actions against third parties in accordance with s. 13(2) of Regulation 892.

* The Program's claim for 15% administrative fee is excessive and duplicitous.

* The Program is a non-profit organization and it has failed to prove that it incurred additional administrative costs.

[para252] I agree with the defendants that Regulation 691/94, and the jurisprudence cited by the plaintiff deals mainly with payments made by vendors/builders and not with subrogated actions against third parties. Nevertheless, following the same reasoning that I applied for engineering fees, it would be reasonable to conclude that the Program would have to have encountered administrative fees if it was to process the plaintiffs' claim and repair the damages to their homes. In other words, given the number of claims in this matter, it would be impossible for the Program to fulfill its mandate towards the plaintiffs without encountering administrative expenses. What I have to decide is, has the Program justified and proven that it is entitled to a 15% administrative fee over and above the balance of its claim?

[para253] The Program argues that it is entitled to a 15% administrative fee based on its additional administrative costs in investigating and processing the claims of the homeowners. The evidence before me indicates that the investigation of the problem and the supervision of the construction to correct the problem were performed by the engineers. I have already allowed plaintiffs' claim for engineering fees of $744,364.40. Would it not be reasonable to conclude that the payment of these engineering fees would reduce somewhat the 15% administrative fee for at least investigating these problems? I agree with the defendants that to award the full 15% administrative fee over and above the fees for engineers would represent a considerable duplication. For this reason alone, I would reduce significantly the 15% administrative fee.

[para254] The Program has not called any cogent evidence establishing how it incurred additional costs to process the plaintiffs' claims. One would have thought that it would be simple enough to call evidence to show how the Program had to hire additional staff or to pay their staff overtime, etc.

[para255] The Court can appreciate that in the construction industry a standard 15% administrative fee is justified when you are dealing with people or companies who are in the business of making a profit. The Program is a non-profit organization. When the Program makes a reasonable expenditure in the furtherance of its mandate, such as paying accommodation costs to the plaintiffs or paying engineering fees, it should not be penalized and should be reimbursed. On the other hand, the Program is not entitled to make a profit out of the performance of its statutory function. To allow the Program's claim of a flat 15% on all the expenditures of the Program in this matter would be giving the Program double recovery and would not be fair to the defendants. Unfortunately, I also am not satisfied that the Program has proven its claim and has encountered additional expenditures for administrative fees to process the plaintiffs' claims. Accordingly, the Program's claim for administrative fee is dismissed.

(iii) Program's Claim and Settlement with the Contractors

[para256] The Program also had a claim against the general contractor who built the plaintiffs' homes and the subcontractors hired by the vendors/builders to pour the foundation of the Program's homes. During the course of the trial, the Program reached a settlement with all of the forming contractors and, therefore, does not seek judgment against them. Further, as mentioned earlier, settlement was arrived at with a number of defendant contractors as set out at page 131 of the written argument of the Program. The defendants Bertrand and Lafarge are entitled to a credit representing the total amount of $58,817.86. The Program will also be entitled to judgment in contract against these vendors/builders set out in paragraph 2, 3 and 4 of page 136 of the Program's written argument.

(iv) Program Action: PCC 5 Action and the Stoesz Action

[para257] Given my rulings earlier about the Program pursuing their action in their own name, it is not necessary to deal with these two actions.

4. Independent Plaintiffs

(i) Houle/Assaly (I-111)

[para258] This plaintiff is not asking for total replacement of the foundation. Repairs were conducted on the concrete in the summer of 1993. The costs incurred were $5,200 plus engineering fees of $1,500 for a total of $6,700. Although there is no claim for total replacement of the foundation, this plaintiff makes a claim for loss of capital value in the amount of $60,000. This amount represents 20% of $300,000 which is apparently the market value of the home. Unfortunately, no evidence was presented to the Court in support of this claim. Accordingly, the claim by the plaintiff for $60,000 loss of capital value has to be dismissed. The plaintiff will, therefore, be entitled to the sum of $6,700.

(ii) Kilbride (I-112); Wever (I-114); Wilson (I-115)

[para259] The defendants admit that the foundations on the three plaintiffs' homes have to be replaced. The plaintiffs Kilbride and Wever accept the defendants' expert, B&C, as a cost estimate for replacing their foundations. The plaintiff Wilson relies on the cost estimate as prepared by Mr. Naoum who testified for the Alie and Duval plaintiffs. My comments pertaining to the evidence of the experts, B&C and Naoum, in the section dealing with the Alie and Duval plaintiffs apply to these plaintiffs. Over and above the amounts set out in the B&C estimate to replace the foundation, my findings and award to the Alie and Duval plaintiffs pertaining to footings, accommodation, engineering fees, etc. will apply to these three plaintiffs.

[para260] Finally, the defendants are entitled to a credit for any settlement funds received from the contractors, and this shall be apportioned between the plaintiffs accordingly.

(iii) Lalonde Furniture Store (I-113)

[para261] The amount of damages for this plaintiff has been agreed upon between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and is set out in Ex. 24.

5. Damages for Hardship and Inconvenience

[para262] Most of the plaintiffs (except the Program plaintiffs) have made a claim for hardship and inconvenience. The Court heard from a large number of plaintiffs about the hardship and inconvenience resulting from the deficient concrete. Some of the plaintiffs' evidence under this heading was summarized in exhibits and in medical reports. The Alie and Duval plaintiffs have set out a list of the homeowners' complaints at pages 110, 111 and 112 of their written submissions. I have already commented earlier in my judgment about the hardship and inconvenience caused to the plaintiffs by the deteriorating concrete. In fact, there is an admission by the defendants that the plaintiffs are entitled to an award of damages for hardship and inconvenience. I will, therefore, be making an award for hardship and inconvenience.

[para263] What is in dispute between the parties is whether such damages should be awarded on a per plaintiff or per home basis; what is the proper quantum of damages under this heading; and finally, whether the plaintiffs who filed medical reports are entitled to an increased award under this heading.

[para264] The plaintiffs have argued that the Court should award damages for hardship and inconvenience to individual plaintiffs in a range of $10,000 to $20,000, with an additional amount of $10,000 for those plaintiffs who have filed medical reports. Given the average number of plaintiffs per house, it would mean the Court would be awarding something in the range of $20,000 to $40,000 per home. While I have the utmost sympathy for all of the plaintiffs caught in this predicament, I have no difficulty in concluding that the amounts suggested by the plaintiffs are somewhat excessive.

[para265] I am of the view that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to make an equitable award under this heading to individual plaintiffs. The level of hardship and inconvenience is not uniform to each plaintiff. Some plaintiffs have testified, others have not. Some plaintiffs have medical reports, others have not. For some plaintiffs the problem was far more serious and for much longer than others. I have also heard evidence of problems encountered by family members who are not plaintiffs, i.e. children. In other words, the manner in which the evidence was presented to the Court, and even argued, makes the Court's task of making individual awards under this heading to each plaintiff next to impossible. Accordingly, I will be making an award for hardship and inconvenience to individuals on a per house basis. Obviously, any homes owned by corporate defendants are not entitled to an award under this heading.

[para266] Counsel for the plaintiffs have argued that those plaintiffs who have filed medical reports should receive an increased award of $10,000 for hardship and inconvenience. Those plaintiffs are listed at page 113 of the written submissions of Alie and Duval plaintiffs. Originally, these plaintiffs had made a claim for personal injuries caused by the defective concrete. During the trial, these claims were dropped and it was suggested the evidence contained in the medical report be used in those plaintiffs' claims for hardship and inconvenience. I have reviewed the medical reports, and I find it very difficult to see the causal connection between the plaintiffs' condition and the deteriorating concrete. Undoubtedly, the condition of their basement did not help their medical condition, but to conclude that it was the cause of their aggravated medical condition meriting an increased award is not supported by the evidence found within the medical reports. I would conclude, therefore, that these plaintiffs, with the exception of the plaintiff Jacques Marcil who has maintained his claim for personal injury, should be treated the same as the other plaintiffs.

[para267] A review of the jurisprudence indicates that awards for damages for hardship and inconvenience have been relatively modest. One factor may be that most decisions cited by counsel for the parties date back to the early 1980's. Unfortunately, there is also a wide gap in the range suggested by the parties. The plaintiffs are suggesting an award of $20,000 to $40,000 per home, while the defendants are suggesting $2,000 to $3,000. I have already commented that the plaintiffs' range of damages is somewhat excessive, and I have also no difficulty in concluding that the defendants' range is much too conservative.

[para268] Two of the more important factors considered by the Courts in assessing damages under this heading are the nature of the hardship and the length of time it existed. I have already determined that, in this case, the inconvenience and the hardship were real and substantial. The problems encountered here by the plaintiffs were not just a minor irritant. They basically have been prevented, over these many years, from fully enjoying their homes. For most, this problem has been ongoing for over 10 years. Certainly after 1992, when experts reported their findings and the plaintiffs started their action, there should have been no doubt in the defendants' minds that the plaintiffs had a major structural defect. A few plaintiffs have corrected the problem and replaced the foundations on their homes. Unfortunately, for most plaintiffs, the hardship and inconvenience may well continue for a number of years.

[para269] In considering all of these factors and having in mind the number of occupants per home, the most equitable way of making an award for hardship and inconvenience would be on a yearly basis. I would, therefore, award the sum of $7,000 per home for the period 1986-1993 and, thereafter, the sum of $1,000 per year per home to continue until such time as the foundation is replaced or the problem is corrected.

6. Personal Injury Claim for Jacques Marcil (M-72)

[para270] Considering what all of these plaintiffs have had to endure over the last ten years, it is indeed surprising that this is the only claim made for personal injuries over and above the claims advanced for inconvenience and hardship. Mr. Marcil's claim is for personal injury for mental distress on the basis that the defective foundation and resulting litigation was the cause of Mr. Marcil's psychiatric problems. The claim is for general damages in the amount of $100,000 and special damages for lost income for the years 1995 to 1997 of approximately $35,000.

[para271] Unfortunately, for Mr. Marcil, the evidence and subsequent written submissions in support of such a substantial claim is hopelessly lacking. For this Court to make an award for general and special damages in the magnitude that is being requested, I would have to find that the defective foundation was the only reason for Mr. Marcil's problems. The evidence certainly does not support such a conclusion. The plaintiff Jacques Marcil testified, as did Dr. Luc Bourgon, Mr. Marcil's treating psychiatrist during the years 1995 to 1997. I have reviewed the medical records and reports from the Ottawa General Hospital and from Dr. Bourgon found at Ex. 226. I have also reviewed Ex. 216 through to Ex. 220. Dr. Lionel Béliveau, a psychiatrist retained by one of the insurers for the defendant Bertrand, also testified. He examined Mr. Marcil in June 1997 and prepared a medical report dated July 11th, 1997 found at Ex. 478A.

[para272] The above medical evidence and Mr. Marcil's history of prior treatment evolves to a point where Dr. Bourgon in 1997 diagnosed Mr. Marcil's problem as "bi-polar affective disorder, manic phase". Dr. Béliveau agrees with this diagnosis. According to the experts, such an illness is determined by bio-chemical factors from endocrinal or genetic origin. Both experts agree that different depressive or manic episodes of bi-polar disorder can be triggered by psychosocial factors. The plaintiff Marcil denied having any such episodes prior to 1995, but unfortunately Mr. Marcil's medical history or medical records were not before the Court.

[para273] I've attempted to find the causal connection between the faulty foundation and Mr. Marcil's condition from the evidence and to determine if it was the psychosocial factor which triggered Mr. Marcil's episode from 1995 to 1997. Unfortunately for Mr. Marcil, there were a number of other stress factors going on in his life such as:

- * His wife losing her job and going from a two-income family to one income
- * The separation from his wife and children
- * Problems related to his work and possible loss of his job

[para274] There is no doubt that the defective foundation and resulting litigation, including the financial problems related to the law suit, contributed to his abuse and his dependence on alcohol, and may have provoked the compression episodes of his bi-polar disorder. Both experts are in agreement with this conclusion. I also have to consider that Mr. Marcil started experiencing problems with his foundation around 1989, and according to his evidence his psychiatric problems did not begin until 1995. Further, even after his foundation was replaced in 1996 and he had received some form of monetary compensation from an insurer he had further psychiatric problems in 1997.

[para275] In reviewing all of the evidence, therefore, and making the causal connection between the defective foundation and Mr. Marcil's psychiatric problems, I can only conclude that the defective foundation was one of a number of stress factors that could have triggered his psychiatric problem. Relating to the defendant's responsibility, I would assess the liability for Mr. Marcil's personal injuries at 20%. In assessing his general damages, the only evidence of long term prognosis for Mr. Marcil is Dr. Bourgon's medical report dated January 17th, 1997. He indicates that Mr. Marcil should be able to go through a successful rehabilitation program and should be able to eventually function reliably and work on a full-time basis. Certainly it would appear from the evidence of both experts that Mr. Marcil's condition can be maintained and controlled with proper medication. I would assess his general damages at $40,000. As indicated earlier, the evidence indicates that the plaintiff's special damages are in the range of approximately $35,000. Accordingly, the defendants' responsibility is 20% of the plaintiff's general and special damages over and above what the plaintiff would be entitled to for hardship and inconvenience.

7. Punitive Damages

[para276] All of the plaintiffs have made a claim for punitive damages against the defendant Lafarge. The Marcil plaintiffs have also made a claim for punitive damages against the defendant Bertrand. Originally, only the Marcil plaintiffs had made a claim for punitive damages. During the course of the trial, after the defendant Lafarge was ordered to disclose communication between it and its ready-mix clients in southern Ontario, the other plaintiffs made application to amend their pleadings to allow a claim for punitive damages. Given the provision of the Rules of Practice pertaining to amendments to pleadings, the application by these plaintiffs to amend their pleadings was allowed.

[para277] The evidence which forms the basis for their punitive damage claim is enumerated at page 140 on of the Plaintiffs' Written Submissions. This evidence is again reviewed in the Plaintiffs' Reply Submission pages 67 to 78. I have reviewed most of this evidence in my discussions about the negligence of the defendant Lafarge. Basically, the plaintiffs argue that Lafarge's failure to perform proper testing, both before and during the introduction of FA, justifies an award for punitive damages. Further, Lafarge's conduct throughout the litigation, be it at discovery or during the trial, and especially their failure to provide relevant information to the other parties, are also reasons for a punitive damage award.

[para278] The leading case on punitive damages is the Supreme Court of Canada decision of Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130. Cory J. discusses some of the general principals of punitive damages one of which is that punitive damages are awarded, not to compensate the plaintiff, but to punish the defendant and to deter the defendant and others from acting in an outrageous or reprehensible manner. At page 1208 of his decision, he states:

Punitive damages may be awarded in situations where the defendant's misconduct is so malicious, oppressive and high-handed that it offends the Court's sense of decency. Punitive damages bear no relation to what the plaintiff should receive by way of compensation. Their aim is not to compensate the plaintiff, but rather to punish the defendant. It is the means by which the jury or judge expresses its outrage at the egregious conduct of the defendant. There are in the nature of a fine which is meant to act as a deterrent to the defendant and to others from acting in this manner. It is important to emphasize that punitive damages should only be awarded in those circumstances where the combined award of general and aggravated damages would be insufficient to achieve the goal of punishment and deterrence.

[para279] Obviously, before an award for punitive damages is made, close review of the facts and circumstances of each case has to be made when the above principles are applied. In the Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, supra, the Supreme Court had no difficulty in concluding that the jury was fully justified in awarding punitive damages against the defendant Church of Scientology for its outrageous conduct towards the plaintiff Hill. In a recent decision of February 1999, the Court of Appeal in Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co. (1999), 42 O.R. (3d) 641 also felt the jury was justified in awarding punitive damages for the defendant's reprehensible conduct. However, it reduced the punitive damage award from $1 million dollars to $100,000. The Court of Appeal also discussed in that decision a number of other more modest punitive damage awards against insurance companies. Obviously, the Courts take the position that, in contracts of insurance between the insurer and its insured conduct is one of utmost good faith. Therefore, when the insurer, such as Pilot Insurance, denies the plaintiff's claim in the face of its own investigation and evidence, then it is acting in bad faith and the Courts have no hesitation in punishing such conduct. On the other hand, the Court refused to award punitive damages for a case of wrongful dismissal in Vorvis v. The Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085. In the case of Murano et al. v. The Bank of Montreal et al. (1998), 41 O.R. (3d) 222, the Court of Appeal agreed with the trial judge who refused to make a punitive damage award. In that case, the Bank had wrongfully seized the debtor's property without giving reasonable notice and, further, disclosed to third parties confidential information involving the debtor. It is to be noted in that case that the plaintiffs were awarded a judgment in excess of $4 million dollars and solicitor/client cost of close to one half million dollars.

[para280] Does the evidence before me support the plaintiffs' claim that the defendants' conduct was malicious, oppressive and high-handed? I have no difficulty in concluding that there is no such evidence against the defendant Bertrand. Accordingly, the punitive damage claim by the Marcil plaintiffs against Bertrand will be dismissed.

[para281] The plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages against the defendant Lafarge relies on far more extensive evidence that I have already reviewed in my findings on negligence. The question is, does it reach the level where it can be categorized as being malicious, oppressive and high-handed, that it offends the Court's sense of decency? Should the defendant Lafarge be punished over and above the award of damages and costs so as to deter this defendant or others from acting in a like manner? It is within this context that the evidence against Lafarge must be analyzed.

[para282] When Lafarge started to market Type C FA, it was not marketing an inherently bad product. When it convinced Bertrand to use FA in its concrete, it did not deliberately set out to undermine the quality of that product. It was negligent for reasons already given, but can its conduct be categorized as malicious and high-handed? I have to consider that FA was used in concrete for many years all over the world without problems. Lafarge did some testing and used Type C FA in concrete in southern Ontario without the widespread problems experienced here. Given its previous experience with FA, including its own testing, it was not altogether predictable that inserting FA in Bertrand mix would result in such bad concrete. In other words, interpreting the evidence at its very worst hardly supports the conclusion that Lafarge set out to market a bad product. While I have already expressed some strong concerns about Lafarge's conduct, I have some difficulty in concluding that it reaches the level as to be considered egregious. My findings in negligence will result in Lafarge having to pay damages involving millions of dollars. Certainly this should act as a strong deterrent to this defendant and others.

[para283] Lafarge's relationship with the plaintiffs could not be put in the same category as the line of cases dealing with insurance contracts. In those cases, the insured was in a position of power over the insured that was in a vulnerable position, entirely dependent on the insurer when the loss occurred. For these reasons, in every insurance contract, an insurer has an implied obligation to deal with the claims of its insured in good faith. (See Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., supra. I have already found that Lafarge breached its duty towards the consumer, but I could not conclude that there is a bad faith claim as exists in insurance contracts.

[para284] The plaintiffs also argue that Lafarge's conduct during the course of the litigation is further evidence of contempt by Lafarge for the litigation process and the rights of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs cite the non-disclosure by Lafarge during the discovery process of evidence of complaints by ready-mix clients about their concrete. There is no doubt that Lafarge could have been more forthcoming and such evidence should have been disclosed to the other parties during the discovery process. Nevertheless, such evidence did not reveal problems nearly as serious or widespread as experienced in eastern Ontario. Generally speaking, conduct by a litigant such as non-disclosure is not sufficient reason to award punitive damages. There are other ways, such as costs, to censure such conduct.

[para285] When Lafarge's conduct is compared to that of the defendants in cases like Hill v. Church of Scientology, supra, and Whiten v. Pilot Insurance, supra, it is obvious that it does not reach the level of egregious conduct achieved by those defendants. I must, therefore, reluctantly dismiss the plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages.

VIII. PRE-JUDGMENT INTEREST

[para286] I will require some clarification on the part of the plaintiffs on the question of pre-judgment interest. All of the plaintiffs have claimed pre-judgment interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act. Unfortunately, in their submissions they appear to be suggesting an award different from what is claimed. The Marcil plaintiffs' written submissions are silent on the question of pre-judgment interest. The Alie and Duval plaintiffs are claiming pre-judgment interest on replacement cost starting December 1st, 1997, which obviously is not in accordance with their claim. Has there been some agreement with the defendants on the question of interest for replacement costs? These same plaintiffs claim interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act for the damages for hardship and inconvenience. The Program plaintiffs are claiming pre-judgment interest from the date when their experts submitted their reports in August 1992. Considering that this plaintiff is a non-profit entity, should it be awarded pre-judgment interest on monies that have not yet been expended to repair the plaintiffs' foundations? I appreciate there have been written submissions by the parties on some of these issues, but I will require clarification if I am to apply a consistent remedy to all plaintiffs.

IX. COSTS

[para287] I'll be asking the parties to make brief written submissions on the question of cost. Some of the issues that should be addressed by the parties are as follows:

- * Are the plaintiffs entitled to cost on a party party or on a solicitor client scale?
- * Should I fix the costs or should the matter of amount be determined by either assessment officer or the Master? Some of the factors to be considered on this issue are the number of parties and the length of the proceedings.
- * Should any of the parties be penalized on costs as a result of their conduct, either during the discovery process or the trial?

X. THE THIRD AND SUBSEQUENT PARTY ACTIONS: THE ACTIONS BETWEEN THE DEFENDANTS AND THEIR INSURERS

1. An Overview

[para288] Having dealt with the defendants' liability and the plaintiffs' entitlement to damages, I now have to consider whether the defendants are entitled to be indemnified by their insurers. The defendant Bertrand had started a third party action against five insurance companies with whom they had insurance contracts during the period 1986 to 1992. The defendant Lafarge sued some 18 insurance companies with whom they had insurance contracts for the same period. Lafarge is now proceeding against only 16 of these insurers. As can be expected, rights and obligation of the respective parties are generally found within the provisions of the particular policies. To quote Madam Justice McLachlin in Reid Crowther and Partners Limited v. Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 252 at page 268-269:

In each case the Courts must examine the provisions of the particular policy at issue (and surrounding circumstances) to determine if the events in question fall within the terms of coverage of that particular policy. This is not to say that there are no principles governing this type of analysis. Far from it. In each case, the Courts must interpret the provisions of policy at issue in light of general principles of interpretation of insurance policies, including, but not limited to:

1. the contra proferentum rule
2. the principle that coverage provision should be construed broadly and exclusion clauses narrowly and,
3. the desirability, at least where the policy is ambiguous, of giving effect to the reasonable expectation of the parties.

[para289] I am indebted to all counsel involved who have thoroughly canvassed all issues and authorities in this area. They have submitted thousands of pages of jurisprudence that emphasizes once again that insurance litigation is alive and well, both in Canada and in the United States. Counsel for the Royal Insurance quoted a passage from a decision of Judge Warriner in Stone and Webster Engineering Corp. v. American Motorists Insurance Co., 458 F. Supp. 792 (E.D. Virginia 1978) who likened the defendants formidable series of obstacles in attempting to fix liability on the insurer to the voyage of Odysseus, the great navigator of antiquity, who had to overcome all sorts of terrible hazards to make it back home to Ithaca. I feel like Odysseus. Certainly the analogy applies to the trial judge. I will have to navigate through all of the written submissions of the parties, adjudicate on all the issues before finally arriving at the end of this judgment.

[para290] Obviously, Courts in different jurisdictions have interpreted insurance policies differently. Generally, Courts in Canada have interpreted comprehensive general liability (C.G.L.) policies more narrowly than in the United States. Also, in the United States, interpretation of such policies has not always been consistent. Differing interpretations very often are not based on different facts. The challenge for this Court will be to interpret these insurance contracts using the guidance of the jurisprudence to arrive at a "common sense" result. Many of the issues involving Bertrand and their insurers are similar to that of Lafarge and their insurers. Nevertheless, because there are some issues that are different, I will deal with both defendants separately.

2. Bertrand and their Insurers

A. The Facts

[para291] After Bertrand was sued for damages by the plaintiff, it started third party proceeding against its C.G.L. insurers for indemnification. Bertrand's action was against five different insurers who provided coverage both as primary and umbrella insurance. The companies involved were Canadian General, Guardian, General Accident, Chubb and Royal Insurance. Bertrand and its insurers filed an agreed statement of fact that has been marked as Ex. 564A. The relevant insurance policies between Bertrand and its insurers are to be found at Ex. 564B.

B. Insurance Limits and the Deductible

DATE	1986	1987	1988	1989
PRIMARY	FIDELITY General	USF&G	USF&G	USF&G	(Canadian General)	(Canadian General)	(Canadian General)	(Canadian General)	General	General
COVERAGE	$1 million	$1 million	$1 million	$1 million
DEDUCTIBLE	$1,000 per occurrence	$1,000 per occurrence	$1,000 per occurrence	$1,000 per occurrence
UMBRELLA	Guardian	General	Chubb	Chubb	Accident	COVER	$5 million	$4 million	$4 million	$4 million
DEDUCTIBLE	Retained	Retained	Retained	Retained	* Limit	Limit	Limit	Limit	$10,000	$10,000 $0 $0
TOTAL	$6 million	$5 million	$5 million	$5 million	AVAILABLE COVERAGE LIMITS
DATE	1990	1991	1992
PRIMARY	Royal	Royal	Royal
COVERAGE	$1 million	$1 million	$1 million
DEDUCTIBLE	$1,000 per occurrence	$1,000 per occurrence	Maximum	occurrence	occurrence	$2,000	per	claim
UMBRELLA	Royal	Royal	Royal
COVERAGE	$4 million	$4 million	$4 million
DEDUCTIBLE	Retained	Retained	Retained	* Limit	Limit	Limit	$10,000	$10,000	$10,000
TOTAL	$5 million	$5 million	$5 million	AVAILABLE COVERAGE LIMITS

* The Retained Limit in the umbrella policies only becomes applicable if there is no underlying insurance, at which point the insured effectively becomes self-insured for the retained limit.

[para293] Bertrand is seeking to be indemnified by its insurers for all damages awarded to the plaintiffs which are found to be Bertrand's responsibility except for the actual costs of the concrete used to replace the deteriorating foundations. Bertrand is also seeking indemnification from its insurers for any interest on any judgment and costs. The issue as to the obligation of the insurers to defend Bertrand and defence costs have been resolved between the parties. There is also an agreement between Bertrand and its insurers that no submissions will be made regarding coverage relating to specific heads of damages claimed by the plaintiff until the judgment is issued.

C. The Issues

[para294] The issues that I have to decide can be summarized as follows:

- (i) What is the scope of indemnification of these policies? Is the cost of replacing the foundation covered?
- (ii) Do the exclusionary clauses in the various policies withdraw the claims from coverage?
- (iii) In which coverage period did the occurrence take place? Which trigger theory applies?
- (iv) Do the insurers have other valid defences such as misrepresentation, non-disclosure, and late reporting?
- (v) What insurance limits are available and what deductible is Bertrand obligated to pay?
- (vi) Other Issues

(i) What is the scope of indemnification of these policies? Is the cost of replacing the foundation covered?

[para295] In insurance law, the interpretation of policies involves a two step process. It is for the insured to demonstrate the claim advanced comes within the insuring agreement. If the insured has satisfied the burden in the first step, then the onus is on the insurer to establish that a claim that would otherwise be covered is excluded by some term in the policy.

[para296] The wording of the various C.G.L. policies are similar and are summarized in Bertrand's written submissions at Tab 1. Basically, all of these policies have what is called an "occurrence property damage" endorsement. In such endorsement, the insurer undertakes to pay on behalf of the insured all sums, which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay for damages as a result of an occurrence. Obviously, the interpretation of the words "property damage" and "occurrence" will be of primary importance to determine coverage.

[para297] Before proceeding with the interpretation of the various endorsements and exclusions in the policies, it is important to appreciate the accepted purpose of a C.G.L. policy. It is a well established principle of Canadian insurance law that comprehensive general liability policies are intended to protect the insured from liability for injury or damage to persons or property of others; they are not intended to pay for costs associated with replacing the insured's defective work and products, which are purely economic losses. (See Privest Properties Limited v. Foundation Co. of Canada (1992), 6 C.C.L.I. (2d) 23 (B.C.S.C.) at page 7; Carwald Concrete v. General Security Insurance Co. of Canada (1986), 17 C.C.L.I. 241 (Alta.C.A.); Carleton Iron Works Ltd. v. Ellis Don Construction Ltd. et al., [1996] O.J. No. 2427, [1996] I.L.R. 13373 (Ont.Gen.Div.). In other words, C.G.L. policies are not performance bonds. They will not pay the insured to remove and replace its own faulty work of deficient product. They are intended to indemnify the insured in a situation where the deficient product causes damages to a third party's property. The principle appears to be straightforward enough. Unfortunately, its application by Courts in various jurisdictions can be somewhat confusing.

(a) Property Damage

[para298] The definition of property damage is very similar in all of these insurance policies. Basically, the insuring agreements are intended to respond to any injury to or destruction of real or tangible personal property. Examples of such property damage are the environmental clean up costs after oil spilled from a storage tank (see Hildon Hotel 1963 Ltd. v. Dominion Insurance Corporation Ltd. (1968), 66 W.W.R. 289 (B.C.S.C.)); the cleaning up of ground water which had been polluted by a leak of chemicals from a sawmill operation (see Greenwood Forest Products Ltd. v. United States Fire Insurance Co., 133 D.L.R. (3d) 486, [1982] I.L.R. 5836 (B.C.S.C.); or the replacement of electrical ducting, plumbing and grounding wire which had been rendered useless when it was embedded in faulty concrete (Carwall Concrete and Gravel Co. v. General Security Insurance of Canada (1986), 17 C.C.L.I. 241 (Alta.C.A.)).

[para299] A review of the jurisprudence leads this Court to conclude that the process of determining if the property damage is covered by the policies is not simple and straightforward. It involves a step by step process taking into consideration the various issues raised by counsel for the insured and the insurers.

[para300] The first matter I have to consider is the cause of the defective concrete. Earlier in my judgment, I have made a finding that the insertion of FA in the concrete mix resulted in a chemical reaction that was the main cause for the deteriorating concrete. If my finding had been different and I had concluded that the concrete could not resist freeze-thaw because Bertrand had used an inferior mix such as too much water or poor quality sand, then my conclusion in interpreting the words "property" or "occurrence" could well differ from that made based on my findings.

[para301] The insurers argue here that the replacement of the defective foundation is not covered by their C.G.L. policies because all the damages and costs incurred are to replace Bertrand's faulty concrete. In other words, the policies do not cover the insured's own work product or workmanship, and the costs associated with replacing the foundation are basically an economic loss.

[para302] The insured's position is that Bertrand supplied defective liquid concrete that was made into residential foundation by the owners or contractors. They argue that the concrete was incorporated into a foundation, be it as walls or footings or cement floors, etc. In other words, they are saying the concrete foundation is more than just Bertrand's product and involves the placing and shaping of the concrete along with forms containing tie rods, sometimes reinforcing steel, anchor bolts, etc. Also incorporated in the foundation are the outside parging, and very often finished basements on the inside.

[para303] A brief review of some of the leading cases will help illustrate the type of property damage that is and is not covered by the C.G.L. policies. In the Privest Properties case, the Court denied coverage for the cost of repair and replacement of spray fireproofing material which was found to contain asbestos. The Court concluded that there was no personal injury or damage to other property and therefore all that was involved was the cost of repairing or replacing the defective work, which is considered to be pure economic loss.

[para304] Further illustration of this principle can be found in the case of Bird Construction Co. v. Allstate Insurance of Canada (1996), 36 C.C.L.I. (2d) 29 (Man.C.A.). In that case, the defective property was masonry cladding which detached from a multi-storey building and fell several floors to the ground below. The Court rejected the theory that this defect to that part of the building caused damage to the rest of the building. I had to deal with similar facts in Carleton Iron Works Ltd. v. Ellis Don Construction Ltd., supra. In that case, a piece of the outside cladding of the building fell and damaged motor vehicles below. A further investigation revealed that the welding on the metal brackets supporting the cladding was defective and had to be replaced. The insured incurred considerable expense to remove and reinstall the remaining cladding in order to effect the repairs to the faulty welding, and sought indemnification from its insurers for these expenses. I rejected the insured counsel's argument that there was damage to the building as a result of the problems with the exterior cladding. I found that this did not constitute damage to property of others like the damage to the motor vehicles caused by the falling cladding. I concluded that there was no coverage when what is claimed basically are the costs associated with repairing or replacing the insureds' defective work. The defectively installed exterior cladding did not impair the structural integrity of the building itself. The building could be used by its occupants for its intended purposes.

[para305] Let's review briefly a number of decisions where the Courts have found that damage to property was covered by the C.G.L. policies. One of the decisions which has been relied on by a number of subsequent cases is Attorney General of Ontario v. Fatehi, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 536. In that case, a claim was made for cleaning and repairing a highway that had been made impassible as a result of debris and gasoline strewn along the roadway and caused by the negligence of the respondent. The issue was whether there had been damage to property or simply pure economic loss. Estey J. writing for the majority stated at 5441 as follows:

It is said by the respondent, and by the majority below, that the appellant must fail as its loss was pure economic loss, thus far unrecoverable at law. Whether that is so depends upon a question of both fact and law. On the facts as agreed, the road was blocked by the negligent actions of the respondent. It ceased to be a road in the sense of traffic-carrying facility.

The appellant as owner of the road has thereby suffered damage to its property.

[para306] In Gulf Plastics Ltd. v. Cornhill Insurance Co. Ltd., [1990] B.C.J. No. 1541, [1990] I.L.R. 12644 (B.C.S.C.), aff'd (1991), 3 C.C.L.I. (2d) 203 (B.C.C.A.), the Court held there was property damage and insurance coverage where an ingredient used to manufacture film in plastic bags for the frozen food industry was defective, the plastic film was rendered useless for the purpose for which it was intended. The insured customer, as owner of the film supplied by the insured, suffered damage to its property because the film could not fulfill its intended purpose.

[para307] Another helpful precedent is the case of Carwald Concrete Gravel and Concrete Ltd. v. General Security Insurance Co. of Canada, supra. This case involved faulty concrete in the construction of a gas processing plant. The plant was to be constructed on a concrete pad. The plaintiff Carwald, a ready-mix contractor, supplied the concrete that was poured over electrical ducting, grounding wire and plumbing, which was embedded in the concrete. The concrete that was placed did not meet contractual specifications, due to a defect in the cement supplied by the cement supplier. The entire pad underlying the area including all of the embedded material was removed. The Court of Appeal found that the pouring of defective concrete made the embedded material useless. This constituted physical injury to tangible property. The Court found that the concrete supplier could not recover from its insurer for the defective concrete itself. What it could recover was all reasonable costs of placing its customer in the position in which it was before the defective concrete was poured.

[para308] Whether there is or is not coverage will depend on the facts of each case. Clearly if the defective product becomes part of the whole of a third parties product, or is incorporated in a third parties product and can't be removed or repaired without either rendering the third parties product useless or damaging it, the Courts have concluded that that is property damage and coverage will follow.

[para309] In following the sequences of events here, insertion of Lafarge's faulty FA into Bertrand's concrete would result in property damage suffered by a third party, that is Bertrand. Obviously, the problem cannot be resolved by attempting to remove the FA from Bertrand's concrete. I would have no difficulty, therefore, in concluding there had been property damage resulting in coverage.

[para310] Proceeding to the next step, has Bertrand's faulty concrete been incorporated or become part of the plaintiffs' foundation basically rendering the plaintiffs' property useless? The insurers seem to be suggesting that the concrete foundation is comprised of only Bertrand concrete, therefore, the foundations can be replaced and the costs associated with replacing the foundations is only an economic loss. I have some difficulty in following that reasoning. The evidence before me clearly suggests that the foundations were constructed by the forming contractors. They erected the forms, placed the concrete and were in charge of the consolidation and curing of the concrete. In some of these foundations there were tie rods, reinforcing steel and in most cases anchor bolts imbedded in the concrete. The plaintiffs' homes were then built and anchored to the foundation. Parging was placed by another subcontractor on the outside of the concrete foundations. On the inside, most of the plaintiffs had finished basements. How can Bertrand possibly remedy the problem of faulty concrete without destroying the foundation and most other third-party property attached to the foundation.

[para311] This situation is much different than the cases cited dealing either with insulation containing asbestos or the exterior cladding of a building. The structural integrity of the buildings in those cases was never threatened. In this case, the faulty concrete became incorporated in the foundation and the faulty foundation was incorporated into the home and the very structural integrity of these houses is threatened. If the foundations are not replaced they will collapse. That is not the case with faulty exterior cladding.

[para312] Bertrand concedes that it cannot be compensated from its insurers for replacing the defective concrete, but the balance of the damages claimed by the plaintiffs would be what is referred to in these policies as third party products. Given the evidence before me, I have no difficulty in concluding that property damage as defined in the policies includes most of the property damage claimed by the plaintiffs.

(b) Occurrence

[para313] The next matter that the Court has to determine on the issue of coverage is whether the property damage took place as a result of an "occurrence"? In the various insurance policies there are a few nuances in the definition of the word "occurrence". Generally, occurrence means "an accident including continuous or repeated exposures to conditions neither expected nor intended by the insured". The insurers have suggested that the faulty concrete was not accidental because it resulted from the negligence of the defendants. A number of cases have been cited in support of that proposition among others, Carleton Iron Works, supra; Kitchener Silo Inc. v. Cigna Insurance of Canada, [1991] O.J. No. 280, [1991] I.L.R. 12764 (Ont.Gen.Div.); or Erie Concrete Products Ltd. v. Canadian General Insurance, [1969] 2 O.R. 372 (H.C.). It is suggested by the insurers that when a product supplied simply fails to function properly, it is not an accident or an occurrence. One does not have to do any in depth research of insurance law to conclude that in most cases where an accident or occurrence takes place there is usually negligence on the part of somebody. What usually takes it out of the realm of accident or occurrence is when there is a finding of intent to cause that loss or a realization and assumption of the risk of that loss. Canadian Indemnity Co. v. Walkem Machinery and Equipment Ltd., [1976] 1 S.C.R. 309.

[para314] A reading of the cases cited by the parties can be an exercise in confusion and frustration. The factual differences in those cases leading to different conclusions as to whether in fact there had been an occurrence or an accident are very often very subtle, and in fact sometimes non-existent. I can appreciate the frustration of counsel. Strong precedents can be found no matter what side of the issues the parties are. On the facts here, I do not think there can be any doubt that what took place was an occurrence within the meaning of the policy. The product that was inserted into Bertrand's concrete was not inherently bad. I have already made a finding that Lafarge and Bertrand were both negligent, but I could hardly conclude that they deliberately sold an inferior product to the plaintiffs. The damage that took place to the plaintiffs' foundations was certainly not expected or intended by the defendants. My earlier findings on the evidence leads me to conclude that the damage caused to the plaintiffs' property was the result of an occurrence within the meaning of the policies.

(c) What is the effect of Bertrand not having a "rip and tear" endorsement in their insurance policies?

[para315] The parties in their agreed statement of fact (Ex. 564A) set out the facts re rip and tear endorsement in paragraphs 14 and 15. All of the insurers take the position that all of the policies would have granted Bertrand coverage to respond to the plaintiffs' damages had there been a rip and tear endorsement. They go on to argue that Bertrand's policies not having this endorsement do not then afford Bertrand coverage for the plaintiffs' damages. It is further acknowledged in the agreed facts that there is no standard rip and tear endorsement and the scope of any such endorsement required is dependent on the coverage provided in the policy, absent such endorsement.

[para316] Given the limited facts on this issue, the relevancy of the insurers' argument is somewhat tenuous. To accept the insurers' argument, I would have to conclude that the policies without the rip and tear endorsement do not afford Bertrand coverage. Further, there is no standard rip and tear endorsement and I have no idea what type of endorsement was being offered to Bertrand back in 1984, and whether such endorsement would have extended Bertrand's coverage. Would a rip and tear endorsement in the policies be affected by the exclusionary clauses? To accept the insurers' proposition the Court would have to enter the realm of speculation. The issue of coverage has to be decided on the agreement between the parties and the evidence before the Court. I, therefore, cannot accept the insurers' proposition on this issue.

(d) Conclusion

[para317] As a first step, I find that the scope of indemnification of these policies cover Bertrand for the plaintiffs' damages.

(ii) Do the exclusionary clauses in the various policies withdraw the claims from coverage?

[para318] Having found that the policies covered the cost of replacing the foundations, I now have to determine whether the exclusionary clauses in the various policies remove these claims from coverage. Most of these exclusionary clauses are similar in all of the policies. I intend to deal individually with each exclusionary clause.

(a) Own Product Exclusion

[para319] This exclusion is referred to in various policies as either product itself exclusion or defective products exclusion or named insured products exclusion. All of these have similar definitions in the policies. Basically, this clause removes all insurance coverage for the defendants' own product. In view of my earlier findings, this exclusionary clause only emphasizes again that there is no insurance coverage for the cost associated with Bertrand supplying new concrete to the third parties. Bertrand has already acknowledged that. The damage to the foundation and other elements of the house would not be affected by the exclusionary clause in that it is damage to property of others and not the property of the insured Bertrand.

(b) Faulty Workmanship Exclusion

[para320] This exclusion has been entitled under different policies as "Own Work Exclusion", "Performance Exclusion", "Work Exclusion", etc. It is principally designed to exclude the insured's liability to repair or replace defective or deficient work product. This exclusion has been consistently applied to the cost of repairing or replacing the insured's work product. A clear example where this exclusion would apply was the case of Carleton Iron Works Ltd., supra, where the insured welded the brackets holding the cladding to the side of the building in a deficient manner. The damages that followed were as a result of faulty workmanship of the insured and, therefore, this exclusionary clause would have prevented insurance coverage.

[para321] The only possible way that this exclusionary clause could apply here would be if I had made a finding that the deficient concrete was a result of Bertrand's faulty workmanship. That was not my conclusion. Bertrand did no other work on the plaintiffs' homes. Accordingly, this exclusion clause does not affect coverage.

(c) Business Risk Exclusion

[para322] A number of the insured's policies have what is referred to as "Business Risk Exclusion". Some of the insurers argue that this exclusion removes insurance coverage for the plaintiffs' damages. They rely on the decision of Weedo v. Stone-E-Brick Inc., 81 N.J. 233, 405 A.2d 788 (S.C. 1979). Basically that case says that the replacement or repair of faulty goods or works is a business expense to be borne by the insured. I am not altogether convinced that this exclusion does anything different from the two previous exclusionary clauses. Bertrand has already acknowledged that there is no coverage to supply new concrete. Also, I don't read this exclusionary clause as removing coverage for damage to properties of third parties which I have already found here.

(d) Impaired Property Exclusion

[para323] This exclusion is found only in the Royal Insurance Policies. All of the jurisprudence on this exclusion is American and apparently Canadian Courts have never been called upon to interpret the exclusion. The counsel for Royal argued that the Impaired Property Exclusion excludes all costs incurred for repair or replacement of the insured's product even where the contemplated repair or replacement involves other non-defective parts or property, in this case, the cost of lifting the houses off the foundations. What Royal is saying basically is that if the third-party product is rendered less useful and is not physically damaged, then the coverage is excluded. It is clear that if there has been physical injury or damage to third-party property, the exclusion has no application. I have already made a finding that there has been physical injury to third-party property and, therefore, the exclusion does not remove coverage.

(iii) In which coverage period did the occurrence take place? Which trigger theory applies?

[para324] Having made a determination that the plaintiffs' property damage was caused by an occurrence and covered by the insurers' policies, I now have to ascertain which policy or policies provide coverage to the insured Bertrand. Ex. 564A sets out which primary and umbrella policies were in force between the years 1986 to 1992. Basically, Canadian General was the primary insurer for the years 1986 to 1990 and Royal for the years 1990 to 1992. For the umbrella insurers, there was a Guardian policy for 1986, General Accident for 1987, and Chubb for the years 1988 and 1989. Royal was both the primary and umbrella insurer from 1990 to 1992.

[para325] Generally speaking, if a finding is made that property damage occurred within the period of a particular policy that policy will have been "triggered" and the insurer will be required to indemnify the insured in accordance with the coverage afforded by the policy.

[para326] The above principle appears simple enough, but its application in this case is not. The problem is that C.G.L. policies are occurrence based and the damage to persons or to property can arise long after the negligent act was committed. This difficulty was commented on by the Supreme Court of Canada in Reid Crowther and Partners Ltd. v. Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co., supra, McLachlin J. stated at p. 2623 as follows:

"Occurrence" liability insurance policies work reasonably well in covering insureds such as automobile owners and drivers. Where an automobile operator is negligent and thereby causes damages, the nature of the negligent act and the resultant damages are in almost all cases known upon the happening of the negligent act or shortly thereafter. But for insureds who are professionals such as doctors, lawyers, engineers, etc. damages can result (or be discovered) many years after a negligent act is committed. This is even more the case for manufacturers and other types of insureds who can cause damages by producing hazardous products or toxic waste. Therefore, for each of these types of insureds, insurers are at risk for an unknown number of claims that may be made many years after the expiry of a particular policy of "occurrence" liability insurance.

Compounding the uncertainty of these "long-tail" risks caused to insurers was the evolving nature of law and science. The potential for future developments such as the increased availability and quality of scientific proof of causation of harm, expanded legal liability (e.g. "superfund" environmental legislation), and changes in the law as to quantum of damages, added to the uncertainty on the part of insurers as to the likely number of claims that would be made against their insureds in the future, as well as the unlikely amount of damages per claim for which individual insurers would have to provide indemnity.

[para327] A determination of which policy has been triggered in our circumstances is not a straightforward exercise. The plaintiffs' foundations were poured between June 1986 and April 1988. I have made a finding that the damage was caused by the insertion of FA into the Bertrand concrete resulting in a chemical reaction after the foundations were subjected to cyclic wetting and drying. A freeze-thaw process in areas where the concrete was completely saturated exacerbated the damage. The damage was manifested to the homeowners at different times (see Ex. 19). The damage over time was continuous and progressive until determination was made in 1992 that all of the foundations would have to be replaced.

[para328] The parties have canvassed extensively Court decisions on this issue. The common position that existed amongst the insurers up to this point has been broken. Not surprisingly, they are advocating different trigger theories which would exclude their policies from most, if not all, liability. Fortunately for the insurers, they have ample jurisprudence from Canada and especially the United States to support their theory.

[para329] The Courts in Canada and the U.S. have not consistently agreed upon a single theory by which determination of when occurrences took place may be made in order to identify which policy or policies are triggered. This is not surprising. The Courts in both Canada and the U.S. have done what Courts generally do and, that is, make findings that achieve the most equitable results. Therefore, in different circumstances, they have invoked different trigger theories. Over time, basically four theories have been applied by the Courts. They are:

(a) The Exposure Theory: coverage is triggered by the first exposure to the conditions which causes bodily injury or property damage.

(b) The Manifestation Theory: coverage is triggered or property damage is said to occur when the plaintiff first becomes aware of the property damage or the injury.

(c) The Injury In Fact Theory: coverage is triggered when property damage or injury actually occurs, whether it was observable or not.

(d) The Continuous or Triple Trigger Theory: the injury or property damage is said to occur from the time of the initial exposure to the time of the manifestation or discovery of the damage. I intend to review briefly each of these theories and determine which is most applicable in our circumstances.

(a) The Exposure Theory

[para330] Under the exposure theory, the mere exposure to harmful condition will be sufficient to cause damage within the meaning of a C.G.L. policy and determine the date of damage. In other words, if I was to accept this theory I would have to conclude that the insurers on risk at the time that the foundations were first poured and exposed to the condition which later caused the damage should bear Bertrand's entire percentage of the plaintiffs' loss. The insurers who are the strongest advocate of this theory are Royal Insurance and Chubb Insurance. They argue that the application of the exposure theory is consistent with the wording of their C.G.L. policy and the weight of the Canadian case law. A number of Canadian cases are cited at page 59 of Royal's submissions. The leading case which has been referred to by all parties is Cansulex Ltd. v. Reid Stenhouse Ltd. (1986), 18 C.C.L.I. 24 (B.C.S.C.). This case involved the improper loading of sulfur aboard a ship in Vancouver harbour that resulted in the corrosion of the hull. The corrosion became apparent only after the ship left port. The policy contained a provision that provided an indemnity would not be available for loss that occurred at sea. Basically, the Court had to decide between the exposure theory and the manifestation theory that was being advocated by the insurer. The Supreme Court held that the property damage occurred at the harbour at the time the hull was exposed to the wet sulfur. In other words, the Court found that the corrosion process began as soon as the wet sulfur came into contact with steel.

[para331] In reviewing the submissions of the parties and the Canadian case law, I find there are a number of very good reasons for not applying the exposure theory in this case. I am of the view that the plain wording of the policies provide that there will be coverage for property damage occurring during the policy period. The evidence before me clearly indicates that the property damage did not all occur, during the first year or two after pouring of the foundations. The damage occurred over several years, was continuous and progressive to a point where tests showed in 1992, that the foundations would have to be replaced. Using the exposure theory to conclude that the policies in force in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988 would bear the full burden of the plaintiffs' loss would be inconsistent with the wording of the policies.

[para332] Looking at the history and the development of the exposure theory, it is obvious that it was developed by the United States Courts to accommodate the asbestos bodily injury claims. At that time, the only competing theories were the exposure theory and the manifestation theory. By adopting the exposure theory, the Courts maximized insurance coverage. It could justify its acceptance of the exposure theory on the basis that asbestosis disease consisted of tiny injuries, which accumulated over time, that an individual was exposed to asbestos. Had the Court accepted the manifestation theory, the company in question would have been essentially uninsured: Insurance Co. of North America v. Forty-Eight Insulation Inc. 633 F.2d 1212 (6th Cir. 1980).

[para333] A number of learned authors and subsequent decisions have been critical of adopting the exposure theory that applied to bodily injuries to cases involving property damage: Re Privest Properties, supra.

[para334] A number of the cases cited by the proponents of the exposure theory involve cases dealing with first party property insurance policies. Here we are dealing with third party liability insurance. The wording in both of these policies is not the same and could well explain why the Courts have accepted the exposure theory. See University of Saskatchewan v. Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. of Canada, [1998] 5 W.W.R. 276 (Sask. C.A.).

[para335] In conclusion, given the evidence from experts and the homeowners that the damage was ongoing and progressive, I find that the application of the exposure theory to trigger coverage would be inconsistent with the wording of the policies and inequitable to the insurers who had policies in effect for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988.

(b) The Manifestation Theory

[para336] According to the manifestation theory, the policies in effect at the time of the discovery of the damage would be obligated to respond to the claim. The strongest advocate of this theory is the insurance company Canadian General. It argues that the date of manifestation would be in 1992, after the experts for the Program had tested the concrete and concluded that there was a major structural defect, and the foundations would have to be removed and replaced. If I were to accept Canadian General's proposition, then Royal's Insurance policies would be triggered as it was the primary and umbrella insurers for the years ending December 31, 1991 to December 31, 1992.

[para337] As can be expected, Royal Insurance spent considerable time and effort refuting the Manifestation Theory. It goes on to argue that, even if the Court applied the Manifestation Theory, there is considerable evidence from the plaintiffs (see Ex. 19) and from experts that the manifestation of the damage was observed prior to its coverage which started December 31st, 1989. Accepting this proposition from Royal would mean that Canadian General's policies prior to 1989 would be triggered.

[para338] In reviewing the case law, it's obvious that there are some advantages to the Manifestation Theory. In situations like this case where the damage is progressive and cumulative, it is usually easier to determine the date of the manifestation of the damage than the dates when the damage actually occurred. Very often in insurance cases when the damage is discovered, sometimes many years after it has actually taken place, Courts find such a date to be not only convenient but equitable towards the insured. In other words, when reviewing the evidence here, I am convinced that most Courts would find that the limitation period would start after 1992, when the plaintiffs ascertained that there was serious damage and the foundations would have to be replaced.

[para339] Despite the advantages of applying the Manifestation Theory, there are a number of very compelling reasons why it should be rejected in our circumstances. The cumulative evidence before me demonstrates that the damage to these foundations took place between the years 1986 and 1992. The damage was progressive and cumulative. To apply the Manifestation Theory would be inconsistent with the wording of these C.G.L. policies and the intentions of the parties to the contract. The C.G.L. policy requires that the injury or damage take place during the policy period. If I applied the Manifestation Theory on our facts, it would mean that the policies in existence in 1992 would be triggered and they would be responsible for the damage, which was in fact occurring during earlier policy periods. That would be not only unreasonable, but also inequitable. A number of learned authors on this issue have questioned whether it is fair that the last carrier on risk would have to carry the burden of defence and indemnity. Similarly, to conclude that all the damage had taken place prior to December 31st, 1989 is not supported by the evidence. Finally, recent decisions from Courts in this country have rejected the Manifestation Theory (see University of Saskatchewan v. Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. of Canada, supra).

[para340] Therefore, for the reasons cited above, I would reject the application of the Manifestation Theory.

(c) The Injury In Fact Theory

[para341] Under this theory, coverage is triggered in periods when the bodily injury or property damage actually occurs. Damage need not be manifest, but must exist in fact. The main proponents of this theory are the insurers Guardian, Royal and to some degree the defendant Bertrand. One compelling reason for the application of the Injury In Fact Theory is that it is the most consistent with the actual wording of the C.G.L. policies. A leading case on the Injury In Fact Theory is American Home Products Corporation v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. 565 F. Supp. 1485 (S.D.N.Y. 1983), Affd. 748 F.2d 760 (2nd Cir. 1984). The case involved a number of suits against a pharmaceutical company for personal injury. At page 1497, the Court states as follows:

An exposure that does not result in injury during coverage would not satisfy the policy's terms. On the other hand, a real but undiscovered injury, proved in retrospect to have existed at the relevant time, would establish coverage, irrespective of the time the injury became manifest.

[para342] The Canadian author, Gordon Hilliker, in Liability Insurance Law in Canada, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1996), writes at p. 155 as follows:

The only one of these trigger theories which is entirely consistent with the CGL policy wording is, of course, the injury-in-fact theory. If it is possible, in retrospect, to pinpoint the date or dates when the injury or damage actually took place, then the other theories become irrelevant, for the wording of the CGL policy is clear - it refers to bodily injury or property damage during the policy period. An exposure to a hazard within the policy period which causes damage outside the policy period does not fit this wording. Nor should the manifestation of damage in one policy period relieve the previous insurer when the damage actually took place while that previous policy was in force.

Certainly there has been a number of recent Canadian decisions which have applied the Injury In Fact Theory and they are referred to in Guardian Insurance's written submissions at page 51.

[para343] The problem in applying only the Injury In Fact Theory to this case is determining when the damage actually occurred. My findings as to causation, the expert evidence and the observations of the plaintiffs (see Ex. 19) would support a finding that the damage actually started the same year the foundations were poured, that is 1986, 1987 and 1988. The evidence would also support a finding that the damage continued, was progressive and cumulative resulting in a finding by the experts in 1992 that all of the plaintiffs' foundations would have to be replaced. Obviously, the injury in fact is taking place over a number of years covering different policy periods. Attempting to apportion liability to various policy periods would be impossible. For example, what percentage of the damage occurred in the various years from 1986 to 1992? Given that the application of the Injury In Fact Theory alone cannot respond to our facts, I have to look at the Continuous or Triple Trigger Theory.

(d) The Continuous or Triple Trigger Theory

[para344] Under this theory, injury or damage to property is said to occur from the time of the initial exposure to the harmful substance to the time that injury is discovered. It often has been described by authors as the "continuous or repeated injury in fact theory". There are a number of very good reasons why the application of this theory is best suited to our facts.

[para345] There is ample case law where the continuous trigger theory has been applied. See Gruol Construction Co. Inc. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 524 P.2d 247 (Wash. App. 1974). In Surrey (District) v. General Accident Assurance Co. of Canada (1994), 92 B.C.L.R. (2d) 115 (S.C.), at p. 124, Allen J. stated:

In view of the difficulties in allocating the damage, I conclude that if there were a series of known insurers on the risk, it would be appropriate to hold them jointly and severally liable to the Insured for the entire risk.

This decision was sustained on appeal. Another helpful decision in the continuous trigger is Zurich Insurance Co. v. Trans-America Insurance Co. 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 (Cal. App. 4th Dist. 1994). At page 922, the Court concluded:

The manifestation rule developed in the first party context is not appropriately applied across the board. Instead, in this liability context, a "continuing injury" trigger should be used, because property damage occurred beginning in 1976 and continued throughout the filing dates of the underlying lawsuits. Because these claimants alleged continuous and repeated exposure to a continuing series of loss-causing events, under these policies, a continuous trigger of coverage should apply. All carriers who were on the risk from the inception of harm to the time the loss was no longer contingent should be liable to the insured. And, as we discussed above, the loss could still be deemed contingent so long as it was unknown when the insurance was issued whether the insured's activity would result in a claim for property damage that occurred within the policy period.

[para346] On our facts, applying this principle, all of the primary and, if necessary, umbrella insurers from 1986 to 1992 would have their policies triggered. Clearly, after the experts on behalf of the Program plaintiffs completed their testing in 1992, the loss was no longer contingent. They concluded that all of the plaintiffs' (Program) foundations would have to be replaced.

[para347] Another helpful precedent in applying the Injury In Fact and the Continuous Trigger Theory is a case of Sentinel Insurance Co. v. First Insurance Co. of Hawaii, 875 P. 2d 894 (Hawaii 1994). Conceptually, the injury-in-fact trigger and the continuous trigger are on the same continuum and are complimentary, rather than mutually exclusive. In that case, the Court states as follows at p. 917:

[W]here injury-in-fact occurs continuously over a period covered by different insurers or policies, and actual apportionment of the injury is difficult or impossible to determine, the continuous injury trigger may be employed to equitably apportion liability among insurers.

That decision has been applied in the U.S. in subsequent cases.

[para348] A number of the parties have brought to my attention the case of Montrose Chemical Corporation of California v. Admiral Insurance Co. 913 P.2d 878 (Cal. 1995). I found this decision very helpful in understanding the wording of the C.G.L. policies and the relationship with the different trigger theories. To quote from the decision at p. 903:

Indeed, the drafting history of the standard occurrence-base CGL policy reflects that not only did the drafters understand the term occurrence to mean an accident or exposure to injurious conditions resulting in the occurrence of damage or injury during the policy period, they specifically considered and rejected the suggestion that language establishing a manifestation or discovery trigger of coverage be incorporated into the standard form CGL policy. Among the reasons relied on for rejecting the incorporation of such limitations into the standard definition in the coverage clauses were several stated equitable concerns: the difficulty of applying such limitations or requirements in cases of continuing damage or injury over the course of successive policy periods, the uncertainty of who would bear the burden of discovery requirements (i.e., the insured or third party claimants), the arbitrariness, from the carrier's perspective, of telescoping all damage in a continuing injury case into a single policy period, and the fear that policyholders could be disadvantaged by such an approach. In short, the insurance industry is on record as itself having identified several sound policy considerations favouring adoption of a continuous injury trigger of coverage in third party liability insurance context.

(e) Conclusion

[para349] Therefore, in applying a combination of Injury in Fact and Continuous Trigger Theory, I have the comfort of knowing that they are the theories that are:

- * the most consistent with the language of the policies and the intention of the parties;
- * the most equitable to both the insured and the insurers;
- * the remedy that was intended by the insurance industry in drafting C.G.L. policies.

(iv) Do the insurers have other valid defences such as misrepresentation, non-disclosure, and late reporting?

(a) Misrepresentation and Non-Disclosure

[para350] Bertrand's insurers, with the exception of Canadian General, have pleaded that the failure by Bertrand to disclose the facts involving the FA and problems with the foundations constitutes sufficient grounds which would allow them to void their respective policies. Two of the insurers, Royal and Chubb, have maintained this position and set out extensive argument in their written submissions.

[para351] The facts which are used in support of the insurers position regarding misrepresentation are set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 10 and 11 of the Agreed Statement of Fact between the parties (see Ex. 564A). Basically, they are matters dealing with FA, problems with the foundation, Bertrand's investigation and cost of attempted repairs of the foundations.

[para352] When Courts deal with such matters as misrepresentation or non-disclosure, they usually proceed in a two step process. First, the Court determines whether there has been misrepresentation or concealment, and if the answer is negative that ends the matter. If the Court answers in the affirmative, then it has to determine whether the misrepresentation or concealment is material (see Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York v. Jeannotte (1943), 10 I.L.R. 37 (S.C.C.)). The test as to materiality was set out in Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York v. Ontario Metal Products Co., [1925] A.C. 344 (P.C.) and to quote at page 351-352:

[I]t is a question of fact in each case whether, if the matters concealed or misrepresented had been truly disclosed, they would, on a fair consideration of the evidence, have influenced a reasonable insurer to decline the risk or to have stipulated for a higher premium.

[para353] The Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Victory (Rural Municipality No. 226) v. Saskatchewan Guaranty and Fidelity Co., [1928] S.C.R. 264 stated that a misrepresentation or a concealment of a material fact, even if innocently made, will render the contract voidable.

[para354] The test as to misrepresentation or non-disclosure is an objective one. In other words, would a reasonable person in the applicant's position have concluded that there were circumstances which were likely to give rise to a claim (see Sayle v. Jefco Insurance Co. (1984), 9 C.C.L.I. 54 (B.C.S.C.); Surrey (District) v. The General Accident Assurance Co. of Canada, [1996] B.C.J. 849, [1996] I.L.R. 1-3325 (B.C.C.A.)).

