[para23] The defendant and her husband stated that the premises were not fit for occupancy and stated that some of the problems were not included in the Certificate completed by the inspector. The vice-president of Landmark, the inspector from Landmark, and the manager of Customer Service of Landmark all testified that the defects listed in the Certificate of the inspector together did not make the premises unfit for occupancy and that they were the usual minor defects which could be completed in short order. However, in two letters, one dated January 28th, 1991 and one dated January 30th, 1991 to the defendant, the Manager of Customer Service acknowledged that "your suite was not ready for occupancy on the scheduled interim closing date of January 22nd, 1991." Similarly, in the statement of claim the plaintiff acknowledged that it was not fit for occupancy on the 22nd. The plaintiff asked to amend the statement of claim as a result of the evidence and in the circumstances the amendment was disallowed on the grounds that neither of the people who claimed that the deficiencies did not make the premises uninhabitable remember having inspected the premises and that inasmuch as a senior person had on two occasions acknowledged the unfit condition, the amendment should not be allowed. Even if the amendment to the statement of claim had been allowed I would conclude on the evidence that the letter of January 28th repeated on January 30th was a virtual estoppel and acknowledgment of the condition of the premises.

[para24] The letter of January 28th purported to set a closing date of January 31st. The defendant's husband says that he refused this letter, that he was annoyed at such short notice as well as the condition of the premises and said that he was not going to close. The person who delivered the letter thought that there was nobody home on the date the letter was delivered and that she left it in the door. The defendant says that she found the letter in the door and it upset her that the closing date was so close. At all events, the second letter dated January 30th, 1991 was delivered on February 3rd, 1991 and there is noted on this letter, "delivered letter 6:30 p.m., accepted by Dr. Maleki." Dr. Maleki, that is the defendant's husband, testified that he took the letter, advised the person delivering the same that they needed 60 days notice to terminate their lease stated that this implied that they were not going to close.

[para25] Sometime between the inspection of January 10th and January 30th there was at least one conversation between the Customer Service Manager for Landmark and the defendant. The Customer Service Manager says that she does not remember the defendant but that she remembers this telephone call in which the woman screamed at her. The manager said that the defendant said terrible things about the condition of the building. The manager said that she advised her that she would see what she could do. As a result of that she says that she made sure that the premises were fit for occupancy and that such is the reason why she sent forth her letter of January 28th.

[para26] There is a memorandum dated January 29th, 1991 which was produced by the plaintiff which says:

Re: "Landmark phase III, Suite 806 extended closing" and under that the following note:

"Please be advised that the above-mentioned suite has been extended to February 28, 1991 -- no fees or admin. as per Donna Cats." Donna Cats was the Customer Service Manager and one might assume from that memo that the problem with respect to short notice was being addressed as a result of some complaint. This memo was followed by the letter of January 30th extending the time to February 28th.

[para27] While the defendant's husband said he was insulted at the shortness of the time for extended closing, that is 2 to 3 days, it is difficult to see that such would be the cause of not closing the transaction. In fact the defendant says her concern was short notice and no opportunity to re-inspect.

[para28] The fact is that the defendant had not yet, on January 30th, given any instructions to their solicitors who were nominated by them to act for them on closing and it was not until the end of the first week in February that any contact was made with their solicitors.

[para29] The defendant and her husband were not neophytes to real estate transactions. The evidence indicated that they had purchased at least two other houses and sold one so that they would be aware of the necessity of being ready for closing. There is therefore some suspicion as to the motive of the defendant in refusing to close. However as I pointed out to counsel and it was acknowledged by counsel for the plaintiff that in these circumstances the motive for not closing was not material.

[para30] At all events under date February 11th, 1991 the solicitors for the defendants wrote to the solicitors for Landmark advising that the purchaser took the position that the agreement had been terminated because the vendor was unable to close on January 22nd, 1991 and had had no right to extend the closing date. Subsequently, the same solicitors wrote to the solicitors for the plaintiff in which they raised the question of misrepresentation by the real estate agent with which I have already dealt.

[para31] I am satisfied on the evidence that the premises were ready for occupancy at least on the 28th of January, 1991, that there were one or two minor defects left to complete which are referred to in a document found at Tab 24, the last of which was completed on the 4th of March, 1994 which was a cracked or chipped tile. While some evidence was given that the deficiencies were not corrected until February 6th, 1991 with one outstanding matter corrected on March 4th, it seems to me from looking at the documents particularly Tab 24 that in fact everything was completed and fit for occupancy before February 6th but that certain items were left for that date probably being done by subcontractors. I come to that conclusion because of the date of February 5th found on the reference to tile. That view is supported by the evidence of Donna Cats who described the defendant's conversation. I accept her evidence when she says she would have made sure that it was complete by the time she sent the letter of January 28th.

[para32] The issue, then, is whether the defendant had the right to refuse to complete the transaction on the grounds advanced. I come to the conclusion that the defendant did not and that she is liable to the plaintiff for breach of the agreement.

[para33] Put simply, the closing date was a flexible one. It was fixed by paragraph 2 as the 31st day of March, 1991 or such date pursuant to the terms. Paragraph 9 of the agreement of purchase and sale entitled the vendor to accelerate the closing date upon giving at least 30 days prior written notice provided that the unit was substantially complete and fit for occupancy on the accelerated or earlier date as specified in the notice. Notice of an accelerated date was given here in due time. The letter is dated December 14th from the solicitors requiring closing on January 22nd. That letter, therefore, set the closing date under the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale as January 22nd. At this stage then there is now no March 31st closing date but rather January 22nd. Paragraph 10 provides that if substantial completion of the unit which the court finds to be for all intents and purposes the same as finished to permit occupancy, is delayed for any reason other than the wilful neglect of the vendor, the vendor is permitted reasonable extensions of time or times to substantially complete the unit and the closing date is extended accordingly. In other words this new closing date of January 22nd is extended if the unit is not substantially complete and the vendor is entitled to that extension with a limitation that such extensions are not to exceed 18 months. That in the court's view is the only way that the agreement makes sense. As the closing date is stated to be flexible and is accelerated, then such date becomes the closing date from which the vendor or landmark is entitled to reasonable extensions. While the extension to January 31st may not have been reasonable, certainly the extension to February 28th was reasonable.

[para35] In Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corp. (1992), 29 R.P.R. (2d) 60 (Ont. C.A.) the court dealt with the interpretation of agreements of purchase and sale in condominium matters. The court said at p. 86:

Before considering the contractual provisions which are in dispute, I remind myself of certain well established rules of construction applicable to the issue at hand. The agreement with which we are concerned is a negotiated commercial document which should be construed in accordance with sound commercial principles and good business sense. To the extent that it is possible to do so, it should be construed as a whole and effect should be given to all of its provisions. The provisions should be read, not as standing alone, but in light of the agreement as a whole and the other provisions thereof ... the court should strive to give meaning to the agreement and "reject an interpretation that would render one of its terms ineffective."

The court is "to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract."

[para36] In Scanlon the court points out peculiarities of condominium agreements and the two stage closing, that is to say, the occupancy and the transfer of title. Dealing with the "closing date" in that case at p. 90 the court says this:

On a plain reading of this provision, the "Closing Date" may be extended when completion of the unit is delayed by reason of the circumstances referred to in the provision.

The term "Closing Date" is defined by para. 1(b) to mean "the 4th of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)." In May 1991, when Bramalea invoked para. 22 and rescheduled the respondent's closing date to September 14, 1992, "the Closing Date" was manifestly the November 4, 1991 closing date. The transaction was to be completed on that date pursuant to para. 12. At that stage, there had been no extension of the closing date by para. 13(d), nor could there have been. Accordingly, to implement para. 22 and give effect to the extension mandated by it while, at the same time, allowing for the extension contemplated by para. 13(d), it is obviously necessary to read the definition of "Closing Date" (and "Closing") in para. 1(b) as meaning "the 14th of September, 1992 or as extended by Paragraph 23(d)."

To construe para. 22 in so narrow and restrictive fashion, in my opinion, is to render the clause substantially, if not totally, ineffective. To demonstrate this by way of an example, let us suppose that a strike had occurred in, say, the plumbing or electrical industry, which upset Bramalea's timing for the scheduled completion of the respondent's unit on November 4, 1991, by one month, and this made it impossible to have an occupancy closing on that date. On this interpretation, para. 22 is inapplicable and Bramalea would not be entitled to extend the November 4th closing date for the extra month needed to enable it to close pursuant to either paras. 12 or 13(d); the transaction would be at an end. If, however, to change the facts, an occupancy closing pursuant to para. 13(d) did take place on November 4, 1991, then, on this interpretation, Bramalea would subsequently be entitled to invoke para. 22. Accordingly, "[i]f the completion of the Unit ... is delayed by reason of strikes [Bramalea] shall be permitted extensions of time ... for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly."? Until the project is registered and the vendor gives the 20-day notice called for in para. 13(d), there is no set closing date. Before a closing date is set, there is no reason for the vendor to invoke para. 22 and, moreover, there is no mechanism for putting the provision into operation. Once the closing date has been set, there is, I suppose, the far-fetched possibility that something may arise during the 20-day period following the vendor's notice to require the vendor to extend the closing date set by it less than 20 days earlier. Beyond that possibility, the clause would serve no practical purpose.

In my opinion, para. 22 cannot be meant to produce a result which, to all intents and purposes, is tantamount to striking the clause from the agreement. For the reasons I have already stated, in executing a contract containing this clause, a purchaser could not reasonably have expected that Bramalea was guaranteeing to deliver occupancy on November 4, 1991, without regard to any of the contingencies that might arise to delay construction.

[para37] In Shoihet v. 110 Bloor Street West Development Coloration Ltd. et al 32 R.P.R. 179 at p. 191, Trainor J. says:

In cases where neither party can be said to be ready, willing and able to close on a stipulated date each party is entitled to set a new closing date on reasonable notice to the other. Almost four years have gone by and this has not been done either as to interim or final closing. Both sides were aware of the rising market situation and they did nothing. The plaintiff had the legal right, as did the defendant, to set a new closing date provided that they did so within a reasonable time. Four years is unreasonable. As a consequence the plaintiff has lost any right to now stipulate a closing date. The agreements are null and void.

[para38] The position then after February 11th, 1991 was that:

a) Landmark was ready, willing and able to close on the 28th of February, 1991;

b) The defendant says that she was not going to close and that this had been communicated to Landmark by her husband on January 28th;

c) The letter of February 11th, 1991 from the solicitors for the defendant makes it abundantly clear that they are not going to close and the return of the deposit is demanded;

d) The vendor continued to be ready, willing and able to close as indicated in the letter of April 10th, 1991 and indeed when the statement of claim was served that same month;

e) The defendant's position was reinforced by the subsequent letter from the solicitors for the defendant indicating the further grounds for refusing to close, that is misrepresentation.

[para39] I find that as a fact the defendant was ready, willing and able to close indeed on the 31st of January, 1991 but with reasonable notice on the 28th of February, 1991. The defendant refused to close, communicated her refusal to the plaintiff, and therefore the plaintiff was not required to tender.

[para40] In Bethco Ltd. et al v. Clareco Cab Ltd. 52 O.R. (2d) 609 at 612 (Ont.C.A.) in the judgment of Grange J. says:

The trial judge, while finding that the vendor "was reluctant to complete the transaction and did everything possible to throw unnecessary hurdles in the path of the purchaser" was "not satisfied that there was an anticipatory breach." It was not the classic anticipatory breach where one party declines to close at all. Nevertheless the vendor was in breach of contract on the closing date and was unwilling or unable to close in accordance with the contract at that time. In these circumstances there was no need for the purchaser to tender at all. It had only to show that it would be able to close in the reasonable future and the trial judge has so found.

[para41] As stated, the plaintiff subsequently sold the premises and claims damages. The quantum of damages is as set forth in Exhibits.

[para42] The evidence was that the plaintiff had put the condominium on the market in April 1991, I presume at a time when they were certain the defendant was not going to close. It was not sold until the 1st of June, 1993 and was referred to as one of the "litigation suites". Presumably because of the adverse turn of the market, some proposed purchasers had decided not to close and to attempt to rescind their agreements and all in all, the evidence indicated that there were approximately 26 such suites. Evidence for the plaintiff indicated that with the upgrades which had been placed in the suite that they were surprised that it did not sell earlier. The vice-president of the plaintiff indicated that it was not dealt with in any special fashion although the Customer Service Manager was of the view that the litigation suites were pushed as a priority by the plaintiff. The defence argued that there had been no special attempt to sell this unit, that it was not specifically advertised or specifically dealt with by real estate agents but was included in the general advertising for the unsold suites and in whatever general arrangement there was in existence with realtors. The argument of the defence is that special efforts should have been made while the prices were still high. In the court's view this is speculation. At Tab A of Exhibit #1 there is an indication of the efforts made by landmark to sell its suites and I therefore come to the conclusion that there was no lack of mitigation on the part of the plaintiff but that the evidence is accurate that the total condominium market in the Toronto area collapsed.

[para43] There was no other attack on the quantum of damages by the defence and all of the figures set forth in Exhibit #5 were adequately demonstrated, the documents being found at Tabs 35 through 46 inclusive in Exhibit #1. After giving credit for the deposits, the plaintiff claims a total loss of $117,674.28. As the deposits have been credited in the claim for damages they too belong to the plaintiff.

No. C18103

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Finlayson, Catzman and Laskin JJ.A. Heard: December 20 and 21, 1994. Judgment: February 15, 1995.

Counsel: Eric R. Murray, Q.C., and Jonathon H. Fine, for the appellants. R.B. Moldaver, Q.C., and G. Benchetrit, for the respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by [para1] FINLAYSON J.A.:-- This is an appeal from the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Wilkins wherein he dismissed an application under Rule 14 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, for a declaration that certain agreements of purchase and sale ceased to be binding on the appellants and for judgment for the amounts owing by the respondents to the appellants in respect of deposits, occupancy fees and interest thereon. Wilkins J. granted a counter-application, declared that each of the appellants was in breach of the said agreements of purchase and sale and awarded consequential monetary relief. I would allow the appeal, dismiss the counter-application and grant to the appellants the relief requested on the application.

Outline of the proceedings

[para2] In 1988 and 1989, the appellants entered into agreements of purchase and sale (the "Agreements") to buy condominium units in a project under construction known as The Royal Ascot Club from Somerset Developments of Georgetown Limited ("Somerset"). Pursuant to the terms of the Agreements, the majority of the appellants took occupancy of their units starting in January and February 1990, although there was still substantial remedial work to be done before completion of the condominium development. Prior to occupancy, each appellant paid 25 per cent of the purchase price as a deposit. On taking occupancy, each purchaser was required to pay a monthly occupancy fee for the individual unit. The occupancy fee was based on three components: taxes; common expenses; and the mortgage interest component ("MIC"), essentially, interest on the unpaid balance of the purchase price.

These are mortgages designed specifically to satisfy the requirements of s. 51(6) para. 1 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (the Act) and thus enable condominium developers to charge purchasers who take possession of proposed condominium units before title can be transferred or conveyed a monthly occupancy fee that includes a mortgage interest component. To achieve this purpose, purchasers who would not otherwise be assuming or giving back a mortgage on final closing are required by their agreements of purchase and sale to give back a mortgage for the balance of the purchase price. Typically, the mortgage is made payable on demand after final closing of the transaction or is for a term of very brief duration, generally not exceeding 30 days. On final closing, purchasers are also required to deposit a certified cheque for the full amount owing on the mortgage or provide other satisfactory assurances that funds will be available to discharge the mortgage upon maturity.

In the case on appeal, the agreed mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee was determined based on the balance of the purchase price payable on final closing, the mortgage rate having been fixed at 2.5 percent above the Toronto Dominion Bank's prime rate in effect on the closing date. The closing date was to be the day on which the unit was "substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the Purchaser". The result was an MIC rate of 15.49 percent. [para4] Normally, the MIC compensates the developer for its borrowing costs during construction. It is intended to be a temporary measure. The problem in the case on appeal is that the developer, Somerset, was slow to complete the development, resulting in the unit holders being obliged to pay the occupancy fee for a longer period than the parties had anticipated. Because of the delay and dissatisfaction with what was perceived as shoddy workmanship in the incomplete development, a number of the unit holders formed a residents' association to deal with the developer about the deficiencies. On February 6, 1990, they signed a letter addressed to Hugh C. Hagen, president of Canterra Commercial Developments Inc. ("Canterra"), the parent of the developer Somerset, specifying deficiencies in the building and demanding that the problems be rectified. One complaint was about the phantom mortgage rate included in the occupancy fee. The letter stated:

When we purchased our units, we were advised that the "Phantom Mortgage" would be less than having a mortgage. This has proved to be untrue.

They closed the letter with a threat that if necessary they would: (i) seek publicity about the shoddy workmanship and unprofessional management associated with the development, and (ii) institute litigation.

[para5] Hagen sent a reply letter dated February 13, 1990, to "All Suite Owners" at the Royal Ascot Club address. He dealt with the complaints one by one and ended by giving "my company's commitment that your concerns will be addressed as best we can". Specifically, as to the MIC complaint, the letter provided:

15. Vendor Take Back Mortgage:

The Purchase and Sale Agreement clearly shows the Vendor Take Back Mortgage at Toronto Dominion Bank Prime Rate plus 2 1/2 percent. Current first mortgage rates are lower although this is an unusual phenomenon in the financial world. On the Unit Transfer Date (i.e. condominium registration), we will be refunding to you the difference between your Vendor Take Back Mortgage interest paid and interest rate on a first mortgage that is calculated 90 days prior to the Unit Transfer Date. Therefore, although the net effect will not be less than had you had a mortgage, it will be the same as if you had had one.

This undertaking is frequently referred to as the "Hagen promise". A letter, also dated February 13, 1990, was sent by Canterra, advising Prenor Equity Inc. ("Prenor"), the mortgagee of the condominium property, to hold all deposits greater than $20,000 in an interest bearing account.

[para6] I will briefly recount what took place thereafter. In April, 1990, the general contractor abandoned the project and work ceased until late November, 1990, when Prenor appointed Retail Engineering as receiver/manager of Somerset. In March of 1991, the appellants sought a determination of their rights under the Agreements. They questioned, among other things, the sufficiency of Somerset's disclosure statements under s. 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and the validity of the Vendor Take Back Mortgage. The application was heard by the Honourable Mr. Justice Blenus Wright who, by judgment dated July 24, 1991 (reported at 4 O.R. (3d) 280), issued a declaration that the Agreements were not binding on the appellants because the disclosure statement of the developer did not comply with s. 52 of the Condominium Act. He ordered that the appellants receive back all monies paid by way of deposit or otherwise, subject to the payment of a "reasonable rent" in replacement of the occupancy fees which had been paid under the Agreements. He assessed the "reasonable rent" to be the amount of the estimated realty taxes plus the common expenses, in short, the occupancy fee minus the MIC. Wright J. did not deal directly with the validity of phantom mortgages because the issue was before this court in Albrecht v. Opemoco, supra. However, by his determination of what amounted to a reasonable rent, he eliminated the MIC as a cost to the appellants of their occupancy of the condominium units.

[para7] Prenor appealed the judgment of Wright J. In the interim, certain arrangements were made:

a) the solicitors for the parties agreed that the appellants would continue to pay the full occupancy fee with an MIC rate of 15.49 percent, part of which would be held in trust;

b) Gordon, Traub, the solicitors for Somerset advised the solicitors for the appellants that no closing date would be fixed.

[para8] Prenor was represented on the appeal from the judgment of Wright J. by Mr. Moldaver from the firm Gordon, Traub. He noted in his factum that Wright J. had found Prenor to be a declarant pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act; appointing a private receiver had, in effect, made it a mortgagee in possession, with all corresponding obligations. The factum asserted:

The consequences of this were that Prenor was found to stand in the place of Somerset and assume all the liabilities of Somerset. These liabilities included honouring Somerset's agreements with the purchasers to reduce the mortgage interest component of the monthly occupation fees, provision for a courtesy van for the Condominium Corporation; and, supplying appropriate furniture for the lobby of the complex.

The factum went on to submit that Wright J. had erred in finding that Prenor was bound by the representations of Somerset.

[para9] The undesirable consequence to Prenor of this finding by Wright J. was that it remained vulnerable to a suit by the appellants based on the undertakings relating to the deficiencies in the condominium project. Nevertheless, during the course of argument on the appeal, Mr. Moldaver acknowledged to the court that Somerset's agreement with the purchasers to reduce the mortgage interest component was a liability of Somerset for which the receiver was liable on final closing. He made this concession despite the position in his factum that these undertakings were not binding on his client.

[para10] This court allowed Prenor's appeal, held that Prenor was not a mortgagee in possession, and found that the appellants were bound by the Agreements. However, in his reasons on behalf of the court, reported as Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120, Robins J.A. stated at p. 155:

I should perhaps note Prenor's concession to the effect that Somerset's agreement to reduce the mortgage interest component paid by each purchaser by the difference between the rate actually used in the calculation of the occupancy fee and the mortgage rate effective 90 days prior to the unit transfer date is a liability of Somerset for which the receiver is responsible on final closing.

Despite Mr. Moldaver's efforts to persuade us to the contrary, there can be no doubt on a plain reading of the judgment in the context of the issues raised in the notice of appeal and the factums filed, that Robins J.A. was here acknowledging counsel's concession, that adjustments would be made to the occupancy fees notwithstanding the submissions to the contrary in counsel's factum.

[para11] As a result of this decision, the appellants were obliged to close their individual Agreements, subject to the above noted MIC reduction. In a letter dated October 22, 1992, Robert A. Miller of Gordon, Traub, as solicitors for Somerset and Peat, Marwick Thorne Inc. ("Peat Marwick"), which had been appointed by Prenor on November 21, 1991 to replace Retail Engineering as receiver/manager, advised the solicitors for the appellants that he was setting a closing date of November 18, 1992 for these purchases. In that letter he stated: The statement of adjustments and all closing documentation will be prepared in accordance with the original terms of the agreement of purchase and sale between your clients and Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited ("Somerset") subject to the following amendments:

1. all closing documentation will be executed by Somerset's receiver/manager; Peat, Marwick, Thorne Inc.
2. all "rental fees" paid by your client's will be credited against outstanding occupation fees payable by your clients pursuant to the provisions of the original agreements.

The appellants' solicitors replied, seeking to know the vendors' position with respect to, among other things, an "adjustment in purchase price/occupancy fee or other credit to the purchasers including reduction of the mortgage interest component". In a letter dated October 30, 1992, Miller responded in what is now sometimes known as the "Miller letter". As to the issue of the MIC, he wrote as follows:

There will be no adjustment to the purchase price or occupancy fee. However, in accordance with the Court of Appeal decision (page 61), there will be a reduction in the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate effective ninety days prior to closing.

The reference to page 61 is to the unreported reasons of Robins J.A. and corresponds to page 155 of the Ontario Reports citation above. Miller later took the position that this was a "gratuitous concession" that was "inadvertently made in my mistaken belief with respect to the reference to a concession being made by Prenor in the Appeal Reasons".

[para12] There was a falling out between the parties on this issue, and despite attempts to settle the amount of the rebate on the MIC, there was no closing. I will not set out the correspondence in detail. The crux of the disagreement had to do with which Toronto Dominion prime rate would form the basis of the reduction. The position of the vendors, as put forth by their solicitors, was that since the original closing date was to have been December 5, 1991, the rate in effect 90 days prior was to be used. The position of the appellants was that closing had been delayed and as a result, the appropriate rate was the one in effect 90 days prior to the delayed closing. Since residential mortgage rates declined steadily from the spring and summer of 1990, the difference between the two rates was significant.

[para13] I am satisfied on the record that ultimately the purchasers were prepared to settle the matter; they were ready, willing and able to close the various transactions on the basis of a reduction of the MIC rate to 10 percent. I am similarly satisfied that the solicitors for the vendors had no intention of closing these transactions in accordance with the Somerset undertaking, the Prenor concession, the Miller letter or any variation of the same. Communications continued between the solicitors to no avail. A new closing date of December 23, 1992 was set by counsel for the vendors. On December 24, 1992, the day following the intended closing, Gordon, Traub purported to terminate the Agreements, declared the deposits forfeit and demanded immediate vacant possession of the units. The appellants gave up possession and brought an application before Wilkins J.

Reasons of motions judge

[para14] The reasons of the learned motions judge are very detailed, but with respect, they indicate a complete misapprehension of the concept of the MIC or phantom mortgage, a misapprehension that was not shared by any of the parties to this litigation. The learned judge went over the documentation that I have referred to above and found himself unable to reconcile (a) "the interest rate on a first mortgage" referred to in what he called the Hagen promise; (b) the "mortgage rate" in the reasons of Wright J.; and (c) "... Somerset's agreement to reduce the mortgage interest component by the difference between the rate actually used in the calculation of the occupancy fee and the 'mortgage rate' effective ninety days prior to the unit transfer date" in the reasons of Robins J.A. Wilkins J. found that Miller was mistaken in his understanding of the effect of the decision of the Court of Appeal, but at the same time stated that his words were written with an intention to accord with the decision in the Court of Appeal. He said that Miller used the words he did because he "mistakenly believed that the Order of the Court of Appeal would somehow create that reduction".

[para15] All of these distinctions by the motions judge are artificial in the context of this dispute. It was never suggested in this court that these phrases had different meanings and I do not think that they have. Every party to this litigation was aware that the interest rate in the phantom mortgage or MIC was higher than prevailing interest rates. The purport of the Hagen promise was that if the unit holders would continue to pay the contracted rate of interest in the MIC, then on closing, Somerset would refund to each unit holder the difference between the agreed upon rate and the first mortgage interest rate in effect at the Toronto Dominion Bank 90 days prior to the closing date. The phantom mortgage rate was 15.49 percent as agreed upon in the interim arrangements pending the appeal from Wright J. The parties were never in any disagreement about this.

[para16] Miller's basis for resiling from his commitment was that he had made a gratuitous concession, not that he had failed to understand the court of appeal judgment. Mr. Moldaver attempted to minimize his concession in this court by referring to it as a "throw away". He tried to argue that it had been made with respect to a matter that had not been in issue in the appeal. He also said that it was Prenor's concession, and as such did not bind Somerset. Alternatively, he contended that it was gratuitous and non-binding because of lack of consideration. It appears to me, that Mr. Moldaver has reflected on his concession, and now feels that it was one that, as it turned out, he was not obliged to make in order to achieve success on Prenor's appeal.

[para17] In fact, as I believe I have demonstrated, the Somerset undertaking was very much in issue until Mr. Moldaver made it a non-issue by his concession that the MIC was to be reduced as stated by Robins J.A. The concession was relevant to Robins J.A.'s consideration of the quantum of the occupancy fees under his heading "Was there any basis upon which an abatement of the purchasers' interim occupancy fee or rent could be ordered?". From a reading of his reasons, I would conclude that because of counsel's concession Robins J.A. did not feel obliged to address the stated issue in Prenor's factum that Wright J. had effectively found that Prenor had assumed all the liabilities of Somerset including the Hagen promise. To suggest that Robins J.A.'s finding that Prenor was bound by the Hagen promise was inconsistent with the court's judgment overall, and that therefore the concession was irrelevant, is to argue the matter backwards. In my view, it is neither necessary nor profitable to speculate about what the court might have decided had the concession not been made. The fact is, the concession was clear and unequivocal and therefore binding on Prenor and its receiver, who in combination were effectively the vendors of the condominium units under the Agreements. This concession was re-asserted prior to closing by Gordon, Traub as solicitors for both Somerset and Prenor's replacement receiver.

[para18] I should add, parenthetically, that undertakings, concessions and statements of fact made by counsel during the course of argument are taken very seriously by the court and are accepted at face value. We were invited to look behind the Prenor concession in this court, but I decline to do so. In my judgment, Wilkins J. was in error in permitting evidence before him as to how this Prenor concession came about at the hearing of the first appeal. The same applies to evidence leading to the settlement of the formal judgment. Similarly, he should not have entertained evidence as to counsel's authority to make the concession nor concerned himself with whether it was supported by consideration at law. The concession of counsel speaks for itself and stands alone.

[para19] Returning to the motion judge's reasons, I should say that contrary to his perception, there is nothing in the record to indicate any difference between the parties as to the method of calculation of the MIC in the Hagen promise. The difference that later arose was with respect to the appropriate closing date. Miller asserted that the calculation should be made with reference to the prime rate that was in effect 90 days before December 5, 1991, the original scheduled closing date. This position makes no sense. The judgment of Robins J.A. was delivered on October 16, 1992. It is more than apparent that neither Robins J.A., nor later Miller, could have been referring to a date long gone by. The references to a closing date in both cases was prospective. I can only conclude that when Miller, on behalf of the vendor, set a new closing date of November 18, 1992, he did not realize that the Toronto Dominion Bank rate 90 days prior thereto was 6.5 percent as opposed to the interim fixed rate of 15.49 percent, which the appellants had agreed to continue paying, pending the outcome of the appeal from the decision of Wright J. The record is then replete with protestations from Gordon, Traub which are entirely inconsistent with the letter and spirit of what had been agreed to. [para20] In my respectful view, this misconception of the significance of the Hagen promise or Somerset undertaking and its subsequent re-assertions permeated the motion judge's reasons and resulted in his misapprehension of what was in issue between the parties on the final closing. It led to his finding that the conduct of the appellants in refusing to close on the respondents' terms was unreasonable. To the extent that his analysis of the significance of the Hagen promise and the use that the respondents made of it amounted to findings of fact, they constituted palpable and overriding error, which ultimately affected the outcome of the case.

[para21] The motions judge dismissed the application of the appellants on the basis that the appellants had:

...unilaterally attempted to enforce their interpretation of the Hagen promise/Prenor concession/Miller letter, both as to liability and interest rate, and that they unilaterally attempted to enforce the extinction of rights by way of merger on those issues notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 16 cited above.

Paragraph 16 of the agreements of purchase and sale stated that all covenants, warranties and the like would remain in full force and effect notwithstanding the transfer of title to the purchasers. The learned judge also relied upon paragraph 30, the standard clause wherein the parties agreed that there was no representation, warranty etc. "other than as expressed herein in writing".

[para22] These clauses related to the purchase and sale of the condominium units. As the respondents were quick to point out, the occupancy fees were not part of the purchase price under the Agreements. Neither of these clauses is any impediment to the appellants' position that the statement of adjustments on closing was to reflect the Hagen promise and its continued reaffirmations. Their conduct in holding out for a credit that had been promised them by Hagen was hardly unreasonable as was held by Wilkins J.

Analysis

[para23] I have dealt with a number of the issues in this appeal in the course of explaining the history of the litigation. In the last resort, the arguments advanced in favour of upholding the judgment of the motions judge were the following:

(a) Failure of the appellants to close on December 23, 1992

[para24] In this court, Mr. Moldaver commenced his argument by submitting that the appellants, as purchasers, had failed to close as required by law. He submitted that under the terms of the Agreements, the occupancy fees were not part of the purchase price and that the appellants should have closed the various deals under protest, with the option of litigating this issue yet again in a series of separate claims. As he put it in his factum:

The fundamental and threshold issue is whether the Appellants ought to have closed while paying whatever the Appellants determined was proper for the MIC of interim occupancy cost.

This was essentially the approach taken by the motions judge. He found it unreasonable for the appellants to have insisted on not closing unless and until the long standing dispute as to the appropriate adjustment was resolved. [para25] As I have indicated, the question of reasonableness has no application. There was only one issue outstanding between the parties pertaining to the MIC and that was the date on which the rate was to be calculated. If agreement could not be reached on this point, the parties were simply not ad idem. In my view, the refusal of the solicitors for Somerset and the receiver and manager to implement the Somerset undertaking justified the purchasers' refusal to close. The notion that they had to accept a deed, knowing that the vendor was not accepting as final the purchaser's view of what was due on closing and was intending to litigate for the balance, finds little support in the cases referred to by counsel: see for example LeMesurier v. Andrus (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.) and Leung v. Leung (1990), 75 O.R. (2d) 786 (Gen. Div.). Lemesurier dealt with relatively insignificant discrepancies in the description of the property, discrepancies which the vendors attempted to repair.

As Grange J.A. noted at p.7,

... certainly with the corrective measures taken by the vendors, the purchaser was obliged in the absence of some legitimate interest of hers being adversely affected to perform her part of the bargain ...". [Emphasis mine]

In Leung, the court held that the duty to act in good faith extended to cases involving minor omissions or defects and did not allow the vendor to repudiate an agreement where the purchaser's tender included minor but easily corrected errors. In contrast, in the case on appeal, the discrepancy between what was perceived by the purchasers to be the vendors' promise on one hand, and the position which the vendors were trying to force the purchasers to accept on the other was anything but minor or insignificant. Clearly, the legitimate interests of the purchasers were being adversely affected. Taro Properties v. Henry Waks and Sons, the unreported decision of this court dated December 22, 1993, so strongly relied upon by counsel, has nothing to do with the closing of a real estate transaction. The issue in Taro was whether a bank, by executing a cessation of a charge it had registered against a piece of real estate, had granted a discharge of the underlying debt. This court simply upheld the trial judge's finding that all parties were aware that the bank had executed the cessation of charge in order to permit the chargee to sell the encumbered property and had expressly reserved the right to claim the balance of the indebtedness covered by the charge from the chargee.

(b) The validity of the various undertakings relating to the MIC

[para26] The arguments on these issues are without substance. The first argument, failure of consideration, is the last refuge of the reluctant promisor. One would think that the threat of publicity and the potential for litigation must have been very real to a developer who was left with more than half his units unsold. Consequently, it is difficult to understand how it could be said that there was no consideration supporting the Hagen promise. In the motion judge's assessment, Hagen "was attempting to 'buy peace' and avoid the unpleasant consequences, including litigation, set out in the original correspondence". The argument is particularly weak in this case, the promise having been relied upon before this court by Mr. Moldaver in the appeal from the decision of Wright J., in order to defuse an issue that might have been determined adversely to the respondents in this appeal.

[para27] At the risk of appearing to restate the obvious, it is apparent that there was a mutuality of interest in the arrangement between the vendors and purchasers reflected in the Hagen promise. The unit purchasers were obliged to enter into occupancy under the terms of their agreements of purchase and sale and were obliged to pay an occupancy fee over and above the down payment of 25 percent of the purchase price. This occupancy fee was to be an interim arrangement until the condominium complex was completed. At that time, the unit holders could finance their own purchases and their obligation to pay the developer an occupancy fee or rent would cease. The problem that arose here was that the building was far from complete when the unit holders were obliged by their agreements to accept occupancy. In the result, they found themselves in a building that was deficient in many respects and they were paying an occupancy fee based on a mortgage rate that was well above the prevailing rate on the market.

[para28] The quid pro quo of the Somerset promise was that the purchasers would refrain from making public their complaints and instituting legal action in return for the promise that the developer would remedy the deficiencies and make an adjustment to the MIC on final closing. In the meantime, the status quo was to be maintained by, on the one hand, the purchasers continuing to pay the agreed occupancy fee despite the inflated MIC and, on the other hand, by the developer completing the project. In fact, the developer did not complete the project and his contractor walked off the site leaving the project in the deplorable condition described by Wright J. in his reasons. The appellants did apply to the court for a determination of their rights under the Agreement but continued to pay the occupancy fee and the developer accepted it.

[para29] We were told that counsel for the respondents purported before Wright J. to unilaterally withdraw the Hagen promise. I am not sure that he was in a position to do so, but the point is now moot. Even if we assume that the developer was successful in withdrawing the undertaking, it was reinstated by the interim arrangements pending appeal and was permanently revived by Mr. Moldaver in his concession to this court on the appeal. The promise was restated by Miller on behalf of the vendors on closing. The appellants for their part, paid the inflated MIC as a condition of continuing to occupy the units up to the aborted closing. In my opinion, it is clear that consideration flowed from the purchasers to the developer for the undertaking.

[para31] The third argument was the least convincing. Mr. Moldaver argued that his concession, if it was one, was given on behalf of Prenor and not Somerset, which was not a party to the appeal. This, in my opinion is a technicality. The only reason Somerset was not a party to the appeal was that Prenor, as mortgagee, had appointed Retail Engineering as receiver/ manager and had taken over the operation of the project and carriage of the appeal. Members of Gordon, Traub have acted as solicitors and/or counsel for the developer and its successors from the outset and have been privy to all assertions and reassertions of the undertaking throughout these tangled proceedings. They have consistently acted for whichever party was in a position to deliver the deeds on closing under these Agreements. They cannot now split hairs about whose interests they were representing at a particular time.

[para32] Finally, the respondents also seek to raise the defence of estoppel. In their factum they state that the appellants are "estopped" from re-asserting the validity of the Hagen promise because the finding of Wright J. that the promise was made was reversed on appeal and cannot be re- argued. I think they intended to say that the issue is res judicata. No matter, the Prenor concession took the issue away from the Court of Appeal and it was never finally adjudicated. The Prenor concession kept the Hagen promise alive for all purposes.

[para33] I do not think that this is a case of the unit holders asserting a technical position. They continued in occupancy under the inflated rates until December of 1992, when they were evicted after being unwilling to close on their purchases. The consideration for the promised rebate was ongoing on the part of the unit holders. When one adds the concession to the Court of Appeal and the acknowledgment by Miller that such a concession was made, the position of the appellants seems to me to be unanswerable. They continued to occupy their units on the strength of the developer's commitment, later renewed by the receivers, that an adjustment would be made on closing in accordance with the formula set out in the Hagen promise. This promise was never honoured.

Relief sought

[para34] The factum of the appellants was filed with this court on July 25, 1994, containing a schedule (Schedule D) which summarizes each appellant's claims. These calculations were not disputed by the respondents in their factum or in argument. The schedule sets out the deposit forfeited by each of the appellants on the date of the aborted closing, December 23, 1992, and the interest due on those deposits as of that date. The schedule also shows the amount of the occupancy fee paid by each appellant with the MIC unadjusted, and the amount that would have been paid had the prime rate of September, 1992 been used. The difference between the two is shown as of December 23, 1992. I think that the total of the forfeited deposit with interest, plus the difference between the unadjusted and the adjusted MIC constitutes the correct measure of the relief to which the appellants are entitled. The final figures are set out in a chart below. They are taken from Schedule D. In addition, the appellants should receive pre-judgment interest on those sums until the initiation of these proceedings on July 12, 1993 and post judgment interest thereafter.

[para35] Accordingly, I am prepared to allow the appeal, set aside the judgement of Wilkins J. and substitute in its place a judgment containing the following:

- a) A declaration that the appellants were not obliged to close the Agreements on December 23, 1992 or at all, by reason of the breach by the respondents of Somerset's agreement to reduce the MIC;
- b) An order compelling the respondents to pay to the appellants the amounts set forth in the chart below;
- c) An order that the respondents pay pre-judgment interest on the aforesaid sums to July 12, 1993 and post judgment interest thereafter;
- d) An order that all money paid into court by the appellants, including interest accrued thereon, be forthwith paid out to the appellants to the credit of the amounts owing by the respondents to the appellants;
- e) An order dismissing the counter-application;

f) An order that the respondents pay to the appellants their costs of the application and counter- application before Wilkins J., including GST, forthwith after assessment thereof;

f) An order that the respondents pay to the appellants their costs of this appeal, including GST, forthwith after assessment thereof.

Terry Stafford and Susan Stafford, Applicants, and Frontenac Condominium Corporation No. 11 and The Board of Directors of Frontenac condominium Corporation No. 11, Respondents Action No. 7000/93 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Ottawa, Ontario McWilliam J. September 21, 1994.

Kurt R. Pearson, for the Applicants. James Davidson, for the Respondents.

[para1] McWILLIAM J.:-- The applicants (purchasers hereinafter) bought the ground floor, retail/commercial space of the respondents' condominium (the condo hereinafter) on November 26, 1992. It is a 95-unit building on the Kingston waterfront called the Landmark Residences (94 are residences) at 165 Ontario Street. The transaction closed on February 4, 1993. On January 28, 1993 the condo gave an estoppel certificate to the purchaser pursuant to s. 32(8) of the Condominium Act (hereinafter the Act).

[para2] It provides:

Any person acquiring or proposing to acquire an interest in a unit from an owner may request the corporation to give a certificate in the prescribed form in respect of the common expenses of the owner and of default in payment thereof, if any, by the owner, together with such statements and information as are prescribed by the regulations, and the certificate binds the corporation as against the person requesting the certificate in respect of any default or otherwise shown in the certificate, as of the day it is given.

The Board of Directors of the Condominium Corporation knew in 1992 that the Condominium was faced with the potential for major expenses in 1993, but did not disclose this information to the Applicants. Instead, the Corporation induced the applicants, by way of the estoppel certificate, to complete the purchase of the property to the Applicant's detriment.

[para7] The purchasers also state that the work proposed constituted a substantial alteration of the condo's assets and as such would require the concurrence of 80 per cent of the owners of the units, and no such support was obtained. In addition the purchasers said that contrary to the undertaking given in the estoppel certificate the condo did have knowledge of circumstances that might have resulted in an increase of common expenses that it failed to disclose. Such failures to disclose violated section 32(8) of the Act, and the statements made in the estoppel certificate were so inadequate as to amount to non-disclosure in the circumstances.

SUBSTANTIAL UNDERTAKING

[para8] When the vote was taken at the spring meeting, the majority (44-36) also approved that glass would be used to replace the brick wing walls on the cantilevered balconies. The material discloses that in cost terms there does not appear to be any major difference between the cost of glass and brick [Respondents' Record, Tab 1(b)]. It seems the consulting engineer Peter R.F. Morrin preferred glass for its lower, long-term maintenance costs.

[para9] The Board of Directors was advised by its solicitors in March, 1993 (Respondent's Record, Tab J) that such a vote would comply with section 38 of the Act, and that an 80 per cent approval by condo owners was not required.

[para10] Section 38(1) provides:

The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

[para11] In my view the section envisages two kinds of additions: substantial additions, etc., and simply any other additions, etc. Substantial changes require a weighted vote of 80 per cent approval. Other changes simply require a vote, and I would courageously read in majoritarian and affirmative as necessary conditions of that other vote.

[para12] Essentially the work was undertaken to correct a problem with the brick wing walls which were in a dangerous condition due to spalling and cracking, and the concrete work on the cantilevered balconies was more obviously in the nature of replacement than the glass ends of the wing walls were. This is true notwithstanding that the original design had an aluminum and glass railing across the front of the balconies [Respondents' Record, Tab G]. Yet the glass essentially performs the same structural and safety purpose as the brick wing walls. Still it does change the appearance of the building. Nevertheless, in my view, such an apparent change does not represent a substantial addition, etc. as set out in s. 38. Courts must consider carefully in what circumstances they will declare an addition substantial. The remedy of immediate buy out available to a potential minimum of 20.1 per cent of owners who dissent under s. 38(4) requires sober, second thought before being unleashed. I note that the condo's declaration [Article IV 4 (a)] gives the Board of Directors the right to decide the substantial issue, but essentially the Board chose the "other addition" option and had the vote. Consequently I am not called upon to decide the efficacy of that article of the declaration. The steps the Board took complied with the requirements of section 38.

DISCLOSURE

[para13] The purchasers raised the general argument that the disclosure obligation implicit in section 32 of the Act was not complied with by the condo. The disclosure made in the estoppel certificate amounts, in effect, to non-disclosure, they claimed. Counsel sought to impress the condo with knowledge of budget, structural defects and other deficiencies prior to January 28, 1993 such that its statements in the estoppel certificate about budget (paragraph 4) and common expenses (paragraph 6) and substantial additions (paragraph 8) were improper inducements for the purchasers to close the purchase on February 4, 1993.

SHORT HISTORY OF PROJECTIONS

[para14] In a Technical Audit by Richards dated November, 1990 cantilevered balconies were listed as a deficiency item costing $300,000 to repair, and it was to be paid off at $75,000 a year from 1991 to 1994. The audit noted that the deterioration was not of "structural significance at the present time." It also recommended that $40,000 a year be set aside for the following five years to repair tower masonry cladding caused by the same phenomena which affected the brick end walls, the freeze-thaw cycle [Tab 25]. The operating rule (1991) of the Reserve Fund Committee was that "only major expenditures for common property items will be included as Reserve Fund expenditures" (emphasis in text).

[para15] In May of 1992 the chairman of the board told the Spring meeting of the owners that he did not anticipate any special assessment made on account of the Reserve Fund in 1992. A Reserve Fund Committee report dated August 25, 1992 made refurbishing and repairing all masonry and flashing a first priority at an estimated cost of $340,000. On October 2, 1992 owners were notified that "urgent preventative measures and tests relating to balconies...must be undertaken in the immediate future." Balcony deterioration was considered in the 1992 Reserve Fund and was put forward, in the light of other priorities, to be "undertaken" in 1993. On December 15, 1992 the owners had their annual meeting. [Tab 36] The chairman's report which was appended to the minutes reported on activities related to the Reserve Fund. It noted that during concrete work on the balconies carried over from 1991 serious deterioration was observed and test core samplings were ordered plus chain dragging. The report concluded:

Until these tests have been completed and analyzed, early in January 1993, a valid estimate of balcony repair costs cannot be made. However, we know that the costs will be significant. [Tab 36, p. 4]

[para16] Later the chairman specifically addressed the Reserve Fund budget. The Reserve Fund makes contributions to the regular monthly condominium fees. He noted as well:

During the fiscal year 1992, events have taken place which were unforeseen and un predictable i.e. unbudgeted emergency measures as reported above. Consequently, the Board believes that due to the uncertainty as to the magnitude of cost for ensuing major projects in 1993, in particular cantilevered balconies, any attempt to prepare a 1993 Reserve Fund Project List and a Reserve Fund Budget at this time would be fruitless. When estimates have been received early in 1993 following the balcony tests by J.L. Richards & Associates, we will be able to calculate the amount of money required to perform the necessary Reserve Fund work in 1993 and bring the contingency level up $250,000. It should be noted that in order to keep our Condominium Fees at a reasonable level, it is proposed that a special assessment can be anticipated.

[para17] Counsel for the purchasers referred the court to the Minutes of the Owners' meeting of July 20, 1993 [Tab 22]. There, he said, the Board received four options to replace the brick end walls in January. It should be pointed out that immediately after the options were discussed the minutes record:

Since the initial presentation of alternatives on the 19th day of March, 1993 another material considered was of a concrete type appearance.

[para18] Essentially the possibility of these options was disclosed by the repair work mentioned in the exception in clause 8 of the Estoppel Certificate, i.e. that the condo was not considering any common element renovations other than those normally financed by the reserve fund subject to the results of present engineering tests on the balconies by J.L. Richards & Associates.

[para19] As far as other expenses are concerned, the president Leigh Cruess swore on December 9, 1993:

However, as of the end of 1992, we had no information that these expenses, or any other expenses not related to the balconies, might result in a special assessment. We thought that any special assessment would be the result of the required repairs to the balconies and that our reserve fund policy would otherwise meet our needs.

[para20] A breakdown of the figures in the notice of the special assessment justify Mr. Cruess' observations, and Mr. Davidson's submission that this special assessment was balcony-driven.

JURISPRUDENCE

[para21] Counsel agree, in general, that there is a paucity of precedent concerning section 32(8) of the Condominium Act. The applicant, however, maintains that analogy suggests the court ought to adopt tough disclosure standards in scrutinizing estoppel certificates. He cited with approval Mr. Davidson's article in 1991 on Estoppel Certificates. He wrote if circumstances could realistically result in costs or expenses that would not be covered by the corporation's short term (operating) budget or long term (reserve) budgeting, they must be disclosed.

[para22] Mr. Davidson also nodded toward commercial realism and noted that "unnecessary alarm" should be avoided by statements in estoppel certificates.

[para23] In Rowntree v. Breakers East Inc. (1992) 10 O.R. (3d) 120, Robins, J.A. opted for a broad interpretation of s. 52 of the Condominium Act regarding condominium declarations, and the need for developers to comply with the "consumer protection objectives" of the Act. His Lordship said at p. 136:

The purchaser is clearly entitled to the information called for by the Act in order to make an informed decision about his or her condominium purchase. At the same time, however, once the ten-day period has expired, the vendor is entitled to assume that it has a binding agreement of purchase and sale and to rely on the certainty of that agreement in developing the project and conducting its business affairs.

[para24] A disclosure statement, he said, must be "defective in a material respect." Once a purchaser goes through the cooling off period of ten days provided in the Act, Mr. Justice Robins said the onus is on the purchaser who seeks to resile from his agreement. Here the purchasers knew that a special assessment was at least possible after the engineering studies were completed. They made no inquiries. Since the onus is on the purchaser to show that a disclosure statement fails to satisfy the Act to the degree that it must be declared non-binding, it seems to me to be analogously fair that the purchasers here are under the same onus to show that the special assessment is not binding on them. I find that the onus here has not been discharged. The purchasers failed to make any inquiries even though the potential liability ignored was unknown as to quantum. How can the purchasers' case survive the "commercial" branch of the test adopted by Robins, J.A.? In my view it can not.

[para25] Costs are reserved at the request of counsel. If they are not agreed upon, then counsel can make concise submissions in writing on a timetable to be arranged between themselves with the respondent condo commencing the exchange and replying. If counsel think oral submission are necessary, then the court co-ordinator at Ottawa can be spoken to for a date suitable to everyone. If counsel want a date in Kingston, I will be there doing criminal work beginning on Monday, November 14, 1994 for the week. Perhaps we could do it from 9.15 to 10 a.m. some morning. November 16 is not available as I have a sentencing at that time.

Sidney L. Jaffe and Ruth Jaffe, Plaintiffs, and Metropolitan Condominium Corporation No. 539, Defendant

Action No. 18222/87 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Non-Jury Sittings - Toronto, Ontario Grossi J. August 27, 1993.

M. MacDonald, for the Plaintiffs. B. Thomas, Q.C. and D. Klukach, for the Defendant. [para1] GROSSI J. (orally):-- This is an action brought by Sidney Jaffe and Ruth Jaffe against Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 539 for damages for breach of contract and tortious conduct, i.e. negligence.

The Facts:

[para2] Mr. Jaffe was charged in Florida with offences concerning a fraudulent land transaction, and he did not appear for his trial in Florida in May of 1981. It appears that the bail bond company took umbrage with his failure to appear. Mr. Johnsen, a representative of the bail bond company, went to Toronto to fetch and escort Mr. Jaffe to Florida. On September the 23rd, 1981, Mr. Johnsen attended the condominium located at 110 Bloor Street West in Toronto. where the Jaffes maintained a suite. He gained access to the lobby from the mall area on the pretext that he wished to speak to the Manager. Once in the lobby, he encountered Christopher Ryan and enquired of him if he was security. Mr. Ryan replied in the affirmative. Mr. Johnsen enquired if Mr. Jaffe was a resident. He identified himself as Officer Timm Johnsen with the fraud squad and that he had a number of fraud warrants re Mr. Jaffe. He produced a police investigative type picture (front and profile) of Mr. Jaffe, commonly referred to as a mug shot. He was not dressed in a police uniform. He stated that he wanted to go up to the Jaffe's suite. Ryan replied that Jaffe was not home and that he could not go up anyway. Johnsen countered that he could. Ryan advised that Jaffe was out jogging.

[para5] He described the tone as being a normal talking voice. He observed Johnsen and Jaffe leave the lobby and proceed to the car and Jaffe enter the rear seat and the car drive away. Attempts were made to contact the Jaffe suite. Eventually Jaffe's daughter, Robin, arrived and she was advised of the occurrence. The police were called and an investigation into the incident commenced.

[para6] The plaintiffs contend that Mr. Ryan, the person on security duty at 110 Bloor Street West, was negligent in the manner in which he dealt with Mr. Johnsen and, as such, the defendant is responsible for the injuries suffered by the plaintiffs. They contend that the duty was of a higher standard as this was a luxury condominium and the advertising offered a state of the art security system. The inference that the plaintiff would ask me to draw is that the security personnel would possess a degree of competency above that of security personnel in buildings of lesser status and, as such, would be trained to detect false identification and readily see that Johnsen's identification was suspect.

[para7] I have reviewed the evidence and the actions of Mr. Ryan. I find that he was not negligent. He acted in a way that one would expect of security personnel in the circumstances. There was nothing that would cause him to be suspicious of Mr. Johnsen's status. He requested identity and he was given identity and photographs of the plaintiff that would not cause security personnel to be suspect.

[para8] The plaintiff contends that it was a duty of Mr. Ryan to obtain the address of anyone identifying himself or herself as a police officer. Mr. Mark, the head of the security retained by 110 Bloor Street, said the obligation was to obtain the name and badge number. In his opinion, this is the essential information that tells all. In my opinion, his evidence established that Mr. Ryan did not omit any of the essentials required of security personnel when confronted by persons identifying themselves as police officers.

[para10] In his statement shortly after the incident, Ryan did not mention a telephone conversation with the security company Manager as to obtaining identification. In his evidence, he stated that he did not recall the conversation. In any event he had fulfilled his obligation with respect to establishing identification prior to the telephone conversation. The plaintiff contends that Ryan because of his emotional state and volunteering to Robin Jaffe that he screwed up was an admission of neglect of duty.

[para11] I do not draw that inference. Rather I draw the inference and, in my opinion, it is the proper inference that Ryan was upset and his behaviour was normal in the circumstances. It was that of a concerned person for the Jaffe family. Further, Ryan was not disciplined as a result of the incident.

[para12] The plaintiff further contends that Ryan should have asked for the production of the warrants. This may be valid if Ryan had allowed Johnsen access beyond the lobby. Johnsen was not allowed access beyond the lobby. In fact, he left the lobby and returned. Mr. Ryan may have attended during this time to other persons in the lobby.

[para13] Sidney Jaffe is not an unsophisticated person. He is a lawyer, businessman and traveller, at least to the United States. He was aware, or ought to have been aware, that due to his non-appearance for trial in the State of Florida, he may be in jeopardy. He had consulted counsel as to his status re extradition.

[para15] Ruth Jaffe was aware of his status or, if she was not, she should have been. She knew of his sports-related head injury. If there was any questions about Sidney Jaffe's capabilities as a result of the injury, she owed a duty to the defendants to advise them of his condition and provide them with instructions. [para16] At the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit and on being put to its election, elected to call no evidence.

[para17] The plaintiff led no evidence with respect to the by-laws of the defendant corporation and the Condominium Act. With respect to the Occupier's Liability Act, there is no evidence of a failure on the part of the defendant corporation to maintain the building in a safe condition.

[para18] Therefore with respect to the claim in tortious conduct, the by-laws of the corporation, the Condominium Act, and the Occupier's Liability Act, I find that the plaintiffs have failed to establish a prima facie case and I dismiss the action based on these claims.

[para19] The plaintiffs contend that the defendants are in breach of contract. The breach consisted in not providing the level of security that was offered as a part of the agreement between them. In their opinion, the security was to be of a very high standard. The security offered, according to, the witness Mr. Tomislich, was the providing of concierge services and 24 hour electronic surveillance. These services were in place at the time and he had no knowledge or any complaints with respect to security. He stated that he had been a realtor since 1960 and a resident of the building since 1980 and had been active in the sale of suites in the building.

[para20] It was understood that the police have access to the building. He would not have been alarmed to learn that security personal allowed the police to wait in the lobby. Further, the lobby was accessible to the general public and visitors were allowed to remain in the lobby awaiting the return of residents. He was not aware of Jaffe requiring any special status. He stated that there are diplomats residing in the building.

[para21] I find that there is an implied contract, that the responsibility for security was assumed by the defendant corporation on taking over the management of the building and that it continued to offer security services of the quality described in the agreement between the developer and the suite owners. I find that the security in place at the time of the incident was of the standard offered. I find that, on a balance of probabilities, the plaintiffs have not established a breach of any contractual obligation that the defendant may have owed to the plaintiffs.

[para23] MR. THOMAS: Your lordship, I thank you for your consideration of the case. As of yesterday, Mr. Jaffe has communicated with his fellow condominium corporation owners and is expecting legal costs to be paid. And in that respect, I have a letter which was directed to the condominium Board of Directors that was sent to me yesterday, and it's clear that Mr. Jaffe is intent upon pursuing costs from the condominium corporation.

[para24] On the instructions of our client, we drew up a bill of costs that in the event that you came to the conclusion that you did, we'd propose, with your permission, to deliver the bill to my colleague today, provide you with a copy and request that within a fortnight or however time you could permit us to return before you and have you hear submissions with respect to costs so we can set the amount of costs within a very short timer say two weeks, at which point we can then have -- you can have submissions from both sides as to the amount of our claim for costs, if you'll permit us to do so.

[para25] THE COURT: Yes.

[para26] MR. THOMAS: Thank you, your lordship. In that respect, I will tender to you a draft bill which has been prepared on the basis of our time spent and hourly rates that we believe are fair and reasonable in all of the circumstances. And we would ask you to permit us to call evidence of time sheets or whatever else you require, if necessary. But I invite my friend to call us at our offices to come over and see our dockets to determine whether or not the time was, in fact, spent.

[para27] And if he wishes to, we can give him an opportunity to satisfy himself on any bills that we have had to pay for experts' fees. As you will recall, you made a ruling in the course of the trial that you were not going to allow people to give evidence as to security, but prior to that, we'd been served with reports by my friend, and as a result, we had to engage experts ourselves.

[para28] So we will have bills to show Mr. Jaffe's solicitors that will substantiate our disbursements, and we will produce dockets showing our time and hopefully we could come before you with some rather short submissions on where he feels that we -- because I don't think there will be much doubt about the preparation for the pleadings and the affidavit of documents and the discoveries. Those were all done and we have docketed times.

[para29] And I know my friend's firm and other firms -- Mr. Jaffe, I think, has had four firms in the course of this action. So we will give my friend an opportunity to review all this information with his predecessors to satisfy himself that we did, in fact, spend the time.

[para30] If your lordship will then set a date, say, three weeks in advance in the future when you might be available, say, at 9:30, we would be most grateful.

[para32] MR. THOMAS: The 17th of September?

[para33] MR. MACDONALD: It would be my submission that costs should be assessed in this action. Just looking at the bill of costs just now for the first time, the costs appear to be very high. Our firm's just been involved with this action since the first week in June, since the pre-trial conference. I understand that there's been several motions made over the years in this action. It's an '87 action and we're not privy at this point to everything that has occurred. To prepare for an assessment, I think we'll have to go and speak to the other solicitors who were involved in the file, get their information, their evidence, their dockets to see if they match the dockets that I understand will be provided by the condominium corporation. And I think three weeks would not be enough time. I would suggest there's a system in place that would probably be more effective to deal with the issue instead of taking more of Your Honour's time and I think the costs should be assessed.

[para34] MR. THOMAS: Your lordship, as I say, I can tender to you a letter written August the 23rd to the condominium corporation by Mr. Sidney Jaffe in which he said he wants the costs paid promptly. Now, I can show that to you so you will have every reason to believe that I'm not misleading the court in any way. So if he wants his costs paid promptly, I see no reason why the condominium corporation shouldn't be treated in the same fashion. Just at the last paragraph of that letter he does bring to the condominium corporation. That's in addition, of course, to a proposition whereby he would be paid $900,000 by the condominium corporation for his damages in this lawsuit.

[para36] MR. THOMAS: It was written by your client, sir.

[para37] MR. MACDONALD: Thank you.

[para38] THE COURT: No. I feel that the three weeks is sufficient time to put this matter together, and I'll put it over till the 17th of September. I'll do it at 9:30 in the morning and we'll determine costs at that time.

National Trust Company, Applicant, and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 489, Tern Solution Group Corporation, Fred Ferguson and E.L. Bryenton & Associates Inc., Respondents Action No. 76011/93 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Ottawa, Ontario Charron J. September 14, 1993.

Robert Steinberg, for the Applicant. Norman Slover, for the Respondent, C.C.C. No. 489.

[para1] CHARRON J.:-- The sole remaining issue between the parties is whether the applicant, National Trust Company, is liable to pay to the respondent, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 489, the common expenses payable with respect to certain commercial condominium units for which the applicant is in receipt of rent. The premises in question are owned by the Douglas MacDonald Development Corporation and are occupied by various tenants. The applicant holds a first charge on the premises and is an assignee of the leases both pursuant to standard charge terms and by separate instrument bearing the same date as the charge. MacDonald defaulted under the mortgage on December 1st, 1992 and the default still continues. National served the tenants with notice to pay rent on February 22nd, 1993. Prior to that time the tenants were paying rent directly to the respondent, Carleton Condominium Corporation 489. CCC 489 would deduct the common expenses due on the units and then pay the net rents directly to the owner MacDonald. After being served by National for the notice to pay rent, the tenants refused to pay their rent directly to National and indicated their intention to continue to pay rent to CCC 489. An agreement was reached between National and CCC 489 whereby the Condominium Corporation would continue to collect all rents and deduct common expenses and pay the net rental money to National. However, a dispute has now arisen between the parties and this matter was brought before the Court.

[para3] It is common ground between the parties that if indeed the applicant can be said to be a mortgagee in possession as contended by the respondent, it becomes an owner within the meaning of the Condominium Act and as owner is responsible to pay the common expenses. It appears to be well settled that a mortgagee will not be deemed to be a mortgagee in possession based on the mere fact that it is in receipt of the rents on behalf of the owner. The relevant principles are summarized in Marriott and Dunn's Practice In Mortgage Actions in Ontario, (Carswell 1982) at p. 123 as follows:

Generally a mortgagee goes into possession by entering into actual occupation of, or by obtaining the receipt of the rents of the mortgaged premises: Lord Trimleston v. Hamill (1810), 1 Ball & B. 377; Fisher and Lightwood, Law of Mortgages, 7th ed., p. 720. However where the mortgagee was in receipt of the rents under a direction given by the mortgagor to the tenant, it was held that the mortgagee was not a mortgagee in possession; it must be shown that the rents have been received by him as mortgagee: Thomson v. Stikeman (1913), O.L.R. 146 at 159, affirmed 30 O.L.R. 123 (C.A.); Joseph v. Newman (1927), 31 O.W.N. 400, affirmed at 429 (C.A.). In the last analysis the question depends upon whether the mortgagee has taken out of the mortgagor's hands the control and management of the mortgaged premises, and must be determined having regard to the peculiar circumstances of each case: Lord Advocate v. Lord Lovat (1880), 5 App. Cas. 273 at 288; Falconbridge, Law of Mortgages, 4th ed., p. 626. It has been stated another way: that a mortgagee becomes a mortgagee in possession only when he asserts his rights as mortgagee: Gaskell v. Gosling, [1896] 1 Q.B. 669 at 691 (C.A.).

[para4] The applicant relied in particular on the case of Beckstead v. Ball et al., [1961] O.R. 127 (H.C.) where the Court reviewed the applicable principles and emphasized the fact that there must be some exercise of control beyond the mere receipt of monies before a mortgagee will be found to be a mortgagee in possession. The mortgagee must receive the rents in such a way that it can be said that he has intercepted the power of the mortgagor to manage the property. In Beckstead, the rent was paid to the mortgagee by reason of an agreement to that effect between the owner and the tenant. In all other respects, the relationship between the landlord and the tenant remained unaffected. In these circumstances, the Court held that the mortgagee was not a mortgagee in possession since the rents were being collected by the mortgagee as agent for the owner. A like conclusion was reached in the of First City Developments Ltd. v. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (1981) 21 R.P.R. 251 (N.S.C.A.)

[para5] In this case, it is relevant to note that National did not collect the rents prior to default by the owner MacDonald. It started collecting the rent pursuant to the following notice to pay rent.

This notice is being sent to you in order to advise you of the following:

1. Your landlord, namely The Douglas MacDonald Development Corporation, granted a mortgage ("the Mortgage") to National Trust Company in respect of the condominium unit(s) of which you have an interest in as tenant;
2. The Mortgage was made subject to standard charge terms filed as number 892;
3. Pursuant to paragraph 47 of standard charge terms No. 892 (a copy of the relevant page is enclosed), your lease and the rents payable thereunder were assigned to National Trust Company;
4. Your landlord also granted a general assignment of rents to National Trust Company (a copy of which is also enclosed) whereby all rents payable by you to The Douglas MacDonald Development Corporation were assigned to National Trust Company; and
5. National Trust Company is entitled to exercise its rights in respect of the Mortgage and the general assignment of rents and collect rent from you due to default by The Douglas MacDonald Development Corporation.

You are hereby directed to pay any and all rental payments which are due pursuant to your lease accruing on and after the date of receipt by you of this notice to Stephos Management Services Ltd., Suite 402, 1525 Carling Avenue, Ottawa, Ontario, K1Z 8R9, agents for National Trust Company. Please note that should you not honour this demand, you will be held fully responsible for the payment of the said rent to National Trust Company.

DATED AT OTTAWA, Ontario this 22nd day of February, 1993.

[para6] In this case, unlike the cases stated above, it is quite clear that National took it upon itself to collect rents not as agent for the owner, but as mortgagee of the property. After National sent the above notice, it entered into negotiations with the Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 489 with respect to the actual collection of rents and took control of the matter thereby intercepting the owner's right to manage its property. National commenced collecting rents not simply as agent for the owner but as mortgagee in the assertion of its rights against the defaulting mortgagor. In my view this is sufficient to constitute National Trust Company a mortgagee in possession within the meaning of the Condominium Act and as such it is responsible to pay the common expenses prior to applying the monies in payment of the owner's debt.

[para7] The application for a declaration is therefore dismissed. If the parties wish to make submissions with respect to costs, they may do so in writing within 10 days of the date of this order; if not, costs will follow the event on a party and party basis.

Action Nos. M2257/91U, M2682/91U and M1502/91U Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario E.M. MacDonald J. Heard: January 28, 1993 Judgment: March 4, 1993

Jonathan Fine, for the Applicants. Allan Sternbert, for the Respondent.

E. MacDONALD J.:-- The applicants seek a declaration that their agreements of purchase and sale are not binding by reason of the failure of the respondent ("Townsgate") to comply with Section 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O., c. 84, s. 52, as amended ("the Act").

The applicants seek, in the event that the court finds that the agreement of purchase and sale is not binding upon them, a declaration to the effect that their deposits be returned to them with interest. There is no dispute as to the quantum of their deposits.

The applicants are purchasers of condominium units in a high rise building containing 226 units located in the City of Vaughan. Townsgate is the vendor and developer and in early 1989, it began to market and pre-sell the units.

All of the applicants signed agreements of purchase and sale in late February 1989 and at the time of signing, they received copies of Townsgate's Disclosure Statement. They also submitted their respective deposit cheques as required in the agreement of purchase and sale.

Later in the spring of 1989, Townsgate began construction of the condominium building. Townsgate updated the purchasers on the progress of construction and advised them of the dates scheduled for their respective occupancy closings. None of the applicants read his or her Disclosure Statement when received.

Without going into the details of the background of each purchaser and his or her motives for purchasing, it is clear that each purchaser does not want to complete the transaction because of the sharp decline in the value of their investment by reason of the decline in the real estate market in the area.

Nevertheless, the applications are rooted in issues that emerge from Section 52 of the Act. Section 52(1) provides that an agreement of purchase and sale with a developer is not binding on a purchaser until the purchaser receives a copy of a Disclosure Statement. Section 52(6)(d) requires that the Disclosure Statement "contain and fully and accurately disclose a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39".

While there is no specific requirement for the Disclosure Statement to include the Condominium Documents, s. 52(6)(g) requires (as was formerly required by s. 24b of the 1974 amendment) the inclusion of "any other matters required by the regulations to be disclosed". Section 32 of the Ontario Regulation 217/79 (now Regulation 121 R.R.O. 1980, s. 32), which became effective on April 5, 1979, requires the developer to provide to the purchaser, along with a Disclosure Statement, the majority of the Condominium Documents.

The statute does not set out the manner in which one should "fully and accurately disclose" by way of a "brief narrative description" the "significant features" of the Condominium Documents.

I am in agreement with Mr. Sternberg's submission, based on the opinion of a leading expert on condominium law, that the intention of the legislation is not "to have the developer regurgitate in the Disclosure Statement what was contained in the complete documents, but rather to cull from them only the prominent or distinctive features and to bring these to the attention of a purchaser."

Townsgate's Disclosure Statement, at page 5, alerts the reader to the fact that the Disclosure Statement is only a brief description of some of the provisions of the Condominium Documents. If the purchaser requires further details, reference can be made to the Condominium Documents themselves. The Disclosure Statement which the applicants now allege is deficient is virtually identical to the form initially used by Audrey Loeb, in her leading text on condominium law entitled, Condominium Law and Administration.

It is important to note that there were extensive cross-examinations of the various applicants and there is no evidence that any of the applicants was prejudiced by what are now alleged to be deficiencies in the Disclosure Statement. I agree with the submission that the applicants seek to rescind from their respective agreements for reasons other than those related to alleged lack of disclosure in the Disclosure Statement.

The legal issues respecting a Disclosure Statement has now been dealt with extensively by the Ontario Court of Appeal in two recent decisions. They are Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 and Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation Ont. C.A. as yet unreported [1992]

Mr. Fine has advanced a creative and attractive argument on behalf of the applicants in the face of these decisions. As I understand it, his argument is that the test respecting the Disclosure Statement articulated by Robins J.A. in Abdool (supra) applies when there is a Disclosure Statement not something which purports to be a Disclosure Statement. I have carefully considered his comments about the Townsgate Disclosure Statements and I cannot agree that they are deficient in any material way with the result that the recent decisions of our Court of Appeal would be distinguishable from the facts before me on these applications.

In looking at the issues raised in this matter, I am guided by the comments of Robins J.A., at page 137 - 138:

In the absence of a standard form of disclosure statement or any legislative provisions prescribing its precise content, the answer to questions of this nature necessarily involves judgment calls by those responsible for drafting this document. The Act does not contemplate or indeed, in my view, permit a disclosure statement which simply reproduces the accompanying documents or sizable proportions of them. Decisions have to be made as to what items should be included or omitted to satisfy the requirements of brevity, generality and significance imposed by s. 52. Given the absence of statutory guidelines on these matters, a broad and flexible approach must be taken in determining whether a particular statement is so incomplete in detail or lacking in content or, by the same token, so encyclopedic, as to defeat the aim of the section and render an agreement non-binding.

If no disclosure statement is delivered, the purchaser obviously cannot be bound to the agreement. The problem, which these cases exemplify, arises when a purchaser, before final closing, seeks to rescind an agreement of purchase and sale on the ground that a disclosure statement, which on its face purports to address the matters enumerated in s. 52(6) and (7), does not in fact comply with those provisions. If, as I have concluded, only material departures from these provisions warrant declaring an otherwise valid agreement non-binding, when is a defect to be considered material? To invoke a common dictionary meaning of "material", when is a defect so pertinent, germane or essential as to render a disclosure statement in contravention of the Act and entitle a purchaser to cancel the transaction?

I approach this question first by reference to the applicable burden of proof. In my opinion, when a purchaser who has had the opportunity afforded by the cooling off period to consider the disclosure statement and the accompanying documentation, and has decided to go through with the transaction, subsequently seeks to rescind from his or her otherwise binding agreement of purchase and sale on the basis of the deficiency of the disclosure statement, the onus is on the purchaser to show that the disclosure statement fails to satisfy the requirements of the Act to the degree that the agreement must be declared non-binding.

To discharge this onus and prove the materiality of the complaint, in my opinion, the purchaser is obliged to establish objectively that had the information that was not disclosed, or that was inaccurately or insufficiently disclosed, been properly disclosed in the disclosure statement at the time it was delivered to the purchaser, a reasonable purchaser would have regarded the information as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that he or she would not likely have gone ahead with the transaction but would instead have rescinded the agreement before the expiration of the ten-day cooling off period.

The vagueness of the requirements and the absence of statutory guidelines mandate a broad and flexible approach -- not a rigid or stringent one -- in determining whether a given disclosure statement is adequate. As I indicated earlier, the disclosure statement cannot be viewed as separate from and unrelated to the other documents called for by s. 52(6) and (7); it must be seen in the context of the entire disclosure package. The narrative section of the disclosure statement can realistically be expected to do no more than highlight or summarize the most important features of the condominium documents and assist purchasers in comprehending those documents by directing them to the full text.

To require the inclusion of all of the details of the declaration, by-laws, rules and the like which the purchasers argue should be contained in the disclosure statement, and which the judgment of Wright J. [the decision appealed from reported at 4 O.R. (1991), (3d) 280] would indeed require, would be to ignore the overall criteria of brevity, generality and significance and turn what was intended to be a short and comprehensible statement into a lengthy and legalistic document no more comprehensible to lay persons than the underlying documents themselves. To satisfy the standard of disclosure contended for in these appeals would effectively compel drafters of disclosure statements to reproduce or make reference to virtually all of the items in the accompanying documents or face the risk of having their agreements of purchase and sale declared non-binding. Professional advisers would face the additional risk of professional liability if the agreements were invalidated by reason of these items not being included in the disclosure statement.

Few current disclosure statements, I venture to say, could withstand the scrutiny to which it is argued here they must be subject.

I also noted the observations of Robins J.A. about balancing consumer protection and "the commercial realities of the condominium industry".

The narrative section of the Disclosure Statement must therefore highlight and summarize the most important features of the condominium documents and guide purchasers in comprehending those documents by directing them to the full text. To satisfy the standard of disclosure suggested by Mr. Fine would mean that Disclosure Statements would have to make reference to virtually all of the items in the accompanying documents. Failure to do so could result in a declaration that an agreement of purchase and sale is non-binding. There were almost 50 disclosure deficiencies cited in the applications before me, and were I to accept Mr. Fine's position, I would create results which, in my view, would be contrary to the purpose of s. 52 of the Act in that it would avoid bringing the significant features of the Condominium Documents to the attention of a prospective purchaser.

The Disclosure Statement in these cases is a carefully drawn document, prepared with professional assistance, which on its face seeks to address the requirements of the Act. There is no suggestion that the Disclosure Statement is false or designed to mislead or deceive a purchaser. The Disclosure Statement provides a general description of the essential elements of the property, the proposed condominium and the recreational and other amenities. It also provides what is stated to be a brief narrative description of the significant features of the Condominium Documents. Purchasers are advised that the narrative is merely a brief description of the accompanying documents and are advised to have recourse to those documents for any additional information.

In this case, the Disclosure Statement is very similar to those approved by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Scanlon (supra). Furthermore, the matters complained of by the applicants in these applications are virtually identical to the complaints raised by the applicants in Abdool (supra). In Abdool, Robins J.A. stated at page 146:

I cannot accept that the cumulative effect of the deficiencies complained of, many of which are plainly picayune, can render these disclosure statements so lacking in information that they are not disclosure statements at all. In my opinion, the statements adequately tell the purchasers what they are getting.

CONCLUSION

I am in agreement with Mr. Sternberg's submission that the Disclosure Statement was of no importance to the applicants other than as a vehicle to attempt to escape a transaction for reasons that are entirely unrelated to the quality of the disclosure. There is no evidence to support a finding of materiality nor is there an issue on these facts of consumer protection.

The Townsgate Disclosure Statement, in my view, complies with the requirements of s. 52 of the Act. Accordingly, the within applications are dismissed.

Costs to the respondent to be fixed by me today at 4:30 p.m.

Supplementary Reasons

Released March 12, 1993

MacDONALD J.:-- I released written reasons in this matter on March 4, 1993 and indicated that costs would be to the respondent. Mr. Sternberg, counsel for the successful party, asked that his client be awarded costs on a solicitor and client basis. He cites Apotex Inc. v. Egis Pharmaceuticals and Novopharm Limited (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 321 as authority for his entitlement to full indemnification in accordance with a draft solicitor and client bill of costs submitted by him.

I do not agree that Apotex (supra) should be applied to the facts of this case. This is not a case for solicitor and client costs. The legal position taken by the plaintiffs and their overall conduct in the litigation falls far short of anything that gives rise to an entitlement by the successful party to solicitor and client costs.

Alternatively, Mr. Sternberg suggests that his client should be awarded costs on a party and party basis, subject to the proviso that, for all attendances after the release of the decisions of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 and Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation Ont. C.A. as yet unreported [1992] his client should have costs on the solicitor and clients scale.

The rationale for this position is simple. This case involves claims by condominium purchasers which were based on facts and legal issues that were definitively decided by the Ontario Court of Appeal against the position taken by the applicants. Mr. Sternberg argues that the applicants should have elected not to proceed following the release of the decisions in the Ontario Court of Appeal, thereby saving the costs incurred thereafter.

Mr. Fine, who was counsel for the appellants/applicants in Abdool (supra) has applied for leave to appeal the decision in Abdool to the Supreme Court of Canada. The issues raised by Mr. Fine on this application, even in the face of the determination of the issues in the Ontario Court of Appeal, are not such that there is an entitlement to the respondent for costs on a solicitor and client scale.

Having determined that the appropriate scale for costs is party and party, I now look to the draft party and party bill submitted by Mr. Sternberg. On this draft bill, the total for fees and disbursements is $33,149.08 including the purported allowances for costs on a solicitor and client scale after the release of the Abdool decision. This is for a one day plus one-half hour motion. On the second day, counsel appeared briefly, at which time I advised them that having regard to Mr. Fine's submissions (made on the first day), and the brief submissions of Mr. Sternberg, and the outcome of the relevant Ontario Court of Appeal decisions, I would be dismissing the applications. I endorsed the record "for written reasons to be released the application is dismissed together with applications under cover of applications No. M2682/91 and M15021/91U. Costs to the respondent to be fixed on March 3, 1993 at 9:30. a.m." (Subsequently changed to March 4th at 4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Fine has enumerated a series of objections to this draft bill which are summarized below:

1. Too much time spent in certain areas;
2. hourly rates too high;
3. block fees charged in situations where there is a duplication with other fees charged on the same date for preparation time;
4. charges for waiting time;
5. three sets of applicants were lumped into one bill of costs without any attempt to distinguish the actual costs incurred relative to the claim of each set of applicants;
6. the portion of the party and party bill that is calculated on the basis of solicitor and client indemnification (already dealt with above); the examination of the dockets reveals questionable charges;
7. mistakes in addition.

I have pointed out to counsel that my role is to fix costs, a function which is distinguished from an assessment of costs.

Without dealing specifically with the individual complaints raised by Mr. Fine, I would comment generally as follows. I agree that too much time is docketed in certain areas. In coming to this conclusion, I have examined the nature of the legal issues involved, the material contained in the motion records, and specifically, the contents of the affidavits which, according to the draft bill of costs, required preparation time of some 36 hours. The preparation of the affidavits of Messrs. Zagdanski and Leonard Fine should not, in my view, have taken 36 hours, and accordingly, I have reduced this item by one-half. It seems to me that 18 hours of time is more than sufficient having regard to the experience of the solicitors involved in the preparation of the affidavit material to support the response to the application. Preparation of affidavits of Zagdanski and Fine is therefore reduced by one-half with a fee allowed at $3,085.00. The disbursement remains as suggested, i.e., $120.00.

I agree as well with the next item of concern raised by Mr. Fine to the effect that too much time is reflected on the bill of costs for preparation for and attendance at cross-examinations. This also raises the issue about duplication of time spent in reference to block fees charged together with preparation time which is separated from the block fees.

The respondent is grasping to suggest that on a party and party scale, having regard to the issues in this case, the amounts should be allowed as suggested in the draft bill. I have arbitrarily reduced these amounts to reflect the actual attendances at the cross-examinations but I have not disallowed the preparation time.

Fee for Preparation Time $ 500.00 Counsel Fee 6.3 x $175.00 $1,102.50 Counsel Fee 2.2 x $175.00 $ 385.00

I note in respect of the disbursements for the transcripts of the cross-examinations held of Judy Kumer, Jason Silverman and Erica Kumer, that the draft bill of costs may unfairly burden them with attendances in respect of the cross-examinations of two other persons whose cross-examinations were relevant to the issues raised by the other applicants. Counsel have agreed with me that they will, between themselves, apportion the costs of the transcript for the cross-examination, indicated to be $1,808.84, fairly amongst all three sets of applicants. I leave this to counsel.

To turn now to the preparation for the cross-examinations of the parties Buyanovsky and Kacanovsky, I have reduced the preparation time by one hour to reflect the fact that many of the issues germane to this cross-examination would be readily apparent as a result of the preparation in the previous cross-examination.

Preparation time for cross-examination of Messrs. Buyanovsky and Kacanovsky (1 hour at $175.00) = $175.00

Counsel Fee (2.2 hours x $175.00) = $385.00

There is no objection to the disbursement suggested for the transcript of this cross-examination.

To deal with the preparation for the cross-examinations of Herbert Green and Joyce Green, I was alerted by Mr. Sternberg to the unique aspects of certain facts pertaining to Mr. Green. Nevertheless, I disagree that 6.7 hours is appropriate preparation time for those cross-examinations, and I have arbitrarily reduced it to three hours.

Preparation time for cross-examination of Mr. Green (3 hours x $175.00) = $525.00

Counsel Fee (2.2 x $175.00) = $385.00

The transcripts for these cross-examinations is an appropriate disbursement.

Mr. Fine has objected to the quantum of time suggested for the preparation of the factum and the brief of authorities. I am in agreement with this objection, and I have arbitrarily reduced the amount of time alleged to have been spent in connection with this item by one-half.

I have allowed the item for counsel fee on the applications returnable February 6, 1992 at $750.00. At that time the motion was originally returnable and was adjourned to a subsequent date. Again, I find Mr. Sternberg's preparation time suggested at 10.3 hours excessive, and I have reduced it to 6 hours having regard to his experience as counsel and having regard to the nature of the legal issues in dispute. I have allowed the student's time at 1.2 hours.

Preparation for hearing of applications returnable February 6 & 7, 1992

6 hours x $175.00 = $1,050.00 1.2 hours x $150.00 = 180.00 Counsel Fee on applications = 750.00

I am not in agreement that the preparation of an amended factum in light of the outcome of the decisions in the Ontario Court of Appeal requires approximately 4.8 hours. I have noted the comments of Mr. Fine in respect of the content of the factum and its derivations, and I have reduced the amended factum time from 4.8 hours to 2 hours.

Preparation of amended factum (2 hours x $175.00) = $350.00

Preparation for hearing of applications returnable January 29 and 30, 1993. Mr. Sternberg asserts that he had to "start from scratch" on the basis that there was a great deal of re-preparation related to the factual issues and that all preparation time previously spent was distanced and ineffective by virtue of the passage of time. On the preparation for the January 29th and 30th appearances, I have allowed 6 hours.

Preparation time (6 hours x $175.00) = $1,050.00

With respect to counsel fee on the application, I have allowed it at 7 hours as suggested by the hourly rate of $175.00.

7 hours x $175.00 = $1,225.00 2 hours x $175.00 = $ 350.00

Mr. Fine suggested that the applicable hourly rate for a lawyer of Mr. Sternberg's experience, as traditionally allowed by an Assessment Officer, is in the range of $140.00 to $150.00 an hour. Mr. Sternberg counters that this is unrealistic having regard to the internal hourly rate of Mr. Sternberg as charged to the clients of the firm, and having regard to the economic realities of the operation of law firms in today's economic climate. I am in agreement with Mr. Sternberg's submission that the rate suggested by Mr. Fine is too low, and I have allowed Mr. Sternberg an hourly rate of $175.00 throughout this process.

In the result, the party and party costs are fixed at $18,580.03, inclusive of disbursements. (See Appendix A). Applicable GST is to be paid 567 by the applicants.

The total amount allowable is to be divided in three equal shares with each share being paid by each set of the three sets of applicants. With respect to disbursements, I leave the matter of the apportionment of disbursements amongst the three sets of applicants to counsel, noting the comments that I made above about the costs for the transcripts of the cross-examinations which occurred on May 23, 1991 and June 15, 1991.

Ahuntsic Investments Incorporated and 755456 Ontario Limited, Plaintiffs, and Annie Cheng, Defendant

Action No. 48244/90 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Roberts J. December 5, 1992

Patricia M. Conway, for the Plaintiffs. Robert A.L. Shour, for the Defendant.

ROBERTS J.:-- This is an action arising out of an agreement of purchase and sale (condominium - resale) dated the 20th day of February, 1989. The defendant, Annie Cheng (Cheng) was the purchaser and the plaintiff, Ahuntsic Investments Incorporated (Ahuntsic) was the vendor. The property which was the subject matter of the agreement was a condominium unit located at 33 Harbour Square, known as Apartment No. 2803, together with a proportionate interest in the common areas of the condominium.

At the commencement of trial an order was made amending the name of the plaintiff Ahuntsic Investments Incorporated to Ahuntsic Investment Inc. and amending the statement of claim in the terms of the notice of motion filed as Exhibit "A" herein. A further order was made amending the statement of defence in the terms of the notice of motion filed herein as Exhibit "B".

The plaintiff 755456 Ontario Limited was at all material times the registered owner in trust of Unit No. 2803. Ahuntsic was the beneficial owner.

THE FACTS:

Ahuntsic and Cheng entered into the agreement of purchase and sale herein dated the 28th day of February, 1989. The said agreement called for a completion date for the purchase of Unit 2803 of the 30th day of June, 1989. The purchaser was to be permitted until the 18th day of April, 1989 to examine the title to the property and was given a further 30 days, until May 18, 1989, to satisfy herself that there were no outstanding municipal work orders or deficiency notices affecting the property.

Both the plaintiff Ahuntsic and the defendant Cheng were experienced real estate investors and they had purchased or were purchasing the subject property for the purpose of investing. Annie Cheng was a solicitor having been called to the bar of Ontario in 1983 and included in her practice the area of real estate law. Annie Cheng acted for herself in this transaction.

On March 14, 1989 Cheng, in her capacity as solicitor, sent a requisition letter to the solicitor for Ahuntsic. That requisition letter included the following pro forma requisition:

"4. REQUIRED: Evidence that the property complies with all existing building regulations and zoning by-laws and that its present use may be continued and that there are no outstanding work orders or deficiency notices under any Municipal By-Laws or Provincial legislation affecting the property.

No further relevant requisitions were received by the plaintiffs prior to May 18, 1989. By letter dated April 24, 1989 the solicitors for the plaintiff responded to requisition No. 4 of Cheng as follows:

"Satisfy yourself."

All parties to this action agree that the response "Satisfy yourself" to the pro forma requisition contained in the letter of March 14, 1989 was a proper response under the circumstances and I so find.

On May 16, 1989 the City of Toronto, Department of Buildings Inspections issued an "Order of Inspector" pertaining to 33 Harbour Square. The order stated, inter alia, that some 48 items "must be remedied within 120 days". The 48 items stemmed from the passing of a By-Law in late 1988 by the City of Toronto in the form of an amendment to By-Law 73-68. The amending By-Law may be generally described as "the anti-mugging By-Law" and required certain improvements to the parking garage area of 33 Harbour Square. The 48 items alluded to in the "Order of Inspector" in fact were 8 items per parking level there being 6 parking levels in the building.

On or about May 31, 1989 Cheng became aware of the specifics of the May 16 "Order of Inspector" and as a result thereof wrote a letter of requisition to the solicitors for the vendor as follows:

"REQUIRED: On or before closing evidence that all of the outstanding work orders have been complied with."

By letter dated June 5, 1989 the solicitors for the vendor, Ahuntsic, referred Cheng to paragraph 9 of the agreement of purchase and sale and took the position that the requisition by Cheng was out of time. The purchaser Cheng responded by taking the position that the work order was a defect in title which affected the marketability of the condominium unit and reiterated her insistence upon its clearance.

Cheng, on the closing date, June 30, 1989 refused to close the transaction. This action was commenced by the plaintiffs for damages for breach of contract.

THE CONTRACT OF PURCHASE AND SALE AND THE WORK ORDER

This case resolves itself around the question of whether or not the existence of the "Order of Inspector" dated May 16, 1989 is a "work order" which entitled the purchaser to treat the agreement of purchase and sale as being at an end. In order to answer that question it is necessary to look at the nature of the alleged work order in the context of the agreement of purchase and sale.

Throughout most of the trial it was argued by the plaintiffs that the "Order of Inspector" was not a work order "for the purposes of the contract of purchase and sale". The evidence of Mr. Donaghue a solicitor, called by the defendants, with undoubted expertise in the real estate field was that in the practice of real estate, orders of the nature of the one dated May 16, 1989 were considered, for the purposes of the words "work orders" contained in agreements of purchase and sale, to be "work orders". He stated that he came to that conclusion on the basis that the City of Toronto, Department of Buildings and Inspections order of May 16 ordered certain work to be done. Mr. Donaghue further stated that to his knowledge there was no formal definition of the words "work orders" as used in the standard form of agreement of purchase and sale, one version at least of which he had had a hand in drafting during his service on a committee of the Canadian Bar Association.

I have no hesitation in accepting the logic and evidence of Mr. Donaghue to the effect that the "Order of Inspector" dated May 16, 1989 in this case is, for the purposes of the agreement of purchase and sale herein, a "work order" and I so hold.

The next question therefore to be asked is what is the nature of the work order complained of by Cheng in this action?

The work order of May 16, 1989, requires work to be done to the lighting, painting and signage in the parking garage at 33 Harbour Square. The evidence was that the 33 Harbour Square parking garage was also used by the condominium owners at the neighbouring building 55 Harbour Square. The cost of repairs would be shared by those condominium unit holders with the unit holders of 33 Harbour Square. There are 539 condominium units in 33 Harbour Square. Although there was no evidence prior to the 30th of June as to the exact cost of the repairs required by the work order there was evidence to the effect that the painting cost would be in the neighbourhood of $84,000.00 and that there would be additional cost for lighting. The exact amount of that cost was not known but it could be, in my opinion, put in perspective when one considers that the purchase price of unit No. 2803, the subject matter of this action, was $500,000.00 and the evidence showed that the contribution to common area expenses by the owner of 2803 was .1713%. In hindsight the evidence was that the actual cost of complying with the work order was $105,000.00 or $181.65 referable to unit 2803.

The defendant Cheng was, until May, 1989, a member of the Board of Directors of the condominium corporation for 33 Harbour Square. She admitted in her evidence that she knew of the provisions of the amending City of Toronto By-Law referable to garages and the evidence indeed disclosed that prior to the issuance of the work order by the City of Toronto on May 16, 1989, the condominium corporation was already implementing, in anticipation, some of the provisions of the work order. The work order itself states that the various provisions need not be remedied for 120 days after May 16, 1989 which date would have fallen well beyond the June 30 closing date. In addition, the evidence was that the condominium corporation at all times intended to comply with the provisions of the work order and was working together with the inspector from the City of Toronto towards that end. The City at no time commenced any proceedings against 33 Harbour Square, never registered anything on title arising out of the work order of May 16 and in fact co-operated fully with the condominium corporation in extending on a reasonable basis the time for completion.

In light of all of this the defendant Cheng takes the position that the failure of the vendor to satisfy the work order by June 30, 1989, notwithstanding the fact that the date for completion of the work order did not mature until substantially later than June 30, 1989, gave her the right to treat the contract at an end. The facts also disclose, in the cross-examination of Cheng, that she had, placed another condominium at 33 Harbour Square owned by herself on the market in November, 1989. Cheng's evidence was that the solicitor for the purchaser did not requisition work orders in that transaction, that the question was not raised and that the work order problem did not occur to her at that time. She stated that in her opinion she had no obligation to disclose or give notice of such work order. She gave that evidence notwithstanding the fact that she had, at that very time, placed a lien on the title to Unit 2803 claiming a right to the return of her deposit based on the work order and was in the process of advancing her claim.

WHAT DOES THE CONTRACT SAY WITH RESPECT TO WORK ORDERS?

The agreement of purchase and sale contains three relevant sections. They are as follows:

"4. Except as otherwise provided herein, vendor shall discharge at his own expense all liens, charges and encumbrances affecting the real property on or before completion. . . .

9. . . . Purchaser shall be allowed until 11:59 p.m. on the 18 day of April, 1989 (requisition date) to examine the title of the real property at his own expense, and until the earlier of: (i) thirty (30) days from the later of the requisition date or the date on which the conditions to this transaction are fulfilled or otherwise waived or; (ii) five (5) days prior to the completion, to satisfy himself that there are no outstanding Municipal work orders or deficiency notices affecting the real property, . . . If within that time he shall furnish vendor in writing with any valid objection to title or to any outstanding work order which vendor shall be unable to remove, remedy or satisfy and which purchaser will not waive, this agreement, notwithstanding any intervening acts or negotiations in respect of such objections, shall be null and void and all deposit monies paid by purchaser hereunder shall be refunded

13. Purchaser agrees to accept title to real property . . . provided that title to the real property is otherwise good and free from all encumbrances except:

(a) As herein expressly provided. . . ."

In addition to paragraphs 4, 9 and 13 the agreement of purchase and sale includes in the definition of "real property" the common elements.

All parties have conceded that the work order of May 16, 1989 does not go to the root of title and I so find.

The solicitor for the plaintiffs argues that the requisition of May 31, 1989 pertaining to the work order was out of time with the result that the vendor was under no obligation to satisfy it. The plaintiffs' solicitor further argues that the facts of this case are such that the vendor can take the position that the work order has been "satisfied" in the sense that that word is used in paragraph 9 of the contract.

The solicitor for the defendant argues that the work order goes to the title and renders the title to the property unmarketable. The solicitor for the defendant further states that the work order represents an encumbrance affecting the real property which has not been removed by the vendor pursuant to either paragraph 4 or 13 of the agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant's solicitor further argues that the work order, not having come to the attention of the purchaser until after the 18th of May, 1989 is a latent defect and that the court ought to extend the right to requisition that latent defect to include May 31, 1989.

THE LAW

The agreement of purchase and sale dated February 28, 1989, the subject matter of this action, sets out in paragraph 9 the date for requisitions pertaining to work orders. The contractual agreement between the parties is that such requisitions will be made on or before the 18th of May, 1989. It is my opinion that work orders are not dealt with in paragraphs 4 or 13 or, if they do fall within the general terms contained in those paragraphs, "all liens, charges and encumbrances" then they are "provided for otherwise" in paragraph 9. The result therefore is that paragraph 9 is the effective clause in this contract pertaining to work orders.

There is no dispute on the evidence that the requisition of May 31, 1989 made by the defendant, is outside the last day for requisitions pertaining to work orders being May 19, 1989. The question then which the court must address is what is the effect of that fact.

The case of Jackson v. Nicholson (1979) 25 O.R. (2d) 513 arose as a result of a late requisition made by purchasers with respect to a Zoning by-law. The Zoning by-law precluded the purchasers from using a sun room for residential purposes. The court held that the requisition was too late and therefore ineffective and gave no rights to the purchasers.

The court held at page 517 as follows:

"That case was discussed by Cromarty, J. in Jakmar Developments v. Smith et al. (1973) 1 O.R. (2d) 87 . . . another case of late requisition . . . Cromarty, J. went on to review other arguments and authorities referred to, including Innes v. Van de Weerdhof. He concluded that the requisition did not go to the root of title; and since it was made after the time limited for requisitions, it was of no effect.

In Majak Properties Ltd. v. Bloomberg (1976) 13 O.R. (2d) 447 . . . a number of requisitions were made after the time limited for doing so in the offer to purchase. The head note accurately summarizes the decision:

Whereby an agreement of purchase and sale of land, the time for making objections to title is limited, objections must be made within the period stated unless they are matters of conveyance or go to the root of title. Requisitions of a right-of-way, of consent of mortgagees to registration of a plan for subdivision, and a bar of dower, being neither matters of conveyance nor matters that go to the root of title must be made within the time limited by the agreement."

The court went on to hold in Jackson "that the more extensive clauses found in the offer to purchase in the case at bar appears to be an updating of the clause used in the Majak case, but they do not broaden the classes of requisitions which may be made out of time. Consequently, the purchaser's requisition in the case at bar was too late and of no effect."

I hold on the facts of this case that the requisition of May 31st, 1989 was made out of time.

In my opinion this work order does not represent a latent defect which extends the time for requisitions. The parties could have contracted for this eventuality but failed to do so.

Did the vendor "satisfy the outstanding work order" for the purposes of the provisions of paragraph 9 of the agreement of purchase and sale? Are the consequences of the work order so "de minimus" as to defeat the defendant's claim that the contract is at an end?

HAS THE WORK ORDER BEEN "SATISFIED"?

The evidence shows that the work order of May 16, 1989 did not require the completion of the work set out therein until 120 days after May 16 or considerably beyond the closing date of the agreement of purchase and sale. The condominium corporation had, prior to May 16, 1989 commenced the work required to meet the provisions of the City of Toronto Parking Garage By-Law. The condominium corporation at all times intended to comply with the work order of May 16 and was in constant contact with the representatives of the City of Toronto to effect that end.

The evidence at trial also established that there was an emergency fund in place whereby the condominium corporation had in excess of $800,000.00 for the very purposes set out in work order. In addition the defendant Cheng had obtained a document from the condominium corporation called an "estoppel certificate" which certified that for the next year the condominium corporation did not contemplate any assessment of its members. The effect of that estoppel certificate would be that if an assessment was made during that year the purchaser would not be liable to pay it. The evidence at trial was able to show in hindsight, that the provisions of the work order were in fact carried out and that it was never necessary for the City of Toronto to take any steps beyond the work order to obtain its ends.

In my opinion on the peculiar facts of this case the vendor can bring itself within the terms of paragraph 9 establishing that it has "satisfied" the work order.

DE MINIMUS?

Does the fact that the amount of money involved referable to the purchaser of condominium unit No. 2803 was approximately $181.65 bring into play the doctrine of "de minimus non curat lex".

The case of Shipp Corporation Ltd. v. Grove Park Investments Ltd. [1983] 26 R.P.R. 152, a decision of Mr. Justice Carruthers is an example of the application of the de minimus doctrine. The facts of the Shipp case were as follows: "The plaintiff agreed to sell an apartment building to the defendant. In the course of the routine inquiries before closing, the parties discovered that the fire department required improvements in the fire protection for the building. The fire department stated, however, that the building was habitable as it was. The purchaser refused to close on the grounds that there was an outstanding contravention of a by-law and that, therefore, the vendor was in breach of the agreement. The purchaser had, under the agreement, 17 days to object to any contravention of any by-laws. It failed to do so within the time limited by the agreement. In addition the amounts necessary to comply with the requirements of the fire department were $26,000.00. The purchase price of the property was $9,328,000.00. Mr. Justice Carruthers held at page 164 as follows:

"The agreement allows for no extension of the time during which the vendor is to satisfy the requirements of the work order, deficiency notice or direction as the case may be. As I have noted, the vendor is, at the time of entering into an agreement with similar provisions to that of the present, in the position of having to predetermine the amount of time it will require to work of unknown quantity and expense which it may be called upon to perform unless, of course, it is then aware of its nature and extent. The agreement allows for no extension of the period, should the vendor through no fault of its own find itself unable to do all that which it is required to do within the stipulated period. . . . Under the circumstances of this case it is difficult for me to think that a requirement to do $26,000.00 worth of work, raised for the first time within one (1) week of the day of closing and which could not be performed within that period, can allow the purchaser to set aside the agreement. There is over $6,000,000.00 that could have been used as security for the performance of the work which was completed at a cost of $26,000.00 or less than one-third of one percent of the total purchase price."

In my opinion the facts of this case are even more "de minimus" than those contained in the Shipp case. The figure of $181.65 when compared to the purchase price of $500,000.00 is not one-third of one percent like that contained in the Shipp case but is .036% or 10 times less significant than the amounts contained in the Shipp situation. It is my opinion that the de minimus doctrine applies in this case and I so hold.

CONCLUSION

I therefore hold that the defendant was not justified in treating this contract as at an end and was obliged to complete the transaction. The plaintiffs shall have their damages against the defendant.

DAMAGES

The plaintiffs called Mr. Ed Wery, a real estate agent, with Some 11 years experience in sales of condominium units at 33 Harbour Square. Mr. Wery's evidence was that he had been involved over those 11 years in some 630 unit sales, some of course on more than one occasion. He gave evidence of the efforts entered into by the plaintiff to mitigate its damages by placing unit 2803 immediately back on the market for sale. Mr. Wery stated that the market was falling from July, 1989 onwards and that the sale which finally ensued on January 31, 1990 for $425,000.00 was, in his opinion, the highest reasonably available price to be had.

Some evidence was led by the defendants with respect to statistical figures indicating that, in general, condominium sales were not falling across Toronto in the relevant period. I prefer the evidence of Mr. Ed Wery who had first hand experience and in my opinion made a credible witness. I therefore hold that the plaintiffs have mitigated their damages by selling the subject property for the sum of $425,000.00 which sale closed on January 31, 1990.

Mr. Rosszell, the owner of unit 2803, 33 Harbour Square then gave evidence with respect to his losses. He stated that he had lost the sum of $75,000.00 representing the diminution in price. He further stated that he had to pay a 6% commission on the sale which closed on January 31, 1990 which was 3% greater than the 3% commission he had negotiated for the sale which was to have closed with Mrs. Cheng in June, 1989. The additional loss claimed is $10,500.00. Mr. Rosszell stated that he had common expenses incurred for the additional 7 months he owned the property of $2,393.02, insurance of $81.28 and taxes of $1,350.52. I hold that all of those figures have been proven by the plaintiffs.

In addition, Mr. Rosszell received the sum of $14,000.00 in rental from a tenant of unit 2803 and that sum of $14,000.00 should be subtracted from the above figures.

Mr. Rosszell also gave evidence to the effect that he would have retired two outstanding debts to the bank on the 30th of June with the funds he was to have received. The first debt was for $115,000.00 at the rate of 14.5% and the remaining debt was for $370,000.00 at 12%.

Counsel also submitted to me their analysis of this interest claim. The plaintiffs' net interest claim is $37,000.31 and the defendants calculate interest at $35,056.41. I have reviewed the submissions of both parties and I prefer the defendant's interest claim of $35,056.41 and award interest in that amount.

In addition Mr. Rosszell incurred legal fees in the amount of $2,610.38 pertaining to the initial aborted transaction. In my opinion these fees are high because they may reflect some dealings with the tenancy agreement which was entered into. I therefore award legal fees for that portion at $1,600.00.

In addition, Mr. Rosszell incurred legal fees for 3,708.10 referable to the necessity to remove the lien placed on he property by the defendant pertaining to the $10,000.00 deposit. I hold that amount has been proven and is recoverable.

Mr. Rosszell gave further evidence that he incurred a financing charge of $1,500.00 necessitated as a result of the need to extend his line of credit from the 30th of June to the closing date of January 31, 1990. I hold that amount of $1,500.00 is also proven as part of his claim.

I therefore hold that the plaintiffs shall have judgment against the defendant in the net amount of $117,189.33.

The plaintiffs shall have prejudgment interest from the 30th of June to the date hereof on the legal fees of $1,600.00 plus the legal fees pertaining to the purchaser's lien of $3,708.10 plus the finder's fee of $1,500.00. The usual post-judgment interest shall apply to the entire judgment. If the parties cannot agree as to the rate of pre-judgment interest I may be spoken to.

The plaintiffs shall have their costs on a party and party scale unless, within 30 days of the date hereof the parties have made an appointment with me to review the award of costs. At that point I would take into consideration any formal offers of settlement made under the Rules.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 949, Applicant, and Ross Irvine and Jackie Irvine, Respondents

24 R.P.R. (2d) 140

Action No. RE 1249/92 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Ferrier J. Heard: July 20, 1992 Judgment: July 29, 1992

Mark H. Arnold, for the Applicant. Lesli Bisgould, for the Respondents.

FERRIER J.:-- Ross and Jackie Irvine live with their little dog Mickey in a condominium apartment at Harbour Square on the Toronto waterfront. Mickey is a miniature poodle; he is sixteen years old, deaf and almost blind.

The Irvines are tenants, having leased the apartment from the owner, Lillian Robbins. The tenancy commenced November 1, 1990 and the written lease contains a "no pets" clause. The declaration of the condominium, made under the Condominium Act, also prohibits pets from living in the building (with some exceptions not applicable to this case).

The Condominium Corporation seeks an order requiring the Irvines to "comply with the provisions of article 6(1)(d) of the Declaration" of the condominium. The effect of such an order would be to evict Mickey.

The Declaration is dated October 9, 1990 and was registered January 25, 1991.

If s. 108 of the Landlord and Tenant Act applies to this case, the order sought would be prohibited, and Mickey could stay. This is so because the facts do not fall within any of the exceptions in s. 108 which would permit the order to be made. In short, Mickey is not causing a problem.

The issue is whether or not s. 108 applies.

Various provisions of the Condominium declaration, the Condominium Act, the Landlord and Tenant Act, and the Interpretation Act, were referred to in argument. The text of those provisions are attached as a schedule to these reasons. The Condominium Act clearly permits a prohibition of pets: s. 3(3)(b). The Condominium Act obliges the corporation to effect compliance by the owners with the declaration: s. 12(3). Each owner is bound by the declaration and has a right to compliance by the other owners with the declaration: s. 31. The corporation has a right to apply for an order directing the performance of a duty imposed by a declaration and the court may do so by order and include any provisions considered appropriate in the circumstances: s. 49(1) and (2). The lessee of a unit is subject to the duties imposed by the declaration: s. 49(4).

Under the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, the apartment unit is within the definition of "residential premises". The Irvines are tenants within the meaning of the Landlord and Tenant Act: s. 1 and s. 79. Part IV of the Act, which includes s. 108, applies to the tenancy "despite any other act" and "despite any agreement or waiver to the contrary": s. 80(1).

No injunction, mandatory order, or other order shall be granted against a tenant based on provisions of an agreement respecting the presence of an animal in the premises unless certain facts exist: s. 108. As indicated above, such facts do not exist in the present case.

It is apparent from a reading of the above legislative provisions, that the Landlord and Tenant Act applies. It does not necessarily follow, however, that s. 108 prohibits the order sought. It does not necessarily follow that there is a conflict between the Condominium Act and the Landlord and Tenant Act. The Landlord and Tenant Act is remedial in nature and should be given a broad interpretation which gives effect to the objectives of the Act. The respondent argues this point and refers to s. 10 of the Interpretation Act and the decision of Potts J. in Re Boyd and Earl and Jenny John Limited (1984), 47 O.R. (2d) 11. Section 10 of the Interpretation Act requires such legislation to receive "such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best insure the attainment of the object of the act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit."

Such liberal construction and interpretation does not permit the court to ignore the plain meaning of words in the legislative provisions in question. Section 108 prohibits an order "based on the provisions of an agreement". The applicant corporation seeks its remedy, not on the basis of an agreement, but rather on the basis of the declaration legislatively authorized under the Condominium Act. If the legislature had intended that the prohibition would apply to a declaration under the Condominium Act, it could have readily so provided in s. 108. It did not do so.

Accordingly, I find that s. 108 does not prohibit the relief sought in this application and an order will go in the terms requested in the notice of motion.

The lease, in accordance with its terms, has apparently been renewed for the period November 1, 1991 to October 31, 1992. In the circumstances, in order to permit the Irvines to arrange alternative accommodation with Mickey, coincident with the end of the lease with Lillian Robbins, the execution of this order is stayed until November 1, 1992.

Unless either counsel indicate a wish to argue the question of costs, by contacting my secretary within 10 days, an order will issue that the costs of this application be to the applicant.

SCHEDULE "A"

Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C. 26

Section 2(4)

Upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act.

Section 3(3)(b) and (c)

In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection (1), and in any other section in this Act, a declaration may contain,

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

(c) provisions restricting gifts, easements and sales of the units and common interests;

Section 10

(1) The registration of a declaration and description creates a corporation without share capital whose members are the owners from time to time.

...

(3) The Corporations Act and the Corporations Information Act do not apply to the corporation.

Section 12(3)

The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Section 31

(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Section 49 (1) Where a duty imposed by this act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

(4) The lessee of a unit is subject to the duties imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules on an owner, except those duties respecting common expenses, and this section applies in the same manner as to an owner and, where the lessee is in contravention of an order under this section or where the lessee fails to pay, pursuant to a notice given under subsection (3), the court may terminate the lease.

"residential premises" means,

(a) any premises used or intended for use for residential purposes, including accommodation in a boarding house, rooming house or lodging house,

"Tenant" includes a person who is lessee, occupant, sub-tenant, under-tenant, and the person's assigns and legal representatives.

Section 79

"tenancy agreement" means an agreement between a tenant and a landlord for possession of residential premises, whether written, oral or implied, and includes a licence to occupy residential premises;

"tenant" means a tenant as defined in section 1 and in addition includes a boarder, a roomer and a lodger.

Section 80(1)

This Part applies to tenancies of residential premises and tenancy agreements despite any other Act or Parts I, II or III of this Act and despite any agreement or waiver to the contrary except as specifically provided in this Part.

Section 108

(1) No injunction, mandatory order or other order shall be granted against a tenant based on provisions of an agreement respecting the presence, control or behaviour of an animal in or about the rented premises unless the court is satisfied that the tenant is keeping an animal and that,

(a) the past behaviour of an animal of that species has substantially interfered with the reasonable enjoyment of the premises for all usual purposes by the landlord or the other tenants;

(b) the presence of an animal of that species has caused the landlord or another tenant to suffer serious allergic reaction; or

(c) the presence of an animal of that species or breed is inherently dangerous to the safety of the landlord or the other tenants.

(2) Even if satisfied that the tenant is keeping an animal and that the criterion set out in clause (1)(a) or the one set out in clause (1)(b) has been met, the judge shall not grant the injunction, mandatory order or other order if he or she is also satisfied,

(a) in the case of a finding under clause (1)(a), that the animal kept by the tenant did not cause or contribute to the substantial interference;

(b) in the case of a finding under clause (1)(b), that the animal kept by the tenant did not cause or contribute to the allergic reaction.

Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.11

Every Act shall be deemed to be remedial, whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of anything that the Legislature deems to be for the public good or to prevent or punish the doing of any thing that it deems to be contrary to the public good, and shall accordingly receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit.

Declaration for Number One York Quay made pursuant to the Condominium Act 6. The following are provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and restrict gifts, leases and sales of certain of the units:

(d) No owner of any residential unit shall maintain, keep or shelter in or about his residential unit (including any part of the common elements designated for his exclusive use) any animal. For the purposes of this provision, "animal" means any animal, whether four-legged or not, but does not include a fish or caged bird unless the same constitutes an unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment by other owners of the other residential units and common elements as may be provided for in the rules.

V. General

(b) Each owner shall comply and shall require all members of his family, residents, tenants, employees, customers and visitors to his unit to comply with the Act, this declaration, the by-laws, rules and regulations from time to time, enacted by the Corporation.

Liftall (Canada) Ltd., Plaintiff, and 596029 Ontario Limited, Julievale Developments Limited and Harry Valente, Defendants And Between Harpell Associates Inc. et al., Plaintiff, and 596029 Ontario Limited, Defendant And Between Frank Gosling, Plaintiff, and 596029 Ontario Ltd. and Julievale Developments Limited, Defendants

Action No. 3634/89 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Milton, Ontario Clarke J. January 9, 1991

T.A. Culver, for Liftall Canada Ltd. F. Zambosco, for all Defendants. D.C. Bowker, for Gosling and Harpell.

CLARKE J.:-- In this trial three separate plaintiffs whose actions were consolidated by order of Justice Carnwath dated the 14th of February, 1990, claimed specific performance or in the alternative, damages, against the defendants alleging breach of contract in the sale of certain industrial commercial condominium units located at 1272 Speers Road in the Town of Oakville, more particularly described as parts 1, 2, and 3, plan 2OR-38.37. The defendants a counter-claim for possession and arrears of rent.

The first plaintiff, Harpell Associates Inc. (Harpell) sued 596029 Ontario Limited and Julievale Developments Limited, alleging a breach of offer to lease dated the 3rd of April, 1985, which contained an option of purchase unit 2 for $66,870.00. The offer to lease ran from the 1st of May, 1985 to the 30th of April, 1987, and the option was to be exercised by the first of March 1986 (subsequently extended in writing to the 1st of September, 1986) provided that the condominium corporation had been registered.

The second plaintiff Frank Gosling (Gosling), carrying on business through his corporation GGOSCO Engineering Inc. sued 596029 Ontario Ltd. and Julievale Developments Ltd. alleging a breach of lease dated the 1st of March, 1985, which contained an option to purchase units 3 and 4 for $127,864.00. The lease ran from the 1st of March, 1985, to the 28th of February, 1987, and the option was to be exercised by the 1st of March, 1986, (subsequently extended in writing to the 1st of September, 1986) provided the condominium corporation had been registered.

The third plaintiff Liftall (Canada) Ltd. (Liftall) sued 596029 Ontario, Julievale Developments Ltd. and Harry Valente alleging a breach of lease dated the 27th of June, 1985, which contained an option to purchase unit seven for $66,870.00. This lease ran from the 1st of July, 1985 to the 30th of June, 1987, and the option was to be exercised by the 1st of March, 1986, (subsequently extended in writing to the 31 of December, 1986) provided that the condominium corporation had then registered.

Further, it is undisputed that defendant 596029 Ontario Ltd. was the landlord of all the subject units, that defendant Julievale Developments was the registered owner, and that defendant Harry Valente was the president and agent of both corporations. Moreover, the parties agree that the defendants were agents one of the other with power to bind each other in any dealings with the lands and premises. Throughout this judgment (unless otherwise indicated) I will refer to all the defendants collectively as the "defendants". Further, as the salient facts and central issues are common to all three plaintiffs I will refer to all the plaintiffs collectively (unless otherwise indicated) as the "plaintiffs".

Finally it is common ground that on the 13th of August, 1987, the defendants sent a registered letter to all plaintiffs alleging that their leases had expired, giving them notice to vacate by the 30th of September, 1987, and claiming double rent in the event of over holding.

The nub of the litigation was whether the defendants pursued their application to register the subject lands as a condominium in a bona fide manner so that the options could be exercised. Relying on this implied term in their contract the plaintiffs alleged that they made significant improvements to the premises and that the defendants acted in bad faith.

In reply, the defendants argued that all the extension times for the exercise of the options expired without the plaintiffs either exercising their options or tendering the requisite $5,000.00 (certified cheque) deposit for each unit. The defendants also denied that they failed to act in a bona fide and reasonable manner to register the condominium and counter- claimed for possession and arrears of rent.

Succinctly I concluded:

1. That the lease and options of all plaintiffs had not expired and that their options were still enforceable by way of specific performance; and
2. That in any event the defendants' conduct raised the equitable doctrine of waiver which precluded the defendants from relying on any lapse of time in the contracts.

Let me give reasons.

CREDIBILITY

Credibility was an important issue in this case. Generally I was impressed with the testimony of the plaintiffs. Their evidence was factual, straight forward and believable. Their various versions were not only internally coherent but also mutually collaborative and in harmony with the balance of the evidence.

Mr. Valente, the chief witness for the defendant, on the other hand, was unconvincing. Frequently opaque and elusive, his testimony on key issues rang false. He struck me as experienced, shrewd and much more knowledgeable than he pretended. His attempt to shift responsibility for delay in processing the condominium application to his solicitor and surveyor and to project himself as an innocent neophyte in the business were particularly unconvincing. Far from being a hapless foot soldier in the proceedings, I concluded that he played the role of general. Consequently, where the testimonies of the plaintiffs and Valente clashed, I preferred the evidence of the former.

ADDITIONAL FINDINGS OF FACT

I find:

1. That the chief reason the plaintiffs entered the leases with the defendants was to obtain the benefit of the option to buy and that without the options they would not have leased. In addition, I find that the plaintiffs relied on the ongoing assurances of Valente that the registration of the condominium was imminent and that on registration he would honour the options. Relying on these oral and written assurances, I find that the plaintiffs expended the following sums on improvements to their premises:

Harpell - $14,830.50; Gosling - $35,000.00; and Liffall - $8,005.40.

2. That the appraisals of Larry Bedford Associates Ltd. (Exhibit two) with respect to the values of the various units as of the 4th of October, 1989; (subject to a 5% to 10% diminution to reflect current market value), namely:

Gosling - Unit 3 - $119,500.00 - Unit 4 - $126,000.00 Harpell - Unit 2 - $132,000.00 Liffall - Unit 7 - $119,000.00 are substantially accurate.

3. That it was the intention of all parties that the options in the lease (the offer to lease in the case of Harpell), be identical and that they would be exercisable only when the condominium was registered. I find that Valente not only failed to request the option deposit from each Plaintiff but in fact informed them the tender was unnecessary until the condominium was registered. The plaintiffs constantly enquired as to the status of the application. In light of Valente's stance I find that it was unnecessary for the plaintiffs to complete the offers to purchase as contemplated by the option rider. There is abundant authority for the proposition that when a party enters a contract that presupposes the fulfilment of a condition precedent on his part he must act in good faith and in the absence of good faith cannot rely on failure to fulfil the condition precedent to evade obligations under the contract. See Dynamic Transport Ltd. v. O.K. Detailing Ltd. 85 D.L.R. (3)(9). Moreover section 51(1)(a) & (c) R.S.O. 1960 Chapter 84 of the Condominium Act, imposes an obligation on the vendor to take all reasonable steps to register the declaration and description and to deliver a registerable transfer without delay. Throughout their dealings I find that the plaintiffs were willing, able and even anxious to exercise their options and to close the transactions. Further I find they were all in a position to pay cash.

4. That, until the options were exercised, I find that the parties intended the lease to continue in full force and effect. I find support for this position both in the specific wording of the options which read: "Until closing the lease shall continue in full force and effect" and also in the conduct of the parties.

I note that in his letter to the plaintiffs, of the 27th of February, 1986, extending the date for the exercise of the option, Valente not only reassured the plaintiffs that the registration of the condominium was being pursued with vigour, but also extended the option date to the 1st of September, 1986, (the 31st of December, 1986 in the case of Liffall), or "as soon as possible". I interpret the phrase "as soon as possible" to mean that the option would continue until the registration was complete.

Further on the 12th of January, 1987, Mr. King, the solicitor for the defendants sent a letter to all plaintiffs, which although wildly erroneous in its estimate as to when the condominium would be registered, implicitly confirmed the continued existence of the options despite the lapse of all extension dates.

In addition Valente appended a hand written note to the letter which read:

"Options are existing, lease remains unchanged"

Valente testified that he had the letter of the 12th of January, 1987, sent to mollify the plaintiffs who were badgering him about the options. He intended the letter both as a reassurance that he would honour the options and as a ploy to keep them 'off his back'.

According to his testimony, it was only some time in 1987 or 1988 that he unilaterally decided that he would not honour the options regardless whether the plaintiffs' paid the $5,000.00 deposit. I draw a reasonable inference from the evidence that a personality conflict between Valente and the disgruntled plaintiffs along with a dramatic rise in the market value of the units influenced that decision.

In sum, until the 13th of August, 1987, when the defendant expressly repudiated the contract, I find that all parties behaved as though the options were still valid. Although the defendant officially repudiated the contract on the 13th of August, 1987, I note that Valente by his own admission requested a deposit from Harpell some time after the 18th of December 1987.

Additionally I reject the defendant's argument that there was no consideration for the extension of the options. First I hold that such consideration is legally unnecessary. Second, I find in any event that the plaintiffs relied on the defendant's representations to their detriment and that their expenditure of substantial sums in tenant's improvement - some beyond the expiry of the first extension date - constituted such consideration. In short, by their unequivocal conduct I find the defendants waived strict compliance with the terms of the option and forfeited the right to terminate.

Let me conclude by quoting Grange J. in Re Tudale Explorations Ltd. and Bruce (1978) 20 O.R. (2d) p. 593 at p. 596.

"The present rule is now expressed by Snell in his work Snell's Principles of Equity, 27th ed. (1973), p. 563, as follows:

"Where by his words or conduct one party to a transaction makes to the other an unambiguous promise or assurance which is intended to affect the legal relations between them (whether contractual or otherwise), and the other party acts upon it, altering his position to his detriment, the party making the promise or assurance will not be permitted to act inconsistently with it."

It will be seen that rule as so stated depends in no way upon consideration or formality and it matters not at all whether the effect of the promise is to create a variation of contract nor whether the original contract was within or without the Statute of Frauds, R.S.O. 1970, c. 444."

CONDOMINIUM APPLICATION

I found the expert testimony of the solicitor Neubauer called by the plaintiffs to be persuasive. I accept his analysis and conclusions as set out in his report, (see Exhibit nine). I find that the defendants failed to pursue the registration of the condominium in a professional, expeditious or timely manner. Further I find that Valente, the directing mind of the project, was chiefly responsible for the delay. Despite his disingenuous efforts to transfer the blame to his lawyer and to his surveyor, I find that he was in charge throughout. Given that I have found that it was an implied term contract that the defendants would proceed with the condominium application in a reasonable and expeditious manner, I find that this behaviour was both negligent and reckless.

In particular I find:

1. That the planning approval process is virtually complete, the Town of Oakville having issued its recommendation to the Region in June 1985 (although inexplicably only received by the Region some 13 months later).

2. That the land titles application (a condition precedent to the technical approval process) is now essentially done and that the condominium application remains a formality which can be now completed within four to five months.

3. That there were inexcusable delays in the processing of the land title application directly attributable to the defendants and/or their agents. A falling out between Valente and his erstwhile partner Mr. Alto Belli also contributed to the delay. Further I also agree with Neubauer that the application was routine and fell into the "cookie cutter" category. The technical approval application (including the land titles application which itself takes up to nine months) should have been completed by the 1st of March, 1986 or by the latest the 1st of September, 1986, provided the defendants had proceeded with reasonable dispatch.

4. That the decision of Valente to bring into the land titles application and the condominium process adjacent lands to the southwest upon which two further condominiums were to be constructed, together with the redundant severance applications, and the inefficient management of the McSweeney objection needlessly and inevitable contributed to the delay in the technical approval process, making it impossible for the defendants to honour the options with the plaintiffs within the prescribed time periods. In particular I find that when Valente chose that course, he knew, or ought to have known that the exercise of the options would be frustrated. In short, a combination of bad faith and pure ineptitude caused the delay.

In summary, I find the defendants acted recklessly and negligently with respect to the condominium application and that by their conduct equitably waived the right to rely on the expiry of any time periods. While the plaintiffs grew increasingly exasperated and finally sceptical of Valente, I find that they acted correctly throughout, pressing their claims with persistence and good faith.

In his able defense, Mr. Zambosco raised several legal arguments including some that were not pleaded and others which were abandoned during argument.

Having found that both the leases and options continue to exist and that the registration of the condominium was a condition precedent to the exercise of the options, I will not consider those arguments which related to whether the options survived the lease term. In any case, I hold that the options were separate contracts independent of the leases.

In addition, I reject the defendant's argument based on the rule against perpetuities. Not only did the defendant fail to plead that defence, but I find that it is inapplicable in the circumstances of this case. On the execution of the contracts I find that the plaintiffs acquired an immediate equitable interest in the lands and therefore we are not concerned with any interest in land arising in the future. With respect to pre-existent conditions, I find that the standard of reasonableness should apply.

I find that the most substantial argument raised by the defendant was ambiguity. However, I reject that defence. I find that the options here were sufficiently certain with respect to the identity of the parties, the units being purchased, and the price to make them valid and exercisable. Although the date for the exercise of the option was left in limbo, so to speak, I find that the contracts were sufficiently certain, so that given the expectations of the parties, a reasonable time frame for closing could be inferred. In Justein v. 3900 Yonge Street Ltd. 29 R.P.R. p. 80, the court in comparable circumstances, proposed a reasonable time for the closing of the transaction. In the case at bar I find there is sufficient information to apply the test of reasonableness and to order a date for closing. The judgment of Krever J. in Palmer v. Ampersand Investments Ltd. et al., 47 O.R. (2d) p.275, which considered an option to purchase in an original lease is also apposite.

With respect to the issue of consideration and tender, Mr. Justice Krever said at p. 283:

"These cases can be distinguished factually and, in my opinion, it would be sheer formalism to hold that, if the plaintiff is otherwise entitled to specific performance, he should be denied the remedy because, despite the certainty that tender would have been an entirely futile act in the light of the defendants' consistent position from the beginning, tender was not made."

With respect to the sufficiency of the option, he stated at p. 282:

"Is the language of the option clause sufficiently particular to make out the essential terms of the contract the plaintiff seeks to enforce? The plaintiff takes the position that the particulars which are missing are not of a kind that renders the contract unenforceable because the court will imply the missing terms to give the agreement business efficacy. These terms, it is submitted, relate to payment of the purchase price and time for completion of the transaction. The right of the plaintiff to pay cash to the existing mortgage, as opposed to the entire purchase price, and that the transaction was to be closed within a reasonable time after the giving of notice of the plaintiff's intention to exercise the option, will according to the plaintiff, be implied. Since the corporate defendant, as an intermediate purchaser contemplated by s. 19(2) of the Mortgages Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 296, would cease to be liable to the mortgagee on the mortgage upon registration of the transfer to the plaintiff, no justification exists for requiring the plaintiff to pay the entire purchase price in cash only to have the corporate defendant use the greater part of it to discharge the mortgage. Moreover, the plaintiff's argument continues, if it should be held that the option clause is ambiguous, resort may be had to extrinsic evidence, including the schedule to the unexecuted draft lease prepared by the corporate defendant, containing a right in the plaintiff to assume the existing mortgage, to show the intention of the parties. Although it did not form part of the submission, perhaps it would be acceptable to add to it that if the option clause is not patently ambiguous, resort may be had to extrinsic evidence to demonstrate a latent ambiguity and to resolve it: see Re Noranda Metal Industries Ltd., Fergus Division and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 2345 et al. (1983), 44 O.R. (2d) 529. Again if nothing more were involved in this case than this issue, I would accept the plaintiff's submission?"

Finally in the case at bar I cannot find any equitable reason why specific performance should be refused. Nor taking into account that all the plaintiffs had customised their premises to accommodate their businesses, do I find damages to be an appropriate remedy.

CONCLUSION

In the result I find:

1. That the options are binding contracts;
2. That all three plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance of their respective units;
3. That the defendants shall complete the land titles and condominium applications forthwith in order that the plaintiffs can exercise their options. The closing date shall be within six months of the date of this judgment;
4. That the counter-claim is dismissed;
5. That counsel may speak to me or make submissions in writing on the question of costs and prejudgment interest together with any other direction they require with respect to the terms of the agreement, closing date, adjustments, etc. relating to the purchase and sale of the units.

Kenneth Bradfield, Plaintiff, and Cleason Martin, Olive Mary Martin, Richview Inc. and West View Inc., Defendants

File No. 317398/88 Ontario District Court - York Judicial District Toronto, Ontario Ferguson D.C.J. May 2, 1990

Robert Spence, for the Plaintiff. T. James Treloar, for the Defendants.

FERGUSON D.C.J.:-- This is an action by the plaintiff for judgment against the four named defendants for $100,000 (U.S.) together with interest and costs. The Statement of Claim was issued on March 3, 1988. Richview Inc. did not enter any defence. The trial before me proceeded against the three remaining defendants. During the course of the trial settlement was reached regarding the claims of the plaintiff against the defendant Cleason Martin and the defendant Olive Mary Martin. Accordingly, this judgment deals only with the claim against West View.

Initially I must deal with two amendments, one sought by the plaintiff and one sought by the defendant. Each of these amendments is granted. Accordingly the style of cause is corrected by naming West View, Inc. as a defendant instead of Westview, Inc. and the defendant is permitted to amend the Statement of Defence to include the following:

In the alternative, the Defendants plead that the rate of interest claimed by the Plaintiff is an illegal rate of interest contrary to section 347 of the Criminal Code of Canada, R.S.C. 1985, c. 47, and as such the claim of the Plaintiff is void as an illegal contract. Following the trial, Counsel submitted written submissions which were filed in accordance with a time schedule agreed upon at the conclusion of the trial. In these submissions the subject of jurisdiction of the court to deal with the matter now before it has been addressed. It is appropriate to note that the question of jurisdiction of this Court was not pleaded by West View nor was any issue raised on that subject during the course of the trial. That subject was raised by me at the conclusion of the trial and as a result it has been dealt with in the written submissions.

It is my view that inasmuch as the parties have attorned to the jurisdiction of the court Ontario laws are to be applied to this case and that this court has jurisdiction to determine the monetary issue between the plaintiff and West View.

Counsel for West View submits that non-service on the Public Trustee under the Business Corporations Act, 1982 [Ontario] s. 241(3) is fatal to the plaintiff's claim.

It is clear that West View has no assets in Ontario and has never carried on business in Ontario. Therefore it is my view that the existence of any procedural irregularity in not effecting service on the Public Service is not fatal to the plaintiff's claim under the circumstances of this case.

The plaintiff's claim against West View Inc. is based on default by that corporation on a mortgage deed which is alleged to have been executed by West View Inc. and Richview Inc. in Florida on September 24, 1986 as collateral security to two promissory notes and covering two properties one of which was owned by Richview Inc., a Florida Corporation, and one of which was owned by West View Inc., a Florida Corporation. The latter property is a Condominium.

The mortgage deed cited above was recorded on October 30, 1986 in Official Records Book 13858 at Page 752 of the Public Records of Broward County, Florida.

The mortgage on the Richview Property was a second mortgage. The defendant Richview Inc. defaulted under the terms of the first mortgage on its property. Accordingly, the First Mortgagee obtained a Judgment for Foreclosure thereby defeating any security which the plaintiff had on the Richview Property. As a result the money owing on the promissory notes and the mortgage deed became due and payable. The promissory notes also dated September 24, 1986 are for the principal sum of $100,000. The key issues to be determined by this court are first, whether West View Inc. signed the mortgage deed dated September 24, 1986 by the signature of Cleason Martin who is described on the mortgage as Vice-President of West View Inc. and second whether the condominium property owned by West View Inc. was included in the mortgage when it was signed by West View Inc.

The defendant West View Inc. denies that it executed any mortgage on any of its property and that the mortgage was only given by the defendant Richview Inc. against its own property which did not include the condominium referred to above and that the defendant Cleason Martin had no authority to execute the mortgage on behalf of West View Inc. inasmuch as the defendant Olive Mary Martin was the sole Officer, Director and Shareholder of that corporation.

In 1985 the plaintiff bought a residential house in Toronto from the Martin's following which event the Bradfield's and the Martin's became friends and visited each other in Toronto and in Fort Lauderdale, Florida where the Martin's lived in a condominium. In 1986 Mr. Bradfield made a loan to a company controlled by Mr. Martin which was developing land in Kitchener, Ontario and this loan was repaid by June 1986.

In July 1986 Mr. Martin was involved in assembling land in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. For this purpose his company Richview, Inc. a Florida corporation had agreed to purchase lands for $192,500.00 of which $142,500.00 would be paid by way of a mortgage given back to the Vendor. An amount of $50,000.00 was to be paid in cash on closing scheduled for July 21, 1986. Mr. Bradfield agreed to supply this cash to Mr. Martin provided he was given security. The parties agreed that Mr. Bradfield's loan of $50,000.00 U.S. funds would be repaid in two years' time in the amount of $100,000 but that there would be a discount of $25,000.00 U.S. if the loan was repaid within one year.

On July 18, 1986 Mr. Bradfield, at the request of Mr. Martin, immediately transferred $50,000.00 U.S. to the trust account of Mr. Martin's lawyer Robert Frazier who practised law in the firm of Cooper, Shahady, Frazier and Pugatch in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Mr. Bradfield then consulted Barry Smith his solicitor in Toronto and gave him appropriate instructions to complete matters about the loan and security on behalf of Mr. Bradfield.

Having to leave Canada for a trip to Australia, Mr. Bradfield left the entire situation in Barry Smith's hands. Mr. Smith contacted Mr. Martin's lawyer Frazier and this was followed by a letter from Smith to Frazier dated August 1, 1986 in which Smith referred to the amount of loan funds already sent, security for the loan through a second mortgage on the lands being purchased in Fort Lauderdale and collateral security through a mortgage on the Martin condominium in Florida. Smith also confirmed that the funds would not be released by Frazier until there was clarification on whether the mortgage on this condominium was to be a first mortgage. Smith also confirmed the amount and term of the mortgage being $100,000.00 for two years.

While Smith wrote a follow up letter to Frazier on August 26th he did not pursue the matter expeditiously. The funds held in trust by Frazier were disbursed without Smith's consent to complete the land purchase in Florida on behalf of Martin's company Richview Inc. Smith then received a letter from Frazier's firm dated December 17, 1986 enclosing the two promissory notes for $100,000.00 and the mortgage deed which had been recorded.

The mortgage deed contains a photocopy of a promissory note on which the signature of "Cleason Martin, President" appears. That photocopy corresponds to a promissory note on which Cleason Martin's original signature appears. The other note sent to Smith is also a photocopy of the note signed by Cleason Martin but this note is also signed by Olive M. Martin.

The mortgage deed shows Cleason Martin, as President of Richview Inc. and as Vice-President of Westview Inc. both Florida Corporations as the mortgagor, Mr. Bradfield as the mortgagee and two properties covered by the mortgage, one being the land owned by Richview through the deal for $192,500.00 cited above and one being the condominium owned by West View where the Martin's lived. The document is signed under the typed name of both corporations by Cleason Martin, President and as Vice-President respectively.

The certificate of execution by a Notary Public on the document certifies that the mortgage was signed by Cleason Martin as President of Richview Inc., a Florida Corporation and as Vice-President of West View Inc., a Florida Corporation on September 24, 1986. The promissory note attached to the mortgage is a photocopy of an original note signed by Cleason Martin and this note has the same registration number that appears on the first page of the mortgage.

West View denies giving any mortgage on any property and that Olive Martin was the sole officer, director and shareholder and the only person who had authority to execute any document on behalf of West View.

Olive Martin testified at the trial and stated that she was the sole shareholder, officer and director of West View based on information provided her by her husband Cleason Martin who did not testify. It is my finding that Cleason Martin was the directing mind of this Corporation. This finding is based on the evidence of Mrs. Martin and that the corporation was incorporated with Cleason Martin as an officer, director and subscriber and that the 1986 annual report of the corporation, signed by Cleason Martin in December 1986 shows him as Vice- President, Secretary and Director. Accordingly I find that Cleason Martin had authority to sign a mortgage on behalf of West View on September 24, 1986. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind about the signature of Cleason Martin on the mortgage deed.

While it is difficult to understand why the plaintiff did not consult his lawyer prior to sending funds to Mr. Frazier's law firm in Florida, I am satisfied that Mr. and Mrs. Bradfield were led to believe that the Martin's owned their condominium in Florida I find that at no time were they informed about the existence of West View or the fact that the condominium was registered in the name of that Florida Corporation.

There is conflict about the status of Robert Frazier when acting to complete the documentation for the plaintiff's loan. While the substantial delay on the part of Frazier's firm to deal with those matters raised in Barry Smith's letter of August 1st was totally unjustified as was the disbursement of funds without Smith's consent, I reject the concept that Frazier or anyone else in his law firm was acting for the plaintiff to complete the loan transaction. Frazier may have been willing to act as an agent for Smith in holding funds, but that in my view was the extent of his obligations.

When testifying Olive Martin was extremely vague about her association with Frazier or any other member of his legal firm. Obviously she had practically no knowledge of the scope of the legal matters being completed on behalf of her husband to finalize the loan transaction. In any case there is no doubt that she signed the promissory note for $100,000.00 on or before September 24, 1986.

While it may well be that the mortgage document was prepared in stages to the extent that any reference to West View, including the insertion of Parcel 2 owned by West View, was added at a different time, I find that all of the typing on the document had been completed prior to it being signed by Cleason Martin and that the photocopy of the promissory note signed by Cleason Martin for $100,000 was attached to the mortgage when it was executed. I reject the submission that anything was added to this document after it was signed by Cleason Martin or that a different copy of the promissory note was attached to the mortgage after it was executed.

It is significant to comment on the fact that Cleason Martin did not testify at the trial. That is a factor which I have weighed in assessing the evidence of his wife about his alleged lack of authority to execute a mortgage on behalf of West View Inc. I am satisfied and find that from the very beginning of the discussions and negotiations for the $50,000.00 loan between the plaintiff and Cleason Martin that the loan was to be secured by a second mortgage on the lands being purchased by Martin for $192,500.00 and by a mortgage on the Martin's condominium residence in Fort Lauderdale. I also find that Mrs. Martin was aware of those conditions and had agreed on the condominium mortgage even though the condominium was registered in the name of a Florida Corporation.

An agreement or arrangement to receive interest at a criminal rate that is in excess of an effective annual rate of over 60 percent is an unlawful contract and is not enforceable.

The agreement here was to receive $100,000.00 U.S. two years after a loan of $50,000.00. That agreement does not meet the standards for receiving interest at a criminal rate. Here West View has taken the position that the date of advance of monies was September 24, 1986 when funds were released by Frazier's law firm and that the date for repayment was March 3, 1988 being the date in the Statement of Claim. The submission of Counsel for the plaintiff that both those dates were not incorporated in the original agreement of the parties is, in my view, quite correct. It is the terms of the original agreement or understanding that is vital. The submission of the defence that the agreement is void as an illegal contract is rejected.

Having satisfied myself that West View executed the mortgage then the court should grant to the plaintiff judgment for the contractual obligation which is clearly set out on the face of the mortgage. The owner of the condominium is clearly liable for repayment of the loan.

The plaintiff is awarded judgment against the defendant West View Inc. in the amount of $100,000.00 U.S. together with interest in accordance with the provisions of the Courts of Justice Act from March 3, 1988. Counsel may address the matter of costs at a future date if that is their intention.

I express my gratitude to Counsel for the fair and thorough manner in which this case was presented to the court.

Re Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 699 and 1177 Yonge Street Inc.

39 O.R. (3d) 473

Docket No. C28073 Court of Appeal for Ontario Robins, McKinlay and Osborne JJ.A. May 15, 1998

APPEAL from an order interpreting an article in a condominium declaration.

Patricia M. Conway, for appellant. Jonathan H. Fine, for respondent. BY THE COURT: -- This is an appeal from an order declaring that the appellant is prohibited from leasing parking units forming part of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 699 ("MTCC 699") except to an owner or a tenant of a dwelling or commercial unit in the building.

MTCC 699 is a mixed-use condominium consisting of dwelling units, commercial units, parking units and storage units, which was registered in 1986. The developer of the project (the "declarant") retained ownership of eight commercial units, ten storage units and 41 parking units until 1996. In that year the declarant became insolvent and those units were sold under power of sale to the appellant 1177 Yonge Street Inc. This appeal is concerned only with the parking units.

During 1996, the condominium corporation learned that the appellant intended to lease, and had commenced leasing, certain of its parking units to persons who were not owners of dwelling or commercial units. The corporation then took the position that such leasing was contrary to a provision of the declaration of the corporation ("Article III") which, it contended, prohibits the leasing of parking units to non-residents or non-owners.

Article III of the declaration reads as follows:

An owner, other than the Declarant, of a dwelling unit or commercial unit, shall not convey the unit owned without also conveying all accompanying parking units. An owner, other than the Declarant, shall not separately convey a parking unit(s) except to any owner of a dwelling or commercial unit.

Since the parties were unable to agree upon their respective rights under this provision, the condominium corporation brought this application seeking, in the main, a declaration prohibiting the appellant from leasing parking units except to owners or tenants of dwelling or commercial units. This is an appeal from an order granting relief to this effect.

It is common ground that the sale of parking units to non-residents or non-owners of condominium units is prohibited by Article III. The question to be decided is whether the leasing of parking units is similarly prohibited. The answer to this question obviously depends on the meaning to be attributed to the word "convey" in Article III.

In the context of this condominium corporation declaration, we are of the opinion the word must be given its plain and ordinary meaning and not, as the respondent argues, the extended or expanded meaning given to it by the statutory definitions contained in enactments such as the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.34, s. 1; the Land Transfer Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.6, s. 1; and the Mortgages Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.40, s. 1, whereby the terms "convey" or "conveyance" include leases. These terms are not defined in the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26. A declaration made pursuant to the Act, governing as it does important aspects of the continuing operation of a condominium, should be read as reasonably well-informed unit holders would read it and not in a technical or specialized sense.

In common usage, as standard dictionary definitions confirm, "convey" means a "transfer of title or the instrument that effects that transfer". Likewise, the word "conveyance" means "the transfer of (esp. real) property from one person to another by deed or writing". In everyday speech, a prohibition against conveying a parking unit would be regarded as a prohibition against a sale, and not a lease, of a unit. The leasing of a unit does not involve a sale or transfer of title and would not ordinarily be referred to as a conveyance of the unit. In our opinion, the prohibition in Article III cannot properly be read as including such transactions.

Moreover, nothing in this declaration requires that the term "convey" be given anything other than its plain and ordinary meaning. Indeed, it is significant that Article IV (7) of the declaration specifically provides with respect to visitor and handicapped parking, that such spaces shall not be "leased or sold". The same verbiage could have been used in Article III and, indeed, presumably would have been used, if the intention was to prohibit both the sale and lease of parking units.

In the absence of clear language to the contrary, Article III should not be interpreted in such a way as to interfere with or take away property rights. The right to alienate property, which includes the right to lease, is a fundamental incident of ownership: Peel Condominium3BCorp. No. 11 v. Caroe (1974), 4 O.R. (2d) 543 (H.C.J.). A provision purporting to restrict this right should be strictly construed. If any ambiguity exists, it must be resolved in favour of protecting valid property interests. In the result, the appeal will be allowed, the order of the court below will be varied to the extent that paras. 2, 3 and 4 will be set aside, and in place thereof an order will go declaring that the appellant is entitled to lease parking units owned by it to non-residents of the building. The appellant is entitled to the costs of the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Re Ontario New Home Warranty Program and Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal et al.

39 O.R. (3d) 119 Court File No. 191/97 Ontario Court (General Division) Divisional Court, Lane, Greer and Howden JJ. May 14, 1998

APPLICATION for judicial review.

Carol A. Street, for applicant. S. Harvey Starkman, Q.C., for respondent, Peel Condominium Corp. 338. Thomas R. Whitby, for respondent, Northgrave Architect Inc. T. Anthony Ball, for respondent, Tremco Ltd./Tremco Ltée. Roy Wise, for respondent, Alumiprime.

HOWDEN J.: -- The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Program") has brought this application for judicial review of a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal (the "Tribunal"). The Tribunal decided it had no jurisdiction to add as parties certain contractors and subcontractors involved in building a 17-storey condominium building in Mississauga. The Tribunal further declined to order production of all relevant documents to the Program prior to the examination of the witnesses.

The following issues arise to be decided in this action:

1. Does the Tribunal have jurisdiction to add parties, other than the owner, builder and/or vendor of a new home, in an appeal before it?
2. How should its discretion have been exercised?
3. If the parties are not to be added as requested, should this court order the Tribunal to require production of certain documents prior to the examination of witnesses on the stand?

The New Home Warranty Program and the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal

The Program is a non-profit, self-funded corporation which has the responsibility of administering the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 (the "Act"). The Act requires that every vendor and/or builder ("vendor/builder") of new homes must be registered and must provide owners of new homes with certain specified warranties. An owner who claims that a vendor/builder has breached its warranty may make a claim against the Program, which in turn is empowered to decide whether there has been a breach of warranty and whether there should be any payment made out of a guarantee fund to cover the costs of remedial work. Owners who disagree with a decision of the Program are enabled by s. 16 of the Act to appeal to the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal.

If the Program accepts that a vendor/builder has breached its statutory warranties and pays out of the fund, it becomes subrogated to all rights of recovery of the claimant and may bring an action in its own name or in the name of the claimant (R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 892, s. 13).

The Facts

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 338 ("PCC 338") is the condominium corporation which, for the purposes of a common element claim against the Program, is deemed to be the owner of the 17-storey building located in Mississauga, known as "The Californian". Amsep Corporation filed its application for registration under the Plan in 1987 and was registered in 1989 with a personal guarantee from its principal, Moises Okseberg. The Californian was built by Amsep.

A technical audit prepared in 1990 identified a number of serious technical defects relating to materials and workmanship in the construction of The Californian. Among other issues, there were a number of complaints relating to the windows in the condominium building. Until 1993, Amsep and its subcontractor Alumiprime and supplier Tremco were involved in remedial work to repair the faulty windows under their contractual warranty. The Program became involved in 1993 when PCC 338 presented to it a more extensive technical report regarding the window complaint. After certain investigations, on May 17, 1994, the Program denied PCC 338's claim for payment out of the guarantee fund in respect of the window complaint. The condominium corporation appealed to the Tribunal. A hearing was scheduled in 1996, and was subsequently adjourned. During ongoing meetings prior to the hearing, the Program learned from Alumiprime that PCC 338 had filed a court action against Amsep, Alumiprime, Tremco and the architect Northgrave, claiming damages of $1.5 million in relation to problems with workmanship in the condominium building. The Program acquired copies of the pleadings in the action. In the view of the Program administrators, the litigation will require findings of fact which are "identical" relating to the existence and results of defects in workmanship, materials and/or design.

Having learned of the litigation, the Program moved before the Tribunal to have Amsep, Okseberg and the subcontractors and supplier Alumiprime, Tremco and the architect Northgrave added as parties to the hearing. Counsel for Alumiprime, Tremco and Northgrave attended and made submissions, taking the position that they would prefer to have the Tribunal's proceedings stayed pending the litigation. Failing a stay, they sought to be added as parties with full rights of participation.

The Tribunal added Amsep as a party and declined to add the others as parties. In refusing their application, the Chair of the Tribunal gave oral reasons for its decision:

With respect to the New Home Warranty Act, it offers us the opportunity to join a party, but that party must be added within the bounds of the statute, which the statute refers to [as] the owner and vendor/builder. Liability goes to the Program because of indemnification. At this point, as there are no added parties, there is no onus because they are not parties. For these reasons, lets get on with it. The only party added is the builder.

The Tribunal also declined a request from the Program to order representatives of Alumiprime, Tremco, Northgrave and Okseberg to produce their documentary material forthwith, and to grant a short adjournment to allow the Program to review that material before they would testify as witnesses. The Tribunal refused, stating (again, orally):

With respect to the witnesses to be summonsed, they've been summonsed, and they've been summonsed to appear. Witnesses, in my experience, and the Tribunal's experience, and that of the panelists, witnesses will show up, they'll show up with their documents and they'll be examined, albeit it may take quite a long period of time. You have that right to do so, Ms. Street, but basically, for all the above reasons, the motion to adjourn is being denied -- or the request for an adjournment.

The Tribunal later gave extended reasons in writing in which it reviewed not only jurisdictional but substantive factors for its decisions. Counsel for the Program sought and was granted a stay in order to seek judicial review of the Tribunal's decisions.

The litigation with respect to the construction problems with PCC 338 is at the pleadings stage. The New Home Warranty Program petitioned the Ontario Court (General Division), on June 4, 1997 at the time of the application for judicial review, to be added as a party in the litigation. The motion was refused, and has been appealed. Subsequently, on August 15, 1997 the court action was stayed by Justice Lederman pending a decision by the Tribunal.

Standard of Review

Decisions of the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal may be appealed to the Divisional Court under s. 11 of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21. The court's broad powers on appeal are set out in s. 11(5):

11(5) An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal, and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar or of the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with such directions as the court considers proper.

No privative clause protects decisions of the Tribunal in proceedings under the Act. In this case, of course, the parties are not appealing a final decision of the Tribunal but are seeking judicial review of an interlocutory order. However, with regard to the absence of a privative clause, the court's broad powers on appeal, and the nature of this issue as one which does not involve the special expertise of the Tribunal and indeed, one which involves the Tribunal's jurisdiction, it appears clear that the appropriate standard of review for this case is correctness: Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 441 v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 394 (Div. Ct.).

I. Jurisdiction of the Tribunal

The applicant has argued that the Tribunal has jurisdiction to add parties to a proceedings before it pursuant to the provisions of the Act and to the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.22.

Section 16(4) of the Act explicitly allows the addition of parties in the discretion of the Tribunal:

16(4) The Corporation [Ontario New Homes Warranty Program], the person or owner who has required the hearing and such other persons as the Tribunal may specify are parties to proceedings before the Tribunal under this section.

(Emphasis added) A correct construction of this section leads inescapably to the conclusion that the Tribunal had an explicit grant of jurisdiction to add parties other than the owner and vendor/ builder. In my view, the power to specify parties, other than those statutorily designated, includes the power to add them.

In fact, the court was supplied with an earlier decision in which the Tribunal did in fact add a third party to a proceeding under this Act. The Tribunal held that it is able to "add a party at its discretion in accordance with s. 16(4)" where that party has an interest in the outcome: Lorob Investments, CRAT Summaries of Decisions (1994), Vol. 26, Part II, October 4, 1994, p. 947.

It is unnecessary to go beyond the section for this purpose. However, I do note s. 5 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act which states that, unless otherwise specified under a particular Act, parties "shall be persons entitled by law to be parties to the proceeding". It has been held that "there is a genuinely entrenched principle of administrative law that where natural justice requires it, notice and an opportunity to respond must be given to persons who might be prejudiced by acts done under legislative authority notwithstanding that the legislation does not require it": MacCosham Van Lines (Canada) Co. v. Ontario (Minister of Transportation & Communications) (1988), 66 O.R. (2d) 198 at p. 211, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 230 (Div. Ct.).

In declining the motion to add parties on the stated basis that joining them was outside of the bounds of the statute, the Tribunal clearly was in error.

2. Exercise of Discretion by the Tribunal

It was the position of the Program that the subcontractors or suppliers should have been added as parties to the proceeding before the Tribunal. The respondents PC 338, Tremco, Alumiprime, and Northgrave take the position that the Tribunal did not err.

The applicant submits that the subcontractors should have been added because they are necessary and it is in the interests of the administration of justice to avoid a "multiplicity of proceedings". Since issue estoppel will affect the later litigation in some way, all of these entities should be added as parties and be able to respond and cross-examine effectively before the Tribunal. It was the applicant's submission that the factual issues which would be decided by the Tribunal in assessing the warranty claim are "identical" to those which are to be litigated in the court action. The respondents took the position that such an order would unnecessarily encumber the process under the Act, and that issue estoppel would not naturally follow particularly if they are not made parties but attend only as witnesses. One respondent sought an order declaring that in effect issue estoppel would not apply.

Clearly, it is in the interests of justice to avoid a multiplicity of proceedings and relitigation of the same issues. That rationale applies equally between a multiplicity of actions in the courts or concurrent proceedings which take place in both the courts and administrative tribunals. The same doctrinal tools are available at the appropriate time, as between the courts and specialized tribunals, to prevent relitigation. The reasoning of Abella J.A. in Rasanen v. Rosemont Instruments Ltd. (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 267 at pp. 279-80, 112 D.L.R. (4th) 683 (C.A.), is persuasive: [Administrative tribunals] were expressly created as independent bodies for the purpose of being an alternative to the judicial process, including its procedural panoplies. Designed to be less cumbersome, less expensive, less formal and less delayed, these impartial decision-making bodies were to resolve disputes in their area of specialization more expeditiously and more accessibly, but no less effectively or credibly. . . .

. . . I can see no principled basis for exempting issues adjudicated by tribunals from the operation of issue estoppel.

However, it does not detract in any way from these general principles of respect for administrative tribunals to note that administrative tribunals are constrained to act within their statutory mandate.

The Act is intended to be a consumer protection scheme for the benefit of people who buy new homes. It is intended to remove from the consumer the need to engage in expensive and time-consuming multi-party litigation to determine, on the basis of fault and breach of contract, who is responsible for the defect in question. This legislative objective would be wholly frustrated if the Tribunal had made the order requested by the Program. The Tribunal is intended to determine as between the consumer and the Program whether there is an entitlement to recovery. Through the subrogation provisions, responsibility for any court proceedings to finally determine liability among the various construction parties, with all their attendant cost, delay and procedural wrangling, is allocated to the Program. In the words of Southey J. in Carleton Condominium No. 441, supra, involving an issue of whether a CRAT hearing should not properly be stayed pending decision in concurrent court litigation (at p. 397):

That statutory duty (to hold a hearing), in my opinion, overrides the general rule against multiplicity of proceedings . . . one of the purposes of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act is to provide a quick, summary procedure which can be pursued by the consumer at less expense than litigation in the courts.

In this case, the purpose of an appeal to the Tribunal is to determine whether there is merit to a claim for breach of the statutory warranty which was denied by the Program. The question before the tribunal requires an interpretation of the statute in order to determine whether conditions exist that would amount to a breach of that warranty. In this case, they have to determine whether the windows were constructed in a workmanlike manner free from defects in material and constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code and whether statutory limitation periods were exceeded. The only necessary parties at issue before the Tribunal are the Program, whose decision is in question, and the claimant, on the facts before us.

Finally, the question of whether issue estoppel would arise is extremely fact-specific; on the facts of this case it does not appear, as per Rasanen, that the question to be determined in the court proceedings will be the same as the ones necessary for a determination before the Tribunal (at p. 278). All issues of liability as between supplier, subcontractors and the contractor do not need to be resolved in order to determine the issue between the Program and the consumer in this case. Many of the factual issues that would be required to determine liability as between the parties to the civil action are outside of the jurisdiction of the tribunal; nor is a finding on these points necessary to a resolution of the warranty claim. For example, the question of any professional negligence on the part of the architects, or the question of who had responsibility to review the installation of the windows, or whether the supplier of the sealant or installer of the vapour barrier are responsible, are simply irrelevant to the decision the Tribunal has to make under the Act.

Furthermore, in order to make such determinations, significant additional complexity would be added to these proceedings, which would prejudice the consumer who is intended to be the beneficiary of the Program. Particularly in a case like this one, where the impetus to add parties comes from the Program and is resisted by all the other parties to this application, it appears questionable indeed that the most efficacious and just way to resolve these issues is to join the subcontractors, suppliers and the architect to the Tribunal appeal.

The Tribunal gave written reasons later which went well beyond the jurisdictional point referred to orally. It considered the merits of the adding of parties within this statute and declined to do so. In exercising its discretion as it ultimately did, I see no error in its conclusion.

I have had an opportunity to read the judgment of Greer J., dissenting on this point. With respect, I do not agree with her analysis. It should be pointed out that, before the Tribunal, it is not the Program which bears the onus but the appellant condominium corporation. It is also not the case that the Program has "no documentation". It has investigated the matter sufficiently to decline the application of PCC 338 for payment from the fund. It has the technical audits of the full construction job. And it received a detailed technical report from PCC 338 with which it was apparently not satisfied, hence the requirement of a hearing where the Program has full rights of cross-examination. My concern with the Program's rationale for adding these parties is that it invites the Tribunal to go beyond its defined statutory mandate rather than subordinating the goals of the administrator of the Plan to the aim of the Act -- i.e., to provide an expeditious procedure for the consumer to obtain a hearing and a decision free of lengthy and costly litigation between the several professionals and sub-trades as to which is responsible (if indeed primary liability is established). As well, there is no assumption in these reasons that the Program is an insurer or that the Plan is "straight insurance".

In summary, the Tribunal has the power to add parties beyond the Program and the purchaser in a proper case. It did not err in refusing to do so in this case, nor in declining to stay its hearing until the contract litigation was complete. The issues which the Program sought to litigate with the proposed parties were irrelevant to the Tribunal's task, which is confined to determining whether the terms of the warranty were breached. Any finding of fault for such a breach is beyond the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. Accordingly, the decision of the Tribunal will not normally give rise to issue estoppel as to issues not within its jurisdiction to decide and persons not parties before it.

3. The Tribunal's Decision Respecting Production of Documents

It is quite clearly not the role of this court to interfere with the decisions of a tribunal with respect to its own procedures, save and except a situation where there arises a question of procedural unfairness. No such issue has been raised in this case. Subject only to its duty of fairness, the Tribunal is entitled to make any decision which may assist in the just and expeditious conduct and disposition of the proceeding. The Tribunal was acting within its powers when it declined the Program's request for advance production of documents and an adjournment, and it would not be appropriate for the Divisional Court to consider the merits of that decision on judicial review.

It may be further noted that the applicant has asked the court, essentially standing in the shoes of the Tribunal, to order production of all documents relating to the window claim 20 days in advance of a hearing. Were the court to require the Tribunal to make such an order, it would amount to an order of mandamus, which could not be justified in the circumstances as there were a number of possible decisions open to the Tribunal acting within its powers. For this reason, as well, the court should decline to make the order sought in the alternative. Generally, the bringing of proceedings to challenge interlocutory decisions of tribunals and boards is not a practice to be encouraged.

For these reasons I would dismiss the application. The parties may file written submissions on costs with the Registrar, the respondents within ten days and the applicant within a further ten days.

LANE J. (concurring): -- I have had the advantage of reading in draft the reasons prepared by my colleagues Greer J. and Howden J. With great respect, I cannot agree with Greer J. because I do not interpret the Act as contemplating a wholesale transfer of complex construction litigation from the court to the Tribunal. The statute does not set up the sort of framework that one would expect to find if that was the case. On the contrary, the whole scheme is to isolate the consumer from the litigation process and leave it to the Plan, once it has paid a claim, to undertake the cost of recouping itself from those whose breaches of contract occasioned the loss. Many of the problems which concern Greer J., relate to how the Tribunal will be able to conduct a fair hearing without the presence of the sub-trades, and the ability of the Plan to interview them and prepare. In my view, once the Tribunal embarks upon its hearing, it can alleviate these concerns by adjournments or other means. Unco-operative witnesses, who will not speak to counsel in advance, are not unusual and the Tribunal can be trusted to deal with the situation as appears best to it. This court should not second-guess it in matters of its own procedure.

There is a further point, not raised in the argument, but brought into focus by Greer J.'s reasons. If the Act is interpreted as authorizing the Tribunal in effect to try the entire construction case, may there not be some constitutional difficulties? See Ontario (Attorney General) v. Victoria Medical Building Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 32, 21 D.L.R. (2d) 97, and MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725, 130 D.L.R. (4th) 385. This seems to me to be another good reason for a cautious approach to the interpretation of the Act.

I agree with the disposition proposed by Howden J. and with his reasons.

The application is dismissed. Costs to be dealt with as proposed by Howden J.

GREER J. (dissenting): -- The Ontario New Home Warranty Program ("ONHWP") has moved for judicial review of the interlocutory decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal ("CRAT") released March 19, 1997 wherein it added the builder, Amsep, as a party before the CRAT hearing but refused to add the other respondents as parties. The Tribunal gave oral reasons for its decision and held that it had no jurisdiction to add anyone other than the builder as a party to the hearing, stating that the party must be added within the bounds of the statute. It held that the term "parties" refers to the owner and the vendor/builder only.

In its written reasons released subsequent to the hearing, the Tribunal again said that it did not have the jurisdiction to add a party to the hearing other than an owner or a vendor/ builder. It did, however, expand on its reasons. I am not satisfied, after reading the Tribunal's written reasons, that it did not change its decision in this regard. It again stressed that the claimant and the vendor/builder were the only "permissible parties". It did, however, review s. 5 of the SPPA and did make reference to the decision of the Divisional Court in Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 441 v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 394, noting that when the ONHWP was put into place, the legislature envisioned its operation as an expeditious method of resolving disputes between vendors/builders and owners. While this expanded finding of the Tribunal is not completely consistent with its finding as to who should be parties before the Tribunal, I am satisfied that on an overall reading of both the oral and written reasons, the Tribunal erred in deciding it had no jurisdiction to add other parties.

Under s. 16(1) and (4) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31, as amended by S.O. 1994, c. 27 (the "Act"), the legislation stated that the parties are:

16(4) The Corporation, the person or owner who has required the hearing and such other persons as the Tribunal may specify are parties to proceedings before the Tribunal under this section.

The term "such other persons" clearly gives the Tribunal the jurisdiction to add parties other than the claimant and the vendor/builder. It is then up to the parties involved to convince the Tribunal which other person or persons should be added.

Section 16(1) and (4) of the Act uses the words "person or owner", as well as "other persons" which the Tribunal may add as "parties". Therefore, where a different form of expression is used by the legislature, a different meaning is intended: see Ruth Sullivan, Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 3rd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1994), p. 163. The Tribunal is able to add a party at its discretion and it failed, in the case before us, to exercise that discretion: see Lorob Investments (1994), CRAT Summaries of Decisions; vol. 26, Part II, p. 945.

In my view, the case before us is not the ordinary claim under the Act. Firstly, it involves a large condominium, Peel Condominium Corporation No. 338 ("PCC 338"), the vendor/builder of which has disappeared or is no longer in existence. Secondly, the claims about the alleged breaches and defects respecting the windows and their installation in PCC 338 arose only after the builder and the contractor or subcontractors who dealt with the production and installation of the windows in the condominium project had spent five years, during the window warranty period, attempting to correct the defects. ONHWP was not brought into the picture until after the window warranty period ran out. Thirdly, it appears from the evidence before us that one of the subcontractors integrally involved in the window construction/installation aspect of the project, also cannot be located. All of this has left ONHWP in an extremely difficult position, and its attempts to obtain documentation and evidence from the respondents has been thwarted by them, and ONHWP is faced with a claim, the value of which we are told, is realistically between $800,000 to $1 million although the claim is for $1,500,000.

Under s. 13(1) of the Act, the vendor warrants that the home is constructed in a workmanlike manner and is free from defects in material (emphasis added), fit for habitation, constructed in accordance with the Building Code, and free from major structural defects. ONHWP has denied the claim, as noted in its letter of May 1994 to PCC 338, for the reasons set out in the decision. Thus the Tribunal must adjudicate upon the matter. One of the issues before the Tribunal will be whether or not the materials and windows used were free from defects.

PCC 338 has also instigated a civil action regarding its claim but it is stayed by way of order of Mr. Justice Lederman made August 15, 1997, awaiting the outcome of the Tribunal's to discuss anything with ONHWP, it has moved to have them added as parties, as it has no materials before it to review in preparation for the Tribunal's hearing. If these respondents simply appear as witnesses before the Tribunal, ONHWP will be unable to review any documentation prior to examining them as witnesses at the hearing, and will have no discovery process. This would, in my view, prolong the hearing before the Tribunal.

I have concluded that the Tribunal erred on p. 5 of its decision in saying that it would be an abuse of the process to add the respondents Northgrave Architect Inc. ("Northgrave"), Tremco Ltd./Tremco Ltee ("Tremco"), and Alumiprime Division of Indal Limited, also known as Indal Limited, carrying on business under the firm name and style of Alumiprime ("Alumiprime") as parties and thereby obtain indirect discovery of them. If they are not added as parties, they can only be witnesses.

In order to determine the claim, the Tribunal must determine whether there are defects in workmanship, material and/or design which have caused damage to the condominium. In my view, the only way it can do so, without involving a multiplicity of proceedings, is to have Northgrave, Tremco and Alumiprime before it as parties, with full rights to call evidence, cross-examine witnesses and make submissions, in order to have a full adjudication of the claim of PCC 338.

Even though witnesses representing some or all of the respondents have been subpoenaed to appear, it is clear from the Tribunal's decision and from the evidence presented to us that Alumiprime, Northgrave and Tremco will not co-operate with ONHWP at all in this regard. I am of the view that in order to avoid a multiplicity of proceedings, they are therefore necessary parties to the proceeding. There is no doubt that issue estoppel will, in all likelihood, become an aspect of the later litigation. On the other hand, the respondents cannot rely on their own refusal to participate. By trying to distance themselves from the Tribunal's proceeding, the respondents must recognize that there is a risk to that behaviour.

I did not find compelling the arguments of the respondents as to why they should not be added as parties to the proceeding before the Tribunal. PCC 338 appeared to simply want ONHWP to pay over to it all it was asking for, without allowing the Tribunal to have a proper hearing on the facts and the evidence. Alumiprime took the position that it should simply be called as a witness, but up until this point has failed to co-operate with ONHWP in any way. Tremco is concerned about the question of issue estoppel and the finding of facts before the Tribunal being binding in the civil proceeding which is before the court. It believes that the Tribunal can make a decision as to whether there has been a major structural defect without adding them as a party. Northgrave says that it had nothing to do with the windows and should not even be in the civil suit, let alone before the Tribunal. It agrees with the concerns of the other respondents that issue estoppel may apply. The respondents rely on Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 441, supra.

In MacCosham Van Lines (Canada) Co. v. Ontario (Minister of Transportation & Communications) (1988), 66 O.R. (2d) 198 at pp. 211-12, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 230, the Divisional Court held:

I accept that there is a genuinely entrenched principle of administrative law that where natural justice requires it, notice and an opportunity to respond must be given to persons who might be prejudiced by acts done under legislative authority notwithstanding that the legislation does not require it. Thus, it is said, "the common law will supply the omission of the legislature": Cooper v. Wandsworth Board of Works (1863), 14 C.B. (N.S.) 180, 143 E.R. 414. In that way persons may become parties on the basis that they are "entitled by law" and that principle is explicitly recognized in s. 5 of the S.P.P.A. But here there is no legislative omission or oversight. The legislature has not forgotten to provide for persons to be parties; it has stipulated who shall be in the clearest of terms.

Further, the Tribunal is set up to deal with the very issues, given their practice and expertise, so there is no policy reason why those issues of construction and installation of the windows should not be fully heard by the Tribunal. While the Act is consumer legislation, it is not straight insurance, and ONHWP can only make a payment when the applicant can prove its case by proving that the vendor/builder has breached the warranty. The applicant must prove that the damage was caused by something the vendor/builder did and it must be proven to have been at fault. The legislation itself is written as a warranty with certain limits placed on it. Tribunals were designed to be less cumbersome, less expensive, less formal and less delayed in order to resolve disputes in their areas of specialization: see Rasanen v. Rosemount Instruments Ltd. (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 267 at p. 269, 112 D.L.R. (4th) 683 (C.A.). The Tribunal must, however, have proper evidence before it and it is appropriate that this hearing canvass all evidence.

The respondents are trying to distance themselves from the Tribunal proceeding, yet they recognize that there is a risk here. Therefore, the most direct and clear-cut way is to have them added as parties to the proceeding so that they have the right to put forth their arguments before the Tribunal, as they could otherwise be prejudiced by the findings of fact before the Tribunal.

There is no policy reason why the issues of construction of the building, and in particular, the manufacture and installation of the windows, should not be heard by the Tribunal. Adding these respondents as parties will not defeat the summary nature of the proceeding before the Tribunal. There will, in my view, be less formality and less delay in the proceeding, and it will be less cumbersome.

The prejudice to be suffered by ONHWP by not having them added as parties, is to leave ONHWP with no documentation to review before the hearing and no discovery process, which will make the hearing cumbersome and lengthier than necessary. Alumiprime and Tremco were on site for five years trying to correct problems before ONHWP was even notified of a claim. ONFIWP should therefore not have to be faced at the hearing of first learning what case it has to meet before the Tribunal. The Tribunal must first decide if there has been defective workmanship and defective materials used in the construction, and in order for ONHWP to properly present its case, it is necessary to have these three respondents added as parties. The Tribunal comes within the purview of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.22, and it envisages how the Tribunal will operate, given that complex construction issues require a proper response.

The Tribunal's reasons are confusing as to whether or not it did exercise its discretion. It clearly erred in thinking it could not add these respondents as parties. These two positions are therefore inconsistent. Their decision is one which is not within the specialized expertise of this Tribunal and the Tribunal has no greater expertise than the court on this issue. The reviewing court may therefore substitute its opinion for that of the Tribunal: see Pezim v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Brokers), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 557 at pp. 589-90, 114 D.L.R. (4th) 385 at pp. 404-05.

I would order that the Tribunal add as parties to the hearing, the respondents Alumiprime, Tremco and Northgrave.

35 O.R. (3d) 551

DV 426/96 and Court File Nos. 815/95, 138/96 and RE632/96 Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court O'Driscoll, Trainor and Watt JJ. September 30, 1997

Ira T. Kagan and Lawrence H. Zucker, for applicants. Paul J. Green, for respondent, City of Etobicoke. Robert V. Wright and M. Bergman, for respondents, Park Lawn Cemetery Co. and Kening Properties Ltd. S. Scharbach and Yeta Herscher, for respondent, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

O'DRISCOLL J. (WATT J. concurring): --

I. Nature of the Proceedings The applicants bring:

(a) an application for leave to appeal (815/95), under s. 96 of the Ontario Municipal Board Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.28 ("OMBA"), from a decision of the Ontario Municipal Board ("OMB"), dated December 1, 1995. That decision dismissed an appeal to a site specific zoning by-law amendment No. 1994-118, passed by the City of Etobicoke on July 5, 1994. The zoning by-law amendment granted permission to Park Lawn/Kening to construct a stepped five- to eight-storey residential condominium apartment building on the subject land.

(b) an application for judicial review (138/96):

(i) to declare void or quash the adoption of amendment No. 7-93 to the Official Plan ("OPA") of the Etobicoke Planning Area. The OPA designated the subject property from "Open Space" to "High Density Residential" and, thereby, permitted residential development.

(ii) to declare void or quash the Minister's approval of the OPA.

(c) an application (RE6342/96) under s. 136 of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.45, and rule 14.05 of the Rules of Civil Procedure to quash Etobicoke's By-law No. 1993-139, dated August 20, 1993, adopting the OPA.

The respondents Park Lawn Cemetery Company Limited ("Park Lawn") and Kening Properties Ltd. ("Kening") bring a cross-motion for an order to quash the applicants' application to quash by-law No. 1993-139, passed on August 20, 1993, by the City of Etobicoke and adopting the OPA.

For the reasons that follow, the applicants' application for leave to appeal (815/95) and the application for judicial review (138/96) are dismissed.

The cross-motion of the respondents Park Lawn and Kening to quash the applicants' application under s. 136 of the Municipal Act is allowed.

II. The Location of the Property

Park Lawn is a commercial for profit cemetery owned by the respondent Park Lawn, a public company. The cemetery was originally some 76 acres in area. In 1990, the two-acre subject parcel was decertified from the cemetery; the two-acre parcel is located at the southeast corner of Bloor Street West and Prince Edward Drive in the City of Etobicoke. The subject parcel has been used for administration offices, as a works and service yard facility, for horticultural greenhouses and as an access road. The 74 acres of cemetery have been laid out for cemetery use. Over the last 100 years some 80,000 persons have been interred in the 30,000 burial sites.

Park Lawn/Kening wish to demolish the office building and erect a residential condominium.

III. The Chronology

1. On January 10, 1990, an article was published in the newspaper "Etobicoke Life" entitled "Cemetery owner wants to build luxury condominium". The article said, in part:

The new owner of Park Lawn Cemetery hopes to build a luxury condominium on a two-acre parcel of cemetery property. David Arcscott told Etobicoke Life he would like to build on the site currently occupied by the cemetery offices at the corner of Bloor Street and Prince Edward Drive. . . .

However, Ward 3 Councillor Ross Bissell isn't impressed.

"It's just incredible what these developers will come up with. It's absolutely outrageous."

2. On September 24, 1990, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, under s. 9(3) of the Cemeteries Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.4, by certificate 90-1-26, gave an order revoking approval for the interment of the dead on the two-acre parcel under consideration.

3. On December 11, 1990, Keenan J. gave an order that the two-acre parcel "not to be a cemetery within the meaning of the Cemeteries Act, R.S.O. 1980 and may be sold, leased or otherwise disposed of and dealt with by the owner as if the lands had not been a cemetery".

4. In June 1992, Kening erected a large green sign (eight foot by eight foot) advertising the condominium development. The sign faces Bloor Street West and is visible to motorists and pedestrians passing on Bloor Street West. The sign is located near a pedestrian walkway leading to the cemetery offices and would be visible to any person using Park Lawn Lane to enter the cemetery. The photograph filed shows that the sign was still in place in June 1996. (Respondent Park Lawn Record: Tab 2-B.)

5. During the week of June 21, 1992, Kening held an "open house" at the two acres to explain the proposed development. A second sign was erected near the first sign; it announced the hours of the "open house" to be held during the week in a large white and blue striped tent positioned over the pedestrian walkway from Bloor Street West to the administrative building. Plans showing the proposed development were displayed on the inside walls of the tent. (See ibid., Tabs 2-C and 2-D, affidavit of B.J. Morris on, sworn September 16, 1996.)

The "open house" sign and the tent were visible to motorists and pedestrians passing on Bloor Street West and to persons entering the cemetery by Park Lawn Lane. The tent was visible to any person visiting graves in the nearby areas of the cemetery.

Flyers were hand distributed to the nearby residents inviting them to attend the open house on June 22, 23 and 24, between 4 p.m. and 8 p.m. (ibid.: Tab 2-E -- Flyer and Tab 2-G -- Distribution List.)

6. Persons attending the "open house" were asked to sign a "guest book". The guest book shows that at least 65 persons attended the open house. Six of that number were plot holders in the cemetery. At least three of the persons who requested additional information about the proposed condominium project were plot holders (ibid.: paras. 13 & 14 and Tab 2-H).

7. On July 2, 1992, Kening submitted an application for an amendment of the Official Plan ("OPA") and zoning code to permit the construction of a residential condominium building containing 137 units on the site; the two acres were designated as "open space" under Etobicoke's OP.

8. In July 1992, the respondent Kening, in accord with the procedural requirements of the City of Etobicoke, erected a four-foot by four-foot sign at the property; it faced Bloor Street West. The sign was still in place on April 10, 1996. (Affidavit of Paul Zuliani, sworn September 16, 1996, Tab 1- B and Tab 1-C of Record of Park Lawn.)

In a column entitled "Toronto Live" in the Globe & Mail of Friday, July 17, 1992, this appeared:

Quiet neighbours A sign advertising condominiums has been posted on Bloor Street West and Park Lawn Road -- just outside the main entrance of Park Lawn Cemetery.

9. On February 17, 1993, at 7:30 p.m., the then Councillor Ross Bissell (see para. III:1 (above)) sponsored a community meeting at the Royal York United Church. Approximately 30 persons attended and discussed, inter alia, the status of the two acres and the status of the rights holders.

10. A notice, dated February 22, 1993, announcing a public meeting of the Etobicoke Planning and Development Committee, scheduled for the Etobicoke Council Chambers, City Hall, on March 30, 1993, was sent out by prepaid first class mail to every owner and tenant of land in the area to which the proposed amendments would apply and within 120 metres of the property as shown on the last revised assessment rolls. See:

(i) s. 17(2) of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.13, and R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 918;

(ii) Tab 1-D: p. 22 and Tab 1-F to affidavit of P. Zuliani, supra -- Record of Park Lawn;

(iii) Supplementary affidavit of P. Zuliani, sworn September 20, 1996: para. 2; ibid.: Tab 1.1.

The notice, dated February 22, 1993, stated, in part:

DATE: TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1993

TIME: 7:30 p.m.

APPLICANT: KENING PROPERTIES LTD., (PARK LAWN CEMETERY COMPANY LIMITED) -- file no. Z-2107

LOCATION: 2801 BLOOR STREET WEST

SUBJECT: Application has been made for an amendment to the Official Plan from Open Space to High Density Residential and an amendment to the Zoning Code from Private Open Space (POS) to Fourth Density Residential (R4) to permit the development of a stepped 5 to 8-storey, 137-unit condominium apartment building at the south-west corner of Bloor Street West, west of Old Mill Terrace.

A judge's certificate has been issued under Section 59(7) of the Cemeteries Act, by which provincial approval permitting burials on these lands has been eliminated, thereby making them available for other uses.

Anyone interested in this matter is invited to attend the public meeting to make their views known and to offer their comments.

11. The evidence discloses that the notice was sent to owners and tenants of land in excess of 120 metres from the two-acre parcel.

12. The evidence further discloses that the notice was sent to six other persons who had either asked that they receive notice of the public meeting or had objected to the proposed development from early in 1990. Two of the six or their relatives, were cemetery rights holders and had been corresponding with the Etobicoke Central District Area Planning Department office since January 1990 following the publication of the article in Etobicoke Life on January 10, 1990 (see: para. III:1 (above)) (ibid.: Tab 1-G, Tab 1-H and Tab 1-I).

13. Approximately 37 persons attended the public meeting on March 30, 1993. At least four gave verbal or written presentations objecting to the proposed development. Some of the submissions were made by rights holders and/or their relatives. Therefore, the Committee of Council was made aware of the cemetery rights holders' concerns about the proposed OPA and amendment to the zoning code. The applicant, J. Gaudaur, although not present at the public meeting, acknowledged on cross-examination on her affidavit filed in these proceedings that the applicants' concerns were raised and expressed to the Committee of Council at the public meeting.

At the public meeting on March 30, 1993, the report of the Etobicoke Planning staff was presented; it recommended approval of the OPA and zoning code amendments.

14. By way of a prepaid first class mail, a letter dated April 13, 1993, was sent by the City Clerk of Etobicoke advising all persons who:

- (i) made a presentation at the March 30, 1993 public meeting, or
- (ii) sent written correspondence to the Planning & Development Committee that the City Council of Etobicoke adopted on April 5, 1993, without amendment, the Committee's report which recommended approval of the proposed amendment to the OP and zoning code and thus permit the proposed development on the two-acre parcel (ibid.: Tab 1-J and Tab 1-K).

15. On August 20, 1993, the Council for the City of Etobicoke passed By-law 1993-139 adopting amendment No. 7-93 to the OP (ibid.: Tab 1-L).

16. On September 1, 1993 (although not required to do so by the Planning Act because no one filed a written request to be notified if the amendment were adopted), Etobicoke's City Clerk gave written notice of the adoption of the OPA to those persons who made presentations at the March 30, 1993 public meeting or persons who sent written communications to the Planning and Development Committee. Attached to the written notice was a copy of By-law 1993-139 OPA No. 7-93 (ibid.: Tab 1-L).

The September 1, 1993 notice advised the recipients that they could request the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to refer the matter to the OMB.

17. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing received OPA No. 7-93 but did not receive any requests to refer the OPA to the OMB.

18. On December 23, 1993, the Minister approved OPA No. 7-93 pursuant to ss. 17 and 21 of the Planning Act (ibid.: Tab 1-M).

19. On March 11, 1994, Park Lawn filed an application with the Etobicoke Committee of Adjustment for permission to sever the two acres from the balance of the lands owned by Park Lawn so that the two-acre parcel could be conveyed to Kening. One of the conditions imposed in the OPA No. 7-93 as set out in by-law No. 1993-139 was "Approval from the Committee of Adjustment for the land severance".

20. In March 1994, the Committee of Adjustment mailed a notice of the public hearing, scheduled for April 14, 1994, to all owners within 60 metres of the Park Lawn Cemetery as per the last assessment roll (ibid.: Tab 1-N).

21. On April 14, 1994, the Etobicoke Committee of Adjustment approved the application to sever the two-acre parcel.

22. The decision of the Committee of Adjustment was appealed to the OMB by the owners of neighbouring apartment buildings on the north side of Bloor Street West (ibid.: para. 27).

23. On July 15, 1994, Council adopted By-law No. 1994-118 amending the Zoning Code. The adoption of the by-law was delayed because the initial resolution by Council required Kening to fulfil certain conditions prior to adoption of the by-law. When the Committee of Adjustment decision was appealed to the OMB, the City of Etobicoke Planning Department recommended to Council that the performance of certain obligations be deferred to the site plan approval stage and that the by-law be adopted so that if it were also appealed, the OMB could hear the two matters at the same time (ibid.: para. 28).

24. The approval of By-law No. 1994-118 was appealed to the OMB by Messrs. Ivan Kuchan, Lawrence Pointer, R.A. Rhodes and Mr. and Mrs. E. Dieters. None of those persons has filed an affidavit before the Divisional Court; none are appellants before this court. Two of that group had represented the interests of the rights holders and their relatives at the public meeting on March 30, 1993.

25. On May 5, 1995, the OMB gave directions to the City of Etobicoke regarding notice to be given for the OMB appeal hearing scheduled for July 20, 1995 (ibid.: Tab 1-O).

26. On May 30, 1995, the City of Etobicoke carried out the OMB directions and gave notice of the July 20, 1995 scheduled date to hear appeals:

(i) of the By-law No. 1994-118, and X7 (ii) the April 14, 1994 decision of the Committee of Adjustment granting severance of the two-acre parcel (ibid.: Tab 1-P).

27. On July 20, 1995, the OMB: (1) gave practice directions for supplementary notice, (2) set out the order of proceeding and (3) adjourned the hearing to October 30, 1995 (ibid.: Tab 1-Q).

The Board required signs to be posted at convenient locations at the entrances of the cemetery and to advertise the proposal in the newspapers, so that those that might have an interest could attend the hearing and make their views known to the Board.

(Reasons of OMB: December 1, 1995; Applicants' Record: p. 56A.)

28. The City of Etobicoke carried out the July 20, 1995 directions of the OMB and gave notice of the rescheduled hearing (ibid.: Tab 1-R).

29. On Monday, October 30, 1995, the OMB hearing began; it was a "week long hearing, which was often extended well into the evening".

IV. Status of the Applicants

1. Ruth Bergstrom

(a) In his affidavit, sworn September 16, 1996, Paul Zuliani, Etobicoke area planner, deposed:

35. One of the objectors who appeared at the Board hearing and gave evidence under oath was Ruth Bergstrom of 70 Cambridge Avenue, Toronto. With the assistance of my notes, I recall that Mrs. Bergstrom told the Board that she bought a plot for herself and her husband in January of 1993, that she was aware of the Open House regarding the proposed development, and that she knew that a residential condominium building was being proposed. This is in addition to the evidence regarding other rights holders and their relatives, some of whom knew about the proposed development and expressed their views as early as January 1990.

(b) In her affidavit, sworn June 19, 1996, filed before the Divisional Court, Ruth Bergstrom deposes: 8. I only became aware of the residential development proposed by Kening Properties Ltd. and the Ontario Municipal Board hearing in or about September, 1995, when Jacqueline Gaudaur called to tell me about it. I was shocked that a residential development had been approved by the Council of The Corporation of the City of Etobicoke within the Park Lawn Cemetery and so close to my family and other families burial plots.

(c) In their factum, counsel for Park Lawn/Kening state:

33. The applicant Ruth Bergstrom is a rights holder who has not, as yet, made herself available for cross-examination. She appears to have given contradictory evidence at the OMB hearing as to when, and how, she became aware of the proposed development.

2. Jacqueline Gaudaur

The factum of counsel for Park Lawn/Kening states:

32. The quarterback of these proceedings on behalf of the applicants is Jacqueline Gaudaur. Contrary to her affidavit, she does not live in Etobicoke, but in the Beaches area of Toronto. She is not a rights holder. She was not a party at the OMB hearing; she was a witness. Her maternal grandparents were buried in the cemetery in the 1950's. She visits the cemetery about two or three times a year. She learned about the development plan from Mr. Rhodes, a friend. Mr. Rhodes is not a party to these proceedings, although he made written submissions to, and attended, the statutory public meeting and the OMB hearing. Ms. Gaudaur admitted on her cross-examination that Mr. Rhodes and Mrs. Deiters had raised the same concerns that she would have raised at the statutory public meeting.

3. Other Affiants

The factum of counsel for Park Lawn/Kening states:

34. Some of the affiants cross-examined on behalf of the applicants did not know what it meant to "refer" the Official Plan Amendment to the Ontario Municipal Board, even though they state in their affidavits that they would have done so had they been given notice. 35. The affiant William Ballard had not even read the OMB decision which is being appealed.

