The condominium declaration for the Sterling Club I condominium development was registered on December 31, 1990. The respondent advised the applicants of the registration of the condominium declaration by a letter dated January 9, 1991. According to the formula for reckoning the transfer date set out in Article 12.01(x) of the unit transfer agreement, the transfer date was January 24, 1991. The respondent's letter to the applicants dated January 9, 1991 stated a transfer date of January 1, 1991, and advised the applicants that they would be contacted shortly concerning the execution of documents required to facilitate the transfer of title.

Subsequent correspondence from the respondent to the applicants stated that documentation for the transfer of title was being prepared and would be completed in the near future. However, at the time of the hearing of this application on April 1, 1992, this documentation had not been completed. Indeed, during oral argument of the application I asked counsel for the respondent to proffer a firm date, or even tentative date, upon which the transfer of title could be accomplished and counsel could not do so. The respondent has advised the applicants of its inability at present to complete the documentation required for the conveyance of legal title to the condominium units to the applicants.

Article 11.03 of the unit purchase agreement provides as follows:

If, at the date of closing under Articles 11.01 and 11.02, the Promissory Notes in favour of the Vendor and the Financial Services Company have not been paid in full, the Vendor shall be credited with the amount including interest, if any, remaining unpaid, against the purchase price, and the amount so credited shall be deemed to have been paid on the Promissory Notes and the Vendor covenants to pay to the Financial Services Company its share of the amount so credited.

The reference therein to the date of closing under Article 11.01 deals with the vendor's right to require the purchaser to sell the purchaser's land and interest in the unit to the vendor if the purchaser is in breach of the agreement. The reference to the date of closing under Article 11.02 deals with the purchaser's right to require the vendor to repurchase the purchaser's land and interest in the unit in the event that certain conditions set out in Article 11.02 exist. Neither of these articles applies in the circumstances of this matter. The terms of these articles have no relevance with respect to the establishment of the transfer date.

The development agreement refers to the purchaser as the developer and the vendor as the builder. The preamble in this agreement states: Whereas the Developer has purchased an undivided pro-rata share of the Land with the intention that the Builder will complete construction of the Project and that upon substantial completion of the Proposed Unit and the registration of the Condominium Declaration, title to the Proposed Unit shall be transferred to the Developer;

This agreement provides for the construction of the proposed condominium units by the vendor.

Pursuant to Article 1.02 of the development agreement, the units shall be substantially completed on or before the transfer date or such extension of the transfer date as is permitted in the development agreement. Substantial completion is defined as substantial completion of the interior of the proposed unit so as to permit occupancy thereof.

Article 1.08 provides that:

If the Builder is delayed in the completion of the Work by any act or neglect of the Developer, the Transfer Date shall be extended for such reasonable period of time as the Builder may require. If the Builder is delayed in completion of the work by labour disputes, strikes, walk-outs (including walk-outs decreed or recommended by a recognized contractor's association for its members of which the Builder is a member), fire, mutual delay by common carrier or unavoidable casualties or, without limit to any of the foregoing, by any cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the Builder's control, then the Transfer Date shall be extended for a period of time equal to the time lost due to such delays.

The "Work" is defined in Article 1.01 of the development agreement to include the construction and completion of the project substantially in accordance with the plans and specifications as made available for inspection by the developer prior to the execution of that agreement and as approved by the mortgagee and the servicing of the land with all utilities.

In context, and having regard to the intent of the development agreement, the proper construction of Article 1.08 and the provision therein for the extension of the transfer date is limited to delays in construction of the project for the enumerated reasons. The respondent acknowledged by letter of December 4, 1989 to the applicants that:

Due to, some unanticipated delays in construction, it is expected that substantial completion of the Project will occur in March, 1991, rather than September, 1989, as originally forecasted. It is expected the Condominium registration and transfer of title will occur in late 1990.

These construction problems delayed the registration of the condominium declaration until December 31, 1990. Since the unit purchase agreement linked the transfer date inextricably to the registration of the condominium declaration, the transfer was extended. These delays, however, occurred before the registration of the condominium declaration on December 31, 1990 and before the substantial completion of the condominium project. Such delays were permitted under Article 1.08 of the development agreement.

Article 1.08 is not intended to permit delays occurring after the completion of construction and after registration of the condominium declaration. The development agreement deals solely with construction and completion of services to the condominium project. Any delays permitted under that agreement would apply only to extend the date of completion of construction and installation services. Occupancy permits for the two condominium units in question were issued on March 27, 1990. Total occupancy permits were issued for the building on June 20, 1990, prior to registration of the condominium declaration. Construction delays cannot now be used to further delay the time between the condominium declaration and the transfer date. It is remembered that under Article 12.01(x) of the unit purchase agreement the transfer date is the later of September 1, 1989 and the date being fifteen days after the purchaser has been notified that the condominium declaration has been registered, etc.

POSITION OF THE APPLICANTS

The applicants submit that the construction and interpretation of Article 12.01(x) of the unit purchase agreement and the articles referred to therein do not entitle the respondent to extend the transfer date unilaterally and, indeed, indefinitely. Furthermore, by its conduct since the execution of the general agreement, the respondent has indicated its intention to treat the transfer date as being a date fifteen days after the registration of the condominium declaration. This is shown by the respondent's correspondence to the applicants commencing December 4, 1989 up to and including May 29, 1991. Furthermore, the rental revenue and operating expense guarantees set out in the rental management agreement and the guarantee agreement, both of which are appended to the general agreement, were commenced by the respondent on January 1, 1991. Both agreements state that the commencement date shall be the transfer date.

The applicants take the position that the unit purchase agreements provide the basis of the transactions contemplated by the general agreements. The transactions entered into by the applicants were contracts for the purchase of condominium units. They were, therefore, primarily contracts in respect of the sale of land.

The general agreement with its ancillary documents has at its heart the unit purchase agreement. All agreements and other documents are ultimately in furtherance of the unit purchase agreement. The services and benefits to be provided to the applicants by the respondents all have as their final goal the transfer of title of the condominium units to the applicants.

Among the services and benefits flowing to the applicants, as purchasers of the units, under the scheme propounded by the respondent, are income tax benefits. These benefits are above and beyond the actual title to the condominium units.

Nonetheless, the applicants paid for all of these benefits in addition to paying for the condominium units. The ultimate requirement in the unit purchase agreement is for the transfer of legal title to the purchaser. In the absence of such a transfer of legal title, there can be no substantial performance of the agreements by the respondent. In addition, any income tax benefits which the applicants have received to date may well be lost on termination of the agreements and their failure to obtain legal title to the relevant condominium units.

POSITION OF THE RESPONDENT

It is the position of the respondent that the applicants are not entitled to the relief sought because the failure of the respondent to transfer title of the units to the applicants does not constitute a substantial breach of contract enabling the applicants to rescind from their agreements. In the eyes of the respondent, the agreements have been substantially performed by the respondent to the advantage of the applicants and the title transfer date has not yet occurred.

The respondent submits that in effect the applicants purchased real estate investment unit packages, including the purchase of land, the work, the paving, the landscaping, the financing fees, in addition to a corresponding group of financial services such as the cash flow guarantee, the rental revenue guarantee and the rental management agreement. Further, the respondent notes that the financing of the applicants' investment in real estate unit packages permitted the applicants to leverage a minimal amount of capital to purchase real estate investment units while obtaining a benefit of substantial deductions pursuant to the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, as amended. The applicants' projected income tax deductions amount to $110,618.00 for each real estate investment unit on an aggregate basis until December, 1996. On behalf of the applicants, the respondent prepared the supporting documentation required to claim such income tax deductions. In addition, the respondent has paid the applicants' mortgages for their real estate investment units since approximately December, 1987 and is expected to continue to make mortgage payments on behalf of the applicants until December 31, 1993. The applicants also enjoy the benefit of an interest-free operating expense loan associated with their real estate investment units, which, like the mortgage loan, does not have to be repaid until December 31, 1993.

The respondent argues that Article 1.06 of the unit purchase agreement expressly acknowledges that the applicants were purchasing a beneficial interest of land as part of their real estate investment unit packages. Article 1.05 of this agreement states that, on the "closing date", title was deemed to have been transferred by the respondent to the applicants. The unit purchase agreement defines the closing date as the date of execution. From the closing date and after the projected title transfer date, the respondent acts as the applicants' agent and bare trustee, holding title to the applicants' real estate investment units. The applicants have already received benefit and value from the respondent through their beneficial ownership of the real estate investment units and their participation as developers, particularly in the receipt of substantial income tax shelter of the commercial land development.

The definition of "transfer date" is contained in Article 12.01(x) of the unit purchase agreement:

"Transfer Date" shall be the later of September 1, 1989, and the date being fifteen (15) days after the Purchaser has been notified that the Condominium Declaration has been registered, subject to the provisions of Article 11.03 of the Unit Purchase Agreement and Article 1.08 of the Development Agreement.

The respondent submits that the reference in Article 12.01(x) to Article 11.03 should read Article 11.02 of the unit purchase agreement. Neither the general agreement nor the unit purchase agreement have been amended, supplemented or rectified by written agreement between the parties. It is inappropriate for this Court to assume that that was the intention of the parties. The provisions must stand as written.

Whether this Court accepts the respondent's submission that the reference in Article 12.01(x) should be amended to read Article 11.02 rather than Article 11.03, the applicants submit that Article 11.02 deals only with conditions that give rise to the vendor notifying the purchaser of the existence of such conditions and the purchaser having the right to require the vendor to then repurchase the purchaser's land and interest in the proposed units upon appropriate notice. The second paragraph of Article 11.02 is related only to the first paragraph of Article 11.02. Since the vendor has not given any such notice to the purchaser, the provisions of the second paragraph of Article 11.02 cannot be relied upon by the respondent in the circumstances to justify its failure to have complied with the requirement to transfer title of the relevant units on the specified date. Further, it cannot rely on the provisions of that paragraph to extend the transfer date since the vendor's notice upon which such extension would be triggered has not been given. If it was intended to have the second paragraph of Article 11.02 apply in unlimited circumstances to the date specified to be the transfer date, then the provisions which inherently restrict their application would not have been placed in Article 11.02.

In any event, if there is any doubt as to the meaning to be attributed above, it is not appropriate to resolve that ambiguity against the applicants. After all, the respondent drew the general agreement and all of the other relevant agreements. If the respondent would protect itself against liability to which it would otherwise be subject, then the respondent should have used words clearly and aptly to describe the contingency that the respondent says has arisen so as to excuse it from conveying title. See Rutter v. Palmer [1922] 2 K.B. 87 (C.A.) and Szymonowski & Co. v. Buck & Co. [1923] 1 K.B. 457 (C.A.).

The unit purchase agreement prepared by the respondent does not give the respondent the right to extend unilaterally or indefinitely the transfer date and the second paragraph of Article 11.02 should not be interpreted in such a way.

The respondent submits that the definition of "transfer date" contained in Article 12.01(x) of the unit purchase agreement is a projected date. Its amorphous nature is subject to a causal connection with delays as outlined in Article 11.02 of the unit purchase agreement or Article 1.08 of the development agreement relating to an inadvertent inability to transfer title which is beyond the respondent's reasonable control. That linkage, according to the respondent, casts an element of uncertainty regarding an eventual projected title transfer date. The respondent blames the latest delay on The Mutual Trust Company and thus says the delay 'is beyond its reasonable control. Possibly, title transfer to the condominium units could take place in mid January, 1995. The chief factor in the delay of the title transfer is that created by the conduct of The Mutual Trust Company. However, construction delays were encountered after the registration of the condominium declaration, thereby adding to the delay before title transfer.

The respondent submits that triggering the transfer date extension is not predicated on substantial completion or occupancy of the condominium because the inclusion of the qualifying articles within the transfer date definition contemplates the acknowledgment that the title transfer date could be extended beyond notification of the condominium declaration's registration.

Article 5.01(b) of the unit purchase agreement extinguishes the applicants' right to seek a certificate of pending litigation.

CONCLUSION

The applicants entered into the general agreements and the ancillary agreements and other documents with the intention of purchasing legal title to condominium units. The respondent intended and promised to deliver legal title by a fixed transfer date. All other agreements and benefits flow from the underlying agreement of the applicants to purchase from the respondent legal title to two condominium units. The applicants did not purchase a tax package. They purchased legal title to two condominium units and the accompanying income tax benefits. Whether income tax benefits were utilized by the applicants, or not, and whether if they did obtain income tax benefits they will be allowed to retain them by the revenue authorities, is beside the point. The applicants, as purchasers, were entitled to legal title to two condominium units. They would have been free to exercise all rights of a titleholder of real property in respect of the condominium units. They would have the right to mortgage such units or sell such units as they saw fit. Without the benefit of legal title, the applicants have not received that for which they bargained.

The general agreement has not been substantially performed. The applicants cannot assert legal ownership of the condominium units. They cannot deal with the units as owners.

The failure of the respondent to deliver legal title to the condominium units goes to the root of the general agreements and deprives the applicants of that for which they bargained, i.e. title to two condominium units.

The respondent's extensions of the transfer date specified in the unit purchase agreement constitute a breach of that agreement by the respondent. That agreement is the lynch pin of all the agreements and documents. With its breach all agreements fail. The applicants in the light of the breach are entitled to treat all agreements as at an end and to get their money back. Bain v. Fothergill (1874), 1.R. 7 H.L. 158, (1874-80) All E.R. Rep. 83, 43 L.J. 243, Johnson v. Agnew (1979), [1979] 2 W.L.R. 487 (H.L.) and Scanion v. Castlepoint Development Corp. (1991), 85 D.L.R. (4th) 443 (Ont. Gen. Div.)

Cheshire and Fifoot's Law of Contract provides that there are two approaches to assessing the terms of a contract and their consequences. The first approach is to determine the effect of the breach as set out in Hongkong Fir shipping Co. v. Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd. (1961), [1962] 2 Q.B. 26, [1962] 1 All E. R. 474 (C.A.) The court stated in that case that it was the task of the court not to evaluate the term as it stood in the contract but to wait and see what happened as a result of the breach. If the breach causes severe loss or damage, the injured party might be able to treat the contract as discharged.

The second approach is to infer the probable intention of the parties at the time of its making by examining the contract. The Australian case of Tramways Advertising Pty. Ltd. v. Luna Park (N.S.W.) Ltd. (1938), 38 S.R.N.S.W. 632 at 641 sets out the test for the court as follows:

The test of essentiality is whether it appears from the general nature of the contract considered as a whole, or from some particular term or terms, that the promise is of such importance to the promisee that he would not have entered into the contract unless he had been assured of a strict or substantial performance of the promise, as the case may be, and that this ought to have been apparent to the promisor.

If one approaches this matter from the aspect of Hongkong Fir Shipping Co., the failure of the respondent to have conveyed title to the condominium units to the applicants, constitutes, in my opinion, a severe loss or damage entitling the injured party to treat the contract as discharged. If one approaches it from the aspect of Tramways Advertising, the promise to convey title to the units was of such importance that the applicants would not have entered into the relevant agreements unless they had been assured of a substantial performance of the obligation to convey title.

The respondent has had more than ample time from fifteen days after the registration of the condominium units in which to convey title. On the information at hand, the reason why the respondent cannot convey title to the applicants arises out of some dispute between the respondent and The Mutual Trust Company. The applicants are not parties to that dispute. The applicants have performed all obligations expected of them in the various agreements to which they are parties, yet the respondent cannot proffer any tentative date whatsoever upon which it could convey title of the units to the applicants. The applicants did not bargain to receive title to the two condominium units at some contingent, undefined and non-predictable date in the future.

The respondent's breach of the unit purchase agreement, in particular, article 4.02, which reads:

The transfer of the Proposed Unit, as a Unit, to the Purchaser shall take place on the Transfer Date.

has deprived the applicants of the essential basis of their bargain. The respondent should not be permitted to retain the monies paid to it by the applicants whether the applicants may or may not have received some tax benefit. In the event the court grants the applicants a return of the monies they have expended on the relevant agreements thus far, it is only a matter of speculation as to whether the revenue authorities would permit the applicants to retain any tax benefits they received in respect of the relevant agreements.

Furthermore, Section 51(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, provides that:

Every agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain, ... (c) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to deliver to the purchaser a registrable deed or transfer of the unit without delay.

This covenant is deemed to be included in the unit purchase agreement. This covenant supports the applicants' submission that the vendor has breached its obligation to convey legal title on the transfer date. To construe the transfer date as provided in Article 12.01(x) of the unit purchase agreement in the manner suggested by the respondent would violate this covenant.

The respondent, in my opinion, is in breach of a fundamental term of the unit purchase agreements. Accordingly, the applicants are entitled to treat the general agreements and ancillary agreements and documents with respect to units 1201 and 1308 in Sterling Club I condominium project as at an end. The applicants are entitled to the return of all monies paid by them pursuant to these agreements.

An order will go declaring that the applicants are entitled to treat their agreements with the respondent in respect of the purchase of units 1201 and 1308 as at an end, that such agreements are null and void as affects the applicants as at the date of the order of this Court herein and that the applicants are entitled to a return of all deposits and further payments made in respect of the relevant units, namely in the case of the applicant Allen Singer in respect of unit 1308 the sum of $32,051.18 and in respect of Allen Singer and Nancy Singer in respect of unit 1201 the sum of 542,982.75. The applicants are entitled to pre-judgment interest at the average mean rate of interest from the date of the last advance payment made on unit 1201 and the last advance payment made on unit 1308 to the date of the release of these reasons. Said amounts with pre-judgment interest added shall bear post-judgment interest as provided in the Courts of Justice Act.

Having regard to Article 5.01(b) of the unit purchase agreements, it would not be appropriate to allow the applicants a certificate of pending litigation and so that relief is refused.

Furthermore, the applicants are entitled to their costs of this application as on a party and party basis to be paid forthwith after assessment by an assessment officer of this Court.

Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation et al. *

Action No. C9007

Court of Appeal for Ontario, Morden A.C.J.O., Goodman and Robins J.J.A. December 17, 1992

* Application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada filed February 12, 1993 and submitted to the court March 17, 1993.

Dennis R. O'Connor and Barry Gaspell, for appellant, Bramalea Ltd.

Angela M. Costigan, for respondent, Joe F. Scanlon.

Derek A.J. D'Oliveira and Dennis M. O'Leary, for intervenor, Stanley Kopman.

Joseph C. Goldenberg, for Stella and Vito DiMauro, Rocco Mattucci, Anna Budahazy, Gordon Glavan, Carmen Alfano, Rose Weinberg, Mary Louise Neill, Max Pivetta and Jeff Bridge.

GOODMAN J.A. (dissenting):--This is an appeal by Bramalea Limited ("Bramalea") from the decision of Austin J., reported in (1991), 85 D.L.R. (4th) 443, 22 R.P.R. (2d) 211, in which he held that the applicant, Joe F. Scanlon (the respondent herein) was entitled to a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale of a condominium unit entered into between Castlepoint Development Corporation ("Castlepoint") and Scanlon on September 16, 1988 is null and void. He further held that Scanlon was entitled to a return of his deposit with interest.

Terms of Agreement of Purchase and Sale of Condominium Unit By para. 2(a) of the agreement, the purchase price of the unit was stated to be $424,000. A deposit of $10,000 was payable as a deposit and an additional sum of $74,800 was payable in successive instalments of $32,400, $21,200 and $21,000 on dates specified in the agreement, the last of which was payable 365 days after the presentation of the offer by the purchaser and representing in total 20% of the purchase price. All of these payments were duly made by Scanlon. He was to give back to the vendor a first mortgage for $318,000 (75% of the purchase price) and, as provided by para. 2(a)(vi), to pay the balance of the price "on closing (or Occupancy Date, if applicable) which, when taken together with the deposits heretofore paid will be 25% of the Purchase Price, subject to the adjustments hereinafter set forth".

The other relevant paragraphs contained in the agreement of purchase and sale read as follows:

1. The following definitions shall apply to this Agreement:

(a) "Act" means the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, Chapter 84, and any amendments thereto.

(b) "Closing Date" or "Closing" means the 4th day of November 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d).

12. The transaction of purchase and sale is to be completed on the Closing Date.

13. If the Unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing, but the declaration and description have not been registered, then the Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on that date (the "Occupancy Date") on the following terms and conditions:

(a) the payment to the Vendor, of the balance of the Purchase Price set forth in this Agreement, but without adjustments; (b) the payment of the Occupancy Fee, monthly, in advance, on the first day of each month, following Occupancy Date, with appropriate adjustments from Occupancy Date to the first of the month following, said monthly fee not to be credited as payment on account of the Purchase Price. The Purchaser agrees to provide to the Vendor on the Occupancy Date a series of 12 post-dated cheques for the monthly occupancy fees for the 12 months immediately following the Occupancy Date. The Purchaser acknowledges that the components of the occupancy fee as set out in s. 52(6) of the Act are subject to recalculation by the Vendor and may be increased at any time prior to Closing to the maximum permitted by s. 51(6) of the Act with any readjustments to be made 30 days after demand by the Vendor, with the final readjustment on Closing;

(d) the Closing Date shall be extended to a date 20 days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's Solicitors to the Purchaser or his Solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the Vendor, the Purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver vacant possession of the Unit. The Vendor shall in that event be entitled to retain all monies paid hereunder for damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of redecorating as may be determined by the Vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein.

The Purchaser acknowledges and it is understood and agreed that the Purchaser shall not be entitled to access to the Unit prior to the Occupancy Date.

22. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted extensions of time from time to time for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit and close this transaction within such extended time or times for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him and this Agreement shall be null and void. If the unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on or before Closing or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after Closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event the Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before Closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

25. This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof. It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing whether contained in any sales brochures or alleged to have been made by any sales representative or agents.

Scanlon discontinued the original application against Castlepoint on August 29, 1991 as Castlepoint had prior thereto assigned its interest in the agreement as vendor to Bramalea. Accordingly, Castlepoint is not a party to this appeal.

In the proceedings before Austin J., Scanlon relied on two grounds for the relief requested:

(1) That Bramalea had unilaterally purported to change the closing date set forth in the agreement of purchase and sale, thereby committing an anticipatory breach of contract which entitled him to terminate it.

(2) Castlepoint did not make the disclosure required by s. 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and as a result the agreement was not binding on him.

The relevant provisions of the agreement and the facts of the case will be set out in due course. It is sufficient to say at this time that Austin J. concluded in his reasons, in part, as follows [at p. 446 D.L.R., p. 215 R.P.R.]:

The closing was to be on November 4, 1991, and Bramalea's letter of May 31, 1991, changing the date, constituted an anticipatory breach of the agreement. The date of closing was a fundamental term. Scanlon was therefore entitled to treat the agreement as at an end. He is entitled to a declaration that the agreement is null and void.

In these circumstances it is not necessary to deal with the question of the adequacy of the disclosure made by Castlepoint.

In reaching this conclusion Austin J. found that para. 22 of the agreement conflicts with or is contradictory to paras. 12 and 1(b) thereof and that para. 13(d) did not apply in the circumstances. He also purported to apply the contra proferentem principle to the interpretation of the agreement.

On this appeal Bramalea took the positions:

1(a) That it was the intention of the parties under the agreement, read as a whole, to allow for reasonable extensions of time to complete units delayed by the practical realities of high-rise condominium development.

(b) That the exclusion of para. 22 under the contra proferentem rule would leave a gap in the agreement or purchase and sale inconsistent with the intentions and expectations of the vendor and purchaser.

2(a) That a purchaser can avoid an agreement for the sale and purchase of a condominium unit where the inadequacy of a disclosure statement is so fundamental that a reasonable purchaser of the condominium would have exercised the right of rescission had the adequacy not existed but no such fundamental inadequacy existed in this case.

(b) That if such a fundamental inadequacy existed it had been waived by the purchaser during the period when the contract was still executory.

The second position taken by Bramalea is not really a ground of appeal. Austin J. did not deal with it. Scanlon, as respondent, took the position that if Austin J. was in error with respect to the first ground, he was still entitled to the declaration by reason of the alleged inadequacy of the disclosure statement. It should be noted that this appeal was heard together with appeals in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 280, 82 D.L.R. (4th) 50 (Gen. Div.), and Budinsky v. Breakers East Inc. (1992), 6 O.R. (2d) 255, 87 D.L.R. (4th) 572 (Gen. Div.), in which extensive submissions were made with respect to the matter of adequacy of disclosure statements under the provisions of the Condominium Act. Reasons were released in those appeals on October 13, 1992, and the principles set forth therein are applicable to this appeal [now both reported in 10 O.R. (3d) 120, 96 D.L.R. (4th) 449]. There is no need to repeat here the reasoning for the conclusions reached in those cases.

Facts Relating to Bramalea Position on Extension of Time

On September 6, 1988, Scanlon presented an offer to purchase the condominium unit in question to Castlepoint Development Corporation. Castlepoint accepted the offer on September 16, 1988. The agreement of purchase and sale created upon the acceptance was on a form prepared by Castlepoint, which company determined the stipulations contained therein. The condominium project comprised 504 dwelling units on 47 floors. The unit purchased by Scanlon is on the 37th floor of the building.

On December 22, 1988, Bramalea purchased the project from Castlepoint and received an assignment of Scanlon's purchase agreement. It commenced construction of the project in the month of February 1989. The date fixed for closing by the agreement (November 4, 1991), was approximately 37 months after acceptance of the offer.

On October 17, 1989, Scanlon executed two amendments to the purchase agreement with Bramalea. One amendment acknowledged receipt by him of revised floor plans of the unit and his consent to the changes. The other amendment confirmed the terms of the agreement and Bramalea agreed thereby to permit occupancy of the unit by a third party subject to the conditions set forth therein. The amendments were accepted by Bramalea on April 9, 1990.

Scanlon duly made all of the payments by way of deposit and on account of the purchase price in accordance with the terms of the agreement. On or about May 31, 1991, Bramalea notified Scanlon in writing on its letterhead that "your revised occupancy date will now be September 14, 1992". The notice did not indicate any reason for the postponement of the occupancy date. The notice reads as follows:

RE: PALACE PLACE SUITE 3709

Dear Palace Place Purchaser:

We are pleased with the construction progress of Palace Place. Over the past two years, construction has continued at a steady pace with the concrete structure now reaching the 34th floor, the exterior wall windows now at the 18th floor, and the drywall complete to the 4th floor. In June, the installation of the ceramics and the kitchen cabinets are scheduled to commence, and by November 1991 we anticipate completion of the roof.

We have rescheduled your closing date to coincide with the new construction program. The first closings will now commence in January of 1992 and as a result, your revised occupancy date will now be September 14, 1992.

Prior to your occupancy date, a letter will be forwarded to you regarding the details of your move-in. (Inspection appointments, booking elevator times, etc.)

Please forward a copy of this letter to your Solicitor to advise him/her of your revised occupancy date. If you have not as yet informed Bramalea Limited of your Solicitor's name, address, and telephone number, please advise us in writing as soon as possible. For your convenience, our fax number is 487-2779.

In the meantime, should you have any further inquiries or if I can be of any assistance to you, please call me at 480-8442 or fax us a letter to 487-2779.

Sincerely,

BRAMALEA LIMITED

(signed) Ellie Moore, Customer Relations Manager, Residential Group.

The revised occupancy date was more than four years after the date of presentation of the offer and if Bramalea's submission is valid, Scanlon was subject to further unilateral delays in that regard and also with respect to final closing of the transaction.

On August 7, 1991, Scanlon commenced his application under the Vendors and Purchasers Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. V.2; the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 as amended, and regulations made pursuant thereto and under the Rules of Civil Procedure for a declaration that the agreement is null and void. The grounds for the application were stated to be that Bramalea had terminated the agreement of purchase and sale by its anticipatory breach of the agreement and that the declarant had failed to make proper disclosure as required by s. 52 of the Condominium Act. In an affidavit filed in the proceedings the vice-president of finance of Bramalea stated that Bramalea realized it could not complete the project by the date stipulated and that the notice was sent as soon as it realized the situation. It is common ground that the unit was not substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991.

Paragraph 25 of the agreement stipulates that time shall in all respect be of the essence thereof. Paragraph 1(b) defines "closing date" or "closing". It states that those words mean "the 4th day of November, 1991 or as extended by para. 13(d)". The words are clear and unequivocal in their meaning. If either of the parties to the agreement desire to extend the date it must be done in accordance with the provisions of para. 13(d).

It is perhaps unnecessary to say that if the unit had been completed and the declaration and description registered on or before November 4, 1991, both parties would have been obligated to complete the transaction on that date (see para. 12). The definition of closing date makes that conclusion quite clear. If a party to the contract takes the position that the "closing date" or "closing" is a date other than November 4, 1991, it is necessary to show that the provisions of para. 13 support such a claim.

As is the case with the wording of para. 1(b), the wording of para. 13 is clear and unambiguous. By applying the definition of "closing" the opening words of that paragraph would read, "If the unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on the 4th day of November, 1991, but the declaration and description have not been registered, then the purchaser shall occupy the unit on that date (the "Occupancy Date") on the following terms and conditions."

On their face, the provisions of para. 13 can become operative only if the unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991. If that condition had been fulfilled, the declaration and the description not having been registered, November 4, 1991 would be converted from "closing date" to "occupancy date". Scanlon would have been obliged to pay the balance of 25% of the purchase price in accordance with the provisions of para. 2(a) (vi) or face the penalties and damages set out in para. 2(b). In such event, the provisions of paras. 1(b) and 13(d) read together would provide for the extension of the closing date of November 4, 1991 to a later date determined in accordance with the provisions of para. 13(d). Paragraph 2(b) is solely for the benefit of the vendor and is of a draconian nature in so far as the purchaser is concerned. It provides as follows: 2.(b) Failure by the Purchaser to pay any of the sums required by Paragraph 2 hereof or of any post-dated cheque to be honoured, shall be a default entitling the Vendor in its sole discretion to terminate this Agreement and retain all sums theretofore paid by the Purchaser as a pre-estimate of liquidated damages and not as a penalty, but without prejudice to the Vendor's right to bring such further or other action as may be available to it as a result of such breach.

There is nothing in the wording of para. 13 which extends the time for substantial completion of the unit sufficient to permit occupancy beyond November 4, 1991 and it is clear that Scanlon did not consent to any such extension. It is also clear that Bramalea could not substantially complete the unit by that date and in effect advised Scanlon of that fact by its notice. In those circumstances Scanlon would be entitled to a declaration that he was no longer bound by the agreement unless some other provision in the agreement entitled Bramalea to extend the occupancy date and closing date.

Bramalea relies on the provisions of para. 22 of the agreement of purchase and sale. It took the position that the contract must be read as a whole and that the provisions of para. 22 represent a modification of the provisions of paras. 1(b) and 13 and do not conflict with them.

Specifically, Bramalea submitted that para. 13 converts "Closing Date" (pursuant to para. 1(b)) into "Occupancy Date" upon the unit being substantially completed and sufficient to permit occupancy on that date. At the date of such substantial completion (now "Occupancy Date") closing date is redefined under para. 13(d) to be a date after registration of the condominium declaration and description. It then submitted that by para. 22 of the agreement the parties agreed that if substantial completion of the unit sufficient for occupancy purposes is delayed by the factors named therein (and occupancy is not possible on the closing date), closing date is extended to the date of actual completion, on which date para. 13 becomes operative and the extended closing date becomes the "Occupancy Date" pursuant to para. 13(d).

I am unable to agree with the second part of this submission. The provisions of para. 22 do not in any part thereof mention "substantial completion of the unit sufficient for occupancy purposes" being delayed by the factors named therein. Paragraph 22 speaks first of delay in "completion of the Unit or the common elements" by reasons of the factors named, permitting extension of time for completion and extension of the closing date. The unmodified use of the word "completion" in referring to a condominium unit connotes the performance of all the work necessary to fully construct the unit.

The agreement stipulates in para. 13(a) that Scanlon is obligated to occupy the unit and pay the balance due on closing without adjustments only upon substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy. He cannot be compelled to close the transaction until the unit is fully completed and the declaration and description have been registered. If the purchaser has entered into occupation of the unit under para. 13 the vendor is obligated to complete the unit and register the declaration before the purchaser can be compelled to close the transaction. Scanlon takes the position that the first sentence of para. 22 refers to an extension of time for such final completion and an extended closing date if such completion is delayed by any of the factors mentioned and that it only becomes operative when a purchaser has entered into occupation after substantial completion in accordance with the provisions of para. 13.

He submitted that this interpretation is strengthened by the wording of para. 22 which provides that if the vendor is unable to complete the unit and close the transaction within the extended time or times for closing, all money paid by the purchaser other than any occupancy fee shall be returned to him. Since an occupancy fee is payable only after the purchaser has occupied the unit, pursuant to the provisions of para. 13(b), it is reasonable to interpret the words "completion of the unit" as referring to work required to bring the unit from a state of substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy, to one of full completion.

I agree with these two submissions made by Scanlon.

It is to be noted that para. 22 of the agreement is an exculpatory paragraph in so far as the vendor is concerned. If the correct interpretation of the clause is that it becomes operative only if the unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991 but the closing has not taken place, the vendor cannot be held responsible for any delays in fully completing the unit or common elements if the delays have resulted from the stated causes, or any causes even if they were within the control of the vendor. In the absence of such clause the purchaser would be able to terminate the contract and claim for damages.

The last two sentences of para. 22 are also exculpatory. Scanlon submits that those sentences mean that, the agreement being then ongoing, which would require a previous occupation date and an extended closing date twenty days after notice to the vendor of the registration of the declaration and description, the vendor is entitled to compel the purchaser to complete the transaction even though there has been only substantial completion of the unit rather than full completion.

In effect, the position taken by Scanlon is that "substantial completion" as used here can only refer to a situation where the purchaser has entered into occupation under para. 13. If the words "substantial completion" were interpreted to mean a state less than substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy on closing, the provision would be a direct contradiction of para. 13 on which a purchaser is entitled to rely in determining the closing date. He cannot be compelled to close the transaction before the unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy. The words can only apply to a situation where the unit has reached a state of substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy, the declaration and description have been registered but the unit is not yet fully completed.

In my opinion, the two sentences of para. 22 last considered relate to a situation where the purchaser has entered into occupation under para. 13, and the declaration and description have been registered enabling a vendor to establish an extended closing date and requiring the purchaser to complete the transaction although the unit is not fully completed. Substantial completion in this case would be a state at least equal to substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy but less than full completion.

I am of the view that there is nothing in the agreement and other material filed to support the submission of Bramalea that the parties agreed that if substantial completion of the unit sufficient for occupancy purposes is delayed by the factors named therein, closing date is extended to the actual date of completion. If the interpretation sought by Bramalea is the correct one, it may be that, as found by Austin J., it would contradict the provisions of paras. 1(b) and 13. At the very least, from the standpoint of Scanlon, there is an ambiguity in para. 22 in this regard and in applying the contra proferentem principle (of which more will be said later), I would adopt the interpretation of the paragraphs more favourable to Scanlon.

Bramalea in its factum and oral argument made substantial submissions to the effect that Scanlon understood that the "closing date" in para. 1(b) of the agreement was the proposed date on which he would go into occupancy and that final closing would be after registration of the condominium declaration and description notwithstanding para. 12 of the agreement. It further asserted that lower floors of high-rise condominiums are completed several months prior to completion of upper units for occupancy purposes and that condominium unit purchasers in the Metropolitan Toronto area generally understand the necessity, particularly in high-rise condominium developments, of a delay between substantial completion of the unit ready for occupancy and the date on which title to the unit can be transferred.

Although it is open to serious doubt whether the understanding of condominium purchasers generally can or should be imputed to a particular purchaser, it is not important for the purposes of this appeal. Scanlon acknowledges that under para. 13, in proper circumstances, the original closing date becomes occupancy date and a new closing date is to be determined in accordance with the terms thereof. His position is simply that under the agreement he expected and was entitled to have his unit substantially completed sufficient to permit occupation on or before November 4, 1991.

Having regard to the fact that the original date set for closing (and for occupation) was more than three years after presentation of his offer, such expectation cannot be said to be unrealistic nor unreasonable. A purchaser might reasonably conclude that the vendor had made due allowance for delays which might be encountered in the completion of the project sufficient for occupancy. The right of the vendor to extend the closing date for a period in excess of that provided by paras. 1(b) and 13, if it exists at all, must be found in the agreement.

I have already dealt with Bramalea's first submission with respect to para. 22. It further submitted, based on an affidavit of a solicitor filed, that paragraphs similar to para. 22 are commonly used in high-rise condominium construction to permit the vendor reasonable flexibility to complete the building because of delays which may occur during the construction process. The solicitor's affidavit stated, in part, at para. 9: "Paragraph 22 of Schedule A to the agreement is a commonly used and overriding provision which contemplates delays . . .".

Even if this were so, the fact that it is commonly used does not derogate in any way from the rights of Scanlon to have it interpreted in the light of the other provisions of the agreement. Although the solicitor was not cross-examined on his affidavit, I am not prepared to accept that para. 22 in its exact form is commonly used. Bramalea did not state that it had used this paragraph or a similar paragraph in its own agreements dealing with other projects. Such an allegation would not have strengthened its case in any event but it is interesting to note that counsel for Bramalea stated that the words in para. 22 indicate an intention to allow only for reasonable extensions of time. It should be noted that Bramalea was not the author of the agreement but as assignee thereof it takes the detriment along with any benefit that might ensure to it as assignee. As just noted, counsel for Bramalea on this appeal submitted that para. 22 of the agreement should be interpreted to provide only for reasonable extensions of the date for closing resulting from causes other than deliberate bad faith. He was, however, in effect, suggesting that in interpreting this paragraph, the court should add to it words not included in it. The fact that a vendor (through its assignee) consents to a less strict interpretation of a paragraph in an agreement not warranted by its actual wording and in fact contradicting such wording, does not assist it in obtaining an interpretation more favourable to it in other respects after it has been executed and acted upon.

If the position which Bramalea takes prevails to the effect that paras. 22 and 13(d) involve two completely different situations which are complementary and not contradictory, it would mean, to use the words of the intervenor Kopman, that Bramalea could extend the time for closing at any time that it wished, as often as it wished and for any reason that it wished, even though it is unable to complete by reason of causes for which it is solely to blame. It would be difficult to characterize this interpretation as a fair and reasonable one from the purchaser's standpoint.

I am satisfied that para. 22 in the broad form used in the agreement under consideration is not in common use. The material filed does not disclose the use of such a broad paragraph in any particular agreement. On the contrary, although some of the agreements, which formed the subject matter of the appeals heard together with this appeal and the subject matter of cases cited to us, contained provisions relating to subject matter similar to that contained in para. 22, none of such paragraphs were unrestricted as to cause of delay and length of extension of closing date in the manner set forth in para. 22.

Furthermore, Bramalea takes the position that, in determining the interpretation of para. 22, the court must look at the agreement as a whole and that the courts have applied provisions in agreements of purchase and sale of a condominium unit extending the completion date for reasons such as strikes, fire and other acts of God, and engineering difficulties, as enforceable against purchasers of those units.

In support of this submission Bramalea cited Morris v. Cam- Nest Developments Ltd. (1988), 64 O.R. (2d) 475, 50 D.L.R. (4th) 707 (H.C.J.), where the court held that the vendor was entitled to invoke the provisions of para. 15 of the agreement, as was done, to extend the date for closing set out in para. 4. The provisions of those paragraphs are set forth on p. 482 O.R., pp. 713-14 D.L.R., as follows:

4. This agreement shall be completed on July 26, 1982, or any extended date as herein provided.

15. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reason of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties, or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the Vendor . . . the Vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension or extensions of time for completion . . . and the date of closing shall be extended accordingly.

I do not doubt the correctness of that decision and that it supports the proposition for which it was cited. It has, however, only limited application to the case at bar. In that case, as in all the other cases cited to the court, the agreements under consideration do not contain a definition of "closing date" or "closing" as set forth in para. 1(b) of the subject agreement incorporating therein by reference the provisions of para. 13(d). It must also be noted that para. 15 clearly falls within the extension provision of para. 4 and that the grounds for extension are clearly limited to causes beyond the control of the vendor, and only reasonable extension or extensions are permitted. Obviously, provisions for extended closing dates or extended dates for occupation are enforceable provided that the terms of the agreement for purchase and sale clearly indicate the intention of the parties to give to the vendor the right to ask for the extension in the circumstances therein set forth.

In the Abdool appeal, supra, heard at the same time as this appeal (although the point under discussion was not in issue in that appeal), the agreement for purchase and sale set out in para. 2(a) the specific date for occupation as "the 1st day of September, 1989 or such extended date pursuant to the terms hereof that the unit is substantially completed by the vendor for occupancy by the purchaser".

The agreement did not contain a definition paragraph such as para. 1(b) of the subject agreement, and the provision quoted made it clear that the occupation date was subject to being extended.

Paragraph 18 of the Abdool agreement permitted the vendor to extend the closing date for any reason other than wilful neglect of the vendor for such reasonable periods of time not exceeding 24 months in aggregate.

Paragraph 21 of the agreement provided, inter alia, that if the completion of the unit or common elements is delayed by any reason whatsoever, then the vendor shall be permitted a reasonable extension or extensions of time for giving occupancy or completing the unit from time to time in accordance with the terms of para. 18.

In the Budinsky appeal, supra, also heard at the same time as this appeal although the point under discussion was also not in issue in that appeal), a specific date for closing was set out in the agreement. It also provided for occupancy by the purchaser if the unit was substantially completed to permit occupancy on the date set for closing or prior thereto. By para. 8(a) it provided:

8.(a) If the completion of the Unit should be delayed for any reason whatsoever, other than wilful neglect of the vendor, so that the Purchaser cannot be given possession thereof on the earlier of Occupancy Date or Closing Date, then the Vendor, at its sole option, shall be entitled to extend the Occupancy Date for one or more periods of time which the vendor, in its sole discretion considers reasonable, such periods, not to exceed (18) months.

Reference was made by the parties to the case of DiCecco v. 733725 Ontario Inc., an unreported decision of Fedak J. released on December 21, 1990, and affirmed by this court on May 21, 1991. The agreement under consideration in that case did not contain a definition of "closing date". Paragraph 4 thereof set out a specific closing date. Paragraph 17, which has some similarity to para. 22 of the subject agreement, provided for the right of the vendor to have reasonable extensions of time for completion for causes beyond the control of the vendor and to extend the closing date accordingly. It gave the vendor in addition to, or in lieu of the foregoing extensions, if any, the right to extend closing for a period not exceeding 15 months by giving notice as therein stated.

The agreements in these four cases, chosen at random by me, are illustrative of the fact, confirmed by an examination of the agreements under consideration in the various condominium cases cited to the court on the appeals, that para. 22 is not one in common use in condominium sale agreements. They indicate that where it was the intention of the vendor that it shall have right to extend the date for substantial completion of the unit sufficient to permit occupancy or the closing date, it was set forth clearly in the agreement. In addition, a definition of closing date as in para. 1(b) of the subject agreement was not contained in any of those agreements nor considered in any reported cases. Accordingly, the interpretation of the agreement must be approached by applying the principles of contract interpretation to the specific wording of the subject agreement.

Application of Law to the Agreement

In Consolidated-Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at p. 901, 112 D.L.R. (3d) 49 at p. 58, Estey J. said in delivering the majority judgment of the court:

Even apart from the doctrine of contra proferentem as it may be applied in the construction of contracts, the normal rules of construction lead a court to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract. Consequently, literal meaning should not be applied where to do so would bring about an unrealistic result or a result which would not be contemplated in the commercial atmosphere in which the insurance was contracted. Where words may bear two constructions, the more reasonable one, that which produces a fair result, must certainly be taken as the interpretation which would promote the intention of the parties. Similarly, an interpretation which defeats the intentions of the parties and their objective in entering into the commercial transaction in the first place should be discarded in favour of an interpretation of the policy which promotes a sensible commercial result.

Where a contract is ambiguous, the normal rules of construction may be supplemented by the application of the contra proferentem rule of construction. In Hillis Oil & Sales Ltd. v. Wynn's Canada Ltd., [1986] 1 S.C.R. 57 at pp. 68-69, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 649 at p. 657, Le Dain J. said in delivering the judgment of the court:

Given this ambiguity as to whether the distributor's agreements could be terminated pursuant to clause 23 with immediate effect or whether such termination could take effect only upon reasonable notice, I also agree with Richard J. that it should be resolved against Wynn's and in favour of Hillis by application of the contra proferentem rule of construction. It is true that this rule has been most often invoked with reference to the construction of insurance contracts, particularly clauses in such contracts purporting to limit or exclude the insurer's liability. Statements of the rule and its application in such cases may be found in the decisions of this Court in Consolidated-Bathurst, supra, and McClelland & Stewart, supra. The rule is, however, one of general application whenever, as in the case at bar, there is ambiguity in the meaning of a contract which one of the parties as the author of the document offers to the other, with no opportunity to modify its wording. The rule is stated in its general terms in Anson's Law of Contract (25th ed. 1979), at p. 151, as follows:

The words of written documents are construed more forcibly against the party using them. The rule is based on the principle that a man is responsible for ambiguities in his own expression, and has no right to induce another to contract with him on the supposition that his words mean one thing, while he hopes the Court will adopt a construction by which they would mean another thing, more to his advantage.

The rule is also stated in general terms by Estey J. in McClelland & Stewart, supra, at p. 15 as follows:

That principle of interpretation applies to contracts and other documents on the simple theory that any ambiguity in a term of a contract must be resolved against the author if the choice is between him and the other party to the contract who did not participate in its drafting.

As stated previously, the closing date by definition was November 4, 1991. This carries with it the obligation of the vendor to complete the unit by that date. By definition, the only provision for extending such date is under para. 13 which is applicable only if the unit had been substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy. In effect, para. 13 establishes such substantial completion as a prerequisite to an extension of the closing date from November 4, 1991.

Scanlon submitted that para. 13 does not address completion (i.e., "total completion" or "substantial completion" as opposed to "substantial completion sufficient to permit occupancy") of the unit; nor does it address the completion of the common elements, including amenities. Paragraph 1(b) makes no reference to para. 22. Paragraph 22 does not refer to occupancy nor to substantial completion of the units sufficient to permit occupancy. It does not by its words purport to supersede para. 13 in any way.

Bramalea takes the position that para. 22 becomes operative when the vendor has failed for any reason (other than deliberate bad faith) to substantially complete the unit sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991. Scanlon takes the position that para. 22 becomes operative only where there has been such completion but full completion or substantial completion (not modified by the words "sufficient to permit occupancy") has been delayed by the factors set forth therein.

In considering the contract as a whole, even without the application of the contra proferentem rule, I would be inclined to agree with the submission made by Scanlon. In Barchak Estate v. Anderson, [1945] 1 W.W.R. 657, [1945] 2 D.L.R. 698 sub nom. Cooke v. Anderson (Alta. C.A.), Ford J.A. said, at p. 669 W.W.R., p. 708 D.L.R., in delivering the majority judgment of the court:

The best construction of all written instruments is to make all parts agree. The instrument must be construed as a whole and the words of each clause must be so interpreted as to bring it into harmony with the other provisions of the document.

Although it may not be possible to do so in all cases, I agree that where there are two possible interpretations of a paragraph it should be interpreted to bring it into harmony with the other provisions of the document and all the more so where the application of the contra proferentem rule supports such a result. I am satisfied that taken in the context of the agreement as a whole, there is an ambiguity with respect to the conditions under which the provisions of para. 22 apply. If one applies the general rule of construction stated by Estey J. in Consolidated-Bathurst, supra, viz., that where words may bear two constructions, the more reasonable result, that which produces a fair result, must be taken as the one which would promote the intention of the parties, the position of Scanlon must prevail.

On his interpretation of the agreement he would be entitled to no more and no less than substantial completion of the unit sufficient to permit occupancy on November 4, 1991. That is a period more than three years after acceptance of the offer, and would not be an unreasonable expectation on his part. Similarly, it would not be an unreasonable burden to place on the developer (Bram[chalea]) which is in a position to contract for a closing date that would allow a sufficient cushion for delays which may be encountered on a realistic basis.

On Bramalea's interpretation of the agreement, Scanlon, who would reasonably expect to occupy the premises on November 4, 1991, would be put in the position of having his right to occupy the unit and close the transaction delayed for an indefinite period of time for any reason whatsoever. It is difficult to imagine a more unfair result. As previously stated, counsel for Bramalea on the appeal appeared to recognize the unfairness of such an interpretation and stated that the causes for delay must not be occasioned by bad faith and that the extension or extensions of the date must be for a reasonable time. The fact remains, however, that the court is being asked to amend ex post facto a term in an agreement drafted by the vendor.

The agreement under consideration was prepared by the original vendor. Its terms are drawn in a manner substantially to protect its interest. The purchaser is required to make his payments on account and to take possession and close the transaction on the dates and times specified. He is given no discretion to delay for any reason without suffering a loss of payments on account and incurring liability for damages. The agreement is replete with provisions exculpatory in nature and giving discretion for extensions of time all of which are favourable to the vendor, and with provisions which require strict compliance with time-limits by the purchaser and the payment of damages and forfeiture of money by reason of lack of compliance on the part of the purchaser. It is heavily weighted in favour of the vendor. It is a classic case for the application of the contra proferentem principle which I find to be applicable because of the ambiguity.

It was pointed out during the hearing of this appeal that as a matter of fact the delay was caused by structural problems with respect to providing a solid foundation, and by the extremely sophisticated technology involved in building the structure requiring equipment "from overseas". Scanlon was not told of the reason for the delay in the notice extending the closing date nor thereafter until an officer of Bramalea was cross-examined in these proceedings on September 4, 1991.

In my opinion, the fact that the delay was caused by a factor which may have been beyond Bramalea's control and that the extension was to be for a period of nine months is really not relevant to the rights of the parties. The extended occupancy date would not have given occupation to Scanlon until four years after he had executed the offer and if para. 22 became operative by superseding or modifying paras. 1(b) and 13, he might be faced with additional delays. The rights of the parties under the contract must be determined by the terms of the agreement at the time of its execution. The fact that the delay in issue did not occur as a result of bad faith on the part of Bramalea does not assist in the interpretation of the contract.

By the application of the general rule of construction of contracts and the contra proferentem rule, I interpret para. 22 in accordance with Scanlon's submission. By interpreting the agreement in the manner set forth in these reasons, there is no contradiction between para. 22 and para. 1(b), meaning is given to all parts of para. 22 and its provisions are then fair and reasonable for the purchaser. In effect, that means that it does not contradict the provisions of paras. 1(b) and 13 but rather, covers a different situation and to that extent my reasons differ with those of Austin J. The result, however, is the same. I conclude that Bramalea was obligated to substantially complete the unit purchased by Scanlon sufficient to permit occupancy by November 4, 1991, that time was of the essence, that Bramalea acknowledged by its notice that it could not comply with this term of the agreement and that that constituted an anticipatory breach entitling him to the declaration granted by Austin J. There is no doubt that a vendor of a condominium unit which is to be erected or is in the process of being erected can, by contract, provide that a proposed occupancy date and closing date be postponed or extended for whatever reasons are therein set out, subject to any statutory provisions which may be applicable. As indicated, this agreement failed to make such a provision.

Adequacy of Disclosure Statement

Scanlon took the position in the proceedings in the original application and on this appeal that even if he was unsuccessful in persuading the court with respect to the interpretation of the agreement of purchase and sale, he was entitled to the declaration sought on the ground that Bramalea (and its predecessor Castlepoint) had failed to comply with the provisions of the Condominium Act by failing to deliver to him a current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto. Section 42(1) provides that an agreement of purchase and sale is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant has delivered the statement to the purchaser.

In view of the conclusion which I have reached with respect to the interpretation of the agreement, it is not necessary that I deal with this matter in order to determine the outcome of this appeal. It seems to me, however, that in view of the substantial submissions which were made by the various participants in the appeal with respect to this matter, I should address that matter.

The questions of the nature of the disclosure statement, the extent of the disclosure requirement, the brevity or fullness of the statement, and generally that which is necessary in order that a statement be deemed to have complied with the Act, were dealt with extensively by this court in the Abdool and Budinsky appeals (released October 13, 1992). We have also dealt in those appeals with the effect of the failure of a purchaser to rescind an agreement within 10 days after receipt by him of the disclosure statement on his right to declare an agreement non-binding on the ground that the statement did not constitute a disclosure statement within the meaning of the Act.

There is no point in repeating in this case the reasons which support the principles espoused in those appeals. These principles, however, must be applied to the individual facts of each case in order to determine whether the statement is one that constitutes a disclosure statement having regard to the requirements of the Act.

In Abdool and Budinsky, the court established the principle to be applied where a purchaser, who has not rescinded an agreement during the 10-day cooling-off period provided by the Act, seeks to resile from the agreement later on the basis of deficiencies in the disclosure statement. That principle is that the onus is on the purchaser to prove objectively that had the information that was not disclosed or was inaccurately or insufficiently disclosed, been properly disclosed in the disclosure statement at the time it was delivered to the purchaser, a reasonable purchaser would have regarded the information as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that he or she would not likely have gone ahead with the transaction but would have rescinded the agreement before the expiration of the 10-day cooling-off period.

In Abdool and Budinsky, this court held that the purchasers failed to discharge the onus on the basis of the deficiencies therein alleged. In the case at bar, two novel deficiencies are alleged with which I will now deal.

First, the complaint is made that Castlepoint failed to comply with s. 52(6)(c) of the Act. That subsection reads as follows:

52(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(c) the portion of units or proposed units which the declarant or the proposed declarant intends to market in blocks of units to investors;

The disclosure statement contained a heading and paragraph as follows:

Marketing of Blocks of Units

The declarant reserves the right to market all of the units in the condominium in one or more blocks to investors.

A purchaser who was genuinely concerned about buying a unit in a condominium in which one or more blocks might be sold to investors would be immediately put on notice of that possibility by this paragraph. If it were a matter of importance to the purchaser, one would reasonably expect that he or she would rescind the agreement within the 10-day period. Although the paragraph may not be in strict compliance with the provisions of s. 52(6)(c), I am satisfied that the deficiency is not one that if brought to his knowledge would have caused him to rescind within the 10-day period. He knew immediately that some or all of the remaining units might be sold in blocks of units to investors.

Second, the complaint is made that Bramalea failed to comply with s. 52(6)(d) of the Act. That subsection reads as follows:

52(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

(d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39;

The disclosure statement set out a list of recreational and other amenities provided for the use of owners and occupants of the dwelling units.

Under the heading "Rules governing the use of the units and common elements", the disclosure statement contained the following:

The rules governing the use of the common elements and units are made for the purpose of promoting the safety, security and/or welfare of the owners and/or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units. The Board of Directors makes the rules and can change them, but the owners by majority vote of those present at an owners' meeting may in turn change the rules made by the Board of Directors.

Scanlon was provided with a copy of the proposed rules governing the use of the common elements. By para. 4.00, under the heading "Recreation Area", they provided: Rules pertaining specifically to the use and operation of the recreation facilities will be promulgated by the board and communicated to the owners or posted in the recreational areas and anyone entering the recreation facilities must comply with such rules, as if they were included herein.

Finally, Scanlon was provided with a copy of the proposed declaration. By art. IV thereof it provided under the heading "Use of common elements" that "subject to the provisions of the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules, each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the common elements, except as therein otherwise provided. It further provided that the board shall be entitled to determine from time to time on terms and conditions satisfactory to it, the basis upon which the guest suites, meeting rooms, conference rooms, executive business centre, racquet ball and squash courts, may be utilized by the owners and/or occupants of the dwelling units including any changes to be made or the use thereof.

Although the disclosure statement does not appear to wholly comply with the provisions of s. 52(6)(d) in the sense that it does not give a narrative description of the significant features of the rules governing the use of common elements, it does point out what is, perhaps, the most significant feature of those rules, viz., that the owners by majority present at a meeting can make and change the rules. The existing rules or lack of rules have less significance when it is made clear that the owners will in due course determine what the rules will provide. It would have been better if the disclosure had indicated that no rules had been made or proposed in connection with the recreational facilities but I am of the view that if a reasonable purchaser were given a more detailed narrative of the rules or lack thereof, he would not have rescinded the agreement having regard to the fact that it was disclosed to him that the Board and finally the owners have the final say as to what those rules will be.

Taking into consideration these two novel deficiencies and the other deficiencies alleged by Scanlon, I would find that he has not satisfied the onus required to be fulfilled by the principle laid down in the Abdool and Budinsky appeals.

For the reasons I have given respecting Bramalea's delay, I would dismiss the appeal with costs. ROBINS J.A. (MORDEN A.C.J.O. concurring):=MI respectfully disagree with Mr. Justice Goodman's interpretation of the agreement of purchase and sale in issue in this appeal. For the reasons which follow, I am of the opinion that the appellant was not guilty of an anticipatory breach of the agreement and that this appeal should accordingly succeed.

The Facts

The facts, reduced to their essentials, may be stated briefly. On September 16, 1988, the respondent Scanlon entered into an agreement with a company known as Castlepoint Development Corporation to purchase a luxury condominium unit on the 37th floor of a proposed residential condominium project to be located on Palace Pier Court on the waterfront of Lake Ontario in Metropolitan Toronto. Construction of the project, which is known as "Palace Place", had not yet been commenced. When completed, Palace Place was to be a 47-storey building containing 504 residential units, parking and storage facilities, and recreational and other amenities.

On December 22, 1988, Castlepoint sold the project to the appellant Bramalea Limited. Bramalea received an assignment of the respondent's agreement of purchase and sale and all other agreements of purchase and sale entered into by Castlepoint. For all purposes relevant to this appeal, Bramalea now stands in the place and stead of Castlepoint and may therefore be treated as though it were the vendor originally named in the agreement.

Under the terms of the agreement, the "Closing Date" or "Closing" is defined in para. 1(b) as meaning "the 4th day of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)". Paragraph 12 provides that the transaction is to be completed on the "Closing Date". If, however, the unit is "substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing but the description and declaration have not been registered" (as is required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 ("the Act")), para. 13(d) provides that the purchaser is to occupy the unit on the terms and conditions set out in para. 13. "[T]he Closing Date" would then be extended "to a date 20 days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's Solicitor to the Purchaser or his Solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered." Paragraph 22 permits the vendor to extend the closing date where completion of the unit or the common elements is delayed. The disclosure statement which accompanied the agreement, and which, of course, is mandated by the Act, projected the date for completion of the amenities and recreational areas as "approximately December 31, 1993".

Bramalea commenced construction in February 1989. It appears that the work progressed as planned save for a problem encountered in laying the foundations for the building. Unexpected soil conditions evidently required Bramalea to import sophisticated equipment from overseas to erect the structure. As a result, the construction overall was delayed by approximately ten months. By May 1991, the work had progressed to the point where the concrete structure had reached the 34th floor, the building had been enclosed up to the 18th floor, and the drywall had been completed to the 4th floor. By this stage, it was apparent that the building or, more specifically, the respondent's proposed unit, would not be completed by the November 4, 1991 closing date.

On May 31, 1991, Bramalea advised the respondent of the stage to which construction had progressed. Bramalea notified him that the first closings would commence in January of 1992 and that the new "closing date" for his 37th floor unit was being rescheduled so that his "revised occupancy date" would be September 14, 1992. The respondent responded to this notice on August 4, 1991, by the commencement of this application seeking: (1) a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale was void on the ground that Bramalea's unilateral extension of the closing date constituted an anticipatory breach of the agreement entitling the respondent to terminate the agreement; and (2) a declaration that the agreement was not binding on the ground that the disclosure statement failed to satisfy the requirements of s. 52 of the Condominium Act. I agree with my learned colleague's disposition of the disclosure statement issue and need make no further reference to it.

The application came on for hearing before Austin J., coincidentally, on November 4, 1991 [now reported in 85 D.L.R. (4th) 443, 22 R.P.R. (2d) 211]. Accepting the respondent's contentions, the learned judge declared the agreement null and void on the basis that the closing date as defined by cl. 1(b) is a fundamental term of the contract, and that Bramalea's unilateral extension of that date accordingly constituted an anticipatory breach of the contract. In his view, para. 22, upon which Bramalea relied, is in conflict with or contradictory to para. 1(b) and para. 12. "If it had been the intention of the parties that cl. 22 override the others, then", the judge concluded [at p. 446 D.L.R., p. 214 R.P.R.], "1(b) would have read, `or as extended by Paragraphs 13(d) and 22'." In essence, he held that the November 4 closing date could be extended only pursuant to cl. 13(d) and for no other reason. Bram[alea now appeals from that order.

Leave to intervene in the appeal was granted to seven condominium unit purchasers represented collectively by Mr. Goldenberg, and to Stanley Kopman a purchaser of 24 condominium units. The intervenors support the positions advanced by the respondent.

The Agreement of Purchase and Sale

I shall, for ease of reference, reproduce the provisions of the agreement most relevant to the anticipatory breach of contract issue. They are as follows:

1. The following definitions shall apply to this Agreement:

(b) "Closing Date" or "Closing" means the 4th of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d).

12. The transaction is to be completed on the Closing Date.

13. If the Unit is substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on Closing, but the declaration and description have not been registered, then the Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on that date (the "Occupancy Date") on the following terms and conditions:

(d) the Closing Date shall be extended to a date 20 days after notice in writing is given by the Vendor's Solicitors to the Purchaser or his Solicitor that the declaration and description have been registered. If the Purchaser fails to close the transaction as aforesaid, through no fault of the vendor, the Purchaser shall be in default hereunder, and shall be required to deliver vacant possession of the Unit. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and unpaid occupation charges. The Purchaser shall be responsible for the damages and expenses and the cost of redecor[ating as may be determined by the Vendor at its sole discretion as a result of the possession herein.

22. If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted extensions of time from time to time for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor is unable to complete the Unit and close this transaction within such extended time or times for closing, all monies paid hereunder by the Purchaser other than any occupancy fees, shall be returned to him and this Agreement shall be null and void. If the unit is substantially completed by the Vendor on or before Closing or any extension thereof as aforesaid, this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work within a reasonable time after Closing, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. In any event the Purchaser acknowledged that failure to complete the common elements on or before Closing shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

25. This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof.

The Applicable Rules of Construction

Before considering the contractual provisions which are in dispute, I remind myself of certain well-established rules of construction applicable to the issue at hand. The agreement with which we are concerned is a negotiated commercial document which should be construed in accordance with sound commercial principles and good business sense. To the extent that it is possible to do so, it should be construed as a whole and effect should be given to all of its provisions. The provisions should be read, not as standing alone, but in light of the agreement as a whole and the other provisions thereof: Hillis Oil & Sales Ltd. v. Wynn's Canada Ltd., [1986] 1 S.C.R. 57 at p. 66, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 649 at p. 655. The court should strive to give meaning to the agreement and "reject an interpretation that would render one of its terms ineffective": National Trust Co. v. Mead, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 410 at p. 425, 71 D.L.R. (4th) 488 at p. 499.

The court is "to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract": Consolidated-Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at p. 901, 112 D.L.R. (3d) 49 at p. 58; see also McClelland & Stewart Ltd. v. Mutual Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 6 at p. 19, 125 D.L.R. (3d) 257 at p. 259. In searching for the intention of the parties, the court should give particular consideration "to the terms used by the parties, the context in which they are used and . . . the purpose sought by the parties in using these terms": Frenette v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., [1992] 1 S.C.R. 647 at p. 667, 89 D.L.R. (4th) 653 at p. 666.

In the event that the court is unable to resolve a contradiction or ambiguity in the terms of a contract, the language of the contract will be construed against its author in accordance with the contra proferentem rule: Consolidated-Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler & Machinery Insurance Co., supra, at p. 901 S.C.R., p. 58 D.L.R. "[T]he rule is . . . one of general application whenever . . . there is an ambiguity in the meaning of a contract which one of the parties as the author of the document offers to the other, with no opportunity to modify its wording": Hillis Oil & Sales v. Wynn's Canada, supra, at pp. 68-69 S.C.R., p. 657 D.L.R. However, resort is to be had to the contra proferentem rule "only when all other rules of construction fail to enable the Court of construction to ascertain the meaning of a document": Reliance Petroleum Ltd. v. Stevenson, [1956] S.C.R. 936 at p. 953, 5 D.L.R. (2d) 673 at p. 686; Consolidated-Bathurst, supra, at p. 901 S.C.R., p. 58 D.L.R.

With those general principles in mind, I turn to the issue which is the basis of this appeal.

Does the agreement of purchase and sale permit Bramalea to extend the time for completion or substantial completion of the respondent's unit to September 14, 1992, and to extend the closing date accordingly?

In answering this question it is essential to bear in mind that the subject matter of this agreement is the purchase and sale of a proposed residential condominium unit, and that a transaction of this nature is subject to the Condominium Act. Before title can be transferred from the vendor to the purchaser and the transaction can be "closed", as that term is normally understood in real estate transactions, the vendor is obliged under the Act to register a declaration and description of the property. The condominium registration process inevitably creates a delay between the time some or all of the units in a given project are ready for occupancy and the time the developer is able to deliver a registrable transfer of title and "close" the transaction. In Albrecht v. Opemoco Inc. (1991), 5 O.R. (3d) 385 at p. 392, 85 D.L.R. (4th) 289 at p. 295, I had occasion to describe the manner in which agreements of purchase and sale of proposed condominium units have generally been structured in this province in contemplation of the delays produced by the complexity of the registration process:

Under the Condominium Act, before title to a proposed unit can be transferred to a purchaser, a developer is obliged to register a declaration and description of the property. Registration, however, cannot be effected until the project has been substantially completed and all requisite governmental approvals have been obtained. The complexity of the registration process is such as to create an inevitable delay between the time that some or all of the units in a given project are completed and otherwise ready for occupancy and the time the developer is able to deliver a registrable transfer of title. The length of the delay depends on a variety of factors, and may be substantial. In order to generate income during this period, condominium developers usually seek to have purchasers take occupancy as soon as their units can be occupied. Agreements of purchase and sale are therefore generally structured, as are the agreements in these appeals, so as to provide for closing in two stages. The purchaser is first required or permitted to take possession on an interim basis when the unit is substantially complete and ready for occupancy (the possession closing), and the transaction is finally closed after registration has taken place and the vendor is able to transfer title (the title or final closing).

The present agreement makes provision for the potential delay between the time the unit is ready for occupancy and the time the transaction can be completed in accordance with the Act. It is important for the purposes of this appeal to appreciate the way in which the agreement has been structured to achieve this purpose. The agreement unequivocally provides in para. 12 that the transaction is to be completed on the "Closing Date". This, by definition, is November 4, 1991. It is common ground that para. 12 carries with it the obligation of the vendor to complete the unit by that date. If, however, the transaction cannot be completed in accordance with para. 12, it is to be closed in the manner provided for in para. 13(d) and the "Closing Date" is to be extended as therein provided.

Paragraph 13(d) is manifestly designed to accommodate the delay created by the condominium registration process by effectively providing for the two-stage closing described in Albrecht. It does this in a somewhat indirect or circuitous manner. If the unit is at least substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy on the closing date, that is, on November 4, 1991, but the project has not yet been registered, the purchaser is none the less to take occupancy on that date. In the event, the November 4 "Closing Date" becomes the "Occupancy Date", and the "Closing Date" is extended to an unspecified date 20 days after the vendor gives notice that registration has taken place. In the interim, the purchaser is to pay an "occupancy fee" calculated in accordance with s. 51(6) of the Act. The Act contemplates that purchasers of proposed residential condominium units may take possession of or occupy a unit before a deed or transfer can be delivered and contains a number of provisions governing the relationship of the parties during the interim occupancy period.

Paragraph 13(d) is concerned with the position of the parties if the unit is substantially completed. It is not concerned with the question of construction delays. This clause deals with the situation in which the unit is ready for occupancy but, because of non-registration, the transaction cannot be concluded. Put another way, if there cannot be a final closing on the "Closing Date" referred to in para. 12, an occupancy closing is to take place if the prerequisites to para. 13(d) are satisfied.

Given the terms of this agreement and the accompanying disclosure information, the parties could not realistically have expected the proposed condominium unit transaction to be finally closed on the November 4 closing date. The proposed completion date of the recreational and other amenities, as I noted earlier, was to be "approximately December 31, 1993". Since that was a date more than two years later than the date for completion or substantial completion of the unit, they could hardly have expected that the requisite governmental approvals would be obtained and the project registered so long before these amenities were to be completed. Be that as it may, this agreement plainly provides for completion of the transaction on November 4, 1991, or alternatively provides for the purchaser taking occupancy on that date if the premises are then substantially completed sufficient to permit occupancy. In the latter event, the transaction is to be completed on some future date following registration of the declaration and description. The question then is what happens if the unit cannot be completed or substantially completed by November 4, 1991. Is there no room under the terms of this agreement for extending the defined "Closing Date" to accommodate a delay in the construction of the unit? Does the fact that the term "Closing Date" is defined in para. 1(b) as meaning "the 4th of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)" restrict extensions to the extension specified in para. 13(d) and preclude any extension of the "Closing Date" as stipulated elsewhere in the agreement? In other words, is Bramalea absolutely and unconditionally bound to deliver a unit ready for occupancy on November 4 and guilty of an anticipatory breach of contract if it informs the purchaser in advance of that date that it will be unable to do so?

This brings me to para. 22 of the agreement which, Bramalea says, answers these questions in its favour. However, before considering this provision, I should perhaps say that I have no difficulty in accepting the suggestion that clauses of this type, whether framed in these exact terms or not, are commonly found in contracts for the sale of units in condominium projects under construction as, indeed, they are in construction contracts generally. The practical reality is that the construction of large, luxury high-rise buildings which are to be erected over a lengthy period of time, such as the building in this case, can be subject to many delays for innumerable reasons. Consequently, it is hardly surprising that agreements of purchase and sale are routinely structured so as to permit occupancy closing dates to be extended in the event of construction delays. In his reasons, Goodman J.A. refers to the agreements in the cases to which the court was directed and those in the cases heard contemporaneously with this appeal. Those agreements all contain broad provisions, albeit with limitations differing from the instant agreement, which enable the vendor to extend occupancy closings because of delays for any reason whatsoever other than the wilful neglect of the vendor or for any cause of any kind whatsoever beyond the control of the vendor. While para. 22 must, of course, be construed in the context of the instant agreement, it should be recognized that force majeure clauses of this kind are not uncommon to high-rise condominium construction and their general purport is by no means unique to this agreement.

The first sentence of para. 22 deals expressly with the situation in issue. It is the operative provision in the factual circumstances of this case. The focus must accordingly be on this part of para. 22, which provides:

If the completion of the Unit or the common elements is delayed by reasons of strikes, lock-outs, fire, lightning, tempest, riot, war and unusual delay by common carriers or unavoidable casualties or by any other cause of any kind whatsoever whether or not beyond the control of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted extensions of time from time to time for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly.

On a plain reading of this provision, the "Closing Date" may be extended when completion of the unit is delayed by reason of the circumstances referred to in the provision. The term "Closing Date" is defined by para. 1(b) to mean "the 4th of November, 1991 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)". In May 1991, when Bramalea invoked para. 22 and rescheduled the respondent's closing date to September 14, 1992, "the Closing Date" was manifestly the November 4, 1991 closing date. The transaction was to be completed on that date pursuant to para. 12. At that stage, there had been no extension of the closing date by para. 13(d), nor could there have been. Accordingly, to implement para. 22 and give effect to the extension mandated by it while, at the same time, allowing for the extension contemplated by para. 13(d), it is obviously necessary to read the definition of "Closing Date" (and "Closing") in para. 1(b) as meaning "the 14th of September, 1992 or as extended by Paragraph 13(d)".

The transaction is then to proceed in precisely the same manner as it would have proceeded had there been no construction delay. Under para. 12, Bramalea is obliged to complete the unit and close the transaction on September 14, 1992, the new "Closing Date", just as it was obliged, before para. 22 was invoked, to complete the unit and close the transaction on November 4, 1991. Paragraph 12, as I noted earlier, carries with it the obligation of the vendor to complete the unit by the final closing date, now September 14, 1992. Paragraph 22, consistent with para. 12, extends the "Closing Date" to the date necessary to accommodate the delay in the "completion of the Unit". Since it was known that the project could not be registered by September 14, 1992, it was apparent that the transaction could not be completed by then in accordance with para. 12. It followed, however, that if Bramalea completed or substantially completed the unit for occupancy by September 14, 1992, there would be an occupancy closing in accordance with para. 13(d) and the date for finally concluding the transaction as provided for in para. 12 would be postponed to an unspecified date 20 days after notice in writing was given that the declaration and description had been registered.

In my opinion, para. 22 authorized Bramalea to extend the date of closing of this transaction to September 14, 1992, as it did. Bramalea's notice to this effect did not constitute an anticipatory breach of the agreement or provide a basis for declaring the agreement null and void. Paragraph 22, as I have noted, makes the extension necessitated by the construction delay specifically referable to the defined "Closing Date". Although an express reference to para. 22 in the para. 1(b) definition of this term may have been helpful, the omission of this reference does not preclude the court from giving effect to the part of para. 22 applicable to this case any more than the omission of a reference to para. 13(d) in para. 1(b), would have precluded the court from giving effect to that provision. The balance of para. 22 must, of course, also be seen in the framework of the closing process envisioned by this agreement, and applied to the relevant factual circumstances.

The principles of contractual interpretation require that the agreement be construed as a whole and that, so far as possible, meaning and purpose be given to all its provisions. On the interpretation of the learned motions court judge however, para. 22 is given no meaning or purpose but is instead effectively ruled out of the agreement. As a result, the vendor's obligation to deliver a unit ready for occupancy on November 4, 1991, is treated as being an absolute and unconditional obligation. Thus, Bramalea's inability, for whatever reason, to have the unit ready for occupancy on that date necessarily constitutes a breach of the agreement; and its advance notification to this effect constitutes an anticipatory breach of the agreement.

I am unable to accept that as a proper construction of this agreement. Given the extensions of the "Closing Date" expressly contemplated and permitted by para. 22, I think it patent that it cannot have been the intention of the vendor, nor the expectation of the purchaser, that Bramalea was unconditionally guaranteeing either full or substantial completion of the unit on the November closing date. Paragraph 22 takes into account a practical reality of the construction industry =M the likelihood, if not the inevitability, of construction delays which may render it impossible to deliver occupancy of this unit on the 37th floor of this 47-storey building on that specific date. The presence of this provision in itself makes manifest an intention to provide a means of extending the closing date in the event of unforeseeable delay. If that were not the intention, para. 22 would be unnecessary and would not have been included in the agreement. In short, on the wording of this contract, the parties have in essence agreed that if supervening events delay construction so that the transaction cannot be concluded by November 4, 1991, Bramalea is to be permitted to extend that date for the additional time needed to complete construction of the unit.

With respect to the contention that paras. 22 and 13(d) are inconsistent with one another, para. 13(d) provides for the two-stage closing described earlier, and sets the terms pursuant to which the purchaser is to occupy the unit during the interim between the occupancy and final closing. This clause is not concerned with delays in the completion of the unit; rather, it addresses the question of what is to happen if the vendor is unable to complete the transaction on the date stipulated in para. 12. In contrast to para. 13(d), para. 22 addresses the question of delay in completion of the unit by the date stipulated in para. 12, and entitles the vendor to extend the time for completion, and accordingly the date for closing of the transaction. The purpose and effect of these clauses is plainly different and each may be afforded a reasonable and distinct meaning. In my opinion, they are neither contradictory nor do they create any ambiguity such as to invoke the doctrine of contra proferentem.

I respectfully reject the notion that para. 22 is restricted to the situation in which a unit has been substantially completed and the purchaser has entered into occupation pursuant to para. 13. Such an interpretation overlooks the manner in which this transaction is structured and fails to give proper effect to the intention of the parties as manifested by their agreement. It is to be remembered that once the purchaser has taken occupancy, the "Closing Date" is converted by para. 13(d) from a fixed date to an indeterminate date. At that stage, the vendor is not obliged to complete the transaction on any specific date. Until the project is registered and notice to this effect is given, there is simply no date to which the extension mandated by para. 22 can be referable. If para. 22 is to become operative only after an occupancy closing has taken place, it can be applicable only to extensions needed because of delays related to the final closing date once that date has been determined.

To construe para. 22 in so narrow and restrictive fashion, in my opinion, is to render the clause substantially, if not totally, ineffective. To demonstrate this by way of an example, let us suppose that a strike had occurred in, say, the plumbing or electrical industry, which upset Bramalea's timing for the scheduled completion of the respondent's unit on November 4, 1991, by one month, and thus made it impossible to have an occupancy closing on that date. On this interpretation, para. 22 is inapplicable and Bramalea would not be entitled to extend the November 4 closing date for the extra month needed to enable it to close pursuant to either paras. 12 or 13(d); the transaction would be at an end. If, however, to change the facts, an occupancy closing pursuant to para. 13(d) did take place on November 4, 1991, then, on this interpretation, Bramalea would subsequently be entitled to invoke para. 22. Accordingly, "[i]f the completion of the Unit . . . is delayed by reason of strikes . . . [Bramalea] shall be permitted extensions of time . . . for completion and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly". What is the "Closing Date" which is to be extended accordingly? Until the project is registered and the vendor gives the 20-day notice called for in para. 13(d), there is no set closing date. Before a closing date is set, there is no reason for the vendor to invoke para. 22 and, moreover, there is no mechanism for putting the provision into operation. Once the closing date has been set, there is, I suppose, the far-fetched possibility that something may arise during the 20-day period following the vendor's notice to require the vendor to extend the closing date set by it less than 20 days earlier. Beyond that possibility, the clause would serve no practical purpose.

In my opinion, para. 22 cannot be meant to produce a result which, to all intents and purposes, is tantamount to striking the clause from the agreement. For the reasons I have already stated, in executing a contract containing this clause, a purchaser could not reasonably have expected that Bramalea was guaranteeing to deliver occupancy on November 4, 1991, without regard to any of the contingencies that might arise to delay construction.

It is argued that para. 22 is an exemption clause, and as such, is to be construed contra proferentem strictly against the party benefiting from the exemption. In my view, whether this provision can properly be described as an exemption clause or not, is, in so far as this case is concerned, beside the point. Even assuming it is an exemption clause, and applying the special rules of construction relevant to clauses falling into that category (see, Chitty on Contracts, 24th ed. (1977), vol. 1, at p. 362), para. 22 does not admit to a construction which limits its application to post-occupancy closing delays. However, while it is unnecessary to decide the matter, it appears to me that para. 22, or more particularly its first sentence which is the focus of this appeal, cannot be characterized as exclusionary in nature. This provision does not limit or exclude the vendor's liability in any respect. Rather, it provides the vendor with a substantive right or entitlement, namely, the right to extend the time for completion, and accordingly, the closing date, in the event of a delay in construction. See Waddams, The Law of Contract, 2nd ed. (1984), at pp. 346-47.

Finally, the argument is made that para. 22 is distinguishable from the force majeure clauses referred to earlier because it permits the vendor extensions for delays resulting from any cause whether the cause was beyond the control of the vendor or not, and because it sets no maximum limit on the number or total length of the extensions that may be permitted. Bramalea acknowledges that the causes for delay cannot be the result of bad faith and that any extension or extensions cannot be for other than a reasonable period of time, and agrees that para. 22 must be read accordingly. However, the respondent's application was not put forward on these grounds. It is not suggested that Bram[alea] was guilty of bad faith or wilful neglect or was otherwise to blame for the delay in question; nor is it suggested that the ten-month extension was unreasonable and that Bramalea therefore ought not to be entitled to rely on para. 22. This application was based entirely on the proposition that Bramalea was guilty of an anticipatory breach of the agreement because, under the terms of the agreement as the respondent would have it construed, Bramalea was not entitled, for any reason whatsoever, to any extension whatsoever of the November 4 closing date. How para. 22 may be treated in a case in which the length of the extension or the cause of the delay is placed in issue is not a question that arises here, nor is it one that can or should be determined in the context of this case.

Disposition

I would allow the appeal, with costs, set aside paras. 1, 2, 3 and 5 in the order of Austin J., and make an order dismissing the application, with costs, in so far as it seeks a declaration that the agreement of purchase and sale is null and void, a declaration that the applicant has an interest in the lands described in Schedule "A", an order granting leave to issue a certificate of pending litigation, and repayment of the deposit money.

Appeal allowed.

Re Basmadjian and York Condominium Corp. No. 52

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE MALONEY J. 30TH MARCH 1981.

APPLICATION to construe a condominium corporation by-law.

J. D. Sloan, for applicant.

C. M. MacIntyre, for respondent.

MALONEY J.:-- This is an application to determine the effect of By-law 7 of the respondent condominium corporation duly passed on May 18, 1977. The by-law in question levies a monthly rental administration charge upon unit owners who lease their units to tenants. The relevant provisions are:

1. REQUIREMENTS FOR LEASING

1. For the purpose of this by-law "owner" shall include a mortgagee in possession, and a "lease" shall include an agreement to lease.

2. Application(s), declaration(s) and lease(s), hereafter referred to shall be standard forms, which shall be provided by the Corporation upon written request.

3. No owner shall lease his unit unless:

(i) he shall have forwarded to the Corporation the proposed tenant's application and sworn declaration including, among other things, the number of persons in the proposed tenant's family who will be residing with him and their respective names and ages;

(ii) he shall have first obtained the Corporation's consent to such tenant, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld and

(iii) he has delivered to the Corporation an executed lease along with the signed undertaking as stipulated in article XVII, paragraph 2 of the declaration.

4. Every owner leasing his unit shall pay the sum of ten dollars ($10.00), or such other amount as the board from time to time deems reasonable, each and every month that the unit is leased, such payment(s) to be simultaneously made with the payments of common element expenses; the aforesaid additional payments are to reimburse the Corporation for additional administrative expenses and work incurred by tenancies.

It was common ground upon this application that the monthly charge is now $15 and that only the provisions of s. 4 as cited above are being challenged.

The applicant, Knar Basmadjian, purchased a unit in the York Condominium Corporation No. 52 in 1974. Since June, 1979, the premises have been leased to a tenant. Pursuant to By-law 7 an additional $15 per month charge has been assessed against the applicant who at all times has continued to pay her regular common expenses as provided by art. VI of the declaration, which requires each unit owner to contribute to common expenses in the proportions set out in a schedule attached to the declaration. I will later discuss at length the effect of this provision in the declaration and the relevant portions of the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84, and any by-laws of the condominium corporation.

The applicant unit owner has refused to pay the additional rental charge of $15 per month. By letter dated May 6, 1980, she was informed that a lien had been registered against her unit for "arrear of Common Element Expenses" and that foreclosure proceedings would be commenced. It is common ground that these arrears are attributable solely to the monthly rental administration charge. Accordingly, the issues before me are whether the section of the by-law purporting to impose a monthly rental administration charge is valid, and, if so, whether the fee levied by the by-law constitutes a contribution towards common expenses for which the condominium corporation can claim a lien under s. 32(4) of the Condominium Act, 1978.

A condominium corporation is entirely a creature of statute. Any provision of its declaration, by-laws or rules must be authorized by the Condominium Act, 1978. This legislation was proclaimed in force (except for some sections not at issue here), on June 1, 1979, and it repealed and replaced the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, and amendments thereto. Throughout this application, counsel argued on the basis that only the new legislation can be looked at in determining the validity of this by-law and the rights and obligations which arise under it. This is significant because the matters which a condominium corporation may include in its declaration and by-laws have been somewhat altered in the new Act and it is apparent from a reading of the declaration and by-laws of York Condominium Corporation No. 52 that they were drafted in accordance with the previous legislation. In my view the approach taken by counsel is quite correct and consistent with the provisions of ss. 14(1)(c) and 15(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 225.

A condominium corporation is governed by the Condominium Act, 1978, and its declaration, by-laws and rules. The Act sets out what must be contained in the declaration (s. 3(1)) and what may be contained in the declaration (s. 3(3)). Section 28(1) contains a list of the matters which the condominium corporation has power to adopt by by-law. In all cases the Act has priority over the declaration and the by-laws (s. 3(5)). In addition, s. 60 provides that the provisions of the Act will apply notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary. Next to the provisions of the Act the declaration is to have priority. The declaration is subject to the Act and s. 3(5) provides where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the Act prevails and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly. The declaration can be amended only with the consent of all the unit owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests unless an application is made to a Judge pursuant to s. 3(8) of the Act, whereas by-laws can be amended or passed by a vote of only 51% of the unit owners. Counsel for the applicant likened the priority given to the declaration in the Condominium Act, 1978 to a constitution, amendment of which is subject to stringent safeguards. I accept this submission and it is clear that the declaration has priority over the by-laws. Section 28(1) provides for the passing of by-laws "not contrary to this Act or to the declaration", and also s. 28(4) of the Act provides:

28(4) The by-laws shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act and the declaration.

