Application for Umbrella Group Listing

Only Registrants may be included in an umbrella listing. There must be at least two Registrants to be able to form an umbrella group.

RATINGS

Registrants listed under an umbrella group are always rated as one collective company to show a more accurate picture of how long you have been a vendor/builder in Ontario. The earliest registration date will be applied to your Umbrella Group even if that registration expires at some point in the future. Generally, the names of expired Registrants will not be taken included in the Builder Rating for After Sales Service. However, the building activities of expired Registrants will be used to calculate the rating if there are possessions or chargeable conciliations related to those Registrants within the three-year rating period.

Print the marketing name (not the corporate or legally registered name), full address and contact person that you want to appear on our web site as part of your Builder Rating for After Sales Service.

BENEFITS OF AN UMBRELLA GROUP LISTING

- It will show potential home buyers a more accurate picture of your building activity, and a true reflection of the size and scope of your business.
- Your rating will be based on the sum of building activities, possessions and chargeable conciliations of all companies under the Umbrella Group.
- It will allow you to add new companies without being considered a new builder.
- Your rating history as part of the Builder Rating for After Sales Service will take into consideration all companies in the Umbrella Group regardless of how long each one has been registered individually. This is a tremendous benefit once you have achieved an excellent rating.

PLEASE NOTE THAT UMBRELLA LISTINGS ARE IRREVOCABLE.

1.1.1. What is a Standard Condominium Corporation?

There are two types of condominiums (freehold and leasehold) and four types of freehold condominiums (common elements, vacant land, phased, and ‘standard’) (section 6(1) and (2)). An examination of the first page of the declaration of any condominium registered on or after May 5, 2001 will tell the interested what type it is (section 6(4)). The declarations of condominiums registered before May 5, 2001 will not state the applicable type for the condominium (unless amended); however, the unwavering rule is that every condominium in Ontario which existed when the Condominium Act was brought into force on May 5, 2001 is of the standard type (section 178 and section 3 of 48 of 01).

The following describes aspects of the standard type and significant operative differences between standard condominiums and other types:

- since the essence of a leasehold condominium is that it’s interest in the land is founded on a lease (and, at some point, will (along with the lessees interests) come to an end) a standard condominium can never be of the leasehold type. By definition they are in different classes (section 6(1)).
- A standard condominium is always ‘freehold’. The owner’s interests in their units and common interests (or common interests alone in the case of a common elements condominium) is unlimited by time, and it’s quality is verified to it’s root, the original grant from the Crown (this is not to say there may not be encumbrances on the owner’s title, but these will be disclosed by the public register). If the corporation is ever terminated, each owner will share in the net assets remaining (in gist, the net value of the land and buildings and any reserve funds).
- unlike a vacant land condominium corporation:
 - units in a standard condominium may offered for sale and sold before conditional approval is given under the Planning Act (section 9(12))
 - units in a standard condominium may be part of a building, and a unit may contain part of a building. For example, semi-detached housing could not be pre-built on a proposed vacant land condominium corporation property, with each half on a separate unit. This can be done through a standard condominium.

- if the units in the standard condominium are for residential purposes then each unit must be included in a building or be part of a building (section 8(3)). A unit cannot simply be land without building. Accordingly, vacant land cannot be divided by a standard condominium in anticipation of future construction for residential use¹. Only a vacant land condominium corporation can accommodate this.
- a unit in a standard condominium can be above or below another unit (horizontal as well as vertical subdivision is possible). If one wanted to subdivide the side of a mountain by slicing it into horizontal layers, a standard condominium could be used. A vacant land condominium corporation could not be used to effect such a division as no unit in a vacant land condominium can be above or below another unit (section 155(b)).
- a common elements condominium contains no units, only common elements. A standard condominium must include units, i.e. part of the land/building for which an owner has (subject to the declaration and bylaws) exclusive ownership and use (section 11(1)), as well as common elements. The latter are for the benefit of the units. In a common elements condominium the common elements benefit lands which are external to the plan of condominium (and outside of the condominiums governance except for the purposes of collecting common expenses).
- the premise of a phased condominium is that its first registration will create a condominium (land and buildings) which may (but not must) be enlarged/added to before it settles into its final form. When all phases are complete, or ten years have passed since the first registration, a phased condominium is functionally the same as a standard condominium. However, until that time it is planned to be in a state of flux. A standard condominium generally has a final form, both physically and constitutionally, in place on registration.

1.1.2. Conditions on the Creation of Standard Condominium Corporation

- the documentation must be registered by the person who owns the freehold estate in the land (section 2(1) and (2))
- one of the following situations must apply:
 1. The property described in the description must be situated entirely within the boundaries of one land titles division, the Land Titles Act must apply to all the property, the declarant must be the registered owner of the property with an absolute title under that Act.

OR

 2. The property described in the description is situated entirely within the boundaries of one registry division, the Registry Act must apply to all the property and the declarant must hold a certificate of title to the property issued under Part I of the Certification of Titles Act within 10 years before the registration (section 4 of 48 of 01).
- it must contain common elements (section 8(3)(a))
- each unit for residential purposes must include one or more buildings or must be included in a building (section 8(3)(b))

1.2.1. What is a Leasehold Condominium Corporation?

A simple way to conceptualize a leasehold condominium corporation is to put aside the term ‘leasehold’ and think ‘standard’ condominium (a division of land, buildings and structures into units and common elements). That is exactly what a leasehold condominium corporation is in terms of its purpose and effect.

The attribute that sets a leasehold condominium corporation apart from a standard condominium is that the unit owner’s title in the property is based on a leasehold interest and not ownership through full title. Unlike a freehold condominium, which continues indefinitely and only comes to an end if terminated on consent (section 122), owner’s vote after substantial damage (section 123), authorized sale (section 124), expropriation (section 126), or court order (section 128), a leasehold condominium corporation will certainly come to a functional end when the term of the underlying lease expires. The term of the underlying lease must be at least 40 years and no more than 99 years (section 165(3)). On expiration of the lease, the owner’s interest in the units and common elements, indeed the entire property, will evaporate, and the lessor will once again hold title to the lands and buildings free of the former leasehold interest. While there is provision for renewal of the lease (section 174), there is no obligation on the side of the lessor or the owners to agree to a renewal (although lack of action by both parties could result in renewal by default⁵). Upon expiry of the lease term the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property (section 175).

A leasehold condominium cannot be a vacant land or common elements condominium corporation (section 155(3) and section 138(3)) and cannot be a phased condominium since such must be freehold (section 145).

The question might be asked why anyone would create a leasehold condominium? Why would a person purchase a unit when the interest has a finite lifespan? Why rent rather than own? There is no simple answer to any of these questions. It may be that the leasehold condominium vehicle will be rarely if ever used in Ontario; however, there is no doubt that the availability of this vehicle provides an important alternative to standard condominiums, and in the right circumstances it will be the preferred choice.

Situations can exist where a leasehold condominium is the only option if condominium governance is to be introduced to a property. An example of the latter would be the development of a building for fractional occupancy on a parcel of land that is owned by a person who is not willing to part with ownership, such as a well-funded institution which has a policy of preserving its assets for the long haul (whether decades or centuries), or which is legally unable to convey title due, for example, to trust terms.

Motivation to create leasehold condominiums may be found in the economics of the concept which allows the land value on acquisition to be discounted. Such discounting will relate to the fact the leasehold has a finite life, or because annual rent is paid (which, in economic terms, could be seen to be a substitute for mortgage interest on purchase monies that would have been paid for a fee simple interest). This can make acquisition more 'affordable' to the marketplace. Clearly the value of a leasehold unit will decline over the term of the underlying lease; however, in a simple model, if the economic life of the building was synonymous with the lease term, the unit owner would derive full economic value from the purchase. Any inflationary or other increase in the land to the end of the term would accrue to the lessor. The latter opportunity, foregone by the unit owner, is significant to the positives and negatives of leasehold condominium ownership.

Examples of situations in which a leasehold condominium may 'fit' may be readily drawn from the non-residential sector. Office (both low and hi-rise) and multi-unit industrial condominiums have been a familiar presence in Ontario's urban areas for many years. These have always been of the freehold type in keeping with the old legislation. On the other hand, five, ten, fifteen or more, year terms are common in the non-residential sector. The non-residential market is comfortable with 'rent' rather than 'own'. The ability to subdivide and, in effect, sell parts of a leasehold can cater to a market which accepts security of tenure which falls short of ownership. The Empire State building in New York City was constructed on leased land, and that lease continues in force today (and for years to come). This came to be because a builder/developer concluded (correctly) that the revenue that could be drawn from the construction and leasing of the building exceeded the opportunity value of the construction costs and the rent paid to the land owner over the term of the lease. Consider the same situation in the context of a leasehold condominium, only one notch down the ladder. A small investor may consider that the rental revenue from a leasehold unit will exceed the opportunity value of the acquisition costs and the rent paid to the lessor over the term of the lease. The validity of this example comes down to economics, and the variables of this aspect will always be very much the essence of what will drive leasehold condominiums.

1.2.2. Conditions on the Creation of a Leasehold Condominium Corporation

To be approved and registered a leasehold condominium corporation must meet the following criteria:

1. (a) the term of the leasehold interests in the units in the corporation and their appurtenant common interests must be the same as, or less than, the unexpired term of the leasehold interest affecting the property;
- (b) the owners of the leasehold interests in the units in the corporation are the owners, as tenants in common, of the leasehold estate in the property under a lease with the lessor; and
- (c) one of the following situations applies:
 1. the property described in the description is situated entirely within the boundaries of one land titles division, the Land Titles Act applies to all the property, the lessor is the registered owner of the property with an absolute title under that Act and the declarant is the registered owner of a leasehold parcel of land that consists of or includes the property.

2. the property described in the description is situated entirely within the boundaries of one registry division, the Registry Act applies to all the property and the lessor holds a certificate of title to the property issued under Part I of the Certification of Titles Act within 10 years before the registration (section 59 of 48 of 01);
2. all leasehold interests in units in a leasehold condominium corporation and their appurtenant common interests must be for the same term (section 165(2)); and,
3. the term of the leasehold interests before a renewal under section 174 shall be not less than 40 years less a day and not more than 99 years as specified in the declaration (section 165(3)).

1.2.4. Contents of a Description for a Leasehold Condominium Corporation

A description shall not be registered unless the property includes common elements (section 8(3)(a)) and each unit for residential purposes includes one or more buildings or is included in a building (section 8(3)(b)).

A description of a leasehold condominium corporation shall contain:

- a. a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the horizontal surface of the land and the perimeter of the buildings (section 8(1)(a));
- b. structural plans of the building provided that if the description contains the structural plans described in section 8(1)(b) of the Condominium Act and Schedule G to the declaration does not contain the certificate of the architect under section 5(8)(a) (certifying completion), the description shall not contain the architectural plans referred to in section 8(1)(b) (section 9(2)).
- c. a specification of the boundaries of each unit by reference to the buildings or other monuments (section 8(1)(c)).
- d. diagrams showing the shape and dimensions of each unit and the approximate location of each unit in relation to the other units and the building (section 8(1)(d)).
- e. a certificate signed by an Ontario land surveyor licensed under the Surveyors Act stating that the diagrams of the units are substantially accurate (section 8(1)(f)).
- f. a description of all easements and similar interests to which the property is subject and a description of the interests appurtenant to the property. These descriptions shall be combined and shall be in Form 3 (section 9(4) and 9(5) and section 8(1)(g)).

1.2.5. Buildings and Improvements to the Property Must Form Part of the Property

A description for a leasehold condominium corporation cannot be registered unless the buildings and improvements to the property form part of the property (section 167(2)).

This directive appears to rule out the circumstance of the underlying leasehold being a ground lease only with a separate lease for the buildings and other improvements/fixtures.

1.2.6. General

The lessor may also be the/an owner of a leasehold interest in a unit and related common interest. In such a case the Condominium Act makes it clear that the legal title and the leasehold interest do not merge (as would be the case if the lands were held in fee simple) (section 165(1)) and so the lessor/owner may subsequently convey the unit with all rights attached.

All of the standard provisions of the Condominium Act dealing with insurance (section 99 et seq.), repair and maintenance (section 89 et seq), and the consequences of substantial damage to a building (section 123 et seq.) apply without variation to leasehold condominium corporations.

An owner may transfer, mortgage, lease or otherwise deal with the leasehold interest in the unit without the consent of the lessor (section 165(4)). A transfer must be the owner's entire leasehold interest in the unit and common interest (section 165(5)).

All of the rights and obligations with respect to the leasehold estate are to be exercised and performed by the corporation and not by the owners (section 168).

1.2.7. Rent

The rent that the corporation is required to pay the lessor on behalf of the owners and all other amounts necessary to comply with the provisions of the leasehold interest are a common expense (section 171(1) of the Condominium Act). The rent and other amounts are collected on the basis of the proportion of the contributions to the common expenses set out in the declaration for the respective unit (section 171(2)).

1.2.8. Application of the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006

Once a leasehold condominium corporation is registered, the relations between the lessor and the unit owners are governed by the Condominium Act. To avoid any confusion, the Condominium Act makes it clear that the leasehold interests are not subject to the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006 (which governs residential tenancies) in any way (section 165(7)). A lease of a residential leasehold unit (in effect, an arrangement identical in substance to the lease of a unit in a standard condominium) is subject to the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006.

1.2.9. Termination and Expiry

1.2.9.1. Termination

The corporation shall not register a notice of termination of the Condominium Act's governance of the property (whether after a vote of the owners under section 122, or in the event of substantial damage under section 123) or sell the property or a part of the common elements under section 124, unless the lessor has consented to and executed the notice or agreement of purchase and sale as the case may be (section 172 of the Condominium Act).

A lessor cannot terminate anything short of all of the leasehold interests in all of the units (section 173(1) of the Condominium Act). In order to terminate all of the leasehold interests, the lessor must make an application to court for an order terminating the interests on one of the following grounds:

1. the corporation has failed to remit the amounts to which the lessor is entitled under the provisions of the leasehold interest affecting the property (section 173(2)(a)), or
2. the corporation has failed to comply with a court order (section 173(2)(b)).

1.2.9.2. Expiry Of Lease and Renewal

At least five years before the end of the term of the leasehold interests in the units, the lessor is obliged to give notice to the corporation of its intention to renew and the terms thereof, or give notice of intention not to renew (section 174(1))⁹. A renewal must be for at least 10 years (section 174(2)). If the lessor does not give either notice it is deemed to have given notice to renew for 10 years subject to the same provisions that govern the leasehold interests before the renewal (section 174(4)). The owners have one year to cast a vote against renewal (owners of 80% of the units casting votes must vote against) failing which the renewal is locked in on the 'deemed terms' (section 174(5)). Renewals on revised terms shall be incorporated into an amendment to the description and registered (section 174(8)). The amendment procedures set out in section 107 of the Condominium Act are inapplicable to this amendment (section 174(9)).

Whether the leasehold interests are renewed or not, it is the responsibility of the lessor to register notice of the applicable fact (section 174(7)).

1.2.9.3. Effect of Termination or Expiry

In the event the leasehold interests come to an end by one of the several possible means by which this may take place (registration of notice of termination by vote of the owners or in the event of substantial damage (section 122 and 123), expropriation (section 126), termination by order of the court by application by a unit encumbrancer (section 128), or termination by court order for failing to pay rent or comply with a court order (section 173(2)), on registration of the lessor's notice of termination (section 174(7)) :

- the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property;
- the leasehold interests in the units are terminated;
- claims against the leasehold interests that do not secure the payment of money are extinguished, unless the lessor consented to their registration (in which case they are continued against the lessor's interest); and,
- claims against the leasehold interests that secure the payment of money (i.e. a construction lien claim) are claims against the persons who were owners of the leasehold interests immediately before the termination, and not against the land.

Section 175

1.2.9.4. Trustee

Prior to the date a leasehold corporation ceases to be governed by the Condominium Act the corporation must appoint a trustee to pay out any monies remaining the corporations' reserve fund (section 175(3)).

Following the termination of the Condominium Act's governance, the trustee must pay out any remaining reserve funds in the following priorities:

- a) to the lessor must be paid the amount required to repair damage to the property that has not been repaired;
- b) the balance is paid to owners in accordance with the proportions of their respective common interests (section 175(4)). In the latter case, the trustee must deduct from the owner's share the amount of any claims against the owner that secure the payment of money (i.e. an execution registered on title to collect on a judgment) and remit the deduction to the persons entitled to the claims (section 175(5)).

1.2.10. Arbitration Between the Lessor and the Corporation

Whether or not expressly agreed to between the lessor and the corporation, section 168(3) of the Condominium Act deems the parties to the lease to have agreed that either party may submit to mediation a disagreement on the interpretation of the provisions of the leasehold interests in the property. In the event of such a submission the standard provisions of the Condominium Act dealing with such process (section 132) apply (section 168(3) and 168(4)) including a result which is binding on the parties.

1.2.11. Disclosure Statement

Along with the otherwise mandated contents of a disclosure statement (section 72(3) and section 17 of 48 of 01), Section 169(a) of the Condominium Act requires the inclusion of a statement by the declarant as to whether the provisions of the leasehold interests in the property are in good standing and have not been breached.

1.2.12. Status Certificate

In addition to the material required by section 76(1) of the Condominium Act and section 18 of *regulation 48 of 01*¹⁰, a leasehold condominium corporation's status certificate must include:

- whether the provisions of the leasehold interests in the property are in good standing and have not been breached; and,
- a statement by the corporation whether the lessor has applied for a termination order under section 173 (termination by lessor) (section 170(a) and 170(b)).

1.2.13. Forms

1.2.13.1. General

- Each sheet of the plans of survey, except the exclusive use portions survey, which are registered as part of the description is required to have a certificate of registration signed by the land registrar in the upper right corner (sections 2(1) and 11(1) of 49 of 01). The form of this certificate is Form 4 to 48 of 01.
- Immediately below the registrar's certificate referred to above is the certificate of an Ontario land surveyor stating that the diagrams of the units are accurate (section 8(1)(f) of the Condominium Act and 11(1)(c) of 49 of 01). This certificate is Form 5 to 48 of 01 (section 10(2) of 48 of 01).
- At some location on the each sheet of the plans referred to above is to be a certificate of the declarant stating that the property has been laid out into units and common elements (section 11(1)(e) of 48 of 01). The form of this certificate is Form 6 to 48 of 01.
- At some location on the sheets of the exclusive use portions survey shall be a certificate of a surveyor stating that the survey accurately shows the extent and location of the portions (section 11(3)(b) of 48 of 01). The form of this certificate is Form 7 to 48 of 01).

1.2.13.1. Specific to Leasehold Condominium Corporations

If the leasehold interests are renewed (i.e. the lease does not terminate by expiration of the term) the lessor must register a notice (section 174(7)) stating that the leasehold interests in the units have been renewed. The form for this notice is Form 11 to 49 of 01 (section 44(1) of 49 of 01).

If the leasehold interests are not renewed the lessor must register a notice stating the leasehold interests have not been renewed. The form for this notice is Form 12 to 49 of 01 (section 44(2) to 49 of 01).

If the leasehold interests are renewed subject to provisions that are different from those that applied before the renewal, the corporation must register a copy of the provisions as an amendment to the declaration. The form for this amendment is Form 22 to 48 of 01 (section 1 of 48 of 01). Note: an amendment for this purpose is not subject to the amendment procedure in section 107 provided the form is followed (section 174(8) of the Condominium Act).

¹⁰ See chapter 3.1.6.4.

At least five years before the end of the term of the leasehold interests in the units the lessor must give the corporation a written notice of intention to renew all the leasehold interests and the terms of renewal or, alternatively, a written notice of intention not to renew all leasehold interests (section 174(1)). The form of notice of intention to renew is Form 23 to 48 of 01 (section 62(1) of 48 of 01). The form of notice of intention not to renew is Form 24 to 48 of 01 (section 62(2) of 48 of 01).

If the lessor fails to give the notice(s) referred to above the lessor is deemed to have given notice to renew for 10 years subject to the same provisions that govern before the renewal. The corporation is required to give notice of this fact to the owners. The form of notice for the corporation's notice to the owners is Form 25 to 48 of 01 (section 62(3) of 48 of 01).

The renewal by default referred to immediately above is locked into place unless, within one year after the deemed notice or notice, the owners of at least 80% of the units cast a vote against renewal (section 174(5) of the Condominium Act). Should the owners vote against renewal within the one year time frame, the corporation must give notice of the contrary vote to the lessor (section 174(6) of the Condominium Act). The form for this notice is Form 26 to 48 of 01 (section 62(4) of 48 of 01).

1.2.14. Amendments to Declarations and Descriptions

An amendment to the declaration or description that affects the leasehold interests in the property must have the written consent of the lessor before it is effective (Section 166(4) and 167(3)).

Amendments of the declaration or description are exempt from section 7(1) of the Condominium Act (which requires a declarant to execute the declaration) and section 7(2)(b) (which requires the consent of registered mortgagees) and is not required to contain any statements or schedules described in section 5 of 48 of 01 (see above regarding schedules to the initial declaration) (section 8 of 48 of 01).

1.3.1. What is a Vacant Land Condominium Corporation?

A simple way to conceptualize the land division function of a vacant land condominium corporation is to compare it to Ontario’s long-standing vehicle for dividing land, namely by plan of subdivision approved under section 51 of the Planning Act. A vacant land condominium corporation is, from the perspective of the pure act of land division, identical in effect and purpose to a plan of subdivision. Both divide up land into separate parcels (which may be freely conveyed ad infinitum), in one case called lots (on a plan of subdivision), and in the other, units (on a vacant land condominium corporation). Each lot/unit carries with it the ownership of the surface of the land it relates to, as well as the ground beneath and the sky above, (in both cases, perhaps subject to easements and other encumbrances). Either plan may involve the dedication of public highways, and may include communal facilities, the on-going expense of which is shared by the lot/unit owners (whether by municipal taxation alone in the case of a plan of subdivision, or by common expense, in the case of a vacant land condominium corporation).

While the principle of land division may be common to the plan of subdivision and vacant land condominium corporation, the similarity ends when consideration is given to the fundamental difference that lands divided by plan of subdivision are governed by laws of real property which are founded on the rights and obligations of individual parcel owners. Vacant land condominium corporation’s have the special governance directions of the Condominium Act which place individual owner’s rights and obligations within a constitutional framework connecting all the owners in the corporation. In particular, the lands within a vacant land condominium corporation have the additional and significant governance of the Condominium Act, a declaration, the by-laws and rules, and the overall management by the corporation¹¹. Clear powers are available to vacant land condominium corporation’s to ensure, among other things, that buildings in the units are maintained to specified standards (exacting or otherwise), that proportionate contributions are made to pay common expenses, and that building design, appearance, and construction timing, are restricted (see section 156(1)). When exercised, the enforcement of these powers is equally clear and conclusive¹².

A critical constraint on the conditions under which a vacant land condominium corporation may be created is that no unit can be part of a building or structure, and none of the units may include part of a building or structure unless the entirety of the building or structure is within the boundaries of the unit (section 155(1) and section 56(1(a) of 48 of 01). The effect of this is to make a vacant land condominium corporation an antithesis of the traditional condominium created under the old Condominium Act (as the latter’s entire premise was to serve as a vehicle to divide up a building or buildings) or a standard condominium under the Condominium Act. Vacant land condominium corporation’s are specifically addressed to dividing up land, upon which whole buildings or structures may stand (at or after the registration of the condominium). It should be noted that there is no general restriction against part of a building being subsequently (post-registration) constructed on a unit (the Condominium Act makes it clear in section 159(1) that such part of the building forms part of the unit). Prior to the Condominium Act a vacant land type condominium was not possible¹³.

Examples of forms of residential development which may take advantage of a vacant land condominium corporation form of governance include:

- gated communities of single family homes
- developments which entail the provision of communal facilities (recreational such as a ski hill or marina, or other such as a pool, recreational/meeting building and facilities) available only to vacant land condominium corporation owners
- tent and trailer parks
- ‘dockominiums’ (privately owned docks on waterlots with communal on-shore facilities).

and so on.

From a commercial perspective a vacant land condominium corporation may be used to accommodate multiple ownership in, for example, a power center type setting, with the units sitting under the individual buildings, and the common parking, driveways, landscaping, and the like, within the common elements. Even an outdoor farmer’s market could conceivably be a candidate for a vacant land condominium corporation. Any circumstance which involves the separate ownership of land parcels together with common interests, and can benefit from the governance of the Condominium Act, is a candidate. The desire to have a communal control over aspects of the units(lots) will be the deciding factor. In the latter regard, a vacant land condominium corporation will satisfy the objective of connecting the ownership and maintenance of common facilities while bringing the benefiting ‘lots’ (units) under condominium governance (putting, for example, the standards of maintenance under the purview of the condominium).

1.3.2. Conditions on the Creation of Vacant Land Condominium Corporations

To be approved and registered a vacant land condominium corporation must meet the following criteria:

1. The property must be located entirely within the boundaries of one land titles division, the Land Titles Act must be applicable to the entire property, and the declarant must be registered as owner with absolute title; or, the property must be located entirely within the boundaries of one registry division, the Registry Act must be applicable to the entire property, and the declarant must hold a certificate of title issued within the previous ten years under Part 1 of the Certification of Titles Act (section 4).
2. It cannot be a leasehold condominium (section 155(3)).
3. It cannot be a common elements condominium (section 155(3)).

¹² See chapter 2.6

¹³ 260-Lambert Island Ltd. and Attorney-General of Ontario (1972)

4. It cannot be a phased condominium (section 155(3) and Regulation 48/01 section 49(2) which requires a phased condominium to be of the standard type).
5. No unit can be part of a building (section 155(1(a))).
6. No unit can include part of a building (unless all parts of the building are within the boundaries of the unit) (section 155(1(a)) and Regulation 48/01 section 56(1)(a)).
7. No unit is located above or below any unit (this does not exclude a unit from being above or below a common element, should such be necessary) (section 155(1(b))).
8. All buildings, structures, facilities and services to be included in the common elements must be completed and installed in accordance with the regulations, or bonding is provided to ensure completion (section 158(1)(a) and (b)).

1.3.3. Special Regulatory Control in a Vacant Land Condominium Corporation’s Declaration

A unique control that may be introduced into a vacant land condominium corporation which is to include building or structures constructed after registration are restrictions, contained in it’s declaration, concerning the following:

- (a) the size, location, construction standards, quality of materials and appearance of the building or structure;
- (b) architectural standards and construction design standards of the building or structure;
- (c) the time of commencement and completion of construction of the building or structure; and
- (d) the minimum maintenance requirements for the building or structure. (Section 156(1))

The restrictions imposed in the declaration must be ‘consistent’ with the conditions imposed by the approval authority in approving or exempting the description (section 156(2)). It is a moot question whether the approval conditions must give rise to any and all restrictions in the declaration, or whether a restriction can be introduced in the declaration which is wholly the choice of the declarant. In the latter case, provided the restriction is not ‘at odds’ with the conditions, it appears that the intent of section 156(2) would be met.

It should be noted that the vacant land condominium board may pass by-laws to govern minimum maintenance standards for a unit or buildings/structures on a unit (section 160). Such a vehicle of setting maintenance standards would be preferred where it is desired that changes to the standards can be made with the endorsement of fewer of the owners than would be required for an amendment to the declaration (as little as 13% vs. 80 % written consent for a declaration amendment).

1.3.4. Contents of a Declaration for a Vacant Land Condominium Corporation

1.3.4.1. Prohibitions

A declaration shall not,

- contain provisions requiring an owner, a future owner or anyone on the owner’s or future owner’s behalf to consent in writing to an amalgamation; or
- contain provisions relating to an amalgamation. (section 7(1))

A vacant land condominium corporation’s declaration shall not provide for units which are part of a building or structure or which include part of a building or structure, except if a building or structure is located entirely within the boundaries of the unit (Section 155(1)(a) and section 56(1)(a)).

1.3.4.2. Requirements

- have the statement on the first page of the declaration that the registration of the declaration and description will create a vacant land condominium corporation: (section 56(1)(b));
- contain schedules known as Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, G (schedule G is included only if the declaration and description show that there are buildings, structures, facilities or services included in the common elements (section 5(1)(d) and section 56(5)), and H (56(1)(c));

- (a) a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the horizontal surface of the land, the perimeter of the buildings and structures on the common elements and the boundaries of each unit;
- (b) unless all buildings and structures are completed and the bonding for uncompleted works is not required, architectural plans of the buildings and structures included in the common elements and, if there are any, structural plans of them, but architectural plans shall not be included if either:

or

 - the declaration and description for the corporation show that there are no buildings, structures, facilities or services included in the common elements. (section 57(2))
- (c) In addition to all other material that it is required to contain, a description shall contain a description of all easements and similar interests to which the property is subject and a description of the interests appurtenant to the property. These descriptions shall be combined and shall be in Form 3 (section 9(4) and section 57(4));

1.3.6. Buildings on the Common Elements

As outlined above, it is a pre-condition to the registration of a vacant land condominium corporation that no proposed unit contain part of a building or structure; either the unit is vacant, or whatever buildings and structures exist are located entirely with the boundaries of the unit (section 155(1)(a) and regulation 48/01 section 56(1)(a)).

In respect of construction on the common elements, should a vacant land condominium corporation declaration and description show buildings, structures, facilities, or services to be included in the common elements, it is a pre-condition of the vacant land condominium corporation’s registration that either:

- 1. All such buildings, structures, facilities, or services, be completed, installed and provided in accordance with the regulations (section 158(1)(a));

OR

- 2. the declarant provides a bond, or other security sufficient to ensure that such completion, installation, and provision is done, and that the description is consequently amended (section 158(1)(b)).

The intent of this directive is to ensure that that commonly used facilities are put in place (either before or after registration), and new owners are not presented with the situation of having to complete the works themselves due to default by the proponent.

1.3.7. Buildings, Structures, Facilities, or Services on the Common Elements Remaining to be Completed

In the event a bond or security must be posted the following outlines the essential considerations and rules:

- 1. The municipality in which the land is situate (or the Minister of Municipal Affairs in the event the land is not in a municipality) must specify to whom the security is to be provided. It may be a person or a body, including the approval authority. The Condominium Act is not specific on which municipality makes the specification in the case of land which is in more than one

2. municipality (for example, land in an local area municipality within a regional municipality). Presumably a specification by either would be reliable, although it is a moot question how the unlikely situation of two qualified municipalities designating two different security holders would be resolved.
3. The Condominium Act and regulations do not limit the identity or class of persons who may be specified to hold the security, and so the specification is essentially entirely within the discretion of the specifying municipality. Besides the approval authority, the holder could be a municipal official or an outside third party.
4. The bond or security must be ‘acceptable’ to the municipality (or Minister, if applicable). This provides flexibility in the form the security may take. For example, it could be simply in a cash amount which may drawn on by the holder to complete the work, or it may take the form of a construction bond which allows the bonding company to complete the work in the event of default. The security may also be a cash deposit, a letter of credit or guarantee, or a security backed by a mortgage on the property. The decision on the form is left to the discretion of the municipality which will, understandably, prefer a form which will be easy to administer, particularly in the event of default.
5. The security must be ‘sufficient to ensure’ completion, installation, and provision of the uncompleted construction. This directive implies a minimum amount for the security (for example, if the estimated cost of completion is $100,000.00, the security can/should never be less than $100,000.00) but the ceiling is a gray area. Practically speaking it will be up to the municipality, in consultation with, among others, the declarant, to set an amount which ensures ‘sufficiency’. The amount could reflect the possibility of labour or materials cost increases, ‘extras’ in the construction process, the additional costs which will arise in the event of default and a new party having to pick up the direction of the work, and so forth. Given that the municipality, in setting the amount, owes a duty of care to the unit purchasers and corporation to ensure the amount is sufficient to ensure completion, prudence dictates that any error should be on the side of caution.
6. The existence of the bond/security will, among other means, be disclosed in Schedule ‘G’ to the vacant land condominium corporation’s declaration. In this regard, schedule ‘G’ must include a statement by the declarant that the architect/engineer’s certificate will be included in an amendment to the description, and a statement from any of the municipalities in which the land is situated (or the Minister if applicable) stating the acceptability and sufficiency of the security and the fact an amendment to the description will include the architect/engineer’s certificate (section 56(7)(b)). The latter statement must be signed by a person authorized to bind the municipality/minister (section 56(9)).
7. Although section 158 speaks of ‘bond or security’ in the singular, the security for a particular proposed condominium can be provided through two or more bonds/securities (Interpretation Act Section 28 (j)). It is also possible for different securities relating to the same proposal to be held by different persons/bodies.
8. A bond or security may be released in stages with the consent of the municipality/minister (section 158(2)). Such partial releases would be appropriate as work progresses on completing the construction. The reduced security amount must, in all cases, be sufficient to ensure completion.
9. The security shall not be released in full until all buildings, structures, facilities, or services, be completed, installed and provided in accordance with the regulations (section 158(3)(a)) and the description has been amended to include the up to date plans and related certificate of completion by the architect/engineer (section 158(3)(b)).

1.3.8. Actions Upon Completion of Buildings, Structures, Facilities, or Services on the Common Elements

A vacant land condominium that is registered before all buildings, structures, facilities or services in the common elements are completed will require an amendment to the description to be registered after the work is completed (section 158(1)(iii) and 158(3)(b)). This amendment to the description is exempt from section 9(2) and 9(3) of the Condominium Act which make the subdivision application and approval sections of the Planning Act applicable to descriptions (section 58(2)) and so may be registered directly after the work is complete. The amendment to the description must be in Form 21 (to which will be attached certificates of an architect or an engineer in Form 17 and the revised/addition sheets for including architectural or structural plans) (section 58(1) and 58(3)).

1.3.9. Insurance

Unlike all other types of condominiums, vacant land condominium corporation's are not fully bound by the provisions of section 99 of the Condominium Act which mandates that the corporation maintain insurance on the units and common elements on behalf of itself and the owners for damage caused by major and other perils. Section 159(2) provides an exemption from this section 'for buildings and structures located on a unit'. Section 159(3) of the Condominium Act imposes the obligation on the unit owner(s) to obtain and maintain the insurance for damage to the unit that, but for section 159(2), would have had to be obtained by the corporation in respect of the unit.

It should be noted that the obligation to insure against damage to the common elements remains with the vacant land condominium corporation.

1.3.10. Repair and Maintenance

Sections 89 to 92 inclusive of the Condominium Act, which generally impose the obligation to repair and maintain the units on the corporation, are inapplicable to vacant land condominium corporations (section 162(1)). In substitution, the Condominium Act imposes the responsibility of maintenance and repair after damage of the common elements on the corporation, and imposes the responsibility of maintenance and repair the units after damage on the owner of the respective unit (section 162(3) and 162(4)).

In the event an owner fails to maintain a unit within a reasonable time or fails to repair within a reasonable time after damage, the vacant land condominium corporation is entitled to maintain and repair the unit, as the case may be (section 162(5)). The cost of the work is charged to the owner as part of the owner's common expense contribution (section 162(6)).

1.3.11. Substantial Damage to a Building Located on a Unit

The general obligation on an owner to repair a unit after damage (section 162(3)) is given relief in the situation of 'substantial damage' occurring to the unit (section 163(1)). If substantial damage occurs (and by reference to section 123(2) this is defined to mean damage for which the cost of repair is estimated to equal or exceed 25 percent of the replacement cost of the building) and the owners do not vote to terminate the vacant land condominium corporation under section 123 (as would almost certainly be the case for vacant land condominium corporation involving numerous units of which only one, for example, has substantially damage), the owner of the damaged unit has the option to either:

1. Not repair the damage.

Or

2. Replace the building with a different building (subject to the Condominium Act, the declaration, and the bylaws; for example, the replacement building would have to meet any established architectural and design restrictions set out in the declaration pursuant to section 156).

If the owner elects not to rebuild, the land on which the building was located must be restored by the owner to the state it was in before construction of the building (section 163(2)). If the restoration work is not done within a reasonable time the vacant land condominium corporation may do the work and the cost is added to the owner's contribution to the common expenses (section 163(3)).

1.3.12. Disclosure Statement

Along with the otherwise mandated contents of a disclosure statement (section 72(3) of the Condominium Act and section 17 of regulation 48 of 01¹⁹), Section 161 of the Condominium Act requires a special addition to disclosure statements for vacant land condominium corporations. This addition is a statement from the municipality in which the land is situate (there may be more than one, in which case a certificate from either should suffice), or the Minister of Municipal Affairs where the land is not in a municipality, of the services provided by the municipality/Minister, including construction and maintenance of roads. The obligation is on the declarant to request this statement from the municipality/Minister (section 161(1)). If the municipality/minister fails to respond within 30 days of the request, the declarant may finalize the disclosure statement without the services statement but include, in lieu thereof, a statement that the declarant has requested the statement but has not received any response (section 161(3)).

The Condominium Act does not limit the scope of the list of municipally/ministry supplied 'services'. In particular, it does not limit these to services provided exclusively to the vacant land condominium corporation (such as a package sewage effluent treatment facility owned and operated by a municipality), or even to services which have a physical connection to the vacant land condominium corporation (such as piped municipal water supply). Both 'hard' and 'soft' services could fall within the class. Accordingly, a municipally/ministerially prepared list of services could include as diverse as:

- Water supply
- Sewage reception and treatment
- Storm water reception and disposal
- Publicly assumed highways
- Community meeting/recreation/ etc. centers
- Parks
- Garbage collection and disposal (on or off site)
- Recycling programs
- Street lighting
- Community advisory agencies (i.e. planning and building, small business)
- Libraries
- Fire protection
- Policing
- Emergency services
- Bylaw enforcement (i.e. noise, property standards, and others)
- Social support services

In each case it will be up to the responding municipality (or the Ministry) to settle the inclusions on the list of 'services provided'.

The Condominium Act sets out no penalty or consequence to the declarant if the statement is inaccurate or incomplete. This is to be expected as the declarant's responsibilities are purely mechanical. It makes a request for a statement, and either includes the received statement in the disclosure statement (without editorializing) or includes the statement that the request was unfulfilled by the end of the thirty day period.

While the Condominium Act likewise sets out no penalty or consequence to the municipality/minister if the statement is inaccurate or incomplete, clearly the municipality/minister owes a duty of care to purchasers. Negligence in the discharge of that duty will give rise to civil liability to persons suffering damages as a consequence. Services which may or not be sustained should not appear on the list, at least without appropriate qualifiers. Erring on the side of caution would encourage a short list, on the premise that ‘undeclared services’ should not give rise to detrimental reliance.

1.3.13. Special Restriction on Selling Before Approval

Unlike all other forms of condominium, section 52 of the Planning Act, which prohibits the subdivision and offering for sale, agreement to sell or selling land before draft approval is given under section 51 of the Planning Act, applies to vacant land condominium corporations (section 9(12)). Since a vacant land condominium corporation is akin to a land subdivision concept, putting it in the same class as a plan of subdivision for the purposes of pre-sales is arguably equitable.

1.3.14. Bylaws Specifying Minimum Maintenance Standards

Although the maintenance of units is the responsibility of the owner(s), an element of corporate control over the standards of maintenance is available to vacant land condominium corporations through section 160 which allows vacant land condominium corporation boards to pass by-laws, not contrary to the declaration, specifying minimum maintenance standards for a unit or a building or structure located on a unit. Such bylaws are subject to the passage and approval process set out in section 56.

It should be noted that if a unit in a vacant land condominium corporation is to include a building or structure constructed after registration, the declaration may contain, among other things, “minimum maintenance requirements for the building or structure”. Should a declaration contain such standards, it is likely that no bylaw could subsequently be passed dealing with the same subject (maintenance of a building or structure constructed after registration). However, it would still be open to the vacant land condominium corporation board to pass bylaws dealing with the maintenance standards of buildings and structures constructed on units at the time of registration and with the units exclusive of buildings and structures. Lawn cutting and other grounds work (in a developed setting) would be an example of unit maintenance that stands apart from building/structure maintenance.

1.4.1. What is a Common Elements Condominium Corporation?

While the vacant land condominium corporation is a novel use of the condominium concept (the division of land parcels and not, as under the old legislation, the division of buildings), the common elements condominium corporation type takes novelty in a different direction by providing for the creation of a condominium that has no units, but only common elements (section 138(1)). The ownership of the common interests in the common elements is, and must be, associated with the ownership of another parcel of land outside the boundaries of the common elements condominium corporation. It is that parcel external to the condominium (which regulation 48 of OI describes as ‘tied land’) which is to notionally benefit from the related common interest in the common elements condominium corporation. All of the general provisions of the Condominium Act apply to common elements condominium corporations with the term ‘unit’ or ‘proposed unit’ being read throughout the Condominium Act as ‘common interests’ or ‘proposed common interest’ (section 138(4)).

A common elements condominium corporation may be used to accomplish the same purpose as a vacant land condominium corporation, namely to provide for communal facilities and the like for the benefit of the owners at the owner’s expense, but without the feature of including the owner’s tied land in the condominium governance.

Matters such as the maintenance of the tied land (which in a vacant land condominium corporation would be comparable to units and can be governed by the declaration or by-laws) will not be a relevant or authorized objective for a common elements condominium corporation. The key feature of the common elements condominium corporation is the ability to have communal land/facilities governed by statutory mandate with the ability to collect contributions to the expenses associated with the common elements and enforce the collection through lien(s) on the tied lands.

Where the objective of controlling the tied lands in one way or another is not relevant the common elements condominium corporation is the vehicle in Ontario for sharing land and facilities ownership and long term use for purposes which are adjunct to activities on separate parcels of land.

Examples of forms of development and land use which may take advantage of a common elements condominium corporation form of governance are:

- residential development created by plan of subdivision in which the lots cluster around a facility (for example a communal pool/tennis court) which is held under a common elements condominium corporation;
- lifestyle developments which entail the provision of communal facilities (a ski hill or marina, a pool/exercise facility, tennis courts, recreational/meeting buildings, marina, jogging trails, garden plots) available only to common elements condominium corporation owners;
- lands used to supply electric power, drinking water, sewage treatment, communications, and such, to certain properties, where it is important to have the security of the tied lands for payment of common expenses;
- a parking lot or driveway system dedicated to shared use by adjacent (whether residential or commercial or other) property owners;
- multiple ownership in, for example, a power center type setting, with the tied lands sitting under the individual buildings, and the common parking, driveways, landscaping, and the like, within the common elements condominium corporation.

It should be noted that since only the communal facilities/land form the property of the common elements condominium corporation, the tied lands must exist, or be created, through some other vehicle.

1.4.2. Subdivision Application Process

Section 142 of the Condominium Act makes section 50 of the Planning Act inapplicable to dealings with the common interests in a common elements condominium corporation. Why this declaration is introduced in Section 142 is not entirely clear, as section 9(1)(a) of the Condominium Act seems to be applicable and provides the same exemption. The fact section 9(1)(b) of the Condominium Act also refers to easements transferred by or reserved to the corporation as being free of section 50 of the Planning Act, and that section 142 does not refer to easements being relieved of section 50, suggests that such easements must be created through consent or other land division process.

1.4.3. Conditions on the Creation of Common Element Condominium Corporations

To be approved and registered a common elements condominium corporation must meet, among others, the following criteria:

1. It cannot be a vacant land condominium (section 138(3)).
2. It cannot be a leasehold condominium (section 138(3)).
3. It cannot be a phased condominium (section 138(3) and Regulation 48/01 section 49(2) which requires a phased condominium to be of the standard type).
4. The property must be located entirely within the boundaries of one land titles division, the Land Titles Act must be applicable to the entire property, and the declarant must be registered as owner with absolute title;

or.

 the property must be located entirely within the boundaries of one registry division, the Registry Act must be applicable to the entire property, and the declarant must hold a certificate of title issued within the previous ten years under Part I of the Certification of Titles Act (section 4).

5. Each of the owners (of a common interest) must own the freehold estate in a parcel of land (the tied land) that
 - is not included in the description of the condominium (i.e. it is physically outside the boundaries of the condominium);
 - is entirely within the same land titles or registry division as the property; and to which the Land Titles Act applies and for which the owner holds absolute title;
 - or
 - for which a certificate of titles has been registered under the Certification of Titles Act within the previous ten years (section 139(1(a) and section 39)).
6. Each of the owners of tied land (except the declarant (section 42 of 48 of 01)) has signed a certificate in Form 9 (Regulation 49 of 01) stating the owners consent to the registration and attaching the common interest to their respective parcel (section 139(1)(b))
7. At the time of registration, each parcel of tied land must be capable of being individually conveyed, or otherwise dealt with, without contravening section 50 of the Planning Act (Section 39.1 of 48 of 01).