36. Many of the affidavits filed on behalf of the applicants, are given by people who have an interest in grave sites that are located either on the far side of the cemetery from the proposed development, or a long way from it. Some of them are so little affected by what occurs on the Property that they have still not seen the signs that have been posted since 1992.

V. Decision of the OMB (24 pages) -- December 1, 1995

1. Unfortunately, no appeal in the form of a request for referral was made to the Minister, resulting in OPA #7-93 receiving approval. This approval redesignates the subject two-acre property from Open Space to High Density Residential thereby establishing the principle of High Density Residential development on the subject property. (Joint Application Record of Applicants: Tab 4E:p. 58)

. . . . While the Board acknowledges that a number of plot holders or their families may not have been aware of the development proposal prior to the approval of OPA #7-93, the Board nonetheless is satisfied that the appellants had sufficient time to request referral of the Official Plan amendment but chose not to avail themselves of their appeal rights accorded them under the Planning Act. The Board therefore has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter of the approval of OPA #7-93. The Board's ruling with respect to OPA #7-93 was communicated to the appellants and to those present at the hearing. (ibid: page 58A)

2. The second finding of the Board is that the subject lands are designated for High Density Residential purposes in the City's Official Plan. The Board is therefore satisfied that the principle of residential development in the form of the proposed condominium development conforms with the Official Plan. (ibid: page 61)

3. The fourth finding of the Board from the evidence is that the proposed residential condominium with certain design changes is suitable for the subject two-acre property. (ibid: page 62A)

4. The fifth finding of the Board therefore is that a plan of subdivision is not required for the orderly development of the municipality, that the tests set out in section 51 (4) of the Planning Act have been met. Further that the application conforms with the Official Plan and constitutes good land use planning. (ibid: page 65)

In the result, the OMB:

1. allowed, in part, the appeal against by-law 1994-118 made pursuant to s. 34(19) of the Planning Act and amended the by-law.
2. dismissed the appeal against the consent application made pursuant to s. 53(7) of the Planning Act whereby the Committee of Adjustment granted the severance of the two-acre parcel. However, the OMB attached conditions to the severance.

VI. The Issue

In the joint factum of the applicants, the following is found:

2. All three applications revolve around the issue of whether proper notice was given for:

a) The statutory public meeting held by the City of Etobicoke Planning and Development Committee on March 30, 1993, to consider the OPA; and

b) The adoption of the OPA by Council of The Corporation of the City of Etobicoke on August 20, 1993.

VII. Court File No. RE 6342/96: Motion to Quash By-law 1993-139, Passed August 20, 1993 adopting OPA 7-93

The relevant provisions of the Municipal Act: 136(1) The Ontario Court (General Division) upon application of a resident of the municipality or of a person interested in a by-law of its council may quash the by-law in whole or in part for illegality.

138. An application to quash, in whole or in part, a by-law, except a money by-law registered under section 153, shall not be entertained unless made within one year after the passing of the by-law, but, if the by-law required the assent of the electors and was not submitted for or did not receive such assent, the application may be made at any time.

Here, the impugned By-law 1993-139 was passed on August 20, 1993 and the application to quash was launched on March 6, 1996; the application is clearly statute-barred. It follows that the cross-motion of Park Lawn/Kening is well taken and succeeds.

VIII. Court File 138/96 -- Application for Judicial Review under s. 2 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1 of By-law 1993-139 and Court File 815/95 -- Application for Leave to Appeal from the OMB decision of December 1, 1995

(a) Is the holder of a plot in Park Lawn Cemetery an "owner"?

1. The "Indenture of Interment Rights" issued to a rights holder states that the "Grantor does hereby sell to the Grantee, burial rights in Lot . . .". (Application Record of the respondents Park Lawn and Kening, Tab 2-A).

2. The Rules and Regulations of Park Lawn Cemetery state:

(i) "Preface -- Rights holders purchase the right of burial or internment [sic] but not the ownership of the land."

The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, in granting a charter to Park Lawn Cemetery, provided that all lots sold in the cemetery would be subject to such Rules and Regulations as might, from time to time, be adopted, even though such Rules and Regulations were not passed until after the indenture was issued. (ibid.) (ii) the Sale and Transfer of cemetery lot provisions speak of "internment [sic] rights to burial lots", "burial rights holder", and "internment [sic] rights holder". (ibid.)

In my view, Park Lawn Cemetery "rights holders" are not owners of real property.

(b) The "Public Meeting Notice" required by statute and regulation regarding Official Plan and Official Plan Amendments

(i) Under Part III: Official Plans, the Planning Act, s. 17(2), provides:

17(2)The council shall ensure that in the course of the preparation of the plan adequate information is made available to the public, and for this purpose shall hold at least one public meeting, notice of which shall be given in the manner and to the persons prescribed.

Section 21(1) of the Planning Act provides that s. 17 also applies to official plan amendments. (ii) Regulation 918 made pursuant to the Planning Act states:

1(1) Notice under subsection 17(2) of the Act of a public meeting for the purpose of informing the public in respect of a proposed official plan, community improvement plan or plan amendment shall be given,

(a) by publication in a newspaper that is, in the clerk's opinion, of sufficiently general circulation in the area to which the proposed plan or plan amendment would apply that it would give the public reasonable notice of the meeting; or

(b) by personal service or prepaid first class mail, to every owner of land,

(i) in the area to which the proposed plan or plan amendment would apply, and

(ii) within 120 metres of the area to which the proposed plan or plan amendment would apply, as shown on the last revised assessment roll of the municipality, at the address shown on the roll . . .

Section 1(2) of the Regulation provides that the Clerk shall give a similar notice to anyone who has lodged a written request with the Clerk asking for such a notice.

(iii) Section 11.6.4 of the City of Etobicoke's Official Plan stipulates the same notice requirements for public meetings as found in Reg. 918.

(c) Did the City of Etobicoke fulfil the requirements of s. 17(2) of the Planning Act and Reg. 918?

In his first affidavit, para. 13, Mr. Zuliani, an Etobicoke planner, stated that, in his opinion, Etobicoke gave notice of the public meeting in compliance with the requirements of the Planning Act and the regulation enacted thereunder.

In his affidavit of September 20, 1996, Vincent M. Fabiilli, Manager of the Provincial Planning Services Branch, deposed:

In my opinion, the Ministry complied with the requirements of the Planning Act in the processing of OPA No. 7 and followed all standard Ministry practices and procedures in approving the Amendment.

Conclusions

1. Section 17(2) of the Planning Act and s. 1(1) of Reg. 918 provided alternative methods of giving notice "to every owner of land". The City of Etobicoke chose to proceed under s. 1(1) (b) and not under s. 1(1)(a) of Reg. 918.

There is no evidence of bad faith or oblique motive on the part of any employee or elected official of the City of Etobicoke towards the applicants who, earlier in these reasons, I found "not to be owners of land". Nor is there any evidence of bad faith on the part of anyone in the Ministry.

2. In my view, there is no evidence that would justify quashing the Minister's approval on the ground that the Minister acted "unlawfully" as that word was articulated by Lord Morris in Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food, [1968] 1 All E.R. 694 at pp. 706-07, [1968] A.C. 1016 (H.L.). 3. The City of Etobicoke fulfilled all its statutory and regulatory obligations as required by ss. 17(2), 17(8) and 34(18) of the Planning Act and Reg. 918 regarding notice for a public meeting and notice of the adoption by by-law of the OPA and rezoning.

4. Section 61 of the Planning Act states:

61. Where, in passing a by-law under this Act, a council is required by this Act, by the provisions of an official plan or otherwise by law, to afford any person an opportunity to make representation in respect of the subject-matter of the by-law, the council shall afford such person a fair opportunity to make representation but throughout the course of passing the by-law the council shall be deemed to be performing a legislative and not a judicial function.

Conclusion: In my view, the Council of Etobicoke was acting in a legislative capacity in passing the by-law adopting the OPA.

5. Were these applicants, under the common law principles of natural justice, entitled to notice even though the Planning Act and Reg. 918 did not demand it?

In Collins v. Estevan Roman Catholic Separate School Division No. 27, [1988] S.J. No. 476 (C.A.), Sherstobitoff J.A. (for the court) at pp. 14-15:

The inclusion of these procedural provisions in the statute does not, in our view, exclude the application of the principles of natural justice in respect of any lacunae in the statute.

Where the statute speaks, it must of course prevail. Where it is silent the common law rules of procedural fairness apply.

Conclusion: In my view, there is no lacuna or hiatus in s. 17(2) of the Planning Act or in Reg. 918 and they must prevail. In my view, the applicants were not entitled to any notice.

In my view, the following quotation is apropos the case at bar: Telecommunications Workers Union v. Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 781 at pp. 797-98, 125 D.L.R. (4th) 471 at pp. 482-83, per L'Heureux-Dubé J.:

While the TWU may have been affected by the CRTC decision, the effect of this decision on the TWU was purely indirect. Accordingly, I conclude that audi alteram partem did not require that the TWU be provided with notice of the CRTC hearing. The TWU was not a party nor did it have a direct interest in the proceedings before the tribunal.

In this respect, it is important to note that a finding in the case at hand that the TWU was entitled to notice would have grave consequences that could paralyze regulatory agencies. Effectively, it would mean that all individuals with contractual relations with a regulatee would have to be given notice of regulatory proceedings concerning that regulatee if such proceedings were likely to affect, even indirectly, the person in question. Given the wide scope of many regulatory agencies, their decisions are likely to have an indirect effect on a large number of individuals in contractual relations with the regulatee. As a result, all such parties would have to be provided with notice of the regulatory proceedings. This is particularly problematic in light of the extreme difficulty of ascertaining exactly who these parties are in advance of the hearing and the possibility that, in the absence of notice, these parties would be able to challenge the legality of the regulatory decision. This could result in an endless series of challenges that would effectively paralyze regulatory agencies. Accordingly, the audi alteram partem rule should not be interpreted as requiring that notice be provided to parties indirectly affected by regulatory proceedings.

In my view, s. 17(2) of the Planning Act and Reg. 918 provide the standard for procedural fairness and natural justice. The City of Etobicoke has complied with those standards.

(d) Test for granting leave to appeal from a decision of the OMB

Section 96 of the Ontario Municipal Board Act:

96(1) Subject to the provisions of Part IV, an appeal lies from the Board to the Divisional Court, with leave of the Divisional Court, on a question of law.

In Toronto Transit Commission v. Toronto (City) (1990), 2 M.P.L.R. (2d) 42 at p. 45, 42 O.A.C. 20 (Div. Ct.), per O'Brien J.:

Counsel for the respondent urged that the more recent decisions should be followed, and raised the additional point that if there was no reason to doubt the correctness of the decision there would be no point in granting leave. I accept that argument, and conclude that not only must there be a question of legal importance, but there must be some question as to whether the Ontario Municipal Board correctly decided the legal issue before it.

For the reasons set out above, I am of the view that the OMB was correct. Therefore, the requirements for leave to appeal are not met: see Dell Holdings Ltd. v. Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 32 at pp. 60-61, 142 D.L.R. (4th) 206, per Cory J. (for the majority).

(e) Granting of Judicial Review The evidence shows that some rights holders attended the February 17, 1993 community meeting sponsored by Councillor Bissell. Since January 1990, at least two cemetery rights holders have corresponded with the City of Etobicoke and objected to the proposed development. Some rights holders were at the public meeting and made known their concerns about the OPA and the amendment to the zoning code; they received notice of the acceptance by the City Council of the Committee's report to grant the OPA and amendment to the zoning code. In the notice, dated September 1, 1993, the City Clerk of Etobicoke advised that "any person or other body may request the Minister of Municipal Affairs to refer all or part of by-law 1993-139 OPA 7-93 to the Ontario Municipal Board". No one did. The OMB found that "the Board is nonetheless satisfied that the appellants had sufficient time to request referral of the OPA but chose not to avail themselves of their rights accorded to them under the Planning Act". If I am wrong and there were deficiencies in the giving of notice for the public meeting under s. 17(2) of the Planning Act and Reg. 918, and if a breach of natural justice occurred, I still would not grant judicial review, a discretionary remedy under s. 2 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, because these applicants, for whatever reason, elected not to exercise their rights under s. 17(11) of the Planning Act and ask the Minister to refer the OPA to the OMB.

IX. Result

1. Leave to appeal under s. 36(1) of the OMBA from the December 1, 1995 decision of the OMB is refused.
2. The application for judicial review is dismissed.
3. The application under s. 136 of the Municipal Act is quashed.

X. Costs

Prior to reserving judgment, we asked counsel for submissions as to costs. The only counsel who asked for costs were counsel from the City of Etobicoke and counsel for the applicants. If successful, each asked for costs in the sum of $3,700.

The applicants are to pay to the respondent City of Etobicoke its costs fixed at $3,700.

TRAINOR J. (dissenting): -- This application consolidates three proceedings: (1) a motion for leave to appeal from a decision of the Ontario Municipal Board; (2) an application for judicial review; and (3) a motion to declare void or quash an Official Plan Amendment ("OPA") approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The applicants are Park Lawn Cemetery plot owners, which is located on Bloor Street in Etobicoke, or have loved ones buried in the cemetery. They are supported in this proceeding by others in the same or similar positions.

The three proceedings arose from the same facts and have a common issue which can be stated as follows: Should the respondent, the Corporation of the City of Etobicoke have given notice of the public meeting (mandated by statute) dealing with the proposed Official Plan Amendment to the applicants and others affected by the amendment by publication in a newspaper?

The applicants argue that they will be adversely affected by the development of a high rise condominium on lands adjacent to the cemetery and were therefore entitled to notice of the statutorily mandated public meeting preceding the Etobicoke Official Plan amendment, adopted by Council by by-law passed on August 20, 1993.

The amending by-law, passed by Council, was subject to the approval of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. It changed the Official Plan designation, covering a two-acre parcel of the land owned by the respondent, Park Lawn Cemetery Company Limited, from Open Space to High Density Residential. The two acres were removed from the protection of the Cemeteries Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 59, by ex parte order of Keenan J. dated December 11, 1990. It appears from the order that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, pursuant to s. 9(3) of the Cemeteries Act, had earlier revoked the approval for interment in the two-acre parcel. The record does not disclose if notice of the request for revocation was given. The legislation does not appear to require notice, unlike the situation where a cemetery is closed and bodies are to be removed to another cemetery. In the latter situation, extensive newspaper and other notice is required. The two-acre parcel had not been used for grave sites. However, a number of grave sites are adjacent to the proposed development. Park Lawn and Kening Properties Ltd., related companies, are obliged to pay $1 million into trust for the care and maintenance of the cemetery.

The Minister approved the OPA without the necessity of Ontario Municipal Board consideration as a request for hearing or referral had not been made to the Minister. Upon such approval by the Minister, the proposed development became a permitted land use within Etobicoke's Official Plan.

The Ontario Municipal Board, at a hearing to consider an appeal of the zoning by-law passed by Etobicoke to implement development of the condominium and an appeal from a severance granted by the Committee of Adjustment of the City of Etobicoke, took the position that it did not have jurisdiction to consider the merits of the OPA as the amendment had not been referred to the Board by the Minister. It heard evidence and submissions from the applicant Jacqueline Gaudaur (who was granted standing) and others with a similar interest on issues related to the zoning by-law. In dealing with its jurisdiction, the Board acknowledged that a number of plot holders or their families may not have been aware of the proposed development prior to OPA approval but said: "the Board nonetheless is satisfied that the appellants had sufficient time to request referral of the Official Plan amendment but chose not to avail themselves of their appeal rights" (emphasis mine).

On July 20, 1995 the Board adjourned the appeals because of opposition to the condominium development: sufficient time had not been set aside for the appeals. The majority of the opposition came from those people with an interest in one or more of the 30,000 grave sites and/or 80,000 burials at Park Lawn. In granting the adjournment, the Board said:

The Board, driven by a concern for natural justice if not by the letter of the law, expressed concern that the owners of the cemetery plots may quite understandably have concerns about a significant development proposed to be located near those plots.

The Board went on to find that owners of cemetery plots and those with loved ones buried at Park Lawn have "some degree of property interest and are perhaps entitled to some notice". It ordered Etobicoke to post signs at the entrances to the cemetery and to advertise the proposed development in the local newspaper and a Metro-wide paper such as the Toronto Star. The Board adjourned the appeal to October 30, 1995. Three hundred and fifty people jammed the hearing room on the return date.

The Board's reference to "the appellants" failing to request the Minister to refer the OPA to the Board, is difficult to understand. The appellants are those persons appearing in the style of cause in the Board's decision of December 1, 1995. The applicants and others supporting the applicants were not appellants. The evidence is that the applicants were unaware of the proposal prior to the approval of the OPA by the Minister. Several plot owners and persons with loved ones buried at Park Lawn, were aware of the proposal and early on indicated their opposition. They received notice of the public meeting and other proceedings, but did not ask the Minister to refer the OPA to the Ontario Municipal Board. It is not in issue that Etobicoke was aware of opposition from plot holders and others interested in the grave sites prior to the mandatory public meeting.

The Respondents' Position

Etobicoke and the other respondents argue that the OPA by-law was a legislative act and not a quasi-judicial matter, that may have required compliance with the rules of procedural fairness. Further, Etobicoke submits, it complied with the notice provisions of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.13, and Etobicoke's Official Plan. For both reasons, it is argued, the rules of natural justice have no application.

In addition, it is argued that the Board considered the submissions of the applicants and their supporters during the zoning by-law hearing and made substantial changes to the proposed development addressing the concerns of the applicants and their supporters. It is submitted that further representations at a new hearing would be redundant. In any event, it is argued, the rights holders have the right to a public hearing by requesting Etobicoke to amend its Official Plan, pursuant to s. 22 of the Planning Act to redesignate the area as open space. It is also submitted that there was some newspaper coverage of the proposed development. In addition, two signs were erected on Bloor Street. One of the signs advertised the development and the other was erected in compliance with the policy requirements of Etobicoke. It set out the fact that a zoning application had been made by Kening to rezone the two acres from open space to residential so that 137 condominium units could be erected on the site. Lastly, it is submitted this application is out of time.

The Applicants' Position

Counsel for the applicants argue that notice by newspaper advertisement of a public meeting, mandated by statute, to consider the OPA, which is the initiating and fundamental document in a substantial zoning change from open space to high density residential, is a minimum requirement dictated by fairness and natural justice. Counsel submits that the distinction between legislative acts and quasi-judicial acts of council has little significance in current case-law. Etobicoke was charged with the responsibility of notifying members of the public affected by the amendment. Council knew that rights holders were opposed. It knew that the notices sent to those within the statutorily prescribed radius of the graveyard would not include the applicants and others affected. Natural justice, it is submitted, is not ousted by compliance with minimum statutory notice requirements where a lacuna exists in the legislation. It is abundantly clear from the record before us that the applicants and others in a similar position did not receive notice of the public meeting required by the Planning Act prior to adoption of the OPA by Etobicoke and the Minister.

The following facts, whether considered separately or cumulatively, do not provide an answer to the issue raised: the erection of signs on Bloor Street, the coverage of the condominium development in two newspaper articles, the protests from several persons with interests similar to the applicants heard by Etobicoke, the failure of persons aware of the development to appeal the OPA to the Minister by asking him to refer it to the Board, and/or the Board considering the concerns of the applicants and others at the zoning by-law hearing.

The legal issue is whether natural justice and fairness required Etobicoke in all of the surrounding circumstances, to do more than meet the minimum legislative requirements of the Planning Act and Etobicoke's Official Plan.

The Planning Act

Section 1 of the Planning Act defines official plan as "a document approved by the Minister, containing objectives and policies established primarily to provide guidance for the physical development of a municipality . . . while having regard to relevant social, economic and environmental matters".

Section 16(1)(b) of the Planning Act provides, in part, that an official plan may contain a description of the procedures for informing the public and securing their views in respect of a proposed official plan amendment.

Section 17(2) of the Planning Act states: "The council shall ensure that in the course of the preparation of the plan adequate information is made available to the public, and for this purpose shall hold at least one public meeting, notice of which shall be given in the manner and to the persons prescribed".

Section 17(4) of the Planning Act says that where an official plan makes provision for informing and securing the views of the public in respect of amendments, the provisions of s. 17(2) and (3) do not apply provided that the official plan requirements are followed.

Etobicoke's Official Plan provides for notice of the public meeting mandated by statute, in almost identical wording to that contained in R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 917 ("Notice Requirements -- Official Plans"). In addition, Etobicoke, under its Official Plan, may require a sign to be erected on the subject property clearly visible and briefly describing the proposal. A sign was required and posted in this instance. A submission was made as to its location and wording. However, no serious issue is raised even though the sign does not appear to have been effective in alerting those most interested in a high-rise development adjacent to the cemetery.

Etobicoke Official Plan

Section 11.6.3 of Etobicoke's Official Plan states: "In order to provide ample opportunity for the public to review and discuss the proposed plans or amendments and to prepare their comments, at least 21 days advance notice of the public meeting shall be given" (emphasis mine).

Section 11.6.4 of Etobicoke's Official Plan states:

Notice of the public meeting shall be given by the clerk:

a) by publication in a newspaper of sufficiently general circulation in the area to which the proposed plan, zoning code or amendment would apply: or,

(b) by personal service or prepaid first class mail to every person assessed in respect of land in the area to which the proposed plan . . . or amendment would apply and every person assessed in respect of land within 120 meters of the area which the . . . amendment would apply, as shown on the latest revised assessment roles [sic]: and,

c) to all persons and agencies who have requested in writing to be notified . . .

The following three questions remain to be considered: (1) Is the passage of the OPA by-law, including compliance with the notice requirements, a legislative or quasi-judicial act? Further, must legislative and quasi-judicial acts be distinguished? (2) Are the notice provisions a complete code leaving no room for procedural fairness and natural justice? and (3) Do the notice provisions call upon the clerk to exercise discretion in selecting the means of conveying notice and to act reasonably in the circumstances?

While the by-law may be said to be a legislative act, the sending of notice is not. The importance of notice cannot be overstated. Both the Planning Act and Etobicoke's Official Plan recognize the fundamental importance of notice to those who will potentially be affected by a major change in the constitution of planning for the municipality. The decision as to who should be notified and how implementation of the notice requirements of the Official Plan should be carried out, so the largest number of citizens likely to be affected by the amendment will be made aware of proposed changes, is more than an administrative act. It is a quasi-judicial decision requiring a reasoned analysis.

Any reasonably thinking municipal official, with knowledge of the OPA sought by the developer in respect of land adjacent to a graveyard, ought to have known that the majority of persons likely to be affected by the change were owners of grave plots and the loved ones of deceased persons buried in the cemetery. The municipal official ought to have known that such a group would likely oppose condominium development on this land. That person or official should have known (or knew) that the purpose of the notice provisions of Etobicoke's Official Plan was to inform the public and provide ample opportunity for the public to review and discuss the proposed plans or amendments for the public meeting. That official should have known that notice to persons on the assessment roll is not effective notice to the applicants and others similarly situated. That official should have known or ought to have known that publication in an appropriate newspaper would not only comply with the notice requirements in the Official Plan but would be an effective and cost-efficient way of bringing notice of this major change to rights holders and loved ones, a group potentially numbering in the thousands. The Municipal Board had no difficulty in deciding that notice to this group should be by newspaper. Etobicoke, in hindsight, has now made such notice mandatory. If the two acres had been used for burials could it be argued successfully that notice to ratepayers was all that was required?

However, it does not appear to assist their position. This section provides:

61. Where, in passing a by-law under this Act, a council is required by this Act, by the provisions of an official plan or otherwise by law, to afford any person an opportunity to make representation in respect of the subject-matter of the by-law, the council shall afford such person a fair opportunity to make representation but throughout the course of passing the by-law the council shall be deemed to be performing a legislative and not a judicial function.

This section does not deal with the question of notice which is the issue before us. It is specifically confined to the extent to which representations may be made about a by-law.

The Case-law

The respondents argue that Etobicoke acted solely in a legislative capacity. They rely on Zadavec v. Brampton (Town), [1973] 3 O.R. 498, 37 D.L.R. (3d) 326 (C.A.). Here the Court of Appeal held that the intent of the legislature, in circumstances where there was no legislative requirement imposing a duty on Council to send notice or to require a public hearing before passing a by-law approving an official plan amendment and zoning change, was to relieve council from the obligation of deciding judicially as to the merits of the case in favour of or against the amendment and to transfer that jurisdiction to the Board. The important feature of the case, distinguishing it from the application before this court, is set out in the following passage from the reasons delivered by Kelly J.A:

In the instant case, Council in adopting amendment No. 57 [the Official Plan Amendment] elected to request the Minister to refer the amendment to the Board thereby ensuring that the amendment would not become effective until the Board, a body exercising a broad judicial jurisdiction in municipal matters, had approved the amendment.

In the case at bar, the applicants would have been heard had Etobicoke called on the Minister to refer the OPA to the Board.

In Old St. Boniface Residents Assn. Inc. v. Winnipeg (City), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 1170, 75 D.L.R. (4th) 385, the Supreme Court decided that the requirement of procedural fairness or the application of the rules of natural justice should not depend on the classification of functions of a tribunal or public body as legislative or quasi-judicial. Sopinka J. said [at p. 1191]:

The content of the rules of natural justice and procedural fairness were formerly determined according to the classification of the functions of the tribunal or other public body or official. This is no longer the case and the content of these rules is based on a number of factors including the terms of the statute pursuant to which the body operates, the nature of the particular function of which it is seized and the type of decision it is called upon to make.

I turn now to the most difficult issue in the application and that is whether compliance with the statute is all that is required of a municipal council, directed by statute to notify citizens of a pending official plan change. In other words, if the minimum statutory requirement is met, are rules of procedural fairness and natural justice redundant. I think not. Consideration of the nature of the function directed by statute to be performed by the municipal body and the type of decision required to be made dictate otherwise. In addition, there exists on the facts of this case a lacuna or hiatus in the statute. The purpose of the notice provision, by the express words of the statute and the Official Plan, is to provide ample opportunity for the public to review and discuss the proposed amendment. In this case, where Etobicoke decided on its own notice provisions, the Planning Act provided that it was entitled to do so by setting out those measures for informing and securing the views of the public in its Official Plan. The notice provisions are minimal requirements. There is nothing in the statute to prevent Etobicoke from doing more. It appears to me that, on the facts of this case, a hiatus exists in the notice provision. Assuming the statute and Official Plan were complied with by sending notice to those on the assessment roll, the fact remains that a majority of those potentially affected by the amendment would not and did not receive notice. It was or should have been apparent, that in choosing to send written notice to those on the assessment roll, rather than providing notice by newspaper, or both, the majority of those potentially affected by the amendment would not receive notice.

The respondents rely on the following cases to support their assertion that where a statute sets out certain notice requirements, it is the statutory standard and not the common law principles of natural justice and procedural fairness that prevail: Collins v. Estevan Roman Catholic Separate School Division No. 27, [1988] S.J. No. 476 (C.A.); Conception Bay South (Town) v. Newfoundland (1991), 95 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 106, 301 A.P.R. 106 (Nfld. S.C.); Froehlich v. Vancouver (City) Board of Variance, British Columbia Supreme Court, Huddart J., December 12, 1991 unreported.

In Collins, the issue was whether a school principal received adequate notice regarding the grounds of his demotion from principal to teacher. The court concluded that the notice he received contained reasons that were sufficient to let him know the case against him and the reasons for his demotion. The court held that the statutory requirement, that the notice set out the reasons for termination, coincides with the common law requirement of procedural fairness. The court said: "The inclusion of these procedural provisions in the statute does not, in our view, exclude the application of the principles of natural justice in respect of any lacunae in the statute." The court went on to say that there is nothing in the statute to exclude common law principles where the statute is silent. The court then said: "Where the statute speaks, it must of course prevail. Where it is silent the common law rules of procedural fairness apply."

This case correctly states the law of Ontario. However, in the case before us there is a deficiency in the statute and Official Plan. On the facts of this case the deficiency would not exist if the notice provisions were conjunctive rather than disjunctive. That deficiency has now been corrected in Etobicoke.

In Conception there was no statutory provision specifying the notice to be given. The court held that notice must be reasonable in the sense that it conveys the real intentions of the giver and enables the recipient to know what case he/she must meet. The court went on to say [p. 112]:

It is clear that aside from statutory requirements the content and method of service of notice and who is served is influenced by the type of hearing, the knowledge of the parties who might be affected by or opposed to a proposed course of action and the nature of the interest affected.

In Froehlich the statute stipulated that the Board shall give notice to such owners of real property as the Board may deem to be affected by the appeal and public notice of the hearing shall be given, if the matter is deemed by the Board to be of sufficient importance. The Board of Variance, after inspecting and viewing the neighbourhood to make its decision, directed notice to those most directly affected and in addition directed newspaper publication. Huddart J. held that the Board exercised its discretion reasonably. He was of the view that the statutory scheme did not offend the audi alteram partem rule.

The notice provisions of the Planning Act and the Etobicoke Official Plan require the clerk to exercise discretion. In exercising discretion the clerk should have asked the following questions: Who will be most affected by the OPA?; and What method of notifying the persons affected should be implemented to best meet the spirit of the statute and the Official Plan?

The mayor of Etobicoke expressed the spirit of the Official Plan in these words: "Etobicoke recognizes the importance of providing full and fair public notice of development applications." His words are contained in a resolution of Council wherein notice regarding official plan amendments to property adjacent to cemeteries must be given by newspaper and signs posted at each cemetery entrance.

The clerk, in this case, was required to exercise his or her discretion so that full and fair notice of the proposed OPA would be given to the rights holders and those having loved ones in the Parklawn Cemetery. That could only be achieved in this case by newspaper publication having a wide circulation in Metro Toronto.

The application is granted. The OPA is declared null and void. Costs to the applicant against Etobicoke fixed at $3,700.

Order accordingly.

Skyrise Developments Limited v. Abrahams

29 O.R. (3d) 451

Court File No. 93-CQ-35193 Ontario Court (General Division), Davidson J., July 16, 1996

ACTION for damages for breach of contract for the sale of land; COUNTERCLAIM for a declaration that the agreement was void and for repayment of the deposit.

Howard D. Gerson, for plaintiff. Alan Mostyn, for defendant.

DAVIDSON J.: -- The plaintiff's action is for damages for breach of an agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium unit dated September 16, 1988 as amended October 25, 1988. In addition to defending the claim the defendant counterclaims for a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale is null and void and for the return of $40,000 paid by way of deposit.

The plaintiff is developer and builder of the condominium project known as Skyrise on Yonge. The purchase price in the agreement of purchase and sale was $354,500. The sum of $10,000 was paid by initial deposit and subsequently as at March 14, 1989 a further $30,000 had been paid by way of deposit.

The occupancy date was to be no later than September 30, 1991 or an earlier date specified after written notice was given that the unit was substantially completed. The closing date was to be the later of the occupancy date if the condominium plan was registered on the occupancy date or 20 days after written notice that the condominium plan was registered but in no case later than February 28, 1993. An occupancy fee calculated in accordance with the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, was payable from the occupancy date to the closing date. The occupancy fee was determined at $2,956.47 monthly and the occupancy date was ultimately scheduled for May 9, 1991 and the defendant notified.

The defendant did not occupy the unit on the occupancy date nor did she pay any monthly occupancy fee. The plaintiff alleges that it accepted the defendant's breach of the contract by letter dated March 25, 1992 and terminated the agreement and claimed forfeit of the deposits without loss of its right to claim further damages.

The corporation was registered December 31, 1991; the closing date for the unit absent default was February 4, 1992.

The plaintiff ultimately resold the unit by agreement dated August 11, 1992 which closed September 18, 1992 at a resale price of $229,000.

Apart from the defence as to the calculation of the plaintiff's damages the defence is fourfold:

1. Failure to deliver a disclosure statement as required by s. 52(1) of the Condominium Act.
2. Failure of the plaintiff to have registered under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, s. 6. 3. Uncertainties and contradictions in the agreement of purchase and sale so as to render it void.
4. Failure of the plaintiff to complete its obligations and an agreement of postponement of the occupation date to an uncertain time.

Issue No. 1 -- Failure to Deliver a Disclosure Statement

Section 52(1) of the Condominium Act provides:

52(1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the 1st day of June, 1979 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

Although initially the defendant, through counsel, amended the statement of defence at trial to allege defects in the disclosure statement, this was not pursued on submissions before me and indeed it was acknowledged by defendant's counsel that the only issue related to delivery or non-delivery of the said disclosure statement.

It was not until November 1995 that the statement of defence was amended to plead failure to deliver a disclosure statement or amended statement. The original statement of defence and counterclaim was delivered in June 1993.

Evidence was given by Peter Stripp, operations manager of Canada Post. He identified the registration receipt for bulk mail received from the plaintiff. A receipt showed 77 addressees including the defendant at 1 Vanwood Road, Thornhill, Ontario, L3T 2N1. The defendant testified at discovery she lived continuously at that address. Mr. Stripp's evidence was that procedure in accepting bulk mail would be that the document would be prepared by the mailer, given to Canada Post who would check off the items and addressees and endorse it as received, return it to the customer and it would become the customer's official receipt. This particular document was stamped by the Thornhill office of the post office September 28, 1988. Mr. Stripp verified the weight of the disclosure statement and calculated the cost of mailing at $3.95 for each parcel, $2.70 for each registration fee for a total of $512.05.

On cross-examination Mr. Stripp acknowledged that he could not say if the letter was delivered and that although the post office would normally get a receipt signed by the addressee, such receipts were only kept for two years. He also identified the signature of the post office clerk on the registration receipt as one "Rose Budd" who had retired and whose whereabouts were unknown.

Evidence was also given by Kelly Cryer, an employee of the plaintiff in the capacity of site secretary. Her evidence was that on September 28, 1988 she mailed the 77 disclosure statements to 77 purchasers by registered mail including the one to the defendant. She prepared the postal registration receipt, checked the envelope to ensure that they were correctly addressed. She personally put the disclosure statements in envelopes, typed the addresses from the list of purchasers, attended at the post office and provided them to the clerk who checked and counted the items. She requisitioned the plaintiff's cheque for payment of the registration costs in the sum of $512.05 and paid the post office. She acknowledged on cross-examination that no letter had gone with the disclosure statement but identifies the disclosure statement filed in evidence as that which she mailed out. She did indicate that she had not compared that disclosure statement with any other.

Evidence was also given by Harvey Kauffman, the sales manager of the Skyrise condominium project confirming that Ms. Cryer was responsible for sending disclosure statements by registered mail. The procedure for any return of mail was to have it given to Mr. Kauffman at the weekly meetings and that he would arrange for re-delivery. He gave evidence that there were never any disclosure statements returned to the plaintiff. He said it was a bulky envelope and he would remember if any were returned. He too indicates that he did not look at the disclosure statement that Ms. Cryer had sent out. Indeed he had not read them and that his office was not responsible for preparing them simply for sending them out when received.

The evidence of the defendant, Ms. Abrahams, is that she never received a disclosure statement and it only came to her attention at the time of the examination for discovery in November 1995 (the disclosure statement having been given to the defendant's solicitor after a pretrial in April 1995). As to how she knows she did not receive it, she said it was a heavy parcel and she would have remembered it and that she did not receive any registered mail parcel nor did she know she was supposed to receive a disclosure statement.

In respect to Ms. Abrahams' ability to remember, it appears from the evidence that she swore an affidavit of documents in 1994. Only one document was listed pertaining to the litigation being a letter dated March 25, 1992 from the plaintiff's then solicitors to the defendant reciting the defendant's breach of the agreement of purchase and sale and advising as to termination and forfeit of deposits. In addition, while stating that she had no recollection of ever having seen or receiving two other documents she had to concede that indeed she had seen and received them. The first such document was dated October 23, 1988, a little more than a month after the agreement of purchase and sale was signed which was an amendment to said Agreement of Purchase and Sale. There had been a municipal description error which was corrected by the amending agreement and Ms. Abrahams acknowledged her signature appeared thereon. The other document is a letter dated March 1, 1991 from the plaintiff addressed to Ms. Abrahams setting the occupancy date as May 9, 1991 and advising as to certain steps she had to take in respect to it. She admitted at discovery and at trial that she had received and, indeed, that she had telephoned her then lawyers, Messrs. Goldstein and Grubner, to obtain legal advice in respect to it. Significantly she acknowledges that the writing on the said letter, the name "Goldstein" the telephone number "292-0414" is her handwriting.

It appears these latter two documents were obtained from her previous solicitor's file but that no disclosure statement was forthcoming from said file. It would also appear that the affidavit of documents was presumably drafted and executed by the defendant without any consultation with her previous solicitors or production from them of any documentation.

Counsel for the defendant submits that the plaintiff could have established receipt of the registered mail by the defendant if it had moved promptly and obtained from the post office the receipt signed by the addressee. While that may be so it may be difficult to criticize the plaintiff for failure to do that if the evidence is accepted that none of the registered pieces of mail sending out the disclosure statements was returned by the post office undelivered. If indeed there had been a receipt signed by Ms. Abrahams or someone at her residence that would have been the best evidence which, of course, is now lost if it ever existed.

In respect to posting of the letter, I refer to the text, Phipson on Evidence (1982), 13th ed., para. 9-26:

To prove the posting of a letter it is relevant to show that it was delivered to a clerk who, though he had no recollection of the particular letter, habitually took all letters delivered to him to the Post; or that the letter was put in a given place where all letters were regularly put for posting whence they were always carried to the Post by a servant.

On the evidence before me I find, on a balance of probabilities, that the disclosure statement was properly addressed and posted.

In Watts v. Vickers Ltd. (1916), 86 L.J.K.B. 177 at p. 180, 166 L.T. 172 (C.A.), Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. stated:

No doubt a letter properly addressed and posted raises a presumption that it was received. It is only a presumption which may easily be rebutted.

In respect to the aforesaid evidence of Mr. Kauffman as to the procedure in place for dealing with returned mail, particularly a disclosure statement, and his awareness of the importance of it and it not having been returned, it seems to me that there is really no motive to be untruthful and to say that it was not returned if, indeed, it was returned. It would surely be a simple matter to see to the effective redelivery by one method or another if it had been returned. I accept Mr. Kauffman's evidence that the disclosure statement was not returned to the sender, that is, to the plaintiff.

The above recited evidence of Ms. Abrahams gives me real difficulty. This was a substantial transaction in which she was involved. She professed not to remember receiving two documents subsequently shown to have been received and to have been signed by her on one and containing her own handwriting on another. At her examination for discovery Ms. Abrahams acknowledged that she understood that there would be an occupancy date and that she would be notified by the developer of said date. I cannot go to the extent of saying that the defendant's evidence on this line of questioning was untruthful. I do find, however, I am unable to rely upon the evidence which she gives relating to receipt or non-receipt or non-recall of receipt of documents. I am not satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the defendant has rebutted the presumption of receipt of the disclosure statement.

I find, on a balance of probabilities, that the plaintiff delivered the disclosure statement in the manner described by the plaintiff's witnesses that it is presumed thereby to have been received and that presumption has not been rebutted.

Issue No. 2 -- Failure to Register under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act

The relative chronology is as follows.

September 14, 1988 -- agreement of purchase and sale signed by defendant.

September 16, 1988 -- agreement of purchase and sale accepted by plaintiff. October 4, 1988 -- plaintiff applies for registration under the Act submitting an application form.

November 15, 1988 -- plaintiff furnishes bond in the sum of $4,080,000 for security required for registration.

January 30, 1989 -- original bond received by warranty plan.

March 8, 1989 -- plaintiff is registered under the Act.

The relevant section of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act is s. 6:

6. No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless the person is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

It is acknowledged by both parties that this plaintiff is covered by this section.

Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiff by Steven Martin, the vice-president and senior counsel to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan. He testified that the statutory warranties protecting the purchaser apply fully to new homes or condominium units even if purchased from builders who fail to register altogether. He also indicated that the Act provided for prosecutions of vendors who sell without prior registration and that significant fines may be imposed on conviction. He indicates, as well, there is no written policy in respect to the laying of charges. It is investigators who do the decision-making in respect to laying informations against persons in breach of the Act.

The issue of illegality of contract in almost similar factual circumstances as the case before me came before Chapnik J. in Beer v. Townsgate I Ltd. (1995), 25 O.R. (3d) 785, 48 R.P.R. (2d) 27 (Gen. Div.). Chapnik J. held in effect that the prohibition in s. 6 of the Act was fundamental to the nature and purpose of the regulatory scheme under the Act and that the plaintiffs had a common law right to have their agreements of purchase and sale declared null and void.

In another decision, Puri v. Sharynton Homes Ltd. (1995), 48 R.P.R. (2d) 8 (Ont. Gen. Div.), Gotlib J. came to a different conclusion although in dissimilar circumstances. She determined at p. 16:

At least registration was complete prior to the proposed date of closing, and it makes no difference to the purchaser at all whether or not registration was complete at the time of the agreement of purchase and sale.

. . . however, in cases of illegality involving the breach of an express statutory prohibition, intention is clearly irrelevant. It is a matter of public policy, and the absence of a registration certificate is, by itself, sufficient to prevent a sale from occurring, or to render a transaction void. Although the result of insisting upon strict compliance may well on occasion lead to injustice, one can only assume that the legislature considered that when it passed the Act.

At p. 797 O.R., p. 47 R.P.R., Chapnik J. referred to Trudeau Motors Ltd. v. Elliot (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 762 (Dist. Ct.), where the court "denied a claim for payment for repairs done to an automobile where the customer's prior authorization had not been obtained, as required by statute". In Trudeau there the court was dealing with the Motor Vehicle Repair Act, 1988, S.O. 1988, c. 38, which sets out the requirements for authorization for work or repairs and the requirement of recording certain information in respect to authorization. The evidence indicated the repairer had not kept the necessary record although repairs were done and the repairer sued for payment. By s. 11(1) of the Act, "No charge made in contravention of this Act is collectible or payable." It was held that the plain intention of the statute was that if the records described were not kept no charge was payable for the repairs and the effect, though harsh, was presumably intended by the legislature and it would be contrary to the policy of the statute to permit the result to be evaded by an action based on unjust enrichment.

With respect it appears to me that s. 11(1) of the Motor Vehicle Repair Act, 1988 in Trudeau goes further than any of the sections under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. In Beer at p. 799 O.R., p. 49 R.P.R., Chapnik J. states:

The registration requirement was described by the Court of Appeal in Brownstones East Ltd. Partnership v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 545 at p. 554 . . . as being "a mechanism by which the major objectives of the Act may be achieved" -- being the examination of the builder's technical competence to consistently perform the statutory warranties, as well as its financial responsibility, integrity and honesty. Accordingly, the general intent of the statute is to afford protection to the public against sales of homes by builders or vendors who have not satisfied the registrar as to their proper qualifications.

In fact, it appears that the quotation attributed to the Court of Appeal were the words of Sheard J., the judge of first instance, reported (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 547 at p. 554, 23 R.P.R. (2d) 89 at p. 98 (Gen. Div.). The Court of Appeal allowed an appeal from Sheard J. holding that the Act was not intended to apply to the sale of an interest in a limited partnership condominium development and that the transaction did not constitute a sale under the Act.

There is a Court of Appeal for Ontario decision, Maschinenfabrik Seydelmann K-G v. Presswood Brothers Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 316, 53 D.L.R. (2d) 224 (C.A.), which may have been before Chapnik J. but which I am told by counsel before me was not discussed by counsel nor does it appear to be referred to in her reasons. I quote the headnote:

In plaintiff's action for the price of electric sausage-making machinery, defendant relied as a ground of defence upon the alleged illegality of the sale, pleading the Power Commission Act, R.S.O. 1960, c. 300, s. 97(1) and Reg. 490 [R.R.O. 1960, vol. 3, p. 202], s. 4 which prohibit the sale and use of electrical equipment before it has been inspected and approved in accordance with the standards established by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. Section 8 of Reg. 490 provides for inspection without reference to a date of sale in certain cases, e.g., specially manufactured goods or other equipment which in the opinion of the Commission might not be conveniently examined and tested by the submission of manufacturer's samples. The sanction specified for non-compliance is a money penalty upon summary conviction.

Held, that in view of the fact that there is a tendency to regulate many activities in modern life not malum per se but malum prohibitum, due regard must be maintained for the distinction between those contracts inherently illegal because they cannot be performed without violating the law, and those which can be legally performed but are illegal and void because of the intention of the parties to perform them in an illegal manner. Since there is a presumption against illegality in the latter case, it is necessary for the party alleging illegality to show that there was an intention to break the law.

In the present case the parties had made it clear by their conduct that they did not intend to put the transaction into effect or consummate it without conforming with the Regulation. The requirements of s. 8 of the Regulation were in fact performed within the time allowed and the necessary alterations to the machine's electrical fittings completed at the plaintiff's expense. The contract was, therefore, valid and not illegal.

Further at pp. 320-22, Schroeder J.A. speaking for the court stated:

The test to be applied in determining whether a contract is impliedly prohibited by the terms of a statute was considered by this Court in Kocotis v. D'Angelo, 13 D.L.R. (2d) 69, [1958] O.R. 104. That case was concerned with the effect of a municipal by-law rather than a statutory provision, a point which led to a divergence of judicial opinion, and it is evident that the learned trial Judge was governed by that authority in coming to a decision adverse to the appellant. There is a significant point of distinction between that case and the case at bar in that the plaintiff Kocotis whose contract was ultimately held to be void had installed electric wiring and fixtures under his contract with the defendant at a time when he was not possessed of the class of licence prescribed by the provisions of the relevant municipal by-law; that he at no time sought to obtain such licence, and the question of illegality went to the performance of the contract rather than to its formation.

What is forbidden by the statute and the Regulations under review is not malum per se but malum prohibitum, and in every case it becomes a question whether the contract capable or incapable of lawful performance. In the latter case, e.g., if the parties should agree to commit a crime, or if they should clearly agree to commit an act prohibited by statute, such a contract is intrinsically illegal since it necessarily involves an offence or a violation of the law. With much deference to the opinion of the learned trial Judge who decided against the plaintiff with some reluctance, he has failed to take into account the well-settled presumption of law in favour of the legality of a contract; that if a contract can be reasonably susceptible of two meanings or modes of performance, one legal and the other not, that interpretation is to be put upon it which will support it and give it operation.

A like presumption was applied by the Supreme Court in Paoli v. Vulcan Iron Works Ltd., [1950] 1 D.L.R. 593, [1950] S.C.R. 114, where it was held that as there was no evidence that the contract there under consideration was intended to be put into effect without the permission required by the Wartime Salaries Order, although the increase in salary, the subject-matter of the contract, was agreed upon between the parties before the official permission was sought, it must be assumed that the parties intended to comply with the law. I quote from the judgment of Rand, J., at p. 594:

It is said that because the consensus for an increase had been reached in June, 1942, and was to be retroactive to January 1st of that year, the contract was illegal, I must confess to great difficulty in appreciating the grounds for that view. It was illegal only on the assumption that it was intended to be put into effect and carried out without relation to approval. There is no evidence of this one way or another, and in its absence I assume that these parties intended to comply with the law of the country. That this is so is fully confirmed by the fact of the company's application. There was some delay, it is true, but no point is made of it and a sufficient explanation seems to appear by inference from matters which were mentioned in the evidence.

It is also well settled that the party setting up the illegality of a contract as a ground of action or defence is saddled with the onus of proving the illegality alleged: Hire Purchase Furnishing Co., Ltd. v. Richens (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 387.

In respect to the intention of the parties and in particular of the plaintiff to legally perform the contract, there are two references to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act in the agreement of purchase and sale. Paragraph 12.01A relates to selection of colour and material for which the purchaser is entitled to make selection pursuant to the agreement. From my review of the agreement, the only item in that category is in Schedule "C" para. 1 -- "Wall to wall broadloom throughout from vendor's samples, excepting areas designated for sheet goods, ceramics." Paragraph 12.01A goes on to state:

The purchaser agrees that in the event of any conflict between the provisions of this agreement and the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (including any Regulations thereunder) in respect of substitution of items of construction or finishing, except where specifically prohibited by law, the provisions of this agreement shall prevail and the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, including without limitation, the right to claim compensation for damages shall not apply . . .

That paragraph gave the right of selection to the purchaser failing which the vendor was entitled to complete same in its sole and absolute discretion. In my opinion the thrust of that paragraph was not to oust the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. It related to a limited area of purchasers' selection.

In any event para. 12.01B goes on to provide for the purchaser to inspect the unit on certain notification and to submit to the vendor a written closing inspection report including any deficiencies and it goes on to say:

The vendor shall use its best efforts (having regard to weather conditions, the vendor's building schedules and availability of supplies and services) to complete or remedy all such items disclosed in the report in accordance with the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

Thereafter as has been noted previously, on March 1, 1991 the vendor wrote to the purchaser advising it would be necessary for her to conduct the New Home Warranty Program Inspection of the suite with one of the vendor's representatives and setting out a date and requesting the purchaser to arrange for a specific time for inspection. The evidence discloses that the purchaser did not make any arrangement for inspection. That letter also, of course, indicated that the suite was ready for occupancy on May 9, 1991. Thereafter, on April 18, 1991 the solicitors for the vendor wrote to the solicitors for the purchaser advising of the occupancy closing for May 9, 1991 and advised inter alia:

Please also note that in accordance with Article 12.01B of the agreement the purchaser should have arranged for a New Home Warranty Inspection of the unit prior to the occupancy date. The purchaser was earlier notified directly by the vendor of the closing of this interim transaction and the requirements to arrange for such an inspection.

In my view the facts which I have recited beginning with the chronology of application for and subsequent registration, the agreement of purchase and sale itself and the arrangements for inspection and report under the Act cause me to conclude that it was the intention of the plaintiff to legally perform its contract of purchase and sale with the purchaser and that it did so. If the onus is upon the purchaser as indicated in Maschinenfabrik, supra, at p. 322, she has not satisfied that onus. Based upon the authorities that I have cited and the facts before me as indicated I have, with respect, come to the conclusion opposite to that of Chapnik J. and conclude that the agreement of purchase and sale is enforceable by the plaintiff.

Issue No. 3 -- Uncertainties and Contradictions in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale so as to Render it Void

The agreement of purchase and sale, clause 3.01, states:

The schedules hereinafter enumerated and annexed hereto form part of this agreement. Schedule "A" mortgage conditions, Schedule "B" sketch of units, Schedule "C" items included in purchase price.

There is no Schedule "B" to the agreement. The evidence of Mr. Libfeld on behalf of the plaintiff indicated that a sketch for Schedule "B" was not available at the time of purchase but was prepared later. There was also evidence on behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant had been supplied with the brochure showing the sketch of the proposed two condominium towers and the floor plan with room sizes and specifications of the subject suite being unit type E and its location in the tower. Mrs. Abrahams acknowledged in her cross-examination that when she attended at the sale office she was aware of the large floor plans that were on the wall and a scale model of the project and that it was the Wellington Suite that she was purchasing which was shown in ex. no. 6 which would be on the tenth floor looking easterly across Yonge Street.

The description of the subject matter of the sale is:

Unit 07, level 10 as shown on the sketch attached hereto as Schedule "B", known municipally as Suite 1007, being model type No. E . . . together with an undivided interest in the Common Elements and exclusive use of those parts of the common elements attached to such unit as set out in the Declaration, and one parking unit to be allocated . . .

The unit that the plaintiff resold after this purchaser failed to complete is described in the agreement of purchase and sale with one Sylvia Kahn as:

Unit 19, level 11, York Region Condominium Plan No. 818 known municipally as Suite 1007 together with an undivided interest in the Common Elements as set out in the Declaration, and one parking unit to be allocated . . .

It should be noted that the defence does not plead that a different unit would have been made available to the defendant had she gone through with the transaction nor is it pleaded that the defendant did not know what it was that she was purchasing.

The explanation of the difference in description of the units comes from the evidence of Debbie Fefferman who is the property manager for the plaintiff and in charge of this condominium development. She verifies that Mr. and Mrs. Kahn purchased and live in Suite 1007 on the tenth floor. She describes this suite as directly across from the elevator facing east onto Yonge Street, being the Wellington and it is her evidence this is shown as the Wellington in ex. 6.

The evidence of Mr. Libfeld was that as between Building A which contained this particular suite and Building B, there was to be consecutive numbering of units. He indicated that the units in Building B went from 1 to 12 and accordingly in Building A they would start with Unit 13 and adding seven units to the twelve in Building B would give Unit 19 which became the new description in the agreement of purchase and sale with Sylvia Kahn. In so far as the level change from 10 to 11, he indicated that because of grade levels from Yonge Street, the underground parking and level 1 were underground. Accordingly, level 2 became the first floor and so on until the 10th floor became described as level 11. He, too, testifies that Unit 1007 was always on the 10th floor in the position shown on ex. 6.

As to the reference to common elements it is Mr. Libfeld's evidence that the declaration makes it clear that in respect to the residential unit in this action, there were no undivided interest in common elements given.

In regard to this submission, counsel for the defendant makes reference to cl. 18.03 in the agreement of purchase and sale:

This Offer when accepted, shall constitute a binding contract of this purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof. It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the unit or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing. It is my view that the evidence given by Ms. Fefferman and Mr. Libfeld is not excluded by this clause. Rather, it is simply explanatory of the difference in the description of the unit purchased by the defendant.

As to the reference to the common elements in the declaration as set out in Sch. "F" and Sch. "F" being blank, Mr. Libfeld says it is blank because there were no exclusive common elements to the purchasers. The parking units were sold to purchasers rather than included as exclusive use common elements.

I conclude accordingly that this is not a defence available to the defendant as to uncertainties and contradictions.

Issue No. 4 -- Failure of the Plaintiff to Complete its Obligations and an Agreement of Postponement of the Occupation Date to an Uncertain Time

Essentially it is the position of the defendant that she was having difficulty obtaining the funds to close the purchase and sale as she and her husband had been looking to the proceeds from the sale of Mrs. Abrahams' mother's home in London, England. Mr. Kauffman suggested they should write to him setting out the position. Mr. Abrahams wrote April 3, 1991 to Mr. Kauffman advising as to the problem and closing:

As these circumstances are beyond our control we are therefore unable to furnish the funds needed at this time to complete the sale.

While it appeared to be Mrs. Abrahams' evidence that they had gone to England and had listed her mother's property for sale prior to the occupancy date for the Skyrise unit, the only documentation produced pursuant to an undertaking from Mrs. Abraham was a letter dated August 14, 1991 from an estate agent in England recounting an inspection, indicating a sale price for which it would be offered and requesting acceptance of the terms.

In so far as the defence alleging that the plaintiff had agreed to an open-ended extension of the occupancy date, it appears to be based solely upon Mrs. Abrahams' testimony that at the meeting with Mr. Libfeld he had told her to call him upon her return from England. She indicates she thought that this meant she would be given the opportunity to take occupation and tender the funds for closing some time after returning from England.

At her examination for discovery it is her evidence that she told Mr. Libfeld that we, being she and her husband, would get in touch with him when they came back from England and that she cannot remember whether she got in touch with him or not. Her evidence at trial when this discovery evidence was put to her was that she had said this after Mr. Libfeld had said "phone me when you get back".

Mr. Libfeld's evidence is that he met with Mr. and Mrs. Abrahams at his office and they discussed the purchaser not having funds to close. His evidence is that after the discussion he told them that the plaintiff was ready to provide occupancy and would have to have the money by May 9, the occupancy date, and if it was not forthcoming the plaintiff would sell at the best price and sue for the balance. He said it was left after the meeting that they said that they would get back to him but he never did hear from them. In this regard, I note that Mr. Abrahams did not testify at trial. I infer his evidence on this point would not be favourable to the defence.

Additionally, it is Mr. Libfeld's evidence that any amendment to occupancy date would have to have been confirmed in writing as required by the agreement and that it would be handled by the real estate solicitor. In this regard, I prefer the evidence of Mr. Libfeld to that of Mrs. Abrahams and I find that the plaintiff was at all times in a position to meet the occupancy date and close the transaction and that there was no agreement for postponement of the occupancy date.

Damages

It was Mr. Libfeld's evidence that the particular suite involved here was not put officially on the market until the end of March 1992 although if any prospective purchaser had indicated interest it would have been available for sale from May 1991 onwards. It was his evidence that the real estate market was flat all of 1991. Up to early 1989 the plaintiff had sold over 100 units in Building A and by the Spring of 1991 170 units. Of those numbers 120 purchasers defaulted on either occupancy date or closing. There were 204 suites in total in Building A and 208 in Building B. As at May of 1991 approximately 50 units had closed in Building A. Thirty units had not been sold so the inventory in Building A approximated 150 suites and as regards Building B 30 units had been sold but 15 purchasers had defaulted.

Mr. Libfeld testified that from May 1991 to August 1992 when this particular unit was resold the plaintiff had done extensive advertising in the Toronto Star almost weekly from July 1991 to the end of February 1992. Specifically no sale price was inserted in the advertisement and he agreed that this was not typical. He said the price was not put in as the plaintiff did not wish to "panic" the 60 occupants who had taken occupancy and run the risk of them refusing to close when they saw a drastic reduction in the value of the unit.

From March of 1992 the prices were published in the advertisements showing prices beginning at $189,990. He pointed out the agreement of purchase and sale provision to the effect that the plaintiff would have up until January 30, 1990 to determine if the whole project was feasible with the right to terminate by written notice on or before February 28, 1990. It was Mr. Libfeld's evidence that if they had only sold 60 units in Building A and 15 units in Building B (those which closed by way of occupancy), the project would not have gone forward.

Evidence was also given on behalf of the plaintiff by Barry Lebow, qualified as an expert in real estate appraisal. His evidence was to the effect that the values of the unit would be as follows.

September 30, 1991 $225,000

August 11, 1992 $229,000

This latter date was the date of the agreement of purchase and sale with the new purchaser, Sylvia Kahn.

On all of this evidence I am persuaded that the plaintiff was faced with a very large inventory of units which it had contracted to sell but on which purchasers had defaulted. In my view it is reasonable for the plaintiff to have taken a global rather than specific approach to resale of the units to establish a best possible price which would be available in the marketplace.

The defendant called no evidence on damages.

I am of the view that the plaintiff on the evidence has established that it did the best it could to mitigate its loss and I find that the steps taken by it were reasonable in the circumstances. Conversely, I am not satisfied that the defendant has established that the plaintiff could reasonably have avoided part of the loss which is claimed.

In the final analysis the plaintiff will have judgment against the defendant as follows:

1. The difference between the original price $354,500 and the resale price $229,000 $125,500.00
2. Defendant to be credited with the deposits 40,000.00 Balance $ 85,500.00
3. The plaintiff is also entitled to occupancy fee in the sum of $2,956.47 per month from the occupancy date May 9, 1991 to the proposed closing date February 4, 1992 $ 26,131.38
4. Taxes from February 4, 1992, the proposed closing date to September 18, 1992, the date of the closing of the subsequent sale $ 1,496.12
5. Common expenses of $320.64 per month from May 9, 1991 to September 18, 1992 $ 2,389.24
6. Interest at 10% on the unpaid balance due on closing of $48,625 from May 9, 1991 to September 18, 1992 $ 6,633.36

7. Interest at 10% on what would have been the first mortgage of $265,875 from the closing date, February 4, 1992 to September 18, 1992 $ 16,461.84 ----- Total judgment $ 138,611.94

The plaintiff is also entitled to prejudgment interest at 10 per cent per annum on the amount of the judgment from September 18, 1992 to the date of judgment.

The counterclaim of the defendant will be dismissed.

With respect to costs if counsel cannot agree on disposition I would ask that counsel make submissions briefly in writing with a view to my being able to give my ruling by August 9, 1996.

Judgment accordingly.

Beer et al. v. Townsgate I Limited et al.

25 O.R. (3d) 785 Court File No. 91-CQ-1655 Ontario Court (General Division), Chapnik J. October 10, 1995

Martin Teplitsky, Q.C., and Philip C. Polster, for plaintiffs. Allan Sternberg and Laurel C. Broten, for defendants, Townsgate I Ltd. and 652 Steeles Investments Inc.

J. Patrick Moore, for other defendants.

CHAPNIK J.: --

Introduction

In early 1989, Townsgate I Limited ("Townsgate") initiated its promotional marketing of a luxury condominium project located at the intersection of Bathurst Street and Steeles Avenue in Vaughan Township. As part of its marketing efforts, invitations were sent to prospective purchasers to attend a special preview showing of the proposed development. The grand opening extended over a three-day weekend in February 1989, and a picture emerges of a scene on those three days which is not a pretty one. It is a picture of individuals swept up in a frenzy of opportunity where common sense was overtaken by avarice, and traditional attributes of propriety, professionalism and integrity disintegrated into a contest of financial wit.

Shortly thereafter, the bubble burst with the dramatic collapse of the real estate market and the sad realization that no pot of gold lay at the end of the rainbow.

Each party blames the other for this sorry state of affairs. The plaintiff purchasers malign the overzealous marketing techniques of the defendant vendor; the defendants characterize this dispute as an attempt by the plaintiffs to avoid their contractual obligations and the consequences of what they perceive to be a bad deal.

Overview

I do not mind saying at the outset that this decision has caused me considerable chagrin, not because of the magnitude of the case, comprising about 50 witnesses and more than 100 exhibits, and involving several millions of dollars, but because both parties stand fervently behind a strong position and the circumstances are somewhat unique.

In many situations involving aborted real estate transactions with their genesis in and around 1989, wherein purchasers of real property became caught in a downward spiralling market, the resulting litigation has not presented a great deal of difficulty for the trier of fact. Anxious purchasers assessed the market and knowingly took the risk when making their investments. With the dramatic decline in the market, panic reigned as they were unable to sell their own homes or finance the depreciated units. In such a situation where vendors have sought to enforce the contracts, purchasers have been tenacious in defending those claims, but the courts have upheld their "honestly made" bargains.

The decision is rendered more difficult, however, where in addition to anxious purchasers, one is confronted with an anxious vendor, one who acted precipitously and who perhaps also became caught up in the avid frenzy of the hot real estate market. If the vendor were disreputable or acting in bad faith, again, the decision would be facilitated. But that is not the case here. In this rather peculiar circumstance, we are dealing with a seasoned builder of good repute who had accumulated considerable experience in the land development business.

The starting point for this inquiry is based upon the premise that the purchasers' primary motivation in failing to close their transactions and in bringing this lawsuit is to rescind what has manifestly become, for them, a bad deal -- they want out. Indeed, some of their defences were raised at the zero hour. That does not preclude recovery, however, if the vendor, in its zeal, made material "mistakes" including, for example, the infringement of statutory provisions, misrepresentation of facts, and dissemination of misleading information, particularly when the effect of those errors had consequences of a serious nature for the purchasers.

Unfortunately, in attempting to embrace or advance the wonders of free enterprise, attributes of avarice and arrogance often underlie the issues; and that is what makes this so difficult.

Background Facts

The factual background underpinning this dispute may be summarized as follows:

1. Townsgate was the developer of a luxury, state-of-the-art residential condominium project consisting of two highrise buildings or towers located at the intersection of Bathurst Street and Steeles Avenue in the City of Vaughan. Townsgate commenced marketing the project near the end of 1988, and sent invitations to prospective purchasers to attend at the sales pavilion for the grand opening scheduled to be held in February 1989, providing them with an opportunity to take advantage of "special preview prices".

2. In February or March 1989, each of the plaintiffs entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with Townsgate to purchase a unit or part thereof in the complex.

3. The majority of units were purchased during the grand opening presentation to the public held on February 24, 25, and 26, 1989. Although 160 of the 220 available units were initially sold that weekend, approximately 70 purchasers cancelled their respective agreements within the ten-day cooling-off period provided for in the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26). In the end, 90 agreements of purchase and sale signed on the initial opening weekend remained, of which 45 completed their transactions.

4. The agreements of purchase and sale consisted of standard form contracts with a purchase price in the range of $284,000 to $383,000, the majority being about $340,000.

5. Norman Hill Realty Inc. ("Norman Hill") acted as the real estate agency retained by Townsgate to effect sales of the units. At or near the commencement of trial, the claims against Norman Hill and the individual named defendants, being Harvey Kauffman, Aggie Berk, Sylvia Gold, Jim Stodgill, and George Kerr, were withdrawn by the plaintiffs.

6. At the time of sale, the condominium market in the City of Vaughan reflected a generally inflated real estate market described as a "seller's market".

7. By the end of 1989, about ten months after the purchase, the real estate market was in rapid decline, and the recession continued into 1990 and following. Townsgate advertised drastic reductions in respect of units similar to those purchased by the plaintiffs.

8. In the early part of 1990, Townsgate issued a newsletter offering prospective purchasers a repurchase proposal involving what was termed as a risk-free guaranteed investment.

9. In or around February 1991, several of the purchasers formed an association to find ways to deal with the situation, in the main, to attempt to negotiate a better deal and/or to retain legal counsel.

10. In March 1991, Townsgate offered most, if not all, of the purchasers a 15 per cent reduction in the purchase price of their units in exchange for payment of a further deposit and an undertaking to close their transactions. Of the 90 purchasers who had bought units at or near the opening weekend, 45 accepted the offer.

11. The original projected closing dates of March to June 1991 were extended by the vendor to permit occupancy in the fall of 1991.

12. These proceedings were instituted on August 2, 1991.

13. Having repudiated the agreements, the remaining 35 plaintiffs (some have settled their disputes) bring this lawsuit involving 23 units, and seek the return of their deposits, each in the sum of $40,000. Collectively, they contest the legality of the contracts on the basis of alleged deficiencies in ownership, non-compliance with the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31), and the regulations thereunder (R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 892); the Ontario Building Code Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 51; and the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 466, as amended (now R.S.O. 1990, c. S.5, as amended). In addition, several of the plaintiffs assert claims of negligence, misrepresentation and breach of contract, and they rely upon the provisions of the Condominium Act.

In its counterclaim, Townsgate claims damages for breach of contract and, in the alternative, forfeiture of the deposits.

To the extent that any of the above factors prove to be a matter of dispute, they may be viewed as my findings of fact on the evidence.

[As this case is reported only on the issue of illegality, pages 9 to 18 inclusive of the original typescript of the reasons have been omitted.]

Illegality

The plaintiffs also contest the validity and enforceability of the purchase and sale agreements as a result of the builder's failure to comply with various legislative provisions contained in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act ("O.N.H.W.P.A."), the Building Code Act, and the Condominium Act. The relevant provisions are listed below:

The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act

1. In this Act,

(a) "builder" means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner;

(l) "sell" includes entering into an agreement to sell;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner.

6. No person shall act as a vendor or builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

7(1) An applicant is entitled to registration by the Registrar except where,

(c) the applicant is a corporation and,

(i) having regard to its financial position, it cannot reasonably be expected to be financially responsible in the conduct of its undertakings, or

(ii) the past conduct of its officers or directors affords reasonable grounds for belief that its undertakings will not be carried on in accordance with law and with integrity and honesty; or

(d) in the case of an application for registration as a builder, the applicant does not have sufficient technical competence to consistently perform the warranties.

(2) A registration is subject to such terms and conditions to give effect to the purposes of this Act as are consented to by the applicant or imposed by the Tribunal or prescribed by the regulations.

(3) A registration is not transferable.

11(1) The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan is continued under the name Ontario New Home Warranties Plan in English and Régime de garanties des logements neufs de l'Ontario in French and is comprised of the warranties and the guarantee fund and compensation provided for by this Act.

(2) When a vendor enters into a contract for the sale of a home to an owner or for the construction of a home for an owner, the vendor shall deliver to the owner such documentation and notices respecting the Plan as are prescribed in the regulations.

22(1) Every person who,

(b) contravenes section 6 or 12 or subsection 18(4), and every director or officer of a corporation who knowingly concurs in such furnishing or contravention is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $25,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or to both.

R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 726, s. 2(a):

2. In connection with the sale or construction of a home . . . the following documents . . . shall be delivered under the Plan

(a) at the time of execution by the vendor and purchaser of a purchase agreement, the vendor shall deliver to the purchaser a deposit receipt.

It is also noted that s. 3.3 of the Ontario New Home Warranty Program Vendor Builder Agreement signed by Townsgate requires the builder to post security prior to the commencement of construction, marketing or selling of units in a condominium project, whichever occurs first.

The Building Code Act:

5(1) No person shall construct or demolish or cause to be constructed or demolished a building in a municipality unless a permit has been issued therefor by the chief official.

6(1) The chief official shall issue a permit except where,

(b) the applicant is a builder as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and is not registered under that Act.

24(1) Every person who (c) contravenes this Act or the regulations or any by-law passed under the authority of this Act, and every director or officer of a corporation who knowingly concurs . . . is guilty of an offence . . .

The Condominium Act:

53(1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, despite the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a bank listed in Schedule I or II to the Bank Act (Canada) or trust corporation or a loan corporation or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office until, (a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto; or

(b) delivery of a prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

55. Every person who knowingly contravenes . . . subsection 53(1) . . . is guilty of an offence . . .

R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121, s. 35(2), which reads:

35(2) A deposit receipt executed by the warranty corporation providing for compensation to a purchaser is prescribed security for the purposes of clause 53(1)(b) of the Act.

Violations of the above provisions undeniably occurred in the following manner:

1. Townsgate entered into the agreements of purchase and sale as vendor prior to being registered under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "program") in contravention of s. 6 of the O.N.H.W.P.A.

2. Being a bare trustee, Townsgate did not sell the units "on its own behalf" as mandated by s. 1(n) of that Act.

3. No deposit receipt was provided to purchasers concurrent with the execution of the agreements of purchase and sale in accordance with Reg. 726.

4. Prior to the provision of the deposit receipts to purchasers, Townsgate transferred a portion of the purchasers' deposit cheques to a related company, thereby utilizing the moneys in contravention of s. 53(1) of the Condominium Act.

5. The application for a building permit was made in the name of 652 as builder, using Townsgate's registration number which was not transferable under the Act.

6. Construction of the project proceeded for a period of approximately ten months without a building permit, in contravention of s. 5(1) of the Building Code Act; nor was Townsgate registered under the O.N.H.W.P.A. at the time the permit application was submitted.

7. Townsgate commenced marketing the project in the fall of 1988, or early 1989, in advance of providing the prescribed security under the O.N.H.W.P.A., in contravention of the above-mentioned builder's agreement.

According to Mr. Teplitsky, the above infractions are determinative of this lawsuit. The contracts are void ab initio on grounds of illegality and the plaintiffs are entitled to the remedy of rescission, including the return of their deposits.

Townsgate does not deny the occurrence of the above transgressions, but views them as minor, inconsequential and not compromising of the parties' rights or obligations under the agreements. In his submissions, Mr. Sternberg emphasized the following:

1. In early February 1989, Townsgate applied to the program for registration under the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan. Carol Ann Street, counsel with the program, confirmed receipt from Townsgate on February 14, 1989, of a completed registration kit consisting of an application and project summary along with guarantees and fully paid enrolment fees; and further receipt on or before February 22, 1989, of a letter of credit from the vendor in the amount of $4.5 million (based on $20,000 per unit). Formal registration of the project endorsed by the Registrar on March 29, 1989, was confirmed by letter to Townsgate dated March 30, 1989. Although the units in question were sold in February and March 1989, whereas registration of the project was not given until March 29, 1989, no further actions or documentation were required of Townsgate in the interim.

2. The consumer protection aspect of the O.N.H.W.P.A. existed to protect purchasers' interests from the time of entry into the agreements of purchase and sale regardless of registration.

3. All four of the beneficial owners involved in the land development project were viable companies which supplied the necessary information and guarantees on behalf of Townsgate in advance of the sales.

4. Although H.U.D.A.C. deposit receipts were not provided upon execution of the agreement, they were delivered to the plaintiffs a few months later, in August and September 1989.

5. Prior to the provision of the deposit receipts, Townsgate did utilize part of the purchasers' deposit cheques for construction purposes since it had already provided the necessary security through the plan.

6. Townsgate paid a fine of $100,000 to the Town of Vaughan as a penalty for commencing the construction without a building permit. Although the application for a permit was submitted August 22, 1989, and the construction commenced almost immediately thereafter, the issue date on the permit was October 24, 1990.

Admittedly, Mr. Zagdanski was actively involved in the decision to begin construction prior to the attaining of the building permit. At the same time, he professed to be unaware of the other statutory infringements and attested to the intention of the principals of the company to proceed with the construction of the project in a timely manner and in compliance with all relevant rules and regulations. The jurisprudence in cases of alleged illegality rests upon the general principle that a contract expressly or impliedly prohibited by statute is void: Re Northwestern Trust Co., [1926] S.C.R. 412, [1926] 3 D.L.R. 612.

That principle was reiterated in Meyers v. Freeholders Oil Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 761, 25 D.L.R. (2d) 81, where a section in the then securities legislation which prohibited salespersons calling at a private residence to trade in securities was invoked in an attempt to nullify trades in shares of a mining lease. The court held that the prohibition against salespersons calling at investors' homes to sell securities did not constitute part of the fundamental scheme of protecting the public against unauthorized trading; the penalty prescribed was the only remedy and the sale was not void. The analysis of Martland J. at pp. 774-75 is instructive as to the proper approach the courts should take in such matters:

The determination of the effect of the breach of a statutory provision upon a contract is often a difficult one and must, of course, depend upon the terms and the intent of the provision under consideration. In some cases the statute clearly forbids the making of a certain kind of contract. In such a case the contract cannot be valid if it is in breach of the provision.

On the other hand, some statutes have been construed as only imposing a penalty, where the Act provides for one, although that is not necessarily the result of a penalty provision being incorporated in the Act. Lord Esher posed the question which must be determined in Melliss v. Shirley Local Board [(1885), 16 Q.B.D. 446 at 451] as follows:

Although a statute contains no express words making void a contract which it prohibits, yet, when it inflicts a penalty for the breach of the prohibition, you must consider the whole Act as well as the particular enactment in question, and come to a decision, either from the context or the subject-matter, whether the penalty is imposed with intent merely to deter persons from entering into the contract, or for the purposes of revenue, or whether it is intended that the contract shall not be entered into so as to be valid at law. (Emphasis added)

The combined effect of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Re Northwestern Trust and Meyers cases is that a sale which is undertaken in the face of an express statutory prohibition is void; but where a penalty is provided, the court must determine the intention of the legislature in assessing the import of the particular provision: see also One Hundred Simcoe Street Ltd. v. Frank Burger Contractors Ltd., [1968] 1 O.R. 452, 66 D.L.R. (2d) 602 (C.A.).

If the parties enter into a prohibited contract, it is unenforceable and the court is not concerned with the intention of the parties, which is irrelevant in the circumstances: see St. John Shipping Corp. v. Joseph Rank Ltd., [1956] 3 All E.R. 683 at p. 687, [1957] 1 Q.B. 267, and Cheshire, Fifoot and Furmston, Law of Contract, 12th ed. (1991), at p. 353.

More recently, some judges have shed doubt upon the wisdom of applying a strict statutory interpretation without discrimination. In Royal Bank of Canada v. Grobman (1977), 18 O.R. (2d) 636 at p. 651, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 415 (H.C.J.), Krever J. (as he then was) denounced what he described as the "knee-jerk reflexive reaction to a plea of illegality". In refusing to invalidate a mortgage given to a bank as security for a loan where the institution was in technical breach of a section of the banking legislation, factors such as the serious consequences and social utility of invalidating the contract and a determination of the class of persons for whom the prohibition was enacted, were weighed by the court.

Our courts have consistently refused to entertain actions brought by persons seeking a remedy based upon an illegal contract where the party suing does not lie within the group of persons for whose protection the prohibiting statute was passed: see Sidmay Ltd. v. Wehttam Investments Ltd., [1967] 1 O.R. 508, 61 D.L.R. (2d) 358 (C.A.), affirmed [1968] S.C.R. 828, 69 D.L.R. (2d)

336. In applying the reasoning expounded in Sidmay, Grange J. (as he then was) granted rescission of contracts to purchasers of securities from an unregistered trader: Ontario Securities Commission v. British Canadian Commodity Options Ltd. (1979), 22 O.R. (2d) 278, 93 D.L.R. (3d) 208 (S.C.). Similarly, in Jones v. F.H. Deacon Hodgson Inc. (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 540, 31 D.L.R. (4th) 455 (H.C.J.), Henry J. held the sale of shares by a defendant who had not filed a securities prospectus to be void and not merely voidable; and the court in Trudeau Motors Ltd. v. Elliot (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 762 (Dist. Ct.), denied a claim for payment for repairs done to an automobile where the customer's prior authorization had not been obtained, as required by statute.

In an earlier decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal refused to assist the lender of a loan alleging illegality in regard to approvals where the plaintiff did not fit within the group of persons the governing legislation was designed to protect: see Central Mortgage & Housing Corp. v. Co-operative College Residences Inc. (1975), 13 O.R. (2d) 394, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 183 (C.A.).

In Sidmay, Laskin J.A. (as he then was) endorsed the following principle expressed by the American Law Institute, Restatement of the Law of Contracts, para. 601, p. 1116:

If refusal to enforce or to rescind an illegal bargain would produce a harmful effect on the parties for whose protection the law making the bargain illegal exists, enforcement or rescission, whichever is appropriate, is allowed. In Bognar v. Borg (1989), 71 O.R. (2d) 264, 40 C.L.R. 286 (Dist. Ct.), the application of that proposition to a situation similar in nature to the one faced by this court led to a finding that an agreement to construct a new residence was illegal and void. The plaintiffs had made progress payments but the house was never completed. They subsequently brought an action for the return of their payments and the defendants counterclaimed for a deficiency in the sale of the residence to a third party. Since the defendants had never registered as builders under the O.N.H.W.P.A., the court found the original agreement to be illegal and unenforceable. In doing so, Fleury D.C.J. conducted an extensive review of the relevant legal principles and the purpose and intent of the legislation as a whole. At p. 270 O.R., p. 293 C.L.R., of the judgment, he states:

In the case at bar, we are faced with a statute enacted by the Ontario Legislature. It clearly stipulates that "no person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act" (s. 6). It comes within the second general principle identified by Lord Devlin [St. John Shipping, supra, at p. 687 All E.R.], "a contract which is expressly or impliedly prohibited by statute". In light of the definition of "builder" contained in s. 1(a) of the Act as "a person who undertakes the performance of all the work . . ." there appears to be a clear prohibition against the undertaking described in the contract which the parties signed. As such, it would appear to be an illegal contract. And there would be no need to look at the intent of the parties.

In his submissions, Mr. Sternberg distinguished the facts in the present case from those in Bognar. The distinguishing elements are exemplified at p. 266 O.R., p. 288 C.L.R., where the court observed:

It is clear that the defendants failed to comply with any of the applicable provisions of the Act until well after the plaintiffs had purported to consider the contract as at an end because of the defendants' breach.

Indeed, the illegality in that case continued until after the parties had parted company. In the case at bar, not only was the situation remedied during the life of the contracts and prior to the commencement of the construction, but all necessary disclosure, informational and practical requirements had been satisfied by the vendor in advance of the sales. The purchasers by the terms of the legislation were fully protected throughout and based upon past experience, the representatives of the program expressed no reservations as to the builder's competence or integrity.

I am also mindful of the short time span involved whereby the majority of the agreements of purchase and sale were signed on the weekend of February 24, 1989 and the registration of the project confirmed on March 29, 1989, a period of about one month. I take particular cognizance of the $4.5 million security bond posted by the vendor in advance of the sales.

The O.N.H.W.P.A. was first enacted in 1976 in order to regulate the construction of residential dwellings in Ontario. It provides for the establishment of a registry of vendors and builders who pay fees to a designated corporation and a guarantee fund for compensation of owners who may assert a claim for breach of any of the warranties required by the Act. An applicant's entitlement to registration is subject to a determination that he will carry out the undertakings and warranties in a responsible fashion. Section 6 of the Act prohibits anyone from acting as a builder or vendor (selling or entering into an agreement to sell) without being registered. Section 7 provides the grounds for authorization and for a hearing before the commission when the registrar intends to refuse to issue it. Registration is non-transferable and may be subject to terms and conditions to give effect to the purposes of the Act. The registration requirement was described by the Court of Appeal in Brownstones East Ltd. Partnership v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 545 at p. 554, 93 D.L.R. (4th) 400, as being "a mechanism by which major objectives of the Act may be achieved" -- being the examination of the builder's technical competence to consistently perform the statutory warranties, as well as its financial responsibility, integrity and honesty. Accordingly, the general intent of the statute is to afford protection to the public against sales of homes by builders or vendors who have not satisfied the registrar as to their proper qualifications.

In this case, the builder was clearly not unscrupulous, financially irresponsible or technically incompetent, much to the contrary. The legislation does not discriminate, however, between levels of applicants prior to completion of the process of authorization. By its clear and unambiguous prohibition in s. 6, the Act leaves unimpaired the principle that a breach of its injunction results in a sale of a property that is void. An applicant cannot supersede the authority of the registrar by assuming registration in advance of a ruling. To apply the prohibition only in hindsight would, in my view, defeat the implied, if not express, intention of the legislature. After all, a builder's circumstances may change from one project to another; and if the courts were to allow lenience, where would the line be drawn? In this case, the relevant information was forwarded to the program just prior to the sales taking place; what if it had proved to be incomplete or inadequate in some respect; or it had been filed after the sales -- would a week suffice, a month, any time prior to closing?

The legislation provides that absent registration, no person shall sell to the public. Thus, not only must the documents be filed but the registrar must be satisfied that the application is not contrary to the public interest. There can be no question but that the filing and its acceptance by the registrar is fundamental to the protection of members of the public who are contemplating the purchase of a condominium. The effect of s. 6 is to prohibit the sale of condominiums to the public without prior acceptance by the registrar. In my view, the prohibition in s. 6 of the Act is fundamental to the nature and purpose of the regulatory scheme.

To be sure, the facts of this particular case make this finding difficult to accept; however, in cases of illegality involving the breach of an express statutory prohibition, intention is clearly irrelevant. It is a matter of public policy and the absence of a registration certificate is, by itself, sufficient to prevent a sale from occurring or to render a transaction void. Although the result of insisting upon strict compliance may well on occasion lead to injustice, one can only assume that the legislature considered that when it passed the Act.

An examination of the penalty provisions of the Act (ss. 19 and 22(1)) discloses no reference to a civil remedy for a third party and no provision that expressly deprives a purchaser of his or her common law remedy resulting from a breach of s. 6.

If one were to review the three factors outlined by Mr. Justice Krever in Royal Bank of Canada v. Grobman, supra, as elements the court should weigh, the likely result would be the same. Serious consequences undoubtedly flow from the finding of invalidity in respect of an executed agreement of purchase and sale. Large amounts of money are at stake, particularly when several purchasers join their claims. However, negligent building of residential condominium units without proper warranty protection for purchasers, can also have serious consequences, and the program, through the use of the guarantee fund, makes the entire construction industry responsible for compensation of aggrieved purchasers of residential homes. The social utility of the prohibition is self-evident. It is imperative to have guidelines for builders of residential property in the public interest. This is by no means a trivial matter. The third aspect lies squarely in favour of the plaintiffs who clearly fall within the class of persons for whose benefit this section was enacted.

I have alluded to the hardship which I know this decision may place upon the vendor; no doubt there will be other illegality cases not quite so onerous on the facts; nevertheless, the intent of the legislature can only be abrogated in clear terms or by necessary intentment. That is the effect of the law, and I can find no ground for holding otherwise.

Mr. Sternberg made reference to the equitable principle of unjust enrichment and the possibility of a claim for relief in quantum meruit.

I adopt the reasoning of Byers D.C.J. in Trudeau Motors Ltd. v. Elliot, supra, at p. 765, that to allow this argument would permit the defendant to do indirectly that which it was specifically prohibited to do directly, and thereby "frustrate the obvious policy considerations which are the foundation of the Act itself".

The underlying rationale for this approach was aptly recognized in an early decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Bank of Toronto v. Perkins (1883), 8 S.C.R. 603 at p. 610, per Ritchie C.J.C.:

It would be a curious state of the law if, after the Legislature had prohibited a transaction, parties could enter into it, and, in defiance of the law, compel courts to enforce and give effect to their illegal transactions.

Finally, I take some comfort in the fact that but for the breach, the plaintiffs may well have never entered into the within agreements of purchase and sale; that is, the practical effect of the illegality in a rapidly changing market was crucial. A comment made by Elan Beer, purchaser of a condominium whose case was settled prior to trial and who appeared as a witness for the plaintiffs, is illustrative of this. Mr. Beer returned to the sales office a few days after signing his agreement on February 25, 1989. When asked why he did so, he included in his reasons the fact that "there was talk (at the time) in the media" regarding "the potential of the hot market subsiding and, of course, that worried me". Timing undoubtedly becomes a significant factor in a volatile market. The principals of Townsgate, as experienced, sophisticated builders and developers of real estate properties, knew or ought to have known the laws under which they were proceeding. Compliance with the express statutory prohibition contained in s. 6 of the O.N.H.W.P.A. must not be impaired by anxious builders who may wish to "jump the gun".

In conclusion, I find that the purchasers have a common law right to have their agreements declared a nullity. The effect, though harsh, expresses the intention of the legislature.

In light of that finding, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the other alleged and actual breaches of statute. Suffice to say that none of them involved the breach of an express statutory prohibition precedent to the formation of a contract; and that upon a rather cursory glance and, in general, they do not appear to constitute an integral part of the relevant legislation such as to bear fundamental effect. Moreover, in some instances such as the breaches of the Building Code Act provisions, the statutory penalties appear to be inherently comprehensive, and the prohibition imposed for purposes of revenue and deterrence, rather than with intent to render the impugned contracts invalid. I am reminded of the cautionary words of Professor Waddams that if every statutory illegality in the performance of a contract, however trivial, invalidated the agreement, the result would be "an unjust and haphazard allocation of law without regard to any rational principles": S.M. Waddams, The Law of Contracts, 3rd ed. (1993), at p. 381. The practical considerations in accordance with commercial reality would permit some level of infringement in these circumstances. The final issue revolves around the status of the purchasers' deposits. It has been said that where a contract is illegal because it is prohibited by statute, neither party may expect assistance from the court. In considering whether the plaintiff purchaser was entitled to the return of progress payments made pursuant to the illegal contract, the court in Bognar, supra, cited the following statement made by Lord Atkin in Anderson Ltd. v. Daniel, [1924] 1 K.B. 138 at p. 149, [1923] All E.R. Rep. Ext. 783 (C.A.):

The question of illegality in a contract generally arises in connection with its formation, but it may also arise, as it does here, in connection with its performance. In the former case, where the parties have agreed to something which is prohibited by Act of Parliament, it is indisputable that the contract is unenforceable by either party.

In Bognar, since the illegality was attributable to the defendants only, the plaintiffs as innocent parties, were held to be entitled to the return of their progress payments. Similarly, the plaintiff purchasers are entitled to the return of their deposits paid to the vendor pursuant to a contract which is void.

I shall proceed to discuss the other claims raised by the plaintiffs in the event that my conclusion on the issue of illegality should be proven incorrect.

[As this case is reported only on the issue of illegality, pages 40 to 90 inclusive of the original typescript of the reasons have been omitted.]

Conclusion

Townsgate proceeded to sell units in the within condominium project, commencing on February 24, 1989, in advance of registration under the O.N.H.W.P.A. and in contravention of the express statutory prohibition contained in s. 6 thereof. On the basis of illegality, therefore, the agreements of purchase and sale, all of which were entered into prior to formal registration, are a nullity; and the plaintiffs are entitled to have their deposits returned to them with accrued interest.

The plaintiffs have also rooted their claim, in the alternative, on grounds of misrepresentation, breach of securities legislation, lack of ownership, non-disclosure, and late acceptance of the agreements. Although unnecessary in light of my finding of illegality, I have considered the other claims raised by the plaintiffs on the merits. In doing so, I have found entitlement to rescission by reason of misrepresentation in respect of two purchasers, Elazar Astrug and Eugeny Privis. Isaak Nemirovsky is entitled to the return of his deposits based upon statutory breach of contract by the vendor, who should have accepted the return of his agreement properly proffered within the ten-day cooling-off period. Shoshana Agbariya has proven entitlement, on a balance of probabilities, to the remedy of rescission due to non-receipt of the disclosure binder; she also likely did not receive the accepted agreement of purchase and sale within the stipulated time period. Neither did Elazar Astrug, Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Boris and Natalia Galperin, or Isaak Nemirovsky. Each of them are, in any event, entitled to the return of his or her deposits with accrued interest. Yan Kosoi remains responsible for any damages in respect of Unit 1107; and Clara Groisman and Lubov Tiz, jointly with their sons Michael Groisman and Gary Tiz, are bound under the agreements pertaining to units 703 and 803, respectively. The damages claimed pursuant to the counterclaim were proven to my satisfaction. Nevertheless, in accordance with these reasons, judgment shall issue in favour of each of the plaintiffs, who are, therefore, entitled to the return of their deposits with accrued interest and costs. The counterclaim is dismissed as against each of the plaintiffs, with costs. Should the parties be unable to agree on the scale of costs, or should they wish me to fix them, I may be spoken to by prior arrangement within three weeks' time.

Action No. C9372 Court of Appeal for Ontario, Morden A.C.J.O., Goodman and Robins J.J.A. October 16, 1992

* An application for leave to appeal from the following judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada was refused with costs May 6, 1993 (La Forest, Cory and Iacobucci JJ.).

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court (General Division) in an application for a declaration as to the proper rate of interest to be paid under R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121, s. 33, enacted under the Condominium Act.

Michael A. Spears, for appellants.

Larry J. Levine, Q.C., for respondents. The judgment of the court was delivered by MORDEN A.C.J.O.:--The appellants brought an application before Keenan J. for a declaration that the amounts paid to them by the respondent as interest on money paid to the respondent on account of the purchase price of condominium units were contrary to s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 and s. 33 of Reg. 121, R.R.O. 1980, made under the Act. They also sought consequential relief in the form of the payment by the respondent of the amount of interest owing to them and prejudgment and postjudgment interest.

Keenan J. agreed with the respondent's contention that the amount of interest paid by the respondent was in accordance with the legislative requirements and dismissed the application. The appellants appeal from this disposition.

The issue in this appeal is the proper application of the terms of s. 33 of Reg. 121 to the facts of this case. It is convenient to quote the legislation, in full, before setting forth the facts. Section 53 of the Act reads:

53(1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, notwithstanding the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a chartered bank or trust company or a loan company or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office until,

(a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto; or

(b) delivery of prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

(2) Where an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) is terminated and the purchaser is entitled to the return of any money paid under the agreement, the proposed declarant shall pay to the purchaser interest on such money at the prescribed rate.

(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him .

(4) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), the proposed declarant is entitled to any interest earned on the money required to be held in trust under subsection (1).

By virtue of s. 1(1)(r) of the Condominium Act "prescribed" means "prescribed by the regulations". Under s. 59(1)(n) of the Act the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations "prescribing rates of interest that shall be paid on moneys required to be held in trust under this Act".

Section 33 of Reg. 121 provides:

33. The rate of interest under subsections 53(2) and (3) of the Act on money held in trust under subsection 53(1) of the Act shall,

(a) for the six months immediately following the last day of March of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of April of that year; and

(b) for the six months immediately following the last day of September of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of October of that year.

In the affidavit filed in support of the application it was deposed that the applicants, as purchasers, entered into agreements of purchase and sale with the respondent, as vendor, for the purchase of 254 proposed condominium units to be located in a high-rise building in Toronto. The respondent was both the vendor of the units and the proposed declarant of the declaration to be made under the Condominium Act. The respondent, in its material filed in opposition to the application, disputed that all of the applicants were purchasers. I shall deal with the effect of this later in these reasons.

The sales office opened on August 8, 1986. The agreements began to be entered into in 1986. A copy of the type of agreement used, filed by the respondent, is dated September 5, 1986.

The initial sales program used an agreement of purchase and sale that required a first deposit of $5,000 at the time of the initial offer, a second deposit of $5,000 due 60 days after the date of the initial offer, a third deposit in the amount of $10,000 due upon completion of the pouring of the concrete structure of the building, and a fourth deposit due at the occupancy closing of the unit in an amount sufficient to bring the total deposits to 25% of the purchase price of the unit.

A resale program was initiated in August 1987. The contracts used by the respondent were essentially the same as the original agreements. They included a similar deposit payment structure, except that the amounts of the deposits were changed so that each of the first three deposits was in the amount of $10,000.

The pouring of the concrete was completed in February of 1988. The first occupancy began in November 1988 on the lower floors. Occupancy continued up the structure until March 1989. Registration of the condominium corporation was obtained on November 3, 1989 and the final closings commenced on November 27, 1989.

Before setting forth the appellants' complaints with respect to the amounts of interest with which they were credited on closing, I shall set forth the facts relating to interest rates paid by the Province of Ontario Savings Office. The following is quoted from a letter, dated May 8, 1991, from the Province of Ontario Savings Office (written by T. Luciani, Manager, Administrative Services) to an employee of the respondent and which forms part of the material upon which the respondent relies:

The Savings Office, as it is known in each community, offers three types of deposit vehicles: -- Guaranteed Investment Certificates with maturities from 12 to 60 months, the Gold Passbook Savings Account with interest calculated monthly and paid semi-annually and the Trillium Daily Interest Savings Account with interest calculated daily and paid monthly on the last day of the month. Both types of savings accounts have generous chequing privileges.

The original Gold Passbook Savings Account offers a rate of 5.25% per annum calculated on the minimum monthly balance and paid semi-annually on March 31st and September 30th. Funds may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

The Trillium Daily Interest Savings Account, introduced on January 13, 1986, offers rates of 7.50% when the daily balance exceeds $5,000 and 5.75% when the daily balance is less than $5,000. Interest is calculated daily and is paid on the last day of the month. There is no service charge on cheques processed when the minimum monthly balance is $1,000 or more. Otherwise, there is a service charge of $0.25 per cheque processed.

In a later letter, dated May 14, 1991, the Province of Ontario Savings Office advised the respondent that until the introduction of the Trillium account on January 13, 1986, the Gold Passbook account was the only type of account offered by the savings office.

While the rates on both accounts have fluctuated frequently, the evidence shows that the rates of interest on balances over $5,000 on the Trillium account have always been higher than the rates on the Gold Passbook account. It is this fact that gives rise to the dispute in this proceeding because, on the closing of the transactions (except for two of them) the respondent used the lower Gold Passbook rate. The appellants have calculated the amounts which they submit should have been credited. Assuming that the basic amounts used and the calculations are correct, the total difference is a substantial amount.

At the time of closing, the respondent provided to each purchaser the vendor's undertaking to readjust all items on the statement of adjustment, if necessary.

The higher rate of interest was paid to two of the purchasers when it was requested by their solicitors before closing. This was the result of a business decision made by the respondent to facilitate the closings. I do not interpret its decisions in this regard as an admission that the higher rate was the correct one.

Keenan J. accepted the respondent's submission that the Gold Passbook rate was the correct one.

Three other decisions on this issue have been brought to our attention. In Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corp. (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 573, 22 R.P.R. (2d) 215 (Ont. Gen. Div.), Austin J. agreed with Keenan J.

In Kates v. Camrost York Development Corp., Cavarzan J., in reasons dated May 29, 1991, following upon his earlier decision dated April 22, 1991 on the main issues in the application before him, reported at 17 R.P.R. (2d) 113 (Ont. Gen. Div.), held that the higher rate applied if the amount of the deposit exceeded $5,000. The parties to this proceeding subsequently settled their differences. On August 16, 1991, the Court of Appeal, on consent, made an order setting aside the order dated April 22, 1991. The court endorsed the following on the record:

This matter has been settled by the parties. An order of this court is required to remove the certificate of pending litigation. Accordingly order to go in accordance with the consent filed.

(No mention was made in the order which was set aside of the subsequent decision respecting the amount of interest dated May 29, 1991 but, obviously, it fell with the earlier order.)

In Budinsky v. Breakers East Inc. (1992), 6 O.R. (3d) 255, 87 D.L.R. (4th) 572 (Gen. Div.), at pp. 283-87 O.R., pp. 598-602 D.L.R., Borins J. disagreed with the decision of Keenan J. in the present case and held that the higher interest rate on balances over $5,000 paid by the Province of Ontario Savings Office was the correct rate. We heard an appeal and a cross-appeal from Borins J.'s judgment in Budinsky at the same time as the present appeal was heard. The issue relating to the rate of interest was the subject matter of the cross-appeal.

The language of s. 33 speaks to future events. In this regard s. 4 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, applies and provides that the "law shall be considered as always speaking and, where a matter or thing is expressed in the present tense, it is to be applied to circumstances as they arise, so that effect may be given to each Act and every part of it according to its true intent and meaning".

In the proceeding before us, Keenan J. said:

The meaning to be given is the clear meaning that would have been given the day after the statute was passed, unless some subsequent statute has declared that some other construction is to be adopted or has altered the previous statute: Sharpe v. Wakefield (1888), 22 Q.B.D. 239, 58 L.J.M.C. (per Lord Esher); see Stamford (County) v. Welland (County) (1916), 37 O.L.R. 155, 31 D.L.R. 206 (C.A.), at p. 182 O.L.R., p. 214 D.L.R.

In my opinion, the developer was entitled to rely on the absence of any amendment to the regulation as a confirmation that the previously existing measure of the interest rate was to continue. There is no statutory or other requirement that compels adoption of a new rate because it is more favourable to the purchaser.

These statements of Borins J. and Keenan J. indicate the basic issue which must be resolved, which is: was it the intent of s. 33 that it was to apply for all time (subject to amendment) only to the one Province of Ontario Savings Office savings account that was in existence at the time it was made -- or was the intent that it could apply to new Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts that came into existence in the future? In other words, is the correct presumptive approach an historical one or an updating or ambulatory one?

To the extent that general propositions are helpful in matters of statutory interpretation, I think that the more general presumption favours the latter approach and that the former one is an exception to it: see Cross, Statutory Interpretation, 2nd ed. (1987), at pp. 49-54; Bennion, Statutory Interpretation, 2nd ed. (1992), s. 288; and Coté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 2nd ed. (1991), at p. 226.

Cross, at p. 50, says:

But the proposition that an Act is always speaking is often taken to mean that a statutory provision has to be considered first and foremost as a norm of the current legal system, whence it takes its force, rather than just as a product of an historically defined Parliamentary assembly. It has a legal existence independently of the historical contingencies of its promulgation, and accordingly should be interpreted in the light of its place within the system of legal norms currently in force. Such an approach takes account of the viewpoint of the ordinary legal interpreter of today, who expects to apply ordinary current meanings to legal texts, rather than to embark on research into linguistic, cultural and political history, unless he is specifically put on notice that the latter approach is required.

At pp. 617 and 630 of Bennion, op. cit., it is said:

It is presumed that Parliament intends the court to apply to an ongoing Act a construction that continuously updates its wording to allow for changes since the Act was initially framed (an updating construction). [p. 617]

A fixed-time Act is one which, contrary to the usual rule, was intended to be applied in the same way whatever changes might occur after its passing. It has as it were a once for all operation. It is to such an Act that the oft-quoted words of Lord Esher chiefly apply: "the Act must be construed as if one were interpreting it the day after it was passed". [The Longford (1889), 14 P.D. 34, at p. 36] [p. 630]

The presumption however is that an Act is intended to be an ongoing Act, since this is the nature of statute law: an Act is always speaking. So there must be some reason adduced on account of which Parliament is taken to depart in a particular case from this principle. [p. 630]

Earlier, at p. 617, Bennion refers to the case of the Act that is to be of unchanging effect (a fixed-time Act) as "the comparatively rare case".

Coté, op. cit., at p. 226 says:

But merely because the meaning of legislation at the time of its enactment must be respected in no way suggests that the statute's effect is confined to material or social facts or events then existing. It is necessary to distinguish the meaning of a term from the things that may be included in its ambit.

An enactment dated January 15, 1980 dealing with "automobiles" will obviously apply to cars built in 1981: the law "is ever commanding"; "and whatever be the sense of the verb or verbs contained in a provision, such provision shall be deemed to be in force at all times and under all circumstances to which it may apply". The guideline favouring the common meaning at the time of adoption does not mean ". . . that all terms in all statutes must always be confined to their original meanings. Broad statutory categories are often held to include things unknown when the statute was enacted."

Section 4 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.11, which provides, in part, that "[t]he law shall be considered as always speaking and, where a matter or thing is expressed in the present tense, it is to be applied to the circumstances as they arise" supports the use of this general presumption. In Cash v. George Dundas Realty Ltd. (1973), 1 O.R. (2d) 241, 40 D.L.R. (3d) 31 (C.A.), affirmed [1976] 2 S.C.R. 796, 59 D.L.R. (3d) 605, Estey J.A. said for this court at p. 248 O.R., p. 38 D.L.R.:

The Court in interpreting and applying a statute must of course attribute to its provisions their plain meaning according to the understanding and practices of the times. A statute speaks continuously as though freshly enacted at the time the issue in question arose : s. 4, Interpretation Act, being R.S.O. 1970; c. 225; Craies on Statute Law, 7th ed. (1971), pp. 81-2. Courts are no longer concerned with the bygone canons of equitable consideration [construction?], the mischief rule and the many other aids and procedures formerly invoked in the interpretation of legislation. We are now concerned only with applying the statute according to its plain meaning in the light of the current practices and standards of the community: Campbell College, Belfast v. Com'r of Valuation for Northern Ireland, [1964] 1 W.L.R. 912, per Lord Upjohn at p. 941; Craies, supra, p. 64.

I think that the general presumption in favour of the updating or ambulatory approach is the correct one to apply to the interpretation of s. 33 of Reg. 121 and its application to the facts of this case, with the result that the Trillium account rate of interest is the applicable rate. With respect, I think that Keenan J., who appears to have regarded the historical approach as reflecting a general rule of interpretation and not one that is applied comparatively rarely, erred in applying it in this case. In what follows, I set forth my reasons for this conclusion, which are concerned with the wording and purpose of s. 33.

As far as the wording is concerned, the Trillium account is clearly covered by the words of the section. It is a "Province of Ontario Savings Office savings account" just as much as is the Gold Passbook account.

Another feature of the wording is the use of the singular "the rate" in the phrase "the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts". The respondent submits that this shows that the section means and applies to the Gold Passbook account and not to the Trillium account. What effect should the use of the singular "the rate" properly have?

In my view, the likely reason for the use of the singular is that it is in accord with the situation of only one savings account being in existence when the regulation was first made -- and not that it was intended to denote the Gold Passbook account for all time, even if a new savings account came into existence which more effectively carried out the purpose of the section.

For example, if a new savings account came into existence in replacement of the Gold Passbook account, an account with a different name and different terms respecting the calculation and payment of interest (the Trillium account itself would be a good example), I have no doubt that the regulation would apply to it without any need for an amendment in the regulation. Because the regulation cannot, in my view, be properly regarded as a "fixed-time" regulation, it cannot be said that when the Trillium account came into existence the regulation continued to apply to the Gold Passbook account simply because of the situation which was in existence when the regulation was first made. What arose at the time of the coming into existence of the Trillium account was a question of the proper application of the regulation's terms to the new facts, a question which did not exist before, but merely because the question had not arisen before does not mean that the regulation should be interpreted as denoting the Gold Passbook account.

In my view, the wording of the section does not indicate an intention to freeze its terms to the Gold Passbook account in a situation where another account, which comes within the wording of the section, carries out its purpose more effectively.

The new account, on the facts of this case, clearly comes within the purpose of the regulation -- which is to provide an incentive for the proposed declarant to register the condominium corporation and transfer title to the purchaser of the condominium unit as soon as possible after the purchaser has entered into occupation. In Berman v. Karleton Co. Ltd. (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 176, 24 R.P.R. 8 (H.C.J.), Gray J. said at p. 184 O.R., pp. 19-20 R.P.R.:

The intent of the Act is clearly that the purchaser be paid interest on money paid to the vendor on account of purchase price during the interim occupancy period before a registrable deed or transfer is delivered. The reason for doing so is to protect purchasers of proposed condominium units from abuses by vendors who delay in registering declarations by providing an incentive to register quickly.

This statement has been quoted with approval in subsequent decisions: Lamb v. Costain (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 657, 40 R.P.R. 83 (H.C.J.), at p. 661 O.R., p. 87 R.P.R., Hashim v. Costain Ltd. (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 790 (H.C.J.), at pp. 796-97.

It should be noted that s. 53 does not require that the payments referred to in it be deposited in a Province of Ontario Savings Office savings account. They may be deposited in any of the financial institutions mentioned in s. 53(1), which include Province of Ontario Savings Offices. Further, under s. 53(4), the proposed declarant is, "[s]ubject to subsections (2) and (3) . . . entitled to any interest earned on the money required to be held in trust under subsection (1)". Accordingly, it is possible for a proposed declarant to earn more interest than would be payable on the Gold Passbook account and to pay the purchaser 1% less than the Gold Passbook account rate and, as a result, retain a larger amount of interest. Indeed, on the respondent's interpretation, the proposed declarant could deposit the money into the Trillium account and receive the higher rate of interest on this account but pay the purchaser on the basis of the lower Gold Passbook account rate. Interpreting the legislation this way would diminish the effect of the incentive against delay.

There is a further aspect of the provision's purpose, one related to a matter of legal context. The money for which the interest is paid is held by the proposed declarant as a trustee in a separate trust account. The money held in trust, belongs, beneficially, to the purchaser and not to the proposed declarant. It is the most fundamental duty of a trustee to administer the trust solely in the interest of the beneficiary and a trustee is not permitted to profit at the expense of the beneficiary: see Scott on Trusts, 3rd ed. (1967), Vol. I at p. 39, and Vol. II at pp. 1297-98. I think that the trust obligation clearly extends to the duty to pay interest based on the higher rate, particularly where the proposed declarant may enjoy an increased personal benefit from paying it on the basis of the lower rate. This legal consideration is an important part of the context for determining the proper application of s. 33.

This point is succinctly made by Cavarzan J. in Kates v. Camrost York Development Corp., supra :

It seems to me to be consistent with the intent and purpose of the Condominium Act which protects trust moneys deposited by the applicant and which permits the respondent to earn and keep interest on those trust moneys [s. 53(4)] that the applicable rate, the higher or lower one, be determined by the amount held in trust.

With respect to the trust aspect point, Keenan J. said:

While the relationship of the developer declarant and the condominium purchasers gives rise to obligations of a fiduciary nature, such as holding deposits in trust, it is not per se a fiduciary relationship. It is primarily a contractual relationship and the rights and obligations are set out in the contract. A statutory obligation is separate and while it may impose a duty on the declarant for the protection of the purchaser, it does not impose a duty on the declarant to extend the scope of the duty beyond that which is clearly recited in the statute.

With respect, while the basic relationship between a purchaser and a proposed declarant may be contractual, s. 53(1) clearly imposes on the proposed declarant, with respect to the money we are concerned with in this appeal, the duty of a trustee and it is with this particular aspect of the relationship only that we are concerned. As I have said, this fiduciary relationship is of direct relevance in interpreting the scope of the obligation to pay interest on the money held in trust.

In the light of the foregoing, I am satisfied, on the facts of this case, that the application of s. 33 to the Trillium account effectively carries out the purpose of the section and, when all factors are taken into account, the selection of this account is more consistent with the legislative intent that the Gold Passbook account. I adopt what was said by Borins J. in Budinsky, at p. 286 O.R., p. 602 D.L.R., with respect to the application of the provision:

Thus, s. 33 should be applied in the following manner to calculate the rate of interest which the purchasers will be entitled to receive on their deposits on the date of closing. First, one determines the amount of the deposit paid by the purchaser as of the date he or she assumes occupancy or possession of the unit. In each case, the amount exceeds $5,000. Then one determines the savings account appropriate to the amount of the deposit. At the present time this would be the Trillium over $5,000 savings account.

In arriving at my conclusion, I have taken into account two further submissions of the respondent.

First, the respondent submits that it is "not a coincidence" that the dates of payment of interest in the Gold Passbook account, March 31 and September 30, correspond with the terms of s. 33 of the regulation that require the interest rates to be fixed on the first days of April and October. With respect, I do not see how this feature assists us. The only function of the reference in the regulation to Province of Ontario Savings Office accounts is to provide for an interest rate to be used in the calculation of the amount of interest to be paid under s. 53(3) and there is no obligation to deposit the money in the Province of Ontario Savings Office account. Accordingly, I do not see significance in the dates to which reference is made. Specifically, I do not regard this feature of s. 33 as an indication of a legislative intent to prevent the regulation from being applicable to new accounts which might come into existence in the future.

The respondent also submits that the principle of certainty in the law favours an interpretation of the section in the regulation that the Gold Passbook account is "the prescribed rate". In this respect the respondent relies upon Keenan J.'s statement that "the developer was entitled to rely on the absence of any amendment to the regulation as confirmation that the previously existing measure of the interest rate was to continue".

With respect, this reasoning seems to me to be circular. It is based on the assumption that s. 33, when it was made, was intended to refer exclusively to the Gold Passbook savings account for all time and that it could not be applicable to future savings accounts. If this were the case, then, I agree, an amendment to the regulation would have been necessary. For the reasons I have given earlier, I do not think that it is the correct assumption.

The principle of certainty in the law does not support the view that the scope of "savings accounts" was frozen as of 1980 to the particular savings account in existence at that time. When the obligation to account for interest in this case commenced, the different rates of interest on Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts had been in existence for a considerable period of time. The determination of the "prescribed rate" was, no doubt, not as straight-forward as it had been before the new account came into existence, but this does not logically lead to the conclusion that the principle of certainty favoured the lower rate, particularly when the higher rate was obviously more applicable to the facts of the case.

I should also refer to further arguments, based on the same consideration, made by each side. In March of 1992, s. 33 was revoked by O. Reg. 148/92, s. 2, and a new provision was substituted for it. The new provision does not give rise to the issue under s. 33 which is addressed in these reasons. Although each side framed arguments based on the new provision with respect to the proper interpretation and application of the repealed provision, I am satisfied that it is of no assistance on this question: cf. Interpretation Act, ss. 17 and 18.

Accordingly, I have concluded that a declaration should be granted respecting the correct rate of interest to be applied under s. 53(3) of the Act. This should be expressed in positive terms. The rates of interest to be applied to the deposits should be based on the rates of interest paid on the Province of Ontario Savings Office Trillium accounts during the relevant period.

On the material before us, I do not think that an order can be made for the consequential relief sought in favour of all of the appellants. The respondent filed material to the effect that several of the applicants had no contractual relationship with the respondent, or that the matter of the contractual relationship was a matter of serious doubt. Some applicants were not purchasers but received title on directions from purchasers' solicitors at the time of closing. Some of the applicants are said to be not known to the respondent as either purchasers or individuals to whom the purchasers directed title. They may have acquired title as the result of "flips". Other applicants purchased from Condonetics Realty, a firm associated with the sales agent on a project.

I will not refer to further matters raised which may require some form of inquiry. It is sufficient to note that this evidence was neither challenged nor clarified. In the face of it we cannot grant the consequential relief sought to each and every applicant. The proceedings will have to be continued in the Ontario Court (General Division) for this purpose.

I would allow the appeal, with costs, set aside the order of Keenan J., and in its place grant the declaration which I have set forth earlier in these reasons. I would remit the application to the Ontario Court (General Division) to determine the amount that should be paid, including prejudgment interest, to each applicant who is entitled to payment. The costs of this part of the proceedings should be in the discretion of the presiding judge. I would grant the appellants the costs of the application before Keenan J. Order accordingly.

Platinum I Property Ltd. Partnership et al. v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program; Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. et al.

Action No. 354/89 Court of Appeal for Ontario McKinlay, Griffiths and Carthy JJ.A. February 11, 1991

APPEALS from the judgment of the High Court of Justice (1989), 68 O.R. (2d) 577, 4 R.P.R. (2d) 164, that agreements for purchase and sale of interests in limited partnerships in condominium developments are subject to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

L. David Roebuck, for appellants.

Brian M. Campbell, for respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

CARTHY J.A.:-- On this appeal, we are asked to determine whether five large condominium developments are governed by the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (the Act). The Act applies to all new home units built for sale, as opposed to rental, and provides the purchaser with protection by assuring that the builder is registered by imposing construction warranties and by protecting deposits up to $20,000.

The five condominium projects proposed or being built by the appellants are being developed pursuant to agreements between the two Marchant corporations as builder and developer and a number of limited partnerships on terms which will assure the individual limited partners (the investors) tax deductibility of losses against their other income. In essence, the agreements provide for the purchase of an interest in the partnership at a price which relates to the value of a chosen condominium unit in the building, for the rental of that unit in the marketplace, and for a right in favour of the investor to obtain a transfer of title to that unit at any time after the condominium is registered and the unit has been rented. Prior to the transfer of title, the investor is considered for tax purposes to have an investment in income-producing property and the profits or losses are included in calculating the taxpayer's income from other sources. This is what is known colloquially as a tax-driven investment scheme.

The first proceeding was launched by the appellants seeking a declaration that two projects were outside the reach of the Act. The second was commenced by the respondent (the warranty program) to embrace three other projects by the same developer in any declaratory judgment of the court. The applications were heard by Steele J. He concluded [now reported (1989), 68 O.R. (2d) 577, 4 R.P.R. (2d) 164 (H.C.J.)] that the agreement with the investor was in substance one to sell the unit and, therefore, that the Act applies as it does to all other new homes built for sale. The appellants say that the units were built for rental purposes and that the "option to purchase" is an appendage included only to give the investor a means of liquidating the investment should interest be lost in the original tax thrust of the investment. Since the Act does not apply to rental buildings, the appellants ask for a declaration that they are exempt.

The Act

The operation of the Act centres upon s. 6 which reads:

6. No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

This leads to the definition of "builder" and "vendor" in s. 1:

(a) "builder" means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner

These in turn lead to the definitions of "owner" and "sell":

(g) "owner" means a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and his successors in title;

(l) "sell" includes entering into an agreement to sell ... On the analysis of Steele J., a sale occurred when the original subscription agreement between the limited partnership and an individual investor was signed. Since the construction had not yet begun, the condominium clearly was "not previously occupied". It followed that Marchant was both a builder within s. 1(a) and a vendor within s. 1(n), and thus required to register under s. 6.

Once registered, the vendor warrants under s. 13 that the home is constructed properly and is free from major structural defects. As a protection to the warranty program and its guarantee to the purchaser of deposit protection up to $20,000, the program issued a requirement that builders and vendors of condominium units post security or cash equivalent to $20,000 per unit, to be released upon receipt of evidence of condominium registration and transfer of the unit to the purchaser. "Deposits" is defined as all monies paid by a purchaser before the date of possession -- see R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 726, s. 1(l).

This deposit requirement is the practical collision point between the scheme of the Act and this investment scheme. In the case of each of the five buildings, approximately $5 million in security would have to be posted in order to comply with the Act and this security would not be released until the units are transferred. This may never occur and, if it does, the timing is controlled by the unit holder. In the meantime, there is no deposit, in the traditional meaning, to protect.

The operative section of the Act derivatively depends on the definition in s. 1(l), "sell" includes entering into an agreement to sell" and, therefore, the next issue is whether these agreements, even if not traditional agreements of purchase and sale, do fall within that definition.

The agreements

All of the five agreements are said to be essentially the same and that for the Platinum I project has been chosen as a model.

In an offering memorandum prepared pursuant to securities legislation, the public is invited to subscribe to one or more "interests" in the development, defined as an undivided beneficial ownership interest in the limited partnership. There are 256 "interests", a specific unit is allocated to each "interest" and the subscription price is related to the value of the unit. In fact, the price undoubtedly is the value of the unit within the market for similar tax shelters. The subscription price is met by a minimum 25 per cent payment on signing and 100 per cent on closing, some three or four months later. At that point, construction has not begun and there is no registration of the condominium. The investor is thereafter entitled to share pro rata in the net income or losses of the limited partnership. Once the designated unit has been rented by the limited partnership and the condominium corporation has been registered, the investor has a right to exchange the interest in the partnership for title to the unit. The assumption is that this transfer of ownership will constitute a sale by the partnership for income tax purposes. Therefore, the unit holder must pay, on exercising the option, an amount sufficient to compensate the limited partnership for the recapture of capital cost allowance occasioned by the transfer.

It is apparent that this scheme for development of condominium units is directed at relatively high income earners who wish to take advantage of the opportunity to defer taxes through a structure that enables them to be seen as investors in a real estate business rather than as investors in the ownership of a residential unit. Once the transfer of ownership occurs, the tax advantage ends and the deferrals become payable to Revenue Canada. No one suggested that the scheme was devised to avoid the new home warranty program and, in these particular instances, contractual warranties similar to those under the warranty program and performance bonds are provided.

Analysis

The centre of the debate remains the definition of "sell" in s. 1(l) of the Act and the language "includes entering into an agreement to sell". Is this to be distinguished from an agreement of purchase and sale, thus feeding the argument that it is sufficient if the owner agrees to sell even if the other party does not undertake to buy? Is the granting of an option an agreement to sell the unit with or without the intervening complications of the limited partnership? Can it be called an option when the entire price has been paid at the outset? These are the questions which have been raised and come together to the ultimate issue of whether this transaction in its essence is such as falls within the Act.

(The investor) has entered into an agreement that gives him the right to acquire title and therefore the agreement itself falls within the definition of "sell". He becomes the beneficial owner the moment he signs the subscription agreement to acquire his "interest".

There is no clear pattern that can be found in the common law for separate usage of the terms "agreement to sell" and "agreement of purchase and sale". The subject was adverted to by the House of Lords in Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A.C. 471, 64 L.J.Q.B. 465, 43 W.R. 561, in dealing with whether a hire purchase agreement constituted an agreement to buy goods under the Factors Act, 1889 (U.K., 52 & 53 Vict.), c. 45. Lord Watson stated in his opinion at pp. 479-80 A.C.:

Apart from the arrangement for hire of the piano, the only right given to Brewster by the agreement in question was the option to become a purchaser. It is true that whilst he was under no obligation to buy, the appellant was legally bound to give him that option, and could not retract it, if the other stipulations of the contract were duly observed by the hirer. But the possession of such a right of option was, in no sense, an agreement by Brewster to buy the piano; and the appellant's obligation to give the option was not, in the sense of law, an agreement by him to sell. In order to constitute an agreement for sale and purchase, there must be two parties who are mutually bound by it. From a legal point of view the appellant was in exactly the same position as if he had made an offer to sell on certain terms, and had undertaken to keep it open for a definite period. Until acceptance by the person to whom the offer is made, there can be no contract to buy. So long as the agreement stood unaltered there could, in this case, be no contract to purchase by Brewster until he had complied with the terms of the option given him, and had duly made the thirty-six monthly payments which it prescribes as the condition of his becoming owner of the piano.

Whilst, in popular language, the appellant's obligation might be described as an agreement to sell, it is in law nothing more than a binding offer to sell. In Treat v. White, 181 U.S. 264 (1900), the United States Supreme Court dealt with the precise question of the meaning of the expression "agreement to sell" in the context of a statute requiring revenue stamps on all such agreements dealing with stock transfers. Mr. Justice Brewer, in his opinion at p. 266 U.S., said:

The question before us is simply one of statutory construction. Is a "call" (a copy of which is incorporated in the statement of facts) an agreement to sell, within the meaning of Schedule "A"? In reference to this the learned Circuit Judge, in delivering his opinion, said:

It is an agreement, and manifestly an "agreement to sell." It may be referred to as an "offer," or an "option," or a "call," or what not, but it is susceptible of no more exact definition than "an agreement to sell." Inasmuch, therefore, as the statute requires stamps to be affixed "on all sales, or agreements to sell," it would seem that these "calls" are within its provisions.

We fully agree with this definition. "Calls" are not distributed as mere advertisements of what the owner of the property described therein is willing to do. They are sold and in parting with them the vendor receives what to him is satisfactory consideration. Having parted for value received with that promise it is a contract binding on him, and such a contract is neither more nor less than an agreement to sell and deliver at the time named the property described in the instrument. It may be a unilateral contract. So are many contracts. On the face of this instrument there is an absolute promise on the part of the promisor and a promise to sell. We cannot doubt the conclusion of the Circuit Judge that this is in its terms, its essence and its nature an agreement to sell. Therefore it comes within the letter of the statute.

That there is a difference between an agreement to sell and an agreement of sale is clear. The latter may imply not merely an obligation to sell but an obligation on the part of the other party to purchase, while an agreement to sell is simply an obligation on the part of the vendor or promisor to complete his promise of sale. It is tempting to reach out to the high authority of Treat v. White and conclude that no matter how you describe the agreement before us it is an agreement to sell. However, in the same opinion, Mr. Justice Brewer recognized that even the letter of a statute may not control if there is reason in the entire text to suggest that the legislature intended otherwise. There is also the added dimension here that the Act is referring to a sale of land and not a chattel or chose in action.

The Act in question here is intended to provide protection to the purchasers of new homes. It clearly has no application to a home that has been rented and it would clearly have no application to these buildings, which are to be rented, except for the existence of the right to acquire title. I have already mentioned that if the subscription amounts to a sale then the vendor would have to post security of up to $20,000 per unit for deposit protection which would not be released until transfer of the unit to a purchaser. Since this transfer may never take place and would undoubtedly occur well after the purchaser was in need of protection of the original deposit, there is an apparent lack of harmony between the nature of these transactions and this protection afforded by the Act.

A further contextual element which suggests a different statutory intent arises out of s. 14 of the Act which provides that an owner can claim damages for breach of warranty from the guarantee fund. If the investor is treated as the owner, which Steele J. did, then the investor would receive the damages for defects to the unit and could pocket the money and never take title.

In my view, Steele J. was right to look to the essence of the transaction to determine if this was an agreement to sell, but was wrong in concluding that the investor "becomes the beneficial owner (of the unit) the moment he signs the subscription agreement".

The subscription is to an interest in a limited partnership. There is no unit of real estate to which the agreement could attach. It contemplates the creation of a unit at some date in the future and even the right to an interest in the unit is postponed by two conditions outside the control of the investor -- registration and rental. The option to obtain title to the unit only becomes an interest in land when the conditions are met. The interest of the investor after that time is irrelevant because, one of the conditions being previous occupancy, the Act, by its terms, would have no application.

It is my conclusion that the essence of the subscription agreement, and its prime thrust, is to avoid a transfer of beneficial ownership in order to enjoy the benefit of tax deferrals; it is to join with others in the business of renting housing units, an activity that is at the same time not the interest of the new home warranty program and encouraged by the benefits offered by Revenue Canada. The option, if it be called such, is an appendage to this central purpose and simply provides an escape in the event that circumstances render the original purpose no longer of economic benefit. The full purchase price has been paid at the beginning but the transfer of title cannot be coupled with that payment as if merely postponed for some artificial purpose. The investor must abandon the original motive for tax deferral and amounts must be paid to the limited partnership to meet the obligations to Revenue Canada for recaptured capital cost allowance. The fact that a developer would pursue such a complicated mode of development suggests that the original price of each "interest" is higher than the general market price of the units and there is no certainty as to when, if ever, market rentals will rise to the point of justifying an exercise of the right to transfer and resale in the market. The transaction is not comparable to the simple stock call in Treat v. White and is, what it says it is, a purchase of an interest in a limited partnership with a provision for potential trading of that interest for title to a unit, conditionally and at some uncertain time in the future. It is not an agreement to sell the unit within the meaning of the Act.

I would therefore allow the appeals, set aside the orders below, and in their place order that a declaration issue in the form requested by the appellants in their factum as applicable to the five projects which are the subject-matter of the two applications. The appellants should have the costs of the motions and the appeal.

Appeals allowed with costs.

Gordon v. Lawrence Avenue Group Ltd. (H.C.J.)

65 O.R. (2d) 545

Action No. 22911/87 High Court of Justice Callaghan A.C.J.H.C. October 18, 1988.

discharging the certificate.

MOTION for an order dismissing the plaintiff's action for specific performance and vacating a certificate of pending litigation.

M. Jurjans, for plaintiff.

T.B. Rotenberg, for defendant.

CALLAGHAN A.C.J.H.C.:-- This is a motion by Lawrence Avenue Group Limited pursuant to Rule 20 for an order dismissing on a point of law the plaintiff's action and for an order discharging the certificate of pending litigation filed herein.

On August 15, 1986, the plaintiff executed a form entitled "Application to Reserve Unit" whereby the plaintiff paid a $5,000 deposit to reserve unit 22 in the defendant's proposed townhouse condominium project. The defendant accepted the document as "vendor" on August 19, 1986. The document reads as follows:

APPLICATION to reserve Unit(s) in the Condominium Townhouse Project known as "BIRCHCLIFF BY THE LAKE", located at 1501 Kingston Road, Scarborough, Ontario. Application number: 017 Date: August 15th, 1986

I/We ... Rose Gordon hereby apply to have Unit(s) 22 in the abovementioned project, reserved for me/us, subject to the Vendor's -- LAWRENCE AVENUE GROUP LIMITED -- approval.

Said approval or disapproval shall be communicated to the Purchaser in writing within seven (7) days from the date of application.

Upon approval of the Application by the Vendor, the Applicant must proceed with an Offer to Purchase, which is subject to the Vendor's and Purchaser terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof by both parties, within 48 hours, in order for the Vendor to guarantee the chosen Unit(s).

All applications are treated on a first come, first serve basis and the Vendor and/or its exclusive agent U.S. MARCHAND REAL ESTATE shall not be held liable in any form by any applicant, for not being able to provide a Unit, once the project is sold out.

The applicant(s) is/are to submit an initial Deposit of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($5,000.00) per Unit with this application, which Deposit shall be returned in full in the event that the application is not approved by the Vendor.

In the event, that the application is approved by the Vendor, this Deposit shall constitute the initial Deposit, called for in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, and shall be dealt with in the manner provided for in the Agreement of Purchase and sale.

The Purchase Price for the Unit(s) 22 shall be $157,400.00, subject to the terms and conditions outlined in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, and any additional requirements by the Purchaser.

Purchaser requests that closet doors are hinged and colonial design.

In April of 1987, the defendant forwarded to the plaintiff a form of agreement of purchase and sale. The said agreement provided a purchase price in the sum of $169,900 which the plaintiff signed back to the defendant changing the price to the sum mentioned in the application to reserve of $157,400. It was agreed by counsel in the course of argument that the further amendments to the agreement and in particular those to sch. C thereof were not in substance relevant to this application. Upon receipt of the amended agreement, the defendant reamended the purchase price to $169,900 and forwarded the same to the plaintiff. In subsequent correspondence between the parties, the plaintiff notified the defendant that the purchase price of $157,400 was being insisted upon and the defendant's attempt to return the deposit of $5,000 to the plaintiff was rejected. On October 2, 1987, the plaintiff's action was commenced and a certificate of pending litigation was registered on October 6, 1987, pursuant to an order of the master of that date. The plaintiff claims specific performance of the agreement of purchase and sale and damages for breach of the said agreement in the amount of $150,000. The statement of claim was served on October 19, 1987, but as a result of inadvertence the order granting the certificate of pending litigation was not served until June of 1988, after the defendant's solicitor had effected a subsearch of title. The defendant sold the unit to third parties by an agreement dated January 7, 1988. The purchasers were given interim possession on March 18, 1988, and they are currently paying occupation rent to the defendant. As of this date, the defendant has not registered a declaration and description of the lands forming the project pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. The defendant however is obliged to and fully intends to effect such registration in the near future.

The defendant moving party takes the position that the reservation form contravened s. 49(3) and (21) of the Planning Act, 1983, S.O. 1983, c. 1, and accordingly was null and void ab initio and could not create an interest in land which would support a certificate of pending litigation. The defendant's position is that the reservation form was not intended to be a contract and lacks sufficient particulars as to the various terms and conditions necessary to make it a contract. The defendant's further position is that the agreement of purchase and sale did not constitute a contract as it was never signed by the parties because they were not ad idem on the price.

The defendant also moved pursuant to rule 42.02 for an order vacating the certificate of pending litigation on the ground that the plaintiff had not served the order "forthwith" as required by rule 42.01(4), as a result of which the defendant, without knowledge of the said certificate, sold the condominium unit to a third party who is currently in possession. The defendant also submitted that the plaintiff had failed to give disclosure of material facts in the affidavit filed in support of the motion for the certificate, namely, that the lack of a registerable description was related directly to whether the plaintiff had an interest in the land in the circumstances and that there in fact was a counter-offer to the plaintiff by the defendant. I am satisfied that the failure to serve the order granting the certificate of litigation arose through the inadvertence of the plaintiff's solicitor. Furthermore, the moving party on this application has taken a further step in the proceedings after obtaining knowledge of the irregularity by delivering an amended statement of defence and counterclaim. The real matters in dispute herein relate to whether or not the plaintiff in fact has any interest in land which would support such a certificate of pending litigation and I, accordingly, dismiss the application to the extent that it is based on the plaintiff's failure to comply with rule 42.01(4).

Section 49(3) of the Planning Act, 1983 prohibits conveyance of land unless land is described in accordance with and is within a registered plan of subdivision. Subsection (21) of that section provides that any agreement or conveyance made in contravention of s. 49 does not convey any interest in land unless the agreement is subject to express conditions contained therein that such agreement is to be effective only if the provisions of s. 49 are complied with. The defendant's position is that s. 49(3) of the Planning Act, 1983 has been interpreted to apply to reservation forms created before a condominium is registered: see Re Crossroads Apartments Ltd. and Phillips (1974), 4 O.R. (2d) 72, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 172 (H.C.J.). While s. 50 of the Condominium Act, provides that s. 49 does not apply in respect of dealings "with whole units and common interests" that section does not exempt "proposed units" from the provisions of the Planning Act, 1983. The argument of the defendant proceeds that the "application to reserve" cannot create an interest in land unless it complies with the Planning Act, 1983 and that the form of agreement of purchase and sale that does comply cannot form a basis of an action for specific performance unless a written agreement is concluded. It is submitted that the reservation form lacked all essential terms except price and that the parties never agreed on price prior to the expiry of their various offers and counter-offers.

The plaintiff/respondent's position is that in all the circumstances there is a triable issue as to whether specific performance will be granted and accordingly the certificate of pending litigation should not be vacated. The plaintiff submits that from the start both parties herein knew and intended that there would be a conveyance of a condominium and that a declaration and description pursuant to the Condominium Act would be registered. The plaintiff's position is that the defendant was obliged to effect such registration and once that was done the Planning Act, 1983 was deemed never to have been violated by the agreement. Section 49(14) of the Planning Act, 1983 provides as follows:

49(14) Where land is within a registered plan of subdivision or within a registered description under the Condominium Act or where land is conveyed with a consent given under section 52 of a predecessor thereof, any contravention of this section or a predecessor thereof or of a by-law passed under a predecessor of this section or of an order made under clause 27(1)(b), as it existed on the 25th day of June, 1970, of The Planning Act, being chapter 296 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1960, or a predecessor thereof, that occurred prior to the registration of the plan of subdivision or description or prior to the conveyance, as the case may be, does not and shall be deemed never to have had the effect of preventing the conveyance of or creation of any interest in the land, but this subsection does not affect the rights acquired by any person from a judgment or order of any court given or made on or before the 15th day of December, 1978.

Furthermore, it is submitted s. 51 of the Condominium Act is sufficient to imply a covenant adequate to meet the requirements of s. 49(21) of the Planning Act, 1983.

The respondent notes that s. 51(1) of the Condominium Act was not proclaimed in force until April 1, 1975, subsequent to the decision of the court in Re Crossroads. Furthermore, the definitions in the Condominium Act have been varied since that decision. The respondent notes that the definition of "unit" [s. 1(1)(z)] has been expanded to apply to the declaration and description whether registered or unregistered. The respondent also notes that the proposed agreement of purchase and sale in the Crossroads case was never executed by either party, although I do note that the learned trial judge therein indicated that such was not material to the ultimate disposition of that application. The respondent relies on the decision of the British Columbia Supreme Court in Mark London Ltd. v. Granwest Industries Ltd. (1981), 18 R.P.R. 61, wherein it was held that a reservation agreement differently worded than that in issue was enforceable by way of specific performance.

There are other facts relevant, in my view, to the disposition of this application. Those facts are that all of the units in the project apparently have been sold to other buyers. The reservation form as well as the form of agreement of purchase and sale were prepared by the defendant. The plaintiff received the reservation form initially from a broker of the defendant and it was the same broker which forwarded to the plaintiff the form of agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant now takes the position that the broker did not have the authority to type in the price of $157,400. In these circumstances, the question of whether or not the reservation agreement can be read together with the agreement of purchase and sale for the purposes of determining the plaintiff's interest in the land is a question of fact for a trier of fact. The decision upon that threshold factual issue will impact upon the effect of the Planning Act, 1983, on the rights of the parties in this case. Furthermore, from the foregoing it appears that a substantial argument exists that amendments to both the Planning Act, 1983 and the Condominium Act may effect the current application of the decision in Re Crossroads Apartments Ltd. and Phillips, supra. Accordingly, this is not, in my view, a case where the issue of specific performance or the impact of the Planning Act, 1983 on the rights of the parties should be decided on a motion for summary judgment. Nor should the certificate of pending litigation be vacated. The property herein is no doubt unique to the plaintiff who is in a sound financial position. While I am prepared to accept for the purposes of these proceedings that the third party purchasers of the unit did effect that purchase in good faith, I am not satisfied in all the circumstances that the said certificate should be vacated. Motion dismissed with costs.

Motion dismissed.

Chapman v. HLS York Development Ltd.; Markson, Third Party

64 O.R. (2d) 498 High Court of Justice Donnelly J. June 14, 1988.

ACTION for damages for negligent misrepresentation or breach of collateral warranty, and for breach of warranty, in the sale of a condominium unit.

Harry Underwood, for plaintiff.

D.R. Rothwell, for defendant.

W.A. Richardson, for third party.

DONNELLY J.:-- Introduction

The plaintiff purchaser claims damages for negligent misrepresentation or breach of collateral warranty in the sale of a condominium having a represented floor area of 2,688 sq. ft. and an actual area of 2,166.5 sq. ft. He further claims damages for breach of warranty that the premises were constructed in a good and workmanlike manner.

Facts

With a degree in mechanical engineering, a masters in business administration, a real estate brokers licence, training in accounting, employment experience with two stockbrokerage offices, 10 years with A.E. LePage, and operating his own business in real estate investment and promotion including the speculative purchase of about 12 condominiums, the plaintiff comes to the real estate market as a knowledgeable purchaser.

At age 56 he is married with a son and two daughters ages 26, 24, and 22, the elder two being away from home pursuing their education, the youngest still residing with her parents. Because of financial reverses, the family was unable to continue residence in their three-storey Rosedale Rd. home. Following sale of that house the plaintiff sketched and calculated the family's minimum space requirement for alternative accommodation at 2,684 sq. ft., thereby in effect replacing the first two floors of the Rosedale property and eliminating the attic and basement.

Being unable to locate a suitable house within his means, the plaintiff turned to consideration of condominiums with the dual purpose of providing family accommodation and achieving resale potential in two years. Three premises, generally in the Bloor-Rosedale area, were considered before the plaintiff was referred to the Market Square Development Phase II at Church and Front Streets. There, the plaintiff was shown small condominiums and, upon his inquiry, was informed that units were available to meet his space requirements. The sales staff advised that purchases could be financed by 25% cash deposit with 75% conventional mortgages through the Royal Bank or by special financing available through the vendor. The plaintiff was provided with sample floor plans for typical units and he noted that on a price-per-square foot comparison this project was $7 to $8 lower than the Rosedale condominiums which he had inspected. The prime determinant in his mind in all condominium deals was price per square foot. He calculated this as a means of comparison for all units that he inspected whether he was interested in purchasing or not. The plaintiff returned to Market Square to view and inquire about larger units on the 6th, 7th and 8th floors. In response to the plaintiff's inquiry the defendant's sales representative advised that unit 801 had a floor area of 2,688 sq. ft. and was priced for cash at $400,000 or with the vendor's special financing, at $475,000 which the plaintiff calculated to be $148 per square foot and $176 per square foot respectively.

Upon returning again, the plaintiff, for the first time, inspected unit 801 which was on the south-west corner of the eighth and top or penthouse floor. It was still under construction with walls erected and windows installed. This was a two-storey unit with a staircase, fireplace and ceilings one foot higher than on the lower floors. It was substantial in size with irregular configuration, an attractive view on three sides including the Toronto Harbour and an outside deck on the south and west sides on both floors. Because of work in progress, the second floor was not inspected. There was no flexibility in the stated price which the plaintiff considered high. In his view the true value was $130 per square foot. He discussed the unit with his wife and concluded that the family's space requirements were met by that unit. The plaintiff saw unit 801 on a second occasion, again in its construction stage, when he had an opportunity to check all areas. The plaintiff felt he knew the unit size from the information given to him and it appeared sufficient for their needs. Thereafter the plaintiff, his wife and Hudson Milburn, the exclusive sales agent for the defendant, went through the unit for the purpose of upgrading the interior decorating. That decorating was not to exceed $25,000 and was to be financed by a mortgage back to the vendor.

In April, 1983, the agreement of purchase and sale was prepared by Mr. Milburn's office for the purchase price of $400,000 and $25,000 for decorating. The erroneous representation as to the size of the unit was carried forward in the agreement by sch. B -- the architect's plan showing the floor area as 2,699 sq. ft. This was the first occasion on which the plaintiff was shown a floor plan for unit 801. The agreement was executed on that day by the plaintiff without examination by anyone on his behalf. He still believed the area was 2,688 sq. ft. and while examining the agreement at home that night, the plaintiff first noticed the 2,699 sq. ft. figure shown on sch. B. He concluded that he was getting an extra 11 sq. ft. There was no further discussion regarding the square footage prior to closing.

Conventional mortgage financing in excess of $250,000 was not available. The plaintiff compared the present value of the vendor's financing and concluded that it was reasonably close to cost of conventional financing. He then accepted the defendant's financing package. The purchase price in the agreement was amended to $510,000 being the basic price of $400,000 plus financing at $75,000 and redecorating (now increased) at $35,000.

The plaintiff made occupation payments and occupied another unit while unit 801 was being finished. He took possession of unit 801 in November of 1983. The condominium documents were registered and the final closing was on February 10, 1984.

The plaintiff was unable to move all his furniture into the condominium and this was attributed to the irregular layout. He still had no suspicion that the measurements given to him were not correct. While in possession, the family had a consciousness of being cramped especially on the second floor where there was insufficient space for two rooms as planned. As the first anniversary of the possession date approached the plaintiff was aware that this represented his last opportunity under the HUDAC warranty for redress for deficiencies. He therefore measured and calculated the area and a substantial shortage of about 500 sq. ft. was indicated. Both HUDAC and the developer were promptly informed. The developer indicated that he would look into the matter and this litigation resulted.

Area

The parties agree on the accuracy of the survey work establishing the floor area at 2,251.6 sq. ft. The defence reserved the right to disagree with the principle used to measure the stairwell space -- that is, including the area under the stairs in the first floor calculation and excluding, as not being liveable space, the area over the stairwell in the second floor calculation. This is the procedure (1) recommended in the practice guidelines prepared by the Canadian Real Estate Association; (2) generally used by surveyors, and (3) used by this architect on this project. I accept this principle as correct and I find the area is 2,251.6 sq. ft. Value

Hudson Milburn, an experienced Toronto real estate broker, was the exclusive listing broker for Market Square in Phases I and II. He confirmed that condominium prices must be competitive and accordingly pricing starts with a market survey. Price per square foot is an important factor because it is the purchaser's yardstick for comparison. As part of the sales campaign this property was prominently advertised as "priced lower per square foot than most downtown luxury condos".

Cory Solomon, the project manager for Market Square testified that Phase I on Church St. had been very successful. Phase II, seen as having advantages in location and other features, was expected to be priced slightly higher.

In 1982, a slump in the condominium market was experienced. There were two sales in 1982, both to Hong Kong purchasers -- unit 811 to Dr. Fung, unit 816 to his father, Sir Kenneth Fung. In consequence, until a market upturn about New Year's, 1983, the marketing campaign was stopped and prices were held (although this was contradicted by Mr. Milburn who recalled a 10% reduction for poor sales performance).

Mr. Solomon explained the pricing of unit 801. No marketing drawings were available, firstly, because he was planning to purchase it and secondly, since it was a unique unit, such plans would not be of general application. Being unique, unit 801 commanded a higher price and an asking price of $400,000 was established as early as the fall of 1981. No documentation was produced to support this. Mr. Solomon did not know the number of square feet realizing only that it was more than 2,000 and less than 3,000. He concedes that the 2,688 sq. ft. figure originates with the architect and is the area shown on the plaintiff's records.

Barry Lebow, a Canadian residential appraiser qualified by the Appraisal Institute of Canada, is a licensed real estate broker with substantial experience in selling condominiums and was co-developer of one condominium building. He appraised the property for the plaintiff by relating it to actual sales of comparable properties. These comparable sales must be adjusted or normalized on some common basis before they can be analyzed. Most important of those adjustments is the time frame of the sale.

He inspected unit 801 in June of 1987 and derived information from registry office records and from TEELA, a private marketing survey. The best comparable properties were the eighth-floor penthouse units in Phase II which were sold in the relevant time frame which was determined by Mr. Lebow to be by the end of April, 1984. Phase I was not relevant because of the passage of time and changed market conditions.

The following eighth-floor units were ruled out:

- (1) Unit 818 because its title required explanation;
- (2) The three units under the swimming pool (units 814, 816 and 818) were one-storey and hence not typical and were useful only for establishing the low range for the eighth floor, and
- (3) Unit 811 (Dr. Fung) and unit 816 (Sir Kenneth Fung) because they had the appearance of bearing a premium price.

The remaining group otherwise fell into a consistent pattern in the $170 to $180 per-square-foot range.

Mr. Lebow concluded that the plaintiff paid a price comparable to others on the eighth floor -- in the high range, but reasonable on a square-foot basis -- based on the assumption of 2,688 sq. ft.

Warren Stewart, an accredited appraiser of the Canadian Institute, estimated that he had appraised 85% of the Market Square units for mortgage purposes. On behalf of the plaintiff, he examined units 801 and 811 on March 24, 1987. Looking for comparable sales, he checked the 101 units in the development and concluded the most relevant and truly comparable sales were the eighth-floor units in Phase II. Unit 811 sold for a cash equivalent of $192 per square foot. He concluded that this was the best comparable sale and then concluded the market value on May 15, 1983, for unit 801 was $190 per square foot for 2,251.6 sq. ft. or $428,000.

There was some preening between the two appraisers, all on decorative rather than substantial issues, about the use of present value discount tables by Lebow, an electronic method of calculating floor space which was available to Mr. Stewart and Mr. Stewart's qualifications as a quantity surveyor (neither of which was relevant), criticism of definitions used for "fair market value" and "most probable selling price", and the sources of information used.

Following a skilful cross-examination, Mr. Stewart was less self-assured on departure from the witness-box than on arrival.

His basic premise was that the most important variable is time because the market is dynamic and conditions change. He therefore excluded transactions beyond a certain interval before and after the relevant transaction. He would likely exclude purchases negotiated in June, 1982, because high interest rates rendered significant changes in the market from mid-1982 to the spring of 1983.

In cross-examination, it was drawn to his attention that his "most comparable sale", upon which he based his opinion, was sold in June, 1982. Had he realized this, he would have excluded that sale because of the time lapse.

Units 814 and 816 are identical in size and conformation. Unit 814 sold for $127 per square foot and unit 816 (Sir Kenneth Fung) sold for $172 per square foot. If unit 814 was correctly priced, then a substantial premium was paid for unit 816.

Unit 811 sold for $192 per square foot compared to the eighth-floor average of $162. It had the same general features as the typical units on the eighth floor, except that Mr. Milburn had the impression that it may have had a slightly larger deck. It had no features exclusively in common with unit 801. There was accordingly no demonstrated foundation on objective features for concluding that unit 811 was the truest comparable to unit 801.

I am unable to accept Mr. Stewart's reliance on the Fung purchases of unit 811 and 816. The axiom quoted by Mr. Stewart bears the ring of reliability "one sale does not make a market".

The unauthorized incorporation in Mr. Lebow's report of Mr. Stewart's earlier work without acknowledgment was explained as being available information and data from friends with no restrictions placed on its use. This incorporation was wrong. However, that lesson now learned by Mr. Lebow, I expect, is well learned. This is simply back-up material and not integral to the analysis and conclusions. The integrity of the substance of the report remains intact for whatever weight Mr. Lebow's opinion should attract. The integrity of the form of the report is diminished by the unauthorized incorporation.

I conclude firstly that Mr. Lebow's analysis of value from truly comparable sales in the context of time and character is preferable to that of Mr. Stewart. Secondly that Mr. Lebow's analysis is adequately explained to warrant its acceptance by the court. It is demonstrated to be reliable and to be a basis on which the court can proceed. I accept his opinion that fair market value was paid March 15, 1983 for 2,688 sq. ft.

This is consistent with the best available evidence of unit value on May 15, 1983, being the $400,000 price or $475,000 financed price for which the plaintiff was willing to purchase and the defendant was willing to sell while both thought the area was 2,688 sq. ft. There must be a very cogent reason to depart from this as fair market value. That price negotiated by two knowledgeable and willing participants to the deal is a long way from Mr. Stewart's price of $190 per square foot for what was thought by both parties to be 2,688 sq. ft. Origin of the error

The information that unit 801 contained 2,688 sq. ft. of floor space originated with the architect's calculations and is traceable into the defendant's records.

Mr. Solomon knew that the architect used a method of sizing the units from the drawings because the unit did not exist to be measured. This had created erroneous results and had a continuing capacity to produce error. Revisions had been made in the Phase I building to accommodate those errors.

In Phase II the architect recalculated unit sizes because of known errors. The architect confirmed this risk of error and advised the defendant that, (1) the plans should be revised to show that unit sizes were approximate; (2) the purchaser should be referred to the sales personnel for accurate information.

By letter of June 11, 1981, with reference to Phase I, Mr. Solomon wrote to the architects:

At the end of last week, I received some shocking news from your office stating that the roof garden deck rooms on the eighth floors of both the Church and Market Street buildings were improperly measured.

As you know, we have all but completed sales of the first building, and, therefore, we have misrepresented to each Purchaser the actual square footage of their apartments on the Penthouse level.

I find it hard to believe that this incompetent work is being produced by your office. I realize that at this point you have tried to extend and adjust some of these rooms to alleviate this problem. However, in the event that there are any legal actions on behalf of the Purchasers, or any extras in construction costs due to this lack of coordination, I will hold your firm directly responsible.

I hope to hear from you in the near future regarding this matter.

Negligent misrepresentation

The plaintiff relies on negligent misrepresentation on the principle of Hedley Byrne & Co. Ltd. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1964] A.C. 465, which establishes, where there is a duty of care, negligent misrepresentation does constitute a cause of action. That principle was considered in Kingu v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. (1986), 10 B.C.L.R. (2d) 15 at p. 23, 38 C.C.L.T. 51 at p. 60, by McLachlin J.A.:

The question then is whether the requirements of tort liability on the basis of Hedley Byrne are satisfied in the case at bar. Those requirements may be summarized as follows:

- (1) A false statement negligently made;
- (2) A duty of care on the person making the statement to the recipient. A duty of care does not arise unless
 - (a) the person making the statement is possessed of special skill or knowledge on the matter in question, and
 - (b) the circumstances establish that a reasonable person making that statement would know that the recipient is relying upon his skill or judgment;
- (3) Reasonable reliance on the statement by its recipient;
- (4) Loss suffered as a consequence of the reliance.

I find as follows:

(1) The plaintiff by virtue of his background did recognize and accept that price per square foot is the common denominator for comparison of condominiums.

(2) The square-foot size of the unit was fundamental to this deal and of crucial importance to the plaintiff who was economizing on space and cost while still providing calculated minimum family requirements and concurrently protecting value of the unit for the two-year resale position.

(3) That information regarding unit size was put in the hands of the defendant's duly authorized sales representative for the purpose of making representations to prospective purchasers.

(4) In the sales process, the defendant's agent represented to the plaintiff that unit 801 had an area of 2,688 sq. ft.

(5) The representation was made by and on behalf of the defendant who was in a position to know.

(6) The representation was bound to be relied upon by the plaintiff, who to the defendant's knowledge, had every reason to inquire as to the number of square feet.

(7) The plaintiff was entitled to rely on the representation of 2,688 sq. ft.

(8) The plaintiff did accept and relied and acted upon that representation.

(9) The plaintiff was not at fault in failing to detect the disparity in his examination and inspection of the premises. The exclusive sales agent Hudson Milburn did not observe the discrepancy although he knew of the figure 2,688 sq. ft. when he was showing the apartment. He explained that he was focusing on positive features. (It is no defence that by reasonable diligence the plaintiff could have discovered the truth: see Redgrave v. Hurd (1881), 20 Ch.D. 1).

(10) That the plaintiff would not have purchased had he known the actual size of the unit.

(11) That representation was incorporated in the sales agreement by sch. B (2,699 sq. ft.).

(12) The defendant had foreknowledge of the seriousness of the misrepresentation as to size as evidenced by the redesigning of Church St. Phase I and by the content of the June 11, 1981 letter.

The defendant had foreknowledge that the information could be in error

The plaintiff trusted the defendant and his agent to use due care in making the representation. The agent making the representation knew, or should have known, that reliance was being placed upon his statement.

The plaintiff was induced to enter into the agreement by the negligent representation of the defendant's agent Milburn. It makes no difference whether the representation was made by the principal or the agent: Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed, vol. 42, p. 54, para. 59. Notwithstanding the architects' warning to the defendant of the potential risk of error, the plans were not revised and the purchasers were not informed. The sales personnel were not instructed and the size of the units was not confirmed by survey. The difficulty could have been avoided by simply advising the plaintiff that the figures are unreliable. The defendant failed to take adequate care in providing the information.

Merger

There is no general presumption in favour of merger. The court should determine whether the facts disclose a common intention to merge the warranty in the deed and absent proof of such intention there is no merger: Fraser-Reid v. Droumsekas, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 720, 103 D.L.R. (3d) 385, 9 R.P.R. 121; Hashman v. Anjulin Farms Ltd., [1973] S.C.R. 268, 31 D.L.R. (3d) 490, [1973] 2 W.W.R. 361.

There is no evidence in this case to support a finding of a common intent that the fundamental representation regarding the floor areas was to merge on closing. Disclaimer

The representation in issue is a part of the written contract and so is not subject to the disclaimer dealing with matters other than expressed in the contract: Hayward v. Mellick (1984), 45 O.R. (2d) 110, 5 D.L.R. (4th) 740, 26 B.L.R. 156.

As well, disclaimer has no application because this particular disclaimer was framed to deal with workmanship.

Breach of collateral warranty

The plaintiff makes an alternate submission seeking damages for breach of collateral warranty. This is a separate cause of action framed in contractual warranty as opposed to the tort of negligent misrepresentation both of which give rise to the remedy of damages after completion: Hayward v. Mellick, supra; Gilmour v. Trustee Co. of Winnipeg, [1923] 4 D.L.R. 344, [1923] 3 W.W.R. 177, 33 Man. R. 351.

Because of my findings on the issue of negligent misrepresentation, it is not necessary to deal with collateral warranty. Had it been necessary, I would have held that this representation was an affirmation made by the vendor's agent in the course of the deal and was substantial to the transaction and was intended to be a warranty with the intent and expectation that it would be acted upon.

Damages

Ellen Davis, B.A., B.Ed., has been a sales agent for Royal LePage for four and a half years. In 1986 she was their top agent in Ontario and second in Canada. The 1987 figures were not released at the date of the trial but were said to be comparable. Her specialty is downtown core-area luxury condominiums.

In 1987 she sold 50 to 60 homes and condominiums including about 45 condominiums -- principally resales. She estimates that she sold five or ten units in the Market Square. In her experience a typical purchaser comparison shops and many subjective elements contribute to value including individual preference for area, height, view and amenities. The foremost consideration is size and the basis of comparison is price per square foot. In her opinion if fair market value is paid and the purchaser receives 16% less than represented, the value is 16% less. This opinion was not seriously challenged and there was no contrary evidence.

I accept the evidence of Ellen Davis supported by Mr. Lebow that, all other things being equal, a larger condominium commands a proportionately higher price. Therefore the plaintiff did sustain a direct financial loss by overpaying for the unit.

The area purchased is 2,251.6 sq. ft. and not 2,688 -- a reduction of 16.25%. A similar reduction in the $475,000 purchase price produces an overpayment of $77,187.

The financed price should be used because that was the actual experience of the two parties acting in the market-place as it then existed.

Damages for the misrepresented floor area are accordingly assessed at $77,187.

Reference was made to loss of amenities incidental to the curtailed space while the plaintiff lived in the property but the evidence does not support damages for such loss.

The claim for breach of implied construction warranty by the developer

(a) Exterior deck

The exterior cedar deck was twice painted by the developer's forces. Each time the paint peeled. The condominium association stained the deck in the summer of 1986 and the plaintiff although not the owner was entitled to exclusive use and was obliged to and did pay for the repairs at a cost of $858.20

(b) The electrical deficiencies

Norman Taylor, a qualified electrician since 1956 and an electrical foreman at Black and MacDonald, a large national company whose business included residential and condominium electrical and plumbing installations and repairs, gave evidence that nine outlets for the electrical switches and receptacles were loose and 12 others should be secured otherwise there would be a violation of the hydro code. The risk of electrical shock existed. He recommended that the work be done. The estimated cost was $3,500.

(c) Plumbing deficiencies

Eric Greer, a qualified plumbing foreman with 26 years' experience in the Black and MacDonald service department testified that the temperature and pressure relief valve for the hot water tank was located on the cold water line and constituted a breach of the plumbing code. It should be relocated on the hot water discharge line at an estimated cost of $510.

None of the four wash basins have individual shut-off valves under the basins for hot and cold water pipes. It would therefore be necessary to turn off the entire suite to change a washer. In Mr. Greer's opinion this was not consistent with good workmanship. The estimated cost of installing those valves is $780.

In the second-floor shower stall there was no access to the pipes or mixing valve for hot and cold water. The estimated cost of this repair was $790.

The master bath tub was backed into a concrete wall and stairwell with no access to pipes. Cost of this repair was estimated at $2,000.

There was no cold water shut-off for the condominium unit. This constituted a plumbing code violation and repairs were estimated at $1,095.

The hot and cold water pipes in the master bath "hammered" when the taps were opened. There was the risk of "blowing a pipe" with the attendant damage. Repairs by an air chamber or shock stops were estimated at $925.

The agreement of purchase and sale incorporates the HUDAC warranty which appears in s. 13 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350. However the common law warranty applies since it is not specifically excluded and the plaintiff is not restricted to recovery for only those items listed in the HUDAC notices. The plaintiff purchased before construction was completed and is entitled to the protection of the common law warranty that the premises would be fit for habitation and completed in a workmanlike manner: Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 11 v. Shenkman Corp. Ltd. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 194, 14 D.L.R. (4th) 571, 10 C.L.R. 1.

Regarding construction deficiencies, I accept and find:

(1) The defendant deliberately represented and advertised Market Square so as to convey to prospective purchasers that the participants in the venture were of such stature and reputation that the project was built embodying the highest standards in design and construction as high-quality, luxury units.

(2) There was an implied warranty that construction, including plumbing and electrical installations, would be in accordance with proper workmanship and the relevant building codes.

(3) The plumbing and electrical evidence was not seriously challenged and I find these deficiencies do exist and that they are not the result of normal wear and tear.

(4) They constituted either or both breaches of the plumbing and electrical codes or the standards of good workmanship required for a high-class luxury residential condominium.

(5) It is irrelevant that the repairs have not been made. The plaintiff is entitled to have them completed and is not obliged to await an electrical or plumbing crisis.

(6) There is no element of betterment involved in such repairs.

The question of quantum is not so clearly laid to rest by the evidence. There are no second estimates produced by the plaintiff to help establish a competitive price. The point was made in cross-examination that Black and MacDonald may not be the cheapest source of repairs, but no other estimates were offered by the defence. Dealing with the evidence before me I find that the estimates in evidence are adequate to support a damage finding. In result the warranty claims are found to be $858.20 for the deck, $3,500 for plumbing and $6,100 for electrical installations totalling $10,458.20.

The plaintiff shall have judgment against the defendant for damages of $77,187 plus $10,458.20, in total, $87,645.20 together with his costs.

Interest

The sum of $77,187 shall bear prejudgment interest at the interest rate of the second mortgage on the premises. Otherwise the plaintiff would wrongfully be entitled to interest from the defendant for moneys not properly owing by the defendant. The amount of the judgment and interest shall be set off against the second and third mortgages. In the event that a balance remains to be paid on the judgment after set-off, this balance shall bear prejudgment interest not at the mortgage rate but at the rate indicated by the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 11.

The deck repairs of $858.20 will bear prejudgment interest at the rate prescribed by the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, from the date of the plaintiff's payment of that invoice. The sums of $3,500 and $6,100 for repairs not yet made will not bear prejudgment interest.

Third party claim

This claim relates only to the floor area shortage and not to the construction deficiencies.

Pursuant to its written retainer of January 28, 1980, the third party prepared floor area calculations and drawings for sales presentation which included the improper figures 2,688 and 2,699 sq. ft. Those figures were relied upon by the defendant for presentation purposes. Had the third party accurately represented the area of unit 801, the defendant, then being aware of the correct area, would not have priced that unit at $400,000, or having done so, would not have been able to sell it to purchasers (who were fully informed as to the correct area) for more than fair market value.

Therefore, the defendant has failed to establish any damages caused by its reliance on the measurements provided by the third party. No basis has been established for indemnity against that third party.

As well, the third party made the defendant fully aware of the problem and its cause. The third party made suggestions to the defendant which would have effectively prevented the difficulty which did arise. That warning was ignored; thereby the defendant caused its own misfortune.

The third party claim is dismissed with costs against the defendant. Judgment for plaintiff.

Morris et al. v. Cam-Nest Developments Ltd.

64 O.R. (2d) 475 High Court of Justice MacFarland J. June 13, 1988.

ACTION for the return of deposits paid under two agreements of purchase and sale of land.

Lawrence Zaldin, for plaintiffs.

Theodore Kerzner, Q.C., for defendant. MACFARLAND J.:-- This is an action for the return of moneys paid pursuant to the provisions of two agreements of purchase and sale both dated March 20, 1981.

The plaintiffs are husband and wife; Gerald Morris is a solicitor and admitted that throughout he acted as his wife's solicitor and agent. Mrs. Morris testified that in relation to these events she essentially signed where her husband told her to and I accept her evidence.

On September 19, 1980, the plaintiffs both signed reservation agreements between themselves and the defendant. Each plaintiff paid the defendant the sum of $3,500 in consideration for which they each essentially received the opportunity to enter an agreement of purchase and sale in respect of the two units in which they were interested before anyone else did.

Each plaintiff executed an agreement of purchase and sale in respect of a condominium unit in a building located in north Toronto and known as Manhattan Place. The agreement executed by Gerald Morris (hereafter called the "Gerald Agreement") related to a "Rockefeller" model suite located on the eighteenth level of the building while the agreement executed by Gloria Morris (hereafter called the "Gloria Agreement") related to a "Plaza" model suite located on the nineteenth level of the building.

According to para. four of each of the agreements, the Gerald Agreement was to be completed "... on July 26, 1982, or any extended date as herein provided" and the Gloria Agreement was to be completed "... on July 30, 1982, or any extended date as herein provided".

With the agreement there was required to be paid by each plaintiff the sum of $11,000 "by certified cheque to the vendor as a deposit ...". Credit was given for the $3,500 earlier paid by each plaintiff with the reservation agreement, leaving a balance of $7,500 which each plaintiff paid to the defendant on the signing of the agreement. Each plaintiff also paid as required by the agreement, an additional $9,000 by April 15, 1981 -- again according to the terms of the agreements "... as a further deposit ...".

By letters dated April 6, 1982, the defendant wrote to each of the plaintiffs and advised them that the unusually severe winter which had just been experienced had caused a considerable delay in construction.

The plaintiffs were therefore notified that the closing dates referred to in para. 4 of the agreements were extended -- for the time being, respectively, for the Gerald Agreement to November 24, 1982, and for the Gloria Agreement to December 1, 1982.

It is important to note that in both letters the closing date was stated to be extended "for the time being" to the new dates.

It is also important to note that the defendant also in those letters, alerted the plaintiffs to the possibility of further delays by reason of "possible strikes amongst various sub- trades".

The plaintiffs made no response of any kind to the letters of April 6, 1982.

At this point it is pertinent to note that the luxury condominium market in Toronto went into very serious decline in the summer of 1981 when interest rates, it will be remembered, approached 22%. This market did not recover according to Mr. Feldman's evidence, which I accept, until 1984.

The defence position is that the acquisition of these two condominium units by the plaintiffs was "pure speculation from beginning to end" if I recall Mr. Kerzner's phraseology accurately. The position being that after the market's substantial decline in the summer of 1981 and following, the plaintiffs were looking for any excuse to get out of their agreements to acquire these units.

While Mr. Morris stated that speculation was only one of three purposes for which he, and when I say "he", I mean he on behalf of himself and on behalf of his wife acquired the units, I am satisfied on the evidence before me that it was the most probable reason he acquired these units and I so find.

Having said that, however, I am of the same view as Anderson J. in Benedek v. Dorian Homes, released November 3, 1986, unreported [summarized 3 A.C.W.S. (3d) 406], that it is of no relevance to the issues before me. If, on the interpretation of the agreement the plaintiffs are entitled to treat the contract as at an end, then what their intention may or may not have been in acquiring the units is of no concern.

The originally specified closing dates of July 26, 1982 and July 30, 1982, passed without either party doing anything.

By letter dated October 19, 1982, the plaintiff wrote to the solicitors for the defendant and expressed his concern about the market conditions over the past year and one-half and pointed out that to close the transaction would result in a definite loss. The letter ended with the suggestion that the pricing of these units -- that is the units the plaintiffs had agreed to acquire -- be reviewed with a view to adjusting same to the current conditions -- a request to the developer to lower the price earlier accepted by the plaintiffs.

Paul Merrick, to whom the letter of October 19, 1982, was directed, testified that he recalled a discussion with Mr. Morris after he had received the letter -- when he commented: "How can you discuss price reduction when you're dealing with a contract?"

In any event, by letter dated November 11, 1982, the solicitors for the defendant wrote to the plaintiff Gerald Morris in respect of the Gerald Agreement which was scheduled for completion November 24, 1982. They advised the plaintiff that the condominium registration would not be completed prior to the date scheduled for completion and that accordingly the plaintiff would be required to occupy the unit in accordance with the provisions of para. 19 of the agreement of purchase and sale.

By letter dated November 18, 1982, the plaintiff Gerald Morris responded to the defendant's letter of November 11, 1982. He advised the solicitors for the defendant that because the condominium registration would not be completed before the extended closing date of November 24, 1982, the vendors would therefore be unable to complete the transaction on that date and the agreement of purchase and sale was null and void as per the provisions of para. 15 of the agreement.

A letter dated November 17, 1982, was sent by the solicitors for the defendant to the plaintiff Gerald Morris in respect of the Gloria Agreement stating precisely what had been stated in their letter of November 11, 1982, relating to the Gerald Agreement -- that is that the condominium registration would not be completed prior to the date scheduled for completion, in this case December 1, 1982, and that accordingly the plaintiff Gloria would be required to occupy the unit in accordance with the provisions of para. 19 of the agreement of purchase and sale.

This letter was responded to by Gerald Morris, on behalf of his wife, by letter dated November 22, 1982, to the solicitor for the defendant taking the same position he had taken in his November 18, 1982 letter relating to the Gerald Agreement, that is, that if the condominium registration was not completed prior to the extended date for closing, the vendor is unable then to finally complete the transaction by the extended closing date and, accordingly, according to para. 15 of the agreement of purchase and sale it is null and void.

By letter dated November 23, 1982, to the plaintiff Gloria Morris, the solicitors for the defendant wrote to say that despite their letter of November 17, 1982, they were further extending the closing date -- in respect of the Gloria Agreement from December 1, 1982 to December 6, 1982.

The next event which occurred was the tender made by Hartley Levine, the partner of the plaintiff Gerald Morris, on the solicitors for the defendant on November 24, 1982, at about 1:00 p.m. Mr. Levine was not called to give evidence and I refused to let Gerald Morris testify as to either what Hartley Levine had told him about those events or what Hartley Levine meant by written notes he had made at the time of tender which are ex. 14.

The notes were admitted and I am satisfied on the evidence that they meet the definition of a business record as that term is defined in the Evidence Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 145.

There were also two letters written November 24, 1982, from the solicitors for the defendant to the plaintiff Gerald Morris. Copies of both letters were marked as ex. 21 and while it is clear from the content that the longer letter was prepared after the Levine tender, it is not clear on the evidence whether the second and shorter letter came before or after the Levine tender. Fortunately, in my view, nothing turns on it. Both letters state that the November 24, 1982 date was to be an occupancy closing and the plaintiff not having completed same the defendant was treating the plaintiffs as being in default under the Gerald Agreement.

December 1, 1982, passed and neither party did anything on that date in relation to the Gloria Agreement.

On December 6, 1982, however, the plaintiff Gerald Morris attended on the solicitor for the defendant and tendered a certified cheque payable to the vendor for the full balance of the purchase price owing in respect of the Gloria Agreement and requested a transfer of title. The condominium registration had not been completed and the defendant was unable to provide the requested transfer.

The defendant's position is that December 6, 1982, was to be an occupancy closing only pursuant to para. 19 of the agreement of purchase and sale and the plaintiff, not having completed same, is in default under the Gloria Agreement.

The plaintiff, of course, takes the position that the defendant being unable to provide a transfer of title on December 6, 1982, the agreement of purchase and sale is null and void as provided in para. 15 of the agreement of purchase and sale.

The condominium was registered December 30, 1982, and the defendant set the date for closing of April 1, 1983. That date passed and neither party did anything.

This action was commenced by writ of summons issued December 7, 1982.

Additional facts pertinent to the issues are that by an agreement dated November 25, 1982, ex. 37, between the Beecroft Partnership and the defendant, the defendant sold to the Beecroft Partnership a number of units in Manhattan Place including the two the plaintiffs had contracted to purchase.

By separate agreement of the same date, Beecroft gave an option to the defendant to repurchase a number of suites, including the two before the court, at any time prior to June 30, 1983.

David Feldman testified that the units sold to the Beecroft partnership consisted of units not yet sold, units where default had already occurred and units where default was anticipated. The defendant was concerned because of the state of the market at the time and decided to sell to the Beecroft partnership to cut their losses if they could. Because this was a MURB deal the transaction had to close by year-end. The option agreement, ex. 39, was signed to enable the defendant, in the event of settlement of any of those units where default had occurred, to be in the position to provide title if, as and when settlement occurred. In the interim the units were murbed to avoid further losses.

I accept Mr. Feldman's evidence and find that both the MURB agreement and the option agreement, exs. 37 and 39, were signed on November 25, 1982, and were signed for the purposes stated by Mr. Feldman.

The main issue for determination is the interpretation of the agreements of purchase and sale, exs. 1 and 2, and in particular paras. 4, 15 and 19 thereof.

The terms of the two agreements are identical except that the originally specified closing date in the Gerald Agreement was July 26, 1982, and in the Gloria Agreement was July 30, 1982.

The paragraphs read as follows:

Gerald Agreement

4. This agreement shall be completed on July 26, 1982, or any extended date as herein provided.

Gloria Agreement

4. This agreement shall be completed on July 30, 1982, or any extended date as herein provided.

IN BOTH

15. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reason of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties, or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor, or if the registration of the Declaration, Description and By-Laws or the Mortgage to be assumed by the Purchaser is delayed by any cause whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension or extensions of time for completion or registration as designated by the Vendor, and the date of closing shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit or common elements or the registration aforesaid and close this transaction within such extended time for closing, this Agreement shall be deemed null and void and all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser shall be returned to the Purchaser with interest as required by the Act and the Vendor shall not be liable for any costs or damages.

19. If the Unit is completed as herein provided prior to registration of the Condominium the Purchaser agrees to occupy the Unit on the date fixed for closing set out in paragraph 4 hereof or any extended date of closing as herein provided (the "Occupancy Date"), under the following terms and conditions:

(a) the date fixed for closing set out in paragraph 4 hereof shall be extended in accordance with the provisions set out in paragraph 19(d) hereof:

(d) Upon registration of the Condominium, the Purchaser agrees to complete this Agreement on the first day of the month following the month in which the Purchaser or the Purchaser's solicitor has been given written notice by the Vendor or its solicitors of such registration for completion purposes, provided such notice is given not less than ten (10) days preceding such first day of the month. If the notice aforesaid is not given more than ten (10) days prior to the first day of such month, the transaction shall be completed on the first day of the second month following the date of giving such notice. If the first of the month shall fall on a non-judicial date, then the date of closing shall be extended to the next judicial date. Any Occupancy Fee payable shall be adjusted proportionately.

Issues

I accept Mr. Kerzner's submission that the first issue to be determined is what the closing date was.

The vendor purported to extend the originally scheduled closing dates of July 26, 1982 and July 30, 1982, to November 24, 1982 and December 1, 1982, respectively. This by letters dated April 6, 1982 -- which letters also forewarned of further delays which may arise in future. In respect of the Gloria Agreement, the vendor purported to extend on a second occasion by letter dated November 23, 1982, from December 1, 1982 to December 6, 1982. The extensions were stated to be made pursuant to para. 15 of the agreement of purchase and sale.

The plaintiff takes the position that the onus is on the defendant to show and to satisfy the court that it was entitled to exercise its rights pursuant to para. 15 to extend the date for closing. The plaintiff cites no authority for this proposition.

The defendant's position in this regard is that the onus is on the plaintiff -- he who alleges must prove. Mr. Kerzner in argument cited Sopinka and Lederman, The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases (1974), at p. 395 which states the two basic premises to be:

(1) That the onus is always on a person who asserts a proposition of fact which is not self evident; and (2) That where the subject matter of the allegation lies particularly within the knowledge of one of the parties, that party must prove it, whether it be of an affirmative or negative character.

The authority cited by the authors for the second premise is the Ontario Court of Appeal judgment in Pleet v. Canadian Northern Quebec R. Co. (1921), 50 O.L.R. 223, 64 D.L.R. 316. Reading from the judgment of Mr. Justice Ferguson for the court, at p. 227 O.L.R., p. 319 D.L.R., he said:

No doubt the general rule is that he who asserts must prove, and that the onus is generally upon the plaintiff, but there are two well-known exceptions:--

(1) That where the subject-matter of the allegation lies particularly within the knowledge of one of the parties, that party must prove it, whether it be of an affirmative or negative character: Mahony v. Waterford Limerick and Western R.W. Co., [1900] 2 I.R. 273, at p. 280; Kent v. Midland R.W. Co. (1874), L.R. 10 Q.B. 1.

The judgment of Chief Baron Palles in the Mahony case, supra, at p. 280 states:

Although it is the general rule of law that it lies upon the plaintiff to prove affirmatively all the facts entitling him to relief, there is a well known exception to such rule in reference to matters which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant.

The word used in Sopinka and Lederman is "particularly" while the word used in the authority upon which the learned authors rely is "peculiarly".

And I agree with Mr. Kerzner that in so far as the weather is concerned, that is not something which might be classified as "peculiarly" within the knowledge of the defendant.

I do not agree with him, however, that neither would information about strikes and the impact both factors, weather and strikes, would have on construction, also be matters not peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. In my view, they were and I so find.

The only evidence before the court relating to the winter weather of 1981-1982 was that it was a much colder than normal winter and I so find. The only evidence relating to the impact such cold weather had on construction came from the witness Stock. He testified as to the ripple effect the cold weather had on all trades and how a delay of 40-odd days in the pouring of concrete causes longer over-all delays when attempting to re-coordinate other trades. There was no evidence to the contrary and I accept Mr. Stock's evidence on these matters.

I find that the delays resulted from the unusually cold weather primarily and any delays after April 6, 1982, were contributed to by the three strikes which occurred at that time -- all causes in my view entirely beyond the reasonable control of the vendor.

In my view, para. 15 is inaccurately described as being merely a force majeure clause as the plaintiffs would have it described. Mr. Zaldin argues that the vendor is only entitled to rely on "any other cause" as provided in para. 15 so long as it is catastrophic, out of the ordinary or unusual and falling within the same genus as the events specifically set out, being -- strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties. He relies, of course, on the ejusdem generis rule and relies on the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Atlantic Paper Stock Ltd. v. St. Anne-Nackawic Pulp & Paper Co. Ltd., [1976] 1 S.C.R. 580, 56 D.L.R. (3d) 409, 10 N.B.R. (2d) 513, in support of his argument.

The clause considered by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Atlantic Paper Stock case, supra, must be looked at in full and it is quoted at pp. 581-2 S.C.R., p. 410 D.L.R., as follows:

"St. Anne warrants and represents that its requirements under this contract shall be approximately 15,000 tons a year, and further warrants that in any one year its requirements for Secondary Fibre shall not be less than 10,000 tons, unless as a result of an act of God, the Queen's or public enemies, war, the authority of the law, labour unrest or strikes, the destruction of or damages to production facilities, or the nonavailability of markets for pulp or corrugating medium."

The issue was stated by Mr. Justice Dickson, as he then was, at p. 582 S.C.R., p. 410 D.L.R.: ... the sole question is whether non-availability of markets for pulp or corrugated medium discharged St. Anne from its obligations under the contract.

An act of God clause or force majeure clause, and it is within such a clause that the words "non-availability of markets" are found, generally operates to discharge a contracting party when a supervening, sometimes supernatural, event, beyond control of either party, makes performance impossible. The common thread is that of the unexpected, something beyond reasonable human foresight and skill. If markets were unavailable to St. Anne, did they become so because of something unexpected happening after April 10, 1970? Was the change so radical as to strike at the root of the contract? Could the company, through the exercise of reasonable skill, have found markets in which to trade? Clause 2(a) contemplates the following frustrating events: an act of God, the Queen's or public enemies, war, the authority of the law, labour unrest or strikes, the destruction of or damage to production facilities. Reading the clause ejusdem generis, it seems to me that "non-availability of markets" as a discharging condition must be limited to an event over which the respondent exercises no control.

In my view, the clause considered by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Atlantic Paper Stock case, supra, was significantly different from para. 15 in exs. 1 and 2. The important words found in para. 15 that were lacking in the Atlantic Paper Stock case, supra, are "of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor". In my respectful opinion the inclusion of these words excepts and excludes the doctrine or rule of ejusdem generis and in this regard reference might be had to the decision of the House of Lords in Larsen v. Sylvester & Co., [1908] A.C. 295. The clause there considered was as follows [p. 295]:

"The parties hereto mutually exempt each other from all liability arising from frosts floods strikes lock-outs of workmen disputes between masters and men and any other unavoidable accidents or hindrances of what kind soever beyond their control either preventing or delaying the working loading or shipping of the said cargo occurring on or after the date of this charter until the actual completion of the loading."

Reading from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Loreburn at p. 296, he said:

The language used is "any other unavoidable accidents or hindrances of what kind soever beyond their control." Those words follow certain particular specified hindrances which it is impossible to put into one and the same genus. In Earl of Jersey v. Neath Poor Law Union (1889), 22 Q.B.D. 555, 566, Fry L.J. referred to words of a similar kind, and indicated that you have to regard the intention of the parties as expressed in their language, and that words such as these, "hindrances of what kind soever," are often intended to mean, as I am sure they are in this case intended to mean, exactly what they say. It is impossible to lay down any exhaustive rules for the application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis, but I agree with Fry L.J. that there may be greater danger in loosely applying it. It may result, as he says, in "giving not the true effect to the contracts of parties but a narrower effect than they were intended to have."

The vendor was therefore, in my view, entitled to invoke the provisions of para. 15 of the agreement, as was done, to extend the date for closing set out in para. 4.

The suggestion that the vendor is entitled to only one extension of either the time for completion or for registration is to ignore the plain language of the clause. It clearly states, "the vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension or extensions of time for completion or registration ...".

Admittedly the language of the agreements, exs. 1 and 2, is complex. The documents deal with a complex legal relationship and one cannot expect them to read like a primary school reader -- their very nature requires a degree of complexity.

On the contract itself, therefore, I find that the extended closing dates were November 24, 1982, for the Gerald Agreement and December 6, 1982, for the Gloria Agreement. These were the only dates, it will be remembered, upon which the plaintiff purported to tender. There was no attempt to tender at any other time by the plaintiffs.

While the language of the agreements requires careful reading, it is not necessarily ambiguous or confusing simply because it is complex.

One must look to the whole contract and give effect to it, if at all possible. A most helpful passage is found in Professor Fridman's book, The Law of Contract in Canada, 2nd ed. (1986), at p. 444:

Hence, the contract should be construed as a whole, giving effect to everything in it if at all possible. No word should be superfluous (unless of course, as happened in one instance, it is truly meaningless and can be ignored). In Cooke (Barchak) & Revak v. Anderson, one clause in a contract fixed the price of land at $5,000. A later clause referred to payment not in cash but by the provision of a certain quantity of beets. It was held that these clauses must be read together so as to create harmony, and not dissension among the different terms of the contract. Thus, the later clause to the necessary extent modified or limited the earlier one. In such cases of repugnancy within the contract, therefore, as was stated in Forbes v. Git, if the dissonant clauses can be read harmoniously this must be done. If not, then the repugnant part must be rejected in order to give effect to the general intent of the parties, as evidenced by the contract as a whole, rather than any particular, and jarring language. If there is conflict between two parts of a document, the dominating purpose must prevail, as indicating the real intentions of the parties.

It seems that when paras. 15 and 19 are read together the meaning of the agreement is quite clear.

If there is delay in the completion of the units and/or common elements or in the registration for a cause beyond the vendor's control -- then the vendor is to be permitted a reasonable extension or extensions of time for completion or registration and the date of closing shall be extended accordingly.

If the unit is completed prior to registration then the vendor can require occupancy of the purchaser in accordance with para. 19.

In the event the unit and/or common elements are not complete or the registration is not complete by the extended date of closing, the vendor in that instance has two options. He can either further extend the date for closing or if he does not further extend the date for closing then in that event, the agreement shall be deemed null and void in accordance with the last sentence of para. 15 of the agreement.

Here, in the case of the Gerald Agreement, the vendor extended the date for closing from July 26 to November 24, 1982. On that latter date the unit was complete but the registration was not and accordingly the vendor invoked the provisions of para. 19 of the agreement as was his right. The purchaser refused to occupy the unit on that basis and insisted on a final closing on that extended date. In my view the purchaser was not entitled to a final closing at that time and was thereby in default under the terms of the agreement.

In respect of the Gloria Agreement, the same thing occurred with the exception that the vendor further extended the date as I find was his right.

Before leaving this issue, I should comment on the argument that no evidence was led relating to the second delay in respect of the Gloria Agreement from December 1, 1982 to December 6, 1982. To me it seems obvious, with the evidence from Mr. Stock, that units were completed from the ground up -- that the unit on the eighteenth level would be ready before the unit on the nineteenth level. The closing for the Gerald unit on the eighteenth level was November 24, 1982. It is only reasonable therefore that the closing for the Gloria unit would be some time later. There was no evidence led of new and different causes for this last six-day delay -- obviously the reasons were the same and I infer that the further delay was required by reason of the unusually cold winter and the strikes -- all beyond the reasonable control of the vendor.

Counsel for the defendant also argued that the closing dates were November 24, 1982 and December 6, 1982, by operation of law as stated by our Court of Appeal in King v. Urban & Country Transport Ltd. (1973), 1 O.R. (2d) 449, 40 D.L.R. (3d) 641. Reading from the headnote in that case the editor states:

Where a contract for the sale of land contains a stipulation that "time is of the essence", and where neither party is prepared to close the transaction on the stated day, the contract continues to exist after that day.

If I am right in my assessment of the facts, then neither party was ready to close on the contractual date for closing. It has been uniformly held in this Province that that does not put an end to the contract.

Normally, in this situation, when both parties let the time go by, and one of the parties wishes to reinstate time as of the essence, it is necessary to serve a notice upon the other party, fixing a new date for closing, which must be reasonable and stating that time is to be of the essence with respect to the new date.

In the case at bar, neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant were ready to close on the originally stipulated dates, July 26, 1982 and July 30, 1982. The defendant had sent letters April 6, 1982, extending those dates to November 24, 1982 and December 1, 1982, respectively. July 26 and 30, 1982, passed with neither party doing anything. The contract, however, does not end there -- it continues, as Mr. Justice Arnup said in King v. Urban Transport, supra, and either party may send a notice setting a new date for closing. This the solicitors for the defendant did in April and again by letters dated November 11, 1982, in respect of the Gerald Agreement and dated November 17 and 23, 1982, in respect of the Gloria Agreement.

The fact that the date for closing of the Gloria Agreement was changed from December 1, 1982 to December 6, 1982, makes no difference in my view. The fact that December 1, 1982, passed with neither party doing anything is significant and indicates both viewed December 6, 1982, as the new closing date. The fact that the plaintiff Gloria Morris purported to tender on that date confirms this conclusion in my view. In this regard I rely on the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Nepean Carleton Developments Ltd. v. Hope, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 427, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 609, 13 N.R. 7, which approved the principle enunciated in King v. Urban Transport, supra.

Prior to the date of closing, which was October 1, 1969, the purchaser sought an extension of time and agreement was reached to move the closing forward to October 3, 1969. Nothing was said as to time being of the essence. October 3rd came and went, with no move being made either by the purchaser to close or by the vendor to give notice of intended termination. The solicitors for the respective parties continued to act on the footing that the agreement was still alive. The vendor's solicitor stated in a letter of October 8, 1969, to the purchaser's solicitor that he was ready for closing but no date was fixed. Copies of the statutory declarations of possession were enclosed with this letter.

... the main contention of the vendors ... was that the contract was properly terminated by the vendors by the notice of repudiation in their solicitor's letter of October 14th. The contention was founded on the fact that the purchaser had to that date done nothing to go forward with the contract. In my opinion, the point is not well taken in law. There were no requirements that the purchaser had to meet in relation to the Scott Hope agreement as a prerequisite that would be fatal if not met before the date of closing. Assuming that time continued to be of the essence in equity (although not so stated) when the date of closing was postponed to October 3, 1969, there was clearly a waiver of the essentiality of time when October 3rd passed without any steps towards completion being taken by either the purchaser or the vendors and when, in his letter of October 8, 1969, the vendors' solicitor stated that his clients were ready to close but fixed no date, and when negotiations continued thereafter directed to completion.

In the result, if there was to be another fixed date for completion, it was incumbent on either the vendors or the purchaser to give notice fixing a reasonable time. A notice, as in the vendors' letter of October 14th, calling off the contract without giving the purchaser any time to perform, could not put the purchaser in default. As a consequence of that letter, the vendors became the defaulting parties, and it was open to the purchaser to elect to insist on performance by the vendors, and that is what they did.