The validity of any by-law, therefore, must be examined in the light of the priority given to the provisions of the Act and the declaration. A by-law may be upheld only if it falls within the matters contained in s. 28(1) and if it is reasonable and consistent with both the Condominium Act, 1978, and the declaration.

The respondent relies on art. XI of the declaration to support By-law 7. This article permits the condominium corporation to make by-laws with respect to the matters listed, but to the extent that these matters are inconsistent with those listed in s. 28(1) of the present Act, I do not see how they can be permitted to support the validity of the by-law. The respondent further relies on cls. (e), (f), (h) and (j) in s. 28(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978. These provide as follows:

28(1) The board may pass by-laws, not contrary to this Act or to the declaration,

(e) to govern the maintenance of the units and common elements;

(f) to govern the use and management of the assets of the corporation;

(h) to govern the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses;

(j) respecting the conduct generally of the affairs of the corporation.

The condominium corporation submitted that it is a fact of life that tenancies create extra administrative, maintenance and legal costs and that the impugned rental administration fee imposes these extra costs upon the renting owner who benefits from the tenancy arrangement. By letter dated February 13, 1980, the property management firm of the condominium corporation wrote to the applicant unit owner stating with respect to By-law 7:

The By-law has proven to be effective in establishing controls of the residents in the building without burdening the resident owners of the additional cost for maintaining those controls.

It appears to me that prima facie this by-law attempts to regulate the leasing of units by unit owners and also requires that the cost of regulating such leasing shall be borne by the owners of rental units alone.

I cannot agree that this by-law relates to maintenance of the units and the common elements in s. 28(1)(e). Firstly, the monthly charge does not relate to any specific maintenance costs which are incurred as a result of the tenancy. Secondly, I do not think that charging the costs of maintenance to a particular unit owner is the same as governing the maintenance of the units and common elements. Neither do I think that this by-law has anything to do with the assets of the corporation under s. 28(1)(f).

I now come to the difficult question of whether or not this by-law falls within the condominium corporation's by-law making powers "to govern the assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses" contained in s. 28(1)(h) of the Act. For the time being I will assume that the rental administration charge levied by By-law 7 can be characterized as a common expense, although I will deal with this at length later.

There are several sections in the Condominium Act, 1978, relating to the owner's contribution towards common expenses. Section 32(1) provides that owners shall contribute towards the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration. Section 41(7) provides that the cost of certain repairs done to an owner's unit by the corporation shall be added to the owner's contributions towards common expenses. Because of the priority of the provisions of the Act over the declaration and by-laws, I find that the two sections above referred to are exclusive with respect to determining an owner's contribution towards common expenses. Under s. 32(1), it is contemplated that common expenses are to be charged to unit owners by applying the percentage for the particular unit which is set out in the declaration to the global amount of common expenses. The only exception to this method of arriving at the contribution to be made by the unit owner to common expenses must be contained in the Act. One exception is contained in s. 41(7) already referred to. The by-law-making power given in s. 28(1)(h) referring to assessment and collection of contribution towards common expenses, therefore, cannot be interpreted to permit a change in the amount of contributions by any individual unit owner other than consistently with the proportional method set out in the declaration. The common expenses, as defined in the Act, can only be shared expenses with the exception of those referred to in s. 41(7). The power to make by-laws under s. 28(1)(h) relates to "assessment and collection", not to contribution. In s. 28(1)(h) the word "assessment" refers to the amount of the common expenses as a whole and to the division of the whole amount into the proportional amount in accordance with the declaration. The word "collection" refers to the timing and method by which the condominium corporation obtains and enforces the payment of the contribution. This interpretation is adhered to in art. XI of By-law 1 of the condominium corporation, entitled "Assessment and Collection of Common Expenses". In addition to repeating the requirement that the owner contribute towards the common expenses in proportions specified in the declaration (which requirement is also contained in s. 32(1) of the Act and in art. VI of the declaration), this part of By-law 1 provides for preparing an annual budget, payment of one-twelfth of each owner's annual contribution to be paid on the first of each month, interest on arrears of common expenses and for the Board to take legal action against the unit owner when he is in default of payment of common expenses for 15 days. These provisions of By-law 1 are completely consistent with the provisions of s. 28(1)(h), the declaration and the Condominium Act, 1978. For the above reasons I hold that the rental administration fee cannot be supported by s. 28(1)(h).

Neither can the by-law be supported under s. 28(1)(j). The rental administration charge in By-law 7 attempts to levy an additional charge upon the applicant over and above his proportional share of the total common expenses. This is inconsistent with art. XI of By-law 1, art. VI of the declaration and the Condominium Act, 1978, which all require contribution towards common expenses to be made in the proportions specified in the declaration. Assuming this rental charge is properly classified as a common expense, I hold that contribution to common expenses can only be required in accordance with the provisions of the Act, specifically ss. 3(1)(d), 31(1) and 41(7). Section 28(4) requires by-laws to be reasonable and consistent with the Act and the declaration and I do not see how a by-law which is not consistent with the Act or the declaration can be supported by the general power to make by-laws, "respecting the conduct generally of the affairs of the corporation" contained in s. 28(1)(j). I hold, therefore, that the rental administration fee levied in By-law 7 is ultra vires of the corporation as there is no power given in the Act for the corporation to pass such a by-law. Further, it is not valid because the extra charge it levies fails to meet the requirement of s. 28(4) that by-laws be consistent with the Act and the declaration.

I should point out that in my opinion this conclusion does not prevent the condominium corporation from collecting a greater share of common expenses from a particular unit owner where there is a cause of action under s. 14 of the Condominium Act, 1978 and the condominium corporation has obtained judgment against the unit owner. Unless that extra charge for common expenses falls within s. 32(1) or s. 41(7) of the Act, however, it cannot be the subject of a lien under s. 32(4).

Counsel has referred me to two cases which are relevant to determining the issues arising in this application. In Stodt v. Peel Condominium Corp. No. 24 (1979), 24 O.R. (2d) 670, Cromarty J. considered an action by a unit owner for relief from a notice of lien registered against his unit pursuant to s. 13(4) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, providing for a lien against the unit where an owner defaults in his obligation to contribute to the corporation towards the common expenses. The declaration of the condominium corporation in that case provided that the unit owner would indemnify the condominium corporation for any damage done to the common elements by either the owner, his guests or tenants. The owner, Stodt, rented his unit and his tenant damaged some playground equipment. Stodt refused to pay the cost of repairing this damage and consequently the notice of lien was registered. Because the Act provided that common expenses could be defined in the declaration it was held that the indemnification clause was valid and that the extra charge sought to be collected from the unit owner properly constituted a common expense and, accordingly, the claim of the corporation was properly the subject of a lien. However, I do not think that the Stodt case may be relied upon to support an extra charge for common expenses being levied against a particular unit owner in the circumstances of the case at bar. The Stodt case did not address itself to s. 13(1) of the Act which provided that:

13(1) The owners shall contribute towards the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration. This provision is identical to s. 32(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978. The Stodt case was decided prior to June 1, 1979, before the present legislation was proclaimed in force. Under the previous legislation, s. 16(5) provided that the declaration could require the owner to maintain the common elements if such requirement was contained in the declaration. Consequently, there was no inconsistency between the Act and the declaration in requiring a unit owner to indemnify the corporation for damage to the common elements. In addition, the application of s. 13(4) of the previous legislation provided for a lien wherever an owner defaulted in his obligation to contribute to the common expenses. Under the new Act, s. 32(4), which provides for a lien, is restricted to circumstances where default relates to payment of the proportionate share set out in the declaration (s. 32(1)), or for default in paying for repairs to the unit (s. 41(7)). In addition, the indemnification clause in the Stodt case may well have been an agreement that such extra charge could properly be levied against the unit owner and collected in the same way as if it were a regular lien for arrears of common expenses. Section 60 of the present Act precludes the application of such agreement.

In Re Dazol Developments Ltd. and York Condominium Corp. No. 329; York Condominium Corp. No. 329 v. Dazol Developments Ltd. et al. (1979), 24 O.R. (2d) 46, it was held that the condominium corporation may only have a lien for the amount of the owner's contribution towards common expenses as set forth in the declaration. The ratio of this case has been incorporated into the Condominium Act, 1978, in which a lien is restricted to common expenses as defined in s. 32(1) and s. 41(7) of the Act. Since it is readily apparent that the rental administration charge does not fall within either of these subsections, the condominium corporation has no right to a lien under s. 32(4) for arrears of such fee.

In my opinion, By-law 7 would properly fall within the matters which may be included in the declaration under s. 3(3) (a) of the Act which provides for "a specification of common expenses" and/or s. 3(3)(c) of the Act which provides for "provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests". The wording of s. 4 of para. 1 of By-law 7 clearly does not anticipate that the rental administration charge is being specified as a common expense. Accordingly, the true characterization of this by-law falls within s. 3(3)(c). This being a proper subject-matter for the declaration, it must be considered whether the other leasing provisions of the by-law are valid. I have already determined that the rental administration fee is not valid. I note that art. XVII of the declaration deals with the leasing by owners of their units. Section 3(3)(c) is permissive and not exclusive as to what may be contained in the declaration. To the extent that the leasing provisions of By-law 7 are consistent with art. XVII of the declaration, they are valid. The only inconsistency readily apparent to me is the requirement in By-law 7 that the owner obtain the corporation's consent.

I will now deal with characterizing the rental administration fee as a common expense. Common expense is defined by s. 1(1) (h) as:

(h) the expenses of the performance of the objects and duties of a corporation and any expenses specified as common expenses in this Act or in a declaration.

The objects and duties of the condominium corporation are set out in s. 12 of the Act. The object of the corporation is to manage the property and assets of the corporation. The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and assets of the corporation and to effect compliance by the owners with the Act, declaration, by-laws and rules. Subsection 12(4) provides that the declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects, responsibilities and duties. The rental administration fee is related directly to the cost of regulating leasing. The regulation of leasing is permitted by s. 3(3)(c) of the Act to be in a declaration and art. XVII of the declaration does address itself to leasing of units. Accordingly, the rental administration charge is attributable to the expenses of the corporation in managing the property and assets of the corporation and in enforcing compliance with the declaration and by-laws as set out in s. 12. Such expense is properly characterized as a common expense under s. 1(1)(h), being an expense of the performance of the objects and duties of the corporation.

Counsel for the applicant conceded in argument that the rental administration fee would be valid if contained in the declaration. While I agree that the declaration could certainly provide for the rental administration fee to be defined specifically as a common expense in accordance with the Act, for the reasons given such fee could not be charged specifically against any one unit owner even if contained in the declaration.

The applicant is entitled to costs.

32 O.R. (2d) 458 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL BROOKE, LACOURCIERE AND WILSON J.J.A. 13TH APRIL 1981.

*Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada refused (Martland, Ritchie and Estey J.J.), June 15, 1981.

APPEAL from a judgment of Galligan J., 2 A.C.W.S. (2d) 480, dismissing an action for a declaration that the appellant corporation was the owner of the janitor's suite in its building and holding that the respondent was not accountable to the appellant corporation for sales of extra parking spaces prior to registration.

A. B. Rosenberg, Q.C., and A. T. Riswick, for appellants.

C. B. Cohen, Q.C., for respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

WILSON J.A.:-- The corporate appellant is a condominium corporation created on October 8, 1974, by the registration by the respondent developer of a declaration and description under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77 [since repealed by s. 61 of, and replaced by the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84]. The individual appellants are unit owners and members of the board of directors of the condominium corporation.

The condominium is a residential project located at 100 Canyon Ave. in the City of North York and comprises 90 units including a janitor's suite. The ownership of this suite is one of the issues under appeal. The other issue under appeal is who is entitled to the proceeds of sales of "additional parking spaces" in the underground garage made by the respondent developer prior to the registration of the declaration.

The janitor's suite

Mr. Justice Galligan, who presided at the trial [2 A.C.W.S. (2d) 480] held that the janitor's suite belonged to the respondent developer. He stated that he considered himself bound by the decision of the majority of this Court in Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 649, 67 D.L.R. (3d) 199, and that on the authority of that case the registered title could only be overcome by evidence of a common intention on the part of the unit owners and the developer that the janitor's suite was to be part of the common elements or belong to the condominium corporation. The respondent developer in this case held the registered title to the janitor's suite and the learned trial Judge found that the evidence as a whole did not establish the existence of such common intention. After stating that there were points of similarity between this case and Frontenac, he went on to itemize the points of dissimilarity which he considered "crucial". He said:

I can say shortly that the evidence does not so persuade me. While there are similarities between this case and Frontenac, there are some very crucial dissimilarities. Some of those are the following:

1. It has not been proved to my satisfaction on a reasonable balance of probabilities that the defendant had the intention that purchasers should believe that the janitor's suite was to be a common element or would belong to the condominium corporation.
2. The condominium corporation has not made any mortgage payments respecting the janitor's suite.
3. The defendant did receive rent from the condominium corporation, even for some months after the purchasers took over the Board.
4. Notwithstanding the clear notice by the defendants, by letters to the plaintiffs on July 15, 1975 and October 28, 1975, that it contended that it was the owner of the janitor's suite, no suggestion was made by the plaintiff that the defendant was not the owner of the suite prior to December 17, 1975. (December 17, 1975 was the date that the Court of Appeal gave its judgment in Frontenac.)
5. There is no suggestion that anyone on the defendants' behalf ever suggested to any prospective purchaser that the janitor's suite would form part of the common elements or form part of the property of the condominium corporation.

The learned trial Judge then made his finding in the following terms: "Upon a consideration of all of the evidence, I am not satisfied that the common intention contended by the plaintiff existed. Its claim for a declaration that it is the owner of that suite must be dismissed."

A preliminary question is whether this Court should interfere with the finding of the learned trial Judge having regard to observations in recent judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada, notably Schreiber Brothers Ltd. v. Currie Products Ltd. et al., [1980] 2 S.C.R. 78, 108 D.L.R. (3d) 1, 31 N.R. 335, on the limitations on an appellate Court in this regard. The Schreiber Brothers case, of course, involved issues of credibility which unquestionably seem to be within the peculiar province of the trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses. However, in the course of his reasons, the learned Chief Justice said at p. 84 S.C.R., pp. 5-6 D.L.R.:

It would, of course, be open to an appellate court, where credibility of a witness was not in issue, to review findings of fact by a trial judge if they were based on a failure to consider relevant evidence or on a misapprehension of the evidence. An appeal, however, is not a complete rehearing. A majority of this Court held in Metivier v. Cadorette, [1977] 1 S.C.R. 371, at p. 382, that it was wrong for an appellate court to set aside a trial judgment where the only point at issue was the interpretation of the evidence as a whole. Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home, [1935] A.C. 243 was relied on in the Metivier case (as it was in Prudential Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Forseth, [1960] S.C.R. 210) as emphasizing the advantages of a trial judge, who sees and hears the witnesses, in coming to a conclusion on the acceptability of evidence and on the findings to which the accepted evidence leads. However clear cut the principles may be, governing the right of an appellate court to interfere with the findings of fact by a trial judge, their application may involve a difference of opinion as to whether interference is warranted in a particular case: see Hood v. Hood, [1972] S.C.R. 244.

In this case the learned trial Judge accepted the evidence of all the appellants' witnesses. The respondent called no evidence. But he found that, even accepting all of the evidence of the appellants, he was not persuaded on a balance of probabilities that a common intention existed. Moreover, although he selected from the evidence certain factors which he considered significant, he indicated in making his finding that he had considered all of the evidence. We do not know therefore what importance, if any, he gave to the following facts: (a) that the agreements of purchase and sale of units required the condominium building to be completed in accordance with the plans filed with the then Borough of North York;

(b) that in these plans suite 102 was designated as "the janitor's suite";

(c) that the janitor's suite was different in layout from any other suite in the building in that it had no balcony, porch or den and had located in it the fire-alarm system buzzers and the underground garage ramp heat control;

(d) that the building was of such a size as to require a full-time live-in superintendent;

(e) that the projected annual operating budget given to purchasers of units on closing showed no item of expense for rental of the janitor's suite although it showed an item of expense for his salary;

(f) that the declaration contained the following provision under the heading "Common Elements": (3) Restricted Access

Without the consent in writing of the Board, no owner shall have any right of access to those parts of the common elements used from time to time as a dwelling for any building superintendent, utilities areas, building maintenance storage areas, managers offices, operating machinery, or any other parts of the common elements used for the care, maintenance or operation of the property.

(g) that it was not until the developer's board of directors was replaced by the owners' board of directors that the developer disclosed that the superintendent was occupying the janitor's suite pursuant to an oral lease at a rental of $300 per month and that the respondent was prepared to sell the suite to the appellant if he wished to acquire it as a permanent apartment for the superintendent.

It seems to me that this Court is in as good a position as the learned trial Judge to draw inferences from the tenor of the relevant documents and the conduct of the parties as to what their common intention was vis-a-vis the janitor's suite, provided those inferences do not run counter to the oral evidence accepted by the learned trial Judge. This case presents difficulties because the learned trial Judge makes it clear that he does not propose to make reference in his reasons to the factors in support of the condominium corporation's claim to the janitor's suite, but only to the factors opposed to it. He does expressly state, however, that he has considered "all of the evidence" in making his finding. I am not sure, therefore, that we can assume that he has "failed to consider relevant evidence" or "misapprehended the evidence". Indeed, it may very well be that in this case the only point at issue is "the interpretation of the evidence as a whole".

Mr. Rosenberg submits for the appellants that we are free to review the evidence in this case, particularly the documentary evidence. He argues that all the units which were sold in the building prior to the registration of the declaration were sold with reference to the plans filed with, and approved by, the Borough of North York. The agreements of purchase and sale required the respondent to complete the building in accordance with those plans and those plans (ex. 5) designated unit 102 as a "janitor's suite". Mr. Rosenberg submits that that constituted a written warranty that suite 102 would be available as accommodation for the full-time live-in superintendent who was obviously required in a building of this size and who was, in fact, installed in the suite at the time most of the purchasers bought their units. He submits likewise that the omission from the projected annual operating budget of any item of expense for rent for the suite constituted a further written warranty that purchasers of units would not have to pay rent for the suite. Moreover, and perhaps this is the most significant of all, he points out that the declaration, although it allocated a percentage of common expenses and common interest to unit 102 as to all other units (sch. "D" to the declaration), referred to the superintendent's suite as part of the "common elements" in s. III and made it subject to restricted access. Mr. Rosenberg submits that those factors, when viewed in conjunction with the evidence before the learned trial Judge, make it clear that the janitor's suite was intended to be part of the common elements and that it was never contemplated that purchasers of units would be faced with an additional capital outlay to purchase the janitor's suite from the respondent.

Mr. Cohen submits that the janitor's suite was clearly designated as a unit on the plans filed with the Borough of North York and was included as such in sch. "D" to the declaration. It cannot therefore be characterized as a common element. He emphasizes that his client was the registered owner of that unit and that all purchasers of units are deemed to have notice of his title. He submits that in these circumstances it would take cogent evidence to overcome his client's title and that none such was adduced before the learned trial Judge.

Mr. Rosenberg submits that this case is not distinguishable in any significant respect from Frontenac, supra. He indicated, and I must say that I have some sympathy with him, that he had difficulty in eliciting a principle from the two judgments of the majority in that case. He suggested that the learned trial Judge may have been in error in his statement of the ratio in Frontenac. Be that as it may, the cases certainly have this in common, that the trial Judges in both found that no oral representations were made to the unit purchasers at the time they bought their units that the janitor's suite would be a common element. The purchasers assumed that it was part of the common elements and Brooke J.A. found in Frontenac that their assumption was reinforced by the promotional brochure which indicated that on completion of the purchase of their units the purchasers would only have two payments to make, their share of the monthly expenses and their payment for mortgage and taxes to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As in this case, the monthly expenses showed no item for rent of the janitor's suite. Mr. Justice Brooke concluded at p. 653 O.R., p. 203 D.L.R.:

As set out above, there was no suggestion anywhere that there would be a further capital cost to acquire Suite 104 from the respondent at any time, and there was no reason to doubt the assumptions by the purchasers that the suite was indeed a common element or that the purchase price included within it the purchase of that suite and that it would be subject to the condominium's control.

Mr. Rosenberg submits that the same may be said in this case.

Although the line between representation and justifiable assumption is obviously a thin one, MacKinnon J.A., dissenting in Frontenac, refused to cross it. He considered himself bound by the finding of the trial Judge that no representations had been made by the respondent. It was, accordingly, entitled to rely on its registered title. Mr. Cohen says that is precisely the situation here.

Zuber J.A., who concurred with Brooke J.A. in the result in Frontenac, wrote separate reasons for judgment. He appears to have based his decision on the interpretation of the term "common elements" and found that the fact that the building was of a size which required a full-time live-in superintendent, that one was already installed when most of the unit purchasers bought their units, and that the suite was designated on its door for all to see as the superintendent's suite, was evidence that it was treated by all parties as a "common element" whether or not it fell within the strict definition of that term in the Condominium Act or in the declaration. He found that the omission of any item of expense for rent in the budget gave added support to the fact that the janitor's suite was to be a common element.

I think Mr. Rosenberg is correct when he says there is little to distinguish this case from Frontenac. Indeed, the reference to the accommodation for the superintendent as a part of the common elements subject to restricted use in the declaration in this case may make it, if anything, a stronger case. Accordingly, while not unmindful of the strictures of the Supreme Court of Canada in Schreiber, supra, as to the limited contexts in which an appellate Court may interfere with the findings of a trial Judge, I must respectfully differ from Galligan J. and hold that the evidence in this case is sufficiently strong to overcome the respondent's registered title to the janitor's suite. I would require a conveyance of that suite to the condominium corporation.

The issue with respect to the additional parking spaces is, I believe, in a different category. There is no dispute that the additional parking spaces formed part of the common elements. The learned trial Judge found, nevertheless, that the respondent developer was free to dispose of those spaces prior to the registration of the declaration and retain the proceeds. Indeed, he stated: "It seems to me to be common sense and good business for an owner-developer to sell extra spaces while the property is still his." He did find that after the declaration was registered the respondent developer was merely a tenant in common of the common elements with the other unit owners and therefore would be accountable to them for the proceeds of any sales of additional parking spaces made subsequent to the registration. I think, with respect, that the learned trial Judge erred in law on this aspect of the case.

This building was constructed as a condominium under the Condominium Act and units were sold to the purchasers on the basis of the provisions of the Act. The Act contemplates two types of property in the condominium, "units" as defined in s. 1(1)(r) and "common elements" as defined in s. 1(1)(e). "Common elements" is stated to mean "all the property except the units". It is clear, therefore, that the additional parking spaces were part of the common elements. Schedule "F" to the declaration made pursuant to the Act is headed "Exclusive Common Elements". Paragraphs (c) and (d) provide:

(c) Each owner is entitled to the exclusive use and possession for the parking of a motor vehicle of one parking space in the underground parking garage to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;

(d) Individual unit owners shall also be entitled to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by such owner, the location of which is to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;

The additional parking spaces in issue in the litigation are, of course, the spaces referred to in para. (d).

It seems to be implicit in the decision of Galligan J. that until the declaration was registered the purchasers of units had no interest in the additional parking spaces, that those remained in the ownership of the developer who was free to deal with them as it saw fit. I do not see how this can be so in face of the provisions of the Act and the declaration. Section 7 of the Act provides that the owners of units are tenants in common of the common elements (s-s. (1)) and that subject to the Act, the declaration and the by-laws each owner may make reasonable use of them (s-s. (4)). It seems to me that as soon as a unit purchaser enters into an agreement of purchase and sale of a unit he becomes the equitable owner of the unit and the interests appurtenant thereto even although the agreement cannot be closed until registration of the declaration. By signing an agreement of purchase and sale each unit purchaser acquires in equity:

(1) the unit described in his agreement of purchase and sale; (2) the right to the exclusive use and possession of one parking space to be designated by the condominium corporation;

(3) the right to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by him and designated by the condominium corporation.

In my view, the respondent developer could not, either before or after the registration of the declaration, deal with any part of the common elements so as to defeat the unit purchasers' equitable interests in them.

There is no doubt that special problems arise out of the peculiar characteristics of ownership in a condominium project, particularly where agreements of purchase and sale of units are entered into prior to registration of the declaration. These problems stem, I believe, in substantial measure from the fact that the Condominium Act does not apply to the project until registration is effected. Yet the transactions are entered into with reference to the Act and the declaration. The question arises, therefore, as to the extent to which the ordinary law of contract and real property apply to sales of property about to be brought within the purview of the Condominium Act. The respondent developer, both on the issue of the additional parking spaces and the issue of the janitor's suite, relies heavily on its registered title. At the outset of the project it is the absolute owner of the entirety. Does its position change once it starts to sell units? The respondent says it does not, that everything it has not contracted to sell at any given point of time prior to registration continues to belong to it absolutely. Accordingly, while it acknowledges that each purchaser who buys a unit is entitled to the exclusive use and possession of one parking space and it must therefore keep those number of spaces available, the respondent says it is under no such restraint with respect to any extra parking spaces within the building. Those it is free to deal with as it sees fit because it has absolute title to them until it registers the declaration. It acknowledges that once it does that, they become part of the common elements in which the unit owners have a common interest.

The difficulty is that the agreements of purchase and sale are entered into with reference to the Act and declaration and, indeed, are aborted if registration of the declaration is not effected. It seems to me, therefore, that the parties have incorporated into their agreements by reference the provisions of the Act and declaration. I see no legal obstacle to their doing this. I appreciate that this may to some extent run counter to the analysis made by Morden J. in Re Crossroads Apartments Ltd. and Phillips (1974), 4 O.R.

(2d) 72, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 172. My learned colleague in that case seems to have taken the position that until registration there are no units and no common elements to which the provisions of the Act can be applied, registration being the factor which triggers the application of the statute to the "proposed condominium".

With respect, I can see no reason why as a matter of simple contract law the parties cannot contract with reference to the Act and declaration prior to the registration of the declaration and in anticipation of its registration. Indeed, I think they must be taken to have done so where units in a condominium project are sold prior to registration since the condominium is substantially a creature of statute. It would be wholly unreal to view those transactions as agreements for the sale of separate pieces of real estate. This being so, I think the Court may look, and indeed must look, to the provisions of the Act and the declaration in determining the rights of the parties under the agreements of purchase and sale. I think they must also look to the general law of real property as to the status of a purchaser once his offer has been accepted. I do not think the position of the owner-developer remains unchanged after he starts to sell units. I think that at that point he has committed the character of the project to that of condominium under the Act and declaration. I think he has also placed himself in a fiduciary relationship to the unit purchasers not only with respect to their units but also with respect to the interests appurtenant thereto. He therefore holds the property in trust for the unit purchasers, present and prospective, and for the condominium corporation which will come into being upon registration of the declaration. I believe he is under a duty to protect the interests of all unit owners, present and prospective, and cannot put his own interests in conflict with theirs even although he himself continues to be an owner as long as any units remain unsold.

It seems to me to be implicit in para. (d) of sch. "F" to the declaration that additional parking spaces may be made available to unit purchasers on a "first come, first served" basis. However, since they do form part of the common elements in which all purchasers of units, present and prospective, have a common equitable interest, the proceeds of "sale" of the exclusive use and possession of them cannot be retained by the respondent developer. Those proceeds must be transferred to the condominium corporation upon registration of the declaration.

It is submitted by Mr. Cohen that to require this would be unjustly to enrich the condominium corporation because those purchasers who paid for extra parking spaces will be getting a proportionate return of their money as members of the condominium corporation. I cannot accept that submission. Those proceeds will be held by the condominium corporation to be used in the discharge of its obligations under the declaration, including its obligation to maintain the common elements.

I agree with Mr. Cohen that those are not sales of the spaces themselves in the sense that unit owners who acquire them acquire the freehold in them. I think they are "sales" of the right to the exclusive use and possession, i.e., leases of those parts of the common elements. It is for this reason that I think that the proceeds belong to the condominium corporation. In effect, they are the rent some of the members are paying to the condominium corporation for the exclusive use and possession of spaces owned by all of them as tenants in common. I would assume, although para. (d) is far from clear on this, that the lease of an extra parking space terminates when the owner parts with his unit and that that particular space thereupon becomes available for lease by the condominium corporation to another owner.

One final issue requires comment. Mr. Justice Galligan held the respondent accountable to the appellants for the sale of one extra parking space because that sale took place subsequent to the registration of the declaration. I have already indicated my view that it is accountable for all the "sales" it made. The issue left to be addressed is the manner of the accounting. The learned trial Judge held the respondent accountable for the proceeds of the one sale in the ratio of the units sold to the units still retained by the respondent. On that basis he found that the respondent might retain twenty-seven ninetieths of the proceeds and pay the balance to the condominium corporation. With respect, I think he was wrong in this.

It seems to be clear from s. 9(17) of the Condominium Act that a judgment against a condominium corporation is also a judgment against each unit owner at the time the cause of action arose for a portion of the judgment representing his proportionate share of the common expenses. However, under s. 9(18) a judgment in favour of the condominium corporation is an asset of the corporation. I believe, therefore, that there should be no apportionment of the proceeds of the sales of extra parking spaces. The entire proceeds should be paid to the condominium corporation.

I would allow the appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Court File Nos. 96-705(GST)G, 96-706(GST)G

Tax Court of Canada Vancouver, British Columbia Garon T.C.J. Heard: December 4, 1997 Judgment: July 27, 1998

Werner H.G. Heinrich, for the Appellants. Lynn M. Burch, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:-- The appeal [96-705(GST)G] from the assessment made under the Excise Tax Act notice of which is dated May 1, 1995, and bears number 950100384129P, is allowed, with costs, and the assessment is vacated, in accordance with the attached Reasons for Judgment.

The appeal [96-706(GST)G] from the assessment made under the Excise Tax Act notice of which is dated May 1, 1995, and bears number 950100376129P, is allowed, with costs, and the assessment is vacated, in accordance with the attached Reasons for Judgment.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] GARON T.C.J.:-- This is an appeal in the case of the Appellant Judy-Anne Taylor, from an assessment of Goods and Services Tax dated May 1, 1995, in the amount of $45,009.35 in respect of the acquisition of an interest in a townhouse situated in Vancouver.

[para2] In the cases of the Appellants Joseph and Sandra Redmond, their appeals are from Goods and Services Tax assessments dated May 1, 1995 in the amount of $47,134.50 in respect of the acquisition of an interest in a townhouse situated in Vancouver.

[para3] At the hearing of these appeals, a "Statement Of Agreed Facts", together with 25 documents that were attached thereto, signed by the solicitors for the Appellants and the Respondent, were put in evidence:

The Appellant and the Respondent agree that:

1. The Appellant Judy-Anne Taylor ("Taylor") entered into an agreement on June 19, 1994 with Polygon Sandringham Development Limited ("Polygon") to acquire as a personal residence an interest in a townhouse civically described as Unit #7 - 5650 Hampton Place, Vancouver, British Columbia and legally described as Strata Lot 7, Leasehold Strata Plan LMS1415. Attached as Tab 1 is a copy of the said agreement.

2. The townhouse was one unit of a 32 unit townhouse development which had been developed by Polygon on undeveloped land it had leased from the University of British Columbia, a public authority. The improvements made by Polygon were subject to the restrictions of Part 3 of the Condominium Act. That attached as Tab 2 is a copy of the original Ground Lease.

3. The Ground Lease for the townhouse development was converted by Polygon into individual strata lot leases as a result of the deposit by Polygon and with the consent of UBC of a leasehold strata plan pursuant to Part 3 of the Condominium Act.

4. Polygon took the position that GST was payable on the transaction. By letter dated July 12, 1994 Taylor's solicitor disputed Polygon's assertion that GST was payable on the purchase. Attached as Tab 3 is a copy of the letter dated July 12, 1994.

5. On July 13, 1994 Taylor's solicitor confirmed that they would close the transaction and pay the GST demanded by Polygon under protest. Attached as Tab 4 is a copy of the letter of July 13, 1994.

6. Taylor paid $45,009.35 as GST to complete the transaction which amount was computed as 7% of $642,990.65. Attached as Tab 5 is a copy of the Taylor statement of adjustments.

7. Taylor received a registered Assignment of Lease no BG298419 on July 14, 1994 in respect of Strata Lot #7 DL 6494 Leasehold Strata Plan LMS 1415 on payment of the $642,990.65. Attached as Tab 6 is a copy of the said assignment.

8. Attached as Tab 7 is both a Certificate of Substantial Performance of the initial units of 5650 Hampton Place dated June 7, 1994 and a Certificate of Substantial Performance dated June 28, 1984 in respect of the balance of the townhouse development at 5650 Hampton Place, Vancouver, British Columbia.

9. Taylor applied for a GST rebate from Revenue Canada Taxation on July 22, 1994. The application for rebate is attached at Tab 8.

10. Taylor wrote Randy Jang of Revenue Canada Taxation on July 26, 1996 confirming Revenue Canada's advice that she should apply for a GST Application Ruling in respect of her GST rebate. Attached as Tab 9 is a copy of the said letter.

11. Ray Ng of Revenue Canada Taxation issued, on August 18, 1994, what was described as a binding ruling. Attached as Tab 10 is a copy of the said ruling.

12. The Minister of National Revenue ("Minister") subsequently assessed Taylor on May 1, 1995 to deny her application for a GST rebate. The said assessment is attached at Tab 11.

13. Taylor filed a Notice of Objection dated July 20, 1995 to the said assessment. The said Notice of Objection is attached as Tab 12.

14. The Minister issued a Notice of Decision dated February 8, 1996 upholding the assessment and confirming that the application for rebate of taxes paid in error had been correctly denied. The said Notice of Decision is attached at Tab 13.

15. The Appellant Joseph Redmond (on his own behalf and on behalf of the Appellant Sandra Redmond) (the "Redmonds") entered into an agreement with Polygon on February 15, 1994 to acquire as a personal residence an interest in a townhouse civically described as Unit 1 of 5650 Place, Vancouver, British Columbia and legally described as Leasehold Strata Lot 1 of a proposed Leasehold Strata Plan subdivision of Lot 1, Block 3, District Lot 6494, Plan 22697, New Westminster District. The said agreement is attached at Tab 14.

16. Joseph Redmond obtained a GST Advance Ruling which was described as being binding from Ray Ng of Revenue Canada Taxation on July 22, 1994. The said ruling is attached as Tab 15.

17. The solicitor for Polygon wrote the solicitor for the Redmonds on July 27, 1994 advising that they did not agree to any holdback of GST funds and expected full payment of the proceeds in accordance with the Statement of Adjustments. Attached at Tab 16 is a copy of the said letter.

18. The Redmonds' Statement of Adjustments is attached at Tab 17.

19. The Redmonds paid $47,134.50 as GST in respect of their acquisition of their interest in the townhouse.

20. The Redmonds received a registered assignment of lease no BG298419 on August 3, 1994 in respect of Strata Lot 1, District Lot 6494, Leasehold Strata Plan LMS1415. The said Assignment is attached at Tab 18.

21. Joseph Redmond applied to Revenue Canada for a rebate of GST paid in respect of the acquisition of the Redmonds' interest in the townhouse on August 5, 1994. The said application is attached as Tab 19.

22. Ray Ng of Revenue Canada Taxation wrote to Joseph Redmond on August 16, 1994 advising that the Redmonds seek their GST refund from the registered supplier. The said letter is attached as Tab 20.

23. The Minister subsequently assessed the Redmonds to deny their application for rebate on May 1, 1994. The said assessment is attached as Tab 21.

24. Joseph Redmond responded to the assessment of May 1, 1995 by letter dated May 11, 1995 which letter is attached at Tab 22.

25. Melvin Bellefontaine of Revenue Canada Taxation responded to Joseph Redmond on May 19, 1995 advising that the application of GST to supplies of Leasehold Strata Lots was under review. The letter of May 19, 1995 is attached at Tab 23.

26. The Redmonds objected to the assessments on May 19, 1995 which objection is attached at Tab 24.

27. Revenue Canada issued a Notice of Decision confirming the assessment and holding that the application for rebate of taxes paid in error by the Redmonds were correctly denied on February 8, 1996. The Notice of Decision is attached at Tab 25.

28. The Respondent's position is that the facts admitted in paragraphs 10, 11, 16 and 22 are not relevant to this appeal.

[para4] No evidence was tendered in addition to the above Statement of Agreed Facts and the material appended to the latter Agreement.

Appellant's Submission

[para5] Counsel for the Appellants began by pointing out that there was an acquisition of a unit in a prepaid leasehold strata plan, as appears from the Contract of Purchase and Sale dated June 19, 1994 between Polygon Sandringham Development Limited ("Polygon") and the Appellant Taylor.

[para6] The application by the University of British Columbia, Form C, which was filed in the Vancouver Land Registry Office on August 20, 1993, describes the nature of the interest in paragraph 3 as a "leasehold estate", the transferor being UBC and the transferee being Polygon. The Ground Lease and the model strata lease were attached to Form C, which has just been mentioned. [para7] Reference was made to a number of provisions in the Ground Lease dated August 20, 1993, between the University of British Columbia ("UBC") and Polygon Development XXII Limited ("Polygon") (Tab 2):

[para8] In the preamble of this Indenture, UBC is described as the lessor and Polygon as the lessee. Also in the preamble, it is stated that the lessor is the owner of the lands and that the lessor has agreed to lease the lands for the Term defined in the Ground Lease in order that the lessee may erect the buildings thereon, convert the Lease under subsection 96(1) of the Condominium Act and use and enjoy the lands and the buildings thereon for the Term of the Lease.

[para9] Clause 2.01 of the Ground Lease shows that the amount of $6,555,555 was to be paid by the lessee on or before the commencement date, which phrase is defined as being "the 20th day of August, 1993". In this connection, counsel for the Appellants commented that if the rent had been paid on a monthly basis, there would have been no litigation but it was paid up front. Paragraph 2.02 of the Agreement stipulates that all payments by the Lessee to the Lessor are "deemed to be Rent".

[para10] The lessor is given the right in paragraph 12.01 during the Term of the lease to enter at all reasonable times the lands and buildings to examine the condition thereof. Paragraph 12.02 says that the lessor shall be entitled to display signs advertising the lands and the buildings as being available during the final 12 months of the Term, for purchase or letting.

[para12] Paragraph 23.01 sets out that at the expiration of the Term, Polygon shall surrender the lands and the buildings to UBC and shall not be entitled to any compensation from the lessor, except as otherwise provided in the Model Strata Lot Lease, which was attached as Schedule A to the Ground Lease.

[para13] Paragraph 24.01 deals with the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

[para14] Paragraph 26 of the Ground Lease speaks to the conversion of the Ground Lease under the Condominium Act by way of a leasehold strata plan into a series of individual leases incorporating the terms of the Model Strata Lot Lease, as required by paragraph 26.03 of the Ground Lease and section 96 of the Condominium Act.

[para15] Certain provisions of the Model Strata Lease were reviewed.

[para16] In that lease, UBC is shown as the lessor and the lessees are called the owners of the leasehold strata plan because the strata unit lessee is called, under the Condominium Act, the owner. According to counsel for the Appellants, it does not mean that the lessee owns the fee simple.

Paragraph 1.01(d) defines the basic rent, by referring to paragraph 2.01 as being "its proportionate share of the unpaid Basic Rent for each Strata Lot which shall be equal to the product of the unpaid Basic Rent under the Ground Lease divided by the number of Strata Lots".

[para17] Paragraph 2.03 describes the obligation of the Lessee with regard to the payment of the basic rent.

[para18] Paragraph 16.01 sets out the terms that the Lessee must comply with regarding the use of the strata lot.

[para20] Counsel for the Appellants completed his review of the Model Strata Lot Lease by making mention of paragraph 26.01 thereof, which is concerned with the purchase of the Lessee's interest in strata lot by the Lessor. Also, he noted that paragraph 26.01 of the Model Strata Lot Lease deals with the effect of the Condominium Act. He observed that paragraph 26.01(b) says that "for the purposes of section 97(2)(a) of the Condominium Act, this subsection 26.01(b) shall be and constitute a schedule filed with the leasehold strata plan". He further referred to the other provisions of paragraph 26.01(b) which establish a formula for determining the purchase price of the lessee's interest that is to be paid by the lessor. According to counsel for the appellants, paragraph 26.01(b) in essence is in the nature of a "reduction of rent" In this connection, he added this: [See Note 1 below] "You've had this land and building for 99 years. You've prepaid the rent. The end of 99 years comes up, we have an incentive for you. One of two things can happen: you can run it down, and that's really been a problem in many areas, or you can keep it up. It's in our interests that you keep it up. If you keep it up, then we're going to give you a break. We'll give you a break on the rent. We'll pay the fair market value of what we think that building is worth. But fundamentally for purposes of this appeal, that does not alter the nature of the lease itself. It's really in that rent adjustment down the road. So that is in essence what was assigned to the Appellants, this model lease." Counsel for the Appellants explained the logic of that part of the formula which provides that the fair market value of the Lessee's interest is to be determined on the basis that no value is attributable to the lands because the lands were never transferred by UBC. UBC is not going to pay anything for the lands themselves.

Note 1: Page 23b of the transcript, line 24 to page 24, line 12. [para21] In his review of the various provisions of the Excise Tax Act, counsel for the Appellants pointed out that under section 165 of the Act every recipient of a taxable supply made in Canada shall pay tax. To the first question: "is there a supply? He answered in the affirmative in view of the definition of "supply" which means the provision of property, including inter alia a sale or a lease. On account of the broad definition of "property" in subsection 123(1), counsel for the Appellants admitted that here there was a supply of property. He agreed that the supply by Polygon was made in the course of a commercial activity.

[para22] On behalf of the Appellants, it was submitted that the supply by Polygon of its interest in the land is exempt pursuant to paragraphs (a) and (c) of section 7 of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act. In support of this proposition, counsel for the Appellants submitted that the assignment of the lease by Polygon to the Appellants is exempt if it is the assignment of a lease that qualifies under either subparagraph (i) or (ii) of paragraph (a) of section 7. He applied these provisions to the present situation by pointing out that there was first a Ground Lease between UBC and Polygon, which was for the specific purpose of building a series of residential units. Then, there was a new supply because Polygon had to secure the consent of UBC to register a Strata Lot Lease. Therefore, according to him, each Appellant qualifies under paragraph (c) of section 7 because the lease was assigned to each of them by Polygon. In his view, the whole case of the Minister of National Revenue hinges on the concept of ownership and the existence of a sale. Counsel for the Appellants argued that a lease does not transfer ownership of any property. He referred to Polygon's specific obligation relative to the payment of rent in the Ground Lease, in the Model Strata Lease and the Assignment and to UBC's obligation to grant quiet enjoyment.

[para24] Finally, Counsel for the Appellants referred to the "rulings" question and pointed out at the outset that he does not raise the issue of estoppel. However, he stated that if there is doubt about the interpretation of provisions of a statute and as to how they should apply, you look to the "rulings". He stressed that the Minister should not be allowed to come before a Court having published one set of policies and interpretations and then turn around and change his mind for the taxpayers that are before the Court. In support of these observations, he relied on the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in Nowegijick Ltd. v. The Queen et al. 83 D.T.C. 5041, and in Mattabi Mines Limited v. the Minister of National Revenue (Ontario), [1988] 2 C.T.C. 294. Counsel for the Appellants drew the Court's attention to the reference in the Nowegijick case to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in Harel v. The Deputy Minister of Revenue of the Respondent's submissions

[para26] The Respondent takes the position that the fact that the Appellants acquired Polygon's leasehold interest in the property by way of assignment does not mean that this was a supply by means of a lease, licence or other similar arrangement, as contemplated by 7(a) of Part I of Schedule V. According to Counsel for the Respondent, we must look at the substance of the transaction between Polygon and the Appellants and not simply to form. One has to look at what was actually conveyed. Ownership must not necessarily be fee simple ownership. She contended that it was possible to own a leasehold interest. In this connection, she suggested that the Condominium Act itself in creating strata lots derogates substantially from the common law principles attributable to ordinary ownership of fee simple interests because there are a lot of restrictions on the bundle of rights normally attributed to ownership of a condominium unit.

[para27] Counsel for the Respondent referred to the provisions of the Condominium Act and pointed out first that section 95 provides that upon deposit of the leasehold strata plan, the Registrar of the appropriate land title office must register new indefeasible titles to the owner in fee simple of the land for each of the lots shown on the plan. Polygon is out of the picture with respect to a particular strata lot after it had assigned its leasehold interest in it. Mention was made of the strata lot lessee in section 92, who is equated with an owner or purchaser. By section 97 an absolute duty is imposed by the Condominium Act on the public authority to purchase the strata lot lessee's interest in the strata lot on the termination of the lease. It was suggested that one can draw as an inference from the facts that the price each Appellant paid when they purchased their property only reflected the value of the building. In none of the transfer documents is an amount ascribed to the buildings as distinct from the land. The Appellants paid about $660,000 for their respective units. Polygon had already paid $6,655,555 to UBC prior to assigning its leasehold interest in the strata lot in question to each Appellant.

[para28] It was further submitted on behalf of the Respondent that even though the Appellants did not acquire a fee simple interest in the whole property, "what they acquired is the very next closest thing to that". The equity ownership interest of the Appellants is protected by subsection 97(4), which enacts that in any case of dispute with respect to the proper value of the equity interest in a property, the matter is to go to arbitration. Section 98 of the Condominium Act requires an order for sale of the purchaser's interest in the event that the latter defaults in any of his obligations and responsibilities. This is a further protection of the equity interest of the purchaser, quite distinct from an interest that is created by a tenant-landlord relationship.

[para29] Section 69 of the Condominium Act provides inter alia where an owner developer gives possession of a residential strata lot to a person on the basis of a lease, sublease or assignment of a lease for three years or more, that the owner developer is deemed to have assigned to the occupier, all his rights, powers and obligations under this Act or by-laws. That section equates, in her view, the owner developer, Polygon in this case, with the owner as defined in section 2 of the Condominium Act. By operation of the Condominium Act, the purchasers of the owner developer's leasehold interest are owners of that interest. It follows, according to the Respondent, that by virtue of the long duration of the term of the lease and the operation of section 97 with the protection given by section 98, the "owners are provided an opportunity to build equity in the leasehold interest, subject only to fair market value or the schedule agreed upon."

[para30] Counsel for the Respondent emphasized that the owner of any estate arising from an interest created by the Condominium Act will have the incidence of exclusivity of possession and enjoyment restricted in a number of significant ways, over and above the limitations imposed on all realty by an incorporeal interest or statute. Many examples were given associated with "communal living in close proximity" that constitute an infringement upon the normal bundle of rights associated with classic ownership. Also, reference was made to section 12 of the Condominium Act which provides in substance that a share in the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation shall not be dealt with separately from the strata lot of the owner.

[para32] Regarding the application of the Excise Tax Act, it was first argued on behalf of the Respondent that subsection 7(a) or (c) does not help the Appellants as they deal with the supply of land, separate and apart from the constructions or improvements on the land, on the ground that "the rights of the purchasers to the developer's leasehold interest in the property are purchased by them in the contracts of purchase and sale". It was further argued on behalf of the Respondent that the substance of each transaction entered into between Polygon and the Appellants is more closely akin to a sale, which "is broad enough to include a sale by way of disposition or transfer of the ownership via a vehicle by way of an assignment" by virtue of the definition of a "sale" in subsection 123(1) of the Excise Tax Act.

[para34] In support of the above position, she relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Granbury Developments Ltd v. Canada, [1995] G.S.T.C. 73, for the proposition enunciated at page 73-5 that "the policy of the legislator and of the administrator in respect of the definition of "sale" is that a sale included either a transfer of ownership or a transfer of possession".

[para36] Other reasons were invoked by the Respondent in support of her position that section 7 of Part I of Schedule of the Excise Tax Act does not apply. One reason is that section 7 deals with land as separate and apart from any structures on it. Under the Act, after deposit of the strata lot plan and after the automatic conversion, one cannot separate the land from the improvements. Also it was provided that the reference to the generic "residential unit" in section 7(a) is not intended to apply to "residential condominium units" with which we are concerned here. According to the Respondent, if paragraph 7(a) is not applicable because of the nature of the property contemplated, paragraph 7(c) does not help either. Paragraph 7(c) only expands the application of paragraph 7(a) to cases where there is an assignment of the lease, licence or similar arrangement.

[para37] Another argument was made relating to subsections 7(a) and 7(c) of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act as to why they do not apply. It is that, prior to the assignment by Polygon of its leasehold interest, the purchasers are not owners, lessees or persons in occupation or possession. On this basis, the supply by way of lease or by assignment of the lease does not fit because the Appellants were not recipients in their capacity as owners, lessees or persons in possession. The Appellants "do not become any of these things until after the transfer, after the conveyance," to adopt the language of Counsel for the Respondent.

[para38] If the transaction is not a lease, licence or similar arrangement within the meaning of section 7, was it a self-supply? Section 191 sets out the self-supply rules and paragraph 4(b) of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act exempts situations where the builder is deemed to have made a self-supply.

[para41] With respect to the Property Purchase Tax Act, the evidence is that each Appellant paid property purchase tax. According to the Respondent, property purchase tax would only be payable if there was a sale of a leasehold interest rather than an assignment or a supply by way of lease. Paragraph 1(1)(d) of the Property Purchase Tax Act include leases with a term greater than 30 years in the definition of "taxable transaction". The amount of tax with respect to that transaction is due on the day the leasehold interest is registered in the Land Title Office. In the same way, tax is due when the sale of fee simple strata lot is registered in the Land Title Office.

[para42] Counsel for the Respondent then adverted to the GST Memorandum 300-4-1, dealing with "Exempt Supplies - Real Property", at paragraph 12 headed "Long Term Residential Rents". She contended that this paragraph of the GST Memorandum deals with the rental of a house or apartment, in other words, with a standard residential lease. In her view, paragraph 12 of the GST Memorandum does not apply to leases covered by section 7 of Part I of Schedule V. She is of the opinion that paragraphs 15, 16 or even 17 of the GST Memorandum 300-4-1 are perhaps more properly applicable here.

[para43] Looking at the Appellant Taylor's Contract of Purchase and Sale dated June 19, 1994, counsel for the Respondent indicated that it is a deal between Polygon and the Appellant. What is significant, in her opinion, is that the Appellant Taylor takes from Polygon and not from UBC. Money is clearly paid to Polygon and not to UBC. The second aspect in this contract is that the Appellant Taylor is identified as the Purchaser. Paragraph 5 of this contract is relevant; it is the purchase of a prepaid leasehold interest in the proposed strata lot. Also, in compliance with paragraph 7 of that contract, Polygon was required to execute closing documents only in the name of the Purchaser. The Appellant Taylor replaces Polygon for all intents and purposes. As appears from paragraph 9 of the contract of purchase and sale, the transfer of the risk from Polygon to the Appellant Taylor is a classic indication of a sale. Risk is something that follows ownership. Paragraph 20 of the Contract of Purchase and Sale, regarding the payment of the goods and services tax, was also referred to.

[para45] By article 2, Polygon agrees to pay the basic rent in the amount of $6,555,555 on or before the commencement date, being August 20, 1993. The rent owed by Polygon to UBC was paid well in advance of the Appellants Taylor and Redmond entering into their respective contracts of purchase and sale. Once the basic rent requirement is removed, to all intents and purposes, what we have, according to counsel for the Respondent, is no more than the purchasers' agreement to reimburse UBC for any amounts that they have agreed to pay that UBC pays on their behalf. For instance, because UBC is the landowner, UBC would be getting the property tax bill. Thus the Appellants agreed to indemnify UBC in respect of the payments of municipal taxes.

[para47] At article 3 of the Ground Lease, the Appellants as lessees are to pay taxes even those from which the lessor UBC is exempt, placing the Appellants as lessees or purchasers, in essentially the same position as any property owner.

[para48] Counsel for the Respondent referred to the clause "Assignment by lessee" in paragraph 16.02 of the Ground Lease. According to the Respondent, it relates to the assignment prior to the construction being erected and it contemplates the event of Polygon assigning its interest to another party for the purposes of developing the land.

[para49] Because of clause 26.04 of the Ground Lease, it was contended by the Respondent that once Polygon disposed of its interest to the Appellants, it no longer had any liability under the Ground Lease in respect of the property in issue, Polygon is off the hook, so she said.

[para50] Reference was made to section 2.01 of the Model Strata Lease and paragraph 4 of the Land Title document, in the case of the Appellant Taylor, to which document was attached the agreement dated July 8, 1994, to support the position that when the Appellants acquired their interest in the leasehold strata property, "there were not any vestiges left over from the basic rent". There was no subsisting obligation on the part of the Appellants as purchasers to pay any of the basic rent. The other items that are to be paid by the Appellants as purchasers are just current expenses, such as taxes, repairs, insurance, all attributes of ownership or an interest in property.

[para53] Counsel for the Respondent also commented on clause I of the Assignment dated July 8, 1994, in the case of the Appellant Taylor, where it is stated that "the Vendor as beneficial owner hereby assigns to the Purchaser the Vendor's interest in the Strata lot". She made the point that this is a statement that Polygon is in fact a beneficial owner of an interest in the strata lot, which is a leasehold interest. She mentioned that in clause 2 the parties contemplated a separate demise of the Strata Lot at the rent referred to in the lease. According to the Respondent, this is an indication that "the parties involved in these transactions were contemplating an assignment of the lease as separate and apart from a sale of the leasehold interest". In her opinion, the parties were buying and selling a leasehold interest. In this connection, she noted that in a letter to Revenue Canada, dated July 22, 1994, the Appellant Taylor herself mentioned that she recently purchased a leasehold interest.

[para54] Of the cases referred to by counsel for the Respondent for determining the distinction between a property held under a leasehold interest or under a lease and a property that is actually sold, the following are of interest:

Gateway Lodge Limited v. M.N.R., 67 D.T.C. 5138 Dow Holdings v. M.N.R., 76 D.T.C. 1199 Viceroy Rubber and Plastics Limited v. M.N.R., 93 D.T.C. 347

[para55] With respect to the advance rulings issue, the Respondent argued that these rulings are irrelevant, as they were not relied upon by the Appellants. In the case of the Appellant Taylor, the ruling was dated August 18, 1994, while the transaction was completed as of July 14, 1994. With regard to the Appellants Redmond, the Contract of Purchase and Sale was binding on them as of February 8, 1994 and the ruling applicable to them was dated July 22, 1994. The point was also made by the Respondent that advance rulings are not like Interpretation Bulletins in that they are not in the public domain and should not be given any weight by the Courts, not being an administrative policy and interpretation to which reference was made in the case Nowegijick referred to earlier. In this connection, counsel for the Respondent relied on the recent decision of the Federal Court of Appeal in Owen Holdings v. The Queen, 97 D.T.C. 5401.

Analysis

[para56] The general question to be determined is whether the supplies which Polygon made to the Appellants were taxable supplies within the provisions of Part IX of the Excise Tax Act, the Goods and Services Tax. More precisely, having regard to the submissions of the parties, did each transaction give rise to an exempt supply as regards the Appellants. [para57] Certain general provisions of the Goods and Services Tax portion of the Excise Tax Act should be kept in mind.

[para58] Section 165 enacts that every recipient of a taxable supply made in Canada shall pay to the Government of Canada tax in respect of the supply equal to 7 % of the value of the consideration for the supply, unless it is a zero-rated supply.

[para59] The definitions of certain terms and expressions of general import used in section 165 or elsewhere in the Excise Tax Act should be noted. These definitions are found in subsection 123(1) of this Act.

"Supply" - supply means, subject to sections 133 and 134, the provision of property or a service in any manner, including sale, transfer, barter, exchange, licence, rental, lease, gift or disposition.

"Taxable Supply" - taxable supply means "a supply that is made in the course of a commercial activity. "Commercial Activity", commercial activity of a person means

(a) a business carried on by the person (other than a business carried on by an individual or a partnership, all of the members of which are individuals, without a reasonable expectation of profit), except to the extent to which the business involves the making of exempt supplies by the person,

(b) an adventure or concern of the person in the nature of trade (other than an adventure or concern engaged in by an individual or a partnership, all of the members of which are individuals, without a reasonable expectation of profit), except to the extent to which the adventure or concern involves the making of exempt supplies by the person, and

(c) the making of a supply (other than an exempt supply) by the person of real property of the person, including anything done by the person in the course of or in connection with the making of the supply; "Exempt Supply" - exempt supply means a supply included in Schedule V.

[para60] There are three types of supply for the purposes of the Goods and Services Tax: "Taxable Supply", "Zero-rated Supply" and "Exempt Supply".

[para61] Against this general legislative background and before analyzing the enactments that are determinative of the question in issue, it is appropriate to determine first the precise nature of the supply in issue that was made here by Polygon to each Appellant.

[para62] UBC leased a large area of undeveloped property to Polygon by way of a Ground Lease dated August 20, 1993 and registered in the Vancouver Land Title Office, for the purpose of developing a series of townhouses thereon by way of strata leases, in accordance with the Condominium Act of British Columbia. Polygon proceeded with the development of the townhouse project, constructed condominium units on these lots and subsequently transferred the units to individuals like the Appellants. The deposit of the leasehold strata plan with the Land Registry under the Condominium Act, operated to convert the Ground Lease between UBC and Polygon into individual strata lot leases in the name of Polygon. Also, as a result of the deposit of the leasehold strata plan, UBC was issued, as owner in fee simple, certificates of title to each of the new strata lots shown in the plan. In the present case, it is therefore beyond dispute that the underlying land is owned by UBC and leased to Polygon by way of a Ground Lease.

[para63] In my view, the transactions between Polygon and the Appellants involve not only the assignment by Polygon of its interest in the strata lot leases, but also the sale by Polygon of the condominium units in question to the Appellants.

[para64] The Contracts of Purchase and Sale dated February 8, 1994 and June 19, 1994 between the Appellants Redmond and the Appellant Taylor respectively and Polygon indicate that the Appellants became owners of their respective townhouses and some other items. I am referring to the identical paragraphs 9 and 20 of these two contracts, which read thus:

9. RISK: The Home and all other items included in the Purchase and Sale will be and remain at the risk of Polygon until 2:01 a.m. on the Completion Date after which time they will be at the risk of the Purchaser.

20. GOODS AND SERVICES TAX: The Purchase Price shall include any goods and services taxes payable in respect of the Sale of the Home. The Purchaser shall pay to Polygon an amount equal to any goods and services taxes payable in respect of any additional items and extras agreed to be supplied by Polygon to the Purchaser.

[para65] In the Assignments of lease dated July 8, 1994 and August 3rd, 1994 made by Polygon to the Appellants respectively, where Polygon is described as the "Vendor" and the Appellants as "Purchaser", it is set out in Clause I of each assignment that "the Vendor as beneficial owner hereby assigns to the Purchaser the Vendor's interest in the Strata Lot." In clause 2 of each Assignment, it is stipulated that "The Purchaser covenants with the Vendor and the University and each of them that the Purchaser shall during all the residue now unexpired of the term of the Lease and every renewal thereof perform and observe the covenants on the part of the lessee to be performed and observed and the condition contained in the Lease as fully and effectually as if the Lease contained a separate demise of the Strata Lot at the rent referred to in the Lease".

[para66] The correctness of this conclusion is supported by subsection 97(1) of the Condominium Act which in substance provides that the lessor, in the case at hand UBC, is required to purchase the strata lot lessee's interest in the strata lot upon termination of the strata lot lease. In Article 26.01 of the Model Strata Lease, which is incorporated in the Ground Lease between UBC and Polygon dated August 20, 1993, it is stipulated that the purchase price of the lessee's interest is determined on the basis that the interest in the strata lot consists only of the building comprising the strata lot and the interest in the common property and common facilities based on the unit entitlement of the strata lot as they relate to improvements. No value is attributed to the leased land in calculating the purchase price. The precise basis on which the fair market value of the lessee's interest at the stipulated time is to be fixed is set out in the following portion of the same Article 26.01:

... For the purposes of assessing such fair market value and in furtherance to the provisions of the Condominium Act the Lessee's interest in the Strata Lot shall be determined:

(i) on the basis that the Lessee's interest in the Strata Lot consists only of that part of the Building comprising the Strata Lot and his interest in the Common Property and Common Facilities based on the Unit Entitlement of the Strata Lot as they relate to improvements on the Lands, with no value being attributable to the Lands.

(ii) on the basis that the Strata Lot is free of all liens, charges and encumbrances, and

(iii) on the basis that the Lands may be used only for the purposes set forth in this Lease, and the purchase price shall be calculated as of the date of Termination of this Lease.

[para67] Also, under section 98 of the Condominium Act, the lessor, UBC is not entitled to re-enter, take possession or otherwise cause the strata lot lease to be terminated, if the lessee, each Appellant in the matter at hand, defaults on observing and performing his obligations. The lessor must apply to the Court for an order for sale. Again, this shows that each Appellant has an ownership right in the condominium unit, such that the lessor is not entitled to repossess it but must purchase it through a public auction or private sale approved by the Court.

[para68] As well, the Model Strata Lot Lease has provisions for the purchasers, the Appellants here, to pay taxes, repairs, insurance and all other expenses that are incidental to ownership.

[para69] In conclusion, I am of the opinion that the Appellants obtained an equity, an ownership in their respective condominium units, in addition to their respective interests in the strata lot leases.

[para71] Consideration should therefore be given to Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act which lists eight broad categories of exemptions which are set out in as many parts in this Schedule. Part I, entitled "Real Property" is the only one of interest for our present purposes. Since the application of section 7 of Part I of Schedule V has been the main focus of the debate at the hearing of these appeals, I will first address this issue.

[para72] As noted earlier, it was asserted on behalf of the Appellants that the supply received by each of them is exempt under paragraphs 7(a) and 7(c) of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act. Section 7 read thus at the relevant times:

7. A supply

(a) of land (other than a site in a residential trailer park) by way of lease, licence or similar arrangement for a period of at least one month, made to

(i) the owner, lessee or person in occupation or possession of a residential unit that is or is to be affixed to the land for the purpose of its use and enjoyment as a place of residence for individuals, or

(ii) a person who is acquiring possession of the land for the purpose of constructing a residential complex on it in the course of a commercial activity,

(b) of a site in a residential trailer park by way of lease, licence or similar arrangement for a period of at least one month, made to the owner, lessee or person in occupation or possession of

(i) a mobile home, or (ii) a travel trailer, motor home or similar vehicle or trailer, situated or to be situated on the site, or

(c) of a lease, licence or similar arrangement referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) by way of assignment but not including any land on which the residential unit, mobile home, vehicle or trailer is or is to be affixed or situated, or any land contiguous to it, that is not reasonably necessary for the use and enjoyment of the unit, home, vehicle or trailer as a place of residence for individuals.

[See Note 2 below]

Note 2: Section 7 quoted above and referred to at the hearing of these appeals was amended by section 88, c. 10 of the Statutes of Canada, 1997 and was made retroactive to September 14, 1992 for certain purposes. This amendment is of no significance here.

[para73] Paragraph (a) of section 7 exempts inter alia the supply of land, under a lease, licence or similar arrangement made to a person who is gaining possession of the land for the purpose of constructing a residential complex on it in the course of a commercial activity. Paragraph (c) of section 7 also exempts "a supply of lease, licence or similar arrangement referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) by way of assignment".

[para74] I cannot therefore accept the Appellants' argument that the supply of a condominium unit is included within the supply of land. In effect, subparagraph (a)(ii) of section 7 speaks of the supply of land by way of a lease made to "a person who is acquiring possession of the land for the purpose of constructing a residential complex on it in the course of a commercial activity". Thus, subparagraph (a)(ii) contemplates a supply of land exclusively since the residential complex is to be constructed. Also, in subparagraph (a)(i) of section 7, the words used make it clear that the residential unit may or may not be affixed to the land at the time the supply of land is made to the owner, lessee or person described in that paragraph.

[para75] It is apparent that paragraphs (a) and (c) of section 7 of Part I of Schedule V deals with the supply of land as separate from improvements. What is exempt is the supply of land if it is made in one of the ways described in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c). Section 7 does not deal with the supply of a residential unit that is or is to be affixed to the land, nor does it relate to a compound supply situation where the supply of the residential unit is incidental to the supply of the land.

[para76] As I understand it, the general purpose of section 7 is to exempt the supply of land or a residential trailer park site, by way of lease, licence or similar arrangement, or by way of assignment of such arrangement, when that land or site is used or intended to be used for specific residential purposes.

[para77] I therefore conclude that section 7 of Part I of Schedule V only exempts the supply of land and cannot therefore be of any assistance to the Appellants with respect to the part of the supply that involves the sale to them by Polygon of the subject townhouses.

[para78] It has not been suggested on behalf of the parties that any other exempting provisions in Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act, might be applicable here, apart from paragraph 4(b) of Part I of the latter Schedule, which in turn refers to self-supply rules found in section 191 of the Excise Tax Act.

[para79] Paragraph 4(b) of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act is hereinafter reproduced in part:

4. A supply by way of sale of a single unit residential complex (in this section referred to as the "complex") or a residential condominium unit (in this section referred to as the "unit") or an interest in the complex or unit made by a builder of the complex or unit where

(a) ...

(b) in any case, the builder received an exempt supply of the complex or unit by way of sale or was deemed under subsection 191(1) or (2) of the Act to have received a taxable supply of the complex or unit by way of sale, and that supply was the last supply of the complex or unit made by way of sale to the builder,

[para80] Subsection 191(1) reads thus:

191. (1) Self-supply of single unit residential complex or residential condominium unit - For the purposes of this Part, where

(a) the construction or substantial renovation of a residential complex that is a single unit residential complex or a residential condominium unit is substantially completed,

(b) the builder of the complex

(i) gives possession of the complex to a particular person under a lease, licence or similar arrangement (other than an arrangement, under or arising as a consequence of an agreement of purchase and sale of the complex, for the possession or occupancy of the complex until ownership of the complex is transferred to the purchaser under the agreement) entered into for the purpose of its occupancy by an individual as a place of residence,

(ii) gives possession of the complex to a particular person under an agreement for

(A) the supply by way of sale of the building or part thereof in which the residential unit forming part of the complex is located, and (B) the supply by way of lease of the land forming part of the complex or the supply of such a lease by way of assignment other than an agreement for the supply of a mobile home and a site for the home in a residential trailer park, or

(iii) where the builder is an individual, occupies the complex as a place of residence, and

(c) the builder, the particular person or an individual who is a tenant or licensee of the particular person is the first individual to occupy the complex as a place of residence after substantial completion of the construction or renovation the builder shall be deemed

(d) to have made and received, at the later of the time the construction or substantial renovation is substantially completed and the time possession of the complex is so given to the particular person or the complex is so occupied by the builder, a taxable supply by way of sale of the complex, and

(e) to have paid as a recipient and to have collected as a supplier, at the later of those times, tax in respect of the supply calculated on the fair market value of the complex at the later of those times.

[para81] The phrases "residential complex" and "residential condominium unit" used in paragraph 4(b) of Part I of Schedule V and in subsection 191(1) are defined in subsection 123(1). For our purposes, it is sufficient to reproduce the definition of "residential condominium unit": "Residential Condominium Unit" - "residential condominium unit" means a residential complex that is, or is intended to be, a bounded space in a building designated or described as a separate unit on a registered condominium or strata lot plan or description, or a similar plan or description registered under the laws of a province, and includes any interest in land pertaining to ownership of the unit;

[para82] It was common ground that the townhouses acquired by the Appellants come within the definition of a "residential condominium unit".

[para83] Paragraph (b) of section 4 of Part I of Schedule V exempts notably the subsequent sale of a residential condominium unit by a builder where the builder last made a deemed sale to himself under subsection 191(1) of the Excise Tax Act.

[para84] It is now necessary to turn to an analysis of subsection 191(1) of the Act with a view to ascertaining whether the builder made a deemed sale under subsection 191(1) of the latter statute.

[para85] It is apparent that paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection 191(1) are met in the case of each appellant. In effect, Polygon gave possession to each appellant of a "residential condominium unit", upon its substantial completion and each Appellant was the first individual to occupy it as a place of residence after substantial completion of the construction.

[para86] It only remains to be determined if one of the three constituent elements of paragraph 191(1)(b) is satisfied in the appeals at hand.

[para87] Having regard to the facts outlined above, only subparagraph (ii) of paragraph 191(1)(b) needs to be considered.

[para88] Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph 191(1)(b) requires for its application two conditions:

(a) The first condition set out in clause A of subparagraph 191(1)(b)(ii) is that the builder the complex gives possession of the complex to a particular person, under an agreement for the supply by way of sale of the building or part thereof in which the residential unit forming part of the complex is located. In my view, this first condition is met here when Polygon sold the residential units to the Appellants. The transaction between Polygon and the Appellant Taylor is treated as a sale of the "Home" and other items, as appears from clause 9 of the Contract of Purchase and Sale dated June 19, 1994, between Polygon and the latter Appellant. The same comment is applicable to the Contract of Purchase and Sale dated February 8, 1994 between the Appellants Redmond and Polygon, which contains an identical clause 9.

(b) The second condition is couched in an alternative form. In the second alternative, the builder of the complex is required to supply the lease of the land forming part of the complex by way of assignment. This second condition, outlined in clause (B) of subparagraph 191(1)(b)(ii) is met in the case of the appellant Taylor, since there was an assignment agreed to by UBC, by Polygon of its leasehold interest in the land to the latter Appellant, as appears from the agreement, dated July 8, 1994, entered into between Polygon, UBC and the Appellant Taylor. The second condition is also satisfied in the case of the Appellants Redmond as there was an assignment dated August 3, 1994 made by Polygon to the Appellants Redmond to which assignment UBC had consented.

[para89] As mentioned above, Counsel for the Respondent argued that subparagraph 191(1)(b)(ii) does not apply here because that subparagraph contemplates a two-step transaction and the land and the strata unit cannot be conveyed separately in view of section 12 of the Condominium Act.

[para90] I do not see any clear requirement in that subparagraph 191(1)(b)(ii) for a separate conveyance of the land and of the residential unit. Rather, it seems to me that what is contemplated could be done in a single transaction consisting of two different elements, the assignment of a leasehold interest in the land and the sale of a building. In any event, here, we have two Contracts of Purchase and Sale (respectively dated February 8, 1994 and June 19, 1994), dealing with the purchase of a prepaid leasehold interest in the proposed strata lot and the purchase of a particular "Home" and other items and subsequently two assignments to which UBC had consented, respectively dated July 8, 1994 and August 3, 1994.

[para91] In my view, the rationale behind subparagraph 191(1)(b)(ii) is well explained in the news release of the Department of Finance 91-032, dated March 27, 1991, which reads in part thus:

The Act will be amended to ensure that where a builder of a new residential complex supplies by way of lease the land related to the complex to a lessee or assigns his or her interest in a lease of that land to a lessee, the builder is subject to the same self-supply rules as if the builder had supplied by way of lease both the land and the building related to the complex to the lessee. At the time the builder transfers possession of the complex to the lessee, the builder shall be deemed, at that time, to have sold the land and building for their fair market value and to have paid as a recipient and collected as a supplier tax on the deemed sale ...

[para92] Since the requirements laid down in subsection 191(1) are met in the case of each Appellant, the deeming provisions in paragraphs (d) and (e) are applicable. Accordingly, the builder Polygon is deemed to have made and received at the time possession of the complex was given to each Appellant, a taxable supply by way of sale of the complex and to have paid as a recipient and to have collected as a supplier tax in respect of the supply calculated on the fair market value of the complex.

[para93] I am therefore of the opinion that section 7 of Part I of Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act does not exempt the part of the supply received by the Appellants that relates to the purchase of their respective residential units but only that part of the supply involving the acquisition by each Appellant of the lease of the land by way of assignment. I have also come to the conclusion that by virtue of the joint operation of paragraph 4(b) of Part I of Schedule V and subsection 191(1) of the Excise Tax Act, the part of the supply received by the Appellants that relates to their acquisition of their respective residential units is exempt under Part IX of the Excise Tax Act.

[para94] Therefore, I must conclude that the Appellants are not liable under Part IX of the Excise Tax Act in respect of the assignment of the leasehold interest in the lands in question and the acquisition of their respective residential units.

[para95] In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived, it is unnecessary for me to deal with the issue relative to the rulings given by the Minister of National Revenue in the cases of the Appellant Taylor and the Appellants Redmond.

[para96] For those reasons, the appeals are allowed with costs and the assessments are vacated.

Paul Kempling and Rhonda Kempling, plaintiffs (respondents), and Hearthstone Manor Corporation, defendant (appellant)

Alberta Court of Appeal Calgary, Alberta Picard, Harradence and Coté JJ.A. Judgment: filed July 17, 1996.

Appeal from the decision of Dixon J. dated the 18th of December, 1992 and filed the 20th of May, 1993.

Counsel: S.J. Dalton for the plaintiffs (respondents). R.S. Steele for the defendant (appellant).

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Separate reasons for judgment were delivered by Picard, Harradence and Coté JJ.A.

[para1] PICARD J.A.:-- The respondents contracted with the appellant for the purchase of a condominium. The trial judge held that the appellant was in breach of the contract and awarded the respondents damages for the breach and for mental suffering. The appellant appeals that finding of liability and the award of damages.

Facts

[para2] The respondents, plaintiffs at trial, are husband and wife who wanted to purchase a condominium which would be a home for them and for the wife's elderly father. The appellant, defendant, is a developer who, at the time the contract was signed, had not begun this condominium development. The respondents told the appellant of their special needs and the modifications required to accommodate the elderly father.

[para3] On May 10, 1989, the appellant and respondents entered into a contract which was drafted by the appellant's lawyer and contained some clauses on which it now relies.

[para4] The purchase price was $180,000 and the closing date was November 1, 1989, less than six months after the contract was signed. As the trial judge noted, a great deal of flexibility was built into the contract for the benefit of the appellant, allowing change to schedules, construction, materials, the unit factor, management fees and common expenses.

[para5] There was also a clause dealing with possible delay in the closing date and transfer of title. Although entitled "Transfer of Title Delay", clause twelve also referred to the closing date. It said that since closing and title transfer could not take place until the condominium plan was registered, the closing date would be deemed to be five days after the appellant advised the respondents that the plan had been registered. The clause ended with a sentence on which the appellant relies as setting out a true condition precedent to the contract:

"If the Condominium Plan is not registered by January 15, 1990, this Agreement shall be null and void and the Vendor shall return to the Purchaser, without interest, all purchase monies paid, subject to all proper deductions as provided for in this Agreement."

[para6] A chronology of events shows that the appellant faced many difficulties with this project. Indeed, on May 6, 1989, four days before the contract was signed, the City of Calgary rejected the development permit application. The appellant had problems with requirements such as setback, sanitation, and soil. At one point the project was subject to a stop work order because of failure to obtain a development permit or building permit in order to get approval of the project, the appellant had to reduce the number of units in the development which meant that the respondents' unit became larger.

[para10] At this meeting the respondents were told that the new possession date would be May 1, 1990. They were also told that they would be given a new "cleaned up" contract. In the letter given to the respondents, the appellant stated that it would "formally amend the legal contract". About a week after this meeting, the respondents asked for a copy of the amended contract but were told that it was not ready.

[para11] At the conclusion of the January 22nd meeting, the appellant arranged for the respondents to choose cabinets which they did on February 6th. Construction of their condominium continued through early February.

[para12] On February 19, 1990, the respondents refused to accede to the appellant's new demand to increase the purchase price to $225,000 and refused to accept a $4,000 bonus to withdraw from the contract. The appellant then handed them a notice stating that pursuant to clause twelve the contract of May 10, 1989 was null and void.

[para13] The delays in construction had greatly upset the respondent and her father and in July, 1990 the respondents moved to British Columbia (where the father lived) in order to look after him. The female respondent suffered a loss of income and because of the increase in property prices between May, 1989 and February, 1990, the respondents could no longer afford to purchase an equivalent home in Calgary. Trial Judgment

[para14] The trial judge was satisfied that the May 10th contract was valid and enforceable. He found there was consensus, certainty as to all terms, no impossibility of performance and no frustration. He held that the May contract was amended. He found that any concerns about the adequacy of writing and the Statute of Frauds was answered by numerous acts of part performance.

[para15] While he did not specifically deal with clause twelve and the claim that it contained a true condition precedent, he commented that "things continued on and after the passage of January 15, 1990, Mr. Will [of the appellant] is instructing Mr. Bradley [of the appellant] to get the Kemplings in and get the contract price bumped up." He found that Mr. Will, a sole shareholder, officer and director of the appellant, stalled things to keep the appellant's option open and could not accept the purchase price in the contract because of the low return to the appellant.

[para17] He also awarded the female respondent damages for mental suffering having found that the appellant knew of the particular reason that the respondents had for purchasing the condominium. He said that the female respondent "was deeply and genuinely committed to providing a home and care for her father in Calgary and was tremendously upset and disturbed at [the appellant's] attempts to force a higher payment." He said:

"These people were treated very shabbily and Mrs. Kempling, in particular, suffered severe mental distress. Her distress went far beyond disappointment or hurt feelings. The breach of contract by the Defendant led not only to emotional upset and turmoil but, when combined with Mrs. Kempling's commitment to her father, led to extraordinary compromises on her and her husband's part. Mrs. Kempling gave up a well-paid and rewarding job in Calgary, moved to Nanaimo to care for her father, experienced the concern of acquiring a home in Nanaimo and took employment in Nanaimo at half the salary being paid to her in Calgary. A total disruption of lifestyle has occurred."

[para18] The trial judge referred to Taylor v. Gill (1991), 78 Alta. L.R. (2d) 349 (Q.B.) in which Justice Deyell granted damages for mental suffering arising from the breach of contract for the sale of a house. The trial judge applied the tests set out in that case, found they were met and awarded damages of $7,500 to the female respondent.

Appellant's Position

[para19] The basis for the appeal of liability is three-fold:

1. There was a true condition precedent in clause twelve such that on January 15, 1990 the May 10, 1989 contract became null and void. There was then no contract to amend and no new contract. The appellant alleges the trial judge failed to consider this argument. 2. In the alternative, there was an amendment which required the respondents to pay the sum of $20,000 (being $16,000 for upgrades and a $4,000 management fee) and by clause six in the May 10th contract this sum had to be paid at the time that amendment was made. Because that amount has not been paid the respondents have not performed their contractual obligation.

3. There were numerous and substantial inconsistencies in the evidence of the respondents which the trial judge did not deal with in his reasons.

[para20] The basis for the appeal of damages is also three-fold. The appellant argues that the trial judge erred in:

1. assessing damages at July 1, 1990 and the market value of the condominium at $250,000;
2. not taking into account the $20,000 to be paid for extras;
3. awarding damages for mental suffering.

The Respondents' Position

[para21] The respondents do not deny that clause twelve contains a true condition precedent but argue that when the possession and closing date was not, as set out in the contract, November 1, 1989, but instead February, and then March, and as these later dates were proposed before January 15, 1990, the registration date of the condominium plan was implicitly postponed as well. The respondents point out that while the appellant now takes the position that there was no contract to amend after January 15, 1990, it was in fact the appellant who on January 22, 1990 proposed to amend the May contract.

[para22] The respondents argue that if the contract was void because of the operation of clause twelve as a true condition precedent there was a new contract entered into on January 22nd with part performance.

[para23] The respondents say they were not required to pay the $20,000 until they received a copy of the contract and certain schedules referred to in it. Furthermore, they say time had ceased to be of the essence in the contract because of the conduct of the appellant.

[para24] The respondents submit there was no palpable or overriding error made by the trial judge in measuring the evidence.

[para25] The position of the respondents on the damage assessment is that the figure of $250,000 is reasonable. They maintain that if the trial judge erred in not assessing damages as at February 19, 1990 that error benefitted the appellant who represented the unit to have a fair market value of $270,000 at that date. They argue that the trial judge was correct in deciding this was an appropriate case for the awarding of damages for mental suffering.

True Condition Precedent

1. The Law

[para26] The definitive case is Turney v. Zhilka, [1959] S.C.R. 578 where the clause being construed read: "Providing the property can be annexed to the Village of Streetsville and a plan is approved by the Village Council for subdivision." The Court found this was a true condition precedent because the obligations under the contract, on both sides, depended on a future uncertain event, the happening of which depended entirely on the will of a third party. Until the event occurred, the approval, there was no right to performance on either side. The Supreme Court of Canada affirmed the requirements in Barnett v. Harrison (1976), 57 D.L.R. (3d) 225.

[para27] Professor Fridman says at pages 438-40 of his text The Law of Contract, 3d ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1994) that Turney has made a distinction between a condition relating to the existence of a contractual obligation and one that is precedent to performance. Until the time given for the fulfilment of the true condition precedent neither party is free to withdraw from the contract but if the true condition precedent is not satisfied, there is no contract. It is a question of construction whether the obligations in a contract are absolute and binding immediately or, as where there is a true condition precedent, contingent.

[para28] The simplicity, and harshness, of the consequence of finding a condition to be a true condition precedent have caused difficulties for the courts. The most obvious is the requirement of characterizing the clause as a true condition precedent. (See McCauley v. McVey (1979), 98 D.L.R. (3d) 577 (S.C.C.)). Another difficulty arises because the reality is that true condition precedent may require action on the part of one or both parties to fulfil it. In Dynamic Transport Ltd. v. O.K. Detailing Ltd (1978), 85 D.L.R. (3d) 19, the Supreme Court of Canada held that in some circumstances a party will be found to have made an implied promise to attempt to bring about the event constituting the true condition precedent. In other words, although the fulfilment of a true condition precedent depends on the will of a third party, one or both of the parties to the contract may, in the circumstances, have some obligation to pursue that end. The most obvious example is the approval of zoning by a third party such as a city where there is a requirement to make an application and provide information.

[para29] Perhaps the most difficult feature of the Turney decision is that a true condition precedent can never be waived unilaterally. The strict application of this aspect of the decision has led to harsh results, where even the party for whose benefit the true condition precedent was made could not waive it. (See Westward Farms Ltd v. Cadieux, [1982] 5 W.W.R. 1 (Man. C.A.)). Some attempt has been made to find that a contract is valid and enforceable where the waiver of a true condition precedent was accepted by the other party. (See Smale v. Van der Weer (1977), 80 D.L.R. (3d) 704 (Ont. H.C.) and comments in Giaouris v. Pristouris, (1978), 2 R.P.R. 81 (Ont. C.A); leave to appeal to the S.C.C. dismissed.

[para30] In Ed Sinclair Construction & Supplies Ltd v. Grunthaler (1979), 18 AR. 162 this court had before it all of the cases cited above except Westward Farms which had not yet been decided, and found that there was a true condition precedent where a sale of land was contingent on the purchaser selling other property on which there was an outstanding offer made subject to the approval of the board of directors of that offeror. Before deciding whether it was possible to waive this true condition precedent, as the purchaser had attempted to do, the court chose to look at the timeliness of the purported waiver. The court agreed with the trial judge that the attempt to waive the true condition precedent occurred after the time for fulfilment of it and therefore could not be effective. The court said, at page 170:

"In cases, cited by counsel, in which the right of waiver of a financing condition had been exercised, notice of waiver by the purchaser was, in each, timely. I will show, presently, that the matter of timely notice is the weakness of the Sinclair [purchaser] position in this appeal. For that reason it becomes unnecessary to analyze each of the appellant's authorities although I confess to some difficulty reconciling the reasoning leading to the decision in some of these authorities with the rule in Turney v. Zhilka."

2. Analysis

[para31] There are two questions:

1. Was there a true condition precedent in the contract of May 10, 1989?
2. If yes, was there an effective waiver of it?

[para32] In order to construe the term said to be a true condition precedent, it is necessary to review the terms of the contract, the circumstances and the actions of the appellant and respondents. It is the intention of the parties that ultimately determines their duties under a contract containing a conditional clause. While it is true that the registration of a condominium plan depends on the will of a third party and that such is a feature of a true condition precedent, that, by itself, is not determinative.