1.4.4. Special Registration Not Required

When the common elements condominium corporation’s declaration and description are registered the common interest of an owner attaches to the owner’s tied land. While the Condominium Act specifies that notice of this is effected by the declarant registering of a notice on title to the tied land (section 139(2)), and the form of notice is provided by regulation 49 of 01 in Form 10, section 42 of regulation 48 of 01 relieves the declarant from this task.

Had the exemption not been provided, the notice would have included the common elements condominium corporation declaration and description, state the fact of the association of the common interest to the tied land and the fact that the common interest cannot be severed from title to the tied land (section 139(4)), and have attached the owners consent to the registration (in Form 9).

1.4.5. Lien for Common Expenses

Should an owner default in payment of common expenses, the corporation has a lien against the tied parcel for the amount owed (section 139(5)). The lien procedures and rules set out in sections 85 and 86 of the Condominium Act apply (section 139(6)) with the exception that the lien does not have priority over an encumbrance registered before registration, unless the encumbrancer agrees in writing (section 139(7)).

1.4.6. Division of Tied Land

The Condominium Act makes provision for tied land to be divided, with the common interest running with each. However, this is subject to the regulations (section 138(3)). Section 42(3) of 48 of 01 provides that tied land cannot be divided into two or more new parcels unless an amendment to the declaration is registered that takes into account the division of the tied land. In such event the amendments will be subject to the directions of section 107 (which governs such amendments), including the requirement of securing the written consent of 90% of the owners of the tied parcels if, as may be likely, it involves a change to the contribution to the common elements or the redistribution of the common interests, and 80% in all other cases. Clearly, there is a drawback to making lands with subdivision potential part of the tied lands. The ability to further subdivide would be uncertain due to the need to secure consent of the other owners of the common interests. This may be ensured by an agreement entered into with the purchaser/unit owner at the time of purchase or through a provision in the declaration (there are no provisions expressly prohibiting such).

1.4.7. Special Exceptions

Since there are no owner-occupied units in a common elements condominium corporation the provisions of the Condominium Act dealing with the directors of the corporation voted into office by owner-occupants of units (section 28(3), 46(3), and 51(5) to 51(8)) do not apply to common elements condominium corporations (section 44 of 48 01).

As a common elements condominium corporation will not contain any units which could be covered by the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan, section 22 of 48 of 01 governing contents and rules relating to deposit receipts is inapplicable (section 45(1)). In the case of a common elements condominium corporation the only prescribed security for deposits and the like is a policy of insurance against loss (see below). The evidence of compliance with section 81 (monies delivered to trustee) required by section 81(6) is the standard Form 4 under 49 of 01.

For the purposes of a common elements condominium corporation the qualifying security must be policies that insure against the loss of payments described in section 81(1) of the Condominium Act and the interest payable by the declarant on the payments. The policy(s) must be executed by the insurer and declarant and delivered to the trustee/declarant's solicitor (section 45(1) and 45(2) and section 21(1) of 48 of 01). The policy shall be held in trust for the beneficiary until:

- (a) the declarant delivers to the beneficiary a deed in registerable form to the common interest in the corporation, in respect of which the beneficiary or a person on the beneficiary's behalf has made a payment described in subsection 81(1) of the Condominium Act;
- (b) the declarant pays the beneficiary all money paid under subsection 81(1) of the Condominium Act and interest on it payable by the declarant under the Condominium Act;
- (c) the insurer pays the beneficiary the amount of the loss;
- (d) the common interest, in respect of which the beneficiary or a person on the beneficiary's behalf has made a payment described in subsection 81(1) of the Condominium Act, has attached to the beneficiary's tied land;
- (e) the beneficiary acknowledges in writing that,
 - (i) the beneficiary is not entitled to the payments made by or on behalf of the beneficiary under section 81(1) of the Act in respect of a proposed common interest in the corporation and the interest payable on the payments by the declarant, and
 - (ii) the insurer is no longer liable under the policy; or
- (f) a court of competent jurisdiction has made a final determination that the beneficiary is not entitled to the payments made by or on behalf of the beneficiary under section 81(1) of the Condominium Act in respect of a proposed common interest in the corporation and the interest payable on the payments by the declarant; at which time the insurer will no longer be liable under the policy (section 46).

1.4.8. Contents of a Declaration for a Common Elements Condominium Corporation

1.4.8.1. Prohibitions

A declaration shall not,

- contain provisions requiring an owner, a future owner or anyone on the owner’s or future owner’s behalf to consent in writing to an amalgamation; or
- contain provisions relating to an amalgamation. (section 7(1)).

1.4.8.2. Requirements

A declaration must:

- satisfy the requirements of section 7(2) , by containing the following:
 - a statement that the Condominium Act governs the land and interests appurtenant to the land, as the land and the interests are described in the description;
 - the consent of every person having a registered mortgage against the land or interests appurtenant to the land, as the land and the interests are described in the description;
 - a statement of the proportions, expressed in percentages, of the common interests appurtenant to the owner’s parcel of land;
 - a statement of the proportions, expressed in percentages allocated to the owner’s parcel of land, in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses¹;
 - an address for service, a municipal address for the corporation, if available, and the mailing address of the corporation if it differs from its address for service or municipal address;
 - a specification of all parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated owner’s parcel of land and not by all the owners;
 - a statement of all conditions that the approval authority, in approving or exempting the description under section 9 (Planning Act approval), requires the declaration to mention.

Section 140

It must also:

- contain a statement that the common elements are intended for the use and enjoyment of the owners (section 140(a));
- contain a legal description of the parcels of tied lands (section 140(b));
- be executed by the declarant (5(1)(a));
- meet the execution requirements for registration of a transfer/deed of land under the Land Titles Act or the Registry Act, as the case may be (5(1)(b));
- have the statement on the first page of the declaration that the registration of the declaration and description will create a common elements condominium corporation (section 40(1)(a)(i));
- have the statement on the first page that a tied land may not be divided into two or more parcels unless an amendment is registered to the declaration that takes into account the division (section 40(1)(a)(ii));
- contain schedules known as Schedules A, B, D, E, F, G (to be included only if the declaration and description show that there are buildings, structures, facilities or services included in the common elements (section 40(9) of 48 of 01), H, I and J (section 5(1)(d), section 40(4) and section 41(1)(b) of 48 of 01))

1.4.8.3. Contents of Schedules

Each of the 9 (or less) schedules must contain prescribed information. This is set out below in the context of a common elements condominium corporation:

Contents of Schedule A

This schedule will contain:

- a description of the land and interests appurtenant to the land intended to be governed by the Act, including a description of every easement, as shown on the description that, upon the registration of the declaration and description, will be appurtenant to the land or to which the land will be subject; and
- a statement signed by the solicitor registering the declaration that, in his or her opinion, based on the parcel register or abstract index and the plans and documents recorded in them, that
 - (i) the legal description is correct,
 - (ii) the easements described in the description will exist in law upon the registration of the declaration and description, and
 - (iii) the declarant is the registered owner of the land and appurtenant interests (5(2)).

Contents of Schedule B

This schedule will contain:

- The consent under section 7(2)(b) of the Act, in Form 1, of every person having a registered mortgage against the land or interests appurtenant to the land, as the land and the interests are described in the description (5(3)).
- The consent, in Form 16, of every person having a registered mortgage against a tied land (section 40(3)).

Contents of Schedule D

This schedule will contain:

- a statement that the common elements are intended for the use and enjoyment of the owners for the purpose of section 140(a) of the Condominium Act (section 40(6)(a));
- a legal description of the parcels of tied land for the purpose of section 140(b) of the Condominium Act (section 40(6)(b));
- a statement of the proportions, expressed in percentages totalling 100 per cent, of the common interests that will attach to each tied land (section 40(6)(c)); and
- a statement of the proportions, expressed in percentages totalling 100 per cent, allocated to the tied lands, in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses (section 40(6)(d)).

Contents of Schedule E

This schedule will contain:

- a statement specifying the common expenses of the corporation or may be left blank if the declarant so elects (section 5(6)).

Contents of Schedule F

This schedule will contain:

- a statement specifying all parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated common interests and not by all the owners or shall indicate that there are no such parts if that is the case (section 40(8)).

Contents of Schedule G

This schedule is not to be included if the declaration and description show that there are no buildings, structures, facilities or services included in the common elements (section 40(9)).

Unlike a vacant land condominium corporation which can be registered without all buildings, structures, facilities and services being in place on the common elements (section 158(1)), there is no option in the case of a common elements condominium corporation (reference section 40(12(b))). Such matters must be completed before registration.

If the schedule is required it shall contain either²¹:

1. A certificate, in Form 17, of an architect certifying that,
 - (i) all buildings and structures that the declaration and description show are included in the common elements have been completed and installed in accordance with the regulations made under the Act, with respect to all or some matters listed in the paragraphs of the definition of “has been completed and installed” in section 41, and
 - (iii) some or all of the facilities and services that the declaration and description show are included in the common elements have been installed and provided in accordance with the definition of “has been installed and provided” in section 41,²²

2. one or more certificates of an engineer, in Form 17, certifying that,
 - (i) all buildings and structures that the declaration and description show are included in the common elements have been completed and installed in accordance with the regulations made under the Act, with respect to some matters listed in the paragraphs of the definition of “has been completed and installed” in section 41, and
 - (iii) some or all of the facilities and services that the declaration and description show are included in the common elements have been installed and provided in accordance with the definition of “has been installed and provided” in section 41.²³

(section 40(11))

Definition of ‘Has Been Completed and Installed’

²¹ These contents are identical to that of a vacant land condominium corporation which has no buildings etc. in the common elements, or which has buildings etc. in the common elements and all of such are completed.

²³ Note: If the declaration and description show there are no facilities and services included in the common elements this certificate shall not contain the certifications of completion/installation/provision of facilities and services (section 40(14))

‘Completed and Installed’ does not mean 100% completion of all work. The work must relate to one of the matters listed in section 41 (section 40(12) of 48 of 01); however, generally speaking the work left to be done will be minor (i.e. wall paint). The matters to be certified complete and installed, and the state of completion are as follows:

“has been completed and installed” means, with respect to each building and structure that the declaration and description show are included in the common elements, constructed at least to the following state:

These descriptions shall be combined and shall be in Form 3 (section 9(4) and 9(5) of 48 of 01 and 8(1)(g) of the Condominium Act).

1.4.10. Disclosure Statement

Along with the otherwise mandated contents of a disclosure statement (section 72(3) of the Condominium Act and *section 17 of 48 of 01*²⁷), Section 143(a) of the Condominium Act requires the inclusion of a statement that the common interest attaches to the owner’s parcel of land described in the declaration and cannot be severed from the parcel upon the sale of the parcel or the enforcement of an encumbrance registered against the parcel.

²⁷ see chapter 3.1.2.

The common elements of a common elements condominium corporation are a separate parcel for the purposes of municipal assessment and taxation. The taxes levied form part of the common expenses (section 15(4)).

1.5.1. What is a Phased Condominium Corporation?

A phased condominium corporation is, in essence, a special type of freehold condominium of the standard type (section 6(1) and (2)) and (section 49(2) of regulation 48/01). What sets it apart from standard condominiums (other than the nomenclature) is that the property of the corporation is anticipated to change subsequent to the initial registration to encompass new units and/or common elements developed in a subsequent phase or phases. Should such actual enlargement not occur (with the result that the property remains in the form in which it was originally registered) the corporation remains known as a phased condominium.

A phased condominium corporation cannot be a vacant land or common elements condominium or, for the obvious reason that the title must be freehold, a leasehold condominium corporation (section 145(1)(a) and (b)).

The phased condominium corporation overcomes a shortcoming in the old condominium regime in Ontario caused by the requirement in the old Act that all buildings and structures in the condominium property be completed before the condominium could be created/registered. The conundrum presented by this requirement is illustrated by the hypothetical example of a development consisting of thirty separate buildings each containing eight townhouse style dwellings/units. The market for these units would allow them to be absorbed at the rate of 40 units per year.

The developer can economically construct the buildings one at a time (i.e. eight units) and, accordingly, the construction could proceed at the pace of 5 buildings per year (40 units) for six years in order to complete development. If this phased construction was intended to result in an project under the umbrella of a single condominium corporation, final closings of units could not take place for, in the case of the initial units for example, five to six years after the purchasers took up interim occupancy. A work around to this conundrum was available, but it was complicated and cumbersome, with legal frailties associated with it²⁸ and, in any event, required the eventual creation of more than one condominium corporation. While it served the purpose of allowing final closings to take place before construction was complete, it left an administration that was unduly (in light of the present legislation) burdensome.

The Condominium Act specifically relieves a declarant from constructing phases subsequent to the first and this must be stated in the disclosure statement (section 147(1)(b)). To avoid ‘stranding’ an early phase without necessary services and facilities planned for a later (unimplemented) phase, the Condominium Act requires that each phase have all facilities and services in place to ensure the independent operation of the corporation if no subsequent phases are created (section 146(8)). As an alternative, the declarant can post a bond or other security sufficient to ensure the installation or provision of the uncompleted work (section 146(9)) in the event subsequent phases do not proceed.

It is to be noted that phases subsequent to the first are not subject to the process set out in section 107 of the Condominium Act (declaration amendment) (section 146(7)).

Phases subsequent to the first must be registered within 10 years of the creation of the corporation (section 55 of 48 of 01).

1.5.2. Conditions on the Creation of Phased Condominium Corporation

To be approved and registered a phased condominium corporation must meet the following criteria:

1. It cannot be a vacant land or common elements condominium (section 145(1)(b));
2. It must be a freehold condominium (section 145(1)(a)) of the standard type(section 49(2) of regulation 48/01);
3. Both the condominium property and the land which will, or may, be brought into it in subsequent phases (referred to as the ‘servient lands’ (section 47 of 48 of 01)) must be located entirely within the boundaries of one land titles division, the Land Titles Act must be applicable to both, and the declarant must be registered as owner of both with absolute title;

or,

the property must be located entirely within the boundaries of one registry division, the Registry Act must be applicable to the entire property, and the declarant must hold a certificate of title issued within the previous ten years under Part 1 of the Certification of Titles Act (section 48(2)(a) and (b)).

1.5.3. Contents of Initial Declaration for a Phased Condominium Corporation

As with all condominiums, a phased condominium corporation is created with the registration of a declaration and description that applies to certain lands. These initial condominium documents will anticipate subsequent phase(s), but otherwise will have the contents required of any declaration. As set out below, additional requirements and criteria apply to registrations related to phases subsequent to the first.

In the case of the initial declaration the following applies:

1.5.3.1. Prohibitions

- contain provisions relating to an amalgamation. (section 7(1)).

1.5.3.2. Requirements

- be executed by the declarant (5(1)(a));
- meet the execution requirements for registration of a transfer/deed of land under the Land Titles Act or the Registry Act, as the case may be (5(1)(b));
- have the statement on the first page of the declaration that the registration of the declaration and description will create a standard condominium corporation that is a phased condominium corporation; (section 49(2));
- contain schedules known as Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, G (schedule G is included only if the declaration and description show that there are buildings, structures, facilities or services included in the common elements (section 5(1)(d) and section 56(5)), and H (56(1)(c)).

1.5.3.3. Contents of Schedules

Contents of Schedule A

This schedule must contain:

The description shall not (despite section 145(1)(d) of the Condominium Act) contain a description of the servient lands (section 50 of 48 of 01).

1.5.6. Disclosure Statement

In addition to the usual requirements of the Condominium Act for the contents of disclosure statements³²(as set out in section 72(3)), a phased condominium’s disclosure statement (whether for the first or subsequent phases) must include:

- 1) the statement that no amendments creating a phase will be registered more than 10 years after the date of the original registrations that created the corporation (section 55 of 48 01).
- 2) a statement whether the declarant intends to create one or more phases after the creation of the unit or proposed unit;
- 3) a statement that the declarant is not required to create a phase after the creation of the unit or proposed unit;
- 4) a statement that sets out the projected year of registration of the amendments to the declaration and description required for creating each phase that the declarant intends to create after the creation of the unit or proposed unit;
- 5) a statement that sets out, for each phase that the declarant intends to create after the creation of the unit or proposed unit,
 - (i) the approximate number of the units included in the phase and a legal description of the land included in the phase,
 - (ii) the approximate location of the buildings and structures to be contained in the phase and a description of the facilities and services to be contained in the phase,
 - (iii) a statement of the proportions, expressed in percentages, of the common interests and common expenses attributable to the units after the creation of the phase,
 - (iv) a statement of the facilities and services that the owners will share after the creation of the phase, and
 - (v) a statement that there are no representations with respect to the quality of materials or appearance of buildings other than those specifically set out as representations in the disclosure statement (section 147).

1.5.6. Special Allowance for Variance in Size of Phase

Flexibility is provided for the magnitude of phases by stipulating that a change in the number of units/legal description in a phase (and a consequential change in the proportions of common interests and expenses) is not a ³²See chapter 3.1.2.

‘material change’ under section 74 of the Condominium Act. Accordingly, there is no obligation on the declarant to provide notice of changes and no right of rescission to purchasers (section 147(2)).

1.5.7. Creating a Second and Subsequent Phases

Although as a general matter it is in the declarant’s discretion to time the registration of subsequent phases, there are procedural steps which must be followed which ensure that the enlargement of the phased condominium is on due notice to the corporation. Amendments to descriptions are subject to the provisions of the Planning Act regarding application and approval (section 9(2)).

The following essential criteria must be satisfied before a phase subsequent to the first can be registered:

- no more than 10 years shall have passed since the original declaration was registered (section 51(h));
- the phase must contain at least one unit (section 51(d));
- at least 60 days shall have passed since the original declaration, or last amendment thereto, was registered (section 51(f));
- at least 60 days shall have passed since the declarant delivered to the corporation the following:
 1. a copy of the disclosure statement last delivered to a purchaser of a unit;
 2. a copy of the proposed amendments to the declaration and description for creating a phase; and,
 3. a statement specifying all differences between the proposed amendments to the declaration and description required for creating the phase and the following matters with respect to the phase that were described in the disclosure statement (item 1 above):
 - the location of buildings and structures and facilities and services in a phase (section 147(1)(d)(ii)) and facilities and services shared after a phase (section 147(1)(d)(iv)).
 - the proportions of common interests and common expenses after the phase (section 147(1)(d)(iii)) if they differ from the proposed amendments to the declaration and description required for creating the phase for a reason other than a change in the number of units included in the phase. (Section 149(1)(c))
- 60 days must have passed since the documents described above were delivered to the corporation and the corporation must not, in the meantime, have made an application to court to enjoin the new phase (an application which is permitted if the differences described in item 3 above are material and detrimentally affect the corporation or the use and enjoyment of the property by the owners (section 149(2)))
- All facilities and services have been installed or provided as the municipality/Minister determines are necessary to ensure the independent operation of the corporation if no subsequent phases are created (section 146(8)), unless the municipality/Minister agree to accept a bond or other security that is sufficient to ensure the installation or provision of the facilities and services (section 146(9)).

1.5.7.1. Contents of Amendment to Declaration

Since the registration of a subsequent phase will involve the enlargement of the property, the addition of architectural and/or structural plans of the new buildings, and so forth, an amendment to the declaration to create/incorporate a new phase will involve replacing or amending all or some of the seven schedules to the declaration and the addition of a new schedule (‘K’). Form 19 to regulation 48 of 01 is the prescribed form for such an amendment and provides for the inclusion/addressing of the following as made mandatory by section 52 of 48 of 01.

- 1) it is to be executed by the declarant;
- 2) it must meet the execution requirements for registration of a transfer/deed of land under the Land Titles Act or the Registry Act, as the case may be;
- 3) it must contain a statement that at least 60 days have passed since the declarant delivered to the corporation the documents described in section 149(1)(a), (b), and (c) of the Condominium Act;

 - i. the meeting was held at a time when the declarant did not own the majority of the units,
 - ii. more than 60 days have passed since the registration of the declaration and description that created the corporation or the registration of the latest amendments to the declaration and description creating a phase, whichever is the later, and
 - iii. there is no outstanding application to the Superior Court of Justice for an injunction under section 149 (2) of the Condominium Act and the Superior Court has not issued an injunction to prevent the registration of the amendments creating the phase;
- 5) it provides for the replacement/amendment/addition of schedules.

The following describes the contents of the schedules for the amendment to the description:

Contents of Schedule A

The required contents of the replacement to Schedule A to the existing declaration (to be attached to Form 19 – The Amendment) are:

- (a) the description of the property that was included in Schedule A to the declaration, as originally registered, except for the easements that will merge and no longer exist in law upon the registration of the amendment to the declaration and that are described in the Schedule as required by section 52 (e)(i), and the description shall be identified as “FIRSTLY” or “PREMIÈREMENT”;
- (b) the descriptions, in order of their registration, of all phases that have already been created, as described in amendments to Schedule A to the declaration, except for the easements that will merge and no longer exist in law upon the registration of the amendment to the declaration and that are described in the Schedule as required by section 52 (e)(i), and the descriptions shall be identified consecutively starting with “SECONDLY” or “DEUXIÈMEMENT”;
- (c) a legal description, identified with the next consecutive ordinal number, of the land included in the phase and interests appurtenant to the land intended to be governed by the Act, including a description of every easement, as shown on the amendment to the description that, upon the registration of the amendments to the declaration and description, will be appurtenant to the phase or to which the phase will be subject;
- (d) a statement signed by the solicitor registering the amendment to the declaration that sets out a legal description of the lands that will be the servient lands, if any, and that states that, in his or her opinion, based on the parcel register or abstract index and the plans and documents recorded in them,
 - (i) the legal description mentioned in above is correct,

- (ii) the easements mentioned in the legal description will exist in law upon the registration of the amendment to the declaration and description creating the phase,
- (iii) the legal description of the land that will be the servient lands is set out in the solicitor’s statement, and
- (iv) the declarant is the registered owner of the land included in the phase and interests appurtenant to the land; and
- (e) if there are easements that will merge and no longer exist in law upon the registration of the amendment to the declaration, a statement signed by the solicitor registering the amendment to the declaration that,
 - (i) sets out a legal description of the easements and the most recent registered instrument number in which they are fully described, and
 - (ii) states that, in his or her opinion, based on the parcel register or abstract index and the plans and documents recorded in them, the easements will merge and no longer exist in law upon the registration of the amendment to the declaration. (section 52(3))

Contents of Schedule B

This schedule must contain:

- the written consent, in Form 18 to 48 of 01, of all registered mortgages, consenting to the registration of the phase, and postponing the mortgage interest to the declaration and easements (section 52(f)).

Contents of Schedule G

This Schedule adds the following to the declaration,

- (a) the certificates, with respect to the land included in the phase, that sections 5(8) and 5(9) (certificates of the architect/engineer in Form 2, certifying the completion of construction of buildings) and section 6 (definition of ‘has been constructed’) require; and
- (b) a statement from any of the municipalities in which the land included in the phase is situated, or from the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing if the land is not situated in a municipality (or signed by a person authorized to bind the municipality or the Minister (section 52(6))), that,

1.5.8. Contents of Amendment to Description

The amendment to the description of a phased condominium corporation required to accommodate a phase subsequent to the first, shall contain the following material prepared with respect to the phase:

1. a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the horizontal surface of the land and the perimeter of the buildings (section 8(1)(a));
2. structural plans of the building provided that if the description contains the structural plans described in section 8(1)(b) of the Condominium Act and Schedule G to the declaration does not contain the certificate of the architect under section 5(8)(a) (certifying completion), the description shall not contain the architectural plans referred to in section 8(1)(b) (section 9(2)).
3. a specification of the boundaries of each unit by reference to the buildings or other monuments (section 8(1)(c)).
4. diagrams showing the shape and dimensions of each unit and the approximate location of each unit in relation to the other units and the building (section 8(1)(d)).

5. a certificate signed by an Ontario land surveyor licensed under the Surveyors Act stating that the diagrams of the units are substantially accurate (section 8(1)(f)).
6. a description of all easements and similar interests to which the land included in the phase is subject (section 53(3) of 48 of 01) combined with a description of all interests appurtenant to the land (section 53(4) of 48 of 01)

Amendments to declarations descriptions to create phases are not subject to the process set out in section 107 (owners vote etc.).

Amendments to the description are to be in Form 19 to 48 of 01 (section 54(1)).

1.5.9. Facilities and Services – Bonding for Uncompleted Work

As with the original phase it is a condition of registration of a subsequent phase that all facilities and services be installed or provided are determined to be necessary to ensure the independent operation of the corporation if no subsequent phases are developed (section 146(8)). Alternatively, a declarant may provide a bond or other security sufficient to ensure the installation of the facilities and services (section 146 (9)).

In the event a bond or security must be posted the following outlines the essential considerations and rules:

1. The municipality in which the land is situate (or the Minister of Municipal Affairs in the event the land is not in a municipality) must specify to whom the security is to be provided. It may be a person or a body, including the approval authority. The Condominium Act is not specific on which municipality makes the specification in the case of land which is in more than one municipality (for example, land in an local area municipality within a regional municipality). Presumably a specification by either would be reliable, although it is a moot question how the unlikely situation of two qualified municipalities designating two different security holders would be resolved.
2. The Condominium Act and regulations do not limit the identity or class of persons who may be specified to hold the security, and so the specification is essentially entirely within the discretion of the specifying municipality. Besides the approval authority, the holder could be a municipal official or an outside third party.
3. The bond or security must be ‘acceptable’ to the municipality (or Minister, if applicable). This provides flexibility in the form the security may take. For example, it could be simply in a cash amount which may drawn on by the holder to complete the work, or it may take the form of a construction bond which allows the bonding company to complete the work in the event of default. The security may also be a cash deposit, a letter of credit or guarantee, or a security backed by a mortgage on the property. The decision on the form is left to the discretion of the municipality which will, understandably, prefer a form which will be easy to administer, particularly in the event of default.
4. The security must be ‘sufficient to ensure’ completion, installation, and provision of the uncompleted work. This directive implies a minimum amount for the security (for example, if the estimated cost of completion is $100,000.00, the security can/should never be less than $100,000.00) but the ceiling is a gray area. Practically speaking it will be up to the municipality, in consultation with, among others, the declarant, to set an amount which ensures ‘sufficiency’. The amount could reflect the possibility of labour or materials cost increases, ‘extras’ in the completion process, the additional costs which will arise in the event of default and a new party having to pick up the direction of the work, and so forth. Given that the municipality, in setting the amount, owes a duty of care to the unit purchasers and corporation to ensure the amount is sufficient to ensure completion, prudence dictates that any error should be on the side of caution.
5. Although section 146(9) speaks of ‘bond or security’ in the singular, the security for a particular proposed condominium can be provided through two or more bonds/securities (Interpretation Act

Section 28 (j). It is also possible for different securities relating to the same proposal to be held by different persons/bodies.

6. A bond or security may be released in stages with the consent of the municipality/minister (section 146(10)). Such partial releases would be appropriate as work progresses on completing the construction. The reduced security amount must, in all cases, be sufficient to ensure completion.
7. The security shall not be released in full until all buildings, structures, facilities, or services, be completed, installed and provided in accordance with the regulations (section 146(11)) and the municipality/minister consents.

1.5.10. Deliveries Following on Registration of a Second or Subsequent Phase

Within fifteen days of registering the amendments to the declaration and description creating a phase the declarant must:

1. Send to the corporation a copy of the most current disclosure statement delivered to a purchaser (section 147(5)) and a copy of the amendments (section 150(1));
2. Send to each owner (i.e. not only the owners in the new phase) a copy of the amendments (section 150(1)).

1.5.11. Declarant’s Liability to Owners

Any person who purchased a unit or proposed unit before registration of the amendments is given a statutory right to damages if there are any material differences, which detrimentally affect the use and enjoyment of the person’s unit, between the following matters as disclosed in the disclosure statement they received and the registered amendments:

- (a) the approximate location of the buildings and structures in the phase and the facilities and services in the phase;
- (b) the facilities and services that the owners share after the creation of the phase (section 150(2)1.)
- (c) the proportions of the common interests and common expenses attributable to the units after the creation of the phase (provided the difference is not due to a change in the number of units in a phase (section 150(2))).

The right to damages may be ordered by the court on application of the entitled owner (section 150(3)).

1.5.12. Easements Over Servient Lands

The Condominium Act imposes certain easements, where necessary, on the servient lands for the benefit of the units and common elements, upon registration of the first phase (section 151). These easements must be necessary (i.e. an easement for access to public roads would not imposed on servient lands if the corporation gains access to public roads directly from the condominium property; although access to a public road over the servient lands may be useful, in such a case it is not necessary) and must be included in the following description:

1. An easement for the provision of services over the servient tenement.
2. An easement for support from the servient tenement.
3. An easement for access to and for the installation and maintenance of the services and facilities that the corporation is entitled to use over the servient tenement.
4. An easement for access to public roads over the servient tenement.

These easements continue on the servient lands (as they exist after registration of each phase) until all phases are registered.

1.5.13. Turn-over Obligations

The requirement that the Board of Directors elected/appointed by the Declarant call a meeting within 21 days (and hold it within 21 days thereafter) after the declarant ceases to own a majority of units (in order to elect a new board) applies to phased condominiums. The turnover obligations in section 43(4) (turning over the seal, minute books, records etc.) also apply with the additional requirement that a copy of the statements described in section 147(1) (i.e. timing of creation of phases, approximate number of units in the phases etc.) is to be provided (section 152(1(a))).

On registration of each subsequent phase, the declarant must provide to the Board all of the items mentioned in section 43(4), the statements described in section 147(1), and the material in section 43(5) (i.e. warranties, as-built specifications, site servicing plans etc.) that relate to the phase (section 152(2)). Should the declarant fail to comply with this turnover obligation for a phase, on application of the corporation the court can order compliance and, in addition, award damages, costs, and a penalty of up to $10,000.00 (section 152(5)).

1.5.14. Change of Board Consequent on Registration of a New Phase

The Board of Directors appointed by a declarant on registration of a condominium must call a meeting to replace the Board after the declarant ceases to own a majority of the units (section 43). In the case of a phased condominium corporation it is possible, depending on the number of units in successive phases, for a new board to be elected and, due to the registration of a new phase, the declarant once again comes to own a majority of units in the condominium. In order to allow the declarant to again have its directors on the board, section 152(6) obliges the board, on request of the declarant, to call a meeting of owners to elect a new board until, once again, the declarant ceases to own a majority of units and a new board is elected under section 43.

1.5.15. Performance Audit, Financial Statements, and Reserve Fund Study

A performance audit of the common elements contained in a (each) phase must be carried out by the board if the respective phase contains one or more units for residential purposes (section 153(1)).

The financial statements required by section 66(2) must be prepared within 90 days of the registration of a phase (section 153(3)).

A reserve fund study must be conducted on each phase within the usual time frames and otherwise in accordance with section 94 (section 153(4)).

1.5.16. Termination of Agreements

Agreements affecting property in a phase may be terminated subject to the following:

- termination of a property management agreement entered into by the declarant on the corporation's behalf and relating to a phase requires 60 days notice of termination (section 154(1) and (2));
- termination of any of the following agreements entered into by the declarant on the corporation's behalf and relating to a phase require 60 days notice of termination and must be terminated within 12 months following the first election of an owner's board under section 43 (section 154(3) and (4)):
 1. An agreement for the provision of goods or services on a continuing basis.

2. An agreement for the provision of facilities to the corporation on other than a non-profit basis.
 3. A lease of all or part of the common elements for business purposes;
- termination of an agreement with the declarant for the mutual use, provision or maintenance or cost-sharing of facilities or services must be terminated by court order made within 12 months following the first election of an owner's board under section 43 (section 154(5)) on application of the corporation. The court may only order termination of such as agreement if there was inadequate disclosure of the agreement or the agreement is oppressive or unconscionable (section 154(5) and (6)).

1.5.17. Status Certificate

In addition to the usual requirements of section 76(1) of the Condominium Act dealing with the contents of status certificates, in the case of a phased condominium until such time as all of the phases are complete and the declarant has disposed of ownership of all units (except a telecommunications unit), a phased condominium's disclosure statement must include a copy of the disclosure statement relating to the last phase registered (section 148).

The ability to amalgamate condominium corporations was not available under the old legislative regime and its introduction in the new Condominium Act provides flexibility that will prove advantageous in the appropriate circumstances.

The result of a corporate amalgamation in the business world is similar to the condominium amalgamation process: Two (or more) business corporations merge to become one, with the shareholders of both becoming shareholders in the amalgamated corporation based on agreed ratios of value. The assets and liabilities of the original corporations become the assets and liabilities of the amalgamated corporation. The principle is the same with condominium amalgamations. Two (or more) condominium corporations amalgamate to become one, with the unit owners in both becoming unit owners in the amalgamated condominium corporations, with fixed proportional interests in the common elements and common expense obligations. While the reasons and purposes behind amalgamations may be myriad in the business corporate world, for condominium corporations amalgamations will likely be spurred by the objectives of achieving economies of scale and efficiencies of administration, whether through sharing facilities or otherwise.

It should be emphasized that amalgamations are not a device that a declarant/developer will find to be of unqualified use (at least with any reliability of outcome) in a project setting. Declarations cannot contain provisions requiring a unit owner or future owner to consent to an amalgamation, or any other amalgamation provisions (section 7(1) of the Condominium Act). Amalgamations must be consented to in writing by at least 90% of the owners of each amalgamating corporation. These consents must be obtained during (and not before) the 90 days of the happening of a meeting called to consider the draft amalgamation documents. While a declarant may conceivably contract with a unit purchaser to oblige the owner to consent, the obligation would not extend to a successor in title unless the latter personally joins in the contract.

1.6.1. Conditions to the Amalgamation of Two or More Condominium Corporations

Although the Condominium Act authorizes two or more leasehold condominium corporations, or two or more freehold condominium corporations of the same type, to amalgamate (section 120(1)), regulation 48 of 01 limits amalgamations to standard freehold condominiums only; this includes both standard freehold corporations created as such, or condominium corporations created as phased condominium corporations (section 34(1)(a)). In addition, the following criteria must be satisfied:

- If any or all of the amalgamating corporations is a phased condominium corporation, all phases must be completed or more than ten years must have passed since the first registration (in which case no further phases are possible (section 34(1)(b));

- All amalgamating corporations must have held their respective turnover meeting under section 43 of the Condominium Act (with the resulting implication that the declarant owns less than 50% of the units in the respective corporation) (section 34(1)(c));
- All amalgamating corporations must have conducted a comprehensive reserve fund study or updated study based on site inspection in the year previous to the calling of the owners meeting (section 120(3)) to consider the amalgamation documents (section 34(1)(d));
- The amalgamating corporations must have entered into an interim agreement with each other dealing with the conduct of the affairs of each corporation from the calling of the owners meeting until amalgamation or the decision not to proceed with the amalgamation (section 34(1)(e));
- Within 90 days of calling a meeting of owners to consider the amalgamation documents, 90% of the owners of each amalgamating condominium must consent in writing to the amalgamation (section 120(1)(b)).
- The property of the amalgamated corporation must be within the boundaries of one land titles division and the Land Titles Act must be applicable to the property; or, the property must be entirely within the boundaries of one registry division and the Registry Act applies to the entire property (section 35(2));
- The property after amalgamation shall consist only of the property of each of the amalgamating corporations and there is to be no change in the boundaries of the units of each of the amalgamating corporations (section 36(3)(b)).

1.6.2. The Amalgamation Agreement

The interim agreement dealing with the conduct of the affairs of each corporation pending the outcome of the amalgamation must deal with matters including:

- expenditures from the reserve fund;
- borrowing of funds;
- making, amending or repealing by-laws;
- entering into new contracts;
- initiation of any legal proceedings;
- any substantial addition, alteration, or improvement to the common elements;
- any substantial change in the assets of the corporation; and,
- any substantial change in a service that the corporation provides to the owners (section 34(2)).

While the Condominium Act does not specify whether the agreement must be entered into before or after the owners have voted on the amalgamation, regulation 48 of 01, section 34(4) requires the notice of the owner's meeting to include a copy of the agreement. Accordingly, by default the agreement must be settled before the owners approval process is set in motion. The contents of an amalgamation agreement between corporations will require careful consideration. An objective will be to ensure that the conditions, financial and otherwise, which existed or could be predicted to exist at the time the agreement is settled, are unchanged at the time of amalgamation (or, if changed, are changed in a predictable way), so that the premises behind the amalgamation are constant to the date amalgamation takes place. The agreement need not be complicated and, considering that the factors which are to be addressed may, at least in the case of a standard condominium, be relatively straightforward. Caution must be taken to consider the agreements provisions in light of the legislation and the condominium documents and ensure there are no conflicts as the agreement must not contravene the legislation or the declaration, by-laws, or rules of each of the amalgamating corporations (section 34(3)). Promises received and given must be within corporate authority.

The agreement may be authorized by board resolution and should express the condition that it is subject to owner's approval.

1.6.3. Owners Meeting

Prior to amalgamation each corporation must call a meeting of owners for the purpose of considering a declaration and description amalgamating the corporations (section 120(2)). The notice requirements of section 47, including the 15 day notice period will apply, while the contents of the notice must include the following:

1. a copy of the proposed declaration and description of the amalgamated corporation and a copy of the proposed budget for the corporation’s first year of operation;
2. a copy of all proposed by-laws and rules of the amalgamated corporation;
3. a certificate as to the status for each amalgamating corporation in the form prescribed by the Minister;
4. for each amalgamating corporation, the auditor’s report on the last annual financial statements of the corporation, if it is not included in the certificate of status described above; and
5. a copy of the comprehensive reserve fund study or the updated study based on a site inspection that the corporation is required to conduct under section 34(1)(d) of 48 of 01;
6. a copy of the interim agreement between the corporations;
7. an estimate of the costs of carrying out the proposed amalgamation for each of the amalgamating corporations (section 34(4)(c)); and
8. one of the following statements:
 - a) A statement describing the provisions of the proposed declaration, description, by-laws and rules that, in the opinion of the board giving the notice, differ significantly from those contained in the declaration, description, by-laws and rules of the amalgamating corporation.
 - b) A statement that there are no provisions in the proposed declaration, description, by-laws and rules that, in the opinion of the board giving the notice, differ significantly from those contained in the declaration, description, by-laws and rules of the amalgamating corporation (section 34(4)(a) to (d)).

1.6.4. Owner’s Consent

At least 90% of the unit owners of each corporation must consent in writing to the amalgamation within 90 days of the holding of the meeting referred to above (section 120(1)(b)). Section 34(5)(a) of 48 of 01 prohibits the consents from being executed prior to the meeting, although there is no restriction against canvassing for future support. If the required votes are not obtained the amalgamation must fail (and either be abandoned or be the subject of a fresh amalgamation process).

The consent must be executed by:

- a) if the owner is an individual, the owner,
- b) if the owner is a corporation, the persons authorized to bind the corporation, or
- c) if a mortgagee is entitled to execute the consent in the place of the owner under section 48 of the Condominium Act, the individual mortgagee or, if the mortgagee is a corporation, the persons authorized to bind the corporation (section 34(5)(b)).

1.6.5. Contents of a New Declaration for an Amalgamated Condominium Corporation

1.6.5.1. Prohibitions

1.6.7. Legal Consequences of Amalgamation

In a nutshell, the effect of registering the declaration and description of an amalgamated corporation is to merge the assets and liabilities of the amalgamating corporations into a new corporation and provide corporate continuance under the umbrella of one corporation. The former corporate bylaws and rules lose force and the by-laws and rules proposed to the owners before amalgamation apply until replaced. In addition to the foregoing, the full consequences of this continuance are set out in section 121 of the Condominium Act and include the provisions that:

- the units and common interests of the amalgamating corporations are continued as units and common interests in the amalgamated corporation;
- all encumbrances, easements and leases that affected the units or common elements of the amalgamating corporations are continued as encumbrances, easements and leases respectively that affect the units or common elements, as the case may be, of the amalgamated corporation;
- the directors of the amalgamating corporations constitute the first directors of the amalgamated corporation;
- the proposed by-laws and rules mentioned in section 120(3)(b) shall be the by-laws and rules respectively of the amalgamated corporation until the corporation amends or replaces them;
- the amalgamated corporation possesses all the assets, rights and privileges and is subject to all liabilities, including civil, criminal and quasi-criminal, and all contracts, agreements, warranties and debts of each of the amalgamating corporations;
- a conviction against, or ruling, order or judgment in favour of or against an amalgamating corporation may be enforced by or against the amalgamated corporation; and
- the amalgamated corporation shall be deemed to be the party plaintiff or the party defendant, as the case may be, in all civil actions commenced by or against an amalgamating corporation before the amalgamation becomes effective.

1.6.8. Corporate Action Following Amalgamation

The following actions are specified to be addressed following the registration:

1. The directors shall immediately appoint one or more auditors to hold office until the meeting of the owners described below (section 121(2)).
2. The directors shall call and hold within 60 days following registration a meeting of the owners to elect successor directors and appoint successor auditors (section 121(3) and (4)).

1.6.9. Reserve Fund Studies

Since the amalgamating corporations will have carried out reserve fund studies in the year prior to amalgamation (section 34(1(d)) the Condominium Act makes special provision for the subsequent period. In brief, an amalgamated corporation must conduct a reserve fund study within three years of the date of the last of the pre-amalgamation studies (section 38(2)), and thereafter no more than three years after each succeeding study (section 38(3)).

The reserve fund study must be:

- a comprehensive study;
- an updated study not based on a site inspection, if the immediately preceding reserve fund study for the corporation was a comprehensive study or an updated study based on a site inspection; or
- an updated study based on a site inspection, if the immediately preceding reserve fund study for the corporation was an updated study not based on a site inspection (section 38(4)).

The plan of future funding for the reserve fund (section 98(4)) shall provide adequate funding within ten years from the date of the earliest reserve fund study conducted by the amalgamating corporations, if they were originally created before May 5, 2001. If any or all of the amalgamating corporations were created after that date the funding shall be in place in the fiscal year following the year in which the reserve fund study is completed (section 38(5)).

Section 9 of the Condominium Act provides:

1. There is no subdivision control over whole units and [related] common interests;
2. There is no subdivision control over easements transferred by or reserved to the corporation³⁶;
3. That Sections 51 [Application and approval of plans of subdivision], 51.1 [Parkland dedication], and 51.2 [Delegations of approval authority] of the Planning Act, apply, with necessary modification, to descriptions. Approval of the description must, unless an exemption is granted (see below), be given by the approval authority before it is registered; and,
4. That Section 52 of the Planning Act [prohibiting sales of lots on subdivision plans which have not received draft approval] applies to Vacant Land Condominium Corporations [but by implication not to any other type].

2.1.1. Subdivision Control

Section 50 of the Planning Act controls the subdivision of land in Ontario. Section 50 generally prohibits any person from transferring, mortgaging, and the like, any land owned by that person if that person owns abutting lands. Section 50 provides exceptions to the prohibition, however none of these address the kind of ‘land

³⁶ These may be described in the description [Section 8(1)(g)] but also include the easements mandated by Section 12, easements over the common elements created by by-law (Section 2), a telecommunications easement (Section 22) and easements required by public authorities (Section 20(2)(b)), easements benefiting or burdening other lands of the Declarant (Section 20(2)(a)), and easements peculiar to Phased Condominium Corporations (Section 151(1)).

Section 9(1) of the Condominium Act makes section 50 of the Planning Act inapplicable to dealings in whole units and common interests, as well as easements to and from a corporation (although until registration a proposed unit is subject to subdivision control and any agreement of purchase and sale must be conditional on Planning Act compliance³⁷). The effect of this is that, like a lot on a plan of subdivision, a unit in a condominium is freely transferable, mortgageable, and the like, regardless of the ownership of abutting units and lands. A unit's related common interest, like 'off the lot' easements relating to a lot as described on a plan of subdivision, is likewise freely transferable, mortgageable, and the like, regardless of abutting ownerships [subject to the constraint that the ownership interest in the common elements cannot be separated from the ownership of the unit [section 11(4)]].

Practically speaking, the most significant effect of section 9(1) is that, in the case of a declarant/owner, a declarant may transfer a unit (with related common interest) to a purchaser, even though the declarant owns one or more other units, or owns lands abutting the condominium's property, and, in the case of a purchaser, a purchaser may purchase two or more units with the knowledge that Ontario's subdivision control law will not be an obstacle should the purchaser subsequently wish to convey one, but not all, of the units to a new owner.