In respect of both agreements the solicitors for the defendant did respectively, by letters dated November 11, 1982 and November 17, 1982, write to advise the plaintiffs that the closings would be occupancy closings pursuant to para. 19 of the agreement.

The plaintiffs responded to the defendant's letters by letters respectively dated November 18, 1982 and November 22, 1982, both of which advised that he -- the plaintiff Gerald Morris -- was of the opinion:

... that if the condominium registration is not completed and you are unable to complete the transaction on November 24, 1982, then the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is null and void (see paragraph 15).

The evidence, to my mind, in this case is overwhelming that if the plaintiff did not know there would in all likelihood have been a two-stage closing, namely an occupancy closing followed by a title closing, he ought to have.

In coming to this conclusion I rely on the following evidence:

1. Gerald Morris had himself acted for a client purchasing a condominium unit where there was such a two-stage closing.
2. The agreements of purchase and sale themselves specifically refer to this type of two-stage closing -- see paras. 1(g), 15, 19.
3. The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, specifically contemplates this type of closing.
4. The HUDAC New Home Warranty, ex. 12, which he signed March 5, 1981, speaks in terms of "Estimated date of possession" and "Estimated date of transfer of title" as being two separate dates.
5. His own handwritten notes which are ex. 15, refer to "interim closing" and "occupancy file" in respect of both units.
6. His own handwritten notes which are ex. 16, can only be interpreted logically by the underlying assumption of a two-stage closing.
7. He reluctantly on cross-examination conceded that he knew that if a unit were completed before registration there would be an interim and a final closing; he knew this to be a common practice in condominium conveyancing.

In my view, the plaintiff Gerald Morris knew before he and his wife signed the agreements of purchase and sale on March 20, 1981, that there was very likely to be a two-stage closing -- an occupancy closing when the suite was finished, followed by a final closing after registration had taken place. His knowledge is that of his wife as well in these circumstances. Both, I find, signed the agreements of purchase and sale, exs. 1 and 2, knowing that fact and they raised no objection until Mr. Morris' letters of November 18 and 22, 1982, to the solicitors for the defendant. It was in those letters for the first time that Mr. Morris raised objection to the fact that there would not be a final closing on the scheduled closing dates (then) of November 24 and December 1, 1982. It should be noted even then he made no objection to the fact that the closing dates had been extended. I have no difficulty in finding that on the whole of the evidence he clearly acquiesced to the extensions when made.

At the very least, at this point, Mr. Morris owed the defendant a reasonable opportunity to attempt to comply with his objection on the basis of the principles enunciated in Nepean Carleton, supra. He did not give that opportunity and in my view was thereby in breach in respect of both agreements.

In my view the plaintiffs were not entitled to insist upon a title closing as distinct from an occupancy closing either under the terms of the agreements of purchase and sale or as a matter of law.

The last issue remaining is whether the plaintiffs have lost their deposits and, if so, whether in that event there are here circumstances in which the court should exercise its equitable jurisdiction and relieve against forfeiture.

There can in my view be little doubt that the $20,000 paid in respect of each agreement was a deposit. The agreements themselves refer to these moneys as "a deposit" and "a further deposit". The statement of claim refers to these moneys as "a deposit" in paras. 4 and 6. The HUDAC certificate, ex. 12, refers to the moneys paid as "deposit" and in fact is called a "deposit receipt".

On the findings I have made, these agreements were not completed by reason of the purchasers default and in such circumstances a true deposit is lost. As Lord Justice Cotton said [quoting Lord St. Leonards] in Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch.D. 89 at p. 94:

"Where a purchaser is in default and the seller has not parted with the subject of the contract, it is clear that the purchaser could not recover the deposit; for he cannot, by his own default, acquire a right to rescind the contract." Then he goes on and states his opinion that the mere re-sale of the estate after the purchaser's default cannot in any way affect the right of the vendor to retain the deposit.

Clearly the deposit in respect of the Gerald Agreement is lost. There remains a question in respect of the Gloria Agreement for that unit was one of the units which was the subject of exs. 37 and 39 relating to the MURB deal as it was called.

The Gloria deal was scheduled to close December 6, 1982, but by agreement made November 25, 1982, this unit was sold to the Beecroft partnership by the defendant with a view to mitigating its damages by reason of the almost certain default it expected in relation to the Gloria Agreement.

The fact that the defendant was technically withholding title to the Gloria unit on December 6, 1982, is no comfort to the plaintiff. Exhibit 39 which is the option agreement clearly gave the defendant the right to acquire this unit back and it therefore had I find, the ability to give title. In this regard I rely on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Orchard v. Fournie (1982), 38 O.R. (2d) 636 at p. 640, 139 D.L.R. (3d) 144 at p. 148, 25 R.P.R. 154 at p. 160, from the judgment of Mr. Justice Weatherston: "To be entitled to a decree of specific performance, a vendor need only show that he has the right and is in a position to call in the title, if outstanding."

There is no evidence of any reason why relief from forfeiture should be given in the circumstances of this case and accordingly the action is dismissed.

As counsel have requested, they may arrange a time to make submissions on the issue of costs.

Action dismissed.

Re Assaly and Minister of Revenue

56 O.R. (2d) 30 Also reported at 30 D.L.R. (4th) 291

High Court of Justice McKinlay J. August 25, 1986

* An appeal from the following judgment of McKinlay J. to the Ontario Court of Appeal (Zuber, Goodman and Krever JJ.A.) was dismissed on March 28, 1988. See 63 O.R. (2d) 540n.

APPLICATION to determine a question of law in respect of liability for land transfer tax.

Christopher A. Moore, for appellant. G. W. Sholtack, for respondent.

MCKINLAY J.:-- The appellant, a developer, moves under rule 21.01(2) of the Rules of Civil Procedure for the determination of a question of law, which determination will dispose of the action between the parties. At issue is the amount of consideration for land on which the appellant must pay land transfer tax pursuant to the provisions of the Land Transfer Tax Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 231, as amended. The facts are that on November 9, 1981, the appellant, Thomas C. Assaly (the "developer" or "purchaser"), agreed to purchase from Thomas C. Assaly Corporation Ltd. (the "builder" or "vendor") land described in the agreement of purchase and sale which, at that time, was vacant, undeveloped, or "raw" land.

The closing date of the purchase and sale transaction was the same as the date of execution of the agreement -- November 9, 1981. The agreement of purchase and sale was conditional upon the vendor and purchaser entering into a building contract under which the vendor was to construct condominium units on the land. That condition was satisfied on November 9, 1981.

Paragraph 1.01(i) of the agreement reads as follows:

"Purchase Price" for the purpose of this Agreement shall mean the price paid by the Purchaser to the Vendor to acquire a beneficial interest in the land and shall not include any monies paid by or on behalf of the Purchaser under the provisions of the Building Contract.

In order to facilitate the development and the financing, the vendor was to hold the land as a trustee for the purchaser/ developer from November 9, 1981. The purchase price of the land -- $185,000 -- was satisfied on the same date in accordance with the agreement of purchase and sale.

The consideration for the building and development on the land was agreed to separately in the building contract.

The dispute between the developer and the Ministry of Revenue for Ontario arises from the fact that no transfer was registered on title until April 11, 1983, by which time the buildings on the land had been completed. The land transfer tax affidavit executed by the agent of the purchaser showed consideration for land and buildings amounting to a total of $2,142,700, and land transfer tax was paid by the purchaser on that amount. The developer says that was an error, and that land transfer tax should have been paid only on the land cost -- $185,000.

It is argued by the ministry that the appellant developer himself has acknowledged by the land transfer tax affidavit that the consideration for the conveyance to him was $2,142,700, and that he cannot now say that his agent's statements in the affidavit were not true. I do not accept that position. The appeal procedure provided for under the Act was properly undertaken. That is not disputed. If a taxpayer considers that he has made an error in the materials presented for the purpose of determining tax liability, there is no reason why he cannot utilize the procedure provided by statute to rectify that error. There can be no suggestion in this case that false or misleading material was filed for the purpose of reducing tax liability.

The taxing provision in issue is s. 2(1)(a) of the Land Transfer Tax Act:

2(1) Every person who tenders for registration in Ontario,

(a) a conveyance whereby any land is conveyed to or in trust for any transferee who is not a non-resident person ... shall, before the conveyance is registered, pay a tax computed at the rate of two-fifths of 1 per cent of the value of the consideration for the conveyance up to and including $45,000, and at the rate of four-fifths of 1 per cent upon the remainder of the value of the consideration.

The provision applicable to this case defining "value of the consideration" for determining the tax payable pursuant to s. 2(1), is s. 1(1)(p)(i), which reads:

(p) "value of the consideration" includes,

(i) the gross sale price or the amount expressed in money of any consideration given or to be given for the conveyance by or on behalf of the transferee and the value expressed in money of any liability assumed or undertaken by or on behalf of the transferee as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance and the value expressed in money of any benefit of whatsoever kind conferred directly or indirectly by the transferee on any person as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance ...

It is indisputable that land transfer tax is only levied at the time a conveyance is tendered for registration. In this case, that occurred on April 11, 1983, and the document tendered for registration was a transfer purporting to convey to the developer "units 1 to 37, Level 1, in the Register for Carleton Condominium Corporation Plan No. 215, and its appurtenant common interests", for a consideration stated in the transfer to be $2,250,000, part of which was for chattels.

It is the position of the appellant developer that the only interest actually conveyed to the transferee by that conveyance was the beneficial ownership of raw land for which the developer had previously paid $185,000. The balance of the stated consideration, he says, represents moneys paid to the builder for the work done and materials provided by it in completing the condominium project as builder under a building contract.

Because the transactions and documents involved in this case are complicated, I shall use a simple analogous transaction to assist in the analysis of the problem. You have agreed to purchase a lot of vacant land on which you plan to have a home built to your specifications. You pay $X for the land, take and register a conveyance, and pay the appropriate amount of land transfer tax on $X -- the consideration for the transfer of the land. You then hire a builder to build a home for you on that land, and during the course of the building you borrow funds from a bank to provide financing, and the bank takes and registers a mortgage over the land as security. No land transfer tax is exigible from the bank or from you upon registration of the mortgage or of any discharge (see s. 1(1) (b) of the Act). The house is completed, and you take possession at a time when the realty, which now includes the home built on the land, is worth $Y -- four times the amount of $X on which you paid land transfer tax. However, no additional land transfer tax is exigible. Of course, if you sell the property, and a conveyance is registered, land transfer tax will then be exigible on the full consideration paid; but that is a completely separate transaction, and may not take place for many years.

The vendor as trustee

Would the result be different if the person who sold the property to you held it in trust for you until after the building was completed? I think not.

If a conveyance were registered at the time of the sale from the vendor to himself in trust, land transfer tax would be exigible on registration. If at the time the building was completed a conveyance was then registered from the vendor as trustee to you, the beneficial owner, no tax would be exigible because there would be no consideration for the conveyance. On the other hand, if no conveyance was registered at the time of the sale, the agreement to sell the land to you and hold it in trust would constitute an unregistered conveyance within the terms of s. 1(1)(p)(v) of the Act, and the consideration on which tax would be exigible is the consideration "in respect of the unregistered conveyances". In either case land transfer tax would be paid only once and the consideration would be the sale price of the vacant land -- $X. Section 1(1)(p)(v) reads as follows:

(p) "value of the consideration" includes,

(v) in the case of a conveyance of land from a trustee (whether or not the trustee is so described in the conveyance) to a person to whom or for whose benefit any equitable or beneficial interest in the land has been transferred by a conveyance or conveyances that have not been registered, the value of the consideration determined under subclauses (i) to (iv), whichever is applicable, in respect of the unregistered conveyances made to such person.

The vendor as builder

Would the result be different if, rather than having a stranger to the land sale transaction build your home, you arranged with the vendor to build it for you? I think not.

If you agree to purchase vacant land, land transfer tax is exigible on the consideration for that land when the conveyance is registered -- on nothing else. If you then have a building constructed on the land, the tax result should be the same regardless of whom you contract with for the construction. However, if what you agree to purchase is land with a building on it, then the land includes the buildings on it, and the "value of the consideration" for the conveyance, as defined in s. 1(1)(p)(i), is the gross sale price, which would include the amount agreed to be paid for the construction of the buildings. It is at this point that the simple analogy and the facts of this case diverge. Dealings between vendor and purchaser

When the vendor of the land and the builder are the same person or corporation, as in this case, any agreements between the vendor and purchaser relating to the property must be looked at carefully to ascertain the true nature of their dealings, and the "value of the consideration" as defined in s. 1(1)(p)(i) of the Act applied to those dealings.

It is the position of the developer that the dealings between the parties involved two basic transactions -- one for the purchase of vacant land, and one for the building and registration of a condominium development on that land.

In support of that position counsel for the developer stresses that:

(i) the agreement of purchase and sale of the land was one for the purchase of raw land only and the purchase price stated therein was $185,000 -- the purchase price of raw land only;

(ii) Paragraph 1.01(i) specifically provides that the purchase price was for the purchase of beneficial interest in land only and does not include any moneys paid for building carried on pursuant to the building contract;

(iii) the agreement of purchase and sale provides for a closing date of November 9, 1981, and that transaction was in fact carried out;

(iv) the agreement of purchase and sale provided for the execution of a declaration of trust providing that the vendor hold the purchaser's interest in the land as a bare trustee. That declaration was in fact executed by the vendor on the closing date of November 9, 1981, as required by the agreement of purchase and sale;

(v) the agreement of purchase and sale defines the land, which is acknowledged by both parties to have been raw land at the time of that agreement;

(vi) Paragraph 2.03 of the agreement of purchase and sale, an extremely important provision in the agreement, acknowledges the fact that title may remain in the name of the vendor after the closing date, but that the vendor is to hold the land only as bare trustee for the purchaser, that the vendor will hold the full beneficial interest in the land for the account and benefit of the purchaser and that on the closing date of November 9, 1981, it shall be deemed to have transferred, signed and conveyed the land to the purchaser. The vendor is to have no powers with respect to dealing with the land other than those set out in the balance of the agreement of purchase and sale.

All of those points stressed are contained in or substantiated by the agreements between the builder and developer.

The position of the respondent ministry is that all of the dealings between the parties constituted one blanket transaction, and what the appellant in fact agreed to purchase was condominium units as described in the registered transfer for the consideration stated therein.

In support of that position counsel for the respondent ministry stresses a number of alleged facts. The difficulty I have with some of the facts alleged by the ministry is that they constitute the ministry's interpretation of the documentation rather than being a precise statement of the provisions which the ministry wishes to stress. These facts stressed by the ministry and some of my comments as to their accuracy are:

(i) The consideration to be paid to the vendor/builder for the condominium units consists of $185,000 for raw land, $1,286,750 for the cost of constructing a building, $677,950 for other costs involved in constructing the units and $107,300 for appliances. That is in fact the case, but it should be remembered that the $185,000 was paid pursuant to the agreement to purchase raw land and all of the other items of consideration were paid pursuant to the building contract.

(ii) The ministry states that the appellant covenanted that he had no right to the conveyance prior to the registration of the project as a condominium corporation and agreed to accept the transfer of units after notice of such registration. That position is not completely accurate. Paragraph 4.01(b) of the agreement of purchase and sale states that no purchaser shall have the right to a conveyance to him by registrable instrument of his pro rata interest in the project prior to the registration of the project as a condominium corporation. That does not mean that the purchaser does not have in fact a conveyance at the time of entering into the agreement of purchase and sale. Section 1(1)(b) of the Act defines the word "convey" to include agreeing to sell land in Ontario, and "conveyance" to include any instrument or writing by which land is conveyed. Consequently, while the developer was not entitled to a conveyance in registrable form prior to the registration of the project as a condominium, he did in fact have a conveyance within the terms of the Land Transfer Tax Act when the parties executed the agreement of purchase and sale.

The ministry also relies on para. 4.02 of the building contract for its position that the developer had no right to a conveyance prior to the registration. That provision only states that the transfer of individual units "as a unit" to a developer shall take place after the declaration as a condominium corporation. It in no way deals with the developer's right to ownership of the raw land.

(iii) The developer agrees to assume mortgages to be arranged by the builder of not less than $48,500 per unit. While it is true that para. 4.01 of the building contract requires that the developer assume such mortgages, that assumption agreement is obviously included in the building contract only because the developer, as trustee, is the registered owner of the land. The building contract requires that the builder arrange the mortgages, and also provides that the mortgage advances are to be made to it for the purpose of financing the construction. However, the building agreement also requires a direction to be executed by the developer directing the mortgagee to pay all advances to the builder. That reinforces the position of the developer that the developer is in fact the beneficial owner of the land and that the builder's dealings with the land are in its capacity as trustee.

(iv) The "completion date" is defined in the agreement of purchase and sale to be the date of conveyance of the condominium units to the purchaser, which date is to be designated by the vendor/builder. At first blush this provision causes some confusion since "closing date" is defined in the same agreement to mean the date of the execution of the agreement by the vendor. However, on further study of the two agreements it is clear that there is substantial overlapping between them. The agreement of purchase and sale clearly anticipates the building agreement between the parties; indeed, as stated above, the entering into the building agreement is a condition of the agreement of purchase and sale. I am satisfied that the definition of completion date was inserted in the agreement of purchase and sale not to indicate the time when the purchaser was entitled to the beneficial interest in the real property but to deal with matters involving the building contract.

(v) The transfer which was registered purported to transfer all 37 condominium units. It stated a consideration of $2,250,000 (which includes chattels) and described condominium units rather than raw land. The land transfer tax affidavit showed a consideration of $2,142,700 for the realty conveyed. All of those facts are accurate.

I am satisfied that what was conveyed to the developer by the agreement of purchase and sale was raw land and nothing else. The fact that entering into a building contract was a condition of that agreement does not alter its substance, nor does it affect the right of the purchaser to call for a conveyance of the raw land at any time. The agreements, of course, contemplate that he was not entitled to a registrable conveyance of an interest in the project (i.e., the land, building and chattels together) until registration of the project as a condominium corporation. But I am of the opinion that the purchaser was entitled, as between himself and the vendor, to call for a transfer of the raw land at any time.

But the further question is: "What was conveyed to the developer by the transfer which was registered on April 11, 1983?" Section 2 of the Act, the taxing section, requires the payment of tax by "every person who tenders for registration in Ontario a conveyance whereby any land is conveyed ...". When the developer took the beneficial interest in the land on November 9, 1981, the vendor retained only the registered title as trustee for the developer. When the condominium development was carried out, the buildings were constructed, at the developer's expense, on land already owned by the developer. All that was actually conveyed to the developer by the transfer registered on April 11, 1983, was the legal title to land which he had owned since November 9, 1981. The actual consideration for that conveyance was nil.

However, tax is payable not on the actual consideration, but on the "value of the consideration" as defined in the Act. This brings into play s. 1(1)(p)(v) quoted above. The registered transfer constituted, within the terms of that provision, a conveyance from a trustee (the vendor), to a person (the developer), to whom the beneficial interest in the land had been transferred by a conveyance that was not registered (the agreement of purchase and sale). In such a situation the tax is payable on the value of the consideration in respect of the unregistered conveyance (the agreement of purchase and sale), as determined under s. 1(1)(p)(i), quoted above.

There is no doubt that the gross sale price for that conveyance was $185,000. But was there any "liability assumed or undertaken by ... the transferee as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance" or "any benefit ... conferred ... by the transferee on any person as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance"?

It is the words "arrangement relating to the conveyance" that causes substantial difficulty. Counsel for the developer takes the position that any "liability assumed" as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance would be something akin to the assumption of a mortgage against the property or the assumption of any other liability of the vendor as part of the purchase price, apart from the actual cash paid. Similarly, any "benefit conferred" as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance would be the transfer to the vendor of something akin to other realty or assets as part of the purchase price, apart from the actual cash paid. The problem I have with that position is that such assumption of liability or benefit conferred would constitute part of the gross sale price "for the conveyance", referred to in the first part of s. 1(1)(p) (i). Therefore, I am brought to the inescapable conclusion that any "liability assumed" or "benefit conferred as part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance" must be something different from, and in addition, to any assumption of liability or benefit conferred "for the conveyance".

The Oxford English Dictionary defines "arrangement" as "a structure or combination of things for a purpose", and defines "relate" as "to connect, establish a relation between". Giving those words their ordinary meaning it seems to me that the building contract in this case constitutes "part of the arrangement relating to the conveyance". The agreement of purchase and sale is conditional upon the building contract being entered into. The obvious purpose of all of the dealings between the builder and the developer was to complete a condominium development, and the agreement of purchase and sale and the building contract was obviously planned in combination to effect a purpose. There was undoubtedly a strong connection between the two contracts in both form and substance.

I therefore conclude, reluctantly, that a liability was assumed by the transferee as part of the "arrangement relating to the conveyance", which was equal to the cost of the building contract. Consequently the total "value of the consideration" was that set out in the land transfer tax affidavit attached to the transfer registered on April 11, 1983. My reluctance stems from my conviction that the true transaction is not very different from the simple analogy of the purchase of land by an individual, and the subsequent building of a home on that land. I am also convinced that with appropriate tax planning such a result could be avoided.

As an alternative argument, the appellant says that although in this case all of the land was conveyed in one single transfer, the developer could have taken the property under 37 separate transfers, and the resultant tax would have been lower. He suggests, therefore, that he should pay only the lower amount. There are two fundamental defects in that position. First, I have held that tax was levied on the value of the consideration under the agreement of purchase and sale, and there were not 37 separate parcels in existence at the time of that agreement. Second, even if the tax were levied on the value of the consideration under the registered transfer, the law is quite clear that when a taxpayer orders his affairs in a manner that attracts a tax in one amount, he cannot subsequently claim that he should be taxed as if he had ordered his affairs in a different manner, which would have attracted less tax.

Because of the novelty of the main issue there will be no order as to costs.

Judgment accordingly.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE CARRUTHERS J. 27TH MAY 1986.

APPLICATION for a declaration of the parties' rights under agreements to purchase certain condominium units.

William J. Burden, for applicants.

Allan Sternberg, for respondent.

CARRUTHERS J.:-- This application has been brought to have declared certain rights of the parties under two agreements of purchase and sale of residential condominium units. Both agreements are dated December 20, 1983, and relate to two units located in a building known municipally as 70 Rosehill Ave., in the City of Toronto. The applicant Jafar Jawad Hashim ("Hashim") agreed to purchase suite 801 and the applicant Salwa Ali Al-Rufaiee agreed to purchase suite 803.

The issues herein arise because both of the agreements contain a clause, hereinafter referred to as "clause 2(c)", which reads as follows:

If the Purchaser is required to occupy the Units as provided in Paragraph 11 of this Agreement, the Purchaser agrees to pay the Vendor on the Closing Date, as an increase in the Purchase Price, an amount equal to seven and one half percent (7 1/2%) per annum of the Purchase Price set out in Paragraph 2(a) of this Agreement, calculated from the Occupancy Date to the Closing Date.

Clause 2(c) was the subject of consideration in a previous application involving the respondent herein: Re Lamb and Costain Ltd. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 657. Counsel for the applicants argues that that decision of Barr J. is determinative of the issues raised in this present application. Counsel for the respondent does not agree, primarily because he is of the opinion that there is a significant difference in the facts and circumstances of each matter.

In the present application, I was told there are no material facts in dispute. Notwithstanding this advice, the respondent specifically acknowledges only certain of the facts set out in the applicants' factum as being correct. This situation is more than somewhat awkward and in my view should not exist, particularly on an application of this kind. The absence of agreement on material facts would ordinarily have the effect of prohibiting this application from being dealt with. From reading both factums, it appears that although the respondent cannot see its way clear to expressly admit certain portions of the applicants' factum as being correct, it has been able, in its own factum, to raise and rely upon them. While I am certain that counsel for the respondent had some purpose in mind in bringing about this state of affairs, I need not speculate here as to what it might have been. Notwithstanding the absence of express agreement on all material facts, I am prepared to proceed to determine the issue raised in this application by giving consideration to what I have gleaned from my reading of both factums as facts not in dispute.

The applicants are the son and wife, respectively, of Dr. Jawad Mahmoud Hashim ("Dr. Hashim"). He represented both applicants in the negotiations leading up to the execution of the two agreements in question. As well, he retained a member of the firm of solicitors who represented each of them on this application to assist both applicants in their purchases of the units in question. The purchase price for unit 801 was $595,000, and the purchase price for unit 803 was $975,000.

On behalf of the respondent there is no express acceptance of the paragraph contained in the applicants' factum, which alleges that in redrafting the form of agreement of purchase and sale proffered by the respondent to Dr. Hashim, the solicitor he retained specifically redrafted clause 2(c) so as to remove that which Barr J. later found offensive. The respondent does admit the correctness of the paragraph contained in the applicants' factum which states:

9. Costain Limited rejected any changes to the Costain offer and specifically the changes to sub-paragraph 2(c) proposed by McNeely.

McNeely, there is no dispute, is the solicitor retained by Dr. Hashim. It appears that after Costain rejected the proposed changes on behalf of the applicants, Dr. Hashim then attempted, but unsuccessfully, to locate other properties "satisfactory for his purposes". Dr. Hashim advised McNeely of this state of affairs and at the same time because he thought "it was clear Costain would not accept any amendment", instructed McNeely to "simply proceed with the contemplated purchases". Accordingly, the form of agreement in which clause 2(c) is found was executed by the parties hereto.

Both agreements in addition to clause 2(c) also provide that the applicants are to pay an occupancy fee for the time between the date occupation of each unit is taken and the date of final closing. Occupation was taken in each instance on either May 14 or 16, 1984, the parties apparently being unable to reach common ground in this respect. At the time of taking occupation of each unit, the applicants paid the balance due on the purchase price of their respective unit. Accordingly, the total purchase price of each unit, as shown above, was then paid in full. The respondent's declaration and description for each of the units was registered on August 13, 1984. The transfer documents for each unit were registered on the date which the parties ultimately set for the final closing, September 18, 1984. As of this latter date, the respondent's statements of adjustments were prepared. In each statement there is credited to the applicants, inter alia, the amounts due for interest pursuant to the provisions of s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (the "Act"). There is also credited to the respondent the sum of $21,977.46 for unit 801 and $13,411.89 for unit 803. Each of these latter amounts represents the 7 1/2% "increase in the Purchase Price" referred to in clause 2(c). The net effect of the various amounts credited to either the applicants or the respondent is that for unit 801, $99.33 was payable by the respondent on the final closing, while for unit 803, $1,284.37 was payable to the respondent. I am not told whether either of these amounts was in fact paid.

There is no dispute between the parties that the object of this application is to have determined the right of the respondent to receive credit for the two amounts of $13,411.89 and $21,977.46. As well and, to me, of greater significance, there is no dispute between the parties that with respect to, and in consideration of, the final closing on September 18, 1984, the respondent, in writing, undertook "to readjust all items on the statement of adjustment, if necessary". Each of the two undertakings is dated August 17, 1984.

It is only from the reasons for the decision of Barr J. that I have learned anything of the facts and circumstances of the Lamb matter, supra. It appears that the purchaser there, prior to signing the agreement, unsuccessfully had her solicitor attempt to delete clause 2(c). The agreement was executed, then, in the same terms as the agreements before me in this application. In the Lamb matter occupation of the residential condominium unit was taken on March 22, 1984, when the balance of the stipulated purchase price was paid, subject to adjustments on final closing. The final closing in the Lamb purchase occurred on September 4, 1984. From the reasons for decision of Barr J. I quote the following [at p. 659]:

After taking possession, and shortly before the final closing date, Mrs. Lamb's solicitor advised the vendor's solicitor of his view that cl. 2(c) was in contravention of the provisions of the Condominium Act and was illegal. The vendor's solicitor disagreed. The parties subsequently agreed to close the transaction on terms that the agreement of purchase and sale would not merge with the conveyance of the condominium on closing. The additional amount required to be paid on closing by cl. 2(c) was $20,239.75. It was agreed that the dispute between the parties as to the validity of this payment would be determined by the court and it is clear that the closing of the transaction was without prejudice to the rights of the parties with reference to this payment. This motion was brought by notice of motion served before the final closing but, of course, could not be heard at that time.

To my mind, the only difference between the facts and circumstances of the Lamb matter and the present one is that there the parties specifically agreed that the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale would not merge with the conveyance on closing, and that the closing would be without prejudice to the rights of the parties with reference to the amounts claimed under clause 2(c). In the present case, the respondent simply undertook to readjust, if necessary. These differences in themselves do not, in my view, prevent the decision of Barr J. from being applied to the present application. In fact, at the outset of the hearing of this application, I said to counsel that I had a sense of deja vu while reading the material beforehand.

Counsel for the respondent urges me to conclude that there are in fact material differences between the Lamb matter and the present one. Here, he maintains, there is a merger, and, as well, a payment made without protest, and therefore voluntary in nature. In addition, he submits that the Lamb decision does not consider the effect in law of clause 2(c) in the light of both s. 53(3) and s. 51(6) of the Act. For present purposes, he asks me to conclude that clause 2(c) does not contravene either of those sections. In this respect, his position is based upon a conclusion that clause 2(c) represents a "two stage" purchase price, no portion of which matches any of the items or amounts referred to in either s. 53(3) or s. 51(6).

I think it appropriate that I here set out in full s. 51(6) and s. 53(3) of the Act:

51(6) Where an agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes permits or requires the purchaser to take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the money paid in respect of such right or obligation to the proposed declarant shall be not greater, on a monthly basis, than the total of the following amounts:

1. The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit.
2. An amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the proposed unit.
3. The projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit.

53(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him.

These sections then specify the extent of the financial relationship that exists between the purchaser and the owner when, as in the present case, the purchaser goes into occupation before obtaining a deed acceptable for registration, but having paid the full purchase price. Only that which is allowed by s. 51(6) can be charged by the owner against the purchaser. By s. 53(3) the owner must credit the purchaser with interest on the full purchase price paid for the period between the taking of occupation to the date upon which deliverance of the deed is made. Section 61 of the Act provides:

61. This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.

Section 61 has been interpreted as meaning that the parties cannot contract out of the provisions of the Act: see Re Grandby Investments Ltd. et al. and Wright et al. (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 341, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 313, 20 R.P.R. 30 sub nom. Re Tridel Construction Ltd. and Wright, and Lamb v. Costain Ltd., supra.

As I have indicated above, it is the position of the respondent in this case that the increase in purchase price envisaged by clause 2(c) is totally unrelated to both ss. 51(6) and 53(3) of the Act. On behalf of the respondent, it is said that the intention of clause 2(c) is to "ensure equal treatment for all purchasers while at the same time ensuring a competitive price for the condominium units". I am also told that the respondent, by clause 2(c), wants to deter speculation and ensure that any increase in the purchase price following occupation accrues to its benefit. Whatever the object of the respondent, it is my opinion that clause 2(c) cannot be said to be totally unrelated to the provisions of ss. 51(6) and 53(3) of the Act. I agree with what Barr J. said, at p. 6 of his reasons [pp. 661-2 O.R.]:

The effect of cl. 2(c) is to require the purchaser to pay, in addition to the amounts permitted by s. 51(6), an amount which depends on the length of time the purchaser is in possession and which is based on the purchase price. In my view this is a payment in respect of a "right or obligation" to "take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered" and contravenes the provision of s. 51(6). This is not a case of the vendor requiring additional money and the purchaser receiving matching additional services or facilities. The purchaser had paid a purchase price. If the vendor had been in a position to give a deed at that time the purchaser would have paid nothing more. She received nothing more by being required to wait five months for closing.

I am prepared to also conclude that if clause 2(c) cannot reasonably be said to constitute a charge not allowed by s. 51(6) of the Act, it is intended to offset the interest payable under s. 53(3). In either event, clause 2(c) contravenes the Act and is therefore an illegal provision, not enforceable against the applicants, and for all intents and purposes, as Barr J. declared in the Lamb case, "null and void". Having reached this conclusion, it is not necessary for me to deal with the position of the respondent that "the party attacking the transaction must also establish that a fraud has been perpetrated upon the Condominium Act by deceit or an absence of good faith".

As an alternative position, allowing for the prospect of the conclusion which I have now reached as to the enforceability of clause 2(c), counsel for respondent asked me to then conclude, notwithstanding, that the applicants are not entitled to a return of the money. In this instance the money is the total of the two amounts credited in favour of the respondent as aforesaid. I am asked to characterize these amounts as being, in law, voluntary payments of money. As such, counsel for the respondent maintains, they are not recoverable. Bound up with this position is the fact, not disputed, that at all times the applicants were well represented either by a sophisticated informed agent, Dr. Hashim, or a lawyer. At all times, there is no contest, the applicants were fully aware of the relevant facts and law. In these circumstances, it is argued on behalf of the respondent, the fact the applicants paid the amounts due under clause 2(c) without compulsion or undue influence, prevents them from successfully obtaining a repayment. In my opinion, having reached the conclusion that clause 2(c) contravenes the Act, the knowledge of the applicants of either or both what they signed and the relevant law at that time, is irrelevant for present purposes. As I have said, s. 61 of the Act, in any event, prevents the parties' contracting out of its provisions. In this respect, I adopt what Gray J. said in Berman et al. v. Karleton Co. Ltd. (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 176 at p. 184, 24 R.P.R. 8 at pp. 19-20, 28 C.P.C. 168:

The intent of the Act is clearly that the purchaser be paid interest on money paid to the vendor on account of purchase price during the interim occupancy period before a registrable deed or transfer is delivered. The reason for doing so is to protect purchasers of proposed condominium units from abuses by vendors who delay in registering declarations by providing an incentive to register quickly. The knowledge of the purchasers regarding what they were signing is irrelevant given the wording of s. 61 which prevents the parties from contracting out of the Act.

Barr J. reached a similar conclusion in Lamb v. Costain Ltd., supra.

Counsel for the respondent, as support for his position on the issue of voluntary payment, relies heavily upon the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Haubrich v. Keefner (1922), 65 D.L.R. 50, [1922] 1 W.W.R. 1079, 15 S.L.R. 271. That case involved a provision of the Saskatchewan Farm Implement Act which required contracts concerning the sale of large implements to be in writing. The plaintiff in that case had, by verbal agreement, purchased from the defendant a large implement. His claim to have all the purchase money returned was dismissed. There was no element of fraud, compulsion, or undue influence, and the plaintiff was found to have paid the full purchase price with complete knowledge of all the material facts. This included an understanding of the requirements of the Act as aforesaid and that the agreement, being verbal, contravened those requirements. Specifically, the court found the plaintiff was assumed to know he did not have to pay the money or take delivery of the implement. The Court of Appeal concluded that the purchase money had been paid voluntarily and accordingly was not recoverable. Other subsequent decisions of that court seem to have restricted the effect of Haubrich to its facts, and in particular the indication that the full purchase price had been paid. The last decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal which dealt with the same provision of the Farm Implement Act is Eberle et al. v. Oliver Ltd., [1940] 3 D.L.R. 229, [1940] 2 W.W.R. 295. In that case, the Court of Appeal suggests that recovery can be made whether the purchase price was paid in full or not. Amendments to the Farm Implement Act of Saskatchewan largely have done away with the effect of the line of cases which include the Haubrich decision. In any event, I do not think that case or indeed the line of other cases are of much help to the respondent here.

The facts of the present case do not permit me to reach a conclusion that the applicants voluntarily paid money to the respondent. The money paid by the applicants to the respondent was pursuant to the agreements which they had entered into in order to purchase the condominium units in question. The respondent obtained the benefit of clause 2(c) by preparing statements of adjustments which credited it with the amounts in question. The respondent in each case, that is, for each statement of adjustment, as I have noted above, agreed in writing to readjust "if necessary". There is no doubt in my mind, given the history of the applicants' efforts to have clause 2(c) removed from the agreements, and the parallel situation in Lamb, supra, of which the parties here were mindful, the respondent understood that the need to readjust would follow a decision adverse to its interest.

In the absence of the undertaking to readjust, I would be inclined to find, for present purposes, that there is nothing "voluntary" about the position of either applicant relative to what moneys were paid pursuant to their agreements with the respondent. The support which the respondent thinks it gains from the position reached by the Court of Appeal for Saskatchewan in Haubrich must be measured against the fact that that case makes no reference to the purpose and objects of the legislation under consideration, and the ability of the parties to waive its provisions. This situation for me, dissipates any persuasive authority which otherwise might have been offered by that decision. In my view, both ss. 51(6) and 53(3) found their way into the Act in order to prevent owners from taking advantage of persons seeking housing accommodation of the type covered by the Act. The Act applies equally to all such accommodation regardless of differences in cost.

Here, the applicants' request to have the offence clause removed from the form of agreement offered by the respondent was refused by the respondent. The position of the respondent being that a person who wanted to purchase the accommodation it offered, had to agree to sign an agreement which contained a provision which contravened the provisions of the Act. An element of compulsion existed in the relationship of the parties sufficient, in my mind, to prevent the applicants from being found to have voluntarily agreed to pay the amounts in question. The form of protection offered by the provisions of the Act would be rendered illusory if the applicants, under these circumstances, were precluded from recovery, or more correctly speaking in this case, reversing the credits sought by the respondent. To my mind it would not be just and reasonable to permit an owner to take advantage of an illegal clause simply because the purchaser in order to get the accommodation offered was required to sign an agreement in which it was contained.

The respondent also relies on "merger" to support its position that even though clause 2(c) may be declared illegal, the applicants are bound by its provisions. I gather it is intended by this aspect of the argument raised by counsel for the respondent that again in any event of the conclusion as to the legality or otherwise of clause 2(c) the obligations of the respondent under it were extinguished upon the final closing when a deed was accepted by the applicants. From my understanding of "merger", as applied in the context of a conveyance of an interest in land, that is the only support which it could make available to the respondent. And I do not think it applies at all in the present case. The final closing of a transaction cannot, in my opinion, turn an illegal, unenforceable clause in the agreement upon which the transaction is based into one which is legal and enforceable. And we are not concerned here with the extinguishment of an obligation on the part of the respondent. As well, this submission on the part of the respondent seems to completely overlook the matter of intention which is so important in a consideration of what has or has not been merged. In this respect the undertaking of the respondent would, in my opinion, completely preclude any merger of the applicants' right to have a readjustment made. That is really the only benefit the respondent could look for should merger otherwise apply to the facts of this case.

For these reasons, then, an order may issue that the respondent is not entitled to any credit of the amounts calculated in accordance with the provisions of clause 2(c) of the agreements in question. The order may also provide the respondent shall pay to each of the applicants the amounts due to them once the statements of adjustment are readjusted by reason of the conclusion which I have now reached. I can be spoken to by counsel, if they so desire, as to the form of order to be issued in accordance with my decision. I will have to hear from counsel in any event, with respect to the matter of prejudgment interest, if any, to be awarded in favour of the applicants and, as well, costs. I think it best that counsel for the parties reattend before me to deal with these matters. I suggest, if they intend to do so, that arrangements be made that such attendance take place within the next three weeks at Osgoode Hall.

Judgment accordingly.

Re Lamb and Costain Ltd.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE BARR J. 12TH FEBRUARY 1985.

APPLICATION for a declaration that a term of an agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium unit is void.

A. M. Robinson, for applicant.

A. Sternberg, for respondent.

BARR J.:— This application requires the determination of the validity of a clause in an agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium unit. By an agreement dated November 16, 1983, Mary Elizabeth Lamb agreed to purchase, and Costain Ltd. agreed to sell, a condominium unit at a price of $595,000 with $100,000 payable as a deposit and the balance payable on the taking of possession.

The clause giving rise to this litigation reads as follows:

2(c) If the purchaser is required to occupy the Units as provided in paragraph 11 of this Agreement, the purchaser agrees to pay the vendor on the closing date, as an increase in the purchase price, an amount equal to seven and one-half (7-1/2%) per cent per annum of this purchase price set out in paragraph 2(a) of this Agreement, calculated from the occupancy date to the closing date.

Mrs. Lamb retained a solicitor before signing the agreement. She objected to the provision in question and instructed her solicitor to negotiate with a view to deleting it. The vendor refused. Mrs. Lamb then signed the offer and it was accepted.

Mrs. Lamb took possession of the condominium on March 22, 1984, and at that time paid the balance of the price, $495,000, subject to adjustments. The transaction could not be completed until the registrations required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, had been made. The agreement called for final closing within twenty (20) days of the making of these registrations. The closing finally occurred on September 4, 1984.

After taking possession, and shortly before the final closing date, Mrs. Lamb's solicitor advised the vendor's solicitor of his view that cl. 2(c) was in contravention of the provisions of the Condominium Act and was illegal. The vendor's solicitor disagreed. The parties subsequently agreed to close the transaction on terms that the agreement of purchase and sale would not merge with the conveyance of the condominium on closing. The additional amount required to be paid on closing by cl. 2(c) was $20,239.75. It was agreed that the dispute between the parties as to the validity of this payment would be determined by the court and it is clear that the closing of the transaction was without prejudice to the rights of the parties with reference to this payment. This motion was brought by notice of motion served before the final closing but, of course, could not be heard at that time. Section 53(1) of the Condominium Act provides that all moneys received from a purchaser on account of a sale of a condominium unit before registration of the declaration and description must be held in trust and that the purchaser is entitled to interest until such time as a registrable transfer is delivered.

The position of the applicant is that the purchase price was $595,000. Clause 2(c) purports to increase this price where the final closing date does not coincide with the date of possession. Clause 2(c) calls for a payment: (1) calculated as a percentage of the purchase price, (2) for the period after payment of the price and before final closing, and (3) designed approximately to equal the interest the vendor is required to pay by the terms of the Act. It is alleged that cl. 2(c) is intended to circumvent the provisions of s. 53(1) and, in effect, to deprive the purchaser of the interest to which she is entitled.

The vendor's position is that Mrs. Lamb was under no obligation to purchase the unit. She had legal advice and, being unsuccessful in getting rid of cl. 2(c) by negotiation, she seeks now to retain the benefit of the contract but to escape part of the obligation she assumed. He says that cl. 2(c) is not an attempt to escape payment of interest on the purchase money but is designed: (a) to prevent speculation, and (b) to ensure that the vendor gets the advantage of any inflation in price after possession and before closing.

In my view it is immaterial whether the motive behind the insertion of cl. 2(c) is to deprive the purchaser of her right to interest, on one hand, or that alleged by the vendor on the other hand. If the section is in contravention of the Act it cannot stand because s. 61 of the Act provides:

61. This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.

Consequently, if cl. 2(c) has a result which is in contravention of the Act, it is invalid.

It is to be observed that prior to 1978 the purchaser was entitled to interest on all moneys paid prior to final closing but in 1978 [c. 84] additional provisions were enacted by s. 51 which were the following effects: (a) the vendor was required to take all reasonable steps to register a declaration and description without delay (s. 51(1) (a));

(b) the vendor was required to take all reasonable steps to deliver to the purchaser a registrable deed or transfer of the unit without delay (s. 51(1)(c)), and

(c) in the meantime a purchaser who entered into possession of a unit could not be required to pay (in circumstances such as those of the present case) more than an amount to cover, on a monthly basis, municipal taxes attributable to the unit and the projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit (s. 51(6)).

At the same time s. 61 was added providing that the provision of the Act applied notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.

In summary, after the 1978 amendments the vendor was required to move as swiftly as possible to the point where he could give a final deed or transfer, he was required to pay interest on money received in the mean time and was prohibited from charging anything in respect of occupancy except the basic carrying cost of the unit.

A brief review of the cases on this topic is instructive.

In Re Grandby Investments Ltd. et al. and Wright et al. (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 341, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 313, 20 R.P.R. 30 sub nom. Re Tridel Construction Ltd. and Wright, Callaghan J. was dealing with a clause in an agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium unit which provided as follows [p. 342 O.R., p. 314 D.L.R.]:

"Dishwasher is included in the purchase price, Purchaser agrees to waiver interest on all monies held by the vendor until the actual closing after registration."

The court held that the waiver of interest contravened the Act and was illegal. It is to be noted that the contract between the parties in that case was prior to the 1980 amendment.

In Berman et al. v. Karleton Co. Ltd. (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 176, 28 C.P.C. 168, 24 R.P.R. 8, there was a provision in the agreement of purchase and sale that the basic price would be increased by an amount equal to the interest payable to the purchaser on money paid prior to closing. The purchasers executed this agreement with full knowledge of the provision in question but later applied for a declaration that the requirement of the additional payment was illegal. There, as here, the parties closed subject to the determination of the point by a court. Gray J. held as follows [at p. 184]:

The intent of the Act is clearly that the purchaser be paid interest on money paid to the vendor on account of purchase price during the interim occupancy period before a registrable deed or transfer is delivered. The reason for doing so is to protect purchasers of proposed condominium units from abuses by vendors who delay in registering the declarations by providing an incentive to register quickly. The knowledge of the purchasers regarding what they were signing is irrelevant given the wording of s. 61 which prevents the parties from contracting out of the Act.

He concluded there had been a contravention of the Act and that the additional payment in question was illegal. In Re Small and Smuszkowicz (1982), 138 D.L.R. (3d) 766, Smith J. dealt with the following provision in a condominium agreement [p. 767]:

"3.06 In consideration of the Vendor not increasing the costs of the Unit by its costs in paying interest on the deposit as required by the Act, the Purchaser does hereby (but not irrevocably) assign to the Vendor all interest payable on the amount of the deposit and shall execute on the Closing Date such further assurances and documents to give effect to the foregoing; Provided that the purchaser may elect on closing to rescind the within assignment whereupon the Purchase Price shall be increased by an amount equal to $5,958.33 X the number of months in the period between the Occupancy Date and the Closing Date with adjustment being made for a portion of any month in this period."

The court held that the provision in question was illegal and void.

The effect of cl. 2(c) is to require the purchaser to pay, in addition to the amounts permitted by s. 51(6), an amount which depends on the length of time the purchaser is in possession and which is based on the purchase price. In my view this is a payment in respect of a "right or obligation" to "take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered" and contravenes the provision of s. 51(6). This is not a case of the vendor requiring additional money and the purchaser receiving matching additional services or facilities. The purchaser had paid a purchase price. If the vendor had been in a position to give a deed at that time the purchaser would have paid nothing more. She received nothing more by being required to wait five months for closing.

I appreciate that in this instance the purchaser was a sophisticated person who signed with full knowledge of the effect of the document she was signing. However, the statute is passed for the protection of all purchasers, not only those who are sophisticated or who have legal advice, and the provisions of s. 61 make it immaterial whether the purchaser knew the full effect of the document she was signing or not. The law did not permit her to contract out of the agreement even if she wished to do so.

Having said this I hold that the conduct of the purchaser is relevant to the issue of costs. The purchaser knew that she was agreeing to pay an amount in addition to $595,000. She apparently wanted the condominium unit in question and signed promising to make this payment but apparently hoping that the court would relieve her of the obligation she had undertaken in this regard. In these circumstances I do not feel that there should be any award of costs in her favour.

The application is accordingly allowed without costs and it is declared that cl. 2(c) of the agreement of purchase and sale is null and void and that moneys paid pursuant to this clause under protest are the property of Mary Elizabeth Lamb.

Application granted.

48 O.R. (2d) 313

ONTARIO SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO MASTER'S CHAMBERS MASTER (SANDLER) 29TH OCTOBER 1984.

APPLICATION by some of the defendants for an order permitting them to examine certain persons for discovery.

G. M. Farrell, for applicants, 377806 Ontario Limited, Gary Matthew Andrew Sorichetti, William James Leask and Russell Sorichetti.

Michael W. Kerr, for defendants, Priene Limited, Gregory P. King and Kenneth Villiers.

Mary G. Critelli, for respondents.

MASTER (SANDLER):-- This is a motion whereby certain of the defendants seek to apply Rule 333 of the Rules of Practice so as to enable them to examine for discovery a large number of persons for whose immediate benefit they say this action is brought. The other defendants were served with these applications but did not appear.

Rule 333(1) [see now rule 31.03(2), (3)] reads as follows:

333(1) Where an action is prosecuted or defended for the immediate benefit of a person or a corporation, such person or any officer or servant of such corporation may without order be examined for discovery.

The question to be decided is whether some or all of the persons listed in the two notices of motion are persons for whose immediate benefit the action is being brought. It is to be noted that this rule does not confer a discretion on the court. Rather, once it is shown that the action is prosecuted or defended for the immediate benefit of a person or corporation, then such person or a representative of the corporation may be examined, as of right, without order: Ontario Securities Com'n v. Trustee of Re-Mor Investments Management Corp. (1982), 26 C.P.C. 202. Thus the question before me on this motion is whether, as a matter of right, the defendants have the right to examine the persons who are listed in the two notices of motion, and the degree of knowledge or lack of knowledge of the various persons put forward to be examined by the plaintiff is quite irrelevant for the purposes of this particular motion.

Under our rules of civil procedure, examination for discovery is the most important pre-trial procedure available to a litigant to ensure a fair trial by enabling him to know the case he has to meet and to procure admissions to facilitate his own case or destroy his opponent's case. Under Rule 326 [see now rule 31.03(1)-(3)], a party may be orally examined by the opposite party. It sometimes happens however that the "party" who may be examined under Rule 326 has very little direct knowledge of the issues in the action because the party is only a nominal party and the action is really being brought or defended for the immediate benefit of some other person. In this circumstance, in order to achieve procedural fairness and offer the opposite party an examination for discovery which will meet the above-noted goals, Rule 333 allows the opposite party to examine such person. I can see nothing in the rules which would prevent an opposite party from examining both the "party to an action" under Rule 326 and the person benefiting from the action under Rule 333. (Indeed, this is expressly allowed by rule 31.03(8) of the new Rules of Civil Procedure soon to be operative in this province.)

In the present action, the named plaintiffs are a condominium corporation and two individual unit owners in the condominium building, A. Ligetti and I. Himel, who sue "on behalf of themselves and all of the other unit owners in" the condominium corporation.

The defendants are the corporate developers and builders of the condominium building and some of their directors. Paragraph 13 of the statement of claim alleges that "[t]he units and common elements have not been constructed in accordance with the" terms, warranties and representations of the purchase and sale agreements between the defendants and the unit holders who originally bought the units. Paragraph 13 then particularizes the alleged defects in 85 subparagraphs. Many of the alleged defects in these subparagraphs concern only the common elements but some also concern the individual units themselves (14 out of 85). These latter are as follows: Defective fans (aa) Scratched bathtubs (bb) Badly installed plumbing (cc) and (ggg) Noisy air conditioners (dd) Improperly installed thermostats (ee) Doors to units are of inferior quality (ff) Inferior quality toilets (gg) Defective heating units (hh) and (bbbb) Inadequate ducting of kitchen fans (ii) Inferior finishing of units (jj) Leaking windows and doors (aaaa) and (cccc)

There are other allegations of breach of fiduciary duty and conspiracy, and the plaintiffs claim $10,000,000 in damages.

The defendants seek an order allowing them to examine various categories of persons as follows:

(i) eight individuals who were the first purchasers of these units in 1978 and 1979. (It is not absolutely clear from the material that all of these persons are still unit holders.)

(ii) five other individuals, of whom three are still unit holders, 1 is not and 1 perhaps is not, who made up the "Purchaser's Committee" referred to in the statements of defence.

(iii) All present individual unit holders who say that there are deficiencies in their units.

(iv) All persons, whether presently unit holders or not, who purchased suites from the defendants and who say that representations or misrepresentations were made to them upon which they relied.

(v) All persons who are currently unit holders.

I note that there is an overlap between categories (i) and (iv). I also note that Ligeti and Himel, who are being put forward to be examined, fall within category (v) and possibly (iii). One Thomas Lutton is agreed upon by the parties as the proper officer to be examined on behalf of the plaintiff, the condominium corporation.

The total number of persons sought to be examined by the defendants will exceed 20 persons and might even reach as high as 50 to 80 persons.

Critical to these applications are s. 13 and parts of s. 14 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, which read as follows:

13(1) The corporation may own, acquire, encumber and dispose of real and personal property for the use and enjoyment of the property.

(2) The owners share the assets of the corporation in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests in accordance with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

14(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such actions brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

(2) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may sue on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner with respect to the common elements and any units, notwithstanding that the corporation was not a party to the contract in respect of which the action is brought, and the legal and court costs in an action brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

(4) Any judgment for payment in favour of the corporation in an action brought on its own behalf is an asset of the corporation.

Under s. 14, the corporation may sue "on its own behalf" and it may also sue "on behalf of any owner". This section then goes on to specify three quite different classes of property, namely, the "common elements", "the assets of the corporation", and the "individual units". Of these three classes of property, only the first two belong to the corporation whereas the individual units belong to each individual unit holder. In my view, under s. 14, the corporation may sue on its own behalf for damage to its property, that is, the common elements and other corporation assets, and the individual unit holders cannot sue for this damage. However, for damage to the individual units, the action can be brought by the appropriate unit holder or holders concerned, themselves, or by the corporation "on behalf of any owner". In this latter type of action, the individual holders need not be named in the style of cause but it is still their action, and this is made clear by the concluding words of s. 14(1), which imposes an obligation to pay legal and court costs directly upon the owner or owners on whose behalf the action is commenced in respect of damage to their individual units, albeit in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

Further, s. 14(4) makes an implied distinction between "any judgment for payment in favour of the corporation in an action brought on its own behalf" (my emphasis), and any judgment for payment in favour of the corporation in an action brought on behalf of any unit owner. Only the former type of judgment is an asset of the corporation. It follows that the latter type of judgment is not, but rather is an asset of the unit owner.

Thus, each particular action must be looked at to see if the condominium corporation is suing for damages to the common elements or to the individual units or both, and if an action for damages is brought by the condominium corporation as plaintiff, in whole or in part, in respect of damage to one or more of the individual units, then such an action is, by the very wording of s. 14(1), brought "on behalf of" an owner. It follows that such an action is prosecuted, at least in part, "for the immediate benefit of" the unit holder(s) and the defendant(s) can examine the unit holder(s) under Rule 333 in addition to examining a representative of the nominal plaintiff, the condominium corporation.

Numerous authorities were cited to me in argument including Trusts & Guarantee Co. v. Smith (1915), 33 O.L.R. 155, 21 D.L.R. 711; Canadian Credit Men's Trust Ass'n v. Morton et al., [1925] 1 W.W.R. 772 (Alta.); Regalcrest Builders Inc. v. Somjan Investments Ltd. et al. (1978), 6 C.P.C. 177; reversed on appeal 7 C.P.C. 168n; Simpsons-Sears Ltd. v. Leeds Development Ltd. (1981), 127 D.L.R. (3d) 54, 33 A.R. 286, 24 C.P.C. 27 (Alta.); and Ontario Securities Com'n v. Trustee of Re-Mor Investments Management Corp., supra. I have also considered Consumer's Glass Co. Ltd. et al. v. Farrell Lines Inc. et al. (1982), 39 O.R. (2d) 696, 30 C.P.C. 293.

I found the most helpful case on this problem to be Owners, Strata Plan No. VR368 v. Marathon Realty Co. Ltd. et al.; Skalbania Ltd. et al., Third Parties (1982), 141 D.L.R. (3d) 540, 41 B.C.L.R. 155, 32 C.P.C. 63. This case is almost identical to the one before me. The British Columbia rule, Rule 27(8), is virtually the same as our Rule 333. On the facts of that case, only the condominium corporation was a plaintiff, having launched the action on its own behalf and on behalf of the owners of the 76 units or "lots". The defendant sought to examine 16 of the owners for discovery. There were numerous claims made against a number of defendants and some of these claims were made directly by the plaintiff on its own behalf and others on behalf of the owners. While it is true, as was pointed out by Seaton J.A., that the British Columbia answer to the problem of presenting condominium claims, as reflected in the British Columbia Condominium Act is different than the Ontario answer, as reflected in the Ontario Condominium Act, this does not lead to the conclusion that the result of such a motion will be different in the two provinces.

Counsel for the plaintiffs argue that the claim in the present action before me is not on behalf of any unnamed owner but only on behalf of the corporation and the two named plaintiffs, and that by s. 14(4), any judgment can be an asset only of the corporation and named plaintiffs. A very similar argument was made by the plaintiff's counsel in the Marathon Realty case and this argument was rejected by Seaton J.A., at p. 544 D.L.R., p. 68 C.P.C., in the following words:

Counsel for the respondent says that the fruits of an action on behalf of some only of the owners will be for the benefit of all owners. We were not directed to any section of the Act that makes that so. It seems to be inconsistent with the words "on behalf of". If you sue on behalf of someone, it seems to me, you sue for his benefit not your own. If the intention had been to assign the benefit of the action to the corporation or the owners as a whole, different language than "on behalf of" would have been employed. In this legislation "on behalf of" an owner means "for benefit of" that owner. Other legislation has been interpreted in this way: see Re Millar (1976), 71 D.L.R. (3d) 120 at p. 128, 12 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 440, and Lewis v. Nicholson (1852), 18 Q.B. 503, 118 E.R. 190.

This action on behalf of these owners is, at least in part, an action for the benefit of the individual owners: the immediate benefit of the owners. It follows, in my view, that the appellant is entitled to examine the individual owners on whose behalf the corporation is suing. I do not find that result offensive.

It is those individual owners, who entered into their individual contracts, whose individual cause of action is being put forward. Only through discovering those individuals can the appellant properly defend itself.

I think that language and that result are equally applicable to the case before me.

I observe that in the judgment of Craig J.A., there is an observation at p. 69 [C.P.C.] that there is a section in the Ontario Act, being s. 9(18), which makes all the assets the assets of the corporation. The editors of Carswell's Practice Cases inserted a reference to the "[Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84]" which is quite wrong. There was no such reference in the original judgment as the report at 141 D.L.R. (3d) 540 at p. 545 makes clear. It seems clear to me that Craig J.A. was referring to the Ontario Condominium Act and not the Corporations Act. the provision to which Craig J.A. makes reference, namely, s. 9(18), which provides that a judgment in favour of the corporation is an asset of the corporation, was contained in the statute up until 1978 but in that year, the entire statute was substantially altered and in the present version of the Act, to be found in R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, there is no equivalent of s. 9(18). Section 14(4), above quoted, and quite differently worded, is the successor to old s. 9(18). There is no s. 9(18) at all in R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and I can only assume that Craig J.A. was erroneously referred to the 1970 version of the statute.

I therefore conclude that this particular action is being brought, in part, for the immediate benefit of the unit holders whose units are referred to in para. 13(aa), (bb), (cc), (dd), (ee), (ff), (gg), (hh), (ii), (jj), (qqq), (aaaa), (bbbb) and (cccc) of the statement of claim, and the persons who own those units can be examined touching the matters in issue relating to such claims.

It is unclear on the existing material what the actual names of those unit holders are, and if the plaintiffs will not disclose the names voluntarily, this issue can be explored on the discovery of the representative of the plaintiff corporation and the appropriate motion brought. For the sake of clarity, I repeat that the defendant applicants are entitled to examine Thomas Lutton as a representative of the plaintiff condominium corporation, A. Ligeti and I. Himel as the named individual plaintiffs, and all other present unit holders on whose behalf the plaintiff corporation is suing for the damage to the individual units as alleged in the above-quoted portions of para. 13 of the statement of claim, with the examination of such unit holders being restricted to matters touching in is sue the claims contained in the said subparagraphs of para. 13. The balance of the application is dismissed.

Costs of this application in the cause. Order accordingly.

Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Ltd. v. Don-Com Venture Capital Corp.

ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF PEEL WEST CO. CT. J. 8TH DECEMBER 1983.

ACTION for a declaration that the plaintiff holds a valid proxy from the defendant to vote at meetings of a condominium corporation and for ancillary relief.

H. G. Ker, Q.C., for plaintiff.

J. Bailey, for defendant.

WEST CO. CT. J.:-- In this action the plaintiff seeks a declaration that a proxy which it holds from the defendant is a valid and binding proxy and that the voting rights of the defendant to vote at meetings of owners of a condominium corporation have been validly assigned to it. In addition, it seeks an injunction restraining the defendant from exercising its voting rights at meetings of owners.

The plaintiff erected an apartment complex in the City of Mississauga and created a condominium corporation known as Peel Condominium No. 199 by filing a declaration and description in the land registry office. In due course, the plaintiff agreed to sell Unit No. 14, Level 5, within the complex to one C. S. Flenniken. As part of the consideration for the purchase of the unit the purchaser agreed to irrevocably grant to the plaintiff his right to vote at all meetings of owners of the condominium corporation and to deliver on closing a proxy to this effect. The agreement of purchase and sale was later assigned by Flenniken to Irving Ingber. The agreement between Flenniken and Ingber contained the following representation:

The Vendor represents and warrants to the Purchaser that to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, there are no special assessments contemplated by the Condominium Corporation, the voting rights have been assigned.

Title to the unit was transferred by the plaintiff to Ingber and his wife. In the transfer, the plaintiff reserved to itself the right of the purchasers and their successors to vote at all meetings of owners "on any matter required under the Condominium Act and its successors". On closing the purchasers executed and delivered a proxy appointing the plaintiff or its nominee as their proxy to vote at all such meetings. The proxy was expressed to be irrevocable without the prior written consent of the plaintiff. The purchasers also undertook to obtain a similar proxy from any successor in title.

The unit was subsequently sold by the Ingbers to the defendant. The agreement of purchase and sale between the Ingbers and the defendant also contained a representation that the voting rights had been assigned. On closing the defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff a proxy in identical terms to that given by the Ingbers to the plaintiff. Later the defendant sought to revoke this proxy and to assert its own rights at meetings of owners. The plaintiff refused to give its consent to the revocation of the proxy and commenced this action. The writ and statement of claim were served and an appearance was entered on behalf of the defendant. The plaintiff, with the concurrence of the defendant, brought a motion for judgment pursuant to Rules 63 and 64. The parties agreed on a statement of facts to be used on this motion.

The motion could not properly be brought under Rule 63 as there was a serious question of law to be argued: see Canadian Pest Control Operators Ass'n v. Brennan, [1951] O.W.N. 838, 15 C.P.R. 96, 12 Fox Pat. C. 47. In addition, Rule 63 can be resorted to only if there are admissions of fact in the pleadings or in the examination of a party. It was apparent on the hearing of the motion that both parties wished the matter in issue to be finally adjudicated upon. It therefore appeared more appropriate that the matter be dealt with as the hearing of argument on points of law pursuant to Rule 124 which could result in the granting of judgment pursuant to Rule 125. Both counsel agreed to proceed on this basis. The points of law can be adapted from the first two items of the prayer for relief in the plaintiff's statement of claim.

1. Is a proxy granted by an owner of a unit within a condominium corporation and expressed to be irrevocable without the prior written consent of the holder of the proxy a valid proxy under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84?
2. If the first question is answered in the negative, does the reservation by the plaintiff of the voting rights of the purchaser constitute a valid representation of such voting rights?

Section 14(1)(i) of the County Courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 100, as amended by 1981, c. 24, s. 1(9), provides that the court has jurisdiction in actions for equitable relief where the subject-matter involved does not exceed in value or amount $15,000. The Court of Appeal has held in Queensway Iron Works Ltd. v. Barlin Construction Ltd. et al. (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 586, 113 D.L.R. (3d) 748, 17 C.P.C. 213, that the court also has jurisdiction where the value does exceed the monetary limit if the defendant does not dispute jurisdiction. The effect of this judgment has not been diminished by a series of subsequent decisions of the Court of Appeal restricting the jurisdiction of this court in matters commenced by originating notice of motion. In this matter the action was begun by writ of summons.

The concept of exclusive ownership of defined space accompanied by shared ownership of common elements is of relatively recent origin. In Ontario the legal basis of this concept is found within the Condominium Act. Counsel for both parties acknowledged that the Act is a complete code of the rights and obligations of the condominium corporation and of the owners of units within it.

Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the granting of an irrevocable proxy is a matter of contract between the parties. It was a condition of the sale of the unit to the predecessor of the defendant that the voting rights should be reserved to the landlord and this condition was reinforced by the granting of the proxy which was expressed to be irrevocable without the plaintiff's consent. It was also contended that the subsequent sale to the defendant was subject to the same reservation and to the granting by the defendant to the plaintiff of its proxy in the same form.

On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the reservation of the voting rights and the insistence of the plaintiff upon a proxy in irrevocable form had the effect of vitiating the expressed purpose of the Legislature in enacting the Condominium Act and in providing for voting rights for owners within the condominium corporation. It was contended as a result that both the reservation and the proxy were void as being contrary to public policy.

The Act provides for voting by proxy at meetings of owners. Section 18(3) provides that a quorum for the transaction of business at a meeting of owners is those owners present in person or represented by proxy owning 33 1/3% of the units. Section 22(3) provides that an instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointer or his attorney and may be either general or for a particular meeting. Section 22(4) provides that a proxy need not be an owner. The Act is silent as to whether a proxy can be irrevocable.

1. Is an irrevocable proxy a valid proxy under the Condominium Act?

The answer to this question involves a consideration of what a proxy is. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines a proxy as:

A writing authorizing a person to vote instead of another.

The person to whom a proxy is given is also called a proxy and such person is defined in Black's Law Dictionary as:

Proxy. (Contracted from procuracy.) A person who is substituted or deputed by another to represent him and act for him, particularly in some meeting or public body. An agent representing and acting for principal. Also the instrument containing the appointment of such person.

This definition also finds support in two English cases. In Re English, Scottish, & Australian Chartered Bank, [1893] 3 Ch. 385, "proxy" is defined as meaning: "some agent properly appointed", and also as: "a lawfully constituted agent".

In Cousins v. Int'l Brick Co., Ltd., [1931] 2 Ch. 90 at p. 95, Luxmoore J. said:

The proxy is merely the agent of the shareholder who appoints him. As between himself and the proxy he can determine the agency, and the agent is not entitled to vote if the agency is in fact determined. The shareholder, as between himself and the company, has the option of voting in person or by proxy. If he votes in person quite obviously he cannot also vote by proxy. As between himself and the company if he allows the proxy to vote, and the company accepts that vote, he cannot afterwards claim to vote personally.

As a result Luxmoore J. held that while the formalities of the charter of a company prevented a shareholder from revoking a proxy prior to a meeting they did not also prevent him from attending the meeting.

On appeal, in the same case at p. 102, Lawrence L.J. said:

Every proxy is subject to an implied condition that it should only be used if the shareholder is unable or finds it inconvenient to attend the meeting. The proxy is merely the agent of the shareholder and as between himself and his principal is not entitled to act contrary to the instructions of the latter.

On the basis of these authorities and on the premise that the appointment of a proxy is a matter of agency and that the proxy must do the principal's bidding, I seriously question whether there can be such a thing in law as an irrevocable proxy. There is some Canadian authority to this effect in Nadeau v. Nadeau & Nadeau Ltd. (1972), 6 N.B.R. (2d) 512. In that case the New Brunswick Supreme Court Queen's Bench Division dealt with a dispute between majority and minority shareholders. The minority shareholders held proxies from the majority shareholders. The company passed a by-law providing that any proxy given in respect of a share certificate should be "irrevocable for the period specified in the proxy". It was contended on behalf of the minority shareholders that the proxy had been given as a condition of a loan guarantee and that until the loan was repaid the proxy was irrevocable on the part of the majority shareholders.

Dickson J. considered a number of provisions of the New Brunswick Companies Act and concluded at p. 531:

It is inconceivable that it should ever have been the Province's intention, as now suggested by Mr. Ouellette, to deprive the Nadeau family members of their voting privileges.

He continued at p. 532:

Deprived of their voting rights, control of the company could be maintained by others in such a way, i.e., by failure to relieve the Province of its guarantee or by failure to pay dividends, that control of the company would never revert to the majority holders of the common stock. Even if, as contended by Ouellette, the preferred shares acquired by the plaintiff should be held in escrow as non-voting shares, the company could be controlled indefinitely by the holders of a minority of the total issued shares simply by failure to discharge down to the last dollar the guaranteed indebtedness.

As a result, the by-law purporting to make proxies irrevocable was declared to be null and void and voting proxies previously given were declared to be of no further effect.

The court in this matter, however, is not dealing with the issue at large. It is concerned solely with whether the proxy given to the plaintiff by the defendant is enforceable. The judgment in Re Goldhar et al. and D'Aragon Mines Ltd. (1977), 15 O.R. (2d) 80, 75 D.L.R. (3d) 16, 1 B.L.R. 204, is helpful in dealing with this issue. In that matter shareholders of a corporation requisitioned the directors to call a shareholders' meeting pursuant to s. 109(1) of the Business Corporations Act. The purpose of the meeting was to consider a resolution removing directors from office and electing new directors in their stead. The directors called the meeting and circulated a form of proxy to the shareholders. The form of proxy provided for the appointment of the president or a director of the corporation but also provided that a shareholder could nominate a proxy of his or her own choice. The form of proxy contained express provision for a shareholder to instruct the proxy named to vote for or against the resolution removing the directors but it contained no similar form of instruction with respect to the election of new directors. The form further provided that the proxy conferred discretionary authority and if the company nominee were named as proxy he would vote for the re-election of the existing directors.

The shareholders were free to name a proxy of their own choice. Notwithstanding this choice, R. E. Holland J. held the form was unfair and did not permit the shareholders to exercise their choice in connection with the transaction of business under s. 109(3) of the Business Corporations Act. As a result he granted a declaration that the proxy form was null and void.

There is a parallel between the present case and Goldhar. Section 26(1) of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

26(1) The board elected at a time when the declarant owns a majority of the units shall, not more than twenty-one days after the declarant ceases to be the registered owner of a majority of the units, call a meeting of the owners to elect a new board, and such meeting shall be held within twenty-one days after the calling of the meeting.

Both this section and s. 109(1) of the Business Corporations Act contemplate the unfettered right of the owner or shareholder to vote at meetings of owners or shareholders. In Goldhar this right was interfered with and the form of proxy was set aside. The form of proxy used in this case would completely nullify the right of the owners to have a new board of directors elected when the declarant no longer retains a majority of the units.

While that situation has not yet arisen the principles to be applied remain constant. As the basis of a proxy is one of agency the agent (in this case the plaintiff) must exercise that right as directed by the principal (in this case the defendant). The proxy granted to the plaintiff in this case might be valid in so far as it permits the plaintiff to exercise the voting rights of the defendant at a meeting of owners if the defendant is not otherwise represented at the meeting. If, however, the defendant chooses to attend the meeting and be represented by an officer or director the right of the plaintiff to act as its proxy is superseded. The proxy given to the plaintiff by the defendant and expressed to be irrevocable without the consent of the plaintiff is not enforceable against the defendant. The first question of law must therefore also be answered in the negative.

2. Is the reservation by the plaintiff of the voting rights of the purchaser a valid reservation?

The Act makes clear that ownership of a unit cannot be separated from ownership in the common elements. Section 7(5) of the Act reads as follows:

7(5) The ownership of a unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interest, and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a unit from a common interest is void.

While s. 48 provides that a mortgagee may exercise the voting rights of an owner it may do so only if it is so provided in the mortgage and presumably then only in the event of default. In that event the mortgagee would also be the legal owner of the unit so that no separation of interest would occur. The interest of owners in the common elements of the corporation can only be exercised through voting at meetings of owners. The reservation by the plaintiff in the transfer of title of the voting rights of the owners effectively frustrates the exercise of this right. The representations in the two agreements for sale that the voting rights had been assigned while not made by the plaintiff were certainly induced by the plaintiff and the plaintiff relied on them in its pleadings and in its submissions on this motion. These representations cast the nature of the condition imposed by the plaintiff on its purchasers in its true light. While in form the plaintiff may hold a proxy in substance it has reserved the voting rights. In doing so, it has attempted to separate the voting rights in respect of the common elements from the property rights of the owners contrary to s. 7(5) of the Act. As a result the second question of law must also be answered in the negative.

Having answered both questions of law contrary to the position of the plaintiff, it follows that the action must be dismissed. In keeping with the judgment in Goldhar the appropriate disposition would appear to be a declaration that the purported irrevocable proxy is null and void, and that the reservation of voting rights is invalid. As the defendant did not counterclaim for such a declaration, however, no order can issue in those terms. The defendant is entitled to its costs against the plaintiff.

Action dismissed.

Re Gossner and Regional Assessment Commissioner et al.

42 O.R. (2d) 119 148 D.L.R. (3d) 643

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE DIVISIONAL COURT GRIFFITHS, SAUNDERS AND TRAINOR JJ. 13TH JUNE 1983.

Carl B. Davis, for appellant, Regional Assessment Commissioner.

Andrew A. Weretelnik for appellant, Municipal Clerk of the City of Toronto.

I. A. Blue, for respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

SAUNDERS J.:-- This is an appeal from the determination of a question by a judge of the county court pursuant to s. 50(1) of the Assessment Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 31.

The question concerns the interpretation of s. 65(3) of that statute. Section 65 reads as follows:

65(1) The Assessment Review Board, Ontario Municipal Board or any court, in determining the value at which any real property shall be assessed in any complaint, appeal, proceeding or action, shall have reference to the value at which similar real property in the vicinity is assessed, and the amount of any assessment of real property shall not be altered unless the Assessment Review Board, Ontario Municipal Board or court is satisfied that the assessment is inequitable with respect to the assessment of similar real property in the vicinity, and in that event the assessment of the real property shall not be altered to any greater extent than is necessary to make the assessment equitable with the assessment of such similar real property.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1) and of section 63, where a residential assessment is made with respect to a unit, as defined in the Condominium Act, a proposed unit, as defined in that Act, or a unit or suite in the building of a co-operative housing corporation, the value at which such unit, proposed unit or suite shall be assessed shall be based on the same proportion of the market value thereof as that at which owner-occupied single-family residences in the vicinity are assessed.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2), where a unit or proposed unit within the meaning of the Condominium Act was, before it became such unit or proposed unit, part of a building the suites or apartments in which were rented to a tenant or tenants for residential accommodation, subsection (2) ceases to apply to such unit or proposed unit until it is sold to an individual or individuals who acquire and occupy it as his or their residence or that of members of his or their families, and until so sold and occupied such unit or proposed unit shall be assessed at the level of assessment of similar rental property in the vicinity to which subsection (2) is not applicable.

A brief review of the factual background may assist in understanding the problem of interpretation. Number 33 Harbour Square in Toronto was completed in 1975 and consisted of 539 units on 35 floors. All of the units were offered for rent and at least 156 were rented by February, 1976. No other use was made of the units. The building was converted to a condominium by York Condominium Plan 288, registered in November, 1976. The applicant is the owner of three units in the condominium but has only resided in one of them.

Section 65(1) was enacted in 1971; s. 65(2) in 1975; and s. 65(3) in 1981. The evidence is that the level of assessment for the units is lower if based on the market value of owner-occupied single-family residences rather than on the market value of similar rental property.

The question which the learned judge was asked to consider was [18 M.P.L.R. 205 at p. 216]:

Does subsection 65(3) of the Assessment Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 31, as amended, "the Act", apply to a condominium unit which is in a building in which not all of the suites or apartments were rented prior to the building being converted to a condominium complex?

The learned judge answered the question in the negative and gave the following reasons [at pp. 216-7]:

This question calls for an interpretation of the words "part of a building the suites or apartments in which were rented to a tenant or tenants for residential accommodation" as they now appear in s. 65(3) and requires me to determine whether the inclusion of the word "the" implies that all of the suites or apartments must have been previously rented in order for the condition of the subsection to be met. This is how counsel for the applicant [the respondent in this court] urged me to interpret it.

Counsel for the applicant submitted that this provision, being part of a taxing statute, should be construed strictly, and that it should be given its literal meaning whether or not such an interpretation accurately reflects any imputed intention of the Legislature.

Counsel for the respondents [the appellants in this court] urged me to find that the words were intended to be referable to the rental character of an apartment building and that there is no requirement that all of the suites or apartments had to be previously rented in order for a building to acquire such a character. In their submissions the words used do not require any specific portion of the apartments to have been rented.

I agree that the words may well have been intended to refer to the character of an apartment building but that is not how the provision was drafted. Given their plain literal meaning, the words clearly require that all of the suites or apartments must have been previously rented in order for the subsection to apply. If the word "the" were not included, it would be arguable that the condition requires that only some suites or apartments have been rented. But if the requirement is "some" rather than "all", how many is "some"? The draftsman of this provision, in my respectful opinion, did not come to grips with the problem that he was dealing with. Having failed to set out any criteria by which it could be determined whether or not an apartment building had the character of a rental building, he then set out an objective standard by which it could readily be determined whether or not a particular building met the condition prescribed; that is, if all of the suites or apartments were previously rented, s. 65(3) would apply.

I agree with the applicant's submission as to how this provision ought to be interpreted.

(The emphasis is that of the learned judge.)

With respect, I am of the opinion that there is another interpretation that may reasonably be given to the words of the subsection. It seems to me that the plain meaning of the words in the section might describe the building in question. If a passing stranger were to ask with reference to 33 Harbour Square, "Before it became a condominium, was that a building in which the suites or apartments were rented to a tenant or tenants for residential purposes?" the answer might very well be "yes" rather than "no". The latter answer would at least require an explanation that it was given because not all of the suites or apartments had been rented.

The Assessment Act is a taxing statute. Both the applicant and the respondents used this circumstance to support their respective interpretations. Counsel for the applicant contended that any doubt as to the meaning should be resolved in favour of the applicant taxpayer. On the other hand, counsel for the respondents contended that a different approach should be taken as s. 65(2) and (3) together formed an exception to the general rule in s. 65(1) and thus a benefit to a taxpayer.

Dealing first with the argument of the respondents: In Re Extencicare Ltd. and Borough of North York et al. (1979), 27 O.R. (2d) 9, 105 D.L.R. (3d) 127, 9 M.P.L.R. 293, it was said that a person claiming the benefit of a provision exempting him from assessment for taxation must bring himself squarely within the exonerating clause to avoid throwing an additional burden on other taxpayers. In that case, the court was considering an exemption from business assessment. In the case we are considering, there were three distinct legislative actions. In 1971, by s. 65(1), it was provided, in effect, that tribunals should not alter assessments unless they were found inequitable with respect to similar real property in the vicinity. In 1975, by s. 65(2), a base for assessing condominiums was established. In 1981, by s. 65(3), certain condominium units were excepted from that base and it was provided that those units were to be assessed on a different base. Subsection (3) therefore imposes a new base on certain units rather than providing an exception. To apply the rule in Extencicare would impose an obligation on a taxpayer to bring himself outside what is in essence a taxing section. In my opinion, the principle of Extencicare does not extend that far. Subsection (3) should not, in my opinion, be construed as if it were a benefit or exemption to a taxing provision.

The respondent contends that because s. 65(3) is in a taxing statute, any doubt as to its meaning should be resolved in favour of the taxpayer. This principle was enunciated by Fitzgibbon L.J. in Re Finance Act, 1894; Re Estate Duty on Property Passing on Death of Rev. George Studdert, [1900] 2 I.R. 400 at p. 410, as follows:

If it be doubtful or difficult of interpretation, which I do not think it is, the Finance Act is subject to the rule that no tax can be imposed except by words which are clear, and the benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject.

That principle was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Crabbs, [1934] S.C.R. 523 at p. 526, [1934] 4 D.L.R. 324 at p. 327.

It has often been said that a tax must be imposed in clear and unambiguous language.

In R. v. Budget Car Rentals (Toronto) Ltd. (1981), 31 O.R. (2d) 161, 121 D.L.R. (3d) 111, 57 C.C.C. (2d) 201, the Court of Appeal was considering the interpretation of a municipal by-law which imposed a penalty on the respondent. The judgment of the court was given by the Chief Justice and, as will be seen from the paragraph that I am about to quote, his remarks apply to the interpretation of taxing statutes. At pp. 167-8 O.R., pp. 117-8 D.L.R., he said:

In the course of argument, counsel for the respondent has directed us to a number of principles governing the construction and interpretation of statutes which, he argued, supported his contention that the legislation in question ought not to be construed as creating an offence by the owner of a vehicle for which, upon proof that the vehicle has been parked in contravention of the by-law made pursuant to the legislation, the owner will be answerable subject, of course, to the statutory defence available to him.

Among these principles is the often-quoted principle that a penal statute must be construed "strictly". That this is so is surely beyond dispute, but it is important that it should be clear what the principle really means, and what it does not mean. What it does mean is that where a person is charged with an offence created by a statute, the conduct of that person which gives rise to the charge, or the conduct of someone for which that person may be held answerable, must be such as can be clearly and unmistakably demonstrated to fall within the kind of conduct which is proscribed by the statute. What the principle does not mean is that because a statute is "penal" or contains provisions to which penal consequences for breaches are attached, the meaning that is to be given to language used in the statute is to be determined in accordance with a rule of construction that is somehow "stricter" than, or is to be applied more stringently than, the ordinary rules which apply to determine the meaning to be given to language used in statutes.

A person who is charged with, or sought to be made answerable for, conduct to which penal consequences are attached by a statute is, therefore, entitled to insist that the impugned conduct be shown to the required degree of certainty to be conduct which, in fact and in law, renders him liable under the statute to be penalty prescribed therefor. In my view, however, he is not entitled to insist that, merely because the statute can, accordingly, be described as penal, its true meaning and intent must be ascertained by applying to it different (i.e., "stricter") principles of construction and interpretation than those which govern the construction and interpretation of statutes generally.

At one time, as remarked by E. A. Driedger in his recent work entitled The Construction of Statutes (1974), p. 148, statutes were regarded as falling into one of two broad classes, "penal" and "remedial". On this basis penal statutes (which were taken to include not only statutes imposing penalties for violations, but also revenue statutes and statutes interfering with the liberty or property of the subject) were to be construed strictly, and remedial statutes were to be construed liberally. Against this background the language used in s. 10 of the Interpretation Act of Ontario and in s. 11 of the Interpretation Act of Canada, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-23, as amended, deeming every Act or enactment to be remedial, takes on a special and obvious significance.

I think it is worth repeating here the words of Lord Russell in Attorney-General v. Carlton Bank, [1899] 2 Q.B. 158 at p. 164:

"I see no reason why special canons of construction should be applied to any Act of Parliament, and I know of no authority for saying that a taxing Act is to be construed differently from any other Act. The duty of the Court is, in my opinion, in all cases the same, whether the Act to be construed relates to taxation or to any other subject, namely, to give effect to the intention of the Legislature as that intention is to be gathered from the language employed having regard to the context in connection with which it is employed."

Where the Court is concerned with a penal statute, it has been said that the defendant in the proceedings will not be liable to a penalty if, upon one of two equally reasonable readings of the statute, the penalty is incurred, but on the other reading he is "let out". This has been expressed in another way by Wright J. in London County Council v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., Ltd., [1898] 1 Q.B. 106 at p. 109, where he stated his understanding of the rule to be that: "... where there is an enactment which may entail penal consequences, you ought not to do violence to its language in order to bring people within it ...". Again, as Driedger stated at p. 154:

"One might ask whether one ought ever 'to do violence' to language, but in any case, 'doing violence' would be placing an unreasonable construction on language, and, clearly, a reasonable construction that does not impose a penalty is preferred to an unreasonable construction that does."

The Chief Justice went on to consider two possible interpretations of the by-law; decided that they were not equally reasonable; and found the respondent subject to the penalty on the basis of the more reasonable interpretation.

I respectfully conclude that it is no longer correct to simply say that any ambiguity must be resolved in favour of a taxpayer. If there are two interpretations, the more reasonable one must prevail even if it imposes a tax. When there are two interpretations and one cannot be said to be the more reasonable than the other, the choice should then be resolved in favour of the taxpayer.

Section 10 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, and the "mischief rule" are not of assistance in dealing with this issue. Expressed in general terms, the intention of s. 65(3) would appear to be to deny assessment under s. 65(2) to certain condominium units which had been rented to tenants until such units have been sold to an owner-occupier. However, it is not clear from the language whether the subsection is directed not only to fully-rented buildings but also to buildings, such as 33 Harbour Square, which never were fully rented before they became a condominium. That is the very question which must be decided on this appeal and to apply the mischief rule would be to assume the answer to the question.

I confess that on a first reading the words of s. 65(3) seemed plain. After reading the reasons of the learned judge and hearing the argument on the appeal, I must conclude that there are two possible interpretations. The issue is whether they are equally reasonable. The interpretation given by the learned judge would lead to the result that if one of the 539 units had not been rented prior to conversion to a condominium, then s. 65(3) would not apply. Such a result approaches absurdity and facilitates avoidance of the rental tax base. The respondent contended that such a strict interpretation was not necessary and that the definite article "the" means "all or nearly all". With respect, that is not the question that was before the learned judge and is not what he found.

The adoption of the other interpretation would not lead towards absurdity. If all the units had been offered for rent but only one had been rented prior to conversion, the benefit of s. 65(2) would be available to an owner as soon as a unit was sold to and occupied by him.

While it is not conclusive of the issue, the adoption of the interpretation by the learned judge would create difficulties of administration. It would be necessary to determine before applying s. 65(3) if, in the history of the building, prior to its conversion to a condominium, any unit had never been rented.

In my opinion, the words in s. 65(3) without addition or explanation describe the building which is the subject-matter of this appeal as it was before it became a condominium. The interpretation advocated by the respondents is more reasonable and convenient and there is no injustice in adopting it. In my opinion, the learned judge should have answered the question in the affirmative. The appeal is, accordingly, allowed.

In the circumstances, there should be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

York Condominium Corp. No. 46 v. Medhurst, Hogg & Associates Ltd. et al.

(1982), 39 O.R. (2d) 389

ONTARIO High Court of Justice Gray J. September 13, 1982.

* An appeal from the following decision of Gray J. to the Ontario Court of Appeal (Jessup, Houlden and Zuber JJ.A.) was dismissed June 16, 1983. See (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 800.

Application to dismiss an action for failure to observe a statutory notice requirement.

W.G. Horton, for applicants. C. Sefton, for respondent.

Gray J. (orally): This application was argued in conjunction with a similar application in No. 40622/79 York Condominium Corporation No. 46 v. Medhurst, Hogg & Associates Limited.

In the application the applicant seeks an order dismissing the action on the grounds that notice of the action was not given to owners and mortgagees prior to institution of the action pursuant to s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84, as amended [now R.S.O. 1980, c. 84], or, in the alternative staying the action until such time as notice has been given to owners and mortgagees pursuant to s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act.

No statement of claim has been filed and no appearance has been entered by the applicant but I am given to understand that arrangements made between the applicant's counsel and the respondent's prior counsel were such that the matter could proceed before me in any event.

The facts in summary would appear to be as follows. The condominium was registered in 1972 and consists of 744 units. The first writ was issued July 5, 1979, in the other action and the writ in this action was issued apparently on July 27, 1979. It is common ground that the notices required by s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act were not given as that section requires. Section 14(1) of the Condominium Act reads as follows:

14(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such actions brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

Section 14(6) of the Condominium Act reads as follows:

14(6) Where an action is commenced on or after the first day of June, 1979, a judgment for the payment of money against the corporation is also a judgment against each owner at the time of judgment for a portion of the judgment determined by the proportions specified in the declaration for sharing the common interests.

Mr. Horton, on behalf of the applicants, traced the course of the condominium legislation in this province and at the outset, drew my attention to the fact that in his submission, s. 14 was the only thing in the Condominium Act that dealt with the right of the corporation itself to maintain an action.

My attention was drawn to the corporation's management function as set forth in s. 12(1) and to the fact that prior to 1978 the corporation had an unqualified right to sue with respect to the common elements. It was said that in 1978 the legislation was changed with the result that it is said that no longer is there an unqualified right in the corporation to sue.

In York Condominium Corp. No. 148 v. Singular Investments Ltd. (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 31, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 61, 2 R.P.R. 24 Mr. Justice Henry held that the condominium corporation had only the right to maintain an action in accordance with the provisions of the statute. He concluded that the corporation was a creature of the statute and that its powers can only be exercised in accordance therewith. A further submission is made that the corporation acts in a representative capacity under the new section and that it only bears what is said to be a nominal risk since the real risk is borne by the owners. The question I have to decide on this application is: what is the effect if the corporation institutes an action without giving the notice? Am I confronted with a nullity situation or merely an irregularity which is capable of cure?

My attention was directed to two decisions, neither of which dealt with the precise problem involved in this application. The first being Stanishewski et al. v. Tkachuk et al., [1955] O.R. 667 at 683, [1955] 4 D.L.R. 517 and Pacific Coast Coal Mines Ltd. et al. v. Arbuthnot et al., [1917] A.C. 607, 36 D.L.R. 564 at 569, [1917] 3 W.W.R. 762. The point involved from both of these decisions is that if certain statutory conditions are not fulfilled one is faced with a nullity situation rather than a mere irregularity.

The concluding part of the applicant's submission rests on the fact that there is no alternative so far as I am concerned but to dismiss the action without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff to bring a new action after due compliance with the provisions of s. 14, it being said that if such a course is not followed there is bound to be a situation whereby risk will be involved so far as the defendant is concerned if sued by certain owners or possible mortgagees.

Mrs. Sefton, on the respondent's behalf, reminded me of the care which must be taken by a judge sitting in motions court when confronted with an application to dismiss an action or stay it and she forcefully brought to my attention that the apparent purpose of s. 14 would be to benefit condominium owners and not persons who stand in the position of this applicant defendant.

Mrs. Sefton urged me to find that s. 14 evidenced only a procedural requirement and that the notice requirement, in her view, did not validate an action taken where notice was not given. She sought to distinguish between the two decisions aforesaid and that situation with which I am now confronted and she concluded in that regard on the note that we are faced with a different case where a so-called "stranger to the benefit" sought to attack the procedural requirement. I was urged to stay the action rather than dismiss if I was going to grant any relief to the applicant.

I am obliged to counsel for their assistance. I am troubled to a certain degree by reason of the fact that no other decisions apparently have been handed down touching the matter in issue. Giving the matter the best consideration I can, I have come to the conclusion that the risk itself is present and that if the legislature had intended judges to have the power to stay the action, quite apart from any inherent power to stay itself, that such a staying procedure would have been set forth in the clear language of the Condominium Act which has engaged the attention of the legislature now for some time in the past few years.

In the result, I have reached the conclusion that the proceeding is a nullity by reason of the absence of notice and an order will therefore go dismissing the action without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff to launch a new action if so advised presumably with compliance with the procedural requirements. I cannot say whether or not there is a limitation problem involved because I agree with Mrs. Sefton that while the Condominium Act itself may contain no limitation provisions limitations may arise either by reason of contract or tort law in the litigation itself.

Application granted; action dismissed.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE GRAY J. JUNE 1, 1982

APPLICATION for a declaration of the rights of the parties to certain agreements of purchase and sale of condominium units.

B. Widman, for applicants.

A. Steinberg, for respondent.

GRAY J.:-- This is an application pursuant to Rule 612 of the Rules of Practice for a declaration of the rights of the parties to certain agreements of purchase and sale of condominium units. The parties have submitted a statement of agreed facts which can be summarized as follows. At the time of execution of the agreements, the purchasers (applicants) were aware that the purchase price consisted of two components, being the basic price plus the interest payable by the vendor (respondent) to the purchasers pursuant to s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. The agreements provided that the basic price would be increased by an amount equal to the s. 53(3) interest entitlement which would result in no actual payment of interest by the vendor or of the increase in purchase price by the purchasers.

The purchasers executed the agreements with full knowledge of their contents and proceeded to occupy their units. On February 17, 1982, the vendor gave notice that the final title closings would take place during March 1982. Prior to the scheduled title closings, the purchasers informed the vendor that they considered the purchase price in their agreements to be invalid, that the true purchase price was the basic price and that they were entitled to be paid interest as required by s. 53(3). This application was commenced prior to the title closings. The vendor filed an undertaking with the court that any possible rights of the purchasers would not merge upon closing and the transactions did close.

The applicants argue that purchasers of proposed condominium units are absolutely entitled to interest at a rate established by regulation on money paid on account of the purchase price to the unit and the date of delivery of a registrable deed or transfer pursuant to s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act. Section 61 prevents the vendor from contracting out of the statute. Secondly, it is submitted that the court has jurisdiction by virtue of s. 18 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 223 to order a party to pay money following an application of this type even though the application is brought by originating notice of motion for declaratory relief.

The respondent takes the initial position that the court has no authority on a Rule 612 application to order the relief sought by the applicants which is payment of the interest entitlement. It is submitted that Rule 612 is not available where questions of law arise other than through the construction of the agreement. Furthermore, it is said that an application under this rule should not be heard when the ruling would not end the litigation between the parties and finally determine their rights. With respect to the merits, the respondent submits that s. 53(3) has not been violated even though no interest was actually paid since the statement of adjustments credited the purchasers with their interest entitlement and then added the same amount to the purchase price. Furthermore, it is urged that a departure from the policy of the Act, which is alleged to be unclear in any event, is not sufficient to make a finding that the transaction is illegal. Fraud upon the Act or absence of good faith must be shown, neither of which exist in this case according to the respondent.

I propose to deal with the preliminary matter concerning my jurisdiction to deal with this application under three headings: (a) the power to order a payment of money; (b) the question of whether the application raises issues of law which go beyond the construction of the agreement; and, (c) the question of whether Rule 612 is applicable since the making of a declaration would not end the litigation.

(a) The power to order a payment of money

The threshold issue is whether the court has jurisdiction on an application under Rule 612 to hear this matter and to grant the relief sought. Rule 612(1) provides as follows:

612(1) Where the rights of the parties depend,

(a) upon the construction of a contract or agreement and there are no material facts in dispute; or

(b) upon undisputed facts and the proper inference from such facts such rights may be determined upon originating notice.

The respondent submitted that there is no jurisdiction under Rule 612 to order a payment of money since the relief contemplated is only the construction of an agreement. The case of Re Toronto General Trusts Corporation and McConkey (1917), 41 O.L.R. 314 was relied upon for the proposition that Rule 612 does not confer a new jurisdiction, but rather provides a method by which the jurisdiction conferred by s. 18, para. 2 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 223 as set out below, can be exercised.

18. In every civil cause or matter, law and equity shall be administered according to the following rules:

2. No action or proceeding is open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory judgment or order is sought thereby, and the court may make binding declarations of right, whether or not any consequential relief is or could be claimed.

The applicant submits that the court can order consequential relief by virtue of s. 18, para. 8 of the Judicature Act which provides:

8. The court in the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in it by this Act in every cause or matter pending before it has power to grant, and shall grant, either absolutely or on such reasonable terms and conditions as it deems just, all such remedies as any of the parties appear to be entitled to in respect of any and every legal or equitable claim properly brought forward by them in such cause or matter, so that, as far as possible, all matters so in controversy between the parties may be completely and finally determined, and all multiplicity of legal proceedings concerning any of such matters avoided.

The applicants' further submission is that s. 18, para. 2 makes it clear that the fact that declaratory relief is being sought is not a valid ground for objecting to the hearing of this application. Whether or not a monetary award is or could be made, the court may make a binding declaration of rights which the successful party could then use as a basis for enforcement proceedings. It is said that para. 8 provides that in all claims properly before it, the court may grant all remedies to which the parties appear to be entitled. The stated objective is to avoid multiplicity of proceedings as would surely occur if only a binding declaration of rights was made and the parties then had to take further proceedings to enforce their rights. Therefore, it is claimed that a party can be ordered to pay money in an application pursuant to Rule 612 provided the claim is properly within the rule. This interpretation I am told is reinforced by Rule 613(1) which provides in part that:

613(1) The judge may summarily dispose of the questions arising on an originating notice and give such judgment as the nature of the case requires ...

A monetary judgment in favour of the applicants is said to be a remedy warranted by the nature of this case.

(b) The question of whether the application raises issues of law which go beyond the construction of the agreement

Rule 612 may not be utilized in cases where the affidavit material raises a number of disputed material facts nor where evidence must be weighed in order to determine the matters in issue. The authority for this legal proposition is Re City of Burlington and Clairton Village (1979), 24 O.R. (2d) 586, 99 D.L.R. (3d) 170. This decision also makes it clear that this type of application is inappropriate where matters of law are involved which go beyond the construction of an instrument.

Re Bitoff and Fran Restaurants Ltd. (1980), 28 O.R. (2d) 637 involved an agreement between the owner of premises formerly leased to successive restaurant businesses and the lessee of a nearby competitive restaurant in which the owner agreed not to lease his premises to anyone involved in handling or selling food. The owner applied to the court for a determination of the enforceability of the agreement saying that it was in restraint of trade. Callaghan J. dismissed the application saying at pp. 639-40:

... the determination of the enforceability of such a covenant in restraint of trade ... raises questions which are not in the main questions of construction at all. While incidentally some matters of construction might arise for consideration in determining the enforceability, the questions raised are question of law based on public policy depending to a large extent on the circumstances proved to exist at the time the covenant was entered.

The respondent in this application argued that if the agreements are found to have been in breach of the Condominium Act, the issues of law which arise are whether the contract is illegal and, if so, what are the rights of parties to an illegal contract. A number of cases were cited to demonstrate the principle of law that where a contract violates an implied prohibition in a statute, one must consider whether the sole purpose of the statute is protection of the public. If so, the contract is void and the parties to the contract have no rights unless they are not in pari delicto. Examples of cases of this type are: Prince Albert Properties and Land Sales Ltd. v. Kushneryk, [1955] 5 D.L.R. 458 and Albert E. Daniels Ltd. v. Sangster (1976), 12 O.R. (2d) 512.

If it is determined that the agreement is illegal, the respondent's further submission is that a further issue arises as to whether the parties are in pari delicto before their respective rights can be determined. It is said that various factors would have to be considered, one of which would be a determination concerning which party had the burden of proving under the statute that the law had been complied with. Examples of cases of this type are: Kiriri Cotton Co. Ltd. v. Dewani, [1960] A.C. 192, [1960] 1 All E.R. 177 in which it was held that a landlord and tenant were not in pari delicto in a situation where a rent control statute prohibited a landlord from charging a premium for subletting premises because the statute placed the primary responsibility on the landlord. A further example is Hasiuk v. Oshanek, [1936] 1 D.L.R. 232, [1935] 3 W.W.R. 385, 43 Man. R. 470.

On this preliminary argument, the respondent has a further argument that, in addition to the issues of statutory burden of responsibility and knowledge of the applicants, the question of the severability of the challenged clauses of the agreement must be dealt with. Put another way, it is that, although part of an agreement is unenforceable and all the promises in the agreement are supported by the same consideration, an independent provision which changes only the extent and not the kind of agreement may be enforceable.

The applicants' response, which is a complete answer to all of these submissions, is that the question of the legality of the agreements never arises. The Condominium Act simply provides in s. 61 that:

61. This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.

It is not necessary to decide whether the agreements are legal or not since any agreement which contravenes the Act shall not operate. None of the cases cited by the respondent involved a specific prohibition of enforcement of agreements made in violation of the statute. All involved statutes which required or prevented certain activities with sanctions of fines. A legal determination of the purpose of the statute and its effect on an agreement made without reference to the statute was required. Therefore, the respondent's contention that issues of law arise which go beyond the construction of an agreement and which, therefore, cannot be heard on a Rule 612 application must be rejected.

(c) The question of whether Rule 612 is applicable since the making of a declaration would not end the litigation

The respondent's final submission on the question of jurisdiction was that this application ought not to be heard since the order would not necessarily end the litigation between the parties. A number of cases were relied upon as establishing the principle that where a declaration would not end the dispute between the parties, Rule 612 is not the appropriate procedure.

The principle was well stated in Lewis v. Green, [1905] 2 Ch. 340 at 344: xD

It is only intended to enable the Court to decide questions of construction where the decision of those questions, whichever way it may go, will settle the litigation between the parties. It is not intended that questions of construction which, if they are decided in one way only will settle the dispute between the parties, should come up for decision on an originating summons.

This approach was adopted in Anglo Canada Fire & General Insurance Co. v. Robert E. Cook Ltd., [1973] 2 O.R. 385 where an application was made for construction of the word "month" in a lease, the dispute being whether or not the required notice had been given in time. Van Camp J., at p. 386, accepted the proposition that "If the interpretation or construction of the document will not end litigation and finally determine the rights of the parties then this procedure should not be used". Since one interpretation of the word "month" would end the dispute, because the notice would have been given on time, but the other possible finding would have left open the question of sufficiency of notice, the application was not appropriate and was dismissed. Likewise, in Re Halmos (1979), 12 C.P.C. 16, it was held that an order ought not to be made under Rule 612 where it would not be a final determination of the real issue between the parties. The application had been brought by a land owner to challenge the validity of a zoning by-law which applied to his land. The real issue, as found by the court, was whether the municipality would be required to issue a building permit with respect to that land.

The applicants seek a declaration that the purchase price under the agreements is the basic price and that each of the purchasers is entitled to interest pursuant to s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act. If they are successful, the respondent's submission is that this will not finally determine the matters in issue because the respondent wishes to raise a defence of the applicants' knowledge and to argue that, if the applicants are entitled to relief, it should be on terms when parties are not in pari delicto. The effect of knowledge of the parties may be dealt with on this application since the issue is not whether this is an illegal contract but, rather, whether the terms of the contract regarding interest entitlement can operate given the wording of s. 53(3) and s. 61 of the Condominium Act. The matter of rights of parties not in pari delicto arises only with respect to illegal contracts. Accordingly, a declaration either way would constitute a final determination of rights of the parties and would end the litigation other than by way of appeal.

Section 53(3) and 61 of the Condominium Act provide as follows:

53(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him.

61. This Act applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.

As stated previously, the agreements in question provided that the purchase price was made up of the basic price plus the s. 53(3) interest entitlement. Upon closing, the applicants were provided with statements of adjustment which credited the purchasers with the interest entitlement and then added the same amount to the purchase price. The respondent submitted that a court cannot interfere with the agreements unless there has been either a contravention of the Act or fraud upon the Act. The respondent maintains that, since there is no requirement for payment of interest in cash, interest has been paid by virtue of the credit given in the statement of adjustments and the provisions of the Act have been fulfilled. It is claimed that there has been no fraud upon the Act since the applicants knew in advance what the purchase price was to be. The applicants allege that the scheme is a sham arranged for the purpose of circumventing the Act which is prohibited by s. 61 regardless of the knowledge of the purchasers.

In Re Grandby Investments Ltd. et al. and Wright et al. (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 341, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 313, 20 R.P.R. 30, an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed condominium unit contained a clause by which the purchaser agreed to waive interest payable pursuant to s. 53(3). An application was made under Rule 612 to receive credit for the interest entitlement upon closing. After dealing with the preliminary issue of the effect of a condition in the agreement, the court examined the purpose and effect of the 1974 amendments to the Act which include what is now s. 53(3). Callaghan J. dealt with the matter at pp. 346-47 in the following terms:

These amendments are directed towards the conduct of a vendor and are clearly remedial, enacted with a view to protecting a prospective purchaser from what apparently were perceived to be abuses in the sale of condominium units. It is from this perspective, namely, the purposiveness of the legislation, that the interpretation of s. 24c(3) [now s. 53(3)] must be approached.

The Act contemplates registration of a declaration and delay attendant thereupon ... the legislative intention that the purchaser was entitled to interest on moneys paid on account of the purchase price, in my view, is manifest.

I conclude that 24c(3) was enacted to cover a situation such as that before the Court where the vendor while charging occupation rent holds the purchaser's moneys on account of pending registration of a deed ... I also note that if the provisions of s. 24c(3) are not mandatory, there is then no incentive whatsoever on the vendor to comply with the requirements of s. 24a in relation to avoiding delay.

The waiver was accordingly held to be inoperative.

The recent unreported decision of Provincial Judge Sigurdson in Rudolph and Meller v. Priene Limited and 377806 Ontario Limited also dealt with an attempt to avoid s. 53(3). In the agreement, the purchaser acknowledged the statutory interest entitlement and then assigned his right to the interest to the vendor. The vendor argued that an assignment for valuable consideration was distinguishable from waiver as in Re Grandby, supra. The court held that the agreement violated the mandatory requirements of s. 53(3) and was an attempt to contract out of the Act which is prohibited by s. 61. Regarding the intention of the Act, the following is said at pp. 6-7 of the unreported decision:

The clear intention of s. 53(3) as fortified by s. 61 was that the purchaser was entitled to interest and that the vendor is not entitled to keep that interest ... To countenance the assignment back to the vendor such as was done herein was to fly in the face of the legislative intention and to ignore the clear statement in Re Grandby ...

In light of these cases and the mandatory wording of s. 53(3) and s. 61 of the Condominium Act, the clauses of the agreement, which increase the purchase price by the amount of the interest to which the purchaser is entitled, cannot stand. The intent of the Act is clearly that the purchaser be paid interest on money paid to the vendor on account of purchase price during the interim occupancy period before a registrable deed or transfer is delivered. The reason for doing so is to protect purchasers of proposed condominium units from abuses by vendors who delay in registering declarations by providing an incentive to register quickly. The knowledge of the purchasers regarding what they were signing is irrelevant given the wording of s. 61 which prevents the parties from contracting out of the Act. Given the conclusion that there has been a contravention of the Act, it is not necessary to deal with the submission of the respondent regarding fraud upon the Act or absence of good faith.

In the result, an order will go:

- (1) amending the style of cause to name one of the applicants as Udo Bastian;
- (2) deleting the name of Ismail Turksen from the applicants listed in the style of cause;
- (3) abridging the time for service of the original notice of motion;
- (4) declaring that the full and true sale price with respect to each agreement is that shown in each agreement as "Basic Price" and that on the title closing of each transaction, no greater amount can be required by the respondent to be paid by each applicant by way of adjustment or otherwise, directly or indirectly; and
- (5) directing that the respondent will pay to the applicants their costs of this application on a party and party basis forthwith after taxation thereof.

Order accordingly.

Stulberg v. York Condominium Corp. No. 60

(1982), 34 O.R. (2d) 92

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL ARNUP, WILSON and GOODMAN J.J.A. OCTOBER 22, 1981

APPEAL from the dismissal of an application to the County Court for certain relief based on s. 49 of the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84.

D.J. Brown, Q.C., for applicant, appellant.

Alvin B. Rosenberg, Q.C., for respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered orally by

ARNUP J.A.:-- In July, 1980, the appellant made an application to the County Court in purported reliance upon s. 49 of the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84 [now R.S.O. 1980, c. 84]. His application was dismissed by His Honour Judge Webb. In that application the following relief was sought:

(1) Directing the Condominium Corporation, through its Board of Directors, to make the records of the Corporation available for inspection by Sidney Stulberg, registered owner of Unit 24, Level 13, York Condominium Plan No. 60, 370 Dixon Road, Weston, Ontario, in accordance with Section 21 of The Condominium Act, 1978.

(2) Declaring invalid and contrary to The Condominium Act, 1978 the procedure adopted by the Board of Directors since 1977 of advance polling stations for the purpose of casting votes prior to the holding of the general meeting.

(3) Declaring invalid the election of the Board of Directors carried out under the advanced polling held in 1978 on April 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 24th, and 25th; in 1979 on April 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 17th and in 1980 on April 23rd, 24th, 25th, and 28th.

(4) Declaring invalid the registration proxy form.

Section 12 of the Condominium Act, 1978 provides in s-s. (3):

(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Subsection (5) provides:

(5) Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Section 21 of the Act provides:

21. The corporation shall keep adequate records, and any owner or his agent duly authorized in writing may inspect the records on reasonable notice and at any reasonable time.

Section 49 provides in s-s. (1):

49. (1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

Subsection (2) provides:

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Despite the fact that the applicant, in his material, indicated that he was the owner of a unit in the condominium, it was revealed on cross-examination that at the time of the making of the application and of the events which led up to it the applicant was not the owner of a condominium unit; his wife was the registered beneficial owner. The applicant had made a demand to inspect certain records of the condominium corporation. On the hearing before His Honour Judge Webb, the applicant, through his cross-examination, had testified that he was the agent of his wife, but there was no evidence before the Court that the applicant was authorized in writing by his wife, the registered owner, to inspect the records or to do anything else.

Towards the conclusion of the argument before us it became obvious that the applicant had no right even to make the application under s. 49 of the Act. The application can be made only by "any owner"; there is no provision for an application by an agent or other representative of the owner. Accordingly, the application brought in the name of the applicant was misconceived from the beginning, and this is sufficient to dispose of this appeal.

However, we have had the benefit of reasonably full argument on the scope of s. 49 of the Condominium Act, 1978 and while it is not necessary for the disposition of this appeal we desire to express certain views upon that section.

There have been three relatively recent cases with respect to the jurisdiction of a County Court Judge to grant declaratory relief in a proceeding commenced by originating motion. They are Queensway Iron Works Ltd. v. Barlin Construction Ltd. et al. (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 586, 113 D.L.R. (3d) 748, 17 C.P.C. 213; Re Canada Mortgage & Housing Corp. and York Condominium Corp. No. 46 (1981), 31 O.R. (2d) 514, 119 D.L.R. (3d) 423 (a decision of His Honour Judge Borins in the County Court); and Re Gallant and Veltrusy Enterprises Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 716, 123 D.L.R. (3d) 391 (a judgment of this Court).

In our view there is no power conferred on the County Court by s. 49 of the Condominium Act, 1978 to make a declaratory order except in relation to an application for an order directing the performance of a duty imposed by the Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules. It would be undesirable, in our opinion, to attempt to elaborate in this case upon the circumstances in which such a declaration so related to an application for an order directing the performance of a duty, can be made. It is sufficient, in our view, to indicate that the mere fact that a condominium is involved does not confer upon the County Court jurisdiction to make a declaratory order but, as I have said, such a declaratory order must be related to an application permitted by s. 49 directing the performance of the duties of the kind stated. It follows that much of the relief sought by the appellant was not obtainable on a summary application under s. 49.

In the result, accordingly, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Young v. 253819 Developments Ltd. et al.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE GRANGE, J. 12TH MARCH 1979.

ACTION to enforce an agreement of purchase and sale against a defendant mortgagee and his purchaser.

D. Zimmer, for plaintiff.

A. S. Halpert, for defendants.

GRANGE, J.:-- This is an action by the purchaser of a condominium apartment to enforce his agreement of purchase against the defendants, who are the mortgagee of the building and the purchaser from him after default upon the mortgage.

The condominium building in which the plaintiff's apartment is contained was an enterprise of a company called May Establishment Limited (May) and was known as Harvard Place and situated in Waterloo. In May of 1974, the building was mortgaged to the defendant Maxwell S. Lewis (Lewis) for the sum of $700,000 with interest at 16% payable monthly and the whole of the principal repayable on June 30, 1976. This mortgage was at the time a third mortgage and covered the apartment building and, although nothing hangs on this, it covered besides the apartment building another property as well.

In June of 1974, the plaintiff entered into a tenancy agreement to rent apartment No. 1701 at a rental of $223 per month for a term of one year. The agreement gave the plaintiff the right to purchase the apartment as an individual condominium unit at a price of $23,400 after registration of the necessary condominium documents.

In October of 1974, the plaintiff, pursuant to the term in his lease, entered into an agreement with May to purchase as a condominium unit the apartment he was already occupying as a tenant for the total sum of $23,400 payable $2,900 as a deposit, $13,000 on the date of closing and the balance by a mortgage to be arranged. The agreement contained the following special terms:

(a) May was entitled to use all money paid for the construction of the building and was not required to hold any of it in trust. Section 24c of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 [since repealed by s. 61 of and replaced by the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84] which requires all such moneys to be held in trust until security can be provided to the purchaser was not then in force.

(b) The plaintiff was forbidden to register any encumbrance against the property which might jeopardize the receipt by May of all mortgage funds.

At the same time an occupation agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and May whereby the plaintiff was entitled to remain on the premises prior to closing at a rental of $195 per month. Under this agreement all closing documents were to be held by the vendor until the plan of condominium had been registered.

The plaintiff complied with the terms of his bargain, paid the deposit on entering into the agreement, and the closing sum in March of 1975, all without security or registration of documents, even though at least upon the payment of the closing sum he was represented by solicitors. He could not arrange the mortgage until the condominium plans were approved. Unfortunately, May fell into financial difficulties; it was unable to complete the condominium arrangements and defaulted on the mortgage payments to Lewis. The difficulties apparently began in the fall of 1974, but did not become acute until the spring of 1975. On May 27, 1975, Lewis gave notice of sale under power. By agreement of sale dated August 14 and 29, 1975, the property was sold to the defendant, the numbered company, and by deed dated September 3rd and registered September 11, 1975, the transaction was closed. On September 12, 1975, one day later, a notice of the agreement between the plaintiff and May was registered. The sale proceeds failed even to meet the mortgage debt to Lewis. May is, of course, insolvent.

Much of the evidence at trial was devoted to the knowledge Lewis or the numbered company had or might have had of the plaintiff's interest at any time. First of all, it was notorious that May had intended to convert the building into a condominium. There were signs both on the balconies and in the lobby of the building from at least September, 1974. It is equally obvious that May was making sales of the contemplated condominiums from June of 1974 on. There is some doubt as to whether Lewis visited the premises in the spring of 1975 before the notice of sale was instituted and some doubt as to whether he was aware that some units had been sold. The principals of the numbered company visited the premises in July and August of 1975, prior to submitting the offer and must have known the condominium intention. I can find no evidence of precise knowledge in either defendant of the plaintiff's interest until the receipt by Lewis in August, 1975, of a list of tenants upon which some were designated either by May, or by Lewis as a result of information from May, as owner or purchaser. On August 25, 1975, Lewis wrote to the plaintiff, and the relevant portions of the letter are as follows:

A recent rent roll supplied to me by Mr. Klima of May Establishment Limited shows you as an "owner", from which I gather that you have allegedly purchased the apartment you occupy, subject to the building becoming a condominium. Unfortunately, I have no knowledge of the terms of any agreement entered into between yourself and May Establishment Limited, but as Mortgagee in possession I can only regard you as a resident, either at will or on a monthly basis and I must therefore ask that during your occupancy you pay the normal monthly rental that would be paid by any regular tenant for the apartment you occupy, which in your case amounts to $250.00 and which I will accept as occupation rental until your status as an occupant is clarified. By payment of such monthly sums and acceptance of them by me, I do not in any way recognize or assume that you are actually the owner of the apartment you occupy.

There is a likelihood that the property will be sold under Power of Sale proceedings very shortly. In that event, the new owners of course will be advised of your alleged purchase and will no doubt meet with you regarding same.

Both Lewis and the principals of the numbered company testified that the latter was not supplied with any list of purchasers of units until after closing and I accept that evidence, but it is not really disputed that the officials of the numbered company suspected some sales might have already been effected. No purchasers had registered a claim of any sort prior to the registration of the deed to the numbered company, although some, besides the plaintiff, registered shortly thereafter.

Some further proceedings should be mentioned. May brought action to set aside the sale to the numbered company but that action failed and was dismissed. Great difficulties arose in the collection of rents and it was necessary for the numbered company to take action against some of the tenants. A motion was brought against the plaintiff under the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 236, for an order for a writ of possession for arrears of rent. The plaintiff filed a dispute to the effect that he was an equitable owner and not a tenant and that the numbered company was bound by the agreement between the plaintiff and May. The matter came on before His Honour Judge Mossop who rejected the defence but granted the plaintiff relief from forfeiture upon terms. One of the defences of the numbered company in this action is res judicata. Indeed, an application was brought in this action to dismiss it upon that ground. The application came on before Pennell, J., who dismissed it upon the ground that he was not certain from Judge Mossop's reasons that he had rejected the possibility that Lewis had knowledge of the plaintiff's interest before the power of sale notice and the sale might, therefore, be assailable.

The defence raises two other matters: first, on closing, Lewis turned over to the numbered company and deposited a declaration of default and service and the numbered company accordingly raises the defence provided in ss. 34 and 35 of the Mortgages Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 279. Second, the plaintiff's agreement with May was for the purchase of a condominium unit and the provisions of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, must be considered. Although the Condominium Act, s. 24 [rep. & sub. 1972, c. 7, s. 1; am. 1973, c. 121, s. 1], excludes the operation of s. 29 of the Planning Act, so as to make compliance with the Planning Act unnecessary in the purchase of a condominium unit, there can be no unit until registration of the project. That registration did not take place until long after the agreement was entered into. Consequently, it is argued that the agreement could only be valid if it contained a clause making it subject to compliance with the Planning Act and such clause was not present: see Re Crossroads Apartments Ltd. and Phillips (1974), 4 O.R. (2d) 72, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 172.

One can have nothing but sympathy for the plaintiff but his position, in my view, is hopeless. The action against Lewis cannot succeed because the mortgage to Lewis was prior both in time and registration to the agreement between the plaintiff and May and Lewis had every right to sell upon default. It is suggested he might have been in default of s. 30(1), para. 4, of the Mortgages Act in failing to give notice to the plaintiff of the sale. But the facts are against the suggestion. The subsection requires notice to be given to any person about whose interest the mortgagee has had actual notice in writing prior to the giving of the notice of sale. No such notice had at the relevant time been received.

Entirely apart from the defences of the Planning Act, the Mortgages Act and res judicata, the action against the numbered company cannot, in my opinion, succeed. Counsel for the plaintiff argues that the numbered company had constructive notice or was put upon inquiry of the interest of the plaintiff by reason of its knowing that some condominium units had been sold. He refers me to s. 69 of the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 409, which is as follows:

69(1) After the grant from the Crown of land, and letters patent issued therefor, every instrument affecting the land or any part thereof shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration without actual notice, unless the instrument is registered before the registration of the instrument under which the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee claims.

(2) This section does not extend to a lease for a term not exceeding seven years where the actual possession goes along with the lease, but it does extend to every lease for a longer term than seven years. First of all, he concedes that there is no actual notice brought home to the plaintiff of the plaintiff's interest -- actual notice has always been confined to something which would make the taking of the subsequent conveyance akin to fraud. See the comments of Strong, C.J., in Rose v. Peterkin (1885), 13 S.C.R. 677 at p. 694, who posed the test as follows:

What such actual and direct notice is may well be ascertained very shortly by defining constructive notice, and then taking actual notice to be knowledge, not presumed as in the case of constructive notice, but shown to be actually brought home to the party to be charged with it, either by proof of his own admission or by evidence of witnesses who are able to establish that the very fact, of which notice is to be established, not something which would have led to the discovery of the fact if an enquiry had been pursued, was brought to his knowledge.

Counsel then goes on, however, to argue that constructive not actual notice is the test here. He argues that the plaintiff was in occupation pursuant to a lease for a term not exceeding seven years with actual possession and s. 69(2) governs. He further relies on Plant v. Woolfe et al., [1954] O.R. 726, [1954] 3 D.L.R. 700, where Barlow, J., held that where a lease for less than seven years with occupation is in effect a subsequent purchaser is bound not only by the lease term but also by a right of first refusal contained in the unregistered lease. I must confess I find some difficulty in understanding the principle upon which Plant was decided -- it is one thing to hold a subsequent purchaser without actual notice to a short lease term, it is quite another to bind him to a right to purchase in the tenant -- but, in any event, it would have no application here. The plaintiff was not in occupation pursuant to a lease but pursuant to an agreement of purchase and sale and an occupation agreement pending completion of the sale. The agreement does not precisely say so, but it must be taken to have supplanted the original lease of May, 1974.

More importantly, however, the argument ignores the real nature of the transaction entered into by the numbered company. It was not purchasing from May which had sold part of the property to the plaintiff by an unregistered conveyance. It was purchasing from Lewis under the power of sale given in the mortgage from May to Lewis, and that mortgage had undoubted priority to any interest of the plaintiff. There was no defect in the title of Lewis to sell and the numbered company could not, therefore, have any notice thereof whether actual or constructive.

It follows that the action must be dismissed against both defendants with costs if demanded.

Action dismissed.

Goetz et al. v. Whitehall Development Corp. Ltd.

19 O.R. (2d) 33

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL ARNUP, ZUBER AND BLAIR, J.J.A. 10TH FEBRUARY 1978.

APPEAL from a judgment allowing an action for damages for breach of contract. R. G. Slaght, for appellant, defendant.

R. J. Rolls, Q.C., for respondents, plaintiffs.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

ZUBER, J.A.:-- This is an appeal by the defendant against the judgment given against it in the total sum of $17,300.

The material facts are as follows: On October 14, 1972, each of the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a condominium unit in a residential building to be constructed by the defendant. Each plaintiff gave a $500 deposit and was obliged by the terms of the contract to pay a further $500 deposit on February 28, 1973. For reasons which need not be detailed, the additional deposits were not given in time. On March 19th, two cheques for $500 were given to an agent for the defendant who, in exchange for the cheques, issued receipts. On March 29, 1973, these two cheques for $500, along with the defendant's cheques for the original deposits of $500, were returned to the plaintiffs. A letter accompanied the return of each deposit which treated the agreement for sale as terminated on the ground that there had been default in paying the second deposit within the proper time. The contracts contained the usual term making time of the essence.

On May 24, 1973, the plaintiffs commenced action for specific performance and, alternatively, for damages. A lis pendens was not registered, no doubt due to technical difficulties arising from the fact that the condominium corporation had not yet been registered.

Progress on the condominium project was slow because of the problems encountered with municipal authorities and, as a result, compliance with the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, and registration of the declaration, description and by-laws pursuant to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, did not take place until February of 1974. The trial Judge noted that "it is not suggested by the plaintiffs that the delay in registration was due to any fault of the defendant". Subsequently, and in the normal course of business, the units which had been the subject of the sale contracts were sold to others.

At the opening of trial, the plaintiffs elected to pursue their remedy for damages, since specific performance was no longer available. The first defence raised was based upon the fact that the second deposits were not paid within the time prescribed by the contract. The learned trial Judge found that the defendant had waived compliance with the time requirements of the agreement respecting the second deposit. In my opinion, he was right in so concluding. There was abundant evidence to warrant this conclusion.

The next defence raised is more formidable and depends upon the premise that the agreement contains a condition precedent that neither party could waive. An appreciation of this defence requires an examination of the agreements (which are identical) signed by each plaintiff. The relevant parts are as follows:

3. In the event that the Declaration, Description and By-Law required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, Chapter 77 and any amendments thereto (hereinafter called the "Act") have not as yet been registered, this Agreement and all the terms hereof are conditional upon the Vendor registering the necessary documents to have the project containing the Unit made subject to the Act. If the said project is not made subject to the Act within one year from the date hereof, this Agreement shall, notwithstanding any intervening negotiations, be null and void and the deposit shall be returned to the Purchaser without interest and neither party shall be liable to the other for any costs or damages.

9. This Agreement is subject to the express condition and will only become effective if the Vendor shall within one year from the date hereof have complied with the provisions of Section 29 of The Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, Chapter 349 and any amendments thereto, and such compliance shall be deemed to have been made when the Declaration, Description and By-Law are registered in accordance with the Act.

12. In the event that the completion of the Unit shall be delayed by reason of delay on the part of the Vendor in arranging the mortgage to be assumed, strikes, lockouts, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war, weather, delays by common carriers, unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted an extension or extensions of time not exceeding a total of sixty (60) days to complete the premises comprising the Unit and the closing date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor shall be unable to substantially complete the Unit within such extension or extensions of time and the Purchaser shall be unwilling to further extend the time for closing, the deposit shall be returned to the Purchaser by the Vendor without interest and this Agreement shall be at an end and the Vendor shall not be liable to the Purchaser for any costs or damages. Provided that the Purchaser will be liable to pay for any extras ordered and completed in whole or in part even though this Agreement may otherwise be terminated. It is understood and agreed that failure to complete the common elements on or before closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

13. In the event that the Unit is substantially completed by the date for completion of the sale or the postponed date for completion of the sale as provided in this Agreement, the sale shall be completed on such date and the Vendor shall complete any outstanding items of construction required by this Agreement within a reasonable time thereafter, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of supplies. For the purposes of this Agreement, the Unit shall be deemed to be substantially completed when the interior work has been finished to permit occupancy notwithstanding that there remains grading or landscaping or other outside work to be completed. The Purchaser agrees to meet a representative of the Vendor 48 hours prior to the closing to verify that the premises comprising the Unit have been completed. In the event that items have not been completed at that time, they will be listed on an inspection sheet which will constitute the Vendor's only undertaking to complete the said incomplete items. The Purchaser further agrees that the Vendor shall have the right to enter upon the lands and premises comprising the Unit after closing in order to complete the aforesaid items or any of its other work.

14. Subject to the foregoing, the transaction of purchase and sale herein is to be completed on or before the 29th day of June, 1973, provided the unit is completed. In the event that the Declaration, Description and By-Law are not registered by such date, the closing date shall be postponed to a day ten (10) days after written notice shall have been given by the Vendor to the Purchaser or to the Purchaser's solicitor that the said Declaration, Description or By-Law have been registered in the Office of Land Titles at Toronto.

15. In the event that the Unit is substantially completed by the date for completion for the sale or the postponed date for the completion of the sale (as provided in this Agreement) and the said Declaration, Description and By-Law have not been registered, the Purchaser agrees to occupy the unit commencing on the date that the sale would have otherwise been completed if the said Declaration, Description and By-Law were then registered on the following terms and conditions:

(a) On the date such occupancy is to commence the Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor by certified cheque, the sum to be paid on the date of closing with adjustments to be drawn as of the date of closing first referred to in paragraph 14, above. Further adjustments shall be made at the time and as of the actual date of closing;

(b) The Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor a monthly occupation charge of $270.90 each month in advance commencing on the date of such occupancy and payable on the same day of each succeeding month during the term of such occupancy until the date of closing, at which time any pre-paid occupancy charge shall be adjusted.

(c) Such occupancy by the Purchaser shall be governed insofar as applicable, by the provisions of the proposed Declaration and By-Law.

It is the position of the plaintiffs that paras. 3 and 9 must be read subject to paras. 12, 13, 14 and 15 and that the extensions of time contemplated by those latter sections carry the rights of the plaintiffs beyond the one-year period set out in paras. 3 and 9. If that view is accepted, it follows, of course, that paras. 3 and 9 mean very little. The trial Judge accepted this view of the contract and held that, despite the expiration of the one year from the time of the making of the contract, the rights of the plaintiffs were kept alive by the operation of the latter paragraphs.

With great respect, I have come to a different view. While all the terms in this contract must be read together, I think that paras. 3 and 9 are the controlling paragraphs. It is obvious that not every contemplated or projected condominium will achieve legal status by compliance with the Condominium Act and the Planning Act. Failure may be the result of any one of a variety of external causes, e.g., disapproval by the appropriate governmental authorities; lack of sales resulting in the withdrawal of consent to registration by the mortgagee. The frustration of the sale of units in a projected condominium is obviously a real and foreseeable event. Paragraphs 3 and 9 are directed toward this possibility and the parties in this case have agreed that, if the projected condominium has not been brought to fruition within a period of one year of the making of the agreement, the agreement is at an end.

What then is the effect of paras. 12 to 15? These paragraphs, in my view, are directed only to the solution of commonplace practical problems of closing dates, completion dates and occupancy on an interim basis and can only operate within the one-year maximum set out by paras. 3 and 9.

In my respectful view, compliance with the Planning Act and the Condominium Act was a true condition precedent, i.e., a future, uncertain event beyond the control of any of the parties and upon which the rights and obligations of the contracting parties depended: see Turney et al. v. Zhilka, [1959] S.C.R. 578, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 447; Barnett v. Harrison et al., [1976] 2 S.C.R. 531, 57 D.L.R. (3d) 225, 5 N.R. 131; George Wimpey Canada Ltd. v. Focal Properties Ltd., [1978] 1 S.C.R. 2, 78 D.L.R. (3d) 129, 16 N.R. 71 (S.C.C.).

Having reached this conclusion, it then follows that the plaintiffs must fail. The agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant was made on October 14, 1972. One year later, the events contemplated by paras. 3 and 9 had not occurred, through no fault of the defendant, and were not to occur until February of 1974. When the agreement expired, the rights and obligations created by the agreement came to an end and the defendant acquired a good defence to this action.

In the result, this appeal must be allowed. The judgment below is set aside and the plaintiffs' action is dismissed.

Turning to the issue of costs, it is to be observed that the defendant repudiated the contracts herein on a basis that was not warranted. The defendant's success in this action rests on events which occurred after the action was commenced. Further, the defendant went on to sell the condominium units for prices much higher than those contained in the contracts in this action. In the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs of either the trial or this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

York Condominium Corp. No. 104 v. Supreme Automatic Washing Machine Co.

18 O.R. (2d) 596

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE REID, J. 7TH FEBRUARY 1978.

APPLICATION for an order declaring a renewal term of a lease invalid.

W. B. Drake, for applicant, plaintiff.

R. Wise, for respondent, defendant.

REID, J.:-- In respect of a lease, applicant moves:

... pursuant to Rule 64 for an order declaring that the renewal or option terms of the said lease are invalid and not binding on the members of the condominium corporation on the following grounds.:

(a) Firstly, that since the said lease was not registered on the Register in the Land Titles Office at Toronto, the registered interests of members of the corporation have priority over the renewal terms contained in the said lease as there was no actual occupation pursuant to the renewal terms until the original demise had expired; and,

(b) Secondly, it is not binding because it was ultra vires the condominium corporation to pass a by-law allowing the corporation to lease the common elements and such action cannot be ratified by the corporation members.

On March 15, 1973, the applicant, York Condominium Corporation No. 104 (York) was registered as a condominium pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, in the Land Titles Office in Toronto. On May 15, 1973, a certified copy of By-law 1 was filed in the Land Titles Office by the sole member of the condominium corporation, Halliwell Terrace Limited. Paragraph 2(j) of art. V of the by-law provides that the powers of the corporation include the power "to lease any part or parts of the common elements as agent of the owners".

York appointed Nicobar Holdings Limited (Nicobar) as property manager of the corporation pursuant to a management agreement dated April 30, 1973. Then, on June 1, 1973, Nicobar entered into a lease of the laundry room premises to the respondent Supreme Automatic Washing Machine Company (Supreme). The premises leased are among the common elements.

Nicobar ceased to act as property manager for York on April 1, 1974, and thereafter A. E. Lepage (Ontario) Limited (Lepage) assumed the role of property manager. On February 27, 1975, Lepage wrote to Supreme saying "Please be advised of our desire to terminate your services on May 31st. 1975."

On March 5, 1975, Supreme wrote to Lepage and said "Please be advised that we are accepting the option to lease the laundry room for a further three years, as provided in our lease agreement."

On April 23, 1975, solicitors acting on behalf of Supreme wrote to Lepage stating that the lease "automatically renewed itself" for a further term of five years and that the right of renewal was solely at the option of the lessee Supreme who was exercising it.

There is a difference between the parties about the period, or periods, covered by the lease.

The lease was on a pre-printed form apparently used customarily by respondent. The printed form provided for a tenure of five years which, unless notice was given by lessee to the contrary, extended automatically for a further tenure of five years.

However, alterations were made by hand to these provisions. What they amount to no one can say. On the face of the document, they are inscrutable. Among the possibilities are that the first five-year term remains or, alternatively, that it was reduced to two years, and that the term available on option remained at five years or was reduced to three years.

The parties cannot agree on the meaning of these provisions. They appear, however, to have agreed that the original tenure was reduced to two years from five. If that is not so, there is no basis for ground (a) of applicant's submission. These reasons proceed on the assumption that this was agreed.

Also, it is worth noting that no objection has been made to Nicobar appearing in the lease as lessor. Respondent appears to accept its agency.

1. THE POWER OF THE CORPORATION TO LEASE THE COMMON ELEMENTS.

I will deal with the ultra vires issue first because it could dispose of the application. Applicant submits that there is no power in the condominium corporation to lease the common elements and therefore the lease between York and Supreme is of no effect. Respondent submits that the Condominium Act should be given a broad and liberal interpretation so that a power to lease should be construed as ancillary to the other powers conferred on the corporation by the Act.

I have already observed that para. 2(j) of art. V of By-law 1 gives the corporation power to lease the common elements as agents of the owners. Although there may be no property interest in the corporation in the common elements to which the lease could attach, the owners of the property do have the requisite property interest. They have designated the corporation as their agent to lease their respective interests. If the corporation is the agent of the owners, then the concept of ultra vires is not applicable unless the agency itself is ultra vires the corporation. In Bowstead on Agency, 13th ed. (1968), p. 15, it is stated:

Presumably a corporation can act as an agent in respect of a transaction that would be ultra vires its memorandum of association: but where the very acting as an agent is ultra vires, the corporation plainly cannot so act.

The only issue thus is whether it is ultra vires York to act as agent for the unit owners in leasing the common elements. There is no provision in the Condominium Act preventing the corporation from acting as agent. The tenor of the Act is to the contrary. For example, the corporation is made generally responsible for the performance of functions of common concern. In carrying out these functions it is, in essence, acting on behalf of all the unit holders. The corporation may bring actions with respect to the common elements. In doing so it is really acting as agent for the owners. The Act therefore contemplates the corporation acting as agent of the unit holders.

Section 9(13) of the Condominium Act provides that the declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects. Section 9(4) states that the objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation. While applicant submits that the property and assets of the corporation do not include the common elements because they are owned by the members and not the corporation, in my opinion, "property" in s. 9(4) is not confined to what is owned by the corporation. A primary function of the corporation is the management of the under- taking. It could hardly carry out this function if it were restricted to property owned by the corporation. It thus appears to me that "property" in s. 9(4) should be construed as the term is defined in the Act [s. 1(1)(n)], i.e.:

(n) "property" means the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description, and includes any land and interests appurtenant to land that are added to the common elements;

"Manage" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary to mean "to conduct; to carry on the concerns of a business or establishment". "Leasing" would fall within "management". Thus, leasing the common elements would be included in an authority to manage the property and consistent with the objects of the corporation.

2. PRIORITY OF OWNERS' INTERESTS OVER RENEWAL TERM.

After the making of the lease, individual units in the building were sold to various owners. Section 51(1), para. 4, of the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 234, provides that all registered land, unless the contrary intention is expressed on the register, is subject to any lease or agreement for a lease, for a period yet to run that does not exceed three years, where there is actual occupation under it. There is no dispute over the binding effect of the original tenure of the lease. The challenge is to the renewal term. Applicant relies on Davidson v. McKay (1867), 26 U.C.Q.B. 306, and Falconbridge, Law of Mortgages, 3rd ed. (1942), pp. 123-4, for the proposition that there can be no occupation under the renewal term of a lease until the original term has expired. Thus, in order to protect a renewal term a lease must be registered or the original term must have expired and occupation commenced under the renewal term. In the present case, the lease was not registered. Unit owners, it is assumed, purchased their units prior to occupation under the renewal term. It is therefore submitted that they are not bound by the renewal term.

This would appear to be so. The trouble with such a conclusion is that it ignores the issue of notice. While some argument was directed to that issue, and I later requested counsel to see if agreement could be reached on it, or on the facts that would afford a basis for a decision, none was reached. Such decisions as Re Jung and Montgomery, [1955] O.W.N. 931, [1955] 5 D.L.R. 287, have not been considered.

The first ground taken by applicant would seem to be valid.

The parties seem to contemplate the trial of an issue. This makes it difficult to tell what order should issue. The parties may speak to me about this and the question of costs.

Order accordingly.

York Condominium Corp. No. 104 et al. v. Halliwell Terrace Ltd. et al.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE OSLER, J. 13TH NOVEMBER 1975

MOTIONS for an order striking out a statement of claim.

William V. Sasso, for all defendants other than Ontario Housing Corporation and Ontario Mortgage Corporation, applicants.

Lynda C.E. Brown, for Ontario Housing Corporation and Ontario Mortgage Corporation, applicants.

A. Burke Doran and M.A. Richardson, for plaintiffs, respondents.

OSLER, J.:-- Three motions were argued before me with respect to this action. The action is brought by York Condominium Corporation No. 104 and by Robin K. Hall and Audley Warburton, owners of units within the condominium, on behalf of themselves and all other members of York Condominium Corporation No. 104. It is brought against Halliwell Terrace Limited, which is the corporate builder of the condominium project, Nicobar Holdings Limited, a corporation which entered into a management agreement with the condominium corporation, the individual defendants Kaiser, Tennenbaum and Bergman, each of whom is said to have entered into a joint venture or agreement to construct a condominium project, Ontario Housing Corporation which approved the plans and specifications under the provisions of the Home Ownership Made Easy (H.O.M.E) Plan and Ontario Mortgage Corporation which partly financed the project. The first motion was for an order requiring the plaintiffs to deliver certain particulars. Pending the hearing of the motion, a fresh as amended statement of claim was delivered and the defendants are now satisfied that the relief requested is no longer required.

The second motion was for an order striking out the statement of claim and dismissing the action in so far as it is brought by the plaintiffs Robin K. Hall and Audley Warburton on behalf of themselves and all other members.

The third motion is brought by the three individual defendants for an order striking out the statement of claim against them as disclosing no reasonable cause of action or as being frivolous or vexatious or, in the alternative, for an order requiring the plaintiffs to deliver particulars of the allegation of the breach of duty by these defendants or of their negligent conduct.

The condominium corporation is still a creature so new to the law of Ontario that many of the procedural matters arising in the course of an action have not yet been settled so far as they apply to this new type of corporation and its members. Section 9(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, provides that the Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 89, does not apply to such a corporation. Section 9(18) provides that an action with respect to the common elements may be brought by the corporation and a judgment for the payment of money in favour of the corporation in such an action is an asset of the corporation. Section 9(16) provides that the members of the corporation share the assets of the corporation in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests in accordance with the Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

Many of the considerations that must be taken into account in an action having to do with the construction of a condominium property, breaches of contract and negligence with respect to such construction, were considered by my brother Cromarty in Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1974), 3 O.R. (2d) 331, 45 D.L.R. (3d) 347. In that action only the condominium corporation sued and the defendant objected that a claim for damages with respect to certain of the common elements should be brought, not by the corporation, by the unit owners as a class. Similarly, it was objected that damages suffered by unit owners as individuals should, in certain cases, be considered as damages to the common elements. Cromarty, J., did not agree that the right of action lay in the unit owners as a class and that a class action need be brought. Nevertheless, he granted leave to amend the statement of claim so as to permit two named individuals to be added as parties plaintiff suing on behalf of themselves and all other owners of units in the condominium, save and except the defendant. I am advised that an appeal is pending in that case, but has not yet been heard by the Court of Appeal. It would appear, however, that my brother Cromarty was concerned to see that what might be meritorious claims should not be permitted to fail because of procedural errors in an action dealing with rights and concepts new to our law.

In Farnham et al. v. Fingold et al., [1973] 2 O.R. 132, 33 D.L.R. (3d) 156, Jessup, J.A., speaking for himself and Brooke and Arnup, J.J.A., the other members of the Court, draws attention to what was said by Lord Lindley in Taff Vale R. Co. v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A.C. 426 at p. 443, about the English equivalent of our present Rule 75, dealing with class actions. The learned Law Lord there stated that:

The principle on which the rule is based forbids its restriction to cases for which an exact precedent can be found in the reports. The principle is as applicable to new cases as to old, and ought to be applied to the exigencies of modern life as occasion requires.

Jessup, J.A., also cast doubt upon what is sometimes said to be the rule that an action for damages cannot proceed as a class action, pointing out that in Bowen v. MacMillan (1921), 21 O.W.N. 23, Ferguson, J.A., permitted a class action to proceed although the claims made were for damages.

In Farnham, at p. 136, it is stated that the rule should be applied to particular cases to produce an expeditious but just result. In that case, it was stated that a class action was not appropriate when the members have damages that must be separately assessed because a defendant would be deprived of individual discoveries and, in the event of success, would have recourse for costs only against the named plaintiffs, although his costs were increased by multiple separate claims.

In the present case, the difficulty regarding discovery may be a very real one. It can, however, be at least partially cured by requiring the plaintiffs to deliver particulars with respect to the damages claimed with regard to each condominium unit. The difficulty about costs, however, would not exist by reason of the fact that the defendant has access in the event of success to the assets of all the members through the condominium corporation itself.

It is said that there may, in fact, be two classes of members of York Condominium, those who contracted originally with the corporation, or with the defendant, Halliwell Terrace Limited, and those who may subsequently have purchased either from original members or from Halliwell after the purported completion of the project.

I think that the final determination as to the propriety of permitting a class action in such a case as this should be left to the trial Judge and not prejudged at this early stage.

The motion to dismiss the action in so far as it is a class action will therefore succeed only to the extent that it will be granted unless the appropriate amendment, for which leave is hereby given, is made to determine with precision the members of the class.

So far as the third motion is concerned, it should be similarly dealt with. It is far from clear that the individual defendants were not personally responsible for some of the allegedly negligent acts. But, again, they are entitled to particulars so as to enable them to plead.

While the success of the defendants has been limited, it has, in my view, been sufficient to entitle them to their costs and costs of the day will therefore be to the defendants in the cause. Counsel fee will be as of one motion.

Order accordingly.

Re York Condominium Corp. No. 42 and Melanson

(1976), 9 O.R. (2d) 116

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL KELLY, HOULDEN and HOWLAND, J.J.A. 14TH APRIL 1975

APPEAL from an order of Pennell, J., made pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, requiring the appellant to remove his dog from his condominium unit.

L.D. Pringle, for appellant.

Geoffrey G.R. Pacey, for respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

HOWLAND, J.A.:-- This is an appeal by Bruce Melanson (Melanson) from an order of Pennell, J., dated September 26, 1974, made pursuant to s. 23 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 (the Act), requiring Melanson to remove from his condominium unit the dog being kept therein within ninety (90) days of service of the order upon him.

York Condominium Corporation No. 42 (the Corporation) was created on August 18, 1971, by the registration of a declaration and description pursuant to s. 9 of the Act. Under s. 3(2) of the Act a declaration may contain:

(c) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

Paragraph (a) of art. XII of the declaration provided:

No unit shall be occupied by more than a single family and shall be used only as a residence for such single family and for no other purpose.

On August 18, 1971, the Corporation enacted By-law Number One. Section 11(1) [since am. 1974, c. 133, s. 8] of the Act provides:

11(1) The by-laws may provide for the making of rules by the owners respecting the use of the common elements for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the units and common elements.

In accordance with this provision, para. (a) of art. III of this by-law made the following provision for the passing of rules respecting the use of the common elements:

The owners, by a vote of members who own fifty-one per cent (51%) of the common elements, may make rules respecting the use of the common elements for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the units and common elements.

By-law Number One was duly registered and became effective on August 18, 1971.

On August 19, 1971, By-law Number Two was enacted by the Corporation. It included the following provision:

The following rules and regulations shall be observed by the owners and the term owner shall include the owner or any other person occupying the unit with the owner's approval: ...

14. No animal shall be allowed upon or kept in or about the property.

Paragraph 14 is hereafter referred to as the "prohibitive paragraph".

By-law Number Two was duly registered and became effective on September 9, 1971. Both By-law Number One and Bylaw Number Two were enacted by Delzotto Enterprises Limited as the owner of all the units and the sole member of the Corporation.

Melanson is the owner of one of the units. By letter dated August 6, 1974, from the solicitors for the Corporation, Melanson was directed to remove his dog from the condominium complex on or before August 23, 1974. An application was then made by the Corporation to enforce compliance with By-law Number Two.

The issue in this appeal is whether the Corporation has exceeded its statutory powers in enacting the prohibitive paragraph, or if it did have the power, is the prohibitive paragraph enforceable? As the Corporation is a statutory creation, the relevant rights and duties of an owner and of the Corporation must be found in the Act. The following provisions are relevant:

2(6) Upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act.

6(2) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of his unit.

7(4) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements.

9(12) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

12(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

(3) The corporation ... has a right to the compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

In creating a condominium corporation, a developer has to consider carefully what restrictions it is going to impose on the user of the units and common elements because such restrictions will affect the character of the condominium and the marketability of its units. The prohibitive paragraph could have been included in the declaration pursuant to s. 3(2) of the Act, just as the declaration provided that each unit should be used only as a single-family residence. However, the objection to so doing is that under s. 3(3) of the Act the declaration may be amended only with the consent of all owners and all persons having registered encumbrances against the units and common interests. In the case of a restriction such as the prohibitive paragraph this could be a formidable task.

Here the prohibitive paragraph was embodied in a by-law. This provides greater flexibility. Since no higher percentage was specified in the declaration, under s. 10(1) of the Act the making of such by-laws only required the vote of members owning 66 2/3% of the common elements. If the prohibitive paragraph in question falls within the Corporation's power to make by-laws, the fact that it is described in By-law Number Two as a rule or regulation does not, in my opinion, affect its validity as a by-law. It is true that the prohibitive paragraph, whilst embodied in By-law Number Two, is referred to as a rule or regulation. In pursuance of s. 11(1) of the Act, By-law Number One authorized the owners, by a vote of members owning 51% of the common elements, to make rules, but such power was limited to rules respecting the use of the common elements. By-law Number Two draws a distinction between the units, the common elements and the property. The by-law does not contain a provision that the word "property" shall have the same meaning in the by-law as in the definition of property in s. 1(1)(n) of the Act, i.e.: "the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description". In my view, however, this is the only proper interpretation to be given to the word in the prohibitive paragraph. Consequently, the attempt to impose restrictions respecting the units would go beyond the powers of the members under By-law Number One to make rules.

Under s. 10(1) the Corporation has power to make by-laws:

(b) governing the use of units or any of them for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units;

(c) governing the use of the common elements;

Under s. 10(2) such by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration.

In order to fall within the Corporation's power to make by-laws under s. 10 of the Act, four matters have to be considered:

(i) are the words "governing the use" in s. 10(1)(b) and (c) of the Act broad enough to include the making of a by-law regulating the allowing of animals upon or the keeping of animals in or about the property?

(ii) are the words "no animal" in the prohibitive paragraph so broad as to be beyond the powers of the Corporation under s. 10(1)(b) of the Act?

(iii) is the prohibitive paragraph reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration as required by s. 10(2) of the Act?

(iv) is the word "animal" in the prohibitive paragraph so broad that even if the Corporation had power to enact the prohibitive paragraph it is incapable of enforcement? "Govern" is defined in The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed., vol. I, at p. 816, to mean: "To rule with authority ... to regulate the affairs of (a body of men)."

A careful distinction has to be drawn between the power to regulate or govern and the power to prohibit. In City of Toronto v. Virgo, [1896] A.C. 88, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had to consider whether under a power to pass by-laws "for ... regulating and governing hawkers or petty chapmen, and other persons carrying on petty trades", the Council might prohibit hawkers from plying their trade at all in a substantial and important part of the city. Lord Davey stated, at pp. 93-4.

No doubt the regulation and governance of a trade may involve the imposition of restrictions on its exercise both as to time and to a certain extent as to place where such restrictions are in the opinion of the public authority necessary to prevent a nuisance or for the maintenance of order. But their Lordships think there is marked distinction to be drawn between the prohibition or prevention of a trade and the regulation or governance of it, and indeed a power to regulate and govern seems to imply the continued existence of that which is to be regulated or governed.

Several cases in the English and Canadian reports were referred to in illustration of the respondent's argument ... through all these cases the general principle may be traced, that a municipal power of regulation or of making by-laws for good government, without express words of prohibition, does not authorize the making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner.

In Re Karry and City of Chatham (1910), 21 O.L.R. 566, the Court of Appeal had to consider whether a by-law of the City of Chatham, stipulating the hours when eating houses should be closed, was a "regulation" authorized by the Municipal Act which provided that the Council could pass by-laws "for limiting the number of and regulating such houses". Magee, J.A., pointed out at p. 573: "The partial prohibition, it has thus long been recognised, may well come within the powers of regulation."

In Re R. v. Napier, [1941] O.R. 30, [1941] 1 D.L.R. 528, 75 C.C.C. 191, the statute authorized the passing of by-laws "For licensing, regulating and governing bill posters ...". A by-law had been passed prohibiting the distributing of bills by leaving them in or on parked motor-cars or by handing them to persons on the street. Hogg, J., concluded at p. 34 O.R., pp. 531-2 D.L.R., that:

... the prevention of such activities in connection with this trade or calling is not of such a degree that it can be said to be practically a prohibition of the entire business or trade of bill distributors. There is still left to them the large field, which seems to constitute the greater part -- or at least as great a part -- of this business, namely, of leaving bills at the residences and other buildings in the municipality.

Here the power of the Corporation is to make by-laws "governing the use of units" and "governing the use of the common elements". In this appeal, the prohibitive paragraph as to allowing animals upon or keeping them in or about the units or common elements, is only a partial prohibition of the use of the units or the common elements. It would properly fall within the power to regulate the use of the units and common elements. In my view the word "governing" in s. 10(1)(b) is broad enough to include the restriction respecting animals in the prohibitive paragraph. It would be quite different if the power in s. 10(1)(b) and (c) of the Act had been to make by-laws governing the allowing or keeping of animals on the units or the common elements. In that event the prohibitive clause would have been ultra vires of the Corporation as it would have been a prohibition rather than a regulation.

It should be pointed out that the power to make by-laws under s. 10(1)(b) and under s. 10(1)(c) is with respect to "the use" of units and the common elements, whereas s. 3(2) (c) stipulates that the declaration may contain provisions respecting "the occupation and use" of the units and common elements.

As Lord Radcliffe pointed out in Arbuckle Smith & Co., Ltd. v. Greenock Corp., [1960] 1 All E.R. 568 at p. 574:

"Use" is not a word of precise meaning, but in general it conveys the idea of enjoyment derived by the user from the corpus of the object enjoyed. Robertson, C.J.O., in R. v. Lou Hay Hung, [1946] O.R. 187, stated at pp. 191-2:

The words "occupy" and "occupant" have a variety of shades of meaning. No doubt, we commonly speak of the "occupants" of a dwelling-house, meaning thereby all persons who, at the time, live there. We use the word in even a wider sense when we speak of the "occupants" of premises, meaning thereby all the persons who happen to be within them at the particular time. Primarily, however, "to occupy" means "to take possession" ... Possession is a primary element but occupation includes something more. As Lord Denning explained in Newcastle City Council v. Royal Newcastle Hospital, [1959] AC. 248 at p. 255: "Occupation is matter of fact and only exists where there is sufficient measure of control to prevent strangers from interfering ...".

Under s. 3(2)(c) of the Act, the right to include a provision in the declaration respecting occupation of the units would embrace such matters as restricting the use to single-family residences. On the other hand, the right to restrict the keeping of animals in such units as incidental to such single-family use would seem properly to fall within the power to make by-laws governing the use of units.

It will also be noted that the power to make by-laws is more restrictive under s. 10(1)(b) of the Act than it is under s. 10(1)(c). Under s. 10(1)(b) the power can only be exercised "for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units". This brings me to a consideration of the second question, whether the words "no animals" in the prohibitive paragraph are so broad as to be ultra vires of the Corporation.

The word "animal" is very comprehensive. The definition in The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed., at p. 68, includes: "1. A living being, endowed with sensation and voluntary motion, but in the lowest forms distinguishable from vegetable forms ... 2. One of the lower animals; a brute or beast, as distinguished from man." Black's Law Dictionary, 4th ed., defines "animal" as "Any animate being which is endowed with the power of voluntary motion. An animate being, not human." In The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, supra, at p. 181, it is noted that the word "bird" is defined as "any feathered vertebrate animal" and at p. 705, that "fish" is defined as "In pop. language, any animal living exclusively in the water ... In scientific language any vertebrate animal provided with gills throughout life, and cold-blooded; the limbs, if present, being modified into fins."

The words "no animal" in the prohibitive paragraph are wide enough to include not only cats and dogs but such animals as hamsters, canaries and goldfish. Can it be said that the broad prohibition against any animal being allowed upon or kept in or about the units is for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and other units? In my opinion it cannot. I am unable to conclude that goldfish, for example, would cause such unreasonable interference. Section 6(2) of the Act makes it clear that subject to the Act, the declaration, and the by-laws, each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use right to keep pets. The declaration does not contain any prohibition against the keeping of animals in the units. It is appreciated that it is important in a condominium development, particularly a condominium apartment building, to prevent the of his unit. One of the incidents of such ownership is the owner of a unit from unreasonably interfering with the use and enjoyment by others of their units and of the common elements. As Driver, Assoc. J., stated in Sterling Village Condominium, Inc. v. Breitenbach (1971), Fla., 251 So. 2d 685 at p. 688:

Every man may justly consider his home his castle and himself as the king thereof; nonetheless his sovereign fiat to use his property as he pleases must yield, at least in degree, where ownership is in common or cooperation with others. The benefits of condominium living and ownership demand no less.

The owners of 66 2/3% or more of the common elements may wish to pass a by-law to protect themselves against unreasonable interference by way of vicious, malodorous, dirty or noisy animals, or pollution of the common elements. However, the prohibitive paragraph in question goes far beyond the limited powers in s. 10(1)(b) to govern the use of units and would have the effect of prohibiting animals in or about the units which could not be the cause of unreasonable interference.

In my view, the prohibitive paragraph in question, in so far as it governs the use of units, is beyond the powers of the Corporation. It should be observed that the powers of the Corporation under s. 10(1)(c) are to govern the use of the common elements and there is no limitation on the exercise of this power as in the case of s. 10(1)(b). It would seem that under s. 10 (1)(c) the Corporation could prohibit animals generally from being allowed upon the common elements.

If access to the units can only be obtained by passing through the common elements, then even if the portion of the prohibitive paragraph governing the use of the units were invalid, the owner of a unit might be prohibited from bringing animals into the units. The question arises whether the portion of the prohibitive paragraph which regulates the use of the units is severable from the portion which regulates the use of the common elements, or whether the entire prohibitive paragraph is ultra vires of the Corporation.

As Craies points out in his text on Statute Law, 6th ed. (1963), at p. 335, there is some difference of judicial opinion as to whether a by-law is severable or divisible. In Strickland v. Hayes, [1896] 1 Q.B. 290 at p. 292, Lindley, L.J., stated: There is plenty of authority for saying that if a by-law can be divided, one part may be rejected as bad while the rest may be held to be good.

On the question of severability, decisions respecting the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to quash a municipal by-law in whole or in part under s. 283(1) of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 284, are of assistance. In Re Morrison and City of Kingston, [1938] O.R. 21 at p. 27, [1937] 4 D.L.R. 740 at p. 745, 69 C.C.C. 251, Middleton, J.A., said:

It is not, I think, competent to the Court to quash part of a by-law, unless it is clearly severable from the provisions that remain.

This statement was approved by the Court of Appeal in Re Musty's Service Stations Ltd. and Ottawa, [1959] O.R. 342, 22 D.L.R. (2d) 311, 124 C.C.C. 85, where Aylesworth, J.A., in delivering the judgment of the Court, concluded that the invalid provisions of the by-law were integral and indispensable parts of the by-law and were not severable from the rest of the by-law. In so far as the prohibitive paragraph itself is concerned, in view of the fact that the prohibition is made applicable to the property which includes both the units and the common elements, I do not think it is possible to sever the portion of the paragraph which deals with the units from the portion which deals with the common elements even if s. 10(1)(c) was wide enough to permit the restriction so far as the common elements were concerned.

Having reached this conclusion it is not necessary to consider the third question which arises as a result of s. 10(2) of the Act which provides:

10(2) The by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act and the declaration.

Nor is it necessary to consider the fourth question, that the word "animal" in the prohibitive paragraph is so broad that even if the Corporation had power to enact the prohibitive paragraph it is incapable of enforcement.

Paragraph 14 of By-law Number Two is, in my view, beyond the powers of the Corporation in its entirety. It is not necessary to express any view as to the validity of the remaining provisions of By-law Number Two as para. 14 is severable from the remaining provisions of the by-law.

The appeal should be allowed, the order of Pennell, J., set aside and in its place there should be an order dismissing the application brought by the applicant by its notice of motion dated August 27, 1974. The appellant should have his costs of this appeal and of the application before Pennell, J.

Appeal allowed.

[1996] T.C.J. No. 1185, Court File Nos. 94-979(IT)G, 94-980(IT)G

Tax Court of Canada Toronto, Ontario Sobier T.C.J. Heard: August 22, 1996 Judgment: August 23, 1996

Robert R. Jason, for the Appellants. Marilyn Vardy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeals from the assessments made under the Income Tax Act for the 1990 and 1991 taxation year are dismissed, with costs.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] SOBIER T.C.J.:-- The Court is now prepared to give Reasons for Judgment in the appeal between Rosemarie Evertz and Her Majesty the Queen, 94-979(IT)G, and Dieter Evertz and Her Majesty the Queen, 94-980(IT)G. These appeals were heard on common evidence under the General Procedure of this court.

[para2] The Appellants appeal for the assessments by the Minister of National Revenue for their 1990 and 1991 taxation years whereby the Minister denied their claims for interest deductions in the amount of $53,408.00 in 1990 and $67,413.00 in 1991. These amounts with respect to both Appellants were in the aggregate.

[para3] In 1986 the Appellants agreed to purchase a condominium at 401 Queens Quay West Toronto, Ontario (the "condominium"). Although the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was executed in 1986, the closing did not take place until September 12, 1989. However, the Appellants occupied the condominium since June 30th, 1987 paying a monthly occupancy fee. The condominium was purchased for cash and was free from encumbrances at the time of closing. The purchase price was $417,000.00 subject to adjustments. In 1989 the Appellants agreed to purchase a home at 115 Appleby Place, (the "home") in Burlington, Ontario. The purchase price was $950,000.00 all cash. The purchase of the home was completed on March 30th, 1990.

[para5] In examination of statements of adjustments and other documents shows that the proceeds of the mortgage loan went into a solicitor's particular account and those same proceeds came out of that account and were paid to the vendor of the home. From the evidence of Mrs. Evertz there is no doubt that the proceeds of the loan secured by the mortgage on the condominium were used as part of the purchase price of the home.

[para6] The Appellants moved out of the condominium in September 1990. At that time, they attempted to rent it. They were unsuccessful in 1990. Therefore, there was no rental income for 1990. However, in 1991 it was rented to a Swiss banker for a gross rental of $21,285.00. Rental expenses in 1990 were claimed at about $32,000.00 of which approximately $27,000.00 was claimed to be interest expense. In 1991, rental expense of approximately $84,000.00 was claimed of which approximately $67,000.00 was claimed to be interest expense.

[para7] In the fullness of time, the Appellants were reassessed and the interest expenses were disallowed. The reason given for the disallowance was that the deduction was not one permitted under subparagraph 20(1)(c)(i) of The Income Tax Act. That subparagraph states as follows, and I quote:

"Notwithstanding paragraphs 18(1)(a), (b) and (h), in computing a taxpayer's income for a taxation year from a business or property, there may be deducted such of the following amounts as are wholly applicable to that source or such part of the following amounts as may reasonably be regarded as applicable thereto."

And paragraph (c) reads:

"An amount paid in the year or payable in respect of the year (depending on the method regularly followed by the Appellant in computing the taxpayer's income), pursuant to a legal obligation to pay interest on (i) money borrowed for the purpose of earning income from a business or a property."

[para8] The issue, therefore, simply stated is whether the $600,000.00 borrowed by the Appellants from CIBC and secured by the mortgage on the condominium and used to aid in the purchase of the home was money borrowed for the purpose of earning income from a business or property and in particular the condominium.

[para9] The Appellants claim, among other things, that having converted the condominium to a rental property, they are entitled to deduct the mortgage interest payable on the loan secured by the mortgage of the condominium.

[para10] A leading case in the deductibility of interest is The Queen v. Bronfman Trust, 87 D.T.C. 5059 (S.C.C.), a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. In analyzing the history of deductibility of interest, Chief Justice Dickson pointed out that without the existence of a provision such as paragraph 20(1)(c), no deduction for interest would be possible generally. He goes on to say at page 5064:

"The statutory deduction thus requires a characterization of the use of borrowed money as between the eligible use of earning non-exempt income from a business or property in a variety of possible ineligible uses. The onus is on the taxpayer to trace the borrowed funds to an identifiable use which triggers the deduction. Therefore, if the taxpayer commingles funds used for a variety of purposes only some of which are eligible, he or she may be unable to claim the deduction. See, for example, Mills v. M.N.R. 85 D.T.C. 632 (T.C.C.), No. 616 v. M.N.R. 59 D.T.C. 247 (T.A.B.). The interest deduction provisions requires not only a characterization of the used of borrowed funds, but also a characterization of purpose. Eligibility for deduction is contingent on the use of borrowed money for the purpose of earning income. It is well established in the jurisprudence, however, that it is not the purpose of the borrowing itself which is relevant. What is relevant, rather, is the taxpayer's purpose in using the borrowed money in a particular manner. Auld v. M.N.R. 62 D.T.C. 27 (T.A.B.). Consequently, the focus of the inquiry must be centered on the use to which the taxpayer put the borrowed funds."

[para11] The Appellants here urged the Court to look at direct or indirect use of those monies. However, at page 5065 of Bronfman Trust, the Chief Justice goes on to say, and I quote:

"If in my view, neither The Income Tax Act or the weight of judicial authority permits the courts to ignore the direct use to which a taxpayer puts borrowed money. One need only contemplate the consequences of the interpretation sought by the Trust in order to reach the conclusion that it cannot have been intended by Parliament. In order for the Trust to succeed, subparagraph 20(1)(c)(i) would have to be interpreted so that a deduction would be permitted for borrowings by any taxpayer who owned income producing assets. Such a taxpayer could, on this view, apply the proceeds of a loan to purchase a life insurance policy, to take a vacation, to buy speculative properties, or to engage in any other non-income-earning or ineligible activity. Nevertheless, the interest would be deductible. A less wealthy taxpayer, with no income earning assets, would not be able to deduct interest payments on loans used in the identical fashion. Such an interpretation would be unfair as between taxpayers and would make a mockery of the statutory requirement that, for interest payments to be deductible, borrowed money must be used for circumscribed income-earning purposes."

And further on that page he says:

"It is not surprising, therefore, that cases interpreting 20(1)(c)(i) and its predecessor provisions have not favoured the view that a direct ineligible use of borrowed money ought to be overlooked whenever an indirect eligible use of funds can be found."

[para12] The actual use of the borrowed monies was to purchase the home, not to earn income from the condominium. The condominium was merely used as security given by the Appellants to secure a loan of $600,000.00 which enabled them to purchase the home. Here we have an attempt to deduct interest on a loan for a principal residence in the guise of a business venture. Accordingly, I find that the interest paid on the $600,000.00 borrowed and secured by the mortgage on the condominium was not interest paid for the purpose of earning income from that property. For these reasons, the appeals are dismissed with costs.

Atriums at Willowells v. Canada

Between Atriums at Willowells Partnership, Appellant, and Her Majesty the Queen, Respondent

[1996] T.C.J. No. 66, Court File No. 95-750(GST) Tax Court of Canada Bonner T.C.J. Heard: August 17, 1995 Judgment: January 29, 1996

Robert W. McMechan, for the Appellant. Donald Gibson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeal from the assessment made under Part IX of the Excise Tax Act, notice of which is dated November 30, 1994 and bears number number 04BP-OTT0007903 is allowed with costs and the assessment is referred back to the Minister of National Revenue for reassessment in accordance with the attached Reasons for Judgment.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] BONNER T.C.J.:-- This is an appeal from an assessment of the special 4% tax imposed under subsection 336(3) of the Excise Tax Act ("Act") on the appellant as supplier of certain condominium units. The appellant developed a condominium project consisting of 130 residential units. The appeal relates to 39 [See Note 1 below] of them.

Note 1: Initially the appellant contended that 44 of the units were not subject to the tax but counsel abandoned the appeal with respect to a group of five of them.

[para2] Subsection 336(3) reads as follows:

336. (3) -- Where (a) a taxable supply by way of sale of a residential condominium unit in Canada is made to a person under an agreement in writing entered into before October 14, 1989 between the supplier and the person,

(b) ownership and possession of the unit are not transferred to the person under the agreement before 1991, and

(c) possession of the unit is transferred to the person under the agreement at any time after 1990, the following rules apply:

(d) no tax is payable by the person in respect of the supply,

(e) subsection 191(1) does not apply in respect of the unit before possession thereof is transferred to the person,

(f) where the person is a builder of the unit, (i) if the person is a builder of the unit only because of paragraph (d) of the definition "builder" in subsection 123(1), (A) the person shall be deemed not to be a builder of the unit, and (B) for the purposes of determining whether any other person who, after that time, makes a supply of the unit or an interest therein is a builder of the unit, the condominium complex in which the unit is located shall be deemed to have been registered at that time as a condominium and the unit shall be deemed to have been occupied at that time by an individual as a place of residence, and (ii) in any other case, for the purposes of determining an input tax credit of the person, the person shall be deemed to have paid, at that time, tax in respect of the supply equal to 4% of the consideration for the supply, and

(g) the supplier shall be deemed to have collected, at that time, tax in respect of the supply equal to 4% of the consideration for the supply.

[para3] It will be noted that the tax in question is imposed by a transitional provision in circumstances where the recipient of the supply is not liable for tax in respect of the supply.

1. ...

The Purchaser hereby agrees with the Vendor to purchase Level 01 Unit 02 Residence Type A4 on the proposed Plan of Condominium (herein called the "Unit" which definition shall also include the channels listed herein) to be built on the lands described as Part of Block D. Plan 1467, City of Waterloo described as Parts 3, 4 and 5 on Registered Plan 58R-4608, City of Waterloo, in the Regional Municipality of Waterloo and together with the common elements appurtenant thereto. The parties acknowledge that, notwithstanding anything contained herein to the contrary, prior to registration of the Project as a condominium, "Unit" shall mean an undivided interest in the Project in accordance with the percentage interest of the Unit as set out in Schedule "D" of the declaration. (Emphasis added)

The Purchase Price herein will include a separate parking unit and a separate locker unit. The Vendor will have the arbitrary right to assign on or before the completion date a separate parking unit and a separate locker unit to which individual title will be given on the Transfer Date.

The Purchase Price of Two hundred and sixteen thousand, nine hundred and ninety-nine DOLLARS ($216,999.00) shall be payable in lawful money of Canada in the manner set out in paragraph 4. Paragraph 3 and following of this Agreement are in Schedule "F", which together with Schedules "A", "B", "C", "D", "E", "G", "H", "I", "J" and "K" of this Agreement are an integral part hereof and are contained on subsequent pages. The Purchaser acknowledges that he has read all paragraphs and Schedules of this Agreement.

4. Payment of Purchase Price The Purchase Price of the Unit shall be payable (in lawful money of Canada) as follows:

(a) (1) as evidence of the Purchaser's indebtedness and obligation to pay an amount equal to twenty five percent (25%) of the Purchase Price not later than the Transfer Date, the Purchaser shall deliver to the Vendor Promissory Note #1, secured by an unconditional, irrevocable letter of credit (the "Letter of Credit") issued by a financial institution acceptable to the Vendor (herein called the "Bank"), due and payable on the earlier of the Transfer Date or March 1, 1991 bearing interest from April 1, 1989 at ten percent (10%) per annum calculated ...

(b) as evidence of the Purchaser's indebtedness and obligation to pay the balance of the Purchase Price, the Purchaser shall deliver to the Vendor upon execution of this Agreement the Mortgage Financing Promissory Note #2 in an amount equal to seventy-five percent (75%) of the Purchase Price as security for his obligation to complete the transaction contemplated herein. Promissory Note #2 shall be due on the Transfer Date, together with interest at the rate ... Interest calculated as aforesaid, as well after as before maturity and both before and after default and judgment, shall be computed from the Completion Date and shall become due and payable on the first day on the month next following the Completion Date and, thereafter, monthly, ...

5. Closing Date

From the Completion Date, the Purchaser shall be entitled to receipt of all revenues from the Unit and shall be responsible for payment of all expenses for the Unit, including payment of interest on all mortgages to be assumed by the Purchaser, whether advanced or not, subject to the Optional Services Agreement, the Optional Cash Flow Guarantee Agreement and Optional Rental Management Agreement as set out herein. The Transfer Date shall be the date designated by the Vendor or its solicitors which date shall not be less than fourteen (14) days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's solicitors to the Purchaser or his solicitor that the Declaration and Description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to complete the transaction on the Transfer Date, he shall be in default hereunder and the provisions of Paragraph 11 of this Agreement shall apply. (Emphasis added)

[para5] Completion date is a defined term under the Agreement. The definitions of completion date and closing date were:

(f) "Closing Date" means the Completion Date;

(g) "Completion Date" shall be the earlier of (i) the date when the architect certifies that the Building is substantially complete, and (ii) September 1, 1990;

The completion date was September 1, 1990. The architect's certificate regarding substantial completion of the building was delayed until the Spring of 1991 because landscaping was not completed until then. Completion date is not to be confused with transfer date. The definition of that term was:

(ab) "Transfer Date" shall be the date designated by the Vendor or its solicitors as the date for conveying registered title to the Unit to the Purchaser, notwithstanding that a Transfer/Deed of Land may not be registered on such designated date. The Transfer Date is currently projected to be March 1, 1991, but in no event shall it be later than March 1, 1992. ...

[para6] The Agreement contained a declaration of trust by the vendor in the following terms:

NOW THEREFORE THE UNDERSIGNED HEREBY DECLARES that from and after the Completion Date, it will hold beneficial title to the Unit solely as Trustee and Agent for and on behalf of the Purchaser in accordance with the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

[para7] The Agreement contained a schedule which consisted of a Rental Management Agreement appointing Mastercraft Investments Corporation as agent of the "owner" Mr. Roberts to be sole and exclusive representative and managing agent to manage the unit on behalf of the owner. The appointment of the agent became effective on the completion date, September 1, 1990. It was the obligation of the agent to use best efforts to arrange for the rental of the unit at the highest possible rent and to do and perform all act necessary on behalf of the owner for the proper and efficient management of the unit including insuring it.

[para9] Another feature of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was schedule (g), a Cash Flow Guarantee Agreement between Mr. Roberts and Mastercraft Investments Corporation. The Agreement provided in part:

2.01 Provided that during the currency of this Agreement the Guarantor is also the agent for the Owner under the Rental Management Agreement, the Guarantor shall provide a Cash Flow Guarantee for and on behalf of the Owner as follows:

2.02 (a) Mastercraft shall be responsible to the Purchaser for the leasing of the Unit until an initial lease is executed by a tenant. Mastercraft shall develop, institute and supervise programs, policies and procedures with respect to marketing and tenant selection. Mastercraft shall investigate rental markets, prepare advertising brochures, signs, billboards, display materials or model suites, rental office and other information which Mastercraft deems necessary for the lease of the Project and Mastercraft shall pay out of the gross revenue on behalf of the owner the costs of such advertisements in such media and such other leasing costs, (including without limitation, commissions to rental agents) as Mastercraft deems appropriate during the period from the Completion Date to the earlier of the end of the Guarantee Period (as that term is defined in subparagraph (b) below) and the date on which the Unit is first rented. All of the above costs after such date shall be payable and shall be for the account of the Purchaser and are not included in any rental management fee payable to Mastercraft pursuant to the Rental Management Agreement;

(b) From the Completion Date to December 31, 1992 subject to earlier termination as set out in paragraph (d) below (the "Guarantee Period") Mastercraft shall provide a grant that will ensure that the Cash Flow actually received from the Unit owned by the Purchaser shall be equal to those amounts for those years indicated opposite the line "Guaranteed Cash Flow" on Schedule "1" hereto pertaining to the Purchase Price of the Unit. In the event that the actual Cash Flow received from the Unit is in excess of the Guaranteed Cash Flow, such excess shall accrue as to fifty percent (50%) to the owner and as to fifty percent (50%) to Mastercraft, provided that any cash flow in excess of the Guaranteed Cash Flow in any year shall be firstly applied to any shortfall in any other year or years. Any remaining excess shall be retained by the Agent pursuant to the Rental Management Agreement until the expiry of the Guarantee Period, at which time any remaining excess shall be divided equally between the Purchaser and Mastercraft.

2.03 In consideration of the Guarantor providing the above guarantee, the Owner covenants and agrees to pay to the Guarantor the sum indicated on Schedule "A" of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. ...

[para10] Counsel for the appellant stated that the question to be decided is whether ownership and possession of the unit were transferred to Mr. Roberts under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale before 1991. He pointed out that subsection 123(1) of the Act defines the term residential condominium unit for purposes of the Act as follows:

123.(1) Definitions -- In section 121, this Part and Schedules V, VI and VII, ...

"residential condominium unit" means a residential complex that is, or is intended to be, a bounded space in a building designated or described as a separate unit on a registered condominium or strata lot plan or description, or a similar plan or description registered under the laws of a province, and includes any interest in land pertaining to ownership of the unit;

That definition, he emphasized, includes both residential complexes that are registered as condominium units and that are intended to be so registered. His position was that Mr. Roberts' unit was a residential complex intended to be described as a separate unit within the definition, that both ownership and possession had been transferred to Mr. Roberts under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale before 1991 and that neither paragraphs (b) or (c) of subsection 336(3) was satisfied.

[para11] In this regard counsel argued that the ownership test does not require conveyance of title to the unit. It was, he said, sufficient if the recipient of the supply held the incidents of ownership and in this regard he relied on the decision of the Exchequer Court in M.N.R. v. Wardean Drilling Ltd., 69 D.T.C. 5194. With regard to possession it was not suggested that Mr. Roberts and the other investors took possession of their respective units personally. Rather the position was that they took possession through their agent Mastercraft Investments Corporation acting under the Rental Management Agreement.

[para12] In my view ownership of what ultimately became the unit was not transferred to the appellant as a consequence of the creation of the trust. Until the project was registered as a condominium the subject matter of the trust was, according to the Agreement, an undivided interest in the project and not beneficial ownership of the unit.

[para13] The facts on which the appellant relied in support of the assertion that ownership and possession of the unit passed to the purchaser on September 1, 1990, the date variously described in the Agreement as the closing date or the completion date, tended to overlap. Those facts included: (1) the execution by the purchaser, Mr. Roberts, of a Power of Attorney authorizing Mastercraft to execute on his behalf transfers and mortgages of the unit in accordance with the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and to execute other documents necessary to effect the sale of the unit in accordance with the Agreement.

(2) The obligation from and after September 1, 1990 to pay municipal taxes, telephone, utility and other charges billed directly to the unit by the supplier of the services.

(3) The Cash Flow Guarantee Agreement which describes Mr. Roberts, the purchaser of the unit, as owner and in effect requires that Mastercraft Investments Corporation be responsible to the purchaser for the leasing of the unit and make up the difference between cash flow actually received from the unit and a specified guaranteed amount.

(4) A Management Agreement whereby the purchaser, described in the Management Agreement as owner, "... engages and appoints the Agent to be its sole and exclusive representative and managing agent to manage for and on behalf of the Owner ... the Unit ...". The appointment of the agent under the Management Agreement is to commence on a date which by virtue of definitions contained in the Agreement is the completion date under the Purchase Agreement that is to say, September 1, 1990.

[para14] Counsel for the respondent argued that both ownership and possession passed in 1991 and not before. He supported this position with reference to dictionary definitions of the word ownership none of which I found particularly helpful in arriving at a solution in this case.

[para15] In my view there is little room for doubt that ownership of a residential condominium unit as defined in section 123 of the Act did not pass before 1991. Wardean Drilling Ltd. is of little help. In that case the Court had to decide when property was "acquired" for purposes of capital cost allowance. When paragraph 336(3)(b) speaks of ownership, it speaks of it as of something distinct from possession. The statutory language suggests to me that the legislature envisaged ownership as involving either legal title or something very close to it. It did not envisage an approximation of ownership derived from inferences of the sort which might be drawn from the Agreement of Purchase and Sale in this case. It is impossible to infer that a purchaser under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale could have had ownership of a "bounded space" in the building at any time before 1991 because the unit as a thing capable of ownership did not then exist as an entity separate from the rest of the building. The unit as a thing capable of separate and distinct ownership could come into existence only upon the registration of the condominium.

[para17] Turning next to the question whether the appellant put the purchasers into possession of their suites before 1991 I note that, although the matter is not free from difficulty because of problems in the drafting of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and its schedules, it is tolerably clear that Mr. Roberts and the purchasers of the other 38 units in question took possession before 1991. They did so under their respective agreements through the agency of Mastercraft acting under the Rental Management

Agreements. The drafting problem to which I refer is, of course, the definition of "unit" in paragraph (1) of the Agreement. When the Agreement is read as a whole and in particular when the Management Agreement, schedule (I) to the main Agreement, is taken into account it is evident that the definition cannot sensibly be applied throughout and that the parties contemplated that purchasers of the units would be entitled from and after the closing date to rent their respective "bounded spaces" to tenants. That they could not do in the absence of a right to possession of the units. As I read the Agreement, the appellant as vendor could not after September 1, 1990 or at least after physical completion assert against a purchaser a continued right to possession of the space intended to be that purchaser's unit.

[para18] For the foregoing reasons the appeal will be allowed with costs and the assessment is referred back to the Minister of National Revenue for reassessment consistent with these reasons.

K. Hood, for the Appellant. C. Coderre, for the Respondent.

CHRISTIE A.C.J.T.C.:-- The years under review are 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985. In reassessing the appellant's liability to income tax for those years the respondent assigned specified values to benefits received by the appellant in each year as a shareholder of Deroheath Investments Limited ("Deroheath"). The benefits pertain to the use by the appellant of a condominium and two yachts. It is the value of those benefits that is in dispute. What is in paragraph 15(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act ("the Act") that applies to this appeal provides that where, in a taxation year, a benefit has been conferred on a shareholder by a corporation, the value thereof shall be included in computing the income of the shareholder for the year. This table summarizes the value of the benefits according to the litigants and the amounts in dispute.

Condominium

Appellant's Respondent's Amount in Value Value Dispute

1983 $1,336 $22,490 $21,154

1984 1,686 25,039 23,353

1985 1,233 26,994 25,761

1982 $2,581 $11,981 $ 9,400

1983 4,218 8,700 4,482

1984 8,303 14,218 5,915

1985 7,665 14,315 6,650

The appellant is president and owns 50% of the voting shares of Deroheath. The other 50% are held in trust for the benefit of the appellant's wife and three children. Deroheath owns 50% of the voting shares of SeeSee Holdings Limited ("SeeSee") and the other 50% are owned by another holding company. SeeSee in turn owns all of the shares of Seeburn Metal Products Ltd. ("Seeburn") which manufactures jacks for automobiles. The profits of Seeburn flow to the two holding companies and from SeeSee to Deroheath. This is the source of nearly all of funds received by Deroheath. Included in the other assets of Deroheath have been three condominiums in Florida and two yachts. Three questions require answers in respect of the yachts. They are:

- (i) Were they employed primarily for business or personal use?
- (ii) What amount of time is to be allocated for personal use?
- (iii) Were they purchased for a business purpose?

The first yacht was bought in 1981 for $80,000 and the second for $140,000 in 1984 as a replacement. While owned by Deroheath they were berthed at a marina located between Lakes Couchiching and Simcoe. The appellant's home is in Orillia and fronts on Lake Couchiching. Moored there were two other power boats and a sailboat owned by him.

Seeburn operates two plants: one in Beaverton overlooking Lake Simcoe, and the other in Tottenham, which is inland and about 100 kilometres by road to the southwest of Beaverton.

The original intention in purchasing the first yacht was primarily for the personal use of the appellant and some business use, but the reverse occurred in 1981 soon after the acquisition. The business use consisted of taking parties on cruises on Lake Simcoe, Lake Couchiching, Georgian Bay and the Trent canal system to promote the commercial interests of Seeburn. These groups consisted of individuals associated with customers, suppliers, banks, auditors and legal advisers who did business with Seeburn. Also included in the cruises were key employees of Seeburn.

During the years under appeal the appellant did not keep a log for the yachts. He began to maintain a log in 1989 on the advice of an official at Revenue Canada given at a meeting about the reassessments under appeal. The time of this advice is not precise, but the reassessments were made on June 10, 1987 and objected to by the appellant on September 1, 1987. Confirmation of the reassessments is dated July 4, 1989. Copies of pages from the log for the period May 21, 1989, to September 16, 1989, are in evidence. Among other things they indicate the date of use, point of origin, destination and length in time of each journey. They also specify whether the use was for "Pleasure" or "Business". This would be expanded upon. For example, the outing on May 21, 1989, is designated "Pleasure" and states: "Orillia Fire Works Display Family & Friends". The outing on June 7, 1989, is designated "Business" and states: "Stelco (followed by a number of names) seafood platter from John Dory's & drinks". Copies of similar pages for 1990 are in evidence. They relate to the period May 20, 1990, to September 16, 1990. These exhibits show the time spent on business in 1989 as 56.6 hours during 12 days and the time devoted to pleasure in that year as 32.55 hours during 11 days. The same figures in 1990 are: 47.2 hours - 10 days and 29.25 hours - 9 days. In percentages the hours of use in 1989 was business 63.5 and pleasure 36.5. The same percentages for 1990 are 62 and 38.

The appellant described these figures as "fairly representative" or "fairly typical" of the use of the yachts during the period 1982-1985. In fact in reporting the benefit the appellant went well beyond these figures and fixed 25 days in each of the years under review as personal use and at the hearing he continued with that number even though it was said by counsel for the appellant to be excessive.

My conclusion on the evidence is that during 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 the primary use of the yachts was for business purposes and that the personal use by the appellant is to be taken as 25 days. As I understand it, the parties agree that in such circumstances the amount by which 25 is to be multiplied to arrive at the value of these benefits is the figures in the reply to the notice of appeal referred to as "Per Day Rental" minus the amounts shown as "Expenses paid by Shareholder". They are: 1982 - $235 and $3,294; 1983 - $249 and $2,007; 1984 - $455 and $3,072 and 1985 - $475 and $4,210. The result of these calculations is that the value of the benefit is 1982 - $2,581, 1983 - $4,218, 1984 - $8,303, 1985 - $7,665 which are the values reported by the appellant.

With respect to the respondent's submission that because of the removed relationship of Diroheath to the operating company Seeburn, the former cannot be regarded as having acquired the yachts for a business purpose, I note that this same kind of argument was rejected in The Queen v. Houle, [1983] C.T.C. 406 (F.C.T.D.). In this case Joyce Management Limited ("Joyce") purchased a 37 foot Canoe Cove vessel called the "Sans Souci". The defendant Houle owned all of the shares of Joyce and it, in turn, owned all of the shares of Houle Electric Ltd. which was an operating company engaged in electrical contracting in a large way. Collier J. said at page 408:

In the years under review, the vessel was not technically used by Joyce for business promotion purposes. But it was used on behalf of Houle Electric, Joyce's source of income, to entertain, and to promote the obtaining of private, industrial and commercial electrical contracts by Houle Electric.

In rejecting the submission ". . . that the acquisition or ownership of the yacht by Joyce Management Limited had no business purpose" his Lordship said at page 410:

The evidence of the defendant satisfies me this vessel was acquired by Joyce, in 1970, for a business purpose. It was for use to promote business contacts and to assist in obtaining contracts for Joyce's wholly-owned subsidiary, Houle Electric.

