[para346] I am satisfied that in a situation in which the Plaintiffs rely on an implied negligent misrepresentation in the face of an explicit contractual provision, that in the absence of fraud or other explicit conduct, the contract does provide a consideration which ought to limit the scope of the duty. One could posit a number of factual considerations in the situation of a vendor and purchaser of property and of which requirements of "sufficient relationship of proximity" have been met. Based on the facts as I have found them, I am satisfied that it does not exist here. Mr. Azman who represented the shareholders of the Plaintiff and was himself one, was an experienced real estate agent, who had the means to raise any concern that he had about the application of the contractual terms. He did not. I am unable to read those terms as capable of implying the representation that the Plaintiffs now urge.

(2) The Representation In Question Must Be Untrue, Inaccurate Or Misleading.

[para347] For the purpose of this analysis, I accept that a failure to divulge highly pertinent information may, in some circumstances, amount to negligent misrepresentation, as may silence. See Cognos, supra at page 653 and Spinks v. Canada (1996) 134 D.L.R. (4th) 223 (Fed.C.A.). On the evidence before me I am satisfied that even if the Plaintiffs had been explicitly told that depending on the use to the property might be put, further remediation might be required, based on the letter of the MOE, they would still have proceeded with the purchase. I therefore conclude that a misrepresentation, even if one could find one, "would probably" not have affected their decision.

(3) The Representor Must Have Acted Negligently In Making The Representation.

[para348] As the authorities referred to above note, considering whether or not a representor exercised reasonable care to ensure that representations were made accurately and not in a misleading fashion, the court must take into consideration all of the circumstances, including the nature of the occasion, the purpose for which the statement was made, the foreseeable use of the statement, and the probable damage that would result from an inaccurate statement.

[para349] Based on the facts before me, I am satisfied that Petro Canada was very careful in its representations. I am satisfied that Petro Canada and Arcturus did exercise reasonable care to ensure that that statement was accurate and not misleading to the best of their knowledge and belief at the time.

(4) The Representee Must Have Relied, In A Reasonable Manner, On The Negligent Misrepresentation.

[para350] As I found above, I am satisfied that the Plaintiffs did not rely on an implicit representation that the site was suitable for any use that they might put the property to. The Plaintiffs could rely on no more and no less than was contained in the letter from the MOE. I am satisfied that neither Mr. Azman nor the other shareholders of the Plaintiffs relied on any representation of Petro Canada that the land was suitable for any use, and I am also satisfied that even if they so thought, that would not be a reasonable conclusion to draw from the actions of Petro Canada. See Leigh Instruments, supra page 129.

[para351] The Plaintiffs sought no clarification from either Petro Canada or the MOE or any other consultant concerning what they could or could not take from the words set out in the MOE letter.

"When it is known that an underground tank will not again be used, or where an underground tank has been out of use for five (5) years, whichever comes first, the owner of the tank shall

(a) remove any product (b) remove the tank (c) if the soil around the tank is contaminated with product, remove such contaminated soil and product."

[para354] I am satisfied that that section imposes a duty on an owner or other party who removes an underground tank to ensure that the requirements are met. There is no obligation on a succeeding vendor to advise a subsequent purchaser that "all contamination has been removed" after removal of underground storage tanks.

[para355] The tanks in question were removed by Gulf Oil Limited and not Petro Canada. There is nothing before me that suggests that if there were contamination as found at the time of removal, that there was any contamination left on the property.

[para356] Section 24 of Regulation 439 provides:

"Where a property having gasoline or associated products storage tanks is sold or leased, the owner of the property shall inform the purchaser or lessee of the existence of the tank or tanks and provide proof to the purchaser or lessee that the tank or tanks comply with the provisions of subsections 18()".

[para357] I read subsection 24 as referring only to the sale of a property that has tanks on it, not to the sale of a property where there were previously underground or aboveground storage tanks. I am not satisfied that the Plaintiffs can rely on Section 24 of the Regulations as establishing a duty on the part of Petro Canada to advise of the former removal of USTs.

"The defendant is in breach of the regulations, but that alone was not enough to give rise to liability. The conduct of the defendant had to be considered in determining whether or not there was negligence. In doing so, reference could be had to the regulations to see whether they contained an appropriate or useful standard of reasonable care. The defendant removed the tanks in accordance with accepted procedures and did all that could be reasonably expected of it to ensure that the site posed no identifiable risk to subsequent users of the property. In the circumstances, it would be wrong to accept the apparent standard established by the regulations as the standard against which the defendant's conduct was to be measured in establishing civil liability. That standard was too onerous. The defendant's conduct did not fall short of the appropriate standard of reasonable conduct established by the evidence."

[para360] This reasoning is all the more appropriate when considering the situation of Petro Canada as the owner subsequent to the removal of the tanks. I am therefore satisfied that there was no negligence on the part of Petro Canada, either in its representation or any misrepresentation to the Plaintiffs, or in breach of any duty imposed under the Gasoline Handling Act.

[para361] A claim for fundamental breach of contract was also advanced. I have not dealt with at length because the factual assertions underlying that claim, being breach of representation, are themselves rejected.

(vi) The Experts on Standard of Care & Damages

[para362] I accept the submission of the Plaintiffs that "it is entirely appropriate for environmental consultants to refer to the legal provisions that apply to their work, without being deemed to be usurping the role of the court." The interpretation of the regulation that is used as an assumption by an expert affects the weight that attaches to the expert's opinion.

[para363] Even if I accepted the premise of Mr. Crutcher's opinion, that elimination of total odour was required under the 1987 guidelines, I would still conclude that his evidence tended to exaggerate the nature of the contamination on the subject site.

[para364] I accept the underlying premise of his evidence, that protection and preservation of human health is the goal of environmental regulation. However, as of November 15, 1989, that goal was very much subjective, rather than the much more objective criteria as are in place currently. Much of the subjective evaluation was under the supervision of the MOE in 1989 and I conclude that they were in fact satisfied with the extent of clean-up.

[para365] There are two aspects to the evidence of the environmental experts: first, dealing with the issue of liability and second, dealing with the issue of damages.

[para366] Much of the focus of the criticism of the evidence from Mr. Crutcher and indeed Mr. Ducharme focused on what was or was not done by Acres. Since neither Acres nor the MOE remained parties at this trial, there is simply no basis on which this Court could conclude that what Acres did nor did not do failed to meet the Guidelines in place in 1988, or that the MOE erred in providing the letter of November 15, 1989 indicating that the areas identified as being contaminated had been successfully cleaned up in accordance with the Guidelines.

[para367] It was not suggested to Mr. Boehm of the MOE when he testified that there was anything inappropriate or improper with his letter or that he was in any way misled or misinformed with respect to the information on which it was based.

[para368] The Plaintiffs claim at this trial is against Petro Canada and Arcturus. As against Arcturus the opinion of Mr. Crutcher is that Arcturus failed to remove sufficient soil so as to eliminate odours, a requirement under the 1989 Guidelines.

[para369] I prefer the evidence of Messrs. Woeller and Phimister on this issue. Even assuming that Arcturus was under a duty that in the circumstances could be relied on by the Plaintiffs, I conclude that duty has been met.

[para370] Dr. Panko, even though he had been at Arcturus, was entitled to rely on the work done by Acres (of which he was a part), as being appropriate. The assignment of Arcturus was limited, namely to devise a work plan that would provide that degree of remediation which would satisfy the MOE. Arcturus did precisely that.

[para371] The reason for the preference of the opinions of Woeller and Phimister that Arcturus met an appropriate standard of care is based on the context of their opinions. I accept their views, which were in accord with Mr. Boehm of the MOE, that in November of 1989, the only precise criteria in the Guidelines related to oil and grease 1%. The Guidelines did not specifically deal with the lighter hydrocarbon ends (BTEXs). While the Guidelines did allow for reference to criteria from other jurisdictions, this was not mandatory. In 1989 the MOE was the entity that had to be satisfied with any decommissioning or clean-up.

[para373] The second aspect of the experts' evidence dealt with the issue of clean-up costs. There were a variety of estimates based on each consultant's view of the extent of contamination on the site to be cleaned up in accordance with the 1998 Guidelines.

[para378] The final estimate was that of Mr. Phimister for Arcturus. His opinion was based on remediation to the more objective criteria of the 1998 Guidelines. In addition, he would utilize an incremental approach only remediating as necessary based on on-site conditions. His methodology is called bio-remediation and employs microbes to stockpiled soils from affected areas which are then replaced when the hydrocarbons have been effectively broken down and evaporated. The cost of his proposal is estimated at $88,000.

XIII DAMAGES

(i) The Plaintiff's Claim

[para379] In the event that another court should disagree with my factual conclusions or the law applicable to them, it is appropriate that I consider the damages to which the Plaintiffs might be otherwise entitled. For the purposes of this analysis I will make the assumption that the Defendants warranted to the Plaintiffs expressly or implicitly falsely that the land was suitable for any use to which the Plaintiffs intended.

[para380] The assessment of damages alleging fraudulent or negligent misrepresentation relating to the sale of land gives rise to a variety of possibilities. The Plaintiffs submit that in an action based on deceit, the measure of damages may be contractual, if fraud deprived the Plaintiff of an actual right. Damages from the deceit may be the same as the consequences of a breach of the obligation from which the rights and interests of the Plaintiffs arose, and may be determined on rules applicable to contractual defaults. For the purpose of this analysis, I accept that proposition. As noted in The Law of Damages, Looseleaf Ed., S.M. Waddams at page 5-20, paragraph 5.470:

"If, however, the plaintiff is deprived by the fraud of a contractual right, the plaintiff will recover the value of that right, for in that case the plaintiff would have enjoyed that value if the wrong had not been done."

[para381] It is urged that the Plaintiffs were induced to purchase the property and to grant the indemnity by the representation of Petro Canada, that the property could be re-developed for industrial or commercial purposes without hindrance arising from contamination. It is supposed that the representation as to the property's environmental condition was deceitful and formed a term of the contract. In accepting that characterization for the purpose of damage analysis, it is subject to qualification noted in Waddams, supra, at page 5-18, paragraph 5.430:

"But it is important to note that the test for determining when statements made to induce contracts are themselves contractual, is a very elusive one -- so elusive indeed that some commentators have concluded that there is no practical distinction at all."

[para382] I accept the submission that the case law indicates there is no consistent rule for the date of assessment of damages, and that each case is decided on its own facts, based on a fairness test. As well, I will accept for the purposes of this analysis the measure of damages submitted by the Plaintiffs being what would put the Plaintiffs into the position in which they would have been if the representation had been true.

[para383] The Plaintiffs submit in the alternative that if alleged deceit was tortious rather than a breach of contract, then at a minimum the Plaintiffs are entitled to be put into the position they would have been if the representation had not been made to them and urge that the measure of the damages in a negligence action involving the sale of land is the difference between the price paid and the actual value of the property purchased.

a) General Damages

[para385] The Plaintiffs submit that the value of the land equals the value after cleanup costs of $1,535,736 to a 1989 standard to render it commercially usable (the land being worth $880,000 being the purchase price). Since that would produce a negative value, the Plaintiffs claim the cost of cleanup at $1,535,736.

b) Consequential Loss

[para386] The Plaintiffs add out-of-pocket expenses associated with Southside litigation of $33,136, municipal taxes of $211,715, and a loss on return of investment being compensation in lieu of return of capital for a total of $752,000. The total sum is $2,533,092, some $200,000 less if one excludes a capital gain attribution from the sale of Southside. Alternatively the cost of remediation is sought to be recovered on the basis of breach of the Gasoline Handling Act.

(ii) The Value of the Land

a) The Real Estate Experts

[para387] Three individuals testified. Rosevear for the Plaintiffs, Atlin for the defendant Petro Canada and Edgerton for Arcturus. They were each accepted as qualified real estate appraisers for the purpose of valuation of the subject property.

[para388] The experts valued as of approximately the same time period. Rosevear as of November 30, 1999, Atlin as of December 29, 1999 and Edgerton as of May 14, 1999. There is no suggestion that the time would significantly affect the value of any of their opinions.

[para389] The experts valued using the comparable lands approach, accepting the common definitions of valuation and of market value. While Mr. Rosevear felt that the appraisal industry tended to confuse the terms "exposure" and "market time", Mr. Atlin felt these were distinct terms. I conclude that this issue does not affect any of the opinions.

[para390] The experts gave their opinions on the assumption that a sale would be free of any possible problems associated with environmental contamination. While there was some dispute as to whether a reduction for cleanup costs would be on a dollar-for-dollar basis, there was agreement that such costs would approach the dollar-for-dollar reduction. The site that was the subject of all three opinions did not include the London Marine property previously sold by the Plaintiffs in 1992.

[para391] The major difference between the experts was on the highest and best use of the property. Mr. Rosevear in his evidence restricted his opinion on valuation to what he was asked to do by his client (the Plaintiffs). While he stated that he was asked to estimate the current market value of the "commercial development" of the property, it appears that he looked mainly at the light industrial rather than commercial use, and considered the site as a whole, rather than the various parcels that resulted from a successful rezoning application by the Plaintiffs.

[para392] There can be little doubt that Rosevear's comparables are of the light industrial kind rather than the several parcels which would have included a Tim Horton's site, if the offer made by that company had been completed. The other two experts felt that a commercial use within the current zoning was the highest and best use of the property.

[para393] The major difference between the three experts was in the particular comparables chosen. Mr. Rosevear chose 8 sites for sales and 4 with listings, within a radius of the subject site of up to 3 miles. The radius chosen by Messrs Atlin and Edgerton was more or less the same. Atlin used 5 comparables and Edgerton 10, including two listings.

[para394] Rosevear's comparables, as noted, were all zoned for industrial use, the parcels ranging in size from 2.15 acres to 17 acres. He considered the site for use as one parcel.

[para395] Mr. Atlin's comparables were all zoned for commercial use. The size of each of the sites was expressed in square feet. While it is difficult to directly compare to the acreage in the Rosevear report, they are for the main substantially less in size than at least half of the Rosevear sites chosen.

[para396] While Mr. Atlin considered that the site had considerable flexibility, in that it might be sold in the four parcels into which it is currently sub-divided, or a small number of sites or even as one unit, for this reason he believed that a commercial use which is the current zoning, would be the highest and best use.

[para397] Mr. Edgerton looked at the property essentially as a whole, but usable by more than one tenant. There would appear to be little difference in the approaches of Messrs. Atlin and Edgerton. It should be noted that Edgerton did an appraisal for Petro Canada of the subject site in 1998 and the value placed at that time for the entire property, including the London Marine portion, was $800,000, slightly less than the sale price to the Plaintiffs.

[para398] Of the comparables chosen by Edgerton, 4 of these were on Atlin's list. The major issue taken by the Plaintiffs with the opinions of Edgerton and Atlin, was the location in the area of the city of the comparables. The suggestion was that the location of the subject property was less desirable. The other issues related to the appropriateness of the comparables.

[para399] Atlin valued the 7.85 acre subject site at $1.95 million, or a value of $5.25 per square foot. Edgerton's valuation was at $1.7 million, on the basis of $215,000 per acre, or $4.95 per square foot.

[para400] I am satisfied that the appraisal opinion of Mr. Rosevear reasonably sets the floor for the value of the subject property, if it were to be marketed as a single parcel for light industrial use.

[para401] It is significant, in my view, that the witness Rosevear paid little attention to the report of a colleague Lambert done in 1991 for London Marine, of which he was aware, that noted that the property had been re-zoned into 4 parcels, and at that time placed a value of $1,050,000 for the entire site.

[para402] I have considered the evidence of all three witnesses. Taking into consideration what in my view is the highest and best use, accepting Messrs. Atlin and Edgerton of the commercial use within current zoning, their opinions are more likely to reflect current value than is that of Mr. Rosevear.

b) Conclusion on Land Value

[para403] Accepting that the opinions of Messrs. Atlin and Edgerton based on the comparables chosen may reflect the higher end of the range, given the neighbourhood chosen, I conclude that $1.6 million is a fair figure to take into account for the purpose of establishing a base for damages.

[para404] The suggestion that the value of this property should take into account the stigma associated with its contamination is rejected. I accept the evidence that, assuming cleanup to the satisfaction of the MOE, there would likely not be any stigma.

(iii) The Cost of Remediation

a) The Plaintiffs' Expert

[para405] I have elsewhere dealt with the basis upon which Mr. Crutcher, the Plaintiffs' expert, opined that in his view for the amount of contaminated soil the cost of remediation would be $1,535,736.

b) The Defendants' Expert

[para406] As referred to above, Mr. Woeller, on behalf of Petro Canada, employing the same methodology and area as that of Mr. Crutcher, including 20% contingency, gave an estimate of a cost of $857,590, and on an alternative risk-based basis, would remove from the site only soils with high concentration of contamination. He estimated a cost of $385,000. Mr. Phimister, for Arcturus, gave an estimate of $88,000 based on bio-remediation methodology.

c) Conclusion on Clean-up Cost

[para407] Based on the evidence before me, I am satisfied that an allowance of $400,000 for clean-up costs to be more than reasonable in the circumstances. I do so for the following reasons:

1. I reject the interpretation given by Mr. Crutcher of the 1988 Guidelines necessitating clean-up to the level of removal of all odours.
2. I reject the inference drawn by Messrs. Crutcher and Ducharme that evidence of sheen is necessarily evidence of free product.
3. I accept that much of the information on which the opinion of Mr. Crutcher is based is now more than 10 years old, and as Mr. Woeller testified, natural bio-degradation processes may have substantially reduced contaminants in that timeframe.
4. The program outlined by Mr. Crutcher would most likely result in a clean-up which would render the property suitable for residential use, and this would exceed the commercial / industrial standards and is not appropriate as Mr. Woeller testified in this case for this site, given its past use.
5. I am satisfied that a reasonable expert would use an incremental approach. Therefore an allowance of $400,000 would strike a balance between the least possible and trying to reach an unreasonable standard.

[para408] It is difficult to accept the Plaintiffs' claim for consequential loss, since it seeks to apply a pre-judgment interest rate of 7.49% on capital from the time of the closing, making allowance for the rent received from London Marine, for a total of $578,542.

[para409] The consequential loss claim of the Plaintiffs is deficient in at least three respects. One, it ignores totally the fact that the land has increased in value as I have found. Two, the calculation for return of capital does not take into account the mortgages, the details of which are not before me. Three, the capital calculation is not a consequential loss.

(iv) Mitigation

[para410] For the Defendants it is submitted that even if one accepts the Plaintiffs' submissions, the evidence remains that there was no loss. At the time of transfer there was an outstanding offer from Southside which, if one nets from the $1,250,000 purchase price the $250,000 later offered as a reduction by Southside, would still have yielded a profit. The Plaintiffs did not suffer any demonstrable loss. In the Defendants' submission the loss was that caused by the Plaintiffs' "unwise investment decision" to hold the property for anticipated higher sales prices, a risk they decided to run. For this reason the value of the property at a later date (i.e., current) is relevant for consideration, taking into account the obligation on the part of the Plaintiff to mitigate. Reference is made to "Waddams", supra paragraphs 5.52, 5.54 and 5.56.

[para411] I am satisfied that taken at its highest, in the above findings, $250,000 being the difference between the Southside agreement and offer figure at which the transaction could be completed is the best measure of what the Plaintiffs could have achieved out of this process at the time. I come to that conclusion since, had the Plaintiffs accepted the Southside offer, they would have incurred no consequential loss. The decisions on the part of the Plaintiffs not to engage a consultant, not to do a study for themselves to determine at that stage what would be the cost of remediation, not to remediate, and not to pursue any claim on a prompt basis, all support the arguments of the Defendants that the Plaintiffs have not properly mitigated.

XIV CONCLUSIONS

[para412] Even without taking into account the failure to mitigate, the Plaintiffs have not demonstrated a real loss. The land is now worth approximately $1,600,000. The cost of clean-up is approximately $400,000. The difference leaves a significant increase over the original purchase price of $800,000 without taking into account the sale price of $260,000 received from London Marine for its parcel.

[para413] I conclude that in any event the Plaintiffs have not established damages to which they would be entitled in the event of a finding of liability in their favour.

CBR# 842

O'Brien v. McNabb

Between John O'Brien, Constance O'Brien, Tony Petty and Barbara Petty, plaintiffs, and Donald Dennis McNabb, Bank of Nova Scotia, and Stanley Michael Malouf, defendants

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Thunder Bay, Ontario Kozak J. Heard: February 2, 2000. Judgment: February 28, 2000. (49 paras.)

Counsel: John G. Illingworth, for the plaintiffs. Richard Forget, for Donald Dennis McNabb.

[para1] KOZAK J.:-- This is a motion brought on behalf of the defendant, Donald McNabb, for the determination before trial, of a question of law as follows:

Do the Agreements of Purchase and Sale, as entered into between the plaintiffs and Donald McNabb, dated October 23, 1985 and December 5, 1986, create a valid equitable interest in the land, or do the agreements violate Section 50 of the Planning Act with the result that they are null and void as to any interest in the land, other than as a long term tenancy?

[para2] The motion has been brought pursuant to Rule 20.04(4) as opposed to Rule 21.01. Affidavit materials have been filed and partial summary judgment is being sought with respect to the above question of law on the grounds that this matter represents the only real genuine issue for trial, and that the determination of this issue will result in a substantial saving of costs.

IMATERIAL FACTS

[para4] In and around 1985 McNabb entered into agreements to sell a portion of his parcel as shown on a draft plan of subdivision to the Brydges/Walker parties. The Brydges/Walker parties assigned the agreements to the O'Brien/Petty parties. The consent of Donald McNabb was not required to assign the agreements.

[para5] On October 23, 1985, McNabb and his wife, as vendors, entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale with William Scott and Carolyn Walker, as purchasers, for the whole of Lot 11 on a draft plan of subdivision dated May 15, 1985. The agreement was subject to subdivision approval and called for a purchase price of $13,500.00 with a deposit of $3,500.00 which was to be held in trust by McNabb's solicitor pending closing. There was no fixed date for the closing of the transaction, but rather, the closing date was established as being 60 days after the date the vendor notified the purchaser that he had obtained subdivision approval.

[para6] On or about May 29, 1986, the O'Briens entered into an Assignment agreement from William Scott and Carolyn Walker. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale, as assigned to the O'Briens, provided that the agreement was to be effective only if the provisions of Section 49 of the Planning Act are complied with.

Offer to Purchase And Rental Agreement Agreement of Purchase and Sale

It contained the following terms and conditions as agreed to by the parties:

(i) the vendor shall pursue, with due diligence, a subdivision application to the Ontario Ministry of Housing or other governmental agency or department for subdivision of the subject lands and is to pay all fees or costs in connection therewith; and in the event the purchaser is of the opinion that such application is not being proceeded with in a timely fashion (in excess of three years), the vendor shall provide the purchaser with a Power of Attorney or such other documents as may be required, to allow or permit the purchaser to make or pursue such application on his own; provided however, the vendor shall indemnify the purchaser for any and all costs or fees incurred in connection therewith and the purchaser shall be entitled to deduct such cost of (sic) fees from any monies owing to the vendor.

(ii) the vendor shall assist the purchaser in acquiring, from the Province of Ontario, the lake front shoreline reserve adjacent to the subject lands, and in the event the vendor acquires the said shoreline reserve, the vendor shall forthwith transfer or convey to the purchaser, at the vendor's costs (purchase price), all of the vendor's right, title, and interest in the said shoreline reserve.

(iii) in the event the subdivision as hereinbefore referred to, is for any reason not forthcoming (and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any inactivity on the part of the purchaser may be construed so as to be included in the phrase "for any reason") the purchaser shall rent the subject lands and premises for a term of twenty years, calculated from the date hereof, and the monies paid by way of deposit by the purchaser to the vendor, shall be deemed to be prepaid rent for the entire term and, all terms and conditions herein contained pertaining to use, occupation and enjoyment of the subject lands and premises shall form the rental agreement between the parties, provided that the Short Form of Leases Act, R.S.O. 1980 Chapter 473, as amended, shall apply;

(iv) the vendor shall allow, without any charge or fee whatsoever, the purchaser uninterrupted utilization of the existing road or any other road access to the subject lands and premises and, when subdivision approval is obtained, shall provide a water connection to the purchaser's lot line;

(v) the vendor shall indemnify the purchaser for any and all costs or fees of every nature and kind incurred by the purchaser in connection with any litigation arising from this agreement and/or the purchaser's rights and obligations created thereby whether the vendor is party to such litigation or not;

(vi) the closing date of the within transaction shall be within 60 days of the date the vendor notifies the purchaser, in writing, that he has obtained subdivision approval, at which time the balance of the purchase monies shall be paid; it is acknowledged by the parties hereto that if the within transaction does not result in a conveyance of the fee simple of the subject lands, the balance of the purchase price will not be paid and the deposit monies paid shall be deemed to be full payment of rent for the twenty year term aforesaid;

(vii) all terms and conditions of the within agreement pertaining to the use and occupation of the subject lands and premises shall, at the option of the purchaser, survive the closing of the within transaction;

(viii) every covenant, proviso and agreement herein shall ensure to the benefit of and be binding upon the parties hereto and their heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns and that when the context so requires or permits, the singular number shall be read as if the plural were expressed and the masculine gender as if the feminine or neuter as the case may be were expressed;

(x) the purchaser shall have the right to assign this agreement without the consent of the vendor.

[para8] On or about December 5, 1986, McNabb and his wife entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale with Douglas Brydges and Darcia Brydges as purchasers of Lot 10, as shown on the draft plan of subdivision dated May 15, 1985. The herein agreement contains essentially the same terms and conditions as the Scott/Walker agreement that was assigned to the O'Briens, except for the following:

(1) improvements hereinbefore made to the aforesaid lands have been made or will be made at the sole discretion and expense of the purchasers and the cost thereof shall not be recoverable by the purchasers from the vendor should this transaction not close, and

(2) the indemnity clause contained in paragraph (v) of the Walker agreement was not included in the Brydges' agreement.

[para9] On or about June 9, 1989, the Pettys took an assignment of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale from the Brydges.

[para10] McNabb proceeded in a timely fashion and with due diligence to obtain subdivision approval over several years, but was unable to obtain subdivision approval.

I allowed the renters to occupy my land pursuant to the understanding that they were in fact renters pursuant to the provisions of the 1985/86 Agreements of Purchase and Sale that provided that they would become renters in the event that a plan of subdivision was not approved or forthcoming (paragraph iii). The renters conducted themselves as if they were precisely merely renters and never proceeded with any actions which could be interpreted as if they were acting as owners of my land or purchasers that were anticipating the closing to take place shortly. Firstly, they failed to pay the balance price of their lots, despite my requests for additional monies to be deposited or placed in trust somewhere. Secondly, they failed to pay their portion of the property taxes and education taxes, despite my requests for compensation. I had to pay for such taxes even though I did not occupy the renter's land lots. The renters provided the reason that they did not have to pay taxes since they were merely tenants and not owners or even potential owners. Thirdly, the renters never tried themselves to pay for any application fee or make any application to the planning authorities for severance, even if they had such rights under clause (i) of the agreement. Rather, they accepted after several years that they were not the owners of the lands, but just renters since the potential for obtaining a subdivision agreement looked too remote. Fourthly, when I had the properties re-surveyed for a new subdivision application, the boundaries had to be altered and no renter objected that the 1999 boundaries were different than the 1985 boundaries. No renter objected that surveyors were present on their alleged lands when new monuments (posts) were erected in front of everyone. Fifthly, I declared and stated publicly at meetings and to the Town of Geraldton that I was the owner of all the lands and no one objected to this. Sixthly, no one took legal action of any form to assert themselves as owners of the land until just recently.

[para12] McNabb's evidence is that after 14 years of paying the renter's taxes on the land, he retained the services of a new solicitor and applied for a new plan of subdivision and was successful in having a new plan of subdivision approved by the Town of Geraldton in May of 1999, and was able to register the subdivision agreement and plan of subdivision in October 1999. McNabb points out that the 1999 plan of subdivision is different than the 1985 draft plan of subdivision and, in paragraphs 9 and 12 of his affidavit, he points out the various factors that distinguished the two plans and the additional costs involved, which were financed through a $250,000.00 mortgage loan from the Bank of Nova Scotia.

[para13] In an affidavit sworn November 9, 1999, the plaintiff, John O'Brien, states that in the spring of 1987 he was aware that the plan of subdivision was still in progress and that the Town of Geraldton made its first attempt at this time to annex the outlying township where the lands in question were located. O'Brien says that he was part of a group that was formed to stop the annexation.

[para14] O'Brien states that in January 1989, he learned from the Town of Geraldton that McNabb's application for subdivision approval had lapsed and that upon contacting McNabb, was informed that a new application had been made and that he was awaiting the outcome. At the time McNabb was negotiating with Lac Minerals to acquire road access to the property over the Hardrock Road, which Lac Minerals were not prepared to dedicate.

[para15] On April 6, 1992, McNabb wrote to Lac Minerals in which he requested Lac Minerals to dedicate the existing road and right of way, known as Hardrock Road, pursuant to his application for subdivision status so that residents can receive their property deeds.

[para16] In 1993, when the Town of Geraldton again sought annexation of their Townships, the then solicitor for McNabb sent a questionnaire to the O'Briens asking what benefits they thought annexation would bring. O'Brien answered "Town assistance on selling subdivision agreement and getting deed to property."

[para17] In March of 1994, it was publicly announced that the Ontario Municipal Board had approved Geraldton's claim for annexation of Ashmore Township, where the land in question is located. Again on March 29, 1994, McNabb wrote to Lac Minerals requesting dedication of the Hardrock Road for the purpose of subdivision approval in order for the home owners to acquire their property deeds. O'Brien expresses the view that this letter clearly demonstrates that McNabb was proceeding in a diligent and timely fashion with his plans for subdivision and that in so doing, he continued to recognize the rights of the various home owners to ultimately get deeds for their lands.

[para18] After annexation, O'Brien states that he did not pay the municipal tax bills on the grounds that he was not the owner of the land, even though the municipal tax bills were being forwarded to him.

[para19] Following the approval of the subdivision in May of 1999, O'Brien states that he contacted McNabb in June of 1999 and was informed that his Agreement of Purchase and Sale was null and void and that he would not be receiving a deed to the land. As a result, O'Brien contacted his solicitor and caused a caution to be registered under Section 71 of the Land Titles Act on July 7, 1999.

[para20] On October 6, 1999, counsel for McNabb informed the O'Briens that their Agreement of Purchase and Sale had expired due to the Limitations Act and that the property described in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale was being offered for sale to the public for $44,000.00, so that he could recover his expenses.

[para21] The affidavit of Tony Petty sworn November 5, 1999, is for the most part similar in content to the affidavit of John O'Brien and expresses the belief that notwithstanding the time period involved, that McNabb was proceeding in a diligent and timely fashion with his plans for subdivision approval and, that the road issue was the major stumbling block. Reference is made to an application for subdivision approval dated January 8, 1997, in which McNabb wrote to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs stating:

By and large, this is not a development proposal, rather it is a process to allow existing home owners to obtain deeds to property on which the homes have existed for 40 years.

It must be noted, however, that the document referred to was a 10 page Application for Approval of a plan of subdivision or Condominium Description under Section 51 of the Planning Act and contains information and details that reflect that it is predominantly a development proposal.

II POSITION OF THE PARTIES

[para22] Counsel for Donald McNabb argues that the Agreements of Purchase and Sale, as between himself and the plaintiffs, contained a true condition precedent (i.e. subdivision approval) before any estate in the land can vest in the purchasers, otherwise the agreement would be in contravention of Section 50 of the Planning Act, which governs land use. In this case, it is submitted that when approval of the initial draft plan of subdivision was not obtained within a reasonable period of time as specified in the agreements, that the agreements became null and void insofar as creating any fee interest in the lands in favour of the plaintiffs. Instead, it is argued that the agreements converted the potential purchasers into long term (20 year) tenants.

[para23] Counsel for the plaintiffs takes the position that the plaintiffs obtained an immediate equitable interest in the lands, subject to obtaining legal title on the performance of the contractual conditions, namely the obtaining of subdivision approval. In this case, the plaintiffs considered the efforts of McNabb to obtain subdivision approval to be ongoing from 1985 to 1999 when subdivision approval was ultimately obtained. Accordingly, they take the position that the conditional rights that were agreed upon in 1985-86 with respect to the purchase of the lands are enforceable today, notwithstanding the time period involved and the changed circumstances. In this regard, the plaintiffs place considerable reliance on correspondence from the defendant McNabb in which reference is made to existing home owners acquiring deeds.

III LEGAL CONSIDERATIONS

[para24] Section 50 of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. P.13 imposes a scheme of subdivision control and provides that no title shall pass if property is sold contrary to the section. An Agreement of Purchase and Sale made in contravention of Section 50, does not create or convey any interest in land, however, Section 50 of the Planning Act does not affect an agreement made subject to the express condition that such agreement comply with the provisions of the Planning Act. In other words, Offers to Purchase that are entered into in contravention of the Act are null and void and therefore unenforceable, unless they are conditional upon obtaining severance approval.

[para25] A condition precedent in an Agreement of Purchase and Sale, for the sale of land, is a condition that must happen or be performed before an estate in land can vest or be enlarged or before a contract is performed. It remains for the Court to determine whether the condition is a true condition precedent.

A contract of sale of land was made subject to a proviso that the property can be annexed to the village of Streetsville and a plan is approved by the village council for subdivision, and the date for completion was fixed at 60 days after plans are approved. Neither party undertook to fulfill this condition and neither reserved any power of waiver. Held: The condition was an external one, a true condition precedent upon which the existence of the obligation depended, and until it occurred, neither party had the right to performance. The parties had not promised that it would occur, and until it did, there could be no breach of contract. This was not a case where a party could waive or forego a promised advantage or dispense with part of the promised performance of the other party which was solely for the benefit of the first and was severable from the rest of the contract.

[para27] In George Wimpey Canada Ltd. v. Focal Properties Ltd. (1977) 78 D.L.R. (3d) 129, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the failure of the condition precedent resulted in the agreement, by its own terms, coming to an end. The headnote sets out the principle as follows:

The sale agreement placed the obligation on the plaintiff to obtain registration of the three plans of subdivision referred to in the agreement. The agreement established a definite closing date some five years from the date that the agreement was entered into. The agreement also provided that there could be no alternative closing date, if some other date would be mutually acceptable. No such date was mutually acceptable. The plaintiff was unable to obtain registration of the proposed plan of subdivision by the closing date. Since the parties were unable to agree on a new closing date, the plaintiff elected to treat the agreement as terminated and sought to return to the defendant the deposit it had paid.

The Ontario Court of Appeal in Wimpey found that the agreements were frustrated, whereas the Supreme Court of Canada held that the agreements had come to an end by their terms on the failure to obtain registration of the proposed plans of subdivision by the closing date. Houlden J.A., at the Court of Appeal, found that the length of time during which performance has been prevented, is an important factor in determining whether a contract has been frustrated.

[para28] Blair v. Crawford (1989) 70 O.R. (2d) 748 (Ont. H.C.) Saunders J., is a case where the defendants sold land to the plaintiff, subject to consent to sever being obtained by December 3, 1986. Although approval was granted to severance before December 3, 1986, it was not a final approval, but was subject to certain conditions, namely the submission of a survey and zoning, which conditions were not fulfilled on the stipulated date. The defendants notified the plaintiff that the agreement was at an end, following which the plaintiff brought an action for specific performance. The action was dismissed. It was held that the condition precedent was a true condition precedent since its fulfillment depended on the actions of third parties. The parties rights crystallized on the stipulated date and, since the condition was not fulfilled on that date and the defendant acted expeditiously in seeking to fulfill it, there was no agreement, and the defendants were entitled to treat the agreement as ended. The case of Aldercrest Developments Ltd. v. Hunter [1970] 2 O.R. 562 was distinguished in that in Aldercrest the vendor had undertaken to seek the consent and had not done so.

[para29] In Aldercrest Developments Ltd. v. Hunter, the defendant Hunter sold a six acre section of his larger farm to the plaintiff, subject to the provisions of the Planning Act with respect to land severance from the appropriate Planning Board and, the closing date to be 90 days after Planning Board approval. The defendant undertook the matter of severance but did not pursue his undertaking. It was the plaintiff's intention to pursue subdivision approval with respect to the severed six acre parcel, an area where the plaintiff encountered difficulties time-wise. The defendant cancelled the contract and the plaintiff brought an action for specific performance. The trial judge found that specific performance could not be granted but, in finding for the defendants on the merits, he fixed the damages claimed in the alternative against them. Laskin J.A. for the Ontario Court of Appeal, states at page 564:

Here on the execution of the contract of sale, the purchaser obtained an immediate equitable interest subject to perfection or defeasance of title on the performance or non-performance of contractual conditions; and in the absence of specified time limitations the standard of reasonableness is applicable.

In dealing with a perpetuity issue, Laskin J.A. had this to say at the top of page 564:

Upon execution of the contract herein, the purchaser acquired an interest in the particular land but, there is the argument (if I may spell it out for the respondents) that for an undeterminable time, extending possibly beyond the perpetuity period, it will not be known whether the purchaser's interest will be supplemented by a legal title in fee simple or whether Hunter's full interest will be restored.

And further down on page 564 Laskin J.A. states:

It is my view that the key to this case lies in understanding the necessary order of priorities in satisfying the conditions and, I am content in this respect to agree that conditions 1, 2 and 4 at least are true conditions precedent.

Condition 4 in particular reads as follows:

The contract constituted by the acceptance of this offer is subject to the provisions of Section 26 of the Planning Act which requires a land severance consent from the appropriate Planning Board.

The pursuit of severance was undertaken by the defendant vendor, whereas subdivision approval was the pursuit of the purchaser. The two matters became intertwined and the trial judge construed the closing date provisions of the contract as relating to Planning Board approval of the purchaser's proposed plan of subdivision and not to approval or consent to the land severance. At page 568 Laskin J.A. states:

I do not regard the present case as governed in its result by Turney and Turney v. Zhilka [1959] S.C.R. 578. The principle in that case is applicable here in that neither party promised the other to procure the consent to severance but, the similarity ends at this point. Having regard to the legislation which became effective on May 3, 1965, and to the correspondence between the solicitors, I am of the opinion that the defendants undertook to seek consent to severance apart entirely from any implication in the agreement to that effect, and that they cannot rely on their failure to do so as a ground for avoiding the contract. They had, through their solicitor, treated it as subsisting up to the time they suddenly purported to cancel it. The plaintiff had been exploring the necessary consents and approvals under the other conditions, but these depended ultimately on the consent to severance, which was the key to any successful conclusion of the transaction.

[para30] In Fenton v. Barbrook Mill Inc. et al (1987) 34 D.L.R. (4th) 683, Henry J. of the Ontario High Court was faced with the issue as to whether the condition agreed to was a true condition precedent, the failure of which would disentitle the plaintiffs to a decree of specific performance. In this case, the plaintiff agreed to purchase land from the vendor in a proposed subdivision conditional upon compliance with the Planning Act by the defendant and registration of the plan of subdivision by July 31, 1986. If the plan of subdivision was not registered by that date, the agreement was to be void. However, the defendant had the right to extend the agreement for three successive months, if the plan was not registered in time. The plan was not registered by July 31, 1986 but was, in fact, registered on August 12, 1986. On August 6, 1986, the defendant took the position that the plan of subdivision not being registered by July 31, 1986, that the agreement was null and void. It was held that the condition would normally be a true condition, in that control over its performance lay with third parties. However, it was not a true condition precedent in this case because:

(1) the defendant vendor was required to comply with the Act. Paragraph 10 of the agreement provided that:

This agreement is conditional upon compliance with the requirements of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1980, as amended, which compliance shall be obtained by the vendor at its sole expense on or before closing.

(2) The vendor had the right to extend the agreement; and

(3) The final performance of the parties depended on the registration of the plan.

Henry J found that the vendor did not take reasonable steps to satisfy the condition and since it did not act bona fide, it could not rely on the condition.

[para31] The Fenton case was considered by Van Camp J in Thorman v. Parnes et al (1990) 73 O.R. (2d) 149 Ont. H.C., wherein she expressed the view that Henry J erred when he stated that a true condition precedent ceases to be so because there was a right of one party to extend closing. In Thorman v. Parnes, the vendor received draft approval of a plan of subdivision in June of 1987 and started to sell lots. The completion date was to be 30 days after notification by the vendor that he was in a position to provide title. If the agreement was not completed by June 30, 1988, it was to be null and void and that if the vendor had not arranged for registration by that date, he might extend closing by 60 days. The vendor was unable to obtain final approval by June 30, 1988. It was held that the agreements expired according to their terms on June 30, 1988 and were found to be null and void, with the defendants having no interest in the lands. The condition precedent had not been met and did not cease to be a true condition precedent because there was a right of one party to extend closing. The vendor used his best efforts to secure clearances and there were no misrepresentations or material promises that were relied on by the defendants that caused them loss. The condition was not that he would obtain any necessary consent or approval, but that he would proceed diligently to obtain such.

[para32] In Breslau Heights Development Ltd. v. Grobe Nursery Ltd. [1998] O.J. No. 2038, Ont. Ct. Gen. Div. Reilly J, it was held an agreement for the sale of land, in which registration of a plan of subdivision was a true condition precedent, that the agreement was rendered null and void when the draft approval lapsed. This was a case where, on September 18, 1978, the vendor obtained draft approval of a plan of subdivision subject to 18 conditions to be satisfied before final approval could be issued. The vendor continued with its development plans by working with at least two engineering consulting firms to deal with the conditions to be met prior to registration of the draft plan. The conditions were to be met after several extensions on December 24, 1986. The conditions not having been met, the draft approval lapsed and the plan of subdivision was never registered. The cost of meeting the conditions would have made the development uneconomical and the vendor shelved his plans. The closing date itself contemplated a registration of the plan of subdivision -- "the sale to be completed 90 days subsequent to the registration of a plan of subdivision". It was held that failing registration of a plan of subdivision, the subject property was incapable, in law, of being transferred. Thus, the intention of the parties being frustrated in law, the agreement would be null and void. The right to obtain registration of a plan of subdivision is uniquely that of the owner of the property. Thus, there was an onus on the part of the owner to seek, in good faith, the registration of the plan of subdivision. Failing such attempts, in good faith, to seek registration of the plan of subdivision, the owner could arguably be subject to a mandatory order to again apply for registration of a plan of subdivision or, in the alternative, be liable for damages. It was found that the owner did indeed pursue in good faith and with diligence for more than eight years, efforts to register a plan of subdivision. It would be contrary to common sense and good law to suggest that the vendor owner should now be required to pursue a plan of subdivision that would be economically unfeasible. Counsel for the purchasers submitted that the issue of good faith of the owner in pursuing the registration of a draft plan of subdivision should, at the very least, not be decided on this application, but should be the subject of an issue for trial. Reilly J, disagreed and found that the evidence available, albeit by affidavit, revealed clearly that the owner ultimately determined that it would be economically unfeasible to pursue the plan of subdivision and that a trial of the issue would be economically draining on the parties and the Court system.

[para33] In Dynamic Transport Ltd. v. O.K. Detailing Ltd. (1978), 85 D.L.R. (3d) 19, S.C.C., Dickson J, in dealing with which party was to obtain subdivision approval said:

Both parties were aware that subdivision approval, pursuant to the Planning Act, was required, but the agreement is silent as to whether vendor or purchaser would obtain this approval. The statutory prerequisite became an implied term of the agreement. The obtaining of subdivision approval was, in effect, a condition precedent to the performance of the obligations to sell and to buy. (See Turney v. Zhilka supra and Barnett v. Harrison et al (1975) 57 D.L.R. (3d) 225) The parties created a binding agreement. It is true that the performance of some of the provisions of that agreement was not due unless and until the condition was fulfilled, but that in no way negates or dilutes the force of the obligations imposed by those provisions, in particular the obligation of the vendor to sell and the obligation of the purchaser to buy. These obligations were merely in suspense pending the occurrence of the event constituting the condition precedent.

[para34] In Re Yorkwood Homes (Georgetown) Inc. et al v. Law Development Group Georgetown (No. 2) Limited et al (1999) 45 O.R. (3d) 257, Ont. C/A; the issue of termination of an agreement was dealt with and the manner of interpreting the termination clause was canvassed by the Court so as to establish the intent of the parties. In situations where the parties specifically deal with the subject matter of termination and provide for a limited right of termination, an interpretation that ignores the specific working of the provisions would not be correct, notwithstanding the reasons of Estey J in Consolidated Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Co. [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at p. 901.

[para35] In Re Pattison v. Sceviour (1983), 43 Q.R. (2d) 229, Ont. H.C., where a vendor conveyed land to a purchaser upon terms that part would be held absolutely and part upon trust for the vendor, it was held that in the circumstances where the vendor retains the absolute right to deal with the abutting trust property, that this contravenes the Planning Act and renders the agreement and deed to be null and void.

IV DECISION

[para36] The herein action was started as an application by the vendor, Donald McNabb, on October 13, 1999 for an Order to declare the Agreements of Purchase and Sale, dated October 23, 1985 and December 5, 1986, null and void on the grounds that the condition precedent was not satisfied. The respondents filed a counter-application dated November 24, 1999 for an Order that the said agreements are valid and enforceable equitable rights to the lands in question, in priority to the Bank of Nova Scotia mortgage and the Stanley Malouf easement. By Order of Zelinski J, dated December 23, 1999, a trial of the issues was ordered in which the respondents O'Brien and Petty were to be plaintiffs, and the applicant, Donald McNabb, the Bank of Nova Scotia and Stanley Malouf, were to be the defendants.

[para37] It is most clear from the ordinary meaning of the words used in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale that the intention of the parties was to initially and primarily enter into a binding Agreement of Purchase and Sale for the lots in question, subject to subdivision approval, and then, if subdivision approval was not forthcoming for any reason, that the potential purchasers would acquire a leasehold interest to the said lands for a period of 20 years, at a prepaid rental of $3,500.00. The terms and conditions of the agreements, as contractual documents, cannot be said to be void for uncertainty.

[para38] As can be seen on the map, which was filed as an exhibit to the affidavit of John O'Brien, the proposed subdivision fronted Lake Kenogamesis and would appear to be choice cottage or summer home property, which would be even more useful if the shoreline reserve, as referred to in the agreements, was to be acquired. The significance of the Hardrock Road, as an access route and, as a cost saving factor to the development, also becomes apparent from this plan.

[para39] The Agreements of Purchase and Sale, in describing the lands in question, refer to a draft plan of subdivision that was prepared by Philips Surveyors on May 15, 1985.

[para40] The Agreements of Purchase and Sale are conditional upon subdivision approval so as to comply with the provisions of Section 50 of the Planning Act. In this regard it must be noted that there is no promise or undertaking on the part of the vendor McNabb that he will satisfy the condition precedent, but only that he will pursue the matter with due diligence and in a timely fashion and, should any purchaser be of the opinion that he is not so proceeding, that he would provide them with a Power of Attorney to pursue the application at his expense. The evidence reveals that McNabb did in fact pursue the application with due diligence in a timely fashion.

[para41] As to the time period within which the condition precedent was to be met, a specified date was not established. Instead, paragraph (i) of the agreement mentions a period of three years as a timely and diligent period for McNabb to seek approval, following which the purchasers, if they so desired, could take over the pursuit of the application at McNabb's expense. And, at paragraph (iii) it further provides that: "in the event the subdivision, as hereinbefore referred to, is for any reason not forthcoming (and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any inactivity on the part of the purchaser may be construed so as to be included in the phrase, for any reason), the purchaser shall rent the subject lands and premises for a term of 20 years calculated from the date hereof. Paragraph (vi) provides that a closing date of the within transaction shall be within 60 days of the date the vendor notifies the purchaser, in writing, that he has obtained subdivision approval, at which time the balance of the purchase monies shall be paid; it is acknowledged by the parties hereto that if the within transaction does not result in a conveyance of the fee simple of the subject lands, the balance of the purchase price will not be paid and that the deposit monies shall be deemed to be full payment of rent for the twenty year term aforesaid."

[para42] As was stated by Laskin J.A. in Aldercrest, in the absence of specified time limitations and, in situations such as this where the fulfillment date of the condition precedent was indeterminate, the standard of reasonableness is applicable. The herein case is a situation where the parties contemplated subdivision approval within a reasonable period of time and, if such approval is for any reason not forthcoming within a reasonable period of time, the equitable interests of the plaintiffs would be converted to a 20 year leasehold interest.

[para44] Much has been made by the plaintiffs about the Hardrock Road and the nature of the correspondence as between McNabb and Lac Minerals with respect to the dedication of this road for subdivision purposes so that home owners could acquire deeds to the properties. (In this regard see the letters dated April 6, 1992 and May 29, 1994) The Court was also referred to similar correspondence dated January 8, 1997 from McNabb to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs in which reference was made to home owners obtaining the deeds to the properties. The plaintiffs, in referring to this correspondence in their affidavits, express the opinion that these statements by McNabb should be construed as a continued recognition by McNabb of the plaintiffs' equitable property rights to the lots in question right up to the final approval of the subdivision on May 9, 1999, which they submit is the fulfillment of the condition precedent.

[para45] Donald McNabb, in his affidavit, goes to considerable length to explain that the plan of subdivision that was approved on May 9, 1999, was not the same plan of subdivision that formed the basis of the agreements that was presented for approval in 1985. McNabb then goes on to describe the conduct and inactivity of the plaintiffs over the years subsequent to signing the agreements as being that of tenants and not potential purchasers.

[para47] The condition precedent in this case was a true condition precedent in that its fulfillment was external and depended upon the activities of third parties. The defendant McNabb acted expeditiously in seeking to fulfill the condition, but was unable to fulfill the condition precedent within the reasonable time frame as contemplated by the Agreements of Purchase and Sale. That being the case, there being no compliance with the Planning Act, the agreements were simply terminated by their own terms insofar as any property rights to the fee simple are concerned. Under the circumstances, the plaintiffs property rights were subject to defeasance and, pursuant to the agreements they were left with a 20 year leasehold interest in the lands. In adopting a standard of reasonableness, this Court is of the view that the time frame involved, in light of the clear and unambiguous wording of the agreements, was inordinately long and permitted the defendant to consider the property rights as having been terminated when he applied for and received approval of his plan of subdivision on May 9, 1999.

[para48] Accordingly, it is hereby declared that the agreements dated October 23, 1985 and December 5, 1986 are null and void insofar as creating any valid enforceable equitable interest in the fee simple to the lands in question and that the plaintiffs have no interest in the said lots other than pursuant to their respective leasehold interests as contained in the agreements.

[para49] Summary judgment to issue accordingly. Costs may be spoken to.

Bruvels v. Guindon

Between Denise Bruvels, and Bernard Guindon

Court File No. 99-FL-25302

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Family Court V. MacKinnon J. March 13, 2000. (21 paras.)

Counsel: Steven J. Greenberg, for the applicant Denise Bruvels. Marc Y. Simard, for the respondent, Bernard Guindon.

[para1] V. MacKINNON J. (endorsement):-- Respondent moves for summary judgment to dismiss the Applicant's claims against him which are for child support and for a declaration that he holds certain property in trust for her. Both parties filed affidavit evidence in the motion. These reasons will deal with each claim separately.

[para2] The children for whom support is sought are the Applicant's children from a prior relationship, now ages 18 and 15. The Applicant alleges that the Respondent stood in the place of a parent to these children and on this basis claims child support. The Respondent denies that he stood in the place of a parent, and asks that the claim be dismissed.

[para3] The parties did not marry. It is in dispute as to whether their period of cohabitation was for a brief period of three and one half months, as claimed by the Respondent, or whether it spread over three and one half years, with some interruptions, as claimed by the Applicant. The Respondent says the couple separated in January 1996. The Applicant says the couple separated in December 1997. Her action was commenced in May 1999. No child support has been paid since separation and a motion for interim child support was withdrawn.

[para4] The Supreme Court of Canada has, in Chartier v. Chartier (1998), 43 R.F.L. (4th) 1, at p. 22, set out the factors to be taken into account in determining whether a person stands in the place of a parent:

The relevant factors in defining the parental relationship include, but are not limited to, whether the child participates in the extended family in the same way as would a biological child; whether the person provides financially for the child (depending on ability to pay); whether the person disciplines the child as a parent; whether the person represents to the child, the family, the world, either explicitly or implicitly, that he or she is responsible as a parent to the child; the nature or existence of the child's relationship with the absent biological parent.

[para5] The court also states at p. 22, that the opinion of the child, and the intention of the adult, as to the nature of the relationship, are also factors to be considered.

[para6] In her affidavit filed in response to the motion for summary judgment, the Applicant repeats the allegation that the Respondent treated the children as his own when they lived together. The factual basis that she provides in her affidavit is as follows:

1. Family holidays were taken. The family went on picnics and skiing outings.
2. The Respondent provided limited support including gifts for the children and the occasional car repair for the Applicant's car.
3. Natalie worked with the Respondent doing a variety of types of yard work.
4. The Respondent attended Natalie's soccer games.
5. The children's biological father does not provide support and is permanently disabled.
6. The girls did call the Respondent to help with school projects that would require the use of his truck.
7. The Respondent told the girls he would always love them.

[para7] The Applicant's affidavit does not address the following factors set out in Chartier (supra):

1. The opinion of the 18 and 15 year old children as to whether the Respondent stood in the place of a parent to them.
2. The relationship between the children and their biological father.
3. Whether the Respondent disciplines the children.
4. Whether the Respondent represented to the child, the family or the world that he is responsible for these children as a parent.

[para8] The Ontario Court of Appeal has stated in Aguonie v. Galion Solid Waste Material Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161 that on a motion for summary judgment, the motions judge:

will never assess credibility, weigh the evidence, or find the facts. Instead, the court's role is narrowly limited to assessing the threshold issue of whether a genuine issue exists as to material facts requiring a trial. Evaluating credibility, weighing evidence, and drawing factual inferences are all functions reserved for the trier of fact.

[para9] In an earlier decision of the Court of Appeal, Morden A.C.J.O., speaking for the court, referred to a decision of one of the drafters of the United States Federal Rules of Civil Procedure:

But the history of the development of this procedure shows that it is intended to permit "a party to pierce the allegations of fact in the pleadings and to obtain relief by summary judgment where facts set forth in detail in affidavits, depositions, and admissions on file show that there are not genuine issues of fact to be tried".

[para10] Morden A.C.J.O. referred, in particular, to the intention of enabling "a party to pierce the allegations of fact in the other party's pleadings": Irving Ungerman Ltd. v. Galanis (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 545 (C.A.) at p. 550.

[para11] The intention in the summary judgment process, that a party must move beyond mere allegations and set forth facts in sufficient detail to show a genuine issue of trial, is confirmed in the cases which speak of the responding party to the motion putting its best foot forward. For example, in Transamerica Life Insurance Co. of Canada v. Canada Life Assurance Company (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 423 (Gen. Div.), the court stated at p.p. 434-435:

It is clearly established that on a motion for summary judgment, a party is no longer entitled to sit back and rely on the possibility that more favourable facts may develop at trial. To avoid summary judgment, a party is required to put its best foot forward. The onus remains on the moving party to show that there is no genuine issue for trial, but the responding party must "lead trump or risk losing": Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie (1990), 75 O.R. (2d) 225, 33 C.P.R. (3d) 515 (Gen. Div.); 1061590 Ontario Ltd. v. Ontario Jockey Club (1995), 21 O.R. (3d) 547, 43 R.P.R. (2d) 161 (C.A.). In my view, Transamerica has failed to present evidence to indicate that there is a triable issue on this point and Canada Life has met the onus of showing that it should be granted summary judgment on this issue.

[para12] This decision was upheld by the Ontario Court of Appeal, [1997] O.J. No. 3754, where Robins J.A. stated for the court:

We can find no error in [the motions judge's] assessment of the evidence or in the inferences he drew from the evidence. Nor can we find any error in his application of the relevant legal principles to the evidence in the case. We agree with the motions judge that the appellant has not produced evidence of specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial.

[para13] In Lang v. Kligerman, [1998] O.J. No. 3708, the Court of Appeal stated:

However, where the evidence presented by the moving party prima facie establishes that there is no genuine issue for trial, and the moving party is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law, to preclude the granting of summary judgment the responding party assumes the evidentiary burden of presenting evidence which is capable of supporting the position advanced by the responding party in its pleading. On the basis of this evidence, when considered with all the evidence before the motions judge, it will then be for the motions judge to determine whether the evidentiary record raises a genuine issue for trial.

[para14] In three decisions subsequent to their decision in Aguonie (supra) the Ontario Court of Appeal has confirmed that the responding party to the motion for summary judgment must put its best foot forward. In Kardish v. Kardish, [1999] O.J. No. 676, the court again referred to the evidentiary record that should be placed before the motions judge:

In our view, it was open to the motions judge on the basis of this record to conclude that the appellant had no reasonable chance of success and that, consequently, there was no need for a trial on the question of the validity of the marriage contract. There were no contentious material facts to be determined.

The evidence advanced in support of the claim of undue duress, when viewed in the context of the whole evidence on the motion, would not suffice to make out the claim at trial. Further, there was no evidence of lack of disclosure that could justify an order setting aside the marriage contract.

[para15] See also Grossman Holdings Ltd. v. York Condominium Corp. No. 75, [1999] O.J. No. 3289 (C.A.); DBM Financial Group Inc. v. Derivative Services Inc., [1999] O.J. No. 4266 (C.A.)

[para16] In my view, the Applicant mother has failed to set out an evidentiary basis that shows a genuine issue for trial as to whether the Respondent stood in the place of a parent to the children. The fact that she makes the allegation that he did stand in the place of a parent, and that he denies this allegation, does not raise a genuine issue of fact for trial. The Respondent's evidence has prima facie established that there is no genuine issue for trial. Following Lang v. Kligerman (supra) the Applicant must meet the evidentiary onus that is thus upon her to present evidence capable of supporting a finding that the Respondent did stand in the place of a parent to the children. To do so, she must go beyond allegations. She must "put her best foot forward". In this case, accepting the facts as set out in the mother's affidavit as true, she has not addressed or led evidence as to many of the factors that the court should consider before it could make such a finding. Lack of factual detail cannot be saved by a bald allegation.

[para17] Nor do I not accept her counsel's submission that the issue of intention and relationship to the children are matters of credibility that require a trial. The issue of credibility must be genuine and as to material facts. If, as I have found, assuming the truth of the facts in the Applicant's affidavit still does not establish legal entitlement, then there is no genuine issue of credibility for trial, even though those facts are actually in dispute. See Irving Ungerman Ltd. v. Galanis (supra) at p. 552.

[para19] With respect to the claim for a declaration that the Respondent holds property in trust for the Applicant, the evidentiary record is different. Here there are material factual disputes between the parties. Based on the Respondent's evidence alone, I would have been persuaded that there is no genuine issue for trial. However, the evidence put forward by the Applicant demonstrates that there are issues as to material facts, credibility and weight that should be resolved by a trial judge, for example, as to the nature and extent of work she contributed to the Respondent's properties. In other words, this issue cannot be resolved without "evaluating credibility, weighing evidence, and drawing factual inferences" all of which are functions reserved for a trial judge according to the Court of Appeal in Aguonie (supra).

[para20] For these reasons, the Respondent's motion for summary judgment is allowed as to the claim for child support but not as to the claim for a declaration that the Respondent holds certain property in trust for the Applicant.

[para21] Should either counsel wish, written submissions as to costs may be made within two weeks of the release of these reasons, with a right of reply within five subsequent days. Submissions should not exceed two pages and should include or attach sufficient information so that costs, if awarded, may be fixed.

Barnes v. Blackfriar's Development Inc.

Ontario Superior Court of Justice Donnelly J. Heard: June 14-16, 1999. Written submissions: July 15, August 15 and 22, 1999. Judgment: September 3, 1999. (41 paras.)

Counsel: Paul Linley, for the plaintiffs. David Smith, on his own behalf.

BACKGROUND

[para1] The Plaintiffs, as limited partners in the development of a residential condominium building in London, seek:

- a) Rescission of the Limited Partnership Agreement with the return of each unit subscription price of ($40,000.00) and of one capital call on each unit in the amount of ($4,000.00)
- b) In the alternative damages for breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation,
- c) As against the defendant 646999 Ontario Limited, damages for breach of fiduciary obligation.

[para2] The defendant, Blackfriar's Development Inc. (Blackfriars) was the developer. Blackfriars was equally owned through separate corporations by:

- The Defendant, David Smith (Smith), a chartered accountant and real estate developer, who was responsible for finances.
- S. Buchanan, a Real Estate Broker, who was responsible for design and marketing.
- Wm. Patten, a contractor, who was responsible for construction.

[para3] The Defendant, 646999 Ontario Limited (646999) and the Defendant, D.W. Smith & Associates Limited (Smith Limited) were wholly owned by Smith. Smith Limited held Smith's one third interest in Blackfriars. 646999 was the general partner.

[para5] At earlier stages in these proceedings Smith was represented by one lawyer, and later by another. At the opening of the trial he advised that he was unrepresented by choice and was able to conduct his defence. He proceeded to do so. Although fully informed about his right to testify and to call other evidence, he declined the opportunity to do so. No limitation issue was mentioned at trial. The issue was not raised in the pleadings which were prepared when Smith was represented by counsel.

THE DEVELOPMENT

[para6] In or about August 1986 Blackfriars, and Smith distributed a promotional brochure and an offering memorandum for limited partnership units to raise equity capital. Representations in those documents included:

- a) The project would be nine floors with 58 residential units. The first six floors would contain 38 units owned and controlled by the limited partners. The balance would be owned and controlled by Blackfriars.
- b) Construction of the limited partnership portion of the building would be completed at a fixed price $4,180,000.00. The peril of cost over run was to Blackfriars account. Thirty-eight limited partnership units at a unit price of $40,000.00 would provide $1,520,000.00.
- c) Subject to an inapplicable income tax related provision, no capital call would be made within three years of the turnover date.
- d) The closing date for the offering memorandum was Dec. 31/96, followed by an eighteen month construction period.
- e) Audited financial statements would be provided to limited partners.

[para7] The plaintiff, Glen Schlotzhauer, had participated as a limited partner in Smith's development of Victoria Towers in Stratford. Upon Smith's solicitation, in May or June/86 Mr. Schlotzhauer purchased two units in Blackfriars. For the first unit Mr. Schlotzhauer paid the full price. For the second unit he paid $20,000.00. The balance of $20,000.00 remains unpaid in reliance on Smith's letter as follows:

"As discussed and agreed, I, personally and my Company, Blackfriar's Development Inc. hereby agree to advance to you $20,000.00 on a interest free basis if the 20,000 of funds from Victoria Towers partnership are not delivered to you during the first week of December, 1986. These funds will be advanced to you fill such time as the 20,000 of funds are available form Victoria Towers partnership."

[para8] Blackfriars sued Mr. Schlotzhauer in 1992 for the $20,000.00 plus two unpaid capital calls. The action was dismissed for reasons undisclosed in this trial.

[para10] In May 1986, Smith represented to the plaintiff, Millson that an investment of $40,000.00 would return $60,000.00 by Christmas. Acting for himself and associates, Mr. Millson purchased one unit.

[para12] The plaintiffs, with the exception of Mr. Schlotzhauer, paid $40,000.00 for each unit plus one capital call of $4,000.00 for the months of July, August, September and October 1988.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTY

[para13] The Development encountered financial difficulty. The cost of the limited partnership interest in the building exceeded $4,180,000.00. Smith, acting through the general partner 646999, added a tenth floor with the six additional units owned by Blackfriars. This was contrary to the offering memorandum and without authority from limited partners.

[para14] Additional engineering drawings were required for the structural change. The project was delayed by two or three months. The turnover date for the completed building was extended to July 1, 1988. Construction and carrying costs increased. Six additional condominiums were offered for sale in a declining market in competition with the units owned by the limited partnership. In result, each plaintiff lost his entire investment.

CORPORATE DEFENDANTS

[para15] The claim against Blackfriars and 646999 is founded upon deemed and actual admissions giving rise to rescission and restitution by reason of firstly, breach of the Securities Act and secondly, negligent misrepresentation. The claim against the general partner 646999 is founded upon breach of its duty of trust owed to limited partners.

[para16] No prospectus was filed with, or approved by, the Securities Commission as required by Section 52 of The Ontario Securities Act. The limited partnership offering was not exempted from filing by the seed capital exception in Section 71(p), because in excess of twenty-five units were sold. Section 130 provides civil remedies for breach of Section 52:

"A purchaser of a security to whom a prospectus was required to be sent or delivered but was not sent or delivered in compliance with subsection 70(1) has a right of action for rescission or damages against the dealer or offeror who failed to comply with the applicable requirement."

[para17] The claim for negligent misrepresentation is founded on representations recklessly and negligently made and maintained by Smith and Blackfriars. As provided in Queen v. Cognos Inc. 99 D.L.R. (4th) 626, a claim in misrepresentation is premised upon.

"a) There was a duty of care, based on a special relationship between the representor and representee, the representor having some special skill or knowledge;

b) A representation was made that was proved to be either inaccurate, untrue or misleading;

c) The representation was made by the representor with the intention of inducing the representee to adopt or take a course of action;

d) The representee in fact relied upon or placed reliance on the representation;

e) By placing reliance on the representation, the representee did so to its own prejudice."

[para18] The claim for breach of trust by the general partner 64699 is founded on the general partner's duty to represent the interests of the limited partners. Loyalty and fidelity in adhering to obligations under the offering memorandum are required. There should be no unauthorized departure from that duty. 337965 BC Ltd. v. Tackama Forest Products 91 D.L.R. (4d) 129 and 94 D.L.R. 767 - Molecan v. Omega Oil & Gas [1988] 1 S.C.R. 348. The trust relationship is founded on provisions in the offering memorandum as follows:

"Investors will be relying upon the judgment experience and ability of the general partner to finance and operate the project. Partners holding units are not entitled to take part in the control of the business of the partnership."

"No person dealing with the partnership is required to inquire into the authority of the general partner to take any action or make any decision on behalf of and in the name of the partnership."

SMITH'S LIABILITY

[para19] Judgments against corporate defendants, with neither charters nor assets would be a pyrrhic victory ("One more such victory and we are lost"). The practical issue is Smith's personal liability:

a) Whether his actions, personally and as the controlling mind of Blackfriars and the sole owner of 646999 and Smith Limited warrant piercing the Corporate veil in relation to 646999.

b) For his personal representations relating to the development.

[para20] The claim for piercing the corporate veil is founded on the true nature of Smith's relationship with 646999. The corporate veil will be pierced to permit damages against an individual where the circumstances are such that justice requires equitable intervention. In T.L. Raymond Electric v. Idylwild (1984), 7 C.L.R. 210, Justice Killeen states:

"What is clear, beyond question, in the modern cases interpreting the Solomon principle is that fraudulent or flagrantly manipulated misconduct on the part of the key owner or owners of the "one man" type of company will almost invariably lead to an attribution of civil liability against such persons where such misconduct causes financial loss to others: the veil will be pierced because justice and equity demands that such will be done."

[para21] Justice Killeen quotes with approval from Justice Masten's article "One Man Companies and Their Controlling Share Holders" 1936 (14) Canadian Bar Review 663:

"If a company is formed for the express purpose of doing a wrongful act, or, if when formed those in control expressly direct a wrongful thing to be done, the individuals as well as the company are responsible. The mere machinery to do an illegal act will not purge its illegality."

"Where the evidence brings the case within (the quote above) or where it establishes that the company is a mere agent of the controlling shareholder, it may be appropriate to characterize the company as a paper sham, a simulacrum, cloak, alias, or alter ego".

FINDINGS

[para22] I accept and find as follows:

a) Smith produced the promotional brochure and the offering memorandum. The security of limited partners' investment was described in the brochure by terms "Positive cash flow return", and "Guarantees", with no further explanation.

b) In correspondence soliciting limited partners, some of which was on Smith Limited stationary, Smith confirmed his personal participation stating:

i) "I am seeking investors"

ii) "I am putting together a condominium project"

iii) "As I mentioned, I would like you to participate in our Blackfriars' Partnership because of the profit potential, small tax savings and the quality of the project. For your review, I am attaching a copy of a letter written to my friend Mr. John Thiel, who is personally buying one of the partnership units. Five of his friends are also participating. I believe this opportunity to be exceptional and I would appreciate it if you would give it some consideration."

[para23] The plaintiffs, Graff, Kelly, Millson, Barnes and Schlotzhauer were personally contacted by Smith. They considered they were dealing with him. He did nothing to disabuse them of that perception. They relied on his representations.

[para24] The plaintiffs, Millson and Barnes invested prior to seeing the offering memorandum and in reliance upon Smith's representations including a fixed price and a completion date within 18 months of August, 1986.

a) To the plaintiff, Millson, that a $40,000.00 investment would yield a profit of $20,000.00 in approximately six months.

b) Through sales before units were ready for occupancy, limited partners may receive the return of their investment together with profits before the building was completed.

[para26] The development concept was Smith's. He controlled the entire transaction. He was the operating mind of Blackfriars. His identification with Blackfriars was confirmed in his letter to Mr. Schlotzhauer "I, personally, and my company Blackfriars' Development Inc. ". In examination for discovery Smith referred to himself as the general partner - "And the general partner 646999 who is also myself". Smith was the only signatory to the Development Construction Agreement (between Blackfriars and 646999), the Initial Service Agreement (between Blackfriars, the Limited Partnership and 646999) and the Management Agreement (between Blackfriars, the limited partnership and 646999). He dealt with lawyers and accountants. He handled all financing. He attended all limited partnership meetings. He was the limited partners sole contact with Blackfriars.

[para28] His willful departures from authority include:

a) Execution of a variable price construction contract which provided:

"The owner agrees that should the possibility of trade related cost increase occur due to demand, product costs and market conditions, then the general partner and the developer shall at their discretion approve such increases on behalf of both the partnership and the developer "

b) Addition of the tenth floor,

c) Two unauthorized capital calls,

d) In June 1986 prior to solicitation of many of the limited partners and without subsequent notice to limited partners, Smith executed a management agreement which, contrary to the offering memorandum, provided 30 residential units and commercial space on the first floor for limited partners.

[para29] He failed or refused to provide an affidavit of documents in the course of this action. He resisted all attempts to trace Blackfriars' finances through recourse to records from his solicitors, his accountants or his companies. He has refused to disclose the construction costs for building, financial information relating to the tenth floor, whether he paid for his two limited partnership units, and even his address before filing his written argument insisting that service of documents be made at the Blackfriars' address although he does not live in London.

[para30] In some cases, contrary to the offering memorandum, cheques from limited partners were payable to Smith Limited. Absent financial records, tracing these funds was impossible.

CONCLUSIONS

[para31] Smith was 646999. Deviations from 646999's authority under the offering memorandum were unilaterally designed and exercised by Smith for his benefit. Through 646999's manipulative acts, Smith's interest prevailed over that of the limited partners. Absence of audited financial statements provided time for his manipulations. Limited partners had relied upon his representations. They were vulnerable to and suffered by those authorized actions.

[para32] Blackfriar and Smith owed a duty to limited partners. The terms of the offering memorandum presented by Blackfriar's and Smith were made with the intention that subscribers would rely upon them. The Plaintiffs did rely on them. Those representations were material to the risk undertaken by subscribers. They were rendered untrue by Smith's conduct. As a result the plaintiffs suffered losses. Those actions constitute the tort of misrepresentation within the definition in Queen v. Cognos.

[para34] The measure of damages for breach of trust is replacement of money lost through the breach. There may also be a right to trace and recover profits from improper use of the funds. It has not been demonstrated on a balance of probability that there were profits from this enterprise. The evidence is to the contrary. This litigation dating to events in 1986 and 1987 should not be extended absent good cause.

[para35] No order is made relating to tracing profits by a reference or otherwise. This is without prejudice to the Plaintiff's rights to pursue the matter further if so advised.

RESULT

[para36] The limitation issue premised on s. 138 of the Securities Act was not mentioned at trial. It was first raised in closing written submissions. No opportunity was given to the Plaintiffs to deal with the issue. No evidence was lead as to the timing of the Plaintiff's awareness of actions giving rise to this claim. Notwithstanding that Smith was self represented, it would be manifestly unfair to permit the limitation issue to proceed. In any event, that defence is limited to the Securities Act issue.

[para38] The plaintiffs will have judgment against all defendants except Smith Limited:

- a) With respect to Blackfriars, for negligent misrepresentation.
- b) With respect to 646999, for breach of trust.
- c) With respect to Smith, for negligent misrepresentation and through his personal liability flowing from piercing the corporate veil.

[para39] Each of the plaintiffs, Frederick Barris, David Drake, Thomas Drake, Alan Graff, Boris Homenock, Sharon Kelly, Richard Millson and Ken Sawchuk will have judgment for their loss or damage being $44,000.00 being the subscription price of $40,000.00 and the capital call of $4,000. The plaintiff Glen Schlotzhauer, will have judgment for $60,000.00, being full payment for one unit and half payment for another unit. He did not make payment on the capital call.

- a) In relation to the unit prices of $40,000.00 as follows:

On $20,000.00 from September 1, 1986,

On $10,000.00 from December 15, 1986.

On $5,000.00 from June 30, 1987 and

On $5,000.00 from October 30th, 1987.

- b) In relation to the capital calls of $4,000.00 from October 31st, 1988.

[para41] If there are circumstances indicating other than party and party costs against Smith, Blackfriars and 646999, submissions may be made in writing within fifteen days. Thereafter the costs endorsement will be completed.

Eglinton Place Inc. v. Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario (as represented by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations) et al.

Superior Court of Justice Rivard J. February 21, 2000

Harry Herskowitz, Robert M. Freedman and Richard P. Hoffman, for applicant. Jean C.H. Iu, for respondent, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario.

[1] RIVARD J.: -- This is an application brought under rule 14.05(3)(d) for the determination of the following issue:

[2] Does the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, provide the necessary authority for a condominium corporation to release an easement?

[3] The facts are not in dispute.

[4] The applicant, Eglinton Place Inc. owns lands situated at 123 Eglinton Avenue East, in Toronto ("the 123 Lands"). These lands are being developed by the applicant as a multi-residential condominium project.

[5] A neighbouring condominium development owns the lands abutting the southerly boundary of the 123 Lands. I will refer to this property as the "MTCC 1128 Lands".

[6] The MTCC 128 Lands enjoy an easement over part of the 123 Lands for the purpose of facilitating access of garbage vehicles removing garbage from MTCC 1128. This easement is registered on title.

[7] Correspondingly, the 123 Lands have an easement for access over portions of the common elements of the MTCC 1128 Lands, to facilitate entry into the parking area on the 123 Lands. The easement is also registered on title.

[8] MTCC 1128 does not require or use the easement over the 123 Lands because it has its own garbage storage and removal area entirely within its own boundaries. MTCC 1128 has agreed to formally release the easement to and in favour of the applicant.

[9] Eglinton does not and will not require the easement over the MTCC 1128 Lands because its development plans for the 123 Lands provide for a separate and independent underground parking garage, with access to this parking located entirely within the boundaries of the 123 Lands. Eglinton has agreed to formally release the easement to and in favour of MTCC 1128.

[10] In pursuance of these agreements, Eglinton's solicitor submitted to the Land Registrar of the Land Titles Office in Toronto, for pre-approval, two forms of release of easement. One form was prepared pursuant to s. 13 of the Condominium Act and the second was prepared pursuant to s. 38 of the Act.

[11] The Land Registrar rejected both forms on the basis there exists no express statutory authority under the Condominium Act permitting a condominium corporation to release an easement.

[12] Eglinton then brought this application. The notice of application was served by ordinary mail upon all the condominium unit owners. The five major banks and Canada Trust were also served as the mortgagees of the lands in question.

[13] It was my view as well as the opinion of counsel that service in this manner was appropriate in light of the very large numbers of unit owners.

[14] I therefore granted an order permitting substituted service of the notice of application as set out in para. (d) of p. 4 of the notice of application. Pursuant to rules 1.05 and 2.03, I also allowed the applicant to describe the respondent unit owners and mortgagees of MTCC 1128 in the title of proceeding as appears in the notice of application, thereby dispensing with compliance with rule 14.06.

[15] Counsel for the applicant informs me that his law firm did receive calls from some unit owners who indicated they are not opposing this application. He also spoke to a legal representative of Canada Trust and of the Bank of Montreal who also stated they were not opposing the application. The only opposition to this application is from the Ministry.

[16] I must now consider whether the Condominium Act provides the authority to a condominium corporation to release an easement, or, whether, the consent of all unit owners is required. Counsel for the applicant submits it would be impossible to get 100 per cent of the unit owners to sign the release.

[17] The Ministry submits that these easements were not conveyed to the condominium corporation, but are part of the common elements, and are owned by the unit owners as tenants in common. The Ministry further submits the rights of real property owners should not be altered without clear statutory authority or without the express consent of the owners, neither of which exists or has been obtained.

[18] Section 1(1) of the Condominium Act defines the term "property" as constituting the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description, and includes any land and interests appurtenant to land that are added to the common elements.

[20] The parties to this application agree that an easement is a real property interest and forms part of the common elements.

[21] There is some dispute as to whether or not an easement is an asset under the Condominium Act. Although the terms "property" and "common elements" are defined in the Act, no definition is provided for the term "asset". The Act does however distinguish "assets" from "property" and "common elements".

[22] Under s. 12(1) of the Condominium Act, the objects of the condominium corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation.

[23] Under s. 12(2) of the Act, the corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

13(1) The corporation may own, acquire, encumber and dispose of real and personal property for the use and enjoyment of the property.

[25] In York Condominium Corp. No. 104 v. Supreme Automatic Working Machine Co. (1978), 18 O.R. (2d) 596 (H.C.J.) ("the Supreme case") the applicant was in the same position under the Condominium Act, as it read then, as the applicant in this proceeding finds itself under the current legislation.

[26] In the Supreme case, the Condominium Act did not give a condominium corporation the power to lease the common elements.

[27] In this proceeding, the Condominium Act does not deal with the manner of releasing an easement.

[28] In the Supreme case, the condominium corporation purported to enter into a lease of the common elements. There was nothing in the Condominium Act to outline how this could be achieved. The court had to consider whether the Act empowered the condominium corporation to act as agent for the unit owners in leasing the common elements.

[29] In dealing with this issue, Mr. Justice Reid started from the proposition that there is no provision in the Condominium Act preventing the corporation from acting as agent. In fact, he was of the view that the tenor of the Act was to the contrary. He said at pp. 598-99:

For example, the corporation is made generally responsible for the performance functions of common concern. In carrying out these functions it is, in essence, acting on behalf of all the unit holders. The corporation may bring actions with respect to the common elements. In doing so, it is really acting as agent for the owners. The Act therefore contemplates the corporation acting as agent of the unit holders.

Section 9(4) [now s. 12] states that the objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation. While the applicant submits that the property and assets of the corporation do not include the common elements because they are owned by the members and not the corporation, in my opinion, "property" in s. 9(4) is not confined to what is owned by the corporation. A primary function of the corporation is the management of the undertaking. It could hardly carry out this function if it were restricted to property owned by the corporation. It thus appears to me that "property" in s. 9(4) should be construed as the term is defined in the Act [s. 1(1)(n)] . . .

[31] I agree with the comments of Reid J. in the Supreme case. The condominium corporation, in releasing and in obtaining a release of the easements in question, was "managing" the property and the assets of the corporation. In my view, the term "assets" in s. 12 of the Act, if given its plain and ordinary meaning, includes the easement.

[32] I agree with the opinion of Mark F. Freedman, an expert in the area of condominium law, to the effect that condominium corporations are in no different position today with respect to releasing an easement than condominium corporations were in prior to 1978 with respect to the issue of leasing common elements dealt with in the Supreme case. Mr. Freedman said at p. 6 of his report, found at tab 7 of the applicant's authorities:

The board of directors has the authority to manage the property consistent with the objects of the corporation, and accordingly, in my opinion, the board would (and should) have the authority to release and abandon easements, if the ratio of the Supreme case is to be followed.

[33] I add that s. 12(1) of the Condominium Act should not be given a narrow interpretation. It should be read as an empowering section, conferring broad powers on the condominium corporation. This was the approach taken by the court in Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 539 v. Chapters Inc. (1999), 24 R.P.R. (3d) 319, [1999] O.J. No. 2806 (S.C.J.), where the court recognized and accepted that the Condominium Act is remedial legislation and should not be rigidly or narrowly construed.

[34] For these reasons, there will be an order declaring that s. 13(1) of the Condominium Act, as amended, enables a condominium corporation to release an easement which is part of the common elements.

[35] It is further ordered that the Land Registrar for the Land Titles Division of Metropolitan Toronto (No. 66) forthwith register the applicant's form of release of easement as appended to the notice of application as schedule "A".

Order accordingly.

Crawford v. Corporation of the City of London; Ruebsam Engineers Inc. et al., Third Parties

Court File No. 30707A/99

Superior Court of Justice Haines J. February 3, 2000

MOTION by defendant for an order dismissing an action.

C. Scott Ritchie, Q.C., and Charles M. Wright, for plaintiff. Brian S. McCall, for defendant. Joseph M. Dillon, Q.C., for Ruebsam Engineers Inc.

[1] HAINES J.: -- This is a motion brought by the defendant under Rule 20 for the following relief:

(a) an order declaring that the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6 ("CPA") does not apply to the special damages claim in this action;

(b) an order declaring that the CPA is not the preferable procedure in this action; and

(c) an order dismissing this action with costs.

[2] The issue is this: Is the plaintiff precluded from proceeding under the CPA by operation of s. 37 of that statute and s. 14 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26?

[3] The relevant portion of s. 37 of the CPA provides:

37. This Act does not apply to,

(a) a proceeding that may be brought in a representative capacity under another Act;

14(1) The Corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such action brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

[5] Thelma Crawford is acting as the proposed representative plaintiff of a class of condominium unit owners and former owners, whose condominium units were allegedly constructed with dangerous defective wood burning fireplaces that were subsequently replaced by gas insert fireplaces at a cost of approximately $4,000 each. There are six separate condominium corporations and a total of 999 units that are affected. Certain components of the fireplaces and chimneys are the property of the individual unit owners and other components are part of the common elements of the respective condominium corporations.

[6] It is alleged that the defendant approved building plans which did not comply with the applicable building codes and then, following construction, determined that the fireplaces as installed were a fire hazard. The claim for special damages represents the cost of converting the fireplaces from wood to gas. The plaintiff also claims general damages for fear and anxiety, loss of use of wood burning fireplaces, loss of time and opportunity and diminution of property value.

[7] The defendant submits that a condominium corporation is, pursuant to s. 14 of the Condominium Act, empowered to commence action on behalf of the corporation and all of its unit owners to recover special damages in the nature of those claimed here. The defendant maintains that any such action constitutes "a proceeding that may be brought in a representative capacity under another Act" as provided for in s. 37(a) of the CPA and, consequently, the plaintiff is not entitled to make this claim under the CPA.

[8] The plaintiff acknowledges that s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act permits a condominium corporation to advance common claims on behalf of itself and the unit owners but submits that access to the CPA is not precluded. Counsel for the plaintiff points out that this proceeding involves a claim that has been initiated by a single unit owner and under s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act a unit owner cannot advance a representative action for other members of the condominium corporation or for former unit owners. Mr. Ritchie contends, therefore, that since this proceeding cannot be brought in a representative capacity under the Condominium Act, s. 37(a) of the CPA does not apply.

[9] Mr. McCall does not disagree with the observations but does dispute the conclusion. He submits that it is only under s. 14(1) of the Condominium Act that the full claim for special damages for the replacement of the fireplaces can be addressed since it is only the condominium corporation that can advance a claim for damages to the common elements. He concludes, therefore, that any claim that includes such damages must be pursued by the condominium corporation.

[10] A plain reading of s. 37(a) of the CPA seems to preclude the application of the CPA where it can be said that the proceeding the plaintiff is seeking to pursue under the CPA may be brought by the plaintiff in a representative capacity under another Act. In such circumstances, a plaintiff or applicant must proceed under the other Act. That is not the case here. The plaintiff, a unit owner, cannot maintain a representative action under any Act on behalf of current or former owners of any of the units in any of the subject condominium corporations. It may be that the unit owners will not be able to claim for damages to the common elements, but in my view that does not preclude the plaintiff from pursuing an action under the CPA for the damages the unit owners are entitled to claim.

[11] Both counsel made submissions as to why one procedure was preferable to the other. These submissions may be important on a motion for certification but, in my view, are not relevant to the inquiry required under s. 37(a) of the CPA where the question is whether the subject proceeding is one which a plaintiff or applicant is permitted to bring in a representative capacity under another statute. If the answer to the question is "yes", the CPA does not apply. But if the answer is "no", as is my finding here, the action may be commenced under the CPA.

[12] The defendant's motion for judgment is therefore dismissed. I will hear submissions as to costs on a convenient date to be arranged by counsel through the office of the Trial Co-ordinator.

[13] The issue raised on this motion is novel and I am grateful to counsel for their comprehensive facta and helpful submissions.

Motion dismissed.

Strata Corp. LMS 509 v. Andresen

Between Strata Corporation LMS 509, plaintiff, and Bev Andresen, Gordon Antil, Bob Bowen, Ann Card, Peter Card, Marie Carter, Doreen Dartnell, Reg Dartnell, Jim Doerr, Jim Hansen, Judy Mortensen and Laurence Shindel, defendants

Vancouver Registry No. L001137

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Skipp J. Heard: November 14 - 15, 2000. Judgment: February 7, 2001. (59 paras.)

Counsel: R.M. Shore, for the plaintiff. J. Mendes, for the defendants.

[para1] SKIPP J.:-- The plaintiff Strata Corporation applies for a declaration that all owners of units at the Chelsea Green condominium complex are responsible for payment of expenses required to rectify damage to the common property of Chelsea Green in proportion to each owner's unit entitlement in the property.

[para2] The plaintiff strata corporation is situated in Langley, British Columbia, and it consists of 224 residential units, and of those 224 units, 182 are attached low-rise buildings (townhouses). The remaining 42 are in a single contiguous, 3-storey block (apartments). There is a common building and pool which is available for use by all residents. There are two primary access gates to Chelsea Green which are locked and all residents have a common key which opens all entry points.

[para5] The townhouse unit holders submit that there are two types of strata lots within Chelsea Green, one type being the townhouse unit strata lots and the other type being the apartment unit strata lots. Their submission is that on a proper construction of the applicable legislation the costs of rectification should be directed to the apartment unit strata lots. The apartment unit strata lot owners do not agree and in their view all of the unit holders should contribute to the rectification costs on a unit entitlement basis.

[para6] The defendants, whom I will refer to as the townhouse owners, seek an order dismissing the plaintiff's application and declaring that:

a. the plaintiff strata corporation is comprised of two types of strata lots, namely, strata lots 1 - 182 (the "Townhomes") and strata lots 183 - 224 located in an apartment building (the "Apartment Units" and "Apartment Building", respectively);

b. the cost of repairing the construction deficiencies in the Apartment Units and Apartment Building (the "Repair Levy") is a contribution which relates to and benefits the owners of the Apartment Units alone (the "Apartment Owners"), and must be allocated to the Apartment Owners in accordance with Strata Property Regulation s. 6.4(2);

c. in the alternative, the cost of repairing the balconies and decks of the Apartment Units is a contribution which is attributable to the limited common property of the Apartment Units and must be allocated to the Apartment Owners in accordance with s. 128(3) of the Plaintiff's Bylaws.

WHAT LEGISLATION APPLIES THE CONDOMINIUM ACT, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 64 OR THE STRATA PROPERTY ACT, R.S.B.C. 1998, c. 43

[para7] The plaintiff's submission is that the appropriate legislation is the Condominium Act and it further submits that at all times relevant to the dispute Chelsea Green operated pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act. The plaintiff observes that all the pleadings filed herein prior to July 1, 2000, relied upon and referred to sections of the Condominium Act which was repealed on July 1, 2000, when the Strata Property Act came into force. Significant regulations were also proclaimed with the new Act.

[para8] I refer to the transitional provisions set out in s. 293 of the Strata Property Act which provide, inter alia:

293(1) Except as otherwise provided by this Act and the Regulations, this Act and the Regulations apply to a strata plan deposited and a strata corporation created under the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 64 or any former Act.

It would appear on a plain reading of the now s. 293(1) of the Strata Property Act and bearing in mind the changes made to these sections prior to the Strata Property Act coming into force that the legislature intended that the Strata Property Act would apply except as otherwise provided in the Act itself.

[para9] The plaintiff in urging that the Condominium Act should be the governing Act to resolve the questions raised herein relies on Butterfield v. Strata Plan NW 3214, 2000 BCSC 1110, [2000] B.C.J. No. 1520. Shortly put, I find Butterfield to be distinguishable. The Strata Property Regulations contemplate expense allocations of the nature raised herein and they provide mechanisms for strata corporations operating under the Condominium Act. Given that the legislature has provided direction in these matters I find that the Strata Property Act and the Strata Property Regulations govern this dispute, although events prior to July 1, 2000, will be relevant in determining how the repair levy is to be treated as an expenditure.

DIVISION TWO - CONTRIBUTION TO EXPENSES

[para10] I refer to s. 99(1) of the Strata Property Act:

Subject to s. 100, owners must contribute to the strata corporation their strata lots' shares of the total contributions budgeted for the operating fund and contingency reserve fund by means of strata fees calculated in accordance with this section and the Regulations.

[para11] "Operating fund" is defined in s.1 of the Strata Property Act as meaning:

a fund for common expenses that usually occur either once a year or more often than once a year, as set out in s. 92(a).

"Contingency reserve fund" is defined as meaning:

a fund for common expenses that usually occur less often than once a year or that do not usually occur, as set out in s. 92(b).

[para12] Section 99 stipulates that all owners must contribute to the operating and contingency reserve funds in accordance with their unit entitlement, a requirement made subject to exceptions for types of strata lots and limited common property by s. 6.4 of the Strata Property Regulation. That section reads:

6.4(1) For the purposes of s. 99 of the Act, but subject to a resolution under s. 100 of the Act, if a contribution to the operating fund relates to and benefits only limited common property, the contribution is shared only by owners of the strata lots entitled to use the limited common property, and each strata lot's share of that contribution is to be calculated in accordance with the following formula and not in accordance with the formula set out in section 99(2) of the Act:

unit entitlement of strata lot _____ x contribution to operating fund total unit entitlement of all strata lots whose owners are entitled to use the limited common property to which the contribution relates the result of which is that the cost is shared amongst those owners entitled to use the limited common property.

[para13] Section 6.4(2) sets out the following:

6.4(2) For the purposes of s. 99 of the Act, but subject to a resolution under s. 100 of the Act, if a contribution to the operating fund relates to and benefits only one type of strata lot, and that type is identified as a type of strata lot in the by-laws of the strata corporation, the contribution is shared only by owners of strata lots of that type, and each strata lot's share of that contribution is to be calculated in accordance with the following formula and not in accordance with the formula set out in s. 99(2) of the Act:

unit entitlement of strata lot _____ x contribution to operating fund total unit entitlement of all strata lots of the type to which the contribution relates and s. 99(2) contains the provision where the cost is shared equally by all strata lots.

[para14] From the sections that I have referred to and for the formula set out in Regulation 6.4(2) to have reference to the repair levy, in this case the following facts must exist:

1. That there is more than one type of strata lot at Chelsea Green and the types are identified as types in the bylaws.
2. That the contribution being made is to the operating fund.
3. That the contribution relates to and benefits only one type of strata lot.

[para15] Is there more than one type of strata lot at Chelsea Green and if that is the case have the types been identified as types of strata lots in a bylaw?

[para16] In determining whether there are different types of strata lots at Chelsea Green one must refer to the Strata Property Act and to the Strata Property Regulation for guidance. Section 191(1)(c) of the Strata Property Act provides that a strata corporation can have "sections".

[para17] For the purpose of representing the different interests of "owners of different types of residential strata lots" s. 191(2) provides that,

For the purposes of ss. 1(c) strata lots are different types if they fall within the criteria set out in the Regulations.

[para18] Section 193 outlines the procedure for the creation of, or cancellation of sections. It provides, inter alia:

193(1) To create or cancel sections, the strata corporation must hold an annual or special general meeting to consider the creation or cancellation.

(2) The notice of meeting must include

(a) a resolution to amend the bylaws to provide for either the creation and administration of each section or the cancellation of the sections, and

(b) any resolutions to designate limited common property, in accordance with s. 74, for the exclusive use of all the strata lots in a section or to remove a designation in accordance with s. 75.

(3) The resolution referred to in ss. 2(a) must be passed:

(a) by a 3/4 vote by the eligible voters in the proposed or existing section, and

(b) by a 3/4 vote of all the eligible voters in the strata corporation.

[para19] Part 11 of the Strata Property Regulation deals with "sections". Section 11.1 provides:

For the purposes of s. 191(1)(c) of the Act, the following are the different types of residential strata lots:

- (a) apartment style strata lots;
- (b) townhouse style strata lots;
- (c) detached houses

[para20] Part 11 outlines formulas for sharing operating expenses for limited common property and types of strata lots in sections. Section 11.2(2) provides:

For the purposes of s. 195 of the Act, but subject to a resolution under s. 100 of the Act, if a contribution to the operating fund relates to and benefits only one type of strata lot in a section, and that type is identified as a type of strata lot in the bylaws of the section, the contribution is shared only by owners of strata lots of that type, and each strata lot's share of that contribution is to be calculated in accordance with the following formula and not in accordance with the formula as set out in s. 195 of the Act.

[para21] Part XVII of the Strata Property Regulation also deals with types of strata lots. Section 17.13 provides:

(1) Subject to the bylaws of the strata corporation, if a strata corporation's budget, in effect on the coming into force of this section, apportions any common expenses to one or more type of strata lot in accordance with s. 128(2) of the Condominium Act or a similar bylaw, the strata corporation may continue to use the type of strata lot identified in the budget as a type of strata lot for the purposes of sections 6.4(2) and 11.2(2) of this Regulation.

(3) Before January 1, 2002, a strata corporation may enact a bylaw that identifies the type of strata lot set out in the budget referred to in subsection (1) as a "type of strata lot" for the purposes of sections 6.4(2) and 11.2(2).

(4) Despite s. 128(1) of the Act, a bylaw under ss. (3) may be approved by a resolution passed by a majority vote at an annual or special general meeting.

[para22] Section 128 of the Condominium Act deals with common expenses and provides, inter alia,

(1) The strata lot owner's contribution to the common expenses of the strata corporation must be levied in accordance with this bylaw.

(2) If a strata plan consists of more than one type of strata lot, the common expenses must be apportioned in the following manner:

(a) common expenses attributable to one or more type of strata lot must be allocated to that type of strata lot and must be borne by the owners of that type of strata lot in the proportion that the unit entitlement of that strata lot bears to the aggregate unit entitlement of all types of strata lots concerned;

(b) common expenses not attributable to a particular type or types of strata lot must be allocated to all strata lots and must be borne by the owners in proportion to the unit entitlement of their strata lots.

(3) If a strata plan includes limited common property, expenses attributable to the limited common property which would not have been expended if the area had not been designated as limited common property must be borne by the owners of the strata lots entitled to use the limited common property in proportion to the unit entitlement of their strata lots.

[para23] It would appear that the legislators intended in s. 193 of the Strata Property Act to provide a mechanism for strata owners to form sections based on types of strata lots for the purpose of apportioning expenses. Chelsea Green has not invoked this mechanism. Even so, the legislature has provided a means in s. 17.13 of the Strata Property Regulation for strata corporations to continue to apportion expenses to one or more type of strata lot in accordance with s. 6.4(2) and 11.2(2) of the Strata Property Regulation, provided that the budget of the strata corporation in effect on July 1, 2000, apportioned common expenses to one or more type of strata lot in accordance with s. 128(2) of the Condominium Act.

[para24] The budget of Chelsea Green in place on July 1, 2000 does in fact apportion some expenses to the townhouse strata lots and some to the apartment strata lots. Section 17.13 of the Strata Property Regulation sets out that subject to the bylaws of the strata corporation, if the budget has apportioned any common expenses to one or more type of strata lot in accordance with s. 128(2) of the Condominium Act or similar bylaw the strata corporation may continue to use the type of strata lot identified in the budget as a type of strata lot for the purposes of s. 6.4(2) and 11.22 of this Regulation.

[para25] It is further noted that that option is permissive and not mandatory. This phrasing, together with the mechanisms set out in s. 193 of the Strata Property Act empowers the owners of strata corporations to make their own decisions with respect to the allocation of costs related to expenditures such as the repair levy.

[para26] Should the townhouse owners be required to contribute to the repair levy? Since the Strata Council levied all of the Chelsea Green unit holders, even assuming that the requirements of s. 17.13(1) of the Strata Property Regulation, with reference to s. 128(2) of the Condominium Act have been met, it is clear that the strata corporation has chosen not to continue to use the types of strata lot identified in the budget for the purposes of s. 6.4(2) and 11.2(2) of the Regulation at least with respect to the repair levy.

[para27] In my view the Strata Council, in opting not to use the types of strata lot identified in the budget, has acted within the discretion afforded to it by the legislation.

[para28] The Strata Council issued its repair levy in December 1999 and three months earlier on September 8, 1999, a Special Resolution was put forward at an Extraordinary General Meeting of Chelsea Green Strata Council. The resolution read:

BE IT RESOLVED as a Special Resolution of the owners, Strata Plan LMS 509, Chelsea Green, that under Chelsea Green's by-laws and the Condominium Act, S. 128, that Strata Plan LMS 509 consists of more than one type of Strata Lot, that is Apartment and Townhouses, and accordingly all expenses attributable to either Apartment or Townhouses shall be levied and borne by the owners of that type of Strata Lot.

This Resolution failed to attract the requisite approval.

[para29] Having concluded that the Strata Council were acting within their jurisdiction in concluding that there is only one type of strata lot, the owners' opportunity for redress is as set out in s. 17.13 of the Strata Property Regulation. That is, by the enactment of a bylaw pursuant to the provisions of s. 17.13(3), identifying the types of strata lot set out in the budget referred to in ss. (1) as "types of strata lot", for the purposes of sections 6.4(2) and 11.2(2).

[para30] Alternatively, the owners could put forward a Resolution pursuant to the provisions of s. 193 of the Strata Property Act which section deals with the creation or cancellation of sections by strata corporation.

[para32] When the September 8, 1999, Resolution was moved, the costs of rectifying the water ingress damage had not been established and when it was, the Strata Council elected not to resort to the mechanism available to it via s. 17.13(1) of the Strata Property Regulation and I find their decision to be consistent with the condominium concept as enunciated by Bauman J. in the Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden (1996), 7 R.P.R. (3d) 80 (B.C.S.C.), wherein he referred to the condominium concept of people living together in individually owned units within a common shell.

[para33] If my conclusion that the Strata Council acted within its jurisdiction in electing not to invoke the provisions of s. 17.13(1) of the Strata Property Regulation to establish two types of strata units is deemed to be incorrect, then in order for a bylaw enacted pursuant to s. 17.13(3) of the Strata Property Regulation to achieve the effect of allowing the costs of the repair levy to be allocated in accordance with s. 6.4(2) and 11.2(2) of the Regulation, it would be necessary to comply with the remaining requirements set out in s. 99 of the Strata Property Act and s. 6.4(2) of the Strata Property Regulation.

[para34] A number of definitions in the Strata Property Act are pertinent in determining whether the contribution being sought is one that is appropriately characterized as a contribution to the operating fund. Operating fund is defined in s. (1) of the Strata Property Act to mean "a fund for common expenses that usually occur either once a year or more often than once a year, as set out in s. 92(a) [of the Strata Property Act]". Common expenses are defined in s. (1) of the Strata Property Act to mean expenses that are

- (a) relating to the common property and common assets of the strata corporation, or
- (b) required to meet any other purpose or obligation of the strata corporation.

[para35] Section 92 of the Strata Property Act sets out that to meet its expenses the strata corporation must establish, and the owners must contribute, by means of strata fees, to

- (a) an operating fund for common expenses that usually occur either once a year or more often than once a year, and
- (b) a contingency reserve fund for common expenses that usually occur less often than once a year or that do not usually occur.

[para36] It would appear to follow that in order for the repair levy to be properly characterized as a contribution to the operating fund, it necessarily must be

- (1) a common expense that
- (2) usually occurs once or more each year.

Conversely, if a levy can be properly characterized as a contribution to the contingency reserve fund then all of the owners, regardless of the type of strata they own, would pay on a unit entitlement basis. Such a finding would require that the contribution be

- (1) a common expense that
- (2) usually occurs less often than once a year or that does not usually occur.

[para37] The provisions of s. 128 of the Condominium Act, incorporated into the bylaws at Chelsea Green are helpful. The language employed in s. 128 of the Condominium Act suggests that one indication that an item is a common expense is that it is budgeted. This observation is consistent with the remarks of Bauman J. in Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, supra, wherein he noted that common expenses in the context of s. 128 of the Condominium Act would be only those expenses levied under s. 128(10) as part of the annual budget.

[para38] I am of the view that this interpretation of the judgment is not correct. Bauman J. was clear in his finding that the repair levies arose because of the need to repair critical portions of the common property as is the case here. Prima facie this finding would fit within the definition of common expense in the Strata Property Act as outlined above,

Common expenses are also defined in s.(1) to mean expenses that are

- (a) relating to the common property and common assets of the strata corporation.

[para39] In Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, supra, the issue was what constitutes common expenses for the purposes of statutory priority pursuant to the provisions of s. 37(2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979 c. 61. Bauman J. observed that the repair levies were not contemplated by the annual budget as the expenses arose unexpectedly during the year, between the budgets. Secondly, referring to s. 35(1)(b) and (d) the court noted that the levies were not intended to top up the contingency reserve fund.

[para40] Section 35 of the Condominium Act at that time contemplated a "reserve fund being established for extra-ordinary future expenses". It permitted "the levying of contributions on the individual owners". It also permitted the strata corporation to make expenditures out of the contingency reserve fund when necessary to meet extraordinary expenses, as they materialized. Noting that the levies were not made out of the contingency reserve fund it was assumed in the circumstances that there was simply not sufficient monies for the needed repairs. Thus, rather than rising out of the annual budget, the levies arose by special resolution.

[para41] The court concluded that the definition of common expenses in s. 37(7) of the Condominium Act was inclusive and not exclusive, and that given the strata corporation's duty to repair and maintain common property the expenses related to the repair levies were authorized and enjoyed priority. A repair levy, such as the one here at issue, is related to common property and I find constitutes a valid common expense.

[para42] The defendant submits that the cost of the rectification repairs is properly attributable to the operating fund. It was further submitted that the repair levy would be expected to form part of the administrative fund (now the operating fund) because expenses related to water ingress damage have occurred annually since at least 1995.

[para43] The defence submits further that the repairs to the apartment building's exterior were not random but were instead the result of significant construction defects for which Chelsea Green was financially responsible. Without enumerating these defects, in June 1997 Strata Council was made aware the developer would no longer assume responsibility for any future building envelope repairs.

[para44] In October 1997, the balconies and the stucco problems were apparent. In January 1998, Strata Council approved a contractor's quote to repair these defects. The work began shortly thereafter and by April 20, 1998, Strata Council had been advised that rot had been exposed in the apartment balcony soffits and finally the November 24, 1998, Spratt report set out that structural rot existed in the apartment building and that a complete rehabilitation of its exterior walls was required.

[para46] In Marco Polo Properties Ltd. v. Strata Plan LMS 1328 (1999), 71 B.C.L.R. (3d) 188, Davies J. upheld the decision of a strata corporation to include the cost of its building envelope repairs in its administrative fund. He said at paras. 19 to 22,

I am satisfied that in the circumstances of this case the inclusion of the remedial cost to repair the waterproof envelopes of the buildings in this development was properly included in the respondent's annual budget under 35(1)(a). That section requires that a strata corporation must:

Establish a fund for administrative expenses sufficient for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of premiums on policies of insurance and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation.

[para47] The phrase "and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation" as per Davies, J., as he then was in Marco Polo, included the strata corporation's duty to repair as mandated by s. 14, 34(1)(d) and 116(b), (d) and (f).

[para48] Further with respect to the strata corporation's duty to repair I refer again to Royal Bank of Canada v. Holden, supra, in which Bauman J. wrote at para. 17:

The strata corporation has certain essential duties under the Act to maintain common property, common facilities, and assets of the strata corporation. These are fundamental duties, and I perceive, their execution by the strata corporation is critical to the realization of the condominium concept - that is people living together in individually owned units within a common shell.

[para49] In Marco Polo the court referred to the fact that a $2,467,000.00 levy to repair the defects related to water ingress damage could not be paid from the contingency reserve fund for both practical and legal reasons. Davies J. observed that in his view the use of funds from the contingency reserve fund for such purposes was not mandatory as s. 35(1)(b) of the Condominium Act mandates that those funds be used to create a fund for unusual or extraordinary future expenses.

[para50] Davies J. went on to observe that aside from the practical problem of the contingency reserve fund not having sufficient funds to pay for the repairs he found that the repairs then required were not future repairs but they were repairs required imminently and on an urgent basis, and that they had continued as such on an annual basis since the project was completed. Generally speaking I find that factual situation to be remarkably similar to the situation confronting Chelsea Green.

[para51] In my view the observations of Davies J. in Marco Polo and his characterization of the repair levy have not been diminished with the advent of the Strata Property Act. Expenses concerning interim and emergency repairs to the apartment building envelope, investigative work, design work and remedial work will continue to be incurred each year that the building is not repaired.

[para52] The townhouses will also require more modest envelope repairs as the time goes by. I find that the repair levy can therefore be correctly characterized as an operating fund expenditure. I have come to this conclusion notwithstanding the fact that similar repairs such as those undertaken to eight balconies of the apartment building in early 1998 were effected through the contingency fund.

[para53] Should the conclusion, that there is only one type of strata lot in Chelsea Green prove to be incorrect, the issue to then be addressed is can the repair levy be characterized as a contribution that relates to and benefits only one type of strata lot. In my view the repair levy would relate to and benefit the townhouse strata lots, as well as the apartment unit strata lots.

[para54] In that regard I refer to the evidence of Jeff Potoraka of Royal Appraisals, to the effect that there has been a diminution in the value of the townhouse units in Chelsea Green exceeding the average downturn in value of condominiums in Langley. As well, it would seem to be a defensible proposition that the repair levy will be of benefit to both the townhouse strata lots and to the apartment unit strata lots in terms of increased saleability.

common property designated for the exclusive use of the owners of one or more strata lots.

[para57] Although the balconies and decks in their daily use may be considered limited common property, as these areas relate to the structure of the apartment building, I find them to meet the definition of common property, as outlined above. As such, the repair of these areas falls under the obligations of Chelsea Green.

CONCLUSION

[para58] In conclusion I find that the Strata Property Act and the Strata Property Regulation are the relevant legislation. Through the operation of s. 99(1) of the Strata Property Act I find that the repair levy should be allocated to all strata lot owners on a unit entitlement basis with no exception arising under the Regulation. Accordingly, the application of the plaintiff is successful and the townhouse owners are required to share in the costs of the repair levy on a unit entitlement basis.

[para59] Counsel has agreed that there is to be no order as to costs.

Singer v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program

Superior Court of Justice Divisional Court Blair R.S.J., Then and Co J. October 20, 2000

APPEAL from a decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal denying a claim under s. 14 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31.

Kevin D. Sherkin and Messod Boussidan, for applicants. James C. Tory and John Terry, for respondent.

R.A. BLAIR R.S.J. (THEN J. concurring): --

Background

[1] In 1987 Allen and Nancy Singer purchased two condominiums in a large condominium project in Scarborough, Ontario. The condominiums were bought and sold as tax sheltered investments. Subsequently, the developer/vendor, Reemark Sterling Club 1 Limited, was unable to convey title to the Singers, who sued and obtained judgment from the Honourable Mr. Justice White in May 1992. The judgment granted declaratory relief and a monetary award totaling approximately $95,500 (inclusive of pre-judgment interest).

[2] Reemark has never paid the judgment, and the condominium project was sold under power of sale. The Singers applied to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program under s. 14(1)(a) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 for recovery under the guarantee provisions of that statute. The Warranty Program denied their claims. That denial was upheld by the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal.

[3] The Tribunal concluded the Warranty Program had been correct in determining it was only required under s. 14(1)(a) of the Act to compensate condominium purchasers in tax sheltered investment situations for payments made by the purchasers in respect of land and construction costs and not for the business/investment costs relating to the transaction. It also upheld the Warranty Program's decision that tax savings enjoyed by the purchaser/investor, and rental income received, should be deducted in determining the loss, if any, actually suffered by the appellants.

[4] The Singers now appeal to this court.

Issues

[5] The issues on the appeal are the following:

(a) Is a purchaser who acquires a new condominium unit as a tax sheltered investment entitled to look to the Warranty Program for reimbursement for payments made, not only in respect of lands and buildings purchased, but also in respect of condominium and business-related services provided to the purchaser pursuant to the investment package which forms an integral part of the condominium purchase?

(b) In calculating the financial loss for which a purchaser can look to the Warranty Program for compensation, should tax savings arising out of the investment be an offsetting deduction?

[6] In my opinion, the answer to both questions is "Yes". The Tribunal and the Warranty Program were incorrect in answering the first question in the negative.

Standard of Review

[7] The standard of review on an appeal from a decision of the Tribunal, in circumstances such as this, is that of correctness.

[8] There is no privative clause protecting decisions of the Tribunal, and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21 provides for a broad statutory right of appeal from such decisions. The relevant subsections state:

11(1) Any party to proceedings before the Tribunal may appeal from its decision or order to the Divisional Court in accordance with the rules of court.

(5) An appeal under this section may be made on questions of law or fact or both and the court may exercise all the powers of the Tribunal, and for such purpose the court may substitute its opinion for that of the Registrar or of the Tribunal, or the court may refer the matter back to the Tribunal for rehearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with such directions as the court considers proper.

[9] These statutory provisions call for a standard of correctness in circumstances where, as here, what is involved is the interpretation of a statutory provision regarding which the Tribunal has no more expertise than does the court. In Pezim v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Brokers), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 557, at p. 590, 92 B.C.L.R. (2d) 145, Iacobucci J. stated:

At the correctness end of the spectrum, where deference in terms of legal questions is at its lowest, are those cases where the issues concern the interpretation of a provision limiting the tribunal's jurisdiction . . . or where there is a statutory right of appeal which allows the reviewing court to substitute its opinion for that of the tribunal and where the tribunal has no greater expertise than the court on the issue in question as for example in the area of human rights.

[10] See also Re Feingold and Discipline Committee of College of Optometrists of Ontario (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 169, 123 D.L.R. (3d) 667 (Div. Ct.); Grudzinski v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1997), 32 O.R. (3d) 376, 33 C.L.R. (2d) 315 (Div. Ct.).

[11] For the reasons set out below, I am of the view that the Tribunal was incorrect in holding that the Singers were not entitled to claim under the Warranty Program for the financial losses they sustained in relation to the condominium and business-related services provided as part of the purchase agreement, and which formed an integral part of the contract for the sale of the "homes" in question.

Law and Analysis

14(1) Where,

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

(2) In assessing damages, the Corporation shall take into consideration any benefit, compensation or indemnity payable to the person or owner from any source.

[13] Section 6 of Ontario Regulation 892, R.R.O. 1990, Administration of the Plan, limits the amount of recovery under s. 14 of the Act to $20,000 plus (in the case of a condominium unit) the amount of any interest owing on the amount to be paid out of the guarantee fund.

Damages for Financial Loss Resulting from the Vendor's Failure to Perform

[14] What is at issue, then, is the interpretation of the phrase "a cause of action for damages . . . for financial loss resulting from . . . the vendor's failure to perform the contract [for the provision of a home]."

[15] Counsel for the Warranty Program submits that the agreements between the Singers and Reemark Sterling fall into two separate and distinct categories. The first relates to the sale of land and construction of the condominium -- "the provision of a home", in the traditional sense. The second relates to certain services to be provided by the vendor, and paid for by the purchasers, which gave rise to tax deductions. The Warranty Program and the Tribunal held that only losses relating to the purchase of land and buildings were compensable under the Act, and that losses sustained as a result of the vendor's failure to provide the services purchased were not. The rationale for this position was that the latter losses did not arise from a contract for the provision of a home. Rather, they arose from a contract for business services associated with renting the condominium in order to generate revenue from the home, not as a "home" but as a "business investment". As such, the argument goes, they are not covered under the Act.

[16] Having regard to the tax sheltered nature of the scheme under which the Singers purchased the condominiums, the purchase price of each unit was divided between land and construction costs, and services, as follows:

Land and Construction $84,044 $114,040

Services $18,946 $23,950

Total Purchase Price $102,990 $137,990

[17] In its decision dated May 28, 1998, the Tribunal framed its approach to the determination of the issues before it (at p. 5) as follows:

The question to be decided is what compensation, if any, are the Applicants entitled to under the Act.

What losses and what benefits may be claimed is entirely governed by the Act. Damages in contract law involve different principles from claims by way of compensation under the Act. Allowable claims for compensation under the Act are narrower than damages based on a breach of contract at common law.

Damages in contract law flow from an agreement, whereas under the Act, consumer protection is being provided for people buying a new home. The Act is not devised to protect investors in a tax driven scheme although like others they are covered. The Act, a consumer driven statute, offers protection for what is directly necessary for the provision of a home. Remoteness for financial loss or damage is a vital consideration.

Financial losses under the Act, are dealt with in section 14:

[The Tribunal then cited the provisions of s. 14 set out above.]

With these statutory restrictions, the type of compensation contemplated focuses on the phrase "for the provision of a home". The Act provides funds by way of warranty, limited in amount by the regulations and in limited circumstances.

[18] These reasons reflect the continuing legacy of a series of decisions in which the Warranty Program and the Tribunal have sought to narrow the application of the compensation provisions of s. 14 to financial losses arising from a vendor's failure to perform obligations regarding the acquisition of land and newly constructed buildings -- to new home purchasers in the traditional sense -- on the premise that the Act is "consumer protection. . . for people buying a new home". See, for example, Re Stenzler, [1995] O.C.R.A.T.D. No. 29 (QL); Re Templeton, [1994] O.C.R.A.T.D. No. 141 (QL); Sunforest Investment Corp. v. Ontario

New Home Warranty Program (1997), 32 O.R. (3d) 59, 12 R.P.R. (3d) 157 (C.A.); Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 362, 50 R.P.R. 186 (H.C.J.); Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (1989), 68 O.R. (2d) 577, 4 R.P.R. (2d) 164 (H.C.J.).

[19] However, this approach has not fit easily with the purchase of condominium units. Condominiums are by nature multiple unit developments -- frequently quite large multiple unit developments -- with common elements in which the unit holders have a common interest and which require upkeep, maintenance, landscaping and servicing. These developments provide "homes" for the consuming public, but they often do so under the rubric of highly sophisticated financing, investment, and service packages. Some of these packages are tax driven investment purchases where the buyer does not intend to live in the premises -- indeed, to do so would jeopardize the tax sheltered nature of the investment -- but rather intends to rent the unit to others.

[20] In the circumstances of this case, for example, the Singers' purchases are reflected in a series of nine agreements. These included a General Agreement, a Unit Purchase Agreement, a Development Agreement, a Services Agreement, a Rental Management Agreement, and a Guarantee Agreement. In the litigation involving the Singers and Reemark Sterling, Mr. Justice White found that the agreements, taken together, constituted a condominium purchase. A review of the documents demonstrates that such is the case.

[21] The General Agreement, for instance, stipulates that the appended agreements "form integral parts of [the] General Agreement", and each of the vendor/developer and the purchasers agree to be bound by and carry out all of their terms and conditions. Under the Services Agreement the purchasers are to pay for, and the vendor is to provide, such things as legal and accounting services, landscaping, paving, the arrangement of financing, a buy-down of the interest rate, a guarantee of the first mortgage, and other guarantees pertaining to rentals and cash flows. The Guarantee Agreement, which deals particularly with these latter matters and provides protection to the purchasers pending occupancy by a tenant, clearly states (Art. 1.01) that:

in consideration of the Vendor providing the above guarantees, the Owner covenants and agrees that as part of the Purchase Price he will pay to the Vendor the amounts set out in . . . the Services Agreement.

[22] Moreover, the recitals to the Services Agreement itself demonstrate the integral nature of all of these agreements. They state (in part):

WHEREAS pursuant to a Unit Purchase Agreement delivered contemporaneously herewith it is contemplated that the parties deliver this Services Agreement;

AND WHEREAS the Owner is purchasing an undivided prorata share of the Land with the intention that the Vendor will provide certain initial services to facilitate completion of the Project with the objective that upon substantial completion of the Proposed Unit and the registration of a Condominium Declaration, title to the Proposed Unit shall be transferred to the Owner.

[23] I agree with counsel for the Warranty Program that the agreements encompass a variety of things, including the purchase of land and buildings and the purchase of services. In my opinion, however, the Agreements are all part of a single transaction -- albeit an investment transaction -- the essence of which is "a contract for the provision of a (condominium) home".

[24] Although the Warranty Program and the Tribunal resisted such an interpretation of the legislative scheme under the Act, it is now established that purchasers of new condominium units for investment purposes -- including tax-shelter driven investment purposes which preclude the purchaser from living in the premises -- are covered by the Act: see Sunforest Investment Corp. v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program, supra. At p. 63 of that decision, McKinlay J.A. stated on behalf of the court:

I agree with Holland J. in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 362, 50 R.P.R. 186 (H.C.J.), that even where condominiums are purchased for tax shelters, they are purchased for occupancy and, therefore, the vendor of a condominium which has not been previously occupied must be registered and pay premiums under the Act. If that is so, the purchaser is protected by the provisions of the Act.

[25] The Tribunal recognized this when it observed:

What losses and what benefits may be claimed is entirely governed by the Act. Damages in contract law involve different principles from claims by way of compensation under the Act. Allowable claims for compensation under the Act are narrower than damages based on a breach of contract at common law.

Damages in contract law flow from an agreement, whereas under the Act, consumer protection is being provided for people buying a new home. The Act is not devised to protect investors in a tax driven scheme although like others they are covered. The Act, a consumer driven statute, offers protection for what is directly necessary for the provision of a home. Remoteness for financial loss or damage is a vital consideration.

[26] In this respect, the Tribunal was drawn into error, in my opinion. It limited the scope of "damages" under subsection 14(1) in a fashion not warranted by the legislative scheme and the language of the Act. The Court of Appeal has confirmed, in Sunforest Investment Corp., supra, that investors in a tax-driven scheme are covered and entitled to be protected. It is not accurate to say that damages in contract law involve different, and narrower, principles than do compensation claims under the Act. Nor is it correct that damages in contract law flow from an agreement, whereas under the Act other considerations apply and protection is only offered "for what is directly necessary for the provision of a home". It is correct to say, as the Tribunal did recognize, that "what losses and what benefits may be claimed is entirely governed by the Act".

[27] Under the Act, entitlement to compensation under paragraph 14(1)(a) does flow from an agreement -- or, more accurately, from the vendor's failure to perform that agreement -- just as is the case in contract law. Compensation is payable where a person who has entered into a contract for the provision of a home "has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from . . . the vendor's failure to perform the contract [for the provision of the home]". The claimant is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund "the amount of such damage", subject to the regulated limits. Had the legislature intended to introduce a concept other than that of damages for financial loss resulting from the failure to perform, it would not have used term of art language like "a cause of action in damages".

[28] The Tribunal expressed concern about the scope of such damages. That concern is met in two ways under the legislative scheme. The first is the limit of $20,000 for compensation, as fixed by regulation. The second is the "other recovery" provision of subsection 14(2) of the Act. I turn now to a consideration of this latter provision, in the context of the deduction of tax benefits received by the Singers as a result of the transaction, and which the Warranty Program and the Tribunal ruled must be subtracted from any recovery to which the Singers might be entitled.

Tax savings as benefits

[29] Subsection 14(2) of the Act requires the Warranty Program, in assessing damages, to take into consideration any benefit, compensation or indemnity payable to the person or owner from any source.

[30] It is agreed that the Singers received income tax savings totaling $49,056.66 as a result of the transaction, notwithstanding that title never passed and that the vendor defaulted. These amounts included tax deductions in respect of:

- (a) the amounts they paid for services;
- (b) the interest they paid on their promissory note;
- (c) rental losses they incurred on the units once tenants were in place; and,
- (d) terminal losses arising upon the disposal of the units in 1993.

[31] In my view the Warranty Program and the Tribunal correctly took these tax savings into consideration in calculating the financial loss for which the Singers could look to the Warranty Program for compensation. The tax deductions were real and -- unlike the situation at the time of the trial before White J. -- they had been realized by the time of the proceedings here in question. They are properly accounted for as "benefits . . . from any source", under subsection 14(2).

[32] The Tribunal had before it the expert report of Ms. Susan Glass. No expert evidence was tendered on behalf of the Singers. Ms. Glass reviewed and analyzed the Singers' relevant income tax returns, and concluded that they had received benefits by way of income tax savings as a result of entering into the contracts for the purchase of the two units. She broke down the savings into the four categories noted above, and testified that under either of two scenarios, offsetting the savings against the financial losses sustained in relation to "the provision of a home" -- that is, those losses pertaining to the cost of land and construction -- resulted in the Singers suffering no net damages. The first scenario involved offsetting all of the tax savings against land and construction costs. The second only offset those tax savings pertaining to land and construction.

[33] For the reasons articulated above, I do not agree that the tax savings should only be offset against the amounts paid in respect of land and construction. If such were the case, however, it would follow that only those tax savings arising from losses pertaining to the land and construction should be taken into account. The benefits from any source which are to be taken into consideration under subsection 14(2) must be benefits relating to the damages being assessed. If the purchasers are only entitled to be compensated for financial losses sustained in relation to land and construction, and not financial losses relating to the cost of services provided, tax savings arising out of the contract for those services are not a benefit to be accounted for in assessing damages for land and building costs. However, on the view I take of the situation, the Singers are entitled to be compensated for their financial losses suffered as a result of the vendor's failure to perform the contract for the provision of these condominium homes, including losses relating to the service contracts which formed an integral part of the purchase of the homes.

[35] Mr. Singer claimed financial losses with respect to Unit 1308 in the amount of $32,015.18, plus pre-judgment interest of $8,775.70. For reasons I will explain momentarily, the Singers are entitled to include their claims for pre-judgment interest in their claims for compensation under s. 14 of the Act. Against his losses, Mr. Singer must account for net rentals received of $6,084 and tax savings of $21,334.77. He is therefore entitled to recover the sum of $13,372.77 from the Warranty Program in respect of this Unit.

[36] Mr. and Mrs. Singer claimed financial losses with respect to Unit 1201 in the amount of $42,984.55, plus pre-judgment interest in the amount of $11,768.79. With respect to this Unit, they must account for net rentals received of $8,152 and tax savings of $27,721.89. They are therefore entitled to recover the sum of $18,879.45 from the Warranty Program in respect of this Unit.

Other claims

[37] At trial before White J., the Singers obtained judgment for damages totaling $74,999.73, plus pre-judgment interest in the aggregate amount of $20,544.70. They were also awarded party and party costs of the action, which amount to $8,833.69. In addition to the pure damage award, the Singers also claimed to be entitled to have the pre-judgment interest amount and the costs taken into account in determining their recovery from the Warranty Program, plus their costs of the proceedings before the Tribunal. The Tribunal rejected these contentions.

[38] I would not interfere with the Tribunal's decision not to allow the costs of the civil proceeding to be factored into the compensation calculation under s. 14. However, the Tribunal erred, in my opinion, in not taking into consideration the pre-judgment interest amounts. Pre-judgment interest is a concept designed to prevent a party's damages in terms of financial loss from eroding between the time a claim is made and judgment is obtained. It is therefore an aspect of "financial loss" sustained as a result of the defendant's failure to perform. To conclude otherwise would be to lessen the quantum of financial loss recoverable, in real terms.

[39] Consequently, the Tribunal should have taken into account the pre-judgment interest portion of the "damage" award by White J. in considering the Singers' entitlement to compensation. Instead, it treated pre-judgment interest as "interest paid [by the Singers] on their borrowings", and concluded both that the borrowings were too remote and that it would "not be equitable that a borrower can claim interest whereas an investor who pays with his own resources cannot claim for lost interest". In doing so it misapprehended the nature of pre-judgment interest.

[40] I conclude, therefore, that the Singers are entitled to include their claim for pre-judgment interest in their claim for compensation under the Act, subject to the limits prescribed by regulation.

Disposition

[41] I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decision of the Tribunal, and order that the Singers are entitled to be compensated pursuant to s. 14 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act in the following amounts:

(a) The sum of $18,879.45 with respect to Unit 1201; and,

(b) The sum of $13,372.77 with respect to Unit 1308.

[42] Both of these amounts are less than the $20,000 limit for each claim under the Regulation.

[43] The Singers are also entitled to their costs of this appeal. We heard submissions as to costs at the conclusion of argument. Counsel agreed that costs should follow the event and that they should be fixed. There was a range between them as to quantum. I fix the costs of the appeal at $5,500 plus GST.

[1] COO J. (dissenting): -- This is an appeal under s. 11(1) of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.21, from the decision of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal dismissing the appeal from a decision of the Program denying the appellants' claim for compensation.

[2] I have the misfortune to disagree with my brothers who have seen the matter differently. I express my reasons succinctly.

[3] In my view the Program and Tribunal decisions were correct and the appellants were not entitled to be awarded any sum to cover the cost of business services in fact provided to the appellants in connection with their investment purchase of two residential condominiums.

[4] In any event they were not entitled to avoid giving credit in respect of any allowable claim for the tax benefits claimed and received by them in connection with their condominium investments.

[5] A major portion of the amount claimed does not fall within the language of section 14(1) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31, which provides a cause of action to a ". . . person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home [including a condominium] for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract." [Emphasis added]

[6] That description of cause of action and remedy excludes from consideration the claim for alleged failure to deliver services in regard to the apartment units involved in what was essentially a tax shelter investment. That aspect of the agreement with the vendor was in a quite calculated way segregated from the deal in regard to purchase of the units, for reasons that made good sense from the purchasers' perspective at the time.

[7] Section 14(2) of the Act requires that "In assessing damages, the [respondent] shall take into consideration any benefit, compensation or indemnity payable to the person . . . from any source." The tax savings received by the appellants fall within this description and are deductible, producing the result that there are no net damages payable in regard to the land and construction phase of the arrangements between the parties at the material time.

[8] I would have dismissed the appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Amberwood Investments Limited et al. v. Durham Condominium Corporation No. 123

Superior Court of Justice Stinson J. September 12, 2000

APPLICATION for a declaration.

Alan S. Price, for applicants. Patricia M. Conway, for respondent.

[1] STINSON J.: -- This application raises the question whether an obligation to pay certain expenses, that is contained in an agreement registered against the title of a parcel of land, can bind subsequent owners of the land. Put another way, can a positive covenant that requires money to be paid "run with the land" so as to bind successors in title?

Facts

[2] The applicants (whom I shall jointly describe as Amberwood), and the respondent, DCC 123, are the registered owners of adjoining parcels of land in Whitby. Originally, these two parcels were one parcel, owned by a developer called Whitby Harbour Development Corporation (WHDC).

[3] WHDC intended to build two condominium high-rise residential buildings on the land, in two phases. Phase I was to include the first high-rise building and a recreational complex and utility units whose use and ownership would ultimately be shared by the two condominium corporations. It was further intended that the two condominium corporations would have easements over the land of one another for purposes of access, structural support and the like, and would share certain expenses. Particulars of these various rights and responsibilities were contained in a so-called "reciprocal agreement," described below.

[4] WHDC completed the construction of Phase I and proceeded to register a declaration on March 20, 1992 by which DCC 123 was created. The registration of the declaration also divided WHDC's lands into two parcels, with DCC 123 becoming the owner of the Phase I lands (including the recreational complex and utility units) and WHDC remaining the owner of the Phase II lands. On the same date, WHDC and DCC 123 executed the reciprocal agreement, which was registered on the title of both parcels.

[5] The purpose of the reciprocal agreement was stated to be:

. . . [T]o provide . . . for the use, operation, maintenance, repair, service, reconstruction, if necessary, and the sharing of responsibilities and costs for mutual services within the Phase I Lands and the Phase II Lands and the Common Units, and for the sharing, if necessary, of realty taxes and other governmental municipal charges, the Easements required by each of the parties and to set forth certain other agreements of the parties relating to the Phase I Lands, the Phase II Lands and the Common Units, and the sharing of other responsibilities and costs.

[6] Article 8.4 provided for continuity of the reciprocal agreement as follows:

. . . This Agreement shall continue and remain in full force and effect upon any Person succeeding to the interest of any party hereto. . . .

[7] Article 13.1 provided, in part, as follows:

13.1 -- Provisions Run with the Land

(b) . . . The Easements, rights and provisions as set forth in this Agreement establish a basis for mutual and reciprocal use and enjoyment of such Easements, rights and provisions and as an integral and material consideration for the continuing right to such use and enjoyment, each party hereto does hereby accept, agree to assume the burden of, and to be bound by each and every of the covenants entered into by them in this Agreement.

(c) The provisions of this Agreement are intended to run with the real property benefited and burdened thereby, specifically, the Phase I Lands, the Phase II Lands and the Common Units and except as may otherwise be specifically provided, shall bind and enure to the benefit of the respective successors in title thereof.

[8] Among other things, the reciprocal agreement provided for the sharing by the two condominium corporations of the expenses of operating the recreational complex. The agreement also addressed the subject of interim costs, in Article 2.9, as follows:

The parties agree that until the completion of the building comprising Condominium 2, Phase I Condominium Corporation's share of certain operating expenses contained in its budget will be greater than they will be after completion of the building comprising Condominium 2. Accordingly, the Owner [WHDC] agrees until the date of registration of Condominium 2, to pay the Proportionate Share of the Phase II Condominium Corporation for the following items listed in the budget of the Phase I Condominium Corporation:

(a) Water Treatment; and

(b) Air Conditioner Maintenance.

The Owner further agrees, until the Transfer Date, to pay 35.417% of the costs of maintaining one full-time security guard on the site.

[9] WHDC started to build the Phase II Condominium, but then ran into financial difficulty. In due course, through a series of transactions I need not recite, Amberwood became the owner of the Phase II Lands. To date, no building has been constructed on the Phase II Lands.

[10] As a subsequent owner of the Phase II Lands, Amberwood has been asked by DCC 123 to pay its share of the interim costs provided for in Article 2.9 of the reciprocal agreement. For its part, Amberwood has denied liability for those costs, asserting that the obligation to pay is a restrictive covenant that cannot run with the land since it is a positive covenant. Matters came to a head when DCC 123 registered a lien and issued a notice of sale pursuant to the provisions of the reciprocal agreement, thus prompting Amberwood to commence these proceedings seeking a declaration that it is not bound to pay the interim costs.

Issue and Analysis

[11] It was common ground at the hearing that the only issue for determination was whether Amberwood is bound to pay the interim costs provided for in the reciprocal agreement. Counsel for the applicant conceded that Amberwood, as a subsequent owner of the vacant land who acquired title after the reciprocal agreement was registered, is bound by the negative covenant and easement provisions, and entitled to the benefit of an easement over the Phase I land. It was also common ground that the original parties clearly intended that all covenants should run with the land, including the interim costs provision.

[12] Put another way, the only issue in this application is whether the provision to pay interim costs should be treated differently from the other provisions in the reciprocal agreement.

[13] Amberwood submitted that this provision must be treated differently, since it is a positive covenant that cannot run with the land, and is unenforceable at law, regardless of party intention.

[14] DCC 123 submitted that the interim costs obligation falls into one of two exceptions to the general rule that positive covenants cannot run with the land. First, it submitted that Amberwood cannot take the benefit of the Phase II lands without also assuming the burden or obligations attached to them. Second, DCC 123 submitted that the grant of the easement over the Phase I lands was conditional on Amberwood paying these costs.

The rule that positive covenants do not run with the land

[15] It was conceded by DCC 123 and it is settled law that positive covenants do not run with the land: Keppell v. Bailey (1834), 39 E.R. 1042, [1824-34] All E.R. Rep. 10 (L.C.).

[16] Positive covenants have been defined to include obligations requiring the expenditure of money or the doing of some act, such as repairing or reconstructing property. They do not run with the land either at law or in equity: Parkinson v. Reid, [1966] S.C.R. 162 at p. 167, 56 D.L.R. (2d) 315. This principle was more recently affirmed by the Divisional Court in Garnet Lane Developments Ltd. v. Webster (1987), 43 R.P.R. 138 at p. 163, 20 O.A.C. 291.

[17] Positive covenants also include obligations to pay annual fees in return for the grant of an easement. Obligations of this kind do not run with the land, despite the contracting parties' express intentions to the contrary: Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 979 v. Camrost York Development Corp. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 238, 48 R.P.R. (2d) 109 (Gen. Div.).

[18] The obligation in the case at bar to pay interim operating costs is an affirmative obligation that falls within the definition of a positive covenant. The respondent did not submit that the obligation should be differently characterized.

[19] The 1989 Ontario Law Reform Commission Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land at p. 21 considered the rule against positive covenants flowing with title and the two reasons typically advanced for its existence. First, such covenants tended to render land inalienable. Second, persons dealing subsequently with the land would have great difficulty ascertaining the existence of such covenants, because they do not normally have a physical manifestation.

[20] The OLRC considered and rejected these rationales. The OLRC Report noted at p. 100 that it has now been generally recognized that such restrictions do not render land inalienable. Rather, both positive and negative covenants tend to enhance alienability, since they operate to protect the amenities of neighbourhoods and the competitiveness of businesses. The second rationale that gave rise to the ancient rule has never been an obstacle in Ontario, since a system of land registration has existed since the province was created. The OLRC Report recommended at p. 102 that the law of covenants be reformed to enable the burden of positive covenants to run with the land.

[21] Without going as far as to say that the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land should no longer be applied in Ontario, I note that there are policy issues raised by a rigid application of the rule. Often, as occurred in the case at bar, owners of adjacent lands fashion a scheme of mutual rights and obligations in order to permit and facilitate the orderly and productive development of a phased project, such as a condominium project. Economics and market conditions may well dictate that such developments proceed in phases, and it will often be undesirable to dismantle these complex and well-planned arrangements. Indeed, countless problems could arise if these types of arrangements are disturbed by an intervening transfer of title, whether voluntary or consequent on a default under a mortgage. The rationale of impeding the assignability of land, which underlies the ancient rule, does not apply to many modern cases, and impediments might well arise more often if the obligation did not flow to successors.

[22] In England, over time, methods have developed to avoid or circumvent the application of this potentially problematic rule. The respondent submits that two of those exceptions or methods are applicable in the case at bar. The first, outlined in the OLRC Report at pp. 22-24, involves reliance on the benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell, [1957] 1 All E.R. 371, [1957] Ch. 169. The second, described in Megarry and Wade's Law of Real Property, 5th ed. (London: Stevens & Sons, 1984), deals with conditional grants of benefits.

The benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell

[23] The doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell provides that a person who claims the benefit of a deed must also take it subject to its burdens. In that case, purchasers of lots in a subdivision were entitled to use private roads and amenities. In exchange, they agreed to pay a share of the maintenance costs. The positive covenants were held to apply to successors in title, on the grounds that the successors were continuing to claim the benefits.

[24] The doctrine has been clearly adopted by the English courts. In E.R. Ives Investments (or Investment) Ltd. v. High, [1967] 1 All E.R. 504, [1967] 2 Q.B. 379, Lord Denning M.R. held at p. 507 that the successor in title who claims the benefit of land that has its foundation in an adjoining lot must also shoulder the burden to grant access over the land to the owner of the adjoining lot. The successor in title must observe the condition upon which the claimed benefit was granted, even if fulfillment of the condition involves undertaking a positive obligation.

[25] Similarly, in Tito v. Waddell (No. 2), [1977] 3 All E.R. 129 at p. 291, [1977] Ch. 106, the Chancery Division endorsed the idea that a pure principle of benefit and burden had become established in English law. According to that principle, when X grants a right to Y, and by the same instrument Y independently covenants to do some act, Y's successors may be bound by the covenant.

[26] While the benefit/burden principle has not been applied in Canadian law, Halsall v. Brizell was mentioned by the Supreme Court in Parkinson v. Reid, supra. In that case, the court held that the obligation to repair a stairway that had been damaged in a fire was a positive covenant that did not run with the land to bind successors in title. The original parties had agreed that a neighbour could use a wall as a party-wall so long as he agreed to keep the stairway in good repair. In obiter, Cartwright J. commented on the potential applicability of the benefit/burden doctrine to this type of scenario [at pp. 168-69 S.C.R.]:

Assuming that so long as the appellants [the successors] made use of the last-mentioned wall as a party-wall they were bound to keep the stairway in repair, they ceased to be under any such obligation when they no longer made use of the respondent's wall.

[27] I take from this that while the general proposition that positive covenants do not run with the land remains the law in Canada, the Supreme Court might be prepared to hold that a successor who claims a benefit must also shoulder the burden, whatever its form. However, if the successor abandons its claim to the benefit, or the benefit ceases to exist, as occurred in Parkinson v. Reid, the benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell would not apply. To date, however, the Supreme Court has not expressly addressed this point.

[28] In determining whether the benefit/burden doctrine could operate as an exception to the rule against positive covenants in this case, it is necessary to determine whether there is a benefit flowing from DCC 123 and the Phase I condominium to Amberwood's vacant lands.

[29] In my view, there are such benefits. First, Amberwood is part owner of the recreational and utility units in the Phase I building. Second, those units are maintained for Amberwood by DCC 123. Third, Amberwood has the benefit of security over those units. Fourth, Amberwood has the access benefits of the other easements provided for in the reciprocal agreement. Although I agree with Amberwood that these benefits may be somewhat remote or artificial and would certainly have more significance if a second condominium was actually built on the Phase II lands, I do not interpret the doctrine from Halsall as requiring a court to analyze the extent or nature of the benefit. If Amberwood chose to abandon its claim to these benefits, it would not be bound to shoulder the burden of the interim costs. In my view, the fact that Amberwood does not wish to abandon these entitlements confirms that they can be fairly and properly characterized as true benefits flowing to the successor/owner.

[30] Consequently, I conclude that the benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell could apply on the facts of this case.

[31] I will turn briefly to the second argument made by the respondent.

Conditional grants

[32] The respondent submitted that there is a second applicable exception to the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. If the facts establish that the granting of a benefit or easement was conditional on assuming the positive obligation, then the obligation is binding. Where the obligation is framed so as to constitute a continuing obligation upon which the grant of the easement was conditional, the obligation can be imposed as an incident of the easement itself, and not merely a liability purporting to run with the land: Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed., Vol. 14 at p. 79.

... it is possible for acceptance of the burden to be made a condition of enjoyment of the benefit, and thus for the burden to pass. If A conveys land to B reserving the mining rights "so that compensation in money be made" for any damage done, the liability to pay compensation is a condition of the exercise of the mining rights and will run with them so as to bind A's successors in title, against whom B or his successors can claim both compensation under the condition and an injunction to forbid future mining unless compensation is paid.

[34] This concept was applied in Re Ellenborough Park, [1955] 3 All E.R. 667, [1956] Ch. 153. In that case, the land surrounding a park was sold in plots to purchasers in 1924. The purchasers obtained easements for roads and drains along with a right to full enjoyment of the park subject to the payment of a fair and just proportion of the costs of keeping the park in good condition. The court upheld the obligation for successors to pay the costs, finding that the obligation to pay was a condition of the enjoyment of the park.

[35] An instrument or easement may be framed so that it confers only a condition or qualified right, and the condition or qualification may be that certain restrictions shall be observed or certain burdens assumed, such as the making of payments. In those cases, the restrictions or qualifications are an intrinsic part of the right. Successors in title cannot take the right without also assuming the condition. In these cases, when a court enforces the positive covenant, it is merely enforcing the easement on the terms upon which it was conveyed.

[36] Even if the provision for compensation is expressed as a covenant separately from the grant or reservation of the covenantor's rights, it may still operate as a condition if it is held, as a matter of construction, that the benefit and the burden have been annexed to each other ab initio: Tito v. Waddell (No. 2), supra, at p. 281.

[37] Once again, this "conditional grant" approach to circumventing the rule against positive covenants flowing with the land is an English innovation. Although there does not seem to be any Canadian law which expressly recognizes or applies the conditional grant exception, such an exception is consistent with the benefit/burden doctrine. In my view, the conditional grant exception is essentially a form of the benefit/burden doctrine. The only difference is that the burden is directly annexed to the grant of the benefit, instead of the subject of an independent covenant. The notion of a conditional grant exception is also consistent with the recognition that the ancient rule against positive covenants flowing with title has many problematic implications. Such an exception would also function to protect legitimate party expectations.

[38] In determining whether the conditional grant exception could apply to the case at bar, I must consider whether the positive obligation to pay interim costs was annexed to another right or benefit that Amberwood received. The respondent pointed to para. 13.1(b) of the reciprocal agreement (previously quoted) in support of its submission that it was.

[39] In my view, the language of that section makes it clear that the payment of interim costs, as one of the covenants in the reciprocal agreement, was intended to be a condition upon which the other easements were conveyed. The provision does not support Amberwood's submission that the cost-sharing obligations should be viewed as distinct from the scheme for mutual easements. To the contrary, para. 13.1(b) seems to envision a building project in which the owners would share costs in exchange for shared access and ownership. To undermine this clear intention by severing the cost obligations from the overall deal would amount to dismantling part of an intricate, complex, and well-planned scheme, and defeating legitimate party expectations.

Conclusion

[40] Based upon the foregoing analysis of the law and the facts, under English law Amberwood would likely be held to be bound by the obligation to pay the interim costs, notwithstanding the general principle that positive covenants do not run with the land. The English exceptions to that general principle, however, have yet to take hold in Canadian law.

[41] The OLRC Report recommended reform of the law of covenants. Desirable as that reform may be for the reasons recited above and in the OLRC Report, until the legislature acts on that recommendation, or until an appellate court endorses the English exceptions as applicable in Ontario, at least, I am bound by the principles of stare decisis to follow the law as recited in Parkinson v. Reid, Garnet Lane Developments Ltd. v. Webster, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 979 v. Camrost York Development Corp. As was said by Ewaschuk J. in R. v. Hummel (1987), 60 O.R. (2d) 545 at p. 547, 60 C.R. (3d) 78 (H.C.J.):

Anglo-American courts have over the hoary centuries developed a fundamental common law doctrine known as stare decisis. This Latin phrase literally means "binding decision". It has come to be known as the doctrine of precedent. It is the glue that holds together the various levels of Canadian courts and it is the principle that elevates the rule of law above the rule of individual judges. The rule of law reflects the principle that law governs executive decision and that law enunciated by higher levels of courts binds lower levels of courts.

[42] It is plainly the law of Ontario that successors in title are not bound to perform positive covenants. That is what the respondent seeks to have Amberwood do in the case at bar. I therefore conclude that Amberwood is not bound to pay the interim costs provided for in s. 2.9 of the reciprocal agreement.

Disposition

[43] The application is granted, with costs. If the parties cannot agree on the amount of costs, I am prepared to fix them. If necessary, the parties may make costs submissions by conference telephone call.

Order accordingly.

Ward-Price v. Mariners Haven Inc. et al.; Clement et al., Third Parties

Court File No. 96-CU-103518

MOTION for summary judgment.

J. Gardner Hodder, for plaintiff. Charles F. Scott and D. Michael Brown, for defendants. Jack B. Berkow and Alexandra Lev-Farrell, for Third Parties.

CUMMING J: --

The Issue

[1] At issue in this motion is the correct interpretation of s. 53(3) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (the "Act"). It is an issue of first instance.

Introduction

[2] The plaintiff brings a class proceeding pursuant to the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, as amended ("CPA"). The putative class alleges that the defendant Mariners Haven Inc. ("Mariners") failed to pay interest during interim occupancy on deposit moneys paid toward the purchase of residential condominium units. The plaintiff alleges, inter alia, that Mariners committed a breach of trust by failing to pay such interest to the class members. The class includes some 25 to 31 of the 32 purchasers of units.

[3] Mariners was the developer, vendor and declarant (hereinafter the "developer") of the condominium project in Collingwood, Ontario. The representative plaintiff, Wendy Ward- Price, entered into a purchase agreement on April 13, 1987, for unit no. 12 in the condominium project. The purchase price was $340,000 payable by way of two deposits and the balance by monthly instalments.

[4] The plaintiff alleges Mariners was obliged to pay interest pursuant to trust obligations under s. 53 of the Act and s. 33 of its regulations: R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 121. The plaintiff also alleges misrepresentation and unjust enrichment.

[5] Section 53 of the Act provides:

53(1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, despite the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a bank listed in Schedule I or II to the Bank Act (Canada) or trust corporation or a loan corporation or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office until,

(a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto; or

(b) delivery of prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

(2) Where an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) is terminated and the purchaser is entitled to the return of any money paid under the agreement, the proposed declarant shall pay to the purchaser interest on such money at the prescribed rate.

(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by the proposed declarant on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser.

(4) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), the proposed declarant is entitled to any interest earned on the money required to be held in trust under subsection (1).

[6] Mariners had an obligation pursuant to s. 53(1) of the Act to hold in trust the moneys paid by the plaintiff toward the purchase of her unit. The moneys were deposited into an interest bearing trust account. These funds were insured through so-called "deposit receipts" in October 1987 with the Ontario New Home Warranty Program for deposit funds in the amount of $20,000, plus interest, and in January 1988, with the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada ("MICC") for deposit funds in excess of $20,000, plus interest (collectively the "insurance" and the "insurers").

[7] The declaration with respect to the condominium project was registered on June 27, 1989, thereby creating Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 94.

[8] The purchase agreement did not permit the plaintiff to obtain possession prior to the completion of the purchase transaction. The class members each desired early possession of their units. The developer allowed early possession through interim occupancy agreements. Ms. Ward-Price took possession of her unit about July 15, 1988. She paid the balance of her purchase price and became the owner of her unit about August 16, 1989.

[9] The defendant William Kaufman ("Kaufman") was the director, officer and sole shareholder directly or indirectly of the corporate defendants. The defendant William H. Kaufman Inc. ("WHK Inc.") provided loans to Mariners to fund the development of the condominium project.

[10] The defendant Stuart Snyder ("Snyder") was an officer of both corporate defendants. The third parties Clement, Eastman, Dreger, Martin & Meunier and Sims Clement Eastman are law firms, the latter being a successor to the former (collectively the "third party law firm"). The third party law firm represented Mariners as solicitors in respect of the condominium unit sales. The defendants seek contribution and indemnity against the third party law firm for any amounts for which they may be found liable. The third party law firm has filed a statement of defence in the main action.

[11] The defendants claim that the purchasers of their units waived any entitlement to interest when they signed their "Interim Occupancy Agreements". Ms. Ward-Price executed one such agreement on July 15, 1988, when she took possession of her unit. The interim occupancy agreements assert that the deposit interest to which the purchaser would become entitled and interim occupancy fees to which the developer was entitled were offsetting amounts.

[12] Deposit funds received by Mariners from the purchasers were deposited into a separate trust account held in the name of the third party law firm, acting as agent for Mariners. Mr. Snyder gave the directions as to what was to be done with the trust funds. Pay-outs went to Mariners after delivery of the insurance.

[13] Ms. Ward-Price claims a deposit interest entitlement of $36,761.50 and claims that her interim occupancy fee could not have amounted to more than $8,302.76. None of the class members who entered into interim occupancy agreements received any credit for deposit interest on closing. The total claim for deposit interest by class members approximates $1.6 million.

[14] If the purchasers had been credited with deposit interest on closing, WHK Inc. would have received less moneys from Mariners towards the repayment of its loans. Mr. Kaufman was the directing mind of the two defendant corporations and the plaintiff alleges that Messrs. Kaufman and Snyder knowingly assisted Mariners in its breach of trust and knowingly received trust funds flowing from the breach of trust. Hence, the plaintiffs claim they are entitled to an equitable tracing with respect to the moneys that went to WHK Inc.

[15] There have been numerous interlocutory motions and orders leading up to this point.

The Law

[16] The third party law firm submits that although Mariners had an obligation pursuant to s. 53(1) of the Act to hold the deposits in trust, that obligation ceased when Mariners obtained the prescribed security through the insurance. It is their position that the delivery to the purchasers of the insurance permitted the moneys held in trust to then be released and that the trust created by s. 53(1) thereby ceased to exist. The third party submits that the obligation to pay interest under s. 53(3) is not a trust obligation. Accordingly, the third party submits there is no genuine breach of trust issue for trial.

[17] The underlying policy of s. 53 is to protect consumer purchasers who generally are not in equal bargaining positions with developers.

[18] Section 53(1) provides for the creation of a trust by statute. Moneys paid towards the purchase price are to be held in the requisite trust account "until" one of the two events in s. 53(1)(a) and (b) occurs. Disposition of the trust moneys may be made to the developer at closing, upon completion of the developer's obligations under the purchase contract: s. 53(1) (a). However, if the developer was unable to close the transaction, the purchaser would be entitled to the return of the trust moneys.

[19] The developer is entitled to the interest that has been earned on the money in the trust account: s. 53(4). However, this entitlement is subject to the stipulations imposed by s. 53(2) and (3).

[20] Section 53(2) protects a purchaser who is entitled to the return of moneys paid by requiring the developer to pay interest at the prescribed rate on those moneys.

[21] Section 53(3) imposes an interest obligation upon the developer when the purchaser enters into possession of the unit before a final closing and a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to the purchaser.

[22] In the event of an interim occupancy prior to closing, a developer will charge rent to cover the developer's costs arising from interest on the developer builder's mortgage, the real property taxes, and the common maintenance costs pro-rated on a unit basis.

[23] The insurance constitutes "prescribed security" within the meaning of s. 53(1)(b) of the Act. The third party law firm submits that s. 53(1)(b) permitted Mariners to release the deposit funds from trust upon the delivery of the insurance to Ms. Ward-Price. The purpose of providing the deposit receipt is to permit the vendor developer to release deposit funds from trust prior to closing. It is undisputed that no funds were disbursed to Mariners from the trust account until the insurance was obtained and delivered to the plaintiff as "prescribed security".

[24] Accordingly, the third party submits there could not thereafter be, and was not, any breach of trust, as there was no longer any trust.

[25] Further, the defendants submit that to establish the claim for "knowing assistance" or "knowing receipt" to a breach of trust, a plaintiff must first establish the existence of a trust and a breach of it: see Air Canada v. M & L Travel Ltd., [1993] 3 S.C.R. 787, 108 D.L.R. (4th) 592.

[26] In Counsel Holdings Canada Ltd. v. Chanel Club Ltd. (1997), 33 O.R. (3d) 285 (Gen. Div.), affirmed (1999), 43 O.R. (3d) 319n, 27 R.P.R. (3d) 228 (C.A.), Adams J. dealt with the competing claims of condominium purchasers and a mortgagee for priority with respect to the funds of an insolvent developer in receivership. In that case, prescribed security through deposit receipts had been delivered to the purchasers. Adams J. found that ". . . there could be no breach of trust once deposit receipts were issued to the purchasers" (at p. 296).

[27] The plaintiff submits that the situation at hand differs from that seen in Counsel, since the case at bar involves an alleged breach of a statutory trust. The plaintiff asserts that the developer's obligation to pay interest during the period of interim occupancy pursuant to s. 53(3) is a trust obligation. The court in Counsel was only considering the statutory trust created by s. 53(1).

[28] The plaintiff relies upon the Court of Appeal's decision in Ackland v. Yonge-Esplanade Enterprises Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 97, 95 D.L.R. (4th) 560 (C.A.) which dealt with the obligation to pay interest under s. 53(3). Plaintiff's counsel submits that the Court of Appeal in Ackland found (at pp. 106-07) that, in addition to the trust obligations arising with respect to the trust corpus under s. 53(1), s. 53(3) imposes a further trust obligation to pay interest.

[29] The purpose of s. 53(3) is to provide an incentive to the developer to register the condominium corporation and transfer title to the purchaser of the condominium unit as soon as possible after the purchaser has taken occupancy: Ackland, at p. 105; Berman v. Karleton Co. (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 176 at p. 184, 24 R.P.R. 8 (H.C.J.); Lamb v. Costain Ltd. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 657 at p. 660, 40 R.P.R. 83 (H.C.J.).

[30] The Court of Appeal in Ackland considered the proper application of the terms of s. 33 of then Reg. 121 (now R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 96) in determining the rate of interest to apply under s. 53(3). The court held that the developer was obliged to pay at the higher rate introduced by the Province of Ontario Savings Office after the enactment of the Regulation.

[31] A developer who holds money in trust pursuant to the statutory trust created by s. 53(1) will seek the highest rate of interest possible, because the developer may ultimately become entitled to any interest earned: s. 53(4). The interest that can be earned is not limited to the prescribed rate under s. 53(2) and (3) (which is now set at 2 per cent per annum below the minimum rate at which the Bank of Canada makes short-term advances to the chartered banks: s. 35(1) Reg. 96). Section 53(4) entitles the developer to retain interest earned on deposits which exceed the amount of interest prescribed by the Regulations. Windisman v. Toronto College Park Ltd. (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 29 at p. 43, 132 D.L.R. (4th) 512 (Gen. Div.).

[32] Ackland dealt with a situation where s. 53(3) was operative. The developer was obliged to pay the purchaser interest during the period of interim occupancy. The developer's entitlement to interest under s. 53(4) is made subject to the obligation of the developer under s. 53(3).

[33] Morden A.C.J.O. stated at pp. 106-07:

. . . the trust obligation clearly extends to the duty to pay interest based on the higher rate [introduced by the Province of Ontario Savings Office], particularly where the proposed declarant may enjoy an increased personal benefit from paying . . . [the interest due under s. 53(3)] on the basis of the lower rate [being the historical rate set by the Province of Ontario Savings Office].

. . . while the basic relationship between a purchaser and a proposed declarant may be contractual, s. 53(1) clearly imposes on the proposed declarant, with respect to the money we are concerned with in this appeal, the duty of a trustee and it is with this particular aspect of the relationship only that we are concerned . . . this fiduciary relationship is of direct relevance in interpreting the scope of the obligation to pay interest on the money held in trust.

[34] Plaintiff's counsel in the case at hand submits that Ackland is authority for his submission that s. 53(3) in itself creates or recognizes a trust with respect to the interest payable to the purchaser under that provision.

[35] I do not agree with this submission as to the decision in Ackland which is, of course, binding on this court. In my view, Morden A.C.J.O.'s quoted statement recognizes the statutory trust which is clearly created by s. 53(1). The corpus of the moneys held in trust pursuant to s. 53(1) belongs beneficially to the purchaser, and not the developer, until one of the two circumstances contemplated by s. 53(1) occurs and terminates the trust.

[36] A trust involves a fiduciary relationship and imposes duties upon the trustee. This fiduciary relationship is relevant "in interpreting the scope of the obligation to pay interest on the money held in trust": Ackland, at p. 107. In interpreting the Regulation as to the prescribed rate intended to apply to s. 53(3), the statutory trust created by s. 53(1) provides an instructive backdrop.

[37] The result in Ackland is logical and fair, particularly when the declarant can earn interest on the corpus of the trust at a higher rate than the rate which the developer in Ackland proposed to pay to the purchaser.

[38] In my view, Ackland is not authority for the plaintiff's assertion that s. 53(3) creates a trust with respect to the interest entitlement. It is only s. 53(1) that creates a trust. The Court of Appeal in Ackland held that in interpreting the Regulations to determine the proper prescribed interest rate for the purpose of applying s. 53(3), the statutory trust created by s. 53(1) is relevant.

[39] In the case at hand, the trust created by s. 53(1) was terminated by reason of s. 53(1)(b) upon the purchase and delivery of the "prescribed security" through the deposit receipts. This was done prior to the interim occupancy by the purchasers and before the developer became obligated to pay interest during the occupancy period prior to final closing.

[40] In my view, and I so find, the obligation to pay interest under s. 53(3) is not a trust obligation. Rather, it is a debt obligation created by statute.

[41] It is noted that s. 36(2) of Reg. 96 defines a "prescribed security" as including a requirement to insure against ". . . loss of any interest payable by a declarant to an insured under [section 53] . . ." (my emphasis). The two deposit receipts in the case at hand appear to meet this requirement. For example, in section 1.1(d), the policy of MICC defines the "interest" for which protection is given from financial loss as "the interest, at the rate or rates prescribed by the Act to be paid by the Vendor to the Insured on the Deposits". Thus, the overall scheme of s. 53 provides that upon the termination of the trust created by s. 53(1) through the delivery of the prescribed security (and the release of the trust moneys to the developer), there is insurance in place to protect the purchaser in the event of a claim for interest under s. 53(3).

Disposition

[42] For the reasons given, in my view, there is no trust obligation under s. 53(3). Since there is no trust obligation, there is no genuine issue for trial with respect to breach of trust.

[43] Accordingly, the third party law firm's motion for summary judgment is granted and the plaintiffs' claim is dismissed to the extent it is based upon breach of trust.

[44] I may be spoken to as to costs.

Order accordingly.

CBR# 853MacCulloch v. McInnes Cooper & Robertson

Between McInnes Cooper & Robertson, a registered partnership, and Stewart McInnes, Q.C., (respondents on cross-appeal), appellants, and Patricia B. MacCulloch (appellant on cross-appeal), respondent

Docket: CA 165211

Nova Scotia Court of Appeal Halifax, Nova Scotia Freeman, Bateman and Cromwell J.J.A. Heard: November 29, 2000. Judgment: January 19, 2001. (121 paras.)

Counsel: John P. Merrick, Q.C., for the appellants. The respondent, on her own behalf.

THE COURT: Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed per reasons for judgment of Bateman J.A., Freeman and Cromwell J.J.A. concurring.

[para1] BATEMAN J.A.:-- This is an appeal from a decision of Justice Douglas MacLellan of the Supreme Court (reported as MacCulloch v. McInnes, Cooper and Robertson (2000), 184 N.S.R. (2d) 40). He found the appellants, Stewart McInnes, Q.C. and McInnes Cooper and Robertson (MCR), the firm of solicitors in which Mr. McInnes is a partner, negligent in the manner in which they provided legal services to the respondent, Patricia B. MacCulloch. Mrs. MacCulloch cross-appeals the damage award.

I. BACKGROUND:

[para2] The events that led to this matter began with the death on October 4, 1979 of Charles E. MacCulloch, husband of the respondent. An inventory of his Estate filed on October 17, 1979, showed that he had assets of more than 10 million dollars. The Estate consisted primarily of a farm property on Grand Lake known as Monte Vista Farm, a Toronto condominium known as Unit 819, an art collection, some accounts receivable, a mortgage on a Caribbean property and shares in several companies that Mr. MacCulloch had operated before his death, including MacCulloch & Company Ltd. and Oakwood Holdings Ltd. The Estate also claimed title to a second Toronto condominium property known as Terrace House. Mr. MacCulloch had made an agreement to buy this condominium before his death. Title was to have been taken in the names of both him and Mrs. MacCulloch as joint tenants. He had died before the transaction closing. The Estate completed the purchase, acquiring title to the property. It was Mrs. MacCulloch's belief that the condominium was hers and, therefore, not part of the Estate assets. Litigation about title between Mrs. MacCulloch and the executors had commenced but not concluded at the time relevant to this action.

[para3] Under Mr. MacCulloch's will, his widow, Patricia B. MacCulloch, Henry B. Rhude, Peter Gasson and Central and Eastern Trust Company were appointed executors. The will directed the payment of taxes and debts out of the capital of his Estate. Mr. MacCulloch then gave certain personal articles to Mrs. MacCulloch. He made bequests totaling $850,000.00 to relatives, charities and churches, including a gift to Mrs. MacCulloch of $300,000.00. As an additional bequest, Mrs. MacCulloch was to have the exclusive use of Monte Vista Farm, as her principal residence. The executors were to pay all taxes and upkeep to ensure that it was a suitable place for her to reside. A one million dollar trust fund was to be established and invested with the net income therefrom paid to Mrs. MacCulloch during her lifetime. If Mrs. MacCulloch were still alive on the tenth anniversary of Mr. MacCulloch's death she was to receive $500,000.00. The residue of the Estate was left to the executors in trust to convert into cash and to divide between the children of his first marriage.

[para4] The executors administered the Estate, but by 1981 there were serious liquidity problems. Mr. MacCulloch and his companies owed a substantial amount of money to The Bank of Nova Scotia. Due in part to high interest rates, the Executors were finding it increasingly difficult to service the debt. Additionally, they were finding the maintenance of Monte Vista Farm, as had been directed in the will, a significant financial burden.

[para5] In the fall of 1981, Mrs. MacCulloch made a proposal to the Estate to purchase the farm property and to obtain uncontested title to the Toronto condominium, Terrace House, for a total price of $500,000.00. As part of the consideration she relinquished her right to be maintained by the Estate in Monte Vista Farm. The Estate accepted her offer. The purchase was completed and Mrs. MacCulloch immediately resold the farm property to German purchasers for $1,350,000.00. Both the purchase and sale transactions closed on December 30, 1981. In 1982 she sold Terrace House for $485,000.00.

[para6] Mrs. MacCulloch retained Stewart McInnes, Q.C. of MCR to act for her on this transaction. He prepared the agreement with the Estate regarding the purchase of Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House. In addition he completed the purchase and resale of Monte Vista Farm. A Toronto solicitor was retained to act on the purchase of Terrace House. Mr. McInnes had acted for Mrs. MacCulloch in other matters which included providing independent legal advice on a pre-nuptial agreement and sorting out a customs duty claim in relation to her engagement ring. He acted for her, as well, in her ongoing dispute with the executors of the Estate concerning her maintenance at Monte Vista Farm.

[para10] On August 19, 1986, Justice Richard fixed the sum for which Mrs. MacCulloch was to account at $1,829,916.00, inclusive of prejudgment interest (reported as Price Waterhouse Ltd. v. MacCulloch, [1986] N.S.J. 540). This amount was not paid by Mrs. MacCulloch. Upon the closing of the Estate in 1996 Mrs. MacCulloch received the Estate's interest in this unpaid judgment as part of her entitlement under the will.

[para11] Mrs. MacCulloch sued Mr. McInnes and his firm alleging that he was negligent in preparing the agreement by which she purchased the property from her late husband's estate and in completing the transaction in a manner that was voidable, without advising her of the risks and receiving her express instructions to proceed without court approval.

[para12] Justice MacLellan found the appellant, Mr. McInnes, negligent in the manner in which he provided counsel to Mrs. MacCulloch in relation to the assets purchased from the Estate. He awarded related damages totaling $355,292.46, including prejudgment interest.

[para13] MCR and Mr. McInnes have appealed the trial judge's decision as to the finding of negligence and their resulting liability to pay damages. They have not appealed the quantum of the damages. Mrs. MacCulloch has cross-appealed on the damage award.

[para14] Mrs. MacCulloch was not represented by counsel at trial nor on the appeal.

II. ISSUES:

[para15] The appellants state the following grounds of appeal:

1. When dealing with the issue of whether the Appellants were negligent, the Trial Judge erred in deferring to previous decisions that were not findings of negligence in the particular circumstances and erred in failing to assess and make his own determination of whether there was such negligence.
2. The Trial Judge erred in finding that in the particular circumstances the Appellants had breached any tort duty of care owed to the Respondent.
3. The Trial Judge erred in failing to find that the Respondent was fully aware of her fiduciary obligations and that accordingly the Appellants were under no obligation to inform the Respondent and that any such failure by the Appellants to inform the Respondent did not cause the Respondent any loss.
4. The Trial Judge erred in finding that there was insufficient evidence on which to find that the Respondent would have rejected any advice given to her by the Appellants and that it would be necessary to speculate in order to make such a finding.
5. The Trial Judge erred in failing to find that the Respondent would have rejected any advice given to her by the Appellants and that accordingly any such failure by the Appellants to provide such advice did not cause the Respondent any loss.

[para16] They summarize the grounds as follows:

There are three basic issues raised by the parties on this appeal. First, was MCR negligent as found by the trial Judge? Second, if so, did that negligence cause the damages to Mrs. MacCulloch as calculated by the Judge? Third, is Mrs. MacCulloch entitled to any further damages than as awarded to her by the trial judge?

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW:

[13] It is by now well established that a Court of Appeal must not interfere with a trial judge's conclusions on matters of fact unless there is palpable or overriding error. In principle, a Court of Appeal will only intervene if the judge has made a manifest error, has ignored conclusive or relevant evidence, has misunderstood the evidence, or has drawn erroneous conclusions from it: see D.P. v. C.S., [1993] 4 S.C.R. 141; 159 N.R. 241; 58 Q.A.C. 1, at pp. 188-89 S.C.R. (per L'Heureux-Dubé J.), and all cases cited therein, as well as Geffen v. Goodman Estate, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 353, 126 N.R. 241, at pp. 388-89 (per Wilson J.), and Stein v. The Ship "Kathy K", [1976] 2 S.C.R. 802; 6 N.R. 359; 62 D.L.R. (3d) 1, at pp. 806-8 (per Ritchie J.). A Court of Appeal is clearly not entitled to interfere merely because it takes a different view of the evidence. The finding of facts and the drawing of the evidentiary conclusions from facts is the province of the trial judge, not the Court of Appeal.

I agree that the principle of non-intervention of a Court of Appeal in a trial judge's findings of facts does not apply with the same force to inferences drawn from conflicting testimony of expert witnesses where the credibility of these witnesses is not in issue. This does not however change the fact that the weight to be assigned to the various pieces of evidence is under our trial system essentially the province of the trier of fact, in this case the trial judge.

[48] This statement by McLachlin J. does not mean that a court of appeal can only interfere with conclusions of the trial judge that involve consideration of both facts and the application of law to the facts, such as a finding that a defendant was or was not negligent, if there is palpable and overriding error. The statement in Burnaby Hospital simply means an appeal court is not to interfere with evidentiary conclusions made by a trial judge unless there is palpable and overriding error. A mere error by a trial judge in concluding that a defendant was negligent in the circumstances would warrant an appellate court interfering with such a finding. (underlining in original)

IV. ANALYSIS:

[para19] Because any possible contractual remedies were statute barred by the time of commencement of the action, Mrs. MacCulloch's claims were based solely in negligence.

[para20] The trial judge characterized the claim as follows:

[80] The plaintiff here argues that she has suffered damages because Mr. McInnes prepared an agreement by which she purchased property from her late husband's estate and which was subsequently overturned because she did that while being an executor of the estate. She alleges that he was negligent in not advising her that such an agreement could be attacked on that basis and that his efforts in getting the beneficiaries to sign off did not protect her when the agreement was challenged by the Trustee in Bankruptcy. She also alleges that he never told her to disclose to the other executors the fact of the re-sale of the property.

[85] The issue before me in this trial can be put simply as whether it was negligence on Mr. McInnes' part to prepare and have executed an agreement whereby the plaintiff, who was an executor of the estate, purchase estate assets. Involved in that determination is whether the plaintiff already knew her legal position and therefore did not have to be advised by Mr. McInnes and also whether even if advised she would have instructed him to proceed in any regard.

[86] The second issue is if Mr. McInnes was negligent what are the plaintiff's damages.

(a) The Standard of Care:

[para21] Mr. McInnes' role in the 1981 purchase and resale of Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House was described in an Agreed Statement of Facts tendered in this proceeding. That document had originally been prepared for the earlier action by the trustee in bankruptcy seeking to have Mrs. MacCulloch account for the profits from that transaction. The parties had provided the Agreed Statement of Facts to the court in that proceeding in lieu of Mr. McInnes giving vive voce evidence. Mr. McInnes had approved the document before its submission to the court. Justice MacLellan found that it accurately represented the circumstances in 1981. It provided, as relevant here:

2. Stewart McInnes acted generally as solicitor for Mrs. MacCulloch since shortly after her husband's death until the Spring of 1983.

3. Specifically, Stewart McInnes acted as solicitor for Mrs. MacCulloch in the execution and closing of the agreement by which Monte Vista property was acquired by Mrs. MacCulloch, and on her behalf as Vendor in the sale of the Monte Vista property to M & M Developments Limited.

4. To the best of the knowledge of Stewart McInnes, Mrs. MacCulloch did not participate in any way in the decision making process by the other Executors in the settlement agreement or gain any advantage or opportunity by reason of her appointment as Executrix in the estate of her late husband.

5. Stewart McInnes at no time advised Mrs. MacCulloch to resign as Executrix by reason of her participation in the Monte Vista purchase transaction, this question or issue did not arise at any point in the course of the transaction and I did not direct my mind to this point.

6. Stewart McInnes at no time advised Mrs. MacCulloch to make any disclosure to the estate of the fact or terms of a potential or actual resale of the Monte Vista property, this question or issue did not arise at any point in the course of the transaction and I did not direct my mind to this point.

7. Stewart McInnes did not advise Mrs. MacCulloch at any time that her participation in the purchase transaction and resale might constitute a potential breach of a fiduciary duty or result in a liability to account for any profit shown to have been produced upon the resale, this question or issue did not arise at any point in the course of the transaction and I did not direct my mind to this point.

8. The agreement of settlement between the estate, the beneficiaries and Mrs. MacCulloch was executed by Mrs. MacCulloch in her capacity as Executrix solely as a matter of formality and not with the intention of giving rise to any fiduciary or trust obligations on the part of Mrs. MacCulloch.

9. To the best of the knowledge of Stewart McInnes throughout the transaction with respect to the conveyance of the Monte Vista property to Mrs. MacCulloch all parties, including the solicitors, were of the view that the settlement was in the best interests of all concerned. No question of any impropriety or disability on the part of Mrs. MacCulloch to acquire the property by reason of her appointment as Executrix was raised during the course of the transaction.

10. At no time from the involvement of Stewart McInnes in the transaction on behalf of Mrs. MacCulloch until he ceased to represent her in the matter in or about the Spring of 1983 was any complaint or objection brought to his attention from any party with respect to the sale of the Monte Vista property or its resale pertaining to the appointment of Mrs. MacCulloch as an Executrix.

[para22] The appellants say that Mr. McInnes did not breach the standard required of a lawyer in acting for Mrs. MacCulloch on the Monte Vista/Terrace House transactions. On the applicable standard of care, they cite Spence v. Bell, [1982] 6 W.W.R. 385 (C.A.) at p. 396 where Haddad J.A. adopted the following passage of Riley J. in Tiffen v. Millican et al. (1965), 49 D.L.R. (2d) 216 (S.C.):

The standard of care and skill which can be demanded from a lawyer is that of a reasonably competent and diligent solicitor. It is not enough to prove that the lawyer has made an error of judgment or shown ignorance of some particular part of the law; it must be shown that the error or ignorance was such that an ordinary competent lawyer would not have made or shown it.