It should be noted that section 9(1) addresses section 50 of the Planning Act as it applies to dealings in whole units/interests. Subsection 50 (3), which prohibits dealings in part of a land ownership, is nullified; however, other subsections of section 50 are not addressed and remain applicable if the context allows. For example:

1. the declarant of a condominium on property which is a whole lot on a plan of subdivision, or within a part lot control area (section 50 (5) of the Planning Act), may deal with abutting lands while it owns units in the condominium.
2. part of a unit in a building may (as far as the Planning Act is concerned) be leased for any terms of years (section 50 (9) of the Planning Act).
3. an agreement purporting to convey or mortgage part of a unit is ineffective (section 50 (21) of the Planning Act; see also section 11 (4) of the Condominium Act).
4. even such an arcane application such as the freedom to deal in a property's mining rights (section 50 (2.1) of the Planning Act) remains applicable.

2.1.1.2. Approval of Descriptions

Section 9(2) of the Condominium Act makes Sections 51 [Application and approval of plans of subdivision], 51.1 [Parkland dedication], and 51.2 [Delegations of approval authority] of the Planning Act applicable (with 'necessary modification') to the approval of condominium descriptions and amendments to descriptions. A description shall not be registered without an approval (section 9(3)(a)), or an exemption from approval (section 9(3)(b)). The only exception to this general rule are amendments to a vacant land condominium corporation's description which are required to address the post-registration completion of construction of buildings , structures, and facilities in the common elements ((regulation 48/01 section 58(2))). In the latter case, such completed construction is contemplated before registration and, accordingly, another approval application and review would be redundant.

2.1.1.3. Special Case for Common Elements Condominium Corporation

The tied lands (land parcels external to the condominium to which are related the common interests in the common elements condominium corporation) must be created independently of the condominium and must exist before the condominium is registered (see section 39.1 of 48/01), and so will be subject to subdivision control and review. Section 142 makes it clear that section 50 of the Planning Act does not apply in respect of dealings with common interests in a common elements condominium corporation.

2.1.2. Section 51

2.1.2.2. General

All procedures, protocols, forms, times periods, notices, criteria, constraints, allowances, and, globally, the entire substance of the process of approvals of condominium descriptions which prevailed up to the date (May 5, 2001) the Condominium Act came into force, is unchanged by the Condominium Act. In the result, to give an example, none of the preparation, content, review, or disposition of an application for approval of a standard condominium of the freehold type should, from the Planning Act perspective, differ from that experienced with condominium applications under the old Act. Applications dealing with the new forms of condominiums will be accompanied by application information related to their unique circumstances (note that section 51(18) of the Planning Act authorizes an approval authority to require an applicant to provide such other information or material that the approval authority considers it may need-provided the official plan contains provisions for such requirements) and be subject to consideration and conditions which may arise, again, from their unique circumstance; however, the structure of the process has been passed intact from the old Act.

The following summarizes the key aspects of the process dealing with applications for approval of a condominium.

2.1.2.3. Who is the Approval Authority

The identity of the approval authority in a each geographic area of Ontario is prescribed by Section 51 subsections (1) to (15) of the Planning Act. Generally, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing will be the approval authority unless otherwise provided for (section 51(3) of the Planning Act). Exceptions to this general rule are numerous and are set out in subsections 51(4) to (7). They are:

Location	Approval Authority
Land in an upper-tier municipality with an approved official plan	The upper-tier municipality (section 51(5)) unless the land is in a prescribed lower-tier municipality in which case the specified lower-tier municipality is the approval authority (section 51(6)).
Land in a single-tier municipality that is not in a territorial district	The single-tier municipality unless otherwise prescribed (section 51(4)).
Land in a single-tier municipality that is in a territorial district	The single-tier municipality if prescribed (section 51(7)).
It is open to the Minister of Municipal Affairs to remove the authority described above, in which case the Minister will exercise the authority or may delegate it to a municipal planning authority. (section 51(11)).

Section 51.2 of the Planning Act allows a council which has approval authority under section 51 to delegate its approval powers in whole or in part to a lower-tier municipality in which the lands are located (section 51.2(2) of the Planning Act) (if applicable), a committee of council or an appointed officer (section 51.2(1) of the Planning Act), or to a municipal planning authority (section 51.2(3) of the Planning Act). Authority delegated to a lower-tier municipality or municipal planning authority may, in turn, be sub-delegated in whole or in part to a committee of council or to an appointed officer (section 51.2(4) and (5) of the Planning Act). Accordingly, the de jure approval authority in a particular case could lie with a number of alternative entities, and may even vary depending on the nature of the condominium application (i.e. approval authority may lie with an upper-tier municipality for a particular type of condominium while delegated to a lower-tier municipality for other types). Applicants must check with the planning or clerk's department of the municipality in which the lands are situated to determine the local situation.

2.1.2.4. The Application

The form of application for approval of a condominium description is not prescribed by the Condominium Act or the Planning Act. It is up to the respective approval authority to provide their form. The Planning Act does prescribe certain minimum inclusions in all applications and, in this regard, a complete application must:

1. Be made (i.e. signed) by the owner of the land or an agent of the owner duly authorized in writing as directed by section 51(16).

This will include an application fee set by the approval authority (established under section 69 or 69.1 of the Planning Act).

Once an application is filed and the application fee paid the approval authority has 30 days to advise the applicant that the application is complete (section 51 (19.1) of the Planning Act). If it advises in the negative, or fails to advise, the applicant may have the OMB determine the issue (Section 51 (19.2 and 19.3 of the Planning Act).

2.1.2.4. Notice of Application, Public Meeting, Decision

Notice of Application and Public Meeting not Required

Within 15 days of positive advice (from the authority or the OMB) that the application is complete the approval authority must, in the case of vacant land or common elements condominium applications, give notice of the application, together with prescribed information to the persons and bodies described in section 4 of Regulation 544/06. These includes landowners within 120 meters and various agencies. No such notice is required for standard and leasehold condominiums.

The combined effect of Section 51(20)(a) of the Planning Act and Section 7 of Regulation 544/06 requires, in the case of vacant land and common elements condominium applications, that both notice of the application be given, and a public meeting be held, at least 14 days before an approval authority makes a decision approving or refusing the application. In contrast, Section 7 of Regulation 544/06 makes it clear that neither notice of the application nor the holding of a public meeting is required before making a decision on an application for a standard or leasehold condominium.

Notice of Decision

An approval authority shall, within fifteen days of making a decision to approve or refuse an application, give written notice of its decision to the applicant, each person or body that made a written request for notice of the decision, a municipality or planning board having jurisdiction in the area in which the lands are situate (section 51(37) of the Planning Act), and to the Provincial Planning Services Branch of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing if it has made a request to be notified of decisions on applications for approval (Regulation section 10(2)).

A notice of decision shall include the following:

1. A copy of the decision, including the conditions and the lapsing provision, if any.
2. The last date for filing a notice of appeal, and a statement that the notice of appeal,
 - i. must be filed with the approval authority,
 - ii. must set out the reasons for the appeal, and
 - iii. must be accompanied by the fee required by the Municipal Board.
3. A statement that any of the following may, at any time before the approval of the final plan of subdivision, appeal any of the conditions imposed by the approval authority to the Municipal Board by filing a notice of appeal with the approval authority:
 - i. the applicant,
 - ii. any public body that, before the approval authority made its decision, made oral submissions at a public meeting or written submissions to the approval authority,
 - iii. the Minister,
 - iv. the municipality in which the subject land is located, or the planning board in whose planning area it is located,
 - v. if the subject land is not located in a municipality or planning area, any public body.
4. If applicable, the following statements:
 - i. You will be entitled to receive notice of any changes to the conditions of approval of the proposed plan of subdivision if you have made a written request to be notified of changes to the conditions.
 - ii. No person or public body shall be added as a party to the hearing of an appeal regarding any changes to the conditions of approval unless the person or public body, before the approval authority made its decision, made oral submissions at a public meeting or written submissions to the approval authority, or made a written request to be notified of the changes to the conditions.
5. The following statements:
 - i. Only individuals, corporations or public bodies may appeal decisions in respect of a proposed plan of subdivision to the Ontario Municipal Board. A notice of appeal may not be filed by an unincorporated association or group. However, a notice of appeal may be filed in the name of an individual who is a member of the association or group on its behalf.
 - ii. No person or public body shall be added as a party to the hearing of the appeal of the decision of the approval authority, including the lapsing provisions or the conditions, unless the person or public body, before the decision of the approval authority, made oral submissions at a public meeting or written submissions to the council or, in the Ontario Municipal Board's opinion, there are reasonable grounds to add the person or public body as a party.
6. If it is known that the subject land is the subject of an application under the Act for a minor variance or for an amendment to an official plan, a zoning by-law or a Minister's zoning order, a statement of that fact and the file number of the application.

2.1.2.5. Public Meetings and Submissions

Although Ontario Regulation 196/96 does not requires a public meeting to be held it should be noted that it is open to the approval authority, should it so choose, to hold a public meeting. Since the legislation does not deal with public meetings for condominiums, who receives notice of an 'optional' public meeting, and how it is given, is left to the approval authority.

Interested persons may make written submissions to the approval authority at any time prior to the authority making its decision. (section 51(22) of the Planning Act)

2.1.2.6. Time Frames for Decisions and Appeals

An appeal of the failure of an approval authority to make a decision (either approving or refusing an application for approval) may be commenced on the 181st day after the application is made (section 51(34)). The application is ‘made’ only when all information required under section 51(17) of the Planning Act has been received by the approval authority and the application fee is paid (section 51(19) of the Planning Act). The Condominium Act does not fix any period following which appeal rights relating to the failure to make a decision expire.

An appeal of a decision approving or refusing an application for approval, an appeal of any conditions imposed to an approval, and an appeal of lapsing provision (under section 51(32) of the Planning Act), must be made not later than 20 days after the notice of decision is given under section 50(37) of the Planning Act (section 51(39) of the Planning Act). The only exception to the latter time limit concerns the appeal, by either the applicant or a public body, of conditions imposed. In such cases the conditions may be appealed (by the applicant or public body) at any time before final approval of the condominium (section 51(43) of the Planning Act). Since the notice under section 50(37) is ‘given’ when, for example, the notices have been mailed (if that is the choice of means for service), the practical timetable to consider and commence an appeal is less than three weeks.

An appeal of any changes to conditions imposed to an approval commenced by a person other than the applicant or a public body must be made not later than 20 days after the notice of changed conditions is given under section 50(45) of the Planning Act (section 51(48) and (49) of the Planning Act). An applicant and public bodies may appeal changed conditions at any time before final approval.

2.1.2.7. Criteria for Approval

In considering the approval of a draft condominium description section 51(24) of the Planning Act mandates that an approval authority shall have regard, among other matters, to the health, safety, convenience and welfare of the present and future inhabitants of the municipality and:

(a) the effect of development of the proposed condominium on matters of provincial interest as referred to in section 2 of the Planning Act being:

- the protection of ecological systems, including natural areas, features and functions;
- the protection of the agricultural resources of the Province;
- the conservation and management of natural resources and the mineral resource base;
- the conservation of features of significant architectural, cultural, historical, archaeological or scientific interest;
- the supply, efficient use and conservation of energy and water;
- the adequate provision and efficient use of communication, transportation, sewage and water services and waste management systems;
- the minimization of waste;
- the orderly development of safe and healthy communities;
- the adequate provision and distribution of educational, health, social, cultural and recreational facilities;
- the adequate provision of a full range of housing;
- the adequate provision of employment opportunities;
- the protection of the financial and economic well-being of the Province and its municipalities;
- the co-ordination of planning activities of public bodies;
- the resolution of planning conflicts involving public and private interests;

- the protection of public health and safety;
 - the appropriate location of growth and development.
 - the promotion of development that is designed to be sustainable, to support public transit and to be oriented to pedestrians.
- (b)whether the proposed condominium is premature or in the public interest;
- (c)whether the plan conforms to the official plan and adjacent plans of condominium/condominium, if any;
- (d)the suitability of the land for the purposes for which it is to be subdivided;
- (e)the number, width, location and proposed grades and elevations of highways, and the adequacy of them, and the highways linking the highways in the proposed condominium with the established highway system in the vicinity and the adequacy of them;
- (f)the dimensions and shapes of the proposed lots;
- (g)the restrictions or proposed restrictions, if any, on the subject land or the buildings and structures proposed to be erected on it and the restrictions, if any, on adjoining land;
- (h)conservation of natural resources and flood control;
- (i)the adequacy of utilities and municipal services;
- (j)the adequacy of school sites;
- (k)the area of land, if any, that, exclusive of highways, is to be conveyed or dedicated for public purposes; and
- (l) the extent to which the plan’s design optimizes the available supply, means of supplying, efficient use and conservation of energy; and,
- (m) the interrelationship between the design of the proposed plan of subdivision and site plan control matters relating to any development on the land, if the land is also located within a site plan control area designated under subsection 41(2) of this Act or subsection 114 (2) of the City of Toronto Act, 2006.

2.1.2.8. Conditions of Approval

An approval authority may impose such conditions to the approval of a plan of condominium as in the opinion of the approval authority are reasonable, having regard to the nature of the development proposed, including a requirement,

- (a) that land be dedicated or other requirements met for park or other public recreational purposes under section 51.1;
- (b) that such highways be dedicated as the approval authority considers necessary;
- (c) when the proposed plan abuts on an existing highway, that sufficient land, other than land occupied by buildings or structures, be dedicated to provide for the widening of the highway to such width as the approval authority considers necessary; and
- (d) that the owner of the land enter into one or more agreements with a municipality, or where the land is in territory without municipal organization, with any minister of the Crown in right of Ontario or planning board dealing with such matters as the approval authority may consider necessary, including the provision of municipal or other services. (section 51(25) of the Planning Act)³⁸

153 L.Chung Development Co. v. Scarborough (City) (Ont. Div. Ct.) (1992) [conditions of approval requiring parking spaces to be common elements not proper for conversion]

In the case of an application for approval in respect of a building or related group of buildings containing one or more premises that is or was used for rented residential purposes, the approval authority, if it requires the applicant to have an engineer or architect or another qualified person to inspect and report on the property (pursuant to section 9(4) of the Condominium Act), may impose conditions that it considers are reasonable in light of the report (section 9(5) of the Condominium Act).

2.1.2.9. Notice of Changes to Conditions

Conditions imposed on the approval may be changed by the approval authority at any time before the approval of the final plan of condominium (section 51(44) of the Planning Act). If the conditions are changed by the authority and it is not of the opinion that the change is minor, written notice of the changes must be given within 15 days thereafter to the applicant, each person or body that made a written request for notice of changes to the conditions, a municipality or planning board having jurisdiction in the area in which the lands are situate, and to the Provincial Planning Services Branch of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing if it has made a request to be notified of changes (section 51(45) and (47) of the Planning Act). The notice of change must contain the following information:

1. A copy of the proposed changes to the conditions of draft approval.
2. A statement that the applicant or any public body may, at any time before the approval of the final plan of condominium, appeal any of the conditions of draft approval to the Ontario Municipal Board by filing a notice of appeal with the approval authority.
3. The last date for filing a notice of appeal of the conditions of draft approval and a statement that the notice of appeal must be filed with the approval authority, must set out the reasons for the appeal and must be accompanied by the fee required by the Ontario Municipal Board.
4. The following statement:
Only individuals, corporations or public bodies may appeal decisions in respect of a proposed plan of condominium to the Ontario Municipal Board. A notice of appeal may not be filed by an unincorporated association or group. However, a notice of appeal may be filed in the name of an individual who is a member of the association or group on its behalf

2.1.2.10. Agreements

The conditions of approval may include a requirement to enter into one or more agreements with a responsible municipality or the approval authority (section 51(25)(d) of the Planning Act). Municipalities are authorized to enter into such agreements (section 51(26) of the Planning Act) and if, as is usual, they are registered against title to the condominium lands such agreements are enforceable against the owner (declarant) and subsequent owners (i.e. unit purchasers).

Agreements imposed as conditions of approval will deal with matters that, among other things, relate to the implementation of the draft plan and matters on-going after the plan of condominium is registered. Such matters as the construction of municipal services, conveyances of easements or land to the municipality, noise warnings requirements, and inspection of works and services, are examples the myriad of matters that may be addressed in an agreement.

2.1.2.11. Appeals

2.1.2.11.1. Notice of Appeal

The time frames for appeals in the various circumstances which may arise are set out above. Any and all notice of appeal must set out the reasons for the appeal, and be accompanied the appeal fee prescribed under the Ontario Municipal Board Act (presently $125.00) (see (section 51(39), (43), and (48) of the Planning Act)). The reasons for appeal set out in the notice must disclose an apparent land use planning ground upon which the Ontario Municipal Board could give or refuse approval or determine the question as to the condition(s) appealed. Otherwise, the appeal is open to summary dismissal by the Ontario Municipal Board (section 51(53) of the Planning Act).

2.1.2.11.2. Approval Authority Duties on Receipt of an Appeal

When an approval authority receives an appeal it must:

1. Compile a record containing:
 1. The original or a certified copy of the application received by the approval authority.
 2. The original or a certified copy of the prescribed information and material received by the approval authority under subsection 51 (17) of the Planning Act.
 3. If applicable, the original or certified copy of any other information and material that the applicant was required to provide to the approval authority.
 4. The original or a certified copy of the notice of appeal and the date it was received.
 5. The original or a copy of all written submissions and comments received, and the date they were received.
 6. If the local municipality or planning board gave notice of the application, the original or a certified copy of the affidavit or sworn declaration described in subclause 6 (2) (b) (ii) of Regulation 544/06.
 7. If the approval authority gave notice of the application, an affidavit or sworn declaration of an employee of the approval authority certifying that the notice requirements under clause 51 (20) (a) of the Planning Act have been complied with.
 8. If the local municipality or planning board held the public meeting, the affidavits or sworn declarations described in clauses 6 (3) (b) and (c).
 9. If the approval authority held the public meeting,
 - i. an affidavit or sworn declaration of an employee of the approval authority certifying that the notice requirements and the requirement for holding a public meeting under clause 51 (20) (b) of the Planning Act have been complied with, and
 - ii. an affidavit or sworn declaration of an employee of the approval authority listing all persons and public bodies that made oral submissions at the public meeting.
 10. A copy of the minutes of the public meeting.
 11. A copy of any planning report considered by the approval authority.
2. Forward the record, the notice of appeal, and the appeal fee, to the Municipal Board within 15 days after the last day for appeal (in the case of appeals of decisions to approve/refuse, appeals of lapsing provisions, or appeals by persons other than the applicant or a public body of conditions and changed conditions), or within 15 days after the appeal was filed (in the case of an appeal by an applicant or public body relating to conditions or changed conditions) (section 51(50) of the Planning Act).

2.1.2.11.3. Dismissal of Appeals Without a Hearing

An appeal may be summarily dismissed by the Municipal Board on its own initiative or on the motion of any party to the appeal, without holding a hearing, if:

1. (a) it is of the opinion that,
 - (i) the reasons set out in the notice of appeal do not disclose any apparent land use planning ground upon which the Board could give or refuse to give approval to the draft plan of subdivision or determine the question as to the condition appealed to it,
 - (ii) the appeal is not made in good faith or is frivolous or vexatious;
 - (iii) the appeal is made only for the purpose of delay; or,
 - (iv) the appellant has persistently and without reasonable grounds commenced before the Board proceedings that constitute an abuse of process;
- (b) the appellant did not make oral submissions at a public meeting or did not make written submissions to the approval authority before it gave or refused to give approval to the plan of subdivision and, in the opinion of the Board, the appellant does not provide a reasonable explanation for having failed to make a submission;
- (c) the appellant has not provided written reasons for the appeal;
- (d) the appellant has not paid the fee prescribed under the Ontario Municipal Board Act; or
- (e) the appellant has not responded to a request by the Municipal Board for further information within the time specified by the Board (section 51(53) of the Planning Act).

2. If, in the Board’s opinion, the application to which the appeal relates is substantially different from the application that was before council at the time of its decision (section 51(53.1) of the Planning Act).

Before dismissing an appeal under section 51(53) the Municipal Board must, unless the reason for the proposed dismissal is failure to respond to a request for additional information, notify the appellant and give the appellant the opportunity to make representation on the proposed dismissal (section 51(54) of the Planning Act). The motion for dismissal may be the subject of a hearing, but may be done entirely through paper communications/submissions (section 51(54.1) of the Planning Act).

All appeals, regardless of subject matter, may be withdrawn before being heard. In all such cases the matter then stands as it would have had no appeal been commenced.

On an appeal the Municipal Board may make any decision that the approval authority could have made.

When an appeal (other than an appeal by the applicant or public body relating to conditions) is dealt with by the Municipal Board by approving a plan of condominium, the Board may direct that the final approval is to be given by the approval authority in which the land is situate (section 51(56.1) of the Planning Act). Otherwise, the final approval of the plan will be dealt with by the Municipal Board directly.

2.1.2.12. Lapsing of an Approval

In giving approval to a proposed plan of condominium an approval authority may provide that the approval lapses at the end of period specified by the authority, being not less than three years. In the event of an appeal, the period does not commence to run until the Municipal Board issues its order respecting the appeal (or the appeal is withdrawn) (section 51(32) of the Planning Act).

An approval authority may extend the period after which the approval will lapse, and may do so one or more times; however, once an approval lapses it cannot be revived (section 51(33) of the Planning Act). There is no appeal from an approval authorities refusal to extend deadline for lapsing of an approval.

In the absence of a lapsing provision the approval does not terminate, no matter how much time may pass since draft approval is given. The option to withdraw an approval of the draft plan of condominium always remains open to the approval authority (section 51(44) of the Planning Act).

2.1.2.13. Final Approval

After a draft approval, the applicant will prepare the final plan and, provided the conditions have or will be fulfilled, the approval authority will approve the final plan and it can be tendered for registration in the Land Titles office.

2.1.2.14. Exemptions from Approval

Section 9(6) through 9(10) of the Condominium Act authorize an approval authority to grant an exemption from the provisions of Sections 51 and 51.1 of the Planning Act. Such an exemption allows the condominium description to be registered without further strings provided it is accompanied by a certificate of exemption issued by the approval authority. All other requirements of the Condominium Act and regulations continue to apply.

The exemption mechanism may be useful to deal with simple standard condominiums, for example, the division of a new triplex into three units and common elements, or a simple common elements condominium, for example a common elements condominium corporation set up to govern a common access road to a small number of properties.

While the exemption authority may be thought of as for use in circumstances analogous to subdivision through the severance consent process (i.e. those which do not call for the complexity of a subdivision plan review), it is not limited in this way. An exemption can be given to condominium descriptions on the scale of hundreds of units as well as to those with, to give an extreme, two units, or to common elements condominium corporation descriptions that encompass large areas and complex facilities, or to vacant land condominium corporation containing large numbers of units.

An exemption frees a condominium description only from Planning Act type approval. The description, and all other aspects of an exempted condominium, remain subject to the requirements of the Condominium Act, as well as other applicable laws.

The only guidance which the Condominium Act gives on the criteria for granting exemptions is that the approval authority must believe ‘the exemption is appropriate in the circumstances’ (Section 9 (7)). The ‘circumstances’ will include provincial policy statements under the Planning Act, Official Plan policies, zoning, among other matters.

Although the Condominium Act does not specifically allow exemptions to be subject to conditions precedent (such as an agreement dealing with the contents of the description to be registered) the procedure may thought of as analogous to part lot control by-laws under Section 50 (7) of the Planning Act. It is common for such by-laws to be passed after one or more public controls (including agreement(s)) are in place, although there is no specific authority for such in the Planning Act.

It should be noted that, like a decision respecting a part lot control exemption, the decision to grant or not grant an exemption to approval is not subject to appeal to the OMB.

The fact of an exemption from approval (in a case where one is granted) is evidenced by a Certificate of Exemption as provided for by section 9(3)(b) of the Condominium Act. At the present time, no form of certificate has been prescribed.

Parkland

An approval authority may impose as a condition of approval of a plan of condominium that land in an amount not exceeding, in the case of a plan proposed for commercial or industrial purposes, 2 per cent and in all other cases 5 per cent of the land included in the plan shall be conveyed to the local municipality for park and other recreational purposes (or dedicated for such purposes if the land is not in a local municipality) (section 51.1 (1)) of the Planning Act).

Should such a condition be imposed and the municipality has an official plan that contains specific policies relating to the provision of lands for park or other public recreational purposes, the municipality, in the case of a subdivision proposed for residential purposes, may, in lieu of such conveyance, require that land included in the plan be conveyed to the municipality for park or other public recreational purposes at a rate of one hectare for each 300 dwelling units proposed or at such lesser rate as may be determined by the municipality (section 51.1 (2)) of the Planning Act).

The municipality may, in lieu of accepting the conveyance of land, require the payment of money by the owner of the land to the value of the land otherwise required to be conveyed. If such an alternative is opted for by the municipality, the value of the land shall, for the purposes of the payment, be determined as of the day before the draft approval of the plan of condominium (section 51.1 (4)) of the Planning Act). In the event of a dispute as to the value of the land, the applicant may pay the amount required by the municipality under protest and make an application, within 30 days of the payment, to the Municipal Board to resolve the dispute (section 51.1 (5) and section 42 (12) of the Planning Act).

It should be noted that section 42(7) of the Planning Act, which in certain circumstances exempts land from a parks dedication requirement if they have been subject to a previous parks conveyance or payment, is inapplicable to plans of condominium (as it is inapplicable to plans of subdivision) (section 51.1(5)).

2.2.1. Basic Principles

2.2.2. Units and Common Elements

Critical to the essential make-up of every condominium property are common elements and (with the exception of common elements condominiums) units. The former exist as an adjunct to the units, without which the latter could not properly function or exist. In addition to these two critical components, a condominium’s property may also include interests appurtenant to the land of the condominium, such as easements or rights of way over adjoining lands (section 1(1), definition of ‘property’). Alternatively, interests of the latter type may be an asset of the corporation (section 18) in which case they are not part of the condominium ‘property’ as defined by the Condominium Act).

Units and common elements are real property for all purposes (section 10). Ownership of a unit includes ownership of an undivided interest in the common elements as a tenant in common with the other unit owners (section 11(2)), with the proportion of the interest applicable to each unit being set out in the declaration (section 11(3) and section 7(2)(c)). These two ownerships cannot be separately conveyed or otherwise separated (section 11(4)). Ownership of a unit and ownership of the interest in the common elements are irrevocably linked. The common elements themselves cannot be partitioned or divided (as is possible if the owner’s tenancy in common was not governed by the Condominium Act) (section 11(5)).

Each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of the owner’s unit, subject to the Condominium Act, the declaration, and the by-laws (section 11(1))¹. In addition, part of the common elements may be designated for the exclusive use of one or more units. All owners may make reasonable use of the common elements (section 116)².

2.2.3. Easements Which Exist for All Condominiums

The Condominium Act lays in place a basic framework of fundamental easements which are applicable to all condominiums and which cannot be diluted or denied by the declaration or by-laws of a corporation.

2.2.3.1. Easements Appurtenant to Each Unit

The following easements are appurtenant to each unit and are for the benefit of the owner of the unit and the corporation:

² 361 York Condominium Corp. No. 288 v. Harbour Square Commercial Inc., (1988) [illegal parking not reasonable]

251- Carleton Condominium Corp. No.279 and Rochon et al. (1987) [satellite dish on roof ordered removed, permission of declarant/corporation irrelevant, no approval by owners, no reference in disclosure statement]

174 and 175 Marafioti v. Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 775 (1994/1997) [deck ordered removed from common elements]

- An easement for the provision of a service through the common elements or any other unit.
- An easement for support by all buildings and structures necessary for providing support to the unit.
- If a building or a part of a building moves after registration of the declaration and description or after having been damaged and repaired but has not been restored to the position occupied at the time of registration of the declaration and description, an easement for exclusive use and occupation over the space of the other units and common elements that would be space included in the unit if the boundaries of the unit were determined by the position of the buildings from time to time after registration of the description and not at the time of registration.
- If a corporation is entitled to use a service or facility in common with another corporation, an easement for access to and for the installation and maintenance of the service or facility over the land of the other corporation, described in accordance with the regulations made under the Condominium Act (section 12(1)).

2.2.3.2. Easements Appurtenant to the Common Elements

The following easements are appurtenant to the common elements:

- An easement for the provision of a service through a unit or through a part of the common elements of which an owner has exclusive use.
- An easement for support by all units necessary for providing support (section 12(2)).

2.2.4. Encumbrances Existing at the Time of Registration

A newly registered condominium may, and most likely will, have one or mortgages registered on title at the time the declaration and description are registered. These may relate to the declarant's acquisition financing for the land purchase, construction financing for buildings and other improvements, and the like. While mortgages such as the foregoing will have provisions in them dealing with payment, discharge, and so forth, the Condominium Act imposes two rules on such encumbrances which ensure that unit owners (whether they are arm's length purchasers, the declarant, or mortgagee's in possession (section 1(1) definition of 'owner')) can gain unencumbered title to their unit and common interest:

1. The registration of the declaration and description removes the enforceability of the encumbrance from the common elements, while maintaining it against all the units and the common interests (section 13). This ensures that default in respect of a unit encumbered by the mortgage cannot affect the common interest in the common elements on an owner whose unit is free of the encumbrance.
2. An owner may discharge the portion of the encumbrance that is applicable to the owner's unit and common interest by paying the amount of principle and interest attributable to the owner. This portion is the product obtained when the owner's proportionate share of the common interest is multiplied by the sum of the principle and interest (section 14(1)). On the payment, the encumbrancer is obliged to give the owner a discharge of the encumbrance as it respects the owner's unit and common interest (section 14(2)). Bearing in mind that the mortgagee will have consented to the registration of the condominium (section 7(2)(b)), the shares of common interests allocated to the units must have been agreeable to it, and therefore should reflect a fair and reasonable proxy for the related partial discharge. In any event, this provision ensures the ability to discharge the mortgage. A similar provision existed under the old legislation with one potentially substantial difference. The Condominium Act fixes the discharge payment to the 'principal and interest' owing, while the old legislation spoke of the 'sum claimed' by the mortgagee (section 7(9)). A mortgage which contained a prepayment penalty could require payment of a share of same. The Condominium Act is not clear on whether accelerated interest (due to a prepayment) is 'interest' (presumably it is; however, the individual context must be examined), but it is clear that nothing other than principle and interest need be paid to secure a discharge.

2.2.5. Assessment and Property Taxation

For municipal tax purposes a condominium property is divided into ‘parcels’ corresponding to the units and their respective common interests (section 15(1)).

The common elements of a condominium other than a common elements condominium are not a parcel(s) and therefore are not the subject of a tax bill. Each unit owner will receive a tax bill for the owner’s unit(s) and related common interests (and the latter will, together with the shares of the other owners, sum to the value intrinsic to the common elements as a whole). There are two exceptions to the foregoing rule:

1. Any part of the common elements of a corporation other than a common elements condominium corporation:
 - which is leased for business purposes
 - on which the lessee carries on an undertaking for gain; and
 - is in the commercial property class prescribed under the Assessment Act (section 5 of Assessment Act regulation 298 of 98 as amended);

will be constituted as a separate parcel for assessment and taxation (section 15(3)); and

2. The common elements of a common elements condominium corporation will form a separate single parcel of assessment and taxation, with the taxes forming part of the condominium’s common expenses (section 15(4)).

2.2.5.1. Tax Classes

Under the Assessment Act properties are divided into different classes depending upon the nature of the use of the land and buildings as prescribed by the Assessment Act. Units in commercial and industrial condominiums will have a prescribed tax rate, as will units in residential condominiums. Prior to 2003 the rate of taxation of residential units in larger (7 or more residential units) condominiums were distinctly advantaged over their counterparts in the non-condominium rental market. In this regard, the Assessment Act then recognized such condominium residential units as being in the same class as single family homes, duplexes, and multi-unit properties up to 6 units. Ontario Regulation 363/03 removed this inequity and now multi-unit residential properties of 7 units or more, whether they are condominiums or not, are in separate class known as the Multi-Residential Property Class (section 4 of Assessment Act regulation 298 as amended).

A declarant’s act of registering a declaration and description for a condominium converts the declarant’s freehold (or leasehold in the case of a leasehold condominium) interest in the property into a freehold (or leasehold) interest in the units and common elements, brings the property under the governance of the Condominium Act, and creates the condominium corporation (section 2(2)).

Unlike business corporations such as those incorporated under Ontario’s Business Corporations Act, a condominium corporation has no share capital and, consequently, no shareholders. Unlike other types of corporations, the Corporations Information Act (which obliges corporations to record certain information on the public record) does not apply to condominium corporations (section 5(4) and section 2 of 48 of 01). A condominium corporation must have a seal with its name appearing on it (section 16). Like a non-share capital corporation incorporated under Ontario’s Corporations Act, a condominium corporation has ‘members’, namely the unit owners, who collectively own the corporation in their respective proportions of the common interest (section 5(1)); however, the parallel ends at that point. The Corporations Act does not apply to condominium corporations (section 5(3)). All of the rights, duties, obligations, and authority associated with condominium corporations are found exclusively in the Condominium Act.¹

2.3.1. Function of the Corporation

The function of the corporation and its relationship to the owner’s and their interests are usefully understood in the context of the general objects and duties of the corporation as mandated by the Condominium Act. In particular:

2.3.1.1. The objects of the corporation are to manage the property, and the assets of the corporation, on behalf of the owners (section 17(2)).

2.3.1.2. The general duties of the corporation are:

1. To control, manage and administer the common elements, and the assets of the corporation (section 17(2))².
2. To take all reasonable steps to ensure that
 - the unit owners;
 - the occupiers of units;
 - the lessees of the common elements; and,
 - the agents and employees of the corporation, comply with

- the Condominium Act;
- the declaration;
- the by-laws; and,
- the rules (section 17(3))¹,

as is their obligation under section 119.

2.3.2. Right of Entry to Units

The familiar old chestnut that ‘a persons’ home is their castle’ does not have full application in the context of a condominium even though, as a general rule, an owner has exclusive ownership and use of their unit (section 11(1)). For example, a portion of an owner’s interest is in the shared common elements (section 11(2)), an owner’s use of their unit is subject to one or more constraints set out in the four controls listed above (section 17(3)), and a corporation has the general authority to enter a unit or exclusive use common area, on reasonable notice at any reasonable time, to perform the it’s objects and duties or to exercise it’s powers. A corporation may apply for and receive orders of the court directing compliance should a person not attend to their responsibilities (section 134).

2.3.3. Property

While a condominium corporation does not own the common elements (the unit owners do), it may have ownership of real and personal property provided such is acquired for purposes consistent with the objects and duties of the corporation (section 18(1)). By way of example, the condominium may own a unit in the condominium that is used for the corporation’s purposes (i.e. a guest suite for visitors to units), or may have a leasehold interest in lands off the condominium property (i.e. used for parking for unit owners). Such real property will be an asset of the corporation (section 18(1.1)) which is shared among the owners in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests (section 18(2)).

The corporation may also have an easement interest in lands outside the property, or the common elements themselves may be subject to easement(s) benefiting other lands. Typically these will relate to other property owned by the declarant, or will result from conditions imposed by an approval authority and will be described in, and created by, the declaration and description and their registration (section 20). Such easements are created by the registration and separate deeds or other documents are not required to effect their creation (section 20(3)).

2.3.4. Dealings with the Common Elements

The corporation may be by-law:

- Lease a part of the common elements (except a part which is exclusively used by less than all of the owners);
- Grant or transfer an easement or licence through the common elements; or,
- Release an easement that is part of the common elements (section 21(1))².

While any such action will affect the owner’s interests as if they had themselves executed the lease etc. (section 21(2)), the owner’s will have input as the by-law will not be effective until the owners of a majority of the units of the corporation vote in favour of confirming it (section 56(10)).

² 115 Eglinton Place Inc. v. Ontario (Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations) (2000) [under old legislation corporation could grant a release of an easement]

2.3.5. Legal action in Relation to the Common Elements

In addition to the authority to make application to court to enforce adherence to the corporation's constitution (i.e. the Condominium Act, declaration, by-laws, rules) and agreements (section 134) all condominium corporations have the authority:

- to commence and complete action for damages and costs in respect of damage to common elements, the corporation's assets, or individual units¹; and,
- to commence and complete an action with respect to a contract involving the common elements or a unit, even in a case where it is not a party to the agreement (section 23(1))².

Unless the action is to:

- enforce a lien for common expenses;
- to enforce compliance with the constitution; or,
- is an action commenced in the Small Claims Court (i.e. $10,000.00 or less);

it is a condition precedent to the action's commencement that written notice of general nature of the action be given to all persons in the record of owners maintained under section 47(2) (section 23(2))³.

The legal costs of an action of the above type will be borne by the owners on whose behalf the action is commenced in the proportion that their interests are affected (section 23(3)). Where only one owner's interests are involved the effect of this section is clear; however, if more than one owner's interests are involved the measure of the relative degree by which their interest 'are affected' will be subjective, as the Condominium Act provides no formula for such a determination.

Money judgments in favour of the corporation (as opposed to a judgment in a representative action brought for an owner) are an asset of the corporation (section 23(4)).

On the other side of the coin, the corporation may be sued as the representative of the owners of the units in any matter relating to the common elements or assets of the corporation (section 23(5)). A judgment of the payment of money against the corporation is also a judgment against each owner for a portion of the judgment, determined by the proportionate share of the common interests (section 23(6)).

2.3.6. Expropriation Notices

In the event part of the common elements are subject to expropriation the expropriating authority must serve the expropriation documents on the corporation and, where the part is also an exclusive use common element, on the owner(s) having the exclusive use (section 24(1)). The corporation in turn must, within 15 days of receiving the documents, notify all persons on the record of owners maintained under section 47(2) that it has been served and make a copy of the documents available for inspection (section 24(2)). Expropriation settlement rights and the proceeds of expropriation are transferred to the corporation (section 24(3)). Section 126(2) provides that the proceeds are to be shared by the owners in accordance with their common interest proportions, except in the case of expropriated exclusive use common elements (in such a case the proceeds are divided among the exclusive use owners according to their interests (section 126(3))).

2.3.7. Planning Act Notices

If the corporation is served with a notice issued under the Planning Act (i.e. notice of a public meeting for a proposed zoning amendment for neighbouring property) it must, within 15 days of the service, notify all persons in the record of owners (section 47(2)) that it has been served with a notice and make a copy available for inspection (section 25).

2.3.8. Occupier Liability

Section 26 provides that the corporation, not the owners, is deemed to be the occupier of the common elements for the purpose of determining liability resulting from breach of the duties of an occupier (section 26)¹. In this regard, section 3 of the Occupiers Liability Act states:

“An occupier of premises owes a duty to take such care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that persons entering on the premises, and the property brought on the premises by those persons are reasonably safe while on the premises.

Notwithstanding this allocation of responsibility, any judgment against the corporation for damages due to a breach of its duties as an occupier of land would also be a judgment against the owners in proportion to their respective proportion of the common interests (section 23(6)).

In examining the topic of condominium directors and officers, it should be borne in mind that the directors of the first board (i.e. those appointed by the declarant under section 42) in some respects stand apart from those subsequently elected. For example, the first board appointees may be replaced and removed only at the direction of the declarant (section 42(2)) and may during a limited time pass resolutions by written vote without a meeting (section 42(5) and 42(6)).

2.4.1. What is the Responsibility of the Board of Directors?

The mandate of the board of directors is to ‘manage the affairs of the corporation’ (section 27(1)).

To “manage” is to exercise a supervisory/executive/administrative/organizational role. Managers direct, and others perform to the direction. The word “affairs” could be readily replaced with the word ‘business’ and still convey the intent, although ‘affairs’ emphasizes that there are a range of subjects to be managed.

Practically speaking, the task of managing condominium affairs will vary from condominium to condominium depending upon the complexity of the property, assets, and operation. For example, a small townhouse condominium (i.e. 16 units) may not have a property manager per se, and the board (or delegated member) may be ‘hands-on’ and hire contractor(s) for specific job(s) after obtaining competing quotes. A condominium of 300 apartment units will almost certainly have a full-time property manager, who may have authority, for example, to engage contractors and, in any event, serves as a layer between the board and the repetitive and routine tasks connected with management.

While the expression ‘the bucks stops here’ is not entirely applicable to the board of a condominium (owner’s are entitled to initiate some matters in default of the board acting or on their own), it is the body primarily responsible for ensuring the provisions of the Condominium Act, the declaration, by-laws, and rules are respected and will be the focal point for dissatisfaction of any and all owners.

All of the corporation’s by-laws must be passed by the board.

2.4.2. Directors

2.4.2.1. Qualifications to Become a Director

Anyone is qualified to become a director unless they are mentally incompetent, an undischarged bankrupt, or under 18 years of age (section 29(1)). To be clear, there is no requirement that a director own a unit in the condominium. The by-laws (but not the declaration (section 7(4)) may impose other qualifications (section 56(1)(a)).

2.4.2.2. Loss of Office

A director who:

- Becomes an undischarged bankrupt;
- Becomes mentally incompetent;
- Allows a certificate of lien to be registered against a unit owned by the director and does not obtain it's discharge within 90 days of the lien's discharge, immediately, automatically, and irrevocably ceases to be a director (section 29(2))

2.4.2.3. Invalid Elections and Appointments

In order to ensure that the act of a board can be relied on by all concerned, including third parties without knowledge of the corporation's affairs, the acts of both directors and officer are valid despite any defect that may afterwards be discovered in their election, appointment, or qualifications (section 37(2)).

2.4.2.4. Consent

No person can be elected or (in the case of the declarant-appointed first board) appointed to the board unless they consent (section 30(1)). Consent is deemed to be given if the person is present at the meeting when elected or appointed and does not refuse to act as a director (section 30(2)). If the person is not present at the election/appointment meeting they may supply their written consent before the meeting, or within 10 days thereafter (section 30(3)). If consent is not secured, the election of appointment of the particular director is ineffective (section 30(4)).

2.4.2.5. Number of Directors

All types of condominiums must have no less than three persons on the board (section 27(2)). The by-laws of the condominium may allow for a greater number and that greater number may be reduced (to no less than three) or increased by a subsequent by-law (section 27(3)).

2.4.3. Evolution of the Composition of the Board

2.4.3.1. The First Board and it's Enlargement

Within ten days of the registration of a condominium, the declarant will appoint a slate of persons to be directors until 50% or more of the units in the condominium are conveyed (section 42).

This initial slate of directors is, or at least may be, expanded by two directors who are elected by the owners (although it is possible that one position may only be voted on by owners who occupy their units (see below), subject to certain stipulations (see the discussion under ‘Enlargement of the First Board’ in the ‘Transfer of Control by Declarant’). These directors are ‘supernumerary’ in the sense that they will hold office despite even though their election causes the number of board members to exceed the maximum otherwise allowed (section 42(11)).

The meeting to elect the two owner-elected directors must be called on written notice to all owners and certain mortgagees sent at least 15 days before the day of the meeting (section 47(1)). The notice must include the name and address of each individual who has notified the board in writing, as of the fourth day before the notice is sent, of the intention to be a candidate in the election (section 28(2)), the place, date, and hour of the meeting, as well as the fact directors will be elected at the meeting (section 47(9)). If 50% or more of the units have been transferred by the declarant and 15% or more of the same units are owner-occupied, then the notice must state that one position on the board is reserved for voting by owners of owner-occupied units (section 28(3) and section 51(6)) and indicate which persons have notified the board in writing, as of the day before the notice is sent, that they intend to be candidates for the ‘owner-occupant-elected’ position (section 28(3)).

2.4.3.2. Owner Elected Board

The first board, as enlarged as discussed above, will hold office until the turn-over meeting called under section 43, at which time the owners will elect a new slate of directors (one of whom may be subject to the ‘owner-occupant elected’ position). The number of directors elected at the turn-over meeting will be either three, or such greater number as the by-laws provide (the need and authorization for the ‘supernumerary directors’ having passed). The basic procedure for notice and contents of notice is generally the same as for the enlargement of the first board. The meeting must be called on written notice to all owners and certain mortgagees sent at least 15 days before the day of the meeting (section 47(1)). In respect of the election the notice must include the name and address of each individual who has notified the board in writing, as of the fourth day before the notice is sent, of the intention to be a candidate in the election (section 28(2)), the place, date, and hour of the meeting, as well as the fact directors will be elected at the meeting (section 47(9)). If 50% or more of the units have been transferred by the declarant and 15% or more of the same units are owner-occupied, then the notice must state that one position on the board is reserved for voting by owners of owner-occupied units (section 28(3) and section 51(6)) and indicate which persons have notified the board in writing, as of the day before the notice is sent, that they intend to be candidates for the ‘owner-occupant-elected’ position (section 28(3)).