Counsel for the respondent seeks to distinguish Houle from the case at hand on the basis that Seeburn is not a wholly-owned subsidiary of Diroheath. I do not believe that because the holding company SeeSee is interspersed between Seeburn and Diroheath this makes the conclusion in Houle inapplicable to the case at hand.

Turning now to the condominium. The essential disagreement regarding it pertains to the period of time during each of the years under review that the condominium constituted a benefit to the appellant. The appellant says that the actual use by him and his family did not exceed eight weeks per year spread over the period commencing typically during the long weekend of Canadian Thanksgiving in October to May and that eight weeks should be regarded as the benefit period. The respondent treats all of 1983, 1984 and 1985 as the benefit period. The appellant made personal use of the condominium after it was purchased in June of 1982, but the value of that benefit is not in issue. The rental value of the condominium in the other years under review consists of peak rates and other rates. These rates were supplied by the appellant to and accepted by Revenue Canada. The peak monthly rates and other rates in US currency are: 1983 - $2,075 and $1,500; 1984 - $2,200 and $1,575; 1985 - $2,300 and $1,653. Annual expenses about which there is no quarrel are, again in US currency: 1983 - $3,057; 1984 - $3,083; 1985 - $3,685. There is a dispute about how much should be allocated to the peak rates and the other rates. The appellant says the peak rates should not apply to more than two or three months in a year. The respondent contends that in each year six months is applicable to the peak rates and the remainder to the other rates.

The appellant calculates the condominium benefit as 2 times the peak rate minus expenses or: 1983, $2 \times $2,075 = $4,150 - $3,057 = $1,093 \times \text{conversion factor } $1.2228 = $1,336 \text{ Cdn}$; 1984, $2 \times $2,200 = $4,400 - $3,083 = $1,317 \times $1.2797 = $1,686 \text{ Cdn}$; 1985, $2 \times $2,300 = $4,600 - $3,685 = $915 \times $1.3475 = $1,233 \text{ Cdn}$. The respondent uses the same approach only he assigns the peak rates to six months and the other rates to six months in each year and thereby calculates the benefit in each year in Canadian currency to be 1983 - $22,490; 1984 - $25,039; 1985 - $26,994.

The condominium was acquired by Diroheath on June 9, 1982. It consists of three bedrooms, being unit 24 at 4695 Chandlers Ford, Sarasota, Florida ("the Chandlers condominium"). It is one of a cluster of 48 units called villas, about one-half of which have two bedrooms and the remainder three. The villas are attached in groups of two or three. The layout of the two bedroom villas is identical as is that of those with three bedrooms. There are a number of these 48 unit groups in a complex called Meadows which consists of 1,400 to 1,600 acres. In his notice of appeal the appellant states:

All costs of maintaining, insuring and operating the property have been paid by or charged to the personal account of the Taxpayer from the time of purchase to date. Diroheath has not claimed capital cost allowances on the property nor taken any deduction for mortgage interest and mortgage insurance. The property was not rented to third parties.

These facts are admitted in the reply to the notice of appeal

The appellant said that the Chandlers condominium was purchased primarily as an investment in respect of which capital appreciation was expected. It was not acquired for the purpose of deriving rental income. It has not been rented or offered for rent. It is still an asset of Diroheath and used by the appellant and his family.

At one time Diroheath also had a 50% interest in two other two bedroom units in the Meadows development called Chartwell Green and Villa Majorca. One was furnished and rented on a seasonal basis. The other was unfurnished and was rented on an annual basis. Chartwell Green was sold in 1989 and Villa Majorca in 1990.

While I am prepared to accept that the appellant and his family only used the Chandlers condominium in the order of two months in each year, it strikes me that simply multiplying this number by the agreed market value of monthly rent for the premises and deducting expenses does not produce the annual value of the benefit to the appellant. The conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that Diroheath acquired the Chandlers condominium and made it exclusively available to the appellant for his personal use year round. The fact that he did not actually use the asset as a residence during the entire year does not suggest to me that the respondent erred in calculating the benefit conferred on the basis of the use and availability for use by the appellant of the Chandlers condominium throughout the years 1983, 1984 and 1985. I believe this is entirely in harmony with what was said by Rip T.C.J. in Soper v. M.N.R., 87 DTC 522.

On the other hand I think there was error in relating six months in each year to the peak rate. Three to four months is suggested by evidence. I will take 3.5 months as the period for the purposes of this appeal. On this basis the value of the benefits conferred on the appellant regarding the Chandlers condominium in Canadian currency are: 1983 - $20,733; 1984 - $23,040; 1985 - $24,815.

The final matter is the appellant's argument that whatever the benefits are, a percentage [Footnote: It was said that the division should be 50% if calculated on the basis of the appellant having 50% of the shares of Diroheath or 20% if calculated on the basis that the appellant plus four members of his family were involved.] should be attributed to the appellant's wife and three children because of their relationship to Diroheath. This appears to have been raised for the first time at the hearing. At the time of the hearing the children were aged 20, 15 and 11. The short answer is that whatever benefits the wife and children derived there is nothing before me to indicate that they were conferred on them by Diroheath and received by them qua shareholders. They are the beneficiaries of a trust and the trust property, i.e. the shares, are held by the trustee.

In summary the appeal is allowed and the matters referred back to the respondent for reconsideration and reassessment on the basis that the value of the benefits conferred on the appellant by Diroheath in respect of:

- (a) the yachts are: 1982 - $2,581; 1983 - $4,218; 1984 - $8,303; 1985 - $7,665; and
- (b) the Chandlers condominium are: 1983 - $20,733; 1984 - $23,040; 1985 - $24,815.

As stated at the commencement of these reasons, it is the value of the benefits conferred by Diroheath on the appellant that is in dispute in this appeal and the total amount involved has been reduced by about 30%. There being no other fact specially pertinent to costs the appellant has not "substantially succeeded in the appeal" within the meaning of subsection 5(1) of the Tax Court of Canada Rules of Practice and Procedure for the Award of Costs (Income Tax Act). This precludes awarding costs.

[1983] A.J. No. 773
No. 13939

Alberta Court of Appeal
Moir, McClung and Stevenson JJ.A.

April 20, 1983.
(38 paras.)

Counsel:

R.D. Gillespie, for the appellants.
B.J. Willis, for the respondents.

Reasons for judgment were delivered by Stevenson J.A., concurred in by Moir J.A. Separate reasons, dissenting in part, were delivered by McClung J.A.

1 STEVENSON J.A.:— This is an appeal and a cross-appeal brought from a judgment in an action arising out of the development and construction of a condominium project. The condominium corporation sued Terrace Corporation (Construction) Ltd., the builder, and Erwin and Willi Zeiter, officers of Terrace, who also initially managed the condominium corporation. During the course of the trial McKinley was added as representative of present and previous condominium unit owners. The trial judgment is reported in (1980), 14 Alta. L.R. (2d) 24. We reserved judgment on the award of costs and on two substantive questions: firstly, was the trial judge correct in setting aside a lease of part of the common property made by the condominium corporation (when under the management of the Zeiters) to Terrace and; secondly, was the trial judge correct in the award of damages to be made to the condominium corporation against Terrace for deficiencies in the construction of the building.

2 On the appeal the condominium corporation also challenged the judgment below in dismissing a claim based on misrepresentations regarding the amount of common area, as Terrace made changes late in the course of the construction which had the effect of reducing the amount of common area. We dismissed the condominium corporation's appeal on this point at the hearing of the appeal. The learned trial judge found that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that anyone was influenced or misled by representations. That finding is fatal. Moreover, insofar as those representations were said to be contractual such terms were negated by the express provisions of the contract of sale. It was further, to all intents and purposes, conceded by counsel for the condominium corporation that such a contract would have merged in the conveyances. A claim for tortious misrepresentation also fails on the judge's finding. In addition, the representations relied upon before us were not representations of fact, but of intention, and liability for making false statements of intention was neither pleaded nor proved. Finally, all these claims were individual, not corporate. It is doubtful that they could properly be the subject of a class action and, in any event, the pleadings do not support claims by anyone other than the condominium corporation. The trial judge amended the pleadings to show McKinley as a representative party, but I am unable to find any amendment to the body of the pleadings showing the basis on which the persons he represented were entitled to any relief.

3 I now turn to the issues on which judgment was reserved.

I.

4 The development included a parking structure, the roof of which is also a parking facility. The parties agree that because of the provisions of the Condominium Property Act neither the roof nor any part of it could be made the subject of a condominium unit. They also agree that the roof, once the plan was registered, became common property. The use to which this roof parking was to be put was the subject of considerable evidence at trial. Mrs. Kennedy, whom Terrace engaged to sell the condominium units, gave evidence that she understood and represented to prospective purchasers that the roof would be available for visitor parking, but that Terrace was offering to sell some of the parking stalls to owners of condominium units who wished additional parking. Indeed some were sold. The evidence of the principals of Terrace was that the parking stalls on the roof were Terrace's property, like the condominium units themselves, until sold.

5 Once the condominium plan was registered, the roof of the parking structure, as common property, was held by the owners of units as tenants in common under s. 5(2) of the Act (then R.S.A. 1970, c. 62, s. 5):

(2) The common property comprised in a registered condominium plan is held by the owners of all the units as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit factors for their respective units.

Terrace says it did not intend that the roof of the parking structure form part of the common property. Moreover it had sold some of the stalls on the roof and had some plans for the development of an adjoining condominium unit which would use some of that parking. In order to effect the sales it had made, as well as to effect its intention of reserving the roof, Terrace took a lease of the roof from the condominium corporation. They had no difficulty in doing this. On September 10, 1975, the condominium plan was registered at the Land Titles Office and the condominium corporation was thereby established. Terrace was the registered owner of all the condominium and it therefore appointed all of the managers of the condominium corporation. Its appointees were the Zeiters. On September 18, 1975, the condominium corporation granted Terrace a 99 year lease of the roof. The Zeiters executed the lease on behalf of both the lessor and the lessee. Subsequently Terrace conveyed titled to the individual condominium units to the purchasers of those units, and in each case the purchaser was furnished, inter alia, with a copy of the lease of the roof. The lease was also registered in the Land Titles Office. In delivering transfers of the condominium units to solicitors for the individual purchasers the solicitors for Terrace included in their covering letter two paragraphs:

In respect to the lease of the parking area forming the roof of the parkade, we would point out that it was necessary to leave these parking spaces as common area since the Condominium Act will not permit the creation of units which are not delineated by walls and roofs. Therefore, the only way in which the developer could have control over these units was to grant to himself a long term lease so that he could sublet particular spaces.

We would ask you to point out to your client that this particular building is quite famous in Edmonton legal circles in view of the considerable litigation which arose when it was started as a 125 suite apartment building and never completed due to the financial problems of construction allowed for the provision of parking for 125 apartments rather than 77 condominiums. Therefore substantial excess parking had to be completed by the developer and for this reason the developer has placed a caveat on the property regarding future development so as to permit the use of this parking area and other facilities in conjunction with a proposed addition to the condominium to be located across the lane immediately to the south west of the existing tower. The addition will have the effect of spreading the taxation of the land and the parkade amongst more units.

6 The lease provided for a rental of 4% of the total municipal tax on the property plus payment of costs relating to utilities provided to the roof. There appears to be some modest net income to the condominium corporation from this rental as the tax actually attributable to the roof is something less than 4%. Terrace did grant subleases to unit holders to whom it had sold parking stalls and was invoiced for and paid rent and utility charges from time to time. It has undertaken a plan of leasing the remaining parking stalls on a short term basis and they are not, therefore, available for visitor parking.

7 The learned trial judge held the lease to be impeachable at the suit of the condominium corporation as statutory manager of the common property. S. 19(1) of the Act provides:

19(1) A corporation is responsible for the enforcement of its by-laws and the control, management, and administration of the common property.

8 Terrace concedes that the Zeiters, when they entered into the lease on behalf of the condominium corporation, had a fiduciary duty to the persons who were purchasing condominium units under interim agreements. Moreover, Terrace did not argue that it could avoid identification with any breach by the Zeiters, if breach there were.

9 On the face of it the lease of common property by the Zeiters, nominees and principals of Terrace, to Terrace was a breach of their fiduciary duty. They were managers of the property in which the condominium unit buyers had an equitable interest and leased that property to the very corporation which appointed them managers. The fiduciary relationship of the developer could, perhaps, be found to exist even before the condominium plan was registered: York Condominium Corporation 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, at 467. A fortiori the relationship existed after registration of the plan. The answer that Terrace and the Zeiters seek to make out is this: a fiduciary is not in breach of his duty if he does what he is authorized to do. All those who had agreed to buy units knew that stalls were being sold and any arrangement necessary to implement that transaction was authorized. The condominium corporation concedes this point and filed before us undertakings that all such transactions would be recognized and performed.

10 The disagreement arises about the authority to deal with those parking spaces that were not sold. There is a conflict in the evidence. Terrace's agent says that she represented that the parking stalls which were not sold would be available for visitor parking. She also represented that only some would be sold. Terrace says that such was not the intention; that their intent is reflected in the letters that were sent out with the conveyances after the lease was signed. Terrace says the fact that no one objected is evidence of the fact that the letter reflected the understanding. What is required, however, is proof that the unit holders agreed to Terrace's disposition of the roof. The contention that they had agreed is implicitly rejected by the trial judge. Terrace urged that since it had the right to sell stalls in the parkade, it could have sold all the stalls and the unit holders would have no legitimate grievance. The short answer to this contention is that the owners recognized that sales would be made but only to other unit holders. While the evidence establishes that the purchasing unit owners took that risk, it does not establish their agreement that the roof would be retained by the developer for other dispositions. The lease transaction violated the director's fiduciary duty and was voidable at the instance of the owners of the common property.

11 The individual purchasers soon learned about the disposition of the roof stalls for purposes other than visitor parking. They did nothing. What was the legal consequence of their inaction? Terrace faintly pleaded, and strenuously argued, waiver; waiver in taking title with knowledge of the lease. It says the waiver is clearly founded upon the failure of the owners to complain when they learned that the property had been leased to Terrace before they took legal title to their units. On this point Terrace cited Crump v. McNeill, [1919] 1 W.W.R. 52 (Alta. A.D.). What that case requires is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. It is distinguishable from other pleas not raised here: acquiescence amounting to estoppel, mere acquiescence which is no defence, and laches: De Bussche v. Alt (1878), 8 Ch. D. 286 (C.A.). Waiver is a question of fact: Knight Sugar Co. Ltd. v. Webster, [1929] 2 W.W.R. 505, at 509 (Alta. A.D.), rev'd. on other grounds [1930] S.C.R. 518.

12 In the form letter the purpose of this lease is said to be to enable the subletting of particular stalls (which the unit holders must have expected) to other unit holders. The letter also refers to the use of "this parking area and other common facilities" in connection with a proposed condominium. But this reference is not in the context of the reason for granting the lease. In any event the letter does not make it clear that the lease was intended to permit commercial exploitation of the parking facilities. The learned trial judge did not find waiver and on the facts I would not construe the taking of title as a waiver of the right to impeach the lease. There was no intentional relinquishment of a known right.

13 A further question must be answered - can the condominium corporation impeach the transaction? It does not own the common property; that is owned by the corporate members. S. 5 (3) of the Condominium Property Act provides:

(3) Except as provided in this Act, a share in the common property shall not be disposed of or become subject to any charge except as appurtenant to the unit of an owner and any disposition of or charge upon a unit operates to dispose of or charge that share in the common property without express reference thereto.

Terrace objects that a class action purporting to represent the interests of present and past unit owners is of questionable validity. Past owners no longer have any interest in the common property and their economic interests would be different from that of present owners. I agree. Terrace also says the corporation is an inappropriate plaintiff, because it does not have a property interest. I am not prepared to accept that objection. It seems to me that the statutory manager of the property, which has the power of disposition and actually effected this disposition, is a proper party to an action to preserve the common property. While a trustee seeking to recover or preserve trust property has legal title, and the condominium corporation does not, the status of a trustee is analogous. The condominium corporation's obligation to the unit holders, like the trustees' obligation to the beneficiary, affords no defence to a claim to the property. Moreover, while the unit holders are owners of the common property, their power of disposition other than through the medium of the condominium corporation is significantly restricted by s. 5(3). Nor do I see any real danger of someone in Terrace's position being sued by each and every unit owner who had an interest in the common property. The remedy of the common property owners is analogous to the proprietary remedy of the trust beneficiary, namely the restoration of the property. The beneficiaries' action is generally considered as giving rise to the right to restore the property to the trust: Waters, The Law of Trusts in Canada, at 834. I conclude, therefore, that the condominium corporation's action to recover the common property (with incidental relief) is a proper one.

14 Terrace's appeal against the setting aside of the lease fails.

II.

15 We are obliged to deal with the question of the trial judge's treatment of the alleged construction deficiencies. Several complaints were raised at trial, not all successfully. Those that were successful included:

- (a) Lack of radiation equipment on the 17th floor for which the learned trial judge awarded $2,000.00.
- (b) Venting of the intake on the hallway air pressurization unit to prevent entry of contaminated air, for which the learned trial judge awarded $7,000.00.
- (c) Installation of flexible couplings on the pumping units - $3,085.00.
- (d) Installation of valves on the hot water recirculating system - $3,600.00.
- (e) Removal and replacement of the condominium's roof structure - $34,000.00.

16 The total award was therefore $49,685.00 based on the trial judge's finding that the deficiencies arose because of "failure to perform in a good and workmanlike manner or failure to supply adequate and proper materials insofar as the common property was concerned."

17 Nine other claims were dismissed because of failure "... to establish by any preponderance of evidence or any balance of probability that they are deficiencies of any kind." This appeal is taken from the rejection of seven of those claims.

18 Material to their present consideration is the finding of the trial judge "that there was no real question as to the credibility of the witnesses". Within this framework they will be considered in order.

1. Lack of insulation on pipes in boiler room.

19 Under the original engineering specifications the pipes were to be insulated. They are usually insulated. They were not, because Hans Zeiter concluded it was unnecessary. In so doing he relied on his own experience but was in conflict with the opinion of J.D. Whittaker, the expert called by Terrace.

20 The evidence indicates that Mr. Zeiter in rejecting the necessity of the insulation relied on his construction practice in his other buildings, the fact that his plumbing subtrades did not pursue it and the fact that a concrete ceiling will usually contain any escaping heat. He also relied on the fact that the Building Inspector raised no complaint. The evidence indicates, however, that he was unaware of the specifications which had been simply turned over to his plumber.

21 The result has been that the room overheats and with the heat loss resulting there is proven discomfort in the suite above. Estimates of cost varied. Mr. Whittaker spoke of 75 cents or a dollar per square foot. Chobat, the owner's expert, put the minimum cost at $6,000.00. The difficulty in reconciling the estimates (if reconciliation is required) is that the evidence is silent on the square footage involved. The learned trial judge did not specifically address the complaint except to dismiss it with others under the observation that "The evidence is clear that in each case they met the standard, if any, set for them." But the sum of the evidence is clear that the reasonable standards were not met.

22 I would allow this claim and would refer its assessment to the Master at Edmonton as Referee.

2. Lack of proper walls and exit in emergency generator room.

23 The owners say that they are entitled to a proper wall around the emergency generator between the boiler room and the emergency generator room. They say this was brought to the Zeiters' attention in January 1976. Their fear was that the absence of a proper wall would contribute to negative pressure in the boiler room causing combustion gases to spill out of the boilers instead of being eliminated through the chimney. McKinley, one of the owners, said that Hans Zeiter verbally promised to correct the problem. The cost is estimated in the amount of $1,200.00. Mr. Zeiter reiterated his agreement with the owners' demand during the course of his evidence, but now relies on the fact that the Building Inspectors have not complained to him. J.D. Whittaker indicated that in his experience a separate emergency generator room "had been done but that it was not a special requirement."

24 Again the dispute was not specifically addressed by the trial judge. In our view, however, it is not possible to ignore the promissory foundation for this claim as evidenced by Mr. Zeiter's agreement to have it installed at Terrace's expense. I allow it. We award the sum of $1,200.00.

3. Installation of one pump and filter designed to service both the swimming pool and whirlpool bath.

25 The installation of the whirlpool bath came about on the evidence because Erwin Zeiter thought it would be "nice". It was feasible because the common area which included the swimming pool was enlarged. Contributing to Mr. Zeiter's decision, taken in the spring of 1975, was the possibility that Mr. Zeiter, as well as his son, planned to live in the "Horizon". Mr. Zeiter proceeded with a single circulating device serving both the swimming pool and the whirlpool. No thought was given to a dual system at the time. The single system was professionally designed and installed. Problems have arisen under the joint circulation system. Common water temperatures in the two conveniences are neither comfortable nor convenient with the result that they cannot be used at the same time.

26 The trial judge dismissed the owners claim for the cost of installation of a separate pump-filter on two grounds. Firstly that, as in the case of other "deficiencies", the existing system was not a deficiency of any kind and met "the standards, if any, set for them". He held that it was of medium quality of material and normal practice of workmanship. Although "desirable" they could not be expected to be part of a product of the kind the plaintiffs bargained for. Secondly, and specifically, he held that the whirlpool was a gratuitous extra - "neither bargained for nor expected with or without its own pump or filter."

27 There were no contractual obligations regarding the amenities of these areas and I agree with both conclusions.

4. Deficiencies between grade beam and walls.

28 Evidence was led that the mortar caulking introduced between the grade beam and the east wall of the building was so deficient that temperature problems have arisen in the two main floor units under adverse wind conditions. The problem arose, on the evidence, from the settling property of reinforced concrete. Caulking, on the evidence, is a maintenance problem after the first year following construction. There was evidence that the problem had not arisen the third winter of the building's operation.

29 In dismissing this claim, it seems to me that the trial judge must have regarded this problem as one pertaining to the maintenance of the building and not to be laid at the feet of the builders, respondents by cross-appeal. I therefore dismiss it.

5. Front door insulation.

30 The owners, in the fall of 1977, had to reinsulate the front door at a cost of $150.00. The evidence of J.D. Whittaker again entitled the trial judge to consign this complaint to one of mere maintenance. It is therefore dismissed.

6. Positioning of thermostatic controls.

31 These controls should not have been located within a private unit. The cost of relocation is $250.00 and that amount is awarded.

7. Addition, by the owners, of relief valves, site glass and blow-off valves.

32 This expenditure appears in the evidence of McKinley, to have been subsumed in the learned trial judge's award of $3,085.00 for the installation of flexible couplings and must therefore be rejected.

III.

33 Terrace also appealed the trial judge's award of costs. There is no error of principle demonstrated and I would not interfere with the discretion exercised by the judge.

34 I would dismiss the appeal and allow the cross-appeal to include the amounts awarded in Part II of this judgment.

35 The respondents will have the costs of the appeal and the cross-appeal.

36 McCLUNG J.A. [dissenting in part]:-- I am in agreement with the reasons for judgment of Stevenson, J.A., with the exception of his dismissal of that portion of the cross-appeal pertaining to the cost of installing the separate pump and filter system. I would allow this claim and award the additional sum of $15,000 to the cross-appeal appellants.

37 In my view it was wrong for the trial judge to dismiss the installation of the whirlpool bath as a gratuitous extra. The construction of the whirlpool came into being as a result of the complete redesign of the main floor of the complex in which benefit flowed to Terrace and the Zeiters. Something was taken from the owners and something, the whirlpool addition, was given in return.

38 That being so a reasonable standard of functional utility was imposed. That standard had to be based on its anticipated use. On the evidence the volume of usage of the swimming pool and whirlpool systems at "The Horizon" approached semi-public levels, whereas one pump one filter systems are normally found in private dwellings. In my view the single pump and filter could not reasonably serve the number of owners likely to use the system and this deficiency and the cost of its rectification must be borne by the respondents by cross-appeal.

Appeal dismissed; Cross-appeal allowed in part.

Strata Plan LMS93 v. Neronovich

Between The Owners, Strata Plan LMS93, petitioner, and Caryle Irene Neronovich and Bank of Montreal, respondents

[1997] B.C.J. No. 606, New Westminster Registry No. S032767 British Columbia Supreme Court New Westminster, British Columbia Master Joyce Heard: January 15 and February 6, 1997. Judgment: filed March 11, 1997.

Counsel: G. Stephen Hamilton, for the plaintiff. No one appearing for the respondents.

MASTER JOYCE:--

NATURE OF THE APPLICATION

[para1] These are proceedings brought by the petitioner (the "strata corporation") under certain provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, Ch. 61 (the "Act") to enforce claims which the strata corporation makes against the respondent Neronovich (the "owner") representing her share of common expenses, late payment charges, special assessments and legal costs. Initially I perceived the issue to be the "legal costs" which the strata corporation was entitled to recover in this proceeding but upon reflection the issues appear to be wider. At issue is the judgment amount to which the strata corporation is entitled in this proceeding and the amount for which the certificate which the strata corporation filed against the title to the owner's property stands as a charge against that property and the amount which the owner is required to pay to "redeem" the property.

FACTS

[para2] The strata corporation is incorporated pursuant to the provisions of the Act with respect to a condominium development situated in the City of Burnaby. The owner is the registered owner of one strata unit in the condominium complex. The respondent, Bank of Montreal, is the holder of a mortgage registered against the owner's property on September 9, 1993.

[para4] By letter dated January 26, 1995 the strata corporation's agent made demand against the owner for the sum of $2,389.29 which it claimed was the amount then due and owing for "strata fees, bylaw fines, and associated costs of collection pursuant to the provisions of the by laws of the Strata Corporation and the Condominium Act". The strata corporation also claimed legal fees in the amount of $250.00. The strata corporation further advised that "monthly assessments, late fines and legal expenses will continue to accrue and form part of the indebtedness until payment is received in full" and advised that unless payment was received by February 26, 1995 legal proceeding would be commenced under the Act.

[para5] By June 1, 1996, the strata corporation claimed the amount due and owing pursuant to the bylaws of the strata corporation to be $6,010.40, comprised of the following amounts:

balance as at April 1, 1994 $ 780.75 monthly assessments 2,928.54 fines 1,150.00 costs to register certificate under s. 37 294.25 adjustments 42.70 special assessments 814.16 ----- $6,010.40

[para6] The material filed in support of the petition does not indicate the constitution of the balance claimed as at April 1, 1994 nor what the "adjustments" relate to nor what the "special assessments" or "fines" relate to. I note that the strata corporation has not filed any additional certificate since July 7, 1994.

[para7] This petition was issued on June 27, 1996 claiming, inter alia:

1. A declaration that the Certificate dated July 7, 1994 charges the owner's property in priority to the interests of the respondents;
2. A declaration that the respondent owner has made default in payment of her share of common expenses due the strata corporation and that all monies secured by the certificate are due and owing to the strata corporation;
3. A declaration that the amount due and owing to the strata corporation is $6,010.40 as at June 1, 1994 "accruing by the sum of $120.47 on the first day of each and every month thereafter, to the last day of redemption herein, together with a monthly late payment charge in the sum of $50.00, a monthly special assessment in the sum of $40.10, and the legal cost of the petitioner in these proceedings to be taxed on a solicitor and own client basis (collectively, the "Redemption Amount");
4. An order setting the last day for redemption at 30 days computed from the date of the order pronounced at the hearing of this petition;
5. A summary determination of what will be due to the petitioner under and by virtue of the certificate;
6. An order that following the last day of redemption the owner's property be sold, with the strata corporation to have conduct of sale;
7. Judgment against the owner for the amount determined summarily, together with the strata corporation's costs of the proceedings on a special cost basis.

The petitioner relies upon sections 14, 15, 28, 34 and 37 of the Act.

[para8] The petition came on for hearing on an uncontested basis on January 15, 1997, at which time I pronounced an order, essentially on the terms sought in the petition, including an order of special costs in favour of the petitioner. Subsequently, as a result of certain authorities having come to my attention I directed that the order which I had pronounced not be entered and that counsel for the petitioner make further submissions with respect to the issue of the costs to which the petitioner might be entitled. I have now had an opportunity to consider those submissions.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS

[para9] The relevant provisions of the Act are as follows:

14. Subject to this Act, the strata corporation is responsible for the enforcement of the bylaws, and the control, management and administration of the common property, common facilities and the assets of the strata corporation.

15. (7) The strata corporation may sue on its own behalf and

(a) on behalf of an owner about matters affecting the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation; and

(b) if authorized by special resolution of the strata corporation, on behalf of those owners who consent in writing to the strata corporation so doing, about matters affecting individual strata lots notwithstanding that the strata corporation, in the case of a contractual claim, was not a party to the contract about which the proceeding is brought.

(8) The legal or court costs in a proceeding brought in whole or in part on behalf of owners on a matter affecting their strata lots shall be borne by the individual owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

34. (2) The strata corporation may

(a) carry out repairs or work required by the notice or order of a competent public or local authority on a strata lot, whether authorized by the owner or not;

(b) obtain and maintain insurance in respect of any other perils, including liability, under section 54; and

(c) remove privileges or fix fines for breach of the bylaws, rules and regulations.

(3) Money spent under subsection (2) is due and payable to the strata corporation on demand, and shall be added to the levy on that owner under section 35 for the following month.

35. (1) The strata corporation shall

(a) establish a fund for administrative expenses sufficient for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of premiums on policies of insurance and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation;

(c) determine the amounts to be raised for the purposes set out in this section and notify the strata lot owners of those amounts; and

(d) raise the amounts so determined by levying contributions on the owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their respective strata lots in the manner provided for in the bylaws.

(4) Unless otherwise provided in the bylaws, the contributions levied under subsection (1)(d) shall become due and payable on the first day of each month.

(5) Subject to section 36, a strata corporation may recover from an owner in a court of competent jurisdiction a sum of money owing to the strata corporation

(a) as the owner's monthly contribution under this section, or

(b) for money expended by the strata corporation under section 34.

(6) An action may be brought against the owner at the time the debt was due and against the owner of the same strata lot at the time the action is brought, jointly and severally.

37. (1) Where an owner defaults in the payment of his share of the common expenses, the strata corporation may register in the land title office a certificate in Form B showing the amount owing and the legal description of the strata lot of that owner.

(2) A certificate noted in the register is, except as provided in subsection (6), a charge for the amount owing in favour of the strata corporation, in priority to every other lien or charge of whatever kind except those under the Builders Lien Act, and those of the Crown, other than mortgages in favour of the Crown.

(3) On application by the strata corporation, the court may order that judgment be entered against the owner in favour of the strata corporation for the amount owing to the strata corporation on the charge by the owner. The order shall provide that, failing payment to the strata corporation of the amount owing within 30 days after the order is made, the strata corporation may sell the strata lot at a price and on terms to be approved by the court, taking into account the priority of the charge.

(4) The strata corporation shall, before seeking an order for sale under subsection (3), give not less than 4 days' notice of the application to the owner and the owners of all charges ranking in priority after the charge in favour of the strata corporation, by service of a written notice and copies of all documents filed with the court in support of the application.

(5) The strata corporation shall, on receipt of the amount owing, file with the registrar acknowledgment of payment in Form C.

(6) The priority of the strata corporation's charge under this section over a charge in favour of another person, as between them, and subject to a contrary intention appearing from the instrument creating them, is according to the date and time of the applications to register or file, to the extent that the amount owing to the strata corporation consists of the owner's share of common expenses incurred on satisfaction by the strata corporation of a judgment entered against the strata corporation.

(7) In this section "common expenses" includes the contribution levied under section 35, and the amounts, if any, added to the levy under section 34(3).

(8) A strata corporation may add the land title fee and the legal and administrative costs of filing under subsection (1) or (5) and the legal costs of a proceeding under subsection (3) to the amount owing by the owner to the strata corporation.

[para10] The following bylaw provisions of the Act, which form part of the bylaws of the strata corporation, are also relevant:

117. The strata corporation may . (i) do all things necessary for the enforcement of the bylaws and rules and regulations of the strata corporation, and for the control, management and administration of the common property, common facilities or other assets of the strata corporation, generally, including removing privileges in the use of certain facilities, or fixing and collecting fines for contravention of the bylaws, rules and regulations.

127 (1) An infraction or violation of these bylaws or any rules and regulations established under them on the part of an owner, his employees, agents, invitees or tenants may be corrected, remedied or cured by the strata corporation. Any costs or expense so incurred by the corporation shall be charged to that owner and shall be added to and become part of the assessment of that owner for the month next following the date on which the costs or expense are incurred, but not necessarily paid by the corporation, and shall become due and payable on the date of payment of the monthly assessment.

(2) The strata corporation may recover from an owner by an action for debts in a court of competent jurisdiction money which the strata corporation is required to expend as a result of an act or omission by the owner, his employees, agents, invitees or tenants, or an infraction or violation of these bylaws or any rules or regulations established under them.

128.(1) The strata lot owner's contribution to the common expense of the strata corporation shall be levied in accordance with this bylaw. . (10) At each annual general meeting subsequent to the first annual general meeting, the strata corporation shall prepare an annual budget for the following 12 month period and, after that, all owners shall, subject to subsections (2) and (3), pay a monthly assessment in accordance with their unit entitlement.

[para11] By section 28 of the Act the bylaws set out in sections 115-132 of the Act are made effective to every strata corporation until amended or repealed pursuant to the provisions of the Act. The bylaws set contained in sections 117, 127 and 128 as set out above are in effect with respect to this strata corporation.

DISCUSSION

[para12] Section 37 of the Act provides a statutory scheme whereby a strata corporation may obtain a charge against the lands of an individual strata unit owner for certain expenses. It also provides a priority for the charge over other charge holders even though those other charge holders may have registered their charges at an earlier date and it further provides a summary procedure for the recovery of the expenses.

[para13] I have been referred to a number of cases which have considered s. 37. The first case to which I will refer is Owners, Strata Corporation VR873 v. Crumley (1982), 40 B.C.L.R. 80 (S.C.) which considered the issue of legal costs in relation to s. 37 of the Act. In that case the owner had failed to pay a monthly assessment and the strata corporation had filed a certificate pursuant to s. 37(1) of the Act and subsequently filed an application under s. 37(3). The owner learned of the proceeding and tendered the amount shown in the certificate plus one additional month's assessment. The strata corporation demanded indemnity for its legal costs in connection with the proceeding, purporting to rely on s. 37(8). At p.81 Huddart L.J.S.C. (as she then was), said the issue was "whether the words 'the legal costs of a proceeding' contained in s. 37(8) of the Condominium Act mean the costs incurred by the strata corporation or the cost of the proceeding as determined pursuant to the Tariffs of Costs, App. B or C. of the Rules".

[para14] The strata corporation argued that it was entitled to indemnification for costs because of the provisions of s. 127(1). At p. 83 the learned judge dealt with the argument as follows:

When Mr. Crumley failed to pay a monthly assessment as required by s. 128(8) or (10) which form part of the by-laws of the strata corporation, he violated the by-laws and became liable to the additional charged provided in s. 127(1). The section provides the remedy and I do not think it requires any order of this court to permit the strata corporation to take advantage of it.

(emphasis added) [para15] The learned judge said further:

... I have concluded that this case is not analogous to a mortgage in which two parties contract for an indemnification for costs. The provision for indemnification for 'costs incurred' is included in the by-laws of the corporation. The owner purchased the condominium fully aware of the by-laws. There is no provision in them for an accounting or for an opportunity for the owner to challenge the reasonableness of the bill. The bill is rendered to the strata corporation. If the strata corporation considers it to be unreasonable, it can challenge the bill.

However, that conclusion does not mean that the strata corporation may add the amount of its costs incurred to the amount owing pursuant to s. 37. In my view, that section allows the strata corporation to add the land title fee, the amount of its legal bill and of any administrative expenses for the filing of Forms B and C - but it allows only the taxable costs on a party-and-party basis of the proceeding.

[para16] The next decision to which I will refer is National Life Assurance Company of Canada v. Vidalin Construction Ltd. (1985) 64 B.C.L.R. 319 (S.C.) which was a case dealing with the interpretation of "common expenses" and, more particularly, whether fines or penalties imposed by a strata corporation pursuant to the bylaw for non-payment of monthly assessments fell within the category of common expenses under s. 37(1). Starting at p.424, McKenzie J. said:

I find the language of s. 37 of the Condominium Act is clear and express. It may be 'brutal and piratical' but, since the language clearly expresses that intention, I am compelled to interpret it as giving an absolute priority to the strata corporation as far as the assessments of common expenses are concerned.

As for the penalties imposed by the strata corporation for successive non-payments of the common expenses, I do not find them to be in the same category. The fines started with $25 for the first failure to pay, then rose through $50, $75 to $100 for each successive default. The authority to impose the fines was given by the by-laws of the strata corporation. I hold that the only items that may be incorporated in the certificate, apart from common expenses, are those listed in s. 37(8), and that list does not include penalty charges or fines. That item is conspicuous by its absence from s. 37(8).

[para17] In Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, Vancouver Reg. Nos. H950893, H960639, H960082 and H950766, November 27, 1996, the issue was "what are properly included as 'common expenses' of a strata corporation for the purposes of the statutory priority accorded by s. 37(2) of the Condominium Act". In that case the petitioner was foreclosing on mortgages registered against several strata lots against which the strata corporation had registered certificates under s. 37. The properties were sold in the foreclosure proceeding and the issue was the amount for which the strata corporation was entitled to priority over the foreclosing mortgagee. The certificates made claims in respect of a number of different charges which the learned judge classified as follows:

- (1) maintenance levies, including monthly maintenance fees and fees for filing the certificates;
- (2) fines, being late payment penalties;
- (3) legal levies, being legal fees incurred for proceedings brought either by or against (it is not clear which) the strata corporation, as authorized by s. 15 of the Act;
- (4) repair levies, being amounts expended to make various repairs to the property and authorized by special resolution of the corporation but not included in the annual budget;

[para18] It was conceded that the maintenance levies took priority under s. 37. The challenge was with respect to the other charges.

[para19] Bauman J. held, on the authority of National Life Assurance Co. of Canada v. Vidalin Construction Ltd., supra, that the priority claimed for fine levies could not prevail. He held, further, that priority could not be claimed for the legal levies upon the reasoning of that decision.

[para20] With respect to the repair levies the learned judge held that these items fell within the definition of "common expenses". Beginning at paragraph 31 of his reasons, his Lordship said:

I will deal with the threshold point. In argument, counsel for the petitioner submitted that, properly construed, s. 37(7) restricts "common expenses" to only those levied under s. 35 and s. 34(3).

That would mean that "common expenses" for the purposes of priority only include:

- Levies for the Contingency Reserve Fund (s. 35(1)(b));
- Levies for the Administrative Expense Fund (s. 35(1)(a));
- Levies to carry out repairs by competent public authority on a strata lot (s. 34(2)(a));
- Levies to obtain and maintain insurance under s. 54 (s. 34(2)(b)).

I reject this submission. It overlooks, for one, common property maintenance expenses levied under s. 128(10) as part of the annual budget. There can be no doubt that these enjoy the s. 37(2) priority: Chan, supra and National Life Assurance, supra at 325.

I prefer the analysis of s. 37(7) advanced by the respondent strata corporation.

S. 37(7) provides an inclusive, not exclusive, definition of "common expenses". It expressly includes levies under s. 35 and s. 34(3) because these would not normally be considered "common expenses": the former because they are not expenses, but rather, reserves; the latter because they are, in the case of s. 34(2)(a), expenses referable to a strata lot, not to the common property, and in the case of s. 34(2)(b) expenses in respect of insurance.

[para21] With respect to the reference to s. 128(10) above, that section sets out the bylaw which provides for the fixing of the annual budget and which requires the owners to pay a monthly assessment based on that budget. It appears to me, with respect, that it creates the "administrative expense fund" which is referred to in s. 35(1)(a). It appears to me that the "contribution levied under section 35" which is referred to in s. 37(7) is the same as the "monthly assessment" referred to in s. 128(10).

[para22] In any event, the decision in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden confirms that the "common expenses" for which priority is given by s. 37 does not include legal levies or legal costs other than those which may be added under s. 37(8) and does not include fines or penalties. It is authority for the proposition that the definition of "common expenses" in s. 37(7) is an inclusive, not exclusive, definition and that "common expenses" includes "repair levies" which have been properly authorized by the strata corporation in the discharge of its obligation under s. 34(1)(d) of the Act.

[para23] If I understood him correctly, counsel for the petitioner concedes, based upon the foregoing authorities, that the amount for which the strata corporation would have priority over other charge holders includes only the following:

- (a) "common expenses" as that term has been interpreted in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden;
- (b) the land title fee and the legal and administrative costs of filing under subsection (1); and
- (c) the party/party legal costs of a proceeding under subsection (3).

[para24] Counsel for the petitioner concedes that the amount for which the strata corporation may claim priority over other charge holders does not include any fines, penalties, indemnity for actual legal expense of this proceeding or other proceedings or any special costs that might be awarded in this proceeding.

[para25] He argues, however, that the amount for which s. 37 gives priority over other charge holders does not limit the amount for which the certificate is a charge under s. 37(2), or the amount for which the strata corporation may obtain judgment under s. 37(3) or the amount failing the payment of which the court shall order the lands sold pursuant to s. 37(3). He argues, in the first place, that the strata corporation is entitled to make levies for such other amounts for which no priority is given pursuant to various sections of the Act, including sections 15(8), 34(2)(c), 34(3), 34(5), and 127(2). I agree with that submission. He goes on to argue that as the strata corporation has the authority to make these levies and as the owner is liable to pay these amounts the procedure for enforcement provided by s. 37 is available to the strata corporation in respect of them. It is that aspect of his submission which troubles me.

(1) An owner must default in the payment of "common expenses" before the strata corporation is entitled to register a certificate under subsection (1);

(2) "Common expenses" are defined by ss. (7) and do not include fines, penalties or legal costs other than those expressly provided for by ss. (8);

(3) The certificate must show the "amount owing"[(ss. (1))];

(4) The "amount owing" is that amount which is due and payable for "common expenses";

(5) The certificate is a charge for the "amount owing" in priority to other charges except as specifically set out [ss. (2)];

(6) The strata corporation may add to the "amount owing" those costs set out in ss. (8);

(7) On application by the strata corporation the court may order that judgment be entered against the owner for "the amount owing to the strata corporation on the charge" and on granting judgment the court shall order that failing payment of the "amount owing" within 30 days after the order is made the strata corporation may sell the strata lot [ss. (3)];

(8) The "amount owing" referred to in each of subsections (1), (2) and (3) is the same amount, i.e. the amount for "common expenses" together with those amounts provided for in subsection (8).

[para28] There are other provisions of the Act which enable the strata corporation to impose other levies and where so imposed the owner is liable to pay them. If the owner does not pay them he is in breach of the bylaws and the strata corporation may have the power under s. 127(2) to recover those levies by "an action for debts". The fact that other amounts may be recoverable by the strata corporation under other sections of the Act does not mean that the summary procedures of s. 37 are available for them. I have concluded that s. 37 is not applicable to them. In my view, that is the very conclusion which Huddard J. came to in Crumley when she said:

When Mr. Crumley failed to pay a monthly assessment as required by s. 128(8) or (10) ... he violated the by-laws and became liable to the additional charges provided in s. 127(1). The section provides the remedy and I do not think it requires any order of this court to permit the strata corporation to advantage of it.

[para29] The additional charges which the learned judge referred to were the actual legal costs and the remedy to which she referred, in my view, was s. 127(2). The learned judge concluded that the owner was not obliged to pay the actual legal costs in order to "redeem", although he would be responsible for them and liable to an action in debt if they were levied by the strata corporation. Counsel for the petitioner suggests that this case is distinguishable in that here the strata corporation has "levied" the additional amounts which it seeks to recover. In my view, however, the ratio of Crumley is that in respect of legal costs s. 37 may be used only to recover party/party costs and that to recover any other legal costs the strata corporation must resort to s. 127(2).

[para30] In any event, there is no evidence that the strata corporation in this case has in fact made a levy in respect of the actual legal cost of this proceeding, nor for that matter has it filed any certificate setting out the amounts which it claims have accrued due since July 7, 1994. I gather the strata corporation relies on its right to file a certificate at any time and submits that it should not be required to file a new certificate each time a new charge is levied as that would needlessly increase costs. As to that, support may be found in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, supra, at p.325 where Bauman J. said:

I add that this strata corporation did not register in the land title office a certificate in Form B as required by s. 37(1). No time limit is imposed for the filing of that certificate so it could be done even now. The date for adjustments and completion of the sale of the strata lot is not until 15th July 1985. Counsel for the petitioning mortgagee does not make any point about the lack of filing of the certificate and, indeed, would discourage the strata corporation from doing so now as it would only increase the costs.

[para31] The strata corporation seeks to take the process a step further and include in the redemption amount an "amount owing" for legal expense which not only has not been levied but which is yet to be determined by assessment.

[para32] Counsel for the petitioner submits that the actual result in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, supra, supports his argument. Having concluded that the strata corporation did not enjoy priority with respect to the fines, penalties or legal levies the learned judge directed that the proceeds of sale be disbursed firstly to the strata corporation to in payment of the charges which had priority, secondly to the mortgagee and thirdly "to the strata corporation in respect of the Fine Levies and the Legal Levies". I have to agree that direction would seem to indicate that in the foreclosure proceeding the chambers judge provided for the recovery by the strata corporation of amounts for which it had no priority. There is no indication, however, that the court considered the particular question which I have addressed in this case. It seems to have simply been accepted that as the strata corporation was entitled to recover those additional amounts it should recover them from the proceeds of sale. I do not consider that decision is binding authority with respect to the very question which I have to consider in this case.

[para33] There is a further aspect to the matter of costs which has to be considered. While I have concluded that the amount for which the strata corporation has a charge against the owner's lands and the amount required to "redeem" includes the costs of this proceeding on a party/party basis only it would be within the court's discretion to award special costs of the proceeding if appropriate. However, I do not consider that the circumstances would warrant such an order on the authorities. The strata corporation will have its costs of this proceeding at scale 3. That does not, of course, prevent the strata corporation from ultimately recovering its actual legal costs by an action as permitted by s. 127(2).

[para34] Counsel submits that when one considers the Act as a whole, and when one considers the scheme condominium living, it is reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended that a strata corporation, which must operate for the good of the owners collectively, would have the ability to recover by way of this special statutory procedure charges of the type in question here, including special costs and fines. As McKenzie J. said in National Life Assurance Company of Canada v. Vidalin Construction Ltd., supra, the language of s. 37 is "brutal and piratical". In my view clearer language would be needed to enable fines, penalties, and actual legal costs to constitute a charge against the title to the property.

[para35] In conclusion, I am of the opinion that the amount for which the petitioner has a charge against the owner's lands and the amount to which it is entitled to judgment under s. 37 and the amount which the respondent is required to pay to "redeem" the lands includes common expenses, including repair levies and those amounts enumerated in ss. (8) but excludes fines or penalties, other legal levies or actual legal costs of the strata corporation.

[para36] Unfortunately, the affidavit material filed in support of the petition does not enable me to determine whether some of the amounts which are claimed are included or excluded, i.e.:

Balance as at April 1, 1994 $780.75 More information is required as to what this balance comprises

IN THE MATTER OF Section 76(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, Chapter 61 and amendments thereto and Rule 10(1)(F) of the Rules of Court Between Myles Enterprises Ltd. et al., petitioners, and Atlas Painting & Decorating Ltd. et. al., respondent

[1997] B.C.J. No. 446, Vancouver Registry No. A963747 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Lowry J. (In Chambers) Heard: February 10, 1997. Judgment: filed February 21, 1997.

Counsel: J. Webster, for M.R.S. Trust Company and The Toronto-Dominion Bank. B.J. Ingram, for Community Living Society. L.J. Gwozd, for Axa Pacific Insurance Company and City Club Development (Middlegate) Corp. W.S. McLean, for the respondent and other lien claimants. B.F. Schreiber, for Progressive Air Products Ltd. (lien claimant).

[para1] LOWRY J.:-- Community Living Society, the second mortgagee of a condominium project, makes application with respect to certain holdback monies paid into court by purchasers of some of the strata lots to clear their titles of lien encumbrances. The application raises the narrow question of whether section 75 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61, charges the purchasers' holdbacks with payment of project lien claimants other than those claimants who filed liens against the subject lots within the time permitted by that Act: not later than 31 days after the conveyance.

[para2] M.R.S. Trust Company and The Toronto-Dominion Bank hold the first mortgage. Axa Pacific Company and City Club Development (Middlegate) Corp., hold the third and fourth mortgages. As each lot in the project was sold, the mortgagee interest in that lot was surrendered. Each conveyance produced a payment that served to reduce the first mortgage debt and that in rem mortgage interest was transformed into a contractual interest in the sale proceeds as against the owner developer of the project.

[para3] When about half of the 160 strata lot units had been sold, financial difficulties arose and foreclosure proceedings were commenced. The titles to the sold and unsold lots, and the common property, were encumbered with a large number of liens that had been filed. The purchasers, who had all held back 7% of the purchase price as required, initiated this proceeding under s. 76 and obtained an order clearing the titles to their lots with about $1.0 million in holdbacks being paid into court. However, with the exception of a lien filed against each lot by Fastgo Systems Inc., the liens filed against perhaps half of the conveyed lots were filed more than 31 days after the conveyance.

[para4] The Society maintains that there is in excess of $400,000 now in court which is not charged with the payment of claimants who filed valid lien claims. It applies for an order adding all the mortgagees as respondents in this proceeding and directing that a payment out of all such funds be made to the first mortgagee to be applied against the amount owing under the first mortgage thereby improving the position of the subsequent mortgagees in the foreclosure proceedings. The other mortgagees support the Society's application.

[para5] The claimants, other than Fastgo, oppose the application on two grounds. They first say that the second, third, and fourth mortgagees can have no interest in the funds because only the first mortgagee holds a contractual interest in them. But I consider the subsequent mortgagees have a real, albeit indirect, interest in the funds and are properly joined as respondents in this proceeding. The claimants then say that, even though they did not file liens in compliance with the Act, the holdback monies are nonetheless charged with the payment of their claims. [para6] Section 75 of the Condominium Act provides:

75. (1) Notwithstanding any other Act, where an owner developer conveys a strata lot to a purchaser, no builders lien shall be filed against the strata lot, or against the purchaser's share in the common property, later than 31 days after the date the strata lot is conveyed to the purchaser.

(2) Notwithstanding any other Act, or any agreement to the contrary, a purchaser of a strata lot from an owner developer shall retain a holdback in the amount of 15% of the gross purchase price of the strata lot, or any smaller amount fixed by regulation, for a period of 40 days after the date the strata lot is conveyed to the purchaser.

(3) The holdback is subject to a lien under the Builders Lien Act and the holdback is charged with the payment of those persons employed under the person from whom the holdback is retained.

(4) Payment of a holdback required to be retained under subsection (2) shall be made after 40 days expire unless in the meantime a claim of lien has been filed, or proceedings have been commenced to enforce a claim of lien against the holdback.

(5) On payment of the holdback amount, all liens of the person to whom the holdback is paid, and of any person employed under him for the strata lot, are discharged.

[para8] However, the claimants say in effect that ss. (3) and (4) serve to minimize, to some degree, the extent to which lien claimants would otherwise be disadvantaged. They say the legislative intent was to charge holdbacks established under ss. (2) with the payment of all who have lien claims in respect of the project as a whole which are filed and prosecuted in accordance with the Builders Lien Act. The fact that the holdbacks may have been retained and ultimately paid into court because of a single lien claim is said to be of no consequence.

[Under ss. (3),] the holdback is subject to a lien under the Builders Lien Act and the holdback is charged with the payment of those persons employed under the person from whom the holdback is retained.

The lien claimants supplied labour and material to the whole project, and not to individual strata lots, in the same way as joint tenants of property are owners of undivided half interests in the whole property. The lien claimants, collectively, are included among "those persons employed under the person from whom the holdback is retained" [the owner developer].

Subsection (3) is conjunctive. If the second clause were to refer only to lien claimants on the subject lot, it would be rendered redundant by the first clause.

[Under ss. (4),] "payment of a holdback required to be retained under ss. (2) shall be made after 40 days expire unless in the meantime a claim of lien has been filed, or proceedings have been commenced to enforce a claim of lien against the holdback."

Subsection (4) is disjunctive. If the second event ("proceedings have been commenced to enforce a claim of lien") were to refer only to liens filed against the strata lot, it would be unnecessary to include the first event ("a claim of lien has been filed"). Lien proceedings are not sustainable without a filed lien claim.

There is no redundancy in the statute, however, if ss. (4) is read in combination with ss. (3). The first event of ss.(4) ("a claim of lien has been filed") matches the first category of ss. (3) ("subject to a lien"). The second event of ss. (4) ("proceedings have been commenced to enforce a claim of lien") matches the second category of ss. (4) ("charged with the payment of those persons ...").

[para10] In my view, there is much force in the claimants' submission. Certainly, I am unable to explain the second clause in ss. (3) in particular in any other way. The mortgagees insist that, if the legislative intent was as the claimants contend, it would be much more clearly stated. They say that the wording employed is to be given a fair, large, and liberal interpretation and that "those persons" must be read as pertaining to only those persons who have complied with ss. 1 in filing a claim of lien not later than 31 days after the conveyance. But that is not what the subsection says.

[para11] To support their contention, the claimants cite provisions of the Builders Lien Act that afford suppliers of labour and materials a priority remedy where lien rights have been lost: s. 2 that gives them priority in the form of a trust to monies owed by an owner to a general contractor, and s. 20(2) which in Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Abacus Cities Ltd. (1979), 18 B.C.L.R. 317 (S.C.) at 319, was said to create a charge on holdback monies which a lien claimant could pursue in the same way as s. 2 trust monies could be pursued even though the claimant's lien was extinguished by sale.

[para12] Counsel say that the question to be decided here has not as yet been addressed in any case of which they are aware. However, while not referred to in the course of argument, what is described as a lien against a holdback is discussed by D.A. Coulson in his comprehensive Guide to Builders Liens in British Columbia, (Carswell: Toronto, 1994) at pp. 91-92. Although the learned author expresses the view that the existence of such as a separate remedy with respect to holdbacks under the Builders Lien Act is still an open question in this province, he states that ss. (3) and (4) of s. 75 of the Condominium Act apparently create a similar remedy. [para13] I agree. It does appear to me that the provisions of s. 75 of the Condominium Act, ss. (3) and (4) in particular, give rise to a charge on a holdback the benefit of which is not confined to only those who have filed a claim of lien in accordance with ss. (1). That is sufficient to dispose of this application.

Lau v. Strat Corp. No. LMS 463

Between Yuen Fong Lau, Sau Mei May Ma, and Suet Mui Leung, petitioners, and Strata Corporation No. LMS 463, Strata Council No. LMS 463, and PCI Realty Corp., respondents

[1996] B.C.J. No. 1728, Vancouver Registry No. A952935 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Taylor J. Heard: April 4, 1996. Judgment: filed August 2, 1996.

Counsel: Douglas R. Eyford, for the petitioners. Patrick A. Williams, for the respondents.

[para1] TAYLOR J.:-- The petitioners are the registered owners of Strata Lot No. 5 (the Premises) which is one of 106 commercial units in a shopping mall (the Mall) owned by Strata Corporation No. LMS 463. The respondents are the Strata Corporation, its Council and the property manager engaged by the Strata Council.

[para2] The Premises are so located that one of its walls is also an exterior wall of the Mall. Prior to its purchase by the petitioners it was operated as an art shop. Access to the unit was gained from inside the Mall. The Mall operates daily until 9:00 p.m. Nineteen other units had direct access doors through the outside walls of the Mall. None of those units had businesses that operated beyond mall hours. [para3] The only unit in the Mall that operated beyond the normal Mall hours and whose patrons had access to the Mall interior was a restaurant. It was located so that while its patrons could access the Mall parkade without entering other areas. That restaurant had its own washrooms.

[para5] Those requests were considered by the Strata Council on January 21, 1994. Council did not approve the direct exit application. However, in a letter dated January 23, 1994, the property manager informed 428470 that the council had approved the change of use.

[para6] 428470 then wrote to the property manager, Ms. MacFarlane, that because the arcade would be operating beyond normal Mall hours, that either the Mall would have to be kept open to accommodate the arcade or an outside direct access would have to be allowed. By letter dated February 1, 1994, Ms. Macfarlane informed the vendor that the Strata Council:

Had reconsidered its decision regarding the direct access exit and Council would request, however, at Mall closing hour the common door between the Premises and the corridor is shut off and locked. They would also request that you install washrooms for your clientele to use after hours.

Please consider these requests and confirm back to us that you are in agreement with the above.

[para7] That letter was not responded to by 428470 and the transfer of ownership to the petitioners occurred on March 17, 1994. On May 10, 1994 Mr. Chan, the husband of one of the petitioners and the principal of 828 Enterprises Ltd. (828), the lessee of the Premises and operator of the arcade wrote to the Strata Council, requesting that the Council not demand the installation of a washroom.

[para10] The position of Mr. Chan was that because the City of Richmond had issued a permit for 828 to operate beyond Mall hours, and at the same time had not imposed a requirement of washrooms, that the petitioner and 828 were relieved from complying with the Mall's by-laws and requirements. [para11] At its July 12, 1994 meeting the Strata Council received the advice of the solicitors respecting fines which was recorded in the Minutes of the meeting as follows:

Exterior Door for #1420

The agent had sought legal opinion from Mr. Mark Tindle regarding unit 1420 for installing an exterior door in their unit without installing a washroom. Mr. Tindle said the council can proceed as per the by-laws with a warning notice for the first occurrence, a $50.00 find for the second occurrence and $150 for each subsequent occurrence on a monthly basis.

[para12] By July 28, 1994 matters had reached the state that the solicitor for the Mall, Mr. Tindle, wrote 828 that either the direct exit door be removed or the washrooms be installed. He set a 15 day period for compliance.

[para13] Mr. Chan then attended a Strata Council meeting on August 16, 1994. The Minutes record that "the meeting resolved to further review and discussed the case and will get back to Mr. Chan as soon as possible."

[para14] The Strata Council did review the issue of the exit door and washrooms and conclude that its position would remain that which was set out in Mr. Tindle's letter.

[para15] On August 23, 1994, 828 was informed by letter from the property manager of the Council's position. Nothing was done by 828. At its September 20, 1994 meeting the Strata Council decided not to remove the exit door itself, but rather to seek legal advice as to the imposition of fines backdated to the "first violations" of the by-laws.

[para16] On September 28, 1994 the property manager informed 828 that the Strata Council had decided to impose fines under to By-law No. 2 "with retroactive effect from June 2, 1994 in accordance with the following schedule:

1. June 3 to June 12, 1994 - warning letter. No fines.
2. June 13 - October 5, 1994 - $50.00 per day.
3. If you still have not removed the infraction by October 5, 1994 the fine will increase to $150.00 per day from October 6, 1994 onwards."

[para17] Parker Place By-law No. 2 provides as follows:

Violation of By-laws (Ref. Condominium Act Sec. 127)

An infraction of violation of the By-laws of LMS 463 or any of the Rules and Regulations established pursuant to these By-laws on the part of an owner, his employees, his agents, invitees or tenants, may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Strata Corporation, as follows:

- First Violation - warning letter; - Second Violation - $50.00 fine; - Further Violation - maximum $150.00 fine per occurrence.

Any costs or expense so incurred by the Strata Corporation shall be charged to the owner. Such charges shall be immediately paid by owners.

[para18] From October 7 onwards Mr. Chan continued correspondence to the property manager remonstrating over the position of the Strata Council. The position of the respondents did not change.

[para19] Mr. Chan in his Affidavit of August 30, 1995 deposed to the fact that after the end of September 1994 the door was blocked off which he did in response to the September 28 letter.

[para20] On March 30, 1995 the exit door was removed. 828 had paid $3,215.35 to install the door and $2,600.10 to remove the door and restore the wall. Shortly thereafter the property manager informed the petitioners that the penalties for violation of the by-laws had ceased on March 30, 1995.

[para21] Strata Council thereafter took the position that as the petitioners had unpaid fines of $28,754.28 that they could not vote at the annual general meetings of the Strata Corporation. As well, a Form B was filed against the petitioners' title which prevented the petitioners Lau and Leung from purchasing the petitioner Ma's interest.

[para22] On March 4, 1996 counsel for the petitioners wrote to the counsel for the respondents demanding that the respondent keep the Mall open to accommodate the new licensed hours of the arcade (i.e. past 9:00 p.m.) and that the respondent provide the direct access door. Neither was done.

[para23] The property manager, Mr. Yeun's, Affidavits date stamped February 29, 1996 and April 2, 1996 raise the issue of 828 obtaining a licence approval from the City of Richmond on the basis that the arcade had washroom facilities available to it during its operating hours and the fact that the Mall closed at 9:00 p.m. was not disclosed to the licencing authorities. It is clear from the correspondence from Richmond that it granted a licence on the basis of the washrooms would be available to patrons of the Premises during all operating hours. It is equally clear that neither the Petitioners nor Mr. Chan directed anyone's mind to the fact that the Arcade would operate outside normal Mall hours and that therefore Mall washrooms would not be available. Mr. Chan's position was that no washroom was needed during those additional hours.

[para24] By a letter dated May 10, 1994, the respondents however drew that concern to the attention of the City of Richmond:

"With the condition [referring to the change of use permission] that the owner install public washrooms within the Unit. This would ensure their patrons have proper facilities should the Mall be closed during the unit's hours of operations."

Mr. Nishi responded that Richmond could not be responsible for ensuring compliance with the Strata Corporation's by-laws.

[para25] The Permits and Licence Department of the City of Richmond by fax dated July 4, 1995 noted:

"This specific arcade does not require washrooms within their unit."

That fax does not address the issue of what would occur when the Mall is closed and its washrooms were not available to the arcade patrons.

[para26] Apart from the issue of the washrooms the Strata Council had no complaints with respect to the use of the Premises as an arcade and video entertainment centre.

[para27] The petitioners seek the following relief:

1. That the fines presently levied against the Premises be cancelled.
2. That the respondent Strata Corporation be prohibited from fixing and collecting fines against the petitioners for installing a direct access door.
3. That the respondent Strata Council be prohibited from interfering with the petitioners' use and enjoyment of the Premises as a video arcade or entertainment centre.
4. That the Strata Council be directed to permit the petitioners to vote at general meetings.

The determination of these issues in large part turns upon whether or not the exterior wall of the Premises is part of the Strata Lot or common property. If the former, the petitioners did not need permission to install a direct access door. If the latter they would and it would be in authority of the Strata Council to impose conditions for its installation.

[para28] The petitioners argue that because the Strata Council adopted its own by-laws as opposed to adopting those pro forma by-laws set out in the Condominium Act S.B.C. Ch.61, where the custom made by-laws do not require approval, an owner can move with impunity in that vacuum.

[para29] Section 115(h) of the Condominium Act supra provides:

An owner shall

(h) receive the written permission of the strata council before undertaking alterations to the exterior or structure of the strata lot, but permission shall not be unreasonably withheld.

Parker Place By-law I(u) provides:

An owner or an occupant of a strata lot shall:

(u) not paint the exterior of the strata lot without first obtaining the written consent of the Strata Corporation which consent may be arbitrarily withheld.

Parker Place By-law II(a) provides:

That exterior walls are specifically reserved to the Corporation. "The Strata Corporation shall:

(a) control, manage and administer the common property (and the exterior wall of each strata lot).

[para30] Parker Place By-law II(a), specifically adds "exterior walls of each strata lot" to that which would have otherwise been reserved to the Strata Corporation under Sec. 116(a) of the Condominium Act.

[para31] It was argued by the petitioners that the combined provisions of Parker Place By-law I(u) and II(a) implies a conscientious decision to delegate strata walls to individual owners by virtue of the exclusion of statutory by-law Section 115(h). The petitioner relies upon Proudfoot, J.A.'s comment in Buchbinder v. Strata Plan VR2096, reported 1992 22 R.P.R. (2d) 40 at page 43 when commenting on a garden shed being erected on a patio which was determined to be limited common property:

"It would seem to me that a more convincing argument can be made for the appellant's position that the by-law cannot be able to specifically forbid strata owners from assembling garden sheds on a patio in that there is no mention of a garden shed within the by-laws."

Proudfoot, J.A. later in her judgment, however, went on to note at page 44 that a patio is not incorporated within the definition of the building exterior. The petitioner, however, can gain little solace from Madam Justice Proudfoot's comments in view of the wording of By-law II(a) whereby the power to control, manage and administer ... "the exterior walls of each strata lot" is reserved to the Corporation specifically.

[para33] The very purpose of the concept of common property is to maintain an integrity of the whole as opposed to individualization of each unit. That concept recognizes that for certain areas of a condominium the Corporation must concern itself with a greater good for the greatest number and thus reserve unto itself certain aspects of structure. This in my opinion it has done under By-law II(a). As well, under By-law IV(q) the Strata Council has a power to grant an owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment on the common property.

[para34] It is of some significance as well that the former owners writing on behalf of the petitioners sought the approval of the Strata Council before making any moves to install a door. I am, therefore, satisfied that the Strata Corporation has the power to authorize, whether on conditions or not, alterations to the exterior wall. The exterior walls are common property. Without that authority an owner does not have the power to make such alterations.

[para35] Having concluded the Strata Council has the power to authorize alteration to the exterior wall I turn to the question of whether the installation of the washrooms was a condition upon which the direct access door's installation depended.

[para36] The position of the petitioners is that because the term "request" was used in Ms. Macfarlane's letter of February 1, 1994 the installation of washrooms was not a condition. Yet, in the final sentence of her letter it is made abundantly clear that the approval of a direct access door requires agreement to the requests when she wrote:

"Please consider these requests and confirm back to us if you are in agreement with both of the above."

[para37] Mr. Chan's response by his letter of May 10, 1994 was merely to argue his point again. His comments can be viewed as a refusal to accept the condition. I am satisfied that the installation of washrooms was a condition to the approval of the alteration of the exterior wall by construction of a direct access door.

[para38] By-law IV(a) gives to the Strata Council the authority to exercise and perform the powers and the duties of the Strata Corporation. In the exercise of these powers the Council was obliged to function with the perception of the greatest good for the greater number of owners. See Sterloff v. Strata Plan VR2613 (1994), 38 R.P.R. (2d) 102 at 108.

[para39] Thus in approving the direct access door knowing that the arcade would be operating beyond normal hours the Council had to weigh the need for washrooms for patrons, the aspect of security and the cost of such security and maintenance for the other 105 units in the Mall. It had to consider what would occur if no internal Mall washrooms were to be available after the Mall was closed.

[para40] In so weighing these considerations the Strata Council imposed the condition for washrooms on the Premises, if the arcade was to operate, as it was licensed to do beyond the hours that the Mall would be open. [para41] Thus, the Strata Council was entitled to impose as a condition of the installation of the direct access door, the installation of washrooms.

[para43] The petitioners argue that the failure to install the washrooms does not constitute a breach of the by-laws because there is no authority in the by-laws by which the strata corporation would require the installation of the washroom. Section 14 of the Condominium Act provides that the Strata Corporation is responsible for the enforcement of the by-laws. The by-laws here are those of the specific Strata Corporation and those dealing with the common property are contained within the Parker Place By-Law II(a):

The Strata Corporation shall:

(a) control manage and administer the common property (and the exterior wall of each strata lot), common facilities or other assets of the Strata Corporation to facilitate the operations of the shopping centre;

(b) maintain and repair and if appropriate, decorate the common property, common facilities and other assets of the Strata Corporation and the exterior walls of the strata lots, excluding windows and store front which form part of a strata lot.

[para44] The Strata Corporation cannot exercise powers where it is not given them pursuant to its by-laws. Where power is reserved to itself, that power can be exercised and in so doing conditions can be imposed. It would make no sense if under By-law IV(a) and (9) a Strata Corporation in permitting an owner to do something that would otherwise be a breach of the by-laws could not impose a condition the breach of which would be a breach of the by-law itself.

[para45] Whether the condition had to do with something as simple as the size of a door or as complex as the installation of a washroom, a failure to comply with the condition is, in my opinion, a failure to comply with the by-law. [para46] It is to be noted that when the respondent adopted its by-laws in by-law II(a) it replaced the words "for the benefit of all owners" found in section 116(a) of the Act with the words "to facilitate the operations of shopping centre."

[para47] The imposition of conditions in the course of the exercise of its power under By-law IV and (9) that therefore would facilitate the operations of the shopping Mall can only be regarded an aspect of the by-law themselves.

[para48] To not have imposed such a condition, therefore, would have been to invite the owners to demand that the Strata Corporation look to the interests of the other owners and open the door for a Section 40 application, bearing in mind the sanitary requirements of the Mall. Certainly the City of Richmond required that patrons of the arcade have access to washrooms as evidenced by the permit that was issued on April 11, 1994 under remarks:

"Remarks: Int. Finish to provide arcade note washrooms within the unit not req'd, see letters on file. This unit using washrooms in the bldg. Applicant states no change to sprinklers."

Thus, the plaintiff's failure to install the washrooms having installed the door was a breach of the by-laws of the Strata Corporation.

[para49] The petitioners further submit that the conduct of the respondent surrounding the issue of the door was oppressive and seek relief pursuant to the provisions of Sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act. The acts relied upon are set forth in the petitioner's brief at paragraph 35:

- (a) interpreting the approval for installing the direct exit door as being conditional on the installation of washrooms;
- (b) insisting that washrooms be installed in the Premises without having the power under the by-laws to do so;
- (c) taking the position that the petitioners are in breach of the by-laws because they did not install washrooms in the Premises;
- (d) failing to respond to the Petitioners' letter dated May 10, 1994;
- (e) instructing legal counsel to threaten legal proceedings if the Petitioners did not remedy the alleged breach of by-laws;
- (f) purporting to fix a fine that the respondents do not have power to assess;
- (g) assessing the fine in the period preceding the August 16, 1994 meeting;
- (h) continuing to assess a daily fine after the petitioners stopped using the direct exit door;
- (i) filing the Form B Certificate of Default in Payment against title to the Premises thereby interfering with the purchase and sale of the petitioner Ma's interests in the Premises;
- (j) forcing the petitioners to reinstate the storefront wall at their own cost when the respondents were aware that the City of Richmond required that the petitioners maintain two exits to the premises;
- (k) advising the petitioners that they are not entitled to vote at a general meeting of the Strata Corporation; and
- (l) advising the petitioners counsel that a proposal to resolve the impasse would be made to the petitioners in July, 1995 and not making any such proposal.

I have concluded that the respondent had the authority to require the washroom installation as a condition of the alteration of the exterior wall. Therefore, I conclude that the complaints in sub-paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (f) are without merit. Insofar as sub-paragraph (d) is concerned, the respondents sought to deal with these concerns at the June 1, 1994 meeting which reconvened on June 6 by which time the door had been installed. This complaint is without merit.

[para50] Having concluded that a breach of condition for permission to alter the exterior wall was a breach of the by-laws I find no basis to the assertion that the assessment of a fine was oppressive although I shall subsequently deal with the manner in which that fine was imposed and its amount. I conclude (f), (g) (h) do not constitute oppressive Acts cumulatively or otherwise.

[para51] Counsel for the respondent agrees that it was improper for the Strata Council to file a Form B and informed me at the commencement of this hearing that, in fact, he had advised his clients to remove the Form B from title once he had been retained. I find that the filing of a Form B was more an incorrect assessment of procedure rather than oppression.

[para54] Finally it was argued that the Strata Corporation acted in an oppressive manner by interfering in the transfer of the petitioner Ma's interest to the other two petitioners. There is no evidence that a Form A was requested under Section 38 of the Condominium Act before the Form B was released other than Mr. Chan's assertion that "the petitioners have not been able to complete the transaction because of the charge filed against the property" and for which assertion he proffers no basis.

[para55] In summary, I do not find the conduct of the respondents oppressive in the context in the meaning of Section 42.

[para57] Section 125(6) of the Condominium Act provides that:

(6) Except in cases where, under this Act, a unanimous resolution is required, an owner is not entitled to vote at a general meeting unless all contributions payable for his strata lot have been paid

That Section refers to "all contributions payable". Parker Place By-law XI(f) is similar to the provisions of Section 125(6). It provides:

(f) Except in cases where, a unanimous resolution is required, an owner is not entitled to vote at a general meeting unless all contributions payable to the Strata Corporation relating to his strata lot have been paid. [para58] It will be noted there is a subtle difference in that the respondent's By-law refers to "all contributions payable to the Strata Corporation relating to his Strata Lot have been paid." The issue arises then of whether fines imposed can come under the rubric of "all contributions payable to the Strata Corporation." Counsel were unable to direct me to any authorities and I have likewise found none that shed light upon this term. The term "contribution" must perforce go beyond giving of a voluntary nature.

[para59] Section 37(1) of the Condominium Act refers to "payment of his share of common expenses." Section 38(1) refers to "no money is owing to it".

[para60] Within the by-laws themselves Parker Place By-law II(e) refers to "collect and receive all contributions towards common expenses levied by the Strata Corporation." When referring to fines under By-law III(f) references made to "imposing fines, penalties or charges" and that such "fines shall be used to award common expenses." By-law XIII provides that where the Corporation expends funds to remedy a breach such costs were to be added to the next monthly assessment. Likewise, By-law XIV(g) provides a prioritization on the application of monies received from an owner the second of which is payment of fines and the fourth of which is payment of the balance of outstanding common area expenses.

[para61] While superficially attractive this dichotomy of expression is used in Section 38(2) loses its appeal when reviewed in the context of By-law XIV(g) which does not refer to "contributions", when applying funds received from an owner in the particular priority set out in that By-law. Taken in its totality I am of the opinion that the By-laws of Parker Place provide that unpaid fines shall be added to that which is owed by an owner and applied in the manner prioritized by By-law XIV(g). Therefore, unpaid fines will have the same consequences as unpaid contributions towards expenses resulting in the denial of an owner of the right to vote at general meetings under By-law XI(j).????

[para63] It is clear on the evidence that the petitioners or their tenant blocked the door after receipt of the September 28 letter. Quite apart from that the respondent pursuant to its by-law XIII(a) had the authority to remedy the violation and then charge that cost back to the owners. They chose not to do that. Had it done so whatever cost it incurred would have been added to the monthly assessment and a Form B could have then been properly registered for unpaid restorative costs.

[para64] Counsel for the respondent concedes the total amount of the fine is unreasonable. Pursuant to the provisions of Section 21 of the Law and Equity Act the Court has the power to relieve against penalties such as those imposed upon the petitioners.

[para65] The petitioners by the letter of June 3, 1994 (two days after the installation of the door) were informed that a failure to install washrooms would be viewed as a breach of the by-laws and that the Strata Corporation reserved the right to impose fines for contravening the by-laws and/or reinstate the store front. This refrain is repeated by its solicitor, Mr. Tindle, on July 28, 1994 and the property manager on August 23, 1994 after Mr. Chan had met with the Strata Council. Yet, it was only after September 20, 1994 the Strata Council decided to take enforcement action. It decided not to reinstate the wall but rather to seek legal advice as to imposition of fines.

[para66] There are no Minutes or any decision to impose fines, but the property manager, Mr. Lee, by letter dated September 28, 1994 set forth the Council's decision that was made sometime between September 20 - 28, 1994.

[para67] On October 7, 1994 Mr. Chan responded professing:

"Up until now we still do not have an explanation from Councils. What is the relation between the exit door and the washroom", not withstanding Mr. Chan's attendance at the August 16, 1994 Strata Council meeting.

[para68] Despite that it was only after the receipt of the September 28 letter that 828 blocked the door. The door was never used and thereafter was removed on March 30, 1995.

[para69] Both counsel suggested various starting points for the fine. Given its knowledge that the petitioners and/or 828 did not want to install the washroom and its ability to remove the door when it knew the condition of its installation would not be fulfilled, the Strata Council declined to do so and decided to follow the route of a breach of its by-laws. Aware of its ability to impose fines as set forth in its July 12, 1994 Minutes it declined to do so until September 20, 1994, when at a Strata Council meeting then instructed its property manager to inform the petitioners of the fine schedule as set forth in the September 28, 1994 letter of Mr. Lee then property manager. In that letter it imposed fines on a daily basis as opposed to an occurrence basis.

[para70] Parker Place By-Law No. 2 under which the fines were imposed, refers to "occurrences" whereas By-law No. 3 refers to a "per diem" rate of $50.00. Counsel are unable to provide any authority on what "per occurrence" meant and the by-laws do not provide any assistance in defining what that expression should mean in the context of the Parker Place By-laws. Likewise, Section 50 of the Condominium Act speaks of fines "for a breach" and is silent as to the breach that continues on a daily as opposed to isolated basis.

[para71] Somewhat arbitrarily I am asked to fix what fine would have been reasonable to impose. The purpose of a fine is in part to encourage compliance with the By-laws of the Strata Corporation. The fine is an option open to the Strata Council to be used, more often than not, in circumstances where it may be impossible or beyond the means of the Strata Council to effect remedial measures. Accordingly, By-law No. 2 is to be viewed in the context of a continuing violation providing for occurrences to be daily in concept.

[para72] Mr. Chan met with the Strata Council at its August 16, 1994 meeting and the minutes of that meeting make it clear, in the event it can be said that if it was not clear before to Mr. Chan, the position and reasons for that position taken by the Strata Council were explained to Mr. Chan. The letter of Mr. Lee, the manager, of August 23, 1994 informed Mr. Chan that the Strata Council, "after reviewing all the facts and your position concluded there was not appeal on the approval condition ... The Council therefore decided that you should either reinstate the exit door or install the washroom as required immediately as the 15 days period allowed in Mr. Tindle's letter has already expired." By that date Mr. Chan had both the position of the respondents and an explanation following upon an opportunity to put forward his position.

[para73] Despite that the door remained functional and was not blocked until the end of September when finally Mr. Chan abandoned any use of or intention to use the door. This was as a consequence of his being informed of the fines September 28.

[para74] Although I have concluded that under the by-laws, each successive day is an infraction, by-law #2 refers to fines imposed for further violations to be to a "maximum" of 150 per day.

[para75] In the circumstances of this case, I am of the opinion the fines imposed should be relieved against; and that there should be fines imposed on the following basis:

August 23 - warning letter and August 31 period to comply

September 1 to - $50.00 per day September 14

September 15 to - $100.00 per day September 21

September 22 to - $150.00 per day September 28

The total of fines, therefore, to be imposed will be $2,500.00. The balance of the fines imposed are relieved against pursuant to the provisions of the Law and Equity Act.

[para76] I am further satisfied the Strata Council and its property manager acted in good faith in its dealings with the Petitioner the City of Richmond and the petition is dismissed as against them. COSTS

[para78] Likewise, I have concluded that the Strata Corporation was correct in its position that the petitioner could not vote so long as the outstanding fines remained unpaid. In view of the fact that the actions of the Strata Council were in the interests of the operation of the shopping Mall as a whole, I am of the view that it would be inappropriate to make any order exempting the petitioners in respect of any unit entitlement cost in respect of the respondents' legal fees.

Strata Plan 1261 v. 360204 B.C. Ltd.

Between The owners, Strata Plan 1261, plaintiff, and 360204 B.C. Ltd. and Alan Wilson, defendants, and Peter Driessen, Nadine Boyd, John Curry, Rod Todd, James Hall, Romelda Heard, Joe Lyons, Lana Robertson, Don Newton and Ken Slack, defendants by counterclaim

[1996] B.C.J. No. 955, Vancouver Registry No. C953575 British Columbia Supreme Court Thackray J. Heard: February 27, 1996. Judgment: filed May 1, 1996.

Counsel: F.E. Verhoeven and E.G. Wong, for the plaintiff. B.A. Meckling, for the defendant 360204 B.C. Ltd.

[para1] THACKRAY J.:-- In reasons released December 22, 1995 it was held that the contract between the plaintiff Strata Corporation and the numbered defendant was void ab initio as it was never properly executed and because it was obtained in violation of fiduciary duties.

[para2] I will take this opportunity to correct some errors which appear in paragraph 100 on page 32 of those reasons. The word "not" should appear in the sixth line before the word "free". The name "Proudfoot J.A." should be replaced by the name "Wilson J." and the page number changed to 288.

[para3] The plaintiff now seeks: 1. An order for an accounting by the numbered defendant and that all rental proceeds from the parking stalls be paid to the plaintiff;

2. In the alternative occupational rent pursuant to R. 32(3) for the period from July, 1989 to December, 1995;

3. Interest on all amounts pursuant to the Court Order Interest Act; and

4. Double increased costs.

[para4] The defendant suggests that the appropriate relief would be repayment of all rents obtained from non-residents for the use of vacant parking stalls and ordinary costs at scale 4.

[para6] The named defendant signed on behalf of the plaintiff in his capacity as its agent. This agency relationship was said to arise from his position as the representative of the company hired as the "Property Manager". This company was another subsidiary of Mastercraft, the developer. The named defendant was an employee of that company. A director of the numbered defendant signed on its behalf.

[para7] In summary I held that the parking agreement to be invalid for the following reasons:

The named Defendant lacked the capacity to sign the contract for the plaintiff Strata Corporation;

The contract was, in substance, a lease and as a lease it was invalid as it was not registered with the Land Titles Office as required by the Land Titles Act;

Since the contract was a disposition of common property, it was ineffective as the requisite authorizations called for in ss. 20(1) and 58 of the Condominium Act were not in place;

The contract was rendered ineffective at the request of the plaintiff as the named defendant had executed it in violation of his fiduciary duty as representative of the Strata Corporation, as his duty to the plaintiff conflicted with his duty to the corporate entity which nominated him, and in violation of his duty to act in the best interests of all the strata owners pursuant to s. 116(a) of the Act; and

The execution of the contract was the result of a request by the developer, and this request was a violation of the developer's fiduciary duty to the present and future owners of the strata units. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

[para8] The plaintiff Strata Corporation seeks a remedy solely on the basis of the two fiduciary breaches: one on the part of the named defendant when he executed the contract while in a conflict of interest, the other that the developer (who can be effectively treated as the numbered defendant) was in conflict of interest when it requested the contract be executed.

Historically, in equity, there was no jurisdiction to award damages. Depending on the nature of the equitable claim, the recognized remedies include injunctions, rescission or restitution, declarations of constructive trust for breaches of fiduciary duty and compensation where an in specie remedy was no longer available. In addition, there is an independent claim and remedy for an accounting of profits that a fiduciary makes as a result of his conduct in relation to his principal's property or his confidences.

[para10] In Hodgkinson v. Simms (1994), 97 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1 (S.C.C.) the appropriate remedy for fiduciary breach was discussed. At page 44 the Court said:

It is well established that the proper approach to damages for breach of fiduciary duty is restitutionary. On this approach, the appellant is entitled to be put in as good a position as he would have been in had the breach not occurred.

[para11] The Terrace decisions [See Note 1 below] are helpful because their facts are almost indistinguishable from the facts in the case at bar. There was a lease for the use of parking stalls between the plaintiff Strata Corporation and the defendant developer. The lease was signed by two employees of the developer on behalf of the plaintiff. The yearly payments made by the developer as consideration for the contractual "license" were far below what it obtained from the rental of the individual stalls. The plaintiff also continued to pay taxes and upkeep for the stalls, which its members could not use.

Note 1: The Owners : Condominium Plan No. 752-1207 v. Terrace Corp. et al (1980), 14 Alta.L.R.(2d) 24 (Alta. Q.B.); and Terrace Corp. et al v. Owners Condominium Plan No. 752-1207 (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 324 (Alta. C.A.) affirming.

[para13] In those decisions there are some additional facts which might have vindicated the developer. There were 125 parking stalls, including the ones on the roof which were the subject of the lease, and only 77 condominiums. The excess parking arose from construction and legal problems which decreased the size of the building without affecting the amount of parking. Every prospective purchaser of a strata unit was given a copy of the lease and an explanation of the circumstances surrounding the lease. The position taken by the developer was that the excess stalls belonged to it, even though it was listed on the strata plan as "limited common property" belonging to the owners.

[para14] Both at trial and appeal the courts declined to find that the owners had consented to the fiduciary breach on the part of both the developer and its nominees on the Strata Corporation who executed the lease simply by purchasing these units with notice of the lease to the developer of the excess parking stalls. MacLean J., at trial, voided the lease and stated (p.34 Alta. L.R.):

The plaintiff corporation will be entitled to an order setting aside the lease and requiring the defendant corporation to account for the rent and profits thereof and pay the same to the plaintiff corporation.

[para15] This remedy was upheld on appeal. Stevenson J.A. discussed the nature and basis of this order (p. 331 D.L.R.):

The remedy of the common property owners is analogous to the proprietary remedy of the trust beneficiary, namely, the restoration of the property. The beneficiaries' action is generally considered as giving rise to the right to restore the property to the trust...I conclude, therefore, that the condominium corporation's action to recover the common property (with incidental relief) is a proper one.

[para16] The judgments in Terrace suggest that the appropriate remedy in the case at bar would be to order the return of all rents received by the numbered defendant to the plaintiff Strata Corporation.

[para17] In York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280 (Ont.C.A.) the Court ordered that all the proceeds received by the developer from the sale of excess parking stalls were to be returned to the plaintiff Strata Council. The Court specified that the plaintiff was to hold the proceeds "to be used in the discharge of its obligations under the declaration, including its obligation to maintain the common elements".

[para18] The position adopted by both the Ontario and Alberta courts seems to be the correct approach. The question remaining is whether the facts of the case at bar present any justification for varying the remedy: i.e., is there anything which would justify allowing the defendant to retain any of the rental proceeds?

[para19] The numbered defendant, in its chambers brief, split the sources of rental revenue into three categories:

- a. Rental payments for parking stalls used by residents of the strata units owned by the original investor owners;
- b. Rental payments made by residents of strata units owned by the subsequent owners of the strata units;
- c. Rental payments made by persons who were not residents of the condominium tower at the time of payment.

[para20] As the defendant conceded that it must return the rental revenues from non-residents (c), nothing more need be said with respect to that category.

- a. The Original Investor Owners

[para21] The defendant submits that it should be allowed to retain the rental proceeds that flowed from residents of the strata units owned by the original investors as these payments were the "pre-ordained profit" that these particular beneficiaries allowed the developer to take in the agreements between the parties. The "original owner investors" are those individuals who purchased their strata units from the original vendor at the time Mastercraft converted the building into a condominium project.

[para22] The defendant relies on China Software Corp. v. Leimbiger (1989), 27 C.P.R. (3d) 215 (B.C.S.C.) and Olson v. Gullo (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 790 (Ont. C.A.).

[para23] However, the first question to be asked is whether or not the original investor owners consented to both the developer and its nominees on the strata council's breaches of fiduciary duty? The authors of Hanbury & Martin's Modern Equity 14th ed. at p. 629 state: A beneficiary who has participated in, or consented to, a breach of trust may not proceed against the trustees.

[para24] To a similar effect is the following quote from Halsbury's, 4th ed. explaining the rationale for allowing the beneficiary to consent to a fiduciary breaching the conflict of interest rule:

It is essentially a rule for the protection of the person to whom the duty is owed, who may relax it if he is sui juris and understands what his legal rights are and that he is surrendering them.

[para26] In Terrace the form letter which was sent to the solicitors of all prospective strata unit purchasers stated that the lease was for the purpose of rental to owners in the building who desired more than the one allotted parking stall. It also made a vague reference to the possibility that these stalls might be used by the residents of a nearby condominium tower which the developer was considering building. However the letter did not make it clear that the lease was intended to permit commercial exploitation of the parking facilities.

[para29] These notice provisions suggest that the purchasers would receive no interest in the parking stalls. This might have been the practical effect of the lease, but it did not have that effect legally as the purchasers were still the registered owners of the stalls. Also, the Act prevents the developer from making the parking stalls into separate strata units.

[para30] By agreeing to purchase strata units on this footing the original investors must be seen as having consented to the developer and its nominees doing what they did. They were aware that they had some rights to use the stalls and that the Strata Corporation would be trading those rights away for nominal consideration. They were aware that the parking stalls would be exploited commercially by the developer and its subsidiaries.

[para31] The numbered defendant still submits that the strata unit owners did not "own" the parking stalls. It does this in spite of the fact that the stalls were listed as limited common property and hence collectively owned by the strata unit owners. This is important because it means that it cannot be said with any certainty that the strata unit owners were aware of their legal rights yet acquiesced to the impugned dealings.

[para32] At best, it can be said they were aware of their practical rights. The fact that the strata owners paid for parking when they were wrongly told it was necessary cannot be equated with a situation where the strata owners paid for parking knowing that they were the registered owners of the parking stalls and still paying for the maintenance and upkeep.

[para33] While the disclosure by the developer Mastercraft was far from ideal, the original investors were made aware that they had some rights to parking and that these rights would be traded away by the Strata Corporation to the developer for commercial exploitation. The consent, however, was only for three years. While the 3 year term provided for in the agreement of purchase was renewable, any confusion concerning the extent of the consent must be resolved in favour of the party whom the law is protecting: the beneficiary.

[para34] In the result, I order the payback of only those rents obtained from the residents of strata units owned by the original investor owners which were received after July 14th, 1992.

b. Subsequent Purchasers

[para35] The consent on the part of the original owner investors does not clear the developer Mastercraft. It was still in breach of its fiduciary duty when it caused the parking contract to be executed. Hence, I must go on to consider what is to be done with the rental revenues received from residents who were subsequent purchasers.

[para36] The Supreme Court of Canada commented upon equitable remedies in Hodgkinson v. Simms, supra, at page 47:

Canson held that a court exercising equitable jurisdiction is not precluded from considering the principles of remoteness, causation, and intervening act where necessary to achieve a just and fair result. Canson does not, however, signal a retreat from the principle of full restitution; rather it recognizes the fact that a breach of fiduciary duty can take a variety of forms, and as such a variety of remedial considerations may be appropriate...

Put another way, equity is not so rigid as to be susceptible to being used as a vehicle for punishing defendants with harsh damage awards out of all proportion to their actual behaviour.

[para37] This suggests that in actions for breach of fiduciary duty the "extent of recovery should be commensurate with the seriousness of the breach of fiduciary duty in issue". (Case comment on Hodgkinson in U.B.C. Law Review, 1996, Vol. 29:2, p. 385 at 392).

[para38] The problem which presents itself is that the subsequent purchasers might be seen to be the beneficiaries of a windfall. They purchased the strata units on the basis that they would have no rights to parking. As a result of the voiding of the lease, they have full use of at least one parking stall. Now they seek to recover all rents paid under the lease. The developer complains that it sold the units on the footing that it would retain the parking and in doing so accepted less as a purchase price. It did this thinking it would receive a stream of revenue from rental of the parking stalls.

[para39] Now it has no rental revenue to look forward to in the future and no compensation for the transfer of the use of the parking stalls back to the unit owners. If the rent is returned, and if the owners paid less because of the parking agreement, the owners are put in a better position than they would have been had the developer not breached its fiduciary duty.

[para40] The public policy grounds for ordering just such a result are to be found in Olson v. Gullo, supra at page 802:

I have no doubt that stripping the wrongdoing partner of the whole of the profit, including his or her own share in it, is a strong disincentive to conduct which breaches the fiduciary obligation. Further, as a host of equity decisions have shown for at least two centuries, the fact that this would result in a windfall gain to the plaintiff cannot, in itself, be a valid objection.

[para41] In other words, the additional windfall profit to the beneficiary is justified as an additional deterrent to breaching fiduciaries. In the words of Mr. Justice LaForest in Hodgkinson, supra, at 54:

The law of fiduciary duties has always contained within it an element of deterrence.

[para42] On the other hand, there are decisions, such as China Software, supra, wherein the defaulting fiduciary has been allowed to retain the pre-ordained share of the profit. The concept is that if the beneficiary has consented to the fiduciary making a certain amount of profit from a transaction, then to that extent the fiduciary's self-interest is allowed to enter into the transaction. No fiduciary duty attaches to this portion of the transaction in that the individual is a self-interested actor and not a fiduciary.

[para44] The beneficiary is entitled to be put in the place it would have been in had the fiduciary breach never occurred. In this case, that means putting the strata owners in the same position they would have been in had they had full use of the parking stalls from the date of purchase. This would require a set-off against the rents for the "loss" suffered by the developer as a result of the decreased price of the units and the corresponding "gain" to the purchaser.

[para45] However, I do not have satisfactory evidence that the units were acquired by subsequent purchasers for a reduced price due to the parking agreement, nor do I have any figures allowing an accounting. While the case law appears to be somewhat contradictory, I am of the opinion that one principle is clear: if possible, the beneficiary is to be preferred over the defaulting fiduciary. In the result there is no option but to order the numbered defendant to return all rental payments made by residents of strata units owned by subsequent purchasers.

[para46] The defendants are ordered to return to the plaintiff, to be used in the discharge of its obligations under the Condominium Act, all rental proceeds received from:

- a) residents of strata units which were owned by the original purchasers which rents were received after July 14th;
- b) residents of strata units once the original investor/owners had sold them and
- c) non-residents at Ocean Terrace Landmark.

[para47] The plaintiff will receive interest under the Court Order Interest Act on these amounts.

COSTS

[para48] Costs will be payable to the plaintiff on scale 4

WARREN J.:--

ISSUES

[para1] The plaintiffs in these two actions apply pursuant to Rule 18A for an order for judgment against the defendant. The critical issue to be decided on the application is whether the defendant breached a fundamental term of the purchase agreements executed by the plaintiffs and the defendant at various dates, all concerning the sale and purchase of condominium units in a project developed by the defendant in Vancouver, British Columbia. The plaintiffs say the defendant is in breach and they are not prepared to complete the purchase of the individual units and seek recovery of the deposits made by them and costs.

BACKGROUND

[para2] The defendant is a developer and constructed a twelve storey, twenty-four unit condominium at 2121 West 38th Avenue in Vancouver. The development was known as Ashleigh Court. [para3] Prior to the commencement of construction, the defendant and its agent held a sales presentation at the Ramada Renaissance Hotel which had been advertised in the local newspapers. At the presentation there was a model of the condominium building prepared by a Vancouver model maker, based upon the plans of the designers of the project at that time. Also in the presentation room there were enlarged photographs showing the possible views from different locations in the project as well as floor plans of the various levels of the building and a list of features which would be included in each suite. Also on view were samples of carpet, ceramic tiles and granite which would be included in the finishing of the lobby of the building and the suites. Also available was a sales brochure which contained among other things, floor plans of the first and second floor suites, typical floor suites, the penthouse suite and a list of features as well as a price list of the suites. The drawings in the brochure were prepared by a commercial artist, again based upon drawings prepared by the designers of the project. The brochure is a sophisticated and seductive invitation to purchase complete with descriptions of the advantages to be enjoyed by purchasers. The first page is a colour photograph of the model of the project superimposed on a photograph of the North Shore Mountains with the following words printed underneath:

Enjoy unobstructed and panoramic views of the city, ocean and North Shore Mountains while dining or sipping a hot cup of tea with a friend in the living room, admiring the tree lined exclusive residences in prestigious Kerrisdale on the west side of the beautiful city of Vancouver.

[para4] The next two pages include photographs of the neighbourhood and very brief descriptions of the lifestyle Kerrisdale offers. The two pages following are colour photographs of various interior scenes with the following words:

Great care is demanded in the design of each floor plan for Ashleigh Court to offer you a handsome home. Interior features and finishes are carefully appointed for your comfort and enjoyment.

[para5] The next five pages are of the landscaping plan, and floor plans of the first and second floors, a typical floor and the penthouse. The penultimate page provides a list of features of the building; of suites; of kitchens; of bathrooms; and of the penthouse. The building features include:

Grand Glass Lobby with Granit Floor Tiles

Exquisitely Designed Fountain and Reflecting Pool

Luxurious and Private Landscaped Gardens and Walkways

[para6] The suite features include:

Unobstructed City, Ocean and Mountain views in most suites

Second Southern Exposure Open Balcony in Most Suites

Large and Double Glazed Windows for views and comfort

Tiled entrance foyer

Built-in Book Shelves in Living Room

Hot Water Heating System

Recessed and Track Lighting

Quality plush Carpet, and so on.

[para7] The kitchen features include:

European Style Cabinets

Breakfast counter

Double Sink with Garborator

High Performance Hood Fan

Ceramic Tiled Floor

[para8] At the bottom of the page, and in somewhat smaller print, are the words "Illustrations and descriptions are approximate representations of features described. In a continuing effort to improve standards [sic] of development, the developer reserves the right to make modifications and changes to building design, specifications, features and floor plans, without notice".

[para10] Each of the plaintiffs depose that they relied on the brochure, the plans and the other materials presented at the presentation and each entered into a contract to purchase, the Purchase Agreement.

[para11] The purchase agreement, in addition to setting out the purchase price and the times for payment, also contained the following clause:

4.0 Construction 4.1 Construction. The vendor will construct and complete the development and the Strata Lot in a good and workmanlike manner substantially in accordance with the plans subject to any changes required by the City of Vancouver or any other approving authorities. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the vendor may:

(a) make minor modifications and as, in the sole opinion of the vendor and/or the architect retained by the vendor or the project manager (the "architect"), are desirable and reasonable; and

(b) use materials other than as prescribed in the plans provided that alternative materials are, in the sole opinion of the architect, of a quality comparable to those prescribed in the plans.

[emphasis added]

THE PLAINTIFFS' POSITION

[para12] The plaintiffs say that the defendant is in fundamental breach of its contracts with each of the plaintiffs in part because the building did not feature a grand glass lobby with granite floor, a tiled entrance foyer, built-in book shelves in the living rooms, a hot water heating system, a window in the kitchen, a window in the east wall of the master bedroom on the east side of the building or the west wall of the master bedroom on the west side of the building, windows in the ensuite bathroom on the east side of the building, recessed lighting or quality plush carpeting. Further, although not pleaded, the evidence would indicate that the fountain and reflecting pool were not as described in the brochure nor were the luxurious and private landscaped gardens and walkways provided. As well, the south facing balconies, shown in the plans with glass guardrails, are in fact, constructed of concrete.

[para13] In summary, the plaintiffs say that they agreed to purchase their respective units on the basis that the building would be constructed in accordance with the plans and as reflected and described in the brochures provided to the plaintiffs through the defendant or its agent. The plaintiffs say that the building was not constructed in accordance with the plans and some portions were not constructed or were constructed with significant modifications such that the changes substantially altered the quality and value of the property and entitles the plaintiffs to rescind the agreement and a corresponding repayment of the deposits paid with costs.

THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION

[para14] On this application the defendant submits that the plaintiffs' action should be dismissed with costs or alternatively, the application under Rule 18A be dismissed. The defendant says that the plaintiffs received essentially what was bargained for under the terms of the contract and the disclosure statement, contracts contemplating changes could be made to the design of the building and the plaintiffs were aware that such changes were a possibility. In any event, the defendant says that the plaintiffs have not demonstrated that the changes in design of which they complain are breaches of contract and the plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that the changes were fundamental.

[para15] The parties agree that the test whether there has been a fundamental breach of contract (as the plaintiffs term it) or that the breaches were material (as the defendant terms it) is objective and that the subjective considerations of an individual plaintiff is not relevant.

[para16] The defendant, in its argument, refers to the affidavits filed on its behalf and offers an explanation for each one of the changes complained of by the plaintiffs. The defendants were extremely concerned about keeping construction costs down while maintaining the competitive quality of the design but no design adjustment was made solely on the basis of its effect on costs. "In many cases, minor revisions were made to the preliminary scheme to improve appearance, function or durability. In other cases, substitutions of materials or systems were made where the defendant and its consultants judged that cost saving was possible without a detrimental affect on appearance, function or durability". The defendant through the affidavit of Tom Ip then deals with each change complained of by the plaintiffs. With respect to the south facing balconies, the defendant says that their primary purpose was to give access to the second exit stairwell, they do not extend in front of the large master bedroom window so as to block or diminish the view, for privacy reasons the defendant considered glass guardrails inappropriate and safety militated in a concrete material to avoid occupant's confusion in the event of a forced evacuation.

[para17] With respect to the reflecting pool, the defendant says that it was changed in part for costs but also to discourage littering.

[para18] With respect to the changes in the landscape design, the defendant says that a number of landscape elements were proposed by the architects early in the design development stage "but not all received the defendant's approval and were incorporated into the final design".

[para21] With reference to the plaintiffs' complaints about the missing window in the kitchen, the defendant replies that it felt it would interfere with the most efficient layout of the kitchen as the refrigerator and cupboard doors open against the only length of exterior wall where a window would have been possible. With reference to the bathroom in the master bedroom on the east side of the building, the defendant felt the window's location directly above the bathtub "was considered to be inappropriate and undesirable". Apparently the defendant was concerned about privacy, the draft factor and the maintenance problems of a window frame wetted during the use of showers. With respect to the additional window in the master bedroom on the sidewall, both east and west, the defendant decided not to include the window as its placement "may have unduly limited possibilities for efficient furniture layout as the southern wall has a door to the balcony and a large window and the interior walls closets or doorways opening into the bedroom". There was also an additional reason for omitting these windows and that was "for the improvement of appearance of the east and west facades of the building".

[para22] With respect to the change in the heating system from hot water to electric baseboard type, this change was not cost driven apparently but rather to increase individual temperature controls, reduce the pro-rata cost to the owners, some of whom would be frequently absent from Vancouver, reduce the ongoing maintenance and servicing costs and, reduce the size of the baseboard providing less interference with usable floor area.

THE SUBMISSIONS

[para23] In its argument, the defendant says that each of the contracts provide for the same; the construction would be in a good and workmanlike manner substantially in accordance with the plan but that the vendor may make "minor modifications . . . as are desirable and reasonable" and the plans were subject to such modifications as may be determined by the architect or required by the city. The defendant says that the units built by the defendant were substantially the same as those proposed at the time of the original offering and the plaintiffs have focused on a number of changes as being fundamental and inconsistent with the sales brochure but the sales brochure does not form part of the contract between the parties (See Abramowich v. Azima Developments Ltd. (1993), 86 B.C.L.R. (2d) 129, Court of Appeal). In Abramowich the plaintiff purchaser failed to complete on its transaction and sued for damages alleging the unit was not completed in accordance with the representations contained in a brochure which had described the unit as "luxurious" or, "exceptional quality" or, "architect designed interiors" or, "first class finishings" while the written contract made no reference to the standards to which the condominium would be built. The trial judge in Abramowich rejected the argument that the brochure terms should be implied as terms of the contract.

[para24] Ryan, J. in Abramowich considered the role promotional brochures played in the action between Abramowich and Azima Developments. At p. 176-77 of her reasons reported at 19 R.P.R. (2d) 172, but more conveniently found in the reasons for judgment of Toy, J.A. in the Court of Appeal (1993), 86 B.C.L.R. (2d) 129 at 131:

The written contract made no reference to the standards to which the condominium would be built. It is the plaintiff's position that he relied upon the promotional brochure to the knowledge of the vendor. He submits that the court ought to imply as a term of the contract that the unit was to be built to the standards set out in the brochure. Aside from the problem in determining an exact standard from the promotional material, the plaintiff's next difficulty is the limited circumstances in which a court will impose a contractual term.

Lord Pearson said in Trollope and Colls Ltd. v. Northwest Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board (1973), 2 All E.R. 260:

An unexpressed term can be implied if, and only if, the court finds that the parties must have intended that term to form part of their contract; it is not enough for the court to find that such a term would have been adopted by the parties as reasonable men if it had been suggested to them; it must have been a term that went without saying, a term necessary to give business efficacy to the contract, a term which, although tacit, formed part of the contract which the parties made for themselves.

On any view of the evidence, the plaintiff has failed to meet this test. I am not convinced that the promotional literature was intended by the parties to form a part of the contract.

[para25] Toy, J.A., for the court, examined the underlying agreement in Abramowich as well as the correspondence which passed between the parties and the plaintiff's attempt to obtain the vendor's consent to amend the agreement. The proposed amendment acknowledging the purchaser's claim concerning defects, deficiencies or repairs, was never assented to by the vendor and, under those circumstances, Toy, J.A. agreed with the trial judge in these words:

I agree with the trial judge that in interpreting an assigned agreement between the parties it is not necessary to give business efficacy to the agreement by implying the terms of the printed brochure into the agreement for the reasons she has stated. In my opinion, all that was required to give business efficacy to the parties' agreement was for the vendor to complete the condominium unit in accordance with the plans and specifications which, apparently, met with the architects approval on February 14, 1990 shortly before the City of Vancouver occupancy certificate was issued on that date.

[para26] In reply to this submission the plaintiffs say that an officer of the defendant conceded that the brochure reflected what was in the plans at the time the purchase and sale contracts were entered into. This is borne out by extracts from the examination-for-discovery of Mr. Ip to the effect that the drawings in the brochure were prepared by a commercial artist from the drawings prepared by the architect and that whatever was in the brochure at the time the sales contracts were entered into reflected what was in the plans at that time. Accordingly, the plaintiffs submit that the brochure is explanatory and reflective of what was in the plans at the time the various plaintiff's purchased their units. The brochure is informative evidence of what the plaintiffs saw at the time they entered into the purchase and sale agreement and in determining what the defendant's intended to represent to the plaintiffs and what they intended to build.

[para27] Accordingly, the Abramowich case is irrelevant as the plaintiff is not asking that the brochure be read as part of the purchase and sale agreement but rather to demonstrate by excellent description what the plans and specifications reflect and the plans and specifications were made part of the purchase and sale agreement.

[para28] In the plaintiff's affidavit material was the affidavit of one John Davidson, an architect with the firm of Davidson, Ewan, Simpson. He was retained by the plaintiff's solicitors to review the changes made between the time of the sales representations and the final construction. He prepared a report which, in summary, expressed the opinion that the changes made between the date of purchase and the completion of the construction "are more extensive and significant than would typically be expected in a project of this calibre". The report expresses many opinions of artistic or aesthetic and personal views and the defendant objected most strongly to the court considering the report of Mr. Davidson as being outside the scope of expertise of an architect and going to the ultimate question (Hay and Hay Construction Co. Ltd. v. Sloan (1957), 27 C.P.R. B2 (Ont. H.C.); Emil Anderson Construction Co. Ltd. v. B.C. Rail Company (1987), 17 B.C.L.R. (2d) 357 and Emil Anderson Construction Co. Ltd. v. B.C. Rail Company (1987), 15 B.C.L.R. (2d) 28 (S.C.B.C.).)

[para29] In response to this the plaintiff argues that the defendant has not introduced any evidence from any source, let alone from the architects who designed the project, that the modifications were minor. Evidence in other words, disagreeing with the conclusion or opinion of John Davidson. This argument, while it does not deal directly with the defendant's objections, does leave unanswered the opinion expressed by John Davidson, which, after I strip away the opinions of artistic merit or aesthetic values, goes to the extent of changes. The affidavit of G. Gerald Kennedy, architect, filed by the defendant, deals with his opinion of the general areas of expertise or qualification of architects which do not include, in his opinion, any general ability to predict how "appealing their client's projects will be, from a marketing prospective, to the target buyer". He had familiarity with terms such as "luxurious", "exclusive", "generous", "spacious" and "grand" to mention some of the terms he used, but it was his opinion that such terms, while frequently used in marketing are all equally meaningless. In response to the affidavit of Mr. Kennedy the plaintiff argued compellingly that there was no indication that Mr. Kennedy saw any of the materials which are the subject of controversy before me and he makes no comment upon whether the modifications were minor or substantial or, in the words of Mr. Davidson "more extensive and significant". That opinion, in my view, stripped of those areas which offend the ultimate issue rule (Emil Anderson) and are clearly within the area of expertise of an architect.

[para30] The defendants further submit that the changes made to the building and to each of the units reflect only the natural evolution of the design and each change was made by the developer on a reasonable basis. As the contract expressly permits change the defendant says that the changes were merely evolutionary and were not material amounting to a breach of a fundamental term of an obligation under the contracts. In this regard the defendant relies on Milgram v. York Humber Ltd (1992), 22 R.P.R. (2d) 102 (Ont. C. of J. Div) and Abdool v. Sommerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992) 10 O.R. (3d) 120 (Ont. C.A.). Both cases deal with situations which arose under and were bound by the provisions of the Ontario Condominium Act. But the defendant says that both cases provide assistance on the issue of materiality. The test in Abdool of materiality is whether a change would provide a purchaser reasonable cause to reconsider or if a change is likely to influence a decision of a purchaser to purchase. The description of the test in Milgram is more helpful. At p. 105 McRae, J. of the Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) said the test is that adopted by Borins, J. in Budinsky v. Breakers East Inc. (1992), 6 O.R. (3d) 255:

Therefore . . . where the amendment is of such significance as to be likely to influence the decision of a reasonable purchaser to purchase the condominium unit or to alter the character of the disclosure statement.

[para31] McRae, J. adopted that definition and noted that the test is an objective test. He in turn looked at the changes in the building which was the subject of the litigation before him and concluded that the changes were not material, that "a reasonable person would quickly conclude that this change was minor and was clearly beneficial to the purchaser". The two changes considered by McRae, J. were the deletion of a public activity centre in the condominium complex which he concluded was a benefit to the plaintiff as the public would no longer have access to the complex; the second was an increase in the number of units from 408 to 413 thereby decreasing the plaintiff's percentage interest in the building. McRae, J. found that there was an express disclosure in the disclosure statement allowing the owner to increase the number of units to as many as 416 and that the actual decrease of percentage interest amounted to three parts per one hundred thousand and was so trivial as to not constitute a material change.

[para32] In the Abdool case the issue was the application again of s.52 of the Condominium Act of Ontario which provides that an agreement to purchase a new condominium would not be binding on a purchaser until the developer delivered a current disclosure statement with all material amendments thereto. The disclosure statement advised the purchasers that the condominium would have as amenities a recreational unit which included an indoor swimming pool, an exercise room and an outdoor play area which included children's play facilities. The statement further provided that construction would begin in October 1988 and would be completed by December 1990. In fact the occupancy permits for the swimming pool and the children's play area were substantially delayed.

To invoke a common dictionary meaning of "material", when is a defect so pertinent, germane or essential as to render a disclosure statement in contravention of the Act and entitle a purchaser to cancel the transaction?

I approach this question first by reference to the applicable burden of proof. In my opinion, when a purchaser who has had the opportunity afforded by the cooling off period to consider the disclosure statement and the accompanying documentation, and has decided to go through with the transaction, subsequently seeks to resign from his or her otherwise binding agreement of purchase and sale on the basis of the deficiency of the disclosure statement, the onus is on the purchaser to show that the disclosure statement fails to satisfy the requirements of the Act to the degree that the agreement must be declared non-binding.

To discharge this onus and prove the materiality of the complaint, in my opinion, the purchaser is obliged to establish objectively that had the information that was not disclosed, or that was inaccurately or insufficiently disclosed, been properly disclosed in the disclosure statement at the time it was delivered to the purchaser, a reasonable purchaser would have regarded the information as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that he or she would not likely have gone ahead with the transaction but would instead have rescinded the agreement before the expiration of the ten day cooling off period.

[para34] The Ontario Court of Appeal concluded that the purchaser's decision in Abdool to seek rescission was prompted by declining real estate values, dissatisfaction with their purchases or a change in personal circumstances, and that the disclosure statements were in no way material to this decision.

[para35] While both Abdool and Milgram may be useful for providing a definition for the term materiality, their particular fact situations are materially different from the facts in the case at bar.

[para36] The plaintiffs rely upon the summary by G.H.L. Fridman, Q.C. in The Law of Contract in Canada, Second Ed., Carswell 1986, where, at p. 531, Fridman considers the nature of fundamental breach:

Perhaps the idea which most satisfactorily enshrines the idea of fundamental breach is that which appealed to Lord Diplock in the Photo Production case, as differentiating such a breach from breach of condition. This is the notion of some act which substantially deprives the innocent party of the intended benefit such party was to obtain under the contract. However defined, a fundamental breach is one which is more significant in factual terms, and more effective in respect of the rights and liabilities of the parties than the continued existence of the contract and their "primary obligations", in Lord Diplock's phrase, than any other kind of breach.

In every instance, it is a question of fact whether the breach complained of by the innocent party amounts to a fundamental breach or some other kind. That question, in turn, depends upon: the terms of the contract; intended benefit to the innocent party; the purpose of the contract; the material consequences of the breach; and, perhaps, though this has never been discussed in the cases, the extent to which the loss incurred by the innocent party can be remedied adequately by an award of damages. One point is clear. Whether a breach is fundamental does not appear to depend upon any express terms of the contract.

[para37] As Lord Upjohn observed in Suisse Atlantique Societe D'Armement Maritime S.A. v. N.V. Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale, [1967] 1 A.C. 361:

Whether such breach or breaches do constitute a fundamental breach depends on the construction of the contract and on all the facts and circumstances of the case.

DECISION

[para38] Viewing all of the facts and circumstances of this case, including clause 4.0 of the contract, I conclude that the multitude of changes and omissions were not so trivial or inconsequential as the defendant argues are within the ambit of the contractual terms permitting modification. The units were not "substantially in accordance with the plans" and none of the modifications were "minor". Rather, they were and are "so pertinent, germane or essential" as to amount to a fundamental breach entitling the plaintiffs and each of them to rescission.

[para39] The plaintiffs are entitled to the return of their deposits and costs.

Vancouver Registry No. CA020760

British Columbia Court of Appeal

Vancouver, British Columbia

McEachern C.J.B.C., Rowles, and Ryan J.J.A.

Oral judgment: November 8, 1996.

(8 pp.)

This was an appeal of an award of damages for breach of contract. The respondents purchased units in a condominium building. They were shown detailed brochures and unit plans which they relied on in making their purchase decisions. They paid deposits. Upon occupation, they discovered that significant changes had been made to the plans. Windows were smaller or missing and heating equipment was different. The respondents were granted damages for breach of contract. The trial judge found that the appellant holding company committed a fundamental breach when it altered the unit plans during construction. The holding company appealed the award on the basis that the trial judge erred in applying the test for fundamental breach.

Counsel:

M. Azevedo and K.J. MacDonald, appearing for the appellant.

D. Brindle and R.A. Hodgins, appearing for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by McEachern C.J.B.C.

1 McEACHERN C.J.B.C. (orally):— Mr. Azevedo has struggled to persuade us that we should allow this appeal and set aside the judgment in the court below but we are not persuaded that the judge erred and we are not able to accede to appellant's submissions.

2 The action was brought by a number of purchasers of pre-sold condominiums in a proposed condominium tower in Kerrisdale. The description and the plans that they were shown, and upon which they based their decision, were not adduced in evidence but by reference we were told and counsel seem agreed that that the plans upon which the transactions were based on were the same as those shown in a brochure which was produced at trial and which has been placed before us.

3 What happened was that in a demonstration or presentation at a Vancouver hotel the purchasers had an opportunity to examine this brochure and to see a model or mock up of these condominium units.

4 The building was an attractive one in concept being 24 condominium suites in a 12 story building with north and south views as well, of course, as east and west. The units on the west side had two bedrooms and the ones on the east side had one bedroom. Considerable detail was shown in the brochure. The units were very small being less than 1000 square feet each.

5 The purchasers were asked to pay a ten percent deposit on entering into this transaction and a further ten percent later and those amounts were paid. The contract which was entered into provided as follows:

I/We hereby offers to purchase Strata Lot No (the "Strata Lot") described below, free and clear of all liens, charges and encumbrances except the encumbrances described in Sections 3.3 and 3.4 of the disclosure statement dated October 30, 1991 (the "Permitted Encumbrances" and the "Disclosure Statement", respectively), for the purchase price of Three Hundred Thousand Three Hundred Canadian dollars ($300,300) (the "Purchase Price" subject to and upon the following terms and conditions.

4.1 Construction. The Vendor will construct and complete the Development and the Strata Lot in a good and workmanlike manner substantially in accordance with the Plans subject to any changes required by the City of Vancouver or other approving authorities. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Vendor may:

(a) make minor modifications as, in the sole opinion of the Vendor and/or the architect retained by the Vendor or the project manager (the "Architect"), are desirable and reasonable; and

(b) use materials other than as prescribed in the Plans provided that alternative materials are, in the sole opinion of the Architect, of a quality comparable to those prescribed in the Plans.

(emphasis added)

6 The plans that are referred in the agreement are not before us but Schedule A provides as follows:

The Plans for the Strata Lot are the plans prepared by Hancock Nicholson Tamaki Architects Inc., subject to such modifications as may be determined by the Architect from time to time, changes required by the City of Vancouver or other approving authorities or as otherwise permitted herein or accepted by the Architect, which plans and specifications the Vendor acknowledges will include a stove, refrigerator, dishwasher and garborator.

7 When the building was finally constructed these plaintiffs, who are six or seven in number, found what they regarded as substantial changes in the condominiums as built and they refused to proceed with the transaction or to take occupation of the premises and they brought this action for the recovery of their deposits. The builder counter-claimed for the balance owing on the contract price.

8 The changes that had taken place in the construction between the time of the contract and completion are described in the reasons for judgment of the trial judge and I do not think that I need to quote extensively from his reasons for judgment. It will be sufficient to say that in nine or ten separate particulars actual construction did not accord with the brochure that the purchasers examined and upon which they based their decision to purchaser.

9 The contract as I have mentioned provided for minor changes, that is the builder could make minor changes or modifications which were considered by the architect to be desirable and reasonable and the main issue at the trial of course was whether or not these changes could be described as minor modifications. The trial judge in a very clear passage in his reasons found that they were not. He said this:

Viewing all of the facts and circumstances of this case, including clause 4.0 of the contract, I conclude that the multitude of changes and omissions were not so trivial or inconsequential as the defendant argues are within the ambit of the contractual terms permitting modification. The units were not "substantially in accordance with the plans" and none of the modifications were "minor". Rather, they were and are "so pertinent, germane or essential" as to amount to a fundamental breach entitling the plaintiffs and each of them to rescision.

10 The basic change that I think is sufficient to support the judgment below is the deletion in the one bedroom suites of three windows, one in the kitchen, one in the en suite bathroom and one in the master bedroom on the east side, and the deletion of two windows on the west side being one window deleted in the kitchen and one window deleted in the master bedroom.

11 It is true that these are small suites and there were other substantial windows in some of the other rooms but speaking for myself I can well understand the disappointment that the purchasers must have felt when they found for example that they did not have a window in the kitchen on both kinds of these suites apart altogether of the lack of the other windows.

12 I do not wish to minimize the other changes by not dealing with them specifically. The change in the heating plan seems to me also to be a substantial change and there were other changes and I need not go into them because I think there was ample evidence to support the decision of the trial judge that these units were not substantially in accordance with the plans and that the modifications were not minor. I think the trial judge was right when he said that they were pertinent, germane, or essential to the bargain that these parties struck.

13 Mr. Azevedo in his very carefully prepared and thoughtful argument sought to persuade us that, accepting those findings the trial judge had applied the wrong test. Counsel relied of course on the leading case of Hunter Engineering Co. v. Syncrude Canada Ltd. et al. [1989] 1 S.C.R. 426 particularly the passages of Madam Justice Wilson which are most often quoted from this case at p.499, 500 and 501. That, of course, was a case where the contract was for the supply of a conveyer belt and machinery at a cost of about $4,000,000 and the gear boxes did not work adequately after about a year and had to be replaced at a cost of about $400,000.

14 In giving her judgment Madam Justice Wilson was careful to point out that the test for fundamental breach was whether or not the plaintiff has been deprived of substantially the whole benefit which was the intention of the parties that he should obtain from the contract, but she was also careful to point out, by quoting passages from the trial judgment, that this conveyer belt was one that, defective as it was, it could be repaired and could continue to function as the conveyer belt for which it had been purchased. That is not the case here. The windows and the heating system cannot be repaired or replaced in the form that was expected and I think that while we must be very cautious before we find fundamental breach and we have been carefully warned by cases such as Hunter Engineering Co. v. Syncrude Canada Ltd. et al not to find fundamental breach except in the very special kinds of cases that are described there.

15 I think there is a substantial difference between a piece of machinery that can be repaired or some other item of commerce and a residence where someone is going to move in and live and hopefully to enjoy it. We are all entitled to some preferences in the ambiance in which we live and I think windows and heating are of particular importance.

16 I do not think with respect that the learned trial judge misdirected himself in concluding that these changes were a fundamental breach. He referred to the text of Professor Fridman on The Law of Contract in Canada, Second Ed., Carswell 1986, at p.531 where the test is stated in slightly different language from what later found its way into the judgment of Madam Justice Wilson, but I note that both Professor Fridman and Madam Justice Wilson referred to what Professor Fridman calls the Photo Production case which is also the source authority upon which Madam Justice Wilson seems to have most heavily relied. That being so, and accepting the findings of fact of the trial judge, it is my view that he did not instruct himself other than correctly and in accordance with the principles of fundamental breach particularly keeping in mind this was a residence which is very different from a piece of machinery or some other item of commerce. It is my view that the trial judge was entitled to reach the conclusion he reached. In fact I agree with the conclusion he reached. For those reasons, the appeal must fail and I would dismiss it.

McEachern C.J.B.C.

- 17 ROWLES J.A.:— I agree.
- 18 RYAN J.A.:— I agree.
- 19 McEACHERN C.J.B.C.:— The appeal is dismissed.

453048 British Columbia Ltd. v. Strata Plan KAS 1079

Between 453048 British Columbia Ltd., Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan KAS 1079, Respondents

[1994] B.C.J. No. 2741

Vernon Registry No. 13016 British Columbia Supreme Court Vernon, British Columbia (In Chambers) Harvey J. Heard: November 21, 1994. Judgment: filed December 5, 1994.

Counsel for the Petitioner: R.G. Kuhn. Counsel for the Respondents: D.L. Schaefer.

[para1] HARVEY J.:-- The petitioner applies for the following orders:

(a) an Order that Bylaw 131(3) of the Strata Corporation comprised of the owners, Strata Plan KAS 1079 (the "Strata Corporation"), which was added to the Bylaws of the Strata Corporation by special resolution passed on April 15, 1993, is void and of no force and effect;

(b) in the alternative, a declaration that Bylaw 131(3) of the Strata Corporation will not bind the owners of Strata Lots in phases 2 through 6, inclusive, of the residential development known as "Skyway Village" located on land described as:

PID 017-691-141 Lot B Section 2 Township 8 Osoyoos Division Yale District Plan KAP46743, except Plan KAP47687 and KAS1079 (Phase 1); and,

(c) an Order that the Petitioner recover from the respondents the costs of this proceeding.

[para2] In bringing this petition, the petitioner relies upon ss. 27, 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 and s. 5 of the Human Rights Act, S.B.C. 1984, c. 22, as amended.

ISSUES

[para3]

1. Is Bylaw 131(3) ultra vires as contravening s. 29 of the Condominium Act?
2. Is Bylaw 131(3) as adopted by the strata council ultra vires as being discriminatory?
3. Does s. 27 of the Condominium Act prevent application of Bylaw 131(3) to the owners of strata lots in phases 2 through 6?

FACTS

[para4] The Petitioner is a developer and the registered owner of lands in the City of Vernon upon which Skyway Village, a strata titled residential development, is to be constructed. The design and development of Skyway Village is by way of a phased residential development in six phases. The respondent strata corporation is currently comprised of the owners of the 24 strata lots in the first of the six phases. When completed the development will be comprised of a total of 106 strata lots in the six phases.

[para5] The original developers of Skyway Village were 415731 British Columbia Ltd. and Western Rim Projects Ltd. Following the completion of phase 1, the original developers encountered difficulties and were unable to proceed with phases 2 through 6. The petitioner purchased the lands comprising Skyway Village (not including phase 1) from the original developers on November 5, 1993, after the original developers ran into financial difficulty. [para6] The respondents rely upon a disclosure statement dated February 20, 1992 which referred to the complex as an adult only building, with no one under the age of 19 and at least one resident over the age of fifty. On June 23, 1992 an amended disclosure statement primarily dealing with phases 1, 2 and 3 of Skyway Village was filed by the original developers with the superintendent of real estate. This disclosure statement did not contain any reference restricting the use of the property to those over 50. I find as a fact that the purchasers of the units in phase 1 were aware of this change prior to closing on their strata lots.

[para7] Once the strata council was duly convened pursuant to the Condominium Act the strata council passed Bylaw 131(3) which states:

(3) No owner shall permit any person (including himself) under the age of fifty (50) years to occupy any strata lot by him (her) for a period in excess of 21 days aggregate in any calendar year. For the purpose of this sub-section 3, a person who uses his strata lot for overnight accommodation shall be deemed to have occupied the strata lot for one day for each occasion that he (she) uses the strata lot for his (her) overnight accommodation. Any variation is subject to approval in writing from the strata council.

[para8] The respondents submit that the Bylaw was passed in order to preserve their community as an "adult only" community as was originally marketed. The petitioner claims that the respondents are trying to change the nature of the development into a seniors only complex despite purchasing strata lots in a development that at that time had no such restriction.

ANALYSISContravention of the Condominium Act

[para9] The petitioner submits that the Bylaw as passed by the strata council contravenes the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 (the "Act") on the basis that the Bylaw restricts the devolution, transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing in land. Sections 29 and 30 state:

Dealings in Strata Lots

29. Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate to prohibit or restrict

(a) a devolution of a strata lot; or (b) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot, or to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

Restriction on Leasing: General

30. (1) A strata corporation administering a strata plan that is wholly or partially residential may, by bylaw, limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased by the owners.

(2) A bylaw under subsection (1) shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced. [para10] In the decision of this court in Cowe v. Strata Plan (1994), 92 B.C.L.R. (2d) 327, Madame Justice Saunders, in determining that a strata council did not have the ability to limit the rental of units to those owners who had personally occupied the unit for at least twelve months stated at page 330:

The starting and ending point on this issue is the statute itself. Sections 29 and 30 of the Act are a pair of statutory provisions that work together. Section 29 of the Act ensures there are no prohibitions or restrictions on leasing a strata lot covered by the bylaw except a bylaw passed under s. 30 of the Act. In the absence of s. 30, the Rental Limitation Bylaw in this case would be ultra vires the legislation. The bylaw relied upon by the Strata Council to refuse Ms. Cowe the opportunity to rent her strata lot must be within the parameters of s. 30.

Section 30(1) permits a strata corporation to "limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased." Section 30(2) says that such a bylaw "shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced." The respondents contend s. 30(2) is not a comprehensive provision, and that the word "shall" should be read to mean the two requirements that follow, the number of rentable strata lots and the manner in which the limitation is enforced, are minimum requirements. They contend s. 30 permits other restrictions to be inserted into the s. 30 bylaw such as that found in the bylaw impugned in this action. I do not agree.

In my view, s. 30 only permits a quantitative restriction or prohibition on the leasing of residential strata lots by owners. The permissive subsection, s. 30(1), refers only to a limitation of the number of rentable strata lots. The mandatory subsection s. 30(2), then requires not only the number of strata lots that may be leased to be established, it also requires the manner of enforcement to be established. In my view, s. 30(2) does not go further to permit the Strata Council to discriminate between owners that may rent their strata lot.

[para11] I accept the submission of the petitioner that as a result of Bylaw 131(3), the petitioner would be prevented from selling, transferring, leasing or otherwise dealing with any strata lots in any manner that would result in occupancy of any strata lot by any person less than the age of fifty years for more than 21 days per year. This effectively restricts the devolution of the strata lots by the petitioner, or the transfer, leasing or otherwise dealing with the strata lots by the petitioner. I do not find that the Bylaw falls within the ability of strata councils to enact bylaws pertaining to the use of the land, because its application is in all practical senses intended to control who owns and lives on the property.

HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

[para12] While I find that Bylaw 131(3) is contrary to sections 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act, I propose to consider as well the other substantive argument of the petitioner, that the Bylaw is in violation of the Human Rights Act, S.B.C. 1984, c. 22 in that it discriminates on potential tenants on the basis of age. The Human Rights Act does not explicitly exclude the possibility of discrimination on the basis of age. For example, s. 4 deals with the sale of property, and age is not one of the enumerated grounds on which discrimination is prohibited. Thus, a provision dealing with a sale of property which had restrictions based on age, would not contravene the Human Rights Act.

[para13] In contrast, s. 5 deals with the rental of property. The relevant portion is as follows:

5.(1) No person shall

(a) deny to a person or class of persons the right to occupy, as a tenant, space that is represented as being available for occupancy by a tenant...

because of the race, colour, ancestry, place of origin, religion, marital status, family status, physical or mental disability, sex, sexual orientation or age of that person or class of persons, or of any other person or class of persons.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply... (b) as it relates to family status or age,

(i) if the space is a rental unit in residential premises in which every rental unit is reserved for rental to a person 55 years of age or older or to 2 or more persons, at least one of whom is 55 years of age or older, or

(ii) a rental unit in a prescribed class of residential premises...

[para14] While section 4 does not include age as one of the enumerated grounds upon which the sale of property can be limited, it is included in section 5. The only exception is for restrictions for people over the age of 55, which is not the case here. The strata council would likely not have been in violation of the Human Rights Act if the Bylaw had stated "55 years of age" instead of 50 years of age, or if Skyway Village was "a prescribed class of residential premises", in other words, a designated senior complex.

[para15] For the reasons stated supra I find:

1. The Bylaw is ultra vires as contravening section 29 of the Condominium Act and it does not fall into the exception provided in Section 30.

2. The Bylaw is ultra vires in that it is contrary to section 5 of the British Columbia Human Rights Act and does not fall into the exception in section 5(2).

[para16] In keeping with the answers to the first and second issues, it is not necessary to consider whether Bylaw 131(3) would bind the owners of strata lots in phases 2 through 6 of Skyway Village.

[para17] The petitioner is entitled to costs of the petition on scale 3.

Strata Corp. 830 v. Rhodo Holdings Ltd.

Between Strata Corporation 830 and Strata Corporation 762, Plaintiffs, and Rhodo Holdings Ltd., Hansbraun Investments Ltd., Siegfried Marquardt and Beacon Hill Plaza Ltd., Defendants, and Ronald Ebbs Canavan, Siegfried Marquardt, Hansbraun Investments Ltd., Saunders, Fabris and Murphy, Barrister and Solicitors, Nicolai Fabris, Clay & Company, Barristers and Solicitors, Edwin A. Popham and Allan Achtem, Third Parties

[1994] B.C.J. No. 802

Nanaimo Registry No. 12783 British Columbia Supreme Court Nanaimo, British Columbia Holmes J. Heard: April 6, 1994. Judgment: filed April 12, 1994.

Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiffs: John R. Jordon. Counsel on behalf of the Defendant, Rhodo Holdings Ltd.: E. Jane Milton.

[para1] HOLMES J.-- The defendant, Rhodo Holdings Ltd. ("Rhodo"), applies under Rule 18A for a declaration that an easement in its favour granted over the common property of the plaintiffs, Strata Corporation 830 and Strata Corporation 762 ("plaintiff corporations"), is valid.

[para2] The original developer of the bare land strata plans of the plaintiff corporations was Long Lake Heights Estates Inc. ("Long Lake"). In 1984 or 1985 the defendant, Beacon Hill Plaza Limited ("Beacon Hill"), had the unsold lots in the plaintiff corporations transferred to it and the defendant, Siegfried Marquardt ("Marquardt") became manager of the plaintiff corporations. He assumed administrative responsibility for them until 1989. It appears title to unsold lots later passed to another company controlled by Marquardt.

[para3] In early 1989, the defendant Rhodo purchased 102 of the original 229 strata lots of the plaintiff strata corporation 830. They assumed the position of Boyd Development Corporation ("Boyd") who held under an interim agreement for purchase of the lots from the defendant, Hansbraun Investments Ltd. ("Hansbraun"). Rhodo also purchased Lot 2, a piece of land contiguous to the properties of the plaintiff corporations, from the defendant Hansbraun. This was also done by taking over Boyd's position as purchaser under an interim agreement.

[para4] The defendant Marquardt was a principal of the defendants Hansbraun, Beacon Hill, and Long Lake. There was no connection between Hansbraun and Boyd; Hansbraun and Rhodo; nor Rhodo and Boyd. Both Boyd and Rhodo were arms length purchasers for value. Rhodo inquired as to existence of an easement over the plaintiffs' common property to access Lot 2 which they were buying. They received assurances there was an easement and would not have purchased without it. The defendant Marquardt likely gave that assurance. Marquardt believed there was such an easement and that one had always been intended. A land title search prior to completion of purchase confirmed the existence of a registered easement to Rhodo.

[para5] On January 5, 1989 Marquardt signed an agreement whereby the owners of the plaintiff corporations granted an easement over their common property in favour of Hansbraun. Marquardt signed the document three times on the basis he was the "authorized signatory" of each plaintiff corporation and of Hansbraun. The registrar of Land Titles rejected the application to register the easement as it required filing a Form 6 under the Condominium Act. In order to register the easement in the Land Title Office the defendant Marquardt signed the required Form 6 as "President" of the strata councils of the plaintiff corporations. He certified a special resolution of the plaintiff corporations authorizing the easement had been passed at a council meeting. In fact, there was no meeting, no vote, no special resolution, and Marquardt was not President. Marquardt's evidence on examination for discovery appears very vague as to the easement but he admits he did sign it. He said he thought he was authorized to do so.

[para7] The plaintiffs' position is the easement was fraudulently created by Marquardt. There was never a special resolution passed, and no authority from the owners to grant the easement was given. The plaintiffs say the Form 6 was not signed by two council members as required and ought never to have been accepted for registration.

[para8] I make no finding as to whether the defendant Marquardt acted fraudulently in this matter. That is not a matter that should be decided upon affidavit evidence, at least I do not consider the evidence before me on this motion sufficient to make that determination. I accept, however, that the plaintiffs may well be able to prove the fraud they allege at trial, and that is the proper forum for such an adjudication to occur.

[para9] The position advanced by the defendant Rhodo, however, is that the easement which was registered and it relied upon remains valid even if it was originally the product of fraud by Marquardt. Rhodo's position is that if Marquardt was fraudulent the plaintiffs' remedy is against him for damages but Rhodo as an innocent third party purchaser for value without notice of the fraud is entitled to the benefit of the registered easement. I accept that consideration of argument restricted to the question of the validity of the easement on the assumption it was the product of fraud upon the plaintiffs is appropriate for hearing on this Rule 18A application.

[para10] The evidence supports the conclusion that Rhodo was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any impropriety respecting the easement. There is no evidence to the contrary.

[para11] In support of the contention the easement remains a validly registered charge even if Marquardt created it fraudulently, counsel for Rhodo draws a parallel to language used in the Land Title Act and relevant wording contained in the Condominium Act. Section 26 of the Land Title Act reads that a registered owner of a charge is "deemed to be" entitled to an estate, interest, or claim created or evidenced by the instrument in question. Section 23 of the Land Title Act states every indefeasible title shall be "conclusive evidence" at law and in equity that the person named owner is indefeasibly entitled to an estate in fee simple, subject only to specific statutory exceptions, one of which is fraud.

[para12] It may therefore be said registration of a certificate is "conclusive evidence" of title (subject to specified statutory exception); registration of a charge, however, is "deemed" to create the registered interest. In considering the difference in interpretation of those phrases in the Land Title Act context the phrase "deemed to be" has been held by the Court of Appeal to imply "... that the legislature intended such omission to be observed by assigning a meaning not 'conclusive' and raising only a rebuttable presumption." [See Credit Foncier Franco-Canadian v. Bennett et al (1963), 43 W.W.R. 545 at p.548].

[para13] The Land Title Act applies to the Condominium Act, unless it is inconsistent with it. [See Land Title Act, Section 3].

[para14] Section 20 of the Condominium Act provides that the owners of a strata corporation may, by special resolution, direct the strata corporation grant an easement on its common property. To register an easement created by a strata corporation there must be a certificate [Form 6] under seal. Section 130 of the Condominium Act provides the seal of a strata corporation is to be used only "... by authority of council previously given and in the presence of ... at least two members of it, who shall sign every instrument to which the seal is affixed". If there is only one member of the strata corporation "... his signature is sufficient for the purpose of this section", or should the only member be a corporation "... the signature of the appointed representative on the strata council shall be sufficient for the purpose of this section."

[para15] Section 20(7) of the Condominium Act provides: "The certificate is, so far as the purchasers of the asset and the registrar are concerned, conclusive evidence of the facts stated."

[para16] I do not accept that the certificate filed in support of the easement in question here complies with the requirements of Section 130 of the Condominium Act. The certificate wording appears to be that of Form 6 to the Act for a filing under Section 20(5). The form has, however, been altered as to execution, and as filed reads:

THE COMMON SEAL OF THE OWNERS STRATA PLAN NO. 830 (762) was hereunto affixed on the day of , 19 in the presence of:

(S. Marquardt) President of the Council

[para17] The original document no longer remains in Land Title Office records so it is not possible to tell if the plaintiff strata corporations' seals were in fact affixed. I will assume for present purposes they were. The wording of the certificate indicates "... the owners of the strata lots ... by special resolution" directed the execution of the easement. The use of the plural indicates more than one owner. Compliance with the Condominium Act therefore requires the seal be affixed in the presence of two members of council who sign any document to which the seal is affixed. That obviously did not occur. For the certificate to have validity on its face with only one signature, the wording of the body of the certificate would have to indicate the strata corporation had but one member. There is no indication of that nature.

[para18] As the attestation date was left blank it is not possible to know when the certificate was signed in relation to the resolution it purports to certify. I do not consider an undated certificate sufficient compliance.

[para19] I do not find there is any inconsistency between the provisions of Section 26 of the Land Title Act and Section 20(7) of the Condominium Act. Section 20(7) of the Condominium Act is not in my view intended to give easements created by a strata corporation any different status as a charge under the Land Title Act than are easements created by an ordinary corporation or an individual. The use of the words "... conclusive evidence ..." in the context of this section does not make the easement an "indefeasible" charge akin to the effect of a certificate of Indefeasible Title. A Certificate of Title is a document that is created by operation of statute; an easement is created between parties.

[para21] Section 20(7) provides requirements entitling an easement to be registered under the Land Title Act; Section 26 of the Land Title Act provides the legal effect to be given the easement following its registration.

[para22] In 1989 the Land Title Act was amended and the following added as Section 26(2):

Registration of a charge does not constitute a determination by the registrar that the instrument in respect of which the charge is registered creates or evidences an estate or interest in the land or that the charge is enforceable.

[para23] The Honourable Attorney General in speaking to the amendment said:

The bill also proposes other reforms of a more technical and housekeeping nature. They are as follows: the effect of a registered charge is clarified and will be consistent with the prevailing jurisprudence; essentially ownership will continue to be guaranteed under the Land Title Act; as to the nature of the rights owned by a chargeholder, the bill clarifies that they are rights created by the registered instrument supporting the charge. Finally, the bill clarifies that the registration of itself does not create an interest in the land where the instrument was not, prior to registration, sufficient to create one. [para24] The amendment is consistent with the "rebuttable presumption" finding in Credit Foncier, supra.

[para25] The defendant Rhodo has not shown that the easement in question is valid if in fact it was originally created by fraud. The application is dismissed.

[para26] The plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the application on Scale 3.

Marbel Developments Ltd. v. Pirani

Between Marbel Developments Ltd., Plaintiff, and Mehboob Pirani and Beck, Robinson & Co., Defendants

[1994] B.C.J. No. 135

Vancouver Registry No. C925970 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Newbury J. Heard: December 13 - 17, 1993. Judgment: filed January 24, 1994.

Counsel for the Plaintiff: Stephen Antle. Counsel for the Defendants: Patrice Abrioux.

[para1] NEWBURY J.:-- The plaintiff ("Marbel") claims damages for negligence and breach of contract against a lawyer, Mr. Pirani, and the firm by which he is employed, in connection with the aborted stratification of an apartment building in Vancouver. At least initially, the defendants' retainer by Marbel was a limited one to prepare a disclosure statement required under the Real Estate Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 356, and attend to certain filings required under that statute and the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61. Marbel selected Mr. Pirani on the basis of the low fee he was willing to charge for the service, but he was an experienced practitioner who had stratified several new buildings in the past. The client itself had not done a stratification before, although its principals (and here I refer to Mr. Mand and Mr. Randhawa, notwithstanding that they purport not to be directors or officers of Marbel themselves), had bought and sold a few pieces of residential property, and Mr. Mand was a licensed real estate salesman. The company had purchased the subject property, a bare lot on East Broadway Street, Vancouver, in 1988, together with architectural plans for a 16-unit apartment building. Under the principal direction of Mr. Mand, it had constructed the building in accordance with the plans, acting as its own contractor, administering the payment of subcontractors and suppliers, and obtaining the required permits and approvals directly from municipal authorities. On completion of construction in 1990, Marbel intended to stratify the building and sell the lots thus created to individual purchasers on a 'retail' basis. The Condominium Act

[para2] Speaking in very broad terms, the owner of property that is to be stratified and offered for sale must carry out filings with the Superintendent of Real Estate and the Registrar of Titles in the relevant Land Title Office ("LTO"). The developer begins by filing a strata plan in the office of the Superintendent, together with a disclosure statement prepared in accordance with the Real Estate Act and the Superintendent's policy statements. This document must be provided to all purchasers of strata lots, effectively serving the function of a prospectus. It states the rescission rights available to purchasers under s. 63 of the Real Estate Act and must contain a certificate signed by a solicitor, stating that he or she has reviewed the document with the developer. It must also have attached to it, inter alia, a 'Rental Disclosure Statement' in which the developer discloses any lease of strata lots in force or intended at the time a purchaser agrees to buy a strata lot. Evidently, once the disclosure statement has been received by the Superintendent, the developer may "market" the lots, although it may not complete a sale until the Registrar of Titles has accepted the strata plan for filing in the LTO.

[para3] If the building is a new one, section 8 of the Condominium Act requires that when the plan is filed in the LTO, it be accompanied by a certificate signed by a B.C. land surveyor. The certificate must state that the building "has not been occupied prior to the date of the certificate". Provided it is filed within 90 days of its date and the plan is otherwise in order, the Registrar accepts it for filing and proceeds to issue individual certificates of title representing the new strata lots, which may then be conveyed to individual purchasers. Given the language of section 8, it is not fatal to an application that a building becomes occupied during the 90-day period as long as it was not occupied prior to the date of the certificate, the stratification can proceed. I was advised that "occupied" may be interpreted broadly, such that even a transient stay by a night watchman or construction worker may preclude a surveyor from signing a certificate for purposes of section 8.

[para4] If on the other hand the building is being 'converted' i.e., if it was "occupied" at any time in the past section 9 of the Condominium Act requires that the approval of an "approving authority" also be obtained. In respect of property located in the City of Vancouver, the approving authority is the City Council. In deciding whether to approve a conversion, it must consider a host of factors, including the availability of rental accommodation in the area, the proposals of the owner for relocating persons occupying the building, and any other matters the authority considers relevant. It may approve the strata plan, refuse to approve it, or refuse to approve it until terms and conditions are met, and its decision is final. Once a plan has been approved, it is endorsed by the approving authority and may then be filed in the LTO.

[para5] Obviously, the fact that a building has been occupied entails much more uncertainty, and potentially more difficulty, for an owner who wishes to stratify than does a building that has not been occupied. Thus it is in the interest of the developer of a new building to proceed under section 8 if possible i.e., to obtain a certificate of non-occupation and file the strata plan in the LTO within 90 days. If the 90-day period expires before the filing is carried out, the certificate may be re-prepared and re-submitted, but as of the date of the surveyor's re-certification he or she must be satisfied that the building has remained unoccupied.

Dealings Between Marbel and the Defendants

[para6] In early 1990, Marbel's building on East Broadway was nearing completion. Without any legal advice, Mr. Mand retained a surveyor, Mr. James, to prepare the plan required for stratification. After inspecting the property, Mr. James certified on the second page of the plan that as at April 30, 1990 the building had not been previously occupied. There was no evidence that he had any particular discussion with Mr. Mand as to the significance of the certificate, or that he warned Mr. Mand that it would expire in 90 days' time. Mr. Mand knew, however, that a disclosure statement had to be filed with the Superintendent before strata lots could be marketed; that copies of the statement had to be provided to purchasers of the lots; and that the strata plan had to be accepted for filing in the LTO before Marbel could effect a sale. He wanted the filings in both the office of the Superintendent and the LTO to be done immediately, and began casting about for a lawyer for this purpose.

[para7] Mr. Mand first contacted Mr. Baria, the lawyer who had incorporated Marbel, but he advised that he had no experience in doing stratifications. Mr. Mand then referred to the 'Yellow Pages' and called a few lawyers for quotes as to their fees for the task at hand. Mr. Pirani's quote was the lowest $650 in fees plus disbursements, which were initially calculated (incorrectly) at $527 and Mr. Mand met with him on or about May 15. Mr. Pirani agreed to accept Marbel's retainer on the understanding that his firm would receive its disbursements in trust before expending them. Mr. Mand in turn made it clear that he wanted the filings done at the earliest possible time, since he was anxious to start marketing the strata lots right away.

[para8] At some point, either on May 15 or 16, Mr. Mand provided Mr. Pirani with the information needed for the disclosure statement and delivered the strata plan, complete with the surveyor's certificate and the required consent of the mortgagee of the property, to Mr. Pirani's office. Also on May 15 or 16 he delivered Marbel's cheque for $350, covering the Superintendent's filing fees, to the law firm in trust.

[para9] Because Mr. Pirani was preparing to leave on vacation on May 17, he instructed his secretary, Ms. Naidu, to prepare the draft disclosure statement and to arrange on a rush basis for Marbel's directors Mr. Mand's mother and Mr. Randhawa's wife to sign the final version. Ms. Naidu prepared the document as instructed, using a precedent to which she was referred by Mr. Pirani. Mr. Mand accompanied Mrs. Randhawa to the law office to sign the document in the presence of a lawyer. Mr. Mohammedali, a partner of the defendant law firm, notarized Mrs. Randhawa's signature as secretary of Marbel and certified on the final page of the text that he had reviewed the statement with the "Developer" and that sections 1 and 3 were true and correct. Attached as a schedule to the disclosure statement was the Rental Disclosure Statement, which indicated, in terms that are obscure indeed, that none of the strata lots was under lease. Mr. Mand acknowledged in cross-examination that Mr. Mohammedali asked him in the course of the meeting to ensure that the "information part" of the statement was correct, although Mr. Mand deposed that he had not "paid attention" to the schedule. All the documents were signed on May 17.

[para10] As instructed by Mr. Pirani, Ms. Naidu proceeded immediately with the filing of the plan and the disclosure statement in the office of the Superintendent. She encountered an unexpected problem when a builder's lien was found registered against the property, but Marbel quickly provided the $630 required to discharge it. The Superintendent issued his receipt on May 25 and returned the approved plans to the defendant law firm on May 31.

[para11] On June 4, Ms. Naidu telephoned Mr. Mand to confirm the first filing and to request another $360 for the LTO disbursements. (In fact her earlier calculation of disbursements had understated the total by approximately this amount.) Mr. Mand, however, responded that there was now "no rush" to carry out the LTO filing, and that he would wait until Mr. Pirani's return from vacation to bring in the cheque. He assumed that once he had a purchaser, he could simply pay the LTO fees and that the certificates of strata title would be issued almost immediately an assumption that was incorrect, since six weeks normally elapses between the filing of the plan and the issuance of certificates of title. In accordance with his instructions, Ms. Naidu set the file aside to await Mr. Pirani's return in mid-June.

[para12] From this point on, the evidence of Mr. Mand and Mr. Pirani is seriously in conflict. Mr. Pirani testified that on his return to the office, he was surprised to hear that Mr. Mand had decided to delay the LTO filing. He says he instructed Ms. Naidu to make an appointment with Mr. Mand on his behalf and that Ms. Naidu made two or three appointments in July that Mr. Mand did not keep. There was no written record of such appointments or of the lawyer's instructions in this regard. Ms. Naidu, whose recollection of the events was generally poor, was quite certain that she had reached the client two or three times by telephone and that he told her he would bring in the funds "shortly". He did not do so. She then recalled complaining about Mr. Mand's unavailability to Mr. Pirani, who she deposed was "harassing" her about the file. Mr. Pirani instructed her to phone and arrange a lunch with Mr. Mand, by which he hoped to "tempt" the client into appearing and giving instructions to proceed. Ms. Naidu recalled setting up the appointment in late July as she was preparing to begin her pregnancy leave.

[para13] Mr. Mand for his part denied that anyone from the firm contacted him in June or July. He did recall that a luncheon date was arranged for August 8, but that due to other business pressures he had cancelled it. The evidence then again diverges: Mr. Mand testified that Mr. Pirani phoned him in the display suite of the building in late August and asked what Marbel was doing with the property. He deposed that he told the lawyer that since the market was "sour" and no offers whatsoever had been received on the apartment units, Marbel was considering renting the building, although it still wished to proceed with the stratification. He recalled Mr. Pirani's requesting that Mr. Mand bring him in the required funds, whereupon he would proceed with the LTO filing.

[para14] Mr. Pirani on the other hand testified that after the cancellation of the August 8 luncheon appointment, he became rather frustrated and ceased trying to contact Mr. Mand, knowing that the client would have to call once a sale was imminent. The lawyer categorically denied any conversation in late August or at any other time prior to December 1990 which would have alerted him to Marbel's change in plans with respect to the property. In his testimony, it was not until Mr. Mand turned up in his office without an appointment in late December, that Mr. Pirani was told Marbel had been obliged to rent suites in the building beginning October 1, due to a "financial crisis". Mr. Pirani sympathised with his client's problems, but even at this point did not "twig" to the fact that the occupation of the building by tenants had effectively precluded stratification under section 8 of the Condominium Act. He recalled that the purpose of Mr. Mand's visit had been to request the return of the strata plan, since (he said) Marbel had decided not to stratify after all. Mr. Pirani had never encountered this situation before, and told Mr. Mand he wished to clear the release of the plan with the Superintendent's office, which still had an open file on the property. Mr. Pirani suggested Mr. Mand return in a few days to pick up the plan. Upon Ms. Naidu's return to the office in January, 1991 he instructed her to check with the Superintendent's office and to prepare an amended bill for Marbel, to be handed to Mr. Mand with the plan. A note to file by Ms. Naidu to this effect was entered into evidence. Mr. Pirani himself did not make or keep any notes of his conversations with Mr. Mand or follow up with his secretary to see that his instructions were carried out.

[para15] Mr. Pirani deposed that he heard nothing further about the file until Ms. Naidu came to him in February, complaining that Mr. Mand was "hassling" her as to why the strata plan had not been filed. The lawyer said he "dropped everything" because she was upset, and telephoned Mr. Mand to remind him that a few weeks earlier, he had instructed the firm not to proceed with the stratification and to return the plan. This conversation was recorded in a note to file by Ms. Naidu dated February 19, which she testified was taken from what Mr. Pirani had told her. The note indicates Mr. Mand's instructions to proceed immediately with the LTO filing. For this purpose he delivered Marbel's cheque for $650, dated March 1, to the firm.

[para16] There then followed in quick succession the attempted filing of the strata plan in the LTO, the LTO's rejection of the document because of the expiry of the 90-day period, and Mr. Pirani's realization that it was now impossible to proceed under section 8. Again, the lawyer's testimony diverges from that of the client. Mr. Pirani stated that upon being advised of the rejection, either he or Ms. Naidu telephoned Mr. Mand to advise of the problem, and that he (Mr. Pirani) contacted both Mr. James and City Hall to determine if there was any other way to proceed short of a conversion under section 9. (Mr. Pirani had never carried out a conversion.) The lawyer was told that section 9 was the only other route available but that since the building was new, the approval process should not be too difficult. On March 14, Mr. Pirani wrote to Marbel as follows:

"We have now discovered that the Plans cannot be filed as the surveyor's certificate has expired and the Surveyor indicates that a new certificate cannot be given as the apartments are now occupied. He indicates that you would now have to apply to the City of Vancouver's approving officer who will wish to know what arrangements you will be making for the existing tenants on [sic] your building and you may have to pay the moving costs, etc. before the approving officer may grant his permission.

We suggest that you deal with this matter and if we can be of any assistance we will be happy to help you. In the meantime, we enclose your Strata Plans herewith which we understand from the Superintendent of Real Estate may be returned to you."

[para17] Mr. Mand's evidence was that Mr. Pirani phoned him in early March to say that the surveyor's certificate had to be re-done, and that he (Mr. Mand) then was told by Mr. James that this was impossible in light of the occupation of the building. Mr. Mand says that he then phoned Mr. Pirani and asked why he had not been advised about the expiry of the certificate, and that Mr. Pirani replied "I didn't know" and suggested he investigate the alternate route by enquiring at City Hall. This version does seem more consistent with the wording of the lawyer's letter, which may be read as implying Mr. Pirani had been unaware of the 90-day time limit and had just "discovered" that the occupation of the building precluded a fresh certification. On the stand, however, Mr. Pirani strongly denied that he had been unfamiliar with sections 8 and 9 and said the letter was simply badly worded.

[para18] Mr. Mand did proceed to make enquiries at City Hall as suggested by the letter. He testified that Ms. Higginson of the Planning Department advised him in late March that the vacancy rate in the area of Marbel's building was very low, that the consent of all tenants to the conversion would be required, and that the process would be very difficult. Ms. Higginson, who was called as a witness by the defendants, did not recall speaking with Mr. Mand specifically. She said that it was and is not her practise to give any opinion to members of the public concerning the likelihood of success of conversion applications. She might have indicated that it is helpful for a developer to have more than two-thirds of tenants' approvals, but said she would not have advised that the consent of all tenants was required. There was also evidence that vacancy rates in the area were not particularly low in early 1991, and that of 14 conversion applications received by the City in that year, all but one were ultimately approved.

[para19] By February 1991, Marbel had begun advertising the building as a whole for sale. Mr. Marbel said that initially, the building was marketed as stratified (on the assumption that only a quick LTO filing remained to be done) but that on finding it could not be stratified under section 8, the company had to change its approach and attempt to sell it as non-stratified rental property. I will deal below with Mr. Mand's testimony regarding the reduction in market value alleged by Marbel, but for purposes of this narrative I note here that on March 23, it entered an interim agreement for the sale of the property for $1,300,000. The purchasers, who were at arm's length with Marbel, completed the transaction on April 29, 1992. A few months later, they applied to City Council for the conversion of the building into strata lots under section 9. The application proceeded fairly smoothly and final approval was obtained in early 1993.

[para20] The plaintiff, however, having sold the East Broadway property at what it alleges was a lower price than it would have obtained for a stratified building, claims the difference in value from the defendants. It contends that Mr. Pirani was negligent in failing to advise Mr. Mand of the 90-day time limit imposed by section 8 and to warn of the consequences of allowing the building to become occupied before the surveyor's certificate was accepted for filing in the LTO.

Credibility

[para21] I have recounted the discrepancies in the evidence of Mr. Pirani and Mr. Mand at some length because I have frankly found them difficult to resolve and am left with the conclusion that neither witness gave evidence that was totally reliable. Mr. Pirani's ability to recall was severely hampered by his failure to keep records of appointments, meetings or telephone conversations. He testified that he does not keep notes because his handwriting is very poor and that if something significant requires a note, he normally dictates one to be typed. Unfortunately, Mr. Pirani did not regard his instructions from or conversations with Mr. Mand as sufficiently important to record in that way. Assuming that if he had thought about the matter, he would have realized in February that the surveyor's certificate did not comply with section 8, the fact that this did not dawn on him until the plan was actually rejected by the LTO, supports the inference that Mr. Pirani was overly busy and poorly organized. Nevertheless, my overall impression of Mr. Pirani was that he was basically honest and that he did his best to testify forthrightly as to what he could recall of his dealings with Mr. Mand.

[para22] I have a different view of Mr. Mand's evidence. His memory was remarkably selective and, under able cross-examination by Mr. Abrioux, he prevaricated on many points. Many aspects of his testimony did not ring true. One example is his testimony that he received a call from Mr. Pirani "out of the blue" in late August, 1990 at which time he took the opportunity to advise that Marbel was considering renting the units. If as Mr. Mand deposed, Mr. Pirani told him in the course of this conversation to "bring in the money", and if as Mr. Mand testified Marbel was not in financial difficulty, it seems strange that he did not do so until the following February. Mr. Mand's testimony concerning the call in August was not strengthened by the evidence of Mr. Grewall, an employee of Marbel, who testified that he overheard one side of a telephone conversation between Mr. Mand and another party that may or may not have been Mr. Pirani.

[para23] The most telling indication of Mr. Mand's credibility came in the course of his evidence concerning the diminution in value of the building as a result of the inability to stratify under section 8. He testified in chief that having failed to obtain any offers for individual strata lots, Marbel put the whole building on the market in late January or early February, 1991 as a stratified rental property for a price of $1,488,000. It received no offers. Mr. Mand said that in March, after he had learned of the problem with the surveyor's certificate and consulted with the planning department at City Hall, he dropped the price to $1,448,800, a reduction of $40,000. Again no offers were received, and again he dropped the price to $1,398,000, ultimately accepting $1,300,000. In cross-examination, Mr. Mand was adamant that these figures were correct and in particular that the property had not been offered for sale in January, 1991 for less than $1,448,800.

[para24] However, Mr. Abrioux produced two newspaper advertisements dated January 19 and 26, 1991 (i.e., prior to Marbel's becoming aware that it could not stratify under section 8), asking $1,398,000 for the property. Mr. Mand then acknowledged that Marbel had placed these advertisements, but denied having intended to deceive the Court because he had known they were a matter of public record and could be easily located by the defendants' counsel. I find protestations of this kind very lame indeed and must say that on this point and overall, I was left with serious reservations as to Mr. Mand's credibility. In particular, I am not persuaded that he spoke with Mr. Pirani in August as alleged, or that his conversation with Ms. Higginson was as he testified.

Scope of Retainer

[para25] These findings, however, do not answer the plaintiff's allegation that Mr. Pirani was under a duty to inform Marbel, prior to the expiration of the 90-day period, of the fact that the surveyor's certificate should be filed by that date, or of the consequences of allowing the building to become occupied. The existence of a duty on Mr. Pirani's part to give such advice depends at least in part on the nature and extent of his retainer. As was noted in a leading English case, Midland Bank Trust Co. Ltd. v. Hett, Stubbs and Kemp [1978] 3 All E.R. 571 (Ch. Div.):

"There is no such thing as a general retainer in that sense. The expression 'my solicitor' is as meaningless as the expression 'my tailor' or 'my bookmaker' as establishing any general duty apart from that arising out of a particular matter in which his services are retained. The extent of his duties depends on the terms and limits of that retainer and any duty of care to be implied must be related to what he is instructed to do." [at 583]

Thus it has been held in England that a solicitor retained to draft a will was not under a duty to advise that it would be invalidated by marriage unless he knew that marriage was a possibility (Hall v. Meyrick [1957] 2 Q.B. 455); and that a solicitor retained to advise on the tax implications of exercising an option was not bound to consider the validity of the option (Midland Bank, supra.) [para26] At the same time, the fact that the solicitor's skill and knowledge are being sought by a client means that the solicitor must not allow his client to define the retainer unilaterally, in ignorance of material risks of which the solicitor is or should be aware. This is particularly so when the client is unsophisticated. To quote from another English case, County Personnel Ltd. v. Pulver & Co. [1987] 1 All E.R. 289 (C.A.):

"The client is entitled to expect the exercise of a reasonable professional judgment. That is why the client seeks advice from the professional man in the first place. If in the exercise of a reasonable professional judgment a solicitor is or should be alerted to risks which might elude even an intelligent layman, then plainly it is his duty to advise the client of these risks or explore the matter further." [at 295]

(See generally the discussion at pp. 22-29 in Dugdale and Stanton, Professional Negligence (2nd ed., 1989)).

[para27] Mr. Pirani clearly regarded his retainer as a restricted one. In discovery he acknowledged that he considered that his obligation to Marbel had been only to draft the disclosure statement and carry out the filings, and that advising on the "risks of the procedure that Marbel had chosen to follow" was not part of his retainer. This may well be all that Mr. Pirani intended to undertake as his retainer after all, the fee of $650 likely left little room for anything else and from Mr. Mand's testimony I think it likely that when he first contacted the lawyer, he framed the task to be done in very limited terms. Indeed I suspect that had Mr. Pirani sat down with him at their first or second meeting and begun to describe the nuances of the stratification process and the implications of Mr. James' certificate, Mr. Mand would have waved such advice aside as unnecessary and unwanted. From the viewpoint of both solicitor and client, there was no reason to foresee that the property was likely to become occupied before the filings would be done or even to expect that the 90-day time limit would become relevant. Marbel was already preparing its 'display suite' for marketing in the building, and Mr. Pirani had instructions to proceed on a rush basis.

[para28] However, when Mr. Mand decided in May that there was "no rush" to complete the filings, and several weeks dragged on without Mr. Pirani's being able to contact Mr. Mand, the situation changed. The expiry date began to become relevant and there arose the risk that at the very least, the certificate would become unusable. The client was unaware of that risk or any other risk it was running by delaying matters; and the lawyer, having the greater skill and knowledge, became bound to make reasonable efforts to avoid damage to his client resulting from those risks. As Mr. Pirani acknowledged on the stand, a simple letter in July or August of 1990 would have sufficed for this purpose.

Standard of Care

[para29] I regard a finding of negligence on Mr. Pirani's part, then, as one that follows from an application of the normal principles of negligence law i.e., the existence of a duty of care, the foreseeability of injury, and the failure of the defendant to take reasonable care to avoid such injury rather than from a finding of accepted practise procedures or standards as such. For this reason, I do not place a great deal of reliance on the expert evidence that was tendered by Mr. Antle on the plaintiff's behalf in the form of an opinion letter prepared by Ms. Vogt, a solicitor who practices with a large firm in Vancouver and specializes in condominium development. Ms. Vogt opined that a competent and diligent solicitor accepting the instructions provided to the defendants would have checked and diarized the expiry date of the surveyor's certificate before forwarding the plan to the Superintendent's office; that before "accepting instructions" not to proceed with the LTO filing, such a solicitor would have discussed the consequences of the time limit with the client and for that purpose would have continued efforts to contact the client by telephone; and that if such efforts were not successful, the competent solicitor would have set out his or her advice to the client in writing concerning the consequences of expiry and the risk of the building becoming occupied after the expiry date. She also testified that had she been consulted by the plaintiff in the general circumstances of this case, she would have quoted a fee of about $2,000.

[para30] With all due respect to Ms. Vogt, I must say that her testimony reminded me of the comments of Oliver, J. in Midland Bank, supra:

"I must say that I doubt the value, or even the admissibility, of this sort of evidence, which seems to be becoming customary in cases of this type. The extent of the legal duty in any given situation must, I think, be a question of law for the court. Clearly, if there is some practice in a particular profession, some accepted standard of conduct which is laid down by a professional institute or sanctioned by common usage, evidence of that can and ought to be received. But evidence which really amounts to no more than an expression of opinion by a particular practitioner of what he thinks he would have done had he been placed, hypothetically and without the benefit of hindsight, in the position of the defendants is of little assistance to the court, whilst evidence of the witnesses' view of what, as a matter of law, the solicitor's duty was in the particular circumstances of the case is, I should have thought, inadmissible, for that is the very question which it is the court's function to decide." [at 582]

I do not go so far as to conclude that Ms. Vogt's opinion was inadmissible in this case, but like Oliver, J. I suggest that a publication or checklist widely circulated in the legal profession, indicating a standard "sanctioned by common usage", would have been more useful.

(Courtenay Registry No. 82/82, dated June 22, 1984), in which Millward, J. found that the defendant solicitor had exercised the degree of skill and care required of a "reasonably competent solicitor in a small town in British Columbia" and had therefore not been negligent.

[para32] At first blush, this approach may have some appeal. Many might argue that it is unfair to judge a general practitioner, working in a small firm and undertaking Marbel's retainer for $650, by the standard of a "condominium specialist" in a large firm who would have charged the client $2,000 for the work. But the logical extension of such reasoning would be to adjust the standard of care in every case according to the particular defendant (and perhaps the particular fee) in question. That approach has been clearly rejected in England (see Dugdale and Stanton, supra, at 236-7) and by the Supreme Court of Canada in the leading Canadian decision, Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse (1986) 31 D.L.R. (4th) 481. In that case, a "general practitioner" in Nova Scotia had been retained by a lending institution to secure a loan to a corporate borrower that was to be used in connection with the purchase of shares in the capital of the borrower. The solicitor was unaware of legislation in that province prohibiting a company from giving financial assistance in connection with the purchase of shares in its capital. (In British Columbia, see s. 127 of the Company Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 59.) As a result of the legislation, a mortgage prepared by the solicitor as security for his client's loan was found to be void. At the trial of the lender's claim against the solicitor, the judge drew a distinction between specialists and non-specialists, and declined to consider the evidence of one of the plaintiff's expert witnesses who was a "specialist in commercial real estate matters". It was held that because a non-specialist could not be expected to know of the statutory restriction in question, and the transaction in question had been an unusual one, the solicitor had not been negligent.

[para33] The Supreme Court of Canada disagreed. LeDain, J. for the Court formulated the applicable standard as follows:

"An attorney is expected to possess knowledge of those plain and elementary principles of law which are commonly known by well-informed attorneys, and to discover those additional rules of law which, although not commonly known, may readily be found by standard research techniques. See Charlesworth and Percy on Negligence, 7th ed, (1983), pp. 577-8 to similar effect, where it is said: 'Although a solicitor is not bound to know the contents of every statute of the realm, there are some statutes, about which it is his duty to know. The test for deciding what he ought to know is to apply the standard of knowledge of a reasonably competent solicitor.' The duty or requirement of professional competence in respect of knowledge is put by Jackson and Powell, Professional Negligence (1982), at pp. 145-6, as follows: 'Although a solicitor is not bound to know all the law, he ought generally to know where and how to find out the law in so far as it affects matters within his field of practise. However, before the solicitor is held liable for failing to look a point up, circumstances must be shown which would have alerted the reasonably prudent solicitor to the point which ought to be researched'..." [at 524; emphasis added].

The Court held that although a solicitor of reasonable competence might not have known of the restriction on corporate borrowing, such a solicitor would have checked the legislation to see if the proposed transaction was restricted in any way. The fact that a company's capacity to borrow could be limited by the statute was said to be "such basic knowledge that a reasonably competent solicitor must be held to possess it, whether he is a general practitioner or a specialist." (at 526). Having undertaken to protect his client's interest in connection with an unusual transaction, the solicitor was held to an objective standard of reasonable competence which was said to be the same whether it arose "as an implied term of the contract or retainer" or "as a matter of common law from the relationship of proximity created by the retainer." (at 525).

[para34] From this I take it that any solicitor taking on a task for a client must bring reasonable care and skill to that task, regardless of his geographical location and practising environment. In other words, the extent of the solicitor's duty is determined by the work undertaken, rather than by his or her particular circumstances. Further, and subject to any different standard of care imposed by the terms of the retainer, the standard is only one of reasonable competence: it is not a standard of perfection - which usually seems eminently reasonable in hindsight - or of strict liability. To quote yet again from Midland Bank, supra:

"Now no doubt the duties owed by a solicitor to his client are high, in the sense that he holds himself out as practising a highly skilled and exacting profession, but I think that the court must beware of imposing on solicitors, or on professional men in other spheres, duties which go beyond the scope of what they are requested and undertake to do. It may be that a particularly meticulous and conscientious practitioner would, in his client's general interests, take it on himself to pursue a line of enquiry beyond the strict limits comprehended by his instructions. But that is not the test. The test is what the reasonably competent practitioner would do having regard to the standards normally adopted in his profession, and cases such as Duchess of Argyll v. Beuselinck, Griffiths v. Evans and Hall v. Meyrick demonstrate that the duty is directly related to the confines of the retainer." [at 583]

In this regard, I do agree with Mr. Abrioux that insofar as Ms. Vogt may be regarded as a "particularly meticulous" practitioner, her normal practice is again of limited assistance in formulating the standard of reasonable competence.

[para35] Applying that standard, however, I find that when Mr. Mand decided there was "no rush" to proceed with the LTO filings, a reasonably competent solicitor would have considered the date of expiry of the surveyor's certificate and, when he was unable to contact his client, would have written to advise him of it and the significance of proceeding under section 8 if possible. It was certain that the certificate would 'expire' in late July and since Mr. Pirani knew or should have known that none of the strata lots had sold, the decision to rent was a foreseeable possibility. Unfortunately, when his efforts to contact Mr. Mand by phone failed in June and July, 1990, Mr. Pirani simply set the file aside and turned to other matters. Even in February, 1991 when he finally did receive instructions to proceed with the LTO filing, he failed to turn his mind to the validity of the certificate, which had long since expired. By that time, of course, the realization would have come too late.

Contributory Negligence

[para36] I must also consider whether warning bells should have sounded in Mr. Mand's mind in May, 1990 when Marbel decided to delay the stratification, or in October when Marbel began to rent strata lots. As indicated above, Mr. Mand had at least some knowledge of and experience in the real estate field. In order to obtain his salesman's license in 1988, he had taken a correspondence course administered by the Faculty of Commerce and Business Administration of the University of British Columbia, in cooperation with the Real Estate Council of British Columbia, which reviewed various aspects of real estate development and transactions. Chapter 7 of that course, entitled "Condominiums and Cooperatives in British Columbia" informed students as to the concept of stratification and the general rules applicable to new condominium developments and the conversion of existing buildings to strata title. The chapter contained the warning that conversions must be approved by the appropriate "approving authority" and listed the factors that such authorities may consider under section 9 of the Condominium Act. It noted that an owner who obtains the necessary approvals for a conversion must comply with the provisions of the Residential Tenancy Act, R.S.B.C. 1984, c. 15, and with the prospectus and disclosure requirements of the Real Estate Act outlined in Chapter 2 of the course. Chapter 7 also referred to the rental disclosure requirements applicable to owner-developers who lease strata lots.

[para37] Mr. Mand acknowledged at trial that he had been aware of the existence of the Superintendent of Real Estate and the LTO, the requirement for a disclosure statement to be accepted by the Superintendent before Marbel could market the units, and requirements for disclosure to prospective purchasers of the units. Although he purported to have been unaware of the contents of the surveyor's certificate, he had attended to obtaining it and the strata plan without any assistance from Mr. Pirani; and although he said he had "no idea" of the Rental Disclosure Statement attached to the disclosure statement, he was with Mrs. Randhawa when she executed the documents and confirmed to Mr. Mohammedali that the information contained therein was correct.

[para38] Armed with the knowledge he did have, I find that even if Mr. Mand had not been specifically aware of the 90-day expiration provision in section 8 of the Act, some question should have arisen in his mind when Marbel began to consider renting out apartment suites rather than selling them. A plaintiff is required to take reasonable steps to protect its interest. In this case Marbel should have done so by seeking legal advice. Had Mr. Mand made a simple phone call to Mr. Pirani anytime prior to October 1990, I expect the lawyer's attention would have focussed on the section 8 problem and the correct advice would have been given. The surveyor's certificate could have been redone and filed. Just as Mr. Pirani acted negligently in setting aside Marbel's file and waiting for Mr. Mand to contact him, the plaintiff through Mr. Mand was negligent in failing to consult its solicitor about a change in plans running contrary to its initial instructions. I apportion the plaintiff's contribution to its own damages at 50%.

Measure of Damages

[para39] The plaintiff filed two valuations of the East Broadway property prepared by Mr. Anderson, a qualified appraiser, as of March 31, 1991 one on the basis of its sale as 16 individual stratified lots, at $1,492,700; and the other on the basis of its sale as a stratified rental property, at $1,407,000. (I understand that March 31 was chosen because it approximates the date on which the plaintiff first became aware that it could not subdivide the property under section 8 and was therefore the earliest date at which it could have mitigated its loss (see Beiser v. A Law Firm (1984) 53 B.C.L.R. 305 (B.C.S.C.)), and counsel for the defendants agreed that this was the appropriate date for the assessment of damages.) The plaintiff claims damages of $107,000, being the difference between its actual sale price of $1,300,000 and the $1,407,000, on the theory that the value of the unstratified building must have been somewhere between the actual sale price and $1,492,700.

[para40] There are some problems with the application of this logic. First, Mr. Mand testified in chief that having failed to obtain any offers for suites in the building, Marbel decided to sell the whole as a (stratified) rental property for a price of $1,488,000. It received no offers. He testified that in March, after becoming aware that the building could not be stratified under section 8, Marbel then reduced its price to $1,448,800 a drop of $40,000. Again, Marbel received no offers and reduced the price further. Mr. Abrioux contended that even if one accepted this testimony (which as earlier noted was substantially weakened by the later evidence of the January advertisements), the plaintiff's loss was at most $40,000, because that was Mr. Mand's own estimate of the drop in value resulting from the inability to stratify easily. I am not convinced that these figures should be given the weight contended for by Mr. Abrioux after all, Marbel's estimates of the market value of the property were hardly infallible. However, Mr. Anderson did acknowledge at trial that he had not been aware of the $1,398,000 price actually asked by Marbel in January, and that the best evidence of market value is what a willing vendor will accept from a willing purchaser.

[para41] When cross-examined concerning the January advertisements, Mr. Mand said that even though Marbel received no offers at that price, it would not have accepted $1,300,000 for the stratified building. In his words, "We may have gotten closer to our asking price". Of course, how much the plaintiff would have obtained is a matter of speculation, since no other offers were ever received. Mr. Mand indicated elsewhere in his evidence that a 5 to 10 per cent difference between an asking and selling price is not unusual.

[para42] Further doubt was cast on the plaintiff's calculation of its damages by a critique of Mr. Anderson's appraisals prepared for the defendants by Mr. Whiteley, also a qualified appraiser. In his opinion, the expenses assumed in Mr. Anderson's appraisal of the building as a rental property obviously an important factor where the "income approach" has been used, as it was by Mr. Anderson may have been understated. In addition, the capitalization rate of seven per cent used by Mr. Anderson was at least at the low end of the comparable range, and a rate between 7.2 and 7.5 percent would appear more reasonable, based on Mr. Whiteley's "comparables". If all other factors remained unchanged, these rates would result in a value between $1,313,000 and $1,368,000, the mid-point of which is approximately $1,340,000.

[para43] Further, while not disputing the primacy of the income approach in an appraisal of a rental building, Mr. Whiteley noted that the use of the direct comparison approach to value is also useful; as he stated, "a prudent purchaser will not typically pay more for the property than the price required to purchase an equally desirable property available under similar circumstances." On a review of Mr. Anderson's comparables, at least one of which he found not to be appropriate, Mr. Whiteley calculated that solely on a direct comparison approach, the value of the building in March 1991 would have been between $1,280,000 and $1,320,800, the mid-point of which is $1,300,000. Then, using a combination of the two approaches, Mr. Whiteley concluded in summary that a range of between $1,300,000 and $1,361,000 would have been more appropriate than the $1,407,000 stated by Mr. Anderson.

[para44] The defendants contend that the plaintiff's claim should be dismissed because there is no evidence of a loss at all, or that at best, the evidence adduced by the plaintiff does not establish a loss on the balance of probabilities. I agree that in the absence of evidence from the actual purchasers of the property as to the value (if any) they placed on stratification, the determination of the plaintiff's damages is to a large degree speculative. However, the difficulty of selecting a figure should not deprive the plaintiff of its remedy altogether. I find that the range of values suggested by Mr. Whiteley is clearly preferable to the figures reached by Mr. Anderson, and since one figure must be chosen as representing the value of the entire building, stratified and rented, the mid-point of Mr. Whiteley's range, or $1,330,500, seems appropriate. Accordingly, I fix the diminution in value suffered by Marbel as a result of the inability to stratify under section 8 of the Condominium Act, at $30,500.

Mitigation of Damages

[para45] I have already described the difficulties in Mr. Mand's evidence as to what he was told at City Hall regarding the likely outcome of an application under section 9. But although he exaggerated the impression of difficulty he was given by Ms. Higginson, the fact remains that proceeding under section 9 presented considerably more uncertainty and delay than proceeding under section 8. Had Marbel been in a better financial position, it might have accepted the cost of that delay and uncertainty and applied to convert the property. But the company was obliged to do only what was reasonably necessary to mitigate its loss it was not bound to put itself in financial jeopardy. I am not persuaded that the defendants have discharged their onus of proving that Marbel acted unreasonably in proceeding with the sale of the property as unstratified and letting the purchasers take the risk that an application under section 9 would fail or would involve unacceptable expense and delay.

[para46] In the result, the defendants are jointly and severally liable for one-half of the plaintiff's loss of $30,500, together with court order interest from March 31, 1991 at the Registrar's rates. Marbel will also have one-half of its costs calculated at Scale 3.

[para47] Before closing, I wish to compliment both Mr. Antle and Ms. Abrioux on their able presentation of the evidence and in particular on their cross-examinations. Each did a highly competent job of representing his client in what I, at least, found to be a difficult case.

Suzanne Legault, Claimant, and John Torcan and Victoria Torcan, Defendants, and Strata Corporation K-418, Third Party

[1993] B.C.J. No. 2647 Kamloops Registry No. 24364 British Columbia Provincial Court Kamloops, British Columbia Gordon Prov. Ct. J. Heard: October 15, 1993. Judgment: filed November 17, 1993.

D. Stratmoen, on behalf of the Claimant. S. Donegan, on behalf of the Defendant. P. Sandhu, on behalf of the Third Party.

[para1] GORDON PROV. CT. J.:-- In this action, Ms. Legault claims against the Torcans, in the alternative, for either fraudulent misrepresentation or negligent misrepresentation. While there is some evidence before the Court (most noticeably the opinions of Mr. Aubrey and Mr. Halliday, and the fact the defendants placed stockings over certain of the heating/air conditioning outlets) which supports the claim in fraud, the defendants have each taken the stand and sworn that prior to the sale they had no knowledge of the actual problem which we now know to exist in the ducts within this unit. It is well established law that where a claim of fraud is advanced, considerable evidence in support of it must be adduced if it is to succeed. In this case I have no reason to disbelieve what the defendants have said and the claim under this heading must fail.

[para2] Next, it is argued that the defendants were aware of problems with the ducts such that a reasonable person would have known the system was faulty, and that, as a result, the defendants are guilty of "constructive fraud". In this regard it was argued that in placing stockings over certain of the outlets and doing no more, the defendants were being wilfully blind to the dust and dirt problem that is the subject of this action. The use of the stockings, however, has been accounted for in the defence case. It turns out they were set in place to keep flying ants from entering the residence. Again, I am not satisfied that "constructive fraud" has been established to the necessary extent.

[para3] This leaves for consideration whether or not the defendants are guilty of negligent misrepresentation and, as a result, liable to the claimants in damages.

[para4] The essential facts in this matter are these:

a) Even before they attended at the property, Ms. Boswell, the realtor, knew that Ms. Legault was concerned to know the state of the heating/air conditioning system and its ductwork;

b) that after Ms. Boswell and Ms. Legault had inspected the unit, Ms. Legault asked Vicky Torcan as to the state of the heating/air conditioning system and its "pipes" and in reply received the unequivocal response, it's fine" or "everything's fine". This was in July of 1992;

c) the claimant took possession August 1, 1992. She was on sabbatical and largely out of town for the following month. On or about September 7th she turned on the heating/air conditioning unit for the first time and discovered that great quantities of dust and dirt were emitted from most of the ducts. The Court has viewed a video showing just how much debris is deposited in the livingroom and bathroom when the heating system is in operation and it can be said the situation is one that no reasonable person should have to tolerate;

d) Ms. Legault acted promptly in having the source of this problem investigated and identified. It turns out that the bottom of the ducts, to about three out of the eight outlets in her single-floor condominium unit, have been eaten away by rust. This condition applies at least for as far back as an arm can extend by reaching down and through the duct in question. How much further it goes is open to question. The result is that when the furnace or air conditioning unit is activated, the sand and clay, which now constitutes the bottom of the air duct, is stirred up and blown into the unit.

e) Mr. and Mrs. Torcan took the stand in their own defence. They bought the unit in December of 1989 and said that they were generally happy with the unit while they lived there. Certain incidents or observations were, however, admitted to by them:

i) after the furnace had been working on an off- and-on basis for about one week, a "light layer of silt" would have formed around the air vents. This was noticed in the winter of 1989/90. Obviously, the condition persisted and, if anything, got a little worse over the following months and years;

ii) in approximately November of 1990, Mrs. Torcan had the heating ducts professionally examined at the end where they connect into the furnace and was advised that they were dirty and in need of cleaning;

iii) in October of 1991, flying cornfield ants began escaping in large numbers from the heating vents into the unit. The situation was examined by Jake Driedger who was familiar with the situation and who explained that while the ants could not be eliminated, stockings placed over the inside of the vents would prevent them from entering into the residence. The defendants did make mention of an "ant problem", which had been remedied, on the written disclosure form filed with their real estate agents; but the "problem" was not related on the form to the ductwork as it should have been;

iv) at some point, Mrs. Torcan noticed the heat coming from the vent under the kitchen sink was much hotter than the air coming from other vents throughout the unit.

[para5] Each of the aforementioned matters relate to the state and performance of the heating/air conditioning unit and its associated ductwork. I am satisfied that, at least in total, these matters ought to have put Mrs. Torcan on notice that everything to do with the heating/air conditioning unit and its ductwork was not "fine". Her statement to this effect did not correspond with the truth of the matter and I am satisfied that her statement was made recklessly and without regard to the truth.

[para6] Knowing as she did about these features to the heating/air conditioning system, Mrs. Torcan was under a duty at least to use more cautious wording in her response to Ms. Legault's inquiry. For instance, she might have mentioned these facts or certain of them and then said, "but other than that, it's fine" -- or she might have said, "As far as we know, it's okay."

[para7] But in stating categorically "it's fine", the defendant must have understood the claimants would rely on her assertion in this regard and undertake no further investigation into the matter.

[para8] I am satisfied the defendants' statement amounted to a negligent misstatement which the claimant relied on and which prompted them to enter into the contract to purchase the condominium unit.

[para9] As a result, the claimants are entitled to succeed against the defendants.

[para10] The claimant is of course entitled to get what she bargained for when she agreed to buy this unit. That included a heating and air conditioning system. There are only two ways of dealing with the aforementioned situation and still leave the unit with air conditioning. The first of these is to jackhammer out the cement floor to her unit where it lies over the underground ductwork, to remove the old corroded ductwork and install new in its place. It is estimated this will cost $8,000. Undoubtedly, Ms. Legault will have to vacate her unit for about one week while work is in progress.

[para11] The other method is to shut off the existing ducts and to install ducts in the walls, beams and ceiling space associated with the unit. As mentioned in Mr. Owen's letter to Mr. Aubrey of October 8, 1992, however, there are certain problems with this approach and the claimant's unit would be substantially altered as a result. The estimate for this work is $5,000.

[para12] With the aforementioned in mind, I am satisfied the claimant's damages here are $8,500.