[para23] The appellants refer, as well, to the following passage from Midland Bank Trust Co. Ltd. v. Hett, Stubbs & Kemp, [1978] 3 All E.R. (Ch. D.) 571 at p. 583:

the court must beware of imposing on solicitors, or on professional men in other spheres, duties which go beyond the scope of what they are requested and undertake to do. It may be that a particularly meticulous and conscientious practitioner would, in his client's general interests, take it on himself to pursue a line of inquiry beyond the strict limits comprehended by his instructions. But that is not the test. The test is what the reasonably competent practitioner would do having regard to the standards normally adopted in his profession, and cases such as Duchess of Argyll v. Beuselinck, [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep 172; Griffiths v. Evans, [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1424 and Hall v. Meyrick, [1957] 2 Q.B. 455 demonstrate that the duty is directly related to the confines of the retainer.

[para24] The appellants submit that Mrs. MacCulloch cannot succeed in her claim because she failed "to present sufficient evidence to permit the trial judge to find that MCR had not acted in accordance with the applicable standard of care."

[para27] Mr. Hull was concerned that the purchase of this Estate asset by Mrs. MacCulloch was problematic because she was an executor. His concern was two-fold (i) that on resale by Mrs. MacCulloch a purchaser might object to the title acquired in this manner with Mrs. MacCulloch being unable to force title upon the purchaser, and (ii) the remaining beneficiaries might challenge the transaction. His research indicated that there was an absolute prohibition which prevents an executor from purchasing assets of the Estate. He recommended that extra precautions be taken. Initially it was his position that there should be a court order approving the sale.

10 (u) my Executors shall have and may from time to time exercise the following powers: To sell to any member of my family any part or parts of my estate, real or personal, either at public auction or by private contract, and such sale shall be at such price or prices and subject to such terms and conditions, and either for cash or credit or for part cash or part credit, as my Executors consider fair and reasonable.

[para30] The trial judge referred to the many pieces of correspondence exchanged on this issue. Mr. McInnes, who was acting for Mrs. MacCulloch on other matters at that time, had received copies of some of the correspondence between Mr. Hull and the Toronto solicitors for the Estate outlining the problems with an executor purchasing an Estate asset. In addition, Mr. Hull, by letter dated May 22, 1980, asked Mr. McInnes, inter alia, to clarify the terms of the transaction with the representatives of the Estate. By letter dated July 8, 1980 Mr. Hull wrote to Mr. McInnes:

"Re: MacCulloch purchase from MacCulloch Estate

I confirm my telephone conversation with you on Monday, July 7, 1980, in which we discussed the current problem concerning the purchase of the condominium in Toronto.

You and I have discussed the problem of Mrs. MacCulloch as a fiduciary purchasing the property in her personal right.

As I have pointed out to you, I have always had some grave concern concerning this matter notwithstanding the provision in the will that the property can be purchased by a member of the family.

This clause does not go far enough, in my view and a subsequent purchaser might well requisition either a Judge's Order or the Consent of all beneficiaries.

I understand that all of the children are now over the age of 18 and accordingly could sign the document.

As it is obviously in the best interests of the parties for them to sign, any differences of opinion between the children and Mrs. MacCulloch should not be a concern.

I have notified the solicitors in Toronto of the problem and I would be pleased to hear how you have fared after having discussed the matter with Mr. Stewart.

I look forward to hearing from you.

[para31] Mr. McInnes discussed the issue with Mr. Stewart who wrote to Mr. McInnes in reply on July 8, 1980:

I am not sure what Rodney Hull's concern is and I am also a little surprised that it comes to the surface at this rather late date. Clause 10(U) of the Will gives the executors the power to sell to members of the family and certainly Mrs. MacCulloch qualifies on that count.

As mentioned to you I do not think the children should be asked to sign any form of deed as that will raise the question as to whether any of the wives should also sign. If the children are to sign anything, I think it would be preferable for them to simply join in the deed by way of evidencing their consent to the sale, rather than for the purpose of conveying any interest that they may have in the property. Title to the property is clearly vested in the executors and not only do the executors have a general power of sale but also a power to sell to the family members.

I suggest that Mr. Hull work out with Ms. Charlotte D. Sloan of Smith, Lyons, Torrance, Stevenson, Mayer in Toronto the form of consent to be signed by the children.

[para32] In the end, after protracted negotiation, and on the instructions of Mrs. MacCulloch, the Unit 819 purchase was concluded without a court order but with the residual beneficiaries consenting to the conveyance.

[para33] Mr. McInnes acknowledged in his evidence at trial that he was alerted through the correspondence and dealings with Mr. Hull to the potential problems arising when an executor purchases an Estate asset. He was aware that there were conflicting opinions on the issue. It was as a result of this knowledge that the trial judge found that Mr. McInnes, on the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House transactions, was put to an inquiry and should have researched the point in order to ascertain the steps necessary to effect the transaction properly, or, at least, to have advised Mrs. MacCulloch of the risk and to take specific instructions to proceed with the transaction in any event.

[para34] Instead, Mr. McInnes elected to proceed by obtaining the consent of the beneficiaries to the transaction, which he wrongly concluded would protect it from challenge. This, he reasoned, was what Mr. Hull had eventually done on the Unit 819 transaction and thus should suffice here.

[para35] In my view, contrary to the submission of the appellants, Justice MacLellan did not err by focusing upon the ease with which Mr. McInnes could have found a definitive answer to the issue. Lawyers are not called to account for reasonably mistaken advice. Had the question of the purchase of an Estate asset by an executor been an obscure point of law upon which learned works did not agree and had Mr. McInnes, after advising his client of the difficulties, chosen the wrong path, he would not be liable in negligence. On this distinction the court in Bannerman & Co. v. Murray & Anor, [1972] N.Z.L.R. 411, at p. 421, approved the following statement from Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd ed. 99:

A solicitor is not guilty of negligence if he has merely acted upon his client's instructions in the reasonable belief that they were correct, or if he has fully explained the position to his client and is nevertheless instructed to proceed; or merely because he has committed an error in judgment, whether on matters of discretion or of law such as, for instance, on points of new occurrence or of doubtful construction.

[para36] The problem here was not simply that Mr. McInnes chose a solution which provided no protection to Mrs. MacCulloch. It was that, although he was aware of a potential problem, he failed to research the issue and advise Mrs. MacCulloch of her options. Had he properly investigated the problem, he would not have chosen the course that he did, in the absence of explicit instructions from Mrs. MacCulloch to do so.

[para37] Mr. McInnes should have recognized that he could not rely upon Mr. Hull's solution for the Unit 819 purchase, or did so at his peril. That transaction did not involve a prearranged resale of the property at what appeared to be a substantial profit. Here, by contrast, Mrs. MacCulloch had agreed to resell Monte Vista Farm even before its purchase.

[para38] Even had Mr. McInnes been correct in concluding that the consent of the beneficiaries was sufficient to insulate the purchase of Terrace House and Monte Vista Farm and the resale of the farm property, the beneficiaries' consent could only afford protection if it was fully informed. Mr. McInnes knew that the other beneficiaries were not aware of the agreement to resell Monte Vista Farm.

[para39] The comments of the Supreme Court of Canada in Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse (1986), 75 N.S.R. (2d) 109 (S.C.C.), a case originating in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, are instructive. There, the principal issue was whether the liability of a solicitor could exist in both contract and in negligence. The Court confirmed that it could. In the course of that decision LeDain J., for the Court, described a solicitor's duty of care in terms that are particularly relevant here:

[58] A solicitor is required to bring reasonable care, skill and knowledge to the performance of the professional service which he has undertaken. See Hett v. Pun Pong (1890), 18 S.C.R. 290, at p. 292. The requisite standard of care has been variously referred to as that of the reasonably competent solicitor, the ordinary competent solicitor and the ordinary prudent solicitor. See Mahoney, "Lawyers -- Negligence -- Standard of Care" (1985), 63 Can. Bar Rev. 221. Hallett J., in referring to the standard of care as that of the "ordinary reasonably competent" solicitor, stressed the distinction between the standard of care required of the reasonably competent general practitioner and that which may be expected of the specialist .

[59] The requirement of professional competence that was particularly involved in this case was reasonable knowledge of the applicable or relevant law. A solicitor is not required to know all the law applicable to the performance of a particular legal service, in the sense that he must carry it around with him as part of his "working knowledge", without the need of further research, but he must have a sufficient knowledge of the fundamental issues or principles of law applicable to the particular work he has undertaken to enable him to perceive the need to ascertain the law on relevant points. The duty in respect of knowledge is stated in 7 Am Jur 2d, Attorneys at Law para. 200, in a passage that was quoted by Jones J.A., in the Appeal Division, as follows: "An attorney is expected to possess knowledge of those plain and elementary principles of law which are commonly known by well-informed attorneys, and to discover those additional rules of law which, although not commonly known, may readily be found by standard research techniques." See Charlesworth and Percy on Negligence (7th Ed. 1983), pp. 577-78 to similar effect, where it is said: "Although a solicitor is not bound to know the contents of every statute of the realm, there are some statutes, about which it is his duty to know. The test for deciding what he ought to know is to apply the standard of knowledge of a reasonably competent solicitor." The duty or requirement of professional competence in respect of knowledge is put by Jackson and Powell, Professional Negligence (1982), at pp. 145-46 as follows: "Although a solicitor is not 'bound to know all the law,' he ought generally to know where and how to find out the law in so far as it affects matters within his field of practice. However, before the solicitor is held liable for failing to look a point up, circumstances must be shown which would have alerted the reasonably prudent solicitor to the point which ought to be researched", citing Bannerman Brydone Folster Co. v. Murray, [1972] N.Z.L.R. 411. In that case, where a solicitor undertook on very short notice to prepare the necessary document to give effect to an oral agreement providing that a mortgagee would have an option to purchase, the New Zealand Court of Appeal held that it was not negligence to have failed to perceive that making the option to purchase a condition of the mortgage rendered it void or unenforceable as a clog on the equity of redemption. The point was referred to as a rather old and obscure principle which had not been the subject of judicial commentary for many years and was mainly a subject of academic interest. It is clear, however, that the determining considerations in the Court's conclusion were the time available to the solicitor and the fact that the client was already committed to the transaction in the form that proved defective. See Turner J., at p. 427. The decision is nevertheless instructive concerning the duty of a solicitor to perceive problems and to warn the client of them. For a statement of the solicitor's duty "to identify problems and to bring their effect to the attention of the client", with reference to cases in which this duty has been applied, see Dugdale and Stanton, Professional Negligence (1982), p. 203.

[para40] The appellants seem to suggest that in the absence of Mrs. MacCulloch calling expert evidence on the standard of practice, the trial judge erred in finding that Mr. McInnes had not met the standard. They say, as well, that there was expert evidence before the judge from which he should have concluded that Mr. McInnes did not fall short of the standard. They refer in particular to the evidence of David Stewart, Q.C.. They say that the fact that he took the position that even the consent of the beneficiaries was not needed, provided evidence that a practitioner in Halifax in 1981 would not have known that an executor could not purchase Estate assets.

[para41] On this issue the trial judge said:

[111] Mr. McInnes also argues that the proctor of the estate David Stewart and Mr. Harry Rhude, one of the executors, who he considered senior counsel and well versed in estate matters didn't raise with him the issue of an executor buying from the estate.

[112] In Elcano Acceptance Ltd. et al. v. Richmond, Richmond, Stambler & Mills (1991), 49 O.A.C. 17; et al 68 O.R. (2d) 165 (C.A.), the Court dealt with a claim of negligence against a lawyer. It was alleged by the plaintiff that the solicitor had drafted a number of promissory notes for the plaintiffs without taking into account the provisions of s. 4 of the Interest Act which mandated that the amount of interest on the note be stated as an annual amount. When the plaintiff attempted to collect on the notes he was restricted to a statutory amount of five percent instead of the intended 18 percent interest.

[113] The argument at trial was that the solicitor was not aware that the Interest Act applied to promissory notes because the statute only made reference to contracts and not specifically to promissory notes. The trial judge found that the Act did apply to promissory notes. He also dealt with an argument by the defendant's lawyer that he had relied on the wording used in an earlier promissory note used by the client which had been prepared by a respected practicing solicitor and that he was entitled to simply repeat the wording. The trial judge commented. O'Leary J. (p. 13).

"While a solicitor may be tempted to take a chance that the work of another solicitor has been done without error, he is not protected if in fact his gamble does not prove correct."

[114] I am not prepared to excuse Mr. McInnes from his obligations to the plaintiff because other counsel not dealing directly with the plaintiff didn't raise an objection to the proposal made to the estate.

[para42] The problem here was not that Mr. McInnes did not know the law, but that he did not clarify the law once put to his inquiry. In these circumstances, expert evidence on the standard of practice was unnecessary. On this issue Cordery on Solicitors, 10th ed., Vol. 1, London, Butterworths, at p. J/305 is instructive:

[274] An allegation of professional negligence against a solicitor is serious and 'the onus of proving professional negligence over and above errors of judgment is a heavy one'. In that the trial judge is a lawyer himself, often he will judge negligence by what he perceives to be the standard of an ordinary competent solicitor. Indeed calling solicitors as experts has been criticised, it having been said:

'I must say that I doubt the value, or even the admissibility, of this sort of evidence, which seems to be becoming customary in cases of this type. The extent of the legal duty in any given situation must, I think, be a question of fact for the court. Clearly, if there is some practice in a particular profession, some accepted standard of conduct which is laid down by a professional institute or sanctioned by common usage, evidence of that can and ought to be received. But evidence which really amounts to no more than an expression of opinion by a particular practitioner of what he thinks that he would have done had he been placed in the position of the defendants, is of little assistance to the court; whilst evidence of the witnesses' view of what, as a matter of law, the solicitor's duty was in the particular circumstances of the case is, I should have thought, inadmissible, for that is the very question which it is the court's function to decide'.

It is submitted that only in cases where judgement must be based on material peculiarly within the knowledge of the solicitor's profession, as opposed to the knowledge and expectation of lawyers at large, would such expert evidence be either helpful or admissible.

[para43] The appellants did not call expert evidence suggesting that Mr. McInnes' failure to research the issue, in these circumstances, was consistent with his duty of care. At a minimum, Mr. McInnes should have been aware, as a result of the difference of opinion between solicitors Hull and Stewart, that caution was required. Had he looked he would have found, as did the courts on the later action attacking the transaction, that the law was not unsettled. I do not accept the appellants' argument that because Mr. Stewart, on behalf of the Estate, took the position that neither a court order nor the consent of the beneficiaries was required, it was reasonable for Mr. McInnes to have acted as he did. Mr. Stewart was not guarding Mrs. MacCulloch's interests as purchaser, but those of the executors qua executors. As is clear from his evidence, Mr. Stewart's concern was to protect the Estate on the transaction, not to protect Mrs. MacCulloch. On examination by counsel for the appellants he testified:

Q. Now, this view that was adopted by the executors that the estate had full power and authority to convey the property to Mrs. MacCulloch, do you know if that was the executors that had formulated that? Had they formulated it with advice from you? Had you participated in the formulation of the view? Whose view was it, and where did it come from?

A. I don't know where it emanated. I was certainly asked for my view. Whether Mr. Rhude had arrived at an opinion by himself before asking me, I don't recall, if I ever knew. But I know I was asked at one point if it was necessary for executors to get the consent and I gave the opinion that it was not necessary in the circumstances for them to get consent for this transfer in order to protect themselves.

[para44] It has long been accepted that a solicitor's duty to a client includes a duty to advise on the risks in a transaction. The Court said in Groom v. Crocker, [1939] 1 K.B 194 (at p. 222):

The relationship is normally started by a retainer, but the retainer will be presumed if the conduct of the two parties shows that the relationship of solicitor and client has in fact been established between them. The retainer when given puts into operation the normal terms of the contractual relationship, including in particular the duty of the solicitor to protect the client's interest and carry out his instructions in the matters in which the retainer relates, by all proper means. It is an incident of that duty that the solicitor should consult with his client in all questions of doubt which do not fall within the express or implied discretion left him, and should keep the client informed to such an extent as may be reasonably necessary according to the same criteria.

[para45] On the solicitor's duty to warn of the risks in a transaction see also Major v. Buchanan (1975), 61 D.L.R. (3d) 46 (Ont. H.C.) at p. 69.

[para46] The appellants further submit that Mr. McInnes was under no obligation to provide advice to Mrs. MacCulloch because she had negotiated the purchase of Monte Vista and Terrace House before retaining Mr. McInnes to complete the transaction. In this regard, they cite the New Zealand case Boyce v. Mouat, [1993] J.C.J. No. 33 (P.C.) which the appellants say is based on facts with close similarities to the present. There, in 1988 Mr. R.G. Mouat wished to raise $100,000.00 to pay for alterations to his house and meet certain business expenses. Since his own house was fully mortgaged his mother agreed to mortgage hers for the required sum. Mrs. Mouat was the mortgagor, Mr. Mouat was the guarantor on the three year mortgage with interest of $4,065.00 payable quarterly. Mr. Mouat undertook to pay the interest. Mr. Mouat asked Mr. Boyce to act for him and his mother. On 9th November, 1988, Mrs. Mouat was taken by her son to Mr. Boyce's office where Mrs. Mouat signed the mortgage and ancillary documents with her son signing as guarantor. In 1989 Mr. Mouat's business deteriorated, he fell into arrears on the payment of interest on his mother's mortgage and eventually he became bankrupt. Mrs. Mouat was left with a liability to repay the principal sum of $110,250.00 together with arrears of interest. She sued the firm of solicitors alleging in her statement of claim that they were in breach of contract, inter alia, in the following respects: (a) failing to ensure that the Plaintiff had her own independent advice in respect of the transaction; and (b) failing to refuse to act for the Plaintiff in respect of the transaction when it was acting for R.G. Mouat.

[para47] The evidence was that the solicitor, upon meeting with Mrs. Mouat, pointed out to her that her position as mortgagor providing the security was substantially different to that of her son as guarantor and recipient of the loan. He advised her to obtain independent legal advice and offered to arrange for her to see a lawyer at one of the neighbouring law firms if she so wished. Mrs. Mouat declined. The trial judge, Holland J., was satisfied that "Mrs. Mouat knew at all times that the defendant was her son's solicitor, she knew the type of transaction that she was about to embark upon, and that having decided to support and trust her son she did not expect or require any legal advice as to the wisdom of her entering into the transaction." As to the claim that Mr. Boyce should have advised her that it was not in her interests to sign the mortgage, the trial judge concluded that:

It was made quite apparent to Mr. Boyce that Mrs. Mouat knew what a mortgage was and that if her son defaulted she stood the risk of losing her home. It was obvious to her, as it was to everyone else, that it was not in her financial interests to sign the mortgage, but nevertheless she wished to do so. The circumstances were not such as gave rise to any obligation on Mr. Boyce to advise her against signing the transaction.

[para48] Holland J. was satisfied that Mrs. Mouat was not concerned about the wisdom of the transaction and was "merely seeking the service of the solicitor to ensure that the transaction was given proper and full effect by way of ascertaining questions of title and ensuring that by appropriate documentation the parties achieved what they had contracted for". This finding of fact by the trial judge was supported by the evidence. The decision was reversed on appeal. On further appeal to the Privy Council, the Law Lords found that the intervention of the Court of Appeal was unwarranted and restored the trial decision finding Mr. Boyce not negligent. In so holding the Court said:

10 Their Lordships are accordingly satisfied that Mrs. Mouat required of Mr. Boyce no more than that he should carry out the necessary conveyancing on her behalf and explain to her the legal implications of the transaction. Since Mrs. Mouat was already aware of the consequences if her son defaulted Mr. Boyce did all that was reasonably required of him before accepting her instructions when he advised her to obtain and offered to arrange independent advice. As Mrs. Mouat was fully aware of what she was doing and had rejected independent advice, there was no duty on Mr. Boyce to refuse to act for her. Having accepted instructions he carried these out properly and was neither negligent nor in breach of contract in acting and continuing to act after Mrs. Mouat had rejected his suggestion that she obtain independent advice. Indeed not only did Mr. Boyce in carrying out these instructions repeat on two further occasions his advice that Mrs. Mouat should obtain independent advice but he told her in no uncertain terms that she would lose her house if Mr. R.G. Mouat defaulted. One might well ask what more he could reasonably have done.

11 When a client in full command of his faculties and apparently aware of what he is doing seeks the assistance of a solicitor in the carrying out of a particular transaction, that solicitor is under no duty whether before or after accepting instructions to go beyond those instructions by proffering unsought advice on the wisdom of the transaction. To hold otherwise could impose intolerable burdens on solicitors.

[para49] I do not agree with the appellants that the facts in Boyce are similar to those here. There, Mr. Boyce advised the client fully on her legal exposure and the fact that she should seek independent legal advice. He took the steps necessary to make the transaction effective according to his client's instructions. Here, Mr. McInnes gave Mrs. MacCulloch no advice on the risk of the transaction. He did not make her aware of her possible exposure and he authored an agreement and conveyancing documents that were ineffective to achieve their purpose.

[para50] The evidence does not support the appellant's assertion that Mrs. MacCulloch had retained Mr. McInnes for the limited purpose of carrying out the transaction. The appellants provided no documentation confirming that his retainer was circumscribed. Mr. McInnes acknowledged in his evidence that he did not know that the transaction was vulnerable. The tenor of his evidence was not that he was carrying out a conveyance which he knew to be faulty, but on the express direction of his client. It was that he protected the transaction from challenge by obtaining the "consent" of the beneficiaries and that in doing so he met the standard required of him. The fact that he arranged for the beneficiaries to consent to the purchase, which was not at the request of Mrs. MacCulloch, belies any suggestion that the retainer was a limited one.

[para51] The appellants say, in the alternative, that Mrs. MacCulloch did not require advice about the perils of an executor purchasing an Estate asset because she was already aware of the problem from the advice given by Mr. Hull on the Unit 819 purchase. The trial judge rejected that proposition. He said:

[104] Mr. McInnes argues that the plaintiff was already aware that she needed to get a court order and that if he suggested that to her she would not have consented to have him do so

[106] I reject the argument advanced by the defendants. While it is clear that the plaintiff instructed her lawyer in Toronto to proceed without Court approval or even without getting the beneficiaries to sign off on that agreement does not mean that she would have taken the same approach in regard to the agreement about the farm property. The Toronto apartment purchase handled by Mr. Hull was a much simpler transaction. She was simply paying the market value for the apartment in circumstances where the estate clearly wanted to dispose of the estate asset.

[107] It is also not clear in the evidence before me exactly what was said to the plaintiff by her lawyers in Toronto about getting court approval

[108] Mr. McInnes contends that since she was advised to get court approval about the first purchase that he did not have to explain to her to do that in regard to the purchase of the farm. I reject that argument. I find that Mr. McInnes had an obligation to give the plaintiff the option to reject his advice. He did not do so. I believe he had an obligation to make it very clear to her what the law was. I believe that Mr. McInnes did not do that because he obviously was not aware of the strict prohibition against her buying from the estate. I believe that while Mr. McInnes was somewhat aware of the issue, he never really directed his mind to the question because he felt that getting the beneficiaries to sign solved the problem. His evidence is that he didn't have to discuss that with her because he felt he was protecting her from attack by getting the beneficiaries to sign off.

(emphasis added)

[para52] The trial judge found that Mrs. MacCulloch was not sufficiently aware, from her dealings with the Toronto lawyer on Unit 819, of the risks of the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House transaction. This factual inference is supported by the evidence. There were several factors distinguishing the two transactions. The Unit 819 purchase did not involve an immediate resale. Consequently, there was no high resale price which might cause the beneficiaries or the other executors to question the wisdom of the selling price. Unit 819 was located in Toronto. Some of the advice letters had referred to the particular requirements of the Ontario Trustee Act and of their Land Titles Office. From this Mrs. MacCulloch might have assumed that the advice was specific to that province. Most importantly, Mrs. MacCulloch was aware from the exchanges between Mr. Stewart and Mr. Hull that there were conflicting positions on the necessary precautions. She might well have concluded that no extra precautions were necessary. Finally, the correspondence from Mrs. MacCulloch to Mr. Hull on the purchase of Unit 819 reveals that she did not appreciate her position as a purchaser as distinct from that as an executor. For example, in a letter of October 22, 1980 to Mr. Hull she wrote in part:

We discussed the matter concerning the deeds of Apartment 819 Harbour square. We consider that we do not need to ask the permission of the children, the Executors have full power to act .

[para53] And on October 30, 1980:

At our last Executors' meeting, we discussed the question of your wanting the Childrens' [sic] signatures. We do not consider we need this and are not prepared to ask for it, also the lawyers for the estate are not prepared to ask for the signatures of the Children as they do not consider they are necessary. I do realise [sic] that you want to protect me but if we can't sort it out quickly and simply and soon, then I think I will seriously consider dropping the whole thing, I am becoming very weary of problems and just can't cope.

[para54] While Mr. McInnes may not have been privy to this correspondence, it supports the judge's view that Mrs. MacCulloch was not adequately aware of the difficulties.

(b) Reliance/Causation:

[para55] It was the further position of the appellants that Mrs. MacCulloch did not prove that if Mr. McInnes had given her the proper advice she would not have proceeded with the transaction without court approval. Accordingly, they say, his negligence was not causative of the damages. The trial judge rejected that submission as is clear from the passage quoted at [paragraph] 50 above. Repeating, in part, the trial judge's comments on this issue:

[106] I reject the argument advanced by the defendants. While it is clear that the plaintiff instructed her lawyer in Toronto to proceed without Court approval or even without getting the beneficiaries to sign off on that agreement does not mean that she would have taken the same approach in regard to the agreement about the farm property.

[107] It is also not clear in the evidence before me exactly what was said to the plaintiff by her lawyers in Toronto about getting Court approval. From the correspondence entered into evidence, it appears that she was being given two options, that is, either getting court approval or getting the beneficiaries to sign off.

[108] Mr. Clark [a solicitor working with Mr. Hull in Toronto] in his evidence indicated that he felt the best method was to get a Court order and that he explained the problem to the plaintiff. He said that the problem was that she was dealing with herself and that the beneficiaries might object later.

[109] If that was the advice given to her, it would seem to me that she could conclude that by getting the beneficiaries to sign the problem would be solved.

[115] I am not satisfied that if Mr. McInnes had advised the plaintiff to get a Court order that she would have rejected that advice. To suggest that is to speculate on what she might have done. Her decision I am sure would depend on how the problem was presented to her and how forcefully the argument was advanced. Since the problem was never clearly placed before her I am not prepared to speculate on what her reaction would be.

[para56] A plaintiff suing for negligence must establish: (i) the existence of a duty of care; (ii) breach of that duty; and (iii) loss resulting from that breach. The appellants say that it was for Mrs. MacCulloch to affirmatively prove that she would not have proceeded with the transaction without court approval had the advice been given. The trial judge erred, they say, in reversing the onus on this issue. The appellants refer to the underlined portion in the latter part of the following paragraph from the decision:

[116] In summary I find that it was negligent on Mr. McInnes' part to arrange for the plaintiff to purchase estate assets without getting court approval. I believe he was not aware of the strict prohibition against that and was wrong to conclude that getting the beneficiaries to sign off would protect the plaintiff. I find that he has not shown that the plaintiff would have refused to follow his advice if he had given her advice in which he told her to get court approval. I find that he cannot rely on the advice given to the plaintiff by other counsel in regard to the Toronto apartment purchase.

[para57] On this issue, the appellants cite Canada Trust Co. v. Sorkos (1992), 90 D.L.R. (4th) 265 (Ont. Gen. Div.). There, the real estate agents for Sorkos who was the vendor of the property concluded from descriptions of the 5 parcel piece of property that the acreage was 5.72. Sorkos had not mentioned that a part of the property had been expropriated. Sorkos accepted an offer based upon a per acre price. After acceptance of the offer a survey revealed that the actual acreage was less than the estimate of the agents, resulting in a lower selling price. Sorkos refused to pay the full real estate commission. The agents sued for the balance. Sorkos resisted payment, citing in defence the agents' negligent estimation of the size of the property. Granger J. found that the agents had negligently misrepresented the acreage of the property. He then said at p. 272:

Sorkos must establish that there is a causal link between the breach by Robinson and Simpson and the damage which he suffered. Sorkos suggests that due to the negligent misrepresentation of Canada Trust he failed to receive $4,900,000 for the property, and as a result of the price abatement clause and the inaccuracy on the size of the property he only received $4,850,314.65, amounting to a loss of $49,685.35. The onus is on the vendors to show it was probable that if they had received the "proper advice" they would have done something differently: See Sykes v. Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., [1970] 2 All E.R. 471 (Eng. C.A.); Carieras v. Levy [1970] E.G.D. 618 (Q.B.); Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Bartlett (1991), 17 R.P.R. (2d) 190, 3 O.R. (3d) 642, 26 A.C.W.S. (3d) 1355 (Gen Div.).

[para58] Granger J. concluded that the vendors had contracted for a sale on a per acre price and got what they bargained for. He was not satisfied that the plaintiffs would not have accepted the offer had they known the true acreage. He commented that the plaintiffs may well have known that the acreage was less than 5.72. Additionally, it was plainly stated in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, which had been fully explained to them, that if the acreage was less than stated the purchase price would be abated. He awarded no damages.

[para59] Sykes v. Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., [1970] 2 All E.R. 471 (Eng. C.A.), referred to by Granger J. in Sorkos, is commonly cited for the proposition that, where negligent advice has been given by a solicitor, the clients who suffered damage must prove that had proper advice been given, they would not have entered into the transaction or would have entered it on different terms. In Sykes, the plaintiffs were partners in a firm of architects. In 1963 they entered into negotiations for a 10-year sublease of office premises in London. Rignall was their solicitor for this transaction. The lease contained a clause prohibiting further sublease without consent of the landlord. In 1965 the plaintiffs sought to sublease a part of their premises for the balance of the term. The landlord withheld consent. The plaintiffs sued Rignall. The court held that Rignall had been negligent in failing to advise the plaintiffs of the restriction on subletting. The plaintiffs sought damages equivalent to a percentage reduction in the rents that they had committed to pay over the term of the sublease. Their theory was that they would have negotiated lower rents had they known of the restriction. The trial court awarded only nominal damages. The plaintiffs had failed to prove that had they received proper advice they would not have entered into the subleases on the same terms. On appeal, Harman L.J. characterized the absence of a warning about the restriction on subletting as tantamount to a representation that there was no problem to consider. However, in upholding the award of only nominal damages he said, at p. 476:

Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to anything more than nominal damages remains to be considered. it seems to me, it is necessary for the plaintiffs to prove something more, namely, that the solicitor's omission did make a difference to them and was at least one of the elements, though there may be others, which influenced their minds to enter into the underlease.

[para60] Salmon L.J., commented that the "degree of blame [on the solicitors] in the present case was slight". He agreed that the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the breach caused substantial damage. At p. 478 he said:

It was for the plaintiffs to show that it was probable that if they had received proper advice they would not have entered into the underleases, at any rate not at the rents reserved. In my opinion they completely failed to prove anything of the kind. No doubt it would have taken very little evidence to establish this fact.

[para61] The decision, however, turned upon the balancing of the evidence as to what the plaintiffs would have done on the correct advice. Salmon L.J. noted that one of the plaintiffs, although pressed by the judge to do so, would not say that it would have made any difference had the proper advice been given. The other plaintiff was not asked the question. Salmon L.J. concluded that the trial judge, in denying substantial damages, was of the view that it was as likely as not that the plaintiffs would have entered the leases even if advised of the restriction on subletting. He continued at p. 478:

In these circumstances, it seems to me impossible for a court to hold that the plaintiffs would probably not have taken the risk of entering the underleases. Mr. Ronald Sykes would not say so. It might be different if there were any facts or contemporaneous documents pointing in the plaintiff's favour - but there are none. On the contrary, all the known facts and documents strongly suggest that the plaintiffs would have taken the risk of entering into these underleases even if they had been properly advised by Mr. Rignall.

[para62] Karminski L.J. agreed that the evidence supported the view that, even had they known of the requirement for the landlord's permission to sublet, the plaintiffs would have rented the premises. In this regard, he noted that because the premises were obviously very suitable in every way for the plaintiffs' London practice, the plaintiffs would have been very reluctant to lose these premises; that they occupied other premises the leases for which contained similar restrictive clauses; that they had no original intention of subletting; and, lastly, that even had they known of the restriction, the plaintiffs might have been prepared to take their chances that the landlord would ultimately consent should they wish to sublet. He was satisfied that there was evidence to support the trial judge's finding that the plaintiffs had not proved that they would not have leased the premises had they known of the restriction.

[causation is] essentially a practical question of fact which can best be answered by ordinary common sense rather than abstract metaphysical theory.

[para64] Causation, particularly in cases of negligence through advice not given, is primarily a question of inference by the trial judge as was recognized in Allied Maples v. Simmons & Simmons, [1995] 4 All E.R. 907. There Allied Maples acquired assets of the Gillow Group. They complained that in the course of the acquisition the defendant solicitors had insufficiently advised them as to the "first tenant liabilities" that might and did eventuate from leases originally held by the Gillow company. The judge held that Allied Maples must prove on balance of probability that, had it received proper advice, it would have taken steps to negotiate with Gillow to obtain protection. There was ample evidence to support the judge's findings on this. The Law Lords agreed that where the complaint is one of advice not given, the hypothetical question of what the plaintiff would have done requires that the judge draw an inference. While such inferences are not as insulated from review by appellate courts as are findings of primary fact, deference is nonetheless due given the advantage enjoyed by the trial judge.

1. What has to be proved to establish a causal link between the negligence of the defendants and the loss sustained by the Plaintiffs depends in the first instance on whether the negligence consists on some positive act or misfeasance, or an omission or non-feasance. In the former case, the question of causation is one of historical fact .

2. If the defendant's negligence consists of an omission, for example to provide proper equipment, or to give proper instructions or advice, causation depends, not upon a question of historical fact, but on the answer to the hypothetical question, what would the plaintiff have done if the equipment had been provided or the instruction or advice given. This can only be a matter of inference to be determined from all the circumstances. The plaintiff's own evidence that he would have acted to obtain the benefit or avoid the risk, while important, may not be believed by the judge, especially if there is compelling evidence that he would not. In the ordinary way, where the action required of the plaintiff is clearly for his benefit, the court has little difficulty in concluding that he would have taken it

Although the question is a hypothetical one, it is well established that the plaintiff must prove on balance of probability that he would have taken action to obtain the benefit or avoid the risk. But again, if he does establish that, there is no discount because the balance is only just tipped in his favour. In the present case the plaintiffs had to prove that, if they had been given the right advice, they would have sought to negotiate with Gillow to obtain protection. The judge held that they would have done so. I accept Mr Jackson's submission that since this is a matter of inference, this court will more readily interfere with a trial judge's findings than if it was one of primary fact. But even so, this finding depends to a considerable extent on the judge's assessment of Mr Harker and Mr Moore, both of whom he saw and heard give evidence for a considerable time. Moreover, in my judgment there was ample evidence to support the judge's conclusion. Mr Jackson's attack on this finding was, as I have explained, something of an afterthought and not, I think, undertaken with great enthusiasm. I am quite unable to accede to it.

[para66] And Millett L.J. said at page 927:

[paragraph] 71 In order to obtain an order for the assessment of damages (in the Queen's Bench Division) or for an inquiry as to damages (in the Chancery Division), however, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to establish a breach of duty on the part of the defendant. He must also identify some head of loss which is alleged to have resulted from the breach and, if it is not of a kind which would naturally result from the breach, establish a causal link between the breach and the loss. Only once he has done this is he entitled to have the loss quantified.

[para67] The damage suffered by Mrs. MacCulloch arising from the challenge to the transaction was precisely the kind of damage which would result from Mr. McInnes' failure to advise her of the risk of purchasing an estate asset. There is a clear causal link.

[para68] Similarly in Brown v. KMR Services Ltd., [1995] 4 All E.R. 598 (C.A.) Lord Justice Stuart-Smith referred to the deference to be accorded the trial judge's finding on this issue. He said at p. 617:

What the plaintiff would have done, if properly advised, can only be a matter of inference. The plaintiff may say what he would have done; but it does not follow that the judge will accept his evidence. In this case Mr Brown's evidence was that if properly advised he would not have been in any Category 3 syndicates. The judge did not accept that. There is therefore no acceptable evidence from Mr. Brown himself as to what he would have done. Where the advice which should have been tendered is clearly to the plaintiff's advantage, or the danger which should have been warned against is readily appreciated and understood once the warning is given, it is as a rule not difficult to infer that the advice would have been acted upon and the warning heeded. But in many cases it is not so clear. In the present case the benefits in the form of high profits on LMX syndicates were apparent. The risk of heavy loss may in 1987 have seemed very remote.

What should the approach of this court be to the judge's finding on such a matter? Since the conclusion is a matter of inference, the Court of Appeal can more readily interfere than in the case of a finding of primary fact based in part upon the judge's view of the credibility of the witnesses. Nevertheless, the judge's conclusion will no doubt have been based at least in part on his assessment of the character of the plaintiff. In this case the judge saw the plaintiff for more than two days in the witness box and clearly formed a view of him, a view which was by no means entirely favourable. Moreover, this court should be reluctant to interfere with a conclusion such as this, namely as to the proportion of premium income which would have been invested, unless it is satisfied that the judge's reasoning is in some significant respect erroneous. The situation is not unlike apportionment of liability between tortfeasors, or the assessment of the degree of contributory negligence.

[para69] In her evidence Mrs. MacCulloch acknowledged that she could not say what path she would have taken had Mr. McInnes advised her of the risk associated with the transaction:

Q. Mrs. MacCulloch, based on all the information that we've just been going over I'm going to put it to you that if Mr. McInnes had said to you, in addition to getting the signatures of the beneficiaries, you should also get a court order, you would have told him, "Don't worry about it. I'm not interested in a court order." Is that not a fair conclusion?

A. No. The answer to that is, if I had been given advice, I would have had the opportunity to consider it and to make a decision.

Q. All right.

A. I was not afforded that opportunity.

Q. I'm putting it to you, though, that if you had been given the advice, you would have done exactly the same on the farm transaction as you did on Unit 819.

A. You're saying that. You have no basis upon which to state that.

Q. Well, let me ask you this. On the purchase of 819 for a year and a half your counsel gave you advice. That transaction closed within a month of the farm transaction closing. Do you have any evidence that you can give the court that would have suggested that if you had been given further advice by Mr. McInnes you would have acted differently?

A. I'm afraid I can't [inaudible]. I can only deal with the advice I was given.

[para70] As the trial judge said, Mrs. MacCulloch's response to the advice that there was risk to the transaction would depend upon the nature of the advice and the way in which the problem was presented to her.

[para71] A first step in answering the hypothetical question of what Mrs. MacCulloch would have done had she received proper advice is to establish what advice ought to have been given. In Bristol and West Building Society v. Mothewe, [1996] 4 All E.R. 698 Millett L.J. said at p. 705:

Where a client sues his solicitor for having negligently failed to give him proper advice, he must show what advice should have been given and (on a balance of probabilities) that if such advice had been given he would not have entered into the relevant transaction or would not have entered into it on the terms he did. The same applies where the client's complaint is that the solicitor failed in his duty to give him material information. In Sykes v Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ltd. [1970] 2 All E.R. 471, [1971] 1 QB 13, which was concerned with a failure to give proper advice, the plaintiff was unable to establish this and his claim to damages for negligence failed. In Mortgage Express Ltd v Bowerman Partners [1996] 2 All ER 836, which was concerned with a failure to convey information, the plaintiff was able to establish that if it had been given the information it would have withdrawn from the transaction and its claim succeeded.

[para72] In order to establish what advice would have been given had Mr. McInnes investigated the issue, I have referred to Waters, Law of Trusts in Canada, 1974, Carswell Company Limited. That text has been since revised. However, this is the version which would most probably have been available to Mr. McInnes at the time. That text says, in relevant part, commencing at p. 627:

The general principle was established in the seventeenth century that a trustee may not purchase any part of the trust property. The rubric is clear and beyond argument. Indeed, Lord Eldon's two famous judgments in Ex parte Lacey (1802), 6 Ves. J. 625, 31 E.R. 1228 and Ex parte James (1803), 8 Ves. J. 337, 32 E.R. 385 where he set out the deterrent rationale behind the conflict of interest and duty rule, were themselves concerned with purchases made by trustees. In Ex p. James he said, "the purchase is not permitted in any case, however honest the circumstances; the general interests of justice requiring it to be destroyed in every instance; as no court is equal to the examination and ascertainment of the truth in much the greater number of cases." This authority was recently invoked by Cooper J.A. in Re Mitchell (1970), 1 N.S.R. (2d) 922 at 941 where a will gave a right of pre-emption over certain shares held by a trust to two classes of persons. The shares constituted half the issued stock in a company which the deceased and another owned in equal shares. The first class of persons with the pre-emptive right was the deceased's children, and the second the other shareholder. The widow was one of the trustees, and, on it becoming clear that the only adult child had not the means to buy, the other shareholder made an offer. The widow then offered the sum which the other shareholder was prepared to pay, a fair and reasonable price. No doubt her intention was to maintain her family's interest in the company, but the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal ruled against her. Not only was she a stranger to the preference, but as a trustee she was barred under the rule in Ex p. James.

All manner of fiduciaries are excluded from purchasing the property under their control for the purpose of their tasks. Company directors, agents, agents to sell, executors and administrators, mortgagees acting as trustees, trustees for the benefit of creditors and in bankruptcy, and inspectors in liquidation proceedings have been required by Canadian courts to surrender the property they have thus acquired or the personal profit that they have thereby made. But it is the trustee who above all is held most strictly to the rule, as Re Mitchell shows.

A will or instrument may of course enable a trustee or fiduciary to make such purchases, but the court will strictly construe the power thus given him. In Rountree v. Sydney Land and Loan Co. (1907), 39 S.C.R. 614, for example, where a company secretary was involved, the secretary was permitted to have a 5% commission on a sale of the company's bonds. Without authority the directors decided to convert certain preference shares into bonds, and to pay 5% to the secretary. The shareholders were later informed of the conversion, and ratified it, but, since they were not told of the interest the secretary had, he was required to surrender his gain. This was a case of consenting to a commission rather than a purchase, but the principle is the same.

There are also various ways in which the fiduciary may purchase, and the court will examine the transaction carefully in order to determine whether there has been a breach of the rule. Provided the trustee can show that a trust beneficiary knew all the facts and was at arm's length with the trustee, a trustee may purchase a trust beneficiary's interest. This avenue has been pursued by trustees in order to justify the acquisition of trust property, but the onus of proof on the trustee that that was indeed the character of the transaction is heavy. . .

But where a third party is involved as a purchaser of the trust property for himself, another issue would normally arise. Was he a bona fide purchaser? If he was, and he still retains the trust property, then he is entitled to retain it, and the trust beneficiaries can only follow the trustee for the proceeds of the sale. A trustee is acting in breach of trust if he disposes of the property as part of a roundabout manner of securing it for himself, but he also breaches the terms of the relationship between himself and the beneficiaries. As between the beneficiaries and the innocent third party who has given value, the law follows its usual rule of preferring the third party. It was for this reason that in Parker v. Thomas (1893), 25 N.S.R. 398 (C.A.) the third party acquired an unassailable title. At a foreclosure sale an executor bought estate property subject to a mortgage, and subsequently mortgaged it to the plaintiffs who, having themselves foreclosed on the executor, now brought an action of ejectment against the executor, the legatees, and all other interested parties. The plaintiffs were successful. Nor is the law concerned with any incapacity or ignorance of the true facts in the trust beneficiary. In Ricker v. Ricker (1882), 7 O.A.R. 282 where the trustee had bought and then sold to a bona fide purchaser, the beneficiary was an infant. Yet the preference for the bona fide purchaser remained, and the infant was left with his recovery against the trustee for the proceeds of sale.

In other words, whether the trustee has sold to the innocent third party with the intention of buying the property back, or he purchases the trust property and sells it later to such a third party, the rule preferring the bona fide purchaser for value gives good title to the third party.

The purchase by a trustee of trust property, and the same applies to all fiduciaries, is not a void, but a voidable transaction. Until the beneficiaries or other interested parties succeed in obtaining an order setting the contract aside, the trustee can pass a valid title to the innocent third party who gives value. It was by this means that the third party acquired good title in Parker v. Thomas and Ricker v. Ricker. The onus of proof upon the trustee to show that his purchase of the property did not involve him in a conflict of interest and duty is heavy, and the great majority of trustees are not able to show that a possible conflict situation did not exist. Thereafter, if the contract is not to be set aside, the trustee must either show that the beneficiaries all knew of the full facts and understood the situation, or that he had earlier applied to the court and obtained its consent. As we have seen, if the trustee argues that he had the consent of the beneficiaries to the purchase, there is a heavy burden upon him to show that the beneficiaries were not only capacitated, but knew as much of the situation as he did. Reported cases suggest that few trustees succeed in this. If the trustee seeks proper court approval to the purchase, he will have to demonstrate that a sale is most necessary, that no other purchaser has been forthcoming or seems likely to come forward within a reasonable time, and that his own offer in the circumstances is a favourable one.

[para75] (See also Weagle v. Weagle, [1955] 3 D.L.R. 58 (N.S.S.C. en banc) and the many authorities to the same effect cited by the Court of Appeal in Price Waterhouse Ltd. v. MacCulloch, (1986) 72 N.S.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.) referred to above.)

[para76] In my view, Mr. McInnes should have advised Mrs. MacCulloch that in purchasing the properties she would be in breach of her duties as an executor. Mr. McInnes was aware that Mrs. MacCulloch took those duties seriously. He should have advised her that should she purchase the properties and there be objection, she would be called upon to account for the proceeds. He should have discussed with her the factors relevant to the risk that the transaction would be challenged. In this regard he would have advised her that, because the Estate was in poor financial shape, because she did not enjoy a good relationship with the beneficiaries, because she was often at odds with the other executors and because she was reselling at what appeared to be a substantial profit unbeknownst to the beneficiaries and other executors, the chances of an attack on the transaction were increased. He should have further advised her that it was at best doubtful that the will, by authorizing sale of an asset to a "family member", authorized her to purchase as an executor. He should have advised her that if the transaction were challenged, because the beneficiaries were unaware of the resale, she would not be able to satisfy the heavy burden upon her of establishing that in "consenting" to the transaction they were fully informed of all of the relevant circumstances. Finally, he should have advised her that, in these circumstances, the only way to proceed with the transaction was to obtain prior court approval.

[para77] Mrs. MacCulloch was told none of this. Instead, she was led to believe that by obtaining the "consent" of the beneficiaries to the sale Mr. McInnes had protected the transaction. A distinguishing element of this case, as compared to those discussed above, is that the appellants' negligence consisted of more than a failure to give advice. By obtaining the beneficiaries "consent" to the sale, Mr. McInnes purported to insulate the transaction from attack. The negligence, therefore, consisted of both the failure to give advice and the negligent performance of a service.

was established. Speculation about what his client would have instructed him to do had she been given proper advice and asked for instructions does not interrupt the causal link.

[para80] In any event, the trial judge inferred that Mrs. MacCulloch would have accepted Mr. McInnes' advice, had it been given. There was evidence from which he could make that inference. In this regard, the record reflects that Mrs. MacCulloch had previously retained Mr. McInnes to act on her behalf in other matters with no indication that she had not followed his advice; she had accepted his advice to obtain the consent of the beneficiaries to the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House purchase; she had consulted him when she was asked to sign the 1981 Agreement in her capacity as executrix and had followed his advice to execute the Agreement. In drawing the inference the judge was entitled to consider, as discussed in Allied Maples, supra, and Brown, supra, that the advice which she was not given was for her benefit, easily understood and went to the root of the transaction. It was also relevant to drawing the inference that Mrs. MacCulloch's options were not limited to proceeding or abandoning the transaction. She might have been successful on an application for court approval. In this regard it is appropriate to consider the factors which would support her application: the Estate could not afford to maintain Monte Vista Farm as a residence for Mrs. MacCulloch; although the resale price of Monte Vista Farm negotiated by Mrs. MacCulloch was substantially higher than the purchase price, the Estate could not sell that property to a third party unless Mrs. MacCulloch released her life interest; the will expressly permitted sale of an estate asset to a family member. In these circumstances, it is reasonable to speculate that a court might have looked favourably upon approving the transaction.

[para81] As noted in Toneguzzo-Norvell, supra, although inferences are not entitled to the same level of deference as findings of primary fact, the weight of the evidence is for the trial judge. The trial judge's finding that Mrs. MacCulloch would have heeded the advice, although an inference, should be upheld by this Court unless we are satisfied that his reasoning was clearly erroneous. I am not persuaded that he erred in drawing the inference that he did.

[para82] In Schloss v. Koehler (1978), 4 Alta. L.R. (2d) 85, the plaintiff had undertaken to loan a farmer, Mr. Koehler, $3,000.00 with interest at 30% per annum. The purpose of the loan was to enable Koehler to purchase more hogs to carry on a larger hog farming operation. After the parties had reached a verbal agreement with regard to the loan of $3,000.00 and the payment of the 30% interest, the plaintiff instructed Mr. Burgess, a young lawyer in the law firm of Knaut, Rolf, Cochrane & Burgess, to prepare documentation on the matter so as to secure his loan. The plaintiff did not give Mr. Burgess any serial numbers or details of the chattels on which he was to obtain security nor did he give him at that time a location where the chattels could be found. Mr. Burgess prepared the chattel mortgage without such details. The defendant, Koehler, died on January 27, 1970. The plaintiff did not receive payment from the Estate of the monies due and, therefore, commenced action against the solicitors. The trial judge found that deficiencies in the chattel mortgage made the goods almost unascertainable and therefore the mortgage was unenforceable. There was, as well, a prior loan by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce to the deceased, Koehler, which was covered by s. 88 security under the Bank Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-1 and on which a notice of intention to give security had been filed at the Bank of Canada in Calgary. The bank took possession of these chattels under its security. The judge was satisfied that Mr. Burgess' standard of conduct in preparing the chattel mortgage and in failing to discover the prior security did not meet that required of a barrister and solicitor.

[para83] Counsel for the law firm argued that even if the plaintiff had known of the deficiencies, he would still have gone ahead and extended the loan. In rejecting that submission the trial judge said at p. 92:

I do not think, in connection with the claim against the law firm, that this is the proper perspective from which to approach the problem. I think that the proper method would be that, by reason of the negligence of the law firm and Mr. Burgess the plaintiff was precluded from having the opportunity to decide whether to advance the moneys or not advance the moneys which he would have had had he known of the true situation with regard to the chattels. The actions of Mr. Burgess precluded the plaintiff from having the opportunity to make this decision.

[para84] In upholding the decision on appeal (reported as Schloss v. Knaut (1979), 71 Alta. L.R. (2d) 399) McDermid J.A. quoted the above remarks and said at p. 400:

We agree that any uncertainty as to whether he would have gone on with the investment must be construed against the solicitors.

[para85] Here, Mrs. MacCulloch completed the transaction in the manner in which Mr. McInnes advised. That transaction was successfully attacked for reasons that he ought to have foreseen and about which he ought to have given advice. Prima facie, the appellants' negligence was causative of the damages. It is my view that in stating the issue as he did, the trial judge was not shifting the burden to the appellants but found that, on all of the evidence, their negligence caused the loss. In this regard I would find that he did not err.

(c) Damages:

[para86] Mrs. MacCulloch claimed the following damages:

(a) Damages for unnecessary diminution of the value of the estate of Charles MacCulloch arising out of the litigation brought by the trustee-in-bankruptcy against the plaintiff;

(b) Damages for loss of benefits under the Last Will and Testament of Charles MacCulloch relinquished by the plaintiff under the Agreement;

(c) Damages for loss of benefits obtained by the plaintiff as a result of the Agreement;

(d) Damages for loss of personal assets and effect;

(e) Damages for emotional distress, mental anguish, physical illness, mental illness (including incarceration in the Nova Scotia Hospital), disruption of her life for 11 years, loss of income earning capacity, loss of enjoyment of life;

[para87] The trial judge awarded damages totalling $355,292.46, including pre-judgment interest. This represented, in part, reimbursement of Mrs. MacCulloch's legal fees expended defending herself on the trustee's successful effort to have her account for the proceeds of resale of Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House. The balance of the damage amount was compensation for the diminution in the value of the Estate as a result of the monies expended by the trustee in pursuit of the litigation against Mrs. MacCulloch. This is discussed more fully below. All other claims for damages were dismissed. The appellants do not challenge the award of damages if the finding of negligence is upheld.

[para88] Mrs. MacCulloch has cross-appealed alleging that the damage award is inadequate. She says:

the Respondent does appeal the lack of damages and certain legal costs NOT awarded in the decisions. AND the Respondent asks the Court to deal with items not addressed by the Trial Judge in his decisions.

[para89] It is Mrs. MacCulloch's submission that the trial judge erred in failing to grant adequate compensation for the effect of the negligence upon the Estate and damages for its effect upon her health and for the loss of her inheritance and future earning ability.

(i) Diminution of the Value of the Estate:

[para90] The judge accepted that the legal and trustees fees attributable to the trustee's pursuit of Mrs. MacCulloch to account for the proceeds on the resales of Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House represented a cost to the Estate, thereby diminishing its value. Mrs. MacCulloch as beneficiary, therefore, suffered a loss in an equivalent amount. He invited further submissions from the parties in fixing the amount of these damages.

[para91] By supplementary decision dated June 20, 2000 (unreported) the judge quantified this damage claim. He noted that Mrs. MacCulloch, in prior litigation, had objected to the trustees' account and had succeeded in having it reduced from $356,028.00 to $231,000.00 (see MacCulloch (Bankrupt), Re (1991), 108 N.S.R. (2d) 130 (N.S.C.A.)). In addition to the trustees fees was the disbursement by the trustees for legal services in the amount of $219,000.00. The judge determined that of the disbursement for legal fees, $169,385.00 was attributable to the action for the accounting. There were additional legal fees expended in attempts to enforce the judgment against Mrs. MacCulloch. The trial judge was not satisfied that Mrs. MacCulloch could not have responded to the judgment and, accordingly, concluded that she was not entitled to recover the amount necessitated by her refusal to pay the judgment. The total amount allowed by the court of appeal for trustees fees during the time of the litigation was $115,000.00. The judge accepted Mrs. MacCulloch's estimate that 25% of that amount or $28,750.00 would have been attributable to the conduct of the litigation. I would find no error by the trial judge on this account.

(ii) Lost Benefits Under the Will:

[para92] Pursuant to the 1981 Agreement to purchase Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House, Mrs. MacCulloch paid $500,000.00 and gave up her rights under Clause 6 of the will. In this regard the Agreement provided:

9 (A) The Purchaser agrees to release and does hereby release all her right, title and interest to Monte Vista Farm pursuant to clause 6 of the Last Will and Testament of the late Charles E. MacCulloch and agrees to execute such documents as may be reasonably required by counsel for the Vendors to give effect thereto.

[para93] Clause 6 of the will granted Mrs. MacCulloch the right to be maintained in Monte Vista Farm for life, at the expense of the Estate. In addition to the Clause 6 bequest, pursuant to Clause 5(A) of the will, Mrs. MacCulloch was entitled to the sum of $300,000.00 and, pursuant to Clause 7, the income from a $1,000,000.00 fund for life and, if she survived for 10 years after Mr. MacCulloch's death, a payment of $500,000.00. These latter bequests were not relinquished in the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House Agreement.

[para94] When Mrs. MacCulloch was ordered to account for the proceeds from the resale of Monte Vista Farm she lost not only the benefit of that transaction, but could not regain the right to be maintained in the farm for life, because she had sold that property to a third party. Mrs. MacCulloch says that she should have received damages to compensate for that loss.

[para95] According to the trial record, in 1991 Mrs. MacCulloch had retained an actuary, Ron Fletcher of Morneau Coopers and Lybrand, to value her interest under the will. At the time of settlement of the Estate (1996), Mr. Fletcher was asked to update that value. He valued Mrs. MacCulloch's entitlement to be maintained in the farm at $6,990,020.00 calculated by multiplying the estimated annual costs of maintenance of $79,000.00 by the number of years that she would likely reside in the property. This, submits Mrs. MacCulloch, is the amount of her loss. That valuation is in dispute. On cross-examination by appellants' counsel, Mr. Fletcher agreed that another method of valuing this entitlement would be to fix a sum which, if invested in 1981, would generate sufficient annual income to pay the estimated expenses of the property. In a report prepared at the request of the executors of the Estate in October of 1981, the Clarkson Company Limited had estimated that the appropriate fund would be $600,000.00. At trial Mr. Fletcher could not say whether that sum would have been sufficient to generate the necessary annual maintenance costs. The Clarkson and Company had assumed the annual maintenance costs to be $60,000.00 not the $79,000.00 used by Mr. Fletcher. Mr. Fletcher also agreed with counsel for the appellants that if the Estate was unable to pay the annual maintenance costs, the bequest would have no value. The contingency that the bequest was without value was relevant because the Estate, unable to meet its obligations, was petitioned into bankruptcy in 1982. Notwithstanding the question of valuation of the life interest, Mrs. MacCulloch submits that the judge should have compensated her for that loss based upon the $6.9 million dollar value.

[134] This claim appears to be based on the argument that when the plaintiff purchased the farm property she gave up her entitlement to a life interest in the farm along with the right to be maintained on the farm. The value of this item was estimated to be anything from sixty to $80,000.00 per year.

[135] I reject this claim for damages. It is clear that following from the first trial decision, the Court of Appeal when dealing with this point raised by the plaintiff, indicated that it was not relevant to the accounting and would have to be addressed otherwise as against the estate itself. That was done when the estate was closed. Mr. Ronald A. Fletcher, an actuary hired by the plaintiff was asked to quantify the plaintiff's actual entitlement under the Will. He did so and his report (Exhibit 13) was accepted by the Court of Probate in its final decree (Exhibit 35). Mr. Fletcher in his report valued the plaintiff's right to be maintained on the farm at $6,990,000. This figure included the value up to April 1st, 1996, and the value of future payments. Therefore, the plaintiff has had this claim recognized in the Court of Probate and cannot advance it here as a loss to her.

[para97] Mrs. MacCulloch in her notice of cross-appeal says that the judge misunderstood the nature of this damage claim. It is Mrs. MacCulloch's submission that because Mr. McInnes did not attribute a monetary value to her "life interest" in the 1981 Agreement, she lost the value of that asset when the subsequent courts refused to offset it on the accounting. In other words, says Mrs. MacCulloch, had Mr. McInnes placed a value on the life interest in the Agreement, the Appeal Court would have recognized that she gave up in value more than she got on the resale of the properties and, therefore, that there were no profits for which to account. I cannot accept this submission. The Appeal Court was aware that Mrs. MacCulloch had given up her life interest in the farm, whatever its value, and was not prepared to permit a set-off. Jones J.A. said in Price Waterhouse v. MacCulloch (1986), 72 N.S.R. (2d) 1 (N.S.C.A.) at pp. 10 - 11:

it seems to me that a calculation of the profits in this instance should be a relatively simple matter as I do not think that the respondent is entitled to offset any claims which she purportedly has against the estate as a beneficiary or otherwise. She used trust property which belonged to the estate and therefore any profit accumulating from the use of the property belongs to the estate.

[para98] Similarly the issue of the set-off of the value of the life interest was before Justice Richard on the accounting (reported as MacCulloch Estate (Trustee of) v. MacCulloch [1986] N.S.J. No. 540). Following the above direction of the Appeal Court, he declined to consider in the calculation of the "profits" the value of Mrs. MacCulloch's life interest in Monte Vista Farm. He said at p. 3:

This hearing concerning the accounting as ordered by the Appeal Division was held at Halifax on June 9, 1986. In spite of the fact that the defendant knew of this hearing at least two months in advance she appeared ill-prepared to deal with the matters in the manner directed by the Appeal Division. Much of the evidence which she gave on that day in no way related to the proving of her accounts but rather related to matters which were not properly before me. One could speculate that the defendant appeared unwilling to accept the rulings of the Appeal Division as being finally determinative of the matter. Indeed, counsel for the defendant in his post-hearing memorandum made the following and somewhat startling submission:

It will be argued in this Memorandum, with the greatest of respect to the learned judges on appeal, that the question of the manner in which the settlement agreement is to be set aside in the context of the accounting hearing is fully before this Honourable Court for adjudication. The jurisdiction of this Honourable Court would therefore include any allowance to be made for the capitalized value of the right to Mrs. MacCulloch to have been maintained for her lifetime and to occupancy (sic) the Monte Vista Farm property. The operation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is relied on in the preservation of those issues. This Memorandum is submitted expressly without prejudice, to the right of Mrs. MacCulloch to have adjudicated before a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, her right to ownership of the Harbour Square Condominium property and her absolute entitlement to the proceeds of resale of the condominium property. The adjudication of the ultimate ownership of the Harbour Square Property ought to be taken as a precondition of the entry of any judgment dealing with the proceeds and appropriate directions may be given by this Honourable Court in that respect.

It is submitted that the jurisdiction conferred upon this Honourable Court by the decision of the Appeal Division is a general one with respect to the determination of the amount, if any, of net proceeds of the resale of the two properties accountable to the Plaintiff Trustee in Bankruptcy, including allowances for evidence, improvements and interests in the subject properties by way of resulting or constructive trust, whether or not interest accruing on the proceeds of disposition is to be awarded in favour of the Plaintiff and including the terms upon which the Plaintiff may execute any judgment obtained herein. It should be noted that the question of a resulting or constructive trust in favour of Mrs. MacCulloch for her work on the Monte Vista Farm property is an alternative to the allowance of a set off claim to the value of benefits under the will pertaining to that property.

The above appears to run counter to the clear directive of the Appeal Division. Clearly, any consideration of a set-off claim based on services allegedly performed by the defendant would be directly contrary to the directive of the Appeal Court. Consideration of matters such as the capitalized value of the defendant's interest in Monte Vista farm or the application of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms could very well impinge upon the rights of others who are not parties to this action. The defendant holds the proceeds of the Monte Vista farm and the Toronto condominium in trust for the plaintiff/appellant. She must now account to the plaintiff/appellant for the profits made on the resale of these two properties. Whatever other rights the defendant may have against the plaintiff, the estate of the late Charles MacCulloch or any of the executors, trustees or beneficiaries will have to be dealt with in other proceedings .

[para99] In late 1989 the trustee in bankruptcy was discharged. At that time the only significant asset remaining in the trustees' hands was the judgment against Mrs. MacCulloch, which was assigned to the executors. On the closing of the Estate the Probate Decree, dated February 26, 1996, recited in relevant part:

6. THAT the claim of Patricia B. MacCulloch as widow in lieu of dower takes priority over the claims of all other beneficiaries of the Estate;

7. THAT on the basis of the uncontradicted actuarial evidence presented to the Court (as prepared by Ronald Fletcher of Morneau Coopers & Lybrand Limited), the claim of Patricia B. MacCulloch as widow in lieu of dower exceeds the value of assets remaining in the Estate (including the present value of the Judgments), and she is entitled to set off her claim against the Judgments, such that they are paid and satisfied.

[para100] The Probate Court accepted 6.9 million dollars as representing the value of Mrs. MacCulloch's life interest. She was entitled to receive compensation for that foregone interest under the will. Accordingly, in satisfaction of that amount she was assigned the Estate's right to the judgment against her, which judgment was an asset of the Estate. In addition, she received all remaining Estate funds, which, according to the final decree, amounted to $240,720.72. Therefore, as the trial judge found, she received credit for the value of her "life interest", to the extent that the Estate had assets to respond to the value of that interest.

[para101] Justice MacLellan had determined that Mr. McInnes was not negligent in failing to place a monetary value on the "life interest" in the 1981 Agreement. I would agree. Nor is the fact that he did not do so the cause of the Appeal Court subsequently deciding that Mrs. MacCulloch could not set off the relinquishment of that benefit as against the proceeds on the resale of Monte Vista Farm and Terrace House. I would agree with the trial judge that no compensable damages are attributable to the fact that the life interest was not quantified.

[para102] Mrs. MacCulloch is of the view, as well, that the Agreement should have reflected that Terrace House was, and always had been hers, not an Estate asset. She faults Mr. McInnes for not drafting the Agreement to so reflect. Had he done so, in her submission, she would not have been required to account for any profits on the resale of that asset.

[para103] It was a term of the 1981 Agreement that both parties agreed to end the legal dispute over the ownership of Terrace House. Mrs. MacCulloch would have title to that property as well as Monte Vista Farm. The record does not support Mrs. MacCulloch's assertion, however, that she had agreed with the Estate that they were to acknowledge that she had always had ownership of Terrace House. Accordingly, it was not negligent of Mr. McInnes not to include this as part of the agreement, and no damages flow.

(iii) Damages for loss of benefits obtained by Mrs. MacCulloch as a result of the purchase and resale:

[para104] On this claim the trial judge said:

[136] I reject this claim for damages. The plaintiff was ordered by courts to account for the profit it deemed she made on the two transactions involving the farm and the Toronto apartment. Once these amounts were determined and all appeals were either concluded or abandoned, the plaintiff refused to pay the trustee the amounts determined. As a result they filed judgments against her in the amounts of $1,829,916. If the plaintiff had paid the judgment at that time, she clearly would be entitled at this point to claim these amounts against the defendants. Because she did not pay them, I find that she has suffered no loss of benefits as a result of the order to account for the deemed profits.

[para105] This claim overlaps with the damage claim discussed above. For the same reasons I find no error by the trial judge in declining to award damages under this head.

(iv) Loss of personal assets and effects:

[para106] As to this claim the judge said:

[137] I am not clear what this claim is about. The plaintiff did allege that when she sold the farm to M & M Development Limited she included some personal effects, furniture and vehicles which belonged to her at that time. No credit was given to her on the accounting for these items.

[138] It does not appear that these items were used by Mr. Fletcher in determining the plaintiff's entitlement under the Will, however, I have no evidence before me as to the value of these articles, therefore, I can make no finding about them.

[para107] Mrs. MacCulloch maintains that it was the judge's obligation to clarify the nature of this head of damages. Unfortunately, I am no clearer on the substance of this claim. In her written submission, Mrs. MacCulloch refers to personal possessions which were included in the Agreement. I can only presume that she is referring to some of the furnishings in Monte Vista Farm which were included in the sale to the third party. To these items Mrs. MacCulloch has assigned a value of $234,000.00. I assume her submission is that because those furnishings were personally owned by her and not, therefore, Estate assets, the value should have been deducted from the "profit" for which she was called to account. This same claim for a set off was raised before Justice Richard on the accounting. He declined to allow a set-off. Again, I would find no negligence by Mr. McInnes in failing to reflect the value of these personal effects in the 1981 Agreement. It is Mrs. MacCulloch's submission that the Court of Appeal was wrong in directing that there be no set-off's on the accounting. Accordingly, she seeks to recover damages from the appellants for that alleged "judicial error". Putting her position in its best light, in legal terms, her claim is too remote.

(v) Mental Anguish:

[para108] The judge declined to award damages under this head. He said:

[139] I am not satisfied that the plaintiff has proven this claim. She did present to me a number of medical reports (Exhibits 38, 39, 40, 53) which referred to medical problems she has encountered over the last number of years. However, I am not able to conclude that the medical problems, and in particular the admission to the Nova Scotia Hospital, was because of the action taken against her by the Trustee in Bankruptcy. Obviously, the plaintiff has suffered great stress since her husband died. She has had the strain of dealing with the attempt by Revenue Canada to collect taxes they felt were owing because of the re-sale of the farm and the Toronto apartment. She had problems with Canada Customs about her wedding ring. She challenged the trustee's fees and attempted to have one executor removed. She attempted to sue officials of the bank and trust company.

[140] I simply cannot conclude that the medical problems she had during these years were caused by the litigation involved in the sale to her of the estate assets. To prove this claim, she would have to show a connection between the first action taken against her and her medical condition at the relevant time. I find she has not done so, therefore, I would reject her claim on this item.

[para109] The weight of the evidence is for the trial judge. While the reports filed by Mrs. MacCulloch confirmed that her physical and mental health have suffered over the many years of litigation, the judge could not conclude that Mrs. MacCulloch met the burden of proving that such consequences were attributable to the attack on the 1981 Agreement as opposed to the aftermath of losing her husband and finding his Estate in disarray. Over the years, Mrs. MacCulloch has expended considerable time and energy in attempting to demonstrate that the affairs of the Estate were mishandled. She asserts that the trustee in bankruptcy acted improperly. She has alleged in her submissions on this matter that it was the stated mission of certain of Mr. MacCulloch's children to see that she got nothing. In her view the executors of the Estate were continuously antagonistic to her and failed to properly guard the Estate assets. They allegedly sold personal possessions, such as the yacht, secretly. She notes that as late as 1982 the executor, Central Trust, told the trustee that the assets were "as yet undetermined". This, she says, amounted to handing the trustee a blank cheque. Additionally, there was conflict between Mrs. MacCulloch and the Estate over the ownership of Terrace House. Many of these events predated the 1981 Agreement. It is unnecessary for me to comment upon whether her many concerns were warranted. Some were the subject of litigation. Suffice to say, while I do not doubt Mrs. MacCulloch's conviction today that the appellants' negligence in handling the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House transactions was the genesis of her problems, the record indicates that the Estate was in dire straits prior to that time. A significant factor motivating the Estate's agreement to sell the properties to Mrs. MacCulloch was its need for cash. It was thought, as well, that relieved of the requirement to maintain Monte Vista Farm, the Estate could better meet its ongoing financial obligations. Such was not the case, but not due to the challenge to the 1981 transaction. The bankruptcy of the Estate was unrelated to that action by the trustee. The Estate was petitioned into bankruptcy by The Bank of Nova Scotia on June 7, 1982. It was not until August of 1984 that the trustee challenged the 1981 transaction. In these circumstances, I do not find it to be error that the trial judge, on the evidence before him, was unable to conclude that there was a connection between Mrs. MacCulloch's ill health and mental anguish and the negligence of the appellants.

(vi) Miscellaneous Damage Claims:

[para110] Mrs. MacCulloch maintains that she should have recovered damages on account of the negative tax ramifications of the 1981 transaction. In her pleadings Mrs. MacCulloch did not claim that Mr. McInnes was negligent in failing to give tax advice. There being no claim in this regard, the trial judge did not err in awarding no damages.

[para111] Mrs. MacCulloch seeks compensation for the stress caused by her pursuit of this claim against Mr. McInnes and MCR. That is not a compensable head of damages.

[para113] Mrs. MacCulloch says that the judge erred in denying her damages for the judgment against her because he wrongly concluded that her refusal to pay the judgment was voluntary. She maintains she was not in a financial position to respond. The evidence indicates, however, that over the course of many years, Mrs. MacCulloch was evasive and secretive when questioned on the state of her finances pursuant to the trustee's efforts to realize on the original judgment. There was evidence, for example, that she purchased property and put it in her sister's name yet professed to be without financial means. On the evidence, it was open to the judge to conclude that Mrs. MacCulloch had not established that she could not respond to the judgment. I would not find that the judge erred in refusing to award damages on this account.

[para115] Mrs. MacCulloch further submits that certain of her legal fees were overlooked by the trial judge in calculating the damages payable. She refers to additional bills from her solicitor David Copp of $6000.00 and $6262.50 which were not referenced by the trial judge. According to the letter from Mr. Copp submitted as an exhibit in this proceeding, those charges relate to efforts to stay the execution by the trustee in bankruptcy against a motor vehicle and to the investigation of matters relating to the administration of the bankruptcy. Those fees are not referable to the negligence here and are not recoverable.

[para116] There is a further disbursement by the Estate to the law firm Stewart McKeen and Covert for $62,992.12 for professional services running from January 18, 1988 to October 16, 1989. The timing of those fees occurs after the litigation surrounding the Monte Vista Farm/Terrace House transactions. Justice Richard's decision quantifying the accounting was dated August 19, 1986. The appeal from that decision was dismissed on April 15, 1987. I cannot relate that disbursement to this claim.

[para117] Mrs. MacCulloch asks that we indemnify her for the fees of lawyer Tim Matthews, Q.C. in the amount of $50,942.25. Mr. Matthews represented Mrs. MacCulloch during parts of this legal proceeding. His fees in that regard are not separately recoverable. She has received compensation for those fees, to the extent allowed, in the award of party and party costs ($13,676.96) by the trial judge.

[para118] I am not satisfied that Mrs. MacCulloch, either before Justice MacLellan or in the material she has submitted to this Court, has satisfied the burden of proving that she is entitled to additional damages.

[para119] In assessing the damages it is important to note that Mrs. MacCulloch did retain the proceeds from the resale of the two properties. Although she was called upon to account for the proceeds, and judgment was entered against her in that regard, she did not pay the judgment. The purpose of the damage award is to indemnify her for the foreseeable loss caused by the appellants' negligence. But for her legal fees expended in defending herself on the accounting and those trustee and legal fees spent by the Estate in that regard, she was in the same position, financially, as if there had been no negligence on the part of the appellants. I would note that the measure of damages for the negligence used by the trial judge was disputed only by Mrs. MacCulloch on the cross-appeal. The appellants not having appealed that aspect of the judge's decision. (in contrast see Toronto Industrial Leaseholds Limited v. Posesorski et al; (1994) 21 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.)) [para120] Mrs. MacCulloch has asked this Court to order a full inquiry into the conduct of Price Waterhouse in the management of the Estate. That issue has already been considered by the courts. (See MacCulloch Estate (Re) (1989), 93 N.S.R. (2d) 226 (N.S.S.C.) as varied on appeal by Re MacCulloch (Bankrupt), (1992), 108 N.S.R. (2d) 130 at [paragraph] 89.) In any event, we are without jurisdiction to make such an order.

V. DISPOSITION:

[para121] I would dismiss the appeal and cross-appeal. Even though Mrs. MacCulloch was self-represented, I would order that the appellant pay costs of the appeal to her in the amount of $5470.00, representing 40% of the costs allowed at trial, plus her allowable disbursements, to be taxed or as agreed. There shall be no costs on the cross-appeal.

Strata Plan VR 2733 v. Jensen

Between Lee Alexander Jensen and Debra Jensen, petitioners, and The Owners, Strata Plan VR 2733 and Sharon Kelly, respondents

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia R.D. Wilson J. Heard: September 27 - 29, 2000. Judgment: October 16, 2000. (22 paras.)

Counsel: B.W.F. McLoughlin, Q.C., for the petitioners. P.A. Williams, for the respondent, the Owners, Strata Plan VR 2733. J.A. Bleay, for the respondent, Sharon Kelly.

R.D. WILSON J.:--

I.

[para1] This proceeding is taken pursuant to the Judicial Review Procedure Act. The petitioners seek an order setting aside the award of a single arbitrator.

[para2] The relief is sought on the grounds of apprehension of bias, and errors of law on the face of the record. I have concluded that the award must be set aside on the first ground. Accordingly, I need not, and do not, address the questions raised by the second ground.

II.

[para3] I find the following to be the material facts on this disposition.

[para4] In or about 1990, what had been a British Columbia Hydro substation was converted into a condominium complex, containing 12 residential strata lots. On 24 July 1994, Mr. Jensen acquired title to Strata Lot No. 2 in that complex.

[para5] By 1996 and 1997, differences between members of the Strata Corporation had surfaced. By letter dated 3 June 1998, the Strata Council alerted Mr. Jensen to three options available to him to resolve complaints he was making. Mr. Jensen elected to proceed to arbitration as prescribed in s. 44 of the Condominium Act, the then current legislation. By letter dated 4 June 1998, Mr. Jensen informed the Strata Council of his decision. As well, he nominated Ms. Sharon Kelly as a single arbitrator. Mr. Jensen had been informed of Ms. Kelly's identity by a building consultant. By letter dated 18 June 1998, the Strata Council agreed upon Ms. Kelly as a single arbitrator.

[para6] Following the appointment of Ms. Kelly, it came to the attention of the Jensens that the Strata Council had retained the services of Mr. Williams, as their counsel for the arbitration. The petitioners objected to Mr. Williams' participation on the ground of conflict of interest. It was said by the petitioners that contact had been made, with Mr. Williams, by Ms. Jensen, prior to his retention by the Strata Council. Ms. Kelly was asked to resolve that preliminary issue. Written submissions were made to Ms. Kelly on the question of Mr. Williams' conflict of interest. All of the material appears to have been received by Ms. Kelly by 31 August 1998. On 30 September 1998, Ms. Kelly issued what is entitled a "Interim Arbitration Award". In that award, she dismissed the petitioners' objection, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to prove a conflict of interest.

[para7] What Ms. Kelly did not disclose to the Jensens, or to Mr. Williams, is that she, Ms. Kelly, had retained Mr. Williams' firm in March 1997 to act for her in a real estate transaction. Nor did she disclose that in July and August 1998, a solicitor in Mr. Williams' firm "assisted Ms. Kelly with a contract for the construction of a residence". [See Note 1 below]

Note 1: Affidavit of Bonnie Elster sworn 20 September 2000, paragraph 4(c).

[para8] Nor did she disclose to the petitioners that she was scheduled to participate in a course or event, with Mr. Williams, on 22 October 1998.

[para9] At the time Ms. Kelly issued her interim award, she knew, or must have known, that she was scheduled to participate in that event. Exhibit D to the affidavit of Ms. Jensen, sworn 6 September 2000, is a photocopy of an information page containing notification of the event. The page bears the date "August 98". The notice is under the head "ADR Professional Development - Courses and Events". One of the courses or events is described as "Arbitrating Condominium Disputes". The event is scheduled for 22 October 1998 at Robson Square Conference Centre from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The text of the notification reads as follows:

Pat Williams, C.Arb. and Sharon Kelly will conduct the course. Pat has been involved in many condominium arbitrations as an Arbitrator and legal Counsel. Sharon has acted as an Arbitrator in condominium disputes. Pat and Sharon have different views on some matters and similar views on other matters when conducting arbitrations.

Participants will learn how an arbitration regarding a condominium in (sic) invoked, how the arbitration panel is constituted, the procedure to be followed, and the application of law to arbitration decisions.

Included in the procedure discussion will be tips on views and the experience of arbitrators dealing with the very emotional issues that appear so common when resolving condominium disputes. The costs to the parties will be addressed.

Participants will observe a complete mock arbitration which will address the problems that typically arise in condominium arbitrations.

BCAMI members who complete the course should be better able to make themselves available to individual condominium owners and Strata corporations to assist in the resolution of disputes short of having to go to Court.

[para10] At the time Ms. Kelly accepted the appointment as the single arbitrator in the matter, she was an associate member of the British Columbia Arbitration and Mediation Institute. I am unable to reconcile Ms. Kelly's failure to disclose the foregoing information, to the petitioners, with s. 7 of her Institute's Code of Ethics, which counsels members that they " shall disclose any interest or relationship likely to affect impartiality or which might create an appearance of partiality or bias."

[para12] Ms. Kelly's failure to disclose this information to the petitioners denied them the opportunity to address the issue very early on in the arbitration proceedings.

[para13] A further opportunity to disclose that information arose in April 1999. Following a conference to deal with procedural matters in the arbitration, Ms. Kelly wrote a letter to the parties. Among other things, she said:

Lee Jensen also raised concerns respecting my treatment of Debra Jensen in the conference call today and questioned my neutrality on several matters. I am asking whether the complainant wishes to formally challenge my authority on the basis of an apprehension of bias, perceived unequal treatment of the parties or some other named reason. If so, I would request that a written letter be provided before the commencement of the hearing.

[para14] By the time of that letter, Mr. Williams' firm had provided further legal services to Ms. Kelly. In February 1999, a solicitor of the firm had acted for Ms. Kelly on the sale of real property. In March and April 1999, a solicitor in the firm reviewed a contract on behalf of Ms. Kelly and drafted a demand for payment.

[para15] Although Ms. Kelly was alert to the notion of "apprehension of bias", she did not disclose her previous involvement with Mr. Williams' firm, and Mr. Williams, nor her continuing involvement with that firm. Again, the petitioners were denied the opportunity to address this problem in a timely fashion prior to the commencement of the arbitration hearing.

[para16] A further opportunity to address this issue was presented in June 1999. By letter dated 2 June 1999, Ms. Kelly wrote to the parties and said, among other things:

In reference to Debra Jensen's letter that was faxed to my office today, I am not aware of any "arbitration act". There is a Commercial Arbitration Act, however that Act does not apply to condominium arbitrations. In respect to Debra Jensen's question regarding B.C.A.M.I., I am not aware of who governs the practices of associations. As to who governs myself, if this question relates to any challenge in respect (sic) to my arbitrating this dispute, I refer Debra Jensen to my letter dated April 21st that outlines a procedure.

[para17] The arbitrator's award was released 14 April 2000. The petitioners were unsuccessful in establishing their complaints.

[para18] The petitioners did not learn of Ms. Kelly's solicitor client relationship with Mr. Williams' firm nor of her participation in the event with Mr. Williams, until after the award had been released.

III.

[para19] Infinite and varied are the examples of human conduct attracting inquiries into the issue of "apprehension of bias". Not so the governing principles for the determination of the issue. They are finite and well-defined. All proceeding from the first premise that it " is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done". [See Note 2 below]

Note 2: The King v. Sussex Justices, [1924] 1 K.B. 256 at page 259 (K.B.).

Note 4: Committee for Justice and Liberty v. National Energy Board, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369, per De Grandpre J., in dissent at page 394; approved in, among others, Valenente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; R. v. Lippé [1991] 2 S.C.R. 114; Ruffo v. Conseil de la Magistrature, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 267; R. v. S.(R.D.), (1997), 151 D.L.R. (4th) 193 (S.C.C.); and McQueen's Boatworks Ltd. v. Lanikai Holdings Ltd., [1996] B.C.J. No. 2063 (B.C.C.A.).

[para21] I find that Ms. Kelly's solicitor client relationship with Mr. Williams' firm, and her participation in the event of 22 October 1998 with Mr. Williams, neither of which were disclosed to the petitioners, would induce a perception of bias on the part of Ms. Kelly by such an observer as described above.

[para22] Accordingly, Ms. Kelly's award dated 21 April 2000 is set aside. Costs will follow the event.

Strata Plan LMS 1328 v. Marco Polo Properties

Vancouver Registry No. C992293

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Holmes J. (In Chambers) Heard: March 23, 2000. Written submissions received: April 12, 14 and 19, 2000. Judgment: May 15, 2000. (55 paras.)

Counsel: John G. Mendes, for the plaintiff. Herbert S. Silber, for the defendants.

[para1] HOLMES J.:-- The defendants' application is for an order pursuant to Rule 19(24)(a) and (d) and Rule 57 to strike out the Writ of Summons and Amended Statement of Claim in this action as disclosing no valid claim or cause of action, or otherwise being an abuse of court.

[para2] The plaintiff applies for an order to amend pleadings to add as parties the strata lot owners except the defendant Marco Polo Properties, and to amend generally as may be required to maintain a cause of action.

FACTS:

[para3] The defendant Marco Polo Properties ["MPP"] developed a residential condominium complex upon land in Surrey, B.C. it had purchased in 1993 ["Condominium"]. It retained ownership of an adjacent lot.

[para4] The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 1328, is the Strata Corporation of the Condominium complex MPP constructed.

[para5] The individual parties the plaintiff seeks to be added are individual purchasers of strata lots in the Condominium. The defendant MPP remains the owner of the balance of 24 strata lots comprising the condominium.

[para6] On October 26, 1998, the plaintiff notified MPP it considered it to be liable for construction deficiencies and that legal action would be taken if remediation of the deficiencies was not undertaken.

[para7] On February 1, 1999, MPP transferred title to the adjacent lot to the defendant Marco Polo Development Co. Ltd. ["MPD"]. MPP and MPD are companies with common officers and directors.

[para8] On February 22, 1999, MPP granted a mortgage to MPD for $2,050,001 over the strata lots it owned in the Condominium complex and the mortgage has been registered against the title to each of the strata lots.

[para9] On February 24, 1999, the plaintiff issued its Statement of Claim in the faulty construction action.

[para10] On January 12, 2000, at their annual general meeting the owners of the Strata Corporation passed a special resolution authorizing the prosecution of Supreme Court of British Columbia action C991659 commenced March 30, 1999 claiming damages and other relief from MPP and other parties concerning the construction deficiencies.

[para11] The resolution also authorized the within action commenced May 5, 1999 seeking a declaration of invalidity concerning the transfer by MPP of the adjacent lot and the grant of mortgages by MPP to MPD of the units it owned in the Condominium.

FOUNDATION OF THE ACTION:

[para12] The foundation for the plaintiff's cause of action is the Fraudulent Preference Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 163 and the Fraudulent Conveyance Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 164.

[para13] The plaintiff alleges in its Amended Statement of Claim that the transfer of the adjacent lot and the creation of the mortgage on the strata lots owned by MPP was a fraudulent preference or a fraudulent conveyance. The plaintiff alleges the transactions were in order to hinder or delay creditors and others of MPP, including the plaintiff strata corporation and owners, in the exercise of their just and lawful rights and that the transactions in fact had that effect.

[para14] The plaintiff's claim against MPP in the underlying faulty construction action is for breach of contract and negligence. It is an unliquidated claim, and the pleadings are not yet closed.

FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE ACT:

[para15] Section 3 of the Act provides:

3 Subject to section 6, a disposition of property by a person at a time when the person is in insolvent circumstances, is unable to pay the person's debts in full, or knows that he or she is on the eve of insolvency, is void as against an injured creditor, if made

(a) with intent to defeat, hinder, delay or prejudice creditors or some of them, and

(b) to or for a creditor with intent to give the creditor preference over other creditors or some of them.

[emphasis added]

[para16] The defendants' position is that remedies under the Fraudulent Preference Act are available only to those who have a liquidated claim. That proposition is well supported at law [Re Skinner (1960), 27 D.L.R. (2d) 74 (B.C.S.C.) at p. 78].

[para17] The claims for breach of contract and negligence by the plaintiff against the defendants in the underlying faulty construction action do not qualify as liquidated damages and therefore neither the strata corporation nor any owner qualifies as a creditor under the Fraudulent Preference Act [DeGraaf v. Staniszki Developments Ltd., [1988] B.C.J. No. 29, Huddart J., B.C.S.C. January 8, 1988].

[para18] Creditor is not a defined term under the Act. The Act does however provide that the term creditor includes:

S. 1(b) the beneficiary of a trust or other person to whom liability is equitable only.

[para19] The plaintiff argues that MPP owed the condominium corporation and the owners a fiduciary duty relying upon the decision of Owen-Flood J. in Strata Plan 1229 v. Trivantor Investments International Ltd. (1995), 4 B.C.L.R. (3d) 259 where he noted at p. 274:

It is true that the strata corporation is a separate legal entity from its members but, nevertheless, its members have a duty to the strata corporation to take reasonable steps to see that it complies with its statutory obligations.

[para20] The plaintiff alleges MPP breached its fiduciary duty by entering into a scheme to defeat or impair the corporation and the owners' ability to recover damages they claim for in the underlying faulty construction action.

[para21] The plaintiff argues they seek a declaration of constructive trust, which is a remedy for breach of a fiduciary duty, and they may therefore be said to be the beneficiaries of a trust.

[para22] On that reasoning the plaintiffs' claim they qualify both as the beneficiaries of a trust, and as a person to whom liability is equitable.

[para23] I find the plaintiff's reasoning inventive but not persuasive.

[para24] Trivantor, supra, involved a finding that owners have a duty to see that the corporation complies with statutory obligations. It was decided in the context of an owner who had title to all the units of a development, a parallel position to that of a developer prior to original sale of units in condominium development.

[para25] I do not see how MPP as but one of several owners in the condominium owed a duty to the plaintiff or other owners, who were suing it for breach of contract and negligence, to refrain from alienation or encumbrance of its assets pending judgment. It is not alleged that the impugned acts derive from or are related to its position as an owner, rather it appears they relate to its business or corporate aspect.

[para26] MPP never held specific property or an identifiable fund in trust for the plaintiff. It would not be a trustee of property or funds for the plaintiff even if the impugned transactions were set aside.

[para27] It is clear the base claims of the plaintiff corporation and owners sound in contract and tort. They are legal, not equitable claims.

[para28] I do accept that the beneficiary of a trust or other person to whom liability is equitable only is also exempt from the need for claims of creditors to be liquidated or readily ascertainable. The plaintiff and owners' claims here, regardless of how categorized, are not for liquidated or readily ascertainable amounts.

[para29] The extended meaning of "creditor" given in Section 1(b) was intended to extend to a trust relationship, or a similar equitable relationship, the protection accorded to that of a debtor-creditor. In my view, the circumstances here do not disclose either a trust or other equitable relationship between the plaintiff and the defendants.

[para30] I do not dismiss the plaintiffs' arguments because they are unique, I do so because I do not accept their validity.

[para31] Neither the plaintiff strata corporation, nor any owner, is a creditor within the meaning of the Fraudulent Preference Act and the action in that regard is not maintainable.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE ACT:

[para32] Huddart J. in DeGraaf, supra, noted "The case law distinguishes carefully between the "creditor" of the Fraudulent Preference Act and the "creditors and others" of the Fraudulent Conveyance Act." This is an important distinction in respect of the requisite status of a person to bring action.

[para33] Mackenzie J. in St. Gregor Mercantile Co. v. Halbach, [1927] 1 D.L.R. 761 (Sask.K.B.) confirmed the requirement that action under the Fraudulent Conveyance Act be in representative form. He did so by adopting the following summary from Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 15, p. 89, para. 184:

In an action to set aside the alienation under the statute [i.e. the Fraudulent Conveyance Act] a creditor should sue on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the grantor, except where he has recovered judgment on his debt, in which case he can obtain an order declaring the alienation void as against him, and containing consequential directions for the satisfaction of his debt alone, without mention of any other creditors or their debts.

[para34] The plaintiff here is not, and may never become, a judgment creditor. The action commenced is not representative of all creditors of MPP. The action must be dismissed as clearly failing to disclose a cause of action unless it is appropriately reconstituted or amended.

[para35] In the Law Reform Commission of British Columbia Report on Fraudulent Conveyances and Preferences, January 1988 at p. 59, the following comment was made as to "common error" experienced in commencement of actions under the Fraudulent Conveyance Act:

The requirement that those who are not judgment creditors should issue their writs on behalf of all creditors is often ignored. The irregularity appears to be one of form only, which can be cured at trial or even on appeal. It is difficult to imagine circumstances in which the defendant would be prejudiced by a conversion of the action into a class action.

ISSUES AS TO RELIEF CLAIMED:

[para36] The Prayer for Relief indicates that what the plaintiff seeks in this action is execution on a judgment the plaintiff has yet to obtain. That is clearly wrong. As the action must be representative of all creditors any appropriate relief granted would be for creditors as a class and not individually to the plaintiff corporation and owners.

THE PLAINTIFF'S CAPACITY TO SUE AND SECTION 15 OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT:

[para37] Section 15(1)(a) of the Condominium Act allows a strata corporation to bring an action as representative of the owners of the strata lots " for damages and costs for any damage or injury to the common property, common facilities and the assets of the strata corporation caused by any person ".

[para38] Section 15(7) provides:

15(7) A strata corporation may sue on its own behalf and

(a) on behalf of an owner about matters affecting the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation, and

(b) if authorized by special resolution of the strata corporation, on behalf of those owners who consent in writing to the strata corporation so doing, about matters affecting individual strata lots even though the strata corporation, in the case of a contractual claim, was not a party to the contract about which the proceeding is brought.

[para39] There is ample authority this empowers a strata corporation with the capacity to sue a developer for construction deficiencies, as is the case here in respect of the underlying faulty construction action brought by the plaintiff against, inter alia, MPP.

[para40] Counsel provided no direct authority that the strata corporation had a capacity under the Act to bring an action, as it has here, claiming relief under the Fraudulent Conveyance Act and the Fraudulent Preference Act.

[para42] It appears the legislature intended Section 15 to provide only a limited and closely defined representative capacity of strata corporations. This view is supported by the newly defined capacity for strata corporations contained in Part 10, Division 2, of the provisions of the Strata Property Act, S.B.C. 1998, c. 43, not yet in force. It is proclaimed to come into effect July 1, 2000.

171(1) The strata corporation may sue as representative of all owners, except any who are being sued, about any matter affecting the strata corporation, including any of the following matters:

- (a) the interpretation or application of this Act, the regulations, the bylaws or the rules;
- (b) the common property or common assets;
- (c) the use or enjoyment of a strata lot;
- (d) money owing, including money owing as a fine, under this Act, the regulations, the bylaws or the rules.

[para44] The wider and more general capacity to sue in this section stands in stark contrast to the limited and specific capacity of the current Act.

[para45] The plaintiff however is prepared, and indeed has moved for leave to amend, to add the individual strata lot owners, except MPP, as parties plaintiff. I consider it appropriate to grant that application. The plaintiff also agrees to continue the action as representative of all creditors of MPP.

[para46] The defendants argue that continuation of the action for relief under the Fraudulent Conveyance Act requires it be on behalf of all creditors of MPP. The defendant MPD is a creditor of MPP and therefore the condition cannot be fulfilled as the plaintiff cannot represent a party with whom they are clearly in conflict. It would result in MPD being both plaintiff and defendant in the same suit.

[para47] The representative aspect of the action is procedural. It is intended all creditors will be present and represented in the proceeding. The presence of MPD as a defendant fulfills that necessary condition. All creditors will be before the court and their interests dealt with in the one action.

[para48] The representative action for all creditors contemplated for a Fraudulent Conveyance Act proceeding need not be a class action under the Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50. It can be a representative action under the Rules of Court.

CONCLUSION:

[para49] The action in present form cannot be maintained. It is however capable of amendment. The plaintiff desires an opportunity to amend and it is appropriate they be allowed to do so.

[para50] The plaintiff has leave to add as parties plaintiff all strata lot owners except MPP.

[para52] The pleadings will be amended to be representative of all creditors of MPP pursuant to the Fraudulent Conveyance Act, except MPD, an existing defendant.

[para53] Consequential amendments necessary to accord with the resulting re-cast pleadings by amendment are allowed. In particular, the Relief Claimed must accord with the cause of action.

[para54] I will allow the plaintiff 30 days to file and serve an Amended Writ and Statement of Claim in accordance with this Order. In the event the parties are in dispute as to the form of amendments allowed they are at liberty to apply.

COSTS:

[para55] Although success was divided it was appropriate for the defendants to bring the application and extensive amendments to pleadings are required. The defendants will have their costs on scale 3.

McDougall v. Collinson

Between Marilyn McDougall, plaintiff, and William Edward Collinson, Kenneth Umbarger, Dominion Depository Agency Inc., Imperial Capital Corporation, Imperial Mortgage Fund Inc., R 218 Enterprises Ltd., Imperial Mortgage Fund (3) Inc., Imperial Mortgage Fund (4), Dominion Mortgage Corporation, Metro-Sunlake Projects Ltd., Kenway Industries Ltd., Woodway Holdings Ltd., El Rancho Vista Farms Ltd., Sunlake Industries Ltd., Rancher Investments Corp., Vancorp Development Ltd., John Stringer, and Messer, Stringer & Company, defendants, and Valley First Credit Union, Gus Faller, Linda Piddocke, John Huber, Chris Jaegli, Hugh Jensen and Sheila Golley, third parties

Vernon Registry No. 22514

British Columbia Supreme Court Vernon, British Columbia D.M. Smith J. Heard: May 31, July 6 and December 13 - 16, 1999. Judgment: March 8, 2000. (132 paras.)

Counsel: G. Schroeder, for the plaintiff, M. McDougall. B. Cronquist and D.E. Spelliscy, for the defendant, Dominion Mortgage Corporation. K. Rogers, for the defendants, Rancher Investments Corp., Imperial Mortgage Fund Inc., R218 Enterprises Ltd., Imperial Mortgage Fund (3) and (4) Inc., Imperial Capital Corporation, Woodway Holdings Ltd., and Dominion Depository Agency Inc. D. Kermode, for the defendants, William Collinson, El Rancho Vista Farms Ltd., and Metro-Sunlake Projects Ltd. P.R. Miller, for the defendants, John Stringer and Messer, Stringer & Co. K. Umbarger, for the defendant, Kenway Industries Ltd.

[para2] In this application, Ms. McDougall seeks an order certifying the action as a class proceeding and appointing her as the representative plaintiff on behalf of the investors. Ancillary to that order she seeks an order pursuant to the Trustee Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 464, appointing a judicial trustee for all of the properties and assets held by the defendants for the benefit of the investors.

THE INVESTMENT SCHEME

(i) the financing

[para3] The defendants William Edward Collinson ("Collinson"), and Kenneth Umbarger ("Umbarger"), collectively referred to as "the Promoters", implemented a plan to raise monies for the development of certain real estate projects in the Okanagan and Castlegar areas of British Columbia. They solicited funds through an umbrella company, Imperial Capital Corporation ("ICC") for investment in four companies ("the borrowing companies"): Imperial Mortgage Fund Inc. ("IMF1 Co"); R 218 Enterprises Ltd. ("IMF2 Co"); Imperial Mortgage Fund (3) Inc. ("IMF3 Co"); and Imperial Mortgage Fund (4) Inc. ("IMF4 Co"). The investment companies are collectively referred to as the "IMF Group". The IMF Group was created and controlled by the Promoters, although Umbarger was not a director of IMF2 Co.

[para4] Each of the borrowing companies raised monies pursuant to an offering memorandum. A minimum investment of $25,000 was required. The offering memorandum also represented: the investment was eligible for RRSP or RRIF status; the investment would be secured by a mortgage on the project second only to construction financing; and, the total of all mortgages on a project would not exceed 75% of the appraised value of the project.

[para5] ICC marketed the RRSP investment as having a rate of return of 74.68% and the non-RRSP investment as having an effective rate of return of 24.68%. It offered basic interest payable at 12% per annum plus premium interest of 12% on the principal amount payable upon completion of the development project. Investors in IMF1 Co and IMF3 Co were to be paid on a first in, first out basis. Investors in IMF2 Co and IMF4 Co were to be paid on an equal basis when the projects were completed. Through ICC, the Promoters received commissions of 10% on the investment funds they raised for the IMF Group.

[para6] The investments being marketed were highly speculative and very risky. The offering memoranda identified a number of "Risk Factors". They specified there were no assets and there was no value in the borrowing companies to support their covenants. They also specified there was no market for the investment units and none was expected to develop. Furthermore, potential investors were cautioned about the adverse effect of a prolonged economic downturn and no assurances of economic growth in the region were provided. The success of the projects was dependent on the competence and integrity of the principals who were required to conduct the affairs of the companies for the benefit of all of the unitholders. A history of the principals' involvement in previous real estate developments was listed. It was noted the principals had been involved directly or indirectly in real estate investments which had resulted in disputes and/or were not profitable. In bold capital letters on the first page of the offering memoranda, investors were urged to consult with their professional advisors before making an investment in the offering.

[para8] The Promoters were authorized to supervise the projects and to choose their professional advisors. The material contracts for each project were identified in the offering memoranda. They included a security agreement for the first mortgagee, a nominee agreement, an interest agreement with a company that had loaned monies for a project, a service agreement with the Promoters, and the construction agreements with the Promoters' related companies.

[para9] An investor in the IMF Group was defined as a sophisticated investor within the meaning of the Securities Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 418: a person individually, or jointly with his or her spouse, who has a net worth of $400,000, and in the last two calendar years had, and in the current calendar year has the expectation of having, a gross annual income of $75,000 or $125,000 jointly with his or her spouse.

[para10] The majority of the investments in the IMF Group were for the sum of $25,000. The average amount invested was approximately $39,000 per investor. I will refer to the investors in each borrowing company as: Investor Group one ("IG1"); Investor Group two ("IG2"); Investor Group three ("IG3"); and Investor Group four ("IG4").

[para11] The contract between an investor and the borrowing company was contained in two principal documents signed by the unitholder: a subscription agreement, and a mortgage and agreement of nominee ownership. The subscription agreement acknowledged the investor had carefully reviewed the offering memorandum, had been advised to seek professional advice regarding the investment, and understood the level of risk and lack of market for the investment. The unitholder gave a broad and unlimited indemnity in favour of past and future shareholders, directors and officers except for material misrepresentations by the issuer. The agreement for nominee ownership authorized a specified nominee to act as agent for the investor and outlined the rights and obligations of both the unitholder and the nominee. It also gave a broad and unlimited indemnity to the nominee except for acts of wilful default, gross negligence, and fraud.

(ii) the nominee

[para12] The investors' funds were received by a nominee. The nominee advanced the funds to the borrowing companies, issued mortgage unit certificates to the investors and held the mortgage security in its name.

[para13] Pursuant to the agreement of nominee ownership, the nominee had a duty to act honestly and in the best interests of the unitholders. It was required to exercise the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent nominee. That duty would be met if the nominee, acting in good faith, relied on the written instructions of the officers of the borrowing companies.

[para14] The nominee had no duty to supervise or review the validity of the investments or the adequacy of the security provided for the investments. It had no discretion to interfere with the management of the companies unless requested to do so in writing by 25% of the unitholders in IMF1 Co, IMF2 Co, and IMF3 Co, or 51% of the unitholders in IMF4 Co.

[para16] Initially, there were two nominees. Dominion Depository Agency Inc. ("DDAI") was the nominee for the investors in the first three funds. The sole shareholder, officer and director of DDAI was John Stringer ("Stringer"), a notary public with the firm of Messer, Stringer & Company ("Messer, Stringer") with an office in Kelowna, B.C. Valley First Credit Union ("Valley") was the nominee for the fourth fund but was later replaced by DDAI. The nominees held the registered second mortgages on the project lands for the benefit of the unitholders.

[para18] In summary, the IMF Group marketed an alluring but highly speculative plan for investment in a variety of real estate developments. The investment scheme promised a substantial return on the purchase of second mortgage units. However, the offering memoranda also identified the high risk nature of the investment. It also alerted prospective investors to the significant commissions, fees and costs associated with the promotion and development of the projects. These monies would be paid out to the promoters, managers and contractors before any return would be realized by the investors. Furthermore, the subscription agreements and nominee agreements limited the individual actions of the unitholders. Broad immunity was provided for the officers and directors of the borrowing companies and the nominee company in the absence of wilful default, gross negligence or fraud.

THE PROJECTS

[para19] The IMF Group was involved in six real estate projects at Vernon, Kelowna and Castlegar, all communities in the B.C. interior.

1. Imperial Ridge

[para20] IMF1 Co purchased land in Vernon for the development and sale of a 44 condominium apartment building ("Imperial Ridge"). The monies for that project were solicited between December 30, 1993, and April 6, 1994. A total of $1,073,000 was raised from IG1. The construction of Imperial Ridge was completed in July, 1995.

2. Heritage Hill and Erinmoore

[para21] R218 Enterprises Ltd. ("R218"), purchased land in both Vernon and Kelowna for the development and sale of two projects. For the sake of convenience I will refer to R218 as IMF2 Co. The Vernon project involved a three-phase development of 30 low-cost walk-up condominiums ("Heritage Hill"). Phase one of Heritage Hill, which included 8 condominiums, was completed by September, 1995. The Kelowna project involved the construction of 21 luxury townhouses ("Erinmoore"). Funds for these projects were solicited from December 8, 1995, to March 21, 1997. $787,000 was raised from IG2.

[para22] Metro-Sunlake Projects Ltd. ("Metro") was the construction and management contractor for the Vernon and Kelowna projects. Metro is owned by Collinson and his company Sunlake Industries Ltd.

[para23] Initially, Vancorp Developments Ltd. ("Vancorp") was a 50% partner with ICC in the Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects. It contributed about $250,000 toward the purchase of the land. In December, 1995, Vancorp withdrew from the joint venture and sold its shares and interest in R218 to ICC. In satisfaction for its interest, it received five condominium units in the Heritage Hill project and promissory notes for about $70,000. Vancorp alleges that R218 is in default on its promissory notes. Following Vancorp's buyout from R218, financing for the Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects was obtained from IG2.

[para24] The offering memoranda for IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co did not permit an allocation of the investment funds outside of their designated projects. Therefore, funds raised by IMF1 Co were to be used solely in the Imperial Ridge project and funds raised by IMF2 Co were to be used solely in the Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects.

3. Westbank (Gelattly)

[para25] The Westbank lands in the Kelowna area were originally purchased by El Rancho Vista Farms Ltd. ("El Rancho"), a related company of Collinson's. El Rancho sold its interest in the project to IMF3 Co before the syndication. Between November 1, 1994 and September 1, 1995, IMF3 Co raised $2,515,069 for the construction of a 66 apartment style condominium complex ("Gelattly"), as well as for "other unnamed projects". The offering memorandum for IMF3 Co did not specify the other projects in which the investors' funds could be allocated.

[para26] In addition to Westbank, IMF3 Co funds were invested in the Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects. IMF3 Co funds also went to purchase the lands for the project at Castlegar. Investor funds loaned to IMF3 Co and allocated to the Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill, Erinmoore, Westbank, and Castlegar projects were secured by second mortgages against those projects. As additional security, IMF3 Co received units in each of the other three investor groups to the extent of its loans to those groups.

4. Castlegar

[para27] R 263 enterprises Ltd. ("R263") purchased five acres of land in Castlegar with funds from IMF3 Co. DDAI held a second mortgage on the Castlegar lands for the benefit of the IG3.

[para28] R263 held the lands as a bare trustee for ICC and Vancorp who were joint venturers in the project. The lands were purchased for the development of a commercial property that would include a shopping centre and office building, as well as a 54 condominium complex. R263 is now in bankruptcy.

[para29] Vancorp contributed $25,000 to the joint venture. Again, as with R218, Vancorp withdrew from the Castlegar project and received a promissory note for $25,000 in satisfaction of its interest in the project. It also received an entitlement to one-half of the profits from the project, to a maximum of $100,000, less up to 50% of the aggregate losses incurred by R218 in the Erinmoore and Heritage Hill projects.

[para30] IMF4 Co raised $1,773,000 between December 8, 1995, and March 21, 1997. Its offering memorandum stated the fund was for the development and sale of several real estate projects in the B.C. interior over a five year period. Six projects were pre-approved for funding: Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill, Erinmoore, Westbank, Castlegar commercial project (shopping center and office building), and Castlegar condominium complex.

[para31] IMF4 Co completed off-site work on the Castlegar project including rezoning of the property, preparation of fully engineered drawings, paving of a city street, construction of sidewalks and installation of street lights. It also excavated a portion of the property for the apartment building site.

[para32] Kenway Industries Ltd. ("Kenway") was the general contractor for the Castlegar projects and is a related company of Umbarger's.

[para33] In order to keep IG4 monies productive until they were ready to start construction at Castlegar, the Promoters invested those monies in IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co projects.

[para34] Initially, the Promoters expected the investment of IMF3 Co and IMF4 Co funds into the IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co projects would provide a safe, short-term haven for the IMF3 Co and IMF4 Co monies. It was anticipated that by applying those monies to the projects in Vernon and Kelowna already underway, the sale of those condominiums would allow pay down of the second mortgages held by IG3 and IG4 which by then, would be in a position to proceed with their projects.

[para35] Sudden changes in market conditions brought a halt to this plan. The downturn of the market kept the IMF3 Co and IMF4 Co funds tied up in the IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co projects. It was only after the market collapsed that IG3 and IG4 discovered no construction had commenced on the Westbank and Castlegar projects.

THE SETTLEMENTS

The Short-Fall Agreements

[para36] The real estate market took a sudden downturn in early 1996. By then, construction of Imperial Ridge was completed. However, only phase one of Heritage Hill was fully completed and phase two was only partially completed. Phase three had not yet started. As well, Erinmoore was only 60% completed. Revenue from sales in these projects had slowed. No construction had commenced on the Westbank or Castlegar projects. Mortgages went into default and were no longer secured or fully secured by the assets of the projects. The IMF Group faced insurmountable financial difficulties.

[para37] In March, 1996, the Promoters arranged meetings with IG1 and IG2. As a result of those meetings, extraordinary resolutions were passed that provided for settlements between IG1 and IG2 and their borrowing companies IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co. Similarly, in December, 1996, the IMF Group arranged a meeting with IG3 which also passed an extraordinary resolution approving a settlement with IMF3 Co ("the Short-Fall Agreements"). The large number of units held by IG3 in IG1 and IG2 assisted IG1 and IG2 in passing the extraordinary resolutions required for these settlements.

[para38] The Short-Fall Agreements amended IMF1 Co, IMF2 Co and IMF3 Co's original subscription agreements to include the compulsory arbitration clause like the one provided for in IMF4 Co's original subscription agreement.

[para39] They also changed the nature of IG1, IG2 and IG3's investments. The members of IG1, IG2 and IG3 exchanged their rights for repayment of the debt owed to them under the DDAI mortgages, with the Promoters' equity in the projects of the borrowing companies. In addition to giving up their equity in the three borrowing companies, the Promoters also agreed to give IG1 and IG2 equity of about 70% in the Castlegar projects. Thus, IG1, IG2 and IG3 became the owners of their borrowing companies' projects and agreed to terminate their entitlement under the DDAI second mortgages. Instead of receiving a sum certain on their mortgage investment, they agreed to receive a share in the net proceeds from the projects of their respective borrowing companies. The DDAI mortgages were maintained in form to save the costs of foreclosure and to maintain the investments' RRSP and RRIF eligibility.

[para40] The settlements resulted in the following ownership changes in the projects: (i) IG1 received all of the equity in the Imperial Ridge project as well as some of the equity in the Castlegar projects; (ii) IG2 received all of the equity in the Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects and some of the equity in the Castlegar projects; (iii) IG3 received all of the equity in the Westbank project and retained its existing investment in the IG1, IG2 and IG4 projects; and (iv) the Castlegar lands remained subject to mortgages from IG3 and IG4.

[para42] After the Short-fall Agreements were made, the three investor groups asked the Promoters to continue managing the various projects. Umbarger and Collinson continued to sit, without compensation, as directors and officers of the borrowing companies even though they no longer held any interest or equity in the Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill, Erinmoore or Westbank projects.

The Takeover Agreements

[para43] In the spring of 1997, the Promoters retained Woodway Holdings Ltd. ("Woodway") as a professional "Risk Management Advisor" in order to assist in the management of the projects in which IMF3 Co held an interest. Woodway is a company owned and operated by Kenneth Rogers ("Rogers"). Rogers had expertise in business management and had acted as a financial and development consultant in the past.

[para44] Woodway was hired on a fee for service basis. IG3 contracted with Woodway to manage, construct and market the Westbank project and IG3's interests in the other projects. In an agreement between IMF3 Co, IG3 and Woodway, Woodway became the sole registered shareholder of IMF3 Co for the benefit of IG3 except to the extent of the payments due to Woodway under its contracts ("the IMF3 Co Shares Agreement"). Woodway and two other unitholders also became IMF3 Co's authorized signatories. Broad indemnity agreements were signed for the benefit of all directors, officers, shareholders, authorized signatures, advisors and committee members. This arrangement provided security to Woodway for its fees and also assisted in preserving the RRSP and RRIF status of the investors' original mortgage units.

[para45] By 1997, all four investor groups were faced with threats of foreclosure from the first mortgagees on their projects. IG3 and IG4 in turn were demanding payment on their second mortgages from IG1 and IG2. All groups were desperately in need of new monies to refinance the first mortgages and to provide extra working capital for their projects.

[para47] Umbarger was the principal of Dominion. He arranged for investments from 160 individuals, two of whom were also investors in IMF4 Co. While Dominion may have had the appearance of being IMF5 Co, the investments were made pursuant to the Mortgage Brokers Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 313, rather than the Securities Act. There was no offering memorandum or subscription agreements. As the principal of Dominion, Umbarger acted as a mortgage broker, in contrast to his role as Promoter of and owner in the IMF Group.

[para48] To avoid any conflict between his position in Dominion and his position in each of the four borrowing companies, Umbarger resigned as officer and director in each of the borrowing companies. This was followed by all four investor groups passing extraordinary resolutions to assume the management and control of their respective borrowing companies from the Promoters. Each of the groups also formed a committee from the members of their investor group to act on that group's behalf in the management of their borrowing company.

[para49] IG3 was the first investor group to assume management and control of IMF3 Co. In the spring of 1997, IG3 formed a committee that was given the authority to act on its behalf in the Westbank project and its interests in the other projects, except Castlegar. The committee also approved the IMF3 Co Shares Agreement.

[para50] In order to prevent foreclosure by the first mortgagee, the committee instructed Woodway to secure a new mortgage from Dominion to pay out the existing first mortgage and to provide some extra working capital. Dominion agreed to provide the new mortgage at an interest rate of 12% on the condition that its mortgage would take priority over the other mortgages. Dominion's loan was secured by a first mortgage over the Westbank lands.

[para51] IG3's committee was aware Dominion's loan would be costly but it also understood it had little choice in securing this financing if it wanted to avoid foreclosure. Before signing Dominion's mortgage, IG3 received independent legal advice.

[para52] In August, 1997, IG4 also formed a committee to represent the interests of its unitholders. The committee assumed the management and control of IMF4 Co and Ms. McDougall became a director. Initially, Ms. McDougall was an alternate member of the committee, but by September, 1998, she had become a full committee member. At her request, all of the documents and accounts relating to the IMF Group were delivered to her for review.

[para53] Shortly after IG4 formed a committee in August, 1997, IG1 and IG2 did the same. In September, 1997, they also formed committees which assumed the management and control of their respective borrowing companies. A term of IG1 and IG2's takeover agreements was that Woodway would receive the shares of IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co on the same terms as it received the shares of IMF3 Co. Woodway and two other unitholders became authorized signatories. As well, broad indemnity agreements were signed for the benefit of all directors, officers, shareholders, authorized signatories, advisors and committee members.

[para54] As with IG3, the IG1 and IG2 committees also decided to raise new monies through a mortgage with Dominion. Dominion advanced four loans that were secured by first mortgages over five condominiums in the Imperial Ridge project and one condominium in the Erinmoore project. The monies from Dominion's mortgages paid out the existing first mortgages, paid down some of the IG3 and IG4 second mortgages, and paid some of the creditors. Dominion's mortgages ranked in priority to the other mortgages. IG1 and IG2 received independent legal advice before entering into Dominion's mortgage.

[para55] The takeover agreements also involved DDAI. In September, 1997, Stringer resigned as an officer and director of DDAI. In November, 1997, all four committees approved the takeover of DDAI. The shares of DDAI that had been held by Stringer were transferred to Woodway on the same terms as the shares held by Woodway in the borrowing companies. Similar indemnities were also provided. After the takeover, DDAI replaced Valley as the nominee for IG4.

THE FINAL SETTLEMENT

[para56] By November, 1997, all four committees were demanding answers as to what had happened to their investments. They requested Woodway to provide a cash accounting that would identify the costs connected to the development and sale of the projects, and address what monies were received by the Promoters, their related companies and Woodway.

[para57] A detailed accounting was prepared by Woodway. Ms. McDougall, who by then was actively involved in reviewing the details of this investment scheme, took Woodway's accounting and created her own tables and graphs of the accounting. Both Woodway's accounting and Ms. McDougall's table and graphs were forwarded to all of the investors. The accounting formed the basis upon which the final settlement of all the investor groups' interests was reached.

[para58] The accounting showed Woodway had received in excess of $500,000 in fees with a further $190,000 owed to it. Woodway's debt has since been secured by a judgment against the Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill, Erinmoore and Westbank projects. Collinson and his related company Metro, and Umbarger and his related company Kenway, had received estimated costs and fees of approximately $3,380,000.

[para59] In April, 1998, one of the investors filed a complaint about the investment scheme with the R.C.M.P. In response, representatives of each committee signed a letter to the R.C.M.P. Commercial Crime Unit. The letter stated that the investors were considering a class action against the Promoters. It emphasized that Woodway and Dominion were an important part of the investors' efforts to maximize the assets of the IMF Group and had not caused any of the losses. It also confirmed that the IMF Group had been under the investors' direction and control for the past year. The letter authorized Rogers to discuss the affairs of the IMF Group with the R.C.M.P.

[para60] The final settlement was approved by all four committees on October 15, 1998. It involved completion of construction on the Erinmoore and Heritage Hill projects, the sale of condominiums at fire-sale prices, the pay down of the first mortgages, and payment of the creditors' and contractors' fees. The remaining unsold condominiums would be transferred to a new company and rented out for a period of time until the market changed. Ultimately, the plan was to simplify management of the remaining assets so that Woodway's expensive consulting expertise could be eliminated. DDAI and any IMF companies not bankrupt, would continue to be managed by volunteers from the investor groups.

[para61] The unsold condominiums in the Imperial Ridge and Heritage Hill projects were transferred to a new company, Rancher Investment Corp. ("Rancher"). The shares of Rancher were registered in Woodway's name for the benefit of the interests of the investors in those projects and to preserve the RRSP and RRIF status of the investments. With a clean credit rating, Rancher qualified to replace the existing expensive short-term mortgages, including Dominion's, with less expensive rental mortgages. C.I.B.C. was prepared to offer first mortgages on the rental units at 5.99% interest.

[para62] Compromise agreements were negotiated on the distribution of the equity in the various projects. IG1 and IG2 would give up their interest in the Castlegar projects and the net proceeds from Castlegar would be split 62.5% to IG4 and 37.5% to IG3, to be shared equally within each investor group. IG3 would receive all of the net proceeds from the Westbank project which would be shared equally within its investor group. The investors' interests in Rancher would be allocated 8.8% to IG1, 8.9% to IG2, 47% to IG3 and 35.3% to IG4. Within each investor group, the split of Rancher shares would be based on the amount of the unitholders' initial investment.

[para63] Discounts were negotiated with creditors, subtrades and suppliers, Dominion on its first mortgages, and Woodway and Metro on their contracts. Kenway had agreed to waive its fees. Enough cash from the net sale proceeds was to be set aside in order to permit Rancher to hold the rental condominiums for several years.

[para64] Miscellaneous assets of the IMF Group and DDAI such as the construction trailer and show suite furniture would be sold to pay any remaining bills and any surplus would be divided as agreed by the committees. IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co would be petitioned into bankruptcy.

[para65] Positions for the directors, officers and authorized signatories of Rancher and DDAI, and any of the remaining IMF companies not in bankruptcy, would be filled by volunteer unitholders or their appointees.

[para67] The final settlement was implemented and almost completed by December 24, 1998. The remaining assets of the IMF Group included real property, mortgages and some miscellaneous assets, together having a value of about $1.5 million. The IMF Group retained 4 condominiums in Imperial Ridge and one in Erinmoore. Rancher was the registered owner of 15 condominiums in Heritage Hill and 5 condominiums in Imperial Ridge, all of which were rented out. It had listed 10 of the Heritage Hill condominiums for sale along with the 5 Imperial Ridge condominiums.

[para69] Several committee members resigned in protest alleging the McDougall Group had no authority from the four committees to implement the freeze order. The four committees had only approved a litigation policy to examine the feasibility of commencing a class action against the Promoters. IG2 was opposed to the freeze order and does not want to participate in the proposed class action.

[para70] Ms. McDougall commenced the class action on February 4, 1999. At that time, she was still a director of IMF4 Co, a defendant in this action. On February 9, 1999, she resigned as a director of IMF4 Co and Umbarger was reinstated.

[para71] In her affidavit filed in support of the certification application, Ms. McDougall did not mention any of the settlement agreements or the changes they imposed. Instead, she deposed in paragraph 27 of her affidavit of April 9, 1999, that:

I am not aware of any conflict between my interests in respect to the common issues in this action and the interests of the other members of the proposed Class.

[para72] After the action was commenced, certificates of pending litigation were filed against the remaining unsold properties which included about 29 parcels of real property. Of these parcels, approximately 20 condominiums were located in the Imperial Ridge and Heritage Hill projects in Vernon and were registered to Rancher.

[para73] The filing of the certificates of pending litigation prevented some condominium sales from completing. Several sales were lost. A prospective purchaser for the last Erinmoore condominium has since filed suit against IMF2 Co for failing to complete the sale.

[para74] As a result of the freeze order, Dominion has resiled from its agreement to accept a discount of about $60,000 on the monies it was owed, as well as the advancing of about $30,000 in new cash. Foreclosure proceedings on all of its mortgages are now in progress. There appears to be no equity in the Westbank and Erinmoore projects. Woodway has also resiled from its agreement to accept a discount on its judgment for about $200,000 which is registered against the properties. However, as an unsecured creditor, it ranks well behind the first and second mortgagees.

[para75] After the class action was commenced, Rogers wrote a highly critical and threatening letter to the investors in the IMF Group. In it he stated the class action had been commenced contrary to his advice and the recommendations of the litigation committee. He also threatened a large countersuit which he said would make every person who joined the class action jointly and severally liable for significant damages and the legal costs of the action.

[para76] Since then, third party proceedings have been taken against the McDougall group and Valley, and a counterclaim has been filed against Ms. McDougall by the IMF Group and DDAI, all of which are now controlled by Woodway.

[para77] Ms. McDougall has prepared a very basic plan in support of the certification application. The plan does not address how the common issues in the class action would be advanced. If the application is granted and a judicial trustee appointed, Ms. McDougall proposes to request a contribution of 1% of the principal sum invested by each investor in order to secure a forensic accounting by the judicial trustee. She also proposes that the funds and assets recovered by the judicial trustee be distributed in proportion to the amount of each investor's principal investment.

SUBMISSIONS IN SUPPORT OF CERTIFICATION

[para78] The most compelling submission advanced in support of certification is the significant financial burden an individual investor will have to incur in order to pursue an action. As a class, the investors are able to spread the cost of the proceedings amongst all of the members. Economies of scale and access to the judicial system weigh heavily in favour of certification: Harrington v. Dow Corning Corp. (1996), 48 C.P.C. (3d) 28 (B.C.S.C.); Campbell v. Flexwatt Corp. (1997), 44 B.C.L.R. (3d) 343 (B.C.C.A.); Endean v. Canadian Red Cross Society (1997), 148 D.L.R. (4th) 158 (B.C.S.C.).

[para79] This concern is reflected in paragraph 7 of Ms. McDougall's affidavit sworn July 9, 1999, and filed December 14, 1999, where she deposed that if counsel for the class could not represent the McDougall group named in the third party proceedings because of a conflict, then the third parties have encouraged her to drop the class action.

[para80] Additionally, if a certification order is not granted, there will be no ancillary order appointing a judicial trustee to manage the assets. Rogers and Umbarger will continue to be in control of the realization of the assets. Any confidence the majority of the investors may have had in Rogers and Umbarger at one time, has long since disappeared.

SUBMISSIONS AGAINST CERTIFICATION

[para81] While all of the defendants oppose a certification order for different reasons, a common theme in their submissions is the inability of a class action to satisfactorily address the differing and often conflicting issues between the various defendants and investor groups. They submit the issues between the investor groups are significantly different because: (i) the investments were made at different times; (ii) there was different security given for the different investments; and, (iii) different settlements were reached with different investor groups.

[para82] The defendants submit a class action will not resolve any disputes between the parties in a manner that is fair not only to the plaintiffs but also to the defendants. In their view, the numerous defendants in this action reflects a "deep pockets" approach to litigation that may force settlements because of the very substantial legal costs that will be incurred by them. The plaintiffs in a class action are not exposed to the same costs. In support of their submission, the defendants cite the comments of Cumming J.A. in Campbell v. Flexwatt Corp. at paragraph 25:

Class proceedings are an efficient response to market demand only if they can resolve disputes fairly. Trial court judges must be free to make the new procedure work for plaintiffs and defendants.

[para83] Lastly, the defendants submit the essence of the plaintiffs' application is for an independent accounting. They state that Woodway has already provided this in great detail, at great cost and on the instructions of the committees. They submit the preferable procedure in which to resolve any of the outstanding issues between the various parties is through compulsory arbitration as required by the amended subscription agreements. Certification, in their view, would create an unmanageable action that would not advance any common issues, if there are any, because of the predominance of individual issues.

DISCUSSION

[para84] The purpose of a class action is to provide a procedural method for advancing common issues of fact or law between a group of claimants in an action, and one or more defendants. Class proceedings legislation does not create any new causes of action.

[para85] Section 1 of the Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50, (the Act") defines common issues as:

- (a) common but not necessarily identical issues of fact, or
- (b) common but not necessarily identical issues of law that arise from common but not necessarily identical facts.

[para86] The essence of a class action is the commonality of the issues between the plaintiffs and one or more of the defendants. A resolution of the common issues does not have to be determinative of liability or supportive of the relief sought. It need not produce the same result for all members of the class. It must, however, advance the litigation forward. If it does not, then certification is inappropriate.

[para87] Equally important is the requirement that a class action be the preferable procedure to resolve the common issues. In determining if this requirement has been met, the court must consider whether common issues predominate over individual issues. A resolution of the common issues may still require further litigation to deal with individual issues. However, if resolution of the common issues will only assist a few members, then the issues will not be common to the majority of members and the preferred procedure will not be a class action.

The legislation

[para88] Section 4 of the Class Proceedings Act lists the five requirements for certification:

4(1) The court must certify a proceeding as a class proceeding on an application under section 2 or 3 if all of the following requirements are met:

- (a) the pleadings disclose a cause of action;
- (b) there is an identifiable class of 2 or more persons;
- (c) the claims of the class members raise common issues, whether or not those common issues predominate over issues affecting only individual members;
- (d) a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the fair and efficient resolution of the common issues;
- (e) there is representative plaintiff who
 - (i) would fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class,
 - (ii) has produced a plan for the proceeding that sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the class and of notifying class members of the proceeding, and
 - (iii) does not have, on the common issues, an interest that is in conflict with the interests of other class members.

(2) In determining whether a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the fair and efficient resolution of the common issues, the court must consider all relevant matters including the following:

- (a) whether questions of fact or law common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members;
- (b) whether a significant number of the members of the class have a valid interest in individually controlling the prosecution of separate actions;
- (c) whether the class proceeding would involve claims that are or have been the subject of any other proceedings;
- (d) whether other means of resolving the claims are less practical or less efficient;
- (e) whether the administration of the class proceeding would create greater difficulties than those likely to be experienced if relief were sought by other means.

[para89] All five requirements listed in s. 4(1) of the Act must be satisfied before certification of a class action will be granted. If all five are satisfied, then the court must certify the action.

[para90] Section 5(5) sets out the requirements for a person filing an affidavit in support of a certification application:

A person filing an affidavit under subsection (2) or (4) must

- (a) set out in the affidavit the material facts on which the person intends to rely at the hearing of the application,
- (b) swear that the person knows of no fact material to the application that has not been disclosed in the person's affidavit or in any affidavits previously filed in the proceeding, and
- (c) provide the person's best information on the number of members in the proposed class.

[para91] Section 6 permits the court to certify a subclass separately from the main class if it is of the view that the protection of the interests of the subclass requires that they be separately represented.

[para92] Section 7 provides that:

The court must not refuse to certify a proceeding as a class proceeding merely because of one or more of the following:

- (a) the relief claimed includes a claim for damages that would require individual assessment after determination of the common issues;
- (b) the relief claimed relates to separate contracts involving different class members;
- (c) different remedies are sought for different class members;
- (d) the number of class members or the identity of each class member is not known;
- (e) the class includes a subclass whose members have claims that raise common issues not shared by all class members.

[para93] For the reasons I will provide below, I am of the view the plaintiffs have not met at least four of the mandatory requirements in s. 4(1) of the Act to permit certification of this action.

ANALYSIS

1. The pleadings disclose a cause of action

[para94] This action involves the rights and obligations of parties to a contract, some of whom may have trust obligations by reason of their investment of other people's monies. It also involves a duty of care between the plaintiffs and defendants as set out in the first stage of the "two-step test" enunciated by Lord Wilberforce in Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1977] 2 All E.R. 492 (H.L.). In the present case there was a "sufficient relationship of proximity or neighbourhood" such that, in the reasonable contemplation of the defendants, carelessness on their part might be likely to cause damage to the plaintiffs. Therefore, a prima facie duty of care arises.

[para95] For the purposes of a certification application, the facts alleged in the Statement of Claim are assumed to be true provided the defendants do not establish they are "patently ridiculous or incapable of proof" or that it is "plain and obvious" that the claims could not succeed: Peppiatt v. Nicol (1993), 16 O.R. 133 (Ont. G.D.) at 140; Endean v. Canadian Red Cross Society (1997), 148 D.L.R. (4th) 158 (B.C.S.C.). Without determining the merits, the court must decide if there is sufficient evidence of the plaintiffs' claims to raise triable issues.

[para96] In determining if the pleadings disclose a cause of action under s. 4(1), the court must decide on the evidence before it whether the plaintiffs' claims are "ridiculous or incapable of proof" or "could not succeed"? The difficulty in this case, in assessing whether that requirement has been met, is identifying what is said to constitute the defendants' acts of alleged negligence, breach of fiduciary duty or trust, and breach of contract. The pleadings are very general and the extensive affidavit material filed in support of the certification application does not disclose any particulars of the alleged acts that might be said to give rise to the various causes of action. This is so despite the fact Ms. McDougall has had all of the relevant documents in her possession since September of 1998. This Court is left to speculate on how the defendants' acts lead to the causes of action claimed by the plaintiffs.

[para97] In Bittner v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp. (1997), 43 B.C.L.R. (3d) 324 (B.C.S.C.), Kirkpatrick J., at paragraph 23, briefly commented on the effect of a paucity of evidence to support a certification application in a products liability action:

Section 5(6) of the Act allows the court to adjourn the application to permit further evidence. The scarcity of evidence makes more difficult the determination of certification because the court is left to speculate as to the common and individual issues which may arise in the action. However, because I hold the view that certification is not appropriate for other reasons, it is not necessary to dismiss the application on this ground.

[para98] In the absence of any particulars about the defendants alleged negligence, breach of trust or fiduciary duty and breach of contract the plaintiffs' claims cannot be identified.

[para99] The plaintiffs submit the defendants had a duty of care to the investors arising from the nature of their relationship, which they submit was a trust and or fiduciary relationship. They also submit the defendants had a duty of care arising from the wording of the agreements signed with the investors. Specifically, they allege the defendants breached their duties and or contract by: (i) failing to provide realizable security; (ii) providing a minimal return of less than 20% of the principal amount invested by the members; (iii) inappropriately distributing funds and transferring of assets; (iv) receiving unauthorized financial gain and profit; (v) providing an incomplete accounting; and, (vi) intermingling the funds so that they cannot be traced.

[para100] Whether or not these claims arise in negligence, trust or contract, it seems clear from the wording of the offering memoranda that at least some of these allegations were authorized by the contracts signed by the unitholders. For example, the offering memoranda for IMF3 Co and IMF4 Co authorizes distribution of their funds to other projects. There does not appear to be an allegation that the IMF1 Co or the IMF2 Co funds were distributed outside of their respective projects as provided by the terms of their offering memoranda. As well, the agreement of nominee ownership authorized the nominee to transfer assets on the written instructions of the officers and directors of the borrowing companies. There is no allegation that the nominee did not have that written authorization before transferring the assets. In summary, there is no evidence to support an allegation that any of the defendants acted outside the scope of their authority or contract or terms of the offering memoranda.

[para101] A cash accounting of the funds was requested and provided at the direction of the committees. There is no allegation the accounting was not prepared in accordance with the committees' instructions. Presumably, if there were concerns over the accounting provided, the committees would not have accepted it as the basis for final settlement. Also, there is no evidence from the accounting to support an allegation that monies were inappropriately diverted by some or all of the defendants.

[para102] Furthermore, the Statement of Claim does not claim a cause of action against all of the defendants. For example, there is no cause of action claimed against Dominion. It is not disputed that monies were solicited by the investor groups on the terms agreed to by the parties, and then applied by the investors to pay out the existing first mortgagees who were threatening foreclosure. The plaintiffs' only claim against Dominion is for an accounting of the funds it advanced. However, there is no independent cause of action for an accounting in the absence of a legal duty to account. There is no claim advanced that Dominion has such a duty. In any event, the plaintiffs already have the authority under the subscription agreements to obtain an independent accounting. Alternatively, they can request an accounting from Dominion through the less costly forum of the foreclosure proceedings.

[para103] There is also no evidence to support a cause of action against Stringer or Messer, Stringer. There is no evidence that these defendants provided notarial or nominee services. The only services provided by Stringer were through DDAI as a nominee. Furthermore, Stringer's notarial firm was never involved in DDAI nor did it provide notarial services. Valley was also a nominee for IMF4 Co, but no claims are made against it for the nominee services it provided.

[para105] It is "plain and obvious" the claims against Dominion, Stringer, and Messer, Stringer cannot succeed as there is no independent cause of action against Dominion and there is no evidence to support a cause of action against Stringer personally, and Messer, Stringer corporately. I have also concluded that in the absence of further particulars of alleged misconduct against the remaining defendants, it is impossible to identify a cause of action against the defendants in negligence, breach of trust, fiduciary duty or breach of contract let alone determine if the claims could be proved.

[para106] Although, prima facie, a contract, trust obligation and duty of care existed between the defendants and the plaintiffs, that alone does not meet the requirements of s. 4(1) that a cause of action be disclosed. There is no satisfactory evidentiary basis to suggest how the alleged breaches might have occurred. Without more than bare assertions of the alleged breaches, there is insufficient evidence to support the plaintiffs' claims. As such, it must be concluded that the plaintiffs would not succeed, and therefore, the requirement in s. 4(1) has not been met.

2. There must be an identifiable class of two or more persons

[para107] Although many of the plaintiffs registered their mortgage units in RRSP's or RRIF's, individually they still remain an identifiable class. The RRSPs and RRIFs are merely the legal trustees for the class, while the individuals remain the beneficial owners of the units. In the event of certification, it is acknowledged that the six non-resident investors would have to be certified as a separate class from the resident investors.

3. The claims of the class members must raise common issues

[para108] Again, because of the lack of particulars provided, it is difficult to identify what, if any, common issues exist between the plaintiffs and all or some of the defendants. The failure to particularize the alleged misconduct of the various defendants results in speculation as to what the common issues are and what the individual issues are between the defendants. In these circumstances it becomes impossible to identify the triable common issues.

[para109] Assuming common issues of fact or law could be identified, the court must then ascertain if they raise triable issues which if resolved would advance the litigation in the interests of the class.

[para110] The Statement of Claim and draft order attached to the plaintiffs' notice of motion identifies the following common issues which the plaintiffs submit predominate over any issues affecting the individual members of the class:

1. Determination as to the obligations of the defendants with respect to the funds received from the plaintiffs and the nominees;
2. The nature of the defendants obligations to the to the plaintiffs with respect to the funds received;
3. Whether there has been a breach of the duties and obligations of the defendants to the plaintiffs;
4. An accounting for the expenditure of the funds received by the defendants;
5. A tracing of the funds;
6. Realization on and preservation of assets and funds of the IMF Group, Dominion and Rancher, on behalf of the plaintiffs;
7. A determination of members of the class's entitlement to the remaining funds and assets of the IMF Group, Dominion and Rancher;
8. A determination of an aggregate amount of damages for the class in the event of a finding of liability against the defendants.

[para111] Leaving aside the issue of damages, these proposed common issues could be reduced to the following two questions:

1. Did the defendants breach their duties to the plaintiffs under the terms of the subscribing and nominee agreements or at common law?
2. Should there be an independent accounting, tracing and orderly realization of the remaining assets?

[para113] The former question is very broad and also ignores the settlement agreements and how those agreements changed the nature of the individuals' investments. As well, the settlements changed the forum in which disputes between the parties could be resolved. This issue goes to the very jurisdiction of this court to hear this action. Not surprisingly, the defendants submit that this dispute should be resolved through commercial arbitration and not by litigation.

[para115] Even if the settlement agreements are ignored, there are a number of conflicts between the investor groups that affect the commonality of any proposed triable issue. There are also a number of individual issues including reliance and causation that arise from the allegations of misrepresentation by the Promoters in the offering memoranda and by Stringer in the nominee agreements, as well as any alleged oral misrepresentations by these defendants outside the scope of the agreements.

[para116] There are several identifiable conflicts between the investor groups. Different market conditions existed when each of the four funds were created. The majority of funds for IMF4 Co were raised after the market changed in the spring of 1996. IMF4 Co raised money for investment in six pre-approved projects and other projects to be developed over a five year period. IMF1 Co raised money for investment in the Imperial Ridge development that was expected to complete within a one year period. The maturity date for IG1's investments was one year from the date the investment was made. The maturity date for IG2's investments was one year from when the last investment was made. IG1, IG2 and IG3 were anticipating an effective rate of return of 24%. IG4 was anticipating an effective rate of return of 18%. The representation in the offering memorandum for IMF4 Co had changed with the downward shift in the market which had become evident by that time.

[para117] Secondly, IG3 and IG4 loaned monies to IMF1 Co and IMF2 Co and in that manner became unitholders in IG1 and IG2. The security for IG3's and IG4's interests as unitholders in IG1 and IG2, was different than the security for their respective units in IG3 and IG4. There is also a conflict between first in first out repayment provision for the investors of IG1 and IG3, and equal basis repayment provisions for the investors in IG2 and IG4.

[para118] The settlement agreements raised further conflicts between IG1, IG2 and IG3 who became owners and borrowers for their projects and IG4 who remained a lender and was never an owner of the Castlegar project. Furthermore, IG3 has a conflict within its group as it is not only an owner and borrower in the Westbank project, but it is also a unitholder and lender in the Imperial Ridge, Heritage Hill and Erinmoore projects. IG2 continues to be opposed to the freeze order and does not want to participate in the class action.

[para120] The compulsory arbitration clauses of the settlement agreements, however, do not affect all of the defendants. Creditors such as Woodway, Metro and Kenway, who are not parties to the subscription agreements, may only commence or have an action commenced against them through the nominee.

[para121] The Statements of Defence filed on behalf of almost all of the defendants also raise claims of contributory negligence. Such claims necessitate an examination of the following individual issues: (i) an investor's knowledge of the representations in the offering memorandum and the signed agreements, as well as any representations outside the documents; and, (ii) the extent to which those representations may have alerted the individual investor to the nature and risks associated with the investment, as well as to the costs of developing the projects and realizing on the investment. The plaintiffs' claim of negligence combined with the defendants' claim of contributory negligence would require an examination of individual issues of reliance and causation that would predominate over any common issues of the class. Such an examination would not be conducive to a class action.

[para122] Due to the difficulty in identifying the common issues, the numerous conflicts between the investor groups both before and after the settlements, and the predominant number of individual issues raised by the pleadings, I have concluded there are no identifiable common issues, that if resolved, would advance the litigation in the interests of the class.

4. The class proceeding must be the preferable procedure for the resolution of the common issues.

[para123] In comparing the predominancy requirement in the Act, with that of the Ontario legislation, Esson J. (as he then was), made the following comments in Tiemstra v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia (1996), 49 C.P.C. (3d) 139 at paragraph 14, aff'd (1997), 12 C.P.C. (4th) 197 (B.C.C.A.):

But by requiring predominancy and four other matters to be considered in relation to the important question of "preferable procedure," it is more restrictive than the Ontario Act. Although the other four sub-sections of s. 4(2) may be less significant in this regard, they all tend in some degree to restrict the circumstances in which certification should be granted.

[para124] Although the Ontario legislation does not have a predominancy provision, in Abdool v. Anaheim Management Ltd. (1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 39, Montgomery J., at first instance stated at 51:

[The Act] was not intended to be used in circumstances where the individual issues to be determined predominate those issues common to the proposed class.

[para125] On appeal to the Ontario Divisional Court, (1995), 121 D.L.R. (4th) 496, Justice Montgomery's refusal to certify the proceedings was upheld on the basis that the plaintiffs had failed to meet the onus of establishing that a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for resolution of common issues. At pages 503 - 504, O'Brien J. comments:

I do not accept the submission that any complex, multiple-party lawsuit is entitled to certification merely because that is the "preferable procedure" for resolving common issues which may be involved in the litigation.

In my view, some consideration must be given to individual issues involved in the litigation, the purposes of the Act, and the rights of the parties seeking, and opposing certification.

While access to the courts is obviously a worthwhile aim of the Act, it is to be noted the law reform report commented on the concern that frivolous claims might be advanced and defendants "blackmailed" into settling them because of potential legal costs.

Under the Act, once certification is granted, class plaintiffs face little, if any, exposure to legal costs. Contingency fees are permitted for plaintiffs' counsel and s. 31 of the Act provides for the court to exercise its discretion regarding costs, and indicates class members are not liable for those costs except with respect to the determination of their own individual interests.

The relative weight to be given common and individual issues is a vexing matter.

[para126] In my view, these comments are apposite to this application.

[para127] The advantage of the economies of scale in certifying this action, in my view, are far outweighed by the unmanageability of such an action for many of the reasons already stated: the conflicts between the plaintiffs, the number of individual issues, the third party claims, the arbitration provisions of the settlement agreements, the requirements under the nominee agreement for commencing an action and the forum offered by the foreclosure proceedings for another accounting.

5. The adequacy of the representative plaintiff

[para128] The court must be satisfied that the proposed representative plaintiff will not only meet her interests, but also the interests of the class. It is difficult to see how a representative plaintiff who is also a third party can fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class. Furthermore, Ms. McDougall, as a director of IMF4 Co, was in a position of conflict at the time the action against IMF4 Co was commenced. The effect of the settlements with IG1, IG2 and IG3 also present conflicts in the resolution of the interests of the class. Lastly, it is difficult to see how the plan submitted by Ms. McDougall will advance the litigation on behalf of the class. It is my view that Ms. McDougall would not be an appropriate representative plaintiff in these proceedings.

CONCLUSION

[para129] For the reasons stated, I have concluded that four of the five requirements for certification have not been met by the plaintiffs. I am of the view that to certify this action as it now stands, in the words of Esson C.J. in Tiemstra, would be to create a "monster of litigation". The litigation would see no end in sight, it has little if any chance of success based on the existing evidence before the court, and it could financially destroy many of the defendants. Such an action would not be a fair resolution of the dispute for both the plaintiffs and the defendants.

[para130] The plaintiffs are not left without any remedy to pursue their concerns. Commercial arbitration is available, an accounting in the foreclosure actions will occur, the committees may decide to pursue their own independent accounting, the nominee may be instructed to take certain actions, or individuals might pursue an action on a test basis. Each of these options offer the plaintiffs an examination of the merits of their claims at a cost that is more balanced for all the parties involved.

[para132] Subject to submissions, in all of the circumstances, I am of the view that each party should bear their own costs.

Tin Amara Resorts v. British Columbia (Registrar of Homeowner Protection Office)

Between Tin Amara Resorts and Hirsch McLeod Construction Ltd., petitioners, and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia as represented by the Registrar of the Homeowner Protection Office, respondents

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia E.R.A. Edwards J. Heard: January 4, 2001. Judgment: January 12, 2001. (26 paras.)

Counsel: John van Driesum, for the petitioners. Robert G. Kuhn and Kevin L. Boonstra, for the respondents.

[para1] E.R.A. EDWARDS J.:-- The petitioners apply under Rule 10(1)(b) for a declaration that the Homeowner Protection Act, S.B.C. 1998 Ch. 31 ["the Act"] and the Homeowner Protection Act Regulation ["the Regulation"] do not apply to condominium units ["the units"] the petitioners have built and propose to build at Parksville, on the basis "that the units are not 'residential' within the meaning of the Act".

[para5] If the Act applies to the units, there will be fees and levies payable totalling $53,300 for the 68 proposed units. The constructor of the units will have to be licensed under the Act. The units will have to be covered by "home warranty insurance", akin to a performance bond, purchased from a third party at a cost estimated by counsel at $300 per unit. This affords purchasers and subsequent owners protection against certain structural defects for up to 10 years. Units subject to the Act are also covered by a statutory warranty under s. 23 of the Act.

"new home" means a building, or portion of a building, that is newly constructed and intended for residential occupancy, and includes

- (a) a self-contained dwelling unit that is
 - (i) detached, or
 - (ii) attached to one or more self-contained dwelling units,
- (b) a building having 2 or more self-contained dwelling units under one ownership,
- (c) common property, common facilities and other assets of a strata corporation, and
- (d) any building or portion of a building of a class prescribed by the regulations as a new home to which this Act applies, but does not include a manufactured home unless otherwise prescribed;

[para7] Section 32 of the Act gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council powers to make regulations. These include:

32 (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations referred to in section 41 of the Interpretation Act.

(2) Without limiting subsection (1), the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make the following regulations:

(a) defining, for the purpose of paragraph (d) the definition of "new home" in section 1, a class of buildings or portion of a building, including a manufactured home, as a new home to which this Act applies;

(f) exempting

(ii) a building, a class of buildings, a portion of a building or the common property, common facilities and other assets of a strata corporation from the definition of "new home" in section 1.

(l) defining, for the purpose of this Act or the regulations, any word or expression not defined in this Act;

[para8] Pursuant to s. 32(2)(l) the following definition of "dwelling unit" appears in the Regulation:

"dwelling unit" means a class of new home which is a building, or a portion of a building, that

- (a) is newly constructed,
- (b) is intended for residential occupancy,
- (c) is a single, self-contained residence usually containing cooking, eating, living, sleeping and sanitary facilities, and
- (d) may contain a secondary suite if permitted by local bylaws;

[para9] Section 32 of the Act provides a word undefined by the Act may be defined for purposes of "this Act or Regulation" [my emphasis] by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. This definition is specifically stated in the opening words of s. 1 of the Regulation to apply "in this regulation". In light of the disjunctive regulation-making power in s. 32(2)(1), I infer the Lieutenant Governor in Council chose not to define "dwelling unit" for purposes of the Act.

[para11] The petitioners' position is that since the units are neither zoned nor intended for residential occupancy by their owners, they are not "new homes" as defined by the Act.

[para12] The respondent's position is that "residential occupancy" refers to the type of building or its use and not the intention or conduct of an owner or occupier and since the units provide "cooking, eating, living, sleeping and sanitary facilities" for use by temporary occupants they are intended for residential occupancy, as distinguished from, say, commercial or industrial use or occupancy. I find the units are residential because they provide residential type accommodation. Who occupies them and for how long are considerations which do not alter that fact.

2 (1) The following classes of new homes, other than new homes that are strata titled, are exempt from the definition of "new home" in section 1 of the Act:

- (a) hotels and motels;
- (b) dormitories;
- (c) care facilities;
- (d) floating homes.

[para14] "Hotel" and "motel" are not defined by the Act or the Regulation.

[para16] The exemption, as worded, does not extend to hotels and motels which are strata titled, as the units in this case are. This indicates the Lieutenant Governor in Council did not intend to exempt all hotels and motels but only those which are not strata titled. In other words, the Lieutenant Governor in Council considered that strata titled hotels and motels were "new homes" as defined by the Act and ought to be covered by the Act notwithstanding the exemption of hotels and motels which are not strata titled.

[para18] Counsel for the petitioners did not accept a suggestion from the Court that the units were a part of a hotel, no doubt because, if so characterized, they would not be exempt under s. 2(1) of the Regulation. Nevertheless, the petitioners' whole submission is based on the proposition that the units are intended to provide transient "resort accommodation". From the perspectives of management of the units and their use by customers "resort accommodation" is the same as hotel or motel accommodation.

[para20] The petitioners' counsel made the point that the Lieutenant Governor in Council has, under s. 32(2)(1) of the Act, regulation-making power to define "new home" or "residential occupancy" for the purpose of the Act so as to expressly include buildings like the units which are, to use his preferred terminology, used for "resort accommodation".

[para22] I make the following findings. "New home", as defined by the Act, includes a building used for "residential occupancy" which may include transient occupancy such as hotel and motel use. The Lieutenant Governor in Council was correct in concluding that hotel and motel buildings provide "residential occupancy", in light of the definition of that term in the Dictionary of Canadian Law (Dukelow & Nuse, 1991):

The occupancy or use of a building or part thereof by persons for whom sleeping accommodation is provided but who are not harboured or detained to receive medical care or treatment or are not involuntarily detained.

[para23] The units provide essentially the same accommodation as a hotel or motel, although they are not so classified under the zoning bylaw and may not be so advertised to the public. The units are not, however, exempt from the Act pursuant to s. 2(1) of the Regulation, because they are strata titled.

[para25] I am not persuaded by this argument. The units are intended by any one who has an interest in them, be it the developer, owners, municipal councillors or rental customers to provide the latter with a place of transient or temporary "residential occupancy", (including sleeping accommodation). The units therefore come within the definition of that phrase cited in paragraph 22 above.

[para26] The petitioners' application is dismissed. Since it was prompted by the ambiguous wording of the Act and the argument advanced by the petitioners was not spurious, I make no award of costs.

CORRIGENDUM

Released: January 26, 2001

[1] My Reasons for Judgment dated January 12, 2001, are amended by deleting paragraph 24 thereof, and adding the following paragraphs to be numbered 24, 25, and 26.

[24] The difficulty in this case stems from the ambiguity arising from the use of the passive voice in the phrase "intended for residential occupancy" in the definition of "new home" in s. 1 of the Act. Essentially, the petitioners' argument is that since neither the developer, owners or Parksville municipal councillors intend the units to be used as permanent residences or as a hotel or motel they are not intended for residential occupancy.

[25] I am not persuaded by this argument. The units are intended by any one who has an interest in them, be it the developer, owners, municipal councillors or rental customers to provide the latter with a place of transient or temporary "residential occupancy", (including sleeping accommodation). The units therefore come within the definition of that phrase cited in paragraph 22 above.

[26] The petitioners' application is dismissed. Since it was prompted by the ambiguous wording of the Act and the argument advanced by the petitioners was not spurious, I make no award of costs.

Sask v. Brooke

Between Shirley Sask, plaintiff, and Michael Brooke and Ursula Wenzel, defendants

New Westminster Registry No. S050062

British Columbia Supreme Court New Westminster, British Columbia Collver J. Heard: November 3, 2000. Judgment: December 27, 2000. (25 paras.)

Counsel: Brian L. Gibbard, for the plaintiff. Christopher R. Bacon, for the defendants.

[para1] COLLVER J.:-- On February 24 1997, Shirley Sask paid $133,000 for a condominium in Langley, but because her unit and others in the complex leak, the assessed value of her unit has plummeted to $22,200. She also faces an assessment of more than $60,000 as her share of the estimated costs of repairs to the entire complex.

[para2] Although the condominium owners have sued the builder, alleging defects in construction, Shirley Sask has commenced this action against Michael Brooke and Ursula Wenzel, who sold her unit #206. She alleges that she was induced to purchase by the false or negligent representations made in the sellers' "property condition disclosure statement".

[para3] In this summary trial application, counsel for the parties cannot agree on either the appropriateness of the summary trial process or the issues raised by the pleadings. However, I believe the following questions must be answered:

1. Did Michael Brooke and Ursula Wenzel misrepresent the condition of their condominium at the time of sale?
2. Was Shirley Sask induced to purchase the condominium by those misrepresentations?
3. What damages has Shirley Sask suffered?

[para4] Particulars of the parties' transaction are set out in what appears to be a standard Fraser Valley Real Estate Board "contract of purchase and sale" form, with addenda containing references to the purchaser's obtaining of financing, perusal of strata council minutes and, most important, the sellers' statement concerning the condition of the property.

[para5] The disclosure statement sets out questions under the following categories: "General"; "Structural"; "Strata Unit"; "Additional comments and/or explanations". Answers are to be checked off as either "Yes", "No", "Do not know" or, "Does not apply". Mr. Brooke and Ms. Wenzel answered "Yes" or "No" to all questions, ignoring "Do not know" or "Does not apply".

[para6] Under "General", the sellers answered "Yes" to:

- A. Are the premises connected to a public sewer system?
- B. Are the premises connected to a public water system?

They then answered "No" to:

- C. Are the premises connected to a private or a community water system?
- D. Are you aware of any problems re: quantity or quality of well water?
- E. Are you aware of any problems with the septic system?
- F. Do the premises contain unauthorized accommodation?
- G. Are you aware of any encroachments, unregistered easements or unregistered rights of way?
- H. Are you aware of, or have you been charged any local improvement levies/charges?
- I. Have you received any other notice or claim affecting the property from any person or public body?

[para7] Under "Structural", the sellers answered "Yes" to questions about the presence of insulation in ceilings and exterior walls, and "No" to questions concerning the use of asbestos or urea formaldehyde insulation. After confirming that inspection and occupancy permits had been obtained and that wood stove or fireplace installations had been approved, the sellers answered "No" to the following questions:

- G. Are you aware of any additions or alterations made without a required permit?
- H. Are you aware of any structural problems with the premises or other buildings on the property?

[para8] The sellers also answered "No" to questions about any problems with the electrical or plumbing systems.

[para9] With respect to the third and fourth of the mentioned categories ("Strata Unit" and "Additional Comments"), the questions and answers concern special assessments, strata council policies and by-laws, and restrictions on pets, children, or rentals, none of which touch upon matters pertinent to Ms. Sask's claim.

[para10] The disclosure statement's preamble and conclusion are also important. The document begins as follows:

"The following is a statement made by the sellers concerning the condition of the property or strata unit located at #206 - 20680 - 56 Ave., Langley B.C.

THE SELLERS ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE ACCURACY OF THE ANSWERS ON THIS DISCLOSURE STATEMENT AND WHERE UNCERTAIN SHOULD REPLY "DO NOT KNOW". THIS DISCLOSURE STATEMENT CONSTITUTES A REPRESENTATION UNDER ANY CONTRACT OF PURCHASE AND SALE IF SO AGREED IN WRITING BY THE SELLERS AND BUYERS."

After the questions and answers I have listed, the following appears immediately above the sellers' signatures:

"The sellers state that the above information is true, based on the sellers' current actual knowledge as of the above date. Any important changes to this information made known to the sellers will be disclosed by sellers to buyers prior to closing. The sellers acknowledge receipt of a copy of this disclosure statement and agree that a copy may be given to prospective buyers."

Immediately above the space for the buyer's signature, the following appears:

"The buyers acknowledge that they have received and read a signed copy of this disclosure statement from the sellers or the sellers' agent on the 24th day of February, 1997. The prudent buyers will use this disclosure statement as the starting point for their own inquiries. The buyers are urged to carefully inspect the property and, if desired, to have the property inspected by an inspection service of their choice."

[para11] Shirley Sask deposes that she relied on the statement to disclose problems of which the vendors were aware with respect to "the building and the suite" (my emphasis) because she was also buying an interest in the common property and there were provisions under the "General" and "Structural" categories of questions dealing with connection to public water and sewers as well as other matters "which would apply to the building more than the suite" (again, my emphasis).

[para12] However, Michael Brooke deposes that the disclosure statement pertained only to unit #206, and that he did not intend Shirley Sask to treat the document as applying to the entire complex. Indeed, he suggested that that would be an unreasonable interpretation of the document, which he described as "a generic form for use by vendors of strata units, single family dwellings, farms, or bare land".

[para14] Since problems concerning the entire complex were obviously important at the time of the purchase, one would expect a prudent purchaser to inquire about the history of expenditures for maintenance of common areas such as the roof, exterior, sidewalks, sewers, heating, electrical and plumbing systems, and other items mentioned in the sellers' disclosure statement. In that regard, a copy of the disclosure statement, dated February 17, 1997, was given to Shirley Sask before she signed the contract of purchase and sale on February 24th, and the sale was subject to Ms. Sask "perusing & approving" the strata council's minutes, bylaws, and financial statements.

[para15] Michael Brooke was both chair of the strata council and a member of its building committee prior to the transaction, and had chaired meetings held on July 17, August 21, October 16 and November 20, 1996, and January 15, 1997. He conceded at his examination for discovery that he was the person to whom problems with the building were referred, but deposes that at the time of the sale to Ms. Sask he was not aware of any structural problems with unit #206 or the surrounding buildings in the complex apart from the deck at unit #311 (which he claimed Ms. Sask had inspected) and "various leaks which had been reported in the strata council minutes".

[para16] Minutes of the meetings of October 16 and November 20, 1996 and January 15, 1997 refer to water leaks affecting units other than unit #206, and Michael Brooke deposes that he did not believe that those problems were serious or would require repair "beyond the strata council's designated budget for maintenance and repair". He added:

"7. Prior to the summer of 1996, there had been leaks in various units within the Cassola Court condominium complex, including the Premises [unit #206], which necessitated the replacement of my carpet. However, in May, 1996 the strata council for Cassola Court resolved to fix the leaking problems throughout the complex 'once and for all' and agreed to a special assessment from owners totalling $33,000.00 and a withdrawal from a contingency reserve fund of $27,000.00 in order to pay for the application of an elastomeric coating for the entire building."

"8. I believed that the elastomeric coating had solved most of the water leak problems throughout the Cassola Court condominium complex, apart from continuing leaks around windows and miscellaneous leaks, as opposed to leaks that came straight through the exterior stucco prior to the summer of 1996. The Premises [unit #206] did not have any further leaks after the summer of 1996."

[para17] At his examination for discovery, Michael Brooke was asked about replacement of his living room carpet in the fall of 1996, but attributed the replacement to a water leak that had occurred the previous year. He said that the problem was not reported in the disclosure statement because the leak had been repaired.

[para18] With respect to water leaks in unit #205, next door, Mr. Brooke conceded in his examination for discovery that elastomeric coating of the exterior of the complex had not solved his neighbour's water leakage problems through the fall of 1996 and into 1997 (strata council minutes of October 16, 1996 refer to the problems in unit #205). Accordingly, counsel for Shirley Sask cites Zaenker v. Kirk, [1999] B.C.J. No. 3033 (20 December 1999), Kamloops No. 24348 (B.C.S.C.), in submitting that, while the disclosure statement does not constitute a warranty, it contains positive representations amounting to negligent misrepresentations, and that because the sellers knew that Shirley Sask would rely upon those representations, they give rise to a claim for damages.

[para19] Counsel for the sellers submits that Ms. Sask has not proved reliance upon the disclosure statement in isolation from the strata council minutes which were provided to her at the time of sale. He further submits that Ms. Sask has failed to prove that the sellers intended to mislead her in any way, particularly when the disclosure statement is read in conjunction with the strata council minutes.

[para20] I believe the sellers' position is correct.

[para21] The tort of negligent misrepresentation is now an established principle of Canadian law: Queen v. Cognos Inc. (1993), 99 D.L.R.(4th) 626 (S.C.C.). Five requirements must be met:

- (1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee;
- (2) the representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading;
- (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making said misrepresentation;
- (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on the said negligent misrepresentation;
- (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

[para22] In this case, the first three elements arguably support Shirley Sask's claim since the sellers obviously owed Shirley Sask a special duty of care with respect to the disclosure of patent defects that were within their knowledge, and if the representations contained in the property condition disclosure statement can reasonably be interpreted as applying to the entire condominium complex their effect is to mislead.

[para23] However, whether or not the sellers were negligent in purporting to confine their representations to the condition of their own unit is not, in my view, determinative of this claim. In light of their concurrent provision of minutes from strata council meetings where leakage problems were discussed, the sellers' disclosure obligations were fulfilled in a manner that should have alerted a prudent purchaser to the need to make further inquiries.

[para24] In my view, the fourth requirement of the mentioned test in Queen v. Cognos Inc. has not been met, as I cannot conclude that Shirley Sask acted in a reasonable manner by relying upon the property condition disclosure statement without reference to the information provided in the strata council minutes. The sale was subject to a condition precedent that contemplated perusal and approval of the strata council's minutes, bylaws and financial statements, and in complying with that condition the sellers were effectively providing Shirley Sask with the history of water leakage problems in the complex. In light of her opportunity to review those documents, Ms. Sask had the right to refuse to close the transaction as a consequence of that information, but chose not to do so.

[para25] On the whole of the evidence, it has not been proven that the sellers misrepresented the condition of unit #206, and the claim is dismissed, with costs to the defendants.

Baird, respondents

Victoria Registry No. 982480

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Master Patterson (In Chambers) Heard: October 12 and 19, 2000. Judgment: November 7, 2000. (20 paras.)

Counsel: Allan R. Tryon, for the Receiver Manager. Gregory T. Rhone, for the Owners, Strata Plan VIS4519.

[para1] MASTER PATTERSON:-- The Receiver Manager seeks a determination of the amount owing by him to The Owners, Strata Plan VIS4519, and an order that certain funds held in trust by solicitors be paid out to The Owners, Strata Plan VIS4519 ("the strata council") and any balance be paid to the Receiver Manager.

[para2] On August 7, 1998, John Laughlin McKinnon was appointed Receiver Manager by order of Master McCallum in the context of foreclosure proceedings. The respondent Montague House Development Corp. was the developer of a condominium in the Municipality of Saanich, which catered to senior citizens. One of the requirements of such a development is that the owners of the individual units pay, in addition to the usual assessments, an amount to cover costs of extra services provided, including, for example, meals. At the time of his appointment, the Receiver Manager took control of 41 units which were unsold, and since that time he has sold all but seven.

[para3] Various sales were presented to the court and were approved by court order. A term of some of the orders for sale since March 2000 was that certain funds be held in trust, pending resolution of the issues between the Receiver Manager and the strata council. It is the disposition of those funds which is in issue between the Receiver Manager and the strata council.

[para4] A chronology of events is as follows:

February 12, The Owners, Strata Plan VIS4519 purport to 1998 enter into a management contract with Tara Hytes Inc. The agreement is executed by Peter Dembicki on behalf of both parties.

August 7, The Receiver Manager is appointed by court 1998 order.

April 1, 1999 The Receiver Manager, on behalf of Strata Plan VIS4519 enters into a management contract with Kolyvan Residential Properties Services Ltd. ("Kolyvan"). The contract to be effective May 1, 1999 for a term of one year.

August 19, The first annual general meeting of the 1999 Owners, Strata Plan VIS4519. First strata council elected.

November 1, Kolyvan's contract is terminated by the 1999 strata council.

March 2000 Strata council refuses to provide necessary Form A to allow registration of transfer of strata lots from the Receiver Manager to the new purchaser, pursuant to court order, resulting in funds being set aside to secure the amounts allegedly owing.

March 16, President of the strata council informs 2000 the Receiver Manager that the strata council is owed $141,917.44.

[para5] In order to try and resolve this matter, both the strata council and the Receiver Manager have retained chartered accountants to review the accounts between the parties. The accountant retained by the strata council determined that the sum of $36,219.55 was owing by the Receiver Manager to the strata council as of July 31, 1999.

[para6] The accountant for the Receiver Manager accepting that figure makes certain deductions which have been agreed to by all parties, and adds in an amount paid by Kolyvan to the Receiver Manager. The calculation is as follows:

Balance owing from Receiver Manager according to Bloomfield Report $36,219.55

Credits:

Don Nolin Accounting $ 600.00 Dominion Insurance 3,835.01 Tara Hytes payment overlooked 6,317.50 Payment on account of strata fees 5,292.00

Subtotal $16,044.51 $16,044.51

Total $33,009.18

[para7] Both the Receiver Manager and the strata council agree on the amount due of $33,009.18, but the strata council argues that there is an additional amount owing of $20,024.55, and the Receiver Manager argues that there should be a further deduction of $28,007.37.

[para8] The strata council argues that the sum of $20,024.55, which represents the full amount of $32,858.69 paid by the Receiver Manager to Kolyvan, less the accepted credits of $12,834.14, was an improper expenditure. The reasons advanced include the argument that the retainer was improper and not authorized by the strata council, that the strata council should not have to pay any of these expenses. The strata council concedes that possibly the management fee of $9,533.70, including GST, may be justified.

[para9] The Receiver Manager argues that there should be two items deducted from the amount agreed to be due:

(a) The sum of $9,978.37 which represents the balance in the strata corporation bank account at July 15, 1999, which was transferred to Kolyvan as property manager.

(b) The sum of $18,029 paid by the Receiver Manager to Kolyvan as monthly assessments for units in the name of the owner developer, Montague House Development Corp. This amount makes up a large portion of the sum of $20,024.55, claimed as an addition by the strata council.

[para10] It appears that it is not possible for the strata council to argue that there should be added on to the amount due to it the sum of $20,024.55 for expenses paid by Kolyvan when those expenses have already been taken into account by their chartered accountant in determining the amount due. To allow that increase would, in my view, be a duplication.

[para11] The question then turns on whether the deductions suggested by the Receiver Manager should be made. To a great extent that hinges on the propriety of the retainer of Kolyvan.

[para12] At the time Kolyvan was retained, effective May 1, 1999, there was no strata council, as none had been elected, and the Receiver Manager therefore stood in place of the owner developer which de facto acts as strata council until there is an elected council.

[para13] Much was made of the fact that the annual general meeting was late, in violation of s. 123(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 61, which provides that the first annual general meeting is to be held within nine months of the registration of the strata plan, or when 60 percent of the units have been sold, whichever date is earlier. In this case, to comply with the Act, the first annual general meeting should have been held November 15, 1998.

[para14] A review of the Act does not disclose any penalty for the failure to hold the annual general meeting within the time allotted. There is a saving provision relating to the actions of the strata council, s. 122(3) of the Condominium Act provides:

All acts done in good faith by the council are, even if it is afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment or continuance in office of a member of the council, as valid as if the member had been duly appointed or had duly continued in office.

[para15] A Receiver Manager appointed by court order, as in this case, is and remains throughout the term of his appointment an officer of the court, his actions are subject to the scrutiny of the court. Notwithstanding the fact that there appears to be a failure to comply with s. 123(1) of the Condominium Act, there may have been very good practical reasons why an annual general meeting could not have been held in November of 1998. The Receiver Manager swears that one of the reasons it was necessary to retain Kolyvan was to prepare the necessary materials for the annual general meeting. There is no evidence that the retainer was made otherwise than in good faith by the Receiver Manager, and consequently it would appear that s. 122(3) of the Act would apply and the retainer would be valid. Kolyvan is a professional property manager and would have had experience, for example, in the preparation of materials for the annual general meeting.

[para16] Another reason advanced by the strata council is that there was already a management company under contract, that is, Tara Hytes. That contract was purportedly executed by the strata council on February 12, 1998, which was several days before the strata council existed. Until the strata plan is registered in the Land Title Office, the strata corporation does not exist as an entity, and consequently has no ability to enter into a contract at that date. In my view, the Receiver Manager was entitled to consider that contract to be invalid, and hence entirely justified in retaining Kolyvan. It is possible that since August 1999 the strata council has adopted or ratified the Tara Hytes contract, but in my view that does not affect its initial invalidity.

[para18] The other amount in issue is $9,978.37, which apparently was the balance in the strata council bank account transferred to Kolyvan on July 15, 1999. These funds were in a bank account apparently controlled by Mr. Dembicki at the time, and were made up of the balance of some assessments. This fund was properly transferred to the management company retained by the Receiver Manager, and no doubt used for various expenditures. It follows that this is not an amount which is repayable by the Receiver Manager to the strata council.

[para19] As a consequence, the Receiver Manager is entitled to an order that the sum of $5,001.81, plus court order interest from July 31, 1999 to the date of this order be paid out to the strata council from the funds held in trust, and that the balance of the funds, including any accrued interest be paid out to the Receiver Manager.

[para20] Unless there are settlement offers of which the court is unaware, the Receiver Manager is entitled to his costs of this application, assessed on Scale 3, to be paid by the strata council forthwith after the assessment.

Parlett v. Strata Plan LMS 2706

Between Michael Gordon Parlett and Lorelea Jeanne Watson, petitioners, and The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 2706, respondents

British Columbia Supreme Court New Westminster, British Columbia Pitfield J. Heard: October 4, 2000. Judgment: October 25, 2000. (41 paras.)

Counsel: Jamie A. Bleay, for the petitioners. Gwendoline C. Allison, for the respondents.

[para1] PITFIELD J.:-- This petition is concerned with the question whether Mr. Parlett and Ms. Watson, the owners of a strata lot in the Mayberry condominium development, are entitled to park their half-ton, extended cab pick-up truck on common property which the strata corporation says is restricted for use by visitors.

[para2] The petitioners say that by-laws of the corporation permit them to park on the common property. Should that not be the case, they say that steps taken by the corporation to restrict the parking of vehicles owned by residents on common property designated for use only by visitors is oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to them and they are entitled to relief as a result.

[para5] The petitioners say the developer represented to them at the time they purchased their lot in the third phase of the Mayberry project that they would be permitted to park the truck on common property. Whether or not the representation was made, the petitioners do not base their case on it. They say, to the contrary, that the by-laws and rules of the corporation in place when they purchased their lot on August 27, 1997 permit them to park the vehicle on common property.

131(1) An owner shall not

(f) park any recreational vehicle, boat, trailer or other property, except passenger vehicles, on the common property or limited common property without approval of the strata council.

135.7 Parking stalls shall only be used for vehicles less than 4,000 kg G.V.W. owned or leased by persons who are residents of the building or visitors of such residents. A resident shall use only the parking spaces assigned to his strata lot, save and except for private arrangements with other owners for the use of parking spaces assigned to such other owners. Assigned space(s) shall not be leased or rented to a non-resident.

135.9 Parking is only permitted in a designated parking space, and shall not reduce the width of an access driveway. Any vehicle which does not comply with this paragraph may be removed at the owner's expense.

VISITOR PARKING: Visitor Parking is for visitor's only. Residents parked in visitor parking will be towed with all costs born by the vehicle owner.

[para8] The petitioners say by-law 131(1)(f) permits them to park their truck, which is a passenger vehicle, on common property without approval of the strata council.

[para9] Although the truck is a passenger vehicle, it is my opinion that the by-laws cannot be construed in the manner suggested by the petitioners.

[para10] Admittedly, the parking by-laws are not a work of art. They represent a blend of the statutory form of by-laws (s. 131(1)(f)) and other terms (s. 135.7 and 135.9) that must have been gleaned from precedents without much thought being given to the suitability of those terms for the purpose.

[para11] Notwithstanding the able submissions of counsel, I am satisfied that s. 131(1)(f) of the by-laws has the effect of reserving available parking for passenger vehicles, as opposed to other kinds of property, but it does not authorize an owner to park a passenger vehicle on common property except as permitted by other by-laws related to parking.

[para12] Section 135.7 of the by-laws provides that an owner shall only park in a space assigned to the owner's lot. That provision must have been intended to apply to developments where owners' parking spaces were common property and not part of the strata lot. In the case of the Mayberry development, every owner owned a garage that accommodated two vehicles of most sizes. There was no need to assign parking places to any owner and none were so assigned. The effect of s. 135.7 of the by-laws was that no owner had a right to park in a parking place other than those comprising part of the strata lot itself.

[para13] Section 135.9 of the by-laws permits parking on common property in designated parking areas and not otherwise. The only common property designated for parking were the stalls designated for use as visitor parking. None of those was assigned to an owner within the meaning of s. 135.7 of the by-laws. A lawfully adopted rule of the corporation prohibited owners from parking in those spaces.

[para14] In my opinion, the by-laws and rules and regulations of the corporation in force when the petitioners purchased their property prohibited them from parking their truck on common property designated for visitor parking.