[para33] The appellant, an experienced developer, was in the business of constructing and selling condominium units and knew what had to take place before a condominium plan could be registered. Although the trial judge found that at some point the appellant stalled in order to keep its options open, and the respondents were of the opinion that the appellant's other projects were given priority, the appellant moved ahead with the construction of the respondents' condominium.

[para34] The contract had standard clauses with provision to make some terms specific to each purchaser. As the trial judge noted, the appellant "built in the concept of change in the contract..." In view of the delays and difficulties it faced, it was not surprising that the appellant suggested a change to a "more reasonable" possession and closing date. The contract, clause eight, said the closing date was the later of November 1, 1989 or the date possession was granted. Clause twelve said the closing date was deemed extended until five days after the appellant advised the respondents of the registration of the condominium plan. The provision for registration by January 15, 1990 was the final sentence in this clause. These clauses set up a plan to protect the appellant should there be delays. In another clause, nine, the respondents covenanted to take possession when the condominium was substantially completed: "even though the Condominium Plan may not be registered and even though all exterior work, common areas and landscaping may not at such time be fully completed."

[para36] The essence of the appellant's argument is that a true condition precedent was inserted to protect both parties because the development of the project was in an early stage when the May 10, 1989 contract was signed. The effect of finding there was a true condition precedent would be that the parties did not have a contract for the purchase and sale of the condominium until the condominium plan was registered. They would, of course, have certain obligations: the appellant to pursue the fulfilment of the contract and work toward the registration, and both the appellant and the respondents not to withdraw from the contract until January 15, 1990 (providing the term was not fulfilled).

[para39] In conclusion, the registration of the condominium plan by a certain date was not true condition precedent. In view of this conclusion it is not necessary to deal with waiver.

[para40] The trial judge did not specifically refer to true condition precedent and did not analyze clause twelve. However, his conclusion that there was an amended contract which was valid and enforceable was an implicit rejection of the existence of a true condition precedent.

1. Status

[para41] There remains the issue of whether the effect of the changes in the contract which took place at a meeting on January 22nd resulted in an amended contract or a new one or none at all.

[para43] The contract provided for adjustments to cover the costs of extras and management fees. In clause six, it said that the appellant need not supply extras unless the parties agreed to them, in writing, and the respondents agreed to pay for them when agreement was reached. Another clause, twenty, provided for a fee for a manager who could be the appellant. These clauses set up the mechanism for the parties to make the very modifications they did.

[para44] The possibility of a change in the possession date, and thus, the registration of the condominium plan and transfer of title was provided for in a number of clauses, including eight and twelve which have been discussed. The appellant had mentioned its difficulty in complying with the stated closing date of November 1, 1989 and indeed that date had passed prior to January 15, 1990 referred to for registration of the condominium plan and prior to the discussions on January 22, 1990. The respondents have argued that time was no longer of the essence in this contract. Thus, a change in the possession date (which the contract states means the closing date) was anticipated by all parties and was necessary. The appellant required the change and would have been in breach had it not made provision for such a modification. At the meeting the appellant modified the date to May 1, 1990 and the respondents had to accept it. [para45] These modifications, provided for in the contract and agreed to by the parties, resulted in an amended contract, not a new one. The trial judge found that the contract was amended, valid and enforceable. His conclusion was correct.

2. Performance by Respondents

[para46] The appellant alleges that because the respondents never did pay the appellant the $20,000 for the extras and management fee nor pay a deposit of $25,000 as provided they were not ready, willing and able to close the contract. The former was to be paid when agreement was reached. Although that did occur on January 22nd, the respondents were entitled to wait for the "cleaned up" contract to confirm that agreement was correctly documented before they paid. They asked for that document but never did get it. The $25,000 was to be paid within ten days from the respondents receiving schedules specifically described in the contract. Again the respondents did not receive them.

[para47] There is no basis for suggesting that the respondents were not ready, willing and able to close. Inconsistencies in the Evidence [para48] Most of the allegations were directed at the issue of certainty of terms of the contract. Counsel for the appellant advised that he was not pursuing this ground of appeal.

[para49] In any case, the trial judge made no error in dealing with the evidence.

Damages

1. For Breach

[para50] The appellant is correct in stating that damages for breach of contract in sale of land cases are usually assessed at the date of the breach unless there are special circumstances. (See Mavretic v. Beauman (1993), 30 R.P.R. (2d) 161 (B.C.C.A)). The trial judge found the date of breach was February 19, 1990 when the appellant gave the respondents the notice of termination. However, the trial judge chose July 1, 1990, the date he said the respondents abandoned the prospect of getting the condominium, as the date for the assessment of damages. I find that the date makes no difference to the assessment of quantum. Indeed, there is some force in the argument of the respondents that the damages provable at February 19, 1990 might have been higher.

[para52] The appellant claims that the trial judge should have used a base price of $200,000, to reflect the $16,000 in extras and the $4,000 management fee. However, there is no evidence whether the condominium as it finally sold had any or all of the extras and the management fee would no doubt have been paid by the new purchaser.

[para53] In the result, I find that the trial judge made no error in setting the damages at $70,000.

2. Mental Suffering

The Law

[para54] The respondent submits that the trial judge erred in awarding damages for mental suffering because the conduct of the appellant did not constitute an independent actionable wrong. The appellant says that following the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Vorvis v. I.C.B.C. (1989), 36 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 a claim for damages for mental suffering (or as it is sometimes referred to, mental distress) arising from a breach of contract cannot succeed unless the conduct in question constitutes an independent actionable wrong. This argument requires a review of the law to determine the appropriate test to be used in determining whether recovery for mental suffering ought to be granted in this case.

[para55] The Vorvis case dealt with an employment contract and a claim for damages for mental suffering as a result of wrongful dismissal. The Supreme Court of Canada agreed with the Court of Appeal and did not award damages. However, the Court took the opportunity to discuss the relevant law which included a discussion of the basis for aggravated and punitive damages. The majority judgement was written by Justice McIntyre. He characterized damages for mental suffering as a type of aggravated damage. After examining certain authorities (Addis v. Gramophone Co., [1909] A.C. 488 (H.L.) and Peso Silver Mines v. Cropper, [1966] S.C.R. 673), he concluded that aggravated damages have generally not been granted in breach of employment contract cases because the employee/employer relationship is usually one where either party could terminate the contract by due notice and thus the only damage which could arise would be from a failure to give such notice.

[para56] After an extensive review of the authorities, which included cases where damages for mental suffering were awarded, he set out the words that have been interpreted to be the test at p. 288:

"I would not wish to be taken as saying that aggravated damages could never be awarded in a case of wrongful dismissal, particularly where the acts complained of were also independently actionable, a factor not present here." (emphasis supplied)

[para57] The judgement of Justice McIntyre, as analyzed by the Manitoba Court of Appeal in Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., [1995] 9 W.W.R. 153, a wrongful dismissal case, caused that court to conclude, at 181:

"Thus, any award of damages over the above compensation for breach of contract in failing to give reasonable notice must be founded on a separately actionable course of conduct." (emphasis supplied)

[para58] There is support for this conclusion in cases involving breach of employment contracts coming from other provinces. See: Francis v. C.I.B.C. (1994) 21 O.R. (3d) 75 (Ont. C.A.); Trask v. Terra Nova Motors Ltd (1995), 127 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 310 (Nfld. C.A.); Dooley v. C.N. Weber Ltd (1995), 80 O.A.C. 234. See also comments in H.A. Levitt, The Law of Dismissal in Canada, 2d ed. (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 1994).

[para59] Referring back to the words used by Justice McIntyre it is clear that they: refer to a case of wrongful dismissal; do not totally preclude recovery; and set out a factor that will be important, namely, the existence of facts that are "independently actionable".

[para60] I conclude that Justice McIntyre said that courts have a discretion to award damages for mental suffering in cases of breach of contract but where the nature of the contract is an employment contract a critical factor will be the presence (or absence) of acts that are independently actionable.

"Now we think the proper rule in such a case as the present is this:- Where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, i.e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiffs to the defendants, and thus known to both parties, the damages resulting from the breach of such a contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated. But, on the other hand, if these special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he, at the most, could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in the great multitude of cases not affected by any special circumstances, from such a breach of contract. For, had the special circumstances been known, the parties might have specially provided for the breach of contract by special terms as to the damages in that case; and of this advantage it would be very unjust to deprive them."

[para63] Professor Fridman discusses the rule set out in Hadley v. Baxendale in his text, supra at 711-744, and points out that there are two components to the rule, one objective and one subjective. He says, at p. 719: "The application of the first branch of the Hadley v. Baxendale rule, the objective test, depends upon the nature of the transaction that is involved in any individual case." By contrast, he says at p. 729, that the foundation for the application of the second aspect, the subjective test:

"...is the defendant's knowledge of some special circumstances which would lead him to realize, as a reasonable man seized of that knowledge, that the plaintiff might suffer some extra, extraordinary, or normally unforeseeable damage, beyond or different from the kind or extent of damage which would otherwise be within the 'reasonable contemplation' of the parties."

[para64] The objective part of the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale has undergone some modification through the decisions in Victoria Laundry Ltd. v. Newman Indust. Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 997 (C.A.) and Koufos v. C. Czarnikow Ltd: The Heron II, [1967] 3 All E.R. 686 (H.L.). The discussions and disputes that followed those cases highlighted the tension between the criteria and tests for limiting liability in contract law as contrasted with tort law. See Fridman at 715.

[para65] Justice Wilson, writing for the minority in Vorvis, said that she thought the proper approach to take in deciding a claim for damages for mental suffering was to apply the basic principles of contract law relating to remoteness as set out by Baron Alderson in Hadley v. Baxendale.

[para66] In his text Professor Fridman noted that Hadley v. Baxendale has been the accepted test. As cited by Justice Wilson at p. 297, he said at p. 675 of his second edition (now to be found in the post-Vorvis third edition at p. 736):

"By intangible loss is meant such consequences as loss of reputation, insult, annoyance, aggravation, nervous shock, inconvenience, mental distress, or other emotional or sentimental suffering. In recent years, in England and Canada, there has been a growing realization that such results of a breach of contract should also be the subject of compensation, as long as the doctrine of Hadley v. Baxendale is applicable. There has been a greater acceptance of the idea that such damages can, and should be awarded in appropriate cases." [emphasis added]

[para67] Justice Wilson found a "common denominator" in the cases where damages were awarded, that being that the parties should reasonably have foreseen mental suffering as a consequence of a breach of contract at the time the contract was entered into. She concluded at p. 301:

"It is my view, that the established principles of contract law set out in Hadley v. Baxendale provide the proper test for the recovery of damages for mental suffering. The principles are well-settled and their broad application would appear preferable to decision-making based on a priori and inflexible categories of damage. The issue in assessing damages is not whether the plaintiff got what he bargained for, i.e. pleasure or peace of mind (although this is obviously relevant to whether or not there was a breach), but whether he should be compensated for damage the defendant should reasonably have anticipated that he would suffer as a consequence of the breach."

[para68] Justice Wilson applied the Hadley v. Baxendale analysis to the facts before her and concluded, as had the majority, that there was no basis for granting damages for mental suffering.

[para69] My conclusion is that the determination of a claim for mental suffering or distress in a breach of contract suit must begin with the application of the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale. The rule has within it the means to test and limit liability where the claim arises through special circumstances, which will be the usual case with mental suffering or distress. The contract must be made on the basis of those special circumstances being known to the parties and the plaintiff having communicated them to the defendant. Also, the plaintiff bears the further burden of having to prove the causal link between the breach and the mental suffering or distress and foreseeability of that injury. Damages would be restricted to those that "would ordinarily follow from a breach under the special circumstances so known and communicated." A breach of contract will often result in unhappiness, frustration, inconvenience, anger and even malevolence. The rule is not intended to assure compensation in those cases. The rule allows a court to award damages but does not mandate doing so.

Analysis

[para70] The trial judge found the female respondent, in particular, suffered severe mental distress and the respondents together suffered a total disruption of their lifestyle as a result of the breach of contract. He also found that the special needs and requirements of the respondents with regard to the condominium were well known to a number of individuals, including the owner of the appellant.

[para71] The trial judge was clearly alive to the issue of causation and remoteness of damage. He concluded:

"The mental distress suffered by Mrs. Kempling was caused by the breach of contract by the Defendant. Her distress at losing her "dream home", failing her father, giving up her Calgary employment, moving to Nanaimo, securing a residence in Nanaimo and seeking employment in Nanaimo, plus the direct impact of the breach, were all among the causes of the mental distress. All of these factors are directly linked to the breach of contract and I find as a fact that they were not too remote. I also find that they were not too remote as a matter of law. It was clearly within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that mental distress could follow from this breach of contract."

[para72] The trial judge referred to Taylor v. Gill, supra at 373, where Justice Deyell said:

"It is clearly within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that mental distress could follow the breach of contract."

In coming to his conclusion, Justice Deyell canvassed the many cases where damages for mental suffering were awarded, including cases where the contract involved real estate. He set out a series of questions with which to measure the plaintiffs claim. This is a helpful analytical model but, of course, does not displace the tests enunciated in Hadley v. Baxendale.

[para73] Applying the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale, it is clear that this was a case in which there were special circumstances under which the contract was made which were communicated to the appellant. The respondents proved the link between the breach of contract and the injuries and that it was foreseeable that mental suffering and distress would result. There were damages resulting from the breach which included the mental suffering and the total disruption of lifestyle, and which represented an injury which would "ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated." Thus, all aspects of the rule were fulfilled. The judge quantified the damages at $7,500.

[para75] In the result, the appeal is dismissed.

PICARD J.A.

[para76] HARRADENCE J.A.:-- I agree with my colleague Picard J.A. that this appeal must be dismissed. The learned trial judge did not err in finding that the Appellant breached its contract with the Respondents, nor in his assessment of damages. However, rather than coming to the conclusion that clause twelve of the contract did not contain a true condition precedent, would find that the condition precedent was mutually waived by the parties.

[para77] The relevant portion of clause twelve of the contract, which the Appellant claims is a true condition precedent, reads as follows:

If the Condominium Plan is not registered by January 15, 1990, this Agreement shall be null and void and the Vendor shall return to the Purchaser, without interest, all purchase monies paid, subject to all proper deductions as provided for in this Agreement.

[para78] As Picard J.A. notes, it is the intention of the parties which determines the effect of this clause. But that intention, first and foremost, must be found in the words that the parties chose. Failing any ambiguity, it is not for the Court to look to how the parties acted in order to attribute the proper meaning to the sentence in question. As Gerwing J.A. stated in Canada Safeway Ltd. v. Saskatchewan Joint Board et al. (1988), 74 Sask. R. 152 at pp. 154-5 (C.A.),

It is the most fundamental rule of contractual interpretation that if a contract is clear it must be taken to mean what it says; without inherent ambiguity none of the other rules for construing a contract or adducing further evidence to explain it are relevant.

Here, there is no ambiguity. The registration of the Condominium Plan depended ultimately upon a third party, although it was incumbent upon the Appellant to take all reasonable steps to seek registration. The sentence in question clearly states that the agreement would be "null and void" in the event that registration had not been effected by January 15, 1990. This was a true condition precedent.

[para81] Authority that this may be accomplished by mutual agreement of the parties may be found in Smale v. Van der Weer (1977), 80 D.L.R. (3d) 704 (Ont. H.C.) and Giaouris v. Pristouris (1976), 2 R.P.R. 81 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to the S.C.C. dismissed. In Giaouris, the Ontario Court of Appeal accepted that a waiver of a condition precedent could be effective where the other party's conduct amounted to an "acceptance" of the waiver. Arnup J.A. said at p. 89:

In our view, there was what has been termed in argument an "acceptance of the waiver" by the defendant. In other words, the written document of waiver was treated by the defendant and her solicitor as effective in accordance with its terms. By their subsequent conduct, they represented that the purchase would be closed in accordance with its terms, without reference to the condition precedent...

We therefore hold that having regard to the conduct of the defendant following the delivery of the waiver by the plaintiff of the provisions in the agreement of purchase and sale respecting the obtaining of a mortgage, the defendant cannot now assert that the contract became null and void for non performance or non-fulfilment of the condition in question.

[para82] A more recent case is Harding Addison Properties Ltd. v. Campbell (1992), 28 R.P.R. (2d) 284 (Ont. Ct. Den. Div.). There it was held that both parties to a contract, by their conduct in continuing to treat the contract as though it was not rendered void by operation of a condition precedent, had mutually waived a time requirement for registration of a condominium.

[para83] Another authority which must be mentioned is Westward Farms Ltd. v. Cadieux (1982), 16 Man. R. (2d) 219 (C.A.). In that case O'Sullivan J.A. rejected the argument that a condition precedent had been waived by the parties' conduct. However, there was no evidence there that the condition precedent had been treated as waived prior to the date on which the contract became void for failure of condition precedent. Waiver was held not to be possible after the contract ceased to exist, and there was insufficient evidence that the parties had subsequently reached a new agreement in the same terms as the original.

[para84] Although Alberta courts do not appear to have directly addressed this issue in the context of true conditions precedent, this court in Anguish v. Maritime Life Assurance Company (1987), 51 Alta. L.R. (2d) 376 (C.A.) did accept that contractual rights could be waived by conduct.

[para85] In the present case I have no doubt that the Appellant and the Respondents, by their conduct prior to January 15, 1990 (the date by which the condominium registration had to be effected), mutually expressed their intention to carry out the agreement without reliance upon the condition precedent. The critical factors which require this conclusion are as follows:

- * the contracted possession date was November 1, 1989;
- * delays were experienced from the outset of the project; by early fall of 1989 the Appellant's agent targeted February 1, 1990 as a "new" closing date; * in December, 1989 the Appellant discovered problems with the soil conditions at the building site, delaying the project further;
- * also in December, 1990, according to the testimony of the Appellant's president (at AB pp. 356-8), the controlling shareholder of the Appellant directed the president and employees of the Appellant not to prepare a proposed condominium plan, with a view to retaining "an out clause" (i.e. the condition precedent);

* despite this, the conduct of the Appellant's president and employees was in every way aimed at preserving the agreement with the Respondents; there was no suggestion made to the Respondents that the sale would collapse if registration was not effected by January 15th, 1990; indeed the Appellant's president testified that although they were aware of the condition precedent, they were "dealing in good faith" and "trying to maintain a business deal that we made" (AB p. 357), and there was no expectation of treating the deal as void simply because that date had passed: Now, obviously we couldn't register the plan by January 15th in any way, shape, or form. That was an impossibility. So I wouldn't say that it was -- you know, it would be unfair to Mr. Will [the controlling shareholder of the Appellant] to say that the magic date was the 15th. That if we didn't have the plan registered that suddenly the deal was null and void. (Emphasis added; AB p. 358)

* in the first week of January, 1990, the Appellant's agent indicated that March 31, 1990 would be a more likely possession date; again, the parties clearly demonstrated their intention to carry on with the agreement notwithstanding that there was no expectation of meeting the January 15, 1990 registration condition;

[para86] The conduct of all parties right up to January 15, 1990 was, in short, consistent only with one conclusion: the parties accepted that there was and would continue to be a contract for purchase and sale even after January 15, 1990. True, the Appellant's controlling shareholder knew about and wanted the benefit of being able to take advantage of the condition precedent if it suited him. But the overriding intention of the Appellant, as expressed in the conduct of its officers and employees, was to "go ahead" with the deal without regard to the condition. The Respondents, by their conduct, expressed a similar intention to waive reliance upon the condition. That this was the case was then clearly confirmed by the conduct of the parties after January 15, 1990. This included:

* on January 19, 1990 the Respondents and the Appellant's agents met and set an appointment to discuss and agree on the cost of extras;

* on January 22, 1990 the Appellant's agents proposed in writing to amend the agreement; the Respondents refused to pay an increased price, but did agree with the Appellant on an amount for "extras", as originally contemplated by the agreement; the Respondents were told that the possession date would now be May 1, 1990 and that they would receive a "cleaned up" copy of the contract by January 28, 1990 (which they never received);

* on February 6, 1990 the Respondents, at the arrangement of the Appellant's agent, met with a supplier to choose kitchen cabinets; other work on the unit also continued during late January and early February; * on February 19, 1990 the Appellant again sought to raise the purchase price; the Respondents refused to agree, whereupon they were presented with a letter claiming that the agreement was terminated by virtue of the non-fulfilment of the condition precedent.

[para87] This sequence of events demonstrates that none of the parties were prepared to treat the agreement as coming to an end on January 15, 1990. Before that date, they were anticipating completing the sale (and in consequence pushed the possession date later) even though there was no reasonable expectation that the condominium plan would be registered as required by Clause 12. In the context of the relationship between these particular parties, and given their confirming conduct after January 15, 1990, this amounted to a mutual waiver of the condition precedent.

[para88] On this basis, I find that the learned trial judge did not err in concluding that the Appellant breached the contract in question. As noted above, I agree with Picard J.A. with respect to the question of damages, and with her disposition of the appeal.

HARRADENCE J.A.

[para89] COTÉ J.A.:-- I agree that the rules for damages for mental distress may well be different in wrongful dismissal cases and in other cases. And I agree that such a claim must pass the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale to survive. But whether a plaintiff must pass any other tests (independent cause of action or otherwise) to get such damages, is a more difficult question. I find it hard to discuss that last question in the abstract. It may well depend on the facts or type of case.

[para90] In this appeal, the condominium unit was expressly designed and sold to accommodate an elderly father with special needs. That was not delivered, and the respondent plaintiff was then faced with a father hundreds of kilometres away needing special care which her former residence in Calgary could not give. The trial judge felt that her move to the father's town in British Columbia was a reasonable way to solve that problem. Whether viewed as foreseeable damage, or as reasonable mitigation, I agree that the sum awarded for the move was a reasonable damage assessment. So I do not find it necessary to say whether or not it was also properly allowable as damages for mental suffering.

Re Waterloo North Condominium Corporation No. 198 and Donner

36 O.R. (3d) 243

Ontario Court (General Division), Salhany J., October 21, 1997

APPLICATION for a declaration that a condominium unit-holder was in breach of the condominium's declaration and rules and regulations.

Douglas S. Rose, for applicant. Timothy C. Flannery, for respondent.

SALHANY J.: -- Although the facts are straightforward, the question which must be decided is not. At issue is whether the applicant is entitled to a declaration that the respondent is in breach of s. 3.5 of the condominium declaration and the rules and regulations of the applicant. The facts are these.

The Facts Waterloo North Condominium Corporation No. 198 is located at 6 Willow Street, Waterloo, and is known as Waterpark Place. Section 3.5 of the declaration of the condominium corporation provides as follows:

No dogs or other animals or pets of any nature shall be kept or allowed in any Unit or the Common Elements, including the Exclusive Use Common Elements of any Owner.

Section 12.1 of the declaration goes on to state that all owners, tenants and residents of units shall be subject to, and shall comply with, the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, this declaration, the bylaws and the rules and regulations and that by acceptance of a deed, they have accepted the declaration, the bylaws, rules and regulations.

Section IV of the rules and regulations further states that all residents must comply with the following rules governing pets:

1. No pets shall be permitted kept [sic] on the property;
2. Visitors are not permitted to bring pets into the project;
3. Pets are not permitted in any one of the recreation areas.

The respondent purchased Unit 604 at Waterpark Place pursuant to an agreement of purchase and sale dated March 12, 1989. Under the terms of that agreement, and also the interim occupancy agreement which she signed on the same date, Ms. Donner agreed to abide by the provisions of the proposed declaration, bylaws and rules of the condominium corporation.

Ms. Donner did not immediately move into the condominium unit which she had purchased but rented it out to other tenants. However on November 16, 1996, she advised the applicant by letter that she intended to move into her unit in the spring of 1997 with her mother. In that letter, she advised the applicant that her mother had a dog which her mother needed for assistance because of her total deafness and wanted the dog to live with them. She requested that an amendment be made to the no pet clause due to the circumstances. The applicant responded by memo dated December 10, 1996 denying her request. Despite that denial, the respondent and her mother, along with the subject dog, moved into the unit in March of 1997 and continue to reside in their unit.

The application brought by the corporation is supported by 117 unit owners out of a possible 172 and by the Board of Directors of Waterloo North Condominium Corporation No. 145, a neighbouring condominium which shares common elements with the applicant.

Submissions

Mr. Rose pointed out that the no pet provision is not only contained in the bylaws and regulations of the corporation but also in the declaration dated September 6, 1991, made pursuant to the Condominium Act. He pointed out that a declaration cannot be amended without 100 per cent approval of all of the unit holders. Every unit-holder, he said, bought their unit on the understanding that there would be no pets in the building. Thus, he argued, the restriction is not an unreasonable one and therefore the rights of every unit-owner should be respected. He relied upon ss. 12, 31 and 49 of the Condominium Act. The relevant portion of those sections provides as follows:

12(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(5) Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(3) The corporation, and every person having an encumbrance against any unit and common interest, has a right to the compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

49(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Both counsel agree that this court has the discretion whether to enforce compliance or not, but such discretion must be exercised judicially.

At the outset, Mr. Rose argued that in exercising my discretion, I should not indulge in assessing whether the "no pet" restriction is reasonable. He relied upon the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in York Condominium Corp. No. 382 v. Dvorchik, [1997]. In that case, York Condominium Corporation had applied under s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act for an order directing the unit-holders to comply with a condominium rule which required that no pet weigh more than 25 pounds. Keenan J., who heard the application, found that the "25 pound rule" was invalid and unenforceable in the absence of evidence that (a) "large dogs are any more of a threat to the safety, security or welfare of the owners than are smaller dogs"; or (b) "large dogs unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units any more so than smaller dogs". For those reasons, he dismissed the application. The Court of Appeal said that he erred. The court noted that the board of directors of a condominium corporation derives its authority to make rules under s. 29 of the Condominium Act. The only limitation on the nature of those rules is set out in s. 29(2) which states that the rules be "reasonable" and "consistent" with the Condominium Act. In allowing the appeal and granting the relief requested, the court held that the board was not required to hear evidence in reaching its conclusion that larger pets be prohibited. In making its rules, the board was not performing a judicial role, and no "judicialization should be attributed either to its function or to its process". The court also said that in an application brought under s. 49(2), a court should not substitute its own opinion about the propriety of a rule enacted by a condominium unless the rule is clearly unreasonable or contrary to the legislative scheme. Since the court could not find the rule unreasonable, the appeal was allowed and the order of Keenan J. set aside.

Mr. Flannery argued that the "no pet" restriction is unreasonable in the circumstances of this case and that I should exercise my discretion not to give effect to it. Moreover, even if it is not unreasonable, then the restriction in so far as it relates to Ms. Donner's mother contravenes the Ontario Human Rights Code, R.S.O. 1990, c. H.19, because of her particular disability. Section 11(1) of the Code renders a requirement, qualification or factor constructive discrimination where it "results in the exclusion, restriction or preference of a group of persons who are identified by a prohibited ground of discrimination and of whom the person is a member".

He pointed to s. 2(1) of the Code dealing with harassment in accommodation. That section provides:

2(1) Every person has a right to equal treatment with respect to the occupancy of accommodation, without discrimination because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, age, marital status, family status, handicap or the receipt of public assistance.

Section 10 of the Act defines handicap to include "deafness or hearing impediment". Mr. Flannery submitted that the evidence indicates that Ms. Donner's mother requires the dog to assist her because of her deafness.

Mr. Rose made two points in reply. First of all, he relied upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Herold in Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 776 v. Gifford, [1989] (H.C.J.). There Herold J. expressed doubt that the Human Rights Code applied to a declaration under the Condominium Act. Mr. Rose's main submission, however, was that enforcement of the declaration was not an act of discrimination against the respondent's mother. She was not being asked to leave the condominium. It was her dog that was being asked to leave. Finally, he also argued that the evidence did not support the conclusion that she could not reside in the premises without her dog.

Discussion

In this case, s. 29(1) of the Condominium Act has no application to these proceedings. Section 29(1) deals with rules governing the use of common elements and the units. Section 29(2) requires that such rules "be reasonable and consistent with" the Act, the declaration and the by-laws. We are dealing here with a declaration. The question of the "reasonableness" of the declaration is not an issue that may be attacked. Even assuming that it is an issue, I am not convinced that a "no pet" restriction is unreasonable. Surely those purchasers of a unit who understood that they were buying into a "no pet" building are entitled to have that understanding protected. If the respondent is to succeed in this application, then it must, in my view, be on the basis that the declaration violates the Ontario Human Rights Code.

With respect, I cannot agree with Herold J. that the Code does not apply to a declaration made under the Condominium Act. As McIntyre J. noted in Ontario Human Rights Commission v. Etobicoke (Borough), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 202 at p. 214, 3 C.H.R.R. 781 at p. 785, "[t]he Ontario Human Rights Code has been enacted by the legislature of the Province of Ontario for the benefit of the community at large and of its individual members". The parties are not entitled to contract out of its provisions. To allow the parties to do so would be contrary to public policy. Surely, a declaration prohibiting accommodation based on race, such as a "no blacks" or a "no whites" clause, would offend and not be tolerated by right-thinking members of the Canadian community. It would conflict with the Code, notwithstanding that the unit buyers contracted to live in an "all white" or an "all black" building. I cannot see why handicapped people are entitled to any less protection under the Code. In my view, the Human Rights Code precludes enforcement of the declaration if it would result in the discrimination of Ms. Donner's mother because of her specific handicap.

Mr. Rose argued that the declaration does not prohibit Ms. Donner's mother from living in the condominium, only her dog. The difficulty which I find with that argument is that enforcement of the declaration would effectively prohibit her from living in the building. The evidence is that she is 85 years of age and has been deaf for many years. She is fully dependent on her dog to enable her to function on her own. For example, the dog assists her in hearing the heat alarms, smoke alarms, the telephone, and the intercom if someone is at the door. In other words, it is the dog who hears for her and alerts so that she can function without the assistance of another human being.

In my view, it is not incumbent on Ms. Donner to establish that there are no other ways for her mother to function independently of her without a dog, such as with the hiring of a housekeeper. There is no obligation upon her to exhaust every other means of assistance before she is entitled to the protection of the Ontario Human Rights Code.

It must be clearly understood that by refusing the declaration sought by the applicant, I am not indicating that it is unreasonable and prima facie enforceable. I am only refusing to enforce it because its strict application against Ms. Donner's mother would amount to a breach of the Code. It must also be understood that the dismissal of this application does not entitle the respondent's mother to allow the dog to wander at will in the common areas of the condominium. The present practice of taking the dog out in a tote bag daily for walks must be maintained so that the rights of the other unit-holders may be maintained.

The application will be dismissed, but in the circumstances, without costs.

Application dismissed.

Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al.

59 O.R. (2d) 545

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL GOODMAN, ROBINS AND FINLAYSON JJ.A. 1ST MAY 1987.

APPEAL from a judgment of Hollinger D.C.J. dismissing an action for an order requiring the respondents to remove a satellite dish.

Janice B. Payne, for appellant.

John D. Peart, for respondents The judgment of the court was delivered by FINLAYSON J.A.:-- The appellant, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 ("Carleton Condominium") appeals from the judgment of His Honour Judge Hollinger of the District Court of Ontario, Judicial District of Ottawa-Carleton, requesting that the judgment be set aside and judgment be granted requiring the respondents, Guy Rochon and Sondra Rochon (hereinafter the "Rochons") to dismantle and remove, at their expense, a satellite dish which has been installed by the Rochons upon the common elements of the corporation, namely, the roof of an eight-storey condominium building.

There is an agreed statement of facts, portions of which I will refer to below.

Carleton Condominium is a corporation created by operation of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (sometimes hereinafter "the Act"), by registration of a declaration and description on March 19, 1985. The developer was a company called Melgro Developments Ltd. ("Melgro") and it was the declarant of Carleton Condominium within the meaning of the Act. Prior to this date, purchasers of units from Melgro had received copies of the proposed declaration, by-laws and rules in the current disclosure statement provided for by s. 52 of the Act. Some of the purchasers took occupancy of the units prior to the registration of the declaration.

The Rochons entered into an agreement of purchase and sale dated December 7, 1983, whereby they agreed to purchase from Melgro one of two penthouse units in the proposed condominium. Paragraph 44 of the agreement provided as follows:

The Purchaser shall have the right and on final closing shall receive the consent of the condominium corporation to install a satellite dish on the roof of the building, such dish to be maintained by the Purchaser.

Melgro prepared drawings at the Rochons' expense for the type of support post required for the satellite dish and the method of its installation to the mechanical penthouse of the building. The support post was manufactured and installed by Melgro. The satellite dish was approximately eight feet in diameter and reached a height of approximately 12 feet above the roof. It was installed and has been used exclusively for the benefit of the Rochons.

On the creation of the corporation, the board of directors consisted of representatives of the declarant, Melgro, and that board of directors provided its consent to the installation of the satellite dish by way of a resolution dated March 20, 1985. The motion read as follows:

Upon Motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried, it was resolved that the said Sondra Rochon and Guy Rochon be permitted to install said "satellite dish" on the roof of the building, subject to their obtaining all necessary municipal approvals prior to such installation. Such "satellite dish" to be maintained by the said Sondra Rochon and Guy Rochon. That the Secretary be authorized to issue a consent on behalf of the corporation for such installation.

The by-laws and rules of Carleton Condominium were registered on April 1, 1985, after the installation of the satellite dish. The satellite dish itself was destroyed in a storm on April 6, 1985, and was replaced on April 12, 1985.

On the closing of their purchase on April 30, 1985, the Rochons received, through their solicitor, a consent from Carleton Condominium, signed by the secretary of the corporation and under the seal of the corporation, consenting to the installation of the satellite dish. The consent read as follows:

Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 does hereby consent to the installation of a satellite dish on the roof of the building, such satellite dish to be maintained by Sondra and Guy Rochon, the purchasers of the above-noted unit.

The Rochons did not obtain the consent of the other unit owners in Carleton Condominium either before or after the creation of the corporation. There was no meeting of unit owners to consider such consent and there have been no by-laws, resolutions or approvals for the installation of the satellite dish except as described above. It is agreed that the mechanical penthouse and roof are part of the common elements of Carleton Condominium.

The relevant portions of the declaration of the corporation read as follows:

4.1 Use of Common Elements. Subject to the provisions of the Act, the Declaration, the by-laws and the rules, each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the common elements, except as herein otherwise provided.

Additions, Alterations and Improvements.

4.7.1. For the purposes of subsection 1 of Section 38 of the Act, the Board shall decide whether any addition, alteration or improvement to, or renovation of, the common elements, or any change in the assets of the Corporation is substantial.

4.7.2. No alteration, work, repairs, decoration, painting, maintenance, structure, fence, screen, hedge or erection of any kind whatsoever (the "work") shall be performed, done, erected or planted within or in relation to the common elements (including any part thereof over which any owner has the exclusive use) except by the Corporation or with its prior written consent or as permitted by the by-laws or rules. Units Subject to Declaration, By-Laws, Common Element Rules and Rules and Regulations

9.1.1 All present and future owners, tenants and residents of units, their families, guests, invitees or licencees, shall be subject to and shall comply with the provisions of this Declaration, the by-laws, and any other rules and regulations of the Corporation.

9.1.2 The acceptance of a deed or transfer, or the entering into a lease, or the entering into occupancy of any unit, shall constitute an agreement that the provisions of this Declaration, the by-laws, and any other rules and regulations, as they may be amended from time to time, are accepted and ratified by such owner, tenant or resident, and all of such provisions shall be deemed and taken to be covenants running with the unit and shall bind any person having, at any time, any interest or estate in such unit as though such provisions were recited and stipulated in full in each and every such deed, or transfer or lease or occupancy agreement.

9.4 Conflict. In case of conflict between any provision hereof and the Act, the Act governs. In case of conflict between any provision in any By-law or Rule and the Act or this Declaration, the Act or this Declaration, as the case may be, governs. The invalidity of any part of this Declaration does not affect the validity of the remainder.

The rules of the corporation attached to By-law 1, registered April 1, 1985, had been approved by the board of directors consisting of representatives of Melgro, and by Melgro itself as the owner of all of the condominium units at that time. They provided in part as follows:

1.03 Rules for Use of Common Elements.

(a) The common elements, save and except the parts of the common elements designated for exclusive use by an owner, shall not be obstructed by any owner, his family, guests, tenants, servants, agents or visitors or used by any of the for any purpose other than for ingress and egress to and from their respective units or for such purposes as the Board may direct.

(b) No owner shall place, leave or permit to be placed or left in or upon the common elements, any goods, things, debris, refuse or garbage.

(f) No television antenna, aerial, tower or similar structure and appurtenances thereto shall be erected on or fastened to the outside of any unit.

On May 31, 1985, at a meeting of unit owners called pursuant to s. 26 of the Act, a new board of directors was elected, consisting of three new unit owners who had purchased their units from Melgro. This board of directors made inquiries concerning the satellite dish and formally requested that the Rochons remove it in September of 1985. An application to Judge Hollinger of the District Court for an order requiring the Rochons to dismantle and remove the satellite dish was dismissed. The learned judge was of the view that the consent given to the Rochons on closing, although it violated rule 1.03(f), was valid because 4.7.2 of the declaration read with 9.4 provided for such written consent.

The issue on appeal is whether or not the Rochons, pursuant to either or both the agreement of purchase and sale and the consent of the board of directors granted at a time when the board consisted of representatives of the declarant Melgro, and at a time when the declarant owned all units in Carleton Condominium, had the right to install a satellite dish upon the common elements of the corporation.

The issue is an important one given that so many units in condominiums are sold in today's market before the building is erected. Here we have a classic conflict between the Rochons as unit owners who purchased in good faith and other unit owners who purchased without knowledge of the special arrangements made by the Rochons. To resolve this conflict it is necessary to look at the Condominium Act and determine its purpose and intent.

The Condominium Act was passed to permit individuals to be owners of the freehold estate in residential units in a building as opposed to tenants in an apartment building. This means that they have disposable real property which is an investment and not simply an expense. Its purchase can be financed by mortgage or lien in the same manner as any piece of real estate. The unit owners are tenants in common and have all the rights of any owner of land within the description of their unit (s. 1(1)(q) and (z)). By the nature of the building, there are certain "common elements" which are defined by s. 1(1)(g) as "all the property except the units". It is therefore necessary that there be detailed agreements with respect to the maintenance, operation and occupation of these common elements so that the responsibilities and privileges of each unit owner are clearly established.

To this end, the Act contemplates that a builder or developer shall register under the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 230, or the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 445, what is called a "declaration and description" in "a register" known as the Condominium Register (s. 5(3) and (4)). In addition to the declaration and description, the developer must register by-laws, notices of termination and other instrument respecting the land covered by the declaration and description. These by-laws and the rules contained therein govern, among other things, the rights of the unit owners in the common elements. They are vital to the ownership of the units. Section 6(2) provides that subject to the Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner (of the unit) is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of his unit.

The registration of the declaration and description created Carleton Condominium as a corporation without share capital whose members were the owners of the units from time to time (ss. 10(1) and 1(1)(q)). Section 3(1) sets out what that declaration must contain. Section 3(1)(f) is important for the purposes of this appeal in that it provides for:

(f) a specification of any parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated units and not by all the owners.

Section 3(4) provides that the declaration may be amended only with the consent of all unit owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests. A District Court judge can amend the declaration in limited circumstances (s. 3(8)).

Section 4(1) provides that the description shall contain a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the building, the structural plans, specifications of boundaries and other matters relating to the structure of the building.

As I have said, it is the registration of the declaration and description under s. 10(1) of the Act that creates the corporation. While it has a seal (s. 11(1)) and a board of directors (s. 15(1)), it is not subject to the provisions of the Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 95, and the Corporations Information Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 96 (s. 10(3)).

The object of the corporation is to manage the property and assets of the corporation (s. 12(1)), and the affairs of the corporation are managed by a board of directors elected by the owners consisting of three persons or such greater number as the by-laws may provide (s. 15(1)). The shareholders of the corporation are the owners of the units and all voting by owners is on the basis of one vote per unit (ss. 1(1)(q) and 22(1)). Section 18 of the Act provides that:

18(1) A corporation shall hold an annual meeting of the owners not more than three months after the registration of the declaration and description, and subsequently not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding annual meeting, and at such meeting any owner or any mortgagee entitled to vote shall have an opportunity to raise any matter relevant to the affairs and business of the corporation.

Section 26 provides that the board of directors which is 26(1) ... elected at a time when the declarant owns a majority of the units shall, not more than twenty-one days after the declarant ceases to be the registered owner of a majority of the units, call a meeting of the owners to elect a new board, and such meeting shall be held within twenty-one days after the calling of the meeting.

What is contemplated is that the original developer or declarant, once he has sold off the units to the unit owners, will withdraw from the management of the corporation.

Section 29 of the Act provides that the board may make rules with respect to 29(1) ... the use of common elements and units or any of them to promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements and of other units.

but these rules must be reasonable and consistent with the Act, the declaration and the by-laws.

Section 31 provides that each owner is bound by and shall comply with the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules and that each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with the Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules. It is only under s. 38 that the corporation may by a vote of owners of the units make any addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any change in the assets of the corporation. This section will be dealt with in more detail later.

It appears then, that the creation of the corporation is the filing of the declaration and description which contain some mandatory provisions and some that are permissive. Additionally, by-laws, notices of termination and other instruments respecting the land governed by the declaration and description must be registered as they come into being. Any offer to purchase a unit is made on the basis of the accuracy of the statements made in these registered documents.

Under s. 52 of the Act, there is provision for a disclosure statement which contains a "brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration ...". It also provides for a budget statement for the one-year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and description (s. 52(6)(e)). Section 52(7) requires that the budget statement set out the common expenses and their distribution among the unit owners. Section 52(6)(g) requires disclosure of

(g) any other matters required by the regulations to be disclosed.

Section 52(1) provides that an agreement of purchase and sale entered into after June 1, 1979, by the 52(1) declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

Section 52(2) permits the purchaser to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within 10 days after receiving the disclosure statement.

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound. There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

In Condominium: The Law and Administration in Ontario (1981), by Burns and McLellan, the authors stated at p. 51: The Condominium Act now has provisions designed to protect a purchaser buying a condominium unit from the developer. The provisions of the Act do not give the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations or the Ministry of Housing the authority to "pass on the merits" of a particular condominium development. Instead, the Act is based upon the "full disclosure" philosophy, which presumes that prospective purchasers will be adequately protected if full disclosure of relevant documents and financial information is made to them by developers. This is in sharp contrast to many American jurisdictions which, for the purpose of protecting prospective purchasers, deem the sale of a condominium unit to be the sale of a "security". Consequently, not only is prospectus-type disclosure provided but many jurisdictions have government agencies which pass on the merits of proposed condominium developments. In most of these jurisdictions, no binding agreement of purchase and sale can be entered into until State approval of the project, and form of the agreement and accompanying documents have been obtained.

Coming back to the case on appeal, it follows that the Rochons were not in a position to make the arrangement that they did with the developer for the installation of the satellite dish. This arrangement was not disclosed in the material requiring disclosure and is not binding upon the other unit owners. Indeed, what follows goes further than that. The Rochons are not in compliance with the declaration, description, by-laws and rules and therefore are themselves in contravention of s. 31(4) of the Act which reads:

31(4) Each person in occupation of a proposed unit is bound by all and shall comply with the rules proposed by the proposed declarant where those rules are reasonable and consistent with this Act.

Once the judge of first instance found that the consent given to the respondents on closing violated rule 1.03(f) which is the prohibition against television antennae, etc., that should have been the end of the matter. Number 4.7.2 of the declaration, which he relied on, prohibited certain additions, alterations and improvements to the common elements "except by the Corporation or with its prior written consent or as permitted by the by-laws or rules". Whether these changes are "substantial" or not is determined by the board of directors under 4.7.1. Substantial or not, the erection of such structure as the satellite dish cannot be authorized by the written consent of Carleton Condominium given at a time when it was controlled by the declarant Melgro. Such a consent cannot prevail over the declaration contained in the disclosure statement.

The scheme of the Act is to permit the declarant as "the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in the description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land ..." (s. 1(1)(l)) to create the corporation by filing the said declaration and description (emphasis added). As it sells off the units, it loses control of the corporation to the purchasers who, as the owners of the units, become the new shareholders. I do not believe that the declarant can unilaterally change the declaration, cause the corporation to change it, or excuse individual unit owners from compliance therewith. I am of the view that the consent contemplated by 4.7.2 of the declaration is the consent of Carleton Condominium under the control of the purchasers of the units as the new shareholders.

I am strengthened in this by a reading of s. 38 of the Act, which deals with modifications of common elements and assets. Section 38(1) reads:

38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 percent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

Unit owners are the owners of the freehold in the units (s. 1(q)), while the declarant is the owner of the fee simple in the land. Section 1(1) expressly states that a declarant does not include "a bona fide purchaser of a unit". As I interpret s. 38, it provides that substantial additions, alterations, improvements or renovations to the common elements require the affirmative vote of 80% of the unit owners, while other additions, alterations, improvements or renovations require only a simple majority vote, again, of the unit owners. If the changes are substantial, any dissenting unit owner can compel the corporation to purchase his or her unit and common interest (s. 38(4)).

I say this notwithstanding the language of s. 26(1), which refers to the board of directors "elected at a time when the declarant owns a majority of the units" and also to the declarant's obligation to call a meeting of unit owners after he "ceases to be the registered owner of a majority of the units". I interpret this as meaning that the declarant is only an "owner" of a unit in the sense that as the "owner of the fee simple in the land", he is the only person who can be considered the owner of any unsold units. He can never be a bona fide purchaser of a unit and it is these "unit owners" that the Condominium Act is intended to protect.

Section 26, s-ss. (2) to (4), provide in great detail for the mechanics of the passage of effective control to the bona fide unit owners. The declarant must hand over to the new board of directors, all the corporation's books and records, its corporate seal, its minute books, and any agreements made with the corporation, all its financial records and finally an audited financial statement.

I would have thought that the installation of a satellite dish was a substantial addition, but whether I am right or wrong in this is irrelevant. In the first instance this decision must be made by the board of directors (4.7.1), but in any event, the "consent" referred to in 4.7.2 of the declaration must be a consent obtained through a vote conducted under s. 38(1) of the Act by unit owners. Otherwise, 4.7.2 contravenes the Act which it cannot do by reason of s. 3(5) which provides:

3(5) Where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly.

The respondent relies on the in-house management rules and presumptions of regularity that apply to ordinary corporations, but as I have pointed out, the Corporations Act has been expressly excluded by the Act (s. 10(3)). A condominium corporation is a creature of statute and has no greater authority than as set out in the Condominium Act.

The application considered by Judge Hollinger is authorize by s. 49 which provides:

49(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

The relief sought here is that the Rochons be required to dismantle and remove, at their expense, the satellite dish. While such an order is discretionary (see Re Peel Condominium Corp. No. 73 and Rogers et al. (1978), 21 O.R. (2d) 521, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 581) the learned judge in the application under appeal made his order on the basis of a misinterpretation of the Condominium Act. In view of the fact that it was a significant structure improperly permitted on a common element, I am not persuaded that this is a proper case for this court to exercise its discretion in favour of the respondents. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of His Honour Judge Hollinger and grant judgment requiring the respondents, Guy Rochon and Sondra Rochon, to dismantle and remove, at their expense, the said satellite dish forthwith.

No issue was raised in this appeal as to the good faith of the Rochons who thought that they had bargained properly in entering into the above described arrangement. Additionally, the matter is not without difficulty and lacks clear precedent. For those reasons there should be no costs here or below.

Appeal allowed.

York Condominium Corp. No. 76 v. Rose Park Wellesley Investments Ltd. et al. *

ONTARIO High Court of Justice Reid J. November 9, 1984.

ACTION for damages for repairs to a parking garage.

S. Harvey Starkman, Q.C., and Clifford F. Shnier, for plaintiff.

R. M. Loudon, Q.C., and Daniel R. Dowdall, for defendants.

REID J.:-- Some three million dollars is sought in this action to repair a parking garage and rectify its defects.

The garage lies under residential condominium buildings in a development known as "Crescent Town" located at Victoria Park and Danforth Ave. in the Borough of East York in Metropolitan Toronto.

These buildings comprise three high-rise and three stacked townhouse structures. Mr. Starkman said in opening that the plaintiff York Condominium No. 76 ("York" or "the corporation") is the largest condominium in Canada and described it as "several vertical villages". Its size is indeed impressive. It contains 1,419 dwelling units which are home to some 5,000 people or 5% of the population of the Borough of East York.

The parking garage serving this residential complex is on four levels. It accommodates 1,300 vehicles over an area of 600,000 sq. ft., or about 13 1/2 acres. The top level, referred to as P1 throughout the trial, is on grade but is, for the most part, covered by a landscaped podium deck. At several points the deck was left open to accommodate landscaping directly thereunder. P1 is also open at the sides. The parking accommodation on P1 is, however, entirely under the roof provided by the podium deck.

The next two levels, P2 and P3, are below grade and fully enclosed. Access to and egress from them may be had through large doors directly from the street.

The Crescent Town development, of which the condominium buildings and parking garage are a part, includes other structures which were built for use as rental accommodation and commercial space. We are not concerned with the rental and commercial portions of the development in this litigation. We are concerned solely with the buildings constructed for sale as residential condominium units. They were built in what I shall refer to as the early seventies, construction having been started in late 1970 or early 1971, and completed in 1972.

The declaration creating York was registered in October of 1972. The garage is a "common element", each unit purchaser having, in accordance with the declaration, an interest in it and the other common elements proportionate to the share that his or her unit bears to the totality of all owners' interests.

A brief history of the progress of the action will be useful. The writ of summons was issued in April of 1977. Plaintiffs were originally York and two owners of individual units, Murdoch Glenn McIver and Wayne J. Bryan. The latter two sued on their own behalf and on behalf of all other members of York. Messrs. McIver and Bryan discontinued as plaintiffs as of May 7, 1979. Discontinuances occurred against 30 of the original defendants. An amended statement of claim was delivered in July, 1979. When the statement of defence was delivered as of October, 1979, the parties were as they remained at the opening of trial. That is to say, York, suing on its own behalf, remained as the sole plaintiff and the following were and continued to be defendants: Rose Park Wellesley Investments Limited, Rose Park Howard Investments Limited, Grossman Holdings Limited, Bleeman Holdings Limited and J. Silver Holdings Limited. I am informed that Rose Park Wellesley Investments Limited and Rose Park Howard Investments Limited are part of the Meridian group of companies, and Grossman Holdings Limited, Bleeman Holdings Limited and J. Silver Holdings Limited are part of the Belmont group of companies. These five defendants developed Crescent Town as a joint venture and operated under the name of "Howard Investments" by which term the defendants were referred collectively throughout the trial.

A reply and joinder of issue was delivered in November, 1979. Discoveries were held on the pleadings in the form in which they stood at the opening of trial.

A pre-trial hearing occurred on January 7, 1983. On August 4, 1983, a motion to amend the amount claimed in the statement of claim was allowed by Cromarty J., raising it from $1,500,000 to $5,000,000.

The claim as set out in the statement of claim recites briefly the creation and construction of the condominium buildings and that the defendant developers entered into agreements of purchase and sale with individual unit purchasers. Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the statement of claim are as follows:

6. The developers entered into agreements of purchase and sale with individual purchasers, who, on closing and after registration of the Declaration as aforesaid, became members of the plaintiff corporation and owners of their respective units and appurtenant common elements. The agreements of purchase and sale were standard form contracts prepared by the developers, identical with one another in all respects material to this action.

7. It was an implied term of each of the agreements of purchase and sale that the units and common elements would be completed in a good and workmanlike manner with each component fit for the purpose for which it was intended, either in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted for mortgage financing and municipal building approval, or, where the plans and specifications were themselves deficient or insufficiently detailed, in accordance with good building practice.

Paragraph 8 reads, in part:

8. In fact the project was not so constructed and with respect to the following construction and/or design deficiencies in the parking garage, which is a common element, the plaintiff brings this action.

Then follows a list of specific allegations of construction and design deficiencies. (These are called "items" in para. 10.)

In para. 9 the incurred and future cost of remedying the defects is estimated at $5,000,000.

Paragraph 10 is as follows:

10. The plaintiff pleads that the items in paragraph 8 above constitute breaches of a contractual obligation on the developers, which arises by the operation of S. 9(18) of The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, or S. 14(2) of The Condominium Act, 1978, S.O. 1978, c. 84, whichever is applicable.

Paragraph 11 was an allegation of negligence. It was abandoned at trial.

At the opening of trial plaintiff moved to amend the statement of claim. The proposed amendment would have added the following words to the end of para. 7:

... or in any event without reference to being built in accordance with the said plans and specifications and said good building practice that the common elements would be fit for the purpose for which they were intended, that purpose in this instance being a structure that would be fit for the intended purpose of its use herein as a parking facility free of the requirement of major repairs for a minimum period of twenty-five years to prevent its structural failure.

After hearing lengthy submissions by counsel I refused the amendment. In a word, the refusal was on the ground that it amounted to a new cause of action. Had I allowed it the trial would have had to be further adjourned. The trial, therefore, occurred on the pleadings as they had stood since November, 1979. I hope I may say without offence that plaintiff's counsel appeared, however, to conduct the trial as if the amendment had been made. That was the subject of repeated objection by defendants' counsel. I thought that, for the most part, those objections were justified.

Apart from the damages issue, which I shall deal with later, the defendants contended that plaintiff's status to bring the action is in relation only to the original unit purchasers of which it was acknowledged at least 600 remained at the time the action was commenced. With respect to the claim of implied warranty, defendants rely on cl. 14 in the contract which was a standard form entered into by or on behalf of the defendants and all original purchasers. That clause was referred to throughout the trial as the "exculpatory" clause. It was in the following terms:

14. This offer, when accepted, shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale. There is no representation, warranty or collateral agreement affecting this agreement or the Unit except as set forth herein in writing. As I understood the claim, the damages fell under two general heads. The first was with respect to the "supporting elements". This referred to the deterioration of the reinforced concrete columns and ledges supporting the reinforced concrete slabs which constituted the floor of the four parking levels and the podium deck. It was alleged that the columns and ledges suffered damage as a result of movement of the slabs against the ledges. Faulty construction was said to have caused "keying" at the point of contact between the floor slab and the ledges over a substantial area. When the slab expanded or contracted it exerted pressure on the ledges, causing damage, instead of sliding smoothly on them. I refer to the way in which this deterioration occurred with this particularity to distinguish it from the way in which the deterioration of the floor slabs occurred.

Defendants admitted that the damage to the supporting elements was caused by faulty workmanship on the part of one of their subcontractors. It was, therefore, not necessary for plaintiff to prove either fault or cause. Defendants' admission was made, however, subject to the defences against liability I have described. It was agreed by counsel that the necessary repairs to the supporting elements have been done.

The second head of damage related to the deterioration of the parking slab itself. This was described as "spalling" and "delamination". Briefly put in non-technical terms, spalling is a generally superficial pitting or scaling of the surface of the concrete. Delamination is a more severe condition caused by rusting of the reinforcing steel bars imbedded in the concrete slabs which can result in the fracturing of the slab.

I have said that plaintiff abandoned any claim in negligence. For their part, defendants abandoned a defence of merger raised in the statement of defence and so I was not called upon to consider either of those issues.

A reference to the master with respect to damages was claimed in the statement of claim and one was agreed to by counsel, according to the endorsement of the pre-trial judge, subject to certain issues to be decided at trial. However, counsel at trial urged me to dispose of all issues, if possible, including damages, and I have borne that in mind in considering my decision.

Counsel entered into an agreement with respect to certain facts. That agreement and a supplement were reduced to writing and furnished to me. I had some difficulty interpreting those documents and they were the subject of some discussion during the trial and at least one amendment. I do not think, however, that anything turns on what I thought to be some opacity in the documents. Since they formed the basis upon which the parties proceeded it would appear appropriate to have them available for possible future reference and I direct the registrar to enter them as exs. "A" and "B" for identification.

I had some difficulty in understanding precisely what was the basis for plaintiff's claim. Mr. Starkman referred to three heads of damages in his opening address and added to the two I have set out above, a claim for "leakage through the expansion joints". I first took that to be an allegation that the developers had failed to provide sealant for the expansion joints in the floor slabs. However, from the dosing submissions of plaintiff's counsel I took it to be conceded that the sealant had been installed. The claim thus became that the sealant had not been properly installed or did not last for a sufficient period of time.

The status issue

The first issue to be addressed is status. Plaintiff rests on s. 9(18) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77. That Act was repealed and replaced by the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84. Section 9(18) is now reflected in s. 14 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, in a substantially different form. It will be remembered, however, that the writ in this action was issued in 1977. Counsel agreed that s. 9(18) and the Act, as they stood in 1977, are the relevant provisions. Section 9(18) reads:

9(18) Any action with respect to the common elements may be brought by the corporation and a judgment for the payment of money in favour of the corporation in such an action is an asset of the corporation.

This provision and its context have been considered in a number of judgments of this court. They are: Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1974), 3 O.R. (2d) 331, 45 D.L.R. (3d) 347, York Condominium Corp. No. 104 et al. v. Halliwell Terrace Ltd. et al. (1975), 12 O.R. (2d) 46, York Condominium Corp. No. 161 et al. v. Deltan Realty Ltd. (1976), 3 C.P.C. 27, York Condominium Corp. No. 148 v. Singular Investments Ltd. (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 31, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 61, 2 R.P.R. 24, York Condominium Corp. No. 228 et al. v. Tenen Investments Ltd. et al. (1977), 17 O.R. (2d) 579, 6 C.P.C. 185, Loader et al. v. Rose Park Wellesley Investments et al. (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 381, 114 D.L.R. (3d) 105, 17 C.P.C. 150.

Apparently as a result of the decision in Loader the two individual unit-owner plaintiffs discontinued and, so far as the claim was asserted as a class action, that was discontinued as well. It is no longer a class action, as that term is normally used.

Plaintiff's counsel submitted that s. 9(18) furnishes a "statutory cause of action", yet submitted also that it stems from and rests upon the contracts entered into between the original unit purchasers and the developers. Mr. Starkman conceded that if none of the original purchasers had retained ownership of a unit there would be no basis for the action. His position was that there were some 600 continuing original unit purchasers who were, in May, 1983 (the date borne by ex. "A"), and therefore, at the time the action was commenced, members of the condominium corporation. That figure was accepted by defendants' counsel. Thus, according to Mr. Starkman, the necessary foundation exists.

As I understood Mr. Starkman's submission, it was that the statute placed the condominium corporation in the shoes of the original purchasers with the result that York was, in effect, entitled to assert their contractual rights. He went further than that, however, in arguing that York could assert the same kind of claim on behalf of subsequent owners, that is to say, persons who purchased units from the original purchasers, notwithstanding that the members of the latter group had no contractual relationship with the developers. The effect of this was, Mr. Starkman submitted, that York is in a position to claim as damages the entire amount of expense to which York had been or would be put pursuant to its statutory obligation to maintain the buildings, without any reduction in recognition of the fact that only 600 or so of the 1,400 original purchasers remained as owners, and therefore, as members of the corporation at the time the writ was issued.

Furthermore, it was plaintiff's contention, as I understood it, that the measure of damages was the amount already expended by York for repairs and the amount that York would require for future repairs. No regard should be had for the fact that in order to pay for repairs already undertaken York had made assessments against its members over a substantial period of time and that numerous owners had been called upon to pay over to York an aggregate amount in respect of each unit totalling about $1,200. It was not revealed who of these were original or, alternatively, subsequent purchasers nor how much anyone had paid in that way. In Mr. Starkman's submission the making and payment of assessments was nihil ad rem to the lawsuit. In particular, the assessments were not to be taken into consideration in the calculation of damages.

Plaintiff's submission appears to rest heavily upon the decision of Cromarty J. in the first case in which the effect of s. 9(18) was considered. That was Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi, supra. There Cromarty J. concluded that the section was "procedural only" and was enacted to overcome a perceived difficulty. Section 7(1) of the Act read:

7(1) The owners are tenants in common of the common elements. Subsection (2) of that section read:

7(2) An undivided interest in the common elements is appurtenant to each unit.

Cromarty J. observed that as a tenant in common each unit owner would be entitled to claim only for the damages suffered with respect to his or her share in the common elements. This would lead to "chaos", for in order to mount a claim for the totality of any alleged damage to the common elements, each unit owner would have to commence his or her own proceedings. As I understand the decision, Cromarty J.'s view was that s. 9(18) was enacted simply to avoid that difficulty and to enable the claims of all owners to be asserted in one action. The corporation was simply a "conduit" through which the owners' rights could be asserted in relation to the common elements, but the claim ultimately had to rest upon rights of the owners.

Having concluded that the plaintiff can properly sue for any shortcomings in the common elements, it must then be shown that it has some cause of action upon which to sue.

It seems to me that the cause of action must be found in one or more of the owners of the common elements.

If none of them had a cause of action then there would be nothing upon which the plaintiff could bring action.

Cromarty J. did not have to deal with claims by subsequent owners. I understand plaintiff to depend upon the decision of Mr. Justice Gray in Loader v. Rose Park, supra, to support the contention that the condominium corporation may represent subsequent owners on the same basis as if they had been original owners. Loader dealt with an issue not before me, i.e., whether a class action lies, but it contains certain observations that suggest that s. 9(18) is not confined to serving procedural convenience but in some way confers on subsequent owners a right of action in contract. That would place them in the same position, qua defendants, as original, continuing, purchasers.

With respect, I am unable to read the section as going that far. Gray J. was clearly of the view that s. 9(18) was intended to facilitate claims by the unit owners with respect to common elements, and in that he demonstrated his concurrence with Cromarty J.'s classification of the section as procedural. But he went further than that in expressing the view that the rights which could thereby conveniently be asserted were not just those of the original owners but of all owners. Thus, both original and subsequent owners could claim in an action brought by the corporation; it was not to be confined to the "select group" of original purchasers (see report, p. 390 O.R., p. 114 D.L.R.).

My difficulty stems from the fact that Gray J. did not describe or explain what was the nature or source of the "right" to be asserted on behalf of a subsequent owner. In Frontenac, Cromarty J. held that if the original purchasers had no cause of action the corporation had none. Thus, the source of the rights to be asserted was the contractual relationship between original purchasers and developers or an implication arising from it, by way, say, of warranty.

Plaintiff relied on Loader for a reading of s. 9(18) that would confer not only a procedural facility for those who had existing rights to assert independent of the statute but new substantive rights on those who had none, i.e., contractual rights without any contract. To place the subsequent owners in the same position as original purchasers it would be necessary to create a fictional contract written in the terms of the one common among the original purchasers and the defendants. The effect of that would be not only to create contractual rights where none existed, in favour of subsequent owners, but to create contractual obligations on the developers where none existed.

It may be that the Ontario Legislature has the capacity to enact such extraordinary legislation but I cannot read the legislation before me as either achieving that result or disclosing an intention to do so. So remarkable a departure from the principle that those who are not parties to a contract have neither rights nor obligations stemming from it can be, and has been, achieved by statute on occasion -- I can think of one -- but that occasion has been rare and the legislative intent has been spelt out in clear terms. I find nothing in s. 9(18) or in its context in the statute that either demands or would justify such an interpretation.

In short, I accept Cromarty J.'s interpretation of the section, with the result that the only substantive claims that York may assert are claims that stem from a contract or some other source outside the statute. No suggestion is made in this case that any claim exists apart from the contracts. Indeed, the statement of claim makes it clear that plaintiff relies only upon the provisions of the common-form contract, and terms that should be read into it by implication.

I can find no cause of action existing on behalf of subsequent owners. Cromarty J. saw the corporation as a conduit for the assertion of claims of original purchasers. A consistent view is that the corporation is agent for the unit owners: Burry et al. v. Centennial Properties Ltd.; Modern Construction Ltd. et al., Third Parties (1979), 38 N.S.R. (2d) 473. I do not think it is necessary in this case to go further into the concept of agency, for I am satisfied with the "conduit" classification, save to repeat that the agency here is confined to the original purchasers as principals.

This view is significant in relation to the question of damages. Briefly, it means that any recovery made by plaintiff would be confined to damages suffered by original purchasers and flowing from breach of contract. I shall deal with that more fully later.

On the basis of the foregoing the plaintiff has status to bring this action for, in light of counsel's agreement already mentioned, 600 original purchasers or more were members of the corporation at the time the action was commenced.

The effect of the exculpatory clause

Since the basis for the claim lies in the contracts I must next consider the effect of the exculpatory clause. For convenience I repeat it here.

14. This offer, when accepted, shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale. There is no representation, warranty or collateral agreement affecting this agreement or the Unit except as set forth herein in writing.

As I understand the law it is simply that, to be effective, an exculpatory clause must be in clear terms. In other words, there must be no doubt about the extent to which the person claiming the benefit of the clause has limited his liability. See the following: Hancock et al. v. B.W. Brazier (Anerley), Ltd., [1966] 2 All E.R. 901 (C.A.), Fraser-Reid et al. v. Droumtsekas et al., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 720, 103 D.L.R. (3d) 385, 9 R.P.R. 121 (S.C.C.), Hansen v. Twin City Construction Co. Ltd. et al. (1982), 136 D.L.R. (3d) 111, [1982] 4 W.W.R. 261, 24 R.P.R. 42 (Alta. Q.B.).

Plaintiff submitted that para. 14 is insufficiently broad because it refers specifically only to units, whereas the claim relates not to units but to common elements. There is certainly no explicit reference to common elements. Therefore it was submitted that it fails to exculpate the defendants and, in particular, fails to offset the implied warranties of good workmanship and materials and fitness for the purpose plaintiff claims.

When one looks at the contracts as a whole, it is apparent that the acquisition of an interest in the common elements was concomitant with the acquisition of an ownership interest in a unit. Paragraph 1 of the contract referred to a purchase and sale of "the lands and premises ... known as condominium unit # together with the common elements appurtenant thereto ...". The "purchase and sale" referred to in para. 14 is of a unit and common elements. The agreement thus includes the common elements. The exclusion does not refer merely to the unit; it covers "the agreement". The reference to the unit seems to have been added to ensure that it was included. Otherwise, it is mere surplusage. I cannot read the reference to the unit as disclosing an intention to confine the operation of the paragraph to the unit, in light of the broader reference to the agreement. In my opinion, therefore, the exculpatory clause is plainly intended to refer to the common elements as well as the units. There is no ground for holding it not to be effective. That would be enough to dispose of the action. In recognition of the importance that the issues raised in the action have, according to counsel, for many persons not parties to the action and the fact that at least some issues are novel, I will go on to deal with other issues.

The implied warranties

I have already set out the part of the statement of claim relating to the implied warranties. At trial, plaintiff's counsel contended for a "three-fold warranty" in the following terms:

9. Where a contractor agrees to construct a house or other residential premises, the following threefold warranty arises by implication:

- (1) he will do his work in a workmanlike manner;
- (2) he will supply good and proper materials; and
- (3) the house will be reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was constructed.

Whether or not such warranty exists here, it is worth noticing that the warranty claimed in the statement of claim is a narrower one. It is for good work and materials and that the work would be fit for the purpose in accordance with the plans and specifications or, where they were deficient, in accordance with good building practice. I am unable to find in the cases cited as support for this any reference to any such warranty.

However, leaving aside any difference between the warranty claimed in the statement of claim and that which is said to arise on the cases cited, and assuming for the purpose of discussion that a warranty exists on either basis, it is clear that it cannot be relied upon by any person other than a signatory to the contract. Thus, it can be asserted only on behalf of original purchasers. Any doubt about that is settled by para. 16 of the contract, which provided:

16. This agreement is non-assignable by the Purchaser.

I know of no law or principle that would extend a warranty beyond the original purchase. Furthermore, in this case, the contracts were provided to be non-assignable. Thus, the subsequent owners could not derive any claim from an implied warranty even if it existed.

Again, assuming that the warranties might or do arise in the circumstances of this case, as I have already indicated, they are displaced wholly and are rendered ineffective by the exclusionary clause contained in the contract.

Even if I were to hold that the "three-fold warranty" contended for by plaintiff did exist here, and had not been nullified by the exclusionary clause, I would be compelled on the evidence to hold that it had not been breached. Plaintiff complained that defendants failed to follow the plans and specifications and the prevailing building standards. The first claim got down at trial to a claim that the plans had not been adhered to in only one respect, that was that the parking slab lacked, over some or all of its surface, the 1% slope or grade called for by implication in the plans. The significance of this, in terms of damages, was said to be that drainage was inadequate and that "ponding" occurred on the slab which, in turn, hastened or intensified the delamination process by concentrating salt water in the ponds.

With respect to that claim the evidence indicated that the ponding occurred over only a minor fraction of the total floor area -- a report made by Dr. Tay to York in 1981 put it at 1.6% of floor area -- and that it did not occur so much near the columns, where the greatest amount of delamination occurred, as elsewhere on the slab. I am far from satisfied that the required slope was not installed, or at least not installed generally. Even if in some areas it was inadequate it was not of great significance to this lawsuit. The ponding could, and in my opinion should, have been dealt with at an early point after Dr. Tay's 1977 report, as it was eventually, by the relatively simple and inexpensive measure of installing drains.

With respect to the alleged failures to follow the prevailing standards, plaintiff relies on the interpretation of the relevant sections of the National Building Code of Canada governing the design of reinforced concrete structures made by its witnesses, notably Dr. David Tay. That interpretation would have required defendants to have laid more than the three-quarters of an inch of concrete "cover" over the reinforcing steel bars in the parking slab and to have "air-entrained" the concrete used for the slab. I had some difficulty in grasping how much cover it was claimed should have been laid but I took Mr. Shnier's closing submission to be to the effect that it should have been two inches.

I must in frankness say that I found Dr. Tay's interpretation strained. It was not readily apparent to me from a reading of the relevant sections of the Code on which Dr. Tay relied; indeed, it seemed to be at odds with a literal reading of those sections. Dr. Tay's interpretation might, however, have been feasible if the condition that he presumed existed in the early seventies when these buildings were designed and built, in fact, did exist. That was a general acceptance by those in the high-rise apartment building industry and the engineers and others advising them that salt-laden snow carried by cars into the parking garages under a building such as this would ultimately cause delamination of parking slabs. I am unable to make any such finding.

There were two principal proponents of opinion called before me on the essential questions of the design and construction of the subject buildings. They were Dr. Tay for plaintiff and Mr. John Aubrey Bickley for defendants. I intend no disrespect when I say that on every essential point I prefer the opinion of Mr. Bickley. The range and depth of his knowledge of concrete technology and experience with the problems relevant to this litigation placed him in a much better position than any other person who testified on the subject to describe the state of knowledge when these buildings were designed and built in the industry to which defendants belonged. His opinions were rooted in personal experience during the late sixties and early seventies whereas neither Dr. Tay nor any other expert called by plaintiff had any comparable experience. Having been involved in the drawing of standards for the use of concrete and monitoring their effect he was in a better position than any other witness to testify about how they were interpreted generally at the relevant time. I was greatly impressed with his stature in his profession, the remarkable range of his studies, his contribution to the developing knowledge of the phenomenon of delamination, and to his accomplishments generally in his special field of concrete materials. I was thus greatly impressed with the quality of his testimony. I have, in fact, seen few witnesses with whom I have been more impressed. His attitude was impartial and his evidence was unaffected in any substantial respect by cross-examination. I would unhesitatingly prefer his opinion to any other offered at trial on the general interpretation of the Canada Building Code at the relevant time, and the general state of knowledge, or lack of it, in the industry regarding delamination in apartment garages and on what were good building practices at the time.

On the basis of his evidence I hold that defendants constructed the buildings in accordance with the generally prevailing interpretation of the building code among responsible architects, engineers and builders. I hold further that no general realization occurred of the delamination problem now seen as endemic until well after these buildings were constructed. This amounts to specific acceptance of Mr. Bickley's opinion that the phenomenon of delamination in residential parking garages was not general among responsible builders and those advising them until the mid-seventies.

Much support for Mr. Bickley's views is found elsewhere. They are consistent with the evidence of Mr. Gerald A. Garshon, of the firm of Jablonsky and Associates, Consulting Engineers, and Mr. Donald Clark, of Maysfield Property Management, both of whom I found to be candid, credible, impartial and impressively experienced and accomplished.

Finally, I think it would be improbable that Mr. Bickley's views were not shared by responsible engineers and builders generally at the time. Whatever else is urged by plaintiff about the way in which the buildings were constructed there is no support for a suggestion that an attempt was made to skimp. Defendants engaged reputable architects and engineers, respectively James A. Murray and George A. Jarosz, as architects, and D. Law Consultants and D. Grossman Associates as engineers. The design and construction of the buildings were subject to the approval of the Ontario Housing Corporation, which had granted a mortgage for over $30,000,000 to the defendants to facilitate the Ontario Government's "Home Ownership Made Easy" programme. That corporation's inspectors kept an office on the building site and, according to the evidence, they maintained a watchful eye as well. The design and construction obviously met the prevailing standards of the Borough of East York. It would be exceedingly odd, in my opinion, if those persons did not generally share Mr. Bickley's interpretation of the building code and the lack of foreknowledge of the delamination phenomenon to which he testified. Their contributions to the design and construction of the project, and their general approval of it, are consistent with Mr. Bickley's views and at odds with Dr. Tay's.

Beyond that, Mr. Bickley's interpretation of the building code is consistent with that of the Interpretation Committee of the Canadian Standards Association. Dr. Tay conceded that the committee's rulings were contrary to his view. Mr. Bickley, while a member of the committee, participated in the first ruling but did not take part in the ruling expressing the committee's final interpretation.

While not binding, it is nevertheless of interest that Mr. Bickley's evidence "that in 1974 engineers were just becoming aware of the problems (of delamination) in parking structures" was accepted by Mr. James Chadwick, arbitrator, in the matter of Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 145 and Urbanetics Ltd. in his award dated August, 1983. My own impressions are consistent with Mr. Chadwick's. In the matter before him, which involved similar issues to those before me, Mr. Chadwick observed that Dr. Tay was "attempting to interpret the 1967, 1970 and 1973 standards based upon the knowledge which is present in the industry today and also on the basis of what the law should be rather than what the law was at that time". He also made a general observation, which my experience in this trial tends to confirm, that "where the evidence of Dr. [sic] Bickley differs from that of Dr. Tay, I prefer Dr. Bickley's evidence in view of his vast experience, both in the investigation of these problems and also in his written materials and lectures on the subject".

"Delamination" is a disease that it is now realized will attack or has attacked many, or even most, of the high-rise residential parking garages built in Canada in the early seventies. Mr. Bickley has had to revise earlier estimates of the total damage done to these structures; he now places it at between two and three billion dollars. He concedes that his profession might have but did not foresee the problem before it occurred, because delamination had already been recognized as a problem with another reinforced concrete structure, the motorway bridge-deck. Yet it does not seem to have been apprehended even in relation to commercial parking garages, for the practice of applying an impermeable "membrane" of rubberized or other material to the surface of the slab was intended to prevent leakage through them rather than head off delamination. It is a lamentable fact that recognition of the problem by the engineering profession in relation to residential parking garages did not occur until at least the mid-seventies. That was too late for Crescent Town.

Having said that I accept Mr. Bickley's views and why, I think it might be enlightening for anyone who might read these reasons if I repeat some extracts from a report dated February 29, 1984, prepared for counsel by Trow Ltd., Mr. Bickley's firm, and admitted at trial, as ex. 70, as "Mr. Bickley's report". While his oral evidence might not have duplicated these words exactly, it did not depart in substance from them. The extracts follow:

Before entering upon the detailed discussion however, we wish to advise that as a result of our investigation, we have determined that the situation at the Crescent Town garage is far from unique. There are literally hundreds of buildings which are suffering the same difficulties which are for the most part caused by de-icing salts brought into the garages on the undercarriage of automobiles. The deterioration associated with this phenomenon has reached epidemic proportions throughout Canada such that there are few if any structures of an age similar to the Crescent Town garage which are not evidencing similar problems.

We are in essential agreement with the engineers for the Condominium Corporation with respect to the technical reasons for the occurrence of the delamination. The delamination occurs as a result of tensile forces created by the corrosion of the reinforcing bars embedded in the concrete. This corrosion results from de-passivation of the concrete around the reinforcing bars by a salt solution. The salt solution is introduced to the garage when road salts are brought into the garage in the form of ice on the undercarriage of cars and subsequently drops off the cars as the ice melts.

The destructive effect of the introduction of such salts to parking structures is only now becoming fully understood by engineering professionals. In our view, this phenomenon was not understood at the time of the design of the Crescent Town garage in 1969 nor its construction in 1971.

What the above makes clear is that there was no general appreciation of the destructive effect of road salts on reinforced concrete structures until relatively recently. Even in the area of bridge decks, where the problems are most severe, the nature of the problem was not fully appreciated at the time of the design or building of Crescent Town. Indeed, it appears that it was not until the very end of the 1970's that the nature and extent of the problems likely to occur in parking structures became apparent. Although new design and materials are now being employed to combat these problems and produce more durable structures, there still continues to be no universally applicable or accepted standards governing design or repair of these structures.

The design of the Crescent Town Garage represents the standard design for structures of this type and age in Ontario. With hindsight it is easy to say that this design has not proved as durable as one would have wished. This is not unique to this garage, but in fact almost all garages of this age and many others which are significantly newer are showing similar levels of distress. In order to give some flavour of the magnitude of this problem, I enclose as Schedule 5 to this report an article which I have published entitled "The Nature, Extent and Impact of Residential Parking Structure Deterioration".

On the subject of the depth of concrete cover the report said, in part:

This issue relates to the amount of concrete which is placed over the reinforcing steel. The hypothesis is that the more concrete which is placed over the reinforcing the longer it will take for any corrosive effect to occur. The design of Crescent Town calls for concrete cover of three-quarters of an inch. This requirement was the standard for construction of parking garages at this time. We are aware of no similar indoor parking structures built in this time framework that had more than three-quarters of an inch cover specified. This is in conformance with the Canadian Standards Association ("C.S.A.") requirement for internal concrete slabs.

There is some suggestion that in the reports submitted by the Plaintiff's engineer that this cover should have been two inches. This is applying hindsight to the situation. No designer at the time of the construction of Crescent Town would have provided two inches of cover. Even today, with the greater recognition of the entire problem, a requirement of two inches is not universally accepted by all structural engineers.

With respect to air-entrainment, the report said, in part:

While it is now recognized by many professionals that air entrained concrete also has slightly higher resistance to the problems associated with de-icing salts, it cannot even today be said that it is usually accepted among engineers that the use of such concrete is necessary in below grade parking structures.

The degree to which air entrainment increases the resistance of concrete to damage associated with de-icing salts has not been the subject of study to date. In my opinion, based on only general observations, I would suspect that air entrainment would only act to defer such damage for a short period.

Mr. Bickley disagreed, therefore, that air entrainment was required or would have been of much effect with respect to the parking slab although he said (as will be seen) that he would have air-entrained the concrete used in places exposed to the elements, such as the podium deck.

In the course of his review of reports prepared by engineers who had been retained by plaintiff, which were prepared under the supervision of Dr. Tay, Mr. Bickley's report observed:

GENERAL COMMENTS ON THE MORRISON REPORT

From our review of the reports filed by Morrison, it is our view that they are attempting to apply design standards to Crescent Town which, while appropriate in modern day construction, were not conceived of at the date of the design of Crescent Town. The difficulty with concrete delamination associated with de-icing salts was in its infancy at the time of the design of Crescent Town. If such knowledge existed at that time it related to bridge decks which were considered by engineers to be a much more severe application. It was not until the end of the 70's that the problem with parking garages began to be appreciated.

This fact is evident from Morrison's own reports. It is of note that they fail to ascribe any great importance to water ponding in the garage in the 1977 report. Their complaints about cover are not related to a general failure to provide two inches of cover, but relate only to isolated areas where the three-quarter inch cover specified had not been achieved. They failed to link the visible pot-holes to any significant systemic deterioration. Although all of the elements which are now complained of were readily apparent to Morrison in 1977, they failed to identify the garage as a likely candidate for delamination and indeed, make no suggestion for any kind of delamination survey. These facts simply go to demonstrate that Morrison, as most engineers in this time framework, themselves failed to appreciate the problems which were about to become apparent in parking garage structures.

In light of the development of this understanding Morrison's failure to appreciate this problem is understandable. Indeed, methods of detecting delamination were only in their infancy at this point in time. Published articles indicate that it was only in the mid 1970's that the process of chain-dragging had been determined as an effective means of discovering delamination.

Our firm first began to employ this technique in garage investigations in 1975. This was as a result of our experience with the M.T.C. and their bridge deck investigations. This did not become standard procedure in our investigations until 1977, about the time that Morrison was doing his report.

CONCLUSION

It is our conclusion that the intermediate slabs in the Crescent Town Garage are, with one exception, in compliance with all the Code requirements for durability in force at the time of construction.

At the time of the construction of this building, there was no understanding in the engineering community as to the impact on parking garages of de-icing salts which would be introduced to the garage by the undercarriage of cars. This problem indeed did not become associated with parking garages until the late 1970's and has only recently become widely understood in engineering circles, largely as a result of the necessity to make large scale repairs such as those undertaken by the Condominium Corporation in this case.

The only apparent failure relates to air entrainment on the podium and P1 levels. As this level is above grade and exposed to freeze-thaw cycling, it is our view that air entrained concrete ought to have been used at this level. The concrete actually used however, appears to be of good quality and strong. From our observations, we are unable to say that the failure to employ air entrained concrete at this level has materially altered the amount of damage done. It is of particular note that the degree of delamination encountered on the P1 level is virtually the same or less than that suffered on the P2 level which, as an interior slab, was not required to be air entrained.

It is also apparent that the Condominium's failure to take prompt remedial steps has increased the cost of repairs substantially. Had the proper studies and repairs been undertaken in 1977, the amount of delamination would have been considerably less. Working from the data achieved on other jobs, the only data available would seem to indicate that the level of delamination in 1977 would have been between 1/4 and 1/3 of that subsequently repaired. In the same vein, it is our view that by failing to take core samples to determine the depth of the delamination, before calling tenders for repair, the Condominium lost the advantage of a competitive tender for the repairs contemplated by their first contract.

It is also our view that even if air entrained concrete had been provided, its impact upon the damage would have been marginal. The delamination may have proceeded slightly more slowly, but in our view the same level of damages presently encountered would have been encountered within as few as two years later than what actually occurred.

The drainage problem has also contributed to the difficulty. The cost of remedying this problem would have been very small to the Condominium Corporation in 1977. From what appears to be a failure by the engineers to understand the importance of this problem, nothing was done. In our view, this reflects the overall lack of understanding in the engineering community of this whole phenomenon. Had there been proper drainage from the beginning, the level of damage occurring at the time of repairs would have been significantly less.

Similarly, both increased cover and a waterproof membrane would have increased the time before which repairs would be necessary. It would also significantly increase the initial cost of the building. In addition to the extra amount of concrete required to increase the amount of cover a substantial increase in reinforcing steel would also be necessary producing a significantly different structure.

It is to be noted however, that the matter such as increased cover and waterproofing and to a lesser degree, air entrainment present a developer with a significant/cost benefit decision. The savings associated with omitting such detail may, when considering the value of money over time, be greater than the costs of making repairs in the future even when such costs are as extensive as those made by the Plaintiff in the present case.

While some adequate waterproofing systems were available in the early 1970's the need to use them was not recognized.

In my view, those conclusions are both justified and fair and reflect a creditable objectivity and impartiality.

I, therefore, hold that there was no failure on the part of defendants to follow the plans or specifications or any prevailing building standard or good building practice. Perhaps because of the impressive weight of evidence that the buildings were designed and constructed in accordance with good building practice plaintiff's counsel ultimately submitted that purchasers were entitled to get something better for their money than good business practice, but I cannot find any support in law for that proposition.