THIRD PARTY CLAIM:

[para13] The defendants have filed a third party notice in these proceedings claiming that responsibility for condition of the ductwork rests with Strata Corporation K-418. In this regard the defendants rely on the definition of common property as set out in s.1, the interpretation section, of the Condominium Act R.S.B.C. 1979, Chap. 61:

"Common property" means so much of the land and buildings comprised in a strata plan that is not comprised in a strata lot shown on the strata plan, and includes pipes, wires, cables, chutes, ducts or other facilities for the passage or provision of water, sewage, drainage, gas, oil, electricity, telephone, radio, television services, garbage, heating and cooling systems and other services contained within a floor, wall or ceiling of a building shown on the strata plan, where the centre of the floor, wall or ceiling forms the common boundary of a strata lot with another strata lot or with common property;"

[para14] Basically, there are two arguments. The first is that as in this particular case, the heating/air conditioning ducts are not within the particular strata lot; they qualify as common property and secondly, that the ducts are "... contained within a floor ... where the centre of the floor ... forms the common boundary of a strata lot ... with common property."

[para15] In this case, the heating/air conditioning ducts run from the heating/air conditioning unit, which is located within the claimant's strata lot to the outlets or registers - - all of which are located within the unit. This strata unit is located on the ground level with two similar units above it. The ducts for the claimant's unit run in the ground and below the cement slab which constitutes the sub-floor to the unit. Section 34(1)(d) of the Condominium Act reads as follows:

"34. (1) The strata corporation shall (d) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation..."

[para16] With respect, it seems a moot point as to whether or not the land beneath the claimant's unit constitutes common property. Mr. Paul Sandhu, an articulated student, has however appeared in this case on behalf of the Strata Corporation and conceded that the ductwork does fall within the definition of common property as set out above. On the face of it then, it would seem the Strata Corporation is liable to maintain these pipes and that, not having done so, it ought to indemnify the defendants in this case.

[para17] Mr. Sandhu, however, argues that considering the general scheme of the Condominium Act and applying both common sense and the rule of interpretation that the general must be read as subject to the particular, the ductwork servicing this unit should not be found by the Court to be common property on the facts in this case.

[para18] Section 26 of the Act stipulates that every condominium development shall be governed by a set of By-Laws; and that, where no different By-Laws are adopted, then by sections 26 and 28, those By-Laws set out in Part 5 of the Act shall apply.

[para19] Part 5 of the Act, s.115, provides that:

"An owner shall

(a) permit the strata corporation and its agents, at all reasonable times on notice, except in case of emergency, when no notice is required, to enter his strata lot for the purpose of inspecting the same and maintaining, repairing or renewing pipes, wires, cables and ducts for the time being existing in the strata lot and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of any other strata lot or common property, or for the purpose of maintaining, repairing or renewing common property, common facilities or other assets of the strata corporation, or for the purpose of ensuring that the bylaws are being observed;...

(c) repair and maintain his strata lot, including windows and doors, and areas allocated to his exclusive use, and keep them in a state of good repair, reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire, storm, tempest or act of God excepted; ...

(g) comply strictly with these bylaws, and all other bylaws of the strata corporation, and with rules and regulations adopted from time to time; ..."

Section 116 of the Act provides that:

"The strata corporation shall ...

(c) maintain all common areas, ...

(d) maintain and repair, including renewal where reasonably necessary, pipes, wires, cables, chutes and ducts for the time being existing in the parcel and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of more than one strata lot or common property;"

[para20] Strata Corporation K-418 has not adopted any different set of by-laws and as a result it and the strata unit owners within this development are bound by the above.

[para21] I find the approach to interpretation of the Condominium Act as urged upon the Court by Mr. Sandhu to be most appropriate. The By-Laws clearly are the means whereby flexibility is incorporated into the statutory scheme. They are the means through which those who own units within a condominium development have the opportunity to devise rules and assign responsibilities particularly suited to their needs and circumstances. It is logical then to read the By-Laws as specifically defining what is and is not common property in a particular situation.

[para22] In this case, the ducts run from the heating/air conditioning unit located within the claimant's strata lot to the outlets in that lot. They do not pass over any other strata lot and are and were intended to be of exclusive benefit to the claimant's strata unit. These ducts are not "capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of more than one strata lot or common property".

[para23] As a result, they do not fall under s.116(d) of the Corporation's By-Laws.

[para24] With respect to the suggestion that the ducts nonetheless constitute common property as referred to in s.34(1)(d), the Court has been referred to the case of Okrainetz v. Condominium Plan No. 82R42988 (1992), 24 R.P.R. (2d) 293, a decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench on appeal. In that case the heating/air conditioning units which serviced an apartment-style condominium complex were located on the balconies associated with each particular unit. The strata plan, however, specified that such balconies were to be considered as "common property". In deciding who was responsible for repair of the air conditioners, the Provincial Court Judge decided they were common property and, as such, the responsibility of the strata corporation. However, on appeal, Justice Armstrong speaking for the court referred to a number of decisions which had not been brought to the attention of the trial court and which were "... to the affect that the provisions of the Condominium Property Act must be " ... in light of the realities of what actually happens between developers, purchasers, and condominium corporations". Reference was made to Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 649, where, at page 663, the Court stated:

"The Condominium Act itself does not extend its definition of common elements beyond its own limits. This so-called definition should not therefore furnish the meaning of the term for all purposes, especially when to do so could produce absurd results."

In Okrainetz, Justice Armstrong went on to say at page 296:

"It seems to me the only reasonable inference to draw, and, accordingly, the only way to interpret the condominium plan, is that while the furnace and air conditioner are located on common property, they were never Intended to be part of that common property. When the respondents acquired an apartment, they acquired with it the furnace and air conditioner for that apartment, and have exclusive use of a balcony on which to locate the furnace and air conditioner. They are responsible for the maintenance of those items. And there is no suggestion from the respondents that they were given the idea when purchasing that the apartment furnace and air conditioner would be maintained as common property."

[para25] I am satisfied these cases from Ontario and Saskatchewan are sound law and that they should be applied in British Columbia. It follows that the ductwork in this case, being associated with and available exclusively for the benefit of the claimant's strata unit, are not common property. As a result, the defendants' claim against the third party under s.34 of the Act, must also fail. The third party claim is dismissed.

[para26] As a result, there will be judgment for Ms. Legault as against the defendants for $8,500. This amount takes into account any increase in the cost of materials and labour since the original estimate from Interior Plumbing & Heating Ltd. was supplied. It also includes an allowance for living-out expenses that will likely be incurred by Ms. Legault.

[para27] The claimant is as well entitled to recover the $30 she has spent in filing fees and $12 as witness fees for attending both the settlement conference and trial.

[para28] Any party sufficiently unhappy with this decision has 40 days from November 17, 1993 in which to appeal.

Herbert Raymond Smith and James Clifford Sheffield, Petitioners, and G.C. (Goldie) Read and The Owners of Strata Corporation NW 3172, Respondents

[1993] B.C.J. No. 1348

Chilliwack Registry No. S 2004 British Columbia Supreme Court Chilliwack, British Columbia Davies J. Heard: March 22, 1993. Judgment: filed May 10, 1993.

Counsel for the Petitioners: D.R. Lester. Counsel for the Respondents: R. Kelly.

[para1] DAVIES J.:-- The Petitioners apply under the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.B.C., chapter 206 and the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C., chapter 61, to set aside the Arbitration Ruling of the Defendant C.C. (Goldie) Read, filed December 15, 1992.

[para2] The facts set out in the Petition filed March 10, 1993 are as follows:

1. On or about October 27, 1992, an Arbitration Hearing was held at 7500 Columbia Street, Mission, B.C., to resolve an alleged dispute between some of the owners of Strata Corporation NW 3172, concerning common area expenses of the two different "types" of owner, namely "Garden Apartment Owners" and "Apartment Condominium Owners", both being members of the said Strata Corporation.

2. The Arbitrator heard arguments and rebuttals from two opposing perspectives and reached a decision in writing which was entered in the Supreme Court of British Columbia, New Westminster, Civil Registry on December 15, 1992.

3. The Arbitrator held, inter alia, "that the Condominium Act does not appear to make any differentiation whatever between types, kinds or styles of residential strata lots, Section 128(2)(b)" of the Condominium Act;

4. The Arbitrator also ruled that all common area expenses shall be apportioned equally under the unit entitlement formula contained in the Condominium Act and that the Council shall cause a budget to be presented at the next Annual General Meeting by "which the common area necessities are to be maintained for the following year;

5. The costs associated with maintaining the "Condominium Apartments" are not the same as the costs associated with maintaining the "Garden Apartments."

6. Several of the owners of Strata Corporation NW 3172, and in particular, the Petitioners, were not notified of the hearing of October 27, 1992 and were adversely affected by the said Ruling. [para3] Counsel for the Respondents did not take issue with the facts set out in the Petition. He explained that he appeared on this application to ascertain that the facts were presented fairly and that should the Arbitrator's Ruling be set aside that guidelines be given to assist at any new Arbitration hearing.

[para4] The Petitioners argue that the Arbitrator's award should be set aside on any one of three grounds, which are:

1. That all Petitioners were not notified of the Arbitration hearing as required by the Condominium Act or by the principles of natural justice;

2. That there is a reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the Arbitrator;

3. That there is an error on the face of the record as the ruling denies that Section 128 of the Condominium Act provides for different types of strata lots in a Strata Corporation. [para5] The development known as Edwards' Estates consists of sixty strata lots, thirty-two of which are located in a Condominium Apartment style building, (hereinafter called the "Apartment Units") and twenty-eight of which are located in eight four-plex buildings containing Garden Townhouse Units, (hereinafter called the "Townhouse Units"). The Apartment Units are contained in a three storey building with each unit having access to internal hallways but no direct access to the outdoors. On the other hand, each Townhouse Unit has direct access to the outdoors. The Apartment Block has property which is common to all strata lot owners which includes a lobby area, activity room, meeting room, staircases, electrical rooms, hallways, mechanical rooms, an elevator, storage areas and a lounge area now apparently being used as a guest suite.

[para6] A dispute has arisen amongst the owners in the Edwards' Estates as to whether Section 128 of the Condominium Act provides for differing maintenance fees to be charged to particular types of units where different types of units exist in a strata complex. This dispute became the subject of arbitration under Section 44 of the Condominium Act which provides in part as follows:

"44(1) the Strata Corporation or an owner may, prior to the commencement of a court proceeding about a dispute, refer to arbitration, the dispute between the Strata Corporation and an owner or between two or more owners about any matter, including, without limiting that statement, a dispute about

(a) contributions to common expenses or money paid under Section 34(2);

(d) . . .

(2) notice shall be given to the Strata Council, the Strata Corporation or the owner affected, as the case may be. Within two weeks after the notice is received, the parties to the reference shall agree on and appoint a single Arbitrator.

[para7] I will deal firstly with the Petitioners' argument that they were not given notice of the Arbitration hearing required by the Act and by the rules of natural justice. It is clear that the Petitioners and approximately twenty other Townhouse Unit Owners did not receive notice of the Arbitration hearing. In my mind, that is fatal to a fair Arbitration hearing. The hearing dealt with common expenses and how they are to be shared by all strata owners in Edwards' Estates. I believe that the wording of Section 44(2) requires notice to be given to all those who may be affected by the issues under consideration at an Arbitration hearing. Notice was not given to a substantial number of owners who would be affected by the Arbitrator's ruling and therefore a fair hearing could not be held. I am therefore setting aside the Arbitrator's Ruling and directing that a new hearing be held after proper notice has been given to all strata owners.

[para8] In view of my finding with respect to the matter of notice, it is not necessary that I deal with the other grounds argued by the Petitioners. [para9] Counsel asked that I give direction as to the interpretation to be placed on Section 128 of the Condominium Act. Section 128(2)(a) and (b) apply to the question which was before the Arbitrator:

(2) Where a Strata Plan consists of more than one type of strata lot, the common expenses shall be apportioned in the following manner:

(a) common expenses attributable to one or more type of strata lot shall be allocated to that type of strata lot and shall be borne by the Owners of that type of strata lot in the proportion that the unit entitlement of that strata lot bears to the aggregate unit entitlement of all types of strata lots concerned;

(b) common expenses not attributable to a particular type of strata lot shall be allocated to all strata lots and shall be borne by the Owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their strata lots.

[para10] The Act does not define the word "type". In the sense that it is used in this section, "type" should be taken to denote the character or form of structure. Therefore, where as in the case of Edwards' Estates, units of a different character or form exist, the common expenses of the Strata Corporation should be levied as follows:

(a) common expenses attributable or related to a particular type of strata lot should be allocated to that type of strata lot and should be borne by the Owners of that type of strata lot;

(b) common expenses not attributable to a particular type of strata lot, that is to say, expenses which relate to all types of strata lots should be borne by the Owners of all strata lots in proportion to the unit entitlement of their strata lots.

[para11] The Petitioners are entitled to their costs on scale 3.

[1992] B.C.J. No. 502

Vancouver Registry No. C913115 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Spencer J. Heard: March 2 - 5, 1992 Judgment: March 10, 1992

Counsel for the Plaintiff: G.E.H. Codman, Q.C. and S. Frame. A. Ricci appearing in person.

SPENCER J.:-- On this Rule 18A application the plaintiff seeks specific performance, or alternatively damages for breach of an alleged contract by which the plaintiff should sell and the defendants buy a strata lot in a condominium complex at Robson and Jervis Streets in Vancouver. The lot in question is the eleventh floor penthouse in a twelve story mixed commercial and residential condominium. The purchase price was agreed at $800,000. The plaintiff seeks specific performance and not damages, contenting itself with the ability to pursue damages later under the rule in Johnson vs. Agnew [1979] 1 A.E.R. 883 (H.L.) if for any reason the defendants fail to perform. I heard a great deal of evidence and submissions, not all of which were relevant, over four days of hearing. Chiefly, the irrelevant material came from the defendants, represented by Mrs. Ricci herself. It is understandable that without legal training she does not always appreciate what is and what is not relevant. I am satisfied however that she was able to present her position most articulately.

Much of the defendants' complaint is directed not at the plaintiff vendor but at the solicitor who was representing their own interests in the transaction. Since there are third party proceedings against that gentleman that were not joined in the plaintiff's Rule 18A application, he had no opportunity to defend himself from Mrs. Ricci's criticisms. It would be wrong therefore to make any findings as between them and I expressly do not do so. I simply observe that where her complaint is against him, the result cannot be attributed to the plaintiff. That is so in spite of Mrs. Ricci's suspicion that she was, and is, confronted by a conspiracy between the plaintiff and its solicitors, and her own former solicitor. She has alleged that but she has not pleaded it. There was no evidence put before me on this hearing that would support such a finding in any way. I have considered the many points raised by Mrs. Ricci to oppose summary judgment for specific performance. Briefly her complaints levelled at the plaintiff fall under four heads, that the plaintiffs failed to deliver a luxury condominium as they contracted to do by reason of the standard of construction, that the plaintiffs deceived her by misrepresenting the nature of an amendment to the strata by-laws passed after she had entered the contract to buy the penthouse but before completion of the sale, that the plaintiffs have materially depreciated the nature and value of the condominium since the completion date by letting out commercial units to tenants for use as restaurants which are incompatible with the intended luxurious nature of the residential units in the condominium and that she was deceived by fraudulent misrepresentations about the surrounding commercial uses. Since I do not intend to grant an order for specific performance and because there are matters which in my opinion require a full trial, I shall not comment on all the arguments advanced by the parties. I shall deal only with those necessary to this judgment and those which were extensively argued before me and which can be separated as discrete issues to be answered pursuant to Rule 18A(5) which permits judgment to be given upon an individual issue within a case. 1. WAS THIS A LUXURY CONDOMINIUM?

Luxury is a subjective matter. While there are undoubtedly some standards that all Canadians would regard as luxurious and some which all would deem common, there is a wide ground between them which would attract different opinions depending upon the background of the observer. Here, there is evidence from Mr. Hart and Mr. de Grey, architects retained by the defendants, of serious shortcomings in the construction and appointments of this penthouse suite. Mr. Hart in particular gives the opinion that in some, but not all respects, it is not a luxury suite.

The plaintiff relies upon the contract terms that require it to repair any deficiencies listed by the purchasers and the extended repair warranty requiring it to repair deficiencies that occur within one year of completion. A deficiency list was furnished by the defendants' solicitor, although whether it was a final or only an interim list remains to be decided. In any event, I find it significant that the defendants did not, when Mrs. Ricci saw the unit for the first time, immediately reject it as not being within the description luxurious. That failure persuades me on the balance of probabilities that it was to all appearances within a reasonable range of acceptance as luxurious, subject to the correction of whatever deficiencies might be found on a careful inspection. It will be for the trial judge eventually to decide whether a relatively brief walk-through, accompanied only by her solicitor and not by anyone versed in building standards constituted such a deficiency inspection as was contemplated by a contract valued at $800,000. I am able to, and do decide that this suite met the descriptions of luxury that were incorporated into the contract by reference to the brochure handed to the defendant Deborah Ricci.

1.(a) WAS THE UNIT HABITABLE AT THE REQUIRED TIME OF COMPLETION?

This is a subsidiary part of question one. It arises because although an occupancy permit had been issued by the City of Vancouver when the defendants were called upon to complete, the defendants had subsequently removed a portion of the protective glass insert on the penthouse balcony and had installed a small construction hoist over the balcony to facilitate completion of other parts of the building. The defendants say that made the suite unsafe and uninhabitable. There is a photograph of the balcony with the hoist in place, Exhibit B to Mrs. Ricci's affidavit filed September 11th 1991. In my judgment the removal of the glass insert did not render the suite unsafe or uninhabitable. That is because the metal railing in which the glass was inserted remained in place. It did not present the risk of an occupier falling from the balcony. There is no evidence of the frequency with which the hoist was used on or after the completion date. That use may have interfered with the occupant's privacy and the occupant may have been able to prevent the use, but it did not make the suite uninhabitable.

Part of the defendants' argument on this branch of the case depended upon the suggestion that had the Vancouver City Permits and Licenses department known of the removal of the safety glass and the installation of the hoist it would have revoked the occupancy permit it had given on March 11th 1991. In my judgment that speculative suggestion is not relevant to these proceedings. The fact is that there was a permit and the premises were habitable. Whether or not the permit would have been withdrawn is a question that does not arise under the circumstances of the case.

2. DID THE PLAINTIFF DECEIVE THE DEFENDANTS BY MISREPRESENTING THE NATURE OF AN AMENDMENT TO THE STRATA BY-LAWS PRIOR TO COMPLETION?

This defence turns upon what was said in a letter dated 31 January 1991 by which the plaintiff's solicitor sent the executed transfer documents to the defendants' solicitor. By that letter the plaintiff told the defendants that it had amended the strata by-laws and asked the defendants to delay registration until the amendment was filed in the Land Title Office. Nothing turns on when that filing occurred but the solicitor's letter specifically represented the amendment as dealing only with the allocation of storage lockers. In fact it went much further. It introduced for the first time a right in the strata corporation, by its servants or agents to enter upon, pass and re-pass over and temporarily occupy each owner's separate property for the purpose of performing the corporation's functions. In effect it gave the corporation the right to have its staff walk into the defendants' suite, out on to the balcony and hang window washing and other maintenance equipment over the balcony to clean and maintain the whole building. That function appears to be performed exclusively from the defendants' suite for the whole building. When the defendants agreed to buy the suite there was no such right. I reject the argument that by-law 3.1(a) as it existed in the original disclosure statement already gave that right. It gave the right only to enter upon each owner's suite for the purpose of repairing whatever common property lay within the suite. That the plaintiff held the same view is evidenced by the passage of the amendment itself.

In my judgment the amendment made a material change to the nature of the rights to be purchased by the defendants. The suite was advertised by the brochure which was incorporated by reference into the sales contract, as "an array of luxury residences crafted with your privacy in mind". Even without that representation, to give a right of access through the suite is a material encroachment upon the owner's property right. It is in my judgment a material change to the contract. Although it theoretically applies to all the residential units in the condominium, in practice it has its greatest affect on suite 1101 because that is the level from which the maintenance is proposed to be done to the outside of the residential tower as a whole.

The question remains, whether the defendants accepted it through their solicitor who received the letter and a copy of the amendment. There is also a question whether he had authority, ostensible or otherwise, to accept the variation on the defendants' behalf and whether the defendants are estopped from denying it. It is possible that the solicitor read the amendment and was not misled by the limited reference to it in the plaintiff's solicitor's letter. That must be tested by evidence at trial. If he did not read the amendment, and if, as he was entitled at law to do, he relied upon what the plaintiff's solicitor wrote, that the amendment only affected the provision of storage lockers, then that would amount to a misrepresentation after the execution of the contract of a fact that would have entitled to defendants to refuse to complete. Only if he accepted it in such a way as to bind the defendants to accept the change, would they be compelled at law to complete. I do not think it avails the plaintiff to say that it could, as majority owner in the strata corporation, have introduced the change after the defendants completed the purchase in any event because such a step would be met by an application or arbitration under Section 42 of the Condominium Act.

3. HAS THE PLAINTIFF DONE ANYTHING SINCE THE PROPOSED COMPLETION DATE OF THE SALE TO DISENTITLE IT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE?

The defendants say that since the intended completion date the plaintiffs have de-valued the whole strata lot by leasing the commercial section to a number of restaurants, one of which is in the nature of a beer garden. They say the presence of the restaurants has detracted from what was to have been a luxurious ambience at the entrance to the suites and that various fans, vents and motors have been installed on the roof of the first floor to exhaust stale air and cooking odours. Most of the influence of that equipment is felt by lower floors but the defendants say noxious smells reach the eleventh floor penthouse balcony.

Whatever was said about the intended occupancy of the commercial section before the defendants agreed to buy the penthouse is excluded from consideration as a representation, warranty, condition or collateral contract by clause 5.2(d) of the contract unless it was said fraudulently. For the time being I deal only with the allegation of innocent misrepresentation. This part of the defendants' case depends upon whether, by leasing to these particular restaurants the plaintiff has de-valued the residential property. There is evidence from an appraiser, Mr. Eschner, that it has. He does not give any values but makes the general statement. The defendant complains particularly of an establishment called The Fogg and Suds. Without being in any way critical of that business for what it is, she says it has no place at the foot of a luxury residential tower.

I doubt whether the defendants could, as a matter of law, restrain the plaintiff from leasing to such a use. Bearing in mind the exclusionary clause in the contract, I do not think they can succeed in resisting the plaintiff's case for damages on that ground alone. But when it comes to a question of specific performance I think equity will hear the defendants and decline to compel specific performance of something that has become materially different from what was represented to them in fact. Equity may look beyond the exclusionary clause and decide for itself whether it will lend its aid to the plaintiff on the basis of all the facts.

4. WERE THE DEFENDANTS DECEIVED BY FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION ABOUT THE SURROUNDING COMMERCIAL USES?

I return now to the question of fraudulent misrepresentation. The defendants allege it in relation to statements said to have been made by the sales agent, Lund, about what the plaintiff planned by way of commercial tenants in the ground and second floor commercial section. They say they were assured the plaintiff would install only two restaurants of high class and that there would be high class boutiques. They say that the seven restaurants now operating there are out of keeping with the concept of a luxury condominium and they were deliberately misled by the plaintiff's agent when the plaintiff already had plans for the seven restaurants. Much of the impact of this allegation, if true, affects suite 301 which the defendants also bought but there is no claim for rescission of that contract. I note the counterclaims for damages do not incorporate the allegations in paragraphs 27 to 61 of the defences and so, as presently pleaded, no loss is claimed for the effect alleged on suite 301. That appears to be an oversight by the pleader.

I cannot resolve the issue of fraud on this application. It will require evidence of when the plaintiff first planned the seven restaurants and there associated fans, vents and motors to exhaust the stale air and cooking fumes and what was its state of knowledge at the time the representations, if any, were made to Deborah Ricci. The exclusionary clause 5.2(d) will not avail the plaintiffs if fraud is proved. That matter must go to trial.

THE GRANT OF SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE:

Specific performance as a contract remedy lies in the discretion of the court, to be exercised on sound equitable principles. Those principles do not apply equally to a vendor as to a purchaser. From a purchaser's point of view a parcel of real property may have a unique characteristic that cannot be replaced by any other. From a vendor's point of view that is not so. Nevertheless specific performance is often granted to vendors.

In the case at bar three factors militate against an order for specific performance at this stage. The first is that absent the evidence of whether the defendants' solicitor knowingly accepted the change of by-laws without objection and what authority he had from the defendants, it appears they were misled on a material change of the terms under which they were to own suite 1101. The second is that the plaintiff has leased the surrounding commercial premises in a way that was not revealed to the defendants at the time of negotiations and which may have materially altered the character and therefore the value of suite 1101. In view of that it is inequitable to compel the defendants to complete the purchase by a summary judgment. The third ground is that there is an outstanding allegation of fraudulent concealment of the plaintiff's intent to lease part of the commercial space to restaurant uses incompatible with a luxury condominium. In my view the first ground may, depending upon the evidence of their solicitor at trial, go so far as to give them a ground for refusing to complete the purchase at all. So would the third ground. Those decisions should be left to whoever hears the trial eventually.

There were other issues extensively argued before me that can be disposed of as discrete issues under Rule 18A(5) whose disposition now will save the parties time and expense at trial. They are as follows.

5. WAS THERE A MATERIAL MISREPRESENTATION OF THE FLOOR AREA OF THE PENTHOUSE SUCH AS WILL EXCUSE THE DEFENDANTS FROM PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT?

In my judgment there was not. The defendants rely upon what was said by the plaintiff's sales agent, Ms. Lund, that the interior area of the penthouse would be 2588 square feet. That representation is excluded by clause 5.2(d) of the contract. Moreover, the plaintiffs are protected by the statements in the brochure that all interior measurements are approximate, that they may vary on final survey and that no guarantee or responsibility was accepted for any of the information in the brochure. Further, clause 5.2(c) of the contract specifies that all measurements are approximate. The defendants' surveyor says the unit is less than the intended size by some 200 square feet. It may be argued that the word approximate does not cover a discrepancy of 7.7%. In my judgment that is completely answered by the evidence that the defendant Deborah Ricci, for herself and as agent for her mother A. Ricci, viewed the strata lot before entering the contract to buy it. Although at that stage of construction it was impossible to judge by untrained eye how the unit would finish out, she, and through her Mrs. Ricci were aware of the specific thing they were contracting to buy. This is not a case where there was any misrepresentation through concealment.

6. WAS THE PLAINTIFF READY, WILLING AND ABLE TO PERFORM ITS SIDE OF THE CONTRACT ON THE DUE DATE FOR PERFORMANCE? In my judgment it was. There is some factual dispute about who asked for the extension of the time to complete from March 26th 1991 to April 5th. The letters exchanged between the solicitors for both sides show a common agreement to the extended date no matter who asked for it first. I am satisfied on all the evidence that the plaintiff was ready willing and able to transfer title to the strata lot. The correspondence between solicitors shows that the plaintiff had caused an executed transfer of title to be delivered and had removed the mortgage and those builders liens that had encumbered the title. With respect to a statutory declaration that there were no builders liens upon the title, the defendants by their solicitor's letter of 19th March 1991 permitted the plaintiff to undertake in writing to discharge liens after completion of the sale and to provide copies of the discharges in due course. Whether the defendants gave those specific instructions to their solicitor is beside the point. They fall within the limits of ostensible authority which the plaintiffs might expect of a solicitor and they excuse the plaintiff from removal of liens. In fact, the only lien referred to in Schedule C to the contract was removed by 5th April as appears from the plaintiff's solicitor's letter of that date. I find the plaintiff was ready, willing and able to perform its side of the contract on the extended date for completion.

7. WAS THE CONTRACT AS A WHOLE VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY?

This argument turns upon the absence of detail from the contract documents. They are surprisingly sparse in any specifications of what was to be built, particularly with respect to finishing materials. The description referenced by the contract is set out in the brochure and the preliminary strata plans attached as Schedule A to the disclosure statement. Subject to them, what the plaintiff undertook to build and deliver was a luxury condominium. For the reasons set out under heading 1. above I have already decided that, subject to the correct deficiency list to be decided at trial, the plaintiff did construct what falls within the broad description of a luxury condominium. It is within the strata lot described by the contract and at the agreed price. The court should not be astute to avoid a contract that contains within it the main completion, or sets out a mechanism for establishing them, see G.S.B. Developments Ltd. vs. Chiulli [1979] 15 B.C.L.R. 381 (B.C.S.C.) affirmed [1981] 28 B.C.L.R. 157 (C.A.). All those details are present here.

THE DEFENDANTS' CLAIM FOR AN INJUNCTION:

The defendants claim for an interim injunction to restrain the plaintiff from installing more vents, motors and fans on the roof of the commercial section of the property. They also claim a mandatory injunction to compel removal of those that have already been installed. They are the systems by which stale air is exhausted from the restaurants that have been installed in strata lots owned by the plaintiff on the first and second floors of the commercial section of the strata development. The defendants say they were not told there would be seven restaurants in the premises or that they would exhaust their stale air, including cooking odours, into the air adjacent to suite 301 which they have also purchased. They say the smells and noise from the fans have made the feature patio of suite 301 unusable and diminished its value. They say that has happened to a lesser but still significant extent to the penthouse suite 1101. Mrs. Ricci said further installations are planned and she wants them prevented until the action can be tried. At the trial she will seek a permanent injunction to restrain further installations and a mandatory injunction to have the existing ones removed.

Mr. Cadman objected that the wrong defendant is sued in this respect. He argued that it is the strata corporation itself that has and will install the vents motors and fans on what is common property. It seems to me that is probably unlikely. If the defendant is the owner of the leased restaurant space and the remaining space that may be leased to restaurant use, it seems probable that the plaintiff is the entity that is involved in the past and future installation of the systems that will make restaurant use possible. I do not pursue this enquiry further at this time however because whatever the merits of the situation are, the defendant told me clearly that she declines to give the usual undertaking in support of an interlocutory injunction that she will pay whatever damages may be assessed in the event it should be shown at trial that it should not have been granted. It is true the court may dispense with an undertaking under Rule 45(6) but I can see no reason why that should be the case here. In the absence of an undertaking I dismiss the defendants' cross motion for an interlocutory injunction. That will not resolve the question of whether a permanent injunction will be granted at trial.

COSTS:

The plaintiff is entitled to the costs of the defendants' cross motion in any event of the cause because the defendants were not prepared to give the necessary undertakings in support of their own motion. The costs of the plaintiff's motion for judgment which has failed would ordinarily go to the defendant. Although they were represented by the defendant A. Ricci in person, they would be entitled to their disbursements and to costs under the tariff to the extent that they incurred them by engaging solicitor's assistance in advising them in British Columbia on the preparation of their defence to the motion. However, Mr. Cadman expressly asked to reserve argument on costs until the outcome of his motion was known and I stopped Mrs. Ricci from argument on costs on the same basis. Accordingly, to the extent the parties are not prepared to accept this indication of how costs should be awarded, they have leave to set the matter down on some convenient date for hearing on the issue of costs.

I summarize these reasons for judgment for the assistance of the parties because some issues are decided and some are left outstanding.

1. I find there should be no order for specific performance without a full trial. 2. I find the defendants' claim for an interim injunction cannot be granted but may perhaps be granted after trial. 3. I find suite 1101 met the description of a luxury condominium with reference to its construction and finishing. 4. I find suite 1101 was habitable on April 5, 1991, the extended completion date. 5. I find the amendment to the by-law materially changed the nature of the rights attached to suite 1101. 6. I find the floor area of suite 1101 was not materially misrepresented. 7. I find the plaintiff was ready, willing and able to complete the sale on April 5, 1991. 8. I find the contract as a whole was not void for uncertainty.

The following issues are left to be resolved at trial.

1. Did Mr. Priebe have actual or implied authority to and did he bind the defendants by accepting the by-law amendment? 2. Have the seven restaurant leases materially changed the nature of suite 1101 as a luxury condominium? 3. Was there a fraudulent material representation about the intended surrounding commercial tenancies that induced the defendants to agree to buy suite 1101? 4. Was the deficiency list sent by Mr. Priebe to the plaintiff's solicitor but without Mrs. Ricci's signature, the final binding deficiency list for the purposes of this contract? If not, what other deficiencies then remained to be made good by the plaintiff at its cost?

There may be other outstanding issues which the parties may wish to raise at the trial but they may not, of course, include those issues which I have finally determined by this summary judgment.

Before leaving this case, and because the defendants represent themselves, I point out to them that these reasons give final judgment on some, but not all of the issues in this action. They should carefully consider them and probably take legal advice about where the case now stands both from the point of view of what matters will remain relevant at the eventual trial, and what their appeal options may be both now and after the eventual trial.

Supplementary Reasons for Judgment

Released: April 1, 1992

SPENCER J.:-- Since filing my reasons for judgment herein on March 10, 1991 I have received a further submission from counsel for the plaintiff with respect to the meaning and effect of clause 3 of the amended by-laws of the strata corporation as enacted January 30, 1991 and referred at p. 6 of my reasons for judgment.

I am not persuaded that I misunderstood the effect of the amendment to the by-law. At the least it introduced a compulsory right of access to the defendants' exclusive use areas which did not exist before. At worst it carries an implied grant of an easement over the defendants' strata lot for the purpose of exercising the right given by the amendment to the by-law, see for example the cases cited in Anger and Honsberger (1959) Canadian Law Real property at 988.

Counsel may speak to the matter of costs if they wish, by arrangements to be made through the registry.

Corrigendum

Released July 8, 1992

My attention has been drawn to a typographical error which appears at p.9 line 7 of my reasons for judgment filed herein on March 10, 1992. The reference to "the plaintiff complains" should be amended to read "the defendant complains".

Condominium Plan No. 8711306 v. Yamashita

Between The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 8711306, plaintiff, and Gregory Keith Yamashita, defendant

[1999] A.J. No. 407 Docket: 9802600540 Alberta Provincial Court Civil Division Lethbridge, Alberta LeGrandeur Prov. Ct. J. April 12, 1999.

Counsel: W. Lowry, for the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT

LeGRANDEUR PROV. CT. J.:-- Nature of Proceedings

[para1] In this case the Plaintiff Condominium Corporation claims judgment in the sum of $3,315.85, plus interest and costs from the Defendant. The Plaintiff's claim is founded upon the provisions of The Condominium Property Act, RSA 1980, Chap.C-23 and Appendix 1 thereof which sets out the statutory bylaws of such corporation. The sum claimed is made up of claims for unpaid contributions levied by the corporation against the Defendant, interest thereon, legal fees and penalties, all of which the Plaintiff corporation argues are provided for by the aforementioned legislation and bylaws.

[para2] For the most part it would appear that the Plaintiff corporation's claim is made up of various liquidated demands. That is, it is made up of definite sums of money which are recoverable by an express or implied agreement. In this case the bylaws represent a form of statutory contract amongst the condominium owners which is enforceable against each one thereof. The pleadings themselves do not specify the amounts claimed under each heading of demand and accordingly the claim provides little assistance to the Court as to the quantum demanded under each item as claimed. It would have been preferable, both with regard to the notice of claim given the Defendant and for the Court's benefit, that the claim itself itemize the quantum of the various demands made that in total make up the claim for $3,313.85.

[para3] It is my view that the portion of the Plaintiff's claim that relates to penalties and legal costs are not liquidated demands in this case, but rather must be assessed in the context of the proven circumstances.

Claims for Sums Levied and Interest Thereon

[para4] Exhibit "1" filed in these proceedings represents a statement of the outstanding levies of the corporation against the Defendant and the interest that has been charged by the corporation thereon. The levy of $90.00 per month is authorized by the statute and bylaws which bind the Defendant owner. (See s.25(5) of the Condominium Properties Act, supra) Section 3(c) of the bylaws of the corporation give the Plaintiff the power to charge interest on any contribution owing to it by an owner. Clearly the $90.00 per month is a contribution contemplated by s.31(1) of the Act. [para5] There is no evidence of any corporate resolution authorizing the charging of interest on unpaid contributions. Neither is there any evidence as to what the amount of interest being charged by the corporation is. The practice of the corporation appears to have been to charge interest with or without the passing of an internal resolution. Given the fact that the corporation does have the power to charge interest, and given the fact that the claim for interest is clearly a claim in the nature of a liquidated demand and given the fact that no dispute is raised as to the right to claim interest or the rate being charged, the Plaintiff corporation is entitled, in my view, to receive judgment for the unpaid monthly levies, plus interest thereon as set out in Exhibit "1". This amount however shall not include the sum of $591.40 described in Exhibit "1" as legal fees. This sum is not a levy or contribution that attracts interest in my view. The question of whether the $591.40 in legal fees is payable by the Defendant will be discussed later herein. The fact that the $591.40 is not part of the outstanding sum which attracts interest means that the interest calculation set out in Exhibit "1" is incorrect for the months of April, May and June, 1998. Without the specific interest figure being calculated and provided to me, I intend on adjusting the interest for those three months by rounding it off at $20.00 per month for each of the said months and I specify that interest for the eight days of interest calculable in July of 1998 will be the sum of $6.00.

Date to Which Plaintiff is Entitled to Judgment

[para6] The Plaintiff's claim was filed on the 8th of July, 1998 and accordingly the Plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the outstanding monthly levies and contributions and interest thereon up to that date. The Pleadings are not framed in such a way that judgment for future accruing indebtedness can be given, nor is there any form of acceleration clause available to the Plaintiff to make the Defendant liable in these proceedings for any indebtedness accruing due after the date of filing of the claim. The Plaintiff corporation will have to bring further suit for any indebtedness of this nature accruing after July 8th, 1998.

[para7] The Plaintiff corporation shall accordingly have judgment for condominium fees and interest thereon as per Exhibit "1" subject to the adjustments mentioned hereinbefore. I calculate the sum outstanding in this regard as follows:

- (a) Outstanding fees as at March 31st, 1998 $ 1,469.67
 - (b) Condominium fees for April, May, June and July, 1998 (4 x $90.00) $ 360.00
 - (c) Interest for the months of April, May and June (3 x $20.00) $ 60.00
 - (d) Interest for 8 days of July $ 6.00 ----- TOTAL: $ 1,595.67
- LESS: Payment by Defendant $ 1,200.00 ----- TOTAL AMOUNT DUE as of July 8th, 1998: $ 395.67

Legal Fees on Filing of Caveat

[para8] The Plaintiff's claim in this regard is $791.40. This sum is made up of the $591.40 referred to in Exhibit "1" legal fees may be found in the statement of account of Andreachuk, Harvie MacLennan Law Offices dated the 19th day of March, 1998, which account makes up part of Exhibit "1" filed herein. This account appears to relate to a number of the Plaintiff's claims against the Defendant, not just the preparation and filing of a Caveat pursuant to s.31 of the Act. The Plaintiff seeks payment of its legal costs incurred with respect to the preparation and filing of the Caveat. In claiming the same, the Plaintiff relies upon s.34 of the Act which states:

"If a corporation registers a Caveat against the title to a unit under s.31, it may recover from the owner of the unit the cost incurred in preparing and registering the Caveat and in discharging the Caveat."

[para9] Section 34 refers only to the costs incurred in preparing and registering the Caveat and in discharging the Caveat. It says nothing about the cost of legal advice or s.34 does not authorize payment of solicitor and client costs. It is not precise enough for the Court to conclude that to be 4 legal expenses incurred in filing the Caveat. On its face, its intended meaning. (See Canada Deposit Insurance Co. v. Canadian Commercial Bank, (1989) 95 A.R. 1, Alta.Q.B.) Nonetheless, the Plaintiff has proven that it has incurred a loss related to the action or inaction of the Defendant given the obligation of the Defendant to pay levies and interest. Given the right of the Plaintiff to take steps to protect its interests by way of Caveat. I am prepared to award as damages some of the legal expenses incurred with respect to the Caveat. (See: re Hancock, ex p. and Spraggett, (1953) 1 DLR 137, Ontario High Court) As I have indicated previously herein, the amount claimed in the account includes other things than the preparation and filing of a Caveat. The specific time and effort in that regard is not broken down in the account. That leaves the Court in the position of having to do its own assessment, given the account and the nature of that which was done. In that regard, I assess the Plaintiff corporation's damages relative to expenses incurred with respect to the Caveat in the sum of $241.82, calculated as follows:

(a) Legal fees $ 200.00 (b) GST on legal fees $ 14.00

(c) Disbursements $ 26.00 (d) GST on Disbursements $ 1.82 ----- TOTAL: $ 241.82

Claim for Penalties Pursuant to s.29 for Breach of Bylaw 37(2)(i)

[para10] The Plaintiff corporation claims a penalty in the amount of $200.00 in respect of each of two alleged contraventions of Bylaw 37(2)(i). Section 29 of the Act authorizes such an action and I am satisfied that a proper bylaw, specifically 37(2)(i) was lawfully in effect at all relevant times to these proceedings. The bylaw provides:

37(2) An owner shall not

(i) hang or place on the real property of the corporation or the common property, or within or on a unit anything that is, in the opinion of the Board, aesthetically unpleasing when viewed from outside the units;

[para11] The Plaintiff corporation, through Mr. Yanke's testimony, has proven that the Defendant fixed a satellite dish to a fence on condominium property and that he hung an airconditioning unit from a back window of his unit such that it faced into the common property of the condominium complex. These were so affixed or hung without the permission of the Board and ultimately the Board apparently took the position, after complaints were filed, that these items were aesthetically unpleasing when viewed from outside the condominium units. These items were ultimately removed by the Defendant, although it would appear it took some time for the removal to occur. The items had been removed by the time that this action commenced in July of 1998.

[para12] The evidence does not satisfy me that the Defendant has breached the bylaw in question. There is no requirement that the owner obtain the permission of the Board before placing or hanging anything. An issue only develops once the Board determines that the item placed or hung is aesthetically unpleasing. Given the wording of the section (29) and the wording of the bylaw (37(2)(i)) I conclude that the Defendant cannot be in breach of the said bylaw unless he refuses to remove the property once told by the Board to do so. In my view, it is an absurdity to interpret the section in question such that an owner could be in breach of a bylaw before the Board subjectively determines that the ingredients of a breach, that is "aesthetically unpleasing" are present. A breach can only occur once the Board determines the items are aesthetically unpleasing and gives notice thereof, in which case the owner must be given a reasonable time to remove the item or items. The only way, in the circumstances, that it could be a breach otherwise, would be if the bylaw provided that nothing may be hung without the prior permission of the Board.

[para13] With respect to the issue of removal, although there is some evidence that the removal was delayed, it is not satisfactory evidence upon which I could conclude that a breach in that regard has occurred.

[para14] In any event, had I concluded a breach or breaches had occurred with respect to Bylaw 37(2)(i), I would have issued at most, only a nominal penalty.

Penalty Claim for Failure to Pay Levy (Monthly Contributions)

[para15] The Plaintiff also seeks imposition of a penalty pursuant to s.29 for the failure of the Defendant to pay the mandated monthly levy as described and dealt with hereinbefore. (Paragraphs 4 and 5, supra). Again, the assertion is that the Defendant has contravened a bylaw by not making the monthly payments as required. Section 2(b)(ii) of the Bylaws of the Plaintiff corporation provide:

2(b) An owner shall forthwith

(ii) pay all rates, taxes, charges and assessments that may be payable in respect of his unit.

[para16] The levy that the Plaintiff corporation seeks payment of is made pursuant to s.31(1) of the Act and s.31(2) authorizes the Plaintiff corporation, on the passing of a resolution, to commence an action in debt for payment of the said contributions.

[para17] At the hearing of this matter the Plaintiff presented no evidence of any resolution requiring payment of the monthly levy in the amount claimed. In any event of that finding I gave judgment to the Plaintiff for the amount claimed as contribution arrears because such a claim was in the nature of a liquidated demand and in the absence of any denial or defence to the claim, the Plaintiff is entitled to judgment therefore.

[para18] However, the same approach is not applicable in my view to a claim for a penalty pursuant to s.29 of the Act for failing to pay the levy. The Plaintiff is seeking penal consequences for the breach of the bylaw and accordingly the Court must be satisfied that the Defendant was obligated to do that which the Plaintiff is asking the Court to penalize him for not doing. In such circumstances the Plaintiff must prove that in fact the Plaintiff condominium corporation had passed a resolution requiring payment of the levy. At the hearing of the matter, the Plaintiff did not provide such proof, however, upon reviewing the tape of the proceedings, I concluded that some comments that I made on this issue during the course of the proceeding, may have misled counsel for the Plaintiff into believing that he need not present such evidence. Given that fact I have given the Plaintiff, through counsel, the opportunity to provide the Court with proof of such a resolution and he has done so. The Clerk is instructed to mark the same as the next exhibit in the proceedings. [para19] Given that evidence and the evidence presented at hearing, I am satisfied that the bylaw with respect to payment of the contribution lawfully required of the Defendant pursuant to the bylaws of the condominium corporation has been contravened by the Defendant. Given all the circumstances, the Plaintiff shall have judgment in this regard, pursuant to s.29(3) of the Act for the sum of $100.00.

Costs re s.29 proceedings

[para20] Section 29(3) provides that the Court may make such award as to costs as appears proper in the circumstances with respect to proceedings initiated pursuant to s.29. In this case, the Plaintiff corporation has sued for three penalties and been successful in only one of their claims. Given all of the circumstances, including the fact that the Plaintiff was unsuccessful on two claims and successful only on one, I conclude that no costs will be awarded with respect to this portion of the proceedings.

Solicitor/Client Costs

[para21] The Plaintiff seeks to have the legal costs incurred by it with respect to the bringing of these proceedings paid for by the Defendant. The Plaintiff advances a claim in that regard of $1,080.00 as set out in the Statement of Account dated December 21st, 1998 which was filed by Plaintiff's counsel at the direction of the Court. The Plaintiff seeks judgment for this sum as a debt owing by the Defendant to the Plaintiff and relies upon the provisions of s.31(1)(d) of the Act as authority for its claim. Section 31(1)(d) states:

31(1) In addition to its other powers under this Act, the powers of a corporation include the following:

(d) to recover from an owner by an action in debt, any sum of money spent by the corporation

(i) pursuant to a bylaw, or

(ii) as required by a local authority or other public authority, in respect of the authority, in respect of the unit or common property that is leased to that owner under s.41.

[para22] It is my view that in any event of the applicability of this section, it cannot found the basis for judgment for any of the costs that I have hereinbefore already dealt with. Any costs associated with the Caveat cannot be advanced once again under this provision, given my determination with respect to that issue. Those costs are specifically spoken to by the Act and I have already awarded legal fees in that regard. Likewise, with respect to the costs associated with advancing claims under s.29 of the Act. That section specifically deals with the issue of costs in s.29 proceedings and s.31(1)(d) cannot be seen as over-riding that provision, or even supplementing the power to award costs. Given that no costs were awarded under s.29, no costs can now be awarded under the guise of s.31(1)(d). That leaves the issue of the costs relative to the commencement of the proceedings and the conduct of the proceedings with respect to the unpaid levy or contributions and the interest claims thereon which I have already dealt with and granted judgment upon. It is my view that s.31(1)(d) was never intended as a basis for awarding a judgment in debt for legal costs incurred in collecting unpaid contributions or levies. Such is not a sum of money spent pursuant to a bylaw in respect of a specific unit or common property. Subsection 2 of s.31 authorizes the commencement of an action by the corporation for unpaid contributions as contemplated in s.31(1). That is the action commenced by the Plaintiff in these proceedings. There is no suggestion in the authorizing section (31(2)), that the costs of such an action become a debt owing the Plaintiff by the debtor/owner. The Act elsewhere, specifically s.29 speaks to the issue of the costs in proceedings under that specific process. I would expect that the Act would speak specifically to the costs of advancing a claim in debt pursuant to s.31(2), if in fact it intended that legal costs be paid other than costs which the Court might in its discretion, award. If legal costs are to be collectible, authorizing the same or a clause in an agreement authorizing the same, needs to be specific and clear. That is not the case with respect to s.31(1)(d) and I cannot conclude by looking at the Act overall and the section in particular that it was ever intended to cover the legal costs of collecting unpaid contributions. Such costs are not money expended pursuant to a bylaw in respect of a condominium unit or common property of a condominium corporation, but rather they are costs incurred in collecting a debt. The Plaintiff's claim in this regard is dismissed.

Costs

[para23] In any event of my determination of the issue of solicitor/client costs with respect to the commencing and prosecuting the within proceedings for collection of unpaid levies, the Plaintiff has been successful in that regard and is entitled to some costs. Having regard to the nature of claim, the difficulty of its prosecution, which is minimal, the amount awarded in judgment and the amount of legal fees claimed and disbursements incurred as set out in the Statement of Costs dated December 21st, 1998, I award costs to the Plaintiff in the amount of $400.00, inclusive of disbursements.

Summary of Judgment

[para24] The Plaintiff shall have judgment as follows: 1. Judgment for arrears in contributions and interest thereon to July 8, 1998 $ 395.67

2. Judgment for costs incurred on filing of a Caveat $ 241.82

3. Judgment for breach of requirement to pay contributions $ 100.00

4. Costs with respect to collection of unpaid contributions and interest thereon $ 400.00 TOTAL JUDGMENT: $1,137.49

Counsel: S. Parker, and Stuffco Olsen, for the owners. B.A. Murray, Murray Chilibeck and Horne, for the respondents.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] MASTER QUINN:-- This matter comes before me on the petition of the Board of Managers of The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 932 2887 who seek an order pursuant to By-laws No. 47 and No. 77 of the Condominium Corporation directing the removal of unauthorized structures on common property created by the owners of certain condominium units.

[2] The said By-laws are as follows:

STRUCTURAL ALTERATIONS An Owner shall ensure that:

(a) no alterations, additions, decoration, redecoration, changes or installations be made on or adjoining the outside of any Unit by any Owner without the prior consent in writing of the Board;

(b) no structural alteration be made to the outer boundary of any Unit including walls (whether partition walls, party walls, bearing walls, or otherwise), ceiling and floor or to any bearing walls or structures within the Unit or to any exterior door or window, without the prior written consent of the Board;

(c) no changes be made in the plumbing, drainage, electrical or gas system within or outside any Unit without the prior written consent of the Board; (d) any changes to a Unit comply with all Municipal, Provincial and Federal laws.

Failure to comply with this By-law will result in the responsible Owner being liable for all costs incurred by the Corporation including indemnification of its legal costs, for restoring any alterations or changes made by the Owner.

[3] Affidavits opposing the petition have been filed by three condominium owners.

[4] The affidavit of Connie Madill, a member of the Condominium Board indicates that in some cases certain fences extend beyond where they should terminate; in some cases fencing has been put up where no fencing is permitted; in some cases vegetation has been improperly planted on common property; in one instance a safety gate has been placed on a patio deck without the approval of the Board.

[5] Certain other breaches were remedied when the Board brought the matter to the attention of those owners. [6] None of the objecting owners attack the legal validity of the By-laws. Rather they complain the Board is unreasonable in the way it interprets the By-laws and that the By-laws are unfair. They also complain that the Board applies the By-laws unevenly by allowing some owners to do certain things but refusing similar indulgence to other owners.

[7] Section 26(1) of Condominium Property Act, ch. C-22 R.S.A. 1980 provides that the By-laws of a condominium Corporation shall regulate the corporation and provide for the control management and administration of the units, the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property.

[8] Section 26(2) provides that any By-law may be amended, repealed or replaced by a special resolution.

[9] Section 30(1) provides that a corporation is responsible for the enforcement of its By-laws and the control, management and administration of its real and personal property and the common property.

[10] Section 60 of the said Act provides that an application to this court shall be made by way of petition, but I can find nothing in the Act indicating that this court should become involved in adjudicating on the reasonableness or otherwise of the By-laws of a condominium, nor in questions of how the Board enforces the By-laws.

[11] Section 29(1) of the said Act provides for the possibility of a condominium corporation taking proceedings against an owner under Part 4 of the Provincial Court Act for a penalty of not more than $200.00 for a contravention of a By-law. Section 29(3) provides that a provincial judge may give a judgment in an amount being sued for or any lesser amount. That would appear to cover a situation where a condominium corporation has had to expend funds to remedy a breach of a By-law.

[12] I am not prepared to make an order which involves a decision as to the reasonableness of any of the By-law or the interpretation of the By-laws or the fairness with which the By-laws have been applied.

[13] If a sufficient number of the unit owners are unsatisfied with the By-laws in their present form, they should pass a special resolution to change them. If they are unsatisfied with the manner in which the present Board of managers is interpreting the By-laws, they should elect a different Board.

[14] I hereby make a declaration that the By-laws as presently existing are valid and that the Board may make reasonable efforts to enforce them. As the work required to rectify existing situations is outside work, owners should be given until May 15, 1995 to do the necessary rectification work themselves.

[15] Paragraph 3 (a) of the said petition is a request for an order directing the removal of a gate on the patio deck of unit 20 because it is an unauthorized structure.

[16] Affidavits of Otilie Redweik, one of the owners of unit 20, are filed in opposition to the petition. In her affidavit Mrs. Redweik deposes that the gate was installed for safety reasons, and that she had been advised the gate would likely be approved if it was removable and not a permanent fixture. She says it can be removed simply by lifting it out of its hinges.

[17] There is no affidavit from the petitioner addressing the question of whether or not the gate is a permanent fixture. Counsel for the petitioner submits the gate is a permanent fixture because the frame upon which it stands is firmly affixed to the patio deck. What counsel submits is not evidence. The only evidence before me is that the gate is not a permanent fixture.

[18] I would therefore find as a matter of fact that the gate is not a permanent fixture, and that no order should be made requiring its removal.

[19] I would like to make it very clear that this decision applies only to the gate on unit 20, and that this decision is not to be treated as a precedent by any other unit owners.

[20] All parties shall bear their own costs.

CBR# 199

James Lem Moore, Plaintiff, and The Owners: Condominium Corporation Plan 7910571 also known as Renfrew House, Defendant

[1994] A.J. No. 610

Docket No. P9390107223 Alberta Provincial Court Civil Division - Calgary, Alberta Scott Prov. Ct. J. Heard: July 18, 1994. Judgment: filed July 26, 1994.

Plaintiff appeared in person. K.W. Sparks, for the Defendant.

[para1] SCOTT PROV. CT. J.:-- The plaintiff brings this action against the defendant Condominium Corporation Plan 7910571 ("Renfrew House") located in the City of Calgary for damages in the sum of $1,578.71 sustained by him resulting from, among other things, the eviction of the tenant of Unit No. 18, Suite 301 in Renfrew House (hereafter refer to as "Unit 301"), owned by the plaintiff.

[para2] In addition, the plaintiff claims reimbursement from the defendant in the sum of $427.95 paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under protest on or about November 15, 1993.

[para3] The plaintiff had, jointly with one Sean Park, purchased Unit 301 as at August 31, 1990 and had rented same to a tenant for some 15 months without incident. That unit was vacated in the latter part of 1991. The plaintiff had arranged to purchase Mr. Park's interest in the unit with title issuing in the plaintiff's name, on or about February 5, 1993. The plaintiff, in January 1993, through his agent Angela Johnson, re-let the premises pursuant to a written lease to one Debbie Hannah for a period of one year from January 31, 1992 through to January 31, 1993 for $550.00 per month. The evidence indicates that Ms. Hannah had a young infant and may or may not have been cohabiting in the unit with one Oliver Lee Harris.

[para4] On March 11, 1992, a letter was directed to Sean Park, who was still presumed to be a co-owner of Unit 301, by Harlen Management Ltd., the then managers of Renfrew House, indicating concerns had been received as to the "character" of the tenants of Unit 301 and that a baby was residing in an "adult" building. No mention is made of any other complaints regarding the then tenants and, in fact, paragraph 62(a)(v) of the Bylaws of the Corporation recognizes that a unit may be occupied by up to five persons whether adult or minor.

[para5] On March 19, 1992, a neighbour to Unit 301 made a complaint to the then president of the Condominium Corporation, Carol Boswell, of loud noise emanating from that unit as the result of what appeared to be a domestic dispute. As a result of further noise on March 20, the City Police Service was summoned and attended at the premises taking into custody Oliver Lee Harris allegedly on an outstanding warrant. Although there was no further disturbances up to and including March 26, 1992, the defendant corporation issued to the tenant and to the plaintiff an eviction notice requiring the tenant to vacate the unit on or about April 30, 1992 on the grounds that the tenant and the owner were in breach of paragraph 62(a)(ii) of the Corporation Bylaws, filed in these proceedings, which provide as follows:

[para6] "62. (a) An owner shall not:

(ii) make or permit noise in or about any unit or the common property which in the opinion of the Board is a nuisance or unreasonably interferes with the use and enjoyment of a unit or the common property by any other owner or occupant..."

If in breach of this section, the owner would also be in breach of paragraph 3(f) of the Bylaws which is not referred to in the eviction notice.

[para7] As a result of the eviction notice, the tenant vacated the premises on or about April 8, 1992.

[para8] The plaintiff then retained the services of Harlen Management Ltd., who had ceased to be the managers of Renfrew House at the end of March 1992, to lease the premises which that company did effective June 10, 1992 for the sum of $270.00 for the balance of the month of June and $540.00 per month thereafter.

[para10] The Bylaws governing the operation of Renfrew House at the times in question, in respect to leasing of units, provides in paragraph 51(a):

"51(a) In the event that any owner desires to lease or rent his unit, he shall furnish to the Corporation an undertaking, in the form satisfactory to the Corporation, signed by the proposed lessee or occupant, that the proposed lessee or occupant of the unit will comply with the provisions of the Act and of the by-laws of the Corporation . . ."

[para11] The plaintiff does not appear to have provided such an undertaking either with regard to the original tenant of the unit or from Ms. Hannah, but no objection was made by the Condominium Corporation to the plaintiff's failure to do so. Further, this failure was not raised at the time as a reason for eviction. In any event, s. 44(2) of the Condominium Proprietorship Act, R.S.A. 1980, Ch. C-22 ("Act") makes it clear that it is a condition of any tenancy that the tenants, among other things, shall not contravene the bylaws. Accordingly, in my view, nothing turns on the failure of the plaintiff to provide such tenants undertaking.

[para12] As to the termination of the Hannah tenancy by the defendant, s. 45 of the Act gives a Condominium Corporation the authority to issue eviction notices to tenants for contravention of any bylaws. Although the Bylaws for Renfrew House authorize the Board thereof to carry out the day-to-day operations of the Corporation, no Board resolution was filed authorizing the eviction notice, but the plaintiff did not challenge the notice on that ground and, accordingly, I will not deal with that issue.

[para14] Private nuisance, in law, has been defined in Salmond on the Law of Torts, 16th ed. (1973) at p. 51 as follows:

"Private nuisances, at least in the vast majority of cases, are interferences for a substantial length of time by owners or occupiers of property with the use or enjoyment of the neighbouring property. Cunard v. Antifyre [1933] 1 K.B. 551 at 557."

[para15] Although this is not an action grounded in nuisance, I see no reason why the above definition cannot be applied in determining what constitutes a nuisance justifying the Board of the Condominium Corporation in claiming that a nuisance existed in the present situation. That is not to say that a single act cannot constitute a nuisance but in such event the single act must be a continuing one.

[para16] In the present instance, the allegation of nuisance results from loud shouting and arguments apparently resulting from a domestic dispute. No other reason was given for the eviction. No complaints were received by the defendant corporation prior to March 19, 1993 when a female occupant of a neighbouring suite complained to the president of the Corporation of loud noise from Unit 301 which was confirmed by the president on her attendance. Although there were apparently allegations by this occupant of other incidents, no evidence was presented to the Court to confirm such incidents. Mr. Fabrisi, the occupant of Suite 302 did confirm a "couple" of incidents but these appear to relate to incidents on or about the dates in question being March 19 and 20, 1992. He also added that it was only really bad on one occasion when the door to Unit 301 was open and the argument carried out into the hallway and he had to request that Mr. Harris take this argument with Ms. Hannah back into their own suite. There was no suggestion from the evidence that there was or had been an immediate likelihood of harm or damage to others.

[para17] When Mr. Harris was removed by the police on March 20, the evidence indicates that no further noise was experienced from Unit 301. As a result, I am not satisfied that a nuisance had been established entitling the Board to issue the eviction notice in this instance.

[para18] However, even if the events of March 19 and 20, 1992 did constitute a nuisance, or, at least, the Board had the absolute discretion under paragraph 62(a)(ii) of the Bylaws to determine that such events did constitute a nuisance, I am also satisfied that the Corporation did not comply with the Bylaws in respect of the alleged breach which would justify the issuance of the eviction notice. Paragraph 43(a) of the Bylaws provide as follows: "43(a) Any infraction or violation of or default under these by-laws or any rules and regulations established pursuant to these by-laws on the part of an owner, his servants, agents, licensees, invitees or tenants that has not been corrected, remedied or cured within ten (10) days of his having received written notification from the Corporation to do so may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Corporation and any costs or expenses incurred or expended by the Corporation, including costs as between solicitor-and-his-own-client, in correcting, remedying or curing such infraction, violation or default shall be charged to such owner and shall be added to and become part of the assessment of such owner for the month next following the date when such costs or expenses are expended or incurred (but not necessarily paid) by the Corporation and shall become due and payable on the date of payment of such monthly assessment and shall bear interest both before and after judgment at the interest rate until paid."

[para19] In my view, the Corporation was required to give the owner and his tenant notice to correct the alleged default within 10 days of receipt of such notice thereof before taking action to remedy the default, i.e. issuing an eviction notice. As shown in the eviction notice the Corporation had the proper address for the plaintiff in Vancouver. However, on March 20, the former president of the Condominium Corporation, Ms. Boswell spent her time attempting to obtain a telephone number for the plaintiff in Vancouver. Had written notice been sent on that date to the defendant, it would have been deemed to have been received by the plaintiff within 48 hours of its posting pursuant to paragraph 53 of the Bylaws. For whatever reason the Condominium Corporation chose not to do so. In my view, this denied to the plaintiff the opportunity of dealing with his tenant in an attempt to ensure that no further breach or potential breach would occur and the Corporation is therefore liable for any provable damages resulting directly therefrom and is not entitled, therefore, to recover the costs incurred by the Corporation in respect of the eviction notice.

[para20] As to the claim for reimbursement of the locksmith charges incurred by the Corporation for gaining entry to Unit 301 in August 1993 which charges were paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under protest as previously indicated, the Corporation decided out of general security concerns to have the locks changed on all units of which the plaintiff received no notice. The Corporation had at that time a key to the existing lock to Unit 301 for the purposes of entry when necessary for inspections or repairs. Having changed the locks, the Corporation presumably gave the keys to the new lock to the then tenant of the Unit 301 without retaining a duplicate key. As to the entry itself notice of entry was, according to Ms. Boswell, the then president of the Condominium Corporation, placed under the door to Unit 301 and the tenant failed to provide a key to the Corporation or to be present to allow entry on apparently two occasions. Again, no attempt was made to contact the owner. In my view, to change the locks and not retain a key when the Corporation had a key to the original lock and thereafter, to fail to notify the owner of the work required to be done so that the owner could have at least instructed his tenant to release a key is, in my opinion, unacceptable. The Condominium Corporation had the plaintiff's proper postal address and this was not emergent work.

[para21] Accordingly, I would award the plaintiff damages as follows:

(A) Loss of rent

May $ 550.00 June 280.00 July 1992 to January 1993 70.00

900.00 (B) Expenses incurred in re-renting unit 678.71

(C) Reimbursement of legal fees and AGT phone charges and locksmith costs

Legal fees and AGT phone call 315.25 Parry Bros. Lock & Safe (Calgary) Ltd. 64.20 Interest charges by the Condominium Corporation on the above 48.50

427.95

Grand Total $2,006.96

[para22] In addition, I would award the plaintiff party- party costs of $325.00 which includes the filing fee in these proceedings.

Sheila Eberts, applicant, and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 396 and Claude-Alain Burdet in Trust, respondents

Court File No. 98-CV-7915 Ontario Superior Court of Justice Kealey J. November 19, 1999.

Counsel: Kenneth Radnoff, Q.C. for the applicant. P. Donald Rasmussen, for the respondents.

[para1] KEALEY J.:-- Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 396 is a commercial condominium located at 112 Nelson Street in Ottawa. It was developed by 648578 Ontario Inc. which originally contemplated 15 units, 10 on the first floor, 5 on the second floor with the basement to be divided into 6 parts and to be used for storage only. The original application of February 2, 1987 described the project as "15 industrial commercial units and 18 storage units". It was on this representation that the applicant and others entered into agreements to purchase units and took possession of these in advance of formal conveyances, most of which were completed in mid-December of 1997.

Sometime between November 18, 1997, the date of the original declaration, and December 10, 1997, the initial basement usage was redefined and this space became "units" with "voting" rights. This change was described in By-law No. 3 where storage units were eliminated and the original description amended to read as follows:

Whereas there is situated on the lands described in Schedule A, a building containing 33 industrial commercial units.

It is worthwhile noting that on December 10, 1997 when the aforesaid change was made, the developer was the sole owner of all units although a number of agreements of purchase and sale did exist. The closing dates for these transactions occurred between December 11th and 15th, 1987. As well, pursuant to a deed dated December 4, 1987 and registered December 11, 1987, the 18 basement units were sold to 685310 Ontario Inc. It was explained during argument and is undisputed that the Soloway, Wright law firm was the owner of the aforesaid numbered company and utilized the basement area for the storage of their files and records. [para2] An application which sought to have the basement units reclassified as storage units was dismissed on June 14, 1988. An appeal taken from this decision was not pursued, nor were other legal remedies sought because apparently a settlement was reached whereby the owner of the basement units agreed to a permanent reduction of the votes to which these units would be entitled reducing the number from 18 to 3.

[para3] On January 23, 1989, the Soloway, Wright law firm obviously speaking on behalf of their numbered company, wrote to the Condominium Corporation No.396 and confirmed that they would be prepared to accept the proposal made by the Condominium Corporation, that the voting rights attributable to the basement space be permanently reduced to 3 votes. The letter further indicated that the compromise "constitutes a fair and final resolution of the voting rights issue and all related issues" and further indicated that they look forward to the proposal being ratified by the unit owners at the meeting to be held on January 27th. The letter was read and the terms accepted at the annual general meeting of the Condominium Corporation on January 27th. The settlement letter also proposed the Soloway firm would undertake to achieve the change by way of an amendment to the declaration and they would prepare all documentation necessary to accomplish this and perform the legal work involved without further expense to the Condominium Corporation. Pursuant to the aforesaid compromise By-law No.4 of the Corporation was passed June 30, 1989 and registered July 18th to reflect the agreed to change.

[para4] Unfortunately, the formal amendment to the declaration was never completed notwithstanding the content of a document general to amend the declaration apparently prepared in May of 1989 and sworn to January 19, 1990. The respondent, Claude-Alain Burdet, became the owner of 2 units during 1990 and it is clear he was present at the annual general meeting held April 18, 1991 when the owners were advised that because of the lost consent documents, these would have to be resigned in order to complete the amendment to the declaration pursuant to the earlier agreement. He was also present at the annual meeting August 7, 1992 when it was reported the requirement of owners' signatures had apparently been satisfied to enable the declaration to be amended. A status report was sought from the Soloway, Wright law firm at that time. Notwithstanding the aforesaid, no formal change was completed and this state of affairs prevailed through to the September 13, 1995 annual meeting where the following is noted under item g) in the minutes:

Formal amendment to Declaration regarding voting shares of 16 basement units (to be reduced to 3 total voting shares).

M. Faulkner to provide C. Burdet with documentation on file, to enable the re-activation of necessary paper work, in order to ensure the proper registration of a previously agreed amendment to the declaration, and to finally conclude this matter. This matter impacts on the total number of voting shares for C.C.C. #396, and determine issues such as reaching quorum for meetings, etc.

[para5] Mr. Burdet received the Corporation's file in regard to the aforesaid and admits he did little, if anything, to formalize the amendment. In the meantime he acquired the basement units 1 to 18 on January 31, 1997 and at the annual general meeting on February 26th of that year, took the position that he held 18 votes for the units and became the president.

[para6] The grounds upon which I am asked to make an order herein are Section 3 (8) of the Condominium Act; the doctrine of proprietary estoppel; or the equitable maxim which looks on that as done, which ought to be done. These grounds overlap somewhat but they require a consideration of the January 23, 1989 settlement agreement from two perspectives:

(a) was it binding on all unit owners', present and future, from its date onward, notwithstanding that formal completion by way of amendment to the declaration had not yet been achieved; (b) did the respondent Burdet know, or ought he to have known, of the agreement reducing to 3 the number of votes for the Level A units when he acquired these in trust.

[para7] Whatever may have been the legal rights and status of the parties when the original application was dismissed in 1988, including other legal remedies which might have been sought, these were resolved and compromised by the settlement set out in the letter of January 23, 1989 and its acceptance and ratification of terms by the respondent Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 396 at its annual meeting January 27 of the same year. Obviously, the numbered company had contracted out of its original voting rights pursuant to the Act and the amended declaration thereunder. In return, the Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 396 had agreed to forego its appeal or the pursuit of any other remedies in regard to the issue.

[para8] It seems to me thenceforth there existed an inconsistency in the declaration as to the Level A voting rights which was amendable pursuant to Section 3 (8) of the Condominium Act. Just because the proposed method of formalizing the agreement became problematic due to the loss or misplacement of owners' consents, didn't and doesn't prevent it being achieved by an order. Surely from January 23, 1989 onward the numbered company could not purport to convey the 18 Level A units with entitlement to more than 3 votes, which they had agreed to permanently. Not only did Soloway, Wright fail to formalize the agreement over the years, but as well their representative, Lyon Lightstone, remained on the board of directors of the Corporation until his resignation at the September 13, 1995 meeting. At this same meeting the respondent Burdet took on the task of re-activating this long-delayed process "to ensure the proper registration of a previously agreed amendment to the declaration".

[para9] In my view, there is nothing in law to prevent the application standing on its own under Section 3 (8) of the Condominium Act since to me it is obvious in these circumstances that it is both necessary and desirable to correct the inconsistency in the Corporation's declaration from that which emerged as a result of the January 23rd settlement agreement. This view of the matter is also in accord with the equitable maxim which treats as done that which ought to have been done. Equity views the subject matter of a contract, (its consequences and effects) as if the "Act" which the contract envisages has been completely executed. Therefore, equity calls for a determination in favour of those persons entitled to the performance of a contract so they not suffer from the delay or laches of the defaulter. I find this principle is applicable to these parties who made the settlement contract and their successors in title.

[para9a] In considering the second question posed, I am of the view that the respondent Burdet was aware of the following facts before his acquisition in 1997.

1. That the numbered company from whom he acquired the basement units had undertaken to exercise only three votes in relation to these. He acknowledged he was aware of the undertaking which was given in 1989 to this effect and also as part of the documentation received in 1995, he had occasion to read the consent to the change in the declaration by the numbered company.
2. He was present at the April 1991 and August 1992 annual general meetings when discussions in regard to the agreements to modify the Constitution and the necessary signatures occurred.

3. He was also present at the 1995 meeting held in September when this matter was again discussed and indeed was referred to him, as a then elected director, to formalize.

4. He would have been aware at the 1995 meeting (if not before) that the Condominium Corporation, in achieving a quorum, treated the number of voting units as 19. Although this was an error (there being only 18 votes) nonetheless it would confirm the reduction in the number eligible votes and the agreement which effected same.

5. He was aware, of course, that By-law No. 4 was registered July 18, 1990 as well as the document general dated January 19, 1990, though prepared in May of 1989. [para10] It seems to me a reasonable inference from the aforesaid that Burdet knew some agreement affected the Level A voting rights. It is logical therefore as an owner, as a member of the board of directors and, more importantly, as a prospective purchaser of the Level A units, he was not entitled to remain willfully blind in this regard but was obligated to make reasonable efforts to become familiar with the details of whatever agreement existed. The cases to which I have been referred would prevent avoidable ignorance, such as present in these circumstances, prevailing to enable one to establish a proprietary advantage. In my view, such a principle flows from the doctrine of proprietary estoppel as discussed in the cases cited by counsel for the applicant.

[para11] The respondent, Burdet, says he never saw the letter of agreement (January 23, 1989) and although he was aware of the By-law No. 4 when he first became a unit owner and later knew of the undertaking which reduced the Level A voting rights, he denies the suggestion that he was to complete the process formalizing the agreement in 1995 despite the fact that he received all of the consents to do this except his own and one other. Further, in his cross-examination he says he made no inquiries as to the existence or details of an agreement from anyone including the vendors' solicitors or Lyon Lightstone who was a co-director of the Condominium Corporation up until September 1995 when Mr. Burdet undertook to reactivate the formalization process.

[para12] Given what he did know, I cannot believe Burdet did not ask the threshold question. In any event as I have found, failure to do so would too conveniently create ignorance, which would be unconscionable to permit as the basis for denying the applicant and other unit owners the benefit of their settlement agreement.

[para13] On the facts before me I find Burdet knew of the January 23rd agreement and the details of same or he purposely denied himself this information by neglecting to inquire when the circumstances would lead any sensible person to have done so.

[para14] The respondent submits because the applicant was not induced to act in a way detrimental to her interest proprietary estoppel is unavailable in support of her position. [para15] The history of the applicant's plight can't be forgotten and it demonstrates to me that she has been induced to act to her detriment. She took possession of her unit and closed the transaction with the belief that there were 15 units and that the basement Level A was storage space only with no votes. When the aforesaid representations proved untrue because of the last minute amendment to the declaration by the developer owner, the Corporation launched an application against the developer to restore the number of units and voting entitlement as had been described in the initial declaration. When this application was dismissed an appeal was undertaken and apparently other judicial remedies were considered. In the meantime a resolution was achieved which satisfied the Condominium Corporation and the purchasers of the basement units which compromise was detailed in the aforesaid January 23rd correspondence and ratified by the Condominium Corporation at its Annual General Meeting four days later. Had this agreement been formally completed by an order of the court on the consent of the litigants, once registered it would have effected the change. When the manner of formalization went askew - the situation was compounded by the respondent's acquisition of the basement and his position as to voting rights which give him control of the Corporation.

[para16] It was represented to the applicant and all unit holders as set out in the original declaration that they were one of fifteen shareholder-voters, rather than one of thirty-three as per the late amendment. This dramatically changed their property interest which became dominated and subject to the Level A unit holders who then controlled the vote of the Corporation as a result of the surreptitious last minute amendment to the declaration as aforesaid.

[para17] The remedy to this detriment required the formalization of the agreement which resolved all issues surrounding the voting rights. Burdet's action or inaction which thwarted the amendment to the declaration repeats the initial wrongfulness by the developer and re-activates the detriment to the applicant insofar as her proprietary interest is concerned. The applicant and other unit holders ceded their right to fully litigate the developer-owners December 1987 conduct in exchange for the agreement of limited voting rights for Level A. Burdet, as an owner director of the Corporation, further lulled the applicant and others by apparently accepting the responsibility of completing the formalization of the January 1989 agreement, while he did nothing for a year. Then, in direct conflict with such a commitment, he with the express intent of controlling the Corporation, purchased the 18 basement units and voted himself in as president.

Generally, equity is available to avoid injustice and protect the interests (property or otherwise) of society and individuals especially where such injustice arises as a result of unfair, unscrupulous and opportunistic conduct which accords advantage to the actor over the reasonable, fair and lawful expectancy of another when all is taken into account. Here, in my view the doctrine of proprietary estoppel applies to the facts. In the same way that Soloway, Wright or its numbered company could not ever exercise more than three votes for the basement units in view of their agreement, neither can the respondent Claude-Alain Burdet In Trust or personally, have greater rights. As hereinbefore stated I find Burdet actually knew of the details of the agreement or had sufficient information as would cause a reasonable person to ascertain the full terms and legal implications of the earlier settlement. [

[para18] For the aforesaid reasons, an order such as that sought by the applicant shall go and in the event the parties cannot agree as to the specific terms of same, then I remain available to resolve these. As well, the applicant shall have her costs of the application which, if the parties cannot agree, I will fix if they so request after receiving written submissions in this regard within thirty days.

York Condominium Corporation No. 12, applicant, and Ilya Trest, respondent And between Ilya Trest, applicant by counterclaim, and York Condominium Corporation No. 12, respondent in counterclaim Court File No. 98-CV-146123 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Motions Court Somers J. Heard: November 23, 1998. Oral judgment: December 1, 1998.

Counsel: Ellen Montizambert, for the applicant and for the respondent in the counterclaim Ilya Trest, in person.

[para1] SOMERS J. (orally):-- There are two motions before me today arising out of this matter and their history is such that both motions follow upon earlier motions that have been made by both sides. One motion has been brought by Mr. Trest who is the owner of a condominium unit located at 3-76 Castlebury Crescent in North York and the unit is known as Unit 46, Level 1, York 12, a place he has owned since December of 1984. In order to understand the motions before me today, it is necessary to review what has gone before.

[para2] An earlier motion was brought in this court by York Condominium Corporation No. 12 seeking an order permitting it to cap the respondent's white window frames with brown capping at the respondent's expense. This, it was alleged, was being done pursuant to the provisions of the rules and regulations of York Condominium Corporation No. 12 and of its declaration and by-laws. This was initially resisted but, when it came on before Justice Wilkins on May 25, 1998, Mr. Trest relented and Justice Wilkins made the following endorsement:

May 25, 98. Order to go on consent. The moving party may place brown capping where required to comply as per notice of motion. The cost will be at the expense of the YCC & the YCC will do the work as best as can be done to cap - it is understood there might be technical problems as to sliders.

He then added this further note with respect to costs:

No costs if this terminates the matter - if the matter comes back to court the next judge may give to-day's costs as seems just. I fix those costs at $4,600.

[para3] Apparently, some disagreement arose between the Condominium Corporation and Mr. Trest as to the interpretation of this and, on June 15, 1998, counsel for the Condominium Corporation wrote to Justice Wilkins advising him of this difficulty. Its counsel sent him a copy of the endorsement, the draft order and copies of three letters received from Mr. Trest which highlighted the areas of disagreement that he had with the draft order that was proposed by the Condominium Corporation. The letter went on to itemize the basis of Mr. Trest's disagreement. Mr. Justice Wilkins issued a judgment which was registered on June 22, 1998 and which reads as follows:

THIS APPLICATION was heard this day at Toronto, in the presence of counsel for the Applicant and the Respondent, appearing in person.

ON READING THE APPLICATION RECORD and the Factum of the Applicant, filed, and upon hearing the submissions of counsel for the Applicant and upon reading the Application Record and Factum of the Respondent, filed, and upon hearing submissions of the Respondent;

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Applicant may place brown capping on the exterior in the vicinity of the windows and window frames and without limiting the generality of the foregoing where, in the opinion of the Applicant it is required to comply as per its notice of Application. The cost will be at the expense of the Applicant and it will do the work as best as can be done to cap.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS that the method, extent and party installing the capping shall be at the discretion of the Applicant and that the Applicant or its Agent is not required to consult with or obtain the approval of the Respondent prior to the performance of the work and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, this court orders that the Respondent shall not interfere with the installation of the capping by the corporation and/or its agents.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS no costs if this terminates the matter. If the matter comes back to Court the next Judge may give todays costs as seem just. I fix the costs at $4,600.00.

"J.C. Wilkins J."

[para4] One of the motions before me today is brought by Mr. Trest, who takes exception to the wording of the judgment as signed by Justice Wilkins, claiming that it goes too far and was not what he had agreed to. Indeed, as he points out in his material, the words "Order to go on consent" are removed from the order. Mr. Trest takes the position that what the Condominium Corporation now proposes to do is not acceptable and lies outside the purview of Justice Wilkins' order. He seeks to have the order set aside or varied.

[para5] For its part, the Condominium Corporation has filed a cross-motion in which it seeks a dismissal of Mr. Trest's motion and an injunction to restrain him from interfering in any way with it or its agents from placing the brown capping on the exterior of his unit in the vicinity of the windows and window frames. It also asks that the costs of $4,600 fixed by Justice Wilkins but not ordered to be paid now be ordered to be paid by Mr. Trest and a further declaration that he is not entitled to any reimbursement of costs relating to the replacement of the windows by him. It also seeks the costs of today's motion.

[para6] In my view, the letter written by the solicitors for the Condominium Corporation quite properly drew to the attention of Justice Wilkins the objections taken to the wording of the draft order by Mr. Trest. It also drew to his attention that the draft judgment does not specifically match up with the endorsement and left it to him to determine whether he felt it was appropriate to sign the order in the form he did. I have to assume that Mr. Justice Wilkins took all of these matters into consideration when signing the order of May 25, 1998, which was registered on June 22, 1998. What Mr. Trest is asking me to do, in my view, is no more than vary the order of Justice Wilkins or take some steps to alter its terms. I have no authority to do that. It may be that it would be appropriate for this matter to proceed to some appellate court but, in my view, I cannot grant the relief he is seeking.

[para7] In reviewing the material in the cross-motion record, I am satisfied that Mr. Trest has taken steps to prevent the capping from being carried out in accordance with the terms of the order and it seems appropriate to me that steps will have to be taken to restrain him from continuing to do so. Accordingly, on the cross-motion, I allow the relief claimed in paragraphs 1(a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) of the Notice of Cross-Motion.

[para8] This brings me to the question of costs as disposed of by Justice Wilkins in his earlier endorsement. I read the endorsement as meaning that he was concerned that this matter could continue on and that the finality which should have accompanied his order might not be achieved. In other words, he said to Mr. Trest "I have assessed the costs of $4,600 but I will not order you to pay them so long as this matter does not come back into court." Unfortunately, it has come back into court and it has come back at the specific insistence of Mr. Trest and also because he, in my view, has taken steps to thwart the earlier order. I, therefore, feel it appropriate to give effect to that portion of Justice Wilkins' order that the costs of the May 25, 1998 application in the amount of $4,600 should now be ordered to be paid by Mr. Trest. I should point out that the material discloses that this is not the first time Mr. Trest has indulged in litigation with the Condominium Corporation and I very much fear it will not be the last. In the past, the courts have tried to reason with him and to give him a reasonable chance to put an end to this matter. That did not work. Accordingly, I will order that the costs of the May 25, 1998 hearing in the amount fixed by Justice Wilkins at $4,600 be payable forthwith.

[para9] Costs of today's motion hereby fixed at $750 shall be paid by Mr. Trest to the Condominium Corporation forthwith. Approval of the form of this order dispensed with. Draft order is to be submitted to me.

Winfair Holdings (Lagoon City) Limited (applicant (appellant)), and Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 46, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, trustee for the Standard Life Assurance Company and Winfair Investments Limited (respondents (respondents)) And between Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 46 (applicant by counter-application (respondent)), and Winfair Holdings (Lagoon City) Limited (respondent by counter-application (appellant))

Docket No. C28050 Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Catzman, Laskin and Feldman J.J.A. Heard: November 18-19, 1998. Judgment: December 1, 1998.

Counsel: Benjamin Salsberg, for the appellant. Allan D.J. Dick, for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- The appellant Winfair appeals the order of Kitley J. dated July 29, 1997, in which, on an application under r. 14.05(3)(e) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, she declared that the licence agreement between Inducon and the respondent Simcoe was valid and in effect. This appeal raises three issues:

(1) Did the motion judge err in finding that the Board ratified the licence agreement, as required by s. 39(2) of the Condominium Act? (2) Did the motion judge err in holding that the Board did not repudiate or otherwise terminate the agreement in September 1995?

(3) If the Board did repudiate the agreement, was the repudiation effective in the light of s. 38(1) of the Condominium Act?

1. The Ratification Issue

[para2] In this court the appellant did not seriously contest the motion judge's finding that the Board had ratified the agreement by its conduct. Section 39(2) of the Act does not prescribe any form of ratification. Although the Board did not ratify the licence agreement by a formal resolution, we agree with the motion judge that the Board did ratify the agreement by its conduct, that is by paying the amount due under the agreement during the first 12 months of the agreement's existence. Indeed, the Board paid the amounts owing under the agreement until 1995 when it sought to renegotiate the payment terms. It is now too late for Winfair to complain about the lack of formal ratification. 2. The Repudiation Issue

[para3] In September 1995, Simcoe's Board, both through its solicitor and through its property manager, sought to renegotiate what it considered were now onerous terms of the licence agreement. In correspondence, the Board indicated to Winfair that it no longer considered itself bound by the original agreement. Winfair, in turn, accepted what it considered to be either the Board's repudiation of the licence agreement or the Board's assertion that it would no longer be bound by the 1984 terms. Winfair submits that having taken this position, the Board and therefore Simcoe itself, can no longer resile from it. Winfair makes this submission although it did not change its own position because of the Board's correspondence, and although it knew full well that the Board's professed termination of the licence agreement was strongly opposed by many unit owners.

[para4] The motion judge concluded that the Board's correspondence did not amount to a repudiation of the licence agreement. In her view, "It is clear that Simcoe intended to maintain the relationship. Simcoe simply sought to change the terms of the licence agreement to reduce its outlay of expenses for the use of the Facility." The appellant has not persuaded us that the motion judge's conclusion was unreasonable. We think that her conclusion is supportable, not only because of the correspondence itself, but because of the surrounding circumstances, which included Winfair's knowledge and the absence of any prejudice suffered by it.

[para5] However, even if the motion judge was wrong on the repudiation issue, the appellant must still contend with s.38 of the Condominium Act, to which we now turn.

3. Section 38 of the Condominium Act

[para6] The motion judge did not deal with s.38. But we agree with the respondent that s. 38 is fatal to Winfair's case, even if the Simcoe Board intended to repudiate the licence agreement. Section 38(1) provides:

38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of other common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

[para7] The appellant concedes that the licence agreement is an asset of Simcoe and that the termination of the agreement would be a "substantial change in the assets of the corporation" under s. 38(1) of the Act. Thus, terminating the licence agreement required an affirmative vote by owners owning 80% of the units. Although a vote was apparently held, the 80% majority was not achieved. Absent an 80% vote, any repudiation of the agreement by the Board was ineffective.

[para8] Winfair cannot avoid the application of s. 38 by invoking the "indoor management rule", and by relying on the Board's apparent authority. As this court's judgment in Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon (1987), 44 R.P.R. 228 demonstrates, the indoor management rule, applicable to ordinary corporations, has no application to a condominium corporation. Because the requirements of s. 38 were not met, Winfair could not succeed on its application. [para9] The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 858 v. Simmelsgaard

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 858, applicant (responding party), and Hanne Simmelsgaard, Kamla Ali and Thelma Clarke on behalf of all petitioners of a homeowners' petition dated December 14, 1996 and on behalf of all owners and mortgagees of units of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 858, respondents (moving party)

Court File No: RE7393/97 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Motions Court Adams J. Heard: February 12, 1997. Oral judgment: February 21, 1997.

Counsel: Armand G.R. Conant for the applicant. David W. Dolson for the respondents, Hanne Simmelsgaard, Kamla Ali and Thelma Clarke.

[para1] ADAMS J. (orally):-- The application was issued on February 3, 1997 and served on the respondents/moving party in the afternoon or evening of February 3, 1997 to be returnable February 5, 1997.

[para2] The application sought various relief, including a declaration that a petition of homeowners dated December 14, 1996 for a special general meeting of owners for the purposes of removing the current board of directors of the applicant was invalid; declaring that the notice of special general meeting of owners dated January 15, 1997 was invalid; declaring that the meeting was invalid and any motions or resolutions made or passed were invalid; a permanent injunction restraining any and all unit owners and mortgagees from meeting pursuant to the petition; and an interim and interlocutory injunction restraining the owners and mortgagees from meeting.

[para3] The application came on before Wilkins J. on February 5, 1997. He ruled that the application was late and that there was no good reason to prevent a meeting proceeding. He adjourned the application to a date to be fixed by the Motions Office when the results of the meeting were known and the court would be in a better position to rule appropriately.

[para4] The meeting proceeded on February 6, 1997 and was attended by thirty-six units represented in person and fifty-six units represented by proxy. The unit owners passed resolutions by secret ballot for the removal of the four incumbent members of the board of directors. The results were as follows:

Astraf Ali

43 Yes, for removal 39 No, do not remove

Amaro Bolarinho

47 Yes, for removal 35 No, do not remove

Maria DiPrizio

46 Yes, for removal 34 No, do not remove 1 Spoiled ballot

Cathy Pittini

45 Yes, for removal 35 No, do not remove 1 Spoiled Ballot At the meeting, individuals who had signed the petition of December 14, 1996 were elected to the five vacancies on the board of directors. These individuals are Thelma Clarke, Hanne Simmelsgaard, Astraf Ali, John Pizzicarola and Lorella Zanetti. This is a motion brought by the respondents/moving party pending the return of the application on the long motion, for final determination for the following relief among the other relief set out in the Notice of Motion:

a. to determine, as a preliminary issue of law, whether the number of votes required to remove a director was the majority of the owners, in the case of this condominium plan of 126 residential units, a total of 64 votes voting in favour of removal; or whether the number of votes require was a simple majority of the units represented in person or by proxy at the meeting, so long as a majority of the units were represented in person or by proxy at the meeting, which is the test adopted in Reiners v. Mercer (1988), 2 R.P.R. (2d) 188;

b. a direction as to the manner in which the business and affairs of the condominium corporation should be managed, and this litigation should be conducted, pending the return of the Applicant's Application, and in particular:

- i. whether the "removed" directors should be added as parties to this application if they wish to continue it;
- ii. whether either or both of the "removed" directors and the newly elected directors should have access to the assets of the Corporation for the purpose of conducting this litigation; and
- iii. if the "removed" directors should be restrained from purporting to act as members of the board of directors or officers of the Corporation, pending any determination as to the legality of the petition and meeting.

[para5] Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Plan 858 consists of a high-rise building with 126 residential condominium units. Condominium Corporation 858 was formed under the Condominium Act to administer the common elements of the Condominium Plan. A petition was given to the Corporation by hand delivery of a copy to the units owned by the directors as well as the management office. The petition was signed by 20 individual owners. The petition set out that it was requisitioning a meeting for the purpose of removing the board of directors. Simmelsgaard has sworn that she explained that, as the preamble clearly indicated, it was to request a meeting to remove the existing board of directors and to elect a new board in its place. In particular, she has deposed that Mrs. Lilhein's daughter and son-in-law had attended at an information meeting held by Astraf Ali on November 14, 1996 regarding problems with the then directors and that she had been requested by Mrs. Lilhein to speak to her daughter who was fluent in English prior to Mrs. Lilhein signing the petition, which Simmelsgaard did. Both Mrs. Lilhein and Mr. Singh who provided the "removed board" with purported revocations of their signatures on the petition have subsequently told the respondents that they were aware that the petition was to remove the directors but subsequently had changed their minds. Apparently both have since that time changed their minds again.

[para6] All of this concern about the underlying "validity" of the petition arises because members of the removed board made face to face inquiries of petitioners requesting that they explain their intent in signing the petition and the circumstances surrounding the presentation of the petition to them. However, no officer, director, manager or solicitor of 858 requested to see the original executed copy of the petition for the meeting of unit owners and there was no meeting of the removed board of directors to consider the petition until January 18, 1997. Notice of the special meeting of owners was mailed to all owners on January 15, 1997.

[para7] With the cooperation of the previous property manager providing an arrears list to November 19, 1996 and the current property manager providing a list of owners more than thirty days in arrears, on February 6, 1997 a vote of unit owners was administered. "Approximately twelve to fourteen owners or their proxies" were prevented from voting based upon these arrears lists. Approximately ten of these owners were in favour of the respondents. The court was advised the original proxies and arrears lists are in envelopes held by Mr. Conant. Proxies that were drafted subsequent to any other proxy and signed by persons shown on the registry as owners, including those presented by the removed board and their supporters, were recognized for the purposes of the meeting, notwithstanding that they were not in the form provided with the notice of meeting.

[para8] The court notes that Simmelsgaard had been removed as a director in a meeting held in June 1996, based upon a vote of less than sixty-four unit owners relying on the decision of the District Court in Reiners v. Mercer, supra. The newly elected board of directors passed a resolution removing Forbes, Conant as solicitors for the Corporation. No meeting of the removed directors was held to consider whether this application should be brought or, at least no notice of such a meeting was received by one of the directors, Astraf Ali, prior to the owners' meeting of February 6, 1997.

[para9] The Condominium Act provides that:

15(8) Any director may be removed before the expiration of his or her term by a vote of owners who together own a majority of the units and the owners may elect in accordance with the bylaws dealing with the election of directors, any person qualified to be a member of the board for the remainder of the term of the director removed.

19. The board shall upon receipt of a requisition in writing, made by owners who together own at least 15 per cent of the units call and hold a meeting of the owners and if the meeting is not called and held within 30 days of the receipt of the requisition, any of the requisitionists may call the meeting, and in such case the meeting shall be held within sixty days of receipt of the requisition.

The parties dispute precisely what the requirements of a vote for the removal of a director entails where Section 15(8) of the Act provides:

... by a vote of owners who together own a majority of the units ...

[para10] In Reiners v. Mercer, supra it was held that this section intends that the vote be governed by the majority of ballots cast provided a threshold quorum requirement is met of at least 50 per cent of unit owners participating in the voting process.

[para11] The issue before the court is whether that interpretation of s. 15(8) is correct. Despite its earlier approval in relation to Simmelsgaard, the applicant/responding party takes the position that it is not correct. It is argued on behalf of the responding party that the legislation intends that the removal of a member of the board of directors during his or her term is an exceptional process that ought to be and is intended to be regulated by requiring that a majority of unit owners cast votes in favour of removal. I disagree. I have had the benefit of reviewing both the reasons of Reiners v. Mercer and those of McKinnon J. in Page v. La Fleche, in light of counsel's representations and have concluded that both cases are correctly decided. In my view, if something other than a quorum requirement was intended, express provision for voting to be governed by other than a majority of ballots cast would have been provided for. The position of the applicant/responding party would provide more than stability. It would provide an undue barrier to democratic responsiveness in light of McKinnon J.'s analysis of the statute which cannot improve upon.

[para12] Accordingly the motion before this court is successful on that legal issue.

[para13] I now turn to the consequence of this ruling in light of the outstanding application which purports to challenge the very conduct of the vote on the basis of "the origination and circulation" of the petition leading to the calling of the meeting. The likely success of this application is far from obvious. The submissions that the Act contemplates the possible revocation of petition signatures and a detailed judicial examination of the origination and circulation of a petition other than where fraud is alleged have profound implications for the effective administration of condominiums. The new board shall therefore govern 858 pending the return of this application, which application the new board will not impede. Mr. Conant is no longer counsel of 858 save only for the pursuit of this application in the name of 858. After February 6th, 1997, 858 shall bear only one-half of the fees of each of Mr. Conant and Mr. Dolson in respect of this application with Mr. Dolson now counsel to the new board and 858. Legal services of Mr. Dolson rendered to 858 in respect of matters other than in defending this application shall be on a 100% basis. 858 is directed to pay Mr. Dolson $1,000.00 for the respondents' costs before Wilkins J. Mr. Conant's accounts up to February 6, 1997 shall be honoured by 858 on a 100 per cent basis. Costs for today shall be fixed at $2,000.00 payable by 858 to the respondent/moving party. The application will have a fixed date established before March 31, 1997, failing which application can be made to Adams J. to strike the application. Adams J. will remain seized to resolve all interim difficulties in the administration of this order pending the hearing of the underlying application.

York Condominium #382, of the City of Toronto, in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, applicant (appellant), and David Dvorchik and Frances Dvorchik, respondents (respondents in appeal)

No. C12466 Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Morden A.C.J.O., Finlayson and Abella J.J.A. Heard: January 17, 1997. Judgment: February 6, 1997.

Counsel: Stephen Schwartz for the appellant. Lesli Bisgould for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT (endorsement):-- The appellant applied under s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 for an order directing the respondents to comply with, among others, Rule 3(F) of the appellant's rules, which requires that no pet weigh more than 25 pounds. The respondents' dog weighed more than the permitted weight, and compliance with Rule 3(F) would have resulted in the removal of the dog from the condominium.

[para2] The reasons are reported at [1992] 24 R.P.R. (2d) 19. The facts are set out in those reasons.

[para3] The issue in this appeal is whether Keenan J. was correct when he concluded that the appellant's "25 pound rule" was invalid and unenforceable in the absence of evidence that: a) "large dogs are any more of a threat to the safety, security or welfare of the owners than are smaller dogs"; or b) "large dogs unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units, any more so than smaller dogs."

[para4] A board of directors of a condominium corporation derives its authority to make rules under s. 29 of the Condominium Act. Section 29(1) entitles the board to make rules for "the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property" or "for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of the other units." The only limitation on the nature of these rules, is set out in s. 29(2) which states that the rules be "reasonable" and "consistent" with the Condominium Act.

[para5] The condominium board was not obliged to hear evidence in reaching its conclusion that larger pets be prohibited. In making its rules, the board is not performing a judicial role, and no judicialization should be attributed either to its function or its process. In an application brought under s. 49(1), a court should not substitute its own opinion about the propriety of a rule enacted by a condominium board unless the rule is clearly unreasonable or contrary to the legislative scheme. In the absence of such unreasonableness, deference should be paid to rules deemed appropriate by a board charged with responsibility for balancing the private and communal interests of the unit owners.

[para6] With respect, we do not agree that the rule restricting the size of pets is either unreasonable or inconsistent with the Condominium Act. This is a condominium with several hundred units and over a thousand residents. On its face, it is both reasonable and consistent with the legislation that there be a limit on the size - or for that matter the number - of pets to prevent the possibility of "unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of the other units." There are, undoubtedly, different approaches the board could have taken to regulate the keeping of pets owned by residents, and it may be that the "25 pound rule" is not the best rule or the least arbitrary. But this does not make it an unreasonable one. The threshold for overturning a board's rules reasonably made in the interests of unit owners is a high one, and it has not been met in this case.

[para7] Accordingly, we allow the appeal, with costs at both levels, set aside the order of Keenan J., and grant the relief requested in the application.

Stockey v. Peel Condominium Corp. No. 174

Between Robert Charles Stockey, plaintiff (respondent), and Peel Condominium Corporation No. 174, defendant (appellant)

Court File No. V627/95 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Brampton, Ontario Webber J. October 23, 1996.

Counsel: Mark H. Arnold, for the appellant. Robert Charles Stockey, on his own behalf.

[para1] WEBBER J.:-- On September 18, 1996, I released reasons dealing with the first issue raised by this appeal. That issue involved the jurisdiction of the Small Claims Courts. As stated in those reasons, the second issue would be decided at a later date. I have now received submissions on the second issue.

[para2] The second issue is set out in the appellant's factum as follows: "Does the declaration of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 174 require the condominium corporation to repair and maintain garage doors for the respective units?"

[para3] The deputy judge, for oral reasons given at trial, decided that the plaintiff/respondent was entitled to judgment for $511.91, representing the cost of a replacement garage door. The deputy judge concluded the said garage door was not part of the unit but part of the common elements, which must be repaired by the condominium corporation. His decision involved the consideration of certain parts of the condominium declaration. The declaration provides, in paragraph VII(2), as follows:

(2) Repairs and Maintenance of Common Elements by the Corporation

The Corporation shall repair and maintain the common elements which includes repair and maintenance to all doors which provide the means of ingress to and egress from a unit and to all windows, save and except maintenance of interior surfaces of windows, all at its own expenses. (Emphasis added)

[para4] In addition, he considered Schedule C to that declaration:

VERTICAL BOUNDARIES

(a) Basement and garage (or in those units without basement the lower floor - The interior face of the exterior concrete or concrete block walls and interior face and plane of 2" x 4" wooden studs and the projection of such surfaces across openings for doors and windows except: (in the vicinity of garage doors, the unit shall extend to the unfinished exterior face of garage doors (in closed position). (Emphasis added)

(b) All other floors - The interior face and plane of 2" x 2" wooden studs, and the project of the above surface across all openings for doors and windows, except at bay windows, the unit shall extend to the exterior face of bay window.

HORIZONTAL BOUNDARIES

(a) The upperside of the concrete floor slab of the basement garage, (or in those units without basements) the lower floor.

(b) The underside face and plane of ceiling joists in the uppermost floor and/or first floor extending beyond second floor.

(c) In the vicinity of the bay window extending beyond the ground floor, the unit is bounded by the upper face of subfloor as illustrated on Part 1, Sheet 1, of the description filed concurrently herewith.

(d) In the vicinity of bay window at ground level, the unit is bounded by the backside face of drywall as illustrated on Part 1, Sheet 1, of the description filed concurrently herewith.

[para5] Notwithstanding the foregoing, the unit shall not include:

(a) All doors and windows leading out of such units.

[para6] In his reasons, the deputy judge applied the contra preferendum rule. Both counsel agree this issue was not put to the deputy judge. His ruling is obiter. In any event, the contra preferendum rule does not apply. Contra preferendum applies to an agreement and not to a declaration (Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 949 v. Erwin, Court of Appeal for Ontario, unreported, released 16 December 1994). Both counsel agree the provisions of the declaration are ambiguous. Further, they both agree that there are no authorities on point. They suggest the clauses in issue should be interpreted on a good common sense basis.

[para7] Paragraph VII(2) uses the words "to all doors which provide the means of ingress to and egress from a unit." Garage doors are not mentioned in this paragraph.

[para8] Schedule C is a definition of vertical and horizontal boundaries of the unit. No reference is made to garage doors in the definition of the horizontal boundaries. In the definition of vertical boundaries, reference is made to garage doors but simply in brackets, "in the vicinity of garage doors, the unit shall extend to the unfinished exterior face of garage doors (in closed position)." Schedule C, as is noted, goes on to state: "Notwithstanding the foregoing, the unit shall not include: (a) all doors and windows leading out of such units."

[para9] I can only conclude clause (a) is directed to and specifically exempts doors and windows within the boundaries as defined to confirm with paragraph VII(2). It does not mention garage doors.

[para10] The garage door, in my view, is not a common element as defined by Section 2 for three reasons:

(1) The garage door is not mentioned in Section 2 of paragraph VII;

(2) The notwithstanding clause (a) modifies or requires the doors and windows to be the responsibility of the corporation, as is specified in paragraph 2.

(3) The reference to the words "garage door" in the vertical boundary definition clearly indicates that the unit "extends to the unfinished exterior face of garage doors."

[para11] I cannot conceive that the garage door can be considered to be part of the common elements. While it may be that the finish of the exterior of the garage doors is the responsibility of the condominium corporation, each garage, including its doors, is for the individual use of the unit owner in question for whatever use he/she may wish to make of the same. The door to each garage comprises part of the unit and, therefore, is not part of the common elements.

[para12] For these reasons, the appeal is allowed, the judgment of the deputy judge is set aside and judgment will go dismissing the action as against Peel Condominium Corporation No. 174. As both issues are novel, I am of the view that no costs should be awarded. If counsel have some reason to make other submissions as to costs, they may do so within 15 days of the date of these reasons by fax to my office.

Miluzzi v. York Condominium Corp. No. 60

Between Iole Miluzzi and Loretta Miluzzi, plaintiffs, and York Condominium Corporation No. 60, defendant

Court File No. E7328/95 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Small Claims Court - Etobicoke, Ontario Godfrey Prov. J. June 6, 1996.

Counsel: I. Lavrence, for the plaintiffs. B. Fedson, for the defendant.

[para1] GODFREY PROV. J.:-- The Plaintiffs in this action are the owner and occupant of condominium unit 1407 at 300 Dixon Road in Toronto. The plaintiffs' unit was flooded on February 19th, 1993 along with other units as a result of water leakage occurring in unit 1807 due to the negligence of the owner or occupant of that unit. State Farm, being the insurer of the plaintiffs repaired the water damage which consisted of damage to the ceilings, walls and carpeting. The plaintiffs now seek the sum of $5394.49 from the defendant Condominium Corporation on the basis of breach of contract by the said defendant in not having the repairs effected at its expense, and on the basis of subsection 27(1) of the Condominium Act. As to subsection 27(1), the plaintiffs allege that the defendant Corporation failed to properly place zero deductible insurance as required by that subsection.

[para2] The defendant alleges that the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed because -

(1) there has been no breach of contract by the defendant;

(2) the policy of insurance under subsection 27(1) of the Condominium Act has a $5000.00 deductible, and the damage to the unit of the plaintiffs was less than this $5000.00 figure;

(3) subsection 27(4) of the Condominium Act prevents the plaintiffs from claiming contribution against the defendant; and

(4) the defendant has been prejudiced by the delay of the plaintiffs in bringing this action. Specifically, the defendant claims it is barred from bringing a claim against its own insurer due to the passage of time (see Exhibit 2, Tab 2, page 25), and that its rights to adjust any loss with its insurer pursuant to the declaration and its insurance policy have been lost.

[para3] I am satisfied on the evidence that most of the repairs performed by State Farm were reasonable. None of the witnesses for the defendant saw the condition of the unit of the plaintiffs after the flooding, save and except, for the possibility of Charles Caron, the site property manager. Mr. Caron, however, could not say with any certainty that he was in unit 1407 prior to the repairs. On the other hand, Loretta Miluzzi and Shawn Brown, the insurance adjuster, saw the damage first hand. Both commented on the rust in the water. I accept the evidence of Mr. Brown that it was unlikely that the carpeting and padding would respond to cleaning due to the rust, and the staining that had occurred. I also accept Mr. Brown's evidence that continuous painting of all walls is normal and necessary to provide a proper finished product. I accept the quotation of Paul Davis as being reasonable, as it was consistent with the computer quotation generated by State Farm. I do not accept the evidence of Mr. Krok for the defendant that it was unnecessary to repaint or re-stucco much of the unit. Common sense suggests that Mr. Krok would not have been able to sufficiently match existing colouring on the walls or ceilings so as to avoid significant repainting and re-stuccoing. I do find, however, that it was unnecessary to repair the sheetrock on the ceiling of the entryway, living room and bedroom. I am satisfied on the evidence of Mr. Krok that no sheetrock existed on the ceiling in those rooms. As a result, those expenses numbered 2, 4, 5, 11, 13, 14, 22, 24 and 25 shown on the estimate of Paul Davis (Exhibit 2, Tab 2) ought to be deducted from the claim of the plaintiffs. These expenses total $897.40. I recognize that some plastering would have been necessary in lieu of the sheetrock, and I estimate the cost of that plastering to be $300.00. Accordingly I find the plaintiffs' damages to be $4797.09.

[para4] I further find that the defendant Corporation placed insurance in accordance with subsection 27(1) of the Condominium Act. The insurance policy with Royal Insurance provided for replacement cost insurance. The insurance also had a $5000.00 deductible. For the purpose of subsection 27(1) of the Condominium Act, I find that replacement cost insurance can exist with a deductible provided the deductible is reasonable in the circumstances. A reasonable deductible ought to be expected by the unit owners. In the case at hand, the deductible was reasonable in light of the Corporation's prior history of claims made under the policy. It was also the only way the defendant could get someone to underwrite the policy. The Corporation in placing the insurance acted on its own behalf and on behalf of the owners of the units and common elements. The unit owners cannot object unless the Corporation has acted in an arbitrary or capricious manner. In the circumstances, I am satisfied the defendant Corporation acted reasonably and that the plaintiffs' damages fell within the deductible limit. I also find that there is no basis for the plaintiffs to be successful on the issue of breach of contract.

[para5] Based on the foregoing, the claim of the plaintiffs will be dismissed. It is unnecessary for me to make findings in relation to subsection 27(4) of the Condominium Act, or the alleged prejudice experienced by the defendant, and I decline to do so. If necessary, the parties may speak to me further regarding the issue of costs.

York Condominium Corp. No. 128 v. McKenzie

Between York Condominium Corporation No. 128, applicant, and Mavis J. McKenzie and Mavis J. McKenzie on behalf of all Owners and Mortgagees of units of York Condominium Corporation No. 128, respondents

Court File No. RE: 6862/96 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Motions Court Dambrot J. Heard: August 28, 1996. Oral judgment: September 6, 1996.

Counsel: Armand G.R. Conant, for the applicant. Paul Bottos, for the respondents.

[para1] DAMBROT J. (orally):-- This is an application brought by York Condominium Corporation No. 128 for a determination of whether By-law No. 4, By-law No. 5 and paragraph 4, Article VI of By-law No. 1 of York Condominium Corporation No. 128 comply with the provisions of the Condominium Act.

[para2] York Condominium Corporation No. 128 is a residential condominium corporation created in 1974, which administers 496 residential units and appurtenant common elements, along with parking units and storage lockers. The units of the corporation are spread out among three buildings and a number of townhouses.

[para3] The effect of the By-laws in question is that the owners of units in the buildings and the townhouse complex vote for directors representing their respective building or townhouse complex, as the case may be, but they cannot, and do not vote for directors representing other buildings. In addition, the election of directors is staggered by means of having annual meetings for a respective building on a different year than that for another building. In respect of each of the elections, however, the principle of one unit, one vote is respected.

[para4] This application was brought because of a concern that the By-law may be invalid by reason of the Judgment of Justice McRae in York Condominium Corporation No. 76 v. Owners of Units of York Condominium Corporation No. 76, an unreported decision dated October 17, 1985, where the validity of a similar By-law was in issue. That By-law also provided for election of directors on a building by building basis. Justice McRae found that By-law to be inconsistent with s. 22(1) of the Condominium Act, which provides as follows: All voting by owners shall be on the basis of one vote per unit, and where two or more persons entitled to vote in respect of one unit disagree on their vote, the vote in respect of that unit shall not be counted.

[para5] Mr. Justice McRae noted that the effect of the By-law was that Building No. 1 with 37% of the units would elect 33% of the directors, Building No. 3 with 20% of the units would elect 16% of the directors, and Building No. 5 with 36% of the units would elect 25% of the directors, while the townhouses, which constituted 5.6% of the units, would elect 25% of the directors. He concluded that this method of electing directors was contrary to the Act, and he noted in particular, that "giving some unit owners a far greater say in the selection of the directors than others is contrary to the letter and the spirit" of s. 22.

[para6] It is argued here that the fact of staggering elections, so that one building votes one year, another building another, and the fact that all unit holders do not get to vote for all directors, violate s. 22(1), because they are inconsistent with the concept of one vote per unit. In my view, this is not correct. I do not read s. 22(1) as precluding what I will refer to as representational elections of directors, nor do I see it as a bar to the election of directors on a staggered basis. The section was meant to make clear that whether one person owns a particular unit, or several persons own that unit, the unit is the voting entity, and that multiple ownership of the unit does not result in greater voting power for the owners of that particular unit than of a single owner of a unit. I think that this is clear from the second part of s. 22(1), which explains what happens when multiple unit holders are not in agreement. Provided that voting, albeit representational and staggered, respects the principle of one vote per unit in the election of directors in a general sense, in my view, there is no violation of the provision.

[para7] It seems to me that what bothered Justice McRae about the By-law that he was considering was that the general concept of one vote per unit was violated by the substantially disproportionate power, that for example, townhouse owners had over other unit holders in terms of the number of directors they had the right to elect. That is not a problem with this By-law. In this case, each of the three buildings represent 27.6% of the units in the entire corporation, and elect 27.2% of the directors, while the townhouses represent 17.1% of the units and elect 18% of the directors. I view this as a very substantial respect for the principle of one unit, one vote.

[para8] Accordingly, I conclude that this By-law is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Condominium Act, and for these reasons I would not declare any invalidity.

Village Grove Corporation, plaintiff, and Jerome J. Collins, Sr., defendant

Court File No. 94-GD-29999 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Windsor, Ontario McMahon J. February 15, 1996.

Counsel: Gregory Campbell, for the applicant (defendant). R. Giannotti, for the respondent (plaintiff).

[para1] McMAHON J.:-- This is a motion by the defendant for the following relief:

- a) A declaration that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between the parties is not binding for failure to deliver a Disclosure Statement that complied with s. 52 of the Condominium Act;
- b) An order striking out the plaintiff's claim, reply and defence to counter-claim on the grounds that they disclose no reasonable cause of action or defence, together with judgment in favour of the defendant.
- c) Such further and other relief as this honourable court may deem just;
- d) Costs of this motion payable on a solicitor and client scale.

[para2] Rule 21.01 of the Rules of Practice reads as follows:

"(1) A party may move before a judge,

(a) for the determination, before trial, of a question of law raised by a pleading in an action where the determination of the question may dispose of all or part of the action, substantially shorten the trial or result in a substantial saving of costs, or

(b) to strike out a pleading on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action or defence."

[para3] The facts in this matter which are not in dispute are set out in the applicant's factum:

"The plaintiff corporation was at all material times the developer and declarant of Townhouse Residential Condominium Property in the Village of St. Clair Beach, said property located on Parcel Gore Lot 5-1, Section St. Clair Beach - W.P.C., being Part of Gore Lot, West of Pike Creek, of the geographic Township of Maidstone, designated as Parts 5 and 6, on Reference Plan 12R-11702, save and except for Part 1 12 R-1226 4, Village of St. Clair Beach, County of Essex.

The parties formalized an Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated October 19, 1993, on October 29, 1993, for the sale of Residential Condominium Unit No. 38. The plaintiff delivered and the defendant received a document purporting to be a Disclosure Statement on October 1, 1993, including in and as part of the Disclosure Statement was the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The amenities described in the Disclosure Statement-Agreement of Purchase and Sale had not been constructed as of October 29, 1993.

The Disclosure Statement Agreement of Purchase and Sale, described and included as part of the purchase, the features and amenities described in Schedule "C", as identified in paragraph 1(a) of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. Those features and amenities are described as follows:

- Tennis Court - Swimming Pool - Roadways and Pedestrian Paths - Landscaping area

The Agreement of Purchase and Sale provided for occupancy by July 31, 1994. At a time when the defendant had not yet received a Transfer/Deed to the unit, the defendant gave notice on July 27, 1994, of his rescission of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale on the basis that he did not receive a Disclosure Statement within the meaning of the Condominium Act containing a schedule of proposed commencement or completion dates for the amenities included as part of the purchase price for the Condominium Unit as was required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 sub. s. 52(1) and (6)."

[para4] The plaintiff does not dispute that the Disclosure Statement failed to specify proposed dates by which the amenities described in the Disclosure Statement as included in the purchase price were to be commenced and completed. It is the position of the plaintiff that the failure to include this information was not a material defect. The plaintiff submits that the dates of commencement and completion are to be implied to be within a reasonable period of time and that the defendant waived his ability to rely on the disclosure provisions contained in the Condominium Act by failing to rescind the contract within 10 days.

[para5] This requires the interpretation to be placed on s. 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. 26. The section which was enacted in 1978 and reads as follows:

"52.- (1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the 1st day of June, 1979 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes, is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

(2) The purchase, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the unit, may rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within ten days after receiving the disclosure statement or, where there has been a material amendment thereto, within ten days after receiving the material amendment.

(3) A person may rescind an agreement of purchase and sale under subsection (2) by giving written notice of the rescission to the declarant or proposed declarant or to the solicitor of the declarant or proposed declarant.

(4) Every declarant or proposed declarant who receives notice of rescission under subsection (3) from a person entitled to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale under subsection (2), shall forthwith refund, without penalty or charge, to the person giving notice, all money that the declarant or proposed declarant received from that person under the agreement that was credited as payment against purchase price.

(5) Where any statement or material required under this Act to be provided by a declarant or proposed declarant to a purchaser of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes contains any material statement or information that is false, deceptive or misleading or fails to contain any material statement or information, the corporation or any unit owner who relied on such statement or material is entitled, as against the declarant or the proposed declarant to damages for any loss sustained as a result of such reliance.

(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(a) the name and municipal address of the declarant or proposed declarant and of the property or proposed property;

(b) a general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities;

(c) the portion of units or proposed units which the declarant or proposed declarant intends to market in blocks of units to investors;

(d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39;

(e) a budget statement for the one year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and the description;

(f) where construction of amenities is not completed, a schedule of the proposed commencement and completion days; and

(g) any other matters required by the regulations to be disclosed."

[para6] The leading case on this section is Abdool v. Sommerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992) 10 O.R. (3d) 120. This is a decision of the Court of Appeal in which Robins, J.A. sets out the history of the Act culminating in the enactment of s. 52 in its present form. [para7] In this case the amenities in question referred to in the purported declarations statement were not completed on October 19, 1993 nor were they completed on the 27th day of July 1994. On the latter date the solicitor for the defendant by letter rescinded the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The actual purchase of course had not been closed.

[para8] At page 135 of the Abdool decision Robins J.A. stated as follows:

"While I am mindful of the potential consequences to developers if the section is construed so as to entitle purchasers to have their agreements declared non-binding at any time before final closing. I am respectfully unable to accept Borins J.'s interpretation of s. 52 or to agree that s. 52(5) was intended to have the governing effect he attributes to it. Section 52 must be viewed in the light of its underlying full disclosure philosophy. The consumer protection afforded to purchasers by giving them ten days within which to consider the required information is predicated on the assumption that the disclosure requirements have been satisfied. I cannot accept that no matter how manifestly devoid of content a document purporting to be a "disclosure statement" may be, or no matter how false, misleading or deceptive the document may be, once the cooling off period has expired, a purchaser's only recourse under the Act is damages under s. 52(5).

In my opinion, s. 52(5) whether read alone or in the context of s. 52, cannot be interpreted as intended to deprive purchasers of the protections conferred by s. 52(1) and (2), nor can it be intended to provide the sole remedy available to purchasers for a breach of s. 52. This subsection is for the benefit of "the corporation or any unit owner" who relied on a false, deceptive or misleading statement or a statement that omitted any material statement or information. By giving purchasers who have sustained a loss in these circumstances (and their condominium corporation) a cause of action in damages after final closing, that is, after they become "unit owners", without regard to whether they knew of the disclosure defects before closing, s. 52(5) eliminates any question of merger on closing and provides purchasers with protection in addition to that provided by other subsections of s. 52.

As s. 52 is framed, a disclosure statement which fails to meet the requirements of s. 52(6) and (7) cannot be a disclosure statement within the meaning of s. 52(1).

Section 52, by its express language, creates an interdependence between s. 52(1) and s. 52(6) and (7). Section 52(6) requires the disclosure statement referred to in s-s (1) to fully and accurately disclose the information called for in cls. (a) to (g) and, by reference, the budget information specified in s. 52(7). Delivery of a disclosure statement which fails to adequately provide this information cannot start the ten-day period for rescission running under s. 52(2).

In answering this question there are a number of factors to be kept in mind. These disclosures must, of course, be given a construction consistent with their consumer protection objectives. However, in judging the adequacy of the disclosure for the purposes of deciding whether an agreement is binding the rights of both parties to the agreement must be taken into consideration. The purchaser is clearly entitled to the information called for by the Act in order to make an informed decision about his or her condominium purchase. At the same time, however, once the ten-day period has expired, the vendor is entitled to assume that it has a binding agreement of purchase and sale and to rely on the certainty of that agreement in developing the project and conducting its business affairs."

[para9] It is in the view of the court quite clear that when considering paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), (d) and (e) of s. 52(6) the court would be required to determine whether any lack of information was in fact material to the rights of both parties.

[para10] Paragraph (f) however, is not open to a determination of its materiality. This is a statutory requirement in clear terms. The statute requires that there be attached to the disclosure statement where the amenities are not completed a schedule of the proposed commencement and completion dates. As I have indicated this is a mandatory statutory requirement and it is not open to the court to set such a requirement aside on the basis that it is not a material requirement.

[para11] It is therefore the finding of the court that subsection (2) of 52 in this case has no application.

[para12] A lawful disclosure statement has in fact never been delivered in accordance with the statutory requirements set forth in subsection (6). It was therefore open to the defendant to rescind the contract on the 27th of July, 1994. The court therefore issues judgment as follows:

- a) A declaration that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between the parties is not binding for failure to deliver a disclosure statement that complied with s. 52 of the Condominium Act;
- b) The plaintiff's claim is dismissed;
- c) There shall be judgment for the defendant in the sum of $20,592.92, being the deposit made by the defendant to be repaid to the defendant forthwith. There shall be no pre-judgment interest awarded on this amount in view of the circumstances; d) The defendant is awarded costs of the action.

CASE REFERENCE NO. 109

Durham Condominium Corporation No. 76, plaintiff, and H. Kassinger Construction Limited, defendant

Court File No: 92-CQ-30464 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Sheard J. Heard: June 6-9, 12 and 13, 1995.

Counsel: Barbara J. Murchie and Gary H. Luftspring, counsel for the plaintiff.

[para1] SHEARD J.:-- The subject of this lawsuit is the parking garage of a residential condominium building in Oshawa built by the defendant in 1987. The plaintiff is the condominium corporation that manages and administers the common elements on behalf of the owners of the units in the condominium.

[para2] The plaintiff alleges that the defendant was required by the plans and specifications to provide a waterproof asphalt traffic topping on the surface of the upper parking level floor slab of the underground parking garage and on the ramp, but instead applied a sealant. The plaintiff says the sealant was an inferior waterproofing treatment to what the plans and specifications called for.

[para3] The defendant, in its statement of defence, acknowledges that the original architectural plans "which were considered as conceptual only, proposed a re-enforced slab with a membrane" but that the structural engineer decided to change to another, improved, form of slab, known as post-tensioned slab, for which a sealant, linseed oil, provided a form of protection superior to that set out in the original plans, resulting in lower maintenance in future years.

[para4] On January 25, 1990, at the request of the condominium corporation, A.D. Alexander, an engineer and the president of Construction Control Group, a firm of consulting engineers founded by him, inspected both levels of the parking garage in the condominium building. He found these to be in generally good condition, as would be expected in a building just three years old. However, Mr. Alexander did report that as a result of his inspection he had concerns with six areas:

1. Water penetration through the expansion joints in the floor slab to the upper parking level;
2. Deterioration of reinforcement;
3. The absence of a trench drain at the access ramps to prevent water penetration into the garage from the ramp;
4. Extent of compliance with the construction drawings and specifications;
5. Type of reinforcement in the floor slab to the upper parking level with regard to the presence, or otherwise, of an epoxy coating on the bars;
6. Spalling and delamination of the concrete forming the ledge beams supporting the floor slab to the upper parking level.

[para5] Mr. Alexander's recommendations included that tests be conducted to determine the presence of actively corroding steel and to determine the extent of spalling and delamination of concrete from the top surface of ten per cent of the upper parking level floor slab and a visual inspection of the condition of the parking structures, with photographs.

[para6] Accordingly, in March and April 1990, a limited investigation of the parking garage was carried out, under the direction of Edward Brencis, an engineer employed by Construction Control Group.

[para7] Both Mr. Alexander and Mr. Brencis gave evidence at the trial.

[para8] Mr. Alexander referred to various photographs taken in the course of the inspection, showing what he described as evidence of water penetration into the structure. These photographs were appended to the report of Construction Control Group, filed as part of Exhibit 3.

[para9] Photograph 13 shows brown stains on the soffit [underside] of the upper parking level floor slab which Mr. Alexander described as rust stains showing evidence of water penetration.

[para10] Photograph 14 shows black streaks on another part of the soffit of the upper parking level floor slab which Mr. Alexander also describes as evidence of water penetration.

[para11] In photograph 13, there are light brown stains which Mr. Alexander said were indicative of water penetration.

[para12] Mr. Alexander noted that the architect's plans contained references to surfacing of the parking areas. For example, drawing A14, dated June 27, 1985, included "Asphalt Waterproof Traffic Topping on 160 Conc. slab. Fin. first bsmt floor. Fin. first garage fl." The 160 is 160 millimetres.

[para13] Drawing A7, also dated June 27, 1985, includes "Asphalt waterproof traffic topping on first ramp level."

[para14] Drawing A3 also dated June 27, 1985, with revisions July 26, 1985, includes a boxed note: "Apply asphalt topping to first floor ramp." and "Apply asphalt traffic topping to first floor parking garage slab." [para15] Drawing A15 includes: "Parking garage. Asphalt waterproof traffic topping on first basement floor only."

[para16] Mr. Alexander's firm recommended that a membrane and traffic bearing covering be installed on the upper floor of the parking garage on the ramp.

[para17] He said that salt is brought in on the tires of the cars and drains into the concrete and that the salt finds its way into contact with the steel re-enforcing rods. On cross-examination, he agreed that perforation of a membrane can occur but that "more often than not a membrane provides a perfect shield ... the purpose of the membrane is to keep the chlorides away from the steel."

[para18] Mr. Alexander expressed the opinion that a properly built and properly maintained parking garage should last as long as the building "perhaps 100 years."

[para19] He made it clear that in his opinion a sealer could not provide adequate protection: "There is a tendency for the [re-enforcing] tendons to 'explode' out of the concrete. I believe that if reliance is placed on a sealer to keep salty water out of the concrete that is exactly what would happen."

[para20] He concedes that the tests conducted by Mr. Brencis showed only a small area -- about 2.2 per cent of the total area -- of delamination (separation of the concrete) but "this garage was only three years old. There should have been no corrosion."

[para21] The architect's drawings used the word "membrane" in reference to the roof of the building, but not as to the parking garage or ramp. Mr. Alexander agreed, on cross-examination, that he would have had to ask the architect as to just what kind of waterproofing was to be used. "I would have asked for clarification."

[para22] His opinion was that a membrane was required. "My understanding is that 'asphalt waterproof traffic topping' refers to sealing of the slab in a waterproof fashion. ... It requires whatever is needed to waterproof, plus traffic topping." He pointed out that no drawings specified the use of a linseed oil sealer, which was in fact used.

[para23] The general manager for the defendant company was Alex Hillebrand. He was the overseer of the construction of the subject condominium building. He was not called as a witness. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence, extracts from Mr. Hillebrand's examination for discovery were read in, including the following:

82. Q. Well, I am going to look at, I think it is A-13 and A-15 are the two spots that I found information that was useful.

I am looking at A-14 and perhaps you can tell me if I am noting the right thing.

It is on the left hand side of A-14, and it is the second drawing up and actually it is the first drawing up from the bottom and it is a comment that says: Asphalt waterproof traffic topping on 160 concrete slab; does that refer to the garage floor?

A. Yes, it would have referred to the garage floor.

86. Q. And I think you see it again on A-15. I've got a little yellow sticky at the very bottom right-hand corner under "parking garage" in the extreme right it says "asphalt waterproof traffic topping on first basement floor only."

Is that the membrane on the garage floor that we've been discussing?

A. That's what it would indicate to me, yes.

87. Q. Okay. So the architectural drawings do contemplate a membrane; is that correct?

A. Yes.

92. Q. Yes. So is it fair then to say, Mr. Hillebrand, that the use of the sealant did not conform with the drawings that we've looked at in Exhibit 1?

Mr. Casey: All drawings?

93. Ms. Murchie: Well, with A-14 and A-15. Mr. Casey: There is a difference, yes. Make sure that you clarify that.

The Witness: Yes.

[para24] At a later stage in the trial, the following further extracts were read in:

94. Q. Now, I need to understand the difference between a membrane and a sealant. Is it fair to say that a sealant is somewhat porous, whereas a membrane is not porous, is that correct, and I understand this is within your experience.

A. A sealant

95. Q. Yes.

A. ... seals the concrete that it becomes non-receptable (sic) for salt and water, water repellent.

96. Q. Yes. And what about a membrane? A. A membrane is a waterproofing.

97. Q. Yes.

A. It is waterproofing, that's all I can say. You need a waterproofing when you have reinforced concrete to protect the cracks you will have.

As I said before, reinforced concrete will crack; that's the nature of things.

98. Q. So, it is your understanding that the membrane is required when you use reinforced concrete, but is not required when you use post-tensioned concrete?

A. That's correct.

99. Q. Okay. And that's because you require the waterproofing to protect the cracks, the sealant ...

A. Any shrinkage cracks you have, yes.

100. Q. But your position is that a water repellent, which is the sealant, is sufficient to protect the post-tensioned concrete because there are no cracks?

A. That's basically right.

101. Q. Is it true that the sealant is porous to some extent, in that some water and some salt will be able to penetrate the sealant; do you know?

A. I don't know. I don't know. I can't answer that one.

[para25] Edward Brencis, describing the field work he had done at the parking garage said he had not expected so many evidences of deterioration in a garage only three years old, although the deterioration he described was not extensive. For instance, he said he had detected an area of delamination of approximately one third of a square metre. This was found by means of dragging a chain across the surface of the garage floor and listening for a resonance that indicated a breaking away of concrete below the surface. That was the 2.2 per cent mentioned by Mr. Alexander. [para26] Brencis also took samples of concrete, using an electric chipping hammer and a vacuum cleaner. The samples were later tested for salt "concentration" or content. He also performed "half cell" tests, using a copper/copper sulphate instrument to electrically investigate the corrosion activity of the reinforcing steel in the top of the upper parking level.

[para27] Photographs showed scaling (flaking of surface concrete), spalling (separation of small pieces of concrete from the surface of the underlying concrete) and deterioration of concrete above and adjacent to expansion joints in the top surface of the floor slab.

[para28] Mr. Brencis said that in his opinion "the presence of a membrane would mean no further migration of water into the slab and therefore salt would not be carried further into the slab."

[para29] In cross-examination, Mr. Brencis acknowledged that scaling is not necessarily indicative of rusting; that it could be due to an air void in the structure, or freezing or thawing, and that the scaling was mild.

[para30] He also conceded that he had not tested the rust stains to determine if they were in fact rust, but assumed from the colour that it was rust. He appeared to be disinclined to accept Mr. Casey's suggestion that what appeared to be rust may have been linseed oil since, he said, linseed oil has a yellowish brown colour compared to the reddish brown of rust.

[para31] A report to the plaintiff corporation [Exhibit 3, tab 1] was prepared by Mr. Brencis concluding with the recommendation that the following program of restoration work be carried out to the upper parking level floor slab:

1. Repair of all areas of delaminated and/or scaled concrete including all concrete with an unacceptable salt content.
2. Elimination of all areas at which water ponds.
3. Installation of the specified waterproofing membrane and traffic topping material. [para32] The report also recommended that at the time the work on the upper parking level floor slab is carried out, a trench drain should be installed at the bottom of the access ramp and a waterproofing membrane and traffic topping system should be installed to seal the ramp leading to the upper parking level.

[para33] The recommended work was performed by R.A.M. Restoration Inc. in August 1992 at a cost of $71,064.06.

[para34] John Aubrey Bickley, an engineer with extensive experience in concrete materials and structures, and as a member of professional committees dealing with parking structures, was called as a witness for the plaintiff.

[para35] He had not visited the site, but he had examined the architect's drawings, including in particular drawings A14 and A15. He concluded that the intent was to use "some form of membrane covered with some form of traffic topping."

[para36] Mr. Bickley supported the finding in a 1980 study paper, by Wiss, Janney and Elstner that sealers do not stop the entry of water but merely delay it and that sealers are regarded as an inexpensive alternative to membranes, although he said that he had done a study in 1981 that showed that in the long run it was cheaper to use a membrane.

[para37] In a letter to Mr. Luftspring [Exhibit 14], Mr. Bickley summarized his views, which included that a waterproofing membrane can be expected to have a service life of 15 years with minor maintenance, whereas sealers require replenishment periodically, generally every three to five years and that linseed oil should be re-applied annually. He noted that each replenishment would involve significant cost, plus loss of use of the garage each time the floor is prepared and re-sealed.

[para39] The structural engineer on the construction of the building was Francis Chien-hai Chen, who graduated in 1953. Mr. Chen said that he had done over 30 buildings with underground garages.

[para40] Mr. Chen said that, as a result of the suggestion of the client, post-tension reinforcement of the parking slabs was used instead of the older form of reinforced rods. The effect of using post-tensioned "tendons" was to put the concrete slabs under pressure, which held them together and less likely to leak or crack.

[para41] On August 16, 1991, Mr. Chen wrote to Mr. Kassinger to summarize the decision to use a sealant instead of a membrane:

We met with you prior to the design of the above-mentioned parking deck in 1985, to discuss the system of construction. It was our opinion that a post-tensioned concrete slab would be more waterproof, as the concrete slab would be under permanent compression. You accepted our advice in spite of the extra cost required for this system, and instructed us to go ahead with that design.

In addition to the applicable building codes of that date, the Technical Builders Bulletin T-7 which was accepted by C.M.H.C. was also followed, and a sealant was therefore used instead of a membrane.

For some reason, due to an oversight in communications, the Architectural Drawings had not been revised to reflect the change, and the construction was carried on as per the structural drawings. This was the sequence of events that happened.

[para42] There are three parts of Mr. Chen's letter that should be noted. First, he refers to using a sealant "instead of a membrane." The implication of that way of putting is that the originally prescribed form of waterproofing was by a membrane. That is consistent with the evidence of the general manager of the defendant, Mr. Hillebrand, on his examination for discovery. It is also consistent with what Mr. Bickley said was his "reading of the intent" of the written specifications. It also accords with the opinions of Mr. Alexander and Mr. Brencis.

[para43] Second, when Mr. Chen refers to the architectural drawings not having been revised to reflect the change, due to an oversight in communications, the implication, once again, is that the architectural drawings called for a membrane rather than a sealant.

[para44] Finally, Mr. Chen, in justification of using a sealant instead of a membrane, says that Technical Builders' Bulletin T-7, which was accepted by C.M.H.C., was also followed.

[para45] In the course of his evidence, Mr. Bickley said that, "Mr. Chen had misread that document."

[para46] The T-7 Bulletin (Exhibit 2, Tab 1) was published in 1984 by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as a service to builders. Its stated purpose was to introduce new requirements for the construction of parking garages. These were not requirements that had to be complied with in the construction of the condominium here, but the Bulletin was a respected reference. In the Bulletin's Table 42A, under the heading of "Minimum Protection System", cast-in-place post-tensioned structures were divided into those with (a) grouted tendons, for which either sealant or waterproofing membrane were prescribed, or (b) unbonded tendons, for which only waterproofing membrane was prescribed.

[para47] Mr. Chen's evidence was that the tendons used on the parking garage slab were extruded tendons in which the surrounding space was filled with grease and that although they were not grouted they were the equivalent of grouted. "Based on that, we determined to use the sealant, not the waterproof membrane."

[para48] Mr. Chen said that the architect, Henry Fliess, told him he originally intended a membrane but that Mr. Chen told him a membrane was not needed; that a sealant was sufficient and that he recommended linseed oil.

[para49] The opinion of Mr. Bickley, as I understand it, is that Mr. Chen was wrong to equate the tendons here with grouted tendons, and therefore wrong in recommending a sealant in place of the originally prescribed membrane.

[para50] The final witness was Herman Kassinger, the chairman of the board of the defendant corporation. Mr. Kassinger has had a long and successful career in the development and construction industry. This is the 40th anniversary of the company he founded; his son is now the president. Mr. Kassinger has built three highrise condominiums and five high-rise rental residential buildings, owned by his company. His company has built 10 parking garages, five reinforced concrete and five post-tensioned concrete.

[para51] Mr. Kassinger, with the aid of minutes recording the meeting, recalled meetings with him and the architects on May 2, 1985 [Exhibit 19] and thereafter in May 1985 and July 1986. These meetings led to the decision to use linseed oil, which Mr. Kassinger said he was advised by Mr. Hillebrand was better than traffic topping.

[para52] Mr. Kassinger said that when he was notified of the complaints of the condominium corporation he offered a 25-year warranty "because I was 100 per cent sure we did the right construction." This offer was not replied to.

[para53] Mr. Kassinger said he felt the tendons were grouted tendons. "They weren't grouted in cement but in the trade they're regarded as grouted."

[para54] The agreement of purchase and sale between the defendant as vendor and the various individual purchasers of condominium units contained the following, in paragraph 5:

5. The vendor agrees that it will complete the construction of the building in a good and workmanlike manner according to the proposed Description to be registered, and according to the plans and specifications filed with the municipality and the Unit specifications attached hereto. The Vendor shall have the right to substitute other materials for those provided for in the plans and specifications provided that such alternative materials are of equal quality to or better than the materials in the specifications. [My emphasis.]

[para55] On the evidence, including that of Mr. Chen and Mr. Kassinger, and the extracts from the examination for discovery of Mr. Hillebrand, it is clear that the plans and specifications originally required an asphalt waterproof traffic topping for the parking level floor slab and for the ramp leading to it.

[para56] The evidence is equally clear that the form of the waterproofing originally intended by the architects and understood by Mr. Chen, as the structural engineer, was to have been a waterproof membrane.

[para57] There is no argument as to the fact that the defendant, with the supportive advice of Mr. Chen, decided to substitute a linseed oil sealant in place of a membrane with an asphalt traffic topping.

[para58] The Architectural Drawings, as Mr. Chen said in his letter of August 16, 1991, were not revised to reflect the change, due to an oversight.

[para59] Thus, the vendor had substituted other materials for those provided in the plans and specifications filed with the municipality, the City of Oshawa.

[para60] Paragraph 5 of the agreement of purchase and sale empowered the defendant, as vendor, to make these changes, "provided that such alternative materials are of equal quality to or better than the materials in the specifications."

[para61] In my opinion, on all the evidence, it cannot be concluded that the linseed oil seal ant was of equal quality to a membrane with an asphalt topping.

[para62] In reading the conclusion, I find the professional opinions of Mr. Alexander, Mr. Brencis, and Mr. Bickley are more persuasive than the opinions of Mr. Chen and Mr. Kassinger.

[para63] Mr. Alexander and Mr. Brencis I found to be eminently fair and even-handed in giving their evidence, giving careful answers to all questions. It could be said that they were not disinterested witnesses since it was on their recommendations that the plaintiff corporation had had work done costing many thousands of dollars, not to mention the substantial fees of their consulting firm. I was nevertheless impressed with the professionalism and objectivity with which both Mr. Alexander and Mr. Brencis gave their evidence.

[para64] The results of their inspections of the parking area, and of the tests conducted by Mr. Brencis, and the photographs, contribute to their conclusion that the linseed oil sealant was not an effective waterproofing, notwithstanding that the parking slabs were part of post-tensioned construction. The ramp was not post-tensioned, but I do not think that distinction matters since in my opinion all of the work the plaintiff has had done by R.A.M. Restoration Inc. was justified.

[para65] Mr. Bickley's evidence, given in a most fair and objective way, I also found to be persuasive, including his contention that Mr. Chen had misinterpreted the directive of the C.M.H.C. Bulletin T-7.

[para66] I have no doubt that both Mr. Chen and Mr. Kassinger were convinced that the linseed oil sealant, on post-tensioned slabs, was at least as good as, and from a maintenance standpoint, better than a membrane with an asphalt topping. However, on the evidence, I think they were mistaken.

[para67] The damages I find to be the amount of the R.A.M. Restoration Inc. invoices of $71,064.06, plus consultant's fees of $19,459.76, for a total of $90,523.82. The invoices for the consultant's fees are 12 invoices filed as Tab 8 of Exhibit 3. They total $19,459.76, which is $240.77 less than the amount of $19,700.53, which Mr. Luftspring asked for at the end of his submissions. If an invoice was omitted by mistake, that is something counsel may be able to agree on. Mr. Casey had submitted that the whole of the first two invoices [totalling $2,000] should not be allowed and suggested $750 as the topside figure for these. He also submitted that the third of the Tab 8 invoices, for $1,439.60, should not be allowed in any event. This was the invoice for Mr. Belanger and an "inspector" to carry out inspection in December 1990 of garage repairs done by the defendant. I am unable to see any reason why those charges should not be allowed as part of the plaintiff's damages.

[para68] There will accordingly be judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $90,523.82. Costs, to be assessed, will be allowed in addition. If, because of an offer to settle it is necessary to make submissions as to costs, arrangements may be made through my secretary.

[para69] I appreciate that interest was included in the plaintiff's claim, although it was not alluded to in the course of submissions. I would not be prepared to allow prejudgment interest, considering that the work done by R.A.M. puts the parking area virtually in the new condition of some three to four years earlier, without the effects of the passage of time for that period, which would have led to normal maintenance.

[para70] The standing of the plaintiff to bring this action was not challenged in argument and no authorities were filed by the defendant. The plaintiff did file a slim binder of authorities, including Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 11 v. Shenkman Corp. Ltd. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 194, Waterloo North Condominium Corp. No. 64 v. Domlife Realty Ltd. (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 210.

[para71] On the principles stated in those cases, the condominium corporation has status to bring the action by reason of section 9(18) (now section 14) of the Condominium Act and the damages that may be recovered are not limited to the number of unit owners who were originally contracting parties. With respect, I agree with that statement of the law.

Andrew Bodnar and Edith Bodnar, plaintiffs, and 679520 Ontario Limited, defendants

Court File No. DC 3982/89 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Brampton, Ontario Walters J. June 27, 1995.

Counsel: David R. Wands, for the plaintiffs. M. Michael Title, for the defendant.

[para1] WALTERS J.:-- This is a claim for damages for a breach of a agreement of purchase ad sale of a condominium unit. The plaintiff, Andrew Bodnar, entered into a agreement of purchase and sale with the defendant company to purchase suite 501B, Pinedale Estates, Burlington, Ontario, on October 5, 1987. The transaction was scheduled to be completed on September 30, 1988. The contract was extended 60 days from September 30, 1988 to November 30, 1988, in accordance with paragraph 14 of Schedule "A" to the said agreement.

[para2] The agreement was then purportedly extended to December 30, 1988. This was only a 30 day extension ad not in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 14 referred to above.

[para3] By letter dated December 7, 1988, the defendant's solicitor advised the plaintiff that the unit was substantially complete ad the interim closing dated would be December 30, 1988. This letter was not in compliance with paragraph 16 of the aforementioned Schedule "A" which indicates that:

If at anytime after the closing date or the extended closing date the residential unit is substantially completed and this transaction has not come to a end by mutual agreement or otherwise, the vendor may give notice to the purchaser on or before the first day of any month ad the purchaser shall take possession of the unit on the last day of such month pursuant to the provisions of Schedule "C" hereto or: shall complete the purchase if the condominium is registered.

[para4] In any event, the plaintiff attended the premises on December 30, 1988 to inspect the property and complete the certificate of completion as required under the contract.

[para5] The plaintiff contends that on this date the unit was not fit for occupancy since painting was not completed ad carpeting was not installed. The plaintiff sent a letter to the defendant dated December 30, 1988 setting out his complaints ad also disputing the notice he received from the defendant's solicitor dated December 7, 1988.

[para6] By letter from the defendant's solicitor dated January 11, 1989, the plaintiff was advised that the unit was substantially complete ad was scheduled to close on December 30, 1988. The letter went on to indicate that:

If within 6 days we do not receive closing documentation in our office, we will advise our client to exercise his option to proceed under the default sections of the agreement.

[para7] The defendant's position is that once the plaintiff took no further steps to close the transaction after receiving this letter, then in accordance with the provisions of the agreement of purchase and sale the plaintiff was in default and further that this letter was the written notice contemplated by the agreement as set out in paragraph 16 of the aforementioned Schedule "A":

If the purchaser fails to close at anytime as aforesaid after 6 day's written notice (notwithstanding non-completion of outside work or non-substantial interior work), he shall be deemed to be in default without further notice and without tender by the vendor.

[para8] Paragraph 5 of Schedule "A" further states that:

If prior to the transfer of title, any default of the purchaser whatsoever occurs hereunder, including default in payments of any deposit, or additional deposit monies, and continues for a period of 7 days after written notification to the purchaser of such default, the vendor shall have the right to declare this agreement terminated without further notice, and in addition all deposit monies paid hereunder shall be forfeited to the vendor as liquidated damages.

[para9] The plaintiff responded by letter to Mr. Bridle dated January 15, 1989, and again set out his disagreement with the closing date and reiterated that the unit was not yet painted. He indicated that he would close the transaction on January 31, 1989. After receiving no response, the plaintiff wrote a second letter to Mr. Bridle dated January 26, 1989, ad again stipulated that if the unit was finished he would close the transaction on January 31, 1989. Mr. Bodnar sent a similar letter to Mr. Zupet, an officer of the defendant company. A third letter was sent to Mr. Zupet, on the same day, setting out that the walls ad baseboards were still not painted.

[para10] On January 26, 1989, Mr. Zupet sent a letter to Mr. Bodnar by ordinary mail which stated:

If you wish to own this suite you must close immediately, with the statement of adjustment date as of December 30/88.

[para11] Mr. Bodnar testified that he did not receive this letter until February 1, 1989. The letter was dated January 26, 1989 and the post-mark on the envelope shows a date of January 30, 1989. The letter from Mr. Bodnar's lawyer dated February 3, 1989, indicated that the letter was received on January 30, 1989. In this regard, I accept the evidence of Mr. Bodnar that he did not receive this letter until February 1, 1989. It is clear from the wording of the letter that Mr. Zupet, on behalf of the corporation, still thought that the deal was alive.

[para12] Immediately upon receipt of this letter, Mr. Bodnar made every reasonable attempt to close the deal "immediately". He attended at the site in order to inspect the unit and complete the certificate of completion in accordance with the terms of the contract. At this time, he was advised by Mr. Zupet that the deal was cancelled. I accept Mr. Bodnar's evidence that he attended at Mr. Bridle's office with all of the documentation necessary to complete the interim closing along with the necessary funds. Mr. Bodnar was ready, willing ad able to complete the transaction. The defendant refused to close the transaction, cancelled it unilaterally and in fact, on February 3, 1989, entered into a agreement of purchase ad sale to sell the unit to another individual. Therefore, in the circumstances, I am satisfied that the defendant did not comply with the termination provisions of the agreement of purchase ad sale ad improperly terminated the contract.

[para13] I now turn to the measure of damages. The plaintiff's original claim was one for specific performance, however, the pleadings were amended to include a claim for damages once it became apparent that the condominium unit had been re-sold ad specific performance was no longer available. The plaintiff has put forth two methods of calculating the damages he says he suffered as a result of the defendant's breach of the agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant's second method of calculation includes a claim for the loss of value on the plaintiff's home located at 3134 Bentworth Drive, Burlington, Ontario. It is the plaintiff's evidence that he and his wife planned to sell this home once they purchased the condominium unit. However, the plaintiff also testified that he did not make this intention known to the defendant and in fact did not require the sale proceeds of this home in order to complete the purchase of the condominium unit. For the plaintiffs to succeed, under this heading of damages, they must satisfy the court that this subsequent or secondary transaction was within the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the agreement. See Godin v. Jenovac (1993), 35 R.P.R. (2d) 288 and Kasekas et al. v. Tessler (1989), 4 R.P.R. (2d) at 110.

[para14] Here, the defendant could not possibly have known that Mr. Bodnar intended to sell his home. Mr. Bodnar further testified that he never formally listed his home for sale. In the circumstances, I conclude that it was not within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that the Bodnars would need the funds from the sale of the Bentworth Drive property in order to complete the condominium purchase and further, the defendant was not in a position to know that the Bodnars planned to sell the home in any event. I am not satisfied on the evidence that the losses as calculated by the plaintiff in this regard are reasonable or foreseeable and therefore I reject the second calculation of damages as presented by the plaintiff.

[para15] In the plaintiff's first calculation of damages, damages are measured from February 1, 1989, (the day the defendant breached the terms of the contract). Uncontradicted evidence by Peter Abbott, a appraiser called on behalf of the plaintiff indicated that the value of the condominium on February 1, 1989, was $172,000.00. The plaintiff's counsel argues therefore that the loss suffered by the plaintiff is the difference between the purchase price ($135,000.00) and the appraised value of the property on February 1, 1989, ($172,000.00) or $37,000.00. Counsel on behalf of the defendant indicate that if damages are assessed at this amount, it will represent a windfall to the plaintiff since the defendant, when the property was re-sold on February 3, 1989, was re-sold for the same contract price of $135,000.00. The defendant did not make any additional profit on the sale of this property. Further, the defendant submits that the plaintiff has an obligation to mitigate his loss and cannot just sit back and do nothing for six years and rely on an arbitrary and notional increase in value of the condominium unit. Mr. Abbott further testified that the value of that same condominium unit on January 5, 1995 is only $138,000.00. Counsel for the defendant argues that if in fact the sale had been completed, and Mr. Bodnar, as the evidence indicated, would have continued to live in the condominium, his unit today would be worth almost exactly what it was worth in 1988 when he signed the agreement of purchase and sale. Considering the carrying costs, the plaintiff would have had over the past several years, the defendant urges that there are no damages owing to the plaintiff.

[para16] In Garbens et al. v. Khayami (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 162, at page 164, the court clearly set out the principle of damages:

The first principle of damages is to put the innocent party in the position he or she would have been had the contract not been breached. In a contract of sale, this principle normally leads to assessment as at the date of the breach. However, in Johnson v. Agnew [1979] 1 All E.R. 883 at p. 896, [1979] 2 W.L.R. 487 (H.L.), Lord Wilberforce added that this rule was not an absolute one:

If to follow it would give rise to injustice, the court has power to fix such other date as may be appropriate in the circumstances.

In Rice v. Rawluk (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 696 (Gen. Div.), the purchasers refused to close, alleging that the vendor had refused to remove certain work orders. The court found for the vendor/defendant by counterclaim. In setting out the assessment of the damages, O'Brien, J., at page 717, quoted from the case Bitton v. Jakovljevic (1990), 75 O.R. (2d) 143, 13 R.P.R. (2d) 48 (H.C.J.):

Since the decision in Johnson v. Agnew, case law indicates that there is no consistent rule for the date of assessment of damages. Each case is decided on its own facts based on a fairness test.

[para17] On the facts of this case, I find it was reasonable for the plaintiff to pursue a claim for specific performance. However, once it became apparent that the property had been sold, and the plaintiffs amended their claim for damages, then the plaintiff should have attempted to mitigate their damages by purchasing another condominium or selling their home. It is unreasonable for the plaintiff to have taken no action and yet expect to be compensated for any losses incurred up to the time of trial.

[para18] The evidence before the court is that this same condominium unit 501 was re-sold on December 20, 1991 for a sale price of $148,000.00. The plaintiff, could have purchased the unit at that time and crystallized his loss at $13,000.00.

[para19] In my view, a reasonable date for assessment of damages in this case is the date when this property was re-sold, namely December, 1991. This would have allowed the plaintiffs more than a reasonable time to re-evaluate their position after realizing that specific performance was no longer possible. Therefore, I fix the plaintiff's damages at $13,000.00, being the difference between the contract price of $135,000.00 and the price they could have bought the same unit in December, 1991.

[para20] The defendants have relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Semelhago v. Paramadevan et al. (1994), 19 O.R. (3d) 479 and have urged me to deduct the carrying cost the plaintiff would have incurred if the transaction had been completed on February 1, 1993, as well as any notional interest earned on the $42,000.00 Mr. Bodnar retained in the bank, when the purchase was not completed. In this particular case, the evidence by Mr. Bodnar was in fact that the expenses on the condominium unit were less than the expenses at his home on Bentworth Drive. Further, there were certain amenities at the condominium corporation which Mr. Bodnar lost the use of when the defendants breached the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale. In the circumstances, I am not prepared to make any deduction for carrying charges or notional interest.

[para21] All parties agree that the plaintiff paid an initial deposit on October 5, 1987, in the amount of $3,000.00 and a further deposit on October 29, 1987, in the amount of $9,000.00.

[para22] Further, Mr. Bodnar purchased a locker on June 16, 1988, in the amount of $1,600.00. Mr. Bodnar paid to have carpet upgrade in Unit 501, which upgrade was paid for on August 2, 1988 for $4,100.00 on four units. There is no evidence as to how that $4,100.00 was distributed between the four units and in the circumstances, I find that there was $1,025.00 of additional monies spent on carpet upgrade. Therefore, there will be judgment for the plaintiffs in the amount of $27,625.00 plus prejudgment interest at 13% from February 2, 1989 (date of breach) to date of judgment. Counsel may make written submissions to me regarding the issue of costs. Such submissions to be submitted for July 15, 1995.

Mary Alice Hoffer, Plaintiff, and John A. Verdone and VHL Construction Limited, Defendants

Action No. 2458/89 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Kitchener, Ontario Salhany J. August 12, 1994.

W.H.P. Madorin, Q.C., for the Plaintiff. R. Thomson, for the Defendants.

[para1] SALHANY J.:-- Over two centuries ago Mr. Justice Wilmot decried that "Had the Statute of Frauds been always carried into execution according to the letter, it would have done ten times more mischief than it has done good, by protecting, rather than preventing fraud": Simon v. Motivos (1766) 97 E.R. 1170. In this action the plaintiff claims that the defendant John Verdone promised to convey to her a condominium unit in exchange for marketing services rendered on behalf of the defendants. The defendant denies that there was any such agreement. But he also says that if he did agree to do so, that agreement is barred by the Statute of Frauds because it was an oral agreement with respect to an interest in land. At issue in this action is whether the invocation of the Statute of Frauds by the defendant will protect or prevent fraud.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

[para2] The plaintiff is a 52 year old divorcee and a former real estate agent. In 1980, through her occupation as a real estate agent, she met the defendant John Verdone who was a one half owner with his brother Angelo of a construction company known as VHL Construction Limited. The Verdone brothers were interested in developing and building single family homes and condominiums in Guelph, Cambridge and Waterloo. The plaintiff impressed John Verdone as an agent who would successfully promote and sell his company's housing units and hired her as their exclusive selling agent. Not long after, the business relationship between the plaintiff and Mr. Verdone developed into a personal relationship and they became lovers.

[para3] Over the next five years, the plaintiff worked closely with Mr. Verdone in promoting and marketing the housing units that he and his brother were planning to construct. The promotion and sale of a condominium project is different from that of the sale of single family homes. Although the construction and sale of a single family unit can be done on a house by house basis, the promotion and sale of a condominium complex is different. Before the first shovel can be put into the ground, the developer must obtain provincial and municipal government approval and financial backing for the project. Financial backing and the decision to go ahead with the project will necessarily depend upon the developer obtaining prior commitment from prospective purchasers of the units. This is done by obtaining a prospective purchaser's signature on a reservation agreement. Although the reservation agreement is not binding on the purchaser, it demonstrates an interest by the prospective purchaser in buying a condominium and influences the size of the project and the number of units to be constructed by the developer. Of necessity, success of the project will depend in large measure on the skills of the agent retained to promote the sale of the condominium units.

[para5] In the mid '80's, the plaintiff and Mr. Verdone had discussed the development of a condominium project based on a housing style which the plaintiff had seen in Cape Cod called "Treetops". The plaintiff had, in fact, taken her sons on a vacation trip to Cape Cod and had spent a good deal of the time travelling around the area and taking pictures of the various housing projects. She and Mr. Verdone had set their eye on a site on Fischer-Hallman Road in Waterloo to develop a condominium project. They hoped to attract home owners who wished to purchase condominiums that would have all the amenities of a large home and yet none of the burdens of outdoor maintenance such as cutting grass, gardening, etc. They proposed calling it Crabtree Keys.

[para6] The plaintiff testified that when her own marriage fell apart in the early '80's and a legal dispute loomed, Mr. Verdone had encouraged her not to litigate and promised that he would "build her something better than she had". Based on that assurance, she had moved into a town house with her children on Keats Way in Waterloo. She said that when she and John Verdone discussed developing the Crabtree Keys, he promised her a unit in the condominium project. It was her understanding that she would receive this unit in exchange for her services in marketing the project.

[para7] Unfortunately, the plaintiff and the defendant ran into problems in developing the site. A Toronto consulting firm was then hired to determine whether the project was viable and reported that the name "Crabtree Keys" had a negative connotation and should be changed. Other considerations, such as the requirement of lower density and the fact that the project would back out onto a four lane highway led the defendants to shelve the project.

[para8] A short time later, Mr. Verdone advised the plaintiff that he found a more suitable site and they decided to call it Treetops, similar to the name used in the Cape Cod project. In 1983, Mr. Verdone had incorporated a company called Winter White Marketing Inc. which he had transferred to the plaintiff. Through this corporate vehicle, she began to promote the condominium development by meeting with various designers and architects, selecting an appropriate rental sales trailer, overseeing the advertising, etc.

[para9] The project was to proceed in two phases. The first phase was to consist of 21 units, from 1 through 16 and from 80 through 84. The plaintiff proceeded to promote the sale of the condominium units and obtained a number of reservation agreements from prospective purchasers. It was expected that the first phase would be completed by the summer of 1988. The second phase was scheduled to start and did start in the fall of 1988 and was completed the following summer. The plaintiff said that she and John Verdone reserved units 12 and 13, which were corner units on the building, and she was to receive unit 13 free and clear in exchange for the four years she had spent on the Treetops project. Later, they decided to exchange those units for units 36 and 37, also corner units, and arrangements were made with the prospective purchaser's of those latter units to make the exchange. Mr. Verdone agreed that they did discuss acquiring condominium units side by side at the Crabtree Keys project but said that both he and the plaintiff were to pay for their units.

[para10] Some time in early August, 1987, the plaintiff discovered that John Verdone had returned to live with his wife. She was, understandably, devastated by the news because he had not informed her of his decision and she understood that they were going to get married. She said that she found it to be very difficult to work in the Guelph office of the defendant corporation. She recounted an incident at that office when Mr. Verdone's father had made a signal with his hand and by spitting on her that led her to believe that her life was in danger. On August 13th, 1987, she wrote John Verdone a note in which she said "Dear John, please accept my resignation as manager of marketing and sales Effective September 11th, 1987." She said that she wrote the letter because she could no longer work out of the Guelph office out concern for her personal safety and because of her feelings toward John Verdone. She said that the stress of discovering that he had reconciled with his wife resulted in her hospitalization. He visited her at the hospital and suggested that she could have the main office in a building on Victoria Street where his solicitors carried on the practice of law. She said that he then changed his mind and told her that he wanted her to work in Guelph. However, she refused to do so and their business relationship drew to a close. On November 27th, 1987 the she wrote him a letter outlining her position and requesting payment until the end of the year and for help in some other way to find a new position: Mr. Verdone did not respond and the plaintiff consulted a solicitor. On December 1, 1989 a statement of claim was issued claiming specific performance of an oral agreement made between the plaintiff and John Verdone on or about the month of June, 1987, "wherebyVerdone agreed to cause the Defendant VHL Construction Ltd. to give to the Plaintiff Unit No. 37 of the Treetops Condominium Project" or, alternatively damages for failure to perform the said agreement. I turn now to a consideration of this claim.

FINDINGS

[para11] The first issue that has to be determined is whether there was an agreement between the plaintiff and John Verdone that the plaintiff be given unit 37 of the Treetops Project in exchange for marketing services rendered by her to the project. As I have already said, it was conceded by the defence that the plaintiff and Mr. Verdone contemplated moving into two units side by side at Crabtree Keys Project. I am satisfied that Mr. Verdone led the plaintiff to believe that she would get one of the units in exchange for her marketing services and that they discussed how this could be done in view of the fact that the condominiums were legally owned by VHL Construction Ltd. and that Angelo Verdone was a one half owner of the company. It would seem natural to me that he, planning to marry the plaintiff, or at least giving her the impression that he intended to do so, would lead her to believe that they would set up living arrangements side by side and that he would find a way to ensure that she would have a unit in exchange for her marketing services. The defendant conceded that they discussed putting a door between the units so that they could go back and forth. Moreover, I am also satisfied that after the Crabtree Keys project was abandoned and the Treetops initiated, John Verdone continued to make the same promises to the plaintiff with respect to unit 13 and later unit 37.

[para12] However, by the summer of 1987, Mr. Verdone's affection towards the plaintiff was waning. One of the reasons may be due to the fact that he would eventually be expected to carry out his promises to the plaintiff and this would be difficult to do since he was not sole owner of VHL Construction Ltd. Although he and the plaintiff discussed the exchange of units 12 and 13 for units 37 and 38, I suspect that this was another delaying tactic on his part because units 37 and 38 were part of the second phase and would not be started until the following year.

DECISION

[para13] Mr. Thomson, relying on the Statue of Frauds, argued that if there was any agreement, it was unenforceable for three reasons: firstly, the services were rendered to the defendants by the plaintiff's corporate vehicle, Winter White Marketing Inc. and not her personally; secondly, that the agreement was between the plaintiff and John Verdone, who was not the legal owner of the condominium units; and, finally, the services rendered by the plaintiff were not directly referable to the agreement and therefore there was not part performance which would take the agreement out of the shadow of the Statute.

[para14] The agreement between the plaintiff and Mr. Verdone was, understandably, not reduced to writing because of their relationship and because of the difficulties that Mr. Verdone would have to eventually face in transferring title from the corporate defendant to the plaintiff. There is no memorandum relied upon by the plaintiff that would satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds.

[para15] The plaintiff relied upon the doctrine of part performance. The theory of part performance is that it tends to show that the contract really was made and is thus within the spirit of the Statute: See Waddams, The Law of Contract, 2nd ed. at p. 173. However, the law is clear that the acts relied upon as part performance must tend to corroborate proof of the agreement. To corroborate proof of the agreement, Canadian authorities have insisted that the acts of performance must not merely show, on balance, that there is an underlying contract between the parties but that "the acts are unequivocally or necessarily referable to some dealing with the land in question: Dealman v. Guaranty Trust Co. of Canada [1954], 3 D.L.R. 785 (S.C.C.).

[para16] The plaintiff relied, as part performance, upon the fact that the potential purchasers of unit 37, Mr. and Mrs. Sprung, agreed to accept $10,000.00 to exchange their unit from No. 37 to No. 12 and that the defendant assisted the plaintiff in choosing appropriate colours, tiles and wall coverings. I am not convinced that this was the reason that the Sprungs why they did so. The evidence convinces me that $10,000.00 was offered to those prospective purchasers who had signed a reservation agreement as marketing tool to firm up their commitment to the project. I am not satisfied that any of these acts relied upon by the plaintiff were necessarily referable to a contract between her and John Verdone. Moreover, the marketing services which she performed on behalf of VHL Construction Ltd. were for the purpose of selling condominiums for which she received $1000 per unit upon occupancy and later in July, 1987, an agreed monthly fee of $5000. They were not necessarily referable to their agreement. Thus in my view; the Statute of Frauds bars the plaintiff from recovery on her agreement with the plaintiff.

[para17] On the eve of trial, the plaintiff abandoned her claim for specific performance because unit 37 had been already sold and sought damages alternatively for failure to perform the agreement. Counsel for the plaintiff indicated that this damage claim was for the work which she had performed on behalf of the defendants on a quantum meruit basis. Mr. Thomson's position was that if the enforcement of the contract was statute barred, there could be no alternative recovery of damages. He also said that a quantum meruit should not be entertained because it was not specifically pleaded. Although, the statement of claim did not specifically claim recovery on a quantum meruit basis, the general claim for damages did alert the defendant to the fact that this was an issue to be pursued. I am not convinced that the defendant has been prejudiced by this claim.

[para18] I am satisfied that the plaintiff is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit basis for all of her preparatory work to make the project a successful one and for obtaining of a number of reservation agreements. Indeed, Mr. Verdone admitted that it was one of their more successful projects. The work which she performed for the defendants was set out in her letter of November 27,

1987 which was marked as exhibit 1 in this action. I assess the value of her work and services on a quantum meruit basis at $25,000.00.

[para19] Mr. Thomson pointed out, however, that this work had been performed by the plaintiff's corporate vehicle, Winter White Marketing Ltd., not the plaintiff, and only that corporate entity is entitled to recover. The evidence is clear, however, that the plaintiff was the sole owner and employee of the company and had used the corporate entity at the suggestion of John Verdone who had incorporated it for her. In my view, she is entitled to be awarded the amount which I have assessed as the value of the work performed. Accordingly, the plaintiff will have judgment against the defendants for the sum of $25,000.00 with interest pursuant to the Courts of Justice Act from December 1, 1989.

[para20] Counsel may make written submissions on the question of costs within 15 days.

Gordon Cummins and Catherine Cummins, Applicants, and Napev Construction Limited, Respondent

Action No. A2651/94 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Brampton, Ontario Dunn J. April 13, 1994.

N. Grether, for the Applicants. James E. Lewis, for the Respondent.

[para1] DUNN J.:-- This matter came before me as an Application on March 29, 1994. The parties presented to me a very interesting revisitation of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, Ch.26 applicable to a set of facts that can be described as follows:

[para2] The applicant agreed to purchase a residential condominium unit from the respondent and the agreement of purchase and sale provided for a "phantom mortgage" as part of the purchase price. A full discussion of phantom mortgages and their effect is contained in the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Ackland v. Yonge-Esplanade Enter. Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 97.

[para3] The phantom mortgage in question was given, as in the usual case, to allow the vendor to take advantage of the provisions of s. 51(6) of the Condominium Act. This section allows the vendor to charge a purchaser in occupation a monthly amount or occupancy fee that includes a component for "the amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid monthly in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit".

[para4] The rationale of allowing the vendor to charge such a component on the purchaser taking occupancy of the premises and prior to the registration of the condominium and the ability of the vendor to convey title is, of course, founded in economics and, as discussed in the Ackland case, is probably fair to all concerned.

[para5] In the case before me, however, after the parties agreed to the terms, inclusive of a phantom mortgage, and after the occupancy closing had taken place, they entered into a "new" agreement, which is evidenced by the letter of the vendor dated February 29, 1989 signed for acceptance purposes by the applicant. This letter reflects the proposal of the purchaser in paying off the balance of first mortgage principal prior to final closing in order to reduce the purchaser's monthly occupancy fee.

[para6] The vendor responded, allowed the purchaser to pay the sum of $129,000, which "will be applied to the amount of your unit. As agreed by both parties, no interest is to be paid on this amount from receipt to date of final closing".

[para7] The intention of the parties was that the vendor/respondent was able to utilize this money by depositing it and earning interest or by paying trades, etc. This worked to the advantage of the purchaser because his occupancy rent was substantially reduced, roughly, by the amount of interest that he would otherwise be paying on $129,000. This makes eminent sense to both parties.

[para8] They did not, however, count on the operation of the Condominium Act. The Act, as it now exists, provides, in part, the following:

s. 53.(1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, despite the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a bank listed in Schedule I or II to the Bank Act (Canada) or trust corporation or a loan corporation or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office, until, (a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto; or

(b) delivery of prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

(3) Subject to subsection (2) [early termination], where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by the proposed declarant on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser.

[para9] These sections of the Act clearly require that any monies received by the vendor be held in trust and that the prescribed interest must be paid on those monies to the purchaser.

[para10] Counsel for the respondent made the argument that the agreement evidenced by the aforementioned letter was a completely "separate agreement" and not an amendment to the existing agreement of purchase and sale. It was, therefore, he argued, entitled to stand on its own and the parties were not obliged to characterize the payment of the $129,000 as further deposit; the agreement of early payment of the "phantom mortgage" was a separate matter from the contract or original agreement of purchase and sale and not governed by the Condominium Act.

[para11] I cannot agree. The letter and its acceptance is clearly an amendment of a major term of the original agreement of purchase and sale. As a result, the further monies paid by the applicant fall within the description of trust monies in s. 53.(1) and 53.(3) of the Condominium Act.

[para12] Can the applicant and the respondent contract out of the provisions of the Condominium Act? It would appear not.

[para13] Section 60 of the Act reads as follows:

s. 60 This Act applies despite any agreement to the contrary.

[para14] With these words, the Legislature obviously intends that the provisions of the Act are to prevail notwithstanding the wishes of the parties, as evidenced by their agreement. This interference with otherwise free contractual relations has, in my opinion, worked a peculiar injustice on the respondent. He has received the principal amount of the "phantom mortgage" and is obliged by the Act to deposit it in trust but is entitled to interest earned on it. At the same time, he is obliged by the Act to pay interest to the applicant at the prescribed rate under the Act.

[para15] The simple result of this is that, interest rates aside, the respondent is out the amount he would have otherwise received for the mortgage component of expenses during interim occupancy.

[para16] An order should go requiring the respondent to pay to the applicant interest on the sum of $129,000 from the date of payment to the date of final closing.

[para17] While, in the circumstances, I feel that the applicant should be entitled to interest on this sum from the date of closing to date of judgment at the rate set out in the Courts of Justice Act, this is not a matter in which I could, in good conscience, allow the applicant his costs. Each party is to pay its own.

[para18] Counsel were good enough to inform me at the opening of their arguments that, between themselves, they had settled the issue as to the discrepancy in the amount of interest originally claimed by the applicant. The order, when drafted by counsel should reflect this agreement as well.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 858, Plaintiff, and Tornat Construction Inc., York Square Developments Inc., Allan Windows Systems Ltd., The Corporation of the City of York, Ontario New Home Warranty Program, Tornat Property Management Limited, Defendants Action No. 93-CQ-42907 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Matlow J. Heard: March 4, 1994. Judgment: March 10, 1994.

[para1] MATLOW J.:-- The following are my reasons for ordering that paragraphs 13 and 14 of the statement of claim be struck out.

[para2] The plaintiff, which is a condominium corporation, asserts a claim in those paragraphs pursuant to section 14(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, chapter 26 on behalf of certain purchasers of units in the subject condominium complex who purchased those units from the defendant, York Square Developments Inc. Section 14(1) reads as follows:

"14-(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such actions brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected."

[para3] The essence of the claim asserted, albeit less than clearly, is that the said defendant deliberately or negligently misled certain purchasers of units in the subject condominium complex by failing to disclose to them that subsidized public housing was going to be built immediately adjacent to the condominium complex. As a result, the defendant was able to charge more for the units than it could have had proper disclosure been made. Implicit in this allegation is the notion that the public housing adversely affected the value of the condominium units.

[para4] Although the plaintiff alleges that not only the purchasers but it too was misled, counsel for the plaintiff made it clear in his submissions that the claim was being asserted only on behalf of the purchasers.

[para5] Section 14(1), in the context of this case, would permit the plaintiff to bring this action only if it were alleged that there had been "any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units". In my view, no such damage is alleged here or could reasonably be alleged if leave to amend were granted.

[para6] Rather, the plaintiff alleges deception on the part of the defendant which caused the purchasers to pay more for their units than they would otherwise have paid. The damage alleged is a notional one rather than a real one and the only damage or harm that could have resulted was to the purchasers' respective economic worth.

[para7] It would be stretching the clear intention of section 14(1) if I were to characterize the damage alleged as a diminution in the value of the units and, therefore, as "damage to...individual units". It is not alleged, for example, that the defendant was in any way responsible for the construction of the public housing complained of or that its conduct, in any way, caused the kind of damage contemplated by the statute.

[para8] Accordingly, the plaintiff is not entitled to sue on behalf of the purchasers and the paragraphs attacked ought to be struck out. The purchasers, if so inclined, may institute other proceedings in their own names if they wish to pursue their individual claims.

a) A determination as to the amount of the reduction of the occupancy fees to which the applicants are entitled pursuant to:

i) an agreement (the "Hagen" agreement) to reduce the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fees, contained in a letter dated February 13, 1990; and,

ii) a concession made to and acknowledged by the Court of Appeal in proceedings between the applicants and others, and the respondents and others, that the respondent Somerset would be bound by and would honour the "Hagen" agreement.

b) A declaration that:

i) the respondent Somerset breached the "Hagen" agreement and each of the applicant's Agreements of Purchase and Sale with the respondent Somerset (the "applicants' agreements"); and that,

ii) the applicants' agreements are not binding as a result thereof.

c) An Order that the respondent Somerset return to the applicants forthwith:

i) all monies paid by each of the applicants on account of each of the applicant's respective purchases;

ii) interest thereon in accordance with ss. 53 (2) and 53 (3) of the Condominium Act, and in the cases of the applicants Pinheiro and Slater, Elik and Josaitis in accordance with their respective agreements; and,

iii) an overpayment of occupancy fees as a result of this court's determination of 1. above.

d) An Order requiring the respondents to pay into court all monies at any time held in trust by any of them on account of the applicants' deposits and interest thereon, pending the final resolution of these proceedings.

e) Judgment for any amounts found owing to any of the applicants.

[para2] Paragraph c...d is a matter that has been placed before Mr. Justice Gibson of this court and as such I will not deal with that aspect of the application. Counsel assures me that I can deal with the application without being in conflict with Mr. Justice Gibson. Although I have some reservations in that respect, I think the matter can be dealt with without having to await the decision of Gibson J. as his Order, of necessity, placed at its highest in favour of the applicant, would be to pay the monies into court awaiting the resolution of the final application.

[para3] At the outset of this application and during the course of the hearing, it was brought to the attention of counsel that the volume of factual evidence put before me was substantial and, on the face of the Record, there were certain apparent conflicts.

[para4] Counsel repeatedly assured me that the facts were not in dispute and that in the final analysis, the only matter that had to be decided would be whether or not the applicants were justified in refusing to close various final unit transfers with the respondent Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited through its receiver, Peat Marwick Thorne Inc. Upon review of the material and during the course of the hearing, issues and conflicts were raised which led me to believe that a full and proper determination of justice for the parties should probably have involved a trial of all the issues. However, counsel demonstrated no inclination to proceed in that manner. Counsel for the applicant made it apparent that he wanted to proceed on the material before the court, and counsel for the respondent took the position that the applicants, having chosen this forum, should live or die by their own decision.

[para5] After hearing counsel and reviewing the material, it is my view that my determination of the issues does not require me to touch upon those highly-contentious matters which, had I been obliged to rule upon them, would have necessitated witnesses. I turn to the documents themselves, the conduct of the parties surrounding those documents and the principles of interpretation espoused by Robins J.A. in the majority decision of Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation et al. (1992), 11 O.R. (3d) 744 (C.A.) at p. 770 and following, where the learned Justice dealt with the applicable rules of construction for an agreement involving the purchase and sale of a condominium unit similar to the ones involved in this matter.

[para6] In the course of dealing with this application, I am mindful of the rules of construction set out in Hillis Oil & Sales Ltd. v. Wynn's Canada Ltd., [1986] 1 S.C.R. 57 at p. 66, that the provisions should be read not as standing alone but in light of the agreement as a whole and the other provisions therein. I am further mindful that the court should strive to give meaning to the agreement and "reject an interpretation that would render one of its terms ineffective": National Trust Co. v. Mead, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 410 at p. 425. [para7] I am further mindful that the court is "to search for an interpretation which from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract": Consolidated Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at p. 901 and also McLelland & Stewart Ltd. v. Mutual Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 6 at p. 19. In searching for the intention of the parties, the court should give particular consideration "to the terms used by the parties, the context in which they are used and ... the purpose sought by the parties in using these terms": Fernetta v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., [1992] 1 S.C.R. 647 at p. 667.

[para8] In the event that the court is unable to resolve a contradiction or ambiguity in the terms of a contract, the language of the contract will be construed against its author in accordance with the contra preferentem rule: Consolidated Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., supra, at p. 901; "[T]he rule is ... one of general application whenever ... there is an ambiguity in the meaning of a contract which one of the parties is the author of the document offers to the other with no opportunity to modify its wording": Hillis Oil & Sales v. Wynn's Canada, supra, at pp. 68-69. However, resort is to be had to the contra preferentem rule "only when all other rules of construction fail to enable to court of construction to ascertain the meaning of the document": Reliance Petroleum Ltd. v. Stevenson, [1956] S.C.R. 936 at p. 953, Consolidated Bathurst, supra, at p. 901.

[para9] Exhibit A to the affidavit of Marrio D. Deo, sworn January 11, 1993 is the Royal Ascott Club Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The applicants and the respondents agree that, although this is a sample agreement of purchase and sale, it is representative of the agreements of purchase and sale entered into by all of the applicants with the exception of Pinheiro and Slater, Elik and Josaitis whose agreements had a different formula for calculating interest.

[para10] The provisions of this Agreement of Purchase and Sale which I find significant are set out below:

1. The purchase price of the unit is _____ () dollars in lawful money of Canada, being payable as follows:

d) The purchaser shall give and the vendor shall take back on closing a first vendor take-back mortgage to be secured against the unit in the amount of $_____ () dollars _____ cents on the terms and conditions as provided for in Schedule "E" ("the vendor take-back mortgage").

e) The balance of the purchase price by certified cheque on the closing date, subject to the adjustments hereinafter set forth,

2. (b) the transfer of title to the unit shall be completed on the later of the occupancy date or a date fixed by the vendor in accordance with paragraph C. 6, Schedule "C" (the "unit transfer date")

3. (f) "unit transfer date" shall mean the day a transfer of unit for registration is tendered to the purchaser or the purchasers' solicitors.

6. Realty taxes (including local improvement charges, if any, and including any amount required by the mortgagee to establish a tax account), interest payable in accordance with the Act, insurance premiums, electric, water and gas rates, (except insofar as same are included in common expenses and paid for by the purchaser as part of the occupancy) and estimated common expenses shall be apportioned and allowed to the unit transfer date. With respect to realty taxes (including local improvement charges and sewer impost charges), the same shall be estimated as if the unit had been assessed as fully completed by the relevant taxing authority for the calendar year in which the transaction is completed, and shall be adjusted as if such taxes had been paid by the vendor, notwithstanding the same may not have been levied or paid by the unit transfer date, subject however, to readjustment upon the actual amount of such taxes being ascertained ... [my emphasis]

8. Provided that the title is good and free from all encumbrances, save as herein set out, the purchaser agrees to accept title subject to all restrictions, easements, conditions or covenants that run with the land and subject to all rights, licenses and easements now registered or to be registered for the supply and installation of telephone services, electricity, gas, sewers, water, television and/or cable facilities and the other usual services and further subject to any registered agreements, and the terms of the condominium documents in their final registered form. The purchaser is not to call for the production of any title date or abstract or other evidence of title except such as are in the possession of the vendor. The purchaser is to be allowed until ten (10) days prior to the unit transfer date to examine the title at his own expense. If within that time any valid objection to title is made in writing to the vendor which the vendor shall be unable or unwilling to remove and which the purchaser will not waive, this agreement shall, notwithstanding any intermediate negotiations in respect of such objections, be null and void and the deposit monies together with the interest by required law to be paid after deducting any payments due to the vendor by the purchaser as provided for in paragraph 17 shall be returned to the purchaser and the vendor shall not be liable for any costs or damages. Save as to any valid objection so made within such time, the purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to have accepted the title of the vendor.

10. The purchaser acknowledges that the unit may be encumbered by mortgages which are not intended to be assumed by the purchaser and that the vendor shall not be obliged to obtain and register partial discharges of such mortgages insofar as they affect the unit on the unit transfer date. The purchase agrees to accept the vendor's undertaking to obtain and register partial discharges of such mortgages and as soon as reasonably possible after the unit transfer date in accordance with the following terms: A mortgage statement or letter from the mortgagee(s) with respect to the unit; direction to pay any necessary funds to the mortgagee(s) on the unit transfer date to obtain partial discharge(s) of the mortgage(s); and the vendor's solicitor's undertaking to deliver said funds to the mortgagee(s) and to register the partial discharge(s) upon receipt and advise concerning registration particulars.

16. All of the covenants, warranties and obligations contained in this agreement shall survive the closing of this transaction, and shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding the transfer of title of the units to the purchaser. [my emphasis]

20. Notwithstanding the purchaser occupying the unit or the closing of this transaction and the delivery of title to the unit to the purchaser, the vendor or any person authorized by it shall be entitled at all reasonable times and upon reasonable prior notice to the purchaser to enter the unit and the common elements in order to make inspections ... [my emphasis]

24. Upon default of the purchaser of any of the covenants, warranties, acknowledgements and obligations to be performed under this agreement, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any and all covenants relating to the period of occupancy, if any, and such defaults continuing for seven (7) days after written notice thereof has been given to the purchaser or the purchaser's solicitor by the vendor, then in addition to any other rights or remedies which the vendor may have, the vendor, at its option, shall have the right to declare this agreement null and void and in such event all deposit monies paid hereunder shall be forfeited to the vendor and the vendor may also claim for damages in excess of the deposit. If the purchaser has taken possession of the unit, the purchaser shall immediately vacate the unit and the vendor shall be at liberty to sell the unit with or without re-entry.

30. This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof.

It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing. [my emphasis]

[para11] Schedule "C" forms part of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. It further provides on the first page as follows

C.6 Upon registration of the condominium, the vendor's solicitor shall designate a date not less than twenty-one, not more than sixty after the registration of the condominium documents as the unit transfer date by delivery of written notice of such date to the purchaser or his solicitor.

[para12] Schedule "E" forms part of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale as follows:

E.1 The purchaser covenants and agrees to give on the closing date a vendor take-back mortgage to be taken back by the vendor for the principal sum in Canadian dollars, in the amounts set out in paragraph 1 (d) of the Agreement ...

E.2 The terms of the vendor take-back mortgage shall be as follows: (a) interest only; (b) the full amount of principle and accrued interest shall be payable by the purchaser on demand of the vendor; (c) installments of interest shall be paid monthly;

(d) the interest rate shall be a fixed rate of interest equal to the prime rate per annum charged by the Toronto Dominion Bank plus 2.5% per annum in effect on the closing date calculated monthly not in advance. "PRIME RATE" means the floating annual rate of interest established from time to time for loans made by the bank to its most credit-worthy customers; [my emphasis] (k) all legal costs related to the vendor take-back mortgage including the discharge shall be the obligation of the purchaser. [my emphasis]

[para13] Notice of Appointment of a Receiver, in the form of 379059 Ontario Ltd. C.O.B. Retail Engineering, was given by Prenor Equity Inc. in a Notice dated the 22nd day of November, 1990 by virtue of Somerset's default on a debenture. Following that notice, in the subsequent proceedings that took place prior to these proceedings, Prenor Equity Inc. and Retail Engineering were named as respondents.

[para14] Effective the 20th day of November, 1991, Prenor Equity Inc. appointed Peat Marwick Thorne Inc. in the stead of Retail Engineering and it is from that appointment that Peat Marwick Thorne Inc. appears along with Prenor as respondents in this application.

[para15] This story had its commencement in a piece of correspondence dated February 6, 1990, where seven persons wrote a strong and complaining letter to one Hugh C. Hagen, President, Canterra Commercial Developments Limited, in which they expressed very serious complaints. I describe these persons as unit holders, although some may have been in possession and some may not have been in possession at the time. One complaint, listed as item 10 on page 2 of that letter, appears as Exhibit F to the affidavit of Deo. It states, "When we purchased our units, we were advised that the 'phantom mortgage' would be less than having a mortgage. This has proved to be untrue."

[para16] The same letter also makes reference to complaints about "a built-in coffee maker" and "a courtesy van".

[para17] This letter goes on to say, and I quote for emphasis, "If we feel we have to, we will seek publicity through the local papers and the three national dailies, as well as the television media. We will also seek litigation against Canterra Developments, if so required." The letter then goes on to show copies sent to Mr. G. Turner, Member of Parliament, R.T. Miller, Mayor, and Mr. R.W. Shettell, Director of Building Department, Ontario New Home Warranty Program.

[para18] In what I find to be an obvious and direct response to the February 6th correspondence, Mr. Hugh C. Hagen, President of Canterra Developments Inc., directed a letter dated February 13, 1990 to all suite owners. It appears from the information that not all suite owners received this correspondence and from the cross-examination of M. Harper, it would appear that at least she did not rely on the correspondence.

[para19] The correspondence from Mr. Hagen, hereinafter referred to as the "Hagen letter", asserted in Item 5, that the coffee makers were on order and would be installed shortly, and in Item 6, that the courtesy van would be provided at registration of the condominium.