[para15] The remaining question is whether the corporation has acted, in relation to parking, in an oppressive or unfairly prejudicial manner towards the petitioners so as to justify relief as contemplated by s. 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 64 providing as follows:

Oppressive acts

42 An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter if the owner alleges

(a) that the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself or herself, or

(b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself or herself.

Court order

43 On an application to court under section 42, the court may make the interim or final order it considers appropriate, and, without limiting that power, may

(a) direct or prohibit an act of council or vary a transaction or resolution, and

(b) regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs.

[para16] Action or conduct that is oppressive is that which is undertaken by the corporation in bad faith, that is burdensome, harsh or wrongful, or is lacking in probity or fair dealing (Esteem Investments Ltd. v. Strata Plan No. VR 1513 (1987), 46 D.L.R. (4th) 577 at 579-80 (B.C.S.C.)). In determining whether conduct is oppressive, one is concerned with the nature and quality of the conduct of the corporation.

[para17] Action or conduct that is unfairly prejudicial is that which is unjust and inequitable as it pertains to the complainant (Esteem Investments Ltd., supra at 580). In that determination, one is concerned with the effect of lawful action or conduct on the complainant and whether the effect is just and equitable. Another of the factors to be considered is the effect of the relief sought on other interested persons, in this case the other owners in the Mayberry condominium project (Gray v. Strata Plan No. VR 840, [1994] B.C.J. No. 2140 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 23).

[para20] The claim in Alvarez was based on oppression rather than unfair prejudice. Any oppression that did exist had ended by the time the petition was heard and the issue was moot. The principle stated by the court did not form the basis of the court's decision. I am not bound to follow the principle were I inclined to the view that there were no oppression or unfair prejudice but an unjust result in any event.

[para21] In so far as unfair prejudice is concerned, the court in Alvarez appears to have adopted the "just and equitable" test saying as it did that the court could grant whatever remedy it deemed "just" in the circumstances. The imposition of a remedy that is just necessarily implies that the status quo is not just, which amounts to saying that the status quo is unjust and inequitable or unfairly prejudicial.

[para22] The view generally accepted by this court, and that which I will apply, is that the availability of a remedy under s. 43 is dependent upon a finding that conduct was oppressive or unfairly prejudicial. See, for example, Barnes v. Strata Corp. NW3160, [1997] B.C.J. No. 1081; Gray v. Strata Plan No. VR840, [1994] B.C.J. No. 2140; Steinbrenner v. Strata Plan No. K768, [1994] B.C.J. No. 463; and Bond v. Strata Plan VR2538, [1996] B.C.J. No. 2137.

Phase 3 of the Development will have 54 parking stalls including 2 visitor parking stalls. The 2 visitor parking stalls will be designated as common property on the strata plan. The other 52 parking stalls will be included within individual Lots.

[para26] Upon moving to their home, the petitioners began parking the truck in a parking place on common property. The space was not then marked as visitor parking. In September 1997, the strata council began receiving complaints about residents parking in visitor parking spaces. The minutes of the September 3, 1997 council meeting reminded owners that visitor parking was limited and restricted to visitors only.

[para27] The issue of parking in visitor spaces remained a contentious issue throughout the fall of 1997. At an extraordinary general meeting of the owners held December 6, 1997, those in attendance adopted a resolution permitting the petitioners to park in a visitor parking place on a temporary basis while the council reviewed the issue of permitting owners to park over-sized vehicles in visitor parking spaces.

[para29] The corporation's review of the parking situation took place. On November 12, 1998, the property manager advised the petitioners that the temporary permission they had been granted to park in a visitor parking space had been rescinded. The manager advised the petitioners that if they did not cease to use the space, their vehicle would be towed.

[para30] On November 16, 1998 the strata council accepted the recommendations of the parking committee that all temporary permits allowing residents to use visitor parking stalls for personal use be cancelled, that each owner be issued two visitor parking passes, and that the parking by-law be enforced by towing.

[para32] The petitioners filed their petition on December 7, 1998. They applied for an interim injunction restraining the council from towing their vehicle. The injunction was granted on December 14, 1998. No steps were taken by the petitioners to have their petition asserting oppressive conduct on the part of the council heard by the court.

[para33] On November 1, 1999 the by-laws of the corporation were amended. The prior rule restricting the use of visitor spaces to visitors and providing that offending vehicles would be towed was elevated to a by-law.

[para35] The evidence does not support any finding that the corporation acted in bad faith, nor in a manner that is burdensome or harsh or lacking in probity and fair dealing as it pertains to the petitioners' parking rights. To the contrary, the strata council and the corporation have acted in a manner that resulted in the full and fair consideration of the issue before them. The by-laws reflect the will of a sufficient number of owners to permit the adoption of a special resolution. The corporation has not acted in a manner that is oppressive to any owner in so far as parking is concerned.

[para36] I cannot conclude that the parking policy is unjust and inequitable so as to be unfairly prejudicial to the petitioners. It is true that the petitioners are affected by a policy that has been in place from a point in time prior to their acquisition of their strata lot. So too are all other owners. Strata lot owners are not permitted to do with common property that which they might do were they sole owners of the common property. The inability to accommodate all individual wishes is the inevitable result of community living.

[para37] As suggested in Gray v. Strata Plan No. VR840, supra, I should consider the effect of any relief that could be granted to the petitioners upon other owners. All owners would suffer the loss of one of eighteen visitor parking spaces in a ninety-one lot strata project. They would also be required to endure the ongoing presence of an oversize vehicle parked on common property.

[para38] The owners have expressed their wish, through two special resolutions adopted in 1997 and 1999, that owners not be permitted to park in visitor parking areas.

[para39] It would be unjust and inequitable to require the owners collectively to absorb the effect of the loss of a single visitor parking space and its use for the accommodation of an over-size vehicle. The project was developed with limited visitor parking.

[para40] The parking policy that was suitable to the project has been in place from the outset. The petitioners are obliged to respect the policies of the project of which they are a part.

[para41] The Parlett and Watson petition is dismissed with costs. It follows that the interim injunction ceases to be of force and effect.

Action No. 15280/90

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division
Newmarket, Ontario
Fedak J.

Heard: November 22, 1990

Judgment: December 21, 1990

Application for interpretation of contracts. The applicants were purchasers of condominium units. The respondent vendor did not close the deal by the date fixed by the agreement. The parties sought direction of the court regarding extensions to the closing date. The agreement provided that the vendor, in the event of unavoidable delays, would be permitted reasonable extensions from time to time on notice to the purchasers, to a maximum of 15 months. The vendor argued that the provision allowing the vendor to terminate if the declaration and description were not registered within 12 months of the occupancy date allowed a further extension of the closing date.

Kathryn Boyd, for the Plaintiffs.

Thomas P. McIver, for the Defendant.

FEDAK J.:—

THE FACTS

The applicants are purchasers of various units of a condominium development at 115 Main Street, Newmarket Ontario from the Respondent Vendor - 733725 Ontario Inc.

Since the transactions did not close by the closing date as set out in paragraph 10 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, the parties now seek the assistance of the court in interpreting various clauses in this agreement so as to determine what extensions of closing dates each transaction provides.

At the outset, paragraph 1 of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale defines certain matters, but does not define "closing date".

Paragraph 10 of the Agreement between parties specifically sets out what the intended closing date should be.

In the agreements between the Vendor and Purchasers, Di Cecco, O'Halloran, Neil, Tarrant and Toombs, the closing date is set at October 16, 1989.

For the Purchasers Meyer and Tarrant, as well, a closing date of October 30, 1989 is prescribed in paragraph 10.

Several other paragraphs refer to closing dates and occupancy dates.

Paragraph 11(d) provides that:

"the closing date shall be extended to a date twenty (20) days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's solicitor to the purchaser or his solicitor that the Declaration and Description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the Vendor, the Purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver, vacant possession of the unit. The Vendor shall in that event, be entitled to retail all monies paid hereunder for damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of re-decorating as may be determined by the Vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein."

"If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor the Vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension of time from time to time for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. In addition to or in lieu of the foregoing extension(s), if any, the Vendor shall be permitted to extend the Closing Date for a period not exceeding fifteen (15) months upon first giving, either directly or through its solicitors, to the Purchaser or his solicitors written notice thereof by prepaid registered post, which notice shall be deemed to have been received three (3) business days following the date of posting: If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit and close this transaction within such extended time or times for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him and this Agreement shall be null and void. If the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on or before the Closing Date or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event, the Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

It would appear therefore, that if these provisions are read as whole, that the closing date could be extended from time to time, or to a date 20 days after Registration, but in no event after 15 months of the original closing date as set out in Paragraph 10 of each Agreement of Purchase and Sale. For those transactions originally slated to close on October 15, 1989, the closings could be extended to no later than January 15, 1991 and for those transaction originally scheduled to close on October 30, 1989, the closings could be extended to January 31, 1991.

Mr. McIver on behalf of the Respondent argues that paragraph 11(j) provides yet a further set of closing dates open for the Vendor to utilize.

That paragraph provides:

"If the Declaration and Description have not been registered within 12 months after the occupancy date, the Purchaser hereby agrees to vacate the unit and deliver possession of the unit to the Vendor in its original state, subject only to reasonable wear and tear, shall be returned to the Purchaser, and the return of such monies shall be deemed to terminate the Agreement, and the Purchaser will deliver to the Vendor a Release in the Vendor's standard form."

This paragraph in my opinion does not provide further extension dates. It simply provides the Vendor with a procedure and remedy to recapture possession after 12 months of occupancy if the Declaration and Description are not yet registered. This paragraph therefore deals primarily with occupation and re-possession by the Vendor and not at all with extension of closing dates.

To hold this paragraph as a further right of extension would Create an ambiguous definition of closing dates. Under the Contra Proferentum Rule, such ambiguity could not be allowed to stand.

It is interesting to note as well that S. 51 of the Condominium Act provides implied covenants in Agreements of Purchase and Sale, but does to provide for a method to set or fix closing dates.

Accordingly, the latest closing date of January 15, 1991 applies to the following purchasers and units.

- 1) Alessandro DiCecco and Catherine O'Halloran Unit 31, Level 1

- 2) Ronald C. Neil
Unit 37, Level 1

- 3) June Tarrant
Unit 59, Level 2

- 4) Douglas Toombs
Unit 40, Level 1

Accordingly, the latest closing dates of January 30, 31, 1991 apply to the following purchasers and units.

- 5) Ronald Meyer
Unit 18, Level 2

- 6) Ronald Meyer
Unit 15, Level 1

- 7) June Tarrant
Unit 9, Level 1

Action No. 30109/89

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division

Ottawa, Ontario

Sirois J.

March 16, 1992

The plaintiffs sought an injunction prohibiting the occupation or use of certain parking space by the defendant B, a declaration that they were entitled to use the parking space, or for rescission of the contract or damages. The defendant B moved to dismiss the part of the action dealing with the remedies sought against both defendants. The plaintiffs were interested in buying a condominium in Ottawa. They needed two parking spaces as they each owned a car. They were advised by an employee of Timberlay Developments Limited that they would have to buy two condo units. In February 1985, two agreements of purchase and sale were executed by HT in trust as purchaser and Timberlay Developments Limited in trust as vendor of two adjoining units. The Declaration creating the defendant Condominium Corporation stated that the owner of each unit would have the use of one underground parking space. A Resolution was passed to change the allotment of parking spaces by assigning two spaces to Unit 2, and none to Unit 3. The plaintiffs listed Unit 3 for sale, and instructed the agent to advertise it for sale without a parking space. Unit 3 was sold to the defendant B. In the agreement of purchase and sale, the word "parking" was crossed out and "locker" was substituted. A Resolution was passed taking away the extra parking space from Unit 2 and assigning it to Unit 3.

SIROIS J. (orally):— At the opening of the trial, counsel indicated they had no agreed upon statement of facts, but that they had agreed to file a book of documents as Exhibit No. 1, as well as the amended Application Record of an application commenced in the District Court of Ontario on September 1, 1988. The style of cause in that matter is as follows:

"Court File No. 24746/88 DISTRICT COURT OF ONTARIO

B E T W E E N:

MURIEL MAE TAGGART

Applicants
-and-

CARLETON CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION NO. 339, et al.
Respondents.

AMENDED APPLICATION RECORD "

The plaintiffs herein were the applicants and the defendant, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 339, et al., were the respondents, along with all the all the unit owners.

Reference also was made by counsel to an application in the same District Court of Ontario, but the record was not filed; only a copy of the Order made by the Honourable Mr. Justice Charles F. Doyle on August 29th, 1989 as submitted. The style of cause in that matter is as follows:

"Court File No. 28332/89

DISTRICT COURT OF ONTARIO
BEFORE THE HONOURABLE) TUESDAY, THE 29TH DAY OF JUDGE DOYLE) AUGUST, 1989

BETWEEN:

CARLETON CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION NO. 339
(Applicant)

AND:

THOSE OWNERS AND MORTGAGEES MORE PARTICULARLY NOTED IN SCHEDULE "A" ATTACHED HERETO

(Respondents)"

In the latter application the applicant was the defendant, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 339 and the respondents were all the unit owners as well as the mortgagees listed in the schedule. It is to be noted that the Order itself was filed as Exhibit No. 5, but it did not include the schedules referred to therein, although there was in explanatory letter from the firm of Nelligan/Power who were acting for the applicant. Schedule D of the Order purported to amend the Declaration to correct the error in the description as the result of the wall being moved.

The Court was informed also at the outset of the trial that the plaintiff, Mr. Harold Taggart, had passed away shortly before this matter came to trial.

SUMMARY OF THE FACTS:

In the fall of 1984, the Taggarts were interested in buying a condominium at 215 Somerset Street West, in the City of Ottawa. They were looking for a condominium with two parking spaces, as they each owned a car. They were advised by Robert E. McElligott of Timberlay Developments Limited that they would be required to purchase two condo units (see paragraphs 5 and 6 of their affidavit sworn on August 23, 1989, being part of the amended record in Application No. 24746/88).

It is to be noted that at the trial Mr. McElligott did not testify.

On February 7, 1985, two agreements of purchase and sale were executed by Harold Taggart "In Trust", described as purchaser, and Timberlay Developments Limited "In Trust", described as the vendor. These two agreements of purchase and sale are part of the material filed and are seen at tabs 4 and 5 of Exhibit Number One. Neither agreement refers to the parking arrangement nor to the moving of a common wall that was to be moved to increase the area of the master bedroom in unit 2 by 115 square feet, reducing the area in unit 3 by the same amount.

Each agreement, however, referred to the purchase from the vendor of "Suite No. 4C Modified" and shortly below indicating " AS PER MODIFIED PLAN ATTACHED" No such plans were filed in court.

On June 18, 1986, the declaration and description of the Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 339 were filed in the proper registry office as Instrument No. 59738. A copy of the Declaration appears at Tab 1 of Exhibit No. 1. Parking is discussed in Article IV (6) and does not reflect the alleged agreement the purchasers claimed they had with Mr. McElligott. It is also to be noted that the owner in fee simple of lands" is corporation No. 607681 Ontario Limited.

Article IV (6) states:

Parking: The owner of each unit shall have the use subject to the provisions of this Declaration, the By-Laws of the Corporation and Rules and Regulation passed pursuant thereto of one (1) underground parking space, the location of which shall be assigned by the Board of Directors from time to time. Each parking space shall be used for the parking of one (1) motor vehicle.

It gives the right to each unit owner to use one underground parking space in the common area described as the "garage".

On July 22, 1986, by-laws were passed by 607681 Ontario Limited: By-Law No. 1 and then By-Law No. 2 concerning the borrowing powers of the board of directors, as well as the "Condominium Rules". Mr. Robert McElligott, as president of the 607681 Ontario Limited corporation, certifies that the said corporation or declarant owns 100 percent of the units at the time and, as such, confirms the by-laws and other condominium documents.

It is also to be noted that on the same date a parking resolution was passed which was filed at tab 3 of Exhibit No. 1. Again, the four paragraphs in the Resolution refer to Article IV (6) of the Declaration as providing for the owner of each unit to be entitled to the use of one parking space which will be assigned by the board as set out in Schedule "A". And, in Schedule "A" we have a full page of typewritten or printed numbers and a correction in ink which appears next to level 4-2 and 4-3, crossing out the parking area number six for number three, and adding parking area 6 to 402 (unit 2 on level 4).

We have no specific date as to when the majority of the condo units were sold at which time Section 26 provides for passing of the control of the new condo corporation to the unit owners and their representatives. Mr. Thomas G. Joseph was the first president of the Carleton Condominium Corporation 339 and his recollection is that his mandate started around June, 1986.

The transaction for the purchase of unit 2, level 4, was closed on the 27th day of August, 1986 by the registration of a transfer or deed bearing registration number 469698.

The closing of the other unit took place on December 22, 1986.

There was little evidence as to what transpired at the closing on either date. The only evidence is the undertaking filed at tab 6 of Exhibit No. 1. It is an Undertaking by the firm of Nelligan/Power addressed to Taggart Corporation and to Gowling and Henderson, solicitors for the purchasers. The reference is: "607681 Ontario Limited sale to Taggart Corporation Unit 3 Level 4, Carleton Condominium Plan No. 339 403-215 Somerset Street West, City of Ottawa".

It goes on to say:

IN CONSIDERATION OF and notwithstanding the closing of the above-noted transaction, we hereby undertake to provide a Resolution from the Board of Directors of Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 339 to amend their Resolution of July 22, 1986, with respect to parking and locker space allocation, by providing parking and locker space allocation according to the attached Schedule, within a reasonable time after closing."

The exhibit itself doesn't contain the copy of the schedule but I note that in the record of the Amended Application Record it (the schedule) appears and it is signed by Nelligan/Power presumably on behalf of the vendor corporation.

It is to be noted that the Undertaking goes so far as to undertaking to amend the Resolution. It doesn't go as far as specifying that it purports to amend Article IV (6) of the Declaration itself.

No reporting letter or Statement of Adjustments was filed for this transaction. All we know from the undertaking is that the firm of Nelligan/Power was acting for the vendor and the firm of Gowling and Henderson as solicitors for the purchaser, Taggart Corporation. Therefore, we cannot make any finding as we do not know whether the plaintiffs consulted a lawyer before or after the signing of the agreement of purchase and sale. By finding, I mean findings of negligence in law. I will come back to that aspect subsequently.

The court is not familiar with the instructions or, for that matter, any advice that was exchanged between clients and solicitors, and this applies to both closings; that is the one in August, 1986 and the one in December, 1986.

It is to be noted that on September 11, 1986 a Resolution was passed to change the allotment of the parking spaces. A mistake was made and another Resolution was passed. They are part of the record in Exhibit No. 1, Tabs 10, 11, and 12. A quick look at those Resolutions refers to the same language and deals or mentions the provisions or requirements of Article IV (6) of the Declaration and does not indicate that by the schedule the by-law or the Article in the declaration would be technically contradicted by allotting two spaces instead of one, like in the case of all the other units.

In the spring of 1987, the Taggarts listed unit 403 for sale, and the instructions to the agent was filed under Tab 13, and it mentions that it is advertised for sale without a parking space. On October 14, 1987 an agreement of purchase and sale was signed by the plaintiffs Mr. and Mrs. Taggart, and the defendant Pauline Bachtold. The transaction was closed on November 4, 1987 as required in the said agreement.

The agreement itself was filed also as an Exhibit under Tab 14, and it is on a standard printed form For condo unit sales.

Paragraph 8 thereof was amended by typing three xs over the printed word "parking" and by the insertion just above the word "parking" of the words "Locker #16 (403)".

At the bottom of the page, paragraph 14 appears and it is of interest to pay attention thereto:

"The Real Property is governed by the & Condominium Act 1980, and amendments thereto, and is subject to the terms and conditions of the Declaration, By laws, Rules and Regulations, Management Agreement and an Insurance Trust Agreement. The Purchaser hereby agrees to accept title to the Real Property subject to the terms of the said agreements."

Paragraph 26 of the said Agreement on page 2 gives the rules of interpretation of the document.

"Notwithstanding any terms or conditions outlined in the printed portion herein, any provisions written or typed into this Offer shall be the true terms and shall supersede the printed portion in respect to the parts affected thereby. This Agreement shall constitute the entire Agreement between the Purchaser and Vendor and there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this Agreement or the property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing. This Agreement shall be read with all changes of gender or number required by the context."

The transaction was closed, as provided, on November 4th, 1987. The deed was not produced and no evidence was tendered as to what happened on closing. No reporting letter was filed, nor any statement of adjustments. The court was told, however, that the parties subsequently corrected an error or omission, resulting from the failure to amend the plans of the condominium unit to reflect the wall that had been moved, which had an effect on the proportion of the area occupied by each unit and, therefore, an effect on the condo fees payable by each unit.

The amended record before Mr. Justice Flanigan at page 103 of the record of the Application refers to a memorandum sent to all unit owners by the Board of Directors on December 29, 1988. In that memorandum the directors notify the unit owners that an application will be made to the court to the effect that the proportions of common interest and contribution to common expenses, expressed in percentages, would have to be amended. It specifically refers to units 2, level 4; and unit 3, level 4. That, in effect, resulted in the Order signed by the Honourable Mr. Justice Charles F. Doyle, which has been filed as Exhibit No. 5 in this action.

On or about July 19, 1988, the condominium corporation went full circle and passed a resolution, reproduced at Tab 15 of Exhibit No. 1, whereby the owner of each condominium unit was allowed one parking space and, in particular, allotting parking space No. 6 to unit 403. APPLICATION BEFORE JUSTICE FLANIGAN:

It was issued on September 1, 1988 and it was first to be heard on September 28, 1988. The Reasons of the Honourable Justice are dated January 19, 1989 and are endorsed on the Record:

"When Applicants bought they were told one parking space per unit but if they bought two units then two spaces would be assigned to one unit. On closing this had not been done so an undertaking was given by vendor to comply. Subsequently, resolutions of Directors were passed and by April 14/87, the undertaking had been complied with. Subsequently, the Directors revoked this resolution by a new resolution July 19/88 the Directors took away one parking space and assigned it to Unit 403. & The applicant claims expropriation without compensation and it may well be but that is not relevant here.

The Declaration specifies one parking space per unit. The parking spaces are common area.

Sec 3(8) of the Condominium Act permits the Court to amend the Declaration if it is necessary to correct an error or inconsistency in the Declaration. Article IV (6) of the Declaration provides for one parking space per unit.

In my view there is no error or inconsistency in the Declaration. Therefore I do not have authority under Sec. 3(8). What we have is a private arrangement between the Applicant and the Declarant which is illegal pursuant to Re Carleton Condominium #279 Rochon et al. 59 O.R. 545.

The resolution of April 14/87 was ultra vires the Directors as it was contrary to the Declaration. They had no authority to give two parking spaces on one unit.

This in my view is a grossly inequitable result because the only owner who is affected is Bachtold and she got exactly what she purchased and now gets an unearned advantage.

Motion dismissed.

No order as to costs."

The present action was started on May 9, 1989. The claims in this action are, firstly, against both defendants and, then, against the purchaser defendant, Pauline Bachtold.

I will give, firstly, a summary of the remedies sought in the application before Flanigan J. The Taggarts applied for:

- (1) an order amending Article IV (6) of the Declaration to provide for two parking spaces for unit 402; and
- (2) an order directing the directors to assign two parking areas to unit 402.

In this action, two remedies are sought by the plaintiff against both defendants:

- (1) an injunction prohibiting the occupation or use of space number 6,
- (2) a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to use of space number 6.

The other two remedies are against the defendant purchaser alone, and have to do with the rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale and reconveyance of the unit in question for the sum of $100,000.00, or, in the alternative, damages for breach of contract in the amount of $35,000.00.

Let us examine the first two remedies sought in this action as compared to the remedies in the application before Flanigan, J.:

At the opening of trial, both defendants moved for dismissal alleging that the matter was res judicata, having already been determined and decided by Flanigan, J., on January 19, 1989.

It is to be noted that in that amended (before Flanigan, J.) application record the grounds for moving for the amendment of the Declaration of Carleton Condominium Plan #339 was stated in paragraph 2 at page 2:

"The applicants entered into an agreement with the developer of the condominium whereby it purchased two condominium units. They would also be purchasing two parking spaces, which they could arrange to have assigned to either, or one of the units purchased by the applicants.

3. The applicants purchased two units in order to have two parking spaces and the spaces were assigned to one unit by resolution of the board of directors."

And at page 3, paragraph 6 the ground is quoted as being: "the fact that the Declaration of C.C.C. Plan No. 339 fails to reflect the agreement reached between the developers and the applicants/purchasers, and it is just, equitable, necessary and desirable that the Declaration be amended so that the applicant be provided with two parking spaces in order that an error or inconsistency in the Declaration, arising out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the Declaration be rectified."

Upon deliberating again on the nature of the remedies, at the opening of the trial, I granted the motion of the defendant Condominium Corporation that the action be dismissed as against it, but reserved on the motion by Pauline Bachtold's counsel until the end of trial and decided to proceed to hear the evidence.

THE LAW:

During the course of submissions by counsel, I did mention, though, that I agreed that the situation was very similar to the one described by the Ontario Court of Appeal in a judgment dated May 1, 1987, in the case of C.C. 279 v. ROCHON 59 O.R. (2d) 545. I also adopted then Justice Flanigan's reasons. In the aforementioned decision of the Court of Appeal, Finlayson, J., at pages 550 to 553 of the report, discusses the purposes and intent of the Condominium Act. Those pages can be summarized as follows:

1. The condominium corporation is created by the filing of the Declaration and Description by the declarant corporation. (Section 2)
2. Any offer to purchase a unit is made on the basis of the accuracy of the statements made in the registered documents. Not only the declarant, but all unit owners are bound by them.
3. The Declaration may be amended in only two ways: Firstly, under subsection 3(4) it requires the consent of all the owners; or secondly, under the authority of subsection 3(8) a judge is permitted to correct an error or inconsistency when it is discovered to exist.
4. In the case of inconsistency between the Declaration and the by-laws and the act, The Condominium Act prevails and the Declaration or by-laws are deemed amended to read like the Act requires (S. 3(5)).
5. It is contemplated that the original declarant or developer, once he has sold off the majority of the units, will withdraw from the management at a meeting which is to be set for a date within 21 days of the event. (Section 26).

6. The declarant developer cannot, unilaterally, change the Declaration. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed on the registered Declaration as amended, otherwise it is invalid. And, the Declaration amendment is valid only after the registration of the amended Declaration. (S. 3(9)).
7. Subsection 28(1) of the Condominium Act empowers the Board to pass by-laws, but they must not be contrary to the Declaration or the Act.
8. Subsection 29(1) stipulates that the rules shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act, the Declaration and the by-laws.

CONCLUSION:

Applying the law to our facts, I conclude that the developer corporation or the numbered corporation cannot and the condominium corporation created on June 18, 1986. It is not a party (and could not be a party) to that agreement at the time; the acceptance thereof, was dated the 7th of February, 1985.

Flanigan, J., decided that very issue and went on to say that under subsection 3(8) of the Condominium Act he was powerless to amend the Declaration because the act permits it only in the case of an error or inconsistency. Flanigan, J., further stated that the resolution of April 14 was ultra vires the directors, it being contrary to the declaration. That is in conformity with the wording of subsections 28(1) and 29(2) of the Condominium Act.

We turn now to the action that I am asked to judge. The plaintiffs are the same as in the application before Flanigan, J., and the defendant corporation is the same. That is, the Condominium unit created by the filing of the Declaration in June 1986. At the time this action was started on May 9, 1989, and also at the time of the application before Flanigan, J., the control of the condominium corporation had been turned over to the unit owners. The remedy that was sought before Flanigan, J., is identical. It is for a declaration that space No. 6 is for the use of the Taggarts and that the condominium corporation be prohibited from using or assigning it to any other person. That matter is res judicata.

JUDGMENT:

Today, therefore, I grant the motion for dismissal made by the defendant Pauline Bachtold for that part of the action dealing with the remedies sought against both defendants.

Dealing with the plaintiff's claim for decision of the contract or damages, the plaintiff Muriel Taggart testified as to what she understood were the facts. It is clear from her evidence that she had no direct dealings with the purchaser before the closing of the transaction. She and her husband went through the real estate agent and their lawyers, I presume, and were left to decide if they accepted the terms of the agreement of purchase and sale as printed or typed on the standard form presented for their acceptance. Therefore, the court must look to the agreement of purchase and sale that they signed in order to define and describe their respective rights.

As previously stated, the printed text in paragraph 8 of the agreement dealt with the parking but that was, however, the subject of a modification by the insertion, with a typewriter, of the words "Locker 816 (403)". According to paragraph 26 of the agreement of purchase and sale the typewritten words supersede the printed word, so that the paragraph now reads:

"The Vendor warrants the right to the following: Locker space (s) No. 16 (403) which space shall be included with the Real Property."

It does not say specifically that there will be no automobile space included with the property despite the clear wording of the terms of Article IV (6) of the Declaration.

As stated by the Court of Appeal, the purchasers or their solicitors, when searching the title are aware only of the terms of Article IV(6) of the Declaration/ The agreement of purchase and sale does not specify that there will be no parking space included with the property, despite the wording of the Declaration. It only says that the vendor warrants the right to a locker space, no. 16, which is to be included in the property.

To pursue my analysis of the interpretation of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, paragraph 14 states that the offer is subject to the Declaration, and in the Declaration it is clear that each unit will be allocated the use of one space in the common area reserved for parking.

I might add by way of comment, that there was some misconception of the nature of the title to the parking space on the part of the Taggarts. Even in the Notice of Application before Flanigan, J., there is a reference to the purchase of parking spaces. In effect, the parking space is not part of the real estate title of the unit holder. It is part, as described in the Declaration, of the common area and subject to being divided for the use of the unit members as per the Declaration.

Turning to the allegation that there was a mistake of a fundamental nature that led to the closing of this transaction, I fail to find any evidence that the defendant purchaser was part of the mistake. I find that she made no representation. I conclude that there was no representation by the defendant that would prevent her from insisting upon the recognition of her rights as per the Declaration.

It is to be noted that the latter part of paragraph 26 of the said agreement of purchase and sale specifically states that the written agreement constitutes the whole agreement between the vendor and the purchaser and that there is no other representation, warranty, collateral agreement, or condition affecting this property or agreement, none "other than expressed herein in writing"

The apparent ambiguity resulting from the striking out of the word "parking" can be dissipated by the proper interpretation of paragraph 14, as already suggested. Since the Declaration defines the parking rights, the purchaser is entitled to rely upon same. The resolutions that were passed for the contrary are invalid, pursuant to subsections 28(1) and 29(2) of the Condominium Act.

Therefore, I must dismiss the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, Pauline Bachtold.

I might add that since the parties did agree to amend or correct the error about the area and the percentage of the common fees chargeable to each unit, in view of that partial adoption, if you like, of the transaction, I would not be prepared to exercise my discretion and grant rescission.

As to damages, the plaintiffs are not entitled to damages against the defendant Pauline Bachtold who is in no breach of the agreement of purchase and sale she signed. I was not asked to deal with anybody else's responsibility in either transaction, that is the purchase by the Taggarts from the developer or the sale to the defendant Bachtold, so I will refrain from doing so.

I assess the right to the parking area at $10,000.00.

I will hear your submissions as to costs.

The action against Pauline Bachtold will be dismissed with costs on a party and party basis until November 13th, 1991 and thereafter on a solicitor client basis. I will reserve on costs with reference to the Condominium Corporation until we hear from Mr. Citron, and Mr. Nicholson will have the right to reply, if it is done in writing.

I might say, perhaps for a higher tribunal, that I found that the comment by Flanigan, J., about the inequitable result to be obiter to his decision.

I have endorsed the record: Action against CCC 339 dismissed, but reserved as to costs. Action against Pauline Bachtold dismissed with costs on a party and party basis until November 13, 1991 and on a solicitor-client scale thereafter.

I wish to thank both counsel for their assistance. I think you presented whatever evidence you thought could enlighten the tribunal. I realize the constraints of your retainer.

On appeal from the decision of Justice David G. Stinson dated September 12, 2000 (reported at (2000), 50 O.R. (3d) 670).

CHARRON J.A.:

[1] The sole issue on this appeal is whether a covenant to pay certain interim expenses contained in a reciprocal easement and cost sharing agreement (the “Reciprocal Agreement”) between owners of adjoining parcels of land is enforceable against the successor in title to the covenantor. Stinson J. ruled that the covenant, being a positive covenant, does not run with the land and that, consequently, it was not enforceable against the respondents, Amberwood Investments Limited and 1018898 Ontario Inc. (“Amberwood”), as successors in title to the original covenantor. The appellant, Durham

Condominium Corporation No. 123 (“DCC 123”), who is the original covenantee under the Reciprocal Agreement, appeals from this decision.

A. THE FACTS

[2] Amberwood and DCC 123 are the registered owners of adjoining parcels of land in Whitby, Ontario. Originally, these two parcels were one, owned by a developer called WHDC Harbour Development Corporation (“WHDC”).

[3] WHDC intended to build two condominium high-rise residential buildings on the land, in two phases. The first phase, Phase 1, was completed and as a result, DCC 123 was registered on March 20, 1992. This registration divided the land into two parcels. WHDC started to build the Phase 2 condominium but, after putting in its foundation, ran into financial difficulties.

[4] It was WHDC’s intention that the two-phased project would share certain facilities and expenses, and that each Phase would have easements over the land of the other for the purposes of support and access. Particulars of these various rights and obligations were set out in the Reciprocal Agreement between WHDC and DCC 123, dated March 20, 1992, which applied to and was registered on the title of both parcels.

[5] The original lender for the project was the Royal Bank of Canada (“RBC”). It advanced $50,000,000 in debenture financing to WHDC in May 1990, secured by a mortgage over both parcels of land. After DCC 123 was registered in 1992, RBC’s mortgage on DCC 123’s parcel was discharged. RBC retained the mortgage on the adjoining parcel. In 1995, RBC assigned this mortgage to Paarl Construction Inc. (“Paarl”), which later sold the second parcel under power of sale to The Shores of Whitby Land Corporation. This purchase was financed by Amberwood and secured by a first mortgage.

[6] In October 1998, The Shores of Whitby Land Corporation defaulted under the mortgage held by Amberwood and, in consequence, quitclaimed its interest in the second parcel to Amberwood. DCC 123 was informed of this transfer the following month. As of the date of this application, no building had been constructed on the Phase 2 lands.

[7] The developer’s plan was for both condominiums to share a recreational facility. That facility has been constructed and is located within DCC 123, and is owned by DCC 123 and Amberwood.

[8] The Reciprocal Agreement provides, amongst other things, for the sharing of the cost of maintaining certain shared services and facilities, including the recreational facility. It required WHDC to pay certain interim expenses until the second condominium was built and registered. These interim expenses are the subject-matter of this application. They are outlined in section 2.9:

Section 2.9 – Interim Costs

The parties agree that until completion of the building comprising Condominium 2, Phase I Condominium Corporation's [DCC 123's] share of certain operating expenses contained in its budget will be greater than they will be after completion of the building comprising Condominium 2. Accordingly, the owner [WHDC] agrees until the date of registration of Condominium 2, to pay the Proportionate Share of the Phase II Condominium Corporation for the following items listed in the budget of the Phase I Condominium Corporation:

- (a) Water Treatment; and
- (b) Air Conditioner Maintenance.

The Owner further agrees, until the Transfer Date, to pay 35.417% of the costs of maintaining one full time security guard on the site.

[9] The Reciprocal Agreement further contains general provisions that include the following:

Section 13.1 – Provisions Run with the Land

(b) The parties hereto hereby acknowledge and agree that the Easements, rights and provisions as set forth in this Agreement establish a basis for mutual and reciprocal use and enjoyment of such Easements, rights and provisions and as an integral and material consideration for the continuing right to such use and enjoyment each party hereto does hereby accept, agree to assume the burden of, and to be bound by each and every of the covenants entered into by them in this Agreement.

(c) The provisions of this Agreement are intended to run with the real property benefitted and burdened thereby, specifically, the Phase 1 Lands, the Phase 2 Lands and the Common Units and except as may otherwise be specifically provided shall bind and enure to the benefit of the respective successors in title thereof.

[10] After WHDC ran into financial difficulty, it stopped paying its proportionate share of the interim expenses. Arrears accumulated. Paarl, as assignee of the RBC mortgage, refused to make the payments and DCC 123 registered a lien against the Phase 2 lands. When The Shores of Whitby Land Corporation purchased the lands, the arrears were paid. However, when Amberwood assumed ownership of the lands through the quitclaim deed, it paid the interim expenses for a few months and then refused to continue the payments. Amberwood's share of the expenses is estimated at $4,225 a month, or $50,700 a year. When the expenses remained unpaid by October 1999, DCC 123 registered a caution and issued notice of sale proceedings in accordance with the Reciprocal Agreement.

B. THE DECISION UNDER APPEAL

[11] Amberwood ultimately brought this application pursuant to Rule 14.05 of the Rules of Civil Procedure seeking an order setting aside the caution registered by DCC 123 and a declaration that it was not bound by any of the terms of the Reciprocal Agreement. However, it was conceded at the hearing before Stinson J. and on this appeal that Amberwood, as subsequent owner of the Phase 2 lands who acquired title after the Reciprocal Agreement was registered, was bound by the negative covenants and the easements contained in the Reciprocal Agreement and was entitled to the benefit of the easements over the DCC 123's Phase 1 lands. It was also common ground between the parties that the original parties to the Reciprocal Agreement intended that all covenants should run with the land, including the interim expenses provision. The sole question on the application was whether the covenant to pay interim expenses should be treated differently, regardless of the original parties' intention.

[12] The applications judge held that the covenant to pay interim expenses is an affirmative obligation that falls within the definition of a positive covenant. Neither party takes issue with this finding. He also held that it was settled law that obligations of this kind do not run with the land either at law or in equity, despite the contracting parties' express intentions to the contrary. Hence, a successor in title to the original covenantor is not bound by the terms of any positive covenants contained in the original agreement to which he was not a party.

[13] The applications judge noted the well-recognized difficulties that may arise from a rigid application of this rule and the recommendations for reform made by the Ontario Law Reform Commission (“OLRC”) in its 1989 Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land (the “1989 Report”). The applications judge referred to the methods that have been developed over time in England to avoid or circumvent the application of this potentially problematic rule.

[14] It was DCC 123’s contention that two of those methods or exceptions to the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land were applicable to this case: first, the benefit and burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell, [1957] 1 All E.R. 371; and second, the conditional grant of easement. It was argued, with respect to the first “exception”, that a person who claims the benefit of a deed must also take it subject to its burdens. It was further argued, with respect to the second “exception”, that where the grant of a benefit or easement in a conveyance of land is conditional on assuming a positive obligation, the obligation is binding on the person who takes the grant. It was DCC 123’s position that, on the facts of this case, Amberwood was bound by the terms of the positive covenant under either exception.

[15] The applications judge agreed with DCC 123’s position. He held that the two methods relied upon by DCC 123 were clearly adopted in English law and that both of those exceptions would apply to the facts of this case. He concluded, however, that, absent legislative reform or endorsement of the English exceptions by an appellate court, he was bound by the principle of stare decisis to follow the established rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. Consequently, he granted Amberwood’s application, declared that it was not bound to pay the interim expenses, and set aside the caution and notice of sale registered against Amberwood’s title to the Phase 2 lands.

[16] DCC 123 appealed the decision on the sole ground that the applications judge erred in finding that he was precluded by the doctrine of stare decisis from adopting the applicable English law. In response, Amberwood conceded that no precedent, binding on Stinson J. or on this court, precludes the adoption of the English exceptions. However, Amberwood argued, first, that this court, for a number of reasons, should not adopt the English exceptions and second, that even if any such exception was adopted into Ontario common law, it was not applicable to the present case.

C. ANALYSIS

(1) Analysis in a nutshell

[17] The rule that positive covenants do not run with the land has been a settled principle of the English common law for well over a century and it is undisputed that it has clearly been adopted in Canada: Parkinson v. Reid, [1966] S.C.R. 162. It appears to be equally undisputed that the rule at times causes inconvenience, that its application in some cases may even result in unfairness, and that the present state of the law should be modified to meet the needs of modern conveyancing. However, it is my view that the call for reform is not one for the courts to answer but for the Legislature. Any change in the law in this area could have complex and far-reaching effects that cannot be accurately assessed on a case by case basis. The need to preserve certainty in commercial and property transactions requires that any meaningful reform be achieved by legislation that can be drafted with careful regard to the consequences.

[18] Therefore, since positive covenants do not run with the land, Amberwood is not bound by the positive covenant to pay the interim expenses under the Reciprocal Agreement solely by virtue of having acquired the Phase 2 lands with notice of its terms. The question remains whether Amberwood is liable to pay the expenses under some other recognized legal principle.

[19] First, DCC 123 places reliance on the doctrine of benefit and burden in Halsall v. Brizell as a method of avoiding the application of the rule. The nature and scope of this doctrine will be discussed more fully later in these reasons. Suffice it to say for the purpose of this overview that, in my view, the benefit and burden doctrine is not as wide or as settled in English law as contended by DCC 123. Furthermore, the adoption of this doctrine as a recognized exception to the rule in the common law of this province, in much the same way as the abolition of the rule itself, would have complex, far-reaching and uncertain ramifications that cannot be adequately addressed on a case by case basis.

[20] The second method relied upon by DCC 123 is the conditional grant of easement. The question whether or not a provision in a conveyance is a conditional grant essentially turns on the construction of the relevant instrument, in this case the Reciprocal Agreement. In my view, there is no link between the easements conferred under the Reciprocal Agreement and the positive covenant to pay interim expenses so as to create a conditional grant within the meaning of this principle. The general clause of mutuality and reciprocity of easements, rights and provisions contained in the Reciprocal Agreement cannot be relied upon by DCC 123 to convert all positive obligations into conditional grants of easement so as to defeat the rule. As stated earlier, the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land applies despite the parties' express intention to the contrary. Hence, the applications judge erred in finding that, by virtue of section 13.1(b) of the Reciprocal Agreement, the grant of easements and benefits under section 2.3 and Article 3 was conditional upon payment of the interim expenses set out under section 2.9.

[21] In the result, for different reasons than those of the applications judge, I am of the view that he was nonetheless correct in granting Amberwood's application, and I would dismiss the appeal.

(2) Introduction

[22] In a relatively recent decision, Rhone v. Stephens, [1994] 2 All E.R. 65, the House of Lords considered the question of the enforceability of positive covenants between owners of freehold estates including, in particular, the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. The rule is commonly referred to as the rule in Austerberry v. Oldham Corp (1885), 29 Ch. D. 750 (C.A.). It is unfortunate that this case was not brought to the attention of the applications judge because the judgment in Rhone v. Stephens provides a convenient framework for discussion of the issues raised in this case. Lord Templeman, in his reasons delivered on behalf of the court, set out a useful and succinct review of the law related to covenants, including the different rules governing restrictive and positive covenants, its historical development, and its underlying rationale. Lord Templeman also acknowledged the severe criticism of the present state of the law on positive covenants and the call for legislative reform made by the Law Commission in England. He also considered, and declined, the invitation to abolish the rule in Austerberry, finding that any need for reform was a matter for Parliament. Finally, he considered and rejected the argument that the rule in Austerberry had been blunted by the benefit and burden principle. Hence, many of the same issues that are raised by the parties in this case were before the House of Lords in Rhone v. Stephens. It may be useful to set out the facts in Rhone v. Stephens before reviewing the court's analysis of the legal issues.

[23] In 1960, the owner of a house and adjoining cottage, known as Walford House, sold the cottage, since known as Walford Cottage. Walford House and Walford Cottage were under the same roof. The vendor covenanted for himself and his successors in title as owners of Walford House to maintain that part of the roof which was above Walford Cottage in good condition to the reasonable satisfaction of the purchasers and their successors in title. The conveyance also had the effect of conferring and confirming on each property the right to be supported by the other. After 1960, both properties were sold: Walford Cottage to the plaintiffs and Walford House to the defendant.

[24] In 1986 the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant claiming that the roof above Walford Cottage was leaking and that the defendant was in breach of the covenant to repair the roof. The trial judge found the defendant liable both in nuisance and on the covenant. He based his finding of liability on the covenant on the principle of benefit and burden. On appeal by the defendant, the Court of Appeal reversed the trial judge's decision on both grounds. The Court of Appeal found that, contrary to the finding of the trial judge, the plaintiffs were in fact owners of the roof over Walford Cottage and therefore had no cause of action in nuisance against the defendant owner of Walford

House. The Court of Appeal also rejected the plaintiffs' claim that the defendant was bound by the positive covenant to repair. On further appeal to the House of Lords by the plaintiffs, the appeal was dismissed. The reasons of the House of Lords, for the most part, are apposite to this case. Hence I will make extensive reference to the analysis in Rhone v. Stephens.

(3) The common law relating to covenants affecting land

At common law a person cannot be made liable upon a contract unless he was a party to it. In Cox v. Bishop (1857) 8 De GM & G 815, 44 ER 604 a lease was assigned to a man of straw and it was held that the covenants in the lease could not be enforced against an equitable assignee of the lease who had entered into possession. The covenants were not enforceable because there was no privity of contract or estate between the lessee and the assignee.

[26] The House of Lords then noted that the rigours of the common law, which do not allow covenants to be enforced by and against successors in title, were relaxed, first by the doctrines laid down in Spencer's Case (1583) 5 Co. Rep. 16a, [1558-1774] All E.R. Rep. 68, and subsequently by statutory extensions of those doctrines, resulting in different treatment being afforded at law to leaseholds. As a result of this relaxation of the rule, as between landlord and tenant, both the burden and the benefit of a covenant, which touches or concerns the land demised and is not merely collateral, run at law with the reversion and the term of the lease whether the covenant be positive or restrictive. However, as between persons interested in land other than as landlord and tenant, the law remained as established in Austerberry. At law, the benefit of a covenant may run with the land, but not the burden.

[27] The different treatment afforded to leaseholds over time was not relevant to the case in Rhone v. Stephens, hence the rationale behind it was not discussed by Lord Templeman. That aspect of the law also goes beyond the scope of the question to be decided by this court. However, for the sake of completeness, a brief reference may be made to the decision in Keppell v. Bailey (1834), 2 My. & K. 517, 39 E.R. 1042 (Ch.) where the court expressed the reasoning for the different treatment afforded to leasehold interests. This reasoning provides some insight into the rationale behind the rule relating to positive covenants. The court in Keppell v. Bailey expressed the view that while no harm arises from giving everyone the fullest latitude in binding themselves and their representatives in contract, "great detriment would arise and much confusion of rights if parties were allowed to invent new modes of holding and enjoying real property, and to impress upon their lands and tenements a peculiar character, which should follow them into all hands, however remote” (at p. 1049). The court was of the view, however, that the matter was very different in the case of covenants in a lease where the lessor or his assignees continue in the reversion while the term of the lease lasts and retain control over the land. Hence, in the case of leaseholds, as opposed to freeholds, the court held that it was not at all inconsistent with the nature of property that positive covenants affecting the land bind those who take the term of the leasehold by assignment.

[28] Hence, it would appear that the need for certainty in the ascertainment of title and its incidental rights served to maintain the traditional limits to the parties’ contractual freedom in the case of freehold estates. I now return to the analysis in Rhone v. Stephens.

[29] Despite this relaxation of the rigours of the common law with respect to leaseholds, Lord Templeman noted that the rule in Austerberry continued to apply with respect to freeholds. Hence, the rule had the following effect on the present owners of Walford House and Walford Cottage (at p. 68):

Thus cl 3 of the 1960 conveyance [the positive covenant], despite its express terms, did not confer on the owner for the time being of Walford Cottage the right at common law to compel the owner for the time being of Walford House to repair the roof or to obtain damages for breach of the covenant to repair.

[30] The plaintiffs in Rhone v. Stephens argued nonetheless that equity, if not the common law, compelled the owner of Walford House to comply with the covenant to repair the roof or to pay damages instead. This argument was rejected. Lord Templeman reiterated the principle that “equity supplements but does not contradict the common law” (at p. 68). He explained how this principle led to the enforcement of restrictive covenants in equity, in the seminal case of Tulk v. Moxhay (1848) 2 Ph 774, [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 9, and why the equitable rule established in that case cannot be extended so as to enforce positive covenants (at pp. 68-69):

My Lords, equity supplements but does not contradict the common law. When freehold land is conveyed without restriction, the conveyance confers on the purchaser the right to do with the land as he pleases provided that he does not interfere with the rights of others or infringe statutory restrictions. The conveyance may however impose restrictions which, in favour of the covenantee, deprive the purchaser of some of the rights inherent in the ownership of unrestricted land. In Tulk v. Moxhay (1848) 2 Ph 774, [1843-60] All ER Rep 9 a purchaser of land covenanted that no buildings would be erected on Leicester Square. A subsequent purchaser of Leicester Square was restrained from building. The conveyance to the original purchaser deprived him and every subsequent purchaser taking with notice of the covenant of the right, otherwise part and parcel of the freehold, to develop the square by the construction of buildings. Equity does not contradict the common law by enforcing a restrictive covenant against a successor in title of the covenantor but prevents the successor from exercising a right which he never acquired. Equity did not allow the owner of Leicester Square to build because the owner never acquired the right to build without the consent of the persons (if any) from time to time entitled to the benefit of the covenant against building. In Tulk v Moxhay 2 Ph 774 at 777-778, [1843-60] All ER Rep 9 at 11 the judgment of Lord Cottenham LC contained the following passage:

‘It is said, that the covenant being one which does not run with the land, this Court cannot enforce it; but the question is, not whether the covenant runs with the land, but whether a party shall be permitted to use the land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into by his vendor, and with notice of which he purchased.’

Equity can thus prevent or punish the breach of a negative covenant which restricts the user of land or the exercise of other rights in connection with land. Restrictive covenants deprive an owner of a right which he could otherwise exercise. Equity cannot compel an owner to comply with a positive covenant entered into by his predecessors in title without flatly contradicting the common law rule that a person cannot be made liable upon a contract unless he was a party to it. Enforcement of a positive covenant lies in contract; a positive covenant compels an owner to exercise his rights. Enforcement of a negative covenant lies in property; a negative covenant deprives the owner of a right over property. [Emphasis added.]

[31] Hence, it was reasoned that the enforcement of a negative covenant in equity did not contravene the common law rule of privity of contract because, in essence, equity was simply giving effect to a legal right whose scope was restricted by the covenant. As Lord Templeman noted in Rhone v. Stephens, there was some suggestion in the jurisprudence following Tulk v. Moxhay that any covenant affecting land was likewise enforceable in equity provided that the owner of the land had notice of the covenant prior to his purchase. However, this extension of the principle did not survive the decision of the Court of Appeal in Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Benefit Building Society (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 403 (Eng. Q.B.). The Court of Appeal in Haywood decided that, in the absence of privity of contract, it would not extend the doctrine of Tulk v. Moxhay to affirmative covenants compelling a man to lay out money or do any other act of an active character. Equity will intervene only where there is a negative covenant, expressed or implied.

For over 100 years it has been clear and accepted law that equity will enforce negative covenants against freehold land but has no power to enforce positive covenants against successors in title of the land. To enforce a positive covenant would be to enforce a personal obligation against a person who has not covenanted. To enforce negative covenants is only to treat the land as subject to a restriction.

[33] It is common ground between the parties that this is also the settled law in Ontario. Positive covenants do not run with freehold land, either at law or in equity. Hence, consonant with the result in Rhone v. Stephens, Amberwood is not bound to pay the interim expenses contained in the Reciprocal Agreement simply by reason of having acquired the land with notice of the covenant.

(4) The call for reform

[34] The need for reform in this area of the law, and the different approaches that should be adopted to effect it, informed much of the argument advanced by the parties on this appeal. The determinative issues on this appeal were framed by the parties in terms of the English “exceptions” to the rule in Austerberry and their potential application to this case. DCC 123 took the position that the English exceptions were well established and it urged this court to adopt these principles as an incremental and much needed change in the law. Amberwood, on the other hand, took the position that the existence and scope of each exception was a matter of much controversy in England and in other common law jurisdictions and that, even if either exception was found to apply to the facts of this case, any reform in this area of the law was a matter for the Legislature and not the courts.

[35] Hence, before dealing with the particular issues raised by the parties, it may be useful to briefly describe the need for reform in this area of the law, as identified by the OLRC and like bodies in some other common law jurisdictions.

[36] In its 1989 Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land, the OLRC dealt with both positive and restrictive covenants affecting land, other than those between landlord and tenant. It defined a positive covenant as “one that requires a person to do something on his or her land.” (p.1 Executive Summary).

[37] In an attempt to determine the rationale behind the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land, the OLRC made reference to the decision in Keppell v. Bailey, referred to earlier, and deduced from this decision that there were two related rationales. First, “such covenants would tend to render land inalienable” and second, “persons dealing subsequently with the land would have great difficulty in ascertaining the existence of such covenants, because they do not normally have a physical manifestation” (at p. 21).

[38] The OLRC rejected both rationales as inapplicable to the reality of conveyancing in Ontario. With respect to the concern for inalienability, the OLRC observed that “it has now been generally recognized... that [positive covenants] do not tend to render land inalienable. On the contrary, positive and negative covenants tend to enhance alienability since they operate to protect the amenities of neighbourhoods and the competitiveness of businesses” (at pp.100-01). With respect to the concern for the difficulty in ascertaining the existence of such covenants, the OLRC stated that it “is not now, and was not then, an obstacle in Ontario” (at p.22) given Ontario’s land registration system, a system that did not generally exist in England at the time of the Keppell decision.

[39] The OLRC further commented on the relatively common use of affirmative covenants despite the existing rule, and on some of the difficulties that have arisen as a result. Indeed, this case provides an example of the kind of difficulty described by the OLRC (at p. 101):

As a practical matter, the use of affirmative covenants is relatively common, particularly in connection with land developments. Positive covenants, for example, are often contained in subdivision agreements, entered into between developers and municipalities. In this context, however, positive covenants create few problems, since they have the sanction of statute. The situation is otherwise, however, with respect to covenants given by builders to the subdivider. Frequently these include positive obligations, for example, with respect to paving, sodding, and the installation of street lights. Even though builders' covenants are usually limited in time to ten or twelve years, the fact that the burden of a positive covenant does not survive an assignment of the land by the builder can cause difficulties. Similarly, covenants are often imposed upon the ultimate purchasers, either by the subdivider or by the builder. Again, they often contain positive as well as negative obligations. Once again, however, even though these obligations are usually restricted in time to ten or twelve years, the fact that the burden of a positive covenant cannot run with the land may create difficulties.

Finally, we note that the running of the burden of positive covenants is not a phenomenon entirely unknown to the law. Since privity of estate exists between a lessor and a lessee, and their respective assigns, the burden of certain leasehold covenants will run, either with the term of the lease or with the reversion, irrespective of whether the obligation is positive or negative.

In addition, the burden of positive covenants are permitted to run in the context of condominiums, which are governed in Ontario by specific legislation. However, there are many situations in which condominium legislation might not be appropriate – for example, in the case of a duplex, or other building having more than one owner, that is not large enough to be made into a statutory condominium. Like the owners of condominium units, the owners of the several units in such buildings might wish to enter into positive covenants that run with the land, particularly respecting such matters, for example, as the maintenance of common walls, decoration and landscaping.

[40] In light of the absence of any applicable rationale for the rule and of the difficulties it posed, the OLRC was of the view that the law required reform (at pp. 101-02):

We have reached the conclusion that the present law, which prohibits the running of the burden of positive covenants upon a transfer of freehold land, operates to defeat the legitimate expectations of the parties. In our view, there can be no principled rationale for a rule that would preclude neighbours from agreeing, for example, to maintain a boundary fence, or, to keep certain drains clear, such that the covenant would run with the land. Nor is it justifiable, in our view, that, in a property development providing for parks, open spaces, and other amenities, obligations to pay for the maintenance of these amenities cannot be enforced against the successors of the original contracting parties. In addition, to the extent that a variety of methods have been developed to circumvent the undesirable effect of the present law, it has been productive of much uncertainty and confusion. For the foregoing reasons, the Commission recommends that the law should be reformed to permit the burden of affirmative obligations to run upon a transfer of freehold land.

[41] The OLRC further concluded that the present law of restrictive covenants was also in need of reform because it is unduly complex and uncertain. Hence, the OLRC was of the view that the need for reform arose both from the uncertain and complex state of the law with respect to restrictive covenants, and the existing gap with respect to positive covenants.

[42] A similar need for reform has been identified in the United Kingdom and in New Zealand. Recommendations were made by the Committee on Positive Covenants Affecting Land in the United Kingdom in a Report presented to the British Parliament in 1965 and by the Law Commission in another Report laid before the British Parliament in 1984 entitled Transfer of Land: The Law of Positive and Restrictive Covenants. Recommendations for reform were made in New Zealand by the Property Law and Equity Reform Committee in a document named Report on Positive Covenants Affecting Land which was presented to the Minister of Justice in 1985.

[43] The OLRC proceeded to make specific recommendations for reform. It expressed the view that it would not be sufficient simply to import positive covenants into the common law of restrictive covenants because that law “is inherently incapable of providing adequately for positive obligations” (at p.104) and, in any event, the law on restrictive covenants itself is in need of reform. The OLRC therefore recommended that a new type of servitude should be created that would encompass both positive and negative obligations and would provide for the differing requirements of each. A number of issues are then discussed in the 1989 Report.

[44] In my view, the sheer number and complexity of issues that would have to be considered in order to address the various concerns relating to such reform of the law make it abundantly clear that any significant change requires a legislative initiative. A case by case approach would create unmanageable confusion and uncertainty in the law. By way of illustration, I note some of the questions discussed in the OLRC 1989 Report:

- what should the new “land obligation” encompass
- whether land obligations should be divided into “neighbour obligations” and “development obligations” as recommended by the Law Commission in England
- whether a land obligation should be appurtenant to an estate in land or to the land itself and whether a statutory priority provision should be implemented
- whether land obligations should always be appurtenant to land or whether they should be permitted to exist “in gross” or independently of a dominant tenement, hence allowing for enforcement by a non owner (e.g. a homeowners’ association under a building scheme)
- whether specific provisions should be made for development schemes and building schemes
- who may enforce the benefit of the land obligation and who should bear the burden
- what remedies should be available
- what prescription period should apply
- how land obligations should be varied or extinguished

[45] The OLRC further noted a number of consequential changes that would have to be made in the law. It is clear from this discussion that a number of amendments would have to be made to existing legislation to give effect to any new scheme that would allow positive covenants to run with the land, including amendments to the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 230 [now R.S.O. 1999, c. L.5], the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 445 [now R.S.O. 1990, c. R.20], the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 51 [now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.34], and the Perpetuities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 374 [now R.S.O. 1990, c. P.8].

[46] It may be useful at this point to return to the analysis in Rhone v. Stephens because the House of Lords made reference to a similar call for reform in England. Lord Templeman made reference to the Reports submitted to Parliament by the Law Commission, and noted that nothing had been done in response to them. In these circumstances, the court was invited to overrule the decision in Austerberry. Lord Templeman rejected this suggestion (at p. 72):

To do so would destroy the distinction between law and equity and to convert the rule of equity into a rule of notice. It is plain from the articles, reports and papers to which we were referred that judicial legislation to overrule the Austerberry case would create a number of difficulties, anomalies and uncertainties and affect the rights and liabilities of people who have for over 100 years bought and sold land in the knowledge, imparted at an elementary stage to every student of the law of real property, that positive covenants affecting freehold land are not directly enforceable except against the original covenantor. Parliamentary legislation to deal with the decision in the Austerberry case would require careful consideration of the consequences. Moreover, experience with leasehold tenure where positive covenants are enforceable by virtue of privity of estate has demonstrated that social injustice can be caused by logic. Parliament was obliged to intervene to prevent tenants losing their homes and being saddled with the costs of restoring to their original glory buildings which had languished through wars and economic depression for exactly 99 years.

[47] In my view, the wisdom of these observations is unassailable. Similar words of judicial restraint were echoed in R. v. York Twp., Ex Parte 125 Varsity Rd. Ltd., [1960] O.R. 238 (Ont. C.A.) where this court was urged to extend the doctrine on restrictive covenants in Tulk v. Moxhay to covenants in gross, that is, to covenants existing independently of a dominant tenement. Morden J.A. stated as follows (at pp. 243-44):

... it is, not only undesirable but in my opinion, too late now for this Court to return to the position as it was in 1848 and give countenance to a development of the doctrine along such substantially different lines; we ought, I think, to adhere to the greatly restricted scope of the doctrine in Tulk v. Moxhay as evidenced by the numerous decisions subsequent to that case. A restrictive covenant enforceable between persons other than the original parties is, in effect, an equitable interest in property. It is well recognized that decisions affecting real property upon the basis of which titles are passed and accepted should not lightly be disturbed; this is one branch of law which requires stability. As

It is a well-established principle of real property law that questions such as this one, placed at rest, should not be again agitated, even if it should be shewn that the earlier decisions are not in all respects satisfactory.

[48] These principles of judicial restraint were also reiterated in Friedmann Equity Developments Inc. v. Final Note Ltd. (2000), 188 D.L.R. (4th) 269 (S.C.C.) where the Supreme Court of Canada considered whether the sealed contract rule should be abolished. Contrary to this case, the Supreme Court rejected the contention that the rule was in need of reform. Nonetheless, the general principles that govern judicial reform of the common law set out in the judgment of the Court are entirely apposite to this case. I note some of the more relevant excerpts from the judgment of Bastarache J., writing for a unanimous Court (at pp. 290-91):

Before examining whether the criticisms raised above merit the abolition of the sealed contract rule, it is necessary to understand the principles which govern judicial reform of the common law. In the past, this Court has considered the conditions which must be present to effect a change in the common law in several cases: see, e.g., Vetrovec v. The Queen, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 811, 136 D.L.R. (3d) 89; Watkins v. Olafson, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 577; R. v. Jobidon, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 714; R. v. Salituro, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654; R. v. B. (K.G.), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 740; R. v. Robinson, [1996] 1 S.C.R. 683, 133 D.L.R. (4th) 42; Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210, 153 D.L.R. (4th) 385. From these cases, some general principles have emerged. A change in the common law must be necessary to keep the common law in step with the evolution of society (see, e.g., Salituro, at p. 670; Bow Valley, at para. 93), to clarify a legal principle (see Vetrovec, at p. 819), or to resolve an inconsistency (see Jobidon, at p. 733). In addition, the change should be incremental, and its consequences must be capable of assessment.

On the other hand, courts will not intervene where the proposed change will have complex and far-reaching effects, setting the law on an unknown course whose ramifications cannot be accurately measured: see Bow Valley, supra, at para. 93. The rationale for judicial restraint in making changes to the common law was expressed by McLachlin J. (as she then was) in Watkins, supra, as follows, at p. 760:

The court may not be in the best position to assess the deficiencies of the existing law, much less problems which may be associated with the changes it might make. The court has before it a single case; major changes in the law should be predicated on a wider view of how the rule will operate in the broad generality of cases. Moreover, the court may not be in a position to appreciate fully the economic and policy issues underlying the choice it is asked to make.

[49] For reasons set out earlier, it is my view that the law on positive covenants is one such area where courts should be wary of making changes to the common law. The Supreme Court of Canada also made a number of other observations that are of relevance to this case (at pp. 292-96):

Our common law is replete with artificial rules which, although they may appear to have no underlying rationale, promote efficiency or security in commercial transactions. Such rules, in the circumstances where they apply, must be followed to create a legally recognized and enforceable right or obligation. Parties, therefore, structure their relations with these rules in mind and the rules themselves become part of commercial reality. Commercial relations may evolve in such a way that a particular rule may become unjust and cumbersome, and may no longer serve its original purpose. When the hardship which a rule causes becomes so acute and widespread that it outweighs any purpose that it may have once served, it is certainly open to a court to make an incremental change in the law. However, there must be evidence of a change in commercial reality which makes such a change in the common law necessary.

Notwithstanding my view that there has been no change in commercial reality which makes the abolition of the sealed contract rule necessary, to effect such a change could also have unwarranted, far-reaching and complex consequences both in the law of contract and in the law of property.

The abolition of the sealed contract rule would thus amount to a fundamental reform of the common law rather than an incremental change.

To abolish the sealed contract rule for the reasons that the appellant has suggested would also have the effect of creating great uncertainty both in commercial relations and in the law itself. There are many rules in contract and property law which are historical, technical and which no longer appear to have any modern day rationale. However, they remain a part of the law.

The abolition of the sealed contract rule could also have far-reaching effects on existing contractual relationships.

...

The abolition of the sealed contract rule would have the unfair result of creating uncertainty for those who had relied on the rule in executing their contracts. To avoid uncertainty and any unfairness to those parties who have structured their commercial relationships in accordance with the sealed contract rule, any change to the law should operate prospectively. Only the Legislature has the power to create a prospective change in the law.

In my view, the need to preserve certainty in commercial relations must be considered when a court is asked to make a change to the sealed contract rule. For example, a statement that the sealed contract rule does not apply to corporations would create uncertainty as to the potential liability of all those individuals who had corporate agents insulate them from any obligations under the contract by executing it under seal. While such uncertainty may not be as widespread as that which would result from the outright abolition of the rule, such a change in the law could still have the effect of frustrating the intentions of those parties who entered into their agreements with the understanding that the rule applied. Courts should be loath to make even smaller modifications to the sealed contract rule without clear evidence that such a change is necessary to keep in step with evolving commercial reality and that it will not have unwarranted far-reaching effects.

[50] I therefore conclude that any modification to the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land should be made by the Legislature, and not by this court. Hence, Amberwood is not bound by the positive covenant to pay the interim expenses under the Reciprocal Agreement solely by virtue of having acquired the Phase 2 lands with notice of its terms. The question remains whether Amberwood is liable to pay the expenses under some other recognized legal principle.

(5) Statutory exceptions to the rule

[51] Although the Ontario Legislature has not adopted a comprehensive scheme to deal with covenants affecting freehold land, there are a number of statutory exceptions to the rule that positive covenants do not bind freehold successors in title. For example, the burden of certain positive covenants made in favour of public bodies can run with the land under the provisions of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.P.13. Similarly, the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 permits the enforcement of such covenants for condominiums governed by the statute. For various examples of other specific statutory exceptions to the rule see the following: Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. A.13, ss. 3(f)(i), 4.1 and 4.2; Building Code Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 23, ss. 8(3)(c)(iv), and 8(5); Conservation Land Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.28, ss. 3(2)-(10); Drainage Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. D.17, ss. 2(1)-(4); Forestry Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.26, ss. 2(1) and 3; Industrial and Mining Lands Compensation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.5, ss. 1-4; Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. N.2, ss. 24(2.1), 27(1) and 27(7); Ontario Heritage Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.18, ss. 22 and 37; Planning Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.13, ss. 28(10)-(11), 37(3)-(4), 41(7)(c), 41(8), 41(10), 51(16), 51(25)-(27), 70.2(2), and 70.2(5); Public Lands Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.43, ss. 46(2)-(3); and Surveys Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.30, ss. 61(1) and 61(4).

[52] The statutory exceptions to the rule do alleviate some of the difficulties that could otherwise arise from a strict application of the common law rule. However, it is common ground between the parties that no statutory exception applies to this case so as to allow the positive covenant to run with the land.

(6) Non-statutory methods to circumvent the rule

[53] The inconvenience of the rule that the burden of a positive covenant cannot run with the land has resulted in the development of a number of methods by which its effect can be circumvented so as to obtain enforcement at law. The OLRC noted some of these methods in its 1989 Report and they are further described in Megarry and Wade, The Law of Real Property, 6th ed. (London: Sweet and Maxwell, 2000) at pp. 1006-1010.

[54] The simplest and most obvious way of avoiding the rule altogether is to use a chain of covenants so as to maintain privity of contract. Indeed, if the chain had not been broken in this case by WHDC's financial difficulties, resulting in power of sale proceedings, in all likelihood the terms of the Reciprocal Agreement would have been included in any sale of the Phase 2 lands to a subsequent purchaser. Other devices, not relevant to this case, include use of a right of entry annexed to rentcharge, rights of re-entry generally, and an enlarged long lease (a long lease which can be enlarged into a fee simple under statutory power).

[55] As stated earlier, DCC 123 relies on two exceptions or methods in this case: the principle of benefit and burden, referred to as the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell, and the conditional grant. DCC 123 maintains that these two exceptions have been recognized by English courts, that they should be adopted in this province, and that Amberwood, as present owner of the Phase 2 lands, should be held liable on the covenant to pay the interim expenses under either or both of these exceptions. I will deal with each exception in turn.

(a) The doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell

[56] The applications judge described the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell in terms of the general underlying principle that "a person who claims the benefit of a deed must also take it subject to its burdens." (at para. 23, p. 676) He held that this doctrine "has been clearly adopted by the English courts." (at para. 24, p. 676) In support of this conclusion, he relied on the decision of the English Court of Appeal in E.R. Ives Investments Ltd. v. High, [1967] 1 All E. R. 504 and on the decision of the Chancery Division in Tito v. Waddell (No.2), [1977] 3 All E.R. 129. He then noted that while the principle of benefit and burden had not been applied in Canadian law, Halsall v. Brizell had been mentioned by the Supreme Court of Canada in Parkinson v. Reid. The applications judge stated as follows (at paras. 26-27, p. 677):

In that case the court held that the obligation to repair a stairway that had been damaged in a fire was a positive covenant that did not run with the land to bind successors in title. The original parties had agreed that a neighbour could use a wall as a party-wall so long as he agreed to keep the stairway in good repair. In obiter, Cartwright J. commented on the potential applicability of the benefit/burden doctrine to this type of scenario:

Assuming that so long as the appellants [the successors] made use of the last-mentioned wall as a party wall they were bound to keep the stairway in repair, they ceased to be under any such obligation when they no longer made use of the respondent's wall.

I take from this that while the general proposition that positive covenants do not run with the land remains the law in Canada, the Supreme Court might be prepared to hold that a successor who claims a benefit must also shoulder the burden, whatever its form. However, if the successor abandons its claim to the benefit, or the benefit ceases to exist, as occurred in Parkinson v. Reid, the benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell would not apply. To date, however, the Supreme Court has not expressly addressed this point.

[57] The applications judge then considered whether the benefit and burden principle could apply to the facts of this case. He concluded that it could, for the following reasons (at paras. 28-30, pp. 677-78):

In determining whether the benefit/burden doctrine could operate as an exception to the rule against positive covenants in this case, it is necessary to determine whether there is a benefit flowing from DCC 123 and the Phase I condominium to Amberwood's vacant lands.

In my view, there are such benefits. First, Amberwood is part owner of the recreational and utility units in the Phase I building. Second, those units are maintained for Amberwood by DCC 123. Third, Amberwood has the benefit of security over those units. Fourth, Amberwood has the access benefits of the other easements provided for in the reciprocal agreement. Although I agree with Amberwood that these benefits may be somewhat remote or artificial and would certainly have more significance if a second condominium was actually built on the Phase II lands, I do not interpret the doctrine from Halsall as requiring a court to analyze the extent or nature of the benefit. If Amberwood chose to abandon its claim to these benefits, it would not be bound to shoulder the burden of the interim costs. In my view, the fact that Amberwood does not wish to abandon these entitlements confirms that they can be fairly and properly characterized as true benefits flowing to the successor/owner.

Consequently, I conclude that the benefit/burden doctrine from Halsall v. Brizell could apply on the facts of this case.

[58] As stated earlier, the applications judge concluded, however, that it was not open to him to adopt the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell given the present state of the law in Canada.

[59] It is important to determine with more precision the nature and scope of the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell and to examine the extent to which it has been adopted in English law before deciding whether it should be imported into Ontario law and, if so, whether it applies to the facts of this case.

[60] In Halsall v. Brizell, purchasers of plots on a building estate were entitled under a trust deed to use private roads and other amenities, including sewers placed under the roads, and each, on purchasing a lot, covenanted to pay a just proportion of the cost of their maintenance. A question arose whether the purchasers' successors were liable for their due contribution while they made use of the roads.

[61] Upjohn J. of the Chancery Division stated first, that a covenant in the terms of the covenant to pay the maintenance cost does not run with the land. Second, he noted that the particular provisions infringed the rule against perpetuities. Notwithstanding these difficulties, he held as follows (at p. 377):

It is, however, conceded to be ancient law that a man cannot take benefit under a deed without subscribing to the obligations thereunder. If authority is required for that proposition, I refer to one sentence during the argument in Elliston v. Reacher (1) ([1908] 2 Ch. 665), where Sir Herbert Cozens-Hardy, M. R., said (ibid., at p. 669):

“It is laid down in Coke on Littleton, 230b, that a man who takes the benefit of a deed is bound by a condition contained in it though he does not execute it.”

[62] Upjohn J. concluded that if the defendants did not desire to take the benefit of the deed, they could not be liable to contribute to the maintenance cost. However since they did desire to use the roads of the park and the other benefits created by the trust deed, they were liable to contribute to the maintenance cost pursuant to the covenant.

[63] The OLRC briefly referred to the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell in its 1989 Report as a method of avoiding the rule (at p.23):

A third method of avoiding the rule is to rely upon the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell, [1957] Ch. 169, [1957] All E.R. 371. See, also, Tito v. Waddell No.2), [1977] Ch. 106, at 292 and 310, [1977] 3 All E.R. 129. This doctrine is based upon the old rule, relating to deeds, that a person who claims the benefit of a deed must also take it subject to the burdens. In the Halsall case, the purchasers of lots in a subdivision were entitled, under a trust deed, to use private roads and other amenities. Each purchaser covenanted to pay a share of the cost to maintain the amenities. The court held that their successors were liable to pay their share of the cost. The usefulness of the doctrine, however, is somewhat limited. It will operate only if there is a benefit to be claimed under the deed, and further, it will operate only so long as the assignee of the covenantor continues to claim that benefit.

[64] The OLRC made further reference to the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell later in its 1989 Report when it considered the future treatment of existing covenants after the adoption of the new recommended regime of land obligations. The OLRC recommended that the existing law continue to apply for covenants already in existence, stating in reference to this doctrine – “[w]e do not intend that this rule should be abolished” (at p.149). However, no mention is made of the fact that this doctrine has never been adopted in Canada and no further analysis of the doctrine was contained in the 1989 Report.

[65] I note from the outset what will become clear from a review of the relevant jurisprudence that the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell cannot simply be defined by reference to the underlying general principle “that a person who claims the benefit of a deed must also take it subject to the burdens”. Indeed, if the doctrine were so wide as to obligate a successor in title to all the burdens contained in the deed simply by reason of his acceptance of the benefit of the deed, it would swallow the rule. Positive covenants would run with the land. Hence, while this general principle may have informed the reasoning underlying the concession of counsel in Halsall v. Brizell, reference must be made to later applications of the doctrine to further refine it.

[66] Before referring to the subsequent jurisprudence, it is noteworthy that the decision in Halsall v. Brizell has been the subject of much debate and criticism. A frequently published commentator on English property law, F.R. Crane, has pointed out some of the weaknesses of the decision in a case comment at 21 [1957] The Conveyancer & Property Lawyer 160. He noted that the court in Halsall v. Brizell effectively by-passed both the decision in Austerberry and the rule against perpetuities, citing as only authority for doing so a brief remark by Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. during argument in Elliston v. Reacher, [1908] 2 Ch. 665 which did not form part of the judgment. R. E. Megarry (as he then was) also pointed out the frail underpinnings of Halsall in a 1957 case comment (1957), 73 L.Q.R. 154 at 155-56. He noted that the observation of Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. in Elliston v. Reacher, relied upon by Upjohn J., provided doubtful authority for the proposition since it was simply made during the address by counsel and did not form part of the judgment. Further, the passage relied upon from Coke on Littleton confined the operation of the benefit and burden rule to a party who is specifically named in a deed but who does not execute it.

[67] The subsequent case of Tito v. Waddell (No. 2) (“Tito’s case”), that has applied the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell, is of particular relevance to DCC 123’s position. Indeed, the distinction sought to be made by DCC 123 between the benefit and burden principle on the one hand, and the conditional grant on the other, stems from the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Megarry in Tito’s case.

[68] Tito’s case was lengthy and complex, involving a multitude of issues. However, it is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to discuss it in any detail. The only part of the decision that is relevant to this case is Megarry V-C’s discussion of the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell. Ironically, the frailty of Halsall v. Brizell was the subject of substantial analysis in the judgment. However, of particular relevance to the appellant’s position is Megarry V-C’s identification of two aspects (amongst others) of the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell - the conditional grant, and what Megarry V-C called the “pure principle of benefit and burden”. He described the first as a function of the creating instrument that in effect attaches conditions to the exercise of a right and thereby restricts the scope of the benefit itself, and the second as a general category where the benefit and burden, although arising under the same instrument, are independent of each other. He stated as follows (at p. 281):

(a) Conditional benefits and independent obligations. One of the most important distinctions is between what for brevity may be called conditional benefits, on the one hand, and on the other hand independent obligations. An instrument may be framed so that it confers only a conditional or qualified right, the condition or qualification being that certain restrictions shall be observed or certain burdens assumed, such as an obligation to make certain payments. Such restrictions or qualifications are an intrinsic part of the right; you take the right as it stands, and you cannot pick out the good and reject the bad. In such cases it is not only the original grantee who is bound by the burden; his successors in title are unable to take the right without also assuming the burden. The benefit and the burden have been annexed to each other ab initio, and so the benefit is only a conditional benefit. In the other class of case the right and the burden, although arising under the same instrument, are independent of each other: X grants a right to Y, and by the same instrument Y independently covenants with X to do some act. In such cases, although Y is of course bound by his covenant, questions may arise whether successors in title to Y's right can take it free from the obligations of Y's covenant, or whether they are bound by them under what for want of a better name I shall call the pure principle of benefit and burden.

[69] The two aspects of the doctrine identified by Megarry V-C in Tito's case must be read in the light of the subsequent decision by the House of Lords in Rhone v. Stephens. While the House of Lords accepted that conditions could be attached to the exercise of a power or a right, thereby rendering the conditions enforceable upon the exercise of the power or right, it rejected any notion of a “pure principle of benefit and burden” that would bind successors to burdens that stood independently of the right. Lord Templeman stated as follows (at p.73):

Mr. Munby also sought to persuade your Lordships that the effect of the decision in the Austerberry case had been blunted by the 'pure principle of benefit and burden' distilled by Megarry V-C from the authorities in Tito v. Waddell (No 2) [1977] 3 All ER 129 at 291-292, [1977] Ch 106 at 301-303. I am not prepared to recognise the 'pure principle' that any party deriving any benefit from a conveyance must accept any burden in the same conveyance. Megarry V-C relied on the decision of Upjohn J. in Halsall v. Brizell [1957] 1 All ER 371, [1957] Ch 169. In that case the defendant's predecessor in title had been granted the right to use the estate roads and sewers and had covenanted to pay a due proportion for the maintenance of these facilities. It was held that the defendant could not exercise the rights without paying his costs of ensuring that they could be exercised. Conditions can be attached to the exercise of a power in express terms or by implication. Halsall v. Brizell was just such a case and I have no difficulty in whole-heartedly agreeing with the decision. It does not follow that any condition can be rendered enforceable by attaching it to a right nor does it follow that every burden imposed by a conveyance may be enforced by depriving the covenantor's successor in title of every benefit which he enjoyed thereunder. The condition must be relevant to the exercise of the right. In Halsall v. Brizell there were reciprocal benefits and burdens enjoyed by the users of the roads and sewers. In the present case cl 2 of the 1960 conveyance imposes reciprocal benefits and burdens of support but cl 3 which imposed an obligation to repair the roof is an independent provision. In Halsall v. Brizell the defendant could, at least in theory, choose between enjoying the right and paying his proportion of the cost or alternatively giving up the right and saving his money. In the present case the owners of Walford House could not in theory or in practice be deprived of the benefit of the mutual rights of support if they failed to repair the roof.

[70] Megarry and Wade, in their text on The Law of Real Property, at pp.1008-1010, reviewed some of the relevant jurisprudence, including the decision of the English Court of Appeal in E.R. Ives Investments Ltd. relied upon by the applications judge and Tito's case, and concluded that there must now be some doubt as to their correctness and as to the precise extent of the benefit and burden principle given the subsequent decision of the House of Lords in Rhone v. Stephens. The authors comment as follows (at pp. 1009-1010):

The House of Lords has rejected any "pure" principle of benefit and burden, by which "any party deriving any benefit from a conveyance must accept any burden in the same conveyance". Although the House accepted that conditions could be attached expressly or impliedly to the exercise of a power, this was so only where the condition was "relevant to the exercise of the right". The party must, "at least in theory", be able to elect between enjoying the right and performing his obligation or renouncing the right and freeing himself of the burden. On that basis, the House held that the fact that A's roof was supported by B's property did not mean that B could enforce against A a positive covenant made by A's predecessor in title with B's to repair the roof. This approach provides little guidance as to when a party will be regarded as having a genuine choice whether or not to renounce the benefits in order to be relieved of the burdens.

The policy underlying the decision of the House seems to be to restrict the ambit of the doctrine of benefit and burden as a means of circumventing the rule that the burden of positive covenants does not run. The intention would seem to be to prompt the abolition of the rule by legislation that had been drafted with careful regard to the consequences.

[72] In my view, the case law does not support the applications judge’s finding that the benefit and burden principle has been clearly adopted by the English courts as an exception to the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. Indeed, had Rhone v. Stephens been brought to his attention, the applications judge undoubtedly would have held that the “pure” principle of benefit and burden, relied upon by DCC 123 in this case and identified as an aspect of the doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell by Megarry V-C in Tito's case, was later expressly rejected by the English courts.

[73] Further, the applications judge’s conclusion that the benefit and burden principle would apply to the facts of this case is not consonant with the English jurisprudence. He concluded that Amberwood was bound by the burden of the covenant because it had received the following benefits: part ownership of the recreational and utility units in the Phase 1 building; payment by DCC 123 for the maintenance of, and security over, those units; and easements over the Phase 1 lands. However, the simple fact that Amberwood received certain benefits upon obtaining title to the Phase 2 lands is clearly not sufficient, without more, under the English common law to render it liable under the positive covenant contained in the same instrument. In so far as the easements over the Phase 1 lands are concerned, DCC 123 has not established any correlation between those benefits and the burden of the positive covenant, so as to justify the application of the English doctrine. In so far as the benefits related to the recreational facilities are concerned, DCC 123 has not shown any user or enjoyment of the benefit by Amberwood. While DCC 123 recognizes in its supplementary factum that those requirements cause difficulties in this case, it purports to resolve the issue by submitting that an “all or nothing” principle should be adopted in Ontario so as to bind Amberwood to all the terms of the Reciprocal Agreement, whether or not there is any direct link or any de facto use or enjoyment of the intended benefits. In my view, the adoption of such a wide exception would be tantamount to abolishing the rule itself. Any successor in title would be bound by the positive covenant by reason solely of its acceptance of the deed to the land.

[74] I note further, with respect to the findings of the applications judge, that whatever rights or obligations may flow from the fact that the parties are presently co-owners of the recreational facilities to which the costs are related are irrelevant to, and beyond the scope of, the present application. The co-ownership, created not by the Reciprocal Agreement but by a later conveyance between DCC 123 and one of Amberwood’s predecessors in title, may well give rise to other issues that relate to the same interim costs, but it has no bearing on the question whether Amberwood is liable on the covenant contained in the Reciprocal Agreement.

[75] Therefore, I conclude that, on proper consideration of the scope of the English doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell, Amberwood would not be liable to pay the interim expenses on that basis if the exception were adopted in Ontario law. In any event, it is my view that, having regard to the uncertainties and the many frailties of the existing common law in England in this area of the law, it would be inadvisable to adopt these principles in Ontario. Indeed, a review of the English experience with the doctrine of Halsall v. Brizell, lends further support to the conclusion that any reform to the rule in Austerberry is best left to the Legislature. It would appear from many of the commentaries that the English adoption of the benefit and burden exception may have created more problems than it has solved.

[76] Quite apart from the uncertainties that the adoption of the exception could create in other existing commercial relationships, it is my view that the application of the benefit and burden principle in this case could give rise to a multitude of other issues, particularly in the event of non-compliance. I pose but a few hypothetical questions by way of example. What benefits would Amberwood lose if it failed to pay the interim costs? Would it simply lose any right to use the shared facilities? Or would all the easements be extinguished? Could any or all of these benefits be revived upon paying the arrears? Could the benefits be revived at any time by payment of the arrears whether it be by Amberwood or a subsequent purchaser? Or would payment have to be made within a reasonable time? Would Amberwood be liable to lose the benefit of the land itself because it did not pay the interim costs? Are these interim costs to be paid indefinitely, even if no second tower is ever built on the Phase 2 lands?

[77] While issues of this kind are not at all remarkable in the context of a contractual dispute between parties, they do create much uncertainty when they arise by reason of a covenant that runs with the land because they affect the certainty of title. Indeed, in this case, Amberwood has sold the Phase 2 lands. How then would the subsequent purchaser's title to the lands be affected by the answer to these hypothetical questions? These questions exemplify some of the issues identified by the OLRC in its 1989 Report as matters that would need to be addressed by the Legislature under any scheme allowing for positive covenants to run with the land.

[78] For these reasons, I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

(b) The conditional grant

[79] The applications judge also considered whether the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land was subject to the conditional grant exception in English law and whether this exception would apply to this case. He described the exception by reference to Halsbury's Laws of England as follows (at para.32, p. 678):

If the facts establish that the granting of a benefit or easement was conditional on assuming the positive obligation, then the obligation is binding. Where the obligation is framed so as to constitute a continuing obligation upon which the grant of the easement was conditional, the obligation can be imposed as an incident of the easement itself, and not merely a liability purporting to run with the land: Halsbury's Laws of England 4th ed., Vol. 14 at 79.

[80] The applications judge relied on the decision of the English Court of Appeal in Re Ellenborough Park, [1955] 3 All E.R. 667 as authority for the proposition that a positive obligation runs with the land when it forms part of an easement or benefit that is made conditional on assuming it. He also referred to Tito's case. He concluded this review of the English common law with the following observations (at para. 37, p. 679):

Once again, this “conditional grant” approach to circumventing the rule against positive covenants flowing with the land, is an English innovation. Although there does not seem to be any Canadian law which expressly recognizes or applies the conditional grant exception, such an exception is consistent with the benefit/burden doctrine. In my view, the conditional grant exception is essentially a form of the benefit/burden doctrine. The only difference is that the burden is directly annexed to the grant of the benefit, instead of the subject of an independent covenant. The notion of a conditional grant exception is also consistent with the recognition that the ancient rule against positive covenants flowing with title has many problematic implications. Such an exception would also function to protect legitimate party expectations.

[81] The applications judge then concluded that this exception would apply to this case on the basis of article 13.1(b) of the Reciprocal Agreement. I again reproduce this general provision for convenience:

(b) The parties hereto hereby acknowledge and agree that the Easements, rights and provisions as set forth in this Agreement establish a basis for mutual and reciprocal use and enjoyment of such Easements, rights and provisions and as an integral and material consideration for the continuing right to such use and enjoyment each party hereto does hereby accept, agree to assume the burden of, and to be bound by each and every of the covenants entered into by them in this Agreement.

[82] The applications judge concluded as follows (at para. 39, p. 679):

In my view, the language of that section makes it clear that the payment of interim costs, as one of the covenants in the reciprocal agreement, was intended to be a condition upon which the other easements were conveyed. The provision does not support Amberwood's submission that the cost-sharing obligations should be viewed as distinct from the scheme for mutual easements. To the contrary, paragraph 13.1(b) seems to envision a building project in which the owners would share costs in exchange for shared access and ownership. To undermine this clear intention by severing the cost obligations from the overall deal would amount to dismantling part of an intricate, complex, and well-planned scheme, and defeating legitimate party expectations.

[83] In the result, the applications judge held that the conditional grant exception would apply to this case but that its adoption was also barred by the present state of the jurisprudence.

[84] In my view, the applications judge's observation that the "conditional grant" exception "is essentially a form of the benefit/burden doctrine" accurately describes the position taken by DCC 123 in this case and, in turn, leads me to the conclusion that this second argument must fail, essentially for the same reasons that I have rejected the first exception.

[85] I note at the outset that the principle from Halsbury's Laws of England relied upon by the applications judge seems to me to be consonant with the rule in Austerberry. I repeat it here for convenience:

If the facts establish that the granting of a benefit or easement was conditional on assuming the positive obligation, then the obligation is binding. Where the obligation is framed so as to constitute a continuing obligation upon which the grant of the easement was conditional, the obligation can be imposed as an incident of the easement itself, and not merely a liability purporting to run with the land. [Emphasis added.]

[86] Hence, as a matter of construction of the creating instrument itself, if a grant of benefit or easement is framed as conditional upon the continuing performance of a positive obligation, the positive obligation may well be enforceable, not because it would run with the land, but because the condition would serve to limit the scope of the grant itself. In effect, the law would simply be giving effect to the grant. Indeed, as discussed earlier in this judgment at paragraphs 30 and 31, much the same reasoning underlies the law of restrictive covenants.

[87] However, none of the grants of benefit or easement contained in the Reciprocal Agreement are framed in this way. Neither section 2.3 nor Article 3 of the Reciprocal Agreement is expressed to be conditional or dependant upon performance of all obligations under section 2.9. Further, it is my view that section 13.1(b) is far too general to create a conditional grant within the meaning of the principle stated in Halsbury's Laws of England. At its highest, it can be said that the parties to the Reciprocal Agreement have attempted to write in, as a term of their agreement, essentially the same general benefit and burden principle, the adoption of which was urged upon this court as a first exception to the rule. In my view, section 13.1(b) achieves no more, and its application would give rise to the same difficulties that I have discussed earlier. The attempt to create a contractual exception to the rule in Austerberry, while binding on the original parties to the Reciprocal Agreement, cannot displace the rule that positive covenants do not bind successors-in-title. It is undisputed in English and Canadian law that the rule that positive covenants do not run with the land governs despite any express intention to the contrary contained in the agreement. Indeed, if the applications judge was correct in his conclusion that section 13.1(b) effectively created an exception to the rule, it would be open to anyone to simply abolish the rule at the stroke of a pen. All that would be required would be a general statement of intent that the continuing right to the use and enjoyment of all the benefits in an agreement was conditional upon the acceptance of the burden contained in any of the covenants. The recognition of such a wide exception would constitute a profound change in the law.

[88] Hence, in the circumstances of this case, I would not give effect to this second ground of appeal. I would conclude that Amberwood is not bound to pay the interim expenses on the basis of the positive covenant contained in the Reciprocal Agreement.

DISPOSITION

[89] For these reasons, I would conclude that the applications judge was correct in granting Amberwood's application and I would dismiss the appeal with costs. In order to comply with the rule that now requires this court to fix costs, Amberwood is to file a bill of costs and written submissions with the court within 10 days from the release of this court's decision, DCC 123 is to respond in writing within a further 10 days after filing, and a reply may be submitted within 5 days thereafter.

“Charron J.A.”

MACPHERSON J.A. (Dissenting):(1) Introduction

[90] I have had the benefit of reading the reasons of my colleague, Charron J.A. I agree with her that it would be inappropriate for this court to abolish the rule in Austerberry v. Corporation of Oldham (1885), 29 Ch.D. 750 (C.A.) (“Austerberry”). I also agree with her that the application judge, Stinson J., erred in holding that the doctrine of stare decisis precluded him from adopting the English ‘exceptions’ to the rule in Austerberry.

[91] However, with respect, I do not agree with my colleague’s analysis or conclusions relating to the benefit-burden and conditional grant exceptions to the rule in Austerberry. In my view, both exceptions should be adopted into the law of Ontario. Their application in this case would result in the appeal being allowed.

(2) Reform of common law principles and the role of the judiciary

[92] The application of the rule in Austerberry to the present case would require that the appeal be dismissed. Amberwood would have no obligation to pay its share of the interim costs relating to water treatment, air conditioner maintenance and an on site security guard set out in section 2.9 of the Reciprocal Easement and Cost Sharing Agreement.

[93] The question that arises, however, is whether the rule in Austerberry is, or should be, an absolute rule or whether it should admit of exceptions? In my view, it is important to address the topic of whether the law of real property in Ontario should recognize certain qualifications on, or exceptions to, the rule in Austerberry. I say this for several reasons.

[94] First, the original historical rationales for the rule in Austerberry are simply not as relevant in Ontario in 2002 as they may have been in the United Kingdom in 1885. This point was succinctly summarized by the application judge in the present case:

The 1989 Ontario Law Reform Commission Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land at 21 considered the rule against positive covenants flowing with title and the two reasons typically advanced for its existence. First, such covenants tended to render land inalienable. Second, persons dealing subsequently with the land would have great difficulty ascertaining the existence of such covenants, because they do not normally have a physical manifestation.

The OLRC considered and rejected these rationales. The OLRC Report noted at 100 that it has now been generally recognized that such restrictions do not render land inalienable. Rather, both positive and negative covenants tend to enhance alienability, since they operate to protect the amenities of neighbourhoods and competitiveness of businesses. The second rationale that gave rise to the ancient rule has never been an obstacle in Ontario, since a system of land registration has existed since the province was created.

[95] A similar observation on the inalienability aspect of the rationale for the rule in Austerberry was made by Cambridge University law professor Kevin Gray in his text, Elements of Land Law (2nd. ed., 1993), at pp. 1133-34:

Although the principle of Austerberry v. Oldham Corpn was clearly motivated by a policy that land should remain unfettered for future generations, the implications of that decision are nowadays a matter of considerable disadvantage. It has been pointed out, for instance, that the principle ‘impedes transactions in land which have become socially desirable’. The anxiety of judges in the 19th century to limit the kinds of incumbrance which might be imposed upon the freehold estate is not particularly apposite under the vastly changed conditions of modern life where most people live in large cities. The property law of the 19th century was highly individualistic and made little provision for ‘freeholders living like battery hens in urban developments’ where much of the land area may consist of amenities which belong to none personally but which are socially necessary for all.

[96] Second, the rule in Austerberry is simply too harsh if it is applied in all cases. In a comprehensive study of all aspects of the law relating to covenants entitled Transfer of Land: The Law of Positive and Restrictive Covenants (1984), The Law Commission of the United Kingdom stated, at p. 19:

The greatest and clearest deficiency in the law . . . is that the burden of a positive covenant entered into between nearby landowners does not in any circumstances run with the land of the covenantor. [Emphasis added.]

In a similar vein, Professors Bradbrook, MacCallum and Moore, the authors of the leading text Australian Real Property Law (2nd. ed., 1997), have described the rule in Austerberry as “inflexible” and have documented a number of methods for “avoid[ing] the severity of the rule” (pp. 18-6 – 18-7).

[97] Third, in most common law jurisdictions where the rule in Austerberry applies there has been substantial modification of the rule by legislatures. This is particularly so in the relatively new and rapidly growing domain of condominiums: see Ziff, Principles of Property Law (3rd. ed., 2000) at p. 366. Indeed, in Ontario, as Charron J.A. points out in her reasons, there are now at least twelve statutes that derogate from the application of the rule in Austerberry in certain situations.

[98] Amberwood contends that the existence of these statutory exceptions implies that the legislature has endorsed the rule in Austerberry in all other situations, including the situation in this case. I disagree. The more logical interpretation, in my view, is that the legislature has on occasion dealt with discrete problems presented by the “inflexible” and “severe” rule. The legislature’s solutions to those problems are not a warning to the courts that they should abdicate their traditional role as interpreters and developers of the common law in this domain.

[99] Fourth, and related to the previous point, the rule in Austerberry is a common law rule created by the courts in the United Kingdom and adopted by courts in other jurisdictions, including Canada: see Parkinson v. Reid, [1966] S.C.R. 162. I see no reason why the courts should not regard it as their function to assess, in a principled way, whether the rule should apply in every case and to consider whether exceptions need to be developed to deal with unforeseen situations or cases where the strict application of the rule would lead to injustice. That process is the essence of the common law. As Justice Cardozo said in The Nature of the Judicial Process (1921), the book flowing from the Storrs Lectures delivered at Yale University: “There are gaps to be filled. There are doubts and ambiguities to be cleared. There are hardships and wrongs to be mitigated if not avoided” (p. 14).

[100] Having concluded that it is appropriate for the courts to address the issue of exceptions to the rule in Austerberry, the question becomes: what are the possible exceptions and should any of them be applied in the present case? In the last half-century, the case law in the United Kingdom has provided two possible exceptions – the benefit-burden exception and the conditional grant exception. I will consider them in turn.

(3) The benefit-burden exception

[101] The benefit–burden exception is easy to state – “he who takes the benefit of the transaction must also bear the burden”: see Tito v. Waddell (No. 2), [1977] 1 Ch. 106 at 289, per Megarry V.-C. The benefits and burdens can arise out of entirely separate obligations. As explained by Professor Ziff in *Positive Covenants Running With Land: A Castaway on Ocean Island?*¹ (1989), 27 Alta. L. R. 354 at 356 (“Positive Covenants”):

The principle of benefit and burden applies where, as a matter of construction, the benefits and burdens are created as independent obligations, for a central feature of the doctrine is to tether previously separate promises.

[102] The first case in which the benefit-burden exception was applied was Halsall v. Brizell, [1957] 1 All E.R. 371 (Ch. D.) (“Halsall”). In that case, the purchasers of lots in a subdivision were entitled under a trust deed to use private roads and other amenities. Each purchaser covenanted to pay a share of the costs to maintain the amenities. This is a classic positive covenant squarely within the rule in Austerberry.

[103] The court held that the successors to the original covenantors were liable to pay their share of the costs. Upjohn J. was well aware that he was dealing with positive covenants. He observed that the successors could not be sued on the covenants in the original deed because “a positive covenant . . . does not run with the land” (p. 377). However, he continued, at p. 377:

It is, however, conceded to be ancient law that a man cannot take benefit under a deed without subscribing to the obligations thereunder. If authority is required for that proposition, I refer to one sentence during the argument in Elliston v. Reacher, [1908] 2 Ch. 665, where Sir Herbert Cozens-Hardy, M.R., said, at p. 669:

It is laid down in Coke on Littleton, 230b, that a man who takes the benefit of a deed is bound by a condition contained in it though he does not execute it.

If the defendants did not desire to take the benefit of this deed, for the reasons that I have given they could not be under any liability to pay the obligations thereunder. They do desire, however, to take the benefit of this deed. They have no right to use the sewers which are vested in the plaintiffs, and I cannot see that they have any right, apart from the deed, to use the roads of the park which lead to their particular house, No. 22, Salisbury Road . . . Therefore, it seems to me that the defendants here cannot, if they desire to use their house, as they do, take advantage of the trusts concerning the user of the roads contained in the deed and the other benefits created by it without undertaking the obligations thereunder. On that principle it seems to me that they are bound by this deed, if they desire to take its benefits.

[104] The analysis and result in Halsall were almost immediately acclaimed in important quarters. An editorial note annexed to the report of the case in the All England Law Reports said that the conclusion was supported by two legal maxims, the Latin maxim qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus (he who receives the advantage ought also to suffer the burden) and the Scottish rule that one cannot both approbate and reprobate (p. 372). Favourable case comments by Professor H.W.R. Wade and Robert Megarry appeared in, respectively, [1957] C.L.J. 35 and (1957), 73 L.Q.R. 154. Professor Wade wrote that “[i]n Halsall v. Brizell . . . a method seems to have been found for making the burden of a positive covenant run with land very effectively” (p. 35). In the latter comment, Mr. Megarry concluded, at p. 156:

What plainly would be unjust would be to allow the successors in title to rely on only those portions of the covenants which benefit them, and reject the rest, just as a legatee must accept or reject a legacy as a whole, and not accept the beneficial part and disclaim the remaining burdensome parts: see, e.g. Re Joel, [1943] Ch. 311. Halsall v. Brizell is plainly an important decision of which more will be heard. Those concerned with the development of estates, and perhaps especially those who frame schemes for freehold flats, now have at their disposal a flexible means of enforcing control against successors in title even in matters of positive obligation.

[105] Halsall was applied, and extended to parol agreements, in E.R. Ives Investments Ltd. v. High, [1967] 1 All E.R. 504 (C.A.) (“Ives Investments”). In that case, the plaintiffs’ predecessor in title, Mr. Westgate, and the defendant, Mr. High, bought adjacent building sites. The foundations of Westgate’s building trespassed under High’s land. Because Westgate and High were, in Danckwert L.J.'s words, "sensible and reasonable neighbours" (p. 509), they discussed the situation and reached an agreement – Westgate's foundation could stay in place and High would have access across Westgate's yard to a side street. High used Westgate's yard for his car, built a garage on his property which could only be accessed from Westgate's yard, and even paid a portion of the costs of re-surfacing Westgate's yard. Eventually, Westgate's property passed into the hands of E.R. Ives Investments Ltd. which challenged High's right of way and sought an injunction restraining High from exercising his right of way across the passage. The trial judge refused the injunction.

[106] On appeal to the Court of Appeal, all three judges delivered reasons. All cited Halsall with approval. Lord Denning said, at p. 507:

When adjoining owners of land make an agreement to secure continuing rights and benefits for each of them in or over the land of the other, neither of them can take the benefit of the agreement and throw over the burden of it. This applies not only to the original parties, but also to their successors. The successor who takes the continuing benefit must take it subject to the continuing burden. This principle has been applied . . . to purchasers of houses on a building estate who had the benefit of using the roads and were subject to the burden of contributing to the upkeep (see Halsall v. Brizell . . .). The principle clearly applies in the present case. The owners of the block of flats have the benefit of having their foundations in the defendant's land. So long as they take that benefit, they must shoulder the burden. They must observe the condition on which the benefit was granted, namely, they must allow the defendant and his successors to have access over their yard Conversely, so long as the defendant takes the benefit of the access, he must permit the block of flats to keep their foundations in his land.

Leave to appeal to the House of Lords was refused.

[107] The third and, without question, the leading English case applying the benefit-burden principle is Tito v. Waddell (No. 2), supra, ("Tito"). Tito is a case on a grand scale. The trial lasted 111 days in 1975, 98 days in 1976 and 3 days in 1977. The judgment written by Vice-Chancellor Megarry (who, as Mr. Megarry, had written the favourable case comment on Halsall 20 years earlier) was 241 pages in the law report and took four days to read in open court.

[108] The facts in Tito are from another age and reveal, in Professor Ziff's words, "a measure of corporate and imperial avarice" : see Positive Covenants, at p. 355. In 1900, phosphate was discovered on Ocean Island. The island was called Banaba by the inhabitants who were known as Banabans. In the same year, the island became a British settlement. The land on Ocean Island was divided up into a large number of small plots (most of them being less than one acre) owned by individual Banabans or groups of Banabans. A British company was given a licence to mine the phosphate on the island. In 1913, an agreement was reached among the mining company, the Colonial Office, the resident Commissioner and the landowners. The mining company acquired mining rights in return for the payment of certain sums to the landowners and royalties to the government. The agreement also provided that after all the phosphate was removed from the land, the worked-out lands would be returned to the original owners. The company was required by the agreement to "replant such lands – whenever possible – with coconuts and other food-bearing trees, both in the lands already worked out and in those to be worked out".

[109] In 1920, the governments of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand purchased the undertakings of the mining company on Ocean Island and the rights over the mining operations were vested in three Phosphate Commissioners (one from each country). In 1971, a group of Banabans, including Rotan Tito, filed suit against the current Commissioners, seeking performance of the replanting obligation which had become due.

[110] The replanting obligation was a positive covenant; it would have required the Commissioners to spend more money to comply with it. Thus, if the rule in Austerberry applied, the Commissioners, successors to the original covenantors, could not be forced to fulfil the replanting obligation.

[111] Megarry V.-C. was not prepared to accept such a result. He engaged in an extensive analysis of "the principle that he who takes the benefit of a transaction must also bear the burden" (p. 289). He divided the principle into two categories, conditional benefits and "the pure principle of benefit and burden" (p. 290). He described, and differentiated between, these two categories in this fashion, at p. 290:

CONDITIONAL BENEFITS AND INDEPENDENT OBLIGATIONS. One of the most important distinctions is between what for brevity may be called conditional benefits, on the one hand, and on the other hand independent obligations. An instrument may be framed so that it confers only a conditional or qualified right, the condition or qualification being that certain restrictions shall be observed or certain burdens assumed, such as an obligation to make certain payments. Such restrictions or qualifications are an intrinsic part of the right: you take the right as it stands, and you cannot pick out the good and reject the bad. In such cases it is not only the original grantee who is bound by the burden; his successors in title are unable to take the right without also assuming the burden. The benefit and the burden have been annexed to each other ab initio, and so the benefit is only a conditional benefit. In the other class of case the right and the burden, although arising under the same instrument, are independent of each other: X grants a right to Y, and by the same instrument Y independently covenants with X to do some act. In such cases, although Y is of course bound by his covenant, questions may arise whether successors in title to Y's right can take it free from the obligations of Y's covenant, or whether they are bound by them under what for want of a better name I shall call the pure principle of benefit and burden.

[112] Megarry V.-C. engaged in an extensive analysis of many authorities and dealt openly with the perceived problems of the benefit-burden principle in a real property context. In particular, he discussed at length Halsall which he regarded as the leading case in the pure principle of benefit and burden category. He was well aware of the criticisms that had been made of Halsall – that Upjohn J.'s conclusion on the benefit-burden issue was obiter, was based on a concession by counsel, and involved reliance on a comment during argument (not a decision) by a judge (Cozens-Hardy M.R.) in a previous case.

[113] In spite of these difficulties concerning Halsall, in the end Megarry V.-C. clearly approved of it. He concluded, at p. 295:

Let it be accepted that a degree of historical frailty can be detected in the forensic process in this sphere, and let it also be accepted that, at any rate on one view, what Upjohn J. said on the point was not necessary for his decision and forms no part of his ratio decidendi. Accept all that, and there still remains the fact that, quite apart from other authorities, the propositions enunciated by Cozens-Hardy M.R. and Upjohn J. seemed right to them. Couple that with the simple principle of fairness and consistency that I have mentioned, and it will be seen that there is good reason why I should be ready to adopt and apply the broader proposition that has emerged from the technicalities of past ages.

[114] Applying “the broader proposition” or “the pure principle of benefit and burden”, Megarry V.-C. held that the current Commissioners had an obligation to comply with the replanting covenant. They had received, and exercised, the benefit of substantial mining rights. The burden of replanting needed, therefore, to be respected.

[115] The trilogy of Halsall, Ives Investments and Tito created a solid foundation in English law for a benefit-burden exception to the rule in Austerberry. However, blunt and strong judicial criticism of the trilogy, especially Tito, was not long in coming.

[116] By far the strongest criticism came in an Australian case, Government Insurance Office (N.S.W.) v. K.A. Reed Services Pty. Ltd., [1988] V.R. 829 (Vict. S.C.) (“Reed Services”). Although that case could have been resolved on the basis that the successor to a positive covenant had no notice of it (“The appellant, being entirely ignorant of the agreement, could not be said to be taking its benefit”: p. 841), the full court, speaking through Brooking J., went out of its way to reject the benefit-burden exception. Brooking J. criticized the legal pedigree, namely Halsall, of the pure principle of benefit and burden, expressed concerns about the limits of the principle, called it “a mere maxim masquerading as a rule of law, false and misleading . . . when read literally” (p. 841) and concluded, at pp. 840-41:

I am, with the greatest respect, unable to accept that there exists a principle of benefit and burden, whether as formulated by Megarry V.-C. [Tito] or as laid down either by Lord Denning M.R. or by Danckwerts L.J. [Ives Investments] . . . It confounds the law relating to covenants affecting land.

I have dealt at some length with the law on this subject because of my impression that the “pure principle” now bids fair to entrench itself in our jurisprudence and because of my clear view that it must, in the interests of certainty and sound doctrine, be repelled.

[117] A less lengthy (indeed it is only a single paragraph) but nevertheless important (because of its source) critique of Tito and the benefit-burden exception to the rule in Austerberry is contained in Rhone v. Stephens, [1994] 2 All E.R. 65 (H.L.) (“Rhone”). In that case, in 1960 the owners of a house and an adjoining cottage, which were under the same roof, sold the cottage. In the conveyance, the vendor covenanted for himself and his successors in title as the owners of the house to maintain that part of the roof of the house which was above the cottage in good condition to the reasonable satisfaction of the purchasers and their successors in title. Since 1960 both properties had been sold. In 1986, the plaintiffs, who then owned the cottage, brought an action against the defendant claiming that the roof above the cottage was leaking and that the defendant was in breach of the covenant to repair the roof.

[118] The House of Lords rejected the plaintiffs' position. The law lords expressly affirmed the rule in Austerberry. In a single paragraph, the court, speaking through Lord Templeman, considered the plaintiffs' submission that the defendant, who had the benefit of the shared roof, should be required to bear the burden of repairing the roof pursuant to the covenant on the basis of the benefit-burden exception. Lord Templeman said, at p. 73:

Mr. Munby also sought to persuade your Lordships that the effect of the decision in the Austerberry case had been blunted by the 'pure principle of benefit and burden' distilled by Megarry V-C from the authorities in Tito v Waddell (No 2) [1977] 3 All ER 129 at 291-292, [1977] Ch 106 at 301-303. I am not prepared to recognise the 'pure principle' that any party deriving any benefit from a conveyance must accept any burden in the same conveyance. Megarry V-C relied on the decision of Upjohn J in Halsall v. Brizell [1957] 1 All ER 371, [1957] Ch 169. In that case the defendant's predecessor in title had been granted the right to use the estate roads and sewers and had covenanted to pay a due proportion for the maintenance of these facilities. It was held that the defendant could not exercise the rights without paying his costs of ensuring that they could be exercised. Conditions can be attached to the exercise of a power in express terms or by implication. Halsall v. Brizell was just such a case and I have no difficulty in whole-heartedly agreeing with the decision. It does not follow that any condition can be rendered enforceable by attaching it to a right nor does it follow that every burden imposed by a conveyance may be enforced by depriving the covenantor's successor in title of every benefit which he enjoyed thereunder. The condition must be relevant to the exercise of the right. In Halsall v. Brizell there were reciprocal benefits and burdens enjoyed by the users of the roads and sewers. In the present case cl 2 of the 1960 conveyance imposes reciprocal benefits and burdens of support but cl 3 which imposed an obligation to repair the roof is an independent provision. In Halsall v. Brizell the defendant could, at least in theory, choose between enjoying the right and paying his proportion of the cost or alternatively giving up the right and saving his money. In the present case the owners of Walford House could not in theory or in practice be deprived of the benefit of the mutual rights of support if they failed to repair the roof.

[119] In my view, this is a surprising paragraph, for two reasons. First, it begins with a blunt rejection, without reasons, of the pure principle of benefit and burden. The lack of analysis by the House of Lords is surprising in light of the comprehensive, and fairly presented, discussion of the principle in Tito: see N. P. Gravells, Enforcement of Positive Covenants Affecting Freehold Land (1994), 110 L.Q.R. 346 at 349 (“[Lord Templeman’s] formulation of the pure principle does not fairly represent the extensive discussion in Tito v. Waddell (No. 2)”). Second, the House of Lords appears to expressly approve of the conditional grant exception to the rule in Austerberry. Moreover, the law lords’ approval flows directly from its “whole-hearted” agreement with Halsall. This is also surprising because in Tito Megarry V.-C. had described Halsall as the genesis of the pure principle of benefit and burden, not as an example of the conditional grant exception.

[120] Against this background of the case law, I turn to the academic commentary on the benefit-burden exception to the rule in Austerberry. The commentary has been recently, just as it was immediately after Halsall in 1957 (see comments by Megarry, supra, and Wade, supra), largely complimentary. Leading scholars express concerns about the antecedents of the exception (especially some of Upjohn J.’s reasoning in Halsall), the factors to be taken into account in analyzing benefit and burden, and the reach and implications of the exception. However, in the end most scholars think that the benefit-burden exception plays a useful role in real property law.

[121] Professor Bruce Ziff, a leading Canadian property law scholar, in his comprehensive and excellent article Positive Covenants, favoured the analysis in Tito to that in Reed Services and concluded, at p. 372:

[I]ncremental adjustments through the caselaw should not be regarded with surprise or dismay. There are no compelling reasons why the schemes sought in Reed Services and Tito should not be regarded as permissible as an ordinary incident of private property ownership. In both cases, allowing affirmative burdens to run with land would have enabled the parties to meet their intended objectives in a straightforward and inexpensive fashion.

[122] Professor E.P. Aughterson, an Australian scholar who has written extensively on property law, also favoured the analysis in Tito to that in Reed Services. In the concluding section of his article In Defence of the Benefit and Burden Principle (1991), 65 A.L.J. 319 at 331, he said:

It has been suggested, above, that the scope of the benefit and burden principle is sufficiently clear to allow its application with a reasonable degree of precision and that other principles are not a bar to its adoption. Rather, various devices, such as chains of indemnities, restrictive covenants, estoppel and rent charges, as well as the benefit and burden principle, have evolved in order to meet the unsatisfactory consequences of the rule that the burden of positive covenants does not run with the land. None of these devices, in themselves, provide a comprehensive solution. The benefit and burden principle is no exception. It operates only where a benefit can be given and continues only while the benefit is sufficiently valuable for the covenantor's successor to continue to claim it. Nevertheless, it is another weapon in an armoury which might be used to militate against a common law rule which can operate unfairly in some instances.

[123] In the United Kingdom, Professor Christine Davis has recently written a thoughtful article, The Principle of Benefit and Burden (1998), 57 C.L.J. 522. The value of this article is that Professor Davis considers a wide variety of applications of the benefit-burden principle in several areas of private law, including real property. She deals extensively with objections to the pure principle of benefit and burden and concludes that they “relate largely to the fact that its limits are unclear and that it has potentially far-reaching effects” (p. 548). However, in the end Professor Davis emerges as a strong supporter of the principle of benefit and burden and of its leading case authorities in the real property domain, Halsall and Tito. She concludes, at pp. 552-53:

It is arguable that “benefit and burden” is a principle, reasonably clear in its application, that promotes fairness and, consequently, far greater use should be made of it. It seems only fair that a right or benefit originally granted subject to a condition or linked with a reciprocal right or obligation should remain conditional or linked. In recent years the courts have been keen to make use of other principles that can be seen to achieve fairness in the circumstances and in the light of the conduct of the parties, such as constructive trusts and proprietary estoppel. For example, a purchaser of land may be bound by means of a constructive trust by a contractual licence or unregistered registrable interest where his conscience is affected because of the circumstances surrounding the assignment. Why should his conscience not also be affected by the circumstances of the grant, at least where he has knowledge of them, combined with his later conduct in taking the benefit? Perhaps the only justifiable distinction between the principle of benefit and burden on the one hand and the constructive trust and doctrine of proprietary estoppel on the other hand is that the latter are discretionary in their application or effects whereas the former is not. Nevertheless, provided that the courts reach a satisfactory conclusion in relation to issues such as the need for knowledge so as to ensure that the principle of benefit and burden is fair to all concerned, it is arguable that the principle of benefit and burden is a useful doctrine which should be invoked by the courts whenever the circumstances permit.

[124] Based on this review of the leading case authorities and some of the academic and professional commentary, the question becomes: should the principle of benefit and burden be adopted in Ontario as an exception to the rule in Austerberry?

[125] I begin by noting that, in my view, it is open to Canadian courts to adopt the benefit-burden exception if they think it has merit. In a real property context, the exception has not been rejected by any appellate court. Indeed, the exception and its originating case, Halsall, were mentioned by Cartwright J. in Parkinson v. Reid. In that case, the court affirmed the general rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. Accordingly, the successor in title to a covenant requiring repair of a stairway was not obligated to comply with the covenant. However, Cartwright J. observed, at pp. 168-69:

Assuming that so long as the appellants made use of the last-mentioned wall as a party wall they were bound to keep the stairway in repair, they ceased to be under any such obligation when they no longer made use of the respondent's wall. It is not suggested that the appellants have made any use of that wall since their building was destroyed by fire. A case in which this principle was applied is Halsall v. Brizell. . . .

[126] Turning to the fundamental question, I can state my view that the benefit-burden exception to the rule in Austerberry should be adopted. I believe that the analysis in Halsall, Ives Investments and Tito is preferable to the analysis in Reed Services and Rhone. I also find persuasive the strong academic and professional support for the exception, extending from Professor Wade and Mr. Megarry in 1957 to Professor Aughterson in Australia, Professor Davis in the United Kingdom and Professor Ziff in Canada in recent years.

[127] The final question then becomes: is the exception applicable in this case? I begin my answer to this question by noting that all of the judges and academics who favour the exception admit that there are problems with it. In Tito, Megarry V.-C. was particularly candid on this point. He began the summary of his conclusions with this sentence: “I emerge from a consideration of the authorities put before me with a number of conclusions and a number of uncertainties” (p. 302).

[128] In spite of problems and uncertainties, in my view it is possible, based on the case authorities and the academic commentary, to state the components of the benefit-burden exception with a reasonable degree of clarity.

[129] First, the assignee of a positive covenant must have notice of it. The burden of such a covenant cannot attach to a person who was not aware of it. That will rarely be an issue in Ontario where a wide variety of documents relating to land can be registered and are thus accessible.

[130] Second, a positive covenant which imposes a burden on an assignee must be accompanied by a benefit. The burden will not run in isolation.

[131] Third, it may be that there is some type of qualitative threshold in the benefit and burden analysis. Megarry V.-C. seemed to envisage one because in Tito he said, at p. 305:

I do not think that the pure benefit and burden principle is a technical doctrine, to be satisfied by what is technical and minimal. I regard it as being a broad principle of justice, to be satisfied by what is real and substantial.

See also: Ziff, Positive Covenants, at p. 357.

[132] Fourth, there need not be a direct relationship or linkage between the benefit and the burden. They are, as Megarry V.-C. said in Tito, “independent” (p. 290), which distinguishes them from conditional benefits (discussed below).

[133] Fifth, the assignee must be able to exercise a choice about assuming the benefits and burdens. This was one of the fundamental components of the exception described by Upjohn J. in Halsall (p. 377). It should be recalled that Halsall was specifically approved in Rhone, although the approval is surprising and confusing in light of the House of Lords' rejection of Tito; on the issue of choice or election, Lord Templeman said: "In Halsall v. Brizell the defendant could, at least in theory, choose between enjoying the right and paying his proportion of the cost or alternatively giving up the right and saving his money" (p. 73).

[135] Amberwood had clear notice of the burdens which it would be required to assume. Indeed, before the litigation was commenced, there were extensive negotiations about the burdens and, at one point, Amberwood's counsel informed DCC's counsel, in a letter dated October 1, 1999, "I have advised my clients and they have agreed with me to accept that they are bound by the terms of the agreement".

[136] In addition, there can be little question that Amberwood derived benefits from the agreement and that, on any standard, the benefits are "real and substantial". The recreational and utility units in DCC's building, which are partly owned by Amberwood, are maintained by DCC. There is 24 hour security for that building. Amberwood also has the benefit of 10 valuable easements provided for in section 3.1 of the agreement.

[137] Finally, Amberwood exercised a clear choice when it accepted the benefits under the agreement. It has never disclaimed its entitlement to the benefits; indeed it has openly asserted that entitlement and an intention to use the benefits, including "for [Amberwood's] future marketing program" (Price-Kilgour letter, September 24, 1999).

[138] In summary, I would apply the benefit-burden exception to the rule in Austerberry in the present case. Since Amberwood had notice of the burdens, since the benefits are "real and substantial", and since Amberwood elected to accept them, it must also accept the burden of paying its share of the interim costs.

[140] First, I do not think there is an inconsistency between the introduction of the benefit-burden exception into the law of Ontario and the continuation of the general rule that positive covenants do not run with the land. Put another way, I do not think that the exception swallows the rule. Professor Davis, in her article The Principle of Benefit and Burden, stated that with respect to the “pure principle of benefit and burden . . . [e]nforcement is only possible in certain circumstances, not generally” (p. 552). The Ontario Law Reform Commission, in its Report on Covenants Affecting Land (1989), said that the usefulness of the exception in Halsall “is somewhat limited. It will operate only if there is a benefit to be claimed under the deed, and further, it will operate only so long as the assignee of the covenantor continues to claim that benefit” (p. 23). Professor Eileen Gillese, in her text Property Law (2nd. ed., 1990), made a similar observation: “The doctrine in Halsall v. Brizell . . . is of limited application, however, since it only applies if the assignees claim or use the benefit” (p. 20:10).

[141] I agree with these comments. The exception will not apply if there is no notice of the burden or if there is no benefit for the assignee to receive or if the assignee elects not to accept the benefit. These are important factors; their presence will allow the general rule to continue to be applied in many appropriate cases.

[142] Second, I do not think that the benefit-burden exception will hinder the alienability of land. Market forces will deal with the exception, just as they deal with all other relevant factors in a purchase and sale context. As explained by Professor Ziff in Positive Covenants, “market forces will take account of, and respond to, the effect of positive covenants on alienation: if a covenant renders a property less desirable, its price will fall until it again becomes attractive to purchasers” (p. 369). Moreover, in many situations, especially large scale development projects, the exception will be viewed by the contracting parties as highly desirable because it will promote alienability: see Ontario Law Reform Commission, Report on Covenants Affecting Freehold Land, at p. 100, and Gray, Elements of Land Law, at pp. 1133-34.

(4) The conditional grant exception

[143] The conditional grant exception to the rule in Austerberry was succinctly explained by Megarry V.-C. in Tito, at p. 290. For ease of reference, I set out this passage again:

An instrument may be framed so that it confers only a conditional or qualified right, the condition or qualification being that certain restrictions shall be observed or certain burdens assumed, such as an obligation to make certain payments. Such restrictions or qualifications are an intrinsic part of the right: you take the right as it stands, and you cannot pick out the good and reject the bad. In such cases it is not only the original grantee who is bound by the burden:

his successors in title are unable to take the right without assuming the burden. The benefit and the burden have been annexed to each other ab initio, and so the benefit is only a conditional benefit.

[144] I begin by observing that I think the case for importing this exception into Ontario law is even stronger than the case for importing the benefit-burden exception. I acknowledge that there is uncertainty about the existence of the benefit-burden exception in English law in light of the House of Lords' terse disapproval of it in Rhone. Nevertheless, I would import it into Ontario law because I think it will make the law of real property more just.

[145] As for the conditional grant exception, on my reading of the cases, it is accepted in English law. There is no uncertainty concerning its existence. The reason for the certainty on this point is that in Rhone the law lords expressly approved of the result in Halsall and, perhaps surprisingly, explained Halsall as an example of the conditional grant category. Accordingly, the question in this aspect of the appeal is whether an accepted principle in English law should become part of the law of Ontario? For the reasons in the previous section, I would answer this question in the affirmative.

[146] It remains to determine whether the conditional grant exception applies in the present case. In my view, it does apply.

[147] I begin by noting the title of the governing document, the Reciprocal Easement and Cost Sharing Agreement. This title suggests, in my view, a direct linkage between the benefits of the easements and the burden of cost sharing.

[148] The preamble to the agreement also explicitly links easements and cost sharing:

AND WHEREAS the [owners] are entering into this Agreement to provide, without limitation, for . . . the sharing of responsibilities and costs for mutual services . . . and . . . the Easements required by each of the parties

[149] Sections 3.1 and 3.2 of the agreement then set out an extensive list of highly valuable easements – 10 in favour of Amberwood's predecessor and four in favour of DCC. Amberwood's easements include rights of access to permit construction of Phase 2, rights of access for purposes of maintenance, repair, installation and vehicular and pedestrian movement, and rights to tap into existing facilities in the Phase 1 building.

[150] Crucially, s. 13.1(b) of the agreement provides:

- (b) The parties hereto hereby acknowledge and agree that the Easements, rights and provisions as set forth in this Agreement establish a basis for mutual and reciprocal use and enjoyment of such Easements, rights and provisions and as an integral and material consideration for the continuing right to such use and enjoyment each party hereto does hereby accept, agree to assume the burden of, and to be bound by each and every of the covenants entered into by them in this Agreement.

[151] The application judge interpreted s. 13.1(b) in this fashion:

In my view, the language of that section makes it clear that the payment of interim costs, as one of the covenants in the reciprocal agreement, was intended to be a condition upon which the other easements were conveyed. The provision does not support Amberwood's submission that the cost-sharing obligations should be viewed as distinct from the scheme for mutual easements. To the contrary, paragraph 13.1(b) seems to envision a building project in which the owners would share costs in exchange for shared access and ownership. To undermine this clear intention by severing the cost obligations from the overall deal would amount to dismantling part of an intricate, complex, and well-planned scheme, and defeating legitimate party expectations.

[152] I agree with this analysis. In my view, it is clear from a reading of the entire agreement – its title, preamble and substantive provisions – that there is a direct and intentional linkage or reciprocity between the benefits of the easements, which are numerous and valuable, and the burden of the interim costs that are in issue in this appeal. Accordingly, since Amberwood had notice of the burdens and elected to accept the benefits (even though their full value will not be realized until Amberwood either builds Phase 2 or sells the land, presumably for a price that would reflect the benefits of the easements), it must also accept the linked burden of paying its share of the interim costs.

(5) Conclusions and Disposition

[153] This is a difficult case, in terms of both the proper role of the courts in changing the common law and the substantive law of real property.

[154] I agree with my colleague, Charron J.A., that abolition of the rule in Austerberry must come, if it comes at all, through legislation. I also agree with my colleague's thoughtful reasons in support of this conclusion.

[155] My colleague extends her reasoning to the question of whether the law of Ontario should admit of exceptions to the rule in Austerberry. I confess that there is much to be said for my colleague's reasoning on the question of exceptions.

[156] However, with respect, I have reached a different conclusion on the question of exceptions. In my view, there are recognized exceptions to the rule in Austerberry in English case law. The judicial reasoning in support of the exceptions and the academic and professional commentary about that reasoning persuade me that the exceptions should be adopted as part of the common law of Ontario.

[157] As to whether the courts can introduce the exceptions into the law of Ontario, I recall again what Justice Cardozo said about the role of the common law in The Nature of the Judicial Process: "There are gaps to be filled. There are doubts and ambiguities to be cleared. There are hardships and wrongs to be mitigated if not avoided" (p. 14).

[I]t is necessary to understand the principles which govern judicial reform of the common law. In the past, this Court has considered the conditions which must be present to effect a change in the common law in several cases: [names and citations omitted]. From these cases, some general principles have emerged. A change in the common law must be necessary to keep the common law in step with the evolution of society . . . to clarify a legal principle . . . or to resolve an inconsistency. In addition, the change should be incremental, and its consequences must be capable of assessment.

[159] Canadian society and the patterns of property ownership in 2002 are very different from English society and land ownership in 1885 when Austerberry was decided. The Ontario legislature has recognized the differences and enacted laws mitigating the rigours of the rule in Austerberry – on 12 occasions.

[160] In my view, the benefit-burden and conditional grant exceptions to the rule in Austerberry can perform a similar role if introduced into the common law of Ontario. As I have tried to explain the exceptions, their adoption would, as required by Bastarache J. in Friedmann Equity, result in incremental change with consequences capable of assessment. They would also meet Justice Cardozo’s important objective of mitigating hardships or wrongs in appropriate cases. This is one of those cases. The intentions of the original contracting parties and the wording in the agreement they signed are both crystal clear: a regime of reciprocal easements and other benefits and cost sharing was established. Amberwood, a successor in title to one of the contracting parties, chose, with full knowledge of the clear terms of the original agreement, to accept and utilize the benefits of the agreement. In my view, it would be unjust to permit Amberwood to ignore the reciprocal burdens which the agreement so clearly imposes on it.

[161] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal with costs.

215 Glenridge Ave. Ltd. Partnership v. Waddington
Superior Court of Justice, Quinn J. February 18, 2005

APPLICATION for a compliance order under the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19.

Joseph C. McCallum, for applicant.
Heather Waddington, respondent in person.

Endorsement by QUINN J.:

Introduction

[1] The applicant is the owner of a residential unit of Niagara North Condominium Corporation No. 125 ("Corporation"). The respondent rents the unit from the applicant pursuant to a written lease or tenancy agreement. The lease has a no-pets provision.

[2] The applicant seeks an order that the respondent is in breach of the declaration of the Corporation and its rules in that she has, in her unit, two cats. The applicant also asks for a compliance order for the removal of the cats.

[3] The respondent argues that s. 15 of the Tenant Protection Act, 1997, S.O. 1997, c. 24 renders void the provision in the lease prohibiting the presence of cats in the unit. However, the applicant does not rely upon the no-pets provision in the lease but, instead, looks for relief under its rights, and the obligations of the respondent, found in the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 ("Condominium Act"), and in the registered declaration and rules of the Corporation.

[4] The evidence on the application consists of three affidavits delivered on behalf of the applicant and one affidavit from the respondent. ¹

¹ I note that the materials of the applicant were served on the respondent by counsel for the applicant. This is a tacky practice. Additionally, had the respondent not appeared (by appearing she made proof of service a non-issue), I would not have allowed

Background facts and legislation

[5] Pursuant to s. 5(1) of the Condominium Act, the Corporation is a corporation without share capital whose members are the owners of a freehold interest in a residential unit in the building.

[6] The respondent entered into the lease of her unit in May 2003. Subparagraph 14(b) of the lease reads:

14. The Tenant(s) further agrees:

(b) The Tenant(s) will not keep any animal, bird, insect or reptile to disturb the neighbouring property owners.

[7] Paragraph 13 of the lease requires tenants to comply with the rules of the Corporation:

13. The tenant(s) agrees [sic] to comply with each of the rules and regulations attached as Schedule "A" and such other rules and regulations as may from time to time be amended, modified or added upon written or posted notice to the tenant(s) by the landlord.

The only copy of the lease with which I was provided was in the form of an exhibit to the affidavit of the respondent. Schedule "A" was not attached and so I do not know what "rules and regulations" it contained. Nevertheless, the evidence is that at the time the respondent signed her lease she was provided with a copy of a document summarizing some of the core rules of the Corporation. Rule #6 in the summary states:

6. PETS -no pet shall be permitted in the building

The factum of the applicant refers to the board of directors of the Corporation having passed "rule 12". A copy of that rule was not counsel to argue the application. A lawyer should not be counsel in a matter where he relies on his own affidavit as part of the evidence.

included in the evidence. I gather that it reads the same as rule #6 in the summary.

[8] There is a policy (unwritten, I assume, as I was not shown anything in writing) that all those persons who occupied units in 1997 (when the building was converted from apartments to condominiums) and had a pet, are permitted to keep the pet until it is voluntarily removed from the unit by the occupant or it dies. And once either of those events occurs, no further pets are permitted in the unit.

[9] In accordance with s. 2 of the Condominium Act, a declaration was registered by the Corporation. Such a declaration, which binds each unit owner, may contain "conditions or restrictions with respect to the occupation and use of the units or common elements": see cl. 7(4)(b) of the Condominium Act. The declaration of the Corporation provides, in subsection 7, Article II, a prohibition against the keeping of pets:

No animal, livestock, fowl, fish, reptile or insect (a "pet") shall be permitted or kept in the building. Any owner shall, within two (2) weeks of receipt of a written notice from the Board or Manager requesting removal of any such animal, permanently remove such animal from the property. No breeding of animals for sale shall be carried on, in or around any unit.

[10] Letters were forwarded to the respondent on November 24, 2003, May 11, July 23, and October 26, 2004 demanding the removal of her cats. After the last letter, an inspection of her unit revealed the continued presence of the cats.

[11] Apart from s. 2, the power of the board of directors of the Corporation to make rules governing units in a residential complex is found in s. 58(1) of the Condominium Act: ~

58(1) The board may make, amend or repeal rules respecting the use of common elements and units to,

(a) promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property and assets of the corporation; or

(b) prevent unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements, the units or the assets of the corporation.

[12] Section 119(1) of the Condominium Act requires a tenant to comply with the declaration and the rules of a condominium corporation. It states, in part:

119(1) ...an occupier of a unit ...shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws² and the rules.

[13] Compliance with the rules of a condominium corporation is also addressed in s. 58(10):

58(10) All persons bound by the rules shall comply with them and the rules may be enforced in the same manner as the by-laws.

[14] This application is brought pursuant to subsection 134(1) of the Condominium Act, the operative part of which reads:

134(1) Subject to subsection (2),³ an owner. ..may make an application ...for an order enforcing compliance with any provision of this Act, the declaration, the by-laws, the rules....

[15] Section 15 of the Tenant Protection Act, relied upon by the respondent, states:

15. A provision in a tenancy agreement prohibiting the presence of animals in or about a residential complex is void.

Discussion

[16] Section 58(1) of the Condominium Act does not authorize a condominium corporation to make a blanket rule banning all pets. Only if pets compromise "the safety, security or welfare of the [unit] owners and of the property and assets of the [condominium] corporation" (cl. 58(1)(a)» or if they constitute an "unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements, the units or the assets of the [condominium] corporation" (cl. 58(1)(b)», may the board of directors ban or prohibit their presence. There is no evidence that the cats of the respondent run afoul of cls. (a) or (b) of s. 58(1). And it cannot be said that the presence of all pets inherently constitutes a breach of those clauses.

² No by-laws were introduced into evidence.

[17] I also think that, if any part of a declaration conflicts with s. 58(1) it is void and unenforceable. In other words, where, pursuant to cl. 7(4)(b) of the Condominium Act, a declaration contains "conditions or restrictions with respect to the occupation and use of the units or common elements", a condominium corporation cannot go beyond that which is permitted in s. 58(1).

[18] Consequently, the declaration and rules of the Corporation are insufficient to prohibit the presence of the cats.

[19] As the applicant does not rely upon the lease, I will turn to it only briefly. I interpret subpara. 14(b) to prohibit only those animals that "disturb the neighbouring property owners". There is no evidence here of such a disturbance. As well, the applicant is unable to rely upon the phantom Schedule "A" because, to the extent that it contains a rule prohibiting the presence of all pets, I have already found that the Corporation has no authority under the Condominium Act to enact such a rule.

[20] In the circumstances, because the applicant does not seek to enforce the no-pets provision of the lease, I need not consider the question of whether s. 15 of the Tenant Protection Act, 1997 operates as a defence to the application.

Conclusion

[21] I find for the felines. The application is dismissed.

Order accordingly

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1170

Defendant

Michael A. Spears, for the Plaintiff/Respondent

Jonathan H. Fine, for the Defendant/Applicant

HEARD: September 11, 12 and 13, 2002

Lederman J.

Nature of the motion and action

[1] This is a motion brought by the defendant condominium corporation ("MTCC No. 1170"), pursuant to Rules 20, 21 and 51.06 of the Rules of Civil Procedure for summary judgment dismissing this action. The action is one for damages for intentional interference with economic relations.

[2] MTCC No. 1170 is a condominium corporation whose members own a luxury condominium building called the "Metropole", located at King and Victoria streets in downtown Toronto.

[3] The plaintiff, Apartment International Inc. ("API"), operates its business by leasing residential condominium units from some of MTCC No. 1170's unit owners and then marketing these units to members of the public as "furnished travel apartments" on a "pay per stay" basis.

[4] A central issue is the interpretation and application of Rules 7.01 and 7.07 passed by the Board of Directors of MTCC No. 1170 in April, 1999. They provide as follows:

7.01 A lease or tenancy of any unit shall be for a term not less than three months. No unit shall be occupied under a lease, sub-lease, contract or licence arrangements for transient or hotel purposes. All tenancies of units shall be in writing and a copy must be filed with the management office. No roomers or boarders are permitted.

7.07 Owners shall ensure that their tenants strictly comply with the provisions governing the use and occupation and leasing of residential units set forth in these Rules. ...If an owner ... fails to ensure his own compliance and that of the tenants with the requirements of the Condominium Act, the Declaration and the Rules, any person or persons intending to reside in the residential unit and use the common elements shall be considered an unauthorized person and entry to the buildings or any part of the common elements including the recreational amenities may be expressly denied to that person...until such person(s) and the owner have fully complied with the Act, the Declaration and the Rules.

[5] These rules were passed as a reaction to the use of units by commercial, hotel-like, operators. Such use had the detrimental effects of changing the character of the building, of increasing the number of strangers going in and out of the building thereby raising security concerns, and of placing excessive demands and burdens on condominium staff.

[6] API takes the position in this action that it is in compliance with these rules, and that MTCC No. 1170 wrongfully interfered with its contractual relations and economic interests. MTCC No. 1170, on the other hand, submits that API is not in compliance and it has a legal right to demand that unit owners terminate their leases with API and to deny the tenants of API access to recreational amenities.

[7] The question is whether a genuine issue exists as to material facts in dispute which requires a trial.

The Related Application

[8] In a related case, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 1170 v. Zeidan and Glen Grove Residences Inc. [2001] O.J. No. 2785, which was an application brought under s. 49 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c-26, Molloy J. found that Rule 7.01 was valid and enforceable. She also found that Glen Grove Residences Inc. ("Glen Grove") who leased units in the Metropole from unit owners, and then released them as short-term rentals to transient visitors, contravened Rule 7.01 both because it permitted tenancies of less than three months and because its units were occupied for transient use.

[9] API had entered into a legal fee cost-sharing arrangement with Glen Grove and Zeidan with respect to the proceeding before Molloy J. API did so because it felt that there were common issues of fact and law involved, the disposition of which would have an effect on API. API, however, did not seek intervention in that proceeding, although it had earlier brought an application against MTCC No. 1170 under s. 49 of the Condominium Act which was dismissed because of lack of standing.

[10] In paragraph [5] of the decision, Molloy J. described the nature of Glen Grove's business. In its advertising, it indicated that it provided a "unique alternative to staying in just an ordinary hotel" and provided accommodations to its guests on a "pay per stay basis". It offered condominium residences with "weekly and monthly rates available". It offered a reservation and cancellation system, including prepayment by credit card, with stated check-in and check-out times. Fresh linens and weekly housekeeping and maid services were advertised and provided.

[11] At paragraph [6], Molloy J. stated "the records of the Metropole reveal that the length of occupancy of the Glen Grove units was frequently less than three months and often a matter of weeks, or even days". There may have been times when the occupancy was longer than three months, but the evidence in that case clearly established that the Glen Grove units at the Metropole had a frequent turnover rate and were routinely occupied on a short-term (less than three month) basis.

[12] Molloy J. accordingly found that the use of the subject units by Glen Grove contravened Rule 7.01 because it permitted tenancies of less than three months. In addition, she found contravention because these units were occupied for "transient use". Although Molloy J. did not define the phrase "transient or hotel purposes" in Rule 7.01 she did conclude that Glen Grove's business and the use of the units fell within this description.

"This application is brought as a test case against one owner (Mr. Zeidan) and one business operator (Glen Grove). The principles established in this case are then expected to be applied to other owners and businesses in the same positions as the respondents in this case".

[14] MTCC No. 1170 submits that, given API's connection with the Glen Grove proceeding (including the fact that Mr. Spears acts for both Glen Grove and API), it is bound by the findings of Molloy J., including the finding that Glen Grove's use of the units in question, was improper for reasons including that the units were used for transient purposes contrary to Rule 7.01.

[15] In House of Spring Gardens Limited v. Waite et al., [1990] 3 W.L.R. 347 (CA) at page 358, the English Court of Appeal stated that:

"The principle [of abuse of process] has recently been applied in this Court to analogous cases, where issues of fact have been litigated exhaustively in sample cases; it is an abuse of process for a litigant, who was not one of the sample cases, to re-litigate all the issues of fact on the same or substantially the same evidence."

MTCC No. 1170 submits that this principle should have application to this case.

API's Position

[16] Notwithstanding Molloy J's statement about the Glen Grove proceeding being a test case, API, which had a close interest and a cost sharing arrangement in that case, commenced this action for damages alleging intentional interference with contractual relations and economic interest. It submits that the facts surrounding its use of the units are different than that of Glen Grove and that it is in compliance with Rule 7.01 and that MTCC No. 1170 had no lawful right to deny its tenants access to recreational amenities, or to require its landlords to terminate leases.

The Three Month Tenancy Requirement

[17] Much argument on this motion was directed to whether some of the units under lease to API, after passage of Rule 7.01, were or were not in compliance with the three month part of Rule 7.01. In some cases, API argued that although the daily tenant list would show a tenant vacating a unit prior to the expiry of three months, such units were left vacant for the remainder of the three month period in order to comply with Rule 7.01. In other cases, API submitted that different corporate employees come and go from "corporate suites" which are rented by the corporation from API for more than three months, although such stays have been for as little as one night. API submits that these practices comply with the three month part of Rule 7.01.

[18] API submits that it has presented evidence on this motion which is clearly capable of supporting a finding with respect to the threshold issue, that it is in compliance with MTCC No. 1170's rules and that therefore, the condominium corporation has no lawful right to deny its tenants access to the recreational amenities or to require its landlords to terminate leases. API submits that the issue of compliance or non-compliance with Rule 7.01 requires findings of fact, weighing conflicting evidence, and drawing inferences from evidence not in conflict when more than one inference is reasonably available, none of which are properly done on a motion for summary judgment.

[19] It should be noted that in the Glen Grove case, the units were being rented by Glen Grove's guests for periods both more than, and less than, the three month period. It was Molloy J's conclusion that "...the evidence clearly establishes that its units at the Metropole have a frequent turnover rate and are routinely occupied on a short-term (i.e. less than three month) basis."

[20] The evidence on this motion establishes the very same pattern. API has demonstrated on the evidence, a lengthy, consistent and deliberate history of non-compliance with the three month tenancy requirement. It is not material that, on occasion, it may have honoured this part of the rule. In all material respects, the use of these units by API is the very same use made of units by Glen Grove. That is why API had such an interest in the outcome of that application and engaged in a cost sharing arrangement with Glen Grove.

Transient or Hotel Purposes Prohibition

[21] Moreover, and most importantly, the evidence on this motion creates an insurmountable problem for API in respect of the "transient or hotel purposes" prohibition in Rule 7.01.

[22] MTCC No. 1170's view of the transient/hotel prohibition rule was explained by Sylvia Furlong, the Director and Treasurer of the Condominium Corporation, as follows:

"To us there is a difference between someone who moves into The Metropole with it being their permanent residence, as opposed to someone else who as a permanent resident elsewhere and paying to live at the The Metropole on a temporary basis. The latter is what we consider to be a transient occupation of the unit, regardless of the length of stay".

[23] API's business is remarkably similar to Glen Grove's. By its own admission, API is a "rental agency" which competes with hotels for the business of the transient public. Its advertising material states: "we provide completely furnished travel apartments". Other advertising material indicates that it provides travel accommodation needs for travelers who are "away from home...no matter how long [they] wish to stay - whether it's a week, a month, or longer". Hotel-like terminology is used in their advertising materials including phrases such as "check-in/out", "reservations" and "cancellations". API quotes and charges daily rates and accepts payment by credit card which is automatically debited on check-in and then every thirty days thereafter. Full housekeeping service, including cleaning up the unit and new linens and towels, is included in the room rate and is provided weekly and also every time a short-term occupant moves out and another moves in. API, or its cleaning sub-contractor, uses storage lockers at MTCC No. 1170 to store cleaning materials, linens, cutlery and other supplies for the units.

[24] The Oxford English Dictionary defines "transient" as meaning "of short duration.... impermanent...temporary visitor". "Hotel" is defined as "an establishment...where paying visitors are provided with accommodation...and other services".

[25] API submits that the word "transient" as used in Rule 7.01 is not defined and it submits that this term requires a minimum stay of three months or more, based upon the fact that this is the minimum term for a lease of any unit which has previously been defined in Rule 7.01. Alternatively, API submits that "transient" means a rental period of less than one month based on the definition of "short-term accommodation" as set out in the GST tax guide published in April 1994 by Revenue Canada (as it was then known).

[26] API submits that the meaning of "transient" as it is used in Rule 7.01 is an issue to be determined by the trial judge.

[27] API has made a number of admissions in this proceeding including:

- a) Substantially all of its guests had permanent residences elsewhere during each such guest's stay at the Metropole;
- b) API had a long history of deliberate non-compliance with the requirement that leases or tenancies shall be for a term of not less than three months although it takes the position that at the time of the commencement of this action it was in compliance; and

c) API concedes that non-compliance with Rule 7.01 would permit the condominium corporation to refuse access to the recreational facilities.

[28] On any view of the evidence on this motion most favorable to API, the facts clearly demonstrate, as in the Glen Grove case, that notwithstanding any attempts by API to rent its units to longer term guests from time to time, its units at the Metropole have a frequent turnover rate and are routinely occupied on a short-term (being less than three months) basis. API's marketing, use of units and provision of services to occupants have all the hallmarks of a hotel business. Having regard to the mischief that Rule 7.01 was meant to address, and upon a simple consideration of dictionary definitions of "transient" and "hotel", the inescapable conclusion is the same as found by Molloy J. on the application before her, that these units are occupied for transient or hotel purposes and therefore run afoul of Rule 7.01. A trial is not required for this determination.

Elements of the Cause of Action

[29] API has pleaded the following in paragraph 10 of the Statement of Claim:

- 10. The plaintiff states that the defendant has undertaken a number of actions which were and are calculated to damage the economic interests of API and to prevent the plaintiff from leasing its units to its subtenants, including:
 - (i) passing house rules targeted directly at the operation of the plaintiff and the use being made of its units;
 - (ii) wrongfully denying the plaintiff and its subtenants access to the common elements, in particular to the recreational amenities, with a view to forcing the subtenants to terminate their leasing agreement with the plaintiff;
 - (iii) forwarding threatening letters to unit owners who have rental agreements with the plaintiff and to the plaintiff's subtenants falsely alleging breaches of the Act, the declaration and the house rules as well as breaches of the Tenant Protection Act and threatening legal action if the unit owner did not terminate the lease agreement with the plaintiff;
 - (iv) offering its own leasing services to any unit owner who terminated their lease agreement with the plaintiff; and
 - (v) recklessly providing false information concerning the plaintiff to the defendant's insurance broker with the object of putting unit owners who had contracted with the plaintiff, in breach of the declaration and again requiring termination of all leases entered into with the plaintiff.

[30] API's action is based upon the tort of intentional interference with contractual relations and economic interests which requires it to prove:

- a) An intention to injure the plaintiff;
- b) Interference with another's method of gaining his or her living or business by illegal means; and

c) Economic loss caused thereby.

(see Lineal Group Inc. v. Atlantis Canadian Distributors List Inc. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 157 (CA)).

[31] For the purposes of this motion, it is only necessary to consider b) and c). With respect to the former, there is nothing illegal or unlawful in MTCC No. 1170 taking steps to ensure compliance with Rule 7.01. In fact, under the Condominium Act, the Directors of MTCC No. 1170 have a legal duty to enforce the condominium corporation's declaration and rules. Accordingly, MTCC No. 1170 has a legal duty to effect compliance by API and its landlords and sub-tenants with the declaration and rules.

[32] Any actions taken by MTCC No. 1170 with respect to denying API's guests the use of recreational facilities were taken pursuant to Rule 7.07 because API was not in compliance and cannot comply with Rule 7.01, given its long history of non-compliance with the three month tenancy provision and the fact that API cannot overcome the transient/hotel purpose prohibition.

[33] Moreover, the letters sent to unit owners who have rental contracts with API containing allegations of breaches of the rules and the Tenant Protection Act, were justified. Further, the statement in one of the letters whereby MTCC No. 1170 offered its own leasing services to any unit owner who terminated his or her own lease with API was made only as a courtesy to the recipients. Moreover, as Molloy J. found with respect to the allegation that MTCC No. 1170 provided false information to its insurance broker, such inaccuracies were not material.

[34] Accordingly, the evidence presented on this motion clearly establishes that MTCC No. 1170 did not engage in any illegal or unlawful means and there is no genuine issue for trial with respect to this element of API's cause of action.

[35] As to the allegation of economic loss caused by the actions of MTCC No. 1170, the evidence indicates that the unit owners who did not renew their leases with API did so because either the existing leases expired; API agreed to the termination thereof; or the unit owner terminated the tenancy in accordance with the Tenant Protection Act without objection by API. What is significant is that there is no direct evidence from any unit owner who terminated his or her lease with API or who did not renew the lease after it had expired, that such action was as a result of any act of MTCC No. 1170. All that API can offer is hearsay and sometimes double hearsay evidence pertaining to this element of the cause of action.

[36] API also admitted that in the case of sub-tenants that left the premises, in all cases, either alternative accommodation was found by API in one of its units, or, there is no claim being advanced with respect to such sub-tenant.

[37] API claims that it lost its investment in furnishings; however, API admitted that some of the furnishings had exceeded their life expectancy and the remainder were in storage and could and would be reused.

[38] In the end, there is no evidence of economic loss upon which there would be any real chance of success at trial.

Disposition

[39] For all of these reasons, there is no genuine issue as to material facts for trial in respect of the plaintiff's cause of action, and the defendant is therefore entitled to summary judgment dismissing this action.

[40] If the parties cannot agree as to costs, they may make written submissions.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: CARLETON CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION NO. 291
v. LEE WEEKS and EARLEEN CRAWFORD

BEFORE: Mr. Justice Robert J. Smith

COUNSEL: James Davidson, for the Applicant

Laurie A. Tucker, for the Respondents

ENDORSEMENT

Nature of the Proceedings:

[1] The Applicant ("CCC No. 291") seeks an order to restrain the owner of one of the units from conducting themselves in a manner which disturbs and threatens the owners and occupants of other units.

[2] The alleged conduct is denied by the Respondents.

[3] The court must decide the following issues:

(I) Is the alleged conduct likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual? (if yes, the Applicant may bring the application);

(II) If issue (I) is decided in the negative, then are their issues of credibility to be determined which require a trial of an issue?

(III) If issue (II) is decided in the affirmative should an interim cease and desist order be made until the trial is heard?

Background:

[4] The Applicant ("CCC No. 291") seeks an order that the Respondents cease and desist from the following conduct:

(i) Engaging in conduct which necessitates police intervention;

(ii) Throwing objects within the boundaries of the common elements or neighbouring units;

(iii) Engaging in quarrelsome and threatening behaviour; and

(iv) Kicking and smashing the doors and windows of unit 6471 Natalie Way.

[5] Counsel for the Applicant further specified that the conduct which was "harmful" or could cause injury to an individual was the following:

(a) Having loud aggressive arguments which could be heard by owners of neighbouring condominiums;

(b) The use of vulgar offensive language by the Respondent, Lee Weeks;

(c) The glaring at other residents in a hostile manner; and

(d) Flipping the finger at other residents.

[6] The Applicant argues and the Respondents agree that if the Respondents permit a condition to exist or carry on an activity in their unit or in the common elements which is likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual then, the Applicant can proceed to bring an application under s. 117 of the Condominium Act 1998 (the "Act") without first proceeding under the mediation and arbitration provisions of the Act.

[7] The Respondents' position is as follows:

(a) They deny that they have committed the conduct alleged by the Applicant;

(b) They state that the resident who complained the most, Jackie Holt, and who recently moved out, was overly sensitive to noise levels;

(c) The conduct complained of will not damage the property or cause injury to an individual;

(d) The conduct complained of would constitute a nuisance and not conduct which would cause injury to an individual or damage to property; and

(e) The Applicant is not entitled to bring an application under s. 134(1) of the Condominium Act to enforce the provisions of the declaration and by-laws, which prohibit carrying on activities which constitute a nuisance, without first following the mediation and arbitration provisions in s. 132 of the Act and failing to obtain compliance.

[8] The Issues which have to be decided are as follows:

(I) Is the Conduct Complained of a Nuisance or Conduct, which is likely to Damage the Property or Cause Injury to an Individual?

(II) Are Findings of Credibility Required to Determine if the Alleged Harmful Conduct Occurred and, if so, should a Trial of an Issue be Directed?

(III) Should Interim Injunctive Relief be Granted Pending a Final Hearing on the Merits?

Issue (I) - Nuisance or Actions Injurious to Persons and Property

Police Visits

[9] The conduct, which necessitated numerous police visits to the unit, was explained by the problems created by a boarder who resided at the unit and who the Respondents evicted in December of 2001.

[10] Several further police visits related to a vehicle owned by Ms. Crawford, which was stolen.

[11] In early December of 2001, the boarder, Mr. Cordeiro, left and removed his belongings. The police were called on three or four occasions due to Mr. Cordeiro making harassing phone calls and re-attending at the premises.

[12] I do not find that the numerous police visits to the unit, which ceased in December of 2001 in any event, constitute conduct, which would justify proceeding with an application under s. 117 of the Act in October of 2002 without first proceeding with mediation and arbitration as required by s. 134(2) of the Act.

Door Slamming and Window Breaking

[13] During one incident, a door was slammed and some glass was broken, however, minimal evidence was presented that the Respondents were throwing objects within the boundaries of their unit or in the common elements. The Respondents admit that a guest threw a piece of broccoli onto a common area, which was subsequently picked up.

[14] Other than this one incident of the broken glass, there was minimal evidence that the Respondents were kicking and smashing doors and windows of unit 6471. This matter could also have been dealt with under the mediation arbitration provisions.

Playing Music at Excessive Levels

[15] Mrs. Holt complained that the Respondents played music at excessively high levels on many occasions.

[16] The by-law officers were called on nine occasions and only one charge was laid.

[17] The Respondent, Earleen Crawford, admitted to turning up the volume when she liked a particular song and then stated that she would turn the level back down to a normal range.

[18] I find that this type of conduct would be considered a nuisance and should have been dealt with under the mediation provisions of the Act prior to bringing an application.

Threatening Conduct

[19] The last allegation is that the Respondents have caused other unit owners and occupants, including Jackie Holt's twelve-year-old daughter, to feel threatened and to become fearful for their safety due to the following actions of the Respondents:

(a) The Respondent, Lee Weeks, is alleged to have "flipped" the finger at Mrs. Holt's 12-year-old daughter and glared aggressively at Mrs. Holt and her 12-year-old daughter; and

(b) The Respondents are alleged to have used extremely vulgar offensive and demeaning language, which can be heard by the occupants of other units, which included young children.

[20] Three separate witnesses for the Applicant complained about the Respondents' conduct and maintained their position under cross-examination.

[21] The evidence of Mrs. Pantalone is that she was frightened by loud yelling and cursing between the occupants of unit 6471 on August 16, 2002;

[22] Notwithstanding the letter from the solicitor for the Plaintiff and the Respondents' apology on August 23, 2002 and the Respondents' agreement to pay the sum of $200.00 for legal fees, the conduct of loud, foul language continued on September 7, 2002 as evidenced by the affidavit of Dora Lee.

[23] The evidence of Dora Lee is that on September 7, 2002 between 10:00 p.m. and 12:00 a.m. she heard foul language, quarrelsome and belligerent voices and hysterical laughter at unit 6471.

[24] Mrs. Jackie Holt stated that the Respondents were drunk and engaged in loud and abusive dialogue and behaviour on many occasions during the weekends during the summer of 2002, including Friday nights.

[25] The Respondents are alleged to have repeatedly glared in an aggressive manner at Mrs. Holt and her 12-year-old daughter, flipping the finger at Mrs. Holt and her 12-year-old daughter and using vulgar obscene demeaning language, which can be heard by the adjoining occupants, which did include a young child.

[26] The Respondents claim they have only occasional normal arguments between spouses.

[27] I am satisfied that if it is proven that the Respondents acted in the threatening manner, as alleged, that the alleged conduct would likely cause injury to an individual, namely the occupants of the other units, which would allow the Applicant to bring this application without first proceeding with the mediation provisions of the Act.

Issue II - Are Findings of Credibility Required?

[28] The Respondents have denied committing the threatening acts and, denied using loud obscene language, which can be heard by the adjoining residents. Owners of other condominium units have filed affidavits alleging such conduct.

[29] Rule 14.05(2) of the Rules of Practice allows a proceeding to be commenced by an application if a statute so authorizes.

[30] Section 117 of the Condominium Act authorizes a proceeding by way of application when the conduct complained of is likely to cause damage to property or harm to individuals.

[31] However, in the case of Gordon Glaves Holdings Ltd. v. Care Corp. of Canada Ltd. (1999), 170 D.L.R. (4th) 520 (Div.Ct.) affd 186 D.L.R. (4th) 577 (C.A.), the Ontario Court of Appeal held that when a proceeding may be commenced by application pursuant to a statute, such as an application for an oppression remedy pursuant to s. 248 of the Business Corporations Act, the matter was directed to proceed at trial, where issues of credibility had to be determined.

[32] I find that on the facts of this case issues of credibility must be determined to find on the balance of probabilities whether the Respondents have engaged in the threatening conduct and used loud obscene language as alleged by the Applicant, but denied by the Respondents.

[33] I order that the cross-examinations on the affidavits constitute discovery and the filing of affidavits of documents shall be dispensed with. I order that a settlement conference be held and if the matter is not resolved then, I order that it be immediately set down for a trial to determine if the conduct as alleged by the Applicant occurred and to determine the remedy, if any, to be granted.

[34] As a result, I order a trial of an issue on whether the Respondents engaged in conduct which is injurious to other residents namely;

(i) Have either of the Respondents glared aggressively at other unit residents? and

(ii) Have either of the Respondents flipped the finger at other unit residents?; and

(iii) Have either of the Respondents or other occupants of unit 6471, Natalie Way, used loud obscene demeaning language, which can be heard by other unit residents?

[35] I invite counsel to make submissions within seven (7) days of the release of this endorsement if they wish to further define the issues to be determined at trial.

Issue III - Interim Injunctive Relief

[36] In applying the test to determine whether an interim injunction or cease and desist order should be granted, the court must be satisfied that a serious issue has been raised, that harm which cannot be compensated in damages occurred and that the balance of convenience favours granting the injunction or cease and desist order.

[37] The Applicant is, in fact, seeking injunctive relief in its application by seeking a cease and desist order.

[38] I find that the Applicant has demonstrated a serious issue to be tried. If an injunction is not granted the other condominium owners, including children, would be subject to listening to loud vulgar obscene language and possibly being the subject of harassing glaring and subject to further obscene gestures.

[39] I find that being subject to such conduct could constitute irreparable harm, to young children in particular, which is not compensable in damages. I further find that the balance of convenience favours granting the interim relief as the Respondents would not be harmed by such an order and the residents of the condominium units would be protected from harmful conduct until a final hearing in this matter is held.

[40] By allowing the parties to have a hearing this will allow for a proper findings of credibility to be made to determine whether such conduct occurred and what remedy is appropriate.

[41] I, therefore, grant an interim injunction and order the Respondents not to glare aggressively at any other unit owners, occupants or guests, not to make rude gestures to other unit owners, occupants or guests, and not to use obscene, vulgar and offensive language at levels that can be heard by other unit owners, occupants or guests.

Costs:

[42] The costs of this application shall be dealt with by the judge hearing the evidence at the trial.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: CARLETON CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION
NO. 555 v. GUY LAGACÉ, BARBARA STINSON-SHEA and JOHN BOWMAN SPERO

BEFORE: Madam Justice C. D. Aitken

COUNSEL: James Davidson and Nancy Houle, for the Applicant

Patrick J. Lafrange, for the Respondents,
Barbara Stinson-Shea and John Bowman Spero

Guy Lagacé, Unrepresented

Nature of Proceedings

[1] Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 555 ("CCC 555") is seeking its costs of this Application against two of the three Respondents, Barbara Stinson-Shea and John Bowman Spero, who are the registered owners of Unit 11, Level 2, CCC 555 ("6034 Red Willow Drive"). The third Respondent, Guy Lagacé, was the tenant of these premises.

[2] On May 29, 2004, I heard and granted CCC 555's Application for an order requiring Lagacé to cease and desist from conduct contravening the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 and the Applicant's Declaration, By-laws and Rules, and more specifically, to conduct himself in a particular fashion regarding parking spaces. If Lagacé breached the stipulated conditions, his tenancy was to be terminated. Stinson-Shea and Spero consented to this order being made. Subsequently, Lagacé abandoned the premises. The sole issue that I now have to decide is whether Stinson-Shea and Spero, as the owners and landlords of 6034 Red Willow Drive, should be responsible to pay CCC 555's costs in getting an order against their unruly tenant. If so, should those costs be on a partial or substantial indemnity basis?

Legal Framework

Condominium Act, 1998:

117. No person shall permit a condition to exist or carry on an activity in a unit or in the common elements if the condition or the activity is likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual.

...

119. (1) A corporation, the directors, officers and employees of a corporation, a declarant, the lessor of a leasehold condominium corporation, an owner, an occupier of a unit and a person having an encumbrance against a unit and its appurtenant common interest shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) An owner shall take all necessary steps to ensure that an occupier of the owner's unit and all invitees, agents and employees of the owner or occupier comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

134. (1) Subject to subsection (2), an owner, an occupier of a proposed unit, a corporation, a declarant, a lessor of a leasehold condominium corporation or a mortgagee of a unit may make an application to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order enforcing compliance with any provision of this Act, the declaration, the by-laws, the rules or an agreement between two or more corporations for the mutual use, provision or maintenance or the cost-sharing of facilities or services of any of the parties to the agreement.

(3) On an application, the court may, subject to subsection (4),

- (a) grant the order applied for;
- (b) require the persons named in the order to pay,
 - (i) the damages incurred by the applicant as a result of the acts of non-compliance, and
 - (ii) the costs incurred by the applicant in obtaining the order; or
- (c) grant such other relief as is fair and equitable in the circumstances.

(4) The court shall not, under subsection (3), grant an order terminating a lease of a unit for residential purposes unless the court is satisfied that,

(a) the lessee is in contravention of an order that has been made under subsection (3); or

(b) the lessee has received a notice described in subsection 87 (1) and has not paid the amount required by that subsection.

(5) If a corporation obtains an award of damages or costs in an order made against an owner or occupier of a unit, the damages or costs, together with any additional actual costs to the corporation in obtaining the order, shall be added to the common expenses for the unit and the corporation may specify a time for payment by the owner of the unit.

[4] As well, CCC 555 relies on the following provisions in its Declaration, By-laws and Rules as establishing its rights to costs on a substantial indemnity basis:

Declaration

4. UNITS

4.1 Occupation and Use. The occupation and use of the units shall be in accordance with the following restrictions and stipulations:

...

(c) The owner of each unit shall comply and shall require all residents, occupants and visitors to his or her unit to comply with the Act, this Declaration, and the by-laws, and the rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto.

...

(f) Any owners leasing their unit shall not be relieved from any of their obligations with respect to the unit which shall be joint and several with their tenant.

8. INDEMNIFICATION

8.1 Indemnification. Each owner shall indemnify and save harmless the corporation from and against any loss, cost, damage, injury or liability whatsoever which the corporation may suffer or incur resulting from or caused by an act or omission of such owner, the owner's family or any member thereof, any other resident or occupant of that unit or any guests, invitees, licensees or agents of such owner or resident to or with respect to the common elements and/or all other units, except for any loss, cost, damages, injury or liability caused by an insured (as defined in any policy or policies of insurance) and insured against by the corporation.

All payments pursuant to this clause are deemed to be additional contributions toward the common expenses and recoverable as such or by such other procedure the corporation elects.

9. GENERAL MATTERS AND ADMINISTRATION

9.2 Units Subject to the Act, Declaration, By-laws, Rules and Regulations. All present and future owners, tenants and residents of units, their families, guests, invitees, licensees or agents shall be subject to and shall comply with the provisions of the Act, this Declaration, the by-laws, and any other rules and regulations of the corporation.

The acceptance of a transfer/deed of land, or the entering into a lease, or the entering into occupancy of any unit, shall constitute an agreement that the provisions of this Declaration, the by-laws, and any other rules and regulations, as they may be amended from time to time, are accepted by such owner, tenant or resident, and all of such provisions shall be deemed and taken to be covenants running with the unit and shall bind any person having, at any time, any interest or estate in such unit as though such provisions were recited and stipulated in full in each and every such transfer/deed of land or lease or occupancy agreement.

9.5 Notice. Except as hereinbefore set forth, any notice, direction or other instrument required or permitted may be given if served personally by delivering same to the party to be served, or to any officer of the party to be served, or may be given by ordinary mail, postage prepaid, addressed to the corporation at its address for service herein, to each owner at his or her respective unit or at such other address as is given by the owner to the Corporation for the purpose of notice, and to each mortgagee who has notified its interest to the corporation at such address as is given by each mortgagee to the corporation for the purpose of notice; and if mailed as aforesaid the same shall be deemed to have been received and to be effective on the first business day following the day on which it was mailed. Any owner or mortgagee may change its address for service by notice given to the corporation in the manner aforesaid.

13. RULES AND REGULATIONS

13.1 Rules and Regulations. The rules and regulations attached hereto as Schedule "A" shall be observed by the owners and occupants of the units. The Board may amend such rules or may make such further and other rules as required to promote the safety, security, or welfare of the owners and of the property or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of the units.

Schedule "A" Rules and Regulations

... Any loss, cost or damages incurred by the Corporation by reason of a breach of any rules and regulations in force from time to time by any owner, the owner's family, guests, servants, agents or occupants of that unit, shall be borne by such owner and may be recovered by the Corporation against such owner in the same manner as common expenses.

1. GENERAL

(b) Rules as deemed necessary and altered from time to time by the Corporation shall be binding on all unit owners and occupants, their families, guests, visitors, servants or agents.

Background Facts

[5] Commencing in the summer of 1999, Lagacé engaged in various activities in and around 6034 Red Willow Drive that contravened the Condominium Act, 1998 and the Declaration, By-laws and Rules of CCC 555. These activities included:

- excessive noise past 11 pm,
- littering of the property,
- congregating and smoking in the stairwell at the building,

- violating the parking rules relating to CCC 555,
- using threatening, abusive and offensive language towards other owners, residents and employees of the property management firm of CCC 555,
- engaging in threatening conduct towards other owners, residents and employees of the property management firm of CCC 555,
- engaging in the use of marijuana,
- engaging in conduct which necessitated City of Ottawa by-law officer intervention, and
- engaging in conduct which necessitated police intervention.

[6] The property manager of CCC 555 at the time was Axia Property Management Inc. ("Axia"). The person assigned to CCC 555 was Michael Faulkner. Axia received numerous verbal and written complaints about Lagacé's conduct. Commencing in August 1999, various letters and notices were given to "The Occupants" of 6034 Red Willow Drive, advising them of the complaints and seeking their compliance with CCC 555's Rules and Regulations.

[7] On March 17, 2000, Axia contacted Stinson-Shea and Spero for the first time, advising them of the numerous complaints that had been received concerning their tenants at 6034 Red Willow Drive. This resulted in their being a site meeting on June 6, 2000, at which time Stinson-Shea, Spero, and Faulkner met with Lagacé, reviewed the various complaints with him, and obtained his undertaking to comply with the Condominium's Rules and Regulations.

[8] The evidence submitted on behalf of CCC 555 is that on October 6, 2000, Axia sent a second letter to Stinson-Shea and Spero advising that the problems with their tenants were continuing. Stinson-Shea denies that either she or Spero ever received this letter.

[9] Significantly fewer complaints were received by Axia concerning the occupants of 6034 Red Willow Drive, until October 2001, when Lagacé acquired what was described as a Pit Bull dog. On October 11, 2001, Faulkner sent a letter to Lagacé advising that the dog had to be removed from the property immediately. In December 2000, Stinson-Shea and Spero had retained Axia to act as their property manager in renting 6034 Red Willow Drive, and Shawn Paul was the employee at Axia responsible for their account. Faulkner's October 11 letter indicates that a copy was being provided to Paul. Neither Faulkner nor Paul sent a copy of the letter to Stinson-Shea or Spero.

[10] Further complaints regarding Lagacé resulted in a further letter being sent to him on May 31, 2002. This letter was also copied to Paul. Neither Faulkner nor Paul sent a copy of the letter to Stinson-Shea or Spero.

[11] On January 1, 2003, Megacorp Property Management Inc. ("Megacorp") took over management of CCC 555. Axia remained the property manager for Stinson-Shea and Spero.

[12] In April 2003, there were further problems with the occupants of 6034 Red Willow Drive using visitor parking spaces inappropriately. Tickets were issued against Lagacé. This, in turn, resulted in angry and aggressive confrontations on his part with representatives of Megacorp. Megacorp responded on May 1, 2003 with a letter to Lagacé stating that he could not enter or communicate with Megacorp's office at any time; instead all further communications had to be through his landlord, namely Stinson-Shea and Spero. A copy of this letter was sent to Stinson-Shea and Spero.

This was the first time since receipt of the June, 2000 letter (if the evidence of Stinson-Shea is accepted) or the October 6, 2000 letter (if the evidence proffered on behalf of CCC 555 is accepted) that Stinson-Shea and Spero received notification that their tenant, Lagacé, was causing problems at CCC 555.

[13] Stinson-Shea and Spero received a copy of the Application Record for these proceedings in May 2003. They immediately consulted a lawyer. Although they filed an Appearance, they did not contest the Application of CCC 555. Their only concern was the costs which CCC 555 were seeking from them.

Analysis

[14] Counsel for CCC 555 argued that CCC 555 is entitled to its costs on a substantial indemnity basis from Stinson-Shea and Spero as the owners of 6034 Red Willow Drive due to the wording of s. 134(5) of the Condominium Act, 1998, which is reproduced above. I do not accept this argument.

[15] Section 134(5) simply provides that if a corporation obtains an award of costs in an order made against an owner or occupier of a unit, the costs shall be added to the common expenses for the unit and collected accordingly. This subsection does not speak to the question of whether a costs order should be made in the first instance. Section 134(3)(b) confirms that the court, on an application by the condominium corporation for an order requiring someone to comply with the declaration, by-laws or rules of the corporation, may make an order requiring the persons named in the order to pay the costs incurred by the condominium corporation in obtaining the order. It does not require the court to do so.

[16] That being said, the relevant portions of the Declaration, By-laws and Rules of CCC 555, all reproduced above, make it clear that (1) the owner of each unit shall require any tenant of that unit to comply with the Condominium Act, 1998, and CCC 555's Declaration, By-laws and Rules; (2) the unit owner continues to have all obligations with respect to the unit, even if the unit is leased to a tenant; (3) the obligations of the owner and those of the tenant are joint and several; (4) the unit owner is responsible to indemnify and save harmless CCC 555 from any cost which CCC 555 may incur resulting from an act or omission of a tenant or the owner with respect to the common elements and/or all other units; and (5) all payments required to be made as a result of that indemnification are to be considered additional contributions toward the common expenses and are recoverable as such by CCC 555.