Even if I were to have found that defendants should have air-entrained the concrete or added deeper cover or both, I very seriously doubt if that would have been significant. I doubt, with Mr. Bickley, that these measures would have prevented the occurrence of delamination, although it might have been slowed. The evidence makes it clear that no final "cure" has yet been discovered. Waterproof membranes placed on top of the slab seem to be favoured in present practice yet consciousness of the horrifying proportions of the delamination problem across Canada has led builders and their advisers to adopt not just one but a number of methods concurrently in a "belt and braces" attempt to avoid the problem. There was no claim in this lawsuit that defendants were at fault for not having installed a waterproof membrane over the entire area of the slab. No claim of that type could have been sustained on the evidence for it was proven that the installation of such a membrane in this kind of structure was a rare exception and far from the norm. A claim that the waterproof membrane required by the specifications was not installed in certain areas, such as under landscaping, failed for it was conclusively proven that the required membrane was installed: I refer particularly to the evidence of Mr. Wm. D. Jones, which I accept. Similarly, a claim that the concrete was of poor quality, or that the mix should have been drier, was not sustainable on the evidence.

Notwithstanding the refusal of the amendment plaintiff sought at the commencement of trial, plaintiff sought to prove that in some way there was an implied warranty of "fitness for the purpose" in the sense that the purchasers of units were entitled to have freedom from the need for "serious" or "substantial" repairs to the common elements for a period of 25 years. That claim could perhaps be disposed of on the pleadings, which failed to reveal any such claim, but even if it were open to plaintiff to assert it I can find no support for it either in law or on the facts. It may be, and I think it probably was the case, that both the original purchasers and the defendants expected the building to be free of the need for substantial repairs for 25 years or so but that expectation did not and could not take into account the prospect of delamination, unknown in this context to the parties at the time.

On the issue of damages, defendant submitted that plaintiff has been guilty of delay and thus failed in its obligation to mitigate. It is true that Dr. Tay's first formal report to plaintiff was made in 1977, and that no substantial repairs were undertaken by York until some five years later. It is also true that all experts accept the exponential rate of increase of delamination left unattended which grows, like a cancer, with increasing speed. Thus, it was submitted, plaintiff by its failure to act promptly permitted the damage to exceed greatly its extent in 1977.

I accept that the repairs required for the slab are far greater than they would have been had plaintiff acted sooner. I doubt if the same can be said about the supporting elements. However, notwithstanding Dr. Tay's opinion that plaintiff was adequately alerted to the nature of the problem with the slab and the need for prompt action to deal with it by his report and advice given at the time, I see much significance in the fact that there is no mention of delamination in that report. The general impression I got from Mr. McIver's evidence did not support Dr. Tay's view that he had alerted the York board to the need for immediate attention to a delamination problem. Indeed, I thought his evidence to be, at least impliedly, contradictory to Dr. Tay's.

Plaintiff cannot be faulted for not dealing with a problem it did not know existed. In the result, I cannot accept that plaintiff failed through delay to honour its legal obligation to mitigate damages.

Defendants made a spirited and sustained attack on the methods eventually adopted by plaintiff on the advice of its engineers to deal with the repairs to both the slab and the supporting elements. It was submitted that in many respects the cost of the repairs was higher than necessary. Attacked in this respect were the means for repair recommended by Morrison, Hershfield Limited, plaintiff's consulting engineers, the ways in which tender specifications were written, and to many things done or not done during the course of the repairs. Defendants' list of criticisms included the following:

1. The plaintiff should have done the repairs in 1977/78 and, if entitled to any damages at all, is only entitled to receive what the repairs would have cost then.
2. The defendants should only be liable, if at all, for two-fifteenths of the plaintiff's damages, as the defendants are not liable for the additional thirteen years of life which the repairs gave the building.
3. Some of the repairs were redundant and the defendants should not be liable for those.
4. The defendants should not be liable for the extra cost in the M & A 1982 contract caused by Morrison, Hershfield's ignorance of the depth of the delamination and its incompetent method of tendering.
5. There was no evidence led on the accuracy of the anticipated expenses claimed.
6. In any event, the defendants should only be liable in contract for the damages which were foreseeable. The question to be asked is: Could it be said that these defendants, in 1970, if they had thought about it, would have been able to conclude there was a substantial degree of probability that the parking garage would fail because of delamination.

In general, I was not persuaded that for any such reasons plaintiff had failed to mitigate damages or to act reasonably in making repairs. The injuries to the buildings were both novel and difficult to repair. For instance, it is possible that other engineers might have proposed other means for repairing support ledges than by way of the expensive process of jacking the slabs but that does not make jacking unacceptable. It was certainly effective. Whether some cheaper method would have been effective is open to speculation. I will not go into all the criticisms levelled by defendants but can say, in a few words, that I found no basis for reducing the cost claimed by plaintiff in respect of repairs done to either slabs or supports. The claim for the cost of future repairs is confined to the slabs. Counsel urged me to dispose of all questions of damages, including quantum, if possible, without a reference, yet it was obvious to all that might not be possible. I have found it not to be possible. I am not in a position, nor would be, without further submissions made in the light of the findings I have expressed, to decide all issues of damages or to set down adequate guidelines for the master. My principal difficulty stems from my disagreement with the approach to the damage issue adopted by plaintiff. If I am right, the correct approach would be to ascertain the actual amount of assessments paid and to be paid by continuing original owners, no one else having any claim in this lawsuit against defendants, or, putting it more accurately, York not being entitled to claim anything else.

The result is that on issues which I regard as critical we have only casual information relatively unproven and untested. I took it that the figure of some 600 continuing owners suggested by plaintiffs' counsel was an estimate related to the time of commencement of these proceedings, but whether that should be the date at which the number is ascertained for the purpose of calculating damages, or whether some other date, such as the date of the commencement of trial or the date of judgment would be appropriate, was not discussed. Furthermore, although I might be ready to accept the evidence of amounts already paid for repairs by York as a basis for justifying assessments already made, I have too little information about the prospect of future assessments for repairs to form a basis for instructing the master how to calculate those damages. If counsel desire to make submissions I would entertain a motion to settle the issues.

Costs

I have given this question much thought. I do not think that plaintiff delayed the proceedings unduly. I accept that the substantial issues were novel; many, counsel agreed, were of significance to many persons not parties to this lawsuit. Some were the subject of conflicting decisions of this court. While defendant's success depends first, I have held, on the interpretation of a new statute and rather narrow technicalities of contract law, it does not rest solely on that, for on the very substantial issue of delamination, the claim would, in my opinion, fail entirely on the facts. While I reach the conclusion reluctantly, I think it only fair for the usual order to be made whereby costs follow the event and I therefore order that the claim be dismissed with costs.

Action dismissed.

The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 9524710 operating as West Edmonton Commerce Park, petitioner, and Terence Richard Webb operating as Blue Bay Massage and Order of Ahepa, Aurora Borealis Chapter No. C.J. 10, respondents

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Murray J. January 7, 1999.

Counsel: R.J. Wasylshyn, for the petitioner. G.F. Zimmerman, for the respondent Webb. G. Freund, for the respondent Order of Ahepa, Aurora Borealis Chapter No. C.J. 10.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

[para1] MURRAY J.:-- The Petitioner is a properly constituted condominium Corporation pursuant to the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. C-22 ("the Act"). On about December 1, 1995 the Respondent, Ahepa purchased unit 42 in West Edmonton Commerce Park ("the unit"), a condominium development and was provided with a copy of the condominium Corporation's by-laws in force at the time ("the by-laws").

20(3) Without limiting the powers of the corporation under this or any other Act, a corporation may

- (a) sue for and in respect of any damage or injury to the common property caused by any person, whether an owner or not, and
- (b) be sued in respect of any matter connected with the parcel for which the owners are jointly liable.

23(1) A corporation shall have a board of managers that shall be constituted as provided by the by-laws of the corporation. (3) The powers and duties of a corporation shall, subject to any restriction imposed or direction given at a general meeting, be exercised and performed by the board of the corporation.

26(1) The by-laws shall regulate the corporation and provide for the control, management and administration of the units, the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property.

(2) Any by-law may be amended, repealed or replaced by a special resolution.

(3) An amendment, repeal or replacement of a by-law does not take effect until

(a) the corporation files a copy of it with the Registrar, and

(b) the Registrar has made a memorandum of the filing on the condominium plan.

(4) No by-law operates to prohibit or restrict the devolution of units or any transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with them or to destroy or modify any easement implied or created by this Act.

(5) The by-laws bind the corporation and the owners to the same extent as if the by-laws had been signed and sealed by the corporation and by each owner and contained covenants on the part of each owner with every other owner and with the corporation to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws.

[para4] Though not specifically stated, it is implicit that the Registrar referred to is the Registrar of Land Titles so appointed pursuant to the provisions of the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1980 c. L-5 (L.T.A.).

3(3) After a certificate of title to a unit is issued pursuant to subsection (1), the unit comprised in it may devolve or be transferred, leased, mortgaged, or otherwise dealt with in the same manner and form as land held under the Land Titles Act and the provisions of that Act apply to those dealings in so far as they do not conflict with this Act or the regulations.

30(1) A corporation is responsible for the enforcement of its by-laws and the control, management and administration of its real and personal property and the common property.

(2) Without restricting the generality of subsection (1), the duties of a corporation include the following:

(a) to keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property;

(3) A corporation may by a special resolution acquire or dispose of an interest in real property.

[para5] Pursuant to s. 26(2) of the Act the Petitioner enacted by-laws on November 14, 1995 which replaced the by-laws set forth in Appendix 1. These were then registered with the Registrar of Land Titles as required by s. 26(3) and became effective. The Petitioner alleges that the following by-laws have been violated and the effects thereof remain uncorrected.

2.01 An Owner shall:

(a) Permit the Corporation and its agents, at all reasonable times on notice (except in the case of emergency when no notice is required), to enter its Unit for the purpose of:

(i) inspecting the Unit and maintaining, repairing or replacing pipes, wires, cables, ducts, conduits, plumbing, sewers and facilities for the furnishing of utilities for the time being existing in the Unit and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of any other Unit or the common property;

(ii) inspecting, maintaining, repairing or replacing common property, or;

(iii) ensuring that the By-Laws are being observed.

(d) Notify the Corporation forthwith upon any change of ownership or of any mortgage or other dealing in connection with its Unit;

(e) Comply with and cause all its tenants, invitees and other occupants of its Unit to comply with these By-Laws and with such rules and regulations as may be adopted pursuant thereto from time to time.

2.02 An Owner shall not:

(a) Use and enjoy the common property and the Corporation Property in such a manner as to unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment thereof by other Owners or occupants, visitors or invitees;

(b) Use its Unit for commercial or professional purposes that may be illegal or injurious to the reputation of the project;

(c) Use its Unit or permit it to be used in any manner or for any purpose which may be illegal or injurious, or that will cause nuisance or hazard to any other Owner or occupant or their respective servants, customers, visitors or invitees;

(g) Make any changes to the floor, Party Walls, in the plumbing or heating, air conditioning, mechanical or electrical systems within or outside any Unit without the prior written consent of the Board;

(h) Make any change to an installation upon the common property or maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common property, except for maintenance of those parts of the common property which such Owner has the duty to maintain, without the prior written consent of the Board;

(t) Make or cause to be made any structural alteration or addition to its Unit which has not otherwise been specifically referred to herein, without first having the design specifications or such alteration or addition approved in writing by the Board. Any alteration or addition made by an Owner without such approval may be restored or removed by the Board or its duly authorized representative or representatives and any costs incurred by the Corporation as a result thereof shall forthwith be paid by such Owner to the corporation and such costs shall bear interest at the rate of eighteen (18%) percent per annum (or such other rate of interest as may be approved from time to time by the Board) from the time such costs are incurred until paid;

(w) Do anything or permit anything to be done by any of its agents, tenants, visitors, invitees and servants to damage, harm, mutilate, destroy, waste, alter or litter any part or parts of the common property of the Corporation Property;

(z) Do anything which will result in the overloading of any existing electrical circuits.

12.01 In the event that any Owner desires to lease its Unit he shall furnish to the Corporation an undertaking, in form satisfactory to the Corporation, signed by the proposed lessee, that the proposed lessee of the Unit will comply with the provisions of the Act and of the By-Laws of the Corporation. The Owner shall be jointly and severally liable with the proposed lessee with respect to such obligations. 13.01 The Corporation, the Board and all Owners, Tenants and other occupants of Units shall observe and obey all By-Laws as are applicable to each of them as amended from time to time whether or not such By-Laws or any part thereof are registered at the Land Titles Office.

3.01 In addition to the duties of the Corporation set forth in the Act, the Corporation shall:

(a) Control, manage and administer the common property and any corporation Property for the benefit of all of the Owners and for the benefit of the entire project;

(b) Do all things required of it by the Act, these By-Laws, the common property rules and any other rules and regulations of the Corporation in forced (sic) from time to time;

6.01 Any infraction or violation of or default under these By-Laws or any rules and regulations established pursuant to these By-Laws on the part of an Owner, its servants, agents, licensees, invitees or tenants may be corrected, remedied or cured by the Corporation and any costs or expenses expended or incurred by the Corporation in correcting, remedying or curing such infraction, violation or default (including costs as between solicitor and client) shall be charged to such Owner and shall be added to and become part of the assessment of such owner for the month next following the date when such costs or expenses are expended or incurred (but not necessarily paid) by the Corporation and shall become due and payable on the date of payment of such monthly assessment and shall bear interest at the rate of eighteen (18%) percent per annum (or such other rate of interest as may be approved from time to time by the Board) until paid.

6.02 The Corporation may recover from an Owner by a action for debt in any court of competent jurisdiction any sum of money which the Corporation is required to expend as a result of any act or omission by the Owner, its servants, agents, licensees, invitees or tenants, which violates these By-Laws or any rules or regulations established pursuant to these By-Laws and there shall be added to any judgement, all costs of such action on a full indemnity basis. Nothing herein shall be deemed to limit any right of any Owner to bring an action or proceeding for the enforcement and protection of its rights and the exercise of its remedies.

24.02 Each common wall shall be used by the Owners of the adjoining Units, as a Party Wall.

24.03 The common walls shall be used and maintained as Party Walls perpetually.

[para7] By a lease apparently dated January 26, 1998, Ahepa purported to lease to Webb, the unit for a period of two days and three years commencing January 30, 1998. The use specified was "reflexology, massage therapy and related therapies".

[para8] The lease provided:

OPERATING COSTS

The Landlord shall pay for all other Operating costs plus applicable Goods and Services Tax, which shall include, but are not limited to, property taxes, condominium fees and any special contributions levied by the Condominium Corporation.

LEASEHOLD IMPROVEMENTS

...The Tenant, at his sole Cost, shall be entitled to make Leasehold Improvements. The Tenant shall supply the Landlord with a list of the Leasehold Improvements and shall supply the Landlord with a list of the Leasehold Improvements and drawings as required and will obtain the Landlord's written approval prior to commencing construction, such approval not to be unreasonably withheld....

The Landlord acknowledges that the Tenant plans to convert one washroom to a shower facility. When the Tenant makes this improvement, he shall save and store the washroom fixtures on behalf of the Landlord. At the end of the Term, the Tenant, at his sole cost, shall convert the shower facility back into a washroom at the Landlord's written request.

SIGNAGE

The Tenant's signs shall comply with the applicable condominium by-laws for the West Edmonton Commerce Park complex and such signage shall be at the sole expense of the Tenant. Webb took possession of the premises early in February.

[para9] On February 11th, Trisha Barnes, a member of the Board of the Directors of the condominium Corporation approached Webb and found that alterations were being made to the unit and that he was installing hot tubs and showers for his business, called Blue Bay Massage. There were pieces of concrete piled on the common property outside of unit 42. The renovations which he made were approved by Ahepa and according to him, complied with the City building code. This was the first knowledge the Corporation had of these alterations or renovations. Barnes, the treasurer and effectively the operating officer of the Corporation, was told by Webb that he was the owner of the premises and therefore she assumed that unit 42 had been sold, having received no advice of its rental from Ahepa. She, therefore, attended upon Webb and advised him that he required Board approval to make structural alterations, however he paid no attention and completed the alterations. By letter dated February 13th the Corporation wrote to Webb advising him of a number of by-law infractions, including unauthorized renovations and the Board's intention to inspect the premises. On or about that same date Barnes claims she was verbally threatened with violence by Webb for attempting to enforce the by-laws and attempting to gain access to the premises. Webb denies this. Whatever the case, Barnes in her affidavit, and on examination, said that because of Webb's behaviour the Corporation caused the title of unit 42 to be searched on February 17th and found that Ahepa was still the owner and Webb the tenant.

[para10] On February 13th and 16th, by special resolution, the Board added by-laws 12.02 and 2.02(cc) which specifically prohibited use of the premises for the purpose of public baths, showers, hot tubs, saunas, massage parlours, escort services, etc. It also prevented any business being carried out within any unit between the hours of 9:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. without written consent of the Board. By-laws 12.02 provided:

An owner shall not lease or permit its unit to be leased in whole or in part without the prior written consent of the Board.

These amendments were registered with the Land Titles Office on February 17th but, in my view, do not affect the Respondents in this case. They may be valid from that point forward though one would have to consider s. 26(4) of the Act amongst other matters should that issue arise.

[para11] On February 17th, Webb had a mobile sign erected on the Corporation's common property, advertising "all girl massages", without having first obtained permission of the Corporation.

[para12] Webb, when examined on his affidavit, stated that he did not intend to comply with the by-laws, including the requirement of by-law 12.01. As noted, this attitude changed during the hearing of this application.

[para13] Mr. Giourmetakis of Ahepa was advised that Ahepa was in violation of a number of by-laws and on February 18th the Board gave Ahepa until February 25th to provide assurances that the premises would be restored to their original state prior to the unauthorized renovation. This involved removing the hot tubs and showers, and evicting Webb from the premises. Ahepa refused to do so.

[para14] About February 18th a Board member, Darrell Elmquist spoke to Webb. He claims that he was threatened with physical violence if he continued to attempt to enforce the by-laws. Elmquist reported this to the Board on February 23rd by letter. Webb denies having made such threats.

[para15] The Corporation did not deal further with Webb because of his attitude and his alleged threatening behaviour to Barnes and Elmquist. It placed the matter in the hands of its solicitors.

[para17] This Court advised counsel for the Petitioner that if his clients sought to pursue the allegations that the Respondents were in breach of by-laws 2.02(a), (b) or (c) that a trial of an issue respecting those allegations would be required. Those issues were not argued further nor has the Petitioner sought that a trial of those issues take place. The option to do so was not and is not foreclosed.

[para18] At this point it would be useful to review how some Courts have considered the relationship between owners of condominiums. Mr. Justice Moore of this Court in the case of Condominium Plan No. 8810455 v. Spectral Capital Corp. (1990) 112 A.R. 213 at pp. 3 and 4 said:

Most condominium corporations are created by statute for two main reasons. Firstly, in order for all the owners to own the common property jointly, it is necessary through legislation to nullify the common law right of an owner to bring an action for the partition of common elements. Secondly, it is to ensure that positive covenants to repair and maintain, which do not normally run with the land, are enforceable against subsequent owners. In Alberta, the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. C-22 (The Act) and the By-laws registered against title govern the operation of condominiums. Section 26 of the Act provides the necessary authority for the control, management and administration of the units. A Condominium Corporation is ultimately regulated by its own set of By-laws which provide for the control, management and administration of the units. The By-laws bind the corporation and all of its owners to the same extent as if the by-laws had been signed and sealed by the corporation and by each owner.

[para19] Though not dealing with the same issue, the following statement of Finlayson, J.A., speaking for the Ontario Court of Appeal in Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon et al (1987) 59 O.R. (2d) 545 is equally applicable to this case.

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound. There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

[para20] In the case of Sterling Village Condominium Inc. v. Breitenbach, 251 So. 2d 685 (Fla. 4th D.C.A. 1971) a decision of the District Court of Appeal of Florida. Driver B.J., Associate Judge, speaking for the Court, said at p. 688:

Every man may justly consider his home his castle and himself as the king thereof; nonetheless his sovereign fiat to use his property as he pleases must yield, at least in degree, where ownership is in common or cooperation with others. The benefits of condominiums living and ownership demand no less. The individual ought not be permitted to disrupt the integrity of the common scheme through his desire for change, however laudable that change might be.

This was adopted by Judge Moore of the same Court in Hidden Valley Harbour Estates, Inc. v. Basso 393 So. 2nd 637 (Fla. Ct. Ap., 1981) at pp. 638-639 and quoted with approval by Ontario Courts in York Condominium Corporation No. 216 v. Borsodi et al (1983) 42 O.R. (2d) 99 at 107 and in York Regional Condominium Corp. No. 585 v. Gilbert [1990].

[para21] I was referred to a number of cases, many of which contained similar statements. The majority are from Ontario whose statute is not the same as that of Alberta but am satisfied that the basic principles enunciated reflect the position in Alberta. The Act does not draw a distinction between declarations made at the time the condominium was created setting out restrictions on the use of the condominium property and the rules promulgated by a Board of Directors of the Corporation as was commented upon in the Florida case and some of the Ontario decisions. The only document that deals with use and government of the condominium complex as set out in the plan are the by-laws as passed by the Corporation.

[para23] The Act provides that each condominium plan filed with the Registrar of Land Titles is deemed on registration to be embodied in the register. This refers to the register to be kept by the Registrar pursuant to s. 17(1) of the L.T.A. Section 3(3) of the Act provides that when a Certificate of Title is issued for one of the units of the condominium, that unit can be dealt with as can other land held under the Land Titles Act. The provisions of the L.T.A. apply to those dealings in so far as they do not conflict with the Act or its regulations [para24] The L.T.A. does not deal specifically with the registration of condominium plans and thus it would seem that all the steps contemplated by s. 16 and 17 of the L.T.A. are dispensed with and the plan becomes part of the register along with the other instruments, etc. mentioned in s. 17. There is no need to record the plan on the title since the title to the unit itself designates that it is a unit in the condominium plan, in this case, 9524710.

57 So soon as registered every instrument becomes operative according to the tenor and intent thereof, and thereupon creates, transfers, surrenders, charges or discharges, as the case may be, the land or the estate or interest therein mentioned in the instrument.

The Act goes on to provide, by s. 26, that by-laws registered as these ones were, took effect when they were filed with the Registrar and when the Registrar made a memorandum of the filing on the condominium plan, in this case, November 11, 1995 and April 8, 1997. There is no requirement that a memorandum be made on the Certificate of Title for each unit. Thus, it would seem clear that the by-laws so registered run with the land.

[para26] The Act is also clear that there must be by-laws, if not those set out in Appendix 1, then those required to be registered. Section 29 deals with contravention of a by-law by a person in a residential unit. It gives one form of remedy to the Corporation if its by-laws so permit. Section 29 does not affect the rights of the Corporation, an owner, a tenant, or any other person occupying a unit in a commercial condominium. However, s. 29 contemplates that an owner, tenant, or other person, occupying the condominium is subject to the Corporation's by-laws and confirms that the Legislature intended that the by-laws run with the land.

[para27] Webb knew that he was renting a condominium and if he was not aware of the fact that there were by-laws to be complied with, he should have been. He took the by-laws with the land. To accede to the argument of counsel for Webb would lead to a rather interesting scenario in which Webb the tenant, occupier and user of the unit, would be in a much stronger position on questions of use, making modifications, etc. of and to the unit, vis à vis the Corporation than would Ahepa. In effect, Webb would need only to comply with the terms of his lease and disregard the by-laws where in any given situation the lease either did not cover it or was at variance with the by-laws.

[para28] Thus, the Corporation was entitled to pursue both Ahepa and Webb and seek whatever remedies were available to it under the by-laws. Ahepa covenanted with Webb that Webb could do certain things which Ahepa, as the owner of unit 42, and Webb as tenant, either knew or are deemed to have known, required prior approval of the Board under the by-laws.

7. The common boundary of any unit with common property is the interior undecorated surface of the floor, wall or ceiling as the case may be.

8. The common boundary of any unit with another unit is the centerline of common demising wall or the vertical plane between units where no wall exists as defined by the dimensions shown.

* See also By-law 2.02 (g), (t).

It is clear that the exterior walls, the ceiling and floor are common property, other than the interior surfaces thereof. This would allow the unit owner to decorate but not alter those parts of the building which might affect its structural integrity and safety.

[para30] I will now deal with the alleged violations by the Respondents.

[para31] The evidence satisfies me that Ahepa was in violation of the condominium by-laws in a number of instances. There is no evidence before me that Ahepa refused the Corporation's right to inspect the premises, only that Webb did. However, this to a very limited extent has now been done. The by-laws contemplate that the owner will obtain from a "proposed lessee" an undertaking by the lessee that the lessee will comply with the provisions of the Act and of the by-laws. By-law 12.01 also provides that the owner is jointly and severally liable with the "proposed lessee" with respect to such obligations. Ahepa did not furnish to the Corporation an undertaking in any form signed by Webb that he would comply with the provisions of the Act and the by-laws. An undertaking of this nature was provided to the Corporation by Webb during the course of this application. However, it contains qualifications which counsel for the Corporation advises are unacceptable.

[para32] Ahepa, was also in violation of by-laws 2.01(d) and (e) in failing to notify the Corporation of the lease and to have Webb comply with the by-laws and rules and regulations of the Corporation. As well, Ahepa permitted Webb to damage and alter the floor slab contrary to By-law 2.02(w).

[para33] Both Ahepa and Webb were in breach of the following by-laws:

1. By-laws 2.02(g) and (h). In allowing and making changes to the floor, in the plumbing and likely the mechanical and electrical systems within the unit and altering the floor slab without having obtained prior written consent of the Corporation.

2. By-law 2.02(i). Until a full and proper inspection has been done, it is impossible to make this determination. This would most likely be affected by any plumbing, mechanical or electrical alterations.

3. By-law 2.02(t). In allowing a structural alteration or addition to the unit not otherwise specifically referred to in the by-laws without first having the design specifications or such alterations or addition approved in writing by the Board.

4. By-law 2.02(z). The comments made in respect of 2.02(i) apply.

5. By-law 12.01. This was discussed earlier.

[para34] The next question is, what remedies are available, and which should be granted to the Corporation? I know of no law which would permit the Corporation to prohibit the type of business engaged in by Webb unless it can be established that it runs afoul of by-laws 2.02(a) and (c). [para35] In my opinion, by-law 12.01 is unnecessary since the by-laws run with the land and the tenant takes his lease subject to those by-laws. Although the Appendix 1 by-laws are more appropriate for a residential condominium, they contain no similar provision to by-law 12.01. True, when dealing with "restrictions in use" in Appendix 1 the term "owner" includes a tenant but that is not, in my view, evidence that the Legislature did not intend the by-laws to run with the land. On the contrary, it would indicate that anyone leasing a unit is on notice as to the uses to which the unit cannot be put. This is particularly so when the Act provides for a replacement Appendix 1 by other duly registered by-laws. However, by-law 12.01 is one of the by-laws and must be complied with. Thus, if Ahepa and Webb do so, I am not prepared to require Webb to leave the premises. Needless to say, the need for compliance by Webb was triggered when he entered into the lease.

[para36] The Act, by s. 30, requires the Corporation to enforce its by-laws. It must keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the real and personal property of the Corporation and the common property. By-la 6.01 authorizes the Corporation to "correct, remedy or cure" any infraction or violation of the by-laws. As to the modifications to unit 42, the Corporation has the right to take whatever steps are necessary to remedy any violation, i.e. to put the common property back in the state it was in initially. This, of course, would include anything affecting the floor slab and the common property so affected.

[para37] We are concerned with an alteration of the floor slab, likely alterations to the electrical and possibly mechanical components of the unit and apparently walls erected inside the unit. The latter item may or may not have been done in whole or in part by Webb. Changes which an owner or his tenant wish to make are to be made known to the Corporation for its approval.

[para38] Thus, I would direct that the Respondents submit to the Petitioner the design specifications for such alterations as have been made to the unit. In this case the Petitioners may cause such inspections to be made of the alterations as they deem necessary to comply with their statutory and by-law duties. This may include removing wall panels and other coverings to inspect wiring, heating plumbing and the effect the works have had or may have upon the common property and safety of the unit and complex as a whole.

[para39] Should the Board conclude that changes have resulted in damage or a risk of damage to the common property, the plumbing, heating, air conditioning, mechanical or electrical systems, notice of the same shall be served in writing upon the Respondents, stating the reasons therefor. If the Respondents agree with the Board's decision then the problems created or posed thereby shall be remedied, if necessary, in accordance with by-laws 2.02(t) and 6.01. The cost of the inspection and remedial work, if any, shall be borne by the Respondents jointly and severally, vis à vis the Petitioner. If the Respondents dispute a decision that remedial work should be done or that the nature of such work is inappropriate then that dispute shall be tried as an issue before any member of this Court in which case the disputed remedial and Court costs will be dealt with by that Court.

[para40] The process of inspection, the making of decisions by the Board and, if not disputed, the effecting of the remedial work, if any, shall be commenced forthwith. If disputed, notice of such disputes setting out the grounds therefore shall be served upon the Petitioner within 15 days of receipt of the Board's decision, in which case the Petitioner shall take steps to have the issue or issues tried.

[para41] If there is any question as to the mechanics of effecting this remedy or in respect of the timing thereto, the parties may speak to me. As to this application, I would, in the normal course award costs in favour of the Petitioner in accordance with the provisions of by-laws 2.02(t) and 6.01, that is, on a solicitor and client basis. The provisions of by-laws 6.02 and 18.02 would also apply. If the Respondents wish to make further submissions respecting costs of this application, they may do so.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

MOORE J.-- A Petition was filed pursuant to Section 60 of the Condominium Property Act, R. S. A. 1980, C. c22 by a Condominium Corporation (Corporation) known as Whiskey Jack. Section 60 of the Condominium Property Act states:

"60(1) Unless otherwise provided for in this Act or the regulations, an application to the Court under this Act shall be by Petition."

The petitioner, in reality, is the Condominium Corporation for a 20 unit residential project call the Whiskey Jack Condominiums. The Condominium Corporation operates the condominiums at Canmore, in the Province of Alberta. The Petitioner is seeking advice and direction from the Court over a conflict between the -- Respondents (Spectral) and the Corporation who are unhappy with the sale of time share units in unit #9 owned by Spectral.

In particular, the Corporation is seeking a declaration tha Spectral is in breach of valid By-laws which it is obliged to enforce pursuant to its duty under the Condominium Property Act. The Corporation seeks an injunction restraining any form of time share business to be operated by Spectral at Whiskey Jack. The Corporation also asks the Court to declare that the Corporation is entitled to legal costs.

BACKGROUND

Whiskey Jack is a 20 unit condominium project located in Canmore, Alberta. Development approval for this project was granted in June 1987 to Fielding Land Enterprises Ltd. (Fielding). The By-laws of the Condominium Corporation were registered with Land Titles on May 3, 1990. Fielding hired the Westar Group to oversee the marketing of the project. Westar used a sales brochure which described the project in the following terms:

"Whiskey Jack, the beginning of a heritage which brings your family and friends together in the richness of a lifestyle only reserved for those special family times. Whiskey Jack is for 20 very special families seeking privacy, peace and solitude." [Emphasis added] In December 1988 one Frank Galarneau purchased unit #8 on behalf of Spectral. Spectral named Mr. Falarneau as its agent in relation to all matters pertaining to unit no 8.

Unit No. 8 became occupied by Gary and Joyce Lyons who were employees of Spectral. They ultimately purchased unit No. 8. They act as managers for Spectral in relation to unit No. 9, which unit is still owned by Spectral.

The first Annual General Meeting of the owners was held on February 15, 1989. At the meeting, members were elected to the Whiskey Jack Board. Mr. Swales, who was a Director of Spectral, was elected as President of the Corporation. Mr. Swales was reputed to be knowledgeable in the area of property management. There was no disclosure at this time of the fact that both Galarneau and Swales were connected with Spectral and that Spectral had an intention of selling units of time in units it owned at Whiskey Jack.

At the date of the first annual meeting of the Corporation on February 15, 1989, units No. 5, No. 9, No. 13, No. 18 and No. 19 remained unsold. Soon after this meeting, Spectral embarked upon its plan to operate a time share marketing scheme from Whiskey Jack. Spectral purchased units #9, No. 13, No. 18 and No. 19 in Whiskey Jack from Fielding in April 1989. Apparently after the filing of this Petition, the Corporation and Spectral entered into a settlement agreement wherein units No. 13, No. 18, and No. 19 were purchased from Spectral. Therefore the only unit whose activity at issue in this Petition is unit #9 which remains the property of Spectral.

This dispute results from a conflict existing between the 14 residential owners and Spectral arising out of the objections of the Corporation to administer the Whiskey Jack Condominium project and the obligation to enforce the By-laws.

In mid May 1990, Spectral transferred its interest in unit #9 to Canmore Nordic Village Ltd. (a private company whose sole director is a director of Spectral) . As a result, the petition was amended to add Canmore Nordic Village as a respondent.

During the summer of 1989 an "A" frame free standing sign was placed on the common property of the Whiskey Jack Condominium near the entrance from the public road. This sign advertised Whiskey Jack as an "RCI Affiliated Resort". The sign in question was placed on the common property by Spectral to direct time share exchange visitors to the Whiskey Jack Condominium.

During the Summer of 1989, Frank Galarneau started to market Spectral's time share business out of the offices of Intra Executive Travel in Calgary, and was actively marketing from those premises by October 1989.

Spectral was offering three different types of time share packages to the public which can be described as follows:

1. Hotel Type of Accommodation

A short-term transient type of accommodation which was offered to the general public by Spectral through the office of Intra Executive Travel run by Frank Galarneau. Information on this type of time share accommodation was disseminated to the general public through advertisements placed in the Calgary Herald and the T.V. Times.

2. "Right of Use" Time share Packages

Purchasers of these packages obtained a right to occupy one of the Spectral units for a certain number of weeks per year. Under this program a purchaser also had a right to trade their time with other members of the Resort Condominium International (RCI) , an international time share trading organization with which Spectral had become affiliated. Such packages were also offered as perks to investors who decided to buy shares in Spectral.

3. "Fractional Ownership" Time share Units

This was a more complex undertaking designed to provide a facade of fee simple ownership. In order to market this package, Spectral divided the title in unit No. 9 to 51 separate ("fractional") Certificate of Titles in fee simple and sold each fractional title to the purchasers. The purchaser of a fractional interest was subject to a "Head Lease" which was granted by Spectral to the "Residential Owner's Association" (an entity distinct and different from the Corporation) and was comprised of all the 51 undivided interest holders in the unit. The purchaser in this case acquired a right of occupancy during a particular week of the year in Whiskey Jack and was also entitled to exchange his time for a right of occupation at other RCI resorts. Purchasers were also at liberty to rent their time slots to the general public through Intra Executive Travel, an arm of Spectral.

Spectral did not advise the Corporation that it was marketing time share packages in unit #9. The time share marketing scheme was discovered in the fall of 1989. In November 1989, five owners requested an Extraordinary General Meeting to discuss Spectral's activities. A meeting was held on November 24, 1989. Fourteen residential owners passed three resolutions at this meeting: (1) that time sharing was a commercial venture; (2) that time sharing was a nuisance; and (3) that a time sharing operation was injurious to the reputation of the project. At the meeting, the owners came to the conclusion that the actions of Spectral were contrary to the Bylaws of the Corporation.

I am satisfied from the evidence presented before me that the Extraordinary Meeting held on November 24, 1989, was a properly constituted meeting under the By-laws and that the Resolutions passed by the majority of the owners at the meeting were valid

Condominium ownership is a unique form of home ownership. The concept is radically different from that associated with the traditional form of home ownership. The word "condominium" has been defined as follows:

"... refers to a system of ownership within a multi-unit housing project whereby each dwelling unit is owned separately by the individual who purchases it, while the common elements (hallways, elevators . . . etc.) are held in common by all unit owners. Each unit owner has an undivided interest in the common elements which is in fixed proportion - usually the proportion that the value of his unit bears to the total value of all units in the project" (A.L. Burns & B.N. McLellan, Condominium: The Law and Administration in Ontario (Toronto: Carswell, 1981), at p . 1).

Most condominium corporations are created by statute for two main reasons. Firstly, in order for all the owners to own the common property jointly, it is necessary through legislation to nullify the common law right of an owner to bring an action for the partition of common elements. Secondly, it is to ensure that positive covenants to repair and maintain, which do not normally run with the land, are enforceable against subsequent owners.

In Alberta, the Condominium Property Act, R . S . A . 1980, C . c-22 (The Act) and the By-laws registered against title govern the operation of condominiums. Section 26 of the Act provides the necessary authority for the control, management and administration of the units. A Condominium Corporation is ultimately regulated by its own set of By-laws which provide for the control, management and administration of the units. The By-laws bind the corporation and all of its owners to the same extent as if the by-laws had been signed and sealed by the corporation and by each owner.

Section 26 states:

"26(1) the By-laws shall regulate the corporation and provide for the control, management and administration of the units, the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property.

(2) Any By-law may be amended, repealed or replaced by a special resolution, (3) An amendment, repeal or replacement of a By-law does not take effect until

(4) No By-law operates to prohibit or restrict the devolution of units or any transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with them or to destroy or modify any easement implied or created by this Act.

(5) The By-laws bind the corporation and the owners to the same extent as if the By-laws had been signed and sealed by the corporation and by each owner and contained covenants on the part of each owner with every other owner and with the corporation to observe and perform all the provisions of the By-laws."

It is clear from s. 26(5) that the By-laws bind all owner who must undertake to observe and perform all the provisions of the By-laws. (The underlining is mine.)

It is interesting to note By-laws 2.01(e) and 2.01(f):

"2.01(e) An owner shall not use his unit or permit it to be used in any manner for any purpose which may be illegal, injurious or that will cause nuisance or hazard to any occupier of a unit (whether an owner or not) or the family of such an occupier.

2.01(f) An owner shall notify the corporation forthwith upon any change of ownership or any mortgage or other dealing in connection with his unit."

and further to observe By-laws 25.02(b), 25.01(h) and 25.01(t):

"25.01 An owner shall not:

...

(b) Use his unit for commercial or professional purposes or for any purpose which may be illegal or injurious to the reputation of the project:

...

(h) An owner shall not do anything or permit anything to be done in respect of his unit, the common property or the corporation property or bring anything on it which will or would tend to increase the risk of fire or the rate of fire insurance premiums with respect thereof;

...

(t) An owner shall not do any act or thing or neglect or fail to do any act or thing which would render invalid any insurance in force and maintained by the incorporation or which would increase the premium thereof;"

The Petitioner in this case simply requests that its By-laws be enforced. The Petitioner says Spectral is in violation of By-laws which restrict use (25.01(b), 2.01(e)) and Spectral's actions have an adverse effect on insurance premiums (25.01(h) & 25.01(t)).

The Respondent Spectral agrees that each owner is bound by the Bylaws of the Condominium, but states that the By-laws are ultra vires the Condominium Corporation since they restrict Spectral's rights to alienation of property under By-law 26(4) which reads as follows:

"26(4) No by-law operates to prohibit or restrict the devolution of units or any transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealings with them or to destroy or modify any easement implied or created by this Act."

Spectral says the division of its title for unit #9 into 51 separate Certificate of Titles is not prohibited by the Condominium Act because the Act does not state that an owner must transfer his entire estate in the unit to the transferee. This argument, even if valid, is not an explanation for all the various time share packages that Spectral has been marketing and does not adequately deal with other violations of the By-laws. In my view, the By-laws are not ultra vires the Condominium Corporation.

The By-laws that the Petitioner claims to have been violated fall into four general areas: 1. Commercial Purpose

The actions of Spectral are subject to By-law 25.01(b) which states as follows :

"25.01(b) An owner shall not use his unit for commercial or professional purposes or for any purpose which may be illegal or injurious to the reputation of the project;"

The Corporation states that Spectral is using unit #9 for a commercial purpose. The marketing of the various time share schemes is commercial in nature with the object of making a profit. Spectral says that if the Petitioner's position is allowed to prevail then an owner can only use his unit as his own residence or lease or rent his unit to long term tenants. This in essence would be asking the Court to separate the incident of possession from ownership in such a manner that it would permit leasing, but prohibit a person from exercising any use, enjoyment, possession or occupancy of the unit.

In recent years condominiums housing has been utilized to deliver specialized type of housing to seniors, handicapped and other members of society. The critical feature of all such developments is a common interest and an agreement to bind themselves through By-laws acceptable to all. This is the essence of what happened at Whiskey Jack. All the purchasers of units in this project "special -- families" who decided to purchase units for a weekend retreat in the mountains. As the purchasers had a common interest which was to escape to the "peace and solitude" of the mountains. They all agreed to be bound by the By-laws. This arrangement, however, was disturbed by Spectral. There is no doubt in my mind that the driving force behind Spectral's time sharing scheme was profit.

David A. Altro, in dealing with resort time sharing in his article "Resort Time-Sharing: Why real estate's new brain-child needs its own legislation," (1981), 41 Revue du Barreau, 1054 at p. 1057, stated:

"The inescapable attractiveness to the time-share developer is based on the simple formula that he can substantially lower the purchase price of resort housing and at the same time increase overall profit. Although marketing costs for timeshares are higher than those for conventional resort condominiums due to the number of timeshare periods for sale, the developer's major cost, construction, is the same for either offering. By dividing the condominium unit into fractional unit time-share periods for sale (the "fractions"), the developer's aggregate return for the sale of such fractions is greater than the return where the condominium units are sold as a whole, pursuant to a conventional project sale." (The underling is mine.)

I am satisfied that Spectral has been utilizing unit #9 for a commercial purpose. The holding out of Whiskey Jack as a place for time share vacations through advertisements in the Calgary Herald and T.V. Times has injured the reputation of the project.

In my view the act of time sharing out one unit in a condominium complex is simply not compatible with the By-laws. Time sharing is as unique a development as a condominium project and therefore requires its own set of rules or By-laws. This is supported by recent recommendations for Time Sharing legislation made at the Uniform Law Conferences. (See: "Time Sharing: Report of the Manitoba Commissioners" (1983) Uniform Law Conference 262; "Uniform Time Share Act (1984), Uniform Law Conference of Canada 1731.

2. Nuisance

The Petitioner claims that the Respondent is also in breach of By-law 2.01(e) as the activity surrounding the marketing of time share packages is causing a nuisance to the other owners. The By-law in question states:

"2.01(e) An owner shall not use his unit or permit it to be used in any manner for any purpose which may be illegal, injurious or that will cause nuisance or hazard to any occupier of a unit (whether an owner or not) or the family of such an occupier."

There was evidence before me that the enjoyment of owners was seriously impaired by the hotel-like nature of the time share scheme that resulted in heavy traffic resulting from the viewing by potential investors of unit #9. Clearly dealing with 51 owners would increase the administrative headaches for the Corporation.

I am satisfied on all of the evidence that the heavy traffic in the project is disturbing the peace of individuals who purchased condominiums at Whiskey Jack. It is impossible for the Corporation to co-ordinate its activities with that of the 51 separate title holders in unit #9 who are only around for one week during the year. The successful operation of a condominium project requires commitment and cooperation from all of its members. Obviously 51 owners of a single unit who are transient are unlikely to display a commitment to the overall welfare of the project. I am aware that Spectral has created an association of these owners to represent their interest. I am, however, not convinced that it is a feasible solution. It simply has the effect of creating another "bureaucratic" level for the Corporation to deal with over policy.

3. Adverse Effect on Insurance Premiums

I am further satisfied, on the evidence, that Spectral is in violation of By-law 25.01 (h) and (t).

It is clear that the use of unit #9 for time sharing is an intensive use and the evidence before me indicates that such use will have an adverse effect on the insurance premiums of the Corporation.

4. Lack of Disclosure about Timesharing

Clearly, Spectral is in breach of By-law 2.01(f), which states:

"2.01(f) An owner shall notify the corporation forthwith upon any change of ownership or any mortgage or other dealing in connection with his unit."

There was ample evidence before me that Spectral failed to make appropriate disclosures. Mr. Swales was elected to the Corporation without revealing that it was Spectral that owned the unit and not himself. While Mr. Swales was President of the Corporation, Spectral was busy organizing its time sharing scheme with the knowledge of Mr. Swales but not the members of the Corporation. The efforts of owners to learn more about the scheme were thwarted by Spectral. Spectral had a responsibility under By-law 2.01(f) to bring to the Corporation's attention its plans with respect to unit #9 and its failure to do so is accordingly a breach of By-law 2.01(f).

In my view, a time sharing operation with fractional interests which are subject to trading around within an international corporation (RCI) cannot exist within a condominium development where the objects contemplate private ownership wherein no commercial operation would exist.

In the result, Spectral has breached the By-laws of the Corporation. A permanent injunction is granted to the Petitioner restraining Spectral and Canmore Nordic Village Ltd. from carrying on any form of time sharing at Whiskey Jack. I direct the "A" frame free standing sign, if it is still standing on the common property of the Corporation, be removed.

Costs are awarded to the petitioner on a solicitor/client basis.

IN THE MATTER OF an amendment to the Declaration of Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441, applicant, and Each and every owner and mortgagee of each unit in Carleton Condominium Plan No. 441, respondents

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Ottawa, Ontario Chadwick J. July 18, 1997.

Counsel: André Claude, for the applicant. David R. Habib, for Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 507, and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 510, intervenors.

[para1] CHADWICK J.:-- The applicant seeks an order pursuant to s. 3(8) of the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1990, c. 26, amending the declaration of Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 (Le Parc).

[para2] The application was opposed by the intervenors Carleton Condominium No. 507 and 510.

[para3] The portion of the declaration which the applicant seeks to strike out relates to recreational centre, recreational facility and recreational facility lands.

[para4] The lands adjacent to these facilities are developed and contain a number of condominium corporations and other land owners. These are described as follows: Carleton Condominium Corporation No.507, 210 units; Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 510, 70 units; Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 453, 32 units; Labourers International Union and North America Local 527 (LIUNA), 124 UNITS; and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 16, 370 units and one piece of vacant land (planned to accommodate 221 units).

[para5] The lands in question were first developed in 1972 with the recreational centre and recreational centre lands being developed in approximately 1988. The intention was that all of the condominium corporations and interested parties would share in the recreational amenities as to their use and costs.

[para6] The applicant Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 was created by registration of this declaration in accordance with the provisions of the Condominium Act on September 30, 1988. The declarant was Financial Trustco Properties Limited (FTP).

[para10] In addition to the declaration on October 25, 1988 FTP registered By-Law No. 6 of CCC No. 4 by Instrument No. 586191. This by-law is also referred to as Special By-Law No. 1 contains Schedule "A", at common access agreement and also contains similar wording to the declaration as it relates to the recreational facilities.

[para11] It is the applicant's position that the declaration does not comply with the requirements of s. 3(1) or s. 3(3). These sections read as follows:

3-(1) A declaration shall not be registered unless it is executed by the owner or owners of the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description and unless it contains,

(a) a statement of intention that the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description be governed by this Act;

(b) the consent, in the prescribed form, of every person having a registered mortgage against the land or interests appurtenant to the land described in the description;

(c) a statement, expressed in percentages, of the proportions of the common interests;

(d) a statement, expressed in percentages allocated to the units, of the proportions in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses;

(e) an address for service and a mailing address for the corporation; and

(f) a specification of any parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated units and not by all the owners.

(3) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection (1), and in any other section in this Act, a declaration may contain,

(a) a specification of common expenses;

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

(c) provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests;

(d) a specification of duties of the corporation consistent with its objects; and

(e) a specification of any allocation of the obligations to repair and to maintain the units and common elements.

[para12] The author Audrey Loeb in the text Condominium Law and Administration, Second Edition 1995, Carswell Toronto comments upon the above sections as follows, at p. 3-14:

Unlike the former Ontario Act, section 3(3) the present Act contains no provisions allowing for other matters concerning the condominium to be included in the declaration. The mandatory and permissive provisions in sub-sections (1) and (3) are exhaustive. Section 3(5) states that if any provision in a declaration is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the Act prevails and the offending provision is deemed to be amended so as to conform with the requirements of the Act.

[para13] Section 3(4) provides that the declaration can be amended with the consent of all owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests. This procedure obviously is cumbersome and difficult to administer.

[para14] Section 3(5) provides:

Where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly.

[para15] The power provided to the court to amend the declaration or description is restricted. The court must be satisfied that the amendment is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency in the declaration or description or arising out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration or description.

[para16] The applicant suggests that the declaration is inconsistent with s.3(1) and 3(5) of the Condominium Act and as such the declaration should be amended accordingly. The applicant's position is that exhaustive provisions of 3(1) and 3(5) are not broad enough to incorporate the declaration relating to the recreational land and facilities. Reference is also made to s. 12 of the Condominium Act which reads as follows:

12.(1) The objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation. (2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(4) The declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects, responsibilities and duties.

[para17] Counsel for the applicant points out that the application before the court is extremely narrow and deals with the declaration and by-law no. 6. It does not require the court to interpret a contractual obligation of the applicant as it relates to the other condominium corporations and the shares expenses of other obligations arising from recreational facility agreement.

[para19] Counsel for CCC 507 and 510 point out the disclosure statement for CCC 441 was delivered to all purchasers of the units in 441 by its declarant financial Trustco properties and they all had notice of the shared recreational amenities agreement. In addition that the unit holders of CCC 441 have the right to use the facilities and have used the facilities in the past and ultimately share in the ownership of the assets provided for in the agreement. It is their position that these shared facility amenities are assets within the meaning of s. 13 of the Condominium Act and as such owners have a proportionate share in the assets.

[para21] The second portion of the application is for an order declaring that by-law no. 6 registered as Instrument No. 586191 The Land Titles Division of the Registry Office in Ottawa, is null and void pursuant to sub-section 28(5).

[para22] S. 28 of the Condominium Act provides that the board may pass by-laws, not contrary to the act or to the declaration. In view of my finding relating to the declaration, I do not find that the by-law offends any of the provisions of s. 28.

[para24] Pursuant to s. 97 the court can make a declaration that By-Law no. 6 registered as Instrument No. 586161 includes the enacting page in the form and with the substance as contained in the documentation as filed on this application.

[para25] The application is dismissed other than the declaration under s. 97. I will receive written submissions within 15 days from the parties relating to fixing costs and the quantum of such costs.

CHADWICK J.

CBR# 231

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 16, plaintiff, and Lawrence Douglas Vaughan and Douglas Lawrence Vaughan, defendants

Court File No. C19950/92

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Brampton, Ontario O'Connor J. March 6, 1996.

Counsel: John Russell, for the plaintiff. Robert Sugar, for Lawrence Douglas Vaughan. Thomas H. Clemenhausen, for Douglas Lawrence Vaughan.

[para1] O'CONNOR J.-- The defendants, father and son, were tenants of a townhouse in the plaintiff's complex. On May 28, 1991, the younger Mr. Vaughan was repairing his car in the garage of his rental unit. He admits his negligence caused a fire which damaged two other condo units. The plaintiff's insurer, Chateau Insurance Company ("Chateau") has paid $25,182.48 for repairs. It seeks to subrogate against the defendants.

[para2] The plaintiff's policy with Chateau covers "Peel Condominium Corporation #16 and all Unit Owners" for losses which include the loss caused by the defendant's negligence. By the policy Chateau waives subrogation rights against the owner of a condominium. Further, the law prohibits subrogation by an insurer against its insured.

[para3] There was no written lease between the defendants and the registered owner of their unit. They were month to month tenants paying $950. The owner paid a condominium fee of $110 to the plaintiff, a portion of which covered the premium on the Chateau policy.

[para4] The issue is whether any of the Chateau policy, the Condominium Act, the Landlord and Tenant Act ("L & T Act"), the plaintiff's declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations or any combination of them can be interpreted to provide coverage under the Chateau policy for tenants or to include tenants in the definition of "owner". If tenants are covered the plaintiff cannot subrogate and the defendants succeed. If they are not covered the plaintiff may subrogate.

The Plaintiff's Position

[para5] The plaintiff says its policy is clearly intended to protect only the corporation and the owners of units in Condominium Corporation #16. It does not cover tenants. It should not be liable for the defendants' negligence. It should be permitted to subrogate.

[para7] There is no written lease between the defendants and the owner of their unit. There is no agreement determining the amount, if any, of the rent paid by the tenants that went toward the insurance premium in the owner's condominium fee.

[para8] The definition of "owner" in the Condominium Act does not include "tenant" and the definition of "tenant" in the L & T Act does not include "owner". The plaintiff's declaration, by-laws, rules and regulations apply to tenants in limited areas, generally only as they relate to the use of the property, and not where they affect ownership or title. Tenants may attend the plaintiff's meetings only upon invitation and do not have a vote. Chateau further says the defendants are not covered under the policy as an "unnamed insured". It should be permitted to subrogate against the person whose negligence caused the damage they have covered.

The Defendants' Position

[para9] The defendants say the terms of their relationship with their landlord were prescribed, in part, by the declaration, by-laws and rules and regulations of the corporation. Article XVII of the declaration provides, "All present and future owners, tenants and residents of units shall be subject to and shall comply with the provisions of this declaration, the by-laws and the rules and regulations" (emphasis added). The intention is to bind tenants to all provisions applicable to owners, not just those which affect the use of property. They are to be treated as owners for insurance coverage purposes.

[para10] Article XIII pursuant to by-law 5 provides that "... the rules and regulations shall be observed by the owners and the term owner shall include the owner and any other person occupying the unit with the owner's approval".

[para11] The rules governing parking provide "Unit owner includes ... residents and tenants."

[para12] Chateau was aware when it wrote the policy that about 20% of the units comprising the plaintiff were occupied by tenants. It had copies of all the plaintiff's condominium documents. Chateau is deemed to know the definition of owner used by the plaintiff. When the policy was first written it covered "... all registered unit owners ..." At the time of the loss it covered "... all unit owners..." The defendants say this amendment causes confusion and the contra proferentum rule applies to Chateau's disadvantage. [para13] The combined effect of the Condominium Act, declaration, by-laws and rules and regulations of the plaintiff is to place the tenant in the same position as an owner respecting the insurance provisions. The defendants are covered under the policy. Subrogation should not be permitted by an insurer against its insured.

[para14] Two questions arise:

(a) Whether the plaintiff has a right of action against the defendants.

(b) Whether any right of subrogation has been modified by the policy and/or whether the policy covers the tenant as an "unnamed insured".

[para15] There is no argument that Chateau must cover and indemnify the plaintiff as the loss came within the terms of the policy and the plaintiff and the owners of the other units damages are named insured. Chateau has already paid the claim.

(a) Whether the plaintiff has a right of action against the defendants.

[para16] Any right of action must arise out of the defendants' negligence, which has been admitted. There is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. The Condominium Act reads:

14(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units ...

[para17] The plaintiff has the right to sue the tenants for damage to the units and the common elements unless this right was contractually altered. To determine whether the parties have contracted out of this right one should examine who has assumed the risk of damage. In Rose et al. v. Borisko Brothers Ltd., (1981), 33 O.R. (2d) 685, aff'd. (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 606, O'Brien J., of the Supreme Court of Ontario, says at page 691:

"... the cases stand for the proposition that an insurer cannot assert against a third party any rights which the insured has, by contract, put beyond his own reach ..." (emphasis his)

[para18] Has the owner of the unit, the defendants' landlord, waived any right to sue and/or has he taken responsibility for damage and/or to provide insurance? Here, there is no lease between the defendants and their landlord. There is no contract governing the rights and responsibilities of each respecting damage or insurance. Their relationship is governed by the L&T Act. S. 94(3) reads:

The tenant is responsible for the repair of damage caused by the wilful or negligent conduct of the tenant or of persons who are permitted on the premises by the tenant.

[para19] Thus, the tenants bear the risk of damage due to their negligence unless the Condominium Act, declaration, by-laws or rules and regulations or any combination of them can be interpreted to alter the risk. [para20] There is nothing in the Condominium Act which specifically affects a tenant's risk. S. 80(1) of the L&T Act states

"... this part [Part IV] applies to tenancies of residential premises and tenancy apartments despite any other Act ... and despite any agreement or waiver to the contract except as specifically provided in this Part."

[para21] According to Audrey Loeb, Condominium Law and Administration, 2nd ed. (Scarborough: Carswell, 1995),

... the rights of the owner and the tenant are governed by the Landlord and Tenant Act and section 49 of the Condominium Act.

[para22] S. 49 of the Condominium Act sets out the duties and responsibilities of a lessee of a condominium unit. It states, in part, "... the lessee ... is subject to the duties imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules on an owner, except those duties respecting common expenses ...". [para23] The owner/landlord is responsible for common expenses which include his share of the insurance premium. As the tenant's rent is established taking into account the landlord's expenses, including common expenses (and the insurance premium) it can be argued the tenant is indirectly paying the insurance premium. However, under S.49(3) of the Condominium Act, if the landlord fails to pay the common expenses, upon notice from the corporation, his tenant must do so and may then deduct the amount paid from the rent. Although the tenant may indirectly be paying the insurance premium, the responsibility is that of the landlord/owner. Further, as noted, the L&T Act specifically places the risk of damage due to the tenant's negligence on the tenant.

The corporation shall obtain and maintain insurance on its own behalf and on behalf of the owners of the units and common elements ... against major perils to the replacement cost thereof, and against such other perils as may be specified by the declaration or by-laws, and for this purpose the corporation shall be deemed to have an insurable interest in the units and common elements.

[para26] I find "major perils" includes fire.

[para28] S. 41(2) of the Condominium Act provides the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage. This responsibility can be shifted by the declaration to the owner. If the owner fails to make obligated repairs the corporation may do so and add the cost to the common expenses.

[para29] Article XIII of the plaintiff's declaration reads:

... all maintenance of and repairs to any unit shall be made by the owner of such unit, and each owner shall be responsible for all damage to any and all other units and to the common elements, that his failure to so do may engender, save and except such damage to the common elements as may be covered by insurance ...

[para31] Article XV of the declaration sets out the insurance the corporation must obtain. S.6 provides:

All policies of insurance ... shall insure the interest of the corporation and the owners ... and shall contain waivers against the corporation and the owners ...

[para32] Article XVI and by-law No.5 contain identical indemnification clauses:

Each owner shall indemnify the corporation against loss, cost, damage or injury caused to the common elements because of the act or omission of such owner or the residents of his unit or by any guest of such owner or resident, except for any loss, cost, damage or injury caused by an insured (as defined in any policy of insurance), and insured against by the corporation.

[para33] There is nothing in the declaration or by-laws which specifically states a tenant is covered by the insurance. The combined effect of the Condominium Act and the declaration is to place the risk of "ordinary damage" to the units due to any cause on the owner. However, the plaintiff has assumed the risk of damage due to fire and other major perils as required by statute. The owner is responsible for damage to the common elements caused by his failure to repair unless it is covered by insurance. The owner is also responsible for any damage to the common elements caused personally or by residents or guests unless caused by an insured and insured against by the corporation. But the risks the owner must insure against are the "ordinary risk of damage". The corporation must insure against "fire" and "major perils". As noted, the L&T Act places all risk of damage by a tenant on the tenant, whether his negligence causes ordinary damage or fire or a major peril.

[para34] The Act, declaration and by-laws put in place a scheme to deal with damage by fire. The corporation obtains coverage on behalf of itself and the owners. They have a "deemed" insurable interest. They have waived subrogation rights against each other. The scheme is similar to "builder's risk" insurance used in the construction industry whereby the owner of a project obtains coverage for everyone involved including sub-contractors. The cost of premiums and litigation after a loss are reduced. Everyone benefits. Condominium insurance has a similar function. The corporation and the owners avoid claims against each other and the need to purchase a multiplicity of possibly overlapping policies. Although it would seem equitable and efficient to include tenants in the coverage scheme, none of the Act, declaration or by-laws do so. The only clear requirement in this regard is S. 93(3) of the L&T Act which mandates the tenant assume responsibility for his own negligence. [para35] In summary, the landlord/owner has a right of action against his tenant for damage caused by the latter's negligence. This legal right has not been altered. The plaintiff's insurer, Chateau, may thus subrogate unless the policy itself prevents it.

(b) Whether any right of subrogation has been modified by the policy and/or whether the policy covers the tenant as an "unnamed insured".

[para37] The Condominium Act defines "owner" as "... the owner or owners of the freehold estate or estates in a unit and common interest, but does not include a mortgagee unless in possession." It does not include tenants. There is no statutory requirement for the plaintiff to provide insurance coverage for tenants.

[para38] The declaration provides "... the terms used herein shall have ascribed to them the definitions contained in the Act." The few specific areas in the by-laws and rules and regulations where occupants and tenants are included with owners are those which relate to the use and occupation of property. Tenants are not included in any provisions of any of these documents where they govern property, title or ownership interests.

[para39] The meaning of "owner" should not be judicially extended to include tenants. Unit owners are responsible for many things for which tenants are not. The primary purpose of the declaration and the by-laws is to define the relationship between the corporation and the owners. The terms are clear and do not include tenants, either in the definitions or with reference to the significant rights and obligations of each of them. Owner has the meaning given it in the Condominium Act. It is not ambiguous. There is no need to invoke the contra proferentum rule. Further, I find there is no relevance to the change from "registered unit owners" to "unit owners" when defining the named insured.

[para41] For the tenants to be included as unnamed insureds they must show they had an insurable interest. Here the policy exempts personal property. In Morawietz v. Morawietz, [1986] (C.A.), the Court of Appeal held the 18 year old son of the owners of property who was resident with them at the time his negligence caused a fire, was not covered by his parents insurance for his negligence because he did not have an insurable interest in his parents' house. [para42] In Esagonal Construction Ltd. v. Traina, [1994] (Gen. Div.), Farley J. discussed what was necessary for a party to qualify as an "unnamed insured". Although the provider of supplies was not explicitly covered, the court found it was an unnamed insured because property owned by it was explicitly included under "property insured". He was also influenced by the purpose of builder's risk insurance and the practical benefits of the owner of a project obtaining coverage for all involved. He specifically addressed the meaning of a subrogation clause with identical wording to the clause in the Chateau policy in this case. He found the waiver extended to the defendant in that case because the "other interest" was ambiguous and the contra proferentum rule applied in its favour. He found the defendant was the "other interest" because its property was covered by the insurance. Here, the tenants property is not covered by the Chateau policy. Even the tenants did not consider it to be covered. They purchased their own contents and automobile insurance.

[para43] The defendants are not covered by the plaintiff's insurance. Chateau will be permitted to subrogate against the defendants.

[para44] Judgment to the plaintiffs for $25,182.48 plus pre and post judgment interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act. Party/party costs to the plaintiff after assessment.

CHAPNIK J.:--

INTRODUCTION

[para1] In early 1989, Townsgate I Limited ("Townsgate") initiated its promotional marketing of a luxury condominium project located at the intersection of Bathurst Street and Steeles Avenue in Vaughan Township. As part of its marketing efforts, invitations were sent to prospective purchasers to attend a special preview showing of the proposed development.

[para2] The grand opening extended over a three-day weekend in February 1989, and a picture emerges of a scene on those three days which is not a pretty one. It is a picture of individuals swept up in a frenzy of opportunity where common sense was overtaken by avarice, and traditional attributes of propriety, professionalism and integrity disintegrated into a contest of financial wit.

[para3] Shortly thereafter, the bubble burst with the dramatic collapse of the real estate market and the sad realization that no pot of gold lay at the end of the rainbow.

OVERVIEW

[para5] I do not mind saying at the outset that this decision has caused me considerable chagrin, not because of the magnitude of the case, comprising about 50 witnesses and more than 100 exhibits, and involving several millions of dollars, but because both parties stand fervently behind a strong position and the circumstances are somewhat unique.

[para7] The decision is rendered more difficult, however, where in addition to anxious purchasers, one is confronted with an anxious vendor, one who acted precipitously and who perhaps also became caught up in the avid frenzy of the hot real estate market. If the vendor were disreputable or acting in bad faith, again, the decision would be facilitated. But that is not the case here. In this rather peculiar circumstance, we are dealing with a seasoned builder of good repute who had accumulated considerable experience in the land development business.

[para9] Unfortunately, in attempting to embrace or advance the wonders of free enterprise, attributes of avarice and arrogance often underlie the issues; and that is what makes this so difficult.

BACKGROUND FACTS

[para10] The factual background underpinning this dispute may be summarized as follows:

1. Townsgate was the developer of a luxury, state-of-the-art residential condominium project consisting of two highrise buildings or towers located at the intersection of Bathurst Street and Steeles Avenue in the City of Vaughan. Townsgate commenced marketing the project near the end of 1988, and sent invitations to prospective purchasers to attend at the sales pavilion for the grand opening scheduled to be held in February 1989, providing them with an opportunity to take advantage of "special preview prices".

2. In February or March 1989, each of the plaintiffs entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with Townsgate to purchase a unit or part thereof in the complex.

3. The majority of units were purchased during the grand opening presentation to the public held on February 24, 25, and 26, 1989. Although 160 of the 220 available units were initially sold that weekend, approximately 70 purchasers cancelled their respective agreements within the ten-day cooling-off period provided for in the Condominium Act. In the end, 90 agreements of purchase and sale signed on the initial opening weekend remained, of which 45 completed their transactions.

4. The agreements of purchase and sale consisted of standard form contracts with a purchase price in the range of $284,000 to $383,000, the majority being about $340,000.

5. Norman Hill Realty Inc. ("Norman Hill") acted as the real estate agency retained by Townsgate to effect sales of the units. At or near the commencement of trial, the claims against Norman Hill and the individual named defendants, being Harvey Kauffman, Aggie Berk, Sylvia Gold, Jim Stodgill, and George Kerr, were withdrawn by the plaintiffs.

6. At the time of sale, the condominium market in the City of Vaughan reflected a generally inflated real estate market described as a "seller's market".

7. By the end of 1989, about ten months after the purchase, the real estate market was in rapid decline, and the recession continued into 1990 and following. Townsgate advertised drastic reductions in respect of units similar to those purchased by the plaintiffs.

8. In the early part of 1990, Townsgate issued a newsletter offering prospective purchasers a repurchase proposal involving what was termed as a risk-free guaranteed investment.

9. In or around February 1991, several of the purchasers formed an association to find ways to deal with the situation, in the main, to attempt to negotiate a better deal and/or to retain legal counsel.

10. In March 1991, Townsgate offered most, if not all, of the purchasers a 15 per cent reduction in the purchase price of their units in exchange for payment of a further deposit and an undertaking to close their transactions. Of the 90 purchasers who had bought units at or near the opening weekend, 45 accepted the offer.

11. The original projected closing dates of March to June 1991 were extended by the vendor to permit occupancy in the fall of 1991.

12. These proceedings were instituted on August 2, 1991.

13. Having repudiated the agreements, the remaining 35 plaintiffs (some have settled their disputes) bring this lawsuit involving 23 units, and seek the return of their deposits, each in the sum of $40,000. Collectively, they contest the legality of the contracts on the basis of alleged deficiencies in ownership, noncompliance with the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. 0.31), and the regulations thereunder (R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 892); the Ontario Building Code Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 51; and the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 466, as amended (now R.S.O. 1990, c. S.5, as amended). In addition, several of the plaintiffs assert claims of negligence, misrepresentation and breach of contract, and they rely upon the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26).

[para12] To the extent that any of the above factors prove to be a matter of dispute, they may be viewed as my findings of fact on the evidence.

OWNERSHIP ISSUE

[para13] The plaintiffs contend that, as at February and March 1989, when the agreements were executed, Townsgate had no title to the property, and, thus, no interest in land to convey as vendor.

[para15] Clearly, then, Townsgate did not own the property at the time of execution of the purchase and sale documents; 652 was the initial owner of the land. It is noted, however, that pursuant to the trust documents, both 652 and Townsgate, as the developer, acted as bare trustees for the same four beneficial owners, Zagjo Holdings Limited, Barian Holdings Limited, MLB Investments Ltd., and Sabel Holdings Limited, in the identical designated amounts; that is, their respective interests were coincidental.

[para17] The condominium registration process inevitably creates a delay from the time an agreement of purchase and sale is entered into until the time a developer is able to deliver a registrable transfer of title and close the transaction. In the instant case, as in the Victoria Homes situation, the objection does not go to the root of title. Any deficiency in title was semantic and, in my view, inconsequential. Townsgate would have been in a position to give proper title at the relevant time had the transactions closed.

[para18] Moreover, it was only upon the commencement of these proceedings that the plaintiffs took the position that title was in issue. In general, the jurisprudence holds that purchasers must act reasonably, in good faith, and in a timely fashion if they have objections to title. It is incumbent upon them to search title and raise timely objections, if necessary. By their lengthy delay in raising this issue and the lack of positive steps taken to rectify the matter earlier, the plaintiffs are now estopped from doing so.

THE SECURITIES ACT

[para19] The plaintiffs contend that the agreements of purchase and sale are void for non-compliance with securities legislation. Sections 24(1) and 52(1) of the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 466, as amended (now R.S.O. 1990, c. S.5), read:

24(1) No person or company shall,

(a) trade in a security unless the person or company is registered as a dealer, or is registered as a salesman or as a partner or as an officer of a registered dealer and is acting on behalf of the dealer;

and the registration has been made in accordance with this Act and the Regulation and the person or company has received notice of the registration from the director and, where the registration is subject to terms and conditions, the person or company complies with such terms and conditions.

52(1) No person or company shall trade in a security on his own account or on behalf of any other person or company ... unless a preliminary prospectus and a prospectus have been filed and receipts therefor obtained from the director.

[para20] A contract to trade in securities where the trader is not registered in accordance with the Act, is illegal: Re Ontario Securities Commission and British Canadian Commodity Options Ltd. (1979), 93 D.L.R. (3d) 208 (H.C.). In that case, due to the non-registration of the trader, purchasers of the securities were held to be entitled to rescission of their agreements including recovery of the purchase price paid for the shares.

[para21] In the instant case, plaintiffs' counsel alleges that the agreements of purchase and sale constitute "a security" within the meaning of the Act. The definition of a security pursuant to section 1(1) of the Act includes:

(b) any document constituting evidence of title to or interest in the capital, assets, property, profits, earnings or royalties of any person or company,

(n) any investment contract, other than an investment contract within the meaning of the Investment Contracts Act. ...

[para22] The nexus of the plaintiffs' argument was based on the following:

(1) The vendors' agents focused their sales pitch to the purchasers on the investment element of the transaction;

(2) The building was not built at the time of sale;

(3) The vendor was not the owner of the land; (4) The vendor did not have any agreement to purchase the land;

(5) The vendor did not have any assets;

(6) The vendor used the purchasers' deposit monies; and

(7) The vendor had an option to proceed with or cancel the project (clause 36) at its sole discretion. If it chose not to proceed, the purchasers would forfeit all interest accrued on their $40,000 deposits.

[para23] The objective of securities legislation is the protection of the investing public through full, true and plain disclosure of all material facts relating to the securities being issued. Re Ontario Securities Commission and Brigadoon Scotch Distributors (Canada) Ltd. (1970), 3 O.R. 714 (H.C.), at page 717.

[para24] As a consequence, investors in public offerings are statutorily protected by the enforced disclosure of all relevant information. This facilitates an appreciation of the risks involved in making the investment. Nevertheless, the legislature has left the term "investment contract" without literal meaning. According to Laskin C.J.C., to define the term "would bring within the scope of the Securities Act innumerable transactions which have no public aspect."

[para25] Does Townsgate's enterprise fall within the rubric of the Act, as a security investment contract? In the leading case in Canada, Re Pacific Coast Coin Exchange of Canada Ltd. v. Ontario Securities Commission, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 112, the Supreme Court adopted two tests formulated in the American jurisprudence. First, the "common enterprise" test developed by the United States Supreme Court in S.E.C. v. W.J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293 (1946):

[w]hether the scheme involves an investment of money in a common enterprise with profits to come solely from the efforts of others; and if that test be satisfied, it is immaterial whether the enterprise is speculative or nonspeculative or whether there is a sale of property with or without intrinsic value.

[para26] Secondly, what has become known as the "risk capital" approach, as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Hawaii in State of Hawaii v. Hawaii Market Center. Inc. 485 P 2d 105 (1971). The court held that "the subjection of the investor's money to the risks of an enterprise over which he exercises no managerial control is the basic economic reality of a security transaction." The jurisprudence establishes the following elements as comprising an "investment contract":

(1) An offeree furnishes initial value to an offeror;

(2) a portion of this initial value is subjected to the risks of the enterprise;

(3) the furnishing of the initial value is induced by the offeror's promises or representations which give rise to a reasonable understanding that a valuable benefit of some kind, over and above the initial value, will accrue to the offeree as a result of the operation of the enterprise; and

(4) the offeree does not receive the right to exercise practical and actual control over the managerial decisions of the enterprise.

[para27] In United Housing Foundation, Inc. v. Forman, 421 U.S. 837 (1975), the U.S. Supreme Court examined whether shares of stock which entitled a purchaser to lease an apartment in a massive co-operative housing project constituted securities within the meaning of the relevant legislation. The court described the purchasers' objective as primarily relating to the acquisition of housing rather than investment for profit. The operation of the facilities was held to be incidental to the project as a whole. The shares did not, therefore, constitute "investment contracts" within the scope of the federal securities laws.

[para28] In determining the applicability of the relevant legislation to real estate sales, the court in Johnson v. Nationwide Industries, Inc., 450 F. Supp. 948 (1978): (U.S. Dist. Ct.), relied upon the following guidelines established by the Securities and Exchange Commission, 1973:

The offer of real estate as such, without any collateral arrangements with the seller or others, does not involve the offer of a security ... The existence of various kinds of collateral arrangements may cause an offering of condominium units to involve and offering of investment contracts or interests in a profit-sharing agreement. The presence of such arrangements indicates that the offeror is offering an opportunity through which the purchaser may earn a return on his investment through the managerial efforts of the promoters or a third party in their operation of the enterprise. (Emphasis added.)

[para29] On the other hand, a release issued by the Ontario Securities Commission dated October 11, 1988 (see O.S.C.B. Rep. 4171) concluded that certain residential real estate investment opportunities being offered in various urban areas in Ontario at that time constituted the distribution of securities. The offerings were described in these terms:

Most of the offerings involved the sale of individual units or undivided interests in residential housing developments together with the provision to investors by the offering's promoter of optional benefits such as minimum rent guarantees, cash flow deficiency guarantees and rental management services, with the result that the purchaser relies heavily on the efforts and financial stability of the promoter for the success of the investment.

[para30] The Ontario Securities Commission in 1992 analyzed the substance of a proposed sale of a parcel of undeveloped land on the island of Aruba. The transaction involved the purchase of undivided interests in the property as tenants-in-common, by potential purchasers who were required to enter into co-tenancy agreements for the management and control of the property. In concluding that the interests could not be characterized as a security, the Commission stated at page 10:

There is nothing in the Co-Tenancy Agreement itself that deals with any interest in anything except the interest of the co-tenants themselves in their own property. It is their interest and it is their property.

(Sunfour Estates N.V. United Power Corporation and 949320 Ontario Ltd. (1992), 15 O.S.C.B. Rep. 269).

[para31] As was noted by Laskin C.J.C. in his dissenting opinion in Pacific Coast, at page 340, "spot purchases are clearly outside of the Securities Act."

[para32] In the case at bar, I have no difficulty whatsoever in finding that the nature and intent of the subject agreements do not constitute investment contracts or securities within the meaning of the legislation, whichever test is utilized.

[para34] None of the factors relied upon by the plaintiffs suffice to characterize the agreements as anything more than a real estate venture; nor does Mr. Kauffman's definition of a speculator or investor as being anyone who purchases a condominium two years in advance. What agents do or do not say cannot change the intrinsic substantive nature of the enterprise. In my respectful view, the securities laws do not apply to this situation.

ILLEGALITY

[para35] The plaintiffs also contest the validity and enforceability of the purchase and sale agreements as a result of the builder's failure to comply with various legislative provisions contained in the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act ("ONHWPA"), the Building Code, and the Condominium Act. The relevant provisions are listed below:

The Ontario New Home Warranty Plan Act

1(a) "builder" means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner;

(1) "sell" includes entering into an agreement to sell;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner.

6. No person shall act as a vendor or builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

7.(1) An applicant is entitled to registration by the Registrar except where,

(c) the applicant is a corporation and,

(i) having regard to its financial position, it cannot reasonably be expected to be financially responsible in the conduct of its undertakings, or

(ii) the past conduct of its officers or directors affords reasonable grounds for belief that its undertakings will not be carried on in accordance with law and with integrity and honesty; or

(d) in the case of an application for registration as a builder, the applicant does not have sufficient technical competence to consistently perform the warranties.

(2) A registration is subject to such terms and conditions to give effect to the purposes of this Act as are consented to by the applicant or imposed by the Tribunal or prescribed by the regulations.

(3) A registration is not transferable.

11. - (1) The Ontario New Home Warranties Plan is continued under the name Ontario New Home Warranties Plan in English and Régime de garanties des logements neufs de l'Ontario in French and is comprised of the warranties and the guarantee fund and compensation provided for by this Act.

(2) When a vendor enters into a contract for the sale of a home to an owner or for the construction of a home for an owner, the vendor shall deliver to the owner such documentation and notices respecting the Plan as are prescribed in the regulations.

22. - (1) Every person who,

(b) contravenes section 6 or 12 or subsection 18(4), and every director or officer of a corporation who knowingly concurs in such furnishing or contravention is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $25,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or to both.

Regulation 726, R.R.O. 1980, section 2(a):

2. In connection with the sale or construction of a home, ... the following documents ... shall be delivered under the Plan

(a) at the time of execution by the vendor and purchaser of a purchase agreement, the vendor shall deliver to the purchaser a deposit receipt.

[para36] It is also noted that section 3.3 of the Ontario New Home Warranty Program Vendor Builder Agreement signed by Townsgate requires the builder to post security prior to the commencement of construction, marketing or selling of units in a condominium project, whichever occurs first.

The Building Code:

5(1) No person shall construct or demolish or cause to be constructed or demolished a building in a municipality unless a permit has been issued therefor by the chief official.

6(1) The chief official shall issue a permit except where,

(b) the applicant is a builder as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and is not registered under that Act.

24(1) Every person who

(e) contravenes this Act or the regulations or any by-law passed under the authorization of this Act and every director or officer of a corporation who knowingly concurs ... is guilty of an offence.

The Condominium Act:

53. - (1) All money received by or on behalf of a proposed declarant from a purchaser on account of a sale or an agreement for the purchase and sale of a proposed unit for residential purposes before the registration of the declaration and description, other than money paid as rent or as an occupancy charge, shall, despite the registration of the declaration and description thereafter, be held in trust by the person receiving such money for the person entitled thereto in respect of the agreement and such money shall be held in a separate account designated as a trust account at a bank listed in Schedule I or II to the Bank Act (Canada) or trust corporation or a loan corporation or credit union authorized by law to receive money on deposit or a Province of Ontario Savings Office until,

(a) its disposition to the person entitled thereto; or

(b) delivery of a prescribed security to the purchaser for repayment.

55. Every person who knowingly contravenes subsection 53(1) ... Is guilty of an offence.

Regulation 121, section 35(2), which reads:

A deposit receipt executed by the warranty corporation providing for compensation to a purchaser is prescribed security for the purposes of clause 53(1)(b) of the Act.

1. Townsgate entered into the agreements of purchase and sale as vendor prior to being registered under the Ontario New Home Warranty Program (the "program") in contravention of section 6 of the ONHWPA.
2. Being a bare trustee, Townsgate did not sell the units "on its own behalf" as mandated by section 1(n) of that Act.
3. No deposit receipt was provided to purchasers concurrent with the execution of the agreements of purchase and sale in accordance with Regulation 726.
4. Prior to the provision of the deposit receipts to purchasers, Townsgate transferred a portion of the purchasers' deposit cheques to a related company, thereby utilizing the monies in contravention of section 53(1) of the Condominium Act.
5. The application for a building permit was made in the name of 652 as builder, using Townsgate's registration number which was not transferable under the Act.
6. Construction of the project proceeded for a period of approximately 10 months without a building permit, in contravention of section 5(1) of the Building Code; nor was Townsgate registered under the ONHWPA at the time the permit application was submitted.
7. Townsgate commenced marketing the project in the fall of 1988, or early 1989, in advance of providing the prescribed security under the ONHWPA, in contravention of the above-mentioned builder's agreement.

[para38] According to Mr. Teplitsky, the above infractions are determinative of this lawsuit. The contracts are void ab initio on grounds of illegality and the plaintiffs are entitled to the remedy of rescission, including the return of their deposits. [para39] Townsgate does not deny the occurrence of the above transgressions, but views them as minor, inconsequential and not compromising of the parties' rights or obligations under the agreements. In his submissions, Mr. Sternberg emphasized the following:

1. In early February 1989, Townsgate applied to the program for registration under the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan. Carol Ann Street, counsel with the program confirmed receipt from Townsgate on February 14, 1989, of a completed registration kit consisting of an application and project summary along with guarantees and fully paid enrolment fees; and further receipt on or before February 22, 1989, of a letter of credit from the vendor in the amount of $4.5 million (based on $20,000 per unit). Formal registration of the project endorsed by the Registrar on March 29, 1989, was confirmed by letter to Townsgate dated March 30, 1989. Although the units in question were sold in February and March 1989, whereas registration of the project was not given until March 29, 1989, no further actions or documentation were required of Townsgate in the interim.
2. The consumer protection aspect of the ONHWPA existed to protect purchasers' interests from the time of entry into the agreements of purchase and sale regardless of registration.
3. All four of the beneficial owners involved in the land development project were viable companies which supplied the necessary information and guarantees on behalf of Townsgate in advance of the sales.
4. Although HUDAC deposit receipts were not provided upon execution of the agreement they were delivered to the plaintiffs a few months later, in August and September 1989.
5. Prior to the provision of the deposit receipts, Townsgate did utilize part of the purchasers' deposit cheques for construction purposes since it had already provided the necessary security through the plan. 6. Townsgate paid a fine of $100,000 to the Town of Vaughan as a penalty for commencing the construction without a building permit. Although the application for a permit was submitted August 22, 1989, and the construction commenced almost immediately thereafter, the issue date on the permit was October 24, 1990.

[para40] Admittedly, Mr. Zagdanski was actively involved in the decision to begin construction prior to the attaining of the building permit. At the same time, he professed to be unaware of the other statutory infringements and attested to the intention of the principals of the company to proceed with the construction of the project in a timely manner and in compliance with all relevant rules and regulations.

[para41] The jurisprudence in cases of alleged illegality rests upon the general principle that a contract expressly or impliedly prohibited by statute is void: Re Northwestern Trust Co., McAskill's Case, [1926] S.C.R. 412.

[para42] That principle was reiterated in Meyers v. Freeholders Oil Co. Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 761, where a section in the then securities legislation which prohibited salespersons calling at a private residence to trade in securities was invoked in an attempt to nullify trades in shares of a mining lease. The court held that the prohibition against salespersons calling at investors' homes to sell securities did not constitute part of the fundamental scheme of protecting the public against unauthorized trading; the penalty prescribed was the only remedy and the sale was not void. The analysis of Martland J. at pages 774-775 is instructive as to the proper approach the courts should take in such matters:

The determination of the effect of the breach of a statutory provision upon a contract is often a difficult one and must, of course, depend upon the terms and the intent of the provision under consideration. In some cases the statute clearly forbids the making of a certain kind of contract. In such a case the contract cannot be valid if it is in breach of the provision.

On the other hand, some statutes have been construed as only imposing a penalty, where the Act provides for one, although that is not necessarily the result of a penalty provision being incorporated in the Act. Lord Esher posed the question which must be determined in Mellis v. Shirley Local Board [(1885), 16 Q.B.D. 446 at 451] as follows:

"Although a statute contains no express words making void a contract which it prohibits, yet, when it inflicts a penalty for the breach of the prohibition, you must consider the whole Act as well as the particular enactment in question, and come to a decision, either from the context or the subject matter, whether the penalty is imposed with intent merely to deter persons from entering into the contract, or for the purposes of revenue, or whether it is intended that the contract shall not be entered into so as to be valid at law." (My emphasis).