(b) Insurer's Position

[para355] The insurer's argue that they should be entitled to void all of their policies. Their position is that the facts existing and within Bertrand's knowledge, starting in 1987 and increasing with each passing year, made it imperative for Bertrand to disclose this information when applying for insurance or to renew their insurance policy with the insurer Royal. In other words, a reasonable person in Bertrand's position would have appreciated that the cumulative effect of these facts was material to the risk and made it imperative for Bertrand to disclose these facts to the insurance co.

[para356] The facts in support of Royal's position are set out in great detail in pages 152 to 163 of their written submissions. Basically these facts relate to the plaintiffs' observations summarized at Ex. 19. They also involved attempted repairs by Bertrand that totalled some $13,000.00 in 1989, $21,000.00 in 1990 and approximately $1,000.00 in 1991 for a grand total of close to $36,000.00. The facts also deal with Bertrand's use and disuse of FA, complaints to Lafarge, reports by Mr. Brown from Lafarge, engineering reports received from its customers and finally letters threatening litigation from customers.

[para357] I have heard evidence over a period of 16 months, including the evidence of the plaintiffs, and 15 or so experts. In retrospect, I could well conclude that Bertrand may be exhibiting some willful blindness in not disclosing these facts especially to Royal. But that's not the test. Rather I have to determine whether a reasonable person in Bertrand's position, not knowing the seriousness of the problem would have disclosed these facts to Royal. I have to judge Bertrand's conduct under the circumstances and in the context of the situation existing from 1987 to 1991 when it first purchased insurance and renewed the policies with these insurers.

[para358] Certainly there was nothing about the use of FA which warranted disclosure. There was a long history of the use of FA in concrete and no information was ever furnished by Lafarge indicating anything other than esthetic problems. A discontinuance of using FA in the floors was a result of customer complaints. Lafarge had advised Bertrand to expect some efflorescence as a result of using FA in the concrete. The customers complained and like many other manufacturers, Bertrand discontinued the use of FA to curtail dissatisfaction of the customers. It would be difficult to conclude that Bertrand should have advised their insurers of that fact when no claim could be anticipated.

[para359] Problems with the parging are in the same category. Originally Bertrand was told by Lafarge that problems with the parging were the result of workmanship on the part of the subcontractor. At no time was Bertrand ever advised by Lafarge or anyone else that the problems with the parging were the result of a serious and fundamental problem with the concrete. Between the years 1988 to 1991, Bertrand and Lafarge paid close to some $36,000.00 in attempting to repair the parging. Should that have been disclosed?

[para360] Throughout this period Bertrand was told by Lafarge, one of the most important cement producers in the world, that there was nothing wrong with the concrete. At what point should Bertrand have disregarded the information it received from Lafarge and anticipated a claim requiring disclosure?

[para361] As I have stated before, that can be a difficult call. In the context of the overall problem of these foundations, the parging problems are rather miniscule and could be considered more of an esthetic problem. $36,000 expended over a period of four years, when compared to the overall plaintiff damages is rather small.

[para362] Should Bertrand's investigation or the investigation of others known by Bertrand have finally completed the picture making Bertrand realize that a claim could be anticipated? One has to keep in mind that the seriousness of the problem was not appreciated until the experts for the Program made a full analysis of the concrete in 1992. Bertrand had never had that kind of problem before and, therefore, the various observations and complaints of the plaintiffs could not reasonably lead Bertrand to conclude that there was a serious problem with the concrete.

[para363] Meanwhile, Bertrand was constantly getting advice from the experts at Lafarge that there was no fundamental problem with the concrete. In retrospect, it may be that Bertrand was too trusting of Lafarge, or waited too long to initiate its own independent investigation. Nevertheless, in the context of 1987 to 1991, I cannot conclude that a reasonable person in Bertrand's position would have disclosed those facts to the insurers.

(c) Chubb's Further Position

[para364] Chubb also argues the following. It provided umbrella coverage for the periods December 31st, 1987 to December 31st, 1988, and December 31st, 1988 to December 31st, 1989. It alleges misrepresentation on the part of Bertrand when it answered questions 16, 20 and 24 in their application for insurance of December 1, 1987. I have carefully reviewed Chubb's written submission on this issue. I perused the application for insurance found at Tab 4 of Chubb's written submissions. I find no reliable evidence that would support the conclusion that Bertrand's answers to any of the questions referred above were misrepresentation.

(d) Late reporting

[para365] The parties have agreed at paragraph 6 of Ex. 564A as to the date and manner of notice sent by Bertrand to its insurers. The issue of absence of notice or late reporting is raised by some of the insurers. Paragraph 9 of the Agreed Statement of Fact Ex. 564A sets out Canadian General's position as to what steps it would have undertaken had it received proper notice. Chubb does likewise at paragraph 8 of Ex. 564A.

[para366] It is not all together clear from the insurers written submissions whether the lack of timely notice only has resulted in some prejudice to their defence or that in fact coverage should be denied.

[para367] I have reviewed the terms of the respective policies. I have considered section 129 of the Insurance Act, which is commonly referred to as the relief from forfeiture section. There is also a body of law which suggests that when an insurer denies liability or coverage, such actions by the insurer amounts to a waiver of its rights under the policy and, therefore, imperfect or non-compliance with some of the conditions in the policy does not prejudice the insurer in any way (see La Cooperative Agricole de St. Isidore Ltée. v. Cooperators General Insurance, [1997] O.J. No. 2550, (18 March 1997), (Ont. Gen.Div.) ; Canadian Equipment Sales and Service Co. Ltd. v. Continental Insurance Co. (1975), 9 O.R. (2d) 7 (C.A.).

[para368] In determining whether or not relief against forfeiture should be granted, the Courts generally look at the conduct of the insured to determine whether or not there has been bad faith. Then the Courts determine whether the insurer has suffered any prejudice (see Thomas v. Hickey (1995), 22 O.R. (3d) 331 (Gen.Div.)).

[para369] In reviewing the evidence, it is obvious there has been no bad faith on the part of Bertrand in the sense that there has been some form of concealment or misrepresentation. Three of the insurers were notified in 1992 and the other two insurers were notified in 1995. Once again, no one had any appreciation of the seriousness of the problem until 1992. Even for those insurers notified only in 1995, I have no evidence before me of concealment or misrepresentation on the part of Bertrand.

[para370] The insurers have not convinced me that they suffered any prejudice by any late reporting on the part of the defendant Bertrand. The trial of this action did not begin until September 1997 and continued until December 1998. There was ample time for the insurers to initiate and complete most of the investigations referred to in paragraphs 8 and 9 of the Agreed Statement of Facts (see Ex. 564A).

[para371] Accordingly, I would grant relief under the provisions of s. 129 of the Insurance Act for any late reporting.

(v) What insurance limits are available and what deductible is Bertrand obligated to pay?

[para372] Basically, Bertrand had obtained primary insurance of 1 million dollars per year and umbrella insurance coverage of 4 million dollars per year, except for 1986 when the umbrella coverage was 5 million dollars. The various deductibles are listed in the chart at page 126. All of the policies, except for Royal's primary policy set out a deductible amount on a per occurrence basis. Royal's primary policy sets out a deductible on a per claim basis. I have to interpret the words "occurrence" and "claim" in order to determine what deductibles have to be paid by Bertrand during each policy period.

[para373] Previously I made a finding that all policies in existence from 1986 to 1992 will be triggered and that liability will be apportioned on a pro rata basis. At the end of 1988, there were approximately 117 houses and 20 condominiums that were potential claimants. There obviously would be a smaller number of claimants for the years 1986 and 1987. The question is "Does a deductible per occurrence result in Bertrand paying the applicable deductible per claim"? This issue is relatively straightforward. A plain reading of the policies leads me to conclude that the various plaintiffs' claims are a result of a single occurrence. There is ample authority, both in Canada and in the U.S., supporting that interpretation (see Lafarge Corporation et al. v. National Union Fire Insurance Co. et al., 935 F.Supp.675 (D.Md. 1996) and Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Madill (1983), 43 O.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.)). Therefore, Bertrand's responsibility for a deductible would be $1,000.00 per policy period for the years 1986 to 1989 for primary insurance.

[para374] For the umbrella insurance, a deductible for the years 1986-1987, is a retained limit of $10,000.00. This sum is applicable only if there is no underlying insurance, which there is here. For the years 1988-1989, where Chubb was the umbrella insurer, there is no deductible.

[para375] For the years 1990-1992, where Royal was the primary insurer, there was a deductible on a per claim basis. Both Bertrand and Royal are in agreement that the Courts have interpreted the word "claim" differently from "occurrence". Such interpretation, of course, is consistent with the wording of Royal's primary policy. Therefore, there are a total of 137 claimants for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992. Bertrand would have to pay the deductible per claim for each policy period. Royal's umbrella coverage policy is worded differently and refers to a deductible on a per occurrence basis. If such policies were triggered, obviously my interpretation of the word "occurrence" would be similar for such policies as my previous interpretation for the other policies.

(vi) Other Issues

(a) Second and Subsequent Purchasers

[para376] Guardian Insurance takes the position that second and subsequent purchasers are not covered under Guardian's policy. It's argued that the subsequent purchasers did not sustain any damage until they purchased the home. The previous owners may have sustained damage, but they are not making any claim.

[para377] I find it interesting that Guardian would be taking that position after having argued that the wording of the C.G.L. policy is that the property damage has to take place during the policy period. Applying the Injury In Fact Theory that is consistent with the wording of the policy, it would be reasonable to conclude there had been some damage during Guardian's policy period. Therefore, Guardian's policy would be triggered and it would not matter who was making the claim. Further, I have already decided that Bertrand's liability would be not only in contract, but also in negligence and under that heading there is ample authority for finding the manufacturer liable towards subsequent purchasers. I would, therefore, reject Guardian's submissions on the issue of second and subsequent purchasers.

(b) Is Bertrand Fully Insured?

[para378] Chubb Insurance appears to be putting forward the proposition that the plaintiffs' foundations continued to suffer damage after 1992 and would continue to do so until they collapsed. They argue, therefore, that when considering different trigger theories, I should conclude that there are a number of years where Bertrand would be uninsured.

[para379] I don't have much difficulty in rejecting that proposition. The evidence before me clearly indicates that by 1992 the foundations had suffered a major structural defect and would have to be replaced. At the opening of trial, Bertrand admitted the foundations would have to be replaced, and I was under the impression that the insurers agreed with that admission. After the Program proceeded to replace 28 foundations, it would have been natural for the other plaintiffs to expect the defendants to replace their foundations and dispute, if necessary, the question of liability at a later date.

[para380] To accept Chubb's proposition would mean that the longer this case was delayed, the greater burden of responsibility would be placed on Bertrand. Obviously Bertrand could not obtain insurance after 1992, after the experts for the Program determined that the foundations had suffered a major structural defect and would have to be replaced.

(c) Did all of the damage take place prior to 1989?

[para381] Royal Insurance argues that using the Injury In Fact Theory all of the damage to the foundations took place prior to December 1989 when Royal became Bertrand's insurer. That proposition appears to disregard a number of fundamental facts.

[para382] The plaintiffs' damages are based on the admission and finding that their foundations will have to be replaced. That conclusion was arrived at in 1992 by the experts for the Program plaintiffs. Even though the evidence supports the conclusion that the damage was occurring as early as 1986, no one appreciated the seriousness of the problem until 1992. It may be that with proper testing, the experts could have concluded prior to 1992 that the foundations would have to be replaced. To accept Royal's proposition, I would have to conclude that the foundations had suffered damage to the extent that they would have to be replaced prior to 1989. The evidence does not support such a conclusion. In fact, the evidence shows that the foundations continued to deteriorate after 1992 and will continue to do so until they collapse.

[para383] Royal also argues that there is expert evidence to support the proposition that the failure of the foundations was inevitable regardless of the mechanism of deterioration. No doubt Royal is correct that there is evidence to support that conclusion, but I have already rejected the occurrence theory as triggering these policies. I have accepted the Injury In Fact Theory because the C.G.L. policies require the damage to take place within the policy period.

D. Apportionment of Responsibility between Insurers

[para384] Having decided that the Injury In Fact Theory combined with the Continuous Trigger Theory should be applied to all the policies between 1986 and 1992, I now have to decide how to allocate the responsibility amongst the various insurers. I am indebted to Royal Insurance for their helpful submissions on this issue.

[para385] It has been suggested by a number of American authors that the only fair approach is a pro-rata allocation of responsibility for damage over the period of time that the damage occurred. When there are a number of insurers over that period, liability is shared pro-rata based on the time coverage provided by different insurers. In Canada, the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Co. et al. and Durabla Canada Ltd. (1996), 29 O.R. (3d) 737 seemed to be disposed to a pro-rata allocation of responsibility.

[para386] The evidence before me would dictate that the most equitable allocation of responsibility would be on a pro-rata basis on the time coverage provided by the insurers. Between the years 1986 and 1992, there are seven different policy periods (see Ex. 564A). Approximately 45 houses and one condominium had their foundations poured in 1986. In 1987, approximately 70 homeowners had their foundations poured. Finally, the last three homeowners had their foundations poured in 1988. This would mean that of the seven policy periods the first period would have only the units built in 1986; the next period all the units built in 1986 1987; and the next five periods all the units built in 1986, 1987, and 1988. During that time, Canadian General Insurance was the primary insurer for four of those years and Royal for three. The umbrella insurers during Canadian General's four years were Guardian, General Accident, and Chubb for two years. Royal provided the umbrella coverage for the three years they were the primary insurers.

[para387] Therefore, Canadian General Insurance and their respective umbrella insurers would be responsible for the first four periods. Royal would be responsible for three of the periods for all of the foundations poured in 1986, 1987 and 1988. Obviously, if Canadian General's and Royal's limits were exceeded for any given year, the umbrella insurer for that year would be responsible for the balance.

3. Lafarge and Their Insurers

A. The facts

[para388] The defendant Lafarge started an action against eighteen of its insurers with whom it had contracted to provide insurance coverage for the period April 1, 1986 to April 1, 1993. It is now proceeding against only sixteen of these insurers, all who have denied liability to Lafarge under their respective contracts of insurance. One of the insurers, Kansa, has had a liquidator appointed under the Winding Up Act and permission from the Quebec Superior Court was necessary in order for Lafarge to proceed against this insurer. Lafarge has listed its insurers, their policy period, limits and level of coverage, and applicable premiums in schedule A of their written submissions. The following chart sets out the primary and umbrella insurers for the various coverage periods from 1986 to 1993. I am grateful to counsel for Harbour Insurance Company and National Union Insurance Company for the preparation of this chart. Considering the number of insurance companies involved, the chart has been of great assistance in understanding the various insurance policies available to Lafarge in each year.

[para389] Lafarge seeks indemnification for the damages for which it is exposed as a result of a finding of liability. Lafarge is also asking to be indemnified for any costs for which it may be found liable to the plaintiffs, and Bertrand and its insurers. It also claims reimbursement for any expenses that it has incurred in defending itself against the plaintiffs and Bertrand. Lafarge insurers have all denied that they have any duty to defend Lafarge.

[para390] I appreciate that it was necessary for the insurers in making their written submissions to assume liability on the part of Lafarge. I do not conclude from the assumptions that they have made any admissions as to Lafarge's liability. Given the length and complexity of this case, the insurers should understand that by the time I read their written submissions, the question of the liability of the defendants had long been decided. I want to thank counsel for most of the insurers for having kept their written submissions brief and focussed.

B. The Issues

[para391] The issues that I have to decide can be summarized as follows:

(i) Estoppel - Are any of the parties estopped from pursuing any claim or defense against any other party?

(ii) What is the scope of indemnification of the various insurance policies? Does it cover Lafarge's liability for the plaintiffs' damages?

(iii) Would any of the exclusionary clauses in the various insurance policies remove the claims from coverage? What effect does the rip and tear exclusion have on the respective policies?

(iv) Which policy period of these primary and umbrella insurers is triggered? Which trigger theory applies? How should responsibility be allocated amongst the various Lafarge insurers?

(v) What is the liability for and apportionment of defense and third party costs?

(vi) What deductible is Lafarge obligated to pay?

(i) Estoppel

(a) Introduction

[para392] Most of Lafarge's insurers for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88, except for American Home, are invoking the principle of estoppel against Lafarge. Interestingly, Lafarge is then invoking the principle of estoppel against one of its insurers for the years 1989 to 1993, National Union. The basis upon which these parties are invoking estoppel against each other are judicial decisions in the United States that were made in litigation between some of these parties in cases referred to as the Nationwide case and the Lone Star case.

[para393] This litigation took place over a number of years during the 1990's. Some of it involved insurance coverage for Lafarge arising out of claims from the removal of concrete railway ties that had prematurely deteriorated. Within the context of that litigation, the presiding Judge Harvey made a number of judicial rulings and these can be found at Ex. 470 and 568.

[para394] For the purposes of the issue of estoppel, I will refer to the insurers invoking the principle of estoppel against Lafarge as the "1986 insurers" and the insurer against which Lafarge is invoking the principle as "National Union".

(b) Estoppel between the 1986 insurers and Lafarge

[para395] The 1986 insurers are arguing that Lafarge is estopped from denying that the "manifestation trigger theory" applies to the 1986 insurers' policies. In support of their proposition, the 1986 insurers rely on a memorandum and order made by Judge Harvey, dated October 6, 1995 and found at Tab 6 of Ex. 568. The 1986 insurers allege that the application of the manifestation theory results in their policies not being triggered during the years 1986 to 1988. Accordingly, they are asking the Court to dismiss the third party actions brought against them by Lafarge.

[para397] The legal basis upon which the 1986 insurers are invoking the issue of estoppel against Lafarge, has been commented upon by the learned author, Gary Watson in his article: "Duplicative Litigation: Issue Estoppel, Abuse of Process and the Death of Mutuality" (1990) 69 Can. Bar Rev. 623 and referred to in Rae v. Rank City Wall Canada Limited, [1985] O.J. No. 178, (1985), (Ont. C.A.) and summarized as follows:

It is a fundamental principle, that where any judicial tribunal having proper jurisdiction gives judgment, then that judgment would be res judicata not only as to the point actually decided but also with respect to any other issue necessary to the decision.

[para398] What the 1986 insurers are invoking is what is referred to as "issue" estoppel. The principle they are asking this Court to apply is that even if our litigation involves a different cause of action than in the Nationwide case, one of the issues decided in that case was the question of which trigger theory applies to these policies. Therefore Lafarge should be estopped from re-litigating that issue.

[para399] The Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Angle v. MNR (1974), 47 D.L.R. (3d) 544, set out four requirements before the doctrine of estoppel can be applied to a particular case:

- * that the same question has been decided;
- * that the judicial decision which is said to create estoppel was final;
- * that the parties to the judicial decisions or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceeding in which the estoppel is raised or their privies; and
- * the question out of which the estoppel is said to arise must have been fundamental to the decision arrived at in an earlier proceeding.

[para400] On the basis of these four requirements, it is obvious that the 1986 insurers' motion would fail. Only Kansa was a party in Judge Harvey's decision of 1995, Lone Star, supra. I also have serious doubts that Judge Harvey was deciding the same question, or that his decision was final or that it was fundamental to the earlier proceedings. Reading from Judge Harvey's decision at page 25, he states:

By way of their pending motions, Halifax, Wausau and Kansa contend that they are each entitled to summary judgment on the issue of indemnity because applicable Canadian law requires that a manifestation or discovery trigger of coverage theory be applied to the particular policies of insurance issued by each of them to Lafarge Canada.

[para401] Two other matters are noted at page 25 of his decision. He notes that although Boreal is the primary insurer, and a party to the main litigation, it did not join the other insurers for the summary judgment motion. He also notes that neither Lafarge nor any other parties to the litigation have disagreed with the contentions made by Halifax, Wausau and Kansa in their respective motions.

[para402] Judge Harvey, in granting summary judgment, applied the reasoning in Allstate du Canada Cie d'assurance v. Assurance Royale du Canada, in a 1994 decision of the Quebec Superior Court, Martin J., which applied the manifestation theory. Basically, he applied what he interpreted to be Quebec - Canadian Law in determining which trigger theory should apply to these policies. As I commented earlier in my discussions of trigger theories, other jurisdictions in Canada, including Ontario, have expressed serious reservations about the application of the manifestation theory to these C.G.L. policies. It is interesting that Judge Harvey, in a later memorandum and order of August 12, 1996, invoked Texas law and applied the "injury in fact" theory in interpreting National Union's policy.

[para403] Even if the 1986 insurers had met all of the requirements as set out in Angle v. M.N.R., supra, which they have not, the Court retains the discretion to refuse to apply issue estoppel when to do so would cause unfairness or an injustice. Quoting from Minott v. O'Shanter Developments Company (1999), 42 O.R. (3d) 321 (C.A.) at p. 330, Laskin J.A. stated as follows:

Even had the three requirements been met, however, in my view, the Court has always retained a discretion to refuse to apply issue estoppel when to do so would cause unfairness or work an injustice.

[para404] Later, quoting Lord Upjohn in the case of Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner Keeler Limited, [1967] 1 A.C. 853 at 947, Laskin J.A. stated:

Issue estoppel is a rule of public policy and, as a rule of public policy, it seeks to balance the public interest in the finality of litigation with the private interest in achieving justice between litigants. Sometimes these two interests will be in conflict, or at least there will be tension between them. Judicial discretion is required to achieve practical justice without undermining the principles on which issue estoppel is founded. Issue estoppel should be applied flexibly where an unyielding application of it would be unfair to a party who is precluded from relitigating an issue.

[para405] Clearly, this is one of these situations where judicial discretion should be applied. Any cursory reading of the case law dealing with different trigger theories leads to the obvious conclusion that most of these decisions are "fact driven". I heard evidence for 16 months in this case. In deciding the proper "trigger theory" to these policies, I have to take into consideration the facts and the wording of the policies. To decide that Lafarge is estopped from making submissions on this issue and dismiss its claim against a "1986 insurers" would be unjust.

[para406] The Courts have also exercised some caution in applying issue estoppel on the basis of foreign judgments. To quote Lord Read in Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner Keeler Limited, supra, at p. 918:

In the first place, we are not familiar with modes of procedure in many foreign countries, and it may not be easy to be sure that a particular issue has been decided or that its decision was the basis of a foreign judgment and not merely collateral or obiter. Secondly, I have already alluded to the practical difficulties of a defendant in deciding whether, even in this country, he should incur the trouble and expense of deploying his full case in a trivial case. It is clear that there can be no estoppel of this character unless the formal judgment has a final judgment on the merits. When we come to the issue of estoppel I think that, by parity of reasoning, we should have to be satisfied that the issues in question cannot be relitigated in the foreign country.

[para407] Some of the 1986 insurers also have invoked the principle referred to by the American case law as "offensive non-mutual estoppel" to estop a defendant from re-litigating issues which it lost against another plaintiff. In Canada, we refer to this principle basically as preventing an abuse of process. A number of Court of Appeal decisions stand for the proposition that even if the parties are not the same, litigants should be protected from the burden of re-litigating issues with a party who had previously had a full and fair judicial hearing on this issue. See Demeter v. British Pacific Life Insurance Company (1984), 48 O.R. (2d) 266 (C.A.) and Re Del Core and the Ontario College of Pharmacists (1985), 57 O.R. (2d) 296 (C.A.). I have no hesitation in concluding that such a principle has no application here. To allow Lafarge to litigate insurance issues in this case could hardly be categorized as an abuse of process.

[para408] Finally, to apply the principle of issue estoppel could have serious impact on insurers for the other policy years, that is from 1989 to 1993. They were not parties to Judge Harvey's decision nor did they participate in the process. Do these parties not have the right to convince the Court as to which policies are triggered during the various policy periods? There is certainly a possibility that their submissions could be undermined if I was to accept the proposition of issue estoppel and dismiss the action against all of the 1986 to 1988 insurers. In the context of this action, it certainly could be unfair to the other insurers.

[para409] For the reasons cited above, I would reject the application of the principle of issue estoppel against Lafarge and dismiss the 1986 insurers' motion.

(c) Estoppel between Lafarge and National Union

[para410] Lafarge also claims National Union is estopped from denying that the "injury in fact" trigger theory applies to each of National Union's umbrella policies. The basis for Lafarge's claim is Judge Harvey's memorandum and order dated August 12, 1996 and found at Tab 10 of Ex. 568.

[para411] Judge Harvey, after reviewing the various trigger theories, concluded that the Texas Supreme Court, if faced with circumstances as before him, that is, progressive property damage extended over a number of different insurance policy periods, would apply the "injury in fact" trigger theory. For the same reasons given between the 1986 insurers and Lafarge, I would reject the application of this principle against National Union. Again, it would be most unfair to National Union to be forced to accept Judge Harvey's decision of what was basically Texas law without closely reviewing the evidence in this case and the language of National Union's policies.

[para412] Finally, to apply issue Estoppel in our case could greatly affect some of the excess insurers. They were not parties in Judge Harvey's decision. If their status and rights are going to be affected, should they not have had an opportunity to participate in the process? Obviously it is unfair to them to apply issue estoppel.

(ii) What is the scope of indemnification of the various insurers' policies? Does it cover Lafarge's liability for the plaintiffs' damages?

[para413] All of the C.G.L. policies under which Lafarge seeks indemnification provide coverage for amounts that Lafarge is legally obligated to pay as damages for liability imposed upon Lafarge by law. These policies, of course, are very similar to the policies discussed in the section dealing with Bertrand's insurer. The damages referred to in the policies are for property damage caused by an occurrence during the policy period.

[para415] One of the primary insurers for the years 1986 to 1988, Boreal, provided "rip and tear" coverage under the property damage liability coverage. This endorsement can be found at paragraph B(iii) of the policy. Paragraphs B(i) and B(ii) provide property damage coverage similar to what is found in the other insured C.G.L. policies. Boreal argues that if Lafarge is provided coverage, it is under paragraph B(iii) and not B(i) or (ii). As stated earlier, I have already made a finding in the section dealing with Bertrand and its insurers that property damage as defined in the C.G.L. policies would include the plaintiffs' damages for which Lafarge has been found liable. I do not intend to revisit that issue. It may be that the Boreal policy provides Lafarge with additional coverage. The parties may have had their reasons for including this coverage, I don't know. For our purposes, it does not affect the coverage provided to Lafarge under paragraphs B(i) and B(ii).

(iii) Would any of the exclusionary clauses in the various insurance policies remove the claims from coverage? What effect does the rip and tear exclusion have on the respective policies?

(a) Introduction

[para416] Lafarge's insurers invoke basically three exclusionary clauses which would remove any coverage from their policies. They are, the "product" or "work performed" exclusion, the "rip and tear" exclusion, and the "professional liability" exclusion. I intend to deal separately with each of these exclusionary clauses.

(b) The "product" or "work performed" exclusion

[para417] A number of the policies contain this exclusion. The wording of the exclusion in most of the policies is similar. This clause basically removes insurance coverage for Lafarge's own product and work. I dealt with the similar exclusion in the section dealing with Bertrand and its insurers. There really is no great dispute on this issue. The exclusion basically confirms what Lafarge is prepared to concede that there is no insurance coverage for the cost associated with Lafarge supplying new cementitious material to Bertrand. The damages claimed by the plaintiffs would not be affected by this exclusionary clause in that this is damage to property of others and not to the property of Lafarge.

(c) The "Rip and tear" Exclusion

[para418] The term "rip and tear" is a colloquial expression originating from the United States which graphically explains the process when property has to be removed and replaced. For our purposes, it describes the process where the plaintiff's foundation will have to be ripped out and then replaced. A few of the insurers provided "rip and tear" coverage while most other insurers had "rip and tear" exclusionary clauses. Most of the parties have expended considerable time and effort in their written submissions on this issue.

[para419] What complicates matters for the Court is there appears to be no standard "rip and tear" exclusionary clause. Most of the clauses in the various policies are worded differently. I, therefore, have to deal with the different policies individually and determine whether the language of that specific clause removes Lafarge's claim from coverage.

[para420] In proceeding with this analysis, I have considered the following general principles which apply to interpretation of insurance policies:

1. The contra proferentum rule,
2. The principle that coverage provisions should be construed broadly and exclusion clauses narrowly, and
3. The desirability, at least where the policy is ambiguous, to giving effect to the reasonable expectations of the parties.

(Reid Crowther and Partners Limited v. Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Company, supra, at p. 269.)

[para421] In interpreting these various rip and tear exclusionary clauses, I have also considered these following primary rules of construction:

1. words in a policy are to be construed according to their plain, ordinary and popular sense;
2. the policy should be considered in its entirety and be construed liberally so as to give effect to the purpose for which it was written;
3. where, due to an ambiguity, the policy wording is susceptible to two reasonable but opposing interpretations, the construction to be adopted is the one most favourable to the insured.

(Wagner v. Commercial Union Assurance Company of Canada (1994), 95 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 (B.C.S.C.) at p. 277.)

[para422] The other important principle that I have considered in interpreting exclusionary clauses is found in the case of Weston Ornamental Ironworks Limited v. Continental Insurance Company, [1981] I.L.R. 11430 (Ont. C.A.), where Lacourcière J.A. stated as follows at page 479:

The exclusion clause should not be interpreted in a way which is repugnant to or inconsistent with the main purpose of the insurance coverage but so as to give effect to it. Thus, even if the exemption clause were found to be clear and unambiguous, it should not be enforced by the Courts when the result would be to defeat the main object of the contract or virtually nullify coverage sought for the protection from anticipated risk. The doctrine that in construing a contract, one must look at the entire document and reject words or indeed provisions which are inconsistent with the main purpose of the contract.

[para423] Another factor that I have considered in interpreting the various "rip and tear" exclusionary clauses is that both parties to these agreements are basically on an equal footing. Often that is not the case in insurance agreements. Here Lafarge is a large multi-national company who had the resources and qualified individuals to negotiate with various insurers in order to obtain the most adequate coverage. Further, many of the insurers invoking the "rip and tear" exclusionary clause are umbrella insurers situated at the second or higher level of coverage. Obviously, the risk being negotiated at that level is not the same as that of the primary insurers.

[para424] Before dealing individually with any of the policies, I would comment briefly on some of these submissions put forward by the insured Lafarge in its written submissions. Lafarge appears to suggest that, even if the parties agree, a rip and tear exclusionary clause cannot limit coverage given by a standard C.G.L. policy for property damage and personal injury. I have a problem with that proposition. I cannot see why two parties in a context of being on equal footing for purposes of negotiation could not limit the risk and coverage of a C.G.L. policy.

[para425] Lafarge also is putting forward the proposition that the plaintiffs' claim is not for compensation to remove and replace their foundation. They appear to refer to the plaintiffs' claim as one for compensation for loss expectation, etc. One only has to review briefly the damage brief put forward by the defendants to understand that the removal and replacement of the foundation walls is an important part of the plaintiffs' claim.

[para426] I now have to interpret the various "rip and tear" exclusions and determine how they affect coverage in the light of the principles cited above.

1. Kansa Insurance

[para427] The "rip and tear" exclusion in Kansa's Policy No. 2503422 reads as follows:

It is agreed that this policy shall not apply to any liability arising out of rip and tear:

Unless such liability is covered by valid and collectible underlying insurance at the full limits of liability as described in the schedule of underlying insurance, and then only for such hazard for which is afforded to said underlying insurance."

[para428] In this case the underlying insurance is Boreal Insurance which provides for "rip and tear" coverage. Obviously, therefore, Kansa's rip and tear exclusion does not apply. Counsel for Kansa appears to be suggesting that the "rip and tear" endorsement includes more than Lafarge's own "product" and "work", that is, cement and FA. He argues that such product and work involves the entire concrete foundation. I have already decided that issue in the section dealing with Bertrand and its insurers and I would not accept the proposition put forward by counsel.

[para429] In conclusion, therefore, Kansa's so-called "rip and tear" exclusion has no effect on Lafarge's insurance coverage for that policy.

2. Scottish and York Insurance

[para430] Scottish and York Insurance have two policies that contain "rip and tear" exclusion:

* For the year 1986, Policy No. 10105 which is part of the layer of coverage for $10,000,000 with Chubb Insurance

* For the year 1987, Policy No. 11305 which is also part of the $10,000,000 layer of insurance with Chubb Insurance

[para431] The wording of Scottish and York's "rip and tear" exclusion is very similar to that of Chubb Insurance. The exclusion reads as follows:

It is understood and agreed that this Policy does not apply to any sums which the Insurer shall become obligated to pay as damages, by reason of the liability imposed by law upon the Insured or assumed by the Insured under any contract or agreement because of an occurrence as herein defined during the policy period because of:

The cost of removing, replacing or repairing any property including loss of use of such property as the result of the introduction into it of concrete, cement, sand or aggregate, concrete blocks, other concrete products or other products manufactured, sold, handled or distributed by or on behalf of the Insured which is or are defective or which is not, or are not as specified or required.

[para432] The wording of the exclusion in Policy No. 11305 for the year 1987 is similar except in the last paragraph where it reads:

As a result of the introduction into it, a product manufactured, sold, handled or distributed by, or on behalf of the insured which is, or are defective, or which are not, or are not as specified, or required.

[para433] The plain wording of this exclusion would lead the Court to conclude that it applies to the plaintiff's damages for which Lafarge has been found to be liable and it involves the cost of removing, replacing or repairing any property containing Lafarge's defective product. It is difficult for this Court to imagine that if both parties to this insurance contract agree to exclude the plaintiffs' damages for cost of removing and replacing the foundations, how they could have used plainer words. By using the words "any property" they extended the exclusion to third party property. Then by proceeding to use the word "introduction" into it of Lafarge's defective product, this would include Lafarge's cement powder and FA.

[para434] In interpreting this exclusion, I have given the insured the benefit of all of the principles cited in my introduction. As stated earlier, I do not accept Lafarge's proposition concerning the application of its exclusion and their interpretation of what is contained in the plaintiffs' damages. A major component of these damages is the removal and replacement of the foundation walls.

[para435] I have some concern with the principle that an exemption clause, even if clear and unambiguous, should not be enforced by the Courts when the result would defeat the main object of the contract or virtually nullify the coverage sought for protection from anticipated risks: Weston Ornamental Ironworks Limited v. Continental Insurance Company et al., supra. On the facts before me, should I refuse to enforce the rip and tear exclusion? As pre-disposed as I am, and for that matter most Courts are in concluding that there is coverage, I do not think it would be fair to do so in this case. Both parties are on an equal footing. Lafarge had employees who were experts in the field of insurance and whose job was to look after Lafarge's insurance needs. They purchased primary and umbrella insurance in the millions of dollars. They negotiated such things as coverage, endorsement, and risks on behalf of Lafarge. I have to conclude that they knew what they were doing, and were well aware of the wording of the rip and tear exclusion in the Scottish and York policies. The exclusion appears to be tailored exactly to Lafarge's business.

[para436] In conclusion, therefore, given the plain and all encompassing scope of the wording in these rip and tear exclusions, I can only conclude that they remove coverage for the cost of removal and replacement of the foundations.

3. Chubb Insurance

[para437] The rip and tear exclusionary clause in Chubb's policies is the same wording as found in Scottish York Policy No. 10105. Therefore, the interpretation that applied to the Scottish York exclusion would apply to the exclusion in Chubb's policies.

4. American Home Assurance Co.

[para438] The rip and tear exclusion in American Home Policy No. 6331773 for 1987-1988 is worded as follows:

In consideration of the premium charged, it is agreed that the coverage as afforded by this policy does not apply to any liability resulting from the removal, withdrawal, repair or replacement of concrete, piping, roofing, vinyl siding, insulation or construction products nor "the loss of use of tangible property including but not limited to materials, parts, equipment and labour costs to remove, withdraw, repair or replace concrete, piping, roofing, vinyl siding or insulation or construction products".

[para439] As can be seen, the wording in this exclusion is much different from the wording found in the exclusions of Scottish York and Chubb policies. It is not clear or unambiguous. Does the exclusion refer to the removal and replacement of Lafarge concrete or third party concrete. The exclusion appears to have been tailored to remove coverage for removal and replacement of concrete that had been supplied by Lafarge. The insured supplied cement powder and FA to Bertrand who then supplied the concrete to the plaintiffs.

[para440] If American Home intended to exclude coverage for the cost of removal and replacement of the plaintiffs' foundations the clause is not clear. It would have been simple enough to insert in the exclusion the words "any concrete or property which contained Lafarge's defective product".

[para441] In conclusion, therefore, the rip and tear exclusion in American Homes policy is ambiguous and subject to different interpretations and, the insured Lafarge is entitled to the benefit of the most favourable interpretation. Accordingly, I do not find this exclusion removes Lafarge's coverage for the cost of removal and replacement of the plaintiffs' foundations.

5. Guardian Insurance Co.

[para442] The rip and tear exclusion in Guardian's Policy No. 4178541 for the year 1987 is the same as that found in Scottish York's Policy No. 11305. Even if the wording in the second paragraph of this exclusion is a bit different from that found in the other Scottish York or Chubb policies, the interpretation would be the same. This exclusion would remove coverage for the cost of removing, replacing or repairing any property as a result of it containing Lafarge's defective product. Therefore, my interpretation for the previous Scottish York and Chubb policies would apply to Guardian's policy.

6. Reliance Insurance

[para443] The rip and tear exclusion for Reliance reads as follows:

It is agreed that no insurance is afforded for personal injury, bodily or property damage arising out of liability for ripping or tearing expenses and restoration.

It is further agreed that the following definition shall apply:

(a) ripping and tearing expenses shall mean the actual expenses incident to the intentional destruction and removal of concrete products which are found to be defective;

(b) restoration expenses shall mean such additional expenses paid as are necessary to place the structure in the same condition existing at the time such concrete products were determined to be defective;

(c) concrete products shall mean poured concrete, concrete block and pre-stressed structured concrete; and

(d) defective shall mean concrete products which, upon testing by an accredited testing agency, do not meet the contractual specification relating to compressive strength required for the specific construction in which such materials were incorporated.

[para444] Although this exclusion is lengthy and detailed, it is also unfortunately ambiguous and subject to various interpretations. It is important to underline again that Lafarge was supplying cement powder and FA and not concrete products as defined under paragraph (c) of the exclusion. Does the exclusion refer to concrete products supplied by Lafarge or concrete products of a third party?

[para445] It would appear to the Court that this exclusion was intended to limit liability of an insured that was in the business of supplying ready-mixed concrete. If such concrete proved to be defective and had to be removed and replaced, then this exclusion would probably apply. If Lafarge had supplied the ready-mixed concrete for the plaintiffs' foundations, likely this exclusion would have removed coverage.

[para446] Following the principles outlined in the introduction, the exclusionary clause, to remove coverage, has to be clear and unequivocal. In this case, it is not. The exclusion is subject to different interpretations. Accordingly, Lafarge is entitled to the most favourable interpretation. Its claim for the cost of removal and replacement of the plaintiffs' foundations is not removed by this exclusion.

7. Hartford and Harbor Insurance

[para447] Both of these insurers have similar rip and tear exclusion. Hartford's Policy No. 46XSSG57552 contains the following rip and tear exclusion:

It is hereby agreed that this policy shall not apply to: property damage liability for the costs of ripping and tearing out of any concrete which the named insured provided during the policy period, according to the customer specification and which did not meet such specification.

Harbor's policy reads as follows:

It is understood and agreed that this policy hereby excludes property damage liability for the cost or expenses of any destruction or removal of any concrete which the named insured provided, according to the customer specification and which did not meet such specification.

[para448] Both exclusions refer to the removal of any concrete that Lafarge provided. As stated before, Lafarge did not provide concrete but cement powder and FA. The exclusions, therefore, do not apply.

8. Federal Insurance

[para449] Federal's written submissions appear to be premised on the assumption that there were sufficient layers of underlying insurance, and that their policy would never be triggered. They are probably right. Unfortunately, none of the parties have brought to my attention the wording of the Federal rip and tear exclusion. Further, I was unable to locate the exclusion in reviewing the Federal's policy at Ex. 569A and B. Accordingly, I have to conclude that Lafarge's indemnity with Federal Insurance is not affected by their rip and tear exclusion.

8. Pacific Employers and California Union Insurance

[para450] Pacific Employers Insurance for the year 1988 to 1989 has no rip and tear exclusion, but apparently rely on the exclusion in the underlying insurance. I have already decided earlier that none of those exclusions removes Lafarge's coverage and, therefore, Pacific Employers has no effective exclusion. For the year 1989 to 1990, Pacific Employers have the following exclusion:

It is understood and agreed that such insurance as is afforded by this policy shall not apply to liability for property damage to property of others consisting of the costs of removing, repairing, and replacing any defective product manufactured, sold or distributed by the insured after such product has been sold, furnished or relinquished to another and incorporated as part of a structure constructed by any person or organization.

[para451] Pacific Employers Insurance policies covering the period April 1, 1990 to April 1, 1991 apparently have the same endorsement. The wording in this exclusion is not clear and unambiguous. It is subject to a variety of interpretations. The exclusion appears to contemplate that if Lafarge sold a defective product that has to be removed and replaced, then there is no coverage. In this case what has to be removed and replaced are the plaintiffs' foundations. Lafarge did not sell the concrete or the foundations. What Lafarge sold was the cement powder and FA to Bertrand. This exclusion, therefore, does not remove coverage.

[para452] California Union's Policy No. ZCX0109170 for the period 1990 to 1991 contains the following rip and tear exclusion:

In consideration of the premium charge, it is understood and agreed that the liability for personal injury or bodily injury or property damage does not apply to removal and/or costs of removal of defective concrete or any other product sold, manufactured, installed, distributed or handled by the named insured.

[para453] For reasons already given, this exclusion would not apply to Lafarge's coverage in that Lafarge did not sell or manufacture the concrete which has to be removed and replaced. This exclusion, therefore, does not affect Lafarge's coverage.

9. Royal Indemnity Co.

[para454] Royal Indemnity's policy has the following rip and tear exclusion:

It is agreed that there shall be no coverage under this policy to indemnify the insured for any of the following expenses:

1. Any expense incurred in removing concrete or concrete products from any structural building due to defective concrete or for improperly mixed, manufactured, poured form, cured, or install concrete.
2. Any expense for replacing forms, reinforcement, piping and wiring that are destroyed during the course of removing defective concrete products.
3. Any expense for returning the structure or building to the condition that existed prior to the installation of the concrete products.

[para455] This exclusion, like so many others, appears to contemplate a situation where Lafarge is supplying concrete products. We know that is not the case. Does this exclusion apply to a third party's concrete product? Like other exclusions referred to earlier, the wording is subject to different interpretations. Accordingly, if Lafarge is entitled to the benefit of the more favourable interpretation then the exclusion would not apply to a third party's concrete products. The exclusion, therefore, does not affect Lafarge's coverage.

10. Westchester Fire Insurance Co.

[para456] Westchester's rip and tear exclusion for Policy No. 531-2018016 for the years 1989 to 1990 reads as follows:

This insurance does not apply to any liability for property damage to property of others consisting of the costs of removing, repairing and replacing any defective product manufactured, sold or distributed by the insured after such product has been incorporated as part of the structure constructed by any person or organization.

[para457] This exclusion, like a number of other exclusions, is ambiguous. The product that has to be removed and replaced are the plaintiffs' foundations. Lafarge sold and distributed cement powder and FA to Bertrand. The product referred to in this exclusion is not the product sold and distributed by Lafarge. For this reason and others referred to in previous paragraphs, Westchester's rip and tear exclusion does not affect Lafarge's coverage.

(d) The "professional liability" exclusion

[para458] A number of the insurers had what is referred to as Professional Liability Exclusionary clauses in their policies. They argue that this exclusion removes coverage for Lafarge's liability to either the plaintiffs or Bertrand.

[para459] Most of these exclusionary clauses have similar wording:

This policy shall not apply to liability arising out of rendering of or failure to render professional services, or any error or omission, malpractice or mistake of a professional nature committed by or on behalf of the named insured in the conduct of any of the insured's business activities.

[para460] The insurers in their submissions rely mostly on allegations made by the defendant Bertrand against Lafarge. They argue that Lafarge, because of its size and expertise, owed a duty to the plaintiffs and Bertrand to do adequate testing of FA prior to putting this product on the market. They allege that because of Lafarge's special knowledge, there was an omission on Lafarge's part of not providing necessary professional services either before it marketed FA or at the time that it convinced Bertrand to introduce FA into its ready-mix. Such failure, according to the insurers, falls within the scope of the professional liability exclusion, thereby removing coverage.

[para461] Unfortunately, there appears to be very little Canadian case law interpreting the words "professional services" as used in the exclusion. Counsel have brought to my attention two Canadian cases, Chemetics International Ltd. v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., [1984] B.C.J. No. 1728, [1984] I.L.R. 11819 (B.C.C.A.) and Mercer v. Paradise (Town), [1991] N.J. No. 126, [1991] I.L.R. 12740 (Nfld. T.D.). On the facts, Lafarge supplied FA to Bertrand along with some technical assistance for a couple of days, to assist in the introduction of the FA into Bertrand's ready-mix. I would agree with the interpretation gleaned from the above two cases that the assistance furnished by Lafarge to Bertrand was in the nature of technical assistance and not professional services.

[para462] There also appears to be a suggestion that there was an omission of professional services by Lafarge which resulted in the marketing of over sulfated FA would. They argue such omission comes within the wording of the exclusion. I do not agree. In my opinion, the intent of the exclusion was to apply to deficient professional services supplied to one of Lafarge's clients.

[para463] In the final analysis, when I apply the principles of interpretation referred to in the introduction, it is obvious that the professional liability exclusionary clause is not clear and unambiguous so as to remove Lafarge's liability from coverage.

(iv) Which trigger theory applies and which insurance coverage is triggered in fact? How should responsibility be allocated amongst the various insurers?

[para464] I have reviewed at length the various trigger theories in the section dealing with Bertrand and its insurers. Having read written submissions of the various parties in this section, I see no reason why my decision in applying a combination of injury in fact and continuous trigger theory should not apply here.

[para465] My comments in relation to subsequent purchasers and the timing of the damage to the foundations would also apply.

[para466] My decision on apportionment of responsibility between insurers in the section dealing with Bertrand and its insurers would equally apply in this section.

(v) Liability for apportionment of defence and third party costs

(a) Introduction

[para467] The issues involved in this section are as complex and confusing as any I have had to deal with in this judgment. Given the length and complexity of this case, I am cognizant that the defence and third party costs could well rival the amount of damages. It is not surprising, therefore, that a good number of the parties have expended considerable time and effort in convincing the Court of their respective positions.

[para468] With so many parties advocating different interpretations, it is quite a challenge to determine which of these insurers has a duty to defend and the corresponding obligation to contribute to defence and third party costs. Only one insurer (Boreal) acknowledges that it may have an obligation to contribute to part of the defence and third party costs. The other primary insurer for five of the seven policy periods (Signa which is Lafarge's captive insurer) and all the excess insurers deny liability for defence and third party costs.

[para469] To further complicate matters, a good number of the policies of both the primary and excess insurers appear to give coverage for defence and third party costs in one section of the contract and exclude it in another section. Also, the coverage afforded for defence and third party costs in some of the excess insurance policies are dependent on the wording of not only their policies but also underlying policies.

[para470] As can be expected, there is no shortage of jurisprudence in this area. The parties have brought to my attention many cases, some of which at times support contradictory principles. In the process of arriving at a decision on these many issues, I have attempted to rely mostly on Canadian authorities and on the principle of equity and on common sense.

(b) General Principles

[para471] In interpreting the insurance policies dealing with duty to defend and responsibilities for costs, I have followed the various principles set out in my introduction dealing with the "rip and tear" exclusion.

[para472] One important principle relating to the construction of insurance contracts is that the duty to defend arises only where the pleadings raise a claim that appears to be covered under the agreement to indemnify in the contract. It is not necessary to prove that the obligation to indemnify will in fact arise in order to trigger the duty to defend; the mere possibility that a claim is within the policy may suffice. (See Nichols v. American Home Assurance Co., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 801.) Therefore, at this stage of the pleadings, it is only necessary to show that the claims made by the plaintiffs against the insured Lafarge may well fall within the scope of the insurance policies. The duty to indemnify is triggered even if the allegations of the plaintiffs prove to be groundless. Evidence of underlying facts is not admissible in connection with the question of the insurer's obligation to defend. Whether that obligation exists is to be determined solely on the basis of the allegations in the pleadings, and on a clear exclusion in the policy. (See Karpel v. Rumack (1994), 19 O.R. (3d) 555 (Gen. Div.))

[para473] Having earlier apportioned Lafarge's responsibility for damages amongst the various insurers in accordance with the "continuous trigger theory", I would do likewise for the defence and third party costs. Such a pro-rate allocation of costs has received some approval by our Courts. (See Re St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Co. et al. v. Durabla Canada, supra.) As stated earlier, the wording of the policies affords coverage for property damage which occurs during the policy period and, therefore, allocation of defence and third party costs to the various policy periods is consistent with that principle.

[para474] When a finding is made that an insurer has a duty to defend, it would follow logically that such insurer would have the corresponding obligation to contribute to the costs of Lafarge's defence and third party costs.

[para475] When dealing with the insurers, I am focusing mainly on the primary and excess insurers who are providing coverage for the first $10 million for each policy period. Given my findings on damages and allocation of responsibility in each policy period, it is unlikely that any excess insurers policies would be triggered above $10 million.

(c) Primary Insurers

[para476] Given the structure of Lafarge's insurance program, it would be consistent that the primary insurer would be the first to be called upon to investigate, negotiate and defend any claim brought against the insured. Generally speaking, the language of the primary insurers' policies provides for that coverage. It makes sense that the insurer whose dollars will be first engaged should have the right and duty to undertake the defence of its insured while at the same time protecting its own best interests.

[para477] During the seven policy periods, Lafarge's primary coverage was provided by two insurers: Boreal, for the two years 1986-1987 and 1987-1988, and Signa, for the five years between 1988 and 1993. Considering my earlier findings as to liability, there really is no issue that Boreal had an obligation to defend for the years 1986 to 1988 and, therefore, would be responsible in part for the payment of Lafarge's defence and third party costs.

[para478] The situation involving the other primary insurer, Signa, is not as simple. Lafarge makes a summary statement that defence coverage is specifically excluded by Signa and, therefore, that obligation automatically rests with the excess insurers next in line, that is Reliance for 1988-1989, and National Union for the years 1989 to 1993. No factual evidence, other than the policies, and no case law is cited in support of this proposition.

[para479] There are a number of very good reasons why Lafarge's argument regarding Signa requires close scrutiny.

[para480] According to the evidence, Lafarge, for its own benefit and in order to control or reduce its insurance costs, made an agreement with an existing insurance company, Signa, to reinsure its risk and join Lafarge's captive insurance program. The practical effect of this, according to Lafarge's witness John B. Del Bagno, was to allow Lafarge to self-insure those risks while at the same time representing to the general public and its other insurers that a primary policy with a reputable rated insurer existed to guarantee payment of the insured risks under the policy. Such an agreement between Lafarge and Signa could hardly be categorized as your ordinary, arms' length insurer-insured agreement.

[para481] The interpretation of an agreement referred to above between Lafarge and Signa is certainly subject to the principles referred to in the interpretation of insurance contracts. As mentioned earlier, one part of the agreement appears to obligate Signa to defend any claim against Lafarge and be responsible for costs, while another part of the agreement appears to remove that responsibility. Generally speaking, an insured would be entitled to the benefit of the more favourable interpretation, but in this case, Lafarge is arguing otherwise. I would think the excess insurers immediately above the Signa policies for the years 1988 to 1993 would be entitled to the more favourable interpretation.

[para482] There is no evidence that the excess insurers were parties to the agreement between Signa and Lafarge, or that they were made aware of the reduced risk taken on by Signa and transferred to Lafarge, or finally, that they were going to have an additional risk because of the agreement between Signa and Lafarge. In fact, most of the excess insurance policies have a condition requiring maintenance of underlying insurance with the continued usual risks by Lafarge. If Lafarge enters into an insuring agreement with reduced risk with Signa for the purpose of controlling its insurance costs, how can it call upon the excess insurers to assume an increased liability that was never contemplated in the language of their policies?

[para483] In my opinion, there is also an element of unfairness towards the excess insurers for Lafarge to make an agreement with Signa that it would be responsible for the defence and third party costs, and then turn around and transfer that responsibility to the excess insurers. For Lafarge to accept the risk is equivalent to insuring itself or, for that matter, not having any insurance. In those circumstances, would it not be fair for Lafarge (along with the other insurers) to contribute to defence and third party costs. (See Re St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance v. Durabla Canada Ltd., supra.) For the reasons stated above, I find that Signa or Lafarge as primary insurers for the years 1988 to 1993 are responsible for their share of defence and third party costs.

(d) Excess Insurers

[para484] Lafarge, over and above having primary insurance for every policy period from 1986 to 1993, also had layers of excess insurance varying from $20 million to $65 million. See chart at page 116 of these reasons. In view of my apportionment of damages in the different policy years, my comments and decision will refer only to the excess insurance policies providing coverage up to $10 million.

[para485] Except for minor variances, most of the excess insurance policies have similar wording. They provide for a duty to defend once the underlying insurance limits have been exhausted. Often this obligation is clearly stated in the policy or at times the excess insurance policy accepts the terms and conditions of the underlying insurance.

[para486] Some of the excess insurance policies provide coverage for defence and third party costs in one section of the policy, and appear to remove liability in another section. As stated earlier, applying the general principles of interpretation of insurance policies, the insured is entitled to the more favourable interpretation whenever the policy is not clear or unambiguous.

[para487] A number of the policies have the following wording:

The insurer shall not be called upon to assume charge of the settlement or defence of any claim made or suit brought, or proceeding instituted against the insured.

[para488] In my opinion, this condition does not remove the obligation to defend. In other words, the insurer is entitled to contribute or to participate in the proceedings as long as he is not called upon to be in charge of the defence.

[para489] A number of the excess insurers have raised other defences, which I do not intend to deal with individually. Suffice it to say that having reviewed all of the submissions made by counsel for the excess insurers, I would conclude that all of the policies provide coverage for defence costs once the limits of the underlying insurance has been exhausted.

(e) Does the duty to defend apply only when the underlying insurance has exhausted its limits?

[para490] It may be argued by some that I do not have to answer this question in that I have already made a finding that the excess insurers have a duty to defend. The next logical step would be that all excess insurers who have to contribute to Lafarge's coverage for damages as a result of the exhaustion of underlying limits should then contribute to defence and third party costs. Given the nature of this case, the effort and length of time involved and the issues, I think that it is important to reiterate the responsibility of the insurers.

[para491] Fortunately, this whole issue was thoroughly reviewed by our Court of Appeal in the case of Broadhurst & Ball v. American Home Assurance Co. (1990), 76 D.L.R. (4th) 80. Robins J.A., after reviewing a large number of authorities including United States cases, said at p. 94:

I am persuaded that the absence of any contractual nexus between primary and excess insurers should not, in the present circumstances, preclude the Court from ordering the excess insurer to pay its fair share of the costs of the defence of the Lumsden Building action. While it may be that an excess liability insurer is generally under no duty to participate in the insured's defence until the primary coverage is exhausted, it is manifest here, indeed, it is common ground, that the potential judgment against the insured respondents substantially exceeds the amounts of the limits of American Home primary policy and, should the action succeed, the primary policy will be exhausted. The excess carrier, Guardian, is plainly at risk. This is not a case in which it can be said that the amount claimed in the action, at least in terms of insurers' liability, bears no or little relation to the true value of the claim. Furthermore, as I noted earlier, the action is difficult and complex and will involve a lengthy trial. The costs of defending it will undoubtedly run into the many thousands of dollars.

In these circumstances, Guardian ought not to be entitled to excuse its non-performance of its obligations to defend by pointing to the defence being provided by another insurer and insisting that that insurer's defence relieves it of any obligation to involve itself in the defence. To conclude, as did the Court below, on the one hand, that Guardian has a clear contractual duty to defend the respondents under the terms of its policy and, on the other hand, that Guardian need do nothing in furtherance of the defence but may stand by and have the primary insurer bear the entire burden of the defence, is to render the contractual duty meaningless, and, at the same time, to confer a windfall on Guardian by permitting it to have its defence obligations discharged by another insurer.

[para492] I cannot think of a more appropriate reasoning to apply to our facts. A number of the excess insurers here argue that their obligation to defend should not be triggered until a primary insurer's limits have been exhausted. Some have even argued that there are no limits for defence and third party costs and, therefore, their obligation to defend should never be triggered. Others have argued that their obligation to defend is not triggered until the primary limits have in fact been paid.

[para493] In my opinion, it is far more reasonable to apply the reasoning in Broadhurst & Ball, supra, wherein the Court has decided that the duty of an excess insurer to defend is triggered upon the reasonable perception that the claim could pierce into its layer. There are also very important practical and policy considerations why such a principle should be applied in our type of action. As stated by the Court in Broadhurst & Ball, supra, at p. 95:

it is in her client's professional interests to get this matter resolved as quickly as possible. However, without the active involvement of Guardian, she submits, it is impractical to discuss with the other defendants the formulation of a common defence strategy or a possible joint settlement package.

[para494] As was stated by one American authority Belmer v. Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co., 599 N.Y.S. 2d 427 (1993):

Conservation of judicial resources, equitable costs and fiduciary obligations between the various insureds and the carriers would be encouraged by increasing the mutuality of the obligation of costs of payment and costs of defence.

[para495] I accept and adopt the reasoning in Broadhurst & Ball and Belmer, supra, and apply it to our facts. Given the nature and amount of the plaintiffs' claim, the excess insurers for the first $10 million should have had reasonable expectation that the underlying limits would be exhausted. At that point, their defence obligation would be triggered and they should become active participants in the process. The formulation of a common defence strategy may well make for a more efficient trial and would certainly have enhanced the prospect of a settlement. As was said in Broadhurst & Ball, supra, at p. 96:

As a matter of equity, the burden that these insurers assumed in insuring the same insured against the same risk should fall on both of them and the costs accordingly be shared by them.

(f) Apportionment of defence and third party costs among the primary and excess insurers

[para496] Having determined which primary and excess insurers had a duty to defend Lafarge, it follows that the duty is converted into a liability to reimburse Lafarge for reasonable defence and third party costs incurred in defending the action. (See Canadian Indemnity Co. v. Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co. (1979), 103 D.L.R. (3d) 485 (N.S.C.A.)) I now have to determine how these costs are to be apportioned among the various primary and excess insurers. I am indebted to counsel, especially counsel for Lafarge, who have made helpful submissions on this issue. I am also greatly assisted by a large number of Canadian cases that have considered various approaches in allocating such costs.

[para497] I decided earlier to apportion the plaintiffs' damages for which Lafarge is responsible and which are covered by the policies of various insurers into seven policy periods. Some of the parties have suggested that the costs be apportioned in accordance with the limits of coverage provided by each insurer within one policy period. Others have suggested the costs be apportioned in accordance with the ultimate contribution of each insurer to the judgment. It is obvious from reading the cases that there is no single formula that is applicable in all circumstances. Apportionment of these costs is obviously an exercise in the Court's equitable jurisdiction. The insurers who will have to bear the burden of these costs have no agreements among themselves. Therefore, the apportionment of defence costs is done on a basis of equitable consideration.

[para498] In Canadian Indemnity Co. v. Simcoe and Erie, supra, the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal sets out some helpful principles at p. 488:

As a general rule, it appears reasonable that when two or more insurance companies are at risk on a claim, and the amount of that claim is unascertained at the time of commencement of the action, then the companies should be equally liable for the costs of defending the action. This approach, albeit arbitrary, avoids the possibility of becoming involved in complicated calculation based upon criteria which may change radically in each case.

Also at page 485:

I discard the suggestion that the apportionment should be based upon the possible risk assumed by each of the insurers, e.g., $150,000 as against $3,000,000. Nor should the criterion be the amount paid by the respective insurers in satisfaction of the total claim. This sort of analysis presupposes that the expenses incurred in defending an action will vary directly with the size of the claim. This is just not so. I do not think that legal fees are based solely upon the quantum of damages either assessed or agreed upon. The size of the claim is but one of the factors which prudent counsel will consider in arriving at an appropriate account. Likewise, the costs of expert assistance in preparing the defence is not governed solely by the amount of the claim.

[para499] Robins J.A. in Broadhurst & Ball v. American Assurance Home Co., supra, states at p. 96:

In this situation, I do not think it appropriate to allocate costs simply by reference to the respective policy limits, although I would add, in other situations, this may well be a fitting basis for allocation. The costs of providing the defence here are clearly not necessarily related to the monetary limits of the policies.

[para500] More recently that principle was adopted in the case of Schmieder v. Singh (1998), 165 D.L.R. (4th) 503 (Ont. C.A.).