[17] At first blush, these provisions should result in Stinson-Shea and Spero indemnifying CCC 555 for the costs incurred by the condominium corporation in bringing this Application against Lagacé. Certainly there is precedent for such an order being made (see York Condominium Corp. No. 71 v. Sullivan, [1990] O.J. No. 840 (Dist. Ct.)). Stinson-Shea and Spero argue that, despite the provisions of CCC 555's governing documents, they should not have to pay any costs to CCC 555 because they were not given appropriate notice of their tenant's contraventions of the condominium's Rules and Regulations. They argue that had they been given appropriate notice, they would have taken steps to correct the situation, and those steps would have been much cheaper and simpler than the proceedings brought by the corporation. As a supplementary argument, Stinson-Shea and Spero suggest that the corporation should have sought some costs against Lagacé, who was, after all, the person who actually breached the condominium's Rules and Regulations.

[18] Neither the Condominium Act, 1998, nor the Declaration or By-laws of CCC 555, explicitly requires CCC 555 to notify unit owners of contraventions of rules by their tenants before CCC 555 seeks to recover from the owners the costs associated with its litigation against tenants. Nevertheless, I find that implied in the Declaration, By-laws and Rules of CCC 555 is a duty on the condominium corporation to provide an owner with notice of a tenant's contraventions before the corporation seeks legal costs against the owner for litigation against the tenant brought to enforce compliance with the condominium's governing documents.

[19] By virtue of the Condominium Act, 1998 and the governing documents of the condominium corporation, the party with whom the condominium corporation has a legal relationship is the unit owner, not the tenant. The unit owner also has a legal relationship with the tenant, by virtue of landlord and tenant law and the terms of the tenancy agreement between them. By virtue of the owner's legal position between the condominium corporation and the tenant, the owner is responsible for the tenant's behaviour while occupying the condominium unit. The condominium corporation looks to the owner to live up to the terms of the condominium declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations. The owner requires the tenant in the tenancy agreement to agree to comply with those condominium documents. In the case of a breach, the corporation demands compliance from the owner, who in turn, demands compliance from the tenant.

[20] The Condominium Act, 1998 does not establish the strict liability of unit owners for all infractions of tenants, even if they have had no notice of the infractions. The wording of s. 119(2) to the effect that an owner shall take "all reasonable steps" to ensure that an occupier of the owner's unit complies with the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules, implies that the owner has to know what is going on at the unit so that he or she can take whatever steps would be reasonable to deal with any problems. Put another way, it only stands to reason that the owner has to be notified of any unacceptable conduct on the part of the tenant if it is the owner's responsibility to vouch for that conduct and to take reasonable steps to correct problems. In many, if not most, situations, the unit owner who is renting to a tenant does not live at the condominium complex. If the property manager of the complex does not inform the owner of tenant infractions, how can the owner live up to his or her responsibility to ensure that the tenant abides by condominium rules? It would be contrary to public policy to expect unit owners to become private investigators checking up on their tenants to see if they are breaching any rules. It makes much more sense for the condominium's property manager to notify the unit owner of any significant or on-going breaches.

[21] The first question to consider is what notice was provided to Stinson-Shea and Spero. There is no dispute that Stinson-Shea and Spero received notice in March 2000 of certain problems being caused by Lagacé and his guests, primarily related to noise and general comportment. To their credit, Stinson-Shea and Spero took steps to deal with the complaints, meeting with Faulker and Lagacé in June 2000. They left the meeting assuming there would be no further contraventions by Lagacé.

[22] There is a letter authored by Faulker and dated October 6, 2000 that purportedly was sent to Stinson-Shea and Spero outlining continuing infractions by Lagacé. The sworn evidence of Stinson-Shea is that she and Spero never received this letter. I note that it was sent to the same address as the letter of March 17, 2000, which was received by Stinson-Shea and Spero. The onus is on Stinson-Shea and Spero to establish that they did not receive notice of Lagacé's contraventions. In regard to the letter of October 6, 2000, they have not met that onus.

[23] There is no dispute that letters to Lagacé dated October 11, 2001 and May 31, 2002 outlining on-going complaints and problems were copied to Paul, the employee at Axia acting as the property manager for Stinson-Shea and Spero. It is uncontroverted that Paul did not bring these letters to the attention of Stinson-Shea and Spero. The fact that Paul did not notify Stinson-Shea and Spero of the October 11, 2001 and May 31, 2002 letters from Faulkner is not an oversight that can be placed at the door of the condominium corporation. Faulkner was acting as the corporation's agent in sending a copy of the letter to Paul. In receiving that letter, Paul was acting as the owners' agent, even though he was working for the same property management company as Faulkner. Paul may have breached his contractual obligations to Stinson-Shea and Spero as their property manager, or he may have breached his duty of care to them. However it is considered, Paul's neglect to bring the continuing problems regarding Lagacé to the attention of Stinson-Shea and Spero does not entail unreasonable conduct on the part of CCC 555. It is not a reason to deny CCC 555 any costs pursuant to the terms of its Declaration, By-laws and Rules.

[24] I find that CCC 555 took adequate steps from March 2000 to May 2002 to notify Stinson-Shea and Spero of Lagacé's continued contravention of condominium Rules and Regulations, and to give Stinson-Shea and Spero the opportunity to do something to rectify the situation. As far as CCC 555 was concerned, aside from the one meeting in June 2000, Stinson-Shea and Spero did not take any steps to deal with Lagacé's breaches. They had known that their tenant had caused significant problems at the condominium complex in 1999 and 2000, yet had simply taken their tenant's word in June 2000 that he would try harder. As far as CCC 555 was aware, on three subsequent occasions, Stinson-Shea and Spero received further information that problems persisted, and they did not intervene. By the time the corporation started the litigation, they had not heard from Stinson-Shea and Spero for almost three years. There is no evidence that, during this period, Stinson-Shea or Spero called or wrote to the condominium corporation to see if their tenant's behaviour had improved. There is no evidence that they instructed their property manager to keep on top of the problem. There is no evidence that they initiated any inquiries whatever from June 2000 forward.

[25] On the other hand, when Megacorp decided to issue an application on behalf of CCC 555 early in May 2003, it knew that no one on behalf of CCC 555 had contacted the owners of 6034 Red Willow Drive since May 2002. Various incidents had occurred during the year which would have added fuel to any steps taken by the owners to end their tenancy agreement with Lagacé. The corporation did not know whether, once armed with this new evidence, the owners would take immediate steps to terminate the tenancy agreement, a step that could have been taken at far less cost to them than the costs now being sought by the corporation. From the documents available to me, it appears that CCC 555 chose to commence litigation at the same time that it sent a copy of its May 1, 2003 letter to Lagacé.

[26] Should CCC 555 be denied its costs because prior to actually commencing the Application against Lagacé, Stinson-Shea and Spero, it did not notify Stinson-Shea and Spero of the intended litigation? Without hesitation I find that it would have been prudent on the part of Megacorp, acting for CCC 555, to notify the owners directly of the condominium's intention to commence legal proceedings to deal with Lagacé if the owners did not immediately take the necessary steps to terminate Lagacé's tenancy through landlord and tenant proceedings. At the very least, it would have shown good judgment for Megacorp to write to Axia, as the owners' property managers. I contemplate that in certain factual circumstances, this absence of recent notice to the owners of continuing problems and impending litigation will result in the condominium corporation not being allowed to collect its litigation costs from the owners. In the factual circumstances of this case, I am not prepared to deny the corporation any costs based on the lack of recent notice to the owners. What I will do, however, is reduce the costs the corporation can recover.

[27] The evidence of Stinson-Shea is that had she and Spero known of the litany of breaches by Lagacé, they would have taken steps to terminate his tenancy. I accept their evidence that at least from October 2000 forward, they personally had no knowledge of the continuing problems, and presumably that is why they did not do anything about them. I also accept their evidence that, had the corporation contacted them after the events of April 2003, and prior to commencing litigation, they would have taken legal steps to rectify the situation. They did consult a lawyer as soon as this litigation was commenced. Therefore, had CCC 555 provided reasonable notice to Stinson-Shea and Spero in advance of commencing this litigation, the legal fees associated with this litigation may have been avoided altogether, or could have been significantly reduced. In these circumstances, I cannot conclude that all of the fees and disbursements charged to CCC 555 by Nelligan O'Brien Payne are "costs ... incurred by the Corporation by reason of a breach of any rules and regulations in force from time to time by any owner, ... or occupants of that unit ..."

[28] In this respect, I differentiate this case from those such as Peel Condominium Corp. No. 338 v. Young, [1996] O.J. No. 1478 (Gen.Div.); Peel Condominium Corporation No. 449 v. Amy Elizabeth Frances Hogg, a decision of Carnwath J. dated March 13, 1997; Frontenac Condominium Corporation No. 7 v. Jim Gallant and Connie Armstrong, a decision of Ratushny J. dated September 27, 2001; and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 66 v. Helena Brown, a decision of Polowin J. dated September 7, 2001. In all of those cases, costs were awarded on a solicitor-client or substantial indemnity scale. It is to be noted, however, that in each case, the judge stated that the person against whom the costs order was being made had been given specific notice of the problem that eventually necessitated the court application and had been given the opportunity of addressing the problem before the litigation was started.

Quantum of Costs

[29] The Bill of Costs presented by Nelligan O'Brien Payne is in the amount of $7,137.02 inclusive of GST and disbursements. Of this sum $3,000 represents legal fees for the original application seeking an order for compliance against the tenant, $2,701.25 represents costs attributable to preparation for the costs argument, and $500 represents counsel fees when submissions on costs were heard. Disbursements totaled $884.82.

Released: April 13, 2004

[31] I find the time, and therefore fees, attributable to the issue of costs to be excessive: it is greater than the time and costs associated with the Application itself.

[32] I also find the disbursements excessive. For example, I have difficulty understanding why $178.35 would be incurred for courier expenses on such a simple file. Also I do not allow costs for such items as tabs and bindings, in that I consider these included in normal office overhead. The way the Bill of Costs is prepared lumps these disbursements in with photocopying charges, which I would allow.

[33] This was a relatively simple matter, with the Application being a chronology of events, largely documented with letters and notices. Minimal argument was required at the initial hearing. The Bill of Costs was easy to prepare and is only two pages in length. The case law was easy to assemble, being largely cases argued by Nelligan O'Brien Payne.

[34] In all of the circumstances, I conclude that the legal costs incurred by CCC 555 that can reasonably be considered "costs ... incurred by [CCC 555] by reason of a breach of any rules and regulations in force from time to time by [Stinson-Shea and Spero], ... or [Lagacé] ..." amount to $3,600 inclusive of disbursements and GST. This sum shall be added to the common expenses of Unit 11, Level 2, CCC 555 in the amount of $300 per month, until paid.

A. Introduction

[1] In early 2004 the Board of Directors of York Condominium Corporation No. 82 (“YCC 82”) was dysfunctional. This state of affairs led the applicant, Mr. Bahadoor, a unit owner, to apply to Court under section 131 of the Condominium Act, 1998 (the “Act”) for the appointment of an administrator for the corporation. On March 1, 2004 Hoilett J. appointed Fengate Property Management Ltd. (“Fengate”) as administrator of YCC 82 (the “Administrator”).

[2] Since its appointment the Administrator has filed four reports with the Court. The first three were approved. The fourth received conditional approval by Spence J. in June, 2006. In his order Spence J. put in place a mechanism to convene a meeting of the unit owners by October 25, 2006 in order to vote on four questions: (i) whether to authorize additional borrowing of $5.9 million by YCC 82; (ii) whether to sell the corporation’s property; (iii) whether to continue the role of the Administrator or, if not; (iv) to elect a new Board of Directors. Spence J. stipulated that any vote to terminate the Administrator and elect a new Board of Directors would be subject to Court approval.

[3] A unit owner meeting was held on October 25, 2006. Of the 321 unit owners, 221 cast votes. The results were overwhelming: 215 units voted against the proposed borrowing, while 6 voted in favour; 215 voted against a sale of YCC 82, with 4 in favour; 215 voted to terminate the Administrator, with 4 in favour of it continuing; and five new directors were elected – Messrs. Lochan, Wahab, Sampat, Bahadoor and Sukdeo.

[4] Following the meeting the Added Respondents moved for an order approving the election of the new Board and discharging the Administrator. The Administrator vigorously opposed the motion; it submitted that it should not be discharged or, alternatively, it should not be discharged until May or October, 2007 by which time major repairs will be completed.

[5] I have concluded that the mandate of Fengate as the Administrator should be suspended and that governance of the YCC 82 should be turned over to the duly elected Board of Directors on an interim basis, subject to further reporting requirements and Court review.

B. Brief Background

[6] YCC 82 consists of 321 units, mainly apartment-style condominiums. It is located near Jane St. and Finch St., a low-income area of Toronto. The value of the units ranges between $50,000 and $75,000, and the owners are mostly low income or immigrant families, pensioners and seniors. Monthly common element fees run at about $800.

[7] The circumstances facing YCC 82 in early 2004 were dire. As Hoilett J. recounted in his endorsement, the corporation had been without a property manager since August, 2003, the Board of Directors was in crisis and dysfunctional, and it was unclear whether insurance was in place for the corporation. Mr. Bahadoor applied for the appointment of an administrator. Although Hoilett J. recognized that resorting to section 131 of the Act was a last resort, under the circumstances then prevailing he had no hesitation in concluding that “this is a textbook case for invoking s. 131(1).”

[8] During the hearing before me the Administrator’s counsel seemed to labour under the impression that the appointment order of Hoillet J. required the Administrator to remain in place until all the major repairs needed by YCC 82 were completed. That is not a correct reading of the order. Hoilett J. appointed Fengate as Administrator “until further order of this Court”. The appointment was temporary and subject to termination by the Court under the appropriate circumstances – no long-term project mandate was given by this Court to the Administrator.

[9] The first three reports of the Administrator to the Court were approved. The Administrator also sought and received unit owner approval to borrow $4 million to undertake major repairs and build up the reserve fund.

[10] Throughout early 2005 Mr. Bahadoor attempted to bring a motion before the Court to discharge the Administrator, but was not successful.

[11] On July 13, 2005 Somers J. directed the Administrator to file a fourth report by mid-February, 2006, which it did. At the same time as the Administrator sought court approval of its fourth report, a group of unit owners styling themselves as the “Y.C.C. #82 Advisory Committee” sought leave to intervene in the proceeding. Perell J. permitted them to intervene individually as “Added Respondents”, and these are the unit owners that have brought the present motion.

[12] The Added Respondents were dissatisfied with the Administrator’s management of YCC 82 and wished to hold an election for a new Board of Directors.

[13] Matters came to a head at a hearing before Spence J. on May 19, 2006. The Administrator sought approval of its fourth report and directions to borrow a further $5.9 million; the Added Respondents sought to terminate the Administrator. As I read the endorsement of Spence J. released on June 20, 2006, two major issues separated the Administrator and many of the unit owners: (i) how to finance additional necessary repairs to YCC 82; and (ii) whether the unit owners were competent to govern themselves. It is clear from paragraphs 22 and 25 of Spence J.'s endorsement that the Administrator did not think that the unit owners were capable of acting in their own best interests..

[14] Spence J. concluded that it was time to put a number of key questions to a vote of unit owners and he directed that a meeting of unit holders be held by October 25, 2006 to vote on four questions. His Honour conditionally approved the Administrator's fourth report. At the end of his endorsement he wrote, in para. 31:

If a decision is taken to terminate the administration and a board of directors is elected and if those decisions are approved by the Court, the further implementation of the Fourth Report after the assumption by the board of directors of its responsibilities would be for the board to decide, subject to contractual obligations then in place.

[15] One would have thought that following the release of Spence J.'s endorsement in late June both sides would have co-operated to convene a meeting of the unit holders. That did not happen. The record before me disclosed an inability (or unwillingness) to settle the terms of Spence J.'s order, and major disputes over the timing and location of the meeting. A meeting scheduled for September 12 was cancelled. Litigation, not co-operation, was the order of the day. Trips by the parties to Triage Court became frequent. Mr. David Morrison, of Morrison Financial Services Limited, the corporation's lender, described the poor state of relations between the Administrator and many unit owners as follows:

"I think the parties are very polarized on personalities at this point, and there's been a lot of bad blood. I don't know how you get them together at this point in time."

[16] On August 25, 2006 the Administrator delivered a letter to all unit owners that gave them a stark choice: either approve additional borrowing of $5.9 million at the unit owner meeting or face the prospect of an immediate special assessment. This last point is important. Instead of awaiting the results of the meeting and, in the event of a rejection of a by-law authorizing additional borrowing then levying a special assessment, the Administrator notified unit owners that payment of the assessment would start immediately, on September 8, 2006, and continue over 12 months. The special assessment would range from $1,900 to $2,900 per month per unit, in contrast to the mean monthly common element fee of $800 per month. Given the demographics of YCC 82, enforcement of the special assessment could impose severe financial burdens on many of the unit holders.

[17] Shortly after the October 25 meeting that rejected the additional borrowing, the Administrator delivered notices of liens to unit owners in respect of the special assessment. At the hearing I was advised that the Administrator had authorized significant legal expenses to prepare for the registration of certificates of lien against unit owners who had not paid the special assessment. I stayed any further such work until the release of these reasons.

[18] The special assessment is another example of the antagonistic relationship that unfortunately has developed between the Administrator and unit owners. I am somewhat surprised that the Administrator pushed forward with the special assessment on September 8, 2006. I recognize the financial realities that the Administrator was trying to address and it is true that paragraph 12 of the 2004 appointment order authorized the Administrator to levy “a special assessment and/or deliver a revised budget for the purpose of obtaining additional funds for the proper operation of YCC 82...” But that was in 2004. Paragraph 5 of Spence J.’s 2006 order contemplated that the Administrator would proceed with a special assessment only if the unit owners failed to approve additional borrowing. The decision of the Administrator to enforce a special assessment on September 8, 2006 before the unit holders had even voted on additional borrowing was confrontational in nature, even if motivated by a hard-nosed sense of the financial realities facing the corporation. The move fostered further distrust between the Administrator and unit owners.

[19] In the result, the unit owner meeting was held on the last possible day, and I described above the outcome of the meeting.

C. Preliminary Objection by Administrator

[20] At the commencement of the hearing counsel for the Administrator objected to Mr. Fulton’s appearance as counsel for the Added Respondents. While submitting that his client did not want to delay the hearing, the Administrator’s counsel sought an order permitting the examination of Mr. Fulton as a witness on a pending motion. Pointing to portions of the affidavit of Mr. Wallace filed on behalf of the moving parties as being based on information provided to the deponent by Mr.

Fulton, counsel for the Administrator submitted that a lawyer cannot be both witness and counsel in a proceeding, and that Mr. Fulton should be examined on the information he provided to Mr. Wallace: Trempe v. Reybroek (2002), 57 O.R. (3d) 786 (S.C.J.).

[21] I reviewed the affidavit of Mr. Wallace in support of the moving parties and that of Mr. Endres in support of the Administrator. Both drew heavily on information from the respective counsel to provide the narrative background to this case. Each used a different style to present the material: Mr. Wallace deposed to information and belief provided by Mr. Fulton, whereas Mr. Endres simply described lawyers’ letters as “now shown to me”. None of the facts so presented seemed controversial, and Mr. Wallace offered many views in his affidavit that were clearly based on his own experience and training.

[22] I advised counsel for the Administrator that I did not regard Mr. Fulton as acting as both witness and counsel. If the moving parties relied on evidence in Mr. Wallace’s affidavit to which the Administrator took issue, I would consider any objection made to such evidence. None was made during the hearing. This incident highlighted the unnecessarily adversarial approach taken by the Administrator to this proceeding.

D. The Governing Test

[23] Under section 131(2) of the Act a court may order the appointment of an administrator for a condominium corporation “if the court is of the opinion that it would be just or convenient, having regard to the scheme and intent of this Act and the best interests of the owners.” Section 131 does not contain any express provision addressing the termination of an administrator, and counsel were not able to direct me to a case on point.

[24] In my view it makes sense that the test found in section 131(2) of the Act for the appointment of an administrator should apply equally to its discharge. The question to be asked on this motion is: would it be just or convenient, having regard to the scheme and intent of the Condominium Act and the best interests of the owners, to terminate the Administrator?

[25] As to the scheme of the Act, the Court of Appeal observed in Re Carlton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545 (C.A.) that:

The Condominium Act was passed to permit individuals to be owners of the freehold estate in residential units in a building as opposed to tenants in an apartment building.

In addition to the investment in their units, owners are tenants in common of the common elements: Act, s. 11(2). The objects of a condominium corporation are to manage the property and assets, if any, of the corporation on behalf of the owners, and to control, manage and administer the common elements and assets of the corporation: Act, s. 17(1)(2). Since the quiet enjoyment of a unit by its owner, and the value of the unit, depend heavily on the proper management of the common elements, it is no surprise that the Act vests the power to manage the affairs in the corporation in the unit owners through the board of directors that they elect: Act, s. 27 and 28. The Act establishes self-governance of the corporation by unit owners as the norm. As Hoilett J. noted, a court should utilize the administrator provisions of section 131 “only as a last resort” for the very reason that the Act contemplates that unit owners should govern their own corporate affairs.

[26] When a court is considering either the appointment or termination of an administrator, good reason must be shown why unit owners should not manage their corporation’s affairs through an elected board of directors. Self-governance is the norm; administrators are the exception. Or, as put by Huddart J. in Cook v. Strata Plan No. 50, [1995] B.C.J. No. 2882 (B.C.S.C.): “...the democratic government of the strata community should not be overridden by the Court except where absolutely necessary.”

[27] Notwithstanding the centrality of the principle of self-governance, the scheme of the Act takes into account more than just the interests of unit owners. In York Condominium Corporation No. 482 v. Christiansen, [2003] O.J. No. 343 (S.C.J.), at para. 5, the Court stated:

...A principal object of the Act is to achieve fairness among the parties – owners, their tenants, their mortgagees, the corporation itself – in raising the money to keep the common enterprise solvent. Hence the Act provides for owners to contribute to the fund for common expenses in the proportions specified in the Declaration, which normally means in accordance with the number and size of the units which they own. This common expenses fund is the central financial mechanism of the corporation and the duty of contributing to it is the central mechanism to achieve financial fairness among the owners. If one owner fails to pay, the others must bear his burden; the expenses are not optional and they do not just go away.

From this I conclude that on a motion to terminate an administrator the Court must take into account the impact that the discharge might have on other interested persons, including the corporation's creditors and the relevant municipal agencies such as the fire services department and building inspection authorities.

[28] In Skyline Executive Properties Inc. v. Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 1385, [2002] O.J. No. 5117 (Sup.C.J.) Hoilett J. drew on jurisprudence from the British Columbia courts to conclude that when considering whether to appoint an administrator a court should consider (i) the ability of the unit owners to manage the affairs of the corporation, including whether they are divided into contending camps; (ii) the need to bring order to the corporation's affairs; (iii) whether only the appointment of an administrator has any reasonable prospect of bringing order to the corporation's affairs; and, (iv) the problem presented by the costs of involving an administrator. Each factor could apply, in reverse, to the question of whether the court should terminate an administrator.

[29] Against this statutory backdrop, in the specific circumstances of this case, I think two basic questions must be asked to determine whether it would be just or convenient, having regard to the scheme and intent of the Condominium Act and the best interests of the owners, to terminate the Administrator:

- (a) Is there now a reasonable prospect for the orderly self-governance of YCC 82?
- (b) Have the elected Board of Directors formulated an operating and project expenditure plan that presents a reasonable prospect of achieving the orderly management of the affairs of the corporation?

E. Is there now a reasonable prospect for the orderly self-governance of YCC 82?

[30] Based on the evidence, the answer to this question is "Yes".

[31] The Honourable Mr. Justice Rosenberg chaired the unit owners meeting on October 25, 2006. Ten persons stood for election as directors and five were elected. The election was scrutinized. Detailed minutes were kept of the meeting. They do not contain any objections about the fairness of the election process. They do contain comments from a number of unit owners that are consistent with the results of the various votes – the unit owners want the opportunity to decide their own fate.

[32] The new Board of Directors includes a senior law clerk, a real estate broker, a marketing pricing specialist with Canadian Tire Corporation, an insurance underwriter and a financial services manager with the Bank of Montreal.

[33] After the election the new Board retained the services of Mr. Andrew Wallace, a condominium consultant. His credentials are impressive. A past President of the Association of Condominium Managers of Ontario, Mr. Wallace has spent over 34 years in the industry and in the past two years has been appointed by the Court as an administrator of two condominium corporations. The new Board wants Mr. Wallace to provide services as a facilitator and advisor.

[34] Mr. Morrison, from the mortgagee, confirmed on examination that Mr. Wallace is very experienced and enjoys an excellent reputation in the condominium industry.

[35] Mr. Wallace deposed that he is “confident that the affairs of YCC #82 can be efficiently conducted by the new Board of Directors”. Based on his experience in the industry, he regarded the results of the election as giving an “overwhelming mandate” to the new Board.

[36] The unit owners have elected a new board that possesses strong support amongst the owners. The new Board has secured the advisory services of an experienced condominium management expert. As a result, I am satisfied that the conditions have been established for the orderly self-governance of YCC 82.

F. Have the new Board of Directors formulated an operating and project expenditure plan that presents a reasonable prospect of achieving the orderly management of the affairs of the corporation?

[37] This is a more difficult question to answer.

[38] YCC 82 and its unit owners face significant challenges. Over the next few years major sums must be spent on needed repairs and improvements. The Administrator previously secured owner approval to borrow $4 million and has spent those funds on repairs and other matters. More funds must be raised. Toronto Fires Services is demanding that a significant amount of work be done immediately to meet fire code standards and City of Toronto work orders remain outstanding.

[39] No unit owner should underestimate the work that must be done on the buildings and the hard decisions that they will have to make. It is unclear whether all the unit owners have frankly acknowledged the significant financial challenges that face their corporation. Mr. Morrison, from the corporation’s lender, attended the October 25 meeting. In a subsequent letter to the counsel for the Added Respondents he voiced strong concerns about whether the unit owners truly understood the fiscal circumstances in which they found themselves. He commented:

“It was also clear that the owners do not understand the true cost of living in, and properly maintaining, their homes...At the end of the day, the costs are real and, eventually, the owners are going to be forced to recognize them.”

On his examination Mr. Morrison called for the emergence of strong, realistic leadership from amongst the unit owners.

[40] Whether such strong, realistic leadership has emerged in the form of the new Board of Directors remains to be seen. I have no doubt that an enthusiastic and dedicated new Board is now in place. I am not yet sure whether its plans are realistic.

[42] The ‘Mandate’ certainly identifies the key areas that a new Board will have to address: immediately deal with fire violations and City work orders; hire a professional property manager satisfactory to the corporation’s lender; formulate a budget, including a realistic reserve fund; and secure additional financing. However, the new Board did not file detailed plans for each item nor a timetable for their execution. The new Board provided some comments on the Administrator’s draft budget for the next year, suggesting that savings could be made in the area of operational expenses. The new Board also filed some materials about on possible ‘hybrid’ forms of financing that the unit owners could consider. A meeting of unit owners is scheduled for December 20, 2006 to discuss and vote on additional borrowing.

[43] The new Board submitted that to date the Administrator has denied them access to the books and records of the corporation needed to develop a detailed financial plan. The Administrator’s counsel responded that voluminous materials were filed with each of the four reports and the unit owners, including the new Board members, always had access to that historical material.

[44] One aspect of this motion that troubles me is the lack of current financial information about the corporation before the Court. The last report filed with the Court this past spring contained financial information up to December 31, 2005. Such information would be of minimal use in preparing a budget for the forthcoming year. I asked the Administrator’s counsel whether audited financial statements of the corporation for the year ended May 31, 2006 were available. I was told they were not. Un-audited financials for that year end were not included in the materials; management pro formas showing year-to-date results for the current fiscal year were not filed; nor were any year-over-year comparisons of the corporation’s balance sheet or income and expenses statements. Simply put, the Court on this motion is operating in a virtual financial information vacuum. While there are ample materials before the Court showing the significant future expenditures that the corporation must make, there is no information that would enable the Court to assess the current financial health of the corporation.

[45] In April of this year the Added Respondents (some of whom are now new Directors) wrote to the Administrator requesting access to the financial records of the corporation. The April 26, 2006 response from the Administrator’s counsel was unduly legalistic and antagonistic. It basically said: “look at the court reports; you aren’t entitled to current financial information”.

[46] In light of that response I understand why the new Board has not been able to develop a detailed financial plan for the corporation.

[47] Mr. Wallace deposed that he had reviewed the new Board’s ‘Mandate’ and thinks that “it is reasonable and achievable and its implementation will ensure the smooth running and maintenance of YCC #82 while allowing any and all fire violations and work orders to be addressed and cleared.” He has been retained to assist the Board in executing the ‘Mandate’. His retainer gives me assurance that the new Board has access to the appropriate resources to put together more detailed budgets, reserve fund plans, project expenditure plans and financing plans, all of which must candidly recognize the obligations the corporation owes to its creditors, Toronto Fire Services and the City of Toronto.

G. Conclusion

[48] The polarized relationship existing between the current Administrator and the unit owners cannot continue. Although I have expressed some concerns about certain aspects of the Administrator’s conduct, it must be emphasized that the Court has approved prior reports of the Administrator and commented on the good faith manner in which the Administrator performed its duties. I have no doubt that conduct on both sides has contributed to the current breakdown in relations between the Administrator and unit owners. I think the time has arrived to transition corporate governance from the Administrator to the new Board, as long as certain conditions are met.

[49] In his affidavit Mr. Wallace opined that it would be most effective and efficient in this case if the Administrator were terminated immediately. In principle that advice is sound; however, on the facts of this case I have some reservations in view of the absence of detailed plans from the new Board. Some transition process is required.

[50] I therefore make the following orders:

- (1) Effectively immediately the appointment of Fengate as Administrator to exercise all of the powers and discharge all of the duties of the Board of Directors of YCC 82 is suspended, subject to the reporting and court review requirements set out below;
- (2) Effective immediately the persons duly elected as Directors of the corporation at the meeting held on October 25, 2006, namely, Bridge Bahadoor, Irwin Sampat, Abdool Wahab, Surendra Lochan and Mark Sukhdeo, shall assume all of the powers and discharge all of the duties of the Board of Directors of YCC 82 on an interim basis, subject to the reporting requirements set out below and approval of the Board's plans by this Court on Wednesday, January 31, 2007;
- (3) Fengate shall continue as property manager of YCC 82 until January 31, 2007 or until such earlier time as the Board of Directors puts in place another professional property manager who is approved by the corporation's lender in accordance with the provisions of the relevant loan or financing agreements between the parties. Until replaced by a new property manager, Fengate shall be compensated for its services by YCC 82 at the current level it receives as Administrator;

- (4) Effective immediately the Board of Directors shall have unrestricted access to all books and records of the corporation, but those records shall continue to be kept at their present location on the corporation's premises in order to ensure that the property manager can continue to perform its duties. To be clear, the corporation's books and records must be maintained at a location that permits the property manager to perform its duties and enables the Board of Directors to discharge its duties and prepare the plans described in paragraph 8 below;
- (5) Fengate and the new Board of Directors are to co-operate fully, professionally and politely with each other, and with their respective representatives or advisors, during this transition period. Each side must extend such assistance to the other as is necessary to effect a transition that is smooth and furthers the best interests of YCC 82;

- (6) Fengate and the new Board of Directors must co-operate to put in place immediately banking arrangements that are typical in the industry for a condominium corporation/property manager relationship and that ensure the uninterrupted receipt by the corporation of revenues to which it is entitled;
- (7) The special assessment commencing September 8, 2006 issued by the Administrator is rescinded, and any Notices of Lien delivered in furtherance of the special assessment are set aside;
- (8) By January 15, 2007 the Board of Directors must file with the Court a report that includes the following information:
- i. A Board-approved budget for the balance of the fiscal year ended May 31, 2007 and for the fiscal year ending May 31, 2008;
 - ii. A realistic Board-approved reserve fund plan;
 - iii. A realistic Board-approved project expenditure plan and construction program that ensures YCC 82 will satisfy any work requirements directed by the Toronto Fire Services and the City of Toronto within a time frame satisfactory to those agencies;
 - iv. A realistic Board-approved plan to finance the corporation's operating, reserve and project expenditure requirements, including proof of availability of any planned borrowing;
 - v. Evidence that the accounts payable of YCC 82 are in good standing;
 - vi. Evidence of the appointment of a new, professional property manager;
 - vii. A report on the results of the unit owners' meeting scheduled for December 20, 2006 to approve further borrowing; and,
 - viii. Confirmation that any work that the Toronto Fire Services or City of Toronto requires be completed by December 31, 2006 has been performed to the satisfaction of those two agencies or that the agencies have agreed to another timetable for completion of the work.
- (9) At the same time as it files its report, the Board of Directors must file a further affidavit from Mr. Wallace containing his professional opinion on whether the Board's filed plans are realistic and achievable in light of (i) the specific needs of the corporation; (ii) the work directions issued by Toronto Fire Services and the City of Toronto; and (iii) the corporation's obligations to its creditors.

(10) By January 15, 2007 the Administrator shall file with the Court a report, in a form similar to that of its previous reports, for the period from January 1, 2006 until December 4, 2006. The report shall detail all legal expenses incurred by the Administrator during 2006 and shall indicate which legal expenses have been paid and which remain due and owing. The report should also contain an accounting of the Administrator's fees since January 1, 2006;

(11) The Administrator and the new Board of Directors shall schedule a motion before me returnable on Wednesday, January 31, 2007 at which time:

i. The Administrator shall present its report for approval and pass its accounts; and, ii. The Board of Directors shall present for review the plans specified in paragraph 8 of this Order.

If the Court finds the plans to be realistic and achievable, the Court will grant final approval of the election of the Board of Directors and formally discharge the Administrator; and,

(11) The Board of Directors shall deliver to each unit owner a copy of these reasons by no later than 5 p.m. on Thursday, December 7, 2006. I want to ensure that each unit owner appreciates the need to implement immediately a realistic plan that addresses YCC 82's challenging financial situation. Costs of photocopying and delivery are to be borne by the corporation.

[51] If the parties cannot agree on any material, urgent transitional matter, they may make an appointment with the Motions Office to appear before me at 9 a.m. for one hour during the next two weeks. I strongly encourage the parties to work together in order to avoid the necessity of such an attendance. Co-operation and common sense must prevail during the transition period.

Costs

[52] The Added Respondents may file written cost submissions by December 15, 2006. The Administrator may file its written cost submissions by January 5, 2007. Each submission shall be no longer than 7 typed pages, including schedules.

[53] Since I was concerned about the costs of litigation involving a condominium corporation located in a low-income area of Toronto, at the end of the November 29 hearing I stayed payment by the Administrator of any legal expenses incurred, but not paid. I continue that stay until January 31, 2007 when I will review the Administrator's accounts. However, I recognize that the Administrator will incur legal expenses to prepare its next report and present it to the Court, so the Administrator will be permitted to recover its reasonable legal expenses for such work once the report has been considered by the Court.

Final Comment to the Unit Owners and the new Board of Directors

[54] I must emphasize to the new Board of Directors and to all unit owners that they are not yet out of the woods. Major repair expenditures must be made and the pressing concerns of Toronto Fire Services and the City of Toronto must be addressed. Had the new Board not retained an experienced professional such as Mr. Wallace to provide them with advice and guidance, it is unlikely I would have made this order. If realistic and achievable plans are not placed before this Court for review on January 31, 2007, the corporation may find itself back under the management of an administrator. Mr. Morrison has stated that realistic leadership must emerge at YCC 82; it is time for this new Board to demonstrate that it can provide such leadership.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO

RE: R. MARCUS H. LITTLE (Applicant) v.
METROPOLITAN TORONTO
CONDOMINIUM CORP. NO. 590
(Respondent)

BEFORE: Justice Marrocco

COUNSEL: Mark H. Arnold, for the Applicant
Patricia M. Conway, for the Respondent

DATE HEARD: August 14, 2006

ENDORSEMENT

[1] This application is dismissed with costs.

[2] The applicant, a unit owner at Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 590, in essence seeks an order requiring the respondent to reimburse its (the Respondent's) Reserve Fund for $230,000 that the applicant claims were wrongfully expended from that fund. The applicant argues that inappropriate Reserve Fund expenditures were made on the following items:

- (1) Security system upgrades,

- (2) the purchase of exercise equipment
- (3) replacement of the entrance canopy,
- (4) lobby renovations, and
- (5) design fees.

SECURITY SYSTEM UPGRADES

[3] The security system had a 15-year life cycle. It was scheduled for replacement in 2002. Security systems evolve over time. When systems are replaced, sometimes enhancements are affected. In this case new security cameras were installed in the front foyer. New lenses were installed in all cameras. The system was updated to record images using digital technology.

[4] Section 97(1) of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 (the “Act”) provides that the corporation has an obligation to maintain the common elements. It is a notorious fact that technology becomes outdated and in order to be maintained must be replaced. Replacing a 15-year-old security system with a modern one clearly involves maintaining the security system and therefore the common elements. That is all that happened here.

[5] Section 97(2)(b) of the Act provides that the Board may make improvements or changes to the common elements to ensure the safety or security of persons using the property. Changing the security system by replacing it with a more modern version ensures the safety or security of persons using the property.

THE PURCHASE OF EXERCISE EQUIPMENT

[6] The expenditure on exercise equipment involved replacing a 1974 rowing machine with a newer used model.

The weight machine was replaced because no parts were available to put it back into safe operating condition. The word “maintain” as it appears in s. 97(1) of the Act is not defined. Furthermore the English language is not an instrument of mathematical precision. Determining that the exercise equipment was maintained by replacing old equipment with new equipment does no more than recognize the obvious, namely, that it is impossible for the Legislature to foresee the manifold sets of facts which can arise in any area which is the subject of legislation. Finally, I note that, according to the President's Report, the repairs were well received. The following appears in the Minutes of the Annual General Meeting (April 25,2002) "the renovation of the exercise facility had been completed. The area is larger and usage had increased." (Respondent's Record at p. 60)

REPLACEMENT OF THE ENTRANCE CANOPY

[7] The canvas canopy, at the entrance of the building, was scheduled for replacement in 2003. The Board determined to address the absence of eaves-troughs at the location of the canopy. The absence of eaves troughs led to water pouring onto the concrete at the front of the building thereby creating a hazard. The Board also determined to address the absence of handicapped access.

[8] A new glass and granite canopy, which updated the look of the front of the building, was installed to replace the old canvas canopy. Eaves-troughs were installed and handicapped access provided. During the course of the canopy replacement it was discovered that water had been entering the outer foyer of the lobby and that the concrete in that area was badly deteriorated. The front doors, threshold and outer foyer floor had to be taken up and replaced.

[9] The change from a canvas canopy to a glass and granite canopy was simply the substitution of a modern canopy for what had once been a modern canopy. The canvas canopy was at one time stylish. Today, one modern equivalent is a canopy made of glass and granite. There is nothing in s. 97(1) of the Act that suggests that it was intended to be a cultural straitjacket. The canopy that was at the entrance was simply replaced by a more contemporary version.

[10] The decision to provide handicapped access reflects no more than a desire to ensure that persons under a physical disability will be able to safely use the property and is in accordance therefore with s. 97(2) of the Act.

[11] There's no suggestion that the repairs to the outer foyer were anything but an attempt to reverse the effects of years of water damage. The Corporation had an obligation to make such repairs and I find based on the evidence that the repairs were made using materials that were reasonably close in quality to the original and thus are deemed by s. 97(1) of the Act not to be an addition, alteration or improvement to the common elements or a change in the assets of the corporation.

LOBBY RENOVATIONS

[12] The Board determined that the owners wanted a lobby redesign, which would project the same high-end image for the building as, had existed when the building was first marketed and built. The owners were able to agree on a new design. The Board determined that of the total projected cost of $70,000 constituted an improvement to be funded by an existing operating surplus of $35,000 and a special assessment of $35,000.

[13] The Corporation decided that a vote of the owners was required. Approval was sought at the Annual General Meeting to be held on April 25, 2002. At the meeting there were not enough unit owners present to obtain the consent of the necessary two-thirds of the unit owners (i.e. 80 unit owners).

There were 45 unit owners present 44 of whom voted in favour of the renovation. The meeting resolved to leave the vote open for a period of 120 days to allow the Board to solicit proxies and thereby get the approval of the required 80 unit owners. The Board obtained proxies from 36 unit owners who were not present at the Annual General Meeting. These 36 proxies plus the votes from the 44 unit owners who were present at the Annual General Meeting, in the Board's opinion, gave it the required approval from 80 unit owners.

[14] The Board conducted itself in a manner that contravened s. 97(5) of the Act. Specifically, the votes of 80 unit owners were not taken at a meeting duly called for the purpose of approving a substantial addition to the assets of the corporation.

[15] Section 134(1) of the Act provides that a unit owner may make an application for an order enforcing compliance with the Act. Section 134(3) provides me with the discretionary authority to make a compliance or other remedial order.

[16] I decline to make such an order. I based my decision upon the following factors:

- (1) the changes were fully disclosed to the unit owners prior to any construction taking place,
- (2) the required number of unit owners did approve the Lobby Renovations (i.e. "addition, alteration or improvement to the common elements or a change in assets of the corporation" to use the language of section 97(3)) albeit not at a meeting called for that purpose,
- (3) I find and the respondent agreed that the decision of the Annual General Meeting to delay the vote and solicit proxies was taken in good faith,

- (4) the Lobby Renovations were carried out in a fiscally responsible way creating no deficiency in the Corporation's Reserve Fund or finances generally.

DESIGN FEES

[17] None of the evidence tendered on this application was directed to the appropriateness of Design Fees, in the amount of $8,000, being paid out of the Reserve Fund. The issue was raised for the first time in argument. I am not persuaded that the payment of Design Fees out of the Reserve Fund was inappropriate.

[18] Accordingly this application is dismissed with costs.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO

RE: METROPOLITAN TORONTO
CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION
551
v. MANI ADAM

BEFORE: Justice Low

COUNSEL: Carol A. Dirks, for the applicant

Thomas McRae, for the respondent, counter applicant

Heard October 17 and 18, 2006, costs submissions in writing

COSTS ENDORSEMENT

[1] This application and counter-application was heard at some length over the course of two days but on the second day, counsel arrived at a negotiated result. The parties agreed to a protocol pursuant to which the parties would exercise their rights and fulfill their respective obligations as condominium unit owner and condominium corporation.

[2] There were, however, three additional terms that the parties wanted to be imposed which could not be agreed to and I was asked to make a ruling. The applicant sought an order prohibiting the respondent from communicating with the condominium's directors except by letter; it sought an order prohibiting the respondent from communicating with third parties concerning the condominium; and the respondent sought an order that he be permitted to make copies of condominium documents using his own scanner.

[3] I declined to order the additional terms and gave oral reasons. Regrettably, the court reporter had departed for the day, a fact which escaped my attention until I had almost concluded oral reasons and I have attempted to reproduce them in somewhat edited form below as they have some bearing on my reasons for the costs disposition.

[4] I do not order the additional terms as I would dismiss the application and the counter-application. While the behaviour of Mr. Adam was annoying and at times ill-mannered and while his suggestions to management were in several instances unreasonable, I am not satisfied that his actions were oppressive or prejudicial or unfairly disregarded the interests of the applicant corporation. Likewise, although the behaviour of the corporation as expressed through its manager, Mr. Moshenberg, was at times uncooperative and disdainful and while Mr. Moshenberg did not appear to be fully conversant with the rights and obligations of owners and the condominium corporation, I am also not satisfied that the applicant's actions were oppressive or prejudicial or unfairly disregarded the interests of Mr. Adam in the totality of the circumstances.

[5] The case of the applicant breaks down into four main areas. The first concerns Mr. Adam's requests that there be posted greetings in the common areas in relation to religious holidays apart from those in Judaism. Mr. Adam is entitled to make such requests just as the board of directors is entitled, as an incident of management, to decline to accede to them.

Mr. Adam's suggestion that either there be postings in respect of no religious holidays or that there be postings relating to holidays of all religions was not a reasonable one and it was entirely within the powers of the Board to deny the request. That Mr. Adam made additional requests and that he expressed the ill-conceived view that the posting of a greeting of the kind on view in the common elements was contrary to the Charter was undoubtedly annoying, but the fact of the requests and the expression of opinion does not, in my view, amount to more than that — an annoyance. In any case, Mr. Adam stopped making the requests when asked to by the applicant's solicitors.

[6] The second area concerns the request for investigation and Mr. Adam's own investigation into the delay in response to a fire alarm. Mr. Adam, as an owner and as a resident, has what should be an obviously legitimate interest in knowing the reason or cause of delay in response to a fire alarm. He was entitled to ask the Board to investigate the issue, and I find that Mr. Moshenberg knowingly withheld from Mr. Adam the material information that the monitor was doing telephone verification with the site before it dispatched emergency services. The written response on behalf of the condominium corporation to Mr. Adam on the issue was misleading. Mr. Adam was, as it turned out, correct in thinking that there was something "fishy" and the conviction on Mr. Adam's part that there was something being hidden, and I find that there was, was the reason he wanted to see the records of the corporation.

[7] The third area of alleged oppression raised by the applicant is Mr. Adam's repeated requests for inspection of a number of the corporation's records. The statute confers on an owner the right to view the records and to have copies. It does not stipulate where and how, and these matters are left to the common sense and good manners of owners and managers. Regrettably, that was lacking here. Mr. Moshenberg was in error insofar as he demanded that Mr. Adam disclose his motive or purpose in seeking to have inspection of the condominium corporation's records. There is some evidence before me upon which a finding could be made that Mr. Adam was given a runaround as to when and where and in whose presence and what he could and could not inspect but the issue of whether the applicant in fact denied the respondent's rights to inspect the corporation's records is the subject matter of a pending small claims court proceeding, as is the issue of whether s. 77 of the Act was breached. In the small claims court action, Mr. Adam claims that he was wrongfully denied access and he claims the statutory penalty of $500.

[8] The applicant complains that Mr. Adam made repeated requests for the same documents. There is no admissible evidence before me that Mr. Adam was given meaningful inspection of records he requested. I am therefore not prepared to make the finding that his repeated requests were not legitimate. If Mr. Adam was denied access to the records which the statute entitles him to see, then his repeated requests, while annoying, are legitimate. Having said that however, I also decline to make the finding that he was denied access. That is a determination to be made in the Small Claims Court, the forum mandated under the statute for the determination of that issue.

[9] As for contravention of s. 77, Mr. Moshenberg's initial response to Mr. Adam's request for the addresses for service of the board members was neither appropriate nor adequate. While the applicant ultimately made the disclosure required by the statute, it was very slow in doing so. Mr. Adam's reason for seeking the addresses of the board members--to write them a letter--was reasonable. The statute does not, however, require a person to disclose his reasons for requesting the information as a condition of obtaining it.

[11] I have no doubt that Mr. Adam was an annoyance, in particular to Mr. Moshenberg. I am not prepared to find, however, on the totality of the evidence that his conduct was oppressive or that it was unfairly prejudicial or unfairly disregarded the interests of the corporation. To a significant degree, this dispute arises out of Mr. Adam seeking to exercise his statutory rights as an owner of a unit in the condominium. The management, and in particular, Mr. Moshenberg, was not as conversant with the obligations of the corporation and the rights of owners as ought to have been the case. And therein lay the source of friction and the need on the part of the applicant for what appears to have been an extraordinary amount of legal advice. That Mr. Adam was perseverant and impatient only fueled the fire.

[12] Mr. Adam's counter-application rests largely on the alleged refusal to permit him to have meaningful or any access to condominium documents. This was the subject matter of his Small Claims Court proceedings but the applicant put the question of access to records in issue in the application in the hopes, it appears, of achieving an end run around the Small Claims Court process. The denial of access is an issue to be decided in Mr. Adam's Small Claims Court application. If he is correct, there is a statutory remedy in the $500 fine and the applicant cannot rely on the requests as evidence of oppression by Mr. Adam. If he is incorrect, he cannot rely on the alleged denial as a basis for arguing oppression.

[13] In any case, Mr. Adam launched a counter-application seeking an order the specifics of which is not supported by the legislation. The legislation is silent as to the manner in which disclosure is to be implemented. In the ordinary course, one would expect that good sense and courtesy would prevail, that unreasonable requests would not be made and reasonable requests would not be denied. Regrettably, good sense and courtesy were in short supply here and it is fortunate for the parties that their respective counsel at trial (who were not their solicitors when the dispute commenced) were able to fashion a protocol that is mutually acceptable, an exercise that ought to have been undertaken many months earlier.

[14] Mr. Adam also claims discrimination arising out of the amounts that he was charged for photocopying. In respect of the latter, the amounts are de minimus and the evidence of discrimination was not persuasive.

[15] The applicant does not seek costs and argues that the parties should bear their own costs or, alternatively, if Mr. Adam is to be awarded costs, it should be on a partial indemnity basis and that the costs attributable to the counter-application should be taken out of the costs claimed. Mr. Adam argues that he should be awarded substantial indemnity costs of the proceeding.

[16] On the basis that costs should ordinarily follow the event, both parties would be prima facie obligated to pay the costs of the application upon which they were unsuccessful. The result would prima facie be a set-off or near complete set-off with the practical result that each party would bear his and its own costs.

[17] The argument made on Mr. Adam's behalf is that his legal expenses were necessitated wholly by the issues raised on the application and that his counter-application added either nothing or only negligibly to his costs. It is argued as well that his very early offer to settle on the basis that he would refrain from doing those things complained of in the application together with his later formal offer were both reasonable and would suffice to attract substantial indemnity costs in his favour.

[18] I agree that although Mr. Adam asserted a counter-application, he did not greatly magnify the number or complexity of the issues to be litigated. Nevertheless I do not agree that the prosecution of the counter-application entailed no additional effort. It is suggested by counsel for the applicant that the proportion of time attributable to the counter-application is 35% to 40% of the whole. In my view, that estimate is overly high and I would estimate it at about 30%. Accordingly, if Mr. Adam is to be awarded costs of the application, it ought to be on the basis of 70% of his costs.

[19] I would agree with the submission on behalf of the applicant that the applicant has not conducted itself in a vexatious or reprehensible manner in the prosecution of the application. I do not view the offers made by Mr. Adam as warranting the imposition of substantial indemnity costs. I do, however, take into account and give significant weight to the offer made by Mr. Adam upon the launching of the application and before affidavits were filed with their attendant cross-examinations expanding legal costs. The offer is referred to in the November 3, 2005 letter from applicant's solicitor Mr. Natale to solicitor for Mr. Adam. Mr. Adam's offer was to resolve the matter by refraining from conducting himself in the manner objected to as set out in the application. It was a reasonable offer made promptly and ought reasonably to have been accepted. The applicant's counter-offer of resolution, particularly insofar as it demanded monetary compensation of $10,000, was without foundation.

[20] In my view, this litigation ought to have been resolved as early as November 3, 2005, along the lines of Mr. Adam's offer and the parties would have been spared many thousands of dollars in legal expenses.

[21] I am therefore of the view that while substantial indemnity costs are not warranted, Mr. Adam ought to have his partial indemnity costs of the application which I would fix at $32,000 all inclusive. In arriving at this amount, I have used the full substantial indemnity amount claimed, reduced it by the 30% reasonably attributable to the counter-application and used a ratio of 2/3 of the resulting substantial indemnity figure to arrive at the partial indemnity award of costs.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[1] The disputes in these two consolidated proceedings involve the rights and obligations of parties having an “interest” in the building located at 188 Eglinton Avenue East, in the City of Toronto, where the plaintiff Condominium Corporation, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1250 (“MTCC 1250”) resides. The issues involved are complex. Their resolution involves, among other things: (1) the interpretation of some sections of the Condominium

Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 (the “1990 Act”) and Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 (the “current Act”) [where it is unnecessary to specify the version of the Act, I will simply refer to “the Act”]; (2) the construction of certain provisions of the Declaration and the Disclosure Statement made pursuant to the Act, certain typical provisions in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale of units in the condominium, and the Lease of several items located in the condominium premises; and (3) other real property and corporate issues that arise only infrequently in dealing with condominiums. Fortunately, there are no significant factual disputes, except with respect to damages.

[2] For ease of reference, I shall set out the documentary material most frequently referred to in appendices:

- Appendix A – Sections of the Act;
- Appendix B – Excerpts from the Declaration and Description;
- Appendix C – Excerpts from the Disclosure Statement;
- Appendix D – Excerpts from a typical Agreement of Purchase and Sale of a unit in the condominium;
- Appendix E – Excerpts from the Lease.

BACKGROUND

[3] The subject building was constructed in the late 70’s, and was used as a commercial building until approximately 1998, with retail on the ground level, and two floors of underground parking for tenants and visitors.

[4] The defendant 188 Eglinton Inc. purchased the building in 1997. Following the purchase, the building was marketed to purchasers as a “substantially renovated building”. All of the building was renovated, except the retail level, which did not ultimately form part of the condominium corporation.

[5] Sales of residential units commenced in 1997 before the renovation work commenced. Prospective purchasers were able to view a model suite on the 4th floor of the building. They could not see the rest of the building, and in particular, they could not see the parking garage.

[6] When purchasers entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale, they were given a Disclosure Statement, including a budget, together with a draft Declaration, a draft Bylaw 1 (which is the general governance bylaw), and a draft Bylaw 4 (which is the Reciprocal Agreement, setting out the costs and facilities to be shared by the corporation with the first floor retail).

[7] The first unit owners took possession in November of 1998. At that point, work on the conversion was still ongoing. 188 Elginton Inc. registered the plaintiff MTCC 1250 on May 16, 1999. From that time until the turnover meeting in July 1999, the board of directors of MTCC 1250 consisted of the defendant Bruce C. Greenberg (the Developer principal), Bruce McMahon, a C.A. who works for both the defendant The Mastercraft Group Inc. (the “Mastercraft Group”) and the Starwood Group (two businesses apparently controlled by Mr. Greenberg), and Volker Kirstein, the principal of Highcourt Properties Inc. (a property management company).

[8] Before the turnover meeting, the day-to-day management was carried out under a contract between MTCC 1250 and an affiliate company of the developer, Mega Landmark Inc., which subcontracted the work to the above-noted Highcourt Properties Inc.

[9] At the turnover meeting, a Board composed of three unit owners was elected. One of those three original directors was John Pozios, who gave evidence at the trial, along with two other subsequent unit owners, Debra Beland and Richard Cherniuk.

[10] Within a few months of turnover, the new Board terminated the property management contract with Mega Landmark Inc. pursuant to the Act, and hired Simerra Property Management Inc. (“Simerra”). Simerra commenced its duties as property manager in January 2000, and was the property manager at the time of trial. Disputes between the parties commenced shortly after the hiring of Simerra.

DIVISION OF INTERESTS IN THE PREMISES

[11] The condominium building is made up of eight floors. The 9th floor rooftop is a recreational facility. A notable feature of the project is that the “ownership” is divided. Floors two through seven were owned at some point by 188 Eglinton Inc. in trust for the defendant 188 Lofts Inc. and finally transferred to approximately 77 residential owners. The 8th floor, parking garage, ground floor retail, the communications units and the storage units were transferred from 188 Eglinton Inc. to the defendant Lomico 188 Inc. for a consideration paid prior to the commencement of the disputes. Adding to the complexity was the involvement of 188 Lofts Inc. as the vendor in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale to the residential unit owners.

THE LEASE

[12] In respect of the application issued on December 22, 2000, the applicant S-99 Limited, a defendant in the action, seeks to have the lease of what it considers “personalty” situate in the subject premises, declared valid and its terms enforced. On the other hand, the respondent MTCC 1250, the plaintiff in the action, seeks to have the lease declared unenforceable, or at a minimum the liability under it drastically reduced.

RELIEF SOUGHT IN STATEMENT OF CLAIM

[13] The relief sought by the plaintiff MTCC 1250 in the statement of claim issued on August 14, 2001, is as follows:

- (a) Against the defendants, 188 Eglinton Inc., 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc., payment of the first year budget deficiency of the plaintiff in the amount of $88,255.00.

(b) Against 188 Elginton Inc. and 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc.:

- (i) An order requiring them to comply with Section 51(1)(b) of the Act and specifically requiring Lomico 188 Inc. to immediately make bona fide efforts to sell all residential units on level 8 of the plaintiff to arms length purchasers, without delay;
- (ii) an order requiring the defendants to lease to the owners of residential units in the plaintiff all of the parking units of the plaintiff, at market rates;
- (iii) an order requiring the defendants to provide to the plaintiff, its directors, officers, agents, assigns and employees, any necessary keys to permit free and unfettered access to the storage and utility units of the plaintiff, for purposes of carrying out the plaintiff's duties under the Act;
- (iv) an order pursuant to section 109 of the current Act amending the Description for the 8th floor of the plaintiff to correct an inconsistency between said Description and the Declaration, Schedule C, and the as built structure.

(c) Against Lomico 188 Inc.:

- (i) If required, a declaration that the plaintiff and its residents from time to time are entitled to, and have, an easement over a corridor on the 8th floor of the plaintiff leading from the elevator to the stairwell to the rooftop facilities of the plaintiff, such easement in the nature of a right-of-way, permitting pedestrian traffic to and from the said elevator and the said stairwell, for purposes of accessing the plaintiff's rooftop recreational facilities;
- (ii) if required, an interlocutory, interim and permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the said right-of-way;
- (iii) payment to the plaintiff of utilities charges in respect of retail units registered in the name of Lomico 188 Inc., together with interest on all arrears from time to time at the rate of 15% per annum compounded monthly;
- (iv) payment to the plaintiff of cleaning, janitorial service and supply charges in respect of the residential units on the 8th floor registered in the name of Lomico 188 Inc. amounting to $17,050.62 to June 30, 2001.

- (d) Against 188 Eglinton Inc., 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc.;
- (i) damages for breach of implied or in the alternative express warranties in the amount of $750,000.00;
- (ii) damages of $400,000.00 pursuant to section 52(5) of the Act.
- (e) Against the defendant, The Mastercraft Group, damages for breach of collateral contract, or in the alternative, damages for negligent misrepresentation in the amount of $750,000.00.
- (f) Against the defendants, Bruce C. Greenberg and Lomico 188 Inc., punitive damages in the amount of $50,000.00.
- (g) Against all of the defendants:
- (i) interest on all amounts found owing by the in accordance with the by-laws of the plaintiff or the Courts of Justice Act;
- ...
- (h) In the alternative to paragraph 1(c)(i) and (ii), an order amending the Declaration and Description of the plaintiff, to create a common elements corridor on the 8th floor, leading from the elevator to the stairwell.

[14] For the reasons that follow, I find the following:

First Year Budget Deficiency

- (1) That 188 Eglinton Inc. is the Declarant and is obliged to repay the plaintiff MTCC 1250 the amount found owing by the Declarant for the first year deficit.

Interest Rate on Common Expenses

- (2) That the interest rate payable is the rate specified in Bylaw No. 1, which is prime plus four percent, or 10 percent.

Compliance with Section 51 of the 1990 Act – Proposed Declarant

- (3) That 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc. were bona fide purchasers for value of the assets involved at fair market prices.

Parking Units

- (4) That a unit owner who is prepared to pay the market rate is entitled to a parking space at a rate to be either negotiated periodically between the owner of the garage and MTCC 1250, or to be settled by arbitration. The first step in the process must be a bona fide attempt by the owner of the parking garage to provide evidence of the market rate.

That the Declarant breached the parking agreement. Lomico 188 Inc. purchased the parking spaces with notice of the agreement and shall be bound by this finding.

Access by the Plaintiff to Storage, Utility Units, and Communication Units

- (5) That keys must be made available to the property manager, as agent for MTCC 1250, at all times, for the storage and utility units, and to the communication unit where the card access system is located solely for the purposes set out in the Declaration and ss. 12, 17 and 19 of the current Act.

Amending the Description for the 8th Floor

- (6) That there is no need to amend the Declaration. However, this finding in no way derogates from the right of entry to the 8th floor provided by the Declaration and the statutory rights provided for in ss. 12, 17 and 19 of the current Act, and particularly in emergency situations.

Easement

- (7) That the plaintiff is not entitled to an easement other than that provided for in the Declaration and ss. 12, 17 and 19 of the current Act.

Right-of-Way

- (8) That declaratory injunctive relief is hereby granted for the limited purposes set out in the Declaration and ss. 12, 17 and 19 the current Act.

Payment of Utility Charges together with Interest on Arrears

- (9) That the rate of 15 percent compounded monthly for the common expenses to be the most appropriate rate and, therefore, the proper rate in the circumstances.

Cleaning, Janitorial and Support Charges for 8th Floor

- (10) That MTCC 1250 and Lomico 188 Inc. shall each be responsible for 50 percent of the costs and Lomico 188 Inc. shall pay prejudgment interest on its share at the rate provided for in the Courts of Justice Act.

Damages for Breach of Implied or Express Warranties – Fire-Stopping Issue

- (11) That there shall be judgment for $15,000.00 to the plaintiff for its installation of Horizontal Fire-Stopping.

Parking Garage Deficiencies – Breach of Contract

(12) That this portion of the claim is dismissed.

Damages against The Mastercraft Group

(13) That this portion of the claim is dismissed.

Punitive Damages aga inst Bruce C. Greenberg and Lomico 188 Inc.

(14) That this part of the claim is dismissed.

The HVAC Lease

(15) That the lease is valid. The plaintiff owes S-99 Limited the present value of the leasehold interest of $413,545.53 plus interest from the date of default at 24 percent per annum.

THE REASONS

[15] I shall deal first with the action and outline the issues raised as I deal with each head of relief.

FIRST YEAR BUDGET DEFICIENCY

[16] Apart from which defendant (or defendants) is responsible to satisfy this claim, this issue is the least contentious of the issues raised in the proceeding. Subsections 52(8) and (9) of the 1990 Act imposes liability on the Declarant (see also concordant s. 75 of the current Act). The company that registered the Declaration, 188 Eglinton Inc., has admitted liability for the deficit, subject to the resolution of the lease dispute referred to in paragraph 12 of these reasons. Subject to what I say at the end of these reasons, I see no connection between the two disputes.

[17] The plaintiff takes the position that 188 Eglinton Inc., 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc. ought to be treated collectively as the Declarant. It takes that position on the basis that the principal of Mastercraft Group (being Mr. Greenberg, Sr.), which entered into the agreement in 1997 to purchase 188 Eglinton Avenue East (subsequently assigned to 188 Eglinton Inc.) and the principal of the defendant companies (the defendant, Mr. Greenberg), created these 3 companies and financed them, to the extent that they were financed, from a pool or pool of monies controlled by that principal, and that the financial transactions between those companies were, to put it plainly, mere paper shuffling, and should not be considered bona fides for the purposes of the determination of the identity of the Declarant.

[18] The current Act defines a Declarant as:

“declarant” means a person who owns the freehold or leasehold estate in the land described in the description and who registers a declaration and description under this Act, and includes a successor or assignee of that person but does not include a purchaser in good faith of a unit who pays fair market value or a successor or assignee of the purchaser.

The definition in the 1990 Act is:

“declarant” means the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in the description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land, and includes any successor or assignee of such owner or owners but not does not include a purchaser in good faith of a unit who actually pays fair market value or any success or assignee of such purchaser.
(emphasis added)

[19] For the purposes of this issue, the differences in the two Acts are of no significance.

[20] The evidence on fair market value was sketchy, perhaps because it was not a main focus of the trial. The plaintiff submits that 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc. did not purchase for fair market value and were not bona fide purchasers.

[21] Counsel did not expressly address the issue of the burden of proof on these difficult two questions.

[22] The accountant, who structured the financial aspects of the transactions, testified that at the time of the registration of its purchase, Lomico 188 Inc. held an undivided interest in the subject property, which it exchanged for its interest in the condominium. The accountant considered that transaction to be at fair market value.

[23] The parties seem to agree that Lomico 188 Inc. paid approximately $1,266,000.00 for the 8th floor and parking units. The 8th floor contained eight “units”. Counsel for the plaintiff submits, perhaps not unreasonably, that based on the prices that units on other floors were sold, the 8th floor had a market value of approximately $1,696,000.00. That estimate excludes fair market value of the parking garage for which there was no evidence.

[24] With its far-reaching implications and, given the usual evidentiary burden on plaintiffs, it will be unnecessarily risky to consider the above as evidence that the transactions were not at fair market value. Quite apart from anything else, there was no evidence from which a determination could be made that a single purchase of an entire floor by one purchaser would be fairly compared with eight purchases on different floors by eight different purchasers at different times. Many other factors would come into play.

[25] The defendant Mr. Greenberg controlled, at the relevant period, 188 Eglinton Inc., 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc. There was no authority offered for the proposition that such control necessarily renders a transaction between any of the three companies not bona fide. In fact, the professional advisors to the companies did not attempt to conceal such control. In my view, the accountant’s evidence was clear that while the parties may not have been at arm’s length, the transactions were conducted for valid legal, commercial and tax purposes. There was no contrary evidence.

Developments Ltd. (1992), 9. O.R. (3d) 481 at 488 (Ont. C.A.) [Carleton Condominium], quoted by Greer J. in National Trust Co. v. Grey Condominium Corp. No. 26 (1995), 47 R.P.R. (2d) 60 at para. 15 (Ont. Ct. Gen. Div.), is the only judicial pronouncement brought to my attention that touches on the issue of bona fides. It is as follows, per McKinlay J.A.:

In my view, once the payment of fair market value is determined, s. 1(1)(l) of the Act requires a further determination of whether the transaction was a true sale rather than merely a transfer to a nominee, and whether there was any underlying intent which would be inimical to the purposes of the Act.

[27] In Carleton Condominium, supra, the Court of Appeal did not agree that Mr. Assaly, who was the president and controlling shareholder of the Developer Declarant Assaly Corp., and had personally owned 53 residential units, was not a bona fide purchaser from the corporation.

[28] Later in its reasons, the Court of Appeal per McKinlay J.A. at p. 488 said:

Thomas C. Assaly purchased his units for investment purposes, and for the tax advantage which he could derive personally from their purchase – the same reasons why most other owners purchased their units. The evidence indicates additional reasons for Mr. Assaly’s purchases, not necessarily shared by other unit owners. They were the stabilization of prices of the units in the project, and the furthering of the interests of Asgo in maintaining its management contracts. There is no evidence that he acted as a mere nominee of Assaly Corp. in purchasing his units.

[29] It will be a great stretch to find that Lomico 188 Inc. and 188 Lofts Inc. were merely nominees of 188 Eglinton Inc. That they were controlled by the same person does not make them nominees of each other.

[30] The plaintiff has also argued that the impugned transactions render 188 Eglinton Inc. less capable of meeting its statutory financial obligations – for example, for payment of the first year’s deficit, and damages for nondisclosure – from which one may find an underlying intent that would be inimical to the purposes of the Act. No evidence to support this argument was offered. More importantly, there does not seem to be, or perhaps I should say there was not drawn to my attention, any provision in the Act that would lead to the inference that the legislature turned its mind to requiring a Declarant to take certain steps or refrain from taking certain steps that would secure the performance of those statutory financial obligations.

[31] On the evidence before me, and from the views expressed by the Court of Appeal in Carleton Condominium, supra, I would not be prepared to take the drastic step of finding that the transactions between 188 Lofts Inc. and 188 Eglinton Inc. and between Lomico 188 Inc. and 188 Eglinton Inc. were not bona fides or not at fair market value.

[32] In any event, 188 Eglinton Inc. is identified as the proposed Declarant in the Disclosure Statement and in the Declaration, both being documents upon which unit owners rely.

INTEREST

[33] In consequence of the Declarant's failure to forthwith pay to the plaintiff MTCC 1250 the first year's substantial deficit, an interest obligation has arisen.

[34] I can find no reasonable objection to the plaintiff's position that since the debt arises from the Declarant's failure to pay common expenses, the interest rate payable ought to be the rate specified in Bylaw No. 1, which is prime plus four percent, or 10 percent.

[35] What is more, I find the Declarant had no proper basis for its delay in making the required payment and thereby knowingly placed an unfair burden on MTCC 1250 and the unit owners.

REQUIRING 188 EGLINTON INC., LOFTS 188 INC. AND LOMICO 188 INC. TO COMPLY WITH S. 51 (1) (b) OF THE 1990 ACT BY SELLING ALL RESIDENTIAL UNITS OF LEVEL 8 TO ARM'S-LENGTH PURCHASERS, WITHOUT DELAY

[36] Clause 51 (1) (b) of the 1990 Act provides:

Every agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain,

...

(b) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included in the property without delay other than any units mentioned in a statement under clause 54(1)(c).

[37] Clause 54 (1) (c) is not relevant.

[38] Clause 54 (1) (d) provides:

(1) A declarant or proposed declarant shall not grant a lease of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes unless,

(d) written notice of the lessor's intention to lease the unit has been given to every purchaser under an agreement of purchase and sale, registered owner and mortgagee entitled to vote, and the period referred to in subsection (2) has expired or, where an application is made under subsection (2), it is finally disposed of.

[39] Paragraph 38 of each Agreement of Purchase and Sale provides that:

The Purchaser acknowledges that the Vendor, as proposed declarant, may from time to time lease any and all unsold Units in the Condominium for residential purposes for a period not to exceed two (2) years and this paragraph shall also constitute notice to the Purchaser as registered owner of the Unit after Closing, pursuant to section 54(1)(d) of the Act.

[40] The plaintiff has argued that the retention of the residential portion of the 8th floor is inimical to the purposes of the Act and s. 51 was enacted specifically to prohibit such a practice. The 8th floor owned by Lomico 188 Inc. in the circumstances already discussed contains, in addition to office space (which I believe is used by the defendant Mr. Greenberg), some residential units. The 8th floor was never offered by the Declarant for sale, although the Disclosure documents did not specifically refer to the retention of units by the Declarant.

[41] The Declarant 188 Eglinton Inc. has already disposed of the units on the 8th floor to Lomico 188 Inc. The Declarant owns no “other residential units”. The section of the Act is designed to deal with developers who retain residential units, and do not attempt to promptly dispose of those units. Lomico 188 Inc. is not the proposed Declarant.

[42] 188 Lofts Inc. was described as the vendor in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale of units. 188 Elginton Inc. was in fact the registered owner. Paragraph 46 of every Agreement of Purchase and Sale provided as follows:

The Purchaser acknowledges that title to the Unit is registered in the name of 188 Elginton Inc., which is a bare trustee for the Vendor. The Purchaser hereby agrees to accept a Transfer/Deed of Land on Closing from 188 Eglinton Inc. and acknowledges that all other related documentation will be given to the Vendor.

[43] The question is whether either of 188 Lofts Inc. or Lomico 188 Inc. was a “proposed declarant”? The answer to that question has to be in the negative, as I have already found that 188 Lofts Inc. and Lomico 188 Inc. were bona fide purchasers for value of the assets involved at fair market prices. Finally, as noted earlier, 188 Eglinton Inc. is identified as the proposed Declarant in the Disclosure Statement on which the unit owners rely.

AGAINST 188 EGLINTON INC., 188 LOFTS INC.
AND LOMICO 188 INC., AN ORDER REQUIRING THEM TO LEASE TO THE OWNERS OF RESIDENTIAL UNITS ALL PARKING UNITS, AT MARKET RATES

[44] As noted earlier, the parking facilities are owned by Lomico 188 Inc. However, they are maintained by MTCC 1250.

[45] The Disclosure Statement of the Declarant contain the following:

There is no restriction on the sale or lease of units. In particular, parking units, storage units or pylon sign units may be sold or leased to any person or corporation and not limited to commercial/residential unit owners in the retail condominiums or the commercial condominiums and may be retained by the declarant. Ownership of a commercial/residential unit does not include a parking unit. Each owner of a commercial/residential unit shall be entitled to lease a parking unit from the declarant at market rates currently $85.00 per month. (emphasis added)

Each parking unit shall be used only for the parking of motor vehicles and for no other purpose.... owners or lessees of parking units need not be owners of a commercial/residential unit, and there are no restrictions against leasing or selling a parking unit to any person or corporation.

[46] When the members of the Board of Directors of MTCC 1250 and Mr. Greenberg or his representatives got into disputes about rights and responsibilities within months of the turn-over meeting, Lomico 188 Inc. cancelled parking privileges of the Directors who were most involved in the disputes. Parking became and remained an issue for those few (at most four) Directors throughout. There is no evidence of a parking problem for other unit owners. The parking issue in this lawsuit is: What are the parking rights, if any, that inhere in ownership of a unit in the subject condominium?

[47] The original form of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale used for the transfer of units contained the following provision:

The Purchasers acknowledge that parking is not included in the purchase price. Parking is available at market rates, currently at $85.00 per month, and may be leased from an affiliate of the vendor. (emphasis added.)

[48] The provision in the Disclosure Statement that causes difficulty in interpretation is:

Each owner of the commercial/residential unit shall be entitled to lease a parking unit from the Declarant at market rates, currently $85.00 per month. (emphasis added.)

[49] There were three or four fewer parking spaces than there were residential units. Admittedly, there is no evidence that purchasers, other than the original purchasers, had any expectation of an entitlement to parking. In fact, the minimal available evidence was to the contrary.

[50] Clearly, however, the original purchasers were led by the Declarant to believe that they had an entitlement to lease a parking unit at market rates and that parking was available at market rates.

[51] This representation was made to them at the same time that they were told that the Declarant did not own the parking units or, at any rate, could sell or lease those units to whomsoever the Declarant chose.

[52] Lomico 188 Inc. owns the parking spaces. Lomico 188 Inc. was a purchaser for value as I have found, but it was also a purchaser with notice of the representation and obligations of the Declarant with regard to those parking spaces. The Declarant represented to the purchasers of units that on purchasing a unit a purchaser would have an “entitlement” to lease a parking space at market prices. That representation meant something. In view of the other modifying representations, for example that the parking units could be sold or leased to any person, and may be retained by the Declarant, it might seem that the entitlement was effectively limited to the rate at which the parking spaces would be leased. It may fairly be said that an entitlement to purchase a service at market rates is of little, if any, value, except where the supply of the service is severely limited.

[53] In the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to unit owners, the representation was that parking was “available at market rates”. In attempting to make sense of these provisions, the court is entitled to consider all the relevant circumstances.

[54] In order to obtain a building permit, the Developer (Declarant) was required to undertake to the City that a minimum of 82 parking spaces would be provided, 71 for residents and 11 for visitors of residents.

[55] The promotional “features sheet” given to prospective purchasers represented, under PARKING, “2 levels of secure 24 hours monitored underground parking are available at a monthly market rate (currently $85.00 per month per space). Owners will be given priority for reserved monthly parking in the underground garage.” (emphasis added)

[56] Lomico 188 Inc. improperly rented visitor parking spaces to purchasers. When this was brought to its attention, it terminated the leases and refunded the monies paid. The residents who lost their parking spaces were put on a waiting list. Lomico 188 Inc. had assigned parking spaces to the retail tenants, had allocated a parking spot to the superintendent of the next door unit and had retained parking units for the superintendent’s office employees. Those parking spaces were not made available for lease to the residents.

[57] The documentary material was sufficiently unclear to induce careful purchasers (lawyers by training if not by occupation, the Pozios) to include the following provision in their offer to purchase:

The Vendor guarantees the Purchaser shall have the right to rent a parking spot for $85.00 per month for two years from the date of occupancy. The Purchaser shall furthermore have the option to purchase a parking spot if offered for sale by the Vendor.

[58] I interpret this last provision as primarily directed to guaranteeing the price of parking for at least two years.

[59] The plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the contra proferentum rule. When all of the evidence is considered, the irresistible inference to be drawn is that as long as they were prepared to pay market rates, a parking space would be available to unit owners.

Market Rate

[60] The evidence on “the market rate” was, in my view, unhelpful, in that it was all about parking generally in the area. There was no evidence of what condominium owners having parking rights, or privileges, in a parking garage maintained (but not owned) by their condominium, were paying. Mr. Pozios, from his personal research, thought $65.00 to $95.00 was the market rate, while the defendant expert testified that $150.00 was the market rate and is the rate currently being charged.

[61] If the parking arrangements in these circumstances (i.e. parking space maintained but not owned by the condominium) were not unusual, proper evidence of market rates ought to have been available. And if the circumstances were unusual, that is to say, if the market were unique, then establishing the market rate would present some real difficulty calling for special treatment, negotiations, arbitration or other such mechanism – not unilateral decision making by the owner. For example, with commercial leases of real property, payments that are subject to change over time due to exogenous factors are rarely left solely to the landlord’s determination. At a minimum, in the circumstances of this case, there has to be put in place some appropriate and fair manner for determining the “market rate”. There is no evidence of anything of the sort.

[62] I conclude that the Declarant breached the parking agreement. Lomico 188 Inc. purchased the parking spaces with notice of the parking agreement and shall be bound by the order flowing from this finding.

ORDER REQUIRING THE DEFENDANTS TO PROVIDE TO THE PLAINTIFF, ITS DIRECTORS, OFFICERS, AGENTS, ASSIGNS AND EMPLOYEES, ANY NECESSARY KEYS TO PERMIT FREE AND UNFETTERED ACCESS TO THE STORAGE AND UTILITY UNITS OF THE PLAINTIFF, FOR PURPOSES OF CARRYING OUT THE PLAINTIFF’S DUTIES UNDER THE ACT.

[63] From a reading of the entire statement of claim, I believe the communications unit was intended to be included under this heading.

[64] The issue here is access by MTCC 1250 to property owned by Lomico 188 Inc.

[65] Like the parking issue, and passage through the 8th floor that I will deal with later, this is another of those problems that undermine the whole concept of shared accommodation, a concept based on the assumption of adult behaviour on the part of all parties.

[66] As the plaintiff submitted in closing argument:

The communication units contain the security system of the condominium corporation. They also contain the wiring for telephone and cable television for the units.

The Board and property management were able to access the communication units and storage units without charge until the Condominium Corporation terminated the property contract with Mega Landmark Inc. in late 2000. The developer progressed thereafter from demanding payment for access to locking and alarming the doors (which are common elements).

[67] The Declaration provides that MTCC 1250 has a right of entry into all units to carry out its duties. MTCC 1250 has a statutory easement over all units to carry out those duties (see ss. 12, 17 and 19 of the current Act set out in Appendix A). In York Condominium Corporation No. 336 v. Cheuk W. Kan and Betty Wai-Yin Kan, Rita Adams, Carla Vivian Hart, and Lorraine Ortofsky (10 March 1986), Court File No. M125757/86, Lissaman J. ordered the respondent to supply the property manager with a key to her unit to carry out its management duties.

[68] To the extent that access to the storage, communication and utility rooms are necessary for the proper operation of the condominium and the safety of the unit owners, Lomico 188 Inc. is required to grant access to the condominium management for the purpose of performing those duties at all times.

AN ORDER PURSUANT TO S. 109 OF THE CURRENT ACT AMENDING THE DESCRIPTION FOR THE 8TH FLOOR TO

CORRECT AN INCONSISTENCY BETWEEN SAID DESCRIPTION AND THE DECLARATION, SCHEDULE C, AND THE EASEMENTS AS BUILT STRUCTURE

[69] Section 109 of the current Act confers on the court the jurisdiction to amend the Declaration and Description.

[70] This is one of the more unique aspects of the litigation and its resolution has far-reaching implications.

[71] The genesis of the dispute is again trivial, arising from personality clashes between the “principals”.

[72] As I indicated earlier, the Declarant did not offer the 8th floor for sale. The evidence of John Pozios is that purchasers were told that the units on the 8th floor were being retained by the Developer.

[73] In the Description attached as Schedule C to the Declaration, the boundaries of the units on the 8th floor were shown as identical to the boundaries of the units on floors two to seven. The description, however, shows the whole of the 8th floor as one unit, without any common areas.

[74] Schedule D to the Declaration ascribed percentage contributions to common expenses of the 8th floor units, on the same basis as the units on the other floors. Levels four through eight are all shown on that schedule as containing 13 units. The “description sheet” for the 8th floor was not provided to purchasers as part of the package of documents at the time they entered into their Agreements of Purchase and Sale.

[75] The 8th floor units are, like others, reached from the corridor on the 8th floor that is served by the same elevator or elevators as the units on the other floors. There is no regular elevator access to the 9th floor (the roof top) where common area amenities are located, as that elevator service ends on the 8th floor. There is also a handicapped lift that goes from the 7th floor to the 9th floor.

[76] While the original property manager Mega Landmark Inc. managed the corporation's business and assets, the 8th floor corridors were treated as common elements, and were maintained at the expense of MTCC 1250.

[77] Until this action was commenced, unit owners used the 8th floor corridor to access the recreational amenities on the 9th floor rooftop. The developer posted signs on the walls of the 8th floor corridor directing owners to the stairwell to access the 9th floor.

[78] There was testimony that during that period, the plaintiff unfortunately gave an undetermined number of security cards to the recreational facilities to friends of a personal trainer who did not reside in the building.

[79] Lomico 188 Inc. has denied access to the 9th floor by unit owners alighting from the elevator on the 8th floor and walking up one flight of stairs. Unit owners are now required to access the 9th floor by walking up two flights of stairs from the 7th floor on the basis that the entire 8th floor, including the corridor, is the private property of Lomico 188 Inc.

[80] The plaintiff takes the position that the corridor on the 8th floor is part of the common elements. If it is, then the expenditures made by the plaintiff for cleaning the 8th floor corridor was the plaintiff's obligation and need not be refunded. If the corridor is a common area, the unit owners also have a right under the Act to use it.

[81] Immediately prior to the institution of this lawsuit, the plaintiff knew or had reason to believe that:

- (1) Units on the 8th floor were not being sold to individual purchasers.
- (2) While unit owners had a "right" to use the 9th floor (roof top), the elevator service in the building ended on the 8th floor.
- (3) Unit owners had de facto access to the 9th floor by alighting from the elevator on the 8th floor and walking through the corridor to a staircase leading to the 9th floor. Signs showing the way to the staircase leading from the 8th floor to the 9th floor were placed by those in control of the 8th floor.
- (4) The units, including those on the 8th floor, were governed by the Act. The unit boundaries are set out in Schedule C of the Declaration shown in Schedule B to these reasons.

- (5) Each unit on all floors, including the 8th floor, was attributed a certain percentage of the common expenses. Common elements excluded only the units which were described as “A part or part of the land included in the description and designated as a unit by the description and comprises the space enclosed by its boundaries and all material parts of the land within this space in accordance with the Declaration and description” and that “The monuments controlling the extent of the units are the physical surfaces mentioned in the boundaries of units.”
- (6) The 8th floor corridors were treated as common areas and maintained by and at the expense of MTCC 1250 during the period prior to the change in property managers, noted earlier.
- (7) The plaintiff paid for the maintenance of the 8th floor corridor until June 20, 2001.

[82] On the basis of the above, I conclude that until the unit owners were denied the use of the 8th floor corridor, they reasonably believed that it was a part of the common elements accessible to all unit owners for the purpose of accessing the 9th floor rooftop.

[83] Whether the 8th floor corridor is part of the common elements is not a question of the intention of the parties. It is to be determined by the language of the Declaration and the Description annexed thereto. It would have been helpful to have the evidence of a surveyor, but such evidence was not offered.

[84] Lomico 188 Inc. has been singularly unhelpful in making specific submissions on this issue. The plaintiff in its statement of claim admitted that in the Declaration the whole of the 8th floor is composed of units, with no common elements.

[85] Given the availability of access to the 9th floor by climbing two rather than one flight of stairs, the element of necessity required in a claim for an easement has not been met.

[86] There is no need to amend the Declaration.

AS AGAINST LOMICO 188 INC., RE: EASEMENT OVER CONDO MINIU ON 8TH FLOOR

[87] For the reasons outlined in the above paragraphs 69 to 86, this head of relief is denied.

AS AGAINST LOMICO 188 INC., AN INTERLOCUTORY, INTERIM AND PERMANENT INJUNCTION RES TRAINING
THE DEFENDANT FROM INTERFERING WITH THE SAID RIGHT-OF-WAY

[88] For the reasons outlined in the above paragraphs 63 to 68, only declaratory relief is required under this head to the limited extent necessary for the plaintiff MTCC 1250's compliance with the Declaration and with ss. 12, 17 and 19 of the current Act.

PAYMENT TO THE PLAINTIFF BY LOMICO 188 INC. OF UTILITIES CHARGES IN RESPECT OF RETAIL UNITS REGISTERED IN THE NAME OF LOMICO 188 INC., TOGETHER WITH INTEREST ON ALL ARREARS

[89] Lomico 188 Inc. acknowledges liability for utilities paid by the plaintiff in respect of the retail units. The dispute is about the rate of interest chargeable thereon. The acknowledged alternatives are:

- (1) Rates for chargebacks under the reciprocal agreement between the plaintiff MTCC 1250 and the Declarant, 188 Eglinton Inc.

Lomico 188 Inc. takes the position that since the payment of utilities is not a shared cost under the reciprocal agreement, the rate of 15 percent compounded monthly specified in that agreement, should not be applied. The plaintiff submits that such a rate would be eminently suitable given the similarities in the subject matter.

- (2) Interest rate for late payment of common elements fees set at four percent above the minimum lending rate compounded monthly.

- (3) Simple prejudgment interest.

[90] The Reciprocal Agreement was prepared and executed by Mr. Greenberg, on behalf of both parties, in May 1999. The agreement was made for the purposes of "providing for the material use, maintenance and cost-sharing of the shared utility and service easements being those utilities and services which will serve and benefit the corporation and retail portion." The costs of operation were to be borne by both parties. The party defaulting in payment of its contribution was required to pay to the other party the aforesaid rate of 15 percent calculated and compounded monthly.

[91] It is appropriate to assume that Mr. Greenberg had considered carefully the cost of money in the context of the time and the existing relationship.

[92] No proper reason was given for failing to pay promptly, especially with the knowledge that such failure would impose a burden on a party most likely to be less equipped financially than the companies Mr. Greenberg controlled to pay such sums.

[93] It would also be fair to note the rate (24 percent) Mr. Greenberg used for default under the lease of chattels that will be dealt with later in these reasons in circumstances similar to those prevailing under the reciprocal agreement.

[94] Finally, I can see no reason for the court to be solicitous for Lomico 188 Inc.'s interest in these circumstances.

[95] Therefore, I conclude that the rate of 15 percent compounded monthly for the common expenses is the most appropriate rate in the circumstances.

PAYMENT TO THE PLAINTIFF BY LOMICO 188 INC. FOR CLEANING, JANITORIAL SERVICE AND SUPPORT CHARGES IN RESPECT OF RESIDENTIAL UNITS ON THE 8TH FLOOR

[96] As indicated earlier, the plaintiff had reasonable grounds to believe that the corridor on the 8th floor was a part of the common areas. For over two years, not only did Lomico 188 Inc. not alert the plaintiff to its misconception, but assisted the plaintiff in the use of the corridors by posting signs on the walls of the corridor directing owners to the stairwell access to the 9th floor.

[97] Lomico 188 Inc. submits that it did not ask for the cleaning services and that they were for the benefit of all the unit owners as the services were provided at a time when owners were given access to the 9th floor corridor.

[98] Pragmatically, there were no circumstances existing during the relevant period that would have led the plaintiff to doubt its obligation to clean. Lomico 188 Inc. never warned the plaintiff. But it is also true that the cleaning would have benefited both parties. There was no evidence of the amount of usage by either party to assist the court in determining who benefited more. The fairest resolution is, therefore, to split the costs evenly and charge Lomico 188 Inc. prejudgment interest under the Courts of Justice Act on its 50 percent.

AGAINST 188 EGLINTON INC., 188 LOFTS INC. AND LOMICO 188 INC. DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF IMPLIED OR IN THE ALTERNATIVE EXPRESS WARRANTIES IN THE AMOUNT OF $750,000.00; DAMAGES OF $400,000.00 PURSUANT TO S. 52 (5) OF THE 1990 ACT REGARDING FAILURE TO DISCLOSE

[99] Subsection 52 (5) of the 1990 Act provides as follows:

Where any statement or material required under this Act to be provided by a declarant or proposed declarant to a purchaser of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes contains any material statement or information that is false, deceptive or misleading or fails to contain any material statement or information, the corporation or any unit owner who relied on such statement or material is entitled, as against the declarant or the proposed declarant to damages for any loss sustained as a result of such a reliance.

[100] It is the position of the plaintiff that the vendor is in breach of its agreement with the unit owners to complete the common elements in a good and workable manner, free from material omissions or defects, in accordance with the applicable codes and requirements, and in substantial compliance with the drawings and specifications.

[101] Specifically the plaintiff claims that:

- (1) Fire-Stopping has not been installed around the plumbing throughout the building.
- (2) The parking garage requires extensive repairs.

[102] Further, and in the alternative, the plaintiff alleges that the Declarant (all the defendants) had a statutory obligation to disclose to the plaintiff and all prospective purchasers of the units the absence of the Fire-Stopping and the need for garage repairs, which it failed to meet.

[103] The defendant Declarant's position, in summary is that:

- (1) Since the project was a "conversion" rather than a new building, the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act provided no coverage, and the purchasers accepted the developer warranty for workmanship and materials for a one-year period following the date of occupancy.

(The relevant provisions of the Developer's Warranty are set out in Appendix D of these reasons.)

- (2) The issuance of occupancy certificates by the municipality constituted complete and absolute acceptance by the purchasers of all construction matters, and qualify the sufficiency thereof including, without limitation, all mechanical, structural and architectural matters. (See also Appendix D.)

- (3) Nondisclosure is denied. However, the remedy for nondisclosure is either rescission, which has not been pleaded, or damages, which has neither been suffered nor proved.

Analysis of Fire-Stopping Issue

[104] It is the position of the plaintiff, and not seriously contested by the defendants, that the absence of Fire-Stopping was alleged within the first year. The developer refused to remedy the alleged defects that were identified in a technical audit by Enerplan Building Consultants ("Enerplan") in May 2000.

[105] While the absence of Fire-Stopping is a Building Code violation, and it may be argued that Occupancy Certificates are deemed to be evidence of compliance, in my view, such evidence may be rebutted, or else the warranty would be meaningless; the municipality is not infallible, and its fallibility would have been in the contemplation of the parties.

[106] Although entertaining some doubt, I am satisfied from the evidence that the expenditure of $15,000.00 made by the plaintiff in about 2001 to remedy the absence of Horizontal Fire-Stopping identified in the Enerplan Technical audit was an appropriate expenditure for which the plaintiff is entitled to be reimbursed. The lack of such Fire-Stopping was a serious safety issue, was promptly identified and promptly remedied at the plaintiff's expense.

[107] However, I am not satisfied that the additional claim for some $53,000.00 for Vertical Fire-Stopping arising from the evidence of John Roberts, a witness for the plaintiff, is contractually supportable for the following reasons.

- (1) The plaintiff rejected Enerplan's proposal of January 31, 2001 for post-technical audit services which, as the defendant argued, would have identified and immediately rectified any items having a direct bearing on health and safety.
- (2) In addition, neither reserve fund studies dated September 17, 2001 and April 29, 2005 anticipate any funds being expended in the next 30 or 40 years for the installation of Vertical Fire-Stopping.
- (3) John Roberts' only examination of the premises was done in 2006.
- (4) I was not convinced on a balance of probability from Mr. Robert's evidence that the Vertical Fire-Stopping was not in compliance with the Building Code. Among my reasons for this finding is Mr. Robert's failure to consider requesting the drawings from the building department.

Analysis of Parking Garage Deficiencies – Breach of Contract

[108] The plaintiff asks the court to find that the defendants were aware that P1 level of the garage and the entrance ramp required repairs. They argue that the defendants were obliged to either carry out the repairs, or to disclose to purchasers that these repairs were necessary and that the reserve fund turned over to the purchasers was inadequate to carry out those repairs. The plaintiff claims damages, being the cost of carrying out the repairs which the defendants knew had to be done to the P1 Slab and ramp: respectively, $260,000.00 to $320,000.00, plus $103,000.00. The plaintiff argued that on the evidence, the plaintiff's decision to put off repairing the garage has not led to any increased deterioration in the garage, or increased cost.

[109] The evidence supports the plaintiff's contention that alleged deficiencies in the garage were noted during the first year in the Enerplan Technical Audit and the developer was asked to fix them. The developer did not respond.

[110] Purchasers were not able to see the garage before they entered into their agreement to purchase.

[111] When purchasers entered into possession in February 1999, they saw a newly painted white garage. The Developer painted the whole garage white during the course of the renovation. By May 2000, when the Technical Audit was done by Enerplan, the newly applied paint was peeling as a result of moisture in the slab.

[112] The Estoppel Certificate provided to purchasers in June 1999 stated that the corporation was not aware of any circumstance that would lead to an increase in common expenses, and that the reserve fund was adequate for expected repairs during the year.

[113] Neither at the turnover meeting nor afterward did the defendants provide the corporation with the statutorily required “list detailing current replacement costs/life expectancy ... of all major capital items in the property”.

[114] Specifications for renovation called for the installation of a new traffic topping on the P1 Slab and the ramp. The traffic topping was to have a five year warranty.

[115] Specifications prepared by Kremisco Engineering for the garage ramp called for substantial work to be done, including removal of existing topping, removal of deteriorated concrete, installation of new heating cables, and installation of a new waterproofing system.

[116] Mr. Greenberg in his discovery stated first that the repairs were done and the membrane was replaced. In his answers to the undertakings, however, he stated that he did not carry out the replacement of the traffic topping because a report prepared by Construction Control Inc. stated that the membrane was in good condition and did not need replacement.

[117] However, the Construction Control report relied on does not deal with the traffic topping on the ramp and the P1 Slab; it deals only with the garage roof slab.

[118] Mr. Greenberg stated on discovery that he was aware that the garage was 20 years old, and had some salt damage and deterioration. He relied on his consultants to advise him what had to be done to repair the building, and he carried out what they advised him to do.

[119] Mr. Sarvinis of Reid Jones Christoffesen (“RJC”) was called as an expert by the defendants. He stated that he carried out a prepurchase inspection of the P1 Slab for the defendants in 1996.

[120] The first report of RJC identified leaking cracks in the suspended slab. Core samples were taken of the suspended slab and tested for chloride (salt) contamination. The results indicated that chloride content was 6.9 to 127 times the level required to initiate steel corrosion. RJC concluded that this might indicate that the membrane has failed.

[121] The second report submitted on the P1 Slab to Mr. Greenberg stated “additional testing (of the suspended parking slab) has revealed significant areas of top surface corrosion related deterioration”. RJC estimated that the extent of surface repair required appeared to be in the order of 15 percent.

[122] The second report estimated the costs or repair of the suspended slab at $130,000.00 to $166,000.00 exclusive of G.S.T., professional fees and material testing costs. The report did not offer “doing nothing” as an option.

- (a) The only person who could explain why the repairs were not carried out is Bruce Greenberg. He did not give evidence. The court should draw an adverse inference: Mr. Greenberg was aware of the need for repairs, he was advised to carry out repairs. He knew that if he did not do so, the corporation would be faced with the need to carry out expensive repairs and replacement of the membrane. He decided not to do the repairs, and not to tell the purchasers that the corporation would have to do so imminently. He decided to paint over the garage thereby disguising the problems until after purchasers closed.
- (b) In his evidence, Mr. Sarvinis stated that part of good routine maintenance practices to prolong the serviceability life of underground garages involves localized repairs of deteriorated concrete and replacing failed portions of the membrane.

- (c) John Kosednar of Halsall Associates testified for the plaintiff as an expert in corrosion and repair of reinforced concrete structures. Halsall was retained by MTCC 1250 first to comment on a 2000 Technical Audit carried out by Enerplan and then to prepare a reserve fund study. The reserve fund study recommended immediate repairs to the garage. The Board of Directors wished to defer the repairs, and therefore instructed Halsall to carry out a garage condition assessment, to determine if putting off the repairs would affect the structural integrity of the garage.
- (d) Halsall was then retained and asked to prepare a report, stating whether the specifications for the repair of the garage prepared for the defendants at the time of the conversion had been followed. If they were not followed, Halsall was asked to state what the consequences of that failure were.
- (e) Halsall concluded that the specifications had not been followed. The membrane on the ramp and the P1 Slab were the original membrane, installed one to several years after the building was constructed. Mr. Kosednar

- further testified that there was no evidence of any repairs having been done to the top of the ramp, nor the P1 Slab.
- (f) In preparing their report, Halsall did not have RJC's 1996 report. They referred to the 2000 Technical Audit prepared by Enerplan, and attempted to compare the extent of cracking and delamination reported at that time with their own findings. Mr. Kosednar stated that this was not exact, but that he concluded that approximately 60 percent of the deterioration visible in 2006, had already taken place in 2000. (emphasis added)
- (g) However, after preparing his expert report, Halsall received RJC's 1996 reports and saw that the delamination, noted on the P1 level by RJC in 1996 was 10 to 15 percent. Mr. Kosednar stated in his evidence that with this additional important information, he revised his assessment of the deterioration which occurred between 2000 and 2006. The extent of delamination noted by RJC in 1996 was the same as that noted in 2006.
- (h) Mr. Kosednar stated that he was sure that there had been some deterioration during that time, but that from the 2 reports, he could not say how much.

- (i) On the same issue, Mr. Sarvinis agreed that the percentage delamination of the P1 Slab was the same in his report as in the Halsall report. He also felt that some further deterioration had occurred between 2000 and 2006, as evidenced by some delamination of the soffit of the P1 Slab, and the increase in the number and length of cracks from those noted by Enerplan in 2000, to those measured by Halsall in 2005. Mr. Sarvinis agreed with Mr. Kosednar that the Enerplan Technical Audit represented the result of a fairly cursory visual inspection, so that its recording of numbers and lengths of cracks were not as reliable as reports prepared by RJC or Halsall.
- (j) Halsall estimated the cost of repairing the ramp at $103,000.00. The costs of repairing the P1 Slab and replacing the membrane was estimated at $320,000.00.
- (k) RJC felt that the estimates were high, and suggested a cost of $260,000.00 for the P1 Slab. Both experts agreed that theirs were estimates, that actual costs would not be known until the work was tendered.

- (l) Both experts agreed that the work must be done to maintain the garage. Mr. Sarvinis admits that his report in 1996 called for the work to be carried out on the P1 Slab.

[124] The defendants' position is as follows:

- (a) The Declarant delivered a structurally sound and functional garage which would have lasted approximately 20 years before the anticipated repairs were required.
- (b) In any event, both experts agree that the consequences of not undertaking substantial garage repairs in 1996 and 1997 was marginal given the current state of the garage. It remains structurally sound and functional today.
- (c) The plaintiff MTCC 1250 was aware of the garage condition in May, 2000 as a consequence of the Enerplan Technical Audit. The Reserve Fund Study conducted by Enerplan anticipated the garage being repaired in the fiscal year ending May 2009. This belies the plaintiff's evidence that the garage required substantial repairs at the time of conversion.
- (d) The plaintiff had ample funds in the Reserve Fund to effect garage repairs if they were really required. They did not effect the repairs because such repairs were not really required.

- (e) The Estoppel Certificates issued by the plaintiff consistently advised subsequent purchasers that the condominium corporation was "not presently considering any substantial addition, alterations or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or any substantial change in the assets of the corporation."
- (f) The plaintiff corporation did very little maintenance or repairs to the garage for the last 7 years.
- (g) The repairs to the P1 intermediate slab are anticipated to be effected in the fiscal year ending May 31, 2009. As such, the plaintiff would have had approximately 10 years use of the garage, that is, half of a membrane's expected life.
- (h) There is a dispute between the experts as to the anticipated cost of the repairs to the P1 intermediate slab – Halsall's total cost of $364,000.00 versus the defendants' expert, Reed Jones Christoffersen's total cost of $328,600.00.

While in May 2000, Enerplan anticipated that the cost of repairing all identified deficiencies would have been approximately $200,000.000.

- (i) Moreover, the plaintiff has had approximately 7 years usage of the garage to date and will have had another 3 years usage of the garage by May 30, 2009.

[125] In light of all of the evidence and especially the agreed currently structurally sound and functional nature of the garage, and Mr. Kosednar's evidence of the similarity of the delamination noted in 1996 to that in 2006, it would be difficult to justify a damage award against the defendants. When the nature of the representations made in the Estoppel Certificates to subsequent purchasers is added to the equation, the plaintiff's position becomes even less sustainable.

[126] In any event, the evidence does not demonstrate a breach of the construction warranty in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale when paragraph 26 of that document (see Appendix D of these reasons) is given its proper construction. There was nothing in the Agreements of Purchase and Sale requiring the defendant to complete renovations in accordance with any particular specifications.

[127] Finally the ownership of the garage by Lomico 188 Inc., with the plaintiff having the obligation to maintain and/or repair it, produces an anomaly that the parties have not focused upon. In this litigation, the owner, Lomico 188 Inc. denies that the property owned by it is in need of repairs. The corollary of the owner's position should be that MTCC 1250 has no duty or obligation to repair while the owner maintains that position.

AGAINST THE DEFENDANT, THE MASTERCRAFT GROUP, FOR DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF COLLATERAL CONTRACT, OR IN THE ALTERNATIVE, DAMAGES FOR NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION IN THE AMOUNT OF $750,000.00

[128] The evidence does not support a finding of liability against The Mastercraft Group, which was neither a Declarant nor a contracting party. Nor, as I have found, does the evidence support a finding of breach of collateral contract or negligent misrepresentation.

AGAINST THE DEFENDANTS, BRUCE C. GREENBERG AND LOMICO 188 INC., PUNITIVE DAMAGES IN THE AMOUNT OF $50,000.00

[129] In Said v. Butt, [1920] All E.R. 232 (Eng. C.A.), the English Court of Appeal held that a director or officer of a corporation acting within the scope of his authority cannot be personally liable for inducing the corporation to breach its contract. This case has been consistently followed in Canada.

[130] Lomico 188 Inc. was not the Declarant. However, as indicated earlier, it was a purchaser for value with notice of the parking lease agreement and is required to comply with the order in paragraph 14 (4) of these reasons. The defendant provided no proper explanation for the cancellation of parking privileges for three Directors. There was, however, no evidence of damages. At worst, the defendant was wrong in its interpretation of the rights created in its own documentation dealing with parking.

[131] While not relevant to my legal conclusions, I feel obliged to observe from all the evidence (some of which was offered only collaterally, especially in regard to the continued increases in the price of units over the years) that I did not find that the unit owners (only about 18 of whom are “originals” in a financial sense) have anything of substance about which to complain with regard to the condition of the premises.

THE HVAC LEASE ISSUE

[132] When the Declarant “turned over” the condominium to MTCC 1250, there was in existence a lease between S-99 Limited as lessor and the plaintiff, MTCC 1250 as lessee, dated May 18, 1999, of what is described in the litigation as heating, ventilating and air conditioning equipment (“HVAC”) equipment situated on the 9th floor (roof top) of the building. The lease was for a term of 180 months and called for monthly payments of $3,049.06 plus G.S.T. commencing June 1, 1999, and bore interest at the rate of 11 percent per annum.

[133] The plaintiff made the monthly payments from June 1, 1999 until March 1, 2000, when it ceased to make payment, purportedly on the misconceived basis that the Board of Directors had exercised its option to not ratify the lease agreement pursuant to s. 39 of the 1990 Act. The Directors had no such option.

[134] In this application, commenced before the main action, S-99 Limited seeks the following relief:

- (1) A declaration that S-99 Limited is entitled to immediate possession of certain heating, ventilating and air conditioning equipment (“HVAC”) on the premises of MTCC 1250.
- (2) A mandatory order requiring the respondent MTCC 1250 to deliver up the said HVAC equipment to the possession of S-99 Limited.
- (3) In the alternative, a declaration that the lease agreement (“the HVAC Agreement”) dated May 18, 1999 between S-99 Limited and MTCC 1250 is not subject to s. 39 of the 1990 Act, which provides as follows:

39. (1) The corporation may by by-law terminate, on giving sixty days notice in writing, any agreement between the corporation and any person for the management of the property entered into at the time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of a majority of the units.

(2) Every agreement for the provision of services on a continuing basis, every lease of the common elements or part thereof for business purposes and every agreement for the provision of recreational facilities to the corporation on other than a non-profit basis entered into by a corporation after the 1st day of June, 1979 and at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of the majority of the units that does not expire within twelve months after its effective date shall be deemed to expire twelve months after its effective date unless, within the twelve month period, the agreement is ratified by the board at a time when the majority of the board members were elected after the declarant ceased to be the registered owner of a majority of the units.

- (4) In the further alternative, a declaration that the acceleration clause of paragraph 13 of the HVAC Agreement is valid and enforceable and an order for a reference to determine the amount that is owing.
- (5) In the further alternative, a declaration that MTCC 1250 must compensate S-99 Limited for the use of the HVAC equipment on the basis of quantum meruit and an order for a reference to determine the amount that is owing.

[135] MTCC 1250 resists the claims on substantially the following grounds:

- (1) The HVAC equipment is the property of the respondent because the equipment, qualify as “fixtures” and, therefore, are part of the real estate owned by MTCC 1250. Less clear is the alternative that MTCC 1250 is entitled to the equipment through an award of damages for the developer group’s failure to make adequate Disclosure.
- (2) If it is found that the equipment does not qualify as “fixtures”, the court should find the lease unenforceable on the grounds of unconscionability. In particular, the acceleration clause under which the respondent would be liable for $1,714,000.00 is a penalty and therefore unenforceable.

[137] Paragraph 12 of the Lease provides as follows:

TITLE. Customer acknowledges that the Equipment remains the property of the Lessor, and Customer shall have no right, title or interest in the Equipment other than, conditional upon Customer's compliance with and fulfillment of the terms and conditions of this Agreement, the right to maintain possession and use of the Equipment for the full Term. Lessor may require plates or markings to be affixed to or placed on the Equipment indicating Lessor is the owner. Lessor and Customer hereby confirm their intent that the Equipment shall always remain and be deemed personal or moveable property even though said Equipment may hereinafter become attached or affixed to realty.

[138] Unless the items were of such a nature as would stretch the definition of "chattel" beyond recognition, and would not normally be the subject matter of a lease (neither of which the respondent has demonstrated), it would be inappropriate to ignore such a precise contractual provision, and I am not prepared to do so.

Disclosure

[139] As submitted by the respondent MTCC 1250:

The only disclosure made by Developer Group with respect to the leasing and maintenance of the HVAC equipment is at page 4 of the Disclosure statement:

Each unit will be equipped with a fan coil system which will provide both heating and air-conditioning services. The system will be served by a "supply" pipe and a "return" pipe which will carry or conduct either hot water or chilled water depending on the season. Accordingly, while the in-suite climate can be individually modified, it is dependent upon the building's overall heating /cooling system. Therefore, each unit will be heated or cooled only if, and to the extent that the building supplying hot or cold water to the individual fan coil units or air-handling systems. The air-cooled chiller will be located on the roof and will be leased by the Commercial Condominium corporation (the "Corporation") from the gas company.

The only disclosure made by the Developer Group as to the cost of leasing the air-cooled chiller and servicing HVAC equipment was in the first year budget, as follows:

12. Rental of Equipment ($21,600)

The estimated annual leasing costs from Consumers Gas or other third parties including regular servicing and parts replacement or mechanical systems in the building including the chiller, cooling tower, the generator, pumps, motors, fans and other equipment.

The disclosure statement was updated to indicate that the costs of “Rental of Equipment” would be $27,552. However, the Developer Group could not identify which, if any, purchasers had been provided with the updated disclosure statement. ...

The equipment covered by the HVAC lease includes many pieces of equipment, only one of which is identified in the Disclosure Statement as an item of equipment that MTCC 1250 would be required to lease.

The fact that the HVAC equipment would not be owned but would be leased by MTCC 1250 was not disclosed to prospective purchasers. The cost of maintaining the HVAC equipment is more than $21,600 per year. An expert, Gene Abe testified that $25,000 per annum was not unreasonable to service this HVAC equipment. The lease payments are $3,049.46 monthly plus GST ($213.43), for a total of $3,262.49 per month or $39,149.88 per annum. Clearly the lease was not disclosed to purchasers since the cost of leasing the chiller and maintaining all HVAC equipment was budgeted at $21,600 for the first year. $21,600 can only realistically cover the cost of maintaining this equipment and certainly does not include the $39,149.88 per annum in lease payments that the Developer Group is attempting to charge MTCC 1250.

[140] The relevant disclosure provisions of the 1990 Act are set out in ss. 52 (5) and (6) as follows:

(5) Where any statement or material required under this Act to be provided by a declarant or proposed declarant to a purchaser of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes contains any material statement or information that is false, deceptive or misleading or fails to contain any material statement or information, the corporation or any unit owner who relied on such statement or material is entitled, as against the declarant or the proposed declarant to damages for any loss sustained as a result of such reliance

(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39. (emphasis added)

[141] The disclosure issue is between MTCC 1250 and the Declarant. As between MTCC 1250 and S-99 Limited, there is no issue of notice as there is privity of contract. The disclosure issue has no bearing on the dispute between S-99 and the respondent.

[142] I shall return later to the disclosure issue.

[143] Paragraph 13 of the lease provides that in the event of default, which has clearly been made out on the evidence,

... Lessor in its absolute discretion may: (a) enter upon the premises (sic) where such Equipment is located and take immediate possession thereof, whether it is affixed to realty or not, and remove the same, without liability to Lessor for or by reason of such entry or taking possession, whether for damage to property or otherwise, and sell, rent or otherwise dispose of the same for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions as Lessor may reasonably deem fit; (b) in the name of and as the irrevocably appointed agent and attorney for Customer and without terminating or being deemed to have terminated this Agreement, take possession of the Equipment and proceed to rent the Equipment to any other person, firm or corporation on such terms and conditions, for such rental and for such period of time as Lessor may deem fit and receive, hold and apply the same against any monies expressed to be payable from time to time by Customer hereunder; (c) terminate this

Agreement, and by written notice to Customer specifying a payment date not earlier than five (5) days from the date of such notice, require Customer to pay Lessor as its financial obligation (“Financial Obligation”) on the date specified in such notice the sum of (i) any Rental and other amounts due and unpaid, and (ii) an anticipated assessment of liquidated damages for loss of a bargain and not as a penalty, an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate of all Rental payable to the expiration of the Term calculated by discounting such amounts at four percent (4%) per annum, and (iii) the amount of any residual interest which Lessor may have in the Equipment and which was used in the establishment of the Rental and Term; (d) as a late charge, require the payment of interest at the rate of 24% per annum on any overdue payment until paid. Upon payment by Customer of its Financial Obligation, Lessor shall refund to Customer the net amount received by Lessor on any sale, lease or disposition of the Equipment after deducting all costs and expenses incurred by reason of the occurrence of the event of default or the exercise of Lessor’s remedies in respect thereof, including selling commissions and expenses and legal fees and disbursements on a solicitor/client basis. Except as otherwise expressly provided above, no remedy referred to in this section is intended to be exclusive, but each shall be cumulative and in addition to any other remedy referred to above or otherwise available to Lessor at law or in equity.

[144] The respondent MTCC 1250 has argued that the lease is unenforceable because Mr. Greenberg, as President of both the lessor and lessee at the time of signing, was in a conflict of interest. There is no merit to this argument as it fails to acknowledge the long line of cases starting with Salomon v. Salomon, [1897] A.C. 22 (Eng. H.L.) that recognize the separate identity of a corporation from its shareholders or directors, except in special circumstances.

Is Paragraph 13 of the Lease a Penalty Clause?

[145] The only argument offered by the respondent for its assertion that paragraph 13 should not be enforced is that if it is held to be enforceable, MTCC 1250 will be liable for approximately $1,714,000.00. The present value calculated with some difficulty by S-99 Limited and, therefore, estimated on the low side, is $413,545.53. It is the Default rate of interest (24%) that accounts for the balloon effect. MTCC 1250 did not question S-99 Limited's calculations.

[147] The equipment was valued at approximately $272,000.00.

[148] It is not uncommon for lessors to pass on the responsibility for maintenance and service to lessees. I did not hear the kind of evidence that could lead me to properly come to the conclusion that paragraph 13 was a penalty clause. The interest rate appears exorbitant to me, but I was offered no evidence that provided a foundation for my sentiment.

[149] I do have some concern that the interest will accrue over a period of 6 years since the trial began in circumstances in which neither party appears to have caused delay, but it is not an issue that was canvassed at trial. It has an impact on all the liability that has been found, but particularly in this aspect of the case.

[150] I return to the lease disclosure issue as it relates to the dispute between MTCC 1250 and the Declarant.

[151] MTCC 1250 submitted that the new Board first found out that the lease existed at the turnover meeting on July 22, 1999. It is not clear why they would have known much before that date. The plaintiff initiated unsuccessful negotiations for a buyout of the lease in the spring of 2000.

[152] The lease was registered on June 7, 1999, in which case there was notice to the world, not the least of which would be purchasers of units subsequent to that date.

[153] The lease was not subject to termination or expiration under s. 39 of the 1990 Act and accordingly only a brief narrative description of its significant features was required to be disclosed under s. 52 (6).

[154] However, the costs of maintenance and payments under the lease were clearly underestimated in the Disclosure Statement, and may well have been a proper basis for a cross-claim against the Declarant. There is no cross-claim in this proceeding. The plaintiff's claim for damages for nondisclosure was limited to damages arising from failure to disclose the lack of Fire-Stopping, and the condition of the garage.

ARITHMETIC

[155] I understand that the parties have no dispute about the amounts found to be owed. If I am wrong, they may address me in writing promptly, and not later than February 28, 2007.

COSTS

[156] Subject to any agreement between the parties, brief written submissions on costs are to be made to me by February 28, 2007.

APPENDIX A

Excerpts from the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26

1. (1) In this Act,

“common elements” means all the property except the units; (“parties communes”)

“common expenses” means the expenses of the objects and duties of a corporation and all expenses specified as common expenses in this Act or in a declaration; (“dépenses communes”)

“common interest” means the interest in the common elements appurtenant to a unit.

“corporation” means a corporation created by this Act; (“association”)

“declarant” means the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in the description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land, and includes an successor or assignee of such owner or owners but does not include a purchaser in good faith of a unit who actually pays fair market value or any successor or assignee of such purchaser; (“déclarant”)

“declaration” means a declaration specified in section 3 and includes any amendments; (“déclaration”)

“description” means the description specified in section 4; (“description”)

“owner” means the owner or owners of the freehold estate or estates in a unit and common interest, but does not include a mortgagee unless in possession (“propriétaire”)

“proposed unit” means land described in an agreement of purchase and sale that provides for delivery to the purchaser of a deed or transfer capable of registration after a declaration and description have been registered in respect of the land; (“partie privative projetée”)

“registered” means registered under the Land Titles Act or the Registry Act (“enregistré”)

“unit” means a part or parts of the land included in the description and designated as a unit by the description, and comprises the space enclosed by its boundaries and all the material parts of the land within this space in accordance with the declaration and description. (“partie privative”)

9. (1) The corporation may, by special by-law,

- (a) lease any part of the common elements, except any part that the declaration specifies is to be used by the owners of one or more designated units and not be all the owners; and
- (b) grant or transfer an easement or licence though the common elements.

(2) A lease or a grant or a transfer of an easement or licence mentioned in subsection (1), signed by the authorized officers of the corporation under its seal, affects the interest of every owner in the common elements as if the lease, grant or transfer had been executed by the owner, and shall have attached thereto an affidavit of one of the officers stating that the lease, grant or transfer was authorized by a special by-law of the corporation.

39. (1) The corporation may by by-law terminate, on giving sixty days notice in writing, any agreement between the corporation and any person for the management of the property entered into at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was registered owner of a majority of the units.

(2) Every agreement for the provision of services on a continuing basis, every lease of the common elements or part thereof for business purposes and every agreement for the provision of recreational facilities to the corporation on other than a non-profit basis entered into by a corporation after the 1st day of June, 1979 and at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was registered owner of a majority of the units that does not expire within twelve months after its effective date unless, within the twelve months period, the agreement is ratified by the board at a time when the majority of the board members were elected after the declarant ceased to be the registered owner of the a majority of the units.

51. (1) Every agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain,

(b) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included on the property without delay other than any units mentioned in a statement under clause 54 (1) (c).

52. (5) Where any statement or material required under this Act to be provided by a declarant or proposed declarant to a purchaser of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes contains any material statement or information that is false, deceptive or misleading or fails to contain any material statement or information, the corporation or any unit owner who relied on such statement or material is entitled, as against the declarant or the proposed declarant to damages for any loss sustained as a result of such reliance.

(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 29;

(8) Where the total amount incurred for the common expenses provided for in the budget statement exceeds the total of the proposed amounts set out in the statement, for the period covered by the budget statement mentioned in clause (6) (e), the declarant shall forthwith pay to the corporation the amount of the excess except in respect of increased expenses attributable to the termination of an agreement under section 39.

(9) Where the declarant shows any expected fees, charges, rents or other revenue to be paid to the corporation for the use of the common elements or assets or any part thereof or any other facilities related to the property and,

- (a) where the total amount received is less than the expected fees, charges, rents or other revenue, the declarant shall forthwith pay to the corporation the amount of the deficiency less the amount, if any, that the total of the proposed amounts for common expenses set out in the budget statement mentioned in clause (6) (e) exceeds the total amount incurred for common expenses for the period covered by the budget statement; or
- (b) where the total amount received is more than the expected fees, charges, rents or other revenue, the declarant may set off the amount of the excess against any amount he may be required to pay under subsection (8).

54. (1) A declarant or proposed declarant shall not grant a lease of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes unless,

(d) written notice of the lessor's intention to lease the unit has been given to every purchaser under an agreement of purchase and sale, registered owner and mortgagee entitled to vote, and the period referred to in subsection (2) has expired or, where an application is made under subsection (2), it is finally disposed of.

1. (1) In this Act,

“declarant” means a person who owns the freehold or leasehold estate in the land described in the description and who registers a declaration and description under this Act, and includes a successor or assignee of that person but does not include a purchaser in good faith of a unit who pays fair market value or a successor or assignee of the purchaser; (“déclarant”)

12. (1) The following easements are appurtenant to each unit and shall be for the benefit of the owner of the unit and the corporation:

- 1. An easement for the provision of a service through the common elements or any other unit.

2. An easement for support by all buildings and structures necessary for providing support to the unit.
3. If a building or part of a building moves after registration of the declaration and description or after having been damaged and repaired but has not been restored to the position occupied at the time of registration of the declaration, an easement for exclusive use and occupation over the space of the other units and common elements that would be space included in the unit if the boundaries of the unit were determined by the position of the buildings from time to time after registration of the description and not at the time of registration.
4. If a corporation is entitled to use a service or facility in common with another corporation, an easement for access to and for the installation and maintenance of the service or facility over the land of the other corporation, described in accordance with the regulations made under this Act.
 - (2) The following easements are appurtenant to the common elements:
 1. An easement for the provision of a service through a unit or through part of the common elements of which an owner has exclusive use.

2. An easement for support of all units necessary for providing support.

17. (1) The objects of the corporation are to manage the property and the assets, if any, of the corporation on behalf of the owners.

(2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the corporation.

(3) The corporation has a duty to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the owners, the occupiers of units, the lessees of the common elements and the agents and employees of the corporation comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

19. On giving reasonable notice, the corporation or a person authorized by the corporation may enter a unit or a part of the common elements of which an owner has exclusive use at any reasonable time to perform the objects and duties of the corporation or to exercise the powers of the corporation.

75. (1) The declarant is accountable to the corporation under this section for the budget statement that covers the one-year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and description.

(2) The declarant shall pay to the corporation the amount by which the total actual amount of common expenses incurred for the period covered by the budget statement, except for those attributable to the termination of an agreement under section 111 or 112, exceeds the total budgeted amount.

(3) The declarant shall pay to the corporation the amount by which the total actual amount of fees, charges, rents and other revenue paid or to be paid to the corporation, during the period covered by the budget statement, for the use of any part of the common elements or assets or of any other facilities related to the property, is less than the total budgeted amount.

(4) If the total actual amount of revenue described in subsection (3) exceeds the total budgeted amount, the declarant may deduct the excess from any amount payable under subsection (2).

(5) After receiving the audited financial statements for the period covered by the budget statement, the board shall compare the actual amount of common expenses and revenue described in subsections (2) and (3) for the period covered by the budget statement with the budgeted amounts and shall, within 30 days of receiving the audited financial statements, give written notice to the declarant of the amount that the declarant is required to pay to the corporation under this section.

(6) Within 30 days of receiving the notice, the declarant shall pay the corporation the amount that it is required to pay under this section.

109. (1) The corporation or an owner may make an application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order to amend the declaration or description.

(2) The applicant shall give at least 15 days notice of an application to the corporation and to every owner and mortgagee who, on the 30th day before the application is made, is listed in the record of the corporation maintained under subsection 47 (2), but the applicant is not required to give notice to the applicant.

(3) The court may make an order to amend the declaration or description if satisfied that the amendment is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency that appears in the declaration or description or that arises out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration or description.

(4) An amendment under this section is ineffective until a certified copy of the order has been registered.

APPENDIX C

Excerpts from the Disclosure Statement

The Property is a proposed condominium conversion of any existing eight-storey commercial building currently situate on the Property to a commercial/residential condominium (the “Property” or the “Commercial Condominium”) to contain approximately 90 units. ... There will be approximately 57 parking units and 23 visitors’ parking spaces, all to be located in the existing underground parking garage, ...

Approximately 9,000 square feet of the ground floor of the building will not form part of the Commercial Condominium but rather is intended to form a separate retail condominium of approximately five (5) retail units (the “Retail Condominium”). While it is presently the Declarant’s intention to register the ground floor of the building as a commercial condominium, the Declarant reserves the right to not register the ground floor as a condominium but to retain it as freehold. ...

There is no restriction on the sale or lease of units. In particular, parking units, storage units or pylon sign units may be sold or leased to any person or corporation and not limited to commercial/residential unit owners in the Retail Condominiums or the Commercial Condominiums and may be retained by the Declarant. Ownership of a commercial/residential unit does not include a parking unit. Each owner of a commercial/residential unit shall be entitled to lease a parking unit from the Declarant at market rates currently $85.00 per month.

Shared Facilities and Reciprocal Agreement

The Retail Condominium and the Commercial Condominium (and prior to the respective condominium registrations, the owner(s) of such properties) may be required to grant and receive easements to and from each other with respect to such matters as structural support, maintenance, repair and access to certain shared facilities, such as the emergency generator, the transformer vault, the electrical room, the sprinkler room, and the garbage pickup area and for repair, maintenance and access to various utilities and services. All utility services to the Commercial Condominium and the Retail Condominium will be separately metered to the respective properties and there will be no sharing of utility services between the same. The parties will enter into a reciprocal agreement to deal with the aforesaid matters as more particularly set out herein.

RECREATIONAL AND OTHER AMENITIES

... There will also be a fitness centre equipped with exercise equipment, and a party room with a party kitchen, pool table and furniture all of which will be leased by the Condominium Corporation.

HEATING /AIR-CONDITIONING

Each unit will be equipped with a fan coil system which will provide both heating and air-conditioning services. The system will be served by a “supply” pipe and a “return” pipe which will carry or conduct either hot water or chilled water depending on the season. Accordingly, while the in-suite climate can be individually modified, it is dependent upon the building's overall heating/cooling system. Therefore, each unit will be heated or cooled only if, and to the extent that the building is supplying hot or cold water to the individual fan coil units or air-handling systems. The air-cooled chiller will be located on the roof and will be leased by the Commercial Condominium corporation (the "Corporation") from the gas company.

(c) Common Interest and Common Expense Allocation

The owner of each unit shall have a proportionate undivided interest in the common elements as a tenant-in-common with all other owners and a similar proportionate interest or share in the assets of the Corporation, and shall contribute to the common expenses in the proportions set forth opposite each unit number in Schedule "D" of the Declaration.

(d) Common Expenses

Common expenses are the costs of performing the objects and duties of the Condominium. Many of these are set out in Schedule "E" of the Declaration and include among other things, the cost of all professional services to the Corporation such as legal, accounting and management services; insurance trustee fees; insurance premiums (other than the unit owner's insurance); the cost of repairing and maintaining the common elements including maintenance, exterior window cleaning, elevator maintenance, snow removal of common areas, cleaning visitors' parking spaces, utility consumption for common elements and other similar costs and expenses; and the cost of borrowing money for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the Corporation and its share of the costs of the Shared Facilities as set out in the Reciprocal Agreement. In addition, common expenses also establish each owner's required contribution to a reserve fund, to be established for the major repair and replacement of the common elements and other assets.

The units are bulk metered for water and gas and the cost of same will form part of the common expenses. Each unit is individually metered for hydro and will be paid for directly by each owner, and not as part of the common expenses. Each unit owner will be responsible for payment of Bell telephone and cable television service to their units, in addition to the common expenses. Each suite will be pre-wired for DSS satellite service and category 5 wiring for high speed internet connectivity, the monthly charge will not form part of the common expenses but will be payable to each owner who wishes to use such services.

Parking Units

Each parking unit shall be used only for the parking of motor vehicles and for no other purpose and no boats, trailers, snowmobiles, campers or recreational vehicles shall be parked on a parking unit. Owners or lessees of parking units need not be owners of a commercial/residential unit, and there are no restrictions against leasing or selling a parking unit to any person or corporation.

Storage Units

Storage units shall be used for storage of personal or business items and subject to the condominium rules. Storage units which contain washroom facilities may be used as washrooms. Owners or lessees of storage units need not be owners or lessees of a commercial/residential unit and there are no restrictions against leasing or selling a storage unit to any person or corporation.

Communications Units

Each communication unit shall be used to contain wires, cable and equipment necessary for the distribution of all forms of communication. Owners or lessees of communication units need not be owners or lessees of a commercial/residential unit and there is no restriction against leasing or selling a communication unit to any person or corporation.

Pylon Sign Units

Each pylon sign unit shall be used for the purpose of displaying tenant-identification signs, advertising, marketing and/or sales signs with respect to the Commercial Condominium and/or the Retail Condominium.

Owners or lessees of pylon sign units need not be owners or lessees of a commercial/residential unit and there is no restriction against leasing or selling a pylon sign unit to any person or corporation.

The Declarant shall be entitled to use and allow its sales staff, authorized personnel or prospective purchasers or tenants to use any unsold parking or storage units until all units in the Retail and Commercial Condominium have been sold.

The parking, storage and communication units are subject to a right of access in favour of the Corporation for ingress and egress to mechanical, electrical and service areas.

(a) Management Agreement

The Corporation will enter into a management agreement (the “Agreement”) with Mega Landmark Limited (a corporation affiliated with the Declarant) (the “Manager”) pursuant to which the Manager will be the exclusive representative and managing agent of the Corporation, for a period five (5) years from the date of creation of the Corporation. ...

APPENDIX D

Excerpts from a Typical Agreement Of Purchase and Sale of a Unit in a Condominium

CONSTRUCTION WARRANTY

5. (a) The Purchaser covenants and agrees to meet with the Vendor’s representative, as set out in Paragraph 6(a), to inspect the Unit and executed and deliver to the Vendor before taking possession, the Vendor’s form of Certificate of Completion and Possession, prepared by the Vendor. On Closing, the Vendor agrees to provide to the Purchaser the Vendor's Warranty for workmanship and materials, in the Vendor's form, such warranty to extend for period of ~~one (1)~~ two (2) year (sic) following the date of occupancy.

- (b) The Purchaser acknowledges and confirms that the Unit and the building are not covered by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act ("ONHWP") and accordingly ONHWP provides no warranty coverage to the Unit, building or deposits and does not apply to any provisions of this Agreement, including without limitation, extensions to the Confirmed Occupancy Date or Closing Date.
- (c) The Purchaser acknowledges and agrees that the filing of the consulting engineers certificate with the municipality, or the issuance by the municipality of an occupancy certificate or such other confirmation that the Unit may be occupied shall, subject to the provisions of Subparagraph (a) above, constitute complete and absolute acceptance by the Purchaser of all construction matters, and the quality and sufficiency thereof including, without limitation, all mechanical, structural and architectural matters.

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLETION

- 6. (a) The Purchaser agrees to meet the Vendor's representative at least seven (7) days prior to the Confirmed Occupancy Date to inspect and to list all items remaining uncompleted at the time of such inspection and mutually agreed deficiencies in the Unit, on the Vendor's certificate, which certificate shall be executed by both the Purchaser and the Vendor's representative forthwith after such inspection, and shall constitute the Vendor's only undertaking with respect to incomplete or deficient work, and such work shall be completed by the Vendor within a reasonable time after closing having regard to weather conditions and the availability of supplies and labour. The Purchaser acknowledges and agrees that no further request for completion or correction of items may be maintained by the Purchaser, and this shall serve as good and sufficient release of the Vendor in that regard. The Vendor indemnifies and saves the Purchaser harmless from any lien claims pursuant to the Construction Lien Act which are the responsibility of the Vendor, its trades and suppliers in full satisfaction of the Purchaser's rights under the Construction Lien Act and the Purchaser shall not be entitled to any lien holdback on Closing.
- (b) The Purchaser agrees that in no event shall the Purchaser be entitled to obtain possession of the Unit unless and until the Purchaser has executed a certificate referred to in subparagraph (a) above. If the Purchaser has omitted to executed the said certificate prior to the Confirmed Occupancy Date and the Vendor has duly attended at the Unit for the purposes of signing the certificate and to inspect the Unit, the Vendor shall have the unilateral right and option of either completing this transaction or refusing to allow possession of the Unit by the Purchaser, without extending the adjustment date of this transaction, until the said certificate has been duly executed or of terminating this Agreement, whereupon all monies paid hereunder as deposits or otherwise shall be forfeited to the Vendor as liquidated damages and not as a penalty, without prejudice to the Vendor's rights to being such further or other action as may be available to it as a result of such breach.

CONSTRUCTION

26. The Purchaser acknowledges that the Building is a substantial renovation of an existing building and that the base building remains as originally constructed. The foregoing shall constitute complete and absolute acceptance by the Purchaser of all construction matters, and the quality and sufficiency thereof, including, without limitation, all mechanical, structural and architectural matters. The Purchaser agrees that the foregoing may be pleaded by the Vendor as an estoppel in any action brought by the Purchaser or his successors in title against the Vendor. The Vendor reserves the right, in its sole and unfettered discretion, to make changes to the plans and specifications and/or alter the design or layout of the Units or common elements and/or substitute materials provided that such materials are substantially equal in quality to the materials so replaced, and the Purchaser shall have absolutely no claim or cause of action against the Vendor for any such changes variances or modifications, nor shall the Purchaser be entitled to any notice thereof.

It is acknowledged and agreed that the Vendor shall have the unilateral right to change the number of units in the Condominium by combining one or more proposed units and/or changing the style or type of units and their configuration or adding additional units on lands at its sole and absolute discretion; provided that the Purchaser's Unit herein shall not be altered except as provided by this Agreement. In the event of such changes, the proposed Condominium documents will be amended accordingly and the Purchaser hereby consents to any such alterations, changes or modifications, acknowledges that same do not constitute a material amendment as contemplated by section 52 of the Act provided same does not result in an increase in the monthly common expenses payable by the Purchaser as set out in the budget and agrees to complete the transaction of purchase and sale contemplated by the Agreement, notwithstanding such alterations, changes or modifications.

Any alterations, modifications, or changes from the original plans and specifications desired by the Purchaser shall be requested in writing and shall be an extra to the Purchase Price, to be paid in full when if accepted in writing by the Vendor. Any changes from original plans shall include a supervision fee of 15% of the value of all changes. The Vendor reserves the right to refuse to honour any request in its sole discretion. Further the Purchaser shall select colours, if applicable, within the time period specified in a notice, to be sent to the Vendor. Failure by the Purchaser to select, or to do so in a timely fashion shall mean that the Vendor may use colours of its choice. The Purchaser agrees that the unit interiors, including without limitation, marble, tile, carpet and cabinets, formica, laminates, mica, painted surfaces, appliance, etc. are subject to colour shading and gradation and may vary from samples, models or colour charts. Therefore no claim may be made against the Vendor on account thereof, nor shall such condition delay closing. The Vendor reserves the right to make changes and substitutions on materials or appliances of equal value (as determined by the Vendor) from those materials or appliances contained in the model and/or as shown on the plans and specifications or described in this Agreement. Any item of furniture or furnishings, including wall coverings and decorator items indicated on any plan or shown in any model unit, is merely by way of suggested use, and no such items are furnished with the Unit.

In the event the Purchaser requires design services, such design services shall be provided by the Vendor's consultants and shall be charged to the Purchaser at the rate of $80 per hour for architects/draftsmen/designers, and $100 per hour for any engineering services required, and the Purchaser agrees to pay such amounts as an extra to the Purchase Price to be paid upon presentation of invoices, and if not paid within five (5) business days the Purchaser further authorizes the Vendor to deduct such amounts from the deposit(s).

The Vendor reserves the right to make reasonable architectural, structural or design specifications or changes in the building and or the Unit as it deems necessary or desirable, and the Purchaser agrees to close with said modifications and changes.

32. The Purchasers acknowledge that parking is not included in the purchase price. Parking is available at market rates, currently at $85.00 per month, and may be leased from an affiliate of the vendor. The Vendor guarantees the Purchaser shall have the right to rent a parking spot for $85.00 per month for two years from the date of occupancy. The Purchaser shall furthermore have the option to purchase a parking spot if offered for sale by the Vendor.
38. The Purchaser acknowledges that the Vendor, as proposed declarant, may from time to time lease any and all unsold Units in the Condominium for residential purposes for a period not to exceed two (2) years and this paragraph shall also constitute notice to the Purchaser as registered owner of the Unit after Closing, pursuant to section 54(1)(d) of the Act.
46. The Purchaser acknowledges that title to the Unit is registered in the name of 188 Elginton Inc., which is a bare trustee for the Vendor. The Purchaser hereby agrees to accept a Transfer/Deed of Land on Closing from 188 Eglinton Inc. and acknowledges that all other related documentation will be given to the Vendor.

APPENDIX E

Excerpts from the Lease

12. TITLE. Customer acknowledges that the Equipment remains the property of the Lessor, and Customer shall have no right, title or interest in the Equipment other than, conditional upon Customer's compliance with and fulfillment of the terms and conditions of this Agreement, the right to maintain possession and use of the Equipment for the full Term. Lessor may require plates or markings to be affixed to or placed on the Equipment indicating Lessor is the owner. Lessor and Customer hereby confirm their intent that the Equipment shall always remain and be deemed personal or moveable property even though said Equipment may hereinafter become attached or affixed to realty.

13. DEFAULT. The occurrence or happening of any one or more of the following events shall constitute an event of default: (i) failure by Customer to pay any Rental or other amounts payable hereunder within five (5) days of the due date thereof, (ii) failure by Customer to perform or observe any covenant, condition or agreement to be performed or observed hereunder and such failure shall continue for a period of 20 days, (iii) any representation or warranty made by Customer herein or in any document or certificate furnished to Lessor in connection herewith or pursuant hereto shall provide to be incorrect at any time in my material respect; (iv) if Customer enters into a transaction involving the sale of its assets in bulk or if Customer attempts to sell or dispose of, or in any way part with possession of any of its assets outside the ordinary course of its business; (v) if Customer becomes insolvent or bankrupt or makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors or consents to the appointment of a trustee or receiver, or trustee or receiver be appointed for Customer or for a substantial part of its property; (vi) if bankruptcy, reorganization or insolvency proceedings be instituted by or against Customer; (vii) a writ, execution, attachment or similar process be issued or levied against the Equipment; (viii) the property management agreement between the Customer and S-99 Limited has been terminated by the Customer. The Customer shall be in default by the mere lapse of the above delays and none of the events of default require a notice on the part of the Lessor. Upon the happening of any event of default, Lessor in its absolute discretion may: (a) enter upon the premises (sic) where such Equipment is located and take immediate possession thereof, whether it is affixed to realty or not, and remove the same, without liability to Lessor for or by reason of such entry or taking possession, whether for damage to property or otherwise, and sell, rent or otherwise dispose of the same for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions as Lessor may reasonably deem fit; (b) in the name of and as the irrevocably appointed agent and attorney for Customer and without terminating or being deemed to have terminated this Agreement, take possession of the Equipment and proceed to rent the Equipment to any other person, firm or corporation on such terms and conditions, for such rental and for such period of time as Lessor may deem fit and receive, hold and apply the same against any monies expressed to be payable from time to time by Customer hereunder; (e) terminate this

Agreement, and by written notice to Customer specifying a payment date not earlier than five (5) days from the date of such notice, require Customer to pay Lessor as its financial obligation (“Financial Obligation”) on the date specified in such notice the sum of (i) any Rental and other amounts due and unpaid, and (ii) an anticipated assessment of liquidated damages for loss of a bargain and not as a penalty, an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate of all Rental payable to the expiration of the Term calculated by discounting such amounts at four percent (4%) per annum, and (iii) the amount of any residual interest which Lessor may have in the Equipment and which was used in the establishment of the Rental and Term; (d) as a late charge, require the payment of interest at the rate of 24% per annum on any overdue payment until paid. Upon payment by Customer of its Financial Obligation, Lessor shall refund to Customer the net amount received by Lessor on any sale, lease or disposition of the Equipment after deducting all costs and expenses incurred by reason of the occurrence of the event of default or the exercise of Lessor’s remedies in respect thereof, including selling commissions and expenses and legal fees and disbursements on a solicitor/client basis. Except as otherwise expressly provided above, no remedy referred to in this section is intended to be exclusive, but each shall be cumulative and in addition to any other remedy referred to above or otherwise available to Lessor at law or in equity.

Application under section 134 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C. 26.

On appeal from the judgment of Justice L. M. Walters of the Superior Court of Justice dated January 5, 2006.

ARMSTRONG J.A.:

[1] Ms. Heather Waddington is the owner of two cats. She is also the tenant of a condominium unit at 215

Glenridge Avenue in the City of St. Catharines. The owner of the condominium unit brought an application in the Superior Court of Justice to have Ms. Waddington's cats removed from the building. The application was dismissed by Justice J. W. Quinn of the Superior Court of Justice. The condominium owner did not appeal the dismissal of the application. However, Niagara North Condominium Corp. No. 125, the appellant, brought a subsequent application for the same relief. Justice L. Waters of the Superior Court of Justice dismissed the subsequent application as an abuse of process. The appellant now appeals the judgment of Walters J.

[2] For the reasons which follow, I would dismiss the appeal.

THE FACTS

[3] The appellant, Niagara North Condominium Corp. No. 125, is located at 215 Glenridge Avenue in the City of St. Catharines. The condominium complex contains 135 units. It was originally an apartment building which was converted to a condominium complex in June 1997.

[4] The respondent, Ms. Heather Waddington, is the tenant of unit 410. Unit 410 is owned by 669758 Ontario Ltd., the shares of which are owned by 215 Glenridge Avenue Ltd. Partnership. 215 Glenridge Avenue Ltd. Partnership is also referred to as the owner of unit 410 in these proceedings and no issue appears to be taken with that designation. Ms. Waddington entered into a lease with the owner of the unit on May 5, 2003. When she moved into unit 410, she brought her two cats with her. The cats continue to live in unit 410.

[5] Article 11, subsection 7 of the appellant's Declaration provides:

No animal, livestock, fowl, fish, reptile or insect (a "Pet") shall be permitted or kept in the building. Any owner shall, within two (2) weeks of receipt of written notice from a Board or Manager requesting removal of any such animal, permanently remove such animal from the property.

[6] Rule 12 of the rules and regulations of the corporation provides:

No pets shall be permitted in the building.

[7] The evidence before the court indicated that before the building was converted to a condominium complex the occupants of the building were permitted to have pets in their apartments. After the building was converted to a condominium complex, the persons who had pets in their apartments were permitted to keep them there until the pets either left or died.

[8] The property manager of the appellant sent a letter to Ms. Waddington on November 24, 2003 demanding that she remove her cats from the building by December 8, 2003. A second letter dated May 11, 2004 demanded that the cats be removed by May 25, 2004. A third letter dated July 23, 2004 advised that an inspection of the condominium unit would take place on August 7, 2004 "to confirm there are no pets living in the unit and you are complying with Article 11 subsection 7 of the Declaration". Finally, a letter dated October 26, 2004 addressed to Ms. Waddington from the property manager demanded that the cats be removed by November 15, 2004 and advised that an inspection would be carried out on November 16, 2004. The letter of October 26, 2004 also indicated that failure to comply with the demand to remove the cats would result in litigation commenced by the appellant condominium corporation. In particular, the letter said:

If the pet(s) have not been permanently removed, this matter will be referred to the Corporation's solicitor to obtain a court order to have the pet(s) permanently removed from the prop-erty.

[9] Ms. Waddington did not remove her cats from unit 410.

[10] Litigation followed. However, it was the owner of the unit and not the appellant condominium corporation that commenced the proceedings. On January 4, 2005, 215 Glenridge Avenue Ltd. Partnership, commenced its application ("the first application") against Ms. Waddington for:

- (i) a declaratory order stating that Ms. Waddington is in breach of the Declaration of the Niagara North Condominium Corp. No. 125; and,
- (ii) a compliance order for the removal of the cats.

[11] The first application was supported by an affidavit of Richard Rosenman. Attached to his affidavit are the four letters sent by the property manager of the appellant to Ms. Waddington dated November 24, 2003; May 11, 2004; July 23, 2004; and October 26, 2004. An affidavit of Peter Greco, the property manager of the appellant, was also filed in support of the first application. Finally, an affidavit of Lynn Berthiaume, the building superintendent of the appellant, was filed in support of the first application.

[12] The first application proceeded before Justice J. W. Quinn of the Superior Court of Justice in St. Catharines on January 20, 2005. Judgment was reserved to February 18, 2005 when Justice Quinn released a six page endorsement in which he gave his reasons for dismissing the application.

[13] Quinn J. found that the provisions banning pets in the Declaration and the rules of the appellant condominium corporation failed to comply with the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C. 26. In paragraphs 16, 17 and 18 of his reasons, Quinn J. said:

[16] Subsection 58(1) of the Condominium Act does not authorize a condominium corporation to make a blanket rule banning all pets. Only if pets compromise “the safety, security or welfare of the [unit] owners and of the property and assets of the [condominium] corporation” (clause 58(1)(a)) or if they constitute an “unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements, the units or the assets of the [condominium] corporation (clause 58(1)(b)), may the board of directors ban or prohibit their presence. There is no evidence that the cats of the respondent run afoul of clauses (a) or (b) of subsection 58(1). And it cannot be said that the presence of all pets inherently constitutes a breach of those clauses.

[17] I also think that, if any part of a declaration conflicts with subsection 58(1) it is void and unenforceable. In other words, where, pursuant to clause 7(4)(b) of the Condominium Act, a declaration contains “conditions or restrictions with respect to the occupation and use of the units or common elements,” a condominium corporation cannot go beyond that which is permitted in subsection 58(1).

[18] Consequently, the declaration and rules of the Corporation are insufficient to prohibit the presence of the cats.

[14] The owner of unit 410 did not appeal the decision of Quinn J.

[15] On September 20, 2005, seven months after the decision of Quinn J. was released, the appellant issued a notice of application (“the second application”) in the Superior Court against Ms. Waddington, in which it sought the same relief as had been sought by the owner of the condominium unit in the first application, i.e. the removal of the two cats from the condominium unit.

[16] The appellant filed an affidavit of its property manager, Peter Greco, in support of the second application. The Greco affidavit contained essentially the same evidence that had been placed before the judge in the first application, including the letters dated November 24, 2003; May 11, 2004; July 23, 2004; and October 26, 2004 addressed to Ms. Waddington demanding the removal of her two cats from the building.

[17] Ms. Waddington filed two affidavits in opposition to the second application. She deposed that she suffers from a brain injury and is disabled. She receives Ontario disability support and lives on a limited income. She deposed that she had never received any complaints about her cats. She attached a report to her affidavit from her psychologist who opined that Ms. Waddington's cats are an important focus in her life and that they make a significant contribution to her health and well-being. Her psychologist further said that she would suffer an unreasonable and unnecessary hardship if she were required to give up her cats. Ms. Waddington's family physician also provided a report in which she said that, "her cats are a vital part of her life and I know that the loss of her treasured pets would set her back considerably".

[18] The second application was heard by Walters J. on January 5, 2006. She dismissed the second application. Her endorsement reads as follows:

Last year the owner of the unit in question brought an application against the same Resp. requesting the exact same relief in this application. Justice Quinn denied the application. No appeal was taken. The Cond. Corpn. which knew all the particulars of the first application – in fact it's employee swore the affid. used in the appln. never asked to be joined in the action to be heard either in front of Quinn J. or at a subsequent appeal. The exact same facts + issues are before me as were in front of Quinn J. last year. Although technically this may not be res judicata, as the applicant is a different party, the issues are identical. In these circumstances proceeding with the appln. would be an abuse of process. The applicant wants an appeal of Quinn J.'s order without going through the appeal process.

Appl. also asked that motion be adj so that this matter could be placed back before Quinn J. With respect, all that would do is ask Quinn J. to sit on appeal of his earlier decision. This is prejudicial to the Resp. Accordingly, the Appln is dismissed.

The Resp. is entitled to costs fixed in the amount of $2,500, incl of GST & disb.

THE APPEAL

[19] The appellant alleges that the application judge made several errors including:

- she failed to apply the correct test for abuse of process;
- she failed to consider the relevant factors for the exercise of her discretion including:
 - the scheme of the Condominium Act and the merits;

- the prejudice to the appellant and the owners of the units;
- the failure to join the appellant in the first application;
- the importance, relative ease and practicality of the appellant intervening in the first application;
- the inability of the appellant to appeal the decision in the first application; and
- the lack of opportunity for the appellant to make submissions in the first application.

ANALYSIS

Did the application judge err in failing to apply the correct test for abuse of process?

[20] The appellant submits that the application judge erred in law when she failed to articulate and apply the legal test for abuse of process. In particular, the appellant asserts that the application judge was required to ensure that her decision on the issue of whether the second application constituted an abuse of process resulted in fairness and justice to the parties.

[21] The application judge did not articulate a test for abuse of process. Abuse of process is a doctrine designed to provide a remedy in a variety of situations including a remedy for the unfairness of relitigating the same issue against the same party in circumstances where issue estoppel does not apply. Abuse of process is essentially a fairness doctrine. In Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of

Public Employees (C.U.P.E.), Local 79, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, Arbour J. engaged in a thorough review of the doctrine. She cited with approval at para. 37 the dissenting judgment of Goudge J.A. in Canam Enterprises Inc. v. Coles (2000), 51 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.) at paras. 55-56:

The doctrine of abuse of process engages the inherent power of the court to prevent the misuse of its procedure, in a way that would be manifestly unfair to a party to the litigation before it or would in some other way bring the administration of justice into disrepute. It is a flexible doctrine unencumbered by the specific requirements of concepts such as issue estoppel. See House of Spring Gardens Ltd. v. Waite, [1990] 3 W.L.R. 347 at p. 358, [1990] 2 All E.R. 990 (C.A.).

One circumstance in which abuse of process has been applied is where the litigation before the court is found to be in essence an attempt to relitigate a claim which the court has already determined.

[22] Arbour J. in the City of Toronto also cited, with approval at para. 38, D.J. Lange, The Doctrine of Res Judicata in Canada (2000) at pp. 347-48 in support of the policy grounds which underlie abuse of process in these circumstances:

The two policy grounds, namely, that there be an end to litigation and that no one should be twice vexed by the same cause, have been cited as policies in the application of abuse of process by relitigation. Other policy grounds have also been cited, namely, to preserve the courts' and the litigants' resources, to uphold the integrity of the legal system in order to avoid inconsistent results, and to protect the principle of finality so crucial to the proper administration of justice.

[23] While the application judge's very brief endorsement does not provide a fulsome analysis of the issues to be decided by her, it is clear that she concluded that to permit the second application to proceed would be unfair and unjust given that the identical claim was disposed of in the first application and considering the appellant's apparent involvement in the initiation of the first application. While one might have preferred a more fulsome set of reasons from the application judge, I do not find her endorsement to be so bereft of analysis that it does not explain why she reached her conclusion. Her endorsement taken together with the application record provides this court with a basis to engage in meaningful appellate review.

Did the application judge err in failing to consider the statutory scheme of the Condominium Act and the merits of the case?

[24] The application judge did not consider the relevant sections of the Condominium Act and the merits of the case. Since she dealt with the application before her on the basis of abuse of process she did not go further. Indeed she expressly told counsel for the appellant that she did not intend to consider the merits.

[25] But, what if the decision in the first application was simply wrong in law?¹ Would that be a decisive factor in favour of the appellant? In other circumstances, an erroneous decision on the merits in the initial proceeding might make a difference although we were not cited any authority in support of that proposition. In any event, in these circumstances, where the unit owner (the first applicant) and the appellant (the second applicant) were so inextricably connected to the identical claim against the same respondent, I think an erroneous decision, if there be one, is not a decisive factor. The unit owner could have exercised his right of appeal to the Court of Appeal but did not.

Did the application judge err in failing to consider the prejudice to the appellant and the owners?

[26] The appellant submits that the application judge failed to consider the prejudice to the appellant in not being able to enforce the no pets prohibition and the uncertainty caused in the building with respect to the housing of pets as a result of the decision in the first application. It seems to me that if there was any such prejudice, it was not of such a degree that would justify setting aside the application judge's exercise of discretion in this case.

Did the application judge err in failing to consider that the owner of the condominium unit and Ms. Waddington should have taken steps to join the appellant in the first application?

[27] The appellant submits that the application judge should have considered that neither the owner of the condominium unit nor Ms. Waddington took any steps to add the appellant as a party to the first application to ensure that the result would be binding on the appellant. The appellant cites rule 5.03(1) and rule 5.03(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which deal with the joinder of necessary parties.

[28] In my view, there was no obligation on Ms. Waddington to move to add the appellant as a party to the application. In all probability, counsel for Ms. Waddington, if he put his mind to it, would have assumed that the appellant made a conscious decision not to join in the application. In any event, the fact that the appellant was not a party to the first application, was likely the subject of some discussion between it and the unit owner. If they concluded that the unit owner alone would proceed in order to avoid potential costs or other consequences so be it.

Did the application judge err in failing to consider the importance, relative ease and practicality of intervening?

[29] During a dialogue, at the hearing of the second application, between the application judge and counsel for the appellant, the application judge suggested that the appellant could have sought to be added as a party in the first application. The appellant submits that this would not have been practical. First, the appellant argues that on such a motion, the unit owner would likely have opposed the motion because the appellant would have sought its costs against the unit owner which are provided for in the condominium declaration. This argument is pure speculation. Given the co-operation that existed between the unit holder and the appellant, I think this is an unlikely scenario. Second, the appellant argues that it would have had no reason to believe that there was any risk of the unit owner not succeeding in his claim and therefore presumably had no reason to seek to be added as a party. If that is so, then the appellant made a tactical decision and must accept the consequences.

Did the trial judge err in failing to understand that the appellant had no right of appeal from the decision in the first application?

[30] When the application judge's endorsement is read as a whole, I believe it is clear that she fully understood that the appellant could not appeal the decision in the first application. Her words: "the applicant wants an appeal of Quinn J.'s order without going through the appeal process" must be read in context. The gist of her reasoning is that the appellant in the second application was, in effect, attempting to appeal the first decision. Although there was considerable discussion between the application judge and counsel for the appellant concerning the possibility of the appellant becoming involved in an appeal on the first application, I do not accept that any of that discussion would lead this court to reverse her decision on abuse of process.

Did the application judge err in failing to consider that the appellant had no opportunity to make submissions to the court in the first application?

[31] The appellant argues that the application judge failed to consider the unfairness of the first application judge's decision in light of the fact that before Quinn J. determined the appellant's pet prohibitions to be unenforceable, he did not accord the appellant the opportunity to make submissions on the issue. I see no merit in this argument. As already observed, the appellant obviously made a conscious decision not to join in the first application as a party.

CONCLUSION

[32] I accept that the application judge was entitled, in the circumstances of this case, to invoke the doctrine of abuse of process. Here we have the relitigation of an identical claim against Ms. Waddington. Although the appellant was not a party to the first application, the appellant took the initiative in making the demands on Ms. Waddington to remove her cats and threatened litigation against her. When she did not comply with the demands to remove the cats, the unit owner was the named applicant in the first application. However, the appellant provided virtually all of the evidence in respect of the application. Although not a party in the formal sense, the appellant was an active participant in promoting the first application.

[33] The application judge's use of the doctrine of abuse of process terminated the second proceeding and prevented the unfairness to Ms. Waddington of being twice vexed by the same cause.

[34] In the result, I would dismiss the appeal. I would award the respondent her costs of the appeal on a partial indemnity basis fixed in the amount of $10,000 including disbursements and GST.

REASONS FOR DECISION

PERELL, J.

Introduction and Overview

[1] The plaintiff Peel Standard Condominium Corporation No. 668 (“Peel 668”) is part of a “Christian Lifestyle” condominium project in Brampton, Ontario. Peel 668 sues: (a) Dayspring Phase I Limited (“Dayspring”), which was the declarant of the condominium project that established Peel 668; (b) Brampton Pentecostal Church Incorporated (“BP Church”), which had been the owner of the lands upon which the condominium project was constructed; (c) six individuals who had been appointed by Dayspring to be the original members of the Board of Directors of Peel 668 (“Declarant Board Members”); (d) 695598 Ontario Limited, operating as Maple Ridge Property Management (“Maple Ridge”), which provided property management services for the project; (e) and Corpfinance International Limited (“Corpfinance”), which entered into a $1.7 million loan agreement with Dayspring, which loan agreement was assumed by Peel 668.

[2] The defendants Dayspring, BP Church, and the Declarant Board Members, bring third party proceedings against Miller Thomson LLP, which had been the solicitors for Dayspring for, amongst other things, the $1.7 million loan agreement.

[3] Pursuant to Rule 20, the defendant Corpfinance moves for a summary judgment dismissing Peel 668’s action as against it. Corpfinance argues that there is no genuine issue to be tried that Peel 668 has no claim against it. Corpfinance relies on the principle that on a motion for summary judgment, the motions judge is entitled to assume that the record contains all the evidence that the party will present at trial: Dawson v. Rexcraft Storage & Warehouse Inc. 1998 CanLII 4831 (ON

C.A.), (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257 (Ont. C.A.); Bluestone v. Enroute Restaurants Inc. 1994 CanLII 814 (ON C.A.), (1994), 18 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.). Corpfinance argues that Peel 668 has not been shown Corpfinance to have done anything wrong.

[4] Having reviewed the material filed on this motion, I agree with the argument of Corpfinance. It has satisfied the onus on it of establishing that there is no genuine issue for trial, and, therefore, I grant its motion for summary judgment.

[5] I will explain this conclusion below, but at the outset it is helpful to summarize the analysis that leads me to the conclusion that Peel 668 cannot succeed in its action against Corpfinance. The analysis proceeds along the following line of argument. Peel 668 alleges that the $1.7 million loan should not be enforced for five reasons: (1) the loan is ultra vires; (2) there was a breach of the disclosure requirements of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 with respect to the loan; (3) there was oppression of Peel 668 as defined by the Condominium Act, 1998 with respect to the loan; (4) equitable relief is available with respect to the loan; and (5) Corpfinance knew or ought to have known that full and proper disclosure had not been made with respect to the loan.

[6] The first reason, however, is unsound because the loan is not ultra vires. The remaining reasons are unsound because Corpfinance did nothing that would bring it within the remedial jurisdiction of the Condominium Act, 1998 or of equity. Put shortly, whatever other defendants may have done to Peel 668, it has not been shown that Corpfinance did anything wrong nor has it been shown that it should be held responsible for the wrongdoing of others.

[7] In arriving at the conclusion that the $1.7 million was not ultra vires, that is, it was infra vires, I accept that condominium corporations are creatures of statute, and they have not been given the capacity to contract of a natural person. Condominium corporations are subject to the doctrine of ultra vires, and they cannot enter into a contract that is beyond the authority conferred by their enabling statute. Further, condominium corporations must comply with the formalities of contract formation stipulated by the enabling legislation. If a condominium corporation enters into a contract that does not comply in form and substance with the requirements of the enabling legislation, then the contract is void. See: Noldon Investments Ltd. (1977), 1 R.P.R. 236 (Ont. H.C.J.); Condominium Plan No. 8222909 v. Francis, [2003] A.J. No. 976 (C.A.); Strata Plan 1261 v. 360204 B.C. Ltd., [1995] B.C.J. No. 2761 (B.C.S.C.).

[8] I rely, however, on the principle that there is a distinction between agreements that are intrinsically illegal and agreements that are tainted by illegality, if at all, in how they are performed. This principle was recognized by the Court of Appeal in Beer v. Townsgate I Limited (1997), 36 O.R. (3d) 137 (C.A.).

[9] In Beer v. Townsgate I Limited, the trial judge ruled that agreements for the purchase of condominium units were illegal and unenforceable because at the time of their signing, the vendor was not registered and therefore the vendor had contravened the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (“ONHWPA”). However, at the time the vendor entered into the agreements, the vendor had complied with all of the requirements for registration, and the agreements contained reference to the ONHWPA and made clear that the vendor intended to comply with the legislation. The Court noted that the agreements were not “inherently illegal” and that it was the intention of the parties to make a legal contract.

[10] In Beer v. Townsgate I Limited, the Court of Appeal held that the trial judge failed to appreciate that illegality as to contractual formation must be distinguished from illegality as to the performance of the contract. The Court of Appeal referred to Maschinenfabrik Seydelmann K.-G. v. Presswood Brothers Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 316, where Schroeder J.A. said at pp. 321-22:

What is forbidden by the statute and the Regulations under review is not malum per se but malum prohibitum, and in every case it becomes a crucial question whether the contract is capable or incapable of lawful performance. In the latter case, e.g., if the parties should agree to commit a crime, or if they should clearly agree to commit an act prohibited by statute, such a contract is intrinsically illegal since it necessarily involves an offence or a violation of the law. With much deference to the opinion of the learned trial Judge who decided against the plaintiff with some reluctance, he has failed to take into account the well-settled presumption of law in favour of the legality of a contract; that if a contract can be reasonably susceptible of two meanings or modes of performance, one legal and the other not, that interpretation is to be put upon it which will support it and give it operation.

[11] In the immediate case, the proper formalities were followed, and the $1.7 million loan was not intrinsically ultra vires, and it cannot become ultra vires after the fact because of the alleged misconduct, if any, of Dayspring, BP Church, the Declarant Board Members, Maple Ridge, or Miller Thomson, LLP.

[12] In arriving at my conclusion that Corpfinance did not do anything wrong, I have also rejected what I view as a logical fallacy in Peel 668's argument to resist the motion for summary judgment. As will be seen from the review of the facts below, in several instances, in negotiating and in implementing the $1.7 million loan, Corpfinance required compliance with provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 (and for that matter it required compliance with other laws and regulations). For example, Corpfinance required that there be proper disclosure under the Act, and from this fact, Peel 668 then argues that there is a genuine issue for trial about whether there was proper disclosure, and accordingly, Corpfinance's motion for summary judgment should be dismissed.

[13] The logical fallacy in this argument, is that assuming the $1.7 million loan was infra vires, and assuming that there is a genuine issue for trial about the failure of some defendants to comply with the Act, their misconduct, if found to exist, would not nullify the legality of the loan. Corpfinance is not privy or responsible for the misconduct of other defendants and indeed sought compliance with the Act. Put simply, Corpfinance certainly did not do anything wrong in requiring compliance with the Condominium Act, 1998 (or other legislation), and Corpfinance cannot itself be faulted if others breached their obligations or acted wrongfully.

[14] Before concluding this introduction and overview, I note that in support of its motion for a summary judgment, Corpfinance made the additional argument that even if the $1.7 million loan was ultra vires, then, nevertheless, the loan would still be repayable in whole or in part, by Peel 668, as a matter of the law of restitution. Because of the conclusion I have reached that the loan was infra vires, I make no ruling on the merits of this alternative argument.

[15] My Reasons for Decision will now proceed by setting out the facts together with my analysis of the claim against Corpfinance.

The Factual Background and the Analysis of the Case against Corpfinance

[16] For the purposes of this motion for summary judgment, it is not necessary to detail much of the history of the condominium project that led to Peel 668, which history begins in 1991 with plans for the Christian Lifestyle community in the City of Brampton.

[17] A description of the factual background may begin in May 2001, when Dayspring began negotiations with Corpfinance to obtain a loan. At that time, Dayspring was the developer of the condominium project for a Christian Lifestyle community in Brampton, Ontario that was to have several phases, including a phase of 24 bungalows, which phase constituted Peel Condominium Corporation No. 650 (“Peel 650”) and a phase of mid-rise condominium apartment buildings, which was to become the plaintiff, Peel 668.

[18] On September 4, 2001, Peel 650 and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the as yet uncreated Peel 668 signed a commitment letter for the $1.7 million loan that is the subject of this action. This was followed on December 10, 2001 by the signing of a formal loan agreement by Corpfinance, Peel 650, and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the as yet uncreated Peel 668.

[19] Corpfinance’s role was only as a lender. It is convenient to note here that it was conceded during argument that Corpfinance was not a declarant under the Condominium Act, 1998.

[20] On July 19, 2002, Peel 668 was officially created, and Dayspring appointed the Declarant Board Members on July 25, 2002. The previous day, the solicitors for Corpfinance requested confirmation that each purchaser had been advised of the financing in the disclosure required by the Condominium Act, 1998.

[21] On August 9, 2002, the Declarant Board Members approved By-law No. 4, which authorized Peel 668 to enter into the loan agreement, and By-law No. 4 was registered. On September 5, 2002, the loan was assumed by Peel 668 pursuant to an assignment agreement. On or about September 30, 2002, the Declarant Board Members directed Corpfinance to disburse the proceeds of the loan.

[22] On October 9, 2002, there was a “turnover meeting” and the Declarant Board Members were replaced by a new Board of Directors. Peel 668 pleads that Dayspring, BP Church, and the Declarant Board Members intentionally delayed the holding of the turnover meeting until the loan monies could be advanced.

[23] The new Board of Directors reviewed the disbursement of the monies, and in this action Peel 668 takes the position that there were a number of items that had never been disclosed as part of the common elements or there were items that unit owners already paid for as part of the purchase price for their unit.

[24] Peel 668 pleads in paragraphs 44 and 49 of its statement of claim that not all of the items were previously or properly disclosed to the purchasers of the units in the condominium development. In paragraphs 69 to 71, it pleads that loan monies in the amount of $974,627.28 were for items that were improperly or never disclosed to the purchasers as being a cost in addition to the purchase price in accordance with the original disclosure statement for the condominium project. (It may be noted that as an alternative to the plea that the $1.7 million loan is not binding, Peel 668 pleads that it is only liable to repay $680,000.)

46 fan coil units	$ 67,312.22
3 rooftop HVAC units	$ 6,652.00
3 make up air units for circulation to the building corridors	$121,857.00
137 apartment "B" vents and gas lines	$ 60,195.24
Bell phone wiring	$113,600.49
24 draft inducers for apartment "B" vents	$ 65,595.00
Main lobby furnishings	$ 15,151.00

[26] Mr. Francis also deposes that furnishings with a value of $70,000 were purchased but not paid for and that several items of Equipment that were described in the disclosure documents were never purchased.

[27] In paragraph 94 of its statement of claim, Peel 668 states that the loan is ultra vires as it is contrary to s. 56 (1)(e) of the Condominium Act, 1998 as the monies advanced were not for the purpose of carrying out the objects and duties of Peel 668. In particular, it was not proper to borrow money to pay construction costs to be borne by the developers of the project. Relying on s. 135 of the Act (the oppression remedy), in paragraph 95, Peel 668 alleges that this conduct is oppressive and unfairly prejudicial to Peel 668 and to the unit owners.

[28] It is, in effect, because a portion of the $1.7 million of loan monies were used to purchase certain items and not other items and because there was not proper disclosure of the items that were to be purchased from the loan proceeds that Peel 668 argues that loan from Corpfinance is ultra vires. As I have already noted above, I disagree with this argument, and I prefer the argument made by Corpfinance.

[29] Section 17 (2) of the Condominium Act, 1998 provides that the condominium corporation has the duty to control and administer the common elements and the assets of the corporation. Subsection 56 (1) of the Act requires that a by-law enacted by the board of directors of a condominium corporation must not be contrary to the Act or the declaration. Subsection 56 (6) provides that the by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration. In the case at bar, the purpose of the loan was to cover the financing of common elements of Peel 650 and Peel 668.

[30] Under s. 1 (1) of the Condominium Act, 1998, "common elements" are defined to mean "all the property except the units" and "units" is defined to mean "a part of the property designated as a unit by the description and includes the space enclosed by its boundaries and all of the land, structures and fixtures within this space in accordance with the declaration and description." Thus, what items of property constitute the common elements of a particular condominium is a matter to be determined by the declaration and description of the particular condominium. In response to a question that I asked during argument, it was conceded that, generally speaking, the items that constitute the common elements are a variable for each condominium project.

[31] In the immediate case, the commitment letter and the loan agreement that was authorized by Bylaw No. 4 set out the items that were to be acquired with the proceeds of the loan and that were to become part of the common elements. There is nothing in these items that could not be a common element and, more significantly, there is nothing intrinsically illegal about a condominium corporation borrowing money for its common elements as they may be defined for that particular condominium project.

[32] The expressed purpose of the loan in the immediate case was to finance the purchase of “Equipment” to be part of the common elements. In reference to the purpose of the loan in the immediate case, several sections of the loan agreement should be noted:

- (a) The preamble to the agreement states: “Whereas pursuant to a commitment letter dated September 4, 2001, the Lender agreed to provide the Loan to the Phase Ia Corporation [Peel 650] and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the Phase Ib Corporation [Peel 668] (collectively, the “Borrowers” to finance the Equipment on the terms and conditions herein set forth;”
- (b) The loan agreement defines “common elements” as follows: “Common elements” means, together, the land building, fixtures, Equipment and structures and improvements of the Condominium, other than the Units, including without limitation, exterior landscaped areas, recreational facilities, parking facilities, hallways, elevators, and foyers and the Equipment.
- (c) Included in the definition of “common elements” is “the Equipment” which is defined as follows: “Equipment” means the Equipment forming part of the Common Elements of the Condominiums as set out in Schedule A, of which that Equipment described in Part A of Schedule A is installed in and forms part of the Common Elements of Peel Condominium Plan No. 650, and the Equipment described in Part B of Schedule A is installed in and forms part of the Common Elements and/or units of a condominium project located at 3, 7 and 10 Dayspring Circle, Brampton, Ontario and known as the Phase Ib Project [Peel 668].

(d) Schedule A states:

PART A

Phase 1a Corporation

1. 24 Gas Furnace and Venting Systems serving each residential unit

PART B

Phase 1b Corporation

1. 176 gas furnace/ hot water tank systems, including rooftop HVAC Units

2. Enterphone system for Gatehouse (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

3. Furnishings for Quest Suites (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

4. Law Sprinkler System (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

5. Village Hall Furnishings and Appliances (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

- (e) Article 2.02 provides that the Credit Facility is being made available to enable the Borrowers to finance the cost of the Equipment.
- (f) Article 9.01 (j) is an affirmative covenant from the Borrowers that “the Borrowers shall use all Loans for financing of the Equipment.”

[33] Pausing here, in my opinion, there is a contract here capable of lawful performance. Further, there is the intention of the parties to make a legal contract; provisions of the loan agreement require compliance with the Condominium Act, 1998 (and other legislation). For example:

- (a) Article 3.01 (c) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that: “the Borrowers and Phase Ib Corporation [Peel 668] shall have delivered to the Lender certified copies of the Constitutional Documents and of the resolutions authorizing the borrowings hereunder and of the incumbency of the officers or the Borrowers and the Phase Ib Corporation signing this Agreement and any documents to be provided pursuant to the provisions hereof;
- (b) Article 3.01 (g)(i) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that: “the Condominiums have been completed and constructed in accordance with all relevant federal, provincial and municipal laws, requirements, standards, bylaws and codes, that the Units may be legally occupied, and that the Equipment has been installed in a good and workmanlike manner and is in good condition and working order;”
- (c) Article 3.01 (i) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that disclosure be made to unit purchasers about the loan. The article states: “the Lender shall have been provided with evidence satisfactory to the Lender that all of the Units have been sold to bona fide purchasers for value who are at arm’s length to the builder and/or vendor of the Condominiums and that the financing constituted hereby has been disclosed to all such purchasers in the disclosure documentation required under the Act.”

- (d) Article 8.01 (a) is a warranty from the Borrowers that there is corporate authority. The warranty states that: “Each of the Borrowers has full corporate power and authority to enter into this Agreement and the Documents and to do all acts and execute and deliver all other documents as required hereunder or thereunder to be done, observed or performed by it in accordance with their terms.”
- (e) Article 8.01 (b) is a warranty from the Borrowers of valid authorization. This warranty provides that: “Each of the Borrowers has taken all necessary corporate action to authorize the creation, execution, delivery and performance of this Agreement and the Documents and to observe and perform the provisions of each in accordance with its terms.
- (f) Article 8.01 (c) is a warranty from the Borrowers of the validity of documents and enforceability. This warranty includes the provision that: “Neither the execution and delivery of this Agreement or any Document, nor compliance with the terms and conditions of any of them, (i) has resulted or will result in a violation of the Constitutional Documents of the Borrowers or any resolutions passed by the Board of Directors of each of the Borrowers or any applicable law, rule, regulation, order, judgment, injunction, award or decree, including without limitation the Act [defined to mean the Condominium Act, 1998, of Ontario, as amended, supplemented or replaced from time to time].”

- (g) Article 9.01 (c) is an affirmative covenant from the Borrowers of compliance with Legislation that states: “The Borrowers shall do or cause to be done all acts necessary or desirable to comply with all material applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws requirements or standards including without limitation, the requirements of the Act [defined to mean the Condominium Act, 1998, of Ontario, as amended, supplemented or replaced from time to time] and all requirements of Environmental Law . . .”

[34] Thus, in my opinion, Corpfinance made a loan that had a lawful purpose that was consistent with the condominium corporation’s enabling legislation and for which the proper formalities were followed. Further, Corpfinance intended that the loan comply with all legal requirements and indeed imposed legality as a term of the loan agreement.

[35] Upon analysis, it would appear that Peel 668’s complaint is not so much that the loan is ultra vires, but rather that Dayspring failed to properly appropriate the funds to purchase the Equipment that was to be part of the common elements and that certain purchasers should not have to pay part of their purchase price for items that they would be charged for again as part of the common element expense. These may be legitimate complaints against Dayspring but, in my opinion, they do not make the loan itself ultra vires.

[36] An illustration of my analysis may be helpful. Peel 668 complains that the loan proceeds were used to pay for Bell phone wiring with a value of $113,600.00. There is nothing inherently illegal or inconsistent with the Condominium Act, 1998 about phone wiring equipment being part of the common elements. However, under the loan agreement’s definition of “Equipment,” it is arguable that phone wiring does not fall within the particular definition of Equipment described in Part B of Schedule A, which is to be installed in and to form part of the common elements of Peel 668. If this is correct, then using the loan monies for this purpose would be an illegal performance of a contract otherwise capable of being performed lawfully. As I view the result, this would be a malum prohibitum but it would not be a malum per se that would vitiate the contract. Similar arguments may be made about other items in the list of disputed items and there is also the argument that the financing of the item for inclusion in the common elements was proper in any event.