[para46] Our courts have consistently refused to entertain actions brought by persons seeking a remedy based upon an illegal contract where the party suing does not lie within the group of persons for whose protection the prohibiting statute was passed: see Sidmay Ltd. v. Wehttam Investments Ltd., [1967] 1 O.R. 508, aff'd [1968] S.C.R. 828. In applying the reasoning expounded in Sidmay, Grange J. (as he then was) granted rescission of contracts to purchasers of securities from an unregistered trader: Re Ontario Securities Commission and Canadian Commodity Options Ltd. (1979), 93 D.L.R. (3d) 208. Similarly, in Jones v. F.H. Deacon Hodgson Inc. (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 540, Henry J. held the sale of shares by a defendant who had not filed a securities prospectus to be void and not merely voidable; and the court in Trudeau Motors Ltd. v. Elliot (1989), 70 O.R. (2d) 762 (Dist. Ct.), denied a claim for payment for repairs done to an automobile where the customer's prior authorization had not been obtained, as required by statute.

[para48] In Sidmay, Laskin J.A. (as he then was) endorsed the following principle expressed by the American Law Institute, Restatement of the Law of Contracts, paragraph 601, page 1116:

If refusal to enforce or to rescind an illegal bargain would produce a harmful effect on the parties for whose protection the law making the bargain illegal exists, enforcement or rescission, whichever is appropriated is allowed.

[para49] In Bognar v. Borg (1989), 40 C.L.R. 286 (Ont. Dist. Ct.), the application of that proposition to a situation similar in nature to the one faced by this court led to a finding that an agreement to construct a new residence was illegal and void. The plaintiffs had made progress payments but the house was never completed. They subsequently brought an action for the return of their payments and the defendants counterclaimed for a deficiency in the sale of the residence to a third party. Since the defendants had never registered as builders under the ONHWPA, the court found the original agreement to be illegal and unenforceable. In doing so, Fleury D.C.J. conducted an extensive review of the relevant legal principles and the purpose and intent of the legislation as a whole. At page 293 of the judgment, he states:

In the case at Bar, we are faced with a statute enacted by the Ontario Legislature. It clearly stipulates that "No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act" (s. 6). It comes within the second general principle identified by Lord Devlin [St. John Shipping, supra, at p. 687 of All E.R.], "a contract which is expressly or impliedly prohibited by statute." In light of the definition of "builder" contained in s. 1(a) of the Act as "a person who undertakes the performance of all the work," there appears to be a clear prohibition against the undertaking described in the contract which the parties signed. As such, it would appear to be an illegal contract. And there would be no need to look at the intent of the parties.

[para50] In his submissions, Mr. Sternberg distinguished the facts in the present case from those in Bognar. The distinguishing elements are exemplified at page 288, where the court observed:

It is clear that the defendants failed to comply with any of the applicable provisions of the Act until well after the plaintiffs had purported to consider the contract as at an end because of the defendants' breach.

[para52] I am also mindful of the short time span involved whereby the majority of the agreements of purchase and sale were signed on the weekend of February 24, 1989 and the registration of the project confirmed on March 29, 1989, a period of about one month. I take particular cognizance of the $4.5 million security bond posted by the vendor in advance of the sales. A copy of that irrevocable letter of credit dated February 15, 1989, is attached as Schedule A to these reasons.

[para53] The ONHWPA was first enacted in 1976 in order to regulate the construction of residential dwellings in Ontario. It provides for the establishment of a registry of vendors and builders who pay fees to a designated corporation and a guarantee fund for compensation of owners who may assert a claim for breach of any of the warranties required by the Act. An applicant's entitlement to registration is subject to a determination that he will carry out the undertakings and warranties in a responsible fashion. Section 6 of the Act prohibits anyone from acting as a builder or vendor (selling or entering into an agreement to sell) without being registered. Section 7 provides the grounds for authorization and for a hearing before the commission when the registrar intends to refuse to issue it. Registration is non-transferable and may be subject to terms and conditions to give effect to the purposes of the Act. The registration requirement was described by the Court of Appeal in Brownstone East Limited Partnership v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 545, at page 554, as being "a mechanism by which major objectives of the Act may be achieved" -- being the examination of the builder's technical competence to consistently perform the statutory warranties, as well as its financial responsibility, integrity and honesty. Accordingly, the general intent of the statute is to afford protection to the public against sales of homes by builders or vendors who have not satisfied the registrar as to their proper qualifications.

[para54] In this case, the builder was clearly not unscrupulous, financially irresponsible or technically incompetent, much to the contrary. The legislation does not discriminate, however, between levels of applicants prior to completion of the process of authorization. By its clear and unambiguous prohibition in section 6, the Act leaves unimpaired the principle that a breach of its injunction results in a sale of a property that is void. An applicant cannot supersede the authority of the registrar by assuming registration in advance of a ruling. To apply the prohibition only in hindsight would, in my view, defeat the implied, if not express, intention of the legislature. After all, a builder's circumstances may change from one project to another; and if the courts were to allow lenience, where would the line be drawn? In this case, the relevant information was forwarded to the program just prior to the sales taking place; what if it had proved to be incomplete or inadequate in some respect; or it had been filed after the sales -- would a week suffice, a month, any time prior to closing?

[para55] The legislation provides that absent registration, no person shall sell to the public. Thus, not only must the documents be filed but the registrar must be satisfied that the application is not contrary to the public interest. There can be no question but that the filing and its acceptance by the registrar is fundamental to the protection of members of the public who are contemplating the purchase of a condominium. The effect of section 6 is to prohibit the sale of condominiums to the public without prior acceptance by the registrar. In my view, the prohibition in section 6 of the Act is fundamental to the nature and purpose of the regulatory scheme.

[para56] To be sure, the facts of this particular case make this finding difficult to accept; however, in cases of illegality involving the breach of an express statutory prohibition, intention is clearly irrelevant. It is a matter of public policy and the absence of a registration certificate is, by itself, sufficient to prevent a sale from occurring or to render a transaction void. Although the result of insisting upon strict compliance may well on occasion lead to injustice, one can only assume that the legislature considered that when it passed the Act.

[para57] An examination of the penalty provisions of the Act (sections 19 and 22(1)) discloses no reference to a civil remedy for a third party and no provision that expressly deprives a purchaser of his or her common law remedy resulting from a breach of section 6.

[para58] If one were to review the three factors outlined by Mr. Justice Krever in Royal Bank of Canada v. Grobman, supra, as elements the court should weigh, the likely result would be the same. Serious consequences undoubtedly flow from the finding of invalidity in respect of an executed agreement of purchase and sale. Large amounts of money are at stake, particularly when several purchasers join their claims. However, negligent building of residential condominium units without proper warranty protection for purchasers, can also have serious consequences, and the program, through the use of the guarantee fund, makes the entire construction industry responsible for compensation of aggrieved purchasers of residential homes. The social utility of the prohibition is self-evident. It is imperative to have guidelines for builders of residential property in the public interest. This is by no means a trivial matter. The third aspect lies squarely in favour of the plaintiffs who clearly fall within the class of persons for whose benefit this section was enacted.

[para62] The underlying rationale for this approach was aptly recognized in an early decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Bank of Toronto v. Perkins (1883), 8 S.C.R. 603, at page 610, per Ritchie C.J.:

It would be a curious state of the law if, after the Legislature had prohibited a transaction, parties could enter into it, and, in defiance of the law, compel courts to enforce and give effect to their illegal transactions. (as noted by Professor S. Waddams in The Law of Contracts, 2d ed. (1984), at page 421; and cited with approval in William E. Thomson Associates Inc. v. Carpenter (1989), 69 O.R. (2d) 545 (C.A.), at page 551).

[para63] Finally, I take some comfort in the fact that but for the breach, the plaintiffs may well have never entered into the within agreements of purchase and sale; that is, the practical effect of the illegality in a rapidly changing market, was crucial. A comment made by Elan Beer, purchaser of a condominium whose case was settled prior to trial and who appeared as a witness for the plaintiffs, is illustrative of this. Mr. Beer returned to the sales office a few days after signing his agreement on February 25, 1989. When asked why he did so, he included in his reasons the fact that "there was talk (at the time) in the media" regarding "the potential of the hot market subsiding and, of course, that worried me." Timing undoubtedly becomes a significant factor in a volatile market. The principals of Townsgate, as experienced, sophisticated builders and developers of real estate properties, knew or ought to have known the laws under which they were proceeding. Compliance with the express statutory prohibition contained in section 6 of the ONHWPA must not be impaired by anxious builders who may wish to "jump the gun".

[para65] In light of that finding, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the other alleged and actual breaches of statute. Suffice to say that none of them involved the breach of an express statutory prohibition precedent to the formation of a contract; and that upon a rather cursory glance and, in general, they do not appear to constitute an integral part of the relevant legislation such as to bear fundamental effect. Moreover, in some instances such as the breaches of the Building Code provisions, the statutory penalties appear to be inherently comprehensive, and the prohibition imposed for purposes of revenue and deterrence, rather than with intent to render the impugned contracts invalid. I am reminded of the cautionary words of Professor Waddams that if every statutory illegality in the performance of a contract, however trivial, invalidated the agreement, the result would be "an unjust and haphazard allocation of law without regard to any rational principles" (S.M. Waddams, The Law of Contracts, 3d ed. (1993), at page 381). The practical considerations in accordance with commercial reality would permit some level of infringement in these circumstances.

[para66] The final issue revolves around the status of the purchasers' deposits. It has been said that where a contract is illegal because it is prohibited by statute, neither party may expect assistance from the court. In considering whether the plaintiff Purchaser was entitled to the return of progress payments made pursuant to the illegal contract; the court in Bognar, supra, cited the following statement made by Lord Atkin in Anderson Ltd. v. Daniel, [1924] 1 K.B. 138 (C.A.), at page 149:

The question of illegality in a contract generally arises in connection with its formation, but it may also arise, as it does here, in connection with its performance. In the former case, where the parties have agreed to something which is prohibited by Act of Parliament, it is indisputable that the contract is unenforceable by either party. [para67] In Bognar, since the illegality was attributable to the defendants only, the plaintiffs as innocent parties, were held to be entitled to the return of their progress payments. Similarly, the plaintiff purchasers are entitled to the return of their deposits paid to the vendor pursuant to a contract which is void.

[para68] I shall proceed to discuss the other claims raised by the plaintiffs in the event that my conclusion on the issue of illegality should be proven incorrect.

MISREPRESENTATION

[para69] A plaintiff seeking damages in an action for negligent misrepresentation is entitled to be put in the position he or she would have been in had the misrepresentation not been made: see Rainbow Industrial Caterers Ltd. v. C.N.R. Co. (1991), 84 D.L.R. (4th) 291 (S.C.C.), at page 296.

[para70] All of the plaintiffs recall having signed their agreements in an atmosphere of extreme "hype" allegedly created by the actions of the vendor or its agents. According to the purchasers of 18 of the units, they were induced to enter into their agreements by virtue of false representations made to them by one of the vendor's agents. The specific allegations of misrepresentation are contained in paragraphs 10 through 16 of the statement of claim, which are reproduced below:

10. The Plaintiffs plead that Townsgate, Hill [being Norman Hill Realty Inc.] and the Representatives deliberately created an atmosphere of excessive hype and pressure with respect to the sale of the units which, coupled with the misrepresentation as hereinafter set out, misled and induced the Plaintiffs to enter into agreements of purchase and sale. In pursuance of their activities as aforesaid, the Defendants did the following:

- a) distributed invitations to prospective purchasers indicating that the units were being offered at a "special preview price";
- b) sent out invitations to prospective purchasers setting out a specific time for them to attend and then deliberately having them wait outdoors in line for hours in order to create the impression that the units were significantly in demand;
- c) misled the prospective purchasers into believing that the market value of their units was rapidly increasing by systematically raising the asking prices for units and representing to prospective purchasers that the prices were rising while the prospective purchasers were waiting to decide whether or not to purchase;
- d) specifically advised prospective purchasers that there were virtually no units left for sale and that if they did not immediately sign an agreement of purchase and sale they would lose the opportunity to make a risk free investment;
- e) advised prospective purchasers that if they did not immediately sign an agreement of purchase and sale they would lose the opportunity to make a risk free investment;
- f) presented prospective purchasers with a multi page agreement of purchase and sale and pressuring them to sign the agreement without reading it and did not provide them with an environment in which the agreement could be read; and
- g) handed to prospective purchasers a large binder containing the disclosure statement and suggesting to them that this document was simply a formality and that they need not review it.

11. The Plaintiffs plead that the Defendants' conduct as aforesaid was calculated to mislead and manipulate prospective purchasers and to pressure them into signing agreements of purchase and sale.

12. The Plaintiffs plead that upon entering the sales office, they were met by Kauffman, Berk, Kerr, Gold and/or Stodgill, ("the Representatives") sales representatives employed by or acting on behalf of Townsgate. These Representatives made the following representations to the Plaintiffs:

- a) that their investment in the units was guaranteed and risk free;
- b) that if the market value of the units was to decrease, the Defendant would repurchase the units from the plaintiffs at their original price if requested to do so;
- c) that if the market value of the units was to decrease, the Defendant would not decrease the selling price but would stop selling the units;
- d) that both Townsgate 1 and 2 would be built simultaneously or within a very short time of each other so that the plaintiffs would not be living in a construction zone for any period of time. 13. The Representatives also represented to the plaintiffs that approximately 70% of the units had already been sold and that unless an Agreement of Purchase and Sale was executed immediately, the plaintiffs would lose the opportunity to invest in such a risk free venture.

14. Relying upon the said representations and believing them to be true, the Plaintiffs' executed the Townsgate's standard form Agreement of Purchase and Sale (the "Agreement") and provided Townsgate with post dated deposit cheques totalling $40,000.00. The cheques were eventually all cashed by the Defendant.

15. The Plaintiffs plead that Townsgate, through its sales representatives, made the representations as aforesaid when they knew or ought to have known they were untrue, and did so with the sole intention of inducing the Plaintiffs to purchase the units. In particular,

- a) the market value of the units decreased dramatically shortly after February, 1989; b) Townsgate began publicly advertising the units for sale at prices substantially lower than the original sale price;
- c) Townsgate refused to repurchase the units from the Plaintiffs at their original purchase price;
- d) Townsgate did not follow through with the construction of Townsgate 2;
- e) at no time were 70% of the units in Townsgate 1 sold.

16. The Plaintiffs plead that the Defendants knew or ought to have known that they were unsophisticated individuals, many of whom did not have the financial resources to purchase a unit. The Defendants did not make any enquiries whatsoever as to the Plaintiffs' financial capabilities, assets, incomes or abilities to complete the purchase. They made no enquiries as to the Plaintiffs' understanding of the nature of the transaction that they were being pressured into.

[para71] Townsgate takes the position that, even if such representations were made, which it denies, the purchasers relied upon their own judgment and knowledge of the real estate market in reaching their decisions. In the alternative, the representations cannot attract legal liability as they amount to nothing in law, were not material or made with an intention of inducing the plaintiffs to enter into the agreements and there was no detrimental reliance. In addition, the "entire agreement" clause in each of the agreements, paragraph 24, precludes a finding of misrepresentation. Furthermore, the plaintiffs' conduct constitutes a waiver, estoppel and/or acquiescence on their part.

[para74] As noted previously, Elan Beer, a 33-year-old systems analyst, settled his case prior to or during the trial, but testified on behalf of the other plaintiffs. After receiving an invitation to the pre-introductory sale for 10 a.m. on February 25, 1989, he attended at the site with his brother-in-law about that time, and recounts his experience there as follows:

MR. POLSTER: Q. Tell me what you saw when you got there?

MR. BEER: A. When we got there it was a very, very large gathering of people outside the door. Somewhere in the neighbourhood of 80, 90, 100 people all waiting to get in even at that early hour, and it seemed to matter very little that I had a letter saying that I could come in at 10:00 o'clock. Nobody would talk to me. Nobody there, needed to find out, wanted to find out about the decided to wait awhile and see what happens.

Q. How long awhile did you wait?

A. The while turned into about seven hours.

Q. Why did you wait for seven hours?

A. I guess it was for various reasons. You never know when you're gonna leave. Will it just be three minutes later that you would have just gotten, so you just sort of keep waiting a little bit longer.

The other thing is there was so many people waiting condominium project, for all we knew, this builder was giving away, condominiums away, so we decided to wait and find out what we can.

When we got in the door, there was no indication or request or mention of us requiring this letter. We just basically walked in. There were a lot of people inside, a packed house, and as soon as we got in we tried to get some information from somebody about the development, so we tried to flag down who looked like they belonged there to give us handouts, pamphlets, pictures, price lists. Anything at all. Nothing was available. We weren't really able to talk to anybody. We just basically had to wander around the inside of the sales office.

We waited there for approximately 45 minutes to an hour before we saw anybody. During that time, there was a few things that we could do, and we did them all.

One of them was to look at the layouts which were behind glass on the wall, so these were the layouts of all the condominium model, units.

There was also a mock, a mock-up of the building in the centre showing us the development. There was a model suite and we walked through that as well. Q. How did you finally get to see a sales person?

A. I believe eventually we, we were forceful enough and requested enough to track somebody down, and we told them we have been waiting a long time and we would want to see somebody now, so we eventually went into the sales office.

Q. And how long did you spend talking to George?

A. We spent approximately 10 to 15 minutes talking to him, and even during that time, George was in and out of the office. People were coming in and out of the office constantly wanting to talk to him.

Q. You decided on a particular type of unit before you went into his office?

A. No. As a matter of fact, we only went into his office really just to get the information we had been waiting for. Pictures, price lists, conditions. Anything at all. He wanted us to -- he didn't have anything to give us. No papers. Nothing at all. And we told him, how can we make up our minds or how can we talk about anything if we don't have any information, and he asked us which unit are we interested in? We said, "We don't know which unit we're interested in. We would like to have some information about it." At that point he got up; took us out of the office to the pictures on the wall and said, "All right. Here's all the layouts. You tell me which one of these you would like us for us to talk about.", and I pointed to a couple of them. Two, three of them at least like we might be interested in these so, "Can you give me the prices?" He said, "Well, let's go back into my office." We went back to his office all right. He gave me two or three possible choices. "Which one do you really want?" "Can't we talk about all of them? It would be easier just to talk about one." He basically just talked to us about one unit, which we basically did, and that's the only one we talked about. That's the only one price -- that's the only one that was ever an issue. He didn't give us any information on any of the other ones.

Q. Tell me about the discussions you had with Mr. Kerr when you got back into his office.

A. Well we wanted to know a few different things. We wanted to know who the builder is; what's he built before. We wanted to know if, again, if we could take something away with us. There were other factors we were concerned with. Of course the price. The pricing. When the building would be complete. Things along that nature.

In answer to my questions, basically, he didn't have anything to give us by way of taking anything home with us. There was no price lists available that he could give us. The builder was very reputable. He was a solid builder; had built things in the past. We had absolutely nothing to worry about. Then there was, I guess, further discussions on, on whether or not we should be buying this unit at all. He, he brought up the concept of this is a risk-free investment at that time, and Gil was, sort of looked at that, and very questionably, and asked him exactly what that meant and "How nothing is risk-free" was the statement, Gil's statement, and would George answer to that. You have to understand this is all happening fairly quickly and chaotically, but George's answer to that, "This builder is very reputable. He is very solid. He will stand behind what he sells", and you have, you have no -- his words were, "This is the only guaranteed risk-free investment you're gonna make." So again, that's all we talked about during that time. It was -- there wasn't a lot of time to talk about much, much of anything else.

At that point we, we gave him some information about who we are, et cetera, and he asked us to step out of the office while he is preparing some papers.

Q. Did you review any of the other provisions of the agreement with him?

A. There really was no time. Everything -- even during the time that he had called us back in and signing, people were coming in and out, and, as a matter of fact, at one point he asked us to leave while he dealt with somebody else. He was dealing with five or six people at a time, so there was no opportunity for us to be leaving or anything of that sort.

[para75] Shoshana Agbariya, 47 years of age, emigrated to Canada from Israel in 1977. She has a Grade 10 education and presently works in a clothing store as a salesperson. Previously, she did clerical work in her husband's car repair shop. Her only prior experience in real estate was the purchase of a condominium in 1984, where she and her family resided. Having attended at the sales office on February 25, 1989, with her son-in-law, pursuant to an invitation from Townsgate she gave this account her experience with the sales agent:

Q. Tell me what happened in the office?

A. I, I start to ask him questions so, so he didn't actually let me. He told me he doesn't have time; people waiting outside; almost everything had sold; better decide which one I want and then he told me, "Actually nothing much left for you" and he told me, the model home, the floor, this and this left, and this side, so you better decide because you're going to lose. People are waiting outside. That actually what he told me.

Q. Did that satisfy all the questions you had?

A. No. I told him I want more information, and I talk to my son-in-law in Hebrew that I wanted to walk out, and he asked, "What's wrong with her?" So he told him that I'm upset that I can't get more information. So he told me, "Mrs. Agbariya, sign, and you're not gonna be sorry."

Q. So what did you do?

A. I thought about it just a few second and I said, "Maybe he's right."

Q. Did you read the paper that you signed?

A. Over there?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Who had the time -- no. They didn't let you. There wasn't any time. People was waiting outside.

Q. Did he go over any of the agreement with you while you were signing it? Did he review any of it with you?

A. Not really.

Q. What do you mean "not really"?

A. I'm telling you everything happen fast. Like didn't have time for this.

[para76] Elazar Astrug, a 45-year-old taxi driver, came to Canada in October 1982 having completed 11 years of schooling in Israel. He is able to read but not to write English. These are some of his comments in examination-in-chief:

Q. Can you tell me what you recall of your discussions with the salesman?

A. I didn't ask many questions. I let him talk and he explain to me that this is risk-free investment, it is guarantee, and I have nothing to lose by, if I invest in this project, and it's a beautiful, luxury condominium, and the price I ask I think. I ask -- I don't recall exactly the price. No way they will go down. Even give me example of one building downtown that the builder paying the, the resident for the apartment money to get out of the deal. Between 50 or $100,000. He indicate one building downtown. Which one I don't know. So this is one of the example that I have nothing to lose.

Q. What -- do you recall anything else about your discussion with the salesman?

A. I be honest with you. The only thing I remember very good that he was very much convinced me that I am doing the deal of my life and I believe everything he told me.

And further: Q. That's the document that you signed?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you read it before you signed it?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. I trust everything he told me there. Actually I ask him if he can, surely can explain to me what this is about, this agreement. He said, "Don't worry. You will get it by mail and will have time to read it." I didn't read it.

[para77] Eugeny Privis, a 59-year-old shoe repairman whose only experience with real estate prior to this was the purchase of a condominium as a residence in 1980, lived in the area and received an invitation to attend the grand opening at 10 a.m. on February 25, 1989. When he arrived at about 9:30 a.m., there were many people ahead of him. After gaining entry to the sales pavilion at about 5:00 p.m. he recognized one of the agents because "I fix shoes for him before." In his words, the agent, George Kerr, told him: "You're lucky. Almost sold out, our builder give no risk investment 100 per cent and people buy like hotcakes." When re-attending at the sales pavilion a few days later to return his unit, Mr. Kerr assured him that the unit would be worth "one half or a million dollars" and that the builder would take it back from him if he changed his mind later. In response to his query about the $40,000 deposit, he was told that the builder pays "one per cent less than in the bank." According to Mr. Privis, then "I said 'fine'."

[para78] Dr. Morris Freedman, a neurologist, does not advance a claim under this heading. Yet, this is how he described what occurred when he finally saw a salesperson and attempted to gain some information regarding the project:

A man (later identified as Harvey Kauffman, manager of Norman Hill and Director of Sales and Marketing for Townsgate) came over and started shouting and screaming -- why are you asking all these questions? You're wasting our time -- sign or get out and don't waste (my) and everyone else's time.

The saleslady then pulled me aside ... and told me not to pay attention or let it get to you ... it's a good deal, you won't lose money. Go ahead and sign it.

[para80] On the totality of the evidence, and the above excerpts constitute only a minor portion of it, I find that most, if not all, of the plaintiffs' allegations bear some truth. They were able, to construct a more or less reliable account of what occurred on the opening weekend. On a balance of probabilities, I have concluded that their collective version lies closer to the actual events than does that of the defendants. I have reached this conclusion for five main reasons:

1. It is apparent that the invitation, a copy of which is attached as Schedule B to these reasons, was misleading in specifying the same time and date for numerous individuals and a "special preview price"; it was, I find, not only distributed to "prospective purchasers who had expressed an interest in the project" as alleged in paragraph 11 of the statement of defence but to many others including potential investors and residents in the surrounding area. The statement therein that "no one will be admitted" without an invitation letter was simply false.

2. I am unable to comprehend or accept the testimony of the agents to the effect that few, if any, of the purchasers asked questions -- not in light of the testimony of Dr. Freedman and others as to what occurred when they attempted to do so. Their collective denial of having stated anything positive as to the type of investment being offered does not have the ring of truth. I prefer the evidence of many witnesses whose accounts were supported by details, such as a particular agent's hand motion for prices going "up, up and up." It may well have been unnecessary for them to have made those statements in order to sell the units; nevertheless, I find that they did, indeed, make them. Perhaps in the crowded confusion, the perception of efficiency led them to act quickly and move on. It could not have been an easy task for four agents to sell 160 units over a three-day period.

3. Approximately one year after the agreements were signed, in early 1990, Townsgate issued a newsletter (attached as Schedule C) offering prospective purchasers a "risk-free" investment opportunity "absolutely guaranteed in writing." For some of the plaintiffs this confirmed the purported risk-free nature of their investment. It did not, of course; but I can understand their thinking that it did. A copy of an advertisement in the Toronto Star dated Saturday, February 3, 1990, to the same effect, filed as Exhibit 11 at trial, is attached as Schedule D hereto.

4. When Elan Beer returned to the sales office a few days after signing the agreement, expressing scepticism about the risk-free nature of the transaction, the concept was further explained to him. He was led to believe that the builder would guarantee the investment by maintaining the prices at all costs so as not to risk losing the venture by reason of non-closures. Purchasers received various explanations and bore different understandings of the risk-free concept; however, I am satisfied that the words "risk-free" and "guaranteed investment" were utilized as a selling technique by most, if not all, of the agents, to the knowledge of the vendor.

5. The detailed evidence of the plaintiffs did not appear to be contrived. In the main, it collectively stood the test of stringent cross-examination. On the whole, I do not think their claims are being advanced in a capricious, arbitrary or unreasonable manner.

[para81] The conclusion which emerges from this is that the real estate agents failed to provide purchasers with full, fair and frank disclosure of the nature of the transaction and misrepresented various aspects of it to certain of the purchasers.

[para84] In its statement of defence, Townsgate describes Norman Mill as being "at all material times, the real estate agency retained by Townsgate to sell its condominium units", and the individual defendants, as "sales people employed" by them to do so. [para85] The invitation to purchasers (Schedule B), printed on Townsgate letterhead, was signed by Harvey Kauffman, as "Sales Manager." Similarly, a letter of congratulations to purchasers on Townsgate letterhead was signed by Mr. Kauffman as "Director of Sales and Marketing"; and a further letter requesting purchasers to select unit finishes bore the signature of Townsgate I Limited per: Aggie Berk (Exhibit 86). At no time was Harvey Kauffman a principal of Townsgate. His position was that of manager/owner of Norman Hill Realty. Aggie Berk was a real estate agent employed by Norman Hill.

This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and shall in all respects be of the essence hereof. It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing whether contained in any sales brochures or alleged to have been made by any sales representative or agents.

[para88] Disclaimer clauses are generally drafted to protect a contracting party who turns out to be negligent. Given that such clauses are frequently inserted where the other party has little opportunity to negotiate, courts have assessed the validity and applicability of such clauses cautiously.

[para89] As a general proposition, a limitation or exemption clause is not imported into a contract unless the parties have assented to it by their conduct or the clause is brought home so prominently to the non-drafting party that he or she must be taken to have known about it: see B.C. Hydro & Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. (1993), 99 D.L.R. (4th) 577 (S.C.C.); Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87; Hayward v. Mellick (1984), 5 D.L.R. (4th) 740 (Ont. C.A.).

[para90] Not only was the clause buried in the fine print of the contract, but purchasers were not provided with an opportunity to read the agreement or to negotiate its terms before signing. They cannot, therefore, be taken to have assented to be bound by the disclaimer. See Israel v. Townsgate 1 Limited (30 December 1994), (Ont. Div. Ct.) [unreported] per Hill J., where the court came to a similar conclusion in dealing with the identical clause.

[para91] Rosenberg J, in Tejani v. Abreu (1994), 38 R.P.R. (2d) 218 (Ont. Gen. Div.), held that statements by sales agents that the property in question could be severed as well as details of measurements constituted representations which the vendors knew or ought to have known were false and which induced the purchasers to enter into the agreement of purchase and sale. Notwithstanding the entire agreement clause, the purchasers were entitled to repudiate the contract.

[para92] Townsgate describes the plaintiffs' conduct and dealings as constituting a waiver, estoppel and/or acquiescence on their part in that:

1. they allowed their deposit cheques to be negotiated;
2. they received correspondence and deposit receipts from Townsgate;
3. some of them provided a solicitor's name for closing and an exchange of correspondence ensued;
4. from April to June 1991, some attended to select unit finishes;
4. from November 1990 to March 1991, a number of plaintiffs requested a renegotiation of their agreements.

[para93] According to Townsgate, "at no time in the two- year period after execution did the plaintiffs or any of them attempt to avoid their agreements or disclose the allegations in these proceedings." In light of the evidence, I do not accept that proposition. Many of them did take steps to cancel their deals; and the vendor, I find, was well aware at any early stage of their dissatisfaction and their allegations. The following excerpts from the evidence serve to illustrate this.

[para94] 1. In examination-in-chief, Mr. Polster asked Astrug Elazar about his contact with Townsgate after receipt of the accepted agreement:

MR. POLSTER: Q. Mr. Astrug, what is the next contact that you had with Townsgate after that day?

MR. ASTRUG: A. I call, I call the office - I can't remember exactly how many days after I received this, and I -- the reason I call is because I wanted to cancel this deal, so a lady answered me on the phone, and she want me to talk to someone, but this someone was not available, so she ask me to leave a message, and I said I will call again. I call again and then this someone was not available so I left a message. Before this someone call me; I called again, and she asked me what it was all about. So I explained to her that I am thinking of getting off this deal and she told me, "I don't think you can do it until the closing date", and that's the last time I spoke with them. I never spoke with them. They never called me. I never heard from them anything.

Q. Do you know who it was that you spoke to?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know how long after February 24th you made the phone call?

A. I believe a few days. A few days after I received this one I mean.

Q. A few days you received it back after the mail?

A. Yeah.

[para95] 2. Mr. Polster posed a similar question to Mrs. Nemirovsky as follows:

MR. POLSTER: Q. Now, Mrs. Nemirovsky, did you have any more contact with the Townsgate office and the sales people after that visit on February 23rd?

MRS. NEMIROVSKY: A. Yes, I did.

Q. Can you tell me about that please?

A. Yes. Like all the time as my husband decided to buy this condominium I was nagging him, and I was quite angry with him, and I wanted to persuade him to just give it back. I said "They promise that they will take it. Let's go and just give it back" and he was upset with me too because I was all the time after him. So it was nearly April we went to the sales office because I did not have to know where to go. We went there. Nobody was there. Only one salesperson.

Q. Do you remember who?

A. My husband -- I don't remember. Q. Do you know the salesperson?

A. I don't remember his name, and my husband start to talk to him. He said, "You know what? I change my mind and I would like to give it back, and you guys promised that any time if I want, you will take it back", and he said, "No. It's impossible. Why you worry? Everything will be okay. Why you just so worry? And it's such a good investment", and he said, "I want like investment now. I am a little bit worried", he said, but he said, "No. It's impossible", so we left.

[para96] 3. Shoshana Agbariya, when asked why she did not close the deal, responded:

A. Because I heard that I was really cheated. That prices start to go down like the same year and I called Mr. George two, three time. They ignored me. Wouldn't let me talk to him. One time I talk to him; I got upset on him. I told him, "You promise the prices are not going to go down." Because I felt that I was cheated, that's it. I said, "I'm not taking the unit." X7 [para97] 4. Eugeny Pravis described his experience thus:

I tried many times to get them to take back the unit. I was told that I couldn't lose nothing. He is a professional. He said prices would never come down, it was risk-free and I believed him. He said when built, if I didn't like it, the builder would buy it back.

[para98] According to his evidence, Mr. Pravis left numerous messages for the builder which were never returned; he also went to see George Kerr on two occasions but was told nothing could be done.

[para99] 5. In 1989, Elan Beer dropped off a letter for the builder at the sales office and about a month or so later, having received no reply, called George Kerr, who told him:

Yeah, I talked to the builder about it, but don't even bother waiting for a reply. Don't even wait for anything. The builder just is not replying to your letter. ... He is not interested in talking to you at this time. Just forget about it. [para100] An innocent misrepresentation that misleads a purchaser of land justifies rescission. The right to rescind is, however, lost if the purchaser elects to affirm the contract: see Panzer v. Zellman (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 502 (C.A.). See also Canada Egg Products Ltd. v. Canadian Doughnut Co. Ltd., [1955] 3 D.L.R. 1 (S.C.C.).

[para101] In Giaduris v. Pristouris (1976), 2 R.P.R. 81 (Ont. C.A.), a written document of waiver was treated as an effective variance of the initial agreement.

The party relying upon the doctrine must establish that the other party has, by words or conduct, made a promise or assurance which was intended to affect their legal relationship and to be acted on. Furthermore, the representee must establish that, in reliance on the representation, he acted on it or in some way changed his position. [para103] A renunciation of a contract will be implied where the conduct of a party is such as to lead a reasonable person to conclude that he will not perform or be able to perform it: see McCallum v. Zivojinovic (1977), 16 O.R. (2d) 721, at page 723. There can be no waiver or affirmation, however, unless a party acts with full knowledge of the legal rights and consequences of his actions: see Webb v. Robert, [1907] 16 O.L.R. 297 (Div. Ct.).

[para104] In the instant case, no course of conduct or negotiation occurred which reasonably might have led Townsgate to suppose that the plaintiffs would not proceed to enforce their legal rights. The purchasers' individual and joint efforts to rescind their agreements at an early stage were consistently ignored or rebuffed by the vendor. To now state that the purchasers were "keeping their options open" does not accord with the plaintiffs' evidence, which I accept. Their passive receipt of documents or correspondence cannot constitute a waiver of their strict legal rights. I find that any dealings with the vendor were undertaken without prejudice to the plaintiffs' right to treat their contracts as at an end. If anything, Townsgate kept the plaintiffs at bay with promises to renegotiate their agreements prior to closing, as they indeed did in the spring of 1991. The failure of the purchasers to retain or provide written documentation of their ongoing complaints only serves to underline their relative lack of sophistication. I can find no conduct on the plaintiffs' part which constitutes acquiescence, waiver or an estoppel in law.

[para105] The law on negligent misrepresentation commences with Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.). Lord Denning in Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Marston, [1976] 2 All E.R. 5, explained the ratio of that case, in this manner:

It seems to me that Hedley Byrne, [1963] 2 All E.R. 575, [1964] A.C. 465, properly understood, covers this particular proposition: if a man, who has or professes to have special knowledge or skill, makes a representation by virtue thereof to another -- be it advice, information or opinion -- with the intention of inducing him to enter into a contract with him, he is under a duty to use reasonable care to see that the representation is correct, and that the advice, information or opinion is reliable. If he negligently gives unsound advice or misleading information or expresses an erroneous opinion, and thereby induces the other side into a contract with him, he is liable in damages.

[para106] To be actionable, the representation must not only refer to an existing fact rather than a future occurrence; but it cannot reflect a matter of mere opinion:

A representation which amounts merely to a statement of opinion, judgment, probability or expectation, or is vague and indefinite in its nature and terms, or is merely a loss, conjectural or exaggerated statement, goes for nothing though it may not be true, for a man is not justified in placing reliance on it. Hinchey v. Gordon, [1955] O.W.N. 125 (H.C.), per Schroeder J.

See also Nussbaum v. Rajesky (1988), 3 R.P.R. (2d) 108 (Ont. H.C.), aff'd (1991), 16 R.P.R. (2d) 78 (Ont. C.A.).

[para107] Rescission is available in the case of an executory contract where the evidence establishes a material misrepresentation that was an inducement to enter into the contract. In making the determination as to materiality, the court may consider evidence as to what was said and the manner in which the information was presented to a purchaser: Panzer v. Zeifman, supra, at pages 508-509, per Brooke J.A.

1. a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the parties;
2. an untrue, inaccurate or misleading representation;
3. a negligent act in making the representation;
4. reliance in a reasonable manner by the other party; and
5. resultant damages indicative of detriment.

[para110] None of the plaintiffs received independent advice or representation prior to signing the agreements -- the circumstances would not permit that. The special relationship between the parties was situational; it arose from the particular situation in which the parties found themselves and the dynamics underlying their relationship. The prospective purchasers were prima facie entitled to rely upon the agents' knowledge of the project and professional qualifications; all of the vendor's representatives were licensed real estate agents. I find that they had an implied duty of care; although less than as a fiduciary, to present the facts to the plaintiffs in an accurate, fair and straightforward manner and with the exercise of reasonable care and skill in the circumstances.

[para111] From the time some of the purchasers received invitations setting out a specific date, time and place to attend for "special preview prices", the marketing of Townsgate was misleading. Its subsequent advertisements indicating Tower I as having been sold out when it was not, provide confirmation as to the company's rather cavalier approach. Although sales were indeed high on the opening weekend, the agents repeatedly fabricated a false sense of scarcity on behalf of the vendor. In the normal course, the suggestion that a piece of property is risk-free and guaranteed might appear ludicrous in the extreme, mere puffery; fuelled, however, by the inflated market, customer overflow, rushed circumstances, and bewildered complicity of some rather unsophisticated individuals, such a statement may well be actionable. In these particular circumstances, it was made negligently with reckless disregard for the truth; I find that it constituted an untrue, inaccurate and misleading representation.

[para112] On the other hand, certain of the other representations made by the agents are clearly not actionable. For example, Eli and Annette Mizrahi were told that Phase II would probably be sold early in the next year and prices would rise for units in Phase

II. The agent dealing with Harvey Goodman inferred that the units were "likely to be all sold out soon and the vendor would start selling the second building at higher prices." Although the representations proved to be false, on the objective test, those claims cannot stand.

[para113] The final category is that of detrimental reliance. The import of that principle depends to some extent upon the individual purchaser's vulnerability and level of sophistication (in terms of education and experience with real estate or other investments) as well as the particular situation encountered at the time of purchase. Some of the plaintiffs failed to prove this aspect of their case. It is apparent that they placed little or no reliance upon the representations made to them. Their ultimate decision to purchase was primarily grounded in their own judgment based upon experience, knowledge of the market, and risk assessment. Those individuals are Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Russell Lazar, Fernando Goncalves and through him, Manuel Goncalves, Michael and Angel Mealia, and Warren Weisz.

[para114] There were others whose testimony did not have the ring of truth either because it contained inconsistencies or otherwise. Those individuals have failed to satisfy me, on a balance of probabilities that one or more of the representations was made to them or that they relied upon this in entering into their agreements of purchase and sale. Falling within this category of individuals are Adolph and Bella Kleiner, Anna Kosoi, Yan Kosoi in trust for Eugene Dozortsev, Mike and Anna Prokopets, Alisa and Bentsian Prosmushkin.

[para116] 1. Shoshana Agbariya was exposed to a plethora of high pressure sales talk, both on February 25, when she signed her agreement and on March 7, 1989, when she returned to the sales office with the intention of rescinding it. On the first occasion, she was told that "almost everything has sold -- you're going to lose out;" on the second, that the condominium would be worth "half a million" by the time it was finished. On the second occasion, when the agent offered some enticements to Ms. Agbariya to re-sign, she said to herself, "he knows better than me, maybe I should listen to him." It was that reasoning which led her to stick with the second deal.

[para117] Undoubtedly, Ms. Agbariya became swept up in the frenzied atmosphere; she was subject to high pressure sales tactics. But high pressure sales tactics do not amount to misrepresentation. A high onus is placed on plaintiffs to prove their claim; and, in my view, the evidence of Ms. Agbariya falls short of doing so -- the representations are not definitive; the level of reliance is less than sufficient. This claim is denied.

[para118] 2. Elazar Astrug was told more than once that this was a risk-free investment which was guaranteed, and that the price would not go down.

[para119] When asked why he decided to buy, he responded, "Because as I told you, I didn't see that there is nothing to lose here; only to gain."

[para120] When asked why he did not read the document first, he replied:

I trust everything he told me there. Actually I ask him if he can surely can explain to me what this is about, this agreement. He said, "Don't worry. You will get it by mail and you will have time to read it." I didn't read it.

[para121] His efforts to return his unit based upon the representations made to him were prodigious. I find that as a rather unsophisticated purchaser, Mr. Astrug reasonably interpreted and relied upon what he was told, to his detriment. Had the risks inherent in the impugned transaction been fully and fairly explained to him, or had the representations not been made at all, I am persuaded that he would not have entered into the contract. His claim on that basis is allowed.

[para122] 3. Boris and Natalia Galperin each attested to representations allegedly made by Aggie Berk that this was a guaranteed, risk-free investment; the builder would not drop his prices; the only thing they could lose was the interest on their deposit; and the builder would not build if the market dropped.

[para123] Boris Galperin, who is 41 years of age, emigrated to Canada from Russia in 1980 and presently works as an engineer at a computer company. Natalia Galperin, 35, is a university graduate and teacher in a public school. The Galperins purchased two homes, one of which was sold in 1983. They were consistent in their joint assertion that their ultimate decision to buy a condominium at Townsgate stemmed from the representations made to them by Aggie Berk, and particularly that they could not, under any circumstances, lose their $40,000 but only the interest on it. On discovery, when asked about the risk-free concept, Mr. Galperin opined "there's always a risk. It's general knowledge." He was aware of the ten-day cooling-off period for cancellations.

[para126] I find also that the words "good investment" and "risk-free" were used as an inducement. However, on the totality of her evidence and that of her sister, Fran Katz, who was called as a witness, I am unable to find reasonable reliance upon the representations. There were clearly other factors influencing Ms. Katz's decision to purchase. Her claim is denied.

[para128] Both Mr. and Mrs. Nemirovsky came to Canada from Russia in 1981; they had previously purchased a condominium which was rented out as "they could not afford to live there"; they resided at the relevant time, in a rental apartment.

[para129] It is my opinion that, although their experience with Townsgate was an unfortunate one, their claim based upon misrepresentation does not pass the "but for" test. This claim is denied.

[para130] 6. The representations allegedly made to Eugeny Privis were that his investment was guaranteed and risk-free and that the builder would buy back his unit at any time.

[para134] The onus is upon the plaintiffs to prove, on a balance of probabilities, that the statements or communications made by or on behalf of the defendant were of such a character that, while innocently made, they concern a material matter affecting the subject matter of the contract; and that such representations induced them to enter into the agreement. In my view, only two of the purchasers have met that test.

[para135] In summary, then, the claims of Elazar Astrug and Eugeny Privis are allowed on the basis of misrepresentation. Both of those parties are entitled to be placed in the position they would have been in had the breaches not occurred; more specifically, they are entitled to the return of their deposits and the counterclaim as against them is dismissed.

DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

[para136] Section 52(1) of the Condominium Act provides that an agreement of purchase and sale is not binding upon a purchaser until ten days after receipt of a disclosure statement "from the declarant". Accordingly, a ten-day "cooling-off" period is statutorily provided to purchasers of residential property. In this case, the disclosure statement consisted of a large black binder detailing the proposed by-laws and regulations, maintenance costs, amenities and other factors relating to the complex. The agents uniformly attested to having distributed them to purchasers as a matter of practice upon their execution of the agreements.

[para137] The purchasers of four of the condominium units denied having received the binder. Interestingly, several plaintiffs testified as to late receipt of the disclosure statement either by mail or otherwise. No claim is advanced by them on these grounds, due no doubt to the ten-day deeming provision in the Act. Although the agreements contain an acknowledgement by purchasers of having received a disclosure statement, this clause was neither initialled nor brought to the purchasers' attention. Moreover, the agents had no confirming documentation, notes or specific recall of distribution to any particular client. In these circumstances, it becomes a matter of credibility as to whether or not the plaintiffs in question have proven their claim.

1. Unit 1109 - Michael and Angel Mealia 2. Unit 316 - Russell Lazar and Fernando Goncalves 3. Unit 1505 - Shoshana Agbariya 4. Unit 606 - Bentsian and Alisa Prosmushkin

1. Unit 1109

[para138] It was the evidence of Mr. Mealia that he and his mother, Angel Mealia, were given only the first page of the agreement, Schedule B, and the floor plan at the time of purchase; the other schedules arrived later along with the accepted agreement of purchase and sale. To the best of their knowledge, no disclosure statement was given or sent to them at any time.

[para139] I reject that evidence. It does not appear likely that certain selected schedules would be sent at a later date. Both Mr. Mealia and his mother, Angel Mealia, are sophisticated real estate agents and brokers. They purchased several other condominium units within six months to a year of this one. They must have known the significance and importance of this aspect of the sale. Their claim on this basis must fail.

2. Unit 316

[para140] Russell Lazar and Fernando Goncalves attended at the sales pavilion along with Manuel Goncalves, Fernando Goncalves' father, on February 24, 1989. Manuel Goncalves, who speaks little English but relied upon his son for information, purchased his own unit and the other two jointly shared a unit. Their collective evidence was that only Manuel received the disclosure binder, in contravention of section 52(1) of the Act which mandates receipt "from the declarant" and not indirectly from another person. They adduced proof of having contacted an acquaintance in 1991 to obtain his binder by courier for review. The first question that comes to mind is why Fernando Goncalves did not make an effort to find his father's copy. Secondly, the evidence that Manuel Goncalves took the binder home with him by public transportation while the others drove their car to work, strains credulity, particularly since Fernando lived with his father at the time and the binder was a fairly heavy item.

[para141] Both Russell Lazar and Fernando Goncalves were relatively sophisticated purchasers with considerable knowledge of the real estate market; they must have known the importance of the binder. Yet, they failed to request a copy of it or document any complaint about this prior to the institution of these proceedings. I cannot accept their claim based upon non-receipt of a disclosure statement.

3. Unit 1505

[para142] When Ms. Agbariya attended at the sales office on February 25, 1989, she entered into an agreement of purchase and sale for apartment unit 1005; when she returned to rescind the transaction, she ended up purchasing unit 1505 (although the agreement names the unit as 1405).

[para143] In giving her testimony at trial, Ms. Agbariya insisted that she had never received a disclosure binder. Any inconsistency with evidence given on her examination for discovery was explained to my satisfaction. Once shown the disclosure binder, she noted:

It's large. I would have remembered. I am very sure that I didn't have it. ... I never got one.

[para144] Mrs. Agbariya can fairly be referred to as an unsophisticated purchaser and investor in real estate. As previously noted, she has a Grade 10 education and works as a salesperson in a clothing store. She failed to notice the juxtaposition of her names on the agreement of purchase and sale and, later, the pleadings.

[para145] In general, she presented as an honest witness who chronicled her experience without embellishment or exaggeration. I am satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that Ms. Agbariya did not at any time receive the disclosure binder, despite the acknowledgment both in the agreement of purchase and sale and the cancellation document.

[para146] As this constitutes a complete defence to the defendant's counterclaim, she is entitled to the remedy of rescission and the return of her deposits from Townsgate. 4. Unit 606

[para151] Thus, the only allowable claims based upon non-receipt of a disclosure statement in contravention of section 52(1) of the Condominium Act, are those of Shoshana Agbariya and Isaak Nemirovsky.

ACCEPTANCE OF AGREEMENTS

[para152] Three of the plaintiffs deny having received a copy of their accepted agreement of purchase and sale from the vendor; and purchasers of six of the units allege late receipt of an accepted copy, thus rendering the agreements null and void. Each of the agreements contain the following paragraph:

This offer shall be irrevocable by the purchaser until one minute before midnight on the fifteenth day after its date, after which time if not accepted, this offer shall be null and void and the deposit returned to the Purchaser without interest. (Emphasis added) The undersigned accepts the above offer and agrees to complete this transaction in accordance with the terms thereof.

Paragraph 24 reads:

This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale.

[para153] Townsgate asserts a number of defences to this claim. It contends that communication of acceptance was accomplished, either orally or in writing, within the required time period; if not, the plaintiffs by their conduct acquiesced, extended the time for acceptance, or waived the strict time requirements and are now estopped from relying upon this as a defence to the counterclaim.

[para156] The problem is that no records were kept of either the phone calls, the mailings, or the acceptance dates. As previously noted, Eugeny Privis' agreement of purchase and sale bear a signature date of March 10, 1989; and an acceptance date of March 9,

1989. The sheer volume of necessary contacts lends credence to the claim of certain plaintiffs based on a lack of communication. The six purchasers in question do not recall receiving a message and Ms. Horowitz had no specific recollection in that regard, nor did she profess at any time to have reached all of the purchasers one way or another. In any event, the agreement provides for such notices to be in writing.

[para160] The following purchasers retained the envelope containing their accepted agreements sent to them by registered mail:

1. Shoshana Agbariya, who signed a second agreement of purchase and sale on March 7, 1989, filed a stamped, registered envelope postmarked March 22, 1989. She cannot recall when the envelope containing the accepted agreement was retrieved from the post office.

2. Elazar Astrug signed the agreement on February 24, 1989, and received a registered envelope containing the accepted agreement on March 21, 1989. 3. Moti Fishman signed it February 25 and the registration date was March 22, 1989.

4. Morris Freedman signed the agreement February 25, 1989, but did not receive the accepted agreement by registered mail until March 22, 1989, or thereafter.

5. Boris and Natalia Galperin signed their agreement of purchase and sale on March 10, 1989, but the accepted copy bears the date March 29, 1989.

6. Isaak Nemirovsky signed the agreement of purchase and sale February 25, 1989, and the registered envelope containing the accepted agreement is dated March 22, 1989.

[para161] There may, of course, be others whose agreements were delivered after the 15-day period, but the above plaintiffs can conclusively prove this aspect of their case. In regard to each of them, I find that there was no proper delivery of the accepted offer. Their actions in the particular circumstances here, cannot be taken as an affirmation of their contracts. In my view, the agreements expired on the 15th day after they were signed and in accordance with paragraph 19 thereof; the above named plaintiffs are accordingly entitled to the return of their deposits.

[para162] The purchasers of three of the units deny ever having received their accepted agreements. As no proof was tendered one way or the other, this claim becomes a matter of credibility. The disputed units are:

1. Unit 1114, Adolph and Bella Kleiner 2. Unit 1013, Mike and Anna Prokopets 3. Unit 606, Bentsian and Alisa Prosmushkin

[para163] The evidence of each of those plaintiffs leads me to question this aspect of their claims. The Prosmushkins deliberately withheld information; and both the Kleiners and Prokopets were less than genuine and sincere in giving their testimony. I prefer the evidence of Ms. Horowitz to the effect that the accepted agreements were forwarded to each of the purchasers. Although unclear as to dates, she was certain of this. Only three of the agreements out of the 90 units sold on the opening weekend were allegedly not sent out. I am unable to find on the evidence that these purchasers never received an accepted agreement of purchase and sale. Their claim in that regard is denied.

RESPONSIBLE PARTIES

[para164] No action can be brought against a person on a contract for the sale of land unless the contract is signed by that person or someone lawfully authorized by him (Statute of Frauds, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.19, s. 4).

The words "in trust" are not magic words that change the liability of the purchaser unless in fact there is a cestui que trust or the purchaser is acting as an agent for some other person.

[para166] Accepting that general proposition, Montgomery J. found that the inclusion of the words "in trust" did not exculpate the defendant Ginsberg from personal liability as a principal.

[para167] In Rice v. Rawluk (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 696, on the basis of material supplied to the defendant and ongoing negotiations with her, the court found an intention of co-ownership and deemed all three parties to be partners in the project and hence liable for damages.

[para168] In the present case, three of the agreements of purchase and sale were executed "in trust", as follows:

1. Yan Kosoi in trust for Eugene Dozortsev - Unit 1107; 2. Michael Groisman in trust for Clara Groisman - Unit 803; 3. Gary Tiz in trust for Lubov Tiz - Unit 703.

[para169] Yan Kosoi's spouse, Anna Kosoi, purchased a unit and holds a one-third partnership in another one.

[para170] Both Mr. Kosoi and the real estate agent he dealt with, George Kerr, were of the view at the relevant time that Mr. Kosoi had authorization to sign the agreement as agent for Mr. Dozortsev. Eugene Dozortsev, a friend of the Kosois, resides in New York City; his purported intent at the time was to move to Toronto. The difficulty is that no confirming evidence was presented as to the alleged agreement authorization or intent. Moreover, a daughter of the Kosois signed the deposit cheques and no evidence of repayment to her was forthcoming.

Units 703 and 803

[para172] Gary Tiz and Michael Groisman are co-signators to an agreement of purchase and sale for another unit in the condominium project. They had jointly purchased but returned an additional unit within the ten-day cooling-off period. Clara Groisman and Lubov Tiz are the mothers of Michael Groisman and Gary Tiz, respectively.

[para173] At discovery, the purchaser sons stated that the units in question were designated for their mothers, who had provided them with the deposit cheques; at trial, they reversed this position, indicating a statement by the realtor that the way to get around the builder's policy of selling only one unit to an individual was to sign the agreements "in trust". Ms. Berk gained the impression that they intended to purchase the units "for someone else".

[para174] Both Michael Groisman and Gary Tiz were relatively sophisticated investors in real estate. No evidence was forthcoming as to powers of attorney or replacement cheques tendered to cover the deposits. It was Townsgate's submission that the mothers, Clara Groisman and Lubov Tiz, bear responsibility for units 703 and 803 respectively. In my view, the provision of the deposit cheques by Clara Groisman and Lubov Tiz to their sons prior to the purchases provides persuasive evidence of an intention to be bound; there is no evidence to the contrary. Accordingly, I find that they are the true obligees under the agreement.

CONCLUSION

[para175] Townsgate proceeded to sell units in the within 3Fcondominium project, commencing on February 24, 1989, in advance of registration under the ONHWPA and in contravention of the express statutory prohibition contained in section 6 thereof. On the basis of illegality, therefore, the agreements of purchase and sale, all of which were entered into prior to formal registration, are a nullity; and the plaintiffs are entitled to have their deposits returned to them with accrued interest.

[para176] The plaintiffs have also rooted their claim, in the alternative, on grounds of misrepresentation, breach of securities legislation, lack of ownership, non-disclosure, and late acceptance of the agreements. Although unnecessary in light of my finding of illegality, I have considered the other claims raised by the plaintiffs on the merits. In doing so, I have found entitlement to rescission by reason of misrepresentation in respect of two purchasers, Elazar Astrug and Eugeny Privis. Isaak Nemirovsky is entitled to the return of his deposits based upon statutory breach of contract by the vendor, who should have accepted the return of his agreement properly proffered within the ten-day cooling-off period. Shoshana Agbariya has proven entitlement, on a balance of probabilities, to the remedy of rescission due to non-receipt of the disclosure binder; she also likely did not receive the accepted agreement of purchase and sale within the stipulated time period. Neither did Elazar Astrug, Moti Fishman, Morris Freedman, Boris and Natalia Galperin, or Isaak Nemirovsky. Each of them are, in any event, entitled to the return of his or her deposits with accrued interest. Yan Kosoi remains responsible for any damages in respect of Unit 1107; and Clara Groisman and Lubov Tiz, jointly with their sons Michael Groisman and Gary Tiz, are bound under the agreements pertaining to units 703 and 803, respectively. The damages claimed pursuant to the counterclaim were proven to my satisfaction.

TOWNSGATE LUXURY CONDOMINIUMS

Dear Registrant:

At long last the Grand Opening of Townsgate condominiums has arrived. And, in appreciation of the interest you have expressed in the project, you are cordially invited to preview the Townsgate community and to take advantage of our special preview price.

Elegantly set at the crossroads of Bathurst and Steeles, Townsgate is one of Thornhill's most vibrant and prestigious residential addresses, featuring twin towers of grand, spacious suites surrounded by expansive grounds of gently rolling lawns and trees.

If you act quickly you will have the opportunity to live in an exclusive residence like no other before it. A sequestered private boulevard shaded by trees will approach a graceful circular drive that welcomes homeowners and their guests to the secluded, exclusive world of Townsgate. Here the grounds will be devoted to cultivated gardens, winding pedestrian trails, tennis courts, a putting green, a barbecue pit and a gazebo.

Inside, past the glass-enclosed lobby, a million dollar recreation centre awaits. With a lounge and party room. An indoor pool walled in glass and featuring a cedar tanning deck. Squash court. Games room. Hobbies room. Billiards room. Exercise room. Guest suites. The list goes on and on.

This invitation is your chance to experience the ultimate in luxury living. Suites are a magnificent rhapsody of space and light featuring designer kitchens with Florida ceilings. Charming solariums bathed in sunshine. Lavish master suites with Roman tubs and separate showers. Guest bedrooms with full ensuites. Entertainment-sized living and dining rooms. A beautifully furnished model suite will be open for viewing.

On Saturday, February 25 at 11:00 a.m. this invitation will admit you to a sneak preview of Townsgate. Come early and seize the opportunity to get first choice of our models, floors and exposures for a special preview price.

Unrivalled in setting and architectural beauty, Townsgate will be a symbol of condominium living at its very finest. Buying early will be a symbol of your good sense and discriminating taste.

Please remember to bring this letter with you as no none will be admitted without one.

Yours truly,

Harvey Kauffman Sales Manager

Stevens et al. v. Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 60

42 O.R. (3d) 451

Court File No. 716/97

Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court Bell, Sharpe and McKinnon JJ. September 25, 1998

APPEAL from an order of Eberhard J. (1997), 9 R.P.R. (3d) 84 (Gen. Div.) holding that the owners of a unit in a condominium were not liable for payment of a deductible under an insurance policy obtained by the condominium corporation.

Hugh D.N. Corbett, for appellant. Ivan Y. Lawrence, for respondents.

BY THE COURT: -- The issue raised by this appeal is whether the appellant condominium corporation can recover from the respondent owner the amount of the deductible under an insurance policy obtained by the corporation pursuant to Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, s. 27(1). The claim arises from damage to another unit found to have been caused by the owner. The motions court judge found that the corporation could not recover the deductible from the owner responsible for the damage. We disagree.

Analysis of the respective rights and obligations of the condominium owners and the condominium corporation in relation to insurance and liability for claims subject to deductible is facilitated by consideration of three distinct duties:

1. the duty to obtain and maintain insurance placed upon the corporation by s. 27(1);
2. the duties of repair reflected by s. 41, as may be altered by the declaration pursuant to s. 41(5); and
3. liability for the costs of repairs which is dealt with by the condominium declaration, by-laws and rules.

Section 27(1) requires the corporation to "obtain and maintain insurance on its own behalf and on behalf of the owners of the units and common elements". While it is the corporation that obtains the insurance, the primary beneficiaries are the owners. They are the ones with a property interest to protect. They own their units and they have an undivided interest in the common elements. The proprietary rights of the corporation are limited. The rationale for imposing the duty to obtain insurance on the corporation is to provide efficient means to ensure that all owners have adequate insurance at low cost and to avoid the risk of prejudice to other owners that would result if an owner failed to obtain insurance and was unable or unwilling to repair his premises at his own expense: see Loeb, Condominium Law and Administration, 2nd ed., at pp. 19-1 to 19-2.

Section 41 imposes the primary obligation to repair units and common elements after damages upon the corporation. Aspects of that obligation may be shifted to the owners by the declaration pursuant to s. 41(5). While s. 27(2) refers to the corporation "using the proceeds from any insurance for the repair or replacement of damage to units or common elements", that merely ensures that insurance proceeds are used for their proper purpose. That provision does not impose on the corporation any duty to repair, an obligation that is to be found in s. 41.

It is open to the owners and the corporation to establish a regime for liability for costs of damage: ss. 31 and 32. In this case, there are a number of provisions which are relevant. Section 20 of the declaration requires the corporation to obtain and maintain insurance against major perils and specifically provides "this insurance may be subject to a loss deductible clause". Section 18 of the declaration requires each owner to maintain and repair his unit and to be responsible for all damages to all other units which are "caused by the failure of such owner to so maintain and repair his unit", but provides that owners' liability shall not extend to damages "for which the costs of repairing same may be recovered under any policy of insurance held by the Corporation". Similarly, s. 24 of the declaration requires each owner to indemnify and save harmless the corporation for the costs and damage that the corporation may suffer from any act or omission of the owner "except for any loss, damage, injury or liability insured against by the Corporation". The corporation adopted a specific rule with respect to air conditioners which provides as follows:

5. Any damage resulting from the installation or use of an air conditioner will be the liability of the unit owner or occupant, whether damage is limited to the owner's/occupant's unit or effects other units in the complex.

It is against this background that the question of liability for any deductibles under insurance obtained by the condominium corporation on behalf of the owners is to be assessed.

It is common ground between the parties that as a matter of commercial reality, "insurance . . . against major perils to the replacement cost" required by s. 27(1) is invariably subject to a deductible. We can see no reason to ignore commercial reality and read s. 27(1) as imposing upon the corporation a duty to obtain insurance without any deductible or to impose liability upon the corporation for any deductible portion of the policy. The condominium declaration by-laws and rules define the respective obligations of the owners and the corporation with respect to liability for damages and expressly provide that insurance obtained by the corporation may be subject to a deductible. In our view, the issue of liability for the deductible falls to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the declaration, by-laws, and rules of the condominium corporation, defining the rights and obligations of the owners and the corporation and by analogy to the prevailing practice in the insurance industry which is to shift the deductible portion of the loss to the party causing the loss as a means of disciplining insurance claims.

We would add that if the deductible was excessive, it could be argued that the corporation had failed in its duty to obtain insurance. In this regard, we would adopt the reasoning of the Judge Godfrey of the Small Claims Court in Miluzzi v. York Condominium Corp. No. 60 (June 6, 1996): I find that replacement cost insurance can exist with a deductible provided the deductible is reasonable in the circumstances. A reasonable deductible ought to be expected by the unit owners. In the case at hand, the deductible was reasonable in light of the Corporation's prior history of claims made under the policy. It was the only way the defendant could get someone to underwrite the policy. The Corporation in placing the insurance acted on its own behalf and on behalf of the owners of the units and common elements. The unit owners cannot object unless the Corporation has acted in an arbitrary or capricious manner.

Finally, we would observe that from a policy point of view, we would reject the analysis of the motions court judge which has the effect of imposing a particular regime upon all condominiums. A significant feature of that scheme is the imposition of shared liability by the owners for all deductibles as the condominium corporation itself can only satisfy a liability imposed upon it by requiring the owners to contribute to the common expenses. The forced sharing of the deductible deprives the owners as a group of the disciplining effect a deductible has upon claims. While the effect of the result we reach is to open the possibility that claims will be made as between owners for the deductible, a condominium may avoid that result if it wishes to do so by making appropriate provision in its declaration, by-laws or rules. It seems to us preferable to leave the question of liability for deductible to be determined in this way so that condominium owners are able to design a scheme appropriate to their particular needs.

In the present case, the motions court judge made a finding that the damages in question were caused by the applicants' air conditioner. That finding, combined with the air conditioner rule referred to above, is sufficient to constitute a finding of liability against the applicants for the deductible.

Accordingly, the appeal is allowed, the order of the motions judge set aside and in its place the following is substituted:

(a) a declaration that Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 60 is entitled to recover from Bernard and Christine Stevens $1,000 together with the costs it incurred to register and discharge the original lien registered to secure the repair costs;

(b) an order permitting Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 60 to register a lien on title to the Stevens unit pursuant to s. 32 of the Condominium Act to secure payment of the amount referred to in para. (a);

(c) costs of the application and appeal fixed at $5,000.

Appeal allowed.

Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 v. Each and Every Owner and Mortgagee of Each and Every Unit in Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 441 et al.

42 O.R. (3d) 62

Docket No. C27992

Court of Appeal for Ontario Catzman, Rosenberg and O'Connor JJ.A. October 30, 1998

APPEAL from an order of Chadwick J. with respect to the validity of provisions in the declaration of a condominium corporation.

André Claude and Anne Sheppard, for appellant. David R. Habib, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

ROSENBERG J.A.: -- This appeal from a judgment of Chadwick J. concerns the interpretation of provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26 dealing with the contents of the declaration specified in s. 3 of the Act. Chadwick J. held that provisions of the appellant's declaration dealing with the ownership, management and use of a shared recreational facility were properly specified in the declaration and not inconsistent with the Act. I agree with his disposition of the matter and would dismiss this appeal.

The Facts

The appellant is a condominium corporation created in 1988 as a result of the registration by the declarant, Financial Trustco Properties Ltd., of the declaration and description under the Condominium Act. The condominium is a high-rise building containing 221 residential units. The building is situated on a large tract of land, known as Brittany Park, that was owned by FTP and on which FTP intended to erect a number of other condominiums. At the time of registration of the appellant, there was one other condominium on the lands, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 16.

In May 1989, FTP sold the uncompleted project to Thomas C. Assaly Corporation Ltd. and Assaly thereby became the successor declarant. The project, as envisaged by FTP and Assaly, was that a number of condominiums would share a common stand-alone recreation facility. It would appear that the developers expected that by 1996, if not earlier, they would have completed the various buildings and legal ownership in the recreation facilities would be transferred to the condominium corporations. In the interim, the declarant was to manage the facilities.

Four other buildings were ultimately erected on the Assaly lands after the appellant was registered. Three of these are also condominiums; the other is co-op housing. The respondents, Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 507 and No. 510, are two of the condominiums that were subsequently erected on the tract of land. There is one undeveloped piece of land.

The dispute in this case concerns the provisions in the appellant's declaration relating to recreational amenities. Similar provisions are found in the declarations of the respondents. The recreational amenities consist of two components: (1) the recreational facilities and lands, being landscaped parkland, a pond and an outdoor pool and (2) the recreational centre and lands, which were built after the sale to Assaly and include an indoor swimming pool, sauna, meeting rooms, racquet facilities, and tennis courts. Assaly owns 80 per cent of the recreational facilities and lands and 100 per cent of the recreational centre and lands. Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 16 owns the remaining 20 per cent of the recreational facilities and lands.

The appellant objects to the inclusion, in art. IV of the declaration, of the provisions respecting the recreational amenities. The declaration uses the term "co-tenants" to refer to the interest of the condominium corporations, including the appellant and the two respondents, in the recreational amenities and I will adopt the same terminology. The provisions of art. IV to which the appellant objects may be summarized as follows:

(1) The recreational facility and lands are declared to be owned 80 percent by the declarant and 20 percent by Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 16. The declarant's 80 percent will ultimately be shared between the appellant, the declarant and the owners of the adjacent lands as tenants in common in accordance with their respective proportionate shares;

(2) The recreational centre and lands are owned solely by the declarant but it shall ultimately be shared between the appellant, the declarant and the owners of the adjacent lands as tenants in common in accordance with their respective proportionate shares;

(3) The actual transfer of ownership shall take place upon the development of the adjacent lands or no later than December 30, 1996 and the appellant shall accept a transfer of title from the declarant. Once ownership of the recreational amenities has been transferred, any further sale, transfer or other conveyance or encumbrance cannot be made without the prior written consent of the remaining co-tenants;

(4) Until the date of transfer, the declarant has the unilateral right to operate, control, manage, establish hours of use of the recreational amenities and shall also prepare a recreational budget. The appellant is obliged to adopt and be bound by the budget as part of its own budget and to pay its proportionate share. The appellant is also obliged to enter into a cost-sharing agreement with the other co-tenants relating to sharing the costs of the operation, repair, and replacement of the shared recreational amenities;

(5) After the date of transfer, a committee will govern the use and maintenance of the recreational amenities and the preparation of the budget. The committee will consist of representatives from each of the co-tenants.

As required by the Condominium Act, the declaration is registered on title. A "common access agreement" between the declarant and the appellant is also registered on title. This agreement confirms the provisions of art. IV of the declaration. For example, it confirms the proposed date of the transfer of ownership and the sharing of expenses as set out in art. IV. There is no such agreement, however, between the declarant and the two respondents. Accordingly, they argue that they must rely entirely upon the provisions of their declarations to assert their right to ownership and use of the recreational amenities.

Almost immediately after the appellant was registered, problems arose with respect to the use of the recreational amenities. As I understand it, the root of the problems is that Assaly has not fulfilled its obligations in terms of managing the amenities and contributing to the expenses. In oral argument, it was suggested that Assaly might now be in receivership. In any event, the condominium owners have had difficulty making use of some of the facilities and a number of legal actions have been initiated by and against the co-tenants.

The Issue

The issue in the case is a narrow one. The appellant submits that the provisions of art. IV of the declaration summarized above are inconsistent with the provisions of the Condominium Act. The appellant therefore seeks an order amending the declaration to delete those provisions.

This appeal engages ss. 3 and 12 of the Condominium Act. Portions of those sections are as follows:

3(1) A declaration shall not be registered unless it is executed by the owner or owners of the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description and unless it contains,

(a) a statement of intention that the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description be governed by this Act;

(b) the consent, in the prescribed form, of every person having a registered mortgage against the land or interests appurtenant to the land described in the description;

(c) a statement, expressed in percentages, of the proportions of the common interests; (d) a statement, expressed in percentages allocated to the units, of the proportions in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses;

(e) an address for service and a mailing address for the corporation; and

(f) a specification of any parts of the common elements that are to be used by the owners of one or more designated units and not by all the owners.

(3) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection (1), and in any other section in this Act, a declaration may contain,

(a) a specification of common expenses;

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

(c) provisions restricting gifts, leases and sales of the units and common interests;

(d) a specification of duties of the corporation consistent with its objects; and

(e) a specification of any allocation of the obligations to repair and to maintain the units and common elements.

(4) Subject to subsection (5), the declaration may be amended only with the consent of all owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests.

(5) Where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly.

(6) When a declaration is amended, the corporation shall register a copy of the amendment executed by all the owners and all persons having registered mortgages against the units and common interests, and until the copy is registered the amendment is ineffective.

(8) The corporation, on at least seven days notice to every owner and mortgagee, or an owner, on at least seven days notice to the corporation and every other owner and mortgagee, may apply to a judge of the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order amending the declaration or description and the judge, if he or she is satisfied that an amendment is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency in the declaration or description or arising out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration or description, may make the order.

12(1) The objects of the corporation are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation.

(2) The corporation has a duty to control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation.

(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(4) The declaration or the by-laws may specify duties of the corporation consistent with its objects, responsibilities and duties.

(5) Each owner and each person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest has the right to the performance of any duty of the corporation specified by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

Analysis

It is conceded that the provisions of art. IV cannot be supported on the basis of the mandatory requirements of the declaration set forth in s. 3(1) of the Act. The respondents argue, however, that art. IV is authorized either by s. 3(3)(a) (specification of common expenses) or (3)(d) (specification of duties of the corporation consistent with its objects). I need not deal with the argument based on s-s. (3)(a). I am satisfied that art. IV is authorized by s-s. (3)(d) and is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

As pointed out by Maloney J. in Basmadjian v. York Condominium Corp. No. 52 (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 523 at p. 525, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 117 (H.C.J.), a condominium corporation is entirely a creature of statute and any provision of its declaration must be authorized by the Act. However, the provisions of s. 3(3), and especially cl. (d) are "broadly permissive": Peel Condominium Corp. No. 417 v. Tedley Homes Ltd. (1997), 35 O.R. (3d) 257 at p. 263, 12 R.P.R. (3d) 278 (C.A.).

Section 3(3)(d) provides that the declaration may contain a specification of duties of the corporation consistent with its objects. The objects of the corporation specified in s. 12(1) are to manage the property and any assets of the corporation. In addition, under s. 12(2) the corporation is under a duty to "control, manage and administer the common elements and the assets of the condominium corporation". The appellant's beneficial interest in the recreational amenities is an asset of the corporation. It was proper for the declaration to contain provisions setting out the nature of that interest and the corporation's duties for managing, controlling and administering that asset. These duties include the requirements that it accept a transfer of title to its share of the amenities, contribute to the cost of maintenance of the facility and enter into a cost-sharing agreement with the other co-tenants.

The Condominium Act is a piece of consumer protection legislation and should be interpreted with this purpose in mind: Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 at pp. 130-31, 96 D.L.R. (4th) 449 (C.A.). The promotional material circulated by the declarant and the disclosure statement required by s. 52 of the Act and provided to unit purchasers by the declarant all refer to the recreational amenities that will be made available to purchasers of units in these condominiums. The inclusion of the terms of art. IV in the declaration gives notice to purchasers as to their liability for a share of the expenses involved in the recreational facility. Inclusion of those provisions in the declaration also protects the purchasers from the declarant attempting to renege on the promise made to the purchasers that these facilities would be available and ultimately owned by their corporation as an asset. The unit owners would have relied upon these representation. It would be unreasonable and unfair to void those provisions of the declaration: Tedley Homes Ltd., at pp. 264-65.

The appellant argues that the provisions of art. IV actually interfere with the control and management of the assets of the corporation because those provisions require it to enter into agreements with third parties. In addition, it is at the mercy of those third parties that may not carry out their obligations. The appellant argues that the problems with art. IV's requirements are highlighted in a case such as this where the declarant is not available to enter into the cost-sharing agreement with respect to its share of the project, is in arrears for its proportionate share of the expenses and has abdicated its responsibilities to manage the property. Accordingly, the appellant argues that art. IV is consistent with neither the objects of the corporation nor the purpose of the legislation.

I do not agree. Undoubtedly, problems can arise where a condominium corporation is required to share facilities with a third party and I do not minimize the concerns that the appellant's unit owners have over the use and management of the recreational amenities. However, the Act gives the declarant the right to include in the declaration provisions respecting the management of the assets of the corporation. There is nothing in the Act that prohibits the sharing of facilities among different condominiums or prohibits a declarant from giving the corporation an ownership interest in the shared facility. Such an arrangement may, in fact, be beneficial to the unit owners by giving them access to, and an interest in, a facility that could not be supported if owned only by the single corporation.

In my view, it is not improper for the declarant to specify the corporation's responsibilities so that the co-tenants or others with an interest in the shared facility can make fair use of it. The impugned provisions attempt to set up a reasonable structure for the management of the shared facility. Those provisions are thus well within the permissible objects of the corporation and are not inconsistent with the consumer protection objects of the Act. Disposition Accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Danielle David, claimant, and Vancouver Condominium Services Ltd. and Strata Plan VR2124 (Westpoint Terrace), defendant

[1999] B.C.J. No. 1869 Vancouver Registry No. 98-42283

British Columbia Provincial Court Vancouver, British Columbia Dhillon Prov. Ct. J. Heard: May 27, 1999. Judgment: July 6, 1999. Filed: July 7, 1999.

Counsel: Danielle David, in person. G. Fanaken, for the defendants. DHILLON PROV. CT. J.:--

Introduction

[para1] In this action, the Claimant, Danielle David, seeks recovery of the cost of repairs to the floor of her condominium unit which was damaged by water seepage caused by a structural defect in the walls of the strata building.

[para2] Ms. David's claim is against her strata corporation, known as Strata Plan VR-2124 (hereinafter called the "Strata Corporation"). She has also joined as a defendant the Strata Corporation's current management company, Vancouver Condominium Services Ltd. (hereinafter called "Vancouver Condominium"). At the start of trial, Mr. Gerry Fanaken, representing Vancouver Condominium and also acting as agent of the Strata Corporation, raised the issue of this Court's jurisdiction to hear this matter. He queried whether the Condominium Act, RSBC 1996, c. 64 precluded this lawsuit from being brought in Provincial Court. I reserved my decision on this point and proceeded to hear the matter on its merits.

Issues

[para3]

1. Is Ms. David precluded by the Condominium Act from bringing her claim against the Strata Corporation for damages for breach of contract or, alternatively, in negligence?

2. If there is no jurisdictional bar, are the Defendants Strata Corporation and Vancouver Condominium liable for breach of contract or in negligence?

3. If liability is established, what is the quantum of damages payable to Ms. David?

[para4] Before I address these issues, I will set out the background to the dispute.

Background

[para5] Ms. Danielle David works for the CBC Television Francaise in Vancouver. She is the owner of unit 105 of a condominium building located at 1263 Barclay Street in Vancouver. This building was constructed in 1987. Ms. David purchased her unit in or around the early 1990s. Within about one year of purchase, there was water infiltration caused by defective construction of her deck, which allowed water to enter under her patio door into her living room. Her carpet became water damaged and required replacement. The source of the leaks was attended to and the problem apparently corrected. Ms. David was told that the deck was fully repaired.

[para7] As it turned out, further repairs were needed to the outside deck, and a second company was hired to attend to the problem. This company opened up the deck and left it open over a period of time. In the meantime, it rained heavily.

[para8] In or around the summer of 1996 Ms. David again noted water leakage into her suite. The second leakage problem was related to the outside patio repair which the Strata Corporation was undertaking through its then management company, Coast to Coast Project Management Ltd. (hereinafter called "Coast Management"). The manager of Coast Management was Mr. S. J. MacLellan.

Date: 11-Dec.-1995

Subject: Water Infiltration in Suite 105

As you are all aware, my patio repairs were to have been finished Sept. 15.1995 as I was told. Heavy rain has since fallen and 3 months later I am at the same point. My recently installed hardwood floor are (sic) now being ruined (like my original carpet) so, please correct that water infiltration immediately otherwise I'll be force (sic) to take legal action. Thanks.

Date: 19-Feb.-1996

Subject: Urgent Repair

Reliable Restoration started the repairs for Suite 106 on Feb. 10th and after 8 days of dry weather the repairs are still incomplete. As a result water is still pouring into my living room and my carpenter who arrive Feb. 19th to restore my floor had to leave once again. In addition, my bedroom floor is also curling which I have previously complained about. The fact is the whole situation is a complete mess. Absolutely ridiculous. Which makes me wonder why I am still paying my maintenance fees. I would really but really appreciate concrete action. Now. Come see my living room floor and you will understand my concern. Thank you.

[para10] The hardwood floor of Ms. David's unit was ruined by incoming water and she sought to have it repaired. To that end, she spoke with Mr. Stu MacLennan of Coast Management, who was investigating the damage and hiring contractors to undertake repairs on behalf of the Strata Corporation. Ms. David testified that Mr. MacLennan saw the damaged hardwood floors, and himself obtained a repair estimate from B.C. Hardwood Floor Co. Ltd. dated July 15, 1996. This estimate, marked as Exhibit 1, states the work to be removal of water damaged hardwood floor at a cost of $7709.35 inclusive of taxes.

[para11] This estimate was higher than one Ms. David had obtained from her contractor, Mr. D. Lahoud, on July 18, 1996. Mr. MacLennan advised her to go ahead with the repair of her hardwood floor using Mr. Lahoud. Mr. MacLennan told Ms. David she would be fully reimbursed for this work. The cost of this repair, which was done, was $7,200.00 inclusive of taxes. Ms. David relied on Mr. MacLennan's promise of payment and expended the monies. She then sought payment from the Strata Corporation. She was advised in September 1996 by Mr. MacLellan that she could be paid the full amount for her floor replacement if she agreed to release the Strata Corporation from any liability. She agreed to this suggestion but soon thereafter learned Mr. MacLellan and Coast Management were being relieved of their duties as property managers for the Strata Corporation.

[para12] Ms. David was advised in early 1997 that the Strata Corporation could only reimburse her for the value of her carpet, as the cost of the wood flooring was an improvement for which she was responsible. She has received payment of $3,876.98 representing the replacement value of a carpet and sues for the balance of $3,323.02.

[para13] Mr. Colm Place testified on behalf of the Strata Corporation. He purchased his unit in 1994 and was elected to the Strata Council in 1995. He was elected Chairperson of the Strata Council in September 1996. He confirmed that Coast Management was the Strata Corporation's original management company. It was owned and operated by the developer of the condominium project. Coast Management attended to all property management matters for the Strata Corporation including the repairs to correct the defects causing leaks in 1995 and 1996, and all claims arising in relation to the defects.

[para15] While Mr. Place would not suggest that a carte blanche was given to Coast Management, he concedes that no minutes were kept of Council meetings and so he is not able to say what specific directions the Strata Council gave to Coast Management concerning Ms. David's damaged floor. He has no knowledge as to what representations, if any, Mr. MacLellan or Coast Management made to Ms. David.

[para16] Mr. Place concedes that Coast Management and Mr. MacLellan had a free hand in determining who to retain for the work and how it was to be done. Coast Management dealt with the insurance company from whom the Strata Council was claiming reimbursement for the damages and repairs due to water damage.

[para17] In late 1996, the Strata Corporation notified Coast Management that their management services would be terminated, and retained Vancouver Condominium as its new property management company.

I have been discussing this matter with the adjusters for the insurance company and I have been advised that, as far as the insurance policy is concerned, the established amount of the loss was $3,876.98. This was based on their estimates of the damage had there been original carpeting and not the hardwood flooring which you had personally installed. It is the strata corporation's position, as supported by the insurance company, that the addition of hardwood flooring to replace the original carpet constituted a "betterment or improvement" to the strata lot, which therefore excludes it from any insurance coverage or strata corporation liability.

[para19] The Corporation offered to pay for Ms. David a sum representing the value of carpet installation. Ms. David was paid the $3,786.98 and sues for the balance.

Jurisdiction of the Provincial Court

[para20] As indicated, the Defendants argue that this Court does not have jurisdiction to hear this claim. In order to determine this issue, it is necessary to review what limits on jurisdiction may be prescribed by the Condominium Act, RSBC 1996, c. 64.

[para21] The effect of the Condominium Act on jurisdiction of the Provincial Court in civil claims has been considered in a number of reported decisions: Seller v. Singla Bros. Holdings and Owners of Strata Plan KAS976, [1995] B.C.J. No. 2826, (22 November 1995), Penticton 9315 (BC Prov. Ct.) Stansfield, J.; McNeill v. Owners of Strata Plan KAS1099, [1996] B.C.J. No. 2553, (5 November 1996) Penticton 12642 (BC Prov. Ct.) Stansfield, J.; and The Owners of Strata Plan LMS2064 v. Biamonte, [1999] B.C.J. No. 1267, (28 April 1999) Vancouver 98-43918 (BC Prov. Ct.) Bruce, J.

[para22] In these cases, the Court has noted that under section 1 of the Condominium Act, "court" is expressly defined as the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

[para23] The Condominium Act contains provisions which deal with the possibility that the strata corporation or owner may become involved in litigation, as evidenced by the following sections (emphasis added):

15(6). An owner may sue the strata corporation about any matter relating to the common property, common facilities, or the assets of the strata corporation.

35(5). Subject to section 36, a strata corporation may recover from an owner in a court of competent jurisdiction a sum of money owing to the strata corporation.

(a) as the owner's monthly contribution under this section, or

(b) for money expended by the strata corporation under section 34.

42. An owner may refer to arbitration or may apply to the court to prevent or remedy a matter where he alleges:

(a) the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself.

127(3). The strata corporation may recover from an owner by an action for debt in a court of competent jurisdiction money which the strata corporation is required to expend as a result of an act or omission by the owner, the owner's employees, agents, invitees or tenants, or an infraction or violation of these by-laws or any rules or regulations established under them.

[para24] The reference to a "court of competent jurisdiction" was considered by Bruce, J. of this Court in The Owners of Strata Plan LMS2064 v. Eugene Biamonte, [1999] B.C.J. No. 1267, (28 April 1999) Vancouver 98-43918. At page 4 of her Reasons, Judge Bruce noted as follows:

In my view, however, the use of the term "court of competent jurisdiction" in specific provisions of the Act addressing the recovery of monies evidences an intent to accord jurisdiction to courts apart from the Supreme Court. Had the Legislature intended that the Supreme Court exercise exclusive jurisdiction in all matters within the scope of the Condominium Act there would be no reason to chose the particular words used in Section 35(5) and Section 127(3) of the Act. Instead, the Legislature would simply have referred to the "court" in all cases. I am satisfied the term "court of competent jurisdiction" is a broad term that denotes authority over the parties, the subject matter of the action, and the remedy sought.

[para25] I accept the foregoing as the correct analysis. Thus, if the matter is one which falls within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court, and is not otherwise expressly reserved to the Supreme Court under the Condominium Act, the Provincial Court has the jurisdiction to adjudicate upon it.