2.4.3.3. Term of Office

While the first board’s term of office is indefinite (being dependent upon the declarant’s timing in conveying 50% or more of the units), all board members elected at and after the turnover meeting will hold office for three years or, if the by-laws so prescribe, a lesser period (section 31(1)). The only circumstance in which a director may stay in office longer than three years (or longer than the lesser period provided by the by-laws, if any) is during an interim period between the expiry of the three years (or less) and the owner’s meeting at which a successor is elected (section 31(2)).

By-laws of the corporation can provide for staggered terms for directors or the allocation of directors positions amongst certain units, provided the one owner one vote rule prevails (section 56(1)(a)).

2.4.4. Board Meetings

The board (other than the declarant-appointed first board) may only transact business of the corporation at a meeting of the board (section 32(1)). It is not possible for the board to pass resolutions, or otherwise conduct business or voting, in writing without a meeting being held or a sufficient quorum being present. Meetings may, however, be held through teleconference or other system that allows the directors to participate concurrently provided:

- The by-laws authorize such meetings
- All directors of the corporation (including those who may be absent from the teleconference meeting) consent (section 35(5)).

As with any board meeting, a teleconference board meeting must have a quorum.

2.4.4.1. Calling a Meeting

The Condominium Act provides and guarantees authority for a quorum/majority of directors at any time to call a meeting for the transaction of any business (section 35(1)). A person calling the meeting (one of the quorum/majority) must, at least ten days before the day of the meeting (unless the by-laws specify a different time frame), give written notice of the meeting to every director (section 35(2)). The notice must state the time and place of the meeting and the general nature of the business to be discussed at the meeting (section 35(3)). Attendance of a director at the meeting is deemed to be acceptance of the notice unless an objection is expressly made at the meeting (section 35(4)).

The by-laws of a condominium corporation may also have special provisions governing the calling of board meetings, including such examples as authorization to a specific officer (such as the president) to call a meeting, authorization for any director to call a meeting in the event of some event, establishment of a fixed schedule of meetings (i.e. the third Thursday of each month), and so forth (section 35(1), section 56(1)(b)).

2.4.4.2. Quorum for a Board Meeting

A quorum for a board meeting is a majority of the members of the board (section 32(2)). This representation level appears to be fixed by the Condominium Act and cannot be altered by by-law. As with any meeting, while directors may leave and enter the meeting during it’s course, a majority of the directors must continue to be present if business is to be transacted.

2.4.4.3. Removal of Directors

As noted above, a director’s position on the board will automatically terminate if one of three conditions (mental incompetence, bankruptcy, undischarged lien) exist (section 29(2)(a)). In addition, any director can be removed from office by a vote of the owners. In the case of a director elected under section 51(6) by owner-occupants, the director may be removed by a vote of 50% or more of the owner-occupants (section 51(8)). Other directors may be removed where the owners of more than 50 % of all the units in the corporation vote in favour of removal (section 33(1)).

2.4.4.4. Vacancies

If for any reason one or more persons cease to be a director(s) in mid-term, the remaining board members continue in office and may continue to transact the business at meetings provided only that a quorum of directors remains in office (section 34(1)). The remaining quorum may, on a majority vote, appoint any qualified (see above) person to fill the vacancy created on the board until the next following annual general meeting (section

¹ 270 Reiners et al. and Mercer et al. (1998) [vote of a majority of owners means a majority vote amongst the majority of owners voting]
227 Page v. Lafleche (1997) [vote to remove directors is majority of votes of a majority of owners]

34(2)). At that annual general meeting the owners must elect a person to fill the vacancy, with the term of office of the newly elected director being the balance of the previous directors' term (section 34(3)).

Vacancies created backhandedly through a by-law increasing the number of members on the board, cannot be filled by the directors then in office. Such vacancies must be filled by election at a meeting of owners with the newly elected directors term of office not commencing until the by-law (increasing the number of directors) is registered (section 35(7)).

Should the number of directors remaining in office be less than a majority of the number of directors the corporation must have (three or greater), the board cannot transact business, and must call and hold, within 30 days of losing a quorum, a meeting of owners to fill all vacancies by election (section 34(4)). Should the remaining board members not call and hold the meeting, or if there are no directors in office, any owner can call the meeting (following the procedures described above regarding notice etc.) (section 34(5)). The owner calling the meeting is entitled to be reimbursed by the corporation for all reasonable costs incurred in calling the meeting (legal advice, printing, delivery, room arrangements, etc., as and if applicable) (section 34(6)).

2.4.5. Officers

Every condominium corporation must have persons holding the offices of president and secretary (section 36(1)), or one person holding both offices (section 36(3)). While the president must also be a director, neither the secretary nor any other officer of the corporation need be a director (section 36(1)(a)). In addition to the president and secretary, the corporation may have other officers as provided by by-law or by resolution of the directors (section 36(1)); again, the same person may hold one or more offices (section 36(3)).

The president of the corporation must be elected by the directors from amongst themselves. All other officers may be either elected or appointed to office by the board (section 36(2)) with the choice of installation turning, perhaps, on whether the officer is an employee, contractor, or the like of the corporation (for example, a treasurer who is also book-keeper), in contrast to being an officer as a member of the board as well.

2.4.6. Standard of Care and Liability

2.4.6.1. Basic Duties of Directors and Officers

A common concern of directors, particularly those who may be unfamiliar with business or law or condominium governance (as condominium purchasers, who go on to be directors, may be), is their liability for acts of the corporation and having to answer to others for their own acts as directors.

As a starting point, directors and offices should take note of their basic obligations, from which there can be no withdrawal or disavowal, but adherence to which ought to be instinctive to the average person. In particular, in exercising their powers and discharging their duties all directors and officers must:

- Act honestly;
- Act in good faith; and,
- Exercise the care, diligence and skill:
 - that a reasonably prudent person would exercise;
 - in comparable circumstances (section 37(1))¹.

212 National Trust Co. v. Grey Condominium Corp. No. 36 (1995) [directors are not fiduciaries of the owners]

2.4.6.2. Exculpatory Provision for Directors Relying on the Reports of Others

A breach of any of these duties could lay a director open to liability to a person, including the corporation and owners, suffering damages in consequence of the breach of duty. The first two duties (acting honestly and in good faith) are entirely within the control of an individual director. The adequate exercise of the third duty may depend, in part, upon the performance of others. In the latter case, the ‘reasonably prudent person’s care, diligence and skill’ may well be measured against the particular director’s ability to judge the sufficiency of the work of others and to determine if the product of that work is satisfactory. For example, an reserve fund study may reach various conclusions leading to a recommended reserve fund contribution. If the conclusions based on false premises, a director may be the subject of accusations that the diligence of a reasonably prudent person would have uncovered the false premises, and caused the reports conclusions to be rejected. To avoid exposing directors to such accusations and the uncertain outcome of a civil suit based on them, the Condominium Act excepts directors (but not officers) from any liability arising from the good faith reliance (meaning, for example, the director has no knowledge to the contrary) upon:

- financial statements of the corporation that
 - the auditor in a written report; or,
 - an officer of the corporation or a manager under an agreement for the management of the property, represents to the director as presenting fairly the financial position of the corporation in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles; or
- a report or opinion of a:
 - lawyer
 - public accountant
 - engineer
 - appraiser; or,
 - other person whose profession lends credibility to the report or opinion (section 37(3)).

2.4.6.3. Indemnification

The by-laws of a corporation may (and typically do) provide that every director and every officer of the corporation is to be indemnified and saved harmless by the corporation from any liability (including costs and expenses) which a director sustains or incurs in respect of any proceeding proposed or commenced against the person in respect of anything the person has done, omitted to do or permitted in respect of the execution of the duties of office (section 38(1)(a)). In addition, if insurance is reasonably available, a corporation must purchase and maintain insurance against the foregoing risk (section 39). However, neither indemnification, nor insurance, can be available to protect a director if the person is in breach of their duty to act honestly and in good faith (section 38(2) and 39)¹.

In addition to indemnification and insurance for liability and costs relating to actions and proceedings, the by-laws of a corporation may provide for the corporation to indemnify and save harmless directors and officers from “other costs, charges and expenses that the person sustains or incurs in respect of the affairs of the corporation” (section 38(1)(b) and 39). In a sense, this provision is a catch-all, as it encompasses not only liability and costs which are incurred in other than actions and proceedings, but any other expense a director or officer may incur in respect of the corporation’s affairs. For example, an officer or director who registers a notice of lien may incur traveling expenses (to the registry office), parking charges, and registration fees. A by-law provision dealing with the foregoing would ensure the entitlement to reimbursement without any further action on the board's part.

2.4.7. Disclosures of Interest

As set out in detail below, directors and officers (collectively called 'officials' in the following discussion) of a corporation are under an obligation to declare any material interest, direct or indirect, that they may have in contracts and transaction, existing and proposed, to which the corporation is a party. The obligation is a continuing obligation such that an interest of an official which arises after a contract is entered into must still be declared. It is not an answer to a failure to declare an interest to say, for example, that the corporation is irretrievably committed to a contract and cannot withdraw regardless of the new interest or its depth. The obligation to disclose applies to officials appointed by the declarant (such as the first board members) except to the extent the transaction is part of the routine organization of the corporation affairs on inception¹, and to those elected by the owners or installed in office by the owner-elected board. In order to promote transparency in the affairs of the corporation, the disclosures of officials of their interests in contracts which the corporation has entered into, before or after the disclosure, must be described in the annual financial statements of the corporation (section 16(4) and 16 (5) of 48 of 01).

2.4.7.1. The Interest May be Direct or Indirect

An official's interest in a contract may be 'direct' or indirect' (section 40(1) and 41). A direct interest is, self-evidently, an interest which directly benefits/affects the official. For example, an official's sale of personal property to the corporation, the engagement of an official to personally carry out work for the corporation, or the lease of corporate property to an official, will give rise to a direct interest. An indirect interest is one which benefits/affects the official indirectly or, in other words, the effect comes in a roundabout way (but nonetheless comes). Using the foregoing examples, the sale of property to the corporation by a company wholly-owned by the official, the engagement of an official's company to carry out work for the corporation, or the lease of corporate property to an official's company, would all give rise to indirect interests.

2.4.7.2. The Interest Must be That of the Official

An interest that must be declared must be the interest of the official (section 40(1) and 41). In the examples given above, had the sale/engagement/lease been not with the official but with, for example, a business associate of the official, or a relative, there is no interest that is an interest of the official. The interests belong to third parties. While the official may well be sympathetic to the interests of the third party, this does not make them the official's interests.

2.4.7.3. What is an 'Interest'?

The Condominium Act does not define what 'interest' obliges disclosure by an official. Clearly a pecuniary (money) interest would qualify, whether the interest has the potential for positive or negative money consequences to the official. For example, an official who owned a painting contract business bidding on a contract for the condominium would have an interest. Securing the contract would have positive consequences (or should!). What interests may qualify which do not have a pecuniary implication must be a matter of debate, as there are no condominium legal precedents on the subject. If an official was a supporter of a particular charity which was seeking to lease space in the common elements, would an 'interest' exist which required disclosure? While 'yes' may be argued, it is suggested that predispositions, preferences, and other subjective influences on an officials mind's do not constitute 'interests'. An 'interest' should be something which gives rise to a benefit to, or avoids an impact on, the official.

156 Lambton Condominium Corp. No. 16. v. Plowright (1997)

2.4.7.4. The Interest and the Contract Must Be Material to Require Disclosure

Disclosure is not required unless both the contract and the official's interest in it are 'material' (section 40(2) and 41(3)). 'Material' implies significance, something that matters. For example, an official's ownership of a small number of shares of a public natural gas supplier bidding on a supply contract for a condominium will have an indirect interest in the proposed contract; however, the benefit to the official will be so miniscule (i.e. a 1/1,000,000th share of profits earned by the supplier from the contract) as to be immaterial to the official. The corporation's purchase of donuts for a three person directors meeting would be such a minor transaction that it should be not considered 'material' (whether they are purchased from an official or not) so as to require the disclosure procedure to be followed (imagine, if you will, the minutes of the corporation being littered with the declarations of interest of each of three directors every time donuts are brought in).

Where is the dividing line between materiality and immateriality? The simple answer is there is none and the best advice to any official is to be reminded of their duty to act honestly and in good faith (section 37). If one has to seriously think about whether or not a declaration must be made, then one should make a declaration. Legal niceties are best avoided by erring on the side of caution.

2.4.7.5. Special Case for Property Purchases

Should the contract or transaction for which the declaration of interest is made involve the purchase or sale of real or personal property by the corporation that the seller acquired within five years before the date of the of the contract or transaction, the interested official must disclose the cost of the property to the seller, to the extent the information is within the official's knowledge or control (section 40(3)).

2.4.7.6. Making the Disclosure – Method and Time

An official's disclosure of interest must be made in writing to the corporation and must set out the nature and extent of the interest (section 40(1) and section 41(1)).

In the case of director's disclosure of interests in contracts and transactions that ordinarily require board or owners approval the disclosure will be made by the director either:

- At the meeting of the board at which the contract or transaction, proposed or otherwise, is first considered (section 40(4)(a)); or,
- If the director is not interested in the contract at the date of the meeting at which it is first considered or entered into, then at the next meeting held after the director becomes so interested (section 40(4)(b) and (c)).

In the case of director's disclosure of interests in contracts and transactions which in the ordinary course of the corporation's business would not require approval by the directors or owners, an interest must be declared at the first meeting of the directors held after the director becomes aware of the contract or transaction (section 40(4)(d)).

In the case of officers of the corporation who are not directors, the declaration must be made at the first meeting of the board held after the officer becomes aware of the contract or transaction (section 41(2)).

In all cases of disclosures of interest, whether made by directors or officers, the disclosure must be entered into the minutes of the meeting of the directors at which the declaration is made (section 40(5)).

2.4.7.7. Interested Directors Not to Take Part in the Matter's Consideration

Except for two circumstances, a director with a declared/declarable interest in a contract or transaction must not:

- Be present during the discussion at a meeting;
- Vote on a vote respecting the matter; or,
- Be counted in a quorum on a vote respecting the matter (section 40(6)).

The exceptions to the above are where the director's interest in the contract or transaction:

- Is or would be limited solely to the insurance which a corporation may take out pursuant to section 39 (protecting officials from liability and costs);
- Is or would be limited solely to the remuneration as a director, officer or employee of the corporation (section 40(6)(a)); or,
- Arises or would arise solely because the director is a director, officer or employee of the declarant, if the director has been appointed to the first board by the declarant (section 40(6)(b)).

2.4.7.8. Confirmation by Owners

In order to put beyond dispute any circumstances in which, for example, a declaration of an interest is not made in accordance with the procedures prescribed, section 40(6) provides that if:

- The contract or transaction is confirmed or approved by at least two-thirds of the votes cast at a meeting of owners duly called for that purpose; and,
- The nature and extent of the director's interest in the contract or transaction are declared and disclosed in reasonable detail in the notice calling the meeting then, provided the official has acted honestly and in good faith the official will not be accountable to the corporation or to the owners for any profit or gain realized from the contract or transaction and the contract or transaction is not voidable by reason only of the directors interest.

2.5 LAWS OF GOVERNANCE – GENERAL

2.5 LAWS OF GOVERNANCE – GENERAL

2.5.1. No Dangerous Activities.....2.5-1
 2.5.2. Political Canvassers Entitled to Access.....2.5-1
 2.5.3. Compliance with the Condominium Act.....2.5-1

The Condominium Act is replete with provisions mandating, guiding, prescribing, and permitting a variety of procedures rules, principles, and the like which frame seemingly the landscape of every condominium’s governance and environment. Generally these are individually dealt with in interwoven sections of the Condominium Act; however, there are a handful of ‘boilerplate’ provisions which both focus on establishing fundamental principles and declare basic principles.

2.5.1. No Dangerous Activities

All persons in all condominiums in Ontario are prohibited from permitting a condition to exist, or to carry on an activity in a unit or in the common elements if the condition or the activity is likely to damage the property or cause injury to an individual¹ (section 117).

At first glance this prohibition may seem to be a principle that can be assumed; however, it is a striking exception from the laws which govern the relations between land-owners outside of a condominium. In the latter regard, at common law activities on one property which fall within the foregoing description could only be stopped by means of an application to court for an injunction. Simply proving a likelihood of damage or injury would not guarantee success. In the end, the remedy would be in the discretion of the court. The Condominium Act mandate would justify an enforcement order (should the alleged offender not bring the condition to an end or cease the activity voluntarily) on proof of a likelihood of damage to the property or injury (which need not be physical) to an individual. This means proof not of the certainty, or of the likelihood beyond a reasonable doubt, but the likelihood on a balance of probabilities. A disagreement over whether a condition or an activities is dangerous would be the subject of mediation and, should the mediation be ineffective, a court application (section 132(4) and section 134).

2.5.2. Political Canvassers Entitled to Access

All corporations and their employees and agents are prohibited from restricting reasonable access to the property by a candidate, or their authorized representatives, for election to:

- The House of Commons
- The Legislative Assembly of Ontario
- An office in a municipal government; or,
- An office in a school board, if access is necessary for the purpose of canvassing or distributing election material (section 118).

2.5.3. Compliance with the Condominium Act

Section 119 of the Condominium Act obliges

- All corporations
- All directors of a corporation
- All officers of a corporation

¹ 402 - Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 291 v. Lee Weeks and Earleen Crawford (2003) Actions which are a mere nuisance do not constitute the kind of activity “likely to damage the property or cause harm to an individual” sanctioned by Sec. 117; however, “glaring aggressively, ‘flipping the finger’, and using loud abusive language” may.

- All employees of a corporation
- All declarants
- All lessor of leasehold condominiums
- All owners,
- All occupiers of units¹,
- All person having an encumbrance against a unit, to comply with the Condominium Act, and the applicable declaration, by-laws and rules. Owner's are obliged to take all reasonable steps to ensure that occupier's of their unit(s) comply with the foregoing (section 119(2)), and give the triumvirate of the corporation, its owners and registered mortgagees, the right to require owners and occupants to comply (section 119(3)). In the event the condominium is not yet registered, the obligation to comply is imposed on the declarant and occupiers, with the proposed declaration, by-laws and rules being the yardstick against which compliance is measured (along with the Condominium Act itself) (section 119(4) and (5)). A breach is may be rectified by an application to court for a compliance order (section 134)².

2.6.1. Inspectors and Administrators

Ontario’s Superior Court of Justice may appoint an inspector or an administrator on application of any of the following persons:

- A corporation;
- A lessor of a leasehold condominium corporation
- An owner; or,
- A mortgagee of a unit (section 130 and 131).

The roles of these two types of court appointed officials are distinctly different but complementary.

2.6.1.1. Inspectors

The function of an inspector is to investigate and/or audit any one or more of the items that the declarant is required to give to the board at the turnover meeting and related thereto, including everything from the corporate seal, minutes book(s), agreements, bills of sale, owners, unit, and employee records, warranties, plans, financial records, disclosure statement, and so forth, as well as current records (financial and otherwise), and investigate the affairs of any person who receives money on behalf of a corporation (section 130(1)(a) to (d)). Following the authorized investigation(s) the inspector must report to the applicant and the corporation on the inspector’s activities (section 130(4)(a)). On receipt of an inspector’s report the corporation must send a copy to all owners (section 132(5)).

The court’s discretion on an application to appoint an inspector is limited only to the extent that it must satisfied the application is made in good faith and that it is in the best interests of the applicant (section 130(2)). Should these conclusions be reached and the order given, the appointed inspector has all the powers of a commission under Part II of the Public Inquiries Act (section 130(3)). A court order appointing an inspector must set a time within which the inspector is to report and set out the activities the inspector must perform (section 130(4)(a)) and may make an order as to the costs of the investigation or audit (section 130(4)(b))¹.

2.6.1.2. Administrators

The function of an administrator is to exercise court given power or take over one or all of the powers and duties of condominium board (section 131(3)). In an extreme example, a court could turn over the entire management and administration of a condominium over to an administrator. On the other hand, it is possible for an administrator's appointment to be narrowly focused (i.e. to take over the board's powers and duties regarding the administration of a shared facilities agreement with another corporation).

The only limit to the court's discretion to make an order appointing an administrator is that it must be of the opinion that it would be just or convenient, having regard to the scheme of the Condominium Act and the best interests of the owners (section 131(2)). In addition to specifying the administrators powers, and the powers and duties transferred from the board, an order may contain directions and terms (section 131(3)(c)). It is open to an administrator to apply to the court at any time for opinion, advice or direction of the court on any question regarding the management or administration of the corporation (section 131(4)).

The test found in section 131 of the Act for the appointment of an administrator applies equally to the consideration of the administrator's discharge.¹

2.6.2. Mediation and Arbitration

Mediation is a process intended to induce the resolution of a dispute in an informal, non-legalistic, form, with the mediator acting not as judge per se, but as a person striving to facilitate a settlement of the issue between the parties. Mediation is not a binding process. If the mediator fails to bring the opposite parties together, the issue is left unresolved and the parties are no worse, and no better, off. Arbitration is a quasi-judicial process, in which one or more persons are charged with determining the outcome of the dispute after receiving evidence and representations by the parties. An arbitration can be simple and straightforward, decided by a single person, or equivalent to a civil trial and before three arbitrators. The arbitration process is governed by Ontario's Arbitration Act which, among other things, makes the final decision of the arbitrator(s) the equivalent of a court order.

Mediation and arbitration has been part of the dispute resolution process in Ontario, nationally, and internationally for decades. In the business and regulatory arena, contracts, leases, labour relations, and a host of other matters have long been the subject of these extra-judicial means of resolving differences. In recent years, with a judicial system creaking under the weight of a workload unmatched by resources, a rising sophistication generally with alternate dispute resolution, and a recognition that extra-judicial methods of resolving differences are expeditious, relatively cost effective, and fair, alternate dispute resolution has become ubiquitous and a mandatory pre-condition before the judicial process is fully engaged².

The Condominium Act fills a void in the old legislation by introducing alternate dispute resolution as a required process in the specific, but broad-ranging, circumstances set out below:

2.6.2.1. Disputes Regarding Agreements

In this regard, any disagreements between parties to any of the following agreements, must be submitted to mediation and arbitration:

1. An agreement between a declarant and a corporation.
2. An agreement between two or more corporations³.
3. An agreement described in section 98(1)(b) of the Condominium Act (respecting additions etc. by an owner to the common elements) between a corporation and an owner.
4. An agreement between a corporation and a person for the management of the property (section 132(1) and 132(2)).

³ 404- Lanark Condominium Corporation Number 10 v. 105 North Street Limited [The arbitration provisions of a joint use/shared facilities agreement are not applicable to the question of whether a easement validly existed before the registration of a declaration and description.]

2.6.2.2. Disputes Between the Declarant and Corporation Regarding the Budget Statement

All disagreements between the declarant and the corporation respecting the budget statement for the first year after registration or the declarant's obligation to make good any shortfall must be submitted to mediation and arbitration (section 132(3)).

2.6.2.3. Disputes Between the Corporation and Owners Regarding the Declaration, By-Laws and Rules

All declarations are deemed to contain a provision requiring that every disagreement between the corporation and the owners with respect to the declaration, the by-laws, or the rules must be submitted to mediation and arbitration for resolution (section 132(4)).

2.6.3.1. Mediation

2.6.3.1.1. Engaging the Mediation Process

As set out above, disputants are mutually obligated to mediate/arbitrate differences if the applicable circumstances exist. In all cases, mediation must take place, or attempted, before the disagreement moves on to arbitration. The Condominium Act does not contain detail on how the mediation process is commenced; however, it is clear that either, or any, disputant may initiate the process, and that only one person mediates (two or more is not provided for, nor would it be sensible). A workable procedure would be to prepare and deliver a letter to the opposite disputant(s) providing notice that the dispute must be mediated and proposing one or more specific persons to be the mediator. The proposed mediators should have been contacted by the proposing disputant to determine availability and charges (if any). The opposite disputant(s) should reply by selecting one of the initiating disputants nominees or proposing other person(s) to be mediator. Subject to both parties settling the terms (i.e. payment) of engagement with the selected mediator, the ball will be passed to that person to endeavour to obtain a settlement with respect to the subject of the disagreement (section 132(5)).

2.6.3.1.2. No Agreement on Mediator

The Condominium Act does not provide for a mechanism to break a failure of the opposite disputants to agree on a mediator. In the event of such a happening, the mediation will simply be skipped; however, it is only the passage of 60 days after the parties submitted the disagreement to mediation which will allow the disputants to move to mediation (section 132(1)(b)(i)) by one of the disputants commencing the arbitration process (see below). Although the Condominium Act is not clear on when the parties 'submit the disagreement to mediation', a reasonable interpretation is that this is the day the initiating disputant notifies the opposite disputant of the initiation of the process and that disputant's proposed mediator or alternates.

2.6.3.1.3. Mediation

Should the disputants agree on the mediator the process then is turned over to the appointed mediator to confer with the parties and endeavour to obtain a settlement (section 132(5)). The mediator is not obliged to search out facts but clearly may receive any information which the disputants may provide during the conference(s) (which may take place in the presence of both/all disputants and/or in separate conferences). There is no requirement to hold a 'hearing session', or even to meet. The mediator can confer with the disputants in any convenient and effective means, whether in person (likely) or teleconference. The objective is to reach a settlement, not to have a solomonic process. Informality is expected, and diplomacy and fairness desired from the mediator.

There is no time limit imposed on the mediator to complete the mediation (successfully or not) and it is in the mediator's discretion to determine that further mediation is fruitless and the mediation must be regarded as having failed. Then the latter determination is made, the mediator delivers a notice to the disputants notifying them that the mediation has failed. Thirty (30) days after such notice is given, any disputant may initiate the arbitration process (section 132(1)(b)(ii)).

2.6.3.1.4. Fees and Expenses of Mediation

There is no prohibition on disputants agreeing beforehand on how the fees and expenses of the mediation will be dealt with as between them and such should be considered (although it is recognized that agreement on this topic is unlikely when a larger dispute is in the foreground). Clearly this topic will be pertinent as and when settlement becomes a reality and, in this regard, the Condominium Act requires that the sharing of the mediators fees and expenses be dealt with in any settlement reached. If no settlement is reached, it is up to the mediator to apportion the costs between the disputants and to notify them of the division in the notice advising of the mediations failure (section 132(6)).

2.6.3.1.5. Record of Settlement

Should a mediation result in a settlement between the disputants the mediator is required to make a written record of the settlement which shall form part of the agreement or matter that was the subject of the mediation. The result is thus binding on the disputants (section 132(7)).

2.6.2.2. Arbitration¹

Should a mediation never get off the ground due to a failure to agree on a mediator, or in the event of failure of the mediation, a disputant may initiate the arbitration process 60 days after the mediation was first submitted (in the first case) or 30 days after the mediator's notice of failure is given, in the second case.

Arbitrations are governed by Ontario's Arbitrations Act which contains detailed protocols and rules on how the arbitration is commenced, conducted, and completed. Reference should be had to the Arbitrations Act for full information, however, the following summarizes the key features:

- The arbitration is conducted by one arbitrator unless the disputants mutually agree to a larger number (section 9);
- In the event of failure of the disputants to agree on the identity of the arbitrator the question may be decided by a judge on application of one of the parties (section 10);
- The arbitrator must disclose any circumstance that suggest a reasonable apprehension of bias (section 11);
- In an arbitration the parties must be treated equally and fairly and must be given an opportunity to present and respond to a case (section 19);
- The arbitrator determines the procedure to be following (section 20) and the time and place for the hearing (section 22);
- Sections 14, 15 and 16 (protection of witnesses, evidence at hearings, notice of facts and opinions) of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act apply to the arbitration (section 21);
- The parties submit statements which define their positions (section 25);
- The arbitrator can appoint an expert if needed (section 28);
- An arbitral tribunal must decide the dispute in accordance with law, including equity, and may order specific performance, injunctions and other equitable remedies (section 31);
- The decision of the arbitrator is binding on the disputants (section 37);
- An arbitration decision can be appealed on a question of law (section 45) or set aside on application to the court on one of several grounds including that a party was not treated equally or fairly (section 46);
- The arbitrator may award costs of the arbitration (section 54);
- An arbitration award may be enforced by application to court (section 50).

Disagreements with respect to the Act itself are not required to be submitted to mediation/arbitration.]

2.6.3. Compliance Orders

A keystone of condominium life is that all owner's are guided and governed by the same set of 'laws'. These range from the prescriptions of the Condominium Act, to the legislation unique to the particular condominium, namely the declaration, by-laws and rules. Everyone subject to these 'laws' are obliged to respect their edicts and directives and, in some cases, ensure others under their control do likewise, and are entitled to expect others to do the same. While 'laws' set the standards, there must also be an enforcement mechanism which guarantees that differences can be resolved, and respect for the 'laws' obtained, at the initiative of the persons entitled.

Section 134 of the Condominium Act provides that any one of:

- An owner¹;
- An occupier of a proposed unit;
- A corporation;
- A declarant;
- A lessor of a leasehold condominium; or,
- A mortgagee of a unit to apply for a court order enforcing compliance with any provision of²:

- The declaration¹
- The by-laws;
- The rules; or,
- An agreement between two or more condominium corporations for the mutual use, provision or maintenance of facilities or services of any of the parties to the agreement (section 134(1)).

It should be noted that occupiers and lessees of registered units, parties to agreements other than those above (i.e. an insurance trustee or manager) are not capable of making such an application in their own right.

It is a pre-condition to making an application that the mediation and arbitration processes (see below) are not available (unless the applicant has failed to obtain compliance using those processes) (section 134(2)). Bearing in mind that mediation and arbitration are essentially directed at resolving disagreements (i.e. the issue is about whether something does or does not constitute the violation of a by-law) rather than obtaining enforcement (i.e. an activity clearly violates a by-law but the person causing the violation refuses to comply), a court application would likely be appropriate in any case where the facts and ‘laws’ are clear.

A court may, in addition to granting an order for compliance, require persons named in the order to pay

- Damages incurred by the applicant as a result of the acts of non-compliance; and
- Cost incurred by the applicant in obtaining the order (section 134(3)).

Where an application seeks an order to terminate a lease of a unit for residential purposes the court may only grant the relief sought if:

- The lessee is in contravention of a previous court order directing compliance with ‘laws; or,
- The lessee is required to pay common expense contributions (due to the owners default in doing so) and is in default (section 134(4)).

Any award of damages or costs obtained by a corporation in a compliance order, together with any additional costs to the corporation in obtaining the order, must be added to the common expenses for the unit and must be paid in a time frame which the corporation may set (failing which a lien would be registered) (section 134(5))².

407- Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 1385 et. Al v. Skyline Executive Properties Inc. et al (2005) [Section 134(5) of the 1998 Act allows a condo. corp. to lien a unit for its legal and non-legal costs above and beyond costs ordered to be paid by the Court, as well as the latter costs, provided those additional costs were incurred in obtaining the order of the Court (these would not, for example, include the costs of enforcing the order). Such costs include the costs of maintaining an order on appeal.

- An owner;
- A corporation;
- A declarant; or,
- A mortgagee,

is or threatens to be:

- Oppressive; or,
- Unfairly prejudicial

to the applicant, or unfairly disregards the applicants interests, the court can make an order to ‘rectify the matter’ (section 135(1) and (2))¹. In all cases the court retains a discretion to grant or refuse an application for compliance.² A factor will be the quality and weight of the evidence (which would be in written form)³.

An order of this nature can include an order prohibiting the conduct referred to in the application and, most significantly, an order requiring the payment of compensation (section 135(3)). It should be noted that compensation is not to be confused with damages. While compensation may include damages, it could also include a payment for inconvenience and the like. For example, a unit owner who suffered through weeks of noise due to loud music in a unit (which violated a noise regulation in the rules) despite complaints lodged with and ignored by the offending unit owner could receive a payment reflecting a fair sum for the period of violation.

A application to court under section 135 need not first proceed through the mediation/arbitration procedure.⁴

2.6.5. False and Misleading Statements

Section 133 of the Condominium Act enjoins a declarant from:

- making a material statement or providing material information that is false, deceptive or misleading; or
- omitting a material statement or material information⁵, in any statement or information the declarant is required to provide under the Condominium Act.

Any breach of the above duty exposes a declarant to an application by a corporation or an owner to recover damages for any loss sustained as a result of reliance on the statement (section 133(2))⁶.

- not more than $100,000.00 if the offender is a corporation; or,
- not more than $25,000.00 if the offender is person who is not a corporation (section 137(1)).

A director or officer of a corporation (condominium or otherwise) who knowingly causes, authorizes, permits, participates in or acquiesces in the commission by the corporation of an of the above offences commits an independent offence (section 137(3)).

In addition to entering a conviction and imposing a fine, a court presiding over a conviction may make an order for compliance; however, the court must have jurisdiction otherwise given (section 137(4)).

2.6.7. Limitation Period for Offences

A special limitation period is placed on the commission of the offences noted above being the second anniversary of the day on which the facts that gave rise to the offence were discovered (section 137(3)).

2.7 AMENDING THE DECLARATION AND DESCRIPTION

2.7 AMENDING THE DECLARATION AND DESCRIPTION

2.7.1. Amendments the Board Can Do On It's Own.....	2.7-1
2.7.2. Amendments Which Do Not Require Consent of the Owners But Require Third Party Endorsement.....	2.7-1
2.7.2.1. Application to Court By the Corporation or an Owner.....	2.7-1
2.7.2.2. Application to the Director of Titles by the Corporation or an Interested Person.....	2.7-2
2.7.3. Amendments Requiring the Consent of the Owners.....	2.7-2
2.7.4. Minimum Level of Owner's Written Consent.....	2.7-3
2.74.1. Changes Requiring Written Consent of 90% of the Unit Owners.....	2.7-3
2.74.2. Changes Requiring Written Consent of 80% of the Unit Owners.....	2.7-3
2.7.5. General.....	2.7-3

A declaration contains fundamental information and direction on the governance of a condominium, and a description contains fundamental information on the physical make-up of a condominium. With the exception of amendments consequential on the creation of a phase for a phased condominium, amendments to either the declaration or description (or both) are dependent on the navigation of procedures which are designed to ensure the proposed amendments achieve an adequate consensus amongst the owners, excepting technical changes which may require external approval before being effective. The criteria which will apply to the amendment procedure will depend on the nature of the change being made.

2.7.1. Amendments the Board Can Do On It's Own

Declaration may contain information, constraints, directions, and the like which range from the mundane to the immensely important. Indeed, a specific part of a declaration may be both mundane and immensely important, depending upon one's perspective. Other than amendments creating phases, there is only one class of amendments to the declaration which can be implemented by the board without some form of third party endorsement. Specifically, the board can change the address for service or mailing address of the corporation by registering a notice of change of address in Form 2 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 108). An amendment of this nature will be authorized by resolution of the board.

2.7.2. Amendments Which Do Not Require Consent of the Owners But Require Third Party Endorsement

There are two circumstances in which a corporation, an owner, or interested person may initiate proceedings to change the declaration or description without any form of approval or consent of the owners.

2.7.2.1. Application to Court By the Corporation or an Owner

On application of the corporation or an owner on at least 15 days prior notice to the corporation, and the owners and mortgagees (as listed in the corporation's record maintained under section 47(2) as of the 30th day prior to the date the application is made (which will be the day the application is filed with the court)) the court may order the declaration or description to be amended if it is satisfied that the amendment:

- Is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency that appears in the declaration or description; or,
- Arises out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration and description (section 109(3))¹.

2.7.2.2. Application to the Director of Titles by the Corporation or an Interested Person

On application of the corporation or an interested person (for example, possibly an owner, a mortgagee, a declarant, or an owner of lands benefited by an easement over the property) the Director of Titles may order an amendment(s) to a declaration or description to correct an error or inconsistency that is apparent on the face of the declaration or description (section 110(1)) provided the Director is satisfied that the amendment will correct the error or inconsistency (section 110(3)).

The form and manner of giving notice to the corporation and to every owner and mortgagee listed in the section 47(2) record is at the direction of the Director of Titles (section 110(2)).

In the case of both of the above type of applications, an amendment which is ordered does not take effect until a certified copy of the order for amendments is registered (section 109(4) and 110(4)).

2.7.3. Amendments Requiring the Consent of the Owners

With the exception of declaration changes of service/ mailing address, and amendments ordered on application to the court or the director of titles, every amendment to the declaration or description must receive the written consent of a specified percentage of the unit owners. The minimum percentage required varies depending upon the nature of the change being made by the amendment. Regardless of the level of consent necessary to effect an amendment, the following protocol is to be followed (it should be noted that while all of the steps must be taken, other than the first (board resolution) and last (registration), there is no set order in which they must be taken; the order presented below is a random example):

1. The board must approve the amendment by resolution (section 107(2)(a)).
2. Notice of the proposed amendment must be sent in accordance with section 47(8) to all mortgagees listed in the corporate records.
3. If less than three years have elapsed since the later of the date:
 - The condominium was registered; and,
 - Of the first agreement of purchase and sale for a unit entered into by the declarant (section 107(2)(ii));

And

 - the declarant still owns at least one unit in the condominium, other than a unit devoted to telecommunications servicing the condominium (section 107(2)(b)(i)), then the declarant must consent to the proposed amendment in writing (section 107(2)(b)).

4. The board must call a meeting of the owners for the purpose of considering the proposed amendment (section 107(1)(c) and 107(3)). The notice of the meeting must comply with section 47 (i.e. be given no less than 15 days before the meeting) and must be accompanied by a copy of the proposed amendment (section 107(4)).

5. The written consent of the minimum number of unit owners required for the particular type of change must be obtained (section 107(2)(d) or 107((e)).

6. The corporation must register a copy of the amendment (using Form 1 to regulation 49 of 01) no earlier than the 30th day following the day it gave the notice of the owner's meeting (item 2 above) (section 107(5)).

2.7.4. Minimum Level of Owner's Written Consent

2.7.4.1. Changes Requiring Written Consent of 90% of the Unit Owners

If the amendment makes a change to:

- the proportions of the common interests allocated to the units;
- the percentage shares of the common expenses allocated to the units;
- the exclusive use common elements; or,
- the allocation of the obligations to repair and maintain the common elements; then,

the written consent of 90% of the owners of the units as at the time the board approved the proposed amendment must be obtained (section 107(2)(d)).

2.7.4.2. Changes Requiring Written Consent of 80% of the Unit Owners

The written consent of 90% of the owners of the units as at the time the board approved the proposed amendment must be obtained in all cases other than those requiring 90% consent (section 107(2)(e)).

2.7.5. General

Section 7(1) (execution by the declarant) and section 7(2)(b) (consent of mortgagees) do not apply to amendments made under section 107 (i.e. with consent of the owners) (section 8 of regulation 48 of 01). Since these sections are not expressly made inapplicable to amendments made by order of the court or the Director of Titles, presumably they are applicable to such amendments.

Amendments made by court order (section 108) or by order of the Director of Titles (section 109) are exempt from Planning Act approval (section 11 of regulation 48 of 01). Amendments made under section 107 which amend the description will require Planning Act approval if there will be a conflict with section 50 of the Planning Act.

3.1.1. Agreement of Purchase and Sale

3.1.1.1. Implied Covenants

Every agreement of purchase and sale of a proposed unit entered into by a declarant before the registration of the declaration and description that creates the unit (or common interest in the case of a common elements condominium (section 138(4)) is deemed to contain the following covenants by the declarant:

1. If the proposed unit is for residential purposes, a covenant to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included in the property without delay, except for the units that the declarant intends to lease¹.
2. A covenant to take all reasonable steps to deliver to the purchaser without delay a deed to the unit that is in registerable form².
3. A covenant to hold in trust for the corporation the money, if any, that the declarant collects from the purchaser on behalf of the corporation (section 78(1)).

These covenants continue even after the conveyance of a unit (section 78(2)) and may be enforced by a purchaser through the application to court for a compliance order (section 78(3) and section 134).

A declarant who has entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for a proposed unit is under a duty to take all reasonable steps to complete the buildings and register, without delay, the declaration and description (section 79(1))³. An agreement of purchase and sale cannot be terminated by a vendor by reason only of a failure to register the condominium within a time specified in the agreement of purchase and sale (section 79(2)), but may apply to court for such a direction (section 79(3)).

3.1.2. Disclosure Statements

3.1.2.1. What is a Disclosure Statement?

In general terms, a disclosure statement's longstanding purpose has been to fully and accurately inform purchasers of the condominium's property and amenities, significant features of the condominium constitutional structure, financial projections, and the like.

Under the old condominium legislation the statement was provided by the declarant in relation to residential units (statement were not required for non-residential condominiums) and was required to be reliable. No agreement of purchase and sale was binding until the statement was in the hands of a purchaser. A ten-day 'cooling off' period after the delivery of the statement to the purchaser allowed purchasers the time to review the statement and, should they wish, cancel the agreement to purchase. If material changes arose to the contents of the statement, an amendment had to be delivered, following which another 10 day period began to run during which the purchaser could cancel. False or misleading statements gave purchasers a statutory right to damages for resulting loss.

Also under the old condominium legislation the level of detail needed in a disclosure statement was a matter of debate as the statutory direction was not specific⁴. The uncertainty was tested in numerous court cases, many, if not most, of which were driven by purchasers seeking to rescind their agreements in the face of a falling real estate market.

The requirement and purpose of a disclosure statement is in place in the Condominium Act. However, a disclosure statement is required to be delivered to a purchasers of any condominium unit, whether residential, non-residential, or other (section 72). The contents of the disclosure statements is prescribed in detail in the Condominium Act and regulation 48 (respectively sections 72(3) and section 17(1)) and so there is little room for doubt as to what is to be included. An inadequate or incomplete disclosure statement will lay the agreement open to rescission¹ and, after closing, expose the declarant to liability to the corporation and owners who suffered loss as a result of reliance on the faulty statement (section 133)².

3.1.2.2. Cooling off Period and Rescission

No agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a declarant is binding on a purchaser until a current disclosure statement has been delivered to that purchaser (section 72(2))³.

Upon the later of the delivery of the disclosure statement or a fully executed copy of the agreement of purchase and sale a purchaser has ten days to unilaterally rescind the agreement (section 73(2)). No reason need be given for rescinding and the decision to rescind cannot be challenged. Any rescission must be in writing and must be given to the declarant or the declarant's solicitor (section 73(2)). The method of giving the notice is not set out in the legislation. While personal service by hand delivery is obviously acceptable, other methods are also possible. The agreement of purchase and sale should contain provisions as to how notice is given (i.e by fax, by delivery to a certain address etc.). In addition, during this ten day period the purchaser may elect to pay the purchase price in full upon taking up interim occupancy (if such is applicable). This right is available regardless of any contrary term in the agreement (section 80(3)). Should the right be exercised and the monies deposited on interim closing, the declarant will not charge interest on any amount during the period prior to closing (although the purchaser will remain entitled to interest on funds deposited prior to interim closing).

If the purchaser elects to rescind, all money received from the purchaser under the agreement and credited towards the purchase price, together with interest on the money (at 2% below the rate established as the minimum rate at which the Bank makes short-term advances to members of the Canadian Payments Association) to the date of refund (section 19(2) and 19(3)) must be promptly repaid to the purchaser by the declarant (section 73(3)).

3.1.2.3. Material Changes in Disclosure Statement

3.1.2.3.1. Vendor's Obligation to Disclose Material Changes

Whenever there is a material change to the information contained or required to be contained in a disclosure statement (or a revised disclosure statement or notice if there have been revisions to the original) delivered to a purchaser, there is an obligation on the declarant to deliver a revised disclosure statement or notice (section 74(1))⁴. The delivery must be made within a reasonable time after the material change occurs and, in any event, no later than 10 days before final closing of the purchase (section 74(4)). The revised statement or notice must clearly identify all changes that, in the reasonable belief of the declarant, may be material changes, and summarize the particulars of them (section 74(3)).

3.1.2.3.2. What are Material Changes?

Material Changes¹ are subjectively defined in the Condominium Act in relation to five criteria; specifically, a material change must be:

- a change or series of changes
- that a reasonable purchaser, on an objective basis
- would regard collectively
- as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase
- that it is likely that the purchaser would not have entered into the agreement (section 74(2)).