[para501] Applying the above principles to our facts, I am of the opinion that the fairest way of allocating defence and third party costs would be to divide them into seven equal segments representing the seven policy periods. From the pleadings, it is clear that all primary and excess insurers, up to $10 million for each policy year, were at risk. For reasons given earlier, all of the primary and excess insurers within this layer would have a duty to defend and correspondingly a duty to reimburse Lafarge for its defence and third party costs. Within each policy period I would apportion these costs equally among the various primary and excess insurers which would give the following result: 1986-1987 equal apportionment of costs between Boreal, Kansa and Scottish York; 1987-1988 between Boreal, Scottish York, American Home and Guardian; 1988-1989 between Signa or Lafarge and Reliance; 1989-1990 up to 1992-1993 equally between Signa or Lafarge and National Union.

(vi) What deductible is Lafarge obligated to pay?

[para502] There appears to be very little dispute between the parties on this issue. The few parties that have made submissions have been very brief. My decision on this issue dealing with Bertrand and its insurers will, therefore, apply to these parties.

(vii) Other Matters

(a) Are the insurers who are in breach of their duty to defend automatically obligated to indemnify?

[para503] Lafarge appears to be suggesting that any insurer who is in breach of their duty to defend would automatically be obligated to indemnify the insured. Given our prior discussion about duty to defend and the fact that such an obligation flows from the pleadings, it is obvious that the duty to defend is much wider than the obligation to indemnify which is dependent on the facts at trial. Lafarge's above proposition, therefore, appears to be inconsistent with the position that it was advocating earlier about duty to defend.

[para504] I also am not aware of any Canadian case law supporting such a proposition. Earlier in my decision, I referred to the cases of Canadian Equipment Sales and Service Ltd. v. Continental Insurance Co., supra, and Cooperative Agricole de St. Isidore Ltée. v. Cooperators General Insurance Co., supra, which stand for the proposition that if an insurer denies liability or coverage, then the insurer is deemed to have waived its rights under the policy. Any imperfect or non-compliance with some of the conditions in the policy does not prejudice the insurer. That is a much different principle from what Lafarge is advocating.

[para506] I, therefore, would reject the proposition advocated by Lafarge.

(b) Bodily Injury Coverage

[para507] Boreal Insurance argues that its policy does not provide for coverage of the type of bodily injury that is claimed by the plaintiffs. I conclude that by bodily injury Boreal means the plaintiffs' claim for hardship and inconvenience. The only plaintiff who claimed general damages for personal injuries was Marcil (M-72). Boreal also argues that there is no evidence that any of the plaintiffs suffered bodily injury during Boreal's policy years.

[para508] I must say I have some difficulty in following the proposition put forward by Boreal. It appears to be suggesting that the hardship and inconvenience which is claimed by the plaintiff some how has to be unrelated to property damage. I do not intend to get into a minute analysis of the wording of Boreal's policy, but I have no difficulty in concluding that the wording of the policy includes the plaintiffs' claim for which Lafarge is responsible.

[para509] Earlier in my judgment, I reviewed the plaintiffs' claim for hardship and inconvenience. I made an award based on the length of time the plaintiffs endured the sub-standard condition of their foundations. This included the years in which Boreal provided insurance.

[para510] Therefore, I do not accept Boreal's interpretation of its insurance policy.

(c) Are Reliance Insurance limits reduced by amounts paid by other insurers in prior years?

[para511] Reliance Insurance appears to be suggesting that if damages are paid by insurers for the years 1986-1987 and 1987-1988, then Reliance's limits for 1988-1989 of $10 million would be reduced by such amounts. Reliance relies on condition 2 of its policy. I have reviewed condition 2 and I cannot see how it would have any application on our facts. Given that I have made a finding that the damage occurred over seven policy periods and applied the "continuous trigger theory" in allocating the damage over those years, it is obvious condition 2 could not apply.

(d) National Union alleges no duty to indemnify because Lafarge did not tender

[para512] National Union argues that Lafarge did not make a proper tender and, therefore, it cannot be considered to have been in breach to its duty to defend. This defence appears to be one of those legal technicalities which existed in the mid-eighteenth century dealing with either contracts or real estate. As I understand it, a tender is another form of notice. I am satisfied that National Union had plenty of notice of the claim against Lafarge and would be well aware of its obligation under their policy. In the circumstances of this case, I am sure National Union would not be at all surprised that this defence is rejected. I would direct the parties to my earlier comments on pre-judgment interest and costs.

Condominium Plan No. 942 1710 v. Christenson

Between The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 942 1710, plaintiff, and Greg Christenson, Christenson Developments Ltd., Christenson Property Management Ltd. and Can-Der Construction Ltd., defendants

Action No. 9803 21978

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Acton J. Heard: February 6, 2001. Judgment: March 7, 2001. Filed: March 9, 2001. (23 paras.)

Counsel: Donald J. Wilson, for the plaintiff. Barry D. Young, Q.C., for the defendants.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] ACTON J.:-- The Respondent Plaintiff, a condominium corporation, has been assigned the causes of action of the current owners of the condominium units. The condominium complex was developed and built by the Appellant Defendants, Christenson Developments Ltd. and Can-Der Construction Ltd. The essence of the Respondent's claim, as against Christenson Developments Ltd. and Can-Der Construction Ltd., relates to alleged negligence in designing, planning and constructing the complex.

[para2] The Respondent also claims that Christenson Property Management Ltd. failed, neglected or refused to perform the services required of it pursuant to its management contract and that Greg Christenson failed to reimburse the Respondent as agreed.

[para3] On August 3, 2000, Master Breitkreuz denied the Appellant Defendants' application for summary judgment. This is an appeal from that order.

[para4] The Appellant asks for summary judgment and states that the cause of action cannot succeed on two grounds. First, the Appellant argues that a general contractor is not held responsible for the negligent construction of a building to a subsequent purchaser of the building, who is not in contractual privity with the contractor, for the cost of repairing non-dangerous defects. As such, there is no cause of action against the defendants.

[para5] Second, the Appellant claims that the Offer to Purchase and Interim Agreement contains an express provision prohibiting the assignment of the Purchasers' rights without the written consent of the Vendor. Such consent was neither requested or provided. The Appellant claims that the owners were restricted by the assignment clause and could not assign their contractual rights to subsequent owners or to the Respondent Plaintiff in this action.

Amendment of the Statement of Defence:

[para6] The Appellant also seeks leave to amend its Statement of Defence to include:

The Defendants also state that the Offer to Purchase and Interim Agreement contains an express provision prohibiting the assignment of the Purchasers rights without the written consent of the Vendor. Such consent was neither requested or provided.

[para7] As stated above, this is one of the grounds upon which the Appellant relies in its application for summary judgment. The current Statement of Defence includes nothing about the limitation on the assignment of the contractual rights. Nor was it included in the Statement of Defence when the original application for summary judgment was before Master Breitkreuz.

[para8] The Respondent does not consent to the amendment. The Respondent submits that the application for summary judgment should proceed on the basis of the current Statement of Defence, without the requested amendment. It is argued that the Appellant should bring a separate application to request the amendment.

[para9] Rule 132, of the Alberta Rules of Court, relates to the amendment of pleadings:

The court may at any stage of the proceedings allow any party to alter or amend his pleadings or other proceedings in such manner and on such terms as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in issue between the parties.

[para10] Considering all the circumstances, leave is given to the Appellant to amend its Statement of Defence. The application for summary judgment will be determined on the amended Statement of Defence. In making this determination I have considered whether there is any prejudice to the Respondent. With regard to the ongoing litigation I can see no prejudice to the Respondent. In relation to this particular application, the Respondent was not taken by surprise in any way. The Respondent was aware of the proposed amendment well in advance. The issue of the assignment clause was before Master Breitkreuz. This is evidenced by the fact that in the Master's decision he concludes the non- assignability of the purchase contracts is a triable issue and, as such, no summary judgment would be granted on that basis. Further, in the Memorandum of Argument for this application, the Respondent has addressed the issue of the assignability of the contractual rights. The Respondent has made submissions, and has included relevant case law, to show that there is a question of law that needs to be determined at trial. There is a concern that to disallow the amendment would necessitate further applications when the matter can be conveniently dealt with here.

Summary Judgment:

[para11] Rule 159(2) of the Rules of Court allows a defendant to apply for summary judgment.

(2) A defendant may, after delivering a statement of defence, on the ground that there is no merit to a claim or part of a claim or that the only genuine issue is as to amount, apply to the court for a judgment on an affidavit sworn by him or some other person who can swear positively to the facts, stating that there is no merit to the whole or part of the claim or that the only genuine issue is as to amount and that the deponent knows of no facts that would substantiate the claim or any part of it.

(3) On hearing this motion, if the court is satisfied that there is no genuine issue for trial with respect to any claim, the court may give summary judgment against the plaintiff or a defendant.

[para12] The test to be applied in an application for summary judgment, by a defendant, is whether it is plain and obvious that the action cannot succeed: Boudreault v. Barrett (1998), 291 A.R. 67 (C.A.). The court will look to the merits of the claim and the defence and determine whether there is an issue requiring a trial. A defendant must show more than a strong likelihood that he will succeed.

Economic Losses and Subsequent Purchasers:

[para13] The Appellant states that there is no cause of action in Canada that allows a subsequent purchaser to sue a contractor for deficiencies or defects in the building that are less than dangerous. In support of this proposition the Appellant relies on Winnipeg Condominium Corporation No. 36 v. Bird Construction Co., [1995] 1 S.C.R. 85 (S.C.C.) and Blacklaws v. Morrow (2000), 261 A.R. 28 (C.A.). In Winnipeg Condo., LaForest J. states, at page 102:

In my view, where a contractor (or any other person) is negligent in planning or constructing a building, and where that building is found to contain defects resulting from that negligence which pose a real and substantial danger to the occupants of the building, the reasonable cost of repairing the defects and putting the building back into a non-dangerous state are recoverable in tort by the occupants.

[para14] As summarized in Blacklaws, by Fraser, C.J.A., at page 42: "The Winnipeg Condo. Case requires physical harm to the plaintiffs or their chattels, or imminent risk of it. A shoddy but dangerous building does not suffice for torts liability." This is the current state of the law in Canada. In the case at bar, the alleged deficiencies do not pose a real and substantial danger to the occupants of the building.

[para15] Although no cause of action presently exists, it is not plain and obvious that the Respondent has no chance of success. The facts in this case are distinct from the facts found in either Blacklaws or Winnipeg Condo. In Blacklaws, two issues were before the court. First, whether the owner of a company could be found personally liable in negligence for its nonperformance of its management contract, and second, whether it is appropriate to reverse the trial judge's dismissal of claims for civil fraud. The issue of a subsequent purchaser suffering economic losses due to shoddy workmanship was not before the court. The comments of Fraser, C.J.A., in relation to the Winnipeg Condo. case, were made in obiter.

[para16] In the Winnipeg Condo. case, the defects in the construction did pose a real and substantial danger. In that case, LaForest J. stated, at page 119:

Given the clear presence of a real and substantial danger in this case, I do not find it necessary to consider whether contractors should also in principle be held to owe a duty to subsequent purchasers for the cost of repairing non-dangerous defects in buildings. It was not raised by the parties.

He does note that a number of jurisdictions, including New Zealand, Australia, numerous American states and Quebec have all recognized some form of general duty of builders and contractors to subsequent purchasers with regard to the reasonable fitness and habitability of a building. LaForest states that he would "require argument more squarely focused on the issue before entertaining this possibility."

[para17] The Winnipeg Condo. case illustrates the fact that tort law is not static. The Manitoba Court of Appeal had struck the statement of claim as against the defendant contractor because the losses claimed were not recoverable in tort law. The Supreme Court found that the law in Canada had progressed to the point where contractors would owe a duty in the particular circumstances. As noted by Fraser C.J.A. in Blacklaws at page 41, the categories where defendants have been held liable for negligently causing economic loss are not closed.

[para18] The Supreme Court of Canada has stated that damages for these type of economic losses may be considered when the case arises on the basis of a full argument and with reference to the unique and distinct policy issues raised. Considering these statements, and the development of the law in other jurisdictions, it is not plain and obvious that the Respondent has no chance of success.

Assignability of the Contract:

[para19] The Respondent questions whether the terms of the Offer of Purchase actually provide the vendor with the unilateral right to arbitrarily withhold its consent to any assignment. The Respondent relies on Welch Foods v. Cadbury Beverages Canada Inc., [1999] O.J. No. 544 (Gen. Div.), where the court reviews case authority that states parties to a contract must exercise their rights honestly, fairly and in good faith.

[para20] The issue of whether or not the provision is enforceable in the context of this type of purchase and sale agreement is a triable issue. As stated by Master Breitreuz, it is reasonably arguable that a court would hold this type of clause to be an unreasonable restraint against alienation of property rights.

Stay Due to Arbitration:

[para21] Master Breitreuz refused to grant a stay of proceedings pending arbitration. In doing so, he stated:

I have also concluded that it is not appropriate to grant a stay of proceedings pending arbitration. As Mr. Wilson pointed out, this appears to be a contradictory argument at least as far as assignees from original purchasers are concerned. If they get no rights by assignment they also cannot acquire a right to arbitration. My view is that it would be costly and inconvenient to allow some of the unit holders to proceed to arbitration while others proceed with the normal litigation. In addition to the expense and inconvenience involved there would be the additional delay factor and possibly two conflicting results.

[para22] The Appellant did not raise any arguments on this issue before me and I see no reason to set aside the determination made by Master Breitreuz.

[para23] The appeal from the decision of Master Breitreuz is dismissed.

Meadowlands Development Corp. v. Berger

Between The Meadowlands Development Corporation, plaintiff, and Victor Berger, defendant

Docket: P9802700282

Alberta Provincial Court Civil Division Medicine Hat, Alberta Debow Prov. Ct. J. Judgment: January 18, 2001. (15 paras.)

Counsel: B. Hill, for the plaintiff. F.C. Fisher, for the defendant.

JUDGMENT

[para1] DEBOW PROV. CT. J.:-- The Plaintiff sold a condominium to the Defendant. This is an action to recover the balance of the purchase price in the sum of $4,000.00 and for extras provided to the Defendant in the sum of $621.00. The purchase price, including upgrades, is $177,213.00. A Certified Copy of Certificate of Land shows the land was transferred to the Defendant and his wife on December 4th, 1995. The Defendant transferred approximately $173,000.00 to the Plaintiff holding back the sum of $4,000.00. The Offer to Purchase specifies a possession date of October 15th, 1995.

[para2] In response to the Plaintiff's claim, the Defendant argues that the Plaintiff did "not provide the unit purchased on possession date as set forth in the contract between the parties:. The Defendant further takes the position that the Plaintiff failed to complete the contract putting the Defendant to extra expense resulting from the delay in providing the unit to the Defendant.

[para3] The Defendant has filed a counterclaim against the Plaintiff covering the claim for extra expenses to the Defendant caused by the Plaintiff's breach of contract.

[para4] The first issue is whether the parties by their conduct agreed mutually to adjust the possession date as reflected in the Offer to Purchase.

[para5] The second issue is whether the Defendant could have taken possession and occupied the property from the time the land was transferred to him on December 4th, 1995.

[para6] On the first issue, there is nothing in the evidence to show that either party by his conduct intended to be bound by the October 15th, 1995 possession date included in the Offer to Purchase. In fact, evidence shows that the parties continued to communicate with each other concerning ongoing changes to the drawings and to the property. Arrangements were eventually made to transfer the property on the December 4th date. I find that the effective possession date agreed to by the parties on the evidence is December 4th, 1995.

[para7] On the second issue, the evidence shows that the Defendant left the country on holidays on December 15th, 1995 and returned on the last two or three days of March, 1996. He designated a third party to represent his interests during his absence. Mr. Berger testified that when he returned from holidays some of the work still had not been completed. He further testified that he did not move into the property until approximately May 1st, 1996.

[para8] On this second issue, the evidence relating to the time at which the Defendant could have taken possession, in my view is not very clear. As I understand the arrangement, the Defendant was responsible for the completion of the basement development on his own with the exception of the rough-ins in the bathroom being completed by the Plaintiff. It was the responsibility of the Plaintiff, under the terms of the contract, to complete the upstairs which would include installing the linoleum and the rugs that were on the premises ready to be installed. However, it appears the Plaintiff understood that he was not to complete the upstairs until the Defendant completed the basement. This continuing misunderstanding between the parties caused a delay in the completion of the terms of the contract resulting in certain deficiencies. However, I am satisfied that these deficiencies, as described in the evidence, were such that they could have been remedied by the Plaintiff if it were not for the continuing apparent misunderstanding between the parties.

[para9] Notwithstanding the deficiencies, I find there was substantial compliance by the Plaintiff under the terms of the contract to the extent that the Defendant could have taken effective possession by the time the property was transferred on December 12th, 1995.

[para10] The evidence shows that the Plaintiff provided extra services, apart from the contract, for which the Plaintiff is entitled to be compensated in the sum of $621.06 as follows:

a. $117.00 to connect electricity to the stove b. $374.50 installation of water softener c. $129.06 connect the water softener by-pass

Subject to the counterclaim, the Plaintiff is entitled to judgment in the sum of $4,621.06 consisting of the balance of the purchase price in the sum of $4,000.00 plus the sum of $621.06 for the extra services provided by the Plaintiff.

[para11] In the counterclaim of the Defendant, he claims damages against the Plaintiff for breach of contract as listed in Schedule "B" to the Dispute Note of the Defendant. I make the following findings:

a. Having found the effective possession date to be December 4th, 1995, the Defendant is not entitled to recover mortgage interest as claimed from December 1st, 1995 to May 1st, 1996.

b. The Defendant is not entitled to recover the cost of utilities for the period December 1st, 1995 to May 1st, 1996.

c. The Defendant is not entitled to recover the monthly Condominium fees for the period December 1st, 1995 to May 1st, 1996.

d. The evidence shows that the cement in the driveway deteriorated over a period of time. My view of the evidence is that this deterioration was not caused by any negligence on the part of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff followed the industry standards on the Defendant's driveway as well as other driveways in the condominium complex. I accept the evidence that the deterioration was not caused by early or premature finishing as argued by counsel for the Defendant. There is evidence of the presence of general freeze-thaw conditions the first winter which contributed to the problem. This fluctuating cycle between unusually hot temperature followed by a relatively rapid freezing resulted in what has been referred to as spalling. There is also evidence of continued ice build up on the street which held the water from the thawing ice on the driveway. Accordingly, the claim for damages relating to the driveway deterioration is denied.

e. With reference to the installation of the upgraded toilet the evidence is uncertain. The Defendant stated that he believed that he did pay $100.00 for the upgraded toilet but couldn't confirm this with any degree of certainty. Also it was the recollection of the Plaintiff that one upgraded toilet was installed but the Defendant decided against a second upgraded toilet because of the additional expense. The Defendant's claim for the replacement cost of $150.00 is denied.

f. The Defendant claims the Plaintiff agreed to credit the Defendant in the sum of $300.00 in relation to the basement floor. The evidence does not support such a finding. It is clear that the completion of the basement improvements were the responsibility of the Defendant. The installation of a "warmfoot" base was the decision of the Defendant. The evidence is that the standard basement floor tolerance of six mil per liter was followed. Any basement surface slope variable was not an issue. The $300.00 claim for the basement development is denied.

g. The Defendant claims that the Plaintiff agreed to a credit in the sum of $300.00 in relation to the basement window. There is no evidence of such an agreement. The evidence is that the original outside basement window was installed in proximity to the wet bar kitchen structure. The location of this window was changed at the request of the Defendant. The Plaintiff testified that the removal and reinstallation of the window resulted in an extra cost of $200.00 which was not charged to the Defendant. The Plaintiff testified that to the best of his recollection the window was probably changed three times. The claim for $200.00 is denied.

h. The Defendant claims the sum of $300.00 in relation to the stucco. There were cracks in the stucco that appeared over a period of time. Some of these cracks were caused by the shrinking of the underlying lumber (2"x10" dimensional lumber) used for the build outs along the bottom of the unit. These cracks were subject to the ongoing maintenance program usually under the direction of the Condominium Association. The stucco defects were not caused by the negligence of the Plaintiff. The claim for $300.00 is denied.

i. The Defendant claims the sum of $300.00 to sand and repaint the railings around the deck. The Defendant stated in his evidence that somebody quoted $350.00 to remedy the problem but there was no confirmation on this point. The evidence is that the iron railings were ordered from a local iron works company and spray painted and installed. I am satisfied on the evidence that the problem with the railings was not due to the negligence of the Plaintiff. In my view the rusting that does occur is not a warranty issue but subject to continuing maintenance. The claim for $300.00 is denied.

[para12] Accordingly the counterclaim of the Defendant is dismissed.

[para13] I assess nominal damages in the reasonable sum of $500.00 to the benefit of the Defendant in relation to the outstanding deficiencies.

[para14] Judgment is hereby granted to the Plaintiff in the sum of $4,121.06.

[para15] No costs are awarded to the Plaintiff or the Defendant.

Action No. 9903-22441

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Ritter J. Heard: May 11, 2000. Judgment: May 26, 2000. Filed: May 29, 2000. (34 paras.)

Counsel: B.A. Sjolie and J.S. Grundberg, for the applicant. M. McCabe and S. Thomas, for the respondents.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

RITTER J.:-

INTRODUCTION

[para1] This matter involves an allegation on the part of the Applicant that the Respondents are effecting the sale of lots from a parcel of land being 139 acres abutting Half Moon Lake. The 139 acres consist of 1 unsubdivided parcel of land which is located within the Applicant county.

[para2] The allegation of the Applicant is that 35 year leases entered into by the Respondents with respect to 50 parcels and proposed to be entered into with respect to 179 remaining parcels out of that 139 acre parcel really constitute the sale of, or proposed sale of, a total of 229 unsubdivided parcels. It is the position of the Applicants that this is contrary to provisions contained in the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1980, c.L-5 and the Municipal Government Act, S.A. 1994, c.M-26.1. Further, it is the position of the Applicant that the purpose of legislation contained in the two referenced Acts is to prohibit unauthorized subdivisions for two reasons:

- i) to enhance security of title;
- ii) to promote orderly and efficient development of land.

[para3] It is my intention to proceed with a reasonably detailed factual analysis and then to consider legal principles relating to subdivision and development of land and relate those principles to the facts as I find them. I will then consider the cost result emanating from my conclusions and any necessary and ancillary relief that the facts and conclusions dictate.

FACTUAL ANALYSIS

[para4] As I have already stated, this matter involves 35 year leases that the Respondents have already entered into with 50 different lessees. Each of the leases relates to a designated area within the 139 acre parcel earlier referenced. The designated area is described in the lease in the following terms: "the lessor has designated 229 ("areas") in the land set out in the leasehold survey previously registered as Document No. 99223374 in the Land Titles Office for the North Alberta Land Registration District".

[para5] From a historical perspective, this is the third different way in which the Respondents have attempted to deal with these 229 designated areas. In the spring of 1999 the Respondents had registered the plan of survey referenced in the lease as being previously registered. The Respondents advertised an auction of the various parcels identified in the plan of survey. They did so even though the subdivision had not been registered or approved.

[para6] The matter came to the attention of the Applicant, who then applied for and obtained an interim injunction from Bielby, J. preventing the auction from proceeding. Notwithstanding that injunction, the Respondents determined to proceed with something they considered not to be a sale. What they did was enter into leases in perpetuity with prospective purchasers. The proposed sale by auction and the leases in perpetuity were dealt with by Agrios, J. on the 29th of June, 1999. At that time, Agrios, J. granted judgment declaring the first contracts (being the sales) and the second contracts (being the leases in perpetuity) to be invalid on the grounds that the contracts were illegal attempts to subdivide lands contrary to the Municipal Government Act (s. 652) and the Land Titles Act (s. 95). Agrios, J. also granted a permanent injunction prohibiting the Respondents from entering into any further first contracts or second contracts.

[para7] The Respondents then decided to proceed on a new basis and prepared a third set of contracts which are the contracts before me. As noted, these contracts refer to a survey previously registered as Document No. 99223374 in the Land Titles Office for the North Alberta Land Registration District. The reason the document is referred to as having been registered is that Agrios, J. also ordered that the plan of survey be deregistered at the Land Titles Office.

[para8] With respect to the third contracts, some of the salient provisions include the fact that 229 parcels as set out in the leasehold survey previously registered are being sold, the term of the lease is for 35 years, all of the consideration for the lease is payable upon execution of the Lease Agreement, the lessees are responsible for a pro rata share of the property taxes and common costs, and a Tenants' Association is established with powers similar to those of a condominium corporation and with control over areas described as common areas.

[para9] Mr. Lovig is described as a co-covenantor in the lease, and joins and binds himself to perform each and every covenant contained in the lease agreement on the part of the lessor. Further, the lease provides that no improvements may be made or erected upon leased areas without prior written consent of the Tenants' Association, which consent is not to be unreasonably withheld. The lessees also agree to be bound by municipal bylaws in effect from time to time. Finally the leases contain a provision whereby the lessees agree that they will not file a caveat against the title to protect their interest under the lease.

[para10] Subsequent to Agrios, J.'s order and upon the Applicant becoming aware of the third contracts, the Applicant immediately moved to have the third contracts become the subject of injunctive relief and to have them declared void for illegality. An initial procedural hitch arose as it became apparent that the Applicants would be required to file a new Originating Notice as the previous one had been subsumed into the judgment rendered by Agrios, J. This was shortly accomplished and the process which ultimately resulted in the hearing before myself commenced in early December 1999 with a series of affidavits being filed by each party, examinations on affidavits, procedural applications, and other steps occurring between early December 1999 and May 11, 2000, when this application was heard by myself. One of those applications ultimately became a consent order for an interim injunction enjoining the Respondents from entering into any further leases with potential lessees.

[para11] I turn now to consideration of the law relative to the leasing of unsubdivided parcels of land.

LEGAL ANALYSIS

The Applicant's Position

[para12] It is the Applicant's position that the Land Titles Act and the Municipal Government Act, when read in conjunction, prohibit the leasing of unsubdivided land for 35 year terms or alternatively prohibit the leasing of unsubdivided lands the same as, or similar to, the type of unsubdivided lands proposed to be leased by the Respondents for 35 years. Section 95 (1) of the Land Titles Act provides in part:

95 (1) No lots shall be sold under agreement for sale or otherwise according to any townsite or subdivision plan until the plan creating the lots has been registered.

Section 652 of the Municipal Government Act provides in part:

652 (1) A Registrar may not accept for registration an instrument that has the effect or may have the effect of subdividing a parcel of land unless the subdivision has been approved by the subdivision authority.

[para13] It is the Applicant's position that policy considerations for orderly and economic development underlie or establish the purpose for these statutory provisions. These policy considerations include:

- a) concern for boundaries and title registration;
- b) concerns related to street pattern;
- c) control of lot sizes;
- d) concerns as to the cost burden of providing municipal services involved in a residential subdivision;
- e) the desire to obtain municipal services at minimal cost regardless of which party pays for it;
- f) the desire to design the creation of a pleasant and convenient environment; and
- g) the desire to preserve environmentally sensitive lands.

[para14] The Applicant suggests that the appropriate test for determining whether a particular transfer of an interest in land constitutes an unauthorized subdivision includes consideration of all of the facts, and where the purpose and effect or possible effect is a transfer of an interest in unsubdivided lands, then the transaction falls within the prohibited category under s. 652 of the Municipal Government Act and s. 95 (1) of the Land Titles Act: Otan Developments Ltd. v. Kuropatwa (1978), 7 Alta L.R. (2d) 274 (s.c. A.D.); leave to appeal refused [1978] 2 S.C.R. viii.

The Respondents' Position

[para15] It is the Respondents' position that there no longer exists a statutory provision preventing the leasing of unsubdivided parcels, particularly when those unsubdivided parcels are to be utilized in the continuation of an authorized use or a non-conforming but legal use of land. Further, it is the Respondents' position that they are entitled to and have arranged their affairs so to avoid the effects of the Municipal Government Act and the Land Titles Act which, had they not so arranged their affairs, would have necessitated a registration of a subdivision plan. It is their position that this is no different than a business person incorporating a company so as to minimize tax consequences. By doing so, such person might be avoiding some tax that otherwise would be payable, but his incorporation cannot be set aside as being illegal.

[para16] The Respondents acknowledge that there was a positive prohibition preventing the subdivision of land contained in s. 16 of the Planning Act, R.S.A. 1970, c. 276, which indicated that land could not be subdivided unless certain conditions had been met including the approval by the subdivision authority. It is the Respondents' position that this provision has not been carried forward into the current Land Titles Act and Municipal Government Act sections referenced above. What has been carried forward is a positive prohibition on the sale of unsubdivided land and a prohibition directed to the Registrar preventing him from registering instruments which have the effect or may have the effect of subdividing a parcel of land, unless the subdivision has been approved by the subdivision authority.

DO THE LEASES AND PROPOSED LEASES CONSTITUTE A SALE?

[para17] Section 95 of the Land Titles Act makes it clear that a sale of unsubdivided parcels is illegal. It is the position of the Applicants that the third contracts really constitute a sale as the proposed 35 year leases are merely a colourable attempt to circumvent the effects of s. 95(1) of the Land Titles Act.

[para18] I am satisfied that a lease can be a sale. A document may be a lease in form, but in substance be a sale. For example, Agrios, J. determined that the second contracts which proposed to grant a leasehold interest in perpetuity were really sales. I am also satisfied that leases fixed for very long terms can constitute a sale, especially where all of the rights and obligations of ownership pass from the lessor to the lessee.

[para19] I am satisfied that in determining whether or not a lease is a sale, the Court should look at all of the relevant facts and consider a number of factors. In my view, these factors would include:

1. The length of the term. Obviously the longer the term, the greater the prospect of the lease really being a sale.
2. The nature of the property. It is suggested in Otan v. Kuropatwa, supra, that the lease of a portion of a parcel leased as hay or grazing land or for parking lot purposes for a considerable period of time is perhaps different than the lease of a residential lot or a series of residential lots for a similar period of time.
3. Whether the property is fully developed. If development remains to be done, are there restrictions within the lease preventing redevelopment or additional development during the term of the lease? Does the Landlord retain the right of control with respect to redevelopment?
4. Is the existing or any potential development or redevelopment of the property an authorized development? If the existing or proposed development is not an authorized development, who has the responsibility of dealing with the developing authority?
5. Does the lease impact upon, or potentially impact upon, or affect the purposes of subdivision, in more than a transitory way?
6. The nature of the lessee. For instance, large multinational corporations, dealing with one another with respect to commercial or industrial premises, are clearly in a different position than are private individuals. For one thing, corporations have indefinite durations. The leasehold term relative to the life of a corporation is considerably different than what a leasehold term might be relative to the life of an individual. From an individual's point of view, all the benefits of ownership may well pass to that individual by way of something less than ownership in perpetuity because people simply do not live forever.
7. Any pre-existing history which points to what might be a colourable transaction. Have the lessor and lessee previously attempted to accomplish the same thing, and is this simply one step in a series of steps taken by the lessor and the lessee to avoid the necessity of subdivision?
8. Does the lease include an option to purchase? If the lease is for a very long period of time and includes an option to purchase with a very small payment required upon the exercise of the option, that suggests that the lease is really a sale.
9. When the rent is payable. If all the rent is payable at the commencement, that factor suggests that the lease is more properly a sale.
10. The cost of ownership. If absolutely every cost of ownership is borne by the lessee, again that factor suggests that what the parties are attempting to do is transfer ownership while utilizing a lease.

[para20] I do not suggest that these factors are exhaustive. As I have stated, each case should be considered individually and all of the facts giving rise to the matter should be reviewed by the Court.

[para21] I turn to the case before me. As I have already stated, the term of the lease is 35 years. This is a long term, but not one that is unheard of. In Knowlton v. The Registrar of Land Titles et. al. (1982), 19 Alta L.R. (2d) 31 (Q.B.), Miller, J. dealt with a lease for a MacDonald's restaurant located in the parking lot area of a shopping centre complex. The restaurant itself was located on unsubdivided lands. The term of the lease was for 40 years with an option to renew for 10 years. The rent was payable at the commencement of the term in the amount of $535,000.00. The demised premises were not completely separated from the rest of the shopping centre lot, nor could they be dealt with completely freely by the lessee in any manner that it might desire. The lessor had a right of entry.

[para22] Miller, J. concluded that the lease was a bona fide lease of a portion of a shopping centre lot and did not constitute an unauthorized subdivision. In that context, Miller, J. was prepared to consider that a 40 year term renewable for a further 10 year period was not a sale.

[para23] There are however, some marked differences between this case and the circumstances in Knowlton v. the Registrar, supra. These include:

1. The nature of the property;
2. The number of parcels involved. There one parcel was involved, here 229 parcels are involved;
3. In the lease that has been granted by the Respondents, the lessor retains virtually no control;
4. The lease granted by the Respondents leaves the question of development to the lessee and directs the lessee to deal with the Tenants' Association established by the lessees and with the Development Authority. The rights relating to development have, therefore, been transferred to the lessees;
5. In Knowlton v. The Registrar, supra all development concerns had been dealt with. I am not satisfied that all development concerns have been dealt with in the leases granted by the Respondents. In fact, the leases specifically indicate that further development is contemplated and direct the lessees to deal with the Development Authority;
6. MacDonald's is a well known multinational corporation with an indefinite duration in terms of its natural life. The lessees in the case at bar (and I assume proposed lessees), do not constitute such corporations, but are individuals looking to secure vacation spots;
7. There was no pre-existing history in Knowlton v. The Registrar, supra, which pointed to a potential colourable transaction. Here, two attempts have been made to sell unsubdivided portions and these have failed. It is apparent that the lessor is attempting to gradually reduce the ownership rights conveyed to lessees or purchasers, so as to provide them with the maximum attributes of ownership possible and still fall within the characteristics of the lessor/lessee relationship. I am satisfied that the lessor is entitled to do this. However, if the lessor misses the mark such that what the lessor describes as being a lease, is really a sale, then s. 95(1) of the Land Titles Act has been breached and the contract is void for illegality.

[para24] Have the Respondents been successful in arranging their affairs so as to place themselves within the ambit of a true lease as opposed to a sale? The Respondents' own materials, circulated by them with the third contracts, are some indication of the Respondents' thinking regarding what is being conveyed by the third contracts. The third contract handouts circulated include the following statements:

Q. Why a 35 year lease?

A. 35 year lease as opposed to other terms is what the legal team recommended. They expressed 35 years as "one generation" which satisfied potential issues.

Q. I want ownership.

A. The lease program appears to be the only workable vehicle at this time. What's your age? Add 35 years to this, and the lease has similar characteristics of ownership. Also if the ownership were conveyed by way of a conventional plan, the price would be astronomically higher.

[para25] It is noteworthy that the lease provides for a form of management of all the 229 parcels and what are described as common areas within those parcels, that is almost identical to the form of management under a bare lands subdivision created under the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c.C-22. Of course, no Condominium Plan is proposed to be registered. However, the Condominium Property Act contains no provision requiring the registration of a Condominium Plan upon the institution of this form of management.

[para26] In my view, as part of the Courts inquiry, consideration should be had to the purpose of the legislation. I am satisfied that the purposes of the Land Titles Act and the Municipal Government Act provisions earlier referenced are as advanced by the Applicant, namely the security and certainty of title and the promotion of orderly and efficient development of land. In considering legislation very similar to s. 95 of the Land Titles Act, Duff, J. in Boulevard Heights Ltd. v. Veilleux (1915), 9 W.W.R. 742 at 745 stated:

I am disposed to think the better view to be that this enactment is intended to serve the general public interest in the security and certainty of title which is one of the main objects of the Land Titles Act.

[para27] I am satisfied that the entire scheme created by the third contract goes some distance to thwart these purposes.

[para28] At the hearing of this matter, I posed the scenario of the bankruptcy of the Respondents Half Moon Lake Resort Ltd. and Brian Lovig, and what protection would then be afforded to the lessees and proposed lessees as the agreement indicates that they are not even able to protect their interests by caveat. If they attempted to protect their interests by caveat, the Registrar would be required pursuant to the provisions of s. 652 of the Municipal Government Act to reject the caveat. The response from the Respondents was to the effect that leasehold interests are often subject to a mortgage and may be foreclosed out. This is particularly the case with respect to commercial premises, shopping centres, and the like. However, I am satisfied that it is not usual for all of the rent to be payable in advance. It is also frequently the case that shopping centre mortgagees who obtain title continue on with the lease; in recent economic times, it would be foolhardy to terminate the lease, thereby creating vacant space. Here, however, there is absolutely no advantage to a trustee in bankruptcy or a purchaser from that trustee carrying on with these leases as the entirety of the "rent" has already been paid to the Landlord.

[para29] If security of title is a purpose of the protection afforded by the Land Titles Act and the Municipal Government Act, then that purpose has been thwarted. What the lessees are receiving is insecurity of title.

[para30] Similarly, I have concerns that the second purpose of the relevant statutory regime, namely the orderly and efficient development of land, is, to some extent at least, being thwarted by the third contracts. Section 617 of the Municipal Government Act makes it clear that this is one of the purposes of Part 17 of the Municipal Government Act in which s. 615 is found. The leases themselves make it clear that continued development is contemplated as the process for such continued development is found within the lease. One can only speculate as to what issues proposed developments might raise and whether those issues will impact upon matters normally dealt with during the course of the process of subdivision approval. At a minimum, the sale or lease of a number of the lots does not comply with applicable development bylaws relating to setback from a body of water.

[para31] I am satisfied that the Court should look at both form and substance. Here substance departs from form. Having regard to all of the factors that I have enumerated, I am satisfied that the proposed leases include sufficient characteristics of sale so as to constitute a sale within the meaning attributed thereto in s. 95 (1) of the Land Titles Act. Consequently, the sale constituted within the leases is void for illegality.

[para32] Having come to this conclusion, I grant the Applicants the following relief:

- a) An order declaring that the purported leases pursuant to the third contracts are invalid, void, and illegal;
- b) An order granting a permanent injunction prohibiting the Respondents from soliciting purchasers for or otherwise leasing interests in the lands pursuant to the third contracts;
- c) An order requiring the Respondents to return any monies received pursuant to the third contracts to those individuals who paid them, without condition, within 2 months of the date of formal entry of the judgment emanating from these reasons;
- d) An order declaring that the Respondents are prohibited from selling or leasing any interest in the lands in question without prior court order and notice to the Applicants;
- e) An order that paragraph 4 of the Order of the Honourable Justice Moreau granted December 2, 1999, shall remain in effect notwithstanding the granting of final relief in this matter;
- f) An order that the Respondents shall not renew the mortgage currently registered in favour of Paragon Capital Corporation Ltd. or otherwise grant financial encumbrances respecting the lands without prior court order and notice to the Applicant.

[para33] The Applicant also applies for solicitor-client costs. It suggests that such costs are to be granted because of alleged misconduct by the Respondents in the conduct of this action. It provided a number of examples, but I am satisfied that those examples do not constitute anything close to the type of misconduct that is required for an award of costs on a solicitor and client basis. Consequently, the Applicant shall have costs on a party-party basis to be taxed. The Applicant also applies for court supervision of the Respondents' compliance with the orders that I have directed.

[para34] I am not satisfied that this matter calls for court supervision of my order. If the Respondents appeal, they may apply to the Court of Appeal for a stay respecting my order. Such a stay would render court supervision pointless. If the Respondents do not appeal, then it is my expectation that the Respondents will comply with the order and if they do not do so, the Applicant is of course in a position to take contempt proceedings. I consequently decline to direct court supervision as court supervision cannot be ordered with respect to every judgment or order made by this Court. I also come to this conclusion as the Respondents in their own brief indicate that if the transaction is determined to be a void transaction for illegality, then the Respondents will have to refund monies paid under the third contracts. I take that to mean that the Respondents intend to cooperate with the direction of this Court.

Canada Lands Co. CLC Ltd. v. Trizechahn Office Properties Ltd.

Between Canada Lands Company CLC Limited, applicant, and Trizechahn Office Properties Limited, respondent

Action No. 9903 23795

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Marshall J. Heard: January 14, 2000. Judgment: March 17, 2000. Filed: March 20, 2000. (30 paras.)

Counsel: Ken G. Nielsen, Q.C., for the applicant. Donald R. Cranston, Q.C., for the respondent.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

MARSHALL J.:--

INTRODUCTION

[para1] These applications arise because of the presence of a Waste Disposal System, which services the CN Tower and extends from the side of the Tower in Edmonton. The CN Tower is built on Lot 2 of lands owned by the Respondent, "Trizec", while nearly all of the compactor and dumpster of the Waste System are located on Lot 3, which is owned by the Applicant, "CLC".

[para2] After hearing the applications I found for the Respondent. These are the written reasons I undertook to provide.

[para3] CN was the registered owner from 1964 to 1995 of the lands now known as Lots 2, 3 and 4. In 1964 CN leased the lands which are Lot 2 to Allied Development Corp. Ltd. for 99 years. The CN Tower was then constructed on Lot 2.

[para4] In 1975 the leasehold title of Allied was assigned to a predecessor of Trizec. In 1995 CN sold Lot 2, including the CN Tower, to Trizec. Later in 1995 CN agreed to sell Lots 3 and 4 to CLC. Lot 3 is a large lot used for parking to the east of the Tower while Lot 4 is a similar lot west of the Tower. The title to Lots 3 and 4 was registered in the name of CLC in January 1998.

[para5] CLC purchased Lot 3 subject only to the encumbrances on the Certificate of Title and unregistered interests under s. 65 of the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-5, none of which refer expressly to the placement of the Waste System.

[para6] For at least 13 years, and likely for substantially longer, the Waste System that is the subject of this proceeding has been located in its present location. The exact time period is unclear because none of the Edmonton officers or employees of these parties can be certain. The Waste System is partly on Lot 2, but predominantly on Lot 3. The dumpster and almost all of the compactor are located on a concrete foundation on Lot 3. The concrete pad is approximately 20 feet by 54 feet in size. The waste chute is affixed to the exterior of the CN Tower and the bottom of the chute is secured to the compactor. The compactor is affixed to the concrete foundation by large bolts embedded into the concrete. The dumpster and recycling bin sit on the concrete pad at the end of the compactor. Waste from the CN Tower is discharged through the chute. The waste travels down the chute and into the compactor. The hydraulic compactor compresses the waste before depositing it into the dumpster. Waste removal trucks then empty the dumpster, or replace it with an empty dumpster.

[para7] The Waste System has been continuously used to dispose of all waste generated by occupants of the CN Tower for at least 13 years. For all of that time, CN, and then CLC, have permitted access to the dumpster and compactor over Lot 3 in order to maintain the Waste System as well as for waste removal. The Waste System is plainly and easily visible from any part of Lot 3.

[para8] CLC has entered into an agreement to sell Lots 3 and 4 to Terra Park Alberta Inc. Terra Park proposes to continue using Lot 3 primarily as a parking lot. CLC demanded that Trizec remove the Waste System from Lot 3 in November 1999. Trizec then advised CLC that it took the position that it is legally entitled to maintain the Waste System at its present location. The present application then ensued.

[para9] Counsel agreed before me that the only substantial factual issue is whether the Waste System can be relocated without substantial cost. While I cannot make any determination on this issue, it is nevertheless apparent that the Waste System was constructed to service the particular building and is fixed to a concrete pad which was constructed for it. It also appears that there is no ready means of relocating the Waste System.

[para10] CLC sought a declaration that Lot 3 is free and clear of any easement or any other right claimed by Trizec in relation to the Waste System. Trizec sought a declaration that it is entitled to maintain and operate its Waste System in its present location on Lot 3 pursuant to an implied easement.

[para11] Section 65(1) of the Land Titles Act states:

65(1) The land mentioned in any certificate of title granted under this Act is, by implication and without any special mention therein, subject to

(g) any right of way or other easement granted or acquired under any Act or law in force in Alberta.

[para12] In Petro-Canada Inc. v. Shaganappi Village Shopping Centre Ltd. (1990) 76 Alta. L.R. (2d) 162 (C.A.) the Court stated with reference to s. 65(1)(g) at page 164:

the twinning of "law" with "Act" usually indicates that "law" is being used in the sense of the common law. the common law can and does create a right of entry or easement in the absence of express contract. For example, the common law ceded to the holder of the mineral title a right, even in the absence of an express agreement, to enter on the surface to exploit the minerals: see the history by Dea, J. in Cabre Exploration Ltd. v. Arndt and Alberta, 44 Alta. L.R. (2d) 250, [1986] 4 W.W.R. 261, 28 D.L.R. (4th) 747, 35 L.C.R. 213, 22 C.R.R. 319, 69 A.R. 296 (Q.B.). Another example is easement by necessity: see Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed., vol. 14, paras. 153-156.

It is evident that the "easement" referred to in s. 65(1)(g) includes an easement acquired under common law.

[para13] Trizec asserted that it is entitled to maintain and operate the Waste System in its present location because it enjoys an easement. It argued that three kinds of easements were established:

- (a) an implied easement of apparent accommodation, also known as an implied grant,
- (b) an implied easement from the intentions of Trizec and CN in the sale transaction, and
- (c) an implied easement of necessity.

AN IMPLIED EASEMENT OF APPARENT ACCOMMODATION

[para14] In Condominium Plan No. 7810477 (Owners) v. Condominium Plan No. 7711723 (Owners) (1997) 55 Alta. L.R. (3d) 198 (Q.B.) Justice Paperny summarized the law respecting this type of implied easement.

The doctrine of implied grant stems from the equity in the cases. Generally speaking, when the owner of two adjoining lots conveys one of them, he impliedly grants to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements that are necessary to the reasonable use of the property granted and which are, at the time of the grant, used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the parts granted. This doctrine is based in the principle that a person cannot derogate from his own grant. See Wheeldon v. Burrows (1879), 48 L.J. Ch. 853 (Eng. C.A.), at 856; Hart v. McMullin (1899), 32 N.S.R. 340 (N.S. S.C.), confirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada (1900), 30 S.C.R. 245 (S.C.C.); Fullerton v. Randall (1918), 44 D.L.R. 356 (N.S. C.A.).

Upon the severance of a tenement by devise into several parts, not only do rights of way of strict necessity pass, but also rights of way which are necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part devised and which had been and were up to the time of the devise used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of such parts. See 11 Hals., 2nd ed., 287 cited in DuVernet v. Eisener, [1951] 4 D.L.R. 406 (N.S. C.A.) at 412.

[para15] The rule in Wheeldon v. Burrows has been applied in various Canadian cases. It provides that to establish an easement of this nature, Trizec must show:

- (a) the easement was continuous and apparent,
- (b) the easement was necessary for the reasonable use of the property granted, and
- (c) the easement was used by the owner before the transfer.

The rule, as stated by Professor Ziff, "serves as a form of consumer protection, allowing a purchaser to acquire amenities (in the form of easements) that the purchased land appears to enjoy": Principles of Property Law, 2d ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1996) at p. 339.

(a) The Easement Has Been Continuous and Apparent

[para16] Access to Lot 3 for the use and maintenance of the Waste System has been permitted without complaint from CN or its successor, CLC, for not less than thirteen years. Trizec's use of the Waste System, at first as lessee and since 1995, as an owner of Lot 2, has been continuous and notorious. Finally, the dimensions and location of the Waste System suggest that its existence on Lot 3 was apparent to interested third parties, including CLC.

(b) The Easement is Necessary for the Reasonable Enjoyment of the Property

[para17] Trizec need not prove an easement of necessity but that reasonable enjoyment of the property cannot be had without the easement; Megarry & Wade The Law of Real Property, Steven & Sons, London, 1984. The present Waste System has been in place for over thirteen years and is necessary for the disposal of waste accumulated by the occupants of the CN Tower. The CN Tower is an office building. Modern office buildings require an efficient Waste Disposal System. To move the current Waste System off Lot 3 would involve considerable inconvenience, both in terms of finding an alternate location and the actual physical relocation of the Waste System. Retaining use and access to the Waste System in its current location is necessary to maintain the property as an office building and for the reasonable enjoyment of that property.

(c) The Easement Was Used by the Owner, CN, for the Benefit of Lot 2 Prior to the Grant to Trizec

[para18] The Waste Disposal System was built more than 13 years ago. It has always been located in part on Lot 3 and the owner or occupant of Lot 2 has accessed Lot 3 in order to use and maintain the Waste System. Therefore, prior to the sale to Trizec, CN or those who leased through CN, were in continuous use of the Waste System and consequently were benefiting from use of and access to Lot 3.

[para19] CLC maintains that at the time of the transfer of Lots 2 and 3, CN was not benefiting from the use of the Waste System and access to it; the beneficiary was its tenant, Trizec or its predecessors. Therefore, CLC submits that the third arm of the test in Wheeldon v. Burrows is not met.

[para20] It appears to me that it matters not that CN was not the tenant exercising use of the Waste System. It owned both lots and permitted the tenant of Lot 2 to make use of Lot 3 to service the system. The construction and use of the Waste System on Lots 2 and 3 occurred while CN owned both lots. This amounted to creation of an easement prior to 1995.

[para21] In this regard, the case is similar to Weeks and Toporowski v. Rogalski, [1954] 4 D.L.R. 439 (Ont. H.C.J.) (reversed by Ont. C.A. on other grounds, 1 D.L.R. (2d) 709). The Court held at p. 447:

While the respective premises were not occupied by the owner personally, they were occupied by him through his tenants and I think it could be properly said that the right to occupy and use the part of the room in question projecting onto or into the other property was a continuous and apparent easement, necessary to the reasonable use of the property granted, and was used for the benefit of the part granted to the plaintiff Toporowski.

[para22] Accordingly, the Court found that the owner of the adjoining lots conveyed an easement of apparent accommodation to the Plaintiff when he transferred the land.

IMPLIED EASEMENT BASED ON THE INTENTIONS OF CN AND TRIZEC

[para23] I am satisfied the facts disclose that Trizec acquired an implied easement consistent with the intention of CN and Trizec when Lot 2 was transferred to Trizec.

[para24] In Barton v. Raine (1980) 114 D.L.R. (3d) 702 (Ont. C.A.), the Court found an implied easement based on intention where an owner of two adjacent properties with a common driveway sold one of the properties to his son. The Court held that the long established use of the driveway by the occupants of both properties was indicative of the parties' mutual intention that an implied easement was created with respect to the driveway. In determining the parties' intentions at the time of the father's transfer to his son, the Court found that it was not necessary to have "affirmative evidence" of the parties' intentions: Barton, supra at 711. Rather, the trial judge in Barton v. Raine [1979] O.J. No. 3150 at para. 46, held that the Court can determine whether the requisite intent existed through application of the following "officious bystander" test:

Prima facie that which in any contract is left to be implied and need not be expressed is something so obvious that it goes without saying; so that, if, while the parties were making their bargain, an officious bystander were to suggest some express provision for it in the agreement, they would testily suppress him with a common "Oh, of course!"

[para25] As confirmed by the Court of Appeal in Barton, supra at 709, the easement must be both an obvious and "necessary inference from the circumstances in which the conveyance was made". There is no evidence of the precise understanding between CN and Trizec regarding the Waste System in 1995. However, it seems likely from the undisputed facts that continued use of the Waste System by Trizec was assured.

[para26] When CN sold Lot 2 to Trizec in 1995, the parties already had a twenty-year relationship. From March 1975 to September 1995, Trizec leased Lot 2 from CN. During this lease, Trizec used and maintained the Waste Disposal System on Lot 3. During Trizec's lease, CN did not complain about Trizec's use of Lot 3 for this purpose. Moreover, after Trizec bought Lot 2, neither CN nor its successor CLC complained about Trizec's continued use of Lot 3 for the Waste Disposal System until the present action. As held in Barton, supra at 709 with respect to the driveway, the existence of the Waste Disposal System on Lot 3 was an "accepted reality". Moreover, the Waste Disposal System, like the driveway in Barton, supra at 709, was a:

tangible physical fact, there to be seen by all who chose to see it, and the manner of its use would have been obvious to even the most casual observer of the physical features of the two properties.

[para27] In light of these circumstances, the reasonable inference is that CN and Trizec intended that the owner of Lot 2 would continue to have use of Lot 3 for the purposes of the Waste System.

EASEMENT OF NECESSITY

[para28] I am satisfied the proof of the element of necessity is so stringent that Trizec fails on that point. As stated in Condominium Plan No. 7810477, supra, at p. 353, it only applies "where there is no other way by which the grantee can get to the land so granted him, or over the land of the grantee where the land of the grantor is landlocked". Not only must a strict necessity be proven, the necessity cannot be proven by the party claiming the right-of-way. Mere inconvenience is not sufficient. These and other requirements, which are not met here, are discussed in Re Stone (1982) 38 N.B.R. (2d) 492 (N.B.T.D.).

CONCLUSION

[para29] I do not believe that a finding of an implied easement in these circumstances violates a fundamental principle of the Alberta Torrens system: indefeasibility of title. A primary goal of the Torrens system is provision to a purchaser of a title that discloses all interests affecting the parcel of land.

[para30] While the presence of the Waste System is not evident on the Certificate of Title for Lot 3, the Title, under the Land Titles Act, is subject to easements which exist by Alberta law. CN sold the Tower to Trizec without reference to it not having continuing use of its Waste System in its existing location. The Waste System was readily visible as an encroachment on Lot 3. CLC cannot complain of its presence at this point. On these particular facts, I see no erosion of the essential features of our Alberta Land Titles law.

York Condominium Corp. No. 253 v. Stobbs (Litigation guardian of)

Between York Condominium Corporation No. 253, and Mabel Adorea Stobbs by her litigation guardian Lauren Bailey

Court File No. 1183/00

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Stong J. March 7, 2001. (7 paras.)

Counsel: Joseph W. Ryan, for the plaintiff. Ben V. Hanuka, for the defendant.

[para1] STONG J.:-- The defendant, Mabel Adorea Stobbs, is the registered owner of Unit 9, Level 8 of York Condominium Plan No. 253, registered in the Land Registry Office for Land Titles of Toronto.

[para2] Ms. Stobbs has become disabled by Alzheimer's disease and her affairs are being tended to by her daughter, Lauren Bailey, acting under power of attorney. Ms. Stobbs was moved to a facility that could minister to the needs of her progressive condition and Ms. Bailey assumed occupancy of the unit.

[para3] The defendant's common expense account fell into arrears as a result of failure to pay any money in respect of common expenses for the months of July, August and September, 1999.

[para4] Despite frequent reminders of the outstanding balance owing on common expenses for the unit and the obligation to make the payments and the consequences that might flow from a failure to pay those outstanding common expense arrears, no payments were made which resulted in the plaintiff registering, on September 24, 1999, a Notice of Lien for the common expenses, an action to which legal expenses necessarily attached.

[para5] By written notice from the property manager, Mrs. Sandy Bristow, dated September 24, 1999, the defendant was advised that the outstanding arrears for common expenses was $1,566.03. By letter of the same date from the solicitors for the plaintiff, the defendant was advised that the arrears for the common expenses were $1,537.50 to which were added interest and legal expenses. Although the difference in the arrears as recorded by the different sources is minimal, did the obvious difference contribute to the delay in meeting the demands of the plaintiff at the time? The material before this court is silent in that regard and therefore is not helpful. I note as well that in her affidavit, Mrs. Bristow attests that the letter from the solicitors for the plaintiff dated September 24, 1999, advises the defendant that the outstanding arrears for common expenses was $1,066.03. Is this a typographical error in her affidavit, or does it alert the reader to the fact that there may have been more than one or two figures being proffered as representing the arrears? What degree of confidence is this court to place in the ability of the plaintiff's agents to have presented an accurate picture to the defendant or her daughter acting on her behalf, particularly in light of the discrepancies which exist in the material presented in support of the plaintiff's motion? Again, the defendant's material on this motion does not give any assistance to this court with respect any discussions, if any, around arriving at an accurate figure for the outstanding amount of common arrears. Such information could very well have impacted on the decision this court has to make with respect the legitimacy of the mounting legal fees in this matter and whether the defendant should be liable for any or all. Therefore in the circumstances, costs will be awarded to the plaintiff.

[para6] During submissions, counsel for the plaintiff acknowledged that there are no outstanding arrears for common expenses at the time of the hearing of this motion, although the punctuality of their payment leaves much to be desired. There has been no payment to date on the legal fees which have accumulated.

1) This court issues an order for vacant possession of the unit involved, but its execution is held in abeyance pending the outcome of the conditions set out below.

2) Except as noted otherwise in the judicial endorsements on this file, and with the exception of the court appearance on January 16, 2001 for which each side will bear its own costs, all costs are to be awarded to the plaintiff on a party and party scale. This court would have ordered costs on a solicitor and client basis because a default in payment by one owner impacts directly on the other owners such that they are left to shoulder the arrears, however this court does not enjoy the confidence it needs in the ability of the plaintiff's agents to have presented to this owner an accurate accounting of the arrears in the beginning. Although the material presented is silent in this regard, the natural conclusion is that inaccurate and sometimes conflicting information could lead to discussion and delay in meeting one's obligations and influence the necessity of protracted legal expenses. In the absence of assisting evidence but as a result of the conflicting evidence arising out of the plaintiff's material, this court has made the order that costs payable to the plaintiff be assessed on a party and party basis.

3) Subject to the above, costs are to be assessed forthwith after taxation thereof.

4) After costs have been determined, the defendant will have 60 days within which to pay them to the plaintiff, failing which the breach of her obligations under the Condominium Act will be considered to subsist and the order for vacant possession can be executed.

Court File Nos. 00-CV-189647 and 00-CV-191039

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Master Saunders Heard: November 15, 2000. Judgment: December 30, 2000. (31 paras.)

Counsel: S. Naftolin and J. Armel, for the applicant home buyers. S.M. Addison, for the lien claimant, Vanbots Construction Corp. D. Martins, for the lien claimant, Tapes Drywall & Acoustics Corp.

[para1] MASTER SAUNDERS:-- This is a motion brought by the owners of 8 condominium units in a new condominium building at 500 Richmond St. West in the City of Toronto, to discharge the several claims for lien registered against the title to the above units.

[para2] There are 114 units in this building, however, this motion only deals with 8 of those units. The people who are home buyers on this motion are those individuals who have purchased units in the building and against which the lien claimants have registered their claims for lien.

[para3] The applicants have argued that they are home buyers within the definition of "home buyer" as set out in subsection 1 of section 1 of the Construction Lien Act. In such a case the liens would not attach to the interests of the applicants herein for the definition of owner does not include a home buyer.

[para4] In subsection 1(1) of the Construction Lien Act, owner is defined as follows:

"owner means any person, including the Crown, having an interest in a premises at whose request and,

- (a) upon whose credit, or
- (b) on whose behalf, or
- (c) with whose privity or consent, or
- (d) for whose direct benefit, an improvement is made to the premises but does not include a home buyer; ("proprietaire")

[para5] In the same section, "home buyer" is also defined, and that definition is as follows:

"home buyer" means a person who buys the interest of an owner in a premises that is a home, whether built or not at the time the agreement of purchase and sale in respect thereof is entered into, provided,

- (a) not more than 30 per cent of the purchase price, excluding money held in trust under section 53 or the Condominium Act, is paid prior to the conveyance, and
- (b) the home is not conveyed until it is ready for occupancy, evidenced in the case of a new home by the issuance of a municipal permit authorizing occupancy or the issuance under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act of a certificate of completion and possession; ("acquéreur d'un logement")

[para6] Subsection (a) under the definition of "home buyer" does not apply in the case, only subsection (b).

[para7] The argument put forward by the lien claimants is that the applicants, who have referred to themselves as home buyers, are not home buyers within the meaning of section 1(1) of the Act, and are therefore owners under the Construction Lien Act.

[para8] Firstly, the argument of the lien claimants is that for the applicants to come within the definition of "Home Buyer" as set out in section 1(1) of the Construction Lien Act, the applicants must prove that the home is ready for occupancy. I agree that the onus is on the applicants to prove "ready for occupancy", and from the evidence before me, I find that the applicants have satisfied that onus. They have produced pursuant to the definition of "home buyer" in section 1(1) of the Act, the municipal permit authorizing occupancy issued by the City of Toronto. This certificate was applied for and received by the general contractor and lien claimant Vanbots Construction Corp. hereinafter referred to as Vanbots. In addition each of the eight purchasers have been issued a certificate of completion and possession under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. These two documents are set out in the definition section of "Home Buyer" as evidence that the home is ready for occupancy. In fact, only one of these certificates was necessary.

[para9] The onus is now on the lien claimants to prove that notwithstanding the production of the municipal permit and the certificate of completion and possession, the homes were not ready for occupancy. The lien claimants have argued that the production of the permit and the certificate above referred to are only evidence of occupancy, not proof of occupancy. I agree, but

I find that the production of the two certificates is enough to shift the onus to the lien claimants to prove that the homes were not ready for occupancy.

[para10] I also must consider the meaning of "home" and whether the applicants have purchased a "home" referred to in the subsection defining "home buyer". Under the definition section, "home" is described as a condominium one-family dwelling unit. This subsection is as follows:

Sec. (1) "home" means,

(a) a self-contained one-family dwelling, detached or attached to one or more others by a common wall.