[37] In this regard, it is, interesting to note that it was conceded during argument by counsel for Peel 668 that a portion of the loan proceeds would have to be repaid to Corpfinance, but she submitted that this was a matter that should be left for the trial judge. I see it differently. In Hongkong Bank of Canada v. Wheeler Hldg Ltd., 1993 CanLII 148 (S.C.C.), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 167, Sopinka, J. for the Court noted that the ultra vires doctrine to the extent that it still applies in Canada should be applied narrowly. He stated at p. 202:

As is noted in Palmer’s Company Law (24th ed. 1987), vol. 1, at pp. 143-44, “in modern law the courts are unlikely to hold a contract to be ultra vires the company unless, on a reasonable construction of the objects clause and the other clauses of the memorandum and articles, there are compelling grounds to arrive at that result.”

[38] The case at bar is not a case such as Strata Plan 1261 v. 360204 B.C. Ltd., supra, where the condominium corporation entered into a agreement allowing the defendant the exclusive use of all parking spaces in the parking garage, which was an arrangement where the condominium would lose the benefit of property that belonged to the common elements. The agreement in that case was inherently contrary to the provisions of the British Columbia condominium legislation. It was malum per se. In the immediate case, as I have already said there is nothing inherently illegal in a condominium corporation financing the purchase of equipment to be included in the common elements that it is to manage.

[39] Based on the evidence submitted on this motion for summary judgment, the $1.7 million loan was not ultra vires. The loan was infra vires, and if Dayspring performed the lawful loan improperly by failing to properly appropriate or by misappropriating loan monies, then Peel 668’s remedy is against Dayspring.

[40] Similarly, in my opinion, Peel 668’s allegations that that was a violation of the provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 that prohibit a declarant from making false and misleading statements and that there was inadequate and improper disclosure made to the unit purchasers do not make the $1.7 loan ultra vires. That there was inadequate disclosure of an infra vires loan would not nullify the loan. Although I obviously cannot and do not make any finding, the allegations against Dayspring and others about improper disclosure may be true, but Corpfinance is not the perpetrator of the wrongs and rather required that there be compliance with the Act.

[41] Peel 668 alleges that it has been the victim of oppressive or unfairly prejudicial conduct or conduct that unfairly disregards its interests. Once again, I cannot and do not make any finding apart from concluding that there is no genuine issue for trial that Corporate was not a party to any misconduct and its only role was a lender to the condominium project that sought compliance with the Act.

[42] The case of Thomson v. Quality Mechanical Service Inc., (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 234 (S.C.J.) provides an analogy. In that case, C. Campbell, J. granted a motion for summary judgment brought by the Royal Bank against a shareholder who sought a remedy against a corporation and against the Royal Bank under the oppression remedy provisions of the Ontario Business Corporation Act, which are comparable to the oppression remedy provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998. The shareholder had a legitimate complaint against the corporation for oppression but did not have a claim against the Royal Bank because the acts of oppressive conduct must be the acts of those who control the corporation. C Campbell, J. held that the oppression remedy was available against those responsible for the corporation but not against third parties, who had no role in the control or operation of the corporation.

[43] In the Thomson case, the Royal Bank had committed a wrong to the corporation and the oppression remedy was still not available. The position of Corpfinance is stronger in the immediate case because it was not a declarant under the Act and had no disclosure obligations to the unit holders and it was not a privy to any misconduct if any by the other defendants. If there has been non-compliance with the provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 then Corpfinance is also a victim in the sense that the non-compliance would be a breach of the loan agreement, which required compliance with the Act.

[44] This last comment brings me to Peel 668's reliance on equity and on its submission that Corpfinance knew or ought to have known that full and proper disclosure had not been made with respect to the loan as the grounds for relief against Corpfinance. In paragraphs 84 and 85 of its factum, Peel 668 states:

84. Courts are often faced with a situation wherein they must decide which one of two innocent parties is to bear the loss occasioned by a third. In this regard, the law has held that the loss should fall upon the party who could have prevented the loss through the exercise of reasonable care, or who has enabled the third party to occasion the loss.

85. A Court could find as between [Peel 668] and Corpfinance, it is Corpfinance who should bear any loss occasioned on the basis that;

(a) Corpfinance is a sophisticated commercial lender;

(b) Corpfinance was in a position to protect its interest unlike [Peel 668] who was vulnerable and had no party representing its interests;

(c) Corpfinance knew or ought to have known the inherent risks in lending money in this type of arrangement whereby a developer causes a condominium corporation to become liable under a loan which it had no involvement in the structure thereof; and

(d) Corpfinance's lack of due diligence in protecting its own interest under the Loan.

[45] With respect, once it is determined that the loan is infra vires, I do not see these submissions as the basis for equitable or other relief against Corpfinance. There must be some tether for equity's intervention, and a submission that equity should favour the weaker party is not a reason to deny Corpfinance's legal right to enforce its loan agreement.

[46] For these reasons I grant Corpfinance's motion for summary judgment. The parties may make written submissions with respect to costs within one month of the release of these Reasons for Decision.

On appeal from the order of Justice John D. Ground of the Superior Court of Justice dated January 20, 2006.

WEILER J.A.:

A. Overview

[1] Is the claim of York Condominium Corporation #382 (“York”) against the City of Toronto (the “City”) for an alleged act of negligence that took place over 15 years ago, but which it pleads that it only discovered in May 2004, barred under the Limitations Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B (the “Act”)?

[2] Previously, time for bringing a claim for general negligence did not begin to run until the claimant knew or ought to have known that he or she had a claim. This was known as “the discoverability rule”. See Kamloops (City) v. Nielson, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2; Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 147; Peixeiro v. Haberman (1995), 25 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.), aff’d [1997] 3 S.C.R. 549. The rule subjected a defendant to potential liability indefinitely. The current Act seeks to balance the right of claimants to sue with the right of defendants to have some certainty and finality in managing their affairs. Subject to certain exceptions that are not relevant to this appeal, the Act provides for a fifteen-year ultimate limitation period dating from the act or omission giving rise to a claim. Regard for this provision in isolation would automatically bar York’s claim. However, the transition provision in s. 24(5) Rule 1 states: “If the claim was not discovered before [January 1, 2004], the Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on [January 1, 2004].” As I would interpret this transition provision, if a claim is not discovered until after January 1, 2004, but the act or omission took place before that date, the ultimate limitation period of fifteen years starts to run as if the act or omission had taken place on January 1, 2004 and York’s claim is not barred.

B. The Facts and the Relevant Provisions of the Limitations Act

[3] In May 2004, York discovered that the condominium building's demising walls were not fire-rated in accordance with the Building Code. It brought an action in June 2005 against the condominium developer, Jay-M Holdings Limited, and the City, alleging the former was negligent in its construction of the building and the latter was negligent in its inspection of the building. The parties agree that the last act by the City with respect to its alleged negligence took place in February 1978.

[4] Pursuant to s. 4 of the Act, which came into force on January 1, 2004, the basic limitation period expires two years from the day on which the claim is discovered.^[1] York brought its claim within this time limit. However, the Act also contains a 15-year ultimate limitation period. Section 15 of the Act provides:

(1) Even if the limitation period established by any other section of this Act in respect of a claim has not expired, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim after the expiry of a limitation period established by this section.

(2) No proceeding shall be commenced in respect of any claim after the 15th anniversary of the day on which the act or omission on which the claim is based took place.

[5] Thus, pursuant to s. 15, if a negligent act or omission occurred on January 2, 2004, but remained undiscovered until January 6, 2019, no action could be brought although the basic limitation period of two years from the date of discovery had not expired.

[6] The City pleaded that on its face s. 15 barred York's action since the alleged negligent act took place over 27 years ago. The City then brought a motion under Rule 21 to strike York's claim. The motions judge ruled in favour of the City and struck York's claim as being statute-barred.

[7] York appeals the dismissal of its action against the City on the basis that the ultimate limitation period in s. 15 must be read in light of the Act's transition provision in s. 24(5) Rule 1 and that the motions judge erred in his interpretation of this provision.

[8] Section 24(5) provides:

If the former limitation^[2] period did not expire before the effective date and if a limitation period under this Act would apply were the claim based on an act or omission that took place on or after the effective date, the following rules apply:

1. If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.

The effective date of the Act is defined in s. 24(1) as January 1, 2004.

C. The Reasons of the Motions Judge

[9] The motions judge held:

- The wording of s. 24(5) is ambiguous. Able submissions on two conflicting interpretations of the transitional provisions was evidence of ambiguity when viewed with s. 15.
- Subsection 24(5) cannot be looked at in isolation. The structure and purpose of the legislation incorporates a balancing between the discovery principle and a cut-off date for bringing an action.
- All external sources cited to the court are consistent with an ultimate limitation period to counterbalance the codification of the discovery principle. No authorities on the interpretation of the ultimate limitation provision or the transitional provisions of the new Act were cited to the court.
- To interpret the transitional provisions as submitted by York could lead to an absurd result and absurd results are to be avoided whenever possible.
- Regard for the analogous limitations provisions of British Columbia and Alberta and the need to have regard for the policy considerations behind a statute of limitations leads to the conclusion that York's position must be rejected.

As a result of his interpretation of the Act, the motions judge dismissed the action as against the City.

D. Standard of Review

[10] The interpretation of section 24(5) of the Act is a question of law and thus review of the motions judge's decision is on a standard of correctness. See: Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235 at para. 8.

E. The Modern Approach to Statutory Interpretation

[11] The prevailing approach to statutory interpretation is that "the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament." See Elmer A. Driedger, The Construction of Statutes, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1983) at 87. This approach has been widely endorsed by the Supreme Court. See Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 at para. 26. The interpretive factors set out by Driedger, need not be canvassed separately in every case: Bell ExpressVu, supra, at para. 31.

[12] The different interpretations of a provision by counsel engaged in litigation are not an appropriate starting point from which to conclude that legislation is ambiguous. Bell ExpressVu, supra, at paras. 29- 30.

[13] The ordinary meaning of legislation is "the natural meaning which appears when the provision is simply read through". See Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 4th ed. (Markham, Ont.: Butterworths Canada, 2002) at 21, where Sullivan quotes Gonthier J. from Canadian Pacific Airlines v. Canadian Air Line Pilots Assn., [1993] 3 S.C.R. 724 at 735. Having determined the ordinary meaning, the court must go on to consider the context of the provision, the purpose and scheme of the legislation as well as the consequences of adopting the ordinary meaning and any other relevant indicators of legislative meaning. If, after undertaking this analysis, the words of the provision are reasonably capable of more than one meaning, a real ambiguity exists. Bell ExpressVu, supra, at paras 29- 30.

[14] The court must adopt an interpretation that best fulfills the objects of the legislation. Having regard to this broader context, the court may modify or reject the application of the presumption that favours an interpretation in accordance with the ordinary meaning. However, the interpretation adopted must be plausible in the sense that it is one that the words are reasonably capable of bearing.

[15] A statute, should, if possible, be construed so as to avoid any inconsistency between its different provisions. One way of reconciling an inconsistency is through the “implied exception” rule of statutory interpretation, which holds that a special provision prevails over a more general provision. See Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 4th ed. (Markham, Ont.: Butterworths, 2002) at 273.

F. Application to this Case

[16] The motions judge erred in concluding that simply because counsel had put forward two conflicting interpretations respecting the interpretation of the transitional provisions, s. 24(5) was ambiguous when viewed alongside the provisions of s. 15: Bell Expressvu, supra.

[17] To determine whether the legislation should be given its ordinary meaning, a contextual and purposive approach is required. The same approach is used to resolve a true ambiguity in legislation. While the motions judge undertook a contextual and purposive analysis, I conclude that his analysis was not correct. Rather, the adoption of a contextual and purposive approach leads me to conclude that the transition provisions postpone the starting date for the running of the ultimate limitation period to January 1, 2004.

[18] For the purposes of this appeal, I have grouped the discussion under two broad headings: a) Grammatical and Ordinary Sense, and b) Legislative and Broader Context.

a) Grammatical and Ordinary Sense

[19] For ease of reference I will repeat s. 24(5) Rule 1:

If the former limitation^[3] period did not expire before the effective date^[4] and if a limitation period under this Act would apply were the claim based on an act or omission that took place on or after the effective date, the following rules apply:

1. If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.

[20] The ordinary grammatical meaning of s. 24(5) Rule 1 is that where an act or omission occurred prior to the current Act coming into force, if the limitation period under the former Act had not expired, and the claim was discovered after the current Act came into force, the calculation of the fifteen-year ultimate limitation period will commence from January 1, 2004.

[21] Under the now-repealed Limitations Act, York had six years from the time of discovery of the omission to bring its claim. The limitation period had not expired under the former Limitations Act before the effective date of the current Act on January 1, 2004 because York had not discovered the alleged negligence by that date. If the act or omission had taken place after January 1, 2004, York would be subject to a limitation period under the current Act. That limitation period is “the second anniversary of the day on which the claim was discovered.” For the purposes of this motion, it is accepted that York did not discover its claim until after the effective date of the Act or until May 2004, and that it brought its claim within the two-year limitation period. Insofar as the ultimate limitation period is concerned, York submits that under Rule 1, the Act applies as if the negligent act or omission took place on January 1, 2004. Thus, the ultimate fifteen-year limitation period begins to run from January 1, 2004, not from the actual date of the negligent Act or omission as prescribed in s. 15.

[22] Rule 1 provides that, “If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.” The City submits that Rule 1 ought to mean that, if the claim was not discovered before the effective date, the Act applies. This interpretation gives no meaning to the concluding words of Rule 1, “as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.”

[23] It is certainly arguable that s. 15(1) is not in harmony with the transitional provision of s. 24(5) Rule 1. Again, section 15(1) states:

Even if the limitation period established by any other section of this Act in respect of a claim has not expired, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim after the expiry of a limitation period established by this section.

However, in keeping with the rule that, if possible, disharmony should be avoided, I would hold that disharmony can be avoided by treating s. 24(5) as a special provision that applies to the limited number of transitional situations and by treating s. 15(1) as a general provision.

[24] The City argues that because s. 24(5) does not specifically say that it applies despite s. 15, it cannot be read in the manner York submits. In support of its position, the City points to other sections of the Act where s. 15 is specifically made subject to another section. For example, s. 16(4) states that ss. 16 and 17 prevail over anything in s. 15. However, neither of those sections deals with a transitional context. Section 16 deals with general situations where there is no limitation period and s. 17 deals with environmental claims. These sections apply indefinitely for the foreseeable future until the Act is amended. Section 24(5) is transitory and the situations to which it applies will run their course. There would be little point in enacting this transition provision if it were not intended to apply to s. 15.

[25] Although the motions judge and this Court were not provided with any scholarly writing or educational material concerning the new Act, it does exist and supports the position I have taken. For example, John Lee, counsel for the Ministry of the Attorney General for Ontario, wrote an article entitled, “Developing a New Uniform Limitations Act: A survey of Canada’s Emerging Limitations Regimes” in Melissa Krishna, executive ed., and Jacob Ziegel et al., co-ordinating eds., The New Ontario Limitations Regime: Exposition and Analysis (Toronto: Ontario Bar Association, 2005) at 165 and an article entitled “An Overview of the Ontario Limitations Act, 2002” (2004) 28 Advocates’ Q. 29. In his articles (at 189 and 34, respectively) Lee discussed the meaning of s. 24(5) Rule 1. Lee’s interpretation of s. 24(5) Rule 1 is that if a claim is not discovered until after the Act’s effective date, but the act or omission took place before the effective date, “for purposes of calculating the ultimate limitations period, the period will commence from January 1, 2004.” This is precisely York’s position. In addition, an application of the facts of this case as answers to the questions derived from the flowchart of Rosemary Bocksa yields the same interpretation.^[51] See Ontario Limitations Manual, 3d ed., looseleaf (Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Canada, 2006) at Appendix-2.

[26] Driedger articulates the common-sense proposition that effect should be given to the ordinary meaning of a legislative provision unless there is a good reason not to do so. The court is therefore required to consider the purpose and scheme of the legislation, the consequences of adopting the ordinary meaning and all other relevant indicators of legislative meaning. In light of these additional considerations, the court may adopt an interpretation that modifies or rejects the ordinary meaning provided that the words can bear the proposed alternative meaning. The interpretation of the motions judge can be viewed as a marked departure from previous limitations act jurisprudence that when the provisions of a statute of limitations are in issue, “[they] should be liberally construed in favour of the individual whose right to sue for compensation is in question.” Papamonolopoulos v. Toronto (Board of Education) (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 1 at 7 (C.A.), aff’d, [1987] 1 S.C.R. v, 58 O.R. (2d) 528n. While an evolution respecting statutory construction has occurred in the past two decades, the broader principle, that access to justice should not be frustrated except in clear cases, has not changed and informs the legislative and broader context discussed below.

b) Legislative and Broader Context

[27] The Act is the culmination of several earlier attempts since the late 1960s to reform the law of limitations. In 1969, the Ontario Law Reform Commission (OLRC) called for a simplification of the law of limitations in its Report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission on Limitation of Actions (Toronto: Department of the Attorney General, 1969). The Attorney General released a discussion paper in 1977, comprising a draft bill, which largely borrowed from the OLRC report. See Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General, Discussion Paper on Proposed Limitations Act (Toronto: Ministry of the Attorney General, 1977). Much of the draft bill from 1977 was reflected in Bill 160 (An Act to revise the Limitations Act, 3rd Sess., 32nd Leg., Ontario), introduced in 1983, which did not proceed beyond first reading. Bill

160 would have introduced a knowledge requirement into the law of limitations. For certain actions, s. 10 of the Bill provided that the limitation period would not start to run until the plaintiff had knowledge of the identity of the defendant and knowledge of sufficient facts to indicate that he had a cause of action.

[28] In 1991, a consultation group produced a paper for the Attorney General on the proposed Limitations Act. See Limitations Act Consultation Group, Recommendations for a New Limitations Act: Report of the Limitations Act Consultation Group (Toronto: Ministry of the Attorney General, 1991). The consultation group recommended an ultimate limitation period of thirty years and, in exceptional cases, ten years. With respect to when to enact the shorter ultimate limitation period, at page 5 the consultation group asked the government to weigh, “the availability of evidence to the defendant, the cost of maintaining records, and the cost and availability of insurance against the likelihood of meritorious claims after ten years”. Under the heading “Transition” in the consultation paper, the following is found:

The new scheme would apply to any act or omission that occurred before the effective date of the new legislation provided that the old limitation period had not expired. This will result in the extension of some limitation periods to a maximum of two years and the shortening of others to two years if a longer period would otherwise have applied.

Under the heading, “Summary of recommendations for a New Limitations Act”, recommendation 27 suggests that where the application of the new act would shorten the limitation period that would otherwise apply, the limitation period should be the shorter of the limitation period under the then existing legislation or two years from the coming into force of the new legislation. No mention is made of the ultimate limitation period in that recommendation.

[29] The consultation paper led to the introduction of Bill 99 (An Act to revise the Limitations Act, 2nd Sess., 35th Leg., Ontario) in 1992. As recommended in the consultation paper, Bill 99 contained a basic two-year limitation period, codification of the discoverability principle and a thirty-year limitation period with a shorter ultimate limitation period of ten years for some cases. As with Bill 160, Bill 99 did not go beyond first reading.

[30] The next proposed reform came in 2000, with the introduction of Bill 163 (An Act to revise the Limitations Act, 1st Sess., 37th Leg., Ontario), which contained a codification of the discoverability principle but which also introduced a general fifteen-year ultimate limitation period. After prorogation of the legislature, Bill 163 was reintroduced in 2001 as Bill 10 (An Act to revise the Limitations Act, 2nd Sess., 37th Leg., Ontario) and was later reintroduced in 2002 as Schedule B to Bill 213, the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002 (3rd Sess., 37th Leg., Ontario). Bill 213 was an omnibus bill that was introduced on November 26, 2002 and never went to committee for debate. The Bill went through second and third readings with limited debate in the legislature and received Royal Assent as the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 24, on December 9.

[31] An explanatory note respecting the ultimate limitation period contained in Bill 213 simply confirms that the Act establishes an ultimate limitation period of fifteen years. The limitation period runs from the day of the act or omission irrespective of when the claim is discovered. The note adds that the ultimate limitation period does not run in certain circumstances. With respect to s. 24, the note says, “[t]he Act contains a number of general provisions dealing with technical matters (sections 18 to 24)” and “[d]etailed rules are provided for the treatment of claims that arose before the coming into force of the new Act (section 24)”. The explanatory note does not form part of the law and, since it does not discuss the effect of the transition rules, does not assist in the interpretation of s. 24(5) Rule 1.

[32] The purpose of the Act as a whole is to balance the right to access to justice by bringing a lawsuit with the right to certainty and finality in the organization of one’s affairs. The purpose of the ultimate limitation period is to balance the concern for plaintiffs with undiscovered causes of action with the need to prevent the indefinite postponement of a limitation period and the associated costs relating to record-keeping and insurance resulting from continuous exposure to liability. While the motions judge considered the purpose of the Act and of the ultimate limitation period, he did not consider the purpose of the transitional provisions. The purpose of transitional provisions in general is to provide when a new Act applies and when it does not apply, or to provide for how it applies to situations that arose before the coming into force of the Act that are affected by its passage.

[33] From the legislative history of the Act one can deduce that the time chosen for the ultimate limitation period, fifteen years, represented a compromise between the thirty-year period proposed for most claims and the ten-year period proposed for others. Interestingly, in Hansard, the Attorney General at the time the Act was passed also suggested that the fifteen-year period was chosen as a compromise, but referred to it as a compromise between ten-year and twenty-year periods that exist for ultimate limitation periods in other jurisdictions. See Ontario, Legislative Assembly, Official Report of Debates (Hansard), Vol. 5, No. 65 (2 December 2002) at 1550 (David Young). The transitional provision furthers that compromise approach. Although the common law rule of discoverability is modified by s. 15, section 24(5) operates to mitigate the effect of the new legislation on pre-existing but undiscovered claims.

[34] The motions judge looked to the interpretation of the ultimate limitation period and its relationship to the discoverability principle in the British Columbia Limitation Act passed in 1975, and the decision of Armstrong v. West Vancouver (District) (2003), 223 D.L.R. (4th) 102 (B.C.C.A.). That case held that the ultimate limitation period of thirty years applied from the date the damage occurred. The ultimate limitation period did not run from the date the evidence of the negligence in issue was discovered. Further, in 410727 B.C. Ltd. v. Dayhu Investments Ltd. (2004), 241 D.L.R. (4th) 467 (B.C.C.A.), the court confirmed that the ultimate thirty-year limitation period began to run from the time that the action accrued, whether or not the cause of action was discoverable.

[35] The motions judge accepted the City's submission that the same interpretation the courts arrived at in Armstrong and Dayhu should be given to section 24(5) Rule 1 here. However, the City's submission ignores the fact that, while the wording of the ultimate limitation provision in s. 15 of Ontario's legislation is similar to the British Columbia statute, the wording of Ontario's transition provisions in s. 24 is significantly different.

[36] The transition provision in the British Columbia statute, s. 14, provides, that if the cause of action arose before the new Limitations Act comes into force and the limitation period provided under the former legislation is longer than the limitation period provided under the new Act, the limitation period expires two years after the new Act comes into force or pursuant to the limitation period under the former Act, whichever is shorter. The Alberta Limitations Act, R.S.A. 2000 c. L-12, which came into force on March 1, 1999, contains a similarly worded transition provision and a ten-year ultimate limitation period. In Bowes v. Edmonton (City) (2005), 386 A.R. 1 (Q.B.), Clarkson J. concluded that the ultimate limitation period was intended to have retrospective effect and, as a result, the plaintiffs' action against the City of Edmonton was statute-barred because the City's negligent act of issuing building permits to the plaintiffs, notwithstanding the geological reports it had concerning the instability of the land on which their homes were built, occurred more than ten years before the land collapsed in 1999 (after the new Act had come into force).

[37] Neither the British Columbia statute nor the Alberta statute has a transition provision that provides, as does s. 24(5) Rule 1, that "If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date." If the claim was not discovered before the coming into force of the Act, the Act in effect triggers the start of the new fifteen-year ultimate limitation period. Such a provision does not seem to me to do violence to the intention of the legislators or to the policy of the Act.

[38] The motions judge was also concerned that interpreting the transitional provision as submitted by York would lead to an absurd result. As an example, he stated that a proceeding based on an act that occurred in 1978 but discovered in 2003 could not proceed, whereas a proceeding based on the same 1978 act discovered in 2018 could proceed. The example given by the motions judge was flawed. If the 1978 act was discovered in 2003, the claim was discovered before the effective date of the new Act on January 1, 2004, and, pursuant to s. 24(5) Rule 2, the limitation period under the former Act would apply. That limitation period would ordinarily be six years. Thus, the claimant would have until 2009 to bring a claim.

[39] In this case, the effect of my proposed interpretation is to allow a twenty-seven-year-old claim that was not discovered until shortly after the new Act had come into force to go forward. This time frame is within thirty years from the date of the act or omission, the ultimate time recommended in the Ontario consultation paper for most claims, as well as that contained in the earlier Bill, and the same time as provided in the B.C. legislation for all claims. It cannot be said to be an absurd result particularly when one recalls that, prior to the passage of the new Act, there was unlimited liability for as-yet-undiscovered claims (i.e. there was no ultimate limitation period). In moving to a new regime with an ultimate limitations period, s. 24(5) Rule 1 effectively creates a 15-year transition period for undiscovered claims. Although such a transition provision may be regarded as generous, it is part of the Act's attempt to ensure that, with respect to pre-existing situations, access to justice be preserved while limiting liability on a go-forward basis.

[40] In view of my conclusion I need not address York's argument on retrospectivity. I also need not comment on the effect of any subsequent amendment.

G. Disposition

[41] For the reasons given, I would allow the appeal and set aside the order dismissing York's action.

H. Costs

[42] The parties may make submissions as to costs. Counsel for York shall deliver a bill of costs together with any submissions, in writing, in support of any requested order for costs within seven (7) days of the release of the decision. Counsel for the City may deliver a response, in writing, within fourteen (14) days of the release of the decision. Counsel for York may deliver a brief reply within seventeen (17) days of the release of the decision. The submissions of the parties should be delivered to the attention of the Senior Legal Officer of the court.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Introduction

[1] On January 8, 2005, the plaintiff and her husband went away on vacation. Before they left, they turned off the shut-off valve on the pipe below the kitchen sink in their condominium unit 811 (“811”), which all unit owners had been asked to do before leaving on vacation. On January 10, 2005, the superintendent of the building was told that water was leaking into condominium unit 712 (“712”) which was located one floor beneath 811. It was determined that the leak emanated from 811 and specifically from the pipe in 811 on which the shut-off valve was mounted.

[2] The defendant arranged for the repair of the damages sustained to 712 and replacement of the valve in 811 from which the leak had originated. When the plaintiff was charged for these amounts, she claimed that she was not responsible for them and that they were to be paid by all of the condominium owners in the building as a common expense. Ultimately, the defendant registered a Certificate of Lien (the “Lien”) against 811 under the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c.19 (the “Act”). The plaintiff is seeking a declaration that the Lien is invalid, that it be discharged, and that the defendant be restrained from enforcing the Lien.

[3] This case raises several issues. At the simplest level, the question is who should bear the responsibility for the repair costs for the damage arising from the leak in 811- the owner of 811 alone or all of the condominium owners in the building together as a common expense?

[4] For the reasons that follow, I find that on the particular facts of this case, the plaintiff should not have been charged for these amounts and accordingly the defendant was not entitled to register the Lien, the Lien is invalid and should be discharged, and the defendant is to be restrained from enforcing its rights under the Lien.

The Shut-Off Valve

[5] The defendant acknowledges that it posted notices to owners in the building requesting them to turn off the shut-off valve in their units before leaving on vacation. This was intended to minimize the risk of water leakage in the building while people are away.

[6] The plaintiff's husband turned off the valve the day they left, January 8, 2005. He testified that he reached under the kitchen sink, turned the valve a few times, did not notice anything amiss, and then they left on vacation.

[7] The defendant states that it was the responsibility of the plaintiff to maintain the valve in good repair and that unit owners are required to do so under Article V, clause 1, of the declaration of the condominium corporation.

[8] However, there are practical problems here. The defendant's plumber, Mr. Melanson, testified that these types of valves (EMCO valves) can start to drip when they are being opened or closed. There is an O-ring in the valve which can become brittle and drip if it is disturbed. It is the wear and tear of opening and closing these valves that causes them to drip - the likelihood of leakage is much less when they are not being touched.

[9] This puts the condominium owners in a bind. They are asked by the corporation to turn off the valves when they leave, but this is precisely what increases the risk that the valves will start to drip.

[10] Mr. Melanson further acknowledged that it is difficult to know when these valves need to be replaced – you would not know unless you actually saw them leaking. The only way to avoid this situation would be to conduct preventative maintenance. However, he conceded that this would be impractical for an owner to do that, since the pipes in approximately 10 units in the building would have to be turned off in order to do the work. The replacement would have to be done by a licensed plumber and the coordination of the units involved would have to be done by the condominium corporation.

[11] Mr. Melanson also stated that if the valve was going to leak it would occur right after it was turned off. This was disputed by Mr. Brown, a plumber who testified for the plaintiff and who stated that a leak might not be observed until some time afterwards. The defendant is suggesting that Mr. Zafir should have seen the leak right away – or should have looked for it to occur as soon as he turned off the valve. This would have required Mr. Zafir to look under the sink cupboard since the leak would not otherwise have been visible.

[12] Clearly if there had been a leak right away, Mr. Zafir would not have left the unit. Whether he should have looked for it will be addressed below.

Act or Omission

[13] The defendant states that the water leakage was caused by an “act or omission” of the plaintiff, being one or more of the following: (a) the act of the plaintiff's husband in turning off the valve; (b) the plaintiff's husband not observing or looking to see if there was a leak once the valve was turned off; (c) the plaintiff failing to keep the valve in a good state of repair; or (d) the plaintiff failing to provide a key to the defendant which would provide immediate access to 811 once the leaked was discovered.

[14] The concept of an “act or omission” is relevant to this case as the wording appears in Section 105 of the Act and in the defendant's bylaws, as follows:

Section 105(2): “If an owner, a lessee of an owner or a person residing in the owner's unit with the permission or knowledge of the owner through an act or omission causes damage to the owner's unit, the amount that is the lesser of the cost of repairing the damage and the deductible limit of the insurance policy obtained by the corporation shall be added to the common expenses payable for the owner's unit".

Section 105(3): "The corporation may pass a by-law to extend the circumstances in subsection (2) under which an amount shall be added to the common expenses payable for an owner's unit if the damage to the unit was not caused by an act or omission of the corporation or its directors, officers, agents or employees".

Bylaw No. 10: Pursuant to Section 105(3), the defendant corporation unit passed Bylaw No. 10 ("Bylaw 10") which in Article III entitles the defendant to claim from an owner losses (up to the insurance deductible) for damage caused to the common elements or another unit, "where the damage is caused by the act or omission of an owner...". Bylaw 10 states that "Without limitation, "act or omission" shall be deemed to include failure of the owner to properly maintain and repair the unit and improvements...".

Bylaw No. 1: In Article XIII of Bylaw No. 1, the defendant corporation also has an indemnity from each owner for losses and damages "resulting from or caused by an act or omission of such owner".

[emphasis added]

[15] The interplay of these sections of the statute and bylaws, according to the defendant, entitles the defendant to add the cost of the repairs arising from the damage caused by the leak, up to the limit of the insurance deductible, to the common expenses payable by the owner of 811. However, it is clear from the language above that the defendant's position can only come into play if the damage arose from the "act or omission" of the plaintiff.

[16] The plaintiff's counsel argued that the term "act or omission" imports an element of negligence, relying on the case of Reilly v. Freedom Gardens Condominium Assn, [2001] A.J. No. 1703 (Q.B.), and that the rule of contra proferentum applies to preclude the defendant from relying on a strict liability interpretation of the bylaws. I note, however, that the Reilly case states in paragraph 34 only that these words are "usually descriptive of a tort action", and "generally indicate negligence". I do not take the case as authority for the proposition that these words must require negligence.

[17] The defendant distinguished the Reilly case, supra, on the basis that it was decided in Alberta under a different statute than the Act. Further, the defendant argued that the "without limitation" words in Article III of Bylaw 10 qualify the "act or omission" language in that Article and that those latter words should therefore be read more expansively.

[18] I am not persuaded by the plaintiff that the term "act or omission" necessarily requires a finding of negligence. If the drafters of the Act and the defendant's bylaws had intended the higher standard of negligence to apply, they could have said so and referred to "negligent acts or omissions".

[19] On the other hand, the language of the Act and the bylaws is not strict liability language either. Strict liability language would have provided that the owner is responsible for any damage arising from its unit, however caused.

[20] As such, the wording "act or omission" appears to be more favourable to an owner than if strict liability language had been used. In my opinion, whether damage occurs from an "act or omission” of an owner in any particular case will depend on the facts of the case at hand.

[21] In this case, I find it difficult to see how the defendant can argue that the “act or omission” for which the plaintiff is responsible is the very act that the defendant required the plaintiff to take. The defendant posted notices requesting the owners to turn off their shutoff valves before leaving on vacation. If this involved a risk that the valves would leak, shouldn’t the defendant have alerted the owners of this risk? The defendants could have:

(a) told the owners that there was a risk of leaking by shutting off these valves. The owners could then have assessed the risk of doing so before turning them off;

(b) advised the owners what procedure to take in turning off the valves – for example, looking under the cupboard and watching for a certain period of time to see if there was a leak (assuming Mr. Melanson is right that the leak would have appeared right away). It is not reasonable to think that a layperson would check for leaks underneath a kitchen sink after shutting off a valve without being told to do so;

(c) coordinated regular inspection programs for shutoff valves in the units and regular replacements of older valves that might be more likely to leak. This is particularly applicable since only licensed plumbers can do this work and it involves many units in the building, as described above; and/or

(d) advised the owners that they needed to have their valves inspected and repaired regularly.

[22] Under the circumstances, I find that the plaintiff’s turning off the valve or not waiting to see if a leak developed cannot be construed as an “act or omission” causing the damage for which the plaintiff should be held responsible.

[23] Whether the failure of the plaintiff to repair the valve is an “act or omission” is another question. Clearly, Bylaw 10 provides that failure to properly maintain and repair the unit is an “act or omission”. However, given the evidence of Mr. Melanson that these valves are less likely to leak if they are not touched than if they are turned on and off, and since the defendant was the one requiring that they be shut off, the valve may not have required repair but for the defendant’s requirements. It would be inequitable to hold the plaintiff responsible for repairing the valve when by Mr. Melanson’s own testimony, a leak was more likely to occur due to turning on and off the valve – which was the defendant’s requirement.

[24] Further, since preventative maintenance could only be done with the coordination of many other units, then even if the plaintiff had wanted to do so, the defendant would have had to arrange the maintenance. I have trouble holding a unit owner responsible for failure to do preventative work which it could not possibly arrange on its own.

[25] The defendant argued that the delay by the plaintiff in providing access to 811 was an “act or omission” since it took some additional time for the key to the 811 to be brought to the building and the plaintiff’s daughter prevented entry to 811 during that time. It is not entirely clear how much time elapsed before the plumber arrived at the building and entry to 811 was obtained, although it appears to have been in the range of 2 hours.

[26] However, the evidence of Ms. Schlosser, the superintendent for the building, was that the significant water damage to 712 had already occurred by the time she entered 712 on the morning of January 10th – for example, the floors were soaked and had started to buckle and lift. There was no evidence that any additional damage occurred to 712 during the period of time that keys were being obtained for entry to 811.

[27] While it may be that the plaintiff should have provided keys and entry to her unit to the defendant, I do not find that this is an “act or omission” that caused the damage in this case.

[28] Since any claim by the defendant supporting the Lien, whether under Bylaw 10 or the indemnification clause X111 in Bylaw number 1, is predicated on there being an “act or omission” of the plaintiff causing damage, I find that there is nothing to support the Lien registered by the defendant.

Validity of Bylaw 10

[29] Given my conclusion that there was no act or omission for which the plaintiff should be responsible in this case, I do not need to decide whether the enactment of Bylaw 10 pursuant to Section 105(3) of the Act was valid. The plaintiff had challenged the validity of Bylaw 10 which entitles the defendant to add the cost of repairs (up to the deductible) as a common expense payable by an owner where there is damage to another unit or common elements caused by the act or omission of the owner.

[30] I understand that there is conflicting commentary, but no caselaw, on whether Section 105(3) permits a condominium corporation to extend the circumstances under which the lesser of repair costs and the insurance deductible can be charged back to an owner as a common expense for damage caused to other units or common elements, or whether that Section merely permits the condominium corporation to extend the circumstances under which the owner is responsible for repair costs or the deductible arising from damage to its own unit.

[31] While this case does not turn on this issue in light of my analysis above, I do think there is a good argument to be made that Section 105(3) is intended to enable a condominium corporation to establish a regime whereby owners can be held responsible for damages (up to the insurance deductible) to other units and common elements, even where the owner’s unit has not been damaged. This would appear to be consistent with the case of Stevens v. Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 60, [1998] O.J. No. 5843 (Div. Ct), which was decided before the new Act came into force and recognized the desirability for condominium owners to be able to apportion liability for the insurance deductibles by making provision to that effect in the declaration, bylaws or rules of the condominium corporation.

[32] I also prefer the reasoning in the commentaries provided by the defendant (Harry Herskowitz and Mark F. Freedman, Condominiums in Ontario: A Practical Analysis of the New Legislation; J. Robert Gardiner, The Condominium Act, 1998: A Practical Guide) that a more liberal interpretation of Section 105(3) should be allowed - which would enable a condominium corporation to customize a program of allocating responsibility among owners for insurance deductibles – as it would promote fairness among the unit owners and address the unique and individual requirements of each condominium corporation.

[33] I note the qualifying language at the end of Section 105(3) which restricts the ability of the corporation under a bylaw to add amounts to the owner’s common expenses - it can only do so “if the damage to the unit was not caused by the corporation or its directors, officers, agent or employees”. The plaintiff states that these words require that there be damage to the owner’s unit before the circumstances can be extended.

[34] Again, I prefer the reasoning of Messrs. Herskowitz and Freedman that this language should not be seen as establishing a prerequisite that the damage be caused to the owner’s unit before there can be a chargeback to the owner. These words appear only to restrict the corporation from charging an owner for any damage caused by the corporation and its directors, officers, agents or employees, and refer back to the damage first described in Section 105(2) - presumably the owner should never be held responsible for damage caused by the corporation et al. However, it does not necessarily follow that there must be damage to the owner's unit before the owner is made responsible for the additional common expenses arising from damage to another unit or common elements.

Other Claims by the Parties

[35] The plaintiff had a claim for damages but withdrew this claim at the commencement of the trial.

[36] The plaintiff further seeks an order under Section 135 of the Act that the conduct of the defendant is oppressive and unfairly prejudicial towards the plaintiff, and unfairly disregards the interest of the plaintiff. The plaintiff has led no evidence on this point. While I have concluded that the registration of the Lien by the defendant may not have been well founded, the higher standard of oppression has not been made out in this case.

[37] The defendant submitted that this action should be stayed and the plaintiff was required to exhaust the mediation and arbitration proceedings of the Act. There was no evidence that the defendant suggested proceeding in this fashion. Further, since the defendant was the one that initiated this by registering the Lien, I see no reason that the plaintiff needed to submit to mediation or arbitration - she was certainly within her rights to pursue this case through legal action.

Decision

[38] For the reasons set forth above, Judgment is granted to the plaintiff as follows:

(a) the Lien registered against 811 is declared to be invalid;

(b) the defendant is ordered to discharge the Lien forthwith; and

(c) the defendant is restrained from taking any steps to enforce the Lien.

[39] If the parties are unable to agree upon costs, I will receive written submissions which are to be no longer than 3 pages, double spaced, per party. The plaintiff's submissions are to be received by no later than March 5th and the defendant's by no later than March 12th.

ENDORSEMENT

BY THE COURT:

[1] The condominium corporations appeal to the Divisional Court from the order of the Licence Appeal Tribunal, dated November 28, 2002, disallowing their claims.

[2] The appellants submit that the Tribunal erred by failing to hold that they are entitled to enforce the warranty claims against the Ontario New Home Warranty Program, despite the releases they executed with the builder, Concord Square Limited.

[3] The appellants also raise issues with respect to the Tribunal's interpretation of the releases, the May 28, 1998 letter signed by the builder, and issue estoppel. They submit, however, that if the releases are enforceable, there is no need for this Court to deal with the other issues.

[4] The parties concede that the claim was made within the two-year common element warranty period.

[5] The appellants submit that in Mandos v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program, [1995] O.J. No. 3647, the Court of Appeal determined that warranties within the meaning of s. 13(1) of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.O-31 continue in force, irrespective of any agreement by the parties to the contrary.

[6] The oral endorsement of the Court of Appeal in Mandos is as follows:

The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O-31 is remedial legislation and should be given a fair and liberal interpretation. Subsection 13(6) of the Act is a difficult subsection to construe. However, we believe that the interpretation given to it by counsel for the respondents is a proper one, i.e., that the warranties contained in s. 13(1) continue in force, irrespective of any agreement by the parties to the contrary. This interpretation, in our opinion, achieves a fair and just result. The Corporation is desirous that builders and owners should settle their differences, and s. 13(1) of the Regulations contemplates that if such a settlement is made, it will not affect the Corporation's rights of subrogation. When a mutual release is executed between an owner and a builder, it is quite possible, as in the present case, that there may be defects which could not be discovered by reasonable inspection. If it is the intention of the legislature that a release should be a bar to any action by an owner for breach of the warranties in s. 13(1), then, in our opinion, the legislation should clearly so provide and owners should be warned of the dangers of entering into a release.

For these reasons, the appeal will be dismissed. The costs of the respondents will be fixed at $4,000.

[7] The appellants assert that in Mandos, the Court was interpreting the meaning of the statute and any factual differences between that case and the present case are irrelevant.

[8] We respectfully disagree. In its decision, the Court refers to the possibility that there may be defects, as was the case with Mr. and Mrs. Mandos, which were not discoverable at the time the releases were executed. In Mandos, a settlement was made with an owner by a contractor, not in pursuit of a warranty claim, but in the context of the settlement of a construction lien debt action. The release was executed before a warranty claim was made and before the expiration of the statutory warranties prescribed by the Act.

[9] The situation here is significantly different. The Program was advised of the warranties raised by the claim based upon a detailed engineering report and within the limitation period. Discussions followed between the builder and the appellants concerning repairs. Ten months after the claim was filed, the appellants and the builder entered into a letter of understanding where the issue of the releases was addressed.

[10] Several months later, the releases were executed by sophisticated and informed members of the corporations' boards, in exchange for financial consideration and the remedying of deficiencies. They were advised throughout by their solicitor, who participated in the drafting of the releases. We conclude, therefore, that s. 13(6) of the Act does not apply in this case.

[11] We agree with the comments of the Tribunal in Darling (Re), [1994] O.C.R.A.T.D. No. 5 at para. 27:

The facts in the case of Mr. Darling are exactly the opposite. He knew his rights, had received all required documentation, and was paid a substantial amount to satisfy his claim. If this Tribunal were to find that the Mandos case holds that under Section 13(6) of the Act, parties may not pursue amicable settlements which included waiving any further rights under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, the unacceptable result would be that every single dispute between a homeowner and builder would have to [be] resolved by this Tribunal. It goes without saying that if parties could [not] reach settlements whereby one party is indemnified and the other party receives a Release, that [sic] no amicable settlements would be possible. The whole thrust of our judicial process, however, is one which allows the parties to freely settle disputes where they can. Were it to be otherwise, every man, woman and child in Canada would have to be a judge to settle all the disputes that arose. That plainly is not the intention of Mandos and of the Act. The Act itself speaks often of settlements as something to be encouraged.

[12] As the statute is consumer protection legislation, one of its aims is to reduce the burden of litigation on the consumer by providing a quick, summary procedure for resolving warranty claims at less expense than litigation.

[13] The overarching goal of the Act is to encourage the resolution of disputes and to streamline the process for achieving such resolution. Discussions leading to the settlements of claims are an inherent part of that process.

[14] It would, therefore, be contrary to the purposes of the Act to construe s. 13(6) as barring settlements by denying effect to the releases that form an essential part of settlement agreements.

[15] There is no issue that the statutory granting of the warranties themselves cannot be waived. There is nothing in the legislative scheme created by the Act, however, that limits the ability of a vendor and a warranty claimant from settling a properly filed warranty claim in exchange for a release and such a release should be enforceable, unless it would be unconscionable due to the existence of some vitiating factor.

[16] Accordingly, we find that the decision of the Tribunal as to the enforceability of the warranty claims against the Program was correct. In view of this finding, it is not necessary for us to deal with the other issues raised by the appellants.

[17] The appeal is dismissed with costs fixed at $15,000 payable to the Program and $15,000 payable to Concord Square Limited, inclusive of disbursements and GST.

Heard: March 10, 2005

On appeal from the order of Justice J.L. Lax of the Superior Court of Justice dated August 16, 2004: [2004] O.J. No. 3360.

DOHERTY J.A.:

[1] This appeal raises a question of statutory interpretation of first impression. Section 134(5) of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 (the “Act”) provides:

If a corporation obtains an award of damages or costs in an order made against an owner or occupier of a unit, the damages or costs, together with any additional actual costs to the corporation in obtaining the order, shall be added to the common expenses for the unit and the corporation may specify a time for payment by the owner of the unit [emphasis added].

[2] The focus of the appeal is the words:

Any additional actual costs to the corporation in obtaining the order.

[3] The appellant, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1385 (“MTCC”), operates a 189 unit residential condominium. The respondent, Skyline Executive Properties Inc. (“Skyline”), owns or manages numerous units in the condominium. MTCC and Skyline have been involved in a longstanding dispute over Skyline’s use of its units. MTCC claimed that Skyline rented out its units on a short-term basis and operated a hotel-like business in contravention of the condominium Declaration and the rules of the condominium.

[4] In December 2002, MTCC obtained a judgment from Hoillet J. of the Superior Court declaring that Skyline was in breach of the condominium Declaration and the rules of the condominium: [2002] O.J. No. 5117. The judgment also required Skyline to comply with the Declaration and the rules. This court affirmed that judgment in December 2003, although it varied the cost order made against Skyline: [2003] O.J. No. 5116.

[5] Early in 2004, MTCC advised Skyline that pursuant to s. 134(5) of the Act, MTCC had added about $205,000 to the common expenses of the units owned or managed by Skyline. MTCC placed a lien in that amount on the units pursuant to s. 85(1) of the Act. MTCC advised Skyline that if payment was not forthcoming, it would institute power of sale proceedings.

[6] Skyline brought a motion for a declaration that the lien was invalid and for an order requiring MTCC to discharge the lien. Skyline contended that it had paid the costs ordered against it in the proceedings in the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal, and that none of the amounts liened by MTCC were additional actual costs incurred by MTCC in obtaining the judgment from Hoillet J.

[7] The motion judge declared the lien invalid and ordered it discharged. In her reasons she held that the phrase “additional actual costs ... in obtaining the order” in s. 134(5) of the Act did not include:

costs beyond assessed costs for any legal work for which the court did, or could have awarded costs to MTCC pursuant to the costs grid in the Rules of Civil Procedure; costs incurred in responding to an appeal from the order;

costs expended on the enforcement of the order; costs expended on legal matters unrelated to the obtaining of the order; and administrative and managerial costs that MTCC had failed to demonstrate were “additional” costs incurred in “obtaining the order”.

[8] I would allow the appeal. My interpretation of s. 134(5) differs from that of the motion judge in two respects. First, I think s. 134(5) speaks separately to “an award of costs” on the one hand, and “additional actual costs” on the other hand. “An award of costs” refers to the costs that the court orders one litigant to pay to another litigant. “Additional actual costs” can encompass those legal costs owing as between the client and its own lawyer beyond the costs that the court had ordered paid by an opposing party. To the extent that the legal bills owed by MTCC to its own lawyers exceeded the costs awarded against Skyline, MTCC could properly add those amounts to the common expenses of the Skyline units as long as MTCC could demonstrate that those additional legal costs were incurred in obtaining the compliance order.

[9] I also do not agree that the costs associated with the defence of a compliance order from attack on appeal are not costs associated with “obtaining the order”. The phrase “obtaining the order” should be read as including the maintaining of that order on appeal.

[10] I do agree, however, with the motion judge that the enforcement of a compliance order is properly distinguished from the obtaining of that order and that costs incurred in the enforcement of a compliance order are not covered by s. 134(5). I also agree with the motion judge that costs that are not related to the obtaining of the compliance order, but instead relate to other legal matters involving the same units, cannot be added to the common expenses under s. 134(5). Lastly, I agree with the motion judge that while administrative or managerial expenses could potentially be captured by s. 134(5), MTCC failed to demonstrate that the claimed administrative and managerial expenses were “additional actual costs” that were incurred in “obtaining the order”.

II

The Procedural History

[11] The condominium developer turned over control of the condominium corporation to the elected board of directors in September 2001. At that time, Skyline owned or managed 54 of the 189 units. Skyline rented out fully furnished and serviced units on a short-term basis. Some of the rentals were for the weekend, others for the week, and still others for a month or longer. MTCC claimed that Skyline's operation contravened Article III(1)(a) of the condominium Declaration, which provided that units should be used only as private single family residences. In March 2002, the board of directors passed a rule prohibiting commercial and transient use of the units, and specifically prohibiting leases for less than six months. That rule, referred to as Rule E, reflected concerns expressed by the condominium board and many unit owners that Skyline's business compromised building security and undermined attempts to develop a sense of community within the condominium.

[12] In May 2002, Skyline commenced an application in the Superior Court seeking, among other things, an interlocutory injunction to prevent the enforcement of Rule E. The motion for an interlocutory injunction was refused. Skyline continued to acquire ownership or control of units in the condominium and initiated attempts to force a meeting of the unit holders for the purpose of repealing Rule E.

[13] MTCC brought a counter application under s. 134(1) of the Act in October 2002, seeking an order directing Skyline to comply with the condominium Declaration and rules. By this date, Skyline owned or controlled about 94 units. MTCC was successful on the counter application. By judgment dated December 20, 2002, Hoillet J. upheld the validity of Rule E, and declared that the rental of units for commercial and/or transient use breached that rule and also breached the condominium Declaration. He further prohibited Skyline from leasing or renting the units for commercial and/or transient use and appointed an administrator under s. 131 of the Act to enforce his judgment.

[14] Hoillet J. ordered costs of the application to MTCC on a substantial indemnity basis and subsequently fixed those costs at $58,000.00.

[15] Skyline appealed. By endorsement dated December 12, 2003, this court dismissed the appeal except as it related to costs. The court varied the costs order and directed that MTCC should have its costs assessed on a partial indemnity basis. In June 2004, an assessment officer fixed those costs at $38,000.00.

[16] This court awarded costs of the appeal to MTCC in the amount of $10,000.00.

[17] Skyline has paid the $38,000.00 assessed as the costs of the proceedings before Hoillet J., and the $10,000.00 awarded as costs by this court.

[18] In February 2004, MTCC advised Skyline that it would add all additional costs "incurred in this enforcement process" to the common expenses of all of the units owned or managed by Skyline. MTCC took the position that the additional costs began in September 2001 with the election of the condominium board of directors and continued through until the order of the Court of Appeal in December 2003.

[19] On April 12, 2004, MTCC advised Skyline that it had registered a lien against all of the Skyline units in the amount of some $205,000.00, and that if the funds were not promptly paid, MTCC would commence power of sale proceedings.

[20] In response to inquiries by Skyline, MTCC provided the following break down of the amount claimed:

Mr. Arnold's legal fees – $108,524.00;

Mr. Elia's legal fees – $41,164.59;

other legal costs – $11,391.74; administrative costs – $20,502.22; and managerial services – $28,167.00.

[21] Mr. Arnold and others in his firm acted for MTCC in its dispute with Skyline. Accounts submitted by Mr. Arnold totalled $147,102.00. MTCC deducted the amount which it said Skyline had paid by way of costs ($38,578.00), yielding a net amount owing of $108,524.00. Mr. Arnold's accounts for work done prior to the judgment of Hoillet J. in December 2002 totalled $61,991.00. Accounts submitted by him for work done after the judgment was obtained totalled $72,388.00.^{1 [1]}

[22] Mr. Elia did solicitor's work for MTCC and assisted Mr. Arnold in the dispute with Skyline. Mr. Elia's accounts that were provided to support the claim of $41,164.59 covered work done between December 1, 2001 and November 30, 2003. Accounts totalling about $30,000.00 referred to work done after the judgment was obtained from Hoillet J. in December 2002.

[23] The "other legal costs" totalling $11,391.74 referred to costs arising out of three legal matters, and costs paid to the administrator appointed under the judgment of Hoilet J. The three identified legal matters were distinct from and had no connection with MTCC's efforts to obtain the compliance order under s. 134(1). For example, one of those matters involved a trademark issue. The judgment of Hoilet J. required MTCC to pay the administrator's fees.

[24] The $20,052.22 described as administrative costs consisted of the costs arising out of conducting certain unit owners' meetings, as well as printing, telephone, mailing and courier costs. The amount also included borrowing costs arising out of a loan that MTCC claimed was necessitated by the ongoing dispute with Skyline.

[25] The managerial services totalling $28,167.00 referred to work done by two employees of the property management company employed by MTCC. To support this claim, MTCC provided time sheets for these employees for 2003. It also indicated that it had doubled the amount reflected in these time sheets to account for "two and a half years worth of time stolen from the Corporation".

III

MTCC's Arguments

[26] Most of the argument in this court and all of the reasons of the motion judge addressed s. 134(5) of the Act. Before turning to those submissions, I will dispose of two other arguments advanced by MTCC in its factum.

(i) The Collateral Attack Argument

[27] MTCC argued that Skyline's motion challenging the lien registered by MTCC constituted an impermissible collateral attack on paragraph 10 of the judgment of Hoilet J. That paragraph reads:

Orders that the condominium corporation may add to the common expenses of the units owned by the Respondents by Counter-Application, any costs awarded to the condominium corporation pursuant to this Judgment, together with any additional costs to the condominium corporation in obtaining the Judgment pursuant to s. 134(5) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1998, c.19.

[28] Paragraph 10 parrots the language of s. 134(5) and adds nothing to the rights bestowed on MTCC by that section. Skyline's motion did not challenge paragraph 10 of Hoilett J.'s judgment or in any way seek to vary that judgment. Instead Skyline attacked the lien on the basis that no amount should have been added to the common expenses owed by Skyline since it had paid the costs orders and MTCC had incurred no additional actual costs in obtaining the compliance order.

[29] Skyline's motion was not a collateral attack on the judgment of Hoilett J. It was properly brought as a motion within the application that led to the judgment of Hoilett J.

(ii) The Indemnity Argument

[30] MTCC argued in its factum that the lien registered against the Skyline units could be justified under Article VIII(5) of the condominium Declaration. That article required unit owners to indemnify MTCC for "any costs" suffered by it as a result of a breach of the condominium rules by the unit owner.

[31] The lien registered by MTCC is a creature of statute created by s. 85(1) of the Act. That section reads:

If an owner defaults in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses, the corporation has a lien against the owner's unit and its appurtenant common interest for the unpaid amount together with all interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses incurred by the corporation in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the unpaid amount [emphasis added].

[32] A s. 85(1) lien is triggered by a default on an obligation to contribute to common expenses. The indemnification right created by Article VIII(5) of the condominium Declaration does not affect the unit owners' obligation to contribute to common expenses, and a failure to meet the indemnification obligation does not constitute a default on an obligation to pay common expenses.

[33] The indemnification provision in the condominium Declaration offers no support for the lien registered by MTCC.

(iii) The Interpretation of s. 134(5)

[34] Section 134(1) provides for an order enforcing compliance with the Act, the condominium Declaration or the rules of the condominium. The order may be sought by the condominium corporation or an owner, occupier or tenant of a unit. If the court makes a compliance order, it may direct that the offending party pay "the costs incurred by the applicant in obtaining the order" (s. 134(3)(b)(ii)).

[35] Section 134(5), the section in issue here, applies only to condominium corporations and only where the condominium corporation has obtained an award of damages or costs under s. 134(3). For convenience I repeat s. 134(5):

If a corporation obtains an award of damages or costs in an order made against an owner or occupier of a unit, the damages or costs, together with any additional actual costs to the corporation in obtaining the order, shall be added to the common expenses for the unit and the corporation may specify a time for payment by the owner of the unit [emphasis added].

[36] Section 134(5) had no equivalent in the predecessor legislation. Section 49 of that legislation, The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. C.26 did provide for compliance orders but did not specifically address the payment of costs incurred by condominium corporations in obtaining and enforcing compliance orders.

[37] The affidavit material filed by MTCC and Skyline reveals that during the consultative process leading up to the enactment of the present legislation in December 1998, various groups addressed what they saw as the need to provide for the recovery by condominium corporations of any costs associated with the obtaining and enforcing of compliance orders against unit owners. These groups submitted that since condominium corporations were duty-bound to enforce compliance with their declarations and rules for the benefit of all unit owners, they should not bear any of the costs associated with obtaining and enforcing court orders requiring such compliance. These groups argued that the offending unit owners should have to compensate the condominium corporation for all costs incurred in obtaining and enforcing compliance orders against those unit owners.

[38] Section 134(5) went some way towards addressing the concerns expressed in these submissions. The section declares that the corporation may recover both “an award of costs” and “any additional actual costs”. Clearly, the language of s. 134(5) contemplates recovery by the condominium corporation of costs beyond those that are addressed in a court order so long as those costs were actually incurred by the condominium corporation and were incurred in obtaining the compliance order.

[39] Not only does s. 134(5) give a condominium corporation a broad right of recovery for costs incurred in obtaining compliance orders, it also provides an effective enforcement mechanism for the collection of those costs. The section declares that the “award of costs” and the “additional actual costs” may both be added to the common expenses for the unit. If the amounts are not paid, the condominium corporation may register a lien against the unit. The lien is enforceable in the same way as a mortgage (s. 85(2), s. 86(6)). Section 86 of the Act gives a s. 85(1) lien priority over almost all other encumbrances including mortgages. Consequently, if the costs described in s. 134(5) are not paid, the condominium corporation can recover that amount through the sale of the unit.

[40] My review of the terms of s. 134(5) leads me to agree with counsel for MTCC’s submission that the section was intended to shift the financial burden of obtaining compliance orders from the condominium corporation and ultimately, the innocent unit owners, to the unit owners whose conduct necessitated the obtaining of the order. Furthermore, the section was enacted to provide a means whereby the condominium corporation could, if necessary, recover those costs from the unit owner through the sale of the unit.

[41] Recognition of the remedial purpose behind s. 134(5) does not however answer all questions of statutory interpretation. The legislature chose to implement its purpose using certain words. Those words described the scope of the claim that can properly be made by MTCC. As recently observed by Bastarache J. in dissent in Marche v. The Halifax Insurance Co., 2005 SCC 6 at para. 59-60: the interpretative process begins with the determination of the ordinary meaning of the words used. The ordinary meaning refers to the meaning, if any, that is apparent after a first, but careful reading of the provision.

[42] Section 134(5) distinguishes between “an award of costs” and “additional actual costs”. The latter is to be added to the former to arrive at the total amount that shall be added to the common expenses owed by the offending unit owner. There is no difficulty with the ordinary meaning of “an award of costs”. The phrase refers to costs orders made by a court or made after a court ordered assessment. MTCC has two awards of costs, $38,000.00 awarded after the assessment of costs on the application, and $10,000.00 in costs awarded by the Court of Appeal.

[43] As the motion judge observed, the phrase “additional actual costs” in s. 134(5) can encompass costs, legal and non-legal, that are not assessable. The more difficult question is whether those words can also capture actual legal costs to MTCC referable to legal work that was the subject of a court ordered assessment of costs or a cost order made by a court.

[44] In determining how to read the phrases “award of costs” and “additional actual costs” in s. 134(5), it is appropriate to consider how those words would be read by those familiar with those terms. As all lawyers know, a costs award in favour of a party, even when made on a substantial indemnity scale, will not necessarily reflect the actual amount of fees properly billed to that party by his or her own lawyer. Usually, there will be a significant difference between the amount of a costs award made to a party and the actual legal costs incurred by that party. As Armstrong J.A. recently observed in Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 291 at para. 26 (C.A.) when discussing the assessment of costs as between parties to litigation:

Overall, as this court has said, the objective is to fix an amount that is fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party to pay in the particular proceeding, rather than an amount fixed by the actual costs incurred by the successful litigant [emphasis added].

[45] Reading the words of s. 134(5) as informed by the well-recognized distinction between costs that are awarded between parties and costs that are payable as between a party and its own lawyer makes the meaning clear to me. “Additional actual costs” will refer to those legal costs properly owed by MTCC to its lawyers above and beyond the amounts awarded for costs by the court or in a court ordered assessment. Those “additional legal costs” are properly added to the common expenses of the unit pursuant to s. 134(5) so long as they were incurred “in obtaining the order”. As actual legal costs refers to those costs properly claimed by a lawyer against his or her own client, the principles governing the assessment of legal bills as between a lawyer and his or her client, should govern any dispute between MTCC and Skyline as to the propriety of any part of the legal bills relied on by MTCC in support of a claim for “additional legal costs” under s. 134(5): see Mark M. Orkin, The Law of Costs, 2nd ed., looseleaf (Aurora, Ont: Canada Law Book Inc., 2004) at 602ff.²[21]

[46] A reading of s. 134(5) that allows MTCC to claim its actual legal costs in obtaining the compliance order as part of the common expenses of the Skyline units is consistent with the remedial purpose of s. 134(5). That reading effectively shifts the financial burden associated with obtaining a compliance order from the “innocent” condominium corporation and unit owners to the “guilty” unit owner who necessitated the obtaining of the compliance order.

[47] My interpretation of s. 134(5) can be demonstrated by reference to MTCC’s claim as it related to Mr. Arnold’s legal bills up to the date MTCC obtained the compliance order from Hoilett J. in December 2002. Mr. Arnold’s bills for that period totalled $61,991.00. Costs for the application were assessed against Skyline on a partial indemnity basis at $38,000.00. Applying s. 134(5) to this component of Mr. Arnold’s bills, MTCC would be entitled to add to the common expenses of the Skyline units, $38,000.00 (the costs award) plus as additional actual costs whatever part of the $23,991.00 ($61,991.00 minus $38,000.00) it was determined was both expended in obtaining the compliance order and would be properly payable to Mr. Arnold on an assessment of his bills by MTCC. MTCC would of course have to deduct from that amount whatever amount had already been paid by Skyline.

[48] The motion judge rejected the interpretation I place on s. 134(5) primarily because, in her view, including costs for legal services that had been the subject of court assessed costs beyond the amount ordered by the court, would render the court's authority to determine costs meaningless. She said at paragraph 30:

In view of this, “additional actual costs” cannot include any amount for legal costs that could have been awarded by the court under the costs grid and the Rules of Civil Procedure. This would render meaningless the court's jurisdiction to award costs, which is a precondition to the operation of the subsection. Accordingly, once costs are awarded, a condominium corporation may not add to the common expenses of a unit-owner as additional actual costs under section 134(5), assessable legal costs that were sought, but not awarded [emphasis added].

[49] With respect, this analysis misses the distinction made in Boucher, supra, between costs as fixed or assessed between parties to litigation and a litigant's actual legal costs. In assessing MTCC's costs of the application or fixing its costs of the appeal, the court looked to what was fair and reasonable as between the parties and not to the legal costs actually incurred by MTCC. In determining what amounts MTCC could add to the common expenses of the Skyline units, the Legislature recognized the difference between the two measures of costs described in Boucher, supra. The Legislature declared that both assessed costs and actual costs could be added to the common expenses. By providing that costs beyond assessed costs could be added to common expenses, the Legislature did not interfere with the court's jurisdiction to assess costs as between the litigants.

[50] It is true that by virtue of s. 134(5), MTCC could resort to the s. 85 lien enforcement mechanism to collect both the costs awarded and its additional actual legal costs. I do not accept however, that the availability of this enforcement mechanism in any way derogates from the court's jurisdiction to determine the appropriate award of costs as between the parties. The costs awarded to MTCC are what costs are in any case, the measure of the costs properly payable by one litigant to the other, and are enforceable by MTCC against Skyline in the same manner as any other money judgment.

[51] My conclusion that “additional actual costs” in s. 134(5) can include legal costs beyond those ordered or assessed by the court does not mean that all legal costs properly owed by MTCC to its lawyers can be added to the common expenses of the Skyline unit. As the motion judge held, the section refers only to costs incurred “in obtaining the order”. Those who made the case for an enforcement provision like that contained in s. 134(5) before the enactment of the present Act, argued that it should include costs associated with either obtaining or enforcing the compliance order. However, the Legislature chose to include only the word “obtaining” in s. 134(5). The process of obtaining a court order is distinct from the process of enforcing that order. On a plain reading of s. 134(5), it does not extend to costs associated with the enforcement of the compliance order. MTCC's legal costs are recoverable only if properly charged by its lawyers and incurred in obtaining the order.

[52] Although enforcement costs are not part of the costs referred to in s. 134(5), they may come into play in determining the proper amount of the s. 85(1) lien. That section provides that where an owner has defaulted on an obligation to pay common expenses, the condominium corporation may register a lien against the unit in the amount of the unpaid common expenses plus:

[A]ll reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses incurred by the corporation in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the unpaid amount.

[53] Consequently, if a unit owner defaults on the common expenses, the s. 85(1) lien can include enforcement costs that fall within the language of the section. The motion judge did not have to address this issue as she found that no amount was properly added to the Skyline common expenses pursuant to s. 134(5). There was, therefore, no default by Skyline on its obligation to pay common expenses capable of triggering the s. 85(1) lien.

[54] I turn next to the motion judge's treatment of the appeal costs. She held that none of MTCC's costs of the appeal taken by Skyline from the compliance order could be included in s. 134(5). She reached that conclusion for two reasons. First, she held that because the Court of Appeal had assessed costs at $10,00.00, no additional legal costs could be charged under s. 134(5). For reasons already stated, I would reject this reasoning.

[55] The trial judge also appears to have rejected claims for costs associated with the appeal because these costs were incurred after the order was obtained and therefore, could not be said to be costs "in obtaining the order". The phrase "in obtaining the order" describes a process that culminates in a valid, enforceable, final compliance order. As long as the validity of the order is in issue, I think that the relevant proceedings before the court are all part of the process of "obtaining the order". For example, had Hoilett J. refused to grant the compliance order and had MTCC successfully appealed that refusal, there could be no doubt that MTCC's costs of the appeal would be costs incurred "in obtaining the order". I see no reason why the consequences should be different for MTCC where it was successful on the initial application and Skyline chose to put the validity of the order in issue by way of appeal.

[56] I can deal briefly with the motion judge's treatment of administrative and managerial costs. She correctly held that the words "additional actual costs" in s. 134(5) could extend to non-legal costs so long as those costs were incurred in obtaining the order. She also correctly held that MTCC had the burden of demonstrating that the administrative and managerial costs claimed by it were actually incurred in the obtaining of the order. The motion judge also held that MTCC had not met that burden. Again, I agree with her conclusion.

[57] I must also reject the submission made on appeal by counsel for MTCC to the effect that only the validity of the lien and not the amount of the lien claimed by MTCC was in issue on the motion. The notice of motion and the material filed by Skyline in support of its motion made it clear that Skyline contended that none of the amounts said by MTCC to make up the total amount of the lien claimed were properly added to common expenses under s. 135(4). MTCC had ample notice that all of the amounts it relied on to make up that claim, including those referable to administrative and managerial costs were disputed by Skyline. MTCC had a full opportunity to make its case that those expenses were properly "additional actual costs to the corporation in obtaining the order". It failed to make that case.

IV

The Appropriate Order

[58] For the reasons set out above, the motion judge erred in declaring that the lien was invalid and ordering it discharged. I would set aside that order and direct a reference pursuant to rule 54.02 to determine first what amount, if any, is properly added to common expenses under s. 134(5) and second, if some amount is properly added, the amount of the lien under s. 85(1) of the Act.

[59] The reference should proceed on the following terms:

MTCC cannot reassert its failed claim to amounts described as “other legal costs”, “administrative costs and “managerial services”.

in deciding what part, if any, of Mr. Arnold’s and Mr. Elia’s legal fees are properly added to the common expenses of the Skyline units, the referee shall determine the amount, if any, beyond the $48,000.00 paid by Skyline in costs is properly charged to MTCC by Mr. Arnold and Mr. Elia for legal work done in obtaining the compliance order.

in determining whether there are any properly charged additional legal costs, the principles governing an assessment of legal fees as between a lawyer and his or her own client shall govern.

if it is determined that an amount was properly added to the common expenses of the Skyline units, and that Skyline has defaulted in payment of that amount, the amount of the lien shall be determined by adding to that amount, all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses incurred by MTCC in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the amount owing under s. 134(5).

[60] If the parties cannot agree on the referee, the court will name one.

V

Costs

[61] MTCC has been successful on the appeal. However, it is clear that the amount of the lien registered by MTCC against the Skyline units is far in excess of the lien MTCC is entitled to under the Act. Some of the claims made by MTCC are obviously beyond the scope of s. 134(5). By proceeding as it did, MTCC virtually forced Skyline to go to court to challenge the lien. Had the motion judge made the order which I would now make, I think Skyline would still have recovered its costs of the motion on a partial indemnity basis. I would not interfere with the costs order made on the motion.

[62] MTCC is entitled to its costs on the appeal on a partial indemnity basis. I would fix those costs at $11,000.00 including GST and disbursements. That amount may be set off against the costs awarded in Skyline’s favour by the motion judge.

On appeal from the judgment of Justice Nancy J. Spies of the Superior Court of Justice dated June 29, 2005.

ROULEAU J.A.:

OVERVIEW

[1] This is an appeal by Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 545 (the Corporation) from the dismissal of its application for an order permitting it to enter the respondents' dwelling units to carry out certain repairs or maintenance.

[2] The Corporation maintains that the manner in which the respondents carried out remediation work on the fan coil units (FCUs) located in their condominium units left their units in a condition that was "likely to damage the property^[1] or cause injury to an individual."^[2] As a result, the Corporation argues that it was entitled to the order sought pursuant to ss. 19, 117, 119 and 134 of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 (the Condominium Act). The Corporation further argues that the application judge made palpable and overriding errors of fact in reaching her decision to dismiss the application. Finally, it submits that, by failing to afford the appropriate degree of deference to decisions of the Corporation, the application judge committed a reversible error.

[3] For the reasons that follow, I would dismiss the appeal. The application judge made no palpable and overriding error of fact nor did she fail to afford the Corporation's decision the appropriate degree of deference.

SUMMARY OF THE RELEVANT FACTS

The parties

[4] The Corporation manages a 231 unit condominium at 55 Skymark Drive in Toronto. The respondents are unit holders in this condominium.

The dispute

[5] In May 2004, the Corporation commissioned an investigation of possible mould contamination in the heating and air conditioning FCUs located in the various condominium units of the building. The report provided to the Corporation by George White, a mycologist, confirmed that there was mould contamination in the FCUs. Substantial mould contamination was found in ten of the thirteen FCUs that he examined.

[6] The report stated that it is difficult to actually assess the risk related to mould exposure, but that it could safely be assumed that there is an increased risk associated with any increase in exposure. The risk identified was an “occupant risk”. Although the report did not suggest that mould from the FCUs in one residential unit would disperse to another unit, the report noted that there would be risks to the property value and reputation if the issues were not handled in a sensible and timely manner.

[7] White opined that it was more prudent to eliminate the risk factor than to determine what the acceptable level of risk actually was. He cautioned that this approach, however, was not always cost-effective and ran the risk of overreacting in some settings. He then suggested that, in response to mould contamination, three different remedial options were available. The first, and most expensive, involved removing the contaminated insulation, replacing it with a different insulation and modifying the FCUs to minimize the recurrence of mould contamination. The second involved removing most of the contamination by HEPA vacuums and disinfectants. The third was a combination of the first and second options.

[8] On June 28, 2004, the Corporation held a special meeting of residents. White was present at this meeting and the issue of mould contamination was discussed.

[9] Having previously determined that the repair and maintenance of FCUs was a unit holder responsibility, the Corporation advised the residents, by August 26, 2004 letter, of their responsibility and gave residents a list of contractors who carry out this type of repair. The letter indicated that this list was neither a referral nor a recommendation.

[10] The Corporation then retained Construction Control Inc., consulting engineers and building scientists, to research and investigate the problem and to prepare specifications for mould remediation. In September 28, 2004, another meeting of unit holders was held. The President of the Corporation advised those in attendance that the unit holders were free to make their own arrangements for mould remediation. However, he indicated that they would have to comply with the protocol for remediation set by the Corporation's engineers.

[11] In October 2004, the Corporation reiterated that the remediation was the responsibility of the unit holders and advised that the Corporation had approved Dry Coil Limited (Dry Coil) as the authorized contractor after the usual tendering process.

[12] Each of the respondents chose not to use the pre-approved contractor and made this intention known to the Corporation. In response, the Corporation wrote to the respondents, requiring that they comply with a list of conditions at their own expense. These conditions included pre and post remediation air quality tests and that the remediation be done in accordance with the New York Protocol, Level 5. The letter also advised that a note would be placed in the file for each of the units, indicating that periodic inspections of the FCUs were required.

[13] The respondents formally advised the Corporation that they did not consider that they were required to comply with these conditions. Despite the Corporation's continuing insistence that its listed conditions be complied with, the respondents ignored them and proceeded to have the remediation carried out by their own contractor, Reliable Fan Coil Maintenance (Reliable).

[14] Reliable was one of the contractors mentioned in the August 26, 2004 list of contractors provided by the Corporation. The remediation by Reliable was done at a cost of about $100 per FCU, as compared to approximately $1500 per FCU if done by the Corporation's contractor. The remediation done by Reliable was completed to the New York Protocol, Level 1 standard. In Reliable's view, the Level 1 standard was sufficient.

[15] The respondents did not provide the Corporation with reports following the remediation. They did, however, advise the Corporation that it could, at its expense, have its engineer and contractor inspect the work done by Reliable. The Corporation maintained its position that a Level 5 remediation was required. Since the respondents had readily admitted that only a Level 1 remediation was carried out, the Corporation felt that there was no point in inspecting the work. The Corporation then brought an application under s. 134 of the Condominium Act. It is the dismissal of that application that is the subject of this appeal.

The decision under appeal

[16] At the hearing of the application, the respondents took the position that the application could not proceed on the merits because s. 134(2) of the Condominium Act required that the dispute be submitted to mediation and arbitration before resorting to the courts. The Corporation responded that s. 134(2) of the Condominium Act applied to disputes regarding the declaration, by-laws and rules of a condominium but did not apply to an application seeking the interpretation of the Act itself.

[17] The application judge rejected the respondents' objection and allowed the application to proceed on the basis that “the Corporation has very carefully limited its relief to sections 117 and 19 of the Act”. By limiting its dispute to the interpretation of the Act itself, the failure to proceed to mediation and arbitration was not a legal impediment to the bringing of the application.

[18] In her reasons, the application judge made the following relevant findings of fact:

- a) there was no evidence that mould contamination in the FCUs of a specific unit created a risk to other residential units;
- b) the work done by Reliable had effectively remediated the mould contamination in the respondents’ units and, in any event, mould in an FCU was only an issue for the residents of the unit with the contaminated FCU;
- c) the Corporation’s evidence went no further than to show that the work done by Reliable was “not as careful or complete” as the work done by Dry Coil; it did not go so far as to say that the Level 1 remediation carried out by Reliable was insufficient to deal with the problem;
- d) with respect to the Corporation’s concern that Reliable’s work had not included changes to the slope of the drain pan, there was no evidence that the drain pans had ever overflowed in the respondents’ units nor was there evidence that overflowing pans pose a risk for mould contamination to other units as opposed to water damage;
- e) there was no evidence that the Board of the Corporation had considered the less expensive options suggested by White; and

f) there was no evidence that the way in which the respondents had remediated their units would affect the sales of units other than those of the respondents.

[19] The application judge rejected the Corporation’s submission that, by remediating to a Level 1 rather than a Level 5 standard, the respondents had created a dangerous situation as contemplated by s. 117 of the Condominium Act. She went on to find that this section of the Act did not empower the Board of the Corporation to impose a particular method of remediation where it could not establish that the method chosen by the respondents had not reasonably dealt with the problem.

[20] The application judge concluded that the Corporation failed to meet its onus of proving that a condition currently existed that was “likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual”.^[31] In the event that she was wrong on this point, and that the Corporation had in fact established the existence of such a condition, she went on to consider whether the Corporation was acting reasonably so as to justify the court granting the discretionary relief being sought. On this latter issue the application judge concluded that the Corporation had not acted reasonably in imposing its standard of remediation. Central to this conclusion was her finding that the Board of the Corporation had failed to consider reasonable alternatives to the requirement that all units carry out a Level 5 remediation. Reasonable lower cost alternatives ought to have been considered, especially in light of there being no evidence of harm to other units.

The position of the parties

[21] The Corporation submits that the application judge disregarded important parts of the evidence relevant to the issues being determined and made palpable and overriding errors in respect of several findings of fact. Further, the Corporation maintains that, even on the facts as found, the application judge committed reversible error in failing to show the appropriate level of deference to decisions of the board of a condominium corporation in accordance with this court's decision in York Condominium Corp. No. 382 v. Dvorchik (1997), 12 R.P.R. (3d) 148 (Ont. C.A.).

[22] The respondents submit that the application judge made no palpable or overriding errors of fact. On the Dvorchik issue, they submit that Dvorchik has no application to the present case. Dvorchik was dealing with the reasonableness of condominium rules and not with an attempt by the Corporation to obtain forcible entry into the respondents' units to remedy a situation that was internal to the units.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS

[23] The relevant sections of the Condominium Act are as follows:

Right of Entry

Droit d'entrée

19. On giving reasonable notice, the corporation or a person authorized by the corporation may enter a unit or a part of the common elements of which an owner has exclusive use at any reasonable time to perform the objects and duties of the corporation or to exercise the powers of the corporation

Dangerous activities

117. No person shall permit a condition to exist or carry on an activity in a unit or in the common elements if the condition or the activity is likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual.

Compliance with Act

119. (1) A corporation, the directors, officers and employees of a corporation, a declarant, the lessor of a leasehold condominium corporation, an owner, an occupier of a unit and a person

19. Sur préavis raisonnable, l'association ou la personne qu'elle autorise peut entrer dans une partie privative ou dans les parties communes dont le propriétaire a l'usage exclusif à toute heure raisonnable pour réaliser la mission de l'association et accomplir les devoirs de celle-ci ou pour en exercer les pouvoirs.

Activités dangereuses

117. Dans une partie privative ou dans les parties communes, nul ne doit tolérer une situation de fait ni exercer une activité susceptibles d'endommager la propriété ou de causer des blessures à un particulier.

Observation de la Loi

119. (1) L'association, les administrateurs, dirigeants employés de celle-ci, le déclarant, le bailleur d'une association condominiale de propriété à bail, les propriétaires, les occupants de having an encumbrance against a unit and its appurtenant common interest shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Responsibility for occupier

(2) An owner shall take all reasonable steps to ensure that an occupier of the owner's unit and all invitees, agents and employees of the owner or occupier comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Right against owner

(3) A corporation, an owner and every person having a registered mortgage against a unit and its appurtenant common interest have the right to require the owners and the occupiers of units to comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

parties privatives et quiconque est titulaire d'une sûreté réelle sur une partie privative et l'intérêt commun qui s'y rattache sont tenus d'observer la présente loi, la déclaration, les règlements administratifs et les règles.

Responsabilité pour l'occupant

(2) Le propriétaire prend toutes les mesures raisonnables pour veiller à ce que l'occupant de sa partie privative ainsi que tous ses invités, mandataires et employés ou ceux de l'occupant observent la présente loi, la déclaration, les règlements administratifs et les règles.

Droit par rapport aux propriétaires

(3) L'association, les propriétaires et quiconque est titulaire d'une hypothèque enregistrée sur une partie privative et l'intérêt commun qui s'y rattache ont le droit d'exiger que les propriétaires et les occupants de parties privatives observent la présente loi, la déclaration, les règlements administratifs et les règles.

Ordonnance de conformité

134. (1) Sous réserve du paragraphe (2), un propriétaire, l'occupant d'une partie privative projetée, une association, un déclarant, un bailleur d'une association condominiale de propriété à bail ou le créancier hypothécaire d'une partie privative peut, par voie de requête, demander à la Cour supérieure de justice de rendre une ordonnance exigeant la conformité aux dispositions de la présente loi, de la déclaration, des règlements administratifs, des règles ou d'une convention intervenue entre deux associations ou plus en vue de l'utilisation, de la fourniture ou de l'entretien en commun ou du partage des frais des installations ou des services des parties à la

Compliance order

134. (1) Subject to subsection (2), an owner, an occupier of a proposed unit, a corporation, a declarant, a lessor of a leasehold condominium corporation or a mortgagee of a unit may make an application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order enforcing compliance with any provision of this Act, the declaration, the by-laws, the rules or an agreement between two or more corporations for the mutual use, provision or maintenance or the cost-sharing of facilities or services of any of the parties to the agreement.

Pre-condition for application

(2) If the mediation and arbitration processes described in section 132 are available, a person is not entitled to apply for an order under subsection (1) until the person has failed to obtain compliance through using those processes.

Contents of order

(3) On an application, the court may, subject to subsection (4),

- (a) grant the order applied for;
- (b) require the persons named in the order to pay,
- (i) the damages incurred by the convention.

Condition préalable à la requête

(2) Si les processus de médiation et d'arbitrage visés à l'article 132 sont disponibles, aucune personne n'a le droit de demander, par voie de requête, que soit rendue une ordonnance en vertu du paragraphe (1) à moins que n'aient échoué ses tentatives au moyen de ces processus pour qu'il y ait conformité aux dispositions concernées.

Contenu de l'ordonnance

(3) Sur requête et sous réserve du paragraphe (4), le tribunal peut, selon le cas:

- a) rendre l'ordonnance demandée;
- b) exiger des personnes nommées dans l'ordonnance qu'elles paient :
- (i) le montant des dommagesapplicant as a result of the acts of non-compliance, and

(ii) the costs incurred by the applicant in obtaining the order; or

(c) grant such other relief as is fair and equitable in the circumstances.

intérêts accordés au requérant du fait de la non-conformité,

(ii) les frais engagés par le requérant en vue d'obtenir l'ordonnance;

c) accorder les autres mesures de redressement justes et équitables dans les circonstances.

ANALYSIS

[24] I will deal first with the Corporation's submission regarding the application judge's findings of fact. Second, I will deal with the submission that this court's decision in Dvorchik applies to the case at bar and that the application judge erred in failing to show deference to the Corporation's decision to require Level 5 remediation.

The findings of fact

[25] The application was decided based on affidavit evidence and the accompanying cross-examinations. Notwithstanding the fact that there existed factual disputes, the parties agreed that the court should proceed to hear and decide the matter on the record before it without the benefit viva voce evidence.

[26] The Corporation challenges several findings of fact made by the application judge. In oral argument it focussed on the following findings:

- a) there was no evidence that a Level 5 remediation was required in this specific case;
- b) Peter Adams, the engineer hired by the Corporation, did not report that such a high level of remediation was necessary because of the potential for mould dispersion from one unit to another nor did he say that overflowing drip pans pose a risk for mould contamination to other units;
- c) the Corporation's concern that mould would spread throughout the building was not supported by the Corporation's experts; and
- d) the Corporation did not act reasonably or keep an open mind concerning other less expensive ways of dealing with the problem.

[27] The Corporation submits that each of these findings is in error and discloses a misapprehension of the evidence. I disagree. The application judge's reasons provide a comprehensive review of the extensive materials filed. They outline the evidentiary basis for the various findings of fact made and, in my view, disclose no palpable and overriding error. I will address each of the four challenged findings in turn.

a) The need for a high level of remediation

[28] In challenging the application judge's finding that there was no evidence that a Level 5 remediation was required, the Corporation referred to various portions of the evidence that, it says, demonstrate the need for a high level of remediation. For example, the Corporation pointed to the evidence of Janet Valianes who testified that, although no report was prepared assessing the various options, she assumed from the fact that the consulting engineers had selected the high level of remediation option that they considered this level of remediation to be necessary. Although such an inference could be drawn from this evidence, it was up to the application judge to decide. She chose not to draw it. Further, even if the application judge had drawn that inference, it would not necessarily translate into evidence that this high level of remediation was required specifically for the FCUs in the respondents' units.

[29] All of the other evidence referred to by the Corporation in support of its submission on this point addresses the mould issue in a similarly global or generic way. I took the application judge's findings as applying specifically to the FCUs at issue in these proceedings: the FCUs located in the respondents' units. None of the evidence cited by the Corporation says that a high level of remediation is required for every FCU in the building nor does it specifically address the FCUs in the respondents' units. The application judge considered all of the evidence and chose not to draw the inference urged on her by the Corporation.

b) Peter Adams' report

[30] The Corporation submits that, contrary to what the application judge found, the Adams report concludes that the Level 5 remediation was required to prevent the spread of mould from one unit to another. In making this submission it relies principally on a statement made in his report regarding poorly functioning drip pans. That statement is as follows:

Poorly functioning drip pans are of a concern, as they can contribute large volumes of water to hidden areas within common elements or to other unit owners' spaces. Water from the drip pans can lead to damage at other locations and possible mould growth, putting other owners at risk of damage.

Later in his report, Adams concluded that the Reliable procedure "resulted in a partial solution that covered the problem and did not address the significant issue of overflowing drip pans."

[31] The Corporation submits that these excerpts are at odds with the application judge's finding that, although an overflowing drip pan can contribute to mould growth in the vicinity of the FCU in question, nothing in Peter Adams' report says that "this can pose a risk for mould contamination to other residential units in the building, as opposed to water damage."

[32] I disagree. The quotes from the Adams' report are ambiguous. They can reasonably support both the interpretation advanced by the Corporation and the interpretation made by the application judge. The application judge understood that the failure to correct the slope of the drip pans could lead to water damage in other units. She interpreted the statements in Adam's report as indicating that, if other units suffered water damage as a result of overflowing drip pans, this, in turn, could lead to mould forming in those units. This, however, is different from mould contamination transferring from one unit to another. The application judge was focussed on the suggestion that mould can be transferred from unit to unit. She concluded that the report made no allegation in that regard. That was a finding open to her on the record.

c) The Corporation's concern that mould would spread throughout the building was not supported by the Corporation's experts

[33] Because the application had been brought pursuant to s. 117 of the Act, the application judge focussed on the Corporation's concern that the presence of mould in the respondents' units might affect the units of other residents or the common elements. In reaching the conclusion that mould is not transferred from one unit to another, the application judge relied in part on a statement to that effect. That statement was attributed to one of the Corporation's experts, Mr. White and was contained in the unsigned minutes of a special meeting of unit owners produced in the course of the litigation from the managers' files.

[34] The Corporation submits that the weight of the evidence is to the contrary and that it was inappropriate for the application judge to rely on this evidence rather than the evidence of another expert, Mr. Adams.

[35] I have dealt with the evidence of Mr. Adams in the previous section and found that it does not contradict the application judge's finding. With respect to the statement attributed to Mr. White, I find no error in the application judge having referred to the statement contained in the unsigned minutes. A business' records are admissible where they were made, and usually are made, in the ordinary course of business.^[4] As stated by the application judge, the minutes were prepared for the Corporation. They were produced by the Corporation from the manager's files and appended to her affidavit filed in the proceedings. The Condominium Act requires the Corporation to keep minutes of its meetings,^[5] and there was no suggestion that the statement contained therein was not made, was not accurate or was not consistent with his report filed in the proceedings.

d) The Corporation did not act reasonably

[36] The application judge also found that even if there were a basis for finding that a condition existed in the respondents' units that was "likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual", she would have exercised her discretion and would have refused to grant the relief sought. This was because the Corporation had not considered less expensive alternatives than the one it imposed on all owners. She found this to be unreasonable, particularly in light of the Corporation's inability to show the existence of a risk that the mould could spread from one unit to another.

[37] Section 134 of the Condominium Act provides that compliance orders "may" be granted. The application judge therefore retains a discretion and, on the evidentiary record and findings made, I see no basis to interfere with the exercise of her discretion on this point.

The Dvorchik Issue

a) The position of the parties

[38] According to the Corporation, the application judge ran afoul of the principles established by this court in Dvorchik. The Corporation submits that Dvorchik stands for the proposition that rules are only considered to be unreasonable where they are contrary to the legislative scheme of the Condominium Act or are clearly unreasonable. Unless the rule has been found to be unreasonable, trial judges are not entitled to substitute their opinion for that of the condominium corporation.

[39] The Corporation argues that, in the present case, it reached the decision that unit owners had to carry out Level 5 remediation based on the advice of experts. It was, therefore, clearly reasonable. This decision was in substance, if not in form, a rule and the application judge failed to apply the requisite deferential approach when evaluating this decision. Deference was required by Dvorchik and the application judge's decision should be set aside.

[40] The respondents submit that Dvorchik was a case about rules adopted by a condominium corporation pursuant to the Condominium Act. That decision has no application to the case at bar. In the present case the Corporation was attempting to obtain forcible entry into the respondents' units to remedy a situation that was internal to the units.

b) The decision in Dvorchik

[41] In Dvorchik, the Corporation applied under s. 49(1) of the then Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, for an order directing the respondent to comply with a corporation rule that prohibited unit holders from having pets weighing more than twenty-five pounds. Section 49(1) is similar to s. 134(1) of the current Condominium Act.

[42] At first instance, Keenan J. found the rule restricting pet size to be invalid and unenforceable. He did so because the Condominium Corporation had failed to provide evidence proving that the twenty-five pound limit was reasonable.

[43] In allowing the appeal, the Court of Appeal made the following statement about the deference to be paid to condominium corporations:

The condominium board was not obliged to hear evidence in reaching its conclusion that larger pets be prohibited. In making its rules, the Board is not performing a judicial role, and no judicialization should be attributed either to its function or its process. In an application brought under s. 49(1), a court should not substitute its own opinion about the propriety of a rule enacted by a condominium board unless the rule is clearly unreasonable or contrary to the legislative scheme. In the absence of such unreasonableness, deference should be paid to rules deemed appropriate by a board charged with responsibility for balancing the private and communal interests of the unit owners (para. 5).

c) Does Dvorchik apply?

[44] The court in Dvorchik was considering the enforcement of a rule adopted by a condominium corporation pursuant to s. 29(1) of the previous Condominium Act (s. 58 of the current Condominium Act). The rule adopted in that case clearly fell within the scope of the rule-making authority of the condominium board. The operative section of the Act specified that the condominium corporation's rule-making power was only limited by the requirements that the rules be "reasonable" and "consistent" with the Condominium Act.

[45] The case at bar does not involve a rule, and the sections relied on by the Corporation do not contain language similar to s. 29 of the previous Act. The Dvorchik decision is, therefore, clearly distinguishable on its facts.

d) Should the principles in Dvorchik be extended to apply in the present case?

[46] The Corporation argues that its judgment that, absent a Level 5 remediation, a dangerous situation will be allowed to exist in those units is a reasonable one made with the benefit of expert advice. As a result this decision should be given the same deference as provided in Dvorchik without regard to the fact that it is not a "rule" or "by-law" of the Corporation.

[47] In my view, Dvorchik should not be extended to the present case. I say this for two reasons. First, the decision by the Corporation that it would not seek to structure the remediation requirement as a rule creates an important distinction from Dvorchik. Second, this case raises both different and competing rights and duties under the Condominium Act.

[48] It is important not to lose sight of the fact that the Corporation chose to frame its application as a dispute with respect to the interpretation of ss. 117, 119 and 134 of the Condominium Act and not as “a disagreement between the parties with respect to the declaration, by-laws or rules” of the corporation (see s. 132(4) of the Condominium Act). Whether or not the remediation requirement could be made into a rule, the Corporation appears to have chosen not to make it a rule so as to avoid the s. 134(2) requirement to go to mediation or arbitration as a precondition to any court application. Thus, the Corporation’s failure to adopt the requirement for Level 5 remediation as a “rule” is more than semantics. It reflects a strategic decision by the Corporation. By choosing this route, the Corporation cannot benefit from the statutory provision relied on in Dvorchik.

[49] More importantly, in the present case, the court is being called upon to enforce a decision of the Corporation that, unlike Dvorchik, is not within the Corporation’s exclusive area of responsibility. Here there are competing obligations and duties. The Condominium Act provides that unit holders are responsible for the maintenance of their units.^[6] The Corporation only has authority to interfere with and override these unit holders’ responsibilities and obligations where the unit holder has failed in his obligation to such a degree that a risk outlined in s. 92(3) or a condition likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual as described in s. 117 is allowed to exist and continue.^[7]

[50] As the statutory rights and obligations of both parties are engaged, a careful balancing is required. There is no statutory or principled reason why deference should be afforded to the Corporation’s decision on the facts of this case.

CONCLUSION

[51] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal. I would award the respondents their costs on a partial indemnity basis fixed at $10,000 inclusive of GST and disbursements.

^[7] Section 92(3) of the Condominium Act, 1998 provides that if an owner fails to carry out his or her maintenance obligations within a reasonable time and “if the failure presents a potential risk of damage to the property or the assets of the corporation or a potential risk of personal injury to persons on the property, the corporation may do the work necessary to carry out the obligation.” This is substantially the same as the combined effect of ss. 19, 117 and 119.

(1) An owner, a corporation, a declarant or a mortgagee of a unit may make an application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order under this section.

Grounds for order

(2) On an application, if the court determines that the conduct of an owner, a corporation, a declarant or a mortgagee of a unit is or threatens to be oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the applicant or unfairly disregards the interests of the applicant, it may make an order to rectify the matter.

Contents of order

(3) On an application, the judge may make any order the judge deems proper including,

(a) an order prohibiting the conduct referred to in the application; and

(b) an order requiring the payment of compensation. 1998, c. 19, s. 135 (3).

[4] Section 135 came into effect in 2001. While this is a new concept for Ontario condominium corporations, courts in Canada have dealt with oppression remedies for many years in the context of company law. Those cases have considered whether the conduct complained of falls under the three types of conduct enumerated under statute, namely (i) oppression (ii) unfair prejudice or (iii) unfair disregard. The courts have not drawn clear lines between any of the three statutory tests and have often found that conduct may fit into one or more of the categories. Unfair prejudice and unfair disregard are less rigorous tests than oppression.

[5] The following discussion of the law of oppression in a company law context is taken from Markus Koehnen “Oppression and Related Remedies”, 1st ed. (Toronto: Caswell, 2004), at pp. 79-84.

[6] Oppression is conduct that is coercive or abusive. Oppression has also been described as conduct that is burdensome, harsh and wrongful, or an abuse of power which results in an impairment of confidence in the probity with which the company’s affairs are being conducted.

[7] Unfair prejudice has been found to mean a limitation on or injury to a complainant’s rights or interests that is unfair or inequitable. Koehnen cites examples of unfair prejudice from corporate cases, including:

- squeezing out a minority shareholder because of a personal desire to exclude her;
- failing to disclose related party transactions in financial statements;
- amalgamating two corporations and thereby transferring the minority’s interest from a corporation with a very low debt equity ratio to a very high debt equity ratio;
- paying management fees to certain shareholders to the exclusion of others;
- paying dividends without formal declaration.

[8] Unfair disregard means to ignore or treat the interests of the complainant as being of no importance. Examples cited by Koehnen include:

- failing to prosecute the claims of a corporation diligently where one of the directors benefited from the improper prosecution;
- reducing a shareholder's dividend by setting off the value of other benefits against it when this had not been done in the past;
- failing to deliver property that belonged to the complainant.

[9] Koehnen comments that courts in Ontario have held that the use of the word “unfairly”, to qualify the words “prejudice” and “disregard”, suggest that some prejudice or disregard is acceptable provided that it is not unfair.

Governance of the Corporation:

[10] The affairs of this Corporation are subject to the provisions of the Act and of the Corporation's registered declaration, by-laws and rules.

[11] Section 17 of the Act imposes a duty on a corporation to manage the property of the corporation on behalf of the owners and to take all reasonable steps to ensure that owners comply with the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

[12] Section 119 of the Act imposes a duty on, among others, a corporation, the directors and owners to comply with the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

[13] Section 115 of the Act imposes a trust on monies received for the benefit of a corporation.

[14] Section 58 of the Act empowers the directors to make rules respecting the use of the common elements and units, (a) to promote the safety of the owners and the assets of the corporation and (b) to prevent unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and units.

[15] The declaration, the rules and the by-laws each contain indemnification provisions, obligating unit owners to indemnify the Corporation for damage caused by the owners to the common elements. Unit owners are required to pay for repairs within the boundaries of their units.

[16] The Corporation enacted By-law Number 5 in June 2002. This widened the indemnification provisions to include indemnification by unit owners of legal costs incurred by the Corporation, including the cost of legal advice given to the Corporation.

[17] The affairs of the Corporation are managed by the board of directors, pursuant to s. 27 of the Act. The board, which is made up of volunteers, is elected by the owners. The board hires a management company to deal with day-to-day matters.

[18] The Ontario Court of Appeal, in York Condominium Corp. No. 382 v. Dvorchik (1997), CarswellOnt 219 (C.A.) held that the only limitation on the authority of the board of directors to make rules was that the rules be reasonable and consistent with the Act. In making the rules, the board is not performing a judicial role. The board is not obliged to hear evidence in reaching its conclusion and setting down its rules. The courts are to pay deference to the rules deemed appropriate by a board, which the Court of Appeal recognized is charged with the responsibility of balancing the private and communal interests of the unit owners.

[19] I will deal with the claims of Mr. Niedermeier for compensation, following the categories enumerated above.

(1) Reimbursement of common expenses as compensation for denial of access to the common elements of the Corporation:

[20] In 2000, Mr. Niedermeier was directing a cube van under the canopy of the Corporation's building. The van scraped the canopy. The Corporation incurred a cost of $53.50 to repair the damage. In 2000, Mr. Niedermeier brought a used washing machine from the garbage area of the Corporation's building to his unit. Fluid spilled from the machine, staining the carpet of the corridor of the building. The Corporation incurred a cost of $88.10 to clean the carpet. The Corporation requested Mr. Niedermeier to indemnify it for the costs for repair of the canopy and for cleaning the carpet, totalling $141.60. Mr. Niedermeier took the position that the repair costs of $53.50 for the canopy were excessive and that he should not pay the cleaning cost of $88.10 because he was paying monthly maintenance fees to the Corporation. Mr. Niedermeier did not deny that he was responsible for the damage to the canopy and the staining of the carpet.

[21] As previously noted, the declaration, rules and the by-laws of each contain indemnification provisions, which obligated Mr. Niedermeier to indemnify the Corporation for the damage he caused to the common elements, i.e. the damage to the canopy and the staining of the carpet.

[22] The costs claimed by the Corporation for each of these incidents were paid by the Corporation to third parties. Invoices for the costs are included in the motion materials. Mr. Niedermeier acknowledges that the damage occurred. There is nothing to indicate that the Corporation should not have paid the invoices of $53.50 and $88.10. Mr. Niedermeier admits that he "elected not to pay" the $141.60 when he was asked to do so in 2000. The Corporation wrote to Mr. Niedermeier on March 17, 2000, requesting indemnification. A second letter was sent June 30, 2000. On January 16, 2001, Mr. Niedermeier met with the President of the board of directors to discuss the issue. Mr. Niedermeier did not make any offer as to what he was willing to pay. A third letter was sent May 1, 2001, at which time the Property Manager, Rick Allan, on behalf of the Corporation indicated that if the amount was not paid by May 15, 2001, Mr. Niedermeier's access to the lounge, library, exercise room, and sauna would be cancelled, and a charge back of $141.60 would be filed against his unit.

[23] Mr. Niedermeier did not pay the account. On May 15, 2001, Mr. Niedermeier's striker card was cancelled to deny him access to the above-mentioned rooms.

[24] The Corporation again wrote to Mr. Niedermeier on August 28, 2001, requesting payment and confirming that his access to the rooms would remain cut off until payment was received. Another letter was written by the Corporation on November 27, 2001. The letter confirmed a meeting on that date between Mr. Allan and Mr. Niedermeier, at which time Mr. Allan suggested that if $141.60 was too much to pay in one payment, Mr. Niedermeier could make monthly payments, even as low as $5.00 per month. Mr. Niedermeier stated that the costs were excessive. Mr. Allan suggested that Mr. Niedermeier write to the board to advise what he thought would be a reasonable cost that he would be willing to pay. In anticipation of Mr. Niedermeier's letter to the board, his access to the areas was reinstated. The letter indicates that although Mr. Niedermeier's access to the rooms had been cut off since May 15, 2001, the building superintendent had in fact observed Mr. Niedermeier using the rooms.

[25] On August 19, 2002, Mr. Niedermeier sent the board a letter requesting a meeting to talk about the outstanding payments. The board invited Mr. Niedermeier to a meeting on October 8, 2002. Mr. Niedermeier met with the board on October 8, 2002, and stated his position. The board then offered to reduce the amount of $120.00, if paid within 10 days. On October 25, 2002, Mr. Niedermeier paid the Corporation $100.00. He wrote the board on January 21, 2003 and stated that:

this amount represents more than an overpayment of the matters in question. After all, the damages that happened to the canopy and the rug in the corridor were accidental and were not willfully caused by me. After all, I am a homeowner in this condominium complex and am paying my monthly maintenance fees and should not be required to pay for repairs and cleaning in addition to those fees.

Mr. Niedermeier refused to pay the remaining $20.00 and stated that “Mr. Allan should pay it out of his own pocket and call the matter closed.” The board responded by letter dated February 12, 2003, indicating that the $120.00 was for repairs caused by Mr. Niedermeier’s negligence and that repairs were not covered by the monthly maintenance fee. The $20.00 remains outstanding.

[26] It is acknowledged by the Corporation that it did not have a written rule with respect to termination of access to the rooms for failure to pay an outstanding account. Mr. Allan testified in cross-examination that the property managers and the board had decided after discussing Mr. Niedermeier’s situation, to terminate his access to the rooms, “out of frustration”, to hopefully get Mr. Niedermeier to pay the bill. He further testified that this decision to cut off access to common rooms was implemented in “extreme cases”. He cited as an example someone leaving the party room in a mess, resulting in a clean up fee which, if not paid, would result in that room being cut off for a month or so.

[27] Mr. Niedermeier submits that the termination of his access to the rooms for a period of 6 months was “oppressive”. He describes the conduct of the Corporation in this regard as harsh, burdensome, an abuse of power, vindictive, high-handed and malicious. It was conduct, he submits, which is not authorized by the Act. Mr. Niedermeier contends that the Corporation should have sued him in Small Claims Court instead.

[28] Mr. Niedermeier submits that as a remedy, he should receive reimbursement of his common expenses of $414.00 per month.

[29] The Corporation acknowledges that termination of access to the rooms was a self-help remedy which, although not authorized by the Act, was the most practical way of setting the matter right. The Corporation takes issue with Mr. Niedermeier’s submission that he had an absolute right to use of the common elements. The Corporation refers to s. 116 of the Act, which provides that the owner may make “reasonable use” of the common elements, subject to the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules. The Corporation submits that if Mr. Niedermeier’s access to the rooms had been cut off for no reason, that would probably amount to oppression. But the Corporation contends this issue was about $141.60 that Mr. Niedermeier was obligated to pay.

[30] I am not satisfied, in the circumstances of this case, that Mr. Niedermeier has established that the action of the Corporation in terminating his access to the common rooms was oppressive within the meaning of the Act.

[31] I am satisfied that Mr. Niedermeier did owe the Corporation $141.60 by way of indemnification for damages caused to him to the common elements. He admits he did the damage. The declaration, by-laws and rules require him to reimburse the Corporation. The expenses of $53.50 and $88.10 appear reasonable. They are not arbitrary numbers. They were invoices rendered by third parties retained by the Corporation to remedy the damage caused by Mr. Niedermeier. Mr. Niedermeier was given ample opportunity to indemnify the Corporation before his access was terminated. The Corporation sent four letters over the course of more than a year, requesting payment before terminating Mr. Niedermeier's access. Mr. Niedermeier had a meeting with the President of the board four months before the board took action. He made no offer to pay for approximately 1½ years. In these circumstances, I do not find the Corporation's actions to be abusive, burdensome or harsh. Those words denote mistreatment, injury, conduct which is excessively severe, hard to bear. Although the Corporation acted without authorization from the Act, or an express rule or policy, I am not satisfied that there was the requisite abuse of power or harsh and wrongful conduct to bring the oppression remedy into play. Although Mr. Niedermeier did not argue that the Corporation's conduct amounted to "unfair prejudice" or "unfair disregard", I do not find that the Corporation's conduct met those lesser tests of the oppression remedy having regard by way of analogy to the examples cited by Koehnen from company cases. This is not a situation where an innocent party has been taken advantage of in an unfair way by a dominant party. This is not to say that termination of an owner's access to common elements cannot constitute oppression. However, on the facts of this case, Mr. Niedermeier has not persuaded me that he was oppressed. While the steps chosen by the Corporation may be subject to criticism for not following written policy, Mr. Niedermeier's conduct in this matter is not above reproach, for failing to pay a debt that was, by written policy, due to the Corporation.

[32] With respect to the compensation claimed, there is no evidence before me to support the claim that Mr. Niedermeier should be refunded his common expenses for six months. The common expenses include many matters, other than the 5 rooms in question, for example, utilities, insurance, maintenance, repairs, a reserve fund, waste disposal, cable television, snow removal, landscaping, management fees. There is no estimate provided as to what portion of the common expenses can be attributed to the rooms. Moreover, it appears that Mr. Niedermeier did in fact have some access to at least the lounge during the six months.

2. Reimbursement of legal fees incurred by Mr. Niedermeier arising out of a parking space incident at the Corporation:

[33] On June 12, 2003, Ms. Shoales, a unit owner at the Corporation, advertised a parking space for rent. Mr. Niedermeier left a message for Ms. Shoales that he was interested in renting the parking space. On June 13, 2003, Ms. Shoales attended at the management office and stated she did not want to rent her space to Mr. Niedermeier. Later that afternoon Ms. Shoales re-attended and told Mr. Allan of the management office that Mr. Niedermeier had parked his car in her space and she wanted it removed. Mr. Allan left a message on Mr. Niedermeier's telephone and told him to remove his vehicle. Mr. Niedermeier called Mr. Allan the next day and told him it was not his vehicle. He says he was called an idiot and told he had committed a criminal offence. Mr. Allan explained that he had been called by Ms. Shoales and had acted on her information. Mr. Allan apologized twice for the inconvenience. Mr. Allan indicates that Mr. Niedermeier then left a series of threatening telephone messages. Mr. Allan wrote to Mr. Niedermeier on July 3, 2003, explaining how he had come to contact Mr. Niedermeier on the complaint by Ms. Shoales. On July 15, 2003, Mr. Niedermeier wrote to the board, requesting a meeting. On that day, July 15, 2003, Mr. Niedermeier met with the President of the board after Mr. Niedermeier, by telephone, requested a meeting. On July 16, 2003, the board wrote a letter of apology to Mr. Niedermeier. Mr. Niedermeier testified in cross-examination that he understood that the board was apologizing to him for any inconvenience as a result of the mistake concerning the car parked in Ms. Shoales' spot. Mr. Niedermeier wrote a letter on July 19, 2003, again asking for a meeting with the board, having received the July 16, 2003, letter of apology. He wrote, in part:

Mr. President; once more I have to waste my precious time, begging you again for a serious Collective Board of Directors discussion.

How on earth can the Board of Directors reach a conclusive resolution without my presence?

Quite frankly, It speaks for itself that there is a huge Pattern of serious ill decisions, Cover up, Brain wash, Fabrications, Not to mention illicit activities throughout some time on a Army of Egomaniacs in this Corporation.

[34] On August 14, 2003, the board replied by letter to Mr. Niedermeier. The letter stated:

Dear Mr. Niedermeier:

Your letter dated July 19th to Bob Girard was addressed at our board meeting last week. It would appear that you do not believe the Board of Directors had all the facts concerning the incident of the indoor parking space. Such is not the case.

Your meeting with Mr. Girard on July 15th confirmed the facts that led to a false assumption concerning the car parked in 1350 parking garage. There was certainly no “cover-up” or “fabrication”. We acknowledge that an error was made.

We apologized for any inconvenience that this situation caused. More we cannot do. We now consider this matter closed and trust you will do so too.

Yours sincerely,

[35] By letter dated September 19, the board wrote to Mr. Niedermeier, again acknowledging and apologizing for the error over the parking issue. The letter advised him that the issue was closed and that a meeting with the board would serve no purpose. Mr. Niedermeier responded with a letter dated September 29, 2003, threatening litigation against the Corporation “for their actions of cruelty and illicit action”. The Corporation responded by letter dated October 29, 2003, stating that the parking space incident was no longer open to discussion; but if there were other issues, Mr. Niedermeier could submit those in writing. A director of the Corporation, Mr. Fuller, met with Mr. Niedermeier on November 12, 2003.

[36] In December 2003, Mr. Niedermeier hired a paralegal, Legal Concepts Inc., who raised the parking issue again, and among other things, renewed the request to meet with the board.

[37] Mr. Niedermeier again wrote the board on September 30, 2004 requesting an opportunity to present his version of the parking incident in person.

[38] The board agreed by letter dated October 6, 2004, to have Mr. Niedermeier attend the meeting of the board on November 3, 2004. On October 7, 2004 Mr. Niedermeier advised that he intended to bring legal counsel to the directors’ meeting. The board decided that it would not meet with Mr. Niedermeier and his counsel unless the board also had its lawyer present, and unless Mr. Niedermeier advised the board in writing of the specific issues he wanted to address at the meeting. The board so informed Mr. Niedermeier by letter dated October 13, 2004. On November 2, 2004, Legal Concepts Inc. wrote to the board, advising that Mr. Niedermeier no longer required a lawyer at the board meeting, but would have a paralegal present. The board replied November 2, 2004, advising it was too late for the board to reconsider its decision not to invite Mr. Niedermeier to its November 2, 2004 meeting.

[39] On November 2, 2004, the board commenced its meeting. Mr. Niedermeier appeared at the door of the room and began pounding on the door, demanding access. After approximately 15 minutes, Mr. Niedermeier left the area.

[40] I recite this lengthy background regarding the parking space incident to give context to the claim by Mr. Niedermeier for reimbursement for legal fees which he states were incurred by him arising out of the incident.

[41] On August 21, 2003, the Corporation sent to Mr. Niedermeier an account from the Corporation's lawyer, Fine & Deo, for $429.47, rendered by the solicitors to the Corporation on July 31, 2003. The services were stated by the Corporation to have been rendered due to harassment of Mr. Allan and a unit owner (Ms. Shoales). The amount was described as a charge back fee to Mr. Niedermeier's unit. On February 26, 2004 the Corporation sent another letter to Mr. Niedermeier, this time with an account from the solicitors for the Corporation for $338.66, regarding Mr. Niedermeier's request for a meeting.

[42] Mr. Niedermeier had retained his own solicitor, Sara Zakir, who wrote the Corporation on March 24, 2004, denying

Mr. Niedermeier's responsibility for the two accounts. She ended her letter by stating:

Because of the position taken by the Board and Management, Mr. Niedermeier has had to incur legal fees of his own. Should the Corporation and Management continue to take the position that Mr. Niedermeier is liable for the aforementioned chargeback, Mr. Niedermeier will be seeking to recover his legal costs from the Corporation.

[43] On April 29, 2004, the Corporation wrote to Mr. Niedermeier, referring to Ms. Zakir's letter. The Corporation stated:

We have sought counsel and it is their opinion that these costs do not fall within the areas recoverable by placing a lien. Therefore, we are placing them in abeyance and not proceeding with the legal action.

[44] Mr. Niedermeier submits that the Corporation has been guilty of oppressive conduct and unfair disregard of his interests in trying to levy as charge-backs the Corporation's legal fees arising out of the parking lot issue. He seeks $1,735.00 for the account of Legal Concepts Inc. and $2,475.00 for the account of Sarah Zakir, as compensation under the oppression remedy. Mr. Niedermeier submits that the oppression remedy can be used as a tool to bring back balance where one party has been able to leverage its position.

[45] The Corporation submits that there is no obligation on the board to meet with unit owners. In fact, the President and a Director met with Mr. Niedermeier on this issue and there were several letters of apology from the board. The Corporation also refers to Mr. Niedermeier harassing Ms. Shoales, including multiple messages left by Mr. Niedermeier on her answering machine, together with four to five occasions when Mr. Niedermeier attended at her unit and knocked on her door, and a strongly worded letter of April 22, 2004, where Mr. Niedermeier demanded that Ms. Shoales pay his legal fees for wrongly accusing him (of parking in her parking space), failing which he would commence action against her for libel and slander.

[46] The Corporation submits that it was reasonable for the Corporation to seek legal advice within the context of Mr. Niedermeier's conduct over this issue. The Corporation contends that it would be remiss in its duties if it did not seek legal advice on the question of harassment of Ms. Shoales. The Corporation submits that it is beyond dispute that it had a right under the by-laws to claim indemnification for its legal costs. The only issue was whether it could impose a charge-back or lien for those costs. The Corporation in fact could not lien those costs.

[47] I am of the opinion that Mr. Niedermeier's claim for reimbursement for his legal and paralegal fees as compensation for oppressive conduct and unfair disregard cannot succeed. Mr. Niedermeier submits that the oppression complained of consisted of the attempt to charge back to his unit the amounts of the two accounts of the solicitors for the Corporation. Given the tortured history of the parking space issue and Mr. Niedermeier's unrelenting demands, it was reasonable for the Corporation to seek legal advice. It was also within the rights of the Corporation to seek indemnification for its costs, as provided for by By-law No. 5. The fact that the indemnification could not be enforced by a charge-back, as it had once claimed, does not mean that it therefore acted in an abusive, burdensome or harsh manner, or that it unfairly disregarded the rights of Mr. Niedermeier. There is no reasonable parallel here to the examples of oppressive conduct and unfair disregard from the company law cases.

[48] The accounts of Legal Concepts Inc., for which Mr. Niedermeier claims compensation are almost entirely devoid of detail. One cannot determine what the charges relate to, even to the extent of determining whether they relate to Mr. Niedermeier's dealings with the Corporation. The account of Ms. Zakir which is presented by Mr. Niedermeier for reimbursement under the oppression remedy consists in large part of entries regarding one Marc Richard and litigation in which he was involved, none of which has been related to the matters in issue here. There is one reference in Ms. Zakir's account, to a meeting of 1.3 hours on March 23, 2004, with Mr. Niedermeier, at which Mr. Richard's case was discussed and at which Ms. Zakir reviewed the issue of the charge-back and received instructions to write to the Corporation. There is no breakdown of how much of the 1.3 hour meeting concerned itself with the issues here. I also note that Ms. Zakir's letter of March 24, 2003 indicated that if the Corporation continued with the charge-back, Mr. Niedermeier would seek to recover his legal costs. The Corporation responded that it would not pursue the charge-back.

3. Reimbursement of legal fees incurred by Mr. Niedermeier with respect to a criminal charge on which he was found guilty:

[49] On November 18, 2004, at about 6:45 a.m., Mr. Girard, the President of the Corporation, went to the Corporation's underground garage to pick up a box from his car. While he was picking up the box from the back seat of the car, Mr. Niedermeier approached him. Mr. Niedermeier stood less than a meter away and yelled at Mr. Girard. Mr. Niedermeier then said "How much longer you want to live for?" Mr. Girard yelled for help. Mr. Niedermeier then called him a coward, spit in Mr. Girard's face and headed towards his own vehicle. Mr.

Girard, who was fearful for his safety, reported the incident to the police. The police charged Mr. Niedermeier with assault. Mr. Niedermeier was convicted of assault on December 1, 2005.

[50] Mr. Niedermeier now claims that he should be compensated by the Corporation for his legal fees of $930.00, incurred with P.A.I.N.S. and Associates Inc., for his criminal charge, on the basis that he has been oppressed. As I understand the submission, it is this:

1. After the police charged Mr. Niedermeier, Mr. Girard did not show sufficient interest in the charge to follow-up with the police (although he attended at the trial and Mr. Niedermeier was convicted).
2. The Corporation brought a civil action against Mr. Niedermeier about one month after the criminal charge, for a restraining order.
3. Mr. Niedermeier consented to an order in that civil action on April 8, 2005, restraining him from contacting Mr. Guard and his wife.
4. Therefore it was not necessary to proceed with the criminal charge and Mr. Niedermeier should not have had to incur legal fees in relation to the charge.

[51] I am at a loss to understand the merits of this submission. The police, not Mr. Girard and not the Corporation, charged Mr. Niedermeier with assault. Mr. Niedermeier was convicted of the offence. Mr. Niedermeier consented to the restraining order. There is nothing to indicate he did so on some understanding that the criminal charge would not proceed. Because the charge was laid by the police, and not by private information, any decision to withdraw the charge was for the police and the Crown to make. The Corporation had no authority to “withdraw” the charge. There is nothing remotely suggestive of oppression by the Corporation as regards this issue.

4. Reimbursement of legal fees incurred by Mr. Niedermeier with respect to a civil action brought against him by the Corporation which was settled by a consent order:

[52] This pertains to the restraining order referred to immediately above. The Corporation brought an application against Mr. Niedermeier, for an order that he comply with s. 117 of the Condominium Act. Section 117 provides:

No person shall permit a condition to exist or carry on an activity in a unit or in the common element ... if the condition or the activity is likely to damage the property of or cause injury to the individual.

[53] On consent, the Corporation and Mr. Niedermeier agreed to an order, granted by Klowak J. on April 8, 2005, restraining Mr. Niedermeier from harassing or intimidating the staff and directors of the Corporation, and in particular Mr. Girard and his wife. Mr. Niedermeier was prohibited for a period of 24 months from coming within 5 meters of those individuals or talking to them. Of particular significance to the claim before me, the order provided that the parties would bear their own legal costs.

[54] It is unclear to me how Mr. Niedermeier can now claim his costs of that application, incurred with one Jennifer Morgan, Law Clerk, apparently in the sum of $3,860.00. The matter is res judicata. In any event, I can find no oppressive conduct by the Corporation related to that application.

5. Compensation for mental anguish and stress:

[55] Mr. Niedermeier submits that the Corporation engaged in a pattern of conduct, beginning in 2000 with the Corporation's attempts to recover the $141.60 for the damage to the canopy and the staining of the carpet, termination of access to the 5 rooms, progressing through the parking incident, and ending with the civil and criminal proceedings, as a result of which he has suffered stress and anguish and for which he wants compensation in addition to reimbursement of his legal fees. Mr. Niedermeier submits he should recover $5,000.00 to $10,000.00 under the oppression remedy, for what he says has been "a difficult situation".

[56] No medical or psychological evidence was presented. The only evidence appears to be the allegations by Mr. Niedermeier that this was all very stressful for him and that anger and resentment built up in him over the failure or refusal of the board and management to respond as he believed they should.

[57] By reason of the fact that I have found that Mr. Niedermeier has not proven oppressive conduct on the part of the Corporation, there is no basis for me to award compensation or damages for stress and anguish.

6. Compensation for personal expenses incurred by Mr. Niedermeier.

[58] Mr. Niedermeier had sought $1,500.00 on May 6, 2005 for loss of four days work, plus correspondence and typing services in connection with these matters. He now claims to have missed another two days of work, which he says brings his claim to $2,000.00.

[59] This claim must fail because I have found no oppressive conduct by the Corporation.

Conclusion:

[60] For the reasons given, I dismiss the application of Mr. Niedermeier.

[61] If the parties are unable to agree upon costs, I will receive written submissions by July 15, 2006, delivered to Thunder Bay.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

McArthur J.

[1] This is an appeal from an assessment of goods and services tax (GST) by the Minister of National Revenue (the Minister) under the Excise Tax Act (the Act) for $19,860 tax, $3,193 penalty and $2,478 interest for the period May 1, 1998 to April 1, 2000. The Appellant was represented by a unit owner, Mr. Gordon McIntosh, who was also a director of the condominium board.

[2] The Appellant is a corporation constituted according to the Condominium Property Act (CPA)^[1] of Alberta. It managed a commercial condominium in the Strathcona Business Park in Edmonton. It collected condominium fees from the 132 unit-owners including $136,058 for the one-year period ending April 30, 1999 and $147,666 for the period ending April 30, 2000, for a total of $283,724. Residential condominiums are specifically exempt from GST under the Act, but commercial condominiums are not.

[3] At the outset of trial, the Respondent requested that an adjournment be granted to permit the Respondent to review the Appellant's documentation with respect to an application for input tax credits (ITCs) pursuant to subsection 169(4) of the Act. The Appellant's agent was not interested in that approach and at his request the hearing proceeded. Further, the Respondent asked for an adjournment to permit the Appellant to notify the Attorney General of each province with respect to a possible constitutional challenge in that it appeared the Appellant is stating that the CPA, Alberta legislation (section 65), takes precedence over the Excise Tax Act. Again, I decided not to grant such adjournment before hearing the Appellant's argument.

[4] The Appellant made taxable supplies of administrative and management services to the owners of the units in the condominium complex for consideration equal to at least the amount of the condominium fees it received of $136,058 for the reporting period ending April 30, 1999 and $147,666 for the reporting period ending April 30, 2000. The Appellant was required to collect and report 7% of both amounts being $9,524 for the period ending April 30, 1999 and $10,336 for the period ending April 30, 2000 pursuant to subsection 165(1) and insufficient information was provided for ITCs in accordance with subsection 169(4).

[5] The Appellant's primary position is that it is strictly an agent for the owners, its principals, and acted as such at all times and was never engaged in a "commercial activity". It adds that it provides administrative services as directed by the owners in helping with the CPA and its own by-laws. In this vein, the Appellant's principal (the owners) can by resolution, dissolve the Appellant (section 60 of the CPA) and can acquire or dispose of any of the Appellant's interest in real property. Upon terminating the Appellant condominium corporation, the owners can transfer ownership of the real property previously retained by the Appellant.

[6] Mr. McIntosh presented secondary arguments including: (a) pursuant to section 65 of the CPA, the Appellant is not liable for GST; and (b) the Appellant did not provide "taxable supplies" as defined in the Act and does not meet the definition of "commercial activity" (section 123).

Analysis

[7] The Appellant's agency argument is, by far, its strongest position and I will deal with it first. If the Appellant can establish that its relationship with the owners was one at law of principal and agent then the payment of condominium fees does not attract GST because the owners remained the beneficial owners of the condominium fees simply directing their agent (the Appellant) to pay for the maintenance of their units and their common elements.

[8] Mr. James Thomas Clarke was the only witness and he represented himself together with all the other owners. Through him several documents were entered including the Appellant's by-laws, correspondence with Canada Customs and Revenue Agency (CCRA), the Appellant's financial statements for the years in question, and title documents. I allowed these documents over counsel for the Respondent's objections. As an owner and director of the Appellant, he had personal knowledge of all entries. Mr. Clarke testified that the Appellant managed the real property, keeping its own separate bank account, repairing and maintaining the real property and paying the maintenance bills. He admitted the Appellant could borrow funds, employ personnel, hire a management firm and generally take all the actions necessary to manage and maintain the common elements. For practical purposes, what the owners maintained exclusively was the interior of their unit from the paint inward.

[9] Pursuant to subsection 6(2) of the CPA title to the common property is held by the owners. Subsections 6(1) and (2) provide:

6(1) The Registrar, in issuing a certificate of title for a unit, shall certify on it the owner's share in the common property.

6(2) The common property comprised in a registered condominium plan is held by the owners of all the units as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit factors for their respective units.

(emphasis added)

Subsections 25(1), (2) and (3) provide:

25(1) On the registration of a condominium plan, there is constituted a corporation under the name "Condominium Corporation No. ___" and the number to be specified is the number given to the plan registration.

25(2) A corporation consists of all those persons

(a) who are owners of units in the parcel to which the condominium plan applies, or

(b) who are entitled to the parcel when the condominium arrangement is terminated pursuant to section 60 or 61.

25(3) Without limiting the powers of the corporation under this or any other Act, a corporation may

(a) sue for and in respect of any damage or injury to the common property caused by any person, whether an owner or not, and

(b) be sued in respect of any matter connected with the parcel for which the owners are jointly liable.

(emphasis added)

Subsection 28 provides:

28(1) A corporation shall have a board of directors that is to be constituted as provided by the bylaws of the corporation.

28(2) Every member of a board shall exercise the powers and discharge the duties of the office of member of the board honestly and in good faith.

28(3) Where a member of the board has a material interest in any agreement, arrangement or transaction to which the corporation is or is to become a party, that person

(a) shall declare to the board that person's interest in the agreement, arrangement or transaction,

(b) shall not vote in respect of any matter respecting that agreement, arrangement or transaction, and

(c) shall not be counted when determining whether a quorum exists when a vote or other action is taken in respect of the agreement, arrangement or transaction.

28(4) Subsection (3) does not apply to an agreement, arrangement or transaction in which the member of the board has a material interest if that material interest exists only by virtue of that member of the board owning a unit.

28(5) A corporation shall, within 30 days from the conclusion of the corporation's annual general meeting, file at the land titles office a notice in the prescribed form stating the names and addresses of the members of the board.

28(6) Notwithstanding subsection (5), a corporation may at any time following a change in

(a) the membership of the board,

(b) the name of a member of the board, or

(c) the address of a member of the board, file at the land titles office a notice in the prescribed form stating the change.

28(7) The powers and duties of a corporation shall, subject to any restriction imposed or direction given in a resolution passed at a general meeting, be exercised and performed by the board of the corporation.

28(8) A person who

(a) is a bona fide third party dealing at arm's length with the corporation, and

(b) does not have notice of a restriction or direction referred to in subsection (7), is not liable for or otherwise affected or bound by any breach of or failure to follow that restriction or direction by the corporation.

28(9) All acts done in good faith by a board are, notwithstanding that it is afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the election or appointment or continuance in office of any member of the board, as valid as if the member had been properly elected or appointed or had properly continued in office.

28(10) At least $\frac{2}{3}$ of the membership of the board of directors of the corporation shall be unit owners or mortgagees unless the bylaws provide otherwise.

Subsections 32(1) and (2) provide:

32(1) The bylaws shall regulate the corporation and provide for the control, management and administration of the units, the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property.

32(2) The owners of the units and anyone in possession of a unit are bound by the bylaws.

Subsections 37 and 65 provides:

37(1) A corporation is responsible for the enforcement of its bylaws and the control, management and administration of its real and personal property and the common property.

37(2) Without restricting the generality of subsection (1), the duties of a corporation include the following:

(a) to keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property;

(b) to comply with notices or orders by any municipal authority or public authority requiring repairs to or work to be done in respect of the parcel.

37(3) A corporation may by a special resolution acquire or dispose of an interest in real property.

65 The corporation is not liable in relation to a unit and the share in the common property assigned to the unit for any rate, charge or tax levied by the Crown, a local authority as defined in the Municipal Government Act or any other authority that has the power to assess and levy rates, charges or taxes on land or in respect of the ownership of land.

[10] The Appellant had the onus of establishing, on a balance of probabilities, that it was an agent for the individual owners. CCRA, in the GST/HST Policy Statement,^[2] sets out a range of tests to assist in determining whether an agency relationship exists. I find these helpful and in keeping with established case law. The essential qualities of an agency relationship include the following: (i) consent of both the principal and the agent; (ii) authority of the agent to affect the principal's legal position; and (iii) the principal's control of the agent's actions. I will apply some of these tests to the present situation starting with the first three "essential qualities".

[11] Consent of both the principal and the agent. The condominium corporation consists of all the unit owners (subsection 25(2) of CPA). They appoint or elect a Board of Directors that is answerable to all the owners. The directors operate the condominium corporation as the owners' representatives or agents. They report directly to the owners. They are not in business for themselves. I find nothing in the documentation that provides for compensation for their efforts other than being reimbursed for their out-of-pocket expenses. Paragraph 28(1)(7) of the CPA provides that the directors are subject to restrictions or directions imposed by the owners at an annual general meeting. I infer that the owners and the Appellant (which operates through the directors) consented to a principal and agent relationship. The first essential quality is answered in favour of the Appellant's position.

[12] Authority of the agent to affect the principal's legal position. The by-laws of the Appellant provide for the control, management of all the property and the owners are bound by these by-laws (subsections 32(1) and (2) of the CPA). The Appellant has consent and authority to legally bind the owners. Section 25 of the CPA states that the owners are jointly liable. This indicates that the owners are responsible for the acts of the Appellant and that the owners are exposed to potential risks. In addition, the Appellant can enter into contracts with third parties on behalf of the owners. Counsel for the Respondent points out that the corporation can sue or be sued (subsection 25(3)) but the condominium corporation is made up of the owners. The corporation cannot be separated from the owners. It is not an independent legal entity. Paragraph 25(3)(b) states that the corporation can be sued with respect to the parcel of land and the owners are jointly liable. This second essential quality of an agency relationship exists.

[13] The principal's control of the agent's actions. The powers of the Appellant are vested in the board and subject to restrictions and directions imposed at general meetings of the owners. Further, several sections of the Bylaws and the CPA place requirements on the Appellant. For example, By-law 3.02(b) requires the owners' consent to borrow monies; subsection 37(3) requires a special resolution of the owners in order for the Appellant to acquire an interest or dispose of an interest in real property; section 63 of the CPA provides that the owners, by special resolution, can transfer the ownership of the Appellant's bare land units; and section 78 of the CPA states that contractors retained by the Appellant can register a lien against units in the complex.

[15] The condominium corporation is not an independent entity. It exists because of the owners and on behalf of the owners. It does not carry on business on its own. It is a creature of the owner who, for expediency and efficiency, elect a board of directors at the pleasure and under the control of the owners. The owners, by majority vote, have complete control over the corporation. The corporation assumes no risks, it can effect the liability of the owners in respect of strangers to the relationship by the making of contracts or the disposition of property. The following is the classic definition of agency found in The Law of Agency:^[3]

Agency is the relationship that exists between two persons when one, called the agent, is considered in law to represent the other, called the principal, in such a way as to be able affect the principal's legal position in respect of strangers to the relationship by the making of contracts or the disposition of property.

The relationship between the Appellant and the unit owners easily fits within this definition. The corporation (agent) exists for the owners (principal) and the owners' legal position in the respect of strangers is affected by the Appellant entering into contracts.

[17] The Federal Court of Appeal in Glengarry Bingo Assn. v. R.^[4] held that risk is a significant factor in determining whether an agency relationship exists. The Court further sets out three essential qualities of agency:

P-182 identified three essential qualities of agency. These are the consent of both the Principal and Agent, the authority of the Agent to Affect the Principal's Legal Position and the Principal's Control of the Agent's Action. Since I find that GBA did not have the capacity to affect the legal position of its Members, I find it unnecessary to address the other factors which Revenue Canada has indicated are required for a finding of agency.

In contrast to this, I have no difficulty concluding that the present Appellant corporation had the capacity to affect the legal position of the unit owners. Another indication of an agency relationship is that a portion of the condominium fees is held by the Appellant in a reserve or trust fund for the owners. Clearly, the corporation was the unit owners' agent. The corporation is not a separate entity from the owners. Pursuant to the CPA, the owners are obligated to operate through a corporation which exists solely because of them and for them. The Appellant being an agent of the owners, no GST is payable unless the Act provides differently.

[18] A brief review of the relevant sections follows. Subsection 221(1) of the Act provides that every person who makes a taxable supply shall collect GST. The definition of "taxable supply" in subsection 123(1) includes "... a supply that is made in the course of a commercial activity".

[19] Subsection 123(1) of the Act defines "commercial activity" to include "a business carried on ... other than a business carried on without a reasonable expectation of profit ...". The corporation carried on a non-profit business and does not meet the definition of commercial activity because it had no expectation of profit. Counsel for the Respondent argues that the Minister gets over this hurdle by the definition of "business" in subsection 123(1), which is very broad and states:

"business" includes ... undertaking of any kind whatever, whether the activity or undertaking is engaged in for profit, and any activity engaged in on a regular or continuous basis that involves the supply of property by way of lease, licence or similar arrangement, but does not include an office or employment;

[20] The brief reference by both parties to ITCs is not sufficient to make a finding. Finally, it is not necessary to consider the Appellant's section 65 submission but I have no difficulty in agreeing with the Respondent's position and it was unnecessary to notify the Attorneys General of the provinces.

[21] The appeal is allowed.

REASONS FOR DECISION

PERELL, J.

Introduction and Overview

[1] The plaintiff Peel Standard Condominium Corporation No. 668 (“Peel 668”) is part of a “Christian Lifestyle” condominium project in Brampton, Ontario. Peel 668 sues: (a) Dayspring Phase I Limited (“Dayspring”), which was the declarant of the condominium project that established Peel 668; (b) Brampton Pentecostal Church Incorporated (“BP Church”), which had been the owner of the lands upon which the condominium project was constructed; (c) six individuals who had been appointed by Dayspring to be the original members of the Board of Directors of Peel 668 (“Declarant Board Members”); (d) 695598 Ontario Limited, operating as Maple Ridge Property Management (“Maple Ridge”), which provided property management services for the project; (e) and Corpfinance International Limited (“Corpfinance”), which entered into a $1.7 million loan agreement with Dayspring, which loan agreement was assumed by Peel 668.

[2] The defendants Dayspring, BP Church, and the Declarant Board Members, bring third party proceedings against Miller Thomson LLP, which had been the solicitors for Dayspring for, amongst other things, the $1.7 million loan agreement.

[3] Pursuant to Rule 20, the defendant Corpfinance moves for a summary judgment dismissing Peel 668’s action as against it. Corpfinance argues that there is no genuine issue to be tried that Peel 668 has no claim against it. Corpfinance relies on the principle that on a motion for summary judgment, the motions judge is entitled to assume that the record contains all the evidence that the party will present at trial: Dawson v. Rexcraft Storage & Warehouse Inc. 1998 CanLII 4831 (ON C.A.), (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257 (Ont. C.A.); Bluestone v. Enroute Restaurants Inc. 1994 CanLII 814 (ON C.A.), (1994), 18 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.). Corpfinance argues that Peel 668 has not been shown Corpfinance to have done anything wrong.

[4] Having reviewed the material filed on this motion, I agree with the argument of Corpfinance. It has satisfied the onus on it of establishing that there is no genuine issue for trial, and, therefore, I grant its motion for summary judgment.

[5] I will explain this conclusion below, but at the outset it is helpful to summarize the analysis that leads me to the conclusion that Peel 668 cannot succeed in its action against Corpfinance. The analysis proceeds along the following line of argument. Peel 668 alleges that the $1.7 million loan should not be enforced for five reasons: (1) the loan is ultra vires; (2) there was a breach of the disclosure requirements of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 with respect to the loan; (3) there was oppression of Peel 668 as defined by the Condominium Act, 1998 with respect to the loan; (4) equitable relief is available with respect to the loan; and (5) Corpfinance knew or ought to have known that full and proper disclosure had not been made with respect to the loan.

[6] The first reason, however, is unsound because the loan is not ultra vires. The remaining reasons are unsound because Corpfinance did nothing that would bring it within the remedial jurisdiction of the Condominium Act, 1998 or of equity. Put shortly, whatever other defendants may have done to Peel 668, it has not been shown that Corpfinance did anything wrong nor has it been shown that it should be held responsible for the wrongdoing of others.

[7] In arriving at the conclusion that the $1.7 million was not ultra vires, that is, it was infra vires, I accept that condominium corporations are creatures of statute, and they have not been given the capacity to contract of a natural person. Condominium corporations are subject to the doctrine of ultra vires, and they cannot enter into a contract that is beyond the authority conferred by their enabling statute. Further, condominium corporations must comply with the formalities of contract formation stipulated by the enabling legislation. If a condominium corporation enters into a contract that does not comply in form and substance with the requirements of the enabling legislation, then the contract is void. See: Noldon Investments Ltd. (1977), 1 R.P.R. 236 (Ont. H.C.J.); Condominium Plan No. 8222909 v. Francis, [2003] A.J. No. 976 (C.A.); Strata Plan 1261 v. 360204 B.C. Ltd., [1995] B.C.J. No. 2761 (B.C.S.C.).

[8] I rely, however, on the principle that there is a distinction between agreements that are intrinsically illegal and agreements that are tainted by illegality, if at all, in how they are performed. This principle was recognized by the Court of Appeal in Beer v. Townsgate I Limited (1997), 36 O.R. (3d) 137 (C.A.).

[9] In Beer v. Townsgate I Limited, the trial judge ruled that agreements for the purchase of condominium units were illegal and unenforceable because at the time of their signing, the vendor was not registered and therefore the vendor had contravened the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act “(ONHWPA)”. However, at the time the vendor entered into the agreements, the vendor had complied with all of the requirements for registration, and the agreements contained reference to the ONHWPA and made clear that the vendor intended to comply with the legislation. The Court noted that the agreements were not “inherently illegal” and that it was the intention of the parties to make a legal contract.

[10] In Beer v. Townsgate I Limited, the Court of Appeal held that the trial judge failed to appreciate that illegality as to contractual formation must be distinguished from illegality as to the performance of the contract. The Court of Appeal referred to Maschinenfabrik Seydelmann K.-G. v. Presswood Brothers Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 316, where Schroeder J.A. said at pp. 321-22:

What is forbidden by the statute and the Regulations under review is not malum per se but malum prohibitum, and in every case it becomes a crucial question whether the contract is capable or incapable of lawful performance. In the latter case, e.g., if the parties should agree to commit a crime, or if they should clearly agree to commit an act prohibited by statute, such a contract is intrinsically illegal since it necessarily involves an offence or a violation of the law. With much deference to the opinion of the learned trial Judge who decided against the plaintiff with some reluctance, he has failed to take into account the well-settled presumption of law in favour of the legality of a contract; that if a contract can be reasonably susceptible of two meanings or modes of performance, one legal and the other not, that interpretation is to be put upon it which will support it and give it operation.

[11] In the immediate case, the proper formalities were followed, and the $1.7 million loan was not intrinsically ultra vires, and it cannot become ultra vires after the fact because of the alleged misconduct, if any, of Dayspring, BP Church, the Declarant Board Members, Maple Ridge, or Miller Thomson, LLP.

[12] In arriving at my conclusion that Corpfinance did not do anything wrong, I have also rejected what I view as a logical fallacy in Peel 668's argument to resist the motion for summary judgment. As will be seen from the review of the facts below, in several instances, in negotiating and in implementing the $1.7 million loan, Corpfinance required compliance with provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 (and for that matter it required compliance with other laws and regulations). For example, Corpfinance required that there be proper disclosure under the Act, and from this fact, Peel 668 then argues that there is a genuine issue for trial about whether there was proper disclosure, and accordingly, Corpfinance's motion for summary judgment should be dismissed.

[13] The logical fallacy in this argument, is that assuming the $1.7 million loan was infra vires, and assuming that there is a genuine issue for trial about the failure of some defendants to comply with the Act, their misconduct, if found to exist, would not nullify the legality of the loan. Corpfinance is not privy or responsible for the misconduct of other defendants and indeed sought compliance with the Act. Put simply, Corpfinance certainly did not do anything wrong in requiring compliance with the Condominium Act, 1998 (or other legislation), and Corpfinance cannot itself be faulted if others breached their obligations or acted wrongfully.

[14] Before concluding this introduction and overview, I note that in support of its motion for a summary judgment, Corpfinance made the additional argument that even if the $1.7 million loan was ultra vires, then, nevertheless, the loan would still be repayable in whole or in part, by Peel 668, as a matter of the law of restitution. Because of the conclusion I have reached that the loan was infra vires, I make no ruling on the merits of this alternative argument.

[15] My Reasons for Decision will now proceed by setting out the facts together with my analysis of the claim against Corpfinance.

The Factual Background and the Analysis of the Case against Corpfinance

[16] For the purposes of this motion for summary judgment, it is not necessary to detail much of the history of the condominium project that led to Peel 668, which history begins in 1991 with plans for the Christian Lifestyle community in the City of Brampton.

[17] A description of the factual background may begin in May 2001, when Dayspring began negotiations with Corpfinance to obtain a loan. At that time, Dayspring was the developer of the condominium project for a Christian Lifestyle community in Brampton, Ontario that was to have several phases, including a phase of 24 bungalows, which phase constituted Peel Condominium Corporation No. 650 ("Peel 650") and a phase of mid-rise condominium apartment buildings, which was to become the plaintiff, Peel 668.

[18] On September 4, 2001, Peel 650 and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the as yet uncreated Peel 668 signed a commitment letter for the $1.7 million loan that is the subject of this action. This was followed on December 10, 2001 by the signing of a formal loan agreement by Corpfinance, Peel 650, and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the as yet uncreated Peel 668.

[19] Corpfinance's role was only as a lender. It is convenient to note here that it was conceded during argument that Corpfinance was not a declarant under the Condominium Act, 1998.

[20] On July 19, 2002, Peel 668 was officially created, and Dayspring appointed the Declarant Board Members on July 25, 2002. The previous day, the solicitors for Corpfinance requested confirmation that each purchaser had been advised of the financing in the disclosure required by the Condominium Act, 1998.

[21] On August 9, 2002, the Declarant Board Members approved By-law No. 4, which authorized Peel 668 to enter into the loan agreement, and By-law No. 4 was registered. On September 5, 2002, the loan was assumed by Peel 668 pursuant to an assignment agreement. On or about September 30, 2002, the Declarant Board Members directed Corpfinance to disburse the proceeds of the loan.

[22] On October 9, 2002, there was a "turnover meeting" and the Declarant Board Members were replaced by a new Board of Directors. Peel 668 pleads that Dayspring, BP Church, and the Declarant Board Members intentionally delayed the holding of the turnover meeting until the loan monies could be advanced.

[23] The new Board of Directors reviewed the disbursement of the monies, and in this action Peel 668 takes the position that there were a number of items that had never been disclosed as part of the common elements or there were items that unit owners already paid for as part of the purchase price for their unit.

[24] Peel 668 pleads in paragraphs 44 and 49 of its statement of claim that not all of the items were previously or properly disclosed to the purchasers of the units in the condominium development. In paragraphs 69 to 71, it pleads that loan monies in the amount of $974,627.28 were for items that were improperly or never disclosed to the purchasers as being a cost in addition to the purchase price in accordance with the original disclosure statement for the condominium project. (It may be noted that as an alternative to the plea that the $1.7 million loan is not binding, Peel 668 pleads that it is only liable to repay $680,000.)

46 fan coil units	$ 67,312.22
3 rooftop HVAC units	$ 6,652.00
3 make up air units for circulation to the building corridors	$121,857.00
137 apartment "B" vents and gas lines	$ 60,195.24
Bell phone wiring	$113,600.49
24 draft inducers for apartment "B" vents	$ 65,595.00
Main lobby furnishings	$ 15,151.00

[26] Mr. Francis also deposes that furnishings with a value of $70,000 were purchased but not paid for and that several items of Equipment that were described in the disclosure documents were never purchased.

[27] In paragraph 94 of its statement of claim, Peel 668 states that the loan is ultra vires as it is contrary to s. 56 (1)(e) of the Condominium Act, 1998 as the monies advanced were not for the purpose of carrying out the objects and duties of Peel 668. In particular, it was not proper to borrow money to pay construction costs to be borne by the developers of the project. Relying on s. 135 of the Act (the oppression remedy), in paragraph 95, Peel 668 alleges that this conduct is oppressive and unfairly prejudicial to Peel 668 and to the unit owners.

[28] It is, in effect, because a portion of the $1.7 million of loan monies were used to purchase certain items and not other items and because there was not proper disclosure of the items that were to be purchased from the loan proceeds that Peel 668 argues that loan from Corpfinance is ultra vires. As I have already noted above, I disagree with this argument, and I prefer the argument made by Corpfinance.

[29] Section 17 (2) of the Condominium Act, 1998 provides that the condominium corporation has the duty to control and administer the common elements and the assets of the corporation. Subsection 56 (1) of the Act requires that a by-law enacted by the board of directors of a condominium corporation must not be contrary to the Act or the declaration. Subsection 56 (6) provides that the by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration. In the case at bar, the purpose of the loan was to cover the financing of common elements of Peel 650 and Peel 668.

[30] Under s. 1 (1) of the Condominium Act, 1998, “common elements” are defined to mean “all the property except the units” and “units” is defined to mean “a part of the property designated as a unit by the description and includes the space enclosed by its boundaries and all of the land, structures and fixtures within this space in accordance with the declaration and description.” Thus, what items of property constitute the common elements of a particular condominium is a matter to be determined by the declaration and description of the particular condominium. In response to a question that I asked during argument, it was conceded that, generally speaking, the items that constitute the common elements are a variable for each condominium project.

[31] In the immediate case, the commitment letter and the loan agreement that was authorized by Bylaw No. 4 set out the items that were to be acquired with the proceeds of the loan and that were to become part of the common elements. There is nothing in these items that could not be a common element and, more significantly, there is nothing intrinsically illegal about a condominium corporation borrowing money for its common elements as they may be defined for that particular condominium project.

[32] The expressed purpose of the loan in the immediate case was to finance the purchase of “Equipment” to be part of the common elements. In reference to the purpose of the loan in the immediate case, several sections of the loan agreement should be noted:

- (a) The preamble to the agreement states: “Whereas pursuant to a commitment letter dated September 4, 2001, the Lender agreed to provide the Loan to the Phase Ia Corporation [Peel 650] and Dayspring on its own behalf and on behalf of the Phase Ib Corporation [Peel 668] (collectively, the “Borrowers” to finance the Equipment on the terms and conditions herein set forth;”
- (b) The loan agreement defines “common elements” as follows: “Common elements” means, together, the land building, fixtures, Equipment and structures and improvements of the Condominium, other than the Units, including without limitation, exterior landscaped areas, recreational facilities, parking facilities, hallways, elevators, and foyers and the Equipment.
- (c) Included in the definition of “common elements” is “the Equipment” which is defined as follows: “Equipment” means the Equipment forming part of the Common Elements of the Condominiums as set out in Schedule A, of which that Equipment described in Part A of Schedule A is installed in and forms part of the Common Elements of Peel Condominium Plan No. 650, and the Equipment described in Part B of Schedule A is installed in and forms part of the Common Elements and/or units of a condominium project located at 3, 7 and 10 Dayspring Circle, Brampton, Ontario and known as the Phase Ib Project [Peel 668].

(d) Schedule A states:

PART A

Phase 1a Corporation

1. 24 Gas Furnace and Venting Systems serving each residential unit

PART B

Phase 1b Corporation

1. 176 gas furnace/ hot water tank systems, including rooftop HVAC Units

2. Enterphone system for Gatehouse (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

3. Furnishings for Quest Suites (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

4. Law Sprinkler System (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

5. Village Hall Furnishings and Appliances (shared with Phase Ia Corporation)

(e) Article 2.02 provides that the Credit Facility is being made available to enable the Borrowers to finance the cost of the Equipment.

(f) Article 9.01 (j) is an affirmative covenant from the Borrowers that “the Borrowers shall use all Loans for financing of the Equipment.”

[33] Pausing here, in my opinion, there is a contract here capable of lawful performance. Further, there is the intention of the parties to make a legal contract; provisions of the loan agreement require compliance with the Condominium Act, 1998 (and other legislation). For example:

(a) Article 3.01 (c) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that: “the Borrowers and Phase Ib Corporation [Peel 668] shall have delivered to the Lender certified copies of the Constitutional Documents and of the resolutions authorizing the borrowings hereunder and of the incumbency of the officers or the Borrowers and the Phase Ib Corporation signing this Agreement and any documents to be provided pursuant to the provisions hereof;

(b) Article 3.01 (g)(i) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that: “the Condominiums have been completed and constructed in accordance with all relevant federal, provincial and municipal laws, requirements, standards, bylaws and codes, that the Units may be legally occupied, and that the Equipment has been installed in a good and workmanlike manner and is in good condition and working order;”

(c) Article 3.01 (i) requires as a condition for an advance under the loan that disclosure be made to unit purchasers about the loan. The article states: “the Lender shall have been provided with evidence satisfactory to the Lender that all of the Units have been sold to bona fide purchasers for value who are at arm's length to the builder and/or vendor of the Condominiums and that the financing constituted hereby has been disclosed to all such purchasers in the disclosure documentation required under the Act.”

- (d) Article 8.01 (a) is a warranty from the Borrowers that there is corporate authority. The warranty states that: “Each of the Borrowers has full corporate power and authority to enter into this Agreement and the Documents and to do all acts and execute and deliver all other documents as required hereunder or thereunder to be done, observed or performed by it in accordance with their terms.”
- (e) Article 8.01 (b) is a warranty from the Borrowers of valid authorization. This warranty provides that: “Each of the Borrowers has taken all necessary corporate action to authorize the creation, execution, delivery and performance of this Agreement and the Documents and to observe and perform the provisions of each in accordance with its terms.
- (f) Article 8.01 (c) is a warranty from the Borrowers of the validity of documents and enforceability. This warranty includes the provision that: “Neither the execution and delivery of this Agreement or any Document, nor compliance with the terms and conditions of any of them, (i) has resulted or will result in a violation of the Constitutional Documents of the Borrowers or any resolutions passed by the Board of Directors of each of the Borrowers or any applicable law, rule, regulation, order, judgment, injunction, award or decree, including without limitation the Act [defined to mean the Condominium Act, 1998, of Ontario, as amended, supplemented or replaced from time to time].”

- (g) Article 9.01 (c) is an affirmative covenant from the Borrowers of compliance with Legislation that states: “The Borrowers shall do or cause to be done all acts necessary or desirable to comply with all material applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws requirements or standards including without limitation, the requirements of the Act [defined to mean the Condominium Act, 1998, of Ontario, as amended, supplemented or replaced from time to time] and all requirements of Environmental Law . . .”

[34] Thus, in my opinion, Corpfinance made a loan that had a lawful purpose that was consistent with the condominium corporation's enabling legislation and for which the proper formalities were followed. Further, Corpfinance intended that the loan comply with all legal requirements and indeed imposed legality as a term of the loan agreement.

[35] Upon analysis, it would appear that Peel 668's complaint is not so much that the loan is ultra vires, but rather that Dayspring failed to properly appropriate the funds to purchase the Equipment that was to be part of the common elements and that certain purchasers should not have to pay part of their purchase price for items that they would be charged for again as part of the common element expense. These may be legitimate complaints against Dayspring but, in my opinion, they do not make the loan itself ultra vires.

[36] An illustration of my analysis may be helpful. Peel 668 complains that the loan proceeds were used to pay for Bell phone wiring with a value of $113,600.00. There is nothing inherently illegal or inconsistent with the Condominium Act, 1998 about phone wiring equipment being part of the common elements. However, under the loan agreement's definition of “Equipment,” it is arguable that phone wiring does not fall within the particular definition of Equipment described in Part B of Schedule A, which is to be installed in and to form part of the common elements of Peel 668. If this is correct, then using the loan monies for this purpose would be an illegal performance of a contract otherwise capable of being performed lawfully. As I view the result, this would be a malum prohibitum but it would not be a malum per se that would vitiate the contract. Similar arguments may be made about other items in the list of disputed items and there is also the argument that the financing of the item for inclusion in the common elements was proper in any event.

[37] In this regard, it is, interesting to note that it was conceded during argument by counsel for Peel 668 that a portion of the loan proceeds would have to be repaid to Corpfinance, but she submitted that this was a matter that should be left for the trial judge. I see it differently. In Hongkong Bank of Canada v. Wheeler Hldg Ltd., 1993 CanLII 148 (S.C.C.), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 167, Sopinka, J. for the Court noted that the ultra vires doctrine to the extent that it still applies in Canada should be applied narrowly. He stated at p. 202:

As is noted in Palmer's Company Law (24th ed. 1987), vol. 1, at pp. 143-44, "in modern law the courts are unlikely to hold a contract to be ultra vires the company unless, on a reasonable construction of the objects clause and the other clauses of the memorandum and articles, there are compelling grounds to arrive at that result."

[38] The case at bar is not a case such as Strata Plan 1261 v. 360204 B.C. Ltd., supra, where the condominium corporation entered into an agreement allowing the defendant the exclusive use of all parking spaces in the parking garage, which was an arrangement where the condominium would lose the benefit of property that belonged to the common elements. The agreement in that case was inherently contrary to the provisions of the British Columbia condominium legislation. It was malum per se. In the immediate case, as I have already said there is nothing inherently illegal in a condominium corporation financing the purchase of equipment to be included in the common elements that it is to manage.

[39] Based on the evidence submitted on this motion for summary judgment, the $1.7 million loan was not ultra vires. The loan was infra vires, and if Dayspring performed the lawful loan improperly by failing to properly appropriate or by misappropriating loan monies, then Peel 668's remedy is against Dayspring.

[40] Similarly, in my opinion, Peel 668's allegations that that was a violation of the provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 that prohibit a declarant from making false and misleading statements and that there was inadequate and improper disclosure made to the unit purchasers do not make the $1.7 loan ultra vires. That there was inadequate disclosure of an infra vires loan would not nullify the loan. Although I obviously cannot and do not make any finding, the allegations against Dayspring and others about improper disclosure may be true, but Corpfinance is not the perpetrator of the wrongs and rather required that there be compliance with the Act.

[41] Peel 668 alleges that it has been the victim of oppressive or unfairly prejudicial conduct or conduct that unfairly disregards its interests. Once again, I cannot and do not make any finding apart from concluding that there is no genuine issue for trial that Corporate was not a party to any misconduct and its only role was a lender to the condominium project that sought compliance with the Act.

[42] The case of Thomson v. Quality Mechanical Service Inc. (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 234 (S.C.J.) provides an analogy. In that case, C. Campbell, J. granted a motion for summary judgment brought by the Royal Bank against a shareholder who sought a remedy against a corporation and against the Royal Bank under the oppression remedy provisions of the Ontario Business Corporation Act, which are comparable to the oppression remedy provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998. The shareholder had a legitimate complaint against the corporation for oppression but did not have a claim against the Royal Bank because the acts of oppressive conduct must be the acts of those who control the corporation. C Campbell, J. held that the oppression remedy was available against those responsible for the corporation but not against third parties, who had no role in the control or operation of the corporation.

[43] In the Thomson case, the Royal Bank had committed a wrong to the corporation and the oppression remedy was still not available. The position of Corpfinance is stronger in the immediate case because it was not a declarant under the Act and had no disclosure obligations to the unit holders and it was not a privy to any misconduct if any by the other defendants. If there has been non-compliance with the provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998 then Corpfinance is also a victim in the sense that the non-compliance would be a breach of the loan agreement, which required compliance with the Act.

[44] This last comment brings me to Peel 668's reliance on equity and on its submission that Corpfinance knew or ought to have known that full and proper disclosure had not been made with respect to the loan as the grounds for relief against Corpfinance. In paragraphs 84 and 85 of its factum, Peel 668 states:

84. Courts are often faced with a situation wherein they must decide which one of two innocent parties is to bear the loss occasioned by a third. In this regard, the law has held that the loss should fall upon the party who could have prevented the loss through the exercise of reasonable care, or who has enabled the third party to occasion the loss.

85. A Court could find as between [Peel 668] and Corpfinance, it is Corpfinance who should bear any loss occasioned on the basis that;

(a) Corpfinance is a sophisticated commercial lender;

(b) Corpfinance was in a position to protect its interest unlike [Peel 668] who was vulnerable and had no party representing its interests;

(c) Corpfinance knew or ought to have known the inherent risks in lending money in this type of arrangement whereby a developer causes a condominium corporation to become liable under a loan which it had no involvement in the structure thereof; and

(d) Corpfinance's lack of due diligence in protecting its own interest under the Loan.

[45] With respect, once it is determined that the loan is infra vires, I do not see these submissions as the basis for equitable or other relief against Corpfinance. There must be some tether for equity's intervention, and a submission that equity should favour the weaker party is not a reason to deny Corpfinance's legal right to enforce its loan agreement.

[46] For these reasons I grant Corpfinance's motion for summary judgment. The parties may make written submissions with respect to costs within one month of the release of these Reasons for Decision.

BELOBABA J.:

[1] These applications arise out of a dispute between eight condominium corporations over the management and operation of their shared recreational facilities and the jurisdiction of the shared facilities committee. The dispute proceeded to arbitration. The Applicant now seeks to set aside the arbitral award under sections 45 and 46 of the Arbitration Act 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17, on the basis of error of law and reasonable apprehension of bias. In a counter-application, the Respondents seek to enforce the arbitral award under section 50 of the Arbitration Act.

Background

[2] The Applicant and Respondent condominium corporations (“SCC”) comprise the Ruperts Landing residential community, located on Georgian Bay, just west of Collingwood, Ontario. The Applicant, SCC 78, is a multi-level high-rise building; the seven Respondents, SCC 50, 52, 53, 56, 59, 63 and 64, are lower-level townhouse buildings. The shared recreational facilities consist of a recreation centre, a swimming pool, tennis courts and a marina (“the Shared Facilities”).)

[3] In 1988, the parties entered into a Shared Facilities Agreement “to provide for the mutual use and sharing of the total costs of operation, maintenance and repair of the shared facilities.” In 1997, the parties amended the agreement to deal with issues relating to the operation of the marina. All further references will be to the 1997 Shared Facilities Agreement or “SFA”.

[4] The SFA provides that the Shared Facilities are owned by the parties on a pro rata basis as tenants-in-common. The responsibility for operation, maintenance and repair is delegated to an eight-member Committee (“the Shared Facilities Committee” or “Committee”). The Committee consists of one representative from each of the condominium corporations. Five members constitute a quorum and all decisions are made by majority vote.

[5] Each year, the Committee is required to submit a Shared Facilities Budget setting out its cost estimates for the upcoming year under specific categories such as heat, hydro, water, staffing, equipment, maintenance and repairs. The Committee is also required to provide an annual estimate of the reserve funds that are needed for major repair or replacement. The eight condominium corporations, in turn, are required to remit their proportionate share to cover both the estimated operating costs and the required reserve. Typically, the condominium corporations remit these payments to the Committee on a monthly basis. The Committee spends the money as it deems necessary within the budgeted categories.

[6] The Committee’s management of the Shared Facilities under the 1997 SFA was uneventful for several years. Disagreements began in the year 2000. Concerns were voiced about the Committee’s handling of certain financial matters, alleged procedural irregularities, the proper allocation of costs between the Applicant and the Respondents and the power, authority and mandate of the Committee.

[7] Many of the disputes were between the Applicant’s residents, who are generally older and retired, and the Respondents’ residents who are generally younger and make more use of some of the recreational facilities. The differing perspectives on how the Committee should spend its budget, or whether, for example, a full-time recreation director was needed, often resulted in heated exchanges and disrupted Committee meetings.

[8] The dispute at its root is whether the Committee’s decisions require ratification by each condominium’s board of directors before they become binding, or are simply binding on their own. The Applicant endorses the former point of view, the Respondents the latter.

[9] Following an unsuccessful mediation, the matter proceeded to arbitration. The arbitrator initially suggested by the Applicant and eventually appointed by court order was Brian H. Somers.

[10] Mr. Somers held hearings on September 1, 2 and 3, 2004. Strictly speaking, only seven of the eight parties were made parties to the arbitration – SCC 64 did not participate, but agreed to be bound by the arbitrator’s decision.

[11] On September 1, 2004, prior to the commencement of the arbitration, the Applicant’s representative deposited affidavit and other materials with the arbitrator objecting to the Respondents’ counsel on the basis of conflict of interest, and to the arbitrator on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias. The Applicant’s representative advised the arbitrator that if he did not step down, or if the Respondents’ counsel remained on the record, it would appeal the arbitration decision. The Applicant further advised the arbitrator that it would continue to attend as an observer but would not present oral evidence. The arbitrator proceeded with the arbitration.

[12] The arbitrator released his Reasons for Decision on April 6, 2005, a Supplementary Decision on September 30, 2005 and an

Addendum on November 25, 2005. He also released his Arbitration Award on November 25, 2005 (“the Award.”)

[13] In his Award the arbitrator, in essence, agreed with the Respondents and found that the decisions of the Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight Boards of Directors before the decisions took effect. The Award consists of 30 paragraphs. The paragraphs that provide the basis for the Applicant’s challenge herein are set out below:

ARBITRATION AWARD

1. That the basic tenet of the Shared Facilities Agreement is valid and in the context of this case the Condominium Act 1998 does not supersede, replace or negate the provisions of that agreement.

4. That decisions of the Shared Facilities Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight Boards of Directors of the Corporations in Ruperts Landing before the decision can be acted upon.

5. That the original Shared Facilities Agreement and the amended Shared Facilities Agreement reflect an intent that the Shared Facilities Committee, rather than the individual corporations, have the authority to make decisions on matters affecting the Shared Facilities. The alternative, i.e. requiring the unanimous approval of the Boards of Directors of all eight corporations to make decisions regarding the Shared Facilities would create an unworkable, if not chaotic, environment. One board would have a veto power over the rest of the Ruperts Landing Community. Indeed, the wording and orientation of the original and amended Shared Facilities Agreement is directed against the development of such a situation.

14. That the Shared Facilities Committee has the authority to manage the Shared Facilities, (independent of Article 6 of the Shared Facilities Agreement) and is authorized to enter into contracts for supplies, materials and services related to the Shared Facilities including the right to renew the Collingwood Recreational Company Contract.

17. That decisions of the Marina Club Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight boards of directors of the condominium corporation’s of Rupert’s Landing.

27. That the Respondent and the Applicants (except SCC 64) shall each pay one half of the cost of arbitration.

29. That the Respondent shall pay costs to the Applicants in the amount of $67,526.41 together with interest at 4% per annum from September 30, 2005.

30. That the Respondent shall pay to the Shared Facilities Committee $22,552.01 representing outstanding arrears together with interest on arrears of $4,017.97 as of August 1, 2005 together with interest at bank prime rate plus 2% from August 1, 2005.

[14] The Applicant seeks to set aside the Award under s. 45 of the Arbitration Act, on the basis of error of law, and under s. 46 for reasonable apprehension of bias. The Respondents bring a counter-application under section 50 of the Arbitration Act for an order enforcing the Award

[15] Two groups of intervenors also made submissions - the Hull group, which had commenced an earlier proceeding in Hamilton, Ontario, and were supporting the Applicant; and the Lyons group, consisting of residents of the Applicant condominium, supporting the Respondents.

Position of the Parties

[16] The Applicant submits that the arbitrator erred in law and the Award should be set aside in its entirety. The Applicant argues that the Committee is only an advisory committee and has no power to make binding decisions; that its decisions must be ratified and approved by the board of directors of each of the condominium corporations before they can take effect; that the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19, requires the corporation's board of directors to manage the property and assets of the corporation, including its common elements and shared facilities; that this requirement cannot be delegated and supersedes any agreement to the contrary; and, that the proper way to manage shared facilities is not via an SFA but through the promulgation of joint bylaws as now permitted under s. 59 the Condominium Act.

[17] The Respondents submit that the arbitrator was right and that the Award should be upheld. They argue that the management of the shared recreational facilities by means of an SFA and a representative Shared Facilities Committee is not only the most sensible way to operate such facilities, it is completely consistent with the Condominium Act. To now require that all of the Committee's decisions be ratified and approved by each of the individual condominium corporations would not only give one corporation a veto power over the wishes of the other seven, it would defeat the reasonable expectations of unit-owners who had purchased their condominium on the representation that the shared facilities would be available and operated by a shared facilities committee pursuant to the SFA. They further argue that setting aside the Award and in effect vitiating an SFA that has been in place for almost 18 years is unreasonable and will result in confusion and chaos.

[18] The Applicant submits, in the alternative, that the Award should be set aside on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias pursuant to s. 46 of the Arbitration Act. The Applicant argues that the arbitrator's prior professional connections, his actions before the hearing began and the comments he made in his Supplementary Decision issued on September 30, 2005 provide support for this submission.

[19] The Respondents submit that there is no basis for finding a reasonable apprehension of bias. In any event, they say this ground was not raised in a timely manner and is now barred by s. 13(6) of the Arbitration Act.

[20] The Respondents ask that the application be dismissed and, by way of counter-application, that the Award be enforced under s. 50 of the Arbitration Act.

Preliminary Issues

[21] Before turning to the substance of the first submission, error of law, several preliminary issues must be resolved: (1) is this an appeal on a question of law; (2) does the arbitration agreement preclude such an appeal; (3) should leave be granted under s. 45(1) of the Arbitration Act, and (4) what is the appropriate standard of review. I will deal with each in turn.

[22] In my view, this appeal clearly involves a question of law. Whether or not the delegation by condominium boards of binding decision-making authority over the operation and management of shared recreational facilities to a representative committee is contrary to the Condominium Act is a question that requires careful consideration of the provisions of legislation and the terms of a contractual agreement. This is not a question of mixed fact and law; it is a question of law: Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc. 1997 CanLII 385 (S.C.C.), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748 at 766-67.

[23] The arbitration agreement does not preclude an appeal. The only arbitration agreement that exists between the parties is Article 10 of the SFA which provides as follows:

10.1 In the event of any dispute between the parties hereto with respect to this Agreement or any matters arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, and such matter cannot be resolved among or between any parties hereto, the matter in dispute, upon notice by one party to the other(s) stipulating that it requires the matter to be submitted to arbitration, shall be submitted to arbitration and the decision of the arbitrator shall be binding upon the parties hereto and upon submitting such matter to arbitration no legal recourse shall be exercised by any party hereto.

10.2 In the event the parties to such dispute are unable to agree upon a single arbitrator each party shall appoint one arbitrator within seven (7) days of notice by another party requiring submission of the dispute to arbitration. The arbitrators so appointed shall, within seven (7) days of the appointment of the last arbitrator so appointed, choose a single arbitrator. If any party neglects or refuses to name its arbitrator within seven (7) days of being requested to do so by any other party or parties or to proceed with the arbitration, the arbitrator named by any other party or parties shall proceed and settle the dispute and his decision shall be final.

10.3 The arbitration shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act of Ontario.

10.4 The costs of any arbitration shall be borne equally by the parties thereto.

[24] There is nothing in Article 10 that amounts to a privative clause prohibiting judicial review. There is no provision that makes the decision of the arbitrator “final and binding” or that otherwise and unequivocally precludes an appeal for error of law. The use of the word “binding” in Article 10(1) by itself is insufficient; and the use of the word “final” in Article 10.2 does not assist – this latter provision is limited to circumstances and to a selection procedure that does not apply here. The “no legal recourse” phrase at the end of Article 10(1) speaks to what happens when the matter is submitted to arbitration, not what happens after the decision is released. In any event, “no legal recourse” by itself is at best ambiguous and equivocal. I therefore interpret the agreement as not excluding the right to seek leave to appeal a question of law under s. 45(1) of the Arbitration Act: see National Ballet of Canada v. Glasco reflex, (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 230 (SCJ), at 243-44.

[25] The requirements for leave to appeal under s. 45(1)(a) and (b) have been satisfied. Whether or not the Shared Facilities Committee can make decisions that are binding on the condominium boards and the financial implications of these decisions for unit-owners are important matters that will significantly affect the rights of the parties. Leave to appeal is therefore granted.

[26] The appropriate standard of review is correctness. Because the appeal concerns a question of law and there is no greater expertise in the arbitrator than the court in the interpretation of the Condominium Act and related caselaw, the standard of review is correctness: National Ballet of Canada, supra, at 245. Also see AWS Engineers and Planners Corp. v. Deep River, (2005) 249 D.L.R. (4th) 478 (S.C.J.) at 506-08 and cases cited therein.

Issues

[27] The substantive issues that need to be addressed are as follows:

1. Did the arbitrator err in law in holding that “decisions of the Shared Facilities Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight Boards of Directors of the Corporations...before the decision can be acted upon?”
2. Should the Award be set aside on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias?
3. Did the arbitrator err in holding that the costs of the arbitration should be divided between the Applicant on the one hand, and the six Respondents on the other; and that the Applicant should pay costs to the Respondents in the amount of $67,526.41 together with interest at 4% per annum from September 30, 2005?

4. Should the Respondents' counter-application be allowed? If so, what provisions of the Award should be enforced?

Analysis

1. Did the arbitrator err in law in holding that the Committee's decisions need not be ratified or confirmed by the Boards of Directors of each of the condominium corporations?

[28] The arbitrator found in paras. 4 and 17 of his Award that the "decisions" of the SFC and Marina Club Committee "need not be ratified...by all eight boards of directors." On its face, this finding is ambiguous. Does the arbitrator mean all decisions, or just the decisions that the Committee is permitted to make under the provisions of the SFA?

[29] Further, in para. 14 of the Award, the arbitrator found that the Committee "is authorized to enter into contracts for supplies, materials and services related to the Shared Facilities." Here again, does the arbitrator mean all contracts for supplies, materials and services or just the contracts that the Committee is permitted to enter under the provisions of the SFA?

[30] The SFA makes clear that some decisions and some contracts require board approval before they can take effect. For example, under Article 4.3 any non-emergency expenditure that is greater than $5000 and that exceeds the budget provision for that particular category requires the approval of each of the condominium corporations. Also, under Article 5.5 the approval of the condominium corporations is needed for any "substantial" alteration, improvement or renovation of the Shared Facilities.

[31] Therefore, it is incorrect to say that none of the decisions of the SFC need to be ratified or approved by the boards of the eight condominium corporations. If this is what the arbitrator meant to say, then he erred in law.

[32] The Respondents submit that the findings in paras. 4, 17 and 14 should not be taken literally; that the arbitrator understood that the Committee was bound by the provisions of the SFA and intended that only the decisions that the Committee is permitted to make under the SFA are the ones that need not be ratified by the boards of the condominium corporations. The Respondents ask that I simply clarify this obvious point by adding the phrase "except as otherwise provided in the SFA" to paras. 4, 17 and 14 and by adding the words "certain" and "all" to para. 5 so that the latter reads "have the authority to make certain decisions" and "all eight corporations to make all decisions."

[33] I am persuaded that this is probably what the arbitrator intended, and if not, then there is all the more reason to clarify the ambiguity by adding this qualifying language. Paragraphs 4, 5, 14 and 17 will therefore be varied as follows (the changes are underlined):

4. Except as otherwise provided in the Shared Facilities Agreement, the decisions of the Shared Facilities Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight Boards of Directors of the Corporations in Ruperts Landing before the decision can be acted upon.