Clearly there are boundaries to changes which are material changes. They will not be trivial (for example, the disclosure statement must include the declarant’s name and mailing address. A change to this information could not conceivably be a ‘material change’), but the threshold can be debatable even where the facts are clear. The Condominium Act does declare that certain changes will not be considered ‘material’. These are:

- (a) a change in the contents of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year if more than one year has passed since the registration of the declaration and description for the corporation,
- (b) a substantial addition, alteration or improvement within the meaning of section 97(6) that the corporation makes to the common elements after a turn-over meeting has been held under section 43,
- (c) a change in the portion of units or proposed units that the declarant intends to lease,
- (d) a change in the schedule of the proposed commencement and completion dates for the amenities of which construction had not been completed as of the date on which the disclosure statement was made, or
- (e) a change in the information contained in the statement described in section 161(1) of the services provided by the municipality or the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, as the case may be, as described in that subsection, if the unit or the proposed unit is in a vacant land condominium corporation (section 74(2)).

3.1.2.3.3. Declarant’s Incentive and Disincentive to Disclose Changes

Quite apart from the statutory direction of section 74(1) obliging the declarant to disclose material changes within reasonable time, and the risk that the conveyance could collapse in the last ten days before closing (section 74(4)), should the declarant fail to make correct and timely disclosure it can be liable for the purchaser’s consequential damages. This liability arises if the declarant, in a statement or information:

- makes a statement or provides material information which is false, deceptive, or misleading.
- omits a statement or material information that the declarant is required to provide (section 133).

019 Aiken v. Dockside Village Inc. (1993) [no material amendments]
239 Phyllis Israel et al v. Townsgate I et al (1994) [disclosure adequate, purchaser bound]
075 Chien v. Law Development Group (Thornhill) Ltd. (1998) [cumulative changes material, purchaser not bound]
¹ 243 Rassos v. Greystone Walk Ltd (1991) [court ruling on law re: adult lifestyle community not a material change]

While an argument might be raised that so long as no revised disclosure statement is issued, a change which arises after the original disclosure statement is delivered will not give rise to liability as set out above. The argument would be premised on the notion that the original statement was accurate at the time of delivery, and as no other statement had been issued there was no opportunity for false etc. statements, omissions etc. This would not seem to be in the spirit of the legislation and the view that continuous disclosure is the rule, with the outdated disclosures being touchstone against which liability will be measured, is sensible.

The liability for detrimental reliance damages will exist for a period of at least 6 years after the false, misleading statements/omissions are discovered or reasonably discoverable; however, provided the disclosure is made and no rescission results, the declarant can continue with the knowledge the agreement of purchase and sale remains binding and no complaint or liability will arise.

The disincentive to issuing revised statements or notice of change is that it may prompt the purchaser to exercise the election to rescind. In some cases economic realities may oblige a declarant to substantially revisit the plan of condominium, either that or suffer a loss. Losing a sale may be the least of two evils. However, generally a declarant will wish to keep the sale in hand and not provide the opportunity to rescind. The Condominium Act does provide the declarant with some middle ground in that while it obliges revised disclosure or notice of material changes, it does not limit revisions or notices to changes that are material. The declarant must identify all changes that it reasonably believes may be material (section 74(3) and (6)), but note that this does not constitute an admission that they are material. Should the purchaser elect to rescind, the declarant still has a window of opportunity to test the materiality of the changes which it identified. In any event, the full contents of the revision/notice are opened to the purchaser. It may find information that it regards as a material change and which was not identified by the declarant. It is open to the purchaser to engage the rescission election in such a case (and open to the declarant to challenge the purchasers viewpoint). Should the purchaser not elect to rescind, knowledge of the full contents of the revision/notice is impressed on the purchaser and can ground a defense to a later action for damages.

3.1.2.4. Rescission on Notice of Material Change

A purchaser who receives a revised disclosure statement has 10 days in which to exercise the option of rescinding the agreement on the basis of the existence of a material change. This is done by giving a written notice of rescission to the declarant or declarant’s solicitor (section 74(7)). On receipt of a notice of rescission the declarant has ten days to make an application to court for a determination of the materiality of the change (section 74(8)). If the declarant fails to make a court challenge, the rescission is final and the declarant must immediately refund all monies paid under the agreement, plus interest to the date of refund (section 74(9) and 74(10)).¹ Interest is calculated at 2% below the bank rate ((section 19(3) of 48 of 01)). Alternatively, within 10 days of receiving the revised disclosure/notice, the purchaser can make an application to court to determine the materiality of the change(s) (section 74(5)). Should the court rule the change(s) are material, the refund must be made within 10 days of the court’s determination (section 74(10)(b)).

3.1.2.5. Contents of a Disclosure Statement²

The following is the list of the contents of a disclosure statement (which must cite the date it was made):

(Section 17(1))

3.1.2.5.1. Table of Contents

As described above, every disclosure statement must contain a table of contents at its beginning (section 72(3)(a)). The table must follow the form, and supply the content, prescribed by regulation 48 of 01. With respect to the form, Form 12 to 48 of 01 is applicable and is set up to contain the meat of the table references in a ‘box’ format for ease (hopefully) of preparation and reading. Section 72(4) of the Condominium Act sets out minimum inclusions in the table of contents; however, Form 12 requires each and every item in the bulleted list above to be referenced in the table in the form of a question, along with a “yes” or “no” answer to the question, and a reference to the location in the statement, declaration, by-laws or rules where full information will be found.

3.1.2.5.2. Budget Statement

A budget statement for the one-year period immediately following the registration of the condominium declaration and description is a required inclusion in the disclosure statement (section 72(3)(q)). The budget statement must contain a statement of:

- the common expenses (i.e. itemized by type) of the corporation
- the proposed amount of each expense of the corporation, including
 - the cost of the reserve fund study required for the year
 - the cost of the performance audit under section 44 and
 - the cost of preparing audited financial statements if section 43(7) (which requires audited financials to be delivered by the declarant within 60 days of the turnover meeting) requires the declarant to deliver them within one year following the registration of the declaration and description
- the type, frequency and level of the services to be provided
- the projected monthly common expense contribution for each type of unit
- the portion of the common expenses to be paid into a reserve fund
- the status of all pending lawsuits material to the property of which the declarant has actual knowledge and that may affect the property after the registration of a deed to the unit from the declarant to the purchaser
- the amounts of all current or expected fees, charges, rents or other revenue to be paid to or by the corporation or by any of the owners for the use of the common elements or other facilities related to the property, unless a turn over meeting has been held under section 43 (i.e. the declarant no longer owns a majority of the units)
- all services not included in the budget that the declarant provides, or expenses that the declarant pays and that might reasonably be expected to become, at any subsequent time, a common expense and the projected common expense contribution attributable to each of those services or expenses for each type of unit
- the projected amounts in all reserve funds at the end of the current fiscal year
- a summary of the most recent reserve fund study, if any (clearly this would not be applicable to a proposed condominium).

(section 72(6))

3.1.2.5.3. Accountability For Budget Shortfall

The declarant has substantial incentive to be accurate in it's one-year budget forecast. On one hand, overstated expenses and understated revenue (if any) will discourage sales. On the other hand understated expenses or overstated revenue will have to be made good by the declarant (sections 75(2) and 75(4)). The rules relating to the latter are as follows:

- Should the total common expenses for the year exceed the budgeted expenses the excess must be paid by the declarant (section 75(1))
- Any excess common expenses attributable to the termination of a management agreement (section 111) or other agreement (section 112) are not to be included when determining the excess (section 75(2))

- Should total revenue paid to the corporation for use of any part of the common elements or assets or property-related facilities fall short of total budgeted revenue the shortfall must be paid by the declarant (section 75(2))
- Should total revenue exceed budgeted revenue the excess may be applied to reduce any amount owed by the declarant due to excess total common expenses (section 75(3))
- Should total common expenses be less than the budgeted total the ‘savings’ cannot be applied to reduce the amount owed due to a revenue shortfall
- The condominium board must, within 30 days of receiving the audited financial statements for the one year, notify the declarant of the amount it is required to pay (section 75(5))
- The declarant must pay the amount owed within 30 days of receiving the notice (section 5(6))¹.

3.1.3. Reservation Agreements

Proposed condominium units/common interests can be sold (albeit conditionally) prior to draft Planning Act approval of the plan of condominium (section 9(12)), the only exception being vacant land condominium corporations. All types of proposed units can be the subject of ‘reservation agreements’. Such agreements are recognized in the Condominium Act but are not defined or described. Typically, a reservation agreement reserves to a potential purchaser the right to enter into an agreement of purchase and sale, whether on defined terms or on terms to be agreed on. Where the terms are defined the reservation may be an enforceable ‘option’ or ‘put’, otherwise it’s legal value is questionable. For example, an agreement to enter into an agreement (which a reservation agreement is if the terms of the purchase are subject to further agreement) may be comforting to one or both of the parties, but in law it will almost certainly be unenforceable. Nonetheless, for a declarant a reservation agreement presents an opportunity to ‘test the market’ without a full investment in the condominium approval process, and for a potential purchaser it allows a ‘toe to be dipped’ without a full commitment (which may await further details on the proposed condominium).

In times of a ‘hot’ market for a condominium, when the declarant is uncertain about the final pricing for units, reservation agreements can be used to separate clearly serious purchasers from ‘tire-kickers’. The terms of a reservation agreement are up to private agreement. It could provide that whatever payment/deposit is paid on the reservation agreement is refunded to the purchasers if the agreement of purchase and sale is not to the purchaser’s liking or, for example, on the other hand, it could provide that the deposit is forfeited if the purchaser declines to enter into an agreement of purchase and sale on the declarant’s terms. How the funds paid under the reservation agreement are dealt with is up to the contracting parties with two exceptions:

1. Any funds paid under the reservation agreement must be held in trust until it can be paid out to one or the other parties under the agreement’s terms (for example, if the agreement provides that the funds are forfeited if the purchaser does not enter into the agreement of purchase and sale, or returned to the purchaser in the event the option is not exercised or the project is not committed to proceed by a certain date. (section 81(1)(a)).
2. Regardless of the terms of the reservation agreement, should a person enter into an agreement of purchase and sale, any money paid to reserve the right to enter into an agreement shall be credited to the purchase price (section 81(3)).

It should be noted that unless and until an agreement of purchase and sale is entered into monies paid under the reservation agreement are not purchase monies and no interest is payable on them

(unless the parties have contracted otherwise). However, once an agreement of purchase and sale is entered into the reservation monies take on the character of purchase monies and interest accrues on them.

3.1.4. Money Held in Trust¹

All of the following payments made by a person:

1. with respect to reserving a right to enter into an agreement of purchase and sale for the purchaser of a proposed unit (or common interest in the case of a common elements condominium (section 138(4));
2. on account of an agreement of purchaser and sale of a proposed unit; or
3. on account of a sale of a proposed unit; must be held in trust as soon as they are made (section 81).

3.1.4.1. Exception to Rule that Funds to be Held in Trust

The obligation to hold funds in trust does not apply to monies paid on account of the purchase price of property included in the proposed unit that is not to be permanently affixed to the land (section 81(2)(a)). Examples of such could be appliances, loose floor coverings, drapes and the like. These items should be separately dealt with in the agreement of purchase and sale so their price is known; otherwise the guesswork involved may oblige the all the monies to be held in trust. Often items such as the foregoing are dealt with in separate agreements entered into after the agreement of purchase and sale. While the agreement could be with the declarant, the subject matter is such that it could well be with a third part contractor/supplier (i.e. a furniture store). In the latter case the Condominium Act would have no bearing on the financial terms agreed to. Section 81(2)(a) puts contracts with the declarant on the same footing.

3.1.4.2. Deposit Trustee

The above-described funds cannot be held by the declarant, but must be held in trust (together with any accruing interest) by the declarant’s solicitor or by one of the following persons:

1. Persons, other than the declarant’s solicitor, who are entitled to practise law in Ontario as solicitors;
2. A partnership, other than the declarant’s solicitor, of persons who are entitled to practise law in Ontario as solicitors;
3. Escrow agents for deposits with respect to a project who have entered into a deposit trust agreement with the declarant and either the warranty corporation or an insurer to govern money to be held in trust under section 81 of the Condominium Act with respect to the project (section 20(1)).

3.1.4.3. Where funds to be held by the Deposit Trustee

If the deposit trustee is a person other than the declarant’s solicitor, the funds must be held in trust in a separate account designated as a trust account at a bank listed in schedule I or II of the Bank Act (Canada), a trust corporation, a loan corporation, a credit union or a Province of Ontario Savings Office (section 81(4)).

If the deposit trustee is the declarant’s solicitor, the funds must be held in a ‘trust account’ in Ontario (section 81(5)). While at first blush this may seem to give a full latitude in the choice of deposit institution, trust accounts which are acceptable for solicitors are governed by the regulations of the Law Society of Upper Canada and ensure the level of protection and status equal to the above-listed institutions. Unlike deposits held in trust by third party solicitors, a declarant's solicitor need not hold the funds in a 'separate trust account'. The solicitor's mixed trust account (i.e. in which client's funds are generally held) is a satisfactory depository, although it will probably not be agreeable to the declarant as such funds will earn no interest that can be paid to it (interest earned is a separate trust account set up for holding the deposits can be paid to the declarant).

3.1.4.4. Evidence of Compliance

Within ten days of the payment of monies that must be held in trust the declarant must provide written evidence to the person who paid the money that the obligations referred to above have been complied with (section 81(6)). This evidence must be in Form 4 to 49 of 01 (section 39 of 49 of 01) which, amongst other things, will state the name of the institution in which the funds were deposited and the account number, and confirm that any change in the information will be the subject of further notification.

3.1.4.5. Duration of Trust

The funds must be held in trust by the declarant's solicitor or other trustee until one of two events occurs:

1. either the person holding the money in trust disposes of it to the person entitled to it, where the disposal is done in accordance with the Condominium Act and an agreement that the person who paid the money has entered into with respect to the proposed unit; or

This would be exemplified by a pay-out to the purchaser due to rescission or termination, or by a pay-out to the declarant when final closing takes place and the funds are to be credited to the purchase price.

2. the declarant ensures that one of the following two types of security is provided for the money, except if the money has been received pursuant to a reservation agreement under section 81(1)(a) and has not been credited to the purchase price under the agreement (section 81(7)(a) and (b)):
 - a) either a deposit receipt executed by the Ontario New Home Warranty Corporation meeting the requirements set out in section 22 of regulation 48 of 01 (section 20(2)2); or,
 - b) an insurance policy(s) protecting the loss of the trust monies and accrued interest that meets the requirements of section 21 of regulation 48 of 01 (section 20(1)1.)

In either of these situations the purchaser's monies are protected by third party guarantees from corporations/institutions which may be regarded as having unimpeachable financial depth.

3.1.4.6. Deposit Receipts

Deposit receipts are issued by the Ontario New Home Warranty Corporation's program of providing a level of protection and construction warranty coverage to buyers of new homes (whether condominium or non-condominium). Since they are restricted to new homes a deposit receipt will never be a security for a purchaser's monies in relation to a non-residential condominium, previously-owned housing, residential condominiums created by conversion (again, no ONHWP receipt is available), a purchase in relation to a common elements condominium (no units means no new dwellings) or vacant lands condominium (unless new dwellings are constructed prior to registration and sale).

The following are the principle features relating to deposit receipts:

- It takes effect only when it has been executed by the beneficiary (purchaser), the warranty corporation, and the declarant, and has been delivered to the declarant's solicitor/trustee holding the monies (section 22(1)).
- It only protect payments made on account of agreements of purchase and sale of proposed units. It does not protect monies relating to reservation agreements or on account of a sale of a proposed unit (section 22(2)).
- The maximum amount protected is $20,000.00 unless the receipt specifically provides for a higher limit (section 22(3)).
- The receipt must contain a statement that the purchaser's monies in excess of the limit must be held in trust unless an insurance policy is obtained (section 22(4)).
- The obligations to the purchaser under the deposit receipt are unaffected by relations between the warranty corporation, the declarant, and any insurer (section 22(7)) and the purchaser cannot be charged for any insurance premium on a policy the warranty corporation may take out to underwrite the risk (section 22(5)).
- The warranty corporation must provide a proof of loss form to the beneficiary immediately upon receiving a written notice of claim, and must pay any claim within 60 days after the right to payment has been established (section 22 (8) and 22(9)).
- The warranty corporation's liability continues until the completion of the purchase, all monies, including interest, have been paid to the purchaser, the warranty corporation has paid out to the extent of its liability, or the fact the warranty corporation has been released is confirmed by the purchaser or a court (section 22(10)).
- In the event of a loss, interest is to be paid by the warranty corporation at 2% below the bank rate from the date of the purchaser's payment to the date of payment by the warranty corporation (section 22(11)). Interest payable does not reduce the coverage available for purchase monies (i.e. interest payments can be in excess of the $20,000.00 or other fixed limit).

3.1.4.7. Insurance Policies

The following are the principle features relating to insurance policies:

- It takes effect only when it has been executed by the insurer and the declarant, and has been delivered to the declarant's solicitor/trustee holding the monies (section 21(1)).
- The declarant solicitor or trustee shall hold the policy for the beneficiary (purchaser) until the insurer is no longer liable (section 21 (2)) or the beneficiary requests it so a claim can be made (section 21(5)).
- It protects payments made on account of reservation agreements or on account of a sale of a proposed unit as well as on account of agreements of purchase and sale of proposed units (section 20(2)(1)).

- The obligations to the purchaser under the policy are unaffected by relations between the declarant and the insurer (section 21(7)) and the premiums for the policy must be paid by the declarant and cannot be directly or indirectly transferred to the purchaser (section 21(3)).
- The insurer must provide a proof of loss form to the beneficiary immediately upon receiving a written notice of claim, and must pay any claim within 60 days after the right to payment has been established (section 21 (6) and 21(7)).
- The insurer's liability continues until the completion of the purchase, all monies, including interest, have been paid to the purchaser, the insurer has paid out to the extent of its liability, or the fact the insurer has been released is confirmed by the purchaser or a court (section 22(10)).
- In the event of a loss, interest is to be paid by the insurer at 2% below the bank rate from the date of the purchaser's payment to the date of payment by the warranty corporation (section 22(11)). Interest payable does not reduce the coverage available for purchase monies.

3.1.5. Interest

Unlike the rules under the old legislation, which required artificial arrangements to achieve equity,¹ the Condominium Act provides clear rules for the imposition and crediting of interest on deposits and purchase monies.

A purchaser is entitled to be credited with interest on monies which the purchaser has paid on account of the purchase price of the unit or that the declarant credits to the purchase price of a proposed unit (section 82(1)). The rate of interest is fixed as of March 31 and October 1 of each year for the following six month period at 2% below the rate established by the Bank of Canada as the minimum rate at which the Bank of Canada makes short-term advances to members of the Canadian Payments Association (section 19(3)). For historical and current information on the applicable bank rate, visit the Bank of Canada's website at www.bankofcanada.ca, where information from 1990 to date is posted. As of March 31, 2001, the bank rate was 5.25%, resulting in a deemed interest factor of 3.25% for purchaser's monies.

The interest is calculated from the date of payment by the purchaser to the day the proposed unit is available for possession or occupancy in accordance with the agreement (section 82(3)). Following that date no interest accrues in the purchaser's favour and, in the event that the purchase monies are less than the unpaid balance of the purchase price, thereafter interest accrues on the unpaid balance in the declarant's favour at a rate equal to the 'chartered bank administered interest rate for a conventional one year mortgage' (also posted on www.bankofcanada.ca) as of the first of the month in which the purchaser assumes (or is obliged to assume) interim occupancy (section 80(4)1. and section 19(1)). The latter interest will be paid by the purchaser as part of the common expenses.

3.1.5.1. Date of Payment and Interest on Interest

Interest credited to a purchaser is, if the declarant so elects, to be paid to the purchaser or credited to the purchase price on the day the declarant delivers the deed/transfer to the purchaser, or otherwise on the day of interim occupancy (section 82(3)). Should the declarant elect not to pay/credit interest on interim closing, interest is payable at 2% below the bank rate, to the date of final closing, on the interest which accrued to the date of interim occupancy (section 82(5) and section 19(3))

3.1.5.2. Interest on Termination

In the event the agreement is terminated (i.e a condition in the agreement is not met and will not be waived by one of the parties), the declarant must pay interest at 2% below the bank rate on all monies refunded (section 82(7) and section 19(3)). The Condominium Act is not clear on from when this interest is calculated although from the date of payment would seem sensible. Likewise, in the event of rescission interest is payable on money received/credited to the purchase price at 2% below the bank rate, calculated from the date of payment/credit (sections 73(3) and 74(9), section 19(3)).

3.1.5.3. Excess Interest

Given that the rate of interest payable to purchasers is 2% below the bank rate, it is more than possible that the actual interest that accrues on the deposited funds is more than the amount paid out/credited to the purchaser. This will depend on the arrangement that the deposit trustee makes with the deposit institution. Any such 'excess interest' belongs solely to the declarant (section 82(8)). This is equitable considering the purchaser's rate of interest is fixed and guaranteed. Any failure to net at least 2% below the bank rate on the deposited funds will result in a penalty to the declarant, and will have no influence on the purchaser's right to the fixed rate.

3.1.6. Status Certificate

3.1.6.1. What is a Status Certificate?

Having reference to the required contents of a status certificate, it can be described as a comprehensive report on the financial, contractual, and constitutional status of a particular unit and the condominium at large, and containing general information such as directors and officers, address for service and the like (reference section 76(1)) all of which effectively has the particular corporations guarantee (at least to the purchaser or mortgagee who requested and received the certificate (section 76(6))) of accuracy. Likewise, a recipient is bound with knowledge of the information it contains¹. If material information is omitted, the corporation is unavoidably and undeniably fixed with the representation that no such information existed (section 76(4)). As can be appreciated, a status certificate must be assembled with care and consideration by a corporation and, in that context, should be thoroughly examined by the recipient in order to be fully informed².

3.1.6.2. Who is Entitled to Obtain a Status Certificate?

Anyone (not only a purchaser or a mortgagee) may request and be entitled to receive a status certificate (section 76(1)) relating to a unit (or common interest in the case of a owner in a common elements condominium), upon payment of a fee not exceeding $100.00 including all applicable taxes (section 18(1)). No authorization is required from the owner and the corporation has no discretion but to provide the certificate within 10 days of receiving the request and payment of the fee (section 76(3)).

Although there is no substitute for a full and satisfactory status certificate, a person who properly (i.e with payment) requests, but does not receive within 10 days, a status certificate can proceed with the knowledge that, as between that person and the corporation, and with respect to the particular unit(s):

- there has been no default in the payment of common expenses for the unit;
- the board has not declared any increase in the common expenses for the unit since the date of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year; and
- the board has not levied any assessments against the unit since the date of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year to increase the contribution to the reserve fund (section 76(5)).

3.1.6.3. To Whom is the Application for a Status Certificate Made?

² 169 Lucas et al. v. Durno & Shea (1985) [customary legal practice is to obtain status certificate]

The Condominium Act contains no specific direction as to who is responsible for receiving applications for status certificates. It states only that the application is to be made to ‘the corporation’ (section 76(1)). As a matter of principle, any notice given to a director or officer should be notice to the corporation; however, there is no public record of who a corporation’s officers and directors are. The Condominium Act allows the Corporations Information Act to be applicable to condominiums (section 5(3)); however, regulation 48 of 01 declares that the latter Act does not apply (section 2). Had it been otherwise, all of a condominium corporation’s officers and directors names and addresses would have been accessible through a corporate profile search at the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. An interested party may be left with making inquiries at the property or through the property manager (if known) as to who is the, or an, official. As a matter of administration, either the property manager or the corporation’s secretary will be relegated the duty of receiving and responding to requests.

3.1.6.4. What is Contained in a Status Certificate?

A status certificate must be prepared in Form 13 to regulation 48 of 01. Form 13 is in a ‘box’ type with full instructions as to use, alternative statements, and the like. The full list of contents is set out in section 76(1) of the Condominium Act and is summarized as follows:

- a statement of the common expenses for the unit and the default, if any, in payment of the common expenses;
- a statement of the increase, if any, in the common expenses for the unit that the board has declared since the date of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year and the reason for the increase;
- a statement of the assessments, if any, that the board has levied against the unit since the date of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year to increase the contribution to the reserve fund and the reason for the assessments;
- a statement of the address for service of the corporation;
- a statement of the names and address for service of the directors and officers of the corporation;
- a copy of the current declaration, by-laws and rules;
- a copy of all applications made under section 109 (made by the corporation or an owner to amend the declaration or description) to amend the declaration for which the court has not made an order;
- a statement of all outstanding judgments against the corporation and the status of all legal actions to which the corporation is a party;
- a copy of the budget of the corporation for the current fiscal year, the last annual audited financial statements and the auditor’s report on the statements;
- a list of all current agreements mentioned in section 111 (management), 112 (other agreements) or 113 (mutual use agreements) and all current agreements between the corporation and another corporation or between the corporation and the owner of the unit;
- a statement that the person requesting the status certificate has the rights described in sections 76(7) and 76(8) of the Condominium Act (to examine the agreements at a reasonable time and location, or to obtain copies of the agreements on payment of reasonable fee) with respect to the agreements described immediately above
- a statement whether the parties have complied with all current agreements mentioned in section 98(1)(b) (agreements between the corporation and a particular owner dealing with improvements to the common elements) with respect to the unit;
- a statement with respect to,
- the most recent reserve fund study and updates to it,

- the amount in the reserve fund no earlier than at the end of a month within 90 days of the date of the status certificate, and
- current plans, if any, to increase the reserve fund under section 94(8) (plan for future funding consequent on a reserve fund study);
- a statement of those additions, alterations or improvements to the common elements, those changes in the assets of the corporation and those changes in a service of the corporation that are substantial and that the board has proposed but has not implemented, together with a statement of the purpose of them;
- a statement of the number of units for which the corporation has received notice under section 83 (requiring owners to give notice of lease to the corporation) that the unit was leased during the fiscal year preceding the date of the status certificate;
- a certificate or memorandum of insurance for each of the current insurance policies;
- a statement of the amounts, if any, that this Act requires be added to the common expenses payable for the unit;
- a statement whether the Superior Court of Justice has made an order appointing an inspector under section 130 or an administrator under section 131.

(Section 76(1))

In addition to the material required by section 76(1) of the Condominium Act and section 18 of *regulation 48 of 01*¹, a leasehold condominium corporation’s status certificate must include:

- whether the provisions of the leasehold interests in the property are in good standing and have not been breached; and,
- a statement by the corporation whether the lessor has applied for a termination order under section 173 (termination by lessor) (section 170(a) and 170(b)).

In addition to the usual requirements of section 76(1) of the Condominium Act dealing with the contents of status certificates, in the case of a phased condominium until such time as all of the phases are complete and the declarant has disposed of ownership of all units (except a telecommunications unit), a phased condominium’s disclosure statement must include a copy of the disclosure statement relating to the last phase registered (section 148).

3.1.6.5. Record of Status Certificates

The corporation must keep a copy of all status certificates that is has issued in the preceding 10 years (section 15 of 48 of 01)).

3.1.7. Information on Corporation other than by way of a Status Certificate

Should any person require information regarding any of the following:

- the names and address for service of the directors and officers of the corporation;
- the person responsible for the management of the property of the corporation;
- the person to whom the corporation has delegated the responsibility for providing status certificates (section 77),

on request the corporation must supply the information without fee¹. As described above (under “To Whom is the Application made”), there is a gap in the chain as the Condominium Act does not specify who is to receive an information request for any of the above, or how to obtain the identity of the person who does (the irony is that the satisfaction of the request will provide that very information).

3.1.8. Duty to Register Declaration and Description – No Termination for Delay

Under past condominium legislation agreements of purchase and sale were deemed to contain certain provisions which were directed at ensuring that declarants did not delay in completing and registering a project. In the same vein of consumer protection the past legislation prevented declarants from terminating agreements where the reason was failure to register the project within the time set out in the agreement. This prohibition could only be overcome by court order or the purchasers consent.

The Condominium Act carries the effect of these provisions forward and:

- Obliges a declarant who has entered into an agreement of purchase and sale of a proposed unit to take all reasonable steps to complete the buildings required by the agreement and register, without delay, the declaration and description (section 79(1));
- Prohibits a declarant from terminating due to a deadline in registration set out in the agreement unless the purchaser has consented or a court order obtained (section 79(2)). In considering an application to terminate the court must consider:
 - the declarant has taken all reasonable steps to register a declaration and description;
 - a declaration and description can be registered within a reasonable period of time; and
 - the failure and inability to register a declaration and description is caused by circumstances beyond the control of the declarant (section 79(5)).

3.1.9. Interim Occupancy

An agreement of purchase and sale may permit or require interim occupancy of a proposed unit (section 80(1)).

3.1.9.1. What is Interim Occupancy?

Interim Occupancy is defined by the Condominium Act as “the occupancy of a proposed unit before the purchaser receives a deed to the unit that is in registerable form” (section 80(1)).

The purpose of the interim occupancy period is allow the purchaser to begin making use of the unit, and for the declarant to begin being reimbursed for occupancy costs pending registration of the condominium. In cases where some units are completed earlier than others (for example in a proposed condominium with more than one building at different stages of construction) and otherwise where occupancy availability and registration are not in sync, interim occupancy is a vehicle which allows the parties to satisfy their separate objectives before all the loose strings are tied together with the registration.

3.1.9.2. Occupancy Fee

During the interim occupancy period, the declarant is entitled to charge a monthly occupancy fee which must not be greater than the following three amounts:

- Interest calculated on a monthly basis on the unpaid balance of the purchase price (if any) at the one-year conventional mortgage rate
- An amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the unit
- The projected monthly common expense contribution for the unit (section 80(4)).

No other amounts can be charged¹.

3.1.9.3. Reserve Fund Contribution – Special Case for Residential

In the case of the interim occupancy of a proposed residential unit for longer than six months, the declarant, from the end of the sixth month to the final closing, must separate any part of the monthly occupancy fee which relates to a projected reserve fund contribution and hold it in trust for transmittal to the corporation upon registration of the condominium (section 80(5)). Since such a contribution will typically be a component of the projected common expense, the foregoing requirement adds an additional incentive (other than the statutory mandate and good business sense) to register the condominium as expeditiously as possible.

3.1.9.4. Rights and Duties of Declarant

Should a purchaser assume interim occupancy, the declarant must (regardless of any provision to the contrary in the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006 (section 80(7))) satisfy the following obligations:

- to provide those services that the corporation will have a duty to provide to owners after the registration of the declaration and description that creates the unit;
- to repair and maintain the proposed property and the proposed unit in the same manner as the corporation will have a duty to repair after damage and maintain after the registration of the declaration and description that creates the unit;
- within 30 days of the registration of the declaration and description that creates the unit, to notify the purchaser in writing of the date and instrument numbers of the registration, unless within that time the purchaser receives a deed to the unit that is in registerable form.

During the period the declarant has (regardless of any provision to the contrary in the Residential Tenancies Act (section 80(7))) the following rights:

- the same right of entry that the corporation will have after the registration of the declaration and description that creates the unit;
- to withhold consent to an assignment of the right to occupy the proposed unit;

032 Atherley v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1995) [dispute about interest on phantom mortgage, tender on purchaser justified]

- to charge a reasonable fee for consenting to an assignment of the right to occupy the proposed unit (section 80(6)).

3.1.9.5. Adjustment of Taxes

As noted above, the monthly occupancy charge may include a component for estimated taxes for the unit during the interim occupancy period. The estimate of taxes may vary from the amount of the actual taxes levied. In order that neither the declarant nor the purchaser is unjustly enriched at the others expense, provision is made requiring the declarant to refund to the purchaser any amount paid in excess of the actual taxes (section 80(8)) and permitting the declarant to require the purchaser to make good any shortfall between the amount paid and the actual taxes (section 80(9)).

3.1.10. Application of the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006

The following provisions of the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006 are inapplicable to the interim occupancy, and interim occupancy costs, of residential units:

- Section 149, 150 and 151 which deal with care homes
- Section 165, 166 and 167 which deal with mobile home sites
- And sections 105 to 136 (Part VII) which deal with the rules relating to rent (section 80(10)).

Declarant as Fiduciary

A declarant is in the position of a fiduciary to purchasers, arm's length owners, and the corporation. The declarant may not put his interests in conflict with theirs¹.

3.2 LEASE OF UNITS BY OWNERS

Generally, a unit owner is free to lease out the unit to third parties and neither the declaration nor by-laws of a corporation can prohibit this fundamental right of property ownership¹. A lease includes, in addition to a head lease, a sublease or an assignment of lease (section 23 of 48 of 01). There is an obligation on any owner who leases a unit, or renews a lease of the unit, to :

- notify the corporation that the unit is leased;
- provide the corporation with the lessee's name, the owner's address and a copy of the lease or renewal or a summary of it in the Form 5 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 40 of 49 of 01); and
- provide the lessee with a copy of the declaration, by-laws and rules of the corporation (section 83(1)).

within 30 days of entering into the lease or renewal.

Owner's must also provide written notice of the termination of a lease (no time frame is prescribed within which such notice must be given) (section 83(2)).

The corporation must keep a record of all of the above notices that it receives (section 83(1)).

Should an owner fail to pay common expenses the corporation may give notice to a tenant to direct payment of the rent to the corporation to make up the arrears in contributions (section 87)².

Lessee/occupants must comply with the declaration, by-laws, rules and the *Condominium Act*³.

4.1.1. The First Board

Under the old legislation the installation of a condominium’s first board was a cumbersome process if the strict letter of the legislation was followed. Several weeks could pass before all procedures were followed and by-laws could be passed and consented to for registration. As a matter of practice, many declarants simply ignored the niceties and installed a board, passed bylaws, and had owners (i.e. the declarant) consent to the by-laws, all on the same day. While cautious solicitors discouraged this practice, it had the appeal of practicality and no apparent prejudice to any interest. Under the Condominium Act, new procedures have been introduced which eliminate pointless red tape and give clear direction.

It is the declarant’s responsibility to appoint, within ten days of registration of a condominium, at least three qualified (see section 29(1)) persons or such greater number as the declaration requires, to be the first board of the corporation (section 42(1) and 42(4)). While this first board is almost certainly going to be non-arm’s length to the declarant, the board members are bound to exercise the same standard of care, and will be subject to the same liability for breach of duty, and the same rules for disclosure of interest in contracts, as any other director. The declarant’s appointee’s to the board are in office at the declarant’s pleasure, and it may remove and substitute directors at any time up to the turnover meeting (following the declarant’s sale of a majority of the units), at which time a new board will be installed (section 42(2) and 42(3)).

4.1.1.1. Conduct of Business by the First Board – Meetings Not Required

In addition to the usual vehicles available to condominium boards to conduct business (in person or through a real time teleconference system (section 35), the declarant appointed board is graced with the convenience of being able to pass resolutions by unanimous written vote (section 42(5)). No formal meeting, or simultaneous communication amongst directors, is required. This convenience is not available to any other constituted board and presumably exists in recognition of the probability/certainty that the declarant appointed board will always act with one mind, and no open debate is required on the subject matter of any resolution.

4.1.1.2. Enlargement of the First Board

No later than the 30th day after the declarant has transferred 20% of the units in the condominium, or the 90th day after the declarant transfers the first unit, the first board (unless it was appointed or elected before May 5, 2001 (section 42(12))) must call and hold a meeting of owners. The only exception to this rule is in the case where a declarant has advised the first board in writing that it has conveyed more than one-half of the units (section 42(7)).

Although the purpose of holding this meeting is not specified, the Condominium Act permits the owners present at the meeting to elect two directors to the first board, provided the owners of a minimum of 25% of the units not owned by the declarant are present at the meeting (section 42(7) and 42(8)). To be counted in the quorum an owner must have been entitled to have received notice of the meeting (an owner who received a conveyance after the notices were sent would not be eligible), must be entitled to vote (an owner would be ineligible if more than 30 days common expenses are in arrears, and no votes are available for parking and storage unit owners (section 49), and must be present or represented by proxy (section 42(10)).

The two directors elected by the owners at the meeting are 'supernumerary' in that they are eligible for office regardless of the number of directors stated in the declaration to be the maximum (section 42(11)). They are intended to be the owner's 'voice and ears' in the on-going operation of the condominium while the declarant is in control.

4.1.2. Turn-over Meeting

At the time of registration of a condominium the declarant will be the registered owner of all the units and common interests and, as the only 'owner', the only person entitled to vote on and in matters requiring the owners endorsement (such as the organizing bylaws). The declarant will control the majority of the board of directors, and will have selected the property manager in charge of operations, maintenance, and the like. In the normal course, over time (whether days, months, or longer) the declarant will convey units to arm's length purchasers. Eventually (again, in the normal course; exceptions will exist depending on the declarant's intentions), the number or units owned by the declarant will be equal to or less than the number of units owned by other persons. This triggers an event which, under both the old legislation and the Condominium Act, is known as the 'turn-over meeting' (section 43(1)) at which a new board will be elected and the declarant will turn over possession of certain corporate records and other material.

4.1.2.1. Time for Turn-over Meeting

As stated above, the clock begins on the timing of the turn-over meeting when the declarant ceases to own a majority of the units in the condominium. It should be noted there is no qualification on the term 'unit' and, unlike voting rights, parking and storage units are on the same level as main units such as apartment units. By way of example, in the case of a condominium containing 100 dwelling units, 100 storage units, and 150 parking units, the board would not call the meeting until the declarant had conveyed 175 units of one type or another. When this event occurs the board shall, not more than 21 days thereafter, call the meeting of the owners known as the turn-over meeting (section 43(2)) and hold it within 21 days after the calling (section 43(3)).

4.1.2.2. How is the Turn-Over Meeting Called?

The first board will resolve by written resolution (if the declarant appointed board has not been joined by two owner-elected directors (section 42(6)), or by in person or telephone meeting resolution, to call the meeting. The usual protocols and steps to give notice of an owner's meeting as set out in section 47 must then be followed. Since section 47(1)(b) requires the notice to be given at least 15 days before the day of the meeting, the earliest the meeting can be held is 16 days after the date the declarant ceases to own a majority of the units (assuming the board calls and sends notice the same day as the triggering event). The latest it can be held is 42 days after the triggering event.

4.1.2.3. The Turn-Over

4.1.2.3.1. Turn-Over at the Meeting

The two essential agenda items for the turn-over meeting are the election of the new board and the declarant's turnover of certain records and material. These events will occur in the foregoing order. After the election, while the meeting is still continuing, the declarant will turn-over the following to the new board:

- the seal of the corporation;
- the minute book for the corporation including a copy of the registered declaration, registered by-laws, current rules and minutes of owners' meetings and board meetings;

- copies of all agreements entered into by the corporation or the declarant or the declarant’s representatives on behalf of the corporation, including management contracts, deeds, leases, licences and easements;
- copies of all policies of insurance and the related certificates or memoranda of insurance and all insurance trust agreements;
- bills of sale or transfers for all items that are assets of the corporation but not part of the property;
- the records of owners and mortgages contact information for notice purposes (maintained under section 47(2)) and the record of notice of leases (maintained under section 83(3)); and
- all records that it has related to the units or to employees of the corporation (section 43(4)).

4.1.2.4. Second Turn-Over by Delivery

Within 30 days after the meeting the declarant must deliver the following to the new board:

- the existing warranties and guarantees for all the equipment, fixtures and chattels included in the sale of either the units or common elements that are not protected by warranties and guarantees given directly to a unit purchaser;
- the as-built architectural, structural, engineering, mechanical, electrical and plumbing plans;
- the as-built specifications, indicating all substantive changes, if any, from the original specifications;
- all existing plans for underground site services, site grading, drainage and landscaping, and television, radio or other communications services;
- all other existing plans and information not mentioned in the above three items that are relevant to the repair or maintenance of the property;
- if the property of the corporation is subject to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act,
 - proof, in the form, if any, prescribed by the Minister, that the units and common elements have been enrolled in the Plan within the meaning of that Act in accordance with the regulations made under that Act, and
 - a copy of all final reports on inspections that the Corporation within the meaning of that Act requires be carried out on the common elements;
- a table setting out the responsibilities for repair after damage and maintenance and indicating whether the corporation or the owners are responsible;
- a schedule setting out what constitutes a standard unit for each class of unit that the declarant specifies for the purpose of determining the responsibility for repairing improvements after damage and insuring them;
- all financial records of the corporation and of the declarant relating to the operation of the corporation from the date of registration of the declaration and the description;
- if the meeting is held after nine months following the registration of the declaration and description, the reserve fund study that is required within the year following the registration of the declaration and description;
- all reserve fund studies that have been completed or are required to have been completed at the time the meeting is held, other than the reserve fund study that is required within the year following the registration of the declaration and description;
- a copy of the most current disclosure statement delivered to a purchaser of a unit in the corporation under section 72 before the meeting (section 43(5)).

4.1.2.5. Third Turn-Over by Delivery

Within 60 days after the turn-over meeting the declarant must deliver audited financial statements prepared by the auditor as of the last day of the month in which the meeting is held (section 43(7)).

4.1.3. Cost of the Turn-Over

All of the items required to be turned over in the first and second turn-overs referred to above are to be prepared at the declarant's expense except for expenses relating to the reserve fund study(s) (section 43(6)). The cost of the audited financial turned over in the third turn-over are prepared at the cost of the corporation (section 43(7)).

4.1.4. Default in Turning Over all Required Materials

In the event the declarant fails to comply, without reasonable excuse, to deliver over any required item to be turned over, on application of the corporation a court shall (not may) order the declarant to pay the corporation for the damages it has incurred and pay the costs of the application (section 43(9)(a) and (b)). In addition the court may (not shall) order the declarant to pay the corporation an additional amount of up to $10,000.00 (effectively a punitive penalty) and order the declarant to rectify the default (section 43(9)(c) and (d)). Such a failure is also an offence punishable by fine on conviction (section 137).

4.2.1. What is a Performance Audit?

Generally described, a performance audit is an inspection and testing due diligence process targeted at only the common elements of certain condominium corporations. It is carried out by a professional engineer or architect qualified to practice their profession in Ontario (section 44(1)) and leads to a report identifying, among other things, any deficiencies in the performance of the common elements that meet the description of a claimable deficiency under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act (section 44(4)). At the end of the process the performance audit report is delivered to the board and, if an Ontario New Home Warranty is applicable, to the warranty Corporation (section 9).

While the Condominium Act's specifications and requirement for a performance audit are new, the old legislation having been silent on the subject, the principle of a review of the technical aspects of the building prior to the expiry of warranty periods has been a standing practice. With relatively clear parameters set for the task, including follow-up by the warranty Corporation (for applicable residential condominiums), a general framework is now in place which will be common to all condominiums which require performance audits (and will serve as a model for those condominiums which have performance audits done voluntarily).

4.2.2. Which Situations Require a Performance Audit?

Performance Audit's are required only for condominiums with one or more residential units in the property and for common elements condominiums (section 44(1)). In the first case, the completed performance audit will be delivered to the board and the warranty Corporation (if applicable¹) before the end of the 11th month after registration (section 44(9)). This filing with the warranty Corporation serves as a notice of claim under the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act for the deficiencies noted in the report (section 44(10)). Concerning the second case, it is not clear why common elements condominiums have been singled out for the performance audit requirement regardless of use (i.e. residential/ non-residential) or the use of the lands (the 'tied lands') with which it is associated. In any event, since construction in the common elements will be of fundamental importance to the owners of the tied lands, a thorough review by a qualified third party will clearly be of use.

Standard freehold condominiums, leasehold condominiums, vacant land condominiums, and phased condominiums, are all subject to the performance audit requirement, provided one or more units for residential purposes is included in the corporation.

4.2.3. Time for the Performance Audit

The performance audit must be conducted 'no earlier than six months, and no later than 10 months, following registration' of the condominium (section 44(2)). The purpose of this 'window' is to allow some time to pass and experience to occur with the completed common elements before the audit is commenced (thereby promoting the exposure of potential and actual defects), but providing a minimum time frame of one month for the studies completion (which would be the case if it is commenced on the last day before the 10th month after registration). The latter ensures that the study is complete before the first year is out and the ONHWP warranty is still in full force.

¹ The warranty Corporation is not involved in non-residential construction or construction which is not new (i.e. a conversion of an existing non-residential building to a residential condominium would not involve the warranty corporation).

4.2.4. Cost of Performance Audit

The performance audit is at the cost of the condominium corporation and forms part of the budget for the first year of its existence (section 44(3)). It will be paid through the unit owner's contributions to the common expenses for the year.