(b) a building composed of two self-contained, one-family dwellings under one ownership, or

(c) a condominium one-family dwelling unit, including the common interests appurtenant thereto, and includes any structure or works used in conjunction therewith; "(logement")

[para11] Counsel for the lien claimants referred to other definitions of home, especially that found in Blacks Law Dictionary. Since there is a definition of the word "home" in the Construction Lien Act, I therefore find that the definition found in Blacks Law Dictionary, need not be considered. The fact that 4 of the units were not going to be lived in by the purchasers but were going to be rented out, does not affect the definition of "home". There is nothing in the definition in the Construction Lien Act that says that the purchaser of the "home" under the Act has to live in the property.

[para12] I therefore find that the condominium units referred to in this motion are all homes under the definition of "home" in the Construction Lien Act.

[para13] The main question therefore is whether or not the homes were ready for occupancy, notwithstanding the municipal permit authorizing occupancy and the certificates of completion and possession under the Ontario New Homes Warranties Act.

[para14] In Section 1(1) of the Construction Lien Act, subsection (b) of the "home buyer" definition refers to the issuance of a municipal permit authorizing occupancy. Filed in tab 1, of the Home Buyers Exhibit Brief is the actual certificate of occupancy, dated February 11, 2000, which states that the area to be occupied is the complete building. The certificate also states as follows"

"The above mentioned building erected under the above building permit is authorized for occupancy pursuant to subsection 2.4.3 of the Ontario Building Code."

[para15] The heading for subsection 2.4.3 of the Ontario Building Code is "Occupancy of unfinished building" and thereafter there are further subsections from (a) to (o) setting out when the "Chief Building Official" shall issue a permit authorizing occupation of a building. Therefore the certificate of occupancy by itself does not indicate the building is complete and ready for occupancy. However, the section defining a home buyer does not set out the type of occupancy permit that is required under this section. I have assumed that it is the type that will allow a purchaser to occupy the home.

[para16] The first subsection under s. 2.4.3., being 2.4.3.1.(1) states

"2.4.3.1.(1) "a person may occupy or permit to be occupied any building or part thereof that has not been fully completed at the date of occupation where the Chief Building Official, or a person designated by the Chief Building Official has issued a permit authorizing occupation of the building or part thereof, prior to its completion and in accordance with Sentence (2)."

[para17] Sentence (2) states:

"2. The Chief Building Official or person designated by the Chief Building Official shall issue a permit authorizing occupation of a building where " and thereafter are subsections from (a) to (o).

[para18] However in the certificate of occupancy filed on this motion, there is no indication of which subsection from (a) to (o) is applicable. I find that what is contemplated under the Construction Lien Act, in the definition of home buyer, is a municipal permit authorizing occupancy which is exactly what the applicant home buyers have received.

[para19] In addition, there was also issued under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (O.N.H.W.P.) a certificate of completion and possession, in respect to each of the 8 units. In motion record #1, under tab F, there is filed the Ontario New Home Warranty certificate for each of the 8 units involved in this motion, plus other units in the project. I find that this is the Ontario new Home Warranty certificate as contemplated by the Construction Lien Act, under the definition of "Home Buyer." This is the certificate of completion and possession which is the evidence contemplated by the Act to show that the home is ready for occupancy.

[para20] There is filed by counsel for the lien claimants, in a brief called "Compendium of Documents of Vanbots Construction Corporation", certificates under the Ontario New Home Warranty Programme for each of the 8 units. The difference between these certificates and those filed in the motion record #1, tab F is that attached to these certificates are deficiency lists, which are quite lengthy, (in one case there are four pages of notes). Many of these lists state that the appliances have not been installed. With these deficiency lists, the lien claimants are attempting to show that the condominiums were not ready for occupancy. However, also filed on the hearing of the motion were other deficiency lists for each of the 8 units. These lists show the deficiencies to be much fewer than that shown in the deficiency lists in the Compendium of Documents. These lists show that the condominiums seem to have been ready for occupancy, for the deficiencies set out therein were minor. These lists were revised on February 7, 2000, after the deficiency lists attached to the certificates in the "Compendium of Documents of Vanbots Constructions Corporation".

[para21] Also affidavits have been filed by each of the individual owners, the applicants herein, and they have sworn that the units were ready for occupancy. However, that by itself is not enough since it is certainly to their benefit that the units be ready for occupancy.

[para22] It was also argued by counsel for the lien claimants that s. 2 of the the Construction Lien Act must be considered. This is the section dealing with whether a contract is substantially performed. I find that if the home is ready for occupancy, I need not concern myself with this section on this motion.

[para23] In addition to the two certificates filed by the applicant Home buyers, being the O.N.H.W.P. certificate and the Certificate of Occupancy, counsel for the applicants produced the transcript of Mr. Moscrop's cross-examination on June 16, 2000 on his affidavit, sworn April 3, 2000, in respect to an action brought by Vanbots against Cityscape Richmond Corporation and the architects. In this examination at p. 155, Q. 729, Mr. Moscrop stated that this project was ready for occupancy as of February 15, and that purchasers began moving into the project on February 15, 2000. Mr. Moscrop is a representative of the lien claimant Vanbots and was a Project Manager on the site. I should also point out that even though the cross-examination was in respect to an affidavit filed in a different action, the parties agreed that the questions asked and the answers given by Mr. Moscrop shall be treated as evidence given by Vanbots for the purpose of this motion.

[para24] The difficulty is that in the cross-examination of Mr. Moscrop on the 10th day of August, 2000 at p. 48 Mr. Moscrop stated that the units were not ready for occupancy which is diametrically opposed to what he said in his cross-examination on June 16, 2000.

[para25] In addition to the affidavits, cross-examination and certificates, I have also examined the last deficiency lists filed. They were prepared by Vanbots and I find that there is nothing listed in those lists that would indicate that the units were not ready for occupancy.

[para26] There was also some argument put forward by counsel for the lien claimants as to the date of purchase of 4 of these units and the relationship of the purchasers of the other 4 units to the development company Cityscape.

[para27] The units in question were purchased at different times by 8 different people. These units were conveyed to the purchasers on or about February 15, 2000 and the claims for lien were all registered on about February 21, 2000, after the conveyance of the units to the applicants herein.

[para28] Four of the 8 units were purchased in the year 2000 and were therefore subject to a quick closing date. The lien claimants are claiming that since the purchase was so close to the closing date, it could be inferred that these applicants purchased the units in question for the purpose of defeating the lien claimants claim for lien. From the material before me I find that this has not been proven. There is no evidence that the purchasers had purchased the units to claim priority over the lien claimants, and there is no evidence that these 4 purchasers were related to any of the officers of the development company Cityscape Richmond Corp.

[para29] The other 4 units were purchased in 1997, and in respect to three of these, the purchasers were related to the officers of the company. The 4th unit was purchased by the principal officers of Cityscape. I cannot find from the evidence before me that these latter 4 units were purchased to defeat the lien claimants, since there were no lien claimants in existence when the units were purchased; in fact I do not believe construction had even started.

[para30] Mr. Moscrop also indicated that to obtain the certificate of occupancy the systems in the building must be in proper working order which would be the fire alarm system, the elevators, the sprinklers, the mechanical system including the air make-up units, the boilers, the fans, smoke and heat detectors, and the fire pump and standpipe. All these systems were working and therefore the certificate of occupancy was issued. I therefore find that the units were ready for occupancy and that the applicants herein are home buyers under the Construction Lien Act and are entitled to an order discharging the lien claimants herein and vacating the certificates of action.

[para31] The parties may speak to me to obtain a time to argue the costs of this motion.

CBR# 295Singer v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program

Between Allen & Nancy Singer, applicants (appellants), and Ontario New Home Warranty Program, respondent (respondent in Appeal)

Divisional Court File No. 372/98

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Divisional Court Then, Coe and Blair JJ. December 14, 2000. (9 paras.)

Counsel: Kevin D. Sherkin, for the applicants (appellants). James C. Tory and John Terry, for the respondent (respondent in Appeal).

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] BLAIR and THEN JJ.-- By letter dated October 23, 2000, Mr. Sherkin requested clarification as to whether the majority of the Court in its reasons released on October 20, 2000 intended that the applicants would be entitled to interest on the amounts determined by that judgment to be payable to the applicants by the Warranty Program, and consequently to an amount in excess of the $20,000 payment limit, by virtue of subsection 6(2) of the Regulation.

[para2] Mr. Tory and Mr. Terry filed a lengthy brief in response which in effect seeks a reconsideration of one aspect of the majority decision and which articulates at some length the various ways in which the Majority has fallen into error. Those submissions are more appropriately addressed to a further Appellate Court, however, and we do not think them necessary for a determination of the narrower question of clarification raised by applicants' counsel. Mr. Sherkin did not invite, nor did the Court request, a re-argument of the appeal.

[para3] I propose, as part of this addendum to the majority reasons, to clarify certain matters pertaining to the interest question. In its reasons for decision, the Majority concluded that the pre-judgment interest awarded as part of the damage judgment granted by White J. constituted an aspect of the "financial loss" sustained as a result of the vendor's failure to perform the contract. The total amounts indicated therefore represented "the amount of such damage" that the Singers were "entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund": Ontario New Home Warranty Program Act, subsection 14(1). In assessing the damages, the Majority took into consideration the tax benefits which the Singers had received, and deducted them from the financial losses sustained, before arriving at the amount to be paid out of the fund.

[para4] The Majority omitted to specify in its reasons, however, whether the Singers were entitled to interest under subsection 6(2) of the Regulations under the Act.

[para5] Subsections 6(1) and (2) of the Regulation state:

6(1) a purchaser who has a claim under clause 14(1)(a) of the Act in respect of a purchase agreement entered into after the 30th of June, 1988 is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund an amount for damages arising from the breach of the agreement by the vendor that does not exceed $20,000.

(2) In the case of a home that is a condominium unit, the maximum limit under subsection (1) is increased by the amount of any interest owing on the amount to be paid out of the guarantee fund under subsection (1).

[para6] Thus, the Regulation contemplates that interest may be awarded on the amounts to be paid out of the fund, and it specifies that, in the case of condominium units, the $20,000 cap on amounts to be paid may be increased if interest causes the total to exceed that limit. The Regulation defines interest to mean "the interest at the rate or rates prescribed under the Condominium Act required to be paid by the vendor on deposits".

[para7] The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, itself, neither defines nor mentions "interest". However, it is clear from the provisions of subsection 14(1) that the Legislature contemplated purchasers would be compensated for their damages for financial loss resulting from a vendor's failure to perform the contract for the provision of the condominium unit, and that such purchasers are entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund "the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations". In terms of the damages for financial losses sustained, those limits are $20,000. However, in the case of condominium units, that amount may be increased to take into account interest payable on the up-to-$20,000 amount to be paid.

[para8] I interpret the foregoing provisions of the Act and the Regulation to mean that a successful claimant against the Warranty Plan under subsection 14(1) of the Act is entitled to receive interest on the amount to be paid out of the guarantee fund, and that the purchaser is entitled to be paid that interest at the rate set out in the Condominium Act, as described above. While neither the ONHWP Act nor the Regulation stipulate as of when that interest should be paid, it makes sense that it should be paid at least from the date upon which the Warranty Programs order was made. To hold otherwise would be to erode the purchasers' ability to recover the true financial losses, and put a premium on delays in the process.

[para9] I would accordingly award the Singers interest at the Condominium Act rate on the amounts stipulated in the majority decision of the Court, payable from the date of the Warranty Program's initial decision denying the applicants' claims, namely November 25, 1992.

CBR# 386

Yuen v. Peel Condominium Corp. 492

Between William Wai Chung Yuen and Anan Investment Co. Ltd., and Peel Condominium Corporation 492 and Sheppard Group

Court File No. 00-BN-0559

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Durno J. August 23, 2000. (19 paras.)

Counsel: Lawrence Wong, for the applicants. David Ruben, for the respondents.

[para1] DURNO J. (endorsement):-- The motion requires two areas to be addressed:

i) Is the Applicant responsible, jointly and severally, with the tenant for the outstanding common expenses, utilities and costs in relation to units 20, 21 and 22? If so, should interest be payable on the outstanding balance?

ii) Should the liens registered on the three units in 1996 and 1999 be discharged and the scope of those liens?

Is the Applicant Responsible to the Arrears?

[para2] Section 32 of the Condominium Act provides the "owner" shall contribute towards the common expenses "specified in the declaration." The definition of owner does not include a tenant.

[para3] The declaration provides each owner shall: pay his proportionate share of the common expenses (s. 9), require all agents, employees, lessees, licensees invitees and customers and other occupants to comply with the Act, declaration, by-laws and rules (s. 16(a)) and shall require his tenants to comply with the Act, declaration, by-laws and rules of the corporation.

[para4] The declaration provides any owner leasing his unit shall not be relieved from any of his obligations with respect to the unit, which obligation shall be joint and several with his tenant (s. 19).

[para5] Section 31 of the declaration provides the failure to take action to enforce any provision of the Act, declaration, by-laws or rules irrespective of the number of violations or breaches which may occur, shall not constitute a waiver of the right to do so thereafter, nor be deemed to abrogate or waive any such provision.

[para6] Finally, sections 23 and 24 of the declaration provide where the owner defaults in paying water services or hydro, until the monies are recovered, the amount outstanding shall form part of the common expenses.

[para7] In the lease the Applicants entered with their tenant, the tenant agreed to pay the common expenses and to conform to all by-laws and rules.

[para8] The Applicants voluntarily entered into the purchase of the units with the terms referred to above. They were aware of the "ground rules." In particular that they remained liable for the common expenses "as specified in the declaration". The provisions are clear.

[para9] While the Applicant argued the Respondent's lack of diligence in collecting and enforcing the tenant's liability according to the lease should relieve it, completely or partially, from their obligations, the waiver provision in s. 31 is a complete answer to that submission. The Applicant was aware of the declaration terms before entering the agreement to purchase.

[para10] Similarly, the submission the Respondents failed to exercise the proper standard of care in accordance with s. 24 of the Act is answered by s. 31 of the declaration. In addition, there is no evidentiary basis upon which I could conclude the directors of the corporation failed to exercise their powers or discharge their duties honestly or in good faith.

[para11] While the Applicant also argued the equities should favour the owners, for close to four years they received rent from the tenants and apparently made no efforts whatsoever to determine if the tenant was complying with the obligations which the Applicant was precluded from transferring totally to the tenant. While the Applicant may have sold units at a loss, that is not relevant to the determination of their liability.

[para12] The Applicant is responsible for the arrears jointly and severally with the tenant regardless of the liens issues.

[para13] As regards interest, it will be payable from August 17, 1999, the date the Applicant was advised of the amount in default. Interest will be payable at the rate of 24% per year, compounded monthly. By-laws Art. 11, para 6. Again the Applicant was aware of the provision.

THE LIENS

1996 Liens

[para14] No issue is taken that the liens were properly registered in 1996. The issue is whether they should have been discharged. Several facts lead me to conclude they should be discharged. First, when the Applicant requested the amounts outstanding, the Respondent gave a detailed reply in the August 17, 1999 letter. There is no reference to the outstanding fees associated with the liens. Second, had the Respondent taken the position the three liens were still effective, there was no need to register the 1999 liens since no further notice or registration was required in respect of "default in payment occurring or continuing after registration." S. 32(5) of the Condominium Act. Third, there is no explanation why two units would have fees of $75.00 and one $45.00. Fourth, the reference in submissions to the three $50.00 fees noted on each lien does not coincide with the amount alleged to be outstanding. It appears the real basis of the Respondent's position is, since they were never discharged they could not have been paid the fees. While the affidavit of Jim Fung states the fees were not paid, the above noted factors persuade me it would be inappropriate to permit them to remain. The 1996 liens are discharged.

1999 Liens

[para15] The issue with respect to these liens is what amounts are included. No dispute is taken that common expense arrears for three months before the registration are properly included. The inclusion of the one year arrears for utilities is disputed.

[para16] I do not agree with the Respondent's interpretation of paragraphs 23 and 24 of the By-laws. The sections provide the municipality or utility may bill the corporation which may have the obligation to collect from each unit owner. They indicate the corporation, at its sole discretion, will bring an action against the defaulting owner to recover the amounts owing. Finally, until such money is recovered the outstanding amount shall form part of the common expenses and be paid by the corporation as part of the common expenses. I do not regard the final sentence as contingent on any action to recover the funds on behalf of the corporation. When the funds are not paid they become part of the common expenses and shall be paid.

[para17] Mr. Rubin contended the corporation would get a bill for the entire condominium. They would have sub metres to determine each unit's share and bill each owner. The corporation would pay only the amounts actually collected. He argued it was not until the corporation paid the arrears in November of 1999 that they became a common expense. Mr. Fung states the corporation decided in November of 1999 to exercise their discretion to take steps to collect the outstanding amounts, not that they paid the funds then. There is also no evidence an action has been commenced.

While I agree the arrears became a common expense there is nothing in para. 23 or 24 which makes the arrears part of the common expenses only after the corporation paid the arrears on behalf of the owner as contended by Mr. Rubin in submissions or when an action is commenced. Had the section read, "shall form part of the common expenses when paid by the corporation" the Respondent's position would be supported by the section. If the corporation waited several months to pay the arrears the lien would arise only when they were paid. That is not what the section says. The corporation can bring an action for the amount outstanding. The final sentence in the paragraph does not require an action to be started against the owner before the arrears are part of the common expenses. They become part of the common expenses when the default in payment occurs.

[para18] The 1999 liens relate to the common expenses for three months before the lien was placed and for utilities for the same three months only.

[para19] Counsel may make brief written submissions as to costs by September 1, 2000.

Avenue Structures Inc. v. Pacific Empire Development Inc.

IN THE MATTER OF the Construction Lien Act R.S.O. 1990, c. C.30 (as amended)

Between Avenue Structures Inc., plaintiff, and Pacific Empire Development Inc., Bank of China (Canada) and Excelsus Development Inc., defendants

Court File No. CLA96-CU-101828

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Master Sandler Heard: May 16 and 17, 2000. Judgment: August 23, 2000. (59 paras.)

Counsel: J.B. Berkow and Orië H. Niedzviecki, for the plaintiff and other lien claimants. D.I. Bristow, Q.C., for the defendant Bank of China (Canada).

MASTER SANDLER:--

Introduction

[para1] These reasons are being written to rule on one issue that was directed by me to be tried as a preliminary issue. That issue is the extent, if any, of the priority of the Bank of China as mortgagee, under two mortgages which it has against certain land on which a construction project was being built, over about 20 lien claimants. The priority relied upon by the bank is created by s. 78(3) of the Construction Lien Act.

[para2] Before turning to analyze the specific issue, I think it is necessary to explain how this issue comes to be tried before me.

[para3] The owner of the land in question is 842432 Ontario Inc. ("842432"). The land, originally, was in two adjoining parcels at a corner, one parcel known as 2095 Brimley Road and the second parcel known as 4430-38 Sheppard Avenue East. The Brimley Road parcel, being .94 acres, was purchased in August, 1989, for $700,000. The Sheppard Avenue Parcel, being .784 acres, was purchased in November, 1989, for $5 million with $2 million cash being paid down, and a vendor take-back mortgage for $3 million. The total acreage of the two parcels, which, since 1989, has been one site, is 1.714 acres or 74,661 sq. ft.

[para4] The defendant Pacific Empire Development Inc. ("Pacific Empire") is a related company to the registered owner, 842432. Some of the lien claimants in their actions named 842432 as the owner whereas other lien claimants named Pacific Empire as the owner. For the purposes of the trial of this issue, I can treat Pacific Empire and 842432 as one and the same. Neither company defended the lien actions.

[para5] In 1989, when these lands were acquired by the owner, they had a commercial/industrial zoning designation which allowed retail and office development with a maximum density of .40 times the area of the lot. The owner spent approximately three years in efforts to re-zone this property, and, finally, some time in 1993, obtained an increase in density to 1.6 times the area of the lot, which allowed a building size equal to four times the existing coverage. This meant that the owner would now be able to build what it wanted to build, namely, a 4-storey shopping mall to contain retail and restaurant space on levels 1 and 2, and office space on levels 3 and 4, with a 3-level underground parking garage for 431 cars. The project came to be known as the "Pacific Centre". The detailed formation of the plans for this project occurred in 1992 and 1993, during a severe downturn in the general economy, and in the Toronto real estate economy and market in particular. The evidence shows that the commercial real estate market in the Toronto area at this time was "weak".

[para6] The defendant bank initially became involved with this project in mid-1993. The bank placed a first mortgage on the land for $2,750,000 in May, 1993, followed by a further second mortgage for $2,900,000 in December, 1993. These two mortgages were put on as additional security for loans previously made by the bank to its customer, Lilee-Chu Investments Inc., and to the related companies, Pacific Developments and 842432, or to service a new line of credit for this customer (see exhibit 76, Tab 7). Later, in 1994, the bank decided to further finance the project with a capital loan of $6 million, and a construction loan of $13 million. The capital loan of $6 million was advanced on October 20, 1994, and was used by the customer to pay off a prior indebtedness owing by the customer to the bank. This was really just a re-financing of existing loans. On November 3, 1994, a mortgage of $30 million was registered by the bank against this property, and this was to further secure existing loans and to secure a loan for the future financing of the construction.

[para7] Construction started in early 1995, and continued until late October or early November, 1995, when the bank stopped financing the project for reasons that are still not clear to me. There was some evidence from Peter Wong, a former bank employee, who testified before me on May 13, 1999, under subpoena by the lien claimants, that there was, at least, suspicions by senior management of the bank about improper dealings between one of its employees, who was responsible for this customer and its loans, and the customer. The terms of the bank's loan, as set out in its commitment letter of November 30, 1993 (exhibit 76, Tab 11) had apparently not been met, and yet large advances had been made, and the bank feared for its loans. As of December, 1995, the bank was owed over $15 million on its loans, and, as of May, 1996, the customer's overdraft was over $3 million, for a total indebtedness of just over $19,000,000 (see exhibit 76, Tab 20).

[para8] When the financing stopped, the owner-developer could not pay the trades and construction ceased in about January, 1996, and the liens started to be registered. The first lien was registered January 29, 1996, and the last lien was registered March 15, 1996. In all, there are 21 lien claimants of which 14 or 15 contracted directly with the owner/developer, and 6 or 7 are sub-contractors of one or more of these 14 or 15 contractors. The face value of all the liens is about $3,387,700, although none of the liens have as yet been proved by the respective lien claimants. (One lien claimant, Sun Sing Construction, whose lien claim was $337,777, has advised me that it will not be proving its lien in these proceedings, and I have noted in my procedure book that this lien is to be discharged.) Therefore, the face value of the current existing liens is just over $3 million, but some of the sub-contractors' liens might be included in the claims of some of the contractors' liens.

[para9] The judgment of reference (in the Dymin Steel action) is dated May 1, 1996, and the first pre-trial took place before me on June 28, 1996. I was then advised that the owners, 842432 and Pacific Empire had not defended. I was told that the project was only partially completed, and was not useable, and had been abandoned by the owners. (This construction has remained in this uncompleted and unused state for over four years. Eventually, the municipality revoked the building permit, in February, 1999, and then issued a demolition order in June, 1999, although the bank appealed that order. I have not been advised of the final result of that appeal. In 1997, there was some talk of the bank selling the project to a purchaser who would build a hotel/retail office complex, and so the site was re-zoned by the municipality in September, 1997, to permit such a use. The property remains listed for sale at an asking price of $2,990,000. Any purchaser will probably have to demolish the existing partially-completed structure, and this factor will probably affect the sale price.)

[para10] It appeared to me at this first June, 1996 pre-trial that the main issues were the extent, if any, of the bank's priority for its first two mortgages under s. 78 of the Act over the lien claimants' claims and within the meaning of that term in s. 1(1) of the Act.

[para11] If the bank was an "owner", it would be responsible for 100% of, at least, the various "contractors" claims, and would have a statutory holdback liability to the various sub-contractor lien claimants.

[para12] Even if the bank was not an "owner", there remained the question of the priority of its three mortgages, being for $2,750,000, $2,900,000 and $30 million. (Since it seems to be accepted by all parties that the current value of the land is somewhere between a low of $1.5 million and a high of $3 million, the bank's third mortgage of $30 million becomes irrelevant, since the most that likely will be realized on a sale is a gross of about $3 million, less sale expenses such as real estate commission and legal fees etc., so the net proceeds of sale will not likely even cover the bank's first mortgage of $2,750,000.) But, under s. 78(2), if any of the bank's mortgages were taken with the intention of securing the financing of the improvement (the so-called "building mortgage"), the liens would have priority over any such mortgage to the extent of any deficiency in the holdbacks required to be retained by the owner under Part IV. If the value of all work done is found to be $8 million (which is an reasonably approximately accurate figure but not yet actually established), then the lien claimants would have priority to the extent of about $800,000, (10%), because the owners (842432 and Pacific Empire) never actually held back any holdback amounts for the lien claimants, i.e., a complete deficiency. Thus, the first $800,000 (+/-) of any proceeds of sale would be paid, pro-rata, to those lien claimants who can establish proper liens for their proper amounts in priority to the bank's mortgages.

[para13] Even if s. 78(2) does not apply, because the bank's first two mortgages are found not to, be "building mortgages", then, under s. 78(3), these two mortgages, because they were registered "prior to the time when the first lien arose" (that is, were registered in May and December, 1993, with the first lien arising, as has now been agreed to by the parties, after December 1, 1994) would have priority over the liens to the extent of the lesser of (a) the actual value of the "premises" (a defined term) as of December 1, 1994, or (b), the total of all amounts that, prior to December 1, 1994, were advanced under these mortgages. The evidence shows that as of December 1, 1994, the bank had advanced $6 million (see Exhibit 76, Tab 20, also marked Exhibit 53). The actual value of the "premises" as of December 1, 1994, was, as all parties agree, clearly less than $6 million so the bank's priority, under s. 78(3), would be equal to the actual value of the "premises" as of December 1, 1994.

[para14] So, at the pre-trial on June 28, 1996, I consolidated all 21 (at that time) lien actions, re-titled the consolidated proceedings as. Avenue Structures v. Pacific Empire Development Inc. and Bank of China (Canada), since Avenue Structures Inc. had the largest lien claim by far at $1,031,000, and gave carriage of the consolidated proceedings to Mr. Berkow, who acts for Avenue Structures as well as Malfar Mechanical ($49,719) Mistyk Welding ($514,412) and Interior Connection ($68,810). I then ordered that the issues of the "bank-as-owner", and the priority issues under s. 78(2) and 78(3), were to proceed first, with the resolution of the various issues of the timeliness and quantum of the 21 lien claims being postponed to be resolved at a later date. The thinking was that if the bank was found not to be an "owner", and if the first two mortgages were found not to be "building mortgages", and if the value of the "premises" as of December 1, 1994 was found to be $5 million as the bank was contending then, keeping in mind that the then (June, 1996) current gross value of the "premises" was thought to be $3 million, the lien claimants would get nothing, and thus, there was no point in scrutinizing the timeliness and quantum of each lien. As I have noted earlier, the face value of the lien claims is just over $3 million. It was thought that if the lien claimants as a group were successful on any of these preliminary issues, there would be some money "in the pot" and it might then make sense to resolve any disputed lien claims. But, if there was to be no money, or only a few cents on the dollar, then a careful screening of each of the 21 lien claims would not really make economic sense.

[para15] I gave further directions in connection with the prosecution of the said preliminary issues, and I required the various lien claimants to supply Mr. Berkow with details of their current claims and supporting documentation, and for the subcontractors to clarify whether their claims were included in their respective contractors' liens, or were in addition to the 14 or 15 contractors' claims.

[para16] There were further construction lien pre-trials on September 17, 1996, January 10, June 13, and October 10, 1997, April 24, August 21 and September 4, 1998, and April 30, 1999, at which various directions were given for the conduct and trial of the preliminary issues.

[para17] The trial started on May 10, 1999, and continued on May 11, 12, 13 and 14. I heard the evidence of several of the lien claimants, and the evidence of a former bank employee, Peter Wong. All this evidence was directed to the "bank-as-owner" issue. Only five trial days had been scheduled, based on counsel's original estimate, but on May 14, it became clear that much more trial time would be required, so a further 20 days were scheduled for February 14 through 24, 2000, and May 15 through June 1, 2000, the earliest times that were available to all of myself, Mr. Bristow and Mr. Berkow. (The trial re-start date was later changed to February 21, 2000.)

[para18] On February 18, 2000, I held a case conference/trial management conference at the request of both counsel. There had been some recent developments about what issues were now going to be pressed by Mr. Berkow, counsel with carriage. He was now of the view that the "bank-as-owner" issue should be dropped, and his personal clients, Avenue Structures and Mystik Welding, had given him such instructions, but he was concerned about how he was to deal with the remaining lien claimants, and also with his client, Interior Connection, with whom he had lost contact. I then gave certain directions.

[para19] I held another case conference/trial management conference on March 9, 2000, where I gave further directions as to how the problem of dropping the "bank-as-owner" issue was to be handled. I scheduled a further conference for April 18, to allow any opposing lien claimants to attend and make submissions. On April 18, counsel for the bank appeared, as did counsel for lien claimants Metric Mechanical and Wesco Distribution, neither of whom was opposed to the dropping of the "bank-as-owner" issue. No other lien claimant appeared. I therefore made an order striking out paragraphs 16 and 17 of the Avenue Structure statement of claim (the bank-as-owner allegations), and ordered that this issue would not be pursued when the trial resumed on May 15th. I ordered that the only remaining issue between the lien claimants and the bank would be the priority issues under s. 78, as pleaded in paragraphs I through 15 of Avenue's statement of claim. I further ordered that following such ruling, I would, at a later date,, if necessary, deal with the timeliness and quantum of the lien of each lien claimant who still intended to pursue its lien claim.

[para20] On May 3, 2000, I held another trial management conference where I directed that the trial of the "priority issue" would now take place on May 16, 17 and 18, and Mr. Berkow was to let Mr. Bristow know by May 11 as to what specific sections of s. 78 he was relying on.

[para21] When the trial started on May 16, it was made clear to me by both counsel that the allegation by the lien claimants that the bank's first two mortgages of May 6, 1993 and December 21, 1993 were "building mortgages" within s. 78(2) was being dropped, and that it was now agreed that any advances thereunder were not made to finance the "improvement" on the land in question, and therefore, the issue about any deficiency in holdbacks, required to be retained by the owner under Part IV had disappeared.

[para22] The only priority claim that was now being asserted by the lien claimants was under s. 78(3). It was agreed between counsel that the bank's two mortgages of May 6, 1993, and December 21, 1993 were "prior" mortgages within s. 78(3). It was also agreed that the first lien arose, at the earliest, on December 2, 1994. So, the only issue to be tried was what was "the actual value of the premises at the time the first lien arose", since it was agreed by both counsel that this value was clearly less than the total amount of all amounts advanced prior to December 1, 1994, which, as I have noted earlier, was $6 million. (That $6 million was advanced on October 20, 1994 - see Exhibit 53.)

[para23] The current value of the "premises" is somewhere between a low of $1.5 million dollars (the amount of a recent conditional offer that was received by the bank, but which did not close), and a high of $2,860,000 (as of September 1, 1999 as appraised in Exhibit 76, Tab 23, Mr. Atkin's report), or, perhaps, the listing price of $2,990,000, as of November, 1999. Mr. Berkow believes that the current value is possibly over $3 million, but agrees that it is less than the $6 million (plus) that is owed by the owners/borrowers to the bank, part of which is secured by the mortgages of May 6 and December 21, 1993.

[para24] This current value becomes important, because if I were to sell the premises under s. 65 of the Act in order to actually realize cash proceeds for distribution among the lien claimants, and if the net proceeds to be received are, say, $2.5 million, then the bank's priority claim to these proceeds would be $1,345,000, if I accept the lien claimants' valuation by Mr. Atkin of $1,345,000 as of December 1, 1994, leaving $1,155,000 for distribution among about $3 million of lien claims (not yet proven). If the net proceeds of sale to be received are, say $2 million, then, again accepting the lien claimants' valuation, the bank's priority would be $1,345,000, leaving $655,000 for distribution amongst $3 million in lien claims. If the net proceeds of sale are $1.5 million dollars, and again accepting the lien claimants' valuation of $1,345,000, there would be $165,000 (all less carriage costs and other legal costs) for distribution among $3 million of lien claims. In other words, as the current value goes down, the amount available for the lien claimants goes down.

[para25] But, if I accept the bank's valuation at $5.2 million as at December 1, 1994, (see Mr. Kovac's report - Exhibit 76, Tab 19), the bank's priority would be far in excess of everyone's view of the current value, that is, what a court sale under s. 65 of the Act would bring as net proceeds of sale. If I accept this valuation, the lien claimants would get nothing. In fact, if Mr. Kovac's report is found to be wrong, and the valuation as of December 1, 1994, is found to be, say, only $3 million (rather than $5.2 million), then the lien claimants will still get nothing after a sale, even if the current gross value is $3 million.

[para26] It is only if I accept the lien claimants' valuation at $1,345,000, as of December 1, 1994, and a future sale brings net proceeds above 51,345,000, that the lien claimants will start to receive any money on account of their claims. Net proceeds of sale at, say, $2 million would produce $655,000 of cash available for distribution to the lien claimants after the bank's priority claim of $1,345,000 is paid out. If the lien claimants' claims are subsequently proven at $3 million (an estimated figure), this would mean the lien claimants would receive $$655,000 \times 100 - $3,000,000 = 22$ cents on the dollar. This case shows the practical problems with the remedy of a lien under the Construction Lien Act during a period of generally failing real estate values or where some particular factor or event causes a fall in the value of specific property against which the liens are registered.

[para27] The above possible gross amounts for distribution to the lien claimants do not take into account Mr. Berkow's carriage costs and the legal costs of other counsel for the other lien claimants which would have to be paid out of the net proceeds of sale. So it can be seen that my decision on this preliminary issue of the value of the land as of December 1, 1994, is only the beginning of many issues that need resolution. I will also need to decide the validity of each lien claim and the quantum of each claim. Then, I will have to sell the land and deal with gross and net sale proceeds. Then I will have to deal with carriage costs and other costs, including the bank's costs if they are successful on the valuation/priority issue. So I am a long distance away from actually paying out any money to any of the lien claimants. But resolution of the valuation/priority issue is a necessary First step and so I now turn to address this issue.

The Valuation/Priority Issue - What was the actual value of the premises as of December 1, 1994?

[para28] At the opening of the hearing on May 16, counsel filed a joint document book that contains all the documents that are relevant to the valuation/priority issue. This book is marked exhibit 76 and has 23 tabs. The key documents are the following: the two deeds transferring the two parcels to 842432 Ontario Inc. in 1989, (tabs 1 and 3); the credit application by the borrowers (including 842432) for the bank loans (tab 7); the two mortgages to the bank dated May 6th and December 21, 1993 (tabs 8 and 14); the credit facility agreement with the borrowers, dated November 30, 1993, (tab 11); the credit application for the $19 million line of credit, dated September 27, 1994 (tab 15) which is an important document and shows the situation just a few months before the crucial date of December 1, 1994; the credit facility letter for $19 million dated September 30, 1994 (tab 16); and a letter from the bank dated June 7, 1996, outlining details of the three mortgages of the bank, and advances made thereunder, given in response to a s. 39(2) Construction Lien Act demand for information (tab 20).

[para29] In addition to these important documents, the fundamental documents are the appraisal report of Mr. Kovacs, the bank's expert, dated October 8, 1999 (tab 19) and the appraisal report of Mr. Atlin, the lien claimants' expert, dated November 2, 1999, (tab 23).

[para30] Finally, there is an earlier appraisal report of Mr. Kovacs, dated March 8, 1993, made at a time when the bank was considering extending credit facilities to the, borrowers (tab 6).

[para31] Both parties agree that the relevant date for the valuation is December 1, 1994, and that the valuation is to proceed as if the land was vacant, that is, the state of the land at the time the first lien arose, that is, when the first work was done. And I agree with Mr. Bristow's submission that one must look at the conditions and knowledge that listed at that time, and in making the valuation, one ignores what happened subsequently. I agree that "actual value" means "market value", which means the most probable price that a property would bring in a competitive and open market, under all conditions requisite to a fair sale, the buyer and seller each acting prudently and knowledgeably. The approach to market value is well set out on p. 3 of the Atlin report, and p. 1 of the October Kovacs report (following the letter of transmittal and sketches and other miscellaneous material).

[para32] Mr. Atlin at trial, and in his report, says the value is $1,345,000. Mr. Kovacs at trial, and in his October, 1999 report, says the value is $5.2 million. (Mr. Kovacs in his March, 1993 report said the value of the property was $5.5 million, which date was one year and nine months before the critical date of December 1, 1994. This earlier appraisal of Mr. Kovacs was apparently, the basis for the bank agreeing, in November, 1993, to make the loans it did, leading to its mortgages in 1994, and its advances in 1995).

[para33] Mr. Atlin's qualifications are found at Appendix "A" to his report. He is an accredited member of the Appraisal Institute of Canada (AACI). He has been an appraiser since 1980 with Stewart, Young & Mason Limited, now known as Stewart, Young, Hillesheim & Atlin Limited of which he is the president. He has an impressive list of qualifications as an appraiser.

[para34] Mr. Kovacs' qualifications are set out in Addendum "F" to his report. He received his AACI designation in 1989. He has been an appraiser since 1975. He worked for Royal Trust/Royal LePage from 1975 until 1993. In 1993, he became a partner in Wagner, Andrews and Kovacs Limited, his current position. He also has an impressive list of qualifications.

[para35] So, the question must be asked as to why these two very qualified appraisers have so diametrically opposed views as to the value of this property as of December 1, 1994?

The Atlin Report

[para36] Mr. Atlin's report is 47 pages long and - has 6 Appendices. He describes (at pp. 5-6) the ownership and legal history of the property and the current municipal assessment and realty taxes. He next gives a regional description (pp. 8-10), and a neighbourhood description (pp. 11-13), and a site description (pp. 13-14). He next deals with land use controls, i.e., zoning (pp. 15-16). He then describes the improvements, i.e., the existing state of incomplete construction (p. 17), and details the proposed development (pp. 18-19).

[para37] He then sets out a market overview (pp. 20-24) which is critically important. In summary, the 1980's, leading up to 1989 (when "842432" purchased the site for $5.7 million), was a period of a dramatic rise in real estate prices and economic expansion. In 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the real estate market changed dramatically, with an over-supply of property and a weak demand. Office vacancy rates rose sharply. The Greater Toronto office market in 1994 was in a "dismal state". The absorption and vacancy rates in the Metro Toronto East office market in 1993 and 1994 were at record lows, although 1994 was a little better than 1993 (see p. 21). The retail market and therefore, the demand for retail store space, fell dramatically in the period 1990 through 1994 (see p. 23).

[para38] Mr. Atlin then deals with the fundamental concept of "Highest and Best Use" at pp. 25-27. He deals with what uses are (i) legally permissible (ii) physically possible (iii) financially feasible and (iv) maximally productive. His conclusion, for the date of December 1, 1994, reads as follows:

"There was clearly no immediate demand for office development as at December 1994. Rent and vacancy rates were at such levels that office development was unaffordable. However, the site's zoning and location do lend themselves to such a use. Thus, office/retail development to the scale suggested by the development proposal is a highest and best used choice over the long term, but not feasible as at the effective date. (my emphasis) The property's location is also viable for retail uses consistent with the limited activity in the marketplace. Thus, an immediate highest and best use choice would be to, amend the zoning provisions, eliminating the office component obligation, and developing the site with a retail use." (see p. 26).

[para39] Mr. Atlin then continues, on pp. 28-31, to consider various approaches employed in the valuation of real estate and concludes that the Direct Comparison Approach is the only appropriate approach in this case. At pp. 32-34, Mr. Atlin reviews nine comparable sales, three after and six before the valuation date. He concludes that the site had a unit value of $18 per S.F., and with 74,662 S.F., the value, as rounded, was $1,345,000. He also said this site should be considered to have a Floor Space Index (F.S.I) of 0.40, which translates to ($18 per S.F. divided by 0.40 =) $45 per S.F. F.S.I. This density of 0.40 is not what is legally permissible, which is much higher at 1.65, but rather, what Mr. Atlin thinks is economically feasible.

[para40] Lastly, Mr. Atlin also values the site as of September 1, 1999, and gives the vacant land a value of $820,000, and the improvements a value of $2,040,000, for a total value of $2,860,000.

The Kovacs Report

[para41] An introduction is at pp. 1-4. Next follows a market overview, pp. 5-7. Then follows the property description section, pp. 8-18, including the general area description, a site description, a description of the land use controls, a description of the improvements, and his view as to highest and best use, which Mr. Kovacs concludes was the proposed development itself, being a 4-storey condominium retail/office complex. Next follows the valuation section at pp. 19-33, including the four available valuation methods, and the ones he used here, being the Direct Comparison Approach and the Land Residual Method, to be found at pp. 20-25 and 26-32 respectively, and his final value estimate at p. 33. There follows seven Addenda, "A" through "G".

[para42] In Mr. Kovacs' direct evidence, he testified about the importance of the mix of population in this area, since one can assess demand for commercial space by knowing the users. He spoke about the pressure of Chinese immigration from Hong Kong, and their interest in owning commercial condominium properties, and how the Brimley - Sheppard area was an important one for Chinese business and customers. He also testified about the two most important factors for commercial development, being the permitted zoning and the permitted density. He testified that a density coverage of 1.65 is much more valuable than one of .40, and that even if an owner only built to a .40 coverage, the potential higher density had a value even if not immediately used. He disagrees with Mr. Atlin that this condominium/retail office development was not economically feasible. He felt that building a one-level retail strip mail like the other developments in the area, as Mr. Atlin recommended, would have been an underdevelopment.

[para43] In cross-examination, he agreed that the office market was weak, and that this project was to be about 60% office space, and that the office vacancy rate was high. He also agreed that, as of December, 1994, there had not been $17 million worth of sales of units in this development, but only $2 million, and that these sales were all retail units, and there had been no office unit sales. (The sales are detailed on p. 29 of his report). The said $17 million figure was the level of sales that had to be achieved by the developer before it could obtain most of the loan money - see tab 15, p. 4 and tab 16, p. 3 - but for some unexplained, reason, the bank failed to insist on this protection.

[para44] Mr. Kovacs also agreed that the Land Residual Method of valuation is assumption driven, and that if any of the assumed numbers are wrong, this can fundamentally affect the valuation. He also agreed that he did not use the Land Residual Method in his March 8, 1993 valuation (tab 6).

Mr. Atlin's Review of Mr. Kovacs' Report

[para45] Mr. Kovacs concludes in his October report (pp. 17-18), that the highest and best use of this land, in December, 1994, was, in fact, the very proposed development itself, being a 4-storey condominium retail/office complex with 33% of the space being retail space, 44% being office space, and the balance, 23%, being a mix of retail and office space, and with 70% of the space being on the second, third and fourth floors. Mr. Atlin's disagrees with this view. He emphasizes the difference between a legally permissible and physically possible use, on the one hand, and a financially feasible use on the other - see his report, at pp. 25-26. He concludes that because there was no immediate demand for condominium office development, in December, 1994, the office/retail development, to the scale proposed by the planned development, was not economically feasible in December, 1994, although it was the highest and best use over the long term. The property's location and attributes were financially viable for retail uses like the other one-story retail developments in the area, with a density of 40% or .40.

[para46] Mr. Kovacs, at pp. 24-25 of his report, came up with a F.S.I rate of $42.50 per S.F., and took 100% of the developable gross floor area, 123,197 S.F., and arrived at a value of $5,100,000. Mr. Atlin testified that you cannot equate the same value per S.F. to both the ground floor retail space, and the upper level retail and the upper level office space. He said that at-grade retail space is vitally important and drives the value of any development. He disagrees with Mr. Kovacs' using his $42.50 F.S.I rate for all 123,190 S.F. of rentable space. Mr. Atlin's dollar per S.F. rate of $45 is not materially different from Mr. Kovacs' rate of $42.50. He just differs on how such rate is to be applied. Mr. Kovacs uses an F.S.I. of 1.65. Mr. Atlin, by contrast, uses an F.S.I. of .40. This produces a rate of $45 per S.F., F.S.I., or, putting it another way, $18 per S.F. for 74,662 S.F. of land area - (see p. 35 of the Atlin report.) This is really the core of the disagreement between the approach of Mr. Atlin and Mr. Kovacs.

[para47] (F.S.I means "Floor Space Index" and is a density designation. It means "buildable space". i.e., both legally and physically buildable space, and financially viable buildable space. A 100,000 S.F. site (area), with a .40 (allowable and viable) density coverage, would equal a 0.40 F.S.I, and would result in a building of 40,000 S.F. The same site (100,000 S.F. area), with a 1.65 density (allowable and viable), would result in a building of 165,000 S.F. Any density over .50 must result in a multi-level development. Land can be priced at either dollars per S.F. or dollars per S.F. F.S.I. In this case, $18 per S.F. of land area (74,662 S.F.) equals $45 per S.F. F.S.I ($18 by .40).

[para48] Also, Mr. Atlin testified that the Land Residual Method, used as an alternative method by Mr. Kovacs, (at pp. 26-32 of his report), producing a value of $5.3 million, is an inappropriate valuation method for use in this case. This method is good for determining the feasibility of a development, but is not the right approach for ascertaining market value. Every element of the valuation, from the gross revenues to the development costs, is based on assumptions that are very problematic, and any error in any assumption can have a large impact on the bottom line value. I accept Mr. Atlin's opinion that the Land Residual Method is not the appropriate valuation method to be used in this case.

Other Observations

[para49] 1. This property was purchased in 1989 for $5.7 million and 1989 was the top of the real estate market. The evidence shows that the commercial real estate market was at its lowest in 1993 and 1994. It defies ordinary logic that this particular property's value only fell from $5.7 million to $5.2 million from 1989 to 1994, whereas it is well known and the evidence shows that commercial and residential property in the Greater Toronto Area generally fell in value anywhere from 20% to 50% and sometimes more.

[para50] 2. The property was assessed for realty taxes by the Provincial Assessment Department at $733,000 as of June 30, 1996. It is true that as of this date there was a derelict abandoned building on the site, but since the municipal assessment is based on 1996 market value, it is of some use in deciding what the December 1994 value was.

[para51] 3. Further, one of the protections that the bank had in its lending commitment of September 30, 1994, (tab 16) was that there had to be evidence of sales of at least $17 million to bona fide arms-length purchasers, with deposits of not less than 30%. In fact, as of January 1, 1996, only 19% of the overall space had been pre-sold or pre-leased, and no office space whatsoever had been pre-sold or pre-leased. On p. 29 of Mr. Kovacs' report, tab 19, it shows 11 units sold on the ground Door (first level) and 8 units sold on the first floor (second level) for the total of $2 million, far below the $17 million requirement in the bank's commitment letter. These sales figures are as of early 1996, and strongly support what Mr. Atlin says about the office and retail market in and around 1994, (at pp. 20-24), and about the financial feasibility of the proposed use, at (pp. 25-26) and about what the feasible F.S.I was in 1994, being 0.04 and not 1.65. Obviously the bank wanted to tie sales and leasing performance to its loans, so that the borrowers could prove the financial viability of the project. There is no explanation given as to why the bank chose to overlook this protection.

[para52] 4. Further, the fact is that this project failed. The bank had lent, by November, 1995, about $7.2 million for construction costs (see tab 20), and a total of about $15.4 million in loans. (excluding the $3.6 million overdraft), and decided, in early 1996, to stop further financing. Presumably, one of the factors in such a decision was the poor sales and leasing results, as reflected in the Morassutti Group report dated January 8, 1996 (see p. 19 of Atlin's report). The bank for some unexplained reason, did not insist on the protection it had of $17 million in sales and leasing before loan money would be advanced. This failure of the project supports Mr. Atlin's negative view as to this projects' financial feasibility, and undermines the reliability of Mr. Kovacs' valuation.

[para53] 5. Further, Mr. Atlin disagreed with Mr. Bristow's suggestion, in cross-examination, that the second floor retail space in this development was as good and valuable as the first floor retail space, and that this project was comparable to the multi-level development at the Eaton Centre.

[para54] 6. Further, the evidence of Mr. Atlin shows that this location at Brimley and Sheppard was quite different from the Chinese developments on Highway No. 7 in Richmond Hill.

[para55] 7. Further, the densities of Mr. Atlin's comparables are all under .048, except the extremely successful Times Square project at Highway No. 7 and Leslie Street in Richmond Hill, sale No. 8, which still only had an F.S.I. of 0.56. All of Mr. Kovacs' comparables had an F.S.I. of 0.40 or under - see p. 22 of tab 19.

[para56] 8. Mr. Kovacs was hired by the bank in early 1993 to do a valuation for the purpose of considering whether to lend money on this project: see tabs 6, 7, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17. He valued the vacant land at $5.5 million and the completed project at $29 million. Commitments were made in 1994, and money was advanced in 1995. But in early 1996, the bank "pulled the plug" and the project failed. The bank is now at risk of losing most of its loans, and more, if it has to share the equity in this property with the lien claimants. Mr. Kovacs is now called upon to give his opinion as to value as of December 1, 1994, just 1 year and 9 months after his valuation date in his March, 1993 report. Mr. Kovacs is in a somewhat uncomfortable position. He can hardly admit that he was wrong in March 1993. He has a very strong interest in making his valuation for December, 1994, consistent with his valuation of March, 1993. This interest, and his previous involvement, and the risks he faces if he gives any other opinion, in my view cast some doubt on his objectivity as an expert witness and the role he is supposed to play: see Fellowes, McNeil v. Kansa General (1999), 40 O.R. (3d) 456; Fenwick v Parklane Nurseries (1997), 32 C.L.R. (2d) 25; Interamerican Transport Systems v. Can. Pacific Express, [1995] O.J. No. 3644, (November 29, 1995), Feldman J., Toronto, 59 A.C.W.S. (3d) 413, 67 pp., (otherwise unreported to my knowledge).

[para57] 9. The evidence (and common sense) tells me that the location and the permitted use of a commercial site are very important factors in its value. But also important is the permitted density, or coverage. But one must distinguish between legal density and financially viable density. A higher permissible density sometimes does not make financial sense, and developers do not have to build to the allowable density, and would not do so if the higher density does not make financial sense based on the economic factors, including a present demand for the space to be built. In some cases, a higher legal density, which will allow for future expansion when purchaser/tenant demand would justify such expansion, does make a property more valuable. In this case, Mr. Atlin chose to give no value to the factor of the permissible density of 1.65, which would have allowed for future development. He felt that an F.S.I. of .40 was the financially viable upper limit for this site, even though the legally permitted density was 1.65. (On the other hand, Mr. Kovacs felt that an F.S.I. of 1.65 was financially viable as of December 1994, and so his valuation was based on the full developable gross floor area of 123,197 S.F. at his price of $42.50 per S.F.)

Conclusion

[para58] I prefer the approach and logic and independence of Mr. Atlin over that of Mr. Kovacs. However, I am troubled that Mr. Atlin has chosen not to take into account at all the higher permissible density of 1.65 that the developer had obtained for this site after three years of effort, and which was far in excess of the .40 density for most of the other commercial property in the area. Mr. Atlin admits that this increased density would allow for future development and expansion, even if such intensive development was not financially viable as of December, 1994. And this future potential is clearly worth something, as Mr. Bristow forcefully argues. In my view, something should be added to Mr. Atlin's valuation for this future potential, and an addition of 10% seems to be appropriate on all the evidence before me. I have therefore increased Mr. Atlin's valuation by $134,500 and find this property had a market value, as of December 1, 1994, of $1,479,500.

[para59] Now that the extent of the bank's priority on its mortgages is known, being $1,479,500, counsel can contact me to fix a further hearing to determine how I am to proceed from this point on. Am I to sell the property and see whether net sale proceeds in excess of $1,479,500 are recoverable? And does it make sense to begin a detailed evaluation of each lien? Or, should this process wait until after it is determined what the net sale proceeds are, to see if such an inquiry is worth the cost. And what about carriage costs and the costs of the proceedings to date? It seems to me that on the question of valuation, the lien claimants have had far more success than the bank. I will await a request from counsel before fixing a further hearing date. Perhaps with this issue decided, some sort of "deal" can be struck as between the bank and the lien claimants, and as between all the various lien claimants, inter se. (I am prepared to issue a formal Interim Report, if asked, to perm it either party to have my decision reviewed, under s. 62(3) and Rules 54.09(2), (3) and (5).)

Rohoman v. York Condominium Corp. No. 141

Between Mohamed Rohoman, applicant, and York Condominium Corporation No. 141, respondent

Court File No. 00-CV-189822

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Chapnik J. Heard: June 8, 2000. Judgment: June 19, 2000. (11 paras.)

Counsel: Carl H. Cassian, for the applicant. Carol A. Dirks and David Thiel, for the respondent.

[para1] CHAPNIK J.-- The applicant participated in three requisitions filed with the Board of Directors pursuant to s. 19(1) of the Condominium Act 1990, chap. C.26 (the Act), requesting the Board call a special meeting of unit owners to vote on a resolution to remove and replace the members of the Board. The requisite number of valid signatures for such a requisition is 15% of the total unit owners or, in the case of YCC 141, 66 unit owners. Notwithstanding the determination by the Board that 81 signatures on the second petition were valid, it refused to call a special meeting of the unit owners. Upon a review of the evidence, I reject the respondent's submission that the circumstances surrounding the gathering of signatures tainted the entire requisition. In doing so, I have taken into account the 19 further statements which were not filed, but were referred to by Ms. Dirks on the respondent's behalf.

[para2] Section 19(1) of the Act permits the party requisitioning a special meeting of unit owners to call a meeting in circumstances where the Board of Directors refuses to do so.

[para3] Following the respondent's refusal to hold a special meeting of unit owners pursuant to the second requisition, the applicant was denied an opportunity to inspect the list of registered owners and mortgagees of the corporation. Accordingly, the applicant was placed in a catch 22 situation; and was unable to call an owner's meeting within the 60 day deadline imposed by s. 19(1) of the Act.

[para4] The respondent argues that, as a result of the state of unrest in the condominium community over a period of several months, some of the unit owners want their names removed from the petitions and some have expressly asked that their names and addresses not be released due to the harassing behaviour of certain unit owners, including the applicant. Indeed, this court has today issued a restraining order as against another unit owner, Mr. Merchant. There is no evidence, however, of harassment on the part of the applicant.

[para5] In lieu of providing the list of owners and mortgagees, the Board offered to mail out the notices of a members' meeting if the petitioners paid the costs associated with the mailing. This offer has consistently been rejected by the applicant and others. In my view, the offer is not sufficient to constitute substantial compliance with the provisions of the Act. The definition of "record" includes the registered owner and mortgagee list for a condominium corporation as referred to in s. 20(2) of the Act. Upon reading the materials, hearing counsels' submissions and balancing the various interests of the parties, I find that the Board is under a legal obligation to disclose the unit owner's list to the applicant. In this particular circumstance, the right to privacy and confidentiality of the owners does not override the statutory right of the applicant to reasonable access as provided for in s. 21 of the Act.

[para6] Related to this matter, is the more generalized issue of the inspections. Section 21 of the Act obliges the corporation to keep records and permits an owner or his agent to inspect the records on reasonable notice at any reasonable time. This section is to be broadly interpreted to allow unit owners open and liberal access to the affairs of the Board and the corporation. See McKay et al v. Waterloo North Condominium Corp. No. 23 (1992), 11 O.R. (3d) 341 at 345.

[para7] I appreciate the problems encountered by the Board when several owners consistently require inspections concurrently. In my view, however, the applicant's requests were reasonable in the circumstances. He gave notice to the Board of Directors on two occasions that he wished to inspect the records of YCC 141 pursuant to his rights under s. 21. The Board initially denied his request, but later permitted access for a limited period of two hours with no further inspection permitted. Considering the underlying policy of the Act, making the affairs and dealings of the corporation and Board, an "open book" to members of the corporation, the access permitted to the applicant was, in my view, not reasonable.

[para8] In all of the circumstances, orders shall issue:

1. declaring that the applicant's second requisition dated January 31, 2000 is valid;
2. granting the applicant an extension of time to call and hold an extraordinary meeting of the owners pursuant to s. 19(1) of the Act, to 30 days after receipt of the respondent's records pursuant to para 3 below.
3. Ordering the respondent to provide to the applicant, a list of each owner and mortgagee of YCC 141, as described in s. 20(2) of the Act.
4. Declaring that the applicant has the right, at a reasonable time and on reasonable notice, to inspect all of the respondent's records, including the right to make photocopies of any of them at the applicant's expense.

[para9] The applicant in his notice of application seeks punitive or exemplary damages. Mr. Cassian did not argue this point at the motion; and in my view, this is not a proper case for punitive damages, in any event.

[para10] As I noted at the hearing, the Board members appear to be attempting to carry out their duties in a fair and reasonable manner. They called an information meeting to explain the rationale for the special assessment; the answered inquiries; and they offered to send out notices on behalf of the members. Their actions may well have been ill-advised regarding the specific matters before this court, but they were not motivated by malice. The motion for exemplary damages, if pursued, is denied.

[para11] Unless there is some additional information of which I should be apprised, costs are awarded to the applicant on a party and party basis, fixed in the sum of $2500 and payable forthwith.

Rodriguez v. Raya

Between Ricardo Rodriguez, plaintiff/defendant by counterclaim, and Jose Pablo Raya, defendant/plaintiff by counterclaim

Court File No. 99-CT-001617SR

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Juriansz J. Heard: June 8 and 9, 2000. Judgment: June 12, 2000. (15 paras.)

Counsel: Stephanie Kalogeras, for the plaintiff. J. Lockhart, for the defendant.

[para1] JURIAN SZ J.:-- These are my reasons for judgement delivered orally at the end of the trial of this matter. The outcome of this case depends on the credibility of the parties. The credibility of testimony is assessed according to its internal consistency and degree to which it accords with reasonable likelihood. I am conscious that memories fade with time, and that in the litigation process memory often changes to support one's interest in the case. In this case there was much disagreement among the witnesses as to the dates of various events, and the period of time that Isabel Rodriguez lived with the defendant. For example, Steven Rodriguez, the plaintiff's son, testified that she lived with the defendant in December for possibly two weeks, whereas his father had her living there for only two or three days in mid January. The defendant had Isabel living with him from mid November until mid January, whereas his wife said she came to stay with them, at his parents' home, in the first week in December and that she left their apartment at the beginning of the second week of February. The defendant's father said Isabel came to live in his house for one week in December and stayed there until the defendant moved into the apartment, which he said was last week December. The defendant testified he moved into the apartment on December 11.

[para2] These differences of testimony do not necessarily mean that the witnesses in this case were dishonest. They simply illustrate that memory is not perfect and that the court faces a difficult task in re-constructing events in a case such as this.

[para3] There are two competing versions of the financial relationship between the parties:

1. The plaintiff's version is that the $8,500 was a loan from a kind uncle to a favoured nephew to enable him to buy a condominium, and that in a different transaction that nephew agreed to care for the uncle's mother for the payment of $980 a month to be paid from the mother's monthly income, which could be used to pay back the loan.

2. The defendant's version was that the uncle was desperate to find a place for his mother to live, and proposed to the nephew that he would provide the financial support so that the nephew could buy a larger condominium that he had planned to, if he would care for the mother, and that the loan would be repaid at the rate of $450 per month from the mother's monthly income of $980. The nephew would also receive $450 a month from the mother for her care and accommodation.

[para4] I note that in both these versions the mother's income is being used to repay the advance of $8,500. There was no evidence before me that the mother was involved in making any of the arrangements, and there was no evidence that her son, the plaintiff, had any legal authority to deal with the mother's money in any fashion whatsoever. The question arose in my mind, whether the fact that the mother was repaying the loan might be taken to suggest that the advance was made on her behalf and that she was the plaintiff's debtor. Nevertheless, the parties presented the case as involving issues only between two of them, and I am content to dispose of it on that basis.

[para5] I prefer the defendant's version of the agreement between them for several reasons.

[para6] First, the reason the plaintiff gave for needing a place for his mother to live did not ring true. I see no relationship between the uncertainty in his life and the immediate need to move his mother out of his house. I accept the testimony of Steven Rodriguez, who appeared honest and credible, that Isabel did not get along with his mother, that his mother felt Isabel was a burden and was tired of looking after her. In cross-examination Steven said clearly that the placement of Isabel with the defendant was to stop arguments between his mother and grandmother. Therefore, I disbelieve the testimony of the plaintiff on this point.

[para7] Second, no matter which version is accepted, the question of who would care for Isabel during the day would have arisen. The defendant worked and his wife was in school. Even on the plaintiff's version, as a loving and caring son, he would have wanted to make sure that someone was available to look after his mother during the day. Therefore I believe the defendant and his wife that there was a discussion about a Spanish-speaking nurse. I disbelieve the plaintiff's testimony that there was no discussion of a nurse.

[para8] Third, the plaintiff testified that he paid $980 in cash to the defendant and that it was his intention to change the address on his mother's old age security cheques so that they went directly to the defendant's apartment. He did not explain how this would put the money into the defendant's hands as it would be necessary for Isabel to endorse the cheques. I do not think it likely that Isabel would have agreed to pay over her entire monthly income for her care accommodation without keeping some spending money for herself. Moreover, the defendant and his wife impressed me as careful persons and in my view they would have wanted some guarantee that they would actually receive the money from the plaintiff's mother. The plaintiff's version does not allow that. I disbelieve the plaintiff's testimony that the arrangement was the defendant would receive the mother's entire income each month.