5. That the original Shared Facilities Agreement and the amended Shared Facilities Agreement reflect an intent that the Shared Facilities Committee, rather than the individual corporations, have the authority to make certain decisions on matters affecting the Shared Facilities. The alternative, i.e. requiring the unanimous approval of the Boards of Directors of all eight corporations to make all decisions regarding the Shared Facilities would create an unworkable, if not chaotic, environment. One board would have a veto power over the rest of the Ruperts Landing Community. Indeed, the wording and orientation of the original and amended Shared Facilities Agreement is directed against the development of such a situation.

14. Except as otherwise provided in the Shared Facilities Agreement, the Shared Facilities Committee has the authority to manage the Shared Facilities, (independent of Article 6 of the Shared Facilities Agreement) and is authorized to enter into contracts for supplies, materials and services related to the Shared Facilities including the right to renew the Collingwood Recreational Company Contract.

17. Except as otherwise provided in the Shared Facilities Agreement, the decisions of the Marina Club Committee need not be ratified and confirmed by all eight boards of directors of the condominium corporation's of Ruperts Landing.

[34] The Applicant, however, argues that even if the above paragraphs were varied as indicated, the arbitrator's findings would still be wrong. The Applicant submits that even Committee decisions that are fully in accord with the provisions of the SFA and deal only with day-to-day operational matters must still be ratified by each of the eight boards. In essence, the Applicant argues that the delegation by the SFA to the Committee of even day-to-day operational powers is in violation of the Condominium Act.

[35] A condominium corporation, says the Applicant, is entirely the creature of statute. It can only do what is legislatively permitted. Section 17 provides that "the corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the corporation." Section 27 provides that the board of directors "shall manage the affairs of the corporation," and section 176 makes clear that these provisions apply "despite any agreement to the contrary."

[36] In other words, says the Applicant, the obligation to manage the Shared Facilities, an asset of the corporations, even on a day-to-day basis, cannot be delegated to a shared facilities committee. The boards of each of the eight condominium corporations cannot be bound by the decisions of the Committee. To the extent that the SFA provides otherwise, it is inconsistent with the Condominium Act and therefore invalid.

[37] The Applicant points to the expert commentary of Harry Herskowitz and Mark F. Freedman, the authors of a leading text on condominium law, Condominiums in Ontario: A Practical Analysis of the New Legislation, (2001). In comparing the "old" Condominium Act with the "new Act" that took effect on May 5, 2001, Herskowitz and Freedman say this at 185 and 188:

Under the old Act... decisions of the shared facilities committee ...are subject to confirmation and ratification by the respective boards of directors...[Under the new Act] declarants may continue to enshrine the concept of a shared facilities committee (with the attendant powers conferred upon it) in reciprocal agreements governing the operation and use of such facilities, provided all decisions of the committee are ratified or confirmed by the respective boards of directors, reflective of current practice." (Emphasis added.)

[38] But here again, does this mean all decisions, even the day-to-day operational decisions? I note that the Applicant's own expert, Gerry Hyman Q.C., suggested that "day to day management/operational decisions" would not require board approval to take effect. And what about the validity of the many cost-sharing agreements that condominium corporations have entered into throughout Ontario governing the use and operation of shared recreational facilities? Are all of these shared facility agreements invalid?

[39] In my view, the Court of Appeal has ruled on this very point. In Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 441 v. Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 441 (Owners and Mortgagees), 1998 CanLII 4565 (ON C.A.), (1998) 42 O.R. (3d) 62, the Court of Appeal considered a similar challenge to an SFA that delegated certain decision-making powers to a shared facilities committee. The provisions of the SFA that were challenged in Carleton Condominium were very similar to the ones being challenged herein.

[40] The Court of Appeal concluded that the challenged provisions established a reasonable structure for the management of the shared facility and were not inconsistent with the requirements of the Condominium Act. The following passage is in my view determinative of the issues being raised by the Applicant. The Court of Appeal said this at 68:

There is nothing in the Act that prohibits the sharing of facilities among different condominiums or prohibits a declarant from giving the corporation an ownership interest in the shared facility. Such an arrangement may, in fact, be beneficial to the unit owners by giving them access to, and interest in, a facility that could not be supported if owned only by a single corporation.

In my view, it is not improper for the declarant to specify the corporation's responsibilities so that co-tenants or others with an interest in the shared facility can make fair use of it. The impugned provisions attempt to set up a reasonable structure for the management of the shared facility. Those provisions are thus well within the permissible objects of the corporation and are not inconsistent with the consumer protection objects of the Act. (Emphasis added.)

[41] The Court of Appeal also noted that it would be “unreasonable and unfair “ to now void these provisions because unit-owners had relied on them when they purchased their condominiums.

[42] The Applicant attempts to distinguish the Carleton Condominium decision on the basis that it was decided in 1998, under the provisions of the “old Act.” It argues that the new Act, which took effect in 2001, sets out a clear regime for the management of shared facilities. Section 59 now explicitly provides that “the boards of two or more corporations may make, amend or repeal joint by-laws or rules governing the use and maintenance of shared facilities and services.”

[43] The Applicant says that the proper way for condominium corporations to enter into shared facility agreements that delegate binding decision-making power to a shared facilities committee is via the enactment of joint bylaws. If the current SFA is set aside, the available remedy, says the Applicant, is s. 59.

[44] I do not agree. It is true that the new Act addresses the concept of shared facilities and “mutual use agreements” in a number of sections - see ss. 59, 113(1), 134, and 154(5). Clearly, in enacting the new Act the legislature was attuned to the reality of multi-phased condominium projects and the need for shared facilities agreements. If the legislature had intended to invalidate all existing SFA's and require that they all be replaced through the mandatory use of the joint bylaw power provided in s. 59, it could have done so. As it is, s. 59 is permissive not mandatory – no condominium corporation is compelled to enact joint bylaws to deal with the management and maintenance of shared facilities.

[45] The fact that s. 59 is permissive, not mandatory, is seen by legal experts as a good thing. According to Herskowitz and Freedman, supra, at 186 and 188, the joint bylaw methodology is “a very complex and impractical procedure” and “is not the exclusive methodology by which shared facilities or service can be governed.” The authors conclude at 188 – 89:

...it is likely that any existing provisions regarding the use and maintenance of shared facilities or services will endure, unamended by the joint bylaw/rule provisions of the new Act...

Any other interpretation would result in chaos by virtue of the fact that a vacuum would be created with respect to the governance of the facilities pending the enactment of such a joint bylaw or rule under the new Act.

[46] I therefore agree with the Respondents that the s. 59 of the new Act does not undermine the decision of the Court of Appeal in Carleton Condominium. This decision cannot be distinguished and remains determinative.

[47] In my opinion, the SFA and its delegation of limited management and decision-making power over the Shared Facilities to the Committee is not contrary to the Condominium Act. The Application to set aside the entire Award on the basis of error of law does not succeed.

[48] However, paras. 4, 5, 14 and 17 of the Award must be varied, as noted above, to make clear that the Committee's jurisdiction to make binding decisions is subject to and limited by the provisions of the SFA.

2. Should the Award be set aside on the basis that there was a reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the arbitrator?

[49] Section 13 of the Arbitration Act sets out the procedure for challenging an arbitrator on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias. Section 13(3) requires the challenging party to send the arbitral tribunal a statement of the grounds for the challenge within fifteen days of becoming aware of them. If the arbitrator is not removed by the parties or does not resign, he or she must decide the issue and notify the parties of the decision. Section 13(6) of the Arbitration Act provides that a party may make an application to the court to remove an arbitrator "within ten days of being notified of the arbitral tribunal's decision."

[50] Here, as already discussed, the Applicant advised the arbitrator in a letter dated August 31, 2004, that it was challenging him on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias. This letter together with several affidavits were delivered to the arbitrator by

Ellen Morin, the Applicant's representative, at the commencement of the hearing on September 1, 2004. The arbitrator considered the letter and the affidavits and advised the parties that he was proceeding with the arbitration. According to the hearing transcript of September 1, 2004, the arbitrator made these remarks at page 17:

While we were off the record, I heard lengthy submissions from [the Respondents' legal counsel]. I also invited any additional submissions or response from Ellen Morin. There was nothing forthcoming from Ellen Morin. I have decided based on the submissions and reaffirmation by [the Respondents] that they want to proceed today, and that's what we're doing. I don't think there's any other preliminaries. We should proceed with the evidence.

[51] The arbitrator then invited the parties to give their opening statements. He turned to the Applicant's representative and said at page 19: "Ellen, you've told me that you're not participating. I don't anticipate an opening statement from you? Okay, then you [Mr. Natale] can go ahead." Following the completion of the opening statement by counsel for the Respondents, the arbitrator again asked Ms. Morin at page 32: "Ellen, do you want to say anything in reply." Ms. Morin responded: "I think we've made our position clear that we are not participating." The arbitrator then proceeded with the hearing.

[52] The Applicant submits that the ten-day limitation period under section 13(6) begins running from the date that the party is "notified of the arbitral tribunal's decision." The comments made by the arbitrator on September 1, 2004, says the Applicant, do not constitute notice of his decision to reject the challenge and proceed with the arbitration. This decision was not made clear until the release of his Reasons for Decision on April 6, 2005. The Applicant submits that this is the operative date and the limitation period only begins to run as of the release of the arbitrator's decision. The challenge on the ground of reasonable apprehension of bias is therefore not time-barred by section 13(6).

[53] In my view, the operative date is September 1, 2004. On the first day of the hearing, the arbitrator decided to proceed and so notified the parties. For me, there is little if any doubt that by continuing with the hearing, the arbitrator was telling the parties that he was rejecting the bias allegation. The words spoken at page 17 of the transcript, as noted above, are plainly a decision by the arbitrator that he is proceeding with the hearing, and is rejecting the accusation of bias.

[54] I also note from its letter of August 31, 2004, that the Applicant was advised by legal counsel as to what to say and do at the hearing and, if the arbitrator did not step down, what legal steps could then be pursued. I find it difficult if not impossible to accept the Applicant's submission that the arbitrator's decision to proceed with the hearing was ambiguous in its meaning or intent. I am satisfied that that the Applicant fully understood that the arbitrator was proceeding with the hearing, and in doing so was rejecting the challenge of bias. I am satisfied that the Applicant was so notified on September 1, 2004.

[55] The challenge on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias is therefore time-barred by s. 13(6) of the Arbitration Act and cannot succeed.

[56] I hasten to add, however, that even if I had found that the challenge for reasonable apprehension of bias was brought in time, I would not, on the evidence, have found for the Applicant. Let me explain.

[57] The basic legal principles relating to reasonable apprehension of bias can be summarized as follows. The test of reasonable apprehension of bias applies to arbitrators in the same manner as it applies to courts. The threshold for a finding of real or perceived bias is high because it calls into question both the personal integrity of the adjudicator and the integrity of the administration of justice. The grounds must be substantial and the onus is on the party alleging bias to bring forward the evidence. The inquiry is highly fact-specific. The test for showing reasonable apprehension of bias is an objective test. A real likelihood of bias must be demonstrated; mere suspicion is not enough. The test is "what would an informed person, viewing the matter realistically and practically, and having thought the matter through, conclude?" R. v. R.D.S., 1997 CanLII 324 (S.C.C.), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 484 at 530-32; A.T. Kearney Ltd. v. Harrison, [2003] O.J. No. 438 (S.C.J.), at para. 6-7; McQueen's Boat Works Ltd. v. Lanikai Holdings Ltd., [1996] B.C.J. No. 2063 (C.A.)

[58] The Applicant says that a real likelihood of bias arose out of several issues that were before the arbitrator when the hearing began, and out of what he said after the hearing was concluded in his Supplementary Decision dated September 30, 2005.

[59] I will deal first with the allegations that were put before the arbitrator when the hearing began. The affidavit of the Applicant's representative alleged the following:

- That the arbitrator had been professionally associated and at one point had discussed sharing office space with a lawyer that had been dismissed as legal counsel to the Applicant;
- That certain inflammatory correspondence questioning the ethics of the Applicant's lawyer had been copied to the arbitrator;
- That the arbitrator had communicated unilaterally with the other side on a number of occasions;
- That the arbitrator arranged some scheduling and procedural matters without seeking input from the Applicant.

[60] The Respondents submit that none of these allegations when examined objectively provide any basis for a finding that the arbitrator was likely to be biased against the Applicant. I agree. To apply the test articulated by the Supreme Court of Canada, above, would an informed person, having thought the matter through, conclude that a prior association, or even a discussion about sharing office space with a lawyer who had been dismissed by the Applicant was likely to bias the arbitrator against the Applicant? Or, the receipt of a copy of a letter from one side's legal counsel criticizing the ethics of the other side's legal counsel? Or, on occasion, the communication with only one side on totally innocuous matters? Or, handling some scheduling matters without input from the one of the parties? I think not. None of these allegations, objectively examined, and standing alone or even aggregated, constitute grounds for finding a real likelihood of bias.

[61] The Applicant also argues that a reasonable apprehension of bias arises out of comments that were made by the arbitrator in his Supplementary Decision dated September 30, 2005. In this decision the arbitrator explained his costs award. In doing so, the arbitrator made the comment that the Applicant's decision not to participate in the hearing was "imprudent if not irresponsible" and that their overall position was "ill-advised and contrary to the SFA and condominium standards." The arbitrator also recognized that his costs award would mean that some unit-owners who lived in the Applicant's building and who were opposed to the Applicant's position would nonetheless be required to contribute to the costs order made against the Applicant. The arbitrator then noted that "while there may be another forum for the SCC 78 unit-owners to seek redress against their directors, such an award will not be granted in this arbitration."

[62] The Applicant argues that these comments were highly prejudicial and reveal bias on the part of the arbitrator. These comments, say the Applicant, show that the arbitrator was annoyed with the fact that the Applicant had accused him of bias and had not participated in the hearing and this biased him against the Applicant on everything that followed after the bias challenge was made. Even though the comments were made as part of the decision on costs, the Applicant argues that they show a pervasive bias which tainted the entire arbitration hearing, the Reasons for Decision and the Award.

[63] I do not agree. The comments being complained about were made more than a year after the hearing was completed, and more than five months after the release of the arbitrator's Decision. The comments were made not in the main Decision but as part of the Supplementary Decision on costs. Comments about the merits of a particular position advanced by one of the parties, or about the conduct of a party, or whether certain unit-owners can claim over and against their board of directors for the costs payable, although arguably intemperate, are not in and of themselves evidence that the arbitrator was likely biased against the Applicant when he wrote his Decision and drafted his Award. This is not what an informed person, viewing the matter realistically and practically, and having thought the matter through, would conclude. More is needed to show a real likelihood of bias on the part of the arbitrator.

[64] I therefore conclude that the Application to set aside the Award on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias cannot succeed for two reasons – the Application was not commenced within the required ten-day limitation period, and even if it had been, I would not have been persuaded on the evidence submitted.

3. The costs award

[65] I do, however, question the validity of the costs award. In paras. 27 and 29 of the Award, the arbitrator ordered that the costs of the arbitration, approximately $135,000, be divided equally between the Applicant on the one hand, and all the Respondents (except SCC 64) on the other. The Applicant was ordered to pay one-half of the costs or $67,526.41, together with interest at 4% per annum, to the Respondents.

[66] The arbitrator explained his costs award by noting that s. 54 of the Arbitration Act gave him "a broad discretion with respect to the allocation of costs." Section 54 does indeed provide that "an arbitral tribunal may award the costs of an arbitration." And, traditionally, the exercise of such discretion will often result in the awarding of costs to the successful party.

[67] However, the Arbitration Act also provides in s. 3 that “the parties to an arbitration agreement may agree, expressly or by implication, to vary or exclude any provision of this Act, except for [ss. 5(4), 19, 39, 46, 48 and 50.]” The costs provision that was relied on by the arbitrator, s. 54, is one of the provisions that may be varied or excluded by an arbitration agreement.

[68] In my view, the parties herein have varied or excluded the discretion provided to the arbitrator under s. 54, by specifically providing in their arbitration agreement, Article 10.4 of the SFA, that “the costs of any arbitration shall be borne equally by the parties thereto.” This specific costs provision, as set out in the arbitration agreement, displaces the discretion under s. 54, and requires the arbitrator to award costs as directed. Article 10.4 is not a directive that the arbitrator can “consider” and then discard; it is a requirement that must be applied according to its plain meaning.

[69] In my view, the plain meaning of Article 10.4 is that the costs of an arbitration shall be shared and borne equally by each of the parties to the arbitration. If the intention was to divide the costs according to the success achieved; or divide the costs equally between the winning side and the losing side, this could have been stated. Instead, the arbitration agreement provides that the costs of the arbitration shall be “borne equally by the parties thereto.”

[70] One can understand some possible rationales for such a cost-sharing provision. The arbitration of a dispute between two or more of the eight condominium corporations at Ruperts Landing may have been seen as a cost that should be shared equally by all of the parties involved in order to preserve the overall harmony and sense of community. Or maybe the directive was intended to reflect the reality that some disputes may not split cleanly along corporation lines; there may be, as there was here, unit-owners on both sides of an issue in the same condominium corporation – better then to share the costs equally between all the parties, rather than dividing the costs based on who won or who lost. In any event, I am satisfied that the costs awarded by the arbitrator are contrary to what is required by the plain reading of Article 10.4.

[71] In my view, the arbitrator should have applied Article 10.4 as written and should have divided the total cost of the arbitration equally among each of the seven participating parties (i.e. all but SCC 64.) I recognize that the Applicant did not participate in the hearing after its bias challenge was rejected, but it deposited correspondence and affidavits with the arbitrator, maintained a watching brief and reserved its right of appeal. In these circumstances, the Applicant cannot avoid the obligation of paying one-seventh of the costs award.

[72] I therefore conclude that the costs award in paras. 27 and 29 should be set aside. Instead, and in accordance with Article 10.4 of the arbitration agreement, the costs of the arbitration shall be divided equally among the seven parties, with each party, including the Applicant, paying no more than one-seventh of the total amount.

4. The counter-application to enforce the Award

[73] The Respondents’ counter-application to enforce the Award is granted but only to the following extent: paragraphs 1 to 26 inclusive, as varied herein, shall be enforced. Paragraph 30 shall also be enforced. However, paragraphs 27, 28 and 29, dealing with the costs award have been set aside and may not be enforced.

Disposition

[74] The Application by SCC 78 to set aside the arbitral Award in its entirety under ss. 45 and 46 of the Arbitration Act for error of law or reasonable apprehension of bias is dismissed.

[75] Paragraphs 4, 5, 14 and 17 of the Award are varied by adding the language as noted above in para. 33 of these Reasons for Judgment.

[76] The Application by SCC 78 to set aside the costs awarded in paras. 27 and 29 of the Award is allowed. The costs of the arbitration in the amount of $135,052.82 shall be borne equally by each of the seven parties (not SCC 64) with each party contributing one-seventh or $19,293.26.

[77] The Application by SCC 50, 52, 53, 56, 59 and 63 to enforce the Award, as varied herein, is allowed, with the exception of the costs award as noted above.

Costs of these proceedings

[78] If the parties cannot agree on the costs of these proceedings, counsel may make written submissions not exceeding three typed pages within 30 days of the release of these Reasons for Judgment.

[79] I am grateful to counsel for their assistance.

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE P.J. FLYNN

[1] This is an Application by the applicant Condominium Corporation ("the Corporation") for an order:

(a) requiring the Respondent Johanna Theresa Weidner ("Johanna") to permanently remove the Greyhound dog, Simon ("the dog") from Unit #306, 30 Hugo Crescent, Kitchener, Ontario ("the Unit"), more particularly described as Unit 6, Level 3, Waterloo Condominium Plan No. 186, which is owned by all of the Respondents and occupied by Johanna; and

(b) requiring the Respondents to forthwith comply with two specific paragraphs of the Declaration of the Corporation which forbid pets on the Corporation's common elements and which forbid pets from being kept or allowed in any of the units.

[2] The Corporation was created by the registration of a Declaration on February 1, 1991. That Declaration provides at Article III, paragraph 7:

"Pets

No animal, livestock or fowl of any kind whatsoever, including those usually considered pets, shall be allowed upon the Common Elements, including the Exclusive Use Common Elements."

[3] At Article IV, paragraph 2(d), the same Declaration provides:

"2. Residential Units

...

(d) No animal, livestock or fowl of any kind whatsoever, including those usually considered pets, shall be kept or allowed in the Units."

[4] Prior to April, 2000, these prohibitions against pets had not been enforced by the Corporation for some time and some of the residents of the units kept pets.

[5] On April 20, 2000, the Corporation passed a Resolution authorizing the Board of Directors to enforce the Corporation's Declaration, Bylaws, Rules and Regulations, particularly the prohibition against pets in the units and set out that as at April 21, 2000, there would be strict enforcement, save for pets then on the property registered with the property manager. That Resolution went on to specify that:

"Owners failing to register their dog(s) by April 21, 2000 will be asked to permanently remove their dog(s) from the premises."

[6] Months after the passing of this Resolution, in February, 2001, Johanna entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for the purchase of the Unit. She had the assistance of a real estate agent who knew of her ownership of the dog. She advised the agent that she wanted to purchase in a condominium that allowed pets.

[7] The agreement of Purchase and Sale made no specific mention of the prohibition against pets. It was on a standard form agreement in which Johanna as purchaser agreed to accept title to the real property subject to the provisions of the Condominium Act and the Terms, Conditions and Provisions of the Declaration and Bylaw and the Common Element Rules and Regulations.

[8] Johanna viewed the property twice before entering into the agreement and said that she saw cats in the windows and on one occasion believed she saw a dog being walked on the common elements. However, after seeing these animals, Johanna did not make any inquiries as to whether her dog would be permitted in the unit.

[9] The agreement was not made conditional upon her satisfying herself that her dog would be permitted.

[10] Prior to the completion of the purchase transaction, Johanna, as a result of her solicitor's request, was provided with and reviewed with her solicitor an Estoppel Certificate, which set out the following, most of it in bold letters:

"(c) Please make certain that your client is aware that pursuant to WNCC No. 186's Declaration, which states in part, 'no animal, livestock or fowl of any kind (sic) whatsoever, including those usually considered pets, shall be kept or allowed in the units'. The Corporation, through its Board of Directors has Resolved to strictly enforce said Declaration."

[11] The purchase transaction was completed by Transfer to the Respondents on May 1, 2001, and Johanna moved in about a week later, bringing her dog with her.

[12] On May 15, 2001, the Corporation's solicitors wrote to Johanna and reminded her that having her dog there was contrary to the provisions of the Declaration and asked her to remove it within 14 days. She did. She took the dog to the home of her parents -- the other respondents -- where it remained until the middle of September, 2001, before Johanna brought it back to the Unit. It has remained with her in the Unit since then. In June, 2001, the Corporation's solicitor advised Johanna's solicitor that the Corporation was considering an amendment to its Declaration so as to permit pets and was holding the determination of the matter of Johanna's dog in abeyance while reserving its right to continue enforcement proceedings.

[13] At the end of August, 2001, the Corporation's solicitors wrote again to Johanna's solicitors indicating that the matter of pets would be on the September 6, 2001, Unit owner's meeting agenda, again reserving the right to enforce. In September, 2001, it was determined that the Corporation would poll the owners to determine whether there was sufficient support to amend the Declaration and that until that was determined the Corporation would not take any action against pet owners.

[14] Johanna and another resident lobbied the residents of the corporation to conduct that survey of Unit owners to determine whether there was the sufficient support required to amend the Declaration to allow pets. They also lobbied other residents during the polling process.

[15] In accordance with the provisions of the Condominium Act, the vote of 80 percent of the Unit owners is required to amend a Corporation's Declaration.

[16] By late November, 2001, a poll had been taken. Owners representing 22 of the 33 units responded (about 63 percent). Thirteen owners supported the amendment (about 37 percent). Nine unit owners were against the amendment (about 26 percent). The Corporation therefore determined that the amendment would not carry by the required 80 percent vote of owners and put all on notice that it would commence on January 1, 2002, to enforce the pet restriction provisions against all whom had not been registered by April 20, 2000.

[17] On March 20, 2002, the Corporation's solicitor wrote to Johanna's solicitor to advise that they had learned that Johanna's dog was back in the unit. That letter warned of legal action if the dog was not permanently removed by May 1, 2002. This Application was commenced on September 26, 2002. It was first returnable on October 9, 2002, was thereafter thrice adjourned on consent, then examinations were conducted. It proceeded as a long Application on March 17, 2003.

[18] In answer to the Application the Respondents ask that this Court:

(a) exercise its discretion under the Condominium Act and its inherent jurisdiction to dismiss the application; or,

(b) exercise its discretion to "grandfather" the dog and exempt the dog from the operation of the Declaration so that the respondents will not be required to move the dog.

[19] The Respondents say that the prohibition against the pet in this case is unreasonable; that the Corporation acquiesced or slept on its rights and must not succeed on the basis of laches; and that condominium Declarations are subject to the Ontario Human Rights Code and enforcement of this prohibition against pets would be an act of discrimination within the meaning of that Code.

[20] Counsel have been very able in their argument and their facts and authorities have been helpful. There has been found no binding appellate decision directly on point.

[21] Moving out from under her parents, finishing school and starting a new career caused Johanna stress. So did the issue of removing the dog from the Unit. In August, 2001, she was first diagnosed with depression and her doctor prescribed medication. That medication eliminated the migraine headaches she was suffering and resulted in an improvement in her condition such that she could function very well. Her doctor recommended counseling several times. She declined. Johanna has seen no specialist for her depression. Her family physician is of the view that one of the "stressors related to [her] depression" was having to give up the dog, a stressor which, he says, would adversely affect her mental health.

[22] The Respondents concede that the Declaration cannot be attacked as being unreasonable unless there is a human rights violation. They say that their path to that attack here is the fact that Johanna suffers from an identified mental disorder and that this Court has the discretion not to apply the full force of a Declaration which is presumptively valid.

[23] A prohibition against pets in a Declaration would be reasonable, the Respondents argue, if it were flexible enough to accommodate identified disabilities.

[24] In the main, the Respondents rely on the reasoning of my sister, McDonald J., in Niagara North Condominium Corp. No. 46 v. Chassie [1999] O.J. No. 1201 Ontario Court of Justice (Gen. Div.), as set out in her conclusions at paragraph 94 of that judgment:

"I agree with counsel for the Applicant that the residence of the Chassie's cats in the NNCC complex is contrary to the Condominium Declaration and Rules, that there is a strong presumption as to the validity of the Declaration and that the Board of Directors has a statutory obligation to enforce the Declaration and Rules. However, for the reasons set out above, I am of the opinion that the pet prohibition is not a reasonable one. On the other hand, while the provisions in the Declaration may not be reasonable, it is not necessarily invalid given the strong presumption in favour of the validity of Declarations. Nevertheless, I think it would not be fair to enforce it given that it is not reasonable and given the circumstances of the present case. The Chassies were put in a position of disadvantage in purchasing the unit that they would not have placed themselves in had they known, before they purchased their unit, of the cat prohibition and that an attempt to enforce it might be made. Their lack of comprehension of the situation is the fault of the Board of Directors. The Board has acquiesced in the presence of cats in the building over a number of years and has not provided any explanation to justify the delay in enforcement and lead the court to find that the equities favour the Applicant. Finally, I have found that Mrs. Chassie suffers from a handicap within the meaning of the Human Rights Code and that to enforce the Declaration would constitute discrimination against her because of her handicap. On the totality of all three grounds of defence, I find that this is a proper case in which to exercise my judicial discretion in favour of the Respondents and to dismiss the application."

[25] The Condominium Act, 1998 S.O. 1998, c. 19 is the operative statute here.

[26] A Declaration may contain conditions or restrictions with respect to the occupation and use of the Units or Common Elements.

[27] The Condominium Corporation has a duty to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the owners and occupiers of units comply with the Declaration. The Board of Directors of a Condominium Corporation has a statutory obligation to enforce the Declaration.

[28] A Declaration cannot be amended unless 80 percent of the owners of the Units have consented to the amendment in writing.

[29] An owner of a Unit may make an Application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order to amend a Declaration.

[30] A Condominium Corporation, its Directors, as well as the owners and occupiers of the Unit, are required to comply with a Declaration as well as the Condominium Act. A Condominium Corporation not only has a duty to require compliance but where compliance is not forthcoming, the Condominium Corporation has the right to apply to court for an order directing compliance.

[31] There is a strong presumption as to the validity of a Declaration of a Condominium Corporation. The Declaration is vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the Unit owner. She is not only bound by the terms and provisions of the Declaration but she is entitled to insist that the other Unit owners are similarly bound. The revised Condominium Act, as aforesaid, was proclaimed into force on December 18, 1998, after the Chassie case was heard, but before judgment was rendered. In fact, Justice McDonald refers to the draft legislation in her discussion and analysis of the circumstances of the Chassie case. The new Act did not reflect the kind of treatment for pet owners envisaged by Justice McDonald's analogies to the rules permissible under the provisions of the Tenants Protection Act, 1997.

[32] The Condominium Act requires Bylaws and Rules to be reasonable, if they are to be enforced. But the same is not required of a provision in a Declaration, which will be presumed valid.

[33] Here, in the ordinary course of the transaction, the Respondent Johanna agreed in writing to comply with the Declaration. The Corporation properly brought the salient prohibition provision of the Declaration to Johanna's attention before closing. Johanna not only had a real estate agent assisting her in the transaction, she had a qualified and competent real estate solicitor whose duty it was to review the declaration and other documents, including the Estoppel Certificate and to advise her in respect thereof.

[34] Moreover, as must be done, the Declaration and Bylaws were registered on the title to the property as notice to all the world, including the Respondents, of their provisions.

[35] The Respondents, in written argument, rely upon s. 2(1) of the Ontario Human Rights Code, R.S.O. 1990, c. H-19:

"Accommodation

2.1 Every person has a right to equal treatment with respect to the occupancy of accommodation, without discrimination because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, age, marital status, same-sex partnership status, family status, disability or the receipt of public assistance."

[36] It seems to me that in reality the Respondents derive much of their argument from a consideration of s. 2(2) of that Act:

"Harassment in Accommodation

(2) Every person who occupies accommodation has a right to freedom from harassment by the landlord or agent of the landlord or by an occupant of the same building because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, age, marital status, same-sex partnership status, family status, disability or the receipt of public assistance."

[37] It is clear that this latter subsection prohibiting harassment in accommodation is restricted to the freedom enjoyed by tenants. It can have no application in this case, where the prohibition against pets is in effect an appurtenance ancillary to the purchase of any unit in this condominium plan.

[38] The answers of the Respondent Johanna on her examination for discovery conducted on January 15, 2003 are informative:

"205 Q: Would your parents be willing to take the dog back if the court ordered that he was not to return to the condominium:

A: Of course.

206 Q: And would you then go down and visit your dog on a regular basis as you did during the time that he wasn't there?

A: Well I don't know what I would do if I had to get rid of him.

207 Q: Would you visit your dog regularly?

A: Well yes, if I didn't move."

[39] In my view it is important to note that the sentiment expressed in these answers was not: "I cannot live without that dog - I'll have to move!" While it is clear that Johanna loves this dog and wants to keep it, it is not at all evident to me that she needs it. In the case of Waterloo North Condominium Corp. No. 198 v. Donner(1997), 36 O.R. (3d) 243, Justice Salhany was dealing with a hearing ear dog, one that the learned justice found, if removed, would prohibit the owner from living in the building. Salhany J. tackled that issue on the basis of an attack on the "no pet restriction" as unreasonable or failing that as a contravention of the Human Rights Code. In the end, Salhany J. decided that enforcement of the Declaration would effectively prohibit Ms. Donner from living in the condominium.

[40] In this case there is no evidence that Johanna is dependent on the dog or needs the dog to be able to live in the unit. Her doctor's report indicated that the removal of the dog was but one of the stressors she suffered which related to her depression. While there is no evidence before me that depression is a "mental disorder" such as would make it a "disability" within the meaning of s. 10(1) of the Human Rights Code, I accept Dr. Ashton's opinion that having to give up the dog would adversely affect Johanna's mental health.

[41] The facts of this case, in any event, can be distinguished from Donner; but the principles relied upon by Salhany J. are very persuasive.

[42] While the Condominium Act does require rules governing the use of common elements and units to be reasonable, the question of the "reasonableness" of the Declaration is not an issue that may be attacked. The law presumes Declarations to be valid.

[43] In the Chassie case, McDonald J. recites a passage from John Mascarin in his case comment on the trial decision of York Condominium Corp. No. 382 v. Dvorchik (1992), 24 R.P.R. (2d) 19, wherein Mr. Mascarin sets out very clearly that there is a difference in the case law treatment of the "no pet" clauses, depending upon the nature of the condominium documents in which they are found, that is to say, whether in part of the Declaration or merely in a rule or regulation. Then McDonald J. goes on at length to analogize the law of residential tenancy in Ontario and bases her decision largely on her conclusion that "the law and societal attitudes have also evolved to give rise to new concepts as to what are reasonable rules for community living and to a greater appreciation as to how pets can appropriately fit into a closely knit community".

[44] I am unable to make that leap, nor am I able to accept McDonald J.'s conclusion that a total prohibition of animals is not reasonable.

[45] In this I must agree with Salhany J. in Donner: "We are dealing with a Declaration. Surely those purchasers of a unit who understood they were buying into a 'no pet' building are entitled to have that understanding protected".

[46] Salhany J. went on in the circumstances of that case to refuse to enforce the "no pet" provision of the Declaration because the strict application in that case would amount to a breach of the Human Rights Code against a wholly dependent 85-year-old hearing impaired woman with a disability and the effect of that enforcement would effectively prohibit her from living in the building. That is not the case here.

[47] That leaves only the question of laches or the applicant "sleeping on its rights".

[48] In my view that complaint cannot succeed. Johanna employed both a real estate agent and a real estate lawyer. She (and all the world) had notice of the Declaration. Prior to closing her lawyer received the Estoppel Certificate which highlighted the restriction and reviewed it with her. Whether or not she remembers that specific review is not material. She made no inquiries as to the enforcement of that pet prohibition. While she took the view on examination that had she known about the enforcement of the pet prohibition she would not have moved into the building, perhaps her quarrel is with one of the professionals advising her.

Conclusion

[49] While the Condominium Corporation had not enforced the restrictions against pets for some years prior to the making and delivery of that Estoppel Certificate, the certificate made it clear that the provision was to be strictly enforced from that point. The conduct and actions of the corporation, its board and solicitors after that, in conducting the survey and holding enforcement in abeyance while that was done and in giving the Respondent Johanna time to deal with the consequences of enforcement, were entirely reasonable.

[50] In summary I find that:

- (a) the Declaration provision complained of is reasonable and, in any event, cannot be assailed on that basis;
- (b) there is no violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code such as would compel me to exercise my discretion in refusing to allow enforcement of the provisions; and,
- (c) the Applicant has not slept on its rights and is not to be refused the right to enforce its Declaration's restrictions because of laches.

[51] Therefore I grant the Application and order that the Respondent forthwith comply with the Declaration of Waterloo North Condominium Corporation No. 186 and permanently remove the Greyhound dog, "Simon" from unit 306, 30 Hugo Crescent, Kitchener, Ontario, being Unit 6, level 3, Waterloo Condominium Plan No. 186, and from the common elements of that condominium plan.

Costs

[52] I see no reason to depart from the usual rule that costs follow the event. The Applicant, unless I am shown a relevant offer, shall have its costs on a partial indemnity basis in an amount to be fixed by me after receiving the parties' written submissions.

[53] The Applicant shall deliver its submissions on or before June 13, 2003 and the Respondent shall deliver their submissions on or before June 27, 2003.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: DAVID WEBB and DIANN WEBB v.
METROPOLITAN TORONTO CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION
NO. 979

BEFORE: NORDHEIMER J.

COUNSEL: Timothy Pinos for applicants

Patricia M. Conway for respondent

HEARD: June 3, 2003

[1] The applicants, who are unit owners in the respondent, seek an interlocutory injunction restraining the respondent from making a change to the television service provided to the unit owners in the condominium pending the hearing of the underlying application which challenges the process by which the respondent, or more specifically its Board of Directors, has pursued such a change.

[2] The respondent is one of three condominium buildings in a complex known as Marina Del Ray located on Lakeshore Boulevard West in the City of Toronto. The respondent had a contract with Rogers Cable for the provision of television services to the building. That contract was due to expire on May 31, 2003. The Board of Directors, in anticipation of the end of that contract, asked Rogers Cable and Bell ExpressVu to make proposals for a new contract. As a result of those proposals, the respondent entered into discussions with Bell ExpressVu which it viewed as having made the better proposal. Eventually, the respondent entered into a letter of intent with Bell ExpressVu to provide the service.

[3] A notice was sent to all unit owners in April 2003 advising of this proposed change. This notice was sent in purported compliance with section 97(3) of the Condominium Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19. However, it is the respondent's position that the change in the television service provider does not in fact fall within the matters covered by section 97(3).

[4] Subsequent to this notice, a meeting was held with the unit owners. It is contended that at this meeting, the proposed service being offered by Bell ExpressVu was altered to address certain complaints that had been made regarding the loss of channels that would have arisen if the original Bell ExpressVu proposal had been accepted. The applicants contend that the change in the proposed service then took the matter outside of the scope of the original notice and that a new notice was then necessary under section 97(3). No fresh notice having been made, the applicants contend that the respondent has failed to honour its obligations under the Act.

[5] The applicants launched the application which seeks an order under section 134 of the Act requiring the respondent to honour its obligations under the Act, specifically its obligations under sections 22(1) and 97(3). In the time period pending the hearing of the application, the applicants seek the aforementioned injunction.

[6] Certain provisions of the Act are relevant to this motion. Sections 22(2) and 22(3) state:

"(2) Despite subsection 21 (1), a corporation may, by resolution of the board without a by-law,

(a) make an agreement for a network upgrade to a telecommunications system that services the units of the corporation;

(b) make an agreement for a telecommunications system that is not connected to a telecommunications system that services the units of the corporation; or

(c) amend an agreement for a telecommunications system that services the units of the corporation to permit the other party to the agreement to supply and invoice part or all of the services directly to the unit owners.

(3) Subsections 97 (3), (4), (5) and (6) apply to an agreement described in subsection (2) as if it were a change in a service that a corporation provides to the owners."

[7] Section 97(3) of the Act states:

"A corporation may make an addition, alteration or improvement to the common elements, a change in the assets of the corporation or a change in a service that the corporation provides to the owners if,

(a) the corporation has sent a notice to the owners that,

(i) describes the proposed addition, alteration, improvement or change,

(ii) contains a statement of the estimated cost of the proposed addition, alteration, improvement or change indicating the manner in which the corporation proposes to pay the cost,

(iii) specifies that the owners have the right, in accordance with section 46 and within 30 days of receiving the notice, to requisition a meeting of owners, and

(iv) contains a copy of section 46 and this section; and

(b) one of the following conditions has been met:

1. The owners have not requisitioned a meeting in accordance with section 46 within 30 days of receiving a notice under clause (a).

2. The owners have requisitioned a meeting in accordance with section 46 within 30 days of receiving a notice under clause (a) but have not voted against the proposed addition, alteration, improvement or change at the meeting."

[8] Finally, section 97(4) states:

"Despite subsection (3), the corporation shall not make a substantial addition, alteration, improvement to the common elements, a substantial change in the assets of the corporation or a substantial change in a service that the corporation provides to the owners unless the owners who own at least 66 2/3 per cent of the units of the corporation vote in favour of approving it."

[9] The principles to be applied in determining whether an interlocutory injunction should be granted are well-established. As set out in the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in RJR-Macdonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [\[1994\] 1 S.C.R. 311](#), it involves a three part test: (i) there must be a serious issue to be tried; (ii) there must be irreparable harm occasioned to the applicant, and (iii) the balance of convenience must favour the applicant.

[10] Contrary to the respondent's submission, I do not accept that there are no material facts in dispute in this matter and therefore that the applicants must establish a strong prima facie case in order to obtain the relief which they seek. It seems evident that there are a number of material facts in dispute. Consequently, I consider the RJR test to be the proper test to apply to this motion. It is recognized that the threshold for establishing that there is a serious issue to be tried is a low one. It was also noted by Justices Sopinka and Cory in RJR-Macdonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), supra, at p. 338:

"A prolonged examination of the merits is generally neither necessary nor desirable."

[11] In my view the applicants have established that there is a serious issue to be tried. It is not my role on this motion to determine that issue. I need simply find, as I do, that there is a serious issue as to whether the proposed change in the television service to the building involves a "network upgrade to a telecommunications system" such that the requirements of section 22 of the Act are triggered. I also find that there is an issue as to whether the notice provided in April 2003 is sufficient to comply with the requirements of section 97(3) given the subsequent change in the proposal offered by Bell ExpressVu as revealed in the meeting of May 7, 2003. Finally on this point, there is an issue as to whether the change being proposed can reasonably be characterized as "a substantial change in a service that the corporation provides to the owners" such as to fall within the requirements of section 97(4) given that the respondent itself, in communicating to the unit owners, referred to the change in service as a "significant change" and a matter that "has far reaching implications". If the requirements of section 97(4) are invoked, then a two-thirds vote of the unit owners is necessary to approve the change and, of course, no such vote has been held.

[12] It is on the second and third factors in the test where I find that the applicants' motion flounders. I fail to see that there is any irreparable harm that will be occasioned to the applicants if the injunction is not granted. The Supreme Court in RJR-Macdonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), supra, defined irreparable harm in the following terms, at p. 341 (per Sopinka and Cory JJ.):

" 'Irreparable' refers to the nature of the harm suffered rather than its magnitude. It is harm which either cannot be quantified in monetary terms or which cannot be cured, usually because one party cannot collect damages from the other. Examples of the former include instances where one party will be put out of business by the court's decision (R.L. Crain Inc. v. Hendry (1988), 48 D.L.R. (4th) 228, 67 Sask. R. 123, 8 A.C.W.S. (3d) 380 (Q.B.)); where one party will suffer permanent market loss or irrevocable damage to its business reputation (American Cyanamid, supra); or where a permanent loss of natural resources will be the result when a challenged activity is not enjoined (MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Mullin, [1985] 3 W.W.R. 577, 61 B.C.L.R. 145 (C.A.)."

[13] I do not accept the contention of the applicants that the inconvenience that will be suffered by them from having a new television system installed in their unit and the time spent learning how to operate that system constitutes irreparable harm simply because it is asserted that such damage cannot be quantified in monetary terms. In my view those problems are de minimis and cannot rise to the level required to sustain a finding of irreparable harm.

[14] I am also not satisfied that the balance of convenience favours the applicants. The Board of Directors is, at this stage, presumed to be operating in good faith and in furtherance of its statutory duties and its decision is entitled to deference - see York Condominium Corp. No. 382 v. Dvorchik (1997), 12 R.P.R. (3d) 148 (Ont. C.A.). It may be, in the end result, that the Board will be found to have acted improperly but the court should not approach this motion assuming that result. Rather, the court should proceed on the basis that the decision of the Board is valid. The court should, consequently, be loathe to grant an order which would interfere with that decision unless it is clearly necessary to do so. If, at the end of the matter, the Board is found to have acted in contravention of its duties and obligations then there is nothing in the record before me that would suggest that the process by which Bell ExpressVu has gotten into the building to provide its service cannot be reversed and replaced with the service by Rogers Cable, or any other supplier, which the unit owners may decide to engage. While that would admittedly cause further inconvenience to the unit owners, that inconvenience is less substantial than the inconvenience that would be caused by the court interfering with the going operation of the building as determined by the Board of Directors.

[15] For these reasons, the applicants' motion is dismissed. The applicants will pay to the respondent the costs of the motion fixed at $2,500, being the amount agreed upon by counsel, within 30 days.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

MacKENZIE J.

The Issue

[1] Does Wellington Condominium Corporation No. 7 (WCC No. 7) or the unit owners therein (the Owners), have the obligation to replace windows and exterior doors servicing each unit that have worn out through normal wear and tear? This is the question for the determination of the court on the application by WCC No. 7 under Rule 14.05(3)(d) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

Overview

[2] The answer to the question will depend on the interpretation of the pertinent sections of the Condominium Act 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 19 Part VI, ss. 89-95 and ss. 11, 12 and 17 of the Declaration of WCC No. 7, together with the evidence and submissions in the application.

[3] The position of WCC No. 7 is that the obligation to replace windows and exterior doors which have worn out from normal wear and tear is on WCC No. 7 and not on the Owners in respect of the windows and exterior doors which service their individual units.

[4] Although the Owners have been duly served with Notice of the Application, none of them has filed a Notice of Appearance to the Application. In the result, there is no material nor submissions based on such material in opposition to the position being taken by WCC No. 7.

Analysis

[5] The Condominium Act, 1998 (the Act) deals with the obligations of maintenance and repair of the units and common elements of a condominium's real property. In this regard, s. 90 of the Act places an obligation on condominium corporations to maintain the common elements and an obligation on unit owners to maintain their respective units. Section 91 of the Act however allows for alteration of the obligations by the declaration of the condominium corporation. In particular, a declaration may alter the obligation to maintain or repair after damage by providing that unit owners shall maintain and repair those parts of the common elements of which the owner has the exclusive use. Section 91 provides as follows:

91. The declaration may alter the obligation to maintain or to repair after damage as set out in this Act by providing that:

- (a) subject to s. 123, each owner shall repair the owner's unit after damage;
- (b) the owners shall maintain the common elements or any part of them;
- (c) each owner shall maintain and repair after damage those parts of the common elements of which the owner has exclusive use; and
- (d) the corporation shall maintain the units or any part of them.

[6] Section 7(5) of the Act provides:

7(5) If any provision in a declaration is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act prevail and the declaration shall be deemed to be amended accordingly.

[7] Section 89 sets out the obligations on the condominium corporation and on unit owners to repair and maintain the condominium property. The pertinent parts of s.89 provide as follows:

89(1) Subject to ss. 91 and 123, the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage.

(2) The obligation to repair after damage includes the obligation to repair and replace after damage or failure but, subject to subsection (5), does not include the obligation to repair after damage improvements made to a unit. [my emphasis]

[8] The foregoing provisions set out the general legislative framework for the issues raised in the question before the court.

[9] Regard must now be had to the Declaration of WCC No. 7 (the Declaration) regarding the repair obligations of the condominium corporation and unit owners. Part IV of the Declaration entitled "maintenance" provides as follows:

s. 11 By the corporation

Subject to Clause 12 hereof, the corporation shall maintain all of the common elements including without limiting the foregoing:

- (a) all outside surfaces of the building including painted surfaces, roofs, eavestroughs that are constructed or installed at the date of registration of this Declaration and the description; [sic]
- (b) the partition walls between the units;

(c) all lawns, shrubs and landscaped areas, sidewalks, walkways, driveways, parking spaces, all electrical wiring circuits and lighting fixtures and light bulbs, sewer and water pipes in the common elements, notwithstanding such maintenance may be required as a result of reasonable wear and tear or otherwise.

s. 12 By the unit owner

Each unit owner shall maintain his unit or units (which shall include exterior windows and doors servicing his unit or units) and that portion of the common elements, if any, of which he has exclusive use pursuant to clause 8 hereof. [my emphasis]

[10] The Declaration creates an obligation on WCC No. 7 to repair after damage, in the following terms:

s. 17 Subject to the provisions of the Act and the Declaration, the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage.

[11] It is therefore necessary to determine the boundaries of the units and the description of the common elements in WCC No. 7.

[12] The unit boundaries are described in Schedule C of the Declaration as follows:

(a) Units 1 to 60, inclusive

Vertical [not applicable here]

Horizontal

All such units are bounded by the interior faces of the structural walls and their projections, the unfinished interior surfaces of the exterior doors (including garage doors in a closed position if garage is part of the unit), windows and window frames. [my emphasis]

...

(b) Units 61 to 98, inclusive

[the horizontal boundaries for these units do not refer to windows and are accordingly not pertinent in this application.

[13] The definitions of "unit" and "common elements" are found in the Act. Section 1(1) of the Act defines "unit" as follows:

"Unit" means a part of the property designated as a unit by the description and includes the space enclosed by its boundaries and all of the land, structures and fixtures within this space in accordance with the declaration and description. [my emphasis].

S. 1(1) of the Act defines "common elements" as meaning "all the property except the units".

[14] As noted above, the owners of units are responsible for maintaining their units and the condominium corporation is responsible for maintaining the common elements: s. 90(1) of the Act.

[15] The obligation to maintain or to repair after damage may be altered by and tear but does not include the obligation to repair after damage: s. 90(2) of the Act.

[16] The obligations to maintain or to repair after damage may be altered by the declaration. The declaration may also provide that unit owners maintain common elements or any part of them and maintain and repair after damage those parts of the common elements of which the owner has the exclusive use: See s.91(a), (b) and (c). In this case, the common elements of which the owner has the exclusive use are the windows and exterior doors servicing the owner's unit.

[17] The Declaration in s.12 has altered the owners' maintenance obligations. Section 12 states, in part, that the unit owner shall "maintain his unit or units (which shall include the exterior window and doors [sic] servicing his unit or units) and that portion of the common elements (if any) of which he has exclusive use..."

[18] It may be seen from the above provisions in the Act and Declaration that there is a distinction drawn between repair and maintenance, repair after normal wear and tear and repair after damage.

[19] It is not in dispute that the windows and exterior doors servicing the units are exclusive use common elements and not part of the common elements and that the Owners have the obligation to repair windows and exterior doors after normal wear and tear. However, the gist of the position of the WCC No. 7 is that the terms "repair after damage" and "maintain" as used in the above sections and Declarations have different meanings. Counsel submits that "maintain" or "maintenance" includes the obligation to repair windows and exterior doors after normal wear and tear but falls short of and does not include the obligation to replace windows and exterior doors in any circumstance, including after normal wear and tear. He contends that under s.89(2) of the Act, the obligation to repair after damage expressly includes the obligation to repair and replace after damage or failure but, subject to subsection 5, does not include the obligation to repair after damage improvements made to a unit [my emphasis]. (Sub-section 5 is a transitional provision which has no effect on the issue herein).

[20] Counsel submits that the term "failure" in the context of s. 89(2) and the Act as a whole should be interpreted as a state where the article ceases to be operative as originally designed or intended and has no residual value, in terms of its repair costs being equivalent to or exceeding its replacement cost. On this interpretation, it is submitted that:

(a) an item that has not yet failed would be maintained or repaired and covered under the heading of "maintenance"; and

(b) an item that has failed and no longer performs its normal function could either be repaired or replaced and is covered under the heading of "repair after damage".

In other words, whether an item is to be "maintained" or "repaired after damage" would be determined whether there has been failure of the item according to the above interpretation.

[21] I have not been referred to any authorities dealing with the issue arising in this application: counsel has informed me that as this is relatively new legislation, he is unaware of any authorities dealing with the question.

[22] I am unable to give effect to the submission that "failure" as the term is used in s. 89 should be given the interpretation contended for, namely, that the item ceases to be operative as originally designed and has no residual value. In my view, the word "failure" used in s. 89(2) is equally susceptible of being interpreted as a cessation of function due to manufacturing or installation defects as it is to a cessation of function without residual value in terms of repair costs being equivalent to or exceeding replacement costs.

[23] It remains open to WCC No. 7 (or any condominium corporation), to provide in its declaration to have WCC No. 7 (or any condominium corporation) assume the obligation to replace windows and exterior doors as a result of failure through normal wear and tear. In so doing, WCC No. 7 (or any condominium corporation) will be able to articulate the standard for "normal wear and tear" in context.

Disposition

[24] In the result, I find that the Owners have the obligation to replace windows and exterior doors servicing their units where such windows and exterior doors have worn out through normal wear and tear.

[25] As this is a novel point of law and no costs were sought by the applicant, no award shall be made.

affairs of a corporation except in very exceptional circumstances.

[15] For the above reasons, order to go as requested by the respondents, as follows:

- (1) a mandatory order directing David Thiel, the Chairman, to disclose and reveal the results of the election of the Board of Directors at a meeting held on October 13, 2005 at 7:00 p.m.; and
- (2) an order that all proxies and ballots currently being held by David Thiel be released to the new Board of Directors, and that David Thiel attend and complete the remainder of the Annual General Meeting.

Certain other matters are adjourned as set forth above.

DATE: December 21, 2005

15. (1) Even if the limitation period established by any other section of this Act in respect of a claim has not expired, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim after the expiry of a limitation period established by this section.

(2) No proceeding shall be commenced in respect of any claim after the 15th anniversary of the day on which the act or omission on which the claim is based took place. (Emphasis added.)

[5] The New Act also contains certain transitional provisions in Section 24, the relevant portions of which are as follows:

24. (1) In this section, “effective date” means the day on which this Act comes into force; (“date de l’entrée en vigueur”)

“former limitation period” means the limitation period that applied in respect of the claim before the coming into force of this Act. (“ancien délai de prescription) 2002, c.24, Sched. B, s. 24 (1).

Application

(2) This section applies to claims based on acts or omissions that took place before the effective date and in respect of which no proceeding has been commenced before the effective date. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B, s.24 (2).

Former limitation period expired

(3) If the former limitation period expired before the effective date, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B, s.24 (3).

Former limitation period unexpired

(4) If the former limitation period did not expire before the effective date and if no limitation period under this Act would apply were the claims based on an act or omission that took place on or after the effective date, there is no limitation period. 2002, c.24, Sched. B, s. 24 (4).

Same

(5) If the former limitation period did not expire before the effective date and if a limitation period under this Act would apply were the claim based on an act or omission that took place on or after the effective date, the following rules apply:

1. If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.

2. If the claim was discovered before the effective date, the former limitation period applies. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B, s. 24 (5).

No former limitation period

(6) If there was no former limitation period and if a limitation period under this Act would apply were the claim based on an act or omission that took place on or after the effective date, the following rules apply:

1. If the claim was not discovered before the effective date, this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date.

2. If the claim was discovered before the effective date, there is no limitation period. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B, s. 24 (6).

[6] Subsection 24(2) states that the transitional provisions apply to claims based on acts or omissions that took place prior to January 1, 2004 and in respect of which no proceeding had been commenced before that date. The transitional provisions, therefore, are clearly applicable to the case at bar. The transitional periods which could apply to the case at bar are contained in Subsections 24(5) and 24(6). It is to be noted that Section 15 of the New Act establishing the ultimate limitation period makes no reference to discoverability but measures the 15-year period from the date on which the act or omission actually took place. There is no cross reference between Section 15 and Section 24 to assist in interpreting the statute as to which provision would apply in the event of conflict.

Submissions of the City

[7] It is the submission of the City that the ultimate limitation period contained in Section 15 of the New Act overrides the transitional provisions contained in Section 24 and that, regardless which limitation period applies under the transitional provisions, no proceeding can commence more than 15 years after the date on which the act or omission actually took place. It is the City's position that, on the basis of principles of statutory interpretation, each provision of a statute must be looked at in the context of the total statute, the purpose of the legislation and the intent of the legislature. The City submits that the inclusion of the ultimate limitation period in the New Act is necessary to counterbalance the codification of the discovery principle in the New Act and to impose some outside arbitrary date by which proceedings must be commenced regardless of the discovery date. They submit that to interpret the New Act so as to be exempt from the ultimate limitation period claims based on acts or omissions which occurred prior to January 1, 2004 but were not discovered until after that date would be inconsistent with the theme and purpose of the legislation and the intention of the legislature. They point out that there is no reference in any of the explanatory notes to the New Act, the Report prepared by the Limitations Act Consulting Group appointed by the Attorney General for the purposes of the New Act or in any of the texts commenting on the New Act to the ultimate limitation period being anything other than 15 years from the date on which the act or omission actually took place and no indication that that would not be applicable in the case of proceedings to which the transitional provisions are applicable. They further submit that an ultimate limitation period is a practical necessity because witnesses die or can no longer be located, documents are destroyed or lost and standards of practice and behaviour change, all of which are equally applicable to claims based on very old acts or omissions whether the discovery date is after January 1, 2004 or prior to January 1, 2004 and there is no principle reason why the ultimate limitation period should not apply to claims where the date of the act or omission and the date of commencement of the proceeding straddle the effective date of the New Act.

[8] On the interpretation of the New Act, it is the position of the City that the purpose of Section 24 is to establish which limitation period is applicable where the act or omission took place before the New Act came into force but the proceeding was commenced after the New Act came into force. They submit that it is illogical to interpret Section 24 as providing that a new ultimate limitation period applies to cases which happen to straddle the effective date and that such an interpretation would be inconsistent with Subsection 15 of the New Act which states:

15. (1) Even if the limitation period established by any other section of this Act in respect of a claim has not expired, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim after the expiry of a limitation period established by this section. 2002, c.24, Sched. B, s.15 (1).

[9] The City submits that to interpret the phrase "this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date" in paragraph 1 of Subsection 24(5) and in paragraph 1 of Subsection 24(6) to mean that, in the straddle cases, the ultimate limitation period would not commence until January 1, 2004 would lead to the absurd result that, if a claim based on a 1978 act was discovered on December 31, 2003, it would be barred by the ultimate limitation period but, if discovered at any time between January 1, 2004 and December 31, 2018 a proceeding could be commenced at any time within two years from the discovery date. The City submits that this could not have been the intention of the legislature in enacting the ultimate limitation period and, if this had been the intent of the legislature, it would have specifically so provided either in Section 15 or in Section 24. The City further submits that, in cases where the ultimate limitation period is not applicable, it is specifically so provided in the New Act. For example, Subsection 15(3) of the New Act provides that “despite Subsection 15(2) no proceedings against a purchaser of personal property for value acting in good faith shall be commenced in respect of conversion of the property after the second anniversary of the date on which the property was converted” and Subsection 16(4) of the New Act expressly states that the limitation provisions set out in Section 16 with respect to proceedings referred to in Section 16 prevail over anything contained in Section 15.

Submissions of YCC

[10] The principle submission of YCC is that there is no ambiguity in the wording of clause 1 of Subsection 24(5) of the New Act looked at alone or in a juxtaposition with Section 15 of the New Act and that the words “this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date” applies for all purposes of the New Act including Section 15. YCC points out that under the prior regime the applicable limitation period would be measured from the date of discovery and, as the act in our case was not discovered until January 1, 2004, there was no limitation period that had expired pursuant to the old regime. Accordingly, the applicable transition provision in the New Act is clause 1 of Subsection 24(5), which states “this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date”. YCC submits that Subsection 24(5) does not specify a limitation period; it provides a method for determining a limitation period and accordingly, the introductory phrase of Subsection 15 “even if the limitation period established by any other section of this Act in respect of a claim had not expired ...” is not applicable to the case at bar. Accordingly, YCC submits that the only applicable limitation period for the commencement of a proceeding based upon the negligence of the City in 1978 is a limitation period running for two years from the date of discovery in May 2004 and, this action having been commenced on June 22, 2005, it is within the limitation period established by the New Act. YCC submits that the only effect of Section 15 is that its proceeding could not be commenced after January 1, 2019 if the negligence of the City had remained undiscovered because it is deemed to have occurred as of January 1, 2004. This is because Subsection 24(5) deems the negligence of the City to have occurred as of January 1, 2004 for all purposes of the New Act and “resets the clock” for the determination of the commencement of the limitation period.

Analysis

[11] I am unable to accept the submission of YCC that there is no ambiguity in the meaning of the words “this Act applies as if the act or omission had taken place on the effective date” in subparagraph 24(5) and that the court must therefore give those words their plain meaning, that is that all provisions of the New Act apply as if the act or omission had occurred on January 1, 2004.

[12] The fact that I have received very able submission from counsel on two conflicting interpretations of the transitional provisions is of itself compelling evidence of ambiguity particularly when viewed alongside the provisions of Section 15.

In any event, those words used in Subsection 24(5) cannot be looked at in isolation and must be interpreted in the context of the New Act as a whole, the structure and purpose of such legislation and the intent of the legislature. This requires a purposive analysis. In my view the structure and purpose of the legislation incorporates the balancing referred to by the City between the discovery principle and the need for some cut-off date beyond which proceedings cannot be brought.

With respect to the intent of the legislature in “Sullivan and Driedger “The Construction of Statutes”, 4th edition, the authors state at page 216:

.... legislative purpose is often thought of in terms of the mischief or social ill it is designed to remedy or the problem it is meant to address. This problem may be identified in an authoritative source such as the preamble to legislation, a Commission report or a scholarly text. It may also be inferred by matching provisions in the legislation to conditions which existed at the time of enactment and to which the provisions are a plausible response.

[13] In our case, all of the external sources cited to the court are consistent in establishing that it was the intention of the legislature to enact an ultimate limitation period to counterbalance the codification of the discovery principle in the New Act and to provide an outside arbitrary date after which proceedings could not be brought, regardless of the discoverability date. In view of the practical and evidentiary problems referred to in the explanatory notes to the legislation, the Report and the texts commenting on the new legislation, and the absence of any reference in any of those sources to the ultimate limitation period not being applicable to proceedings based on an act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date but is discovered after the effective date is, in my view, compelling evidence that this was not the intention of the legislature.

[14] I am also concerned that, to interpret the transitional provisions as submitted by YCC, could lead to an absurd result in that a proceeding based on an act which occurred in 1978 where the claim was discovered in 2003 could not proceed whereas a proceeding based on the same 1978 act where the claim was discovered in 2018 could proceed. As stated by Iacobucci J. in Re Rizzo and Rizzo Shoes Ltd. 1998 CanLII 837 (S.C.C.), (1998) 1 S.C.R. 27 at page 43, “it is a well established principle of statutory interpretation that the legislature does not intend to produce absurd consequences”.

The modern understanding of the “golden rule” or the presumption against absurdity includes the following propositions.

(1) It is presumed that the legislature does not intend its legislation to have absurd consequences.

(2) Absurd consequences are not limited to logical contradictions or internal incoherence but include violations of established legal norms such as rule of law; they also include violations of widely accepted standards of justice and reasonableness.

(3) Whenever possible, an interpretation that leads to absurd consequences is rejected in favour of one that avoids absurdity.

(4) The more compelling the absurdity, the greater the departure from ordinary meaning that is tolerated.

[16] I have been cited no authorities on the interpretation of the ultimate limitation period provision or the transitional provisions of the New Act. Counsel for the City have, however, made reference to decisions of the British Columbia courts with reference to a 30-year ultimate limitation provision incorporated in the British Columbia Limitation Act in 1975. In Armstrong v. West Vancouver (District) (2003) B.C.J. No. 303 (BCCA), in commenting on the interrelation between the discovery principle contained in Section 6 of the Act and the ultimate limitation period provided in Section 8 of the Act, MacKenzie J.A. after referring to certain earlier authorities stated at paragraph 16:

As Wallace J.A. noted in Wittman v. Emmott et al 1991 CanLII 1119 (BC C.A.), (1991), 53 B.C.L.R. (2d) 228 (C.A.) Wilson J. also commented:

It seems to me that the purpose of ss. 3(1)(a) and 6(3) was to give legislative effect to the reasoning in Sparham-Souter by postponing the running of time until the acquisition of knowledge or means of knowledge of the facts giving rise to the cause of action. The Act has also resolved the problem of stale claims which was the major criticism of the principle. Section 8(1) reads in relevant part:

8. (1) Subject to section 3(3), but notwithstanding a confirmation made under section 5 or a postponement or suspension of the running of time under section 6, 7 or 12, no action to which this Act applies shall be brought after the expiration of 30 years from the date on which the right to do so arose.....

This passage implies that the postponement provision in s. 6 has supplanted the common law rule. Under the Act, the cause of action arises when the damage occurs. This applies to both s. 3 and s. 8, but only the running of s. 3 time can be postponed under s. 6. Postponement is explicitly excluded from the ultimate limitation period in s. 8(1), and the outer limit for hidden damage claims is 30 years from the date that damage occurs.

[17] In 410727 B.C. Ltd. et al v. Dayhu Investments Ltd. et al 2004 BCCA 379 (CanLII), (2004) 241 D.L.R. (4th) 467 (BCCA) Newbury J.A., with reference to the policy considerations in the enactment of an ultimate limitation period, stated at paragraph 21:

Balancing the concern for plaintiffs with undiscovered causes of action was the concern that the new discoverability rules could result in limitation periods being postponed indefinitely.

Referring to the broad policy reasons for limitation statutes, the Commission noted in this regard:

Applied in isolation, a discoverability rules does not serve the purpose of freeing defendants, after an appropriate length of time, from the economic and psychological burdens of potential litigation and the practical difficulties of defending stale claims. It does not take into account broader social interests in seeking finality to litigation, such as the economic impact of increased liability insurance costs passed on the consumers of goods and services.

Once it is accepted that the goals of certainty and finality should yield to the unknowing plaintiffs' right to present a claim when the facts come to light, it does not necessarily follow that they should be abandoned entirely. Replacing the traditional one-sidedness of limitations law favouring defendants with an equally one-sided regime favouring plaintiffs fails to achieve the necessary balance.

Some protection is needed against the injustice which may result where a plaintiff succeeds because the defendant is not able to present any evidence due to the lapse of time and lack of notice that a claim exists. [At 21-22.]

The “balance” struck by the Commission and by the Limitation Act was the 30-year limitations period established by s. 8. It provides in material part:

8(1) Subject to section 3(4) and subsection (2) of this section but despite a confirmation made under section 5, a postponement or suspension of the running of time under section 6 or 11(2) or a postponement or suspension of the running of time under section 7 in respect of a person who is not a minor, no action to which this Act applies may be brought

(c) in any other case, after the expiration of 30 years from the date on which the right to do so arose. [Emphasis added.]

As I have attempted to explain (in this case and at greater length in Arishenkoff), s. 8 was intended to act as a “longstop” on the indefinite postponement of actions by the operation of the statutory discoverability rules, and represents a “balance” between the interests of society in finality on the one hand, and on the other hand, the interests of plaintiffs in being able to pursue longstanding claims only recently discovered. If the fire were regarded as giving rise to a new cause of action in this case, the intention of s. 8 would surely be frustrated: new claims could arise against designers, contractors, builders, and local governments indefinitely into the future after the completion of construction whenever a fire, flood or other external event occurred, and could arise repeatedly. The 30-year “ultimate limitation, which applies expressly notwithstanding the fact that the cause of action in question may not be discoverable, mandates that there be a point after which such prospective defendants may not be sued. In the case at bar, that point was reached, at the latest, in 1998 – four years before the issuance of the plaintiffs’ writ.

[18] I adopt the statements of the BC Court of Appeal in Armstrong, supra, and Dayhu, supra, which cases considered legislation and fact situations analogous to those in the case at bar.

[19] Accordingly, on the basis of principles of statutory interpretation, a purposive analysis of the New Act, a review of source of materials related to the enactment of the New Act and the authorities cited above, I am of the view that Section 15 of the New Act is a bar to this action and an order will issue dismissing the action as against the City of Toronto.

[20] Counsel may make brief written submissions to me with respect to the costs of this proceeding on or before January 30, 2006.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: York Condominium Corporation No. 482, Applicant;
and

Ken Christiansen, Michael Christiansen, Wendy Christiansen, Penny Ible, 135
Marlee Holdings Inc., RPM Management Inc., Jim Rushton and Rainbow International Real Estate Developments Ltd., Respondents;

HEARD: December 12, 17; 2002.

BEFORE: Lane J.

COUNSEL: Jonathan Fine, for the Respondents (except RPM and Rushton), moving parties;

Patricia M. Conway, for the Applicant, responding on the motion;

M. Speirs for unit owners in Alberta.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[1] This is a motion within this Application for an order that certain certificates of lien registered by the applicant against the condominium units owned by the moving parties are invalid and should be discharged. The central issue is whether the applicant can properly impose a lien upon all of the units owned by a particular owner to secure payment of overdue common expenses, even though some of that owner's units are not in arrears. The applicant alleges that the moving parties, who own a large number of units within the condominium, are in arrears of common expenses as to their units. To enforce payment, the applicant has registered liens under the Condominium Act, 1998, (Act) against all of the units owned by the moving parties. The moving parties maintain that they are in arrears as to some, but not all, of their units and that liens can only be registered against the units in default. They move to discharge the liens from those of their units in respect of which they are not in default.

[2] There are similar issues relating to notices of attornment served by the applicant upon the tenants of units owned by the moving parties requiring the tenants to pay their rent to the applicant and not to the owner. The moving parties say that not all such units are in default and such notices cannot be delivered in respect of units where there is no default. In some cases, these notices also conflict with similar notices served upon the tenants by the mortgagees of the relevant units.

Principles of Statutory Interpretation:

[3] The modern Canadian law as to the interpretation of statutes was enunciated by Iacobucci J., for the court, in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re) [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27. The case involved whether employees whose employment was terminated by the bankruptcy of their employer were entitled to the benefits given by Ontario law to employees whose employment was terminated by the active decision of the employer. The plain meaning of the language of the legislation (Employment Standards Act - Ontario) was to so confine it, and the Court of Appeal for Ontario did so. However, the Supreme Court reversed even though it did not disagree with the Court of Appeal on the plain meaning. At page 41, Iacobucci J. referred to page 87 of the text written by Elmer Driedger: Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983) [see now Sullivan and Driedger: Construction of Statutes 4th ed., page 1] as best encapsulating the correct approach, recognizing that "statutory interpretation cannot be founded on the wording of the legislation alone":

Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act and the intention of Parliament.

[4] Iacobucci J. continued by referring to the Interpretation Act section 10, providing that every Act is "deemed to be remedial" and shall receive "...such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit." It is therefore clear that context and purpose are better guides to statutory interpretation than a narrow focus on the words alone.

[5] I turn to consider general purposes of the Act. It creates a way of holding an interest in residential land quite unlike anything at common law, but with individual features that are familiar, such as mortgages, priorities, tenancies, liens, attachment of rents and so on. Peculiar to the condominium are such features as common expenses, a central aspect of this case, and the power of the Board to make rules affecting an individual's residence, the very castle of which he is king at common law. A principal object of the Act is to achieve fairness among the parties - owners, their tenants, their mortgagees, the corporation itself - in raising the money to keep the common enterprise solvent. Hence the Act provides for owners to contribute to the fund for common expenses in the proportions specified in the Declaration, which normally means in accordance with the number and size of the units which they own. This common expenses fund is the central financial mechanism of the corporation and the duty of contributing to it is the central mechanism to achieve financial fairness among the owners. If one owner fails to pay, the others must bear his burden; the expenses are not optional and they do not just go away.

[6] Because of the importance of the common expenses, the Act provides the corporation with some tools to compel payment. Two such tools are at the heart of the dispute before me: a lien upon the unit and a right to attach the rents from a leased unit. The language of the sections creating these rights of the corporation is parallel in one aspect on which the moving parties place great emphasis. The sections invariably refer to unit in the singular. This is said to show that the remedies are applicable only on a 'unit by unit' basis. Nowhere does the Act deal expressly with the consequences of the ownership of more than one unit by an owner. Sections 85 and 87, creating the lien and the attachment, consistently use the singular 'unit'. However, the Interpretation Act imports the plural into the singular, albeit only "unless the contrary intention appears" (section 28 (j)). Therefore, the reader begins with the understanding that the singular includes the plural, and seeks to find any reason to infer a contrary intention.

[7] In approaching the above question, it is vital to remember that the two rights in question are tools to achieve the purpose of equity among the owners by enforcing their obligations to pay the common expenses. It is unlikely that the Legislature intended a narrow reading of rights enacted for such a purpose.

Lien Rights:

[8] The relevant sections of the Act as to the lien rights of the applicant are:

Contribution of owners

84.(1) Subject to the other provisions of this Act, the owners shall contribute to the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration.

Lien upon default

85. (1) If an owner defaults in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses, the corporation has a lien against the owner's unit and its appurtenant common interest for the unpaid amount together with all interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses incurred by the corporation in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the unpaid amount.

Expiration of lien

(2) The lien expires three months after the default that gave rise to the lien occurred unless the corporation within that time registers a certificate of lien in a form prescribed by the Minister.

Certificate of lien

(3) A certificate of lien when registered covers,

- (a) the amount owing under all of the corporation's liens against the owner's unit that have not expired at the time of registration of the certificate;
- (b) the amount by which the owner defaults in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses after the registration of the certificate; and
- (c) all interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses that the corporation incurs in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the amounts described in clauses (a) and (b), including the costs of preparing and registering the certificate of lien and a discharge of it.

Notice to owner

(4) At least 10 days before the day a certificate of lien is registered, the corporation shall give written notice of the lien to the owner whose unit is affected by the lien.

Lien enforcement

(6) The lien may be enforced in the same manner as a mortgage.

Discharge of lien

(7) Upon payment of the amounts described in subsection (3), the corporation shall prepare and register a discharge of the certificate of lien in the form prescribed by the Minister and shall advise the owner in writing of the particulars of the registration.

Priority of lien

86. (1) Subject to subsection (2), a lien mentioned in subsection 85(1) has priority over every registered and unregistered encumbrance even though the encumbrance existed before the lien arose but does not have priority over,

- (a) a claim of the Crown other than by way of a mortgage;
- (b) a claim for taxes, charges, rates or assessments levied or recoverable under the Municipal Act, the Education Act, the Local Roads Boards Act, the Statute Labour Act or the Local Improvement Act; or
- (c) a lien or claim that is prescribed.

Notice of lien

(3) The corporation shall, on or before the day a certificate of lien is registered, give written notice of the lien to every encumbrancer whose encumbrance is registered against the title of the unit affected by the lien.

Service of notice

(4) The corporation shall give the notice by personal service or by sending it by registered prepaid mail addressed to the encumbrancer at the encumbrancer's last known address.

Effect of no notice

(5) Subject to subsection (6), the lien loses its priority over an encumbrance unless the corporation gives the required notice to the encumbrancer.

Mortgagee's rights

88. (1) Every mortgage of a unit shall be deemed to contain a provision that,

- (a) the mortgage has the right to collect the owner's contribution to the common expenses and shall promptly pay the amount so collected to the corporation on behalf of the owner;
- (b) the owner's default in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses constitutes default under the mortgage;
- (c) the mortgagee has the right to pay,
 - (i) the amounts of the owner's contribution to the common expenses that from time to time fall due and are unpaid in respect of the mortgaged premises,
 - (ii) all interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses that the corporation incurs in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the amounts described in subclause (i), including, where applicable, the costs of preparing and registering a certificate of lien and a discharge of it;
- (d) payments made by the mortgagee under clause (c), together with interest and all reasonable costs, charges and expenses incurred in respect of the payments, are to be added to the debt secured by the mortgage and to be payable, with interest at the rate payable on the mortgage; and
- (e) if after demand the owner fails to fully reimburse the mortgagee, the mortgage immediately becomes due and payable at the option of the mortgagee.

Statement of common expenses

(2) A corporation shall, on request and free of charge, provide to the mortgagee of a unit a written statement setting out the common expenses in respect of the unit and, if there is a default in the payment of them, the amounts described in subsection 85(3) in respect of the unit.

[9] Counsel for the moving parties submitted that the language of these sections implied a unit by unit approach rather than the liability of an owner being secured upon all of its units. He noted that in section 85, the word used consistently was "unit" and not "units" or "unit or units". Section 85(6) provides for the enforcement of the lien in the same manner as a mortgage, that is by sale of a unit and it would make no sense, he submitted, that the applicant could sell one unit for the debt of another, even when owned by the same owner.

[10] Counsel placed particular emphasis upon section 86(1) which grants the lien priority over prior encumbrances, submitting that this priority ensured the collection of whatever was owed on each unit and rendered unnecessary any lien rights over other units of the same owner. If the applicant's position were correct, so that all an owner's units could be lined for the debt owed on only one, this priority could place a mortgagee in an impossible position. Where there were several units owned by one mortgagor, each with a different mortgagee, a mortgagee might be required to pay the arrears on another unit to obtain a discharge of the lien on the unit that is its security. In an extreme case, the arrears on several units could exceed the equity in a unit, leaving the mortgagee with a deficit caused by debt on other units against which it holds no security.

[11] Counsel also pointed to section 86(3) requiring the lienor to give notice to "every encumbrancer whose encumbrance is registered against the title of the unit affected by the lien". This language was only consistent with a unit by unit approach: there was a unit and it had an encumbrancer to whom notice had to be given.

[12] The moving parties also rely upon section 88 of the Act regarding mortgagees' rights. They submit that it too provides for a unit by unit framework, (factum paragraph 78):

a. Under s. 88(1)(a), a "mortgagee has the right to collect the owner's contribution to the common expenses." It is submitted that "the owner's contribution to the common expenses" must mean in relation to the mortgaged unit only;

b. Under s. 88(1)(b), "Every mortgage of a unit shall be deemed to contain a provision that .. the owner's default in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses constitutes default under the mortgage." It is submitted that it would be illogical that an owner's default in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses in respect of unit B would be a default under [another] mortgagee's mortgage on Unit A. Therefore, again, the default in question must be in relation to the mortgaged unit only.

c. Sec. 88(1)(c)(i) permits a mortgagee to protect its security by paying to the condominium corporation, "the amounts of the owner's contribution to the common expenses that from time to time fall due and are unpaid in respect of the mortgaged premises." Not only does s. 88(1)(c)(i) specifically refer to the "mortgaged premises", it would be an absurd interpretation to suggest that a mortgagee AA would be required to, or would have the right to, pay mortgagor A's default in contribution to common expenses in relation to another unit not mortgaged to mortgagee AA. Therefore, the words "the owner's contribution to the common expenses" must be in relation to the mortgaged unit only.

d. s. 88(2) obliges a condominium corporation "to provide to the mortgagee of a unit a written statement setting out the common expenses in respect of the unit and, if there is a default in the payment of them, the amounts described in subsection 85 (3) in respect of the unit." If a mortgagee had the obligation or the right to pay or collect arrears of common expenses in relation to a unit not mortgaged to it by the mortgagor, then the mortgagee would not have the right to obtain such statement in respect of such unit.

[13] Before moving on, I pause to observe that the above clauses from section 88 might be expected to focus, as they do, on the individual units, since they are establishing the minimum provisions of a mortgage of a unit and units are mortgaged one at a time. I do not think that these provisions cast much light on the problem before me.

[14] The moving parties submitted that the statutory framework of the lien works only on a unit by unit basis. Such an interpretation balances the rights of the parties in the best way. The corporation can collect the common expenses in priority to the encumbrancer, but the priority is limited to the unit in arrears. The mortgagee suffers a diminution of its priority, but it is limited to the unit against which it has security and it has the right to protect itself by requiring the mortgagor to pay the common expenses to it as part of the mortgage payments.

[15] The applicant, in response, provided some background in support of a different view. The moving party Ken Christiansen, through a company, was the property manager, but had delegated the actual work to the respondent Jim Rushton who permitted Mr. Christiansen and the other moving parties to fall into arrears of common expenses. Mr. Ken Christiansen's 11 units are shown in the applicant's records as owing a total of over $29,000 at August 2002, reduced somewhat by the attornment of rents by the time of the hearing. (There is an accounting dispute between the parties, and I cite these figures merely as background and not as a finding). The cumulative effect of the arrears of common expenses, which were allowed to build up to more than $150,000 by June 2002 in respect of over 50 units (not all belonging to the moving parties), was that the corporation could not pay its bills.

[16] This background illustrates, says the applicant, the reason why the payment of common expenses has been given a form of super-priority in the Act: these expenses are the life blood of the corporation. To the extent that some owners do not pay, the rest will suffer directly. That is why the Act gives these expenses priority over the individual debts of the owners to their mortgagees. Mortgagees understand this scheme and there is no unfairness to them in enforcing it.

[17] Turning to the lien issue, the applicant first submitted that all of the liened units were in arrears because all of the relevant owners owed common expenses to the corporation and the lien is simply a means of collecting debts owed by owners. There was no reason why the debt could not accrue unit by unit but be collectible against any property owned by the relevant owner. Counsel submitted that it was open to the corporation to attorn rents from any unit owned by A and apply them to any debt owed to the corporation by A. Since that was possible, it followed that all units owned by A owed money and would be subject to a lien under sec. 85(1).

[18] At paragraph 16 of its Supplementary Factum, the applicant refers to the provisions of sec. 85(1)(7) and whether the defaulting owner could obtain a partial discharge of the corporation's lien:

The issue of whether an owner is entitled to a partial discharge if he or she pays the arrears on an individual unit has not arisen and has not been determined. Section 85 speaks of an owner's default and obligation to contribute to common expenses. However, subsection 7 requires discharge "upon payments of the amounts described in subsection 3", without differentiating a payment made by the mortgagee and one made by the owner. It appears therefore that an owner would be entitled to a partial discharge with respect to a particular unit on payment of the arrears owing for that unit.

Analysis of the Lien Issue:

[19] I begin with the applicant's submission that the wide power of attachment of rents creates a debt against each unit of the defaulting owner and thereby renders each unit subject to the statutory lien. Even accepting (as I do later in these reasons) the applicant's submission that the corporation can attorn the rents of one unit owned by A for the arrears of another unit owned by him, does not provide a basis for extending the lien right in the same manner. The applicant conceded that no lien could arise against a unit if there was no money owing in respect of that unit, but argued that the attornment right meant that all of an owner's units would owe money if one did. I cannot agree that the analogy is apt. Lien rights and attachment rights are very different tools. The right to attach the rents does not arise because the tenanted unit is in default, but because the tenant owes money to the owner and the corporation is intercepting it. The basis for enforcing a lien upon a unit as to which there is no default cannot be found in the rent attachment provisions.

[20] The statutory lien under section 85 arises upon the owner defaulting in "the obligation to contribute to the common expenses". The lien arises by operation of law, without any notice or other step by the corporation to bring it into existence. The function of the notice is to prevent the expiration of the lien after the three month period in sec. 85(2). The section gives a lien upon the "owner's unit" which includes the plural according to the Interpretation Act. If the plural is substituted, the language works perfectly well in section 85. No notices are given to anyone until the corporation decides to preserve the lien by registration, presumably because normal requests for payment have not succeeded. At that point, the corporation gives notice to the owner under section 85 (4) and thereafter registers the certificate under section 85(3) setting out the whole of the amount owing.

[21] However, at this point, section 86 grants the lien priority over every encumbrance. If the section means that a lien on unit A, on which nothing is owed, for the owner's debt in respect of unit B which it also owns, has priority over the encumbrance on Unit A, there is a possibility of unfairness to the mortgagee of Unit A. The applicant disposes of this problem by finding in section 85(7) a basis for a partial discharge of Unit A upon payment of the amount owing relating to that unit. In the example given, the mortgagee of Unit A could obtain a discharge of the lien on that unit by paying nothing.

[22] The difficulty with the applicant's analysis is that it leads to a dead end. In the example above, if the lien on Unit A can be discharged by the owner or the mortgagee paying only what is owing on that Unit, then liens on all of an owner's units add no security that is not achieved by liens on defaulting units only. If, however, a blanket lien on all of an owner's units cannot be discharged without the payment of all sums owing for all units, then the position of a mortgagee of any one of a group of units is potentially very difficult. Either way, the lack of utility or the lack of fairness of the blanket lien speak against that interpretation.

[23] The moving parties' analysis of the scheme of the section regarding the corporation's lien for common expenses is persuasive. The jeopardy to mortgagees inherent in the applicant's reading is significant and, if intended by the Legislature would surely have been dealt with expressly. As noted, the Interpretation Act imports the plural into the singular, but only "unless the contrary intention appears" (section 28 (j)), and the moving parties' analysis provides support for a contrary intention so far as the imposition of a lien by operation of law beyond the unit in default is concerned. To permit the lien to extend beyond the very unit in default or to enforce a lien upon unit A for the default of the same owner on Unit B risks upsetting the balance of fairness among the parties, particularly the mortgagees. It should be noted, however, that there would be no element of unfairness to the defaulting owner in permitting a broader lien; the narrowness of the lien right is not intended to enable the owner to escape payment.

[24] The applicant's own analysis of section 85(7), supra, indicates that the lien is confined to the arrears on the liened unit. If a discharge can be obtained by paying only those arrears, the lien is only effective for arrears on that unit. If it is limited in that way, the fear that the equity will be wiped out by accumulated arrears on other units disappears, but there is no utility in reading the Act as permitting the imposition of a lien upon a unit other than the unit in arrears as it will not gain the lienor any additional funds.

[25] For these reasons, I read section 85 of the Act as imposing a lien only against a unit actually in arrears and not against units belonging to the same owner but not in arrears.

Attornment Rights:

[26] The question of the ability of a condominium corporation to attach rents to recoup all of the owner's default in payment of common expenses, not just the debt arising in relation to the unit whose rents are attached, raises different issues than those just discussed. There is no inherent reason why the two collection rights given to the corporation should be identical in their scope. The debt may well accrue and be calculated unit by unit but be collectible by attaching the rent from any or all units owned by one owner. After all it is the owner who defaults, not the unit. As noted, attachment is not a remedy which intrudes into the mortgagee's rights so far as to jeopardize its security. The tenant is fully protected because the rent taken by the corporation is deemed to have been paid to the owner. There is no unfairness to the owner. It was submitted that there was unfairness because many owners depended on the rent to pay the mortgage. This amounts to arguing that the corporation should in effect pay the owner's mortgages by foregoing the common expenses. The scheme of the Act is the exact reverse: priority is given to the common expenses.

[27] The sections relevant to the attornment rights of the applicant are:

Default with respect to leased unit

87. (1) If an owner who has leased a unit defaults in the owner's obligation to contribute to the common expenses, the corporation may, by written notice to the lessee, require the lessee to pay to the corporation the lesser of the amount of the default and the amount of the rent due under the lease.

Service on lessee

(2) The corporation shall give the notice to the lessee by personal service or by sending it by prepaid mail addressed to the lessee at the address of the unit.

Notice to owner

(3) If the corporation gives a notice to a lessee, it shall give a copy of the notice to the owner of the unit that the lessee has leased.

Rent paid to corporation is not on its face confined to default in respect of the leased unit

(5) Upon receiving a notice under subsection (1), the lessee shall make the required payment to the corporation even if an encumbrancer of the unit has acquired the right of the lessor to receive rent under the lease.

No default in lease

(6) The payment to the corporation shall constitute payment towards rent under the lease and the lessee shall not by reason only of the payment to the corporation be considered to be in default of an obligation in the lease.

[28] The language of section 87(1) is not on its face expressly restricted to default in respect of the very unit leased, but refers generally to the owner's obligation. Considering the objects of the Act, should such a restriction be read in?

[29] The moving parties submitted that section 87 should be read as requiring the corporation to attach rents from Unit A only to pay arrears on payments for Unit A, whereas the corporation here has done so in order to recoup arrears on other units of the same owner. To allow this would be unfair to the mortgagee of the unit not in default. That mortgagee would be deprived of the right to attach the rent itself to pay its mortgage.

[30] The moving parties further submitted that the mortgagee would also lose the benefit of the right to pay the amount owing for common expenses in order to keep the unit in good standing. I do not think that this is so. If the unit owner owes arrears on a unit, the mortgagee can pay them itself, add them to the mortgage and keep the unit which is its security in good standing. Its only loss is the ability to take the rent for that purpose. There is no unfairness. The security interest of the mortgagee is not in any jeopardy. The scheme of the Act, particularly its super-priority for the common expenses, is well-known to mortgagees, who can, and do, protect their security by appropriate terms.

[31] The applicant submitted that it is important to understand the centrality of the common expenses in the operation of the condominium corporation for the benefit of all of the owners. This is a joint living enterprise in which whatever is left unpaid by one must be paid by the others. It makes sense that one of the objectives of the legislation is to achieve equity among the owners. Both the lien and the right to attach are designed to achieve this end. Even if, in the case of the lien, there are compelling reasons to confine its impact to the unit in arrears, given that virtually all units will have a mortgagee involved, there are no such reasons affecting the right to attach. The impact upon the mortgagee is limited and can be recouped by the mortgagee. It is a matter of the corporation as creditor intercepting cash owed to the debtor by a third party, a process which primarily affects the debtor, as the statute intends. This kind of situation occurs daily in the operation of debtor-creditor law, in which there need not be any relationship at all between the source of the debt and the source of the cash being seized. It would be an unjustified limitation on the effect of section 87 to confine it as the moving parties propose.

[32] I find this reasoning by the applicant persuasive. The attornment is much less drastic and intrusive into the rights of the mortgagee. It does not affect the mortgagee's security. It does not carry with it the possibility that an accumulation of the debts of other units may wipe out the equity and leave the mortgagee with a deficit. There are not the same reasons to confine the right to the very unit in respect of which the owner is in default as exist in the case of the lien. Given the statutory priority of the common expenses over the mortgage, there is every reason to read the section so as to enable the corporation to recover what is due to it.

[33] The applicant also relied upon the decision of Nordheimer J. of this court in MTCC 1175 v. Irving A. Burton Ltd. (1999) 25 R.P.R. (3rd) 268. This case involved section 49(3) of the previous Condominium Act, which provided for the attachment of rent in similar language as is found in section 87(1) of the Act. The contest was between the Construction Lien Act trustee of the original developer, Dynasty Executive Suites Ltd., and the condominium corporation. Both had served notices to attorn upon the tenants of the units still owned by Dynasty. One issue was the same as ours: could the corporation attach rents beyond the amounts owing by each unit? Nordheimer J. said, at paragraph 22:

Finally, I mention that the wording of section 49 refers to the obligations of the owner to contribute to the common expenses. That wording would suggest that it is the entirety of the owner's obligations that are covered by the section and not just that portion of the default attributable to a particular unit. It would follow, therefore, that the condominium corporation can attach the rents to recoup all of the owner's default in its obligations for common expenses.

[34] The moving parties submitted that the case was wrongly decided on this point. I do not agree. The Act is remedial legislation, opening up a means of shared ownership not previously available, and as such, should be interpreted so as to best achieve its objects. As noted, the attachment of rents creates no unfair impact upon the mortgagees as may occur in the case of the lien. There is no unfairness to the tenants and certainly none to the defaulting owners who are seeking to live off their neighbours. Why should unnecessary barriers be placed in the way of achieving fairness in the bearing of the burden of the common expenses?

[35] By reason of the Interpretation Act, supra, the singular 'unit' includes the plural and there is no contrary intention to be found in an analysis of the Act. Section 87, read using the plurals 'units' and 'lessees' readily affords authority for the corporation to recover the shortfall in common expenses from the defaulting owner through attaching its flow of rents from all of its units. It is significant that the obligation is described consistently as that of the 'owner', not that of the 'unit'.

[36] It was urged that the Act could not be read to require the lien to be confined to the one unit, but to give the corporation broader rights against the rent flow; it was inconsistent. But, as counsel for the applicant submitted, the lien and the attachment of rents are two very different ways to collect what the defaulting unit owner owes and there is no reason why they should approach the matter in lock-step. The true inconsistency occurs when the Act is read in a manner inconsistent with its purpose: the achievement of equity among the various parties involved. It is contrary to the spirit, purpose and objects of the Act to protect a defaulting owner from having to pay his share by a narrow reading of the language relating to a tool for the collection of what is owing.

[37] If that were not enough, it would take a very strong argument to persuade me to differ from the considered opinion of another judge of this court upon the very point at issue before me. It was not even submitted that the language before me differs in any material way from that before my brother Nordheimer in 1999.

[38] I therefore hold that the corporation had the right to attach the rents payable to the moving parties by the tenants of their units regardless of whether any arrears existed in respect of a particular unit, so long as there were arrears owing by that owner in respect of any unit.

Application of the Rents after Seizure:

[39] The moving parties submitted that the corporation was bound to apply the rents attached by it first to the debt owing on the unit which generated the rent. The granting of priority over the mortgage made this the only fair way to allocate the funds. This was apparently based on the assumption that the rent was the only available source of funds for the owner to pay the mortgage. This may or may not be so, but even if it is so in a particular case it is quite irrelevant. The Act clearly intends to give the payment of the common expenses priority over the payment of the mortgage. The owner has the obligation to pay both common expenses and mortgage and neither the mortgagee nor the corporation have any concern over where the owner gets the money to pay or any duty to act in any interest but their own.

[40] Is there any reason why the normal rules as to the allocation of payments should not prevail? At common law, a debtor making payments to a creditor can state at the time of payment which of several accounts he is paying. If he makes no timely allocation, the creditor may do so, even long after the receipt. If neither makes an allocation, the rule is that the earliest debt is paid first.

[41] The corporation received no allocation instructions from the owner/debtor at the time of payment and has applied the attached amounts to the oldest debts. It was submitted that, because the tenants would normally describe the payment as rent for a particular month, there had been an allocation to that month. There is however no evidence that the tenants were acting as agents of the debtor to make such an allocation. Conceptually, the funds are not rent in the hands of the corporation, that is only the case between owner and tenant. In the hands of the corporation they are simply funds owing to the owner which the corporation has the right to seize.

[42] In any event, there is no right in a debtor to allocate the application of funds not 'paid' by him but seized from his own debtor. In my view, where, as here, the owner did not 'make a payment' but forced the corporation to use the collection procedures in the Act, it does not lie in the owner's mouth to complain that he did not have the opportunity to allocate the funds as best suited him.

[43] This was the result reached in 464734 Ontario Inc. v. Canada [1990] F.C.J. No. 218 where it was held that funds received by Revenue as a result of a garnishee served upon a judgment debtor of the taxpayer were not a payment by the taxpayer, but a payment by the third party to satisfy its obligation under the notice of garnishee. The debtor could not make an appropriation to a specific portion of its tax debt and the Minister was free to allocate it as best suited the interests of the revenue.

[44] The moving parties assert that the attached sums must be allocated first to the 'liened arrears' and not to the oldest arrears. This would be to their advantage because it would see the basis for the liens (limited to three months in many cases) paid off quickly. In my view, this submission confuses the two quite different tools for collection. There is no reason in the Act why the existence of a lien on a unit should affect how the corporation allocates the funds it receives. There is no restriction on the age of debts for which the corporation can attach rents, whereas the lien expires after three months unless a certificate is registered. It would be contrary to the scheme of the Act to prefer the interests of the owner in ridding itself of the lien to the interest of the corporation in getting paid. The corporation is free to allocate these funds in its interest, not in the debtor/owner's interest.

Status of the Liens:

[45] It follows from my finding that the Act does not authorize the registration of liens against units as to which there are no arrears, that Certificates of Lien registered against any such units must be discharged in respect of those units. I see no reason why the present Certificates of Lien should not remain in place against those units where there are arrears. A problem could arise where the amounts owing on more than one unit have been lumped together in the Certificate, which does not therefore disclose what is claimed against which unit.

[46] That problem is more apparent than real because of the requirement that the owner be given a Notice of Lien. Those Notices that are in the moving parties' Factum/Compendium as examples, and those that are exhibits to the cross-examination of Margarita Diaz, are done on a single unit basis and therefore provide the required information. As well, the information can readily be ascertained from the corporation and the evidence does not disclose any prejudice to the moving parties. If, as alleged, mortgagees got inadequate information in the notices sent to them, that is not a matter of which the moving parties can properly complain.

[47] It was submitted by the moving parties that these liens should be treated in the same fashion as Notices of Sale under Power of Sale in the Mortgages Act; that is strict compliance should be required. Both, it was said, are self-help remedies with preconditions established by the governing Act. Form 14, Notice of Lien to Owner, prescribed by Ontario Regulation 48/01 provides for the giving of full particulars. Therefore, in the absence of full particulars as to each unit, the notices of lien were invalid. But the evidence before me is that the Notices of Lien to Owner, Form 14, were actually in compliance with that Form being on a single unit basis. If anything was not in compliance, it was the Certificate which lumped the amounts owing by the several units of the same owner.

[48] The form of the Certificate of Lien is prescribed by Ontario Regulation 49/01, Form 6, and it has been followed by the corporation with the one problem that there are claims for lien over units which I have held are not lienable in the circumstances and the amounts are lumped together. There is nothing in the Form itself to confine it expressly to one unit. Assuming that there is a failure to include all relevant information called for by the Form, it must still be read together with the Notice to Owner which does give all the data. Even if strict compliance is required, the documents taken together fully comply.

[49] More fundamentally, the applicant responded that the entire analogy was wrong. The strict compliance of the Notice of Sale under the Mortgages Act was imposed because it was the basic step in the process of actually selling the security; but the lien is not the equivalent step. The Act provides that the lien may be enforced "in the same manner as a mortgage", thus a Notice of Sale would issue at a later stage and the strict compliance rules would apply at that stage. Further, if the Notice of Sale is faulty, all that is lost to the mortgagee is the time to issue a new one. In the case of the lien, if it is set aside, the three months of lienable arrears must be recalculated and some lien rights will be forever gone. This is a serious penalty for want of precise compliance at so early a stage, and should not be read in to the Act unless it is necessary for its operation, which is not the case.

[50] In my view this is a sensible analysis. Importing the strict compliance requirement at the Certificate of Lien stage, when it will have to be met at a later stage if sale is actually contemplated, is adding an extra hurdle for the condominium administrator and giving defaulting owners a protection that they do not need since they will be sent a Notice of Lien with those particulars. Owners will normally know perfectly well that they are in arrears and how much and if they don't, the information is readily available from the corporation office. At this stage some showing of prejudice should be a requirement for setting aside a certificate of lien for non-compliance with the requirements in section 85 and the Forms at the instance of an owner. No prejudice has been shown.

[51] For these reasons, I do not set aside the Certificates of Lien. Rather, I direct that the applicant register discharges of its lien against all units as to which there were no arrears of common expenses at the date of registration.

Reasonable Costs and Expenses:

[52] There were disputes about the reasonableness of certain costs and expenses raised in the material and summarized in paragraph 83 d of the Factum/Compendium of the moving parties. The reasonableness of a $100 charge per Notice requires evidence and possibly credibility findings. The court is not equipped on a motion to deal with such matters. In my view, a cost can be incurred even where the work is done by an employee within the organization, not only where a payment is made to a third party. Employees do not come for nothing. But evidence would be required in support of the reasonableness of the portion of the employee's salary allocated to the task.

[53] The legal costs charged to the corporation and passed on to the defaulting owners can always be assessed under the Solicitors Act. The garbage removal charge objected to was abandoned in argument. The cost of a notice to attorn is surely within the words of section 85(1) 'collection or attempted collection of the unpaid amount' and so lienable. Similarly, incidental costs such as bank charges for returned cheques and the like also fall into those words. There can be no lien for interest on arrears which are not themselves lienable, but interest is a normal and proper charge and could be charged on the expenses due and deducted from the sums attached since there is no time restriction on that collection method.

Disposition:

- [54] The moving parties sought substantive relief under four headings:
- a. a declaration that the Notices of Lien are invalid and discharging them.
 - b. an order requiring the corporation to account for the attached rent by applying it to lienated amounts and for consequential relief;
 - c. an order for repayment by the corporation of attached rents above the lienated amounts;
 - d. an order disentitling the corporation from requiring certain expenses to be paid to discharge a lien.

[55] The declaration sought under item a. is refused for the reasons set out above. An order will go requiring the corporation to discharge those liens against the units not actually in default as set out above, but the certificates of lien may remain on the register as to the units in default at the time of registration.

[56] The order sought in item b. is refused for the reasons set out above. There is no obligation on the corporation to apply attached amounts to particular debts or to confine the attachment of rents to units in default.

[57] The order sought in item c. is refused for the reasons set out above.

[58] The relief sought in item d. has been dealt with above so far as is presently possible.

[59] Costs submissions may be made in writing, those of the applicant within 20 days; those of the moving parties in a further 20 days and reply in a further 5 days.

CORPORATION NO. 967, Respondents

HEARD: November 2, 2005

JUSTICE E. LOUKIDELIS

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[1] The applicants are the owners of the developed portion of a much larger subdivision area owned by Schickendanz. Condominium Corporation 967 owns the common elements of the subdivision consisting of a roadway referred to as a ring road.

[2] The applicants seek from Schickendanz a proportionate share of the common element expenses notwithstanding the latter wording contained in clause 1.6 of the Declaration which reads:

“Notwithstanding the foregoing, until the Common Expense Threshold Payment Date for a Future Residential POTL is established, such Future Residential POTL shall not contribute to the payment of common expenses....”

[3] The Common Expense Threshold Date is then defined as:

“....the date that at least fifty per cent of the dwellings in such Future Residential POTL become Developed Dwellings.”

[4] The effect then it to exempt the developer from common expenses until the fifty per cent threshold is passed.

[5] There is no defined date for the passing of such threshold. Further it is entirely in the developer’s hands when that date might be reached.

[6] Although the applicants were clearly aware and accepted the exclusionary clause, such clause is contrary to the provisions of subsections 7(5) and 84 (3) of the Condominium Act 1998.

[7] The former subsection establishes the paramountcy of the Act over any Declaration. The latter subsection prohibits the exemption of an owner from its obligations.

[8] In acting as it did, Schickendanz avoided its statutory duty thereby placing an unfair burden on the applicants. If not oppressive, it was highly prejudicial.

[9] The evidence appears clear that Schickendanz at least to some degree made use of the ring road. Even if that were not so, non-usage does not exempt an owner from paying its proper share. In that regard I agree with the reasoning of Rosenberg J. set out in York Region Condominium Corporation No. 771 v. Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc. 10 OR(3d) 670.

[10] Respondents rightly argue that in some limited circumstances a zero percent allocation is valid, as was found in the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Peel Condominium Corporation No. 417 v. Tedley Homes Ltd. et al 1997 CanLII 1585 (ON C.A.), (1997) 35 OR (3d) 257.

[11] In that case the Court found that certain suites within the condominium buildings would immediately form part of the common elements and title was to be transferred to the condominium corporation upon payment of the purchase price.

[12] That case is easily distinguished from the facts here as the zero allocation simply confirmed the reality that the developer only held title temporarily for the corporation which was the equitable owner.

[13] In the case of Abdool et al v. Somerset Place Developments (1992) 27 RPR (2d) 157 the Ontario Court of Appeal placed the onus on a purchaser who sought to resile from a contract for non-disclosure, to show that such non-disclosure was material and would have altered his decision. In my view that is not the issue here.

[14] I am satisfied that notwithstanding notice given by Schickendanz of the terms of clause 1.6 of the Declaration the provisions of the Act must prevail.

[15] A declaration should issue as claimed by the applicants and the offending clause in the Declaration should be deleted.

[16] Further that the owner's of all POTL's associated with York Region Element Condominium Corporation No. 967 be obliged to contribute to the common expenses in accordance with the percentages set out in Schedule "D" of the Declaration.

[17] Further that the respondents pay their past share of the common expenses owing to each applicant.

[18] The draft order appears to be in order and I have signed same.

[19] The applicants shall have their costs fixed at $10,000.00 plus applicable GST.

HEARD: Monday, September 18, 2006

On appeal from the order of Mr. Justice E. Loukidelis dated December 15, 2005 made in Newmarket, Ontario.

ENDORSEMENT

[1] Schickedanz Bros. Limited (“Schickedanz”) and York Region Common Element Condominium Corporation No. 967 (“YRCECC”) appeal the decision of Loukidelis J. dated December 15, 2005 asking that his order be set aside.

[2] The respondents herein sought a declaration before Loukidelis J. that the conduct of Schickedanz, in registering a declaration in February 2002, was oppressive, unfairly prejudicial to the respondents, and entirely disregarded their interests. The impugned declaration created a Common Elements Condominium Corporation (“CECC”) which is a type of condominium corporation authorized by the Condominium Act (“the Act”). A CECC contains common elements, but no units. Rather, parcels of land are “tied” to the CECC and these parcels are called “Potls” which are responsible for the common expenses related to the CECC. In the present case, the CECC was created in order to facilitate the maintenance and management of the ring road within the development.

[3] Essentially, Schickedanz did not want the undeveloped Potls to contribute to common expenses related to the CECC because these were vacant parcels and hence there was no reason for them to contribute to the maintenance of a ring road they were not using. The result was the declaration creating a bifurcated expense formula which had the effect of saddling the developed phase with over 75% of the common expenses in 2002-03 and over 48% of the expenses thereafter. Phase 2, when it was registered, would have to pay approximately 34% of the expenses and it was the two vacant land condominium corporations (VLCC's) who objected to this disproportionate sharing of expenses and who commenced the application before Loukidelis J.

[4] It is important to note that the bifurcated expense formula outlined in the declaration was disclosed to all prospective purchasers of units in the two respondent corporations. Non-disclosure is not the issue for the respondents herein, but rather that the bifurcated formula set out in the declaration was contrary to the Act.

[5] There are three issues before us. First, are the disputed sections of the declaration inconsistent with the Act? Second, did Schickedanz act in a manner oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the respondents? And, third, if the appeal were to be dismissed on the first two issues, should Schickedanz be given credit for payments it made to YRCECC No. 967 while it owned units of the respondents?

[6] In our view, the application judge erred in his interpretation of the requirements mandated by the Act, which requires the declaration to set out the proportionate contribution of each Potl to the common expenses. We conclude that the appellants' declaration clearly did so and the provision in the Act prohibiting an owner from being exempt from its common expense obligations is irrelevant as the obligations are determined by the terms found in the declaration. We conclude there is no conflict between the declaration and the Act and therefore the formula ought to stand. The proper time for unit holders of the VLCC's to complain about the common expense formula would be at the time they were presented with the declaration. The Act provides purchasers with a ten-day window in which to rescind any offer to purchase granting purchasers a period of time to consider the terms and determine whether or not they think they are fair. If purchasers disagreed with the bifurcated formula set out in the declaration, they were free within that window of opportunity to walk away and rescind their offer.

[7] Without question, the Act is to prevail over the declaration in situations where the declaration conflicts with the Act. In such a case, an impugned declaration would be void. In the present case, however, we cannot see how the impugned sections of the declaration in any way conflict with the Act. Section 84(1) of the Act states,

84.(1) Subject to the other provisions of this Act, the owners shall contribute to the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration.

[8] Section 84(3) states,

84.(3) An owner is not exempt from the obligation to contribute to the common expenses even if,

(a) the owner has waived or abandoned the right to use the common elements or part of them;

(b) the owner is making a claim against the corporation;
or

(c) the declaration, by-laws or rules restrict the owner from using the common elements or part of them.

[9] The purpose of the latter subsection is not to prevent a 0% allocation in the declaration, but rather to prevent a unit owner or a Potl owner in the context of a CECC from resiling from his or her obligation to contribute to common expenses as apportioned by the declaration. We recognize, as did the Court in York Region Condominium Corp. No. 771 v. Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc., [1993] O.J. no. 769 [Q.L.] (O.C.A.) 5, that non-usage is not a reason for non-payment of common expenses. However, in the present case, it is not the appellants' non-usage of the common element (the ring road) that is the source of their refusal to contribute, but rather the absence of any obligation pursuant to the declaration. Clearly, the appellants set up the bifurcated formula so that only users of the ring road should pay for its upkeep. That was clearly spelled out in the declaration, which was fully disclosed to purchasers.

[10] As to the second issue, we recognize that the bifurcated formula clearly favoured the interests of Schickedanz at the expense of the unit holders, but in our view, it does not necessarily follow that this conduct was either oppressive or highly prejudicial. This formula was created before the unit holders purchased their property and since the impugned provisions of the declaration do not violate the Act, there can be no grounds for finding that Schickedanz acted oppressively. We recognize that in Mckinstry v. York Condominium Corp. 472, (2003), 68 O.R. (3d) 557 9 (O.S.C.J.), Jurianz J. (as he then was) noted that the oppression remedy could be used to protect stakeholders from unlawful conduct, as well as from conduct that, while technically legal, could be oppressive. That is not the situation here. The appellants fully complied with s. 84 of the Act by collecting, pursuant to the declaration, the common expenses owed by the Polts. Just as in Peel Condominium Corp. No. 417 v. Tedley Homes [1997] Carswell No. 2998 (O.C.A.), the allocation of common expenses in this case by Schickedanz was not for a devious purpose, but rather for a reasonable and legitimate business purpose which related to the staged nature of this development.

[11] One final word. In Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., [1992] Carswell No. 620 (O.C.A.) this court, in interpreting s. 52 of the Act, held,

While I may generally agree with the learned judge's critique of legislation, I am unable to accept his approach to the current disclosure statements. In my respectful opinion, this approach fails to construe s. 52 in a manner that properly balances consumer protection and the commercial realities of the condominium industry and, if adopted, would require a disclosure document incompatible with the underlying aim of the section.

[12] In our view, s. 7(2)(c) and (d) of the Act and s. 40(6)(c) and (d) of the regulations ought to be interpreted in light of the commercial realities of the condominium industry. As noted, in this case, each purchaser in this development had the option of deciding whether or not to purchase based upon the terms disclosed in the declaration. It is not oppressive for a developer declarant to register and implement a properly disclosed declaration so long as it is in compliance with the Act and its regulations. If declarants could not rely upon the terms of a declaration which fully complied with the Act and was fully disclosed to purchasers, there would be shocking implications for the industry.

[13] Because we allow this appeal in respect of the first two grounds, it is unnecessary for us to deal with the issue of payment credits.

[14] Accordingly, the appeal is allowed with costs, which we fix at $14,000 all inclusive.

BUILDER BULLETIN 10

CONCILIATION FEES

Effective: April 1, 1983

In this Warranty Program, registration fees, enrolment fees, and renewal fees are established at the same level for all builders. This revenue is then used to run the Program and pay claims on behalf of those builders who cannot or will not meet their responsibilities with respect to complaints and claims.

A large element of Program expense, which has increased substantially within the last year, relates to the number of conciliations undertaken in response to complaints. It is becoming increasingly obvious that a few builders are taking months to rectify work that should be repaired in weeks, and then only after conciliation by the Program. Indeed, we have learned of cases in which builders will not respond until the homeowner requests a conciliation.

Good builders, who comprise a very high percentage of the industry, expected that, with the advent of warranty, they would have to pay a price. However, it is doubtful that they expected the kind of situation where, increasingly, this vast majority of the industry, many of whom are small, would be literally picking up the tab for the few who are unable or unwilling to deal satisfactorily with their purchasers without Program intervention.

Consequently, each year, effective April 1, 1983, builders will be allowed one free conciliation for every twenty-five homes or less sold during the ensuing twelve months. A fee of $500 will be charged for each conciliation in excess of this allowance. Builders selling less than twenty-five homes will be allowed a maximum of one conciliation. For example:

- A builder of 10 homes with 2 conciliations must pay a fee of $500.
- A builder of 26 homes with 4 conciliations must pay a fee of $1000.
- A builder of 21 homes with 1 conciliations will not pay a fee.

Complaints must be determined as valid by the Program, for while the objective of the fee to reduce the number of conciliations, it is not the intention that the builders be invoiced for unreasonable or frivolous requests for conciliations. Generally, the builder who does the job properly will not have to pay. many builders have never had a conciliation.

Builder Bulletin 14 (Reissued)

Dated: October 27, 2000

Effective: November 1, 2000

Addendum to Agreements of Purchase and Sale

This Bulletin replaces Bulletin 14 (Revised) issued on September 25, 2000. It applies to all Agreements of Purchase and Sale for new homes (except condominiums) dated on or after November 1, 2000.

BACKGROUND

All Vendors are required to add the Addendum to all Agreements of Purchase and Sale for new homes (except condominiums) enrolled under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP).

The Addendum provides Purchasers with information about the Agreement (s. 1), planning status of the property (s. 2), the Builder (s. 3-4), and the home's enrolment number, if available (s. 3). The Addendum also gives Purchasers the right to terminate the Agreement if construction is delayed for 120 days beyond the agreed upon closing date (s. 5). The Purchaser may exercise this optional termination right in the 10-day window immediately following the first 120 days of delay. If the Purchaser does not terminate the Agreement in this window, then the closing date is automatically extended for a further 120-day period (for a total extension of 240 days). If construction is still not complete after this further 120-day period (i.e., a total of 240 days' delay), then the Agreement is at an end unless the parties agree otherwise. Upon such termination, the Purchaser is then entitled to a refund of all money paid on account of the purchase, plus interest at the prescribed rate for the second 120 days of delay.

HERE'S WHAT HAS CHANGED

1. Events may be excluded from the 120-day calculation: For all Agreements entered into on or after November 1, 2000, the Vendor may exclude extensions of the closing date reasonably required as a result of a strike, fire, flood, act of God or civil insurrection (an 'Event') when calculating either of the 120-day extensions. Before this amendment to the Addendum the "clock" continued to "tick" regardless of the source of the delay in construction.

2. Notice by a Vendor: In order to exclude reasonable delays caused by an Event from the calculation of the first or second 120 days, a Vendor must send the Purchaser both of the following notices:

- A. First written Notice: no later than 20 days from the beginning of the Event, outlining the nature of the Event and providing an estimate, if available, of the length of the delay; AND
- B. Second written Notice: as soon as reasonably possible but no later than 20 days after the conclusion of the Event, describing the Event, providing the exact length of the delay and the new closing date. When necessary, this Second Notice may be provided to the Purchaser before the conclusion of the Event, e.g., when Day 120 or Day 240 is approaching prior to the conclusion of the Event, and the Vendor wishes to "stop the clock".

3. Notice by a Purchaser: If the Vendor has not provided the two required notices to the Purchaser, the Purchaser may provide written notice to the Vendor and to ONHWP, requesting a formal extension of the closing date as a result of the Event. This notice must be sent no later than 40 days after the conclusion of the Event. ONHWP will then determine the reasonable length of extension, and will notify the Purchaser and the Vendor accordingly.

4. No Statutory Declaration: A statutory declaration by Vendors is no longer required.

5. New Addendum: The new Addendum (which is identical to the one that was appended to Bulletin 14 (Revised) that was issued on September 25, 2000) is appended to this Bulletin for use on all applicable Agreements entered into on or after November 1, 2000 (except condominiums).

PLEASE NOTE that consultations are underway to further revise the Addendum in the coming months. Therefore, you are advised to make a limited amount of copies of the new Addendum.

REASONS FOR THE CHANGE

This change represents a balanced approach, aimed at providing increased protection to Vendors, Purchasers and ONHWP at different times in the economic cycle of the construction industry:

- Vendors are protected in a declining market: Strikes and other Events can seriously impede the Vendor's efforts to close the purchase of a new home on time. Such Events may even prevent the Vendor from completing the home within the permitted maximum 240-day extension of the original closing date. This change to the Addendum will reduce the risk of a Vendor losing a closing due to an Event outside of the Vendor's control. This is particularly the case in a declining market, when Purchasers may be more likely to "walk away" from a closing during the 10-day "walk away" period following the first 120 days' delay.
- Purchasers are protected in an escalating market: This change to the Addendum also benefits Purchasers, especially in times of an escalating market. The Purchaser may now trigger the Event exclusion, if the Vendor elects not to do so. The notice provisions granted to Purchasers will prevent Vendors from relying on the delay caused by an Event as the reason to terminate an Agreement, in circumstances when it is in the Vendor's interest to terminate rather than extend the closing.
- ONHWP Guarantee Fund risk is reduced: The risk of Builders losing multiple closings and facing the potential inability to refund Purchasers' deposit monies on cancelled Agreements is now reduced. If Builders are faced with significant delays in construction due to strikes or other Events, they can now "stop the clock" to prevent contracts being terminated during the 10-day window. This reduces the risk that ONHWP's Guarantee Fund would be called upon to refund Purchasers walking away from Agreements with Builders who have faced delays in construction due to Events, and who have become insolvent (and therefore unable to refund the Purchaser's deposit upon termination of the Agreement).

THE DETAILS

1. Three new clauses have been added to Section 5 of the Addendum:

- 5(vi) – Events may be excluded from the 120-day calculation: The Vendor may exclude days reasonably lost as a result of an Event when calculating the first and the second 120-day periods referred to in Sections 5(i) and 5(iii) of the Addendum, if the Vendor provides the Purchaser with the two required notices listed in s. 5(vii). This change to the Addendum affects the calculation of the first or the second 120-day periods, but does not permit the Vendor to interrupt the Purchaser's 10-day "walk-away window" (normally Days 121-130) once it has started to run. This exclusion applies for delays reasonably resulting from each Event that occurs.

Note: The 10-day window when Purchasers may terminate the Agreement (normally at days 121-130 after the original closing date) continues to apply. If the Purchaser receives from the Vendor both required notices (including the Second Notice providing a new closing date) BEFORE the first 120-day mark, then the "clock stops" and the 10-day window is deferred or pushed back by the length of the delay caused by the Event. Once the window opens, it stays open until the full 10 days have elapsed.

- 5(vii) – Notice by a Vendor: A Vendor who wishes to exclude days reasonably lost because of an Event must satisfy the following two notice requirements for each Event:
 - a. Vendor's First Notice as soon as reasonably possible but no later than 20 days after an Event has begun must:
 - Be in writing.
 - Go to the Purchaser.
 - Include a brief description of the Event e.g., large fire at the construction site, and an estimate (if available) of the possible length of extension to the closing date.
 - b. Vendor's Second Notice as soon as reasonably possible but no later than 20 days after the end of an Event must:
 - Be in writing.
 - Go to the Purchaser.

- Include a brief description of the Event, and provide the number of days extension to the closing date caused by the Event and the new closing date.

Note: The “clock stops” when the Purchaser receives the Second Notice. For example, if the Purchaser receives the Second Notice from the Vendor on day 112 after the original closing date, stating that the closing will be delayed by 15 days due to an Event, then the 10-day window is moved by 15 days, to days 136-145 after the original closing date. However, if the Purchaser receives the Second Notice of a 15-day delay on or after day 120, then the 10-day window will remain on days 121-130. The Second Notice will extend the end of the second 120 days (i.e., day 240) by 15 days, to day 255, if the Purchaser chooses not to exercise the walk-away right at days 121-130.

If an Event is ongoing and Day 120 or 240 is approaching: However, if an Event, such as a strike, begins during the first 120 days and is still ongoing as Day 120 approaches, and if the Vendor wants to “stop the clock” before Day 120, then the Vendor must ensure that the Second Notice to the Purchaser arrives before the end of Day 119. In this situation, the Second Notice will provide the best reasonable estimate of the end of the Event, and set a new, FIRM closing date based upon that estimate. If the Second Notice is received before the end of Day 119, it “stops the clock” before the 10-day window, which would have otherwise commenced at day 120.

Similarly, if an Event is still ongoing and Day 240 is approaching, and if the Vendor does not want the Agreement to end at Day 240, the Vendor may send the Second Notice to the Purchaser, estimating the number of days’ extension reasonably required and providing a FIRM closing date based upon this estimate. The Second Notice must be received by the Purchaser by the end of Day 239, in order to “stop the clock” for the second period of 120 days. ONHWP will provide reasonable leeway to Vendors in their estimation of the extensions required in both circumstances, i.e., Events that have not ended when Day 120 or Day 240 is approaching.

- 5(viii) – Notice by a Purchaser: The Purchaser can request to exclude days lost because of an Event if the Vendor has failed to serve the required notices according to s. 5(vii).

Purchaser’s notice no later than 40 days after the end of an Event must:

- Be in writing.
- Be sent to ONHWP and to the Vendor.
- Briefly describe the Event, and request a formal extension of the closing date. ONHWP will then determine a reasonable extension and notify the Purchaser and the Vendor in writing.

Note: If an Event is still ongoing, Day 120 or 240 is approaching, the Vendor has not delivered the required notices to the Purchaser, and the Purchaser does not wish to terminate the Agreement, then the Purchaser may send the required notice to ONHWP and to the Vendor before the conclusion of the Event. ONHWP will act reasonably in estimating the required extension.

2. These new Event notice provisions in the Addendum are in addition to the Vendor’s notices required under the delayed closing and occupancy warranty provisions in the Regulations, (i.e., the 35-day and 65-day notices). Also, the Purchaser’s Event notice is solely for purposes of exclusion of delays caused by an Event: it is not a Purchaser’s extension of the closing/occupancy date as it relates to delayed closing/occupancy compensation. For details of the notices required under the delayed closing/occupancy warranty please refer to Builder Bulletin 20 (Freeholds) and Builder Bulletin 25 (Condominiums).
3. A new section 6 has been created, which recommends to Purchasers that they consult their lawyer and ONHWP for further information on the Addendum and other warranties available under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. A toll-free telephone number is provided for Purchasers’ use. Vendors are requested to contact their regional offices for further information.

It is recommended that the Purchaser contact the Vendor prior to the closing date to determine that construction is proceeding on schedule and that closing may occur on time.

EXTENSION AND TERMINATION

5. (i) If the Vendor cannot close the transaction by the closing date in the Agreement because additional time is required for construction of the dwelling, the Vendor shall extend the closing date one or more times as may be required by the Vendor by notice in writing to the Purchaser as soon as reasonably possible and in any event prior to the closing date or extended closing date, all extensions in the aggregate not to exceed 120 days. However, the Vendor shall not extend closing if the parties have specifically agreed in writing that the Vendor cannot, and the Purchaser does not waive this covenant.
- (ii) The Vendor shall take all reasonable steps to construct the dwelling without delay.
- (iii) If the closing date in the Agreement has been extended for 120 days and the Vendor still requires further time for construction of the dwelling, unless subsequent to the closing date in the Agreement the parties otherwise agree, the Purchaser may terminate the Agreement within the 10 days immediately after the 120 days have elapsed by delivering or mailing notice in writing to the Vendor at the address shown above (which notice may also be given between solicitors), and upon the giving of such notice this Agreement shall be at an end and all sums paid by the Purchaser shall be returned without interest or deduction. However, if the Purchaser does not terminate as above, closing shall be deemed to be extended to a date 5 days following completion of the dwelling as required by the Agreement but, unless the parties otherwise agree, not later than a further 120 days after the initial 120 day period. If by this further time the dwelling is not constructed in accordance with the Agreement and if the parties do not otherwise agree, the Agreement shall be at an end and all sums paid by the Purchaser shall be returned without deduction and there shall be no further rights between the parties unless the Vendor is in breach of the Vendor's covenant in 5(ii) above to construct without delay. If the Agreement is so ended, interest shall be payable on all sums paid by the Purchaser, for the period commencing 120 days after the closing date in the Agreement at a rate 1% below the rate paid by the Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts as of the date on which the Agreement ended.
- (iv) Despite any provision to the contrary contained in it, the Agreement shall not be terminated by the Vendor by reason of failure to complete the dwelling as specified in the Agreement within a period of time or by a date specified in the Agreement, extended as above, unless the Purchaser consents to the termination in writing or the Agreement is ended pursuant to 5(iii) above.
- (v) Where there is conflict or ambiguity between the Agreement and this Addendum this Addendum shall prevail.
- (vi) The Vendor may exclude extensions of the closing date reasonably required as a result of a strike, a fire, a flood, an act of God or a civil insurrection (an "Event") when calculating the 120 days referred to in 5(i) and 5(iii) only if the Vendor delivers the notices described in 5(vii) to the Purchaser.
- (vii) If an extension of the closing date referred to in 5(i) or 5(iii) above is reasonably required as a result of an Event, then the Vendor shall provide the following notices to the Purchaser:
 - A) As soon as reasonably possible but not later than 20 days after the Vendor knows or ought reasonably to have known that the Event has commenced, the Vendor shall provide written notice to the Purchaser setting out a brief description of the Event and an estimate, if available, of the possible length of extension that may be required as a result of the Event; and

B) As soon as reasonably possible but not later than 20 days after the conclusion of the Event, the Vendor shall provide written notice to the Purchaser setting out a brief description of the particular Event that was the cause of the extension, the number of days by which the closing date is extended as a consequence of the Event, and the new closing date now in effect as a result of the Event.

(viii) If an Event occurs and the closing date is reasonably required to be extended as a result of the Event, but the Vendor has failed to provide the notices described in 5(vii), then the Purchaser shall have the option of sending written notice to both the Ontario New Home Warranty Program and the Vendor. The notice shall contain a request for a formal extension of the closing date to accommodate the delay in completing the dwelling caused by the Event. The Purchaser shall send this notice no later than 40 days after the conclusion of the Event. Following receipt of the notice, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program shall determine the length of a reasonable extension period that the Vendor ought reasonably to have implemented, and shall confirm its determination by notice in writing to both the Vendor and the Purchaser. The extension period as so determined shall be deemed to be excluded from the calculation of the 120 days referred to in 5(i) and 5(iii) above, and the Agreement shall be deemed to be extended accordingly.

(ix) 5(vi), (vii) and (viii) apply to all Agreements entered into on or after November 1, 2000.

Condominium Projects: Design and Field Review Reporting

This bulletin and its related documents replace Builder Bulletin 19 (Revised) that was in effect from March 1, 1995 until June 30,2001.

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This bulletin lays out the requirements for reports and information that must be provided to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) by Field Review Consultants and the builders/vendors of ‘Designated Condominiums’ enrolled under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. Designated condominiums are those condominiums described in the table on page 2 of this introduction as Types C and D.

Provision of information, certificates and reports relating to the design and field review phases of a condominium project are conditions of continued registration of the vendor/builder.

This Bulletin contains a number of changes and additions to the previous Bulletin 19 that was effective from March 1, 1995. The changes seek to bring more clarity and greater consistency to the nature and scope of reports supplied to ONHWP by Field Review Consultants (FRCs) acting on behalf of builders and/or vendors.

HERE'S WHAT'S CHANGED

Steps have been taken to provide more structure to the FRC reporting requirements by establishing consistent reporting formats and by employing objective quality assessment standards.

FRC Bulletin 19 Qualification Status (BQS)

From the date of this Bulletin consultants wishing to undertake field review work for builders/vendors engaged in the construction of designated condominiums need to be qualified within the terms of Bulletin 19 (see Module 1). When a builder or vendor uses an FRC that does not hold BQS, ONHWP will take that factor into consideration when assessing the release of security.

Scope of Work

A 'Scope of Work' submission will replace the former field review contract. It details the level of effort and areas of review Field Review Consultants commit to. (The Scope of Work is explained in Module 2.)

Reporting Requirements

The requirement for the submission of monthly reports to ONHWP has been removed. The main reporting requirement now falls within the Milestone Reports. (Milestone Reports are explained in Module 4.)

Milestone Reports will be supplemented by briefer reports giving outline information. They will be submitted every 60 days. (60 Day Reports are explained in Module 4.) The requirement for a Design Review and the submission of a Bulletin 19 Final Report remains.

GENERAL

The provisions of Builder Bulletin 19 apply equally to both vendors and builders of condominiums described as Type C and Type D in the following table. Such condominiums are required, under the Ontario Building Code (OBC), to be designed by an architect and professional engineer. The Registrar reserves the right to designate any condominium project as being subject to the provisions of this bulletin.

Category	Description
Condo: Type A	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type B	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is NOT a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type C	Project has both; Part 9 and Part 3 OBC construction requirements.
Condo: Type D	Project has only Part 3 OBC construction requirements.

For the purposes of this bulletin, the term "vendor/builder" applies to vendors, builders, and those persons who are both. The terms "vendor" and "builder" are both defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

Voluntary submissions for Type A and Type B condominiums

ONHWP is prepared to receive and process applications from vendors/builders of Type A and Type B condominiums that wish to voluntarily follow the provisions of Builder Bulletin 19. For further information on this matter contact the Manager of ONHWP's Condominium Office.

THE BULLETIN 19 PROCESS

It is assumed that FRCs observing the terms of this bulletin have attained BQS. (BQS is explained in Module 1.) The following documents must be completed and submitted to ONHWP throughout the design and construction phases of the condominium:

Scope of Work Proposal

As the first stage of the Bulletin 19 process the Scope of Work Proposal outlines the level of effort and number of visits an FRC commits to as part of monitoring identified risk areas. It must be submitted at least 45 days in advance of the start of construction and is subject to review and approval by ONHWP. ONHWP will respond to submitted Scope of Work proposals within 30 days of receipt. (The Scope of Work proposal is explained in Module 2.)

Risk areas and factors within the Scope of Work were identified following examination of ONHWP's complaints, claims, dispute resolution history and practical experience within the industry and the contributions of representatives of the FRC community

1 ONHWP will review and respond to proposal within 30 days.

2 Design certificates may be submitted on a phased basis - see Module 4a.

3 No 60 Day Report will be required where a Milestone Report is completed within that 60 day period.

Design Review and Certificates

Design Certificates confirm that the design complies with the Ontario Building Code and good architectural and engineering practice. Individual certificates must be completed by each of the various design professionals who produce the construction documents as they relate to the identified risk areas laid out in the Scope of Work. The vendor/builder must submit each certificate to ONHWP at least 30 days prior to the commencement of the work covered by that portion of the design. (A sample Design Certificate can be found in Module 4a.)

60 Day Reports

The 60 Day Reports provide a tracking mechanism designed to assist ONHWP in assessing the progress of a project's construction without placing too large an administrative workload on the FRC. The reports are to be completed according to instructions found at the head of the report template. (A sample report template can be found in Module 4b.)

Milestone Reports

Comprehensive reports must be completed and submitted to ONHWP as soon as possible and, in any event, within 30 days of specified stages (milestones) of construction being completed. The reports will contain information on all outstanding deficiencies in existence at that point in time. An initial Milestone Report will be in two parts. The first part is a form giving deficiency tracking information and a summary of the issues. The second part, appended to the first, will be a narrative section giving general information about the construction as it relates to the element of the project in question. It will give full details of any deficiencies relating to it and list recommendations for their correction. (The definition of 'deficiency' as it relates to Bulletin 19 is appended to Module 4.) Subsequent Milestone Reports will have an additional tracking sheet that provides information on progress made to rectify previously identified deficiencies. ONHWP will review each Milestone Report and report back to the FRC and vendor within 30 days if further information is required.

Milestone Reports form the basis for establishing consistency in FRC reporting. The quality and content of reports will be scrutinized by ONHWP and FRCs will be advised if shortfalls in reporting standards are identified. (For a fuller explanation of an ERG'S responsibilities regarding the quality of reports please refer to the sections entitled 'FRC Bulletin 19 Qualification Status' and 2tpplication for Bulletin 19 Qualification Status' in Module 1.)

All work required to correct deficiencies noted in any of the reports will be the responsibility of the vendor/builder and may influence the amount of security released following submission of the Bulletin 19 Final Report. Satisfactory repairs must be confirmed as complete by the FRC and referenced in the next Milestone Report(s) that falls due.

The Final Report

The FRC submits this report to the vendor/builder in the first instance and must notify ONHWP as soon as this has occurred. The vendor/builder then submits this report to ONHWP once construction of the condominium has been completed, the condominium declaration and description have been registered and all reports and information due to ONHWP have been received.

Field Review Declarations form a part of the Final Report and verify that review of the identified risk areas contained in the Scope of Work as they relate to the construction project have been completed to the satisfaction of the FRC. (A sample Final Field Review Declaration is appended to Module 4d.)

The vendor/builder must deliver a copy of the Bulletin 19 Final Report to the owner-elected condominium board of directors at the turnover meeting and the report may be referred to at a later date if warranty problems arise.

The final report must be a bound copy of the following documents:

- A copy of all Milestone Reports associated with the project
- Copy of the Condominium Declaration as filed with the Land Titles Office
- All Design Certificates
- Field Review Declaration

and the following documents as applicable:

- Design Architect's final clearance
- Site Work Engineer's final clearance
- Structural Engineer's final clearance
- Mechanical Engineer's final clearance
- Electrical Engineer's final clearance
- Occupancy permit if available

BUILDER BULLETIN 19 AND THE RELEASE OF SECURITY

All information, reports, and certificates must be submitted to ONHWP within the time periods specified. The release of security is conditional upon ONHWP receiving the documentation as specified in this bulletin and in Builder Bulletin 28 (which deals with such matters as unsold units and evidence of transfer of title for sold units, etc.) and is further conditional upon ONHWP accepting that the contents of those documents accurately reflect the actual conditions on site.

ONHWP will review the Bulletin 19 Final Report within 30 days of receipt and notify the vendor/builder of any further technical requirements or adjustments to the required security depending on the extent of any outstanding deficiencies as well as any outstanding administrative or non-technical matters. If ONHWP is satisfied there are no outstanding deficiencies, the release of security, subject to the requirements in Builder Bulletin 28, will be completed within 45 days of receipt of all the required documentation.

The FRC will assess the likely costs of rectifying outstanding matters based on current sub-trade prices for such rectification and provide them to ONHWP. ONHWP will then review the costs provided and retain an appropriate amount of the security. The amount retained will reflect the likely cost of rectification in the event that ONHWP was required to give effect to any remediation and will also take into account any outstanding administrative and non-technical costs.

If ONHWP does not receive the Bulletin 19 Final Report, it will continue to hold the vendor/builder's security for a maximum of seven years or until such time as ONHWP is satisfied that the building is constructed in accordance with the vendor/builder's warranty obligations under Section 13, Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

For full information regarding ONHWP's requirements for the receipt and release of security, please refer to Builder Bulletin 28 (Revised, 2001).

ONHWP reserves the right to use the vendor/builder's security to ensure that the requirements of this bulletin are met on a continuing basis. With appropriate notice ONHWP may, at its sole discretion and dependent on the situation, either recognize the original Scope of Work submission or secure the services of another qualified FRC.

ONHWP UNDERTAKINGS

This bulletin places a number of time based performance requirements on FRCs. In return ONHWP is committed to completing elements of its administrative functions within specified periods of time. Generally, these functions relate to the processing and review of applications and submitted reports.

WHERE TO FIND THE FORMS FOR BULLETIN 19

Standardized reporting formats are crucial to consistent reporting. ONHWP has developed templates for all required reports and a link to these can be found on our web site at:

<http://www.newhome.on.ca/industry/otherprofessionals/>

Practitioners are welcome to download and save these forms as required. If preferred, the forms can be filled out while they are on the computer screen. According to need, the forms can be completed, printed and signed before being sent to the Condominium Office.

The forms are currently in a Microsoft Word Template format. If your office does not support Microsoft WORD it may be possible to convert them. However, functionality of the forms may be lost. Offices without Microsoft Word may recreate the forms in the application of choice but should endeavour to ensure that the content of the forms follows the format established in the ONHWP produced versions.

IF YOU DO NOT HAVE ACCESS TO THE WEB BASED FORMS please contact the Condominium Office Clerk on 1-800-803-9913 ext. 307 and a copy of the forms will be sent to you on request.

FOR MORE INFORMATION

For more information on this bulletin please contact the Condominium Office of ONHWP. A list of all ONHWP offices can be found on the next page.

WHO NEEDS BULLETIN QUALIFICATION STATUS?

The requirement for Bulletin 19 Qualification Status (BQS) will apply to consultancy firms providing field review services for projects subject to the provisions of Builder Bulletin 19 i.e. Type C or Type D' condominium projects.

A consulting firm will not be required to qualify on a per project basis. Once awarded, BQS will remain valid for a period of three years (renewable) subject to the provisions below. Appropriate levels of insurance coverage must be maintained throughout the period of qualification.

BQS will ensure Field Review Consultant firms (FRCs) working on Bulletin 19 condominium projects have the capacity to undertake such work and meet the requirements of Builder Bulletin 19. To this end, firms will need to show they retain or have access to technically and professionally qualified personnel certified to practice in the Province of Ontario.

OBJECTIVE APPLICATION CRITERIA

The full criteria for achieving and retaining BQS is detailed on the application form following this introduction. For ease of reading, the main areas in which FRCs must show capacity and competence are summarized below:

- Employ or have access to the necessary professional resources to conduct Bulletin 19 work.²
- Carry sufficient insurance coverage.³
- Properly sign off on each Bulletin 19 report.⁴
- Undertake to use only qualified agencies to conduct required testing unless qualified personnel and facilities are retained in-house.

Where an FRC initially falls short of submitting the level of information required to achieve or maintain BQS, ONHWP will work with the applicant to overcome any difficulties as soon as possible.

Category D	escription
Condo: Type A	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type B	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is NOT a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type C	Project has both; Part 9 and Part 3 OBC construction requirements.
Condo: Type D	Project has only Part 3 OBC construction requirements.

² For Engineers this is a Certificate of Authorization issued by Professional Engineers of Ontario and for Architects, a current Certificate of Practice issued by Ontario Association of Architects. (FRCS may be required to produce evidence of an established relationship between them and any sub-consultant and that sub-consultant's availability to the FRC.)

Supplying inadequate, false or misleading information may result in BQS being denied, suspended or cancelled. Where BQS is withdrawn from an FRC and that firm is then retained to provide FRC services on Type C or Type D construction, ONHWP will examine each project on a case-by-case basis and the release of security may be affected. If dequalification takes place during an ongoing project, ONHWP will work with the vendor/builder to find the best solution to the shortfall in FRC construction review. Every possible effort will be made to ensure that the release of security will not be affected by such action.

It is acknowledged that circumstances within FRC firms alter over time. FRCs must notify ONHWP of material changes to the information supplied in their current application for BQS.

The Condominium Office of ONHWP will administer application and renewal procedures for BQS. (The address of the Condominium Office can be found on the last page of the introduction section of this bulletin.)

THE PROCESS

Under the provisions of this bulletin the FRC has a responsibility to comprehensively review various aspects of the construction project. Areas of responsibility include:

- Assessing site inspection reports (including primary design team reports) as they relate to identified risk areas.
- Verifying specialist inspection and testing reports are in order and appropriately comment on identified issues in those reports.⁵
- Providing documentation that confirms other consultants and agencies evaluating the quality of construction are appropriately certified in their area of expertise.⁶
- Conducting field reviews to monitor performance and quality of workmanship in identified risk areas.

THE PROCESS OF APPLICATION

Once an application form has been completed and submitted, the Condominium Office of ONHWP will process it. Initial stages of the processing may result in contact with the applicant to elicit further information or clarification of ambiguities. Additionally, interviews may be set up between representatives of the Condominium Office and the applicant to gather further information and to disseminate information about the nature of the Bulletin 19 provisions.

If, following attempts to overcome misunderstandings or shortfalls in supplied information, a decision goes against the FRC and BQS is denied, written notification giving the reasons for such a decision will be provided. The decision may be challenged by giving written notice to the ONHWP Condominium Office. Any challenge must contain written details of how identified difficulties will be addressed. An appeal/review process will then be set into motion.

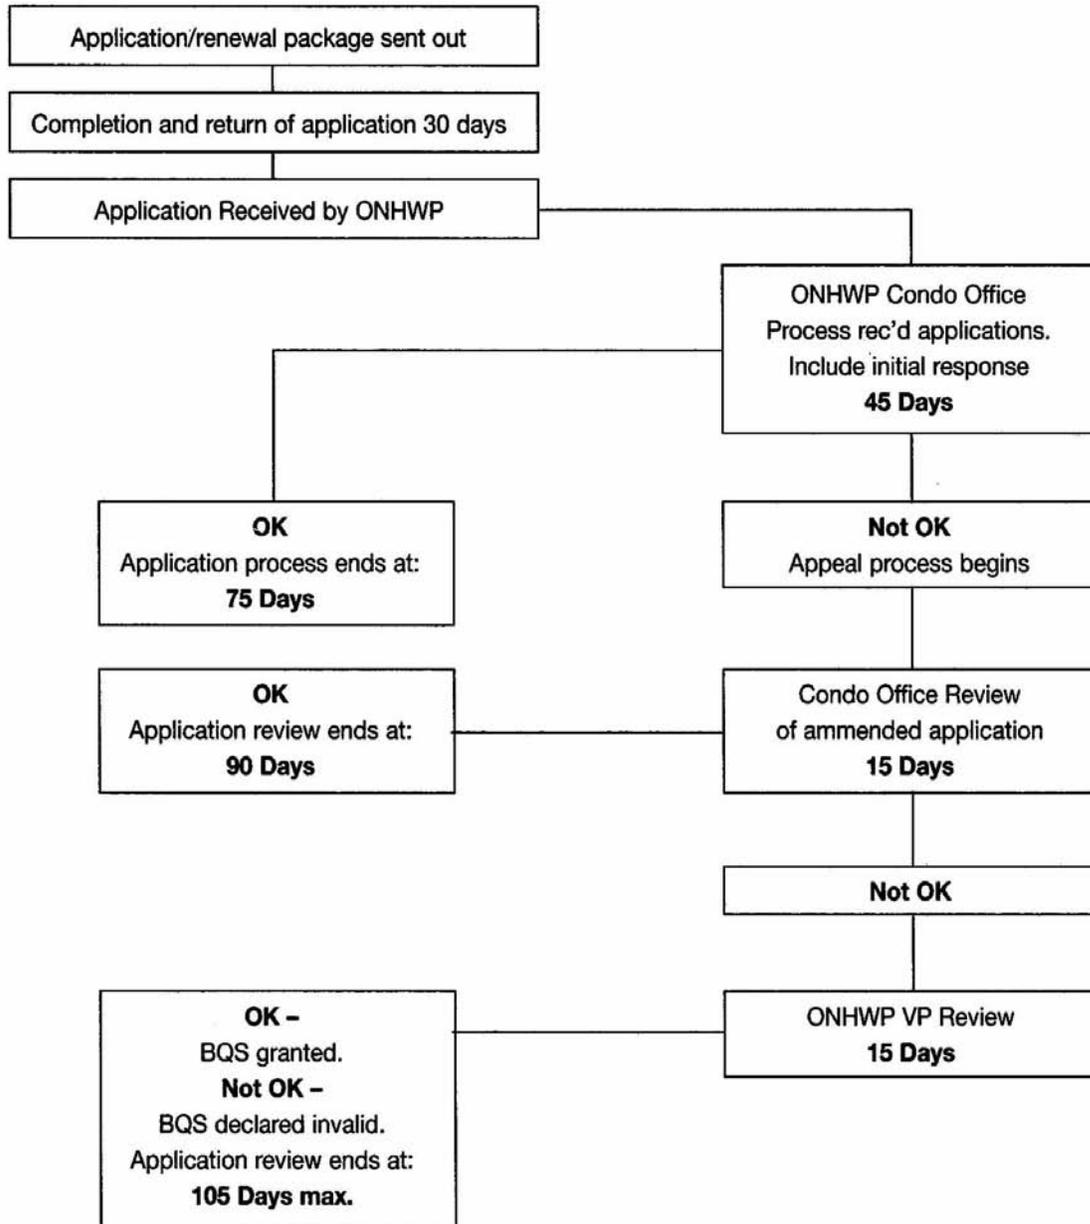

⁵ Where concerns exist regarding the reports of others, the FRC will be expected to bring them to the attention of ONHWP if the matter cannot be rectified in discussion with the report's authors. Also, any construction deficiencies noted in the reports generated by others must be brought to ONHWP's attention.

⁶ For testing agencies it is suggested that they abide by certified or registered standards e.g. Dffi.O1 1-98, a list of CSA international certified concrete testing laboratories.

The process gives FRCs every opportunity to discuss and rectify perceived shortcomings in meeting BQS criteria. The design of the process means that, whenever possible, the elements of the appeal/review process will be completed before a current BQS expires or is lost. In this way an FRC's ability to continue Bulletin 19 work is not compromised during the review process.

The process and time line for first applications and renewals is set out in the following chart:

7. Please supply information about your insurance arrangements.

Name of carrier: _____ Professional liability policy: YES NO

Policy Number(s): _____ Expiry date: _____

PLEASE NOTE: The applicant must have professional liability coverage. Arrangements must be made for the insurance carrier to send the relevant information e.g. the Policy Binder to ONHWP. The applicant must make these arrangements. The documentation must show:

- Name of carrier
- Limit of liability (per occurrence and aggregate limits)
- Type of policy
- Policy period

Please confirm you have made the above arrangements (check box):

SECTION TWO: PROJECT INFORMATION

8. How many projects is your firm involved with at the present time?

(Where projects consist of multiple units being constructed under one development name, this will be considered one project.)

No. of residential: No. of mixed use:

9. Please list current and/or past projects according to the variables below.

(Details of last 6 projects. Use additional paper if required.)

Project name	City, Province/ State	Project gross floor area (ft. ²)	Time and duration of involvement	Applicant's role e.g. Architect, FRC, etc.	Project type e.g. Low rise, commercial, B19, etc.

Note: If there are other projects that you feel would be relevant to ONHWP's consideration of this application that are not covered in the list above please enclose the information with this form.

10. We would like to know more about your experience as an FRC working on condominium projects.

(If you are new to this area of construction and as a result cannot provide the full information requested below please provide ONHWP with five construction related, professional references. These should be attached on separate sheets.)

Number of condominium projects applicant has worked on the last five years:

11. How do you structure your project teams?

Use a separate sheet of paper to outline any established process your firm will use to structure Bulletin 19 project teams and how quality assurance/control mechanisms are used to mitigate the firm's risk.

Project team information attached (check box):

12. List key personnel to be employed on high rise projects? (Continue on a separate sheet if necessary.)

(Please read and complete certification on next page.)

CERTIFICATION

I understand that this information does not guarantee the availability or award of Bulletin 19 contracts. Subject to my right to exercise all available review and/or appeal rights I hereby waive all claims resulting from any errors or omissions by ONHWP through this process. I undertake to complete all of the work and services contemplated to be performed and to submit all reports, forms and other required information at the times and in the manner laid out in the current Builder Bulletin 19 and Scope of Work proposals submitted by this firm and approved by ONHWP I undertake to contract and employ only those consultants and other professionals in relation to Bulletin 19 work who are certified to practice in the Province of Ontario and are members in good standing with their respective certifying authorities. Through the exercise of due diligence I undertake to ascertain that testing agencies retained by this firm in relation to Bulletin 19 projects use testing standards established by CSA International or other appropriate professional bodies.

I will maintain all records of construction field review including correspondence with the Vendor/Builder, the Design Architect and all other consultants and authorized persons concerned with designated Type C and Type D condominium projects for a period of seven years following the registration of the condominium corporation. I will make these records available to ONHWP at their request.

I will inform ONHWP of material changes to information provided in this application that may affect the award or retention of FRC Bulletin 19 Qualification Status. Notification will be made within 30 days of becoming aware (or 30 days of the date when the undersigned ought to reasonably have become aware) of any such changes having taken place.

I certify that to the best of my knowledge the information contained in this application is complete and accurate. I have authority to bind the applicant.

Field Review Consultants (FRCs) provide a layer of quality review that augments the process of ensuring that the spirit and intent of the construction documents are realized. Components of this work include the monitoring of identified risk areas for adequate component performance and checking that the quality of the finished project meets or exceeds current construction standards.

FRCs also collect and review the relevant sections of reports submitted to them and confirm that identified risk areas for which they are not directly responsible have been reviewed by Prime Consultants or other agencies. (For an explanation of reporting requirements please see Module 4.)

WHEN TO SUBMIT A SCOPE OF WORK PROPOSAL

A Scope of Work proposal is to be submitted to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) for each designated condominium construction project. The submission must be received by ONHWP no later than 45 days prior to the beginning of construction.

HOW TO COMPLETE A SCOPE OF WORK PROPOSAL

When completing a Scope of Work proposal the FRC should be mindful of the number of visits necessary to evaluate a representative sample of a building's components and its overall construction. Review sampling will need to be randomly selected and evenly distributed e.g. if the guidelines suggest a 30% level of review of traffic coating and there are three parkades in a building, it would not be appropriate to review only one of the three floors. Examination of a percentage of each floor would be expected.

In determining what level of review is necessary for an individual project, ONHWP will be relying on the professionalism of the FRC firm. The FRC has to commit to a level of effort that allows them comfort in commenting on identified risk areas. Comfort levels may be derived from observation of statistically valid samples based on square footage, a percentage of components, a number of tests or some other industry standard.

A set of guidelines designed to assist the FRC and the vendor/builder to better understand the typical level of effort in percentage terms and the number of visits ONHWP expects to be proposed in relation to various building types can be found in Modules 3a and 3b. The guidelines should be used to establish the proposed number of visits and extent of review. The guidelines feature notional buildings and suggest target review levels for them. It is unlikely that the notional buildings will accurately reflect real projects but they provide FRCs with baselines from which appropriate levels of review can be determined and proposed.

Once the FRC is satisfied as to the number of visits and level of review to propose, the information should be entered in the appropriate sections of the Scope of Work form. The vendor/builder should then submit the completed form to the Condominium Office of ONHWP. (A list giving the locations of ONHWP offices can be found at the end of the introduction to this bulletin.)

Note: Vendors/builders are strongly advised to work with an FRC before going out to tender for the submission of Scope of Work proposals. Knowing in advance what level of review ONHWP will expect of an FRC retained by a vendor/builder in relation to a particular project will minimize the later possibility of the chosen proposal being refused.

ONHWP'S EXPECTATIONS AND COMMITMENTS

Each Scope of Work proposal must be received by ONHWP no later than 45 days prior to the beginning of construction.

Where circumstances dictate that a change in the level of an FRC's effort in reviewing a project is necessary to properly monitor the performance of a building's components e.g. originally proposed concrete cladding is substituted with EIFS, ONHWP must be notified of the changes at the earliest opportunity.

Once a Scope of Work proposal has been submitted the Condominium Office will review it. A determination as to the adequacy of the level of review proposed shall be made and the outcome notified to the vendor/builder and FRC within 30 days of receipt. Should ONHWP fail to notify the vendor/builder and FRC within this time the proposed Scope of Work will be deemed to have been accepted.

If a submitted Scope of Work falls short of ONHWP's expectations the vendor/builder and FRC will be contacted. Given the time constraints that surround Scope of Work submissions, a telephone call or meeting will be set up at the earliest opportunity and every effort made to resolve any issues.

HOW THE SCOPE OF WORK FITS IN WITH THE REST OF BUILDER BULLETIN 19

The Scope of Work precedes, and forms the framework for the FRC reports that keep ONHWP informed about the progress of each condominium project. It lays out the target level of review to which the FRC commits, subject to necessary changes, in the early stages of the project. ONHWP will use the Scope of Work as a point of reference when reviewing the subsequent 60 Day, Milestone and Final reports.

THE SCOPE OF WORK FORM EXPLAINED

The Scope of Work form provides guidance notes in relation to 'Documentation review' i.e. the collection and reviewing of reports created by other agencies or consultants, and 'Field review' i.e. those elements of review undertaken by the FRC or their agents.

Where an FRC provides a service 'in house' e.g. concrete testing, such activity should be dealt with as though it were provided by an outside agency or consultant and as such should be subject to 'documentation review'. The fact that a documentation review will take place with respect to particular risk areas should be noted in general terms on Scope of Work Proposals.

The guidance notes within the form do not require the FRC or other agencies to comment specifically on those elements of the identified risk areas. The notes are representative of previously identified, problematic issues. In undertaking Documentation or Field Reviews, FRCs are asked to be vigilant for evidence of problems in these areas.

Additional guidance notes precede some risk areas. These are intended to alert FRCs and vendor/builders to areas that are particularly problematic to ONHWP in terms of its complaints, claims and dispute resolution history.

The target level of review proposed by FRCs for the main category of each risk area is to be entered below the box marked 'Level of review'. Levels for the notional buildings have been entered for guidance. The 'level of review' figure relates to 'Field Review' activity only. 'Documentation Review' requires that ONHWP be notified only of specific problem areas reported by a Prime Consultant. Where nothing of concern has been identified in such a report a note to that effect shall be provided at the relevant Milestone report stage.

ONHWP will continuously monitor the relationship between review levels and construction problems and make adjustments to its requirements as necessary FRCs will be notified of any such changes.

Builder Bulletin 19 Module 3 Scope of Work - Description of Notional Buildings

(For use in connection with Module 3a - Level of Review Guideline Tables)

To assist FRCs in assessing the appropriate level of effort to employ on high-rise condominium projects, ONHWP has established an illustration of its expectations. This has been achieved by describing five notional buildings. While ONHWP does not consider the notional buildings to be typical of construction projects falling within Bulletin 19, they are intended to provide baselines from which appropriate levels of effort can be extrapolated and proposed.

ONHWP has defined the notional buildings as having the following characteristics:

10-STOREY BUILDING

- Typical 6,000 ft² floor plate plus a 1,000 ft² mechanical/elevator room on the roof level.
- 2 levels of underground parking with 9,000 ft² per level.
- 6 units per typical floor and 5 units on the main floor for a total of 59 residential units.
- Building height is approx. 95 feet from ground level based on a floor-to-floor height of 8.5 ft and a 9 ft mechanical room. (Floor to floor height is the same for all buildings.)
- Concrete structure with light gauge steel framing for exterior wall and partitions.

20-STOREY BUILDING

- Typical 6,000 ft² floor plate plus a 1,000 ft² mechanical/elevator room on the roof level.
- 3 levels of underground parking with 9,000 ft² per level.
- 6 units per typical floor and 5 units on the main floor for a total of 119 residential units.
- Building height is 180 feet from ground level.
- Concrete structure with light gauge steel framing for exterior wall and partitions.

30-STOREY BUILDING

- Typical 6,000 ft² floor plate plus a 1,000 ft² mechanical/elevator room on the roof level.
- 4 levels of underground parking with 9,000 ft² per level.
- 6 units per floor 5 units on the main floor for a total of 179 residential units.
- Building height is 270 feet from ground level.
- Concrete structure with light gauge steel framing for exterior wall and partitions.

STACKED MULTI-TOWNHOUSE

Each structure contains eight townhouse units of approximately 1,500 ft² each. The townhouse units are accessible from grade level and have an integral garage. The structural system for each building consists of Part 9 OBC stick construction with concrete foundations. Building envelope consists of masonry veneer with punched windows and a deck balcony for each unit.

MULTI-TOWNHOUSE OVER PARKADE

Consists of a townhouse building sitting atop an underground parkade. The townhouse building contains eight units. Each townhouse unit is approximately 1,500 ft² in size. The underground parkade is on one level and approximately 5,000 ft² in size. The residential buildings utilize Part 9 OBC stick construction for the structure. The parkade structure consists of concrete foundation walls and a concrete slab supporting the residential units above. Building envelope consists of masonry veneer with punched windows and a deck or balcony for each unit.

Note 1: Wall cladding area excludes deductions for window openings, etc.

Note 2: Where visit numbers within these guidelines are determined by area and a real project's floor or cladding area is less than the figure quoted for a particular risk sub-category, the FRC should assume the minimal level of effort to be equivalent to the number of visits given for a ten storey, notional building. Where visit levels are still felt to be too high as a result of applying this rule the FRC should contact the Condominium Office of ONHWP

ONHWP BUILDERS BULLETINS

TOWNHOUSE PROJECTS

The recommended visit levels for townhouses have been calculated on the basis that construction consists of a single block. Where multiple blocks are being constructed one visit can be used to review a representative sample of the same risk area in multiple blocks. The representative sample must provide a level of review that is sufficient to ensure the spirit and intent of the construction documents is being realized and that component performance meets or exceeds current construction standards. if you require further guidance please contact ONHWP's Condominium Office (contact details can be found on the last page of the introduction section of this bulletin).

Builder Bulletin 19 – MODULE 19

Field Review Consultant Reporting Requirements

This module of Bulletin 19 contains information about 60 Day and Milestone Reports. Information about other reporting requirements and a full set of report templates will be found in the subsequent sub-modules 4a through 4d. The use of standardized report templates will establish greater consistency in the quality and content of reports received by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP).

60 DAY REPORTS

These reports provide ONHWP with skeleton information about the ongoing progress of a construction project. They help assess whether or not a project is on schedule and provide FRCs with an early opportunity to bring any project issues to the attention of ONHWP if it is felt necessary to do so.

An explanation of due dates and submission of 60 Day Reports is given at the top of the template found in Module 4b.

MILESTONE REPORTS

Milestone Reports provide ONTIWP with detailed information about the progress of a project, a mechanism that shows risk areas are being monitored and that deficiencies are being appropriately dealt with.

ONHWP acknowledges that vendors/builders and FRCs often work together to rectify outstanding issues without the need to resort to formal reporting procedures. Outstanding issues/deficiencies will remain matters for practical resolution by agreement between the FRC and vendor/builder until such time as they cannot or have not been rectified and a Milestone Report falls due. Every effort should be made to rectify reported deficiencies before the next Milestone Report due date. (For an explanation of deficiencies as they relate to Bulletin 19 and when they become reportable please see the explanation entitled ‘Deficiency: How it’s defined and when to report are appended to the end of this module.)

WHEN TO SUBMIT A MILESTONE REPORT

Milestone Reports become due at specified stages of construction. The Condominium Office of ONHWP must receive the reports no later than 30 days after the described milestone is reached (see below). The milestone trigger points are:

- 1. Sub-structure complete i.e. completion of the at grade slab over the underground parking (if applicable).
- 2. Super structure complete (self explanatory).
- 3. Building envelope 75% complete i.e. completion of cladding and roofing.
- 4. Building watertight and complete i.e. completion of finishes and external sealing/weather protection systems. To include completion of all common elements.
- 5. Bulletin 19 Final Report (submitted by the vendor/builder). Refer to Module 4d for a full explanation of the Final Report.

Note: For these purposes, ONHWP will consider a construction milestone to be reached when work relating to the milestone has been substantially completed/performed.

Where the event based milestone trigger points fail to provide a sufficient flow of information, ONHWP reserves the right to request time based Milestone Reports. An example of where such a request might be made is where long construction delays lead to a marked extension of the construction schedule. In determining when it is appropriate to request a time based Milestone Report ONHWP will consider each case on its merits.

ONHWP will review the Milestone Report within 30 days of receipt and notify the FRC and vendor/builder of anything that warrants further discussion or investigation.

Nothing in the Milestone Reporting mechanism is intended to replace the FRC's internal project tracking systems. ONHWP will continue to expect full access to these records when necessary although such requests are likely to be rare.

HOW TO SUBMIT A MILESTONE REPORT

The Initial Milestone report is a two part report. The first part is a Milestone Report Tracking Summary This gives summary information about new deficiencies that are in existence at the time the Milestone Report falls due.

The second part is the Narrative Report Sheet. This provides FRCs with additional space to enter free-text narrative relating to any issue already referenced on the Tracking Summary.

On subsequent Milestone Reports a third sheet is required. This is the Deficiency Resolution Tracking Sheet. This lists all deficiencies that were outstanding at the previous Milestone Report and provides information about progress made in dealing with the previously identified deficiencies. It too may be used in conjunction with Narrative Report Sheets.

Copies of the sheets are attached to this module.

Builder Bulletin 19 – Appendix to Module 4 'Deficiency' : How it's Defined and When to Report One

OUTLINE

These guidelines provide an objective method to help FRCs and vendors/builders decide when an outstanding construction issue becomes reportable as a deficiency. The process uses a number of trigger points that convert outstanding issues or defects into 'reportable deficiencies'. In this way the subjective element associated with making 'report' or 'not to report' decisions is removed. Reporting of deficiencies will be done at the Milestone Report stages.

STANDARDIZING TERMINOLOGY

What term is used to describe an outstanding issue, defect or deficiency before the trigger points take effect will not impact upon ONHWP's view of the project.

The generally accepted term in the construction industry for quality and conformance problems is 'deficiency'. Use of the term appears to have been avoided in dealings with ONHWP because of the perceived potential for creating delays in the release of security. This system addresses such concerns and should remove the understandable reluctance of builders/vendors to have day-to-day construction problems called deficiencies.

ONHWP encourages the use of standardized language to remove potentials for confusion between agencies concerned with monitoring of identified risk areas. However, ONHWP respects the right of FRC firms to use whatever terms they wish when recording construction problems for internal tracking purposes.

'DEFICIENCY' FOR THE PURPOSES OF BULLETIN 19

A deficiency can exist in functional performance or in physical characteristics; it can arise from design, faulty manufacture, assembly or installation.

The existence of a deficiency may be established by physical evidence, from proof of a functional failure of a product while in use or, in the professional opinion of an FRC, the likely functional failure of a product at some future date or any other matter which exposes ONHWP to a potential claim under the warranty provisions of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

TRIGGER POINTS

All deficiencies/outstanding issues/defects (see ‘Standardizing Terminology’ above) become reportable in any of the following circumstances:

1/When a Milestone Report becomes due.

2/When the Final Report comes due.

3/When a member of the Primary Design Team reports something they describe as a deficiency.

4/When an FRC has reason to believe that a contractor responsible for completion of a given task has permanently left the site and work on that task remains to be done.

5/When a contractor claims completion of a task but, in the opinion of the FRC, that task is not satisfactorily completed.

6/When a deviation from the approved construction documents (including supplementary documents e.g. site instructions, change notices, etc.) or intent of the Architect or Engineer is noted and the change has not been properly approved.

7/When a contractor accepts work done on a sub-strate by another contractor and that person knew or ought reasonably to have known that the quality of the sub-strate work may adversely affect the performance of his or her own work.

8/Any other event or issue that, in the opinion of the FRC, is embraced by the description of the term ‘deficiency’ and should be reported because of the potential exposure of ONHWP to a claim under the warranty provisions.

Builder Bulletin 19 – Module 4a Design Review

TIMING

Not less than 30 days prior to the commencement of construction of the condominium project the vendor/builder must deliver copies of each of the Design Certificates to ONHWP. Completed certificates may be provided on a phased basis but each must be submitted by the vendor/builder to ONHWP at least 30 days prior to the commencement of the work covered by that portion of the design. A sample Design Certificate is appended to this module.

These certificates verify that the design of the condominium project has been reviewed by the professionals responsible for the design of those elements of the construction for which they are responsible. Design Certificates should relate to the identified risk areas laid out in the Scope of Work:

- Below grade / foundations
- Structure
- Exterior closure
- Roofing
- Fire safety systems
- Interior finishes
- Conveying systems
- Mechanical systems
- Electrical systems
- Site work

Unlike the Field Review Consultant, the design team professionals are not required to provide ongoing reports to ONHWP. However, the Field Review Consultant may require continuing assistance from the design team during the construction phase to ensure a clear understanding and interpretation of the design documents is maintained.

This bulletin is in no way intended to replace or set off the requirements of Part 2 of the Ontario Building Code which sets out specific requirements for design general review by architects and professional engineers. The provisions of this bulletin are in addition to those requirements. Architects and Engineers are still obligated under the Ontario Building Code and should continue to work with the Municipal Building Department in honouring that obligation.

Builder Bulletin 19 – Design Certificate

(For use in connection with Bulletin 19 Design Review)

This form must be submitted to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program Condominium Office not less than 30 days prior to the commencement of construction of the relevant part(s) of the project and must be accompanied by:

1. A copy of the professional's Certificate of Authorization or Practice as applicable
AND
2. Proof of current professional liability insurance in keeping with the requirements of his/her professional association.

Builder Bulletin 19 The Final Report

Module 4d

EFFECT OF SUBMISSION

Submission of the Final Report represents notice to ONHWP that the project has been properly completed with the possible exception of minor, outstanding deficiencies. FRCs must inform ONHWP when the Final Report has been submitted to the vendor/builder.

The Bulletin 19 Final Report follows the submission of all required 60 Day and other Milestone Reports. It must be submitted to ONHWP by the vendor/builder at the completion of the project but not before the registration of the condominium corporation. The Bulletin 19 Final Report forms part of the consideration for release of security

CONTENT

The final report must be a bound copy of the following documents:

- A copy of all Milestone Reports associated with the project
- Copy of the Condominium Declaration as filed with the Land Titles Office
- All Design Certificates
- Field Review Declaration

and the following documents as applicable:

- Design Architect's final clearance
- Site Work Engineer's final clearance
- Structural Engineer's final clearance
- Mechanical Engineer's final clearance
- Electrical Engineer's final clearance
- Occupancy permit .if available

REPORT REVIEW

ONHWP will review the Bulletin 19 Final Report within 30 days of receipt and then notify the vendor/builder of any further technical requirements or adjustments to the required security, depending on the extent of any outstanding defects or deficiencies, and any outstanding administrative or non-technical matters. If everything is in order from a technical perspective, the release of security, subject to the requirements in Builder Bulletin 28, will be completed within 45 days of receipt of all the required documentation.

The FRC will assess the likely costs of rectifying outstanding matters based on current sub-trade prices for such rectification and provide them to ONHWP. ONHWP will then review the costs provided and retain an appropriate amount of the security. The amount retained will reflect the likely cost of rectification in the event that ONHWP was required to give effect to any remediation and will also take into account any outstanding administrative and non-technical costs.

BUILDER BULLETIN 22

FLOOR AREA CALCULATIONS

Effective Date: April 1, 1990

Further to Builder Bulletin 20 and in response to industry requests, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program has developed a set of requirements for the uniform calculation of unit floor area.

The requirement only apply when the floor area is used in the advertising and sales material, or in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale (or construction contract). In other words any printed or advertised reference to a unit's floor area must be calculated in accordance with this Bulletin.

The details of the approval method of floor area calculations vary slightly depending on the type of home to be constructed, and the attached detail sheets describe the approved methods for each of the following:

- » detached houses
- » semi-detached houses
- » row houses
- » high-rise units

The requirements of this Bulletin come into effect April 1, 1990 for homes and condominium units enrolled with the Program after that date.

We would like to thank the Ontario Home Builders Association's Technical Committee, the Toronto Home Builders Association and the many other industry members who assisted the Program in preparing this Bulletin.

Floor Area Calculations

Detached Houses

Application of Calculation

For any reference to area measurement of a detached house, the measurement must be calculated using the following approved method. This includes references in:

- Agreement of Purchase and Sale
- Media advertising and
- Sales materials.

That is to say, if in the course of selling detached houses, reference is made to an area measurement, then the following method must be used.

However, there is no requirement to specify an area measurement, so if none is mentioned then this definition need not be used.

Either metric or imperial measurements may be used.

The following notation to purchasers must be included in any materials which specify an area measurement: "Note: Actual usable floor space may vary from the stated floor area."

Calculation

For detached houses, the floor area of the house is the total area of each floor above grade measured to the exterior face of the outside walls, less openings to the floor below which are not associated with stairs. Stairs may be included (the area of treads and landings). However, if the opening in the floor is oversized (larger than the actual area of the stairs), that extra open area (outside the limits of the treads and landings) must be deducted from the floor area calculation.

A tolerance of 2.0% on the total area measurement is acceptable.

The area of the garage is excluded from the floor area calculation, but any finished year-round habitable space above the garage is included. Finished are enclosed atrium or sunroom areas meant for year-round use may be included in the calculation. The area of any open balconies or enclosed balconies (such as Florida rooms) are not to be included in the calculation, unless these areas are designed to be used as year-round habitable space, and are heated and insulated to Code. These areas may be shown separately. Example: 2,000 square foot house plus 150 square foot Florida room.

Finished area, where all or part of the area is below the first storey (including walk-outs), may be included in the total floor area figure, but must also be specified separately. Example: 2,000 square foot house which includes 800 square foot finished area below the first story. Measurements for this space below the first storey are to the exterior surfaces of foundation walls.

Floor Area Calculations

Semi-Detached Houses

Application of Calculation

For any reference to area measurement of a semi-detached house, the measurement must be calculated using the following approved method. This includes references in:

- Agreement of Purchase and Sale
- Media advertising and
- Sales materials.

That is to say, if in the course of selling semi-detached houses, reference is made to an area measurement, then the following method must be used. However, there is no requirement to specify an area measurement, so if none is mentioned then this definition need not be used.

For semi-detached houses, the floor area of the house is the total area of each floor above grade measured from the centerline of the common wall to the exterior face of the outside wall, less any openings to the floor below which are not associated with stairs. Stairs may be included (the area of treads and landings). However, if the opening in the floor is oversized (larger than the actual area of the stairs), that extra open area (outside the limits of the treads and landings) must be deducted from the floor area calculation.

Floor Area Calculations

Row Houses

Application of Calculation

For any reference to area measurement of a row house, the measurement must be calculated using the following approved method. This includes references in:

- Agreement of Purchase and Sale
- Media advertising and
- Sales materials.

That is to say, if in the course of selling row houses, reference is made to an area measurement, then the following method must be used. However, there is no requirement to specify an area measurement, so if none is mentioned then this definition need not be used.

Either metric or imperial measurements may be used.

The following notation to purchasers must be included in any materials which specify an area measurement: "Note: Actual usable floor space may vary from the stated floor area."

Calculation

For row houses, the floor area of the house is the total area of each floor above grade measured from the centerline of the common wall to the centerline of the common wall or to the exterior face of the outside wall, where appropriate, less any openings to the floor below which are not associated with stairs. Stairs may be included (the area of treads and landings). However, if the opening in the floor is oversized (larger than the actual area of the stairs), that extra open area (outside the limits of the treads and landings) must be deducted from the floor area calculation.

Floor Area Calculations

High-Rise Units

Application of Calculation

For any reference to area measurement of a high-rise house, the measurement must be calculated using the following approved method. This includes references in:

- Agreement of Purchase and Sale
- Media advertising and

- Sales materials.

That is to say, if in the course of selling high-rise units, reference is made to an area measurement, then the following method must be used. However, there is no requirement to specify an area measurement, so if none is mentioned then this definition need not be used.

However, there is no requirement to specify an area measurement, so if none is mentioned then this definition need not be used.

Either metric or imperial measurements may be used.

The following notation to purchasers must be included in any materials which specify an area measurement: "Note: Actual usable floor space may vary from the stated floor area."

Calculation

For high-rise units, the floor area of the house is the total area of each floor measured as the area bounded by the center lines of demising or party walls separating one unit from another unit, the exterior surface of all exterior walls, and the exterior surface of the corridor wall enclosing and abutting the unit, less any openings to the floor below which are not associated with stairs. Stairs may be included (the area of treads and landings). However, if the opening in the floor is oversized (larger than the actual area of the stairs), that extra open area (outside the limits of the treads and landings) must be deducted from the floor area calculation. Mechanical shafts or chases directly servicing the unit will be included in the total area of the unit.

A tolerance of 2.0% on the total area measurement is acceptable.

Finished and enclosed atrium or sunroom areas meant for year-round use may be included in the calculation. The area of any open balconies or enclosed balconies (such as Florida rooms) are not to be included in the calculation, unless these areas are designed to be used as year-round habitable space, and are heated and insulated to Code. These areas may be shown separately. Example: 2,000 square foot house plus 150 square foot Florida room.

For high-rise units, measurements may be specified for typical units for each model on the middle floor (mid-way between ground and top floor). If this middle floor method is used (rather than calculating measurements of units on each floor) then the following notation to purchasers must be included: "Note: Floor area measurements were calculated on the middle floor, such that units on lower floors may have less floor space due to thicker structural members, mechanical rooms, etc., while units on higher floors may have more floor space."

BUILDER BULLETIN 23

THE WARRANTY PROGRAM AND THE GST

Effective Date: January 1, 1991

This Bulletin will acquaint builders with impact of the new Goods and Services Tax, scheduled to be added to the cost of all Canadian commerce effective January 1, 1991. The effect of the GST on builders' dealings with Ontario New Home Warranty Program will be as follows:

The Program will be required to add the 7 per cent tax to all fees:

- Registration and Renewal fees
- Enrolment fees including subsequent adjustments (called EFD)
- Excess conciliation fees

The Program will be required to add the 7 per cent tax to the cost of all products:

- Publications
- Videos
- Manuals and course materials
- Tuition for training courses and seminars

The 7 per cent tax will be accounted for in all payments of claims, other than for deposit refunds, such as:

- Payments to contractors for work done
- Payments to homeowners for work done or about to be done
- Reimbursement of homeowner expenses arising from delayed closings.