4.2.5. Nature of Deficiencies Being Audited

The deficiencies which the performance audit seeks to ferret out and identify are not global in scope. In the case of condominiums containing residential units the deficiencies are those which would give rise to a claim for payment for breach of warranty (section 44(4(a)) of the Condominium Act and section 14 of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act). The warranty provided by the warranty Corporation is that with respect to the common elements:

- they are constructed in a workmanlike manner and free from defects in materials including windows, doors and caulking such that the building envelope prevents water penetration;
- that the electrical, plumbing and heating delivery and distribution systems are free from defects in material and work;
- that all exterior cladding is free from defects in material and work resulting in detachment, displacement or physical deterioration;
- they are free from violations of the Ontario Building Code regulations under which the building permit was issued, affecting health and safety, including but not limited to fire safety, insulation, air and vapour barriers, ventilation, heating and structural adequacy;
- they are fit for habitation;
- they are constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code;
- there will be no water penetration through the basement or foundation.
- free of major structural defects (which is a defect that results in failure of the load-bearing portion of any building or materially and adversely affects its load-bearing function; or, that materially and adversely affects the use of such building for the purpose for which it was intended; and includes significant damage due to soil movement, major cracks in basement walls, collapse or serious distortion of joints or roof structure and chemical failure of materials, but excluding any defect attributable in whole or in part to a Year 2000 compliance problem, flood damage, dampness not arising from failure of a load-bearing portion of the building, damage to drains or services, damage to finishes and damage arising from acts of God, acts of the owners and their tenants, licensees vites, acts of civil and military authorities, acts of war, riot, insurrection or civil commotion and malicious damage) (7 year warranty from date specified in certificate of completion and possession (section 16 of ONHWP regulation 892);

With the exception of the last item the warranty is for a two year period following the date the work was completed for possession.

(Section 13(1) of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act, and section 14 and 15(2) of ONHWP regulation 892)

Excluded from the above are:

- defects in materials, design and work supplied by the condominium;
- secondary damage caused by defects, such as property damage and personal injury;
- normal wear and tear;
- normal shrinkage of materials caused by drying after construction;
- damage caused by dampness or condensation due to failure by the condominium to maintain adequate ventilation;
- damage resulting from improper maintenance;
- alterations, deletions or additions made by the condominium;
- subsidence of the land around the building or along utility lines, other than subsidence beneath the footings of the building;
- damage resulting from an act of God (section 13(2) of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act).
- damage caused by insects and rodents, except where construction is in contravention of the Ontario Building Code;
- damage caused by municipal services or other utilities;
- surface defects in work and materials specified and accepted in writing by the condominium at the date of possession .

(section 13(2) of the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act)

In a case where the deficiencies would give rise to a claim in respect of the above had the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act applied (for example, in the case of a non-residential common elements condominium), the performance audit will identify the same deficiencies regardless of the availability of the ONHWP warranty (section 44(4)(b)).

4.2.6. Carrying out the Audit

In identifying the deficiencies, the performance auditor must, as a minimum, carry out the following protocol:

- inspect the major components of the buildings on the property which, subject to the regulations made under this Act, include the foundation, parking garage, wall construction, air and vapour barriers, windows, doors, elevators, roofing, mechanical system, electrical system, fire protection system, and elevating devices, as defined in the Elevating Devices Act, if any, of the buildings on the property and the telecommunications systems, if any, that service the buildings (section 12(2) of 48 of 01);

- inspect the sprinkler systems, if any, and the outside parking areas, if any (section (section 12(3) of 48 of 01);
- review all final reports on inspections that the Corporation within the meaning of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act requires be carried out on the common elements; and
- conduct a survey of the owners of the corporation as to what evidence, if any, they have seen of :
 - damage to the units that may have been caused by defects in the common elements, and
 - defects in the common elements that may cause damage to the units.

(Section 44(5))

The auditor has the authority, for the purposes of the audit, to enter on the property, alone or accompanied by a necessary expert, require any person to produce any drawings, specifications, or information that may, on reasonable grounds, be relevant, make inspections, tests, and inquiries, and call upon experts (section 44(6)). No one may obstruct the auditor from exercising the powers nor may anyone provide false information or refuse to provide information (section 44(7)).

4.2.7. Written Report

The performance auditor must prepare a written report containing at least the following:

- a copy of the person's certificate of authorization within the meaning of the Professional Engineers Act or certificate of practice within the meaning of the Architects Act, as the case may be;
- details of the inspection and findings made by the person in the course of conducting the audit;
- a statement that the person has reviewed all final reports on inspections carried out for ONHWP;
- a copy of the survey of the owners and a summary of the results of it;
- the deficiencies determined to exist; and
- a copy of the corporation's current declaration and description.

4.3.1. What is Telecommunications?

The Condominium Act defines the term ‘telecommunications’ as meaning: “the emission, transmission or reception of any combination of signs, signals, writing, images, sound, data, alphanumeric characters or intelligence of any nature by wire, cable, radio or an optical, electromagnetic or any similar technical system” (section 22(1)).

Examples of telecommunications include activities relating to systems such as the following:

- Broadcast television signals, whether sent by cable, satellite, or ground signal to antenna
- Telephone and fax communications, whether by wire or air
- Internet communications
- Security video observance systems (on-site)
- Off-site security monitoring of premises

4.3.2. What is a Telecommunications Agreement?

A telecommunications agreement is defined as an “agreement for the provision of services or facilities related to telecommunications to, from or within the property of a corporation and includes a grant or transfer of an easement, lease or licence through the property of a corporation for the purposes of telecommunications” (section 22(1)).

4.3.3. Past ‘Abuses’

Ontario’s old condominium legislation, having its roots in a time (the 1960’s) when telecommunications was a monopoly and cable television was only dabbling its feet in the water (and facing the consumer resistance to paying for what was regarded as free), did not address the subject of telecommunications. Buildings were routinely wired for telephone service and electricity, and that was basically all that was expected or required. Ownership of the installed systems, particularly cable, was often gray, with the presumption that it belonged to the supplier. Short form agreements were routinely entered into, possibly entailing permanent easements, which created obstacles for alternative services. Examples of declarant’s directly or indirectly arranging for ownership of a centralized telecommunications ‘hub’ room so that entry of alternate services was effectively impossible without the ‘hub’ room owners consent, or gaining benefit from arranging ‘exclusive service’ to the condominium, arose¹. Changes in the telecommunications environment, including deregulation of telecommunications monopolies, have brought the opening of new opportunities for services and the proliferation and multiplication of the forms and means of telecommunications. The importance of providing specific ground rules for telecommunications availability has been addressed in the Condominium Act, particularly as it respects condominiums with residential units.

4.3.4. The New Rules - General

The potential for telecommunications agreements and controls being in place at the time a condominium is created remains and, for most unit purchasers, will be an accepted fact at the time of purchase. The disclosure statement will provide full information (section 72(3)(n)). It remains possible for exclusive service arrangements to be in place which may operate indefinitely for non-residential condominiums (section 22(8)). However, under the Condominium Act, the ability of all condominiums to introduce or accommodate new systems is in place and, in the case of condominiums containing residential units, the ability to terminate telecommunications agreements has been given in specific circumstances.

4.3.4.1. Introducing New Systems

All types of condominiums may, regardless of the presence of an existing system, by resolution of the board (not by by-law):

- Make an agreement for a ‘network upgrade’ (which is undefined but reasonably means an improvement to an existing system that will be available to all users and not only some) to a system which services the units(section 22(2)(a));
- Make an agreement for a new system which is independent (‘unconnected’) to a parallel system that services the units (section 22(2)(b));
- Amend an agreement for an existing system that services the units to permit the supplier to supply all (or part) of the services directly to the unit owners (section 22(2)(c)). A properly executed agreement of this nature will override any provision in a declaration which describes such costs as common expenses (section 22(4));

4.3.4.1.1. Condition Precedent to Board Action on Telecommunications Agreements

Before making a commitment to any of the above actions the corporation must follow certain procedural steps to measure the acceptance of the owners (section 22(3)).

4.3.4.1.1.1. Substantial Addition, Alteration, Improvement, Change

If the agreement entails a ‘substantial change in a service’ (which includes anything with a cost exceeding 10% of the budgeted common expenses (section 97(6))) then it must be approved by at a duly called meeting by a vote of the owners who own at least 2/3’s of the units (section 97(4)).

4.3.4.1.1.2. Non-Substantial Addition, Alteration, Improvement

If the agreement does not obtain a substantial change to a service the corporation must send a notice to all owners:

- Describing the proposed change
- Stating the estimated cost
- Specifying that the owners (meaning any one of them) have the right to requisition a meeting of the owners; and,
- Containing a copy of section 46 (requisition procedure) and section 97 (section 97(3)(a)).

If no owner requisitions a meeting or, in the event a meeting is requisitioned the owners do not vote against the change, then the board may proceed with the agreement (section 97(3)(b)).

4.3.5. Use of Hubs – Condominiums with Residential Units Created on or after May 5, 2001

If a condominium created under the Condominium Act contains one or more residential units, special provision is made to allow access to a ‘part of the property designed to control, facilitate or provide telecommunications to, from or within the property’ to accommodate the objects of a telecommunications agreement. In this regard, provided the condominium does not have either:

1. an easement over the property described in the description (meaning the entire condominium property, not simply the ‘hub’); or,
2. the right to use the property;

that is adequate for either:

- The telecommunications agreement that it has entered into (after following the above procedures); or,
- The telecommunications system that it intends to install and use on the property (i.e. install to own);

then section 22(5) gives the corporation (and the a party to the agreement, if any) a non-exclusive easement over the ‘hub’ part of the property for the purpose of installing and using a telecommunications system. This over-riding, albeit non-exclusive, right is intended to discourage a ‘hub’ owner from presenting an obstacle to the use of an available facility when the alternative is discouraging.

4.3.7. Avoiding Hub Interference

If a part of a property is designed to control, facilitate or provide telecommunications to, from, or within a property and has a system installed in it which will interfere with another system to be installed on the property, the owner is obliged, on 30 days written notice from the corporation, to make all necessary steps that are reasonable to accommodate the intended system (section 22(6)).

4.3.8. 10 Year Horizon for Exclusive Easements - Residential

Telecommunications easements pertaining to any condominium property, whether the corporation was created before or after May 5, 2001, that includes one or more residential units, are non-exclusive after the expiry of the later of ten years following the grant of easement and the registration of the condominium (section 22(8)).

4.3.9. Termination of Telecommunications Agreements – Residential¹

Except for telecommunication agreements entered into after the turn-over meeting which are non-exclusive, and which make allowance for the installation of alternate systems, a corporation which includes one or more residential units may terminate a telecommunications agreement if:

- At least 10 years have passed since the later of the execution of the agreement and the registration of the condominium;
- By resolution the board has approved the termination of the agreement;
- The owners of more than 50% have of the units consent in writing to the termination; and

- The corporation gives the other party to the telecommunications agreement 120 written notice of the effective date of termination (section 22(9) and 22 (10))

4.3.10. Actions on Termination

The other party to a terminated telecommunications agreement has 30 days following the termination to remove any personal property. The removal must be carried out to facilitate the installation of similar telecommunications property and the corporation must be reimbursed for any damage caused to the corporation's property by the removal (section 22 (11) and 22 (12)). If the property is not removed within the 30 days, it is deemed to be abandoned to the corporation (section 22 (13)).

4.4.2. Termination of Agreements and Budget Statement Accountability.....	4.4-3
4.4.3. Telecommunication Agreements.....	4.4-3

4.4.1. General

Depending upon the extent and complexity of a condominium’s property, it may be a party to one or more agreements with other persons. These agreements may be to provide the corporation with a service or good, or it may be the condominium corporation doing the supply. Two familiar examples of the first type of agreement are management agreements (providing for the engagement of a property manager (corporate or individual) to manage all or some of the tasks of administering and operating the property) and insurance trust agreements (providing for a trustee to receive insurance funds paid for damage to the property). Other agreements not out of the ordinary include agreements with goods and service suppliers such as natural gas, electricity and other utilities providers, waste haulers, landscaping maintainers, snow clearing services, and so forth. An example of the second type of agreement may be the lease or licensing of common elements or property owned by the corporation such as a unit in the condominium.

While agreements with condominium corporations are governed by the general laws of contract, the Condominium Act makes special exceptions including special termination provisions in the case of certain agreements. These provisions are detailed below.

4.4.1.1. Management Agreements

Since a declarant has an interest in the operation of a condominium due to the declarant’s accountability for the accuracy of the first year’s budget (section 75), and may not have any direct interest or capability or running the operations side of a condominium, one of the first orders of business for the declarant’s board is to authorize the engagement of a property manager.

While the declarant’s board is obligated to act with reasonable prudence and in good faith (section 37), a board elected from third party unit owners may have different views as to the terms of a management contract, as well as the identity of the manager. To accommodate the ability to make change the Condominium Act provides that management agreements entered into before the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting held under section 43(1) may be terminated unilaterally by resolution (a by-law is neither required nor appropriate) of the board (section 111(1))¹.

The termination cannot be immediate, as written notice of the effective date of termination must be given to the other party to the agreement at least 60 days before the termination date (section 111(2)).

4.4.1.2. Agreements for the Provisions of Goods or Services

Agreements for the provision of goods and services on a continuing basis which were entered into before the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting may be terminated by resolution of the new board passed within 12 months of their election (section 112(1) and 112(2)I.) subject to two exceptions (and the general rider set out below). An agreement of the type described cannot be terminated if one or more other parties to the agreement is/are a condominium corporation (section 112(1)) or if the agreement is a telecommunications agreement as described in section 22.

As with management agreements, a termination of this type of agreement under section 112 cannot be immediate. Written notice must be given to the other party at least 60 days before the effective date of termination (section 112(4)).

Examples of the subject matter of this type of agreement include waste removal, groundskeeping, pool maintenance, utility supply, concierge, superintending, and the like.

4.4.1.3. Agreements for the Provision of Facilities other than on a Non-Profit Basis

Agreements for the provision of facilities other than on a non-profit basis which were entered into before the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting may be terminated by resolution of the new board passed within 12 months of their election (section 112(1) and 112(2) 2.) subject to two exceptions (and the general rider set out below). An agreement of the type described cannot be terminated if one or more other parties to the agreement is/are a condominium corporation (section 112(1)) or if the agreement is a telecommunications agreement as described in section 22.

As with management agreements, a termination of this type of agreement under section 112 cannot be immediate. Written notice must be given to the other party at least 60 days before the effective date of termination (section 112(4)).

Examples of the subject of this type of agreement include access to recreation, meeting, and parking facilities owned by others off the condominium property.

4.4.1.4. Agreements for the Lease of All or Part of the Common Elements for Business Purposes

Agreements for the lease of all or part of the common elements for business purposes which were entered into before the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting may be terminated by resolution of the new board passed within 12 months of their election (section 112(1) and 112(2) 3.) subject to two exceptions (and the general rider set out below). An agreement of the type described cannot be terminated if one or more other parties to the agreement is/are a condominium corporation (section 112(1)) or if the agreement is a telecommunications agreement as described in section 22.

As with management agreements, a termination of this type of agreement under section 112 cannot be immediate. Written notice must be given to the other party at least 60 days before the effective date of termination (section 112(4)).

Examples of the subject of this type of agreement include a lease to the declarant for the purposes of operating a sales office, or a lease of a parking area.

4.4.1.5. General Exception to Rights of Termination

The right to terminate given by section 112 (for the three types of agreement referred to immediately above) is subject to the general rider that no permission is granted to terminate an easement (section 112(5)). This provision may have application if an agreement included a requirement to grant or receive an easement as part of the bargain. Clearly, an a conveyance of an easement pursuant to the agreement would not come to an end if the agreement itself were terminated (unless the transfer of easement provided for same).¹

4.4.1.6. Mutual Use Agreements

Mutual use agreements are agreement entered into between a corporation and one or more other persons (including condominium corporations) which provides for the mutual use, provision, maintenance, or cost-sharing of facilities or services (section 113(1)) and may delegate day-to-day operational decisions to a committee¹.

If a mutual use agreement was entered into before the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting any party to the agreement (whether a condominium corporation or not) may, within 12 months following the election, make an application to court for an order terminating the agreement (section 113(1)). On such an application, the court may amend or terminate the agreement or any part of it, or make any other necessary order provided it is satisfied which respect to two matters:

1. the disclosure statement did not clearly and adequately disclose the provisions of the agreement in question; and,
2. the agreement or any of its provisions produces a result that is oppressive or unconscionably prejudicial to the corporation or any of its owners (section 113(3)).

Both of these findings must be made before the court can exercise its jurisdiction to change the contractual relationship. One finding is not sufficient.

Examples of agreements of this nature are common in projects which part of the project being within one condominium's property and the balance of the project lying within one or more other condominium's property or property owned by a third party. The physical interrelationship may call for the sharing of facilities such as garbage rooms, parking garages, elevators, recreation facilities and so forth, all of which will be governed by agreement (whether called mutual use, reciprocal, shared facilities, or the like).

4.4.1.7. Insurance Trust Agreements

Section 114 of the Condominium Act provides that an insurance trust agreement may be terminated by the corporation at any time, and regardless of whether it was entered into before or after the election of the new board at the turn-over meeting, provided only that 60 days written notice is given to the trustee prior to the effective date of termination. This right applies despite anything contained in the agreement itself or anything in the declaration. It is notable that the section does not state whether the termination can be effected by resolution or whether a by-law is required. Since an insurance trust agreement is an 'agreement for the provision of services', arguably a resolution would suffice in the first year after the election of the new board while a by-law would be required thereafter.

4.4.2. Termination of Agreements and Budget Statement Accountability

In general terms, the declarant is financially responsible for the accuracy of the budget statement for the one year period following registration of a condominium (section 75). An exception relates to any excess common expenses attributable to the termination of a management agreement or one of the three types of agreements described in section 112 (see above). Such excess common expenses are not to be included when determining whether there are excess common expenses (section 75(2)).

4.4.3. Telecommunication Agreements

Telecommunications agreements are expressly excepted from the agreement termination rights given in section 111 to 113. For an explanation of the circumstances and termination rights respecting telecommunications agreements see the section in this book on that topic.

Every owner has the right to rely on the corporation to carry its object of managing the property and corporation assets (section 17(1)) and its duties, including the taking of all reasonable steps to ensure compliance with the Condominium Act, the declaration, by-laws and rules (section 17(3)). An owner also the right to rely on the board properly managing the affairs of the corporation (section 27(1)), and the ability to independently secure compliance with the foregoing constitutional directives (section 134(1)). In the normal course however, an owner’s most important right is arguably the right to cast a vote (or more than one depending on the units owned) in a variety of matters concerning the corporation’s governance including the election of directors, the introduction of new by-laws, changes to the declaration and corporate assets, and the termination of the governance of the property by the Condominium Act. The rule, in all cases, is one vote per voting unit (not all units can vote but those that can each have only one vote) (section 51(2))¹.

Generally speaking, anything which requires the approval of the owners by vote can only be approved at a meeting of the owners called for the purpose (either singularly or together with other purposes) (section 45(1)). Subject to the specific topics discussed below, the conduct of an owner’s meeting is not prescribed by the Condominium Act. While by-laws may purport to govern such conduct, it is questionable whether such is allowed as section 56 of the Condominium Act provides no express authority for such corporate legislation. This does not leave a void on the subject. Formal group meetings of condominium owners are, in a practical sense, no different than formal group meetings in a wide variety of other situations. The fundamental purpose is to navigate an agenda while providing fair opportunity for all participants to voice their positions and points of view and call the matters to a vote, all in an orderly fashion. Reference to long-accepted and time-proven rules, such as Robert’s Rules of Parliamentary Procedure (widely carried in bookstores), will provide a useful brief on the questions which may arise regarding the conduct of a meeting. A meeting will be usually be chaired by the corporation’s president, although a stand-in is not irregular (in any case, the chair can be appointed at the meeting by vote of the owner’s present), who is the arbiter of procedure and the captain of progress at the meeting

5.1.1.1. Annual General Meetings

The Condominium Act mandates that every corporation hold a general meeting of owners not more than three months after the registration of the condominium and thereafter within six months of the end of each fiscal year of the respective corporation (section 45(2)). An auditor must be appointed by the owners at this first meeting (section 60(1)). These annual general meetings may or will address regular business such as elections of directors, appointment of auditors (section 60(1)), tabling of financial reports (section 69(1)), but it is an iron-clad rule that an owner may raise for discussion at an annual general meeting any matter relevant to the affairs and business of the corporation (section 45(3)). This right does not extend to raising such matters off the cuff and calling a vote on them. Only matters dealt with in the notice of meeting can be called to a vote (section 47(10)). However, the right to raise discussion on any relevant topic is a valuable and important one in a condominium context, in which communications among owners generally may be considerably less than ideal or, perhaps, non-existent.

5.1.1.2. General Meetings – Call by Board or Requisitioned by Owners

Other than the annual general meeting there is no general requirement for a corporation to hold a general meeting of owners. With the exception of the period leading up to and including the turn-over meeting held under section 43, it is conceivable that a condominium may go through much or all of its life without holding any owner’s meeting other than the AGM.

Nonetheless, it is open to the board at all times to call a meeting of owners for the transaction of any business (section 45(4)) or, in certain circumstances, for the owners to requisition a meeting (section 46(1)).

5.1.1.2.1. Requisitioned Meetings

Any owner, or group of owners, who:

- own not less than 15% of the units;
- are listed in the record maintained under section 47(2); and,
- are entitled to vote,

may requisition a meeting of the owners to deal with business of the requisitioner’s choosing (section 46(1))¹.

With respect to the first of these three criteria it should be noted that in determining whether the 15% level is achieved all units, regardless of their purpose (for example, parking and storage units, or a telecommunications unit) are to be counted. However, all owners in the requisition group must be ‘entitled to vote’ which means that each of them must own at least one unit in addition to a unit which has no vote associated with it (such as a parking or storage unit (section 49(3)), and each of their common expense contributions must be current or in arrears by no more than 30 days (section 49(1)).

The requisition must be:

- In writing and signed by the requisitionists;
- State the nature of the business to be presented at the meeting; and,
- Be delivered personally or by registered mail to the president or secretary of the board or deposited at the address for service of the corporation (section 46(2)).

With respect to the second of these three criteria, if the business to be presented includes the removal or one or more of the directors, the requisition shall state, for each such director, the name and reasons for removal of the director, and whether the director was elected by owner-occupants under section 51(6).

A board receiving a requisition for a meeting from owners must call and hold the meeting within 35 days of its receipt, unless the requisitionists have requested in the requisition, or consented in writing, that the business be presented at the next following annual general meeting (section 46(4)).

Should the board fail in its duty to call and hold the requisitioned meeting, any requisitioner can call (meaning set the time and place and issue notice of the meeting) the meeting provided it must be held no later than 45 days after the notice is first issued (section 46(5))¹. On request a requisitioner is entitled to be reimbursed for their reasonable costs incurred in calling the meeting (section 46(6)). Such things as costs incurred in seeking advice on the contents of the notice, preparation, copying and delivery of the notice, would be reimburseable. The costs of holding the meeting are not expressed to be reimburseable.

5.1.2. Notices to Owners and Mortgagees

The Condominium Act is replete with directions to provide notices to owners generally, for one or more of a wide range of purposes, including the calling of meetings. In some cases specific directives are given for the subject matter of the notice (for example, section 97(3) contains directions for the contents of a notice dealing with changes to the common elements), the following are the general rules (specific matters may have special directions) which are applicable notices to owners and mortgagees and which, if followed, will provide satisfactory service of anything which needs to be given to such persons (section 54). Notices must:

- be in writing;
- be given at least 15 days before the day of the meeting if the notice is a notice of meeting of owners; and
- be given to,
 - (i) each owner who has notified the corporation in writing of the owner's name and address for service, and
 - (ii) each mortgagee of a unit who,
 - (A) under the terms of the mortgage, has the right to vote at a meeting of owners in the place of the unit owner or to consent in writing in the place of the unit owner, and
 - (B) has notified the corporation in writing of the right and the mortgagee's name and address for service (section 47(1))
- specify the place, the date and the hour of the meeting, as well as the nature of the business to be presented at the meeting; and
- be accompanied by,
 - i. a copy of all proposed changes to the declaration, by-laws, rules or agreements that are to be discussed at the meeting, and
 - ii. a copy of the requisition, if an owner has made a requisition under section 46 (section 47(9)).

In the case of notices of meetings it is critical that the notice deal with all matters which may come to a vote. Any matter other than routine procedure cannot be the subject of a vote unless it is clearly disclosed in the notice of meeting (section 47(10)).

5.1.3. Record of Owners and Mortgagees

The information required to deliver a notice as directed by section 47(1) will be contained in a special record maintained by the corporation (section 47(2)), which is used by the corporation only for the purposes of the Condominium Act (i.e. it is not a database that could be supplied by the corporation, for a fee or otherwise, to a telecommunications marketer for the purposes of selling subscriptions) (section 47(3)).

It is essential to appreciate that the record is the official record. Should a unit change hands and the new owner not notify the corporation of their name(s) and address for service, there can be no complaint if (as may well be the case) the notice is not brought to the new owners attention. It is not the responsibility of the corporation to keep track of changes; rather, it is the responsibility of the respective owner (section 47(4) and 47(1)(c)(i))¹.

5.1.Record Date

Notices of Meetings

In the case of notices of meetings, the record for notice is ‘frozen’ 20 days before the day of the meeting (section 47(5)). Since such a notice must be delivered at least 15 days before the day of the meeting, the effect is that a notice of meeting must be delivered within a tight window. For example, a notice of meeting sent on day one, for a meeting to be held on day forth-five, cannot be delivered with reliance on the record as it stands on day one. In such a case it would be the entries in the record on day 21 which would govern the owners/mortgagees to receive notice. The following illustrates the available window:

Day 1 – Record of Owners is Frozen

Days 1 to 5 – Window for Delivering Notice

Day 21 – Day of Meeting

Application of the ‘window constraint’ to particular situations produces peculiarities. For example, section 46(5) permits a requisitionist owner to call a meeting of owners in default of the board doing so; however, the section allows the owner to call a meeting ‘which shall be held within 45 days of the day on which the meeting is called’. To make sense of this in light of the ‘window constraint’ it should be regarded that the meeting is ‘called’ when the first notice of meeting, whether official or not, is delivered, while the last notice(s), which will ensure all persons in the record on the day it is ‘frozen’ are given notice, will be sent out within the five day window.

Other Notices

In the case of any other class of notice to be given to owners/mortgagees the record for notice is ‘frozen’ five (5) days before the notice is given (section 47(6)). Since there is no ‘window’ that is (like notices of meetings) is subject to two variables (i.e. the day notice is given and the day of the meeting) the effect is that a person giving notices for matters other than meetings will compile the list of persons to receive notice on day one, and have until day 6 to deliver or send it.

5.1.4. Service of Notice

5.1.4.1. On Owners

A notice to an owner is properly and sufficiently given if it is:

- delivered to the owner personally;
- sent by prepaid mail addressed to the owner at the address for service that appears in the record;

¹ See chapter 5.2.3. regarding access to records.

- sent by facsimile transmission, electronic mail or any other method of electronic communication if the owner agrees in writing that the party giving the notice may give the notice in this manner; or
- delivered at the owner’s unit or at the mail box for the unit unless,
 - (i) the party giving the notice has received a written request from the owner that the notice not be given in this manner, or
 - (ii) the address for service that appears in the record is not the address of the unit of the owner (section 47(7)).

5.1.4.2. On Mortgagees

A notice to a mortgagee is properly and sufficiently given if it is:

- delivered to the mortgagee personally;
- sent by prepaid mail addressed to the mortgagee at the address for service that appears in the record; or
- sent by facsimile transmission, electronic mail or any other method of electronic communication if the mortgagee agrees in writing that the party giving the notice may give the notice in this manner (section 47(8)).

5.1.5. Waiver of Notice of Meetings

An owner/mortgagee entitled to notice (more particularly be in the (accurately kept) corporate record who is not given notice, is entitled to challenge an outcome (i.e. a vote on approval of a by-law) of the subject matter of the notice. The outcome of a challenge will depend on a variety of factors, but an owner’s mortgagee whose interests are negatively affected would have good grounds in standing on their right to notice (and participation).

In order to eliminate one area of uncertainty, the Condominium Act provides that any owner/mortgagee who attends a meeting (or is represented by proxy at a meeting) is deemed to waive any objection to a failure to give the required notice (section 47(11)). The only exception is in a case where the owner/mortgagee/representative expressly objects to the failure at the meeting. Clearly this would have no affect on the rights of an owner/mortgagee who was not given the required notice and did not attend the meeting (although it should be recognized that the substance of the giving of notice is what is important, and the form is secondary. An owne/mortgagee who was fully aware beforehand of the subject and other details of a meeting would have an uphill battle convincing a judge that a result should be invalidated).

5.1.6. Loss of an Owner’s Right to Vote

Although all owners will always be entitled to notice, no owner is entitled to vote if any contributions payable in respect of the owner’s unit has been in arrears for 30 days or more at the time of the meeting (section 49(1)). An owner can overcome this deprivation by making full payment of the arrears before the meeting is held (section 49(2)).

5.1.7. No Votes for Parking, Storage, or Service Units

The general rule that each unit in a condominium is entitles the owner to one vote does not apply to units intended for:

- Parking purposes;

- Storage purposes; or,
- For the purpose of housing
 - i. Services;
 - ii. Facilities; or,
 - iii. Mechanical installation, unless all of the units in the condominium are used for one or more of the above purposes (section 49(3)).

This treatment of such types of units is intended to ensure that units which characterize the primary intended use and purpose of the condominium control the fundamental actions on governance, and that the votes related to these units are not diluted or skewed by one or more votes relating to units with a secondary stake in the condominiums affairs.

It should be noted that this limitation extends no further than the right to vote. Such owner’s remain entitled to the same notice as any other owner.

5.1.8. Mortgagee’s Right To Vote

Where the terms of a mortgage of a unit gives the mortgagee the right to vote or consent in place of the unit owner, and the mortgagee has notified the corporation of this right and the mortgagee’s name and address for service, then by giving notice at any time up to the fifth day before the date of the meeting the mortgagee may exercise this right in place of the owner (section 48(1)). The notice must be in writing and given to both the corporation and the unit owner.

In the event there is more than one mortgage on title, both or all of which meet the above circumstances and all of whom have given notice, the right to vote will follow the line or priority of the mortgages¹. Should none of the mortgagees exercise the right then the owner has the right to vote or consent (section 48(4)). In the latter regard, exercising the right includes not only giving notice but also turning up at the meeting and voting. A owner who is present at the meeting and otherwise entitled to vote, would be able to cast a vote if a mortgagee who gave notice of intention to exercise the voting right failed to appear.

5.1.9. Quorum

The general requirement for transaction of business at a meeting of owners is the presence of owners who own 25% of the units (section 50(1)). The by-laws of a corporation may increase this level to the presence of owners who own 33 1/3 of the units of the corporation (section 56(1)(c)).

To count towards a quorum an owner must:

- Be entitled to receive notice of the meeting (i.e. must be in the corporate record on the day it is ‘frozen’)
- Must be entitled to vote (i.e. no mortgagee is in position to exercise the right); and,
- Must be present at the meeting or represented by proxy (section 50(2)).

The second criteria makes it clear that owners of parking, storage, and other units without a vote cannot be counted towards the quorum.

Condominiums which have only one owner will have a properly constituted meeting if the owner is present in person or by proxy (section 50(3)).

Certain matters (such as termination of the corporation in various circumstances-section 122, leasehold lease renewals-section 174(5)) require the vote of the owners of 80% of the units, others require 66 2/3's% (substantial changes to the common elements - section 97(4)), and others a majority(greater than 50%+) (confirmation of by-laws). While a meeting called for any of these purposes would be properly convened with the presence of the owner's of 25% of the units, unless the minimum number of votes are present the vote cannot be called. Provided the minimum number of votes is present, the question will carry on a majority of the votes cast¹.

5.1.10. Votes for Joint Owners

If a voting unit is owned by more than one person the direction the vote is cast is determined by the preference of the majority of the unit's joint owners. In the event of a tie (i.e. two owners each with a different view) the vote is not counted (section 51(3)).

5.1.11. Special Rules for Voting for Directors

Subject to the proviso below, on a vote to elect or remove a member of the board all owners entitled to vote may vote for each member of the board (section 51(4)). The effect of this allowance is that if three positions are open on the board then, assuming there are at least three candidates, each owner may cast three votes. Each vote must be cast for a different candidate, and all votes need not be cast (in the foregoing example, an owner may choose to cast two votes and advance the two benefiting candidates at the expense of the third).

5.1.12. Owner-Occupied Units - Elected Director

Where at least 15 per cent of the units of a corporation are owner-occupied on or after time for calling the turn-over meeting required by section 43, one position on the board must be a person elected only by the votes of the owner's of the owner-occupied units (section 51(6)) and that director can only be removed from office by a votes of the owner-occupants (section 51(8)). This right is in addition to the vote for the election or removal of other directors (section 51(7)).

5.1.13. Method of Voting

Voting may be done on a show of hands or on a recorded vote. A recorded vote is to be taken whenever any person entitled to vote at the meeting makes a request (section 52). The request may be made either before the vote or promptly after it is taken (on a show of hands). The latter option ensures that an 'eyeballing' of the hand vote does justice to the actual vote.

5.1.14. Proxy Voting

An owner who cannot or does not wish to attend a meeting to cast one or more votes may appoint another person, a proxy, who may or may not be another unit owner, to exercise the owner's voting rights (section 52).

The instrument appointing the proxy must be in writing under the hand of the appointer (or, should the appointer have an attorney properly authorized under the Powers of Attorney Act, by the attorney) and must be for a particular meeting of owners (a 'global' proxy appointment, indefinite as to time and subject, is not acceptable) (section 52(4)).

227 Page v. Lafleche (1997) [vote to remove directors is majority of votes of a majority of owners]

In the case of a proxy appointment for the election or removal of a director, the instrument of appointment must state the name of the directors for and against whom the proxy is to vote (section 52(5)).

Regulation 48 of 01 prescribes three forms (for different circumstances) which may (but not must, and so a different form, adequate to the purpose, is acceptable) be used as the form for appointing a proxy:

- Form 8 may be used in all cases other than the election or removal of a director (section 13(a) of 48 of 01);
- Form 9 may be used in the case of a proxy that includes a proxy for the election of a director other than for the election of a director for the remainder of the term of a director who has been removed (section 13(b) of 48 of 01); and,
- Form 10 may be used in the case of a proxy for the removal of a director or the election of a director for the remainder of the term of a director who has been removed (section 13(c) of 48 of 01).

Instruments appointing proxies must be retained by the corporation for 90 days following the meeting to which they pertain (section 52(7)).

5.1.15. Majority Vote Rules

Provided there is a quorum, all votes are decided by the majority of the votes cast (section 53). A tie vote will mean the question is lost or will require another vote.

 8. A record of all reserve fund studies and all plans to increase the reserve fund under section 94(8).
 9. A copy of all agreements entered into by or on behalf of the corporation.

 11. All other records as may be prescribed or specified in the by-laws of the corporation including copies of status certificates issued in the previous ten years (section 15 of 48 of 01)

5.2.1.2. Financial Records

Corporation must keep all financial records for at least six years from the end of the last fiscal period to which they relate, or such greater length of time as may be required by any responsible taxing authority (section 55(2)).

5.2.3. Examination of Records

All condominium corporations are obliged to permit an owner, a purchaser, or a mortgagee of a unit, or an agent of any of them duly authorized in writing, to examine the records of the corporation at a reasonable time for all purposes reasonably related to the purposes of the *Condominium Act (section 55(3))*¹. The only exceptions to the foregoing right of access are:

- records relating to employees of the corporation, except for contracts of employment between any of the employees and the corporation;
- records relating to actual or pending litigation or insurance investigations involving the corporation; or
- records relating to specific units or owners unless they relate to the owners unit, the unit being purchased, or the unit that is subject to the mortgage, or, in the case of an owner, records that relate to the owner (section 55(4) and 55(5))².

5.2.4. Copies of Records

Any person entitled to examine records is entitled to receive copies of them from the corporation within a reasonable time provided a request is made and the person prepays a reasonable fee to compensate the corporation for the labour and copying charges (section 55(6)).

Copies of records which have been certified under the corporate seal to be a true copy of a record is admissible in evidence in any proceeding and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, is proof of the facts stated in the copy (section 55(7)).

5.2.5. Penalty for Not Providing Access or Copies

If an owner (which by definition includes a mortgagee in possession, but not other mortgagees or purchasers) is denied the right to examine records or obtain copies of records by the corporation, and there is no reasonable excuse for the denial, the corporation must pay $500.00 to the owner on receiving a written request for payment (section 55(8)). If the sum is not paid it can be recovered by action in the Small Claims Court (section 55(9)) which may also order the corporation to produce the records for examination (section 55(10)).

A condominium corporation’s board makes decisions and takes actions through the passage of resolutions at a board meeting. To pass a resolution a board meeting must be duly called, a motion made and seconded, and a majority of the quorum of directors present must vote in favour of it’s passage.

A board resolution may require nothing other than it’s passage by the board in order to be effective and to be implemented (for example, a board resolution to hire a contractor to undertake maintenance work, or a resolution to commence legal action to enforce the rules or by-laws) or, in the case of resolutions which introduce, amend, or repeal by-laws or rules of the corporation, the opportunity or requirement for confirmation by the owners will be necessary.

5.3.1 By-Laws

Resolutions to make, amend, or repeal by-laws must reasonable and consistent with the Condominium Act or the corporation’s declaration (section 56(6)) and must fall within one or more of seventeen subject matters, namely:

- a) to govern the number, qualification, nomination, election, resignation, removal, term of office and remuneration (which must fix the remuneration and the period, not exceeding three years, for which it is to be paid (section 56(2)) of the directors;
- b) to regulate board meetings, the form of board meetings and the quorum and functions of the board;
- c) to provide that the quorum for the transaction of business at a meeting of owners is those owners who:
 - i. own 33 1/3 per cent of the units of the corporation,
 - ii. are entitled to receive notice of the meeting,
 - iii. are entitled to vote (i.e. are not in +30 days arrears of common expense contributions, own a unit other than parking, storage, and utilities units), and,
 - iv. are present at the meeting or represented by proxy;
- d) to govern the appointment, remuneration, functions, duties, resignation and removal of agents, officers and employees of the corporation and the security, if any, to be given by them to it;
- e) to authorize the borrowing of money to carry out the objects and duties of the corporation provided that if the expenditure is not listed in the budget for the current fiscal year it must be the subject of a by-law to specifically authorize the borrowing (section 56(3));
- f) to authorize the corporation to object to assessments under the Assessment Act on behalf of owners if it gives notice of the objections to the owners, and to authorize the defraying of costs of objections out of the common expenses;

- g) to govern the assessment and collection of contributions to the common expenses;
- h) to establish what constitutes a standard unit for each class of unit specified in the by-law for the purpose of determining the responsibility for repairing improvements after damage and insuring them;
- i) to extend the circumstances described in section 105(2) under which the lesser of the cost of repair of damage to a unit and any insurance deductible shall be added to the common expenses payable for an owner's unit where the damage to a unit is not caused by the corporation or its director, officers, agents or employees;
- j) to govern the maintenance of the units and common elements;
- k) to restrict the use and enjoyment that persons other than occupants of the units may make of the common elements and assets of the corporation, subject to any agreement made by the corporation with respect to the use and enjoyment of its common elements and assets that it shares with another person;
- l) to govern the management of the property¹;
- m) to govern the use and management of the assets of the corporation;
- n) to specify duties of the corporation in addition to the duties set out in the Condominium Act and the declaration;
- o) to establish the procedure with respect to the mediation of disputes or disagreements between the corporation and the owners for the purpose of section 125 (setting the fair market value of the property or part of the common elements for the purpose of payment to owners who voted against a sale of the property) or 132 (settling disagreements respecting various agreements); or
- p) to govern the conduct generally of the affairs of the corporation (section 56(1)(a) to (p));
- q) To establish standards for the occupancy of units for residential purposes (section 57, see below)².

By-laws take effect when confirmed by a vote of a majority of the owners of units and are registered on title (section 56(10)). If they are not registered they are incapable of enforcement³.

5.3.2. Special Cases

5.3.2.1. By-Laws Regarding Assessment Complaints

Should a corporation pass a by-law to object to assessments on behalf of owners (item (f) above) the Condominium Act relieves the corporation of an liability for an alteration in the assessment of a unit or any other matter relating to the complaint except the costs relating thereto (section 56(4)). Among other things, this provision ensures the corporation has no civil liability (other than as it respects costs of the complaint) to the owners or any other person should the complaint result in the assessment (and therefore the related property taxes) being increased. In addition, regardless of a by-law giving the corporation the authority to lodge a complaint, an owner may withdraw a complaint made on the owner's behalf by the corporation at any time before the hearing (section 56(5)). Such a withdrawal will put the assessment of the respective unit and common interest beyond review and fix it at the value as set by the assessment authority.

5.3.2.2. By-Laws Respecting Residential Occupancy Standards

² 365 York Condominium Corp. No. 400 v. Comcraft Services (1988) [age restriction not authorized to be done by by-law, right of ownership]

³ 383 York Region Condominium Corp. No. 545 v. 602809 Ontario Limited (1989) [by-law not proven to be force, cannot be enforced]

A board may by resolution make, amend, or repeal by-laws to establish standards for the occupancy of units for residential purposes (section 57(1)). The scope and details of the standards established by such a by-law must be either:

- the occupancy standards contained in a by-law of the municipality in which the property is situate; or,
- not more restrictive than standards that are in accordance with the maximum occupancy for each unit based on the maximum occupancy for which the building in which the units are located are designed (section 57(2)).

Municipal occupancy standards by-laws are presently passed under section 15.1 of the Ontario Building Code Act and may provide both maintenance and occupancy standards which must be adhered to by owners and occupants. Municipal by-laws passed under this provision may regulate occupancy in relation to standards such as floor area, habitable rooms, and so forth. Should there be no applicable municipal maintenance and occupancy standards by-laws the board is free to establish standards subject to the rider that the allowable occupancy is not more restrictive than standards which will be found in the Ontario Building Code for the particular size and type of building (for example, section 3.1.16.1 of the Ontario Building Code deals with occupant loading and, in the case of residential occupancy presumes a loading of 2 persons per sleeping room. This factor is applied to a number of standards by the Building Code (for example, the number of water closets required section 3.7.4.6). A proposed condominium by-law which presumed a loading of 1 person per sleeping room would be more restrictive and, therefore, could not be passed or, if passed, enforced).

Generally speaking, both municipal occupancy standards by-laws and provincial legislation are liberal with standards in that they address the minimum expected for all applicable circumstances, rather than an ideal. The question might be asked why a condominium corporation would bother to have an occupancy standards by-law when municipal by-laws and provincial regulations are enforceable against unit owners by the responsible authorities and higher standards cannot be imposed. The answer lies in the remedies that are made available to the condominium corporation, in particular:

1. A condominium’s occupancy standards by-law is enforceable by the corporation and other owners, and so is can be enforced using the provisions of the Condominium Act. There is no need to prompt a public body to take action;
2. A condominium’s occupancy standards by-law may prohibit persons from occupying units that do not comply with the standards (section 57(3)); and,
3. In the event of a contravention of a condominium’s occupancy standards by-law the board can, by resolution, levy against the unit:
 - an assessment for the amount that reasonably reflects the amount by which the contravention increases the cost of maintaining the common elements and repairing them after damage; and
 - an assessment for the amount that reasonably reflects the amount by which the contravention increases the cost of using the utilities that form part of the common expenses (section 57(4)).

And any such assessment forms part of the unit’s contribution for common expenses (section 57(5)), allowing it to be the subject of a lien if not paid.

5.3.3. Rules

5.3.3.1. General

Boards are authorized to make, amend or repeal rules respecting the use of the common elements and units. Any such rules must be reasonable¹ and consistent with the Condominium Act, the declaration, and the by-laws of the corporation (section 58(2)) and must be to:

- promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property and assets of the corporation; or
- prevent unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements, the units or the assets of the corporation (section 58(1)).²

Rules which are inconsistent with the Condominium Act are deemed to be amended in order that the Condominium Act prevails (section 58(4)); however, this saving provision does not apply to rules which are inconsistent with the declaration or by-laws of a corporation. In the latter case, the board's lack of authority should render the rule(s) a nullity and unenforceable.

All persons bound by the rules (this would include owners, lessees, occupants, guests and invitees) are obliged to comply with them and they may be enforced in the same manner as by-laws (section 58(10)).