[para9] Fourth, the defendant's version involves an elaborate proposal which has the ring of likelihood. If the defendant and his witnesses were fabricating their story, they could come up with a simpler one, for example that the money was simply a gift.

[para10] Fifth, all the supporting witnesses impressed me as honest and the issue in assessing their testimony is the reliability of their memory rather than their truthfulness. I do not believe that any aspect of the defendant's father's testimony can be regarded as fabricated. He supported the defendant's and the defendant's wife's testimony that there was a meeting in October. I accept that there was such a meeting. I accept that the defendant and his wife were present at it. I accept the plaintiff made a proposal that he would assist them to purchase a larger apartment if they cared for his mother and that he would be repaid by 1/2 of Isabel's cheque for $900. Upon this proposal being made, the question naturally arises given the mother's age and poor health, and in my view the defendant could be expected to ask it: what would happen if Isabel died before the loan was repaid? I accept that he did ask the question as recounted in his father's testimony. I accept that the plaintiff responded that if something happened to his mother today, tomorrow, next week or next month the money should be considered as a gift.

[para11] Returning to the issue of the Spanish nurse, I find that the defendant's wife raised the issue of the daytime care of Isabel and that the plaintiff, in a desperate situation, promised to arrange for the nurse. In my view, without a daytime nurse the arrangement simply was not possible. The defendant's wife was a full-time student at university and I do not accept that a full-time undergraduate schedule could be as easily avoided as the plaintiff suggests.

[para12] This leaves the issue of whether the money would be considered a gift if Isabel had simply decided to stop living with defendant. At the time of the January meeting, Isabel was still living with the defendant, and had not yet decided to leave the defendant's home. At that point the loan was still outstanding. I am satisfied that at the January meeting the plaintiff was extremely emotionally upset. In the circumstances it was natural that he would be. His son-in-law confirmed that he was. I reject the plaintiff's testimony that he was not upset at the meeting. However, I accept his testimony that he was trying to act in a responsible manner to ensure that all his suppliers and creditors would be paid in full even though he was left with nothing but his house. He is obviously a person who takes his responsibilities and the fact that others have relied on him seriously. I accept his testimony that he was concerned for the future of his son-in-law and nephew who did not get along with his partner. In this situation, I find that it is in accord with reasonable likelihood that the defendant, who the plaintiff described as smart and bright, would ask why his uncle had not advised him of the financial problems of the business before he had bought a condominium. Given the plaintiff's concern about letting his nephew down, his strong character, and his pride as the patriarch of the family, I am satisfied that he responded that the least he could do was to consider the loan a gift, and that his nephew need no longer worry about it. Perhaps because of the degree to which he was upset in the meeting, the plaintiff does not recall making the statement. I consider the defendant's continued commitment to care for the plaintiff's mother in the precarious financial situation to be adequate consideration for the forgiveness of the loan.

[para13] In conclusion, assuming the $8,500 was a loan from the plaintiff to the defendant, I find it was forgiven. Therefore the plaintiff's claim is dismissed.

[para14] The counterclaim is also dismissed. I find that the expenses for the furniture were thought to be part of the household expenses of which Isabel was expected to be a long-term member. The claim for quantum meruit is worthy of comment. I have found that the agreement was that the plaintiff would provide a daytime nurse. I do not accept that the defendant's wife would agree to compromise her university education for a few dollars a month. In fact, she did compromise her education to care for the plaintiff's mother and the plaintiff should be grateful to her for doing so. However, the defendant's wife did not join as a party to the counterclaim and her husband cannot claim a quantum meruit for her time and effort. Moreover, the defendant's counsel candidly stated that the counterclaim was a legal manoeuvre and not brought at the defendant's initiative.

[para15] The defendants served an offer to settle on May 19, 2000 which meets the requirements of Rule 49. The plaintiffs will pay the defendant's costs, as assessed, on a party and party scale to May 19, 2000 and on a solicitor and client scale thereafter.

Peel Condominium Corp. No. 321 v. 679844 Ontario Ltd.

Between Peel Condominium Corporation No. 321, and 679844 Ontario Ltd. et al

Court File No. 99-CV-163107CM

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Master Polika March 6, 2000. (19 paras.)

Counsel: Brian H. Somer, for the plaintiff. Malcolm J. MacLeod, for the defendant 679844 Ontario Ltd.

[para1] MASTER POLIKA:-- The defendant 679844 Ontario Ltd. sought an order discharging and vacating the certificate of pending litigation registered against its lands pursuant to the order of Master Peterson dated March 5, 1999 or in the alternative an order discharging the certificate of pending litigation on payment into court of monies as security for the amount claimed by the plaintiff.

[para2] I heard the motion and endorsed the Form 77C as follows:

Order to go as follows: For reasons to be released order to go vacating and discharging the certificate of pending litigation. Counsel addressed me on the issue of costs. I can see no reason why costs should not follow the event. An offer to settle was tendered. Costs thus sought on a solicitor/client scale. Leaving offer aside given its terms respecting further registration and taking into account the preparation as evidenced by the materials and the complexity and novelty of the matters in issue, costs are fixed in the amount of $1,950 inclusive of G.S.T. and disbursements, payable by the plaintiff to the moving defendant forthwith.

[para3] The plaintiff's claim as it relates to the certificate of pending litigation is based on Article 3.00, entitled Cost Sharing Provisions For the Common Driveway, of the agreement entered into between the moving defendant, the plaintiff and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

[para4] Article 3.03 in particular provides that amounts not contributed by the moving defendant would bear interest at 20 per cent per annum calculated and compounded monthly until paid and that the amounts together with interest "shall, to the extent thereof, be and constitute a first lien and charge against" the defendant's lands set out in the agreement.

[para5] There is no dispute that the plaintiff commenced an action on March 20, 1998 being court file number 98-CV-144033CM, a case managed action, in substantially identical terms to the within action. Each action claims the sum of money allegedly owing, plus interest, pursuant to Article 3.00.

[para6] The moving defendant delivered a statement of defence in the 1998 action dated October 9, 1998. The within action was commenced on February 2, 1999 to satisfy certain statutory requirements as between the plaintiff and its constituent condominium owners. By February 2, 1999 there were two actions in place seeking the same monetary relief pursuant to Article 3.00.

[para7] In the 1998 action, as a consequence of an order made by Madam Justice Kitley at trial scheduling court, a case conference took place before me on March 3, 1999. The plaintiff failed to advise the other parties and as a consequence the case conference was adjourned to April 10, 1999 to address the transfer of the within action into case management, common settlement conference, trial together and a timetable for both actions and any consequential third party proceedings.

[para8] The affidavit in support of the motion for the certificate of pending litigation heard by Master Peterson was sworn by Mr. Del Ballo on March 2, 1999. The affidavit makes no reference whatsoever to the 1998 action or that the claim advanced on the basis of Article 3.00 was disputed in the statement of defence in the 1998 action.

[para9] When the motion came before Master Peterson the plaintiff knew that not only the substance of the claim was being defended in the 1998 action but also that the defendant was represented by counsel. The plaintiff proceeded with the motion nonetheless on an ex parte basis.

[para10] In Allan Candy Ltd. v. CIBC Mortgage Corp. [1994] O.J. No. 1300 Mr. Justice Crane held at paragraph 62 that "Material non-disclosure in itself is sufficient to justify an order discharging the certificate."

[para11] Before Master Peterson not only was the 1998 action and the defence advanced therein not disclosed but Mr. Del Ballo in paragraphs 13 to 15 makes statements the totality of which is to indicate that the moving defendant is not opposing or is agreeable to paying the amount claimed, a position contrary to that taken by the moving defendant in the 1998 action.

[para12] I am in agreement with the statement of Master Peterson made at page 752 in Bank of Nova Scotia v Rawifilm Inc. et al. (1994) 18 O.R. (3d) 743 to the following effect:

In concluding it might be useful to note that rule 42.01(3) provides that:

42.01(3) A motion for an order under subrule (1) may be made without notice. Thus, such a motion can always be made on notice and the issue of full and fair disclosure on an ex parte motion eliminated. While it is true, in certain circumstances, a quick ex parte order may be the way to proceed. However, in this case I note that the transfer being sought to be set aside was made by a deed dated May 26, 1992 and registered on June 3, 1992. The order was made on January 13, 1993. I am not certain that the urgency existed in this case that warranted the original motion being brought on an ex parte basis without providing extensive disclosure of all of the relevant information and documentation that was within the plaintiff's possession.

[para13] The claim has been before the courts since the commencement of the 1998 action. No circumstances were disclosed why the motion had to proceed ex parte after almost a year had gone by since the 1998 action was commenced. The plaintiff knew that the claim was defended and counsel were acting for the moving defendant.

[para14] The claim for the certificate of pending litigation was based on Article 3.00, that is a claim for monies allegedly due thereunder and because of the failure to pay the said funds a claim for a lien against the lands as provided in Article 3.00.

[para15] I find that the plaintiff's failure to disclose to Master Peterson the 1998 action, its defence and the pending case conference, given its purpose, amounts to material non-disclosure. Further, the assertion in paragraphs 13 to 15 of Mr. Del Ballo's affidavit border on a material misrepresentation which would have been cleared up had full disclosure been made or not required if notice had been given. On that basis order to go vacating and discharging the certificate of pending litigation.

[para16] In the event I am incorrect in that conclusion, I also find that the moving defendant has satisfied me that an order should be made discharging the certificate of pending litigation on payment into court by the moving defendant of monies sufficient to cover the amount claimed under Article 3.00 plus interest as set out in Article 3.00 up to the end of June 2000, the date upon which the plaintiff asserted that the trial in this matter would be concluded by. In that regard I find that the moving defendant has satisfied the requirements of sections 103(6)(a)(I), 103(6)(b) and 103(6)(c) of the Courts of Justice Act.

[para17] It is clear from the prayer for relief and the affidavit of Mr. Del Ballo that the plaintiff's claim is for a sum of money due under, Article 3.00 and the claim for a first lien and charge against the lands is to secure payment of the same. If monies totaling the amount of the monetary claim and the interest accruing to the end of June 2000 are paid into court then the claim for lien evaporates as the claim then will be fully secured.

[para18] There was some discussion of the continuing nature of the claim for a first lien and charge. What is not in dispute is that no such right exists unless monies become due pursuant to Article 3.00.

[para19] The parties agreed there was no impediment in the agreement to it being registered on title to the lands affected by Article 3.00. If registered it would serve as notice of the potential claim to any potential successors in title whether by way of transfer or encumbrance. Simply put, as I indicated to counsel, I did not understand why the agreement had not be registered on title and why instead the plaintiff was expending funds in pursuing its lien rights by certificate of pending litigation, particularly as the certificate of pending litigation only extended to the claims as presently set out in the action and not to any future claims based on Article 3.00. The course of action followed by the plaintiff vis-à-vis the certificate of pending litigation in the circumstances herein amount to an unnecessary expenditure of funds by the plaintiff and a waste of the court's time and resources.

MASTER POLIKA

CBR# 114Edmunds v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program

Between John Edmunds and Diana Linklater, applicants (appellants), and Ontario New Home Warranty Program, respondent

O.J. No. 1195

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Divisional Court - Toronto, Ontario O'Driscoll, Marchand and Aitken JJ. Heard: January 25, 2000. Judgment: April 7, 2000. (10 paras.)

Counsel: Helen A. Daley, for the applicants (appellants). Peter Balasubramanian, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] O'DRISCOLL J. (orally):-- The appellants/applicants appeal to this Court under the provisions of s. 11(1) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21 from the decision of the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal (CRAT), dated May 14, 1998, directing the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (Program) to disallow the appellants' claim.

[para2] The appellants each contracted with Buckingham Estates Limited for the purchase of a new condominium. The condominiums in question were located in Niagara Falls. Pursuant to two (2) contracts entered into by Edmunds and Buckingham, Edmunds agreed to purchase and the developer agreed to sell two (2) units of the condominium. The appellant, Linklater, entered into a similar agreement with Buckingham for the purchase of one (1) unit. The three (3) contracts required the payment of a deposit of $17,900 per condominium, which was to be applied to the purchase price. Both appellants paid all required deposits under the contracts. According to the agreements, the date of possession of all three (3) units was June 1, 1989. The agreements allowed for an extension of the dates of possession until June 1, 1992. The appellants submit that a further term of the three agreements required the vendor, Buckingham, to provide mortgage financing to Edmunds and Linklater for the balance of the purchase price due upon closing.

[para3] In February 1991, Buckingham's principal became bankrupt, and, as a result, Buckingham abandoned the condominium project. According to the CRAT decision, by the terms of their agreements, the appellants agreed and undertook to accept the transfer of the title of their respective units from Coventry. According to the appellants, however, Coventry made it clear that it would not provide the mortgage financing, an essential term of the contracts between the appellants and Buckingham and would not complete those contracts pursuant to their terms.

[para4] A written notice was given by Coventry and received by the appellants toward the end of September 1991. The notice required the appellants to make payments of outstanding interim occupancy charges and it advised the appellants of Coventry's readiness to honour the agreements between the appellants and Buckingham and to close the transactions by November 1, 1991. The appellants did not comply with Coventry's request for payment of the occupancy fees and did not make any payments with respect to any amounts due and owing under the said agreements.

[para5] Subsequently, Coventry sold the three (3) units in question to third parties and reduced the purchase price of each unit so sold to the new purchasers by the amount of the deposits that were paid to Buckingham by the appellants.

[para6] The appellants argued before CRAT that they did nothing to forfeit their right to the return of the deposits under the purchase agreements with Buckingham. As a result, they submitted a claim to the Program for compensation for the loss of their deposits. The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, states:

"14.(1) Where,

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract;

. the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations."

[para7] We are of the view that,

(1) the principal of the vendor went bankrupt and, thereafter, Buckingham breached the contract between Buckingham Estates and the appellants/purchasers;

(2) there was no new or second agreement between the appellants and Coventry. At pages 84-85 of the transcript, the witness, called by the Program before CRAT, a lawyer named Mr. Paul Heath, who was acting for Coventry, gave evidence as follows:

THE CHAIR: So is there - do you feel that this is possibly a variation of the agreement?

THE WITNESS: From our perspective, from Coventry's perspective, we had no agreement.

[para8] We are also of the view that there was no agency relationship as between Buckingham Estates and Coventry. We are also of the view that the appellants have fulfilled the conditions of s. 14(1) of the Act and are entitled to be paid out of the fund. Moreover, we are of the view that s. 14(2) of the Act:

(2) In assessing damages, the Corporation shall take into consideration any benefit, compensation or indemnity payable to the person or owner from any source.

is not applicable to the facts of this case.

[para9] In the result, the appeal is allowed, the decision on appeal is set aside. The appellants are entitled to be paid out of the Fund the amounts of the deposits, namely, three times $17,900 plus interest as set out in:

- 1) Regulation 892 under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act,
- 2) Section 53 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, and
- 3) Section 35 and s. 53 of Regulation 96 made under the Condominium Act of Ontario.

[para10] After hearing submissions and then consulting with my colleagues, I have endorsed the back of the Appeal Book as follows:

"This appeal is allowed for the oral reasons given for the Court by O'Driscoll J. Costs of this appeal are fixed at $5,000.00 payable by the Respondent to the Appellants."

Action No. 9603-12754

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Bielby J. Heard: March 6, 2001. Judgment: March 8, 2001. Filed: March 9, 2001. (23 paras.)

Counsel: Roderick C. Payne, for the applicant, Bartizan Capital Corporation. Eric D. Young, for the plaintiff, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada. W. Neil McKay, for the Court Appointed Listing Agent, Orville R. Craft Realty Inc.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] BIELBY J.:-- Karenmax Investments Inc. ("Bartizan") applies for an order extending the time in which it may file a Notice of Appeal and, if successful, then appeals from a decision of Master Funduk given November 10, 1998. In that decision the Master found that a financing condition on an offer to purchase condominium units ordered sold by the Court in a foreclosure action had been removed by Bartizan, the purchaser, within contractually specified time limits. As that sale did not subsequently proceed, the Master ordered the forfeiture of one-half of Bartizan's to the listing agent, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada ("Royal Trust"), pursuant to a further contractual term.

[para2] This dispute surrounds the timing of the receipt of a waiver of that financing condition by Royal Trust from Bartizan. The Offer to Purchase was made subject to that condition having been met or waived by 4:00 p.m. on April 13, 1998. In Master Funduk's written reasons for the decision which Bartizan now wishes to appeal he expressly found: "At 11:00 a.m. (B.C. time) April 13, Bartizan faxed to the Court its 'removal' of condition (a) [the financing condition]. That too is within the time deadline."

[para3] However, Bartizan's evidence is that it first learned on November 8, 2000 that the waiver of condition had not in fact been received by Royal Trust until 9:16 p.m. on April 13, 1998, more than five hours after the expiry of the time limit imposed by the Offer to Purchase. That waiver had been sent to Royal Trust by fax. The document states:

The Seller and Buyer agree that the Real Estate Purchase Contract dated March 25, 1998 is hereby amended as follows:

To remove the Condition Precedent 3(A)

Dated at Vancouver, in the Province of B.C. at 11 o'clock am this 13 day of April A.D. 1998.

[para4] However, on the cover sheet which accompanied this document, when sent by fax, one finds the information "Date - Apr. 13 Time - 21:16" showing that the document was in fact sent at 21:16 or 9:16 p.m. This latter evidence was not brought to the attention of Master Funduk before he made his decision.

[para5] His order was entered and executed. A Certificate of No Appeal was issued on December 8, 1998. The property was subsequently sold to another party. Nothing further occurred in this matter until after Royal Trust, in a separate action, sued Bartizan for the deficiency between the ultimate sale price of the foreclosed property and the purchase price in the original sale to Bartizan. It advanced an argument of issue estoppel by claiming that Bartizan is precluded from advancing a defence about the time of delivery of the waiver of the financing condition because of the findings of Master Funduk in this matter.

[para6] In support of this application, Keith Talbot, an officer of Bartizan, deposes that he learned for the first time on November 8, 2000 of the true timing of the delivery of the waiver of the financing provision when it was provided by way of answer to undertaking in the new action commenced by Royal Trust. Four days later this application to extend the time for appeal was launched.

[para7] He further deposes that he did not earlier raise the issue because he believed that the waiver had erroneously been sent by Bartizan's own realtor, Re/Max, to Royal Trust before the 4:00 p.m. deadline. Bartizan's counsel stated that the first time it learned that the waiver of condition had been sent at all was in August 1998 when Royal Trust applied before Master Funduk for the order under appeal. At that time the waiver, including the fax notation showing 21:16 as the time of receipt, was before the Master by way of affidavit but apparently Bartizan did not observe this notation at that time.

[para8] Mr. Talbot deposes that Bartizan did not raise with Re/Max the issue of why it had sent the waiver in circumstances it believed were erroneous because by August 1998 the relationship between Bartizan and Re/Max had collapsed.

[para9] There is no evidence as to when Royal Trust or its counsel first became aware that the fax cover sheet accompanying the waiver gave a different time for receipt of the fax than that given in the body of the waiver, or when they became aware of the actual time it was received. It is clear that Royal Trust had this knowledge by November 2000 when it was provided to Bartizan.

[para10] Bartizan requested Master Funduk to reconsider his decision in June 2000. The Master declined, apparently finding that he was functus officio. Bartizan then proceeded with this attempt to appeal.

[para11] Bartizan, in its Notice of Appeal, alleges that its appeal should be heard notwithstanding the significant passage of time since the order was made because it suggests that had the Master had the new evidence before him when making his decision, he would have rendered a different decision, and because it alleges that Royal Trust committed a fraud on the Court.

[para12] Bartizan acknowledges that it cannot meet the traditional four-step test for leave to appeal after the expiry of the appeal period. It argues that the appeal should nonetheless be allowed to proceed because of the existence of special circumstances.

[para13] Our Court of Appeal in Cairns v. Cairns [1931] 3 W.W.R. 335 set out the four requirements for hearing an appeal after the expiry of an appeal period as follows. The party seeking to appeal must:

- a. show a bona fide intention to appeal was entertained while the right to appeal existed and that the failure to appeal was by reason of some special circumstance which served to excuse or justify such failure;
- b. account for the delay and show that the other side was not so seriously prejudiced thereby as to make it unjust, having regard to the position of both parties, to disturb the judgment;
- c. to show that he has not taken the benefits of the judgment from which he is seeking to appeal; and
- d. to show that he would have a reasonable chance of success if allowed to prosecute the appeal.

[para14] Bartizan argues that these rules should be suspended here because of the existence of special circumstances. It relies upon the decision of the Alberta Court of Appeal in Royal Bank of Canada v. Morin (1977) 4 Alta. L.R. (2d) 127 where the Court held that an applicant may be excused from meeting these requirements if special circumstances existed, there created by the existence of two contemporaneous judicial decisions, one of which found a party liable on a loan and another which found that it was not liable. The Court noted that the situation on its face bespoke a miscarriage of justice.

[para15] In this case Bartizan argues there is a similar patent miscarriage of justice because of the existence of evidence which on its face contradicts a finding of fact made by the Master in earlier proceedings. However, this argument ignores the fact that Bartizan itself did not check into the facts in 1998 when it learned, to its apparent surprise, that the financing condition had been waived contrary to its instructions, leaving it liable to complete a multi-million dollar purchase. Further, the "new evidence" was equally available to it as to Royal Trust in August 1998 at the time the matter was argued before the Master; it was included in the affidavit evidence used to support that application. The difference in time between the date on the face of the fax and in the cover sheet was equally present for all parties to notice; it appears that none of them in fact may have noticed it at that time.

[para16] Bartizan's argument also ignores the consideration that it may be estopped from raising the actual time the fax was delivered through the action of its agent, Re/Max, in representing to Royal Trust and to Master Funduk that the waiver was to be effective as of 11:00 a.m. on April 13 by forwarding the waiver with that time inserted on its face.

[para17] Bartizan further argues that special circumstances exist which exempt it from meeting the four tests in Cairns, supra, because Royal Trust was represented by legal counsel before Master Funduk who did not advise the Master of the actual time of receipt of the waiver by Royal Trust. It argued that the lawyer representing Royal Trust had a positive duty to return to the Court and advise it of the error when it came to his attention, flowing from a lawyer's duty to be candid and honest and to safeguard the due process of law and the proper operation of institutions of justice pursuant to the Alberta Code of Professional Conduct, ch.1, commentary G.1, p.2.

[para18] However, there is no evidence to show when, if ever, the lawyer who represented Royal Trust before Master Funduk had it brought to his attention that the waiver of the financing condition was received after the time deadline. There is certainly no evidence to show that he learned of this before Master Funduk rendered his decision or before expiry of the statutory appeal period relating to that decision. The absence of evidence to show that Royal Trust or its counsel intentionally misled the Master, i.e. that either knew there was evidence to the contrary on the issue of timing of the receipt of the waiver and failed to tell the Master, removes this from the type of scenario described by the Supreme Court of Canada in Harper v. Harper (1979) 98 D.L.R. (3d) 600 and by the Alberta Court of Appeal in Re Norris (1996) 45 Alta. L.R. (3d) 1.

[para19] It is not enough to state that Royal Trust must have realized the waiver was not received before 4:00 p.m. on the date in question because, having received the waiver, it must have known when it was received. This assumes that someone was continually standing beside the fax machine at the Royal Trust office so as to note when the documents came through the fax, and that that someone advised the employee with actual knowledge of the effect of the timing of the waiver as to the time of its actual receipt. The evidence is equally consistent with the possibility that no one "twigged on to" the issue of the inconsistency between the time the fax equipment typed on the waiver cover sheet and the time expressly stated on the face of the waiver until sometime well after the expiry of the appeal period in question.

[para20] Further, the motive for attempting to undo the Master's decision is not to secure repayment of the deposit monies forfeited as a result of it but rather is motivated by an attempt to blunt an argument available to Royal Trust in separate litigation. This application is, therefore, a device to attempt to meet an evidentiary challenge arising elsewhere rather than as a result of Bartizan being aggrieved by the immediate result of the decision it now hopes to appeal.

[para21] For all these reasons, this situation falls far short of the special circumstances described in Royal Bank of Canada v. Morin, supra.

[para22] The allegations of fraud made in the Notice of Appeal were not addressed in argument, let alone in the affidavit evidence supporting the application.

[para23] This application is dismissed. Costs may be spoken to, if necessary.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT RESERVED

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] HUNT J.A.:-- A company owned a large tract of land which, for several decades, was operated as a campground. The company advertised an event at which it proposed to auction individual campsites pursuant to a form of contract. The local municipality obtained an interim injunction restraining the holding of the auction because the company had not obtained permission to subdivide its property. The company then developed two additional forms of contract pursuant to which it proposed to dispose of interests in its property. This appeal concerns the validity of the contracts in light of s. 95(1) of the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-5 ("LTA"). It also raises questions about the interaction between s. 95(1) and Part 17 of the Municipal Government Act, S.A. 1994, c. M-26.1 ("MGA").

[para2] I conclude that all three contracts are invalid but that the first chambers judge should not have awarded solicitor-client costs against the company. Thus I would allow the appeal in part.

BRIEF BACKGROUND

[para3] Although four appeals were filed, oral argument focussed on the two that concern the validity of the contracts and whether solicitor-client costs should have been awarded against the Appellants in the first decision considered here (Appeal 9903-0412). Since the parties agreed that the matters raised in the other two appeals (0003-0132/0003-0133) were moot or would be rendered moot by this Court's decision, these Reasons concentrate on the former issues. There is a thorough examination of the facts in the second chambers decision considered here (Appeal 0003-0296): [2000] A.J. No. 615.

[para4] The Appellant Lovig is the president of the Appellant Half Moon Lake Resort Ltd. ("Half Moon"). Half Moon owns about 139 acres ("the Lands") located in Strathcona County ("County"), which Lands are subject to the jurisdiction of the Respondent County. Under the relevant land use by-law, permitted uses for the Lands include campsites, outdoor amusement establishments and outdoor participant recreation. The Lands contain over 200 campsites and have been operated as a campground and dude ranch for several decades. Amenities such as boating, equestrian and miniature golf facilities are found on the Lands.

[para5] Half Moon advertised a public auction at which it proposed to dispose of interests in the Lands pursuant to a form of contract ("the First Contract"). In its advertising, Half Moon claimed to have obtained subdivision approval. This was not true, but Half Moon had registered a plan of survey at the Land Titles Office.

[para6] The County obtained an interim injunction which, among other things, prohibited sales under the First Contract. Half Moon then provided individuals with the opportunity to acquire interests in the Lands pursuant to another form of contract ("the Second Contract").

[para7] In cross-examination on an affidavit during this litigation, Lovig was asked about the purpose of registering the survey plan at the Land Titles Office. He said at A.B. 39-41 that it was "[t]o provide a record of definition of particular lot areas" and that it was to be used in conjunction with or for reference to the sale of the lots under the First and Second Contracts.

[para8] In the first decision under appeal, a permanent injunction was granted prohibiting the Appellants from entering into agreements in the form of the First and Second Contracts. In his brief Reasons, the chambers judge adopted the County's arguments, saying at A.B. 130 (9903-0412) that this was "clearly an attempt to do indirectly what cannot be done directly. It is clearly a colourable attempt to create a subdivision. This scheme would subvert both the Land Titles Act and the Planning Act."

[para9] He awarded solicitor-client costs against the Appellants, stating at A.B. 135 that there had been an attempt to flaunt the spirit and intent of the interim injunction order. In his view, the Second Contract was virtually the same as the First, the use of which had been prohibited by the interim injunction. He considered that the Appellants had ignored the interim injunction through a colourable attempt to accomplish with the Second Contract what they had been enjoined from accomplishing with the First. He ordered the Registrar of Land Titles to cancel the plan of survey registered by the Appellants.

[para10] In the second decision under appeal, supra, a chambers judge considered yet another form of contract ("the Third Contract"). He concluded that, while purporting to be a 35-year lease, the Third Contract actually involved a sale of lots and was invalid due to s. 95(1) of the LTA.

[para11] At para. 19, he set out some of the factors that a court should take into account in determining whether or not a purported lease is really a sale. In this case, the significant matters included the involvement of 229 parcels of land; the Appellants, as "lessors", retained virtually no control over the property; rights relating to development of the land had been transferred to the lessees; not all development concerns had been dealt with; the lessees and proposed lessees were individuals rather than corporations; and there had been two previous unsuccessful attempts to convey interests in the property to individual owners.

[para12] He concluded that the Third Contract thwarted the purposes of the LTA and the MGA, those purposes being "the security and certainty of title and the promotion of orderly and efficient development of land" (para. 26). He granted an order declaring the Third Contract invalid, void and illegal and permanently enjoining the Appellants from leasing interests in the Lands under such contracts.

LEGISLATION

s. 95(1), (3)(a) LTA

95(1) No lots shall be sold under agreement for sale or otherwise according to any townsite or subdivision plan until a plan creating the lots has been registered.

(3) No party to a sale or agreement for sale is entitled in a civil action or proceeding to rely on or plead the provisions of this section

(a) if the plan of subdivision by reference to which the sale or agreement for sale was made is registered when the action or proceeding is commenced

s. 616(m), (s), (u), (ee), 617, 652(1) MGA

616. In this Part,

(m) "lot" means

(i) a quarter section

(iv) a part of a parcel of land described in a certificate of title if the boundaries of the part are described in the certificate of title other than by reference to a legal subdivision, or

(v) a part of a parcel of land described in a certificate of title if the boundaries of the part are described in a certificate of title by reference to a plan of subdivision

(s) "parcel of land" means the aggregate of the one or more areas of land described in a certificate of title or described in a certificate of title by reference to a plan filed or registered in a land titles office

(u) "plan of subdivision" means a plan of survey prepared in accordance with the Land Titles Act for the purpose of effecting a subdivision

(ee) "subdivision" means the division of a parcel of land by an instrument and "subdivide" has a corresponding meaning

[Emphasis added.]

617. The purpose of this Part and the regulations and bylaws under this Part is to provide means whereby plans and related matters may be prepared and adopted

(a) to achieve the orderly, economical and beneficial development, use of land and patterns of human settlement, and

(b) to maintain and improve the quality of the physical environment within which patterns of human settlement are situated in Alberta, without infringing on the rights of individuals for any public interest except to the extent that is necessary for the overall greater public interest.

652(1) A Registrar may not accept for registration an instrument that has the effect or may have the effect of subdividing a parcel of land unless the subdivision has been approved by a subdivision authority.

s. 16(d) Planning Act, R.S.A. 1970, c. 276 ("1970 Planning Act")

16. Land shall not be subdivided unless

(d) the proposed subdivision complies in all respects with this Act and The Subdivision and Transfer Regulations, and is approved in the manner prescribed by those regulations

THE FIRST AND SECOND CONTRACTS ("Contracts")

[para13] The First and Second Contracts, both titled "Contract of Purchase and Sale" (9903-0412 A.B. 204 and 212), are similar. The Purchaser agrees to purchase an undivided interest in Half Moon's Lands, coupled with another interest. Under the First Contract, the additional interest is called an Exclusive Use Area; under the Second, it is a Leased Area. In each case, the two interests together are referred to as "the Property".

[para14] Under the Contracts, the Exclusive Use Area and the Leased Area are specified by reference to an attached survey document. It is common ground that the survey document is the same as that registered by the Appellants at the Land Titles Office and cancelled by order of the first chambers judge.

[para15] The Contracts grant the Purchaser of the Property exclusive use of the Exclusive Use Area or the Leased Area, according to attached terms and conditions. One term is that the Purchaser shall be entitled to vacant possession of the Property unless provided otherwise in the Contract.

[para16] Details about the Exclusive Use Area and the Leased Area are set out in agreements attached to the Contracts (A.B. 208, 216). The terms of the attachments are also similar. They give the Purchasers "the exclusive right to occupy, use, improve and enjoy" the Exclusive Use or Leased Areas. Any improvements constructed thereon belong to the Purchaser.

[para17] Each Contract contemplates the establishment of an association having powers similar to those of a corporation under the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. C-22, as amended. The Association has the power to approve improvements on the Leased or Exclusive Use Areas.

[para18] The main difference between the First and Second Contracts is the nature of the interest that accompanies the undivided interest. Under the First, the rights are said to be interests in land that can be protected by caveat (A.B. 208). Under the Second, the lease is for three years and can be renewed for three years (A.B. 216). Effectively, the lease is renewable perpetually since each Second Contract is automatically renewed by the renewal of a single lease held by any Purchaser.

THE THIRD CONTRACT

[para19] The Third Contract (0003-0296 A.B. 89) is titled Lease Agreement. It recites that Half Moon, the Lessor and owner of the Lands, has designated 229 areas as reflected on an attached Leasehold Survey. Again, it is common ground that this is the same survey referenced in the first two contracts. The Lessee agrees to lease one of those areas for a prepaid lump sum in return for the exclusive right to occupy, use, improve and quietly enjoy the Leased Area for 35 years. The Lessee agrees to pay a pro rata share of the property taxes for the Land and the Common Areas (being all the Land except the Leased Areas). A Tenants' Association will be established to set rules and regulations for the use of the Leased and Common Areas. Lovig is a co-covenantor under the Lease Agreement and undertakes to ensure that Half Moon performs its covenants. In fact, Half Moon's sole covenant, also made by the Lessee, is not to assign the lease unless a successor in interest promises to be bound by it. The Lessee undertakes not to file a caveat with respect to its interest.

[para20] Under the attached Terms and Conditions, improvements to the Leased Areas can be made only with the consent of the Tenants' Association. The document is silent as to ownership of improvements. A Management Committee representing the Association is empowered to supervise the enforcement of the Agreement. The Lessee agrees to comply with municipal by-laws.

THE VALIDITY OF THE CONTRACTS

The First and Second Contracts

[para21] Counsel for the Appellants stated during oral argument that if the Third Contract is invalid, so too are the First and Second. Since I conclude below that the Third Contract is invalid, little needs to be said about the First and Second.

[para22] The First and Second Contracts breach s. 95(1) of the LTA because the additional interests they convey (the Exclusive Use Area and the Leased Area) constitute the sale of a lot absent the registration of a subdivision plan. Such a contract is illegal: Boulevard Heights v. Veilleux, [1915] 52 S.C.R. 185.

[para23] The County concedes that the conveyance of an undivided interest in the Lands under the Contracts is unobjectionable because the sale of an undivided interest is not prohibited by s. 95(1). In my opinion, however, the conveyance of the additional interests constitutes the prohibited sale of a lot. To explain why, it is necessary to examine the nature of an undivided interest.

[para25] Through the conveyance of the additional interests, the Contracts purport to grant an undivided owner the exclusive right of possession in perpetuity to part of the Lands. This is offensive to the nature of an undivided interest and can be seen in no other light than the sale of part of the Lands in contravention of s. 95(1).

[para26] This result is obvious as regards the Exclusive Use Area under the First Contract, which conveys a fee simple interest to a delineated portion of the Lands. The conveyance of the Leased Area under the Second Contract is slightly less objectionable on its face.

[para27] But an examination of the substance of the second transaction reveals the same result. Although it purports to convey a three-year leasehold interest, that interest is effectively renewable in perpetuity and has the hallmarks of a fee simple interest. For example, clause 2 of the Terms and Conditions attached to the Lease Agreement forming part of the Second Contract provides that the undivided interest and the lease interest "shall be deemed to be created concurrently and shall not be separated for any purpose whatsoever except where expressly authorized by this Agreement" (9903-0412 A.B. 218). The so-called lease interest has no elements typical of a leasehold interest, such as a real limited term or a lessor's right of re-entry for breach of a condition. In substance, the Second Contract grants exclusive rights in perpetuity to part of the Lands, absent an approved subdivision plan. It also breaches s. 95(1) and is illegal.

The Third Contract

[para28] To determine whether the Third Contract is valid, it is necessary to explore more fully the prohibition in s. 95(1) of the LTA and its relationship to Part 17 of the MGA. An understanding of Alberta's earlier planning laws, as interpreted by the courts, is also important.

[para29] The term "lot" is not defined in the LTA. The same term in a predecessor provision has been held to be capable of many meanings: Andersen v. Sinclair (1976), 2 Alta. L.R. (2d) ¶ at 71 (S.C.T.D.). A common usage is "[a] portion or parcel of land; any piece of land divided off or set apart for a particular use or purpose": Town of Westmount v. Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., [1911] 44 S.C.R. 364 at 377.

[para30] Subsection 616(m) of the MGA defines "lot" partly by reference to the term "plan of subdivision". The latter is defined in the same section as "a plan of survey prepared in accordance with the [LTA] for the purpose of effecting a subdivision". Since the only provision in Alberta law for creating a subdivision is found in Part 17 of the MGA, there is obviously a close link between the two statutes.

[para31] It is not necessary in this case to decide the precise extent to which the definition of "lot" in the MGA affects the same term in s. 95(1). It is sufficient to say that a "lot" in s. 95(1) refers to a piece of land that has been set apart for a particular use. At the least, this definition is compatible with the use of the term in the MGA.

[para32] The Appellants suggest that the Third Contract creates no "lot". I disagree. Each area to be leased is identified by reference to the same survey document which, according to Lovig's own testimony, was intended to define lot areas under the First and Second Contracts. This makes it apparent that the Third Contract creates pieces of land set apart for a particular use and involves lots as the term is used in s. 95(1).

[para33] The Appellants argue next that the Third Contract is not a "sale" but simply a lease that is not contrary to s. 95(1). They also assert that the Third Contract does not subdivide the Lands. They say that, in contrast to earlier legislation, there is now no prohibition against the subdivision of land absent planning approval, but only against registration at the Land Titles Office of an instrument having such an effect. Since they do not intend to use the Land Titles system, they claim the Third Contract is valid because it breaches no law. A response to these interrelated arguments requires an analysis of past planning law and how the LTA and Part 17 of the MGA interact.

[para34] Earlier planning legislation, as exemplified by s. 16 of the 1970 Planning Act, specifically prohibited subdivision without authority. Because this express prohibition is not found in the present MGA, a leading authority on municipal law in Alberta concludes that the MGA "does not purport to prohibit parties from entering into an unapproved transaction that has the effect of subdivision." F. A. Laux, Planning Law and Practice in Alberta, 2nd ed., looseleaf (Toronto: Carswell, 1996). The paragraph in which his observation is made, however, also states that "except for contracts for the sale of lots created in an unregistered plan which are expressly made illegal and unenforceable between the parties by s. 95 of the Land Titles Act, transactions between parties amounting to an unapproved subdivision are probably not ipso facto rendered void by the Municipal Government Act."

[para35] The sale of a lot is obviously a subdivision, so at least to this extent the Appellants are mistaken to assert that there is no longer a prohibition against unauthorized subdivision. In determining whether a transaction is the sale of a lot, the courts ought to analyse its substance and not just its form. Earlier cases decided under provisions other than s. 95(1) have done just that and are helpful in determining the real effect of the Third Contract. Three are of interest.

[para36] In Otan Developments Ltd. v. Kuropatwa (1978), 7 Alta. L.R. (2d) 274 (S.C.A.D.), a caveat protecting a lease was ordered removed because the Court concluded the lease had the effect of subdividing property without planning authority. The parties had entered into an agreement for the sale of the property, with the purchase price fully paid. When the owner failed to obtain subdivision approval, he leased part of the parcel to the purchaser for a term of 49 years at an annual rental of $1.

[para37] Haddad J.A. concluded at 277 that the parties intended to give the appellant "virtually the same control over the one acre as he would have had by becoming the registered owner of that portion if that result could have been achieved." He underscored at 278 that not every lease would have the effect of subdividing land. Rather, in each case, the purpose and effect, or possible effect, of the lease must be examined.

[para38] Morrow J.A. (Prowse J.A. concurring) came to the same conclusion for different reasons. The contract provided that the lease would terminate as soon as a registerable transfer was obtained for the unsubdivided parcel to which it pertained. He viewed this as an attempt to achieve the same effect as if subdivision approval had been procured. He noted that it would be possible to lease part of a parcel for a considerable period of time for parking or hay or grazing purposes without infringing the planning legislation. But in this case the parties were "attempting to obtain the benefits of a subdivision under the guise of a lease without having to comply with the applicable legislation within the foreseeable future" (at 286). The transaction was colourable and attempted to thwart the object of the legislation.

[para39] On the other hand, in Knowlton v. Registrar of Land Titles (1982), 19 Alta. L.R. (2d) 31 (Q.B.), Miller J. concluded that the registration of a caveat protecting a lease ought not to be refused because the lease did not effect a subdivision. While McDonald's lease was lengthy (40 years with an option to renew for 10 years), it had a bona fide commercial rationale in that the building to be constructed on the premises would require a substantial capital investment. The building would revert to the lessor at the end of the lease, with the lessee entitled to remove only trade fixtures. Although pre-payment of the rent in the amount of approximately a half-million dollars was suggestive of a purchase, Miller J. noted at 39 that it might only represent the discounted present value of the rental to be paid over the lease's term.

[para40] Unlike in Otan, there was no attempt to circumvent the planning legislation. There was neither a prior unsuccessful attempt to subdivide nor any indication that the lease was intended to accomplish such a result. There was no undertaking by the landlord to try to obtain subdivision approval. Subdivision approval already obtained for the whole shopping centre permitted the construction of a building of the type contemplated by McDonald's. The lease contained such typical provisions as the need for the lessor's approval prior to assignment of the lease or the erection of signs. It also gave the lessor the right to enter the premises under certain circumstances.

[para41] Robinson v. Guthrie (1984), 51 A.R. 356 (C.A.) involved an application for a declaration that the appellant was a tenant under a 99-year lease covering part of a quarter section. The lease provided for rental by way of a lump sum and payment of one-half the entire quarter section's annual taxes. There was no effort to obtain subdivision approval. Regardless of whether this transaction might be colourable, the Court of Appeal held that it violated the prohibition against unauthorized subdivision in s. 16 of the 1970 Planning Act because of its long term and the fact that the single advance payment approximated the cost of a fee simple parcel. At para. 9, Stevenson J.A. said that the transaction was intended to result in the division of the parcel for a long period of time, with all the other incidents of ownership.

[para42] These cases make it clear that each transaction must be examined to determine its true character and set out some of the appropriate factors to consider in that process. Do the essential elements of the Third Contract make it a real lease or is it in fact the "sale" of a lot prohibited by s. 95(1)?

[para43] The Appellants concede that, in answering this central question, the second chambers judge considered some relevant factors, including the length of the lease and the payment method. They complain, however, that he took account of inappropriate matters, including the existence of the First and Second Contracts, the fact that the Lessees were individuals rather than corporations, and a brochure prepared by the Appellants to explain why they were utilizing a 35-year lease. Even if some of these criticisms are valid, the totality of rights in the Third Contract suggests that it ought to be characterized as an invalid sale.

[para45] Since s. 95(1) is directed, in part, at preventing unauthorized subdivision, the matter of planning mischief is relevant to its application. The Appellants assert that this transaction involves no planning mischief, since the Lands will continue to be used the same way as they have for several decades. The County contests this. Regardless of which view of the facts is correct, the Lessor's total relinquishment of control over the Lands to the Lessees for the next 35 years could pose enforcement problems for planning authorities in the interim. Although the Lessees have covenanted in the Third Contract to comply with municipal laws, if they do not, the recourse of the County would be to the Lessor. The evidence is that the County would deal with the registered owner, namely Half Moon (A.B. 36). But Half Moon has delegated its rights to the Tenants' Association, which does not own the Lands. Such a problem does not arise in the case of a condominium association (after which the Association is patterned) because such an association is itself an owner which is obligated to comply with planning laws. Most leases do not delegate the enforcement of their provisions to the lessees themselves. Thus, contrary to the Appellant's argument, there may be a degree of planning mischief in the Third Contract. This is an additional reason for characterizing it as a sale prohibited by s. 95(1).

[para46] I recognize that owners may deal with their property as they see fit, subject to valid legislation. Indeed, this principle is enshrined in s. 617 of the MGA, which describes the purpose of its planning provisions. Not every long-term lease of property will be characterized as the sale of a lot. But wherever lies the line between a lease and the sale of a lot, for the above reasons it has been crossed by the Third Contract. The second chambers judge correctly concluded that the contract breaches s. 95(1).

SOLICITOR-CLIENT COSTS

[para47] In my opinion, the first chambers judge erred in awarding solicitor-client costs against the Appellants. Costs orders are discretionary and will be interfered with on appeal only if there is a clear, palpable and overriding error: Westersund v. Westersund (1993), 157 A.R. 276 at 278 (C.A.). Notwithstanding this broad discretion and the necessity for appellate deference, it is appropriate to interfere if the trial or chambers judge has committed such a serious error: Sidorsky et al. v. CFCN Communications Ltd. et al. (1997), 206 A.R. 382 (C.A.).

[para48] It is clear from the authorities that solicitor-client costs are to be awarded only in rare and exceptional circumstances. Jackson and Parkview Holdings v. Trimac Industries (1993), 138 A.R. 161 at para. 12 (Q.B.). The first chambers judge concluded that solicitor-client costs were justified because of his view that, by employing the Second Contract, the Appellants were flaunting the intent of the interim injunction.

[para49] But the terms of the interim injunction order were appropriately precise, prohibiting only the use of the First Contract which was attached as an exhibit (A.B. 123-24). Indeed, this is exactly what the County had sought in its Notice of Motion. The order did not prohibit the use of a contract similar to the First Contract. The County complains, in part, that the Appellants neglected to inform it that they intended to employ a different form of contract. But the injunction order did not require this. Nor does any general legal principle.

[para50] While I agree with the first chambers judge that the Second Contract is illegal, there are differences between the two contracts that make the legality of the Second at least marginally more arguable than the First. The Appellants did not act wrongly in testing the limits of s. 95(1) by drafting the Second Contract in terms somewhat different than the First. They were entitled to order their affairs as they saw fit, risking the possibility that a later legal assessment of the Second Contract would characterize it as being contrary to s. 95(1). They flaunted neither the letter nor the spirit of the interim injunction. Thus, they were not guilty of misconduct or blameworthiness to justify an award of solicitor-client costs.

SUMMARY

[para51] All three contracts breach s. 95(1) of the LTA. Solicitor-client costs, however, should not have been granted by the first chambers judge. Therefore, I would allow the appeal in part.

[para52] Although the County sought solicitor-client costs on the appeal, I reject its assertion that the appeal was without merit. The issues raised are complex and important. Therefore, the County should receive only party-and-party costs under the appropriate column on the appeal.

Sun Life Trust Co. v. Kashwest Investments Ltd.

Between Sun Life Trust Company, plaintiff, and Kashwest Investments Ltd., Charles Walters and 551988 Alberta Ltd., defendant

Action No. 9603 06138

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Master Breitreuz Heard: September 18, 2000. Judgment: filed February 6, 2001. (26 paras.)

Counsel: E. Mirth, Q.C., for the plaintiff. Ken Alyluia, for the defendant Charles Walters.

REASONS FOR DECISIONMASTER BREITKREUZ:--*FACTS

[para1] In 1990, Sun Life Trust Company ["Sun Life"] granted a mortgage to Kashwest Investments Ltd. ["Kashwest"] on a 15-suite apartment building. The principal amount of the mortgage was $356,250.00. The term was for three years, with an interest rate of 12% per annum calculated semi-annually.

[para2] In late 1992, Charles Walters ["Walters"] purchased the apartment building and the land on which it is located from Kashwest. Walters paid a cash deposit of $62,500.00 and assumed the mortgage. At the time of purchase, the balance owing on the mortgage was $344,484.24 plus accrued interest of $916.88. Walters' real estate agent transferred title to the property into Walters' name in January of 1993. In March of 1993, Walters transferred the property to 551988 Alberta Ltd. ["Numberco"], of which he was president and director.

[para3] Walters sought to renew the mortgage on behalf of Numberco in 1993, and after approximately one year he was finally able to negotiate an extension with Sun Life. Sun Life sent Walters a letter setting out the terms of the extension [the "Extension Agreement"] on April 7, 1994. The Extension Agreement provided that the mortgage would be extended for five years, at an interest rate of 8.25 per cent per annum calculated semi-annually. The monthly payment was reduced from $3,677.00 to $3,319.00. The Agreement named Numberco as the sole mortgagor, and Walters as an "Additional Covenantor." This clause, found in Paragraph 1, reads in part:

Additional The following persons(s) described as Covenantor(s): Additional Covenantor(s) shall be jointly and severally liable with the Mortgagor, for the fulfilment of the obligations set out in the Mortgage as extended and amended herein:

Charles Walters

[para4] Walters signed the Agreement. His legal counsel also signed it, as a witness to Walters' signature. On behalf of Numberco, Walters submitted post-dated cheques to cover one year of mortgage payments pursuant to the terms of the Extension Agreement. However, the document was never formally executed and Walters did not sign a statement to comply with the Guarantees Acknowledgment Act.

[para5] In June, 1994, Numberco defaulted on the mortgage. The amount owing on the mortgage as of June 14, 2000, noted in an affidavit of default, was $570,882.14. This indebtedness exceeds the value of the property, according to the appraisal evidence of both parties. Sun Life's property appraiser placed the market value of the property at $335,000.00 and the forced sale value at $319,000.00, effective May 2, 2000. The appraisal obtained by Walters placed a value of $400,000.00 on the property, effective October 1, 1999.

THE APPLICATION

[para6] Sun Life applied for summary judgment declaring the amount owing, and against Kashwest, Numberco, and Walters for the deficiency owing on the mortgage. Kashwest is not a party to the application. Sun Life is also applying for a "Rice" order to purchase the property for $335,000.00. Walters' potential liability arises from his assumption of the mortgage from Kashwest. Pursuant to s. 62 of the Land Titles Act, the mortgagee has a right of action against the transferee of a mortgage. The transferee's liability remains even if the mortgage is subsequently transferred to another.

[para7] At the hearing of the application, Walters argued the defence of novation. According to Walters, Sun Life accepted the Extension Agreement as a substitution for the original mortgage. If a novation occurred, Sun Life accepted Numberco as the only debtor and released the previous mortgagors, including Walters, from their obligations. Walters further argued that because he did not comply with the Guarantees Acknowledgment Act, his covenant in the Extension Agreement cannot be enforced.

NOVATION

[para8] According to National Trust Co. v. Mead, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 410 ["Mead"], novation is a question of fact, determined by all of the circumstances of the parties' agreement. In Mead, a corporation had taken out a mortgage through National Trust to finance construction of a condominium building. Mead purchased the condominium unit from the corporation and assumed the mortgage, covenanting to be personally liable. Mead defaulted on the mortgage. Mead then argued that his assumption agreement with the corporation effected a novation, by replacing the original mortgage. If so, pursuant to Saskatchewan legislation that protects an individual from personal liability on a mortgage, Mead could not be found liable for the personal covenant in the "new" mortgage.

[para9] In Mead, Wilson J. clarified the law on novation, confirming three requirements for determining if a novation has occurred. She cited these requirements as they were set out in Polson v. Wulffsohn (1890), 2 B.C.R. 39, as follows at 427:

1. The new debtor must assume complete liability;
2. The creditor must accept the new debtor as principal debtor and not merely as an agent or guarantor; and

3. The creditor must accept the new contract in full satisfaction and substitution for the old contract.

She rejected a fourth requirement, the consent of the original debtor, which some courts have added.

[para10] Wilson J. held that the court may look at all the circumstances to determine if these requirements are fulfilled. Two critical factors are the conduct of the parties and whether changes were made to the terms of the contract. According to Wilson J., significant changes in the terms of a mortgage effected without the consent of the original debtor constitute strong evidence of novation.

[para11] Wilson J. considered the role of written agreements in the novation analysis. She held that while they do not determine the question, they provide compelling evidence of the parties' intentions. At page 433, she stated:

As Esson J.A. quite rightly noted, because novation is a question of fact, it would be wrong to hold that the execution of a document by itself would satisfy the doctrine. This is not to say, however, that such an agreement may not carry significant weight in determining whether a novation has taken place. Indeed, if the parties have directed their minds to setting out the terms of the debt relationship in writing, it seems to me that the terms of that agreement should conclude what the parties intended their relationship to be.

[para12] Wilson J. found that a clause in the assumption agreement allowing National Trust to release the corporation from liability did not effect a novation, but rather preserved National Trust's remedies against the corporation. She took into account a "no prejudice" clause in the original mortgage, which provided that any subsequent dealing would not affect or prejudice the rights of National Trust against the corporation. She stated, at page 438:

Taken together, these provisions are a strong indication that the assumption of the debt by Mead was not accepted by National Trust in full consideration and substitution of Remail's [the corporation's] obligation. The question therefore becomes whether the conduct of the parties can negate that indication.

[para13] Therefore, the parties' conduct may override the intentions shown by written agreements. In Mead, Wilson J. found that the evidence that National Trust had discontinued its suit against the corporation did not provide "an adequate basis on which to find an intention to release the original mortgagor:" p. 438. These circumstances were not of the compelling type necessary to found a novation.

[para14] Turning to the renewal agreement between the Numberco and Sun Life, Walters argues that novation is established by significant changes made to the mortgage in the Extension Agreement. The mortgage term changed from three to five years, the annual interest rate changed from 12% to 8.5%, and the monthly payments decreased from $3,677.00 to $3,319.00. However, significant changes to a contract are only one element of the evidence relevant to determining if novation occurred. I must consider all of the circumstances and whether the facts establish that the Extension Agreement replaced the original mortgage. The three requirements listed by Wilson J. in Mead must be fulfilled.

[para15] First, did the new debtor, Numberco, assume complete liability? Paragraph 1 of the Extension Agreement identifies the sole mortgagor as "551988 Alberta Ltd.," or Numberco. Paragraph 1 also contains the clause designating Walters as an "Additional Covenantor," which is cited above. Even though this clause provides that Walters remains "jointly and severally liable," he cannot be considered a co-mortgagor because he does not have an interest in the land: Maritime Life Assurance Co. v. Tiwalsh Developments Ltd. [1985] A.J. No. 276 (Q.B.). Walters is no longer a principal debtor. Numberco is liable to Sun Life for the whole amount, a fact unchanged by Sun Life's and Numberco's right to collect from a guarantor if Numberco is unable to satisfy the debt. Therefore, the first requirement is met.

[para16] The second requirement is also fulfilled. The question is whether Sun Life accepted the new debtor, Numberco, as principal debtor and not merely as an agent or guarantor. The Extension Agreement provides that Numberco is the sole mortgagor, and as such is the principal debtor.

[para17] The third requirement is that Sun Life accepted the Extension Agreement in full satisfaction and substitution for the original mortgage. As pointed out by Wilson J. in Mead, the written agreements entered into by the parties may provide conclusive evidence of their intentions. In the present case, two documents are relevant to Sun Life's intentions - the original mortgage and the Extension Agreement.

[para18] Paragraph 16 of the Extension Agreement indicates that Sun Life did not intend the Extension Agreement to replace the original mortgage. It reads as follows:

16. PRESERVATION OF RIGHTS

This Agreement to Extend Mortgage shall not amend, alter, vary or waive the Mortgage or any of the terms or provisions thereof or any of the rights or remedies thereunder, nor create a novation. The Mortgage shall be extended and amended as provided herein upon the registration of the Extension Agreement. [my emphasis].

[para19] The original mortgage agreement contains a "no prejudice" clause which suggests that Sun Life granted the mortgage with no intention of releasing original mortgagors from their obligations by entering into extension agreements. This clause reads as follows:

23 (c) THAT no extension of time given or alteration of interest rate or alteration of principal payments made by the Mortgagee to the Mortgagor or its assigns or anyone claiming under it or any other dealing by the Mortgagee with the owner of the said lands shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights of the Mortgagee against the Mortgagor, any other person or any subsequent Mortgagee.

[para20] The parties in North West Trust Co. et. al. v. Singer (Henry) Ltd. et. al. (1993), 146 A.R. 352 (Q.B.) executed a mortgage with a clause identical to the "no prejudice" clause above. The mortgagor in that case also argued that significant changes had taken place. Dea J. held that the clause, s. 25, was directly addressed to the issue of "significant changes" as raised by Wilson J. in Mead: para. 34. He held at para. 36:

The import of s. 25 of the mortgage is to authorize the plaintiff mortgagee to make the very kind of agreements that it made with Kershaw to extend the mortgage without creating a novation.

[para21] The "preservation of rights" clause and the "no prejudice" clause show that Sun Life contemplated the possibility that the Extension Agreement might be construed as a "new" mortgage and took steps to avoid that interpretation. The clauses are strong evidence that Sun Life did not intend to release prior mortgagors from their obligations. There is little else that Sun Life could have done to express its refusal to accept the Agreement as a substitution for the original mortgage. Walters signed the Extension Agreement on the terms offered by Sun Life, including the "preservation of rights" term, and in doing so had the advice of legal counsel.

[para22] However, as held by Wilson J. in Mead, novation can still be established from the parties' conduct. Walters argues that the circumstances under which he assumed the mortgage from Kashwest are relevant in this regard. He claims that title to the property was transferred into his name without his knowledge or consent, and points out that he transferred title to Numberco less than two months later. However, I do not agree that Walters' lack of intent to personally assume the mortgage is a circumstance that is relevant to the inquiry. The issue is whether Sun Life intended to accept the Extension Agreement in full substitution for the original mortgage. The circumstances surrounding a prior transfer of the property do not provide a basis to find an intention by Sun Life to release Walters from liability. Walters has not pointed to any other conduct by Sun Life that would suggest such an intention.

[para23] The Extension Agreement cannot be viewed as a new contract or a release of liability. Novation is not a triable issue in these circumstances.

GUARANTEES ACKNOWLEDGMENT ACT

[para24] Since Walters did not dispute liability on the personal covenant in the mortgage, in the event his novation argument was unsuccessful, there is no need to resort to the covenant in the Extension Agreement to find him liable for the deficiency. Therefore, I do not have to address the Guarantees Acknowledgment Act.

RICE ORDER

[para25] I am unable to decide on the basis of the evidence before me the amount of the credit Mr. Walters should receive for the value of the property; should it be $335,000.00 or should it be $400,000.00, or should it be somewhere in between? The best I can do on an interim basis is to permit transfer of the property to the name of the plaintiff and give the parties some time to resolve that issue, or make further submissions to me, failing which the issue of the amount of the deficiency will have to go to trial.

[para26] The plaintiff is entitled to its solicitor client costs.

Hough v. Alberta

Between William John Hough and Shirley June Hough, applicants, and Her Majesty in Right of the Province of Alberta (The "Crown"), respondent

Action No. 9712 000642

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Wetaskiwin Red Deer, Alberta Sirrs J. Heard: November 2, 2000. Judgment: November 30, 2000. (12 paras.)

Counsel: Daniel Rowland, for the applicants. Stanley Margolis and Esther Schwab, for the respondent.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

SIRRS J.--

FACTS

[para1] In 1992, Mr. and Mrs. Hough purchased a section of land, 25-45-3-W5th, ("section 25") which is located approximately 12 kilometers southeast of Winfield, Alberta. Section 25 was purchased from Mr. and Mrs. Banta who in turn had purchased it from another party. Greenwall Bros. purchased section 25 from the Government of Alberta in 1966. Although section 25 is only 3 kilometers east of Highway 12, there is no public road existing which the Houghs might use to drive motor vehicles to and from section 25. There are undeveloped road allowances from both the east and west which would provide access to the south part of section 25 but the costs of building a new road on an allowance to the standards required by the County of Wetaskiwin are too high for the Houghs to bear considering the limited use they have in mind for section 25.

[para2] There is an existing gravel road which slices through the section that is immediately east of section 25 (section 30) which would provide the Houghs with suitable access. The gravel road was constructed on a date uncertain by Pan Canadian Petroleum Limited and Crestar Energy Inc. under authority of Licences of Occupation (L.O.C.) granted by the Government of Alberta, the registered owner, and the Respondent in this application. Crestar continues to use the gravel road to service a well site that is located in the middle of section 30; however, Pan Canadian is not presently operating their well site which is located at the west end of section 30 and thus has no interest, at present, in maintaining their portion of the gravel road. The Houghs obtained the consent of both oil companies in 1992 to use the gravel road to gain access to section 25. The previous owners, the Bantas, had been allowed the use of the gravel road; however, we have no evidence that owners prior to the Bantas used the gravel road. The Houghs did not obtain the consent of either the registered owner or the grazing lessee of section 30 to use the gravel road. Problems arose in August 1993 when Crestar, at the request of the grazing lessee, erected a locked gate which barred entry to the gravel road on section 30. Although the registered owner appears willing to permit the use of the gravel road by the Houghs the grazing lessee will have none of it. There is no argument that the lessee is not entitled to restrict access over section 30.

[para3] The Applicants seek to establish that there is an easement implied by grant or by necessity by which the Applicants may travel over the gravel road.

[para4] The Court has been referred to the Ontario Court of Appeal decision of Barton v. Raine, 29 O.R. (2d) 685 in which the Court of Appeal stated that the court should be loathe to imply easements and that as a general rule, an easement should be expressed in the clearest of terms. Exceptions to this rule are easements of necessity, reciprocal and mutual easements and easements that arise by necessary inference.