It will NOT be necessary to add the new tax to the following:

- Payment and subsequent repayment of funds held in trust by the Program.
- Claims payments made as refunds of deposits to purchasers.

This summary is complete at this time, but as experience with the GST mounts in 1991, there could be revisions to the list of taxable goods and services.

For more information regarding this Bulletin, please contact the ONHWP office in your area.

BUILDER BULLETIN 24 (Revised) EXTENDED TWO-YEAR WARRANTY COVERAGE MAJOR STRUCTURAL DEFECTS COVERAGE

Effective Date: January 1, 1991

This Bulletin has been prepared to advise builders of new warranty coverage to become effective for all new homes enrolled with the Program after December 31, 1990.

After extensive consultation with industry and an examination of warranty coverage outside Ontario, the board of Directors decided to enhance warranty protection for home purchasers. These enhancements will provide the consumer with a greater sense of security when purchasing a new home in Ontario.

Warranty enhancements in the area of Major or Structural Defects (MS D) include new responsibilities for the Program as well as the builder.

These changes do not constitute a change in the Ontario Building Code nor an extension of Code requirements.

1. Warranty Coverage

Warranty coverage is extended from one year to two years for the following items. The builder warrants to the purchaser:

- That the home is constructed a workmanlike manner and is free of defects in materials including caulking, windows and doors such that the building envelope of the home prevents water penetration. The "building envelope" means the wall and roof assemblies that contain building space, separation of the outdoor and indoor environments so that the indoor environment can be controlled within acceptable limits
- That the electrical, plumbing and heating delivery and distribution systems are free from defects in materials and workmanship. "Delivery and distribution systems" includes all wires, conduits, pipes, junctions, switches, receptacles and seals, but does not include appliances, fixtures and fittings.
- That all exterior cladding is free from defects in materials and workmanship resulting in detachment, displacement or physical deteriorations.
- That the home is free from violations of those provisions of Ontario Building Code regulations under which the Building Permit was issued, affecting health and safety. This includes but is not limited to fire safety, insulation, air and vapor barriers, ventilation, heating and structural adequacy.

This means that for a period of two years after possession the builder's warranty will apply to the items set out above.

2. Major Structural Defects Coverage

The period of coverage for Major Structural Defects is being extended from five to seven years. The total amount of liability for all warranties on any home or condominium unit, including Major Structural Defects, continues to be $100,000.

The builder will be responsible for Major Structural Defects for the first two years after possession.

If a Major Structural Defect claim during years three to seven is determined to be the result of builder negligence, the builder will be held financially responsible.

The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) assumes full responsibility for Major Structural Defects for years three to seven, however, ONHWP will advise the builder of any MSD complaints.

The complete warranty and Major Structural Defect coverage as revised will apply to all new housing units enrolled with ONHWP after December 31, 1990.

In this Warranty Program, registration fees, enrolment fees, and renewal fees are established at the

DELAYED CLOSING AND DELAYED CONDOMINIUM OCCUPANCY

This Bulletin replaces Bulletin 20, in effect as of June 3, 1988 (and cancelled as of May 1, 2004)¹ and Builder Bulletin 25, in effect as of March 1, 1991 (and replaced as of May 1, 2004).

WHAT IS NEW IN THIS BULLETIN

The following changes apply to homes with a date of possession on or after May 1, 2004

- The Warranty Service Rules of Builder Bulletin 42 as they apply to delayed closing/occupancy claims will not apply and claims will be processed in accordance with the rules explained in this Bulletin. A new administrative fee will be introduced and charged to any builder against whom a purchaser makes a valid delayed closing/occupancy claim to Tarion Warranty Corporation (“Tarion”, formerly the Ontario New Home Warranty Program). See details in the section entitled “Compensation for Delays in Closing and Occupancy”.
- Purchasers will be able to make claims for living expenses incurred as a result of the delay, without submitting receipts or any other proof of payment, for up to $60 per day in 2004, $80 per day in 2005, and $100 per day in 2006. Claims for living expenses without receipts may be contested by builders; however, Tarion will charge builders an upfront non-refundable fee of $350 to re-assess the claim. See details in the section entitled “Re-assessment of a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Claim”.

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

Section 17 of Regulation 892 creates a one-year warranty to compensate homeowners² or purchasers³ (referred to collectively as “purchasers”) for direct costs incurred as a result of a delay in closing or a delay in occupancy which occurs without the prescribed notice to the purchaser. This bulletin explains to you, as a vendor or as a vendor/builder (referred to collectively as “builder”) of freehold homes and condominium units (referred to collectively as “homes”), the rules governing delayed closing and delayed occupancy protection; how purchasers must submit delayed closing/occupancy claims and the timelines within which builders must respond to these claims. It also introduces a new administrative fee to help pay for Tarion’s costs of processing delayed closing and delayed occupancy claims. All builders are encouraged to provide purchasers with sufficient notice of delays to avoid a claim under section 17 and, where sufficient notice is not provided, to use best efforts to resolve delayed closing/occupancy claims directly with their purchasers.

¹ For that portion of cancelled Bulletin 20 dealing with “substitutions”, please refer to sections 18 and 19 of Regulation 892 under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

² A freehold purchaser can make a delayed closing claim after he or she has obtained title to the freehold home.

³ A condominium unit purchaser can make a delayed occupancy claim once he or she has obtained “interim occupancy”, prior to closing of the transaction when that purchaser obtains title to the unit.

DELAYED CLOSING AND DELAYED OCCUPANCY PROTECTION

The “delayed closing warranty” applies to freehold homes, and the “delayed occupancy warranty” applies to condominium units.

This warranty protects purchasers against closing/occupancy delays where the builder does not provide the prescribed notice of delay, and against builder delays that exceed the maximum delay permitted by the Regulations under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (the “Act”). In other words, a builder can unilaterally (without the purchaser’s consent and without compensation) extend closing of a freehold home, or the confirmed occupancy date⁴ of a condominium unit, only if adequate notice of the delay is given to the purchaser, and if the delay does not exceed the maximum permitted.

Adequate Notice

A total of 2 unilateral delays are permitted.

- A one-time major delay of up to 120 days, when at least 65 days notice is given in advance of the “original closing date” (or confirmed occupancy date) to the purchaser; and
- A one-time minor delay of up to 15 days, when at least 35 days notice is given in advance of the original or extended closing/occupancy date to the purchaser.

Notice of the delay must always be written. It may either be given personally or sent by mail. If sent by mail, notice of the delay is deemed to be received 5 business days after mailing. This means that if builders mail their notice, they must do so at least 35 days plus 5 business days in advance for a minor extension, and at least 65 days plus 5 business days in advance for a major extension. In the event of a postal interruption, all notices must be given personally.

A notice must always state a new closing or occupancy date, which becomes the “extended closing/occupancy date.”

Maximum Delay Permitted

Both delays (the one-time major delay of up to 120 days and/or the one-time minor delay of up to 15 days) cannot exceed a total of 120 days for freehold homes, and a total of 135 days for condominium units.

Builders also have a 5-day “grace period” to extend the closing or the confirmed occupancy date unilaterally (the original or the extended date) without compensation, and without providing written notice. For example, if a builder extends the confirmed occupancy date of a condominium unit for 135 days and the unit is occupied between day 136 and 140, the “grace period” applies, and the builder is not required to pay compensation to the purchaser. Builders are encouraged to provide purchasers with as much notice as possible if they intend to rely on this “grace period”, since last minute postponements of closing can be costly and inconvenient for purchasers and do not constitute good customer service.

⁴ To calculate compensation for delays in occupancy, Tarion will use the confirmed occupancy date, as opposed to the tentative occupancy date in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale. For details, see the section entitled “Special Provisions Related to Delayed Occupancy”.

PLEASE NOTE

By giving adequate notice, a builder can unilaterally delay the closing date on a freehold home, or the confirmed occupancy date on a condominium unit twice: a major delay of up to 120 days and a minor delay of up to 15 days, the total not to exceed 120 days for freehold homes and 135 days for condominium units.

If the purchaser agrees in writing to an amendment of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale that extends the original closing/occupancy date set out in that Agreement, then the amended closing/occupancy date becomes the original closing/occupancy date for the purposes of the delayed closing/occupancy warranty. An acknowledgement by the purchaser of a unilateral extension by the builder of the original closing/occupancy date is not an amendment to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

Example

1. The original closing date is Monday, August 1, 2005.
2. The builder sends notice by mail to the purchaser on Wednesday, May 18, 2005 that closing will be delayed for 61 days.
3. The notice of the delay is deemed to be received on Thursday, May 26, 2005 (the 5th business day following its mailing⁵; and 67 days before the original closing date).
4. The notice of extension sets Thursday, October 1, 2005 as the new revised extended closing date.
5. On Thursday, August 25, 2005 (37 days before the extended closing date) the builder gives written notice in person to the purchaser that the extended closing date will be delayed by an additional 11 days, and sets Wednesday, October 12, 2005 as the new extended closing date.
6. The total delay was 72 days (did not exceed 120 days).
7. On Monday, October 5, 2005, the builder advises the purchaser that there will be a further two day delay in closing to Friday, October 14, 2005. This additional 2 days is within the 5 day “grace period” permitted under the Act.
8. If by Monday, October 17, 2005 (the new extended closing date plus the 5-day grace period), closing does not occur, the purchaser may claim compensation for delayed closing following the procedure explained below under the heading “Delayed Closing/Occupancy Claims for Compensation”.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATED TO DELAYED OCCUPANCY (Condominiums)

- Every Agreement of Purchase and Sale for a condominium unit must contain either a confirmed occupancy date, or a tentative occupancy date that is clearly identified as tentative.
- If the occupancy date in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is merely “tentative”, the builder must ensure that the purchaser receives written notice of the confirmed occupancy date not more than 30 days from completion of the roof slab (or another specific stage of construction as specified in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale), or at least 90 days before the tentative occupancy date. If not, the tentative occupancy date automatically becomes the confirmed occupancy date for purposes of calculating delayed occupancy compensation under the Act.⁶
- Any written notice to the purchaser of the confirmed occupancy date must also be sent at least 120 days in advance of that confirmed occupancy date.

⁵ Monday, May 23, 2005 is a holiday: Victoria Day.

⁶ See Regulation 892, sections 17(5)-(13).

- Tarion will use the confirmed occupancy date to calculate compensation for delays in occupancy.
- The purchaser cannot be compelled to take occupancy of the unit before the confirmed occupancy date, unless he/she consents to it in writing.

Note that a condominium unit purchaser can file a delayed occupancy claim once he or she has obtained “interim occupancy”⁷, prior to closing of the transaction when that purchaser obtains title to the unit.

Example

1. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale establishes Friday, September 1, 2006 as the tentative occupancy date.
2. The builder sends written notice by mail to the purchaser on Monday, May 15, 2006 that the confirmed occupancy date will be Friday, December 1, 2006.
3. The notice is deemed to be received on Tuesday, May 23, 2006, the fifth business day thereafter⁸; 101 days before the tentative occupancy date (more than the minimum required, which is 90 days) and 192 days in advance of the confirmed occupancy date (more than the minimum required, which is 120 days).
4. The builder sends written notice by mail to the purchaser on Tuesday, October 10, 2006 that occupancy will be delayed for 14 days.
5. The notice of the (minor) delay is deemed to be received on Tuesday, October 17, 2006 (5 business days after mailing and 45 days before original confirmed occupancy date).
6. The notice of extension sets December 15, 2006 as the new revised extended occupancy date.
7. The total delay was 14 days, and written notice was given not less than 35 days before the confirmed occupancy date.
8. If by December 20, 2006 (the new extended occupancy date plus the 5-day grace period), the unit is not ready for occupancy, the purchaser may claim for compensation for delayed occupancy for each day of delay thereafter, following the procedure explained below under the heading “Warranty Service Rules for Delayed Closing/Occupancy Claims”.

EXCEPTION

No compensation will be paid if the delay is the result of strike, fire, flood, acts of God or civil insurrection. Strikes may result in delays longer than the actual duration of the strike, in the event that supplies are affected because of the strike. At the end of a delay occasioned by a strike, the builder is required to establish a new closing/occupancy date.

WARRANTY SERVICE RULES FOR DELAYED CLOSING/OCCUPANCY CLAIMS

The Warranty Service Rules of Builder Bulletin 42 as they apply to delayed closing/occupancy claims have been amended and will only apply to homes with dates of possession between October 1, 2003 and April 30, 2004, inclusive. Please refer to Builder Bulletin 42 (Revised, March 15, 2004) for delayed closing/occupancy claims related to homes with a date of possession between October 1, 2003 and April 30, 2004.

⁷ “Interim Occupancy” and “Interim Closing” refer to the occupancy of a proposed unit before a purchaser receives title to it. Generally, condominium purchasers will be required to occupy their unit before the developer is able to transfer legal ownership to it, and the warranties under the Act commence at the date of occupancy.

⁸ Monday, May 22, 2006 is a holiday: Victoria Day.

For homes with a date of possession on or after May 1, 2004, the following Warranty Service Rules apply:

- The purchaser will have one year from the date of possession, or from the date of “occupancy closing” in condominium units, to make a delayed closing/occupancy claim.
- Builders who have not provided the proper notice of a delay (or where the delay exceeds the maximum permitted) should contact their affected purchasers and try to resolve their claims directly.
- If the builder fails to resolve the delayed closing/occupancy claim, the purchaser may submit⁹, to both Tarion and the builder, a completed Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form with copies of all documents required in that Form. A Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form can be obtained by calling Tarion at 1-800-668-0124 or online at www.tarion.com
- Only one complete Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form will be accepted.
- The builder has 30 days from the date the purchaser submits a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form to compensate the purchaser or otherwise settle the claim.
- If by day 30 following submission of a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form the builder has not compensated the purchaser, or otherwise resolved the claim, the purchaser may contact Tarion to request an assessment of the claim (conciliation) between day 31 and 60 following submission of the Form. The purchaser will be charged a $50 conciliation fee when the assessment is requested, but the fee will be refunded if the delayed closing/occupancy claim is determined to be valid.
- If the purchaser does not request an assessment during this period, the claim will be considered resolved and the matter closed.
- The builder has a further 30 days from the date the purchaser requests an assessment of the claim to compensate the purchaser, or otherwise resolve the claim. If the purchaser notifies Tarion that the claim has not been resolved by the end of the 30 days, Tarion will conduct an assessment (conciliation) and issue a Warranty Assessment Report¹⁰ (“Report”) to the purchaser and to the builder within 10 days of the receipt of notice after the expiry of the 30-day period.
- An administrative fee of $600 payable by cheque, money order, or other approved payment method, will be charged to the builder if Tarion determines, after conducting an assessment, that the claim is valid. The administrative fee will increase to $1200 for homes with a date of possession on or after January 1, 2005, and will be $600 for all homes with a date of possession on or after January 1, 2006. This fee will serve to offset the administrative costs incurred by Tarion in processing delayed closing/occupancy claims.
- If Tarion determines that the claim is valid, the conciliation (assessment) will be considered to be “chargeable” to the builder, and will be noted against the builder’s record with Tarion.
- Tarion will settle directly with the purchaser if the builder does not resolve the claim within 30 days from the date when Tarion issues the Warranty Assessment Report.

¹⁰ A Warranty Assessment Report is a written report issued by Tarion, detailing its assessment of a delayed closing/occupancy claim.

COMPENSATION FOR DELAYS IN CLOSING AND OCCUPANCY

If the builder breaches the delayed closing/occupancy warranty, compensation must be paid to the purchaser for living expenses, plus other direct costs, to a total maximum of $5,000.

Living Expenses

Living expenses are direct living costs such as accommodation, meals (when kitchen facilities are not available), laundry and transportation (may include mileage and parking), incurred by purchasers as a result of the delay. The living expenses portion of the delayed closing/occupancy compensation cap ($5000) has a maximum of $100 per day.

The maximum amount a purchaser may claim for living expenses incurred as a result of the delay will vary depending on whether supporting receipts or other proof of direct costs has been provided:

- Without supporting receipts or other proof of expenses, the purchaser may claim $60 per day for homes with a date of possession between May 1, 2004 and December 31, 2004, inclusive, increasing to $80 per day for homes with a date of possession on or after January 1, 2005.
- With supporting receipts or other proof of expenses, the purchaser may continue to claim up to $100 per day for homes with a date of possession between May 1, 2004 and December 31, 2005, both inclusive.
- For homes with a date of possession on or after January 1, 2006, the purchaser will be allowed to claim up to $100 per day without receipts or other proof of expenses incurred.

Note that to submit a claim without supporting receipts, purchasers must first prove that they did not receive adequate notice of the delay, or that the delay exceeded the maximum allowed. Purchasers will be advised to keep a copy of their receipts or any other proof of claim as these may be required to support a claim if the builder requests a re-assessment following the procedure explained below under the heading “Re-Assessment of a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Claim”.

Other Direct Costs

In addition to living expenses, a purchaser may also claim other direct costs caused by the delay, such as:

- moving costs, including moving company costs or vehicle rental and packing materials for do-it-yourself moves;
- storage costs for storage of furniture, clothing and personal belongings;
- kennel costs for pets; and
- Canada Post charges to hold mail.

Such other direct costs must be additional costs over and above what the purchaser would have otherwise incurred if the closing had not been delayed. The onus is on the purchaser to prove that other direct costs are directly related to the delay. A claim for “other direct costs” must always be substantiated with receipts, or other acceptable form of proof. A delayed closing/occupancy claim may only be made after closing, or after “occupancy closing” (in the case of condominium units) of the purchase transaction.

The maximum claim amount, including both living expenses and other direct costs is $5000.

The delayed closing warranty will apply to contract homes only if there is a specific occupancy date stated in writing between the owner and the contractor in the original agreement, and the home is substantially completed by the same contractor.

RE-ASSESSMENT OF A DELAYED CLOSING/OCCUPANCY CLAIM

Option 1: Claim with supporting receipts or other proof of expenses

If a purchaser chooses to claim the living expenses portion of his/her delayed closing/occupancy claim with supporting receipts, and Tarion determines that the claim is valid, the builder will be charged the applicable administration fee (e.g. $600¹¹), and the conciliation will be “chargeable” to the builder. The builder may contest the validity of the claim by using the Builder Arbitration Forum (BAF).¹²

Option 2: Claim without supporting receipts or other proof of expenses

- If a purchaser chooses to claim the living expenses portion of his/her delayed closing/occupancy claim without receipts or other supporting documentation, and Tarion determines that the claim is valid, the builder may contest the amount of living expenses claimed without receipts by requesting a re-assessment of the claim within 30 days after Tarion issues the Warranty Assessment Report.
- Tarion will charge the builder an upfront non-refundable fee of $350 to re-assess the amount of living expenses claimed without receipts.
- If the builder chooses to request a re-assessment, the burden of proving that the purchaser incurred lower costs, and that the difference between costs claimed and costs incurred is material (i.e. at least 25% lower than the claim amount), will rest on the builder. The builder must provide Tarion, when filing the request for re-assessment, evidence that the purchaser incurred materially lower living expenses and/or evidence of any direct benefit received by the purchaser. For example:
 - (a) Builders may rely on their own information concerning any direct benefits given to purchasers, such as provision of alternate accommodation by the builder or a credit on the statement of adjustments;
 - (b) Builders may also rely upon information provided directly to them by purchasers during initial negotiations surrounding a delayed closing/occupancy claim. Tarion expects in all cases that the builder will first attempt to resolve delayed closing/occupancy disputes directly with a purchaser before a claim is filed. During this initial attempt at resolution, the builder should request information and documentation concerning the amounts claimed by the purchaser if the builder has doubts concerning the amounts in issue;
 - (c) Builders may rely upon third party information. For example, where a purchaser claims amounts relating to a hotel stay, the builder could obtain actual rate information from the hotel; and ¹¹ See applicable administration fee under the section entitled “Warranty Service Rules for Delayed Closing/Occupancy Claims”.

¹² For details on eligibility and timelines to access the Builder Arbitration Forum, please refer to Builder Bulletin 41, available at www.tarion.com.

- (d) Finally, in rare cases, the builder may seek a negative inference to be drawn by Tarion based on the failure of a purchaser to co-operate. In such a situation, the builder would have to provide documented evidence of reasonable efforts on its part to obtain information from the purchaser as well as evidence of the purchaser's refusal to co-operate.
- If Tarion determines, based on the information submitted by the builder, that there is enough evidence to justify a re-assessment, the purchaser will be notified that he/she has 30 days to back-up the amount of living expenses claimed without receipts, and provide their responding position to both the builder and Tarion. Note that a request for re-assessment will not be processed until the builder pays any outstanding delayed closing/occupancy administration fees.
 - Based on the evidence submitted by both the purchaser and the builder, Tarion will re-issue a Warranty Assessment Report, which may be further contested by the builder at the Builder Arbitration Forum.¹³
 - The initial administration fee will be reimbursed to the builder, and the conciliation will be "not chargeable" to the builder, if the delayed closing/occupancy claim consisted solely of living expenses, and Tarion determines after re-assessing the claim, that there is insufficient evidence of at least 75% of the amount of living expenses claimed without receipts.
 - Tarion will settle directly with the purchaser if the builder does not resolve the claim within 30 days from the date when Tarion re-issues the Warranty Assessment Report, and will invoice the builder for the amount of the compensation, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.
 - If the builder chooses not to request a re-assessment under Option 2, the portion of the Warranty Assessment Report dealing with living expenses will be considered accurate and final, and may not be contested by the builder at the Builder Arbitration Forum.

BUILDER BULLETIN 26

INCREASED REGISTRATION & RENEWAL FEES

Effective: July 1, 1991

This Bulletin has been prepared to advise builders of a new fee structure effective July 1, 1991. The present fee structure has been in place since the inception of the Program in 1976. At that time, 15 years ago, fees were set at $350 for registration and $100 for renewal.

Recently, the Program analyzed its costs in the administration of the registration and renewal processes. The analysis revealed that the Program's costs were not being met. Therefore the Board of Directors of the Program decided to increase those fees to recover a portion of the cost of administration.

Regulations to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act have therefore been amended to reflect the revised fees. Future amendments will be made on a more frequent basis, to keep fees in line with changing conditions.

For registrations with renewal dates of July 1, 1991 or later, and for new or lapsed registration applications received and Program-stamped on or after that date, the new fees will be as follows:

- Registration: $600 (new builders or re-registration of expired builders)
- Renewal: $300 (registered builders who wish to maintain registration)

(Goods and Services Tax must be added to these fees by the applicant.)

Builders should be aware that if their renewal application form, together with the prescribed fee, is not received by the Program by their renewal date, their registration will expire and any subsequent application will be treated as a new application, and the prescribed fee for a new registration will be required.

All existing procedures for making application for registration or renewal, including requirements for supporting documentation, remain unchanged.

For more information regarding this Bulletin, please contact the ONHWP office in your area.

Builder Bulletin 27 (Revised)

Effective: May 1, 2001

Home Enrolment Fees

This bulletin replaces Builder Bulletin 27 (Revised) that was in effect beginning October 1, 2000.

HERE'S WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This bulletin lays out the enrolment fees for all homes enrolled on or after May 1, 2001. It provides an explanation of why a further $55 DECREASE in the fees has been approved along with the removal of common element fees for condominium units.

HERE'S WHAT HAS CHANGED

Following a decrease in enrolment fees in October, 2000, a further reduction of $55 will apply to all homes enrolled on or after May 1 2001.

All homes means freehold homes and both low and high-rise condominium units.

Additionally, in previous years the enrolment of low and high-rise condominium units has attracted an additional common element fee of $100 and $150 respectively. Effective May 1, 2001 these fees will be eliminated.

ENROLMENT FEE STRUCTURE

Enrolment fees (see Schedules A) continue to be calculated on sale price ranges. This method reduces the need for adjustments of after sale enrolment fees because, in most cases, a unit's selling price will remain within its sale price range. As a result, the enrolment fee structure reduces administrative work for both builders/vendors and the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP).

Enrolment and payment of fees for freehold homes must occur when their building permits are issued.

Enrolment and payment of fees for condominium projects must occur at least 30 days before construction begins.

For the purposes of this bulletin "sale price" means all monies paid by the owner under the Agreement of Purchase and Sale or the construction contract. GST, land transfer taxes, legal fees and warranty fees are excluded from the enrolment fee calculation.

REASONS FOR THE CHANGES

ONHWP is presently in a solid financial position and continues to see and share with its stakeholders the benefits of management strategies that reduce the exposure of the corporation to claims.

The Board of Directors of ONHWP utilizes a financial modeling framework that allows the financial health of the organization to be monitored. The model tests the level of the Guarantee fund and the provision for adverse deviation from predicted claims exposures. Use of the model is fundamental to ONHWP's overall risk strategy and the determination of fee levels.

All of these activities are carried out against a backdrop of successfully maintaining adequate capital to protect new home buyers and owners.

ADDITIONAL FACTORS

Factors that continue to contribute to ONHWP's ability and willingness to implement the latest reduction in fees are:

- Enrolment levels in 2001 remain at high levels.
- ONHWP has finally realized a settlement on the long-standing, class action, law suit concerning the claims paid out by ONHWP on plastic venting.
- The revisions to Builder Bulletin 19 will enhance the quality assurance process associated with condominium construction and are thereby expected to reduce ONHWP's claims exposure.
- The normalization of fees across the board is reflective of actual claim activity (especially reduced claims for condominiums) and is a continuation of ONHWP's commitment to keep fee structures equitable and reasonable.
- ONHWP continues to pursue initiatives to increase efficiency, reduce claim costs and control liabilities, all of which can be expected to positively affect the bottom line on a going forward basis.

FOR MORE INFORMATION

To calculate enrolment fees please refer to the table in Schedule A (overleaf).

If you have any questions about the revised enrolment fees please contact the ONHWP Regional Office in your area. A list of offices is included on the back of this bulletin.

ONHWP Requirements for Receipt and Release of Security

EFFECTIVE: February 1, 2003

This bulletin replaces Builder Bulletin 28 (Revised), which became effective on July 1, 2001.

What the Bulletin is About

The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) carries out assessments of builders to ensure that registered builders are able to meet all financial and warranty obligations. Builder Bulletin 28 defines the parameters of that process and the amounts and conditions for the security, which may be required of builders as a condition of registration.

Security is used by ONHWP to mitigate losses resulting from builder failures so that funds from registration and enrolment fees are available to pay for ongoing warranty claims and those caused by unforeseen circumstances. The bulletin is revised periodically to ensure it is current, fair to builders and consistent with other ONHWP policy.

Reasons for the February, 2003 Revision

As of February 1, 2003, new home buyers will be protected for up to $40,000 under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act for the refund or loss of a deposit on a freehold home or for financial loss on a contract home. Freehold security requirements, for those builders who are required to post security with ONHWP, and who take deposits in excess of $20,000, have been adjusted based on the increase in deposit coverage above.

Impact of the July, 2001 Revision

The primary goal of the July, 2001 revision was to have a more open, accurate process for assessing builders. The results have been lower but better-targeted security for ONHWP and a fairer process for builders. The current process is more precise but flexible for assessing builders and administering the potential security requirement. The revisions also introduced updated criteria for evaluating a builder's demographic traits and more standard procedures for analyzing a builder's financial information. As a result, these enhancements have facilitated a reduction in the security required of many average and low risk builders.

Specifically, the revised Bulletin has refined the criteria for builder size and tenure. It has reduced the weight of the business/technical evaluation and has increased the weight of the builder's tenure. It more openly defines the review of the builder's financial information and introduces additional segmentation of condominium builders. This has allowed a reduction in the warranty security required of most average and low risk builders. The revisions also introduced additional instruments to help low risk builders further reduce the cost of providing security to ONHWP.

BACKGROUND

In 1995, Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) undertook a thorough review of its security policy to incorporate the security requirements set out in:

- Builder Bulletin 19 – High-Rise Condominium Projects: Design & Site Review Reporting
- Builder Bulletin 30 – Expanded Registration Requirements
- Builder Bulletin 33 – Certification of Private Sewage Disposal Systems

At the request of builders, ONHWP also established objective requirements for the type, amount, taking and release of security; to take the performance of builders into account.

In 2000, ONHWP undertook a further review to enhance the mechanisms used for assessing builders and to adjust security requirements based on updated analysis of claim trends and risks associated with various market segments. The Bulletin issued in July, 2001, as well as the current Bulletin, incorporate the revisions that came out of that review.

ONHWP wishes to extend its thanks to the Ontario Home Builders' Association (OHBA) for its extensive input into the recent revisions. The requirements of this bulletin do not necessarily represent the consensus of all groups. However, the comments and ideas of all who participated were considered carefully during the review. In particular we wish to thank the ONHWP Board's Risk Advisory Committee and the OHBA/ONHWP Liaison Committee's Bulletin 28/Indemnity Sub-Committee for its extensive work related to the revisions.

All references to "vendor/builder" in this Bulletin may refer to a vendor or a builder of new homes. Nothing in this Bulletin shall be construed to limit the authority of the Registrar to increase or decrease security requirements.

RISK ASSESSMENT FOR ALL BUILDERS

ONHWP's security requirements for all vendor/builders will be assessed on registration and renewal and when appropriate under the stipulations outlined in the Vendor and Builder Agreements, between periods of renewal. With respect to vendor/builders of multiple condominium projects under a single registered company, each project will be assessed 60 days prior to the signing of the Agreements of Purchase and Sale and/or the taking of deposits for each project. All assessments will be based on a detailed review of the vendor/builder's history according to the following criteria:

- Size (the annual average number of possessions over the last 5 years, including associated companies)
- Tenure (the number of consecutive years of registration, including associated companies)
- Business and Technical skills (based on the "new" and "problem builder" definitions set out in Builder Bulletin 31 and Builder Bulletin 36 (Revised) – Rating Criteria for After Sales Service)
- Financial information (review of financial statements, credit rating and payment history)
- Project type (proposed freehold and condominium types)

Points out of a total of 100 will be assigned to these criteria as follows:

SIZE (0 - 10 Points) CONDOMINIUM Construction ²
Small (1 to 24 units per year) ¹	Medium (25 to 99 units per year) ¹	Large (100+ units per year) ¹
3 Points	6 Points	10 Points

- 1 Based on average annual possessions over the past 5 years. If no possessions, 0 points will be assigned. Economic considerations will be applied when appropriate.
- 2 Applicants building condominium Type A or B (see page 9) and building in excess of 49 units may seek review of points allotted for "size" with ONHWP's Licensing and Underwriting Department.

Or

SIZE (0 - 10 Points) FREEHOLD Construction
Small (1 to 19 units per year) ¹	Medium (20 to 49 units per year) ¹	Large (50+ units per year) ¹

Average	10 points	Average Skill	7 points
Below Average	0 points	Low Skill	0 points	0 points

- 1 The Business/Technical Skills score for new builders is based on the Assessment Rating when registered. On renewal, the Rating Criteria for After Sales Service will apply, if available (see Builder Bulletin 36).

FINANCIAL INFORMATION (0 - 50 Points)
High Risk ¹	Above Average Risk	Average Risk	Low Risk
0 - 9 points	10 - 15 points	16 - 35 points	36 - 50 points

Vendor/builders who obtain a High Risk Financial Information score are refused registration or revoked.

The points for a builder's financial information are based on a two-step analysis of the available information. Builders with assets in excess of $5 million or annual revenues in excess of $10 million are required to provide reviewed financial statements. ONHWP may waive this requirement where appropriate.

The determination of points is based on the following:

- ◆ Equity per unit (0 – 30 points)
- ◆ Financial assessment and/or credit history (0 – 20 points)

A detailed example of how each of these components or calculations would apply is presented on page 7 of this Bulletin.

Equity Per Unit

The points for equity are based on the extent to which the builder meets or exceeds the average suggested minimum equity (per unit) (see Fig. 1). This is determined by a detailed analysis of the builder's equity and the units, which the builder's financial capacity would need to support.

First, ONHWP analyzes the builder's equity and translates it to equity per unit. Builder equity consists of the equity of the registrant and that of individuals or companies providing an Indemnity. The units represent all homes the builder intends to sell, close or build during the coming year plus those that are under the first year of warranty at the time of assessment. Note: the homes under warranty are counted on a ¼ basis (i.e., 4 homes are counted as 1 unit).

The equity per unit is then compared to the average suggested minimum equity (per unit) for this builder. It is calculated using 3 important criteria: the number of units, the average sale price of all homes and a diminishing scale of equity requirement (as outlined in column 1 of Fig. 1). Minimum and maximum sale price caps are in place to ensure fairness for all builders.¹

Fig. 1

Suggested MINIMUM Equity (per unit)	% of Average Sale Price ¹
1 st to 5 th unit	15.0
6 th to 20 th unit	11.5
21 st to 50 th unit	9.5
51 st to 100 th unit	7.5
Greater than 100 units	4.5

¹ Homes sold for less than $100,000 will be counted as $100,000. Those sold for more than $250,000 will be counted as $250,000.

Once the builder's equity (per unit) and their suggested minimum equity (per unit) are calculated, the two are compared. The result is a ratio, which is measured against the following table (Fig. 2). This will determine the points the builder will receive for the equity component of this analysis.

An Indemnity is required if the registrant does not meet the Suggested Minimum Equity or has not been registered for 5 years or more. Note that the builder's equity consists of the equity of the registrant and that of individuals or companies providing an Indemnity. A builder who is unable to produce half the suggested minimum equity is refused registration or has it revoked. Any builder may substitute the requirement for an Indemnity by providing security of $20,000 to $40,000 per unit, depending on the amount of deposit to be taken. The amount would be reduced as the unit progresses through the warranty periods. This reduction would be determined on a case-by-case basis.

Ratio to Suggested Minimum Equity	Financial Points
Less than 0.50	0
0.50 to 0.74	6
0.75 to 0.99	9
1.00 to 1.24	12
1.25 to 1.49	15
1.50 to 1.74	18
1.75 to 2.00	21
2.00 to 2.99	24
3.00 to 4.99	27
5.00 plus	30

Financial Status and/or Credit History

Up to 20 points will be assigned to builders based on careful analysis of their financial statements and/or their credit history, although it may be a combination of both. Generally, builders who are corporations, joint ventures or partnerships will be assessed through careful analysis of their financial statements. Builders who are sole proprietors or who have personal indemnitors or guarantors will generally be assessed by their credit history.

To convert financial information into points ONHWP utilizes standard financial analysis tools (i.e., ratios) and/or the scores assigned by independent credit bureaus. Analysis of financial statements may include various financial tests to determine debt load, liquidity, profitability, sales growth and other changes in financial position or status. The result of ONHWP's analysis is available to the builder.

Here is an example of how the Risk Assessment scoring works:

Fig. 3

SAMPLE BUILDER PROFILE			Score
Type of Construction	Freehold
Size of Builder	Small	12 possessions per year (average of last 5 years)	3
Tenure of Builder	5 Years	Number of years registered with ONHWP	12
Business/ Technical Skills	Excellent Rating for After Sales Service		16
Financial Information	Calculated units ¹	+ 15 proposed units for year + 12 in 1 st year warranty (@25%) = 18 calculated units
	Average Sale price	$175,000
	Suggested Minimum Equity (SME)	First 5 units at 15% = $26,250 next 13 units at 11.5% = $20,125 = ((5x$26,250)+(13x$20,125))÷18 = average of $21,826 per unit
	Builder's equity	$250,000 divided by 18 units = $13,889
	Ratio to SME	$13,889 divided by $21,826 = 0.64
	Financial Points (for equity)	Ratio of 0.64 = 6 pts. (see Fig. 1)
	Financial Points (for other info) ²	Excellent credit history & strong financials = 20 pts.
Total Financial Score			26
Risk Assessment Score A freehold builder who scores between 51 and 75 points is rated average risk and is not required to post security (see page 8, Fig. 5).			57

- 1 The units represent all homes the builder intends to sell, close or build during the coming year plus those that are under the first year of warranty at the time of assessment. Note: the homes under warranty are counted on a ¼ basis (i.e., 4 homes are counted as 1 unit).
- 2 This may include various financial tests to determine credit history, debt load, liquidity, profitability, sales growth and other changes in financial position or status.

SECURITY REQUIREMENTS

Security Requirements for all vendor/builders are based on their total score for Size, Tenure, Business/Technical Skills and Financial Information. Depending on the unit type proposed, vendor/builders are assessed a security amount from $0 to $20,000 per unit or are refused registration or revoked based on their total score.

In order to ensure fairness and to match the risk of products to security requirements, the following categories will apply to all condominiums:

Fig. 4

Category	Description
Condo: Type A	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type B	Project has only Part 9 OBC construction requirements and is NOT a lot-line condominium.
Condo: Type C	Project has both; Part 9 and Part 3 OBC construction requirements.
Condo: Type D	Project has only Part 3 OBC construction requirements.

Note: If a project has a risk profile that is unique, meaning it does not reflect the characteristics of other projects in the identified category (Fig. 4) ONHWP will assign it to an appropriate category.

The following table outlines the security requirements for freehold and condominium builders:

Fig. 5

		SECURITY REQUIREMENTS (MAXIMUM 100 POINTS)
		Very High Risk	High Risk	Average Risk		Low Risk
		0 - 12 points	13 - 25 points ²	26 - 50 points ²	51 - 75 points ³	76 - 100 points ³
	FREEHOLD	Refuse/Revoke	$10,000 ⁵	$5,000 ⁴	$0	$0
CONDOMINIUM	Type A	Refuse/Revoke	$10,000	$5,000	$0	$0
	Type B	Refuse/Revoke	$15,000	$7,500	$2,500	$0
	Type C	Refuse/Revoke	$20,000	$10,000	$5,000	$0
	Type D	Refuse/Revoke	$20,000	$15,000	$7,500	$2,500

- 1 For condominiums this chart represents security requirements for warranty coverage; the greater of the value of the deposits taken or security to the level outlined in this chart is required to cover deposits if the DTA is not used.
- 2 Deposit Trust Agreement (DTA) is not an option for condominium builders included in this category. ONHWP may waive that stipulation where appropriate.
- 3 DTA is an available option for condominium builders included in these categories.
- 4 For freehold builders taking deposits in excess of $20,000, this number is increased to $10,000 per unit.
- 5 For freehold builders taking deposits in excess of $20,000, this number is increased to $15,000 per unit.

The requirements outlined in Fig. 5 cover all security required during the marketing, construction and warranty phases in freehold construction. For condominiums, Fig. 5 reflects only the construction and warranty phases. Security to fully cover the deposits taken by the builder, to a maximum of $20,000 per unit, is required for all condominiums (or use of the Deposit Trust Agreement).

BLANKET SECURITY

All security instruments are specific to a registration unless otherwise determined. This means that it covers any obligation of the registrant and is not specific to individual units. The concept is called blanket security and applies to both freehold and condominium builders. Additional blanketing of security to the umbrella level or to groups of registrations, which are not part of an umbrella but which have common principles, officers or directors will be considered by ONHWP, at the request of the registrant. Consolidating security in this manner may result in a reduction of the standard security requirements (up to 30%) if the builder is an average or low risk builder. Reductions will be considered on a case-by-case basis by ONHWP, who will base its decision on the builder's performance (scores) in each area of the risk assessment and the companies or projects included in the blanketed group.

Reviews for the release of blanket security for freehold builders will be done annually, at the time of renewal. It will be based on the ongoing risk assessment for the individual registration, associated group of companies or Umbrella Company. For individual condominium projects the release of warranty security will be tied to the Builder Bulletin 19 Final Report (as outlined in Builder Bulletin 19) or to the end of the first year warranty period (as outlined in Builder Bulletin 38).

COLLATERAL SECURITY

Mortgages are an acceptable form of security, provided the builder is assessed as a low risk builder and the asset under consideration meets all the requirements of ONHWP collateral security terms. All costs for establishing this security will be assumed by the builder.

Assets, which qualify for collateral security, must be real property. Assets like automobiles, equipment or recreational vehicles are NOT acceptable assets for collateral security.

ONHWP reserves the right to limit this option in any specific instance. Applicants interested in this option must contact ONHWP's Licensing & Underwriting Department for further details.

CONDOMINIUM PROJECTS

The following chart outlines ONHWP's requirements for the taking of security for condominium projects:

Deadline <ul style="list-style-type: none">• At the start of the Project's marketing (the taking of deposits and/or the signing of Agreements of Purchase and Sale) the vendor/builders must submit either a DTA or standard security.

¹ Fairness and accuracy are paramount to ONHWP's underwriting process. Tenure is an important consideration. To this extent ONHWP will apply discretion where required to ensure that the requirements properly reflect the underwriting risk present in each assessment.

Deposit Trust Agreement and Escrow Agents

A Deposit Trust Agreement (DTA) is an agreement between the vendor/builder, the escrow agent and ONHWP that sets out how purchasers' deposits will be held in trust. The escrow agent administers the trust.

DTAs are available to condominium builders except those with overall Risk Assessment points of 50 points or less. ONHWP may waive this stipulation where appropriate. ONHWP will advise condominium builders if they qualify for a DTA and will provide the appropriate documentation for the builder to complete.

The DTA must be in place before the taking of deposits and/or the signing of Agreements of Purchase and Sale. In order to enter into a DTA a vendor/builder must select an escrow agent (usually a law firm) which is comprised of 3 partners or more or which meets ONHWP's requirements for insurance of firms acting as an escrow agent. The escrow agent reports to ONHWP but is paid by the vendor/builder.

All monies received (up to $20,000 per unit) by the vendor/builder from the purchase under an Agreement of Purchase and Sale must be held in trust by the escrow agent. All these monies must be made payable to the escrow agent in trust. This requirement must be set out in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.

Vendor/builders must comply with the Condominium Act (as amended from time to time) by placing excess deposits over $20,000 per unit in either:

- a separate trust account, or
- the trust account administered by the escrow agent, or
- obtain excess deposit insurance

Any excess deposits over $20,000 per unit, which have been placed in the trust account administered by the escrow agent, will only be released once the agent has received proof that Excess Condominium Deposit Insurance has been obtained or that it will be held in trust.

Vendor/builders and escrow agents will each submit monthly reports to ONHWP 15 (fifteen) business days after month end. ONHWP may waive this condition where appropriate. The reports will detail the following information for the preceding month:

- unit number
- purchaser(s) name(s)
- date of Agreement of Purchase and Sale
- date and amount of each deposit
- date and amount of each deposit refunded, if applicable. (Deposits refunded by the escrow agent within the same month should appear as an inflow or outflow).
- total amount of deposits received to-date
- total amount of deposits required under Agreement(s) of Purchase and Sale
- total units sold in the month
- total unit sales terminated in the month
- total net unit sales to-date
- grand total deposits received to-date and remitted to the escrow agent

Two statutory declarations must accompany the vendor/builder's monthly report. One statutory declaration made by the vendor/builder's senior officer will state the information included in the report is true. All refunds to purchasers made prior to the delivery of funds to the escrow agent must be noted in the vendor/builder's monthly report and confirmed in the statutory declaration. The second statutory declaration made by the vendor/builder's lawyer will state that he or she has no knowledge of any facts that would make the senior officer's declaration untrue.

The escrow agent must receive all deposits within 15 (fifteen) business days after they are received by the vendor/builder. The escrow agent may refund deposits, without authorization from ONHWP, on receiving written direction from the vendor/builder and a Mutual Release and Termination Agreement signed by both the purchaser(s) and the vendor/builder. A Mutual Release and Termination Agreement is not required for purchaser(s) who rescind their Agreement of Purchase and Sale within the ten-day cooling off period granted by the Condominium Act (as amended from time to time).

Conversion of DTA to Standard Security

The DTA may be converted at any point to one of the forms of standard security listed below. All units must be enrolled and the enrolment fees paid before construction begins.

The amount of security required at the time of conversion will be the greater of:

1. the average deposit per unit required under the signed Agreements of Purchase and Sale and not including monies paid at interim occupancy, or
2. the security amount per unit determined by Risk Assessment. This amount will not exceed $20,000 per unit. The security will remain in place during the construction period and will be available initially for all the vendor/builders' obligations, in addition to deposit and warranty liability.

Standard Security

Standard security can be posted as follows:

- a) Irrevocable Letter of Credit (ONHWP format)
- b) Surety Bond (ONHWP format)
- c) Letter of Guarantee (ONHWP format)
- d) Cash or certified cheque
- e) Other acceptable security as required by the Registrar

Vendor/builders who either do not wish to use a DTA or who do not qualify for a DTA must post one of the above forms of standard security at the start of marketing (i.e., the taking of deposits and/or the signing of Agreements of Purchase and Sale). The security amount per unit is the greater of the average deposit per unit or the amount determined by Risk Assessment.

Release of Security

The security amount per unit determined by Risk Assessment compared to the average or maximum deposit per unit will determine how security is released.

The following example sets out how security is released if the security amount assessed per unit is greater than the average deposit per unit taken:

If the security amount assessed is $15,000 per unit and the average deposit per unit is $5,000 then the full security amount of $15,000 per unit will remain in place to cover warranty claims.

The following example sets out how security is released if the security amount assessed per unit is less than the average deposit per unit taken:

If the security amount assessed is $5,000 per unit and the average deposit per unit is $15,000, then $10,000 per unit will be released following condominium registration, and title transfer. The remaining $5,000 per unit will be available for use against warranty obligations. Once 50% of the available units are closed (i.e., title transfer) or 60 days after registration of the condominium corporation, the remainder of the difference between the Risk Assessment amount and the average deposit amount will be released for all units. Whichever event occurs first shall initiate the release of the security, provided there are no outstanding closing or other issues with the project.

Release Timelines (Condominiums - Types A & B) (Including Builder Bulletin 38 Projects)

Security, as determined by Fig. 5, for condominium Types A and B will remain in place for one year after the condominium has been registered unless the condominium corporation has submitted an acceptable pre-approved Bulletin 19-type audit and all issues have been resolved to the satisfaction of ONHWP. If all issues are resolved, security will be released within 45 days of the acceptance of the Bulletin 19-type audit or the end of the first year after condo registration. If issues remain unresolved security will remain in place for longer, as determined by the Registrar.

Release Timelines for Builder Bulletin 19 Projects (Condominiums - Types C & D)

Security related to Builder Bulletin 19 projects will remain in place until the Builder Bulletin 19 Final Report has been received and accepted by ONHWP. ONHWP will then release security as outlined in Builder Bulletin 19.

Cancelled Condominium Projects

The following documentation is required for the termination of the DTA or the release of security on cancelled condominium projects:

- a) Statutory Declaration by the vendor/builder that all deposits have been refunded
- b) Mutual Release and Termination Agreements signed by each purchaser and the vendor/builder (ONHWP format)
- c) Statutory Declaration from the escrow agent confirming that all deposits have been refunded under the DTA
- d) Return of any unused ONHWP Deposit Receipts for unsold units
- e) Signed Condition of Registration letter by the vendor/builder stating that he or she will not sell or construct condominium units without ONHWP's knowledge and approval

If enrolment fees are refunded, ONHWP will retain an administration fee of $50 per enrolment to a maximum of $1,000 per project, plus applicable tax.

SECURITY REQUIREMENTS FOR FREEHOLD UNITS
Security Requirements are Determined <ul style="list-style-type: none">• On initial registration• Annually on renewal of registration• When there is a change in principals or history
Types of Security <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Standard blanket security
Standard Security <ul style="list-style-type: none">• All vendor/builders must post standard security equal to the security amount per unit as determined by Risk Assessment
Deadline <ul style="list-style-type: none">• The requirement for Security will be determined upon registration or renewal of the builder. The full required security must be posted as a condition of registration or renewal if the builder is determined to be high risk or very high risk. It may be phased over the course of the year if the builder falls into the average risk category.

Amount of Security

Security required will not exceed $15,000 per unit based on Risk Assessment (see Risk Assessment for all Builders on page 3) and is applicable to any obligations of the builder. However, security assessments for private sewage disposal systems and Unenrolled Homes may increase this requirement (see Private Sewage Disposal Systems on page 16 and Unenrolled Homes on page 16).

Standard Blanket Security

Standard blanket security can be posted as follows:

- a) Irrevocable Letter of Credit (ONHWP format)
- b) Surety Bond (ONHWP format)
- c) Letter of Guarantee (ONHWP format)
- d) Cash or certified cheque
- e) Other acceptable security as required by the Registrar

Release of Security

Security will remain in place for one year after the date of possession and be released within 45 days of this date if all issues are resolved or depending on the Risk Assessment, vendor/builder complaint history and other factors, ONHWP may determine an appropriate time to release security before the first year anniversary of the date of possession.

At the builder's renewal date, ONHWP will undertake a review of the builder's security requirement. If there are no outstanding issues and the builder's security exceeds the blanket security requirements, all excess security will be released by ONHWP within 45 days of the completed renewal.

Cancelled Freehold Projects

The following documentation is required for the release of security on cancelled freehold projects:

- a) Statutory Declaration by the vendor/builder that all deposits have been refunded
- b) Mutual Release and Termination Agreements signed by purchasers and the vendor/builder
- c) Copies of the front and back of negotiated refund cheques paid by the vendor/builder to all purchasers

If enrolment fees are refunded, ONHWP will retain an administration fee of $50 per enrolment, plus applicable tax.

PRIVATE SE WAGE DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

Vendor/builders may be required to post security of $5,000 per unit for all homes enrolled with a private sewage disposal system, in addition to any other security requirements. Consult Builder Bulletin 33 for complete details.

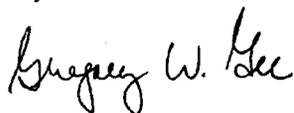

UNENROLLED HOMES

Unenrolled homes are defined as those homes on which the construction has begun before the unit was enrolled. This is in direct violation of the requirements of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (as amended from time to time). A builder must be registered to apply for the building permit and homes must be enrolled forthwith upon the issuance of a building permit. Unenrolled homes are subject to security of $5,000 per unit in addition to any other security requirement. This additional security will not be released prior to the second anniversary of the date of possession. This security is levied because such activity is illegal and as such has prevented ONHWP from evaluating the builder and the project before construction.

FOR MORE INFORMATION

We encourage you to become familiar with the terms and conditions of registration and enrolment early in your project planning process. In this way ONHWP will be able to provide you with the highest level of service.

If you have any questions regarding security requirements, please contact the Licensing & Underwriting Department at (416) 229-9200 or toll free at 1-800-668-0124 or the ONHWP Office in your area. A list of offices is included on the back of this Bulletin.

ENROLMENT FEES SUBJECT TO 8 PER CENT RETAIL SALES TAX

Effective Date: July 1, 1993

As announced by Floyd Laughren, Minister of Finance, in the Ontario Budget of May 19, 1993, and as set out in the amendments to the Retail Sales Act (Bill 30) introduced on June 1, 1993:

Every person who carries on business in Ontario and is required to contribute to an insurance scheme or a compensation fund established by or under any Act of the Parliament of Canada or the Legislature of Ontario shall pay a Retail Sales Tax at the rate of 8 per cent of the premium payable.

Since all builders of new homes built for sale are required to pay an enrolment or re-enrolment fee (or premium) for each unit enrolled in the Ontario New Home Warranty Program, all fees submitted to the Ontario New Home Warranty Program on or after July 1, 1993, must include Retail Sales Tax.

The following example shows how the total enrolment fee will be calculated for a new home with a purchase price of $200,000.

Base enrolment fee:	$$2/$1,000 \times $200,000$	$400.
GST	$7\% \times $400.$	$28.
PST	$8\% \times $400.$	$32.
TOTAL ENROLMENT FEE		$460.

EXPANDED REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS

Effective: October 1, 1993

Effective October 1, 1993, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program is implementing expanded registration requirements for new and re-entering builders/vendors. The expanded registration requirements, composed of an interview and a construction technical test, have been developed as part of ONHWP's prevention strategy to help minimize claims in a new builder's first years of registration.

As a self-funding, non-profit corporation, the Warranty Program must exercise due diligence in assessing the risk when registering new applicants. The purpose of the expanded review is not to exclude applicants from residential construction but to know the business and construction capabilities of the applicant better so that ONHWP can provide the new builder or vendor with technical training and support.

The expanded registration requirements are mandatory. Failure to comply with either a request for an interview or a construction technical test will result in the Registrar issuing a Notice of Proposal to Refuse Registration.

Note: The expanded registration procedure does NOT apply to:

- registered builders registering another company
- builders in good standing who have canceled or allowed their registration to lapse within the previous three years

Applicant Criteria

- new applicants who have never registered with the Program
- applicants whose registration has been expired for three years or more
- previously-registered applicants who have unsettled claims outstanding
- applicants who have been previously refused or revoked by the Registrar but have satisfied the Program that their circumstances have changed materially
- applicants who are re-registering and changing their status from "Vendor Only" to "Vendor/Builder", and
- previously-registered applicants who have made a significant change in principals, including those responsible for construction or the day-to-day operations of the company

What's Involved

An interview and a construction technical test have been developed to obtain more information on the organization and business plans of companies who fall into any of the above categories as well as to evaluate construction practices and problem solving skills.

Interview

In addition to completing the application form and providing the required documentation, the Regional Client Services Representative will meet with a principal holding a decision-making position in the applicant company to discuss the firm's business and construction experience, marketing strategy, contractual documents, customer service plan and anticipated construction.

During the interview the Client Services Representative will also outline the obligations of the applicant under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and the consequences and benefits of meeting those obligations. Regional staff will also introduce the types of technical support that are available to the new builder or vendor.

Technical Test

The construction technical test, based on Part 9 of the Ontario Building Code, will be completed by the principal or most senior employee directly supervising construction. The test is comprised of 30 multiple choice questions covering the most common and costly ONHWP claim defects and the most common construction problems that builders experience. Both the Ontario Building Code and the Code and Construction Guide for Housing may be referred to during the test.

Terms And Conditions of Registration

The Builder Services Department will continue to perform a financial and document analysis and a review of past performance and linkages with other companies, if appropriate, prior to the registration of an applicant.

The results of these two new evaluations, the business skills review (interview) and the technical review (test), will be considered along with the financial analysis and review of past performance to determine the appropriate terms and conditions of registration. These may include security requirements, enrolment limitations and a targeted inspection plan and successful completion of an approved course or courses of study. See Builder Bulletin 31 for more information about targeted inspection.

TARGETED INSPECTION PROGRAM

Effective: October 1, 1993

Effective October 1, 1993, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program will be implementing the Targeted Inspection Program to provide on-site technical coaching and training at benchmark stages of construction to help new and problem builders make informed decisions on good construction practice.

Developed as an element of ONHWP's prevention strategy, the focus of the Targeted Inspection Program is not as much on the project as it is on the builder's performance over the long term. It enables ONHWP both to monitor and assess the technical competence of new builders joining the Program and to monitor and correct the construction practices of problem builders.

The Targeted Inspection Program is mandatory for new and problem builders. In addition to the criteria listed below, any builder may be considered a problem builder at the discretion of the Registrar. Failure to comply with Targeted Inspection Program requirements will result in the Registrar issuing a Notice of Proposal to Refuse or Revoke Registration.

Note: The Targeted Inspection Program does not apply to high-rise condominium projects required to meet the provisions of Builder Bulletin 19.

What's Involved

Based on the information gained through the expanded registration interview and construction technical test (see Builder Bulletin 30), a Client Services Representative may recommend that a Targeted Inspection Plan be one of the terms and conditions of registration for a new or re-entering builder. If an inspection plan is required the applicant will receive notification from the Registrar. Some new builders will be exempt because they have demonstrated a high level of business skill and construction knowledge in their interviews and technical tests. A Technical Representative will initiate the Inspection Plan and will either conduct the inspections personally or hire a fee for service inspector. Targeted Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for a specific unit are payable at the time of its enrolment.

For problem builders, the Targeted Inspection Plan development process is more complex. The Technical Representative will thoroughly research and analyze the builder's file to pinpoint past performance issues. An appropriate inspection plan will be implemented or, in some cases, custom designed, depending on the builder's past performance. Participation in the Targeted Inspection Program becomes an amendment to the terms and conditions of registration. The inspection plan will begin on the next enrolment submitted to ONHWP or, if a number of enrolments has been submitted but construction not yet begun, the next home to be built. The Regional Manager and Technical Representative will meet with the builder to outline the reasons for the implementation and to review the inspection plan requirements. Inspections will be conducted by the Technical Representative.

In all instances, ONHWP will make every effort to respond within 24 hours to inspection or re-inspection requests. However, responsibility lies with the builder to ensure that staff are present on-site at the pre-arranged time. If ONHWP fails to meet the appointment the fee for that inspection will be waived or applied against an inspection at a later time.

Definition of NEW Builder

- new applicants who have never registered with the Program
- applicants whose registration has been expired for three years or more
- previously-registered applicants who have unsettled claims outstanding
- applicants who have been previously refused or revoked by the Registrar but have satisfied the Program that their circumstances have changed materially
- applicants who are re-registering and changing their status from "Vendor Only" to "Vendor/Builder", and
- previously-registered applicants who have made a significant change in principals, including those responsible for construction or the day-to-day operations of the company

Definition of Problem Builder

Builders whose performance with ONHWP during the previous 12 months demonstrates one or more of the following are classified as problem builders:

- Any paid warranty claim. Regional Managers will have the discretionary power to deal with certain inequitable situations, e.g., if a homeowner has refused an attempt by the builder, and, with the builder's agreement, ONHWP makes the repair and charges back the builder.
- Unacceptable ratio of chargeable conciliations to possessions using the rating system in the Home Buyer's Guide to After Sales Service. The current formula for the "below average" rating, i.e., a ratio of two or more chargeable conciliations in 25 possessions or fewer will also apply to builders who are not rated in the Home Buyer's Guide.

The Registrar may target any builder as a problem builder if, for example, there is an unacceptable ratio of complaints to possessions or if a builder receives consistently unfavourable results in field inspections carried out by ONHWP staff.

Inspection Plans

Building on the experience of the Mandatory Inspection Program, targeted inspections will focus on ONHWP's most costly and frequent claims.

Inspections can be held at the five key stages in the construction process: excavation, foundation, framing, prior to drywall and completion.

Depending on the builder's level of technical knowledge or track record with ONHWP, regional staff will select one of the following four levels of inspection:

Level	Number	Stages
Minimum	3 Inspections 2 Homes	1. Foundation

		<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 2. Prior to drywall 3. Completion
Moderate	4 In 3 Homes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Excavation 2. Foundation 3. Prior to drywall 4. Completion
Maximum	5 In 3 Homes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Excavation 2. Foundation 3. Prior to drywall 4. Completion
Custom	1 to 5 2 to 5 Homes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Designed to address specific concerns based on builder's claims history.

Timing of Inspections

The following guidelines have been established for the timing of the inspection at each benchmark stage in the construction process:

Stage	Timing
Excavation	After footing formwork completed but prior to pouring concrete.
Foundation	Prior to backfill, with dampproofing applied.
Framing	After roof framing complete and sheathing installed but prior to insulation and/or vapour barrier being installed.
Prior to drywall	Prior to drywall being applied but with insulation and air/vapour barrier installed.
Completion	When the home is ready for occupancy and exterior grading has been completed.

Note: Incomplete seasonal work is exempted from the completion inspection.

Inspections

The single most important purpose of the Targeted Inspection Program is the teaching or coaching opportunity that the inspection provides. The Technical Representative, or other trained inspector, will use the review to provide appropriate technical information for the builder to make an informed decision on good building practices. In other words, the inspector focuses on the "builder" not the "unit" for the long-term improvement of the builder's performance.

Each inspection has its own checklist which is based on ONHWP's claims experience and includes the most common construction defects. By keeping track of recurring defects ONHWP will be able to revise the checklists and adjust the focus of the inspections accordingly.

Checklists will also include appropriate diagrams from the Code and Construction Guide for Housing to help the inspector explain good construction practice to the builder, as well reference the Ontario Building Code (OBC). Although warranty defects are not always specific OBC infractions, they may have their origins there. Copies of the checklists will be distributed to the builder's site representative and to the person managing the construction supervision.

When the builder's construction performance improves to an appropriate level, targeted inspections will be discontinued. If a problem builder fails to improve, the documentation from the targeted inspections will be added to the case for revocation of registration.

Fee Structure

The Targeted Inspection Plan will be stipulated as a term and condition of registration. Targeted Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for a specific unit are payable at the time of its enrolment, or, will be invoiced if units are already enrolled but construction has not yet begun. GST must be added to the fees.

The following chart sets out the Targeted Inspection Fees for new and problem builders:

Builder Category	Fee/Inspection	Plan	Number of Inspections	Fee/Home (GST)	Number of Houses	Total Inspection Fees
New Builder
	$125.	Minimum	3	$375.	2	$750.
	$125.	Moderate	4	$500.	3	$1,500.
	$125.	Maximum	5	$625.	3	$1,875.
Problem Builder
	$225.	Minimum	3	$675.	2	$1,350.
	$225.	Moderate	4	$900.	3	$2,700.
	$225.	Maximum	5	$1,125.	3	$5,625.

Targeted Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for a specific unit are payable at the time of its enrolment, or, will be invoiced if units are already enrolled but construction has not yet begun. GST must be added to the fees.

Notes

If an Inspection Plan is required, a new applicant will receive notification from the Registrar. Some new builders will be exempt because they have demonstrated a high level of business skill and construction knowledge in their interviews and technical tests. (See Builder Bulletin 30 for new applicant registration requirements.)

Once an Inspection Plan is required for either a new or problem builder, ONHWP will make every effort to respond within 24 hours to inspection or re-inspection requests. However, responsibility lies with the builder to ensure that staff are present on-site at the pre-arranged time. If ONHWP fails to meet the appointment the fee for that inspection will be waived or applied against an inspection at a later time.

CAP LIABILITY ON PRIVATE SEWAGE DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

Effective July 1, 1993

Effective July 1, 1993, private sewage disposal systems claims, payable by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) are limited to a maximum of $25,000 on new homes enrolled on or after that date. This limit applies only to claims paid by ONHWP and does not limit the liability of any other party to the homeowner.

The $25,000 cap is subject to other warranty limits and is included in the overall maximum limit of $100,000 per home. The limit was set at $25,000 based on the fact that ONHWP's liability is restricted to the repair of defects of the system supplied by the builder and is not intended to address common problems found in subdivisions and larger developments. According to past claims experience, this limit is more than sufficient to compensate or to repair a defective private sewage disposal system effectively.

Section 14 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act states that a homeowner is entitled to be paid by ONHWP the amount of the damages they have suffered, subject to limits fixed by the corporation's regulations. ONHWP's Board of Directors may, by by-law, set claims limits.

In April, 1993, the Board of Directors passed a by-law, later filed as Ontario Regulation 334/93, capping the liability of private sewage disposal systems claims to $25,000 on new homes enrolled on, or after, July 1, 1993.

BUILDER BULLETIN 33 (Revision 3)

CERTIFICATION OF PRIVATE SEWAGE DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

Effective: December 1, 1999

This bulletin replaces Builder Bulletin 33 (Revised) and its attachments that were in effect beginning September 15, 1996.

Here's What This Bulletin Is About

Builders/vendors who enrol homes with private sewage disposal systems on or after September 15, 1996 must submit proof that the design and installation have been certified by a qualified professional if:

- the builder/vendor is building on a lot under two acres and has had an ONHWP claim on a private sewage disposal system within the past three years
- the builder/vendor is building on a lot under two acres in Halton, Ottawa-Carleton, Peel or Wellington (counties or regions where ONHWP has had an above average claim record over the past five years)

Certification will include but may not be limited to completion of:

- the Certificate of Professional Design and Commitment, Forms A-1 and A-2, prior to issue of a building permit
- the Certificate of Professional Field Review and Compliance, Forms B-1 and B-2, completed before occupancy

If certification is required then:

- security required is a minimum of $5,000 per unit
- security will be released as soon as satisfactory proof of certification on ONHWP forms has been received

These requirements do not limit the Registrar's authority to evaluate and decide on individual situations.

Here's What Has Changed

- Bodies to approve and inspect private sewage disposal systems have changed under Ontario provincial legislation. The attached forms (A1, A2, B1, B2) have been amended to reflect the changes in reporting requirements by quoting the proper legislation.

This is a capsule version of the bulletin's requirements for convenience only. Read the details on the following pages for full information to meet the bulletin's requirements.

Background

The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) has been monitoring the claims history of private sewage disposal systems for several years. Based on a review of claims from 1990 to 1995, Builder Bulletin 33 was revised to require Private Sewage Disposal System Certification, prepared and certified by a qualified professional depending on the following factors:

- builder/vendor performance
- lot size
- claims record in the geographic location

Since Private Sewage Disposal System Certification was implemented in 1994 there has been an improvement in the design and installation of these systems in many parts of Ontario, based on ONHWP's claims data. Where problems continue to occur their causes could be prevented. In some cases the systems were designed and installed improperly; in others, inaccurate soils information was responsible. Overall, however, claims frequency and costs have declined since the bulletin's implementation.

The bulletin was revised to target the problematic conditions and factors that continue to lead to claims. In revising Builder Bulletin 33 ONHWP continues to take the necessary steps to protect the guarantee fund while balancing the entrepreneurial needs of the home building industry with consumer protection rights and the need for environmental protection.

Private Sewage Disposal System Certification

From September 15, 1996, homes or projects enrolled which incorporate a private sewage disposal system may be required to have Private Sewage Disposal System Certification, prepared and certified by a qualified professional according to the criteria outlined on page 3 of this bulletin.

Builder/vendors shall provide proof of certification of the design and installation of private sewage disposal systems and post security for homes enrolled with private sewage disposal systems under the following conditions:

1. Any builder/vendor who has had a claim on a private sewage disposal system during the previous three-year period is required to provide proof of certification and security equal to a minimum of $5,000 per unit when building on lots under two acres anywhere in the province. The security will be released once ONHWP receives duly completed Private Sewage Disposal System Certification.
1. Any builder/vendor who is building a home on a lot under two acres in counties where ONHWP has had claims above the average failure rate during the previous five-year period is required to provide proof of certification and security equal to a minimum of $5,000 per unit. The security will be released once ONHWP receives duly completed Private Sewage Disposal System Certification. Currently, this affects only homes on lots under two acres enrolled in the regions of Ottawa-Carleton, Peel, Halton and Wellington.

Private Sewage Disposal System Certification is not required for homes enrolled on lots two acres or larger because current ONHWP data indicate failures leading to claims are rare.

These criteria are guidelines and do not limit the authority of the Registrar to evaluate and decide on individual situations.

Certification Process

Certification will include but may not be limited to the Certificate of Professional Design and Commitment for Field Review of Private Sewage Disposal Systems (Forms A-1, A-2) and the Certificate of Professional Field Review and Compliance of Private Sewage Disposal Systems (Forms B-1, B-2). These forms are attached for your reference. Additional copies are available from the ONHWP Office in your area. A list of ONHWP Offices is included on the back of this bulletin.

Criteria Considerations

The design and installation of the private sewage disposal system will take into consideration the following criteria:

- conditions of all native and imported soils (including backfill) to be used for the private sewage bed
- characteristics of the subgrade of the proposed system
- size and number of units to be serviced by the system
- all other burdens on the system that may result from or are caused by ancillary services
- local hydrogeological and ground water conditions

Design and installation of the private sewage disposal system must be consistent with the expected waste requirements of all units serviced by the system, as set out in the Building Code Act, 1992 and its Regulations (O. Reg. 403/97, as amended by O. Reg. 102/98, 122/98, 152/99, 278/99), any amendments*, and all other applicable standards.

* It is the policy of ONHWP to recognize the standard in place at the time of approval by the appropriate jurisdiction although actual construction may take place at a later date when standards may have changed.

The Certificate of Professional Design and Commitment for Field Review of Private Sewage Disposal Systems (Forms A-1, A-2) must be completed prior to the issue of a building permit and submitted with the enrolment of the home to the Licensing and Underwriting Department at ONHWP's head office.

The Certificate of Professional Field Review and Compliance of Private Sewage Disposal Systems (Forms B-1, B-2) must be completed before occupancy of the dwelling and issue of the Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP) and submitted immediately to the ONHWP Regional Office.

Description of Qualified Professional

ONHWP will accept Private Sewage Disposal System Certification completed and certified by:

- a. an Ontario-licensed Professional Engineer with professional liability insurance in accordance with the requirements of the Professional Engineers Act (a minimum of $250,000);

or

- b. only in remote areas where it can be proven that a Professional Engineer cannot be readily or economically contracted by the builder/vendor:

the local or regional health department or the conservation authority ; or the regional office of the Ministry of the Environment and Energy (only where the local or regional health department or the conservation authority has not assumed the authority of design and installation approval of private sewage disposal systems).

The regional managers for ONHWP's Northeast and Northwest Regions shall have discretion to accept certification for Northern Ontario.

Upon receipt of a properly completed Certification, ONHWP will release any security being held for potential claim exposure related to the Project.

NEW COMBINED CCP/WARRANTY CERTIFICATES FOR FREEHOLD AND CONDOMINIUM

Effective: June 1, 1994

Effective June 1, 1994, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program is instituting a combined Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP) and Warranty Certificate for freehold and condominium units. The Confirmation of Enrolment Form will no longer be used as of that date. No change has been made to the Warranty Certificate for condominium common elements.

The combined form has been developed to facilitate the delivery of the Warranty Certificate to homeowners. Completed by the purchaser and the builder at the pre-delivery inspection, builders are asked to give the copy of the form which includes the Warranty Certificate to the homeowner after the CCP has been signed. A simple-language explanation of warranty coverage is included on the reverse side of the form. A sample photocopy is attached for your reference.

Builders will receive the new combined form after ONHWP has received the Enrolment Form and fees for each unit. Builders are still required to submit a copy of the CCP to ONHWP within 15 days from the date of possession.

New Form Features

The combined form contains important information such as enrolment details and warranty coverage. It also permits corrections to be made to the address or legal description of the home.

To help clarify the condition of the home at delivery, the comments section of the form has been made more specific to highlight Unfinished Work and Surface Defects Not Accepted by Owner(s). Both builders and homeowners can detail work to be completed in the Unfinished Work section. Surface defects that will be remedied by the builder should be listed in the Surface Defects Not Accepted by Owner(s) section. Examples of information to be included in the Other Comments section are items that are accepted as is and items for which there has been an adjustment to the sale price of the unit or for which other consideration has been made.

Purchasers should be reminded that items listed on the CCP do not constitute a formal complaint. Also, home buyers do not lose warranty coverage if they have not listed all deficiencies on the CCP. They must report complaints in writing to both the builder/vendor and ONHWP within the warranty time period.

BUILDER BULLETIN 35

REGISTRATION AND ENROLMENT OF HIGH-RISE AND LOW-RISE CONDOMINIUM PROJECTS

Builder Bulletin 35 has been prepared to ensure that condominium developers are fully aware of typical terms and conditions of registration and enrolment of both high-rise and low-rise condominium projects.

Vendor/Builder Registration Requirements

Vendor/builders should allow between four to six weeks for their Registration to be processed. The following is an outline of typical registration requirements for condominium projects:

- Completed Application and registration fee
- Vendor/Builder Agreement (2 copies)
- Bank or Trust Company Reference Letter
- Condominium General Review Form
- Financial Information
 - Financial Statements
 - Personal Guarantee and Notarized Net Worth Statement
 - Corporate Guarantee
 - Equity Requirements: Financial information must meet ONHWP's urban or rural equity requirements
- Contract Between the Vendor and Builder, if applicable
- Security ($20,000 per proposed unit) submitted 30 days prior to the taking of deposits or the execution of Agreements of Purchase and Sale

Enrolment Requirements

- The Condominium Enrolment Form and enrolment fees must be received 30 days prior to the commencement of construction. However, security must be posted prior to the taking of deposits or the execution of Agreements of Purchase and Sale. This typically takes place concurrently with vendor/builder registration.
- Deposit receipts will be issued with the Certificates of Completion and Possession for individual units and the common elements.
- Enrolment need not take place until 30 days prior to the commencement of construction.

NOTE: When calculating the enrolment fee, do not include GST in the estimated sale price. GST is, however, included in the total enrolment fee calculation. Please refer to Enrolment Fee Calculation Tables included in Builder Bulletin 27 (Revised).

BUILDER BULLETIN 36 (Revised)

RATING CRITERIA FOR AFTER SALES SERVICE

Effective April 2, 2003 ONHWP is suspending the Builder Ratings program. There are no Builder Ratings (e.g., "Excellent") for 2003 and until further notice. Builder Bulletin 36 is suspended, except for the definitions section. We will continue to collect data related to chargeable conciliations (as defined in Bulletin 36) for internal purposes, to be used in determining builders' terms and conditions of registration (e.g., security requirements under Builder Bulletin 28).

Effective: January 01, 2000

This bulletin replaces Builder Bulletin (36 Revised) issued and effective September 03, 1996

BACKGROUND

Builder Bulletin 36 (Revised) sets out the rating criteria for after sales service. In 1999, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) consulted with the home building industry and consumer groups concerning ways to improve the rating system.

Particular attention was given to devising a better way to recognize builders with a long-term history of Excellent ratings for after sales service. ONHWP supports these builders/vendors with advertising materials to help them promote their success. This continues to be an easy and popular way to help consumers choose a builder and to promote the purchase of a new home.

WHAT HAS CHANGED?

Beginning in 2000, ONHWP will no longer publish a printed version of the Home Buyer's Guide to After Sales Service. Rather, ratings will be available from our web site at www.newhome.on.ca and through a toll free telephone service.

Also beginning in 2000, ONHWP will recognize the builder/vendor's rating history by featuring their total consecutive years of Excellent ratings on the web site, on their Certificate of Excellence and through the toll free telephone service. This will replace the previous practice whereby builders who maintained an Excellent rating for five or ten years were recognized with a one-star or two-star Seal of Excellence respectively. In addition, the distinctive symbol for zero chargeable conciliations is being dropped. Consequently, the title of this bulletin has been changed to Rating Criteria for After Sales Service.

This is a capsule version of the bulletin's requirements for convenience only. Read the details on the following pages for full information to meet the bulletin's requirements.

RATING CRITERIA FOR AFTER SALES SERVICE

Ratings will continue to be based on the ratio of chargeable conciliations to possessions (see Definitions section). Delayed closing and occupancy claims and major structural defect claims were phased into the ratings beginning in 1997. Chargeable conciliations relate only to the possessions of the three-year rating period. For example, a chargeable conciliation which occurred during the 1996 to 1998 rating period but related to a possession in 1995, did not affect a builder's rating in the 1999 Home Buyer's Guide to After Sales Service since it did not relate to a possession accumulated in the three-year rating period.

All active builders/vendors, i.e., those who have had at least one possession during the three-year rating period are rated. Registered builders/vendors with no possessions in the three-year rating period are given a Rating Pending notation if they had homes enrolled or Not Rated if they had no enrolments and no possessions.

Builders/Vendors Registered for Less than 36 Months

Active builders/vendors who have been registered for less than 36 months will be rated New unless their ratio of chargeable conciliations to possessions classifies them as Below Average.

Builders/Vendors will have a Below Average rating if they have:

- Fewer than 25 possessions and two or more chargeable conciliations or
- 25 or more possessions and more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25 possessions.

Here's how the rating system works:

Ratings For Builders/Vendors Registered Less Than 36 Months
Number of Chargeable Conciliations	Number of Possessions 1 to 24
0 or 1	New
2 or more	Below Average
Number of Chargeable Conciliations	Number of Possessions 25 or More
0	New
No more than 1 Chargeable for every 25 possessions	New
More than 1 Chargeable for every 25 possessions	Below Average

For example, a builder/vendor who has been registered less than 36 months and has:

- 30 possessions and two chargeable conciliations will have a Below Average rating (more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25 or more possessions)
- 55 possessions and two chargeable conciliations will have a New rating (no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25 or more possessions)
- 55 possessions and three chargeable conciliations will have a Below Average rating (more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25 or more possessions)

Builders/Vendors Registered for 36 Months or More

The rating for builders/vendors registered for 36 months or more is grouped according to the number of possessions accumulated during the three-year rating period.

Ratings for active builders/vendors are assigned according to the following levels of builder performance:

25 or More Possessions:

Excellent: no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 75 possessions

Above Average: no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 50-74 possessions

Good: no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25-49 possessions

Below Average: more than one chargeable conciliation for every 25 possessions

Fewer Than 25 Possessions:

Low volume builders/vendors registered for 36 months or more and with between three and nine possessions can achieve a better than Good rating as follows:

Excellent: registered for at least five years with no chargeable conciliations over the past three years and a minimum of three possessions spread over at least two years out of the three-year rating period

Above Average: registered between three and five years with no chargeable conciliations over the past three years and a minimum of three possessions spread over at least two years out of the three-year rating period

Low volume builders/vendors with possessions in one year only of the three-year rating period will be rated Good unless the Economic Climate Provision (described on page 5) applies.

Builders/vendors registered for 36 months or more and with between 10 and 24 possessions can achieve an Excellent rating as follows:

Excellent: no chargeable conciliations

Builders/vendors registered for 36 months or more and with fewer than 25 possessions and two or more chargeable conciliations will be rated Below Average.

All other builders/vendors registered for 36 months or more and with fewer than 25 possessions and one chargeable conciliation will be rated Good.

Here's how the rating system works:

Builders/Vendors Registered for 36 Months or More
Number of Chargeable Conciliations	Number of Possessions 3 to 9 (Low Volume) during the three-year rating period
0	Excellent (if registered at least 5 years and has at least three possessions spread over two years of the three-year rating period)
0	Above Average (if registered for 3 to 5 years and has at least three possessions spread over two years of the three-year rating period)

TARION BUILDERS BULLETINS & OTHER

0	Good (if registered at least 36 months and has had 3-9 possessions all in the same year)
0	Good (if only 1 or 2 possessions)
1	Good
2 or more	Below Average
Number of Chargeable Conciliations	Number of Possessions 10 to 24 (during the three-year rating period)
0	Excellent
1	Good
2 or more	Below Average
Number of Chargeable Conciliations	Number of Possessions 25 or more (during the three-year rating period)
0	Excellent
No more than 1:
For every 75 possessions	Excellent
For every 50-74 possessions	Above Average
For every 25-49 possessions	Good
More than 1 for every 25 possessions	Below Average

For example, a builder/vendor who has been registered at least 36 months and has:

- 100 possessions and one chargeable conciliation will have an Excellent rating (no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 75 possessions)
- 55 possessions and one chargeable conciliation will have an Above Average rating (no more than one chargeable conciliation for every 50 possessions)
- 15 possessions and one chargeable conciliation will have a Good rating
- 7 possessions and two chargeable conciliations will have a Below Average rating
- 7 possessions and no chargeable conciliations over the past 3 years will have an Excellent rating if the builder/vendor has been registered at least 5 years and has at least three possessions spread over two years of the three-year rating period
- 7 possessions and no chargeable conciliations will have an Above Average rating if the builder/vendor has been registered for at least 36 months but less than 5 years (see example above) and has at least three possessions spread over two years of the three-year rating period

- only 1 or 2 possessions and no chargeable conciliations, the builder/vendor will be rated as Good (unless qualifies for Excellent rating by the Economic Climate Provision as listed below)

Economic Climate Provision

Builders/vendors with either one or two possessions, or those with three to nine possessions – all in the same year of the three-year rating period, do not qualify for an Excellent rating.

However, builders/vendors can receive an Excellent rating if they have:

- an Excellent rating in the previous year and
- between one and nine possessions – all in the same year of the current three-year rating period and
- no chargeable conciliations during the current three-year rating period.

Recognition of Sustained Excellence

Beginning with the 2000 ratings for After Sales Service, builders/vendors will be informed about how many consecutive years of Excellent ratings they have had since the first Home Buyer's Guide to After Sales Service in 1988. The total number of consecutive years with an Excellent rating will be featured on each Certificate of Excellence and on the ONHWP web site at www.newhome.on.ca.

DEFINITIONS

- a. "Chargeable conciliation" means any conciliation where there are warrantable items identified by ONHWP staff and the vendor was not denied access and could have avoided the conciliation by attending to the homeowner's complaints.

All conciliations are deemed to be chargeable conciliations to the vendor unless there are no warrantable items identified by ONHWP staff during the conciliation process. Even if only one warrantable item is assessed, whether major or minor in nature, the conciliation will be chargeable to the vendor.

Exceptions:

- i. Where the homeowner identifies new complaint items for the first time during a conciliation inspection, these items will not be considered when determining if the conciliation is chargeable to the vendor.
 - ii. Where the vendor can demonstrate that the homeowner refused reasonable access to rectify the complaints prior to the conciliation, then the conciliation is not chargeable to the vendor.
 - iii. Where the vendor and the homeowner disagree about the method or timing of repair and seek ONHWP's intervention, and ONHWP supports the vendor's recommendation, then the conciliation is not chargeable to the vendor.
- a. "Conciliation" means a process where ONHWP attempts to resolve a dispute between a homeowner and a vendor; the conciliation process may consist of a site visit, a single or series of telephone meetings, a review of documentation, or combinations of these.
 - b. "Possession" means a home that was completed for occupancy and for which ONHWP has received a copy of the Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP).

- c. "Warrantable items" means items that fall within the provisions of Section 13 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (the Act) and Part VI of Regulation 892 under the Act.

BUILDER BULLETIN 37

WARRANTY COVERAGE ON LEASE TO OWN HOMES

Effective: September 15, 1996

Background

Vendors and purchasers of new homes have entered from time to time into lease to own agreements which satisfy the requirements of mortgage insurers and make home ownership available to more and more individuals. The Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) has examined these agreements and determined that subject to certain provisions these homes qualify for warranty protection and must be enrolled.

Lease to Own Agreements

Where a lease to own agreement is determined to be a bona fide agreement of purchase and sale, the freehold home or condominium unit is subject to warranty coverage and must be enrolled at the time of construction by its vendor. To be a bona fide agreement of purchase and sale the lease to own agreement would include the following:

- state the total purchase price
- detail the terms of the lease portion of the agreement (e.g., the lease payment, the future value of the accrued down payment, and when the sale transaction closes and title transfers to the lessee)
- contain no provision for the lessee to opt out of the purchase of the unit
- contain no uncertain or ambiguous terms

The lessee is a person or persons who has entered into a lease to own agreement, has occupied the unit, but has not yet purchased or taken title to the unit.

Warranty coverage begins on the date of possession which is the date on which the home is completed for possession as specified in the Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP). In the case of a lease to own agreement, it is the date that the unit is first occupied by the lessee.

Warranty issues will be dealt with in the same way as any home or unit obtained through a standard agreement of purchase and sale. Complaints to ONHWP will be referred to the builder/vendor as always. If the lessee and the builder/vendor cannot resolve the dispute ONHWP may conciliate. However, if the builder/vendor will not or cannot address any warranted complaints ONHWP will not satisfy the claim until the lessee becomes the owner.

Condominium common element warranty issues in a project where some units were obtained through lease to own agreements shall be handled as if all units were obtained through standard agreements of purchase and sale to promote a fair balance between unit owners and buyers and condominium corporations.

BUILDER BULLETIN 38

LOW-RISE CONDOMINIUMS INSPECTION PROGRAM

Effective: January 01, 1995

Background

Effective January 1, 1995, the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) will be implementing the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program to provide on-site technical coaching and training at benchmark stages of construction to help new and problem builders make informed decisions on good construction practice.

Developed as an element of ONHWP's prevention strategy, the focus of the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program is not as much on the project as it is on the builder's performance over the long term. It enables ONHWP both to monitor and assess the technical competence of new builders joining ONHWP and to monitor and correct the construction practices of problem builders.

Builders planning to build low-rise condominium projects who, after evaluation by ONHWP, are assessed as "new" or "problem" builders must participate in the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program. In addition to the criteria listed below, any builder may be considered a problem builder at the discretion of the Registrar. Failure to comply with Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program requirements will result in the Registrar issuing a Notice of Proposal to Refuse or Revoke Registration.

Note: Low-rise condominium means a project where all of the units and all of the common elements are designed and constructed under Part 9 of the Ontario Building Code (OBC).

The Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program does not apply to high-rise condominium projects required to meet the provisions of Builder Bulletin 19, nor freehold units, required to meet the provisions of Builder Bulletin 31.

What's Involved

"New" Builder Requirements

Based on the information gained through the registration interview and technical test (see Builder Bulletin 30, Revised), ONHWP may decide that a Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Plan is one of the terms and conditions of registration for a builder new to or re-entering the low-rise condominium construction industry. If an inspection plan is required, the applicant will receive notification from the Registrar. Some new builders will be exempt because they have demonstrated a high level of business skill and construction knowledge in their interviews and technical tests. A Technical Representative will initiate the Inspection Plan and may conduct the inspections personally. ONHWP reserves the right to employ a qualified fee-for-service inspector to conduct the inspections under the supervision of the Technical Representative. Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for the entire condominium project are payable at the time of its enrolment.

"Problem" Builder Requirements

For problem builders, the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Plan development process is more complex. The Technical Representative will thoroughly research and analyze the builder's file to pinpoint past performance issues. An appropriate inspection plan will be implemented or, in some cases, custom designed, depending on the builder's past performance. Participation in the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program becomes an amendment to the terms and conditions of registration. The inspection plan will begin on the next condominium project submitted to ONHWP for enrolment. The Regional Manager and Technical Representative will meet with the builder to outline the reasons for implementation and to review the inspection plan requirements. Inspections will be conducted by the Technical Representative.

In all instances, ONHWP will make every effort to respond within 24 hours to inspection or re-inspection requests. However, responsibility lies with builders to ensure that their staff are present on-site at the prearranged time.

Definition Of A New Builder

Applicants to ONHWP who meet any of the following conditions are defined as "new" builders:

- New applicants who have never registered with ONHWP.
- Applicants whose registration has been expired for three years or more.
- Previously-registered applicants who have unsettled claims outstanding.
- Applicants who have been previously refused or revoked by the Registrar but have satisfied ONHWP that their circumstances have changed materially.
- Applicants who are re-registering and changing their status from "Vendor Only" to "Vendor/Builder".
- Previously-registered applicants who have made a significant change in principals, including those responsible for construction or the day-to-day operations of the company.
- Applicants who are presently registered with ONHWP but have no experience in the low-rise condominium construction industry.

Definition Of Problem Builder

Builders whose track record with ONHWP demonstrates either of the following criteria during the previous 12 months are classified as problem builders:

- Any paid warranty claim. Regional Managers have discretionary power to waive the problem builder classification in certain situations, e.g., if a homeowner has refused entry to the builder, and, with the builder's agreement, ONHWP makes the repair and charges back to the builder.
- Unacceptable ratio of chargeable conciliations to possessions according to the builder rating system in the Home Buyer's Guide to After Sales Service. The current formula for the "below average" rating, i.e., a ratio of two or more chargeable conciliations in 25 possessions or fewer will also apply to builders who are not rated in the Home Buyer's Guide.

The Registrar may also target any builder as a problem builder if, for example, there is an unacceptable ratio of complaints to possessions or if a builder receives consistently unfavourable results in field inspections carried out by ONHWP staff.

Inspection Plans

Building on the experience of the Targeted Inspection Program for freehold homes, low-rise condominium inspections will focus on ONHWP's most costly and frequent claims.

Inspections can be held at the five key stages in the construction process: excavation, foundation, framing, prior to dry wall and completion. Depending on the builder's level of technical knowledge or track record with ONHWP, Regional staff will select one of the following four levels of inspection:

Level	Stages For Project
Minimum	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Foundation • Prior to drywall • Completion
Moderate	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Excavation • Foundation • Prior to drywall • Completion
Maximum	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Excavation • Foundation • Framing • Prior to drywall • Completion
Custom	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Designed to address specific concerns based on the builder's claims history.

Timing Of Inspections

The following guidelines have been established for the timing of the inspection at each benchmark stage in the construction process:

Stage	Timing
Excavation	After excavation is completed but prior to the erection of foundation walls.
Foundation	Prior to backfill, with dampproofing applied.
Framing	After roof framing is completed and sheathing installed but prior to insulation and/or vapour barrier being installed.
Prior to Drywall	Prior to drywall being applied but with insulation and air/vapour barrier installed.
Completion	When the home is ready for occupancy and exterior grading has been completed.

Note: Incomplete seasonal work may be exempt from the completion inspection.

Inspections

The single most important purpose of the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program is the teaching or coaching opportunity that the inspection provides. The Technical Representative will use the review to provide appropriate technical information for the builder to make an informed decision on good building practice. In other words, the inspector focuses on the "builder" not the "project" for the long-term improvement of the builder's performance.

Each inspection has its own checklist which is based on ONHWP's claims experience and includes the most common construction defects. By keeping track of recurring defects ONHWP will be able to revise the checklists and adjust the focus of the inspections accordingly.

Checklists will also include appropriate diagrams to help the Technical Representative explain good construction practice to the builder as well as reference the Ontario Building Code (OBC). Although warranty defects are not always specific OBC infractions, they may have their origins there. Copies of the checklists will be distributed to the builder's site representative and to the person managing the construction supervision.

When the builder's construction performance improves to an appropriate level, low-rise condominium inspections will be discontinued. If a problem builder fails to improve, the documentation gathered through the Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Program will be added to the case for revocation of registration.

Fee Structure

Builder Category	Inspection Plan		Inspection Fees / Project (plus GST)
New Builder	Minimum	at least 6 inspections (3 inspections X 2 units + common elements)	$ 750.
	Moderate	at least 12 inspections (4 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$1,500.
	Maximum	at least 15 inspections (5 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$1,875.
Problem Builder	Minimum	at least 6 inspections (3 inspections X 2 units + common elements)	$1,350.
	Moderate	at least 12 inspections (4 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$2,700.
	Maximum	at least 25 inspections (5 inspections X 5 units + common elements)	$5,625.

Note: Low-rise Condominium Inspection Plan fees are comparable to total inspection fees by both category and plan required under the Targeted Inspection Program for freehold homes (see Builder Bulletin 31).

Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for a project are payable at the time of its enrolment, or, will be invoiced if the project is already enrolled but construction has not yet begun. GST must be added to the fees.

	Moderate	at least 12 inspections (4 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$1,500.
	Maximum	at least 15 inspections (5 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$1,875.
Problem Builder	Minimum	at least 6 inspections (3 inspections X 2 units + common elements)	$1,350.
	Moderate	at least 12 inspections (4 inspections X 3 units + common elements)	$2,700.
	Maximum	at least 25 inspections (5 inspections X 5 units + common elements)	$5,625.

Note: Low-rise Condominium Inspection Plan fees are comparable to total inspection fees by both category and plan required under the Targeted Inspection Program for freehold homes (see Builder Bulletin 31).

Low-Rise Condominium Inspection Plan fees for the total number of inspections required for a project are payable at the time of its enrolment, or, will be invoiced if the project is already enrolled but construction has not yet begun. GST must be added to the fees.

INCREASED DEPOSIT COVERAGE FOR FREEHOLD HOMES AND FINANCIAL LOSS COVERAGE FOR CONTRACT HOMES

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This bulletin introduces a change to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan.

Until now, new home buyers have been protected for up to $20,000 under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act for the loss of a deposit on a freehold home or for financial loss on a contract home. That amount was set 26 years ago, when the Act came into effect. During that time, the consumer price index has tripled. In an effort to keep up with these rising costs, a buyer will now be able to receive up to $40,000 in compensation from the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP).

Note: Deposit coverage will remain at $20,000 for condominium units. Condominium purchasers are already protected for deposits over $20,000 by the trust and excess deposit insurance provisions of the Condominium Act, 1998.

WHEN DOES THE CHANGE COME INTO EFFECT?

Freehold Homes – affects buyers who enter into a purchase agreement on or after February 1, 2003.

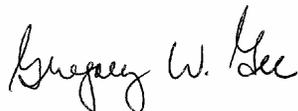

Contract Homes – affects buyers who enter into a construction contract on or after February 1, 2003.

ARE ANY OTHER ONHWP POLICIES IMPACTED?

Bulletin 28 ONHWP Requirements for Receipt and Release of Security specifies that some freehold builders must post security. It is being revised and re-issued to adjust freehold security requirements based on the increase in deposit coverage above.

CONSTRUCTION PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR THE ONTARIO HOME BUILDING INDUSTRY

This bulletin replaces Builder Bulletin 40, which introduced the first edition of the Construction Performance Guidelines (the “Guidelines”) on April 2, 2003. This revised Builder Bulletin 40 is being issued in conjunction with the publication of the second edition of the Guidelines.

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

The Guidelines provide information on the requirements of the warranties described in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (the “statutory warranty”). The Guidelines are intended to be a communication tool in the form of a handy reference guide for builders and homeowners. The purpose of the Guidelines is not to set new standards, but to provide advance information as to how the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the “Warranty Program”) will render decisions regarding disputes between builders and homeowners about work or materials.

The Guidelines were developed in consultation with various industry experts and following extensive research into the construction performance standards used by other North American new home warranty programs. The proposed Guidelines were then scrutinized by a sub-committee of Ontario Home Builders’ Association (“OHBA”) members, various technical experts, Warranty Program Board members and staff to ensure they were appropriate for Ontario.

A MORE OBJECTIVE WAY TO RESOLVE WARRANTY DISPUTES

When it comes to home construction, builders and homeowners approach matters from different perspectives, so they don’t always see eye to eye. In most cases, a builder and a homeowner can work together and resolve warranty problems in a friendly, professional way. When issues can’t be resolved, the Warranty Program, at the request of a homeowner or builder, will step in to settle the matter. (A homeowner can ask the Warranty Program to investigate a dispute which the Warranty Program may decide requires conciliation, or a builder may request a warranty review.)

The Guidelines have been published and made accessible to both builders and homeowners to provide a clear understanding of how Warranty Program representatives make decisions about warranty disputes. Until publication of the Guidelines, these decisions were based on their expertise and knowledge of industry standards including those in the Ontario Building Code (the “Code”).

HOW THE GUIDELINES CAN HELP BUILDERS AND HOMEOWNERS

The Guidelines can help a builder and a homeowner understand how the Warranty Program evaluates warranty disputes as well as assist in other ways.

The Guidelines can help builders:

- establish the construction standard that their trades must adhere to (builders can reference the Guidelines in their contracts with their trades);
- assess their own work, and that of their trades; and,
- answer queries from homeowners in a way that is seen to be objective.

The Guidelines can help homeowners:

- understand what is and is not covered under the statutory warranty in their new home; and,
- determine if items in their home have been installed and are working properly.

STANDARDS IN THE GUIDELINES

The Guidelines contain two types of standards for assessing components of the home:

1. Standards Based on Measurement

These apply to anything that can be measured. For example:

12.2

Condition: Floor is Uneven

Acceptable Performance/Condition

Applied finished flooring shall be installed without visible ridges or depressions. Where visible ridges or depressions occur, the variation from the specified plane shall not exceed +/- 6 mm.

Warranty

One Year – Work and Material

- Ridges and depressions caused by normal shrinkage of materials are excluded from the statutory warranty

Action

Visible ridges or depressions exceeding the acceptable condition shall be repaired.

Remarks

The homeowner must maintain finished flooring in accordance with manufacturer's recommendations and prevent the accumulation of water on flooring.

2. Standard Based on Construction Performance

These apply to items that cannot be measured. For example:

1.14

Condition: Foundation Wall Leaks

Acceptable Performance/Condition

Foundation walls shall allow no water penetration.

Warranty

Two Year – Basement Water Penetration

- Water leakage resulting from improper maintenance, exterior grade alterations made by the homeowner, an act of God or failure of municipal services or other utilities is excluded from the statutory warranty. Secondary damage to property or any personal injury resulting from the water penetration is also excluded from the statutory warranty.

Action

Water penetration through the basement or foundation shall be repaired.

Remarks

Only actual water penetration through the foundation is warranted; dampness caused by condensation or other causes is not considered to be water penetration and is not covered by the statutory warranty. The homeowner must take immediate steps to prevent damage to their property and report any losses to their home insurance provider.

HOW THE GUIDELINES ARE USED IN WARRANTY DISPUTES

When the Warranty Program becomes involved in a warranty dispute between the builder and the homeowner, the Guidelines will be consulted.

If the dispute relates to something that is found not to meet the standards laid out in the Guidelines, the Warranty Program will decide that remedial work needs to be done. In such case, the builder is responsible for making repairs.

If the dispute relates to something that is found to meet or exceed the standards laid out in the Guidelines, the Warranty Program will decide that no remedial work needs to be done. In such case, the builder is not responsible for making repairs.

On those occasions where a standard does not apply, the Warranty Program, using good industry practice will decide if something is covered under the statutory warranty.

The Guidelines contain standards that apply to most new homes in Ontario, but given the wide variety of homes that are built, it would be impossible for standards to apply to every type of home or every component of construction.

WHEN THE GUIDELINES WILL BE APPLIED

The Guidelines apply to conciliations (including warranty reviews) and claim inspections related to deficiencies in work and material conducted by the Warranty Program on or after April 2, 2003. The first edition of the Guidelines will apply to a conciliation or claim inspection conducted between April 2, 2003 and November 30, 2003 and the second edition will apply to a conciliation or claim inspection conducted on or after December 1, 2003 until the effective date of the next edition of the Guidelines.

THE GUIDELINES WILL CHANGE OVER TIME

The Guidelines will be reviewed periodically and expanded or updated to reflect legislative changes and/or changes in construction materials and technologies. Over the years, new editions of the Guidelines will be published. The Warranty Program will base its decisions on the most recent edition of the Guidelines in effect at the time that a conciliation (including a warranty review) or claim inspection is conducted.

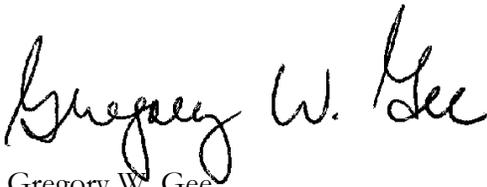

The effective date of each edition is set out on both the front cover and on the bottom of every page in the Guidelines. For example, the front cover of the first edition states that it is effective April 2, 2003, and the front cover of the second edition states that it is effective December 1, 2003.

MAKE SURE YOU HAVE THE CORRECT EDITION

The most recent edition of the Guidelines is available on the Warranty Program Web site at www.newhome.on.ca or by calling 1-800-668-0124.

FOR MORE INFORMATION

If you have any questions about the Guidelines, please contact the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124. A member of our staff will be happy to assist you.

THE BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This Bulletin is about the Builder Arbitration Forum. A builder¹ who disagrees with what the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (“ONHWP”) has found “warrantable”² in a Conciliation Report³, or that a conciliation is “chargeable”⁴, can now dispute ONHWP’s findings at the Builder Arbitration Forum. The Forum is a fast, fair and affordable way to have ONHWP’s decision reviewed. An Arbitrator will conduct a hearing and, after listening to both sides, will reach a final and binding decision. This Bulletin explains the Arbitration process – how it works and how the builder can use it most effectively.

The Builder Arbitration Forum and this Bulletin come into effect on April 2, 2003, and apply to Conciliation Reports issued on or after that date.

¹ “Builder” refers to a builder or vendor as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

² In a Conciliation Report, “warrantable” means an item is covered under warranty as specified in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

³ A Conciliation Report is written after an ONHWP staff member has conducted a site visit or a desk assessment, or a combination of both. This Bulletin refers to Conciliation Reports but will also apply to Warranty Review Reports which will be introduced in a future Bulletin.

⁴ A conciliation is “chargeable” to the builder if an item in the Conciliation Report is warrantable and the builder had the ability and opportunity to resolve the dispute before it came to conciliation. (See Builder Bulletin 36.)

THE NEED FOR THE BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM

Currently, a builder who disagrees with a Conciliation Report can ask ONHWP to have a Warranty Service Manager conduct an informal review. Until now, however, if the ONHWP manager confirmed the findings in the Conciliation Report, the builder's only other recourse was to refuse to do the work. ONHWP would then issue a Notice of Proposal ("NOP") to revoke the builder's Registration, which the builder could then appeal to the Licence Appeal Tribunal (the "LAT"). The LAT is an independent administrative tribunal established under the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services. Many builders find this process of challenging a Conciliation Report unsatisfactory because the builder risks having his or her Registration revoked if the LAT upholds the findings in the Conciliation Report.

For this reason, a sub-committee comprised of members of ONHWP and the Ontario Home Builders' Association ("OHBA") recommended the establishment of a Builder Arbitration Forum. The Forum will enable a builder to dispute the decisions in a Conciliation Report without risking having his or her Registration revoked. The Conciliation Report will be reviewed before an independent arbitrator in a manner that is quick and fair.

THE BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM AND THE LICENCE APPEAL TRIBUNAL

The Builder Arbitration Forum is optional. A builder who disagrees with a Conciliation Report can – but does not have to – request an Arbitration hearing.

If the builder chooses not to arbitrate, the Conciliation Report will be considered accurate and final unless the homeowner requests a hearing before the LAT or the builder requests a hearing before the LAT after receiving a NOP. In those cases, the LAT will make the final decision about the Report's accuracy.

THE BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM AND A NOTICE OF PROPOSAL

A builder who fails to meet his or her warranty obligations can be issued a NOP by ONHWP to revoke the builder's Registration. If a builder decides to challenge a Conciliation Report by using the Builder Arbitration Forum, a NOP cannot be issued for anything in that Report during the Arbitration process, as long as the builder remains a registrant in good standing⁵.

An NOP can be issued during the Arbitration process for an unrelated matter. Should that occur, the Arbitration will be suspended until the issue has been decided by the LAT⁶.

⁵ "Registrant in good standing" means the builder is in full compliance with: the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and its Regulations; ONHWP Bulletins; and any agreement between ONHWP and the builder. The builder will be presumed to be a registrant in good standing unless the Registrar or Deputy Registrar issues a notice to the contrary.

⁶ No suspension will occur where the Arbitration hearing has taken place but the Arbitrator's written decision has not yet been delivered.

- If the LAT upholds the NOP, the builder cannot return to Arbitration.
- If the LAT dismisses the NOP, the builder can ask to resume Arbitration. To do so, the builder must deliver a written request to ONHWP within 10 days of the LAT's decision. Otherwise, the Arbitration will be considered abandoned.

An NOP can be issued at the conclusion of the Arbitration process if the Conciliation Report is upheld and the builder fails to comply with it.

ARBITRATION AND THE IMPACT ON THE HOMEOWNER

An arbitration under the Builder Arbitration Forum is between the builder and ONHWP. It will have no impact on the homeowner's rights for repairs or compensation. If items have been found warrantable in a Conciliation Report, the homeowner can still expect repairs or compensation, even if the builder decides to challenge the Report using the Builder Arbitration Forum. This can occur in one of two ways:

- ONHWP can arrange for repairs or can compensate the homeowner. The homeowner will not have to wait until the Arbitration is completed for this to happen.
- The builder can make the repairs "under protest" and let the Arbitrator decide if the items are warrantable.

If the builder decides to make the repairs "under protest" and to seek reimbursement through Arbitration, the builder must:

- Warrant that repairs have been done in a workmanlike manner and materials are free from defects for at least one year; and
- Provide proof of the cost of labour and materials and show that these costs are reasonable.

The only way Arbitration might possibly involve the homeowner is if the Arbitrator decides that a site visit is desirable in connection with an Arbitration hearing. If so, ONHWP will contact the homeowner to seek permission for the builder, ONHWP and the Arbitrator to visit the home.

The Arbitrator will decide if the items that were repaired and compensated – whether by ONHWP or by the builder "under protest" – were properly held to be warrantable in a Report. If the builder is successful in disputing the warrantability of items in a Report, ONHWP will reimburse the builder for the costs of such repairs.

THE CRITERIA FOR USING THE BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM

The Builder Arbitration Forum is available to any builder who:

- has participated in the conciliation that the builder wants the Arbitration Forum to review;
- has notified ONHWP in writing of any issue that the builder believes negates the conciliation from being “chargeable”, for example if the builder was denied access to the home to make repairs;
- is not the subject of a pending NOP for an unrelated matter; and
- is a registrant in good standing⁷ throughout the Arbitration process.

THE ARBITRATION PACKAGE

If a builder opts for Arbitration, he or she will need an Arbitration Package. The package contains the forms and documents that a builder will use for the Arbitration Forum process. It includes:

- A Notice of Arbitration form. This form notifies ONHWP that the builder intends to challenge a Conciliation Report. The builder must complete the form in writing and submit it to ONHWP within 28 days of the Report’s release. The builder must pay a non-refundable fee of $750 to help defray the administration costs of the Arbitration Forum.
- An Arbitration Agreement. This is the agreement that the builder must sign for the Arbitration hearing to take place. By signing it, the builder agrees to pay a deposit for the estimated costs of the Arbitrator; follow the Procedural Rules for the Arbitration Forum; comply with the Arbitrator’s decision; and, if unsuccessful, pay the balance of the Arbitrator’s costs immediately after the Arbitration hearing. This agreement is submitted along with the Notice of Arbitration.
- An updated Roster of Arbitrators. This is a list of the Arbitrators’ names and addresses. (See the next two sections of this Bulletin.)
- The Builder Arbitration Forum Rules: including the Procedural Rules, the Roster Rules, the Code of Conduct and the Arbitrators’ Fee and Disbursement Tariff. This document explains the rules for the Arbitration hearing; the rules for establishing and maintaining the Roster of Arbitrators; the Code of Conduct that the Arbitrators must follow; and the fees and disbursements that an Arbitrator may charge.

The Arbitration Package will be available April 2, 2003 from ONHWP Regional Offices or online at www.newhome.on.ca. In case of a conflict between this Bulletin and the Builder Arbitration Forum Rules, the Builder Arbitration Forum Rules will prevail.

THE ROSTER OF ARBITRATORS

ONHWP, with the assistance of the OHBA, is responsible to appoint a roster of independent Arbitrators for the Builder Arbitration Forum. An individual who wants to be included on the Roster of Arbitrators must apply for the position. To be selected, the candidate must have some minimum qualifications and, preferably, exceed this minimum. At the very least the candidate must:

- know and understand the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act;
- have arbitration training and experience;
- be involved in the new home construction industry; and
- provide the appropriate references.

SELECTING AN ARBITRATOR FOR A BUILDER ARBITRATION HEARING

A builder who opts for Arbitration will be able to select three names from the Roster of Arbitrators. The Builder must inform these individuals in writing that they have been chosen. They, in turn, must confirm to the builder in writing that they are available to be an Arbitrator within the time periods applicable to the Arbitration hearing and that there is no conflict of interest that would disqualify them. If someone is not available or has a conflict of interest, the builder must contact another person on the Roster.

Once the builder has written confirmation from three individuals on the Roster, the information must be submitted along with the Notice of Arbitration to ONHWP. Then ONHWP will select one of those individuals to be the Arbitrator for the Arbitration hearing.

THE ARBITRATION PROCESS

The Arbitration process is set in motion when ONHWP releases a Conciliation Report. If a builder decides to challenge the Report, he or she can expect the entire process to be completed in 84 days from the date the Report is issued. In unusual cases, where the issues are particularly complicated, additional time may be required.

The following table shows the sequence of events in the Arbitration Process - what happens and when it will happen:

TIME PERIOD	ACTION TAKEN BY ONHWP	ACTION TAKEN BY THE BUILDER

THE COSTS OF ARBITRATION AND WHO PAYS FOR THEM

There are three costs associated with an arbitration under the Builder Arbitration Forum.

- 1. The Administration Fee: The builder always pays this non-refundable fee of $750 to help pay for the administrative costs of the Arbitration Forum.
- 2. The costs of preparing for and attending the Arbitration Forum: ONHWP and the builder are each responsible for their own costs, including legal fees, witness fees and transportation.
- 3. The Arbitrator's Fees and Disbursements: The Arbitrator's costs are based on the Arbitrators' Fee and Disbursement Tariff which will be posted online at www.newhome.on.ca and included in the Arbitration Package. The basic rule is that the losing party pays the Arbitrator's costs. If success is divided then the costs will be divided. Examples of how costs will be allocated are shown in the following table:

SITUATION	WHO PAYS?
The Arbitrator decides that the builder's case is completely valid.	ONHWP will pay the Arbitrator's costs and will return to the builder the deposit paid "in trust to ONHWP".

PREPARING FOR AN ARBITRATION FORUM HEARING

An Arbitration hearing is less formal than a court hearing. Nonetheless, it is a good idea for the builder to be well-prepared beforehand. The builder (or the proprietor or an officer, director or employee of the builder) will have to present his or her own case at the Arbitration hearing. The builder should present his or her case in a clear and well-organized manner. To prepare for an Arbitration hearing, the builder can do the following:

- Read and become familiar with the Builder Arbitration Forum Rules. This will give you a good grounding in the Arbitration process and an understanding of what actually happens during an Arbitration hearing.
- Consult a lawyer. You do not have to consult one, but a lawyer can help you prepare your Case Material and may provide a better understanding of the issues and laws involved. The lawyer will not be allowed to participate in the Arbitration hearing without special permission from the Arbitrator but may, if desired, attend as an observer.
- Consult previous Builder Arbitration Forum decisions. Arbitration decisions (minus the names of builders and homeowners to protect their privacy) will be posted online at www.newhome.on.ca. You can consult these decisions to see if any pertain to your case. Initially there may be few, if any, decisions to consult, but as more Arbitration hearings take place and the results are posted online, there will be a greater chance of finding a case similar to yours. Finding a previous decision for a similar case may be very important because, even though the decision does not set a binding legal precedent, the Arbitrator may find it persuasive in determining the outcome of your case.
- Know your own case. If you have a clear grasp of the details of your case you will probably be able to present it more effectively.
- Know ONHWP's case. You will receive a copy of ONHWP's Case Material within 14 days of issuing your own Case Material. If you are familiar with ONHWP's material, you can be better prepared to rebut it during the Arbitration hearing.

THE ARBITRATION FORUM AND THE ISSUES TO BE DECIDED

The Arbitration Forum hearing is held in private, and is open only to the builder (or the officer, director, employee or proprietor representing the builder); the ONHWP staff member presenting ONHWP's case; lawyers for the builder and ONHWP, attending as observers; and any expert witnesses the Arbitrator has decided should give evidence.

The hearing will generally be conducted in person, in the city in which the responsible ONHWP Regional Office is located.

During the hearing, each side will present its case and may call upon experts to present evidence in support of their case.

If the hearing is proving more complicated than expected, the Arbitrator can decide to extend it. Should that occur, the Arbitrator's fees and disbursements will be increased, based on the general standard one day fee, to cover the cost of the additional days.

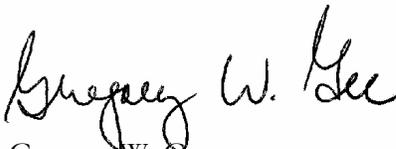

After listening to both sides and any experts, the arbitrator will determine:

- whether the conciliation is chargeable to the builder;
- whether any compensation or repair costs ONHWP has paid to the homeowner are reasonable;
- whether the builder should be reimbursed for repairs done "under protest" and, if so, in what amount;
- the amount the builder must pay for item(s) the Arbitrator has found to be warrantable; and
- who should pay for the Arbitrator's costs and in what amount.

The Arbitrator's decision is final and binding. It cannot be appealed to any court or tribunal, and may only be open to judicial review under very limited circumstances as set out in the Arbitration Act, 1991.

CUSTOMER SERVICE STANDARD

This Bulletin replaces Bulletin 42 (Revised) issued on March 15, 2004.

BACKGROUND

On March 15, 2004, Tarion Warranty Corporation (“Tarion”) introduced Bulletin 42 (Revised) which revised the minimum after-sales warranty service standard (the Customer Service Standard) for builders. Bulletin 42 (Revised) provided vendors and builders (collectively, “builders”) of new freehold homes (including contract homes) and condominium units (collectively, “homes”), with details of the Customer Service Standard.

The Customer Service Standard applies to claims relating to homes but does not apply to claims made in respect of the common elements of a condominium project.

Tarion engages in ongoing review of the Customer Service Standard to improve it over time.

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This Bulletin restates the Customer Service Standard and incorporates certain changes based on the ongoing review of its application by Tarion.

The following parts make up the Customer Service Standard:

- Part A: The Homeowner Information Package: A document published by Tarion that provides purchasers with an outline of the responsibilities of the homeowner, Tarion and the builder;
- Part B: The Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI): A mandatory home inspection that builders are required to conduct with purchasers on or before the date of possession;
- Part C: The Statutory Warranty Claims Process: The process governing how homeowners must submit Statutory Warranty Forms for warranty claims; timelines within which builders must respond to and resolve claims; and the role of Tarion in the process; and
- Part D: Warranty Review: A builder-requested conciliation.

The Customer Service Standard was developed following consultation with builders, the Ontario Home Builders’ Association (OHBA), consumers and government. It sets out the minimum standards required by Tarion. Builders are encouraged to exceed these standards.

DEFINITIONS

In this Bulletin, the following terms have the meanings described below:

Act

The Act is the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 and Regulations, as amended.

Conciliation

A conciliation is a process in which Tarion assesses whether a disputed item is warranted (i.e. covered by statutory warranty) and/or whether Tarion supports the way a repair was done. Where possible, Tarion will base its conciliation decisions on the Construction Performance Guidelines. A conciliation may include an inspection at the home (if items that require repair are involved) or a desk assessment (if items can be assessed based on a paper record, e.g., delayed closing/occupancy compensation claim) and may also include a review of the purchase agreement, the completed PDI Form and other relevant documentation. A Warranty Review is also a type of conciliation. A Warranty Assessment Report is issued by Tarion following a conciliation. The builder is expected to fully comply with any direction that has been provided by Tarion in the Warranty Assessment Report.

PLEASE NOTE

Only items identified in a properly submitted Statutory Warranty Form will be reviewed during the related conciliation. Items raised for the first time by a homeowner during a conciliation will not be addressed at that conciliation. Homeowners will be directed to add these new items to their next Statutory Warranty Form as appropriate.

Chargeable Conciliation

A chargeable conciliation means a conciliation in which:

- there are items identified as warranted by Tarion in a Warranty Assessment Report;
- the builder was not denied reasonable access by the homeowner to rectify the problem (see “Reasonable Access For Repair” on p. 11 of this Bulletin); and
- the builder could have avoided the conciliation by attending to the items raised in the homeowner’s Statutory Warranty Form.

Even if only one item is confirmed through the conciliation process by Tarion to be warranted, whether major or minor in nature, the conciliation will be considered chargeable to the builder.

A conciliation may be deemed “not chargeable”, if one or more of the following exceptions apply to every item determined to be warranted in the Warranty Assessment Report:

1. The builder can demonstrate that the homeowner denied reasonable access to repair or resolve the warranted item before the conciliation; or
2. A conciliation is conducted by Tarion because the builder and the homeowner disagree about the method or timing of the repair to an item that the builder has previously agreed is warranted, and Tarion supports the builder’s recommendation; or
3. The builder can show (a) that it has a history of satisfactory after-sales service to homeowners; and (b) by way of a written acknowledgement from the homeowner, that the homeowner had previously confirmed they were satisfied with the state of the item based on the builder’s repair or that the dispute relating to the item was otherwise resolved by the builder. As a result, the builder was completely satisfied that the item had been resolved and took no further action in respect of the item prior to the conciliation.

In addition to the above exceptions, Tarion maintains sole discretion to consider changing a finding of chargeability where the finding relates to an “Extraordinary Situation” as described in Appendix A to this Bulletin.

Deliver

For the purpose of this Bulletin, deliver includes delivery by hand, courier, facsimile transmission, regular mail or registered mail. In the case of regular mail, delivery is effective on the date of receipt. In the case of registered mail, delivery is effective five business days after the day of mailing or on the date of receipt, if earlier. Delivery by facsimile transmission is effective on the day sent regardless of whether or not the day is a business day. Delivery by hand or courier to Tarion is effective on the business day received, if received during Tarion’s office hours. Builders should check the Tarion website for our regular office hours and for office hours during holidays.

PROOF OF DELIVERY

If there is a dispute concerning delivery, the onus is on the builder to establish when delivery occurred. To avoid confusion, builders are encouraged to use methods of delivery (such as registered mail or courier) which will ensure that the builder will have proof of delivery.

Purchase Agreement

An agreement between a vendor and any person providing for the purchase by such person of a home and, for the purpose of this Bulletin, includes a construction contract for the construction of a new home.

Purchaser

Purchaser means a person (or persons) who enters into a purchase agreement and includes an assignee of the purchaser’s interest in a purchase agreement.

Regulations

The Regulations under the Act are R.S.O. 1990, Regulations 892, 893 and 894, as amended.

Statutory Warranty Claim

A Statutory Warranty Claim is a claim made by a homeowner to Tarion concerning a breach of any builder warranty prescribed by the Act and Regulations.

Statutory Warranty Form

A Statutory Warranty Form is the form required by Tarion to be completed and submitted to Tarion in order for a homeowner to make a valid claim for a breach of a statutory warranty, or in the case of an emergency situation, a claim for reimbursement. Tarion reserves the right to determine whether a homeowner complies substantially with the requirements of a Statutory Warranty Form. The Tarion Statutory Warranty Forms (either included in the Homeowner Information Package, or available upon request) include:

- 30-Day Form;
- Year-End Form;
- Second-Year Form;
- MSD Form;
- Emergency Form;
- Air Conditioning Form;
- Delayed Closing Form (for freehold homes); and
- Delayed Occupancy Form (for condominium units).

Submit

Submission, submit and submitted, when used in relation to a Statutory Warranty Form, mean to submit in accordance with the Regulations.

Warranty Assessment Report

A Warranty Assessment Report is a written report issued by Tarion, detailing whether any items listed in a Statutory Warranty Form are warranted and/or whether Tarion supports the way any disputed repair was done or the method or timing of the repair. A Warranty Assessment Report may indicate that further investigation is needed.

PART A. THE HOMEOWNER INFORMATION PACKAGE

The Homeowner Information Package is a document developed by Tarion that builders are required to give to purchasers of new homes. It provides information about the warranty rights of new home purchasers under the Act. The Homeowner Information Package contains:

- Information about what is covered by warranty, what is excluded from coverage and how to use the Statutory Warranty Forms;
- Information about the Statutory Warranty Claims Process (Part C of this Bulletin), including the responsibilities of the builder, the homeowner and Tarion;
- A form for the Appointment of Designate for Pre-Delivery Inspection (“PDI”) that builders may request purchasers use when they intend to send a designate, in their place, to the PDI. If the purchaser is attending the PDI with their designate and is intending to sign the documents, then no Appointment of Designate Form is required;
- The 30-Day Form, Year-End Form and Second-Year Form; and
- A Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package form.

Builder Responsibilities

Builders are required to:

1. Include a provision in every purchase agreement, stating that a Homeowner Information Package is available from Tarion and that the builder will deliver one to the purchaser at or before the PDI;
2. Add to the Homeowner Information Package their contact information for customer service and emergency situations (e.g., in the form of a covering letter or on a business card inserted in the appropriate place inside the booklet);
3. Deliver to each home purchaser the complete and current edition of the Homeowner Information Package no later than the PDI but preferably well before that date, such as at the time of colour selection, in order to provide the information to the purchaser in a timely manner;
4. Complete the Builder portion of the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package (including the enrolment number). Ask the homeowner(s) or their designate to complete and sign their portion, and return the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package as soon as the Homeowner Information Package is delivered to them. If the Homeowner Information Package is delivered at the PDI, the builder may instead check off the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package box on the Certificate of Completion and Possession (“CCP”) and ask the purchaser to sign that form; and
5. Deliver the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package to Tarion as soon as it is completed.
6. Deliver the completed CCP to Tarion after the PDI and no later than 15 days after the date of possession.

Tarion will ensure that a Homeowner Information Package for each home enrolled is available for distribution by the builder to the homeowner. Additional copies are available from Tarion at a fee and can be ordered on Tarion’s website at www.tarion.com or by calling Tarion at 1-877-982-7466.

PART B: THE PRE-DELIVERY INSPECTION (PDI)

On or before the date of possession, the builder is required to conduct a PDI of the home with (at the purchaser’s option): (i) the purchaser; or (ii) the purchaser’s designate; or (iii) both the purchaser and his/her designate, and to complete the CCP (and Warranty Certificate) and the PDI Form with the purchaser, or with the purchaser’s designate if the purchaser is not attending the PDI.

The PDI Form is designed to capture deficiencies in the home at the time of possession, including items inside and outside the home that are incomplete, damaged, missing, or not operational, or items that cannot be assessed because they are obscured from view or are inaccessible. Builders may use their own PDI form, instead of Tarion’s standard PDI Form, provided that it contains, at minimum, all of the information that is contained in Tarion’s standard PDI Form.

The PDI itself should be as thorough as reasonably possible. The builder should take this opportunity to explain how the home and its systems work, which may prevent some customer service calls in the future.

PDI AND DESIGNATE

Who may be a “designate”?

The purchaser may put forward any person as a designate. The designate may be another member of the family or a friend, or may be, for example, a home inspector or engineer. The designate is there either to be a proxy for the homeowner or to provide the homeowner with advice or both.

What should I do if a purchaser and/or their designate does not attend the PDI?

Tarion’s expectation is that every builder will use their best efforts to arrange with each purchaser a mutually convenient time to conduct the PDI with the purchaser and/or the purchaser’s designate.

The builder's best efforts should include:

- Contacting the purchaser well in advance to set up a mutually convenient time to conduct the PDI;
- Providing the purchaser with a few reasonable choices of date and time for the PDI; and
- Explaining to the purchaser that he/she can send a designate instead of attending the PDI personally or bring a designate with him/her.

If, despite these efforts, the purchaser does not attend the PDI or send a designate in his/her place, the builder should conduct the PDI on their own. The PDI Form and the CCP should be completed as usual except that the builder should note on them “Purchaser did not attend”, and the builder should forward the Homeowner Information Package to the purchaser by registered mail if it has not yet been provided.

Copies of the completed PDI Form and the completed CCP should be sent to Tarion as usual and should be provided to the purchaser.

Builders may wish to include in their purchase agreements a specific provision about how the PDI date will be arranged. Builders should seek their own legal advice about the provisions in their purchase agreements.

Builder Responsibilities

Builders are required to:

1. Include a provision in every purchase agreement, whereby the parties agree that the builder and either one or both of the purchaser and the purchaser’s designate (at the purchaser’s option) will meet at the home on or before the date of possession to conduct the PDI;
2. Make an appointment with the purchaser well in advance to conduct the PDI at a time that is mutually convenient. Purchasers may attend in person, send a designate to conduct the PDI on their behalf or attend with their designate;

3. Complete the standard PDI Form provided by Tarion or the builder's own PDI form if appropriate;
4. During the PDI, go through the PDI Form with the purchaser, or with the purchaser's designate, and ensure that any deficiencies, unauthorized substitutions, or any items that cannot be inspected because they are obscured from view or inaccessible, incomplete or missing are noted on the PDI Form;
5. Confirm the date of possession with the purchaser or with the purchaser's designate, and fill in the date of possession on the CCP and the PDI Form. The date of possession is the date when the builder transfers the control and right to occupy the home to the purchaser. (This is not the date of the PDI, unless the purchaser will be assuming possession and/or occupancy on the same day that the PDI is conducted.);
6. Confirm the enrolment number on the CCP. Complete and sign the CCP and the PDI Form with the purchaser or the purchaser's designate, and give him/her the purchaser's copy of the completed CCP and PDI Form. If the purchaser is not attending the PDI with the designate, and the designate is signing documents on the purchaser's behalf, the builder should ask the purchaser to provide a written document confirming that the designate is appointed as designate. For this purpose, Tarion has designed a standard form called "Appointment of Designate", which is included in the Homeowner Information Package. The purchase agreement should specify which form of written authorization is satisfactory when appointing a designate; and
7. Deliver copies of the completed CCP, PDI Form and/or the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package to Tarion no later than 15 days from the date of possession.

If a builder fails to deliver completed CCPs, PDI Forms and/or Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package forms to Tarion in time, this will be considered in Tarion's risk assessment of the builder, conducted as part of the builder's annual renewal of registration. Also, if the builder has not delivered a completed CCP, Tarion will not know the date of possession of that home. In such circumstances Tarion will use the date of possession provided by the homeowner when applying the customer service standard rules, unless there is clear evidence to contradict the homeowner's date.

HOW TO GET COPIES

Tarion will provide the builder with a CCP for each home enrolled. Copies of the standard PDI Form are available on request. For reference, an electronic version of the standard PDI Form is available on www.tarion.com

PART C: THE STATUTORY WARRANTY CLAIMS PROCESS

The Statutory Warranty Claims Process (the Claims Process) involves specific steps - steps homeowners must take to submit Statutory Warranty Forms; repair periods for builders to complete warranty repairs; and steps Tarion will take to become involved if necessary. Tarion becomes involved in claims only at the times described. However, homeowners may contact their builders at any time. Tarion is also available on an informal basis to provide information to the builder and to homeowners at any time.

The time periods in the Claims Process are generally fixed in Regulation 892 of the Act, and they may be adjusted in the following two sets of circumstances. In recognition of difficulties which builders may face in scheduling appointments with homeowners and/or performing work in the holiday period between December 24th and January 1st (inclusive) every year, any time period fixed in the Claims Process will be extended if any portion of the time period occurs during this holiday period. Time periods which would span, or would start or end during this holiday period will be extended by nine days and all related subsequent time periods will be adjusted so that they remain consecutive. An example of this is shown on page 13.

In addition, where a time period ends on a weekend or holiday, the time period is extended to end on the next business day which is not a holiday (i.e., where the time period to submit a 30 Day-Form ends on a Sunday, the time period will be extended to end on the next Monday where Monday is not a holiday). An example of this is also shown on page 13.

EXCEPTIONS TO THE CLAIMS PROCESS

Exceptions are certain situations where the Claims Process is modified to take into account special circumstances (i.e., Emergencies, Seasonal Items, Special Seasonal Items, Air Conditioning between May 15 and September 15, and Extraordinary Situations) that apply either to individual builders or are industry-wide. See Appendix A for a detailed explanation of the Exceptions to the Claims Process.

Note that Tarion may in its sole discretion, extend or shorten any times set out in the Claims Process (including those described in Appendix A) if it determines that a builder is unable or unwilling to repair or resolve the claim items covered by a warranty.

The Claims Process differs slightly depending on whether the date of possession of the home is before or after September 1, 2005.

STEP 1: Homeowner Statutory Warranty Claim

The homeowner is entitled to make a Statutory Warranty Claim with respect to a statutory warranty by submitting the applicable Statutory Warranty Form to Tarion at certain times.

First Year Process for homes with a date of possession on or after October 1, 2003 and before September 1, 2005

There are two opportunities for homeowners to submit Statutory Warranty Forms to Tarion in the first year of possession:

- (a) Within the first 30 days after the date of possession: Once within the first 30 days after the date of possession, the homeowner is entitled to submit a 30-Day Form listing any items that are believed to be covered by a statutory warranty. The homeowner may submit only one 30-Day Form.
- (b) Within the 30 days before the first year anniversary of the date of possession: Any time within the 30 days before the first anniversary of the date of possession, the homeowner is entitled to submit a Year-End Form, listing any items that are believed to be covered by a statutory warranty. If the homeowner submits more than one Year-End Form to Tarion before the end of the first year of possession, the items listed on the last Year-End Form submitted will replace the items on all Year-End Forms that were submitted earlier.

First Year Process for homes with a date of possession on or after September 1, 2005

There are two opportunities for homeowners to submit Statutory Warranty Forms to Tarion in the first year of possession:

- (a) Within the first 30 days after the date of possession: Once within the first 30 days after the date of possession, the homeowner is entitled to submit a 30-Day Form listing any items that are believed to be covered by a statutory warranty. The homeowner may submit only one 30-Day Form.
- (b) Within the 30 days before the first year anniversary of the date of possession: Once within the 30 days before the first anniversary of the date of possession, the homeowner is entitled to submit a Year-End Form, listing any items that are believed to be covered by a statutory warranty. The homeowner may submit only one Year-End Form.

Regardless of the date of possession, the homeowner is required to use either the 30-Day or Year-End Form, as appropriate, for any Statutory Warranty Claim made in the first year of possession. This includes Statutory Warranty Claims for one-year warranty items, as well as items covered under the two-year and seven-year (Major Structural Defect) warranties.

If the homeowner does not submit either a 30-Day Form or a Year-End Form within the first year of possession, then Tarion will consider no further claims regarding one-year warranty items.

FIRST YEAR EXAMPLE

For a home with a date of possession of June 6, 2005, the first day the 30-Day Form could be submitted is June 7, 2005 (the first day after the date of possession). The last day the 30-Day Form could be submitted is July 6, 2005 (the 30th day after the date of possession). Only one 30-Day Form will be accepted by Tarion.

For a home with a date of possession of June 6, 2005, the first day that the Year-End Form could be submitted is May 7, 2006. The last day the Year-End Form could be submitted is June 5, 2006.

Second Year Process (all dates of possession on or after October 1, 2003)

At any time, and as often as required, during the second year of possession, the homeowner may make a Statutory Warranty Claim for items under the two year warranty or under the Major Structural Defect warranty. To do so, the homeowner must submit to Tarion a completed Second-Year Form.

If the homeowner does not submit a Second-Year Form by the end of the second year of possession, then Tarion will consider no further claims regarding two-year warranty items (unless the appropriate Statutory Warranty Form has been submitted in respect of those items in the first year of possession, and the claim has not been withdrawn).

Years Three to Seven Process (all dates of possession on or after October 1, 2003): Major Structural Defect (MSD)

Any time after the end of the second year, but no later than the expiry of the seventh year of possession, the homeowner may make a Statutory Warranty Claim in respect of the MSD warranty. To do so, the homeowner must submit a completed MSD Form to Tarion.

MSD claims made on or after the second anniversary of the date of possession are handled directly by Tarion. Tarion will schedule and conduct an assessment, and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the homeowner within 30 days of receipt of the homeowner's Statutory Warranty Form. If the defect is determined to be a valid MSD, Tarion will either provide direct compensation from the guarantee fund or arrange for the repair.

The MSD warranty in these years is provided by Tarion not the builder. However, if Tarion receives an MSD Form for a warranted MSD item during years three through seven of possession, Tarion reserves the right to involve the builder in the process, and to treat it as an MSD Form submitted in the first two years of possession, if:

- The MSD is the result of a defect that was reported in writing to Tarion in the first two years after the date of possession;
- The defect was not remedied (or was remedied improperly) by the builder; and
- The defect ultimately led to or became the subject of the MSD Form received in years three through seven.

If the homeowner does not submit an MSD Form by the end of the seventh year of possession, then Tarion will consider no further claims regarding MSD warranty items (unless the MSD has been previously identified in either a 30-Day, Year-End or Second-Year Form and the claim has not been withdrawn).

STEP 2: Initial Builder Repair Period

The initial builder repair period differs slightly depending on whether the date of possession of the home is before or after September 1, 2005.

Initial Builder Repair Period for Homes with Dates of Possession on or after October 1, 2003 and before September 1, 2005:

The builder has an initial builder repair period of up to 120 days to repair or otherwise resolve warranted items. For all Statutory Warranty Forms other than the Year-End Form, the builder repair period starts on the day after Tarion receives a properly submitted Statutory Warranty Form. For a Year-End Form, the builder repair period starts on the later of:

- the first anniversary of the date of possession; or
- the day after the date that Tarion receives the Year-End Form.

Initial Builder Repair Period for Homes with Dates of Possession on or after September 1, 2005:

The builder has an initial builder repair period of up to 120 days to repair or otherwise resolve warranted items in the following circumstances:

- For items listed on a 30-Day Form, the initial builder repair period starts on the 31st day from the date of possession (i.e., the day after the last day for a homeowner to submit a 30-Day Form) and goes until the 120th day after that date (i.e., the 150th day from the date of possession);

- For items listed on a Year-End Form, the initial builder repair period starts on the first year anniversary of possession (i.e., day 366) and goes until the 120th day after that date; and
- For items listed on a Second-Year Form, the initial builder repair period starts on the day after the day that Tarion receives the Second-Year Form and goes until the 120th day after that date.

REASONABLE ACCESS FOR REPAIRS

The homeowner is required to provide the builder with reasonable access during regular business hours, arranged at least 24 hours in advance at a time mutually convenient to the homeowner and the builder, to complete the repairs.

Builders who seek to rely on a refusal to grant access as a basis for failing to repair must be able to show that they worked in good faith to arrange a mutually convenient date for repairs with the homeowner. Builders must make reasonable efforts to accommodate homeowners in scheduling repairs. This will include making at least three attempts to schedule repair work during the repair period with sufficient notice to the homeowner. Builders are expected to give at least 24 hours notice prior to a scheduled repair. Notice should be in writing and builders should document their efforts to schedule repairs.

STEP 3: Homeowner Request for Conciliation

If the builder does not repair or resolve all of the warranted items listed on the Statutory Warranty Form during the initial builder repair period, a homeowner may request a conciliation by contacting Tarion at any time within the 30 days following that period.

When the homeowner requests a conciliation, Tarion will schedule a conciliation inspection appointment with the homeowner and notify the builder. The conciliation inspection will be scheduled within the 30 day period that begins on the 31st day after the date on which the request for conciliation was made.

If the homeowner does not request a conciliation during the applicable conciliation request period, the homeowner will be deemed to have withdrawn all claim items listed on the applicable Statutory Warranty Form. The homeowner may resubmit a Statutory Warranty Form at the applicable times for any items deemed to have been withdrawn if those items are still covered by warranty at the date of re-submission.

STEP 4: Pre-Conciliation Repair Period

The builder has 30 days after the date the homeowner requests the conciliation to repair or resolve all of the claim items listed on the Statutory Warranty Form that are covered by a warranty.

STEP 5: Conciliation Process

Unless the homeowner requests that the conciliation inspection be cancelled, Tarion will conduct the conciliation at the scheduled appointment date and time.

Tarion will conduct the conciliation inspection and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the homeowner and to the builder within the 30 day period that begins on the 31st day after the date on which the request for conciliation was made. The Warranty Assessment Report will outline any items on the Statutory Warranty Form that were not resolved by the time of the conciliation, are covered by warranty under the Act, and are therefore still the builder's responsibility to correct. In some cases the Warranty Assessment Report may indicate that further investigation is needed.

If Tarion determines that at least one item in the Warranty Assessment Report is warranted, the conciliation will be considered to be "chargeable" to the builder (unless one of the exceptions set out on page 3 of this Bulletin apply).

The purpose of a conciliation inspection is to allow Tarion to observe the condition of items listed on the relevant Statutory Warranty Form and in some cases to gather relevant documentation that the homeowner and builder may wish to provide so that an assessment of warrantability can be made. Builders are invited to attend conciliation inspections to assist with the purpose of such inspections.

CONDUCT AT CONCILIATION OR CLAIM INSPECTION

All parties at a conciliation or claim inspection are expected to act in a respectful, courteous and cooperative manner. Builders are expected to follow the direction of Tarion staff and be mindful of requests made by homeowners. Tarion staff have full discretion to end a conciliation inspection in the event of disruptive activity by a participant (homeowner or builder).

To participate in the conciliation or claim inspection process, builders and homeowners must abide by any policies issued by Tarion from time to time that relate to the conduct of these inspections, including policies relating to the taking of photographs and video or audio recordings.

STEP 6: Post-Conciliation Repair Period

If the Warranty Assessment Report identifies any items that are warranted, the builder will be given one final opportunity to repair or resolve the items, within a maximum of 30 days from the date when Tarion issues the Warranty Assessment Report, unless at Tarion's discretion (and in consultation with the homeowner) there is a valid reason why additional time ought to be provided in order to effect a particular repair (for example, the item involves an Extraordinary Situation as described in Appendix A to this Bulletin).

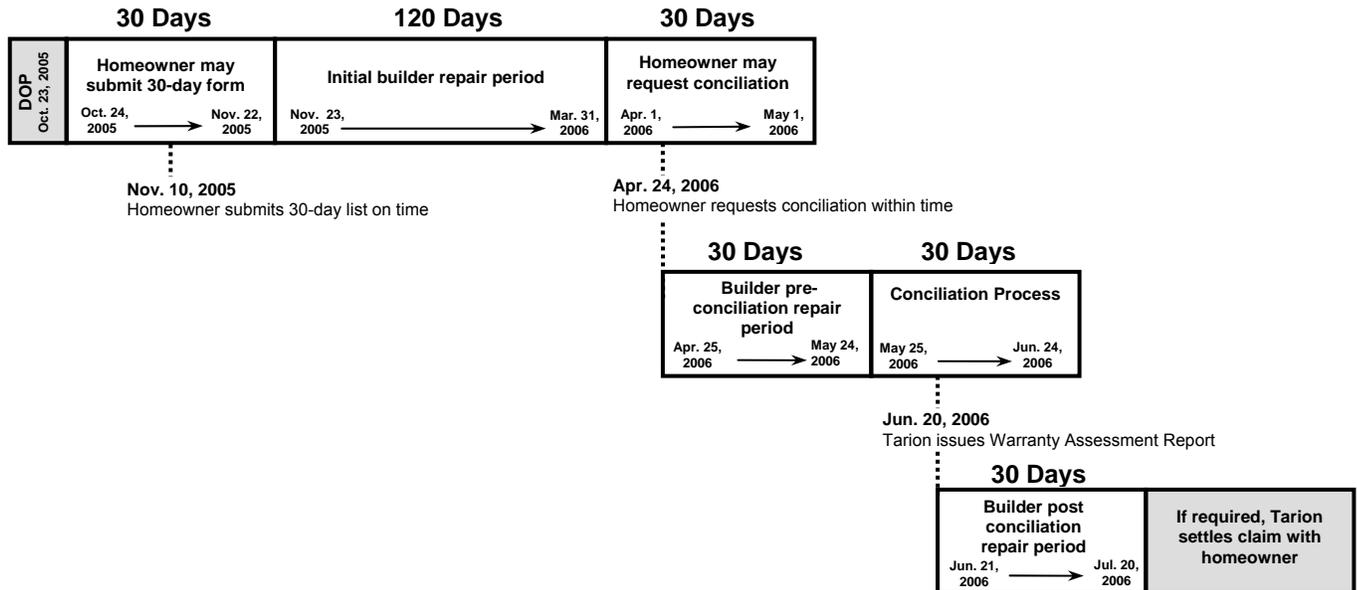

If the builder is unable to effect a repair due to a denial of access or due to a disagreement with the homeowner as to proper method of repair, the builder must notify Tarion in writing of the issue prior to the expiry of the post-conciliation repair period. If the builder fails to so notify Tarion, the builder's ability to rely upon the issue as a defence to the conciliation being chargeable may be prejudiced.

STEP 7: Tarion Settles the Claim

If the builder has not corrected or otherwise resolved all items covered by the warranty within 30 days of the date when Tarion issues the Warranty Assessment Report (or otherwise in accordance with the Warranty Assessment Report), Tarion will settle the remaining warranted items directly with the homeowner. This may involve a claim inspection at the home, and if so, the builder will be notified in writing of the date and time of the claim inspection. Tarion will pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund, or will arrange for the repairs, and invoice the builder for the amount of the compensation or repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.

EXAMPLE – STATUTORY WARRANTY CLAIM PROCESS

This example illustrates the Statutory Warranty Claims Process that would apply for the warranted items on a 30-Day Form submitted by a homeowner who took possession of their home on October 23, 2005.

1. The homeowner may submit a 30-Day Form in the 30 day period following the date of possession which is anytime between October 24, 2005 and November 22, 2005 inclusive. The homeowner in our example submits the 30-Day Form on November 10, 2005.
2. The initial builder repair period starts 31 days after the date of possession on November 23, 2005. It lasts for 120 days, but excludes the December 24th to January 1st Holiday Period, so it ends on March 31, 2006. (The 120 days would otherwise end on March 22, 2006.)
3. The homeowner may request a conciliation at any time in the 30 day period that begins on April 1, 2006. However, because that 30 days ends on April 30, 2006 which is a Sunday, the homeowner's request for conciliation period would actually end on May 1, 2006. In this example, the homeowner requests a conciliation on April 24, 2006 and Tarion schedules the conciliation inspection on May 31, 2006.
4. The builder has 30 days after the date of the homeowner's request for conciliation (from April 25, 2006 to May 24, 2006 inclusive) to resolve any outstanding warranty items listed on the 30-Day Form before the conciliation inspection takes place.
5. Tarion conducts the conciliation inspection on May 31, 2006 and issues a Warranty Assessment Report on June 20, 2006.
6. The builder has a final repair period of 30 days from the date of the Warranty Assessment Report (June 21, 2006 to July 20, 2006 inclusive) to resolve all warranted items on the report.

PART D. WARRANTY REVIEW: BUILDER-REQUESTED CONCILIATION

A Warranty Review, available to all registered builders, is a builder-requested conciliation to assess a warranty dispute between a builder and a homeowner. A Warranty Review can only take place if Tarion has either already received a Statutory Warranty Form from a homeowner relating to the item(s) in question, or the homeowner consents to the Warranty Review.

A Warranty Review must be requested between Day 30 and Day 110 of the initial builder repair period, however, this will not extend the normal 120-day initial builder repair period under the Claims Process for warranty repairs.

A Warranty Review is limited to assessing disputes between builders and homeowners about whether an item is warranted, and the correct method or timing of repair required to fix the items. Warranty Reviews are not available for measurement-based items found in the Tarion Construction Performance Guidelines.

A Warranty Review has the same force and effect on all parties as a homeowner-requested conciliation. Builders are required to repair those items determined by Tarion to be warranted, or they will be found to be in breach of warranty.

Procedure and Fee

1. Builder Requests the Warranty Review

- A builder may request a Warranty Review no earlier than 30 days and no later than 110 days within the initial builder repair period.
- Builders are required to deliver the request for a Warranty Review to Tarion in writing. In support of the request, a builder is required to indicate the items for review (from the applicable Statutory Warranty Form submitted by the homeowner), and what the builder's position is on each item.
- There is a $550 fee, payable in advance by cheque, money order, or other Tarion-approved payment method, for each Warranty Review. Payment must accompany each Warranty Review request. If Tarion's Warranty Assessment Report states that the conciliation is not a chargeable conciliation, the fee will be refunded to the builder.

2. Assessment by Tarion and Warranty Assessment Report

- Tarion will conduct an on-site inspection or a desk assessment and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the builder and the homeowner within 30 days of the builder's delivery of a complete request for Warranty Review.

3. Repairs by Builder

- If any warranted items are identified, the builder is required to complete any necessary repairs no later than 30 days after the expiry of the 120-day initial builder repair period.

4. Tarion Settles the Claim

- If the builder has not completed the repairs or otherwise resolved the warranted items within the 30 day period described in 3. above, then Tarion will settle directly with the homeowner and pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund or arrange the repairs. Tarion will invoice the builder for the amount of the compensation or repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.

5. A Warranty Review is not considered a chargeable conciliation and the fee is refunded if:
- Tarion determines that there are no warranted items; or
 - there are warranted items and Tarion agrees with the builder's method or timing of repair for all items in question.

BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM

A builder who disagrees with Tarion's determination of warrantability or chargeability in a Warranty Assessment Report may be eligible to request an arbitration under the Builder Arbitration Forum. An arbitration request may only be made by registered builders who attend the conciliation inspections and must be made within 28 days of receipt of the Warranty Assessment Report. For full eligibility requirements and other information, please refer to Builder Bulletin 41: Builder Arbitration Forum.

APPENDIX A: EXCEPTIONS TO THE CLAIMS PROCESS

The Claims Process applies to typical warranty situations. Under the Exceptions, the Claims Process will be adjusted for the following situations.

1. Emergencies

An emergency warranty situation is any situation that occurs within the warranty period and involves a warranted item that if not attended to immediately, in the opinion of Tarion, would likely result in substantial damage to the dwelling or would likely represent a substantial risk to the health and safety of the occupants or means the home is uninhabitable.

An emergency includes the following situations:

- Complete loss of heat, between September 15 and May 15;
- Gas leak;
- Complete loss of electricity;
- Complete loss of water;
- Complete stoppage of sewage disposal;
- Plumbing leak that requires the entire water supply to be shut off;
- Major collapse of any part of the home's exterior or interior structure;
- Major water penetration on the interior walls or ceiling; and/or
- A large pool of standing water inside the home.

Damage caused by forces beyond a builder's control (for example, municipal or utility service failures or 'acts of God') is not warranted under the Act, and therefore is not an "emergency" warranty situation.

Emergency Procedure

1. A homeowner who believes there is an emergency warranty situation should contact the builder first, using the emergency service contact information that the builder is required to provide in the Homeowner Information Package. The homeowner should follow the builder's instructions in attempting to handle the emergency situation.
2. The builder is permitted up to 24 hours to resolve the emergency, to ensure that the situation has been made safe and secure, and to prevent any further damage from occurring. Full repair of the defect in accordance with the builder's warranty obligations may take longer to complete once the initial emergency has been dealt with. Builders are required to complete the full repair (including repairing any damage to builder installed materials) in accordance with their warranty obligations as soon as possible and no later than 30 days from the date that the homeowner reported the emergency.

3. If the builder cannot be reached within 24 hours using the emergency contact information provided in the Homeowner Information Package, or if the builder has been contacted but has not resolved the emergency within 24 hours, the homeowner is entitled to contact Tarion for further direction. Tarion will determine (usually by phone) if this is an emergency or if the item should be added to the homeowner's next Statutory Warranty Form. If the homeowner satisfies Tarion that this is an emergency warranty situation, Tarion will first try to contact the builder. If Tarion is unable to contact the builder, or the builder is unwilling to resolve the emergency, Tarion will instruct the homeowner to make or contract for the necessary repairs to correct the emergency, i.e., any repairs necessary to make the home safe and secure, and to prevent any further damage in the near future.
4. If the homeowner is unable to contact the builder and Tarion, the homeowner may, without jeopardizing their warranty rights, do or contract for the necessary repair work to correct the emergency only.
5. If the homeowner has arranged to have the emergency repairs done and wishes to be reimbursed, the homeowner is required to obtain an Emergency Form (available from Tarion by calling 1-877-982-7466 or from the Tarion website), and to submit to Tarion and the builder the completed Emergency Form along with all required supporting documents (i.e., receipts, photographs of the damage and repair if available).
6. Within 10 days of receipt of the completed Emergency Form, Tarion will contact the builder to determine whether the builder has reimbursed the homeowner, and if not, will conduct a conciliation, and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the homeowner and the builder. If Tarion identifies any emergency item as warranted in the Warranty Assessment Report, the conciliation will be considered chargeable.
7. Tarion will notify the builder that the builder has 30 days to reimburse the homeowner for their reasonable costs associated with the warranted repairs undertaken and to complete repairs to damaged builder installed materials, as documented in the Emergency Form and confirmed by Tarion in the Warranty Assessment Report.
8. If the builder fails to reimburse the homeowner, Tarion will settle directly with the homeowner, and pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund or arrange for the repairs. The builder will be invoiced for the amount of the compensation paid and for repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and any applicable taxes.

EXTREME EMERGENCIES

An extreme emergency is a situation that, in the opinion of Tarion, requires an immediate response in order to preserve the integrity of the home, and/or prevent serious personal injury or warranted damage. The Claims Process may be accelerated in extreme emergency situations. Tarion will make reasonable attempts to inform the builder if an accelerated process is required.

2. Seasonal Items

A seasonal item is any warranted item listed on a Statutory Warranty Form submitted to Tarion between November 16 and April 30 (inclusive), involving the exterior of the home, which cannot be repaired effectively within the normal Claims Process due to weather constraints. A seasonal item includes a warranted item related to:

- Exterior painting;
- Exterior cement/concrete work (e.g., parging application/repairs);
- Exterior mortar work (e.g., brick installation/repairs);
- Exterior stucco work/repairs, including repairs to exterior insulation finishing systems;
- Exterior caulking;
- In-ground supports for decks; or
- Any other exterior work deemed appropriate by Tarion, excluding air conditioning, grading, sod, driveways and walkways, which are covered separately below.

If the item is submitted on a Statutory Warranty Form to Tarion between May 1 and November 15 inclusive, the normal Claims Process applies. A builder who needs more time due to unsuitable weather conditions may apply to Tarion for an extension under the “Extraordinary Situations” provisions of this Bulletin (see page 20).

Seasonal Items

If a Seasonal Item is submitted on a Statutory Warranty Form between November 16 and April 30 inclusive, the following procedure applies:

1. The builder is required to complete the repairs as soon as possible after the return of suitable weather conditions, but no later than September 1;
2. If the item has not been repaired by September 1, the homeowner may contact Tarion in the 30-day period between and including September 2 and October 1 to schedule a conciliation inspection. Tarion will advise the builder in writing of the scheduled date of the conciliation inspection;
3. The builder has 30 days from the date when the homeowner requests a conciliation to complete the repairs;
4. If the builder has not completed the repairs within 30 days, Tarion will conduct a conciliation inspection and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the builder and the homeowner within the following 30 days;
5. The builder has up to 30 days from the date when Tarion issues the Warranty Assessment Report to complete the repairs, as long as the repairs are completed by November 15; and
6. If the builder does not complete the repairs within 30 days or by November 15, if earlier, Tarion will settle directly with the homeowner and pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund or arrange for the repairs. Tarion will invoice the builder for the amount of the compensation or repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.

3. Special Seasonal Items: Final Grading, Sod, Driveways and Walkways

A Special Seasonal Item is any warranted item listed on a Statutory Warranty Form involving final grading, sod, driveways or walkways.

Special Seasonal Items Procedure

The Special Seasonal Items Procedure is as follows:

1. The homeowner requests the repair or installation of final grading, sod, driveways and walkways by listing the item and submitting the 30-Day or Year-End Form to Tarion;
2. (a) For homes with a date of possession between October 1, 2003 and April 30, 2004, inclusive, the builder has up to one year from the date of possession to complete the installation or repair (subject to consideration by Tarion of any specific agreement between the homeowner and the builder in a relevant purchase agreement, and any limitations on installation due to the developer and/or subdivision agreement or relevant municipal agreement); and
(b) For homes with a date of possession on or after May 1, 2004, the builder must install or repair the item(s) within 270 days of “seasonable weather” from the date of possession (subject to consideration by Tarion of any specific agreement between the homeowner and the builder in the purchase agreement, and any limitations on installation due to the developer and/or subdivision agreement or relevant municipal agreement). “Seasonable weather” for this type of work is the period between May 1 and November 15, inclusive, in any given calendar year. There are 199 days of seasonable weather in one calendar year.

Examples:

If a homeowner takes possession of the home on June 30, 2004, the deadline for installation or repair of special seasonal items is September 9, 2005. The “seasonable weather” days are calculated as follows:

	Number of “Seasonable Weather” Days
July 1, 2004 to November 15, 2004	138
November 16, 2004 to April 30, 2005	0
May 1, 2005 to September 9, 2005	132
Total	270 days

If a homeowner takes possession of the home on November 30, 2004, the deadline for installation or repair of special seasonal items is July 10, 2006. The “seasonable weather” days are calculated as follows:

	Number of “Seasonable Weather” Days
December 1, 2004 to April 30, 2005	0
May 1, 2005 to November 15, 2005	199
November 16, 2005 to April 30, 2006	0
May 1, 2006 to July 10, 2006	71
Total	270 days

3. If the repair or installation of a special seasonal item is not completed within the builder repair period described in 2. above, the homeowner may contact Tarion within the 30 days following the builder repair period to request a conciliation.
4. Tarion will conduct a conciliation inspection and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the builder and the homeowner within 30 days after the homeowner notifies Tarion.
5. If the Warranty Assessment Report states that any of the final grading, sod, driveway and walkway items are warranted, Tarion will then (subject to consideration by Tarion of any specific agreement between the homeowner and the builder in the relevant purchase agreement, and any limitations on installation due to the developer and/or subdivision agreement or relevant municipal agreement) settle directly with the homeowner and pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund or arrange the repair. Tarion will invoice the builder for the amount of the compensation or repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.

4. Air Conditioning between May 15 and September 15

Air conditioning defects are covered under the one year warranty only. The warranty applies if the builder installed the system, or undertook to install it but did not complete the installation. A warranted air conditioning defect that results in a complete lack of cooling between May 15 and September 15 inclusive will be dealt with outside the standard Claims Process, in accordance with the following procedure.

Procedure for Air Conditioning: May 15 to September 15

The Procedure is as follows:

1. The homeowner contacts Tarion to report a complete lack of cooling during the period from May 15 to September 15 inclusive, and during the first year of possession;
2. Tarion requests the homeowner to complete and submit an Air Conditioning Form;
3. The builder is required to complete the repairs as soon as possible and no later than 30 days from the day Tarion receives the Air Conditioning Form;
4. The homeowner can request a conciliation by Tarion if the builder has not completed the repairs by the end of the 30-day period;
5. Tarion will conduct a conciliation inspection and issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the builder and the homeowner within 10 days of the homeowner's request; and
6. If the Warranty Assessment Report states that the air conditioning item is warranted, the conciliation will be considered chargeable and Tarion will settle directly with the homeowner, and will pay compensation to the homeowner from the guarantee fund or arrange the repairs. The builder will be invoiced for the amount of the compensation or repair costs, plus an administration fee of 15 per cent and applicable taxes.

5. Extraordinary Situations

Builder Extraordinary Situations

A builder Extraordinary Situation is where a builder requires additional time beyond the applicable builder repair period to complete the necessary repairs to items listed on a Statutory Warranty Form, due to special circumstances affecting the builder or one of the homes the builder is servicing. For example, a repair may require the special order of a part that will take more time to arrive than the initial builder repair period permitted under the Claims Process or the repair may be delayed due to unusual and unsuitable weather conditions.

The special circumstance must result in the builder being unable to complete a repair, as opposed to the repair being inconvenient. Increased cost of the repair, for example, as a result of the original installer being unavailable is not an acceptable reason on its own for a builder to delay repairs beyond the time set out in the standard Claims Process.

Procedure for Builder Extraordinary Situations

The Procedure for Builder Extraordinary Situations is as follows:

1. A builder who encounters an Extraordinary Situation regarding an item listed on a Statutory Warranty Form is required to notify Tarion and the homeowner, in writing, prior to the date of a conciliation inspection and no later than 10 days before the end of the applicable builder repair period. The written notice must:
 - a. State which item cannot be repaired within the applicable timeframe and why, including written proof of the builder's situation;
 - b. Acknowledge that the item is warranted and that the builder undertakes to repair it; and
 - c. State the proposed extension needed to complete the repair(s) in question.
2. Tarion will then review the situation, and may require the builder to produce additional proof of the circumstances in question.
3. Tarion will inform the builder and the homeowner after receipt of the written notice with sufficient proof from the builder, if an extension of time is justified, and if so, the number of days by which the builder repair period may be extended to complete the repair(s) in question.

Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situations

Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situations may require an extension of the applicable builder repair period for a part of the construction industry, a region, or the entire province. Examples include:

- An irregular (i.e., not ongoing or “normal”) labour or trade shortage;
- An irregular (i.e., not ongoing or “normal”) shortage of work material;
- Strikes or other serious labour disruptions; and
- Severe weather or other ‘acts of God’.

Procedure for Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situations

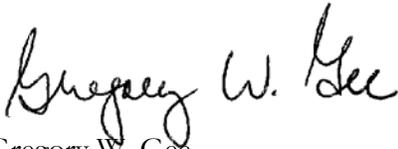

The Procedure for Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situations is as follows:

1. A potential Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situation may be brought to the attention of Tarion's Vice President of Claims by a written notice from a builder, from the OHBA or from a local Home Builders' Association;

2. Tarion will thoroughly review the information, and may require additional documentation to assess the situation;
3. If Tarion confirms that an Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situation exists or is about to happen, Tarion will issue a written Warranty Alert to all builders affected. The Alert will describe the nature of the event; which regions, industries, or types of warranties are affected; and in what circumstances the permitted extension will apply to the relevant builder repair periods; and
4. A builder who is affected by the Industry/Regional Extraordinary Situation and wishes to apply the extended builder repair period provided in the Warranty Alert is required to provide written notice to the affected homeowners as soon as possible. The notice must be delivered before the expiry of the applicable builder repair periods, and no later than 10 days from receipt of the Alert. The notice must include an explanation of why the extension is required for the home, and the number of days that the builder repair period has been extended due to the Alert. The standard builder repair periods in the Claims Process will continue to apply to builders who do not provide this notice to their homeowners.

APPENDIX B: ONGOING REVIEW OF THIS BULLETIN

Tarion continues to collect and review input from all stakeholders, including builders and homeowners, and to monitor the appropriate data regarding the implementation of the Customer Service Standard. Once sufficient data has been collected and reviewed, Tarion will decide whether to reduce the initial builder repair period from 120 to 90 days.

ESCALATING CONSEQUENCES

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This Builder Bulletin applies to you as a vendor or vendor/builder (builder) as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (the Act). This Bulletin provides details of the repercussions (Escalating Consequences) for builders who fail to comply with the minimum Customer Service Standard contained in Builder Bulletin 42: Customer Service Standard.

The Escalating Consequences apply to builders who fail to comply with the Customer Service Standard and will affect the terms and conditions of registration that are imposed by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP) on those builders. They come into effect and will be based on all Conciliation Reports, including Warranty Review Reports, dated on or after October 1, 2004, one year after the implementation of the Customer Service Standard. The purpose of this delayed implementation is to ensure that builders have an opportunity to adjust their customer service to the new system.

The Escalating Consequences described here are already imposed by ONHWP when any builder's performance deteriorates and the associated risk to ONHWP increases.

This Bulletin was developed following consultation with builders, the Ontario Home Builders' Association, consumers and government. Nothing in this Bulletin should be construed to limit the authority of the Registrar to impose terms and conditions of builders' registration or renewal.

RATIO OF CHARGEABLE CONCILIATIONS TO NUMBER OF POSSESSIONS

If a builder fails to complete the necessary warranty repairs within the required Builder Repair Periods under the Customer Service Standard, the builder will have a chargeable conciliation, as defined in Builder Bulletin 42. The builder's ratio of the number of such chargeable conciliations to the number of possessions over the past three years provides an objective indicator of whether the builder is complying with the Customer Service Standard.

A builder's record will trigger the Escalating Consequences if:

- The calculation of the builder's ratio results in a ratio that is greater than 0.04, and
- The builder has at least two chargeable conciliations (including chargeable conciliations arising from Warranty Review Reports) over the past three years.

Examples

A builder who has two chargeable conciliations and 50 possessions (calculated using the number of possessions in the past three years) will have a ratio of 0.04.

1. No. of chargeable conciliations = 3
No. of possessions in the past three years = 54
Ratio = $3/54 = 0.06$ (i.e., greater than 0.04)
Builder is subject to Interview/Audit (preliminary to Escalating Consequences)
2. No. of chargeable conciliations = 4
No. of possessions in the past three years = 100
Ratio = $4/100 = 0.04$
Builder is not subject to Interview/Audit or Escalating Consequences
3. No. of chargeable conciliations = 1
No. of possessions in the past three years = 12
Ratio = $1/12 = 0.08$
Builder is not subject to Interview/Audit or Escalating Consequences: although the ratio is greater than 0.04, the builder has fewer than two chargeable conciliations.

CALCULATE YOUR CHARGEABLE CONCILIATION RATIO

- (1) Number of chargeable conciliations (including chargeable conciliations arising from Warranty Review Reports) in the past three years = _____. If this number is 1 or 0, a builder will not be subject to the Interview/Audit or the Escalating Consequences. If this number is 2 or more, continue to calculate:
- (2) Number of possessions in the past three years = _____
- (3) Ratio: (1) divided by (2) = _____

If this ratio is higher than 0.04, i.e., 0.05 or 0.06 or higher, then a builder has crossed the “unacceptable” threshold, and is subject to the Interview/Audit (preliminary stage before Escalating Consequences).
If this ratio is 0.04 or lower, i.e., 0.04 or 0.03 or less, the builder’s ratio is acceptable and the builder is NOT subject to the Interview/Audit or the Escalating Consequences.

INTERVIEW/AUDIT: PRELIMINARY STAGE BEFORE ESCALATING CONSEQUENCES

A builder’s chargeable conciliation Ratio will be reviewed monthly by ONHWP. If the ratio of chargeable conciliations to number of possessions is higher than the threshold ratio of 0.04 and the builder has accumulated two or more chargeable conciliations in the past three years, the builder’s compliance with the Customer Service Standard will be subject to a review by ONHWP. If the review reveals that the builder’s level of compliance with the Customer Service Standard is unsatisfactory, ONHWP will require the builder to:

- Attend a meeting with ONHWP to review the builder’s current customer service practices and how they can be improved, and to review ONHWP statistics/records about the builder; and/or
- Undergo an audit of the builder’s customer service practices, including a construction review of at least one home prior to the pre-delivery inspection.

If the outcome of an interview and/or audit is satisfactory, then no further action will be taken. If the outcome is not satisfactory, then the builder will be placed in Level 1 of Escalating Consequences.

THREE LEVELS OF ESCALATING CONSEQUENCES

Level 1

If a builder is placed in Level 1, the builder will be required to:

1. Provide a written commitment to improve the builder's service to meet the minimum Customer Service Standard, including the Warranty Service Rules, with an appropriate action plan to accomplish that goal;
2. Where appropriate, attend a course(s) for improving warranty service (e.g., customer service, construction practices, business skills); and
3. Carry out their warranty service within the provisions of the minimum Customer Service Standard.

If the builder demonstrates sustained compliance with the Customer Service Standard and incurs no further chargeable conciliations, no further action will be taken.

A builder placed in Level 1 will be moved to Level 2:

- In 90 days, if the builder clearly demonstrates an unwillingness to cooperate with ONHWP requirements (e.g., refusal to provide written commitment or to attend training);
- In one year, if monitoring reveals that the builder's compliance with the Customer Service Standard does not improve; or
- At any time, if the builder's warranty service delivery significantly worsens, e.g., if the ratio of chargeable conciliations to possessions increases significantly.

Level 2

Builders in Level 2 will be required to carry out their warranty service within the provisions of the Restricted Warranty Service Rules. Under the Restricted Warranty Service Rules, the builder Repair Period after Conciliation, as described in Builder Bulletin 42, is not available to the builder. Once ONHWP has delivered the Conciliation Report to the homeowner and to the builder, the builder will no longer have the additional 30 days to make the necessary repairs. Instead, ONHWP will settle the warranty claim directly with the homeowner. The claim will be made against the ONHWP guarantee fund and the builder will be invoiced for the value of the claim, plus a 15 per cent administration fee and applicable taxes.

At the discretion of the Registrar, a builder placed in Level 2 may also be subject to:

- Security requirements in addition to any security already required according to the builder's risk assessment (see Builder Bulletin 28 for details on ONHWP's builder risk assessment process); and/or
- Restrictions on the number of future enrolments that will be approved by ONHWP (i.e., restriction on the number of homes the builder may build), in addition to any current enrolment limits imposed by ONHWP on that builder.

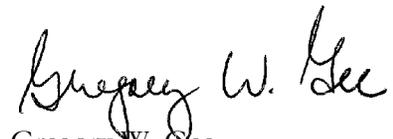

A builder who demonstrates sustained compliance with the Customer Service Standard over a period of at least one year will be moved back to Level 1. A builder will be moved to Level 3 if any warranty Claim (as defined in Builder Bulletin 42) is paid by ONHWP on the builder's behalf while the builder is in Level 2.

Level 3

A builder placed in Level 3 will be subject to a Notice of Proposal (NOP) to revoke or suspend their registration. The NOP will be based on the builder's demonstrated failure to perform their obligation to meet the minimum Customer Service Standard. The NOP is in addition to any other remedies available to the Registrar, and other circumstances in which the Registrar may issue a Notice of Proposal under the Act or Regulations. Under the Act, a builder has the right to appeal an NOP to the License Appeal Tribunal (LAT).

WAIVER OF INDEMNITY FROM BUILDERS

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

Tarion Warranty Corporation (“Tarion”) is entitled to recover from builders¹ amounts paid out of the Guarantee Fund in respect of warranted claims made by homeowners. In certain circumstances where a claim has been originally deemed “not warranted” by Tarion but the Licence Appeal Tribunal (“LAT”) reverses Tarion’s finding and holds that the item is warranted, the Registrar has the discretion to waive Tarion’s statutory and contractual rights of indemnity against a builder. This Bulletin sets out the guidelines under which Tarion’s Registrar shall exercise his or her discretion in such cases.

BACKGROUND

Builders are obligated, under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (the “Act”) and under their Vendor and Builder Agreements with Tarion, to indemnify Tarion for losses resulting from the builder’s breach of warranty. This indemnification obligation includes situations where Tarion initially determines that a homeowner claim is “not warranted”, but its decision is reversed by LAT on appeal by the homeowner.

On January 24, 2002, the Board of Directors of Tarion approved a pilot project to test a formal framework under which Tarion would exercise its discretion to waive, in certain circumstances, its right to recover from a builder where LAT overturned Tarion’s ruling in favour of the builder. The pilot project was subject to certain conditions: it applied to claims related primarily to workmanship; builders had to be in good standing with Tarion, cooperate with Tarion and provide full disclosure during the conciliation and appeals process. Recovery would not be waived where the builder’s conduct in the conciliation and appeal process was not fully co-operative, and for common elements claims, the waiver was capped at $20,000 for claims relating to a condominium’s common elements.

The pilot project applied to conciliations conducted between May 1, 2002 and April 30, 2003. On April 8, 2004, the Board decided to make the framework a permanent policy by amending the Regulations under the Act and creating this Builder Bulletin.

¹ In this Bulletin “builder” refers to a builder or vendor as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

GUIDELINES FOR EXERCISE OF REGISTRAR'S DISCRETION

The Registrar shall exercise his or her discretion to grant a waiver of indemnity if (a) the builder meets the criteria set out in this Bulletin and if (b) the item or condition in issue also meets the criteria set out in this Bulletin:

A) A builder is eligible for the application of the Registrar's discretion to waive indemnity when:

1. The builder, as well as any associated builder², is in full compliance with the Act and its Regulations, Builder Bulletins and any agreement between Tarion and the builder from the date of the conciliation that gave rise to the LAT decision to the later of the date of the LAT decision overturning Tarion's ruling and the decision of the court on appeal of the LAT decision, if appealed.
2. The conciliation that led to the LAT appeal was designated as "non-chargeable"³ by Tarion.
3. The LAT decision is not attributable in whole or in part to the builder's conduct towards the homeowner (for example, conduct such as a lack of communication, misrepresentation or other unreasonable activity).
4. The builder has fully and completely co-operated with Tarion throughout the conciliation and appeal process and has participated in the conciliation and appeal process as required by Tarion. For example, the builder must have:
 - provided full disclosure to Tarion of all information and documents relevant to determining whether the contested item should be warranted. The disclosure obligation begins before conciliation and continues throughout the appeal process, including the LAT hearing itself.
 - attended the conciliation inspection (or cooperated with the desk assessment) that gave rise to the LAT appeal. If unable to attend for reasons beyond his or her control, the builder must have given advance written notice to Tarion, with an explanation of why attendance was not possible, the builder's position on each of the items to be conciliated, and all reasonable supporting documentation and information.

² An "associated builder" is a builder that has a common controlling principal. A controlling principal is a person or combination of persons that either alone or together have a direct or indirect controlling interest in a builder such that the person or persons can be characterized as the operating or controlling mind of the builder.

³ Please refer to Builder Bulletin 42 (Revised) for a definition of "conciliation", "chargeable conciliation" and exceptions to chargeability.

- cooperated with Tarion’s counsel in preparation for the LAT proceeding, by providing information and documents as requested and by assisting in securing the attendance of sub-trades, real estate agents or other persons associated with the builder who might be required to testify.
- attended and participated in the LAT proceedings and complied with the LAT rules, once the builder is added as a party to the LAT proceedings.

B) An item or condition is eligible for the application of the Registrar’s discretion to waive indemnity when:

1. Either,
 - (i) the item or condition was determined by Tarion to be “not warranted” or,
 - (ii) the item or condition was determined by Tarion to be “warranted”, but the claim is denied by Tarion on the grounds that the homeowner refused access to the builder to do the repairs because the homeowner disagreed with the method proposed by the builder and approved by Tarion. If LAT accepts the homeowner’s repair method over the builder’s repair method, the amount of the waiver will be the difference between the repair method ordered by LAT and the builder’s repair method, if any; and
2. The item or condition was found to be warranted by LAT (and LAT’s decision in this regard is upheld by Divisional Court if there is a further appeal); and
3. LAT rules that the item or condition falls under one of the following warranties:
 - One year warranty for work and materials and fitness for habitation;
 - One year warranty for constructing in accordance with the Ontario Building Code (“OBC”);
 - Two year warranty that construction is free from violations of the OBC affecting health and safety;
 - Two year warranty against water penetration in the basement, foundation or building envelope;
 - Two year warranty against defects in the electrical, plumbing, and heating delivery and distribution systems; exterior cladding; and
 - Major structural defect warranty.

An item or condition is not eligible for the application of the Registrar's discretion to waive indemnity when:

1. The item does not meet all of the requirements in (B) above; or
2. Additional information is disclosed to Tarion after conciliation which materially impacts the determination of warranty coverage⁴; or
3. The item involves the substitution warranty, the delayed closing and occupancy warranty, disputes about compliance with the statutory definitions of "vendor", "builder" "owner" and "home", and compliance with statutory notice requirements and warranty periods; or
4. The item involves a claim for deposit protection or damages arising from the builder's failure to perform a construction contract; or
5. The item involves a dispute related to a holdback or other monies owed or allegedly owed by the homeowner to the builder; or
6. The application of the waiver to the item in issue will result in a material and adverse impact on the Guarantee Fund administered by Tarion.

CONDOMINIUM COMMON ELEMENTS

An item or condition in a decision dealing with condominium common elements shall be eligible for the application of the Registrar's discretion to waive indemnity if it meets all the requirements as set out in this Bulletin, subject to an aggregate maximum waiver of $20,000 for claims relating to the condominium's common elements.

NOTIFICATION TO BUILDER OF TARION'S DETERMINATION TO GRANT OR NOT TO GRANT WAIVER

After receipt of a LAT decision to which this Bulletin applies, the Registrar shall determine, using the guidelines set out in this Bulletin, whether or not to waive Tarion's right to indemnity and will notify the builder in writing of the decision. The waiver will not be finalized until all applicable appeal periods have expired, and the application of the waiver will be conditional upon the builder's continued compliance with this Bulletin's requirements throughout any appeals.

⁴ This exclusion applies, for example, where a defect that was reported and ruled by Tarion to be not warranted based on workmanship, is later shown to be warranted based on an OBC violation that was not apparent at the time of the conciliation; or where a latent defect is ruled by Tarion to be not warranted, but is later shown to be a valid warranty claim based upon an acceptable expert report not available at the time of the conciliation.