5.3.3.2. Exercise of the Board Authority Regarding Rules

A board acts by resolutions and, in the case of rules, all that is required of the board initiate new rules, or amend or repeal old ones is a board resolution adopting the measure. As set out below, such board initiated rules are not immediately effective and are subject to review by the owners. Incorporation of the rules into a by-law is neither required nor is it specifically provided for in the Condominium Act. Some of the general subject matter of by-laws (see section 56) cross the same ground as potential rules and so, at least in some circumstances, could be worked into a by-law. The procedural requirements for introducing and bring by-laws into effect are different (i.e. rules are not registered on title to take effect or for any other purpose) and, given that the rules may change from time to time as a condominium owners and officials gain experience with the property's environment, adoption by board resolution is appropriate.

5.3.3.3. When Do Rules Take Effect?

5.3.3.3.1. Declarant's Rules

Rules that were proposed by the declarant before the registration are effective from the day of registration of the condominium declaration and description until replaced or confirmed by rule(s) of the Corporation (section 58(9)). Rules of this kind require no board action (even by the declarant-appointed board) to be effective.

371 York Condominium Corp. No. 71 v. Sullivan (1990) [rule prohibiting commercial vehicle parking, valid, court order to comply]

5.3.3.3.2. Board Initiated Rules

Following the adoption of a rule(s), or amendments or repeals by resolution of the board the board must then give a notice of it to the owners, which notice must include:

- a copy of the rule as made, amended or repealed, as the case may be;
- a statement of the date that the board proposes that the rule will become effective; and
- a statement that the owners have the right to requisition a meeting under section 46 and the rule becomes effective at the time:

the owners approve it at a meeting of owners, if the board receives a requisition for a meeting under section 46 within 30 days after the board has given notice of the rule(s) to the owners; or,

30 days after the board has given notice of the rule to the owners, if the board does not receive a requisition for a meeting under section 46 (section 58(6) and 58(7));

unless

the rule put forward has substantially the same purpose or effect as a rule that the owners have previously amended or repealed within the preceding two years, in which case the rule is not effective until the owners have expressly approved it, with or without amendment, at a meeting duly called for the purpose (section 58(8))

5.3.4. Amendment of Rules by Owners

Although owners cannot initiate a new rule, they may amend or repeal a rule at a meeting of owners called for that purpose (section 58(5)). Such a rule would take effect upon approval and would not require any subsequent action by the board.

5.3.5. Joint By-Laws and Rules

In circumstances where two or more corporations share facilities or services, the boards of those corporations may, at their option¹, make (or amend or repeal) joint by-laws or rules governing the use and maintenance of the shared facilities/services (section 59(1)).

5.3.5.1. Joint By-Laws

Joint by-laws are, like ‘single condominium’ by-laws, not effective until the owners of a majority of the units have voted in favour or confirming it, with or without amendment (section 59(3)) and the bylaw has been registered by each corporation. The one difference being that the vote(s) in favour of confirmation must be made by a majority of the owners in each respective condominium (section 59(3)). The vote of the two (or more) condominium owners may be a joint meeting of the corporations duly called for the purpose (section 59(5)).

Once a joint by-law is effective, it cannot be repealed unless and until the same process is followed. A majority of the owners of the units in each respective condominium must vote in favour of the repeal (section 58(6)). A single condominium cannot, without matching action by the other condominium(s), effect a repeal.

5.3.5.2. Joint Rules

A joint rule will be adopted by resolutions passed by each (or all) or the boards of the respective condominiums. While a joint rule may deal with precisely the same subject matter as a by-law under section 59(1), it does not require (though may, at the election of one or more owners, lead to a vote on) approval/confirmation by the owners and is not registered on the condominium title.

¹ 412- Simcoe Condominium Corp. No. 78 v. Simcoe Condominium Corp. No. 50, 52, 53 et al (2006)

Upon passage of the joint rule by resolution of the boards, each board must give a notice of the joint rule to its owners that includes:

- a copy of the joint rule as made, amended or repealed, as the case may be;
- a statement of the date that the boards propose that the joint rule will become effective; and
- a statement that the owners have the right to requisition a meeting under section 46 and the rule becomes effective at the time:
 - the owners approve it at meetings of owners of each respective corporation or at a joint meeting of owners of all the corporations, if the board of any of the corporations receives a requisition for a meeting under section 46 within 30 days after the board has given notice of the joint rule(s) to the owners; or,
 - 30 days after the board of each corporation has given notice of the joint rule to its owners, if neither or none of the boards do not receive a requisition for a meeting under section 46 (section 59(8) and 59(9));

unless

 - the joint rule put forward has substantially the same purpose or effect as a joint rule that the owners have previously amended or repealed within the preceding two years, in which case the rule is not effective until the owners of each corporation have expressly approved it, with or without amendment, at a separate meetings, or at a joint meeting, duly called for the purpose (section 59(10)).

5.3.5.3. Amendment of Rules by Owners

Although the owners of each (or all) corporations cannot initiate a new joint rule, they may amend or repeal a joint rule at a joint meeting of owners, or at a meeting of owners of each corporation, called for that purpose (section 59(6)). Such a rule would take effect upon approval and would not require any subsequent action by the board (section 59(6)).

5.3.6. Financial Bylaw

A corporation must keep its expenditures in line with its annual budget. Borrowings may be planned for in the budget; however, money cannot be borrowed by a corporation for purposes which are not in the budget. Any need for such an unplanned for borrowing must be authorized by by-law (section 56(3))¹.

5.4.1. Financial Statements

Every corporation is required to prepare, in accordance with the accounting principles specified in the Handbook of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, and keep the following financial records:

1. a balance sheet;
2. a statement of general operations;
3. a statement of changes in financial position;
4. a statement of reserve fund operations;
5. an indication of the aggregate remuneration paid to the directors in that capacity and the aggregate remuneration paid to the officers in that capacity;
6. a comparison between,
 - a) the amount of contributions to the reserve fund that the corporation has collected, and
 - b) the amount that, according to the board’s plan for funding of the reserve fund under section 94(8) of the Condominium Act, the corporation was required to collect as contributions to the reserve fund;
7. a comparison between,
 - a) the amount of expenditures from the reserve fund that the corporation has made, and
 - b) the amount of proposed expenditures that, according to the board’s plan for funding of the reserve fund under section 94(8) of the Condominium Act, the corporation was to have made from the reserve fund; and,
8. in any case where a director or officer makes a disclosure of an interest in a contract or transaction under section 40 or 41 of the Condominium Act and the corporation has entered into the contract or transaction, whether before or after the disclosure, a brief description of the nature of any contract or transaction, the amount of money involved in it and the nature and extent of the director or officer’s interest.

section 66(2) and section 16(1),(3),(4) and (5) of 48 of 01.

With limited exception (see below for condominiums of 24 units or less) the financial statements are audited by the corporation’s auditor who prepares an audit report for the corporation’s audit committee (if any) and/or board of directors. The board must, with the audit report in hand, approve the financial statements (evidenced by the signature at the bottom of the balance sheet by two authorized directors) and place them before each annual general meeting together with the auditor’s report and all further information regarding the corporation’s financial position that is required by the corporation’s by-laws (section 66(4)(5) and section 69(1)).

5.4.2. Auditors

5.4.2.1. General Function of an Auditor

With one class of exception, every condominium corporation is required to have an auditor whose function, in essence, is to be an arm’s length overseer of the of the accuracy and completeness of the corporation’s annual financial statements and reporter to the corporation, on behalf of the owners, regarding those statements and audit findings¹.

5.4.2.2. Dispensing With An Auditor – Corporations With 24 Units or Less

In recognition that an auditor’s office is only kept filled and functioning at a cost to the owners, and that in the case of small condominium corporations the expense potentially outweighs the benefit, the owners in a corporation having fewer than 25 units (including parking, storage and utility units) may, with their unanimous written consent, dispense with an audit and, consequently, an auditor until the next following annual general meeting (section 60(5)). This self-willed exemption from an audit/auditor may only be made after the turnover meeting has been held (section 60(5)(a)), ensuring that in the transition period from registration to the first meeting after the turn-over there is arm’s length oversight of financial statements.

5.4.2.3. Auditor’s Qualifications

The Condominium Act prescribes who may not be an auditor, namely any person who:

- is a director, officer or employee of the corporation;
- is a manager under an agreement for the management of the property of the corporation;
- has an interest in a contract to which the corporation is a party; or
- is a partner, employer or employee of a director, officer or employee of the corporation or of a manager under an agreement for the management of the property of the corporation (section 61).

Apart from the above, there is no limitation or restriction on the qualifications which a person or persons must have or not have in order to hold the office of auditor for a condominium corporation. Having said this, the proper performance of the office of auditor requires familiarity with and application of formal accounting and auditing principles and procedures. Auditors commonly hold the professional designation of Chartered Accountant or similar accreditation which requires training in the accounting principles and auditing standards specified in the Handbook of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants (reference section 16 of 48 of 01).

5.4.2.4. Auditor’s Fees

Whether the auditor is initially appointed by the declarant (as owner of the units) or by new owners, the candidate should (as a practical matter) have been contacted beforehand and terms of engagement settled in principle. In this regard, the remuneration of the auditor must be fixed by the appointor (the owners, the board, or the court as the case may be) (section 62 and 60(3)) and this is best done at the time of appointment. It would be highly undesirable and inconvenient to risk differences over fees with an appointed auditor and, in any event, the amount(s) should be on the table when the appointment is being considered by the appointee(s).

An auditor or former auditor is entitled to be compensated for expenses and remunerated for attendance(s) at any meeting of the owners if attendance is required by the corporation or any owners (section 70(5)).

5.4.2.5. Appointment of the Auditor

Typically a declarant's first order of business after registration will be to appoint a board to pass the proposed by-laws, then, as owner of all the units, approve them at a meeting called for the purpose. At this or other first meeting one item which the Condominium Act requires to be dealt with is the appointment of one or more qualified persons to hold office as auditor(s) until the close of the next annual meeting (section 60(1)). The office is of sufficient importance that a failure of the owners to appoint an auditor(s) both obliges and empowers the board to do so unilaterally in their stead (section 60(1)) and, in default of these two groups acting the court may make the appointment on application of any owner (section 60(3)).

In all cases the office of auditor must be kept filled thereafter, with the exception of '24 units or less' corporations whose owners have exercised the option to dispense with an audit (and then only after the turn-over meeting has taken place). The appointment must be reviewed and made afresh at each annual meeting. Should the owners not make the appointment at a particular annual meeting, the auditor in office continues in office until a successor is appointed (section 60(2)) either by the owners or by the court on application of an owner.

5.4.2.6. Removal of the Auditor

The owners are empowered to remove an auditor from office at a meeting duly called for the purpose, provided that the owner's must appoint a replacement auditor at the same meeting who will hold office for the remainder of the term (section 63(1) and 63(2)). A vote of a majority of the owners present at the meeting in person or by proxy is required to take this action (section 63(3)).

Such a meeting could be called by the board (section 45(4)), or on requisition of owners (section 46) but notice of the meeting cannot be given until 30 days after the person calling the meeting gives the auditor:

- (a) written notice of the intention to call the meeting, specifying the date on which the notice of the meeting is proposed to be mailed;
- (b) a statement of the name of the auditor who is proposed to be removed and the reasons for the removal; and
- (c) a copy of all material proposed to be sent to the owners in connection with the meeting (section 63(4)).

Should an auditor receiving such a notice wish to make representations (in writing only the auditor must send the written representations to the person calling the meeting at least three days before the notice of meeting is given to the owners. The person calling the meeting must include a statement of the name of the auditor who is proposed to be removed and the reasons for removal, and a copy of any representation received, in the notice of meeting. The person calling the meeting is entitled to be reimbursed by the corporation for the cost of including this information in the notice (section 63(7)). The notice itself must comply with the requirements of section 47.

In a case where the owners vote to remove an auditor but fail in their duty to appoint a replacement, the directors may appoint a qualified person to hold office until the close of the next following annual general meeting or until a successor is appointed, whichever is later (section 65).

5.4.2.7. Resignation of the Auditor

An auditor can resign the office at any time with the resignation becoming effective on the day the written resignation is delivered to the corporation, or any later date specified in the resignation letter (section 64). The auditor may include written representations in the letter of resignation and, in such event, a copy of the representations must be included in the notice of the next following meeting of the owners (section 64).

The vacancy created by a resignation may be filled by appointment by the board with the term of office extending to the next annual meeting or until a successor is appointed, whichever is later (section 65(2)).

5.4.2.8. Protection from Civil Action for Statements Made in Good Faith

In order to promote the ability of auditors to effectively carry out their function the Condominium Act prohibits the institution of any action or other proceeding for damages against an auditor (past or current) for any oral or written statement made in good faith in the execution of the duty of auditor except statements made in the annual audit report (section 67(7)). Accordingly, communications made during the auditor’s audit, or made at required attendances at owners meetings, are shielded from potential civil actions.

5.4.2.9. Right to Notice of Meetings and Communications

In order to keep the auditor informed, the corporation must give the auditor notice of all meetings of owners (regardless of the purpose of the meeting) and all other communications relating to the meetings which the owners are entitled to receive (section 70(2)).

5.4.2.10. Audit Committee

The financial affairs of larger condominiums, when taken together with all other responsibilities associated with managing the affairs of a corporation, may be complex enough that introducing a layer of corporate review between the auditor and the board is prudent and efficient. To this end the Condominium Act permits any board of a condominium corporation having seven or more directors on its board may, at the option of the directors, elect an audit committee from among themselves to hold office until the next annual general meeting (section 68(1)).

Should the directors opt for an audit committee it’s composition must be three persons or more (who will all be board members) and any officers (including the president, secretary, and any other officers) or employees of the corporation must be in the minority (section 68(2)) on the committee.

The responsibility of the audit committee is to receive and review the financial statements and the auditor’s report(s) on those statements, hear representations from the auditor (at the auditors request or at the request of the committee) and submit the statements and report to the board (section 69(3) to 69(5)). Since the committee members are all also board members, when the documents are tabled with the full board a core of directors will be well-briefed on their contents and the matters which should be brought to the attention of the full board.

5.4.3. Audits and Audit Report

The principle function and duty of the auditor is to make whatever examination is necessary in order to make an annual report on the financial statement on behalf of the owners (section 67(1)). To that end the auditor has:

- the right of access at all times to records, documents, accounts and vouchers of the corporation
- the power to require from the directors, officers and employees of the corporation or from persons under contract to the corporation to manage the property or its assets the information and explanations that the auditor considers necessary to make the report (section 67(2)).

The auditors report must be prepared in the manner and accordance with the auditing standards specified in the Handbook of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants (section 16(2) of 48 of 01) and shall include the statements that the auditor considers necessary if the corporation’s financial statements are not in accordance with the Condominium Act and regulations (i.e the are not prepared in accordance with the accounting principles specified in the Handbook) (section 67(4)). If the statement of reserve fund operations and the reserve fund comparisons do not fairly present the information contained in the reserve fund studies that the auditor received this must be stated in the report (section 67(5)).

The auditor present the audit report to the audit committee (if any) or directly to the board if there is no audit committee (section 67(6)).

5.4.3.1. Tabling Financial Statements and Auditor's Report

The financial statements as approved by the board and the auditor's report must be attached to the notice of the annual general meeting at which they will be tabled (section 69(2)). The auditor is entitled (but not obliged) to attend a meeting of owners and to be heard on any part of the business of the meeting that concerns the auditor's report (section 70(1)). By giving written notice at least five days before a meeting of owners, a corporation or an owner may require an auditor to attend the meeting for the purpose of answering inquiries concerning the basis upon which the auditor formed the opinion(s) stated in the audit report (section 70(3) and 70(6)). If the notice is given by an owner a copy must also be given to the corporation (section 70(4)). The statements and report are received as information to the owners. No approval, endorsement, or other action is required for them by the owners.

5.4.3.2. Amending Financial Statements and Auditor's Report

In the event facts come to the attention of the directors or officers of a corporation after the annual general meeting which require a material adjustment to the financial statements as presented, the board is obliged to make the amendments to the statement(s) (section 71(1)). A copy of the amended financial statement(s) and a statement of the facts which gave rise to the amendment(s) must then be immediately sent to the auditor (section 70(2)). On receipt of the information the auditor must amend the auditor's report if necessary and, in such case, present it to the audit committee (if any) or the board (if there is no committee) (section 71(3)). The board must then mail or deliver a copy of the amended auditor's report to the owners (there is no requirement to also provide the amended financial statements to the owners). If the board fails to mail or deliver the amended report within a reasonable time the auditor must do so in it's place. The corporation must reimburse the auditor for all reasonable costs in this regard (section 70(5)).

5.5 COMMON EXPENSES AND LIENS

5.5 COMMON EXPENSES AND LIENS

5.5.7. Leased Units – Diversion of Rent.....	5.5-3
5.5.8. Mortgagee’s Rights.....	5.5-3
5.5.9. Discharge of Lien.....	5.5-4

Common expenses are the expenses related to the performance of the objects and duties of the corporation and, in addition, all expenses specified in the Condominium Act or in a declaration as being common expenses. The total of one hundred percent of the common expenses is allocated amongst the unit owners according to the proportions set out in the declaration and this allocation fixes the respective owner’s obligation to make contribution (section 84(1)). The obligation to pay cannot be avoided by an owner waiving or abandoning the right to use the common elements, by the fact an owner is making a claim against the corporation, or by the inability of an owner, due to the corporation’s declaration, by-laws, or rules, to use all or any part of the common elements (section 84(3)). The intent of the allocation of common expenses is to achieve an equitable distribution amongst owners. Unusual demands on services may call for the related expense to be interpreted to be outside of the common expenses and payable by the user¹.

5.5.1. Surpluses

In the event the common expenses for a year are less than the contributions to their payment the surplus cannot be distributed to the owners unless and until the corporation is terminated. The surplus must either be applied to future common expenses or paid into the corporation’s reserve fund (for major capital repairs and replacements) (section 84(2)).

5.5.2. Lien on Default of Payment

Should an owner default in payment of the owner’s share of the common expenses the corporation will have a lien against the owner’s unit and common interest for the unpaid amount, together with interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and expenses incurred in collecting the amount of the lien (section 85(1))². The right to lien a unit for arrears does not entitle a corporation to lien other units owned by the same person where the common expenses for the other units are not in default.³

5.5.3. Certificate of Lien

The lien has a fixed life unless the corporation takes action to protect it by registering a certificate of lien on title to the owner’s unit within three months after the default that gave rise to the lien (section 85(2)). If the three month period has expired without a certificate of lien being registered the lien will be lost. While this will not absolve the owner from the debt, it will oblige the corporation to take legal action to obtain a judgment for the amount owed. Such a procedure is far more cumbersome than a lien registration and, of course, should be avoided whenever possible.

187 Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 1006 v. Hollywood Plaza (1995) [legal costs unreasonable]

302 Somerset Ridge Development Corp. v. Middlesex Condominium Corp. No. 134 (1991) [legal costs for registering liens must be reasonable, may be referred for assessment]

³ 417- York Condominium Corp. No. 482 v. Christiansen et al (2003)

How is the 'three month' period calculated? The Condominium Act itself is silent on this subject; however, section 29(1) of the Interpretation Act defines a month as a 'calendar month'. On this basis a part of a month should not be counted. For example, if an owner misses a common expense payment due on January 31 of a year, January would not be counted as a month. The 'three months' would be February, March, and April and a lien registered on or before April 30 would be valid. Similarly, if the payment was due on January 1, a lien registered before April 30 of the same year would be valid.

Registration of a certificate of lien secures payment not only of unpaid common expenses for the preceding three months as well as interest and legal costs, but also protects payment of any unpaid common expenses which arise after the date the certificate is registered (section 85(3)(a) and 85(3)(b)). This provision makes it unnecessary for a corporation to repeatedly register certificates or amend certificates for subsequent defaults, allowing it to rely on the single registration to protect amounts due for three months or less and all future defaults until the total amount owed is paid.

The certificate of lien must be in Form 6 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 41 of 49 of 01) which requires the amount of the unpaid common expenses to be stated and provides notice that the lien also includes amounts related to defaults after the registration as well as interest and legal costs.

5.5.4. Notice of Lien

Prior to registering a certificate of lien the corporation must give a written notice of lien to the defaulting owner and to every registered encumbrancer. The written notice to the owner must be in Form 14 to regulation 48 of 01, must be given at least 10 days before the certificate is registered, and must be given either by personal service or be sent by prepaid mail at the owner's address listed in the corporation's records (section 85(4) and 85(5)). The written notice to registered encumbrancers must be given before the certificate is registered and must be given by either personal service or registered prepaid mail (section 86(3) and 86(4)). No form of notice is prescribed by the Condominium Act or regulations for the notice to encumbrancers although the substance form of notice to the owner should suffice (with adaptation to the situation).

While the Condominium Act does not prescribe any consequence if the notice of lien is not given to the defaulting owner, or is given within 10 days of the registration of the certificate of lien, failure to give notice to a registered encumbrancer will result in the lien having a full or limited loss of priority over the encumbrance unless the notice is given (section 86(5)). The loss of priority relates to the arrears which accrue during the three months before the notice is given (section 86(6)). Using the example of payment due on January 1 or January 31, should the certificate of lien be registered on April 30 and an encumbrancer is not notified until May 1, the lien would lose priority as it respects the January payment. Priority would still be preserved for any arrears which arose subsequent to January 31 (including defaults in payments after May 1) and for interest and legal costs and expenses (section 86(6)(a) and 86(6)(b)).

Priority over unregistered encumbrances will be unaffected by lack of notice since no notice is required to be given to such persons. Provided the lien is registered within the three month period it will be superior to such encumbrances.

5.5.5. Priority

With certain exceptions, a lien which is perfected by notice to the registered encumbrancer(s) and timely registration has priority over the encumbrance (whether registered or unregistered) even though the encumbrance existed prior to the lien arising (section 86(1)). The exceptions are:

- A claim by the Crown other than by way of mortgage (for example a claim relating to unpaid capital taxes of a corporate owner) (section 86(1)(a));
- A claim for taxes, charges, rates or assessments levied or recoverable under the Municipal Act, the Education Act, the Local Road Boards Act, the Statute Labour Act or the Local Improvement Act (section 86(1)(b));

- A lien in respect of a unit for non-residential purposes where the payment was in default prior to May 5, 2001 (section 86(2)).

5.5.6. Enforcement of a Lien - Foreclosure or Sale

A lien which is protected by timely registration may be enforced in the same manner as a mortgage (section 85(6)). Accordingly, foreclosure/power of sale proceedings may be commenced in accordance with the procedures set out in the Mortgages Act. While these procedures are detailed and complex nonetheless a corporation can proceed with the knowledge that the costs will be recouped from the proceeds. Should the corporation not wish to take active steps to satisfy the lien, there is comfort in knowing that the unit will almost certainly not change hands to an arm's length purchaser until the lien is discharged.

5.5.7. Leased Units – Diversion of Rent

In a case where the owner of a unit has leased it to a third party, a corporation may give notice (personal or by prepaid mail) to the lessee requiring it to pay the lesser of the amount of the default and the amount of the rent due under the lease (section 87(1)). A copy of the notice must also be given to the owner (section 87(3)). On receipt of the notice the lessee must make the required payment to the corporation. The latter obligation applies even if an encumbrancer has acquired the right of the lessor to receive rent under the lease (section 87(5)). A payment to the corporation by the lessee is deemed to constitute the payment of rent and cannot be regarded as a default under the lease (section 87(6)).

It should be noted that this vehicle of collection is not dependent on a lien being registered or even continuing to exist (i.e. the three month period to protect a lien may have expired, but the right to divert rent to pay related common expense arrears will stand).

5.5.8. Mortgagee's Rights

Given the prejudice that arises to a mortgagee due to unpaid common expenses the Condominium Act gives mortgages certain rights of self-protection. In particular, mortgages are deemed to contain provisions as follows:

- the mortgagee has the right to collect the owner's contribution to the common expenses and shall promptly pay the amount so collected to the corporation on behalf of the owner;
- the owner's default in the obligation to contribute to the common expenses constitutes default under the mortgage;
- the mortgagee has the right to pay,
 - the amounts of the owner's contribution to the common expenses that from time to time fall due and are unpaid in respect of the mortgaged premises,
 - all interest owing and all reasonable legal costs and reasonable expenses that the corporation incurs in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the amounts due, including, where applicable, the costs of preparing and registering a certificate of lien and a discharge of it;
- payments made by the mortgagee under the immediately foregoing, together with interest and all reasonable costs, charges and expenses incurred in respect of the payments, are to be added to the debt secured by the mortgage and to be payable, with interest at the rate payable on the mortgage; and
- if after demand the owner fails to fully reimburse the mortgagee, the mortgage immediately becomes due and payable at the option of the mortgagee.

(Section 88(1))

A mortgagee is entitled, on request and free of charge, to receive from the corporation a written statement setting out the common expenses in respect of the unit and, in the event of default, the amount of the arrears before and after registration of a certificate of lien, and all associated interest and legal costs and expenses (section 88(2)).

5.5.9. Discharge of Lien

When the corporation is paid all of the amounts owing under a certificate of lien (i.e. the amount of the arrears before and after registration of a certificate of lien, and all associated interest and legal costs and expenses including the costs of registering the lien and registering its discharge), the corporation is responsible for preparing and registering a discharge of the certificate and advising the owner of the particulars of registration (section 85(7)).

 6.1.4. Alternative Division of Responsibility Provided by Declaration.....6.1-2
 6.1.5. Owner's Default.....6.1-2
 6.1.6. Warranties.....6.1-3

6.1.1. Who is Responsible for Repairs and Maintenance?

Unless the declaration provides otherwise:

1. In the case of a condominium corporation created on or after May 5, 2001, the corporation is responsible for:

- Repairing and replacing the units and common elements after damage or failure, (section 89(1), 89(2)¹, and 90(1)) excepting only improvements made to a unit (section 89(2))²
- Maintaining the common elements (section 90(1))

And the owners are responsible for:

- Maintaining their respective unit(s) (section 90(1))

2. In the case of a condominium corporation created before May 5, 2001, the corporation is responsible for:

- Repairing the units and common elements after damage or failure, (section 89(1), 89(2) and 90(1))³
- Repairing improvements made to a unit (section 89(2)) if the declaration provides that the corporation is responsible for repairing improvements to units after damage, unless the corporation has, by by-law, established what constitutes a standard unit for the unit's class (section 89(5))

And the owners are responsible for:

- Maintaining their respective unit(s) (section 90(1))⁴

6.1.2. Maintenance vs. Repair After Damage

Maintenance responsibilities, whether those of the corporation or a unit owner, include repairing after normal wear and tear (section 90(2))⁵. This is to be distinguished from repairing after damage. As the obligation to repair after damage includes the obligation to repair or replace after damage or failure there may be instances

⁴ 374-York Condominium Corporation No. 161 et al. v. York-Hanover Ltd., (1983) [description includes fan coils as part of unit]

408- Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No.545 v. Stein et al (2006) [The principle that the court will not interfere in a rule laid down by a condominium board unless it is clearly unreasonable or contrary to the scheme of the Act has no application to a decision by the board to require owners to adhere to a specified maintenance standard for a fan coil in a unit where the maintenance is the owners responsibility, an alterative standard is not shown to be ineffective, and the board's standard was not embodied in a Rule of the corporation.]

where the proper characterization of the damage will have significance¹. For example, if a unit includes an air-conditioner which, after several years of use ceases to operate due to the motor bearings giving out, the problem could be argued to be caused by normal wear and tear or caused by 'failure'. As there must be a distinction between these two possibilities it is suggested, in the absence of caselaw specifically on this new provision in the Condominium Act, that 'failure' refers to a situation which is not expected i.e. traceable to a fault rather than the consequence of normal use. The distinction will be of significance as maintenance of a unit is (in the absence of special provision in the declaration) the owner's responsibility while repair responsibilities are those of the corporation.

6.1.3. How are 'Improvements' to a Unit Determined?

With reference to the example of a residential unit, a variety of improvements may be made to a bare unit before it is turned over to the purchaser and after ownership is assumed. Such things a kitchen cabinets, wall finishes including wall paper, stucco, floor coverings such a carpets or hardwood, lighting fixtures, and the like, could be introduced. In order to separate improvements made to a unit the Condominium Act allows a corporation to pass by-laws defining a 'standard unit' for a class of unit (section 56(1)(h)) and requires a declarant to provide, within 30 days of the turn-over meeting, a schedule setting out what constitutes a standard unit for each class (section 43(1)(h)). A description of a standard unit in a by-law takes precedence over a description provided by a declarant (section 89(4)). 'Class of unit' is not defined in the Condominium Act. While a parking unit or a storage unit will be in a class(s) separate from a dwelling unit, it is conceivable that a general class (such as dwelling units) may be divided into more than one class should there be reason and purpose to do so.

By defining a standard unit for a class, a base will be established against which it can be determined whether a particular improvement is part of a unit (in which case the responsibility for repair after damage or failure will, unless the declaration provides otherwise, be the responsibility of the corporation) or is, for want of a better term, an 'extra' (in which case the owner will, special provision aside, be responsible for repair after damage).

While the Condominium Act sets no criteria for what may or may not be in the description of a standard unit, logic and fairness suggest that improvements included in the description will be ones which are common across the class. Having said this, it should be emphasized that such is not an express requirement nor is it apparently implied.

6.1.4. Alternative Division of Responsibility Provided by Declaration

The general division of repair and maintenance responsibilities may be overridden by a condominium's declaration. In particular, a declaration may provide:

- That each owner repair the owner's unit after damage (unless there is substantial damage and the corporation is terminated);
- That the owners maintain the common elements or any part of them;
- That each owner shall maintain and repair those parts of the common elements for which the owner has exclusive use; and,
- That the corporation maintain the units or any part of them.

(section 91)

6.1.5. Owner's Default

In the event the declaration alters the usual division of responsibilities and requires an owner to repair after damage (whether in relation to a unit or part of the common elements) and the owner fails to do so within a reasonable time, the corporation shall to the work and the cost is added to the owner's contribution to the common expenses (section 92(1) and 92(4)).

In the event the declaration alters the usual division of responsibilities and requires an owner to maintain common elements and the owner fails to do so within a reasonable time, the corporation may do the work and the cost is added to the owner's contribution to the common expenses (section 92(2) and 92(4)).

In the event the owner has an obligation to maintain the owner's respective unit(s) and fails to carry out the obligation in a reasonable time, then provided:

- The failure to maintain presents a potential risk of damage to the property or the assets of the corporation; or,
- There is a potential risk of personal injury to persons on the property;

the corporation may do the work necessary to carry out the obligation and the cost is added to the owner's contribution to the common expenses (section 92(3) and (4)). It should be noted that a simple failure to maintain a unit that does not satisfy the above criteria will not entitle the corporation to step in and fill the breach; however, it should be borne in mind that a unit is part of the condominium property and so a failure to maintain a unit which could put the unit (and no other part of the property) at risk of damage is a failure which the corporation can rectify. The failure need not put the common interests or other units in jeopardy.

6.1.6. Warranties

Warranties respecting work and materials furnished for a unit are for the benefit of the unit owner, while warranties for work and materials furnished for the common elements shall be for the benefit of the corporation (section 96(1) and 96(3))¹. In a case where the declaration provides the owner has an obligation to repair after damage/failure (section 92(1)), the owner fails to repair, and the corporation steps in to do the repair, or where the the corporation steps in to make good an owner's failure to maintain a unit (section 92(3)), the corporation may enforce any applicable warranty (section 96(2)).

6.2.1. What is a Reserve Fund?

A condominium reserve fund (and there may be more than one even though all will be for the same purpose) is a pool of funds collected as part of the common expenses over the life of the condominium for the sole use in the funding of major repair and replacement of the common elements and assets of the corporation (section 93(1) to 93(4)).

The amount to be collected monthly from the owners in order to have a condominium reserve fund which meets the standards of the Condominium Act, is determined not by guesswork or undue caution, but on the basis of a detailed physical and financial analysis of the components of the inventory conducted by one of a group of specified professionals (section 29(1) of 48 of 01).

Reserve funds are not a new feature to condominium governance. The old legislation required all condominiums to maintain a fund for similar purposes to the present; however, the old legislation did not mandate studies, or any other formal process to set the appropriate common expense charge. Instead, condominiums were mandated to set the contribution at no less than 10% of the other common expenses. Inevitably, condominiums generally opted to collect the 10% and not give material consideration to whether it was sufficient or not for the purpose.

6.2.2. Who is Qualified to Conduct a Reserve Fund Study?

Reflective of the fact that the complexities of reserve fund studies will vary widely from condominium to condominium (consider the depth of a study for a 50 storey commercial-residential tower relative to a study for a common elements condominium consisting of a 1000’ of gravel road), a substantial number of property professionals are qualified to carry out reserve fund studies. Any of the following are qualified:

- Members of the Appraisal Institute of Canada holding the designation of Accredited Appraiser Canadian Institute.
- Persons who hold a certificate of practice within the meaning of the Architects Act.
- Members of the Ontario Association of Certified Engineering Technicians and Technologists who are registered as certified engineering technologists under the Ontario Association of Certified Engineering Technicians and Technologists Act, 1998.
- Members of the Real Estate Institute of Canada holding the designation of certified reserve planner.
- Persons who hold a certificate of authorization within the meaning of the Professional Engineers Act.
- Graduates of Ryerson Polytechnic University with a Bachelor of Technology (Architectural Science) — Building Science Option or Architecture Option.

- Members of the Canadian Institute of Quantity Surveyors holding the designation of professional quantity surveyor.
- Members of the Association of Architectural Technologists of Ontario holding the designation of architectural technologist, architecte-technologue or registered building technologist under the Association of Architectural Technologists of Ontario Act, 1996 (section 32(1) of 48 of 01).

6.2.3. Arm’s Length to Corporation and Owners

Regardless of technical qualifications, a candidate to carry out a reserve fund study (as well as family) must be at arm’s length to the condominium corporation. If not, the candidate is disqualified. In specific, a person who conducts a reserve fund study shall not:

- be a director, officer or property manager of the corporation;
- directly or indirectly, have an interest in,
- a contract or transaction to which a director or officer of the corporation is a party in a capacity other than as a director or officer of the corporation, or
- a proposed contract or transaction to which a director or officer of the corporation will be a party in a capacity other than as a director or officer of the corporation;
- be the spouse, same-sex partner, son or daughter of a director or officer of the corporation or son or daughter of the spouse or same-sex partner of a director or officer of the corporation;
- be an owner as defined in the Act in relation to the corporation; or
- be a person who lives on the condominium property (section 94(6) and section 32(2) of 48 of 01).

6.2.4. Liability Insurance

Also regardless of technical qualifications, to conduct a reserve fund study a person must be insured under a policy of liability insurance. Because the minimum policy terms are substantial, a large number of professionals qualified by credentials will be outside of the candidate group. The burden of carrying the insurance will be a discouragement to anyone other than a professional committed to the discipline. A qualifying liability policy must include:

- coverage for liability for errors, omissions and negligent acts arising out of conducting or not conducting a reserve fund study, subject to the exclusions, conditions and terms that are consistent with normal insurance industry practice;
- a policy limit for each single claim of not less than $1 million per occurrence;
- an aggregate policy limit in the amount of not less than $2 million per year for all claims in the year or an automatic policy limit reinstatement feature; and
- a maximum deductible amount of $3,500 per occurrence (section 32(4)).

In addition, the person conducting the study must ensure the insurance is valid and the time the study is completed and for at least three years thereafter (section 32(5)). A certificate of insurance must be made available to the corporation on request (section 32(6)).

6.2.5. How are the Contributions Set?

The amount of the contributions to the reserve fund will be set in a finite way when the reserve fund study is completed and a plan for future funding is settled by the corporation. In the period intervening between registration and the final step in the reserve fund process, the Condominium Act directs that the contributions to the reserve fund be set at the greater of two amounts; either:

- 10% of the budgeted amount required for the common expenses other than the reserve fund (i.e. the same factor which prevailed under the old legislation); or,
- the amount reasonably expected to provide sufficient funds for the major repair and replacement of the common elements and assets, considering both costs and life expectancy (section 93(5) and 93(6)).

The Condominium Act is not clear on who determines, and how, the second amount noted above. It appears that the effect is that the pre-reserve fund study contributions to the reserve fund should be 10% of the common expenses, but may be set at a higher level is that is the determination of the corporation (acting through the board).

6.2.6. Classes/Types of Reserve Fund Studies

6.2.6.1. Comprehensive Study

This class of study (which covers the first reserve fund study of the condominium) must be based on:

- a visual inspection (where practicable) of each item of the common elements and assets having a replacement value of $500.00 or more, and other inspections if appropriate;
- a verification of records of the corporation;
- interviews with the corporation’s officer, directors and others (section 30(2)).

The purpose of this minimum level of diligence is to ensure the disclosure of all pertinent facts concerning the nature and condition of the common element components. For example, an escalator’s repair and replacement cycle is largely a function of operating time. Interviews may disclose that (due to lack of demand) the escalator is only operated when a special request is made and that all owners are agreeable to this. This information would have a material bearing on the eventual estimate of the reserve fund contribution for this component. Visual inspections may disclose unexpected wear and tear or damage, or, in the case of the first study, differences between the specifications of equipment as shown on plans and as found on site. Again, in such an instance there may be an impact on repair and replacement costs and frequency.

In addition to the above steps, as part of preparing the assessment of the life/replacement cycle of each component (section 29(2)(b)) a conductor of a reserve fund study must review:

- all existing warranties, guarantees and service contracts for each item in the component inventory;
- the as-built architectural, structural, engineering, mechanical, electrical and plumbing plans for the property that are in the custody or under the control of the corporation;
- the as-built specifications for the buildings that are in the custody or under the control of the corporation;
- the plans for underground site services, site grading, drainage and landscaping, and television, radio or other communications services for the property that are in the custody or under the control of the corporation;
- the repair and maintenance records and schedules in the custody or under the control of the corporation; and

- all other records of the corporation that the person conducting the study requires in order to prepare the assessment (section 30(3)).

Again, the purpose of the direction is to ensure a standard and sufficient level of diligence in the preparation of any and all comprehensive studies.

It should be noted that the conductor of the study is not limited to the above reviews and investigations and the study may contain further information and analysis that the study conductor (or the board) considers appropriate (section 30(5)).

6.2.6.2. Updated Study Based on a Site Inspection

This class of study has the object of updating the condominium’s comprehensive reserve fund study (in it’s original form or, in the event it had been previously updated, updated form) through revision so that it is current to the date of the update (section 27). It must be based on a site inspection and all of the steps set out above for basing and preparing a comprehensive study, apply to an update based on a site inspection (section 30(2) and 30(3)).

6.2.6.3. Updated Study Not Based on a Site Inspection

This class of study has the same object as an update based on site inspection but with a truncated review protocol. As the name implies, no site inspections are required and the basis of this class of study is limited to:

- a verification of records of the corporation; and
- interviews with those of its directors, officers, employees and agents that the person conducting the study considers appropriate (section 30(4)).

It should be noted that the review of records (which include plans, specification and the like) is for the purpose of verification. By implication, the depth of the review in this regard will be less intensive than the review of records required (section 30(3)) for a comprehensive study or update with site inspection.

6.2.7. Time Period to Carry Out Reserve Fund Study

The Condominium Act requires a corporation to conduct the first reserve fund study with the year following registration (section 94(4)). This first study, referred to as a ‘comprehensive study’ (section 31(2) of 48 of 01), must be updated at three year intervals (section 94(1) and section 31(3) of 48 of 01). The depth of the triennial update varies depending on the depth of the previous study. For example, the first (comprehensive) study may be followed three years later with an updated study not based on a site inspection, and three years later an updated study based on a site inspection must follow, and three years after that an updated study not based on a site inspection may follow (section 31(3)). There is no requirement (although it is an option) to repeat the first, comprehensive study. A corporation may carry on for decades on the basis of properly sequenced site inspection/no site inspection updates. The thinking clearly is that the updates ensure the regular opportunity to correct misjudgments in the original comprehensive study together with the same in any preceding updates.

6.2.8. Special Case – Time Periods for Old Legislation Condominiums

Condominiums which were registered prior to May 5, 2001 are not required to carry out a reserve fund study immediately. They are allowed until May 5, 2004 to conduct a comprehensive study (section 94(5) and section 31(1)). Thereafter, such condominiums will follow the cycle of updates referred to above. In the event an old legislation condominium has carried out the equivalent of a comprehensive study prior to May 5, 2001, it is relieved of any obligation to carry out a second comprehensive study. Instead, the next following study for such a situation will an update based on a site inspection conducted no later than May 5, 2004 (section 31(1)).

6.2.9. Components of a Reserve Fund Study

Both comprehensive and update reserve fund studies consist of two components, a physical and a financial analysis (section 29(1)).

The physical analysis consists of:

- an inventory of each item of the common elements and assets of the corporation that requires, or is expected to require within at least 30 years of the date of the study, major repair or replacement where the cost of replacement is not less than $500; and
- an assessment of each item in the component inventory that states:
 - its actual or estimated year of acquisition;
 - its present or estimated age;
 - its normal expected life;
 - its remaining life expectancy;
 - the estimated year for its major repair or replacement;
 - its estimated cost of major repair or replacement as of the date of the study;
 - the percentage of that cost of major repair or replacement to be covered by the reserve fund; and
 - the adjusted cost resulting from the application of that percentage (section 29(2)).

The financial analysis consists of:

- a description of the financial status of the reserve fund as of the date of the study; and
- a recommended funding plan projected over a period of at least 30 consecutive years, beginning with the current fiscal year of the corporation, that shows the minimum balance of the reserve fund during the period and, for each projected year,
 - i. the estimated cost of major repair or replacement of the common elements and assets of the corporation based on current costs for the year in which the study is conducted,
 - ii. the estimated cost of major repair or replacement of the common elements and assets of the corporation at the estimated time of the repair or replacement based on an assumed annual inflation rate,
 - iii. the annual inflation rate referred to above,
 - iv. the estimated opening balance of the reserve fund,
 - v. the recommended amount of contributions to the reserve fund, determined on a cash flow basis, that are required to offset adequately the expected cost in the year of the expected major repair or replacement of each item in the component inventory,
 - vi. the estimated interest that will be earned on the reserve fund based on an assumed annual interest rate which is stated in the analysis,
 - vii. the total of the above two amounts,

- viii. the increase, if any, expressed as a percentage, in the recommended amount of contributions to the reserve fund over the recommended amount of contributions for the immediately preceding year, and
- ix. the estimated closing balance of the reserve fund (section 29(3)).

6.2.10. Mandated Review for Conductor of Study

6.2.10.1. Physical Analysis

As part of the preparation of update of the physical components of the reserve fund study/updates(s) the person conducting the study must review:

- the declaration and description;
- the current by-laws or proposed by-laws, if any, of the corporation establishing what constitutes a standard unit; and
- if there is no such by-law, a copy of the schedule that the declarant intends to deliver or has delivered to the board (pursuant to section 43(5)(h)) setting out what constitutes a standard unit for each class that the declarant specifies for the purpose of determining the responsibility for repairing improvements after damage and insuring them (section 29(4)).

6.2.10.2. Financial Analysis

As part of the preparation of update of the financial analysis for the reserve fund study/update(s) the person conducting the study must review:

- the most recent audited financial statements of the corporation or, if section 60 of the Condominium Act does not require the corporation to appoint auditors, the most recent financial statements of the corporation;
- all reciprocal cost sharing agreements, if any, of the corporation;
- the most recent reserve fund study of the corporation; and
- the most recent notice, if any, of future funding of the reserve fund sent to the owners by the board under section 94(9)(a) of the Condominium Act (section 29(4)).

6.2.11. Follow-up to a Reserve Fund Study - The Proposed Future Funding Plan

When a completed study is signed by its conductor (section 30(1)) it is delivered to the board which then has 120 days to review it and propose a plan for future reserve fund funding. The reserve fund study will, no doubt, contain the conductor’s recommendations for funding; however, it is open to the board to adopt a funding plan which differs from the study, although in all cases the resulting reserve fund must be adequate for its purpose.

The future funding plan must, in the cases of all condominiums except ‘old legislation’ (pre- may 5, 2001) condominiums, ensure that the fund will be adequate for the purpose by the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the study was completed (section 94(8) and 33(1)). As can be appreciated from the foregoing, the maximum time that can elapse between the submission of a study and the date upon which the reserve fund should be capable of meeting its purpose of major repair and replacement will be just under 24 months (assuming the study is delivered on the first day of one fiscal year, the reserve fund must be ‘in shape’ by the last day of the last month of the following fiscal period).