[para20] It is Item 15 that has proven to be the root of the litigation before me. It reads as follows;

VENDOR TAKE-BACK MORTGAGE The Purchase and Sale Agreement clearly shows the vendor take-back mortgage at Toronto Dominion Bank prime rate plus 2%. Current first mortgage rates are lower although this is an unusual phenomenon in the financial world. On the unit transfer date (i.e. condominium registration), we will be refunding to you the difference between your vendor take-back mortgage interest paid and the interest rate on a first mortgage that is calculated ninety days prior to the unit transfer date. Therefore, although the net effect will not be less than had you had a mortgage, it will be the same as if you had had one.

[my emphasis]

[para21] The Hagen letter was written on behalf of Canterra Developments Inc. The complaining purchasers had directed the correspondence to Canterra and it is clear from looking at the Hagen letter as a whole, that Mr. Hagen was attempting to "buy peace" and avoid the unpleasant consequences, including litigation, set out in the original correspondence. Copies of the Hagen letter are shown to have been directed to the same persons as were copies of the original letter of complaint.

[para22] Peace was not to be had. A Notice of Application was issued in March, 1991. I reproduce the relevant terms of that Notice of Application below:

1. The applicant makes application for:

a. The determination of the applicants' rights pursuant to: i. Agreements of Purchase and Sale (hereinafter referred to as the "Agreements"), with the respondent, as vendor, with respect to residential condominium units (referred to herein as the "units"), in a proposed residential condominium project located in Georgetown, Ontario known as the Royal Ascott Club

b. More particularly, a determination: ii. Contractual Interpretation Issues: (1) Is the respondent Prenor bound to complete each transaction of Purchase and Sale in accordance with and by the terms and conditions of each Agreement?

iii. Phantom Mortgage Issues: (2) How much is the monthly occupancy fee legally chargeable to each applicant? (4) Are the applicants entitled to the return of all monies paid on account of the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee from their respective occupancy dates?

... c. If this court determines that the Agreements are not binding on the applicant for any reason, then the applicant requests: i. A declaration that the Agreements are not binding on the applicants/purchasers; iii. an order for the return of any or all of the applicants/purchasers' deposits, if so demanded by any such applicant/purchaser, together with interest thereon in accordance with their respective Agreements and s. 53 of the Condominium Act. d. In any event, the applicants request: i. an order requiring the respondents to pay into court pending the final disposition of these proceedings: 1. all amounts paid to date on account of the occupancy fees by the applicants, or such part thereof as this court deems just; 2. all amounts paid to date on account of the deposits paid by the applicants. iii. an order for the return of any other monies found owing to the applicants/purchasers, including if so found: 1. all monies paid on account of the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee together with interest thereon from the date of payment; 2. the full amount of all occupancy fees paid together with interest thereon from the date of payment; 3. any amounts found owing on account of a reduction and/or rebate of the monthly occupancy fees as a result of a breach of statutory duty or otherwise, together with interest thereon from the date of payment.

[para23] It is clear from the affidavits filed, the excerpts from earlier cross-examinations as well as the cross-examinations of Miller and Deo, that paragraph 15 in the Hagen letter was clearly put before the Judge in the Motions Court hearing the return of that application.

[para24] Each of the applicants in this application was an applicant in the earlier application heard by Mr. Justice Wright. Somerset and Prenor were party respondents to that application and, at that time, Retail Engineering was the receiver. In this application, the respondents remain the same, save and except Peat Marwick Thorne Inc. who is now the receiver. Given the role of a receiver, I find it is not relevant that the receivers had changed. Therefore, for all intents and purposes, the parties before me are the identical parties who appeared before Wright J.

[para25] The judgment of Mr. Justice Wright, delivered Wednesday, the 24th day of July, 1991, is reproduced in part as follows;

5. THIS COURT DECLARES that the respondent Prenor Equity Inc. is a declarant under the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. ch. S 4 as amended in respect of the Royal Ascott Condominium Project located in Georgetown, Ontario, and as such, assumes all of the rights and liabilities of the respondent Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited as of November 22, 1990 including honouring the Agreements with the applicants which includes: a) Reducing any part of the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee paid by each applicant from time to time and not repaid to any of the applicants pursuant to the terms of this judgment based upon the difference between the rate actually used in the calculation of the occupancy fee being 15.49% and the mortgage rate effective ninety days prior to the unit transfer date; b) A provision of a courtesy van for the condominium corporation; and c) Supplying appropriate furniture for the lobby of the building located at 26 Hall Road South, Georgetown, Ontario. [my emphasis]

[para26] On the basis of the above, I conclude that the "Hagen letter" as set out in paragraph 15, was placed before the court for a determination of its force and effect. For reasons unknown, Wright J. was not asked to interpret the meaning or to establish the "mortgage rate".

[para27] The matter was appealed to the Ontario Court of Appeal by Prenor Equity Inc. It was not necessary under the terms of the judgment of Mr. Justice Wright for the other respondents to appeal.

[para28] The Notice of Appeal of Prenor Equity Inc. dated August 9, 1991 included the following grounds of appeal.

h) the learned trial Judge erred in finding that Prenor Equity Inc. was bound by the representations made by Somerset with respect to a reduction of the mortgage interest component, the provision of a courtesy van for the condominium corporation and the supplying of appropriate furniture for the lobby of the complex; in any event, the latter two promises are vague and unenforceable.

[para29] The Order of the Court of Appeal dated Tuesday, the 13th day of October, 1992, reads as follows:

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that the appeal be and is hereby allowed with costs and that the application be and is hereby dismissed with costs.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS that the judgment of The Honourable Mr. Justice Wright dated July 24, 1991 be and is hereby set aside.

[para30] The reasons given in the Court of Appeal were delivered by Mr. Justice Robins J.A. and are reported under the name of Abdool, et al. v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., et al. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120. Under the heading "Was there any basis upon which an abatement of the purchasers' interim occupancy fee or rent could be ordered?", the learned Justice, speaking on behalf of the whole panel, stated at p. 155,

I should perhaps note Prenor's concession to the effect that Somerset's agreement to reduce the mortgage interest component paid by each purchaser by the difference between the rate actually used in the calculation of the occupancy fee and the mortgage rate effective ninety days prior to the unit transfer date is a liability of Somerset for which the receiver is responsible on final closing. [my emphasis]

[para31] By correspondence dated October 28, 1992, Mr. Fine wrote to solicitor Robert Miller, the letter which appears as Exhibit M2 to the affidavit of Marrio D. Deo. The letter reads as follows:

In order to properly advise our client and perhaps avoid an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, we need to know your position with respect to the terms of closing, including:

- a) Closing date;
- b) Adjustment in purchase price/occupancy fee or other credit to the purchasers including reduction of mortgage interest component;
- c) Availability of mortgage financing;
- d) Your position with respect to the costs of both the application and the appeal.

We would appreciate receiving your advice as soon as possible as we are meeting with our clients on November 2, 1992. [my emphasis]

[para32] The above correspondence gave rise to a response from Robert Miller dated October 30, 1992 which appears as Exhibit N to the Deo affidavit. I reproduce that correspondence below:

Further to your letter of October 28, 1992, we respond as follows (numbering our paragraphs to correspond to those in your letter aforesaid):

- a) As set out in our letter to you of October 22, 1992, final closings have been scheduled for November 18, 1992.
- b) There will be no adjustment in the purchase price or occupancy fee. However, in accordance with the Court of Appeal decision (page 61) there will be a reduction in the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate effective ninety days prior to closing.
- c) As set out in our letter to you of October 22, 1992, our client is prepared to review applications from your clients with respect to mortgage financing.
- d) It appears quite clear that the Court of Appeal awarded costs to our client both in the appeal and on the original application and as a result, our client will be expecting payment accordingly. Mr. Schwartz is in the process of completing our client's bill of costs and will forward same to you in due course. However, our client is prepared to attempt to settle the issue of costs ... same as vendor's credit in the Statement of Adjustments in order to avoid further costs and accrued interest payable by your clients.
- e) We confirm that the foregoing information is given in order to assist you in advising your client, however, we fail to understand what this information has to do with the merits of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. [my emphasis]

[para33] It is paragraph 15 of the Hagen letter and the notation of Robins J.A., now described as the Prenor concession, combined with the Fine correspondence of October 28, 1992, Item b, and the Miller correspondence of October 30, 1992, Item b, that have given rise to the application before me.

[para34] It is quite significant to note that by correspondence dated October 22, 1992, Miller had written to Fine. I reproduce the significant portions below:

We therefore wish to advise that the final closings shall occur on November 18, 1992.

The Statement of Adjustments on all closing documentation will be prepared in accordance with the original terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between your clients and Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited ("Somerse") subject to the following amendments:

1. All closing documentation will be executed by Somerset's receiver/manager; Peat, Marwick, Thorne Inc.
2. All "rental fees" paid by your clients will be credited against outstanding occupancy fees payable by your clients pursuant to the provisions of the original Agreements.

We will be forwarding to you the draft transfer statements of adjustments, draft estoppel certificates and the remainder of the closing documents under separate cover. [my emphasis]

[para35] In the application before me, the applicants seek to enforce the Hagen letter to reduce the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fees. They also seek to enforce the Prenor concession made by counsel for Prenor in the Court of Appeal. They also assert that the Miller letter of October 30th was a re-affirmation of the Hagen letter and a confirmation of the Prenor concession. Counsel argued that all three were connected and had to be read together. They argue that the Miller letter does not stand alone.

[para36] Taken out of context, the Miller letter could arguably be looked upon as a re-affirmation of the Hagen letter and a confirmation of the Prenor concession. However, read in conjunction with the Fine letter of October 28th and having regard to the different wording respecting the rate of interest to be used, I find that approach to be flawed. The Hagen letter used the phrase "the interest rate on a first mortgage". Mr. Justice Wright in his decision used the phrase "the mortgage rate". Robins J.A. in reciting the Prenor concession described it as Somerset's agreement to reduce the mortgage interest component by the difference between the rate actually used in the calculation of the occupancy fee and the "mortgage rate" effective ninety days prior to the unit transfer date. The Miller letter does not say this. The Miller letter says "There will be a reduction in the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate effective ninety days prior to closing" [my emphasis]. The first mortgage rate, effective ninety days prior to the unit transfer date, is clearly not the same as the mortgage rate. Further, the interest rate, effective ninety days prior to closing, is different from both of them.

[para37] The Miller letter has to be read in conjunction with the Fine letter of October 28th. The Fine letter very carefully distinguished between adjustments in purchase price/occupancy fee and other credit of the purchasers, including reduction of mortgage interest component. That distinction was picked up on by Miller who replied that there would be no adjustment in the purchase price or occupancy fee, hence adopting Fine's separation of these items. In dealing specifically with the issue of other credit to the purchasers, including reduction of mortgage interest component, Miller responded:

However, in accordance with the Court of Appeal decision (page 61), there will be a reduction in the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate effective ninety days prior to closing.

[para38] From the Miller letter of October 30th, down to the date fixed for unit transfer at the Milton Registry Office, the 23rd of December, 1992, the parties negotiated and renegotiated the issue of the adjustment, if any, to be given by Somerset to the purchasers in the mortgage interest component. Draft Statements of Adjustments were prepared demonstrating a credit. Then they were withdrawn and Statements of Adjustments were delivered demonstrating no credit. In effect, the parties entered into a series of negotiations to attempt to work out whether or not an adjustment on unit transfer would be given for the mortgage interest component and, if such an adjustment was to be given on unit transfer, what interest rate would be used and what formula would be followed in order to calculate that adjustment.

[para39] From the correspondence of the parties and their conduct, it is more than apparent that they intended to treat any reduction of the mortgage interest component as a matter for adjustment on unit transfer and not as a matter of purchase price or occupancy fee. This was their intention, notwithstanding the fact that the financial net effect of varying the mortgage interest component would substantially vary the monies payable upon unit transfer. Though the amounts of money involved would be substantial for each unit purchaser, the issue became one of adjustments, and adjustments only.

[para40] Miller, in the correspondence of October 30, 1992, asserted that there would be a reduction of the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate, effective ninety days prior to closing, which he stated was in accordance with the appeal decision, citing page 61 of the Reasons.

[para41] The Order in the Court of Appeal did not deal directly with paragraph 15 of the Hagen letter. It overturned the decision of Wright J. whose judgment gave effect to the provisions of that letter to the benefit of the purchasers. Therefore, the issue of the Hagen promise was only indirectly before the Court of Appeal.

[para42] Notwithstanding the Prenor concession, as it was described in the reasons for the Court of Appeal, I find that, if the court had intended to preserve a form of rebate as contemplated in the Hagen letter for the benefit of the respondents before them, it would have appeared in the court's Order, which it does not. The issue of the force and effect of the Hagen promise was dealt with and disposed of by the Court of Appeal by setting aside the judgment of Wright J.

[para43] Counsel for the applicants urged that I should treat the Prenor concession as an undertaking by counsel for Prenor to the Court of Appeal and, as such, it should be given force and effect regardless of the result in the Court of Appeal.

[para44] I cannot agree with that position. At the time of the making of the so-called Prenor concession, the appeal was in progress with no knowledge as to the outcome. Subsequent to the making of the concession, the Court of Appeal unanimously struck down Wright J.'s finding that the Hagen promise had force and effect. If the Court of Appeal had intended to substitute the Prenor concession and to order that the purchasers be given the benefit of the Hagen promise or the Prenor concession, I find that it would have done so in the Order. It would not have left the matter in the hands of the parties to be subject to some further interpretation by this court without so directing.

[para45] It is my view that, notwithstanding the comments by Mr. Justice Robins at p. 155 of the decision set out above, it was the intent of the Court of Appeal to achieve the result in the order given, which was to strike down the judgment of Wright J., including paragraph 5 (a) which, of necessity, includes the Hagen promise. [para46] Having said that, I must now turn to Robert Miller's letter.

[para47] It is clear from his letter that Mr. Miller was acting under the belief that the decision in the Court of Appeal was in some way granted a reduction in the mortgage interest component to reflect the interest rate effective ninety days prior to closing. His letter referred to page 61 of the decision of the Court of Appeal which obviously meant the Prenor concession. Having regard to my comments above, it is clear that Miller is mistaken in his understanding of the effect of the decision in the Court of Appeal. It is equally apparent from Miller's letter that his words were written with an intention to accord with the decision in the Court of Appeal. I strongly doubt that Miller would have written those words if he had not mistakenly believed that the Order of the Court of Appeal would somehow create that reduction. As I have indicated, Miller is clearly in error. I also believe that as an experienced solicitor he would not have used the words "interest rate" if he had intended to say the "mortgage rate".

[para48] If Miller had intended to offer the return of a benefit which had been taken away by the Court of Appeal, he would surely have referred to the concession in the Court of Appeal's decision or the undertaking of counsel in the Court of Appeal, or at least used the same words for describing the interest rate. I do not believe that, by using the words that appear in paragraph b of this correspondence, Miller was intending to reopen the Hagen promise which had just been struck down or the Prenor concession which was not enforced or interpreted by the Court of Appeal.

[para49] I am supported in this belief by the Miller letter of October 22, 1992, referred to above, where Miller stated:

The Statement of Adjustments and all closing documentation will be prepared in accordance with the original terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between your clients and Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Limited ...

[para50] I am reinforced in that belief by noting that the decision of the Court of Appeal was released October 13, 1992, nine days prior to Miller's letter of October 22, 1992. The disposition would by then have been known to him.

[para51] The Miller letter was put forward on the basis that it was a reaffirmation and/or confirmation of the Hagen promise and the Prenor concession. The changes in wording between the three of these demonstrates, in my view, that at its highest, the Miller letter might be treated as a different proposal. As I have already indicated, Miller was clearly mistaken in his interpretation of the result in the Court of Appeal. Having regard to this and to the changes in the wording, and placing this in the context of Miller's letter of October 22nd, I conclude that Miller was attempting to negotiate in a manner designed to foster the closing of the transactions. Having concluded this, I direct my attention to the case of Gilbert Steel v. University Construction Limited (1976), 12 O.R. (2d) 19. In my view, the Miller letter, looked on at its highest, is an attempt to induce closing and not a reaffirmation of the Hagen promise or a confirmation of the Prenor concession. The applicants contributed nothing to obtain the words set out in the Miller letter. Once the decision in the Court of Appeal had been rendered, the applicants were returned to a position of being bound to close the transactions in accordance with the original Agreements of Purchase and Sale. It is apparent from the negotiations of the parties that the applicants had been raising the spectre of their refusal to close as a negotiation technique which they combined with the concept of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada in the Abdool case, as well as a resolution of the costs in that case. Included in those negotiations as well was a reduction in the mortgage interest component.

[para52] I find that the Miller letter was a response designed to foster closing and that the only consideration which the applicants could have advanced for that term of the Miller letter would be to close the transactions. Since the applicants were already under a legal obligation to close at the time the Miller letter was delivered, and since the applicants could not have done less without being guilty of a breach, I find that the Miller letter has no greater force and effect than the promise referred to in the case of Gilbert Steel cited above and, as such, it is not enforceable.

[para53] Looking to the concept of detrimental reliance, I would point out that there was no evidence before this court that any of the applicants relied upon the Miller letter to their detriment or, in fact, relied upon the Miller letter at all. This application can only be decided on the basis of the documentary evidence submitted. I find that the evidence before me is not sufficient to support an allegation of a detrimental reliance.

[para54] In any event, the so-called issue of the Prenor concession, the Miller correspondence, the issues of an appeal by some of the applicants in the Abdool case and the subject of costs of the Ontario appeal in the Abdool case, all became mixed together and the subject matter of a series of negotiations. Counsel returned before Justice Robins to settle the Order and to try and deal with the Prenor concession. All of those negotiations, including the negotiations on whether or not there would be a reduction of the mortgage interest component, and if so, at what possible rate of interest might it be, continued unabated up to the 23rd of December, 1992. It is clear from the documents and the evidence of the witnesses that no agreement was ever reached by the parties as to whether or not the purchasers were entitled to a mortgage interest component reduction. Even if they were so entitled, no agreement was ever reached as to what the appropriate rate of interest should be in order to ascertain the calculation for such a deduction.

[para55] The correspondence makes it clear that, eventually, the solicitors for the vendor asserted that they would rely on the original terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. The parties agreed to a closing date in the Milton Registry Office on the 23rd of December, 1992. Prior to the attendance on closing, the vendors had delivered what they declared to be the Statements of Adjustments. These Statements of Adjustments did not make any allowance for a reduction in the mortgage interest component, making it clear that the vendor was no longer negotiating on that subject.

[para56] By correspondence dated the 23rd of December, 1992, being Exhibit Z to the affidavit of Deo, solicitor Deo stated the following:

This letter is hereby delivered to you prior to the closing appointments, scheduled for this day, at the Registry Office in Milton.

We have expressed our client's position to you many times that the proper interest rate to be applied to reduce the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fees throughout the occupancy period is 6.25%, which was the one-year Toronto Dominion Bank closed mortgage rate in effect ninety days prior to today.

As a compromise of the dispute as to the proper rate to be applied, we have prepared the Statement of Adjustment and we are hereby tendering on you the balances due on closing, calculated using an interest rate of 10% in respect of the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fees.

Our client's tender is made on the basis that if the tender is accepted by you, the mortgage interest component reduction issue will be settled between our respective clients.

If your clients are not willing to accept the funds and documents tendered, and close the transaction on that basis, please advise us accordingly and immediately. If you do not so advise us, we will take anything other than your express written rejection, as your clients' acceptance of same. Under no circumstances will we complete the applicable transactions unless it puts an end to this dispute.

In order to avoid any situation where the minor miscalculations will result in a need to readjust any of the transactions, we hereby advise you that we are holding, on behalf of each client, the sum of $1,000.00 which we have been given authority to utilize in case there is a need for readjustment. Accordingly, if any error is made in our tender to you, we are in a position to personally undertake to readjust any error or omission in the Statement of Adjustments up to a maximum of $1,000.00 per closing. Hence, you will not be able to take the position that a tender is short a few dollars.

[para57] It is clear from the documents filed and the evidence of Deo that the purchasers were prepared to adjust any of the other aspects of the Statement of Adjustments after closing, with the exception of the mortgage interest component which they then insisted had to be adjusted in the terms provided by themselves and none other.

[para58] From the earlier correspondence recited above, it is apparent that the parties had agreed to treat the mortgage interest component as an entirely separate adjustment to be negotiated. The mortgage interest component was not to be treated as part of the purchase price or part of the occupancy fees but was to be a separate item for which credit would or would not be given depending upon whether any agreement could be reached by the parties during the intervening negotiations.

No such agreement was reached.

[para59] It is undisputed in this application that the purchasers attended at the Milton Registry Office and refused to close the transactions unless the vendors would comply with the terms and conditions set out in the Deo letter of December 23, 1992 set out above. Those terms and conditions presupposed that the Hagen promise and/or the Prenor concession and/or the Miller letter of October 30th were in force and effect, that the terms of those three items relied upon by the purchasers were capable of a meaningful interpretation and that the most unfavourable interpretation to the purchasers was the compromise rate of 10%. Counsel for the applicant has taken the position before me that he was either entirely right or entirely wrong in that position.

[para60] More significantly, the purchasers took the position "under no circumstances will we complete the applicable transactions unless it puts an end to this dispute." In effect, the purchasers made it a condition of closing that the issues were required to merge on closing including not only whether or not a mortgage interest component reduction was required to be given by the vendors but also the rate at which that mortgage interest component reduction had to be calculated.

[para61] The vendor refused to accept the purchasers' terms. Mr. Miller attended at the Registry Office in Milton in a position to complete each of the applicant's transactions of purchase and sale under protest. The vendor was prepared to accept payments in the amounts calculated by the purchasers in exchange for which they would deliver to each purchaser their unit transfer conveying title for each respective unit to each respective purchaser. However, the vendor insisted on a reservation of all of the parties' rights to dispute the amounts of money properly due on closing to be brought in the appropriate court proceedings by either party after final closing of all of the transactions.

[para62] As it was so colourfully put to me by counsel for the respondents, the vendors attended prepared to accept anything the purchasers would give them ("including a baseball bat and my brother") in exchange for which they would hand over the unit transfers and convey title of each unit to each purchaser. All they required in return was the right to litigate if the vendors felt they were entitled to a mortgage interest component rate of 15.49%. Alternatively, if the purchasers felt they were entitled to a mortgage interest component rate of 6.25%, they could litigate for that or have a vendor and purchaser motion to settle the adjustments.

[para63] It was conceded by counsel for the applicant that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale does not provide for merger. Quite to the contrary, the Agreement as cited above provides for some readjustments which, of necessity, have to be ascertained after the date of the final closing or unit transfer date. The parties agree that the purchasers were prepared to adjust and resolve any or all of the smaller items of adjustment at a date subsequent to the unit transfer date (final closing) (Deo cross-examination P69Q441). Most significantly, the agreement at page 5, paragraph 16, provides that the "covenants, warranties and obligations contained in this agreement shall survive the closing of this transaction and shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding the transfer of title of the units to the purchaser."

[para64] I find that, at the closing in Milton, the purchasers unilaterally attempted to enforce their interpretation of the Hagen promise/ Prenor concession/Miller letter, both as to liability and interest rate, and that they unilaterally attempted to enforce the extinction of rights by way of merger on those issues notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 16 cited above. This conduct by the purchasers was in contravention of page 8, paragraph 30 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale cited above, wherein the parties agreed:

... That there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this Agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing.

[para65] In all of the circumstances, I find that the purchasers were not justified in refusing to close the transactions and that they took an unreasonable position prior to closing by attempting to force amendments to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale that would materially alter the terms of that Agreement to the detriment of the vendors. This, in my view, was an anticipatory breach of a fundamental term of that contract which matured into an actual breach at the Milton Registry Office when they refused to close.

[para66] I find that the vendors acted reasonably and within the terms of the original Agreement of Purchase and Sale in offering to close the transactions under protest with each of the parties having the right to determine their position by subsequent litigation, as clearly contemplated by the original Agreement of Purchase and Sale. This is not a case where the purchasers were being asked to purchase litigation.

[para67] Having made these findings, it is not necessary to interpret the meaning of the Hagen promise, the Prenor concession or the Miller letter. Nor is it necessary to calculate the interest rate that may have been contemplated in any of the three of them. Had I been obliged to attempt that calculation, I would not have been able to do so on the basis of the information in front of me. The wording of all three is vague and uncertain and would require me to arbitrarily select an interest rate from the information put before me when the parties in their negotiations and in their documentation had been dealing with various different interest rates calculated to two points of decimals. Of the three, I find the wording of the Miller letter to be the most uncertain and the least capable of being given a meaningful interpretation.

[para68] I find myself unable to reconcile the difference between the phrase contained in the Hagen letter and the Prenor concession with the phrase in the Miller letter, being "the first mortgage rate", "the mortgage rate" and "the interest rate" respectively. Aside from the impossibility of calculation, these differences make it impossible for me to determine which of a multitude of interest rates could have been intended.

[para69] In the final result, I conclude that the provisions of the original Agreement of Purchase and Sale were in force and effect and that the applicants were each in breach of that agreement when they refused to proceed with the closing at the Milton Registry Office. As a consequence of the applicants' breaches of the obligations under the contracts of Purchase and Sale, their application is dismissed.

[para70] Having regard to the findings above, the counterapplication is successful. The terms of the judgment in the counter-application cannot be appropriately determined at this time because of the changes that have taken place in occupancy and also because of the arrangements that were made for the collection of monies by the purchasers' solicitors, monies which are currently being held in trust.

[para71] It will be necessary for there to be a reference to the Master in Toronto. In order to properly structure the form of order to be made covering the relief claimed in the counter-application and to prepare the proper directions of the issues to be put before the Master in Toronto, I direct counsel to re-attend before me to settle those issues and allow the appropriate Order and directions to be prepared.

[para72] On the subject of costs, it would, perhaps, be usual for costs to follow the event. The applicants have been found in breach of their Agreements of Purchase and Sale. However, it seems to me that some of the motivation behind the conduct of the applicants arose directly as a consequence of the conduct of the respondents. Though I have found that the conduct of the respondents was not sufficient to found the basis for granting the application, it is still my view that the respondents did, in part, contribute to the problems between the parties. On that basis, there will be no costs to the respondents in the application.

[para73] With respect to the issues of costs in the counter-application, the applicants to the counter-application shall have their costs of re-attendance before me to settle the terms of the judgment to be given and shall further have their costs of the reference before the Master in Toronto and any other attendances that might be necessitated before me thereafter on the party and party scale.

Nipissing Condominium Corp. No. 24, Applicant, and Graeme Ferris and Agathe Ferris, Respondents

Action No. 1874-93 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Hogg J. June 23, 1993.

Donald M.W. Wood, Counsel for the Applicant. Graeme Ferris, in person and for Agathe Ferris.

[para1] HOGG J.:-- BIJOU, a ten-pound Maltese dog, is the subject matter of this application. The respondent, Graeme Ferris, is a middle-aged man who lives with his mother, Agathe, (who is over 80 years of age and in poor health), at 155 Timmins Street, Unit 115, which is part of the applicant, NIPISSING CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION #24.

[para2] This condominium complex is a luxury one and is situated in the city of North Bay on the shores of Lake Nipissing, surrounded by a considerable area of landscaped property. The declaration of the applicant condominium, contains the following, "no animal, livestock, fowl, insect, reptile or pet of any kind shall be kept in any unit." The applicants are obliged to bring the proceedings to this court.

[para3] The issue before me is whether I should order the removal of BIJOU. The facts are not in dispute. The dog lives in the condominium with the respondents. This is not a "bad dog case" and there is no allegation that the animal is misbehaving or causing any problem, so far as the other residents are concerned. It appears that a discovery was made that some five dogs were resident in the condominium. Notices were issued and all but BIJOU have left.

[para4] Section 12(3) of The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. 26 provides subsection (3).

"The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-law and the rules."

[para5] Section 49 of The Condominium Act, provides that the condominium may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty.

[para6] Subsection (2) provides:

[para7] The respondents submit that the application should be dismissed on the grounds that the dog is a therapy, utility animal and more particularly, it is a hearing assist dog.

[para8] Evidence concerning hearing assist dogs is before me as is the qualification of BIJOU to fall into that category. There is no evidence to the contrary. It is submitted to me that there is a parallel or a similarity between a guide dog who assists the vision deprived and a hearing assist dog. There is provincial legislation, a Guide Dog Act, for the visually impaired. There is no such legislation for those with hearing disabilities.

[para9] Hearing Ear Dogs are a recognized category. The Hearing Ear Dogs of Canada Program trains these animals and the cost is some $4000.00. There is apparently a waiting list of up to 3 years to acquire such dog. The respondent's evidence is that a dog will not be certified if it is over 1 year of age and therefore BIJOU does not qualify.

[para10] The affidavit material before me indicates that the dog in question can distinguish between different noises and different telephones and is able to assist this elderly lady. There is sufficient material for me to come to the conclusion that it should be regarded as a hearing assist dog.

[para11] A case involving the handicapped, a dog and a condominium with prohibitions is Metropolitan Toronto Condominium v. Gifford, 6 R.P.R. (2nd) 217. In that case Gifford was confined to a wheelchair and relied on his 15 pound poodle for companionship and therapeutic and emotional support. As is the case here, there had been no complaint as to the behaviour of the dog for cleanliness or nuisance. Herold J. dealt with the criteria that the court should consider in applying s. 49 of The Condominium Act. Page 224 stated:

"Obviously, the major advantage of permitting non-compliance in this case would be that Mr. Gifford would be permitted to retain a dog of which he is very fond and upon which he may even be to some extent dependent. Another advantage is that he will be able to remain in this building which appears to be a very desirable one with very likable neighbours rather than having to move out as he has indicated he might do if he is not permitted to keep his dog there. The major advantage of requiring compliance, on the other hand, appears to me to be that a message will be sent out by the board to the unit owners that the declaration and by-laws are in place for a good reason and they will be enforced, and a message will also be sent by the Court that where the board acts reasonably in carrying out its duty to enforce the by-laws and declaration the board will be supported by the Court. To permit non-compliance in this case would clearly open the door to numerous, possibly very legitimate, requests by other unit owners to exempt them from certain other requirements in the declaration and by-laws on the basis that each case should be decided on its own merits. While I do not disagree that each case must be decided on its own merits, at least by the Court if not by the board who appears to have no discretion, the general message surely must be that enforcement will be expected and exceptions will be rare and will require a court application in any event. A longer-term result of this position surely will be that people will only move into the building if they are prepared to live by the rules of the community which they are joining - if they are not they are perfectly free to join another community whose rules and regulations may be more in keeping with their particular individual needs, wishes or preferences.

Considering all of the factors which I think should be considered in exercising discretion, I have come to the conclusion that my discretion should be exercised in favour of enforcing the declaration and granting the relief requested by the Condominium Corp."

[para12] The case is similar to the one before me, but in my opinion can be distinguished on its own facts. As my Brother Herold said, "Each case should be decided on its own merits." "Exceptions will be rare and will require a court application in any event." I agree with Herold J., that the "exceptions will be rare." In my view they will be far and few between. The legislature has specifically given to the court a discretion. In my view on the facts of this case, it should be exercised in the favour of the respondent and therefore, the application will be dismissed.

[para13] I now deal with costs. There was an apparent and prima facie breach of the declaration. The board of directors had no alternative but to bring this application. The facts of the case were unique. In referring to the evidence, as to the cost and as to the time required to obtain a Hearing Ear Dog, the inference was that a Hearing Ear Dog could be acquired but due to the age of the mother and the situation it would not be practicable. It is obvious that the mother is fond and attached to BIJOU but for the purposes of this application that is irrelevant. In my opinion, this is an exceptional matter and in my view the proper disposition of costs would be to order that the sum of $1000.00 be paid by the successful respondent to the applicant toward their costs.

York Condominium Corporation No. 63, and The Barrington-Rockwood Investment Corporation, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario as represented by the Minister of Correctional Services and the Minister of Government Services Action No. 466/91 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Non-Jury Sitings - Toronto, Ontario Dunnet J. April 10, 1991.

H.W. Winkler, for the Applicant. T. Bell, for the Respondent, The Barrington Rockwood Investment Corporation. R. Lewis, for Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario as represented by the Minister of Correctional Services and the Minister of Government Services.

DUNNET J. (orally):-- The applicant brings this application for a final and permanent injunction prohibiting the respondent, The Barrington-Rockwood Investment Corporation, from allowing a unit owned by the Corporation to be used by any parole or probation reporting office or permitting any other use which would violate the Building Code Act, the Condominium Act, or the Declaration and Rules.

The applicant also brings this application for a declaration that it is contrary to the Building Code Act, the Condominium Act, the Declaration and Rules of the Corporation for the Minister of Correctional Services or the Minister of Government Services to locate any parole or probation reporting office in the Corporation or to locate any other office in the Corporation which would violate the Building Code Act, the Condominium Act, or the Declaration or Rules of the Corporation; and for a final and permanent injunction prohibiting the respondent Corporation, or anyone on its behalf, from dealing with any of the common elements of the Corporation other than as permitted by the Building Code Act, or Condominium Act, or the Declaration or Rules of the Corporation.

The relevant grounds for the application are: The Barrington-Rockwood Investment Corporation is the registered owner of Unit 1, Level 9 in the Corporation, municipally known as Suite 900, 920 Yonge Street, Toronto. The Corporation has entered into a lease with the Minister of Government Services on behalf of the Minister of Correctional Services whereby the Minister will occupy the Unit on March 15, 1991 for the purposes of using it as a parole and probation reporting office; in order for the Minister to comply with the Building Code Act, it would be necessary, pursuant to the Condominium Act, for one or more of the respondents to obtain from the Corporation a licence with respect to certain common elements, which licence has not been granted. The use of the Unit for the purposes of a parole or probation reporting office constitutes the creation of a nuisance which will disturb the quiet enjoyment of the property by, among others, the owners contrary to the Rules and Regulations of the Corporation. Finally, the use of the Unit for the purposes of a parole or probation reporting office is contrary to the public interest in that it is estimated that approximately 800 to 1,000 visits by parolees or probationers will be made each month to the Unit. The Corporation is a mixed commercial and residential building containing a number of elderly individuals and single women and the buildings surrounding the Corporation are also residential in nature, including two senior citizens' residences.

The respondents have raised a preliminary objection directed to the power of the Court to grant the relief sought by the applicant.

This application originally came on before Mr. Justice Mandel, who adjourned the application at the request of the respondents. As a term of the adjournment he ordered that the premises in question not be resorted to by parolees or probationers until the matter is determined.

Following the adjournment, further material was filed including a supplementary affidavit of the property manager of the applicant.

The application came on before me. A number of preliminary objections were raised, one of which was the jurisdiction of the Court to hear the application. I ordered that I was not in a position to determine the issue until all of the evidence was heard by the Court on the application.

In response to further objections by the respondents I ordered that certain paragraphs in the affidavits filed on behalf of the property manager of the applicant be struck in that they were based on hearsay, and the source of the information and belief was not specified, pursuant to Rule 39.01(5). I stated that the onus is on the applicant to provide to the Court the best evidence available. I granted leave to the applicant to file a further and better affidavit of the property manager.

The applicant and respondents raised further objections to certain paragraphs in the factum arguing that they contained false inferences from the facts. I agreed to take those objections into consideration when deciding the main issue. Pursuant to my order, a further and better affidavit of the property manager was filed to which was attached as exhibit 31, the affidavits of residents of the applicant corporation expressing their concerns with respect to safety and security should a parole and probation office be located in the building, as well as their fear of the prospect of such a thing occurring.

The respondents argue that the concerns as to safety and security and the fears of the residents go to the very root of the issue in this matter.

They object to the admission of the 31 affidavits merely as exhibits to the affidavit of the property manager in that they would have no opportunity to cross-examine the residents on their affidavits. Moreover, they submit that the applicant has in effect sought to file these affidavits without leave of the Court. They argue that the facts contained in the affidavits are contentious and bear upon a material fact in dispute. Their evidence is that they are unaware of any reported incident involving threatening behaviour or any minor assaults involving a client of the office and a tenant during the 18 year period the office operated out of a prior location.

In MENSAH v. ROBINSON, [1989], a decision of Mr. Justice Watt, released February 22, 1989, he held at page 33:

"In practical terms, the sufficiency of proof upon a particular issue by a party bearing the onus in respect of that issue can be but rarely adjudged on the basis of controverted affidavit material even with cross-examination. Indeed, it has been elsewhere said that when there are controverted facts relating to matters essential to a decision, such facts cannot be found by an assessment of the credibility of deponents who have been neither seen nor heard by the trier of fact."

Although he was dealing with motions for summary judgment, I find his words equally applicable to the case at bar.

I have been referred to the case of In Re: Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation v. York Condominium Corporation No. 46, a decision of Borins, J. (1981), 31 O.R. (2d) 514: That case involved an application pursuant to the Condominium Act for an order appointing a receiver and manager of York Condominium Corporation, and directing him to comply with certain outstanding work orders issued by the City of North York and to cause the implementation of security measures at the site of the condominium property. The respondent raised a preliminary objection directed to the power of the Court to grant the relief sought by the applicant.

Borins, J. held at page 517: "It is in regard to the performance of the duties of the corporation and the unit owners that s. 49(1) is directed. This legislation is analogous to the procedure contained in Part IV of the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O., 1970, c. 236, as amended, and is intended to provide a summary, expeditious and inexpensive procedure for the enforcement of the statutory and contractual duties of condominium corporations and unit holders."

He further held that at p. 518:

"Since it is the role of a receiver to preserve property until the rights of those alleging an interest in it have been determined, it follows that there is no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver upon an originating application. And further, as the appointment of a receiver and manager is a special remedy with respect to which well-established procedure exists and which is available only in certain well-defined situations it was not the intention of the Legislature to empower the Court to make such an appointment pursuant to an application under s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978. I express no view whether on the materials before me the appointment of a receiver and manager would be justified. Since I am of the view that no power exists to appoint a receiver and manager on an application brought pursuant to s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978, the respondent must succeed upon its Preliminary objection. CMHC is not without a remedy. While it is prevented from seeking it by way of summary application, it may do so by commencing an appropriate action."

Here, the applicant submits that if I dismiss the application, he is without a remedy. I am of the view that he is not. He may commence an appropriate action. The relief sought by way of an injunction is in the nature of extraordinary relief. The applicant must show a strong case of probability that the apprehended mischief will arise. Moreover, the injunction sought is a discretionary remedy and sufficient grounds must be established to warrant the exercise by the Court of its discretion.

Based on the numerous objections and attendances before this Court on the application as well as the material before me, I find that it is not possible for a motions judge to resolve the conflicts in the evidence. The application as constituted and the supporting material are outside the ambit of what was surely contemplated by Rule 14. Therefore the application is dismissed.

SUBMISSIONS REGARDING COSTS NOT TRANSCRIBED

In view of what I have heard with respect to the adjournment sought before Mr. Justice Mandel, and in view of the fact that no undertaking was given at that time in the circumstances surrounding his order, I am not prepared to grant damages to the respondents.

I see no reason in this case to depart from the usual rule of awarding party and party costs to the respondents.

I have endorsed the record: For oral reasons delivered today, the application is dismissed. Costs of the application to the respondents.

Miriam Aiken and Sheila Reisman, and Dockside Village Inc., And Between Michael Woodman, and Dockside Village Inc.

Action Nos. RE 1642/90, RE 1640/90 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Wilson J. Heard: February 9, 1993. Judgment: February 18, 1993.

No counsel mentioned.

[para1] WILSON J. (endorsement):-- The applicants seek a declaration that they are entitled to rescind the agreements of purchase and sale they entered into in connection with the purchase of the condominium units from Dockside Village Inc. ("Dockside") in the Town of Collingwood. The respondent seeks a declaration that the agreements of purchase and sale have been breached and that they are entitled to damages. In the case of Miriam Aiken ("Aiken") and Sheila Reisman ("Reisman") these damages have been quantified. In the case of Michael Woodman ("Woodman"), they seek a reference to assess damages.

[para2] The issues raised by the applicants are:

1. The building permit for Dockside was not obtained by November 30, 1988 as required, but, rather, it was obtained by December 30, 1988. It is the position of the applicants that this was a true condition precedent which could not be waived by their clients except in writing.

2. The applicants state that they are entitled to rescind the agreements of purchase and sale pursuant to s. 52(6) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, as amended, for the following reasons:

(a) Full disclosure was not made in the disclosure statement initially provided to the applicants in 1988. The undisclosed items included By-Laws 3 and 4 of the Condominium Corporation and the Shared Facilities Agreement.

(b) The revised disclosure statement provided to the applicants in June 1990 contained material amendments from the original disclosure statement provided in 1988. The applicants state that the material amendments gave rise to the right of the applicants to rescind the agreements of purchase and sale within the ten-day period provided by s. 52(6) of the Act. The material amendments were that the "beach and boardwalk" area, as originally described as an amenity in the first disclosure statement, were described as the "shore area" in the second disclosure statement. Further, the provisions of the Recreational Facility Agreement constituted a material amendment due to certain governance issues, and due to the rights of the Committee to suspend use of the recreational facilities in case of breach.

3. Interest on the deposit should be from the date of receipt rather than, as calculated by the respondent, from the date of rescission if, in fact, the applicants are entitled to rescind the agreements of purchase and sale.

Issue 1 - The Building Permit

[para3] I find that, although a true condition of precedent may not be waived by one party unilaterally, it may be waived by both parties. This is a unilateral waiver by one party accepted by the other (see Giaouris v. Pritouris (1976), 2 R.P.R. 81 (Ont.C.A.) and Smale v. Van Der Weer (1977), 80 D.L.R. (3d) 704 (Ont.H.C.J.)) The conduct of the parties, including the applicants, were consistent only with the existence of the contract and must be taken as waiver of the option available in November 1988 to terminate it. The applicants cannot both affirm and disavow the agreements of purchase and sale. They accepted benefits under agreements of purchase and sale, including going into interim possession and, in the case of Aiken and Reisman, collecting rent. They must be taken to have affirmed the contract, even in the absence of expressed election in writing. (See Electric Power Equipment Ltd. v. RCA Victor Co. Ltd. (1963), 41 D.L.R. (2d) 727 (B.C.S.C.), Hanson v. Cameron, [1949] 1 D.L.R. 16 (S.C.C.), Halsbury's Laws of England, (4th Ed), London: Butterworths, 1976), Vol. 16, p. 1012 and Saskatchewan Co-Op Wheat Producers Ltd. v. Lucuik [1931] 2 D.L.R. 981 (Sask.C.A.).

[para4] Alternatively, I find that paragraph 18 of the agreement of purchase and sale must be read in conjunction with Schedule "E" to that document which states that the building permit must be "available" by November 30, 1988. It is clear that the building permit was going to be granted prior to November 30, 1988 and the issuance of the permit was only a procedural step. The Township of Collingwood allowed the footings to be poured and construction to begin prior to November 30, 1988 and the formal issuance of the building permit.

Issue Two - Does s. 52(6) of the Condominium Act Allow the Applicants to Rescind the Agreements of Purchase and Sale?

Was There Failure to Make Initial Disclosure?

[para5] I find that full disclosure was made as soon as reasonably possible in connection with By-law Nos. 3 and 4 and in connection with the Shared Facilities Agreement. By-law Nos. 3 and 4 were not provided to the plaintiffs at the time they signed the agreements of purchase and sale as they were not in existence at that date. They were provided to the applicants once they were created. By-law No. 3 allows the Condominium Corporation to enter into a Management Agreement. By-Law No. 4 authorizes the Condominium Corporation to enter into the Shared Facilities Agreement.

[para6] Providing these by-laws at a later date after the initial disclosure statement, and providing the Shared Facilities Agreement at a later date does not, after it was created, in my view, conflict with the obligations to provide initial disclosure enunciated in s. 52 of the Condominium Act.

[para7] I find that the ambit of s. 52 of the Condominium Act does not require the Shared Facility Agreement to be provided. What is required by s. 52(b) is the "general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities." (emphasis added)

[para8] Brenner et al. v. H.L.S. York Developments Ltd. (1985), 37 R.P.R. 220 deals with this issue at p. 231, as follows:

There is no requirement that a draft of the proposed agreement covering "recreational and other amenities" be provided with the disclosure statement. Revised Regulations of Ontario 1980, Reg. 121, s. 52, passed under the Condominium Act, specifies the documents to be provided with the disclosure statement, and such a document is not included.

Was there a material amendment in the revised disclosure statement provided to the applicants in June of 1990?

[para9] Having regard to the test outlined by Robins J. in Re Abdool et al. v. Somerset Developments et al (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 (Ont.C.A.), I do not find that the provisions of the Recreational Facilities Agreement constitutes a material amendment giving rise to the right of rescission. Two matters give rise to complaint. First is the ability of the Chairman of the Recreational Facility Committee to cast a deciding vote in case of a tie with the other four Committee members; the second concern is the right of the Committee to suspend the use of the facilities for breach of the rules enunciated in the Shared Facility Agreement.

[para10] I find therefore that the applicants' concern with the Recreational Facility Agreement is not material non-disclosure as previously outlined, nor is it a material change giving rise to a right to rescission. I further reiterate the conclusion of Carruthers J. in Brenner that terms of a recreational agreement are not contemplated as giving rights of rescission for non-disclosure or material change.

Beach and Boardwalk versus Shore Area

[para11] The original disclosure statement described in the amenities section includes the "beach and boardwalk". The revised disclosure statement described as an amenity the "shore area". It is important to note that in the original disclosure statement, where the rules are outlined, that the preamble is as follows:

10. Shore Area (Boardwalk, Beach and Boat Ramp)

The applicants expressed disappointment that the shore area was not improved to the degree that had been represented to them. The promotional literature for Dockside states that the complex will have its "own sandy beach". Clearly, this representation has been met. The issue then relates to the representations as to the extent of the beach, and the absence of a boardwalk.

[para12] The evidence of Dockside is that, due to accretion of the land which occurred after the first disclosure statement, that the area which was originally intended to be a boardwalk was able to be replaced by grass with a deck in the centre of the project adjacent to the beach. The accretion of land, in fact, added substantially to the beach and shore area due to the changed water levels in Georgian Bay. The replacement of the boardwalk in the original disclosure statement by level green grass was possible due to the accretion of land.

[para13] A replacement of grass in lieu of a boardwalk due to a change in the water levels of Georgian Bay is not, in my view, a material amendment to the disclosure statement giving rise to right of rescission. The issue relating to the beach must next be considered.

[para14] The applicants thought there was going to be a beach area within reasonably close proximity to their unit. It is clear that the Condominium Corporation cannot alter the shoreline itself as that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the province. They may improve the area up to the shoreline. There is a sandy beach in the centre aspect of the Dockside project. Given the low level of the water in Georgian Bay in last year, in fact there was a sandy beach for the stretch of the entire project. If the water level in Georgian Bay rises, the sandy beach may be in the central portion of the project only. I concur with the submission by counsel for Dockside that the applicants' problems may be with the ebb and flow of water in Georgian Bay, but the developer, Dockside, cannot be criticized. I, therefore, conclude that there is no material amendment in the Revised Disclosure Statement. What was originally contemplated being a "boardwalk, beach and boat ramp", is now a grassy area, deck, beach and boat ramp. This change, due to accretion of land is not a material amendment giving rise to the right of rescission.

[para15] The respondents urged me to consider the subjective aspects of the changes. It is clear that the applicants Aiken and Reisman were not intending to live in the condominium unit, but were purchasing the unit as speculation for investment. Any subjective aspects of these applicants is greatly diminished by their intention to hold the Dockside unit for investment. The applicant Woodside raised concerns about the inability to windsurf based on the changes to the shore area. That does not appear to be borne out in any way by the evidence. There is a windsurfer rack, and windsurfing is a regular activity on the shores of Dockside.

The Conclusion

[para16] The application is, therefore, dismissed. I will accept written submissions in connection with costs within 30 days of the release of this endorsement.

[para17] In connection with Dockside's cross-application, firstly I find that it was properly brought and within the ambit of what may be claimed by way of application. Secondly, in my view it would be wholly inappropriate and contrary to the interests of the parties to require a trial of an issue relating issues of mitigation.

[para18] Damages in the case of Aiken and Reisman are clear, with the exception that both counsel agree that the payment for June 1990 was, in fact, received and, therefore, should not be calculated as part of the damages claimed. Judgment therefore shall go in the amount $34,659.87. This figure is calculated as $37,417.65 minus $2,757.78 for the June 1990 payment.

[para19] In connection with Woodman, once the damages may be quantified, the parties are to file affidavit material substantiating their damages to be brought by motion before a judge. The affidavit material will, if necessary, form the pleadings. The judge reviewing the affidavit material will determine whether a reference to assess damages before the Master is necessary. In my view, the assessment can probably be accomplished based upon affidavit material, but I do not want to prejudge the matter and I, therefore, leave it to the discretion of the judge hearing the matter.

York Condominium Corporation No. 382, Applicant, and David Dvorchik and Frances Dvorchik, Respondents And Between York Condominium Corporation No. 382, Applicant, and Elizabeth Kaplan, Respondent

Also reported at: 24 R.P.R. (2d) 19

Action Nos. RE 495/92 and RE 494/92 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Brampton, Ontario Keenan J. Heard: May 22, 1992 Judgment: June 3, 1992

S. Schwartz, for the Applicant, York Condominium Corporation No. 382 in both actions. L. Bisgould, for the Respondents, David Dvorchik and Frances Dvorchik. Elizabeth Kaplan in person.

KEENAN J.:-- The applicant is a condominium corporation which holds the common elements and operates the Palace Pier on Lakeshore Blvd. in west Toronto. The building consists of 433 units.

Dogs are allowed in the Palace Pier, unless they weigh more than 25 pounds. A rule passed by the directors states "Pet must not exceed twenty-five (25) pounds at maturity."

The sole issue in these two applications is the enforceability of that rule against "Portia", a Wheaten Terrier who belongs to the Dvorchiks, and "LuLu", an Afghan who lives in Ms. Kaplan's apartment. Both dogs weigh more than 25 pounds. Although there is evidence that the normal weight of a mature Wheaten is 25 pounds, it is conceded that Portia is overweight.

Both owners were aware of the 25 pound rule when they brought the dogs into the building. There is no basis for any finding that either owner misunderstood or was in any way misled or misinformed about the rule. Even if that were so, there is no relief from compliance on that ground. Nor is the fact that Ms. Kaplan's emotional problems are relieved by the interaction with LuLu a justification for violating the rule, if it is a valid rule.

Condominium living is a form of community living which combines the concept of private property ownership with shared common facilities. If it is to succeed, each owner/resident must recognize and accept that:

- 1) So far as possible, the individual's right to the free enjoyment of her property is to be respected.
- 2) The individual's freedom is subject to an equal degree of freedom for every other owner occupant, and is not to interfere with that freedom.
- 3) To ensure a proper balance it is essential that rules reflecting those rights and freedoms be formed and respected by all.

Regulation of a condominium can be done in three ways:

- 1) By an article in the Declaration or "constitution" of the condominium itself.
- 2) By by-law of the Corporation enacted by the shareholders.
- 3) By rules made by the directors under the authority of section 29(1) of the Condominium Act R.S.O. (1990) c. 26.

Section 12(3) provides:

"The Corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by- laws and the rules."

Section 29 includes these subsections:

"29(1) The board may make rules respecting the use of the common elements and units or any of them for the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property, or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units.

(2) The rules shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

(3) The rules shall be complied with and enforced in the same manner as the by-laws."

The power of the board to enact rules is not unlimited. To be valid, a rule must meet one of the criteria in 29(1) ie; "for the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property" or "for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units."

Under 29(2) the rule must be "reasonable" and "consistent with this Act". In other words, the rule must not be arbitrary or capricious and must not go beyond what is necessary to satisfy the criteria in subsection (1).

There is almost no hard evidence of the reason for the 25 pound rule. There is some suggestion that the rule is directed to: 1) "Bigger dogs make bigger messes".

2) "Big dogs cannot be carried in the front lobby as required".

3) "Big dogs intimidate people and small dogs".

The Rules respecting pets contain 19 paragraphs. They include requirements that pet owners clean up excreta and impose penalties for failure to comply, including expulsion of the pet. They require that pets be carried through the front lobby. They provide that pets are not allowed in the common elements except for ingress and egress and must be kept on leash with a choke collar. There is a prohibition against dogs which have been trained as an attack dog or security dog.

Pets who make disturbing noises or behave objectionably are liable to be removed. No pet is allowed to create a disturbance. There is also a rule which prohibits keeping a pet which has been deemed by the Board, in its absolute discretion, to be a nuisance.

All the above recited rules have general application to all pets, regardless of size. They apply equally to 10 pound dogs and 25 pound dogs, and clearly would apply to larger dogs. Failure to comply may result in expulsion.

All the above rules are to be promulgated for a purpose under one of the criteria in section 29(1). The board may wish to consider whether the "front lobby" rule has a rational underpinning which satisfies the criteria of section 29(1). As well, the rule which gives to the board an "absolute discretion" to declare a pet a nuisance must be invoked with caution. A "discretion" is to be exercised judicially and even-handedly in pursuit of the common good. It must not be exercised arbitrarily or capriciously. However, these rules are not before me and I am not to be taken as expressing any opinion about their validity.

There is no evidence that dogs who weigh more than 25 pounds are prone to anything not already covered by the rules of general application to all pets. Any dog that is not controlled by its owner, or creates a nuisance by barking or other behaviour is liable to be removed. It is unreasonable to condemn a dog who is not guilty of misconduct, simply because of its size.

I have been referred to one other case concerning a dog at the Palace Pier. On May 31, 1988 Lissaman J. ordered the removal of a dog which belonged to one Tom Ponrick. No reasons were given. The record of the proceedings shows that the owner was not represented by counsel. There is no indication that the validity of the 25 pound rule was challenged or considered. The application alleged specific violations of other rules including failure to keep the dog under personal supervision which resulted in an attack by the dog on another resident and her dog. The order of the court refers to that complaint and the board discretion to deem a pet a nuisance, as well as the 25 pound rule. Accordingly, I find that the Ponrick case was decided, at least in part, on other grounds and not on the issue which is before me.

I have been referred to other cases which interpret the rule making authority of the board under section 29. They include Sudbury Condominium Corp. No. 3 v. Lebel (July 24, 1985) Bolan D.C.J. Re Waterloo North Condominium Corp. No. 31 and Indico Ltd. [1984] 23 A.C.W.S. (2d) 545 Mossop D.C.J. Metro Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 650 v. Klein (1988) 49 R.P.R. 205.

In each case a rule which was sought to be enforced by the corporation failed to meet the tests in section 29(1) or the standard of reasonableness in section 29(2).

In the case at bar the rules of general application to all pets meet the criteria in section 29(1) and the test of reasonableness in section 29(2). However, the 25 pound rule fails to meet the criteria in section 29(1) because there is no evidence that large dogs are any more a threat to the safety, security or welfare of the owners than are smaller dogs. There is no evidence that large dogs unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units, any more so than smaller dogs.

Accordingly, I find that the 25 pound rule is invalid and unenforceable. As this is the sole issue before me in these two cases, the applications are dismissed.

Each party shall bear its own costs. The owners have succeeded because the rule passed by a well intentioned board exceeded its statutory authority. However, the owners will not be rewarded in costs for their successful defiance of the wishes of their neighbours.

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 117, Peel Condominium Corporation No. 140, Kipling Management Inc., Plaintiffs, and Peel Condominium Corporation No. 82, Defendant

Action No. 32749/88 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Non-Jury Sittings - Toronto, Ontario Klowak J. November 8, 1991

F. Felkai, Q.C., for the Plaintiffs. C. Smith, Q.C. and B. Morgan, for the Defendant.

KLOWAK J. (orally):-- On August 30, 1982, the three condominium corporations, 82, 117, and 140, and San Tropes Recreation Centre, which was run by the three corporations, entered into an agreement with Mr. Robert Ness to have Mr. Ness manage various buildings of this townhouse development.

On the face of the Management Agreement, which appears at tab 3 in Exhibit Number 1, the agreement was between two parties, one of the first part and one of the second part, as is usual in agreements. Corporations 82, 117, 140, and San Tropez Recreation Centre appear on the face of it acting in unison and referred to as "'San Tropez' of the first part." Robert Ness is referred to as the 'Manager' of the second part." The evidence on that issue is clear. Not only does it appear on the face of the document that there are only two parties, but it is consistent with the viva voce evidence of the condominium presidents of 117 and 140, those who were directors at the time and one of whom drafted the document.

On May 10th of 1983, effective May 1st of 1983, Mr. Ness having proved his worth and ability, the parties amended the agreement to show Mr. Ness's management corporation, Kipling Management Inc., instead of Mr. Ness personally as the party of the second part. Kipling was to be paid a management fee, a fixed amount for expenses, and an additional amount equivalent to Mr. Ness' previous vacation pay to reflect some of the parties of the first part's savings in contributions to benefits it had previously paid to Mr. Ness. The agreement could be terminated by either party for just cause but otherwise had no fixed term. All of the corporations, in fact, contributed to the payments in proportion to their size, and by size they meant number of units in each building.

The witnesses called by the plaintiffs, being directors of 117 and 140 at relevant times, were unanimous that problems they had previously had with other management companies and with self-management changed dramatically after Mr. Ness came aboard. Directors suddenly had some personal time; meetings were run with agendas and proper reports; appropriate financial records were now kept; invoices paid; contracts for repair and maintenance arranged and deficiency lists organized to enable the condominium corporations to sue the developer for construction deficiencies. It was a particularly difficult time because of the recession. There was a high percentage of landlord absenteeism and a high percentage of unsold units resulting in a high number of tenants on the property. Rents went unpaid, and there were problems with what Mr. Ness described as people, pets, and parking. Again, praise of Mr. Ness' handling of these problems by the other condominium directors at the time has been unanimous. I note that even to this day Mr. Ness manages the property for 117, 140 and the recreation centre.

Suddenly in 1986 Condominium Corporation No. 82 decided it wanted out of the agreement and attempted to unilaterally terminate the services of Kipling without the knowledge, consent or approval of the other corporations or of Kipling. No. 82 had been holding secret meetings to the exclusion of Mr. Ness who was also a unit that No. 82 acted as it did because one of the directors, Janice LeCouffe, who spearheaded the move, wished to perform the management services herself. I would have considered that probably irrelevant except for the evidence of the defence witness, Mr. Paron, from whose evidence I could almost infer that Miss LeCouffe went to the extent of falsifying minutes of board meetings involving Mr. Ness. I am not specifically making that finding, however, since I was not completely satisfied with the accuracy of Mr. Paron's general recollection. I am, however, satisfied on the evidence that there was no just cause to terminate the agreement with Kipling. I will specifically refer to what evidence I was able to pick out with respect to Kipling that would be under the general area, I assume, which could be covered under just cause. However, in addition to that being insufficient evidence, I was also struck that at least a year later 82 was still negotiating and considering rehiring Mr. Ness and his company, Kipling. In fact, the negotiations and rumblings about rehiring Kipling went on until sometime in March of 1988 at least. That is certainly not consistent with the present allegation before me that there was just cause for dismissing Kipling and Mr. Ness' services.

Various allegations were made in the termination letter to Kipling dated August 13, 1986, but there has been little, if any, evidence before me to support them. The defence called some witnesses who were around at the time. One was Mr. King, the accountant, whose evidence I view as being generally supportive of Kipling's performance. Mr. Richardson, who was a unit owner, was critical that Mr. Ness did nothing to repair Mr. Richardson's unit of damage due to water leakage from construction defects. I found his evidence not really helpful because he had little knowledge of the money available for repairs to the condominium corporations, and he did not seem to have any knowledge or understanding that Mr. Ness and Kipling did not have unilateral control over the spending of that money. Mrs. Yanchus, another unit owner, gave evidence, and although I can sympathize with what appear to be hurt feelings that she had, her unhappiness with Mr. Ness' attitude to her ripped screen and her swimming pool permit are simply not sufficient to establish just cause for termination of a contract.

Mr. Paron, whom I've already mentioned, was a non-resident director of 82 from April of 1986 to April of 1989. He considered Mr. Ness a good office manager but said he felt Mr. Ness had some greater duty. As an example, he stated that No. 82 did not discover that the original builder had created a drain plug problem until sometime in 1988. I fail to see how that is Mr. Ness' or Kipling's responsibility under the contracts. Mr. Ezra Simms, a unit owner, did not have a good feeling about Mr. Ness but could only give what I consider was unintelligible evidence of some person crying at a meeting. His only other evidence was that Mr. Ness complained to him once that he hadn't cleaned up the recreation room after a wedding reception and that once Mr. Ness shrugged off Mr. Simms' comment that the grass was long. Again, these are hardly matters giving rise to a right to terminate a contract.

Any evidence of feelings by unit owners of No. 82 that things were suddenly better after Killing and Mr. Ness left is simply inconsistent with the fact that 82 hired another management firm, Durand/Russell, after Kipling left, and it terminated Durand/Russell's contract before its two-year term because of poor performance. In addition, from 1988 on there was some evidence from some of the de fence witnesses that more repairs were effected on more of the units, but that is easily explained by the receipt of 82 of approximately $150,000 in 1988 from its suit against the developer for original construction deficiencies.

With respect to credibility, I had the opportunity of observing the manner and demeanour of Mr. Ness and the various witnesses for the plaintiff, and I have no hesitation in accepting their evidence as credible. All of them appeared to be calm, reasonable, sensible, candid, straightforward, and appeared to me to attempt to look at this matter from a detached point of view and not from some personal, emotional involvement.

On the other hand, the defence witnesses had either very little knowledge of the events that actually took place in 1986 and before or immediately after, and their evidence was constantly coloured by feelings of emotion and emotional overlay. Although I would not normally hold that against any particular witness, it appears to me that in this matter it has coloured their ability to look at this matter calmly and clearly and come to a rational decision on it. In fact, it seems to me that the whole problem here is highlighted in the evidence of most, if not all, of the defence witnesses in their constant references to their feelings as opposed to what they know or knew or what is fact, and this includes the evidence of Mr. Shebec who is a previous director of 82 and who is now the property manager for it through his company, Future. He had no involvement with these corporations or with the corporation prior to 1988. He again appeared to me to be emotionally preoccupied with Mr. Ness to a degree which seems to cloud reason and common sense. For example, even after he apparently withdrew criminal proceedings touching this matter against Mr. Ness, which he had laid, he continued before me to make wholly unsupported allegations that Mr. Ness was somehow sabotaging or had sabotaged door locks, stating that he knew of no one who saw it but, as I recall, saying something about people on Mr. Ness' side would have seen it.

It is this type of almost paranoid attitude that serves no purpose but to continue to incite emotions and encourage feelings of ill will amongst people who probably do not know or do not really remember what actually happened at the relevant times. It is simply time that the owners and/or directors of PCC No. 82 sat down, and with calm and with common sense and apart from their emotions and feelings, came to terms with the fact that FCC No. 82 could not do what it did on August 13th of 1986 and will finally have to pay the cost for it.

I have come to the conclusion that there was no just cause, and I also find that FCC No. 82 did not have the authority or legal right to unilaterally terminate the agreement with Kipling on August 13, 1986. The condominium corporations had obligated themselves to each other and to Mr. Ness and then Kipling to act as a unit. No. 82 had no more right to act otherwise than one of its own directors, at this time, for example, can act unilaterally to terminate No. 82's current management contract with Mr. Shebec's current management company, Future. Whether it is called breach of contract or wrongful dismissal, I find it is unimportant. It could not be done, and Condominium Corporation 82 must be responsible for the damages which flow from it.

The plaintiffs have calculated their damages in Exhibit Numbers 9, 10 and 11. Briefly, the evidence was that PCCs 117, 140 and Kipling Management entered into an emergency interim agreement after the breach by 82 in order to protect their unit owners. Mr. Ness agreed to reduce Kipling's management fee from $40,000 per year to $34,000 per year, and 117 and 140 agreed to between them pick up 82's share of it. In passing, I have to add that I am satisfied from the evidence of the directors who were there and voted on it that Kipling's management fee was increased to $40,000 per year for the year 1986 but that due to the breach of No. 82, that increase was never paid.

It was reasonable, in my opinion, for the plaintiffs to enter into their interim or emergency agreement as they did. 117 and 140 were happy with Kipling and did not want to incur unnecessary trouble and potentially greater expense in hiring someone else who, although perhaps marginally cheaper, might not work out. I find there is 'no onus upon them to fire everybody and try to find somebody cheaper. It would be unreasonable to expect them to do so. There was no onus upon them to take every conceivable step which might or might not mitigate, such as firing Kipling and the secretary and bookkeeper and try to find new personnel who might in the end cost them as much or more.

As I understand the defence's argument with respect to the amounts paid under the emergency agreement, as I will call it, it is that Kipling's fee and a secretary and bookkeeper's salary should have all been reduced by approximately one-third because 82 comprised approximately one-third of the total number of units. As one of the directors of, I believe it was Corporation No. 140, said in his evidence, you may have one-third less people, but that does not translate into one-third less time spent. In my opinion, it would be rather ridiculous, as I believe it was mentioned by some of the witnesses for the plaintiff, also to try to pay a secretary one-third less because she had to spend a bit less time typing.

The buildings of 117, 140 and 82 are all in the same complex, and time still had to be spent on things such as preparing reports, financial statements, and negotiating contracts. Mr. Shebec gave evidence that his company, Future, is currently managing No. 82 for, as I recall, something like $33,000, more or less, per year without using the services of a secretary and with only a part-time bookkeeper. The current superintendent of 82 apparently does almost everything by way of day-to-day repairs including electrical and plumbing, though, of course, I have no idea if he is so qualified. Future is, as I understand, Mr. Shebec's first management company, and he has now completed courses on property management at, I believe, Humber College. His company took over the management of 82 in 1990, and although I wish him well and indeed 82 well in the endeavour, I do not see that I can use the scanty details of his as yet short-lived endeavour to say that in 1986 Kipling charged too much.

The main issue in damages, as I see it, is for how long the plaintiffs should be compensated for 82's breach on August 13 of 1986. Although I would probably, in considering all of the circumstances, have looked at about a year as a reasonable period for the plaintiffs to reorganize their affairs and try to somehow make up for their losses, I accept the position of the plaintiffs' witnesses that 82 kept leading them on and stalling them with promises that 82 was coming back into the fold and that they would all work together again and obviously 82 would consequently share in the expenses again. I will not go over and refer to all of the documentary evidence, minutes of meetings, et cetera, supporting this evidence. As I recall, none of that supporting documentary evidence was challenged.

This situation of leading the other companies on continued to at least March of 1988, about nineteen months after the termination. In all the circumstances, I am prepared to award the plaintiffs their damages up to twenty months after the date of the breach; that is, up to April 30th of 1988. In reaching that conclusion, I have taken into account that although the defendant kept the plaintiffs hanging for a considerable period of that time, it was reasonable also to expect the plaintiffs to have considered and decided what measures they would take when it became clear that 82 was not coming back.

The damages of Kipling are outlined in Exhibit No. 9 and flow from May 1st of 1986, from which time its management fee, as I have already found, was increased to $40,000, but the increase was not paid due to 82's own actions. With respect to anticipated salary increases, I have considered that, and I am satisfied that Kipling could have reasonably anticipated such increases since they had consistently been given to Kipling, and to Mr. Ness before Kipling, from the beginning in 1982. In calculating the loss to Kipling Management Inc., I have used basically the information contained in Exhibit No. 9 from May 1 of 1986 to April 30 of 1987. As outlined in Exhibit No. 9, the loss to Kipling was $6,629.68. From May 1 of 1987 to April 30 of 1988, the loss was $8,400.00. The total is $15,029.68. I do not have any evidence before me from either party that there are any expenses which are attributable to and should be deducted from that amount.

As I have already mentioned, with respect to the other condominium corporations, No. 82 on the face of the original agreement with Ness, and then Kipling, agreed to act as one with the other corporations. There is no evidence to the contrary. When it failed to do so, I fail to see how it can be said that it did other than breach its agreement with 117 and 140. It is consequently responsible for the resulting damages to 117 and 140. Those damages are outlined for 117 in Exhibit No. 10. I am prepared to limit the damages of 117 and 140 to the twenty-month period also.

With respect to 117, using the information outlined in Exhibit Number 10, those extra costs can be divided into three parts; the extra cost with respect to the management contract, the extra cost with respect to the secretary, and the extra cost with respect to the bookkeeper. With respect to the extra costs on the management fee, those costs were $424.27 per month for twenty months. That totals $8,485.40.

With respect to the secretarial costs, that is the extra secretarial costs borne by 117, from the information contained in Exhibit 10, there appear to be three time frames. From August of 1986 to April of 1987 they total $1,263.60. For the next period up to November of 1987 they total $1,500.38, and for the next period to April 30th, 1988, they total $1,146.70. The total of those three periods is $3,910.68.

With respect to bookkeeping, that is extra bookkeeping costs, again, according to Exhibit No. 10, there are two time frames; one, September 1 of 1986 to December 31 of 1987, which is $1,862.72; secondly, from January 1 of 1988 to April 30 of 1988, $146.42 a month times four months amounts to $565.68 (sic). The total of $1,862.72 and 565.68 is $2,428.40, and that is for extra bookkeeping.

The extra management of $8,485.40, the extra secretarial of $3,910.65 and the extra bookkeeping of $2,428.40 total by my arithmetic, which I invite the parties to take a closer look at because I may be simply wrong in addition or subtraction, the total of the three figures I have at $14,824.45.

With respect to Condominium No. 140, the calculations of its costs are dealt with in Exhibit No. 11. Its extra management at $424.27 per month times twenty is $8,485.40. Its extra secretarial costs for the three time frames I referred to for 117 are $2,246.32, $2,667.35 and $2,038.55 respectively. That is for extra secretarial, and that totals $6,952.22. The monthly figures used in arriving at those amounts are, for the first period $280.79 a month, for the second period $381.05 a month, and for the third period $407.71 a month.

With respect to extra bookkeeping for the two time frames that I referred to in 117 or with respect to 117, the figures are $3,311.36 a month for the first period and $1,045.16 a month for the second period totalling $4,356.52. The first period was $206.96 a month, and the second period was $260.29 per month.

With respect to punitive damages, this is a case where I have seriously considered awarding punitive damages for breach of contract in order to deter other such corporations from adopting the same cavalier, "I'll do what I want" approach and attitude. In examining the situation closely, however, I am satisfied that the defendant's conduct falls just short of the high-handedness usually required. To a great extent I make that decision substantially because all the parties, including Mr. Ness as a unit owner, appear to have been vying with each other for control of the companies over the years. I look at that as creating a possibility that may have contributed to some degree to the sometimes bizarre actions of 82, but I am prepared to look at that from time-to-time struggle for control amongst various people as affecting only the question of punitive damages. In the result, I am not prepared to award punitive damages.

In conclusion, the plaintiff Kipling Management Inc. will have judgment against the defendant in the amount of $15,029.68. The plaintiff 117 will have judgment against the defendant in the amount of $14,824.48, and the plaintiff 140 shall have judgment against the defendant in the amount of $19,794.14.

THE COURT: Mr. Felkai, I'll hear submissions with respect to costs and interest at this point. I don't propose to have a lunch break and then come back.

MR. FELKAI: Thank you, My Lady.

-- Reporter's Note: Submissions to the Court by counsel re costs and interest, reported but not transcribed.

THE COURT: With respect to interest, I am satisfied that there was enough going on between the parties and negotiations and machinations on many things between September of 1986 and when the claim was issued in November of 1988, and consequently, interest will be awarded at the rate of 11 percent from November 1 of 1988.

With respect to costs, I have heard submissions from Mr. Felkai for the plaintiffs with respect to both the awarding of costs and quantum. I have given him very little time to prepare those submissions. I certainly had hoped that both counsel would be in a position of being able to make submissions on costs so that the quantum could be fixed today instead of putting the parties to the additional expense and time involved in having to have those costs assessed. Mr. Smith has indicated that he cannot get his client's instructions with respect to costs and is reluctant to make submissions without such instructions. I can understand that position. I am not prepared to give the parties yet another day to come back to argue costs.

In those circumstances, I regard the not only was it at my instance and urging, but it was really without a great deal of time in which Mr. Felkai could delve into that issue. As I have attempted to state, I do not regard his submissions as in any way, shape or form binding upon Mr. Felkai or his clients.

I will therefore order costs to be assessed to the plaintiffs, and I see no reason that the offers to settle by the plaintiffs should not be taken into account and be dealt with pursuant to the rules. Consequently, costs are on a party and party scale, but with respect to 117 and Kipling, they will be solicitor-client from May 22 of 1991, and with respect to 140, they will be solicitor-client from August 12, 1991. I will endorse the record, wherever the record is.

THE REGISTRAR: I think it's down here, My Lady.

THE COURT: Do you think you can find that?

THE REGISTRAR: Yes, here.

THE COURT: I have endorsed the record as follows:

For oral reasons given, judgment in favour of Kipling Management Inc. against the defendant $15,029.68, for FCC 117 against the defendant in the amount of $14,824.48, and in favour of FCC 140 against the defendant in the amount of $19,794.14. Prejudgment interest to run at the rate of 11 percent from November 1 of 1988. Costs to the plaintiffs to be assessed on a party and party scale and to Kipling and FCC 117 on a solicitor and client scale from May 22 of 1991 and to FCC 140 on a solicitor and client scale from August 12 of 1991.

I'd like to thank both counsel for their time and attention in this matter, and, Mr. Smith, thank you for your assistance. I'm sure it's been a very difficult matter for you to handle, and I appreciate your time spent.

MR. SMITH: That's correct. Thank you very much.

MR. FELKAI: My Lady, could I just seek one clarification if I could. To avoid further misunderstanding, could I invite Your Ladyship to deal with the issue of the costs of the counterclaim?

THE COURT: Oh, yes, of course.

MR. FELKAI: It will just be confusing, and it will cause further uncertainty.

THE COURT: Well, you didn't actually withdraw it, did you, Mr. Smith?

MR. SMITH: I did, yes.

THE COURT: You just elected not ---

MR. SMITH: I did.

THE COURT: You did withdraw it, or you elected not to proceed on it?

MR. SMITH: I think at the time my concern was --

THE COURT: I see.

MR. SMITH: -- that I wanted to, but I did withdraw it. I think I told Mr. Felkai in a letter that that was being withdrawn and that my only concern is that it may affect other issues, and this is how we left it, but the actual counterclaim was withdrawn.

MR. FELKAI: At that time Your Ladyship remarked that it would be up to me to speak to costs. THE COURT: Yes, I recall that.

Counterclaim was withdrawn at the outset of trial. Costs to the plaintiffs, being defendants by counterclaim, in defending the counterclaim on the same scales and bases as costs in the claim.

MR. FELKAI: Thank you, My Lady.

Somerset Ridge Development Corporation, Plaintiff, and Middlesex Condominium Corporation No. 134, Defendant

Reported at: 21 R.P.R. (2d) 246, 87 D.L.R. (4th) 708

Action No. 2569/91 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Windsor, Ontario Brockenshire J. December 10, 1991

P. Daryl Wilson, for the Plaintiff. James R. Caskey and Barry Scott, for the Defendant.

BROCKENSHIRE J.:-- The principal point at issue in this litigation is the validity of "special assessments" purportedly imposed by the directors of a condominium corporation upon its unit holders. The dispute has been hotly contested and coloured by allegations as to the relationship of the Plaintiff with other corporations, and of perverse actions by the Defendant's Board.

The matter came before me on cross motions to dismiss the action and to give judgment thereon. The materials on these motions, and earlier motions for interlocutory relief, filled a packing case, and argument took a full day, extending into the evening, after which I reserved.

These reasons respond to the issues raised and to the hope of the parties to finalize this litigation, the expense of which is becoming prohibitive.

BACKGROUND:

The Defendant, Middlesex Condominium Corporation No. 134 (Middlesex) is the statutory manager of an eighteen storey apartment building containing 204 residential condominium units, located at 695 Richmond Street, London, Ontario.

The building was constructed by Richmond Square Development Corporation, which as declarant, registered a declaration on March 1, 1989, bringing the Defendant into existence. As is common, the declarant, as owner of all of the units, picked the original directors, who on March 2, 1989 passed By-law No. 1 of Middlesex, and entered into a management agreement with Key Property Management (1986) Inc., (Hey). The declarant then proceeded to sell off units, and on August 21, 1989, when the declarant had sold over half of the units, per s. 26 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 as amended (the Act), a new board of directors (the Board) was elected. The Board had disputes with Key, and allegedly stopped using its services in March of 1990, and finally terminated Hey under the provisions of the Act in July of 1990. There is separate ongoing litigation between Middlesex and Key.

Somerset Ridge Development Corporation, (Somerset) is the registered chargor of 48 units in the building. These units had not been sold by the declarant to individual owner occupiers, but to Trenlon Corporation, Junsen Limited, and 880064 Ontario Limited, which again transferred all but two of the units, still held by Trenlon Corporation, to Rockway Corporation. These corporations assigned their voting rights to Somerset. Middlesex alleges that all of the declarant, Hey, Somerset, and the corporate owners of the 48 units, are controlled and directed by Anthony H. Graat, Jr., and questions the motivation and bona fides of Somerset in this litigation.

Somerset points out that it holds a second charge security on 48 units, behind first charges held by Canada Trust, in a declining market, that condominium fees can, by a virtue of the act, end up with priority over its charge, and states that it is merely protecting its interests against improper charges and what it argues was improvident management by the previous board. A new board was elected a few days before this matter was heard.

Middlesex argues that the withholding of payment by Somerset and the corporate owners of the 48 units, plus the cost of litigation, is causing severe financial difficulty to Middlesex, and that Somerset is attempting to gain an unfair financial advantage over the individuals who bought units in the building.

THE EVIDENCE:

While the materials filed were certainly extensive, they were not exhaustive. Mr. Graat had not been cross-examined by Middlesex, and Somerset has not had full production from Middlesex, nor the opportunity to examine a Mr. McGregor, a former board member, and a principal of the present manager of Middlesex. Nevertheless, both sides were prepared to see the motions dealt with on the materials available.

AVAILABILITY OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT:

I have considered the provisions of Rule 20, and the considerable case law that has developed under it. I adopt as the applicable guidelines or criteria, in deciding whether the Rule is available in any particular case, those set out by Henry J. in Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie (1990) 75 O.R. (2d) 225 at 238, which guidelines were most recently adopted by Chilcott J. in Ron Miller Realty Ltd. v. Honeywell, Wutherspoon (1991) 4 O.R. (3d) 492. In my view the parties cannot simply agree to vest jurisdiction in the motions Judge, because the Rule requires the Court to be "satisfied that there is no genuine issue for trial". In this case, although the parties could have undoubtedly produced still more evidence, the essential elements of the disputes were set out, and it was clear that there were no matters of credibility requiring resolution in relation to those essential elements. I therefore concluded that the issues could be dealt with at this stage, and the expense and delays of a trial could, and should, be avoided.

PARTICULAR ISSUES:

The statement of claim seeks declarations that three alleged special assessments are not valid, that an increase in monthly common fees was not validly imposed, that notices of liens filed on units charged to Somerset are invalid and that the increase in common fees resulting from the 1991-92 budget be spread over the remaining seven months of the fiscal year. The motion before me seeks judgment for those claims, and further seeks repayment of $90,000.00 put up by Somerset to lift the liens, and an assessment of the $16,300.00 in legal and late charges imposed re such liens. Middlesex denies all of these claims, and seeks dismissal of the action.

THE SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS:

The board purported to levy a special assessment on April 4, 1990 for $25,000.00 and sent out notices requesting payment. Somerset immediately protested that the board had no authority to make such an assessment. The board registered liens on the units charged to Somerset, to secure the assessment, and attempted to regularize the situation by amendments to its By-law, and by bringing the special assessment before a meeting of unit holders on August 15, 1990.

At the same August 15, 1990 meeting, a further special assessment of $110,000.00 was put forward. The unit holders defeated the amending Bylaw, but the majority present in person or proxy voted for the special assessments.

At a July 10th, 1991 general meeting the board put forth a motion for a special assessment of $78,822.00 to cover accumulated operating deficits. A majority of the unit holders present in person or proxy voted for this special assessment.

None of the votes for the three special assessments carried by 51 percent of the total number of units.

The position of Somerset is that despite the majority votes for the special assessments, they are invalid for lack of compliance with the Act and the By-laws of Middlesex. The position of Middlesex is that the approval votes are, or are akin to, approval of budgets, that the money is needed for the operations of Middlesex, that unit holders have to contribute proportionately to the expenses of Middlesex, and the directors have to operate the building.

Further, Middlesex argues that other unit holders have not only approved, but have paid the assessments. If Somerset avoids payment, a deficit will result, to be brought into the next budget, but Somerset could only be assessed for 48/204ths of the deficit to the prejudice of the others.

THE LAW:

Condominiums, and Condominium Corporations, are creatures of statute, brought into being by the Act. The rights and obligations of the unit holders and the board are governed by the Act. By s. 10(3), the Corporations Act does not apply to a condominium corporation. In the leading case on condominiums in Ontario, Carlton Condominium Corporation, No. 279 v. Rochon et al., (1987) 44 R.P.R., 228, Finlayson, J.A. stated;

"The Respondent relies on the in-house management rules and presumptions of regularity that apply to ordinary corporations, but as I have pointed out, the Corporations Act has been expressly excluded by the Act (s. 10(3)). A Condominium Corporation is a creature of statute and has no greater authority than as set out in the Condominium Act."

The Act, by s. 11(5) gives "each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit... the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the By-laws and the Rules." This gives Somerset as a mortgage or charge holder, a direct statutory right to seek the declarations sought in this action.

Section 15(1) of the Act provides that "the affairs of the corporation shall be managed by a Board of Directors."

Section 28(1) of the Act authorizes the Board to pass By-law disclosure of a "budget statement" which by subsection (7) is to other things, "(H) to govern the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses."

Section 28 further provides that the By-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration, and specifically provides "(2) subject to subsection (5) a By-law passed under subsection (1), is not effective until it is confirmed, with or without variation, by owners who own not less than 51 percent of the units at a meeting duly called for that purpose" and still further by subsection (5), that despite such confirmation, the By-law remains ineffective until it, and a certificate as to its passage is registered.

The Act provides generally, in s. 32(1) that "the owners shall contribute towards the common expenses in the proportions as specified in the declaration", but gives no further direct guidance as to how this is to be accomplished. Section 52 however, in requiring disclosure to purchasers, include contain details of expenses, charges and other matters. Section 61 of the Act makes it clear that one cannot contract out of, or avoid the Act. Significantly, the Act does not contain any general curative provision for defects, although there is one in s. 24(2) covering defects in elections.

THE DECLARATION AND BY-LAW:

Counsel could not direct me to any provision in the declaration or in By-law No. 1, giving the Board authority to levy special assessments, and I have been unable to find any. The declaration is silent on funding, other than providing that unit holders are to pay their share of common expenses as set out in notices or suffer the consequences. By-law No. 1 provides the detail of how such a valid "notice" is to come about by providing that the board is to prepare annually, before November 30, a budget, present it to a meeting of the corporate members before December 31, and then if approved, is to notify each unit holder of his share. By-law No. 1 further provides that:

"If at any time during the course of any fiscal year, the Board of Directors shall deem that the annual assessments of contributions are inadequate by reason of a revision in the estimate of either expenses or other income, the Board of Directors shall present to a meeting of members of the Corporation duly called a revised budget and if the members approve the revised budget, the Corporation shall prepare and cause to be delivered to the members a revised annual budget for the balance of such fiscal year and thereafter monthly assessments shall be determined and paid on the basis of such revision."

Counsel for Middlesex argues that the special assessments were really "revised budgets" and that although misnamed, were effectively reviewed and passed by a majority of the members present at duly called meetings, so that the charges levied thereunder were valid.

THE SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS:

A review of the notices of meetings, Board Minutes and Minutes of members meetings reveal that the $25,000.00 was intended to cover the estimated fees of engineers to carry out a "technical audit" of the building, the $110,000.00 was intended to cover uncollected fees from the building developer, legal costs, parking rentals, extra engineering consulting fees, and the cost of a roof repair, and the $78,822.00 was an accumulated deficit. None of these special items were of an emergency nature. None of the notices or discussions dealt with these expenditures in relation to all of the other expenditures of Middlesex, nor were the resulting charges related to the general common fee charges to the unit holders. Indeed the discussion of, and votes on, the $25,000.00 and $110,000.00 special assessments took place after the discussion and vote on the general budget at the August 15, 1990 meeting of members, and the discussion of, and votes on the $25,000.00 and $78,822.00 special assessments at the July 10, 1991 meeting of members took place immediately before and immediately after discussion of the general budget for the year.

All of the Oxfords, Websters, and Funk and Wagnalls dictionaries speak of a "budget" in terms of statements of estimated incomes and expenditures. So does the act, in its reference to a "budget statement".

Counsel for Somerset forcefully argued that the reason for requiring the Board to put forth a revised budget, if changes in assessments were contemplated during the year, was to give the unit holders the complete picture, so that they could intelligently, at their meeting discuss priorities and whether, if some expenses were higher than contemplated, others should be reduced or deferred. The notices put forth by the Board relating to these special assessments were limited to the specific expenses intended to be covered, and the justification for them, and not surprisingly, the discussions at the general meetings were similarly limited.

It is true that the formal resolutions arising from the July 10, 1991 meeting reflected the objections raised by Somerset, and purport to say that the Middlesex budget will be taken as amended to include these special assessments, but in my view this was after the fact.

The approvals granted at the meeting were of special assessments, not of a revised budget, and in fact no revised budget was ever prepared and presented for a consideration by the unit holders.

In my view, the three special assessments were just that special levies on account of special expenditures not included in the general budgets. By no stretch of the imagination can the notices relating to these special assessments be regarded as revised budgets. There is absolutely no authority under the By-law, the declaration, or the Act for the Board to make these special levies or assessments, with or without the approval of the unit holders, and no provision in the By-law, the declaration, or the Act for correcting the errors, short of amending the Bylaw. The Board attempted that, and did not obtain the needed votes.

It was clearly pointed out in Re Carlton Condominium Corp. 279 and Rochon (supra) "the declaration, description, and By-laws, including the rules are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit holder. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit holders are similarly bound".

The scheme of the Act is one of self-government, and I find the Board composed of unit holders, is no less bound by the By-law than the other unit holders.

I therefore find that Somerset is entitled to a declaration that the alleged special assessments reportedly imposed by Middlesex in April of 1990, September of 1990 and July of 1991 are not valid assessments, either directly or indirectly through the purported "revised budgets".

Concern was expressed at the hearing as to the position of unit holders who have already paid the special assessments now declared invalid. The expenses for which the assessments were being made will not now simply go away, and I would expect that the Board will now proceed as provided in the By-law, to prepare and give notice of a revised budget including those expenses. I see no merit in the suggestion that previous deficits be dealt with separately from other expenses. The deficits have to be paid and should be included in such a budget. Such a revised budget, to comply with s. 32(1) of the Act, which mandates that the owners shall contribute towards the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration, should note that some unit holders have prepaid on account of the proposed new assessment, and if a revised budget is passed by a majority of unit holders at a duly constituted meeting, new monthly assessments should issue on which unit holders who have prepaid can be given credit for such prepayment.

Middlesex liened the units charged to Somerset, partly for non-payment of special assessments, but also partly because the unit holders did not pay their monthly charges as directed by Middlesex for some months. Somerset says the assessments were paid for those months, but paid to Key, as Key was a duly appointed agent of Middlesex and had not been formally and properly discharged by Middlesex. The liens were discharged on Somerset paying $90,000.00 into Court, pursuant to an order of Mr. Justice F. G. Carter, made February 5, 1991. There is ongoing litigation between Middlesex and Key, in which a claim has been made for payment to Middlesex of the money paid to Key by the unit holders of the units charged to Somerset. In this action, a declaration was sought that the liens were invalid, and in the motion by Somerset an order was sought for payment out to it of the money in Court. It appears to me that the appropriate remedy at this point in this action is to stay the claim for a declaration that the liens are invalid until the trial of the action between Middlesex and Key, where the question of what money was paid to Key can be determined. The money in Court will remain, pending a final determination in that action and in this.

A sub issue was the legal fees and late charges, totalling some $16,300.00, charged on registration of the liens. I cannot fault Middlesex for protecting its interest by registering the liens, especially in the face of possible conflicts as to who was holding the money, and the three month limitation under s. 31(5) of the Act to get the liens registered. However, the charges therefore must be reasonable. I direct that the legal charges for preparation and registration of those liens be referred to an assessment officer for assessment. Whether or not late charges are applicable and if so are reasonable, can be determined in the action between Middlesex and Key, or in the stayed portion of this action.

The final item was a claim by Somerset for a declaration that the 1991-92 fee increase be spread proportionately over the remaining seven months of the budget year. Middlesex, in part because of distractions arising from this and other litigation was late in approving its regular 1991-92 budget. On assessment notices finally issued, they claimed immediate payment for the five months that had passed with the remainder to be paid monthly. Somerset argues, in my view correctly, that the scheme of s. 19 of By-law 1, is to go through the budgetary process, resulting in charges to be paid in monthly instalments. There is no provision for retroactive charges. In my view the charges resulting from the 1991-92 budgetary process should have been spread out in equal monthly charges for the remaining months of the budget period.

The result therefore, is that a declaration will issue, that the special assessments are invalid, as are the charges resulting therefrom, the claim for a declaration that the liens are invalid is stayed, pending the outcome of the action between Key and Middlesex, but with the legal charges relating to the liens to be assessed in the meantime, and a declaration will issue that the proper way for charging the increase in condominium fees resulting from the 1991-92 budget as by seven monthly instalments covering a portion of the budget year remaining after approval of the budget. The motion for judgment by Middlesex shall be dismissed. Somerset shall have its costs of these motions.

Thomas A. Rassos and Thomas James Alexiou, Applicants, and Greystone Walk Limited, Respondent Action No. RE 1541/91 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario B. Wright J. Heard: November 15, 1991 Judgment: November 27, 1991

Robert W. Staley, for the Applicants. Howard E. Kerbel and Natalie Marconi, for the Respondent.

B. WRIGHT J.:-- Thomas Rassos and Thomas Alexiou entered into an agreement with Greystone Walk Limited to purchase an adult lifestyle condominium. The purchasers acknowledged that the adult lifestyle was for their benefit and that the condominium would not have facilities or amenities intended or appropriate for the use of children. The purchasers agreed not to permit any person under the age of 16 years to reside in the condominium.

It was expressly understood and agreed by the parties that in the event a superior or appellate court in Ontario determined that age restrictions with respect to the occupancy of the condominium were prohibited by law, the adult lifestyle provisions of the agreement would be deemed to be severed and deleted from the agreement, and the balance of the agreement would continue to remain in full force and effect.

The Divisional Court, in York Condominium Corporation No. 216 et al. v. Dudnik et al. (1991), 3 O.R. (3d) 360, decided that restrictions on children residing in adult lifestyle condominiums are contrary to law.

Section 52 of the Condominium Act provides that an agreement of purchase and sale is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto. A purchaser, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the condominium unit, may rescind the agreement within ten days after receiving the disclosure statement or within ten days after receiving a material amendment to the disclosure statement.

The purchasers received a disclosure statement which outlined the intentions of the vendor to provide an adult lifestyle condominium. The purchasers complain that the disclosure statement does not comply with the requirements of s. 52. The purchasers maintain that the disclosure statement should have repeated the provision contained in the agreement of purchase and sale concerning the severance of the adult lifestyle components in the event a court found them to be unlawful.

The purchasers also maintain that the substance of the court decision constituted a material amendment to the disclosure statement requiring the vendor to provide the purchasers with an amendment to the disclosure statement. The purchasers claim they would then have ten days to determine if they wished to continue with the agreement to purchase or to rescind because the condominium was not to be adult lifestyle.

The vendor takes the position that the purchasers have no right to rescind the agreement since they expressly agreed to purchase, even if the adult lifestyle component could not be provided. The vendor argues that it was not required to provide the purchasers with an amended disclosure statement because the possibility that the court would find adult lifestyle restrictions illegal was disclosed to the purchasers in the agreement.

The vendor's position is that the result of the court's decision is not "material" to these purchasers. The vendor says that the purchasers were well aware that the vendor may not be able to provide adult lifestyle; they took that risk and were prepared to, and agreed to purchase without the adult lifestyle concept.

The purchasers' application must fail. In Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 280, I said, at p. 284:

The purpose of a disclosure statement is to summarize and highlight for a purchaser the important matters ... so that a purchaser receives the pertinent information upon which to make an informed decision whether to purchase.

The disclosure statement provided to the purchasers disclosed the intention of the vendor to provide an adult lifestyle condominium. It was not necessary to repeat the caveat concerning the possibility that a court might decide that adult lifestyle condominiums were illegal. The purchasers had already signed the agreement of purchase and sale which disclosed to them the possibility that a court would make a decision which would result in the unavailability of adult lifestyle condominiums. The purchasers cannot claim that there was no disclosure to them: i.e., that what they were purchasing may not be an adult lifestyle condominium. They signed an agreement knowing that adult lifestyle condominiums could become illegal and expressly agreed to complete their purchase even if adult lifestyle condominiums became illegal.

In Abdool, supra, at p. 293, I stated:

A "material" amendment is an amendment containing information which would provide a purchaser with a reasonable cause to reconsider whether to confirm the agreement of purchase and sale or to rescind.

The court decision declaring adult lifestyle condominiums illegal was not "material" to these purchasers. It provided them with no new information which would give them reasonable cause whether to confirm the agreement of purchase and sale or to rescind. The purchasers had the information that adult lifestyle condominiums could possibly be found to be illegal and with that information, they expressly confirmed their intention to purchase even if the vendor was not able to provide an adult lifestyle condominium. The purchasers have no right to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale by reason of the condominium not being adult lifestyle. They are bound by the agreement to purchase the condominium without adult lifestyle.

The application is dismissed with costs to the respondent. The respondent's cross-application is dismissed without costs.

David Kenneth Epp, on behalf of himself and other condominium owners of York Condominium Corporation No. 46, Applicants, and Ian Hood, Sr., Ian Hood, Jr., Ursula Shelton, Juliette Cohen, Alphonso Lewis, Mr. M. Ng, and York Condominium Corporation No. 46, Respondents

Action No. M167516/88 Ontario District Court - York Judicial District Toronto, Ontario Gibson D.C.J. April 12, 1990

G.J. Epstein and T. Sher Singh, for the Applicants. W.G. Scott, for Ursula Shelton. S. Laufer, for Juliette Cohen. M. Kurz, for Ian Hood, Sr., Ian Hood, Jr., and Alphonso Lewis. R.T. Craigen, for Ng. P.E. DuVernet, for York Condominium Corporation No. 46.

GIBSON D.C.J.:-- David Kenneth Epp, one of the applicants, is a co-owner of a condominium unit in York Condominium Corporation No. 46 (hereafter YCC 46), a condominium complex comprised of inter alia 688 townhouses and 656 apartment units and Co-President of the Home Owners and Tenants Action Group (HTAG) which represents interest of at least 70% of the unit owners in YCC 46. The Application, brought without notice, returnable July 13, 1988, sought, inter alia, production of corporate and financial records of YCC 46, an order that an annual general meeting be held, that elections to the Board of Directors of YCC 46 be held and an order enjoining YCC 46 from taking any steps to enforce a special assessment qua the unit owners of YCC 46 and that the status quo be maintained until the disposition of the Application.

The evidence filed on behalf of the applicants indicated that the last Annual General Meeting and elections of Board of Directors of YCC 46 were held on April 1, 1986 and on that date Ian Hood, Sr. was purportedly elected as a Director. It was the evidence of the applicant that at the time of his purported election, Hood, Sr. was an undischarged bankrupt, which fact was not disclosed to the home owners and, therefore, under the Condominium Act and By-laws his election was not valid. It was the further evidence of the applicant that shortly after the above election, demands were made by HTAG to examine the proxies and ballots purportedly evidencing the election of Hood, Sr. and others. However, Hood, Sr. in whose possession the election documents last were, stated that the documents had inexplicably disappeared.

Prior to October 1988, YCC 46 was being run by a purported Board of Directors consisting of Ian Hood, Sr., Ian Hood, Jr., Ursula Shelton, Juliette Cohen, Alphonso Lewis, Max Ng and Bhailall Sookram. The majority of this group purportedly obtained office through self-appointment on July 1, 1987, being appointed by the purported Board of Directors on that date.

The Condominium Act requires that an Annual General Meeting be held not more than 15 months after the last preceding annual meeting and that all positions on the Board of Directors are to be filled through an election to be held at each Annual General Meeting. Hood, Sr. and his colleagues claimed to have called a meeting on July 1, 1987 (a statutory holiday) but maintained that it was not held due to lack of a quorum, but it was the evidence of the applicant that no proper steps were taken to call such a meeting or hold a valid election.

As of April 1, 1986, when Hood, Sr. took over the affairs of YCC 46, it was a financially sound and stable corporation, with over $400,000 in its reserve fund. However, at the beginning of 1987 an examination of the YCC 46 reserve fund by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation revealed that the reserve funds of YCC 46 had been depleted, that the daily operational cash had been reduced to nil and that current liabilities exceeded current assets by over $100,000.

While there is an obligation under the Condominium Act that the directors keep proper financial records, make same available to the home owners on demand and that proper financial statements be provided to the home owners, the only financial statement up until the time of this application that was made available to the home owners was for 1986. No resolutions or minutes of meetings of the Board of Directors have been provided for the two and a half year period during which Hood, Sr. and his colleagues exercised control over YCC 46. It was the evidence of the applicant that the records available indicated serious discrepancies and overspending, that the reserve fund was completely depleted, that no reserve fund was maintained as required by the Act and that at least four members of the Board (Hood, Sr., Lewis, Sookran and Shelton) derived personal benefit or received monies in questionable circumstances and that there was serious personal misconduct and threats by at least one director.

Prior to my becoming involved in this application on September 19, 1988 and thereafter, the application was vigorously and capably opposed by a procession of solicitors as can be seen in the recital of counsel at the commencement of these Reasons. One of the most critical changes in counsel on behalf of YCC 46 was the termination of Mr. Pape's retainer at 8.00 o'clock on the morning of September 23rd, just prior to the final hearing of submissions with respect to the date of the Annual General Meeting and the issue of who should chair the meeting, and run the election for Board of Directors.

The final event that appears to have precipitated this application was that although a letter dated December 21, 1987 from the Board of Directors stated that at that point no "special assessment" was anticipated for 1988, a notice from the Board dated June 30, 1988 stated that a special assessment had been passed as a result of which each owner would be required to pay a sum of money (ranging from approximately $2,800 to $4,700) within ten days. Subsequent telephone advices to the home owners indicated that the failure to pay the special assessment by July 11, 1988 would result in a lien being placed against the title of the unit or units after the expiry of the above deadline.

After the current litigation was commenced, it was revealed that the Board has passed a special assessment of $2,802,851 on May 5, 1988, on the basis of oral advice (despite some $7,000,000 collected over a period of two and half years), without the knowledge of or notice to the home owners and a month prior to a survey dated June 1988 being produced and tabled by the Board.

The applicants immediately brought this application and launched a motion for an injunction restraining the Board from placing liens against the units for a refusal to pay the special assessment. Judges Webb (ex parte), Gilbert (on consent), Matlow, Whealy (on consent) and I, all continued the injunction as the application was adjourned to a special date (ultimately September 19, 1988). On that date I also continued the injunction as it became necessary to adjourn the merits of the application from time to time, frequently due to the failure of the YCC 46 to make proper production of the corporate and financial records and legal positions taken on its behalf by its solicitors.

While the YCC 46 continued at all times to uphold the validity of the special assessment, and the report that was produced to support same, no evidence by affidavit or viva voce testimony at trial, was given by Ian Hood, Sr. (who was frequently present at the hearing) and who, on one occasion, appeared on behalf of the Board to seek an adjournment since the solicitor for YCC 46 had been discharged at 8.00 a.m. on September 23rd, to justify the propriety of the special assessment.

The actual hearing of the application commenced on September 19, 1988. On September 20th I granted an application (despite the objection on behalf of the respondents) to permit the applicants to adduce the evidence of Hazel deBurgh (a Forensic Accountant), as to her investigation of the financial records of YCC 46. Following a meeting back in July between counsel for the various parties at that time, it being agreed that the applicants be entitled to full access to the financial and corporate records of YCC 46, Ms. deBurgh was appointed to examine the records. While she spent some time attempting to do so, her evidence was that all of the proper records were not available and that it was only on September 16th that Ian Hood, Sr. advised her that the balance of the necessary records were available but there was insufficient time for her to re-attend, examine the records and give an opinion with respect to the propriety of the financial affairs. Her evidence was that while she could not make any final opinion, there were certain entries that warranted further investigation to determine whether financial improprieties had taken place. The application was adjourned to September 23rd to permit Miss deBurgh to have further access to the financial records of YCC 46.

At this time (September 20th), by agreement of counsel, I ordered that the Annual General Meeting of YCC 46 be held on October 5, 1988 although the final arguments had not been made upon who was to chair the meeting or who was to supervise the election. It was still the position of YCC 46 that I deal with the issue of the status quo remaining the same and that I should immediately deal with the issue of the validity of the special assessment. Late in the day, Mr. Pape proposed that the injunction with respect to the status quo remain until Ms. deBurgh completed her investigation, that she provide an opinion as soon as possible but that the Annual General Meeting still be held on October 5th and I adjourned the matter on September 20th on that basis.

When the application resumed at 10.00 a.m. on September 23rd, I was advised by Mr. Pape that YCC 46 had terminated his retainer at 8.00 a.m. that day. Ian Hood, Sr., on behalf of the corporation, requested an adjournment on the basis that he had an appointment later in the day with Colin Campbell, Q.C., whom he had provisionally retained on behalf of YCC 46, and that the corporation wanted to submit expert evidence. As a term of the adjournment he stipulated that the status quo would be maintained. With some reluctance I granted an adjournment until 8.30 a.m. on September 27th (and then to September 28th) with respect to the issue as to who was to chair the Annual General Meeting, and supervise the election, and adjourned sine die any hearing with respect to the issue of the validity of the special assessment, as clearly neither the applicants nor the respondents had all of the evidence they wished to put before me on this issue.

As I recall it, on September 27th, William Scott (who had previously represented YCC 46 in July) appeared on behalf of YCC 46 and requested an adjournment which I granted until September 28th in view of the imminence of the Annual General Meeting.

On September 28th, I heard final submissions from all counsel for the respondents, as well as the applicants, with respect to the issue as to who would chair the Annual General Meeting on October 5th and supervise the elections to be held during the Annual General Meeting. I was to be out of town for a couple of days on personal matters and reserved my decision because I wished to consider the matter more carefully.

On September 30th I released my oral reasons which provided, briefly, --

1. The Annual General Meeting (to be held October 5th) was to be chaired by Sheldon Kirsh, a barrister and solicitor, who was also to establish an agenda for the said meeting which was to cover the period from April 1, 1986 to October 5, 1988.

2. Touche, Ross, a firm of chartered accountants, was appointed to supervise and run the election of Board of Directors at the said Annual General Meeting. The status quo was to be maintained as had been originally ordered by Judge Matlow on August 11, 1988 and by me on September 23rd and as agreed to by Hood, Sr. on behalf of the corporation on September 23rd.

The cost of items 1 and 2 were to be paid by YCC 46. 3. The question of the propriety of the special assessment and whether liens could be imposed against the home owners who had not paid the levy would be adjourned to October 31st.

4. I made a further order with respect to various terms such as production of affidavit evidence, provision for cross-examination, further access by Ms. deBurgh with respect to the YCC 46 books and records and such evidence, if any, to be adduced on behalf of YCC 46.

I was subsequently advised by counsel that on October 5th Marvin Kurz, on behalf of YCC 46, sought to appeal my order of September 30th but the application was refused by Mr. Justice White of the Divisional Court.

The Annual General Meeting and elections took place on October 5, 1988. None of the respondents, Ian Hood, Senior or Junior, Shelton, Cohen or Ng stood for re-election or were nominated. The applicant, David Epp, was one of the six persons elected as a director. Lewis was not formally re-elected.

As I recall it, counsel for the applicants thereafter requested that this application be spoken to on October 21st (rather than October 31st) which request I granted. On that date, P.E. DuVernet appeared on behalf of YCC 46 and W.G. Scott for Ursula Shelton and R.T. Craigen for the balance of the respondents.

Ms. Epstein advised that by virtue of the October 5th election, the present directors are all member of HTAG (except Lewis) and that her instructions, since the Board did not feel that the expense of having Ms. deBurgh complete her inspection of the corporate records was justified, were to request that I waive that portion of my order of September 30, 1988 with respect to the tendering of her evidence. Mr. Craigen stated that he had no instructions with respect to this request while Mr. Scott took the position that since the order had been made, the request should have been made by way of formal motion, on proper affidavit evidence and not in such an informal basis. However, both counsel subsequently stated that they did not oppose, and I made the order.

At that time all counsel, except Craigen, agreed that as a matter of law the burden of proof that the special assessment was proper was upon YCC 46, which view I shared. Ms. Epstein took the position that, considering the recent circumstances, her client felt that it was not necessary to have the propriety of the special assessment determined by the court. However, Mr. Scott stated that it was Ms. Shelton's position that this issue should be dealt with by the court as such a decision was crucial to the issue of costs if nothing else. Mr. Craigen supported Mr. Scott's position. Mr. DuVernet who was not opposed to the waiving of Ms. deBurgh's evidence being adduced, advised the court that in his view it was open to YCC 46 to consent to the relief the applicants were seeking and that if the respondents contested this matter, costs would be their obligation. It was the general consensus that the costs would basically follow a determination of whether the special assessment was valid or not.

At this time there was discussion about what evidence would be adduced on at the balance of the hearing. Mr. Scott stated that he would rely on an updated affidavit of Mr. Everitt, but did not intend to call him to give evidence viva voce and wondered if whether Ms. Epstein still wished to cross-examine Everitt and Colangelo as she originally stated she so desired. Ms. Epstein advised that she would have to obtain instructions, as did Mr. DuVernet, who advised that the corporation would probably take no position at the hearing. The hearing was scheduled to be concluded on November 2nd (and, if necessary, November 3rd).

On November 2nd, Ms. Epstein tendered an affidavit of Epp, sworn October 25, 1988, the filing of which was not objected to by counsel for the respondents since everyone seemed to feel that the affidavit largely dealt with the issue of costs. The affidavit provided evidence that on the last day they held office, Hood, Sr. and his fellow directors issued various certified cheques for past and "future" services (including legal services) which effectively depleted YCC 46's current account. No written record was found evidencing the passing of any resolution with respect to the special assessment as originally imposed or amended on August 4, 1988. The only Minutes found were of a Board Meeting held on September 30, 1988 retaining James Lockyear to act for YCC 46 to appeal my Order of September 30th, that he receive a retainer of $10,000, that all legal costs incurred in all financial purchases from April 1, 1986 to September 30, 1988 and that all contracts be approved by the Board (to cover missing Minutes), and that all directors be indemnified for past actions. Further, a library was to be leased to Caledon Village Action Committee (for 15 years), including equipment, at a rate of $2.00 per year, the executives of such Committee being Ian Hood, Sr. and Jr., Sookran, Shelton and Lewis.

The applicants also moved to file a factum which was received despite the objection of Mr. Craigen and I reserved the issue of costs with respect to the factum since it was only delivered on November 1st.

Mr. Scott, supported by Mr. Craigen, argued that the applicants' main application be dismissed because the applicants never supplied the respondents with a list of which unit owners were applicants and because Mr. Singh took an incorrect position in law on the cross-examination of Epp on October 31st with respect to the evidence in his October 25, 1988 affidavit. The respondents argued that they were deprived of a fair and full cross-examination on the affidavit.

Ms. Epstein advised that a list, supported by enclosures, was sent to me on September 30th. Mr. DuVernet stated that while he had never been given notice of the cross-examination, so that the matter could be continued with as scheduled, suggested that Epp be cross-examined today. Ms. Epstein further stated that she felt it was not necessary to deal with the special assessment issue except in respect of costs. However, Messrs. Scott and Craigen had always stated that in their view, such was necessary.

Mr. Scott stated that once he received the October 25th Epp affidavit and thereafter reviewed the applicants' Notice of Application, he re-evaluated the situation and realized that the applicants had never attacked the validity of the special assessment but only sought to enjoin the enforcement of the special assessment. He thereupon got instructions from his client not to require that I rule upon the propriety of the special assessment since it was not necessary and so advised Ms. Epstein by letter a couple of days previously. However, because in some respects particularly on the issue of costs, the issue of the propriety of the special assessment was perhaps still before the court, it was his view that he should be entitled to cross-examine Epp on the evidence in the affidavit and the issues raised in the factum.

Mr. Craigen's view was that once the applicants withdrew the last two items in the Notice of Application, it was not necessary for the court to consider the validity of the special assessment.

Mr. DuVernet stated that previously Messrs. Scott and Craigen had undertaken to prove the validity of the special assessment, and that the burden of same was upon YCC 46 and the respondents although the corporation was probably now unable to prove the validity of the special assessment.

Since counsel were unable to agree, I refused Mr. Scott's motion on the basis that I was content that reasonable efforts had been made to satisfy my order with respect to the list, and that any non-compliance was not sufficient to justify the dismissal of the Application. Since the applicants were still relying on the October 25th Epp affidavit, and Mr. DuVernet had not been present on the cross-examination, I would allow full and proper cross-examination by all parties that afternoon on such issues as were still before the court, which were basically costs, but also with respect to the special assessment and other activities which the applicants might allege would be relevant on the issue of costs. In addition, there could be cross-examination on portions of other affidavits by Epp not previously cross-examined upon which were relevant to the issue of costs. Any party would be entitled to call any witness to give viva voce evidence with respect to the special assessment, if desired, if such evidence was not presently before the court.

I pointed out to counsel that I had not realized that the list of owners supplied to me in the letter of September 30th had not been given to counsel for the respondents. I had thought that counsel had worked out this matter and overlooked dealing with a point raised in the letter. I did not hear any complaint from counsel for the respondents with respect to their not having received the list and I specifically asked at our meeting on October 21st if there were any problems and this point was not raised by counsel for the respondents at that time.

I ruled that by November 22nd the applicants would deliver a list -- (a) of the unit owners who do not object to their names being divulged, and (b) a list of those who did refuse. I stated that I would deal with (b) when I dealt with the merits of the application and the issue of costs.

The cross-examination of Epp continued at 2.20 p.m. and concluded on November 3rd.

Epp testified that he felt, on the basis of the documents that he had been able to review after the October 5th election, that there were specific discrepancies in the cheques which were exhibits to his affidavit of October 25th in respect to salary payments to one, Vicky Chamberlain. He also had concerns with respect to the propriety of the special assessment and the demand for early payment of same, as he felt that the Board should have called a special meeting to discuss any problems with respect to finances. He was concerned with the conduct of and payments to Sookram who, at the October 22, 1988 Board Meeting, was evasive and refused to answer certain questions put to him by the Board with respect to various acts of the previous Board (since that time the management company has apparently terminated his employment).

A letter from Sheldon Kirsh was filed, together with his report and an account and I ordered that the report be formally released to the Board to take such steps as the Board deemed appropriate.

Epp also expressed his real concern about the propriety of certain payments in Exhibits A and D to his affidavit, as well as the priority of some of the payments. As a matter of law, I do not feel that I should deal with the propriety of these payments although the nature of same and the manner of payment and the fact that they were apparently made after the appeal from my Order was dismissed and just prior to the Annual General Meeting, seem highly unusual to say the least.

With respect to alleged misconduct by any of the respondents, Epp conceded that he had no evidence of any personal misconduct by Juliette Cohen and Max Ng. It was his position that they were members of the Board (having been appointed), had accepted the obligation of being on the Board and the responsibility, along with other directors, for acts of the Board and that each had an obligation to put the owners on notice when he or she became aware of any improper act by the Board or its members.

With respect to Lewis, he was involved in contracts with the corporation in 1988 in the amount of $12,551 which was specifically prohibited by the Act and by the YCC 46 by-laws. He testified that Ian Hood, Jr. had directly threatened him while he was a Board Member and had accepted an appointment to the Board by Ian Hood, Sr.

As regards Ian Hood, Sr. it was Epp's view that his original election was improper as he had failed to reveal that he was an undischarged bankrupt. He was paid $59,000 with respect to lumber from his company, the lumber having disappeared one night. Epp stated that Hood, Sr. mostly ran the day to day operation of YCC 46. While it was stated in an affidavit that Hood, Sr. had resigned and was reappointed to the board, in his view the Board had no authority to do so. Epp conceded that he had no personal knowledge whether Hood, Sr. personally took monies but collectively the whole picture was a bad one.

The financial statement (Exhibit 5) prepared by Bailey for the period up to June 30, 1988 was not approved at the October 5th Annual General Meeting. Further, Hood had stated in the press that he had spent $7,500 on a security system for his office, which violated the by-laws as the expenditure was out of the reserve fund, which was only to cover extraordinary repairs except in extreme emergency.

Epp stated that there was not sufficient time to serve the ex parte application for an injunction on YCC 46 as the letter received in early July stated that the special assessment had to be paid by July 11th and Hood, Sr. had told him that if the specific assessment was not paid, a lien would be put on an owner's property. He conceded that the corporation retained a management office during normal business hours. He also appeared to concede that the injunction, as obtained, dealt with all levies, was probably too wide and should have been in respect of any liens levied in respect of the special assessment. Epp was concerned that the Board's expenditures were outside the jurisdiction of the reserve fund so he demanded proper accounting but was never able to get same.

On April 1986 the reserve fund balance was in excess of $400,000 but as of October 5, 1988, the balance was zero and the current account was less than $5,000.

Epp testified that Hood, Sr. occupied unit 100, which was previously designated as the superintendent's unit. All his windows have bars and there is an internal security system. Hood is not a superintendent and the superintendent for the building has to reside in an activity room, which use is lost to the condominium unit owners.

The hearing was then adjourned with the balance of evidence and argument to be heard on November 30th and December 1st (subject to availability) which was subsequently changed to December 1st and the 2nd.

There was a brief attendance on November 22nd by Mr. Singh, no one opposing or even attending, for an order to permit the corporation to deal with the special assessment in respect of units which have been or may be sold before the ultimate disposition of the hearing.

On December 1st, Marvin Kurz, having filed a Notice of Change of Solicitors dated November 30, 1988 in respect of Hood, Sr., Cohen and Lewis, appeared as did Mr. Craigen for Hood, Jr., W.G. Scott for Shelton but no one appeared for the respondent Ng. Mr. DuVernet, of course, appeared for YCC 46, and Mr. Singh for the applicants.

Mr. Kurz requested an adjournment until December 2nd on the basis that he had just been consulted by the respondents on November 25th. He advised me that although he had argued the appeal from my Order on October 5th, he had not been involved with the matter until the 25th and had not had sufficient time to familiarize himself with the file so as to properly conduct the matter. He stated that he wanted to cross-examine Epp on the issue of the list and such other areas as he felt appropriate but probably would not be calling any evidence.

Mr. Scott advised that he would not be calling any evidence.

The request for an adjournment was vigorously opposed by counsel for the applicants which was understandable under the circumstances. Hood, Sr. supported the request and stated that his son had insufficient funds to retain counsel.

I ruled that, since some weeks previously two days had been set aside to complete the matter, and the respondents were told that they were to advise the court by a certain date if evidence was to be called on their behalf, no such response having been made, I advised Mr. Kurz that I was reluctant to adjourn the matter until the 2nd as I had grave concern that the matter would be completed in a day. However, I did adjourn the matter until after lunch to give Mr. Kurz further time to review the file. I directed that the whole file be made available to him and that counsel for the applicants assist him with any of the documents. I ruled that both Kurz and Scott could cross-examine on the issue of the list.

When we resumed in the afternoon, Mr. Scott cross-examined Epp on the issue of the list and which owners were, in fact, applicants. Epp advised that he never explained to the other owners that they would be responsible for the costs of the application and stated that he was the applicant, although there was widespread financial contribution to fund the application. The executive of HTAG had instructed him to give an undertaking with respect to the damages if the application was unsuccessful, and the executive had agreed to abide by any order of the court. He conceded that the executive may well be the applicants, but he reiterated that he had the support of many other unit owners. Mr. Kurz did not ask any questions. This was the end of the applicant's evidence on the hearing. Messrs. Kurz, Scott and DuVernet all advised that no evidence was going to be called on behalf of the clients that they represented.

During the afternoon of December 1st and most of December 2nd I heard what I thought were the concluding submissions of counsel in this matter on the issue of costs, following which I reserved judgment. However, approximately a week or two later my secretary received a request from Sam Laufer who wished to bring a motion before me on behalf of the respondent, Juliette

Cohen, and I gave a special appointment returnable December 23rd. On that date Mr. Laufer, who had served a Notice of Change of Solicitors from Marven Kurz to himself, appeared with counsel for the applicants.

By Notice of Motion dated December 12, 1988, leave was asked to file an affidavit of Juliette Cohen (which apparently was sworn on December 9th) and submissions were sought to be made to the effect that Juliette Cohen was not a director of YCC 46 and ought not to be responsible for any Orders to costs in this hearing. Although I considered the application to be very late, considering all of the circumstances, with some reluctance and over the objection of counsel for the applicants, I granted leave for the filing of the affidavit and afforded Mr. Laufer the opportunity to make submissions based on the affidavit.

Mrs. Cohen, in her affidavit, stated that she was a housewife, aged 58, married to a dentist, and in January of 1986 purchased three units in YCC 46. In the Spring of 1988 she was asked by Hood, Sr. to become a director and although initially she declined, she testified that subsequently "she agreed to join the Board of Directors", for the purpose of locating tenants with specific occupations. Her evidence was that she was never elected and was simply asked to sit on the Board to look after rentals but she conceded that she attended three meetings "after she became a Member of the Board". The Minutes of the Meeting of September 30, 1988 (which was the only Minute that has ever been produced in this hearing, Hood having alleged that all other Minutes were stolen), indicated that she was present. However, she maintained that she did not attend, had no knowledge of what occurred at the meeting, had not signed the Minutes and took no part in the various resolutions. Mrs. Cohen further deposed that she was served with the Record in September 1988 and relied on the corporation's solicitor to protect her interests and although Hood advised her that Scott was acting for the corporation, she never spoke to Scott and was never asked to provide any affidavit. She also deposed that she was never told what was going on in the proceedings.

She further testified that she heard a short time ago from Hood, Sr. that a new solicitor was acting for the corporation, Marvin Kurz, and all the respondents attended at his office. At that meeting her personal defences or positions were not canvassed. She attended at Kurz' office a second time to deliver a cheque to him, the case was discussed in a quick and very general manner and she did not discuss her relationship with the corporation or the other respondents.

Mrs. Cohen further testified that around December 1st or 2nd she spoke with Kurz who advised her that he really had very little understanding of what was going on in the matter since he had just been retained (he apparently did not tell her that he argued an appeal from my order of September 30, 1988 before the Division Court on October 5th). Because she knew nothing about the various proceedings, except in the most general manner, until she spoke to her personal solicitor, Mr. Fishman, a short time ago, she was unable to properly present her position to the court. Mr. Fishman referred her to Mr. Laufer and it was only around early December that she suddenly realized what was going on and the possible consequences to her. It was her position that she was not really a director and, in the circumstances, should not be responsible for costs, since she was not responsible for directing or instructing counsel or the incurring of costs. She further deposed that she had recently heard that Hood, Sr. was probably judgment proof and so she would be prejudiced if there was an order that she be required to pay costs.

Needless to say counsel for the applicants vigorously opposed the application.

During submissions, Mr. Singh, for the applicants, advised me that Juliette Cohen was served with the Notice of Application in July 1988 and my notes indicate that Mr. Laufer did not contest that statement or require any proof.

I note that in the original Motion Record, there is an affidavit of service by Neil Gilbert, a process server, that on July 13, 1988 he personally served Juliette Cohen at 4 Geddes Court, Downsview, with the Notice of Motion returnable July 21, 1988, the affidavit of Epp, dated July 12, 1988, the amended Notice of Application, dated July 12, 1988, and the Order of Judge Webb dated July 12, 1988.

Paragraph 5 of the said affidavit recites that YCC 46 is currently being run by a Board of Directors consisting of certain persons which list included "Juliette Cohen". Clearly the title of proceedings in all of these documents includes the name of Juliette Cohen. Juliette Cohen conceded that she was served with the application Record some time in September 1988 which indicates that the personal respondents were being represented by Ronald Craigen, with his firm name and business address. This application Record also includes the affidavit of Epp sworn July 12, 1988 and the amended Notice of Application.

Item xiii of the amended Notice of Application clearly states that the applicants claim costs of the application on a solicitor and client scale against the individual respondents personally, or in the alternative against YCC 46, or "for such further or other relief as seems just and proper to this honourable court".

The affidavit of Ursula Shelton dated July 19, 1988, filed by Mr. Scott on behalf of YCC 46, stated that Juliette Cohen was appointed to the Board of Directors at a point of time after the resignation of one Albert Lai. The Condominium Act authorizes the Board of Director to appoint persons as directors (Section 15(a)).

In my view the application by Juliette Cohen to be declared not to be a director of YCC 46, and not to be responsible for the court costs of this hearing, must be dismissed on the following grounds --

(a) On her own evidence, in her affidavit of December 9, 1988, at the request of Hood, Sr. she agreed to join the Board of Directors. She attended three Board Meetings and her motive, purpose or duties assigned to her I feel are irrelevant in law.

(b) On the evidence of Ursula Shelton, which I accept, Juliette Cohen was appointed to the Board of Directors, which as I previously stated is within the authority of the Board under the Condominium Act.

There has been no position taken by YCC 46 or any other respondents that the Board had no authority to appoint her as a Director. On the above evidence I find that she was a Director of YCC 46 at the time that these proceedings were commenced.

(c) In my view, it is simply too late in the day for this application to be successfully brought. There is no evidence that she had insufficient education or any inability to understand the English language. She was served with the Motion Record on July 13, 1988 which, if she had read, (or consulted her personal solicitor then instead of in December), she would have realized that she was being sued as a director of YCC 46 and that the applicants, if successful, would be seeking costs against her on a solicitor and client basis.

I quite frankly can not understand how a mature person would not have appreciated the situation and either have discussed the question of whether she was, in law, a director with her personal solicitor, or with W.G. Scott, who Hood, Sr. had told her was acting for the corporation, or with Craigen whose name appeared on the Application Record (which she received in September and indicated that he was acting for her), or took some other appropriate step to assert her alleged position.

Ms. Cohen does not mention why she never discussed her position with Craigen and I frankly do not accept her evidence that she was unaware of the lengthy court proceedings which commenced in July of 1988. If, in fact, she was not, having known that she was being sued, she saw fit to take little apparent interest in the proceedings until they were all over and then found out that Hood, Sr. was probably judgment proof.

In my view, having found that she was a director, she has the same obligations and responsibility as her co-directors under the applicable law.

The motion on behalf of Juliette Cohen will, therefore, be dismissed with costs payable forthwith after assessment thereof on a party and party scale.

On the issue of entitlement to costs, even though the applicants attacked the validity of the special assessment, they abandoned that claim within a day or so and, thereafter, only sought to enjoin the corporation from enforcing non-payment of special assessment by imposition of a lien. They also either abandoned or did not pursue a few other items on "the shopping list" in the amended Notice of Application. I am satisfied that the applicants have achieved a substantial degree of success in these proceedings when one considers what were the real issues which gave rise to the Application and circumstances existing at that time.

In considering costs, it must be kept in mind the position being taken by the Board in early July 1988 in respect of the special assessment (in excess of $2,000,000) which had to be paid within a very short period of time, the evidence being that the Board was unwilling or unable to provide proper financial records to the unit owners (to which they were clearly entitled to under Section 21 of the Act) had not provided recent audited financial statements and had not held a valid annual meeting or election of officers since April 1986. The Applicants obtained from the court an Order enjoining the Board from enforcing non-payment of special assessment by the imposition of a lien, and finally obtained from solicitors for the Board an agreement that applicants' accountant could review all the financial books and records of the corporation (Hood, Sr. never having given evidence to explain reason for such delay and clearly dragged his feet in producing some documents at the last moment). This status quo was maintained by His Honour Judge Matlow and by myself over objections of then counsel for the respondents until the actual hearing commenced. The Applicants subsequently obtained from me an Order that the annual meeting be held on October 5th to be chaired by Sheldon Kirsh, the election to be run by Touche, Ross. (It is true that Paul Pape, acting for YCC 46 had agreed to a meeting to be held in early October but all the respondents still maintained that a YCC 46 appointee should chair the meeting and supervise the election of officers and these were clearly critical issues between the parties). It was quite obvious that the Corporation and individual respondents (comprising the Board) were acting in concert and until after the annual meeting of October 5th, and election of new officers, I cannot recall counsel for the Corporation and for individual respondents respectively taking any inconsistent or contradictory position on any issue of any substance).

In my view, having achieved such substantial success (the Board has retreated from its position on the issue of special assessment) which is one of the major factors (if not the major one) which ought to be considered by me in the exercise of my discretion in dealing with costs, the applicants are, therefore, entitled to their costs of this application and ancillary proceedings.

The remaining issues are against whom and on what scale should costs be assessed and what order, if any, I should make in respect of costs of YCC 46 both on the defence of this application and such costs as it may have paid for the defence of the individual respondents (clearly some monies have been paid according to schedules A and D in the Epp affidavit sworn October 25, 1988).

The applicants seek costs on a solicitor and their own client basis from all the respondents and that the Board should be entitled to recover such costs as well as its solicitor and client costs of defence of the application from individual respondents as well as any costs or legal fees paid to defend the individual respondents. Not surprisingly, present counsel for the Board supports the above position while counsel for various individual respondents vigorously oppose same.

On the evidence before me, in my view, there were no circumstances which clearly made provisions of Rule 49.10 applicable.

However, I do agree with submissions of counsel for the applicants, that, having regard to the unusual circumstances herein, this is an appropriate case to award costs on a solicitor and client basis (to be assessed) against all the respondents. I do not want to repeat all the evidence of Epp which I basically accept. However, there was no viva voce evidence from any of the respondents, particularly Hood Sr. (who appears to have been the power behind the group's actions) to explain the failure to hold annual meetings, proper election of officers, failure to provide or keep proper financial books and records, the precipitous passage of special assessment and autocratic efforts to enforce it by threats of imposition of liens and, in some ways just as important, the failure to produce in a timely fashion, financial documents during litigation, or properly cooperate with legitimate effort by accountant to review what documents were available, delaying tactics in the litigation, including changing counsel on several occasions, denial of applicants' hopes to have an independent person chair the annual meeting and supervise election of directors, insistence on validity of special assessment be considered by the Court and opposed applicants' position of maintaining status quo until hearing was concluded.

In the circumstances of this case, considering the relative position of all the parties and YCC 46 (and the owners of other units) and again unexplained conduct of individual respondents, this is an appropriate case in which to order that upon payment to the applicants of their assessed costs (or such portion as may be paid), YCC 46 shall be entitled to recover such costs from individual respondents.

In my view, again considering all of the circumstances, the unexplained conduct of the individual respondents was completely contrary to their obligations under the Act, not only to the applicants but to the other unit owners during this time and I expressly hold that the individual respondents are not to indemnify under Section 25 of the Act for any of the aforesaid costs.

With respect to the costs of YCC 46 in the defence of this Application, or the costs of legal fees paid on behalf of the individual respondents, while I am certainly not anxious to see any further legal battles between any of the parties to these proceedings, I do not feel, in the circumstances here, that I can fairly or properly deal with these costs. Up until October 5, 1988, when the annual meeting and election of new officers took place, there was no lis between YCC 46 and the individual respondents for obvious reasons. I do not feel that I have heard sufficient evidence on which I could make proper findings and thereby fairly deal with these costs so I, therefore, decline to do so.

I agree with submissions of counsel for the individual respondents (chiefly Mr. Scott) that the applicants should not be entitled to costs in respect of certain specific attendances or steps in proceedings and I make the following specific directions --

1. Ex parte hearing before Judge Webb on July 12, 1988. While I am satisfied that the applicants might well have had some practical problems in achieving expeditious service of material upon all of the individual respondents, because of the urgent nature of the Application, I do feel that notice could have been delivered to YCC 46 since it had a business office in the building where Epp resided.

I, therefore, direct that the applicants be entitled to costs for preparation of the Application, amended Notice of Application and supporting affidavit material but not actual appearance in court.

2. Attendance before Judge Gilbert on July 21, 1988. The Application was adjourned on consent, no Order being given as to costs. I do not feel it appropriate that I should, at this stage, make any order as to costs of this attendance.

3. I feel applicants are entitled to costs of attendances (and so order) before Judge Matlow on August 11, 1988 and Judge Whealy on August 24, 1988 since both judges reserved costs for disposition by Trial Judge.

4. Applicants entitled to costs of attendances (and proper preparation for same) on September 19, 20, 23, 27, 28, October 21, November 2, 3, December 1 and 2. (I'll make further comment on these attendances later in my reasons).

5. I have no authority to make any order as to the costs of the appeal brought by YCC 46 before Mr. Justice White on October 5, 1988 (as requested by applicants).

6. Applicants not entitled to costs of cross-examination of Epp on October 28 in view of incorrect position taken by their counsel. Respondents for same reason, are entitled to costs of such attendance (not preparation) on party and party scale (as of one attendance) to be set off against costs awarded to applicants.

7. Applicants not entitled to costs of factum dated November 1, 1988 (filed on hearing before me on November 2) as it was delivered late and no reasons given for the delay.

Mr. Kurz raised an interesting issue that after September 30, 1988, the only matter in issue was costs and on the basis of decision of McClellan v. Powassan Lumber Co. (1914) O.W.N. 302, there should be no order as to costs after said date.

In response to that submission, I make the following comments.

(a) the October 21, 1988 attendance was necessary in view of result of October 5, 1988 meeting and for court to give directions with respect to balance of hearing scheduled for end of October. (b) the November 2, 1988 affidavit of Epp dealt with as to issues, costs and Mr. Scott submitted that he was entitled to cross-examine on it (after having unsuccessfully moved to dismiss application a good part of the morning was spent on the argument). Scott and Craigen cross-examined Epp in the afternoon and also on the morning of November 3. Submissions were made but not completed and the balance of the hearing scheduled for December 1 and 2.

(c) On December 1, Mr. Kurz appeared as counsel for the first time before me (had argued appeal before White, J. on January 5th). Scott completed his cross-examination and Kurz on the basis of his submissions, as above, did not cross-examine. Submissions on costs took place on the balance of December 1 and on December 2.

Even if the McClellan decision is still a binding authority in Ontario (a decision of the late Mr. Justice Middleton should always be carefully considered) which I gravely doubt, since it does not appear to have been followed in any judgment in Ontario since, or even considered or discussed, in the circumstances of this case and the issues between parties and position taken by respondent YCC 46 and individual respondents in my view decision is distinguishable. Considering the uncompromising position of the respondents as expressed by the parade of counsel who appeared, I do not feel that it lies in the mouth of any of the respondents at such a late juncture to take such a position on costs.

My apologies to the parties and their counsel for the lengthy delay in delivery of my final reasons.

Supplementary Reasons for Judgment

Released: December 18, 1990

GIBSON J.:-- A difference of opinion having arisen between counsel as to the appropriate form of the judgment that should issue so as to reflect my Reasons dated April 12, 1990, on December 11, 1990 I was attended by Ms. Epstein, Mr. W.G. Scott, and Mr. R.T. Craigen who had formerly acted for the Respondent, Shelton, Ian Hood, Sr., and Ian Hood, Jr., and Alphonso Lewis. However, at the present time he has no instructions from the last named respondents.

After having considered their submissions, I felt that the more appropriate decision, considering the fact that this Application proceeded in various stages, is that one judgment be drafted, to reflect all of the various orders that I made in the proceedings. I, therefore, approved the draft judgment submitted by counsel for the applicants, making several changes to reflect the precise date upon which I made certain specific orders (subject to one variation which I will deal with later on in my Supplementary Reasons).

With respect to the quantification of legal costs awarded in my Reasons of April 12, 1990, in view of the present unfortunate situation in the judicial system in Toronto whereby appointments to assess costs in lengthy or complex matters (such as this) being at least one to two years in the future, Ms. Epstein (since I am not functus), requests that I fix the costs of the Applicants (the various Bills have been drafted) at an early date, as the Applicants have grave concern that some of the respondents will liquidate any assets that they have in the interval, such as condominiums in the building in question.

While Messrs. Scott and Craigen submitted that I ought not to embark on such a course of conduct (Mr. Scott also took the position that I had no jurisdiction to assess costs) in the special circumstances of this case, I feel that it is not only appropriate but preferable that I determine the quantum of costs of the applicants in as timely, and hopefully, a fair fashion, as is possible.

Under Section 141 of the Courts of Justice Act, costs are in the discretion of the court which may determine to what extent costs shall be paid by any party.

By virtue of Rule 57.01(3), the court may fix all or part of costs.

Rule 1.04(1) provides that the Rules shall be liberally construed to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every civil proceedings on merits.

I, therefore, vary my reasons of April 12, 1990 so as provide that where there is any reference to "assessed" costs, my judgment (I have amended the draft judgment) shall read "To be determined and fixed by me".

In view of the complexity and length of the proceedings before me, I feel it only appropriate to set aside as a special appointment one-half day to afford the parties to make appropriate submissions as to the proper quantum of costs.

The order that I have made with respect to costs of the application is in the nature of a party and party order on a solicitor and his own client's scale. Considering this fact, I do not feel it necessary that I hear evidence. However, I do expect that any party seeking costs shall put before me appropriate documents (and make appropriate submissions) to substantiate the proposed quantum of costs. Either reasonable particulars of the steps or services involved in or part of the Bill of Costs on behalf of any party, or the same result can be achieved by docket entries, shall be supplied to the opposite party, and the court at least seven days prior to the date of the special appointment.

I will be available during the weeks of January 7, 21, 28th and February 11th to determine costs. Counsel, hopefully, can agree on a mutually convenient date, preferably before December 28th or failing any agreement, I will grant a special appointment in the above timeframe at the request of counsel for the Applicants.

If any other parties who recover costs by virtue of my Reasons wish to have me fix their costs on the same special appointment, I will be pleased to do so.

The costs of the appearance before me on December 11th are to the Applicants, in any event, to be fixed by me.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 702, Applicant, and Rosaline Sonshine and Bernard C. Rothbart, Respondents

Reported at: 8 R.P.R. (2d) 183

Action No. M178992/89 Ontario District Court - York Judicial District Toronto, Ontario Haley D.C.J. June 28, 1989

John R. Carruthers, for the Applicant. Irvin Schein, for the Respondents.

HALEY D.C.J.:-- This is an application by Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 702, the owner of a 345 unit luxury complex, for an order of this court under section 49(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84.

Section 49 provides in part:

49.-(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

The Corporation seeks an order directing the respondents to remove the canopy erected by them over the front entrance door to condominium unit No. 159, which is owned and occupied by them.

The exterior walls of the condominium unit form part of the common elements of the Corporation. The canopy erected by the respondents in September 1988 is affixed to the exterior wall of the unit. The walls are governed by rules respecting the use of the common elements as authorized by section 29 of the Condominium Act.

Section 29(1) and (2) of that Act provide as follows:

29.-(1) The board may make rules respecting the use of common elements and units or any of them to promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of the other units.

(2) The rules shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

There is no issue that the respondents are bound by the Condominium Act, the declaration, the by-laws of the Corporation and its rules, including those passed under section 29(1). See section 31(1) of the Act which provides:

31.-(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

A number of rules governing the use of the common elements were duly passed by the Board of Directors of the Corporation in May 1986. No issue was raised as to their validity. Rule 19 of those rules states:

19. Exterior surfaces of the unit shall not be painted or decorated except in accordance with guidelines published by the board from time to time.

The parties are agreed that the erection of a canopy falls within the word "decorated" in Rule 19. As I read Rule 19 it provides for a prohibition of all decoration except in accordance with guidelines published by the Board.

In December 1988 the Board purported to publish such guidelines. The validity of these guidelines was raised peripherally but that issue does not make any difference in the result. The guideline for canopies published under the heading "Bayview Mills - Guidelines For External Home Improvements" reads as follows: No canopies are allowed.

The question of canopies was very carefully considered and the Board decided that the legal, structural and aesthetic problems that would be created by the construction of canopies on buildings that were not designed for this purpose would not justify the construction.

Clearly this statement, by way of guideline, provides for no relaxation of the prohibition against canopies declared in Rule 19. Therefore, Rule 19 as it stands was in full force and effect and was binding on the respondents in September 1988 when they went ahead with the installation of a canopy over their front entrance door.

In late 1987 the respondents had first requested permission to erect a canopy. In August 1988 they furnished the property manager of the Corporation, probably at his request, with a sketch of the proposed canopy together with samples of the canvas to be used. On August 23, 1988 the Board decided to refuse permission to erect the canopy. This decision was communicated to the female respondent on August 24th. On September 29, 1988 the respondents erected the canopy. The male respondent candidly admitted that he intended to do so with or without the approval of the Board.

I do not think the Board's conduct in this period makes any difference to the outcome. I have serious doubt that the Board without specific authority could have consented to an act which was in direct contravention of the rules of the Corporation, enacted on behalf of all the owners for the benefit of all owners. See Re Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 and Rochon et al. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545 (Ontario Court of Appeal).

The balance of the subsections of section 29 referred to earlier bear out the weight of control as vested in the owners and not in the Board:

(3) The rules shall be complied with and enforced in the same manner as the by-laws.

(4) Subject to subsection (5), any rule made under subsection (1) shall be effective thirty days after notice thereof has been given to each owner unless the board is in receipt of a requisition in writing made under section 19 requiring a meeting of owners to consider the rules.

(5) If a meeting of owners is required, the rule made under subsection (1) shall become effective only upon approval at such meeting of owners.

(6) The owners may at any time after a rule becomes effective amend or repeal a rule at a meeting of owners duly called for that purpose.

The last quoted subsection provides a method for the respondents to obtain their canopy if a sufficient number of owners can be convinced that canopies are an acceptable amenity. One has to keep in mind that condominium living works on a principle of community and that such decisions affecting the common elements must reflect community concerns and not the wishes of particular unit owners. I do not think this is a question of whether the rule is reasonable. The argument that the canopy is required to protect against ice and snow is considerably weakened when one considers that the respondents have occupied the premises since 1975 and have never made a complaint to the Corporation's management about deficiencies in the snow and ice removal service provided by the Corporation. I would distinguish the case of Re Peel Condominium Corporation No. 73 and Rogers et al. (1978) 21 O.R. (2d) 521, where the issue was one of what was reasonable in the use of common elements designated for exclusive use. Here, there is a complete prohibition against use of the common elements, namely, the exterior walls of the unit, in a specific way, in a bid to provide a uniform aspect for the complex.

Section 49 of the Condominium Act quoted earlier allows discretion in the court in making an order directing performance of a duty. The respondents have brought a separate motion requiring the Corporation to enforce the by-laws and rules against other allegedly offending unit owners. For example, reference is made in the material, inter alia, to three existing awnings or canopies.

Section 31(2) of the Condominium Act provides:

Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

The respondents therefore in their application seek an order directing the Corporation to perform its duty and to enforce the Corporation rules respecting the common elements for a number of alleged non-compliances.

The affidavit of Gordon Parrott, property manager, sworn June 1, 1989 states in paragraph 8 through 13 that the Board of Directors of the Corporation is currently in the course of having infractions of the rules and the guidelines remedied.

In my view it would be reasonable to allow the Corporation time to complete the steps outlined in the affidavit before the court makes any order in response to the respondents' application. Accordingly, this latter application (M180844/89) is adjourned sine die, not to be brought back on until after October 31, 1989 and then on seven days' notice to the responding party.

I am sure that in its efforts to effect compliance the Board will have regard to the Rochon case mentioned above and to my doubts that the Board has any power to consent to acts of non-compliance with the by-laws and rules, unless there is something in the declaration or by-laws of the Corporation which has not been brought to my attention.

There will be an order directing the respondents to remove the canopy over the front entrance door of their condominium unit 159, such removal to take place within 30 days of the making of this order.

Costs of this application (M178992/89) may be spoken to by the parties.

Beer et al. v. Townsgate I Limited et al.

36 O.R. (3d) 136

Docket No. C23123 Court of Appeal for Ontario Brooke, Osborne and Austin JJ.A. October 23, 1997

*Application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed with costs April 30, 1998 (Cory, Major and Binnie JJ.).

APPEAL from a judgment of Chapnik J. (1995), 25 O.R. (3d) 785, 48 R.P.R. (2d) 27, declaring agreements of purchase and sale void and ordering the return of deposits.

Allan Sternberg and Laurel C. Broten, for appellants. Martin Teplitsky, Q.C., and Barbara C. Bedont, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

BROOKE J.A.: -- This is an appeal by Townsgate I Limited from the judgment of Chapnik J., delivered on October 13, 1995 [reported 25 O.R. (3d) 785, 48 R.P.R. (2d) 27]. By that judgment, she held that agreements of purchase and sale for condominium units between the appellant and the respondent purchasers were void because at the time the appellant entered into the agreements, it was not registered under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31) ("ONHWPA"), s. 6. The trial judge also found that the respondents, Elazar Astrug and Eugeny Privis, were entitled to rescind their agreements by reason of negligent misrepresentation made to induce them to sign, that agreements made by the respondents Shohana Agbariya and Isaak Nimerovsky were not binding due to non-receipt of the disclosure statements, and that in the case of Elazar Astrug and Shoshana Agbariya, Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Boris and Natalia Galperin and Isaak Nemirovsky, were not binding due to late acceptance.

Factual Background

The appellant is a developer. In early 1989, it proposed to develop a site as a luxury condominium building and offer condominium units for sale at that time. It contracted with Norman Hill Realty Inc. ("Norman Hill") to sell the condominium units. At that time, the market for condominiums was generally inflated. The units offered for sale were described as luxury condominiums and were priced at the high end of the market at an average price of about $340,000.

At trial, a good deal of the evidence focused on the techniques used by Norman Hill to deliver a "sold building" through the use of special invitations and a grand opening. Essentially, the trial judge agreed with the respondents' submission that they signed their agreements in an atmosphere of extreme "hype" created by Norman Hill. The trial judge said:

A picture emerges of anxious purchasers waiting in long lines for up to seven hours in the frigid cold; and then, for up to three hours in the hot, crowded sales pavilion, before seeing an agent; and of harried realtors, unable to handle the crowds, affecting a demeanour sadly lacking in courtesy or candour.

The majority of the purchasers signed their agreements of purchase and sale during the three-day grand opening held from February 24 through to February 26, 1989. The agreements provided for closing on May 21, 1991 or as that date might be advanced or extended. The agreement was a complex document of several pages in length with some 32 sections in small type.

About ten months after the grand opening, when 160 of the 220 units had been sold, the market was in rapid decline. The appellants advertised the sale of the unsold units at much lower prices than the respondents had agreed to pay and guaranteed prospective purchasers the value of their investments. By March of 1991, a number of the purchasers from February and March 1989 were unwilling to complete their transactions because of the recession and their personal positions. Each had made a bad deal and wanted out. Many purchasers tried to cancel their agreements, but the appellants refused to accept such cancellations. In May of 1991, the appellants attempted to negotiate with the purchasers by offering a 15 per cent reduction in exchange for the payment by the purchasers of an additional deposit and an undertaking to close their transactions. Of the 160 sold at the grand opening, 70 had cancelled within the ten-day cooling off period provided by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C-26. Of the remaining 90 purchasers, 45 took advantage of the 15 per cent reduction in price and completed their transactions. The respondents, who are 39 of those remaining, commenced this action on August 21, 1991.

They claimed a declaration that they were entitled to rescind their agreements and the return of the $40,000 deposits. The appellants counterclaimed. They sought damages for breach of contract and, in the alternative, forfeiture of the deposit.

Statutory Illegality

The trial judge held that each of the respondents should succeed as each of the agreements was void since the appellant had entered into the agreement prior to being registered under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Warranty Program"). There is no doubt that when it entered into the agreements, the appellant was not registered and that this contravened s. 6 of the ONHWPA.

Section 6 provides:

6. No person shall act as a vendor or builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

It is clear that while the appellant was not registered at the time it entered into the agreements, it had complied with all of the requirements for registration. By February 14, 1989, the appellant had made the required application to the Registrar, paid the enrollment fees which amounted to more than $140,000, completed disclosures as to ownership and guarantees of the obligations under the ONHWPA and provided an irrevocable letter of credit in the sum of $4,500,000. The evidence of counsel for ONHWP was that, by February 23, 1989, there was no reason why the Registrar would not proceed with the registration "as a matter of course". She also said that the purchasers, the respondents, were not prejudiced by the sale before registration and were fully protected by the warranty under the Act. She testified that a claim on the warranty for return of deposit for proceeding in breach of s. 6 would, in the circumstances, have been refused.

It was only after four weeks at trial, on February 27, 1995, that the respondents raised this issue and they were allowed to amend their statement of claim to plead that the agreements were void for illegality. In lengthy reasons, after considering the history of the legislation and a number of authorities, the trial judge concluded that a breach of s. 6 by the vendor, the appellant, rendered the agreements of purchase and sale a nullity. She held that the agreements had been undertaken in the face of the "clear and unambiguous prohibition" against sale prior to registration. It was her opinion that the "prohibition in s. 6 of the Act is fundamental to the nature and purpose of the regulatory scheme". The object of the Act and general intent was to protect the public until registration was satisfied and that failure to register before sales made sales a nullity.

With respect, I think the trial judge reached the wrong conclusion and erred both with respect to her analysis of the Act and the authorities that she referred to, each of which is distinguishable from either the facts or the legislation in issue here. As stated above, the appellant had fully complied with all of the onerous registration requirements and there was no further action or documentation required of it. The agreements of purchase and sale contained reference to the ONHWPA and made clear that the appellant was providing the statutory warranty. The registration was granted shortly after the contracts were entered into and long before closing. Perhaps the most important thing is that the purchasers were fully protected; the fact that registration had not been issued was of no moment in this regard.

If the parties intended to make a contract which was legally binding and the protection of the public sought by the statute assured, then notwithstanding the breach of s. 6, the agreement could be legally performed. I think the trial judge failed to appreciate that illegality as to contractual formation must be distinguished from illegality as to the performance of the contract. From the reasons for judgment, it does not appear that this submission was made to her, nor was she referred to the judgment of this court in Maschinenfabrik Seydelmann K.-G. v. Presswood Brothers Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 316 at pp. 321-22, 53 D.L.R. (2d) 224 (C.A.) where Schroeder J.A. said:

What is forbidden by the statute and the Regulations under review is not malum per se but malum prohibitum, and in every case it becomes a crucial question whether the contract is capable or incapable of lawful performance. In the latter case, e.g., if the parties should agree to commit a crime, or if they should clearly agree to commit an act prohibited by statute, such a contract is intrinsically illegal since it necessarily involves an offence or a violation of the law. With much deference to the opinion of the learned trial Judge who decided against the plaintiff with some reluctance, he has failed to take into account the well-settled presumption of law in favour of the legality of a contract; that if a contract can be reasonably susceptible of two meanings or modes of performance, one legal and the other not, that interpretation is to be put upon it which will support it and give it operation.

A like presumption was applied by the Supreme Court in Paoli v. Vulcan Iron Works Ltd., [1950] 1 D.L.R. 593, [1950] S.C.R. 114, where it was held that as there was no evidence that the contract there under consideration was intended to be put into effect without the permission required by the Wartime Salaries Order, although the increase in salary, the subject-matter of the contract, was agreed upon between the parties before the official permission was sought, it must be assumed that the parties intended to comply with the law. I quote from the judgment of Rand, J., at p. 594:

It is said that because the consensus for an increase had been reached in June, 1942, and was to be retroactive to January 1st of that year, the contract was illegal. I must confess to great difficulty in appreciating the grounds for that view. It was illegal only on the assumption that it was intended to be put into effect and carried out without relation to approval. There is no evidence of this one way or another, and in its absence I assume that these parties intended to comply with the law of the country. That this is so is fully confirmed by the fact of the company's application.

There is at present a tendency to regulate many activities in modern life by statutes or by Regulations authorized by statutory enactments, and the distinction between a contract inherently illegal because it cannot be performed without violating the law and one which can be legally performed but is void on the ground that there was an intention to perform it in an illegal manner cannot be disregarded. Since there is a presumption against illegality in the latter case, it is necessary for the defendant alleging illegality in the contract to show that there was an intention to break the law.

The contracts in this case were not "inherently illegal" in that, by their terms, they were incapable of being legally carried out. It was the intention of each of the parties to make a legal contract and to carry it out.

While this appeal was pending, two other cases were tried, in which the effect of a breach of s. 6 was considered. In neither did the trial judge reach the same conclusion as that reached by the trial judge in this case. In Skyrise Developments Ltd. v. Abrahams, a decision of the Ontario Court (General Division), released July 16, 1996 [now reported 29 O.R. (3d) 451, 3 R.P.R. (3d) 125], on similar facts, Davidson J., applying the principles as stated by Schroeder J.A., held that the agreements of purchase and sale were enforceable. He expressly disagreed with the conclusions of the trial judge in the case at bar and referred to the decision of Gotlib J. in Puri v. Sharynton Homes Ltd. (1994), 48 R.P.R. (2d) 8 at p. 16 (Ont. Gen. Div.). She said:

I do not think it matters to this lawsuit, and it is not a satisfactory ground on which to proceed. . . . At least registration was complete prior to the proposed date of closing, and it makes no difference to the purchaser at all whether or not registration was complete at the time of the agreement of purchase and sale.

In my view, Davidson and Gotlib JJ. were right. See also the annotation by Howard D. Gerson and Theodore B. Rotenberg at 48 R.P.R. (2d) 9.

I think it is significant that while the Act provides for a financial penalty for a breach of s. 6 it does not expressly provide that the contract so made is unenforceable. If a statute does not expressly deprive a party of his or her rights under the contract, the question is whether, having regard to the purpose of the Act, and the circumstances under which the contract was made, and to be performed, it would be contrary to public policy to enforce it because of illegality: see the judgment of Devlin L.J. in St. John Shipping Corp. v. Joseph Rank Ltd., [1956] 3 All E.R. 683 at p. 690, [1957] 1 Q.B. 267 (Q.B.).

The purpose of the ONHWPA was described when it was introduced in the Ontario legislature as follows: "to provide major protection for purchasers against the added cost and inconvenience caused by poor workmanship in home construction": Legislature of Ontario Debates (31 May 1976) at p. 2736. I think, contrary to the trial judge's finding, that the registration requirements, per se, are not fundamental to the regulatory scheme. The protection which the Act sought for purchasers was not affected. The purchasers were not alleging an evil at which the Act is aimed. Indeed, as the trial judge noted, "the builder was clearly not unscrupulous, financially irresponsible or technically incompetent, much to the contrary".

As to public policy, the court must exercise its discretion guided by principles that command general acceptance: see William E. Thomson Associates Inc. v. Carpenter (1989), 69 O.R. (2d) 545 at p. 554, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (C.A.). In this case, the purchaser's argument was highly technical. As Waddams notes in The Law of Contracts, 3rd ed. (1993), at p. 381:

If every statutory illegality, however trivial, in the course of performance of a contract, invalidated the agreement, the result would be an unjust and haphazard allocation of loss without regard to any rational principles.

I think public policy favours that contracts should not be rendered unenforceable merely because of technical deficiencies. That is this case. The appeal on this ground is therefore allowed.

Negligent Misrepresentation

The trial judge held that two of the purchasers, Elazar Astrug and Eugeny Privis, were entitled to rescind their respective agreements due to misrepresentations by Townsgate and representatives of Norman Hill. She found that the misrepresentations concerned a material matter affecting the subject-matter of the contract and that such representations induced these two unsophisticated purchasers to enter into the agreement.

The trial judge relied on her overall findings that, from the time the invitation to the grand opening was sent out setting out a specific time and date to attend for a "special preview price", Townsgate's marketing was misleading. She found an atmosphere of extreme "hype" and "frenzy" at the grand opening, with purchasers being rushed into signing. The Norman Hill sales agents repeatedly fabricated a false sense of scarcity, and told purchasers that the purchases were "risk-free" and a "guaranteed investment".

Elazar Astrug was a 45-year-old taxi driver who came to Canada in October 1982, having completed 11 years of schooling in Israel. He is able to read but could not write English. The trial judge's findings regarding Elazar Astrug are as follows:

Elazar Astrug was told more than once that this was a risk-free investment which was guaranteed, and that the price would not go down.

When asked why he decided to buy, he responded, "Because as I told you, I didn't see that there was nothing to lose here; only to gain".

His efforts to return his unit based upon the representations to him were prodigious. I find that as a rather unsophisticated purchaser, Mr. Astrug reasonably interpreted and relied upon what he was told, to his detriment. Had the risks inherent in the impugned transaction been fully and fairly explained to him, or had the representations not been made at all, I am persuaded that he would not have entered into the contract. His claim on that basis is allowed.

Eugeny Privis was a 59-year-old cobbler whose only previous experience with real estate was the purchase of a condominium as a residence in 1980. The trial judge found as follows: The representations allegedly made to Eugeny Privis were that his investment was guaranteed and risk-free and that the builder would buy back his unit at any time.

When reviewing this within the entire context of Mr. Privis's testimony and his relatively low level of sophistication, both in respect of the market and educationally, I find his actions to have been consistent with reliance. His stated reason for the purchase was "I think I don't lose nothing". Moreover, he recognized George Kerr from his shoe repair shop and clearly relied upon his judgment. "He was a professional. He said prices would never come down; it was risk-free and I believed him." When attending at the sales office a few days later to return his unit, at which time he was induced to purchase another one, it was Mr. Kerr's representation that the builder would buy it back if he changed his mind, that made the difference.

The trial judge believed the evidence of these respondents that, at an early stage -- in one case in early February, 1989 and in the other, that April -- they were still relying on the representations made to them and determined to get out of the contract. The trial judge also found that their efforts to do so were "constantly ignored and rebuffed". The trial judge further found that there was no conduct on the part of the respondents or either of them that would constitute acquiescence, waiver or estoppel in law to disentitle them from the relief in the circumstances.

Entire agreement clause

The appellant makes several arguments regarding this ground of appeal. A principal one is based on para. 24 of the agreement, which reads:

24. This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof. It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing whether contained in any sales brochures or alleged to have been made by any sales representatives or agents.

The appellant argues that the existence of this "entire agreement" clause precludes any finding of liability from a representation. It argues further that, as the language of this clause is clear and unambiguous, the allegations of Astrug and Privis are inadmissible due to the parol evidence rule.

The existence of a contractual relationship between the parties does not preclude a claim in tort: see Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 147, 31 D.L.R. (4th) 481. In BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro & Power Authority, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 12, [1993] 2 W.W.R. 321, the Supreme Court of Canada addressed the issue of concurrent liability in tort where a clause in the contract may exclude or limit such liability. In that case, the court held that the contract did not negate or limit the defendant's common law duty not to negligently misrepresent certain facts, nor did it negate or limit the plaintiff's right to sue in tort. As to whether the right to sue in tort was precluded, the court said at p. 27 S.C.R., p. 331 W.W.R.:

The rule is not that one cannot sue concurrently in contract and tort where the contract limits or contradicts the tort duty. It is rather that the tort duty, a general duty imputed by the law in all the relevant circumstances, must yield to the parties' superior right to arrange their rights and duties in a different way. In so far as the tort duty is not contradicted by the contract, it remains intact and may be sued upon.

In the case at bar, the trial judge assumed that para. 24 would preclude an action in tort. However, she relied on her finding that the purchasers did not assent to the clause and concluded that they could sue in tort. She stated as follows:

Not only was the clause buried in the fine print of the contract, but purchasers were not provided with an opportunity to read the agreement or to negotiate its terms before signing. They cannot, therefore, be taken to have assented to be bound by the disclaimer.

I am not convinced that the wording of para. 24 precludes a claim in tort. However, I agree with the trial judge that, in the circumstances, these respondents cannot be taken to have assented to such a clause in the contract. As Waddams, supra, states, at p. 98:

Thus, if the promisee actually knows of the promisor's intention, or has herself misled him, she will not be able to rely on a different "objective" meaning [I]f a promisee knows that a signed writing does not represent the true intention of the promisor, he will not be able to take advantage of the writing. The same result should follow even if the promisee does not actually know but ought reasonably to know of the promisor's mistake, for the objective theory cuts both ways. It protects reasonable expectations but not unreasonable ones.

As this was a standard form contract and the clause was in fine print, in the frenzied atmosphere described above, it was not drawn to the attention of these respondents, the contract was signed in haste with no opportunity for them to read it, there can be no reasonable expectation they were assenting to the clause: see Tilden Rent-A-Car Co. v. Clendenning (1978), 18 O.R. (2d) 601, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 400 (C.A.); Zippy Print Enterprises Ltd. v. Pawliuk, [1995] 3 W.W.R. 324, 100 B.C.L.R. (2d) 55 (C.A.).

The appellant argues that the parol evidence rule renders the allegations of Astrug and Privis inadmissible. They argue that, since the language of the contract is clear and unambiguous, parol evidence may not be admitted to alter the meaning, especially where it would contradict the agreement. In my opinion, the parol evidence rule cannot operate to exclude evidence of a misrepresentation that induced the making of the contract and thus be used to allow the defendant to rely on a clause in the face of the misrepresentation: see Canadian Indemnity Co. v. Okanagan Mainline Real Estate Board, [1971] S.C.R. 493 at p. 500, 16 D.L.R. (3d) 715 at p. 720.

There are five elements of the tort of negligent misrepresentation set out in Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87 at p. 110, 99 D.L.R. (4th) 626, as follows:

(1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee; (2) the representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making said representation; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent representation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

The representation must be material and must have served as an inducement to enter into the contract. In making the determination as to materiality, the court may consider evidence as to what was said and the manner in which the information was presented to the purchaser: Panzer v. Zeifman (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 502 at pp. 508-09, 88 D.L.R. (3d) 131 (C.A.).

Reasonable reliance

The trial judge concluded that, if the misrepresentations had not been made to Astrug and Privis by the sales agents, they would not have entered into the agreements. Townsgate submits nonetheless that these two purchasers did not rely, in a reasonable manner, on the misrepresentations. The appellant relies on the following statement by Schroeder J. in Hinchey v. Gonda, [1955] O.W.N. 125 at p. 128 (H.C.J.):

It is, of course, well settled that a representation, to be of effect in law, should be in respect of an ascertainable fact as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion. A representation which amounts merely to a statement of opinion, judgment, probability or expectation, or is vague and indefinite in its nature and terms, or is merely a loose, conjectural or exaggerated statement, goes for nothing, though it may not be true, for a man is not justified in placing reliance on it . . .

I think it is significant that the trial judge rejected the claims of other purchasers based on misrepresentation on the ground that they failed to prove reliance. She found their ultimate decision to purchase was grounded on their own judgment, and was not persuaded that they had relied on the representation complained of. She then reviewed certain purchasers' claims in more detail, considering their relative level of sophistication, their vulnerability and the particular situation at the time of purchase. She concluded that Astrug and Privis had proved this aspect of the claim. The others did not.

In my opinion, there is no basis on which we should interfere with this finding. It was founded in a careful review of the evidence and findings of credibility. The sales agents' repeated statements to both purchasers that the investment was "risk-free" and "guaranteed", and to Privis that the vendor would buy back the unit at any time, are in the category of fact. That Astrug and Privis were unsophisticated purchasers further supports the conclusion that their reliance, in the circumstances, was reasonable.

Affirmation by conduct

The appellant contends that Astrug and Privis are disentitled to rescission on the ground of misrepresentation because their conduct during the approximately two years following the execution of the agreements affirmed the contracts. The appellant relies on the fact that they allowed their deposit cheques to be cleared and that they received correspondence without objection. The appellant further contends that a party must act promptly after learning of the misrepresentation to disaffirm the contract. In rejecting these arguments, the trial judge said:

The purchasers' individual and joint efforts to rescind their agreements at an early state were consistently ignored or rebuffed by the vendor. To now state that the purchasers were "keeping their options open" does not accord with the plaintiffs' evidence, which I accept. Their passive receipt of documents or correspondence cannot constitute a waiver of their strict legal rights. I find that any dealings with the vendor were undertaken without prejudice to the plaintiffs' right to treat their contracts at an end. If anything, Townsgate kept the plaintiffs at bay with promises to renegotiate their agreements prior to closing, as they indeed did in the spring of 1991. The failure of the purchasers to retain or provide written documentation of their ongoing complaints only serves to underline their relative lack of sophistication.

I think the trial judge found that these two unsophisticated purchasers relied on the misrepresentations made to induce them to enter into the agreements and when, relying on the misrepresentation, they determined to have the appellant honour them, the appellant simply took advantage of them again with assurances and promises of renegotiation. In the circumstances, the finding that neither of the two respondents intended to affirm the contract, is quite reasonable and their acts regarded accordingly. The appellant relied on Panzer v. Zeifman, supra. That case is distinguishable on its facts.

This ground of appeal fails.

Vicarious Liability

The appellant argues that even if this court upholds the trial judge's finding that the Norman Hill sales agents committed the tort of negligent misrepresentation, the appellant is not vicariously liable for those misrepresentations as Norman Hill and its employees are independent contractors. As such, the appellant is not liable unless a reasonable person could have foreseen potential damage as a result of the agent's acts.

The purchasers contend that the appellant is vicariously liable for the sales agents since there was a relationship of principal and agent. The appellant held out the sales agents as acting on its behalf, the misrepresentations were in the scope of their authority, and the appellant knew of and accepted the conduct.

The trial judge appears to have addressed every issue which was raised. However, there is no suggestion in her reasons that the appellant made such submissions to her at trial.

In my opinion, the findings of the trial judge on this issue are unassailable. In the circumstances, it is not open for the appellant to seek to avoid liability on this ground. The trial judge found that a relationship of principal and agent existed:

Mr. Kauffman and his employee realtors manned Townsgate's sales office. They held themselves out to the public as agents for the vendor and acted under its direction and control. Their work was incidental to the overall project. Townsgate's principals permitted the agents, acting within the scope of their authority, to make representations which they knew or ought to have known were not accurate; and it is vicariously liable for their conduct.

The evidence amply supports these findings. Mr. Kauffman, an officer of Norman Hill, and his employees staffed the appellant's sales office as its sales manager and sales agents. The invitation to purchase and the letter of congratulations to purchasers was printed on Townsgate's letterhead and signed by Mr. Kauffman as the appellant's "sales manager/director of sales and marketing". Indeed, all of the evidence on this issue is consistent only with the conclusion that the appellant calculated that it would be clear to the public that Norman Hill, Mr. Kauffman and their sales agents had the authority to make representations which they knew or ought to have known were not accurate.

Nowhere in its statement of defence does the appellant suggest that Norman Hill was an independent contractor for whose acts it is not responsible.

I am not satisfied that there is any basis on which we should interfere with the judgment on this issue.

I should add that, in my opinion, even if the relationship of Norman Hill to the appellant was that of independent contractor, the result should be the same. It was, after all, employed by the appellant to deliver a sold building by inducing prospective purchasers to make offers to purchase the units. If, in the course of doing so, persons were induced to make offers by negligent misrepresentations of the sales agents, such persons should not be without the remedy of rescission of their contract with the appellant, the only effective remedy, because of the fictional difference of the appellant's relationship with the sales agency.

On the facts of this case, the appellant held Norman Hill out as its agent and it is not open to it to defend on this basis.

Non-receipt of Disclosure Statement

The trial judge found that the respondent, Shoshana Agbariya, never received the disclosure statement as required by s. 52(1) of the Condominium Act. Further, the respondent, Isaak Nemirovsky, should have been allowed to rescind the agreement as the disclosure statement was not received within the 10-day period provided for in s. 52(2) of the Act and therefore the agreement had no point of commencement. These sections provide as follows:

52(1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the 1st day of June, 1979 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

(2) The purchaser, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the unit, may rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within ten days after receiving the disclosure statement or, where there has been a material amendment thereto, within ten days after receiving the material amendment.

In this case, the disclosure statement consisted of a large black binder detailing the proposed by-laws and regulations, maintenance costs, amenities and other factors relating to the condominium. At trial, the sales agents uniformly attested to having distributed the binders to the purchasers as a matter of practice upon execution of the agreements. However, the sales agents had no confirming documentation nor any specific recall of the distribution to any particular client. The agreement contained an acknowledgement by the purchasers of receipt of the disclosure statement, but this clause was neither initialled nor brought to the purchasers' attention.

Ms. Agbariya initially purchased a unit on February 25, 1989, but on March 7, 1989, replaced it with a second unit. At the time of this change, she signed a document saying that she was returning the disclosure binder. She stated on examination for discovery that she could not remember whether she had received the disclosure binder. At trial, she testified that she was sure she had not received it. After noting that Ms. Agbariya was an unsophisticated purchaser, had a grade 10 education, and presented as an honest witness, the trial judge found, on a balance of probabilities, that she had never received the binder, despite the acknowledgement both in the agreement of purchase and sale and in the cancellation document.

Isaak Nemirovsky's wife testified that her husband had received the disclosure statement by registered mail some time after March 22, 1989, and that, in April 1989, they returned to the sales office to get out of the deal. On the basis of Mrs. Nemirovsky's evidence, the trial judge concluded that the Nemirovskys should have been entitled to rescind the agreement.

An appellate court should not reverse findings of facts of a trial judge in the absence of palpable and overriding error: Lapointe v. Chevrette, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 351, 90 D.L.R. (4th) 7. The court should be especially cautious where the findings are based on the credibility of the witnesses. I will not interfere with the trial judge's finding that Ms. Agbariya had not received a disclosure statement, as it was essentially one of credibility. It was not clearly wrong. The appeal with respect to Ms. Agbariya on this ground therefore fails. I have more difficulty, however, with the finding regarding Mr. Nemirovsky. Section 52(3) of the Condominium Act requires that the notice of rescission be in writing. There is no evidence that this was done. Further, by letter dated October 9, 1990, Mr. Nemirovsky's solicitor requested that Townsgate's solicitors advise him when interim occupancy and final closing would be taking place. While not determinative, this constitutes an affirmation that the deal had not been cancelled. In my view, the appeal with respect to this respondent should succeed.

Late Acceptance of Agreement of Purchase and Sale

The agreements of purchase and sale stated:

This offer shall be irrevocable by the Purchaser until one minute before midnight on the fifteenth day after its date, after which time if not accepted, this offer shall be null and void and the deposit returned to the Purchaser without interest. The undersigned accepts the above offer and agrees to complete this transaction in accordance with the terms thereof.

Paragraph 24 of the agreements provides: "This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale."

Marmi Horowitz, the on-site representative employed by Norman Hill, testified that a representative of the appellant attended at the sales office "within a week" of the grand opening to sign the agreements on its behalf. Ms. Horowitz testified that she then attempted to contact each of the purchasers to let them know that their agreement had been accepted. If she was unable to reach someone or a message was not returned within a couple of days, she sent the accepted agreements to the purchasers by registered mail. No records were kept of the telephone calls, the mailings, or the acceptance dates.

The trial judge found that six of the respondents, Shoshana Agbariya, Elazar Astrug, Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Boris and Natalia Galperin, and Isaak Nemirovsky, did not receive their accepted agreements within the 15-day time period stipulated in the agreements, thus rendering the agreements null and void.

Communication of Acceptance

The appellant submits that, in accordance with the wording in the agreements, communication of the acceptance was not required. It argues that a binding agreement was created when the offer was signed by the appellant's representative within the 15-day period.

As a general rule, acceptance of an offer must be communicated to have a binding contract. Depending on the language of the contract, there are exceptions to this general rule. The appellant relies on the decision in Principal Investments Ltd. v. Trevett, [1956] O.W.N. 353, 3 D.L.R. (2d) 311 (H.C.J.). In that case, the court considered a clause parallel to para. 24 in this case. It stated: "This offer, when accepted, shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale." Barlow J. held that this clause waived the necessity of communication. Once the offer was signed, it became a binding contract. However, I do not agree with that conclusion. Nothing in the language of the contract waives the necessity for communication of the acceptance. Moreover, a majority of this court expressly disagreed with this reasoning in Schiller v. Fisher (1979), 25 O.R. (2d) 56, 100 D.L.R. (3d) 186, reversed on other grounds, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 593, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 577.

The appellant also referred to Shelson Investments Ltd. v. Durkovich (1984), 34 Alta. L.R. (2d) 319 at p. 331 (Q.B.). In that case, the court held that a document stating that it was to "constitute an agreement of purchase and sale forthwith upon being signed by both parties" made communication of acceptance unnecessary. There is no analogous language in this case. On the wording of these agreements, in my opinion, it is not sufficient that the acceptance is merely signed.

The appellant also submits that the acceptance of the agreements was properly communicated by way of telephone contact by Ms. Horowitz within the 15-day period. As the trial judge found that this communication did not take place, we give no effect to this submission.

Acquiescence to Late Acceptance

The appellant submits that, although there was no express agreement between the parties to extend the time limit for acceptance, the respondents, through their conduct, acquiesced to the late acceptance. The appellant relies on the fact that the respondents allowed their initial deposit cheques of $20,000 to be cashed in March 1989 and their two subsequent deposit cheques of $10,000 to be cashed shortly after their due dates. Each respondent also received correspondence from the appellant that clearly indicated that a binding agreement existed and took no objection. One of the respondents, Elazar Astrug, moved in December 1990 and thus did not receive correspondence from the appellant after that date. However, the evidence establishes that there was substantial correspondence before that date.

In addition, the appellant argues that a number of the respondents acted in a positive manner consistent with their intention to close. They rely on the following evidence. Natalia Galperin said that it was possible that, in April 1991, she told one of the sales office staff to call her back to select unit finishes as her husband was out of town. Morris Freedman admitted to making two appointments to select unit finishes in April 1991 and cancelling both. Moti Fishman met with the builder about the end of May 1991 to discuss the appellant's 15 per cent reduction proposal. Gitya Nemirovsky recalled having gone with her husband to discuss the 15 per cent reduction.

The trial judge did not consider this evidence of positive conduct in her reasons. She found that the actions of these respondents "in the particular circumstances" could not be taken as affirmation of their contracts.

In Imperial Oil Ltd. v. C & G Holdings Ltd. (1986), 58 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 326, 174 A.P.R. 326 (Nfld. T.D.), affirmed (1989), 78 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1, 62 D.L.R. (4th) 261 (Nfld. C.A.), Imperial Oil sued for specific performance of a contract relating to operation of a service station. The owners had signed an agreement to become dealers upon the advance of funds by Imperial Oil. Goodridge J. held that, although the time for acceptance by Imperial Oil had expired, the owners had impliedly agreed to extend the time for acceptance through their conduct. First, the owners had never repudiated the acceptance. The court acknowledged that there would normally be no reason to do so once the offer had expired. But in this case, there was ongoing discussion between the parties that made repudiation appropriate. Second, the owners repeatedly asserted the terms of the contract after the expiry by asking for the funds due under the contract. Goodridge J. concluded at p. 341, "By their conduct, they must be deemed to have acquiesced in the late acceptance. By virtue of the acquiesced acceptance, a contract came into existence."

I think that something more than passive acceptance of documents may be required. Basing acquiescence or affirmation on passive conduct would place an unfair burden on purchasers to actually repudiate the contract when, as Goodridge J. acknowledged, there would seem to be no reason for them to do so. However, when purchasers actively continue to "assert their rights" under the contract, it is evident that they have affirmed its existence. In addition, permitting the deposit cheques to be cashed is compelling evidence. This accords with common sense and reasonable commercial expectations. Accordingly, in my view, the trial judge erred in failing to find that all six of the respondents affirmed the contract.

Estoppel and Waiver

The appellant submits that the failure of the six respondents to indicate by word or conduct that the agreement was not waived on account of late acceptance rendered them estopped from doing so.

The principle of estoppel was outlined in Maracle v. Travellers Indemnity Co. of Canada, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 50, 80 D.L.R. (4th) 652. The concept is that a person is precluded from retracting a promise, by words or conduct, upon which another has relied. Shelson Investments Ltd. v. Durkovich, supra, involved the defendant's late communication of acceptance of the plaintiff's counter-offer to buy an apartment building. O'Leary J. held that the wording of the counter-offer made communication of acceptance unnecessary, but that, in any event, the plaintiff's silence and accompanying conduct estopped him from denying a binding contract on the ground of lack of communication. He said, at p. 332:

The plaintiff at no time during the period following execution of the interim agreement to the date litigation was commenced indicated to the defendant that it was taking the position that no contract existed due to failure on the part of the defendant to communicate his acceptance of the counter-offer. In Waddams, The Law of Contracts, the author says at p. 60:

... if one party is aware of the other's belief in the existence of a contract, and does nothing to deny it, but acts himself as though there were a contract, he may be estopped from later denying that a contract exists.

There is nothing in the correspondence from the plaintiff's solicitor or otherwise which suggests that the plaintiff was taking the position that no contract existed because acceptance of the counter-offer had not been communicated to the plaintiff. The plaintiff in fact filed a caveat to protect its interest under the interim agreement. At the same time, the correspondence from the defendant's solicitors made it quite clear that the defendant believed a binding contract existed. The issue of lack of communication of acceptance was not raised at any time prior to the commencement of litigation. In my view the plaintiff is estopped from now denying the existence of a valid contract on the basis that acceptance of the counter-offer was not communicated to it.

The facts in this case are similar. The respondents argue that, in light of the trial judge's finding that they took steps to cancel their deals and that the appellant was aware at an early stage of their dissatisfaction, there was no unambiguous promise by them not to rely on their legal rights and no detrimental reliance by the appellant. I do not agree. There is a difference between the respondents wanting to get out of the deal on the one hand, and claiming that the deal is not binding on the other. The appellant was entitled to rely on the existence of a binding agreement. The desire of the respondents to get out of what they considered to be a bad deal is really not relevant. In my opinion, they are estopped from claiming late acceptance.

In the circumstances, the evidence does not support a finding of waiver.

In the result then, I agree with the appellant's submission that the trial judge erred in holding that the agreements entered into by the respondents, Shoshana Agbariya, Elazar Astrug, Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Boris and Natalia Galperin, and Isaak Nemirovsky, were null and void because of late acceptance by the appellant.

Disposition In the result, I would allow the appeal except with respect to the respondents, Elazar Astrug, Eugeny Privis and Shoshana Agbariya. The judgment below is set aside and in its place judgment will go for the appellants for payment of the balance due by the respondents, other than the three referred to, of the purchase price for their units (see Appendix B of the appellants' factum). We were informed that there was no dispute with respect to these amounts. In addition, the appellants will have judgment for pre-judgment and post-judgment interest.

The respondents, Elazar Astrug, Eugeny Privis and Shoshana Agbariya, will have judgment declaring that they are not bound by the agreements which they entered into with the appellants and for the return of their deposits and any moneys paid under the agreements, together with pre-judgment and post-judgment interest.

Order accordingly.

Landmark of Thornhill Limited v. Jacobson et al.

25 O.R. (3d) 628

Court File No. C13148 Court of Appeal for Ontario, McKinlay, Griffiths and Doherty JJ.A. September 25, 1995

APPEAL from a judgment of the General Division (Day J.), dismissing a claim for specific performance.

Christopher E. Reed, for appellant.

Gerald J. Morris, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

MCKINLAY J.A.: -- This is an appeal from a judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Day, dated August 27, 1992, declaring an agreement of purchase and sale between the appellant and the respondents to have been terminated, and ordering the deposit moneys paid pursuant to that agreement be returned to the respondent, Michael Barry Jacobson.

FACTSThe Agreement of Purchase and Sale

The appellant (vendor) Landmark, and the respondents (purchasers) Jacobson and La Plante entered into an agreement of purchase and sale in respect of a condominium unit in Thornhill, Ontario. The purchase price was $315,300 for the unit and $15,000 for an additional parking space. The purchasers paid an initial deposit of $5,000 as well as further deposits required by the contract both prior to and upon interim closing. To the point of the motion before Day J., the purchasers had paid a total of $82,575 toward the purchase price.

The agreement of purchase and sale, dated October 26, 1988, stipulated that the purchasers would be required to give a unit mortgage to be taken back by the vendor on the closing date in the amount of $236,475. The terms of the vendor take-back mortgage (the mortgage) were to be as set out in Schedule B to the agreement. The closing date was specified in the agreement as March 31, 1991, or whenever the unit was substantially completed for occupancy. The unit transfer date or final closing date was the date on which title to the unit would be transferred to the purchasers, and was to occur on a date to be established by the vendor.

In the interim period between the closing date and the unit transfer date, the purchasers agreed, pursuant to para. 11 of the agreement, to make interim occupancy payments which included a mortgage interest component. The interest component was described in para. 11(a) of the agreement as the amount of interest payable in respect of the Vendor. Take Back Mortgage or the Unit Mortgage, as the case may be, during the Interim Occupancy Period for the principal amount described in either paragraph 1.e) or paragraph 1.f) hereof . . .

Events between the Signing of the Agreement and Interim Closing

On November 2, 1990, the vendor's solicitor wrote to the purchasers' solicitor advising them of an acceleration of the closing date from March 31, 1991 to December 21, 1990. Documents and moneys due on interim closing were set out in the letter. Also set out was an alternative to the mortgage which the purchasers had agreed to assume.

This alternative was comprised of conventional unit mortgage financing arranged with Canada Trust by the vendor on behalf of the purchasers. This alternative had no effect on the obligation of the purchasers to assume the mortgage. By virtue of the alternative, Canada Trust would pay the amount due under the mortgage to the vendor on behalf of the purchasers. The purchasers would then discharge the mortgage upon payment to Canada Trust. Without the amendment, the purchasers would arrange for financing of the mortgage through some other financial institution.

Although this letter was dated November 2, 1990, the purchasers had in fact already executed an amendment to the agreement on October 11, 1990, which amendment provided that the purchasers would assume a unit mortgage to be arranged by the vendor in the amount of $236,475.

Following other correspondence, on November 30, 1990, the purchasers' solicitor advised the vendor that the purchasers

. . . at all times understood and was aware that he had to arrange for payment of the purchase price of a unit from his own resources or mortgage arrangements. My client advises that he never agreed to assume a unit mortgage to be arranged by the vendor.

This, of course, was inaccurate. The original agreement, signed by the purchasers, included the obligation to assume a mortgage. This provision was subsequently amended to the extent that the purchasers obligated themselves to a conventional first mortgage arranged by the vendor through Canada Trust. The purchasers were, of course, obligated to arrange their own financing or pay from their own resources, because the agreement states that the mortgage is not intended to be permanent financing.

The vendor's next move was to offer to the purchasers four options in view of alleged uncertainty surrounding the enforceability of the mortgage as a result of a decision of Rosenberg J. in Albrecht v. Opemoco (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 151, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 594 (H.C.J.), which held that vendor take-back mortgages similar to that involved in this case were in contravention of s. 51(6) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 provision. The purchasers declined to exercise any of the proposed options, insisting that no mortgage component would be payable in respect of occupancy. The purchasers advised on December 13, 1990 that they were prepared to close, making interim occupancy payments with no mortgage component, and reserving to the vendor its right to claim the interest component of the occupancy fees if the Court of Appeal reversed the decision of Rosenberg J. in Albrecht. On December 20, 1990, counsel for the purchasers delivered to counsel for the vendor a series of documents required for interim closing. On December 21, 1990, the vendor acknowledged receipt of those materials, and further confirmed the purchasers' statement in the December 13, 1990 letter stating:

In the event that the Albrecht decision upon which your client relies is reversed on appeal and removes, in our view, any doubt as to the enforceability of our client's mortgage back to your client . . . the Vendor reserves its rights at law and pursuant to the Agreement to claim and recover from your client the monthly amount in dispute. The purchasers moved into the condominium as required by the agreement.

Events Subsequent to Interim Closing

In an undated letter (subsequently referred to as the letter of August 23, 1991), the vendor notified the purchasers that the date for final closing would be September 11, 1991. The vendor also sought to confirm certain information with respect to the financing of the mortgage.

The purchasers responded on August 26, 1991, reiterating their stance that:

In connection with your request with respect to financing arrangements, the purchaser did not agree to assume a mortgage arranged by your client and in connection with same . . .

Of course, the purchasers did agree to assume a mortgage, the financing of which was to be arranged by the vendor; this was the substance of the amendment to the agreement executed by the purchasers on October 11, 1990.

On September 23, 1991, the vendor delivered a letter to the purchasers enclosing a draft transfer of land for the condominium and a variety of other documents. The letter also included a paragraph regarding the mortgage, with reference to the amount of the mortgage and the fact that the mortgage was due seven days after the unit transfer date.

The vendor, in a letter dated September 24, 1991, reiterated its position (originally set out in its letter of December 21, 1990) that, although it did "not accept or specifically deny [the purchasers'] stated position . . . that the vendor is not entitled to receive the 'interest portion' of the occupancy fee" the vendor was prepared to close on the following terms:

To facilitate the closing of this transaction, without prejudice to our clients rights under the Agreement and under the Condominium Act and in the event the Albrecht decision, upon which your client relies, is reversed on appeal and removes, in our view, any doubt as to the enforceability of our client's mortgage back to your client (including its rights to collect the interest portion of the monthly occupancy fee), the Vendor reserves its rights at law pursuant to the Agreement to claim and recover from your client the monthly amount in dispute.

The purchasers responded on September 25, 1991, stating that:

[The purchasers'] position has always been that this was to be a cash transaction and since the VTB Mortgage is not enforceable and my client has made first mortgage arrangements with CIBC Mortgage Corporation, no VTB mortgage will be delivered on closing.

The purchasers here would appear to be saying that no mortgage was due on closing solely on account of the Albrecht decision, and not on account of any undertaking by the vendor or understanding between the parties that a mortgage would not be required in light of that decision.

In a letter dated September 25, 1991, the vendor agreed to extend the closing date to September 30, 1991. The vendor also sought a clarification of the position being taken by the purchasers with respect to the mortgage:

[Y]our client had amended the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, which original Agreement of Purchase and Sale provided for the giving back to the vendor of a vendor take back mortgage which has a term of 7 days. Your client subsequently amended the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to provide for the giving or assuming of a unit mortgage in accordance with Schedule "C" of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. You took the position that since your client did not have counsel at the time that he executed this amendment that the amendment was not valid. We did and do not agree with your stated position. If your position is as you maintained prior to the interim occupancy that the amendment to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is not valid then obviously I must look back to the original Agreement of Purchase and Sale which provides for the giving of a 7 day vendor take back. If your position is now that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale provides for a 7 day vendor take back mortgage does not exist either, then I must look to the amendment to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale which is a unit mortgage, in which case your client has been in default by not making any application to the Vendor's Lender as he is obliged to do so. Please confirm as to what your position now is.