3. (1) The Provincial Court has jurisdiction in a claim for

- (a) debt or damages. (b) recovery of personal property,
- (c) specific performance of an agreement relating to personal property or services, or
- (d) relief from opposing claims to personal property

if the amount claimed or the value of the personal property or services is $10,000 or less, excluding interest and costs.

(2) The Provincial Court does not have jurisdiction in a claim for libel, slander or malicious prosecution.

[para27] I find that the words "court of competent jurisdiction" in the Condominium Act allow the Provincial Court to hear claims which fall within its statutorily authorized monetary and subject matter jurisdiction, as defined under Section 3 of the Provincial Court Act.

[para28] The use of the term "the court" in section 42 is to be distinguished from "court of competent jurisdiction" in sections 35(5) and 127(3), which relate to a claim for money or debt, as the case may be.

[para29] A claim which, although within this Court's monetary jurisdiction, also trenches upon matters which fall within section 42 can not be litigated in the Provincial Court.

[para30] I have reached this conclusion because in section 42, the word "court" is used without any qualifying language and section 1 defines "court" to mean the Supreme Court. This suggests that the legislature intended the subject matter of claims under section 42 of the Condominium Act to be heard in Supreme Court.

[para31] The plain language of section 42 indicates that it is intended to apply to disputes which relate to strata corporation governance. Section 42 may be invoked where "the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners". Allegations directed to the affairs of the strata corporation, the exercise of its powers or the powers of the strata council, are subject matters to be adjudicated by arbitration or in the Supreme Court.

[para32] It should be noted that section 200 of the Company Act similarly reserves to the Supreme Court exclusive jurisdiction to adjudicate on disputes concerning complaints by a member of a company. Section 200 states as follows:

200(1) A member of a company may apply to the court for an order on the ground

(a) that the affairs of the company are being conducted, of the powers of the directors are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more of the members, including the applicant,

(b) that some act of the company has been done, or is threatened, or that some resolution of the members or any class of members has been passed or is proposed, that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more of the members, including the applicant.

[para33] By definition of section 13(1) of the Condominium Act, the owners of strata lots are members of a strata corporation. However, the section goes on to provide that the Company Act does not apply to a strata corporation. The regulation of the affairs of the strata corporation is governed exclusively by the Condominium Act. Since the Company Act doesn't apply to strata corporations, section 42 becomes the operative remedial provision for disputes between members and the strata corporation relating to strata corporation governance.

[para34] Corporate governance disputes, whether arising within corporations in general or strata corporations in particular, have traditionally been reserved for the Supreme Court. Accordingly, any matter which raises the allegation that a member of a company or an owner of a strata lot in a strata corporation is being "oppressed" in the manner caught by section 200 or section 42, as the case may be, should properly be brought in the Supreme Court.

[para35] What disputes would fall within corporate governance of a strata corporation?

[para36] To answer this question, it is instructive to look at the oppression provisions of the Company Act. The leading case in this area is Diligenti v. RWMD Operations (1976) 1 BCLR 36 (SC) which notes that the oppression provisions of the Company Act protect a shareholder's rights as a shareholder and not rights the shareholder might concurrently enjoy as an employee or in some other capacity:

[T]he oppression and unfair prejudice must be with respect to the rights, position or interests of the applicant as member, that is, as shareholder, of the companies and not with respect to his rights, interests or position as director, officer, or employee. [at 41]

As a shareholder he has no right to employment or remuneration in a managerial or administrative capacity. Any such rights would arise only as the result of express or implied agreement that he should be so employed, and the remedy for termination would be by other means, not by action to assert rights as a shareholder. I accept the contention of counsel for the respondents that the cases are to the effect that the ouster of a member from a particular office or employment with the company does not affect his rights as a shareholder so as to amount to conduct oppressive to him as a member. [at 52; emphasis added]

[para37] I take from the foregoing distinction that a corporation or strata corporation may enter into agreements with its members or lot owners, as the case may be, the breach of which may be adjudicated in Provincial Court provided it is within this court's monetary jurisdiction and no issue of "oppression" in the sense discussed in Diligenti arises.

[para38] Oppression in the context of the relationship between owners and the strata corporation may arise in circumstances relating to those matters noted in section 43 and 44 of the Condominium Act. These sections relate to a section 42 application, and refer to complaints concerning an act of the strata council or a transaction or resolution on their part, disputes relating to contributions to common expenses, issues arising from fines for the breach of bylaws or rules or regulations, damages to the assets of the strata corporation, or decisions of the strata council which are characterized as oppressive.

[para39] In Burdeny v. K&D Gourmet Baked Foods and Investments Inc. and Kirk Brian D. Burdeny, [1999] B.C.J. No. 953, [April 23, 1999] BCSC Van. A983168, Levine J. characterized the claims of the Plaintiff shareholder in four broad categories:

- (a) claims relating to his participation in the company other than in his position as a shareholder;
- (b) claims regarding misuse of corporate funds;
- (c) claims concerning the rights of a minority shareholder to participate in company affairs; and
- (d) claims as to irregularities of corporate governance.

[para40] Her Ladyship accepted that apart from category (a), the other three categories of other claims may give rise to oppression, if substantiated by the evidence.

[para41] In applying the foregoing analysis to the case before me, I find that in considering the application of section 42, allegations such as those set out in (b) through (d) in a strata corporation setting would properly fall to be decided in the Supreme Court. They are related to the rights of a strata lot owner as a participating member of the strata corporation, and to corporate governance, which matters do not lie within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court.

[para44] I conclude therefore that the Provincial Court is the proper forum in which to hear the claims of breach of agreement or negligence by Ms. David against the Strata Corporation.

Liability

[para45] Are the Defendants Strata Corporation and Vancouver Condominium liable for breach of agreement or negligence?

[para46] I find that Ms. David suffered damage to her floor by reason of water leakage into her unit caused by a defect in construction. The slow progress of repairs to remedy the defect in the decks exacerbated the problem. The repair to the decks was carried out by contractors retained on behalf of the Strata Corporation by Coast Management, their property managers at the time. Mr. MacLellan of Coast Management authorized, on behalf of the Defendant Strata Corporation, the replacement of Ms. David's water-damaged hardwood floor at a cost of $7,200.00. On Mr. MacLellan's go-ahead to use her own contractor rather than his nominee whose bid was higher, Ms. David had the floor installed. There were no restrictions or qualifiers, such as insurance approval, placed on the agreement to reimburse.

[para47] Both parties have attached to their pleadings Bylaw 10 of the Rules and Regulations of Strata Plan VR2124 which refers to claims arising from damage to property. Bylaw 10 contemplates that if loss or damage to property arises from the defect or want of repair of common property, or from leakage of water in any manner whatsoever, the Strata Corporation is not responsible unless the loss or damage results "from the negligent act or omission on the part of the Strata Corporation, its employees or agents".

[para48] I do not need to consider if there was any negligence in the handling of the water leakage repairs as it is evident that whatever the cause of the damage to Ms. David's unit, the Strata Corporation agreed through Coast Management to remedy it. I find that as agent of the Strata Corporation, authorized by it to remedy the defects and the consequential water damage, Mr. MacLellan bound the Strata Corporation to the agreement to reimburse Ms. David for the cost of repair.

[para49] The Strata Corporation did not assert at trial that Coast management did not have authority to enter into the agreement with Ms. David. Mr. Place, current Chairperson, could not advise what directions or limits, if any, were placed on Coast Management's authority to attend to the building repairs and claims by strata lot owner. The Strata Corporation could have brought Coast Management into the suit as a third party if it had acted without authority, which it did not do.

[para50] I find that the Strata Corporation is bound by the agreement to reimburse in reliance on which Ms. David had her floor repaired. The Strata Corporation breached that agreement by failing to pay in full for the repairs. It is liable to Ms. David for the unpaid balance of the repair bill, being $3,323.02.

[para51] Coast Management and Mr. MacLellan were replaced in early 1997 by the Defendant Vancouver Condominium Services Ltd. I accept Mr. Fanaken's submissions that the agreement to reimburse was made before Vancouver Condominium was retained by the Strata Corporation. I find that Vancouver Condominium was not an agent of the Strata Corporation in dealing with Ms. David when the go-ahead to replace the floor, and promise of reimbursement of cost, was made to her. Therefore, the claim against Vancouver Condominium is dismissed.

[para52] In summary, Ms. David will have judgment and a payment order against the Defendant Strata Corporation VR2124 in the sum of $3,323.02 plus court ordered interest on this sum from January 1, 1997 to the date of this judgment. Ms. David is entitled to her filing and service costs of $210. I make no award allowing Vancouver Condominium its filing fees as it filed jointly with the Strata Corporation against whom liability has been found.

Vancouver Registry No. 96-22149

British Columbia Provincial Court (Civil Division) Vancouver, British Columbia Werier Prov. Ct. J. Heard: May 8, October 14 and 16, 1997. Judgment: filed December 18, 1997.

Counsel: Henry C. Wood for the claimant. D. Marks for the defendants.

WERIER PROV. CT. J.:--

Introduction

[para1] The Plaintiff, Bernard Herstein, has brought an action against the Defendants, Royal Lepage Real Estate statements where he consulted his own lawyer and made the Services Ltd. and Erika Gardner. He seeks damages for negligent misrepresentations that he alleges were made to him by Ms. Gardner, as a listing realtor. He maintains that he relied on these misrepresentations, to his detriment, when he entered into a contract for the purchase of a condominium. He is seeking damages in the amount of $10,000, having abandoned any claim in excess of $10,000.

[para2] Counsel for Mr. Herstein has argued that Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87 outlines clearly the five elements that are required to successfully prove a claim for negligent misrepresentation, and that all of the required elements are supported by the evidence in this case. Counsel for Ms. Gardner has invited me to apply the test for negligent misrepresentation set out in Kingu v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. (1986), 10 B.C.L.R. (2d) 15 (B.C.C.A.). While this decision predates the Cognos (supra) decision, she argues that it is more applicable, as it states the test in the context of a negligent misrepresentation made by a realtor. The authorities relied upon by each of the parties make it clear that the trial courts in British Columbia have interchangeably applied either the Kingu or Cognos decisions.

[para3] I agree with the statement made by Madam Justice Levine in the case of Abbey Blinds Inc. v. Gary Mikesh, Colliers Maccaulay Nicholls Inc. [1996] B.C.J. No. 920 at page 13 where she states :

"Counsel provided a number of authorities in which the required elements of a successful claim for negligent misstatement, based on the doctrine established in Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1964] A.C. 465, are summarized.

[para4] In Kingu v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. (supra) at p.23 McLachlin J.A., as she then was, summarized the requirements of tort liability for negligent misstatement as follows:

- (1) A false statement negligently made,
- (2) A duty of care on the person making the statement to the recipient.

A duty of care does not arise unless:

- (a) the person making the statement is possessed of special skill or knowledge on the matter in question, and
- (b) the circumstances establish that a reasonable person making that statement would know that the recipient is relying upon his skill or judgment;
- (3) Reasonable reliance on the statement by its recipient;
- (4) Loss suffered as a consequence of the reliance.

[para5] In Queen v. Cognos, (supra) at p.110 Iacobucci J. summarized the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada as follows:

The required elements for a successful Hedley Byrne claim have been stated in many authorities, sometimes in varying forms. The decisions of this Court cited above suggest five general requirements: (1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee; (2) the representations in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making said misrepresentation; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent misrepresentation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

Though presented in a different order, the elements outlined are the same: (1) a duty of care; (2) a false, inaccurate or misleading statement; (3) negligence in making the statement; (4) reasonable reliance; and (5) loss resulting from the reliance."

The Evidence

[para6] Counsel for Ms. Gardener has acknowledged that in the circumstances of this case, Ms. Gardner had a duty of care to Mr. Herstein. It is the other four elements required to support a negligent misrepresentation claim that I have considered when reviewing the evidence.

[para7] Mr. Herstein testified that he looked for condominiums for approximately two years prior to his purchase of 409-518 Moberley Road in Vancouver, British Columbia (the "Condominium"), in the spring of 1993, This was his first purchase of a residence for himself. He had previously hoped to tender an offer on a unit in the building next door, at 907 - 522 Moberley Road, but was unable to do so before it was purchased by someone else. Mr. Herstein testified that he was only interested in condominiums located on the west side of Vancouver. He said that he was looking for a concrete building and was "hoping to find a unit that was close to fourteen hundred square feet, but I was looking for a unit that was thirteen hundred plus square feet and, hopefully, fourteen hundred." The reason for this, he testified, had to do with his living comfort as well as his belief that the larger units would have a better resale value.

[para8] Mr. Herstein found out about the listing of the Condominium from his brother who had obtained a "feature sheet" at an open house. This sheet indicated, among other things, that the Condominium had "over 1,300 square feet of luxury living space." The sheet also referred to an enclosed "atrium". The Condominium was listed for $349,900. [para9] Mr. Herstein testified that he telephoned Ms. Gardiner, (the listing realtor, with the Defendant Royal LePage Real Estate Services Ltd.), to make an appointment to view the premises. This was their first contact. Ms. Gardner concurs that the first contact was made through a phone call initiated by Mr. Herstein. In this conversation Mr. Herstein recalled that he specifically asked Ms. Gardner the size of the suite, and that she told him that it was 1307 square feet, not including the enclosed balcony. This is one of the alleged negligent statements that Mr. Herstein claims to have relied upon in entering into the contract to purchase the Condominium.

[para10] Mr. Herstein was familiar with the concept of an enclosed balcony, as he was living in the building. Some of the suites in the building had what was built as balcony space and then enclosed, so that it could constitute additional internal living space. This is the type of space that was referred to as the atrium in the listing information that Mr. Herstein had at the time of his initial contact with Ms. Gardner.

[para11] Ms. Gardner's recollection of this initial conversation is somewhat different. She is a licensed real estate salesperson who has been in the field since 1980. She was with Royal LePage from 1982 to 1995. At the time of this transaction about one half of her sales involved homes, and the other half were the sale of condominiums. She was familiar with both 518 and 522 Moberley Road, having previously been the listing realtor for suites in both of those buildings. Ms. Gardner recalled that she returned a page from Mr. Herstein while she was driving in her car to an appointment. Mr. Herstein told her that he wanted to view the Condominium, but she had another appointment to go to at the time. During this first conversation she does recall that Mr. Herstein asked her what the square footage of the Condominium was, and whether the balcony was enclosed. She recalls that she did not want to get into details on the phone while driving, but that she did confirm that the square footage of the unit was 1307 square feet. She repeatedly testified that phrases such as "not including the enclosed balcony" would have never been used by her to describe the square footage of this unit, or any unit.

[para12] Exhibit #2 tab 5 contains the "feature sheet" which Ms. Gardner prepared, and which Mr. Herstein received from his brother. On that sheet is written the notation "1307 - 9:30 a.m." This was written by Mr. Herstein at the time of his first conversation with Ms. Gardner, when they also tentatively agreed to a meet at the condominium at 9:30 a.m. that Monday. No additional notation was made by him at the time to modify the number of square feet to indicate that it did or did not include the enclosed balcony.

[para13] Mr. Herstein made arrangements to view the Condominium a few days later and met Ms. Gardner there. While viewing the Condominium he recalls that he again specifically asked Ms. Gardner the size of the unit. He says that she repeated that it was 1307 square feet not including the balcony area. Mr. Herstein alleges that he relied upon this statement in deciding to purchase the unit and in determining an offering price. At this first meeting he says that he also asked the size of the balcony itself, but recalls that Ms. Gardner was uncertain.

[para14] Ms. Gardner has a different recollection of their first meeting. She does recall that she confirmed that the square footage of the unit was 1307 square feet, but she maintains that this was without any reference to whether this included or excluded the enclosed balcony. She recalls that Mr. Herstein asked her, as he was walking ahead of her towards the enclosed balcony, whether she knew the size of the balcony room. She indicated that she had to look this information up, and that the figure would not be precise as it was measured based on an average room size. Later on, as Mr. Herstein was about to leave, she recalls that he did ask her in an off hand manner, (that she described as "over his shoulder while walking"), whether the balcony was included in the square footage. She recalled that she said that she was not sure, but that she would be happy to review the strata plan with him. She says that he then left without waiting for the answer. She says that the information available there at the time, including the strata plan, would have clearly shown that 1307 was the total square footage, including the balcony, and that this was her knowledge base at the time of the first meeting, as well as the initial phone call.

[para16] Mr. Herstein, although not a qualified realtor, and a first time purchaser, had done his own analysis of the market place and felt confident that his offer was a reasonable one. He ultimately purchased the unit for $320,000. During purchase negotiations he recalls telling Ms. Gardner that he was using the sale of unit 907 as a comparable sale and that he had based his purchase price on the price per square foot that unit 907 had sold for. The offer contained many subject clauses, all of which had been included by Mr. Herstein, without any advice from Ms. Gardner. The subject clauses included a condition that the contract be "1. subject to the purchaser's lawyers approval of this contract for purchase and sale including the disclosure statement and the amendments and all other documents pertaining to this property..." and "...3. subject to purchaser receiving, reading and being satisfied with the by-laws and financial statements." The subjects were to be removed by April 15, 1993.

[para17] Mr. Herstein did provide a copy of the contract of purchase and sale, the disclosure statement and by-laws to his lawyer, Mr. Epstein, prior to the removal of the subject clauses, Mr. Epstein testified that the disclosure statement was of little significance to him as the building was completed in 1987 and this was a purchase completing in 1993. He testified that he routinely relies on the documents that he receives from the Land Title Office in providing advice to clients. He said that he had no need to verify the size of this unit prior to closing, as Mr. Herstein had not brought any issue about size to his attention. All Mr. Herstein had asked him to do initially was to search other specific properties in the area to confirm their selling price.

[para18] On April 23, 1993 Mr. Epstein recalled that he was called by Mr. Herstein who indicated, for the first time, the possibility that there was some difference between what he had believed the square footage of the unit to be, and what it actually was. Mr. Epstein then received the strata plan from the Land Title Office which confirmed that the actual square footage of the unit, including the balcony was 1307. [para19] Mr. Herstein also recalled no discussions with his lawyer about the square footage of the Condominium, until he became concerned that there was an issue about his mistaken belief as to the size. It was only after the subjects were removed that Mr. Herstein first became aware, through a friend, that his Condominium may have been smaller than he had understood it to be. Mr. Herstein also testified that he knew that once the subjects were removed that he would have a firm contract to purchase the Condominium. He said that he expected Mr. Epstein to ensure that all was in order before the subjects were removed. He knew that Mr. Epstein was going to get a copy of the strata plan. He also testified that Mr. Epstein did not advise him of any reason not to remove the subject clauses on April 15th.

[para20] Mr. Herstein found out, prior to the closing date, that the actual square footage of the Condominium, excluding the balcony was 1243 square feet. The balcony itself turned out to be 64 square feet. He claims that he bought the Condominium believing that it was 1307 square feet excluding the enclosed balcony and so has 64 square feet less living space than he thought he was purchasing. He says that he based his offer on an estimated price per square foot of $245 based on 1307 square feet excluding the balcony. He testified that if he knew that the unit was only 1243 square feet, his offer based on a price per square foot would have been lower, or perhaps he may not have purchased the unit at all. He did admit that the location of the building and his suite, the amenities that the building and suite had to offer, exposure and view, as well as the lay out of the living space were also important in inducing him to purchase this particular Condominium. He also confirmed that the covered balcony, or atrium, is a feature that allows him additional interior living space.

[para21] After discovering the information about the actual square footage of the unit, and prior to the closing, Mr. Herstein decided to phone the realtor, Ms. Gardner, to voice his concerns. He made two phone calls to her that day. He made the calls on his speaker phone at work, and had his brother and a friend, Mr. Konar, present. He did not make the existence of the eavesdroppers known to Ms. Gardner. I heard evidence from Mr. Herstein, as well as his brother and Mr. Konar regarding their best recollections of these phone conversations. After the first conversation each of Mr. Herstein, his brother and Mr. Konar made notes. These were not made during the conversation, but I am told reflected their best recollection immediately after the conversation. After the second conversation Mr. Herstein was the only one to make notes. The second set of notes, exhibit 5, contradict what Mr. Herstein originally testified took place during the second conversation. They seem to support a statement being made by Ms. Gardner that she never would have said that the balcony was included. Mr. Herstein, with the assistance of his Counsel, testified that his note must have been made in error. I find that the evidence with regard to these two telephone calls is of very limited assistance to me. While Counsel for Mr. Herstein has urged me to place great emphasis on the notes made and the testimony given, Ms. Gardner has testified that these conversations took place unexpectedly while she was busy working at a sales office for another condominium project. I have directed my attention primarily to the evidence as recalled by the two parties present prior to the signing of this contract; that is Mr. Herstein and Ms. Gardner.

Applying the evidence to the law

[para22] I am not satisfied that Mr. Herstein has met the onus of proving that he relied on a specific false representation made by Ms. Gardner concerning the square footage of the Condominium. It is clear to me that Ms. Gardner had sufficient information available to her confirming that the total square footage of the Condominium was 1307 square feet in total. This was available to her at the time that she first advertised the listing. It is inconceivable to me (as suggested by Mr. Herstein) that Ms. Gardner would have represented to Mr. Herstein as a potential purchaser, that the Condominium was 1307 square feet excluding the balcony, either during an initial telephone call or when he first viewed the property. This fact was so easily ascertainable by either Mr. Herstein or Ms. Gardner from a simple review of the strata plan. Ms. Gardner suggested in her evidence that perhaps Mr. Herstein, excited about the prospect of this purchase, "heard what he wanted to hear". This may well be how Mr. Herstein became confused about the square footage of the Condominium.

[para23] I am also not satisfied that it was reasonable for Mr. Herstein to rely on the statements that he alleges were made to him by Ms. Gardner. This is particularly so where he consulted his lawyer and the purchase of the Condominium was specifically made subject to that consultation. Mr. Herstein made no independent investigations with regard to the square footage of his Condominium. He made his offer subject to the provision of disclosure statements and a lawyers review of "all other documents pertaining to the property" and yet he did not avail himself of this opportunity to confirm what he says was information critical to him, before he removed the subject clauses. The documents show that if Mr. Herstein had looked at the available strata plan at any time, either before he tendered his offer, or prior to the removal of the subject clauses, the fact that the balcony was included in the estimated 1307 square feet would have been very clear to him. I am satisfied based on the evidence of Ms. Gardner that Mr. Herstein was offered an opportunity to look through the relevant documents with her, but he did not avail himself of this opportunity. Mr. Herstein alleges that his calculations formulated to make the offer were based upon his understanding of the square footage of the Condominium, and yet he also admits that he was uncertain of the square footage of the enclosed balcony when he made the offer.

[para24] It is also clear to me that Mr. Herstein made the decision to purchase the Condominium based upon a number of considerations, and not just because of the size of the unit. He liked building, (as this is where he was living), and was also impressed by the location, the view, and the unique floor plan. He wrote up his own offer which included subject clauses for his own protection and used his own information and formula to determine what he believed to be a fair market value price.

[para25] It follows that Mr. Herstein's claim must be dismissed. I am doing so without costs to either party.

The Owners: Condominium Plan 8820814, plaintiff, and Birchwood Village Greens Ltd., Stanley J. Bucar, Douglas S. Bucar and Brian W. Bucar, defendants

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Wetaskiwin Nation J. May 27, 1998.

Counsel: Jeannette Roberts, for the plaintiff. Robert Dunseith, for the plaintiff. John Prowse, Brian Muryama, for the defendants - Bucars.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

[para1] NATION J.-- This is an application by the Plaintiff to foreclose on land, and as there is no equity above their interest, which arises from condominium costs which have accrued, a direction that the lands be transferred into the Plaintiff's name. The application is opposed by the three Bucar defendants, who hold a mortgage on the land which was registered prior in time to the caveat of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff takes the position they should obtain title without it being subject to the mortgage in favour of the Bucar's.

[para3] It is clear that the mortgage given to the Bucar's was granted and registered prior in time to the caveat of the Plaintiff. It is also clear that the Land Titles Act provides for priority by date of registration, so that under the legislative regime, the mortgage of the Bucar's is first in time and would have priority. Section 31(6) of the Condominium Property Act would seem to confirm this .

[para6] Thus, unpaid condominium fees are treated much as tax arrears, and all tenders are subject to those caveats, as the mortgagee or new owner will be responsible for them.

[para8] Although there is a priority granted to condominium fees by virtue of statutory provisions which allow them to be claimed against subsequent owners which may operate to allow them to be paid in priority out of any funds upon the forced sale of the lands in a foreclosure situation, that fact alone does not necessarily allow the condominium corporation to get title to the property without encumbrances ranking prior in time, which would otherwise have priority under the provisions of the Land Titles system and governing legislation. If the condominium corporation could do this, the result would be to allow the condominium corporation the right to take the land, but to an extent pick and choose the prior encumbrances on title.

[para10] In these circumstances, it is more in compliance with the Land Titles system and legislation that the lands be advertised for sale, allowing tenders to be made. This then allows the Bucars to exercise any rights they may have as mortgagees, which would include paying out any debts which may have a priority, in order to preserve their position on the land. I do not see that this is an appropriate situation for an order to go allowing the Plaintiff to obtain an order transferring title into its name, removing some but not all of the prior encumbrances and effectively extinguishing any rights the Bucar's may have due to their position of being registered prior in time.

[para11] I would also comment that the one appraisal provided by the Plaintiff, gives a total value of $20,000 based on four lots having a value of 5,000 each and two lots having no value due to the fact of the access issues and costs. The appraisals are effective as of March 24, 1996, over two years old at the time of this application. In this circumstance, in absence of a more up to date appraisal, advertising of the lands is preferable to test the current value of the lands.

[para12] In summary, I will allow the amendment to the statement of claim requested by the Plaintiff and not opposed by the Defendants. I will not grant the foreclosure or the direction that the lands be registered in the Plaintiff's name without any attempt at a public sale.

[para13] If counsel need more specific direction, they are at liberty to speak to me.

York Humber Limited, plaintiff (defendant by counterclaim), and Maria Mesa and Juan Mesa, defendants (plaintiffs by counterclaim), and Martin Atkins Limited, third party

Court File No. 72954/91Q

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) B. Wright J. Heard: January 30 and 31, 1997. Judgment: February 11, 1997.

Counsel: Timothy J. Murphy, for the plaintiff. Paul Stocco, for the defendants. Elana Levinson, for the third party.

[para1] B. WRIGHT J.:-- On July 10, 1988, the Mesas signed an agreement to purchase a condominium unit for $178,000 from York Humber. The Mesas failed to complete the sale transaction due to encountering financial difficulties. York Humber subsequently resold the condominium unit. It brings this action claiming the deficiency between the original sale price and the resale price plus its losses as a result of the Mesas' failure to occupy the condominium unit and its costs.

FACTS

[para4] The summer of 1988 was the boom time for condominium sales in the Toronto area. Developers' sales offices were crowded with potential purchasers scrambling to purchase units in buildings where construction had not even commenced. The condominium market was a frenzy of activity.

[para5] The York Humber sales office was no exception when the Mesas attended on Sunday afternoon July 10, 1988. The Mesas were unsophisticated in real estate matters never having purchased any real estate. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mesa testified that they entered the sales office which was crowded with twenty to thirty people. They spent five to ten minutes viewing the promotional material in the sales office, floor plans, artist sketches etc., before being approached by a salesperson. [para6] Martin Atkins Limited, a third party in this action, was the sales firm retained by York Humber to market the condominium units. Marshall Cohen was the sales representative who had contact with the Mesas when they signed the agreement.

[para7] Mr. Mesa testified that Cohen expressed to them how good a deal the units were, that there was nothing else anywhere in that price range and, that the cheapest were all gone and the rest were going really fast.

[para8] Mrs. Mesa said that Cohen stated, "By the end of the day there will be none left". Mrs. Mesa referred to a board which listed all the available units but the one she said they were interested in was already sold according to Cohen, although it was listed on the board.

[para9] Cohen testified that he did not recall the particulars of the Mesa transaction and did not recognize the Mesas in court. Therefore, Mr. Cohen was able to testify only as to his usual practice in dealing with potential purchasers.

[para10] The agreement of purchase and sale consists of a front signature page to which is attached Schedules A through E. It is Cohen's evidence that he carried a clip board on which were several copies of the front page of the agreement and one copy of the schedules. He indicated that there was a stack of schedules somewhere else. He would fill out the front page of the agreement with the name and address of the purchaser, the purchase price, unit number, occupancy date and name of the purchaser's lawyer. The front page would then be given to the receptionist who would make six copies and the six copies would be returned to him stapled together. Cohen would have the purchasers sign the front page of the agreement and initial the unit purchased on Schedule E.

[para11] The signed agreements would then be given back to the receptionist to check. In his examination in chief Cohen said that he would receive back from the receptionist a yellow manila envelope with the front page of the agreement sticking out the top showing the name of the purchaser. He said the envelope would have the condominium documents inside because the thickness of the envelope would tell you that the condominium documents would be in the envelope. In this case the condominium documents are bound together with a Cerlox binding with a cover page entitled "River Ridge Condominium Documents". Cohen would give the purchasers the envelope, congratulate them and tell them they had ten days to cancel.

[para12] However, on cross-examination he embellished his evidence by stating that when he received the envelope from the receptionist he usually took the agreement out of the envelope and looked inside to see that the condominium documents were in the envelope.

[para13] Cohen said the only discussion he had with the Mesas with respect to the agreement was going over the front page with them which included the purchase price, deposit, occupancy date, name of their lawyer and that they had ten days to cancel.

[para14] Mrs. Mesa stated that from the time they first met Cohen about ten to fifteen minutes had passed until they were waiting in line to sign because there was another couple in front of them. She said that Cohen never explained anything and said nothing about condominium disclosure documents. According to Mrs. Mesa, Cohen just lifted up the papers where they were to sign, they were on top of each other, all in one document. With respect to Schedule E she said they initialled one on top of each other.

[para15] Once the signing was completed Mrs. Mesa said that Cohen told them to wait at the reception area. A woman receptionist handed a copy of the agreement to them along with a brochure or pamphlet with drawings and pictures of the project. She could not remember whether the agreement and brochure were in an envelope.

[para16] With respect to the signing procedure, Mr. Mesa said that the front page and the back page which is Schedule E were one on top of the other, and that Cohen gave the front and back pages to the receptionist who put them together with the other papers and then gave a copy of the agreement to them, along with a folder containing an advertising brochure.

[para17] Mr. Mesa stated that the agreement was not explained to them and they were given no opportunity to review it. He said they waited at the reception area along with other people and when their names were called a woman handed them a copy of the agreement with a folder containing the brochure which Mrs. Mesa had described. [para18] Both Mr. and Mrs. Mesa are positive that the only documents they received from York Humber on July 10, 1988, was a copy of the agreement and the brochure. They did not know what a disclosure statement was; they were not asked by their first lawyer about a disclosure statement; they did not know what their new lawyer was talking about when he asked about the disclosure statement and, they did not see a copy of the "River Ridge Condominium Documents" until shown a copy by their new lawyer.

[para19] Both Mr. and Mrs. Mesa said that Mr. Mesa took the agreement of purchase and sale to their lawyer. If they had received a copy of the Condominium Documents they both said they would have given it to their lawyer along with the agreement of purchase and sale.

[para20] Although it was Mr. Mesa who dropped off the agreement at their lawyer's office and gave it to the receptionist, Mr. Mesa has never spoken to the lawyer. It was Mrs. Mesa who dealt with the lawyer. The only discussion she had with their lawyer was over the telephone or by correspondence. She stated that their lawyer never asked her about a disclosure statement.

[para21] Their lawyer, Mr. Weinstein, gave evidence that he has never asked a client for a disclosure statement. He said that most clients do not deliver a disclosure statement to him, and if one did he would advise them that he was interested only in the question of title to the property, and that he would make it clear to a client that he would not review the disclosure statement as part of his retainer.

[para22] Mr. Weinstein did not recall any discussion with Mrs. Mesa concerning the disclosure statement. He knew that the Mesas were in financial difficulty and were not able to finalize the purchase. He said he would have discussed with Mrs. Mesa the possible consequences of not proceeding with the purchase and he referred to his letter to them of February 22, 1991. He said it was around this time that Mrs. Mesa indicated she was going to take the file to another lawyer. Mr. Weinstein did not recall ever meeting with the Mesas to explore avenues to get out of the transaction. Mr. Weinstein's evidence discloses that the Mesas' file was opened in his office long after the ten day rescission period although the Mesas' evidence records that the agreement was dropped off at Mr. Weinstein's office some time during the week of July 10, 1988.

[para23] It was some time after February, 1991, that the Mesas retained Mr. Stocco, their current lawyer, at which time he raised with them the question of the disclosure statement.

DISCUSSION

[para24] Plaintiff's counsel argues that the Mesas, by signing the agreement, have acknowledged receipt of the disclosure statement.

[para25] Paragraph 4 of the agreement reads:

Acknowledgement - The Purchaser acknowledges having read the Schedules attached hereto and in particular Schedule C hereto which contains certain of the material terms of this Agreement governing the rights and obligations of the Purchaser.

[para26] Paragraph C.8 in Schedule C reads:

Receipt of Condominium Documents - The Purchaser acknowledges having received on the Receipt Date a copy of the proposed Condominium Documents.

[para27] On the evidence in this case I cannot fathom how counsel for the plaintiff could even think of making this argument. Cohen gave no specific evidence as to when the schedules were attached to the front page of the agreement. He did not say that he attached the schedules. No member of the administrative staff working at the sales office was called to give evidence concerning administrative procedures. On the evidence in this case I find that it is probable that the schedules were not attached to the front page of the agreement until after the Mesas signed the front page.

[para28] No matter at what point in time the schedules were attached to the front page it is clear that the Mesas were given no opportunity to read the schedules before signing the agreement. I find that Cohen permitted the Mesas to sign the agreement knowing that they had not read the schedules and knowing that by signing, the Mesas were acknowledging that they had read the schedules. Not only was this poor business practice, it was deceitful. [para29] I turn now to the question whether the Mesas received a copy of the disclosure statement. The answer to this question rests on the credibility of the evidence from the parties.

[para31] I find that Cohen did not say anything to the Mesas about the disclosure statement. I also find that Cohen had nothing to do with providing purchasers with the condominium documents. I find that after the Mesas signed the six front pages of the agreement and initialled the six copies of Schedule E and those pages were given to the receptionist, Cohen had no further contact with the Mesas.

[para32] Once the Mesas had signed the agreement there was no purpose for Cohen to have further contact with them. He had sold a condominium unit. That was the reason for his presence in the sales office, to sell. This was a busy Sunday afternoon at the sales office with many prospective purchasers. Why meet with the Mesas a second time when it is likely other prospective purchasers were waiting for a salesperson to talk to them?

[para34] Taking into consideration the above findings with respect to the procedures at the sales office, coupled with the fact that Cohen did not mention anything to the Mesas about a disclosure statement, Mr. Weinstein had no discussion with the Mesas about a disclosure statement, the Mesas did not know what Mr. Stocco was talking about when he asked them if they received a disclosure statement and, they did not see the bound Condominium Documents until shown a copy by Mr. Stocco, I find on a balance of probabilities that the Mesas did not receive the disclosure statement. As a result they have a right to a rescission of the agreement.

[para35] On July 10, 1988, York Humber was more concerned to sell condominium units than to follow good business practices for its own benefit. It is astonishing when a vendor of condominium units knows an agreement of purchase and sale is not binding until ten days after receipt by the purchaser of a disclosure statement, that proper steps were not taken to ensure that the purchaser received a copy of the disclosure statement.

[para36] I understand that as a result of this litigation vendors now require that purchasers initial paragraph C.8. I simply point out that paragraph C.8 in the Mesas' agreement refers to "Condominium Documents" and not to a disclosure statement. Vendors would be wise to have purchasers sign and date a specific acknowledgement that they have received a copy of the disclosure statement, its purpose has been explained to them, and they have been told they have ten days to rescind the agreement.

[para37] Although Mr. Weinstein's involvement as the Mesas' original lawyer had no impact on my decision, I find that the legal services he provided were inadequate. Firstly, I do not understand how a lawyer can properly communicate with a client if the only communication is by telephone and correspondence. Secondly, a lawyer knows that in a condominium purchase the client has ten days to rescind. Therefore, there is an obligation on a lawyer to contact the client within ten days of the receipt of the copy of an agreement of purchase and sale. That did not happen in this case. Thirdly, although a lawyer is not advising a client on the wisdom or feasibility of the purchase of a condominium, I suggest there is at least an obligation on a lawyer to explain the purpose of the ten-day period and to advise the client to read the disclosure statement to ensure that what they propose to purchase is what they want to purchase. If the Mesas had received a disclosure statement, the benefit of the ten-day rescission period would have been lost.

CONCLUSION

[para38] The plaintiff's claim is dismissed. The defendants' counterclaim is allowed. There will be judgment for the defendants in the amount of $20,000, plus interest at the applicable rate from the date the deposits were made plus costs. If counsel cannot agree on costs I may be contacted to fix costs.

John Lee Stephens, Rosemary Julia Stephens and Lease Truck Inc., plaintiffs, and Halton Condominium Corporation No. 183, defendant

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Walters J. June 11, 1996.

Counsel: A. Glen Bryant for the plaintiff. R. Noel Bates for the defendant.

[para1] WALTERS J.:-- The plaintiff purchased a retail unit in the defendant condominium corporation. Water leaked through the roof of the plaintiffs' unit and caused damage to the interior of the premises. The leaking roof was finally repaired in late 1991, more than two years after the plaintiff took occupation of the premises and first complained of the water problem. The plaintiff seeks damages for a breach of contract, or in the alternative, negligence on behalf of the condominium corporation.

[para2] The defendant corporation denies any wrongdoing. Firstly, at the time of occupancy, the builder, Burley Developments Limited, was the owner of the property. The condominium corporation did not assume ownership until July 11th, 1990, at which time the water damage had already occurred. The defendant acted in a reasonable and responsible fashion and had the roof repaired as quickly as possible. The defendant also alleges that any damage suffered by the plaintiff is minimal and not visible to the naked eye. [para3] There is little doubt that the builder would be liable to the plaintiff for the damage caused by the leak. However, they are no longer in business and no action has been commenced against them. The issue for the court to determine is whether the defendant is responsible for all damage sustained by the plaintiff, both before and since it took control of the condominium.

Background Facts

[para4] The plaintiffs entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with the builder, Burley Developments in 1988 with respect to unit 9, 4380 South Service Road, Burlington, Ontario. The purchase price was approximately $254,000.00. Interim occupation of the premises commenced in or around the month of March, 1989. Prior to entering into interim occupation, the plaintiffs completed certain leasehold improvements, consisting of the construction of a steel framed dividing wall, dry walling, painting and carpeting. The leasehold improvements were completed by March 1989.

Water leakage from the roof was first noticed, shortly after interim occupancy commenced, as the ice and snow on the roof began to thaw in the spring of 1989. Although the roof was leaking in various places, most of the water damage occurred in the westerly one third of the front of the plaintiff's unit. After the leak was noticed, the plaintiff contacted the builder in an attempt to have it fixed, without success.

[para6] The plaintiffs contend that the leak initially caused water damage to, and staining of the carpet, damaged paint on the painted steel ceiling, and damaged paint and drywall taping on the main dividing wall. Damage was increased on each occasion when it rained sufficiently to cause leakage into the premises.

[para7] The condominium declaration was registered on February 14th, 1990. In April, 1990, a notice of turnover meeting was forwarded to all of the unit owners to complete the formal takeover of the development from the building. The takeover meeting was held on July 10th, 1990.

[para9] According to Mr. Stephens, he attended the turnover meeting and spoke with the builder, the builder's solicitor and Michael Morgan, one of the members of the condominium board of directors. Prior to the commencement of the meeting, he advised the parties that the turnover meeting was premature as the problems with the roof over his unit had not been corrected and the damage to the inside of his unit had not been looked after. It was his recollection that the builder and his solicitor indicated they would look after it and that Michael Morgan indicated that if the builder didn't look after it then the condominium corporation would be responsible. Based on the reassurance that he received at this turnover meeting, he voted in support of the turnover from the builder.

[para10] Mr. Morgan testified that he did recall having discussions with Mr. Stephens on the date of the turnover meeting, however, it was his evidence that discussion was after the meeting and although they discussed the repairs to the roof, he denied any commitment to repair damages to the inside of the plaintiffs' unit.

[para11] I accept the evidence of Mr. Stephens with respect to this issue.

[para13] As a result, Mr. Stephens continued to withhold common area expenses throughout 1991. Discussions took place between Mr. Stephens and Mr. Michael Morgan with respect to the possibility of the condominium corporation commencing an action against the builder to recover damage suffered as a result of the leaking roof. In order to vote on the proposal to retain counsel to commence an action against the builder, Mr. Stephens brought his common area expenses current. He attended at the meeting and voted in favour of that proposal. The proposal was passed. However, no action was commenced against the builder by the condominium corporation and in 1992 Mr. Stephens again inappropriately withheld the payment of common area expenses.

[para14] In March 1992 a lien was placed on the premises by the condominium corporation for the arrears of the common area expenses. To date, the arrears have continued to mount and the damage to the plaintiffs' unit has yet to be repaired.

The Law

[para15] Section 41 of The Condominium Act sets out the obligation to repair and maintain.

Repairs and Maintenance

Section 41 (1) For the purpose of this Act, the obligation to repair after damage and to maintain are mutually exclusive, and the obligation to repair after damage does not include the repair of improvements made to units after registration of the declaration and description.

(2) Subject to Section 42, the corporation shall repair the units and common elements after damage.

(3) The corporation shall maintain the common elements.

(4) Each owner shall maintain the owner's unit.

(5) Despite subsection (2), (3) and (4), the declaration may provide that:

(a) each unit shall, subject to s. 42, repair the owner's unit after damage;

(b) the owner shall maintain the common elements or any part of the common elements;

(c) the corporation shall maintain the unit; or

(d) each owner shall maintain and repair after damage those parts of the common element of which the owner has the exclusive use.

"There is, however, an inconsistency between sections 27 and 41. Section 41(1) provides that the obligation of the corporation to repair after damage does not include the repair of improvements which are made to units after the registration of the declaration and description. The corporation would, therefore, be required to repair damage to any improvements made to a unit during interim occupancy (i.e. before registration). Section 27 excludes from the insurance coverage that the corporation must procure any improvements to a unit no matter when made. In order to insure that insurance proceeds are available to the corporation to effect repairs to unit improvements made during interim occupancy, the corporation must insure beyond the minimum set out in s. 27(1) or be certain that the condominium declaration provides that the obligation to repair the unit after damage is the unit owner's."

[para17] The defendant argues that this is precisely what the defendant condominium corporation has done. The defendant relies upon s. 41(5) of the Act, which states:

"41(5) despite subsection (2), (3) and (4) the declaration may provide that:

(a) each owner shall, subject to s. 42, repair the owner's unit after damage;"

[para18] Article IV of the declaration of the defendant's condominium corporation states as follows:

Maintenance and Repairs

"(1) Each owner shall maintain his unit and, subject to the provisions of the declaration and s. 41 and s. 42 of the Act, each owner shall repair his unit after damage, all at his own expense. Each owner shall be responsible for damage to any other unit or to the common element which is caused by the failure of the owner to so maintain and repair his unit."

[para19] Although I have no doubt that the defendant corporation had every intention of taking advantage of s. 41(5) of The Condominium Act, to provide that the obligation to repair the unit after damage is the unit owner's, they have not succeeded. The declaration as worded is subject to s. 41 of the Act. S. 41 of the Act clearly makes it the corporation's obligation to repair and maintain. In the circumstances, I find that the defendant corporation is obligated to repair and maintain the plaintiffs' unit, which includes the damage occasioned to the unit as a result of the leaking roof.

Damages

[para20] I now turn to the issue of damages. The plaintiffs relied on the evidence of Mr. William Mowat, who was the original contractor engaged to construct the 24 foot high steel frame drywall partition. He gave evidence that he has inspected the premises recently, from a floor level and was able to see staining, rusting, loose paint and drywall taping, consistent with what you would expect to find from water leakage on several occasions over a lengthy period of time. A quote for painting and repair was submitted in the amount of $945.00. I accept his evidence.

[para21] The plaintiff also relied on evidence given by Mr. Bob Massicotte of Associated Mill Distributors. Mr. Massicotte supplied the original carpet to the premises, which he described would be of extremely high quality. Although he did not have the original invoice, he estimated that the original cost of the carpeting would have been $3,000.00 to $3,500.00 plus the cost of installation. Mr. Massicotte inspected the carpet prior to October 16th, 1991, although he did not recall the exact date of inspection. He observed staining of the carpet in the westerly one third of the office. The stain was apparent to the naked eye on inspection. He also testified that he believed the carpet had been steam cleaned at his suggestion, prior to the initial inspection. He was aware that one section of the carpet had been patched with an existing remnant, but was unable to comment on the quality of the patch work done. He further testified that repeated exposure to water could cause deterioration of the natural fibres in the carpet. Mr. Massicotte viewed the carpet shortly before trial and described the staining as subtle but stated that the damage would always be there even if the actual stain did not jump out at you. A portion of the carpet could be replaced through a custom order but there would be no guarantee that there would be a precise match to the existing carpet. The present replacement cost of the carpet would be in the range of $7,000.00 to $7,500.00 and the total cost, including installation, would be approximately $9,000.00.

[para22] The defendant relied on Mr. Beckett, a director of the condominium corporation who indicated that he inspected the carpet at the unit in the fall of 1991. He was unable to see any staining, and felt that the plaintiffs' claim against the condominium corporation was without merit.

Order

[para23] I accept the evidence of both Mr. Mowat and Mr. Massicotte and in the circumstances judgment will go against the defendant in the amount of $9,945.00. As the repairs have not yet been completed and the estimates are for the present value of the work to be completed there will be no prejudgment interest.

[para24] Unless I receive submissions from counsel within 10 days of today's date, regarding costs, the plaintiffs are entitled to their costs of this action on a party and party basis.

Brantford Condominium Corporation No. 25, plaintiff, and Double "G" Contractors Limited, defendant, and Brantford Landscaping & Sodding Ltd., third party

Nos. 503/93 and 503A/93

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Brantford, Ontario Kent J. January 3, 1996.

Counsel: C.J. Bolan, for the plaintiff. J.S. Davies, for the defendant. P.A. Giles, for the third party.

KENT J.:--

ISSUE:

[para1] Can the builder of a condominium project be held liable to the condominium corporation for defects in materials supplied, or work performed negligently or in an unworkmanlike manner, by a subcontractor during construction of the common elements?

BACKGROUND:

[para4] Condominium Corporation pursued the matter further by appealing from that decision and engaging a professional engineer. On the basis of the opinion of that engineer, it then commenced this claim against Double "G" alleging what amounts to negligence by Brantford Landscaping for which negligence Double "G" was responsible pursuant to its warranty. The Condominium Corporation has undertaken and agreed that its appeal of the Ontario New Home Warranty Program decision will not be pursued, having elected to seek its remedy in this forum.

WAS WORK BY BRANTFORD LANDSCAPING PERFORMED NEGLIGENTLY OR IN AN UNWORKMANLIKE MANNER?

[para5] Ronald Bisailon of Brantford Landscaping admitted that he did not construct the wall strictly in accordance with the "design/specifications" diagram on the manufacturer's brochure, Exhibit 15. He did not install the sub-drain, the quantity of granular backfill, or the geotextile filter fabric shown in the diagram. He maintained that these items were not necessary given the location of the wall, the lack of any ground water problems and the proximity of a building with its own drainage system. He was supported in this view by an engineer, Robert Phillips whose report is Exhibit 23. Phillips testified that erosion is normally a maintenance problem. It was his opinion that the highly concentrated nature of the erosion adjacent to and through the crib wall was consistent with water from the nearby buildings downspouts being permitted to discharge too close to the wall. He suggested that that discharge would have been a 90 to 95 per cent cause of the erosion that led to a deterioration of the wall. He would have recommended directing the downspouts away from the wall or hooking them into some other drainage system, or run them underground with extensions out through the wall. The later option was ultimately followed by another contractor employed by Condominium Corporation.

[para6] To endeavour to establish that Brantford Landscaping performed negligently or in an unworkmanlike manner, Condominium Corporation relies on the evidence of its witness Colin Lee, an engineer whose reports are Exhibits 6 and 8. He maintained that failure to fully adhere to the "design/specification", particularly the granular backfill and geotextile filter fabric requirements was critical. It was his opinion that if the specifications had been followed any water discharged from the downspouts would not have damaged the wall. Lee conceded in cross-examination that taking the downspout leaders underground and out through the wall would not have been difficult or expensive, but felt that that would not have solved the problem. He also agreed that photographs in evidence showed most soil had washed out through the wall opposite the downspout locations. He stated that he had observed erosion throughout the entire length of the wall but concentrated towards the ends where the downspouts were located.

[para7] In light of the foregoing evidence, I am not persuaded that Brantford Landscaping performed negligently or in an unworkmanlike manner when it did not construct the wall in accordance with the "design/specifications". Phillips' opinion is at least equally supportable to that of Lee's. Lee's opinion does not establish the plaintiff's contention on a balance of probabilities.

IS THERE ANY OTHER BASIS FOR LIABILITY ON THE WARRANTY?

[para8] In May of 1990, Double "G" turned over the project to the Condominium Corporation Board of Directors. Until that point, Double "G" had engaged Parkside Management to manage the project. Gabriel Gasbarrini, the principal of Double "G" testified that he did not pass on to Parkside or Condominium Corporation board members any concern about maintaining plant life in the face of the wall or insuring that the extensions from the downspouts were kept attached to the downspouts and directed away from the wall. He was not specifically concerned with these maintenance matters and gave them no more concern than maintaining the grass. He knew that the plant life would give the wall a more aesthetic appearance from the parking lot and was aware because Bisailon of Brantford on the face of the wall helped hold the earth in the crib wall.

[para9] It appears that Double "G" did not meet its obligation to the Board of Condominium Corporation at the turn-over meeting. Section 26 of the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1990, c. 26, s. 26(e)(i) and (k) all may apply. Double "G" should have given the board information concerning Brantford Landscaping's warranty on the wall and some instruction concerning the maintenance of the plant life on the face of the wall. Gasbarrini wasn't particular concerned with the extensions on the downspouts and the need to maintain them both attached to the downspouts and directed away from the wall. It is understandable that with that lack of concern, and having received no warning from Brantford Landscaping concerning maintenance, he would not have passed on any information to the Board of Condominium Corporation concerning same. His lack of concern existed because he was never cautioned by Brantford Landscaping about the importance of the downspouts and leaders or extensions.

[para10] Bisailon also apparently had no concern about the downspouts and leaders at the time of installation. He discussed the location of the leaders with Double "G"'s on-site superintendent. He installed the same make of wall at his business premises late in 1989. At that location, he initially had a downspout problem and installed a pipe to cure that problem. This should have alerted him to check the Double "G" installation, the first wall of this type ever constructed by Brantford Landscaping. It was still under his one year warranty and he should have specifically instructed Double "G" concerning maintenance. Failure to so advise and instruct Double "G" meant that Gasbarrini was unaware of the importance of maintenance and could not therefore meet Double "G"'s obligation under the Condominium Act to give the Board information relevant to the repair or maintenance of the property and in particular this portion of the common elements.

[para11] With such a new product, Brantford Landscaping had a duty to keep its customer informed, advised and instructed in a more complete manner than it did. Its breach of that duty in the circumstances constitutes negligence and makes Brantford Landscaping liable to Double "G" on the third party claim to the extent that Double "G" is found liable to Condominium Corporation for its failure to provide the board of the corporation with relevant maintenance information. Double "G" is liable to Condominium Corporation for its omission which constitutes a breach of its Condominium Act obligation. Double "G" was negligent in not obtaining the necessary information and passing it on.

WHAT DAMAGES IS CONDOMINIUM CORPORATION ENTITLED TO?

[para12] Both Double "G" and Brantford Landscaping have pleaded that the plaintiff by its actions failed to mitigate or perhaps even aggravated its damages. I agree. The photographs indicate a significant degree of vandalism in the area of the wall. A member of the Board of Condominium Corporation, Paul Parker, described the kind of vandalism that occurred to the fence on the top of the wall and the manner in which children played and climbed on the wall. These may have been contributing factors to the wall's deterioration. Similarly, Parker conceded that an earlier landscaper may have removed plant material from the wall, another possible cause of deterioration. Parker also conceded that when the "sunken walkway" was first brought to his attention in February, 1991, he noticed what he described as settling but developed no concerns at that time. Failure to act more promptly no doubt contributed to the wall's deterioration.

[para13] More significant developments occurred in the fall of 1991 concerning a need for remedial action. By early December, Condominium Corporation was aware of what repair and maintenance work would in the opinion of the chief building official for the City of Brantford, be required to make the wall satisfactory. See Exhibit 1, Tab 31.

"... the enclosed letter from Evercrete Limited (manufacturer of the precast concrete components of the wall) which outlines repair and maintenance work required to complete the wall satisfactorily. Subject to this work being carried out, we would approve the construction of the wall."

The Evercrete letter stated the following:

"We recommend that remedial action be taken by excavating the crib in the effected area and inserting a drainage pipe through the wall. More fill should be placed behind the crib and additional topsoil and sod to recreate the swale. The swale must drain water from the face of the crib and not be allowed to pool behind the crib. Please note that where fill has been removed from the face of the crib by vandalism, this fill material should be replaced and replanted as necessary."

There is no precise evidence of what the total cost of that work would have been, but piecing together the portions of it from the ballpark estimates given by Bisailon, Lee, Abrahamson (vice-president of Evercrete at the relevant time) and by counsel in their submissions, it is hard to envision the work, if done then, to have had a cost in excess of $6,000.

[para14] Counsel for the plaintiff argues that Condominium Corporation acted reasonably in deciding to remove the deteriorated wall entirely and replace it with a new maintenance-free wall. He submits that the plaintiff should recover as damages the total cost of removal and replacement, $20,490.50 plus engineering costs of $4,378. Alternatively, he submits that the repair costs of the existing wall should be for rebuilding it at $11,500 rather than repairing it at an estimated maximum of $6,000 as set out above.

[para16] For the above reasons the plaintiff's damages are limited to $6,000.

RESULT:

[para17] Condominium Corporation is entitled to judgment against Double "G" in the amount of $6,000. Double "G" is entitled to recover judgment against Brantford Landscaping in the amount of $6,000 on the third party claim.

[para18] Counsel may speak to the form of the judgment and costs at a date and time to be fixed by the trial co-ordinator during the week of 8 January, 1996.

Sophie Jaremko, plaintiff, and Shipp Corporation Limited, defendant

Court File 91-CQ-2115

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Greer J. Heard: January 4-6, 9-13, 16, and 18-20, 1995. Judgment: July 6, 1995.

Counsel: Donald J. Lange, for the plaintiff. Robert D. Malen, for the defendant.

[para1] GREER J.:--The plaintiff, Sophie Jaremko ("the plaintiff" or "Jaremko"), has claimed rescission and the return of her monies paid as a deposit under an agreement of purchase and sale dated February 2, 1987 made between her and the defendant, Shipp Corporation Limited ("the defendant" or "Shipp") for the purchase of a condominium unit, suite 104, 1 Aberfoyle Crescent, Etobicoke ("the apartment"). The purchase included one locker unit and two parking spaces. In the alternative, the plaintiff has asked for damages arising from fraudulent or, in the alternative, negligent, innocent or reckless misrepresentation in connection with its purchase. Further, in the alternative, Jaremko claims damages for Shipp's alleged contravention of Section 52(6) of the Condominium Act, RSO 1984, c. 84 arising out of its failure to disclose in its disclosure statement, the existence of a moving lay by immediately outside her ground floor unit. She further claims damages for mental distress and her legal costs of $35,000 with respect to her mitigation of her damages.

1. Background

[para2] Jaremko, a real estate broker, has been in the residential real estate business for about 20 years. Shipp is an experienced developer of real estate projects, including apartment buildings and condominiums. The unit is located in the Shipp luxury building known as, "The Kingsway On-the-Park", or MTCC 875. The project consists of two towers in Etobicoke which are adjacent to the Bloor Street subway system. They were constructed by Shipp between late 1986 and early 1990. Shipp managed these buildings for the first year after owners took occupancy.

[para4] On October 22, 1986, Jaremko entered into a Reservation Agreement to purchase apartment 104 ("104") at a price to be determined. Attached to the Reservation Agreement was a prospective floor plan for the unit. A cheque for $5,000.00 was given by Jaremko as a deposit for 104 to Veronica Lord ("Lord"), Shipp's employee. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale for this unit was signed on February 2, 1987 and Jaremko received the Disclosure Statement. Jaremko agreed that Shipp did not pressure her into making a decision to buy. On cross-examination, Jaremko conceded that her business was fantastic in 1986 at the time she signed the Reservation Agreement for 104 and conceded that the condominium market was strong at that point in time. Unit 104 was the smallest and least expensive unit in the building. Jaremko inspected 104 on January 27, 1989 for occupancy on January 30, 1989. It was not, however, until December 26, 1990 that the unit was actually occupied by a tenant.

[para6] Shipp, a family operated company, has been in the building business for over 70 years. It has a good reputation. Shipp takes the position that Jaremko purchased 104 for investment purposes as the condominium market was heating up when the complex came on the market. It maintains that Jaremko was given full disclosure of the lay-by through letters she received, the plans which were available, the model of the building and the picture of the complex available to her when she attended at the Presentation Centre, and from the Disclosure Statement provided to her. Shipp points out that when Jaremko moved into apartment 2303, her moving van occupied the very spot of which she now complains. Shipp took the position that Jaremko had deliberately bought the cheapest unit in the building for resale and when condominium market values began dropping, she could not sell it, and thus her lawsuit. I accept Jaremko's evidence that she originally intended the unit to be occupied by a family member.

2. The Promotional Material

[para7] Jaremko, as a Broker, knew of Shipp's plans to build the condominiums. There was advance advertising and Jaremko attended a few receptions at the Shipp Centre where literature was available. This could have been as early as 1985. In any event, some general advertising material was sent to Jaremko, including one brochure entitled "Shipp Corporation Limited Construction and Design-Build", and another entitled, "Shipp Corporation Limited", which she picked up at the Centre where she spoke to the president, Stuart H.B. Smith, and to Victoria Shipp.

[para8] Glossy brochures for the "Jackson" and the "Belvedere" and the "Strath", three of the various apartments in the new complex, were available at the Presentation Centre. When Jaremko entered into the Reservation agreement for her own unit 2303, she received a glossy of it.

[para9] There was a lot of activity at the Shipp offices regarding these new proposed buildings, with many people booking many appointments to discuss purchases. In Jaremko's view, there was not a lot of time to think and ask questions. Jaremko was helped by the agent, Lord.

[para10] Shipp later had available a 2'-3' high model of the complex with its two towers plus landscaping, for prospective purchasers to view. This model did not show the service lay-by nor did it show the moving room as being next to apartment 104. The landscape greenery affixed to the model quite clearly extended across the full front of the building and no entrance to the moving room was visible.

3. Materials received for Apartment 104

[para11] The Reservation Agreement for 104 was signed in October, 1986. On January 15, 1987, Jaremko received a letter from Victoria Shipp outlining what had to be done to finalize the reservation within the next few weeks. The following is some of the information contained in that letter:

We are enclosing a facsimile of the proposed final floor plan of the suite type you have selected, as well as proposed plan of the lobby level, showing the total amenity package

For your personal safety and future health concerns, we have included a "Condoplex" Security/System which will be installed in your suite ...

We have adjusted the prices on all suites by approximately 10% over the reserved price and the contract price on the suite which you have reserved is now set at $173,000.00 or $150.00 per square foot, which includes one indoor parking space valued at $15,000.00 Since your reservation process number is 362 the earliest that we can book your appointment is Feb 2. In order to facilitate this, your five days will run from this designated appointment date ...

The purpose of the appointment is to determine whether you wish to complete the purchase of this residence. In our Presentation Centre, we will have large floor plans available for your viewing, a typical kitchen ...

You will be provided with the Condominium Disclosure Documentation which is required by the Condominium Act. You are entitled under the Condominium Act, for whatever reasons you may determine, within ten days after receiving the Disclosure Documentation to withdraw from the Agreement of Purchase and Sale upon delivery to our office of your written advice. In this event, your $10,000.00 deposit and any additional deposit monies as outlined above will be refunded to you immediately. [emphasis added]

[para12] Attached to this very lengthy and detailed letter was a floor plan of "The Strath, Building "A", Unit 04, 1421 Sq. Ft." Below it, on the plan, is a full floor plan showing the location of this unit as falling between two other units. In addition, there is a further plan entitled "Recreation and Amenities" which shows the service lay-by as being in front of a sidewalk which comes across the front of the building, and the Moving (Storage) room is shown next to 104, thereby replacing the proposed apartment which was to have been there.

4. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale and Disclosure Statement

[para13] The Agreement of Purchase and Sale signed by Jaremko on February 2, 1987 for 104 mirrored that already signed by her for unit 2303. It was executed at Shipp's offices and Jaremko was given a copy of the Disclosure Statement which she acknowledges receiving at the same time. Paragraph F.1 of Schedule F to the Agreement reads as follows:

(b) in entering into this Agreement, he relies on no representations, warranties, collateral agreements or conditions affecting this Agreement, the Unit, or the Project, including any promises or representations that may have been made by any sales representative, or in any sales material, unless expressly provided for in writing in this Agreement or in the Disclosure Statement provided by the Vendor;

(h) there are no warranties, express or implied, with respect to any aspect of construction of the Project except such warranties as are given under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act;

(j) the dimensions, area and floor plans of the Unit shown on the sketch of the Unit are approximate only and are based on a typical dwelling unit on the twelfth (12th) floor and will vary depending on the location of unit and after actual construction. Unless the variance is greater than two percent, the Purchaser agrees to accept the Unit as constructed without abatement;

Again, the floor plan of The Strath was attached to the Agreement.

[para14] The Disclosure Statement says at p.3 the following: Vehicular and pedestrian access to the Residential Condominium is from Aberfoyle Crescent at three locations. The most westerly leads to the rear of the west tower and will function exclusively as a service entrance. The remaining two access points lead to the main entrances in front of both the west and east towers. Since there is no separate service entrance in the east tower, a three-meter wide lay by capable of accommodating delivery vehicles will be constructed in front of the east tower off the driveway. A canopy will be constructed over the driveway in front of the entrance to the lobby for the towers. The westerly entrance of the main driveway from Aberfoyle Crescent will be one-way into both towers. The easterly entrance of the driveway from Aberfoyle Crescent will be two-way with a turning circle in front of the entrance to the lobby for both towers. [emphasis added]

On p. 5 of the Disclosure Statement, it states that the ground floor of the east tower (where unit 104 is located) was to contain four apartment units, one of which was to be designated as a guest suite, with the remainder being office space, a reception area, security office/staff room, board room, crafts room and billiard room. No mention is made of a moving room to be provided on the ground floor.

[para15] The ground floor site plan attached to the Reservation Agreement for The Strath showed neither the service lay by nor the moving room. It showed that The Strath would be between two other apartments. Exhibit 6, being the glossy floor plan for 104 shows it as being between two other apartments.

[para16] Jaremko agreed that she read the Disclosure Statement and saw the words that there was to be a three metre wide lay-by capable of accommodating delivery vehicles in front of the east tower of the driveway. She took this to mean that it would only be a delivery lay-by and not a place for moving vans. I was not convinced that Jaremko did not understand what the word "lay-by" meant. I was convinced, however, that she had no idea of how the lay-by would actually operate, how close the trucks would be to her windows and what a profound effect it would have on the privacy of the persons occupying the unit. [para17] It was the evidence of Victoria Shipp, that no one but Jaremko complained about inadequate disclosure provided to purchasers of units in the building. Shipp kept purchasers up-to-date on the progress of the building. On October 26, 1988, Victoria Shipp wrote to Jaremko to advise her that her occupancy/move-in date for 104 was the afternoon of January 30, 1989. Victoria Shipp's evidence was that Jaremko never expressed any dissatisfaction with what she had bought until early 1990 when the carpet issue was raised long after the inspection took place, nor did she ever complain about having been misled by Shipp.

[para18] On cross-examination, Victoria Shipp admitted that the wall between 104 and the moving room was not the standard construction and that it had been constructed to try to block out the noise from the activity in the moving room. She agreed that the ground floor areas were not like those of the standard floor plan and that there was no reference in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to either the lay-by or the moving room. Further, Victoria Shipp admitted that, "I saw trucks there constantly" in the lay-by and that a large van would take up the whole lay-by. [para19] When Victoria Shipp was cross-examined about the documentation which Jaremko signed, she admitted that due to the hectic activity at the Centre, there was no time for everyone to look at everything. She further agreed that there was a penalty provision in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale in the event of failure of a purchaser to close. She agreed that Shipp had addressed the issue of noise and vibrations in connection with the building's proximity to the Subway but did not think about it in connection with the lay-by.

[para20] On cross-examination, Victoria Shipp admitted that the plans which were submitted as Exhibit 35 did not show either the word "moving" or the word "service" in front of the word "lay-by" and that the word "storage" appeared on the plans as opposed to the words, "moving room". She also admitted that on those plans, the lay-by was shown only half in front of 104, with the rest being in front of the service office.

[para21] Jaremko knew that she had 10 days within which she could request her deposit back. She did not do this. The deposits totalled approximately $49,750.00. On cross-examination, Jaremko admitted that she saw the words "service lay by" on the plan but maintains that she did not know what it meant. She said that it, "did not register with me", nor did the words "moving (storage)", as in her view, one needed a magnifying glass to read the words. She did admit, however, that there was nothing in the brochure which misled her but maintained that Shipp did not tell her that the diagram showing her unit between two others did not apply to the ground floor unit. She knew that the unit would be smaller than the other "Straths" and knew that it faced north.

[para22] Jaremko had no recollection of seeing any diagrams or plans at the Shipp Centre. She agreed that she probably looked at the model but maintained that Shipp did not disclose to her in writing that the plans for the first floor had changed and that she was given no different disclosure about the unit.

[para23] Lord was Jaremko's sales agent when she purchased the unit. I did not find her evidence helpful. Lord's initials appear with those of Victoria Shipp on the Reservation Agreement. Jaremko's initials are not there. The copy of the Site Plan attached to this does not show either the moving room or the lay-by. There is an apartment shown on either side of 104 and the only "moving and delivery" area is shown at the back of the companion building. Lord's evidence that she "would have told her (Jaremko) that everyone who moves into the building would move through there (the moving room) and that trucks would be in the lay-by", did not have the ring of truth to me. Lord maintained that she went through everything with Jaremko, and that her understanding was that the lay-by's location was not moved on the plans. Her assumption was incorrect.

[para24] Anne Wouters ("Wouters") was Victoria Shipp's assistant when Jaremko bought 104. It was her evidence that there was a cardboard model available, architectural drawings on tables, an artist's concept and current sets of plans available for examination. She also said she knew that the moving room was next to Jaremko's unit and that there was a space out front for the parking of trucks. Wouters' recollection of her discussions with Jaremko was clear and she presented her evidence in a forthright manner.

5. The Inspection and the Closing

[para25] During the two years after the Agreement was signed, Jaremko drove by and watched the building being constructed. Apartment 104 was not visible, given the hoarding and given the construction bin which was in front of the moving door. By December, 1988, Jaremko admits that she knew that 104 was to be next to the moving room and was horrified by her "foolish choice". When she went to the inspection, she spoke about this and told Jane Cornwall ("Cornwall") that she did not know that trucks were going to be there. Cornwall was the Shipp employee who accompanied Jaremko on the approximately 45 minute inspection of the apartment.

[para27] It was Jaremko's evidence that Cornwall told her that the trucks would not interfere with her unit as they would park to the west of the entrance door. The Compliance Inspection Report was dated January 30, 1989 and it contained a number of defects which would have to be corrected by Shipp. The Occupancy Acknowledgment was signed by Jaremko on January 27, 1989 and witnessed by Cornwall, as was the Warranty of same date. Interim monthly occupancy cheques were provided by Jaremko in the amount of $1,748.39 each.

[para28] Cornwall's inspection of 104 with Jaremko was her first inspection on the job. Cornwall said she did not discuss with Jaremko where the trucks would be parked when moving took place and that she did not recall any concerns expressed by Jaremko or that she expressed concern about the unit being next to the moving room. It was Kay's evidence that Cornwall indicated to Jaremko that the moving vans in the lay-by would be facing away from the windows of 104. This was not the case. Given the number of inspections Cornwall attended to while on the job, I prefer Jaremko's and Kay's recollection of their discussion with Cornwall about where trucks would park.

[para29] I accept Jaremko's evidence that even though Shipp wrote on October 2, 1989 that all the inspection items had been complied with, that this was not so. Litigation ensued regarding the Home Warranty Plan and the carpet, but that evidence is not germane, in my view, to these proceedings.

[para31] The Deed of Transfer for 104 was signed on March 26, 1990 after the building was registered. The final price of the unit was $199,000.00. The appliances cost, in addition, another $5,000.00. At no time did Jaremko claim to her own lawyer that she had been misled.

[para32] Rodney Ikeda ("Ikeda"), a solicitor, gave evidence that he acted for the Vendor in the closing of the sale of 104 to Jaremko. It was Ikeda's evidence that there was nothing in any correspondence from Jaremko's solicitor about the moving room. He agreed that the lay-by was not on the registered plan but this was not a requirement for registration, just as a fire route is not marked on the plan.

6. The Complaints

[para33] Jaremko wrote 5 or 6 letters of complaint to the Condominium Board between January, 1991 and September, 1991. Moving trucks and other trucks were pulling up in the service lay-by at all hours of the day and blocking the windows of 104. By September, 1991, Shannon Kay had left the apartment. Her evidence was that the noise from trucks in the lay-by interfered with her studying while she lived there and awakened her on mornings when she had worked the late shift at Oliver's. Her words were:

I never felt there was any space between the outside and my internal premises.

I did not receive the solitude of my own space.

Shannon Kay also reported that on one occasion a large 40' van occupied the lay-by and, even though she kept her windows partly closed, she could clearly hear the loud music emanating from the van and the swearing and talking of the movers. She also said that any 40' van completely blocked all three apartment windows to such a degree that she had to turn the lights on in the apartment. Shannon's evidence was confirmed by her mother, Dawn Kay, who used one of the bedrooms as a studio while Shannon was the tenant. Jaremko put 12" X 8" "no parking" signs in the apartment windows which remained there for 8 months, in order to deter cars and other vehicles from using the lay-by. The Condominium Board threatened to take Jaremko to court.

[para36] Russell's evidence was that there were small "no parking" signs in the access route, yet she could not recall how many. In October, 1993, Russell prepared a memo for all security personnel that any enquiries from Jaremko or Kay were to be in writing and directed to the management office. Russell said the year, "was hell for me." It is significant to note that when Wilson J.'s Order directing that the moving vans turn the other way to unload, was in effect, the tenant of 203 complained of the noise and use of the lay-by since his "juliet balcony" was blocked. That Order was stayed shortly after it was made. On re-examination, Russell admitted that although records began to be kept of the moves, no record was kept of the transportation every two weeks of buckets of chemicals being moved through the moving room nor were records kept of all deliveries to the building.

[para37] Dawn Kay, while using 104, also complained about the constant presence of trucks and the fumes from them, as well as the noise of the engines left running. In addition, there was noise from the moving room and the clanging of the moving ramps.

[para39] On November 3, 1992, Christine Jaremko ("Christine") moved into 104 to help her Mother. She remained there until June 30, 1994. Christine kept a diary of the problems she had with vehicles using the lay-by.

[para40] It was Christine's evidence that she put plants in front of the living-room window to give her more privacy but this did not help. Movers parked their vans and looked in her windows while moving. Her diary entries from November 11, 1992 to June 29, 1994 are a history of the difficulties she experienced with delivery trucks, moving vans and unattended cars. She did not record all violations or moves. She felt the task was "futile and frustrating" since management did nothing. Having reviewed the diary entries and having listened to Christine's evidence, I found her to be an extremely forthright and credible witness and accept her diary entries as accurate.

[para41] There were several volumes of photographs presented as Exhibits at Trial. Pictures were taken from both inside and outside 104 by Jaremko, Kay, Christine, a professional photographer on Jaremko's behalf and by Ifor Caine Davies and Brian Lewis Himelstein on behalf of Shipp. I have carefully reviewed all of these photographs and am convinced that they accurately reflect what took place in the lay-by and show the profound affect it had on the occupants of 104. The moving trucks clearly blocked the light to the living room and the two bedrooms. Trucks were allowed to park within 5 feet of these windows due to the narrow flower bed and sidewalk in front of the building. The moving personnel could readily see into the apartment unless the vertical blinds were closed. No owner should have to block out what little daylight there was while the trucks were present. The only way privacy could be achieved was to do this.

[para43] The apartment has a northerly exposure and receives no direct sunlight. Given its first floor location, there is no doubt that Jaremko was aware that it would have less privacy than other units. From my observation of all of the many photographs which were taken of the lay-by and the location of the moving vans and other vehicles, it is quite clear that there is no more than 5 feet to 6 feet between the apartment's outer wall and the moving van. (See: Exhibits 17 and 18). On occasion, two trucks would be parked in the lay-by. The photographs in Exhibit 16, which is in two volumes, show a variety of trucks of various lengths and sizes blocking the light and completely intruding on the privacy of the occupants of the apartment. [para44] The ramps from the trucks were affixed so that articles could be readily moved into the moving room next to the apartment. The noise from movers walking up and down the ramps disturbed the quiet enjoyment of the apartment occupants. On one occasion in June of 1994, the sidewalk area in front of the apartment was littered with a new owner's furniture and effects for many hours, thereby blocking the view of the occupant of 104.

[para45] I have concluded that the location of the lay-by and its proximity to the outer wall of the apartment and the location of the moving room, which was never mentioned in the Disclosure Statement, have substantially destroyed the quiet enjoyment of the occupants of apartment 104 while Jaremko has owned it. I am further of the view that this has adversely affected the apartment's marketability over the years, it having been listed for sale for 5 years, still remaining unsold at the time of Trial. This issue will be dealt with later in these Reasons.

7. The Fire Code and Building Code issues

[para46] Jaremko's position was that the lay-by was in breach of the Building Code and the Fire Code, given the amount of space which the moving vans took in the driveway. Jaremko's expert, Allan E. Larden, a Building Code and Fire Protection Consultant, gave evidence on her behalf.

[para47] It was Larden's evidence that under the Building Code, there must be a 6 metre or 19 feet, 8 inch unblocked space to permit fire access. An examination of the photographs in Exhibit 16 show that the moving vans are clearly blocking this access. Larden stated that the fire access route is supposed to be kept clear so that the exterior wall is clear. The trucks impeded the optimum ability to access the wall in the event of a fire. His evidence was that the Building Code requires that there be a 3 metre space from the fall of the building, and this was not present.

In the case of all larger moving vans involving Class "A" licenses, such vehicles may only remain in the fire route if drivers remain within 40 feet of the vehicle during the moving process. In the cases of smaller moving vans or delivery vehicles which may be temporarily located in the fire route without the driver present, drivers of all such vehicles are required to leave their vehicle ignition keys at the security desk. In the event of a fire the driver will move the vehicle. If, for any reason, the driver is unavailable to operate the vehicle, the keys for the vehicle will be at the security desk.

I am of the view that if Jaremko had not stood her ground regarding the problems with the lay-by and the location of the vehicles and the fire route access, the Board of Directors would never have amended its own plan to include these paragraphs.

2.5.1.1. (1) This Section applies to fire access routes

- (a) required to be constructed under the Building Code
- (b) provided under a municipal by-law, or
- (c) designated under Paragraph 45 of Section 210 of the Municipal Act.

2.5.1.2. (1) Fire access routes and access panels or windows provided to facilitate access for fire fighting operations shall not be obstructed by vehicles, gates, fences, building materials, vegetation, signs or any other form of obstruction. [emphasis added] Larden concludes at p. 3 of his Report that when a large moving van is located in the lay-by and/or adjacent access route, that ready access to the windows of 104 is, "... less than efficient than would be the case if a vehicle was not there."

[para50] The building's revised Fire Safety Plan was approved by the City of Etobicoke Fire Department but there is a disclaimer in its approval stamp which reads:

The approval of this fire safety plan by this department does not in any way relieve the owner, the lessee, or their agent, of the responsibility of complying with the Ontario Fire Code.

No tacit approval is given by the Etobicoke Fire Department of the building's scheme for moving trucks from the lay-by in the event of a fire.

[para51] On cross-examination, Larden readily agreed that he had not spoken to the Etobicoke Fire Department and was not aware that fire trucks were technically able to move pas parked vans in the lay-by even though there was an obvious breach of the Code. One of the problems Larden pointed out was that, "most fires are unusual and freaky things" so one could not predict what equipment and personnel would be required if a fire occurred in one of the apartments in the "04 stack" where the Jaremko unit is located.

[para52] While Kay occupied 2303 with Jaremko, she assisted her in obtaining information regarding the fire route access. In January, 1991, both went to the Etobicoke Fire Department and inquired about the fire route. They also went to the Planning Department to determine what plans had been filed by Shipp and to determine how a service lay-by could be in a fire route. The Site Plan noted it as a "moving" lay-by, as did "as built" architect's plan dated December 12, 1988 and later the Disclosure Statement. The promotional material referred to it as a "service" lay-by.

[para53] Jaremko and Kay went to the Committee of Adjustment to review documents filed there, to the Ministry of Housing, checked the Building Code, went to the Fire Marshall's office, checked the planned fire route, checked the Fire Code and the municipal by-law respecting the fire route. I was impressed with the diligence of Kay in ferreting out all of the information about the fire route. Kay's evidence confirmed that of Jaremko that the Board of Directors could not be bothered with their problems. She was of the view that "head office" was doing everything they could to prevent her and Jaremko from obtaining the appropriate information.

[para54] It was the evidence of Andrew Ronald Bigauskas ("Bigauskas"), an architect with the firm of Raphael, Burka, architects used by Shipp to design the Kingsway complex, that it was mandatory to take the fire department requirements into account when plans were drawn. He confirmed that the fire department would be concerned about the width of the fire route access. He said that in Etobicoke, there was no requirement for lay-bys or any specifications regarding their size. In designing the East Tower, his firm simply used a rule-of-thumb width of 3 metres by 11 metres. He confirmed that vehicles could be left if attended or supervised in the lay-by area, and that the designated fire route must have a minimum width of six metres. He was not aware of any fire department ever raising an issue of the placement of a moving lay-by in a fire route.

[para55] Robert Webb ("Webb"), Chief of Fire Prevention with Etobicoke, gave evidence. His department is responsible for ensuring that provincial and municipal codes are in force. He has 8 Inspectors to carry out these duties for the whole of the City. When plans are submitted to his department, they are examined and approved or the builder is told what revisions are required. His view is that the by-law allows such temporary parking in the lay-by. He says it is common in Etobicoke to have vehicles parked in fire routes. He did agree, however, that parked moving vans could create problems for the fire department's aerial ladder trucks, depending on where the emergency was. He had no evidence as to whether the fire department had ever been called to the building.

[para56] James Craig McClare ("McClare"), the Assistant Chief of Fire Prevention for Etobicoke, reviewed Shipp's plans and approved them. In his view, the plans were in compliance with the Building Code. Interestingly enough, on cross-examination, McClare admitted that he was properly quoted in an article which appeared in "Etobicoke Life" where he said that most apartment buildings do not comply with the Code. He admitted further that they do not have the people power to inspect everything and enforce compliance. He confirmed the disclaimer which appears in the department's stamp on the plans and said that the responsibility lies with the owner to comply with the Ontario Fire Code.

[para57] Tom Denes ("Denes"), the Commissioner for Public works for Etobicoke, gave evidence. His previous position with Etobicoke had been the Director of Traffic, Transportation and Development engineering. His Department's transportation and planning section examines proposals respecting parking, access, fire routes, loading and unloading of goods and did examine those of the Kingsway. Denes' evidence was that the Department approved the building's plans and addressed the lay-by in terms of necessity and location. He said it is a "common design." It is an "additional feature to driveways, as they act as loading areas." Signs are erected after it is shown it functions properly. Denes' letter of July 29, 1992 to Bruce Brunton, President of M.T.C.C. 875 reads in part:

For your information, loading and unloading of vehicles is a permitted activity in no parking areas, such as fire routes, as evidenced by frequent occurrences in shopping centres and in most residential developments Denes was of the view that loading and unloading of any type of material on and off trucks is legitimate in a no parking zone and that the Police do not ticket vehicles if there is obvious activity around the vehicle.

[para58] I did not find Denes' comparisons with loading and unloading at shopping centres to be very helpful. He did admit that had there not been a moving and disposal entrance in the West Tower, the lay-by would not have been allowed in the East Tower driveway because there would have had to be a separate entrance for garbage disposal and other waste removal.

[para59] Ifor Caine Davies ("Davies") worked for Shipp for over 20 years and worked on "The Kingsway." He confirmed that the Etobicoke Fire Department had made a site inspection of the property and had "walked the route" and reviewed the building's evacuation system. It was his evidence that there was no mention of the fire route in the Condominium's technical audit.

134-10. Maintenance of fire route.

The owner shall maintain the fire route:

A. In good repair. B. Clear of snow and ice. C. Free of blockage by any means [emphasis added]

134-12. Parking prohibited.

No person shall park a vehicle in an area designated by a sign as a designated fire route.

The term "park" or "parking" is defined in the by-law as:

When prohibited, the standing of a vehicle, except when standing temporarily for the purpose of and while actually engaged in loading or unloading merchandise or passengers.

Subsection 1(1) 25. of the Highway Traffic Act R.S.O. 1990, c. defines "park" or "parking" as follows:

25. "park" or "parking", when prohibited, means the standing of a vehicle, whether occupied or not, except when standing temporarily for the purpose of and while actually engaged in loading or unloading merchandise or passengers; ("stationnement")

[para61] Both definitions refer to loading or unloading of "merchandise or passengers". In my view, an owner's household goods and personal effects are not merchandise, the word contemplating newly purchased articles. Black's Law Dictionary, 4th edition, defines the term "merchandise" as:

All commodities which merchants usually buy and sell, whether at wholesale or retail; wares and commodities such as are ordinarily the objects of trade and commerce. But the term is never understood as including real estate, and is rarely applied to provisions such as are purchased day by day, or to such other articles as are required for immediate consumption.

It further defines "temporarily" as: Lasting for a time only, existing or continuing for a limited time, not of long, duration, not permanent, transitory, changing, but a short time.

[para62] It therefore seems to me that the loading and unloading of moving vans in the lay-by, which can take many hours duration, does not fall within the exception in the by-law. It consists neither of merchandise, nor is it temporary. I further find, that while practically speaking, fire trucks may be able to access the fire route while vans are parked in the lay-by, and while these vehicles may not always be ticketed by the police, there is a breach of the provision of the Fire Code respecting the space which is supposed to be left unoccupied by vehicles. In my view, the provisions of the Fire Code have not been properly followed and observed, as was confirmed by McClare in his evidence. The fact that the fire route access is not properly kept free of vehicles and the fact that there are insufficient inspectors to monitor all situations, does not excuse the breaches.

[para63] Subsection 19(4) of the Fire Marshals Act R.S.O. 1990 c. F17 states:

(4) The fire code supersedes all municipal by-laws respecting fire safety standards for buildings and other structures and premises.

Further, our Court has held in Re. Chief Building Official for the City of Toronto and Manolan Enterprises Ltd. et al., (1978) 22 O.R. (2d) 60 at p. 63 that the Building Code deals with building construction requirements, fire regulations and the interaction of them to applicable types of use and construction. In Minto Construction Ltd. and Township of Gloucester (1979) 23 O.R. (2d) 634, the Court pointed out at p. 635 that the Building Code standards "are frequently expressed as minimal, leaving individual contractors free to build to higher or stricter standards."

[para64] Shipp, in my view, ought not to have built an apartment in the 104 location, given the Fire Code standards and its failure to keep the Fire Route clear of parked vehicles.