[para5] The case law regarding easements of necessity refers to situations where there is no other way by which land can be accessed. Justice Paperny in the case of Condominium Plan et al, [2000] 2 W.W.R. 591 in finding that there was no easement of necessity because businesses had access, albeit inconvenient and difficult access, made reference to the following authorities:

1. MacKinnon v. MacDonald (1988), 1 R.P.R. (2d) 185, is cited as authority for the position that an easement of necessity can only exist where the implied grantee of the easement has no other means whatsoever of reaching their land.

2. Re Stone (1982), 38 N.B.R. (2d) 492, at page 506 indicates that mere inconvenience is not sufficient reason for creating an easement of necessity.

[para6] In this case, the Houghs clearly face the inconvenience and expense of constructing a road on one of two road allowances when use of the gravel road would be so convenient and inexpensive, but they do have a means of access, and thus, the Houghs cannot be said to have need of an easement by way of necessity.

[para7] The Houghs have not argued that there is any case for a reciprocal or mutual easement in their situation, probably because there are no facts to support such an argument.

[para8] In regards to the last exception enunciated in Barton v. Raine i.e. of whether an easement arises by necessary inference from the facts surrounding the history of section 25, the Court has considered the following:

1. The Province of Alberta transferred title to section 25 to a third party believed to be Greenwall Bros. in 1966.
2. There are no facts before the Court to verify how Greenwall Bros. gained access to section 25.
3. There are no facts that suggest the gravel road existed in 1966 or that an access trail existed along the path of the present gravel road.
4. At some point before 1992, the Bantas were granted permission to use the gravel road to gain motor vehicle access to section 25.

5. The Houghs contacted and obtained the permission of the two oil companies to use the gravel road. The Houghs did not contact or obtain the permission of the registered owner or the lessee of section 30.

6. The Houghs knew at the time they purchased section 25 that the two oil companies only had access to section 30 by way of L.O.C. and not by way of any easement agreement.

7. Mrs. Hough met with County of Wetaskiwin officials prior to purchasing section 25 to discuss the situation concerning the road allowances.

[para9] In my opinion, the facts of this case do not warrant a finding that there is an easement by necessary inference. It is not known how section 25 was accessed between 1966 and the Bantas' ownership. There are no facts upon which the Court might find that it is necessary to cross through the middle of section 30 to get to section 25. The facts indicate that there are at least two other ways to access section 25.

[para10] The Houghs' argument, based on the rationale of Dobson v. Tulloch (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 533 which indicates that where an owner of land grants a part of land and retains other parts himself, all easements necessary for the reasonable enjoyment are usually implied in favour of the part, so granted, must also fail. The Province of Alberta transferred section 25 in 1966. There are no facts upon which to infer that between 1966 and the Bantas' ownership or during the ownership of the Greenwall Bros. that the area of section 30, now occupied by the gravel road, was required for the enjoyment of section 25. To consider this argument, the Court would require much better evidence about the history of sections 25 and 30.

DECISION

[para11] Mr. and Mrs. Hough have not satisfied the Court that they are entitled to an easement created by implied grant or by necessity and their application is dismissed.

[para12] Should the parties wish to speak to costs, they may do so, provided that they contact the Clerk to arrange a hearing prior to February 28, 2001.

Bibieffe International Holdings B.V. v. York Region Condominium Corp. No. 838

Between Bibieffe International Holdings B.V., (plaintiff/respondent), and York Region Condominium Corporation No. 838 and Steelcon Group Inc., (defendants/appellants)

Docket No. C33094

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Charron, MacPherson and Sharpe JJ.A. Heard: September 28, 2000. Judgment: September 29, 2000. (7 paras.)

Counsel: Richard Quance, for the appellants. Rocco Palmieri, for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- The respondent initiated this action to determine the rights of the parties under an easement over a strip of land adjacent to the lands of the appellant "for the purpose of pedestrian and vehicular access and egress and for the purpose of parking vehicles." The appellant takes the position that the easement affords it the exclusive right to park vehicles on the land governed by the easement. The respondent takes the position that it retains the right to use the lands for access and parking. The trial proceeded on the basis of an agreed statement of facts. The trial judge was asked to respond to three questions:

1. What is the proper interpretation to be given to the easement ?
2. Are the [respondents], including their occupants, customers, invitees, entitled to park vehicles [on the land governed by the easement]?
3. If the answer to question No. 2 is yes, then on what basis is such parking to be permitted? Is it on a "first come first serve basis" or otherwise?

[para2] The trial judge did not specifically answer these questions, but found that the language of the easement did not afford the appellant the exclusivity it claimed.

[para3] In our view, given the very general and abstract manner in which this case was presented, it was not possible for the trial judge to make anything approaching a definitive or exhaustive pronouncement of the rights of the parties. We affirm the judgment under appeal, but with the following qualification.

[para4] The grant of an easement does not amount to the grant of title to the lands and easements are ordinarily interpreted in a manner that does not deprive the servient owner of its proprietary rights. We agree with the trial judge that there is nothing in the language of this easement that would amount to a grant to the appellant the exclusive right to access and to park vehicles on the land.

[para5] On the other hand, it is clear that the respondent must exercise its residual rights as owner of the servient tenement in a manner consistent with the rights accorded by the easement. We also agree with the trial judge that there is nothing in the very meagre factual record to indicate that the respondents have substantially interfered with the rights granted by the easement. That conclusion is inevitable from the abstract manner in which the case was presented. However, this finding clearly does not mean that the respondent is free to access and park vehicles as it sees fit. The easement does not afford exclusivity to the appellant, but it does afford the appellant priority to this extent: the respondent must exercise its rights in a manner that respects the rights granted to the appellant. A blanket, unqualified right to park on a "first come first serve basis", if exercised by the respondent in a manner that deprived the appellant of the right to access to the land or the right to park vehicles, would not respect the rights granted by the easement. In our view, in light of the factual record before us, it is neither possible nor appropriate to attempt a more specific delineation of the respective rights of the parties.

[para6] Accordingly we would vary the judgment by adding the following words to paragraph 1: "but the Plaintiffs are required to exercise their rights as owners of Part 12 in a manner that respects the rights granted to the Defendants by the easement."

[para7] In our view, the parties should bear their own costs of the appeal.

Sorenson v. Hardcastle

Between Egon Sorenson, plaintiff, and Josephine Hardcastle, defendant

Court File No. 24274/97

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Aitken J. Heard: August 5, 6 and 16-19, 1999. Judgment: April 19, 2000. (89 paras.)

Counsel: Gil D. Rumstein, for the plaintiff. Kurt W. Anders, for the defendant.

AITKEN J.:--

Opening:

[para1] In the mid-1970's Egon Sorensen and Josephine Hardcastle left their first spouses and started to cohabit. Their relationship lasted until 1997, but they never married. Until 1990, both parties worked outside the home, with brief periods of unemployment. Mr. Sorensen retired in 1990; Ms. Hardcastle continues to work. When the parties separated, Ms. Hardcastle had three parcels of real estate registered in her name with significant equity, including the property where the parties had lived since 1983. Mr. Sorensen had virtually no assets. He is now 79, Ms. Hardcastle is 68.

[para2] Egon Sorensen seeks an order declaring that he has a one-half interest in the three parcels of real estate held in Ms. Hardcastle's name, by virtue of a constructive trust. As well, he seeks spousal support in the amount of $700 per month retroactive to June 1, 1999.

Credibility:

[para3] During the trial, I had concerns about the credibility of both Mr. Sorensen and Ms. Hardcastle and the reliability of their evidence. On the whole, I felt Mr. Sorensen was trying to be accurate in giving his testimony; however, I concluded that his version of the couple's story exaggerated his contributions to the relationship and minimized those of Ms. Hardcastle, perhaps as a result of his strong sense of having being wronged by Ms. Hardcastle. As well, Mr. Sorensen had some difficulty with dates and financial details. He has not kept comprehensive records that might have assisted him in reconstructing the parties financial relationship over the last 25 years. He tried his best to remember various payments between the two, but quite understandably had difficulty doing so.

[para4] Ms. Hardcastle did have detailed financial records; however, they showed her payments without showing her sources of income. This resulted in the appearance being given that she had paid virtually all of the parties' joint expenses, and especially the expenses associated with the three properties focused on in these proceedings. However, under cross-examination it became clear that Mr. Sorensen made a significant contribution of labour and money to the relationship, something which Ms. Hardcastle reluctantly had to concede. Ms. Hardcastle's evidence was provided in an unbalanced fashion which did not cast her in a good light. There were a number of occasions when Ms. Hardcastle was shown to have provided different information on the same subject at different times during these parties' long saga. Consequently, although Ms. Hardcastle was able to provide more documentary evidence, I looked upon her oral evidence with some skepticism.

Facts:

Background

[para5] Egon Sorensen was born of March 27, 1921 in Denmark. He married Kate Sorensen and they had three children. The family moved to Canada in 1951, and Mr. Sorensen has lived here since. Throughout his career in Canada Mr. Sorensen worked primarily in the construction field; in later years this involved being a superintendent of building projects, such as shopping centres and apartment complexes.

[para6] Josephine Hardcastle was born on March 12, 1932 in Great Britain. She trained as a secretary. On July 11, 1953, she married Frank Bernard Hardcastle. The couple had two children. The family immigrated to Canada in 1967 and settled in Ottawa.

[para7] Mr. Sorensen met Ms. Hardcastle in 1973, when each was still residing with his or her first spouse, the Sorensens on Sanderson Drive and the Hardcastles at 24 Parkglen, Nepean. Mr. Sorensen claims that he and Ms. Hardcastle cohabited from 1975 until their separation on May 29, 1997. Ms. Hardcastle claims that she and Mr. Sorensen started to cohabit only in 1980, and that prior to that he stayed at her home from time to time from 1978 onward, but not on a regular basis. In regard to this issue, I have the benefit of the pleadings when Frank Bernard Hardcastle petitioned for a divorce in January 1979 as well as the evidence of Mr. Sorensen's daughter, Irene Sleiman, and Ms. Hardcastle's daughter, Jacqueline Logsdail.

[para8] I find that Mr. Sorensen and Ms. Hardcastle started an affair in 1973 almost immediately after they met. Mr. Hardcastle became aware of the affair in July 1974, at which time Ms. Hardcastle advised him she wanted a separation. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Hardcastle moved out of the Parkglen property into a separate residence. The Hardcastles maintained an amicable relationship and continued to spend time together with their children; however, they never cohabited after July 1974. From July 1974 to 1979, Ms. Hardcastle, her children, and one or two boarders resided at the Parkglen property. By 1979, only Ms. Hardcastle's son, Peter, and two boarders remained with her.

[para9] I find that Mr. Sorensen advised his wife that he wanted a separation sometime in 1974 and by 1975 he was no longer living full-time at the Sanderson property. I find that from 1975 to 1979, Mr. Sorensen stayed up to three nights a week with Ms. Hardcastle at the Parkglen property, he stayed from time to time with Ms. Sorensen and otherwise he stayed from time to time in various towns and cities where he was working on projects. The Sanderson property was sold in the late seventies, at which time Ms. Sorensen moved to a Halifax Drive address. Mr. Sorensen stayed with her there from time to time, but spent most of his time at the Parkglen property. During this period, Mr. Sorensen also spent some time working both in Montreal and in New Brunswick.

[para10] I accept Ms. Hardcastle's evidence that prior to her divorce from Mr. Hardcastle being finalized, she was concerned about her financial security and did not want Mr. Sorensen to be seen as living full-time at the Parkglen property because she did not want to jeopardize her rights to spousal support. The Hardcastle divorce became absolute on March 30, 1980 at which time Ms. Hardcastle released any right she had to spousal support and she became the sole owner of the Parkglen property. Certainly by this time Mr. Sorensen was living full-time with Ms. Hardcastle at the Parkglen property.

[para11] From January 1975 until 1980, Josephine Hardcastle did clerical work at a real estate office. From 1975 to 1978, she also worked part-time as a waitress in a pub. Until approximately 1980, Mr. Hardcastle paid the mortgage on the Parkglen property, gave Ms. Hardcastle money for food and paid for the children's expenses. Until 1980, Ms. Hardcastle also had the rent of $75 per week each from one or two boarders. Ms. Hardcastle (with Mr. Hardcastle's assistance up to 1980) paid the mortgage, utilities, property taxes and insurance in regard to the Parkglen property.

[para13] Ms. Hardcastle acknowledges that Mr. Sorensen wallpapered some rooms in the Parkglen property, finished a recreation room in the basement and built a patio and barbecue; however, her evidence is that she paid for most of the materials involved with these projects.

[para14] In May 1981, the couple moved to Peterborough because Mr. Sorensen had been hired to supervise the construction of a shopping mall. They lived in an apartment paid for by Mr. Sorensen's employer and Mr. Sorensen paid most of the expenses. At this time, the Parkglen home was rented out and Ms. Hardcastle received $1,000 per month as rent. Ms. Hardcastle did not work outside the home while she was in Peterborough. When the parties moved to Peterborough, they purchased furniture in part with a one-time contribution of $400 from Mr. Sorensen's employer, and in part with a loan from Avco Financial, which was initially repaid by Mr. Sorensen and then subsequently by Ms. Hardcastle.

[para15] In May 1982, the parties returned to Ottawa and resumed residency at the Parkglen property. Both Mr. Sorensen and Ms. Hardcastle were unemployed during the period from January 1982 to the summer of 1982, at which time both found work. At this point, Ms. Hardcastle continued to pay the mortgage, cablevision, most utility bills, the furniture loan and other associated family and personal expenses. Mr. Sorensen paid for food, telephone, some utility bills, some car expenses and some entertainment expenses.

[para16] In 1983, Ms. Hardcastle sold the Parkglen property for $140,000 and purchased a property on Kirkwood Avenue for $170,000, paying a downpayment of $100,000 and giving the vendor a mortgage back of $70,000. The property was a triplex with two apartments upstairs, an apartment downstairs and a finished basement. Ms. Hardcastle had found the property and Mr. Sorensen inspected it and advised Ms. Hardcastle that it would be a good purchase. Mr. Sorensen offered to do any required repair work on the rental units.

[para17] From 1983 to 1998, Mr. Sorensen and Ms. Hardcastle resided in the ground floor apartment. The basement was turned into an apartment, and it and the two apartments on the second floor were rented. Mr. Sorensen believes Ms. Hardcastle received approximately $1,200 per month as rent from the three apartments, the basement apartment yielding approximately $500 per month. From 1982 to 1990 or 1991, Mr. Sorensen worked most of the time in the construction industry. From April 1986 onward, he also collected Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan payments. Ms. Hardcastle worked at various jobs with real estate agencies from 1982 forward and had various periods of employment, the longest being from September 1986 to December 1987. Ms. Hardcastle's father lived with the couple and paid room and board from September 1985 to November 1987. Mr. Sorensen retired in 1990 (according to him) or 1991 (according to Ms. Hardcastle) and thereafter only received his Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan payments. Ms. Hardcastle retired in 1997 and thereafter received Old Age Security, Canada Pension Plan payments and rental income.

[para18] Mr. Sorensen claims an interest in the Kirkwood property by virtue of the following contributions he made to the property:

- * He wallpapered the livingroom and diningroom.
- * He did the maintenance and repair work on the interior, such as changing light bulbs, painting and fixing taps and faucets.
- * He paid for some repairs on the building, for example some of the costs of renovating the kitchen, including the cost of countertops.
- * He did all of the maintenance work on the outside or paid to have it done, including cutting the grass, clipping the hedge and shovelling the snow. He cut down two trees, he paid to have the hedge taken out and negotiated a good price with workers he knew to have an iron fence installed. He installed a pond, concrete patio, flagpole and rockery garden.
- * He drew up the plans for a two-car garage in 1984, submitted them to City Hall and obtained a building permit at his expense and then hired a crew to construct the garage at a cost of approximately $500. He paid for some of the materials for the garage and supervised the construction. Ms. Hardcastle paid most of the costs of the materials (approximately $4,500). Mr. Sorensen built a shack at the back of the garage.
- * He planned and built the apartment in the basement in 1986 by putting in walls, some plumbing and some electrical work (though he acknowledged Ms. Hardcastle paid for some of the electrical work as well). He paid some of the plumbing expenses (though he acknowledged Ms. Hardcastle paid for some of it as well). He hired someone to build the kitchen cabinets and he paid for them (though he acknowledged the receipt was made out to Ms. Hardcastle and she produced receipts from him for $3,800 which he acknowledged was the cost of the kitchen cabinets). His estimate of out of pocket expenses was $500 and that his total contribution (considering the value of his labour) was $8,000. He claims to have worked eight hours a day five days a week for a month to build this apartment.

* He placed advertisements for tenants for the various apartments and considered the tenancy applications with Ms. Hardcastle. He collected some of the tenants' cheques and deposited the cheques at the bank. Ms. Hardcastle kept the books for the property.

[para19] Although Ms. Hardcastle does not dispute the work done by Mr. Sorensen at the Kirkwood property, she does challenge his evidence regarding who paid for the materials and outside workmen. Where her evidence differs from that of Mr. Sorensen, she claims that:

* She paid for the building permit and building materials for the garage, and in fact obtained a loan of $3,000 to help pay for the materials.

* She paid at least $6,352 relating to the apartment, including the cost of the kitchen cabinets.

* She paid for the paint and wallpaper used by Mr. Sorensen at the Kirkwood property.

* She paid for the all of the landscaping endeavours, aside from the actual flagpole.

[para20] In addition, Mr. Sorensen claims that the division of labour within the household, while he and Ms. Hardcastle were residing at the Kirkwood property, was such that he did more than his share of household duties. Initially, both he and Ms. Hardcastle were working full-time outside of the home; however, Mr. Sorensen retired in 1990 and was then more available to do work at the Kirkwood property. He claims he did virtually all of the cooking, all of the grocery shopping, most of the vacuuming and dusting, most of the washing up after meals, half of the laundry and all of the snow removal (in the years when he did not hire a company to do it). He claims that he paid for all of the food, toiletries and sundries; some of the cable/hydro/water and sewage/oil bills; all snow removal; some cleaning; all telephone bills; all advertising bills for the various apartments; all boat expenses (for a boat they owned at one point); some of the property tax bills; car insurance, car repairs, car licences for two cars; all restaurant bills relating to family outings; all of the costs associated with vacations to Florida (1987 to 1990 or 1991); all of the rental and insurance costs associated with a jointly-owned trailer purchased in 1994 which was kept at a trailer park (except for all or part of the first year's rent, which Ms. Hardcastle paid).

[para21] Ms. Hardcastle acknowledges that during their cohabitation, Mr. Sorensen paid some of the property taxes on the Kirkwood property, approximately half of the cost of family entertainment, some of the costs of family vacations in Florida the year before his retirement (including a three-month stay there by Ms. Hardcastle), all costs related to the newspaper subscription from 1988 to 1994, telephone bills, some of the utility costs relating to the Kirkwood property, some of the snow plowing services to the Kirkwood property, and some of the costs of gifts.

[para22] Ms. Hardcastle claims that while she and Mr. Sorensen were residing at the Kirkwood property, she did the housekeeping (including the vacuuming, dusting, cleaning, laundry) and helped with the cooking (though Mr. Sorensen did more than she did once he had retired). I accept Ms. Hardcastle's evidence that during her extensive period of unemployment from 1986 to 1987, she assumed primary responsibility for housekeeping within the home, aside from the cooking. I also accept that during the entire period of their relationship, Mr. Sorensen was primarily responsible for all inside and outside maintenance and repairs and all matters associated with the parties' vehicles.

[para23] Josephine Hardcastle purchased two other rental properties while she was cohabiting with Egon Sorensen: 30 Seabrooke and 171 Thistledown. Mr. Sorensen did not put any of his own money into either Thistledown or Seabrooke. Nevertheless, Mr. Sorensen is claiming an interest in those properties by virtue of the following contributions which he claims he made to the properties:

* He painted the entire interior at Seabrooke.

* He painted some of the interior, repaired the kitchen ceiling and repaired some doors at Thistledown.

* He did all of the on-going maintenance work at both buildings which required him to go to the property approximately once a month.

* He showed the units to prospective tenants, and answered telephone calls from tenants regarding problems at the properties.

[para24] Ms. Hardcastle's evidence is that Mr. Sorensen painted the kitchen and patched up the ceiling at the Thistledown property and patched the walls to the basement at the Seabrooke property; however in both cases she paid for the cost of any materials.

[para25] From time to time during their relationship, one of the parties would lend money to the other. In 1977, Ms. Hardcastle obtained a bank loan of $1,775 for the benefit of Mr. Sorensen, who was in financial difficulties. He had been paying his former spouse $650 per month support, but expenses on their Sanderson property were not being paid. Ms. Hardcastle claims that Mr. Sorensen never repaid her for this loan; he claims that he did. Ms. Hardcastle borrowed money through Avco for furniture in Peterborough and she and Mr. Sorensen repaid this loan over time. In November 1983, Ms. Hardcastle lent Mr. Sorensen $800 to send to his daughter in Lebanon so that he could buy a plane ticket home. This sum was eventually repaid. In 1989, Mr. Sorensen lent Ms. Hardcastle $500 to buy some bonds; this sum was later repaid.

[para26] In June 1993, the parties purchased jointly a trailer which they park at Muskrat Lake. The purchase price of $6,500 was paid for by Ms. Hardcastle, and Mr. Sorensen then reimbursed her $2,925. The parties had agreed to share all expenses associated with this trailer equally, such as rental of the space, insurance, propane and miscellaneous upkeep. Mr. Sorensen claimed that he paid for all of the expenses associated every year but the first; however, Ms. Hardcastle produced cheques showing she had paid for most of these annual expenses.

[para27] In 1993, Mr. Sorensen persuaded Ms. Hardcastle to purchase a boat. He made an application in her name for a GM credit card, without her permission. The boat was purchased for $4,500, with Ms. Hardcastle paying $1,000 and the balance being put on the GM card. Ms. Hardcastle then repaid this amount over time, with a contribution of $2,325 from Mr. Sorensen. In addition she paid a variety of other expenses for additions to the boat and such ongoing expenses as insurance. After the separation, Mr. Sorensen sold the boat to his daughter for $4,200 and paid Ms. Hardcastle $2,200.

[para28] Mr. Sorensen's earnings from employment, Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan were $52,284 in 1987, $47,006 in 1988 and $62,776 in 1989. He retired in 1990, at the age of 69 and his total income that year dropped to $29,715. Subsequently his only source of income was Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan which yielded $12,000 to $13,000 annually. Prior to 1987, Mr. Sorensen's average annual income had been approximately $30,000. At the time of Mr. Sorensen's retirement in 1990, he had savings of $9,000. He claims that those savings were used up paying day to day expenses for the household.

[para29] Mr. Sorensen and Ms. Hardcastle separated on May 29, 1997, but continued to live in the ground floor of the Kirkwood property until August 1, 1998, at which time Mr. Sorensen moved to an apartment on the second floor. He lived there until June of 1999, when he moved to a Senior Citizens Residence. His current income is $1,258 per month, made up of Old Age Security of $404.48 per month and Canada Pension Plan of $687.75 per month. As of July 1999, he had no assets aside from his half interest in a trailer, worth $3,000, some furniture and an old car. He had credit card debts of approximately $3,400.

[para30] As of the summer of 1999, Ms. Hardcastle's income was $19,660 from employment and $9,500 from Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan. According to her 1998 income tax return, her gross rental income totalled $36,108 and she had no net rental income. She estimated her 1999 gross rental income would be $34,087 but it could also be up to $39,780, considering the rent she was charging on each unit.

[para31] Mr. Sorensen wants spousal support from Ms. Hardcastle so that his lifestyle would be closer to that they enjoyed while they were cohabiting. He lives in a one-bedroom motel-unit style garden home. All of his money goes to paying rent, utilities, food, trailer expenses and the carrying costs of his debts. He has no money for any frills, such as clothing, gifts, vacations, meals outside the home or recreation.

[para32] Ms. Hardcastle continues to work and wants to continue working as long as her health permits. Although she has high blood pressure, arthritis and some sleeping difficulties, she is able to work. Ms. Hardcastle continues to live at the Kirkwood property.

Valuations

[para33] The Parkglen property was purchased in November 1971 for $38,500. Ms. Hardcastle paid a downpayment of $10,000 and the balance was financed with a mortgage. The property was registered in Ms. Hardcastle's name alone. Mr. Sorensen estimated it had a value of $60,000 to $70,000 in 1975. Ms. Hardcastle testified that the value of the Parkglen property in 1980 would have been $100,000; however, when she swore a Statement of Property in her divorce proceedings on April 30, 1979, she indicated a value of $57,000 and an outstanding mortgage of $23,000. When the Hardcastles divorced in 1980, Ms. Hardcastle became the sole owner of the Parkglen property. Mr. Sorensen's estimate of its value at that time was $90,000. There is no dispute that as of March 1980, there was an outstanding mortgage against the Parkglen property of $25,000. When the property sold in 1983 for $140,000, Ms. Hardcastle received net proceeds of $112,309.45 of which $102,730.82 was used to purchase the Kirkwood property.

[para34] The Kirkwood property was purchased in October 1983 for $170,000, with a downpayment of $100,000 and a mortgage back of $70,000. The Thistledown property was purchased in January 1989 for $81,500 through the assumption of a first mortgage of $50,895 and the placement of a second mortgage on the Kirkwood property of $35,000. The Seabrooke property was purchased in November 1989 for $115,000, financed through a first mortgage of $67,000 and approximately $50,000 of an inheritance from Ms. Hardcastle's father. Ms. Hardcastle paid for all of the legal fees and disbursements, including Land Transfer Tax, associated with the purchase of these properties.

[para35] The parties assigned the following values to the three properties in the summer of 1999:

Properties Ms. Hardcastle Mr. Sorensen Mortgage Equity

Kirkwood $250,000 $275,000 $176,876 -$201,876 -first mortgage $51,036

-second mortgage (Thistledown) $22,088

Thistledown $75,000 $79,000 $36,925 $38,075 -$42,075

Seabrooke $116,000 $118,000 $56,724 $59,276 -$61,276

There is no dispute that in the summer of 1997, the values of the three parcels of real estate were: Kirkwood property $275,000, Thistledown property $79,000 and Seabrooke property $118,000.

[para36] It is admitted by Ms. Hardcastle that the various properties registered in her name are capable of being rented for the following monthly rents:

Thistledown unit $760

Seabrooke unit $875

Kirkwood - apt 1 $630

Kirkwood - apt 2 $550 (rent as of trial)

Kirkwood - apt 3 $500

Evidence of Donald McCallum

[para37] Mr. Sorensen retained Donald McCallum, a certified real estate appraiser, for the purpose of estimating the value of the work and services Mr. Sorensen provided to Ms. Hardcastle in regard to the four properties over the years. Mr. McCallum inspected the basement and exterior of the Kirkwood property, the exterior of the Seabrooke property, the exterior of the Parkglen property and the interior and exterior of the Thistledown property (though only cursorily).

[para38] Mr. McCallum's opinion can be summarized as follows:

(a) Parkglen Property

Assumption as to work done by Egon Sorensen:

- * Wallpaper ground floor
- * Construct basement recreation room
- * Build exterior brick BBQ and patio area

Value of labour and materials (1999 dollars) $9,500 to $13,000

(b) Kirkwood Property

Assumption as to work done by Egon Sorensen:

- * Constructed one-bedroom basement apartment
- * Painted the interior of the ground floor and second floor apartments
- * Installed 2 small backyard ponds and a 24 foot flagpole
- * Installed a concrete patio
- * Arranged for the construction of an attached garage (management fee only)
- * Maintained the site area around the dwelling, including landscaping, snow removal, grass cutting and installation of flower boxes and gardens

Value of labour and materials (1999 dollars) $24,340 to $30,080

(c) Seabrooke Property

Assumption as to work done by Egon Sorensen:

- * Repaint interior

Value of labour and materials (1999 dollars) $2,250 to $3,000

(d) Thistledown Property

Assumption as to work done by Egon Sorensen:

- * Repair kitchen ceiling and repaint kitchen
- * Repair bathroom faucets

Value of labour and materials (1999 dollars) $950 to $1,200

(e) On-going Maintenance Work

Assumption as to work done by Egon Sorensen:

- * Maintenance of the site, grass cutting, snow removal, minor repairs required by tenants at all properties

Value of work (1999 dollars) ($100 per month - 15 years) $18,000

Total value of work (1999 dollars rounded off) $55,000 to $65,000

[para39] Mr. McCallum's evidence can be assigned virtually no weight in regard to the value of work performed by Mr. Sorensen at the various properties. He had only Mr. Sorensen's input in identifying the work Mr. Sorensen did and the materials he purchased. I have not accepted all of Mr. Sorensen's evidence as to the materials he purchased. Mr. McCallum had very little idea what an appropriate percentage breakdown would be for labour and materials in regard to the different projects he considered. To arrive at some of his cost estimates, Mr. McCallum acknowledged that he was guessing and that he had minimal knowledge or experience estimating the costs of some of the projects. His estimate of the time in which certain tasks could be done appeared to be sheer speculation and seemed unreasonable to me. He acknowledged in regard to some of the projects that he had no idea how much the materials would cost or what a worker would charge per hour for the required tasks.

[para40] Mr. McCallum believed that the cost of the basement apartment at Kirkwood could be recovered on a resale of the property and that the finished recreation room in the basement at Parkglen might increase the price of that property by $5,000. Aside from that, he could not say that the other work done by Mr. Sorensen would necessarily have increased the value of the property concerned.

Law:

[para41] A constructive trust arises where a person who holds title to property is subject to an equitable duty to convey it to another on the ground that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain it (Austin Wakeman Scott, The Law of Trusts, 4th ed., vol. 5 (Boston: Little, Brown, 1989) at p. 304). There are two steps in the analysis before applying a constructive trust. The first is to determine whether there has been unjust enrichment. The second is to decide whether constructive trust is the appropriate remedy.

[para42] The following three conditions must be present to establish unjust enrichment:

1. someone has been enriched through the contributions of another;
2. a corresponding deprivation has been suffered by the person who supplied the enrichment; and
3. there is an absence of any juristic reason for the enrichment itself.

[para43] Two remedies that the court can use to redress unjust enrichment are a monetary award and the imposition of a constructive trust. A constructive trust will not be imposed unless the plaintiff's contribution is substantial and has some connection to the property in question.

Analysis:

[para44] The starting point is a determination of whether Ms. Hardcastle has been unjustly enriched as a result of contributions made by Mr. Sorensen.

Enrichment

[para45] Mr. Sorensen contributed to "the family enterprise" in three ways: through the work he did at the Parkglen, Kirkwood, Thistledown and Seabrooke properties during the period from 1975 to 1997; through the financial contributions he made to the household; and through the provision of household services.

[para46] I find that work consisted of the following:

(a) Parkglen Property

- * putting in a large vegetable garden;
- * tending to the garden;
- * designing and supervising the installation of a cement patio with outdoor carpeting and a barbecue;
- * installing wallpaper in some rooms; and
- * finishing the basement.

(b) Kirkwood property

- * inspecting the property prior to purchase;
- * undertaking to maintain the property on Ms. Hardcastle's behalf;
- * wallpapering the livingroom and diningroom;
- * doing any maintenance and repair work on the interior, such as changing light bulbs, painting and fixing taps and faucets;
- * doing all of the maintenance work on the outside or paying to have it done, including cutting the grass, clipping the hedge, shovelling the snow, cutting down two trees, taking out the hedge and arranging for an iron fence to be installed;
- * installing a pond, concrete patio, flagpole and rockery garden;
- * drawing plans for a two-car garage and submitting them to City Hall;
- * hiring a crew to construct the garage at a cost of approximately $500;
- * building a shack at the back of the garage;
- * planning and building an apartment in the basement by putting in walls, some plumbing and some electrical work, though most of the plumbing and electrical work was done by third parties at Ms. Hardcastle's expense;
- * knocking down a wall in the kitchen and renovating the kitchen, including paying for new countertops;
- * placing advertisements for tenants for the various apartments and considering the tenancy applications with Ms. Hardcastle;
- * collecting some of the tenants' cheques and depositing the cheques at the bank;
- * doing all of the on-going maintenance work for the tenants;
- * showing the units to prospective tenants, and answering telephone calls from tenants regarding problems at the property.

(c) Seabrooke Property

- * painting the entire interior at Seabrooke;

* doing all of the on-going maintenance work;

* showing the units to prospective tenants, and answering telephone calls from tenants regarding problems at the property.

(d) Thistledown property

* painting some of the interior;

* repairing the kitchen ceiling and some doors;

* doing all of the on-going maintenance work;

* showing the units to prospective tenants, and answering telephone calls from tenants regarding problems at the property.

[para47] There was considerable questioning of the parties as to who paid for the various repairs and improvements at the different properties, and the evidence was at times conflicting. I find that Ms. Hardcastle paid for the majority of the materials and subcontractors; however not much turns on this finding. I find that this pattern evolved in great part because Ms. Hardcastle wanted to have proof of expenses for income tax purposes.

[para48] While the parties were cohabiting, they functioned together as a cohesive family unit. Each had his or her role to play and contributions to make to the family unit. Over the years, although they kept their finances separately, each helped out the other if the other could not pay his or her bills. There were so-called loans back and forth. Each paid for certain necessary expenses for both of them. If Ms. Hardcastle was unemployed, Mr. Sorensen paid more of the bills, and vice versa. In regard to the rental properties, Ms. Hardcastle chose the investment properties, arranged for their financing, handled all of the interactions with real estate agents and lawyers to make the purchase happen, negotiated the leases on the most part, kept financial records, received cheques and paid bills. Mr. Sorensen showed the apartments, did any necessary repairs or improvements or arranged to have them done, and was on call if there was a problem. I find that Ms. Hardcastle relied on Mr. Sorensen's know-how in the construction field and his willingness to be the caretaker and repair person for the Kirkwood, Seabrooke and Thistledown properties when she purchased them. I also find that in order to assist her in justifying her expenses associated with rental units for income tax purposes, he kept a Tenants' Log Book where he recorded work done on the properties, the time it took and the disbursements involved. Although Mr. Sorensen was reimbursed by Ms. Hardcastle for most of his out-of-pocket expenditures, he was not paid for his labour. Nevertheless she recorded her expenses for income tax purposes as if he had been.

[para49] This is a case where one could get lost in the details and not see the big picture. Cancelled cheques, cheque registers, bank books, list of payments, tenant log books and numerous other documents were produced in an effort to prove the financial contributions made by the parties to the acquisition, maintenance and improvement of the various parcels of real estate in question. Without meticulous accounting records akin to those in a commercial setting, it is impossible to undo 20 years of financial and personal collaboration to calculate precise contributions.

[para50] Instead what is most telling and relevant is a comparison of the net worth of the parties when they entered their relationship and then when they separated. When Mr. Sorensen entered his relationship with Ms. Hardcastle, he had a car, but virtually no other assets. His equity in the Sanderson property had gone to pay debts. At separation in 1997, Mr. Sorensen's only assets consisted of a small amount of furniture, a 1987 Mercury automobile and his half interest in the trailer. There was no material evidence that he recklessly depleted his assets or that he lived extravagantly.

[para51] According to her Statement of Property sworn in 1979, Ms. Hardcastle's net worth at that time was $27,354. In 1997, according to her sworn Financial Statement, her net worth was $329,595. In other words, during the period of their cohabitation, Ms. Hardcastle's net worth increased $302,241 and Mr. Sorensen's net worth increased by approximately $2,200. After deducting an inheritance of approximately $60,000 which Ms. Hardcastle received from her father, this still results in her net worth increasing $240,000 more than the increase in Mr. Sorensen's net worth.

[para53] What is also clear from Ms. Hardcastle's own records and from her financial statements is that the expenses she claims she paid during the period from 1980 to 1997 for her household with Mr. Sorensen and also for the various rental units far exceeded her earnings and rental income.

[para54] These factors lead me to conclude that Ms. Hardcastle relied on Mr. Sorensen's direct payment of some household expenses which allowed her to direct her monies to other expenses (such as the mortgage payments) associated not only with that portion of the Kirkwood property which she and Mr. Sorensen occupied, but also with all of the rental units at the Kirkwood, Seabrooke and Thistledown properties. As well, she must have received money from Mr. Sorensen which she in turn used to pay for some of the expenses which she paid by cheque or credit card during this period. Who wrote the actual cheque to pay for a repair or improvement was not particularly relevant when both were using their resources to pay for the expenses of daily living.

[para55] Finally, I find that this was not a case where one party did an inordinate share of the household chores. On the contrary, I find that household responsibilities were shared reasonably. I find that both parties did some of the cooking, washing-up, cleaning and laundry. Mr. Sorensen did the grocery-shopping, landscaping, outdoor maintenance, snow removal, and interior maintenance and repairs. Also he tended to the automobiles and often acted as Ms. Hardcastle's chauffeur. Ms. Hardcastle may have done more of the laundry and cleaning. Certainly, if one party was unemployed, that party assumed greater responsibility in the home if the other was employed.

[para56] In summary, Ms. Hardcastle was enriched through the contributions of money, labour and services received from Mr. Sorensen.

Deprivation

[para57] According to Cory J. in Peter v. Beblow (1993), 101 D.L.R. (4th) 621 (S.C.C.) at 632: " in a matrimonial or long-term common law relationship it should, in the absence of cogent evidence to the contrary, be taken that the enrichment of one party will result in a deprivation of the other." He went on to explain at p. 632:

In marriages or marriage-like relationships commercial matters and a great deal more will be involved. Clearly, parties to a family relationship will, in a commercial sense, share funds and financial goals. More importantly, couples such as the parties to this case will strive to make a home. By that I mean a place that provides safety, security and love and which is as well frequently the place where children may be cared for and nurtured. In a relationship that involves living and sleeping together, couples will share their worse fears and frustrations and their fondest dreams and aspirations. They will plan and work together to achieve their goals. Just as much as parties to a formal marriage, the partners in a long-term common law relationship will base their actions on mutual love and trust. They too are entitled in appropriate circumstances, to the relief provided by the remedy of constructive trust.

Twelve years is not an insignificant period of time to live in a relationship based on mutual trust and confidence. In those circumstances, there is a strong presumption that the services provided by one party will not be used solely to enrich the other. Both the reasonable expectations of the parties and equity will require that upon the termination of the relationship, the parties will receive an appropriate compensation based on the contribution each has made to the relationship.

[para58] According to Cory J., the balancing of benefits conferred and received in a common law relationship cannot be accomplished with precision, and a close scrutiny of contributions made by each party is unrealistic and unfair in the context of a family relationship. This is due in part to the myriad ways in which a party to a domestic relationship may contribute to the overall well being of the home and family. The guiding principles in the assessment of contributions are equity and fairness.

[para59] I find that Mr. Sorensen has suffered a deprivation in that despite an income which exceeded that of Ms. Hardcastle over the years (aside from rental income), he came out of their relationship with virtually nothing.

[para60] I am not persuaded by Ms. Hardcastle's argument that since Mr. Sorensen paid no rent while he was residing with her, he suffered no deprivation. Many of the expenses he paid (such as groceries, telephone, property taxes, transportation, vacation, entertainment), as well as all of the work he did, benefitted her as well as him. A precise balance sheet cannot be done in any meaningful way to compare the rent he would have paid elsewhere, the benefits he would have received for that rent and the freedom from responsibilities that he would have enjoyed had he not been cohabiting with Ms. Hardcastle.

Absence of juristic reason for enrichment

[para61] In Pettkus v. Becker, supra, Dickson J. said at p. 274:

I hold that where one person in a relationship tantamount to spousal prejudices herself in the reasonable expectation of receiving an interest in property and the other person in the relationship freely accepts benefits conferred by the first person in circumstances where he knows or ought to have known of that reasonable expectation, it would be unjust to allow the recipient of the benefit to retain it.

[para62] The test is an objective one. In the absence of evidence establishing a contrary intention, it will be assumed that the parties to a common-law relationship expected to share in the assets created in the relationship should it end (Peter v. Beblow, supra, per Cory J. at p. 636). It is not necessary that there be evidence of promises to or plans of marriage or that the legal owner of the property had promised the claimant compensation for services provided. In short, " where a person provides 'spousal services' to another, those services should be taken as having been given with the expectation of compensation unless there is evidence to the contrary" (p. 636). This flows from the legal principle that a common law spouse is under no legal obligation at common law, in equity or by statute, to perform work or services for his or her partner (Peter v. Beblow, supra, per McLachlin J. at p. 646)

[para63] Here, Mr. Sorensen was under no obligation, contractual, statutory or otherwise, to provide work and services to Ms. Hardcastle to assist her in the preservation, maintenance or improvement of any of the properties she owned (Pettkus v. Becker, supra; Sorochan v. Sorochan (1986), 29 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.); Peter v. Beblow, supra).

[para65] Based on these findings, I conclude that there was an absence of juristic reason for Ms. Hardcastle to be enriched at Mr. Sorensen's expense.

Appropriate Remedy

[para66] Which remedy is more appropriate in this case? Before a constructive trust is imposed, a court must be satisfied that a monetary award would be inadequate and that there is a link between the contributions made and the property in which the trust is claimed (Peter v. Beblow, supra, per McLachlin J. at p. 650 and Cory J. at p. 637; Sorochan v. Sorochan, supra, per Dickson C.J.C. at p. 10; and Pettkus v. Becker, supra, per Dickson J. at p. 277).

[para67] The nature of the link that is required has been subject to analysis by the Supreme Court of Canada on numerous occasions. Dickson C.J.C. in Sorochan v. Sorochan, supra, at p. 10 stated:

While it is important to require that some nexus exist between the claimant's deprivation and the property in question, the link need not always take the form of contribution to the actual acquisition of the property. A contribution relating to the preservation, maintenance or improvement of property may also suffice.

[para68] Cory J. in Peter v. Beblow, supra, at p. 638, relying in part on Pettkus v. Becker, supra, stated that: " indirect financial contributions to the maintenance of property will be sufficient to establish the requisite property connection for the imposition of a constructive trust." Cory J. went so far as to state:

in a family relationship the work, services and contributions provided by one of the parties need not be clearly and directly linked to a specific property. As long as there was no compensation paid for the work and services provided by one party to the family relationship then it can be inferred that their provision permitted the other party to acquire lands or to improve them.

According to Cory J. in Peter v. Beblow, supra, at p. 640, ordinarily, in common-law situations, both partners will have an interest in the property acquired, improved or maintained during the course of the relationship. In situations where there is more than one property, it is a matter of discretion which property or properties are made subject to a constructive trust.

[para69] McLachlin J. in Peter v. Beblow, supra, at p. 649 stated that: " for a constructive trust to arise, the plaintiff must establish a direct link to the property which is the subject of the trust by reason of the plaintiff's contribution." She interpreted the reasons of Cory J. to suggest that while a link between the contribution and the property is essential in commercial cases for a constructive trust to arise, it may not be essential in family cases. She, on the other hand, would apply the same requirements for the imposition of a constructive trust, whether the question arose in the context of commercial or family litigation. In her mind, that required a link between the plaintiff's services, efforts or contributions and the property in question.

[para70] In the context of this case, I find nothing turns on the choice of the words "indirect" or "direct" used by Cory J. and McLachlin J. respectively in Peter v. Beblow, supra. Both acknowledge in their reasons that contributions of financial resources or services that benefit a family in a general sense or "the family enterprise" (the term used by McLachlin J.) may be sufficient to create a proprietary interest in property acquired or maintained by one of the parties to a common law relationship (Pettkus v. Becker, supra; Peter v. Beblow, supra, per McLachlin J. at 654 and per Cory J. at p. 638).

[para71] In certain situations a monetary award might be the most appropriate remedy, such as where the plaintiff's entitlement is small in relation to the value of the property or where the defendant is able to satisfy the claim without selling the property. Some factors to consider in assessing the appropriateness of each remedy would be the duration of the relationship, any special attachment of one of the parties to the property in question, any hardship caused to the defendant as a result of the remedy chosen and the probability of a monetary award's being paid. Of relevance as well is whether the plaintiff reasonably expected to receive an actual interest in property (as distinct from some other benefit such as a monetary amount) and whether the defendant was or reasonably ought to have been cognizant of that expectation (Sorochan v. Sorochan, supra, per Dickson J. at paras. 34 and 35).

[para72] While they were cohabiting, Mr. Sorensen never accompanied Ms. Hardcastle to the bank to co-sign a mortgage or loan (aside from a car loan). He never signed any agreement of purchase and sale, deed, mortgage or other document relating to the Parkglen, Kirkwood, Thistledown or Seabrooke properties. On the other hand, in 1993 or 1994, when the parties purchased a trailer at Muskrat Lake which they planned to use as recreational property, they did take title in their joint names. This showed that they did appreciate the difference between sole and joint legal title. This is of some relevance in regard to the parties' respective intentions.

[para73] I find that the imposition of a constructive trust is appropriate in regard to the Kirkwood property but not in regard to the Seabrooke or Thistledown properties, which were acquired in 1989. Mr. Sorensen's contributions to those two properties were less significant than his contributions to the Kirkwood property. He played no role in those properties being chosen, purchased or financed. In fact he declined the opportunity of sharing with Ms. Hardcastle in the purchase of the Thistledown property, his reason being that he disliked condominium units. Finally, a $60,000 downpayment on the Seabrooke property came from an inheritance received by Ms. Hardcastle. I find that although Mr. Sorensen reasonably expected to benefit from the rental income to be received from these properties in the future, he did not expect to be a part owner of those properties.

[para74] The situation was different with the Kirkwood property. It was acquired in 1983, and both parties participated in considering it as an investment. They cohabited at this property until their separation in 1997. Mr. Sorensen helped to pay expenses associated with the couple's occupation of this property and he contributed money and labour to various repairs and improvements that advanced the quality of life of both himself and Ms. Hardcastle. According to Ms. Hardcastle, once the couple moved to the Kirkwood property, Mr. Sorensen made it clear that he considered the property as much his as Ms. Hardcastle's, and he wanted things done his way. Therefore I conclude that it would be appropriate to impose a constructive trust in favour of Mr. Sorensen for his contributions to the Kirkwood property.

[para75] In evaluating the contribution made by the plaintiff in situations where a court considers a monetary award appropriate, use should be made of "the value received" or quantum merit approach. What was the value of the financial contributions or the services provided? The value received approach quantifies the amount the defendant would have had to pay for the services on a purely business basis to any other person doing the work that was provided by the plaintiff. As I have already indicated, I can assign very little weight to Mr. McCallum's evidence as to the value received by Ms. Hardcastle in regard to Mr. Sorensen's contributions to the various properties.

[para76] Based on all of the evidence, my best estimate is that the value received in regard to the work done on the Seabrooke and Thistledown properties combined was $12,000. I plan to use this to increase Mr. Sorensen's share in the Kirkwood property above that which I otherwise would have given.

[para77] Similarly, any contributions to the Parkglen property will be considered a contribution to the Kirkwood property in that the net proceeds from the sale of Parkglen were used to purchase Kirkwood. I find that the value of Mr. Sorensen's direct contribution to the Parkglen property through his labour and his indirect contribution through sharing of expenses with Ms. Hardcastle during the late 70's, and early 80's, and more specifically his paying for many of Ms. Hardcastle's expenses while the two resided in Peterborough, have a combined value of $10,000 (based on a value received approach). Consequently, I assume that $10,000 of the net proceeds of sale of the Parkglen property that were used to purchase the Kirkwood property was a direct financial contribution to that property by Mr. Sorensen.

[para78] Where a constructive trust is imposed, the court must be guided by the principle that the extent of the interest must be proportionate to the contribution (Pettkus v. Becker, supra, per Dickson J. at p. 277; Peter v. Beblow, supra, per McLachlin J. at p. 651). In determining the value of the plaintiff's contribution, regard must be had to the amount by which the property has been improved as a result of that contribution; this is "the value survived" approach (Peter v. Beblow, supra, per McLachlin J. at p. 651). The value surviving approach apportions the parties' interest in property on the basis of their respective contributions.

[para79] In regard to the Kirkwood property, when it was purchased in 1983, Ms. Hardcastle made a downpayment of $100,000 from the Parkglen proceeds, of which I assume $90,000 was a contribution from Ms. Hardcastle and $10,000 was a contribution from Mr. Sorensen. I find that the present fair market value of the property is $275,000, that assigned to it by Ms. Hardcastle in her 1997 Financial Statement. I do not accept Ms. Hardcastle's evidence that the value of this property has decreased since 1997. Ms. Hardcastle currently has $201,876 of equity in this property after deducting the first mortgage of $51,036 and the second mortgage of $22,088; however, in that the second mortgage relates to the purchase of Thistledown, and Ms. Hardcastle will remain the sole owner of that property, I am assuming for the purpose of these calculations that Ms. Hardcastle's current equity in the Kirkwood property is approximately $224,000. If $90,000 of this were allotted to Ms. Hardcastle and $10,000 to Mr. Sorensen to give each credit for their respective contributions to the acquisition of this property, this leaves a balance of $124,000. I conclude that the value survived of Mr. Sorensen's contributions to the Kirkwood property, after the date of acquisition, taking into account the value I have already determined in regard to the Seabrooke and Thistledown properties, is $62,000. This results in Mr. Sorensen's interest in the Kirkwood property being $72,000 or approximately 25% of the total fair market value.

[para80] Another way I was tempted to calculate Mr. Sorensen's interest in the Kirkwood property was as follows. In that the gross value of the property had increased from $170,000 in 1983 to $275,000 in 1997, an increase of 162%, I would consider the parties' respective contributions to the acquisition costs to be $145,800 (162% x $90,000) and $16,200 (162% x $10,000). The balance of $113,000 of the current value would then relate to the mortgage and improvements made to the property, both of which I consider to have been contributed to on an equal basis by the parties, regardless of who actually paid the relevant bill. The sum of $51,036 remains outstanding on the first mortgage and will be paid eventually by Ms. Hardcastle. If she receives credit for this, the balance to be divided between the parties becomes $61,964. Half of this is $30,982, which when added to $16,200 produces a value of $47,182, as Mr. Sorensen's portion. If the value Ms. Hardcastle received from Mr. Sorensen regarding the Seabrooke and Thistledown properties, namely $12,000, is added to this, the total amount becomes $59,180 or 21.5% of the gross value of the Kirkwood property. In my view, this percentage understates the significance of Mr. Sorensen's contributions. Consequently I prefer the first calculation.

[para81] Ms. Hardcastle shall hold 25% of the Kirkwood property in trust for Egon Sorensen by virtue of a constructive trust. Mr. Sorensen shall be deemed to have realized his 25% interest in the Kirkwood property upon payment to him of $72,000 on or before June 30, 2000. If Mr. Sorensen has not received that sum by that date, he may bring a motion for partition and sale of the Kirkwood property. Such motion may be returnable before me by special appointment, or may be brought in the normal course before the presiding judge. Upon the sale of the property, Mr. Sorensen's interest in the property shall be calculated as 25% of the selling price. Ms. Hardcastle shall be solely liable for all of the carrying costs associated with the Kirkwood property and shall be solely liable for the repayment of any outstanding mortgages.

[botpara82] This result is consistent with that in Bebbington v. Carter (1997), 28 R.F.L. (4th) 305 (B.C.S.C.); Harrison v. Kalinocha (1994), 1 R.F.L. (4th) 313 (B.C.C.A.); Kopanska v. Heczko, [1998] O.J. No. 4484, 1998 Carswell Ont 4234 (Gen. Div.); and Richer v. Smith, [1998] B.C.J. No. 1184, 1998 Carswell BC 1080 (B.C.S.C.).

Trailer:

[para83] Since the date of separation, Mr. Sorensen has been in possession of the parties' jointly owned trailer at Muskrat Lake. I find that Ms. Hardcastle's interest in the trailer has a value of $3,000. Mr. Sorensen shall have the option of purchasing Ms. Hardcastle's interest for $3,000 payable by means of a credit against his interest in the Kirkwood property. Mr. Sorensen must advise Ms. Hardcastle by June 30, 2000, or by such earlier date when he realizes his interest in the Kirkwood property, as to whether he wishes to exercise this option or whether he wishes the trailer to be sold with the net proceeds being divided equally between himself and Ms. Hardcastle. If he chooses the latter alternative, the trailer shall be sold as soon as possible at a price and on terms agreed to by both parties. Mr. Sorensen shall be solely liable to pay all expenses associated with the trailer until Ms. Hardcastle has received her interest therein.

Spousal Support:

[para84] Ms. Hardcastle's income from employment, Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan totals $29,217 annually. I find that Ms. Hardcastle could have net rental income from all of her units of at least $6,000 annually; however, assuming Ms. Hardcastle sells one or more properties in order to satisfy this Judgment and pay debts, her net rental income thereafter will be closer to $4,000. Consequently, for purpose of considering spousal support obligations, I find that Ms. Hardcastle's income from all sources presently is $35,217, but foreseeably may be reduced to $33,217.

[para85] Mr. Sorensen's income from Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan totals $15,096 annually. Once he receives the sum of $72,000 (or one-quarter of the fair market value of the Kirkwood property, if the payment is made after June 30, 2000), he should be able to earn an additional $3,000 annually bringing his income to $18,096.

[para86] The discrepancy in Ms. Hardcastle's income and Mr. Sorensen's income, after more than 17 years of cohabitation, requires attention, in that both spouses are entitled to comparable lifestyles following lengthy cohabitation and their operation as one family unit.

[para87] Consequently, I order Ms. Hardcastle to pay to Mr. Sorensen $500 per month commencing September 1, 1999 and continuing until the first day of the month following Mr. Sorensen's realization of his interest in the Kirkwood property, after which this monthly spousal support payment shall be reduced to $300 per month. Ms. Hardcastle's retirement shall be a material change in circumstances justifying a variation and possible termination of her spousal support obligations.

[para88] I note that on her sworn Financial Statement, Ms. Hardcastle shows a monthly deficit of $2,067.92; however, this deficit is suspect. For example, in her Financial Statement, Ms. Hardcastle shows 1998 annual maintenance and repair bills for the three properties at $10,321.12; whereas on her corresponding 1998 income tax return, she showed a total of $1,961. Part of Ms. Hardcastle's deficit relates to legal fees of $6,000 annually, which hopefully will not be an expense once this litigation is completed and Ms. Hardcastle sells one or more properties in order to pay her debts. Ms. Hardcastle acknowledged that she had shown some expenses twice, once under the relevant category and a second time as a monthly credit card payment. Finally Ms. Hardcastle acknowledged that some of her expenses were inflated and did not reflect her needs.

Costs:

[para89] The parties may arrange to address the issue of costs on a date to be set by the Trial Coordinator.

Morris A. Hunter Investments Ltd. v. First Burton Developments Inc.

Between Morris A. Hunter Investments Ltd. and 927290 Ontario Limited carrying on business as McGrath Hunter Properties, and First Burton Developments Inc.

[2000] O.J. No. 902 Court File No. 99-CV-180422

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Paisley J. Heard: March 10, 2000. Judgment: March 10, 2000. (5 paras.)

Counsel: Stephen LeDrew and K. Paige Backman, for the applicant. David M. Goodman and D.R. Squires, for the respondent.

[para1] PAISLEY J. (endorsement):-- The applicant seeks an Order permitting it to discharge easements registered on its land. The easements were created by agreement in 1990 and registered on lands owned by the applicants' predecessor in title. When the applicant purchased the land, it received a statutory declaration from a signing officer of the owner of the land that, " there is no easement or encumbrance whatsoever, affecting the said lands". There is no declaration from the owner of the contested easement to this effect, but the signing officer of the owner was also a principal of the owner of the easement. He deposes that he understood, " that this paragraph deals with unregistered easements rather than what is actually registered on title". The easement was apparently created to permit the owners of the two parcels of land to share a U-shaped driveway that would permit access to and from each parcel, in what was originally designed to be a commercial plaza. The owner of the contested easement did build a plaza on its land. The applicants' land remained vacant, but the applicant now intends to construct a condominium on its land, which it cannot do with the registered easement over the land in place.

[para2] It is argued that the respondent should be estopped from relying on the easement given the statutory declaration referred to. I am not persuaded that the record demonstrates an uncontested factual basis that the applicant relied on the statutory declaration or that it was ever intended to constitute an admission of abandonment of the registered easement. That is a question of fact which can only be established at trial. See Dodd v. Davelore Enterprises Ltd. [1994] O.J. No. 2532 @ p. 5:

"Abandonment has been defined as any action concerning the use of an easement indicating an intention by the owner to abandon the easement "

[para3] It is argued that the easement has been abandoned, or become obsolete, because the plaza developed never proceeded on the applicant's land, or that it is now impossible to use the easement as originally intended. A letter from the Lake Simcoe Conservation Authority, to the effect that the area is not suitable for car parking is cited. This too is a question of fact that would require a trial of the issue. See Baker v. Harris (1929), 64 O.L.R 513, (C.A.):

"If the easement was acquired by a grant of title , it is immaterial whether there has or has not the use of the easement for long periods of time. Easement so acquired can rarely be extinguished in any manner other than by express release or by circumstances so cogent as to preclude a quasi-releasor from denying the release". Cited in Dodd v. Davelore, supra, @ p. 5.

[para4] Finally, it is argued that the easement was not effectively conveyed, since the original grant did not include an express provision of a grant to the successors or assigns of the grantee. No cases are cited in support of this submission. In my view, there is no limitation on the grant of easement and its conveyance with a subsequent conveyance of the land is implicit.

[para5] The applicant requests an expedited trial of the issue of fact. I direct the trial to be case managed. The issue to be tried is whether the easement has been abandoned or extinguished.

XIV CONCLUSIONS

I INTRODUCTION

[para1] The Plaintiffs claim against the Defendants for damages resulting from the non-disclosure prior to closing, of the environmental state of the site caused by aboveground and underground storage tanks in the property conveyed by Petro Canada to the Plaintiffs. As against Petro Canada the claim is in fraud and negligence, and as against Arcturus, its environmental consultants, in negligent misrepresentation.

[para2] This case concerns the responsibility as between the Plaintiff 862590 Ontario Limited ("590") (purchaser) and the Defendant Petro Canada (vendor) and Arcturus (its consultant) for the environmental state of a former petroleum bulk plant at the time of its sale in November of 1989. The Plaintiff 865628 Ontario Limited ("628") now controlled by Peter Azman, is the third mortgagee of the subject property.

[para3] A central feature in this case is the GUIDELINES FOR THE DE-COMMISSIONING AND CLEAN-UP OF SITES IN ONTARIO (the "Guidelines"), issued by the Ministry of the Environment ("MOE"), and in particular the role of odour from petrochemical hydrocarbons, as dealt with under the Guidelines at the relevant time.

[para4] The Plaintiffs' position is that the meaning and application of the Guidelines in 1989 required odour to be dealt with to the extent necessary to cleanse the soil so that there would no longer be odour that interfered with the proposed use and occupation of the land.

[para5] The Defendants' position is that the presence of odour required checking and investigation to ensure that objective criteria provided in the Guidelines were met and that this was done.

[para6] Acres International Limited ("Acres") and the MOE are no longer parties to this action, and while their actions are significant, no relief against either party is made by any party remaining in the action.

II. ISSUES

[para6a]

1. Did Petro Canada owe a duty to the Plaintiffs to advise on the environmental state of the subject site?
2. Did Petro Canada fraudulently, recklessly, or negligently misrepresent to the purchaser the environmental state of the subject property?
3. Are the obligations of Petro Canada limited by the contractual agreements between the parties?
4. Did the Defendant Arcturus owe a duty to the Plaintiffs with respect to its environmental report prepared for Petro Canada?
5. Did Arcturus negligently misrepresent the environmental state of the subject site?
6. Assuming either of the Defendants breached a duty to the Plaintiff, what damages flow from such breach and what is the appropriate assessment of those damages?

III SUMMARY

[para7] The following is a summary of the salient facts. 590, relying on a letter from the MOE (May 11, 1988) and having in its possession a copy of a report from Petro Canada's first environmental consultants (Acres), decided to purchase the subject lands. Prior to the closing date, Petro Canada was advised by the MOE of the existence of another consultant's report (Golder's - 1988) done for another prospective purchaser. The MOE requested further investigative work, which was carried out for Petro Canada by Arcturus, with the concurrence of the MOE.

[para8] The closing date of the purchase by 590 was extended pending receipt of the MOE letter of November 15, 1989, which stated that the lands had been "cleaned up in accordance with MOE guidelines".

[para9] Following closing, the Plaintiff claims it was unable to resell the property, as anticipated, due to the presence of hydrocarbon contamination, which it alleges Petro Canada and its consultants concealed from it. The claim for damages is the cost of clean-up and lost profit, together with a claim for consequential loss damages.

IV BACKGROUND FACTS

[para10] The land in question is situated on the south side of Oxford Street East, in the City of London, known as 1855 Oxford Street and is a parcel of approximately 9 acres, having a frontage of about 689 feet. The property was zoned industrial and is now zoned for a variety of commercial uses. The property was purchased in the early 1950's by what was then known as the British-American Oil Company, for use as a fuel depot and as a bulk sales plant.