For 'old legislation' condominiums, the future funding plan must ensure that the fund will be adequate for the purpose by the end of the fifteenth year following the completion of the first reserve fund study after May 5, 2001 (section 33(2)). Since such condominiums do not have to update pre-May 5, 2001 studies, or complete first comprehensive studies, until May 5, 2004, (section 31) it is conceivable that a reserve fund for an old legislation condominium may not be adequately funded until December 14, 2114. The reason for the different treatment is to allow existing condominiums to phase in the impact of the new reserve fund rules over a period of time, and thereby cushion the 'ticker shock' to existing owners.

When the board has settled a future funding plan to its satisfaction (and resolved to adopt it for use) it must, within 15 days thereafter:

- send to the owners a notice in Form 15 to 48 of 01 (section 33(3)) containing a summary of the study, a summary of the proposed plan and a statement indicating the areas, if any, in which the proposed plan differs from the study; and
- send to the auditor a copy of the study, a copy of the proposed plan and a copy of the notice (above) sent to the owners (section 94(9)).

Neither the owner's nor the auditor have a right to approve the funding plan (although a plan which was patently deficient could be challenged by way of a separate proceeding) and the board is obliged to implement it within 30 days after the last of the above notices is given (section 94(10)).

6.2.12. Cost of Study and Use of Reserve Fund

With one exception, reserve funds may only be used for the funding of major repair and replacement of the common elements and assets of the corporation (section 93). The exception pertains to the cost of the reserve fund study(s) which, although a common expense, may be charged to the reserve fund (section 94(7)).

The board does not require any approval or consent of the owners to make expenditures out of a reserve fund (although clearly such expenditures must be for the authorized purpose), and the fund itself constitutes an asset of the corporation and is not available for distribution to mortgagees of the units or the owners (except on termination of the corporation) (section 95).

 Common Elements.....6.3-3
 6.3.5.2. Changes by Owner to Other Common Elements
 (non-exclusive-use)6.3-4
 6.3.5.3. The Agreement.....6.3-4

6.3.1. General

It should be kept in mind that at the time of a condominium’s registration it’s property will have (or, at least, will eventually have) a specific physical form. In the case of the common elements, as a general matter there is no authority in the corporation or an owner to make changes to this physical form without following one or more applicable procedures. Depending upon the extent of the change, the procedure may be simple or relatively complicated. In a similar vein, changes to the assets of the corporation, or a change in a service that the corporation provides to the owners cannot be made without attention to, and adherence, to specified rules.

6.3.2. What is a Change?

A change in the common elements will be an addition, alteration, or improvement (section 97(2)). A reasonable improvement to an exclusive use common element area by the owner is not necessarily a change, and minor improvements may be so insignificant as to be irrelevant¹. While a change in the assets of a corporation or in a service supplied are not defined in the Condominium Act, ‘additions, alterations, or improvements’ is a workable catch-all for the circumstances which will encompass such a change.

6.3.3. What is Never to be Considered a Change?

In the absence of some special provision, condominium corporations have the obligation to maintain and repair the common elements and to repair the units after damage (section 89(1) and 90). In carrying out these obligations the Condominium Act recognizes that it may not be possible or expedient to carry out these obligations without making some changes. For example, should a wood-framed roof made of spruce be blown off a townhouse unit and the repair is done with pine framing, provided the new material meets (or betters) the specifications of the old, it would be reasonable to accommodate such a substitution. To this end, section 97(1) provides that if, in carrying out it’s obligations to repair and maintain units and/or common elements, the corporation uses materials that are as ‘reasonably close in quality to the original as is appropriate in accordance with current construction standards’ then the work shall not be considered a change.

347 Winfair Holdings (Lagoon City) v. Simcoe Condominium Corp. No. 46 (1998) [repudiation of licence agreement, substantial change, owner’s vote required]

6.3.3.1. Types of Changes – A Matter of Degree

The Condominium Act recognizes three levels of change (for the purposes of the discussion below, 'change' refers to a change in the common elements, corporate assets, and service provided) and applies a different procedure for authorizing each type. The types of change, and the related procedures to be followed for each are as follows:

6.3.3.2. Changes Made without Notice

Any change which:

- is necessary to comply with a mutual use agreement under section 113;
- is necessary to comply with the requirements imposed by any general or special act, or regulations or bylaws made under that Act;
- in the opinion of the board, is necessary to ensure the safety or security of persons using the property or assets of the corporation or to prevent imminent damage to the property or assets; or,
- has an estimated cost in any given month no more than the greater of $1,000.00 and 1 % of the annual budgeted common expenses for the current fiscal year (section 97(2)(a) to (c)), may be carried out by resolution of the board and without notice to the owners. A review of the changes eligible for implementation without notice indicates they are those which are obligatory (by contract or by statutory direction), essential and of an urgent nature, or minor in terms of cost.

6.3.3.3. Changes Made With Notice

Any change which does not meet the description of a change that can be made without notice (above) or a substantial change (see below) cannot proceed until the corporation has sent a notice to all owners:

- Describing the proposed change
- Stating the estimated cost
- Specifying that the owners (meaning any one of them) have the right to requisition a meeting of the owners; and
- Containing a copy of section 46 (requisition procedure) and section 97 of the Condominium Act (section 97(3)(a)).

If no owner requisitions a meeting or, in the event a meeting is requisitioned the owners do not vote against the change, then the board may proceed with the change (section 97(3)(b)).

6.3.8.4. Substantial Changes

A substantial change is any change having an estimated cost (a total cost and not simply the cost incurred in the fiscal year) exceeding 10% of the annual budgeted common expenses for the current fiscal year, or a change which the board elects to treat as substantial (section 97(7)).

A substantial change cannot proceed until it has been approved by at a duly called meeting by a vote of the owners who own at least 66 2/3's of the units (section 97(4))¹.

6.3.4. Cost of Changes

The cost of any of the three levels of changes form part of the common expenses and, so, are paid for by the owners in accordance with their proportionate share of the common interest (section 97(7)).

6.3.5. Changes Made to the Common Elements by Owners

There may be occasions when an owner desires to make changes to the common elements. This is most likely to be the case where the site of the change is an exclusive use common element (it's use is exclusive to one or more, but not all, owners). For example, an outside balcony to a high-rise apartment unit may be identified as for the exclusive use of the unit occupant/owner. The owner of the unit wishes to lay ceramic tile on the floor of the balcony, covering the raw concrete surface. The new surface would be a change to the common elements and, unless the owner follows the correct procedure, it cannot proceed. Similarly, an area may be set aside in the underground level of a condominium for the parking of cars. The parking spots are assigned to units as exclusive use common elements. One owner wishes to enclose the assigned spot in concrete block and turn the enclosure into a storage room. Again, the work would be a change to the common elements and must be preceded by the requisite procedure.

First and foremost, any proposed change to the common elements by an owner must be examined in light of the Condominium Act and the declaration (section 98(1)). If there is no conflict (for example, using the above, the declaration states that the surfaces of balconies shall be kept as bare concrete, or that exclusive use parking areas shall not be used for any other purpose than the parking of vehicles) then the change is capable of being authorized.

To be authorized, one of two procedures will be followed, depending on whether the proposed change concerns the owner's exclusive use common element, or otherwise.

6.3.5.1. Change by an Owner to Owner's Exclusive Use Common Element

If the change is to the owner's exclusive use common element the board must consider whether the proposed change:

- will have an adverse effect on units owned by other owners;
- will give rise to any expense to the corporation;
- will detract from the appearance of buildings on the property;
- will affect the structural integrity of buildings on the property according to a certificate of an engineer, if the proposed addition, alteration or improvement involves a change to the structure of the buildings (section 98(2)); and
- will contravene the by-laws or rules and will not have an adverse effect on the rest of the common elements (section 25(2) of 48 of 01).

If the board is satisfied that none of these conditions apply (and it may call on the owner to produce evidence to reach the conclusion) then, subject to the owner and the corporation entering into an agreement (which must be registered on title to the owner's unit before the change may proceed (section 98(3)(b)) that:

- allocates the cost of the proposed addition, alteration or improvement between the corporation and the owner,
- sets out the respective duties and responsibilities, including the responsibilities for the cost of repair after damage, maintenance and insurance, of the corporation and the owner with respect to the proposed addition, alteration or improvement (section 98(1)(b)), and
- specifies who will have the ownership of the proposed addition, alteration, or improvement (section 25(1) of 48 of 01);

the board may, by resolution, authorize the change to proceed (section 97(1)(a)).

6.3.5.2. Changes by Owner to Other Common Elements (non-exclusive-use)

If the owner's proposed change is to common elements which are not for the owner's exclusive use, the procedures applying to the three levels of change discussed above in relation to changes made by the corporation are applicable. The change may be made without notice to the other owners, with notice (and the option to call the question to vote at a meeting), or with approval of a vote of the owner's of 2/3's of the units (in the case of a substantial change) (section 98(1)(c)), with the required procedure being dependent on the nature and magnitude of the proposed change. It should be noted that the notice of any meeting called on the subject must include a copy of the agreement referred to below (section 98(1)(d)).

If the requirements of section 97 are met then, subject to the owner and the corporation entering into an agreement (which must be registered on title to the owner's unit before the change may proceed (section 98(3)(b)) the board may authorize the change to proceed (section 98(1)(a)).

6.2.5.3. The Agreement

As described above, no change can be made to any part of the common elements by an owner unless the owner enters into an agreement with the corporation dealing with specified matters. The agreement must be registered on title before the work proceeds. The Condominium Act specifies that the agreement binds the owner's units and is enforceable against subsequent owners of the unit (section 98(5)). Any costs and the like resulting from the owner failing to comply with the agreement may be added to the respective unit's common expenses (for lien purposes) (section 98(4)).

7.1 INSURANCE

7.1.1. Required Insurance.....7.1-1
 7.1.1.1. Insurance for Damage to Units and Common Elements.....7.1-1
 7.1.1.2. Deductibles.....7.1-2
 7.1.1.2. Vacant Land Condominiums.....7.1-2
 7.1.1.4. Existing Policies.....7.1-3

7.1.1. Required Insurance

The Condominium Act requires a corporation to obtain and maintain three types of insurance:

1. for damage to the units and common elements caused by ‘major perils’ or other perils specified in the declaration or by-laws (section 99(1))¹;
2. against its liability arising from a breach of duty as occupier of the common elements or land that the corporation holds as an asset (section 102(a));and,
3. against its liability arising from the ownership, use or operation of boilers, machinery, pressure vessels and motor vehicles (section 102(b)).

7.1.1.1. Insurance for Damage to Units and Common Elements

This type of insurance is to protect against damage to the units and common elements caused by perils specified in the declaration and against ‘major perils’. The latter is defined as perils of:

- Fire
- Lightning
- Smoke
- Windstorm
- Hail
- Explosion
- Water escape
- Strikes
- Riots of Civil Commotion
- Impact by aircraft or vehicles
- Vandalism, and
- Malicious acts (section 99(2))

Insurance of this type does not oblige the corporation to insure against damage to improvements made to a unit (section 99(4)). For post-May 5, 2001 condominiums, and pre-May 5, 2001 condominiums which have passed a by-law defining what a standard unit is, improvements to a unit will be determined with reference to the standard unit in the class to which the particular unit belongs (section 99(5) and 99(6)) Any improvement over and above those which are characteristic of the standard unit, must be insured by the respective unit owner

The amount of insurance must be sufficient to cover the replacement cost of the property damaged by the peril insured against, subject only to a ‘reasonable’ deductible (section 99(7)) and will, despite any exclusion in the policy, insure against damage resulting from faulty or improper material, workmanship or design that would be insured but for the exclusion. For example, if a joint in a water supply pipe in a common room was improperly soldered and, at some point, burst causing water damage to the floor, any provision in the insurance policy denying coverage because the damage was due to negligence in construction would be inoperative. The insurance would cover the damage to the floor (though it is unlikely that it would cover the cost of repairing the pipe itself).

An act of any person which is prejudicial to the corporation or the owners will not void the insurance policy, regardless of its terms (section 99(8)). By way of example, if an owner of a unit were to deliberately set fire to a part of the condominium property, that act would not prevent the corporation from claiming on the insurance.

A policy insuring against damage from major perils cannot be terminated unless the insurer has given notice of the cancellation by registered mail to both the corporation and the insurance trustee at least 60 days in advance (section 99(9)).

Proceeds of a 'major perils' policy must be paid to the corporation, notwithstanding any contrary provision in any insurance trust agreement, if they are less than 15% of the replacement cost of the property covered by the insurance (section 100(1)). The proceeds must be used promptly for repair or replacement, excepting only if the owners have voted to terminate the corporation due to substantial (25% or more of the replacement cost of the property) damage (section 100(2)). A mortgagee of the property cannot require that proceeds received under a 'major perils' policy be paid towards the discharge of the mortgage, regardless of any provision to the contrary in the mortgage (section 100(4)).

The existence of the corporations 'major perils' policy does not prevent an owner from obtaining separate insurance against loss or damage to the owner's unit or interest in the common elements to cover any inapplicability, inadequacy, or ineffectiveness, of the corporations policy(s) (section 101(1)). The separate policies are not to be brought into contribution with each other, although if the corporation maintains more than one 'major perils' policy they will be brought into contribution (section 101(2)).

7.1.1.2. Deductibles

As noted above, a 'major perils' policy may contain a 'reasonable' deductible. There is no specific provision allowing a deductible for the other two types of policies; however, this appears to be implicit. Except in a case where an owner, a lessee of an owner, or a person residing in a unit with the permission or knowledge of the owner, causes damage to the owner's unit, any deductible is included in the common expenses (section 105(1))¹. Where the exception applies, the deductible must be added to the common expenses paid for the owner's unit (section 105(2))². The corporation may pass a by-law to extend the circumstances in which the exception will apply, provided the damage is not caused by the corporation, its directors or officers, or an agent or employee (section 105(3)). Any deductible which an owner may have to entirely pay is an insurable interest of the owner and may be the subject of insurance taken out by the owner (section 105(4)).

7.1.1.3. Vacant Land Condominiums

Unlike all other types of condominiums, vacant land condominium corporation's are not fully bound by the provisions of section 99 of the Condominium Act which mandates that the corporation maintain insurance on the units and common elements on behalf of itself and the owners for damage caused by major and other perils. Section 159(2) provides an exemption from this section 'for buildings and structures located on a unit'. Section 159(3) of the Condominium Act imposes the obligation on the unit owner(s) to obtain and maintain the insurance for damage to the unit that, but for section 159(2), would have had to be obtained by the corporation in respect of the unit.

It should be noted that the obligation to insure against damage to the common elements remains with the vacant land condominium corporation.

7.1.1.4. Existing Policies

Condominiums existing prior to May 5, 2001 which on that date had 'major perils' policies in place are not required to amend the policy(s) to meet the requirements of the Condominium Act (section 181(1)). However, when such policy(s) is up for renewal the requirements of section 99 must be satisfied in the renewal (section 181(2)).

7.2 THE CORPORATION’S MONEY

7.2.1. Where May a Corporation’s Monies be Deposited.....7.2-1
 7.2.2. Every Corporation Must Have At Least Two Accounts.....7.2-1
 7.2.3. General Directive to Person’s Receiving Money of a Corporation.....7.2-1
 7.2.4. Holding Monies in Eligible Securities.....7.2-2
 7.2.5. Records.....7.2-2

As part of the on-going operation of a condominium and its affairs money will be collected and remitted by the corporation for a variety of purposes. Money collected will or could include such things as the common expense contributions, revenue from the use or lease of common elements, and insurance proceeds. Until the time comes for the corporation to pay all or any part of such funds out the Condominium Act prescribes where and on what terms the money is to be kept on deposit. The rule(s) applicable to such deposit differ depending on whether the funds are ear-marked for one or more reserve fund purposes or otherwise; however, in both cases it can be generally said that, unless some change is made in the future to the regulations, only secure, insured institutions, and conservative investments, may be entrusted with a corporation’s monies.

7.2.1. Where May a Corporation’s Monies be Deposited?

A condominium corporation may have its accounts at one or more of the following institutions:

- A bank listed under Schedule I or II to the Bank Act (Canada);
- A trust corporation;
- A loan corporation;
- A credit union authorized to receive money on deposit; or,
- A Province of Ontario Saving Office (section 115(3)).

7.2.2. Every Corporation Must Have At Least Two Accounts

While there is no limit on the number of accounts a condominium may have, every condominium must have at least one account dedicated only to holding reserve fund monies (reserve fund account), and one account dedicated to all other purposes (the general account) (section 115(2)). Practically speaking, a corporation should find little or no need to maintain more than one of each type of account although the following situations are examples of those which may justify more than one:

- Where funds on deposit with any one institution covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation $60,000.00 insurance may exceed the limit, opening a second account for the purpose at another institution will ensure coverage for the excess (again up to $60,000.00)
- To make use of a daily interest deposit (non-chequing) account for funds that will be held for under thirty days (at which level other investment instruments may realize a higher yield), pending transfer to a chequing account.

7.2.3. General Directive to Person’s Receiving Money of a Corporation

Any person who receives money on behalf of or for the benefit of the corporation holds it in trust for the performance by the corporation of its duties and obligations (section 115(1)), and must pay the money, together with interest and other investment proceeds, into either:

- A general account of the corporation, if the money was not received as contributions from owners to the reserve fund; or,
- A reserve fund account of the corporation, if the money was received as contributions from owners to the reserve fund (section 115(4)).

7.2.4. Holding Monies in Eligible Securities

While monies held in accounts are (or should be) readily accessible at all times by a corporation, interest on the deposits may be minimal or, in any event, less than may be obtained if the monies were committed for a fixed period of time. The Condominium Act permits monies to be invested in specified 'eligible securities' which, at the present time, are limited to a:

- bond
- debenture
- guaranteed investment certificate
- deposit receipt
- deposit note
- certificate of deposit
- term deposit
- or other similar instrument

provided it is issued by the government of Canada or any province, or is issued by an institution in Ontario insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation (while the regulations can permit other eligible investments they have not done so) (section 115(5)).

In all cases the securities must be:

- Registered in the name of the corporation; or,
- Held in a segregated account under the name of the corporation by a member of the Investment Dealers Association and insured by the Canadian Investor Protection Fund (which guarantee deposits with members up to $1,000,000.00 in the event of insolvency) (section 115(6) and 115(7)).

There is an important distinction between investing in eligible securities with monies from the general account and monies from reserve fund accounts. In the case of the former the investment must be convertible to cash with 90 days following a request from the board (section 115(6)(a)). While investments with reserve fund monies have no such limitation, before making investments with reserve fund monies the board must develop an investment plan based on the anticipated cash requirements of the reserve fund as set out in the most recent reserve fund study (section 115(8)). The clear purpose of this requirement is to allow funds to be locked in for determined periods of time which dovetail with calls which will be made on the reserve funds.

7.2.5. Records

Any person receiving money of the corporation is obliged to keep records relating to the receipt and dispositions of all money passing through, or required to pass through, the corporations accounts. Such records must be made available for examination, upon reasonable notice and at all reasonable times, by the corporation, any owner, and any mortgagee (section 115(9)).

8.0 TERMINATION OF A CONDOMINIUM

8.1. Termination with Consent.....8.0-1
 8.2. Termination Upon Substantial Damage.....8.0-2
 8.3. Termination Upon Sale of Property.....8.0-3
 8.4. Dissenters Rights.....8.0-3
 8.5. Termination Upon Expropriation.....8.0-4
 8.6. Termination By The Court.....8.0-4
 8.7. Distribution of Assets.....8.0-5

Just as land and buildings can be brought under the governance of the Condominium Act through registration of a declaration and description, so all or part of a condominium can (and in the case of leasehold condominiums presumably always will) be withdrawn from the governance of the Condominium Act, the owner’s interests reconstituted as interests in land, assets, and/or rights, and the corporation becomes functus.

There are five ways in which all or part of a condominium’s property may come to be withdrawn from Condominium Act governance:

1. Termination with consent;
2. Termination upon substantial damage;
3. Termination upon sale of property;
4. Termination upon expropriation; and,
5. Termination by the court.

Of these five ways, the first three require an endorsing vote by a majority vote of the owners of at least 80% of the units, while the last requires significant consideration of the owner’s general good interests. Set out below is a general summary of the pertinent aspects of each of the above vehicles of termination.

8.1 Termination with Consent

With the endorsement (by vote) of the owners of 80% or more of the units (units with a vote) in a condominium and the written consent of 80% of those persons having registered claims against the property created after registration, the government of the property by the Condominium Act is terminated upon registration of a notice of termination (section 122(1) and (2)). This notice must be completed in Form 13 of regulation 49 of 01 (section 47) and will be accompanied by Family Law Act clearances from each unit owner who is an individual (section 47(3)(b)).

The Condominium Act does not impose any pre-condition or criteria on the circumstances in which a voluntary termination may occur, nor does it mandate who may initiate the process. Clearly this could be done by the board of a corporation, or by owners requisitioning a meeting for the purpose of calling the question.

What claims are registered will be determined by an examination of the title records of the condominium property as of the day of the vote of the owners. “Claims” are defined by the Condominium Act as including a ‘right, title, interest, encumbrance or demand of any kind affecting land but does not include the interest of an owner in the owner’s unit or common interest’, while “encumbrance” is defined as a ‘claim that secures the payment of money or the performance of any other obligation and includes a charge under the Land Titles Act, a mortgage and a lien’ (section 1(1)).

Upon registration of the notice of termination on consent:

1. the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property;
2. the owners are tenants in common of the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description in the same proportions as their common interests;

3. claims against the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description, that were created before the registration of the declaration and description that made this Act applicable to the land, are as effective as if the declaration and description had not been registered;
4. encumbrances against each unit and common interest, that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the unit, are claims against the interests of the owner in the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description and have the same priority as they had before the registration of the notice of termination; and
5. all other claims against the property that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the property are extinguished (section 127(1)).

Registration procedures are set out in section 47 and 51 of 49 of 01.

8.2 Termination Upon Substantial Damage

If damage has occurred to the building and structures on the property which is equal to or greater than 25% of the replacement cost of all buildings and structures on the property (“substantial damage”, section 123(2)), the board must initiate a procedure which will lead to the termination of the condominium if the owners of 80% or more of the voting units vote in favour of termination (section 123(7)).

Should there be damage which the board considers may constitute substantial damage it must engage at least two qualified persons without affiliation to the board to make estimates of the damage and report within 30 days of the damages occurring (section 123(3)). Based on the estimates, the board will then determine whether there has been substantial damage in which case it must then give notice of that determination to the owners (section 123(5)). The notice of determination must be in Form 14 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 47 of 49 of 01) and specify that:

- the owners have the right, in accordance with section 46 and within 30 days of receiving the notice, to requisition a meeting of owners; and
- the board is required to register a notice terminating the government of the property by the Condominium Act if the owners of at least 80% of the units vote in favour of termination (section 123(6)).

Should the owners not requisition a meeting (the owners of a minimum of 15% of the units is required), or if the vote is below the required majority of the votes of owners of at least 80% of the units, there will be no termination and the board must proceed to repair the property within a reasonable time (section 123(10)). Otherwise, the board must register the notice of termination (in Form 14 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 47 of 49 of 01)) within 30 days of the vote (section 123(9)).

Upon registration of the notice of termination on substantial damage:

1. the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property;
2. the owners are tenants in common of the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description in the same proportions as their common interests;
3. claims against the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description, that were created before the registration of the declaration and description that made this Act applicable to the land, are as effective as if the declaration and description had not been registered;

4. encumbrances against each unit and common interest, that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the unit, are claims against the interests of the owner in the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description and have the same priority as they had before the registration of the notice of termination; and
5. all other claims against the property that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the property are extinguished (section 127(1)).

Registration procedures are set out in section 47 and 51 of 49 of 01.

8.3 Termination Upon Sale of Property

With the endorsement (by vote) of the owners of 80% or more of the units (units with a vote) in a condominium and the written consent of 80% of those persons having registered claims against the property created after registration, the corporation may sell the whole of the property or a part of the common elements (section 124(1) and (2)). the government of the property by the Condominium Act terminated upon registration of a notice of termination (section 122(1) and (2)). This notice must be completed in Form 13 of regulation 49 of 01 (section 47) and will be accompanied by Family Law Act clearances from each unit owner who is an individual (section 47(3)(b) of 49 of 01).

The Condominium Act does not impose any pre-condition or criteria on the circumstances in which a sale may occur, nor does it mandate who may initiate the process. Clearly this could be done by the board of a corporation, or by owners requisitioning a meeting for the purpose of calling the question. Regardless of the sufficiency of a positive vote and written consents from claimants, the board must authorize the sale.

What claims are registered will be determined by an examination of the title records of the condominium property as of the day of the vote of the owners. “Claims” are defined by the Condominium Act as including a ‘right, title, interest, encumbrance or demand of any kind affecting land but does not include the interest of an owner in the owner’s unit or common interest’, while “encumbrance” is defined as a ‘claim that secures the payment of money or the performance of any other obligation and includes a charge under the Land Titles Act, a mortgage and a lien’ (section 1(1)).

When an authorized sale takes place, the board will deliver a deed, a certificate in Form 15 to regulation 49 of 01 (section 48(2)), and Family Law Act clearances from all owners (section 48(1)(b) of 49 of 01) to the purchaser. The registration of the deed and certificate effects the following:

- (a) the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property sold;
- (b) claims against the land and interests appurtenant to the land, that were created before the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the land, are as effective as if the declaration and description had not been registered; and
- (c) claims against the property being sold or expropriated, as the case may be, that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to that property, are extinguished (section 127(2)).

Registration procedures are detailed in sections 48 and 51 of 49 of 01.

The owners at the time of the registration of the deed share in the net proceeds of the sale in the same proportions as their common interests (section 124(4)).

8.4 Dissenters Rights

It would be expected that a termination through sale process would not be initiated unless an appreciation of the value of the property was in hand, and a potential purchaser(s) in the wings; however, there is no requirement for either of these circumstances to be present. Regardless, there may be differing opinions among owners as to whether a voluntary sale is prudent or desirable. In order to protect the minority of owners (who in no case would own more than 20 % of the voting units), the Condominium Act gives owners who voted against sale a 30 day window following the positive vote to submit any dispute over the fair market value of the property or part of the common elements to mediation under section 132 (section 125(1)). In order to make use of this referral provision, a dissenting owner must give notice of intention to submit a dispute to mediation within 10 days of the positive vote (section 125(3)).

A dissenting owner who give notice of intention and submits a dispute on value to mediation will be entitled to payment of the greater of the amount which equal the unit's common interest proportion of the fair market value as determined by the arbitration, and the amount otherwise payable (the share of the net proceeds that is the unit's proportion of the common interests (section 124(4)). This rule applies whether the arbitrated fair market value is greater or less than the sale price. If there is a deficiency (the sale price is less than the arbitrated fair market value) the corporation must pay the deficiency to the dissenting owner(s) and the remaining owners bear the cost of same among themselves, as determined by the proportions of their common interests (recalculated, logically, without the dissenting unit owners shares).

8.5 Termination Upon Expropriation

Expropriation is the taking of land, with or without the cooperation of the land owner, by authorized public authorities such as the Province, municipalities, conservation and other special purpose public bodies, for their purposes, Expropriation can only be accomplished by following the processes set out in the Expropriations Act of Ontario, including the registration of a plan of expropriation which transfers title to the expropriating authority (section 9 of the Expropriations Act).

The Condominium Act provides that in the event a condominium property or a part of the common elements is expropriated, the Condominium Act ceases to govern the property or the part of the common elements (section 126(1)). The result is automatic and is effected upon registration of the plan of condominium.

In the case of an expropriation of part of the common elements, the owners will share in the compensation payable by the expropriating authority in the same proportions as their common interests. The only exception is in a case where the part of the common elements which is expropriated is reserved to the exclusive use of one or more owners but not all the owners. In such case, the compensation will be divided among the owners of the designated units in the proportions in which their interests are affected (section 126(3)).

Upon registration of the expropriation plan, in addition to the Condominium Act ceasing to govern:

- claims against the land and interests appurtenant to the land, that were created before the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to the land, are as effective as if the declaration and description had not been registered; and
- claims against the property being sold or expropriated, as the case may be, that were created after the registration of the declaration and description that made the Condominium Act applicable to that property, are extinguished (section 127(2)).

Details regarding the registration procedures respecting a plan of expropriation are found in section 50 and 51 of 49 of 01.

The net assets of the corporation will be distributed among the owners in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests (section 129).

8.6 Termination By The Court

Section 128 of the Condominium Act permits:

- A Corporation
- An owner; or,
- Any person having an encumbrance against a unit and common interest, to make application to the Superior Court of Justice for an order terminating the government of the property by the Condominium Act (section 128(1)).

Such an order may be made by the court provided it is of the opinion such is just and equitable having regard to:

- (a) the scheme and intent of the Condominium Act;
- (b) the probability of unfairness to the owners if the court does not order termination;
- (c) the probability of confusion and uncertainty in the affairs of the corporation or of the owners if the court does not order termination; and
- (d) the best interests of the owners (section 128(2)).

The court can include any and all provisions in the order that it considers appropriate in the circumstances¹.

The order takes effect when it is registered on title. Registration procedures are set out in section 50 and 51 of 49 of 01.

8.7 Distribution of Assets

In all cases where the owners and property cease to be governed by the Condominium Act the assets of the corporation are to be first used to pay all claims for the payment of money against the corporation and the balance is distributed among the owners in the same proportions as the proportions of their common interests (section 129).

The old legislation (Condominium Act, chapter 26 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, as amended) is repealed by section 184 of the Condominium Act). While this means the old legislation no longer has application to the creation of new condominiums or the governance of all condominiums in Ontario, for certain limited purposes the old legislation still has operation or effect. This limited vitality comes from general principles mandated by Ontario’s Interpretation Act, and from specific exceptions provided in the Condominium Act. Apart from these principles and exceptions (described below) the old legislation can be relegated to the archives and disregarded for all purposes and regard for all purposes must and should be had only to the new laws (Condominium Act and regulations 48 and 49 of 2001).

9.1.1. Interpretation Act

By virtue the Interpretation Act, the repeal of the Condominium Act, chapter 26 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario (as amended) does not:

- affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued, accruing or incurred under the old Condominium Act;
- affect any offence committed against the old Condominium Act, or any penalty or forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect thereof;
- affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment, and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the old Condominium Act had not been repealed (section 14).
- all regulations, orders, rules and by-laws made under the old Condominium Act continue good and valid in so far as they are not inconsistent with the Condominium Act until they are annulled and others made in their stead; and
- a reference in an unrepealed Act, or in a rule, order or regulation made thereunder to the old Condominium Act, shall, as regards any subsequent transaction, matter or thing be held and construed to be a reference to the provisions of the Condominium Act relating to the same subject-matter and, if there is no provision in the Condominium Act relating to the same subject-matter, the old Condominium Act stands good and shall be read and construed as unrepealed in so far, and in so far only, as is necessary to support, maintain or give effect to such unrepealed Act, or such rule, order or regulation made thereunder (section 15).

9.1.2. Condominium Act – Transitional Provisions

9.1.2.1. Existing Condominiums Continued as Standard Condominiums

All condominiums created on or before May 4, 2001 are continued as condominium corporations under the Condominium Act (section 178) and are recognized as being of the standard type (section 3 of 48 of 01).

A corporation's lien for unpaid common expense contributions that was created under the old legislation is continued as a lien under the Condominium Act (section 178). Such lien's would be limited to those which are the subject of a notice of lien registered on or before May 4, 2001, or which had not expired by May 5, 2001 (under the old Condominium Act a lien expired if it was not registered by the end of the third month after default occurred (section 32(5))).

9.1.2.3. Turn-Over Meeting Provisions of Old Condominium Act Apply

The turn-over provisions of the new Condominium Act (section 43) do not apply to any condominium corporation created on or before May 4, 2001. Turn-overs of such corporations will continue to be conducted under the directions of section 26 of the old Condominium Act (section 179(1)) which provides the declarant must deliver:

- (a) the seal of the corporation;
- (b) the minute book for the corporation, containing the most current copies of the declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations and any amendments thereto;
- (c) copies of all agreements entered into by the corporation or the declarant or the declarant's representatives on behalf of the corporation, including the management contracts, deeds, leases, licences and those items set out in section 52(6) of the old Condominium Act (i.e. budget statement for first year, amenities completion schedule);
- (d) a record maintained under section 20(2) of the old Condominium Act (owners and mortgagees service information);
- (e) the existing warranties and guarantees for all the equipment, fixtures and chattels included in the sale of either the units or common elements that are not protected by warranties and guarantees given directly to a unit purchaser;
- (f) the as-built architectural, structural, engineering, mechanical, electrical and plumbing plans;
- (g) the original specifications indicating thereon all material changes;
- (h) the plans for underground site service, site grading, drainage and landscaping together with cable television drawings if available;
- (i) such other available plans and information not mentioned in items (f), (g) or (h) above but relevant to future repair or maintenance of the property;
- (j) an unaudited financial statement prepared as at a date not earlier than thirty days prior to the meeting;

(k) a table depicting the maintenance responsibilities and indicating whether the corporation or the unit owners are responsible;

(l) bills of sale or transfers for all items that are assets of the condominium corporation but not part of the real property;

(m) a list detailing current replacement costs and life expectancy under normal maintenance conditions of all major capital items in the property, including, where applicable, those items set out in section 36(1) of the old Condominium Act (roofs, exteriors of buildings, roads, sidewalks, sewers, heating, electrical and plumbing systems, elevators, laundry, recreational and parking facilities); and

(n) all financial records of the corporation and of the declarant relating to the operation of the corporation from the date of registration of the declaration and the description.

9.1.2.4. Sale and Lease of Units Generally Governed by Old Condominium Act

In any case where, on or before May 5, 2001, a declarant has entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for a unit or proposed unit, sections 51 to 54, excepting section 52(5), of the old Condominium Act, dealing with the sale and lease of units continue to apply (section 180(1)) with the qualification that a change to the information in a disclosure statement that arises only as a result of the coming into force of the Condominium Act does not constitute a material change (and therefore provides no opportunity for rescission) (section 180(1)(2)). The latter rider is preserve the status quo in the relations between the declarant and purchaser regardless of the changes to condominium laws. In addition, sections 34 to 37 of regulation 96 of 1990 (under the old Condominium Act) continue to apply in the foregoing circumstances (section 64(b) of regulation 48 of 01).

The following sections of the Condominium Act are inapplicable in a case where the declarant has entered into an agreement of purchase and sale on or before May 5, 2001:

Section	Subject
44	requiring performance audits
72 to 75	dealing with disclosure statement
78 to 82	sale of units including matters such as interim occupancy, trust money, and interest
12	easements appurtenant to the units (section 180(1))
17	objects and duties of corporations
19	right of entry into exclusive use common elements
20	easements in declaration or phase benefiting or burdening other lands of declarant or imposed as condition of approval
21	lease, grant or easement or license, release of easement, of or respecting the common elements
22	telecommunications agreement (section 64 of regulation 48 of 01)

Section 52(5) of the old Condominium Act, which gave a right of damages in favour of a corporation or unit owner who relied on a false, deceptive or misleading statement or omission in a disclosure or other statement or information required by the statute, is inapplicable to proposed or registered condominiums where an agreement of purchase and sale had been entered before May 6, 2001. In its place, section 133 of the Condominium Act has full play for all damages arising from such situations.

Set out below are section 51 to 54 of the old Condominium Act followed by section 34 to 37 of regulation 96 of 1990:

Sections 51 to 54

9.1.2.5. Offences Under Old Condominium Act

Any contravention of section 52(5) (damage right for false, deceptive or misleading statements or information or omissions), 52(6) (contents and accuracy of disclosure statement), and 53(1) (trust provisions for purchase monies) of the old Condominium Act is subject to prosecution under section 55 of the old Condominium Act and not the new Condominium Act (section 180(3)).

9.1.2.6. Current Insurance Policies

Any corporation with a policy of insurance for damage to units and common elements (major peril, replacement cost) under section 27 of the old legislation is not subject to section 99 of the Condominium Act (dealing with the same subject) (section 181). However, on expiry of the policy section 99 applies and the renewal policy must meet the new criteria (section 181(2)).

9.1.2.7. Reserve Fund Studies

Condominiums which were registered prior to May 5, 2001 are not required to carry out a reserve fund study immediately. They are allowed until May 5, 2004 to conduct a comprehensive study (section 94(5) and section 31(1)). Thereafter, such condominiums will follow the cycle of updates referred to above. In the event an old legislation condominium has carried out the equivalent of a comprehensive study prior to May 5, 2001, it is relieved of any obligation to carry out a second comprehensive study. Instead, the next following study for such a situation will be an update based on a site inspection conducted no later than May 5, 2004 (section 31(1)).

9.1.2.8. Termination of Agreements

Corporations which have entered into agreements of the type described in section 111 (management) and 112 (continuing provision of goods and services, provision of facilities (other than non-profit; lease of common elements for business purposes) of the Condominium Act on or before May 4, 2001, are governed by section 39 of the old Condominium Act with respect to the termination of such agreements (section 182), and not section 111 and 112 of the Condominium Act. Section 39 of the old Condominium Act states:

Management agreement

39.(1) The corporation may by by-law terminate, on giving sixty days notice in writing, any agreement between the corporation and any person for the management of the property entered into at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of a majority of the units.

Agreements expiring

(2) Every agreement for the provision of services on a continuing basis, every lease of the common elements or part thereof for business purposes and every agreement for the provision of recreation facilities to the corporation on other than a non-profit basis entered into by a corporation after the 1st day of June, 1979 and at a time when the majority of the members of the board were elected when the declarant was the registered owner of a majority of the units that does not expire within twelve months after its effective date shall be deemed to expire twelve months after its effective date unless, within the twelve month period, the agreement is ratified by the board at a time when the majority of the board members were elected after the declarant ceased to be the registered owner of a majority of the units.

The most notable difference between the old provisions and the new is that, with respect to the above agreements other than management, an agreement having a term of more than 12 months would automatically expire unless ratified by the corporation. Under the Condominium Act section 112, a right to terminate is available but, in the absence of the right's exercise, the agreement(s) will continue in effect.

9.1.2.9. Descriptions Acceptable for Registration But Awaiting Planning Act Approval as of May 5, 2001

In order to minimize inconvenience, cost, and process time, in the case of proposed condominiums which had not received Planning Act approval from the approval authority before May 6, 2001 but whose descriptions were acceptable for registration as of May 5, 2001, various exemptions are provided for such descriptions to avoid the need to make changes in form in the documentation which would otherwise be required to meet the new requirements (section 63(1) of regulation 48 of 01 and section 52(1) of regulation 49 of 01). These exemptions expire on the 180th day after May 5, 2001 () and any proposed condominium which is not registered by the end of the window will have to adhere to the new requirements for description (section 63(2) of 48 of 01 and section 52(2) of 49 of 01).

1. The registrant shall prominently display the certificate of registration at the registrant’s principal business address as indicated in the application for registration.

 - i. $100,000, plus applicable interest, administrative fees and legal costs, if the purchase agreement or a construction contract for the home was entered into before September 1, 2004 and the home has a date of possession before July 1, 2006, or
 - ii. $150,000, plus applicable interest, administrative fees and legal costs, if the purchase agreement or a construction contract for the home was entered into on or after September 1, 2004 or if, under the purchase agreement or construction contract, the home has a date of possession on or after July 1, 2006.
- 4.0.2 If there is any contract or agreement between a vendor and the Corporation or between a builder and the Corporation that purports to limit the indemnity obligations of the vendor or the builder and that conflicts or is inconsistent with the indemnity obligations of the vendor or the builder as set out in this Regulation, including without limitation paragraphs 3.1 and 4, then, to the extent of any conflict or inconsistency, this Regulation prevails.
- 4.1 The registrant shall pay an administration fee to the Corporation equal to 15 per cent of the amount that is paid out of the guarantee fund in payment of claims in respect of the registrant.

- 4.2 The registrant shall pay to the Corporation interest at the rate of 1.5 per cent per month, calculated daily, on all amounts that the registrant owes to the Corporation; the registrant shall make the interest payments on the first day of each month following the date of default in repaying the amounts owed until the amounts owed are repaid in full.

- 6.4 If the results of an examination or interview by the Registrar or an inspection by the Corporation demonstrate that a registrant does not have the necessary technical competence to be registered under the Act, the Registrar may require the registrant, as a condition for continuing to be registered, to,
 - i. limit the number of homes the registrant constructs,
 - ii. post security with the Corporation, or

9. It is a condition of registration that where, as a result of the financial position or the level of technical competence of a registrant, the registrant has consented to conditions limiting the number of homes the registrant may construct or limiting the registrant to the construction of a particular class of homes, the registrant shall not, without the prior written consent of the Registrar, commence to construct,

If the Agreement is so ended, interest shall be payable on all sums paid by the Purchaser, for the period commencing 120 days after the closing date in the Agreement at a rate 1% below the rate paid by the Province of Ontario Savings Office savings accounts as of the date on which the Agreement ended.
- (iv) Despite any provision to the contrary contained in it, the Agreement shall not be terminated by the Vendor by reason of failure to complete the dwelling as specified in the Agreement within a period of time or by a date specified in the Agreement, extended as above, unless the Purchaser consents to the termination in writing or the Agreement is ended pursuant to 5 (iii) above.
- (v) Where there is conflict or ambiguity between the Agreement and this Addendum this Addendum shall prevail.
- (vi) The Vendor may exclude extensions of the closing date reasonably required as a result of a strike, a fire, a flood, an act of God or a civil insurrection (an "Event") when calculating the 120 days referred to in 5 (i) and (iii) only if the Vendor delivers the notices described in 5 (vii) to the Purchaser.
- (vii) If an extension of the closing date referred to in 5 (i) or (iii) above is reasonably required as a result of an Event, then the Vendor shall provide the following notices to the Purchaser:
 - (A) As soon as reasonably possible but not later than 20 days after the Vendor knows or ought reasonably to have known that the Event has commenced, the Vendor shall provide written notice to the Purchaser setting out a brief description of the Event and an estimate, if available, of the possible length of extension that may be required as a result of the Event; and
 - (B) As soon as reasonably possible but not later than 20 days after the conclusion of the Event, the Vendor shall provide written notice to the Purchaser setting out a brief description of the particular Event that was the cause of the extension, the number of days by which the closing date is extended as a consequence of the Event, and the new closing date now in effect as a result of the Event.

(viii) If an Event occurs and the closing date is reasonably required to be extended as a result of the Event, but the Vendor has failed to provide the notices described in 5 (vii), then the Purchaser shall have the option of sending written notice to both the Tarion Warranty Corporation and the Vendor. The notice shall contain a request for a formal extension of the closing date to accommodate the delay in completing the dwelling caused by the Event. The Purchaser shall send the notice no later than 40 days after the conclusion of the Event. Following receipt of the notice, the Tarion Warranty Corporation shall determine the length of a reasonable extension period that the Vendor ought reasonably to have implemented, and shall confirm its determination by notice in writing to both the Vendor and the Purchaser. The extension period as so determined shall be deemed to be excluded from the calculation of the 120 days referred to in 5 (i) and (iii) above, and the Agreement shall be deemed to be extended accordingly.

(ix) 5 (vi), (vii) and (viii) apply to all Agreements entered into on or after November 1, 2000.

 - (iii) the appeal is made only for the purpose of delay, or

Powers

(56) On an appeal under subsection (34) or (39), the Municipal Board may make any decision that the approval authority could have made on the application and on an appeal under subsection (43) or (48) shall determine the question as to the conditions appealed to it. 1994, c. 23, s. 30.

405-McKinstry et al v York Condominium No. 472 (2003) (The oppression remedy (sec. 135) protects reasonable expectations and should not be unduly restricted but should be given a broad and flexible interpretation that will give effect to the remedy. It applies to protect against both conduct which is unlawful or without authority and conduct which is technically authorized and ostensibly legal. The only prerequisite is that the conduct must be or threaten to be oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the applicant, or unfairly disregard the interests of the applicant.
A section 135 application need not first proceed through the mediation/arbitration procedure.)

409-Niedemeier v. York Condominium Corp. NO. 50 (2006) (While a Corporation acted without authorization to deny an owner access to certain common elements as a 'self-help' remedy to obtain the owner's payment of funds due the Corporation, such conduct is not such as to bring the oppression remedy into play.)

411- Peel Condominium Corporation No. 668 (2006) (The oppression remedy has no application against a third party (arm's length lender) who plays no part in the control and operation of the corporation.)