The purchasers responded by letter dated September 26, 1991:

As previously indicated, I am of the opinion that the VTB provisions of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale are not enforceable. My position remains the same in that my client advises that he did not agree to assume a mortgage to be arranged by your client with Canada Trust. I am instructed to advise that no VTB mortgage will be delivered. The reservation of rights to claim occupancy fees remain.

The vendor, by letter dated September 26, 1991, maintained that a mortgage was required.

On September 30, 1991, the purchasers advised the vendor that they had tendered the purchase money on the vendor's representative, who had refused to accept it and had also refused to deliver the transfer of the condominium unit. The purchasers viewed the refusal as a fundamental breach of the agreement. The purchasers reiterated their view that the vendor was not entitled to the mortgage and, in the event that they were wrong, stated that the vendor could be adequately compensated in damages. The purchasers also make mention of a letter from the vendor dated September 30, 1991 and inquired as follows:

In connection with your letter of September 30, 1991 delivered by your representative, I would appreciate you advising as to whether same is intended merely to restate your prior position of reserving any rights you have in the event the Albrecht decision is reversed on appeal or whether your letter was to indicate that you are prepared to complete the transaction while reserving your rights?

By letter dated October 9, 1991, the purchasers notified the vendor that the agreement was terminated as a result of the fundamental breach of the vendor. They demanded that the deposit money be returned with interest.

THE ACTION

On October 29, 1991, the vendor issued a statement of claim seeking specific performance of the agreement and damages in addition to specific performance and, in the alternative, common law damages for breach of contract.

The purchasers vacated the condominium unit on November 17, 1991. They issued a statement of defence and counterclaim on November 20, 1991.

Both purchasers and vendor moved for summary judgment. The motions judge found that:

At the time of the occupancy closing in December 1990 the enforceability of the vendor take back mortgage was in doubt by reason of the decision of Rosenberg J. in Albrecht v. Opemoco . . . Landmark and Jacobson agreed that the mortgage component of the occupancy fee would not be payable during the occupancy license and reserving to Landmark the right to claim same if the decision was reversed on appeal. The occupancy closing was completed on that basis.

In view of Landmark's refusal to transfer title in face of the purchasers' refusal to assume the vendor take-back mortgage, Day J., in awarding damages to the purchasers, held that:

[The purchaser] did what was reasonable for him to do given the state of the law at both closings. He offered Landmark the full purchase price at closing with an acknowledgement to Landmark of having to pay the mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee if the Court of Appeal reverses the decision of Rosenberg J. He put Landmark in a position where, despite the technical requirements of the contract, Landmark could not lose. I find Jacobson acted in best faith, given the law facing him at the time.

The "acknowledgement" referred to by the motions judge can only refer to the original agreement between the parties that the purchaser would not pay the mortgage interest component during interim occupancy, but would reserve its rights to claim those moneys should the Albrecht decision be reversed on appeal. This was certainly not an undertaking to pay the moneys involved should the Albrecht decision be reversed.

Although his reasons are not completely clear on the matter, Day J. appears to have found that the terms of closing had been amended by agreement to exclude a vendor take-back mortgage. If so, he made a finding of fact for which there is no evidence. There is nothing in the record to suggest that the vendor had agreed to close without the mortgage. The evidence indicates that the vendor, with the knowledge of the purchasers, continued to insist on a mortgage both up to final closing and afterward.

Given no evidence of an agreement to exclude the mortgage, the parties were bound to complete the contract on the terms to which they had agreed, not on "reasonable" terms, as concluded by the trial judge. To tender without assuming the mortgage was not in compliance with the terms of the agreement and went far beyond any understanding the parties may have had as to how the interest component would be dealt with. The vendor take-back mortgage constituted the basis of a future possible claim by the vendor for the interest component of the occupancy fee in the event of a reversal of Rosenberg J.'s decision in Albrecht.

The purchasers failed to complete the purchase as agreed.

Given the purchasers' breach, the vendor was entitled to elect to keep the contract alive and sue for damages or specific performance, which it did.

In addition, the fact of the purchasers' breach gave the vendor the right to refuse to transfer title: see Bethco Ltd. v. Clareco Canada Ltd. (1985), 52 O.R. (2d) 609, 22 D.L.R. (4th) 481 (C.A.). There can be no suggestion in this case that the vendor repudiated the contract by refusing to transfer title to the condominium unit. The evidence is that the vendor was at all relevant times ready, willing and able to close the transaction in accordance with its terms.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

As stated above, the vendor requests an order for specific performance of the agreement.

Contracts for the purchase (and usually the sale) of real property traditionally have been specifically enforced. The original rationale for specific enforcement of any contract was the unique nature of the property involved, and real property has historically been treated by courts as unique in nature. Therefore, it was considered that damages could not compensate a purchaser for the loss of the particular property contracted for if it were realty.

In spite of the fact that a vendor of real property is getting nothing unique from his side of the bargain, specific performance has traditionally been awarded to vendors of real property as well as to purchasers, on the basis of mutuality of remedies.

It was argued by counsel for the purchasers that condominium apartments in modern multi-unit buildings are in no way unique, and should not, therefore, be subject to specific performance decrees at the plea of either vendor or purchaser. However, while many condominium units are of the mass-produced carbon copy variety, there are many which are truly unique. It is clear that uniqueness is an important factor for the court to consider in the exercise of its discretion to grant specific performance. However, the non-defaulting party should not be put in the position of having to prove the uniqueness of realty in order to succeed. On the other hand, a defaulting party should be required to prove any lack of uniqueness on which it wishes to rely.

In determining whether or not to exercise discretion in favour of specific performance, the court should look not only at the nature of the property involved, but also the related question of the inadequacy of damages as a remedy. In addition, because of the equitable nature of the remedy, the court should take into account the behaviour of the parties. In this case, the purchasers had nothing to lose by giving the vendor take-back mortgage which was agreed to in the agreement of purchase and sale. The vendor had agreed that, if the Albrecht decision were ultimately upheld on appeal, the interest portion of the occupancy fee would not be payable to it under the mortgage. However, had the vendor not had the mortgage, and the Albrecht decision been reversed on appeal (as it was [(1991), 5 O.R. (3d) 385, 85 D.L.R. (4th) 289]), then the vendor would have had nothing on which to sue. There is no indication that the purchasers presented a written undertaking at the time set for final closing to pay the interest portion of the occupancy fee if the Albrecht decision were reversed on appeal.

The vendor's behaviour was impeccable throughout. The purchasers were in possession of the property from December of 1990 to November of 1991. By that time the condominium market in Toronto was in considerable difficulty, to the extent that the vendors, even up to the time of the appeal hearing, had been unable to resell the unit. Had the purchasers closed the transaction in accordance with the agreement they made, they might still be living in the unit. In any event, from the point of view of the vendor, its sale would have been concluded, and it would not have had a vacant unit on its hands for an indefinite period of time. Given all of the circumstances, I am of the view that this is an appropriate case in which to award the remedy of specific performance in favour of the vendor.

RESULT

I would set aside the judgment below, and replace it with an order for specific performance of the agreement of purchase and sale, including the vendor take-back mortgage. The appellant is entitled to its costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Action No. RE2025/92 Ontario Court (General Division), Somers J. July 29, 1993

APPLICATIONS about the return of a deposit paid under an agreement for the sale of a condominium unit.

Angela M. Costigan, for applicant (respondent in counter- application).

Jerry Herszkopf, for respondent (applicant in counter- application).

SOMERS J.: -- There are two applications before the court in this matter -- one by the applicant/purchaser and one by the respondent/vendor. Essentially the two applications are the reverse sides of the same issue. The applicant/purchaser seeks to have the agreement of purchase and sale into which he entered with the vendor/respondent on February 14, 1989 declared null and void and to have his deposit of $59,010 returned to him. The vendor/respondent by way of cross- application seeks to have the same agreement declared valid, thereby entitling it to retain possession of the deposit moneys.

The arguments raised by the applicant are two-fold: Firstly, it takes the position that there is no clear or any description in writing of the land purported to be sold by the vendor to the applicant and that the agreement therefore offends the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.19.

On the facts the applicant, Dr. Edward Ryan, and Caroline M. Gilligan, then an employee of the respondent, executed a document entitled "Granite Gates I Agreement of Purchase and Sale". Because the question that is raised by the applicant concerns the adequacy or otherwise of the description of the land as set out in this agreement (the "agreement") I set out hereafter in some detail its contents.

Immediately under the title of the document on two lines there appear the following words:

Unit No. -- 06 Suite 506

Level No. -- 05

The next five lines which appear before any of the numbered paragraphs in the agreement read as follows:

The undersigned, EDWARD A.J. RYAN and CAROLINE M. GILLIGAN (the "purchaser") hereby agrees with CAM-VALLEY DEVELOPMENTS LIMITED (the "vendor"), on the terms conditions and provisions set out below and in the Agreement and Schedules attached hereto to purchase the above referenced Unit in the Phase, finished in accordance with the specifications and conditions listed in the Agreement and Schedules together with an undivided interest in the common elements and the exclusive use of those parts of the common elements attaching to such Unit as set out in the Declaration (hereinafter collectively called the "Unit"). There follows the first numbered paragraph under the heading "purchase price" which determines that the total purchase price was $393,400 and thereafter sets out the schedule pursuant to which the payments plus the mortgage taken back by the vendor will make up the total purchase price.

The next significant paragraph under this heading is para. 3 which reads as follows:

3. Paragraphs 1-47 and Schedules A-F attached hereto form part of and are an integral part of this Agreement. The Purchaser acknowledges that he has read all paragraphs, and schedules of this Agreement.

The next numbered paragraph appears under the heading "Definitions". Among the words which appear in this section and which are specifically defined, are the following:

(b) "Condominium" means the lands and buildings constructed or to be constructed by the Vendor on the Lands.

(e) "Lands", means that certain parcel or tract of lands and premises in the city of Mississauga, in the Regional Municipality of Peel described as Block KK, part of Block JJ and II, Plan M-199 Mississauga.

(i) "Phase" means Phase One approximately situated as shown in the area plan attached to Schedule "F".

Under the heading "Title" the following appears:

19. "The Purchaser agrees to accept title subject to and be bound by the following:

(a) the Declaration, Description, and the By-Laws (subject to any amendments that may be required by any mortgagee, any governmental authority, or the Land Registry Office, or pursuant to the Act to permit registration thereof, or any other charges including reduction or increase in the number of units that does not materially and detrimentally affect the value of the Unit) substantially in the form delivered to the Purchaser upon entering into this Agreement.

Under the same heading para. 21 reads as follows:

21. The Purchaser covenants and agrees not to register or permit to be registered the Agreement or a notice of this Agreement or assignment or transfer thereof, or a caution, purchasers' lien, or a certificate of pending litigation or any incumbrance whatsoever against title to the lands herein or the unit. The Purchaser shall register the transfer title forthwith upon its delivery and shall pay the costs of registration and taxes relating thereto. In the event that the Purchaser is in breach of this paragraph, the Purchaser hereby irrevocably appoints the Vendor as the Purchaser's lawful attorney with the power to execute any document or consent that may be necessary to remove any title encumbrance or registration. In the event the Vendor is required to pay any money to remove such title encumbrance or registration, the Purchaser shall reimburse the Vendor for such money together with interest at

2% per month and legal fees on a solicitor and his own client basis. Further on in the same agreement under the heading "Construction" two paragraphs are of interest. They read as follows:

24. The Purchaser acknowledges that the Vendor and/or its successors and assigns and/or any related companies may in the future construct another building or buildings on parts of the Lands (for residential, recreational, commercial and/or retail uses) and the Purchaser agrees not to object to such construction nor deem such construction as an inconvenience or nuisance, or make a claim for damages or injuries or otherwise. The Purchaser hereby consents to any rezoning required for the lands in order for the Vendor to proceed with its plans and hereby agrees not to object to any rezoning and Committee of Adjustment applications brought by the Vendor.

25. The Purchaser hereby agrees to accept the Vendor's Covenant of Indemnity regarding any lien claims which are the responsibility of the Vendor in full satisfaction of the Purchaser's rights under the Construction Lien Act, 1983 and will not claim any lien hold back on closing. The Vendor should complete the remainder of the condominium according to its schedule of completion and neither the closing date nor the unit transfer date shall be delayed on that account.

On the face of the document it is clear that the description of the land upon which the building containing the subject unit was to be built does not appear. For some reason the drafter omitted a reference to the land sufficient to make clear precisely where the building was to stand. The applicant argues that unless the document containing the agreement between the parties is sufficient in its particulars to identify the land properly and precisely, the contract is a nullity and thus in breach of the provisions of s. 1(1) of the Statute of Frauds. This section reads as follows:

1(1) Every estate or interest or interest of freehold and every uncertain interest of, in, to or out of any messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall be made or created by a writing signed by the parties making or creating the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized in writing, and, if not so made or created, has the force and the effect of an estate at will only, and shall not be deemed or taken to have any other greater force or effect.

I accept as a general principle of law that in any transaction involving the sale of land, the agreement must be committed to writing and the land must be so identified that there can be no mistake between the parties as to its location.

In her argument, counsel for the applicant referred me to the case of Turney v. Zhilka, [1959] S.C.R. 578, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 447. I have doubts as to the applicability of that case. In it the description of the land purportedly being sold referred to a block of land and went on to say in part, "and not buildings situated on the east side of 5th line West in the Township of Toronto". The parties were apparently agreed that the description did not mean that the buildings were to be removed but that certain lands around the buildings were to be retained by the vendor. It was for that reason that the court held the contract to be unenforceable under the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, because no clear agreement was ever reached. That is not the case here. Obviously the parties did reach an agreement. The purchaser knew precisely what was being bought. He takes the position he does in his application, not because of any uncertainty as to the location of the unit he has purchased, but because he seeks, through a technicality, to avoid the contract.

In my view, on the facts and on the wording of the agreement, the land is properly described. To begin with, there is mention in the conditions, particularly ss. 21 and 24 of "the lands". Since para. 3 of the agreement specifically incorporates these two paragraphs into the contract, the definition section under para. 5(e) which provides a specific definition of the land upon which the condominium building is to be erected is triggered. Another reference to "Lands" is found in the definition of condominium, which includes the lands and buildings constructed or to be constructed by the vendor on the lands. Applicant's counsel suggested that because the word "lands" appears in some instances with its first letter capitalized and in others not, the drafter intended there to be a different meaning or usage to be applied. In this regard counsel for the respondent referred me to the unreported decision of the Court of Appeal dated April 20, 1993, of Cheung v. The Greens at Tam O'Shanter Inc. [now reported at 31 R.P.R. (2d) 52.] In dealing with a similar complaint Morden A.C.J.O. says at p. 3 of the reasons [at p. 55]: The complaint is that the declaration defines terms and capitalizes them and then, in some places in the text of the declaration, the defined terms are not capitalized. This slight lack of formal consistency causes no difficulty in understanding the declaration.

In addition to this, Schedule F is, by virtue of the wording of para. 3 of the agreement, included into and forms part of the agreement. Schedule F is a site plan showing the precise location of the building which contains the condominium unit. Again, it is not a metes and bounds description and regrettably it contains no reference to its geographic location beyond the names of the street and cross-street where it can be located.

On the back of the agreement, the applicant and Ms. Gilligan signed an acknowledgement confirming that they received the agreement of purchase and sale and certain other documents. These documents were delivered pursuant to the provisions of s. 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and s. 32 of R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121 under that Act. Included in these documents is the declaration made pursuant to the Condominium Act and the disclosure statement. Counsel for the applicant points out that the declaration contains the following words:

WHEREAS the Declarant is the owner in fee simple of lands and premises situate in the City of Mississauga in the Regional Municipality of Peel and be more particularly described in Schedule "A" attached hereto.

There is no Schedule A attached to the declaration. However, the disclosure statement, another one of the documents whose receipt was specifically acknowledged by the applicant, does contain a description of the lands. It is the same as that found in the definition section of the agreement of purchase and sale itself. In Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 at p. 138, 96 D.L.R. (4th) 449 (C.A.), Robins J.A. said:

. . . I am of the opinion that regard can be had to all of the information provided to the purchaser. The disclosure statement cannot be viewed in isolation from the other documents mandated by s. 52(6) and (7), but must instead be seen in the context of those documents. They form part of the disclosure material and are intended, along with all of the information required by s. 52(6) and (7) to assist a purchaser in making an informed decision on whether to go ahead with the outstanding agreement. It may be noted that cl. (g) of s. 52(6) requires that the disclosure statement "fully and accurately disclose . . . any other matters required by the regulation to be disclosed. . . ." The disclosure statement contemplated by the Act cannot possibly provide full details of these documents or make reference to all of their provisions. It can, however, assist purchasers in comprehending them by directing attention to certain of their provisions for a more comprehensive statement of their content.

For all of these reasons I am of the view that the agreement does contain sufficient particulars of the land which was the subject matter of the agreement between the applicant and the respondent that it satisfies the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. On this branch of the applicant's submissions, therefore, the application must fail.

The second branch of the applicant's argument is entirely independent of the first. It relates entirely to the question of default by the purchaser, Dr. Ryan, and the procedures required of the vendor to terminate the agreement properly. This discussion has as its starting point the wording of para. 28 of the agreement of purchase and sale which reads as follows:

28. Upon default of the Purchaser of any of the covenants, warranties, acknowledgments and obligations to be performed under this Agreement and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any and all covenants relating to the period of occupancy, if any, and such default is continuing for seven (7) days after written notice thereof has been given to the Purchaser or the Purchaser's solicitor by the Vendor, then in addition to any other rights or remedies which the Vendor may have, the Vendor at its option shall have the right to declare this Agreement null and void and in such event all deposit moneys paid hereunder shall be forfeited to the Vendor and the Vendor may also claim for damages in excess of the deposit. If the Purchaser has taken possession of the unit, the purchaser shall immediately vacate the unit and the Vendor shall be at liberty to sell the Unit with or without re-entry.

The events giving rise to this line of attack are, in chronological order, as follows:

October 19, 1990 -- the vendor wrote to Dr. Ryan and Ms. Gilligan as follows:

Re Granite Gates (Phase 1) Suite No. 506

Congratulations! We are pleased to inform you that your new home is almost ready for occupancy. We wish to advise you that, pursuant to paragraph 17 of the Agreement of Purchase of Sale, the Occupancy Closing date of your suite will be January 10, 1991, and, accordingly, an inspection of your residence has been arranged for you on December 5, 1990.

Please contact us at 828-1774 to set a convenient time for the inspection. We will notify you in advance should these dates change because of matters that are beyond our control.

This will be your first opportunity to view your new home, and also to meet Camrost's Customer Relations Representative, who will walk through your suite with you and address any questions that you may have.

We look forward to hearing from you in the future.

Sincerely.

There does not appear to be any issue between the parties that the defendant was entitled to set the occupancy closing date for January 10, 1991 as it did. Dr. Ryan took the position that he did not receive this letter. He was, at the time the agreement was entered into, living with Ms. Gilligan who, in fact, was an employee of the vendors. By the time the October 19, 1990 letter went out, however, relations between them were strained and it was his unsubstantiated view that Ms. Gilligan had been intercepting his mail.

December 10, 1990 (approximately)

Dr. Ryan's evidence was that it was not until about four weeks prior to the closing date that he became aware of the date proposed for the transaction to be completed. He claimed that it was always his intention when he entered into the transaction that upon being notified of the closing date he would place his own property on the market in the reasonable expectation that the proceeds from that sale would provide him with sufficient funds to close the condominium purchase. The short notice, however, made that unlikely. In any event, he became aware that he would not have sufficient funds to close the transaction and probably would not have even if he had been aware of the proposed closing date on October 19. He took no steps to try and sell his home at this time. There is some question about the accuracy of his evidence about when he first became aware of the proposed closing date. During the course of cross-examination, testimony was elicited to the effect that Dr. Ryan's solicitor received the agreement of purchase and sale in November 1990 and that shortly thereafter he called the solicitors for the vendor and confirmed that the closing date would be January 10, 1991.

January 10, 1991

The transaction did not close. Apparently Dr. Ryan was not aware that this was not a final closing but only the occupancy closing date. He would not have been required on that date to provide the balance of the purchase price, but only a further deposit in the sum of $39,340. Indeed he admitted on cross-examination that if he had been aware that that was the total amount required of him he would have been able to complete the occupancy closing on January 10, 1991. It was his view that he wanted to negotiate a later closing date with the vendor and indeed hoped to renegotiate the price to reflect more accurately the change in the real estate market and the recessionary times generally.

January 16, 1991

The solicitors for Cam-Valley wrote to the solicitor for Dr. Ryan as follows:

Re: CAM-VALLEY DEVELOPMENTS LIMITED SALE TO RYAN, Unit 6, Level Suite 506, GRANITE GATES, PHASE I

This will confirm that the occupancy closing for the above-captioned unit was scheduled to take place on January 10, 1991. To date, however, we have not received the requisite funds or documentation required to affect the above-captioned occupancy closing.

As we have received no correspondence from you with respect to this matter, we wish to advise that we regard your clients as being in breach of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale herein.

Without waiving any of our client's rights with respect to your client's default, and without prejudice to our client, our client is prepared to close the transaction with your client by no later than January 18, 1991, provided that adjustments remain as at January 10, 1991.

We would suggest that you advise your clients to conduct themselves accordingly.

Yours very truly.

February 5, 1991

The vendor's solicitor wrote Dr. Ryan's solicitors as follows:

Dear Sirs:

We are in receipt of your letter to us dated the 28th day of January, 1991.

A copy of your letter was forwarded to our client. The Vendor has asked us to advise you that although Caroline Gilligan did work for Camrost at one time, she was not authorized to make any representations with respect to the above-captioned project, on behalf of the Vendor, as she did not even work on the above project. Any representation made by Caroline Gilligan to Dr. Ryan was clearly made as Dr. Ryan's partner in purchasing the unit and not as a representative of Camrost.

Under the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, if necessary our client is entitled to extend the occupancy closing date. Your client had the opportunity to review the Agreement prior to execution and 10 days rescission period thereafter. If any of the terms were not satisfactory, he could have terminated the Agreement then. At no time did our client make any representation as to the resale value of the unit.

Please advise your client that our client expects both purchasers to honour their obligations under the Agreement of purchase herein, and to complete the within occupancy closing on or before February 8, 1991, or our client will have no alternative but consider your client in default of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale herein. Our client is prepared to exercise its remedies on default to the full extent permitted by law and in equity. Please advise your client to govern himself accordingly.

February 8, 1991

The transaction did not close, nor was the sum of $39,340 payable on the occupancy closing turned over by Dr. Ryan to the vendors.

There were some conversations and negotiations between Dr. Ryan and representatives of Cam-Valley after February 8. As mentioned earlier, Dr. Ryan apparently viewed these as an opportunity to negotiate the price of the unit downwards, but this was unsuccessful. Particulars of the discussions were not revealed to the court because they were carried out on a without prejudice basis.

January 22, 1992

Dr. Ryan wrote to Cam-Valley as follows: Re: Suite 506 Granite Gates Phase I

Dear Mr. Usher:

As you are aware, the above unit was to have closed as per the initial agreement of purchase and sale, on March 1, 1990. Since our last meeting at your office on October, 23, 1990 at 2.30 p.m. I have heard nothing from you or your company in spite of the fact that you would get back to me within a few days. This is in spite of having telephoned your secretary, several times, to find out what you wished to do. Four months have now gone by and still no word. This is the exact type of non-communication I have had from Camrost in the past 3 years.

At this point in time I am left with no other alternative than to ask you to sign the enclosed Mutual Release form and return it to me with the deposit monies of approx $59,010 plus interest (which interest you had said your company would credit me anyway).

Thanking you for your prompt attention to this long drawn out matter.

Yours sincerely.

There was enclosed in this letter a form of mutual release apparently prepared by Dr. Ryan which envisaged the return to him of his deposit in the approximate sum of $59,010 and he and Cam-Valley mutually releasing one another from any claims they may have arising out of this agreement. This letter was apparently unanswered and the release was not executed by Cam-Valley.

February 18, 1992

Dr. Ryan wrote again to the vendor as follows:

Dear Mr. Usher:

Further to my letter dated Jan. 19, 1992, I have as yet heard nothing from you. I find this lack of communication from you to be most unfair and distressing but in total harmony with the disdain your company has treated me during the last few years. I must once again ask you to sign the Mutual Release form that I sent you, and to return my deposit monies with Interest as soon as possible.

In anticipation of an early reply, I remain

Yours sincerely.

February 25, 1992

Cam-Valley Developments wrote a letter to Dr. Ryan as follows:

Dear Dr. Ryan:

RE: CAM-VALLEY DEVELOPMENTS LTD. UNIT 6, LEVEL 5, SUITE 506

As you recall, you were advised by letter dated February 5, 1991 by our solicitors Bratty and Partners that if you did not complete occupancy closing on or before February 8, 1991 you would be in default of the agreement of Purchase and Sale. Unfortunately our without prejudice discussions in connection with regard to a satisfactory closing agreement have not come to any successful conclusion.

We are not prepared to sign a mutual release nor return the deposit monies to you.

Please be advised that we have now terminated the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and are treating all monies as forfeited and will hold you responsible for any damages and interest resulting from your default.

Please govern yourself accordingly.

Yours truly.

March 29, 1992

Dr. Ryan wrote a letter to the vendor in response to their last letter as follows:

Dear Mr. Swedlove,

It was so nice to hear from you and your company after such a long period of absolute silence. I thought you had left town. I hope you don't treat the rest of your clients as silently as you treated me. You should give lessons in how to bargain in bad faith. I suppose I should not be surprised as this is the kind of treatment I have had at your hands in the past 3 years.

To bargain requires a dialogue, your side of the dialogue has been very silent now for 4 and a half months, in spite of several phone calls to Comrost's office, that is not very nice or fair.

I had to send you 2 requests for a mutual release to get you to respond.

You have decided to terminate our agreement of purchase and sale, just like that. Well I would not do anything brash if I was you, the Law works both ways, and not always in the pathway of the Vendor.

You will be hearing from my council shortly, I had hoped that it would not come to this.

Please govern your self accordingly.

Yours truly.

There does not appear to be any issue between the parties that in fact from and after, January 10, 1991, Dr. Ryan and Ms. Gilligan were in default under the agreement of purchase and sale. There is some question about when Dr. Ryan became aware of the date fixed for the occupancy closing, but on the material before me it seems clear that the vendor took all steps required of it to give proper notice to the purchasers.

In my opinion, a careful reading of the default provisions of the agreement as set out in para. 28 requires that the following events must take place and in the following sequence:

1. There must be a default of the purchaser of any covenants, warranties, acknowledgments, or obligations to be performed under the agreement. As I have said there is no issue between the parties that this was so.
2. Written notice of the default must be given by the vendor to the purchaser or the purchaser's solicitors.
3. The default must continue for a period of seven days after such written notice has been given.

In my opinion the letter of January 16, 1991 from the vendor's solicitors to the solicitor for the purchasers satisfies this obligation. There was, in my view, no duty on the part of the vendors to offer to extend the closing date as they did in this letter, but it can be safely stated that if the occupation deadline as extended was not met and the transaction did not close on January 18, 1991, this letter would serve as adequate proof that the breach had continued for seven days after notification of the breach. Counsel for the applicant urges upon me that notice of the default should have been given after the failure to close the transaction on January 18, 1991. I do not agree with that. On my reading of the agreement, the operative date was January 23, 1991. That is seven days after the date upon which notice of the default was given by the vendor to the purchaser. After that date, the vendor was, in my opinion, entitled to terminate the contract.

Rather than do so, however, the vendor, through its solicitor, and in response to a letter received by their solicitors alleging certain representations made by Ms. Gilligan as their employee to Dr. Ryan, extended the closing date even further. In the fourth paragraph on the first page of that letter the solicitors for the vendor said "please advise your client that our client expects both purchasers to honour their obligations under the agreement of purchase and sale herein and to complete the within occupancy closing on or before February 8, 1991, or our client will have no alternative but consider your client in default in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale herein". Counsel for the applicant argued that the first extension of the closing date constituted a waiver of the vendor's right to rely upon the breach complained of. She further argued that the second extension of the closing date as set out in the letter of February 5, 1991 constituted a further such waiver. As to the first closing date, I have indicated that I do not agree with that suggestion. The letter of January 16, 1991 extending it indicated that the offer was made "without waiving any of our client's rights with respect to your client's default and without prejudice to our client". Counsel for the respondent argued that this constituted a reservation of rights permitting the vendors to rely on the breach at the time it wrote its letter of February 25, 1992, eleven months later. I do not agree with that suggestion. Based on the wording of the January 16, 1991 letter the vendor was only claiming that its right to rely on the breach would be preserved to permit it to propose the first extension of the closing date. Nothing is said in that letter about continuing such reservation beyond that date.

As to the suggestion that the letter of February 5, 1991 constitutes a waiver of the vendor's right to rely on the January 10, 1991 breach, the wording of the fourth paragraph would appear to bear this out. The letter is stated to be written "without prejudice", but since there is no specific offer or proposal of settlement of existing litigation, it does not appear that those words should be given any effect. There is no reservation of the vendor's right to rely on the January 10 breach expressed in the letter. Rather, it declares a new closing date of February 8 and states that if the occupancy closing does not take place on or before that date the vendor will have no alternative but to consider the purchaser in default. If, as counsel for the vendor suggests, the vendor could still as of February 5, 1991, rely on the January 10 breach, why would it think it necessary or appropriate to notify the purchasers that if they do not close on the new date their client will "consider your client in default of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale herein". In my view this wording indicates a clear intention on the part of the vendor that a new date for the occupancy closing was established, that the agreement was in effect, rewritten, and that the earlier breach was waived.

It would follow from that that the strict provisions governing notification of default would have to be repeated. That is, notice of the default would have to be given after the default and if the default should continue seven days thereafter, notice could then be given notifying the purchaser that the agreement was at an end. No notice of the breach of February 8 was ever given by the vendor to the purchaser as required by the provisions of para. 28 of the agreement. It follows that the February 25, 1992 letter is of no force and effect since by the provisions of the same agreement it can only have been sent after notice of the February 8, 1991 breach had been provided.

What counsel for the applicant submits is that by virtue of having so worded the letter offering a new closing date suggesting that default will arise if that new date is not met and also by virtue of their entering into negotiations with the purchaser in an attempt to settle this dispute the vendor is now estopped from attempting to rely on the breach of the agreement which occurred on January 10, 1991, which occurred some 13 months before the date on which the vendor purported to terminate the agreement. It is my view that an estoppel has been created similar to that referred to in the case of M.L. Baxter Equipment Ltd. v. Geac Canada Ltd. (1982), 36 O.R. (2d) 150, 16 B.L.R. 98 (H.C.J.). On the authority of the same case it would follow that the purported repudiation of the contract was wrongful and the vendor is liable to the purchaser as a result of this breach.

In my opinion, and for these reasons, the deposit moneys are not forfeit and the vendor is not entitled to retain them. The deposit moneys must therefore be returned by it to the applicant, Edward A.J. Ryan.

There appears to be no dispute between the parties that the sum of $59,010 has been paid by Dr. Ryan to Cam-Valley. This was paid in four instalments, in different amounts and on different days. Counsel for the applicant has provided a calculation of the interest payable on the various amounts as they were paid and counsel for the respondent indicated no objection to the manner in which this was dealt with nor the calculations themselves. These are made pursuant to s. 33 of Reg. 121 under the Condominium Act. In the result, therefore, there will be judgment for the applicant:

1. Declaring that the agreement of purchase and sale between Edward A.J. Ryan as purchaser and Cam-Valley Developments Limited as vendor dated February 14, 1989 is null and void.
2. Directing the respondent to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $59,010 together with interest calculated in the amount of $17,737.75 for a total of $76,747.75.
3. Declaring that the applicant has an interest in the lands, more particularly described as that certain parcel or tract of lands and premises in the City of Mississauga in the Regional Municipality of Peel, described as Block KK, part of Block JJ and II, Plan M-199 Mississauga ("the lands") to the extent of $76,747.75.
4. Granting the applicant leave to issue a certificate of Lucyk on his own behalf and on behalf of all unit owners of Metropolitan Condominium Corp. No. 875 v. Shipp Corp.

(Gen. Div.)

4 O.R. (3d) 684 Action No. RE 86/91 Ontario Court (General Division) Somers J. September 4, 1991

APPLICATION to dismiss a representative action.

Patricia M. Conway, for applicant (respondent).

Robert D. Malen, for respondent (moving party).

SOMERS J.:-- This is a motion brought by Shipp Corporation Limited (Shipp) for an order dismissing an application brought earlier by Michael Lucyk. Lucyk has brought an application both in his personal capacity and in a representative capacity on behalf of all those registered condominium owners of residential units in the Kingsway-on-The-Park who purchased their units directly from the respondent, Shipp. In that application Lucyk seeks an order that Shipp be directed to do the following:

(i) pay each unit purchaser, by way of interest on deposits, the difference between the prescribed rate (as required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, s. 53(3)) and the rate actually paid by Shipp; and

(ii) pay each unit purchaser the difference between the amounts paid by them (as a portion of the occupancy fees) for realty taxes before closing and the amount Shipp actually had to pay in realty taxes until closing, pursuant to an undertaking contained in the standard agreement of purchase and sale signed by all unit purchasers to readjust for realty taxes.

The merits of that application are not before me on this motion. On this motion, brought under Rule 21 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, O. Reg. 560/84, Shipp seeks an order dismissing the application, on the grounds that it is not properly the subject-matter of a representative action and therefore ought not to proceed.

In order to understand better the nature and merits of this motion it is important that the background of the application be set out. In 1987 Shipp and the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada entered into a joint venture to build a condominium project consisting of two towers in the City of Etobicoke. This development became known as the Kingsway-on-The-Park and consists of some 289 units. Interim closings on these units occurred over the course of the spring of 1989, but final closings did not take place until approximately March 1990.

Michael Lucyk (Lucyk), and each member of the class which he purports to represent, purchased these units by entering into a standard form of agreement of purchase and sale drawn up and provided by Shipp. This agreement requires that a deposit on acceptance of the offer and further deposits at stipulated times and in stipulated amounts be paid. For example, the agreement by which Lucyk acquired his unit required that $10,000 be deposited on acceptance of the agreement plus a further $2,000 as a deposit for an extra parking space. An additional $10,000 was required to be paid within ten days after Shipp notified him that the City of Etobicoke had issued a permit for the excavation and construction of the project. A further deposit was required within ten days after Shipp notified Lucyk that the floor slab directly above his dwelling unit had been poured. This was to be in an amount sufficient to bring the total deposit up to 25 per cent of the purchase price or a minimum of a further $10,000, whichever was greater. The balance of the purchase price was to be paid by Lucyk when Shipp gave him a charge on the closing date upon the terms provided for in the agreement.

It should be stressed that the amounts required to be paid by each of the unit holders were not necessarily the same. These would, of course, vary depending on the amount of the purchase price of each unit, the size of the condominium unit and so forth. However, regardless of the amounts paid in accordance with the schedule of payments each agreement provided that interest would be paid on these deposits. Clause 2.01(f) reads as follows:

Interest at the Prescribed Rate on the deposits under 2.01(a), (b) and (c) (the schedule of deposit payment referred to above) shall be paid by the Vendor (Shipp) crediting the purchaser on the Closing Date for interest from the date of acceptance of this agreement by the Vendor for the initial deposit and from the respective dates the other deposits were received.

The agreement does not specify what is meant by "the prescribed rate". It perhaps relates to s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act which reads as follows:

(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration as delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or a transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him.

Further reference to interest payable under this Act is to be found in the regulations at R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121 (Condominium Act), s. 33, which reads:

The rate of interest under subsections 53(2) and (3) of the Act on money held in trust under subsection 53(1) of the Act shall,

(a) for the six months immediately following the last day of March of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of April of that year; and

(b) for the six months immediately following the last day of September of each year, be 1 per cent per annum below the rate paid on The Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts on the 1st day of October of that year.

It is not disputed that Shipp has paid interest on the deposits from the date they were received by it. At issue between the Lucyk group of purchasers and Shipp is the proper rate of interest that should have been paid. Without getting into the respective positions of the two parties it is sufficient for the purposes of this motion to say that evidence filed by the applicants in the main motion supports their contention that the rate of interest they should have received from Shipp is greater than that actually paid.

As part of the material filed there is a questionnaire completed by or on behalf of each unit holder who supports the application setting out, firstly, the payments he or she has made, secondly the interest paid on those payments by Shipp and thirdly, a calculation setting out what payments should have been received had the "correct" rate of interest been paid. It is worth noting at this point that not all of the unit purchasers have joined in the application, although it should also be noted that there are no unit purchasers or owners opposing it. Some 249 of the 289 unit owners have indicated a desire to be represented by the class.

The second area of dispute between the Lucyk group and Shipp was referred to by the parties in the course of argument as the "realty tax issue". This stems from the method of calculating the estimated property tax portion of the occupancy fee that all purchasers were required to pay Shipp prior to the final registration of the Condominium Corporation.

Paragraph 2.02 of the standard agreement of purchase and sale between Shipp and all of the unit purchasers provided for the payment of an occupancy fee which was not to be credited as part of the purchase price. Section 51(6) of the Condominium Act specifies that for residential condominiums the occupancy fee cannot be greater, on a monthly basis, than the total of:

(a) The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale (the "monthly mortgage fee")

(b) an amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the unit (the "monthly estimated taxes")

(c) the projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit (the "monthly maintenance expense").

It is the "monthly estimated taxes" portion of the occupancy fee that is at issue between the Lucyk group and Shipp. The unit owners allege that there was an overcharge for this tax portion in 1989. It is claimed that the amount "reasonably estimated" by Shipp on a monthly basis actually exceeded the amount payable for each unit and that there should be a refund. As with the interest on deposit issue the amounts attributable to each unit differ but can be determined using the same method of calculation in each instance.

It can be seen that the alleged "wrongs" done by Shipp to each of the subscribing unit holders are identical. It is alleged that too low a rate of interest has been paid by Shipp to the unit holders on deposits and too high a figure representing the realty tax component of the occupation fee has been charged by it to the same unit holders. In each case the method of calculating the under-payment for interest and the over-payment for the realty tax component utilizes the identical mathematical calculation. In each instance the calculations produce different results because of differences in such things as purchase price, amount of deposit, date of occupation and so forth. There appears to be no dispute, however, on the basic facts and dates which underlie the calculations in all of the individual cases.

In bringing this motion the moving party points out that the class is not complete in that some 39 unit owners of the 289 suites have not joined in the proceedings and may well be opposed to them. It has been noted, however, that there is no evidence before the court to suggest any such antagonism nor, in my view, can one be inferred. Success in the overall proceedings would necessarily entail payment of a rebate in tax and interest payments to each of the unit owners. I believe that I can conclude no more than that for reasons of their own some of the unit owners in these proceedings have declined to enlist. It does not seem realistic to me that any of the unit owners, whether actively supporting the application or not, would be in opposition to a ruling which would see them paid a sum of money between $5,000 and $10,000 each.

It is also suggested that because a separate calculation is required in order to determine (a) the amount allegedly due to each of the unit holders and (b) the overall figure claimed from Shipp, separate examinations for discovery of each such unit holder should be held. This strikes me as a somewhat hollow argument since there is no dispute about the amounts paid by each such unit holder, both by way of deposit and of occupation fee. The method of converting these to an individual unit holder's claim is common to all unit holders by the application of the same arithmetical formula.

Finally it is urged on behalf of Shipp that on a closing of some sales, solicitors representing the new purchasers raised with Shipp the issues of the interest shortfall or tax over-payment. This appears in examples taken from correspondence filed as exhibits. Many others apparently did not. It is argued that the rights of any purchasers who did not specifically reserve their rights had merged on closing. This would create a situation where some members of the class may well have different rights than some others because their solicitors had the foresight to specifically reserve their rights on these points. However, Schedule B to the standard agreement of purchase and sale appears to deal specifically with this question. It reads in part,

B.1 The purchase price shall be adjusted as of the closing date for the following charges ...

b. realty taxes shall be adjusted as if they had been paid in full by the Vendor and shall be estimated by the Vendor for the calendar year in which the closing date falls as if the unit had been fully completed and separately assessed. Subject to readjustment when the actual assessment for the Unit is available ...

B.2 ...

b. subject to the Purchaser complying with all of his obligations under this agreement a readjustment of the monies held pursuant to paragraph B.1 (b) will be made by the Vendor within 30 days following the receipt of the final assessment for realty taxes applicable to the unit.

It does not automatically follow on the completion of a transaction that obligations between the parties merge on the closing. This is to be determined by the intention of the parties and if on the face of the written agreements the parties intended an obligation to survive closing there is no merger: Fraser-Reid v. Droumtsekas, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 720, 103 D.L.R. (3d) 385. In my view the intention of the parties to the various sale agreements was that the obligation to readjust realty taxes should survive closing and should not merge. I conclude, therefore, that this suggestion urged upon me by the applicant as a ground for holding that this is not a proper case for a class action is without merit.

The case from which much of our jurisprudence concerning representative actions stems is Bedford (Duke) v. Ellis, [1901] A.C. 1, [1900-3] All E.R. Rep. 694 (H.L.). This was an action in which Ellis and certain other plaintiffs sued on their own behalf and on behalf of other growers of fruit, flowers, and vegetables within the area of the Covent Garden of which the Duke of Bedford was the owner, to enforce various preferential rights to stands in the markets which they alleged had been given to them by the Covent Garden Market Act (9 Geo. 4, U.K.) of 1828, c. 113. In allowing a representative action to stand the House of Lords placed substantial emphasis on the convenience of an action being brought in this way where there was a common interest among the plaintiffs. Lord Macnaghten said at p. 8 A.C., p. 697 All E.R.:

But when the parties were so numerous that you never could "come at justice," to use an expression in one of the older cases, if everybody interested was made a party, the rule was not allowed to stand in the way. It was originally a rule of convenience: for the sake of convenience it was relaxed. Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent.

Cases in Ontario have sought to lay down some points of identification or guidelines which must be present before a representative action is properly constituted. In York Condominium Corp. No. 148 v. Singular Investments Ltd. (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 31, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 61 (H.C.J.), Henry J. identified some of these at pp. 34-35 O.R., p. 65 D.L.R.:

Firstly, the class must be properly defined; secondly, all members must have a common interest; thirdly, the breach of the obligation is a wrong common to all; fourthly, the damage suffered is the same to all except in amount; fifthly, the relief sought is beneficial to all; and finally none of the members of the class has an interest antagonistic to any other members.

Steele J. in Butler v. Ontario Regional Assessment Commissioner, Region No. 9 (1982), 39 O.R. (2d) 365, 139 D.L.R. (3d) 158 (H.C.J.) [affd (1983), 143 D.L.R. (3d) 573 (Div. Ct.)], applied these criteria in considering a case brought by a rate payer purportedly on his own behalf and all other rate payers of the City of Toronto claiming that the assessment roll for the city was discriminatory, arbitrary and capricious because certain geographic regions of the city were the subject of higher concentration of increased assessment. Mr. Justice Steele felt that what might otherwise be considered a properly constituted class action failed because, if the purported plaintiff was correct and was able to secure reassessments of all properties within the City of Toronto, there could well be property owners whose reassessments would not be to their liking and who would be antagonistic to the result.

It is urged upon me that in order for there to be a properly constituted representative action there must be a global fund or amount of damages available for distribution among the members of the class represented by the plaintiff, and that it is inappropriate in a class action for individual amounts of damages suffered by members of the class to be added together to arrive at this amount. Further it is urged upon me that a claim framed in damages is equally inappropriate in a class action. This would appear to me to be unnecessarily restrictive. I am more inclined to accept the view of Dea J. in Alberta (Pork Producers Marketing Board) v. Swift Canadian Co. (1981), 16 Alta. L.R. (2d) 313, 129 D.L.R. (3d) 411 (Q.B.) [affd (1984), 34 Alta. L.R. (2d) 274, 9 D.L.R. (4th) 71 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (1984), 57 N.R. 157]. In summarizing a number of the more recent authorities he concluded at p. 317 Alta. L.R., p. 415 D.L.R., that the following principles can be deduced from them:

A representative action will not be rejected simply because part of the relief claimed is damages; such an action may be framed in contract or tort provided there is a common interest and a common grievance; the fact that a detailed accounting or reference may be required will not cause the Court to reject a representative action if, in the circumstances, it is the best method of proceeding; the primary concern of the Court with respect to a representative action for damages is to ensure that the defendant is not prejudiced; in circumstances in which damages are ascertainable without the need for individual examinations for discovery, a representative action may proceed; the proper approach is to examine each case to determine if, in the circumstances, a representative action is the appropriate action.

To say that the claim of each member of the class is exactly the same in the sense that each want the declaratory relief and each wants the class damages is correct. But to say that the claim of each member is the same in the sense that the quantum of damages of each is the same is clearly not correct. That difference is a factor to be considered as it affects commonality. However, the nature of that factor when considered with all the other factors and circumstances of the case does not, in my view, detract from the commonality of interest otherwise evidenced sufficient to deny the members of the class the obvious benefits of a representative action in these circumstances.

In this case it would, in my view, be an unnecessary hardship on the individual unit holders if each one was forced to bring a separate action for what would amount to exactly the same relief. While there is not a common "fund", the exact amount of the claim being made against Shipp is known, and the calculation of its component parts as represented by the individual claims of each unit holder is easily calculated and, what is more important, is to be determined by using the same mathematical formula. In my view the facts of this application lead to the conclusion that it meets all of the necessary criteria of a class or representative action and ought to be permitted to proceed in the manner and form in which it has been constituted. To do otherwise would force an unnecessary hardship on the plaintiffs and would create a multiplicity of proceedings, a situation which the court should at all times strive to avoid.

It follows that the motion brought by Shipp to dismiss the application brought by Michael Lucyk is dismissed. The costs of this motion are reserved to be disposed of by the judge hearing the main application.

Application dismissed.

York Condominium Corp. No. 122 v. Sibblis

72 O.R. (2d) 12

Action No. M188193/89 District Court of Ontario Locke D.C.J. November 1, 1989

APPLICATION by a condominium corporation requiring a unit owner to remove a satellite television dish from a common element.

Ellen Montizambert, for applicant.

Stevan G. Ellis, for respondent.

LOCKE D.C.J.:-- The applicant manages 28 dwelling units and their common interests located on Bur Oakway, Downsview, Ontario. Since June, 1980, the respondent has owned and occupied a unit in this corporation. That unit is located, I am told, at the end of the row of dwellings.

On or about May, 1989, the respondent erected a satellite television dish at the side of his unit within the fenced area of that unit. That area is commonly known as his backyard, and a place constituting a common element in law, is nevertheless for his sole use as an owner.

He installed the dish without having first either notified the corporation or having obtained the permission of its directors.

After the dish was installed, Mr. Sibblis was notified by the corporation's manager that he was in breach of art. IV of the Capital Deed Declaration of York 122. He was requested to remove the dish. He refused. This application is the result.

There is no contest that it was not until July 19, 1989, or soon thereafter, that all owners of units in the corporation were notified at the order of the directors that no owner would be permitted to install or erect a satellite dish on any common element without compliance with the corporation's by-laws. It is a fair inference that until then, no by-law or other specific prohibition existed concerning the installation of television satellite dishes on the corporation's common elements. There is a further fair inference that Mr. Sibblis' dish was installed on the ground within the confines of his fenced backyard. The photographs of it clearly show a large television dish appearing over the top of Mr. Sibblis' fence. The issue in this application is whether the applicant is entitled to rely upon art. IV(1)(d) of the Declaration of York 122 in order to oblige the respondent to remove the dish and compensate the corporation in repairs (if any) to the common element and costs on either a solicitor-and-his-own-client basis or something less Draconian.

The article in question reads as follows:

No owner shall make any structural change or alteration in or to his unit or make any change to an installation upon the common elements, or maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements, except for maintenance of those parts of the common elements which he has the duty to maintain, without the consent of the Board.

Rule 21 of the Rules of York 122 read as follows:

21. No building or structure or tent shall be erected and no trailer either with or without living, sleeping or eating accommodation shall be placed, located, kept or maintained on the common elements. Without question, the respondent Mr. Sibblis as an owner, is bound by and shall comply with the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, the Declaration of York 122 and its by-laws and rules.

I find on the material placed before me, that the board of directors of York 122, as far back as 1980, had permitted the specific installation in the backyard common elements of the various owners, metal storage sheds and the like in connection with the maintenance and cultivation of gardens. There is little material evidence that any of the other owners in the corporation have objected in any specific manner to the appearance of this satellite dish. There is some clear evidence that at least the owner immediately adjacent to the respondent's unit has apparently, by implication, consented to the existence of the dish by saying that he did not object to its being there. The respondent in his affidavit, states that he lives in a unit at the end of the structure. The only person to be affected would be his immediate neighbour, Mr. Ferguson, who does not object.

It is a further fair inference which I draw, that the respondent received no notice either before or during the installation of the dish, that the board of directors had objection to it. Nor was he requested to appear before the board either in person or in writing, in order to make his position known.

I therefore conclude, that pursuant to s. 29 of the Condominium Act, the board made a ruling on the subject of the installation of condominium satellite dishes on common elements well subsequent to this installation. It would appear that no rule existed prohibiting such installation at the time the dish was erected.

Counsel for the applicant relies to some extent upon the decision of the Honourable Mr. Justice Finlayson of the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545, 38 D.L.R. (4th) 430, 44 R.P.R. 228.

In that case, a condominium unit owner sold his unit to a purchaser with an agreed condition of the contract, that the purchaser for his exclusive use could install a satellite dish on the roof of the building. The declaration and description were registered and the condominium board then consisting of representatives of the declarant, passed a resolution granting consent to the installation of the dish. The dish was then installed on a common element. Subsequently, a new board of directors was elected consisting of representatives of the unit owners. It requested that the dish be removed. When this was refused, an application for an order was brought to the District Court. That application was dismissed. On appeal, the order was reversed and the dish was ordered removed.

Mr. Justice Finlayson at p. 554, in part, said the following:

As I interpret s. 38, it provides that substantial additions, alterations, improvements or renovations to the common elements require the affirmative vote of 80% of the unit owners, while other additions, alterations, improvements or renovations require only a simple majority vote, again of the unit owners. If the changes are substantial, any dissenting unit owner can compel the corporation to purchase his or her unit and common interest (s. 38(4)).

The learned appeal justice then observed:

I would have thought that the installation of a satellite dish was a substantial addition, but whether I am right or wrong in this is irrelevant. In the first instance this decision must be made by the board of directors (4.7.1), but in any event, the "consent" referred to in 4.7.2 of the declaration must be a consent obtained through a vote conducted under s. 38(1) of the Act by unit owners.

Section 38 of the Act provides that:

38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

To a substantial extent, in my respectful view, the facts before the Court of Appeal in the Carleton Condominium case differ from those of the case at bar. Here I do not deal with a unit owner selling to a purchaser. Nor do I deal with a situation in which there is any evidence that 80% or more of the owners of the other units, at the time this installation was put in, objected to it. Further, there is evidence that no such by-law of the corporation or even a rule of the corporation relating to satellite dishes existed when the respondent installed his dish.

While counsel for the applicant has made it clear that she views this visible dish as somewhat of a blot on the landscape, there is nothing before me that other owners are of the same view. My own views as to whether the dish is an eyesore or a thing of beauty are totally irrelevant. The other cases presented for consideration deal mainly with whether or not dogs and other pets violate the rules of their respective condominium homes. Satellite dishes and dogs should not be considered as allied subjects for comparison purposes.

Exercising my judicial discretion as best I can, and solely in the light of the evidence before me, untested as it all is on both sides by cross-examination, the applicant has not established that really any of the other owners of the other condominium units take objection to this dish. Those owners by this time have all been notified that their directors object to satellite television dish installation without permission of the board to be obtained in advance. The respondent here had received no such notice. His professed desire to enhance his musical creativity in order to make a living by listening to music around the world, is quite unconvincing. I am satisfied that this installation is akin to a pre-existing non-conforming use, on a common element to which no objection by other owners has been taken.

I regard Mr. Justice Finlayson's reference to a dish being a substantial addition in the context of his judgment as obiter. In the result, in the light of these particular circumstances and these only, this application is dismissed. This is not an appropriate case for costs.

Application dismissed.

Re Peel Condominium Corp. No. 199 and Ontario New Home Warranties Plan et al.

69 O.R. (2d) 438

Action No. 762/87 High Court of Justice, Divisional Court Boland, Chadwick and Isaac JJ. July 28, 1989.

APPLICATION for judicial review of a decision of the Ontario New Home Warranty Program denying coverage to the applicant.

P.M. Conway, for applicant.

Brian Campbell, for respondent, Ontario New Home Warranties Plan.

J.I. Laskin, for respondent, Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Limited.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

CHADWICK J.:-- This is an application under the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 224, for review of a decision of Robert Maling, Manager, Technical Services, Ontario New Home Warranty Program dated July 23, 1986. Maling refused the applicant coverage under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, in connection with certain major structural defects, on the grounds that buildings which comprise the condominium project were built as a rental project and subsequently converted. Converted condominiums are not available for coverage under the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

Facts

Although there is an issue between the parties as to the facts surrounding whether this project was intended as a rental project or a condominium unit from its first construction, there are a number of facts which are not in dispute.

Construction of the project began sometime in 1973 and was substantially completed in the early part of 1976. The project itself consisted of twin towers containing 270 suites and is located at 1400 Dixie Rd., in the City of Mississauga, in the Province of Ontario, and is known as "The Fairways". The project was constructed by the respondent, Sanrose Construction (Dixie) Limited which is owned and operated by two brothers, Jerry and Roman Humeniuk. The project was registered as a condominium corporation on March 28, 1979. The factual dispute between the parties relates to whether this project was a rental project in its initial stages which was subsequently converted to condominiums or whether, in fact, it was always intended to be a condominium project. The original occupants of the building obtained their interest by way of either a month- to-month lease, a fixed-term lease, or a capitalized lease.

The respondent, Sanrose, applied to HUDAC for registration under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program and on February 22, 1978, received a registration number.

On January 27, 1982, the applicants gave notice to the respondent, Ontario New Home Warranties Plan (Warranty Plan) of problems with two common elements, namely the roof and the exterior masonry wall. At that time, the Warranty Plan was not aware of the history relating to the occupation and ownership of the suites. The Warranty Plan carried out inspections of the premises and on September 24, 1982, rejected the roofing claim on the basis it was not a major structural defect within the meaning of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and regulation. The applicant appealed this decision to the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal and subsequently abandoned the appeal. At that time the Warranty Plan did not make a finding with reference to the exterior masonry claim and the matter was held in abeyance. Between October, 1982 and December, 1985, there was no further communication between the applicant and the Warranty Plan regarding the masonry wall. During this period of time the applicant was involved in litigation with the respondent, Sanrose.

In December, 1985, the applicant requested the Warranty Plan to review the professional opinions received by them regarding the exterior masonry wall and the proposed correction. The initial opinion given by Robert Maling was to the effect that he doubted whether the problem constituted a major structural defect. A number of meetings took place between the parties for the purpose of determining the type of rectification which would be required to correct the exterior masonry wall problem. A recommendation was made by the Warranty Program with reference to the rectification. The Warranty Plan at this point in time was complying with its statutory requirements of attempting to conciliate disputes between the parties. Up until then, the Warranty Plan had been acting on a without prejudice basis attempting to find the most economical solution to the problem and had not rendered a decision as to whether the exterior masonry problem was covered under the Warranty Plan.

In an effort to determine the construction history and background relating to the exterior wall, Robert Maling met with the respondent builder, Sanrose, on June 12 and 18, 1986. It was at this time that the Warranty Plan first learned of the background and history of this project as related to them by the respondent, Sanrose. In view of the information learned from the respondent, Sanrose, the respondent, Warranty Plan, advised the applicant on June 18, 1986, that they were considering the matter and that they would be in touch with them in due course.

On July 23, 1986, Robert Maling wrote a letter to the applicant, reviewing the history of the project which had been gleaned from the respondent, Sanrose. Mr. Maling wrote in part as follows:

Recently the Warranty Program has met with the developer in the presence of the developer's solicitors and it has asked its own solicitor to become involved in the assessment of the claim.

The Warranty Program's assessment and evaluation of the information at its disposal has been concluded and it regrets that no warranty coverage is available to the Condominium Corporation in respect of the masonry wall claim. The buildings which comprise the condominium project were built as a rental project with construction commencing in 1973, and with substantial completion in the early part of 1976. Subsequently, the units were either rented to individual tenants or a leasehold interest was sold in certain units to a numbered company who subsequently sold capitalized leasehold interests in those units to individual tenants. Not until 1979 was application made to convert the rental project into a condominium and after that point in time it is the understanding of the Warranty Program that certain units have been sold to individual purchasers on a freehold basis. Unfortunately, projects that were built before the Act came into effect or even subsequent thereto, that were built and used as rental projects, which have subsequently been converted to condominiums are not available for coverage under the provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

A building purchased before the effective date of the Act and occupied as a rental building is not subject to the provisions of the Act. I believe the foregoing fully explains the Warranty Program's position with respect to this matter.

The Warranty Plan's position is that this letter constituted a decision made pursuant to s. 14 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350, and that the applicant in this case should have proceeded by way of appeal pursuant to s. 16 of the Act.

The respondent, Sanrose, agrees with the Warranty Plan's position.

The applicant argued that this was not a decision under s. 14 and if it was a decision under s. 14, the respondent Warranty Plan had failed to comply with s. 16 in giving to the applicant notice of the entitlement to a hearing. Section 16 reads as follows:

16(1) Where the Corporation makes a decision under section 14, it shall serve notice of the decision, together with written reasons therefor, on the person or owner affected.

(2) A notice under subsection (1) shall inform the person served that he is entitled to a hearing by the Tribunal if he mails or delivers, within fifteen days after the notice under subsection (1) is served on him, notice in writing requiring a hearing to the Corporation and the Tribunal, and he may so require such a hearing.

(3) Where a person served requires a hearing by the Tribunal in accordance with subsection (2), the Tribunal shall appoint a time for and hold the hearing and may by order direct the Corporation to take such action as the Tribunal considers the Corporation ought to take in accordance with this Act and the regulations, and for such purposes the Tribunal may substitute its opinion for that of the Corporation.

(4) The Corporation, the person or owner who has required the hearing and such other persons as the Tribunal may specify are parties to proceedings before the Tribunal under this section.

Decision of the Warranty Plan

Mr. Maling in giving his decision of July 23, 1987, did not include a notice of entitlement to a hearing for the commercial registration appeal tribunal as required by s. 16(2) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. The applicant's position is, that as a result of the failure to provide proper notice and to adhere to the procedural requirements set forth in the Act, the decision is invalidated.

Further, the applicant argues that Maling, in reaching his decision of July 23, 1986, failed to give notice to the applicant, did not allow them to make representations and failed to treat them fairly before arriving at his decision.

It is clear from the evidence Maling was involved with all of the parties from the time of the revival of the notice in December, 1985, up until June 10, 1986. All of these meetings dealt with the exterior masonry problem and the method of correcting or resolving that problem. It was only on June 12th and 18th when he met with the respondent, Sanrose, that he embarked upon the inquiry relating to the question of coverage and whether in fact the project would be covered under the Act. There is no issue that he did not advise the applicant that this was what he was considering. When he finally wrote the letter of July 23, 1986, he had had no input whatsoever from the applicant relating to the question of coverage. With these facts, we would have no difficulty in finding that the Warranty Plan had not treated the applicant fairly; they did not give the applicant proper notice that they were going to deal with the coverage issue; and they did not allow the applicant to make representations and be heard before arriving at the July 23, 1986 decision.

It is clear from the principles enunciated in Re Nicholson and Haldimand-Norfolk Regional Board of Com'rs of Police (1978), 88 D.L.R. (3d) 671, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 311, 78 C.L.L.C. Paragraph 14, 181 (S.C.C.), that the respondents have a duty to treat the applicants fairly. If there had not been any other avenue open to the applicant, and this decision of July 23, 1986, would have disposed of its claim, then we would have allowed this application and remitted it back for a proper hearing.

However, s. 16 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act provides for a trial de novo hearing before the commercial registration appeal tribunal. The applicant's position is that Maling's decision of July 23, 1986, was not a decision within the meaning of s. 14 and therefore the applicant has no right to a trial de novo hearing. In the alternative, the applicant argues that the Warranty Plan has deprived the applicant of its entitlement to a hearing by not giving the applicant proper notice of that right.

The Warranty Plan's position is that this application is premature and that, though they have erred in not providing the proper notice, the applicant still has a right to proceed with an application to the tribunal to have this matter heard trial de novo, notwithstanding the time limitation set forth in s. 16. The applicant relies upon s. 10(7) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act R.S.O. 1980, c. 274, which reads as follows:

10(7) Notwithstanding any limitation of time for the giving of any notice requiring a hearing by the Tribunal fixed by or under any Act, and where it is satisfied that there are prima facie grounds for granting relief and there are reasonable grounds for applying for the extension, the Tribunal may extend the time for giving the notice either before or after expiration of the time so limited, and may give such directions as it considers proper consequent upon such extension.

Although this section provides some relief to the applicant, it does require the applicant to satisfy the test under this section. We asked both respondents whether they would consider allowing the applicant to satisfy the test set forth in s. 10(7). We are hopeful that the tribunal will look with favour on an application by the applicant, especially in view of the fact that the applicant has been put in this procedural difficulty as a result of the respondent Warranty Plan's failure to comply with its statutory requirements regarding notice under s. 16(2). In the previous decision made by Mr. Maling with reference to the roof in 1982, this right was quite clearly set forth in the body of the decision.

In view of the fact that the applicant does have a right to proceed by way of a trial de novo application, the question becomes whether this application is premature. Thurlow C.J. in Canadian Pacific Airlines Ltd. v. Williams, [1982] 1 F.C. 214 (F.C.A.), dealt with a similar problem relating to the Canadian Human Rights Act, S.C. 1976-77, c. 33, and at p. 215 stated:

Moreover, it is to the Tribunal that Parliament has given the duty to decide such questions and even if some of them could be regarded as going to the Tribunal's jurisdiction, the Court should be slow to interfere when there is no good reason to think that the question will not be correctly decided by the Tribunal, where there is an appeal procedure provided by the statute and a further review open in this Court under the Federal Court Act, R.S.C. 1970 (2nd Supp.), c. 10, and where there is no reason to think that the defence of its position before the Tribunal would be more onerous or costly for the person against whom the complaint is made than by bringing prohibition proceedings.

We are therefore of the opinion that the lack of notice and hearing before Maling and the failure to set out the proper notices required under s. 16(2) can be cured in the trial de novo hearing before the tribunal.

The alternative position advanced by the applicant was that this decision of July 23, 1986, was not a decision within the meaning of s. 14 of the Act and as such there was no right to a hearing. Section 14 reads as follows:

14(1) Where,

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract;

(b) an owner has a cause of action against a vendor for damages resulting from a breach of warranty; or

(c) the owner suffers damage because of a major structural defect as defined in the regulations for the purposes of section 13, and the claim is made within four years after the warranty expires or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

(2) In assessing damages, the Corporation shall take into consideration any benefit, compensation or indemnity payable to the person or owner from any source.

(3) The Corporation may perform or arrange for the performance of any work in lieu of or in mitigation of damages claimed under subsection (1).

The decision by Maling dealt only with the issue of coverage and did not go on to determine whether the exterior masonry problem was a major structural defect and to assess the damages. The applicant's position is that this section is very restricted and that the decision made by Maling relating to coverage was outside of s. 14 and the effect of it was to prevent the applicant from proceeding any further.

We are of the opinion that in order for Maling or any other officer of the Warranty Plan to make a decision under s. 16 they must first determine whether the applicant qualifies within the meaning of the Act, otherwise applications under s. 14 would be conducted in a vacuum. We are satisfied that the decision made on July 23, 1986, falls within s. 14 and was required to be made by Maling before he could proceed to determine whether the owner suffered damages because of a major structural defect and to make an assessment of these damages. The decision having been made under s. 14 of the Act, the applicant would then have its right to a trial de novo hearing pursuant to s. 16.

Review of the decision

The applicant's position is that the Warranty Plan, in coming to the conclusion that the applicant was not covered under the Act, made an error in law going to its jurisdiction. The applicant has suggested that we review the record and additional affidavit material to make a determination that the Warranty Plan was wrong in their interpretation, substitute our finding for that of the Warranty Plan, and remit the matter back for a determination of the major structural defect issue and on assessment of damages.

The record in this case is rather sparse and does not contain the material on which Mr. Maling made his decision. The applicant spent a great deal of time in reviewing affidavit evidence of original occupiers of these units to support its position that these units were condominiums, not previously occupied rental units within the meaning of the Act. In response to this material, the respondent, Sanrose, also filed affidavit evidence which directly contradicted the evidence contained in the applicant's material. It is impossible at this stage to choose one affidavit over the other. It is obvious that the tribunal, when it hears this matter, is going to have to hear all of this evidence viva voce and make a determination as to the reliability of that evidence. In our view, the applicant is not in a position before us to supplement the record with additional material in order that we can then substitute our opinion for that of Mr. Maling. We would adopt the reasoning of Morden J.A. in Re Keeprite Workers' Independent Union and Keeprite Products Ltd. (1981), 29 O.R. (2d) 513 at p. 521, 114 D.L.R. (3d) 162 at p. 170 (Ont. C.A.), where he stated:

Having just completed the exercise of examining, in this fashion, the evidence that was before the arbitrator I would express the view, which is in agreement with that of Pennell, J., that the practice of admitting affidavits of this kind should be very exceptional, it being emphasized that they are admissible only to the extent that they show jurisdictional error. I would think that the occasions for the legitimate use of affidavit evidence to demonstrate the exacting jurisdictional test of a complete absence of evidence on an essential point would, indeed, be rare.

Therefore, excluding the affidavit evidence which was before us and looking at the record itself, we must then determine whether in fact Maling asked himself the wrong question and therefore committed an error which placed his decision outside of his jurisdiction. The applicant relies upon Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Int'l Union of Operating Engineers, Local 796 (1970), 11 D.L.R. (3d) 336 at p. 344, [1970] S.C.R. 425, 70 C.L.L.C. 33 (S.C.C.).

This is not a case of a privity clause in an agreement but a question of statute and whether Maling exceeded his jurisdiction under the statute by asking himself the wrong question in dealing with the issue of coverage. We are of the opinion that the issue of coverage is an integral part of s. 14 of the Ontario Home Warranties Plan Act. It must be determined before a conclusion can be reached under the provision of that Act. We are not sitting as an appeal tribunal from that decision but on judicial review. We are of the opinion that the decision is one that the statute can reasonably bear: see Re City of Ottawa and Ottawa Professional Firefighters' Ass'n, Local 162, Int'l Ass'n of Firefighters (1987), 58 O.R. (2d) 685, 36 D.L.R. (4th) 609 (Ont. C.A.). We are therefore of the opinion that this is not a case which warrants judicial interference with Maling's decision and that there is no error of law on the face of the record.

We would therefore dismiss the applicant's application with costs to the respondent, Sanrose. In view of the procedural error committed by the Warranty Plan in failing to provide the proper notices required under s. 16(2) of the Ontario Home Warranties Plan Act, we would not allow that respondent costs of this application.

Application dismissed.

Re Peel Condominium Corporation No. 78 and Harthen et al.

20 O.R. (2d) 225 ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF PEEL MISENER, CO. CT. J. 16TH MARCH 1978.

APPLICATION to enforce a condominium declaration.

W. A. Harrison, for applicant. L. D. Pringle, for respondents.

MISENER, CO. CT. J.:-- This is an application brought by Peel Condominium Corporation No. 78. The declaration that by statute creates that corporation prohibits all owners, tenants and residents of units from keeping dogs, cats, reptiles or rodents in their units or on any part of the common elements. The condominium itself consists of 204 units. Some 22 of the owners have ignored that prohibition and continue to resist the attempts of the corporation to persuade them otherwise. The corporation seeks the assistance of this Court.

The facts essential to a determination of this matter are straightforward enough. The lands and premises in question were, prior to August 28, 1975, owned by Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited. I shall refer to that company hereafter as "Bramalea". On that date, August 28, 1975, Bramalea registered the declaration that I have referred to above in the Land Titles Office in Brampton. However, prior to August 28, 1975, Bramalea entered into written agreements of purchase and sale with most, if not all, of the respondents. According to those respondents who filed affidavits opposing this motion, they were severely misled by the agents of Bramalea. None of them were told that pets were or would be prohibited. Some of them were actually assured that pets would be permitted. Some were not only so assured but as well shown a copy of a proposed declaration that contained no prohibition against the keeping of pets. None of the respondents actually completed his purchase prior to October 7, 1975, but most are firm that neither they nor their solicitors were ever aware of the terms of the declaration that, as I have said, was in fact registered on August 28, 1975, until some time after completion. From that I assume that none of the solicitors who acted for these purchasers took the trouble to peruse the declaration at the Land Titles Office.

Needless to say, some of the respondents swear that, had they known of this prohibition, they would never have made their purchases.

In support of the motion, Mr. Harrison relies upon some four sections of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended. Firstly, s. 3(2)(c) provides that a declaration may contain provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements. Section 9(1) provides that the registration of a declaration creates a corporation without share capital whose members are the owners from time to time. By virtue of s. 12, each owner is bound by the declaration and each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with the declaration. Since each owner has a right to compliance by other owners with the declaration, the latter by necessary implication are under a duty to comply. Section 23(1) [am. 1974, c. 133, s. 13(1)] gives the corporation status to apply to the County Court for an order directing the performance of any duty imposed by the declaration or by the Act, and s. 23(2) expressly grants to that Court the right to direct performance of that duty. On the facts of this case, Mr. Harrison says that there is no reason why the Court should not exercise its discretion to compel compliance with the declaration since it is clear on the material filed, that that is the wish of the board of directors of the corporation.

Mr. Pringle, on behalf of the respondents, resists the motion on three grounds. In spite of his most able submissions, I think that the applicant is entitled to the relief it requests and I think I can best give my reasons for that conclusion by dealing with Mr. Pringle's grounds one by one.

Firstly, he says that the prohibition in question is simply ultra vires the corporation. The Act that creates the corporation sets the limits of its powers. Section 3(2) permits the inclusion of "provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements". Section 18 of the declaration here in question reads as follows:

All present and future owners, tenants, and residents of units ... shall not keep dogs, cats, reptiles or rodents in their units or on any part of the common elements.

Mr. Pringle says that that provision is not one "respecting the occupation and use" but rather is one that seeks to regulate the conduct of the owner. Regulation of conduct is not permitted by the Act, and so s. 18 of the declaration is beyond the power of the corporation and therefore void.

I do not agree. It may be that s. 18 of the declaration regulates conduct, but it surely is as well a provision respecting the use of the units and common elements. The word "respecting" surely means "relating to" or "concerned with" or "with reference to". I cannot think that the word "occupation" restricts the ordinary meaning of the word "use" although I readily acknowledge that certain observations made by Howland, J.A. (as he then was), in Re York Condominium Corp. No. 42 and Melanson (1975), 9 O.R. (2d) 116 at p. 122, 59 D.L.R. (3d) 524, might appear to give support to the opposite conclusion. But in my view "occupation" refers to the manner or nature of the physical possession in itself whereas "use" refers to the enjoyment of the premises once physical possession has been acquired. In my view, they are concepts essentially so different that a conjunctive interpretation in the sense that the regulation must relate both to occupation and to use before it is intra vires has the effect of making the phrase meaningless, and I have the gravest difficulty in contemplating how any provision could, strictly speaking, relate to both occupation and to use.

The second ground raised by Mr. Pringle is this. He says that s. 7 of the declaration provides in clear terms that each unit shall be occupied and used only as a residence for a single family and for no other purpose. That section, he says, is in its very terms free from restriction of any kind and it follows therefore that such occupation must carry with it all the incidents that the law confers upon the family. One of those incidents is the right to keep pets. Section 18 of the declaration then purports to derogate from that right and this it cannot do.

My difficulty is in understanding the logic of this argument. Mr. Pringle says that the main reason preventing a derogation from the apparent common law right of the "single family" to keep pets is the York Condominium case, supra, but I have not been able to find such a declaration in that judgment. Moreover I see no "blatant inconsistency" (to use Mr. Pringle's phrase) between ss. 7 and 18 for the reasons I have attempted to give earlier. Section 7, in my view, relates to occupation. Section 18 relates to use. I see nothing inconsistent in a section restricting the nature of the occupation and then further restricting the use to which those in proper occupation may put to the premises.

Finally, he says that there is here a manifest error in the declaration itself, and that this manifest error should be corrected by expunging s. 18 of the declaration altogether. That argument takes these lines. Firstly, he says that, as a matter of fact, the respondents were grossly misled by Bramalea, the developer. Section 24b [enacted 1974, c. 133, s. 14] imposes on the proposed declarant (i.e., the developer) the obligation to deliver over to the proposed purchaser, upon the execution of the agreement of sale, a copy, inter alia, of the proposed declaration, and, at least 10 days before delivery of the deed, to deliver over a copy of the declaration or confirmation that the declaration is identical in all substantial or material respects to the proposed declaration previously delivered. Bramalea certainly did not comply with that section, and indeed actively misled whether innocently or otherwise, some of the respondents by delivering over a proposed declaration without any restriction on the keeping of pets at the same time verbally assuring them that pets were in fact permitted. Mr. Pringle says that the difference between the proposed declaration and the declaration actually registered constitutes a "manifest error or inconsistency in the declaration" as those words are used in s. 3(6) [enacted ibid., s. 2(2)] of the Condominium Act, and by virtue of the same section, may be corrected by a Judge of the County Court.

Again I find myself unable to agree with that submission. I do agree that in determining whether or not there is a manifest error or inconsistency, the contents of any proposed declaration may well be relevant, but in a factual sense I cannot think that there is here "error or inconsistency". There is nothing to suggest that Bramalea made an error or that the vast majority of the ultimate purchasers thought so at any time, let alone at this stage. Rather, the developer consciously chose to change the proposed declaration, deliberately inserting the impugned s. 18 into the declaration that represented the final draft and which, as I have said, was duly registered. On any ordinary understanding of the words, I do not think that anyone would say that as a result of that "a manifest error or inconsistency in the declaration" arose. It may be unfair or unjust. It may even be manifestly unfair or unjust. But it is not an error.

Mr. Harrison seeks to answer this last objection of Mr. Pringle by invoking a host of concepts ranging from a submission that the statutory remedy of rescission provided by s. 24b exhausts the remedies available to those alleged to have been misled to a submission that any remedy that might have been available is extinguished by the doctrine of merger upon the delivery of the deed. In the view that I have taken, it is happily unnecessary for me to consider any of these concepts. I would point out, however, that, whatever the remedies, they are surely remedies against Bramalea, not against the condominium corporation, and to seek relief by way of an amendment to the declaration would result in the imposition of something akin to vicarious liability to the serious detriment of the majority of the shareholders of the condominium corporation.

Section 23(2) of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

23(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty, and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

I think that the relief provided by that section is a discretionary one. The relief is sought by the corporation itself. By the very terms of the statute, the corporation has the duty to effect compliance by the owners of units with the Act, and the declaration. Moreover, s. 12 specifically gives the corporation a right to the compliance by the owners with the Act and the declaration. When I add to that statutory duty and statutory right the fact that, on the material filed, the great majority of the owners have adhered to the prohibition set out in s. 18 of the declaration, then it seems to me that I am duty bound, in the judicial exercise of that discretion, to give the corporation the assistance of the Court.

Accordingly, there will be an order directing the respondents to comply with s. 18 of the declaration as registered, and specifically directing them to remove any dog, cat, reptile or rodent from any unit occupied by them and from any part of the common elements within 30 days of the date of service upon them of a true copy of this order as issued and entered.

I do not think that this is a proper case for costs.

Order accordingly.

York Condominium v. Bramalea Consolidated Developments Ltd. et al.

(1976), 10 O.R. (2d) 459

ONTARIO SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO MASTER'S CHAMBERS MASTER (FERRON) 12TH JUNE 1975

APPLICATION by the defendant, Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited, for an order requiring the plaintiff to give security for costs.

W. Somers, for plaintiff.

J. Harris, for defendant, Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited.

MASTER (FERRON):-- This is an application brought by the defendant, Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited (Bramalea Consolidated) for an order that the plaintiff be required to give security for costs.

The action is brought by the plaintiff for damages with respect to the common elements of the condominium. The owners by s. 7(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, are tenants in common of the common elements of the condominium. "Owner" is described in the Act as the owner or owners of the freehold estate or estates in a unit and common interest. "Common interest" is the interest in the common elements appurtenant to a unit.

The ownership of a unit cannot be separated from the ownership of the common interest and it accordingly appears that the plaintiff is suing in a representative capacity on behalf of the owners of the common elements. The applicant submits that by reason of the provisions of s-s. (16) and (18) of s. 9 of the Condominium Act, the plaintiff is a nominal plaintiff within the meaning of Rule 373(1)(f) and as a nominal plaintiff may be ordered to give security for costs.

Section 9(18) of the Condominium Act provides that any action with respect to the common elements may be brought by the corporation. "Corporation" is defined as a corporation incorporated pursuant to the Condominium Act. The plaintiff is so incorporated. The subsection to which I have referred further provides that any judgment for payment of money given in favour of the corporation in any such action brought is an asset of the corporation. Section 9(16), however, expressly provides that the members of the corporation share the assets of the corporation in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests.

The members of the corporation cannot be different from the individual unit owners and the resulting proposition which seems to flow from the subsection which I have mentioned is that the corporation owns nothing. In Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1974), 3 O.R. (2d) 331, 45 D.L.R. (3d) 347, the Honourable Mr. Justice Cromarty said, at p. 339, after he had quoted the provisions of s. 9(16) and (18):

The result is that the corporation as such owns nothing, except in the sense of a conduit, because s. 9(16) has said the members share the assets.

Accordingly, since the assets of the corporation are owned by its members, any judgment obtained by it in any action accrues to the benefit of the members and not to the corporation. It appears, accordingly, from a reading of s. 9(16) that the corporation has no interest in any action brought in its name, but simply sues under the Act in a representative capacity to obviate a procedural difficulty which appears to arise from the definition of owner in the Act. In this sense, the plaintiff can be said to be nominal.

Under the Rules, a nominal plaintiff may be ordered to give security for costs. The necessity for the Rule is obvious since the real plaintiff suing through a nominee would not be answerable for costs in an unsuccessful action because the name of a nominee is used. In Elia v. Spring, [1941] O.W.N. 407, it was said, at p. 408:

Rule 373(f), quoted above, is for the express purpose of preventing a real plaintiff putting forward a "man of straw" as a nominal plaintiff and thus enable the real plaintiff to escape liability for costs in the event of the action not succeeding.

See also Hathway v. Doig (1881), 9 P.R. 91 at p. 92. When one considers the reason for the Rule as it applies to actions brought by nominal plaintiffs and considers the provisions of the Condominium Act and, in particular, s. 9(17), it seems clear that the Rule was not meant to apply to actions brought by condominium corporations in the circumstances as disclosed in this application. Section 9(17) of the Condominium Act provides that a money judgment obtained against the corporation is also a judgment against each owner at the time the cause of action arose. Accordingly, the individual members of the corporation are by virtue of that section personally liable for any judgment obtained against the corporation and that would include a judgment for costs in an unsuccessful action. The provisions of cl. (c) of s. 26 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 225, appear to have no application where a judgment is obtained for the payment of money against the corporation because of the provisions of s. 9(17) of the Condominium Act. It appears to me that the very reason for the necessity of Rule 373(1)(f) disappeared by reason of the provisions of s-s. (17) of s. 9 of the Act. Since, as I have said, the individual members are liable for judgment rendered against the corporation, the plaintiff corporation does not, as was quoted in Sharp v. Grand Trunk R.W. Co. (1901), 1 O.L.R. 200 at p. 202: "come within the mischief against which the exception is intended to guard ...".

Counsel for the applicants submits that s. 9(17) is not a good answer to the application. It is submitted that this action may end prior to judgment by reason of, for example, a successful application brought to dismiss for want of prosecution. In that event, the subsection would appear to have no application inasmuch as there would be no judgment given against the plaintiff, but merely an order dismissing the action with costs. Counsel for the applicant also submits that in any event there is no procedure to enforce a judgment apparent in the Act. The Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 228, says that a judgment includes an order so that it would seem to me that in the event that the defendant were successful in having the action dismissed prior to judgment, the order for costs would have the force of a judgment. The other argument, however, is valid because there appears to be nothing in the Act dealing with the enforcement of a judgment. This, however, is a matter of the mechanics of enforcement and this shortcoming in the Act, if I can call it such, does not subtract from the plain provision that a judgment against the corporation is a judgment against the individual members, whether enforceable or not.

In considering this application further, I am, in any event, of the opinion that where a statute permits or provides, as here, for action to be brought on behalf of the owners of the common elements, the plaintiff proceeding as permitted by the statute cannot be said to be nominal. There appear to be no authorities on this point. It is clear, however, that a trustee in bankruptcy suing as plaintiff on behalf of all creditors is not considered to be a nominal plaintiff in spite of the fact that he has no interest in the litigation, but proceeds in the hopes of recovering something for the creditors. Similarly, an executor or an administrator suing on behalf of beneficiaries can be said, in many cases, to be nominal since that plaintiff, as the personal representative of the deceased, might have no interest in the litigation but proceeds only to recover on behalf of beneficiaries. In Sharp v. Grand Trunk R.W. Co., these problems were considered. In that case, the Court was considering an application by a defendant for an order requiring an administrator to give security for costs. It appears that the plaintiff in that case had been appointed administrator of an estate and had brought an action against the defendant under the Fatal Accident Act. The action was brought for the benefit of the father of the deceased and it was argued that since the plaintiff had no interest in the outcome of the litigation, he was nominal only and according to the practice, should be required to give security for costs. The Court pointed out that it was clear that if the father of the deceased had assigned his cause of action to the plaintiff the plaintiff could, under those circumstances, have been ordered to give security. However, since the administrator had been duly appointed by the Court under the provisions of the Surrogate Court Act, and was the person properly in law permitted to institute action on behalf of the estate, it was held that such an administrator, even in the circumstances described in the case, could not be said to be nominal. Chief Justice Meredith, at pp. 205-6 said:

Notwithstanding these, to my mind, somewhat cogent reasons for arriving at a different result, I have come to the conclusion that I must, on the authorities, hold that the appellants have failed to establish their right to security. Technically, at all events, the respondent is not a nominal plaintiff; because by the statute which gives the right of action it is vested in him and him alone; he is the person appointed by the proper surrogate court to represent the estate of the deceased, and who alone represents it, and technically, at all events, he is bringing the action in the performance of his sworn duty as administrator; and, according to the authorities, these are reasons sufficient to prevent this case falling within the exception to the general rule on which the appellants rely ...

Similarly, under the Condominium Act, the corporation is given the right to sue on behalf of its members and if this right is to be in any way qualified, for example, by allowing such right to be exercised only upon giving security for costs, I think the Legislature should have clearly said so. They did not so state and I conclude that the plaintiff is not a nominal plaintiff within the meaning of the Rule and the application must be dismissed.

I should mention that a draft bill of costs was filed on this application and it was conceded by counsel for the plaintiff that the trial could very well take the four days estimated by the applicant in the bill. The other items in the bill were not objected to and seem as realistic as can be determined at this point in the proceedings. Accordingly, if I had allowed the application, I would have ordered security in an amount of $4,000.

The costs of this application shall be in the cause.

Application dismissed.

Re Peel Condominium Corporation No. 11 and Caroe et al.

(1974), 4 O.R. (2d) 543

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE GALLIGAN, J. 14TH JUNE 1974

APPLICATION by a condominium corporation pursuant to s. 23(1) of the Condominium Act for an order directing the respondents to perform certain duties.

B. Widman, for applicant.

G.W. Cooper, for respondents, Lawrence Charles Caroe, and Marina M. Hamade.

Johan Delongte, respondent, appearing personally.

No one appearing for other respondents.

GALLIGAN, J.:-- This is an application by the corporation pursuant to s. 23(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, for an order directing the respondents to perform a duty imposed by the declaration, which has been duly registered relating to the subject condominium located in the City of Mississauga. The circumstances are simple, and the point of law is a novel one, which so far as I know, has not been the subject of judicial determination. The respondent Caroe is the owner of unit No. 27 and has rented it to the respondent Delongte, who resides in it with his, the tenant's family. The respondent Ereneos is the owner of unit No. 42, and has rented it to the respondent Saunders, who resides in it with his, the tenant's, family. The respondent Hamade is the owner of unit No. 74 and has rented it to the respondent Woodward, who resides in it with his, the tenant's family. The legal issue is simply whether the owner of a unit in this condominium is entitled to rent that unit to a third person so that such person, as a tenant, may occupy the unit with his family. The main relief sought by the applicant on this motion is an order directing the respondent tenants to vacate the units occupied by them, and restraining the respondent owners from renting the units.

The contention of the applicant is that a fair interpretation of s. 9(a)(1) of the declaration, by necessary implication, prohibits the renting of a unit by the owner because the unit may only be occupied by the owner, his family and guests. The relevant provision of the declaration reads as follows:

9(a)(1). Each unit shall be occupied only as a one-family residence by the owner of the unit(s), his family and guests. For the purpose of these restrictions, "one-family residence" means a building occupied or intended to be occupied as a residence by one family alone and containing one kitchen, provided that no roomers or boarders are allowed. A "boarder" for the purpose of these restrictions is a person to whom room and board are regularly supplied for consideration and a "roomer" is a person to whom room is regularly supplied for consideration.

If the declaration is given the meaning which the applicant contends it ought to be given, then as a practical matter there would be a substantial restriction imposed upon the very nature of the ownership that rests in the owner. One of the fundamental incidents of ownership is the right to alienate the property that one owns. With respect to real property the right to freely alienate dates to 1290, when the Imperial Statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. I, was enacted. The provisions of that statute were made part of the law of Ontario in 1897 [R.S.O. 1897, c. 330]. (See Anger and Honsberger, Canadian Law of Real Property (1959), p. 21.)

Earl Jowitt, in the Dictionary of English Law, at p. 1284, considered the nature of ownership in the following terms:

Ownership is essentially indefinite in its nature, but in its most absolute form, it involves the right to possess and use or enjoy the thing, the right to its produce and accessions, and the right to destroy, encumber, or alienate it;

(The emphasis is mine.)

One of the important forms which alienation of one's property takes is leasing or renting of the property. As was said by Pearson, J., in Re Rosher (1884), 26 Ch. D. 801 at p. 818: "There are various modes of alienation besides sale; a person may lease, or he may mortgage, or he may settle." The right to lease one's property is therefore one of the important ingredients of absolute ownership.

A declaration under the Condominium Act is a creature of that statute and is therefore prescribed by it. In my view, a declaration may only restrict rights and impose duties if the statute authorizes it to do so. Section 3 of the Condominium Act provides for the contents of a declaration. The only part of that section which I think is relevant to the issue before me is s. 3(2)(c), which reads as follows:

3(2) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection 1, a declaration may contain,

(c) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

It is necessary to consider whether that section authorizes a declaration to impose a serious restriction upon the fundamental and long established right of an owner to alienate his real property. Statutes which themselves encroach upon the rights of a subject are subject to strict construction. I think it also appropriate to strictly construe a statutory provision which may permit the encroachment on or restriction of the rights of the individual. The tenet of interpretation has been admirably expressed in Re Stronach (1928), 61 O.L.R. 636 at p. 641, [1928] 3 D.L.R. 216 at pp. 219-20, 49 C.C.C. 336, as follows:

"Statutes which encroach on the rights of the subject, whether as regards person or property, are similarly subject to a strict construction in the sense before explained. It is a recognised rule that they should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect such rights. It is presumed, where the objects of the Act do not obviously imply such an intention, that the Legislature does not desire to confiscate the property, or to encroach upon the right of persons; and it is therefore expected that if such be its intention, it will manifest it plainly, if not in express words, at least by clear implication, and beyond reasonable doubt:" [Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 6th ed., p. 501.]

Considering s. 3(2)(c) of the Condominium Act in that light, it is obvious that the intention of the Legislature was to authorize a declaration to make certain reasonable restrictions on the occupation and use of the units. That section would obviously authorize the declaration to provide for single family occupancy, to prohibit the use of a unit as a business premises and the like.

What I cannot see in that section is any clear indication of legislative intention to restrict that fundamental right of an owner to alienate his property. I do not think that the Legislature had any intention to restrict the owner's right of alienation and had it intended to prohibit an owner from renting his property I would have expected it to have said so in clear, unambiguous language. It is my opinion that the definition of "owner" contained in s. 1(1)(L) of the Act clearly indicates that the Legislature did not have any intention of permitting the restriction of the right of the owner to rent a unit. That section defines "owner" as follows:

(1) "owner" means the owner or owners of the freehold estate or estates in a unit and common interest, but does not include a mortgagee unless in possession;

It immediately becomes clear that the term "owner" by statute includes a mortgagee in possession. I think in enacting this legislation the Legislature of Ontario would have known that most mortgagees, particularly those financing substantial multi-unit dwelling complexes are large corporations. It is of course impossible for such an owner to occupy a unit with its family and guests. I certainly do not think it was the intention of the Legislature to require that a corporate mortgagee in possession of a unit would be required to let its unit stand vacant. It is my opinion that the Legislature of Ontario in enacting s. 3(2)(c) of the Condominium Act had no intention to permit a declaration to restrict the right of an owner of a unit to alienate his property to such an extent that he could not rent it for residential use. In my opinion, there is nothing in the Condominium Act which permits a declaration to prevent an owner from renting his unit. Accordingly, if the provisions of the declaration can be interpreted as suggested by the applicant, it is my opinion that such provision of the declaration is not authorized by the Act, and is invalid, and may not be enforced by an application under s. 23 of the Act.

Accordingly, the application must be dismissed.

Mr. Cooper stated that upon the instructions of his clients he would make no submissions. He stated that his clients instructed him to leave their rights to be determined by the Court without submissions being made on their behalf one way or the other. In view of these circumstances I do not feel it appropriate to award them any costs. I would have found it most helpful to have Mr. Cooper's submissions on this very novel point. In view of the fact that his clients by their instructions prevented the Court from having the benefit of Mr. Cooper's submissions, I do not feel it appropriate to award them any costs on the application. Seeing Mr. Delongte was not represented by counsel there are no costs that I can award in his favour. Accordingly, the application is dismissed without costs.

Application dismissed.

Stafford, Stafford & Jakeman, Appellant, and Her Majesty the Queen, Respondent

[1995] T.C.J. No. 89

Action No. 94-582(GST)I Tax Court of Canada Kelowna, British Columbia Bowman T.C.J. Heard: January 10, 1995 Judgment: February 13, 1995

Kenneth R. Hauser, for the Appellant. Linda Bell, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeal from the assessment made under the Excise Tax Act, notice of which is dated August 25, 1993, and bears number 11EU0100004 is allowed and the assessment is referred back to the Minister of National Revenue for reconsideration and reassessment solely for the purpose of adjusting the tax, interest and penalties to reflect the reduction, as of December 1, 1991, of the fair market value of 1041 Middleton Way, Vernon, British Columbia, to $1,002,000.

There will be no order as to costs.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] BOWMAN T.C.J.:-- This appeal is from an assessment of tax, interest and penalties made under the Goods and Services Tax provisions of the Excise Tax Act.

[para2] The appellant is a partnership and is therefore a person for the purposes of Part IX of the Excise Tax Act. During 1991 it constructed two residential apartment complexes at 1047 Middleton Way, Vernon, B.C. ("1047") and 1041 Middleton Way, Vernon, B.C. ("1041").

[para3] 1041 was substantially completed in late 1991. The first units in 1047 were rented out on August 1, 1991 and the first units in 1041 were rented out on December 1, 1991.

[para4] The assessment was based upon subsection 191(3) of the Excise Tax Act which reads as follows:

(3) For the purposes of this Part, where (a) the construction or substantial renovation of a multiple unit residential complex is substantially completed, (b) the builder of the complex (i) gives possession of any residential unit in the complex to a particular person under a lease, licence or similar arrangement entered into for the purpose of its occupancy by an individual as a place of residence and the particular person is not a purchaser under an agreement of purchase and sale of the complex, or (ii) where the builder is an individual, occupies any residential unit in the complex as a place of residence, and (c) the builder, the particular person or an individual who is a tenant or licensee of the particular person is the first individual to occupy a residential unit in the complex as a place of residence after substantial completion of the construction or renovation, the builder shall be deemed (d) to have made and received, at the later of the time the construction or substantial renovation is substantially completed and the time possession of the unit is so given to the particular person or the unit is so occupied by the builder, a taxable supply by way of sale of the complex, and (e) to have paid as a recipient and to have collected as a supplier, at the later of those times, tax in respect of the supply calculated on the fair market value of the complex at the later of those times.

[para5] Essentially that section deems the builder to have made and received a taxable supply at the later of the dates when a multiple unit residential complex is substantially completed or when it is rented out, and an obligation to pay tax arises out that time. The tax is based upon the fair market value of the complex at the later date.

[para6] Three contentions were advanced by the appellant:

(a) that subsection 191(3) was inapplicable on the basis the two buildings were not a multiple unit residential complex because the definition of that expression in subsection 123(1) excludes a condominium complex. "Condominium complex" is defined in subsection 123(1) as a "residential complex that contains more than one residential condominium unit". "Residential condominium unit" is defined in subsection 123(1) as follows:

"residential condominium unit" means a residential complex that is, or is intended to be, a bounded space in a building designated or described as a separate unit on a registered condominium or strata lot plan or description, or a similar plan or description registered under the laws of a province, and includes any interest in land pertaining to ownership of the unit.

(b) that the fair market value of 1041 and 1047 as assumed by the Minister on assessing was too high; and

(c) that the imposition of penalties was inappropriate for two reasons: (i) since the Minister had assessed under the wrong subsection he ought not to have assessed penalties; and

(ii) the appellant had in any event exercised due diligence and that on the basis of Pillar Oilfield Projects Ltd. v. The Queen [1993] G.S.T.C. 49, the penalties ought not to have been imposed.

[para7] With respect to the first contention, at the relevant time (i.e. August 1, 1991 in the case of 1047 and December 1, 1991 in the case of 1041) the units in the two buildings were not "described as a separate unit on a registered condominium or strata lot plan or description, or a similar plan or description registered under the laws of a province". Clearly they were intended to be so registered. Both were subsequently registered on a strata lot plan and, when the units were sold on April 1, 1992 and April 9, 1992 the registration as condominium complexes was complete. [para8] The following statements from the expert appraisal reports submitted on behalf of the respondent by Mr. George Ward are accepted as accurate.

Re 1041: As of the effective date, December 1, 1991, the subject property was one fee simple site. However, Strata Plans had been prepared by Richard Shoesmith, B.C.L.S. on November 25, 1991. The owners signed the strata plans on December 2, 1991. The various other steps in the procedure were followed, leading to final registration of Strata Plan KAS 1021 on March 4, 1992. Further, the two subject 8plexes (Buildings B&C) were listed for sale commencing on October 18, 1991 as "strata-titled units". It is clear from the above that the intentions for the project were for strata title use as of December 1, 1991.

Re 1047: As of the effective date, August 1, 1991, the subject property was one fee simple site. However, Strata Plans had been prepared by Richard Shoesmith, B.C.L.S. on July 9, 1991 and were approved under The Condominium Act on July 27, 1991 by The Approving Officer for The City of Vernon. The various other steps in the procedure were followed, leading to final registration of Strata Plan KAS 983 on December 13, 1991. It is clear from the above that the intentions for the project were for strata title use as of August 1, 1991.

[para9] I think that the better view is that, notwithstanding the fact that the registration of strata plans had not been completed at the effective date, the units fell within the definition of "residential condominium unit" in subsection 123(1) of the Act. The words "or is intended to be" in that definition are, in my view, apt to describe an apartment complex for which strata plans have been prepared and have been submitted for registration. I think that those words are intended to qualify all of the words that follow them in the definition.

[para10] In the final analysis it does not affect the amount of tax exigible. The only difference is that the tax should have been imposed under subsection 191(1) rather than subsection 191(3). The fact that the Minister may have assessed under the wrong subsection of section 191 does not affect the validity of the assessment.

[para11] The second question is the fair market value of the properties. The assessment is based upon appraisals made by Mr. George A. Ward who concluded that 1041 had a value as of December 1, 1991 of $1,084,000 and that 1047 had a value as of August 1, 1991 of $1,595,000. No expert testimony contrary to this opinion was submitted by the appellant although the municipal assessment for 1041 as of July 1, 1992 was $891,700 and for 1047 was $1,302,500.

[para12] Municipal assessments, particularly if the appraiser who made them is not called, are of doubtful probative value and I do not think that they can prevail in the face of the very thorough and careful appraisal prepared by Mr. Ward, whom I found to be an impressive witness. I do not think that one can ignore the fact that 1041 was sold on April 9, 1992 for $1,002,000 and 1047 was sold on April 1, 1992 for $1,856,000.

[para13] The only adjustment that I would make to Mr. Ward's determination of value would be to reduce the fair market value of 1041 as of December 1, 1991 to $1,002,000. I do not think that as a matter of common sense it could have had a value on December 1, 1991 that exceeded the price at which it actually sold on April 9, 1992.

[para14] So far as penalties are concerned, I do not accept the argument of counsel for the respondent that the penalties imposed under subsection 280(1) are automatically exigible, or that they are absolute in the sense in which that expression is used in The Queen v. Sault Ste. Marie [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 or in Pillar Oilfield Projects Ltd. (supra). Their imposition is susceptible of a defence of due diligence. Counsel argued that the penalties were absolute rather than strict because subsection 281.1(2) gives the Minister a discretionary power to waive penalties. The existence of a discretionary power to waive penalties that are otherwise properly imposed does not relieve the court of the power and the obligation to determine whether the penalties were properly imposed in the first place. [para15] I do not however think that the defence of due diligence has been made out here. It is true a representative of the appellant spoke to an assessor with the Department of National Revenue who evidently told that person that no further tax was payable at that time. The appellant is not unsophisticated in these matters and I think that, given the magnitude of the projects involved here it ought to have consulted lawyers or accountants who were knowledgeable in the matter of the goods and services tax. Due diligence involves more than merely accepting, without more, some oral advice that an assessor with the Department of National Revenue may have given them. The GST implications of building large apartment complexes form an important part of Part IX of the Excise Tax Act. It is not clear what the context was in which the question was put to the assessor. The tax under section 191 arose upon substantial completion of the building or upon units first being rented out. The question appears to have been asked at the time at which the appellant was contemplating sale.

[para16] The appeal is allowed and the assessment referred back to the Minister of National Revenue for reconsideration and reassessment solely for the purpose of adjusting the tax, interest and penalties to reflect the reduction, as of December 1, 1991, of the fair market value of 1041 to $1,002,000. [para17] In light of the limited success achieved by the appellant this is not a case for costs.

Thomas R. McGovern, Appellant, v. The Minister of National Revenue, Respondent, and Carol F. McGovern, Appellant, v. The Minister of National Revenue, Respondent

[1990] T.C.J. No. 629

Action Nos. 89-310(IT), 89-311(IT) Tax Court of Canada Calgary, Alberta Rip T.C.J. Heard: July 19, 1990 Oral judgment: July 19, 1990

D. Mock, for the Appellants. U. Tauscher, for the Respondent.

[para1] RIP T.C.J. (Orally):-- I've prepared the notes for Reasons for Judgment, and I do reserve the right of course, if necessary, to polish these notes up.

[para2] In assessing Thomas R. McGovern and Carol F. McGovern (the "McGoverns") for 1984, the Minister of National Revenue, (the "Respondent"), disallowed expenses claimed by the McGoverns with respect to a condominium unit they jointly owned at Paul Lake near Kamloops, British Columbia, which I'll refer to as the unit, on the basis that there was no reasonable expectation of profit in that year in respect of the unit. The assessments were issued in accordance with subsection 248(1) of the Income Tax Act ("Act"), which defines personal property, and the expenses which were not allowed were not allowed in accordance with paragraphs 18(1)(a) and 18(1)(h) of the Act.

[para3] The McGoverns have appealed their assessments arguing there was a reasonable expectation of profit from the property. The appeals were heard on common evidence and Mr. McGovern, (referred as "McGovern"), was the sole witness.

[para4] The Appellants acquired the property in December, 1980, during its construction. The unit, one of 30 in the condominium, was approximately 1,500 square feet in area on lakefront property and within walking distance to a modest ski resort. The purchase price of $87,659 was financed by way of a first mortgage of $76,000, having an annual interest rate of 14 and 3/4 per cent during its four year term. The monthly mortgage payment on account of principal and interest was $933.29. The McGoverns owned a furniture business in Calgary at the time, but had no experience in real estate rentals.

[para6] The unit contained three bedrooms and was completely furnished with beds, refrigerator, stove, washer, dryer, sofa, tables, television, et cetera. This was furnishings undertaken by the McGoverns. McGovern estimated six people could stay comfortably in the unit.

[para7] McGovern produced a schedule of projected rentals and expenses that he prepared in 1981. He was looking to the Calgary market and geared rates, for example, to holidays on Calgary schools' calendar. He testified he set the rates by verifying what was available to Calgary families, rates of hotels in the area and considered the facilities he was offering. He did not go into detail. He calculated a revenue potential based on a rental of 365 nights per year, but to be realistic, considered a 50 per cent occupancy rate at $750 per week. He considered gross monthly rentals would thus total $1,950 and expenses for the year would aggregate $14,426. Thus, in the first year he would have a profit. These projections do not provide for capital cost allowance or costs of repair and maintenance.

[para8] When he acquired the unit in 1980, there were no restrictions on the use of the unit by the owners. However, in the spring of 1981, a condominium association was formed and proposed by-laws for the condominium were drafted. The proposed by-laws restricted the owners to use their units only as a private dwelling house for one family and did not permit children under the age of 12 to be resident in the unit. The McGoverns and the agent who introduced them to the project lobbied against these proposals, but were not successful. The plans of the McGoverns to rent on a short-term basis was scuttled. They thus revised their plan and sought long-term tenants.

[para9] In 1981, McGovern says he prepared a summary of projected revenue and expenses on monthly leases, based on monthly rentals of $800, $1,000 and $1,200 respectively. He included expenses only of mortgage interest and property taxes. The schedule also appears to include payments of principal on their mortgage as an expense as well. I note that the payment on principal would have been an extremely small amount, and I do not place any great significance on this.

[para10] McGovern made provision for capital cost allowance to show a monthly loss of $508.57, $308.57 and $91.43 respectively on rentals of $800, $1,000 and $1,200 respectively. There is no provision in the expenses for repair and maintenance, condominium fees, hydro, although the latter may have been paid by the tenant. The documents, McGovern acknowledged, was a "very rough document" and was more for his own thinking than anything else. In any event, McGovern was of the view that he could earn profit from the unit with a long-term tenant.

[para11] Now, according to the evidence, it appears that McGovern considered profit to include the tax advantage he would have gained from the MURB quality of the unit. In 1981, a long-term tenant was obtained at a monthly rental of $800.

[para12] McGovern stressed that there were factors beyond his control that affected the profitability of the unit. They were (a) the pool and the tennis court of the condominium were not available for the summer of 1981; (b) high interest rates were prevalent commencing in 1981; (c) Kamloops had a high vacancy rate in 1981; and (d) his first tenants vacated the unit after six months.

[para13] After the tenants vacated the unit, McGovern tried to rent the unit through a real estate agent in Kamloops. A second tenant was found in 1982, and the unit was leased on a month-to-month basis. Furniture was removed from the unit by McGovern on the advice of a real estate agent, since prospective tenants already residing in Kamloops would tend to want their own furniture. The monthly rental to the second tenant was $500.

[para14] McGovern claimed expenses and capital cost allowance in preparing his income tax returns for 1981, 1982 and 1983, and they were accepted by the Respondent. In 1984, their claims were not allowed. Now, this also applies to Mrs. McGovern.

[para15] McGovern ceased to make any payments on account of the mortgage or to the condominium with respect to condominium charges in 1982. The mortgagee initiated foreclosure proceedings against the McGoverns in 1982. During 1984 and 1985, the McGoverns received no rent from the unit. It was vacant. The total rents they received were $3,200 in 1981, $1,500 in 1982, $3,300 in 1983. Expenses claimed in 1982 were $12,100 without capital cost allowance, $11,410.64 plus $3,546.51 as capital cost allowance in 1983 and $10,531.52 plus $3,363 of capital cost allowance in 1984.

[para16] As I previously stated, the unit was not rented during 1984 and 1985. Since 1982, the McGoverns have relied upon a real estate agent in Kamloops to find tenants, although advertisements were placed in Calgary newspapers to rent the unit at $1,200 a month. There were three or four inquiries, according to McGovern, but no tenant was found for that amount.

[para17] On May 4th, 1983, the Supreme Court of British Columbia issued an order nisi, declaring the McGoverns in default on the mortgage and that all monies so secured was due and owing to the mortgagee. The last date of redemption was November 3rd, 1983, and the amount due was $92,562.04. The Court also foreclosed the McGoverns from all rights, title, interest claim, estate and equity in the unit if the money was not paid prior to November 3rd, 1983, and the mortgagee received vacant possession.

[para18] The order absolute was issued in August 1985, but according to McGovern was never served on him. I assume that neither was it served on his wife. McGovern testified that his solicitors were negotiating during this time with the mortgagee until 1985, and the matter was settled and the unit was disposed of.

[para19] At the time in 1982, the McGovern's business in Calgary also went in receivership. This is one of the reasons, McGovern stated, they ceased making payments on the condominium unit.

[para20] Some time in 1982, McGovern made efforts and engaged a real estate agent to sell the unit. The agent was seeking tenants, notwithstanding the Court's order nisi. With a lease in hand, McGovern said, he thought he could convince the mortgagee of the bona fides of the unit as an investment.

[para21] According to their accountant, in a letter to Revenue Canada, the property was offered for sale in 1982 in an attempt to stop further losses. McGovern testified his accountant erred in giving this information to Revenue Canada. The property was available for sale or rent, he said.

[para22] According to McGovern, "things were picking up" in Kamloops in 1984, and the local economy was improving. On a monthly rental of $800 he affirmed, he could have turned a profit on the unit. He was prepared to re-furnish and rent the unit at $800. He did not adduce any evidence as to how he could then turn a profit at $800 a month in 1984, bearing in mind, for example, his interest burden would have increased, due to the non-payment of principal since 1982.

[para23] McGovern calculated monthly rent of $1,200 based on $60 per square foot of living space, plus a nominal amount for furniture times one per cent. To my calculations, $60 times 1,500 square feet times one per cent equals $900 per month, not $1,200.

[para24] No evidence was adduced at trial to show firstly, in 1981, who would manage and how the amount and how the unit would be supervised, as it was rented to tourists on a weekly basis. There was obviously no arrangement for the condominium corporation to perform these tasks. The person performing this work would require a fee. There was no the rental of the single unit or from persons experienced in the business that it was capable of success, even with an absentee owner.

[para25] There was no evidence, except for McGovern's testimony, of the general rental market in Kamloops from 1981 to 1984, and his evidence was rather general in nature.

[para26] The evidence I would have preferred would be the type of accommodations that were prevalent in the Kamloops region, the low and high ends of the market and how this particularly unit fit in. I think that such evidence would be evidence of the actual marketing program to be undertaken or have been of assistance to the Court. The testimony of the agent who purchased the unit at the same time as the McGoverns, who introduced them to his property, may have been helpful as well. How did he fare, and what, if anything, did he do differently than the McGoverns?

[para27] The McGoverns were not experienced in the real estate market in general and in Kamloops in particular. When they looked at properties and spoke to friends in Kamloops, were they asking the right questions? Were they getting the right answers that would assist them? Could Mrs. Hickey, for example, a real estate agent who lived in another unit in the condominium property, have added to the evidence?

[para28] Counsel for the Appellants referred the Court to the decision of Moldowan v. The Queen, 77 D.T.C. 5213, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. In his Reasons for Judgment, Dickson, J., as he then was, set out at page 5215 a partial list of what criteria to use to determine the existence or not of a reasonable expectation of profit.

[para29] In the appeal at bar, the profit and loss experience in years prior to 1984 does not aid the Appellants. The training of the Appellants in renting real estate is absent, although they did carry on a business in previous years. The capitalization for the purchase of the venture relied on a mortgage of approximately 85 per cent of the purchase price and the funds to pay the interest on the mortgage were to be generated from the unit itself. Once CCA was taken while the unit was owned by the McGoverns, the loss was exacerbated.

[para30] The decisions of McNeill v. The Queen, 89 D.T.C. 5516, Ahluwalia, et al. v. M.N.R., 87 D.T.C. 592, Baker v. M.N.R., 87 D.T.C. 567, and The Queen v. Dorchester Drummond Corporation Ltd., 79 D.T.C. 5163, do not, in my view, aid the Appellants. It is trite law that each case is determined on its own set of facts.

[para31] Counsel for the Appellants submitted the facts in McNeill, supra, are on all fours with the present case. In the case at bar, I cannot find the so-called projections prepared by McGovern to be reasonable, for reasons already mentioned, and that in 1984, faced with an increasing liability to the mortgagee, the McGoverns could have rented the unit at a profit in that year, or even within a reasonable time thereafter.

[para32] I think their accountant was right when he advised Revenue Canada the property was for sale in order to cut the losses. Unlike the facts in Ahluwalia, supra, there was not on-site manager of the condominium nor were there rental operations to be handled on-site as well.

[para33] In my view, in 1984, the McGoverns had no reasonable expectation of profit from their unit. The expenses were not laid out to earn income from a property or business. The unit was their personal property. Thus, the deduction of expenses is prohibited by paragraph 18(1)(a) as well as paragraph 18(1)(h) of the Act. The appeals are, therefore dismissed.

Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 109 v. Tartan Development Corp.

Court File Nos. 16389/90 and 71229/93 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Sedgwick J. March 8, 1995.

Real property -- Condominiums -- Actions by corporation -- New home warranty statutes -- Whether abrogating application of common law implied warranty of fitness.

This was a determination of questions with regard to a condominium. The issues were whether the Ontario New Warranties Plan Act terminated the common law implied warranties of fitness for new homes in Ontario; whether, to assert a claim based upon these implied warranties, the corporation had to establish that at the time of issuance of the claim, at least one unit owner was an original purchaser; whether a condominium corporation could pursue a claim in tort as against the developer/declarant, its employees, builder, architect or others involved in the original construction; and what was the limitation period applicable to a claim in tort or for breach of warranty brought by a condominium corporation. The plaintiff was a residential condominium corporation and the defendants were the vendor, the architect and the builder.

HELD: The common law implied warranty of new homes was not terminated by the statutorily imposed warranty. The right to rely on the implied common law warranty was expressly preserved in section 13(6) of the Act. The corporation was required to establish that at least one unit owner was an original purchaser to assert a claim based on the implied warranty of fitness. The condominium corporation had the status to pursue a claim against the persons involved in the original construction of the condominium. The limitation period was six years from the time the cause of action arose and the cause of action was complete when damages occurred as a result of the alleged breach of contract or duty.

COHEN J.:—

I. Background

In January 1983, the plaintiff, Sharon Kenny, purchased a condominium at 102-1633 Yew Street, in the City of Vancouver, Province of British Columbia. Ms. Kenny was attracted to this area of the city because of its close proximity to the beach, the fact that there was convenience shopping and restaurants nearby and mostly the unique and colourful character of this section of Yew Street.

The building which housed Ms. Kenny's condominium contained four residential and two commercial strata lots. Ms. Kenny's condominium was located directly above the commercial strata lots, owned by the defendant, Schuster Real Estate Co. Ltd. (Schuster).

At the time Ms. Kenny purchased her condominium, the commercial strata lots contained two restaurant operations. Before purchasing, Ms. Kenny made inquiries about the restaurant operations and satisfied herself that no foods were deep fried or cooked on their premises and that they served only light meals.

In May 1987 Ms. Kenny's enjoyment of her condominium ended with the installation of an exhaust fan by the defendant Cafe Zen, the tenant in one of the commercial strata lots. Normally restaurant exhaust fans are placed on the roof of the building. Apparently this was not possible in the case of Cafe Zen and the fan was installed directly below Ms. Kenny's patio deck underneath her dining and living room windows. Ms. Kenny found the operation of the fan to be noisy as well as creating unpleasant odours inside her condominium in the building's stairways, hallways and underground parking.

Because she felt she could no longer enjoy her condominium, Ms. Kenny listed it for sale in September 1987. It sold in May 1988. She brought this action claiming reimbursement of the real estate commission she paid on the sale of her condominium, damages alleging that the value of her condominium decreased by $10,000 because of the fan, reimbursement of moving costs as well as her legal costs incurred in connection with an application for an interlocutory injunction made on her behalf in September 1987. Finally, Ms. Kenny claims general damages for the annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort which she says she suffered as a result of the fan.

Ms. Kenny took default judgment against the defendant, Schuster in September 1987. In April 1988 Ms. Kenny discontinued her action against the defendant, Cafe Zen.

In September 1988 an application to set aside the default judgment was dismissed and Schuster's statement of defence was struck out. An appeal against this finding was dismissed.

By third party notice dated December 13, 1988, Schuster and the defendant, Peter D. Schuster, the principal of Schuster, gave notice to Cafe Zen claiming a right of contribution and indemnity in respect of any damages for which they might be found liable to Ms. Kenny.

Essentially then this is a case of assessment of damages on a default judgment. However, in rendering my judgment I will deal with the facts and law relating to the liability of the defendant Schuster for damages. By agreement between counsel for Schuster and the third party, I will not deal with the third party issues.

II. Ms. Kenny's Claim

Ms. Kenny, aged 38, is a lawyer. She was called to the bar of this province in 1981 and since then has served as a prosecutor with the Department of the Attorney General, Crown Counsel Office until February of 1990 when she accepted a position as Crown Counsel in Bermuda.

Ms. Kenny purchased her condominium in January 1983 for $85,000, it was her first real estate purchase. Prior to this she had lived in various residential areas in the city and accordingly, when she went looking for real estate, she knew Vancouver and knew she wanted to live in Kitsilano.

Ms. Kenny testified that in the summer months there is a fair amount of activity on Yew Street and that during the evenings the level of noise is higher. Nonetheless, she insisted that she had no concerns about the level of noise or activity and that if she did she would never have purchased her condominium in the first place.

She said that one of the big features of her condominium was the size of its wrap-around patio deck, some 656 square feet. Her condominium had a wood burning fireplace, two bedrooms, two bathrooms, ensuite laundry and all in all she considered it a very pleasant place to live. In May 1987 she had no plans to move. Her long range plans were to resurface the patio deck and glass-in an area off her master bedroom.

When she purchased her condominium Ms. Kenny made inquiries about the restaurants that were operating in the commercial strata lots. She was informed that there was no cooking taking place in the restaurants and that they served only light meals. In her words, had the restaurants involved cooking, she would not have purchased her condominium.

On May 1st, 1987 when Ms. Kenny was leaving her building for work, as she was driving out of the underground parking lot, she discovered the driveway ramp blocked by a large truck with a crane. The truck was lowering into place what Ms. Kenny described as a piece of equipment looking like the back-end of a jet airplane. This piece of equipment was being installed underneath her patio deck. The installers told her that it was an exhaust fan for the Cafe Zen.

When she arrived at work, Ms. Kenny telephoned various people to find out about the installation of the fan. She was unable to reach Mr. Schuster by telephone and left a message for him to call her back. She found out from City Hall that a permit had been granted for the installation of the fan.

At the end of the day, when she arrived home, Ms. Kenny went to the Cafe Zen and spoke to the owner, Mr. Seto. An employee of the firm installing the fan was present as well. She was extremely upset. She was assured by the installer that the fan would not be a problem. Mr. Seto told her that the fan would be in operation during the hours that the Cafe Zen was open. She was so distraught at this news that she left the restaurant in tears.

Mr. Schuster returned Ms. Kenny's call. Before she had chance to say anything he said "is it about the fan" and she said "you're damn right it is". She was very angry at the time he called. They arranged to meet in Ms. Kenny's condominium to discuss the matter. They met on May 4, 1987. During their meeting, Ms. Kenny told Mr. Schuster that she wanted the fan removed because it was an eyesore and because of the noise and smell that it might cause. She was very annoyed with Mr. Schuster for permitting the fan to be installed without consulting her. Mr. Schuster told her that he could not take it down because Mr. Seto had a three year lease. He said he did not want to fight with Ms. Kenny about it and if necessary he would purchase her condominium.

Following their meeting, but before the Cafe Zen officially opened, arrangements were made for the fan to be started so that Mr. Schuster and Ms. Kenny could listen to it. During the demonstration run of the fan, Ms. Kenny said that when the fan started up there was a kick-in noise. She described the noise from the fan as a constant whirring or humming sound. She told Mr. Schuster that the fan was not acceptable, that there was no way she could live with it underneath her condominium and that she wanted it taken down or stopped.

The Cafe Zen opened about May 20, 1987. Ms. Kenny did not hear directly from Mr. Schuster again.

As to noise from the fan, she said that she could hear it turn on "when it sort of kicked in. It did not seem to matter where she was in her condominium she could hear it. It seemed to her that the fan usually started up between 8 and 8:30 a.m. and she described it as a constant whirring or humming noise. She said that when the fan was switched off it was as if an air of peace cloaked her condominium. It was often not turned off until between 1:00 and 2:00 a.m.

Ms. Kenny said that when she went out on her patio deck, the noise was more noticeable. If she stood in the area just above the fan it was extremely loud. In fact, she said that if she was talking with someone she would have to elevate her voice to be heard. Even with the doors and windows of her condominium shut she could hear the fan. She said that the noise from the fan was most pronounced in the areas closest to the fan, the kitchen, dining room, living room and on the patio deck.

As to the smell from the fan, she described it as a general oppressive type of almost a heavy type of oily smell that permeated the hallways not only on her floor but on the floor above. "Like a greasy smell, the closest I could come would be a deep fat frying type of odour". She said that the odour increased as she headed out of her hallway down the stairs to go into the underground parking lot. It was in the stairwell leading from the outside of the building and it seemed to increase as she would head down to the parking lot. She said that the smell of the entire building changed after the fan was installed.

Inside her condominium, she said that if something was being cooked she could often tell what it was by the smell. For example, onions were noticeable. She said that other than the oily smell she could also smell food odours. The smells were strongest in the dining room and living room areas. If she was out on her patio deck she could smell it, particularly if she was standing in the area immediately adjacent to the fan. Even around the corner of the patio deck in front of her sliding glass doors she could sometimes catch a whiff of the smell of food. She said that prior to the installation of the fan she had never detected any of these oppressive smells or odours.

In terms of how the noise and smell affected her general living from day to day, she said that the whole experience was an extremely upsetting one. It was her first home purchase and the noise was a source of constant aggravation to her. The smell was particularly offensive and she found the musty, heavy odour that was in the hallways, the greasy smell, really offensive. She said that the whole character of the condominium changed and it was just not a place that she wanted to be. For example, she did not sit and read a book in her living room when the fan was on and it was upsetting for her to be in her condominium when the fan was on unless there was something to mask the noise such as the sound from the television or stereo.

After the fan was installed, Ms. Kenny spent less time on her patio deck in the summer months. When she was on her patio deck, if the fan went on, she found it a "jangling" kind of experience. The noise and smell were extremely disturbing to her.

Although Ms. Kenny's lawyer had negotiations with Mr. Schuster regarding Mr. Schuster's offer to purchase her condominium, Mr. Schuster could not raise the funds to buy her out and after her attempt to secure an injunction to restrain the continuing operation of the fan did not succeed, she listed her condominium for sale in September 1987 at a price of $119,000. There were open houses on weekends and prospective purchasers viewed her condominium by appointment. After three months the price was dropped, finally after eight months she received an offer of $105,000 and decided to accept it.

III. Issues

The issue for me to decide is whether the noise and smell from the fan constitute an actionable nuisance and if so, the amount of Ms. Kenny's damages.

IV. Decision

I am satisfied that the noise and smell from the fan constitute an actionable nuisance, that Ms. Kenny sold her condominium in direct response to the nuisance and that her sale of the condominium was a justifiable response in all of the circumstances. In addition, I am satisfied that the defendant Schuster is responsible to Ms. Kenny for damages.

V. Reasons

The leading authority in this province on the test of what constitutes a nuisance is Royal Anne Hotel Co. Ltd. v. Ashcroft et al (1979), 8 C.C.L.T. 179 (B.C.C.A.). In that case the Royal Anne and one Saito were landowners and occupiers in the Village of Ashcroft. On December 14, 1974 their premises were damaged as a result of a backing-up of a municipal sewer constructed and maintained by Ashcroft. As a result of the blockage raw sewage escaped from the sewer and entered the two premises from plumbing outlets. Both parties sued Ashcroft alleging negligence and claiming also in nuisance.

The trial judge found that the back-up in the sewer was caused by a "random blockage" in the main sewer not far from the respondents' premises. He held that this blockage did not result from negligence on the part of Ashcroft, its agents or servants, in the design, installation or maintenance of the sewer or in any of the steps taken by Ashcroft and its servants to deal with the blockage when it was discovered. He dismissed any claim based upon negligence, but found Ashcroft responsible on the nuisance claim.

Ashcroft appealed against the attribution of liability for nuisance. The Court of Appeal held that the trial judge made no error, finding that the trial judge was correct and that an actionable nuisance had been shown. At pp. 184-186, McIntyre J.A., (as he then was), had the following to say about the test of nuisance:

The cases on this subject are many and often difficult to reconcile. Text writers have striven to bring some order into this field, and I have found assistance in Street on Torts (5th ed., 1972); Fleming on Torts (4th ed., 1971); and in a helpful article by J.P.S. McLaren, Nuisance in Canada, Linden's Studies in Canadian Tort Law (1968), p. 320. From a study of the cases referred to by counsel and cited in the above sources, the following principles emerge:

As has been said in Street on Torts, at p. 212: 'The essence of the tort of nuisance is interference with the enjoyment of land.' That interference need not be accompanied by negligence. In nuisance one is concerned with the invasion of the interest in the land; in negligence one must consider the nature of the conduct complained of. Nuisances result frequently from intentional acts undertaken for lawful purposes. The most carefully designed industrial plant operated with the greatest care may well be or cause a nuisance, if, for example, effluent, smoke, fumes or noise invade the right of enjoyment of neighbouring land owners to an unreasonable degree; see Manchester v. Farnworth, supra, and Walker v. McKinnon Indust. Ltd., supra, as examples.

When then can it be said that the tort of nuisance has been committed? A helpful proposition is advanced by the learned author of Street on Torts, at p. 215, in these terms:

A person then may be said to have committed the tort of private nuisance when he is held to be responsible for an act indirectly causing physical injury to land or substantially interfering with the use or enjoyment of land or an interest in land, where in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, this injury or interference is held to be unreasonable.

This proposition, stated in a variety of ways, has been accepted generally in the authorities.

The test then is, has the defendant's use of this land interfered with the use and enjoyment of the plaintiffs' land and is that interference unreasonable? Where, as in the case at Bar, actual physical damage occurs it is not difficult to decide that the interference is in fact unreasonable. Greater difficulty will be found where the interference results in lesser or no physical injury but may give offence by reason of smells', noise, vibration or other intangible causes. No finding is required regarding the exercise of care by the defendant and, while its conduct may frequently be such that a finding of negligence could be made, it is not necessary and the existence of due care will afford no defence if the other ingredients are present. Again this is well rooted in authority: for example, see the words of Lord Simonds in Read v. J. Lyons & Co., [1947] A.C. 156, [1946] 2 All E.R. 471 at 482 (H.L.), where the principles laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330 (H.L.), were under discussion:

It was urged by counsel for the appellant that a decision against her when the plaintiff in the Rainham case [Rainham Chemical Works Ltd. v. Belvedere Fish Guano Co. Ltd.], [1921] 2 A.C. 465 (H.L.), succeeded would show a strange lack of symmetry in the law. There is some force in the observation, but your Lordships will not fail to observe that such a decision is in harmony with the development of a strictly analogous branch of the law, the law of nuisance, in which also negligence is not a necessary ingredient in the case. For, if a man commits a legal nuisance, it is no answer to his injured neighbour that he took the utmost care not to commit it. There the liability is strict, and there only he has a lawful claim who has suffered an invasion of some proprietary or other interest in land.

In my opinion, the rationale for the law of nuisance in modern times, whatever its historical origins may have been, is the provision of a means of reconciling certain conflicting interests in connection with the use of land, even where the conflict does not result from negligent conduct. It protects against the unreasonable invasion of interests in land.

What is an unreasonable invasion of an interest in land? All circumstances must, of course, be considered in answering this question. What may be reasonable at one time or place may be completely unreasonable at another. It is certainly not every smell, whiff of smoke, sound of machinery or music which will entitle the indignant plaintiff to recover. It is impossible to lay down precise and detailed standards but the invasion must be substantial and serious and of such a nature that it is clear according to the accepted concepts of the day that it should be an actionable wrong. It has been said (see McLaren, Nuisance in Canada) that Canadian Judges have adopted the words of Knight Bruce V.C. in Walter v. Selfe (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 315, 64 E.R. 849 at 852, affirmed on other grounds 19 L.T.O.S. 308, to the effect that actionability will result from an interference with:

... the ordinary comfort physically of human existence, not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain and sober ... notions.

These words were approved by Middleton J.A. in the Ontario High Court in Appleby v. Erie Tobacco Co. (1910), 22 O.L.R. 533 at 535-36.

In reaching a conclusion, the Court must consider the nature of the act complained of and the nature of the injury suffered. Consideration must also be given to the character of the neighbourhood where the nuisance is alleged, the frequency of the occurrence of the nuisance, its duration and many other factors which could be of significance in special circumstances. While an owner of land in a quiet residential district may well expect to be protected from the operation of a boiler factory on his neighbour's land, he may not be entitled to expect to prevent the boilermaker from pursuing his lawful calling when he seeks to put his residence in an industrial area next to the factory. The conflicting interests must be circumstances. The social utility of the conduct complained of must be weighed against the significance of the injury caused and the value of the interest sought to be protected. But where the conduct of the defendant has caused actual physical injury to the plaintiffs' land, the mere fact that such conduct may be of great social utility, for example, construction and maintenance of a sewer, will not attract greater licence or immunity. There is no reason why a disproportionate share of the cost of such a beneficial service should be visited upon one member of the community by leaving him uncompensated for damage caused by the existence of that which benefits the community at large. The weighing of conflicting interests in the case at Bar, therefore, causes little difficulty. The interference with the plaintiffs' right of enjoyment of their land and the damage caused to their land is clearly such that the action for nuisance lies in the absence of any defence of statutory authorization.

(emphasis mine)

In Appleby v. Erie Tobacco Co. (1910), 22 O.L.R. 533 (Divisional Court), the nuisance complained of was odour arising from the manufacture of tobacco on the defendant's premises. The plaintiff complained of noxious odours coming from the defendant's tobacco factory and interfering with the plaintiff's enjoyment of his premises in the vicinity of the factory. The plaintiff sought an injunction in respect of the odours. The trial judge dismissed the action in respect of the claim for an injunction and the plaintiff appealed. In holding for the plaintiff, Middleton J. said at pp. 536-538:

In Fleming v. Hislop, 11 App. Cas. at p. 691, the Earl of Selborne states his view of the law thus: 'What causes material discomfort and annoyance for the ordinary purposes of life to a man's house or to his property, is to be restrained ... although the evidence does not go to the length of proving that health is in danger.' Lord Halsbury, at p. 697, states what is substantially the same thing. 'What makes life less comfortable and causes sensible discomfort and annoyance is a proper subject of injunction.'

Now, it is to be borne in mind that an arbitrary standard cannot be set up which is applicable to all localities. There is a local standard applicable in each particular district, but, though the local standard may be higher in some districts than in others, yet the question in each case ultimately reduces itself to the fact of nuisance or no nuisance, having regard to all the surrounding circumstances. This is shewn by the oftenquoted passage in Lord Halsbury's judgment in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores Limited, [1904] A.C. 179, at p. 185: 'A dweller in towns cannot expect to have as pure air, as free from smoke, smell, and noise as if he lived in the country, and distant from other dwellings, and yet an excess of smoke, smell and noise may give a cause of action, but in each of such cases it becomes a question of degree, and the question is in each case whether it is a nuisance which will give a right of action.'

In Rushmer v. Polsue and Alfieri Limited, [1906] 1 Ch. 234, (1907) A.C. 121, this principle is applied to the case of a printing office established in a neighbourhood devoted to printing, next door to the plaintiff's residence, and which rendered sleep impossible. Cozens Hardy, L.J., [1906] 1 Ch. at p. 250, sums up the situation in a way that commended itself to the Lords. It was, he says, contended 'that a person living in a district specially devoted to a particular trade cannot complain of any nuisance by noise caused by the carrying on of any branch of that trade without carelessness and in a reasonable manner. I cannot assent to this argument. A resident in such a neighbourhood must put up with a certain amount of noise. The standard of comfort differs according to the situation of the property and the class of people who inhabit it ... But whatever the standard of comfort in a particular district may be, I think the addition of a fresh noise caused by the defendant's works may be so substantial as to cause a legal nuisance. It does not follow that because I live, say, in the manufacturing part of Sheffield, I cannot complain if a steam-hammer is introduced next door, and so worked as to render sleep at night almost impossible, although previous to its introduction my house was a reasonably comfortable abode, having regard to the local standard; and it would be no answer to say that the steam-hammer is of the most modern approved pattern and is reasonably worked. In short ... it is no answer to say that the neighbourhood is noisy, and that the defendant's machinery is of first-class character.'

This case, as is shewn by this extract, puts an end to the controversy upon the question whether the reasonableness of the defendants' user of their own premises affects the plaintiff's rights. Kekewich, J., in Remhardt v. Mentasti (1889), 42 Ch. D. 685, carefully reviews the cases and concludes that it does not. Buckley, J., in Sanders-Clark v. Grosvenor Mansions Co., [1900] 2 Ch. 373, declined to accept this view, apparently confusing the question of nuisance having regard to the local standard with reasonable use of the defendant's premises.

In Attorney-General v. Cole & Son, [1901] 1 Ch. 205, Kekewich, J., discusses the apparent conflict and seeks to reconcile the two views.

In Drysdale v. Dugas, 26 S.C.R. 20, the majority of the Supreme Court review the earlier cases, and come to the same conclusion as that now accepted in England.

It is plain, in this case, that the defendants' manufactory does constitute a nuisance. The odours do cause material discomfort and annoyance and render the plaintiff's premises less fit for the ordinary purposes of life, even making all possible allowances for the local standard of the neighbourhood.

In Maker v. Davanne Holdings Limited et al, [1954] O.R. 935, the plaintiff sought an injunction restraining the defendant from using or causing to be used lands and premises for warehouse or storage purposes and for the purpose of a parking lot. In granting the injunction, Spence J. at p. 939-940 said:

The plaintiff, however, is not complaining of the ordinary noise consistent with the alteration of the character of the neighbourhood from a strictly residential character to a mixed residential and commercial character, but rather of the special noise resulting from the shifting about of goods in what was a semi-detached residence separated from his own only by a party wall.

Appleby v. Erie Tobacco Co. (1920), 22 O.L.R. 533, is a decision in reference to an alleged nuisance arising from noxious odours. Middleton J., as he then was, at pp. 536-7 quoted from English cases where the alleged nuisance was noise, particularly at p. 537, where he cited Rushmer v. Polsue & Alfieri, Limited, [1906] 1 Ch. 234, affirmed [1907] A.C. 121. He quoted as follows from Cozens Hardy L.J. (whose words were approved by the law lords) in that case at p. 250:

So it is no answer here for the defendants to say that the neighbourhood is noisy, containing stores, furniture-shops, etc. What the plaintiff complains of is this incessant racket right through the party wall from his bedroom. I am of the opinion that he has established a case for an injunction until trial upon the ordinary law of nuisance.

In general, a landlord is not liable for a nuisance on the premises; but the landlord is liable if he has authorized nuisance or if he knew, or ought to have known, of nuisance before letting (see Winfield on Tort, 9th Ed, (1971) p. 347). The discussed in Banfal et al. v. Formula Fun Centre Inc. et al. (1984), 34 C.C.L.T. 171 (Ont. H.C.). In that case, the defendant, took a lease from Ontario Hydro of vacant urban land, bounded upon three sides by motel properties. Their aim, which was made clear to Hydro, was to operate an automobile racing amusement ride; a proposal vigorously opposed by neighbouring property owners who feared noise pollution. A conditional certificate was eventually granted by the Provincial Environment Ministry and the City of Niagara Falls passed a bylaw, approved by the Municipal Board, allowing the track to operate.

The miniature racing cars produced a very high noise level from whining engines and screeching tires, a noise which was more or less persistent for 12 hours a day during the summer operating season and which was irritating and obtrusive. The plaintiff, the owner of one of the adjacent motels, brought the action in nuisance seeking damages and an injunction. The court found that the conduct of the racetrack was such as to create a material interference with the ordinary comfort and convenience which the plaintiffs were entitled to expect while enjoying their property. It was in law a nuisance. It found the noise was intrusive and abrasive, out of keeping with other noises in the vicinity and that it was unreasonable in all of the circumstances of the case. It also found that Ontario Hydro, as landlord of the property, had been fully aware of its tenant's intention and of the inevitable noise which the proposed use would have upon nearby properties. At p. 188 of the case, O'Leary J. discusses the liability of an owner for the nuisance created by its tenant as follows:

Is Hydro, the owner, liable for the nuisance by the tenant, Formula? In general, an owner is not liable for the nuisance committed by his tenant. To this rule there is one exception. Where the nuisance arises 'from the natural and necessary result of what the landlord authorized' the tenant to do, then the owner-landlord is liable: Harris v. James, [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 1142. This exception to the general rule has been expressed in different terms. In Earl v. Reid (1911), 23 O.L.R. 453 at 466, 2 O.W.N. 873, 18 O.W.R. 562, Riddell J. said the landlord was not liable unless 'the use from which the damage or nuisance necessarily arises was plainly contemplated by the lease'. In Aldridge v. Van Patter, [1952] O.R. 595, [1952] 4 D.L.R. 93, Spence J. held the owner liable because the possibility of an automobile, during the course of a race, plunging through the fence around the track and injuring someone in the park (the nuisance that actually occurred) was in the immediate contemplation of the owner when the lease was executed. In Smith v. Scott, [1973] Ch. 314, [1972] 3 All E.R. 645, [1972] 3 W.L.R. 783, it was suggested that the owner will be held liable if there is 'a very high degree of probability' that a nuisance will result from the purposes for which the property is let.

In my view, no matter what the correct wording of the exception, Hydro is liable for the nuisance on the evidence in this case. As already indicated, Hydro knew exactly the use Formula intended for the property before it entered into the lease. Hydro not only knew that Formula intended to use the land for an amusement ride, it knew and approved of the layout of the track. It knew the size, power and make of the cars to be raced thereon and the hours of the day the track would be in operation.

Hydro understood two cars might be racing on the track at any one time, and as I indicated earlier, Formula had frequently three and four cars on the track at once. Nevertheless, I am satisfied on the evidence that one or two cars racing on the track at one time are a nuisance. Therefore, the nuisance resulted from Formula operating the track, that is to say, using the land exactly as Hydro knew it intended to use it. By entering into the lease, Hydro authorized Formula to use the land in the manner that caused a nuisance. It follows that the nuisance was 'the natural and necessary result of what the landlord authorized the tenant to do'. Hydro was aware and concerned long before the lease was entered into that the track might cause noise unacceptable to its neighbours and several clauses in the lease purported to deal with how excessive noise was to be dealt with. Therefore, 'the nuisance was plainly contemplated by the lease' and the possibility of the track causing a noise nuisance 'was in the immediate contemplation of the owner'. Subsequent events have shown that there was not only 'a very high degree of probability that a nuisance would result from the purpose for which the property was let' but there was "a certainty" that such would occur.

Perhaps it is trite to say that a person who purchases a residence in a mixed residential/commercial neighbourhood must therefore accept the noise and smells that come with the neighbourhood. A succinct statement of the general principle is found in Halsey v. Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1961] 2 All E.R. 145 (Q.B.D.) where Veale, J. at pp. 151-152 said:

So far as the present case is concerned, liability for nuisance by harmful deposits could be established by proving damage by the deposits to the property in question, provided, of course, that the injury was not merely trivial. Negligence is not an ingredient of the cause of action, and the character of the neighbourhood is not a matter to be taken into consideration. On the other hand nuisance by smell or noise is something to which no absolute standard can be applied.

It is always a question of degree whether the interference with comfort or convenience is sufficiently serious to constitute a nuisance. The character of the neighbourhood is very relevant and all the relevant circumstances have to be taken into account. What might be a nuisance in one area is by no means necessarily so in another. In an urban area, everyone must put up with a certain amount of discomfort and annoyance from the activities of neighbours, and the law must strike a fair and reasonable balance between the right of the plaintiff on the one hand to the undisturbed enjoyment of his property, and the right of the defendant on the other hand to use his property for his own lawful enjoyment. That is how I approach this case.

It may be possible in some cases to prove that noise or smell have in fact diminished the value of the plaintiff's property in the market. That consideration does not arise in this case, and no evidence has been called in regard to it. The standard in respect of discomfort and inconvenience from noise and smell that I have to apply is that of the ordinary reasonable and responsible person who lives in this particular area of Fulham. This is not necessarily the same as the standard which the plaintiff chooses to set up for himself. It is the standard of the ordinary man, and the ordinary man, who may well like peace and quiet, will not complain for instance of the noise of traffic if he chooses to live on a main street in an urban centre, nor of the reasonable noises of industry, if he chooses to live alongside a factory.

Sharon Kenny did accept the noise and smells that came with her part of Yew Street, but, on the evidence, the installation of the fan directly below her condominium, effected her lifestyle and caused Ms. Kenny substantial discomfort. I am satisfied that the installation of the fan interfered with her enjoyment of her condominium to such a degree that it was an unreasonable invasion of her interest in land and that, on the principles set out in the cases, constitutes an actionable nuisance.

Before purchasing her condominium Ms. Kenny made reasonable inquiries about the restaurant operations carried on in the commercial strata lots. She was satisfied that the restaurants would not be cooking foods that would create offensive odours. Her inquiries were borne out because for four years she lived in her condominium without interference in the enjoyment of her condominium from the restaurant operations. However, after the fan was installed by the Cafe Zen, Ms. Kenny's enjoyment of her condominium was substantially and unreasonably interfered with by the constant noise, disturbance and unpleasant odours created by the fan. I accept Ms. Kenny's evidence that the noise and smell was a substantial interference. She did not strike me as being an overly sensitive person or someone who would be unreasonable in assessing the degree of interference caused by the fan. She impressed me as a normal person of ordinary habits and sensibilities who suffered substantial personal discomfort from the noise and smell created by the fan. Mr. Schuster testified that until the fan was installed he got along very well with Ms. Schuster, liked her and that she made no complaints to him.

There is other evidence of the degree of interference caused by the fan. Mrs. Irene Hollo, a tenant in the condominium above Ms. Kenny, moved into her condominium in February 1987. She testified that when she entered her condominium on May 20, 1987 she heard a noise and thought that she had left an appliance running. After searching her condominium, she realized that the sound was coming from the dining room area. She looked out her dining room window and discovered that the noise she heard was coming from the fan. She described the noise like a car constantly idling. As to odours, she described the smell as greasy, a cooking odour. She said it had a smell like old grease that had been used over and over again. Like Ms. Kenny, Mrs. Hollo could smell the odours in the common areas and throughout her condominium. Mrs. Hollo said that she moved out of the rented condominium in May 1988 because of the horrible smells.

John Boyer, who purchased Ms. Kenny's condominium in May 1988, moved into the condominium in June 1988. He testified that with his condominium windows closed, he could not tell if the fan was in operation. However, when he opens his dining room window he can smell kitchen odours without any problem and he can hear the fan. In cross-examination he testified that he kept his dining room window closed because of the noise from the fan which he described as a bother. When the dining room window is left open, he can detect odours, particularly the smell of bacon cooking. He described the odours from the fan as being associated with the frying or deep frying of food.

As to Schuster's responsibility to Ms. Kenny for the nuisance caused by the fan, there is no doubt that Mr. Schuster realized when he assigned the lease to Cafe Zen and approved the installation of the fan that it would change the character of the building. First, in the lease that was assigned to Cafe Zen, he had inserted a provision that there would be no baking of pizza or food preparation with a penetrating smell. He testified that this provision was inserted because he wanted to make sure that the building was as pleasant as possible for all the occupants. He explained that he had had an experience with a pizza parlour in another building owned by him where the smell from the baking of pizza had permeated the entire building.

Second, Mr. Schuster's decision to assign the lease and approve the installation of the fan was a purely economic one without regard to the impact of the fan on Ms. Kenny's condominium. The prior owner to the Cafe Zen was in financial difficulty. A restaurant in that neighbourhood was not economic without the ability to serve cooked foods. Mr. Seto testified that he had no intention of purchasing the restaurant unless he could have a menu serving cooked foods which meant the installation of a restaurant exhaust fan. Mr. Schuster's position was that he would approve the installation of the fan as long as it was permitted by City Hall. So, at the time of the assignment of the lease to Mr. Seto, Mr. Schuster knew full well that Mr. Seto intended to serve a menu with cooked foods. I am also satisfied that Mr. Schuster knew the details regarding installation of the fan and that it would exhaust fumes from cooked foods directly below Ms. Kenny's condominium.

Third, Mr. Schuster immediately acknowledged his responsibility when Ms. Kenny first complained about the installation of the fan. His initial response was to buy her out if he could not find an amicable solution to her complaint. The only reason he did not purchase her condominium was because he could not raise the cash.

In my opinion, it is conclusive in this case, that the noise and smell from the fan constitute a nuisance and that the nuisance arose as the natural and necessary result of what the defendant Schuster authorized the Cafe Zen to do. Therefore, the defendant Schuster is liable for damages. (see Banfai v. Formula Fun Centre, supra.) It is no answer for the defendant Schuster to say that Ms. Kenny chose to live in a mixed commercial/residential neighbourhood and therefore she cannot complain of the noise and smell from the fan. Ms. Kenny did not choose to live in a building where there would be a restaurant creating offensive odours. When Mr. Schuster allowed the installation of the fan he knew the potential problems that the fan would create. What Ms. Kenny complained to Mr. Schuster about was not the noise and smells ordinarily consistent with the character of the neighbourhood but rather the extremely disturbing noise and smell coming from an exhaust fan installed, with Mr. Schuster's permission, in a location which created a substantial interference with the enjoyment of her condominium.

Mr. Schuster relied heavily on the fact that the city permitted the installation of the fan and that city inspectors approved it before and after its installation. A noise control supervisor from the City of Vancouver Department of Health was called to testify. While his file contained complaints regarding noise from the fan, at no time did anyone from his department take a reliable noise level reading from the street level or any reading from Ms. Kenny's condominium. Further, by letter dated September 8, 1987, the city wrote to the Cafe Zen confirming their inspection of the restaurant in regard to noise from the fan and stating "however, given that your system is operating at 65 dba, and the exhaust fan is located near residential accommodations, we would encourage your co-operation with your residential neighbours towards finding a compromise for their problems". Mr. Joe Rittberg, the owner of the firm that installed the fan, after looking at the letter, said that he would not have liked the fan operating at 65 dba which was at the top end of the permitted reading levels in the noise bylaw.

VI. Damages

On the subject of damages for nuisance, G.H.L. Fridman, Q.C., The Law of Torts in Canada, Vol. 1 (Toronto: Carswell, 1989) at pp. 161-162 states:

If the the nuisance has caused physical damage to the plaintiff's property, damages will be recoverable. Damages may also be an appropriate remedy where the plaintiff has suffered personal physical injury in consequence of the defendant's conduct. In this respect, it must be shown that the damage in question was not the result of any idiosyncratic condition of the plaintiff, some special weakness that rendered him susceptible when the average person would not have been harmed. 237 However, whether personal or proprietary damages involved, it would seem that once the defendant's conduct amounts to an actionable nuisance vis-a-vis the ordinary reasonable man, the fact that the plaintiff suffers extra damage because of his sensitive nature (or the special use he is making of his property, such as the cultivation of orchids, a delicate plant) will not preclude the recovery of such extra loss.

Once damage to the plaintiff's property is established, the defendant can be held liable for consequential loss, such as loss of business, and the expenses incurred in repairing and protecting property. 239 one such consequential loss that has caused problems is the diminution in value of the plaintiff's property by reason of the interference resulting from the defendant's conduct. It has been said that no proof of damage is required where the nuisance consists of the personal inconvenience and interference with one's enjoyment, one's quiet, one's personal freedom, or anything that discomposes or injuriously affects the senses or the nerves.

No actual financial or physical damage need be proved as the damage in such cases consists in the annoyance and discomfort caused to the occupier of the premises. However, a number of decisions have concerned the possibility of a claim for financial loss resulting from such interference. Plaintiffs have argued that their property has lessened in value, in terms of saleability on the market, because the smoke, noise, dust, fumes, etc., made the plaintiff's property not as desirable as it might have been without such interference.

If the plaintiff is to seek a remedy, it must be shown, in the first instance, that the plaintiff believed that what the defendant was doing would result in such diminution of the value of the plaintiff's property. In other words, there must be a causal connection between the defendant's conduct and the alleged drop in value. Second, it must be proved that there was some diminution in value. One way to establish this, perhaps the best or truest way, is to show that attempts were made to sell the property and failed, or could only succeed if the price were significantly reduced from what would otherwise be a reasonable market price.

I am satisfied that the value of Ms. Kenny's condominium decreased due to the installation of the fan. Mr. Peter Mason, the real estate agent who listed Ms. Kenny's condominium, testified that it took seven months to sell it. He pointed out the fan to prospective purchasers because he was concerned to ensure that they knew about its existence. However, he kept the dining room window shut when he was showing the condominium because he did not want to emphasize the negative aspect of the fan. When he received Mr. Boyer's offer of $105,000 he encouraged Ms. Kenny to accept the offer because it was the only one received.

In my view, the extent of the diminished value of Ms. Kenny's condominium is settled by the evidence of Mr. Leslie Parton, a certified appraiser. Mr. Parton completed an appraisal of Ms. Kenny's condominium dated June 9, 1987. He concluded that "marketability may be impaired due to the nuisance of the restaurant's exhaust fan" and he estimated the value of her condominium at $105,000. In a letter dated July 21, 1988 Mr. Parton stated "the estimated loss due to noise and odours from the restaurant's exhaust fan located on and/or adjacent to the subject is $10,000. Therefore the net current market value is $105,000".

Mr. Parton based his conclusion of the loss of value of Ms. Kenny's condominium based upon his experience, expertise and common sense. I am satisfied, on the whole of the evidence, that his conclusion is a reasonable one and I therefore award Ms. Kenny damages under this head of $10,000.

With respect to Ms. Kenny's claim for non-pecuniary damages, ges 15th ed. (London:Sweet & Maxwell Limited, 1988) at p. 869, paragraph 1401 states:

Beyond physical damage to the land however, a nuisance may cause annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or even illness to the plaintiff occupier. Recovery in respect of these principally non-pecuniary losses is allowable and may be regarded as part of the normal measure of damages.

Stephenson L.J. in Bone & Another v. Seale [1975] 1 All E.R. 787 (C.A.C.D.) considered the measure 'of damages for interference with the enjoyment of property and at pp. 792-794 said:

On the third ground, that the damages awarded by the judge were far too high, it seems to me that this court has a very difficult task to perform. It has to ask itself: what is the measure of damages for a nuisance of this kind? I start by considering whether there is really any authority which gives us, or which would have given the learned judge, any guidance. The only authority which has been cited in this court is the decision of Veale J. in Halsey v. Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. That was a very different case of an unfortunate plaintiff living in Fulham who had to put up with smells, vibration and noise, by day and night, to an extent which very seriously interfered with his comfort and convenience over a period of something like five years. In 1961 the learned judge gave him, for all that, damages of 200. I do not think it could be suggested that that was a high figure, even in those days; if it had not been coupled with an injunction, it might well have been higher.

Is there any other guide to which we can turn in considering whether the judge's figure of over 6,000 for each of these plaintiffs is the right sort of figure? It is a figure which I think struck each member of this court rather as the figure in McCarthy v. Coldair Ltd struck Denning LJ, and led us to say to ourselves something like 'Good gracious me - as high as that!'

That figure of over 6,000 for what is a nuisance and is offensive but no more something which is rightly described as a nuisance - does seem at first blush to be a very high figure, and counsel for the defendant has asked us to say that it is a figure which is so high that this court cannot uphold it. We accept the test long ago laid down by Greer

LJ in Flint v. Lovell. In that case Greer LJ said:

I think it right to say that this court would be disinclined to reverse the finding of a trial judge as to the amount of damages merely because they think that if they had tried the case in the first instance they would have given a lesser sum. In order to justify reversing the trial judge on the question of the amount of damages it will generally be necessary that this Court should be convinced either that the judge acted upon some wrong principle of law, or that the amount awarded was so extremely high or so very small as to make it, in the judgment of this court, an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage [sic] to which the plaintiff is entitled.

That test was repeated by Lord Pearson, with the agreement of Lord Denning MR and Sir Gordon Willmer, in Hinz v. Berry, to which counsel for the plaintiffs also referred.

It is difficult to find an analogy to damages for interference with the enjoyment of property. In this case, efforts to prove diminution in the value of the property as a result of this persistent smell over the years failed. The damages awarded by the learned judge were damages simply for loss of amenity living on their property; and of course their enjoyment of their own property was indirectly affected by these smells inasmuch, as it affected their visitors and members of their families. The nearest analogy would seem to be the damages which are awarded almost daily for loss of amenity in personal injury cases; it does seem to me that there is perhaps a closer analogy than at first sight appears between losing the enjoyment of your property as a result of some interference by smell or by noise caused by a next door neighbour, and losing an amenity as a result of a personal injury. Is it possible to equate loss of sense of smell as a result of the negligence of a defendant motor driver with having to put up with positive smells as a result of a nuisance created by a negligent neighbour? There is, as it seems to me, some parallel between the loss of amenity which is caused by personal injury and the loss of amenity which is caused by a nuisance of this kind. If a parallel is drawn between those two losses, it is at once confirmed that this figure is much too high. It is the kind of figure that would only be given for a serious and permanent loss of amenity as the result of a very serious injury, perhaps in the case of a young person. Here we have to remember that the loss of amenity which has to be quantified in pounds and pence extends over a long period - a period of 12 1/2 years - but it must not take account of any future loss.

Scarman L.J. in the same case, at pp. 794-795 stated:

Nuisance is a wrong to property, but it is well recognised that even when there is no physical damage to property it may cause annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort to the occupier of the property in his enjoyment of it. As Mr. McGregor says in his work on Damages:

When there is a claim for damages in respect of non-pecuniary loss caused by nuisance, recovery of damages is allowable and may be regarded as part of the normal measure of damages.

In such a case as this, therefore, we are thrown back to general principles.

What is the relevant general principle? I think it is that to which Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest referred in the course of his speech in H. West & Son Ltd. v. Shephard. That was a case of very severe personal injury, but, speaking of the difficulty of awarding damages where there is no financial yardstick, he said simply: 'All that judges and courts can do is to award sums which must be regarded as giving reasonable compensation'.

Such is the principle, but the difficulty remains: what is reasonable? As Stephenson L.J. has mentioned there is very little guidance in the case law. In Halsey v. Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd., to which Stephenson L.J. has referred, Veale J. considered 200 appropriate damages for what, on reading the case, one would think was a gross interference with comfort and enjoyment of property over a period of five years or thereabouts. Nevertheless, there is in that case an indication of what one learned judge thought appropriate in a case of nuisance by noise and smell in 1961, and, unless it can be said that his estimate was itself wholly erroneous, it is something we must bear in mind when attempting to adopt a consistent legal pattern in the assessment of damages at large.

Where else can one go to for assistance as to what is reasonable? As Stephenson L.J. has indicated, it is appropriate to go to personal injury litigation and to note the sort of figure that judges award for the element of loss of amenity. It is difficult to be precise in such matters, and I think not helpful to refer to specific cases. But the indications, both from one's own experience and from such works as have collated damages in these cases, are that 6,000 for 12 years' discomfort in a matter of smell is out of all proportion to awards for comparable loss of amenity in that class of case.

It is not, I think, possible to say that we must adopt, or seek to adopt, any rigid standard of comparison between a nuisance case and personal injury litigation. Nevertheless, overall the law ought to remain consistent when it is dealing with analogous situations.

I find, therefore, both in Veale J.'s decision and in the general approach of judges to the loss of amenity element in damages in personal injury litigation, some indication that the damages awarded in this case were unreasonable.

But that in itself cannot be enough to entitle this court to disturb the award of the trial judge. We have to go as far as Stephenson L.J. has mentioned when he quoted the well-known passage from the judgment of Greer L.J. in Flint v. Lovell. Was there here an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage sustained by the two plaintiffs? This must be a matter of impression - impression derived from experience and a general knowledge of the way in which the law handles analogous claims.

One must bear in mind also a further general principle, that, when one is removed from the world of pecuniary loss and is attempting to measure damages for non-pecuniary loss, an element in reasonableness is the fairness of the compensation to be awarded. There must be moderation; some attention must be paid to the rights of the offending defendant as well as to the rights of the injured plaintiff.

Ms. Kenny says, and I believe, that she did not bring this action out of spite for Mr. Schuster or based on principle but because she lost the enjoyment of her condominium. Until the installation of the fan, she enjoyed living in her condominium. Ms. Kenny's condominium was unique because of its very large patio deck. Mr. Boyer testified that the patio deck is one of the big features of the condominium which adds value to it. But for the installation of the fan, Ms. Kenny planned to stay in her condominium and make improvements to it.

Ms. Kenny concluded, and I find reasonably so, that she had no alternative but to sell her condominium. There is no evidence of anything more she could reasonably have done to minimize the negative impact of the noise and smell from the fan. She asked for the fan to be taken down. She was prepared to sell to Mr. Schuster. She sought an injunction. She listed her condominium for sale. The installation of the fan was a gross interference with the comfort and enjoyment of her condominium over a period of approximately one year and I consider a fair and reasonable award to her for non-pecuniary damages to be $7,500.

In addition, Ms. Kenny is entitled to repayment of the commission which she was forced to pay by reason of her having to sell her condominium (see Horton and Horton v. Zirul (1982), 34 B.C.L.R. 234, Danish v. Danish (1981), 33 B.C.L.R. 176 and Murchie v. Murchie (1984), 39 R.F.L. (2d) 385). As well, she is entitled to reimbursement for her moving costs as well as her legal costs incurred in connection with the injunction application.

VII. Conclusion

In the result, Ms. Kenny will have judgment against the defendant Schuster in the amount of $25,557.45 plus her costs of this trial including her costs of the application before Paris J. on Monday, November 28, 1988. She is entitled to interest pursuant to the Court Order Interest Act.

Action Nos. M163490/88, M166872/88

Ontario District Court - York Judicial District

Davidson D.C.J.

June 30, 1988

M. Spears, for the Applicant.

R.M.S. Lambert, Q.C., for the Respondents.

DAVIDSON D.C.J. (orally):— This is an application by York Condominium Corporation No. 400 for an order requiring the respondents 10 to comply with By-law No. 3 of York Condominium Corporation No. 400, and for an injunction prohibiting the respondents, or either of them, from ordinarily residing in any unit in York Condominium Corporation No. 400 with anyone under the age of 18 years and, in the alternative, for an interim injunction prohibiting the respondents, or either of them, from ordinarily residing in any unit in York Condominium Corporation No. 400 with anyone under the age of 18 years.

York Condominium Corporation No. 400 was created by the registration of a Declaration and Description at the Office of Land Titles in Toronto on July 14, 1978. By-law No. 3 of York 400 provides as follows, under the heading, "Sales, Resales and Leases of Units":

"All sales, resales or leases of units shall be restricted to purchasers or lessees with no dependents under 18 years of age. A binding disclosure form confirming that fact shall be signed by the potential purchaser or lessee and be attached to and form part of the offer to purchase or lease."

By-law No. 3 was confirmed by a vote of owners at a meeting held November 26, 1979, and was registered in the Office of Land Titles at Toronto on December 10, 1979. The by-law was passed or confirmed or voted for by the necessary majority owners of units of York 400.

The respondent, Comcraft Services Limited, has been the owner of two units in York 400 since August of 1979 and, accordingly, notice of the owners' meeting held on November 26, 1979 to consider By-law No. 3 would have been forwarded to said Comcraft.

In January of 1988, the respondent, B.K. Prasad, advised York 400 that he intended to purchase from Comcraft the two units owned by it in the Condominium Corporation and requested an estoppel certificate from York 400. The Condominium Corporation, in turn, required that Mr. Prasad execute a disclosure form as required by By-law No. 3 confirming that he would not be occupying the units to be purchased with any dependents under 18 years of age.

Both Prasad and Comcraft subsequently advised York 400 that the said disclosure form would not be provided and, by a letter dated March 16, 1988, Comcraft formally advised York 400 that Prasad would be proceeding ahead with the completion of the formalities for the purchase of the two suites ignoring the by-laws.

Prasad had already verbally confirmed to the solicitors for York 400 that he would be proceeding to complete the purchase of the said units in York 400 and that, as he proposes to occupy these units with two dependents under the age of 18 years, he will not be providing the disclosure form required by By-law No. 3.

With the exception of the respondent Mr. Prasad, it is apparent that every prospective purchaser of a unit in York 400 has provided this disclosure form to the Corporation pursuant to By-law No. 3 since its passage in 1979.

The By-law is purportedly passed under section 28 of The Condominium Act and, in particular, said to be under subsection (d), which reads:

s. 28(d) "to govern the management of the property;

(g) specifying duties of the corporation;"

and:

"(j) respecting the conduct generally of the affairs of the corporation.", and the heading of the section, of course, is:

"The board may pass by-laws, not contrary to this Act or to the declaration..."

in respect to those three matters I have quoted.

Section 3 of The Condominium Act sets out what the declaration under The Condominium Act must contain, that is, in section 3(1) and in section 3(3), it sets out what the declaration may contain. The important subsections for consideration are section 3(3)(b), (c), and I read:

3(3) "In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection (1), and in any other section in this Act, a declaration may contain,

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

(c) provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests;"

It is of considerable note, in my view, that the wording of the first sentence of the By-law comes squarely within the wording in section 3(3)(c). The validity of similar or analogous restricting provisions contained in a declaration as opposed to a by-law has been upheld in at least two decisions.

In York Condominium Corporation No. 216 v. Borsodi (1983), 42 O.R. (2d), my brother Allen had occasion to deal with the Declaration of the Condominium in which inter alia there was at issue a provision proclaiming:

"...no owner or occupant of such units shall use them or permit them to be used or shall sell or permit them to be sold except for residential purposes for adults and persons 14 years of age and older, and no children under the age of 14 years shall be permitted by the owners and occupants of the said units to occupy or reside in the said units."

The provision was purportedly included in the Declaration under section 3(3)(b) of The Condominium Act.

The result of that decision was that a mandatory injunction was granted pursuant to section 49 of The Condominium Act requiring the defendants to comply with the Act and, particularly, with that provision of the Declaration which included the words that I have read.

In the recent decision of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 624, and Ramdial et al., my brother Hudson gave oral reasons for judgment, unreported, dated January 29, 1988. The Declaration of the Condominium Corporation which was under discussion there provided in section 35 under the heading "Adult Occupancy":

35. "No unit owner or lessee of a unit shall permit anyone under the age of 16 years to ordinarily reside in such unit. Any unit resale or lease by anyone other than the declarant must be consented to by the Board of Directors within 15 days of their receipt of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale or lease, or alternatively, the Corporation may purchase or lease such unit on the same terms and conditions as set out in the said Agreement of Purchase and Sale or Lease."

It is recited in that decision that section 35 of the Declaration was passed pursuant to section 3(3)(b) of The Condominium Act and also subsection (c) of that section, those, of course, being the two subsections to which I have already referred.

In Metropolitan Toronto Condominium 624, the Corporation sought an injunction to prevent the sale of the unit under discussion when it learned that the proposed purchaser had a 13-year-old child and that it was intended that the proposed purchaser and the 13-year-old child would occupy the unit after the purchase was completed. The result of that case was that the order was made requiring the respondents to comply with section 35 of the Declaration and an injunction was granted.

I note that an appeal was taken from that decision and a motion to quash the appeal was successful on June 6, 1988. That is, the appeal was not heard on its merits.

Reference was had by both counsel before me to the decision in Basmadjian v. York Condominium Corporation No. 52, (1981), 21 R.P.R. 11, a decision of Mr. Justice Maloney of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

The by-law under discussion there dealt with requirements for leasing. Of note in that case at page 114 there appears the quote:

"A condominium corporation is entirely a creature of statute. Any provision of its declaration, by-laws or rules must be authorized by The Condominium Act, 1978."

Continuing on that page, and I quote:

"In all cases the Act has priority over the declaration and the by-laws.... In addition, s. 60 provides that the provisions of the Act will apply notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary. Next to the provisions of the Act the declaration is to have priority. The declaration is subject to the Act and s. 3(5) provides that where any provisions in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the Act prevails and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly."

And then, continuing on page 115, I quote:

"Counsel for the applicant likened the priority given to the declaration in The Condominium Act, 1978 to a constitution, amendment of which is subject to stringent safeguards. I accept this submission and it is clear that the declaration has priority over the by-laws."

The Court then goes on further at page 115, and I quote:

"The validity of any by-law, therefore, must be examined in the light of the priority given to the provisions of the Act and the declaration. A by-law may be upheld only if it falls within the matters contained in s. 28(1) and if it is reasonable and consistent with both The Condominium Act, 1978, and the declaration."

Counsel for the applicant before me places emphasis upon Mr. Justice Maloney's statement at page 120 of the Basmadjian decision, and I quote:

"In my opinion, By law No. 7 would properly fall within the matters which may be included in the declaration under s. 3(3)(a) of the Act which provides for 'a specification of common expenses' and/or s. 3(3)(c) of the Act which provides for 'provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests.' The wording of s. 4 of para. 1 of BY-law No. 7 clearly does not anticipate that the rental administration charge is being specified as a common expense. Accordingly, the true characterization of this by-law falls within s. 3(3)(c)."

And then Mr. Justice Maloney goes on:

"Section 3(3)(c) is permissive and not exclusive as to what may be contained in the declaration. To the extent that the leasing provisions of By-law No. 7 are consistent with art. XVII of the declaration, they are valid."

In my view, that quotation on page 120 still must be looked at in light of what his lordship said at page 115:

"A by-law may be upheld only if it falls within the matters contained in s. 28(1)...."

I have already read sections (d), (g) and (j) of section 28(1). In my opinion, it would of the wording used in those subsections to say that they would permit the restriction on the sale and lease which is sought to be upheld here pursuant to By-law No. 3. Even accepting that The Condominium Act is remedial legislation requiring such large and liberal interpretation as would best attain the object of the Act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit, I do not feel that the interpretation proposed under section 28(1) is justified and, in particular, I feel such possible interpretation is eroded away by the existence of the specific powers available under the permissive portion of section 3 which dealt with provisions which may go into the declaration.

I do not lose sight of the fact that prior to the registration of the Declaration, the project was being marketed in sales material and in advertising as "adults-only" and "adult residence". The fact remains that the declarant did not incorporate that feature or restriction in the Declaration.

Reference was also had on behalf of the applicant to a portion of Hansard of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario on December the 9th, 1986, wherein The Honourable Mr. Scott, the Attorney General, is quoted at page 4069 as follows:

"First, many of the condominium owners in Ontario who think they are living in adults-only buildings are not living in adults-only buildings. There is more than one recorded example of buildings that are advertised as adults-only buildings in which there is not and never has been the requisite by-law and where at the end of the day the remaining units are sold to families with children to complete the condominiumization of the exercise. Many of the people out there who with the best faith in the world believe they are living in adults-only buildings are not in fact so living.... It is possible a building that is not now an adults-only building could become one by the passage of the by-law, but the reality is that it is highly unlikely because of the by-law passage requirements."

I note that that was not a debate on The Condominium Act. It, apparently, was a debate considering the Equality Rights Statute Law Amendment Act. It is of interest but not more than that, in my opinion, in regard to the issue that I have to face.

In the result, I find that the restriction sought to be imposed cannot be imposed by by-law under the statutory powers contained in section 28 of The Condominium Act, and accordingly the application of the Condominium Corporation is dismissed.

There were differences of opinion between counsel as to the Court's jurisdiction to declare ultra vires By-law No. 3 and for an order that the respondent be permitted to occupy the units together with his family. Given the dismissal of the application of the Condominium Corporation for reasons that I have given, I do not feel that it is necessary for me to make any ruling in respect to the proposed cross-application.

[1985] O.J. No. 1833

Action No. 12373/84

Ontario Provincial Court - Civil Division

Caswell Prov. Ct. J.

December 10, 1985.

Counsel:

R. Bradburn, for the plaintiff.

M. Shea, for the defendant.

1 CASWELL PROV. CT. J.— The plaintiffs retained the law firm of Durno and Shea to act on their behalf as purchasers of Unit 1, York Condominium No. 88, from Hugh McLeod and Gloria McLeod, the vendors. They were represented throughout by Michael Shea, a partner in the firm. The agreement of purchase and sale on the Toronto Real Estate Board standard form for resales of condominium units was executed on August 18, 1982. The transaction closed November 24, 1982. York Condominium Corporation No. 88 issued an estoppel certificate dated September 27, 1982, to the vendors pursuant to s. 32(8) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 and Reg. 121, Form 18, R.R.O. 1980. The certificate contained the following clauses:

"6. The Corporation has no knowledge of any circumstances that may result in an increase in the common expenses for the said unit; except as detailed in the current budget and the explanatory notes attached thereto.

8. The Corporation is not presently considering any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or any or any substantial change in the assets of the corporation except as detailed in the current budget."

2 Mr. Shea testified that he did not request that the corporation issue an estoppel certificate to the purchasers and he did not pay the requisite $25 fee for one. He did, however, instruct his secretary to telephone the corporation offices shortly before closing to ensure that the estoppel certificate was current and that there had been no significant changes between the date of the certificate and the date of closing.

3 After closing, sometime in the late winter, the plaintiffs were notified by the corporation that they were required to pay an additional sum of $2,210 as their share of a special assessment that had been levied to cover the cost of repairs to the condominium roof.

¶ 4 I find, based on the evidence before me, that the corporation's board of directors had been aware of the deteriorating condition of the roof and the necessity for repairs since at least the previous January. Mr. Shea wrote to the corporation by letter dated March 18, 1983 and set out the plaintiffs' complaint. In that letter, he stated as follows:

"We have in our possession various documentation, newsletters etc. from the Condominium Corporation indicating that this problem has been a major source of concern since early 1982."

5 Mr. Shea's associate, Brian McMurter, had been solicitor for the corporation at that time. When the corporation responded to Mr. Shea by letter dated March 22, 1983, Mr. Shea then wrote to the plaintiffs to advise them that there was a conflict and stated:

"I am enclosing a copy of a letter from York Condominium Corporation No. 88. The letter is quite correct in that our firm does in fact act for the Condominium through Mr. McMurter. Unfortunately, I was not aware of this fact as the services were always performed by Mr. McMurter. Obviously, our firm must withdraw from the case for both sides. . . ."

6 Mr. Shea produced from the files of the defendant law firm a letter from the Property Maintenance Occupancy Standards Department of the Borough of Scarborough to the corporation, outlining the problems with respect to the roof. This letter, dated September 16, 1982, predates the estoppel certificate.

7 The plaintiffs refused to pay the levy. The corporation placed a lien on the unit and power of sale proceedings were commenced in September 1983. The plaintiffs paid the outstanding levy including interest, costs and expenses in the amount of $2,850.44. The plaintiffs then sued in two separate actions, which were ordered to be tried together, the corporation, Gurnos Reid (treasurer of the corporation) and Durno and Shea. At trial, the plaintiffs were non-suited as against the corporation and Reid. The claim against the law firm of Durno and Shea is for the damages occasioned to the plaintiffs by the failure of that firm to obtain an estoppel certificate; the firm, it is alleged, is in breach of its contract with the plaintiffs.

8 The issues are as follows:

(1) Did the plaintiffs suffer any damages for which the plaintiffs could be responsible at law?

(2) Did the law firm breach the requisite standard of care in failing to obtain an estoppel certificate from the corporation?

(3) What is the proper measure of damages?

9 The plaintiffs alleged that they would not have had to pay the special levy had the estoppel certificate been issued to them as purchasers. It is agreed that the condominium roof is a common element. The estoppel certificate sets out that the corporation is not contemplating any major repairs. The purchasers rely on s. 32(8) of the Condominium Act, which states as follows:

"8. Any person acquiring or proposing to acquire an interest in a unit from an owner may request the corporation to give a certificate in the prescribed form in respect of the common expenses of the owner and of default in payment thereof, if any, by the owner, together with such statements and information as are prescribed by the regulations, and the certificate binds the corporation as against the person requesting the certificate in respect of any default or otherwise shown in the certificate, as of the day it is given." (Emphasis added.)

10 It is my view that this section and the regulations required that the corporation disclose the particulars of any potential increase in common expenses or any potential special assessments. I base this opinion on the wording of cls. 6 and 8 of Form 18 previously quoted. This is particularly relevant in view of s. 38(3) of the Condominium Act wherein the cost of additional alterations or improvements to the common elements are considered common expenses and accordingly may be charged against the condominium unit.

11 The statute and the regulations make it clear that the estoppel certificate only binds the corporation with respect to "any default or otherwise shown in the certificate" as against the person requesting the certificate. The grammar may be faulty, but the intent is manifest. According to the principles of statutory interpretation, I am obliged to give effect to the clear unambiguous wording of the statute and the regulations passed thereunder.

12 In the case of Halifax County Condo. Corp. No. 5 Cowie Hill v. McDermaid (1982), 55 N.S.R. (2d) 414, a decision of Madame Justice C. Glube of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court Trial Division, the condominium was not successful in obtaining a declaration ordering the unit owner to pay the special levy. In that case, the corporation had approved a motion to borrow funds to finance repairs and a borrowing resolution had been executed prior to the issuance of the estoppel certificate. The estoppel certificate did not contain any reference to any special assessment which would be levied against the unit owners. The Ontario Act and regulations appear to be much broader in scope than the Nova Scotia Condominium Act, S.N.S. 1970-71, c. 12. Madame Justice Glube held that since the amount claimed was not referred to in the estoppel certificate, then the plaintiff corporation's claim was estopped.

13 In the instant case, I find that the purchasers were unable to rely on the estoppel certificate and on the protection set out in s. 32(8) of the Condominium Act when the special levy was assessed against them.

14 Mr. Donald Lamont, Q.C., whose qualifications as an expert in the practice of real estate law are well known in this province, stated that the practice in the profession is that an estoppel certificate be provided to the purchaser on closing. The Act formerly provided that only a vendor had status to obtain a certificate. It did not seem to me that it was Mr. Lamont's evidence that it is the custom of the profession that the vendor obtain the estoppel certificate in every situation, only that this is occasionally the situation.

15 In the Bar Admission Course material published by the Law Society of Upper Canada, Real Estate and Landlord and Tenant Section, the authors, David Millman, Q.C. and Paul Neubauer, at p. 256 state as follows regarding the practice of the vendor obtaining the estoppel certificate:

"This would appear to be a dangerous practice and would not adequately protect the purchaser since it would not bind the corporation against the purchaser but rather to the vendor who presumably requested the certificate, in respect of any common expenses defaults or other statements shown on the certificate and it is well worth the added expense of the $25.00 fee that the purchaser's solicitor request his own certificate."

16 A solicitor's duty to his client to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of his duties has been examined many times by the Court. The client is entitled to expect that his solicitor will act on his behalf as an ordinary and prudent solicitor: Tabata v. McWilliams (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 32, a decision of Mr. Justice Lerner of the Ontario High Court and affirmed on appeal (1982), 40 O.R. (2d) 158. A solicitor will only be liable if his mistake is a negligent one. A solicitor makes a negligent mistake if it is shown that his "error or ignorance was such that an ordinarily competent solicitor would not have made . . ." (Aaroe v. Seymour, [1956] O.R. 736 at p. 737, affirmed on other grounds, 7 D.L.R. (2d) 676) In the case of Hauck v. Dixon (1975), 10 O.R. (2d) 605, 64 D.L.R. (3d) 201, a solicitor was excused from liability on the basis that he had acted in accordance with the customary practice of the solicitors in the community. However, it is now clearly established that compliance with custom is not conclusive of reasonable care, that is, the practice itself may be deemed unreasonable, unsafe or negligent.

17 In the case of Polischuk v. Hagarty (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 417, a decision of Mr. Justice Henry, (varied on appeal (1984), 49 O.R. (2d) 71), it was found that the custom of the profession was not a viable defence for a solicitor who was retained to carry out the terms of the clients' agreement of purchase and sale. In this case, the solicitor accepted an undertaking from the vendor's solicitor that he would obtain a discharge of a mortgage and paid the moneys to the solicitor in trust. The vendor's solicitor subsequently did not pay the moneys to the mortgagee and the funds were not recovered. Mr. Justice Henry stated (at p. 425):

"Accepting that the defendant solicitor acted on the closing of the transaction in accordance with the general practice of ordinarily competent solicitors, that does not end the matter. He was retained to carry out the terms of the clients' agreement of purchase and sale and not to substitute other terms for it. In my opinion, there is no principle of law or professional dealing that justified him in failing to enforce the contract, as written by his clients, unless he received instructions to do so, or the matter was clearly left to this discretion, after he had given advice on it.

While solicitors in London had adopted the practice followed by the defendant, as a practical way of closing transactions, where a discharge of mortgage was not readily available to carry out a vendor's obligation, I cannot accept that the profession was justified in imposing such a practice upon the lay public, their clients, without their knowledge and consent. The plaintiffs in this case were not at any time before closing made aware of the general practice and not only did not authorize the defendant to depart from the terms of their bargain in this way, but had no opportunity to receive advice about it or even to authorize the defendant to use his own discretion and judgment, in overcoming practical problems, by accepting other than the discharge, to which they were entitled, upon payment of their money to the vendor's solicitor."

18 In the case of Campbell v. Delrue, released February 15, 1985, a decision of Mr. Justice Osborne of the Ontario High Court, a solicitor in London was found negligent for failure to search for work orders. There was uncontradicted expert evidence at trial that the local practice in the London area was that solicitors did not search for work orders in residential transactions. Mr. Justice Osborne stated at pp. 5 - 6:

"Even if local practice suggested that no work order search was necessary, given the circumstances including the provisions of the offer, the minimal effort required for a work order search and the obvious risk involved were there to be a work order outstanding or something resembling a work order outstanding, I conclude that the defendant was negligent and in breach of his contractual obligations to the plaintiffs as a result of his failure to check or search for work orders."

19 It is my view that the defendant has been unable to sustain the argument that the customary practice is for the vendor's solicitor to obtain an estoppel certificate. That it is a practice of some solicitors may be true, but I find that it is not the customary practice of all solicitors who practise in the area of real estate law.

20 The provisions of s. 32(8) of the Condominium Act are not uncertain. Indeed, they are very clear. The consequences of the failure of the purchaser's solicitor to obtain the estoppel certificate are also very clear. Simply put, the failure of the purchaser's solicitor to obtain the estoppel certificate means that the corporation is not bound by the certificate. In this case, of course, this means that the purchasers were bound to pay the special levy. The purchaser's solicitor who ignores these clear statutory provisions does so at his peril.

21 It is my conclusion then that the defendants in this case were negligent and in breach of their contractual obligations to the plaintiffs as a result of the failure to obtain an estoppel certificate in the name of the purchasers or the law firm as solicitors for the purchasers. The loss in this case was reasonably contemplated and reasonably foreseeable.

22 The proper measure of damages is the amount that the plaintiffs were required to pay as their share of the special levy to repair the roof, that is, $2,210. It does not seem reasonable to me that the plaintiffs should be entitled in addition, to the interest, costs and penalties that were imposed on them for their failure to pay. Quite properly, Mr. Shea told the plaintiffs he could no longer act for them and their file was turned over to another solicitor. Presumably, it was these solicitors who advised the plaintiffs to refrain from paying from June until September 1983 when the costs and interest had accumulated. It is Mr. Shea's evidence that he believes that he advised the plaintiffs to make the payment in March or April 1983, under protest, and I accept his evidence.

23 There will be prejudgment interest awarded from the date of the service of the claim on the defendant law firm and costs.

24 I did not award counsel fees in the non-suited actions of the plaintiffs against the defendant corporation and defendant Reid, on the basis that the issues were novel. The plaintiffs have not been entirely successful, nonetheless, it is my view that costs should follow the cause. There will, therefore, be counsel fee awarded to counsel for the plaintiffs in the amount of $300 and $30 for preparation.

25 If there are any matters with respect to R. 15 that I should deal with, then I may be spoken to in the morning at 9:45 a.m. at the convenience of counsel who should advise the trial coordinator accordingly.

Confederation Life Insurance Co. v. 511666 Ontario Ltd.

Between

Confederation Life Insurance Company, Plaintiff, and 511666 Ontario Limited and Charles Khoury, Defendants

[1985] O.J. No. 362
Action No. 19375/84

Ontario Supreme Court - High Court of Justice
Van Camp J.

Heard: December 20, 1984
Judgment: April 3, 1985
(4 pp.)

Counsel:

J.W. Adams and Peter Cavanaugh, for the Plaintiff/Applicant.
H. Underwood, for the Defendants/Respondents.

1 VAN CAMP J.:— This is a motion for leave to appeal from the decision of Smith J. refusing to appoint an interim receiver under s. 19 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 223 for the rents from an apartment complex.

2 The plaintiff mortgagee to whom the rents had been assigned as part of the security for the mortgage asked for the appointment of a receiver to get in and receive the rents and to authorize the payments therefrom by the defendant corporation or, alternatively, to make the payments therefrom in respect of all usual and necessary outgoings and expenses in connection with the operation, maintenance and management of the mortgaged premises, including payment of mortgages, taxes, repairs, insurance and water rates.

3 The background facts are stated in the reasons of Smith J. and also in the reasons given by Griffiths J. on February 22, 1985 in an application wherein one of the matters between the parties hereto was decided. I do not conclude that the order of Smith J. is incorrect, but, in my opinion, there is good reason to doubt its correctness for the reasons that I set out herein and the test that should be applied for the appointment of a receiver for a creditor such as the plaintiff is one that deserves definition.

4 In Bank of Montreal v. Appcon Ltd., 37 C.B.R. 281, Anderson J. noted that dearth of authority and was prepared, on the facts before him, to appoint a receiver and manager. Here, the plaintiff does not ask for the right of management, only of supervision of payments.

5 The monthly payments under the mortgage have not been made since August last. The taxes were in arrears. The amount owing on the mortgage exceeded the purchase price. The mortgagor has not accounted for the rents from the properties that it has received during the period of default. I disagree that this is execution before judgment. Rather, the defendants would be required to pay only what they had covenanted to pay. The action in which this motion is brought is for payment of the arrears on the covenant.

6 The action brought by the defendants is for a declaration that the plaintiff is in breach of a commitment letter and the mortgage by failing to execute consents for the registration of the subject lands as a condominium. It raises the issue of whether the agreement between the parties permitted sales of condominium units by the defendants. If such sales are permitted, the decision of Griffiths J. is that the purchasers thereunder would have the right to partial discharges of the mortgage notwithstanding that it was a mortgage for a closed term of 20 years. He emphasized that his decision was restricted and that there remained the issues to be determined at trial of what was the agreement between the parties and the effect thereof as to whether there could be any sale of the condominium units. Until that is determined, the defendants have the use of the mortgage funds. It seems to me that until that is determined, the mortgagees should be entitled to receive the monthly payments. When the defendant mortgagor has the use of the monies, it seems to me that the balance of convenience pending the outcome of their action is that they should be making the payments under the mortgage to which they had agreed. If the court in that action were to hold that, not only the purchasers of the condominium units had the right to partial discharges at the time of purchase, but that also the defendant mortgagor herein had the right to discharge the mortgage at any time because of the plaintiff's refusal to execute the consent to the condominium declaration, it would still be possible for the court to rule that any payments on the mortgage in the interim should be allocated to principal rather than to interest.

7 Smith J. was of the opinion that when the plaintiff had other means of enforcing its security, it should not ask the court to exercise its equitable jurisdiction in the appointment of a receiver. He ignored the fact that the taking of those measures would give to the defendant success in the very issue that was before the court, namely the right to pre-pay a closed mortgage whatever might have been the agreement between the parties.

8 I recognize that one is slow to grant relief from the exercise of discretion, especially when the judge who has ever that discretion has considered all the matters incised detail. However, it seems to me he erred in applying the stringent test of a Mareva injunction in the circumstances herein. There will be an order granting leave to appeal to the Divisional Court. The costs of this motion will be costs in the appeal.

Re Manton and York Condominium Corp. No. 461

49 O.R. (2d) 83

ONTARIO
 COUNTY COURT
 JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF YORK
 HOILETT CO. CT. J.

11TH DECEMBER 1984.

The applicant acquired title to a condominium unit in the respondent's condominium building in 1979. After she obtained possession, water penetrated her unit from the common elements as a result of a structural defect. This caused damage to the applicant's property. Upon failure of the respondent to repair, the applicant brought an application for an order directing the respondent to repair and claiming damages.

(1) The respondent had no duty to repair since s. 41(2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, imposes an obligation to repair after damage only and no damage had occurred to the building. However, under the obligation to maintain prescribed by s. 41(3), the respondent was liable to correct a structural defect to the common elements. Moreover, an affirmative vote of the owners of 80% of the units provided for under s. 38 in respect of substantial additions, alterations, improvements and renovations, was not required in respect of such maintenance.

(2) A claim for damages should not be entertained on a summary application.

APPLICATION for an order directing the respondent condominium corporation to carry out its duty to repair and maintain the common elements and a claim for compensation.

Jonathan H. Fine, for applicant.

K. Michael McLoughlin, for respondent.

HOILETT CO. CT. J.:— This is an application for an order directing the respondent condominium corporation to discharge its alleged responsibility to maintain and repair the common elements in order to stem the flow of water penetrating into the applicant's unit. Further, there is a claim for compensation arising from the loss suffered by the applicant as a result of water damage to her belongings.

The essential facts are not in dispute but for a better appreciation of the issues raised the following brief summary is in order.