[para11] British-American changed its name to Gulf Oil Canada Limited in approximately 1971 and in 1985 various assets, including the site in question, were sold by Gulf to Petro Canada. By then the terminal had been dismantled, leaving only an unused service building on the otherwise vacant land. What was clearly known to Petro Canada and indeed to the Plaintiffs was that in its prior use as a bulk terminal, there were some seven above-ground tanks, containing various petroleum products when the plant was in use.

[para12] The subject of this action is the contamination caused by the use and operation of the site including two underground storage tanks ("USTs") in the central west section, use of which the Plaintiffs claim was unknown to them at the time of their purchase of the land from Petro Canada. The Plaintiffs claim that Petro Canada knew of the existence of the use and the damage caused thereby. The Plaintiffs also allege that the Defendant consultants who were employed by Petro Canada were negligent in failing to discover and report on the damage caused by the underground tank use.

[para13] Petro Canada denies any knowledge of the existence and/or use of underground tanks or knowledge of any damage caused by any use of underground tanks, and in this respect is joined by the denial on the part of the consultants.

V THE WITNESSES FOR THE PLAINTIFFS

(i) Peter Azman

[para14] Mr. Azman is a real estate agent and a shareholder of 862590 Ontario Limited ("590") and a representative of 865628 Ontario Limited ("628"). As to formal training, he has the equivalent of a Grade 8 education, completed in Europe and in Canada. In addition to his experience as a real estate agent, he has operated several service stations. He has purchased two other Petro Canada facilities, one a bulk plant facility that he bought and sold, and the other a service station site. He has also bought and sold service station sites either for himself or for others in his family or friends.

[para15] From his previous experience, Mr. Azman was aware in 1988 of the fact that Petro Canada was "de-commissioning" or selling excess sites following their purchase of assets from Gulf Canada Limited. He would receive, as he did in this case, a mailing from Petro Canada that invited possible interested parties to bid for the property that was for sale.

[para16] A circular letter dated August 5, 1988 noted that offers would be accepted up to and including September 16, 1988 and were required to be submitted on a prescribed form. Azman testified that he researched the site with respect to zoning at the London City Hall and he knew that it had been a bulk plant with aboveground storage tanks.

[para17] He testified that, prior to the submission of any offer, he asked of John Cancelli, a Petro Canada employee with whom he had had previous dealings, whether there were available any environmental reports on the site.

[para18] As a result, Azman received from Cancelli a report prepared by Acres dated March 2, 1988 (the "Acres Report") and a letter dated May 19, 1988 from the MOE signed by one Peter Huras. The letter confirmed that, based on the Acres Report, there did not appear to be identified any environmental concerns and the MOE accepted the findings of the report.

[para19] Based on his investigation, and in particular because the site was across the street from the plant of 3M, Azman concluded that it would be an attractive site for a variety of fast-food and other commercial operations, including a service station.

[para20] Two offers were prepared. Azman, through his company Re/Max Professionals Inc. Realtor acted as agent for J. Rose and M. Sherrin, who were colleagues of Azman's, as prospective purchasers. The first offer was in the sum of $630,000 and the second in the sum of $730,000. Apparently neither of these was accepted, according to Azman, because Petro Canada took the property off the market.

[para21] Azman still believed that this was an attractive site and when the property was on the market again in the spring of 1989, he put in an offer in the sum of $880,000, this time with J. Rose in Trust as the purchaser because it was uncertain just who would ultimately be involved on the purchase side.

[para22] A counter-offer was made by the purchasers and accepted by Petro Canada on June 7, 1989. The offer provided that Azman would receive a commission from Petro Canada as its agent upon completion of the sale. (A commission of $35,000 was ultimately paid to Azman.)

[para23] In view of their importance, two clauses from the agreement are set out in full as follows:

"It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereof, other than as expressed herein in writing."

And in Schedule "A", as follows:

"The purchaser acknowledges receiving from the vendor the environmental aspects of site de-commissioning of the real property prepared by Acres International Limited, dated March, 1988, respecting its environmental assessment of the real property, together with the letter received from the Ministry of the Environment dated May 19, 1988, indicating that based on the data submitted by the said Acres International Limited, the objective of the Ministry of the Environment in minimising the potential for environmental and human health problems has been met, and the purchaser further acknowledges that it is satisfied with such report and accepts the real property in its present condition. The purchaser shall, on or before closing date of the transaction, arising out of this agreement (whether extended or advanced), provide the vendor with an indemnity to indemnify and save harmless the vendor, its successors and assigns, from any and all costs, loss, damages, claims and liabilities arising out of or in any way connected with any contamination of the real property whether disclosed by such assessment or not, such indemnity to survive the completion of this agreement."

[para24] Azman testified that when he received the revised offer from Petro Canada and before it was executed by Rose, he asked John Cancelli regarding underground tanks and Cancelli apparently responded that "there weren't any at this site, only an unconnected gas station to the east."

[para25] By that time, Mr. Sherrin had decided he did not want to participate in the purchase and a John I. Johnston, the purchaser's lawyer for the transaction and an acquaintance of Azman's, became a participant. Title was ultimately taken in the Plaintiff 590 of which Rose, Azman and Johnston are shareholders.

[para26] It was Azman's evidence that immediately after acceptance of the agreement to purchase, which had a closing date of October 31, 1989 on it, he began to call contacts in the real estate business regarding prospects for development or sale.

[para27] Azman identified a letter of October 11, 1989 addressed to Joe Rose Service Limited from one D.S. Boehm, an environmental officer with the MOE, a copy of which was sent directly to Azman. This letter indicated that the Acres Report, while it provided oil and grease analysis, did not provide an accurate assessment as to the extent of on-site volatile hydrocarbon contamination. Reference was made in the letter to a report of Golder Associates Ltd. (the "Golder Report") that had been received by the MOE and reviewed. In summary, the MOE letter directed that there be an environmental cleanup involving the excavation of certain soils. The cleanup was to be observed by an MOE official following which contamination sampling would be required and the work was to be completed in a timely fashion.

[para28] Azman testified that following receipt of the letter he then contacted Petro Canada. He did not ask for a copy of the Golder Report, explaining that it would have been given to him if Petro Canada had it. Johnston wrote on behalf of the purchaser 590 for an explanation from Petro Canada. Azman testified that he met with someone from Petro Canada, at which time it was agreed that if Petro Canada could clean up the site, the closing of the transaction would follow the cleanup. As a result the closing was extended to November 15, 1989.

[para29] Azman further gave evidence that to his knowledge the work with respect to the cleanup was supervised by one A.W. Panko of Arcturus, who had previously been associated with Acres and who had done the earlier report on the site. Dr. Panko was now carrying on the same activity in a new entity in which he was involved.

[para30] Azman said that on the early afternoon of November 7, 1989 he was contacted by John Cancelli of Petro Canada, who told him that he had the report of Arcturus (the "Arcturus Report") which Azman says he immediately obtained and read. He then called Dr. Panko, who allegedly said, "the site was o.k., even for housing, and there was no need for him to worry". The purchaser partners then decided to wait for a letter from the MOE confirming that report. The MOE letter dated November 15, 1989 to Petro Canada read in full as follows:

"Thank you for the recent report entitled "Petro Canada, Oxford Street Bulk Terminal London, Ontario - Results of Cleanup". The areas identified as being contaminated have been successfully cleaned up in accordance with the Ministry of Environment's "Guidelines for Site De-Commissioning in Ontario". In addition, areas grossly contaminated with volatile hydrocarbons have been successfully removed. Thank you for your co-operation in this matter. If you have any further questions, please call ___ at 661-2200."

[para31] The letter was signed by D.S. Boehm, the environmental officer. Based on this information, the purchasers decided to close the deal and Azman started to promote the property.

[para32] Azman immediately marketed the property, and heard from one Dave Lucas, another Re/Max agent, on behalf of Southside Construction. Shortly thereafter an agreement of purchase and sale was entered into dated December 20, 1989, with one Vito Frijia in Trust, in the sum of $1,250,000. The offer, which was accepted by 590, stated as follows:

"The vendor warrants that there is no soil contamination which would restrict or prohibit the construction of an industrial plaza on its subject property which would be in contravention of any municipal, provincial or federal government legislation."

In handwriting, the following was added to that paragraph: "as per letter dated November 15/89, attached" (the MOE letter). Azman testified that he provided Frijias with the Arcturus Report as well as the MOE letter.

[para33] In early 1990, before the closing date of March 15, 1990 Frijias indicated a problem to Azman, as Frijias had had the property inspected and environmentally tested by Trow Dames & Moore, environmental consultants. The tests showed contamination, presumably, according to Azman, due to the previous presence of underground tanks. On this basis Frijias was not prepared to close. [There was no mention in the Trow Dames & Moore report of USTs.]

[para34] Azman stated that based on the MOE letter, he and the Plaintiffs felt that the property was, as he described, "ok", and therefore they did not accept the position of Frijias for abatement that was originally suggested in the sum of $400,000. The response by 590 was to attempt an exercise on a power of sale under the third mortgage held by 628. 628 was at the time controlled by the three shareholders of 590, and the action was used as a means to remove from title the agreement of purchase and sale registered by Frijias. Subsequently Frijias reduced his abatement claim to $250,000 and rather than accept this, the Plaintiffs sued Frijias because as Azman testified in his view, they would be out money taking into account legal costs and expenses if they accepted an abatement bearing in mind the Plaintiffs' purchase price of $880,000.

[para35] Azman took this position since as he stated he had talked to Dr. Panko of Arcturus prior to closing and was satisfied that the property had been properly cleaned and there was no reason for him to take a loss. It was not until a settlement with Frijias in that litigation in 1991 (each party bearing its own costs) that the cloud was removed from title. Apparently in the process Dr. Panko, according to Azman, had agreed to provide expert assistance to Azman in the litigation with Frijias. This was denied by Panko.)

[para36] Azman on behalf of 590 pursued and completed a re-zoning of the property from light industrial to commercial and subdivision from one into four parcels. Following re-zoning, Azman testified about contacts with the Tim Horton Donut chain, which had expressed interest in a portion of the site and had been prepared to purchase a parcel of 150 feet by 300 feet for the sum of $150,000. An agreement of purchase and sale was completed and accepted on August 3, 1993. Later in August of that year, Tim Hortons advised the Plaintiffs that based on a report they received from their consultants, Trow Corporation, it was their view that the "property has never been remediated and is contaminated with oil and therefore the soil conditions are not satisfactory." Tim Horton indicated that the cost necessary to remediate had been estimated between $50,000 and $80,000 (for the parcel to be purchased) and determined not to close the transaction in view of the unsatisfactory soil conditions.

[para37] Azman testified that it was not until receipt of the Trow Consultants report of August 23, 1993 that he was certain that the property had not been properly dealt with.

[para38] Since 1993 the property has not been remediated nor has it been sold and only one parcel, namely that that had been occupied by London Marina under lease from December 1992, was later sold to it. Azman testified that immediately after receipt of the Trow report from Tim Hortons, he went out to the site with a backhoe and dug up material from a number of places, including three holes that were identified in the Trow report as numbers 1, 16 and 22, and put some of that material in jars, which he described as having a very heavy smell of petroleum and this material confirmed to him that the site would not be saleable until it was properly remediated. (In view of the evidence of the experts nothing turns on this evidence.)

[para39] Azman commenced this action in 1995 against Petro Canada and is trying to get compensation to be able to remediate. The price to London Marine of its portion of the land was $260,000, comprised of some back rent, a purchase price attributed of $226,000 and a vendor take-back mortgage of $118,000. Apparently that mortgage is in default allegedly due to London Marine not paying due to contamination.

[para40] Under cross-examination, Azman admitted that other purchases of properties in which he was involved that had been bulk plant facilities or service stations, he could not recall having received any environmental reports. His response was that he didn't see any problems when he was buying or constructing on those sites. He agreed that when he bought a bulk terminal from Petro Canada on Merivale Road in Ottawa, he got an environmental report that had been done by Acres, and when he bought a service station on Montreal Road, he knew there had been underground tanks, but could not recall whether he received an environmental report or not.

[para41] Azman was aware of the Gasoline Handling Act and has owned two service stations with underground storage tanks. Azman conceded that prior to putting in the offer of September 16, 1988 he knew that there had been seven above-ground storage tanks and that the property had been used as a bulk plant.

[para42] He could not explain the increase in price in the two September 16th offers from $630,000 to $730,000, except to say that he thought it reflected what the market was doing, namely increasing. At all times Azman thought he could sell the property and/or develop it with a goal of making money. He could not say whether as of September 16, 1988 he had a personal interest in the transaction; it may have turned out that it was only Rose and Sherrin.

[para43] As of April 1989 when 590 increased the offering price to $880,000 Azman still thought the property was a good deal to sell or develop. The offer by Rose "in trust" reflected the decline of Sherrin to participate. Azman acknowledged being aware of the change in the environmental clause proposed by Petro Canada in that offer and confirmed that he still liked the site for development notwithstanding. He agreed that as a real estate agent he was familiar with the "entire agreement" clause (see paragraph 23 above).

[para44] Azman was asked whether he knew there was no covenant of Petro Canada that he could rely on and no warranty outside of the agreement. His answer was that he had the MOE letter and the Acres Report. He was asked whether he knew that something said orally wasn't part of the contract. He answered "not really", that he abided by a number of oral agreements.

[para45] Azman acknowledged that he did not explain the "entire agreements" clause to Rose. He simply reviewed the site with him; he thought it was a site ripe for development. He did not recommend an environmental consultant because he already had the Acres Report and the MOE letter.

[para46] Azman did not tell Petro Canada at any time before closing that he as their agent acquired an interest in the property as a shareholder of 590. He did not consider this a breach of his regulatory obligations as a real estate agent receiving a commission from Petro Canada.

[para47] On closing 590, as purchaser, gave a written indemnity to Petro Canada which reads as follows:

INDEMNITY AND RELEASE

Re: Petro Canada Inc. Sale to 862590 Ontario Limited 1855 Oxford Street, London, Ontario - (the "real property")

In consideration of the closing of the above sale transaction, the undersigned, 862590 Ontario Limited, and its successors and assigns, hereby indemnify, release and save harmless Petro-Canada Inc., its successors and assigns, from any and all costs, loss, damages, claims and liabilities of the real property whether or not disclosed by the Environmental Aspects of Site Decommissioning prepared by Acres International Limited dated March 1988 respecting Acres International Limited's environmental assessment of the real property, the May 19, 1988 and the November 15, 1989 acknowledgement letters of the Ministry of the Environment, all referred to it in an Agreement of Purchase and Sale between J. Rose, In trust, as Purchaser and Petro-Canada Inc., as Vendor, accepted on June 7, 1989. DATED at Etobicoke, Ontario this 15th day of November 1989.

[para48] When asked about the indemnity clause and whether it was important to him, Azman said yes, but he was relying on the MOE letter and the Acres Report. Azman agreed that Johnston, who was the lawyer on the transaction (and a 590 shareholder), reviewed the clause before it went back to Petro-Canada but could not recall any advice given by Johnston, or that he had it reviewed by Rose. Azman confirmed that he has an outstanding action against Johnston for alleged negligence in his handling of the transaction.

[para49] Azman knew that the site had a neighbouring service station with underground tanks and that there were other nearby sites with other companies' bulk plants and that the building onsite might have had an underground furnace tank. Azman could not recall thinking of it but he did know that there were underground fuel lines but didn't ask to find out how the fuels came to the rack.

[para50] Azman conceded that he knew that he could have put a condition in the offer to deal with underground tanks, he knew he could have inspected the property, he could have got an environmental expert but didn't do so because he didn't think there was a need for it, given his discussion with Petro Canada, Acres and the MOE letter.

[para51] Azman knew he was going to have to give an indemnity, whether or not the Acres Report disclosed all the contaminants. He conceded that he was not qualified to review the Acres Report; neither were his partners. He claims not to know what an environmental audit is or what the MOE Guidelines were and did not ask anyone. He acknowledged that the report does not say that Acres or Petro Canada did any remediation; simply an investigation.

[para52] Azman stated that he only quickly read the conclusion of the Acres Report and really relied on the MOE letter as he said, "If the MOE is happy, so am I". He didn't ask any questions but knew before closing that the MOE had a problem with the Acres Report. While he knew of the existence of the Golder Report, he did not do as he said he did with the Acres Report and call the author. He did not call Z Realty, who had ordered the Golder Report, because they were competitors and he didn't feel comfortable in doing so. He didn't ask Petro Canada for a copy on the basis that if they had had it, they would have given it to him.

[para53] Azman denied that his real intention was to sell as quickly as possible, notwithstanding that he started marketing immediately after the offer was completed. Another potential sale to one Gerzon at $1.2 million failed because Gerzon did not want to increase the deposit as demanded by Azman.

[para54] Azman stated that he did not pass the Arcturus Report on to other potential purchasers because he knew that they were looking for the conclusion of the MOE letter of November 15, 1989 which he took to be a satisfactory cleanup. He agreed that in hindsight there is a lot that he didn't know or understand, but agreed that the closing was postponed due to MOE concerns.

[para55] Azman says when this was done he must have forgotten about the warranty and indemnity to Petro Canada.

[para56] Azman agreed that his first mention of his telephone conversation with Dr. Panko on November 7, 1989 discussing "the ability to build houses" came in his evidence in chief in this action. He agreed he has no precise memory of the call at all, apart from his long distance record.

(ii) Joseph Rose

[para57] Mr. Rose is the sole director and officer of 590 and one out of three shareholders. He is 53 years of age. He finished grade 12 and then did an auto mechanic apprenticeship. He has worked in service stations for several years and has owned his own since 1994 and has for some time been out of gasoline selling, concentrating on auto repair. He is familiar with tank dips and underground tanks and had some that leaked and he left the retail business because of some of those problems.

[para58] Rose advised that he is a long-standing friend of Azman, who contacted him in early 1988. He wanted to make some money and was prepared to mortgage his family home to be able to do so. He identified the September '88 offers and assumed when they were rejected that they would put them in again when appropriate.

[para59] Originally the employee in his station, one Sherrin, was going to participate in the purchase transaction, but he left Rose's employ early in '89 and decided not to participate. Azman was to find others, because they still believed it was a good property. He agreed that Johnston became involved some time in the early part of 1989 and believes he may have gone over the offer with Johnston but isn't sure. As far as he was concerned, based on what Azman said, it sounded like a good site for sale or even development. Rose arranged for mortgages on his home for his share of the purchase, which at all times was going to be $250,000.

[para60] Rose noted receiving a copy of the MOE letter of October 11, 1989 but immediately referred Boehm, who called about it, to Azman, because that was his matter to take care of. Rose assumed whatever would be done would be done by Azman, and he was satisfied that the problem was cleaned up by Petro Canada. He stated he relied on Johnston and Azman for the details.

[para61] Rose believes he looked at the Arcturus Report somewhere on the 8th or 9th of November and was happy that the property was being cleaned up. He identified the indemnity and release; he doesn't recall signing it. The November 15th MOE letter to him meant that everything was clean and they could go in.

[para62] Rose knew that right after closing Azman had a buyer, Southside Construction. It wasn't until the spring of the next year that he became aware of problems and that Southside would not close because of the contamination. Rose wasn't involved in the decision as to how that dispute would be dealt with. He noted that Southside put a cloud on title and ultimately the matter was settled. Rose felt Azman was happier with this result because Azman was anxious to have the property developed and he felt that if they had not settled, Southside would have continued to sue them.

[para63] In cross-examination Rose confirmed that Azman was primarily concerned with the property and that it was brought to Rose who relied on Azman and his experience with Petro Canada. Rose simply went along with what was being proposed. While Azman would have reviewed the offer with Azman briefly, he has no memory of any specific discussion regarding the "entire agreement" cause. He can not recall either that Johnston looked at this or any of the offers. He only recalled discussing documents with Johnston when they were going to close.

[para64] Regarding the indemnity in Schedule "A": Rose could not recall specifically that Azman brought it to his attention, but he remembers that the MOE was "the top law of the land" and it was really the MOE that he was relying on for the purpose of being able to close and then sell again.

[para65] According to Rose, all decisions regarding price were made by Azman. Rose knew Azman was going to get a commission; he didn't know that Azman was going to be an investor until right at the end. He knew there were going to be other investors but not who. By June he knew that Johnston was coming in. He agreed that he saw the Acres Report and the MOE letter at around the closing time, but relied on Azman to know if the environmental conditions were "ok". He did not recall any talk about the Golder Report prior to closing.

[para66] Rose stated that he was not aware of the Southside offer to settle for $1 million made in early 1990 (i.e., an abatement of $250,000). He left everything to Azman. He knew that Azman felt those guys would continue to sue them if they tried to close in any event.

[para67] Rose issued a Notice of Action in November 1995, claiming against Johnston and Gray (another lawyer for 590). That action is on hold. It alleges that Gray failed to advise 590 to settle with Southside with an abatement and against Johnston because he failed to suggest an environmental investigation. He was referred to the pleadings in that action which include a claim against Bennett Jones, a law firm: Rose agreed that in these pleadings there is no mention of his having the Arcturus Report prior to the placing of his mortgage. He didn't read any of those reports himself and he didn't discuss any of this with Gray, the lawyer for 590, namely the $1 million offer or what release could be negotiated with Southside.

(iii) John I. Johnston

[para68] John Johnston is a barrister and solicitor called in 1951 following his war service with the Armoured Corps. and then with the Queen's Own Rifles. He retired in 1996. His general practice mainly in real estate and estates was conducted out of an office in New Toronto. He knew both Rose and Azman, both of whom operated in the district. He had previously acted for Azman, who brought this transaction to him when the offers were completed. It would appear that he got a copy of the offer on the 21st of June, 1989.

[para69] By that time it had been agreed that he would be one of the three partners. He was to put in $400,000 and each of the others $250,000. The mortgages back were to be for 6 months and open, with the closing to be on October 31, 1989.

[para70] Regarding Schedule "A" to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, Johnston neither received nor saw the Acres Report or the MOE letter at the time of the offer. The partners discussed the signing of the indemnity as a necessary part of the closing. They knew, in his opinion, the nature of the documents.

[para71] While Rose brought in the letter of the MOE of October 11, 1989, he did not know anything of the Golder Report, nor did he see it. He knew that the property had been used as a storage depot prior. Johnston had never had a copy of the Arcturus Report. He believed he had seen it but had not kept a copy. He confirmed the circumstances regarding the extension of the closing.

[para72] Johnston stated that three or four days before November 15, Azman brought him a copy of the Arcturus Report and showed it to him and pointed out Section 3 which showed that the property was cleansed and clear. (see page 5, last two lines where the "soil was removed from the site")

[para73] Johnston acknowledged the potential sale to Southside and noted that while he followed the transaction and the ensuing litigation, Azman was in charge of both, including the discussions regarding settlement, and Azman took care of re-zoning.

[para74] Johnston recalled the potential sale to Tim Hortons. The agreement came into his office and Rose signed it. He indicated that the Trow report was sent to him by Azman or Tim Hortons, and he found it surprising to learn that there had been underground tanks. When asked when he first knew of these, he said, "I'm not sure. There was another report, I think it was the Golder Report done in 1988". But he did not recall knowing this before 1993.

[para75] He confirmed that the deal did not go through and the deposit was returned. He sent a letter to Petro Canada forwarding the Trow environmental report received from Tim Hortons, because he wanted Petro Canada to do something about it.

[para76] As of 1988 Johnston could not recall how long he'd known Azman; it may have been as long as 10 years. He was first consulted on this deal with the execution by both sides of the agreement of purchase and sale, and reconfirmed the receipt of the transmittal letter from Re/Max.

[para77] Reference was made to Exhibit 23 the statement of defence in the action commenced by Azman against Johnston to three previous transactions that he'd acted for Azman on, each sold at a profit. He confirmed that he was going to contribute through his wife in this project to make sure that the deal would close. He can not remember whether Azman told Petro Canada he was part of the purchasing group. He never thought about the issue of Azman's responsibility being an agent and a purchaser.

[para78] Johnston did not review the offer or the entire agreements clause with either of his fellow shareholders because they were sophisticated. He said that Azman knew the words were there because he arranged the offer. (Mr. Johnston was confused in several places regarding dates and letters, and drew assumptions from documents that he previously read.)

[para79] Johnston confirmed that he had seen but not read a copy of the MOE letter of May 19, 1988 and that he never had a copy of the Acres Report. He never advised Azman to have it reviewed by an environmental consultant. He didn't have personal familiarity with the MOE Guidelines.

[para80] The witness was referred to "The Canadian Institute Conference" environmental material on steps to be taken by a lawyer advising regarding environmental audit and representation & warranties. Johnston stated that he was not familiar with this material or the obligations.

(iv) Daniel Steven Boehm

[para81] Mr. Boehm is 43 years of age, now employed with Philip Services as a senior account manager in the environmental section. In 1984 he joined the MOE for the purpose of the implementation of the Ontario Regulation 309 to allow tracking of Ontario liquid waste, including contaminated soil. Mr. Boehm was responsible for the issuance of the November 15, 1989 letter.

[para82] Mr. Boehm's background includes a three-year Environmental Studies Diploma from Fanshaw College, which included one year of field work. He then worked for the Ontario Research Corporation in Third Party Monitoring and then at the MOE in the London Regional Office. In 1988 and '89 he became responsible for the area in which 1855 Oxford was located. Peter Huras was a colleague. He identified the Huras letter which took place during the transition period. Boehm then became responsible for the east part of London.

[para83] Boehm noted that during this period the MOE Guidelines for decontamination of Ontario sites were under considerable change and that the MOE also looked after noise, water and dust. He identified the February '89 guidelines and indicated that they were an evolving matter as of that time. In his work, Boehm dealt with either the owner or the owner's representative in large companies; however, he would often deal with an environmental representative or a consultant.

[para84] Boehm acknowledged that the Golder Report had been received by the MOE, and as well the memorandum by Acres comparing the Acres Report and the Golder Report. Boehm drafted the October 11, 1989 letter (being the person responsible) as there were some shortcomings that had been identified in the Golder Report since he felt the site needed to be further remediated and it was easier to do the work before the ground was frozen.

[para85] Boehm confirmed the draft work plan of Arcturus and the use by them of a TLV meter, which is a portable gas detector with a machine probe that goes into the ground. He noted one may also take bore hole samples for lab analysis or put the TLV meter down to the bottom of the hole. The samples were taken in the areas that had previously been identified as likely containing contaminants.

[para86] Boehm referred to the excavations that were done in early November 1989 in his presence with a backhoe and he observed what was taken out. His job was to see that the action plan was carried out without gross negligence.

[para87] Boehm was satisfied with the work done by Arcturus under the work plan and its results. He was satisfied that the MOE concerns had been addressed when he faxed out the November 15th letter the next day. He confirmed that odours were not well defined under the Guidelines, which were in a state of flux although there were some numbers for refinery sites.

[para88] In his cross-examination, Boehm conceded that as of 1988 it was usually only large companies that contacted the MOE and they would report based on their anticipated future use. Based on reporting, the MOE would decide what they thought was appropriate by way of further testing and remediation.

[para89] Boehm confirmed that the testing done by Acres was typical as was the MOE response based on the review of expert reports which indicated "objective realised" in the letter of May 11, 1989. This is only sent if there are no problems. He indicated that both the Acres and Golder Reports indicated the presence of hydrocarbons.

[para90] Boehm could not recall any request for the Golder Report from anyone as a result of his October 11 letter. If they had, he would have suggested a Freedom of Information request, or given the name of the person who commissioned the report. He could not recall speaking to either Azman or Rose regarding the letter.

[para91] Boehm stated that as of 1989, there were no criteria for volatile hydrocarbons in the Guidelines and the presence of them may or may not be a consideration for remediation based on the intended use or sensitivity to neighbouring watercourses.

He was satisfied with the work program of Arcturus as it related to volatile hydrocarbon testing and never heard from Azman as to what he was going to do with the property or what in fact was done. He had no concern about the Arcturus work and if the MOE had disagreed, he would comment. Silence does equal agreement. The test readings taken were below MOE guidelines, therefore the clearance letter was issued. Petro Canada would not have had the letter until November 16th and no-one contacted the MOE regarding a concern about the testing or the Arcturus Report.

[para92] Boehm confirmed that the Arcturus Report relied on the Acres history. He believed the Arcturus plan was appropriate, it was a limited job which was done and they said they had done it, and the MOE confirmed that they had done it. He did not expect work to be done by Arcturus beyond the plan. As of 1989 the main problem appeared to be vapours and prior to that there had been some free products and what he saw was relatively minor in nature.

[para93] Boehm further testified that the Acres Report was standard for its time. There were no guidelines in 1988 for problems from vapours from BTEXs (this refers to some "light" ends of the petroleum hydrocarbon spectrum consisting of butane, toluene, ethyl benzene and xylene).

[para94] As of November 1989 Boehm believed the subject property met the guidelines based on the totality of the information of all of the consultants and his personal observations, and when the Trow Dames report came in, in January 1990, it still met the guidelines. Using a TLV meter one would expect to get vapours from hydrocarbons. Boehm was referred to his having seen a "sheen" in the catchbasin, a rainbow appearance. He confirmed that this is not liquid petroleum itself but rather a mixture.

(v) John Cancelli

[para95] The Plaintiffs called as a witness John Cancelli, who previously worked at Petrofina from 1974 and then later at Petro Canada as development administrator in the real estate department. He worked under one Tab Charbonneau, who was responsible for deals and he did the paperwork. Cancelli related to John Thomson who was responsible for dismantling of bulk plants and terminals. Charbonneau and Thomson had come from Gulf to Petro Canada.

[para96] Cancelli explained the process involved when Petro Canada decided to sell a property. The proposal would go through various executive levels of approval for sales and he would then prepare a list that would be given to anyone who called for it. Petro Canada accepted tenders for the listed properties. Cancelli knew Azman as a Petro Canada dealer and sometime purchaser of sites.

[para97] Cancelli testified that the property in issue was withdrawn from the market after the first offers in September because of some environmental concerns and due to the legal description as to how it was configured. Petro Canada wanted to make sure it was ready to sell. Cancelli indicated that when a prospective purchaser asked for property information, he would give the person a plot plan obtained from the engineering department. He did so in this case and confirmed that he did not make a copy of the lower right hand corner of the plan he gave Azman, on the basis that the revisions to drawings and their prior history was the business only of Petro Canada. The full description in that corner indicates that the drawing was amended in 1981 and notes "replace earthen dikes with clay and remove underground tanks and large rack". The Plaintiffs now claim that they were misled into believing that there never were underground tanks.

[para98] Cancelli described that the land was put back on the market in 1990. Schedule A to the draft agreement was prepared by the legal department. The Azman offer was of interest to Petro Canada because it was at the right price with very few conditions, "something they could work with".

[para99] Cancelli explained that he was not directly involved following acceptance of the offer. He was asked whether he had any conversation regarding the condition of the property. The following is the extract from his examination in chief:

Q. Did you have a discussion at about that time with him [Azman] about the condition of the property? Do you remember that?

A. We talked about - yeah. Yes.

Q. What was said, can you recall now?

A. Well, we talked about the legal descriptions and the condition of the buildings and about a number of things.

Q. Anything about the condition of the land?

A. He inquired about some tanks, if they were still there or if they weren't still there.

Q. And what did you say about that?

A. We looked on the plan and we couldn't see any that were there even though at the bottom it indicated that there were. That was the bottom of the - the headings on the bottom of the plot plans.

Q. When did that take place?

A. Some of it prior to closing, some of it after - I mean, prior to the offer being executed and some of it afterwards.

Q. And there was a document called the Arcturus report. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you have any discussion with him about that subject?

A. I gave him a couple of reports along with a letter from the Ministry saying the property was okay.

Q. Now, you already told us you gave him the Acres report, so you gave them a couple of reports?

A. I gave him the Acres report along with the letter from the Ministry, and there was another report after that that John Thompson gave me.

Q. And when would that be? When did you do that?

A. It would have been prior to closing.

Q. Okay. Mr. Rogers. Thanks very much. Your witness.

[para100] The witness confirmed in cross-examination that he didn't have anything to do with the operation of the site which was purchased from Gulf in 1975. The property was ready for sale when he first saw it. He did not know about any of the environmental issues as they were dealt with before the property was put on the market.

[para101] When asked about his discussion with Azman regarding tanks, Cancelli agreed that any discussion would have been in accordance with the drawings. He would not have misled as there was no reason for him to do so. As far as he understood from Mrs. Colluci (of the legal department), he was to make full disclosure and he believes that he would have responded to any question from Azman fully and truthfully, and would indicate what was on the drawing if he had it.

[para102] The witness did not know that Azman had an interest in the property personally. He confirmed that he gave Azman a copy of the Acres Report and a letter from the MOE before the offer (May 1989), and if questions had been asked he would have referred Azman to Thomson or someone else who would know the environmental issues. Cancelli knew that Azman was going to get a commission on the sale.

[para103] The question of when Cancelli first gave Azman a copy of the Arcturus Report arose again in his cross-examination since he gave a written statement in 1996 to Messrs. Panko and Difruscio of Arcturus. The following excerpt deals with the issue:

Q. And I understand that subsequent to that phone call, you met with Andy Panko and with Tony Difruscio at a Tim Horton's in North Toronto someplace?

A. That's true, yes.

Q. And they asked you to sign a letter -

A. Yes.

Q. - that you had never provided the Arcturus report prior to 1990 to Mr. Azman. I'm showing you that document. Is that your signature below the date November 5th, 1996?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And I take it that November 5th, 1996, would have been the date that you met with Mr. Difruscio and Dr. Panko at the Tim Horton's?

A. I would assume so, yes.

Q. And looking up, there are the words: "Except for report provided in 1990" and there's initials there, "J.C."?

A. Yes.

Q. Are those your initials?

A. Yes.

Q. Also placed on this document on November 5th?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you write in the words: "Except for the report provided in 1990"?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And I take it, Mr. Cancelli, that prior to your leaving the employment of Petro Canada you were aware that there were some issues with respect to the property that had been purchased by Mr. Rose?

A. Yes.

Q. You had continuing dealings with Mr. Azman?

A. Yes.

Q. And at some point in 1990, he went looking for a copy of the Arcturus report?

A. Okay. Yes.

Q. And he asked you if you would provide him with a copy?

A. Well, I'm pretty sure the copy was provided to him before that, but

Q. But you wrote in those words in 1996?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Cancelli, I'm not suggesting that you were trying to hide or keep things from Mr. Azman at all, but merely that this was not a matter in November of 1989 that was still within your office. It was up in the legal department by that time.

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

Ms. Tough. Those are all my questions.

The Court. Any re-examination?

Mr. Rogers. I have no further questions.

(vi) Kevin Pal

[para104] Mr. Pal is employed by the Insurers' Advisory Organization as an account advisor in environmental services. He provides information to the industry on environmental matters, with site plans and maps. He has been there for 2 years.

[para105] He described how fire insurance plans are drawn up by representatives of the organization, involving inspectors visiting the sites to take measurements, record information and relay that to draftspersons who draft the plans. The organization was commenced by the industry based on their demand. He identified a book of fire insurance plans produced by the IAO and indicated three plates, nos. 219 and 221 in particular, that relate to the subject property, and show on them underground tanks. He confirmed that in 1988 and 1989 IAO was a member-supported organization supported by insurance companies, who paid a fee for the work done. A percentage of revenue came from fee services but copies of plans are available at various locations including public archives, libraries and the University of Western Ontario.

[para106] Cross-examination confirmed that users were part of a general movement by the members to move to a private organization to work on a profit basis.

[para107] Ms. Tough confirmed from the witness that the website of the IAO indicates that they are marketing their services aggressively and have been since 1990. Prior to that time, the maps were held by the insurers. The maps actually ceased production in 1973 and then were delivered to the archival interests. A copy charge is required. That's now advertised and wasn't previously.

VI THE WITNESSES FOR THE DEFENDANT PETRO CANADA

(i) James Kitchen

[para108] Mr. Kitchen is the manager of corporate planning for Petro Canada's central regions. He is 51 years of age and has been employed first with Gulf Canada in 1971, then became a manager in London in charge of real estate and capital projects, and joined Petro Canada in 1985.

[para109] While in London, Kitchen had occasion to visit the subject site. It had a service station and a wash bay for trucks; the office had an accounting function and storage for advertising and product. He was aware of it being a bulk storage facility and while in the 70's it was operational, it was not in use on a daily basis. The trucks simply picked up exchange product from the Shell refinery. He was not aware of any underground storage tanks but would not have been surprised if there had been a top-up tank for fuel for the trucks.

[para110] In the period 1987-89, Kitchen was part of the group called "Distribution" within Petro Canada that was responsible for having equipment removed, making an environmental report and then determining whether the property had any other use for the company.

[para111] Because Petro Canada was a Crown corporation it had tended to dispose of properties on an open basis following appraisals. It had a list of persons who had requested information. Kitchen would not see individual offers but received periodically a summary from Cancelli. He confirmed that the subject property was taken off the market in September 1988 because Petro Canada had a number of offers with a wide range of prices, and difficulty in establishing market value. After the property was put back on the market in 1989 he did not have any further involvement.

(ii) John Thompson

[para112] This witness is now retired at 65 years of age. He started with B.A. in 1969 and was then with Gulf and Petro Canada. Mr. Thompson was a terminal superintendent at the Clarkson refinery from 1974 to 1986. The London bulk plant reported to him. From 1987 to 1989 his title was Safety, Health and Environmental Advisor, when he then retired. He worked for a short time for Arcturus around 1994 and now is fully retired. His specific responsibility in 1988 was for de-commissioning of bulk plants.

[para113] It was Thompson's responsibility to hire an expert (Acres) to carry out an inspection of the property and provide a report of the condition for environmental remediation. He provided a copy of the site plan to Acres, having received it from Petro Canada's engineering department. It was his recollection that the revision data on the drawing showing removal of USTs was on the document that he gave to Acres.

[para114] While Thompson had been on the subject site, he didn't have any knowledge of USTs and would have expected Acres to tell him about this in their report, if there were any. He dealt with two individuals, Davies and Panko at Acres. He had no problem with the draft report prepared by Acres and sent it on in final form to the MOE.

[para115] Thompson stated that if Acres had recommended remediation he would have given approval, since Petro Canada wanted to sell the site. He expected and received a letter from Huras at MOE, clearing the site. These letters were hard to get. When he got the MOE letter of May 19, 1988, he sent it on to the real estate department at Petro Canada to be ready for sale. That was the end of his involvement at that time.

[para116] When Thompson received the Golder Report dated November 11, 1988, he simply forwarded it to Acres for comment. When the MOE sent its letter of October 11, 1989, he referred it to Panko for delineation of a work program. They were the ones who were experienced and he decided to go with Panko and Frijia, now at Arcturus, since they had worked on the site before and those remaining at Acres were unknown to him.

[para117] Thompson testified that in early November 1989 the MOE was in attendance at the site at his request. He received a copy of the draft Arcturus Report and then received the November 15th letter from the MOE. He sent the MOE letter to the real estate department, and can't remember what, if anything, he did with the Arcturus Report.

[para118] In cross-examination, Thompson confirmed that he had no education or specific experience in the environmental field. His job was simply to get the site ready for disposal and he was not directly involved in guiding Acres or Arcturus in the specifics of the real estate transaction, including the indemnity.

(iii) Thomas A.B. Charbonneau

[para119] Mr. Charbonneau retired from Petro Canada in 1988 or 1989. He had been with Gulf since 1969 and was familiar with the property, having lived in London for 10 years and passed by it on a regular basis. He recalls having seen above-ground tanks only on the site and he had no responsibility for environmental review.

[para120] Charbonneau was responsible for obtaining appraisals prior to putting property for sale. Any site plan document given to appraisers would have come from the engineering department. He could not identify the specific document obtained in this case but believed it was a copy of the full "sepia" or original document containing revisions.

[para121] Charbonneau was not involved in the specifics of the real estate transaction beyond obtaining the offer from prospective purchasers and referring it to the real estate department. He was not responsible for either the environmental state of the property or anything having to do with the indemnity.

(iv) Rosemary Colluci

[para122] This witness is a long-time employee of Gulf and then Petro-Canada. She testified to events that took place 10-11 years ago. She was unable to recall many of the specifics of the real estate transaction, and discussions with individuals concerning it. She was called presumably to rebut the statement made in opening that Petro Canada through her, fraudulently deprived the plaintiff prior to closing of relevant and material information concerning the environmental state of the site.

[para123] To my mind the witness's lack of specific recall is completely understandable. The transaction in issue, insofar as Mrs. Colluci's duties were concerned, proceeded as a normal and straightforward event, which took place in the ordinary and usual course of her business as a law clerk responsible for the particulars of land transfers for Petro-Canada.

[para124] The issue of the receipt of the consultant reports (Acres, Arcturus), the obtaining of the letter of the MOE (November 15, 1989), along with the purchaser's indemnity, were all matters that were required by Mrs. Colluci for the purpose of closing. She had no responsibility for the actual obtaining of consultants' reports or for the scope of work to be done by consultants or what was or was not necessary to satisfy the MOE regarding the environmental state of the land. Mrs. Colluci received what others in the company believed was the appropriate information for her to provide to the purchaser in view of the indemnity that was being required of them.

[para125] In view of the allegations made in opening of fraudulent conduct on the part of Mrs. Colluci, further comment on her veracity is appropriate. A suggestion was made to her in cross-examination, that it was somewhat incongruous that she could recall the specific detail attending the purchaser's solicitor's office for the escrow closing, but not whether or not she had discussions with others in Petro-Canada regarding the environmental report.

[para126] To my mind, this is completely understandable and is consistent with her truthfulness as a witness. What was done by Mrs. Colluci in receipt of documents, information and then preparation of further documents, proceeded insofar as she was concerned uneventfully, as it was others who were responsible for the obtaining of the required documents.

[para127] What was eventful in her duties was to travel by car from North York to the Lakeshore Road in Etobicoke for an escrow closing, which she recalls.

[para128] Accepting the reason for her lack of recall with specificity of the routine, I find Mrs. Colluci entirely truthful and creditable. Not only can no inference be drawn from her lack of recall, I conclude that there was no agreement with her colleagues to deprive the purchasers of information with an intent to deceive them. There is nothing in her evidence to suggest that she ever had the Golder or Arcturus Reports, much less purposely withheld either of them or mentioned them to the purchaser's solicitor.

(v) John Barber

[para129] I accept from the evidence of Mr. Barber, that while it is not possible to say with certainty that there were USTs within the fenced area at one time, from a review of the engineering drawings, it is not likely that there were, given the way in which the bulk plant operated.

[para130] Mr. Barber explained the methodology for preparation of engineering documents and revisions to them. The intention of the drawing is to indicate what is on-site at the time of the revision block dates show. Based on this information and his testimony, I am satisfied that it is more likely than not that any USTs were removed prior to 1984 and were not present at the time of purchase.

VII THE WITNESSES FOR THE DEFENDANT ARCTURUS

(i) Anthony Difruscio

[para131] Formerly with Acres and then Arcturus, Mr. Difruscio is now the director of environmental and site remediation for Connor Pacific, the Broomfield division of Connor Pacific Inc. The company works in the remediation of contaminated properties. From 1982-89 he was with Acres and moved from technician up to project scientist. In the spring of '89 he left to form Arcturus. In 1996 the shares of Arcturus were purchased by Connor Pacific.

[para132] Difruscio has master's degrees in Science and Computer Science.

[para133] In 1987 he was a project scientist at Acres. He had been involved in 20 bulk plants and service station sites as well as other petroleum contaminated sites. He was part of the field team working on the subject property. His job was to do the bore holes and take samples and help in the description of contamination.

[para134] In performing his job he used a hand auger with a bucket, like a post-hole auger and would take 6 inches at a time in a three inch diameter cylinder. The geologists would look at the logs and they would all smell and take sub-samples. Dr. Panko and others were involved in the study.

[para135] Difruscio was not responsible for the scope of the work but did help with the bore hole locations. He identified the Acres drawing that was used to map the bore holes. He could not recall what Petro Canada site plan drawing was used. He does not recall the MOE being on the site when they were with Acres. Regarding the Golder Report, he had no involvement in review of it while he was at Acres.

[para136] In November 1989, Difruscio testified, he was involved in a small cleanup on the site. Operating as Arcturus, Dr. Panko was the main contact; he spoke to Petro Canada. Petro Canada was Arcturus' main client at the time and he was involved in setting up the contract and arranging the landfill details from discussion with the MOE.

[para137] His role on site was that of a technician. He took vapour readings, made auger holes, and did confirmation through the TLV meter, measuring the combustible portion of the sample. He then took vapour readings from in-situ. This instrument was not used while he was at Acres.

[para138] The decision on the soil to be taken away was made by Boehm and Markel of the MOE based on looking at the samples and establishing a cut-off of 380 ppm and their sense of smell of the soil. Based on the Golder and Acres observation, they used the TLV meter in the same areas with the MOE concurrence.

[para139] The witness explained that the Arcturus office was in his basement in November of 1989, using a telephone line forwarded from Dr. Panko's office. The Arcturus Report was finished at 5:55 p.m. that day when Dr. Panko took it to Purolator for transmittal to Petro Canada. At noon on that day he faxed a draft copy to John Thompson at the Trafalgar location of Petro Canada. He then took the photographs for professional copying and completed the tables. Following the sending of the reports he had no further dealings with the subject site.

(ii) Andrew Panko

[para140] Dr. Panko has a PhD in Geology from McMaster and M.Sc. from Waterloo in 1977 and B.Sc. in Geology from Brock in 1975. He is a Fellow of the Geological Association of Canada. He ran Arcturus from 1989 and teaches at Brock as an environmental geologist and is a trustee of Brock University. He ended association with Arcturus when it sold out to Connor Pacific in 1996. From 1977 to 1989 he was with Acres and as of 1988 was a senior geologist. Panko had worked on at least 12 bulk terminals located throughout the province.

[para141] Dr. Panko described his involvement while at Acres in 1988. He surmises that he received instructions from John Thompson at Petro Canada and then contacted the MOE. As far as he can recall, the instructions were to comply with the MOE Guidelines as they related to de-commissioning satisfactory to the MOE.

[para142] Panko could not recall specifically the drawing that he obtained from Petro Canada but stated that it was a site plan and one that did not show the former service station to the east, or he would have added bore holes to the east near that site. He had no information to suggest the presence of USTs.

[para143] Panko did speak to the operator of the Petro Canada terminal across the street and chose bore holes beneath the area where there had been aboveground tanks, pipes and loading racks.

[para144] Panko recalled receiving the Golder Report and commenting on it, but had no further involvement with the property while at Acres. He does recall the attendance of MOE personnel while they were doing their first investigation, probably Huras. He did have a conversation with someone but can't recall what happened.

[para145] Panko did recall his retainer at Arcturus from Petro Canada in October of 1989 and his contact with Boehm at MOE regarding the proposed work plan.

[para146] Panko then explained what was done on November 1st and 2nd, including taking the auger holes vapour readings and comparing the data from Golder and Acres. He noted that the work plan was changed to better delineate the immediate area based on an upper cut-off of vapour readings of 380 ppm. (Vapour readings above this level for this purpose were considered indicative of contaminated soil.)

[para147] Arcturus did test pits, listing three in the report and then excavated and hauled away the soil containing above 380 ppm vapour readings. The report did not include all the vapour readings, because a number of them got excavated out. Following soil removal, a number of confirmatory readings were done, all in the presence of the MOE.

[para148] Panko testified that the Arcturus Report was sent in draft to Thompson of Petro Canada at 11:37 a.m. on November 7 and completed with delivery to Purolator at 5:55 the same day. He has no recollection of any call from Azman. He did not know who Azman was then. About a year later, he recalled a visit from Azman at their office to get a copy of the report. He knows this because of the letter to George Fraser, legal counsel at Petro Canada, indicating the request by Azman. He would not have given a report owned by a client without the permission of the client and that's why he wrote to Fraser.

[para149] Panko did not recall any discussion with Azman from October of 1990 until this litigation in late 1995, nor did he hear of any problems regarding the property.

[para150] On the Arcturus project, Panko proceeded with the same methodology as he had on other projects. He could not recall whether he expected to find volatile organic hydrocarbons, but agreed that he would have expected some gasoline and diesel and other hydrocarbons. He agreed that he saw some free product on the site, and this was not the same soil where the readings were about 380 ppm, but both areas were removed. If he had found any other free product, he would have removed it.

[para151] In discussion with the MOE in November 1989, Panko could recall no discussion regarding the Acres Report with any suggestion that its work did not meet the guidelines. As far as he could recall the Acres work did meet the guidelines at the time.

[para152] Dr. Panko rejected the suggestion made in cross-examination that in preparation for the Arcturus assignment, he would have needed all the historical site information. He agreed that if he were doing the assignment under today's guidelines, that might be necessary, but not in 1989. He agreed that he did not consider looking for a fire insurance plan either in 1988 or 1989.

[para153] When asked whether it was sensible to check the water, he noted that it was agreed with MOE that this was not to be a groundwater study. He looked to the MOE for guidance; that is why he went to them. He believed then and now that the above ground storage tanks were the most likely contamination source. He disagreed that sheen can come as easily from gasoline as from diesel or fuel oil, but does agree that there were odours of both.

[para154] Dr. Panko could not remember specifically receiving the Golder Report, but believes he received it, and he has no reason to doubt the findings that they made regarding hydrocarbon contamination. They were doing a geo-technical overview. He did not accept that he believed at the time that Golder came to a different conclusion. He does not think that the conclusion, even today, is a big difference. They described the same thing but the words are different. After seeing the Golder Report, he did not consider a gas survey and his reason was that there were only a few incidents of faint odour and without more indication, they would not have done more work.

[para155] In response to the suggestion that Golders were critical because Acres hadn't addressed the "other criteria" (referred to in the Guidelines), Panko responded that the MOE had accepted what had been proposed in 1988. He agreed that Golder's thought there was a problem under the guidelines. He disagreed that Golder's focussed on things that might be called "toxic and dangerous". He noted that since Golder's had subjective, not objective, data in their investigation, no definitive conclusions could be drawn from it. Golder's investigation was based on a different methodology for a different purpose.

[para156] Panko was referred to his not having noted that solvents were to be specifically checked. He said, "I noted what I thought should be done. The MOE was on-site. This was not written as the definitive conclusion, and what should or could have been done."

[para157] He rejected the suggestion that his assignment was a comprehensive or detailed investigation; it was simply a history, what he felt at the time and he believes the same now, given the subjective nature of odours.

[para158] In explaining the methodology of bore holes and vapour readings, Panko stated that he was seeking to confirm the subjective findings of Acres and Golders, to verify that data. If he had sought to remove all reference to hydrocarbon odours, the work plan would have been much more intensive, moving a great many more tons of material. The lead encountered did not exceed the draft 1997 guidelines and therefore didn't have to be removed.

[para159] Chemical analysis was contemplated, but on-site it was determined that it wasn't going to be done. He could not recall who made the recommendation; simply that it was made and it wasn't done. It was suggested that it was not done because it would have delayed the report. The witness rejected this: "we could have still done it".

VIII THE ENVIRONMENTAL REGULATORY FRAMEWORK

[para160] The Environmental Protection Act R.S.O. 1990 c. E.19 provides in sections 18 and 197, among others, for the Director under the Act to make certain orders affecting land when necessary to do so to protect the environment and human health.

[para161] To assist landowners and others in respect of their obligations, the MOE has, from time to time, issued guidelines. As of 1988, when Acres performed their environmental work, the guidelines were in "draft". As of 1989, when Arcturus performed its work, the guidelines that applied were those issued in February 1989. There appears to be no material difference between the draft and the 1989 guidelines, which provide in part as follows:

"Section 2. Definition the terms "decommission" and "decommissioning" are used to mean the mothballing, partial closure or complete closure of the facilities. The term "clean-up" means the restoration of a contaminated site to ensure the protection of human health and the environment. The decommissioning of facilities may or may not be associated with site clean-up.

Section 3. Purpose. The purpose of these Guidelines is to ensure that the decommissioning and clean-up of sites is completed in an environmentally acceptable manner and to ensure that the decommissioning and clean-up of sites in Ontario proceeds in as efficient, fair and consistent a manner as possible.

Section 6. Environmental Components of a Decommissioning or Site Clean-up Program Decommissioning and site clean-up can comprise four separate phases:

Phase I Planning the Decommissioning/Site Clean-up Phase II Designing and Implementing the Decommissioning/Site Clean-up Phase III Verifying Completion of a Satisfactory Decommissioning/Site Clean-up Phase IV Signing off.

Section 7.5 Level of Clean-up. In principle, remedial action will be required whenever contaminants are present at concentrations above ambient background levels. The development of clean-up criteria above background levels, however, may be undertaken by the proponent in accordance with the factors outlined in Section 7.5.2 and the land-use considerations described in Section 7.5.3."

[para162] Section 7.5.1 references Appendix A of the Guidelines, and provides for the upper limits of normal concentration in soils for a range of materials. Relevant to this case is Table A-2, which provides an upper limit of oil in the soil of 1% for fresh oil or 2% for weathered oil (a minimum of 2 years' exposure on the site). Table A-1 refers to the upper limits of normal concentrations of various minerals in surface soil, where the figure for lead is 500 in an urban setting.

[para163] Of particular relevance to the claims in this case are Sections 7.5.2, Development of Clean-up Criteria Above Background Levels:

"Clean-up criteria above background may be developed provided that the criteria are protective of human health and the environment. There are three general approaches that may be taken to developing clean-up criteria above background levels:

1) application of relevant MOE policies and guidelines; 2) application of clean-up criteria developed in other jurisdictions, where appropriate; and 3) development and application of site specific clean-up criteria.

Where a wide range of contaminants are present on-site, it may be acceptable to develop clean-up criteria above background levels based on indicator contaminants that represent the range of contaminants at the site. Selection of indicator contaminants must be done in consultation with MOE."

[para164] Section 7.5.2.1 provided under the heading "MOE Contaminant Policies, Guidelines and Requirements", that clean-up guidelines for additional contaminants, particularly organics, will be included in Appendix A as they are developed or adopted for use in Ontario.

[para165] Section 7.5.2.2 provided under the heading "Clean-up Criteria Developed in other Jurisdictions" that:

"Where MOE contaminant criteria guidelines for the contaminants of concern are not available to assist in clean-up criteria development, it may be possible to apply clean-up criteria developed in other jurisdictions. In order to apply clean-up criteria developed in other jurisdictions at a site in Ontario, the following factors should be taken into consideration:

1. The methods used to develop the criteria must be acceptable to MOE; 2. the proposed application of the criteria must be consistent with the application intended when the criteria were developed; 3. the criteria should be consistent with MOE's overall objective of establishing stringent criteria that are fully protective of human health and the environment."

(The criteria were to be developed and applied in consultation with the MOE.)

[para166] Section 7.5.2.3, under the heading "Site Specific Clean-Up Criteria", provided for MOE review of each stage of work of site-specific clean-up. Section 7.5.3 under the heading, "Proposed Future Land-use" provided for more stringent clean-up dependent upon the proposed future land-use of the site.

[para167] As described by one of the expert witnesses, the Guidelines up to and including 1989 contemplated the active involvement, and indeed approval of, the MOE with respect to the clean-up proposals. The question on these facts, is what is the requirement of Petro-Canada in respect of the Guidelines applicable at the time of its sale to the Plaintiff.

[para168] The 1998 Guidelines applicable at the time of trial are relevant to the Plaintiffs' claim for damages for the clean-up that is yet to occur. The two major differences between the 1989 Guidelines and the September 1998 Guidelines are the importance of objective criteria for clean-up and the onus put on the landowner or a proponent for compliance.

[para169] As noted in the 1998 Guidelines:

"This guideline provides advice and information to property owners and consultants to use when assessing the environmental condition of a property, when determining whether or not restoration is required, and in determining the kind of restoration needed to allow continued use or reuse of the site. The Ministry has provided the guideline, along with the supporting documentation, to assist landowners in making decisions on soil and/or groundwater quality for proposed or existing property uses."

[para170] The 1998 Guidelines describe three approaches for responding to site contamination. These approaches are background, generic and site-specific risk assessment. Relevant to this action is the generic approach which "involves use of soil and groundwater quality criteria which have been developed to provide protection against the potential of adverse effects to human health, ecological health and the natural environment. The criteria may be applied to agricultural, residential/parkland and industrial/commercial land-uses. Criteria are also provided for potable and non-potable groundwater use"

"Groundwater criteria are provided for an extensive list of parameters. Analysis for all the criteria may not be necessary in all instances. Likewise, soil and groundwater analysis may sometimes be required for parameters not listed in the guideline. The decisions involved in site investigations and parameters for sample analysis are always based on consideration of the specific factors at each property."

"The generic soil and groundwater criteria may be modified to reflect particular site conditions. This is done through modification of relevant variables in the models and process used to develop the generic criteria. If appropriate, criteria from another jurisdiction may be proposed for use, or new generic criteria may be developed if criteria are not provided for a particular contaminant."

[para171] I accept the evidence of one of the experts, Mr. Phimister, who described the generic approach as provided for in the 1998 Guidelines in more detail. As he advised, there are a number of complex parameters which are used to provide specific criteria for soil restoration. These specifics replace the generality of the 1988 Guidelines. He explained that Table 6C, which includes odour as one of the variables, incorporates that as an element with a number of other variables in the determination of the extent to which remediation may be required in any particular instance.

[para172] Schedule A under the 1998 Guidelines contemplates the use of a Record of Site Condition, which is essentially a certificate to be completed by a consultant for an owner attesting to the remediation meeting the guidelines' requirements. The affidavit of the consultant is to be accompanied by a statement of the site owner.

[para173] As Mr. Phimister noted, the change in the regulatory regime changed from an active involvement of the MOE under the 1988 Guidelines to a more significant onus being put on the consultants and owners under the 1998 Guidelines for determining compliance. Indeed, under the current Guidelines there is a role for the municipality, which will be described in more detail below.

IX THE ENVIRONMENTAL EXPERTS FOR THE PLAINTIFF

[para174] The site in question was subject to three environmental reviews prior to closing of the sale transaction and at least three following. Each of the experts attempted to predict the extent to which the site was or was not contaminated within the context of the environmental guidelines, using a variety of testing techniques. It is instructive to review each of the experts for the purpose, timing and conclusion of their reports.

[para175] The Plaintiffs called four environmental experts, three of those being witness of fact. Each of the three was called to identify a report prepared at the relevant time for clients who were prospective purchasers of the property. The liability and damage experts of each of the parties to this action relied on the results from the testing undertaken by the prior consultants. In their testimony, they elaborated on the evidence contained in their reports which were filed. A summary of those findings is necessary to put into context the opinion evidence of the parties' experts.

(i) Philip Bedel

[para176] Philip Bedel is a professional engineer with Golder Associates, a firm of geo-technical consultants. His firm completed a report for Z Realty in the fall of 1988. His client was a prospective purchaser of the site from Petro Canada. The report was sent not to Petro Canada, but to the MOE, which ultimately resulted in the MOE letter of October 1989, giving rise to the work undertaken by Arcturus.

[para177] Golder Associates were critical of the Acres Report, finding "the [Acres Report] is correct that hydrocarbons are one of the most likely contaminants to be found at his site; however, important errors have, in our opinion, been made in the assessment of them." He concluded that the MOE Guidelines had not been followed, since oil and grease was the only parameter considered and a collection of indicator contaminants should have been undertaken. The Report went on to detail analysis from some 26 bore holes from shallow soil samples.

[para178] The Report concluded "based on the Acres International Limited report and Golder Associates Geo-Technical investigation, there appears to be a large area where the surficial soils are heavily contaminated with volatile hydrocarbons including gasoline and solvents . and should in our opinion, be removed to prevent the hazardous build-up of combustible vapours in any structure built on the site. Run-off and groundwater flow from this site are no doubt contaminated as well."

[para179] In cross-examination Bedel conceded that while his firm's report indicated a problem, this was not a Phase I study under the Guidelines. He would need more information before he could reach a conclusion of any real risk of an explosive nature. He stated that there was a potential if there was a building put over the contaminated area, but agreed that further work of evacuation may determine whether or not it's a real problem; how much and far depends on what the use of the property is intended to be.

(ii) Edgar Taves

[para180] Mr. Taves was with Trow Dames and Moore ("TDM") in 1990 as an environmental consultant. He identified the report his firm prepared for Southside Construction. Taves had been with TDM for a year and a half and in that time was retained by Southside who were considering purchasing the subject property. He was to take a look at the environmental conditions on site and to consider their potential for re-development. He explained that his scope of retainer was relatively limited and they did two test pits on site and two shallow soil samples outside the fence. This was typical of an investigation where he was acting for confirmation on behalf of the purchaser.

[para181] He identified various invoices approximating $4000; the work done was not exhaustive. Taves' job was to make an evaluation to determine field truth from what he had on site; he had as background the Acres Report and based on that he formulated a field program. The Acres Report gave mixed information. It implied that the property was ok, not exceeding MOE guidelines, but as he said, "we noted concerns about what had been done." In particular, as noted on page 2 of the Acres Report, a concern regarding gasoline which had not been studied. Taves noted that you only find what you look for, and since Acres did not check for it, therefore they did not find it.