8. Jaremko's costs and expenses [para65] Jaremko purchased 104 for $199,000.00, inclusive of the sum of $15,000.00 for each of two parking spaces and the sum of $2,000.00 for a locker space. On occupancy, Jaremko provided 12 post-dated cheques to management in the amount of $1,748.39 for occupancy fees. These payments covered the first mortgage payments to Premier Trust on the unit's open mortgage in the amount of $149,250.00 at 14% with monthly payments of $1,752.00 per month. When this mortgage was renewed in 1991, it was at 11% interest, with monthly payments of $1,493.00. It dropped in April, 1992 to 9.375% interest with payments of $1,286.00 per month, in 1993 to 8% with payments of $1,139.00 per month, and in 1994 to 6.75% interest with payments of $1,055.00 per month. On its renewal in 1994, the principal amount owing was $143,795.57.

[para66] In addition to the first mortgage, Jaremko carried a second mortgage of $37,500. at 18% (being half of the borrowed amount, with the other half relating to the second mortgage on unit 2303).

[para68] Jaremko had paid $49,750.00 in deposits on 104 from February 5, 1987 to October 1, 1989. These deposits earned interest while the building was under construction. She received interest of $8,181.46. Jaremko and other unit owners complained about the low rate of interest and the property taxes. Eventually she received another $3,500.00 interest on January 3, 1995.

[para69] The taxes on 104 were as follows:

[para70] Jaremko's legal bill for the purchase of 104 was $1,329.07. In addition, Gerald O. Jarson charged her $5,037.78 for all the transactions in connection with obtaining the second mortgage financing and its legal documents. As has been noted in these Reasons, Jaremko was involved in other legal actions with the condominium corporation. Although it was Jaremko's evidence that she has paid between $35,000.00 and $40,000.00 for all the condominium legal actions she has been involved with, the total of all accounts rendered which are found at Tab 88 of the books of documents total $27,597.15.

[para71] While 104 was rented to Shannon Kay, Dawn Kay and Christine Jaremko, a total of 35 months, Jaremko's records show she received rent of $1,000.00 per month for a total credit of $35,000.00. I was confused by her evidence in this regard. When Shannon Kay occupied it, Jaremko says she was paid $90.00 per week or approximately $387.00 per month, with Dawn Kay paying $400.00 per month for the use of one of the bedrooms as her studio. Dawn Kay had signed a lease to pay $1,750.00 per month which she said in her evidence was reasonable yet the amount actually paid by her and her daughter never came close to that amount. Shannon Kay's evidence was that she paid between $350.00 and $400.00 per month rent. Christine Jaremko's evidence was that she moved in November, 1992 and stayed until June, 1994 and paid rent of $400.00 per month. [para72] On April 18, 1990, two weeks after the closing took place, Jaremko listed 104 for sale at $265,000.00. This price included both parking spaces and the locker. It was Jaremko's evidence that her listing was a "stab in the dark" as no apartments had yet been listed for sale in this building and there was no proven market. In June of 1991, Jaremko dropped the price to $225,000.00, to $205,000.00 in August of 1992, and in December, 1993, to $189,900.00. During this period of time, she received not one offer to purchase the apartment. Her view was that any property will sell if the right buyer comes along. When asked why she did not list it at a lower price, Jaremko said that she could not afford to sell it at $180,000. In the meantime, other units in the building were being sold.

9. Expert's Report

[para74] Ronald Smith ("Smith"), a Chartered Accountant, does forensic accounting for law firms, government agencies and some private companies. He now solely practices in the area of litigation support. Smith was Jaremko's expert witness in quantifying her damages. Smith prepared a Report dated March 4, 1994 which he updated on January 10, 1995. He examined Jaremko's legal papers, realty tax statements, banking records and mortgage statements. Smith has quantified Jaremko's damages at between $412,900 to $512,100, as of January 31, 1995, all of which relate to disbursements directly related to the unit plus interest paid on mortgages and loans. The figures do take into account the rent Jaremko received and the interest on her deposits and the settlement monies she got as additional interest. His summary shows that the balance owing on the first mortgage was $140,832.

[para75] On cross-examination, Smith said that his calculations were based on a complete rescission of the agreement so that it includes all liabilities against the unit. Given Jaremko's other borrowings for 2303 and for her Bloor West building and her Brentwood property, it was difficult for Smith to trace the use of such funds and too time consuming and costly to do so. He also admitted that some banking information was missing. He had difficulty tracing where funds came from to fund the liabilities and agreed that some may have come from Jaremko's business. Some of the borrowings showed that Jaremko left the money in the account and drew upon it monthly for expenses. He assumed that Jaremko, as a prudent business person, would have gone to the cheapest source to borrow the funds. He was also unable to trace where the deposit money came from and could not trace the deposit of rental payments. In his initial summary, Smith deducts the sum of $16,000 from the expenses on account of rental payments of $400.00 per month received to February 1, 1994. The range in Smith's estimate comes about as a result of the varying interest rates on borrowed monies. Those rates ranged from 11.25% to 18.50% during the period February 2, 1987 to February 1, 1994.

10. Value of the apartment

[para77] Jaremko and Shipp disagreed on the present value of the apartment for purposes of these proceedings. Jane Feilders ("Feilders"), an appraiser with Royal LePage since 1983, gave evidence on behalf of Jaremko. She had been asked to ascertain if there was a loss in the property value of the apartment caused by a negative location factor. Feilders personally attended at the apartment to observe what she considered a negative influence. It was her evidence that during a move by a tenant or owner, there was a lack of privacy in 104, that noise and odours emanated from the moving van and the view of all windows in the apartment was blocked.

[para78] Feilders' Report is dated March 18, 1994. The comparatives she used in her Report ranged from a discount of 7.6% at the low end caused by a seasonal annoyance with odour coming into a modest apartment to 28% discount for an apartment in a higher priced building which was exposed to high levels of noise. Other comparatives fell between these two figures.

[para80] On cross-examination, Feilders said it was her opinion that the unpredictability factor of when the moving vans would arrive and how long they would stay and what the noise would be was worse than the frequency factor. Feilders concluded that the appropriate discount figure was 20%. She agreed that having 104's location near the underground parking entrance and having a sidewalk in front of it were also negative factors which were readily known to Jaremko when she purchased the unit. She also conceded that subway noise could be a negative factor. I found Feilders to be a very thorough witness who presented her evidence in a straightforward and professional manner. Her "paired data set analysis" in which sales of properties similar in all but one characteristic can be analyzed to isolate that one difference, was very useful. Since there were no comparative sales in the building, she examined sales in other locations where one unit had a negative factor. In particular, I found her paired analysis of two units at 71 Simcoe Street to be helpful. The difference in price was $36.00 per square foot, being a 22% difference. The unit which sold for $210,000.00 had a very good view from higher up than the unit which sold for $164,000.00 and had as its view, a brick wall.

[para81] Shipp's witness was Barry Lebow, F.R.I. ("Lebow"), a certified Canadian residential appraiser and a professional land economists, who has been an expert witness in our courts many times. It was Lebow's evidence that he examined all resales in the building. These resales started in 1990. Lebow also inspected 104 in mid 1994. He concluded that the market value of 104 steadily dropped from 1990, where he valued it at $205,000.00, to $195,000.00 in 1991, to $190,500.00 in 1992, to $185,500.00 in 1993 to $176,000.00 in 1994. This was based on the average decrease for similar condominium projects in western Toronto where the overall drop had been approximately 25%. Further, he saw the negative influence of the lay-by as only being 5% of the "entire negative depreciation problem", with the combined elements of depreciation estimated to be 15%. Lebow disagreed with Feilders' depreciation factor of 20% and her view that the unpredictability factor was the most important one. In his view, the negative factors of the apartment facing the entrance to the underground parking, the fact that it faces the driveway with its traffic flow, and the fact that it faces an open section of the nearby subway line (a factor which never showed in any of the drawings or plans or model), were more important than the service lay-by. While I agree that these factors add to the negativity, having carefully reviewed all the photographs presented in evidence and listening to the evidence as a whole, I concluded that the unpredictability of the use of the service lay-by and the effect of the noise, odour and fumes and close proximity of the vans and movers, was far worse than any other negative factor.

[para83] Lebow felt that Jaremko should not have highlighted a negative feature of the unit by noting in the multiple listing that, "Unit is next to moving room". In Lebow's opinion, this highlighting of a negative factor was bad marketing and it showed how Jaremko had stigmatized the unit.

[para84] Lebow's Report showed that the market had decreased by 25% since 1990 in the west section of Metropolitan Toronto. Using Toronto Real Estate Board figures and looking strictly at condominium units, he notes at p. 17 of his Report that there has been a drop of 22.64%.

[para86] Having listened to the evidence of those witnesses who had actually occupied 104, and having examined the many photographs which were put into evidence, and after listening to the two realtors, I have concluded that the location of the lay-by in front of the unit with the moving room next to it, were more serious negative factors than its location near the garage entrance. There were other ground floor units in the building and in the companion building. None were affected by this lack of privacy and blockage of light and the infiltration of gas fumes as was 104. I therefore accept Feilders' conclusions respecting the effect of the negative factors of the lay-by and the moving room and hold that the appropriate discount figure is 15%.

[para87] In retrospect, Jaremko may have been better off not highlighting the location of the unit on the MLS listing. On the other hand, given the difficulties she had experienced with the Board, and given how she personally felt about the way the unit was described in different documentation, I concluded that Jaremko (being a real estate agent herself) did not want any prospective purchaser to feel as she had.

11. Jaremko's attempts at selling 104

[para88] Unit 104 was listed for 5 years prior to trial and did not sell. It was Shipp's position that Jaremko was not properly marketing the unit. Lebow said that he had never heard of anyone putting a special notation on a listing agreement which drew the attention of a prospective purchaser to the fact that the unit was next to a moving room. There is no question that Jaremko was caught by a falling market and that the value of the unit dropped substantially due to the general market conditions.

[para89] Jaremko kept detailed records of all showings of the unit and inquiries made about it. (See: Tab 122 of the books of documents). She also attempted to sell one of the two parking spaces separately but this did not succeed. She deliberately pointed out to other agents that the unit was next to the moving room.

[para91] Sarab Dayal Chopra ("Chopra"), also a realtor, gave evidence. He owned two units in the complex, both of which he sold. He showed 104 about 4 to 5 times, but tried to show it at least 10 to 12, he said. It was Chopra's evidence that Jaremko insisted that prospective purchasers be told that the unit was next to a moving room. He said that when he tried to arrange appointments to show the unit, on a couple of occasions Jaremko was to be out of town and it could not be shown and on others she would not book the appointments. Jaremko insisted on being there when the unit was shown and pointed out the location of the moving room.

12. Is the plaintiff entitled to rescission?

[para93] Jaremko has taken the position that she is entitled to rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale and the return of her deposit monies on the grounds that the Disclosure Statement did not fully and accurately disclose the existence of the lay-by and the moving room. I have concluded that rescission is not open to Jaremko based on the principles as set down in Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 120. Subsection 52(6) (b) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. reads:

(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose, (b) a general description of the property or types proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities;

Abdool makes it clear that the onus is on Jaremko to show that the disclosure statement failed to satisfy the requirements of the Act to the degree that the agreement must be declared non-binding. The Court held at p. 139:

To discharge this onus and prove the materiality of the complaint, in my opinion, the purchaser is obliged to establish objectively that had the information that was not disclosed, or that was inaccurately or insufficiently disclosed, been properly disclosed in the disclosure statement at the time it was delivered to the purchaser, a reasonable purchaser would have regarded the information as sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that he or she would not likely have gone ahead with transaction but would instead have rescinded the agreement before the expiration of the ten-day cooling off period.

Further, at p. 145 the Court notes that s. 52 should be construed:

in a manner that properly balances consumer protection and the commercial realities of the condominium industry ...

To require the inclusion of all of the details of the declaration, by-laws, rules and the like which the purchasers argue should be contained in the disclosure statement, ... would be to ignore the overall criteria of brevity, generality and significance and turn what was intended to be a short and comprehensible statement into a lengthy and legalistic document no more comprehensible to lay persons than the underlying documents themselves.

[para94] I have found in these Reasons that the lay-by was shown on the plan entitled "Recreation and Amenities", as being in front of a sidewalk which was in front of the building. Jaremko had a copy of this plan. It also showed the Moving Room next to 104. The Disclosure Statement at p. 3 states that there is no separate service entrance in the east tower and that there will be a three metre lay-by capable of accommodating delivery vehicles constructed in front of the east tower off the driveway. In my view, this meets the brevity, generality and significance tests set out in Abdool. It is comprehensible and obvious in the Statement. Jaremko is therefore not entitled to rescission. While Jaremko was not an experienced condominium purchaser, she was an experienced real estate agent and broker and was familiar with legal documents and should have raised the issue during the 10 day period provided by the Act if she was looking to rescind the purchase. See also: Scanlon v. Castlepoint Development Corporation and Bramalea Limited (1992), 29 R.P.R. (2d) 60 at pp. 80 and 81, and Bondy v. P.C. Cove Builders Inc. (1991) 22 R.P.R. (2d) 217.

[para95] Further, I have examined the non-condominium cases respecting rescission to which counsel referred me. Jaremko's situation was not at all like that in Keen v. Alterra Developments Ltd. (1993), 35 R.P.R. (2d) 278 where the changes in the "dream house" plans were not conveyed to the purchasers and they ended up with something completely different from that which they bargained for. [para96] In Bosworth Ltd. v. Professional Syndicated Developments Ltd. et al. (1979), 24 O.R. (2d) 97, Robins J. held at 105:

In my opinion, what transpired in the factual circumstances here does not constitute an error in substantialibus entitling Syndicated to the relief it claimed.

I adopt this reasoning in the case at bar.

[para97] I have also reviewed Ceolaro v. York Humber Ltd. (1994) 37 R.P.R. (2d) 1, also a condominium case which dealt with the disclosure issue, permitted encumbrances and the developer's duty to disclose. There the Court held that the developer did not have a duty to disclose the methane gas system to prospective purchasers since it did not pose a health or safety risk, where a purchaser sought damages for breach of contract. There is duty on the part of the vendor to disclose something as being potentially dangerous. See: Sevidal v. Chopra, (1987), 64 O.R. (2d) 169. Sevidal dealt with radioactive soil. I concur with the reasoning in Ceolaro and hold that Jaremko is not entitled to rescission.

13. What is the relationship between the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and the Disclosure Statement and the Reservation Agreement?

[para98] Jaremko takes the position that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale is a document separate and apart from the Disclosure Statement and the Reservation Agreement. The Agreement of Purchase and Sale is an extremely long document with schedules "A" to "H" attached to it and forming part of the Agreement. It makes no reference to either the Disclosure Statement or the Reservation Agreement. The Reservation Agreement, however, does state in bold letters on page one that Jaremko is granted a "PRIORITY RIGHT TO SUBMIT AN OFFER TO PURCHASE (the "Reservation") ... described as Suite Number: 104."

[para99] It further states in paragraph 2. that Jaremko agrees to execute Shipp's standard form of Agreement of Purchase and Sale within five days of notification of its availability. Other references are made to the Agreement of Purchase and Sale in the Reservation Agreement, including a statement in paragraph 4 thereof that in the event that Shipp fails to provide the Agreement of Purchase and Sale to the Purchaser before November 9, 1986, the Reservation is null and void and the deposit is to be returned to the Purchaser without interest. The Reservation Agreement and the Agreement of Purchase and Sale are therefore integrally tied together.

14. Was unit 104 subject to latent defects?

[para101] The evidence has shown that 104 was the only unit which was profoundly affected by the lay-by and the moving room. No other unit in the complex was situate next to a moving room and no other unit had its windows blocked by moving vans. In Yandle and Sons v. Sutton, [1922] 2 Ch. 199, the Court held at p. 210:

In all these cases between vendor and purchaser, the vendor knows what the property is, and what the rights with regard to it are. The purchaser is generally in the dark. I think, therefore, that, in considering what is a latent defect and what a patent defect, which can be thrust upon the purchaser, must be defect which arises either to the eye, or by necessary implication from something which is visible to the eye.

[para102] The problem with Shipp's documents regarding the lay-by is that some did not show it, others showed it but referred to it as a "service lay-by" as opposed to a "moving lay-by". The Disclosure Statement noted that it was there to service "delivery vehicles" not "moving vans". In the common jargon of the day, the two phrases have different connotations. Nothing, of course, disclosed that the unit's windows would be completely blocked during all moves in and out of the building. [para103] In Keen v. Alterra Developments Ltd (1993) 35 R.P.R. (2d) 278, Fedak J., held in a rescission case, that a builder has a duty to warn customers in advance of certain latent defects. At p. 285 he said:

Although the elevation of the lot was not in the builder's control, it was within the builder's power to warn customers in advance of this fact. This could have been achieved by noting on the brochures that ground elevation was dependent on grading, or by warning a purchaser that extra steps could be required on the particular lot chosen. Prior to the building permit being issued it was within the builder's power to review the grading plan and determine how many steps would be required. The builder had no intention of warning the purchasers, either at the offer stage or at the beginning of the construction stage, that stairs might be required. On the contrary, it is the builder's position that it is up to the purchasers to make it a specific condition in the agreement of purchase and sale.

Caveat emptor does not apply where there is a latent defect. In the case at bar, it was within Shipp's control to tell the purchaser of 104 that it was to now be next to a moving room and that the service lay-by would accommodate moving vans which would be in close proximity to the outer wall of the unit. If Shipp was not prepared to make full disclosure of this latent defect, it should not have used that space as an apartment to be sold to the public. The space could have been used for a guest suite or for recreational facilities or offices. The configuration would never have been allowed if the east tower was free-standing on its own without the inter-connected entrance between it and the west tower. It was the west tower which had an appropriate area for moving vans and garbage collection. See also: Godin v. Jenovac (1993) 35 R.P.R. (2d) 288. I am satisfied on Jaremko's evidence that if she had known the full scope of the effect of the lay-by, she would not have offered to purchase the unit.

16. Did Shipp make misrepresentations to Jaremko?

[para104] I cannot say that Shipp made deliberately false or negligent misrepresentations to Jaremko about the unit which caused her to enter into the contract. The misrepresentation about the lay-by by Cornwall was, in my view, more in the nature of an innocent misrepresentation made at the time of inspection and not a representation that was made at the time the contract was entered into. Any representations made by Shipp's agents or made in its materials were innocent representations. A representor will not be liable unless he or she knew or ought to have known that the other party would rely on the statements as factual representations. See: C.E.D. (3rd) Vol. 5, 536.

[para105] There is no right to claim damages for innocent misrepresentation. See: Wasman v. Yandle, [1953] O.R. 367 and Panzer v. Zeifman, (1978) 20 O.R. (2d) 502.

[para106] Shipp simply did not tell her anything about the impact of either the moving room or the lay-by. Shipp, as a builder, had a certain acreage within which to build this luxury complex. In my view, it pushed these limits to the outer edge by building ground floor units in the east tower so close to this constant vehicular traffic from which was emitted carbon monoxide fumes and noise, not to mention its proximity to the windows of the units situate there. These latent defects were not what Jaremko bargained for. In Fraser-Reid v. Droumtsekas, [1979] 103 D.L.R. (3d) 385, the Court at p. 388:

The English Court of Appeal has held that a duty of care is owed by a builder to prospective buyers, and the issue of whether or not there has been a breach of the duty will depend on the relevant considerations going to the question: "Did the builder act as a competent and careful builder would have acted in what he did not do?: Batty v. Metropolitan Property Realizations Ltd., [1978] 2 All E.R. 445 (C.A.). See also Dutton v. Bognor Regis United Building Co. Ltd., [1972] 1 All E.R. 462 (C.A.).

The latent defect did not become obvious until January of 1991. Shipp did not, however, act as a careful builder in including a lay-by in front of 104.

15. Was there a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment and was there an implied warranty that the unit was fit for habitation?

[para107] The Ontario New Home Warranties Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. O31, subsection 13(1) (a) (ii) confirms the common law implied warranty that the home is to be fit for habitation. I am satisfied that there were no laches on the part of Jaremko regarding her problems with the unit. It was not until Shannon Kay moved into the unit that the defects became apparent and that the overall effect on the occupant's habitation of the unit became apparent.

[para108] The Land Registration Reform Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. directs in subsection 5 (1) (1. ii) that a transferee of land shall have quiet enjoyment of the land. Guest v. Cochlin, (1929) O.L.R. LXIV 165 points out at p. 167 that for more than a century it has been clear law that an agreement to sell in fee simple carries with it the right of the purchaser to proper covenants, one of which is a covenant for quiet enjoyment. A breach of this covenant is not as usual between vendor and purchaser as it is between landlord and tenant. It nevertheless exists. When vacant possession of the unit is given by the vendor to the purchaser, the purchaser is entitled to actual unimpeded physical enjoyment of the unit. See: Cumberland Consolidated Holdings, Limited v. Ireland, [1946] 1 K.B. 264 at p. 271. The presence of the lay-by in such close proximity to her windows in 104 deprives Jaremko of her of quiet enjoyment. [para109] The impediment must be such that it substantially interferes with the owner's occupation of the unit. Noise has been considered by the Courts. In Owen v. Gadd and others, [1956] 2 All E.R. 28, the English Court of Appeal, in following the earlier case of Browne v. Flower [1911] 1 Ch. 219 at p. 228, quoted:

It appears to me that to constitute a breach of such a covenant there must be some physical interference with the enjoyment of the demised premises, and that a mere interference with the comfort of persons using the demised premises by the creation of a personal annoyance such as might arise from noise, invasion of privacy, or otherwise is not enough.

It is therefore not sufficient to be annoyed with noise. Purchasers who buy homes situate on busy bus routes or close to major highways, do so knowing that there will be noise. In the case at bar, the noise of the movers often accompanied by music, and accompanied by the looming presence of the moving vans with their blockage of light and privacy and their emission of fumes, when added together, in my view, constitutes a breach of quiet enjoyment. See also: Mayrand v. 768565 Ont. Ltd. (1989) 7 R.P.R. (2d) 287 at p. 295.

17. Is Jaremko entitled to damages?

[para110] It may be that some purchasers would not have been as affected by the impact of the lay-by as Jaremko was. This in no way negates what happened to her. If the unit is to be occupied by persons who are in it during the daylight hours on a daily basis, rather than just on weekends when moves are not permitted, the impact can be substantial. If the unit is occupied by persons who work each weekday and leave the unit before the moves and deliveries begin, and arrive home after they have ceased, the impact would not be as great.

[para111] I have held that Jaremko is not entitled to rescission. I have, however, concluded that Jaremko is entitled to damages for the breaches which occurred, that is, the statutory breach with respect to the fire route, the breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, the breach of warranty that the unit was fit for habitation. That breach was not a full-blown breach which meant that no one could live in the unit. It was a partial breach, which by itself, may not have given rise to damages but when coupled with the others gave rise to damages.

[para112] Further, in my view, the location of the lay-by and the moving room was a latent defect which did not become apparent until after the unit was occupied, and for which Jaremko is entitled to damages.

[para114] Jaremko has claimed the sum of $35,000.00 with respect to her legal costs which arose as a result of the difficulties she experienced. My review of the legal accounts shows that they amounted to $27,597.15. These costs arose as a direct result of Jaremko's efforts to try to rectify the latent defect of the lay-by and moving room which was caused by Shipp's desire to maximize the number of apartment units it could build in the east tower and its failure to consider the impact on the owner of the unit directly in front of the lay-by. Shipp has argued that Jaremko should not be entitled to these expenses given her lack of success in her actions. I do not agree. In my view Jaremko had to take the steps she did and I have noted in these Reasons the lack of cooperation by the Board. I have further found Shipp to have breached the Fire Code. I award Jaremko the sum of $27,597.15 for these costs.

[para115] Jaremko's expert, Ronald Smith, quantified her damages as between $412,900.00 and $512,000.00, taking into account all of Jaremko's costs over the years. While technically Smith's mathematics may be correct, depending on how one calculates the amount of interest which was paid by Jaremko on her borrowings, I cannot see, at law, why Shipp should pay for all of these. The fact that Jaremko had to borrow what appeared to be the full cost of the unit, was not the fault of Shipp. Nor was it Shipp's fault that Jaremko chose to rent the unit to her own daughter and to Shannon Kay and Dawn Kay at minimal rent, as opposed to market rent.

[para118] Jaremko and Dawn Kay both thought that a fair rent for the unit, before the impact of the lay-by and the moving room was known, was $1,750.00 per month. No evidence was led to contradict this amount. The total rent for the years 1990 to 1994 would have been $105,000.00. Allowing the 15% discount, I award Jaremko the sum of $15,750.00 for the discounted rent based on her own value. Regrettably, Jaremko chose not to advertise the unit for rent at a reasonable rental rate and she is left with having to bear the difference between the amount she set with Kay and the amount she eventually received.

[para119] Jaremko's expenses also included mortgage payments. These payments would have been offset by her receiving a reasonable rental for the unit. The mortgage payments varied over the years from approximately $18,900.00 to approximately $13,800.00. Without considering whether the interest rate was reasonable and whether any of the interest costs did not directly relate to borrowings for this unit (an impossible task and one which Smith was aware of when he estimated some of them), I award Jaremko a lump sum amount of $20,000.00 as her reasonable damages with respect to this item.

17. Is Jaremko entitled to damages for mental distress?

[para121] I have concluded that Jaremko is not entitled to damages for mental distress. Jaremko never occupied the unit herself and never intended to do so. The unit was intended to be occupied by her daughters but that did not fully come to fruition. Our Courts have held that damages for mental suffering can only be awarded if the parties should reasonably have foreseen mental suffering as a consequence of a breach of contract at the time the contract was entered into. See: Voris v. Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, [1989] 58 D.L.R.(4th) 193. While Shipp ought to have reasonably foreseen the problems which occurred when they changed the architectural plans to include the lay-by as a moving lay-by and changed the originally planned apartment next to 104 to a moving room, they went ahead with that construction and never put Jaremko on notice of the possible problem. Jaremko, on the other hand, was a realtor of many years experience and did not try to rescind the contract when she realized what the impact might be. Jaremko, in my view is therefore not entitled to damages for mental distress.

18. Costs

[para122] If counsel cannot otherwise agree on costs, I may be spoken to.

Marisa Marafioti, Applicant, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 75, Respondent And Between Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 775, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 769 and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 785, Applicants, and Marisa Marafioti and Frank Marafioti, Respondents

Action Nos. RE3227/93 and RE3375/93

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Greer J. Heard: January 19 and 20, 1994. Judgment: May 24, 1994.

Jerry Herzkopf, for the Applicant on the Application and for the Respondents on the Cross-Application. Andrea M. Habas, for the Respondent on the Application and for the Applicants on the Cross-Application.

[para1] GREER J.:-- The issue with respect to these two Applications centres on the construction of a deck attached to a condominium unit townhouse. The Applicant, Maria Marafioti, ("Marafioti") has asked the Court for a permanent injunction enjoining and restraining the Respondent, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 775 ("MTCC 775" or "the corporation"), its officers, directors, agents and anyone under its control from removing or in any way dealing with the deck and/or the kitchen window and sliding door, situated at the Marafioti condominium municipally located at 29 Lower Village Gate, Townhouse 29, Toronto ("the townhouse"). Marafioti further asks for a Declaration that she is in compliance with the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990 Chap. C26 ("the Act") and MTCC 775's Declaration; and she asks for a Declaration that it has no status in law to order the alteration of Marafioti's kitchen window nor to take any steps to alter such window.

[para2] In their Application, MTCC 775, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 769 ("MTCC 769") and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 785 ("MTCC 785") seek a mandatory Order compelling both Marisa and Frank Marafioti to remove, at their own expense, from the common elements adjacent to the townhouse the rear elevated wooden deck, an extended and off-standard fence at the rear and an off-standard window and sliding door affixed to the rear exterior of the townhouse.

1. The Facts

[para3] The Applicant's husband, Frank Marafioti (also "Marafioti"), originally purchased the townhouse from the Village Gate in Lower Forest Hill Limited (the "Declarant") by Agreement of Purchase and Sale dated October 19, 1985 which was accepted by the developer on November 5, 1985. It was later transferred to the Applicant wife. The Marafiotis began occupying the townhouse in or about March 1987. MTCC 775 is a corporation which was created by operation of the Act when its declaration and description were registered on May 16, 1988. It is physically three townhouse blocks containing 32 residential condominium units, each consisting of a two storey dwelling plus a basement. MTCC 769 and MTCC 785 are highrise buildings and were constructed in close proximity to MTCC 775 by the same developer in the late 1980's. The three such corporations are operated and managed under a Common Management Council ("CMC"). Each has a proportional interest, as tenants in common, in certain shared facilities.

[para4] When the townhouse was purchased by Frank Marafioti, the Declarant agreed to changes to the townhouse layout, including changes to the common elements as well as revised layouts with respect to a larger upstairs bedroom and a deck and sliding door. A larger kitchen was also proposed. Frank Marafioti had a dispute with the Declarant about deficiencies. The dispute resolved itself by way of an agreement dated February 27, 1988, wherein the Declarant agreed to install "extras" including the construction of a patio door type walkout from the kitchen on the second level onto a wooden deck approximately 6 feet by ten feet to be constructed by the Declarant, as well as an addition to the wooden fence which was to be extended further into the back yard. The construction began shortly after February 27, 1988 and was completed by May 11, 1988. It is safe to say that not all other townhouse owners appreciated what the Marafiotis had done. Given the discord, the Declarant was requested to take an informal poll of all townhouse residents to determine their views. The Declarant reserved its right not to be bound by the outcome of the poll. This was done on May 11, 1988 and it is the Marafiotis' evidence that only two owners opposed the deck. It is the condominium owners' evidence that approximately 16 of 32 purchasers responded to the informal poll with a majority of them favouring the relocation option that had been put by the condominium owners to the Marafiotis.

[para5] One of the persons who opposed the construction of the Marafiotis' deck was William G. Wolfson, the owner of the next door townhouse 28. He wrote two letters to the developer, Camrost Development, on March 21 and March 23, 1988 voicing these objections, noting the erosion of the uniformity of the look of the townhouses as well as the breach of the rules governing the condominiums. He further objected to the deck blocking his view and invading his privacy. [para6] Wolfson attempted to negotiate with Marafioti and when this proved futile (with the exception of Marafioti's agreement to lower the height of the fence), he again wrote to Camrost. I am satisfied on the evidence as set out in Wolfson's Affidavit and its exhibits, that Camrost was singularly unhelpful to the other townhouse owners. At a meeting of these owners with Camrost on May 5, 1988, Camrost's representative confirmed that no building permit had been issued for the work, and that the condominium documentation had never been altered or amended to reflect these changes.

[para7] One other owner constructed an elevated deck to townhouse 30 but this dispute was eventually resolved between the owner and the other condominium owners and the deck was removed. The Marafiotis would not negotiate with the other owners. The Marafiotis foolishly tried to intimidate the opposing owners' group by threatening to sue.

[para8] The condominium was registered on May 16, 1988, with the "turnover meeting" taking place on or about July 21, 1988. At the December 15, 1988 meeting of the three condominiums, Marafioti advised that he was prepared to lower the height of the offending fence at his own expense and would try to get the money back from the developer. He did not lower the fence. On January 8, 1989, Mr. Marafioti began his intimidation campaign. By letter of that date, he informed the owners that his agreement with the developer was "both legal and binding." He went on to state that:

I have been put in a position of having to withdraw from a land venture in which I was promised a profit of two to three million dollars if I do not get some written answers from MTCC 755 and CMC. This exclusive common element is not a shared facility and is not a CMC matter. It is an MTCC 775 matter and I believe the directors of MTC(sic) are liable for financial hardship and loss to me due to the flagrant, irresponsible and unresearched letter sent to me by CMC at the instigation of MTCC 775. I trust this will be resolved soon to avoid legal action.

These type of threats continued. In May of 1989, the townhouse owners were put on notice of an extraordinary general meeting to be held on June 15, 1989 for the purpose of considering specific by-laws to deal with the Marafioti deck and the other deck. The by-laws were prepared at the owners' expense. The proposed bylaws were defeated at the meeting. The meeting did, however, pass a special bylaw (By-Law 4) empowering the Board of Directors of MTCC 775 to approve change/additions to common elements subject to certain restrictions. A demand letter was sent by MTCC 775's solicitor to Marafioti's solicitor demanding the immediate removal of the elevated wooden deck and fence and restoration of the common elements to their original condition. By July 30, 1990, the issue with townhouse 30 had been resolved and its owners removed the deck and the Condominium Corporation contributed $1,000.00 towards the costs of the owners. Marafioti would only agree to reposition his deck.

[para9] Although Marafioti agreed to attend a meeting on December 4, 1990 regarding the problem, he did not do so. In January, 1991, Marafioti gave the Board a sketch of the proposed relocation of the deck. He was advised by the Board that his proposal was refused, as it would set a precedent, would alter the architectural lines of the rear of the townhouses, would infringe on the privacy of the neighbouring townhouse owners, was not consistent with the original plans, and was opposed by the adjacent owners. Mr. Marafioti then threatened to rent out his townhouse as a "group home."

[para10] From April of 1991 until July of 1993, the Board of Directors waited to take action while proceedings with the City of Toronto, which had issued an Order to Comply against Marafioti, took place. In the 2nd, even though no building permit had been obtained for all these changes to the Marafioti townhouse, the proceedings were dismissed due to delay. The City appealed and this was dismissed. During this period, Marafioti sent the Board a note entitled "Intention to Sue for Liability". Marafioti also took the position that the Board was acting in bad faith in instigating the City of Toronto to serve him with an Order to Comply as well as having him charged under the Building Code Act. He further claims that they "conspired" against him in breach of their fiduciary duties to him as an owner and did not assist him with respect to the charges against him.

2. The Condominium's Rules, Regulations and Principles

[para11] Condominiums are creatures of Statute and are governed by the provisions of the Act. The principles governing MTCC 775 are set out in its Declaration, By-Laws and Rules. Purchasers are all given a copy of the Disclosure Statement when a unit is purchased, so each is fully informed as to its operation. There is an issue as to whether the changes effected by the Marafiotis are legal. Article V(1) of the MTCC 775 Declaration reads:'

(1) General Use

Each owner may make reasonable use of, and has the right to enjoy the whole or any part of the common elements, subject to any condition or restrictions set out in the Act, the Declaration, the Corporation's by-laws...

No owner shall make any change or alteration to any installation upon common elements, or maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements, save as allowed hereunder and except for maintaining those part of the common elements which he has a duty to maintain, without the approval of the Corporation [in accordance with the Act.

Article V(4) of the said Declaration governs additions, alteration and improvements as follows:

(4) Additions, Alterations and Improvements

(a) For the purposes of subsection 1 of Section 38 of the Act, the board shall decide whether any addition, alteration or improvement to, or renovation of, the common elements, or any change in the assets of the Corporation is substantial.

(b) No alteration, work, repairs, decoration, painting, maintenance, structure, fence, screen, hedge or erection of any kind whatsoever (the Work) shall be performed, done, erected or planted within or in relation to the common elements, (Including any part thereof over which any owner has the exclusive use), except by the Corporation or with its prior written consent or as permitted by the by-laws or rules.

Section 38 of the Act provides the following:

38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 percent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any further addition, alteration or improvement or renovation of the common elements...

There is nothing in the Condominium Declaration that makes reference to any private arrangement between the developer and the Marafiotis regarding the deck, fence, or sliding doors. There was no vote of approval by 80% of the owners of the units, pursuant to section 38 of the Act, nor was there a decision by the Board to permit these alterations and additions pursuant to Article V(4) of the Declaration, nor was there approval of the Corporation pursuant to Article V(1). The agreement entered into by the Marafiotis with the developer was strictly a private arrangement. The Marafiotis began their occupancy of the townhouse under an Occupancy Licence as set out in paragraph 14 of the Agreement. The Marafiotis agreed to abide by its terms. There is also an Acknowledgment signed by Frank Marafioti acknowledging that he has received the Disclosure Statement, the proposed Declaration and By-Law No. 1 and proposed Rules and other documents, all listed in subparagraphs 1 to 9 thereof.

[para12] The Disclosure Statement sets out the boundaries of the unit. Under paragraph (f) entitled "Occupation and Use of Common Elements", the Disclosure Statement states:

No owner shall make any change to an installation upon the common elements, or maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements, except for maintaining those parts of the common elements which he has a duty to maintain, without obtaining the prior written approval of the condominium corporation in accordance with The Condominium Act.

Further, Schedule F to the Declaration sets out the exclusive use of common elements as designated on sheets 1 and 2 of the description as Recessed Entrances,(garage), Patio Garden, Recessed Entrance (Front Door), Side Yard, and Front Patio. It is clear from this document which lists the Marafioti unit as No. 23, that there is no deck on the second floor at the back of the townhouse.

[para13] Each townhouse owner also received a document dated October 15, 1987 which was entitled, "Reminders". On page 2 there is a heading, "Exteriors" which states:

The exterior walls and the exterior of the Townhouse doors are the property of the Condominium Corporation. Therefore any exterior addition, such as brass door plates must be approved by your Condominium Corporation. No changes may be initiated(sic) by individual owners without such approval.

The Corporation never retroactively approved the changes after it was in place in May of 1988. In the townhouses, the backyard is an exclusive use common element for the townhouse to which it is attached. On the other hand, the deck, window and fence are all affixed to the exterior walls which are part of the general common elements and which, as pointed out, must not be changed without the approval of the Condominium Corporation.

[para14] The Marafiotis take the position that since the townhouse is now leased to a tenant, they will suffer irreparable harm if they are ordered to the deck as they will have difficulty leasing the townhouse to another tenant without the amenity of the deck. They are of the view that if the deck is removed the tenant may try to break her tenancy. Further, the layout was structured in such a way as to make a walkout from the kitchen to the outside comparable to the other units and if the deck is demolished there will be no such access. They further argue that such access is important to them and to their tenant and other units have access from the kitchen. Lastly, they argue that if the deck is removed, they will not be able to move back to the townhouse (which they allege they plan to do in the future) because it would no longer suit their day-to-day needs. In their view, none of this damage is quantifiable by them and they thus require the injunctive relief being asked for.

[para16] The Marafiotis take the position that there is really only one owner who strongly complains about the deck and that is the neighbour, Mr. Wolfson. On the other hand, Libby Naiman, the then president of the Ad Hoc Committee of Corporation "C" wrote to Camrost on March 21, 1988 and stated: The building of a deck for Townhouse No. 29 is extremely prejudicial. There were many owners who wanted changes and preferential treatment, but did not get it; that was fair to all. ...All of us value the uniformity of the external look of the townhouses and the rules and regulations which govern the same are being eroded by this preferential treatment.

While Mr. Wolfson may have been the most vocal of those opposing the deck, the fact that an Ad Hoc Committee had to be formed by owners to attempt to solve the problem at an early stage is very telling.

3. The Law

[para17] The Condominium Corporation takes the position that the issue before the Court is a pre-registration situation. The case at bar is similar to that of Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon et al., (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545, where prior to the registration of the condominium corporation, the developer/declarant entered into a written agreement with an owner, Rochon, whereby it agreed to install a satellite dish on the roof of the building. Rochon undertook to maintain the dish as it was erected above his penthouse unit and was exclusively used by him. In that case, prior to registration, the Board of Directors as constituted by the declarant, consented to the installation. When the case was heard by the Ontario Court of Appeal, Mr. Justice Finlayson noted that the purchasers of units had received copies of the proposed declaration, by-laws and rules in the current disclosure statement as provided for by s. 52 of the Act. The By-Laws and Rules of the Condominium were registered after the satellite dish was installed. The Rochons did not obtain the consent of the other unit owners either before or after the creation of the corporation. No meeting of the unit owners was held to approve it when it was installed on the roof, the roof being part of the condominium's common elements. At p. 552, Mr. Justice Finlayson found the following:

The declaration, description and by-laws, including the rules, are therefore vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit owner. He is not only bound by their terms and provisions, but he is entitled to insist that the other unit owners are similarly bound. There is no place in this scheme for any private arrangement between the developer and an individual unit owner. If an individual arrangement is made, it must be disclosed in the declaration (s. 3(1)(f)).

He then held that the Rochons were not in a position to make the arrangements they did with the developer for the installation of the satellite dish. I apply Mr. Justice Finlayson's reasoning to the case at bar. As he stated at p. 553:

I do not believe that the declarant can unilaterally change the declaration, cause the corporation to change it, or excuse individual unit owners from compliance therewith.

This reasoning was adopted by Herold, J. in Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 776 v. Gifford (1990), 6 R.P.R (2d) 217 (Ont. Dist. Ct.)

[para18] The Marafiotis take the position that until such time as the corporation is created, Section 38 of the Act is of no force and effect nor is it retroactive in nature. Therefore, they say, any alteration or addition to the common elements prior to the creation of the corporation is wholly within the discretion of the Declarant. Surely this reasoning is flawed.

[para19] Section 7 of the Act reads in part:

7.(1) The owners are tenants in common of the common elements.

(2) An undivided interest in the common elements is appurtenant to each unit.

(12) For the purpose of determining liability resulting from breach of the duties of an occupier of land, the corporation shall be deemed to be the occupier of the common elements and the owners shall be deemed not to be occupiers of the common elements.

If the owners are tenants in common of the common elements of the townhouse, including the exterior walls, any change such as the adding of a deck, the extension of a fence which is attached to the exterior wall, affects all unit owners. Applying the principles in Rochon, the Declarant, at law, can make no private arrangements to in any way interfere with this common ownership before or after registration. In York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newry Holdings Ltd. [1981] 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280, the Court considered the question of the Developer's right to deal with the common elements of the condominium prior to registration. It held at p. 288 that the developer could not, either before or after the registration of the declaration, deal with any part of the common elements so as to defeat the unit purchasers' equitable interests in them. Camrost, in agreeing to the construction of the deck, the extension of the fence and the addition of the sliding doors out to the deck, did just that. It interfered with the other owners' equitable rights which crystallized into legal rights when registration took place.

[para20] The Marafiotis further argue that the addition of the deck was a "minor modification" which would not require the declarant to deliver a new and amended disclosure statement pursuant to section 52 of the Act. They rely on Abdool v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. (1993), 10 O.R. (3d) 120 (C.A.) for the proposition that this was not a material amendment and concluded that Rochon must be read in light of Abdool.

[para21] In my view, the ratio in Rochon has not been misused by our Courts, as was argued by Counsel for the Marafiotis. When one carefully examines the wording of the Act with respect to the use of the common elements, and combines this with the provisions of the By-Laws, Rochon clearly applies. Abdool is a disclosure statement case.

[para22] Given the seemingly six year delay in the corporation bringing this Application, is it now estopped from enforcing its rights? The estoppel argument, as set out in The Canadian Encyclopedic Digest, Volume 10, Title 56, Section 51, Pg. 64 reads:

Whenever an argument against relief that otherwise would be just is founded upon mere delay (that delay not amounting to a bar by the Statute of Limitations), the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are the length of the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy.

The effect of delay or laches is set out in Farrell v. Manchester (1908), 40 S.C.R. 339 (S.C.C.). There is no doubt that at first blush, the six year delay seems like an inordinate length of time to wait to bring the matter to Court. On the other hand, in my review of the facts and as I have set them out in these Reasons, it is clear that the protests began immediately upon the construction beginning. Attempts were made to reach some agreement. These were unsuccessful. By-Laws were drafted and were not passed. The Marafiotis themselves threatened legal action. Finally, the Board took the position that it would wait for the outcome of the litigation with City of Toronto. It did so but in the meantime, put the Marafiotis on notice that legal action was being contemplated. The delay was therefore perfectly explainable.

[para23] What then was the nature of the acts done during the Interval? The Marafiotis take the position that the Board did nothing to help them when they were sued by the City for their failure to obtain a building permit. There were no promises or assurances given which were intended to affect the legal relation between the parties. On those facts alone, the case at bar can be distinguished from those cases where such promises or assurances were given. See: John Burrows Limited v. Subsurface Survey's Limited [1968] S.C.R. 607.

[para24] Do the Marafiotis have a defence based on the doctrine of laches? Would it be an injustice to allow MTCC 775 the relief it is now requesting? Mere passage of time does not constitute laches. The equitable defence of laches is in the discretion of the Court. See: Canada Trust Co. v. Lloyd, [1968] 66 D.L.R. (2d) 722, and Egnatios v. Leon Estate [1990] D.L.R. (4th) 137. In Egnatios, supra, Sutherland J. at p. 160 quotes Waters on the Law of Trusts in Canada, 2nd ed. (Carswell, 1984) at para. 1024 in speaking of the doctrine of laches:

It is also closely related to the doctrine of acquiescence. Indeed, it is more likely that what the courts are really concerned with is implied acquiescence rather (than) delay itself. This is particularly true today when limitation statutes expressly apply to so many actions brought in equity.

There is nothing in the evidence presented to me which would lead me to believe that there was acquiescence on the part of the Board. Admittedly, they waited almost three years while the action and the appeal with the City of Toronto reached its conclusion. Even as late as July, 1990, the Board told the Marafiotis that it would do for them what it did for the owner of townhouse No. 30, that is, pay $1,000.00 towards the cost of the removal of the deck. In addition, there was correspondence between the Board's solicitors and the Marafiotis in 1990. The Board wrote to Dr. Marafioti on February 12, 1991 and told him that the Board had decided not to approve his suggestion that the deck be relocated. Dr. Marafioti wrote back to the Board on May 12, 1991 and told them he intended to sell his two other townhouses, keep No. 29 and rent it out as a "group home". The issue of the deck was by no means a dead issue. Acquiescence therefore does not apply nor does the doctrine of laches.

4. Conclusion

[para25] The Marafiotis' Motion to amend the Notice of Application is granted but their Application for injunctive relief is dismissed for the Reasons I have outlined.

[para26] There shall be a mandatory Order that the Marafiotis remove the deck from townhouse No. 29 and remove that portion of the fence which is now off-standard. The off-standard sliding doors may remain if the Marafiotis cover at least the lower half with wrought iron grill work which will allow them to be opened to the fresh air but meet whatever safety standards are required by the City. Such work shall be done within 90 days of the date of this Order.

[para27] Counsel may speak to me with respect to Costs.

Peel Condominium Corporation No. 417, Applicant, and Tedley Homes Ltd., Sheldon Libfeld, Jay Libfeld and Mark Libfeld, Respondents

Action No. RE2292/93

Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario B. Wright J. Heard: May 14, 1993. Judgment: June 24, 1993.

Mark H. Arnold and J. Robert Gardiner, for the Applicant. Thomas J. Gorsky, for the Respondents.

[para1] B. WRIGHT J.:-- Tedley Homes Ltd. is a developer and declarant who built a two-tower condominium project. Purchasers of units received from Tedley an amended disclosure statement which stated, "It shall be the duty and obligation of the Condominium to enter into and be bound by the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement with the Declarant ...". The agreement requires Peel Condominium to purchase from Tedley six units comprising two superintendent suites and four guest suites.

[para2] Peel Condominium seeks a declaration declaring the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement null and void and declaring the six units to be common elements. Peel cites two main reasons for declaring the agreement null and void: (1) the Declaration allocates 0% of common interest and proportion of contribution to the common expenses resulting in Tedley having no ownership of the common interest; therefore, pursuant to s.7(5) of the Condominium Act, the agreement is null and void because there is a separation of the ownership of a unit from the ownership of the common interest; and (2) the Tedley directors who were also the first directors of the Peel Condominium Corporation failed to disclose their interest in the Agreement as required by s.17 of the Condominium Act. The Agreement

[para3] The Conveyance and Purchase Agreement is set out in the Declaration:

ARTICLE 8 - DUTIES OF THE CORPORATION

Section 8.01 - Duties

The duties of the Corporation shall include, but shall not be limited to enter into and be bound by an agreement (the "Conveyance and Purchase Agreement") with the Declarant, their respective successors and assigns with respect to the conveyance by the Declarant to the Corporation and the purchase by the Corporation of units 6 and 8, level 1 and the Guest Units (which units 6 and 8, level 1 and Guest Units are in this Section 8.01 and in Schedule "E" called the "Purchased Property"), upon the following terms and conditions: (a) purchase price to be paid by the Corporation for units 6 and 8, level 1 is to be THREE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND ($320,000.00) DOLLARS and for the Guest Units is to be ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY THOUSAND ($160,000.00) DOLLARS, for a total of FOUR HUNDRED AND EIGHTY THOUSAND ($480,000.00) DOLLARS:

(b) there shall be no initial deposit paid by the Corporation to the Declarant and all unpaid purchase monies shall bear interest at the rate of ten per cent (10%) per annum, calculated semi-annually not in advance, commencing one (1) month after registration of the Corporation to be repaid in blended monthly instalments of principal and interest over a term of twenty (20) years and amortized over a period of twenty (20) years;

(c) title to the Purchased Property shall remain in the Declarant and shall only be transferred to the Corporation upon the payment in full of the purchase price and accrued interest thereon;

(d) all payments to be made to the Declarant shall be made by the Corporation from the monies collected on account of common expenses or otherwise and the Corporation agrees to be bound by same;

(e) until such time as the full purchase price is paid, the Corporation shall be given a revocable licence to use the Purchased Property upon those terms and conditions designated by the Declarant relating to use and occupancy; (f) the Corporation shall at all times after registration of the Corporation be responsible for and pay all common expenses and other payments including realty taxes relating to the Purchased Property;

(g) where there is any default in payment by the Corporation to the Declarant of any unpaid purchase price, or accrued interest thereon, the Declarant shall give written notice to the Corporation of such default, then if such default is not cured within five (5) days of such written notice being given, the Declarant shall have the immediate right to terminate the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement and to take possession of the Purchased Property and to remove all persons and things therefrom and otherwise the Declarant shall have all rights and remedies available to it at law or in equity; and

(h) otherwise on terms and conditions as set out in the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement to be entered into between the Declarant and the Corporation.

Section 7(5), Separation of Ownership

[para4] The applicable sections of the Condominium Act are:

3.--(1) A declaration shall not be registered ... unless it contains,

(c) a statement, expressed in percentages, of the proportions of the common interests; (d) a statement, expressed in percentages allocated to the units, of the proportions in which the owners are to contribute to the common expenses;

...

(5) Where any provision in a declaration or by-law is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail and the declaration or by-law is deemed to be amended accordingly.

...

(8) The corporation, on at least seven days notice to every owner and mortgagee, or an owner, on at least seven days notice to the corporation and every other owner and mortgagee, may apply to a judge of the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order amending the declaration or description and the judge, if he or she is satisfied that an amendment is necessary or desirable to correct an error or inconsistency in the declaration or description arising out of the carrying out of the intent and purpose of the declaration or description, may make the order.

7.--(1) The owners are tenants in common of the common elements.

(2) An undivided interest in the common elements is appurtenant to each unit.

(3) The proportions of the common interests are those expressed in the declaration. (5) The ownership of a unit shall not be separated from the ownership of the common interest, and any instrument that purports to separate the ownership of a unit from a common interest is void.

[para6] However, in this case, the developer made his intentions clear to the purchasers, by advising them by an amended disclosure statement, that the superintendent's units and guest units were not included in their purchase agreements as part of the common elements.

[para7] But, it is a violation of the spirit and intent of the Act to allocate 0% of common interest and common expenses to ownership of a unit. An owner of a unit has a common interest in the common elements and cannot escape the obligation as an owner of a unit to pay the appropriate percentage of common expenses.

[para8] In this case, the instrument which has purported to separate the ownership of a unit from the ownership of the common interest is not the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement but the Declaration. The Declaration should not be declared void pursuant to s.7(5) but should be amended pursuant to s.3(5) and (8). I find that Peel Condominium has complied with the notice requirements of s.3(8) in order to invoke that remedy. There will be an order amending Schedule "D" of the Declaration to provide the appropriate percentage interest and proportion of contribution to the common expenses to all of the units including the six units in dispute in this application.

Section 17(1) - Disclosure of Interest

Every director of a corporation who has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any contract or transaction to which the corporation is or is to be a party, other than a contract or transaction in which the director's interest is limited solely to his or her remuneration as a director, officer or employee, shall declare his or her interest in such contract or transaction at a meeting of the directors of the corporation and shall at that time disclose the nature and extent of such interest including, as to any contract or transaction involving the purchase or sale of property by or to the corporation, the cost of the property to the purchaser and the cost thereof to the seller, if acquired by the seller within five years before the date of the contract or transaction, to the extent to which such interest or information is within his or her knowledge or control, and shall not vote and shall not in respect of such contract or transaction be counted in the quorum.

[para10] Tedley admits that its directors, as directors of the Peel Condominium, did not make a formal disclosure as required by s.17(1) prior to entering into the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement. However, Tedley argues that formal disclosure was not required because full disclosure was made to all purchasers by the amended disclosure statement and the Tedley directors and the Peel Condominium directors were the same persons who had knowledge of the interests involved. Tedley also argues that the agreement should not be declared null and void because none of the purchasers of units, being aware of the transaction as set out in the amended disclosure statement, chose to rescind their purchase and sale agreements pursuant to s.52 of the Act. [para11] Leaving aside the question of the required disclosure, s.17(1) has a more onerous stipulation. Once there is an interest disclosed, the persons having the interest "...shall not vote and shall not in respect of such contract be counted in the quorum." The result: the Tedley directors who had an interest in the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement were the only directors of the Peel Condominium at the time the agreement was considered by Peel Condominium and were prohibited from voting to accept the agreement on behalf of Peel Condominium. The Agreement should not have come before Peel Condominium until after the turn-over meeting where purchasers of units and Tedley as the owner of unsold units voted for the new directors of Peel Condominium. Then, there would have been a quorum of directors of Peel Condominium without a conflict of interest to consider entering into the Agreement.

[para12] It is not the ownership of the six units or the right of Tedley to sell those units but rather the proper method for the sale to take place. Not only is the agreement void because of non-compliance with s.17(1), but the agreement is unconscionable. The unconscionability of the agreement stems mostly from its unilateral nature. How can there be a unilateral agreement? Tedley, as a declarant, has breached its fiduciary duty to act in the best interest of Peel Condominium by foisting on the directors an obligation to enter into an agreement without any opportunity for the directors, who do not have a conflict of interest, to consider the nature of the agreement or its terms. The Declarant makes a declaration which describes as the only duties of the directors, to be bound by the agreement. Such a duty hardly fits into the general concept of the duties of the directors of a condominium corporation. Directors are required to act in the best interests of all of the members of the corporation. The directors are unable to fulfil that general duty if they have no input into the agreement. The silence of the individual unit purchasers in failing to challenge the amendment to the disclosure statement cannot be taken as acquiescence of the agreement on behalf of Peel Condominium.

[para13] Even if non-compliance with s.17(1) was not sufficient to nullify the agreement, the agreement is unconscionable. The terms of the agreement are onerous. Peel Condominium has had no input into the purchase price or the financing. Title does not pass to the corporation until all payments are made at the end of the twenty-year period. In the interim, the Corporation is saddled with paying all common expenses and other payments including realty taxes on the six units. Directors of Peel Condominium without an interest in these six units should have an opportunity to consider what type of an agreement for the purchase of the six units is in the best interest of the corporation.

[para14] In the result, there will be the following orders:

(a) rescinding the Conveyance and Purchase Agreement; (b) amending the Declaration to delete Article 8; (c) amending Schedule "D" of the Declaration to allocate the proper percentage of contribution to the common expenses to all units including the six units in dispute in this application; (d) requiring Tedley to pay to Peel Condominium the applicable common expenses of the six units from the dates when they were due and owing plus applicable interest; (e) requiring Tedley to repay to Peel Condominium other payments including realty taxes already paid on behalf of the six units plus applicable interest; (f) requiring the payments by Tedley to be set-off by an amount to be agreed to between the parties for the use by Peel Condominium of the six units; (g) solicitor and client costs.

York North Condominium Corp. No. 5 v. Van Horne Clipper Properties Ltd.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE O'LEARY J. 25TH APRIL 1987.

ACTION for damages suffered in respect of the purchase of the superintendent's suite in a condominium from the developer.

Jonathan Fine, for plaintiff.

T.P. McIver, Q.C., for defendant.

O'LEARY J. (orally):-- The plaintiff, York North Condominium Corporation No. 5, was constituted by registration by the defendant of a declaration and description under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, on December 6, 1979. This action is for, amongst other claims, the recovery of the damages the plaintiff alleges it suffered by having to buy the superintendent's suite from the defendant when it in fact constituted part of the common elements that belong to it, by virtue of the dealings between the defendant and the purchasers of the individual units in the condominium corporation.

I make the following findings of fact: Intending to eventually create the condominium corporation, the defendant began selling units in its 107-unit building in December of 1978. The defendant's agent did not represent to prospective purchasers that the unit reserved as the living quarters for the superintendent would form part of the common elements. The purchasers were told, however, that the condominium would have a full-time live-in superintendent.

All purchasers were given, before they agreed to buy a unit, a budget statement for the year immediately following registration. That budget reads in part: "Office and General Expenses. Rental of superintendent's suite, $350 per month, $4,200" (for those purchasers who bought prior to July 1, 1979, the budget statement read, rental of superintendent's suite, $250; per month, $3,000): "Realty Taxes -- superintendent's apartment, $600" ($500 in the statement prior to July 1, 1979).

All purchasers retained solicitors to represent them in the transactions they entered into with the defendant. Only one solicitor questioned whether the superintendent's unit was to be part of the common elements, claiming his client understood it was to be such, and when told it was not part of the common elements, made no more of the issue and closed the transaction.

When more than one-half of the units in the building had been sold, a meeting of the owners of those units was called and on February 29, 1980, they elected a new board of directors for the condominium corporation. The new board of directors held its first meeting on March 5, 1980. At that meeting the defendant's solicitor explained that the superintendent's apartment was owned by the defendant, Van Horne, to whom monthly rental was paid from the common expense account and that the taxes for that unit were also paid out of the common expense account. In answer to an inquiry in that regard, the solicitor told the board the unit could be purchased from Van Horne. No one expressed surprise or concern that Van Horne owned the unit and that the condominium was paying rent for it and the taxes on it.

At the general meeting of the owners of the individual units held on September 23, 1980, the board of directors was authorized to negotiate with the defendant for the purchase of the superintendent's unit. Eighty-seven voted in favour of this being done, none opposed it.

On January 21, 1981, the plaintiff agreed to buy the unit from the defendant for $40,000 with $5,000 to be paid in cash and the defendant to take back a mortgage for $35,000. The transaction was completed on January 30, 1981, and a transfer of title was registered on that date. Prior to the transfer of title, the plaintiff made the rental payments and paid the taxes for the unit I have already mentioned. After the transfer of title, the plaintiff paid the defendant the monthly payments in the amount of $414 each, called for in the mortgage until this action was commenced in September, 1984.

It is the position of the plaintiff that the representation by the defendant that the condominium would have a full-time, live-in superintendent constituted a representation to the purchasers of the units that the unit to be occupied by the superintendent would be part of the common elements or was to be an asset of the condominium corporation.

There is no requirement in the Condominium Act, nor is there any evidence before me that through practice or custom the superintendent's residence form part of the common elements or is an asset of the condominium corporation. If any purchaser drew such inference from the representation I have referred to, then he was not justified in doing so. Indeed, if any such inference was drawn, it does not seem to have been very firmly held for no objection was taken to the unit being purchased from the defendant.

The plaintiff further takes the position that there was an obligation on the defendant to make clear to the purchasers whether the superintendent's unit was part of the common elements, that the defendant failed to do so and, therefore, the unit must be considered part of the common elements.

In my view, nothing transpired in this case to place on the defendant such an obligation, but even if such an obligation did exist, the defendant did make it plain that the unit was not part of the common elements. It is inconceivable to me that a purchaser, handed a budget statement showing that the condominium corporation would be paying $350 a month rent for the superintendent's suite, could think that somehow that unit was to be owned by the condominium corporation.

It is also the position of the plaintiff that by virtue of the written agreement between the defendant and the purchasers of the various units, which agreement includes the agreement of purchase and sale and various documents which by the Condominium Act or by the wording of the agreement of purchase and sale, form part of that agreement, the unit in question was part of the common elements.

It is said that there were ambiguities in portions of the various documents just referred to, that would leave the purchasers confused as to who was to own the unit. In fact, no purchaser testified that he was led to believe because of what was in those documents that the unit was to be part of the common elements.

Counsel for the plaintiff has gone through various clauses in the agreement of purchase and sale, the declaration and other documents in an attempt to show that because of ambiguity or inconsistencies, it is ambiguous as to whether the parties intended the unit to be part of the common elements and that being the case, the defendant having drawn the documents, the documents must be interpreted to mean that the unit is a common element. I do not intend to review that argument in detail because I do not find that on reading the documents together there is any ambiguity. Rather, as stated, I am of the view that the provisions in the budget I have mentioned made it clear that the unit was to be rented by the condominium corporation and so it was not owned by it. I will, however, refer to one provision in the documents that the plaintiff relies on as indicating the unit was a common element. The plaintiff says that the provision I am about to deal with is not just an ambiguity, but an outright indication that the unit is part of the common elements. The provision I deal with specifically is found in art. 3, p. 3 of the declaration, and reads as follows:

Restrictive Access

Without the consent in writing of the Board, no owner shall have any right of access to those parts of the common elements used from time to time as a dwelling for any building superintendent.

While I am mindful that this clause seems to have been looked on differently by the Court of Appeal, in my view it does not literally say that the dwelling occupied by the superintendent is part of the common elements. Rather, if read literally, it says that access is restricted to any portion of the common elements so used. In my view, the words do not make the superintendent's dwelling part of the common elements, but restricts access to that dwelling if it is part of the common elements. In any event, in light of the clear statement in the budget statement that the condominium corporation would be paying rent for the unit, the allegedly ambiguous statements in the documents could not have confused the purchasers. They knew or ought to have known the unit belonged to the defendant.

The plaintiff further states that because a monitoring panel was located by the defendant in the superintendent's unit, then that unit became more than a living unit, rather it became a unit to be used to monitor the proper functioning of certain equipment and thus by its very nature is part of the common elements and not simply a living unit.

The panel in question is only approximately eight ins. by twelve ins. in size. It is set into the wall and so is flush with the wall, in the hallway of the unit occupied by the superintendent and is located just inside the door to that unit. The panel is not visible from the living-room or any other portion of that unit except the small hallway just inside the door. To look at it, the superintendent would have to walk into the hallway, almost to the door, because the panel is otherwise hidden from view by the hallway clothes closet without much change. So far as convenience of observation is concerned, it could have been located on the wall of the hallway outside and opposite the door of the superintendent's unit. If located there, the superintendent, if making a special point of viewing the panel, would only have to open the door to view it.

There is no suggestion that the superintendent was to keep the panel under more or less constant view. Certainly she was not expected to disrupt her sleep to watch it.

The panel is comprised of a number of small half-inch-in- diameter lights, that will show red while a particular piece of equipment is in operation or in some cases, if a piece of equipment has malfunctioned. It alerts one looking at it, when and if, certain problems arise with equipment in the building. The panel also contains the switches that turn on and off the heat elements located in the cement ramp and in the two outside cement stairs leading to the garage.

The panel could be moved and located on some other wall for about $200.

While undoubtedly the panel is part of the common elements, it does not follow in my view that because it was located in the unit reserved by the defendant for the superintendent that unit thereby became part of the common elements. The panel was located there because it was the most appropriate place to put it. It did not detract from the use of the unit as living quarters. It was out of reach of any who might want to meddle with it and it was slightly more convenient in that location because the superintendent could inspect it without opening the door.

I cannot see, however, why because some pieces of common element equipment are located inside the unit reserved for use by the superintendent that such unit must be considered part of the common elements. If the plaintiff did not want the panel to remain there after the new board of directors was chosen on March 5, 1980, it could have asked the defendant to move it. In fact, of course, that was not done.

The defendant may well have bargained that the unit would be retained by it and its successors as living quarters for the superintendent and would not be sold by it or leased by it to anyone but the condominium corporation as long as the corporation wanted it for the superintendent's living quarters. But that does not mean that the unit thereby lost its essential nature as a dwelling unit and became part of the common elements.

The plaintiff relies on Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 649, 67 D.L.R. (3d) 199, and York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (2d) 458, as support for its contention the court ought to find that the unit was part of the common elements or was an asset of the condominium corporation at all times. In neither of those cases did the declarant give budget statements to the purchasers showing that the condominium corporation would be paying rent for the unit. In my view, had such been done those cases would have been decided differently.

I conclude, therefore, that the unit in question was never part of the common elements nor an asset of the condominium corporation, until the corporation purchased the unit from the defendant. The plaintiff has suffered no damages and is not entitled to any remedy.

The action is therefore dismissed.

[Argument as to costs.]

HIS LORDSHIP: My endorsement reads: "For reasons given the action is dismissed and the defendant is to have judgment on the counterclaim for the amount owing on the mortgage, together with the costs of the action and counterclaim, one counsel fee only, on a solicitor-client basis".

Action dismissed.

York North Condominium Corp. No. 5 v. Van Horne Clipper Properties Ltd.

60 O.R. (2d) 468

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE O'LEARY J. 25TH APRIL 1987.

ACTION for damages suffered in respect of the purchase of the superintendent's suite in a condominium from the developer.

Jonathan Fine, for plaintiff.

T.P. McIver, Q.C., for defendant.

O'LEARY J. (orally):-- The plaintiff, York North Condominium Corporation No. 5, was constituted by registration by the defendant of a declaration and description under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, on December 6, 1979. This action is for, amongst other claims, the recovery of the damages the plaintiff alleges it suffered by having to buy the superintendent's suite from the defendant when it in fact constituted part of the common elements that belong to it, by virtue of the dealings between the defendant and the purchasers of the individual units in the condominium corporation.

The purchasers were told, however, that the condominium would have a full-time live-in superintendent.

All purchasers were given, before they agreed to buy a unit, a budget statement for the year immediately following registration. That budget reads in part: "Office and General Expenses. Rental of superintendent's suite, $350 per month, $4,200" (for those purchasers who bought prior to July 1, 1979, the budget statement read, rental of superintendent's suite, $250; per month, $3,000): "Realty Taxes -- superintendent's apartment, $600" ($500 in the statement prior to July 1, 1979).

All purchasers retained solicitors to represent them in the transactions they entered into with the defendant. Only one solicitor questioned whether the superintendent's unit was to be part of the common elements, claiming his client understood it was to be such, and when told it was not part of the common elements, made no more of the issue and closed the transaction.

When more than one-half of the units in the building had been sold, a meeting of the owners of those units was called and on February 29, 1980, they elected a new board of directors for the condominium corporation. The new board of directors held its first meeting on March 5, 1980. At that meeting the defendant's solicitor explained that the superintendent's apartment was owned by the defendant, Van Horne, to whom monthly rental was paid from the common expense account and that the taxes for that unit were also paid out of the common expense account. In answer to an inquiry in that regard, the solicitor told the board the unit could be purchased from Van Horne. No one expressed surprise or concern that Van Horne owned the unit and that the condominium was paying rent for it and the taxes on it.

At the general meeting of the owners of the individual units held on September 23, 1980, the board of directors was authorized to negotiate with the defendant for the purchase of the superintendent's unit. Eighty-seven voted in favour of this being done, none opposed it.

On January 21, 1981, the plaintiff agreed to buy the unit from the defendant for $40,000 with $5,000 to be paid in cash and the defendant to take back a mortgage for $35,000. The transaction was completed on January 30, 1981, and a transfer of title was registered on that date. Prior to the transfer of title, the plaintiff made the rental payments and paid the taxes for the unit I have already mentioned. After the transfer of title, the plaintiff paid the defendant the monthly payments in the amount of $414 each, called for in the mortgage until this action was commenced in September, 1984.

It is the position of the plaintiff that the representation by the defendant that the condominium would have a full-time, live-in superintendent constituted a representation to the purchasers of the units that the unit to be occupied by the superintendent would be part of the common elements or was to be an asset of the condominium corporation.

There is no requirement in the Condominium Act, nor is there any evidence before me that through practice or custom the superintendent's residence form part of the common elements or is an asset of the condominium corporation. If any purchaser drew such inference from the representation I have referred to, then he was not justified in doing so. Indeed, if any such inference was drawn, it does not seem to have been very firmly held for no objection was taken to the unit being purchased from the defendant.

The plaintiff further takes the position that there was an obligation on the defendant to make clear to the purchasers whether the superintendent's unit was part of the common elements, that the defendant failed to do so and, therefore, the unit must be considered part of the common elements.

In my view, nothing transpired in this case to place on the defendant such an obligation, but even if such an obligation did exist, the defendant did make it plain that the unit was not part of the common elements. It is inconceivable to me that a purchaser, handed a budget statement showing that the condominium corporation would be paying $350 a month rent for the superintendent's suite, could think that somehow that unit was to be owned by the condominium corporation.

It is also the position of the plaintiff that by virtue of the written agreement between the defendant and the purchasers of the various units, which agreement includes the agreement of purchase and sale and various documents which by the Condominium Act or by the wording of the agreement of purchase and sale, form part of that agreement, the unit in question was part of the common elements.

It is said that there were ambiguities in portions of the various documents just referred to, that would leave the purchasers confused as to who was to own the unit. In fact, no purchaser testified that he was led to believe because of what was in those documents that the unit was to be part of the common elements.

Counsel for the plaintiff has gone through various clauses in the agreement of purchase and sale, the declaration and other documents in an attempt to show that because of ambiguity or inconsistencies, it is ambiguous as to whether the parties intended the unit to be part of the common elements and that being the case, the defendant having drawn the documents, the documents must be interpreted to mean that the unit is a common element. I do not intend to review that argument in detail because I do not find that on reading the documents together there is any ambiguity. Rather, as stated, I am of the view that the provisions in the budget I have mentioned made it clear that the unit was to be rented by the condominium corporation and so it was not owned by it. I will, however, refer to one provision in the documents that the plaintiff relies on as indicating the unit was a common element. The plaintiff says that the provision I am about to deal with is not just an ambiguity, but an outright indication that the unit is part of the common elements. The provision I deal with specifically is found in art. 3, p. 3 of the declaration, and reads as follows:

Restrictive Access

Without the consent in writing of the Board, no owner shall have any right of access to those parts of the common elements used from time to time as a dwelling for any building superintendent.

While I am mindful that this clause seems to have been looked on differently by the Court of Appeal, in my view it does not literally say that the dwelling occupied by the superintendent is part of the common elements. Rather, if read literally, it says that access is restricted to any portion of the common elements so used. In my view, the words do not make the superintendent's dwelling part of the common elements, but restricts access to that dwelling if it is part of the common elements. In any event, in light of the clear statement in the budget statement that the condominium corporation would be paying rent for the unit, the allegedly ambiguous statements in the documents could not have confused the purchasers. They knew or ought to have known the unit belonged to the defendant.

The plaintiff further states that because a monitoring panel was located by the defendant in the superintendent's unit, then that unit became more than a living unit, rather it became a unit to be used to monitor the proper functioning of certain equipment and thus by its very nature is part of the common elements and not simply a living unit.

The panel in question is only approximately eight ins. by twelve ins. in size. It is set into the wall and so is flush with the wall, in the hallway of the unit occupied by the superintendent and is located just inside the door to that unit. The panel is not visible from the living-room or any other portion of that unit except the small hallway just inside the door. To look at it, the superintendent would have to walk into the hallway, almost to the door, because the panel is otherwise hidden from view by the hallway clothes closet without much change. So far as convenience of observation is concerned, it could have been located on the wall of the hallway outside and opposite the door of the superintendent's unit. If located there, the superintendent, if making a special point of viewing the panel, would only have to open the door to view it.

There is no suggestion that the superintendent was to keep the panel under more or less constant view. Certainly she was not expected to disrupt her sleep to watch it.

The panel is comprised of a number of small half-inch-in- diameter lights, that will show red while a particular piece of equipment is in operation or in some cases, if a piece of equipment has malfunctioned. It alerts one looking at it, when and if, certain problems arise with equipment in the building. The panel also contains the switches that turn on and off the heat elements located in the cement ramp and in the two outside cement stairs leading to the garage.

The panel could be moved and located on some other wall for about $200.

While undoubtedly the panel is part of the common elements, it does not follow in my view that because it was located in the unit reserved by the defendant for the superintendent that unit thereby became part of the common elements. The panel was located there because it was the most appropriate place to put it. It did not detract from the use of the unit as living quarters. It was out of reach of any who might want to meddle with it and it was slightly more convenient in that location because the superintendent could inspect it without opening the door.

I cannot see, however, why because some pieces of common element equipment are located inside the unit reserved for use by the superintendent that such unit must be considered part of the common elements. If the plaintiff did not want the panel to remain there after the new board of directors was chosen on March 5, 1980, it could have asked the defendant to move it. In fact, of course, that was not done.

The defendant may well have bargained that the unit would be retained by it and its successors as living quarters for the superintendent and would not be sold by it or leased by it to anyone but the condominium corporation as long as the corporation wanted it for the superintendent's living quarters. But that does not mean that the unit thereby lost its essential nature as a dwelling unit and became part of the common elements.

The plaintiff relies on Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Joe Macciocchi & Sons Ltd. (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 649, 67 D.L.R. (3d) 199, and York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (2d) 458, as support for its contention the court ought to find that the unit was part of the common elements or was an asset of the condominium corporation at all times. In neither of those cases did the declarant give budget statements to the purchasers showing that the condominium corporation would be paying rent for the unit. In my view, had such been done those cases would have been decided differently.

I conclude, therefore, that the unit in question was never part of the common elements nor an asset of the condominium corporation, until the corporation purchased the unit from the defendant. The plaintiff has suffered no damages and is not entitled to any remedy.

The action is therefore dismissed.

[Argument as to costs.]

HIS LORDSHIP: My endorsement reads: "For reasons given the action is dismissed and the defendant is to have judgment on the counterclaim for the amount owing on the mortgage, together with the costs of the action and counterclaim, one counsel fee only, on a solicitor-client basis".

Action dismissed.

York Condominium Corp. No. 216 v. Borsodi et al.

42 O.R. (2d) 99 148 D.L.R. (3d) 290

ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF YORK ALLEN CO. CT. J. 6TH APRIL 1983.

ACTION for a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to comply with the Condominium Act and the declaration of the plaintiff corporation.

Michael A. Spears, for plaintiff.

Istvan Borsodi and Vasiliki Borsodi, defendants, appearing in person.

ALLEN CO. CT. J.:-- Originally the plaintiff, as applicant, had initiated proceedings by way of notice of motion seeking relief under the Condominium Act. Subsequently a writ of summons was issued and, on consent, I ordered that the material filed in relation to the notice of motion be part of the pleadings and proceedings in the action. Thus, the trial proceeded upon the basis of the affidavits filed and viva voce testimony.

There was no dispute as to the factual background of the proceedings. The premises owned and occupied by the defendants form one unit of the 710 units in a large complex composed of three high-rise buildings on about 12 acres of land. The complex forms the condominium project legally described as York Condominium Plan No. 216 and hereinafter called the "Condominium".

The unit owned by the defendants is located in the building known as the North Tower which contains 231 units on 17 storeys. I shall call that unit the "Unit" and that building the "North Tower".

The plaintiff was created on or about August 1, 1975, by the registration of a declaration under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended. Hereafter I shall call that declaration the "Declaration". The relevant legislation is the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. For case of reference I shall use the expression "the Act" to refer to either statute.

In August, 1975, the Act, in s. 3(2)(c) provided that:

3(2) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection 1, a declaration may contain,

(c) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

The Act now contains, in s. 3(3)(b), a virtually identical provision in the following form:

3(3) In addition to the matters mentioned in subsection (1), and in any other section in this Act, a declaration may contain,

(b) provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units and common elements;

The Declaration contains the following provisions solely in respect of the units in the North Tower:

18(a) To the intent that the owners of the units set out below shall be permitted to make use of such units, being the north building of the condominium, and the common elements, without unreasonable interference in their use and enjoyment thereof because of noise and disturbance caused by children, and to the intent that the said building and the said units shall be for the use of adults only, no owner or occupant of such units shall use them or permit them to be used or shall sell or permit them to be sold except for residential purposes for adults and persons 14 years of age and older, and no children under the age of 14 years shall be permitted by the owners and occupants of the said units to occupy or reside in the said units; provided, however, that this paragraph shall not be construed so as to prevent reasonable visits (including overnight visits) by relatives, friends, and their children under the age of 14 years. The said units are units 1 to 8 inclusive on level 1, units 1 to 13 inclusive on level 2, units 1 to 14 inclusive on levels 3 to 17 inclusive.

(b) In the event that any unit owner or occupant is in breach of the provisions of this paragraph, the Board of Directors shall forthwith commence legal proceedings against such person and shall apply for an order directing compliance with this section and an injunction preventing such person from continuing the offence, all as provided for in Section 23 of the Condominium Act as amended, and if any such person continues such default in violation of any order or injunction which may be obtained, the Board of Directors shall take such other steps as they may deem appropriate to obtain compliance.

(c) Any costs, charges or expenses of whatsoever kind incurred in enforcing the provisions of this paragraph shall be the joint and several responsibility of the person committing the breach and of the registered unit owner who has committed the breach or permitted the commission of the breach or permitted the occupancy of the unit by the person committing the breach (including legal fees as between a solicitor and his own client). (d) The subparagraphs of this paragraph shall be deemed to be severable from each other.

In the programme to sell units in the Condominium, the North Tower was described as an "adults only" building. One article published in one newspaper in January, 1975, contained the following short paragraphs:

The East (17-storey) and South (18-storey) towers in the project are for families while the North (17-storey) tower is for adults only. Thirty-two two-bedroom suites in the adult tower have sunken living rooms.

Both family buildings have adjacent fenced and well-designed children's play areas while a day care centre is located in the East Tower for the children of working parents.

The units in the North Tower have one or two bedrooms, whereas the units in the other two towers, designed for families, have up to three bedrooms.

The male defendant, in his testimony, referred to the sunken living-room as a particularly desirable feature of the Unit. That feature is not available in the other two towers.

The defendants purchased the Unit and the conveyance thereof to them was registered on July 29, 1976.

In or about the fall of 1980, the property managers of the Condominium became aware of violations of the Declaration in that children under the age of 14 years were residing in 14 units in the North Tower. Those property managers began a programme designed to terminate the violations by providing an opportunity to the occupants of those units to make "alternate arrangements" on or before June 30, 1981. That programme was set forth in a letter dated December 12, 1980, written by the plaintiff's solicitors and sent to the owners of the 14 units concerned. Occupants of some of those units did not make "alternate arrangements" by June 30, 1981, and the time for compliance was extended to October 1, 1981, by a letter delivered in August, 1981.

The requirements of the property managers were met by the occupants of all of the units save and except the Unit and two others. As a result the property managers of the Condominium decided to proceed against the defendants and, dependent upon the result of such proceedings, then to proceed against the two other units. However, by the time of this trial the owners of those other units had complied and the Unit was the only unit in which, to the plaintiff's knowledge, a child under 14 was resident.

With specific reference to this action, the defendants with their child, born May 9, 1978, occupy the Unit. By letter dated May 12, 1981, the defendants responded to the letter of December 12, 1980, from the plaintiff's solicitors. In that letter they described their efforts to sell the Unit and the difficulty they were encountering because of the condition of the market in residential real estate. They asked that the July 1, 1981, deadline not be "arbitrarily" enforced.

In response the plaintiff's solicitors, on May 27, 1981, asked for information and documentation about the defendants' efforts to sell the Unit. The plaintiff's solicitors received no response to their letter of May 27, 1981, and on August 11, 1981, wrote again to the defendants to advise them that occupants of other units had moved to comply with the terms of the Declaration and that the time for compliance would be extended only to October 1, 1981.

On September 4, 1981, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors to give some information about their efforts to sell the Unit. Some of the advertising in that regard contained the words "ADULT BUILDING" and "sunken living room". In a response written September 10, 1981, the plaintiff's solicitors mentioned that notwithstanding their letter of May 12, 1981, it seemed that the defendants had not listed the Unit for sale until July 10, 1981. The solicitors also expressed the plaintiff's corporate opinion that the defendants' listing price was "excessive". In the letter the solicitor restated the "deadline" of October 1, 1981.

Other sections of the Act are pertinent to my consideration of the issues in this trial. They are ss. 6(2), 12(3), 31(1) and (2) and 49(1) and (2) which are as follows:

6(2) Subject to this Act, the declaration and the by-laws, each owner is entitled to exclusive ownership and use of his unit.

12(3) The corporation has a duty to effect compliance by the owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

31(1) Each owner is bound by and shall comply with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

(2) Each owner has a right to the compliance by the other owners with this Act, the declaration, the by-laws and the rules.

49(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

An owner of another unit in the North Tower testified as to the purchase of that unit by her husband and herself in 1975. It was to be their residence in their retirement years. It was important to them that it was in an "adults only" building which hopefully would have a quiet, serene atmosphere. In making their decision to purchase their unit, she and her husband had relied upon the Declaration and the sales material advertising the North Tower as an "adults only" building. Their children were grown and away and they sought accommodation in such a building where other residents would likely be of similar age and life-style. They were aware that the other two towers had units with up to three bedrooms and had special areas or facilities for children, such as play areas and day-care facilities.

She and her husband wish the building to remain an "adults only" building, the feature which primarily motivated their selection. Now retired they are unable to afford to move to achieve the conditions they sought and still desire.

An owner of yet another unit in the North Tower testified to similar effect. For about a year she had noticed children playing in the halls of the North Tower and creating noise. She could not identify them as residents of units in the North Tower, but was fearful that lack of enforcement of the Declaration would lead to further disturbance of her enjoyment of her property.

Another owner gave similar testimony. She was the president of the plaintiff. She said that about 60% to 70% of the owners of units in the North Tower were retired persons over the age of 60. She said the board of directors of the plaintiff was often in receipt of written or oral complaints from the owners of units in the North Tower. Some complaints were in relation to children residing in that tower. Those who complained sought enforcement of the Declaration. She had bought her unit in 1975 and had complied with the Declaration in declining to have a young granddaughter reside with her, notwithstanding her own wish and that of the grandchild and her mother that the child live with her in the North Tower. The plaintiff's property manager testified as to complaints by owners of units in the North Tower that the Declaration was not enforced. He said the plaintiff had succeeded in obtaining compliance by all owners save and except the defendants. He said the plaintiff would continue its policy of enforcement of the Declaration.

My understanding of the defendants' position is that they too purchased a unit in the North Tower because of the presence of a sunken living-room in the unit and an indoor recreation area, features not to be found in the other towers. Of the three towers in the complex, the North Tower is closest to public transportation. The defendants' position seems to be that they want to comply with the plaintiff's requirements, but require more time and they feel that the plaintiff is acting rather arbitrarily.

At the outset I reject the suggestion of unduly arbitrary action by the plaintiff. It has a statutory duty to seek to enforce the provisions of the Declaration and is doing so. Its efforts have resulted in the owners of 13 other units moving from the North Tower or otherwise complying with the Declaration. The defendants' unit is the only unit in respect of which the plaintiff has, to its knowledge at the time of trial, been unable to resolve similar problems. The defendants' child is the only child under the age of 14 years resident in a unit in the North Tower.

The defendants now have had about 27 months since the plaintiff or its solicitors or managers first wrote, on December 12, 1980, to indicate its intention to seek to enforce the Declaration. A time-limit for compliance was set and then extended, but has not yet been met although the defendants profess a desire to dispose of their unit and to move.

The defendants also submit that s. 18 of the Declaration is unenforceable.

In support of that position they rely upon s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which provides that every person is equal before and under the law without discrimination based on age or other matters. They overlook that that section, by reason of s. 32(2), shall not have effect until three years after s. 32 comes into force. That time period has not yet expired. In any event the application of s. 15 would seem to me to be limited by the provisions of s. 1 of that Charter which states that the guarantee set forth is:

... subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I note that the Human Rights Code, 1981 (Ont.), c. 53, of the Province of Ontario contains provisions expressed to ensure freedom from discrimination because of age and other matters. However, that legislation [s. 9(a)] specifically provides that in relation to those provisions "age" means "an age that is eighteen years or more". It appears therefore that the Legislative Assembly recognizes that there are situations in which persons under the age of 18 might, for desirable or legitimate purposes, be dealt with in a manner different from that applicable to older persons.