The applicant is the owner of Unit 8, Level 1, York Condominium No. 461. Although the applicant formally acquired title to the unit in June, 1979, she has been in occupation since September, 1978. During the winter of 1978-79 and during every subsequent winter, water has penetrated into the applicant's condominium unit. The degree of water penetration has been more than a matter of inconvenience. It has been a source of embarrassment to the applicant and her guests. Christmas presents have been damaged, walls and carpets, among other things, have been damaged; indeed, carpets have been replaced on at least two occasions.

There is little, if anything, to be gained from chronicling in ponderous detail all the overtures the applicant has made in her efforts to have the problem resolved. It is sufficient to say that from the fall of 1978 up to the time that these proceedings were commenced the applicant has been diligent in her efforts to have the problem resolved. During that period of time she has communicated with, among others, George Wimpey Canada Ltd., the original builders; the respondent; the New Home Warranty Program. Exhibit 4 on this application is a five-page record of the correspondence undertaken by the applicant with various parties and related correspondence between the interested parties.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, York Condominium Corporation No. 461 was created on February 23, 1979, upon the registration in the Land Registry Office for the Land Titles Division of Metropolitan Toronto (No. 66) of the declaration, made pursuant to the Condominium Act, and upon the registration of the description: see exs. 1 and 2 on this application.

Article 8 of the declaration provides that:

The Corporation shall repair the common elements after damage and maintain all the common elements except for certain maintenance of exclusive use portions as set out in Schedule "F". Each owner shall repair his unit after damage and maintain his unit.

(Exhibit 1)

Schedule "C" to the declaration, the full text of which schedule is reproduced following, defines the vertical and horizontal boundaries of a unit.

SCHEDULE "C"

BOUNDARIES OF UNITS

The Vertical Boundaries of a Unit are:

The unit-side face of drywall of all exterior walls and walls dividing one unit from another, or units from corridors, elevator shafts, stairways or mechanical equipment spaces and the plane thereof across openings for windows and doors.

The Horizontal Boundaries of a Unit are:

The upper face of concrete floor slab to the upper face of plaster coating in the ceiling, or upper face of plaster coating of suspended ceiling on Levels 1 and 15. In the vicinity of the bulkhead, the unit boundary is the backside face of drywall furring.

Notwithstanding the foregoing,

(i) all exterior doors, door frames and window frames (except for the exterior finished surfaces thereof) and all windows (except for the exterior surfaces thereof) and, notwithstanding that they may be located exterior of the unit-side face of drywall, all bathroom, washroom, kitchen and laundry fans and venting and all floor level filters form part of the Unit; and

(ii) the main entry electrical distribution panel, excepting domestic line fuses and/or circuit breakers, all columns, mechanical shafts and vertical fan coils are excluded from the Unit.

The vertical and horizontal boundaries are shown on Part 1 and Part 2 of the Description.

It is common ground that that which does not fall within the definition of a "unit" forms part of the "common elements". It has not been argued before me that the source of the problem is other than in the common elements and the material filed does not, in my view, warrant any conclusion other than that the problem is one originating in the common elements. Although the source of the problem has not been precisely isolated, it appears from all the circumstances (and submissions have been predicated on that assumption) that the cause of the water penetration problem is a structural defect. In any event, that fact is presumed for the purposes of my reasons.

The cardinal issue, simply put, is: who, if anyone, as between the applicant and the respondent is responsible for rectifying the problem?

The following provisions of the Condominium Act bear on the issue.

Section 49, pursuant to which this application is brought provides:

49(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

The following are some of the relevant provisions dealing directly with rights and duties:

Section 12(1) sets out the objects of the corporation as being "to manage the property and any assets of the corporation", and s. 12(2) provides that:

12(2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

Subsections (3), (4) and (5) provide as follows:

12(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(4) The declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects, responsibilities and duties.

(5) Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Section 36 of the Act defines and provides for a reserve fund:

36(1) In this Act and the regulations, the declaration, by-laws and financial statements prepared in accordance with this Act, the declaration or by-laws, "reserve fund" means a fund set up by the corporation in a special account for major repair and replacement of common elements and assets of the corporation including where applicable without limiting the generality of the foregoing, roofs, exteriors of buildings, roads, sidewalks, sewers, heating, electrical and plumbing systems, elevators, laundry, recreational and parking facilities.

(2) The corporation shall establish and maintain one or more reserve funds and shall collect from the owners, as part of their contribution towards common expenses, amounts that, calculated on the basis of expected repair and replacement costs and life expectancy of things comprising the common elements and the assets of the corporation, are reasonably expected to provide sufficient funds for major repair and replacement of common elements and assets of the corporation, but in no event shall the contribution to the reserve funds be less than 5 per cent of the amount required for contributions to the common expenses exclusive of the reserve fund.

Subsection (3) provides that as of June 1, 1982, the amount of contribution to the reserve fund provided for in s-s. (2) shall be no less than 10%. Subsection (4) provides that any fund used for the purposes set out in s-s. (1) shall be deemed to be a "reserve fund" whether or not it is so designated. Subsection (5) prohibits the use of the reserve fund for any purpose other than that provided for in s-s. (1), and s-s. (6) provides that the reserve fund shall constitute an asset of the corporation and shall not be distributed to any owner except on termination of the corporation.

Section 41 of the Act imposes a positive obligation on the corporation to repair and maintain. Subsections (1) through (6) provide:

41(1) For the purposes of this Act, the obligation to repair after damage and to maintain are mutually exclusive, and the obligation to repair after damage does not include the repair of improvements made to units after registration of the declaration and description.

(2) Subject to section 42, the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage.

[Section 42 sets out the procedure to be followed by the corporation where damage to the building occurs.]

(3) The corporation shall maintain the common elements.

(4) Each owner shall maintain his unit.

Subsection (5) provides that the declaration may make provisions other than those provided for in s-ss. (2), (3) and (4), and s-s. (6) provides that:

41(6) The corporation shall make any repairs that an owner is obligated to make and that he does not make within a reasonable time.

Stated briefly, it is the applicant's position that the respondent is obliged under the provisions of the Condominium Act to effect the repairs necessary to stop the water penetration into the applicant's unit. Granted that the defect in question is, or may be, a structural one, the obligation of the respondent is no less clear inasmuch as the terms "repair" and "maintenance" are wide enough to encompass the circumstances of the instant application. It is further argued that the language of s. 49 of the Act is broad enough to clothe the court with sufficient authority to make an award of pecuniary damages to the applicant for the loss she has suffered.

Briefly summarized, the respondent has argued that there is no "damage" within the meaning of the Act; accordingly, there is no obligation on the respondent to "repair after damage" pursuant to either the Act or the declaration. Further, the obligation to maintain can only arise where there has been a deterioration from an original state of good repair. In other words the obligation to "maintain" does not import a duty to correct an inherent structural defect as appears in the present set of circumstances. As far as the question of damages is concerned for the loss suffered by the applicant it has been argued that the language of s. 49 of the Act does not vest such an authority in the court; in any event, to make such an award would be to prejudice rights that would be available to the respondent in a regular civil suit for damages.

I turn first to the question of what, if any, is the obligation of the respondent in the present set of circumstances. As I have intimated earlier the only reasonable conclusion based on all the material filed and the submissions made, is that the problem in question relates to the "common elements" and as between the applicant and the respondent, the obligation to repair or maintain, if any, must be the respondent's. I have no difficulty in concluding that in the present set of circumstances it cannot be said that there is any obligation falling on the respondent by virtue of its duty to "repair after damage". I find support for that conclusion in the judgment of Hollingworth J. in Dyer v. York Condominium Corp. No. 274 (1980), 14 R.P.R. 154 at p. 157, where it was held that "repair after damage" contemplated damage from some act of God, for example, some storm or tempest. I have no reason to believe that Hollingworth J. intended to exclude damage from other causes and it is not my intent so to do.

It remains to be determined therefore whether the obligation to "maintain" is broad enough to include the obligation to correct a structural defect.

It is my opinion that it does. I find support for that conclusion in the recent decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal reported as York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 337, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 660, 29 R.P.R. 86. The issue raised in that case was, if not identical to the one raised in the present case, quite similar. The relevant facts were that the applicant and respondent occupied adjacent buildings and shared a number of joint facilities -- the one of particular interest being a swimming-pool. The declarations of both the applicant and respondent corporations were the same. Paragraph 14(a) of the declaration provided for, among other things, the sharing of certain costs of "maintenance and repair" in proportion provided for in a prescribed formula. The respondent effected certain repairs to the swimming-pool and at trial recovered judgment against the appellant for one-half the costs of repairs which the Court of Appeal held to be a structural defect. In rejecting the appellant's argument that the obligation to "repair" and "maintain" did not extend to structural defects the Court made the following observation at p. 340:

I cannot accept this contention. It seeks to impose on the newly-created concept of condominium ownership obligations for repairs that evolved over many years from a completely different relationship. Condominium ownership contemplates a continuous relationship whereas the landlord-and-tenant relationship exists only for the term of the lease. The relationship between condominium owners in a condominium building is a relatively new creation of statute whereas, to a great extent, landlord-and-tenant relations have been defined by the common law.

Cory J.A., speaking for the Court, commented on the quality of mutuality, characteristic of the condominium concept and continued at p. 341:

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

Referring to The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary's definitions of "repair" and "maintain" which follow:

"repair" -- to restore to good condition renewal or replacement of decayed or damaged parts or by refixing what has given way; to mend;

"maintain" -- to keep in repair;

Cory J.A. continued:

There is nothing in these definitions that would restrict or narrow their meaning as contended by the appellant.

In support of its conclusion the Court cited the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Canadian Pacific R. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1914), 49 S.C.R. 525, 20 D.L.R. 56, 17 C.R.C. 300, in which the word "maintain" was interpreted to be wide enough to include the reconstruction of a bridge so that it could service an increased flow of traffic. The Court expressly rejects the argument that a structural defect was beyond the scope of maintenance. Similarly it rejected the view that the obligation was altered simply because there may be remedies available against the builder. The Court stated its conclusions in the following terms [at p. 342]:

The fact that the repairs are made necessary by structural defects should not and does not on the facts of this case vary this conclusion. Nor should the possibility of a claim against the builder be a factor.

It is clear from a reading of the relevant provisions of the Condominium Act that the condominium corporation is vested with considerable authority and fixed with certain responsibilities. Correspondingly, it is provided with the wherewithal to discharge those responsibilities. By way of example only is the s. 36 provision for a "reserve fund" which clearly contemplates substantial undertakings when necessary. That the provisions of the Act should be liberally construed is clear from York Condominium No. 59 v. York Condominium No. 87, supra. It is my view that the principles enunciated and the approach adopted in that case should be applied to the instant application. Accordingly, the relief sought in the first paragraph of the notice of motion will be granted. I have considered also the following unreported case: Re Ronita Properties Ltd. and York Condominium Corp. No. 320, January 28, 1981, Cornish Co. Ct. J. [summarized 9 A.C.W.S. (2d) 98].

In order to make my order as practicable of enforcement as possible I am prepared to meet with counsel to work out the particular form of the order. At the same time I will hear representations on costs in the event that there is any view that costs should not follow the event.

Given the summary nature of these proceedings, I am not satisfied that this has been the most appropriate forum for dealing with the question of damages sustained by the applicant with respect to her property. I, therefore, without commenting on its merits, dismiss that aspect of the motion without prejudice to the applicant's rights in that regard.

Inasmuch as the issue was raised in argument concerning the applicability of ss. 38 and 42 to these proceedings, I feel constrained to comment upon the point. For ease of understanding I reproduce, following, the relevant sections:

38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

42(1) Where damage to the building occurs, the board shall determine within thirty days of the occurrence whether there has been substantial damage to 25 per cent of the buildings.

(2) Where there has been a determination that there has been substantial damage to 25 per cent of the buildings, the corporation shall repair within a reasonable time, unless, within sixty days after the determination made under subsection (1), by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units, the owners vote for termination.

Dealing with the sections in reverse order, I find that s. 42 has application "where damage occurs", which is not the case before me.

Section 38 deals with "modifications of common elements and assets" and speaks of "substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of ... ". In my view, it would be straining the language of the section to apply it to the instant set of circumstances particularly given the structure of the Act which makes clear distinctions between "repair after damage", "maintenance" and "substantial alterations", etc.

Application granted in part

ONTARIO
COURT OF APPEAL
BROOKE, LACOURCIERE
AND CORY J.J.A.

28TH JUNE 1983.

The appellant and respondent were two condominium corporations which were part of a total development scheme. They shared certain common elements and were obligated by their respective declarations to repair them as necessary. The roof of the swimming-pool, a common element, developed a leak as a result of a structural defect. When the appellant refused to have it repaired, the respondent did so and recovered judgment from the appellant for half of the costs. On appeal, held, the appeal should be dismissed.

The obligation to repair under the declarations should not be construed in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, a number of matters should be taken into consideration, including the parties' relationship, their contractual obligations, the nature of the development, the nature of the repairs and the benefit of all parties. In the circumstances, the fact that the repairs were necessitated by structural defects and that there was a possibility of a claim against the builder did not exonerate the appellant from contributing to the cost of the repairs.

APPEAL from a judgment requiring the appellant to pay one-half the costs of certain repairs to common elements of the parties' condominiums.

Charles B. Cohen, Q.C., for appellant.

John S. McKeown, for respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

CORY J.A.:— The parties to this action are condominium corporations. The respondent recovered from the appellant a judgment requiring the appellant to pay one-half the costs of the repairs of the roof of a pool used by the members of both condominiums.

Factual background

Both the condominium buildings were originally owned by Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited. The two structures are part of a total development scheme. The respondent York Condominium Corporation No. 59 was established by registration of its declaration and description on November 30, 1971, pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77. The declaration and description for the appellant York Condominium Corporation No. 87 were registered eight months later on August 3, 1972.

The two condominium complexes are adjacent to each other. They share a common driveway and the use of certain common elements. In para. 14(a) of the declarations for each of the corporations a reference is made to a swimming-pool and a swimming-pool area. The pool is constructed underground and abuts the building of Corporation No. 59. There is a joint committee composed of the boards of directors of both corporations which determines the rules and regulations and the financial matters including the contributions to be made for the joint use of the pool and adjacent recreational facilities.

The declarations of both corporations are the same. The pertinent paragraph in the declaration of the appellant corporation reads as follows:

14(a) The occupants from time to time of this Condominium shall have the right of access and shall have the right to pass over, use and traverse those portions of the common elements of the York Condominium Corporation No. 59 which will be described in the transfers to each of the members of this Condominium in order to allow the occupants of this Condominium to have the full use and enjoyment of the swimming pool, swimming pool area and adjoining patio, the respective male or female changing rooms, Japanese garden and putting green and surrounding area all located on the property of York Condominium Corporation No. 59 ... The occupants of this Condominium and of York Condominium Corporation No. 59 shall be responsible for the maintenance and repair of the access routes and recreational facilities mentioned herein including the pumps and pipes and other equipments serving the swimming pool and changing rooms. Decisions for the maintenance and repair of the above access routes and recreational facilities shall be determined by the joint committee of the Board of Directors of this Condominium and of York Condominium Corporation No. 59. The cost of such maintenance and repair shall be borne by each Condominium in the same ratio as the number of units in this Condominium or York Condominium Corporation No. 59 bears to the total number of units in both this Condominium and York Condominium Corporation No. 59.

The description of the appellant corporation also provided a right of access to the recreational area of the lands, including the pool, located on the respondent's property. As well, the description of the respondent corporation was made subject to the right of the use and enjoyment of these areas by the owners in the appellant corporation.

In 1971, the pool was in good condition and remained problem-free until the fall of 1975. At that time, the roof above the pool began to leak.

For the purposes of this appeal, it will be assumed that the leak was caused by a structural defect. When the respondent's building was constructed there were certain omissions made by the contractor which led to the roof leaking in 1975. The parties could not agree as to how the repairs would be paid for. Eventually, the respondent proceeded with the repairs and brought action against the appellant to recover half of the costs. By judgment dated December 2, 1981, the respondent recovered the amount it claimed for one-half of the repairs.

The appellant's position

The appellant takes the position that it should not be required to contribute to the cost of these repairs for they were caused by a structural defect and not by wear and tear. It was very ably argued that the terms "maintenance" and "repair" should be interpreted in the same manner as they had been in some landlord-and-tenant cases. It was said that defects in construction on the one hand and maintenance required as a result of wear and tear on the other should be treated as separate matters. It was argued that a liability to repair or maintain does not include a responsibility to correct structural defects. Reliance was placed on Sevenoaks, Maidstone, & Tunbridge R. Co. v. London, Chatham, & Dover R. Co. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 625, and Proudfoot v. Hart (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 42.

I cannot accept this contention. It seeks to impose on the newly-created concept of condominium ownership obligations for repairs that evolved over many years from a completely different relationship. Condominium ownership contemplates a continuous relationship whereas the landlord-and-tenant relationship exists only for the term of the lease. The relationship between condominium owners in a condominium building is a relatively new creation of statute whereas, to a great extent, landlord-and-tenant relations have been defined by the common law. In any event, it is interesting to observe that recent English decisions have indicated that the question of liability to repair in landlord-and-tenant cases should be approached on a broad basis taking into account many factors pertaining to the relationship of the parties: see Ravenseft Properties Ltd. v. Davstone (Holdings) Ltd., [1979] 1 All E.R. 929.

The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, in s. 1(1)(h) defines "common expenses" as meaning:

(h) ... the expenses of the performance of the objects and duties of a corporation and any expenses specified as common expenses in this Act or in a declaration;

By s. 3(1)(d) of the same Act, a declaration must contain:

(d) a statement, expressed in percentages allocated to the units, of the proportions in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses;

By s. 3(3), a declaration may contain:

- (a) a specification of common expenses;
- (b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of ... common elements;

.....

(e) a specification of any allocation of the obligations to repair and to maintain the ... common elements.

There is thus now, as there was in 1972, a statutory basis for the declaration to provide what are the common expenses, the occupation of common elements and an allocation of the obligation to repair them. This is just what the declarations in question did in this case. As well, s. 41 of the Act imposes upon corporations an obligation to repair after damage and to maintain common elements.

As far as possible and with due regard for the particular mutual covenants of the individual owners the courts should bring a broad and equitable approach to the resolution of their problems.

Although this case does not deal with individual condominium owners within a single condominium, it is concerned with the relationship between two condominium corporations which form integral parts of a composite plan for condominium living. The development plan contemplated the mutual enjoyment and use of the pool by the occupants of both condominium corporations. The mutual enjoyment of a facility calls for a mutual obligation of repair.

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

The declarations of the parties make reference to the "maintenance" and "repair" of the recreational facility. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines these words in part as follows:

"repair" -- to restore to good condition renewal or replacement of decayed or damaged parts or by refixing what has given way; to mend;

"maintain" -- to keep in repair;

There is nothing in these definitions that would restrict or narrow their meaning as contended by the appellant. Rather, giving these words their ordinary meaning, they are quite sufficient to encompass the repairs required to the roof of the pool. There is no reason why the appellant should not be obligated to pay its share for the "renewal or replacement of the decayed or damaged parts".

I am strengthened in this position by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Canadian Pacific R. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1914), 49 S.C.R. 525, 20 D.L.R. 56, 17 C.R.C. 300. In that case consideration was given to the word "maintain" which appeared in a contract between the parties. It was decided that in construing the word regard should be had to the relationship between the parties and the scope and nature of their agreement. As a result, the word was held to be extensive enough to include the reconstruction of a bridge so that it could service an increased flow of traffic.

In this case, the plain meaning of the words used in the clause, the relationship of the parties and the nature of the facility in question all lead to the conclusion that the appellants should pay their proportionate share of the cost of the repairs to the roof. The fact that the repairs are made necessary by structural defects should not and does not on the facts of this case vary this conclusion. Nor should the possibility of a claim against the builder be a factor. The liability of the appellant to contribute to the repairs arises from its contractual obligation to the respondent. If an action is to be brought against the builder, it should be as a result of a decision of the joint board of directors. If such an action is launched and brought to a successful conclusion, any recovery would benefit both these parties.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RE PINETREE DEVELOPMENT CO. LTD. AND MINISTER OF HOUSING FOR THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO ET AL.,

(1976) 14 O.R. (2d) 687 ONTARIO (Div. Ct.) 1976 Condominium -- Regional development charge levies as condition of condominium approval -- Regional municipalities empowered to enter into agreements relating to condominiums -- Minister may impose condition requiring owner to agree in writing to satisfy all financial requirements of municipality with respect to provision of roads, services and drainage -- Developer already entering into subdivision agreement and paying levies for external services -- No justification for additional financial levies -- Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, s. 24(2) -- Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, s. 33. This was an application for an order that the respondents were not lawfully entitled to require the applicant to pay regional development charge levies of the municipality as a condition of condominium approval. It was conceded by all parties that the application related to the powers of the Minister under s. 24(2) of the Condominium Act and that for the purpose of the argument it was accepted that the Minister had power under s. 33 of the Planning Act to impose proper financial conditions of the region relating to plans of subdivision. The developer had developed a plan and entered into a subdivision agreement with the former Township of Pickering under which all the municipal services required by that municipality had been paid for. Thereafter, he wished to convert the development into a condominium development. The regional municipality, the successor of the Township of Pickering, required the payment of further levies for external services. HELD: A declaration was issued that (1) the Minister had general power to require the payment of proper regional development charge levies of the Regional Municipality as a condition of condominium approval; (2) in the present case the applicant was not obligated to pay the levies proposed by the Regional Municipality relating to this condominium proposal. The application was remitted to the Minister of Housing for further consideration in the light of these declarations.

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Bauman J. (In Chambers) Heard: October 28, 1996. Judgment: filed November 27, 1996.

Counsel: Peter J. Reardon, for the petitioner. Patrick A. Williams and Ms. P. Taylor, for the respondents.

BAUMAN J.:--

I. Introduction

[para1] These applications raise a neat point: what are properly included as "common expenses" of a strata corporation for the purposes of the statutory priority accorded by s. 37(2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61?

[para2] In answering this question, the court is called upon to apply one binding authority and to distinguish, if intellectually possible, another. Alternatively, in respect of the latter, I am invited to decline to follow it on the basis set out by Wilson J. in Re Hansard Spruce Mills Ltd., (1954), 13 W.W.R. (N.S.) 285 (B.C.S.C.).

II. The Facts

[para3] The applications involve four strata lots in Strata Plan VR2690. The petitioning bank is foreclosing on mortgages against each. The strata corporation has purported to levy various charges against each of the strata lots under s. 37(1) of the Condominium Act, which provides:

37.(1) Where an owner defaults in the payment of his share of the common expenses, the strata corporation may register in the land title office a certificate in Form B showing the amount owing and the legal description of the strata lot of that owner.

[para4] The charges are similar for each lot and I will, therefore, only reproduce those levied against Strata Lot 66:

Juert (Strata Lot 66):

Maintenance Fees $ 1,633.87 Late Payment Penalties 1,525.00 Plumbing Levy 3,486.47 Deficit Levy 259.89 Structural Repairs Levy 445.08 Legal Fees Levy 74.18 Roof Levy 3,434.53 Sump Pump Levy 482.17 Second Legal Fees Levy 148.36 Filing Lien 129.27 Total $11,619.32

[para5] The levies may be classified for the purposes of analysis, in this way:

Maintenance Levies: maintenance fees and filing lien fees

Fine Levies: late payment penalties

Legal Levies: legal fees

Repair Levies: plumbing levy, deficit levy, structural repairs levy, roof levy, sump pump levy

[para6] The building within Strata Plan VR2690 is relatively old. It was recently converted to strata lots under the Condominium Act. The developer allegedly did a poor job of upgrading it for conversion and this has led to litigation at the suit of the strata corporation under s. 15 of the Condominium Act. This, in turn, has led to the incurrence of legal fees and the resultant Legal Levies.

[para7] The Repair Levies arise because of the need to repair critical portions of the common property.

[para8] The Fine Levies have been imposed under s. 34(2)(c) of the Condominium Act.

[para9] The Maintenance Levies have been authorized under s. 128(10) of the legislation. It provides:

128.(10) At each annual general meeting subsequent to the first annual general meeting, the strata corporation shall prepare an annual budget for the following 12 month period and, after that, all owners shall, subject to subsections (2) and (3), pay a monthly assessment in accordance with their unit entitlement.

[para10] The petitioner does not take issue with the priority given to the Maintenance Levies. It is acknowledged that these enjoy priority under s. 37. [para11] The petitioner, however, challenges the priority claimed in respect of the Fine Levies, Legal Levies and Repair Levies.

III. The Law

[para12] S. 37 of the Condominium Act should be set out more fully:

37.(1) Where an owner defaults in the payment of his share of the common expenses, the strata corporation may register in the land title office a certificate in Form B showing the amount owing and the legal description of the strata lot of that owner.

(2) A certificate noted in the register is, except as provided in subsection (6), a charge for the amount owing in favour of the strata corporation, in priority to every other lien or charge of whatever kind except those under the Builders Lien Act, and those of the Crown, other than mortgages in favour of the Crown.

(7) In this section "common expenses" includes the contribution levied under section 35, and the amounts, if any, added to the levy under section 34(3).

(8) A strata corporation may add the land title fee and the legal and administrative costs of filing under subsection (1) or (5) and the legal costs of a proceeding under subsection (3) to the amount owing by the owner to the strata corporation.

[para13] I can deal quickly with the priority claimed for the Fine Levies. It cannot prevail. This very issue was before the court in National Life Assurance Co. of Canada v. Vidalin Construction Ltd. (1985), 64 B.C.L.R. 319 (S.C.).

[para14] There, McKenzie J. (as he then was) held at p. 325:

As for the penalties imposed by the strata corporation for successive non-payments of the common expenses, I do not find them to be in the same category. The fines started with $25 for the first failure to pay, then rose through $50, $75 to $100 for each successive default. The authority to impose the fines was given by the by-laws of the strata corporation. I hold that the only items that may be incorporated in the certificate, apart from common expenses, are those listed in s. 37(8), and that list does not include penalty charges or fines. That item is conspicuous by its absence from s. 37(8).

[para15] The same fate befalls the Legal Levies. The litigation is authorized by s. 15 of the legislation. In my opinion, the reasoning of the court in National Life Assurance applies to these levies, although I note, of course, that MacKenzie J. was not there actually dealing with levies of this sort.

[para16] That brings us to the Repair Levies. They present a more difficult issue. I will begin by setting out the legislative scheme more fully.

[para17] The strata corporation has certain essential duties under the Act to maintain common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation. These are fundamental duties, and, I perceive, their execution by the strata corporation is critical to the realization of the condominium concept - that is people living together in individually owned units within a common shell. The mix of personal fee simple title and co-operative living necessitates a vehicle by which maintenance and repairs of the common property will be undertaken and payment shared and forthcoming from the individual owners. The vehicle created by the Act is, of course, the strata corporation.

[para18] S. 34(1)(d) of the Act imposes this imperative duty on the strata corporation:

34.(1) The strata corporation shall (d) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation.

[para19] Similarly, s. 116 is a statutory by-law for the strata corporation. It provides in part:

116. The strata corporation shall (b) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the fixtures and fittings, including the elevators, swimming pool and recreational facilities, if any, and other apparatus and equipment used in connection with the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation; (c) maintain all common areas, both internal and external, including lawns, gardens, parking and storage areas, public halls and lobbies; (d) maintain and repair, including renewal where reasonably necessary, pipes, wires, cables, chutes and ducts for the time being existing in the parcel and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of more than one strata lot or common property;

(f) maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a strata lot, including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings.

[para20] The strata corporation in the case before me has recognized its statutory and by-law duties to repair the common property. It has undertaken necessary repairs after first being authorized to do so by special resolution. In doing so, it has obviously preserved and enhanced the bank's security.

[para21] In my view, it would not be conducive to the realization of the objects of the legislation if the strata corporation did not enjoy a privileged position with respect to expenditures it has made in meeting its duties to repair and maintain the common property. It is similarly important that the strata corporation be able to recover unpaid assessments from strata lot owners. Carrothers J.A., in Strata Corp. VR149 v. Berezowsky (1986), 5 B.C.L.R. (2d) 316 (C.A.) stated:

The remedial provisions in the Act for recovery of unpaid assessments are essential and indispensable to the effective maintenance and operation of the entire strata plan ...

[para22] I say this assuming that any such expenditures are lawfully made for a proper purpose and are authorized in accordance with the Act.

[para23] The petitioner, however, resists the strata corporation's claim to priority in respect of the Repair Levies. It does so on this basis: the Repair Levies were not contemplated by the annual budget under s. 128(10), nor were they created to top up the contingency reserve fund under s. 35(1)(b) and (d) of the Act. Accordingly, they do not come within a definition of "common expenses" in s. 37(7) and priority in respect thereof may not be maintained.

[para24] This submission requires the statement of a few more facts. First, the Repair Levies, indeed, were not contemplated by the strata corporation's annual budget under s. 128(10). I presume that this is so because they arose unexpectedly during the year, between budgets. Second, these levies were not intended to top up the contingency reserve fund. Subsections 35(1)(b) and (d) provide:

35.(1) The strata corporation shall (b) establish a contingency reserve fund not exceeding an amount calculated in the manner fixed by regulation and determine the annual levy for the contingency reserve fund; and the levy shall, if the amount of the reserve is less than 25% of the total annual budget of the strata corporation, be not less than 5% of that budget; and the strata corporation shall hold the fund as a reserve fund to pay unusual or extraordinary future expenses;

(d) raise the amounts so determined by levying contributions on the owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their respective strata lots in the manner provided for in the bylaws.

[para25] The legislation therefore contemplates a reserve fund being established for extraordinary future expenses and it permits the levying of contributions on the individual owners. S. 35(2) then permits the strata corporation to make expenditures out of the contingency reserve when necessary to meet extraordinary expenses, as they are realized.

[para26] This leads to the final fact. The expenditures represented by the Repair Levies were not made out of the contingency reserve fund. I assume, in the circumstances, that there was simply not sufficient monies for the needed repairs.

[para27] It should be noted that the bank does not question the validity of the Repair Levies. While not contemplated by the annual budget and not apparently paid out of the contingency reserve fund, they were authorized by special resolution under s. 49 of the Act, which provides:

49. Unless otherwise provided by a bylaw added to Part 5, a strata council shall not, except in emergencies, authorize, without authorization by a special resolution of the strata corporation, an expenditure exceeding $500 which was not set out in the annual budget of the corporation and approved by the owners at a general meeting.

[para28] An expenditure for repairs and maintenance in this manner has been implicitly approved in Vold v. Strata Corp. No. 202 (1993), 31 R.P.R. (2d) 129 (B.C.S.C.) at 136.

[para29] This brings us to the principal obstacle facing the strata corporation in its claim to priority in respect of the Repair Levies -- it is the decision of Master Donaldson in Royal Bank of Canada v. Chan, [1995] B.C.J. No. 2786 (5 June 1995), Vancouver H940572, (B.C.S.C.). There the court was considering (inter alia) priority under s. 37(2) for special levies made by the strata corporation. Only one of the special levies is identified in the reasons, that levied to retire a second mortgage.

[para30] The levies arose, like here, by special resolution and not out of the annual budget. Master Donaldson held:

While it may be that had these amounts been determined at the time of the making of the fund as is contemplated by s. 35(1)(a) and (b), then it may well be that those particular amounts, that is to say for the special levies and for the payment out of the second mortgage, might well have been payable to the strata corporation in priority to the mortgage. It is my understanding, however, that they were not and that these special levies, although by special resolution were made throughout the year and not at the time of the annual budget. So I am satisfied that they are not in priority to the claim of the bank and so the only sums which are in priority are for the monthly maintenance fees and has been agreed by counsel -- is it the $248.82 or is it the $200 legal fee? (3-4, para 8)

[para31] I will deal with the threshold point. In argument, counsel for the petitioner submitted that, properly construed, s. 37(7) restricts "common expenses" to only those levied under s. 35 and s. 34(3).

[para32] That would mean that "common expenses" for the purposes of the priority only include:

- Levies for the Contingency Reserve Fund (s. 35(1)(b)); - Levies for the Administrative Expense Fund (s. 35(1)(a)); - Levies to carry out repairs required by competent public authority on a strata lot (s. 34(2)(a)); - Levies to obtain and maintain insurance under s. 54 (s. 34(2)(b)).

[para33] I reject this submission. It overlooks, for one, common property maintenance expenses levied under s. 128(10) as part of the annual budget. There is no doubt that these enjoy the s. 37(2) priority: Chan, supra and National Life Assurance, supra at 325.

[para34] I prefer the analysis of s. 37(7) advanced by the respondent strata corporation.

[para35] S. 37(7) provides an inclusive, not exclusive, definition of "common expenses". It expressly includes levies under s. 35 and s. 34(3) because these would not normally be considered "common expenses": the former because they are not expenses, but rather, reserves; the latter because they are, in the case of s. 34(2)(a), expenses referable to a strata lot, not to the common property, and in the case of s. 34(2)(b) expenses in respect of insurance.

[para36] Does Chan preclude me from finding that the Repair Levies, having been properly authorized and expended pursuant to a statutory duty imposed on the strata corporation, enjoy the s. 37(2) priority?

[para37] Chan, in part, concerned a special levy to retire a second mortgage. The learned Master suggested that such an expenditure might be authorized by s. 35(1)(a) or (b). In Chan it was not so authorized and the claim to priority failed. All Chan is saying with respect to that particular levy is that it could only qualify as a "common expense" under s. 37 if it could be characterized as arising within the extended definition of that phrase in s. 37(7).

[para38] One can appreciate the likely concern of the court in Chan, that to accord priority for this particular levy would have the curious result of effectively granting priority for the second mortgage over a prior first. That concern does not arise here. These expenditures have preserved and enhanced the bank's security; by enjoying priority they do not steal a march on the bank's mortgage. These expenses have been authorized by special resolution of the strata council. The bank enjoyed the ability to exercise voting rights in respect thereto: Condominium Act, s. 18. These are so-called "democratically" incurred expenses: Strata Corporation VR149 v. Berezowsky (1986), 5 B.C.L.R. (2d) 316 (C.A.).

[para39] If Chan was only concerned with the mortgage retirement levy I could readily distinguish it from the case at bar.

[para40] However, the reasons also refer to other special levies which are not identified. I have reviewed the pleadings in Chan and it is clear that certain of these unidentified levies covered repairs to the common property.

[para41] In the circumstances am I free to depart from Chan in respect of the decision not to accord the repair levies there priority under s. 37?

[para42] Wilson J. in Hansard Spruce Mills stated the principle in frequently quoted words:

Therefore, to epitomize what I have already written in the Cairney case, I say this: I will only go against a judgment of another judge of this court if:

- (a) Subsequent decisions have affected the validity of the impugned judgment;
- (b) It is demonstrated that some binding authority in case law or some relevant statute was not considered;
- (c) The judgment was unconsidered, a nisi prius judgment given in circumstances familiar to all trial judges, where the exigencies of the trial require an immediate decision without opportunity to fully consult authority.

If none of these situations exists I think a trial judge should follow the decisions of his brother judges.

[para43] In my opinion I am free to make a principled departure from Chan on the issue of the Repair Levies. It is clear that the learned Master in Chan was primarily concerned with the levy he expressly identified - that to retire the mortgage. He did not identify the other special levies (I ignore his treatment of the levy for fines and penalties in this discussion).

[para44] Clearly in Chan the Master did not consider the levies for repairs to the common property in the general context of the legislative scheme I have highlighted here and in the particular context of the strata corporation's duty to repair and maintain the common property.

[para45] The judgment in Chan was an oral one and I do not mean in any way to suggest that it was therefore "unconsidered". It remains, however, that the learned Master, in the exigencies of delivering oral reasons, did not have the luxury that I have enjoyed of considering the Repair Levies at length in the detailed context of the statutory scheme.

IV. Conclusion

[para46] In the result, I make an order under Rule 50(9) directing that the proceeds of the sale, still retained in trust by Lang, Michener, Lawrence & Shaw, be disbursed as follows:

- (1) An amount equivalent to the Repair Levies and the Maintenance Levies, to the strata corporation;
- (2) The surplus, if any, to the Royal Bank of Canada in satisfaction of any sums still due under its mortgages;
- (3) The surplus then remaining, if any, to the strata corporation in respect of the Fine Levies and the Legal Levies.

[para47] As the respondent strata corporation has been substantially successful, it shall have its costs on Scale 3.

IN THE MATTER OF the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61 Between Janine Bond, petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan VR2538

[1996] B.C.J. No. 2137, Vancouver Registry No. A933007

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Spencer J. (In Chambers) Heard: October 17, 1996. Judgment: filed November 4, 1996. Real property -- Condominiums -- Corporation -- Oppression or unfair prejudice to owners -- Common property -- Actions respecting.

Counsel: G. Eric Alekseyev, for the petitioner. Jamie A. Bleay, for the respondents.

[para1] SPENCER J.:-- The petitioner renews her application under ss. 40, 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.61, for mandatory injunctions to compel the respondents to enforce the Act and its by-laws pertaining to the creation and release of noise, to prevent it from conducting its affairs in a manner oppressive to her and to restrain it from operating a whirlpool. I was not provided with the by-laws so I proceed only under the Act.

[para2] The petitioner owns a suite above the condominium's exercise room and the jacuzzi. She complains about the noise of the jacuzzi equipment and the voice levels associated with its use, and the smell of chlorine or chloramines which emanate from it. When she bought her suite, the jacuzzi had not been operated for some time but the Strata Council decided to reactivate it after she moved in.

[para3] This petition was dealt with on an interim basis by my brother Braidwood J. on February 23, 1994. He made findings of fact that the noise created by the jacuzzi exceeded the criteria for noise in excess of the background noise level, that the noise together with the noise of the voices of people in the jacuzzi exceeded the maximum acceptable noise level and that there was an offensive odour of chlorine present at some times, although not at others. I understand him to have made the latter finding because he pointed to the difficulty of exhausting the chlorine smell by fans without in turn increasing the noise level. The learned judge declined to make any order and adjourned the matter with recommendations that the respondents take certain steps to try to remedy the causes of the petitioner's complaints. Unfortunately, it has not been possible to bring the matter back to him for a continuation.

[para4] The respondents have taken steps and expended money to try and remedy the problem of noise. The report of Brown Strachan Associates, Acoustic Engineers, dated April 19, 1996, satisfies me that the petitioner's complaints have not been successfully addressed by the remedial measures. That report suggests it is impossible to predict beforehand whether the installation of a sound isolation membrane will solve the problem. The respondents do not offer to do that in any event, but simply propose time locks to restrict the hours of operation of the jacuzzi. No solution has been proposed for the problem of chlorine smell. Restricting the hours of operation will not affect the smell.

[para5] The petitioner's remedy under s. 42 the Condominium Act is limited to s. 42(b). To find oppression under s-s.(a) requires a finding of bad faith: see Esteem Investments Ltd. v. The Owners, Strata Plan No. VR1513, [1987] B.C.J. No. 2505, Vancouver Registry No. A872259, December 22, 1987. I find no bad faith here. Under s-s.(b) the court may prevent "some act of the strata corporation that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more of the owners". In my judgement, an act, as that word is used in the subsection, may include a continuing series of acts by which the corporation operates any of its facilities. It would include the operation of this jacuzzi in a way which is singularly detrimental to one owner's enjoyment of her separate property in the condominium. The provision of s. 116(a) of the Act which empowers the strata corporation to control, manage and administer the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation for the benefit of all the owners does not, in my opinion, give a licence to the corporation to permit one part of its common assets to be operated in a way which unreasonably interferes with the enjoyment of one member's separate property. I emphasize "unreasonably". The finding of Braidwood J. and the evidence of the continuing problem today shows that the interference here is beyond what an individual owner should be required to accept. While time locks on the jacuzzi may limit the problem noises to hours when they are less noticeable, they would leave the chlorine or chloramine smell unaddressed.

[para6] Sterloff v. The Owners and Strata Corporation of Strata Plan No. VR2613, [1994] B.C.J. No. 445, Vancouver Registry No. A934852, March 1, 1994, cited by the respondents, is authority for the proposition that s. 40 of the Act is limited to compelling the corporation to take action to fulfil an obligation, but that it does not extend to directions how that obligation is to be performed. I may not therefore impose directions about further specific sound-proofing of chlorine exhausting measures. Those which have been tried on a voluntary basis have failed to remedy the problem. My option is either to dismiss the petition or to enjoin the use of the jacuzzi under s. 43(a). The evidence shows the petition ought not to be dismissed. I therefore make the mandatory order requested. With some reluctance, because some at least of the other owners, will have bought their condominiums with the prospect of using the jacuzzi and all will have contributed through their assessments to the cost of trying to bring it within acceptable limits, I make the order sought by the petitioner. The respondents are hereby enjoined from operating the jacuzzi in question.

[para7] The petitioner is entitled to her costs.

Barbara Wright, plaintiff, and The Owners, Strata Plan No. 205 A Strata Corporation pursuant to the Condominium Act 1979, c. 61, defendants

[1996] B.C.J. No. 381, Victoria Registry No. 4165/93

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Drake J. Heard: January 29, February 1, 1996. Judgment: filed February 15, 1996. Real property -- Condominiums -- Liability of unit holders -- For common errors -- Repair and maintenance.

Counsel: J. M. Hutchison, Q.C., for the plaintiff. W.M.R. Lambert and G. R. Jackson, for the defendants.

[para1] DRAKE J.:-- This is an action for damages arising out of what is said to be negligent performance by the defendants of their statutory duty to repair and maintain the condominium building in which they live and in which the plaintiff once lived and was the owner of a strata lot.

[para2] The building in question is known as Yorkshire House: it is situated at 935 Fairfield Road in the City of Victoria, and at all material times was managed by Brown Bros. Agencies Ltd.

[para3] In the fall of 1988 the plaintiff purchased her strata lot, Apartment 103 of Yorkshire House, a ground floor apartment on the southeasterly corner of the building. She took possession and moved into her apartment early in November. She had not been there long before she discovered signs that water was seeping in and soaking the carpet in the vicinity of the dining room bay window on the easterly side. This discovery was made about mid-December, and the plaintiff reported it to Mrs. Thomas, a member of the Strata Council which represented the various owners of lots in the building. This was followed up by a letter from her solicitor, dated 14 December 1988, to the Council, making a formal complaint of the leakage and hinting at legal proceedings unless this was remedied by the strata corporation. This letter mentions water damage and even the growth of mushrooms inside Apartment 103.

[para4] Thereafter there was water entry in one location or another during the rainy months of the years 1989, 1990 and 1991, when the plaintiff moved out of her apartment: she eventually sold it, as is, with full disclosure of the water entry, in December of 1992.

[para5] The defence to this claim is that the Council of the defendants took all reasonable steps, in timely fashion, to remedy the defects in the exterior walls and make them watertight. Certainly the Council had a lot of work done: the question is whether or not its efforts were such as would absolve the defendants from liability. This question requires detailed examination.

[para6] The duty of the defendants to maintain the exterior walls of the building is not questioned. It is found in s. 34 and s. 116 of the Condominium Act, R.S. 1979, c. 61; s. 34 imposes a duty on a strata corporation to:

... keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation. Section 116 imposes a duty, by way of by-law, to:

... maintain and repair the exterior of buildings ...

In my opinion, the outer boundary of a strata lot is the centre line of its exterior walls: see Allen v. Proprietors Strata Plan No. 2110 (1970), 2 N.S.W.R. 339. This is a case interpreting the definition of the term "common property" which is found, almost word for word with that in our statute, in the New South Wales condominium legislation.

[para7] This being so, the exterior or outer half of an outside wall is "common property" as contemplated by s. 34 op. cit. The definition of this term in the Condominium Act, set out here for convenience, is found in s. 1 as follows:

"common property" means so much of the land and buildings comprised in a strata plan that is not comprised in a strata lot shown on the strata plan, and includes [here follows a lengthy list of such items as wire, cables, ducts, etc.] where the centre of the ... wall ... forms the common boundary of a strata lot with another strata lot or with common property. (my emphasis)

[para8] The efforts of the defendants to prevent the ingress of water to the plaintiff's apartment are set out in the minutes of Council meetings throughout the years 1988 to 1992 and in a series of estimates and bills from a number of contractors and others who dealt with the problem. The minutes are found in the defendants' book of documents (Exhibit 8) and were acknowledged by Mr. Hutchison to be authentic records of the strata corporation's Council. They were, in addition, identified by the witness Beatrice Marshall, owner of a strata lot in Yorkshire House, who was authorized to give evidence on behalf of the strata corporation. She is a long-time owner of one of its strata lots, and has served on the Council at various times.

[para9] It is of interest to note that water had been coming into Apartment 103 before the plaintiff bought it: as far back as 1984 various curative measures had been taken. Apparently these were thought to have been successful, though it is obvious they were not, at least as a permanent solution to the problem.

[para10] On 1 December 1988 Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. gave an estimate for necessary repairs to the outside walls of the ground floor apartments, 103 and 104, to the managers of the building, Brown Bros. Agencies Ltd. This estimate was before the Council at its meeting on 15 December 1988, and there was a motion "to approve waterproofing the two patios" -- that is, those being parts of Apartments 103 and 104. The minutes have nothing to say as to whether this motion was carried or defeated. However, Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. submitted an account for this work on 28 December 1988, so presumably it was done.

[para11] On 30 December 1988, the plaintiff reported the penetration of water through her eastern exterior wall. She acknowledged that "repairs along the southern wall were initiated", an evident reference to the repair work done on the patio sides of Apartments 103 and 104 to which I have just referred.

[para12] On 5 and 6 January 1989, within a week of the plaintiff's letter reporting penetration of water through her eastern wall, the same contractor removed some siding, investigated the cause of the leakage, and did some caulking and restoration of existing sheeting and flashing.

[para13] All this work was recorded in the minutes of the Council meeting of 19 January 1989, in great detail, thus:

Work on the two patios, Apartment 103 [the plaintiff's] and Apartment 104 has been completed to the satisfaction of the owners. Bills covering the work amounted to $1280.00 for Apt. 103 ...

... During this period [December 1988], as well as the problem with the patio leaking, there was water pouring in through the dining room window and the East wall also proved to be damp from a water problem. Van Isle Waterproofing looked into these trouble areas at the same time as the patio work was being completed. It was recommended that one board be removed from the siding of the East wall and the side of the bay window be caulked. As the work progressed we insisted that more boards be removed and it was found that a metal facing had been put on and the boards removed previously as there were nail holes which had not been caulked and were causing seepage and the building paper was in behind the facing. Van Isle Waterproofing removed all the boards to above the metal facing, recaulked the whole wall and replaced the boards and also caulked the bay window. Since this work has been completed there have been no more problems with water in the apartment [103]. ... All of these problems must have been present before Mrs. Wright bought the apartment but as Council had never been notified we were unaware of any problems. ... (my emphasis) [para14] Thereafter all was well for a time. The minutes of meetings in March and April referred to the work which had been done, and mentioned the carpet "problem" in Apartment 103 -- about which the Council recorded that it had heard no more, so regarded the issue as dead. The plaintiff herself said she did not pursue this matter of water damage to carpet in Apartment 103.

[para15] Further work was done by Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. on the ground floor patio decks of the building in the fall of 1989 and inspected by Mr. Rushforth, P. Eng., of Graeme & Murray Consultants Ltd., civil engineers. Mr. Rushforth in his report of 6 December 1989, made an interesting observation, apparently of general application, when he said:

... Correcting a leak, such as the one found in your building [from a patio], is a difficult problem. The water can appear yards away from where the leak point is. (my emphasis)

[para16] The minutes of the Council meeting of 13 December 1989 record that:

There does not seem to be any water seepage in Apartment 103.

[para17] Work, however, continued, to correct leakage at ground level at Apartments 103 and 104; at a total cost of $2,350.00. By 10 January 1990 it was still ongoing, and Graeme & Murray Consultants Ltd. were still involved. Further expense was incurred, $1,266.50 for engineering fees and $3,065.63 to Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. for its work. These amounts were not final billings.

[para18] The plaintiff says she had no leakage into her apartment in the summer or winter of 1989.

[para19] At the annual general meeting of the strata corporation held on 14 March 1990 a special resolution was passed authorizing Council to spend up to $10,000.00 for waterproofing the exterior of the building; and this work was done by Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd.

[para20] However, the plaintiff experienced extensive leaking of water in the winter months of this year, 1990. It started in November, and she notified the Council. She also consulted a friend, Mr. John Rose, who was in charge of maintenance of the buildings of Camosun College. I found him to be experienced and capable in this field. Mr. Rose cut out a portion of the wallboard low on the easterly wall of Apartment 103, thereby exposing much dampness and mould. He conducted tests with a hose which showed that water passed freely through the outside of the wall at or near this point. Mr. Rose and Mr. Thomson, of Brown Bros. Agencies Ltd. met the plaintiff in her apartment on 29 November 1990 and discussed these findings. Mr. Thomson, throughout the plaintiff's residence in her strata lot, was the official of Brown Bros. Agencies Ltd. who effectively managed the building. [para21] Messrs. Thomson and Rose had various discussions and correspondence as to what was required to remedy the evident defect in the building's easterly wall. Mr. Rose consulted a builder he knew, and made further inspections and evaluations. This is all summarized in Mr. Rose's letter of 24 January 1991 to Mr. Thomson. He concluded this report with the observation:

... it has been my experience that remedial action, such as caulking suspect joints, is typically unsuccessful and usually a short-term solution.

He made certain recommendations, and said he did not think the cost of these would exceed $3,000.00.

[para22] Mr. Rose also cut out samples of dampened carpet and had them analyzed by John MacRae & Associates Inc., Environmental Health Services. These revealed the presence of various fungi and concentrations of a number of different bacteria. The plaintiff paid Mr. MacRae's bill.

[para23] At a special meeting of the Council on 28 May 1991 Mr. Rose was present by invitation. The Council already had Mr. Rose's suggestions as to making the east wall of the building weathertight, previously submitted to Mr. Thomson. There was evidently a lengthy discussion of this matter. On 28 June 1991, Mr. Rose gave an estimate to Mr. Thomson that the work would cost some $24,000.00.

[para24] The Council then obtained a number of estimates from various contractors, and finally settled on Caporale Construction Ltd. to do the work at a cost of $13,886.46. The work would start in mid-August and go on for about two weeks. Mr. Thomson reported to the plaintiff on 1 October 1991 that this work had been completed, and reminded her that repairs to the inside of her east wall were her responsibility.

[para25] Meanwhile, in May the plaintiff had begun to feel unwell. This she attributes to the presence of fungi and bacteria in her apartment. Her doctor could find nothing to which he could attribute a specific cause: but did find that she had developed an asthma-like respiratory condition. It is not unreasonable to suppose that this condition had its origin in the bacteria and fungi among which she was living, for it cleared up after she moved out in June of 1991. [para26] Thereafter for a year or so she visited the apartment from time to time and found work in progress; and, on occasion, damp carpets.

[para27] As I have said, she sold her strata lot in December 1992, on an "as is" basis, without having closed the openings in the wall made by Mr. Rose.

[para28] It was evident that, as time passed in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991, and the plaintiff continued to complain to the Council about the entry of water into her strata lot, that she came to be regarded by some, at least, of its members from time to time as something of a nuisance: she disturbed the peace and repose of the condominium community. But I cannot find that the defendants' conception of their duty to repair under the Condominium Act was affected by this state of affairs, unfortunate and understandable as it was.

[para29] As appears from the record of its proceedings the Council was at all times alive to its repair and maintenance responsibilities; and throughout the period of the plaintiff's ownership of her strata lot took steps to remedy the defects which she drew to its attention. The Council even went so far as to interview and take advice from the plaintiff's friend Mr. Rose as to what should be done. In the end, the work of Van-Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. evidently having been found wanting, the Council sought estimates and had more extensive work done by Caporale Construction Ltd. As I have indicated, much expense was incurred.

[para30] The defendants are not insurers. Their business, through the Strata Council, is to do all that can reasonably be done in the way of carrying out their statutory duty: and therein lies the test to be applied to their actions. Should it turn out that those they hire to carry out work fail to do so effectively, the defendants cannot be held responsible for such as long as they acted reasonably in the circumstances: and in this instance I have to say that the defendants did just that. They cannot be found to have been negligent.

[para31] The action must accordingly be dismissed with costs, Scale 3.

I.R. Capital Corporation, Petitioner (Respondent), and The Owners, Strata Plan NWS 3459, Respondent (Appellant)

[1995] B.C.J. No. 430, Vancouver Registry No. CA019865

British Columbia Court of Appeal Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Legg J.A. Oral judgment: January 26, 1995.

Counsel for the Appellant: J.P. Mancuso. Counsel for the Respondent: E.E. Bowes.

[para1] LEGG J.A. (orally):-- These reasons for judgment have been put together under pressures of time and I shall therefore take the liberty of editing what I am recorded as saying later.

[para2] The appellant, the Owners of Strata Plan NWS 3459, are constituted as members of a corporation under the name of the appellant stated in style of cause. The appellant applies for an order pursuant to s.10(2), s.18, and s.30 of the Court of Appeal Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.7, that the Annual General Meeting of the appellant be adjourned pending the hearing of an appeal from an order of Madam Justice Baker pronounced on January 19, 1995. The learned trial judge ordered that the petitioner, I.R. Capital Corporation, which I shall refer to as Capital Corporation, which controls approximately 60 percent of the eligible votes which may be cast at the Annual General Meeting of the appellant, was entitled to vote at that meeting.

[para3] The Annual General Meeting is scheduled to take place this evening at 7:00 p.m. It is now 4:35 p.m. and I have therefore only a limited time to consider and weigh the submissions of counsel.

[para4] The material discloses:

1. The Capital Corporation is the owner developer of Strata Plan NWS 3459;
2. The Capital Corporation owns 234 units in the second phase of the strata development of the Capital Corporation;
3. The second phase was filed in the Land Title Office on December 23, 1994 and was registered in that office on or about January 19, 1994;
4. There is ongoing litigation between the Capital Corporation and the appellant in respect of an alleged short fall in the contingency reserve fund for phase one of Strata Plan NWS 3459.

As well, there are ongoing disputes as to the construction and disputes over financial documents which the appellant alleges the Capital Corporation has failed to produce to the appellant.

[para5] After notice of the Annual General Meeting was sent out by the appellant on December 22, 1994, the Capital Corporation completed a proxy form on January 6, 1995 and submitted it to the appellant. By letter dated January 9, 1995, the Capital Corporation was informed that the appellant was disputing the right of the Capital Corporation to vote its 234 units and would be taking that position at the Annual General Meeting. The Capital Corporation then brought a petition which was heard by Madam Justice Baker for a declaration that it was the owner of the 234 units and therefore entitled to vote those units at the Annual General Meeting.

[para6] I do not have a copy of the reasons for judgment of Madam Justice Baker ordering that the Capital Corporation was allowed to vote. However, I am advised by counsel on the hearing before me that she interpreted the definition of "owner" in the Condominium Act R.S.B.C. 1979 c.61, to conclude that because the Capital Corporation was the registered owner in fee simple of all strata lots in phase two, it was entitled to vote at the Annual General Meeting.

[para7] Counsel for the appellant in support of his submission, which was essentially for a stay application, submitted that where the appellant has a reasonable prospect of success, a stay should be granted on terms that will protect the respondent. Counsel for the appellant further submitted that the appeal has merit and that no practical prejudice will be suffered by the Capital Corporation if the Annual General Meeting is adjourned pending the hearing of the appeal.

[para8] In support of his argument on the merits of the appeal counsel submitted that s. 89 of the Condominium Act provides a specific code as to the voting entitlement of the phase 2 owners. He submitted that this section was drafted in this sense as it opens "Notwithstanding this Act or bylaws". Counsel argued that pursuant to s. 89 the owners of phase 2 are granted two exclusive council members at a general meeting which is to be called, either when 60 percent of the units in phase 2 are owned by individual owners or if nine months have elapsed without reaching this threshold of individual ownership.

[para9] Counsel submitted that s. 89 must override any general voting rights in the Act and he argued that the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius applied and that in specifically providing how and when phase 2 owners are to vote for council, it was the intention of the legislature to either deny the phase two general voting rights or at the very least to deny phase 2 owners rights to elect council members at an Annual General Meeting.

[para10] Section 89 of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

Phased strata council members

89. (1) Notwithstanding this Act or bylaws, where a phase other than the first phase of a strata plan is deposited, the strata council shall call a general meeting of the strata corporation by the earlier of

- (a) the date that 60 percent of the strata lots in the new phase have been conveyed by the owner developer; or
- (b) 9 months after the deposit of the strata plan for the new phase.

(2) At the meeting called under subsection (1), 2 additional members of the strata council shall be elected from the purchasers of strata lots in the new phase to hold office until the next annual general meeting of the strata corporation.

[para11] Counsel for the appellant submitted that this section provides that if 60 percent of the units in phase 2 are sold or nine months elapses without 60 percent of the units in phase 2 being sold then the owners of phase 2 are entitled to elect two council members. Counsel argued that if Madam Justice Baker's interpretation was upheld then phase 2 owners would gain a statutory preference on the council because in addition to a general right to elect council members at an Annual General Meeting there would be added an exclusive right to elect two council members.

[para12] Appellant's counsel argued that the Condominium Act contemplates that the "true owners", (by that he meant resident or individual owners as opposed to an owner developer) are to have the conduct of the affairs of the strata corporation. He referred to s. 1 of the Act which defines "owner" and "owner developer" differently and submitted that an owner is a true owner of a strata lot and an owner developer is the owner of a strata plan. He argued that the Act was designed to protect true owners and not owner developers. He relied upon the authority of Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545 at pp.553-554. He submitted that an expression of this general principle is found in s. 72(6) of the Condominium Act which placed a limitation inter alia on the owner developer's ability to vote.

[para13] Notwithstanding the arguments of counsel for the appellant I am not persuaded that the appellant has shown that there is a reasonable prospect of succeeding on this appeal. The definition of owner in the Condominium Act reads as follows:

"owner" means the person registered in the register of land title office as owner in fee simple of a strata lot, whether entitled to it in his own right or in a representative capacity or otherwise, ...

[para14] In my opinion that definition clearly applies to the respondent because it is the registered owner in the Land Title Office and registered as the owner in fee simple of the strata lots. In my opinion, under the terms of the Act and in particular the definition of "owner", the Capital Corporation is the registered owner of the 234 units that have been created by phase two of the development and became the registered owner upon the deposit in the Land Title Office of the plans for phase two, that is on December 23, 1994.

[para15] It is my further conclusion that the declared refusal by the appellant to allow the Capital Corporation to vote its 234 shares would result in oppression or unfair prejudice to the petitioner, that is to the Capital Corporation under s. 42. That section of the Condominium Act reads as follows:

Oppressive Acts

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleged

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself.

[para16] At the hearing before Madam Justice Baker the appellant relied upon s. 89 to support the same submission that he has made to me.

[para17] In my opinion, that section does not exhaustively set out the rights of the owners of the lots in the new phase. It does outline the procedure for increasing the number of representatives on the strata council once a certain number of purchasers have been found for the new phase of the development and before nine months have past since the deposit of the strata plan. Specifically, it envisages the increasing of the strata council by adding two representatives from the purchasers of the lots.

[para18] I am unable to accept the submission that this section derogates from the voting rights given an owner under s. 72 of the Act. That section states that at every meeting an owner will have one vote. There is no provision in the Act which prevents an owner from voting at any Annual General Meeting of the strata corporation, which occurs before an Extraordinary General Meeting (not the General Annual Meeting) is called under s. 89.

[para19] I have already referred to s. 42 of the Condominium Act and I have noted that the Capital Corporation applied before Madam Justice Baker under the provisions of that section. That section gives an owner the right to apply to this Court to prevent a threatened act of the strata corporation which would be unfairly prejudicial to one or more of the owners including that owner.

[para20] In my opinion, the statement of the appellant made in writing on January 9, 1995, that it would oppose the right of Capital Corporation to vote its 234 votes at the Annual General Meeting was an act of unfair prejudice. I refer to the well-known decision of Diligenti v. RWMD Kelowna Ltd. (1976), 1 B.C.L.R. 36, as support for that proposition. Although that decision dealt with unfair prejudice within the meaning of s.221 of the British Columbia Company Act, the principles which are expressed there are applicable here.

[para21] In support of the application for a stay of execution appellant's counsel submitted that the Capital Corporation will use its voting power to elect a strata council at the Annual General Meeting this evening and that that was the appellants' main concern. Indeed, counsel invited me to allow the annual general meeting to proceed but to prohibit the Capital Corporation from exercising its right to elect the members of council at the meeting this evening.

[para22] I have given anxious consideration to that submission but I am not satisfied on the material before me that the Capital Corporation will proceed unfairly if it exercises its votes at the Annual General Meeting this evening. I am asked to infer that this will be an unfair exercise of those voting rights because of the ongoing litigation between the Capital Corporation and the appellant. I have no doubt that the litigation leads to an atmosphere which is undesirable but I am not persuaded on the material that the Corporation will proceed in a manner that is either illegal or unfairly prejudicial to the appellant just by reason of the existence of those disputes in that litigation. If the Capital Corporation does proceed in an unfairly prejudicial manner the appellant may have remedies to prohibit such conduct. I emphasize there is no evidence before me to show that that is the situation at present.

[para23] In exercising my discretion in dismissing this application I have considered that the Annual General Meeting is overdue and that it is in the interests of all strata unit holders that the meeting should proceed without delay. Because I have concluded that the appellant is unlikely to succeed on its appeal, I am unable to find that the appellant would be prejudiced by my refusal to adjourn the Annual General Meeting.

[para24] For those reasons the application before me is dismissed.

227213 B.C. Ltd., Petitioner, and Strata Corporation No. VR 1656

[1995] B.C.J. No. 165 Vancouver Registry No. A934450

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Huddart J. Heard: January 17, 1995. Judgment: filed January 27, 1995. Practice -- Summary proceedings -- Real property -- Condominiums -- Liability of unit holders -- For common expenses -- Apportionment.

Counsel for the Petitioner: R.S. Anderson. Counsel for the Respondent: K.A. Bowman.

[para1] HUDDART J.:-- The petitioner is the owner of the only two commercial strata lots in Strata Plan VR 1656. A dispute has arisen between it and the Strata Council about the apportionment of common expenses under section 128 of the Condominium Act.

[para2] The relevant portion of section 128 provides:

(2) Where a strata plan consists of more than one type of strata lot, the common expenses shall be apportioned in the following manner:

(a) common expenses attributable to one or more type of strata lot shall be allocated to that type of strata lot and shall be borne by the owners of that type of strata lot in the proportion that the unit entitlement of that strata lot bears to the aggregate unit entitlement of all types of strata lots concerned;

(b) common expenses not attributable to a particular type or types of strata lot shall be allocated to all strata lots and shall be borne by the owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their strata lots.

(10) At each annual general meeting subsequent to the first annual general meeting, the strata corporation shall prepare an annual budget for the following 12 month period and, after that, all owners shall, subject to subsections (2) and (3), pay a monthly assessment in accordance with their unit entitlement.

[para3] Clearly, the petitioner must pay from year to year its share of the budgeted common expenses. Equally clearly, the Strata Council must apportion those expenses between the owners of the residential and commercial lots annually.

[para4] Under section 37 of the Condominium Act the strata corporation may charge the strata lot of a defaulting owner with the arrears by registering a certificate in Form B against that owner's lot. The owner may obtain a discharge in Form C by paying the arrears. Section 35(5) authorizes the strata corporation to sue owners for money they owe. The respondent says that the petitioner owes arrears of monthly maintenance payments totalling $18,386.30 as of January 1995.

[para5] Where a strata corporation fails to fulfil an obligation, including the apportionment of common expenses under section 128(2), section 40 authorizes the owner to apply to court for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation to perform the obligation. Additionally, an owner may apply to court under section 42 "to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges" that "the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself." Under such an application the court has the power under section 43 to "make the interim or final order it considers appropriate", including the power to "(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution; and (b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs." [para6] The petitioner asks this court to use its power under section 43(b) to direct the respondent to apportion its common expenses for repairs and maintenance for the 1991-1992 year and all subsequent years in accordance with an agreement it alleges was made on September 4, 1991. It accepts that common expense repair and maintenance items arising for the first time after that year must be apportioned independently of the agreement. If there is no agreement, the petitioner asks for an order apportioning the common repair and maintenance expenses in the manner Mr. Skinner apportioned them in his proposal of July 24, 1991, for the years 1990-1991 and following.

[para7] The dispute began on September 13, 1990 when the petitioner received a memorandum from the property manager, Vancouver Condominium Services Ltd. dealing with the apportionment of common expenses in the 1990-1991 budget. The petitioner, which had developed the condominium, disagreed with the fixing of the joint residential and commercial common expenses for "repairs and maintenance" at $14,000.00. The petitioner's share of that expense was to be $4,007.00. It considered that most of the items included in that category were attributable only to the residential section. During the two previous years, all repairs and maintenance expenses had been allocated to the owners of residential lots.

[para8] Discussions were held and correspondence and documents were exchanged between Mr. Skinner on behalf of the petitioner and various people on behalf of the Strata Council in an attempt to arrive at an agreement as to the categories of expenses to be shared. On July 24, 1991, Mr. Skinner proposed that the petitioner share common expenses in three categories totalling $4,250.00. It was implicit in his proposal, consistent with earlier correspondence from the petitioner, that the balance of the repairs and maintenance expenses were to be the responsibility of the residential owners.

[para9] On September 4, 1991, Mr. Skinner met for between 10 and 20 minutes with Mr. Lee, the president of the Strata Council, and Ms. Brownrigg, representing the property manager. He says they accepted his proposal for apportionment subject to his paying the arrears for the 1990-1991 fiscal year so that the Strata Council would not have to collect additional maintenance fees from the owners of residential lots and to "insurance deductibles" being added to the three categories he had proposed as joint common expenses (roof and deck leaks, snow cleaning, and fire alarm maintenance).

[para10] Mr. Lee and Ms. Brownrigg say they understood that they accepted a proposal from Mr. Skinner that he would contribute $4,250 toward common expenses. On September 10, 1991, Ms. Brownrigg wrote to the petitioner to say "... this letter confirms that council has accepted your proposal of $4,250 in the repairs and maintenance category of the 1991- 1992 budget for Strata Plan VR-1656. Deductibles for all leak repairs will be in this category as well." (The addition of this item would have added $787 to the proposed joint expenses in 1991-1992.)

[para11] The evidence does not permit me to find what was more likely than not to have been in the mind of Ms. Brownrigg on September 4. However, I am satisfied that Mr. Lee clearly understood that Mr. Skinner had offered to contribute $4,250.00 toward the common repair and maintenance expenses for the year 1991-1992. He also understood that the apportionment of categories had been resolved for the future. In these circumstances it is difficult to know what apportionment the Strata Council may have thought it was approving.

[para12] Mr. Skinner had no doubts about what had been agreed. He wrote a note on his copy of his letter of July 24, 1991, confirming his understanding of the agreement he had reached with Mr. Lee and Ms. Brownrigg. Not unreasonably, he read the letter of Ms. Brownrigg as confirming his understanding. Then he caused the petitioner to pay the arrears for 1990-1991.

[para13] On December 10, 1991, Ms. Brownrigg wrote to Mr. Skinner, apparently setting out the view that the agreement was that the petitioner would pay $4,250 toward the 1991-1992 repair and maintenance expenses. (I say "apparently" because I could not find a copy of that letter in the materials.) Mr. Skinner replied promptly with his view of the agreement. Since that date he has paid fees calculated on the basis of the agreement he believes he reached with the Strata Council. The Strata Council has acted on Mr. Lee's understanding of the agreement made that day.

[para14] Mr. Skinner accepts that the amount of the repairs and maintenance expenses in the four agreed categories may have changed and that an adjustment may be necessary, but he says that only new categories should be added because to do other than honour the agreement of September 4, 1991, is to act in a manner oppressive to him.

[para15] On January 25, 1992, and January 26, 1993, the Strata Council registered a Form B Certificate in Default of Payment against the petitioner's two lots and prevented it from voting at the 1993 Annual General Meeting where those present voted to approve a budget including $6,000.00 as a joint common expense to obtain legal advice with regard to its claims against the petitioner for money allegedly owing to it. Mr. Skinner says his negative vote would have prevented the approval of that resolution because he owns 28.62 percent of the total unit entitlement.

Discussion

[para16] The respondent says that this matter must be converted to an action for a declaration that an agreement was made on September 4, 1991, that pleadings must be ordered so that the petitioner is required to specify the terms of the alleged agreement, and that a trial must be held to determine whether or not an agreement was reached.

[para17] The petitioner is content to have the existence and effect of the alleged agreement decided on this summary hearing as to whether or not the respondent has behaved oppressively toward it. It adds that if this court considers that it cannot decide the issues dividing the parties fairly on this hearing, it can give directions under section 73 of the Condominium Act for the fair hearing of this matter.

[para18] Because of the view I reached on reviewing all the admissible evidence, I have concluded that I can dispose of this dispute fairly on this application, without putting the parties to the expense of a trial or other proceedings. It is implicit in the position taken by the petitioner that this application is not brought to seek specific enforcement of an agreement. It is brought to determine the amount the only owner of commercial strata lots in a mixed condominium owes to the strata corporation, and to resolve the underlying dispute as to the method of determining the annual maintenance fees.

[para19] The petitioner and the respondent have each behaved for over three years as if they have reached an agreement for the permanent resolution of that dispute. Each has followed its preferred route. The time has come for the matter to be resolved as efficiently as is consistent with fairness to both parties. Counsel for the parties had agreed upon a procedure to be followed to resolve the dispute: commence with a petition under Rule 10, file affidavits, cross-examine the deponents, apply to the court for summary determination. Then the respondent changed counsel.

After reviewing the evidence I am persuaded that pleadings and oral evidence are not required for a fair and efficient resolution of this dispute.

[para20] The evidence of Mr. Skinner and Mr. Lee persuade me that there had been no meeting of their minds when they left the brief meeting on September 4. I accept that Mr. Skinner and Mr. Lee believed that they had resolved the dispute, but each left with his own view as to what they had agreed. After reading the transcript of the cross-examination of Mr. Lee on his affidavit, I am convinced that there is no need to hear him to accept his evidence as truthful. The careless attitude of Ms. Brownrigg toward her affidavit and inconsistencies in her evidence make it unhelpful. Hearing her oral testimony is unlikely to change that conclusion.

[para21] The allocation of common expenses for repairs and maintenance must be determined for the years 1990-1991 and the four subsequent years. It would be unfair to make that allocation on the evidence before me. There will be a reference to the Registrar to determine the allocation of those expenses and the adjustments in the account of the petitioner with the Strata Corporation that flows from that allocation.

[para22] Counsel may speak to the precise orders they seek when they address the issue of costs which they asked me to reserve for further submissions.

Judy Cowe, Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan VR1349, The Strata Council of Strata Plan VR1349, and William Edward Thompson, Respondents

[1994] B.C.J. No. 537 Vancouver Registry No. A940307

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Saunders J. Heard: February 28, 1994. Judgment: filed March 8, 1994.

Appearing for the Petitioner: Patrick A. Williams. Appearing for the Respondent: John D. Whyte.

[para1] SAUNDERS J.:-- The Strata Council of Plan VR1349 refused Judy Cowe, an owner, permission to rent her unit because she had not personally occupied her lot for twelve months before her request. Judy Cowe applies for a declaration the bylaw on which the refusal was grounded, is void and unenforceable as it contravenes the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61. Although she also seeks other relief, the primary dispute before me centers on enforceability of the Strata Corporations's bylaw restricting rental of units by owners.

[para2] The issues posed by the petition, winnowed by the oral submissions, are:

1. is the rental restriction bylaw of Strata Corporation VR1349 ultra vires as contravening ss. 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act?; 2. did the Strata Council breach the rules of natural justice in denying Ms Cowe permission to lease her unit?; 3. has Ms Cowe been oppressed and unfairly prejudiced by the respondents?; and 4. did the respondents Mr. Thompson and the owners of the Strata Council fail to act in good faith in fulfilling their duties of the Strata Council.

The Facts

[para3] In my view, this petition can be answered by dealing only with the first issue, and to that end I set out only those facts which relate to that issue.

[para4] On December 15, 1993, Judy Cowe completed purchase of a strata lot of Strata Plan VR1349, in North Vancouver, British Columbia.

[para5] Both before and after the purchase closed on December 15, 1993, Ms Cowe sought permission from the Strata Council to rent her strata lot. The Strata Council steadfastly refused permission on the basis the bylaws prohibit an owner from renting a unit unless the owner has first personally occupied the unit for the requisite twelve months. The bylaws provide:

RENTAL LIMITATION BY-LAW

(1) Subject to Section 30, 31 and 32 of the Condominium Act of British Columbia, the number of units within Strata Plan VR-1349 that may be leased or rented by the owners shall be five (5).

(2) An owner after twelve (12) months of personal occupancy who wishes to lease or rent his strata lot shall apply in writing to the strata corporation for permission to lease within the prescribed limit.

(4) Where the limit of leased units established in Section (1) of this by-law is reached, no further rentals shall be permitted except as allowed by Section 31 and 32 of the Condominium Act.

[para6] At all times material to this case the number of strata lots rented was two. The refusal to permit Ms Cowe to rent her unit has always been based upon clause 2 of the bylaw (above) and the fact Ms Cowe has not personally occupied her strata lot for at least twelve months prior to renting it.

[para7] In January 1994 Ms Cowe rented the strata lot to tenants commencing February 1, 1994 and on February 1, 1994 she commenced this action. In mid-February 1994 the Strata Council fined Ms Cowe $500 for renting the unit without permission in violation of the bylaws. Is the Rental Limitation Bylaw Ultra Vires the Condominium Act?

[para8] Ms Cowe contends clause 2 of the Rental Limitation Bylaw exceeds the statutory authority for limitations on rental found in ss. 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act. Those sections provide:

29. Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate to prohibit or restrict (a) a devolution of a strata lot; or (b) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot, or to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

30. (1) A strata corporation administering a strata plan that is wholly or partially residential may, by bylaw, limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased by the owners. (2) A bylaw under subsection (1) shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced.

[para9] There is little law on the Condominium Act, and none on the point raised by Ms Cowe, although in the case Mattiazzo v. The Owners, Strata Plan No. V4 1144 (March 21, 1985), Vancouver A850287 (B.C.S.C.) the court struck down a similar bylaw restricting owners who had not occupied their strata lot for at least twelve months from applying to the strata council to lease a lot, on other grounds than advocated in this case. McEville Holdings Inc. v. The Owners, Strata Plan No. VR 314 (October 29, 1984), Vancouver A841861 (B.C.S.C.), dealt with a bylaw with a provision similar to the one in issue in this case, but the attack on the bylaw (which was successful) did not address the twelve month residency requirement.

[para10] The starting, and ending, point on this issue is the statute itself. Sections 29 and 30 of the Act are a pair of statutory provisions that work together. Section 29 of the Act ensures there are no prohibitions or restrictions on leasing a strata lot covered by the bylaw except a bylaw passed under s. 30 of the Act. In the absence of s. 30, the Rental Limitation Bylaw in this case would be ultra vires the legislation. The bylaw relied upon by the Strata Council to refuse Ms Cowe the opportunity to rent her strata lot must be within the parameters of s. 30.

[para11] Section 30 (1) permits a strata corporation to "limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased." Section 30 (2) says such a bylaw "shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced." The respondents contend s. 30 (2) is not a comprehensive provision, and that the word "shall" should be read to mean the two requirements that follow, the number of rentable strata lots and the manner in which the limitation is enforced, are minimum requirements. They contend s. 30 permits other restrictions to be inserted into the s. 30 bylaw such as that found in the bylaw impugned in this action. I do not agree.

[para12] In my view, s. 30 only permits a quantitative restriction or prohibition on the leasing of residential strata lots by owners. The permissive subsection, s. 30 (1), refers only to a limitation of the number of rentable strata lots. The mandatory subsection, s. 30 (2), then requires not only the number of strata lots that may be leased to be established, it also requires the manner of enforcement to be established. In my view, s. 30 (2) does not go further to permit the Strata Council to discriminate between owners that may rent their strata lot.

[para13] I am reinforced in this decision by Mattiazzo (supra), in which Mr. Justice Wood held the provision:

Owners must occupy said premises for one year prior to making written application to Council to rent.

was ultra vires the Strata Corporation because it would bar the owner from applying for relief under s. 32 of the Act. While this point has not been taken in the case at bar, in my view the Mattiazzo case illustrates the many difficulties encountered by bylaws which step beyond the narrow area permitted to be restricted by s. 30 of the Act.

[para14] I therefore conclude that clause 2 of the Rental Limitation Bylaw is ultra vires the Strata Corporation and unenforceable. Ms Cowe is entitled to a declaration to that effect. It follows, and counsel agree, that any fine imposed under clause 6 of the bylaw arising from Ms Cowe's breach of clause 2 cannot be maintained. I have authority under s. 21 of the Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 224, to relieve against penalties as I think fit, and I do so.

[para15] Ms Cowe also sought other relief against the respondents, and costs on a special basis. As I have found the bylaw on which the Strata Council relied is ultra vires, there is no need to address the other requests for substantive relief.

[para16] However, Ms Cowe's claim for special costs is related to her claim that the respondents did not act in good faith in carrying out their duties. I do not think the actions of any of the respondents should be criticized for bad faith. The respondents were clear throughout the events that their refusal to permit Ms Cowe to rent her strata lot was based solely upon the existing Rental Limitation Bylaw and that they simply were performing their duty on behalf of all owners to enforce the bylaw. Although I have found the bylaw itself is beyond the permissible scope of a rental bylaw under the Act, I do not think the opprobrium of a finding of bad faith can or should be cast upon the respondents. In my view, they were entitled to rely upon the bylaw as it was drafted and registered, until it was declared invalid.

[para17] For these reasons, I award costs to Ms Cowe on scale 3.

Wayne Sterloff, Petitioner, and The Owners and Strata Corporation of Strata Plan No. VR 2613, Respondents

[1994] B.C.J. No. 445

Vancouver Registry No. A934852

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Wilson J. (In Chambers) Heard: February 4, 1994. Judgment: February 23, 1994. Filed: March 1, 1994.

Counsel for the Petitioner: Michael A. Skene. Counsel for the Respondents: M. A. MacKenzie.

WILSON J.:--

I INTRODUCTION

[para1] Mr. Sterloff seeks an order compelling the respondents to take action in connection with a garage door. The door is part of the common property, of the Strata Corporation, of which Mr. Sterloff is a member.

[para2] His petition is founded upon Section 40 the Condominium Act, 1979, R.S.B.C. Ch.61:

"Where a strata corporation fails to fulfil an obligation under this Act or bylaws, the owner of a strata lot, or a registered mortgagee, may apply to the court for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation to perform the obligation."

[para3] The "obligation" sought to be enforced, is:

"34(1) The strata corporation shall . . .

(d) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain common property, common facilities and assets of the strata corporation . . ."

[para4] Specifically, Mr. Sterloff seeks relief in the following terms:

(a) replacement of the garage door with a replacement door that generates noise only within acceptable levels;

(b) repair to the door, as may be required, to cause the operating mechanism to generate no more than acceptable levels of noise; or

(c) prescription of a schedule for non- emergency use of the door, so that noise results only between the hours of 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. daily.

[para5] The respondents say that they have performed their obligations, under the Act and bylaws, and, accordingly, the injunctive relief sought by Mr. Sterloff is not available to him. II BACKGROUND

[para6] Mr. Sterloff is the owner/occupier of one of 252 strata lots, in a condominium complex on Beach Drive. The complex contains a residential section and a commercial section. It has an underground parking facility, allocating over 400 individual parking spaces by lane markings.

[para7] The parking area is secured by 2 overhead doors. Both doors are power operated. They are identified as the "east door" and the "west door".

[para8] The east door is the door in issue on this petition.

[para9] The opening and closing of each door may be activated by a remote triggering device.

[para10] The dimensions of the west door are 20' by 9'. It is of lattice work construction. It is described as lightweight and flexible. The strata units immediately above the west door, are in the "commercial section". There are residential units on the 5 floors above those commercial units.

[para11] The dimensions of the east door are 20' by 14'. It is constructed of solid panels. It is described as "heavy".

[para12] The hardware, connected with the opening and closing mechanisms of the east door, is bolted into the reinforced concrete walls and floor of the building. This method of attachment serves to compound the noise level during the opening and closing movements of the door.

[para13] Mr. Agnew, a representative of the management firm engaged by the strata corporation, said that the east door was made larger than the west door, to accommodate access, by moving trucks and garbage trucks, to the complex.

[para14] The units immediately above the east door, including Mr. Sterloff's unit, are "residential".

[para15] At the time Mr. Sterloff acquired his unit, the east door was unserviceable. Replacement was being effected. The prior door was apparently heavier than the present door, and served to shorten the life of the operating mechanisms.

[para16] Shortly after Mr. Sterloff occupied his unit, the east door was placed into operation. The noise generated by the opening and closing of that door distressed Mr. Sterloff. He placed his concerns before the strata council on 13 July 1993. A representative of the council attended Mr. Sterloff's unit. That representative reported to council, by memo dated 15 July 1993:

" I have responded to a Mr. Wayne Sterloff's noise complaint in 990 Beach. The level of noise I validated is simply unacceptable. The cost to redesign the east garage door is probably at least $13,000.00. I recommend the interim solution proposed at our last meeting - leave the east door closed between 2300 and 0700 hours. The benefits are three- fold: firstly we accommodate the residents of at least three affected suites; secondly, we reduce maintenance costs of the door; and thirdly, we greatly increase our night time security. (Guissepe reportedly prefers the door closed at night.) The objection to this proposal - that we are simply shifting the noise to the west side - is questionable. The west door is much smaller, lighter, and quieter plus it is underneath commercial property anyway! The east door is directly below residents (sic) bedrooms."

[para17] The matter was pursued between the parties for the balance of 1993, and into January 1994.

[para18] In response to Mr. Sterloff's complaint, the strata council has:

(a) restricted the ingress hours of operation, of the east door, between the hours of 11 o'clock p.m. and 7 o'clock a.m. There is no restriction on egress from the parking facility, during those hours;

(b) reduced the distance of travel, of the east door movement, to 7 feet;

(c) commissioned the plugging of fire stop holes, (which would transmit sound into Mr. Sterloff's unit); and

(d) effected modifications to the east door, through Overhead Door Company, as follows i. replacement of all steel rollers with sound deadening plastic wheels; ii. isolate right hand horizontal door track from wall with "waffle" type rubber pads; iii. isolate left hand horizontal door track from ceiling with "vibrasonic" sound dampener; iv. isolate electric opener from wall using "waffle" type rubber pads; and v. lube and service torsion spring assembly.

[para19] The parties appear to agree that, the probable cost of replacement of the east door, (with a swing-type gate), will be not less than $12,475.00. Expenditure of this sum will require a special resolution pursuant to Section 35 of the Act. [para20] In his affidavit filed 4 February 1994, Mr. Agnew described the council's position as follows.

"28. For Mr. Sterloff to insist that the east garage door never be permitted to open during the restricted hours is unreasonable. If traffic is not permitted to use the east garage door during the restricted hours whatsoever, the inconvenience caused the owners over the west garage door will only be increased. Although only commercial units are directly above the west garage door, there are residential dwellings on the next 5 floors above that.

29. If all traffic exiting the garage is routed through the west garage door only, the residents above that door will also be further inconvenienced by the noise of the vehicles on the driveway approaching that door. The driveway leading up to the east garage door is smooth and vehicles using it do not produce any significant sound other than the usual vehicles sounds. However, the driveway leading up to the west garage door is concrete with ridged bumps running across it. Vehicles using this approach create an increased noise level from their tires on this uneven surface.

30. A complaint about the noise from the west garage door has already been made by Shera Delain, who lives over the west garage door in number 301 at 1008 Beach Avenue. This complaint is based on the increased traffic and noise caused by the west garage door being the only door operating to permit entry into the garage during the restricted hours."

III DISCUSSION

[para21] In Mr. Skene's submission, there is no evidence contradicting Mr. Sterloff's contention that the noise generated by the east garage door is "intolerable". He said that this door was not designed for residential use. It is a commercial door, and should be used accordingly. It is not necessary, argued Mr. Skene, that two access doors be operational throughout the restricted hours. And, in any event, the operation of the east door may be engaged by a manual switch, in the event of emergency.

[para22] On behalf of the respondents, Ms. MacKenzie asserted that there is no duty, pursuant to the Act, upon the strata corporation to carry out the remedies sought by Mr. Sterloff. This is so, she said, by reason of the meaning of the words "maintenance" and "repair".

[para23] In the event there is such a duty, argued Ms. MacKenzie, the strata corporation has reasonably performed that duty, and is not required, under the Act, to do more.

[para24] Mr. Skene referred me to extracts from Pavlich, Condominium Law In British Columbia, Butterworths 1983. In that work, reference is made to Proprietors of Strata Plan Number 6522 v. Furney [1976] 1 N.S.W.L.R. 412. The Australian legislation, under consideration in that decision, imposed an obligation, on the strata corporation - "to keep in a state of good repair . . ." The legislation is silent on whether the obligation extended to putting in a state of good and serviceable repair.

[para25] In Furney, the court adopted this extract from Burns v. National Coal Board [1957] S.C. 239 (Scot.):

"It is true that the primary meaning of the word "repair" is to restore to sound condition that which has previously been sound, but the word is also properly used in a sense of to make good. Moreover, the word is commonly used to describe the operation of making an article good or sound, irrespective of whether the article has been good or sound before."

[para26] That extract, I think, succinctly describes Mr. Skene's position on the extent of the respondents' obligations imposed by Section 34(1) of the Act, and paragraph 3 of the corporation's bylaws. [para27] Reference is also made by Mr. Pavlich to Re Blunt and Strata Corporation V.R.45 (1977) 2 B.C.L.R. 248 (B.C.S.C.), a decision referred to me by Mr. Skene.

[para28] In Blunt, the strata corporation incurred an expenditure in excess of $500.00 to cover the cost of painting the exterior of the building. The expenditure had not been approved by the owners at a general meeting, and the item had not been reflected in the annual budget.

[para29] Mr. Blunt sought a mandatory injunction enjoining the council to call a general meeting to approve, or disapprove, of this expenditure.

[para30] The strata corporation's resistance, to the application for a mandatory injunction, was founded upon the contention that the obligations in Section 34 of the Act, superseded the limitations in Section 35.

[para31] The court held, at page 250 - 251:

"The obligation placed on the strata corporation to keep the common property in a state of good repair is of a different nature to the other obligations imposed by Section 19(1) [now Section 34(1)]. There is no reason for debate among the owners in respect to compliance with the orders of a public authority and very little reasons for debate on the question of insurance. Whether that is so or not the Act makes special provision in Section 19 for the payment of the expense of those items. There is no similar provision for the payment of the expense of repairs. This would appear to be sensible in that there are numerous questions relating to repair and maintenance which ought to be settled by the owners. Except for emergency repairs, which are an exception to the requirements of Section 27, the repair or replacement of the common property may be delayed or advanced and the quality of material may vary widely." (the underlining is mine) [para32] Mr. Pavlich observes at page 122:

"It seems that the effect of the Blunt and Jacklin decisions is to impose an obligation to repair on the corporation. However, the manner in which that obligation is to be discharged is, so far as this relates to costs in excess of $500.00, a matter to be decided by the owners." (emphasis in the original)

[para33] It seems to me, in this case, Mr. Sterloff's complaints are not being ignored by the corporation. It appears to me to have accepted the obligation to maintain, or keep in a state of good repair, the east garage door. The quarrel is over the method adopted by the corporation to meet that obligation.

[para34] I think Mr. Sterloff is being inconvenienced for the convenience of other members of the corporation. The council's position appears to be, in part, that to convenience Mr. Sterloff would perforce require inconvenience to other members of the corporation.

[para35] Pursuant to its bylaws, the strata corporation must control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of all owners. It seems to me that in carrying out that mandate, the corporation, among other things, must endeavour to accomplish the greatest good for the greatest number.

[para36] In my opinion, the remedy provided to Mr. Sterloff, by Section 40 of the Act is limited to compelling the corporation to take action to fulfil an obligation; it does not extend to directions on how that obligation is to be performed.

[para37] It seems to me that if the court is to become involved in the particulars of how that obligation is to be fulfilled, then rights and privileges of other members of the corporation may be affected, and accordingly, each member of the corporation should be a party to the proceeding. In my view, the particulars of the method of performance of the obligation are more appropriately defined in a meeting of the corporation, not on an application for a mandatory injunction.

[para38] In the result, the petition is dismissed with costs.

Between The Owners, Strata Plan No. LMS44, Plaintiff and RBY Holdings Ltd., Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd., Defendants

[1993] B.C.J. No. 2251

Vancouver Registry No. A923876 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Newbury J. Judgment: filed July 30, 1993.

J.E. Rogers, appearing for the Plaintiff. K.R. Doyle, appearing for the Defendants.

NEWBURY J.:--

[para1] I heard two contested motions in this matter on June 25 -- first, the plaintiff's application for a determination under Rule 18A or the resolution of a "point of law" under Rule 34 relating to the interpretation of a statutory building scheme which is registered against the subject strata plan; and second, a motion for an order permanently enjoining the defendants from operating a mortuary or crematorium in and about unit 102 of the property. The property, located in Delta, is known as "Tilbury Corporate Centre". I understand it is of a type similar to many industrial parks in the Delta area -- that is, it is used for industrial/commercial purposes such as warehousing and food preparation and is fairly removed from the retail or downtown part of Delta.

[para2] Since counsel addressed themselves mainly to the substantive issues regarding the use of the unit, I propose to deal first with the point of law. I will assume, for purposes of this part of the discussion, that the plaintiff has standing to sue as it has. I will return later to that question, however, which will technically make my determination of the point of law dicta for purposes of the present application.

[para3] The facts of this case are simple: on June 19, 1992, RBY Holdings Ltd. purchased Unit 102 of Strata Plan LMS44. The Unit was then, and is now, subject to a Statutory building scheme registered in the Land Title Office which provides that none of the units (or "lots") may be used for any purpose whatsoever other than "manufacturing, processing, storage, wholesale, office, laboratory, profession or research and development purposes permitted by the municipality" and that "No lot will be used for any junk or salvage business or any other purpose which could or would be offensive to other occupants of the lands or the public by reason of odour, fumes, dust, smoke, noise or other pollution being generated as a result thereof or which could be hazardous by reason of danger of fire or explosion".

[para4] I am advised that at the time of the purchase, the municipal zoning by-law did permit the use of the premises for crematorium purposes, although it was later changed to do so. It seemed to be common ground that the defendant would be permitted to operate, despite the by-law amendment, as a nonconforming use.

[para5] Subsequent to their purchase, RBY Holdings Ltd. indicated that it wished to carry on business as a mortuary and crematorium in Unit 102 through two corporations (apparently related) --Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd. The last-mentioned company has obtained a business license from the municipality to operate a mortuary in Unit 102. (I note, parenthetically, that Mr. Rogers on the plaintiff's behalf did not raise before me any question arising under section 46 of the Condominium Act in this regard.) In furtherance of its wish to carry on the business of a crematorium as well, the defendants sought permission from the strata corporation for the right to install the necessary gas line over the common property to Unit 102. Mr. Justice Scarth of this Court granted a mandatory injunction to RBY in action number A923494 to permit such installation, although his Lordship was careful to state that in granting the injunction he had not dealt with the intended use of the premises and that the question of whether that use was permitted under the zoning by-law (or, presumably, under the statutory building scheme) should be the subject of a separate application.

[para6] I understand that the necessary installations or servicing were carried out even before this judgment was rendered and that since approximately August, 1992, Personal Alternatives has been carrying on business from Unit 102, i.e., administering the provision of funeral arrangements for the disposition of the remains of deceased persons. Prior to receiving the mortuary license, Mr. Little's affidavit states that human remains were on the site only transitorily for the purpose of being transferred into cremation caskets and were then transported off-site to crematoria. Since that time, the company has been able to store human remains in a "cool room" for periods generally not exceeding 48 hours, and the "occasional" embalming of human remains has been undertaken in a "preparation room". Mr. Little states that funeral and memorial services are not conducted on-site.

[para7] The affidavit material also discloses that all the necessary approvals have been received for the crematorium company to begin operations other than those that were specifically dependent upon completion of the required installations, which may now have been completed. However, cremation activities have not begun as yet.

[para8] In its Statement of Claim, the plaintiff seeks a declaration that the proposed use of Unit 102 as a crematorium or mortuary by any of the defendants contravenes the strata corporation's by-laws and the provisions of the building scheme registered against the property. The by-laws state that an owner shall not use his lot in a manner or for a purpose that will "cause a nuisance or hazard to any occupier of a lot". Because the question of whether the proposed uses of the property would constitute a nuisance or otherwise offend the by-laws is a question of fact which I would be reluctant to decide upon without the benefit of a trial, I propose to limit my consideration to the question of law posed under Rule 34, i.e., to whether the operation of a crematorium and/or mortuary violates the first part of paragraph 7(b) of the building scheme, assuming (as I must do under Rule 34) for purposes of this judgment that these activities will not result in the emission of odour, fumes, dust, smoke, or other pollution which could be hazardous. If this latter factual issue becomes relevant, it seems doubtful it would be appropriate for a determination under Rule 18A.

[para9] I am left, then, with the question, which I agree is one of law, of whether the building scheme permits the uses proposed by the defendants for Unit 102 of the Tilbury Corporate Centre. A great deal of argument was addressed to me on the questions of nuisance, offensiveness, injurious affection, community standards, and the "not in my backyard" syndrome, which the defendants say is operating here. All of these are irrelevant to the legal question of the construction of the first part of paragraph 7 (b). The question is whether the use of the lot for crematorium or mortuary purposes will be a use for a purpose other than "manufacturing, processing or storage". (None of the other permitted uses was seriously pursued by counsel, and rightly so, in my view).

[para10] The defendants argue that the storing of human remains on the premises for embalming and/or subsequent transportation out, is "storage" within the meaning of this paragraph and that cremation is a "process". In this regard, counsel for the defendants notes the use of the word "process" in the Cemetery and Funeral Services Act and in the "Guidelines for an Application of a Certificate of Operation to Establish a Crematorium" issued by the Registrar thereunder. He also cites cases that stand for the proposition that restrictive covenants must be construed restrictively and that documents must be given their "true meaning", i.e., the meaning that would be ascribed by "an ordinary intelligent person in construing the words in a proper way in light of the relevant circumstances".

[para11] On the question of "storage", he cites Capital Regional District v. Mattison, a decision of Mr. Justice Drake, suggesting that storage "implies a certain degree of permanence" and cannot be used to describe the display of perishable merchandise outside a shop in portable form. As far as "processing" is concerned, he points out that the OED definition includes "something that goes on or is carried on", "a continuous and regular action or succession of actions taking place or carried on in a definite manner", a particular method of operation in any manufacture", and that "process" is defined to mean "treating by a special process". Applying this to the facts, Mr. Doyle argues that cremation subjects the human body to a "process" by which its state is changed to what the layman would call ashes and bone fragments. Further, he says that the normal intelligent person reading the statutory building scheme would conclude that a mortuary business is "storing" human remains and that, accordingly, Mr. Little properly concluded that his proposed uses would be permitted.

[para12] Neither counsel cited the case of Bourne v. Norwich Crematorium Ltd. [1967] 2 All E.R. 576, a decision of the Chancery Division, which I brought to counsels' attention and on which I received written argument. In Bourne, the defendant was appealing to the General Commissioners of Income Tax against an assessment for the profits of its crematorium. The issue was whether the furnace chamber and chimney tower of the crematorium were "industrial buildings or structures" under the Income Tax Act, which defined an industrial building or structure as one in use "for the purposes of a trade which consists in the manufacture of goods or material or the subjection of goods or materials to any process". Mr. Justice Stamp found that the furnace chamber and chimney tower were not so qualified and stated as follows:

[para13] "I would say at once that my mind recoils as much by the description of the bodies of the dead as "goods or materials" as it does from the idea that what is done in that crematorium can be described as "the subjection of" the human corpse to a "process" ...

... In my judgment it would be a distortion of the English language to describe the living or the dead as goods or materials. The argument, of course, goes on inevitably to this: that just as "goods and materials" is wide enough to embrace, and does embrace, all things animate and inanimate, and so includes the dead human body, so the other words to which a meaning must be given, namely "subjection" and "process", are words of the widest import. Parliament cannot, so the argument as I understood it runs, have intended to exclude from the definition a process whereby refuse or waste material is destroyed or consumed by fire and, putting it crudely, for it can only be put crudely, the consumption by fire of the human body is a process. I protest against subjecting the English language, and more particularly a simple English phrase, to this kind of process of philology and semasiology. English words derive colour from those which surround them. Sentences are not mere collections of words to be taken out of the sentence, defined separately by reference to the dictionary or decided cases, and then put back again into the sentence with the meaning which you have assigned to them as separate words, so as to give the sentence or phrase a meaning which as a sentence or phrase it cannot bear without distortion of the English language."

And further:

"I conclude that the consumption by fire of the mortal remains of homo sapiens is not the subjection of goods or materials to a process within the definition of "industrial building or structure"

This judgment has been cited on numerous occasions by numerous courts for the general rule of construction that "one must not at the end of the day distort that which has to be construed and give it a meaning which in its context one does not think it can possibly bear".

[para14] In my view, both this general principle and the specific holding of the Court in Bourne are applicable here. If one considers the context of the statutory building scheme and the particular development in question here, it is clear that what the draughtsman had in mind was a building to be used for commercial purposes and that the manufacturing, processing and storage in question would have referred to raw or semi-processed materials or goods to be processed for resale or other commercial use.

[para15] I cannot agree that "processing" in this context can be distorted and expanded so as to include, in Mr. Justice Stamp's words, "the consumption by fire of the human body". The body is not being "processed", it is being consumed or destroyed by fire. Further, no commercial goods or materials result. The residue of ashes is obviously not a commercial product which I infer is contemplated by paragraph 7. (For the same reason, I would not regard an incinerator used to burn garbage as "processing" garbage.) As the Court held in Tenneco Canada Inc. v. The Queen, the normal meaning of "processing" requires that goods be made more marketable. Here we do not have "goods", we do not have "marketable goods", and, in my view, we do not have "processing" -- we have consumption or destruction of the human body. I would respectfully concur with Mr. Justice Stamp in concluding that it would be a distortion of the wording used in the scheme to conclude that cremation is within the ambit of "processing".

[para16] As far as "storage" is concerned, the same reasoning applies. First, since I read paragraph 7 to be referring to the storage, manufacture or processing of commercial goods or products of some kind, the word is not applicable. Second, I infer that the word in this context is intended to refer to longer-term storage than the temporary moving of a human body into the premises for embalming and shipment out. The purpose of bringing the bodies onto the premises is not to "store" them but to prepare them for burial or cremation. I have already noted Mr. Justice Drake's comments to the effect that "storage" generally implies something less transient or fleeting and suggest that this is not storage in the sense that a commercial parking lot, with cars going in and out, is not normally described as a place for the "storage" of cars. In the result, I would conclude that the operation of a mortuary does, and the operation of a crematorium would, contravene the terms of the building scheme registered against Unit 102. Subject to the issue of standing, I would have granted a declaration under Rule 34 to that effect and likely granted the prayer for a permanent injunction on that basis.

[para17] Another issue raised by counsel for the defendants concerned the applicability of paragraph 7 as a whole. Mr. Doyle notes that paragraph 7 refers to the use of any "Lot" and that "Lot" is defined to mean "any portion of the Lands constituting a single legally subdivided area in accordance with the requirements of the Land Title Act". He argued that the deposit of a strata plan to subdivide land into strata lots under the Condominium Act takes place under that statute and not under the Land Title Act.

[para18] However, this ignores section 2 of the Condominium Act, which states that "land may be subdivided into strata lots by the deposit of a strata plan, and the strata lots so created-...may subject to this Act evolve or be disposed of in the same manner and form as any land the title to which is registered in a land title office."; and section 3 of the Act which states that "this Act, except Parts 7 and 8, applies to the Condominium Act unless inconsistent therewith." The two statutes interlock with the effect that a strata lot is treated to all intents and purposes like any other lot under the Land Title Act, subject to the additional restrictions and obligations contained in the Condominium Act.

[para19] Further, the statutory building scheme is registered under section 216 of the Land Title Act and from that date on, subsection 3 provides that the restrictions contained therein run with and bind all the land affected and every part of it without further registration. To suggest, then, that this building scheme does not apply to the strata units of Strata Plan LMS44 would effect a ridiculous result in contravention of this provision. I would therefore have not acceded to this objection.

[para20] I turn then to the more difficult question of the plaintiff's standing to sue as it has in this case to enforce the provisions of the building scheme relating to the use of Unit 102.

[para21] The question of in what capacity the corporation has sued to enjoin the breach of the building scheme -- whether on a matter relating to the common property or about matters "affecting individual strata lots" -- is not expressly addressed in the plaintiff's pleadings. Paragraph 21 of the Statement of Claim states that the proposed use of the premises by the defendants "contravenes the restrictions contained in the building scheme" and paragraph 22 states that the members of the plaintiff (not the strata corporation itself) have suffered damages as a result. (Paragraph 20(a) refers to "unreasonable interference" to the common property but this is framed to refer to an alleged breach of the by-law which I am not concerned with here.) Neither the pleadings nor the affidavit evidence indicate that the strata corporation is here concerned about damage it has suffered or will suffer as a result of the breach of the building scheme in its capacity as the owner of the common property or common facilities of the strata corporation. For example, there is no allegation that hallways or the parking lot of the building have been adversely affected or would be adversely affected by the proposed uses, or that other owners will be interfered with in their enjoyment of the hallways or parking lot. Thus I have no choice but to proceed on the basis that the claim is one made by the strata corporation on behalf of the other unitholders, and therefore falls under section 15(7)(b) of the Condominium Act.

[para22] That section enables the strata corporation to sue on their behalf if it has been authorized by special resolution of the owners and consents in writing signed by the owners who are affected have been obtained. Presumably, the purpose of this provision is to ensure that the strata corporation's funds are not used to benefit individual owners or pursue individual causes not concurred in by most unitholders.

[para23] Mr. Doyle argues that on the affidavit evidence before me, it is not clear that a special resolution was, in fact, passed at the meeting of the unitholders held on March 31 of this year. The minutes which were attached to the affidavit of Mr. Schuss, however, refer to the approval and continuation of legal proceedings against the owners of Unit 102 and to the approval and acceptance of the "lawyer's report... including approval for the continuation or approval of legal proceedings" against them, which was affirmed by a vote of 13 to 2. From this, it is reasonable to infer that the required special resolution was passed. I do not think it is fatal to the resolution that the phrase "special resolution" does not appear in the minutes. There is no allegation of which I am aware that proper notice of the meeting was not given, and indeed Mr. Doyle was present as proxy for his client.

[para24] I have not been provided, however, with the written consents referred to in subparagraph 15(7)(b) of the Act. When I asked Mr. Rogers about this, he replied that these could easily be prepared and filed, but evidently none existed at the time of the hearing and likely none have been prepared as yet. Mr. Rogers fell back on the argument that the strata corporation may under section 15 sue to enforce the building scheme insofar as the common facilities are affected. But again there is no allegation in the pleadings that the breach of the building scheme (as opposed to a breach of the by-laws) affects the common property. The damage claim is that members of the plaintiff have suffered damage in the form of loss of property value, problems with their employees and problems with customers visiting the premises.

[para25] In my view, it is not for the Court to remedy the deficiency in the pleadings or in the evidence, or to "wink" at the plaintiff's failure to comply with this procedural requirement. If it is an easy matter for the plaintiff to obtain the written consents required by this Act, then the plaintiff should do so and should have done so before the action was commenced.

[para26] Without argument, I would not want to reach any conclusion as to whether the action, insofar as it is concerned with matters affecting the individual strata lots, may be voidable or struck out because of this deficiency. But given that there is doubt on this point, and given that the pleadings are deficient insofar as an action in connection with the common property is concerned, it is clearly not appropriate for me to proceed further and consider the granting of injunctive relief before that question is addressed.

[para27] Quite apart from the questions of a prima facie case and the balance of convenience, the plaintiff as a creature of statute must have satisfied the statutory conditions to pursue this aspect of its claim and, I would have thought, does not otherwise have the capacity to do so. It would be inappropriate, to say the least, for this Court to grant an injunction, permanent or otherwise, or even a ruling under Rule 34 when the plaintiff's capacity to advance its claim is questionable.

[para28] With some reluctance, then, I conclude that the plaintiff's present application for injunctive relief and for the Rule 34 determination must be dismissed at this time. The defendants will have their costs of this application.

[para29] So that this is no doubt, however, I do wish to make it clear that if the plaintiff should at some point in the future dot its 'i's' and cross its 't's', both in terms of the pleadings and meeting the requirements of the Act, it will be at liberty to apply to me or any other Judge of this Court for a declaration under Rule 34 and/or a permanent injunction enjoining breach of the building scheme. I will not be seized of this matter, but will try to make myself available if possible. Counsel should communicate with the Registry in this regard. Obviously, such an application would eliminate the necessity of the seven-day trial which I understand is scheduled in this matter.

[para30] Anything further, counsel?

MR. ROGERS: My Lady, if we can arrange it through the Registry and get our 'is' dotted and our 't's' crossed, is Your Ladyship available in the month of August?

THE COURT: I am here until about 24 August.

MR. ROGERS: Thank you.

MR. DOYLE: I think based on your reasons, my friend and I should be able to agree on what orders flow from this. If not, we may be able to get before you again.

RBY Holdings Ltd., Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd., Petitioners, and Owners, Strata Plan No. LMS44, Respondents

[1993] B.C.J. No. 485 Vancouver Registry No. A923494

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Scarth J. Heard: October 7 and 8, 1992. Judgment: filed March 8, 1993.

Counsel for the Petitioners: Kelly R. Doyle. Counsel for the Respondent: John E. Rogers.

SCARTH J.:-- The petitioner RBY Holdings Ltd. owns a strata lot in the Tilbury Corporate Centre, which is located in the Tilbury Industrial Park in Delta. It has applied to the council of the respondent strata corporation for permission to instal a stack and exhaust fan in the roof of the building above its unit, to hook up to the sanitary sewer which runs beneath the concrete floor of its unit, and to connect into the gas line which is located about 42 feet north of its unit. The strata council refuses to allow this work to be done. So too does the strata corporation. Their reason for refusing is that RBY intends to operate a mortuary and crematorium in its unit. RBY now brings this application for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation, through the strata council, to grant written permission for the servicing and completion of its premises; alternatively, for an interim interlocutory or final order directing the strata corporation to grant written permission for such work.

By memorandum dated March 1, 1993, I informed counsel for the parties that I had concluded the petitioner RBY Holdings Ltd. is entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the respondent Owners, Strata Plan No. LMS44, to grant written permission to said petitioner to carry out the following items of work as described in the Schedule of Work marked as exhibit "kk" to the affidavit of Ronald Young filed in this proceeding on October 1, 1992:

3. Sanitary Sewer Hook up. 4. Installation of Exhaust Fan in the Roof.

I also stated reasons for my decision would follow. These are my reasons:

Apart from its power to grant injunctions in appropriate circumstances pursuant to Rule 45 of the Rules of Court, this Court has the authority, by virtue of ss. 40, 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61, to grant a mandatory or prohibitory injunction in the circumstances contemplated by those sections. They provide as follows:

40. Where a strata corporation fails to fulfil an obligation under this Act or bylaws, the owner of a strata lot, or a registered mortgagee, may apply to the court for a mandatory injunction requiring the strata corporation to perform the obligation.

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges (a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself.

43. On an application to court under section 42, the court may make the interim or final order it considers appropriate, and, without limiting the generality of that power, may

(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution; and (b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs.

In using its general power to grant an interlocutory mandatory injunction, the Court must be satisfied there is a serious question to be tried, and that the balance of convenience lies "strongly in favour of the injunction on the particular facts of the case." Thor's Services Ltd. v. Park Georgia Properties Ltd. (1983), 42 B.c.L.R. 227 (S.C.), at p. 230. The rationale for this principle is that the purpose of granting an interlocutory mandatory injunction is not to afford the applicant the whole of the relief to which he would be entitled at trial if he succeeded, but to preserve the rights of the parties until they can be determined by a trial. In my view the principle is equally applicable where the Court is deciding whether to grant an interlocutory mandatory injunction, or relief in the nature thereof, under ss. 40, 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act.

A fortiori, where the relief granted is in the nature of a final order, which I consider to be the case here, the Court must be satisfied not only that it is appropriate to grant the relief sought on an application determined in a summary way prior to trial, but also that the circumstances indicate a trial of the action would not affect the outcome of the application: Douglas Lake Cattle Co. v. Smith (1991), 54 B.C.L.R. (2d) 52 (C.A.), at pp. 59 at seq. (per Cumming J.A.).

RBY Holdings Ltd. ("RBY") entered into a contract for the purchase by RBY of the strata lot in question in April, 1992 with Prudential Development Corp. ("Prudential"), the owner developer of Tilbury Corporate Centre. The sale closed on June 19, 1992, on which date RBY filed an application in the Land Title Office for registration of its interest as owner in fee simple of the strata lot. Title to the lot was subsequently issued to RBY.

On June 22nd RBY wrote Prudential:

...to inform you that the purchaser of the above described strata lot, RBY Holdings Ltd., intends to use the strata lot for the purpose of operating a crematorium and mortuary and to allay any concerns that you or the other owners of the strata corporation might have concerning this use.

The letter also states that:

Our business will be conducted by a subsidiary company called Personal Alternative Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd....

RBY's letter did not achieve its stated purpose of allaying the concerns of the developer. The managers of the development wrote in reply on July 8th on behalf of the developer:

...to strongly indicate that we do not approve of the use of the above noted strata lot for this type of business use.

The property managers went on to say in effect that they felt it would be appropriate to call a general meeting of all strata lot owners in order to discuss the matter and set forth a set of rules and regulations (by-laws) pertaining to the use of all strata lots.

Three further paragraphs from the property managers' letter of July 8, 1992, sum up their feelings at the time:

By permitting the use of this type of business within this prestigious and strategic industrial/retail business park; (sic) we would probably invite the unwanted 'cynical' disrespect from other business operators, property owners or their visitors and customers.

We cannot imagine that the other business operators and or the unit owners would have purchased the other units within this complex if they knew in advance that your firm would be operating this type of business within these premises. It is not fair for these and other neighbouring owners to accept your type of business after the fact. It will have a detrimental affect upon future re-sales. It is therefore our opinion that a majority of the other strata lot Owners, as well as the 12 strata lot owners that we represent directly; (sic) will NOT support or approve of this type of 'proposed' business use.

The property managers correctly predicted that the reaction of the other unit owners would not be favourable to RBY. Norman Sheren, the vice-president of Prudential, in his affidavit filed September 25, 1992, in a separate action in this Court, brought by Prudential against RBY to have the contract of sale between it and RBY rescinded and the strata lot reconveyed to Prudential, amongst other relief, on the ground RBY, at the time of purchase, falsely represented it intended to carry on a financial and investment business, deposes as follows:

During the next week, I was in contact with the other owners in the complex, and (Prudential's) tenants in the complex concerning (RBY's) intentions. The reaction of the other owners and tenants in the complex can only be described as one of horror and shock.

On a less emotional note, certain strata lot owners have filed affidavits in this proceeding in which they express concern that their businesses will suffer as the result of the reluctance of customers to attend their premises and of their employees to work there, and that their units will suffer a devaluation on re-sale, if the petitioners carry on a crematorium and mortuary business within the strata complex.

On August 6, 1992, the first annual general meeting of the strata corporation was held. Members of the strata council were elected at that meeting. A draft resolution, which proposed an amendment to the existing by-laws of the strata corporation by prohibiting an owner from, amongst other things, using "his strata lot for any purpose in connection with a mortuary or crematorium or the handling, disposal or burial of human remains", was distributed to the owners of strata lots in attendance at the meeting and "discussed". No vote on the resolution appears to have been taken.

Under date of August 12, 1992, the petitioner's solicitors wrote the property managers requesting permission pursuant to s. 115(h) of the Condominium Act to undertake the following work:

1. Installation of Stack - The stack will extend approximately 3' above the roof line. The opening in the roof to accommodate the stack will be approximately 42" in diameter.
2. B.C. Gas Installation - B.C. Gas has previously provided Dorset with specifications regarding this work. The gas line will be installed underground from the existing stub to the connection on the north side of Unit 102.
3. Sanitary Sewer hookup - This work will be done entirely within Unit 102.
4. Installation of Exhaust Fan in the Roof - The vent will require an opening of approximately 18" in diameter.

By memorandum dated the following day (August 13th) RBY wrote, with respect to item 2, that:

B.C. Gas will tie into existing gas line at the stub - run a new line underground to connect to the meter which will be installed on the back wall of our unit (on the north side of the rear exit door). All work will be completed by B.C. Gas. The Mechanical Contractor will install the internal gas line to the meter.

and, with respect to item 4, that:

The opening required is approximately 8 inches in diameter to accommodate at (sic) 100 CFM exhaust fan.

Section 115(h) of the Act provides: 115 An owner shall

(h) receive the written permission of the strata council before under- taking alterations to the exterior or structure of the strata lot, but permission shall not be unreasonably withheld.

I pause here to note that during his submissions in reply, counsel for the petitioner, Mr. Doyle, invited the Court to deal with the applications before it on the basis only items 3 and 4 were in is sue. This is not to suggest the petitioner abandons its claim with regard to the installation of the stack and 42 foot gas line. However, it became clear during the course of argument that they, especially the gas line, involve difficult questions relating to the use of the common property of the corporation and whether there exists an implied easement in favour of the petitioner to use the common property for the purpose of installing services essential to the enjoyment of its strata lot, which must necessarily be resolved upon a trial of the action. The strata council met on August 18th. The minutes of the meeting record that:

Application and letters were received from the Owners of Units #102, (viz; the petitioner) these were presented to the Council membership. The two Gas installation options were described. (#1; pipe run through #103 or #2; dig trench along back of building 'A' for new supply pipe.)

The Council was concerned about the representation and number of Council Members for this Meeting; and also felt that this matter and application would be best discussed and reviewed at a General meeting of all Owners/Representatives. Council was concerned about making such decisions regarding common property alterations on behalf of the whole complex Ownership without the balance of Owners being represented.

The minutes also record council agreed to hold a general meeting of all owners on September 3rd to discuss the petitioner's application and a proposed set of by-laws.

Notice of the September 3rd meeting was given by notice dated August 18th. However, under date of August (sic) 1st, 1992, the property managers wrote the strata lot owners expressing concern that the requirements of the Act regarding the amount of notice time and provision of certain documents for the passing of a special resolution amending the by-laws had not been met. They set September 17th as the new date for the meeting of the owners.

On September 17th, the meeting was adjourned to September 24th on the ground "the required quorum as per the Condominium Act was NOT achieved within one-half hour of the meeting start time." A meeting of strata council was set for September 23rd.

What, if anything, took place at the meeting of the strata corporation scheduled for September 24th is not apparent from the evidence before the Court. However, on September 24th, RBY received an unsigned letter dated September 23, 1992, purportedly from strata council, and reading as follows:

In reference to your request to council for alterations to your strata lot and common property, the council has taken the position that your proposed use of Strata Lot 102 is in breach of the bylaws. In the event that a court should determine that this is not the case, your application for alterations to your unit and work on the common property still requires substantial amendments as per the attached architects requirements. (Reference Sanford Letter September 22, 1992) In addition, the application for work on the common property requires specific permission of the Strata Corporation pursuant to the Condominium Act.

By letter dated September 25, 1992, RBY's solicitors sought "particulars of the breaches of the by-laws" alleged by strata council from the respondents' solicitors. None has been provided.

In his affidavit filed September 25, 1992, Neil Crofton, president of the strata council, deposes:

4. The intended use the Petitioners proposed for their Strata Lot will contravene Sections 115 and 131 of the Condominium Act in that the conducting of the business of a crematorium and mortuary on Strata Lot 102 will:

(a) Unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment by other owners and visitors of the common property, common facilities or other assets of the Strata Corporation;

(b) Will cause a nuisance or hazard;

(c) Will not comply strictly with the By-Laws of the Strata Corporation which were in effect at the time of the purchase; and

(d) Will be injurious to the reputation of the building.

In my judgment, Mr. Crofton, in this paragraph, neatly focuses upon the error into which the strata council has fallen in refusing the petitioner permission to hook up to the sanitary sewer and instal the exhaust fan. Council has, in effect, failed to distinguish between the petitioner's entitlement in common with other strata lot owners to obtain certain services, such as sewer, water and gas, and to instal an exhaust fan, in order to make its unit functional, and the petitioner's actual use of its unit. Neither the strata council nor the corporation has advanced any valid reason for refusing permission for the items of work requested. The decision is based solely upon a determination to prevent the petitioner from using its premises for the purposes of a mortuary and crematorium. In so acting, I think permission has been "unreasonably withheld", contrary to s. 115(h) of the Condominium Act, and that "the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to ..."the petitioner as an owner of a strata lot, contrary to s. 42(a) of the Act.

An order will therefore go in the terms referred to on page 2 of these reasons.

I stress, however, that in reaching this conclusion I have not dealt with the petitioner's intended use of its premises.

The property is zoned by the Municipality of Delta as "I-2 Heavy Industrial". Permitted uses include crematoriums and mortuaries. The petitioner, according to Lawrence Little, a director of the respondents Pacific Crematorium Limited and Personal Alternatives Cremation and Memorial Services Ltd., has obtained all regulatory approvals necessary to commence operations "other than those which are specifically dependant upon completion of the services and subsequent completion of the improvements and installation of equipment". This does not, however, address the respondent's fundamental concern: does the intended use of the strata lot by the petitioners constitute a use which "may be illegal or injurious to the reputation of the building", contrary to s. 131 of the Condominium Act, or which will "unreasonably interfere with (the) use and enjoyment by other owners, their families or visitors" of the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation, or "cause a nuisance or hazard to any occupier of a lot, whether an owner or not, or his family", contrary to s. 115(d) and s. 115(e) of the Act.

It is, as I understand the arguments of counsel, common ground between the parties that it is not appropriate to resolve these questions on this application.

The petitioner seeks narrow relief, that is, the granting of an interim mandatory injunction or a final order requiring the strata council or strata corporation to grant written permission for the work requested. Whilst upon first impression the issue of the intended use of the premises might be thought to be intertwined with the question before me, I agree, in light of the reasoning which has led me to the conclusion I have reached with respect to the petitioner's application, that the two issues are quite separate. Moreover, the petitioner argues an application to enjoin the petitioner's use of the premises ought to be made upon a specific application by the respondent so that the respondent will be required to give an undertaking as to damages.

For its part, the respondent argues the question of whether the petitioner's use of the premises might constitute a nuisance or be harmful to the building should be the subject of a separate application.

The petitioner is entitled to its costs on Scale 3.

Shane Vold, Dawn Vold and Valerie Jean Cadillac-Manson, Petitioners, and The Owners, Strata Corporation 202, Respondent

[1993] B.C.J. No. 344

Victoria Registry No. 3441/92

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Melvin J. Heard: December 8, 1992 and January 18, 1993. Judgment: February 15, 1993. Filed: February 16, 1993.

Counsel for the Petitioners: F. Hunter. Counsel for the Respondent: W. R. Lambert.

MELVIN J.:-- By petition issued October 15, 1992, the petitioners seek the following, inter alia, relief:

1. An order prohibiting the Strata Corporation 202 from levying a special assessment of $12,139.95 against the petitioners or alternatively, an order exempting the petitioners from that special assessment;
2. Alternatively, an order limiting the expenditures of the Strata Council to $500.00.

The petitioners also seek further relief relating to membership of the Strata Council, accounting and special costs.

The petitioners allege that the respondent's conduct from December 19, 1991 violates s. 42 of the Condominium Act based on an allegation that the affairs of the Strata Corporation were exercised in a manner oppressive to the petitioners or that certain acts or resolutions of the Corporation were unfairly prejudicial to them.

Of necessity some background is necessary. The petitioners are owners of Strata Lots 2 and 1 respectively of Strata Corporation 202. The Corporation comprises 28 strata lots, the majority of which are presently owned by 3840 Holdings Corp. (hereafter called "3840"). 3840 initially acquired 15 lots in December of 1991 and acquired the balance of its lots thereafter.

In January of 1992 the petitioner Shane Vold was advised by one Les Bjola, a director of 3840, that 3840 had purchased a number of strata lots and wanted to buy them all including Strata Lot 2 which was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Vold. Mr. Vold advised Mr. Bjola that he and his wife were not interested in selling. Shortly thereafter, according to Mr. Vold, certain work was carried out on the strata property. Mr. Vold inquired of Mr. Bjola as to the timing of a meeting of the Strata Corporation to determine what was occurring and he was advised by Mr. Bjola that a meeting would be held in "approximately 2 weeks' time".

Contrary to Mr. Vold's expectation no meeting was held of the strata owners or Strata Council. Work proceeded at the complex without a meeting of the Council or the owners; consequently, Mr. Vold instructed his solicitor to write Mr. Bjola on April 24, 1992. The following paragraph appears in that letter:

No annual general meeting of the owners of Strata Plan 202 has been held since May 25, 1991. Insofar as no new election of a Strata Council has taken place and no new resolutions have been authorized by either the owners or the Strata Council authorizing the expenditures taking place on the common property at your direction, we wish to make clear that any expenditures are for your personal account and not the responsibility of the owners of the strata plan. In the event there has been an annual or extraordinary general meeting which our clients have not received notice of, we would appreciate your providing us with copies of the notice of meeting and the minutes.

This letter apparently resulted in notice of an Annual General Meeting being issued which was received by Mr. Vold on May 4, 1992 setting May 19, 1992 at 7:30 p.m. for the Annual General Meeting which was to consider:

1. Approve a Budget for the next year of operation of the Strata Corporation (sic); a draft budget is attached.
2. Election of Strata Council.
3. Approve special resolution to levy a special assessment to pay for the costs of the renovations as itemised on the attached list.
4. Approve by laws amending and adding to the statutory by laws (Part 5 of the Condominium Act); copies of the draft bylaws are attached as Schedule A.

The minutes of the May 19th Annual General Meeting disclosed the following were present or were represented by proxy (pursuant to s. 124(3) of the Condominium Act):

1. 3840 Holdings Corp., owner of 19 lots represented by Mr. Bjola and Mr. Fowler.
2. The petitioners Mr. and Mrs. Vold, owner of Lot 2.
3. The petitioner Manson, owner of Lot 1, by proxy held by her husband.
4. Mrs. Stones, owner of Lot 19, by proxy held by Mr. Bjola.
5. Mr. and Mrs. Melvin, owners of 5 lots, by proxy held by Mr. Bjola. At the meeting an operating budget for 1992 was approved, a motion to set the number of Strata Council at 3 was carried with the petitioners opposed, and a motion to elect Mr. and Mrs. Melvin and Mr. Bjola as Strata Council members was passed with the petitioners opposed.

As a result of the foregoing Mr. Bjola and Mr. and Mrs. Melvin effectively controlled the Strata Council. New business at the Annual General Meeting resulted in the special assessment at issue in these proceedings, being approved with the petitioners opposed. The foregoing resolutions were easily passed as Mr. Bjola, representing 3840 Holdings Corp. and others by proxy, effectively controlled the proceedings.

It is of interest to note that in March of 1992, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin entered into a contract of purchase and sale of their 5 strata corporation lots with 3840, which sale was to complete on June 30, 1992. It is not surprising then that Mr. Melvin deposed in his affidavit sworn January 12, 1993 that he was informed on his return to Canada "sometime in June of 1992" by Mr. Bjola of the election of himself and his wife as members of the Strata Council. The newly created Strata Council met immediately following the Annual General Meeting at 9:30 p.m. on May 19, 1992 with the following present pursuant to the minutes of that meeting: (1) Mr. Les Bjola and (2) by proxy, Michael Melvin and Ethel Melvin. At that meeting Mr. Bjola was elected chairman with sole bank signing authority, Michael Melvin and Ethel Melvin were elected vice-chairman and secretary/treasurer respectively.

The meeting authorized 3840 to carry out renovations approved by the special assessment and to be the project manager. Consequently, work continued and ultimately this litigation ensued.

There is no doubt that the Strata Corporation's premises needed some repair and that the repairs carried out enhanced the value of the units. However, the mere fact of prospective enhancement of value does not, in my view, determine the issue of alleged oppression or unfairly prejudicial acts.

One issue that is to be resolved is the validity of the meeting of the Strata Council and the resolutions passed thereat on May 19, 1992. It is to be noted that pursuant to s. 124(3) of the Condominium Act persons entitled to vote at annual general meetings of the strata corporations may do so by proxy:

124. (3) One third of the persons entitled to vote present in person or by proxy constitutes a quorum.

There is no comparable provision for strata council proceedings. In my opinion, when considering the legislative scheme and the quorum requirements for strata council meetings as set forth in s. 119, the "proxy vote" omission relating to strata council meetings was intentional. Consequently, I am satisfied that the resolutions of the Strata Council on May 19, 1992 are invalid. The resolutions effectively allowed 3840 to contract with itself.

Regardless of the validity of the Strata Council proceedings on that date, the overall series of events must be considered to determine whether or not the affairs of the Strata Corporation were being conducted in an oppressive manner.

Section 42 of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself; or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself.

Section 43 of the Condominium Act clothes the court with the authority to make the interim or final orders it considers appropriate and without limiting the generality of that the court may direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution.

Oppression has been the subject of a number of judicial comments, mainly in the context of litigation between shareholders in a corporation. In my view, the analogy between the strata corporation owner and shareholders of a corporation is appropriate (see s. 224 of the Company Act).

In Elder v. Elder & Watson, Limited, [1952] S.C. 49 at p. 60, Lord Keith stated:

Oppression involves, I think, at least an element of lack of probity or fair dealing to a member in the matter of his proprietary rights as a shareholder.

In Nystad v. Harcrest Apartments Limited (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 39 (B.C.S.C.), McEachern C.J.S.C. (as he then was) stated:

... as pointed out by Lord Keith in Scottish Co-op. "oppression ... may take various forms", implying that the concept is fairly open-ended. At a minimum, however, it seems there must be an element of lack of probity (adherence to the highest principles and ideals) or fair dealing to a shareholder in the matter of his proprietary rights as a shareholder: per Lord Keith in Scottish Co-op. [[1958] 3 All E.R. 66 (H.L.)]

"Good faith" according to Black's Law Dictionary, 5th ed. (1979), has no technical meaning but is a term used "to describe that state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud, and, generally speaking, means being faithful to one's duty or obligation", or "An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render a transaction unconscientious". This definition leaves little room for a lack of probity or fair dealing and it therefore appears that there may be no "oppression" remedy open to the injured minority shareholder when the directors have acted in good faith.

The minutes of the Annual General Meeting of May 19, 1992 indicate that the meeting was properly convened and the Strata Council was elected. However, when considering the application of the foregoing principles to the facts in the case at bar, one should look at the cumulative effect of the conduct complained of. In that respect, the evidence discloses the following:

1. A pattern of strata lot acquisition by 3840.
2. The expenditure of money without budget or authority by 3840.
3. A delay until May 19, 1992 of a meeting.
4. The continued expenditure of funds relating to repairs and maintenance without authority prior to the May 19, 1992 meeting.
5. A request by the petitioner Shane Vold for a meeting.

6. The only response by 3840 to a meeting occurs when Mr. Vold's solicitor writes advising Mr. Bjola that he or his company proceed at its peril.

7. That there is no reason why a meeting could not have been held before any work was done or any money expended on the premises.

8. The Annual General Meeting of May 19, 1992 was controlled by 3840 by virtue of its ownership of a number of lots and its proxy votes.

9. The Melvin proxies were obtained by Mr. Bjola when it was known to Mr. Bjola and 3840 that the Melvins had entered into a contract to sell their interest to 3840. Consequently, the Melvins had no real or substantial interest in the meetings of the Corporation or of the Council.

10. The Strata Council meeting was a sham by reason of the defect created by using proxy votes and, in addition, by virtue of the Melvins having sold their interest in the Strata Corporation. There is no evidence that the special assessment would affect them.

11. After the Melvins' sale of June 30, 1992 was complete, 2 vacancies on the Strata Council were not filled until 1993.

In my opinion, what emerges is a course of conduct on behalf of 3840 through Mr. Bjola which was designed to ensure that the exclusive control of the Corporation remained in the hands of Mr. Bjola and 3840. The totality of the conduct, in my view, demonstrates bad faith and oppressive conduct. The petitioners were effectively prevented from participating in the government of the Strata Corporation through participation in the Strata Council. It is clear that Mr. Bjola through 3840 wished to acquire all of the strata units and embarked upon a course with that objective in end. In the course of doing so, he was prepared to expend monies directly or through 3840 without seeking authority of the Strata Corporation or its Council.

With reference to the relief claimed by the petitioners, I am satisfied that none of the expenditures forming part of the special assessment should be considered as emergencies. Section 49 of the Condominium Act provides:

49. Unless otherwise provided by a bylaw added to Part 5, a strata council shall not, except in emergencies, authorize, without authorization by a special resolution of the strata corporation, an expenditure exceeding $500 which was not set out in the annual budget of the corporation and approved by the owners at a general meeting.

It should be noted that prior to the May 19, 1992 Annual General Meeting no Strata Council meeting was held to deal with the expenditures at issue. However, more importantly, none of the expenditures can be considered as emergency expenditures. All items could easily have formed the subject of a meeting if 3840 or Mr. Bjola desired prior to embarking upon the work or incurring expenses.

The duties and powers of a strata corporation are relevant on the issue of the relief claimed by the petitioners. Certain expenses incurred which are reflected in the special assessment reflect accounts outstanding with public or local authorities. The Condominium Act provides in s. 34(2)(a) and 34(3) as follows:

34. (2) The strata corporation may

(a) carry out repairs or work required by the notice or order of a competent public or local authority on a strata lot, whether authorized by the owner or not; (my underlining)

(3) Money spent under subsection (2) is due and payable to the strata corporation on demand, and shall be added to the levy on that owner under section 35 for the following month.

Consequently, the accounts of the Greater Victoria Water Board, British Columbia Hydro, and funds paid to carry out work as required by the Capital Regional District are properly the subject of the assessment as the owners are obligated regardless of authorization.

Consequently, I am satisfied that the course of conduct of 3840 and Mr. Bjola amounts to an exercise of the affairs of Strata Corporation 202 and the Strata Council of that Corporation in a manner oppressive to the petitioners. The petitioners are declared exempt from the special assessment created by the May 19, 1992 meeting except for their proportion of the outstanding accounts and the funds paid for work required by the Capital Regional District as aforesaid.

The petitioners seek further relief with reference to their participation as members of the Strata Council of the respondent Corporation. In that respect, s. 118(4) provides where there are less than 4 owners the council shall consist of all owners. In that respect, it would appear that as 26 of the strata lots are now owned by 3840 and the remaining are owned by the petitioners, that all of the owners are entitled to be members of the Strata Council. Section 119(3) provides that where the council consists of 4 or less members a quorum of the council is 2. Insofar as the petitioners require a court order to give effect to the terms of the statutory provision a declaration shall be made that all the owners (which includes the petitioners) are entitled to be and shall be members of the Strata Corporation's Council (on the assumption that at this date there are 4 or less owners).

The petitioners seek a special order as to costs on the basis that if an order for costs is obtained against the Strata Corporation it, in effect, is proportionally passed on to them and would form part of an assessment that they would have to pay to the Strata Corporation which, in turn, would result in them, in effect, paying a portion of their own costs. When one considers the conduct of 3840 and Mr. Bjola, I am satisfied that the petitioners should recover their costs and that they should be exempt from any assessment with reference to those costs. As neither Mr. Bjola or 3840 are parties to this litigation an award of costs against either of them would be inappropriate. However, an order of costs in the foregoing fashion will ensure that the costs of the petitioners will be recoverable from the Corporation without exposing themselves to liability.

Can-Pac Energy Consultants Ltd., Plaintiff, and Carriage Management Inc. and The Owners, Strata Plan VR. 201, Defendants

[1990] B.C.J. No. 1627

49 B.C.L.R. (2d) 139

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Leggatt J. Heard: January 10, 11 and March 23, 1990 Judgment: July 10, 1990

Counsel for the plaintiff: A.R.S. Gangji. Counsel for the defendant, Strata Plan VR. 201: R.N. Crockford. G.R. Clark, acting on behalf of Carriage Management Inc.

LEGGATT J.:-- This matter was heard prior to the coming into force of the Supreme Court Act, S.B.C. 1989, c. 40, on July 1st, 1990, in my then capacity as a County Court Judge.

The plaintiff company is engaged in the sale and servicing of a patented heat saving device, using micro-chip technology. Carriage Management Inc. were the building managers operating under a written contract for the Strata owners at the time the contract was entered into for the heat saving device. The defendant, Strata Plan VR. 201 own and operate an apartment block called "TreeLynn" in North Vancouver, B.C.

On November 24, 1983 following a telephone conversation between a representative of the plaintiff and Gary Clark, principal of Carriage, the plaintiff forwarded a proposal concerning the installation of an energy management system on a 90 day trial. This proposal was the Agreement later signed by Mr. Clark on December 19, 1983. On November 25, 1983, Mr. Clark forwarded this proposal to Mr. Naylor, a member of the Strata Council giving "our strongest recommendation that this proposal be authorized by your strata council". No reference exists of a December 19, 1983 meeting wherein Carriage says the proposal was formerly approved by Council, however, the Agreement was signed by Carriage on December 19, 1983.

The agreement contained the following provisions:

Purchaser hereby represents and warrants to Seller as follows:

1. That they agree to pay for said E.M. System the purchase price of 2 systems x $1600.00 = $3200.00 for two apt. blocks on Frome Avenue, Lynn Valley payable as follows:

- a) by cash payment in full on complete installation of the System. (struck out and initialled)
- b) or by Lease agreement through any financial institution subject to credit approval. (struck out and initialled)
- c) additional Energy Management Sales Agreement. The additional sales agreement provided under clause 4 the following:

Until the E.M. System is purchased, the Purchaser agrees to pay 75% of the savings to Can-Pac created through the installation of the E.M. System as "Service Fees." The calculation of the savings will be based as per historical data and as set out in Clause 11 of the contract "Calculation of Energy Savings."

Sometime after the system was installed at Tree Lynn but before the expiry of the 90 day trial period, Carriage was replaced as building manager. Upon reviewing Carriage's 1983 financial report at a March 1, 1984 meeting, the Council directed their new managers, Bayside Properties Services Ltd. to obtain an explanation for the $400.00 deposit paid to the plaintiff (at this point, the 90 day approval provision was still in operation). Accordingly, in early March 1984, Lyn Creamer, on behalf of Bayside, contacted the plaintiff requesting a copy of the Agreement. A copy was forwarded to her on March 7, 1984, at which time the plaintiff requested that copies of hydro bills be forwarded to them for the purpose of calculating the service fees due under the Addendum Agreement. On March 8, 1984, Lyn Creamer signed a form releasing utility bills for Tree Lynn to the plaintiff for the purpose of calculating the energy savings. Later, on April 9, 1984, she also forwarded past hydro bills to January 1, 1984 to the plaintiff. Thereafter, the plaintiff regularly invoiced the Strata Corporation for the calculated savings.

On June 7, 1984 the Council instructed Bayside to notify the plaintiff to remove the system on the stated ground that any savings realized did not justify the purchase or lease of the equipment. In response to the Council's demand, the plaintiff simply refused to remove the equipment until they were paid in accordance with the terms of the Agreement.

Thereafter, the parties agreed to disagree. The council refused to send further hydro accounts or to authorize B.C. Hydro to turn over their accounts. Accordingly, the plaintiff invoiced on the basis of the average savings it calculated on the initial hydro accounts. The council simply ignored the matter for a very long time while the plaintiff continued to claim a percentage of the calculated savings pursuant to the terms of the agreement. The calculations of savings is complicated. Having reviewed the formula under the terms of the written contract, or using the standard formula outlined by Environment Canada, I find that there were measurable savings with respect to the installation of the device.

The defendant, Strata Corporation denies that Carriage had the authority to bind it to the contract. I disagree. There is little doubt that Carriage was the corporation's agent, with actual authority to manage and administer the common property at Tree Lynn and with authority to perform all acts usually performed by property managers.

An agent who is hired to conduct a particular type of business has implied authority to do whatever is incidental to the conduct of that business. While the management agreement did not give specific authority to enter into this agreement, in my opinion, this type of agreement falls within the category of things that a property manager would usually do in the execution of its duties. That is, a prudent property manager would seek out ways of making the owners' property more efficient and cost effective. In the agreement Carriage had with the defendant, Strata, Carriage agrees it will not make expenditures in excess of $100.00 except for recurring operating expenses and emergency repairs, without obtaining the council's approval. This stipulation was complied with by the November 25, 1983 letter from Carriage to Mr. Naylor enclosing the proposal and urging Council to approve installation of the system. Clearly, neither Carriage nor the Corporation questioned Carriage's authority to deal with the plaintiff. Carriage seems simply to have been performing its duties as manager in compliance with the terms of the management agreement.

Accordingly, Carriage was the corporation's agent with implied authority to enter into the Agreement on its behalf. This Agreement therefore was binding and created contractual rights between the plaintiff and the Strata Corporation.

Although not pleaded the Strata Corporation has raised as a defence, s. 49 of the Condominium Act which reads as follows:

Maximum expenditure by strata corporation

49. Unless otherwise provided by a bylaw added to Part V, a strata council shall not, except in emergencies, authorize, without authorization by a special resolution of the strata corporation an expenditure exceeding $500.00 which was not set out in the annual budget of the corporation and approved by the owners at a general meeting.

(emphasis mine) I granted leave to the defendant Strata Council to amend and argue this issue.

At no time did the defendant Carriage Management attempt to obtain any authorization by special resolution for this expenditure pursuant to s. 49. Counsel for the plaintiff argue that this is a heat savings device and therefore does not constitute an expenditure exceeding $500.00. I disagree. Clearly, the use of the word expenditure in s. 49 means a budgetary expenditure. This section of the Condominium Act as far as I can discover from the reports, has not previously been the subject of litigation in British Columbia. The main issue with respect to s. 49 is whether it renders the agreement void or merely voidable. Chitty on Contracts, Vo. 25 at p. 22-23 sets out the law in respect of void and voidable contracts. A void contract is really no contract at all since it creates no legal rights between the parties. Accordingly, neither party can sue or be sued on the contract. However, a voidable contract is one which creates legal rights as between the parties but which may be avoided by either party. Examples of voidable contracts are those created under misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, minority, unsoundness of mind, drunkenness or by statute. Until the right to avoid has been exercised, "a voidable contract is valid and binding as between the parties."

Hely-Hutchinson v. Brayhead Ltd. [1968] 1 Q.B. 549 is an English case where one Richards, the defacto managing director of the defendant company, purported to commit the defendant to guaranteeing the indebtedness of the plaintiff, another of the defendant's directors, in the circumstances where the plaintiff was required to infuse money into a second company. In the end, the plaintiff was called upon to make good his guarantee and sought indemnification from the defendant pursuant to the commitment given by Richards. Article 99 of the defendant's memorandum and articles and s. 199 of the British Company Act required that a director disclose his interest in any contract or proposed contract which the company was intending to make. The plaintiff and Richards had failed to disclose to the remaining board members that the plaintiff had an interest in the second company as president and director. When the defendant was called upon to make good its commitment its defence was that the guarantee was invalid since it was not in compliance with s. 199 and art. 99. Lord Denning held that the non-disclosure rendered the contract of guarantee voidable but not void. Lord Wilberforce held that since s. 199 did not attach any consequence to the failure to disclose the contract was merely voidable at the company's option.

I have come to the conclusion that failure to comply with s. 49 renders the agreement voidable at the option of the Strata Corporation.

I have concluded therefore, that Carriage had authority to act as the Strata Corporation's agent and to bind it to this contract. I find the agreement is a legally binding contract for the supply of the system. On June 7, 1984, council instructed their manager to advise the plaintiff to remove his equipment. The letter reads as follows:

As Management Agents for the above-referenced Strata Corporation we advise that your various communications regarding the energy management systems installed at the above-referenced property were discussed at length at the recent Strata Council meeting.

We further advise that the Council of Owners has requested that you take immediate steps to remove the two micro processor computers from this development. Council is of the opinion that the savings realized do not justify the purchase or lease of this equipment.

We are advising the Building Manager, Mr. Herb Eultgen of Suite 112, Telephone 986-1056, to permit access and removal of this equipment.

I have come to the conclusion that council had exercised its option under law on a voidable contract. Its legal obligation for payment thereunder ended on June 7, 1984. I will leave it to counsel to work out the exact amount owing as of that date. If they are not able to do so, they may appear before me and I will set a figure. The plaintiffs are entitled to prejudgment interest from June 7, 1984. As to costs I would estimate the amount owing on the contract as of June 7, 1984 to be in a nominal range but the defendant Strata Council failed to plead the provisions of the Condominium Act and it is upon this issue that I have based my decision.

I have come to the conclusion that the only fair result is that each party bear their own costs and accordingly I make no award as to costs.

681841 Alberta Ltd. and Prominence Management Company Ltd., applicants (respondents), and Ron Wise, respondent (appellant)

[1998] A.J. No. 329 Action No. 9801-01470

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Fruman J. March 24, 1998. Counsel: Ron Wise, appellant, unrepresented. Eva Freitag, for the respondents.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT [para1] FRUMAN J.:-- Ron Wise was employed as resident manager of the Anderson Place condominium complex. Unhappy with the abrupt termination of his services, he filed a builders' lien against several units in the complex. Master Alberstat found the lien to be invalid and ordered its discharge. Wise appeals from Master Alberstat's order.

FACTS

[para2] 681841 Alberta Ltd. is the owner of a number of condominium units in the Anderson Place complex, located in southwest Calgary. Prominence Management Company Ltd. is 681841's agent. Wise was hired by Prominence to act as a resident manager to perform various cleaning and maintenance services for Anderson Place. He received a salary and was permitted to live rent-free in a unit located in the complex. In addition, Wise performed various services in connection with the renovation, rent collection, marketing and sale of units Prominence owned in the complex. He received additional compensation for these services.

[para3] While neither Wise nor Prominence dispute that Wise provided services in two capacities, the contractual picture is blurry. No written agreement between Wise and Prominence was submitted in evidence. A list of responsibilities contained in a document entitled "Resident Manager Duties" does not include such items as showing suites. Even the condominium board seemed unclear about Wise's responsibilities. In minutes of the October 21, 1997 board meeting, for example, Wise was asked to provide a description of his services.

[para4] On November 4, 1997 Prominence wrote Wise to notify him that his services in connection with the renovation and sale of their condominium units would no longer be required and were terminated with immediate effect. On December 6, 1997 Wise was terminated as resident manager. On January 16, 1998 Wise filed a builders' lien for $17,393 against 12 units in the Anderson Place complex. Prominence and 681841 applied for an order cancelling the registration of the lien. On February 12, 1998 Master Alberstat granted the order, which is the subject of the present appeal.

DETAILS OF THE LIEN AMOUNT

[para5] Wise provided services in two capacities: as resident manager of the Anderson Place complex and in connection with the sale and renovation of specific units owned by Prominence and 681841. Wise indicated that he was fully paid for his resident manager services and claimed no builders' lien. The lien relates to services provided in connection with the sale and renovation of units owned by Prominence and 681841.

[para6] The total amount claimed in the lien is $17,393. The amount is derived from the following items:

- * $8557 outstanding as at November 4, 1997, the date of the first termination letter. Wise did not provide detailed invoices, a description of the services or a calculation of the basis on which the fee was calculated. It appears that the services relate primarily to "removal of hazards" from landings, steps and the main driveway, which I take to mean cleaning and snow and ice removal;

- * $800 representing a damage deposit Wise alleges is owing to him; * $576 representing "on call service" costs relating to inspections made at night to prevent vandalism;

- * $1769 for unspecified parts, vendors and rentals incurred between November 4, 1997 and November 30, 1997;

- * $500 for consulting services for "roofing and troughing";

- * $1000 for Wise's costs to defend an action to force him to vacate his suite in the Anderson complex. Wise did not retain counsel and this amount represents an estimate of the value of his time;

- * $1200 for expected costs to file a lien. This amount represents an estimate of the value of the time Wise expected to spend.

- * $3000 representing the estimated value of equipment left on the premises. Neither a list of equipment nor individual values was provided. BUILDERS' LIENS: WORK AND SERVICES

[para7] Builders' liens are created by statute. They are extraordinary because they create a charge upon land and grant one class of creditors a preference not enjoyed by others. A statute creating a lien "must be given a strict interpretation in determining whether any lien-claimant is a person to whom a lien is given by it": Clarkson Co. v. Ace Lumber Ltd. (1963), 4 C.B.R. (N.S.) 116 at 120 (S.C.C.). For a lien to be valid the lienholder must prove that the lien fits squarely within the Act.

[para8] Section 4(1) of the Builders' Lien Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. B-12 provides that a lien may be registered on the estate or interest of the owner of the land in respect of which an improvement is being made, by a person who:

(a) does or causes to be done any work on or in respect of an improvement, or

(b) furnishes any material to be used in or in respect of an improvement. The lien may be claimed for so much of the price of work or materials as remains due.

[para9] A builders' lien can only be registered in respect of an improvement. That term is defined in s. 2 of the Act as "anything constructed, erected, built, placed, dug or drilled ... on or in land, except a thing that is neither affixed to the land nor intended to become part of the land". Many people provide goods and services which improve or enhance property. That alone will not form the basis for a valid builders' lien.

[para10] Work or services will support a builders' lien under s. 4(1) (a) of the Act if they are directly related to the process of construction: Leduc Estates Ltd. v. IBI Group (1992), 1 Alta. L.R. (3d) 369 (Q.B.), affirmed (1994), 15 Alta. L.R. (3d) 368 (C.A.); Hett v. Samoth Realty Projects Ltd. (1977), 76 D.L.R. (3d) 362 (C.A.). In Hett, the Alberta Court of Appeal held that a real estate developer retained as agent to initiate a development, assemble the necessary land, obtain municipal permits, arrange financing and oversee the construction of a real estate development did not provide work that would support a lien. Even though the services contributed to the total project, they were not directly related to the construction process.

[para11] In G. Newman Aluminum Sales Ltd. v. Snowking Enterprises Inc. (1980), 13 R.P.R. 275 (H.C.J.), the Ontario High Court held that maintenance services such as snow removal did not give rise to a lien. The right to a builders' lien does "not [extend] to everyone who does work connected with land": Calgary Landscaping Ltd. v. Hourly Real Estate Services Ltd. (1993), 11 Alta. L.R. (3d) 431 at 435 (Q.B.)

[para12] I have examined the items claimed by Wise. They are stated in vague terms and lack sufficient detail to support a claim. Even the broad categories of expenses do not show a direct contribution to the construction of any condominium units, or to any improvements upon them. This is borne out in the description of the work and services contained in the statement of lien filed by Wise. He describes them as "general repairs", "grooming and clean up servicing", "specialty consulting services" and "showings of suites".

[para13] The expenses Wise claims for the alleged damage deposit and legal costs are not in any way connected to work or services provided in respect of the condominium. The remaining costs, at best, relate to cleaning, maintenance and supervision. Wise fails to bring himself within the scope of s. 4(1) (a) of the Act. The work Wise provided to Prominence and 681841 does not relate to an improvement, as defined in the Act, and is not the type of work that can support a builders' lien.

[para14] Wise is equally unsuccessful under s.4(1) (b) of the Act, which deals with materials. In McDonald Supply Ltd. v. Abacus Cities Ltd. (1980), 75 Alta. L.R. (2d) 289 (C.A.), the Alberta Court of Appeal, citing the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Clarkson, found that material that is to be the subject of a lien must be incorporated into the finished structure or consumed in the process of construction. No lien is provided for chattels used in the premises after construction has been completed: McDonald Supply at 290.

[para15] Wise's supporting materials for his claim, while copious, are incomplete, disorganized and confusing. There is little independent back up documentation, although there are copies of receipts for $187.55 claimed as "parts". Wise has failed to prove that the parts were furnished for use in the process of construction or improvement of any of the Anderson Place condominium units. He speaks of equipment that has been left at the premises but does not delineate it. Equipment which remains on the site does not support a builders' lien, although its rental might. Section 4(4) of the Act contemplates rental of equipment to an owner and provides a lien for rental payments while the equipment is on a contract site. Wise did not prove any rental. The lien cannot be upheld under s. 4(1) (b) or s. 4(4) of the Act.

TIMING FOR FILING LIEN

[para16] My finding that the type of expenses claimed do not support a builders' lien disposes of this appeal in Prominence's and 681841's favour. I wish to comment, however, upon their contention that Wise's lien is invalid because it was not filed within the time limits prescribed by the Act.

[para17] Section 30(b)(ii) provides that a lien may be registered at any time within a period commencing when the lien arises and terminating 45 days from the day that the performance of services is completed or the contract to provide services is abandoned. Section 31 goes on to state that if the lien is not registered within that time limit, it ceases to exist.

[para18] Wise's services in connection with the renovation and sale of Prominence's units were terminated on November 4, 1997 in a letter on Prominence Realty Limited letterhead signed by Andrew S. Lau. A further letter, also dated November 4, confirms the termination. It is written on Prominence Management Company Ltd. letterhead and is signed by Daniel T. Green, residential property manager. Wise's services as resident manager were terminated on December 6, 1997 in a letter on Prominence Management Company Ltd. letterhead signed by Mr. Green.

[para19] The November 4 letters are clear and unequivocal. On the same day, Wise sent a letter of confirmation to Prominence, in which he acknowledged that his "rental manager" services had been terminated. Still on November 4, Wise sent a letter to the tenants of Anderson Place, in which he stated: "Effective today, I have been asked not to provide further services to the Rentals Division of Prominence Management" and "I have agreed not to represent their interests any longer ... ". Wise now contends that he was not effectively terminated from these responsibilities until December 6, 1997, and that he continued to supply partial services up to December 17, 1997. His lien relates to services in connection with the renovation and sale of units and not to his services as resident manager.

[para20] The evidence is conclusive that the effective date of Wise's termination in connection with renovations and sales was November 4, 1997. If these services were severable from his other duties, or were the subject of a separate contract, he would have 45 days from November 4, 1997 in which to file a lien. The deadline would be December 19, 1997. After that date the lien would cease to exist and a lien filed on January 16, 1998 would be beyond the time limit and invalid.

[para21] There are no doubt many situations in which a person is employed by the same entity to provide service in two distinct and severable capacities or under two separate contracts. Here, the arrangements were loose - unsupported by separate or, it appears, any written contracts or even a comprehensive description of duties. In these circumstances, it seems artificial to sever Wise's responsibilities and impose a deadline upon him to file a builders' lien from the date of termination of one set of duties, though he continued to provide and be compensated for the second set of duties. I have examined the submissions and evidence and cannot locate the factual or contractual barbed wire marking the end of one set of responsibilities and the beginning of the next. I am not alone in my difficulties. Even the condominium board did not have a clear understanding of Wise's duties.

[para22] The 45 day lien period would, therefore, commence on December 6, 1997 and a lien filed on January 16, 1998 would be within the time limit. I note that approximately $7,000 of the amount claimed in the lien relates to the period after November 4,

1997. Although the deadline for filing a lien is extended, I make no ruling that Wise has any legal entitlement to claim fees for the renovation and sale of units incurred after November 4, 1997, the acknowledged date of termination of those duties.

SUMMARY

[para23] Wise has failed to prove his lien, and it is therefore invalid. I uphold the order of Master Alberstat directing that the lien filed by Wise be removed and discharged. The appeal is dismissed. Prominence and 681841 are entitled to their costs in this appeal.

Bruce Greenberg, 477 Richmond Street West Limited, et al., plaintiffs, and Brian Thom, MTCC No. 1046, et al., defendants

Court File No. 99-CV-174950

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Lane J. September 14, 1999.

Counsel: Patricia Conway, for the defendants, moving parties. Nigel Campbell and Robert Brush, for the plaintiffs, responding on the motion.

[para1] LANE J. (endorsement):-- This action began life as an Application dated May 18, 1999, (99-CV-169705) in which the corporate plaintiffs, as owners of certain units in the defendant condominium corporation (MTCC), sought to annul resolutions of a general meeting whereby the plaintiff, Bruce Greenberg, was removed as a director of MTCC and the defendant, Michel Dorais, was elected in his place. Declarations were sought as to the invalidity of the resulting Board.

[para2] A Counter-Application was begun by MTCC claiming an order voiding certain contracts entered into by MTCC at times when Mr. Greenberg was on the Board, on grounds of alleged conflict of interest. In short, the allegations were that Mr. Greenberg caused MTCC to contract with other companies controlled by him on worse than market terms.

[para3] On the first return of these applications, on May 31, 1999, Ferrier J. made an interim order directing, inter alia, that, until the return of the applications, the affairs of MTCC were to be run by a Board consisting of Brian Thom and Kawlin Lee; that Messrs. Greenberg and Dorais were entitled to attend and participate in Board meetings, but not vote; and that the Board should restrict its activities to the ordinary course of business. He directed that the disputed contracts remain in place and payments be made in the ordinary course. He expressly directed that the parties were free to return to the Court for further assistance. The parties then agreed upon a return date for the applications of August 18, 1999.

[para4] The plaintiffs, then applicants, moved to convert the applications into an action, which the defendants, then respondents and counter-applicants, opposed. On August 18, 1999, Low J. made the order requested. In her endorsement Low J. wrote that the material before her indicated that MTCC might need to take actions beyond the ambit of day to day operations. She directed that the parties were free to apply to the court for a variation of the order of Ferrier J. if circumstances arise such that a variation was necessary in the interests of MTCC.

[para5] The defendants now move to vary the interim order. Speaking generally, they say that the interim order was made at a time when the outlook was for a speedy resolution of the dispute at a hearing in August of this year, some two and a half months after the interim order. It was thus designed as a short-term holding order. The reality of the present situation, they say, is that it will likely be next year at best and possibly 2001 by the time a trial can be held. At the least, the solution designed for three months should be revisited to test its validity for the much longer period now envisaged.

[para6] More specifically, the defendants say that the affairs of MTCC cannot be managed within the limited mandate of the interim Board. It has become apparent that in the past financial matters have been seriously mismanaged. Although certificates were issued by MTCC to purchasers of units certifying that there were substantial reserve funds, there is no money in the Reserve Fund. The corporation is running at a deficit of $70,000 and is struggling to meet its obligations. Some 55% of those obligations are to companies owned by Mr. Greenberg which must be paid under the current order. One such payment is to Mega Landmark, the property manager. An alternative contract is available with a competitor which would save MTCC $40,000 annually, including eliminating the expense of a superintendent. Another contract is with the plaintiff 477 Richmond Street West Limited ("477") whereby MTCC leases the rooftop from 477, even though the rooftop is part of the common elements of the condominium. The defendants say that MTCC must be set at liberty to address these and other financial issues, even if it means terminating the disputed contracts and, if so held, ultimately paying damages for so doing.

[para7] The defendants point out that parties to contracts are generally at liberty to break them and suffer the consequences in damages, except where the contract is one of the class that the court will order to be specifically performed or will grant an interlocutory injunction to restrain the breach. They say that a management contract is like a personal services contract and would not be specifically enforced or the subject of an injunction. Damages are clearly an adequate remedy if the Board terminates Mega wrongfully.

[para8] The plaintiffs say that no change can or should be made in the Order of Ferrier J. No change can be made because the same issues were before Low J. and she held that the defendants could apply "... if circumstances arise ..." which they submit means in the future, an implicit finding that the right circumstances did not exist before her. The issue of a change based upon the material before her is thus res judicata. I cannot read her decision this way. She explicitly stated that the material before her indicated that MTCC might need to take action. The phrase seized upon by the plaintiffs must be seen in this context. I think she opened the door for a motion based upon that material if the Board thought it necessary. Whether any change should be made is, of course, a different issue, but in approaching it I find I am not bound to consider only matter that has arisen since Low J.'s order.

[para9] I accept entirely the plaintiffs' submission that this is not an appeal from Ferrier J. Parenthetically, I say that if it was, it would fail for the Order which he made seems admirably constructed for the short-term situation which he faced. The issue is whether in the changed circumstances, particularly the longer delay until the issues can be resolved, the order should be amended.

[para10] The plaintiffs urge that no change should be made. They attack the bona fides of the defendants and of the present Board which is acting in a self-interested manner with the aim of damaging Mr. Greenberg. This is a new group of people who want to come in and change the whole landscape, the very situation that they found attractive when they bought. There is in these submissions an echo of a kind of divine right of Mr. Greenberg to keep the role he was able to play when he owned most of the units. But democracy is the rule in condominiums albeit tempered by procedural requirements.

[para11] The plaintiffs also urged that there would be doubt about the legitimacy of acts of the present Board beyond the ordinary course. However, counsel for the defendants noted that the Act covered the situation in s. 24(2) by virtue of which the Board's acts would be valid even though one or more members were improperly elected or not qualified under the Act.

[para12] It is important to recognize that the authority to govern the condominium is vested in the Board by the Act, not by the Court. The Court has imposed restrictions on the Board in the exercise of its authority and if those are removed, it will not constitute an approval of any particular act done thereafter by the Board.

[para13] Counsel for the plaintiffs agreed during argument that the change in time frame was significant, but submitted that, even so, there was no case for altering the Order. If there was to be any alteration, it should not be a blanket authorization to the Board to govern without limitation. There should be instead a concrete order containing limits to protect the plaintiffs until the hearing. The affidavit material, he said, disclosed that the Board did not have a concrete plan to place before the owners. That should be required of them.

[para14] Speaking of the management contract issue, counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the purpose of terminating it could only be to cut off the revenue flow to Mr. Greenberg. This was a matter of controversy among the owners and termination would upset the balance of the Order. In addition, the Board should not be allowed to terminate the assessment appeals that the condominium has been financing for a number of owners (primarily Mr. Greenberg); should not be allowed to terminate the rooftop lease; should not be allowed to use condominium funds to finance this litigation; and the Board should be required to present to the Court a comprehensive plan to deal with the deficit, including consideration of a levy.

[para15] In my view, the governance of the condominium should be returned to the Board as the statutory holder of that authority, subject only to restrictions designed to preserve the rights of the parties during the litigation. The Court cannot and ought not to manage the building. What was practical for a three-month period is no longer practical under the new time frame, bearing in mind the evidence that the corporation is under great financial pressure. A restriction on the management powers of the Board is the equivalent of an interlocutory injunction and the principles which ought to be applied must be similar. Thus, to restrain the termination of the management contract, there would have to be evidence of irreparable harm such that damages were not an adequate remedy. It is a contract for the payment of money in return for services: damages would be the appropriate remedy. As well, it is a contract to perform services requiring the existence of trust and confidence between the parties: as such it would be most unlikely that an order would be made for specific performance. Similarly, the rooftop lease is at heart a monetary transaction and not a lease such as of business or residential premises the occupancy of which ought to be protected. If the Board chooses to stop paying rent for an area it says the condominium already owns, and the Board turns out to be wrong, that can be sorted out by money payments.

[para16] In their Factum, the plaintiffs suggest that their claim for damages after the possible termination of the management contract or other arrangements, would be met by the allegation that the Court had authorized the terminations. That is simply not the case. The defendants have not asked for, and are not receiving, the approval of the Court for any such action.

[para17] The evidence satisfies me that the Board must be free to take such steps as may be required, in its opinion, to set the finances of the condominium on a sounder basis. Accordingly, the Order of Ferrier J. will be varied to delete the requirement that the Board restrict its activities to the ordinary course of business and the requirement that all payments under the contracts with the plaintiffs be made. The Board will be free to manage the affairs of the condominium corporation subject to the following limitations, which shall apply until final disposition of this litigation:

(a) the Board will not terminate the Assessment appeals without the written consent of the unit owners on whose behalf the corporation has been conducting them, but the Board is not bound by this Order to continue to fund those appeals;

(b) if the by-law authorizing the payment of the costs of the Assessment appeals is altered, the Board will not demand reimbursement of payments previously made on behalf of the owners appealing their assessments until those appeals have been finally decided or this litigation has been finally decided, whichever is the later;

(c) the Board will not fund the legal expenses of any party, including the corporation (which is merely a nominal party), for this present litigation.

[para18] All other terms of the Order of Ferrier J. will remain in force.

[para19] The defendants applied to have the Court name an auditor. As the material reveals that a general meeting of owners will have to be held to consider the proposed by-law permitting the holding of meetings of Directors by conference telephone, it seems preferable that the meeting decide whether it has confidence in the present auditor or not.

[para20] Costs reserved to the Trial Judge.

Docket No. C30389

Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Abella, Laskin and MacPherson JJ.A. Heard: July 20, 1999. Judgment: September 14, 1999. (17 paras.) On appeal from Gans J.

Counsel: Barry S. Wortzman, Q.C. and Sandra E. Dawe, for the appellants. Mark H. Arnold, for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

[para1] THE COURT:-- This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from the order of Gans J. on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 20 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. Gans J. granted summary judgment dismissing the appellants' claim for declaratory relief and for an order transferring the garage to the respondent Condominium Corporation, as well as the appellants' claim for damages for inducing breach of contract: [Gans J., however, ordered that the appellants' claim for damages for breach of the Garage Agreement could proceed to trial. The respondents seek to cross-appeal that order.

[para2] The appellants were the developers of a residential condominium complex in downtown Toronto. The respondents are past and present members of the board of directors of that complex, the York Condominium Corporation No. 75 ("YCC 75").

[para3] The dispute between the parties is over the meaning of an agreement relating to the garage of the condominium (the Garage Agreement). The appellants' principal submissions are twofold: (1) the motions court judge failed to apply the proper test for summary judgment; and (2) it was an implied term of the Garage Agreement that title be transferred to the Condominium Corporation within a reasonable period of time and the motions judge erred in holding that parole evidence was inadmissible as a 'factual matrix' to show that the parties always intended YCC 75 to take title to the garage. Specifically, the appellants contend that the word 'option' in the agreement is really a misnomer, and that the true nature of the garage agreement is one of purchase and sale. We do not agree that the intention of the parties can be taken to have been anything other than to have the word 'option' convey its usual commercial meaning. Accordingly, we would dismiss the appeal for the reasons that follow. FACTS

[para4] The appellants commenced this action in the wake of a threat by the respondents to sue them for the cost of repairs to the garage and for the payment of hydro arrears. The appellants then alleged that YCC 75 was in breach of the Garage Agreement because it had failed to exercise its option to purchase the garage. The appellants also alleged that the respondents had adopted a strategy to frustrate the garage becoming commercially viable - a prerequisite under the agreement for exercise of YCC 75's option.

[para5] YCC 75 was a low income housing project financed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC). To meet CMHC's financing requirements, the garage was organized as a separate condominium unit (not part of the common elements), initially to be owned by some of the appellants and to be operated under the terms of the Garage Agreement. Thus, some of the appellants are the legal title holders. The garage itself comprises one unit out of four hundred and ninety-two that make up the condominium. At the time of the execution of the Garage Agreement, both the developer and the board of YCC 75 were controlled by the appellants. Therefore, as the motions court judge put it, at paragraph 7 of the reasons for judgment: "In the fall of 1972, the plaintiffs [appellants] qua developers entered into the Garage Agreement ostensibly with themselves as the declarant on behalf of the Corporation [YCC 75] with respect to the ownership, use and operation of the Garage."

[para6] The material sections of the Garage Agreement provide:

Howard [the appellants] constructed the buildings and other improvements which form the condominium units and common elements managed by the Corporation;

Howard is the registered owner of all of the condominium units of the Corporation, and the said condominium units are being sold to purchasers on the basis that Howard will lease to the unit owners parking spaces in the underground parking garage ...

Pursuant to an agreement dated the 25th day of September, 1970 between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Howard, Howard is obliged to grant an option to the Corporation to purchase the said underground Garage as set out in Paragraph 11 of the said Agreement; Howard hereby grants to the Corporation the option to purchase the Garage on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

Howard shall manage the garage and be entitled to the income therefrom and be responsible for the expenses thereof, including mortgage interest, principal and taxes accruing due and payable prior to the time when the Corporation purchases the Garage.

The profit from the operation of the Garage, after allowing for a five percent (5%) management fee shall be applied by Howard in repayment of its equity in the Garage ...

Upon Howard being repaid its equity in the Garage, which equity is hereby agreed to be the sum of Twenty-four Thousand Eight Hundred and Forty-Five Dollars ($24,845.00), the Garage shall be offered for sale to the Corporation at the amount then outstanding on the mortgage ...

Howard, forthwith upon being repaid its equity in the Garage, shall notify the Corporation that its equity has been repaid and the Corporation shall have the irrevocable option to purchase the Garage within Ninety (90) days of the giving of such notice for the amount then owing on the said mortgage in favour of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The Corporation's option to purchase the Garage shall be exercised as hereinafter provided within such Ninety-day period after which time the option shall be null and void and Howard shall be entitled to retain ownership of the Garage or to dispose of the Garage as it shall see fit. [Emphasis added.]

DISCUSSION

[para7] The appellants submit that this court "redefined" the role of the motions court judge on a Rule 20 motion in two of its recent decisions: Dawson et al. v. Rexcraft Warehouse and Storage Inc. et al.; Pacific & Western Trust Co. v. Carroll (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257 and Aguonie v. Galion Solid Waste Material Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161. We disagree. These cases confirmed and perhaps elaborated on the existing jurisprudence under Rule 20, but they did not change that jurisprudence. Further, this court affirmed in two recent decisions that the test for summary judgment under Rule 20 remains as it has since the Ungerman and Ontario Jockey Club cases: V.K. Mason Construction Ltd. v. Canadian General Insurance Group Ltd. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 618 at 625 per Finlayson J.A., and Transamerica Occidental Life Insurance Co. v. Toronto-Dominion Bank (1999), 173 D.L.R. (4th) 468 where Osborne J.A. stated the following at pages 482-483:

The purpose of Rule 20 and the limitations on its scope are now well-established. See Irving Ungerman Ltd. v. Galanis (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 545 (C.A.). On all summary judgment motions, the core question is: has the moving party established that there is no genuine issue for trial. Rule 20.04(1) makes it clear that the party responding to a summary judgment motion, in this case the Insurers, may not rest on the pleadings, but must provide evidence from which the motions judge can conclude that there is a genuine issue for trial. See 11061590 Ontario Ltd. v. Ontario Jockey Club (1995), 21 O.R. (3d) 547 (C.A.).

A motions judge on a Rule 20 summary judgment motion, should not resolve issues of credibility, draw inferences from conflicting evidence, or from evidence that is not in conflict when more than one inference is reasonably available. As Borins J. (ad hoc) for this court, succinctly put it in Aguonie v. Galion Solid Waste Material (Ontario) Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161 (C.A.), at p. 173:

Evaluating credibility, weighing evidence, and drawing factual inferences are all functions reserved for the trier of fact.

Borins J.'s observations in Aguonie serve to reinforce Morden A.C.J.O.'s statements in Ungerman, which makes it clear that the mere existence of an issue of credibility will not defeat a motion for summary judgment. The issue of credibility must be a genuine issue. Morden A.C.J.O. said in Ungerman at pp. 551-52:

It is safe to say that 'genuine' means not spurious and, more specifically, that the words 'for trial' assist in showing the meaning of the term. If the evidence on a motion for summary judgment satisfies the court that there is no genuine issue of fact which requires a trial for its resolution, the requirements of the rule have been met. It must be clear that a trial is unnecessary. The burden is on the moving party to satisfy the court that the requirements of the rule have been met. Further, it is important to keep in mind that the court's function is not to resolve an issue of fact but to determine whether a genuine issue of fact exists.

It is a sensible general proposition that, if there is an issue of credibility, a trial is required and summary judgment should not be granted. ... the proposition that an issue of credibility precludes the granting of summary judgment applies only when what is said to be an issue of credibility is a genuine issue of credibility.

[para8] In our view, Gans J. correctly applied the Rule 20 jurisprudence of this court and correctly concluded that at least for the claims of equitable relief and damages for inducing breach of contract there is no genuine issue for trial.

[para9] The appellants argue that read literally the terms of the Garage Agreement produce a commercially absurd situation. They seek to introduce evidence to show what they claim is the true intent of the parties. In making this argument the appellants rely on the judgment of Estey J. in Consolidated-Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at 901 for the proposition that the object of the court in the interpretation and construction of a contract, and particularly a commercial contract, is to promote and advance the true intent of the parties, and to ensure that a realistic result, which is consistent with the commercial atmosphere is achieved. This is only a partial reading of the case. Estey J. also emphasized that the true intent of the parties is to be ascertained at the time the parties entered into the contract. He said at 901:

... the normal rules of construction lead a court to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract ... an interpretation which defeats the intention of the parties and their objective in entering into the commercial transaction in the first place should be discarded in favour of the interpretation of the [contract] which promotes a sensible commercial result. [Emphasis added.]

[para10] Looking only at the words of the Garage Agreement the appeal must fail. The Garage Agreement is clear and unambiguous. It explicitly refers to an option, and nothing in the language of the document lends itself to an interpretation creating an obligation rather than an option to purchase.

[para11] This conclusion is reinforced by paragraph 7 of the Garage Agreement, which provides: The Corporation's option to purchase the Garage shall be exercised as hereinafter provided within such Ninety-day period after which time the option shall be null and void and Howard shall be entitled to retain ownership of the Garage or to dispose of the Garage as it shall see fit. [Emphasis added.]

[para12] If the Garage Agreement were truly intended to amount to an agreement of purchase and sale after a period of time, paragraph 7 would have no purpose. Therefore from the language of the document, the parties unquestionably intended to create an option of purchase in favour of YCC 75 when the triggering condition was satisfied.

[para13] However, the appellants seek to introduce parole evidence to show that a term should be implied in the Garage Agreement. We observe first that the appellants have not sought rectification; and second, that the mere assertion parole evidence is needed to interpret an agreement is not itself sufficient to resist a motion for summary judgment - the responding party (here the appellants) must at least show a reasonable basis for admitting parole evidence and, if admitted, that this evidence would raise a genuine issue for trial. However, in seeking to rely on parole evidence the appellants face two hurdles, both stemming from the observation of Estey J. in Consolidated Bathurst that the court must look to the intent of the parties at the time they entered into the contract, not at some future date.

[para14] First, the appellants effectively negotiated the Garage Agreement with themselves, and must be taken to have intended the meaning of the agreement they drafted. As Gans J. observed, "In other words, at the time the agreement was concluded, there was not an independent board and the individual directors who have been joined as party defendants had nothing to do with the Corporation's management and, I dare say, with the negotiations that resulted in the completed agreement."

[para15] Second, on the motion the appellants were obliged to put their best foot forward and "lead trump" in the words of Osborne J.A. in the Jockey Club case, yet they filed only the affidavit of Robin Bookbinder and some documents attached to his affidavit. It may be that the appellants had no other evidence to lead but Mr. Bookbinder was not present for and has no knowledge of what occurred surrounding the negotiation of the Garage Agreement. The documents relied on by the appellants begin in May, 1973, some eight months after the Garage Agreement was signed. Therefore the appellants produced no evidence of a "factual matrix" at the time of entering the contract. Admittedly, the subsequent conduct of the parties can cast light on their intention at the time the contract was made but on the facts of this case we see no basis for using the evidence relied on by the appellants in that way. Accordingly Gans J. correctly held that this evidence could not be admitted at trial as parole evidence to explain what are otherwise unambiguous terms of an option agreement. Thus, he was right in finding no genuine issue for trial on whether a term should be implied in the Agreement. That disposes of the appeal.

[para16] The respondents' cross-appeal is from an interlocutory order for which leave is required. Leave was not sought, and had it been, we would have refused it. The respondents argue that the appellants' claim for damages for breach of contract is statute-barred. The appellants, however, led evidence to raise a genuine issue for trial on whether the discoverability rule applies. Gans J. was correct to dismiss this part of the respondents' motion.

DISPOSITION

[para17] For these reasons, the appeal and the cross-appeal are each dismissed with costs.

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 516, applicant, and Sharon Williams and 146 others, respondents

Court File No. 99-CV-164494

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Molloy J. Heard: March 12, 1999. Judgment: March 15, 1999.

Counsel: Patricia M. Conway and Scott MacEachern, for the applicant. Carol Dirks and Lisa Gunn, for Sharon Williams and certain of the respondents.

MOLLOY J.:-

A. BACKGROUND

[para1] The applicant condominium corporation applies to the court for directions pursuant to s. 49 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C-26 ("the Act") with respect to the conduct of a special general meeting of the unit owners currently scheduled for March 25, 1999. The applicant ("PCC516") is a residential condominium located in Mississauga and has 441 residential units. The 147 respondents are unit owners who signed a requisition calling for a special general meeting for the purpose of replacing the current Board of Directors.

[para2] A number of the unit owners in the condominium have been dissatisfied with the conduct of the Board of Directors for some time. There have been two other attempts to remove the Board in the past year, both of which resulted in special general meetings being called at which the majority of unit owners voted to retain the Board. It is fair to say, however, that support for the "dissident" unit owners group has been growing. The complaints of the respondents about the Board are varied but include allegations of conflict of interest, failure to act in the best interest of the corporation and failure to provide proper information to the unit owners with respect to important matters affecting their interests. Much of the dispute centred on the need for and cost of certain repairs which the Board has recommended be undertaken.

[para3] These proceedings were commenced in response to the unit owners' requisition for a special meeting. The requisition was precipitated by a notice sent by the Board in January 1999 to the unit owners indicating that the Board had decided to levy a special assessment of approximately $7.15 million to be effective April 1, 1999 in order to carry out necessary extensive repairs to the building. The unit owners were given a number of payment options and advised that if they failed to respond by February 8, 1999, they would be deemed to have chosen to pay the assessed amount in one lump sum due on April 1, 1999. The average assessment per unit was approximately $17,000.00.

[para4] On February 11, 1999, a requisition signed by approximately one-third of the unit owners was served on PCC516. The requisition required the Board to call a general meeting of the unit owners to vote on the removal and replacement of the Board. The Act imposes an obligation on the Board in these circumstances to call and hold the meeting within 30 days, failing which the requisitionists may call the meeting. Section 19(1) of the Act provides:

19-(1) The board shall, upon receipt of a requisition in writing made by owners who together own at least 15% of the units, call and hold a meeting of the owners and if the meeting is not called and held within thirty days of the receipt of the requisition, any of the requisitionists may call the meeting, and in such case, the meeting shall be held within sixty days of receipt of the requisition.

[para5] The condominium by-laws require 10 days notice for meetings. Therefore, the Board had to give notice by March 3, 1999 in order to hold a meeting within the time required under the Act. The Board did not give such notice by March 3. Instead the Board commenced this proceeding on February 23, 1999, obtained an order for substituted service, and served the requisitionists with notice of this proceeding on March 1, 1999. In this proceeding, PCC516 seeks directions from the court with respect to the conduct of the meeting and the use of proxies at the meeting as well as an order directing that the meeting not be held before March 31, 1999. On March 5, when it was apparent that the Board could no longer call a meeting within the 30 days required under the Act, the requisitionists themselves gave notice to all unit owners that the requisitioned meeting would be held on March 25, 1999.

B. JURISDICTION

[para6] This application is brought under s. 49 of the Act which provides:

49-(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct the performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

[para7] The within application is a novel use of s. 49. Typically this provision is used by one party to force another party to comply with an obligation in respect of which there has been a default. In the case before me, PCC516 was not in default at the time it commenced this proceeding and the order it now seeks is in respect of the performance of its own duties under the Act. The respondent unit owners take the position that there is no jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. They argue that s. 19 of the Act is a complete codification of how special meetings are to be called and that this section provides its own remedy for a board's default in its obligation to call a properly requisitioned meeting. The unit owners have exercised that remedy by calling the meeting within the time prescribed under the Act.

[para8] In my opinion, I do have the jurisdiction to make the orders sought by PCC516. The supervisory role of the Court under s. 49 arises where there is a duty which "is not performed". The Act does not require that the person required to perform the duty be in default before the Court's jurisdiction can be invoked. General principles of statutory interpretation require that the words of a statute be given their plain and ordinary meaning, unless to do so would lead to an absurdity: Ruth Sullivan, Dreidger on the Construction of Statutes, 3rd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1994), at pp. 7 and 85-86. The ordinary meaning of the words in s. 49 is that an application can be made to the court at any time provided that the duty has not already been performed. No doubt, the vast majority of situations falling within s. 49 involve a situation in which one party has defaulted in its performance of a duty and another party is seeking to compel compliance. The section could easily have been worded to only apply to such circumstances if that was the intention of the legislature. However, the section is cast more broadly and encompasses situations, such as this one, where there is a duty which has not yet been performed and where one of the parties wishes guidance from the court as to the performance of that duty. I am also of the view that there may be situations in which the type of relief requested by the applicant here (e.g. timing of the meeting, chair for the meeting, manner of voting, proxies, number and identity of scrutineers) could be appropriately ordered by the court. The discretionary power given to the court under s. 49(2) with respect to additional provisions is broad and can be interpreted as including terms as to how and when the duty under the Act is to be performed.

[para9] The powers of the court under s. 49 are clearly discretionary. While I may have jurisdiction to grant the relief sought by the applicant, I must be satisfied that the exercise of that discretion is appropriate in the circumstances of this case. One of the circumstances to be taken into account is the remedy available under s. 19 of the Act and the fact that the unit owners have already purported to exercise that remedy. This is not a situation in which the matter was before the court prior to the date upon which the duty was required to be performed. This proceeding was commenced before that date, but by the time of the hearing before me it was no longer possible for the Board to fulfil its duty by calling the meeting within the 30 days required in the Act. I say this not to be critical of the Board. As a practical matter, it would be extremely difficult to get this matter to the stage of a hearing within 20 days of service of the requisition. However, the fact remains that as of the date of the hearing, the 30 day period for the Board to call the meeting had expired and the unit owners had exercised their right to call the meeting.

C. RELIEF SOUGHT

1. Proxies

[para10] I am told that the group of unit owners who requisitioned the March 25th meeting has obtained proxies which will give them 230 votes at the meeting and that they intend to exercise those proxies to vote for the removal of the Board. The Board is concerned that some individuals who gave proxies may have done so without fully understanding the Board's position or based on misinformation. The Board proposes that a special form of proxy be issued along with the notice of meeting and information package from the Board and that only that form of proxy be recognized at the meeting.

[para11] I am not persuaded that there is any need for the court to intervene on this issue. It is open to the Board to communicate its views to the unit owners and to seek to persuade them to revoke any proxies they may have given. It is also open to the Board to send revocation forms and new proxy forms to the unit owners along with any information package that the Board chooses to send. If those unit owners are persuaded by the Board's position, they can revoke any proxy they have already given. I fail to see any basis for, in effect, revoking all existing proxies by court order and requiring all of those individuals who have not changed their minds to execute new proxies to the same effect as the old ones. In my view, this places an undue obstacle in the path of the unit owners who would be required to get all of those people who had previously signed to do so again. I would only be prepared to take such a step if there was clear evidence of wrongdoing in obtaining the proxies. There is no such evidence in this case.

[para12] My ruling on this point would be the same regardless of the timing of the meeting.

2. Timing of the Meeting

[para13] The applicant seeks an order that the special meeting be held on one of April 6, 7, or 8, 1999. One of the principal reasons initially given by the Board for delaying the meeting past March 13 was so that full information could be provided to the unit owners prior to the vote. The Board had retained independent consulting engineers to provide a second opinion on the timing and cost of the necessary repairs to the building and expected that this opinion would not be ready until mid-March. The Board needed to give 10 days notice of the meeting and proposed including information from this second opinion with the notice of meeting. At the hearing before me counsel advised that this report has now been obtained and that it estimates $2 million for the repairs (as compared to the $5 - 7 million estimate from the proposed contractor). The Board now wishes to get the comments of the first contractor on this new opinion and to provide that, along with other information, to the unit owners prior to the meeting. It is possible to get this information to the unit owners in time for the March 25th meeting. Therefore, I do not see this as a factor which would persuade me to interfere with the timing of the meeting already called by the requisitionists.

[para14] The applicant argued that the March 25th meeting was called improperly because the Act only authorizes the requisitionists to call the meeting if there has been a default by the Board. The Board acknowledges that it would have been in default if it had taken no steps by March 3, but argues that since the Board had commenced this application before March 3 and submitted the matter to the court, it should not be treated as having defaulted in its duty. On my interpretation of s. 19, it is not necessary to determine if the Board is in "default" of its obligations. The right of the requisitionists to call the meeting is triggered by the fact that the meeting has not been called by the Board, for whatever reason. Section 19 of the Act, like section 49, does not mention "default". In fact, the meeting was not called, and that is sufficient to give rise to the right of the requisitionists to call the meeting themselves.

[para15] In my opinion, the requisitionists were within their rights under s. 19 in calling the meeting, as they did, for March 25, 1999. The Act states that the right of the requisitionists to call a meeting arises "if the meeting is not called and held within 30 days". I do not read this provision as preventing the requisitionists from calling the meeting until the 30 day period has expired. Since at least 10 days notice is required to call a meeting, it was clear at the 20 day mark when no notice of meeting had been delivered, that the meeting could not take place within the 30 day period. At that point, the requisitionists were entitled to exercise their rights to call the meeting. Thus, it was clear on March 3 that the meeting could not be called within the 30 day period. It was therefore open to the requisitionists from that date forward to call the meeting themselves, provided that the meeting was scheduled within 60 days of when the requisition was delivered to the Board (i.e. before April 12, 1999). The requisitionists are also required to give at least 10 days notice of the meeting such that the last date for giving notice would be April 2. The requisitionists in fact gave notice on March 5 of a meeting scheduled for March 25. They are thus in compliance with the requirements of s. 19 of the Act.

[para16] By March 5, the requisitionists had already been served with notice of this proceeding returnable on March 12, 1999. However, the right to call the meeting is a right conferred on the requisitionists by statute. The commencement of legal proceedings by the Board does not operate to eradicate the statutory rights of the requisitionists. Further, the pending court hearing did not give rise to any obligation on the part of the unit owners to hold off on the exercise of their statutory remedies. Indeed, the rights of the unit owners could well have been jeopardized if they failed to take the action they did. They were facing a situation in which the Board had levied a special assessment which was to take effect on April 1, 1999 and which would result in an average additional payment of $17,000.00 for each unit. If the hearing did not proceed on March 12, or if the court declined to intervene in the matter, the unit owners could be left with very little time in which to validly call the meeting themselves before the March 31 deadline they believed they were facing. In these circumstances, I find no fault with the requisitionists proceeding to exercise their rights under s. 19 of the Act notwithstanding the fact that the Board had commenced this proceeding.