Builder Bulletin 44

If the waiver is not granted, the builder will be required to comply with the LAT decision. If the builder fails to comply, Tarion will compensate the homeowner according to LAT's order, or perform the repairs, and invoice the builder.

If the waiver is granted, Tarion will proceed directly to comply with the LAT decision by arranging for repairs or otherwise compensating the homeowner. The builder will not be invoiced for any amounts to which the waiver of indemnity applies.

FREEHOLD DELAYED CLOSING WARRANTY
 (AGREEMENTS OF PURCHASE AND SALE FOR FREEHOLD ON OR AFTER JULY 1, 2008)

WHAT THIS BULLETIN IS ABOUT

This Bulletin explains how the Delayed Closing Warranty applies to agreements of purchase and sale (“purchase agreements”) dated on or after July 1, 2008, and supersedes Builder Bulletin 25 (Revised) for the purchase of a new freehold house. If your agreement of purchase and sale is dated before July 1, 2008 please see Builder Bulletin 25 (Revised) for details of the applicable Delayed Closing Warranty. However, please note that: the Delayed Closing Warranty does not apply to contract homes; and the 5-day grace period for transactions under the old regime will not apply to freehold homes where the date of Closing occurs after June 30, 2009. In this Bulletin “builder” refers to a builder or vendor, as applicable, as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. Tarion has also prepared a document entitled “Delayed Closing Warranty for Freehold Homes – Reference Guide for Freehold Home Builders.” This guide will assist builders in arranging their building and business practices to address the new Delayed Closing Warranty.

Note: Capitalized terms in this Bulletin have the meanings given to them in the freehold Addendums referred to in Section 2 below.

The Bulletin is divided into the following sections:

Section	Page
1. Overview of Delayed Closing Warranty for Freehold Homes -----	2
2. The Freehold Addendums -----	2
3. Statement of Critical Dates -----	2

The Bulletin also contains the following appendices:

1. Appendix “A”: Firm Closing Date Timeline Schematic
2. Appendix “B”: Tentative Closing Date Timeline Schematic

1. OVERVIEW OF DELAYED CLOSING WARRANTY FOR FREEHOLD HOMES

The Delayed Closing Warranty is set out in a new Regulation under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act a copy of which is available on the Tarion website. The obligations of builders are set out in an Addendum that must form part of each agreement of purchase and sale (“purchase agreement”), as described below.

The Delayed Closing Warranty is intended to protect purchasers from the impact of delays in the Closing of their purchase agreement. This objective is achieved by, among other things:

- Making clear the firm or tentative nature of the Closing date being promised. Builders must provide a specific Closing date in the purchase agreement, and must expressly tell the purchaser whether the date is firm or tentative (so the purchaser knows up front that the date may be changed);
- Limiting the builder’s use of Early Termination Conditions in the purchase agreement;
- Disclosing in the purchase agreement the status of development approvals and the status of construction so the purchaser can better assess the risk that a delay may occur;
- Providing adequate notice to the purchaser when Closing is to be delayed;
- Compensating purchasers where a delay in excess of permitted delay has occurred; and
- Setting an Outside Closing Date beyond which the purchaser has a right to terminate the transaction.

The Delayed Closing Warranty is in addition to the basic obligation of a builder to take all reasonable steps to complete the construction of a home and to close the purchase and sale transaction without delay.

2. THE FREEHOLD ADDENDUMS

The Addendums for freehold homes set out standard contract provisions relating to delayed Closing that must be included in all purchase agreements for new homes in Ontario. There are two forms of the freehold Addendums available – one for purchase agreements offering a Firm Closing Date from the outset, and a second for purchase agreements which set a tentative Closing date and allow the builder to extend as of right. The builder must choose one or the other of the Addendums to include as part of the purchase agreement.

A copy of the Addendum for the Firm Closing Date option is attached as Appendix “A”, and a copy of the Addendum for the Tentative Closing Date option is attached as Appendix “B”. Both are available in electronic format from the Tarion website at www.tarion.com.

The Addendums set out important obligations of a builder in respect of delays and should be read carefully.

The builder is required to complete all blanks in the Addendums.

Failure to include an Addendum in a purchase agreement, or to fill in all applicable blanks, is contrary to the terms and conditions of registration. It may result in the purchaser being able to terminate the purchase agreement, and may result in sanctions by Tarion up to and including the revocation of the builder’s registration and thus of the ability to build new homes.

3. STATEMENT OF CRITICAL DATES

The first page of the Addendum is the Statement of Critical Dates. This document sets out Critical Dates related to Closing. The builder must complete the blanks in the Statement of Critical Dates or else the purchase agreement is not enforceable by the builder.

Tarion has provided a web-based calculator which can be found on the Builder Portal, to assist in calculating these dates as per the Reference Guide. Tarion will also publish, from time to time, monthly paper calendars for builders and their staff without access to the Internet.

Firm Closing Date Option

For the Firm Closing Date Option, the builder must specify a calendar date for each of the:

- Firm Closing Date – the date by which the builder agrees to complete the home and have it ready to move in.
- Outside Closing Date – the date which is 365 days after the Firm Closing Date. If Closing has not occurred by that date, the purchaser can elect to terminate the deal, all monies paid by the purchaser are to be returned with interest and the purchaser will be entitled to Delayed Closing Compensation.
- End of the Purchaser's Termination Period – this date is the end of the 30-day period during which the purchaser may terminate the transaction if the home is not ready by the Outside Closing Date.

Tentative Closing Date Option

For the Tentative Closing Date Option, the builder must specify a calendar date for each of the:

- First Tentative Closing Date – the date the builder expects that the home will be completed and ready to move in.
- Second Tentative Closing Date – the date 120 days after the First Tentative Closing Date, which is the outside date to which the builder can initially extend Closing without the purchaser's consent.
- Firm Closing Date – the date 120 days after the Second Tentative Closing Date, which is the outside date to which the builder can further extend Closing without the purchaser's consent or without setting a Delayed Closing Date and paying Delayed Closing Compensation.
- Outside Closing Date – the date which is 365 days after the earlier of the Second Tentative Closing Date and the Firm Closing Date. If Closing has not occurred by that date, the purchaser can elect to terminate the deal, all monies paid by the purchaser are to be returned with interest and the purchaser will be entitled to Delayed Closing Compensation.
- Notice of Delay beyond the First Tentative Closing Date – this date is 90 days before the First Tentative Closing Date and is the last day by which notice must be given if a delay beyond the First Tentative Closing Date is expected.
- End of the Purchaser's Termination Period – this date is the end of the 30-day period during which the purchaser may terminate the transaction if the home is not ready by the Outside Closing Date.

Schematics illustrating the timelines under each option of the freehold delayed Closing regimes are attached as Appendix "A" and "B".

4. DISCLOSURE OBLIGATIONSWhen the Purchase Agreement is Signed

Builders must complete the blanks in the section of the Addendum titled "Information Regarding the Property".

Development Approvals

The first portion of the disclosure section of the Addendums requires the builder to disclose the following information relating to the status of development approvals:

- Whether the property is within a plan of subdivision or proposed plan of subdivision;
- Whether the plan of subdivision is registered or draft;
- Whether the builder has received confirmation from the relevant government authorities that there is sufficient water capacity; and
- Whether the builder has received confirmation from the relevant government authorities that there is sufficient sewage capacity.

The builder must also disclose the nature of the confirmation that has been received (if there has been confirmation). For example, confirmation may be in writing, by email or by conversation with a particular person.

If the availability of water or sewage capacity is uncertain the builder must disclose to the best of its ability the issues that need to be resolved.

Construction Status

Builders must also disclose the following information relating to the status of construction:

- Whether a building permit has been issued in respect of the property; and
- Whether Commencement of Construction of the home has occurred, and if not, the date that Commencement of Construction is expected to occur.

If construction has not yet begun at the time the purchase agreement is signed, the builder must give written notice to the purchaser within ten (10) days after The Actual date of Commencement of Construction.

“Commencement of Construction” means the start of construction of foundation components or elements (such as footings, rafts or piles) of the home.

Other Disclosure

There are other ongoing disclosure obligations set out in the balance of each Addendum. For example, there are specified informational requirements for: extending or accelerating any Critical Dates by mutual agreement; setting a new Closing date in cases of Unavoidable Delay; and setting Delayed Closing Dates.

5. CONDITIONS OF SALE

General

A condition is a term in a purchase agreement that sets out a situation in which the purchase agreement may terminate if a specified event either happens or does not happen.

The use of conditions of sale is regulated under the Delayed Closing Warranty. Builders are permitted to include only certain specified types of conditions in their purchase agreement. These permissible types of conditions fall into four general categories:

- Early Termination Conditions – discussed in detail below;
- The usual condition regarding compliance with Planning Act subdivision control provisions;
- Conditions which are rights of termination in a favour of a party due to the default of the other; and
- Purchaser conditions – conditions for the sole benefit of the purchaser.

Early Termination Conditions

Non-waivable Conditions

The builder is permitted to make the purchase agreement conditional upon receipt of approval for:

- A change to the official plan, other governmental development plan or zoning by-law (including a minor variance);
- A consent to creation of a lot(s) or part-lot(s);
- A certificate of water potability or other measure relating to domestic water supply to the home;

- A certificate of approval of septic system or other measure relating to waste disposal from the home;
- Completion of hard services for the property or surrounding area (e.g. roads, rail crossings, water lines, sewage lines, other utilities);
- Allocation of domestic water or storm or sanitary sewage capacity;
- Easements or similar rights serving the property or surrounding area;
- Site plan agreements, density agreements, shared facilities agreements or other development agreements with a approving authorities or nearby land owners and/or any development approvals required from a approving authority; and/or
- Site plans, plans, elevations and/or specifications under architectural controls imposed by an approving authority.

These conditions are for the benefit of both the builder and the purchaser and cannot be waived by either party. In addition:

- The builder must provide written notice not later than 5 Business Days after the date specified for satisfaction of a condition that: (i) the condition has been satisfied; or (ii) the condition has not been satisfied (together with reasonable details and backup materials), and that as a result the purchase agreement is terminated; and
- If notice is not provided as set out above, then the condition is deemed not satisfied and the purchase agreement is terminated.

Waivable Conditions

The builder is also permitted to make the purchase agreement conditional upon:

- Receipt of approval for a basement walkout; and/or
- Confirmation the builder is satisfied that the purchaser has adequate financial resources to complete the transaction.

These conditions are for the benefit of the builder and may be waived by the builder in its sole discretion.

- The builder must provide written notice on or before the date specified for satisfaction of the condition that: (i) the condition has been satisfied or waived; or (ii) the condition has not been satisfied or waived, and that as a result the purchase agreement is terminated; and
- If notice is not provided as set out above, then the condition is deemed waived and the purchase agreement will continue to be binding on both parties.

The Non-waivable Conditions and Waivable Conditions referred to above are together called the Early Termination Conditions.

Set Out in the Addendum

To ensure that any Early Termination Conditions required by the builder are clearly communicated to the purchaser, all Early Termination Conditions must be listed in Section 2 of each Addendum. Details of the Early Termination Conditions must also be included. For example, each Early Termination Condition must be set out separately, be reasonably specific as to the type of approval which is needed, and identify generally the approving authority. The builder is required to take all commercially reasonable steps to satisfy any Early Termination Conditions included in the purchase agreement.

Date for Satisfaction

The date for satisfaction of any Early Termination Condition must be no later than 90 days before the Firm Closing Date with one exception: the condition regarding builder confirmation that the purchaser has the financial resources to complete the transaction must be satisfied within 60 days after signing the purchase agreement.

Three Day Review Period

If the builder includes one or more Early Termination Conditions, then the purchaser has a three Business Day time period after receiving a true and complete copy of: the signed purchase agreement; or proposed purchase agreement to, review the conditions that have been listed. If the purchaser is not satisfied with any such condition, the purchaser has the right to terminate the purchase agreement without penalty and the builder must return to the purchaser all monies paid by the purchaser together with interest (see Section 11 below).

Other Builder Conditions

A purchase agreement may also be conditional upon the compliance with the subdivision control provisions (Section 50) of the Planning Act, which compliance shall be obtained by the builder at its sole expense, on or before Closing.

A purchase agreement may also contain rights of termination where one or the other of the parties is at fault.

Prohibited Conditions of Sale

For greater certainty, the builder is not permitted to make the purchase agreement conditional upon:

- Receipt of a building permit;
- Receipt of an occupancy permit; and
- Completion of the dwelling.

Only conditions expressly permitted by the Addendum are enforceable by the builder. Any other conditions will be deemed void and unenforceable by the builder but will not affect the validity of the balance of the purchase agreement.

Purchaser Conditions

The purchase agreement may include any condition that is for the sole benefit of the purchaser which the parties may agree upon. Examples might include conditions in favour of the purchaser relating to: the sale of an existing dwelling; obtaining purchaser mortgage financing; or approval of a basement walkout.

6. FIRM OR A TENTATIVE CLOSING DATE OPTIONFirm or Tentative Closing Transaction

Builders must elect to offer either: a Firm Closing Date from the outset; or a Tentative Closing Date, i.e., specify an anticipated Closing date which is tentative and which may be extended for up to 120 days on two occasions without the purchaser's consent.

Firm Closing Date Option

A builder may choose to offer a Firm Closing Date. Where the Firm Closing Date option is chosen, the builder cannot extend the Firm Closing Date without paying compensation to the purchaser, except in cases of Unavoidable Delay or where the builder and purchaser mutually agree to amend the purchase agreement (see Section 7 below).

Builders who offer a Firm Closing Date must use the Firm Closing Date version of the Addendum which is simpler as it does not contain information concerning tentative dates or multiple extensions of such dates.

Tentative Closing Date Option

A builder may choose the Tentative Closing Date option. Builders who offer Tentative Closing Dates must use the Tentative Closing Date version of the Addendum. This version of the Addendum contains terms relating to extensions of the tentative Closing dates, provision for notice of such extensions, and requirements for setting the Firm Closing Date.

Setting New Closing Dates Under the Tentative Closing Date Option

With the Tentative Closing Date option, you start by agreeing upon a First Tentative Closing Date with your purchaser. If the home will not be ready by this time, you can extend the Closing Date by up to 120 days. You can do so by either setting a Second Tentative Closing Date or setting a Firm Closing Date. If you need to exercise this right to extend, you will need to inform your purchaser at least 90 days before the First Tentative Closing Date.

If you have set a Second Tentative Closing Date and the home will still not be ready by this date, you are entitled to extend up to an additional 120 days by setting a Firm Closing Date. Again, at least 90 days prior written notice is required.

These first two extensions of up to 120 days each are available to you and you need not pay Delayed Closing Compensation. However, once you have set a Firm Closing Date, your only right to extend is to set a Delayed Closing Date and Delayed Closing Compensation will be payable.

Notice for Setting a Second Tentative Closing Date

To set a Second Tentative Closing Date, you must:

- Give written notice to your purchaser at least 90 days before the First Tentative Closing Date; and
- Choose a Second Tentative Closing Date that is 120 days or less after the First Tentative Closing Date. If you are confident a full 120 days is not needed, then you can set an earlier Second Tentative Closing Date – for example, 30, 60 or 85 days after the First Tentative Closing Date – or go straight to setting a Firm Closing Date.

Notice for Setting a Firm Closing Date

If you have given proper notice of a Second Tentative Closing Date but still cannot complete the home by this date, you may further extend Closing by up to an additional 120 days by setting a Firm Closing Date.

To set a Firm Closing Date at this stage, you must:

- Give written notice at least 90 days before the Second Tentative Closing Date you have set; and
- Choose a Firm Closing Date that is 120 days or less after the Second Tentative Closing Date you have set.

Possible Automatic Firm Closing Date

A Firm Closing Date may also be set automatically in two circumstances:

- If you fail to give a full 90 days written notice for the first extension, then the First Tentative Closing Date becomes the Firm Closing Date; and
- If you exercise the first extension properly but fail to give a full 90 days written notice for the second extension, then the Second Tentative Closing Date becomes the Firm Closing Date.

Setting a Delayed Closing Date

In connection with either the Firm Closing Date Option or the Tentative Closing Date Option, if you cannot complete construction by the Firm Closing Date, and your purchaser does not want to extend the Firm Closing Date by mutual agreement, you can still set a Delayed Closing Date despite your purchaser's wishes. You can do this because, by the terms of the Addendum, your purchaser was made aware that this could be necessary. However, if you delay the Closing this way, your purchaser is entitled to Delayed Closing Compensation.

To achieve this further extension you are required to:

- Choose a Delayed Closing Date; and
- Give at least 10 days written notice. If you do not provide 10 days prior written notice as required, Delayed Closing Compensation is payable for an additional 10 days (i.e., from the date the notice should have been given).

If you choose a Delayed Closing Date that is beyond the Outside Closing Date, then your written notice setting the Delayed Closing Date must include a statement explaining that your purchaser need not accept the full delay and will have the right to terminate the purchase agreement during a 30-day period after the 365 days has elapsed. This right to terminate is further described in Section 11.

As explained earlier, the Outside Closing Date is 365 days after:

- The Firm Closing Date when using the Firm Closing Date option for the transaction; and
- The earlier of the Second Tentative Closing Date or the Firm Closing Date when using the Tentative Closing Date option for the transaction.

In many cases, this date will be earlier than the "latest possible" Outside Closing Date given on the Statement of Critical Dates.

7. CHANGING CRITICAL DATES BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT

The Addendum sets out a structure for setting, extending and/or accelerating Closing dates which cannot be altered contractually except as follows:

- The builder and purchaser may at any time, after signing the purchase agreement, agree in writing to extend or accelerate a Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date to a new specified calendar date. The amendment must state whether the Outside Closing Date has changed. Also, as this change may affect the Delayed Closing Warranty, any request by the builder to extend a Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date to a later date must include a written statement that:
- Discloses to the purchaser that the signing of the amendment may result in the loss of Delayed Closing Compensation, as described in Section 9 of the Addendum;
- Unless there is an express waiver of compensation, describes in reasonable detail the cash amount, goods, services or other consideration which the purchaser accepts as compensation (the "Compensation"), and
- Contains a statement that the purchaser waives compensation or accepts the above noted Compensation, in either case, in full satisfaction of any delayed Closing compensation payable by the builder for the period up to the new Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date.

These last three requirements do not apply if the purchaser, for his or her own purposes requests the change in date.

The builder and purchaser may in connection with a tentative Closing date transaction agree to accelerate the First Tentative Closing Date and correspondingly reset all the Critical Dates provided:

- The mutual amendment is signed at least 180 days before the First Tentative Closing Date;
- All of the Critical Dates, including the Outside Closing Date are moved forward the same number of days (subject to adjustment so that the Critical Dates fall on Business Days);
- A new Statement of Critical Dates is provided with the amendment; and
- The purchaser has a 3 day period to review the amendment and decide whether or not to accept it.
- The acceleration of dates by mutual agreement discussed under the Paragraph 7 (c) of the Addendum (regarding Unavoidable Delay) is permitted.
- A builder is permitted to include a provision in a purchase agreement allowing the builder a one-time unilateral right to extend a Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date, as the case may be, one (1) Business Day to avoid the necessity of tender where a purchaser is not ready to close the transaction on the Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date, as the case may be. Delayed Closing Compensation will not be payable for such period and the builder may not impose any penalty or interest charge on the purchaser.
- The purchaser and builder may agree in the purchase agreement to any unilateral extension or acceleration rights that unilaterally exercisable by the purchaser.

8. UNAVOIDABLE DELAY

The builder may extend a First Tentative Closing Date, a Second Tentative Closing Date, a Firm Closing Date and/or a Delayed Closing Date, as the case may be, without penalty in certain circumstances if there is an Unavoidable Delay.

An Unavoidable Delay means a strike, fire, explosion, flood, act of God, civil insurrection, act of war, act of terrorism or pandemic, plus any period of delay directly caused by the event, which is beyond the reasonable control of the builder and is not caused or contributed to by the fault of the builder.

If Unavoidable Delay occurs, the builder may extend the relevant dates by no more than the length of the Unavoidable Delay Period. The builder can implement this extension without the approval of the purchaser and without the requirement to pay Delayed Closing Compensation in connection with the Unavoidable Delay, provided the requirements of the Addendum are met.

When an Unavoidable Delay arises, the builder must provide the purchaser with written notice describing the delay along with an estimate of the duration of the delay. The builder must advise the purchaser as soon as possible when the delay has ended.

When the delay has ended, the builder must provide written notice to the purchaser setting out a brief description of the Unavoidable Delay, identifying the date of conclusion of the Unavoidable Delay Period, and setting new future Critical Dates (i.e., First Tentative Closing Date, Second Tentative Closing Date, Firm Closing Date, Delayed Closing Date, Outside Closing Date and the last day of the Purchaser's Termination Period, as the case may be). The new dates are calculated by adding to the existing Critical Dates the number of days of the Unavoidable Delay Period, provided that the new Firm Closing Date or Delayed Closing Date (if applicable) must be at least 10 days after the giving of notice, unless the builder and purchaser agree otherwise. The notice must set out as calendar dates all the new or confirmed Critical Dates.

In the context of an Unavoidable Delay, either the builder or the purchaser may request in writing earlier new dates, and the other party's consent to the earlier dates shall not be unreasonably withheld.

If an Unavoidable Delay occurs, the builder should review carefully the sections of the Addendum to ensure that all obligations are complied with. Failure to comply with the Addendum requirements may result in the builder having to pay Delayed Closing Compensation for the period for which an Unavoidable Delay is claimed.

9. BUILDING CODE - CONDITIONS OF OCCUPANCY

On or before the date of Closing, the builder is required to deliver to the purchaser:

- Where a registered code agency has been appointed for the building or part of the building under the Building Code Act (Ontario), a final certificate with respect to the home that contains the prescribed information as required by s. 11(3) of the Building Code Act; or
- Where a registered code agency has not been so appointed, either:
 - An occupancy permit (as defined in the Addendum); or
 - A signed written confirmation by the builder that: (i) provisional or temporary occupancy of the home has been authorized under Article 1.3.3.1 of Division C of the Building Code; or (ii) the conditions for residential occupancy of the home as set out in s. 11 of the Building Code Act or Article 1.3.3.2 of Division C of the Building Code, as the case may be (the “Conditions of Occupancy”) have been fulfilled.

However, if the builder and the purchaser agree that the purchaser shall be responsible for certain Conditions of Occupancy, then the purchaser is not permitted to refuse to close on the basis that such conditions have not been completed. Also, the builder is required to deliver a modified form of written confirmation which confirms completion of the Conditions of Occupancy but excluding any conditions which the purchaser has agreed to complete.

If the builder cannot satisfy these requirements, the builder is required to set a Delayed Closing Date (or new Delayed Closing Date) on a date that the builder reasonably expects to have satisfied the requirements, and to comply with the provisions of the Addendum dealing with setting Delayed Closing Dates and paying Delayed Closing Compensation. Delayed Closing Compensation is not payable, however, if the inability to provide occupancy is caused by the failure of a purchaser to fulfill any Conditions of Occupancy for which the purchaser is contractually responsible.

10. DELAYED CLOSING COMPENSATION

The builder warrants to the purchaser that, if the Closing is delayed beyond the Firm Closing Date (other than by mutual agreement in writing as described in Section 7 of this Bulletin) or as a result of Unavoidable Delay), then the builder must compensate the purchaser for all costs incurred by the purchaser as a result of the delay up to a total amount of $7,500, which amount includes payment to the purchaser of $150 a day for living expenses for each day of delay until the date of Closing or the date of termination of the purchase agreement.

Delayed Closing Compensation is payable only if:

- Closing occurs or the purchase agreement is terminated under specified circumstances (see Section 11 below); and
- The purchaser’s claim is made within one (1) year after Closing, or after termination of the purchase agreement, as the case may be. (See Section 12 below.)

If the builder gives written notice of a Delayed Closing Date to the purchaser less than 10 days before the Firm Closing Date, Delayed Closing Compensation is payable from 10 days before the Firm Closing Date.

If the builder gives written notice of a Delayed Closing Date to the purchaser more than 90 days before the First Tentative Closing Date instead of setting a Second Tentative Closing Date, Delayed Closing Compensation is payable from the date that is 240 days after the First Tentative Closing Date. Similarly, if the builder gives written notice of a Delayed Closing Date to the purchaser more than 90 days before the Second Tentative Closing Date instead of setting a Firm Closing Date, Delayed Closing Compensation is payable from the date that is 120 days after the Second Tentative Closing Date.

Living expenses are direct living costs such as costs for accommodation and meals. A set daily amount of $150 per day for living expenses is payable and receipts are not required. The purchaser must, however, provide receipts in support of any claim for other Delayed Closing Compensation, such as for moving and storage costs. Submission of false receipts may disentitle the purchaser to any Delayed Closing Compensation in connection with a claim.

11. TERMINATION OF THE PURCHASE AGREEMENTTermination On Consent

The builder and the purchaser may terminate the purchase agreement at any time by mutual written consent.

Termination After 365 Days

If for any reason (other than breach of contract by the purchaser) Closing has not occurred:

- Within 365 days after the Firm Closing Date (in connection with the Firm Closing Date option); or
- Within 365 days after the earlier of the Second Tentative Closing Date or the Firm Closing Date (in connection with the tentative Closing date option);

Then the purchaser has 30 days to terminate the purchase agreement by written notice to the builder. If the purchaser does not provide written notice of termination, then the Delayed Closing Date is the date set by the builder in the written notice.

Termination for Failure to Specify Dates

The purchaser may terminate the purchase agreement by written notice to the builder if all applicable Critical Dates in the Statement of Critical Dates (i.e. the First Tentative Closing Date, the notice deadline for extension beyond the First Tentative Closing Date, the Second Tentative Closing Date, the Firm Closing Date, the Outside Closing Date and the last day of the Purchaser's Termination Period) are not completed with calendar dates; or any Critical Date is expressed as being subject to change depending upon the happening of an event.

Termination Relating to Conditions of Sale

If the purchase agreement is subject to Early Termination Conditions the purchase agreement may terminate if an Early Termination Condition is not satisfied (and is not waived in the limited instances where the Addendum permits a condition to be waived), by the required date. The builder is obliged to take all commercially reasonable steps within the builder's power to satisfy such Early Termination Conditions.

Return Of Monies On Termination

If the purchase agreement is terminated (other than as a result of breach of contract by the purchaser), the builder must return all monies paid by the purchaser, including deposits and monies for extras and upgrades, within 10 days with interest from the date each amount was paid to the builder to the date of return of the amount.

12. HOW A HOMEOWNER MAKES A CLAIMCompensation where there is Mutual Agreement

Delayed Closing Compensation may be payable in at least two circumstances. First, if a builder knows the Firm Closing Date cannot be met, the builder may speak to the purchaser and mutually agree upon a new Firm Closing Date. In this scenario compensation may be waived or payable in accordance with the amending agreement referred to in Section 7 above.

Second, the builder may miss the Firm Closing Date, without amending the purchase agreement. Closing would occur on a Delayed Closing Date set by the builder. In this scenario, the purchaser is asked to make a claim to the builder for compensation within a 180-day time period after Closing and must include any receipts which evidence any part of the purchaser's claim except daily living expenses for which receipts should not be received. The builder is required to assess the purchaser's claim by determining the amount of Delayed Closing Compensation payable based on the rules set out in the Addendum and the receipts provided by the purchaser, and the builder must promptly provide that assessment to the purchaser. The purchaser and the builder are required to use reasonable efforts to settle the claim and when the claim is settled, the builder must complete an acknowledgement provided by Tarion and signed by both parties which:

- Includes the builder's calculation of the Delayed Closing Compensation payable;
- Describes in reasonable detail the cash amount, goods, services, or other consideration which the purchaser accepts as compensation (the "Compensation"), if any; and
- Contains a statement by the purchaser that the purchaser accepts the Compensation in full satisfaction of any Delayed Closing Compensation payable by the builder.

A true copy of the acknowledgement must be provided to Tarion by the builder within 30 days after the acknowledgement is signed by both parties.

When the Parties Cannot Agree

If the builder and purchaser cannot come to terms, the purchaser may submit a claim to Tarion, up to one (1) year after Closing (or termination of the purchase agreement, if applicable). Tarion will process the claim in accordance with the rules and regulations relating to Delayed Closing Compensation set out in the Regulations and the Addendums and generally described as follows.

Upon receipt of delayed Closing claim from a purchaser, Tarion will advise the builder of the claim and ask for the builder's input. Tarion will also ask the builder to resolve the claim within 30 days. If the claim is not resolved within such 30-day period Tarion will conduct a conciliation (i.e. a desk assessment) to assess the claim and thereafter issue a Warranty Assessment Report to the builder and the purchaser. If the claim is valid, Tarion will pay the compensation due to the purchaser. Tarion will then invoice the builder for such amount plus an administrative fee of $500 and applicable taxes. If applicable, the conciliation may be deemed "chargeable" and if so, will be noted on the builder's record and Tarion's web site.

Chargeable Conciliation

A conciliation will be deemed "chargeable" if Delayed Closing Compensation is payable and was not paid within the above-noted 30-day period.

A conciliation may be deemed "not chargeable" if one of the following applies:

- The builder offers proper compensation in a timely manner but the purchaser rejects the offer.
- The builder and purchaser make an agreement for compensation but the purchaser refuses to sign an acknowledgement.

Appeal Rights

If a purchaser does not agree with a Delayed Closing Warranty Assessment Report, he or she may request a Decision Letter and a right of appeal to the Licence Appeal Tribunal is available thereafter.

A builder who disputes a Delayed Closing Warranty Assessment Report and/or the chargeability of the conciliation may request an arbitration according to the rules and criteria of Builder Bulletin 41 "Builder Arbitration Forum".

13. WHICH DELAYED CLOSING WARRANTY APPLIES?

Timing Transition Rules

The new Delayed Closing Warranty applies to purchase agreements for freehold homes that are entered into on or after July 1, 2008.

Type of Home

Subject to the timing rules noted above, the new Delayed Closing Warranty applies to:

- Free hold homes;
- Freehold homes associated with common element condominiums, sometimes called “parcels of tied land” or “POTLs”; and
- A vacant land condominium where the builder builds on the vacant land, sells the parcel and freehold home together, and Closing and occupancy occur at the same time.

The new Delayed Closing Warranty does not apply to contract homes.

Attention Purchaser

The following changes to the contents of this Homeowner Information Package apply to condominium units with an occupancy date on or after May 1, 2004.

1. Delayed Occupancy Compensation

Page 4 – When can I claim compensation?

The text on page 4 in the section “When can I claim compensation?” is replaced with the following:

Once you take occupancy of your unit, you may be able to claim up to $100 per day in living expenses, plus all direct costs caused by the delay (for example, extra moving and storage costs) up to a maximum of $5,000. In order to be compensated, you must take occupancy and then submit a Delayed Occupancy Form (along with copies of all receipts) to both our office and the Warranty Program, at any time during the first year of possession.

In addition, the Warranty Service Rules described on page 7 do not apply to Delayed Occupancy claims. The service rules that do apply are described in the Delayed Occupancy Form package which can be obtained by calling the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 or by visiting their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

If you are unsure about your rights regarding delayed occupancy, you may wish to seek the advice of a lawyer.

2. Submission of a Warranty Service Request by Fax

3. Special Seasonal Warranty Items

The text in this section is replaced with the following:

The completion of your home's final grading, landscaping (laying sod, etc.) and the installation of driveways, patios and walkways are considered special seasonal warranty items and are not subject to the Warranty Service Rules. In high-rise and low-rise condominium projects, these items are more likely to affect the common elements warranty and will be handled by the condominium corporation's Board of Directors.

We have 270 days of "seasonable weather" from your home's date of possession to complete any special seasonal warranty items reported on your 30-Day or Year-End Form (unless a longer period within the time limits permitted under applicable municipal agreements was negotiated between us).

Seasonable weather for this type of work is the period from May 1 to November 15 of any given year. For example, if your home's date of possession is June 30, 2004, we have until September 9, 2005 to complete the necessary work.

The seasonable weather days in this example are calculated as follows:

	NUMBER OF SEASONABLE WEATHER DAYS
July 1, 2004 to November 15, 2004	138
November 16, 2004 to April 30, 2005	0
May 1, 2005 to September 9, 2005	132
TOTAL	270

If for any reason we do not complete the required work to your satisfaction within this 270 day period, you have 30 days (which in the example above would be from September 10, 2005 to October 10, 2005) to contact the Warranty Program and request their assistance.

If the item is determined to be warrantable, the Warranty Program will work with you directly to settle the matter. If you do not contact the Warranty Program within this 30-day period, the special seasonal warranty items listed on your 30-Day or Year-End Form will be considered resolved and the matter closed. Please note that the Warranty Program cannot complete the settlement until you have title to your unit.

DELAYED CLOSING/OCCUPANCY WARRANTY ACCOMMODATION COSTS: INTERIM MEASURE

April 19, 2004

I. The Current Interim Measure

The current Interim Measure introduced in a Special Announcement dated May 31, 2000 expires on April 30, 2004. The current Interim Measure will continue to be available for freehold closings and condominium occupancies with dates of possession on or before April 30, 2004 and the rules and procedures set out in the Special Announcement dated May 31, 2000 will apply. In addition, the Board of Directors of Tarion Warranty Corporation (“Tarion”, formerly Ontario New Home Warranty Program) has decided not to re-assess the amounts paid under the Interim Measure and as such, Tarion will no longer be advising vendors or vendor/builders (referred to collectively as “builders”) in its correspondence that claims under the Interim Measure may be re-assessed in the future.

II. New Interim Measure

A new Interim Measure (the “New Interim Measure”) will apply to freehold closings and condominium occupancies with dates of possession between May 1, 2004 and December 31, 2005 (both inclusive). In order for a builder to qualify for the New Interim Measure, a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form must be completed by the homeowner and submitted to Tarion. This form may be obtained by calling Tarion at 1-800-668-0124 or online at www.tarion.com.

The New Interim Measure will provide rebates to builders solely for set-offs related to accommodation costs. Accommodation cost set-offs which will be considered include:

- For freehold purchases - mortgage amounts and realty taxes that would have been paid on the home in question had the delay not occurred or daily accommodation costs paid by the homeowner before the delay;
- For condominium purchases - mortgage, realty tax, and common elements fees on the condominium unit in question or daily accommodation costs paid by the homeowner before the delay.

Note: Tarion is not required to set-off these amounts, which is why homeowner compensation will not change under the New Interim Measure. The set-off rebate contemplated under the New Interim Measure will be discontinued after December 31, 2005.

Under the New Interim Measure, Tarion will charge the builder an upfront administrative fee if the builder requests that Tarion perform a pre-claim calculation of the total delayed closing/occupancy compensation payable to a homeowner (a “Pre-Claim Calculation”). This fee will serve to reduce the high costs incurred by Tarion in processing these claims. The administrative fee will be charged even if the builder does not make a subsequent request for reimbursement under the New Interim Measure.

The administrative fee will also be charged if the builder does not request a Pre-Claim Calculation but makes a claim for reimbursement after paying compensation directly to the homeowner. The amount of the administrative fee varies according to the date of possession or occupancy and is set out in the chart at the end of this Special Announcement.

The New Interim Measure reimbursement will be available to builders in the following circumstances:

1. if the builder requests that Tarion conduct a Pre-Claim Calculation and pays the full amount of the claim as assessed by Tarion within 30 days of the date of the Pre-Claim Calculation, in accordance with the Pre-Claim Procedure set-out below; or
2. if, within 30 days after the builder has settled the delayed closing/occupancy claim by paying compensation directly to the homeowner without any involvement by Tarion, the builder submits proof of that payment to Tarion in accordance with the Reimbursement Procedure after Direct Payment to Homeowner set-out below. The New Interim Measure reimbursement will not be available, however, if the builder pays compensation to the homeowner after Tarion conducts an assessment.

All requests for reimbursement must be made by the builder sending a completed Interim Measure Form to Tarion. This form can be obtained by calling Tarion at 1-800-668-0124 or online at www.tarion.com.

Pre-Claim Procedure

1. The builder may ask Tarion to do a Pre-Claim Calculation within 10 days of the date Tarion receives the completed Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form and notifies the builder that the form has been received. Tarion must be in receipt of a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form completed by a homeowner before the Pre-Claim Calculation will be done. The builder must also include the appropriate administrative fee with this request.
2. Tarion will then provide the builder with a written Pre-Claim Calculation setting out the length of the delay and the compensation owing to the homeowner. The Pre-Claim Calculation will also set out the amount claimed for accommodation costs and its proportion to the total direct costs claimed by the homeowner.
3. Within 30 days of the Pre-Claim Calculation issue date, the builder is required to pay to the homeowner the full amount of the compensation determined by Tarion to be owed. If the builder pays the full amount of the compensation within the 30 day period, the Pre-Claim Calculation will not be considered a chargeable conciliation.

4. Within 30 days after the payment is made to the homeowner by the builder, the builder can send proof that the payment was paid in time and make a claim under the New Interim Measure by completing an Interim Measure Form. Once the required information has been received by Tarion, the amount of the reimbursement for accommodation set-off costs will be calculated. This step is further explained under the heading “Calculating the Reimbursement” below.

Reimbursement Procedure after Direct Payment to Homeowner without Tarion’s Involvement

1. If the builder has settled a delayed closing/occupancy claim by paying compensation directly to the homeowner without involving Tarion, the builder may request reimbursement of accommodation set-off costs under the New Interim Measure. The builder’s request must be made within 30 days of final payment to the homeowner.
2. The builder must complete the Interim Measure Form and provide proof that full payment of the settlement amount has been made to the homeowner. The builder must also deliver a Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form completed by the homeowner if Tarion does not have the form in its possession. The administrative fee must be included with the Interim Measure Form.
3. Once Tarion is in receipt of all required documents, it will review the information provided and calculate the reimbursement for accommodation set-off costs as set out below.

Calculating the Reimbursement

The reimbursement will be limited to the accommodation cost set-offs permitted under the New Interim Measure. It will be pro-rated to reflect the ratio of accommodation cost to total direct costs incurred by the homeowner.

The reimbursement will be calculated by Tarion using the 10 step process described below. Three specific examples using sample information are attached in Appendix 1.

10 Step Process:

1. Calculate the total number of days delay (this will be set out on the Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form and verified by Tarion as appropriate).
2. Calculate the total costs incurred by the homeowner (the “Total Cost”, this will be set out on the Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form and verified by Tarion as appropriate).

3. Calculate the costs incurred by the homeowner for accommodation (the “Actual Accommodation Cost”, this will be set out on the Delayed Closing/Occupancy Form and verified by Tarion as appropriate).
4. Calculate the ratio of Actual Accommodation Cost to Total Cost (the “Accommodation Percentage”) by taking the Actual Accommodation Cost (line 3), dividing it by the Total Cost (line 2) and multiplying by 100.
5. Calculate the amount actually paid to the homeowner by the builder (the “Delayed Closing Payment”, this will be an amount up to $5,000).
6. Calculate what part of the Delayed Closing Payment relates to accommodation cost (the “Accommodation Payment”) by applying the Accommodation Percentage (line 4) to the Delayed Closing Payment (line 5).
7. Calculate the amount which the homeowner would have paid per day had the delay not occurred based on acceptable evidence provided by the builder (e.g. evidence of deferred mortgage payments and realty tax), or the amount that the homeowner was paying for accommodation per day before the delay (this is the “Daily Set-Off”).
8. Calculate the total set-off (the “Total Set-Off”) by multiplying the Daily Set-Off by the number of days delay.
9. Calculate the difference between the Actual Accommodation Cost and the Total Set-Off. This is the “Adjusted Accommodation Payment”. Note: if the Adjusted Accommodation Payment is negative, it is deemed to be zero.
10. Reimbursement: The builder is reimbursed the amount by which the Accommodation Payment (line 6) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment (line 9).

III. Expiry of the New Interim Measure

The New Interim Measure will expire and will no longer be available for homes with dates of possession on or after January 1, 2006. From that time onwards, Tarion will no longer set-off and rebate to the builder a homeowner’s deferred mortgage payments and other deferred costs or prior rent against delayed closing/occupancy claims. Once the New Interim Measure expires, the builder will be responsible for all direct costs properly claimed by a homeowner.

Tarion encourages builders to avoid delayed closing/occupancy claims by establishing realistic possession dates in sale agreements, maintaining control of construction schedules and providing proper notice to homeowners where delays are encountered. Where the required amount of notice is not provided, builders should use their best efforts to resolve delayed closing claims directly with their purchasers.

Dates of Possession / Occupancy	Administrative Fee
May 1/04 - Dec. 31/04	$600
Jan. 1/05 – Dec. 31/05	$1200

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Delayed Closing/Occupancy Warranty Accommodation Costs: Interim Measure

April 19, 2004

Appendix 1

Example A:

1. Total number of days delay = 83 days.
2. Total costs incurred by the homeowner (“Total Cost”) = $10,000.
3. Total costs incurred by the homeowner for accommodation (Actual Accommodation Cost) = $7,470.
4. Ratio of Actual Accommodation Cost to Total Cost (“Accommodation Percentage”) = 75% (i.e. $7,470 divided by $10,000 multiplied by 100).
5. Amount actually paid to the homeowner by the builder (“Delayed Closing Payment”) = $5,000 (because of the $5,000 cap).
6. Part of the Delayed Closing Payment that relates to accommodation cost (“Accommodation Payment”) by applying the Accommodation Percentage to the Delayed Closing Payment = $3,750 (i.e. 75% of $5,000).
7. Amount which the homeowner would have paid per day had the delay not occurred based on acceptable evidence provided by the builder (e.g. evidence of deferred mortgage payments and realty tax) (the “Daily Set-Off”) = $40.
8. The total set-off (“Total Set-Off”) is the Daily Set-Off multiplied by the number of days delay = $3,320 (i.e. $40 multiplied by 83 days).
9. The difference between the Actual Accommodation Cost (line 3) and the Total Set-Off (line 8) = $4,150 (i.e. $7,470-$3,320). This is the “Adjusted Accommodation Payment”. Note: if the Adjusted Accommodation Payment is negative it is deemed to be zero.
10. Reimbursement: The builder is reimbursed the amount by which the Accommodation Payment (line 6) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment (line 9).

In this example, the Reimbursement would be zero, as the Accommodation Payment ($3,750) does not exceed the Adjusted Accommodation Payment ($4,150).

Example B:

1. Total number of days delay = 30 days
2. Total costs incurred by the homeowner (“Total Cost”) = $4,990.
3. Total costs incurred by the homeowner for accommodation (Actual Accommodation Cost) = $3,000.
4. Ratio of Actual Accommodation Cost to Total Cost (“Accommodation Percentage”) = 60% (i.e. $3,000 divided by $4,990 multiplied by 100).
5. Amount actually paid to the homeowner by the builder (“Delayed Closing Payment”) = $4,990.
6. Part of the Delayed Closing Payment that relates to accommodation cost (“Accommodation Payment”) by applying the Accommodation Percentage to the Total Cost = $3,000 (i.e. 60% of $4,990).
7. Amount which the homeowner would have paid per day had the delay not occurred based on acceptable evidence provided by the builder (e.g. evidence of deferred mortgage payments and realty tax) (the “Daily Set-Off”) = $60.
8. The total set-off (“Total Set-Off”) is the Daily Set-Off multiplied by the number of days delay, = $1,800 (i.e. $60 multiplied by 30 days).
9. The difference between the Actual Accommodation Cost (line 3) and the Total Set-Off (line 8) = $1,200 (i.e. $3,000-$1,800). This is the “Adjusted Accommodation Payment”. Note: if the Adjusted Accommodation Payment is negative it is deemed to be zero.
10. Reimbursement: The builder is reimbursed the amount by which the Accommodation Payment (line 6) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment (line 9).

In this example, the Reimbursement would be $1,800, as the Accommodation Payment ($3,000) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment ($1,200) by that amount.

Example C:

1. Total number of days delay = 83 days.
2. Total costs incurred by the homeowner (“Total Cost”) = $6,000.
3. Total costs incurred by the homeowner for accommodation (Actual Accommodation Cost) = $3,100.
4. Ratio of Actual Accommodation Cost to Total Cost (“Accommodation Percentage”)= 52% (i.e. $3,100 divided by $6,000 multiplied by 100).
5. Amount actually paid to the homeowner by the builder (“Delayed Closing Payment”) = $5,000 (because of the $5,000 cap).
6. Part of the Delayed Closing Payment that relates to accommodation cost (“Accommodation Payment”) by applying the Accommodation Percentage to the Total Cost = $2,583 (i.e. 52% of $5,000).
7. Amount which the homeowner would have paid per day had the delay not occurred based on acceptable evidence provided by the builder (e.g. evidence of deferred mortgage payments and realty tax) (the “Daily Set-Off”)= $37.70.
8. The total set-off (“Total Set-Off”) is the Daily Set-Off multiplied by the number of days delay = $3,129.10 (i.e. $37.70 multiplied by 83 days).
9. The difference between the Actual Accommodation Cost (line 3) and the Total Set-Off (line 8) = -$29.10 (i.e. $3,100-$3,129.10). This is the “Adjusted Accommodation Payment”. Since it is negative, it is deemed to be zero.
10. Reimbursement: The builder is reimbursed the amount by which the Accommodation Payment (line 6) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment (line 9).

In this example, the Reimbursement would be $2,583, as the Accommodation Payment ($2,583) exceeds the Adjusted Accommodation Payment (deemed to be $0) by this amount.

Note: in each of these examples the set-off was based on documented daily post closing/occupancy costs (e.g. deferred mortgage payments). If the set-off used was based on documented daily accommodation costs before the delay (e.g. the rent paid by a homeowner before the delay), these costs would form the basis of the Daily Set-Off used in line 7.

ONTARIO NEW HOME WARRANTY PROGRAM

BUILDER ARBITRATION FORUM

INSTRUCTION SHEET FOR ARBITRATION APPLICATION PACKAGE

1. Read the Procedural Rules and the appended forms carefully.
2. Refer to the ONHWP Report to find out the deadline for delivery of your Arbitration Application Package to ONHWP.
3. Complete the Notice of Arbitration (Form 1). For paragraph 5 of the Notice, see instruction #4 below.
4. Before completing paragraph 5 of the Notice of Arbitration, review the Roster List and select three persons who you would like to propose as the arbitrator. Fill in Section A of the Nominee Confirmation form (Form 3) for each of your nominees and send it to each nominee for completion. We recommend that you send it to your nominees by fax or courier, to ensure prompt delivery.
5. Once your nominees return the Nominee Confirmation forms back to you, read each one to ensure that they are available and have no conflict of interest. If a nominee indicates that he/she is not available or has a conflict, then you must select another nominee from the Roster List and send a Nominee Confirmation form to him/her for completion.
6. Once you have received Nominee Confirmation forms from three nominees who are available and have no conflict, list their names in paragraph 5 of the Notice of Arbitration and attach the Nominee Confirmation forms to your Notice.
7. Sign the Notice of Arbitration and the Arbitration Agreement (Form 2).
8. Make two photocopies of your signed Arbitration Application Package (which includes: the Notice of Arbitration, the Nominee Confirmations, the Arbitration Agreement, and a copy of the ONHWP Report that you wish to arbitrate). Keep one photocopy for yourself.
9. Obtain a certified cheque or money order for $802.50 ($750.00 plus GST) for the administration fee.
10. Send the original and one copy of the Arbitration Application Package to the ONHWP Corporate Office by the deadline (see instruction #2 above). The following must be included:
 - i. Notice of Arbitration
 - ii. Arbitration Agreement
 - iii. Copy of the ONHWP Report you wish to arbitrate
 - iv. Nominee Confirmation forms (from 3 nominees)
 - v. Certified cheque or money order for $802.50 ($750.00 plus GST)

To ensure prompt delivery before the deadline, we recommend that you use a same-day or overnight courier service to deliver your Package. Applications sent by regular mail must be postmarked 5 business days before the deadline.

1. GENERAL

1.1 Application and Purpose

These Rules apply to arbitrations under the Builder Arbitration Forum, conducted under an Arbitration Agreement between ONHWP and a Builder. The purpose of these Rules is to promote the fairness, timeliness, accessibility and affordability of the Builder Arbitration Forum. These rules cover most situations that will arise in an arbitration. Any dispute about the interpretation of these Rules or about a situation not covered under these Rules will be resolved by the appointed Arbitrator unless stated otherwise in these Rules.

1.2 Definitions

In these Rules,

- (a) “Act” means the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31 as amended from time to time, and the Regulations thereunder;
- (b) “arbitration” means a proceeding under the Builder Arbitration Forum;
- (c) “Arbitration Application Package” has the meaning attributed to it as in Rule 4.2;
- (d) “Arbitrator” means the person appointed to arbitrate the dispute under these Rules;
- (e) “Arbitrator’s costs” means the Arbitrator’s fees and disbursements, calculated in accordance with the Builder Arbitration Forum Tariff;
- (f) “Builder” means a person who is a “vendor” or “builder” as defined in the Act and who commences an arbitration under these Rules;
- (g) “Builder Arbitration Forum” means the procedure for arbitration of disputes between a Builder and ONHWP arising from a Warranty Assessment Report;
- (h) “Builder Bulletin” means a bulletin issued by ONHWP to Builders;
- (i) “business day” means any day other than Saturday, Sunday or a statutory holiday in the Province of Ontario;
- (j) “chargeability” means the criteria used to determine whether a conciliation is chargeable;

- (k) “chargeable conciliation” means any conciliation where there are warrantable items identified by ONHWP staff and the Builder was not denied access and could have avoided the conciliation by attending to the owner’s complaints. All conciliations are deemed to be chargeable conciliations to the Builder unless there are no warrantable items identified by ONHWP staff during the conciliation process. Even if only one warrantable item is assessed, whether major or minor in nature, the conciliation will be chargeable to the Builder. Exceptions:
- (i) Where the owner identifies new complaint items for the first time during a conciliation inspection, these items will not be considered when determining if the conciliation is chargeable to the Builder;
 - (ii) Where the Builder can demonstrate that the owner refused reasonable access to rectify the complaints prior to the conciliation, then the conciliation is not chargeable to the Builder; or
 - (iii) Where the Builder and the owner disagree about the method and timing of repair and seek ONHWP’s intervention, and ONHWP supports the Builder’s recommendation, then the conciliation is not chargeable to the Builder;
- (l) “conciliation” means a process where ONHWP attempts to resolve a dispute between an owner and a Builder; the conciliation process may consist of a site visit, a single or series of telephone meetings, a review of documentation, or combinations of these;
- (m) “conflict of interest” has the same definition as set out in the Roster Agreement between the Arbitrator and ONHWP established under the Builder Arbitration Forum;
- (n) “Customer Service Standard” means the Customer Service Standard prescribed by ONHWP from time to time for homes completed for possession on or after October 1, 2003;
- (o) “deliver” or “delivery” means delivery by hand or by regular mail, registered mail, courier or facsimile transmission, unless expressly stated otherwise. In the case of regular and registered mail, delivery will be deemed to occur 5 business days after the day of mailing other than during a general discontinuance of postal service due to strike, lock-out or otherwise. If sent by facsimile, delivery shall be deemed to occur on the business day sent, if sent before 5:00 p.m. and otherwise on the next business day, provided that the transmitting party receives a confirmation of transmission at the time of the transmission. If sent by courier, delivery shall be deemed to occur on the business day received, if received before 5:00 p.m. and otherwise on the next business day.
- (p) “good standing” means full and timely compliance with the Act, Builder Bulletins and any agreements between ONHWP and the Builder, including up-to-date filing of applications for renewal and supporting documents, payment of renewal fees and enrolment fees, compliance with any security requirements and other terms and conditions of registration, and payment of any invoices issued by ONHWP to the Builder for indemnity of items which have been found by ONHWP to be a breach of warranty;
- (q) “ONHWP” means Ontario New Home Warranty Program, being the corporation designated to administer the Act;

- (r) “Registrar” means the Registrar appointed by ONHWP under section 3 of the Act;
- (s) “Roster” means the list of arbitrators established under the Builder Arbitration Forum;
- (t) “warrantability” and “warranted” and “warranty” refer to the warranties set out in the Act and their application to items in dispute between a Builder and owner;
- (u) “Warranty Assessment Report” means a report by ONHWP setting out ONHWP’s findings of warrantability and chargeability after a conciliation; and
- (v) any terms not defined in these Rules shall be interpreted in accordance with the Act, the Arbitration Act, and the Interpretation Act.

1.3 Gender and Number

In these Rules,

- (a) the male gender includes the female gender;
- (b) except where the context otherwise requires, the singular includes the plural and the plural the singular.

1.4 Language and Interpretation

The language of arbitration will be English, unless the parties and the Arbitrator agree otherwise. Any party who requires an interpreter must arrange for an interpreter at his own cost.

1.5 Computation of Time

Time limits under these Rules will be computed by including all calendar days, unless expressly stated otherwise. Where there is a reference to a number of days between two events, they will be counted by excluding the day on which the first event happens and including the day on which the second event happens. Where the time for performing an act falls or expires on a day which is not a business day, the time is extended to the next business day.

1.6 Extension and Abridgement of Time

Unless expressly stated otherwise, a time prescribed by these Rules may be extended or abridged by the written consent of the parties or by an order of the Arbitrator.

1.7 Communication Between Parties and Arbitrator

Any communication between a party and the Arbitrator must occur in the presence of, or on written notice to the other party, except for administrative or other non-contentious matters.

1.8 Forms

The forms referred to herein and appended hereto, as amended from time to time by ONHWP, form part of these Rules.

1.9 No Effect on Owner

An arbitration will not delay any remedy otherwise available to an owner and will not otherwise adversely affect an owner. ONHWP may pay compensation to an owner or arrange for repairs in lieu, regardless of an arbitration by the Builder and without prejudice to the rights of the Builder or ONHWP in the arbitration.

1.10 Repair Under Protest

The Builder may, at his option, repair an item deemed to be a breach of warranty in a Warranty Assessment Report under protest and without prejudice to his rights to arbitrate the Warranty Assessment Report, and may request the Arbitrator to order ONHWP to reimburse the Builder for his reasonable repair costs, provided:

- (a) the Builder performs the repairs within:
 - (i) the time period required in the Warranty Assessment Report, if the home was completed for possession before October 1, 2003; or
 - (ii) the time period prescribed by the Customer Service Standard, if the home was completed for possession on or after October 1, 2003; and
- (b) the Builder provides a written warranty to ONHWP that the repairs are done in a workmanlike manner and are free of defects in materials, for a period of one year from the completion of the repairs or the balance of the applicable warranty period under the Act, whichever is longer; and
- (c) the Builder demonstrates actual and reasonable out-of-pocket expenses for labour and materials as the result of the repair. The Builder may also add a mark-up of up to 15% for administration and overhead to its actual out-of-pocket expenses, provided that ONHWP may object to the mark-up if it is above the market rate or not actually incurred.

2. ELIGIBILITY AND SCOPE

2.1 Eligibility

A Builder is eligible to commence an arbitration if he meets all of the following conditions:

- (a) the Builder is in good standing at the start of, and throughout the duration, of the arbitration;
- (b) the Builder is not the subject of a Notice of Proposal under the Act;
- (c) in the case of an arbitration from a conciliation involving an on-site inspection, the Builder must have attended at the inspection;

- (d) in the case of an arbitration from a conciliation involving only documentary review, the Builder must have complied with all written requests by ONHWP for information or documentation; and
- (e) if the Builder is disputing the chargeability of a conciliation and is relying on an exception set out in Rule 1.2(k) (ii) or (iii), the Builder must have given written notice to ONHWP, prior to the conciliation, of any facts that would entitle the Builder to rely on the exception.

2.2 Registrar to Determine Eligibility

The Registrar has the sole discretion to determine whether a Builder is eligible to commence an arbitration, and his/her determination is not subject to review by the Arbitrator.

2.3 Issues that may be Raised

A Builder may raise the following issues in the arbitration:

- (a) whether an item in a Warranty Assessment Report is or is not a breach of warranty;
- (b) whether the amount invoiced by ONHWP is reasonable or not reasonable;
- (c) whether ONHWP should reimburse the Builder for repairs done by the Builder under Rule 1.10, and if so, in what amount; or
- (d) whether the conciliation giving rise to the Warranty Assessment Report is chargeable or not chargeable, provided that, if the Builder is relying on an exception set out in Rule 1.2(k)(ii) or (iii), the Builder must have given written notice to ONHWP, prior to the conciliation, of any facts that would entitle the Builder to rely on the exception.

3. APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR

3.1 Number of Arbitrators

The arbitration will be conducted by a single Arbitrator appointed under these Rules.

3.2 Nomination by Builder

The Builder shall nominate three persons from the Roster, after obtaining written confirmation (using Form 3 in the Appendix) from each nominee that the nominee has no conflict of interest and is available to conduct an arbitration within the time limits established by these Rules. The Builder must notify ONHWP of the names of the Builder's nominees and provide copies of the nominees' written confirmations at the time of delivery of the Builder's Application Package within the time set out in Rule 4.2.

3.3 Appointment by ONHWP

ONHWP shall appoint one of the Builder's nominees as the Arbitrator, and shall notify the Builder and the Arbitrator of the appointment (using Form 5 in the Appendix), within the time set out in Rules 4.3 and 4.4.

3.4 Communication with Nominees

Despite Rule 1.7, during the nomination process, the Builder may communicate with the Builder's nominees for the purpose of inquiring about their availability and requesting their written confirmation, but the Builder shall not communicate with any of the nominees about any issues that have been or will be raised in the arbitration.

3.5 Termination of Arbitrator

ONHWP shall terminate the appointment of the Arbitrator if:

- (a) the Arbitrator resigns, dies, is in a conflict of interest position, or otherwise becomes incapable of acting; or
- (b) the parties agree in writing that the appointment of the Arbitrator must be terminated; and in such circumstances, the parties shall pay, in equal shares, the Arbitrator's reasonable costs in accordance with the Tariff. ONHWP may apply the Builder's deposit to satisfy the Builder's share.

3.6 Replacement of Terminated Arbitrator

Upon termination of an Arbitrator under Rule 3.5, the parties shall nominate and appoint another Arbitrator in the manner provided under Rules 3.2 and 3.3. The time limit for the Builder's notice of nominees under Rule 4.2 will be calculated from the date of termination of the previous Arbitrator.

4. STARTING THE ARBITRATION

4.1 Notification of Option to Arbitrate

Every Warranty Assessment Report shall notify the Builder that the Builder may commence an arbitration to dispute the ONHWP Report if the builder delivers an Arbitration Application Package to ONHWP within 28 days of delivery of the Warranty Assessment Report.

4.2 Builder's Arbitration Application Package

A Builder may commence an arbitration by delivering to ONHWP (facsimile excluded), within 28 days of delivery of the Warranty Assessment Report, an Arbitration Application Package consisting of:

- (a) a signed Notice of Arbitration (using Form 1 in the Appendix), setting out:
 - (i) the Builder's address, phone number and fax number;
 - (ii) identification of the Warranty Assessment Report to be arbitrated;
 - (iii) identification of any of the items in the Warranty Assessment Report that the Builder disputes are a breach of warranty;

- (iv) an estimate of the value of the dispute, the amount of time required to present the case at the hearing and the number of witnesses;
 - (v) whether the Builder disputes the chargeability of the conciliation giving rise to the Warranty Assessment Report, and the Builder's reasons;
 - (vi) whether the Builder is seeking reimbursement for repairs under Rules 1.10 and the amount; and
 - (vii) the names of three persons from the Roster nominated by the Builder for appointment by ONHWP under Rule 3; and
- (b) a signed Arbitration Agreement (using Form 2 in the Appendix);
 - (c) a copy of the Warranty Assessment Report that the Builder seeks to arbitrate;
 - (d) a Nominee Confirmation (using Form 3 in the Appendix) signed by each of the three persons nominated by the Builder from the Roster, as set out in Rule 3; and
 - (e) an administration fee of $802.50 ($750.00 plus GST) in the form of a certified cheque or money order payable to ONHWP.

4.3 ONHWP Notice of Response

If the Builder is eligible under Rule 2 and has complied with Rule 4.2, ONHWP shall deliver to the Builder a Notice of Response (using Form 4 in the Appendix) within 7 days of delivery of the Builder's Arbitration Application Package. ONHWP's Notice of Response must contain:

- (a) confirmation by the Registrar that the Builder is eligible to commence an arbitration;
- (b) the amount to be paid by the Builder to ONHWP, in trust, as a deposit for the Arbitrator's costs; and
- (c) ONHWP's response to the Notice of Arbitration.

4.4 Notice of Appointment of Arbitrator and Acceptance of Appointment

Concurrently with the Notice of Response, ONHWP shall deliver an Appointment of Arbitrator and Acceptance of Appointment (using Form 5 in the Appendix) to the Arbitrator and the Builder.

Within 2 business days of delivery of the Appointment of Arbitrator and Acceptance of Appointment, the Arbitrator shall confirm acceptance of the appointment by signing and delivering the Appointment of Arbitrator and Acceptance of Appointment to ONHWP and the Builder.

4.5 If Builder is Not Eligible

If the Registrar determines that the Builder is not eligible to commence an arbitration under Rule 2, the Registrar shall give written notice to the Builder that he is not eligible within 7 days of delivery of the Builder's Application Package to ONHWP. The Registrar's notice shall specify the reasons why the Builder is not eligible.

If the Registrar's notice states that the Builder is not eligible because he is not in good standing, it shall also state that the Builder has 7 days to comply with the specified requirements in order to be considered in good standing. If the Builder complies with the notice, ONHWP shall deliver ONHWP's Notice of Response within 7 days of the compliance, and the arbitration will proceed. If the Builder fails to comply with the Registrar's notice, the arbitration is deemed not to commence, and ONHWP will notify the Builder accordingly and refund the administration fee. The Arbitrator may not extend the time for the Builder to comply with the Registrar's notice under this Rule.

If the Registrar's notice states that the Builder is not eligible for any reason under Rule 2.1 other than lack of good standing, the arbitration shall be deemed not to have commenced.

4.6 Non-Compliance with Rule 4.2

If a Builder fails to comply with Rule 4.2, the arbitration shall be deemed not to have commenced, except as set out in Rule 4.7. ONHWP will notify the Builder in writing of the Builder's non-compliance within a reasonable time after receipt of all or part of the Builder's Arbitration Application Package.

4.7 Dispute about Non-Compliance with Rule 4.2

A Builder may dispute ONHWP's notice under Rule 4.6 by delivering to ONHWP within 7 days of delivery of ONHWP's notice:

- (a) a Written Request for an order by an Arbitrator determining whether the Builder has complied with Rule 4.2 or whether the time for compliance should be extended;
- (b) a completed Arbitration Application Package, together with the administration fee required by Rule 4.2;
- (c) the Builder's reasons for disputing the non-compliance or for requesting an extension of time; and
- (d) a deposit to cover the Arbitrator's costs to hear the request, in accordance with the Tariff.

Delivery by the Builder in this section shall not include facsimile transmission.

4.8 ONHWP Delivery of Materials

Within 7 days of delivery of the Builder's documents and payments under Rule 4.7, ONHWP will:

- (a) appoint an Arbitrator from the Builder's nominees;
- (b) deliver a copy of the Builder's documents set out in Rule 4.7 to the Arbitrator; and
- (c) deliver ONHWP's response to the Builder's request, to both the Builder and the Arbitrator.

4.9 Arbitrator Ruling on Compliance with Rule 4.2

Within 7 days of receipt of the documents set out in Rule 4.8, the Arbitrator will issue an order or award, after reviewing the documents and, if the Arbitrator deems necessary, hold a teleconference with the parties. The Arbitrator shall:

- (a) decide whether the Builder has complied with Rule 4.2;
- (b) if the Builder has not complied with Rule 4.2, decide whether to terminate the arbitration or to extend the time for compliance, on such terms as are just, having regard to whether it is in the interest of justice to do so, after considering the following factors:
 - (i) whether the Builder intended to arbitrate within the time limit;
 - (ii) the seriousness of the non-compliance and the Builder's reasons for non-compliance;
 - (iii) whether there is any prejudice to ONHWP as the result of the Builder's non-compliance;
 - (iv) whether there is a substantial issue to be arbitrated and whether the Builder has a reasonable chance of success; and
- (c) decide which party shall pay the Arbitrator's costs under the order, including the amount and the time for payment.

The Arbitrator's order or award shall be final and binding on the parties as if it was a final award under Rule 9.4.

5. PREPARING THE CASE AND PAYMENT OF DEPOSIT

5.1 Builder's Case Material and Deposit

Within 14 days of delivery of ONHWP's Notice of Response, the Builder shall:

- (a) deliver to ONHWP, a certified cheque or money order in the amount specified in the Notice of Response, payable to "ONHWP in trust", as a deposit for the Arbitrator's costs; and
- (b) deliver to ONHWP two copies of the Builder's Case Material.

Delivery by the Builder in this section shall not include facsimile transmission.

5.2 Non-Compliance with Rules 5.1

If the Builder fails to comply with Rule 5.1, the Arbitrator shall terminate the arbitration.

5.3 ONHWP Case Material

Within 14 days of delivery of the Builder's Case Material, ONHWP shall deliver one copy of its Case Material to the Builder and one copy of its Case Material and the Builder's Case Material to the Arbitrator.

5.4 Contents of Case Material

Each party's Case Material must include:

- (a) a table of contents;
- (b) a copy of the party's Notice of Arbitration or Notice of Response;

- (c) a written statement of reasons;
- (d) copies of all documents that the party intends to rely on at the hearing;
- (e) a list of the party's witnesses, including their name, titles or positions, and qualifications, if any; and
- (f) if a party intends to call an expert witness or rely on an expert report, a copy of the report, together with the expert's qualifications.

5.5 Additional Material for Written Hearings

If the hearing is in writing pursuant to Rule 6.13, each party's Case Material shall also contain:

- (a) a written statement from each witness, which must be typed with numbered paragraphs, signed, dated and sworn, setting out their occupation, qualifications and relationship to the tendering party or the dispute, and must attach any documents referred to in the statement; and
- (b) a written argument, which must be typed with numbered paragraphs, and must attach any legal authorities referred to in the argument.

5.6 Physical Requirements for Case Material

Case Material must be contained in bound document books or loose-leaf binders, with numbered tabs separating the various sections and documents, and with numbered pages. Any legal authorities may be filed in separate books or binders.

5.7 Substantial Compliance with Rule

Substantial compliance with this Rule, except for the time requirements, will be sufficient for the hearing. The parties must strictly comply with the time requirements unless they are extended or abridged on consent of the parties or at the discretion of the Arbitrator.

6. THE HEARING: MODE, DATES, LOCATION, REPRESENTATION

6.1 Agreement to Proceed

At any time before the commencement of the hearing, the Arbitrator shall require the parties to sign an Agreement to Proceed (using Form 6 in the Appendix).

6.2 Mode of Hearing

The hearing of the arbitration will be oral, except as provided in Rule 6.13. An oral hearing may be conducted in person or by teleconference, at the discretion of the Arbitrator.

6.3 Conduct of Hearing

The hearing is intended to be informal in nature. The Arbitrator is not bound by strict rules of evidence or procedure as long as the hearing complies with the rules of natural justice and procedural fairness.

6.4 Date of Hearing

The Arbitrator shall schedule the hearing for a date that is no more than 14 days after delivery of ONHWP's Case Material. The Arbitrator can decide that additional time is required due to the complexity of the issues and/or the availability of the parties, the Arbitrator or the hearing facilities.

6.5 Location of Hearing

If the hearing is to be conducted orally and in person, the hearing must occur in the city or greater metropolitan area in which the responsible ONHWP Regional Office is located, unless the parties and the Arbitrator agree otherwise.

6.6 Notice of Mode, Date and Location

The Arbitrator must deliver written notice of the mode, date, time and location (if in-person) of the hearing to the parties at least 7 days in advance of the hearing date, unless the parties agree to abridge the notice period.

6.7 Arbitration to be Private and Confidential

The hearing is open only to the Arbitrator and the parties and their lawyers and witnesses, unless the parties otherwise agree. The Arbitrator, parties, lawyers and witness shall treat all communications, evidence, arguments, orders and the award as confidential, except in connection with a judicial challenge to, or enforcement of an order or award, or unless otherwise required by law. Nothing in this Rule precludes disclosure of such information to a party's insurer, auditor, lawyer or other person with a direct financial interest in the arbitration. Nothing in this Rule precludes ONHWP from publishing the award without identification of the Builder.

6.8 Oath or Affirmation

Witnesses who testify in person or by teleconference shall do so under oath or affirmation.

6.9 Exhibits

The Arbitrator shall:

- (a) identify all exhibits received by him in the course of the arbitration; and
- (b) retain the exhibits and all other documents received by him in the course of the proceedings until 60 days after the date of delivery of the award to the parties and then dispose of the exhibits and documents unless:

- (i) the Arbitrator is advised in writing that a judicial review of the award has been commenced, in which case the Arbitrator shall forward the exhibits and documents to the court as directed by the reviewing party; or
- (ii) a party provides written notice to the Arbitrator prior to the expiry of the 60 day period that he wishes to retrieve his exhibits and documents at his expense.

6.10 Recording of Hearing

The hearing will not be recorded unless the parties and the Arbitrator agree otherwise.

6.11 Representation at Hearing

The Builder shall be represented at the hearing by an officer, director, employee, sole proprietor or partner of the Builder. ONHWP must be represented at the hearing by an employee. Lawyers may assist the parties in the preparation of written materials and may attend the hearing as observers, but may not conduct examinations or make submissions except with leave of the Arbitrator.

6.12 Failure to Attend Hearing

If a party fails to attend a hearing, the Arbitrator may proceed in the party's absence.

6.13 Written Hearings

The hearing may be conducted in writing, rather than orally, if the parties and the Arbitrator agree that it is appropriate to do so. The Arbitrator will notify the parties of any modifications to the Rules required to facilitate the written hearing.

7. ARBITRATOR'S JURISDICTION AND POWERS

7.1 Jurisdiction

The Arbitrator has the jurisdiction to:

- (a) decide whether disputed items in the Warranty Assessment Report are or are not a breach of warranty;
- (b) decide whether the amount invoiced by ONHWP is reasonable or not reasonable;
- (c) order the Builder to indemnify ONHWP for reasonable amounts invoiced for items found to be a breach of warranty;
- (d) decide whether the Builder is entitled to reimbursement for repairs done by the Builder under Rule 1.10 to a disputed item found not to be a breach of warranty, and whether the amount claimed by the Builder is reasonable or not reasonable;
- (e) order ONHWP to reimburse the Builder for repairs done by the Builder under Rule 1.10 for items found not to be a breach of warranty;
- (f) decide whether the conciliation giving rise to the Warranty Assessment Report is chargeable or not chargeable, provided that the Builder may only rely on the grounds or reasons raised

- in a written notice prior to the conciliation and recognized as an exception in the definition of chargeable conciliation;
- (g) order a party or parties to pay the Arbitrator's costs, and in what amount, in accordance with Rule 8 and the Tariff; and
 - (h) decide whether an issue or matter raised in the arbitration is within the Arbitrator's jurisdiction.

7.2 Procedural Powers

In the course of an arbitration, an Arbitrator may determine all evidentiary and procedural issues regarding the conduct of the hearing and exercise all the powers that the Arbitrator considers necessary to make the arbitration as effective and as efficient as possible. Without in any way limiting any of the foregoing, the Arbitrator may:

- (a) set the date and time of the hearing, and, subject to Rule 6.4, the location of the hearing;
- (b) adjourn a hearing to a specific date, place and time; on such terms as are just, including payment of any additional costs incurred by the Arbitrator as the result of the adjournment;
- (c) if necessary, conduct one or more pre-hearing conferences with the parties to clarify or narrow the issues in dispute, to review the procedure to be followed in the arbitration, and to deal with any other matter that will assist the conduct of the arbitration;
- (d) vary the amount of the Builder's deposit, with or without a pre-hearing conference, and set the time for additional payment or partial refund accordingly;
- (e) make an interim order on any matter for which the Arbitrator may make a final award;
- (f) administer oaths or take the affirmations of the parties and witnesses;
- (g) require a witness, other than a party or the party's representative, to absent himself from the hearing during the testimony of another witness;
- (h) at the written request of a party, issue a notice requiring a person to attend and give evidence at the hearing, for the party to serve on the person;
- (i) order the taking of a view of the subject home with the owner's consent;
- (j) rely on his own expert knowledge;
- (k) waive or vary time limits or the strict requirement of these Rules except where these Rules expressly provide otherwise; and
- (l) use telecommunications, including conference calls and facsimile transmission, for communication with and delivery of documents by or among the Arbitrator and the parties.

7.3 Applicable Principles and Law

The Arbitrator shall consider each case on its merits and shall comply with the Act, the Construction Performance Guidelines established by ONHWP under Builder Bulletin #40, any other applicable Builder Bulletins and the laws of the Province of Ontario. The Arbitrator is not bound by previous awards in other arbitrations under the Builder Arbitration Forum.

8. COSTS OF THE ARBITRATION

8.1 Administration Costs

The administration fee paid by the Builder under Rule 4.2 is non-refundable, except as expressly provided in these Rules. ONHWP will bear the costs of administering the Builder Arbitration Forum and will apply the administration fee to defray such costs.

8.2 Parties' Own Costs

Parties must bear their own costs of preparation, presentation and attendance regardless of the outcome of the hearing.

8.3 Arbitrator's Costs

The unsuccessful party shall pay the Arbitrator's costs. If success is divided, the Arbitrator will allocate the costs between the parties.

8.4 Refund of Builder's Deposit

If the Builder is wholly successful, ONHWP shall refund the Builder's deposit without interest or penalty immediately after delivery of the award.

8.5 Application of Builder's Deposit to Costs

If the Builder is wholly or partially unsuccessful, ONHWP is entitled to apply the Builder's deposit to satisfy the Arbitrator's costs awarded against the Builder by the Arbitrator. If the Arbitrator's costs and charges awarded against the Builder are less than the deposit, ONHWP shall either refund the balance from the deposit without interest or retain the balance and apply it as a credit against any amounts owing to ONHWP by the Builder as a result of any award arising from the Arbitration. If the Arbitrator's costs exceed the deposit, the Builder shall pay any additional amount owing to the Arbitrator within 14 days of delivery of the award, failing which ONHWP will pay the Arbitrator on the Builder's behalf and will be entitled to indemnity from the Builder.

8.6 Cost of Abandoned or Dismissed Arbitration

If the Builder abandons the arbitration or if the arbitration is terminated due to the Builder's failure to comply with the Rules or an interim award, the Builder's deposit shall be forfeited. ONHWP must apply the forfeited deposit to payment of the Arbitrator's fees in accordance with the Tariff and will refund any remaining deposit to the Builder without interest.

8.7 Costs of Settled Arbitration

If ONHWP and the Builder agree to settle an arbitration before or at the hearing, the Arbitrator's costs will be allocated evenly between the parties, unless the terms of the settlement provide otherwise, and ONHWP will apply the Builder's deposit in payment of the Builder's share of costs, to the Arbitrator.

9. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

9.1 Delivery of Award

In the case of an oral hearing, the Arbitrator shall deliver the award to each of the parties within 7 days of the conclusion of the hearing. In the case of a written hearing, the Arbitrator shall deliver a final award within 14 days after delivery of ONHWP's Case Material.

9.2 Form and Content of Award

The award of an Arbitrator shall be in writing, dated and signed by the Arbitrator and shall:

- (a) set out a summary of the evidence and the facts as found by the Arbitrator;
- (b) set out the Arbitrator's conclusions and reasons as to whether the disputed items are or are not a breach of warranty;
- (c) set out the Arbitrator's conclusions and reasons as to whether the conciliation giving rise to the Warranty Assessment Report is chargeable or not chargeable;
- (d) specify whether either party is required to pay an amount to the other party, and if so, the amount;
- (e) specify which party or parties shall pay the Arbitrator's costs and in what amount or amounts, and shall attach an account from the Arbitrator;
- (f) contain a declaration that the Arbitrator has no conflict of interest with any party or witness; and
- (g) contain a declaration that the award is final and binding on the parties.

9.3 Corrections and Amendments to Award

The Arbitrator may, on his own initiative, within 30 days after making an award or at a party's written request made within 30 days after receiving the award:

- (a) correct typographical errors, errors of calculation and similar errors in the Award; or
- (b) amend the Award so as to correct an injustice caused by an oversight on the part of the Arbitrator.

9.4 Finality of Award

The Arbitrator's award shall be final and binding on the parties, and there shall be no right of appeal on questions of law, fact or mixed law and fact. However, the parties may apply to set aside an award on the grounds set out in section 46 of the Arbitration Act, 1991.

9.5 Enforcement of Award

If either party fails to comply with all or part of an award, the other party may enforce the award by court application. ONHWP may enforce an award by court application or Notice of Proposal, or both, and may invoke such processes simultaneously or consecutively, without the need to exhaust one remedy before the other.

10. TERMINATION OF ARBITRATION

10.1 Termination of Arbitration

An arbitration is terminated when:

- (a) the Arbitrator issues a final award, disposing of all matters referred to in arbitration; or,
- (b) the Arbitrator terminates the arbitration under Rule 10.2, 10.3 or 10.4.

10.2 Termination on Withdrawal by Builder

The Arbitrator shall make an order terminating the arbitration if the Builder withdraws from the arbitration, unless ONHWP objects to the termination and the Arbitrator agrees that ONHWP is entitled to obtain a final disposition of the dispute.

10.3 Termination for other Reasons

The Arbitrator shall make an order terminating the arbitration if:

- (a) the parties agree that the arbitration should be terminated;
- (b) the Arbitrator finds that the continuation of the arbitration has become unnecessary or impossible; or,
- (c) the arbitration is terminated or abandoned under Rule 12.

10.4 Non-Compliance – Builder

If the Builder fails to substantially comply with any Rule or with an interim order or award, the Arbitrator may, in his discretion, make an award dismissing the claim.

10.5 Non-Compliance – ONHWP

If ONHWP fails to substantially comply with any Rule or with an interim order or award, the Arbitrator may, in his discretion, continue the arbitration, but shall not treat the non-compliance as an admission of the Builder's allegations.

11. ARBITRATOR IMMUNITY & NON-COMPELLABILITY

11.1 Arbitrator Immunity

The Arbitrator shall not be liable to any party for any act or omission in connection with any arbitration conducted under the Rules.

11.2 Non-Compellability of Arbitrator

The Arbitrator shall not be compelled to testify at, or produce his notes in any legal proceeding.

12. PRIORITIES AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS

12.1 Appeals by Owner to LAT

If an owner requests a hearing before the Licence Appeal Tribunal ("LAT") under section 16 of the Act at any time before or during an arbitration regarding any items raised in the arbitration (hereinafter referred to as a "LAT Item"), the following rules will apply:

- (a) the arbitration of the LAT Item will be suspended until LAT issues its decision;
- (b) after LAT issues its decision, the Builder may recommence the arbitration of the LAT Item by delivering a written notice to ONHWP and the Arbitrator within 14 days after the issuance of the LAT decision. The LAT decision will be binding on the Builder, ONHWP and the Arbitrator regarding any issues addressed in the LAT decision that are also raised in the Builder Arbitration Forum; or
- (c) if the owner withdraws his request for a hearing before LAT, or if LAT dismisses the request for hearing on consent or for delay or otherwise without deciding the merits of the LAT Item, the Builder may recommence the arbitration of the LAT Item by delivering a written notice to ONHWP and to the Arbitrator within 14 days of receiving notice of the owner's withdrawal or the LAT dismissal.

12.2 Adding Builder to Owner Appeals to LAT

In all LAT hearings requested by an owner, ONHWP will request LAT to add the Builder as a party to the LAT hearing, unless the Builder is no longer registered, or is bankrupt or insolvent, or unless the claim is solely in respect of a major structural defect reported after the Builder's two year warranty under the Act.

12.3 Notice of Proposal

Where a Builder has commenced an arbitration, and while such an arbitration is still pending, ONHWP will not issue a Notice of Proposal against the Builder under section 9(1) of the Act based upon any grounds involving issues that are the subject of the arbitration unless the Registrar determines that the Builder has ceased to be in good standing on other grounds. ONHWP may issue a Notice of Proposal against the Builder for any other grounds, at any time while an arbitration is pending. If ONHWP does so, the following rules will apply:

- (a) if the Builder does not request a hearing before LAT from the Notice of Proposal under section 9 of the Act, the arbitration will terminate upon the issuance of a Final Notice of Refusal to Renew, Revocation or Suspension by ONHWP's Registrar; or
- (b) if the Builder requests a hearing before LAT from the Notice of Proposal under section 9 of the Act, then the arbitration will be suspended until LAT issues its decision and:
 - (i) if LAT directs the Registrar to refuse to renew the Builder's registration, to revoke the registration or to suspend the registration, and the Registrar does so, then the arbitration will terminate upon issuance of a Final Notice by the Registrar;
 - (ii) subject to subsection (iii), if LAT directs the Registrar to renew the Builder's registration or to refrain from revoking or suspending the registration, then the Builder may recommence the arbitration by delivering a written notice of recommencement to ONHWP and to the Arbitrator, within 10 days of the issuance of the LAT decision, failing which the arbitration will be deemed to be abandoned;
 - (iii) if LAT imposes terms and conditions of registration, the Builder must comply with the terms and conditions before recommencing the arbitration;
 - (iv) if the LAT proceeding is terminated on consent, or for delay, or otherwise without any decision by LAT on the merits and if the Registrar issues a Final Notice confirming the Notice of Proposal, then the arbitration will terminate upon issuance of such Final Notice; and
 - (v) if at anytime ONHWP withdraws the Notice of Proposal, then the Builder may recommence the arbitration by delivering a written notice of recommencement to ONHWP and to the Arbitrator, within 10 days of ONHWP's written notice of withdrawal; and
- (c) if the arbitration is terminated or abandoned under Rule 12.3 (a) or (b), payment of the Arbitrator's costs shall be in accordance with Rule 8.6; and
- (d) if the arbitration is recommenced under Rule 12.3, the original Arbitrator will retain jurisdiction and the proceeding shall continue with such modifications to the time periods as may be directed by the Arbitrator.

13. APPOINTMENT AND RELATED MATTERS

13.1 ONHWP Responsibilities

ONHWP shall have the responsibility for:

- (a) appointing arbitrators to the Roster;
- (b) compiling and keeping current the Roster of arbitrators;

- (c) monitoring and evaluating the performance of the arbitrators named in the Roster; and
- (d) creating and updating the Procedural Rules (including the forms and agreements in the Appendix), the Roster Agreement, the Tariff and other documents and agreements used in the Builder Arbitration Forum.

ONHWP will apply the Procedural Rules and the Roster Agreement for the purpose of such appointing, monitoring and evaluation.

13.2 Term of Roster Appointment

Roster appointments are effective for one year, unless terminated earlier or renewed for a further term.

13.3 Renewal

ONHWP may renew or not renew an appointment for a further term or terms, at its discretion. ONHWP will consider the arbitrator's compliance with the Roster Agreement and Procedural Rules in exercising its discretion.

13.4 Termination

ONHWP may terminate a Roster appointment if the Arbitrator breaches the Roster Agreement or the Procedural Rules.

14. OBLIGATIONS OF ARBITRATORS

14.1 Compliance with Rules and Policies

Arbitrators shall conduct themselves in a manner consistent with the principles of the Builder Arbitration Forum, including compliance with these Procedural Rules, the Roster Agreement, the Tariff and any other policies under the Builder Arbitration Forum.

14.2 Competence

Arbitrators shall ensure that they are competent to conduct an arbitration having regard to the nature of the dispute.

14.3 Timeliness

Arbitrators shall not knowingly agree to provide arbitration services which cannot be delivered or completed in a timely manner, having regard for the timeliness prescribed in these Procedural Rules.

15. CHANGES TO RULES

ONHWP may, at its sole discretion, add to, amend, or delete anything contained in these Rules. However, the Procedural Rules that shall apply to an arbitration are the Procedural Rules that were in force when the arbitration was commenced.

Instructions to Builders regarding the Standard Pre-Delivery Inspection Form

Under Builder Bulletin 42, the Customer Service Standard issued on August 15, 2003, vendors/builders ("builders") are required to conduct a Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI) of all freehold homes and condominium units with dates of possession (DOP) on or after October 1, 2003. Please refer to Part B of Builder Bulletin 42 for further details. Note: This requirement applies to homes that are currently enrolled but will not close until October 1st or later.

At the pre-delivery inspection, builders must either complete Tarion's standard Pre-Delivery Inspection Form, or they may use their own PDI Form, if it has been pre-approved by Tarion.

How will I get copies of the standard PDI Form?

Enclosed in this mailing are a sample of the new PDI Form and four additional copies to be used with purchasers. Builders with more than four homes enrolled will receive a subsequent mailing with enough additional copies to cover possessions through December 31, 2003 (based on Tarion records), unless they have a PDI Form that has been pre-approved by Tarion (see below). If you do not receive enough copies to cover all expected possessions through December, please contact Tarion at 1-800-668-0124.

If I already have a PDI Form, can I use it instead?

Yes, provided it has been approved in advance by Tarion. Although the new PDI Form is a standard document, Tarion recognizes that some builders have developed their own PDI Form or checklist and have used them successfully over the years.

To have your PDI Form approved, please send an original blank copy to:

Contact Centre Manager
Tarion
5160 Yonge Street
Toronto, ON
M2N 6L9

The review and approval process will take approximately three weeks, so we suggest that you send us a copy of your company's form as soon as possible, if you would like to use it for homes with a date of possession on or after October 1, 2003. Note: In order to be approved, a builder's PDI Form must contain at least the same information as shown on the standard PDI Form.

Please note that Tarion will not accept any builder (i.e. "non-standard") PDI Forms that have been used with purchasers unless they have been pre-approved.

How do I conduct the PDI and use the PDI Form?

1. Begin the inspection at either the highest or lowest point of the home (i.e., attic or basement) and work systematically from room to room until every area of the home has been inspected. Devote as much time to inspecting the exterior as the interior, assessing the exterior finishes and the driveway, walkways, decks and patios, as well as landscaping. Test and demonstrate all of the home's features and systems. (As a general rule, the inspection may take up to one hour for every 1,000 square feet.)
2. Note on the PDI Form anything damaged, missing, incomplete or not in good operating condition. Also note items that cannot be inspected, because for example they are dirty or inaccessible.
3. Be sure to note any "substitutions" of items referred to in, or to be selected under, the Agreement of Purchase and Sale.
4. Condominium builders should remind purchasers which parts of their unit are covered under the common elements warranty for the condominium project and, therefore, are not part of the PDI for their unit. This can include, for example, the heating system and even some of the exterior items in the unit like the windows. The condominium Board of Directors will complete a separate PDI for the common elements.
5. Confirm the Date of Possession with the purchaser/designate, and write it on the PDI Form.
6. Sign the completed PDI Form and ensure the purchaser (or the purchaser's designate) also signs it. Purchasers who intend to designate someone to conduct the PDI in their place should ensure they provide written authority allowing the designate to sign the PDI Form on their behalf.
7. Deliver the original completed PDI Form to Tarion with the Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP), within 15 days of the date of possession. Provide a copy of the completed PDI Form and CCP to the purchaser(s) on the pre-delivery inspection date and retain a copy for your files.

THE COMPLETED PRE-DELIVERY INSPECTION FORM IS A FORMAL RECORD OF THE HOME'S CONDITION BEFORE THE PURCHASER TAKES POSSESSION. IT WILL BE USED AS A REFERENCE FOR FUTURE WARRANTY SERVICE REQUESTS.

BE SURE TO COMPLETE THE PDI FORM CLEARLY AND ENSURE THAT THE PURCHASER INITIALS ALL CHANGES.

What happens if I don't deliver the completed CCP and PDI Form on time?

Builders who fail to deliver completed CCPs and PDI Forms, and Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package forms, to Tarion within 15 days of a home's possession may see a change in their terms and conditions of Registration.

Instructions to Builders Regarding Appointment of Designate for Pre-Delivery Inspection Form

Regulation 894 of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act has recently been revised to incorporate the new Customer Service Standard rules.

For every home with a date of possession on or after October 1, 2003, section 1.11.1 of Regulation 894 requires vendors/builders ("builders") to conduct a Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI) of the home with either or both of the purchaser's designate on or before the date of possession, without charging a fee.

If the purchaser(s) choose to send a designate to the PDI in his/her place, the builder may wish to ask the purchaser(s) to provide written authorization indicating the identity of the designate, and that the purchaser has given the designate authority to:

- Attend the PDI on his/ her behalf; and
- Sign and deliver on his/her behalf the Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI) Form, the Certificate of Completion and Possession (CCP), and the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package (if the purchaser has not already signed it).

Evidence of designate authorization should be requested by the builder in advance of the scheduled PDI.

Note: If the purchaser wishes to attend the PDI and sign documents on his/ her own behalf, he/she may also bring a designate, but evidence of designate authorization will not be necessary.

Please note that the purchaser can revoke or replace the appointment of designate at any time prior to the PDI.

Appointment of Designate for Pre-Delivery Inspection

This form may be filled out by a purchaser indicated on an Agreement of Purchase and Sale (APS), or an owner of land in a construction contract.

By completing and signing this form, a purchaser is indicating that they intend to send a designate, in their place, to the pre-delivery inspection (PDI) of their home. This form authorizes the designate to sign and deliver certain documents on the purchaser's behalf. Please check your APS to determine whether you are required to use this particular form.

The completed authorization form should be provided to the vendor/builder at the PDI or in advance. Note: Purchasers who wish to attend the PDI and sign documents on their own behalf may also bring a designate and, evidence of designate authorization will not be necessary.

Important Year-End Deadline

Your home's one year statutory warranty coverage ends on the day before the first anniversary of your home's possession. During the last 30 days of your first year of warranty coverage, you have a final opportunity to report outstanding one year warranty items to Tarion. Be sure to note this important year-end deadline and submit the Year-End Form on time.

What is the purpose of the Year-End Form?

The Year-End Form is used to report any new or outstanding warranty items, covered by the first year warranty under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, during the last 30 days of the first year of possession of your new home. It is essential that you use the Year-End Form to report one year warranty items and that you submit it on time.

Condominium owners should use the Year-End Form to report items in their units. Damage or defects in the condominium's common elements should be reported as indicated below.

When does the Year-End Form have to be submitted?

The Year-End Form must be submitted within the last 30 days of the first year of possession of your new home. This is your last opportunity to report outstanding one year warranty items.

What should I do if I forget to include something on the Year-End Form or discover a new item after I submit it?

You may submit more than one Year-End Form, as long as you do so within the last 30 days of the first year of possession of your home. If you find that you need to report additional items after you have submitted a Year-End Form, then you should complete and submit another Year-End Form.

Be sure to list all outstanding items on every Year-End Form you submit, even if some of them have been reported on prior Year-End Forms. If you submit more than one Year-End Form, you may include items reported previously by attaching a photocopy of the relevant pages from any prior Year-End Form.

If I submit more than one Year-End Form on time, will Tarion consider all of them as valid warranty service requests?

No. Each Year-End Form you properly submit on time will completely replace all Year-End Forms previously submitted with respect to your home. Every Year-End Form you submit must be complete, as Tarion will only act on the last properly submitted Year-End Form that is on time.

How do I know which items are covered by the statutory warranty?

For more information about items covered under the statutory warranty, please refer to the Homeowner Information Package and visit our website at www.tarion.com to consult the Construction Performance Guidelines. The Guidelines describe many of the most commonly reported warranty service requests and indicate which are covered by the statutory warranty.

How should I report condominium common element items? Should I report them on the Year-End Form?

If you see any damage or defects in the shared areas of the building, referred to as the common elements, you should notify your condominium corporation's Board of Directors in writing. Do not report such items on the Year-End Form, since condominium common elements are not covered by your unit's statutory warranty. (For a complete description of your unit's boundaries, refer to Schedule "C" of the declaration of your condominium, which should be included with your Disclosure Statement.)

If I have other questions about the Year-End Form, where can I get answers?

For additional information about new home warranty protection or about the Year-End Form specifically, visit our web site at www.tarion.com or call us at 1-877-9TARION (1-877-982-7466).

When completing a Year-End Form, remember to:

1. Complete all sections of the Form.
2. Sign the Form.
3. Number the pages in the bottom right corner of the Form and number any additional pages you are sending.

Once a Year-End Form is completed, remember to:

1. Keep a copy of the completed Form for your files.
2. Send a copy of the completed Form to your Builder.
3. Send a copy of the completed Form to Tarion.

TO MAKE A WARRANTY SERVICE REQUEST, PLEASE COMPLETE AND SUBMIT THIS FORM IN THE FINAL 30 DAYS OF THE FIRST YEAR OF POSSESSION OF YOUR HOME.

YOU MAY SUBMIT MORE THAN ONE YEAR-END FORM, HOWEVER TARION WILL ONLY ACT ON THE LAST FORM PROPERLY SUBMITTED ON TIME.

Submit a copy of this Form to your Builder and to Tarion, and remember to keep a copy for yourself. Submit a copy to Tarion at 5160 Yonge Street, Toronto ON M2N 6L9 or by fax to 1-877-664-9710 (see page 5 of your Homeowner Information Package for details about submitting this Form). Please refer to the accompanying Year-End Form Information sheet for additional information about this Form. Please print all information.

Homeowner Information Package

CONDOMINIUM EDITION

Please take a few minutes to read this booklet. It explains your rights and responsibilities under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, particularly what you need to do within the first 30 days after you get possession of your new home.

Introduction

We want you to feel at home from the moment you open the door!

Every new home in Ontario comes with warranty coverage provided by your builder and guaranteed by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "Warranty Program"), a private corporation that protects the statutory warranty rights of new home buyers under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.*

Your home was designed to meet or surpass both the structural requirements and the health and safety standards of the Ontario Building Code. While we anticipate that you will have a trouble-free experience with your new home, we want you to know that it is not unusual for adjustments to be required. In the event that you do require warranty service, this booklet will explain the steps you need to take.

This booklet refers only to your warranty rights under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and outlines our statutory responsibilities as well as yours. It does not describe any additional builder-supplied warranties (not covered by the Warranty Program).

This booklet explains the specific opportunities you have to request service on warranty-related items (warranty service), and describes the minimum customer service standard we will follow to handle your requests.

We urge you to read this document carefully, particularly your responsibilities during the first 30 days of possession as described in the "One Year Warranty" section of this booklet.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have any questions about the material covered in this booklet.

IMPORTANT –

When you need warranty service, you are responsible for completing all Warranty Service Forms and for submitting copies, to both your builder and the Warranty Program, by the deadlines indicated. Failure to submit your forms as described in this booklet will jeopardize your warranty rights under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

THIS BOOKLET CONTAINS IMPORTANT WARRANTY INFORMATION

Please read it thoroughly to ensure you get the full statutory warranty benefits you are entitled to.

You should review this booklet again within the first 30 days after you take possession of your new home and at least 30 days prior to the first anniversary of your date of possession.

If you are in doubt about your legal rights under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, you may wish to seek the advice of a lawyer.

* This publication provides a general overview of the coverages and procedures set out in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and Regulations. If there is any conflict between this publication or the Act and Regulations, the latter prevails. The Warranty Program and your builder assume no liability for any omission or error in this publication. To view the full text of the Act and Regulations, you may wish to visit the Warranty Program Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

Your Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI)

Approximately one week prior to the date of possession, our representative will guide you (or your designate) through an inspection of your new home. At this time you will be asked to identify any damaged, incomplete or missing items, or anything which is not operating properly.*

During the Pre-Delivery Inspection (PDI), our representative will record the items that you find on a PDI Form. When this form is complete, you will be asked to review and sign it to confirm that the listed items are accurate.

We will also ask you or your designate to review and sign a Certificate of Completion and Possession and Warranty Certificate (CCP). The CCP lists your home's Warranty Program enrolment number as well as the date of possession (which is also the start date of your statutory warranty). We will give you a signed copy of the CCP for your records and we will also forward a copy to the Warranty Program.

If you have not already done so, please complete and sign (or have your designate complete and sign) the form included in this package that confirms we provided you with a copy of this booklet prior to or during the PDI. Please give the form to our representative at the PDI.

Why do a PDI?

The inspection will likely be your first opportunity to view your new condominium unit (unit) in its completed state. It is your best opportunity to learn from our representative how to operate your unit's systems (such as ventilation, plumbing, heating or electrical). We suggest that you choose a different time to show your new home to family and friends.

Please ask as many questions as you like about the features and systems of your new home. That's why we're there. If you are unable to assess something because it has not been installed, completed or cleaned, please have this noted on the PDI Form as well.

What about the common elements?

Common elements are the shared areas of your condominium project, and they will vary depending on the type of project, for example, townhouse, high-rise or fully detached.

Things like the heating system and even some of the exterior items in your unit, like the windows, may be covered under the common elements warranty for your condominium project, and may not be part of the unit PDI.

To find out the boundaries between your unit and the project's common elements, refer to "Schedule C" of the declaration of your condominium, which should be included with your Disclosure Statement (delivered to you when you entered into your purchase agreement).

The condominium Board of Directors will complete a separate PDI with the builder for all of the common elements. If you see any damage or defects in the common elements, you should notify the Board of Directors so that the Board can decide whether to record them during the common elements PDI or take other action under the common elements warranty.

* If you intend to send a designate to conduct the PDI in your place, please ensure that you provide us with written authority from you as purchaser authorizing the designate to sign the PDI Form, the CCP and the Confirmation of Receipt of the Homeowner Information Package on your behalf. You can provide your written authority by completing and signing the "Appointment of Designate for Pre-Delivery Inspection" form provided with this booklet. (Check your purchase agreement to determine whether you are required to use this particular form.) However, you do not need to provide any written authority if you are attending with your designate and if you will be signing documents on your own behalf.

IMPORTANT –

The PDI Form does not constitute a request for warranty service and items listed on this form are not subject to the Warranty Service Rules for handling service requests as described on page 7. The PDI Form is simply a formal record of your new home's condition before you moved in and will be used by the Warranty Program as a reference for future warranty service requests. If you find that any of the items listed on the form have not been corrected by the time you move in, you should include them on your 30-Day Form included with this booklet (see "Warranty Service Requests" on page 5).

What kinds of things should I be looking for?

You should identify any damaged, incomplete, or missing items, as well as anything that is not operating properly or cannot be assessed because it is obscured from view or inaccessible, and have these items noted on the PDI Form.

You should be looking for things like chips in the porcelain or vanity tops, damage to floors or walls, and doors and windows that are not secure or do not open and close easily. You should check the exterior as well as the interior.

You should also note on the PDI Form any "substitutions" of items referred to in, or to be selected under, your Agreement of Purchase and Sale (purchase agreement). You may want to bring a copy of your purchase agreement with you to the PDI for reference.

What are substitutions?

If your purchase agreement gave you the right to select certain items of construction or finishing, such as colours and styles, these usually cannot be substituted without your written consent. In addition, if your purchase agreement states that your new home will include a particular item (such as a certain model of appliance, or a particular brand of window), but does not give you the right to make a selection, these items can only be substituted with items of equal or greater quality.

Please contact us if you feel that an unauthorized substitution has occurred (such as an obviously different colour or type of bath fixture). If you are unsure about your rights regarding unauthorized substitutions, you may wish to seek the advice of a lawyer.

What happens to the PDI Form?

Once the PDI Form has been completed and signed, our representative will give you a copy for your records. We will submit the original form to the Warranty Program within 15 days after possession and complete the necessary adjustments to the items covered by the warranty in a timely manner.

Your Other Pre-Move Protections

The following broadly outlines the additional benefits and protections guaranteed to new homeowners under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. If you need more detail about any of these pre-move protections, you can call the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 or visit their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

Deposit Protection

From the moment we received your deposit, it was guaranteed by the Warranty Program up to a maximum of $20,000 in the event the sale is not completed through no fault of your own. Deposits in excess of $20,000 are protected separately by the trust and excess deposit provisions of the Condominium Act.

Delayed Occupancy: Compensation

A builder is permitted to extend the occupancy date of your unit if we give you proper written notice of the extension. However, if you are not properly notified of a delay to your confirmed occupancy date, you are entitled to seek compensation under the terms of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act.

What's the difference between "confirmed" and "tentative" occupancy dates?

Every purchase agreement for a condominium unit will include either a confirmed occupancy date or a tentative occupancy date.

If the purchase agreement gives a tentative occupancy date, we are required to inform you in writing of the confirmed occupancy date no later than 30 days after the roof assembly is completed (or another specific stage of construction as specified in the purchase agreement).

If you are not given notice of the confirmed occupancy date 90 days before the tentative occupancy date, then the tentative date automatically becomes the confirmed date for the purpose of calculating compensation for the delay.

Once the confirmed occupancy date is established, we are allowed to extend it once by up to 120 days. In this situation, we must give you at least 65 days written notice. We can also extend the date by up to 15 days if we give you at least 35 days written notice. We are permitted to use both of these extensions as long as we give you the required notices and the total of the two extensions does not exceed 135 days.

IMPORTANT –
A builder can delay occupancy of a new condominium unit for up to five days without giving notice or compensation. Also, please note that compensation will not be paid for delays caused by events beyond our control, such as strikes or floods, or delays which you cause.

Do I have to agree to an earlier occupancy date?

We may offer you occupancy of your unit earlier than the confirmed occupancy date, but we cannot require that you accept it. We must obtain your consent in writing to an earlier date.

When can I claim compensation?

Once you get occupancy of your unit, you may be able to claim up to $100 per day in living expenses (such as temporary accommodation costs), plus other direct costs caused by the delay (such as extra moving and storage costs), up to a maximum of $5,000. In order to be compensated, you must get occupancy and then submit a Delayed Occupancy Form (along with all receipts) to both our office and the Warranty Program within the first 30 days of possession or during the final 30 days of the first year of possession.

The form can be obtained by calling the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 or by visiting their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

If you are unsure about your rights regarding delayed occupancy, you may wish to seek the advice of a lawyer.

The One Year Warranty

Your home's one year warranty coverage begins on the date of possession and remains in effect even if your unit is sold before the warranty expires. In addition to the warranties regarding delayed occupancy and substitutions, during the first year of possession, we warrant that your home:

- is free from defects in work and materials;
- is fit to live in; and
- meets Ontario Building Code requirements.

IMPORTANT –

Only forms submitted on time will be accepted. They will be handled according to the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules described on page 7 of this booklet. To protect your warranty rights, you should obtain proof of your warranty service request submission to the Warranty Program (such as a fax confirmation sheet or registered mail receipt).

Are the common elements included?

For most condominiums, warranty coverage also includes the shared areas of the building, referred to as the common elements. Coverage for common elements as well as some spaces that may be for your exclusive use, known as "exclusive use common elements," begins on the day the condominium corporation is registered. See "Schedule F" of the declaration of your condominium for details (it should be included with your Disclosure Statement delivered to you when you entered into your purchase agreement).

If you see any damage or defects in the common elements, you should notify your condominium corporation's Board of Directors so that the Board can decide what action to take under the common elements warranty.

Please note – there is no warranty coverage for Common Elements Condominiums, or for the common elements of Vacant Land Condominiums.

WARRANTY SERVICE REQUESTS

During the first year of possession of your new home, you will have two opportunities to report warranty items covered by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. It is essential that you use the standard forms (available from the Warranty Program) and submit them, when necessary, to both our office and to the Warranty Program. Follow the instructions on the forms to ensure that your forms are complete and are submitted on time.

The 30-Day Form (provided with this booklet)

After moving into your new home, you may notice that one or more of the items that you listed on the PDI Form have yet to be corrected to your satisfaction. In addition, you may find other items within the first 30 days that were missed during your Pre-Delivery Inspection or have become apparent since taking possession.

At any time within the first 30 days after possession, you may submit a 30-Day Form listing outstanding PDI items and any new items discovered since you took possession of your home. Please note that you can only submit one 30-Day Form and copies must be sent to both our office and to the Warranty Program.

DON'T MISS OUT

We recommend that you fill out and submit the 30-Day Form on or about the 25th day after your date of possession. If you don't submit a 30-Day Form on time you will have to wait until the final 30 days of the first year of possession to make a warranty service request.

† The maximum you may claim from the Warranty Program in damages for breach of warranty is $100,000. Lower limits may apply for certain kinds of claims.

* Submit means submit by hand, courier, fax or, except during a general interruption of postal service, by regular or registered mail. In the case of regular mail, submission is effective on the postmark date and must be received by the Warranty Program on or before 5 days after the expiry of the time provided herein for the submission of the Warranty Service Form. In the case of registered mail, submission is effective on the date of mailing and will be deemed to be made on the postmark date as it appears on the envelope received by the Warranty Program, or, if the postmark date is missing or illegible, on the date shown on the registered mail receipt given to you by the Post Office. Submission by regular or registered mail is not effective during a general interruption of postal service (for example, a strike or lockout).

In the case of a fax, submission is effective on the business day it is sent to the Warranty Program, if sent before 12:00 midnight, and otherwise on the next business day. If sent by hand or courier, submission is effective on the business day it is received by the Warranty Program, if received before 5:00 p.m., and otherwise on the next business day.

The Year-End Form

The 30-Day Form is intended to catch most warranty items and allow for timely repairs. However, it takes several months for the natural materials in a new home to dry and settle. After your new home has weathered an Ontario winter, new one year warranty items may emerge.

At any time within the last 30 days before the expiry of year one of your warranty, you may submit a Year-End Form to both our office and the Warranty Program listing any new or outstanding items. Only forms submitted on time will be accepted (see the footnote on page 5 for how to effectively "submit" your forms). The Year-End Form can be obtained by calling the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 or by visiting their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

When does year-end warranty service begin?

The start date of our responsibility to service the items covered by warranty depends on the method you use to submit your Year-End Form. If you submit your Year-End Form:

- By fax, courier or hand, the start date is the first anniversary of the date of possession;
- By regular or registered mail, the start date is the later of the day after the form is received by the Warranty Program or the first anniversary of your date of possession.

Our responsibility to service the items follows the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules (see page 7).

IMPORTANT –
It is important that you list ALL outstanding items any time you submit a Warranty Service Form. If you submit more than one Year-End Form, the Warranty Program will only act on the last properly submitted form.

CHECK IT OUT – If you are in doubt as to whether an item is covered by the warranty, we suggest you consult the Construction Performance Guidelines published by the Warranty Program. The Guidelines describe many of the most commonly reported warranty service requests and indicate which are covered by the warranty and which are not. Visit www.newhome.on.ca to search or browse the Guidelines.

The Two Year Warranty

Your home's two year warranty coverage begins on the date of possession and remains in effect even if your unit is sold before the warranty expires. Your warranty provides coverage for the following for a period of two years from the date of possession:

- Water penetration through the basement or foundation walls;
- Defects in our materials or work (caulking, windows, doors, etc.) resulting in water penetration into the building envelope;
- Defects in our materials or work in the electrical, plumbing and heating delivery and distribution systems;
- Defects in our materials or work which result in the detachment, displacement or deterioration of exterior cladding (such as brickwork, aluminum or vinyl siding);
- Major structural defects;
- Violations of the Ontario Building Code's health and safety provisions.

During the first year of possession, you should report items in your unit covered by the two year warranty to our office and the Warranty Program on either the 30-Day or the Year-End Form.

At any time during the second year of possession you may submit a Second-Year Form to both our office and the Warranty Program for any of the above noted two year warranty items in your unit. (The form can be obtained from the Warranty Program by calling 1-800-668-0124 or by visiting their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca). Our responsibility to service these items begins on the day after the Warranty Program receives the form and follows the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules.

You should notify your condominium corporation's Board of Directors if you see damage or defects in the common elements so that the Board can decide what action to take under the common elements warranty.

How Are My Warranty Service Requests Handled During The First Two Years?

The Warranty Service Rules

1. For all Warranty Service Forms you submit, except the Year-End Form, we have a maximum of 120 days after the Warranty Program receives your form to repair or otherwise correct items covered by the warranty. The Warranty Program will confirm submission of your form.

For the Year-End Form, we have a maximum of 120 days from the start date described on page 6 ("When does year-end warranty service begin?") to repair or otherwise correct items covered by the warranty. The Warranty Program will confirm submission of your Year-End Form.

2. If for any reason we do not complete the repairs to your satisfaction by the end of the 120-day period, you have 30 days to contact the Warranty Program and request that they schedule an inspection.* If you do not do so, all the items listed on your Warranty Service Form will be considered resolved and the matter closed. (You may resubmit the item(s) at a later date if the warranty covering those item(s) is still in effect.)
3. We then have 30 days from the day you requested the inspection to complete the corrections to the remaining items described on the Warranty Service Form.
4. If the repairs are not completed by the end of those 30 days, the Warranty Program will conduct the scheduled inspection with both you (or your designate) and one of our representatives present, and will send out a report within 10 days. The report will outline which outstanding items we must resolve under the terms of the warranty, and we will have 30 days following the date of the report to do so.
5. The Warranty Program will contact you 30 days after the date of the report to confirm that we have corrected all the items listed in the report. If the items have not been corrected, the Warranty Program will work directly with you to settle the matter. Note that, except in the case of a claim for Delayed Occupancy, the Warranty Program cannot complete the settlement until you have title to your unit.

You should allow our representatives and/or subcontractors (also known as "trades") access to your home during regular business hours, at a mutually acceptable time arranged in advance, in order to complete the necessary work. Failure to do so will jeopardize your warranty rights.

IMPORTANT –
There are several specific situations – including emergencies – where the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules may not apply. A full list of these can be found beginning on page 9 of this booklet.

* In some cases, such as claims for delayed occupancy, the Warranty Program may do a desk assessment (a review of documents) rather than an inspection of the home. The Warranty Program will charge a $50 fee when you request an inspection or desk assessment. However the fee will be refunded to you, after the inspection or desk assessment is conducted, if the Warranty Program's report contains any outstanding items that we must resolve under the terms of the warranty.

Seven Year Major Structural Defect Coverage

Your home's seven year major structural defect (MSD) coverage begins on the date of possession and remains in effect even if the home is sold before the coverage expires. An MSD is defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act as:

- * Any defect in materials or work that results in the failure of a load-bearing part of the home's structure or materially and adversely affects its load-bearing function; or
- * Any defect in materials or work that significantly and adversely affects the use of the building as a home.

During the first two years of possession, you should report MSD items in your unit to both our company and the Warranty Program on the 30-Day, Year-End or Second-Year Form, as applicable. If it is an emergency, please see page 9 for what to do in emergency situations.

At any time after your second year of possession, but no later than the expiry of the seventh year of your warranty, you may report any MSD items in your unit directly to the Warranty Program using an MSD Form. The form can be obtained from the Warranty Program by calling 1-800-668-0124 or by visiting their Web site at www.newhome.on.ca

After your second year of possession, the Warranty Program, not the builder, is responsible for any new MSD warranty service requests.

During years three through seven, the Warranty Program will schedule and conduct an inspection, and issue a decision to you within 10 days of the date the Warranty Program received your MSD Form. If the item is found to be covered by the warranty, the Warranty Program will work directly with you to settle the claim. Please note that the Warranty Program cannot complete the settlement until you have title to your unit.

If you wish to report an MSD in the common elements, you should notify your condominium corporation's Board of Directors so that the Board can decide what action to take under the common elements warranty.

CHECK IT OUT - If you are in doubt as to whether an item is covered by the seven year MSD coverage, we suggest you consult the Construction Performance Guidelines published by the Warranty Program. The Guidelines describe many of the most commonly reported warranty service requests and indicate which are covered by the warranty and which are not. Visit www.newhome.on.ca to search or browse the Guidelines.

Exceptions To The Warranty Service Rules

There are circumstances that may affect our ability to make adjustments and/or corrections according to the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules. While these are rare, it is important that you understand what they are.

Exceptions In Case Of Emergency

Certain severe conditions constitute an emergency situation. An emergency is defined as any warrantable deficiency within the control of the builder that, if not attended to immediately, would likely result in imminent and substantial damage to your home, or would likely represent an imminent and substantial risk to the health and safety of its occupants. Examples of emergency situations include:

1. Total loss of heat between September 15 and May 15;* 2. Gas leak;* 3. Total loss of electricity;* 4. Total loss of water supply;* 5. Total sewage stoppage;* 6. Plumbing leakage that requires complete water shut-off; 7. Major collapse of any part of the home's exterior or interior structure; 8. Major water penetration on the interior walls or ceiling; 9. A large pool of standing water inside the home; or 10. Any situation where, in the opinion of the Warranty Program, the home is uninhabitable for health or safety reasons.

*Emergency situations due to the failure of a municipality or utility to provide the service are not within our control.

What To Do In An Emergency Situation

1. You should immediately call the emergency contact telephone number we provided when we gave you this booklet. You should also contact the condominium corporation's Board of Directors and/or the Property Manager.
2. If you are unable to reach our office or if we do not correct the situation within 24 hours, you should contact the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 for further assistance.
3. If you cannot reach us or the Warranty Program, and have no other option but to have the work completed, you or your contractors, in consultation with your Board of Directors, should correct the situation. However, only the emergency condition should be corrected and the problem should be documented with pictures, both before and after (if possible).
4. You should not repair consequential damage to builder-installed materials. If we are responsible for the emergency item, we will handle any such consequential damage within 30 days of your notice to us and the Warranty Program. If we fail to do so, the Warranty Program will work directly with you to settle the matter. Please note that the Warranty Program cannot complete the settlement until you have title to your unit.
5. In the circumstances set out in part 3 above, to recover your costs you will need to submit an Emergency Form (available from the Warranty Program at 1-800-668-0124 or www.newhome.on.ca) as soon as possible after completing the repair. On the form, you must describe the problem in detail as well as the repair methods used by your contractor. Send the Emergency Form, along with all receipts and invoices received for work and materials, to the Warranty Program. Please also send a copy of the Form and related receipts/invoices to our office.

Apart from taking steps to protect your property or safety, you should not undertake any repair work without giving us 24 hours to assess the problem and take corrective measures. You will not automatically receive reimbursement for emergency repairs and, in addition, completing the work without our assessment may jeopardize your warranty coverage.

Seasonal Warranty Items

Seasonal warranty items involve service requests regarding the exterior of your home which cannot be repaired effectively within the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules due to regular seasonal conditions and/or severe sustained weather. The period from May 1 to November 15 is generally considered to have suitable weather conditions for making such repairs. In high-rise and low-rise condominium projects, these items are more likely to affect the common elements warranty and if so, would be handled by the condominium corporation's Board of Directors. These items include:

- * Exterior painting;
- * Exterior cement/concrete work (including parging application/repair);
- * Exterior mortar work (including brick installation/repair);
- * Exterior stucco work/repairs (including repairs to exterior insulation finishing systems [EIFS]);
- * Exterior caulking;
- * In-ground support for decks; and
- * Any other exterior work deemed appropriate by the Warranty Program (but not including air conditioning, grading, sod, driveways and walkways which are covered separately below).

Seasonal warranty items should be reported on your 30-Day, Year-End or Second-Year Form, as appropriate. They will be dealt with according to the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules (see page 7), subject to suitable weather conditions as described above. If we cannot correct a seasonal warranty item within the required timelines due to unsuitable weather conditions, we must complete the repairs as soon as possible after the return of suitable weather conditions and in any event between the following April 30 and September 1.

If for any reason we do not complete the repairs to your satisfaction, you have 30 days (until October 1) to contact the Warranty Program and request their assistance. If you do not do so, the seasonal warranty items listed on your Warranty Service Form will be considered resolved and the matter will be closed. (Note that you may resubmit the item at a later date if the warranty covering the item is still in effect.)

Special Seasonal Warranty Items

The completion of your new home's final grading, landscaping (laying sod, etc.) and the installation of driveways, patios and walkways are considered special seasonal warranty items. In high-rise and low-rise condominium projects, these items are more likely to affect the common elements warranty and if so, would be handled by your condominium corporation's Board of Directors.

What if I report a special seasonal warranty item on my 30-Day Form?

We have one year from the date of possession to complete any warrantable special seasonal items reported on your 30-Day Form. If you notice one of these items during your unit PDI, we ask that you include it on your 30-Day Form as well.

If the item is determined to be warrantable and is not corrected by the first anniversary of possession, you should contact the Warranty Program directly to request an assessment.

What if I report a special seasonal warranty item on my Year-End Form?

If a warrantable special seasonal item is reported on your Year-End Form and the item remains outstanding after the first anniversary of possession, the Warranty Program will assess your request. If the item is determined to be warrantable the Warranty Program will work directly with you to settle the matter. Please note that the Warranty Program cannot complete the settlement until you have title to your unit.

Air Conditioning

Problems with your builder-supplied air conditioner are covered by the one year warranty. A complete loss of cooling due to the failure of a builder-supplied air conditioner between May 15 and September 15 (during the first year of possession) is considered undue hardship and can be dealt with outside the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules.

You should report an air conditioning issue affecting your unit on either your 30-Day or Year-End Form. It will be dealt with according to the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules (see page 7).

However, if your air conditioning is not working between May 15 and September 15, please contact our office and the Warranty Program and we will arrange an assessment. If we assess the condition to be covered by the one year warranty, we will arrange repair or complete the installation within 30 days of your initial request. If your air conditioning has not been restored within 30 days of contacting us, you should contact the Warranty Program directly at 1-800-668-0124 for further assistance.

IMPORTANT –

Your air conditioning may be part of your condominium project's common elements and therefore not covered by your unit's one year warranty. If the air conditioning is part of the common elements, report the issue to your condominium corporation's Board of Directors.

Extraordinary Situations

The final exception to the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules is in the case of an extraordinary situation. An extraordinary situation exists when it is not possible for a builder to complete a repair for reasons not related to seasonality.

There are two types of extraordinary situations that could cause us to seek an extension of the timelines set out in the Warranty Service Rules:

1. An industry or regional event that affects a segment of the construction industry or region of the province (such as labour, trade or materials shortages, strikes or other labour disputes, and severe weather or other acts of nature); or
2. Special circumstances affecting a particular builder or home, such as the special order of a part that will take more time to arrive than the Warranty Service Rules allow.

If we apply to the Warranty Program for this type of extension on any of your outstanding items, we will notify you in writing. If the extension is granted, the Warranty Program will set a new timeline and confirm it with you.

Contact us or call the Warranty Program directly at 1-800-668-0124 if you require a more detailed account of the process for resolving items affected by extraordinary situations.

What's Not Covered By The Warranty?

We are happy to repair or otherwise correct any item in your new home that is covered by the statutory warranties described in this booklet. However, there are conditions and/or circumstances under which we cannot be held responsible for a damaged or defective item.

In order to avoid misunderstandings or miscommunication, please review the following conditions under which items are not covered by the warranty:

1. Damage resulting from improper maintenance, such as dampness or condensation caused by the homeowner's failure to maintain proper ventilation levels or improper operation of a humidifier, hot tub, or any other moisture-producing device.
2. Alterations, deletions or additions made by the homeowner (such as changes to the direction of the downspouts, grading or slope away from the house).
3. Defects in materials, design and work supplied or installed by the homeowner/purchaser.
4. Secondary damage caused by defects under warranty. While the defects themselves are covered, the personal or property damage they cause is not. Often, your homeowners' insurance covers secondary damage.
5. Normal wear and tear, such as scuffs and scratches to floor and wall surfaces caused by homeowners moving, decorating, and/or day-to-day use of the home.
6. Normal shrinkage of materials that dry out after construction (such as nail "pops" or minor concrete cracking).
7. Settling soil around the house or along utility lines.
8. Damage from floods, "acts of God", wars, riots, or vandalism.
9. Damage from insects or rodents, unless the result of construction that does not meet the Ontario Building Code.
10. Damage caused by municipal services or other utilities.
11. Surface defects in work and materials noted and accepted in writing by the homeowner at the time of possession.
12. Damage caused by the homeowner or visitors.
13. Contractual warranties which lie outside the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. You may have recourse for these warranties under your purchase agreement.

CHECK IT OUT – If you are in doubt as to whether an item is covered by the statutory warranty, we suggest you consult the Construction Performance Guidelines published by the Warranty Program. The Guidelines describe many of the most commonly reported warranty service requests and indicate which are covered by the warranty and which are not. Visit www.newhome.on.ca to search or browse the Guidelines.

Maintaining Your New Home

No one needs to tell you that home ownership is a big responsibility, one that demands a significant investment both financially and in time and effort spent keeping your home in top shape.

Today's advanced building products have eliminated much of the time-consuming and often tedious work involved in home maintenance, and, although your new home contains many of these leading-edge materials, no home is maintenance-free.

Energy-efficient homes are built tightly to seal out the cold weather in winter and seal in the air conditioning in summer. Because of this it is possible that a new home can be severely damaged by lack of ventilation or excess moisture.

What causes moisture damage?

Your home can be damaged when weather-related water is allowed to enter and remain in the structure. Water from leaking pipes or fixtures that is not immediately cleaned up, and indoor humidity levels that are not properly controlled, can have serious consequences.

Sometimes this damage is easily seen; at other times the damage is hidden inside wall and roof spaces. Regardless of where it occurs, moisture damage can lead to serious problems, such as rot and structural failure.

How can I control moisture?

The Warranty Program recommends that all new homeowners always use their unit's ventilation system to control moisture. In a typical home, up to 20 litres of water can be added to the indoor environment per day. That's 7,300 litres in a year, enough to fill a medium-sized swimming pool.

Bathroom fans, kitchen range hoods and packaged ventilators such as heat-recovery ventilators are specifically installed in your unit to help you control moisture and contaminants. Regular use of your unit's ventilation system will exhaust excess airborne moisture caused by bathing, showering, doing laundry and cooking.

What else can I do to control moisture?

Here are some extra tips you can follow to help prevent moisture damage to your home.

Outside the home

1. Keep flowerbeds or landscaping at least six inches or 150 mm away from the top of the foundation. Placing soil near or above the top of the foundation allows moisture to come into direct contact with the structure of the building.
2. Clear eavestroughs of debris regularly and extend downspouts so that water is directed away from the building. Water flow can erode the ground near the foundation and create depressions where water collects. Standing water near the foundation can force its way into the basement.
3. Fix the caulking around windows and doors and on the roof if it becomes cracked or separated.
4. Have your roof inspected regularly to ensure shingles, flashing and chimney caps are in place and sealed properly.

IMPORTANT – Moisture damage to your home caused by the improper or inadequate use of your home ventilation system, or other kinds of preventative maintenance, is not covered by the new home warranty.

Inside the home

1. In the winter, keep the relative humidity in your home in the range of 30-45%. Lower humidity levels may affect your health and cause things made of wood to shrink. Excess humidity can cause condensation on windows and damage the surrounding wall. When using a humidifier, follow the manufacturer's instructions.
2. In the summer, dehumidify the basement to avoid condensation buildup on the cool foundation walls. Relative humidity levels should not exceed 60%.
3. Repair leaky pipes and fixtures immediately. Clean and completely dry any areas that are dampened or wet within 48 hours.
4. Store organic materials such as newspapers and clothes away from cool, damp areas. Keep storage areas tidy so that air circulates freely.
5. Purchase a "hygrometer" to monitor the relative humidity in your home.
6. If you are adding a hot tub to your home, or have a large collection of plants, consider the amount of moisture they will add to your indoor air and ventilate accordingly.
7. Never vent your clothes dryer inside your home. If you have a gas- or propane-fired dryer you may also be venting carbon monoxide inside your home!
8. Investigate and identify any musty smells and odours. They are often an indicator that there is a hidden moisture problem.

As an additional service to our new homeowners, we have included a Home Maintenance Checklist in this booklet (see page 15) to guide you through your annual maintenance routine. The checklist provides a monthly breakdown of items for inspection, and is intended to help you set up a regular schedule of checkups and cleanups.

Enjoy Your New Home!

We look forward to a lasting and mutually satisfactory relationship with you. In providing you with this information booklet, our goal is to keep the lines of communication open between us. Please feel free to contact us at any time if you have any questions regarding the information contained in this booklet.

Welcome home!

Home Maintenance Checklist

Please note that some of the following items may be part of your condominium's common elements and therefore not your responsibility to maintain. For information on common elements, please refer to "Schedule C" and "Schedule F" of the declaration of your condominium, which should be included with the Disclosure Statement delivered to you when you entered into your purchase agreement.

APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION WITH ONTARIO NEW HOME WARRANTY PROGRAM (ONHWP)

DATE OF APPLICATION: ____ / ____ / ____

Submission of an incomplete Application for Registration will result in delaying the processing and final approval for your project. Applications for freehold projects require approximately three weeks to be approved. Applications for condominium projects require approximately four weeks to be approved. Submit your Application for Registration well ahead of the date you want to start marketing or construction. Under the Ontario Building Code Act, you won't be granted a building permit until you are registered with ONHWP. Please note that every new company you form that is acting as a vendor, builder or vendor/builder must be registered separately with ONHWP.

If you require additional space to answer any of the questions in this Application form, please attach a separate sheet of paper using your company's letterhead, clearly labeled and numbered.

PANEL No. 1 – STATUS OF APPLICANT (check only one category)

a. Vendor

If you have entered into an agreement with a builder, whereby the builder agrees to construct a project for you, you fall into this category. As a vendor, you will be transferring title of the units to the purchaser and assuming responsibility for the proposed project. While ONHWP may register vendors separately from builders, their applications are reviewed and approved together when they are both complete and meet ONHWP's documentation requirements. A copy of the agreement between vendor and builder must be provided.

b. Builder

If you have entered into an agreement with a vendor to construct a home or homes, you fall into this category. If you register as a builder, the vendor (who MUST also be registered with ONHWP), and not you, will transfer title of the units, but you will both be jointly responsible for the proposed project. While ONHWP may register builders separately from vendors, their applications are reviewed together and approved when they are both complete and meet ONHWP's documentation requirements. A copy of the agreement between vendor and builder must be provided.

c. Vendor/Builder

If you meet the conditions of both a builder and a vendor (you will construct the home(s) and transfer title), or if you build a home or homes pursuant to a construction contract with the owner of the land, you fall into this category. To be a vendor/builder you are required to have both the technical competence to construct a home or homes and the financial competence to complete the proposed residential project.

Note: All references to a vendor/builder in this Application may refer to a builder, a vendor, or a vendor/builder, as defined above.

PANEL No. 2 – APPLICANT INFORMATION

a. Full Legal Name of Applicant (as it appears in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, or in the construction contract):

b. Marketing name: _____

(Please provide a copy of the name style registration filed with the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services [MCBS], if applicable.)

THIS AGREEMENT made the _____ day of _____, 20____,

B E T W E E N:

(Print the exact legal name of the Vendor)

of the City of _____, in the Province of Ontario

(hereinafter referred to as the "Registrant");

Tarion Warranty Corporation, a private, non-profit corporation, incorporated without share capital, pursuant to the laws of the Province of Ontario

(hereinafter referred to as "Tarion")

VENDOR AGREEMENT

WHEREAS:

1. Tarion is a private, non-profit corporation designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to administer the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, as amended from time to time (the "Act");
2. the Registrant applied to Tarion for registration as a vendor under the Act;
3. Tarion grants registration conditional upon the Registrant executing this Vendor Agreement (the "Agreement"), which Agreement deals with the Registrant's rights and obligations as a vendor under the Act, the regulations enacted thereunder, as amended from time to time (the "Regulations") and all applicable builder bulletins issued by Tarion from time to time (the "Bulletins");

NOW THEREFORE IN CONSIDERATION OF the registration of the Registrant under the Act, and for other good and valuable consideration (the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby expressly acknowledged), Tarion and the Registrant hereby confirm the veracity of the foregoing recitals and that same comprise an integral part of this Agreement, and agree with each other as follows:

VENDOR AGREEMENT

ARTICLE 1.0 – APPLICATION AND REGISTRATION

- Authority of the Registrant to enter into the Agreement 1.1 The Registrant represents and warrants to Tarion that the Registrant has full capacity, power and authority to enter into this Agreement, holds all necessary licenses and permits required to carry on the business of selling homes in the Province of Ontario and, if a corporation, is a duly organized and validly subsisting corporation under the laws of the Province of Ontario (or alternatively is a duly organized and validly subsisting extra-provincial corporation or federal corporation, and licensed to carry on business in the Province of Ontario).
- Commitment to true and accurate disclosure 1.2 The Registrant further represents and warrants to Tarion that the information set forth in the application for registration of the Registrant under the Act, and in other documents furnished by the Registrant to Tarion in connection with such application, is true and correct in all material respects and does not omit to communicate any fact, circumstance or information that may have a material adverse impact on the Registrant's ability to fulfill its obligations under this Agreement, or that may reasonably have a material affect on the risk assessment undertaken (or to be undertaken), in connection with the registration (or continued registration) of the Registrant under the Act.
- Commitment to submission of security, financial information and other documentation 1.3 The Registrant shall, upon the request of Tarion and at the expense of the Registrant, furnish Tarion with such guarantees, indemnities, surety bonds, letters of credit, deposit trust agreements, undertakings, collateral charges and/or other security instruments as Tarion may reasonably require in accordance with the Act and the Regulations, together with statements of personal net worth, bank statements, drivers' licenses, birth certificates, articles of incorporation, sample signatures, corporate by-laws, financial statements, and/or such other documentation, records and security as Tarion may reasonably require for the purpose of initial registration, renewal of registration and/or securing the obligations imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins. Between renewal dates, Tarion shall not require additional documentation or security from or on behalf of the Registrant, unless Tarion reasonably believes that intervening circumstances have arisen which may impair the Registrant's ability to sell homes and/or carry out any requisite after sales service and warranty work.
- Use of credit information 1.4 The Registrant hereby authorizes Tarion to procure and utilize, from time to time, credit information in respect of the Registrant, and agrees that no action, claim or other proceeding shall be instituted or pursued against Tarion in respect of any damages incurred by the Registrant thereby, provided such credit information is not disclosed to any third party, except for credit reporting agencies to whom Tarion owes a duty of disclosure, and except as otherwise required by law.

- | | | |
|--|------|--|
| Vendor's ongoing disclosure obligation | 1.5 | The Registrant shall be obliged to communicate to Tarion any fact, circumstance or information that may have a material adverse impact on the Registrant's ability to sell homes and/or carry out any requisite after sales service and warranty work. |
| Tarion's disclosure obligation | 1.6 | Tarion agrees to advise the Registrant, in writing, of all notices of claims or potential claims that Tarion receives from any purchaser(s) or homeowner(s) relating to any home(s) in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant). Tarion also agrees to provide the Registrant with a reasonable opportunity (as may be specified by the Act, and/or the Regulations from time to time) to rectify or remedy any warrantable work or financial loss claim(s) prior to Tarion initiating any enforcement proceedings or remedial work. |
| Termination of the Registrant's obligations | 1.7 | This Agreement, and all obligations of the Registrant hereunder may not be unilaterally terminated by the Registrant, but rather, shall remain in full force and effect and continue to bind the Registrant, notwithstanding any expiry or revocation of the registration of the Registrant under the Act and notwithstanding any amendment, alteration or modification of the Act or the Regulations, until the earlier of the date that: <ul style="list-style-type: none">(i) all obligations and liabilities of the Registrant to Tarion have been fulfilled or complied with; or(ii) all applicable warranty or limitation periods have expired, with no claims having been filed with Tarion prior thereto; relating to any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant). |
| Consent to transfer or assign the registration | 1.8 | The registration of the Registrant under the Act is not transferable or assignable by the Registrant, whether by way of power of attorney, sale, amalgamation or otherwise, without the prior written consent of Tarion. |
| No unauthorized use of the registration number | 1.9 | The Registrant shall not permit the use of the Registrant's registration number by any other party, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Registrant shall immediately report the use of the Registrant's registration number by any other party to Tarion upon becoming aware of same. |
| Designation as "Registered Vendor" | 1.10 | During the term of the registration of the Registrant under the Act, the Registrant shall be entitled to hold itself out as a "Registered Vendor". |

ARTICLE 2.0 – LIABILITY AND INDEMNITY

- Warranty obligations during the warranty periods 2.1 The Registrant shall diligently perform the obligations heretofore or hereafter imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins and shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any non-performance or inadequate performance of such obligations, in whole or in part, at the times, (and in the manner) as may be provided or contemplated by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins, provided written notice of a claim against the Registrant, or relating to any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant) has been given to Tarion within the relevant warranty period(s).
- Obligations for financial losses of purchasers 2.2 The Registrant shall diligently perform the obligations of the Registrant under each purchase agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into by the Registrant relating to any home in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that was enrolled by the Registrant). In the event of the failure of the Registrant to perform such obligations, the Registrant shall pay to each purchaser who has made a written claim to Tarion (in respect of his or her purchase agreement with the Registrant) prior to the expiration of the applicable limitation period, the amount of the financial loss suffered by such purchaser plus, in the case of a condominium unit, deposit interest which is owing by the Registrant to the purchaser pursuant to the Condominium Act, and shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any non-payment of such financial loss amount and interest.
- Obligations of Registrant and Tarion for major structural defects 2.3 Without limiting the obligations of the Registrant to Tarion arising under 2.1 and 2.2 hereof, it is understood and agreed that the Registrant shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any major structural defect in any home in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that was enrolled by the Registrant), provided written notice of such defect (or any other defect which, if left unattended, would ultimately lead to or become a major structural defect) is given to Tarion within two years from the effective commencement date of the warranty period applicable to major structural defects. In turn, Tarion covenants and agrees to be solely responsible for major structural defects in respect of such home(s) from years three to seven inclusive, from and after the effective commencement date of the warranty period applicable thereto.

- Enforcement of obligations 2.4 Tarion shall not be obliged to proceed against the builder of any home in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that was enrolled by the Registrant), prior to proceeding to enforce the obligations of the Registrant under this Agreement.
- Vendor obligation to retain Registered Builder 2.5 Where the Registrant does not build homes in the ordinary course of the Registrant's business, the Registrant shall at all times maintain in full force and effect an agreement with a builder registered under the Act who does build homes in the ordinary course of its business, whereby such builder agrees to diligently perform the work required to fulfill each and every obligation imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and any Bulletins, in respect of the construction of such home (and completion items) for which the builder has received payment and to maintain its agreement with Tarion to indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any non-performance or non-fulfillment of such obligations, in whole or in part. The Registrant shall provide Tarion with a copy of such agreement upon applying for registration under the Act, and shall forthwith advise Tarion should such agreement be terminated, substantially modified or replaced with a similar agreement with another builder.
- Preservation of rights and claims against others 2.6 The Registrant shall preserve all assignable rights and claims that the Registrant may have against manufacturers, suppliers, vendors, builders, contractors, sub-contractors and others in respect of any major structural or other construction defect(s), or with respect to any contravention of the Ontario Building Code, relating to any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant), and in those circumstances where the Registrant is not diligently enforcing or pursuing such rights and claims, and to the extent permitted by law, the Registrant shall, forthwith upon the request of Tarion, assign and transfer all such rights and claims to and in favour of Tarion, and shall execute and deliver such assignments and other instruments and do such acts and things as Tarion may reasonably require in order to enable Tarion to prosecute and enforce such rights and claims as fully and effectually as the same could be prosecuted and enforced by the Registrant.
- Administration fee 2.7 The Registrant shall pay to Tarion an administration fee equivalent to fifteen (15%) per cent (or such other per cent as may be stipulated from time to time by the Regulations) of each amount paid out by Tarion to any purchaser(s), homeowner(s) or third party contractor(s)/consultant(s) in respect of the obligations imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins.

|---------------------------------|-----|---|
| Interest on debt | 2.8 | The Registrant shall pay to Tarion interest on any amounts owed to Tarion by the Registrant by virtue of the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins, which interest shall accrue at the rate of eighteen (18%) per cent per annum, calculated annually, not in advance (or such other interest rate as may be stipulated from time to time by the Regulations) and accruing from and after the respective date(s) that any amount(s) is/are so due or owing to Tarion, to and until the date that all such amounts (together with all interest accrued thereon as aforesaid) have been fully paid or remitted to Tarion. |
| Binding nature of the Agreement | 2.9 | This Agreement shall extend and enure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Tarion and shall be binding upon the Registrant and the heirs, estate trustees, legal representatives, successors and permitted assigns of the Registrant. |

ARTICLE 3.0 – ONGOING TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF REGISTRATION

|---|-----|--|
| Access to inspect and copy relevant books and records | 3.1 | Upon reasonable prior notice the Registrant shall allow Tarion free access, during normal business hours, to inspect (and make copies of all relevant portions of) the Registrant's books and records relating to the construction and/or sale of any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant), to ensure compliance with the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins. |
| Provision of documents | 3.2 | The Registrant shall, at the Registrant's expense and upon the request of Tarion, furnish to Tarion copies of all purchase agreements, construction contracts, insurance contracts, construction reports and such other documents relating to any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant), and which are in the Registrant's possession or control, as Tarion may reasonably require from time to time. |
| Limits on selling or collecting deposits | 3.3 | The Registrant shall not sell and/or collect deposits on homes sold exceeding the maximum number of homes (if any) permitted to be sold by Tarion, without obtaining the prior written consent of Tarion thereto. |
| Written notice in advance of inspections | 3.4 | The Registrant shall provide to Tarion written notice of the completion of any stage of construction of any homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant), as specified by Tarion as a condition of the registration of the Registrant, in order to allow for whatever inspections Tarion may wish to have carried out with respect to same. |

Obligation for annual renewal of registration	3.5	The Registrant shall annually apply for the renewal of its registration under the Act and shall pay the renewal fee as prescribed from time to time by Tarion, notwithstanding the delivery or non-delivery to the Registrant of the prescribed renewal application form.
Provision of documents prior to selling condominium units	3.6	Without limiting the obligations of the Registrant to Tarion arising under section 1.3 hereof, the Registrant shall, prior to selling any units in a condominium project, furnish to Tarion such documentation, agreements and security as Tarion may require in order to secure the performance and fulfillment of the Registrant's obligations and liabilities to Tarion arising under the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins provided, however, that no security shall be required to be posted or given to Tarion by the Registrant in respect of reservation agreements only.
Exclusion of reservation agreements
Delivery of deposit receipt to Registrant	3.7	Following the enrolment of the common elements of a condominium project in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that was enrolled by the Registrant), and the provision of any required security acceptable to Tarion in connection therewith, Tarion shall furnish the Registrant with a deposit receipt for every dwelling unit for which deposit security has been provided.
Delivery of Certificate of Completion and Possession to owners and Tarion	3.8	The Registrant shall properly complete, execute and deliver to the owner of each home, in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor, a Certificate of Completion and Possession in the form provided from time to time by Tarion, setting forth the date upon which the home is completed for possession, and shall furnish Tarion with a copy of same within fifteen (15) days after said date.
Delivery of duplicate registered declaration of condominium project to Tarion	3.9	In the case of a condominium project developed and/or registered by the Registrant, the Registrant shall forward a copy of the duplicate registered condominium declaration to Tarion within fifteen (15) days after the registration of such declaration.
Compliance with Builder Bulletins	3.10	The Registrant shall diligently comply with the provisions of the Bulletins, issued by Tarion from time to time in accordance with the Act and the Regulations, where applicable to the Registrant, provided Tarion has given the Registrant reasonable prior notice of the provisions of the Bulletins. Tarion confirms and agrees that any Bulletins issued shall not have retroactive effect with respect to any home(s) under construction as at their respective issue dates, unless otherwise required pursuant to any applicable judicial ruling or statutory provision.
Notification of business changes to Tarion	3.11	The Registrant shall notify Tarion in writing of any change in the mailing address or facsimile number of the Registrant, any change in the members of (or partners in) the Registrant, and/or any change in the officers, directors or shareholders of the outstanding voting shares of the Registrant, within fifteen (15) days after the date of any such change.

- Inclusion of addendum in purchase agreements 3.12 The Registrant shall include in each purchase agreement entered into by the Registrant, relating to any home in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that was enrolled by the Registrant), all addenda prescribed by Tarion, from time to time, provided Tarion has given reasonable prior notice of same to the Registrant.
- Term and condition of registration 3.13 Compliance with the provisions of this Agreement shall form a term and condition of the registration of the Registrant under the Act.

ARTICLE 4.0 – ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS

- 4.1 Reserved
- Notice by Registrant or Tarion 4.2 Any notice desired or required to be given by either of the parties hereto to the other shall be conclusively deemed to have been sufficiently given if delivered by ordinary mail, hand/courier or by telefax only on business days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and statutory holidays), and shall be deemed to have been received on the fifth business day after any such notice has been mailed/posted, or on the day that same has been delivered by hand/courier or telefaxed, on the express understanding that any notice delivered by hand/courier or telefaxed after 4:30 p.m. shall be deemed to have been received on the next business day following the date of such delivery or such telefax transmission (as the case may be), and provided further that if telefaxed, a confirmation of such telefax transmission must be received by the transmitting party at the time of such transmission, otherwise same shall be deemed not to have been properly or sufficiently telefaxed to the intended party. In the case of the Registrant, any notice given by Tarion shall be delivered to the Registrant's address or telefax number as specified in this Agreement or at such other address or telefax number as the Registrant may, from time to time, designate by way of written notice received by Tarion.
- Tarion reporting of Registrant's performance 4.3 The Registrant hereby authorizes Tarion to report on the Registrant's performance and/or compliance status relating to homes in respect of which the Registrant acted as Vendor (or that were enrolled by the Registrant) in any publication (whether print, electronic or otherwise). Prior to Tarion reporting such information in any such publication, Tarion shall provide the Registrant with prior notice of same and the Registrant shall have fifteen (15) days thereafter within which to challenge, question, rectify or supplement the subject matter of such report. Tarion hereby undertakes and agrees to exercise due diligence in order to ensure the veracity and accuracy of all information so reported and/or published. Tarion shall be entitled to proceed with such
- Due diligence by Tarion to ensure notice and accurate reporting reporting or publication notwithstanding any challenge or question, after having thoroughly investigated the matter.

|--|-----|---|
| Tarion disclosure of Registrant's ability to sell and provide after sales service | 4.4 | The Registrant further authorizes the disclosure of information by Tarion to the general public (and/or any credit reporting agency to whom Tarion owes a duty of disclosure) concerning the Registrant's ability to sell homes and carry out any requisite after sales service and warranty work, where the Registrar of Tarion believes it advisable to do so for the protection of the public. Prior to Tarion disclosing such information, Tarion shall provide the Registrant with prior notice of same and the Registrant shall have fifteen (15) days thereafter within which to challenge, question, rectify or supplement such information. Tarion shall be entitled to proceed with such disclosure, notwithstanding any challenge or question, after having reasonably considered same, provided Tarion honestly believes that the information disclosed is accurate in all material respects. |
| Misleading advertising | 4.5 | The Registrant covenants and agrees that it shall not advertise or publish a registration or enrolment number that the Registrant does not have (or that does not exist), and the Registrant shall not promote, publish or advertise a rating or qualification that the Registrant does not have. The Registrant further acknowledges and agrees that a breach of this provision shall entitle the Registrar to obtain and enforce a court order to enjoin and/or restrain such activities. |
| Provision of Registrant's name, address, telephone and telefax to contact Registrant | 4.6 | The Registrant authorizes the provision by Tarion of its database containing only the names, business addresses, telephone and telefax numbers of all Registrants, from time to time, to recognized builder associations. In addition, the Registrant authorizes Tarion to provide the name, business address, telephone and telefax number of the Registrant in the Rating for After Sales Service and to anyone desiring to contact the Registrant. |
| Governance by the laws of Ontario and Canada | 4.7 | This Agreement shall be construed in accordance with (and be governed by) the laws of the Province of Ontario and the laws of Canada applicable thereto. |
| Jurisdiction of legal proceedings | 4.8 | The parties hereto shall attorn to the jurisdiction of the courts of the Province of Ontario, and confirm that any legal proceedings in respect of this Agreement shall be tried at Toronto or such other venue as is proposed by Tarion in any application or originating process initiated by Tarion in respect of this Agreement. |
| Severability of invalid provisions | 4.9 | Any provision of this Agreement which is finally determined to be illegal, void or unenforceable in any relevant jurisdiction by a court of competent jurisdiction shall, as to such jurisdiction only, be ineffective to the extent of such illegality, voidness or unenforceability without invalidating or in any way impairing the |

enforceability of the remaining provisions hereof.

- | | | |
|-------------------------------------|------|--|
| Definition of words and expressions | 4.10 | The words and expressions used in this Agreement shall, unless otherwise defined in this Agreement, have the meanings ascribed to them in the Act and the Regulations. |
| Headings and margin notes | 4.11 | The insertion of headings and margin notes in this Agreement is for the purpose of convenience of reference only, and shall not affect the construction or interpretation of this Agreement. |
| English language | 4.12 | The parties have requested that this Agreement and all related documents and instruments be drawn up in the English language. Les parties confirment leur volonté que la présente convention et tous les documents qui s'y rattachent soient rédigés en anglais. |
| Gender and number | 4.13 | This Agreement shall be read and construed with all changes in gender and/or number as may be required by the context. |
| Receipt of true copy | 4.14 | The Registrant hereby acknowledges having read and understood this Agreement and having received a true completed copy of this Agreement. |

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the Registrant has executed this Agreement, under seal, as of the date first above-mentioned.

Recommended Covenants Between a Registered Vendor and Registered Builder

Paragraph 2.5 of the Vendor Agreement requires a Vendor which does not build homes in the ordinary course of its business to retain a Registered Builder. Tarion advises Registered Vendors to ensure the following covenants are included in their contracts with Registered Builders:

- an agreement (covenant) by the Registered Builder to diligently perform all work required to fulfill every obligation of a “builder” under the Act, the Regulations and the bulletins in respect of each home intended to be constructed by such party.
- an agreement (covenant) by the Registered Builder to indemnify Tarion against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any non-performance or non-fulfillment of such party's obligations.

Recommended Covenants Between a Registered Vendor and Registered Builder

Paragraph 2.5 of the Vendor Agreement requires a Vendor which does not build homes in the ordinary course of its business to retain a Registered Builder. ONHWP advises Registered Vendors to ensure the following covenants are included in their contracts with Registered Builders:

- an agreement (covenant) by the Registered Builder to diligently perform all work required to fulfill every obligation of a “builder” under the Act, the Regulations and the bulletins in respect of each home intended to be constructed by such party.
- an agreement (covenant) by the Registered Builder to indemnify ONHWP against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities suffered or incurred by ONHWP resulting from (or arising out of) any non-performance or non-fulfillment of such party’s obligations.

Builder Agreement

THIS AGREEMENT made the _____ day of _____, 20____,

B E T W E E N:

(Print the exact legal name of the Builder)

of the City of _____, in the Province of Ontario

(hereinafter referred to as the "Registrant");

Tarion Warranty Corporation, a private, non-profit corporation, incorporated without share capital, pursuant to the laws of the Province of Ontario

(hereinafter referred to as "Tarion")

BUILDER AGREEMENT

WHEREAS:

1. Tarion is a private, non-profit corporation designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to administer the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, as amended from time to time (the "Act");
2. the Registrant applied to Tarion for registration as a builder under the Act;
3. Tarion grants registration conditional upon the Registrant executing this Builder Agreement (the "Agreement"), which Agreement deals with the Registrant's rights and obligations as a builder under the Act, the regulations enacted thereunder, as amended from time to time (the "Regulations") and all applicable builder bulletins issued by Tarion from time to time (the "Bulletins");

NOW THEREFORE IN CONSIDERATION OF the registration of the Registrant under the Act, and for other good and valuable consideration (the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby expressly acknowledged), Tarion and the Registrant hereby confirm the veracity of the foregoing recitals and that same comprise an integral part of this Agreement, and agree with each other as follows:

ARTICLE 1.0 – APPLICATION AND REGISTRATION

- Authority of the Registrant to enter into the Agreement 1.1 The Registrant represents and warrants to Tarion that the Registrant has full capacity, power and authority to enter into this Agreement, holds all necessary licenses and permits required to carry on the business of constructing homes in the Province of Ontario and, if a corporation, is a duly organized and validly subsisting corporation under the laws of the Province of Ontario (or alternatively is a duly organized and validly subsisting extra-provincial corporation or federal corporation, and licensed to carry on business in the Province of Ontario).
- Commitment to act as a Builder only 1.2 The Registrant represents and warrants to Tarion that the Registrant will not act as a vendor unless the Registrant registers as a vendor and executes a Vendor Agreement with Tarion.
- Commitment to true and accurate disclosure 1.3 The Registrant further represents and warrants to Tarion that the information set forth in the application for registration of the Registrant under the Act, and in other documents furnished by the Registrant to Tarion in connection with such application, is true and correct in all material respects and does not omit to communicate any fact, circumstance or information that may have a material adverse impact on the Registrant's ability to fulfill its obligations under this Agreement, or that may reasonably have a material affect on the risk assessment undertaken (or to be undertaken) in connection with the registration (or continued registration) of the Registrant under the Act.
- Commitment to submission of security, financial information and other documentation 1.4 The Registrant shall, upon the request of Tarion and at the expense of the Registrant, furnish Tarion with such guarantees, indemnities, surety bonds, letters of credit, deposit trust agreements, undertakings, collateral charges and/or other security instruments, as Tarion may reasonably require in accordance with the Act and the Regulations, together with statements of personal net worth, bank statements, drivers' licenses, birth certificates, articles of incorporation, sample signatures, corporate by-laws, financial statements and/or such other documentation, records and security as Tarion may reasonably require for the purpose of initial registration, renewal of registration and/or securing the obligations imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins. Between renewal dates, Tarion shall not require additional documentation or security from or on behalf of the Registrant, unless Tarion reasonably believes that intervening circumstances have arisen which may impair the Registrant's ability to build homes and/or carry out any warranty work.
- Use of credit information 1.5 The Registrant hereby authorizes Tarion to procure and utilize, from time to time, credit information in respect of the Registrant, and agrees that no action, claim or other proceeding shall be instituted or pursued against Tarion in respect of any damages incurred by the Registrant thereby, provided such credit information is not disclosed to any third party, except for credit reporting agencies to whom Tarion owes a duty of disclosure, and except as otherwise required by law.

- Builder's ongoing disclosure obligation 1.6 The Registrant shall be obliged to communicate to Tarion any fact, circumstance or information that may have a material adverse impact on the Registrant's ability to build homes and/or carry out any warranty work.
- Tarion's disclosure obligation 1.7 Tarion agrees to advise the Registrant, in writing, of all notices of claims or potential claims that Tarion receives from any purchaser(s) or homeowner(s) in respect of any home(s) constructed by or on behalf of the Registrant, in those circumstances where the Vendor of such home(s) is unable or unwilling to satisfy its warranty obligations. Tarion also agrees to provide the Registrant with a reasonable opportunity (as may be specified by the Act and/or the Regulations from time to time) to rectify or remedy any warrantable work prior to Tarion initiating any enforcement proceedings or remedial work.
- Termination of the Registrant's obligations 1.8 This Agreement and all obligations of the Registrant hereunder may not be unilaterally terminated by the Registrant, but rather, shall remain in full force and effect and continue to bind the Registrant, notwithstanding any expiry or revocation of the registration of the Registrant under the Act and notwithstanding any amendment, alteration or modification of the Act or the Regulations until the earlier of the date that:
- (i) all obligations and liabilities of the Registrant to Tarion have been fulfilled or complied with; or
 - (ii) all applicable warranty or limitation periods have expired, with no claims having been filed with Tarion prior thereto;
- in respect of any homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant.
- Consent to transfer or assign the registration 1.9 The registration of the Registrant under the Act is not transferable or assignable by the Registrant, whether by way of power of attorney, sale, amalgamation or otherwise, without prior written consent of Tarion.
- No unauthorized use of the registration number 1.10 The Registrant shall not permit the use of the Registrant's registration number by any other party save and except by a registered vendor who has entered into a Vendor Agreement with Tarion, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Registrant shall immediately report the use of the Registrant's registration number by any other party to Tarion upon becoming aware of same.

Designation as "Registered Builder" 1.11 During the term of the registration of the Registrant under the Act, the Registrant shall be entitled to hold itself out as a "Registered Builder".

ARTICLE 2.0 – LIABILITY AND INDEMNITY

Warranty obligations during the warranty periods 2.1 It is understood and agreed that where the Registrant builds a home for or on behalf of a vendor, whether or not such vendor is registered under the Act, then the Registrant shall be responsible for fulfilling each and every obligation imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and any Bulletins, in respect of the construction of such home (and completion items) for which the Registrant has received payment, and the Registrant shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) non-performance or inadequate performance of such work, in whole or in part, provided written notice of a claim against the Registrant (or in respect of any home enrolled or that ought to have been enrolled by the Registrant) has been given to Tarion within the relevant warranty period(s). This paragraph shall not limit the right of Tarion to enforce obligations owed by the vendor of such home to Tarion.

Obligations of Registrant and Tarion for major structural defects 2.2 Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, it is understood and agreed that the Registrant shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any major structural defect in any home enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant, provided written notice of such defect (or any other defect which, if left unattended, would ultimately lead to or become a major structural defect) is given to Tarion within two years from the effective commencement date of the warranty period applicable to major structural defects. In turn, Tarion covenants and agrees to be solely responsible for major structural defects in respect of such home(s) from years three to seven inclusive, from and after the effective commencement date of the warranty period applicable thereto.

Obligations of Registrant if acting as a vendor 2.3 It is further understood and agreed that in the event the Registrant acts as a vendor without registering with Tarion as a vendor (and without executing a Vendor Agreement) then the Registrant shall indemnify and save Tarion harmless from and against all losses, claims, costs, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by Tarion resulting from (or arising out of) any failure to perform or fulfil the obligations that the Registrant would have been obliged to fulfil had the Registrant registered as a vendor with Tarion and executed a Vendor Agreement with Tarion.

- Enforcement of obligations 2.4 Tarion shall not be obliged to proceed against the vendor of any home enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) in respect of which the Registrant acted as a builder, prior to proceeding to enforce the obligations of the Registrant under this Agreement.
- Preservation of rights and claims against others 2.5 The Registrant shall preserve all assignable rights and claims that the Registrant may have against manufacturers, suppliers, vendors, builders, contractors, sub-contractors and others in respect of any major structural or other construction defect(s), or with respect to any contravention of the Ontario Building Code, in respect of any homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant, and in those circumstances where the Registrant is not diligently enforcing or pursuing such rights and claims, and to the extent permitted by law, the Registrant shall, forthwith upon the request of Tarion, assign and transfer all such rights and claims to and in favour of Tarion, and shall execute and deliver such assignments and other instruments and do such acts and things as Tarion may reasonably require in order to enable Tarion to prosecute and enforce such rights and claims as fully and effectually as the same could be prosecuted and enforced by the Registrant.
- Administration fee 2.6 The Registrant shall pay to Tarion an administration fee equivalent to fifteen (15%) per cent (or such other per cent as may be stipulated from time to time by the Regulations) of each amount paid out by Tarion to any purchaser(s), homeowner(s) or third party contractor(s)/consultant(s) in respect of the obligations imposed upon the Registrant by the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins.
- Interest on debt 2.7 The Registrant shall pay to Tarion interest on any amounts owed to Tarion by the Registrant by virtue of the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins, which interest shall accrue at the rate of eighteen (18%) per cent per annum, calculated annually, not in advance (or such other interest rate as may be stipulated from time to time by the Regulations) and accruing from and after the respective date(s) that any amount(s) is/are so due or owing to Tarion, to and until the date that all such amounts (together with all interest accrued thereon as aforesaid) have been fully paid or remitted to Tarion.
- Binding nature of the Agreement 2.8 This Agreement shall extend and enure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Tarion and shall be binding upon the Registrant and the heirs, estate trustees, legal representatives, successors and permitted assigns of the Registrant.

ARTICLE 3.0 – ONGOING TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF REGISTRATION

- Access to inspect and copy relevant books and records 3.1 Upon reasonable prior notice the Registrant shall allow Tarion free access, during normal business hours, to inspect (and make copies of all relevant portions of) the Registrant's books and records in respect of the construction of homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant to ensure compliance with the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins.

- Provision of documents 3.2 The Registrant shall, at the Registrant's expense and upon the request of Tarion, furnish to Tarion copies of all purchase agreements, construction contracts, insurance contracts, construction reports and such other documents in respect of any homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant and which are in the Registrant's possession or control, as Tarion may reasonably require from time to time.
- Limits on construction 3.3 The Registrant shall not commence (or cause to be commenced) the construction of:
- (i) any home in excess of the maximum number permitted by Tarion, (if any) to be constructed by the Registrant; or
 - (ii) any home of any class the construction of which has been restricted by Tarion;
- without obtaining the prior written consent of Tarion.
- Written notice in advance of inspections 3.4 The Registrant shall provide to Tarion written notice of the completion of any stage of construction in respect of any homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant, as specified by Tarion as a condition of the registration of the Registrant, in order to allow for whatever inspections Tarion may wish to have carried out with respect to same.
- Obligation for annual renewal of registration 3.5 The Registrant shall annually apply for the renewal of its registration under the Act and shall pay the renewal fee as prescribed from time to time by Tarion, notwithstanding the delivery or non-delivery to the Registrant of the prescribed renewal application form.
- Obligation to enrol freehold homes 3.6 The Registrant shall enrol each home to be constructed by the Registrant, other than condominium dwelling units, by submitting a completed enrolment form and paying the enrolment fee as prescribed from time to time by Tarion forthwith upon issuance of a building permit in respect of such home.
- Obligation to enrol condominium units 3.7 If the Vendor has not already done so, the Registrant shall enrol each condominium project and each condominium dwelling unit therein to be constructed by the Registrant by submitting a completed enrolment form and paying the enrolment fee as prescribed from time to time by Tarion not less than thirty (30) days prior to the earlier of:
- (i) commencement of construction of such condominium project; or

- (ii) the issuance of a full or partial building permit in respect of such condominium project.

Provision of documents prior to construction	3.8	Without limiting the obligations of the Registrant to Tarion arising under section 1.4 hereof, the Registrant shall, prior to commencing construction of any home, furnish to Tarion such documentation, agreements and security as Tarion may require in order to secure the performance and fulfillment of the Registrant's obligations and liabilities to Tarion arising under the Act, the Regulations, this Agreement and/or the Bulletins.
Compliance with Builder Bulletins	3.9	The Registrant shall diligently comply with the provisions of the Bulletins issued by Tarion from time to time in accordance with the Act and the Regulations, where applicable to the Registrant, provided Tarion has given the Registrant reasonable prior notice of the provisions of the Bulletins. Tarion confirms and agrees that any Bulletins issued shall not have retroactive effect with respect to any home(s) under construction as at their respective issue dates, unless otherwise required pursuant to any applicable judicial ruling or statutory provision.
Notification of business changes to Tarion	3.10	The Registrant shall notify Tarion in writing of any change in the mailing address or facsimile number of the Registrant, any change in the members of (or partners in) the Registrant, and/or any change in the officers, directors or shareholders of the outstanding voting shares of the Registrant, within fifteen (15) days after the date of any such change.
Term and condition of registration	3.11	Compliance with the provisions of this Agreement shall form a term and condition of the registration of the Registrant under the Act.

ARTICLE 4.0 – ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS

	4.1	Reserved
Notice by Registrant or Tarion	4.2	Any notice desired or required to be given by either of the parties hereto to the other shall be conclusively deemed to have been sufficiently given if delivered by ordinary mail, hand/courier or by telefax only on business days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and statutory holidays), and shall be deemed to have been received on the fifth business day after any such notice has been mailed/posted, or on the day that same has been delivered by hand/courier or telefaxed, on the express understanding that any notice delivered by hand/courier or telefaxed after 4:30 p.m. shall be deemed to have been received on the next business day following the date of such delivery or such telefax transmission (as the case may be), and provided further that if telefaxed, a confirmation of such telefax transmission must be received by the transmitting party at the time of such transmission, otherwise same shall be deemed not to have been properly or sufficiently telefaxed to the intended party. In the case of the Registrant, any notice given by Tarion shall be delivered to the Registrant's address or telefax number as specified in this Agreement or at such other address or telefax number as the Registrant may, from time to time, designate by way of written notice received by Tarion.

Tarion reporting of Registrant's performance

- 4.3 The Registrant hereby authorizes Tarion to report on the Registrant's performance and/or compliance status in respect of homes enrolled (or that ought to have been enrolled) by the Registrant in any publication (whether print, electronic or otherwise). Prior to Tarion reporting such information in any such publication, Tarion shall provide the Registrant with prior notice of same and the Registrant shall have fifteen (15) days thereafter within which to challenge, question, rectify or supplement the subject matter of such report. Tarion hereby undertakes and agrees to exercise due diligence in order to ensure the veracity and accuracy of all information so reported and/or published. Tarion shall be entitled to proceed with such reporting or publication notwithstanding any challenge or question, after having thoroughly investigated the matter.

Due diligence by Tarion to ensure notice and accurate reporting

Tarion disclosure of Registrant's ability to construct homes and carry out warranty work

- 4.4 The Registrant further authorizes the disclosure of information by Tarion to the general public (and/or any credit reporting agency to whom Tarion owes a duty of disclosure) concerning the Registrant's ability to build homes and/or carry out any warranty work, where the Registrar of Tarion believes it advisable to do so for the protection of the public. Prior to Tarion disclosing such information, Tarion shall provide the Registrant with prior notice of same and the Registrant shall have fifteen (15) days thereafter within which to challenge, question, rectify or supplement such information. Tarion shall be entitled to proceed with such disclosure, notwithstanding any challenge or question, after having reasonably considered same, provided Tarion honestly believes that the information disclosed is accurate in all material respects.

Misleading advertising

- 4.5 The Registrant covenants and agrees that it shall not advertise or publish a registration or enrolment number which the Registrant does not have (or which does not exist), and the Registrant shall not promote, publish or advertise a rating or qualification that the Registrant does not have. The Registrant further acknowledges and agrees that a breach of this provision shall entitle the Registrar to obtain and enforce a court order to enjoin and/or restrain such activities.

Provision of Registrant's name, address, telephone and telefax to contact Registrant

- 4.6 The Registrant authorizes the provision by Tarion of its database containing only the names, business addresses, telephone and telefax numbers of all Registrants, from time to time, to recognized builder associations. In addition, the Registrant authorizes Tarion to provide the name, business address, telephone and telefax number of the Registrant in the Rating for After Sales Service and to anyone desiring to contact the Registrant.

Governance by the laws of Ontario and Canada	4.7	This Agreement shall be construed in accordance with (and be governed by) the laws of the Province of Ontario and the laws of Canada applicable thereto.
Jurisdiction of legal proceedings	4.8	The parties hereto shall attorn to the jurisdiction of the courts of the Province of Ontario, and confirm that any legal proceedings in respect of this Agreement shall be tried at Toronto or such other venue as is proposed by Tarion in any application or originating process initiated by Tarion in respect of this Agreement.
Severability of invalid provisions	4.9	Any provision of this Agreement which is finally determined to be illegal, void or unenforceable in any relevant jurisdiction by a court of competent jurisdiction shall, as to such jurisdiction only, be ineffective to the extent of such illegality, voidness or unenforceability without invalidating or in any way impairing the enforceability of the remaining provisions hereof.
Definition of words and expressions	4.10	The words and expressions used in this Agreement shall, unless otherwise defined in this Agreement, have the meanings ascribed to them in the Act and the Regulations.
Headings and margin notes	4.11	The insertion of headings and margin notes in this Agreement is for the purpose of convenience of reference only, and shall not affect the construction or interpretation of this Agreement.
English language	4.12	The parties have requested that this Agreement and all related documents and instruments be drawn up in the English language. Les parties confirment leur volonté que la présente convention et tous les documents qui s'y rattachent soient rédigés en anglais.
Gender and number	4.13	This Agreement shall be read and construed with all changes in gender and/or number as may be required by the context.
Receipt of true copy	4.14	The Registrant hereby acknowledges having read and understood this Agreement and having received a true completed copy of this Agreement.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR COMPLETING THE INDEMNITY

1. Page 1 – On the blank line(s) after the word “From:” type or print the name(s) and address(es), including fax number, of the person(s) signing as Indemnitor(s).
2. Page 1 – On the blank line(s) after the word “Re:” type or print the name of the applicant or Registrant whose obligations you are indemnifying. Be sure to include the Registrant’s registration number.
3. Page 3 – Under paragraph (d) multiply the number of units that the applicant or Registrant is proposing to build by $20,000 and write that figure in the first blank, then write the number of proposed units in the blank three lines below.

(Example: If 4 units are proposed = 4 x $20,000 = $80,000, write $80,000 in the first blank, and write 4 in the blank three lines below.)

After the blanks are filled in, the person(s) signing as Indemnitor(s) write their initials in the box beside paragraph (d).

4. Page 8 – Fill in the date that you are signing the Indemnity, and sign on the line where it indicates “Indemnitor Signature” then print your name underneath where it indicates “Print Name of Indemnitor.” If an Indemnitor is a corporation, the signing officer must write, “I have authority to bind the corporation” underneath his/her signature. Signatures must be witnessed.
5. The witness must sign their name where it indicates “Witness Signature” then print their name and address on the lines underneath. A family member should not sign as a witness.
6. A corporate Indemnitor must receive prior approval from Ontario New Home Warranty Program (ONHWP). A corporate Indemnitor should affix its corporate seal.
7. A corporate seal should not be affixed where the Indemnitor is an individual.
8. Submit the completed Indemnity to ONHWP as soon as possible.

Note: If the Indemnity is not completed according to these instructions it will be returned to you, resulting in the delay of your registration or renewal.

WHEREAS:

1. ONHWP is a private, non-profit corporation designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to administer the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, as amended from time to time (the "Act");
2. The Registrant has applied to ONHWP for registration as a vendor or builder under the Act;

3. The Indemnitor(s) have/has executed this Indemnity in order to secure the due performance and fulfillment of all obligations and liabilities of the Registrant to ONHWP (and not specific to any particular home(s) or project(s) of the Registrant), subject to the terms of this Indemnity;

NOW THEREFORE THESE PRESENTS WITNESSETH that for good and valuable consideration and the sum of Two ($2.00) Dollars of lawful money of Canada paid by ONHWP to the Indemnitor(s) (the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby expressly acknowledged), and in consideration of the registration of the Registrant under the Act, the Indemnitor(s) hereby:

General Indemnity (a) unconditionally and irrevocably agree(s) to indemnify, defend, protect and save ONHWP harmless from and against all losses, costs, claims, damages and/or liabilities whatsoever heretofore or hereafter suffered or incurred by ONHWP resulting from (or arising out of):

(i) the failure of the Registrant to perform all obligations heretofore or hereafter undertaken, incurred or binding upon the Registrant arising under the Act, the regulations enacted thereunder, as amended from time to time (the "Regulations"), any agreement between ONHWP and the Registrant and/or any builder bulletins issued by ONHWP from time to time which are applicable to the Registrant (the "Bulletins"), and which are binding upon the Registrant in accordance with the Act or the Regulations; and/or

(ii) the payment or satisfaction by ONHWP in whole or in part of any claim asserted by any party pursuant to the Act in respect of, or otherwise related in any manner to any home enrolled (or which ought to have been enrolled), constructed and/or sold by or on behalf of the Registrant;

and this Indemnity shall extend to all amounts paid by ONHWP in its sole judgment, acting reasonably, to satisfy any claim(s) made against it under the Act in respect of the Registrant, provided however that the Indemnitor(s) shall not be required to indemnify ONHWP in respect of any payment made towards the satisfaction of a major structural defect claim, where such claim is made at any time after the expiry of two years from the effective commencement date of the warranty period applicable to major structural defects, relating to the home or condominium unit or common element which is the subject of such claim;

Indemnity for other costs incurred by ONHWP (b) unconditionally and irrevocably agree(s) to indemnify and save ONHWP harmless from and against all costs or expenses incurred by or on behalf of ONHWP in protecting or enforcing its rights and/or remedies under this Indemnity, including without limitation, all reasonable legal costs incurred on a solicitor and his or her own client basis (excluding ONHWP's own in-house counsel charges);

Monies owing by the Indemnitor(s) to ONHWP payable on demand, with interest accruing thereon

(c) agree(s) that all amounts payable under this Indemnity are payable on demand, and that interest shall accrue and be due, owing and payable by the Indemnitor(s) on all amounts in respect of which the Indemnitor(s) is/are obliged to pay to ONHWP pursuant to the provisions of this Indemnity, at the rate of eighteen per cent (18%) per annum, calculated annually not in advance (or at such other interest rate as may be stipulated from time to time by the Regulations), and accruing from and after the respective date(s) that any amount(s) is/are so demanded and correspondingly due and owing to ONHWP, to and until the date that all such amounts (together with all interest accrued thereon as aforesaid) have been fully paid or remitted to ONHWP;

Limitation of liability

Indemnitor(s) Initials:
_____	_____

(d) agree(s) that subject to paragraph (e) below, the maximum liability of the Indemnitor(s) to ONHWP arising under this Indemnity, shall not exceed the sum of $ _____ dollars in Canadian funds in the aggregate, with such figure being predicated on the Registrant constructing and/or selling no more than _____ homes during the term of this Indemnity in any annual registration period of the Registrant (hereinafter referred to as the "Unit Limit"), on the express understanding that in the event the Registrant constructs and/or sells any home in excess of the Unit Limit, then the maximum liability of the Indemnitor(s) hereunder shall increase by $30,000 increments in Canadian funds for each home constructed and/or sold in excess of the Unit Limit;

Maximum liability for condominium projects

(e) agree(s) that if the Registrant provides written notice and such documentation, agreements and security as ONHWP may require concerning a proposed condominium project prior to the marketing of the condominium project, then the maximum liability for each condominium project constructed and/or sold will not exceed $1 million dollars in Canadian funds in the aggregate;

Expiration of Indemnity

(f) agree(s) that the obligations and liabilities of the Indemnitor(s) to ONHWP arising under this Indemnity shall automatically expire (and be of no further force or effect) upon the expiry of five (5) years from the date this Indemnity is executed (hereinafter referred to as the "Expiry Date"), unless written notice of a demand or claim under this Indemnity, or of any default by the Registrant which, if left unrectified, might ultimately lead to a claim against the Registrant, is given to the Indemnitor(s) by ONHWP prior to the Expiry Date;

Enforcement of Indemnity

(g) agree(s) that ONHWP shall not be obliged to proceed against the Registrant before proceeding to enforce the liabilities or obligations of the Indemnitor(s) under this Indemnity, and further expressly agree(s) that ONHWP need not pursue or exhaust its rights, remedies or recourse against or in respect of any guarantees, indemnities or securities provided or posted by the Registrant or any other party or parties in connection with the Registrant's obligations, prior to ONHWP proceeding against the Indemnitor(s);

Release, diminution or termination of liability under this Indemnity

(h) agree(s) that save and except as provided for under subparagraph (d) hereof, the liabilities and obligations of the Indemnitor(s) arising under this Indemnity may be:

- (i) released or diminished (in whole or in part) only by a written instrument executed by ONHWP evidencing or confirming same; and/or