[para182] Taves used two-test pits, recognized there are two testing methods, one using a shovel and auger, the second using a back hoe, and this would be 10-12 feet in length. As he described, "you smell the sample and you see the test pit. The third method, which wasn't used, is to drill and go as far as you can." This is more expensive. This was not used since they felt the contamination would be within the reach of a back hoe and that would be the best use of a limited budget.

[para183] The work was done on January 24, 1990 and based on the client's requirements and budget he did not do the full background of Phase I, but went to Phase II under the Guidelines. TDM included samples 1 and 2 outside the fence to see if there was an area of concern, particularly with a water sample of the storm water drainage. TDM had in addition the letter of the Acres tests, indicating that there was some concern regarding lead but not sufficient to make the hazardous level. Taves stated that the Acres oil and grease analysis would not identify gasoline, while he focused on the BTEX organic compounds and targeted those because Acres had identified oil and grease concentration. Taves confirmed that the MOE Guideline was 2% regarding oil and grease but stated that the presence of benzene drives the investigation when you're looking for organic compounds. Odour may or may not be significant but one is indirectly testing for it, although here TDM did not get into any level of detail. They did not do soil gas measurements.

[para184] Section 3.3 of the TDM report indicated that a vapour barrier may be necessary if there were to be sub-grade construction or replacement of fill. Section 3.2.1 noted there was no guidance exceedence for inorganic matters. Section 3.2.2 dealt with organic parameters, and the analysis he concluded is a classic indication of gasoline impact. TDM simply did not carry out the interpretation any further. The TDM Conclusion (4.0) with respect to chemical analysis was that it "indicates the soil quality is appropriate for either residential or commercial re-development."

[para185] Taves initiated contact with Boehm asking him to comment on soil gases. Taves agreed that the MOE only knows what it's been told. Taves was looking to see whether there was any knowledge on the MOE's part regarding neighbouring property.

[para186] Boehm's response of May 14, 1990 says in part, "Based upon the analyses provided in your report, it appears that the remedial measures previously taken at this site are adequate. Measured levels of contaminants fall below our decommissioning guidelines." Taves regards this as standard, namely "you meet the numbers but you may have to deal with the odour issue, it depends what's being done on site." He confirmed that other jurisdictions had dealt with odour in their own ways, some with no specific guidelines. Taves added, "If you had a contaminant for which there was no guideline, you could suggest one and the MOE might be prepared to accept it as per something like the Quebec guidelines".

[para187] With respect to cost of clean-up, based on the assumption other guidelines applied, TDM concluded that the site was contaminated for commercial use and Taves did a rough calculation of clean-up based on removing 1 meter over the whole site. He came up with a cost of $418,000.00 as of 1990, and this did not include the implications of groundwater and perched water. His estimate was subject to a 20% contingency cost.

[para188] According to Taves, the concern under the MOE guidelines relates to Section 7.5.4 which says, "Asbestos parameters such as odour must be addressed regardless of the odour."

[para189] In cross-examination Taves admitted that he has now joined Conastoga, Rovers & Associates ("CRA"), which firm has been employed by the Plaintiffs for expert assistance in this action. He confirmed that the TDM report was prepared to the best of his ability reflecting opinions honestly held. He agreed that if the use of the property was going to be as a parking lot, there would be no problem, but if you have to build on it, particularly if you install a basement, you may have some problems. Taves confirmed that he was doing a preliminary site assessment and this was not unusual work, nor was the conclusion, that the constraints on redevelopment would be due to past storage activities.

[para190] Taves agreed that the Acres Report did not indicate that there was anything hazardous. He agreed if one eliminated the two test sites outside the fence, TDM's conclusion would be exactly the same as Acres. The witness confirmed he has no dispute with the MOE findings and conclusions and if he had had a dispute, he would have raised it with the MOE. When he completed the TDM report he did not know that there had been 157 tons of soil taken out because he had not been provided with a copy of the Arcturus Report.

[para191] Taves also agreed in cross-examination that as a consultant and given a new project, he would discuss with a client to find out what the client is trying to achieve, and how he can get there, depending upon what the client wants and how much the client is prepared to spend. This is called the Scope of Work. What was done here wasn't a Phase I or Phase II report under the MOE Guidelines but rather a "Limited Phase II".

[para192] Taves agreed that the importance of petroleum contaminants depends on the intended land use and the degree of contamination. He stated that for a former bulk plant he would expect to see some contamination and some smell. The real determination is whether or not the owner can do what it wants to do. A land for a parking lot may be different from land for houses. Therefore you have to know the purpose and extent of the regulatory endpoints. He commented on the difference between composite and discrete samples. Often, composite samples are done with a screw-type auger. He has less concern if a consultant uses a bucket-type auger. He believed that Acres didn't consistently go down to native soil, but made no criticism of this in his 1990 report. While critical of the Acres methodology, Taves could not point to an error in their results.

[para193] In taking his samples, Taves relied on the Acres work. He was questioned about encountering tile and stated that this could mean a number of things. He agreed that smell is a personal matter and unreliable as an absolute indicator but is a relative one. He agreed that both he and Acres found a sheen, and both tested for lead.

[para194] Regarding the BTEX testing done by TDM, he found that there were some hydrocarbons pointing towards gasoline and stated that is in effect the conclusion of the Acres Report. He agreed that at the time the MOE did not have any generic numbers in the Guidelines. He looked to the "MENVIQ" Quebec criteria. These numeric criteria will depend on the use to which the contaminated property will be put. He agreed that even comparing what was found on this site to Quebec criteria gave no real cause for concern. He agreed that the MOE could apply those guidelines if they wanted to, it was up to the MOE. He stated that if in 1990 Southside had a footprint for a proposed building he could have delineated more precisely the area to be remediated, either negatively or positively, and therefore not have remediated the whole site.

(iii) Gerald Ducharme

[para195] Ducharme was retained in August of 1993, when he was with Trow Consultants, to investigate the property as it related to hydrocarbons, to assist Tim Horton in its purchase evaluation, the intended use being commercial. He reviewed the historical documents at the University of Western Ontario (the "Insurance Maps") did a partial title search, reviewed aerial photographs, insurance plans, plus the Arcturus, Golder and Acres Reports.

[para196] The aerial photographs he reviewed show removal of tanks and this was to him an environmental concern. The fire insurance plans, he stated, had become available at the University of Western Ontario in about 1988 or 1989. This allowed a consultant to confirm whether or not tanks had been installed.

[para197] Samples were taken for lab testing but not done because the verbal findings of environmental contamination given to Tim Hortons resulted in a decision not to purchase.

(iv) Anthony Crutcher

[para198] The principal environmental consultant retained for the Plaintiffs to deal with issues of liability and damages was Anthony Crutcher. He is a civil engineer who graduated from the University of Waterloo in 1976 with Bachelor's degree and obtained a Masters degree in Science in 1977. He has been a principal of CRA since 1982. CRA started with 13 and now has 1000 people employed, mainly in North America. Crutcher has worked on 800 projects, 40-50 of those directly associated with hydrocarbon issues. He has testified on a number of occasions.

[para199] Following cross-examination on his qualifications, it was ruled that Anthony Crutcher is qualified to testify as an expert given his general qualifications. His limited expertise in the field of petroleum bulk assessments or remediation is a matter going to the weight of his evidence.

[para200] Crutcher reviewed all of the previous investigation and testing reports. He re-plotted on one drawing what he proffered as the known data on the site from 1988 to January 17, 2000.

[para201] Crutcher's conclusions were based on what he believed were one instance of petroleum hydrocarbons observed in the soil, approximately 6 instances of petroleum hydrocarbons observed on groundwater, approximately 28 instances of petroleum hydrocarbon odours documented in the soil and approximately 13 observations of hydrocarbon iridescence (sheen) observed on groundwater and 1 instance of a lead finding.

[para202] Based on his review, Crutcher reached the following conclusions in his report.

"The work conducted on Site by Acres and Arcturus prior to the sale of the Site identified field evidence of petroleum hydrocarbon impacted soil and groundwater, occurring over the majority of the area of the Site. This field evidence of impact was not investigated in accordance with the 1989 clean-up guidelines (MOE). "The field investigation and analytical methodologies utilised to investigate environmental conditions on Site, prior to the sale of the Site, were not appropriate to identify either the extent of soil and groundwater impact, or the chemical nature of the impact;"

[para203] The basis of Crutcher's conclusion of the work done by Acres is that Acres did not look for or report on volatile hydrocarbons. In Mr. Crutcher's view, the MOE Guidelines of 1988 and 1989 mandated a consultant in the presence of odour, to look to criteria developed in other jurisdictions to provide the basis for further investigation and determination of the extent of contamination. In his view, had this been done, as was later confirmed by Golder's, among others, it would have revealed exceedence of guidelines with respect to both hydrocarbons and lead.

[para204] Crutcher was also critical of the work undertaken by Arcturus in November of 1989, since in his view, the firm should have undertaken a complete survey for volatile hydrocarbons, including BTEX sampling as TDM and Trow had done later. In his view, at the time of the Arcturus Report, the site was contaminated with motor fuel and remediation work was required to obtain soil standards consistent with commercial land use.

[para205] Mr. Crutcher relied, among other things, on the statement of evidence that was filed from Walter Royal, a former site superintendent with Gulf Canada, of the subject premises. Mr. Royal recalled that there were two small underground tanks on the site for secondary usage, in the south-central portion of the fenced area, but no spills on the property from the underground tanks were recalled.

[para206] Crutcher included in his estimate of the area to be remediated the London Marine site, on the basis that that company may have a claim against the Plaintiffs or a defence to non-payment of its mortgage, based on contamination.

[para207] Crutcher made a visit to the site on January 17, 2000 during the course of the trial in an effort to determine the maximum extent of fill that might be required in the area of the underground storage tanks. In his view, soil extraction of some depth from the entirety of the site was the most reasonable means of remediation, as other methods would have a greater cost.

[para208] In reaching his conclusion that none of the investigations by Acres or Arcturus was in accordance with the 1989 MOE Guidelines, Crutcher was of the opinion that one could not rely on the MOE letter of November 15, 1989, because in his view it depends for its validity on the level of the person making it. One has to make some judgment as to the weight to be attached to the report. In his view, knowing that the Guidelines regarding oil and grease in hydrocarbons at the time did not deal with volatile BTEXs, one could not place any reliance on the MOE letter. In addition, because he knew who the individuals are and their limited qualifications and education, this adds to the limitation of the weight of the MOE opinion.

[para209] Under cross-examination, Crutcher conceded that his investigation on January 17, 2000 did not reveal a UST and if there had been one, he would likely have found it. Crutcher also conceded that none of the data collected would necessarily point to leaks from USTs, and his conclusion about hydrocarbon contamination comes more likely from operations than from USTs.

[para210] Crutcher was asked about his understanding of the nature of the Acres work and report, and agreed that it would identify to the Plaintiffs, if it were read, certain information regarding the site. He agreed that Acres did not do a clean-up and one does not have to be familiar with the Guidelines to know that they did not do this. It can, however, be confirmed by reading the report and the Guidelines.

[para211] Crutcher also conceded that as a consultant, the determination of the development of clean-up criteria in 1988 would be done in consultation with the MOE and he does not know what was done here. One important ingredient is the proposed land-use and he agreed that there would be different levels of clean-up depending on use. This would be done in consultation with the MOE. After hesitation, he agreed that there was information that showed continuing contamination as of November 1989, contained in the Acres Report, the Arcturus Report and the Golder Report.

[para212] Crutcher was again referred to the limited scope of the Arcturus work, namely to mitigate gasoline odours in the soil, rather than conducting an overall environmental mitigation of the site. He reiterated his interpretation of the 1989 MOE Guidelines, which he felt obligated Arcturus to mitigate all of the hydrocarbons onsite by removing sufficient soil to remove all odours.

[para213] It was Crutcher's view that this obligation remained notwithstanding the reports of Acres and Arcturus. He agreed the MOE letter would notify the Plaintiffs that there were hydrocarbons on the soil and potentially in the groundwater.

[para214] After an intensive review of all of the testing on-site, including his own, the witness conceded that there were some errors in the items on his figure and a difference of opinion between experts. He ended up agreeing that his effort was a worse-case scenario, because he assumed that aesthetic considerations, namely odour removal, would apply to the entire site. He then added an additional half-meter of soil removal and an additional 20% to his calculations to ensure completion.

[para215] Crutcher agreed that by 1993 and indeed by 1998 the Guidelines for Testing had become more sophisticated and detailed and indeed more sophisticated testing methods are in use in recent times than in 1988 and 1989. He also agreed that a full chemical analysis would be better than smell, and that there might be odour and vapour readings with no chemical detection of BTEXs.

X ENVIRONMENTAL EXPERTS FOR THE DEFENSE

(i) Roger Michael Woeller

[para216] Petro Canada's expert Mr. Woeller is with Water & Earth Science Associates. He has his B.Sc. in Geology and M.Sc. in Hydro-geology. His firm are environmental consultants dealing with water, soil and air. The witness has been involved in environmental assessment of 5 or 6 bulk petroleum sites, a number of service station sites (50 or 60) and several large industrial sites that have some hydrocarbon problems such as Uplands Airport in Ottawa, and Cambridge Bay in the NWT. The witness was accepted as an expert witness in the field of environmental assessment and remediation.

[para217] In his report Mr. Woeller was asked and responded to four questions:

[para218] Question One: Was it common in 1989 to undertake an environmental assessment? His answer is Yes. Woeller noted that purchasers and operators undertook assessments based on their needs and would often hire an independent reviewer to identify problems. This was often done for de-commissioning or for sale. In his view, some of the more precise measurements didn't come into play until the early '90s, although the tools were there before.

[para219] Question Two: At the time of closing, was there information sufficient to disclose environmental problems to a purchaser? His answer is Yes. He agrees with Golder No. 1 report (and as at page 38 (iii) of his report), that the work done by Acres and Arcturus identified contamination, certainly within the fenced area, and that the historical use of the site caused hydrocarbon contamination. There was nothing in the evidence he reviewed to suggest leaks from a UST. Woeller's report stated "If the purchaser expected the condition of the property at the time of the purchase to conform to background contamination concentrations (i.e., little or no contamination is present), it is our opinion that there was sufficient information to alert him to the condition of the property".

[para220] Mr. Woeller described environmental disclosure in 1988 in the following context. "Regarding legislation in 1985-87, we were walking in a vacuum. A proponent would propose and the MOE would consider it and might give a letter. In 1987 draft guidelines for de-commissioning and cleanup, as well as the Gasoline Handling Act, came more into play. The draft guidelines really dealt with process and to a crude extent, levels." By 1992, he went on to say, the focus was at fuel dispensing and bulk sites like gasoline stations, and by January 1996 there were explicit instructions about what up to then had been merely draft. This was the first fundamental feature for accurately dealing with levels.

[para221] Question Three: Did the information contained in the MOE letter of November 15th alert a purchaser to environmental concerns? Answering as a consultant, he said Yes. Indeed, the final distribution of contamination as seen in the CRA report is not in his view substantially different from what was identified in the previous reports. There were some larger areas to the southeast near the London Marine operation in what is indicated to have been a previous UST. From his review, he didn't find anything to indicate leakage from a UST or the presence of a UST: there were no concrete anchors or other evidence. He did not find any evidence of USTs within the fenced area near where the aboveground tanks were.

[para222] Question Four: Is the remedial program of the Plaintiffs reasonable? Woeller's answer is that it is not just reasonable, it is high. The criteria adopted are more than necessary or required for commercial or industrial end-use. It is removal without any detection of a problem.

[para223] Woeller stated that in 1988 and '89 it was difficult to get details of the measurement of containment of soils. The Golder No. 2 Report and the CRA Report took advantage of better techniques but should have presented particulars of other techniques.

[para224] The choice of depth for soil removal by CRA used in his view all the negative criteria and none of the positive. The guidelines are risk-based, which are intended to be averaged. Acres did a composite sample that was accurate for the time. In Woeller's view remediation is an incremental effort and one does not do anything more than necessary.

[para225] In cross-examination Woeller was referred to National guidelines that were promulgated by a petroleum industry task force known as PACE. He stated that as of 1989 PACE was not used uniformly as a guideline.

[para226] In Ontario at that time, while there were tests to use for volatile hydrocarbon contamination, due to the subjective nature of things like odours, the protocols varied. Hence individual site conditions were determined in consultation with the MOE based on the use to be made of the land. This was to be the case even though elements such as benzene are carcinogenic.

[para227] Woeller conceded that sheen is a good indicator of the presence of hydrocarbons but not necessarily of product. In his view one can have sheen and still meet the 1% 1989 criteria. He agreed that the Acres methodology did not address volatiles because they did not use testing methods to do so; they were using a different protocol. Woeller agreed in cross-examination that for investigation for delineation of volatiles, one must bear in mind all samples and continue to reappraise.

[para228] He was asked, if he had a project to clean up volatiles and got some studies regarding hydrocarbons, whether he simply would accept these when they indicated spots, or look at the issue from first principal. Woeller responded that he would consider the source's reputation of the findings. He would want to expand on what was being done, and verify the author's work. When asked if Acres hadn't looked for volatiles and Golder did only a geotechnical work, would he consider volatiles? He answered Yes.

[para229] It was suggested that under the PACE guidelines there were a variety of testing that could and should have been undertaken. Woeller responded by saying that he agrees with incremental remediation. That is, if there are strong odours the product may have migrated in the soil, it may not be contained where the odour is found. It may be an indication of a larger problem. The end is, in his view, not to remove the odour; it is simply a screening tool. Odour doesn't require action unless you have contamination.

[para230] He stated that the clean up suggested by CRA, in his view, is at the residential standard and now for hydrocarbons there are numerical values but in 1989, while health and aesthetics were important, the industry wasn't adept at quantifying. He does not believe that there is enough evidence of volatiles upon this site to warrant doing anything more than he suggests.

[para231] The anomaly on this site in his view is that there is a low volatile contamination level based on the screening and the vaporization studies by Arcturus, even in the "bad area". Therefore he concluded that there is not a lot of gasoline on this site.

Odour is only one indication, and with the vapour levels, it does not confirm a big problem. He stated that there might be an aesthetic problem, but nothing at an explosive level and nothing that would justify taking large amounts of soil from this site. Woeller agreed that sheen can represent free product, but based on the observations here, he would not conclude that this is in fact the case, given the vapour readings and the results.

[para232] He did not agree that the Trow observations of sheen can be taken as evidence of free product. When asked if he would sign off on this site, given the field notes and the Trow conclusions, the witness answered that he is satisfied that his proposal is a first estimate for a purchaser. It would be a starting point to bring the property into compliance and subject to information uncovered during the assignment, you would do more or less, and that's why he allowed a 20% contingency to deal with additional soil removal if necessary in his calculation of cost.

[para233] When asked what he would have done in 1989 with all of the data presently available except detailed BTEX readings now available, the witness responded, "My nature is to be conservative. I think everything would have met the MOE guidelines and there would not appear to be many volatiles. I would likely have done something more than Arcturus did, but I cannot say how much more".

(ii) Jim Phimister

[para234] Mr. Phimister was the expert called by Arcturus. He is a hydro-geologist who works extensively in retail petroleum sites, including gas stations, bulk plants, terminals and industrial plants with petroleum products. He has dealt with some 2500 leaks or spills since 1984 and about 2000 before that. He was tendered and accepted as an environmental expert in the practice, customs and site assessment of remediation and in the selection of methods and costing of remediation and the determination of the age and extent of hydrocarbons.

[para235] In completion of his report, he relied on written documents only for his opinion. In his view it is difficult to answer when contamination took place. He looked at a variety of circumstances. Knowing that BTEX becomes less over time, analysis works best when the samples are at depth. Therefore the evidence in his view would appear to be consistent with a surface spill, rather than a tank leak.

[para236] He was asked the question: Did Arcturus complete a scope of work in 1989 to an appropriate standard? In answering the question, he reviewed the correspondence with the MOE to understand the process.

[para237] The MOE laid out what they wanted and Arcturus recommended a work program, which the MOE observed and signed off. In his opinion, if the MOE wanted more, they would have asked. He had worked with both Boehm and Markel of the MOE in 1989 and the process of Arcturus was consistent with his practice with the MOE in 1989, and if anything is better documented.

[para238] Phimister suggested the standard of practice observed by Arcturus as can be seen in the following sequence:

Q. Was it reasonable to use a TLV meter?

A. We were using TLV in almost an identical process. In 1989 Arcturus was a head-on competitor.

Q. Would you expect an historical review, including interviews, for Arcturus' work?

A. Given the interview with the MOE, I think they had sufficient information and I would not expect them to start again. I would not expect them to consult insurance maps at that time, as they had no commercial use. I'd seen them with insurance companies, but did not routinely use them at that time.

[para239] Regarding the work plan change, the test pits chosen and removal of soil that was determined, the following exchange occurred:

Q. Was it unusual for the MOE to change the work plan?

A. The cleanup is an iterative process. You must change to reflect what is found in the ground. The MOE can direct and change what is necessary to know what should be done.

[para240] Regarding the vapour cut-off reading of 380 ppm, Phimister observed that it is a low criteria for '89. He stated we would have worked with 500 and now 5000 ppm (i.e., a lower reading is more environmentally protective).

[para241] Regarding hydrocarbon odour, he noted these are aromatic, which humans detect at low levels. For example, 50% of people can detect .1% in the air of xylene, and therefore if you smell it, you will dig down. If the hydrocarbon smell is released to the air, it will evaporate and not be there unless there's more beneath the surface.

[para242] Phimister put into context the current 1997 guidelines. He stated that the generic approach has produced a health-based number for 117 chemicals, and has specifically derived criteria numbers. Odours are taken into account and built into the tables. Prior to this, there was no scientifically-supportable number, and therefore the BTEX numbers in 1997 reflect, among other things, odours. They are incorporated as part of the rationale and one can therefore co-relate vapour and odour levels (e.g., 5.3 ppm benzene). Therefore you currently have 500 ppm vapour level using the MOE methodology. Each component has its own number and it comes out at around 5000 ppm if you take a soil sample. If you just use odour it may be 10,000 ppm; that is, more than smell can be present and still meet the guidelines.

[para243] Phimister testified that there will always be odour associated with petroleum sites when you dig down, unless all soil is removed. For a combustion, you need 13,000 ppm at lower concentration levels. There are lots of sites that have some odour in which the buildings and the site will meet the guidelines. The criteria that are set up are protective of vapour getting into buildings.

[para244] Phimister was asked specifically about 1989 actions in the following question-and-answer:

Q. Did Arcturus have an obligation to ensure that the site met the guidelines.

A. I think they did undertake that on a site-specific basis. There were no particular criteria at that time; they did the normal thing and satisfied the Ministry on a basis of "are you satisfied?". The guideline was based on site-specific criteria. In 1989 no one was cleaning to remove odour; it was being addressed but we didn't chase odours down.

[para245] Regarding the cost of remediation, he stated that there are three methods (1) dig-and-dump; (2) bio-remediation; and (3) thermal oxidation (latter not applicable for this site).

[para246] For bio-remediation, one removes the soil, as in a dig-and-dump, but puts into piles and lets microbes eat the hydrocarbons and then puts the soil back. The time depends on the soil, the ambient temperature and the type of contamination. This can be accomplished in four warm months within a year.

[para247] When asked "can the site be used during bio-remediation?" Phimister responded, "Yes. The holes for building can be accommodated."

[para248] Phimister outlined on a diagram the areas of BTEX exceedance in excess of 1997 guidelines and the areas of exceedance of TPH per the 1997 guidelines. Those areas were the factors that drove his extraction estimate. Using a factor of 2 cubic meters of soil equalling two tons, his cost estimate is a fixed-price basis, at $88,920 and he believes that the soil will be remediated as to the guidelines, but there may be some odour.

[para249] This is to be compared to the $50 a ton if one uses a dig-and-dump method. Exhibit 85 shows typical cost from the MOE which indicates an average cost of $67 a ton.

[para250] Phimister would recommend the bio-remediation method here rather than dig-and-dump, because the soils are shallow and the amount to be aerated is good. He has used this method in Southwestern Ontario and at an Imperial Oil site across the street.

[para251] Phimister believes that the Plaintiffs' estimate is too high, because he believes you can do it for a great deal less. His usual experience is to only dig on part of the site, except where it is clear that the entire site is contaminated.

[para252] When using bio-remediation, he separates the clean soil from the dirty and, depending on a number of factors, it can be analyzed to distinguish those factors and move more or less. He urged that one can use a combination of bio-remediation and dig-and-dump for various parts, depending on the finding and cost. In Phimister's view the areas requiring remediation are confined to four discrete areas representing less than 25% of the entire site.

[para253] Mr. Phimister was asked in cross-examination whether given his opinion on the relatively small area to be remediated, he would sign a Record of Site Condition as provided for under 1998 Guidelines. The witness stated he would not complete a Record of Site Condition since it is not obligatory. He explained that site-specific records are not often used because this will pass the obligation to the municipality. In essence, what is involved is an affidavit from a consultant, who says that certain procedures have been followed. The MOE takes this to mean the full following of the guidelines, and therefore one cannot rely on work having been done previously before these specific guidelines. For example, to meet today's record of site condition requirements under the present guidelines, one would have to go and do the work over that had been done by Acres, Arcturus, Golder and others.

[para254] Phimister rejected the suggestion that more samples are necessary; he believes there are enough and that remediation by assessment is appropriate. The only reason that he would remove any soil is based on the chemical analysis done since 1993.

XI THE REBUTTAL WITNESSES

(i) Gerald Ducharme

[para255] In reply the witness was proffered as qualified to give expert evidence regarding investigation of contaminated sites and geo-technical evidence in three areas: (1) what did he observe when he visited the site in 1993? (2) how hydrocarbon spills behave in the soil; (3) how hydrocarbon vapour readings vary depending on methodology.

[para256] Objection was taken to his evidence on the basis that he was called as a fact expert in the Plaintiffs' case in chief and his report was accepted in terms of fact and now is sought to be bolstered by expert evidence. Notwithstanding that Ducharme did not advise the Court when he testified previously that he is now employed by the plaintiff's expert consultants CRA, his reply report was accepted on the basis that he may testify regarding the elaboration of factual issues raised in his report, limited however to new matters arising from the defence evidence.

[para257] The thrust of Ducharme's evidence was to rebut that of the defence experts. He purported to do so taking the position that as an engineer with a geo-technical background, he has a better understanding of hydrogeology than does a hydro-geologist.

[para258] In summary, it was his view that the appearance of sheen and free product referred to in his report would result from saturation of the soil mixing into the groundwater. This would occur only when the groundwater would not permit the dissolving of additional product in it.

[para259] In cross-examination Ducharme conceded that while his original Trow report did not say so, he equates sheen to mean free product, but that doesn't say anything about quantity.

[para260] I am of the view that the reply evidence of Ducharme adds little if anything to the debate about the extent of remediation required to meet today's guidelines.

[para261] While no doubt at some level fully saturated soil can result in product mixing with the groundwater, there is no credible evidence before me of this condition anywhere on the site. As the witness himself acknowledged, soils can mix with hydrocarbons and cause sheen in a situation far short of saturation.

(ii) Anthony Crutcher

[para262] Mr. Crutcher was recalled to testify to his reply report Exhibit L. He explained that when he did his original report he assumed that Petro Canada's expert Woeller was recommending removing soil from the entire site, not just from limited areas. His reply dealt with findings of contamination in areas other than those from which Woeller would remove soil.

[para263] Much of his evidence in reply repeated his previous testimony. Based on his concern that to meet the 1989 guidelines one had to eliminate odour and the lack of full chemical analysis of the site it all has to be cleaned.

[para264] Under cross-examination Crutcher again conceded that a number of areas on the site tested do not exceed the guidelines. In his view, however, some $25,000 to $35,000 of future chemical testing would be required to be definitive but he reiterated his previous view that there is sufficient information to justify the expenditure of his estimate of $1,500,000 to meet the 1989 Guidelines. This is in spite of the existence that of 16 soil readings from various consultants only two do not meet current guidelines.

XII ANALYSIS & LAW

(i) The Arcturus Report

[para265] One major area of factual dispute between the parties concerns whether or not the Plaintiffs had in their possession and relied on a copy of the Arcturus Report prior to closing the purchase from Petro-Canada. Any analysis of evidence in this case must take into account that the events took place in 1988 and 1989 and that it was not until 1995, some six or seven years later, that many of the defence witnesses had notice that their memory of prior events would be tested.

[para266] I conclude on the evidence before me that Azman did not have in hand or rely on a copy of the Arcturus Report prior to closing. Mr. Azman has convinced himself over the years between the closing and the commencement of this action, that his phone call with Dr. Panko on November 7, 1989 must have included a review of the report that Panko was just completing for Petro-Canada.

[para267] There are several reasons that make it most unlikely that what Azman saw was the Arcturus Report. Rather, what he had and presumably did review was the previous Acres Report.

(1) The objective evidence of the Purolator slip, together with the evidence of Dr. Panko and Mr. Difruscio, make it clear that the report was not completed and sent until after the phone call in question.

(2) The fact that neither Dr. Panko nor Mr. Difruscio can recall the telephone call at all, and Azman cannot recall any details, leads me to conclude that Azman is mistaken when he says that he talked to Dr. Panko with his report in hand. I am satisfied that Panko and Difruscio would not have divulged the details of the report before it was sent to Petro-Canada and without the express permission of Petro-Canada. What Azman, Cancelli of Petro Canada and to an extent Dr. Panko and Mr. Difruscio were all interested in, was the timing of the Arcturus Report. As of November 7, 1989, an extended closing date had to be agreed upon when it was expected that the MOE letter necessary for that event would be received.

(3) In the Southside litigation, there is no reference in the pleadings or the affidavits of either Azman or the other side that refer to the Arcturus Report, although there is reference to the Acres Report.

(4) The details of the discussion with Dr. Panko attributing to him the statement "the land is good enough for houses", was not disclosed on examination for discovery when Azman was asked about the details of the discussion.

(5) Azman conceded in cross-examination that he is not qualified to review environmental reports, nor did he purport to read the Acres Report.

(6) Azman did not pass the Arcturus Report on to other potential purchasers.

(7) The indemnity and release given to Petro-Canada on closing makes no reference whatever to the Arcturus Report.

(8) Azman knew of the existence of the Golder Report, yet he did not ask Petro-Canada for a copy of it when he says the MOE told him they could not release a copy.

(9) Azman stated he primarily relied on the MOE letter of November 15, which he took to be complete clearance with respect to environmental problems. He was unaware of the specifics of the MOE Guidelines or that the site might require further remediation if new information came to light regarding the Guidelines.

(10) Azman has blamed almost everyone associated with the transaction and has commenced legal action against the lawyers Gray and Johnston and originally against the MOE in this action.

(11) Mr. Azman is a real estate speculator who expected to make a quick profit on a flip of the property. I conclude that he did indeed rely on the letter of the MOE as having confirmed the "clearance" of the land of contamination. When it appeared in 1995 that he was out of time to sue the MOE, he sought to tailor his evidence of events in 1989 to his advantage in this lawsuit.

[para268] I simply do not accept that Azman either read or paid any attention to the Arcturus Report in 1989. His sole interest and concern was the letter from the MOE. For the above reasons I am satisfied that neither Azman nor 590 saw or relied on the Arcturus Report prior to closing the sale with Petro-Canada.

[para269] I have no reason to doubt that Mr. Johnston was doing his best to be candid and honest in his evidence. It was obvious from his demeanour that with his age and the passage of years, his memory has somewhat faded. There were a number of minor items that I would expect that he could recall in some fashion that he could not at all.

[para270] It was obvious to me that in preparation for his evidence Mr. Johnston was considerably "refreshed" with the assistance of others. His files, which had previously been refused to be produced by the Plaintiffs on the ground of privilege (a position I fail to understand), include several documents in copy form that were faxed to him fairly recently from Mr. Rose. One would have expected these documents to have been in his file at the relevant time.

[para271] It is clear from Mr. Johnston's evidence that he left all of the business end of this transaction, including the terms of the offer, the indemnity and release, and the pricing and marketing of the property, to Mr. Azman. He was a passive investor, expecting that the transaction would result in a quick profit for resale. His role appears simply to have been as a conveyancer. He was not asked for legal advice or opinion by either Mr. Rose or Mr. Azman. While they did have several meetings, it would appear that they were as co-investors only. Mr. Johnston was content, as were the others, with the MOE letter and he paid no attention to what the experts said.

[para272] Mr. Johnston stated that he was shown a copy of the Arcturus Report prior to closing, but was not given a copy for his file. While I conclude that he was trying to be helpful to the Court, nevertheless I am satisfied that he is in error on this point.

[para273] In addition to the conclusions that I reached with respect to Messrs. Azman and Rose, I simply add that Mr. Johnston not only is personally affected by the outcome of this lawsuit as a shareholder, but as well he faces action by each of his fellow shareholders, claiming deficiencies in his legal advice. I have no doubt that he is anxious to cooperate and may well be vulnerable to suggestion of what happened at or near closing.

[para274] I find that it would be remarkable if he could remember with the clarity suggested by his evidence, one particular short discussion regarding the Arcturus Report, when his general recall of events at the time was understandably extremely poor. For this reason I do not accept that Mr. Johnston or the other shareholders of 590 relied on the Arcturus Report. They simply accepted what was said by the MOE and it is likely that language he recalls.

[para275] While Joseph Rose was the offeree on the property and a shareholder of 590, there is little that his evidence adds to this matter. There can be no doubt that he left most everything to do with this investment to Azman and the conveyancing details to Johnston, the lawyer.

[para276] Rose somehow purported to recall receiving a copy of the Arcturus Report, on or about November 9, 1989. While I have no doubt that Mr. Rose saw the Arcturus Report at some time, I must view with suspicion his conclusion as to timing. There is nothing in his description of events which would lead me to believe that he relied on anything but the MOE letter, and therefore he would have no need to know whether it was based on the Acres, Golder or Arcturus or any other report. He accepted, as he said, "that everything was clear and that they could go in", based on the MOE letter.

[para277] What I think is telling about Mr. Rose's reliance on Mr. Azman, is that he had nothing to do with the decision regarding whether or not to insist on Southside closing. Rose noted that Azman was happy that Southside hadn't closed when the matter became settled, as he, Azman, was anxious to have the property developed.

[para278] It was only after the fact that Rose saw any of the problems. I therefore conclude that Rose did not see the Arcturus Report at the time. Even if he did, it is clear that he did not rely on it in any way.

[para279] Had I been satisfied that the Plaintiffs did have the Arcturus Report, I would conclude on all of the evidence before me that the Plaintiffs did not put any reliance on the Report as such. The reliance, if any, on the part of the Plaintiffs with respect to the environmental state of the land in question, was on the MOE, and perhaps on Petro Canada, but not on Arcturus.

(ii) Underground Storage Tanks

[para280] The second major area of factual dispute concerns the allegation that Petro Canada purposely or recklessly with an intent to deceive, withheld information concerning underground storage tanks or their removal from the plaintiffs and/or Petro Canada's consultants.

[para281] I have reviewed the evidence both documentary and testimony, on the issue of USTs. The position of the Plaintiff would appear to be that Petro Canada and/or Acres and/or Arcturus knew or should have known of the present or former presence of USTs in the area of the aboveground storage tanks and in the field to the south as shown on the insurance maps.

[para282] The plaintiffs have not satisfied me on a balance of probabilities that any USTs were present when the aboveground tank racks and piping were removed from the site in 1984-85. Petro-Canada bought this site from Gulf in the asset purchase of 1986. I am satisfied that, given the state of records transferred to Petro-Canada from Gulf, there was no evidence on which it could be reasonably concluded by Petro-Canada that there were at the time of purchase USTs or any contamination associated with any previous USTs. There is nothing in the removal of tanks from the property by Petro-Canada in 1987 or for the lack of records of that, that is suggestive of removal of USTs at that time.

[para283] There is nothing in the evidence before me to lead to a conclusion that there are at present USTs on the subject site. I accept that there were USTs as shown on the insurance maps and the Petro Canada drawing, south of the aboveground tanks and that they were removed prior to the 1981 drawing revision.

[para284] Having heard and considered the evidence from the witnesses from Petro Canada and Arcturus, I am satisfied that there was no intentional withholding of any information either from the consultants or from the Plaintiffs for the purpose of encouraging a sale. The evidence adduced does not satisfy me that any of the hydrocarbon contamination that remains to be removed under the present Guidelines was specifically caused or contributed to by leaks from a UST as opposed to general operations of the site.

[para285] I am satisfied that Petro Canada did not advise Acres or Arcturus that there had been USTs on site. I come to this conclusion, since I am satisfied that both Acres and Arcturus would have, as Dr. Panko stated, made a more comprehensive investigation had they known of their potential existence.

[para286] There was nothing fraudulent or intentionally deceptive on the part of Petro Canada in withholding information. The site plan it provided did not contain a reference to removal of USTs. This omission, I am satisfied, was inadvertent on their part.

[para287] The odours that appear to remain in the soil are consistent with the operation of the plant site with aboveground storage tanks and the associated piping and loading areas.

(iii) The Duties of the Defendants

[para288] The Plaintiffs claim that Petro Canada owed a duty to the MOE to appropriately research the site to determine the potential contamination. It is suggested that Petro Canada failed in this duty since John Thompson was not familiar with or reviewed the Guidelines and did not obtain an appropriate plan of the site, so as to alert Dr. Panko to the former presence of a UST.

[para289] The same duty is sought to be imposed on Acres and Arcturus, namely to determine the history of USTs on the site. The Plaintiffs submit that this failure is a "material omission" in the site history as it was represented to the MOE and the purchasers.

[para290] I accept that the history obtained by Acres failed to deal with the background of the USTs. What is clear on the evidence is that Petro Canada relied on Acres to do what was required by way of historical examination to fulfill the requirements of the MOE.

[para291] Since Petro Canada had no reason to believe that the information given to Acres was incomplete and no question was raised by Acres, I conclude no additional duty to inquire and disclose lay with Petro Canada.

[para292] I accept that there is a conflict between the evidence of John Thompson and that of Andrew Panko on what site plan was given. I conclude that there was a duty on Acres to obtain the appropriate and relevant details of the site history. To the extent that there was any failure in this regard, it is that of Acres, not Petro Canada who relied on Acres. Nothing flows from such a failure however, since Acres is no longer a party to this action and no relief is sought in respect of Acres.

[para293] The Plaintiffs seek to attribute any omission to obtain a full site history to Arcturus, on the basis that Dr. Panko, who was with Acres in 1998, did not ask or find out what he should have when he was at Acres, and did not find out what he should have when retained at Arcturus.

[para294] As I have noted, the failure, if there is one, of Acres either originally or in responding to the Golder Report, is not something that can be attributed to Arcturus. They were and are separate entities. Dr. Panko was not the supervising manager at Acres. When he was retained in his capacity as a principal at Arcturus, it was with a very limited assignment; no-one testified that the retainer would suggest the need for a re-do of the site history and I conclude there is no breach of duty on his part in failing to do so.

[para295] The retainer was limited to resolving outstanding issues with the MOE. Likewise, given his assignment, there is no duty or indeed breach (absent) fraud on the part of Petro Canada in failing to request a full history at the time of the Arcturus investigation.

[para296] The Plaintiffs submit that the MOE recognized the failure of Acres' investigation when in May of 1989 it received a copy of the Golder material. The mention in the memorandum simply records that Acres' tests were "ineffective" for the volatile range of hydrocarbons and therefore there were "shortcomings" as Mr. Boehm testified. There was no suggestion in the evidence, apart from that of Mr. Crutcher, to suggest that non-testing for volatiles was negligence. Indeed, the MOE confirmed the Arcturus work plan, and this is evidence of the standard it expected to be met.

[para297] I conclude on the evidence of all of the witnesses that in 1989, with no specific guidelines for volatiles, the extent of clean-up depended greatly on intended use. Petro Canada asked Arcturus to do the work necessary for the property to be de-commissioned.

[para298] The Plaintiffs were unlike all the other prospective purchasers, namely Z Realty, Southside Construction, Tim Horton and even London Marine when it purchased; each of them hired their own consultant to provide an opinion on the suitability of the property for any particular purpose. It must be taken to be a conscious decision on the part of the Plaintiffs not to retain their own consultant, since they did not anticipate their own occupation and use but only the re-sale of the property in whole or in part.

[para299] The Plaintiffs now attribute the actions of Azman in not receiving the Golder Report of which he was aware, to a purposeful deception on the part of Petro Canada. I conclude that Azman's decision not to pursue obtaining the Golder Report a support for the statement that he made that it was the MOE letter that he was waiting for and upon which he was going to rely. It was that letter that he required before closing and which provided the inducement to complete the transaction. He chose not to find out what Golder's may have said, even when he knew their report resulted in a further investigation.

[para300] The Plaintiffs urge that there was an obligation on Petro Canada to ensure that the purchaser received Golder Report when that information was within Petro Canada's knowledge.

[para301] I am satisfied that Petro Canada acted reasonably once it received knowledge of the Golder Report, in contacting Acres and obtaining their comments. Even if I accepted the Plaintiff's argument, that Acres' response was incomplete and inaccurate, there is no evidence before me to suggest that Petro Canada was in any way negligent or unreasonable in relying on the Acres response to the Golder Report, which contains in part the following:

"With respect to MOE consultation and other aspects, the site de-commissioning guidelines were followed. Further, Golder's statement that the MOE personnel are "not normally qualified to comment on the technical details of the study", we point out here that the MOE personnel involved in this de-commissioning can draw from a wide variety of MOE-based resource people, to comment for them, and this fact has been the case on many of the de-commissioning projects Acres has undertaken."

"As we are not privy to the proposed use of the property, we cannot comment on soil removal beyond that which applies to our terms of reference in performing an environmental audit of this site. This audit was performed according to MOE site de-commissioning guidelines, which have, in our opinion, been complied with."

[para303] Again, if it can be suggested that Acres was in any way in error in its response to the Golder Report, that is not the subject of this lawsuit in a way in which the Plaintiffs can raise as against either Petro Canada or Arcturus. I conclude that any duty on Petro Canada to the Plaintiffs regarding the Golder Report has been met. In the circumstances there was no duty to provide a report which not commissioned for Petro Canada. The fact that Mrs. Colluci said in her evidence that she would have provided any report in her possession, does not raise a duty on Petro Canada beyond what was done.

[para304] Azman knew as of October 11, as a result of the MOE letter, that further work was being done by Arcturus. If he or the Plaintiff's lawyer Johnson, wanted to rely on either that report or indeed the Golder Report, they could easily have insisted that the indemnity be amended to provide for reference to either of these reports had they chosen to do so. I am satisfied on the evidence before me that the only document that was important to the Plaintiffs and was relied on by them was the letter of the MOE dated November 15, 1989. Azman says for the purpose of establishing a duty on Arcturus, that he had the report. If indeed he had it, it was up to him to have it referred to in the indemnity.

[para305] The Plaintiffs submit that Arcturus did not do what was anticipated in its work plan. This proposition was not put to Mr. Boehm and I conclude that Arcturus did complete in a manner satisfactory to the MOE the work anticipated in its work plan as viewed by conditions encountered on site.

[para306] I accept that protection of the environment and adherence to not just the strictures of the legislation but as well the appropriate guidelines of the time, is a requirement of a party such as Petro Canada selling land that was previously used for petroleum purposes. According to all of the witnesses, in 1988 and 1989 the Ontario MOE Guidelines were in a state of flux and non-specific with respect to odours. It is simply not possible to attempt to adjudge the 1989 testing, reporting and recommendations of Arcturus, by the standards of 1999. The testing requirements, methodology and equipment have all changed. More importantly, the Guidelines themselves have substantially changed and become more specific.

[para307] Counsel for the Plaintiffs urges that I should find that Messrs. Rose and Azman were and still are not sophisticated, that they are of limited education and that Mr. Johnson was an elderly solicitor even in 1989 and that they did not have familiarity with the Guidelines.

[para308] The Defendants counter that by all appearances to Petro Canada, Azman was not only an experienced real estate agent who received a commission from Petro Canada on this sale, but had considerable experience with petro-chemical product sites, both service stations and bulk plants. Rose, in addition, was an experienced operator of a service station. As far as Petro Canada knew, Johnson (who to it was not known as a purchaser but only the solicitor) was an experienced, competent, reliable solicitor whom the Plaintiffs looked for advice. Even accepting the characterization of the Plaintiffs as urged by Plaintiffs' counsel, I find nothing in the evidence before me to such that Petro Canada should have suspected vulnerability on the part of the Plaintiffs or that they took any advantage of them.

[para309] In a similar vein, the Plaintiffs submit that they can rely on the suggested lack of expertise of the MOE to support the nature of a duty on Petro Canada to ensure that the Plaintiffs obtain all the "accurate and complete information".

[para310] There is nothing in the evidence before me to suggest that Petro Canada knew or ought to have known of any lack of expertise on the part of the MOE. I agree with the submissions of the Plaintiff that "the MOE statement was for the proponents' own use and did not amount to the MOE accepting liability." In this case, while the MOE did not "accept liability", neither did Petro Canada, as witnessed by the indemnity that it included as part of the sale transaction.

[para311] It was the Plaintiffs who relied on the MOE letter as if it were an acceptance of liability on the part of the MOE, and not Petro Canada, who put it forth as such. There is nothing in the evidence before me that Petro Canada did anything to mislead the MOE.

[para312] Neither is there anything to suggest that Arcturus did anything to mislead the MOE. Accepting the suggestion of the Plaintiffs, that the MOE might defer to Arcturus, does no lead to a conclusion that the MOE staff were not competent to assess the requirements of meeting the Guidelines or that Arcturus misled the MOE. None of the suggestions now made in argument were put to the MOE witness, Mr. Boehm.

(iv) The Claim of Fraud - The Law

[para313] The Plaintiffs' claim against both Petro Canada and Arcturus is in fraud and negligent misrepresentation. In both written and oral submissions, the Defendants complain about the lack of specificity and the changing nature of the supposed perpetrators of the fraud.

[para314] As noted by Winkler J. in Toronto-Dominion Bank v. Leigh Instruments Ltd. (1998) 40 B.L.R. (2d) 1 at 130, "Fraud is the most serious civil tort which can be alleged, and must be both strictly pleaded and strictly proved."

[para315] In his judgment at pages 131 and 132 (the reasons of which were approved by the Court of Appeal at (1999) 45 O.R. (3d) 417), Winkler J. set out the principles of fraudulent misrepresentation. In that extensive and careful analysis and the authorities referred to, the requirements of fraudulent misrepresentation may be summarized:

- (a) that there be a representation that is false;
- (b) that it be made knowingly; or
- (c) without belief in its truth; or
- (d) recklessly without caring,

The intention to deceive, or reckless disregard, is critical.

[para316] There is good reason for fraud or fraudulent misrepresentation to be regarded as a serious tort. It is among the most disparaging type of allegations that can be made against an individual or corporation. Since fraud can often have criminal as well as civil repercussions, a court's finding of fraud tends to reflect poorly indeed on the character or reputation of the perpetrator.

[para317] A finding of fraud is serious in its consequences, often carrying additional damages or other extended relief, when compared to liability based on negligence. As a result of significant ramifications for a finding of fraud, the fact-finding process is also required to be taken seriously.

[para318] Not surprisingly, the nature of the fact-finding process where fraud is alleged has received judicial consideration. One starts that with the proposition that notwithstanding that fraud may in circumstances involve criminal conduct, nevertheless when alleged in a civil suit, it will be measured on the civil standard, a balance of probabilities. See Continental Ins. Co. v. Dalton Cartage Co. [1982] 1 S.C.R. 164.

[para319] In that case, Laskin C.J.C. went on to say that the trier of fact could consider the cogency of evidence and is entitled to scrutinise the evidence with greater care, if there were serious allegations to be established. As the authors of the "Law of Evidence in Canada" 2nd ed., Sopinka, Letterman, Bryant 1999 at page 158 wrote,

"Thus, the trier of fact will consider the nature of a fact in issue, that is, its physical, religious, moral, ethical, social or legal character, and the consequences of its decision when determining if it is satisfied on a balance of probabilities."

[para320] These principles apply not only to actual fraudulent misrepresentation but as well where, as here, the allegations include misrepresentation by silence. Care must also be taken when scrutinising the evidence where, as in this case, the allegation is made against a corporation. Winkler J. in Leigh Instruments (supra at page 130) referred to B.G. Checo v. B.C. Hydro (1994) 4 C.C.L.T. (2d) 161 at 223 (aff'd [1993] 1 S.C.R. 12), where the jurisprudence on corporate responsibility in the context of a claim in fraudulent misrepresentation is traced and concluded,

"Where fraudulent misrepresentation is alleged against a corporation, the intention to deceive must still be strictly proved. Further, in order to attach liability to a corporation for fraud, the fraudulent intent must have been held by an individual person who is either a directing mind of the corporation, or who is acting in the course of their employment through the principle of respondeat superior or vicarious liability."

[para321] It is therefore necessary to scrutinise with care the duties and responsibilities of individuals within a corporation when in effect the allegation is that their silence amounted to a fraudulent misrepresentation.

[para322] If a material fact which was true at the time a contract was executed becomes false while the contract remains executory, or if a statement believed to be true at the time it was made is discovered to be false, then the representor has a duty to disclose the change in circumstances. The failure to do so may amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation. See: Parell, "False Statements" [1996] 8 Advocates Quarterly 232 at 242.

[para323] In Rainbow Industrial Caterers Ltd. v. Canadian National Railway Company (1988) 54 D.L.R. (4th) 43 (B.C.C.A.) (aff'd on other grounds [1991] 3 S.C.R. 3), in referring to Brownlie v. Campbell (1880) 5 A.P.P. CAS 925 at 950,

"When a statement or representation has been made in the bona fide belief that it is true, and the party who has made it afterwards comes to find out that it is untrue, and discovers what he should have said, he can no longer honestly keep up that silence on the subject after that has come to his knowledge, thereby allowing the other party to go on, and still more, inducing him to go on, upon a statement which was honestly made at the time at which it was made, but which he has now retracted when he has become aware that it can no longer honestly be preserved in.

[para324] Fraud through "active non-disclosure" was considered by the Court of Appeal for Ontario in Able v. McDonald [1964] 2 O.R. 256 (C.A.) in which the Court held at 259:

"by active non-disclosure is meant that the defendants with the knowledge that the damage to the premises had occurred, actively prevented as far as they could, that knowledge from coming to the notice of the appellants."

[para325] What then are the allegations of fraud against Petro Canada and Arcturus? At the opening of this trial, counsel for the Plaintiffs suggested that Petro Canada was responsible for the fraud of Ms. Colluci, who was alleged to have fraudulently failed to disclose in correspondence to the Plaintiffs the existence of the Golder Report and the statements therein. This allegation was in effect abandoned in argument.

[para326] Counsel for the Defendant Petro Canada, in a supplementary written submission, pointed to several changes of position, both in pleading and at trial, with respect to the allegation of fraud.

[para327] Particular reference is made to the allegation in the Plaintiffs' written submissions, that Messrs. Thompson and Charbonneau fraudulently failed to advise Ms. Colluci of the existence of the Golder Report with the result that her belief that the statement that the Plaintiffs had been provided with all relevant information was false.

[para328] I have reviewed the Pleadings, the evidence, plus the written and oral submissions and conclude that the allegations of fraudulent misrepresentation put forward by the Plaintiffs may be summarized as follows:

1. That Petro Canada fraudulently failed to advise the Plaintiffs of the former presence of USTs on the site.
2. That Petro Canada fraudulently withheld from the Plaintiffs prior to their execution of the agreement of purchase and sale, both the Golder Report and the response by Acres to it.
3. That Petro Canada, by permitting Arcturus to proceed with an incomplete clean-up, based on its knowledge of USTs, fraudulently adopted the MOE letter of November 15, 1989, which it knew would be relied on, knowing full well that the statement that the site had been cleaned up and that volatile hydrocarbons had been removed, was false.
4. That Petro Canada, by its silence, implicitly represented that the land would be fit for commercial use without further clean-up, when it knew that statement to be false.

[para329] As against Arcturus, it is alleged that Dr. Panko, knowing of the limitations of the Acres work as reflected in the Golder Report, deceitfully failed to suggest a more complete clean-up. It was further submitted by the Plaintiffs in argument that Petro Canada could be said to have committed fraud, since it disclosed only favourable environmental information, and that Messrs. Charbonneau and Thompson studiously withheld the information concerning the Golder Report and allowed Petro Canada through Mrs. Colluci and Mr. Cancelli, to in effect warrant to the Plaintiffs that they had all of the relevant information, when they did not.

[para330] The Defendants complain, with justification in my view, that the propositions now sought to be advanced were not put to either Mr. Thompson or Mr. Charbonneau in cross-examination. I agree.

[para331] In my view, the proposition put forward by the Plaintiffs is not consistent with any other evidence. The evidence from Petro Canada's witnesses, particularly Mr. Thompson, was that he believed that the Golder Report was fully answered by the response put forward from Acres.

[para332] I have concluded that in light of the information received from Acres, Petro Canada was not under a duty to provide the purchaser with the Golder Report. I do not accept that the duty on Petro Canada was to provide "all environmental information in its possession". The Golder Report was not commissioned by Petro Canada. Petro Canada did not warrant that the purchaser had all relevant information. Petro Canada had a report from Acres that responded to Golder's and it heard nothing from the MOE prior to entering into the agreement of purchase and sale with the Plaintiffs. In the circumstances of the language of the schedule to the offer, and the anticipated indemnity, there was no fraud on the part of Petro Canada in not forwarding the Golder Report. It is important to note that Petro Canada did not purport to say to the Plaintiffs, that Golder's criticisms had been satisfactorily answered.

[para333] None of the propositions now sought to be attached to the conduct of Messrs. Charbonneau or Thompson was put to them directly. As the authors of "The Law of Evidence in Canada", 2nd Ed., Butterworths 1999, Sopinka, Letterman & Bryant, point out at page 954, in referring to what is known as the "Rule in Browne v. Dunne",

If the cross-examiner intends to impeach the credibility of a witness by means of extrinsic evidence, he must give that witness notice of his intention (1893), 6 R. 67 at 70-71 (H.L.)."

[para334] The authors at page 955 state that the Rule applies not only to contradictory evidence, but to closing argument as well. Reference is made again to Browne v. Dunne and the statement of Lord Halsebury at page 76-77:

"To my mind, nothing would be more absolutely unjust, than not to cross-examine witnesses upon evidence that they have given, so as to give them notice, and to give them an opportunity of explanation, and an opportunity very often to defend their own character and, not having given them such an opportunity, to ask the jury afterwards to disbelieve what they have said, although not one question has been directed either to their credit or to the accuracy of the facts they have deposed to."

[para335] The above statement is apposite to the proposition now put forward as against most of Petro Canada's witnesses. Mrs. Colluci did testify that she would pass on any information given to her by others; but this evidence is not capable of the suggested inference, without foundation, that it was purposely withheld from her in order to deceive the Plaintiffs.

[para336] Counsel for the Plaintiffs have analogised the suggested failure to disclose all relevant environmental information, to the situation where vendors of a house fail to disclose a dangerous latent defect (radioactive soil). Reliance is placed on the case of Sevidal et. al. v. Chopra (1987) 64 O.R. (2d) 169. In that case Oyen J. (as she then was) held on the facts before her that the vendors found out between the time of entering into an agreement of purchase and sale and the closing, that there was contaminated soil on their property and decided not to inform the purchasers. In concluding that the vendors should have disclosed the discovery of radioactive material on their property, Madam Justice Oyen at page 188 referred to the case of Sorenson v. Kay Holdings [1979] 6 W.W.R. 193 (B.C.C.A.) and to the comments of McFarland J.A. at page 208:

"Where, as here, the claim is for damages for fraud, it is my opinion that the court must consider the whole of the dealings between the parties, from [the first meeting] until their contract was carried through to completion".

[para337] The Defendants rely on the case of Tony's Broadloom and Floor Covering Ltd. et.al. v. N.M.C. Canada Inc. (1996) 31 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.). In that case, the appellants had purchased property which they knew to have had an industrial use but were unaware of the existence of contaminants and the potential inadequacy of their containment. The vendors were not made aware by the purchasers of the intended change of use from industrial to residential. Dougherty J.A. held that the presence of the contaminant should not be classified as either latent or a patent defect in the property but when on to say at page 488:

"If I am wrong, and the presence of the contaminant was a defect, I agree with the conclusion of White J. (at page 249-252 O.R. pp. 35-37 R.P.R.) that the defect was a patent one. It would have been readily discoverable by the appellants had they exercised reasonable diligence in the circumstances. In deciding whether the appellants exercised reasonable diligence, it must be remembered that the appellants were buying industrial land on which they proposed to build a residential condominium. A reasonable inspection of the property, reasonable enquiries of the respondents and reasonable enquiries of the local and provincial authorities would have put the appellants on notice of the existence of the contaminant. Indeed, had the appellants pursued the taking of soil samples with reasonable diligence after the respondents had permitted them to take those samples, they would have learned of the existence of the contaminant before closing. Instead, the appellants chose not to disclose their intended use of the property and to take no steps to satisfy themselves that their property could be used for that purpose."

[para338] Based on the authorities I am satisfied that the state of the subject lands at the time of their purchase by the Plaintiffs does not represent a defect for which a claim lies in fraud. I adopt what was said by Madam Justice Epstein in 688350 Ontario Ltd. v. Piron [1994] O.J. No. 2844 (Gen.Div.) at paragraphs 132-133:

"A defect is generally understood to mean something that constituted a failing, a shortcoming, fault or imperfection. This is obviously a subjective concept. To adopt a phrase, one person's defect may be another person's ideal. "Obviously to make a determination of whether something is a defect in the quality of land, the intended use of the land must be taken into account."

[para339] Here, the Plaintiffs with knowledge that on closing they would have to give an indemnity to the vendors with respect to claims arising from environmental damage, upon knowing of the Golder Report and the further work done by Arcturus, took no further steps of their own to make any enquiries directly of the MOE, of Petro Canada or to hire their own consultant to confirm the environmental state of the property. Taking into account all of these circumstances and the alleged failures of Petro Canada's employees, I am satisfied that the Plaintiffs' claim in fraud must fail.

[para340] As part of its position regarding fraud, the Plaintiffs rely on the likely presence at some time of USTs on the site, and the failure of Petro-Canada to advise of their presence. Even accepting that revelation of the possible or former existence was a duty, there is absolutely nothing in the evidence to suggest that any such presence caused or contributed to any damage.

(v) Negligent Misrepresentation - The Law

[para341] The law of negligent misrepresentation in Canada was set out by the Supreme Court in the seminal case of Queen v. Cognos Inc. [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87. In that case, Iacobucci J., speaking for the court, set out at page 110 the five elements in a claim for negligent misrepresentation:

1. That there must be a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee;
2. The representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate or misleading;
3. The representor must have acted negligently in making said misrepresentation;
4. The representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent misrepresentation; and
5. The reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

[para342] Each of these elements must be made out for the plaintiff to be successful in his claim of negligent misrepresentation. The essence of the alleged negligent misrepresentation is that Petro Canada, with actions and deeds and the obtaining of the MOE letter of November 15, 1989, represented to the Plaintiffs that the subject site would be suitable for any use intended by the Plaintiffs and free from volatile petroleum hydrocarbons.

[para343] In urging their case on negligent misrepresentation, counsel for the Plaintiffs studiously avoided any reference to the contractual terms, namely the "entire agreements" clause referred to above, and the indemnity.

[para344] I am satisfied that any consideration of a claim for negligent misrepresentation in this context must take into account the provisions of the agreement of purchase and sale. See Royal Bank v. Burgoyne (1996) 152 N.S.R. (2d) 150. The language of the agreement of purchase makes it clear that Petro Canada is making no representations other than contained in the agreement.

(1) There Must Be A Duty Of Care Based On A Special Relationship.

[para345] In Hercules Managements Ltd. v. Ernst & Young [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165, Mr. Justice Laforest for the court held that there is not in principle any difference between the criteria used to establish a duty of care in negligent misrepresentation and the criteria applied in any other case. Canadian courts have consistently adopted the test first described in Anns v. Merton London Borough Council [1978] A.C. 728 (H.L.), which mandates that where there is a sufficient relationship of proximity between the parties, such that carelessness on the part of one may be likely to cause damage to the other, it will give rise to a prima facie duty of care. Once the court has found that such a duty of care exists, it is then necessary to consider whether there are any other considerations which ought to limit the scope of the duty or the class of persons to whom it is owed. This principle has more recently been confirmed by the Supreme Court in Ingles v. Tutkaluk Construction Ltd. [2000] S.C.J. No. 13. In looking at considerations which ought to limit the scope of duty or class of persons to whom it is owed, Mr. Justice LaForest held at page 197 that the court, in a claim of negligent misrepresentation, may look to such factors as "knowledge of the plaintiff (or an identifiable class of plaintiffs) on the part of the defendant" and "use of the statements at issue for the precise purpose or transaction for which they were prepared" in order to determine whether there are any policy considerations which should limit the scope of the duty, such as the potential for indeterminate liability on the part of the defendants.