In my view that objection to the plaintiff's position must fail. Even if s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms had effect, the limitation set forth in s. 18 of the Declaration is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario recognizes 18 years as the lower limit in respect of its efforts to prevent discrimination because of age. Further the Declaration is in the nature of a private agreement among all of the owners of units in the Condominium, including the defendants, for their joint and several benefit. The owners of the other 709 units in the complex, especially, in this instance, the 230 in the North Tower, are entitled to the protection of their contractual and property rights. If those rights are not protected they perceive, with cause, that their enjoyment of their property and thus their quality of life will be adversely affected.

The defendants assert that the Declaration by the very terms of s. 18 thereof is unreasonable and inconsistent because children under the age of 14 may visit in the units in the North Tower.

In my view, that objection fails. The Declaration permits "reasonable visits (including overnight visits) by relatives, friends or their children". That is a sensible and practical provision which recognizes that "reasonable visits" are a part of usual social relationships. The presence of that provision in the Declaration does not vitiate the balance of s. 18.

In my view, the defendants' objection to the plaintiff's action is not strengthened by the absence of testimony to suggest that the defendants' child has in any way, by reason of conduct or behaviour, interfered with the rights of others. The child's very presence as a permanent resident in the defendants' unit places the defendants in a position of breach of the Declaration. And if the plaintiff did not seek to enforce the Declaration it too would be in breach of the Act.

The defendants further submit that s. 18 of the Declaration is ultra vires the plaintiff. The basis of that submission is that, while s. 3(3)(b) of the Act empowers the plaintiff to complete a declaration containing "provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units", the Declaration, by s. 18, purports to prohibit anyone under the age of 14 years from residing in the units. With all due respect, a power to create "provisions respecting the occupation and use of the units" surely includes a power to prohibit certain occupations or uses, including occupation and use by children under the age of 14 years. That the prohibition relates to all children under 14 years and not just those whose conduct has interfered with the enjoyment of the occupancy of other units does not, in my view, constitute a situation of arbitrary or improper discrimination so as to make s. 18 of the Declaration unenforceable in the present instance.

I believe my conclusion in that regard is in keeping with the judgment of my brother, Misener Co. Ct. J. in Re Peel Condominium Corp. No. 78 and Harthen et al. (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 225, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 267.

The defendants submitted that activities other than those of young children might be more disruptive of the serenity and quiet sought by the witnesses. That may be so, but it does not affect this proceeding. Presumably other provisions of the Declaration might be invoked to prevent such other activities.

The defendants submitted that enforcement of s. 18 of the Declaration would be contrary to public policy. In the light of the Ontario legislation I do not accept that submission.

In my view, the plaintiff in this action is simply fulfilling the obligation cast upon it by the Act to enforce the Declaration for the benefit of the owners of all of the units in the Condominium. That is a desirable and legitimate purpose.

Counsel for the plaintiff referred me to the decisions in a number of cases in the United States of America, there apparently being no cases directly on point in Ontario. I found some of the comments of the court in Hidden Harbour Estates, Inc. v. Basso et al. (1981), 393 So. 2d 637, to be helpful and persuasive. At pp. 638-9, Judge Moore of the District Court of Appeal of Florida wrote:

As we opined in Sterling Village Condominium, Inc. v. Breitenbach, 251 So. 2d 685 (Fla. 4th DCA 1971):

"Daily in this state thousands of citizens are investing millions of dollars in condominium property. Chapter 711, F.S.A. 1967, the Florida Condominium Act, and the Articles or Declarations of Condominiums provided for thereunder ought to be construed strictly to assure these investors that what the buyer sees the buyer gets. Every man may justly consider his home his castle and himself as the king thereof; nonetheless his sovereign fiat to use his property as he pleases must yield, at least in degree, where ownership is in common or cooperation with others. The benefits of condominiums living and ownership demand no less. The individual ought not be permitted to disrupt the integrity of the common scheme through his desire for change, however laudable that change might be."

Later at p. 639 Judge Moore quoted with approval the following extract from another decision [Pepe v. Whispering Sands Condominium Ass'n (1977), 351 So. 2d 755]:

"A declaration of a condominium is more than a mere contract spelling out mutual rights and obligations of the parties thereto -- it assumes some of the attributes of a covenant running with the land, circumscribing the extent and limits of the enjoyment and use of real property. Stated otherwise, it spells out the true extent of the purchased, and thus granted, use interest therein. Absent consent, or an amendment of the declaration of condominium as may be provided for in each declaration, or as may be provided by statute in the absence of such a provision, this enjoyment and use cannot be impaired or diminished."

Judge Moore went on to write as follows at pp. 639-40:

There are essentially two categories of cases in which a condominium association attempts to enforce rules of restrictive uses. The first category is that dealing with the validity of restrictions found in the declaration of condominium itself. The second category of cases involves the validity of rules promulgated by the association's board of directors or the refusal of the board of directors to allow a particular use when the board is invested with the power to grant or deny a particular use.

[1] In the first category, the restrictions are clothed with a very strong presumption of validity which arises from the fact that each individual unit owner purchases his unit knowing of and accepting the restrictions to be imposed. Such restrictions are very much in the nature of covenants running with the land and they will not be invalidated absent a showing that they are wholly arbitrary in their application, in violation of public policy, or that they abrogate some fundamental constitutional right. See, White Egret Condominium, Inc. v. Franklin, 379 So. 2d 346 (Fla. 1979). Thus, although case law has applied the word "reasonable" to determine whether such restrictions are valid, this is not the appropriate test, and to the extent that our decisions have been interpreted otherwise, we disagree. Indeed, a use restriction in a declaration of condominium may have a certain degree of unreasonableness to it, and yet withstand attack in the courts. If it were otherwise, a unit owner could not rely on the restrictions found in the declaration of condominium, since such restrictions would be in a potential condition of continuous flux.

In my view, the rationale of that judgment is of assistance in and applicable to the present proceedings.

Another decision of a court in the United States of America is of further interest and assistance. In Riley et al. v. Stoves et al. (1974), 526 P. 2d 747, the plaintiffs sought to enforce a restrictive covenant in respect of land. The covenant purported to restrict the occupation of land to occupation by "persons 21 years of age and older". The plaintiffs testified that they understood, before purchasing their lots, that the covenant effectively precluded children from living in the subdivision. They testified that they relied upon that restriction in purchasing their lots. At p. 752, Chief Judge Hathaway of the Court of Appeal of Arizona wrote:

Because the restriction in question was privately drawn, we feel it appropriate to first examine any legitimate purpose or purposes such a restriction could possibly serve. Also, we should ascertain the extent to which the restriction is a reasonable means to accomplish the private objective when considered in light of its effect upon defendants.

[11] The restriction flatly prevents children from living in the mobile home subdivision. The obvious purpose is to create a quiet, peaceful neighbourhood by eliminating noise associated with children at play or otherwise. The testimony given by the plaintiffs indicates that they prefer to live away from children, that children living in their neighbourhood tend to disturb them, and that they bought their respective lots upon the assumption that Enchanted Acres, Unit 1, would be an "adult community".

Here, the common developer subdivided a large tract of land. He obviously felt that a portion of the market for mobile home lots desired an adult community. He therefore set aside a portion of the mobile home lots in Unit One for exclusive adult living. There was no testimony as to any shortage of housing in the area or any desperate need for housing which would accommodate families with children as there was in Molino, supra [Molino v. Mayor & Council of Boro. of Glassboro (1971), 281 A. 2d 401]. We see no objection to the setting aside of a small area which would exclude children. It fulfilled a legitimate need of older buyers who sought to retire in an area undisturbed by children.

We do not think the restriction is in any way arbitrary. It effectively insures that only working or retired adults will reside on the lots. It does much to eliminate the noise and distractions caused by children. We find it reasonably related to a legitimate purpose and therefore decline to hold that its enforcement violated defendants' rights to equal protection.

The factual situation of that case can be likened to that of the present case in many ways. There, and here, older people sought an environment in which, to use the words of the Declaration, they might use and enjoy their properties "without unreasonable interference ... because of noise and disturbance caused by children, and to the intent that the said building and the said units shall be for the use of adults only". There, as here, an area from which children would be excluded was set aside elsewhere in the overall development.

In the result the plaintiff shall have judgment for the relief it sought, namely, a mandatory injunction pursuant to s. 49 of the Act requiring the defendants to comply with the Act, particularly s. 31 thereof, and the Declaration, particularly s. 18 thereof.

In all of the circumstances there is no reason why the plaintiff should not have its costs. The defendants are the only owners who have refused, neglected or otherwise failed to satisfy the plaintiff's requests and demands for compliance with the provisions of the Declaration. While s. 18(c) of the Declaration provides that the costs of enforcing the section are to be the responsibility of the owner of the unit in respect of which the breach occurred and that such costs include "legal fees as between a solicitor and his own client", counsel for the plaintiff did not seek costs on that basis. Costs shall be on a party-and-party basis and shall include the costs of the abortive originating notice since the material prepared in relation thereto formed the basis of the pleadings in the action and the testimony upon the trial.

Judgment for plaintiff.

York Condominium Corp. No. 420 v. Deerhaven Properties Ltd. et al.

(1982), 40 O.R. (2d) 106 33 C.P.C. 65

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE GRIFFITHS J. DECEMBER 23, 1982

APPLICATION to dismiss an action commenced by a condominium corporation.

R. Blair, for applicants, defendants.

J. H. Fine, for respondent, plaintiff.

GRIFFITHS J. (orally):-- The defendants move to dismiss this action principally on the basis that the plaintiff has no status under s. 14(1) and (2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, to maintain this action.

The plaintiff is a condominium corporation created by the declaration thereof on October 2, 1978, pursuant to s. 10 of the Condominium Act.

The defendant, Deerhaven Properties Limited, was the original owner and developer of the condominium property and a declarant of the plaintiff condominium and the registered owner of unit 7, described as the "superintendent's suite" in the condominium.

At the date of the issue of the writ of summons the defendant Macaba Limited was the manager of the plaintiff. That defendant gave notice of termination to the plaintiff of the managerial agreement indicating that it intended to remove certain equipment from the common elements of the condominium.

The remedy claimed by the plaintiff in this action is set out in para. 14 of the statement of claim as follows:

14. Therefore the Plaintiff claims:

(i) A declaration that the Plaintiff is the rightful owner of Unit 7, Level 1, York Condominium Plan No. 420 and for an Order that the said Unit be conveyed to the Plaintiff;

(ii) A declaration that the Plaintiff is the rightful owner of the following equipment:

(a) one snow blower -- Mastercraft 319280515; Serial No. 23475;

(b) one vacuum cleaner -- Hoover 916 T; Serial No. 23475;

(c) one wet and dry vacuum -- Premier 1010; Serial No. 063791;

(d) one floor polisher -- Spartan Spar 17; Serial No. 690051;

(e) two exercise bicycles;

(f) one rowing machine; (g) eight sauna room lockers;

(h) two sauna room benches;

(i) five General Electric washing machines;

(j) five General Electric dryers.

The above noted equipment is presently located on the common elements of the Plaintiff.

(iii) An order that the said equipment set out in paragraph (ii) above be conveyed to the Plaintiff;

The basis of the claim is succinctly described in paras. 8 and 9 of the statement of claim as follows:

8. The Plaintiff states that through inadvertence, mistake or otherwise, title to the Equipment and to the Superintendent's Suite was never transferred to the Plaintiff.

9. The Plaintiff states and the fact is that it was always the intention of the Defendants and the understanding of the Unit Owners of the Plaintiff, that the Superintendent's Suite and the Equipment would form part of the common elements of the Plaintiff Condominium Corporation because ... The pleading then details the various material facts upon which the plaintiff relies in support of the above allegations. Section 14(1) and (2) of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, provides as follows:

14(1) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may, on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner, sue for and recover damages and costs in respect of any damage to common elements, the assets of the corporation or individual units, and the legal and court costs in any such actions brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their interests are affected.

(2) The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may sue on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner with respect to the common elements and any units, notwithstanding that the corporation was not a party to the contract in respect of which the action is brought, and the legal and court costs in an action brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

It is common ground that s. 14(1) has no application to the circumstances of this case. The issue is whether s. 14(2) gives the plaintiff the right to maintain the cause of action for recovery of title to and possession of the superintendent's suite and the equipment earlier described.

Counsel for the defendant submits that the plaintiff, being entirely a creature of statute, has only the authority to maintain an action as provided by s. 14(1) and (2). Section 14(2), it is submitted, only gives the plaintiff authority to maintain an action with respect to common elements, involving a breach of contract. Here the action is clearly not founded on contract.

Section 14 of the present Condominium Act was enacted June 1, 1979. Previously, the Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, gave the condominium a fairly broad right to sue in these words:

9(18) Any action with respect to the common elements may be brought by the corporation and a judgment for the payment of money in favour of the corporation in such an action is an asset of the corporation.

There is a further statutory provision having application, upon which counsel for the plaintiff places much reliance namely, s. 26(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, which reads:

26. In every Act, unless the contrary intention appears, words making any association or number of persons a corporation or body politic and corporate,

(a) vest in the corporation power to sue and be sued, to contract and be contracted with by its corporate name, to have a common seal, to alter or change the seal at its pleasure, to have perpetual succession, to acquire and hold personal property or movables for the purpose for which the corporation is constituted and to alienate the same at pleasure; The central issue then is whether s. 14(2) should reasonably be construed as restricting the broad right to sue conferred on the plaintiff corporation by s. 26 of the Interpretation Act, to a right to maintain an action for breach of contract only with respect to the common elements. To put it another way, in the light of the broad power to sue conferred on a condominium by the predecessor s. 9(18), of the Condominium Act is it reasonable to construe the present s. 14 as expressing a legislative intention to sharply limit those powers.

In my view, s. 14(2) as remedial consumer legislation should not be rigidly or narrowly construed to the extent it confers on the condominium a right to sue. On that principle, I conclude it is reasonable to interpret the section as conferring on the corporation an unlimited right to sue with respect to common elements, and further extending that right by providing that an action in contract may be maintained by the corporation even though it was not a party to the contract.

As I view s. 14 generally it seems to me that the obvious intention of the Legislature was not to restrict the broad power to sue previously held under s. 9(18) but rather to extend those powers by providing under s. 14(1) a right to sue and recover damages and costs in respect to not only the common elements but with respect to the assets and individual units of the corporation as well. By s. 14(2) as I have found the Legislature intended to confer a right to sue on contracts to which the corporation was not a party.

As an alternative approach, if s. 14(2) is open to two reasonable constructions, then in my view the construction to be chosen is that which is the more consistent and consonant with the general scheme and policy of the overall legislation. That is an established canon of legislative interpretation: Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes 12th ed. (1969), c. 2, p. 45.

A review of the legislation reveals a policy generally to vest in the corporation broad powers to manage the property and assets of the condominium on behalf of the unit holders. Section 14(5) of the Act renders the condominium liable without restriction to be sued as the responsible entity. In my view, it is reasonable and consistent with the policy of the Act that the corporation, should have the same broad powers to sue, consistent with its responsibilities to the individual unit holders. The application is dismissed with costs to the plaintiff in the cause.

Application dismissed.

Re Lambert Island Ltd. and Attorney-General of Ontario

[1972] 2 O.R. 659-673

ONTARIO [HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE] LERNER, J. 24th MARCH 1972.

APPLICATION for an interpretation of the Condominium Act; PRELIMINARY OBJECTION by respondent that there was no authority to bring the application.

Alvin B. Rosenberg, Q.C., for applicant.

B. Wright, for respondent.

LERNER, J.:-- The application seeks, in essence, an interpretation of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, that would appear to be basic to the whole popularly accepted concept of condominium ownership to wit, an order enabling the registration of a plan under the Act, notwithstanding that some units in the proposed condominium plan referred to in the proposed declaration, are bare land and do not include buildings or parts of buildings.

The facts disclosed by the affidavit of Gavin H. Young, Esq., Q.C., are not in dispute and are uncomplicated. Mr. Young is a shareholder, director and officer of Lambert Island Limited, which owns Lambert Island situate in Lake Superior and the water lot surrounding it, opposite mining location 15 Frances survey, Township of MacGregor, District of Thunder Bay. At present, the property is divided into 24 separate lots and the agreements between the company and "the owners" covering the lots are, at the time of the application, in the form of leases running for 21 years less one day. The common facilities are a dock, ramp, roadway running down the centre of the island and a bridge built to provide motor vehicle access to said island. No public moneys have been spent on the island and the company has paid for its own road maintenance, snow removal and any other incidental items pertinent thereto. There is no common sewage or water system, but each lot upon which improvements have been made, which I take to mean housing, have had septic and water systems installed that have the approval of the municipal inspector.

On 16 of said lots, buildings have been erected and one other building is in the process of being built. The 24 lots are owned by 19 individuals of which one person owns three, another owns four and the others are single ownership.

The purpose of applying for registration pursuant to the Condominium Act is to permit the respective owners to have and enjoy long-term rights for estate purposes and to be able to enforce contribution from the other owners for their share of the maintenance of the present common elements and maintenance of future common elements that may be installed such as common sewer facilities and common water facilities, playground areas, etc.

The applicants appear to have good grounds for being concerned because of:

- (1) the inability to enforce covenants against predecessors in title, certain of the people involved in such projects do not pay their share of maintenance of the roads and other parts of the common elements; (2) there is no legal way to collect these shares;
- (3) conscientious owners interested in maintaining a project pay additional shares, in order to meet expenses, than they were originally required; and
- (4) there is no way to legally control owners in a project with respect to power, water supply, sewage, pollution problems, etc., pursuant to the affidavits of John Beatson, an Ontario land surveyor, and Monty M. Simmonds, Esq., Q.C. both of whom appear to have had personal experiences with these problems and with the Condominium Act.

These applicants held a meeting with Richard E. Priddle, Director of Land Registration for Ontario, Sidney Smith, the Director of Titles for Ontario, Colin Hadfield, of the Department of Surveys for Ontario, Dean Richardson, solicitor for the Registry Office and said John Beatson, a surveyor who had participated in parts of the research preparatory to the presentation and enactment of the Condominium Act by the Legislature as it presently exists.

The applicant argues that such registration under the Condominium Act is the only solution for the Lambert Island development and similar developments to enable them to operate over the long period, enforce positive covenants against subsequent owners, undertake orderly estate planning and rights of inheritance, and the other problems not immediately foreseeable but by which future known or unknown owners would be bound.

The application is endorsed by all owners of the 24 lots. Their concern and foresight is understandable and the problem is whether the Condominium Act, as presently constituted, can help them. This, of course, can only be achieved if the "Plan" can be registered pursuant to said Act. The novelty of the matter is that the popular concept is of a single vertical building and the whole of the parcel being occupied by either the main structure, or in addition thereto, the structures directly connected therewith such as adjoining parking lot, parking garage, etc. In the present situation, the "Plan" is on the "horizontal" and some of the owners have "raw land" as their "units".

The application was argued before me as a Court motion on January 31, 1972, and, after full argument by counsel on behalf of the applicant, the respondent, the Attorney-General for Ontario, raised a preliminary issue that there is no authority to bring this application. The respondent stated that the preliminary objection is that the issue raised herein involves the interpretation of construction of a statute and that such a declaration can only be made by originating notice of motion (which this is) and in very limited circumstances.

Before dealing with the arguments, I set out the relevant Rules of Practice for convenience,

Rule 611

611. Where the rights of a person depend upon the construction of a deed, will or other instrument, he may apply by originating notice, upon notice to all persons concerned, to have his rights declared and determined.

Rule 612

612(1) Where the rights of the parties depend,

(a) upon the construction of a contract or agreement and there are no material facts in dispute; or,

(b) upon undisputed facts and the proper inference from such facts, such rights may be determined upon originating notice.

(2) A contract or agreement may be construed before there has been a breach thereof.

The first argument is that a declaration can only be made (as requested here) on an originating notice where such is specially authorized by the Rules or by statute. The respondent relies on Re Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Int'l Union, Local 9-14 and Polymer Corp. Ltd., [1966] 1 O.R. 744 at p. 783, 55 D.L.R. (2d) 198 at p. 207. In that case, the union was recognized by Polymer as the sole bargaining agent for all employees save certain exceptions. The union was not certified by the Canada Labour Relations Board pursuant to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 152. However, a collective bargaining agreement was made between the union and Polymer which contained provisions for arbitration of grievances which have not been settled. A board of arbitration was set up pursuant to said agreement consisting of three arbitrators and in the course of its deliberations made certain decisions, that is to say:

(a) that it did not have power to require production of documents;

(b) it had no power to issue subpoenae to witnesses; and

(c) that the Arbitrations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 25, did not apply to this arbitration.

The union brought the motion for certiorari against the Board and at p. 783 O.R., p. 207 D.L.R., Morand, J., ruled that there was no right to ask for such a declaration, relying on the authorities he quoted herein to the effect that such proceedings can only be brought for determination of a question arising in connection with a will or trust and also on motion to determine the construction of a deed, will or instrument or in special circumstances, on a motion to determine the construction of a contract or agreement.

The reasons for judgment suggested that the proper course open to the applicant union would be to bring an action "in certain well-defined circumstances" [p. 784 O.R., p. 208 D.L.R.].

The bringing of an application by way of originating notice pursuant to Rule 612(1) was briefly considered in Board of Trustees of Separate School in Township of Seneca and Village of Cayuga v. Township of Seneca, [1964] S.C.R. 569 at p. 571, 45 D.L.R. (2d) 288 at p. 289. The school board had acquired a school site in March, 1959, built a one-room schoolhouse which they began to use in December, 1959, and ceased using as a school in December, 1961. In the next year, the township entered the property on the tax roll, it having ceased to be exempt from taxation. Per Cartwright, J., the Court held it was a proper application because the application called for the determination of the rights of the parties, "upon undisputed facts and the proper inferences from such facts, such rights may be determined upon originating notice".

Clearly, in that application, there were two parties in opposing interests seeking the determination of the rights as between them.

The next argument raised by the respondent is that the application involves the interpretation or construction of a statute and that the Courts have held that a statute is not an instrument within the meaning of Rule 611 and for this, the respondent relies on, Re Mann Construction Ltd., [1965] 2 O.R. 655, 51 D.L.R. (2d) 580. The application there was by the main contractor engaged in the construction of a bridge. A subcontractor had defaulted his undertakings and was in bankruptcy and others had to be employed to take over and complete this subcontract. After paying all accounts, the main contractor had funds on hand owing to the bankrupt subcontractor which were claimed by the trustee in bankruptcy. The main contractor sought the advice and direction of the Court as to the disposition thereof, pursuant to Rule 607, which permits, among other things, that ... the trustees under any deed or instrument ... may apply by originating notice for

7. The opinion, advice or direction of a judge pursuant to The Trustee Act. Hughes, J., held that the application failed because the trust (Mechanics' Lien Act, R.S.O. 1960, c. 233, s. 3(1), (2) and (3)) was an oral one or by the operation of statute and the application could not be brought under Rule 607 in the absence of any deed or instrument from which the trustee derives his status.

In Re Pane Niagara Enterprises Ltd. and City of Niagara Falls, [1968] 1 O.R. 287, Keith, J., considered the power of the Court to issue a declaratory judgment in the interpretation of a municipal by-law by the exercise of the powers under Rule 611. He observed that such powers had been the subject of strong doubts expressed by the Court of Appeal. He said that the procedures contemplated by Rule 611 afford the most convenient method of securing a declaratory judgment with respect to the meaning of municipal by-laws where there are no disputed facts. He found that a municipal by-law is an "instrument" within the meaning of Rule 611. He considered the doubts, as aforesaid, as expressed by the Court of Appeal in Re Windsor and Dapco Ltd., [1959] O.W.N. 18, 16 D.L.R. (2d) 685, and affirmed [1959] O.W.N. 238, 19 D.L.R. (2d) 688, and Sun Oil Co. v. City of Hamilton and Veale, [1961] O.R. 209, 27 D.L.R. (2d) 1.

In Re Windsor and Dapco Ltd., supra, Laidlaw, J.A., on behalf of the Court expressed the doubt of the Court whether a by-law fell within the term "other instrument" in Rule 604 (as it then was). In that application the municipality moved for a declaration that use of certain lands by Dapco Limited for the purpose of mixing asphalt did not contravene a specific by-law.

In Sun Oil Co. v. City of Hamilton and Veale, supra, the applicant sought an order of mandamus directing the City of Hamilton to issue permits for the erection and operation of a gasoline service station at a particular site. The Court of Appeal considered the propriety of invoking this type of proceeding to pass upon the validity of a municipal by-law and found that the provisions of the Municipal Act were an obstacle to bringing an originating application. Furthermore, the Court, while referring to Re Windsor and Dapco Ltd., supra, did not, in the circumstances, have to decide whether or not Rule 604 empowered the Court to interpret by-laws.

In Blainey v. Toronto, [1935] O.R. 476, [1935] 4 D.L.R. 328, an application was brought for a declaration that a certain municipal by-law did not affect certain lands. Relying on the definition that the word "instrument" in the Registry Act included a municipal by-law, Hope, J., concluded that the matter was properly before him pursuant to Rule 604. The applicant had applied for a permit to erect an apartment house and the city relied on a particular by-law to refuse same. The applicant only had an option to purchase the particular lands and the order was made that in the event that the option was exercised that the lands referred to therein were free of the restrictions of the by-law.

This latter part is of interest because the application was anticipatory of purchasing the lands that the application succeeded. In the instant matter by analogy no "declaration" including a "description" has been tendered for registration until the issue will have been clarified.

The respondent also relies on Smith v. A.-G. Ont., [1924] S.C.R. 331, [1924] 3 D.L.R. 189, 42 C.C.C. 215, which was applied in Thorson v. A.-G. Can. et al. (No. 2), [1972] 1 O.R. 86, 22 D.L.R. (3d) 274 [affirmed [1972] 2 O.R. 340, 25 D.L.R. (3d) 400]. In the former, the appellant, a resident of Toronto, ordered a case of Dewars Whiskey and some beer from a dealer in Montreal who refused the order because the Canada Temperance Act had been brought into force in Ontario and importation into that Province was therefore prohibited. The appellant sought the order of the Court that the validity of this Order in Council had been assumed and was being enforced with the attendant penalties, and it was invalid and illegal. He claimed to be debarred from exercising his legal right to bring liquor into Ontario except under intolerable conditions, because he would subject himself and everyone acting for him, to prosecution and the attendant humiliating incidents. Furthermore, that this had the effect of preventing dealers in Canada selling him liquor for import into Ontario and preventing transport companies and others acting in the course of their businesses for him from carrying on their lawful enterprises. The Court held that this was asking for a decision on a hypothetical case. The appellant was subjected to no actual threat of prosecution, and no actual risk, only if the liquor ordered was shipped, at which time he could be put in jeopardy. Duff, J., as he then was, applied the case of Glasgow Navigation Co. v. Iron Ore Co., [1910] A.C. 293, when he stated [at p. 336 S.C.R., p. 192 D.L.R., per Lord Loreburn, L.C.], "It is not the function of a court of justice to advise parties as to their rights under a hypothetical state of facts."

The learned Judge went on further to say [at pp. 337-8 S.C.R., pp. 193-4 D.L.R.]:

An individual, for example, has no status to maintain an action restraining a wrongful violation of a public right unless he is exceptionally prejudiced by the wrongful act. It is true that in this court this rule has been relaxed in order to admit actions by ratepayers for restraining ultra vires expenditures by the governing bodies of municipalities; MacIlraith v. Hart (1907), 39 S.C.R. 657. We are not sure that the reasons capable of being advanced in support of this exception would not be just as pertinent as arguments in favour of the Appellant's contention, but this exception does not rest upon any clearly defined principle, and we think it ought not to be extended.

On the whole we think that the principle contended for, since it receives no sanction from legal analogy, and since it is open to serious objection as calculated to be attended by general inconvenience in practice, ought not to be adopted.

"Instrument" is defined in the shorter Oxford English Dictionary as "a formal legal document whereby a right is created or confirmed, or a fact recorded; a formal writing of any kind as an agreement, deed, charter, or record drawn up and executed in technical form".

The definition of "instrument" in the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 409, s. 1(c), includes a "municipal by-law" but nowhere does it refer to any statutory enactment. Therefore, after considering the pertinent Rules, the cases recited supra, the sections of the Condominium Act and particularly ss. 2, 3, 4 and 5, I can find nothing that would permit the meaning of the word "instrument" in the pertinent Rules to be expanded to include this application.

The respondent's preliminary argument, in summary, is a legal one and the Court should be entitled to take a serious view of the implications that flow from acceding to it. In order to reach the position where there would be the right to seek a declaratory order or mandamus to force the registration of a plan under the Condominium Act, the applicant would be required to comply with s. 3 thereof which requires a "declaration" which, pursuant to the definition as found in s. 1(i), means the matters as specified in s. 3. An examination of s. 3 makes it patent that the "declaration" of necessity has to be a substantial instrument. The problem created by giving effect to the argument of the respondent becomes self-evident, probably more so with the construction of a "high-rise" building than the within proposal.

Section 3 (1) sets out that,

3(1) A declaration shall not be registered ... described in the description and unless it contains ...

Section 4 (1) (e):

4(1) A description shall contain,

(e) a certificate of a surveyor that the buildings have been constructed and that the diagrams of the units are substantially accurate and substantially in accordance with the structural plans ...

(The italics are mine.) In effect registration pursuant to s. 3 is prevented until the project is fully completed in order to obtain a "certificate of a surveyor". Since the developer has to complete the project before he can obtain a "certificate of a surveyor", obviously large sums of money would have to be expended with all the attendant risks, only to find, conceivably, when the finished product is available, that registration is refused. Apart from what will be said later, the applicants herein may never add more buildings on the units and if the respondent's position herein is correct, the applicants have no way in which to have their rights to employ the Condominium Act determined.

The meeting which took place as indicated earlier, adds nothing more than polarizing the attitude of each of the parties and the letter (ex. C) from the Director of Land Registration was conclusive that the respondent would not initiate proceedings for judicial interpretation.

Regretfully, on all of the undisputed facts, I find also that this application is premature. The physical makeup of Lambert Island Ltd. is sufficiently limited in its scope and content that it would be possible to confirm with ss. 3 and 4 of the Condominium Act and apply for registration. However, it would take no great prescience to conclude that it would be refused but all legal obstacles to bring this type of application against the Registrar of Deeds or Master of Titles would fall by the wayside and the law as set out in Karavos v. City of Toronto and Gillies, [1948] O.W.N. 17, [1948] 3 D.L.R. 294 (Court of Appeal), would not be applicable. Briefly, that was an application for a mandamus direct to the Commissioner of Buildings, Toronto, to "forthwith examine the plans and specifications and thereafter issue the necessary building permit". This application was dismissed because the applicant had not complied with the by-law requiring, as part of the application for a building permit, to: (1) make an application for a permit on an official form; (2) provide fully the information therein required; (3) correctness of the application verified by statutory declaration; (4) drawings, etc.; (5) a block plan; and (6) plan of survey by an Ontario Land Surveyor.

The applicant had not fulfilled these requirements to put himself in a position to legally demand by way of mandamus, the examination of the plans submitted in order to ultimately warrant further expense leading to the issue of a building permit. The analogy to the instant case is clear, that is to say, that the Court cannot entertain an application when the prerequisites of the statute requiring registration thereunder have not been complied with.

Since obviously the question is an arguable and important one and as the merits of this application were fully argued, I think that the parties are entitled to the Court's view of the substantive question raised by the application and I now propose to deal with same.

The Condominium Act was enacted by 1967 (Ont.), c. 12, about June 15, 1967, and in heavy type on the first page of the office consolidation, its purpose is succinctly explained as:

An Act to facilitate the Division of Properties into Parts that are to be owned Individually and Parts that are to be owned in Common, and to provide for the Use and Management of such Properties. The main issue to be decided is whether the condominium concept is available as a technique to provide ownership of individual units of different shapes and dimensions within a building only or whether it can be applied to horizontal development of single dwellings with pertinent other buildings used with said buildings and alongside or in conjunction with other units consisting of vacant lands upon which a dwelling or dwellings would subsequently be erected.

This issue is readily understood from the undisputed facts set out above as found in the affidavit material herein.

The Ontario Law Reform Commission initiated a research study of the Law of Condominium in December, 1965, with a view to ascertaining whether legislation on the subject would be desirable, and if so, what form it should take and employed Professor R.C.V. Risk of the Faculty of Law, University of Toronto, to do a comparative study of existing legislation in the Canadian Provinces and other jurisdictions of the British Commonwealth and the United States. The report of this study indicated that there were two essential elements of this concept, (1) the division of property into units, to be individually owned and common elements to be owned in common by the owners of the units; and

(2) an administrative framework to enable the owners to manage the property.

Examples were given in the report were, a high-rise building containing residential units, each of the units individually owned and the remainder of the property, including the roof, basement, parking area and gardens, owned in common by the owners of the units. Another example was an industrial development including a cluster of small factories, each individually owned, and the remainder of the property including the service facilities, owned in common by the owners. In each of these examples, an administrative framework enables the owners to manage the property for the common benefit and each owner must contribute to the common expenses. The report went on to say that this concept is indifferent to the use to be made of the property, to the design of the buildings and to the location of the boundaries between individual and common ownership. At common law, there would be nothing to prevent, for example, these 19 unit owners in this application from binding themselves in an agreement to achieve their purposes. The problems posed when these common owners would attempt to enter into an agreement would stagger the imagination of the most ingenious, learned and experienced of solicitors. These problems are well set up in the article in University of Toronto Law Journal, vol. 18, p. 1 (1968), by Professor R.C.B. Risk. I refer particularly to pp. 3-8, inclusive in that report. The report concluded that enabling legislation for condominium development was necessary for reasons set herein:

The existing common law and legislation present formidable difficulties: the general prohibition of positive covenants running with the land makes the imposition of obligations on subsequent purchasers awkward or impossible; the rules of future interests limit and complicate provisions for the eventual termination of the interests of the owners; the attitude of the common law towards the ownership and subdivision of space may not be entirely clear; descriptions of cubes of space are more easily imagined than prepared; municipal taxes would probably be assessed against the property owned in common as one parcel, impairing the advantage of financial independence that might be expected to accompany ownership; mechanics' liens against the property owned in common would have the same effect; and, finally, the express provisions of planning restrictions on the subdivision of land would probably apply, even though the spirit might not.

The existing law on enforcement of covenants affecting land is Judge-made, dating in the main from the latter part of the 19th century, supplemented in certain respects notably as to registration and as to the modification or discharge of restrictive covenants by legislation.

Report of the Committee on Positive Covenants Affecting Land -- presented to Parliament by the Lord High Chancellor, July, 1965, at p. 1

This report went on to distinguish between the essential characteristics between restrictive covenants, that is, covenants restraining the owner of land in some respect from the uninhibited use of his property, and positive covenants, that is, covenants obliging the owner to do something on his land ("work covenants"), or to contribute money towards work to be done or services to be provided for the benefit of his land ("money covenants"), e.g., a "work covenant" would be a covenant to fence -- "money covenant" to contribute towards the making or maintenance of a private road. While continuing to discuss the general problem of the difficulties of enforcement of positive covenants, said report went on to say, "The burden of a positive covenant cannot, under the existing law be made to run with the servient land." (p. 2).

In completing its report, the Law Reform Commission of Ontario submitted a draft Bill with explanatory notes to each of the proposed sections. The definition given to the word "unit" in s. 1(1)(r) imposed no limitations on this definition nor did the remainder of the Act as submitted. While the examples of a patio, a balcony, a loading area of a parking space were referred to in the draft bill, nothing was said about a "unit" being "bare" or "raw" land. One approach to the problem is by trying to determine from the Condominium Act what is intended to be meant by the use of the word "land". Section 2(1):

2(1) A property shall comprise only freehold land and interests, if any, appurtenant to that land.

Section 1(2):

1(2) For the purposes of this Act, the ownership of land includes the ownership of space.

(This implies vertical building construction.)

Section 1(1)(n):

(n) "property" means the land and interests appurtenant to the land described in the description, and includes any land and interests appurtenant to land that are added to the common elements;

Section 4(1):

4(1) A description shall contain,

(a) a plan of survey showing the perimeter of the horizontal surface of the land and the perimeter of the buildings; (Italics are mine.)

I add to the words of the last-quoted section "... and the perimeter of the buildings" -- my own phrase "if any".

Does the "unit", which is described in the definition s. 1(1) (rie),

(r) "unit" means a part or parts of the land included in the description and designated as a unit by the description, and comprises the space enclosed by its boundaries and all material parts of the land within this space at the time the declaration and description are registered.

have to be part of a building, or can part of the land, such as the parking lot, or more directly in issue here, a lot upon which a summer cottage will subsequently be built, be considered a unit as defined in s. 1(1)(r). I also find nothing in the definition which requires that a unit include a building. To put it by way of practical application to the within application one unit as found in Lambert Island Ltd. could include, at the time of registration, a lot upon which was constructed a summer home and the adjoining or nearby lot consist of vacant land only.

Yet this interpretation of the legislation has to be perplexing because the Condominium Act assumes that buildings will be included.

Section 1(1)(b) says, "'buildings' means the buildings included in a property". Section 4(1)(a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) refer to the buildings and s. 8(1) has to contemplate the existence of all the buildings in existence at the time of the declaration and registration. Similarly, s. 17 considers the existence of the buildings at the time of the execution of the "declaration", otherwise, it makes little sense. Nor can I find anything in the Act that permits the addition of buildings later, because the Act does not permit amendment of the "description".

The most significant of all requirements in determining whether "unit" can include land not built upon is a consideration of s. 4(1)(e) which sets out one of the requisites to permit the filing of the "declaration". It requires the inclusion of the certificate of a surveyor that the buildings have been constructed. One might well ask how a surveyor would be able to complete the certificate required by Form 14 of O. Reg. 299/67 [now R.R.O. 1970, Reg. 98], which I set out in full:

Form 14

SURVEYOR'S CERTIFICATE

I hereby certify that the building(s) shown on this plan is (are) in existence and that the units designated on this plan substantially represent the units within the structure(s).

..... (date) (signature)

..... (name in print) (Ontario Land Surveyor)

Form 14 obviously requires that buildings shown on the plan are in existence and the units designated on this plan substantially represent the units within the structures. Section 4(1) refers repeatedly to the "buildings" and "structural plans".

The explanatory notes in the Bill, that was proposed, to s. 4(1)(e), which is in the same form in the proposed Bill as it is now in the Act, states that:

... the certificate is required to insure that the structural plans of the building are sufficiently accurate to enable restoration after damage, to insure that the monuments by reference to which the units are described can be easily located and have substantially the same relations and dimensions in fact as in the plans, and to ensure that the buildings are completed before the Act is invoked. The buildings must be completed to avoid the possibility of hopeless confusion. If the Act could be invoked before or during construction and if several units were sold when finished and the remainder were never finished the proportions of common interests and for sharing common expenses would be meaningless and no happy resolution of the difficulty can easily be made available. Understandably, units could be sold as vacant land, but as I read the Condominium Act, no buildings (on a relative basis) such as summer homes or dwellings could be subsequently added on the vacant lands comprising "units" without offending the Act as presently constituted.

There would therefore be nothing to prevent the registration of a declaration showing some units as vacant land, but this would be of no assistance to the developer or the owners of the "vacant land units".

At the risk of being repetitive, this problem is not whether horizontal development of single-family dwellings is consistent with the Condominium Act, but whether a unit at the time of registration may consist of vacant land which may subsequently be built upon as aforesaid. I respectfully agree with and find support for this latter proposition in the recent unreported judgment of Lacourciere, J. (January 17, 1972), in Re MacVal Enterprises Ltd. and Township of Nepean et al. [since reported [1972] 2 O.R.

458, 25 D.L.R. (3d) 682]. It is also interesting to note that Professor Risk, supra, at the conclusion of his article refers to "row housing", see p. 72. One would be inclined to give liberal interpretation to this enabling legislation (because that is what it is), but the novel obligation put upon condominium owners makes one hesitate to deviate from strict construction of the sections referred to above. Very quickly, one conjures up the problem of the owner of an elaborate, expensive winterized dwelling on this island comprising part of one unit only later to find an adjoining unit which was originally raw or vacant land containing a house trailer or boathouse.

It was conceded by counsel that this was a novel problem that had not been previously explored. Notwithstanding my finding with respect to jurisdiction, I do not think that this is a proper case for costs. Application dismissed without costs.

Application dismissed.

Re Macval Enterprises Ltd. and Township of Nepean et al.

[1972] 2 O.R. 458-468

ONTARIO [HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE] LACOURCIERE, J. 17th JANUARY 1972.

M. Citron, for applicant.

R.A. Bell, Q.C., for respondents.

LACOURCIERE, J.:-- This is an application on behalf of Macval Enterprises Limited for an order pursuant to Rules 611 and 612 of the consolidated Rules of Practice declaring that the applicant's proposal to develop a condominium consisting of 15 detached one-family dwellings on its lands in the Township of Nepean will not contravene the applicable provisions of zoning By-law 962. The applicant also asks for an order of mandamus directed to the building inspector of the township requiring the issue of a building permit.

The applicant company in the course of its construction business acquired in February, 1961, a rectangular parcel of land having an area of 2.268 acres fronting on Carola St., in the Township of Nepean. The parcel has a frontage of 395.20 ft. and a depth of 250 ft.; at the time of acquisition there existed a one-family dwelling on this parcel. The applicant originally intended to subdivide the land into not more than six lots for construction and sale; this turned out to be uneconomical because water and sanitary sewer services were not in existence on Carola St., contrary to the information previously given to the applicant. As an alternative the applicant retained an urban planner to prepare a different mode of development. The proposal took the form of the draft plan of condominium which was commended, at a meeting of the Department of Municipal Affairs, "as to the originality of the design and high standard of landscaping proposed". The draft plan is here reproduced to facilitate an understanding of the problems involved. (diagram omitted)

While it was considered by Macval Enterprises Ltd. that the proposed condominium conformed to the municipal zoning by-law and that the development would be an attractive one in keeping with the character of the neighbourhood, the building inspector after careful examination of the application dated September 24, 1971, and attached plan, and after consultation with the township solicitors, reached the conclusion that the application did not comply with the provisions of By-law 39-62 relating to a residential second density zone R2.

The condominium concept

The applicant has applied to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for approval of its condominium plan pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, first enacted in 1967, c. 12. The Act as aptly summarized in its long title is designed as "An Act to facilitate the Division of Properties into Parts that are to be owned Individually and Parts that are to be owned in Common, and to provide for the Use and Management of such Properties". Mr. Citron in an able and scholarly argument has discussed the relationship of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, to the Condominium Act. It is quite clear that the fact that a condominium is proposed does not per se affect the question of zoning. In other words, if a proposed building is permissible under the by-law, the fact of ownership in condominium form would not be a reason to refuse a building permit. The material discloses that this is the first application in Canada involving the condominium concept with single-family dwellings, as opposed to high-rise apartment units or groups of row houses. That is the reason why Mr. Bell took the position that the Condominium Act is not available as a technique for a horizontal subdivision, properly controlled by the Planning Act. His submission was that the general purpose of the Act was to provide ownership of individual units of different shapes and dimensions within a building only. While this may be the result of strata titles legislation enacted in other jurisdictions, it would appear that the horizontal development of single-family dwellings is not inconsistent with the condominium concept outlined under the Ontario Act.

In a lecture published in the Law Society Special Lectures (1970), p. 81 at p. 82, J. Richard Shiff, Q.C., adopted the definition of a condominium "as a system of separate ownership of individual units in multi-unit projects", and he included "a cluster type single family detached house subdivision" as available for such ownership. Thus, he concluded:

One can picture a condominium as an apartment building of any size, a garden type housing development of detached and semi-detached units, each consisting of one or more stories, a row of attractive town-houses, an office building in which each occupier owns his own office space, a shopping centre where each shopkeeper owns his own store, an industrial complex where each industry owns its own plant or facilities, a warehouse or terminal with ownership of areas divided among the occupiers.

(The italics are mine.) However, in view of my decision on the zoning aspect it is not necessary for me on this application to express any opinion on the availability of the condominium concept in relation to this type of horizontal land division. It may be significant to note, however, that the Department of Municipal Affairs followed its usual procedure in circulating copies of the plan to various agencies, commissions and departments interested in inviting comments, with the warning, however, that such action was not to be construed as suggesting that the proposal was acceptable or would be recommended.

Conforming with the by-law

Section 6 of By-law 39-62 provides for six different residential density zones and prohibits the building or use of any building not erected in accordance with such provisions. Section 6:2 reads as follows:

RESIDENTIAL SECOND DENSITY ZONE R2

6:2:1 Permitted Uses:

A detached one family dwelling, a park, a home occupation, a day nursery, a church and uses accessory to the foregoing.

6:2:2 Zone Requirements Lot Area (Minimum) 6,500 Sq. ft. Lot Frontage (Minimum) 65 ft. Lot Coverage (Maximum) 30%. Height, Main Bldg. (Maximum) 35 ft. Height Acces. Bldg. (Maximum) 12 ft. Front Yard (Minimum) Sub. to Sect. 5:23 25 ft. Rear Yard (Minimum) 35 ft. Side Yard (Minimum) one side 8 ft. Side Yard (Minimum) other side 5 ft. Floor Area (Minimum) 1,150 Sq. ft.

6:2:3 Exception:

Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 6:2:1: where no storm sewer and paved roads with curbs are provided or will be provided within a period of one year, then the minimum Lot Area and the minimum Frontage for not less than 50% of the lots in any plan of subdivision lying within the R2 zone shall be 7,500 sq. ft. and 75 ft. respectively.

Mr. Citron's argument presented to me was condensed in a letter dated August 11, 1971, written by him to the Corporation of the Township of Nepean to support his opinion that the proposed plan conformed with the zoning. At that time the following considerations were put forward to the township, and the opinion being rejected the same arguments are now presented to this Court. I quote from the letter, ex. H to the affidavit of Robert McElligott, as follows:

The project Macval wishes to build consists of fifteen detached single family dwellings, including an existing farm house and fourteen new homes, on a lot on Carola Street having a frontage of 395.20 feet, a depth of 250 feet and an area of 2.26 acres. The lot is zoned R2 by By-law 39-62. The objection that has been raised is that the project infringes the by-law because it involves more than one building on a lot.

We submit the following for your consideration.

1. The proposed single family dwellings comply in all respects with the by-law. The permitted uses in an R2 zone include "a detached one family dwelling." Each proposed dwelling by itself falls within this permission and all the proposed dwellings comply with the zone requirements in Section 6:2:2 of By-law 39-62. The lot itself has an area and frontage which, of course, are well in excess of the by-law requirements. The total lot coverage of all buildings will be well under the 30% requirement. No building will be over thirty-five feet high. The front, rear and side yards will all be greater than the minimum required by the by-law. In each case the yard is a space between the "lot line and the nearest wall of any building or structure on the lot for which the yard is required."

2. The by-law expressly contemplates more than one building on a lot. Paragraph 62 of Section 2 of the by-law defines lot as follows:

"Lot' shall mean a parcel of land fronting on a street, whether or not occupied by a building or structure."

Paragraph 64 of Section 2 of the by-law is as follows:

"'Lot Coverage' shall mean the combined areas of all the buildings on the lot measured at the level of the lowest floor above grade."

Section 6:5 of the by-law contains the restrictions applicable to the Residential Fifth Density Zone R5. Paragraph 3 of this section contains under the heading "Spacing of Buildings" specific restrictions affecting "main buildings on the same lot."

We understand that in respect of the R2 zone it has been suggested that only one dwelling on a lot is permitted because the permitted uses in that zone are, by Paragraph 1 of Section 1 of Section 6:2, stated to be:

"A detached one family dwelling, a park, a home occupation, a day nursery, a church and uses accessory to the foregoing."

Apparently the use of the singular introduced by the indefinite article "a" is what gives concern. We draw to your attention that exactly similar wording is used to designate the permitted uses in the R5 zone by Paragraph 6:5:1 which is as follows:

"All uses permitted in the Residential R4 Zone subject to the requirements thereof and the following uses: A double duplex dwelling and an apartment dwelling and uses accessory to the foregoing."

We respectfully say to you that in the R5 zone where multiple dwellings are permitted it was thought necessary to enact minimum spacing requirements. In the R2 zone this was not considered necessary. In both cases more than one main building on a lot is permitted.

In fact the proposed plan contemplates a greater separation between buildings than is either required or practicable when houses are built on subdivision lots in an R2 zone.

3. The Condominium Act makes possible the development and sale of a lot without splitting it into smaller lots. Purchasers of residential condominium units acquire their dwelling units plus a shared common interest in the land and servicing facilities in the condominium. One of the purposes of the Act is to make possible development on a more economical basis than would otherwise be possible because of this feature of sharing the cost of land and services. The Condominium Act does not change the application of a zoning by-law to land which is brought under The Condominium Act. This has been recognized in many developments. We need only refer to the high-rise apartment condominiums already built in your Township. A development which is otherwise proper having regard to the Planning Act and the zoning by-law remains proper when it is developed under The Condominium Act.

4. We have pointed out that the zoning by-law contemplates more than one building on a lot. If it had been the intention to prohibit more than one building on a lot in the whole of the area covered by it or in any zone we respectfully submit that the by-law would have contained an express prohibition. We are very doubtful whether such a provision, even if it were contained in the by-law, would be valid under Section 30 of The Planning Act. Such a prohibition could be supported if at all, only under the power to regulate "spacing" contained in Paragraph 4 of Subsection 1 of Section 30 of The Planning Act which is quoted in part in the preamble to By-law 39-62. We draw to your attention a recent decision of the High Court of Ontario, Re Anzil Construction Ltd. et al and Township of West Gwillimbury et al, 1971 2 O.R. 713, and quote therefrom the following passages at pages 721 and 722 of the report:

"If a glance be given at s-s (1) of s. 30 of The Planning Act, it will be observed that the word 'area' is only to be found in para. 4 Paragraph 4 runs thus:

30(1) By-laws may be passed by the councils of municipalities:

4. For regulating the cost of type of construction and the height, bulk, location, size, floor area, spacing, external design, character and use of buildings or structures to be erected within ... any defined area or areas ... and the minimum frontage and depth of the parcel of land and the proportion of the area thereof that any building or structure may occupy. Upon a perusal of the words in para. 4, it is clear that the Municipal Council has power to set the minimum frontage and depth of the parcel of land on which a house may be erected. It is familiar law that municipal powers are limited by the precise words of the enabling legislation. It is argued that there is no authority in s. 30 for a by-law regulating areas and accordingly it must be held to be bad."

"It may be true that the word 'spacing' should be given a broad definition, but I find it difficult to conceive that the purport of the words 'no single family dwelling shall be erected or used on a parcel of land having an area of less than 50 acres' is really an exercise of a power to regulate spacing of buildings. I venture to suggest that 'spacing' is generally accomplished by a provision defining the minimum distance between the side walls and the lot lines."

While the by-law in that case, dealt, of course, with a different type of matter we believe that the reasoning applies and that a prohibition of more than one building on a lot could not be sustained if the buildings otherwise come within the zoning by-law.

The project has been designed by a planner with careful thought to its architectural and esthetic desirability. We respectfully ask that the Township reply in the affirmative to the Minister's inquiry as to whether the project complies with the zoning by-law.

Especial reliance is placed by the applicant on a statement made by McRuer, C.J.H.C., in Re Bridgman and City of Toronto et al., [1951] O.R. 489 at p. 496, [1951] 3 D.L.R. 814 at p. 821, as follows:

There are certain cardinal principles that are never to be forgotten with respect to cases of this kind and with respect to all matters that the Courts have to deal with affecting property rights.

Everyone has a right to use his own property in any way that he may see fit, so long as he does nothing that will be a legal nuisance to his neighbours. That is a common law right. It is a question of liberty that is to jealously guarded by the Courts, and while one's rights may be affected by proper legislative action, until that is done one's personal common law rights are to be strictly guarded. In the construction of any Act, either of the Legislature or of a municipal government which is limited in its legislation to the authority conferred on it, one must place a strict construction on any statute or by-law which is restrictive in its nature of the liberty of the subject or the liberty with which he may exercise those rights that the common law gives to him over his property.

The above quotation represents the strict construction approach in dealing with the zoning by-laws, in contrast to the liberal interpretation which is generally adopted when dealing with remedial statutes, in accordance with s. 10 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 225.

I have reached the conclusion that the plan put forward by the applicant, albeit meritorious from a planning point of view, represents a device to circumvent the intent and purpose of By-law 39-62 as well as the letter of the by-law. In the first place none of the units of the condominium complies with the minimum 65-foot lot frontage on a public street which is a distinct requirement of s. 6. If each unit could use the same frontage, then the 395 ft. would be sufficient to qualify all. It would seem to me to be a very strange interpretation of the by-law to hold that a piece of land which can only support six lots with the required frontage could be used to qualify 14 one-family dwellings in addition to the existing one. It may be that the proposed project, containing as it does 98,794 sq. ft., would permit a total of slightly more than 15 units on the basis of 6,500 sq. ft. block area per dwelling-house. Thus the question of density, as it is stressed by the applicant, may not be a problem.

The applicant must come within the only relevant permitted use under R2, i.e., "a detached one family dwelling". Such a detached dwelling must be separated, isolated and unattached; this can hardly be said of a unit which shares common elements with its neighboring units such as the terraces adjacent to each dwelling-house which, while assigned exclusively to the use of the owner of the unit, still remain part of the common elements.

Furthermore, in my opinion the proposed plan infringes the provisions of s. 5:6 of the by-law entitled "Frontage on a Street" which provides:

No person shall erect or use any building or structure on a lot which does not front on a street.

It would do violence to this section to hold that a building far removed from the Carola St. frontage, although artistically placed in semi-circular fashion around a parking lot rectangle with appropriate mound screen is a building fronting on Carola St. In the same vein residential lots in order to comply with s. 2.68 must have a lot frontage in accordance with the requirements of the particular residential zone.

In my opinion there is no ambiguity in the provisions of the by-law and it therefore becomes unnecessary to resort to the canon of construction recommended when dealing with remedial legislation; see Wilson v. Jones, [1968] S.C.R. 554 at p. 559, 68 D.L.R. (2d) 273 at p. 277, per Spence, J.:

These principles, however, need only be applied when upon the reading of the whole by-law there is an ambiguity or difficulty of construction. Reading the whole by-law, I have, for the reasons which I have outlined, come to the conclusion that there is no such ambiguity or difficulty in interpretation and therefore the two canons are not applicable. It was held in that case that the words "private residences" as used in a zoning by-law should be construed in a popular rather than a technical sense, and could not include 17 separate suites in a two and a half-storey building. Even if it can be said that the proposed units, in the popular sense, constitute detached one-family dwellings, the use made cannot derogate from the zone requirements spelled out in s. 6:2:2.

It should be noted at this time that considerable local opposition has been generated from owners of properties adjacent to the applicant's site. It was best summarized in a letter written by one Alan White and directed to the Director of the Planning Department of the township (ex. F to the affidavit of Derek Oliver Campfield) dated June 3, 1971, pointing out the by-law requirements, the previous restricted development in accordance therewith and the reliance on single-family dwellings according to R2 requirement by the purchasers of property who claim the protection of the by-law. This letter refers to the over-development involved in the proposed plan and, while expressing sympathy for the developers, suggests that a condominium concept would be more suitable in a new subdivision where people concerned would have advance knowledge or that type of development. The local opposition was justified and it brings to mind the modern approach of Ontario Courts towards zoning legislation, well summarized in the judgement of Kelly, J.A., for the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re Bruce and City of Toronto et al., [1971] 3 O.R. 62 at p. 67, 19 D.L.R. (3d) 386 at p. 391.

The underlying purpose of the implementing by-law, is accordingly, to establish and maintain for each of the areas or zones into which the municipality is divided for the purposes of the plan, standards which will enhance and preserve the quality of life in the municipality and the amenities considered conducive to the health, safety, convenience and welfare of the inhabitants. On this account, I consider the by-law to be remedial and one to be accorded a liberal interpretation to the end that it may afford to the people of the community protection against departures from or encroachment upon the standards adopted by the municipality as expressive of these purposes.

Such an approach is, I believe, compatible with the proven necessity for the employment of external controls for the preservation of a fair standard of housing and land use and the expressed will of the people for a universal application of orderly planning to that end. I am not unmindful that it has not been uncommon for by-laws dealing with the use of lands and the use and erection of buildings to be referred to as restrictive by-laws and to be accorded a strict interpretation due to the fact that they have been approached as infringements on the freedom of choice of the owner and the use to which he may put his land.

Notwithstanding this, it is my belief that Ontario Courts now accept that the obligation imposed on the municipal council to plan for the growth and development of the community demands recognition of the necessity for means to compel the observance of the rights of the community to determine and enforce the direction in which the community should be shaped, and that in this regard the rights of the community are paramount to the rights of the owner.

I rely also on the approach taken by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Bayshore Shopping Centre Ltd. v. Corp. of the Township of Nepean et al., as well as Oshawa Wholesale Ltd. et al. v. Canadia Niagara Falls Ltd. et al., two decisions delivered orally by Aylesworth, J.A., for the unanimous Court on December 15, 1971, as yet unreported [Oshawa Wholesale Ltd. et al. v. Canadia Niagara Falls Ltd. et al., since reported [1972] 1 O.R. 481, 23 D.L.R. (3d) 401].

The extraordinary remedy represented by the prerogative writ of mandamus should not be used to compel the issuance of a building permit for a condominium plan clearly designed for the circumvention of the local zoning by-law: see Re Forfar and Township of East Gwillimbury et al., [1971] 3 O.R. 337, 20 D.L.R. (3d) 377.

The application for mandamus will therefore be dismissed. In view of this disposition it is not necessary for me to deal with the application for a declaration. There is some doubt as to whether a municipal by-law is an instrument which can be construed under the provisions of Rule 611: see different views expressed in Re W.J. Blainey Ltd. and City of Toronto, [1935] O.R. 476, [1935] 4 D.L.R. 328, per Hope, J., in contrast to Re Pane Niagara Enterprises Ltd. and City of Niagara Falls, [1968] 1 O.R. 287, per Keith, J.

In the result the application will be dismissed with costs if demanded. Application dismissed.

[1998] B.C.J. No. 2730

Vancouver Registry No. November 24, 1998.

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Burnyeat J. (In Chambers) Heard: October 2, 1998. Judgment: filed November 24, 1998.

Counsel: K.B. Friesen, for the petitioners. P.A. Williams, for the respondents.

[para1] BURNYEAT J.:-- When Mr. and Mrs. Mott purchased their suite in The Bristol at Hampton Place in September, 1996, the Strata Plan registered in the Land Title Office indicated a balcony off their suite totaling 18.2741 square metres. However, when they viewed the property prior to purchase, it would have been clear to them that not all of the space had been developed as balcony and that they could only reach some of the balcony space by stepping over a partition and railing. The remaining balcony space (about 11.0911 square metres) was not developed, had a rough stone surface and was not surrounded by a railing. The Strata Plan filed in the Land Title Office did not accord with the original architectural drawings which do not show the 11.0911 square metres of space adjacent to Strata Lot 33 as balcony but showed it as "roof." Mr. and Mrs. Mott subsequently applied to the Strata Council and Strata Corporation to remove part of the existing railing, to install an identical balcony railing around the 11.0911 square metre portion so that they could have "safe access" to it, and to finish the balcony so it would be identical to all other balconies in The Bristol.

[para2] Permission to make those changes was denied by the Strata Council and the Strata Corporation. Mr. and Mrs. Mott apply pursuant to ss. 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act saying that the owners of Leasehold Strata Plan LMS2185 have acted in a manner oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to them and that the Strata Corporation should be directed to grant the permission requested.

[para3] The series of events leading up to this application can be summarized as follows:

(a) The Strata Plan for 5735 Hampton Place, Vancouver, was filed in the Land Title Office on October 26, 1995. All units in the Strata Plan have balconies and there is nothing on the Strata Plan to indicate that the balcony adjacent to the Strata Lot which is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Mott is anything other than contiguous balcony space.

(b) When Mr. and Mrs. Mott purchased Strata Lot 33 on September 21, 1996, there was developed balcony space of approximately 6.183 square metres. It was clear that the remainder of the balcony was not finished and was not surrounded by a balcony railing. As well, this area did not have the traditional flooring which would be expected for a balcony. Rather, it had a surface of small stones.

(c) Although it changed its name, I will refer to the owner throughout as being UBC Properties Inc. UBC Properties Inc. entered into a long term lease with the "Original Lessee", Millennium Estate Homes Ltd. Under this Ground Lease, Millennium agreed to prepare and file a Leasehold Strata Plan in the Land Title Office. It was agreed that the Ground Lease was to be converted into individual leases with respect to each strata lot and that the individual leases would be subject to the terms and conditions contained in the Ground Lease, a Model Strata Lot Lease which formed part of the Ground Lease and to the provisions of the Condominium Act. When Mr. and Mrs. Mott purchased Strata Lot 33, they did so by obtaining an assignment of the Ground Lease and by registering that assignment in the Land Title Office.

(d) Article 8.2(a) of the Model Strata Plan Lease provided that owners such as Mr. and Mrs. Mott are responsible to maintain and repair and keep in good order and condition their own unit "including windows and doors and areas allocated to [their] exclusive use." Under Article 8.2(b), the Strata Corporation was responsible to: "... maintain and repair the exterior of the Buildings (excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a Strata Lot) including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the Buildings" Both of these obligations were subject to the proviso that "reasonable wear and tear" was accepted so long as the reasonable wear and tear did not "unreasonably affect the exterior appearance of the Buildings or the foundation or structure of the Buildings." Article 9.1 provided that owners such as Mr. and Mrs. Mott and the Strata Corporation must obtain written approval of UBC Properties Inc. before making any "changes, alterations, replacements, substitutions or additions affecting the structure of the Buildings ... or the exterior decoration, design or appearance of the Buildings" That Article further provided that this approval is not to be "unreasonably withheld."

(e) Under the Strata Plan filed, all 18.2741 square metres of the balcony space adjacent to Strata Lot 33 was designated as "limited common property" attaching to that Strata Lot.

(f) On March 27, 1997, Mr. and Mrs. Mott requested permission of the Strata Council to make "modest improvements to the limited common property/balcony" of their suite. They requested permission to finish off the existing outer lip by putting up a railing in the identical design/manufacturer as the existing railings in all ... balconies. In addition, we would also like to remove the interior railing located on our existing balcony, in order to have safe access to this location.

(g) The April 21, 1997 reply to Mr. and Mrs. Mott indicated that the Strata Council had considered their request "to extend the limited common area property to the outer edges of the building" and advised Mr. and Mrs. Mott that it was the opinion of the Strata Council that it was "in the best interests of the other Owners to maintain the present integrity of the building and disallow any changes." The reasons given for the decision were that the area was common property and, therefore, the cost of repairing any future damage as a result of leakage would be borne by all Owners, the suite below would be subjected to more noise, the change would set a precedent for future requests from Owners for similar extensions and that, although "aesthetically ... the extension of the railings would not detract from the building, the sight of chairs, barbecues, plant pots, or any other items in that space would detract from the overall appearance of the building - all other suites are limited to spaces confined by their balcony railings."

(h) Mr. and Mrs. Mott replied by a May 2, 1997 letter and pointed out that the area was not "common property" but "our limited common property." They also advised that it was the opinion of their legal counsel that "we do not need the approval of the Strata Council, although it was recommended as a courtesy that the Council be notified."

(i) A number of bylaws were then added to the existing bylaws. By special resolution passed May 13, 1997 and filed in the Land Title Office on June 6, 1997, bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 of the Strata Plan were added dealing with the "exterior appearance" of the building:

(i) Bylaw 139.6 provided that no signs, fences, gates, billboards, placards, advertising or notices of any kind and no awnings, radio or television antennae, supplementary heating or air-conditioning devices, no laundry, clothing, bedding or other articles, visible balcony or patio storage was permissible without the prior written approval of the Strata Council. (ii) Further, bylaw 139.6 required owners to obtain the permission of UBC Properties Inc. before making any alterations "such as finishing unfinished areas ... that might affect the structure, mechanical or electrical systems." The consent of UBC Properties Inc. is conditional upon the Strata Corporation also consenting.

(iii) Under bylaw 139.8, owners were to submit proposals in writing for consideration by the Strata Council to "alter the finish or appearance of the fencing, railing, floors, walls or ceiling of the patios or balconies adjoining any strata lot."

(j) On May 16, 1997, Mr. and Mrs. Mott wrote to the Strata Council indicating that they had received the advice through the original developers that the proposed changes would not affect any structural, mechanical or electrical systems. They also pointed out that no other owners had the potential to forward a similar request to the Strata Council as the areas adjacent to two other suites in the building were recorded either as roof space or not shown on the Leasehold Strata Plan and, accordingly, were clearly common property and "not eligible for a similar request."

(k) On June 3, 1997, the Strata Council reconsidered the request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott and reaffirmed their decision not to permit the alteration. In a June 10, 1997 letter, Mr. and Mrs. Mott were advised that there had been a reconsideration of their request to extend "the limited common property adjacent to your suite" and that the Strata Council had reaffirmed their decision "not to permit the alteration to common property as requested" as it was the position of the Strata Council that: "... if they allow one change to the exterior of the building that they will be setting a precedent for any future requests for changes to the exterior appearance of the building."

[para31] (l) The Strata Council minutes for the meeting held June 17, 1997 indicate that Mr. Mott addressed the Strata Council requesting that they "reconsider his request to extend the limited common property" adjacent to his suite by installing a balcony railing in detail identical to existing railing details at the building. The minutes indicate that Mr. Mott presented a legal opinion and that, while the Strata Council "concurred that the legal opinion may be correct", the Strata Council still had a concern "with the exterior appearance of the building" which was under their jurisdiction. They also pointed out that UBC Properties Inc. "... by virtue of the Land Lease, also had control over the exterior appearance of all buildings in Hampton Place and in the past have been reluctant to approve an exterior design change unless the Strata Council had also approved the design change."

(m) There was an extraordinary general meeting of the Strata Corporation on August 5, 1997 to consider a special resolution that the Strata Council "be authorized to approve exterior alterations to the limited common property of Strata Lot 33 on the basis that all costs would be to the expense of Mr. and Mrs. Mott." In his affidavit, Mr. Mott indicates that the members of the Strata Council urged the owners attending the meeting to defeat the special resolution. The special resolution was defeated: 9 votes in favour, 27 votes against, and 2 abstentions.

CONDOMINIUM ACT PROVISIONS WHICH ARE APPLICABLE [para4] Section 1 of the Condominium Act defines "common property" as the remainder of the lands and buildings which are not included within the strata lots shown on the strata plan and "limited common property" as being common property which has been designated under s. 53(1) and (2) of the Act for the use of "one or more strata lot owners."

[para5] Under s. 53(1), a strata corporation by special resolution may designate an area as "limited common property for the use of one or more strata lot owners." Similarly, a strata corporation can remove the designation by special resolution. However, if an area was designated as limited common property on the original strata plan, that designation can only be removed by the unanimous resolution of all owners. (Section 58(1) of the Act.)

[para6] Pursuant to s. 115(d) of the Act, all owners including Mr. and Mrs. Mott must use and enjoy: "... the common property, common facilities or other assets of the Strata Corporation in a manner that will not unreasonably interfere with their use and enjoyment by other owners, their families or visitors;" Under s. 115(h) of the Act, the owners must: "... receive the written permission of the Strata Council before undertaking alterations to the exterior or structure of the strata lot, but permission must not be unreasonably withheld."

[para7] Under s. 26 of the Act, the Strata Corporation must have bylaws providing for the "control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation." Under s. 116(a) of the Act, the Strata Corporation must: "Control, manage and administer the common property, common facilities or other assets of the Corporation for the benefit of all owners;."

[para8] The powers of the Strata Corporation are set out under s. 117 of the Act. Those powers include the ability to "... make rules and regulations it considers necessary or desirable from time to time in relation to the enjoyment, safety and cleanliness of the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation." (Section 117(h) of the Act.)

[para9] Under s. 42 of the Act, an owner may apply to the court "to prevent or remedy a matter" if the owner alleges:

(a) that the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted, or the powers of the corporation or strata council are being exercised, in a manner oppressive to one or more owners, including himself or herself, or (b) that some act of the strata corporation has been done or is threatened, or that some resolution of the owners or a class of owners has been passed or is proposed that is unfairly prejudicial to one or more owners, including himself or herself.

When such an application is being made pursuant to s. 42 of the Act, the court may make an interim or final order directing or prohibiting an act of the Corporation of varying a transaction or resolution and may "regulate the conduct of the corporation's future affairs."

POSITION OF THE PARTIES

[para10] The petitioners say that, subject to any bylaws which the Strata Council or the Strata Corporation may put into effect dealing with the use and enjoyment of all balconies, the petitioners should be entitled to use all of the limited common property which has been designated for their exclusive use. By denying the petitioners any use of part of their balcony, the Strata Corporation is purporting to use the power available to it to circumvent s. 58(1) of the Act or to circumvent Part 8 of the Land Title Act which allows the cancellation of an existing Strata Plan and the substitution of an amended plan only after a hearing of before the Registrar of Land Titles.

[para11] The respondents say that, while part of the common property of all of the owners of this Strata Plan has been designated as limited common property for the exclusive use of the petitioners, the Strata Corporation is still responsible for the control, management and administration of all common property and, generally, must administer for the benefit of all owners and not just the petitioners. They submit that the Strata Corporation has acted throughout in accordance with its duties and powers and that the Strata Corporation is now being asked to act other than in accordance with the overwhelming vote of the members of the Strata Corporation.

DISCUSSION

[para12] If the limited common property had been designated by the Strata Corporation for the benefit of the petitioners after the original Strata Plan had been filed in the Land Title Office, then the Strata Corporation could change the designation by special resolution. However, because the designation was made in the original Strata Plan filed in the Land Title Office, any removal of the designation must be by unanimous resolution. Because it can be assumed that Mr. and Mrs. Mott would not vote to remove the designation of part of what is shown as balcony on the Strata Plan filed in the Land Title Office, it is obviously the case that the designation will not be changed by a unanimous resolution of the Strata Corporation.

[para13] Alternatively, the Strata Corporation or one of the owners may apply to the Registrar of Land Titles pursuant the Part 8 of the Land Title Act for the cancellation of Strata Plan LMS2185 so that a different Strata Plan could be filed. Part 8 of the Land Title Act has also been used where the Registrar of Land Titles has been satisfied that there should be rectification of a title or a plan where a mis-description has taken place. However, counsel for the respondents was not in a position to provide any authority for the proposition that the Registrar of Land Titles could rectify a Strata Plan in these circumstances. In fact, the Registrar of Land Titles has apparently provided an informal opinion that rectification will not be available in this case. The Registrar of Land Titles is correct in the informal opinion already provided.

[para14] Accordingly, the only avenue that would be available is an application pursuant to Part 8 of the Land Title Act. Neither the Strata Corporation nor an owner have undertaken such an application. I anticipate that the reason that such an application has not been made is that such an application would not be successful before the Registrar of Land Titles.

[para15] Because neither of these avenues are available to the respondents, the petitioners say that the other owners are attempting to "expropriate" or improperly deny usage by the petitioners of the limited common property designated for their use.

[para16] When the petitioners first requested permission of the Strata Council on March 27, 1997, they were under no obligation to do so. Under Article 8.2(a) of their Lease, the petitioners were responsible for the maintenance and repair and for the condition of the areas which had been allocated to their exclusive use whereas, under Article 8.2(b) of the Lease, the Strata Corporation was responsible for the maintenance, repair and condition of the exterior but excluding balconies. Although the Strata Corporation was in a position to pass further bylaws providing for "control, management, administration, use and enjoyment" of common property including limited common property (pursuant to s. 26 of the Act) and was in a position to make rules and regulations regarding the "enjoyment, safety and cleanliness of the common property" (pursuant to s. 117(h) of the Act), the Strata Corporation had not passed any further bylaws or rules and regulations. That being the case, the provisions which govern are the Part 5 bylaws under the Act which include s. 115(c) and s. 116(f) which clearly provide that Mr. and Mrs. Mott are responsible to repair and keep in good repair and maintain the area. Those obligations were virtually identical to the obligations which were imposed on Mr. and Mrs. Mott and on the Strata Corporation pursuant to s. 8.2(a) and (b) of the Lease. The Part 5 bylaws also include ss. 115(d), 115(h) and 116(c) of the Act.

SECTION 115(d) OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT

[para17] The respondents rely on s. 115(d) of the Act to say that the petitioners can only use the limited common property which has been designated to their exclusive use in a way which will not reasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment by other owners, their families or visitors in that limited common property. While it is clear that limited common property is designated out of all of the common property available to the Strata Corporation, it is clear that s. 115(d) of the Act does not apply to limited common property which has been so designated. It is obvious that a balcony adjacent to a Strata Lot is no longer "common property" which is available for the "use and enjoyment by other owners, their families or visitors."

[para18] The broad interpretation of s. 115(d) of the Act urged by the respondents would require all owners to allow other owners to move freely through their Strata Lot to gain access to the outside balconies which are adjacent to most strata units in the building. The refusal to allow such access would be an unreasonable interference with the ability of other owners to use and enjoy that part of the common property which had been designated as limited common property. This interpretation of s. 115(d) is untenable. Exclusive use means exactly that.

[para19] It is clear that the intent of s. 115(d) was that the activities of one owner on common property not designated as limited common property would not interfere with the use and enjoyment by other owners of that common property. By combining the words "use and enjoyment", the legislature has provided that an owner may not unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment by other owners of the common property within a Strata Corporation to which all owners within the Strata Corporation have access or the use and enjoyment by one or more owners where limited common property has been designated to the use of a limited number of owners. Once common property has been designated as limited common property, the other owners in the Strata Corporation no longer have the right of use and enjoyment of that space.

[para20] Even if s. 115(d) could be interpreted to deal with "use or enjoyment", it cannot be said that the enjoyment by other owners has been diminished by the use of that space for the purpose for which it was intended. It cannot be said that an owner is interfering with the enjoyment of other owners merely because that balcony is being used in a manner which is consistent with the use and enjoyment that is available to all other owners of their own balconies. Accordingly, s. 115(d) cannot be relied upon by the respondents to deny the full use and enjoyment by Mr. and Mrs. Mott of all of the limited common property which has been designated for the exclusive use of the strata lot they own, being Strata Lot 33.

SECTION 115(h) OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT

[para21] The respondents submit that s. 115(h) of the Act requires that the petitioners as owners must receive the written permission of the Strata Council before undertaking the alterations they request.

[para22] The use of the word "exterior" as set out in this section has been held to refer only to the outer walls of the building: see, for instance, Buchbinder v. Strata Plan VR2096 (1992), 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 325 (B.C.C.A.) where the court concluded at p.329:

In my view, the patio is not incorporated within the definition of building exterior. It is not part of the outer walls. The building exterior could only refer to the walls as the word "exterior" modifies building and does not extend to cover a patio adjacent to that building.

It must also be noted that s. 115(h) of the Act refers to the exterior of the strata lot and not to the exterior of the building. What the petitioners seek to do is alter the exterior of the building to the extent that they wish to alter that part of the common property which has been designated as limited common property for their exclusive use. Accordingly, s. 115(h) does not apply to the request of the petitioners.

SECTIONS 115(c) AND 116(c) and (f) OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT

[para23] The respondents say that, because the Strata Corporation must maintain "all common areas" (s. 116(c)), there is an obligation on it to maintain that part of the common area which has been designated as limited common property and that this obligation overrides the duties of the owners and the duties of the Strata Corporation as set out in ss. 115(c) and 116(f) of the Act.

[para24] While it is clear that a strata corporation can pass bylaws under s. 26 of the Act providing for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of common property and to make rules and regulations regarding the enjoyment, safety and cleanliness of common property, those bylaws, rules and regulations must not conflict with the obligations imposed on an owner pursuant to s. 115(c) to repair and maintain areas allocated to the owner's exclusive use and must not purport to expand the exceptions set out in s. 116(f) of the Act which require the strata corporation to maintain and repair the exterior of the building but not the patios or balconies of a building. It is clear that, once common property has been designated as limited common property, the Strata Corporation no longer retains all of the powers it previously had to make bylaws to provide for the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the Strata Corporation. Certain aspects of the control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of what is now limited common property has been delegated through the Act and through the bylaws to the strata owner to whom the former common property has been designated.

[para25] The obligations imposed on Mr. and Mrs. Mott and on the Strata Corporation under ss. 115(c) and 116(f) of the Act are consistent with the provisions of Articles 8.2(a) and 8.2(b) of the Lease. The effect of these provisions is that the ability of the Strata Corporation to "maintain" and "repair" and to keep in "good order" and "condition" has by the provisions of the Act and Lease been delegated to owners such as Mr. and Mrs. Mott.

[para26] I am satisfied that the words "maintain", "repair", "good order" and "condition" are broad enough to encompass the alteration of the finish or appearance of the railing, floors or ceiling of a balcony as requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott. The use of these words in Article 8.2(a) of the Lease are broad enough to enable Mr. and Mrs. Mott to complete the balcony space designated for their exclusive use. Requiring them to maintain and repair the balcony space in "good order and condition" also requires them to put the balcony into "good order and condition" if they find it otherwise.

[para27] In Manton v. York Condominium Corp. No. 461 (1984), 49 O.R. (2d) 83, the obligation to "maintain" was found to be broad enough to include the obligation of the owners to correct a structural defect. The court cited with approval the following passage of Cory J.A. (as he then was) in York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 337 at 341:

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement costs of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

[para28] In support of this conclusion, Cory J.A. cited the decision in Canadian Pacific R. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1914), 49 S.C.R. 525 (S.C.C.) where the word "maintained" was interpreted to be wide enough to include the reconstruction of a bridge so that it could service an increased flow of traffic.

[para29] The decision taken by the Strata Council as evidenced by its April 21, 1997 reply to the March 27, 1997 request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott cannot stand. Even though it made a decision at the request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott, the Strata Council was without jurisdiction to deal with that request and, in any event, was not in a position to refuse it. In matters dealing with the "good order" and "condition" of the balcony space, Mr. and Mrs. Mott had only to apply for the written approval of UBC Properties Inc. before making the changes requested. They had to seek the approval of UBC Properties Inc. under Article 9.1 of the Lease but that approval could not have been "unreasonably withheld." The fact that Article 9.1 provides that owners as well as the Strata Corporation must obtain approval of UBC Properties Inc. before making any "changes, alterations, replacements, substitutions or additions affecting the structure of the Buildings ... or the exterior decoration, design or appearance of the Buildings ..." is further evidence that it was contemplated under the Lease that owners as well as the Strata Corporation were empowered to make such "changes, alterations, replacements, substitutions or additions" and that these matters were not under the sole purview of the Strata Corporation. There is nothing under the Lease which would lead me to the conclusion that UBC Properties Inc. was in a position to require the pre-approval of the Strata Corporation or the Strata Council when Mr. and Mrs. Mott sought its written approval for the changes they were contemplating.

[para30] However, the petitioners have been content to seek the approval of the Strata Council or the Strata Corporation in addition to expressing a willingness to follow any reasonable procedures established by the Strata Corporation regarding the design and implementation of the changes they request. Accordingly, while I am satisfied that the petitioners were under no obligation to apply to the Strata Council or to the Strata Corporation for the approval which was sought in their March 27, 1997 letter and while I am satisfied that the decision taken by the Strata Council regarding that request cannot stand, I will now deal with the petition as it relates to the decisions reached by the Strata Council as set out in its June 3, 1997 letter and by the Strata Corporation at its extraordinary general meeting held August 5, 1997.

EFFECT OF THE ADOPTION OF BYLAWS 139.6 and 139.8

[para31] The respondents submit that bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 were passed in accordance with ss. 26, 116(a) and 117(h) of Act. The respondents also submit that the requirement in s. 115(h) that permission is not to be "unreasonably withheld" have been replaced by bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 so that Strata Council is now in a position to withhold its approval "unreasonably." However, the respondents further submit that what has been done by the Strata Council and the Strata Corporation is both reasonable and for "the benefit of all owners."

[para32] Accordingly, it is necessary to review the provisions of bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 to see whether they did or can alter the situation which existed prior to June 6, 1997 when they became effective. It is also necessary to review these bylaws to confirm that they are consistent with the Part V bylaws which were in existence when Mr. and Mrs. Mott purchased their property and, in particular, ss. 115(c), 115(h), 116(c) and 116(f) of the Act.

[para33] Section 115(h) of the Act provides that permission from the Strata Council before undertaking alterations is not to be unreasonably withheld. While the Strata Corporation is authorized to pass further bylaws, rules and regulations, it does not follow that those provisions can be contrary to the provisions set out in the Act or the Lease. Bylaws must be consistent with the Act and with any Lease: see, for instance, Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 v. Rochon (1987), 38 D.L.R. (4th) 430 (Ont. C.A.). Accordingly, even assuming that bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 have been passed in substitution of the provisions of s. 115(h) of the Act, any permission by the Strata Council cannot be unreasonably withheld. This is the case even though bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 do not use the words "cannot be unreasonably withheld" which are contained in s. 115(h) of the Act.

[para34] As set out above, I am satisfied that s. 115(h) does not apply to the alterations to the exterior of the building which are being requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott as what they request is not alterations to the exterior or structure of their strata lot. Even assuming that I am incorrect in this finding, it is clear that permission to alter "must not be unreasonably withheld" under s. 115(h) of the Act. Accordingly, I am satisfied that any written permission required of the Strata Council has been unreasonably withheld as it seeks to deny access to and the use and enjoyment of that which has been designated for the exclusive use and enjoyment of Mr. and Mrs. Mott as the present owners of Strata Lot 33. What they seek to do is eminently reasonable. They seek to alter the exterior of the building to add features which are in accordance with the features present on each and every balcony in the building. The refusal of the Strata Council as reflected in its June 10, 1997 letter and in the Strata Council minutes dated June 17, 1997 are unreasonable. As well, their continued consideration of the request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott as a request to extend "the limited common property adjacent to" the strata lot of Mr. and Mrs. Mott is an unreasonable consideration of the request received. To the extent that the Strata Council dealt with the request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott on the basis that it was a request to extend limited common property as opposed to a request to fully use limited common property, the Strata Council was acting unreasonably when it decided that it would not be possible for Mr. and Mrs. Mott to proceed as they wished.

EFFECT OF BYLAW 139.6

[para35] The first part of bylaw 139.6 deals only with items which cannot be placed on balcony or patio space. None of what the petitioners wish to do violate the first part of the bylaw. It is clear that the Strata Corporation had the ability to pass this part of bylaw 139.6 pursuant to ss. 26 and 116(a) of the Act or as a rule and regulation under s. 117(h) of the Act. The petitioners have indicated a willingness throughout to be bound by such bylaws, rules and regulations.

[para36] As to the remainder of bylaw, bylaw 139.6 only purports to require the prior written consent of the Strata Corporation before making "Any alterations such as finishing unfinished areas ... that might affect the structure, mechanical or electrical systems. There is nothing to suggest that the alterations requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott would in any way affect the "structure, mechanical or electrical systems." In fact, the information requisitioned by Mr. and Mrs. Mott indicates otherwise.

[para37] While it might be said that the alterations requested would affect the "structure", the bylaw does not cover that prohibition. If it was intended that the bylaw cover that prohibition, the wording should have been: "might affect the structure or the mechanical or electrical systems." While it may have been the intention of the Strata Corporation to prohibit alterations that affect the structure, the failure of the drafters of the bylaw to make that intention clear will not result in a prohibition against the ability of Mr. and Mrs. Mott to complete the unfinished balcony or alter the finished balcony.

[para38] Even if I am wrong and what is requested by these petitioners would affect "the structure", it is clear that the requirement in bylaw 139.6 that the Strata Corporation also consent to any request being made to UBC Properties Inc. is contrary to the provision in Article 9.1 of the Lease which does not require the approval of the Strata Corporation before written approval is sought from UBC Properties Inc. Accordingly, the provisions in the Lease must prevail so that the prior written consent of the Strata Corporation as set out under the second part of bylaw 139.6 is not required.

[para39] Bylaw 139.8 requires written approval from the Strata Council before an owner can "alter the finish or appearance of the fencing, railing, floors, walls or ceiling of the patios or balconies adjoining any Strata Lot." However, Articles 8.2(a) and 8.2(b) of the Lease and ss. 115(c) and 116(f) contain contrary provisions. By requiring Mr. and Mrs. Mott to maintain and repair "areas allocated to ... [their] exclusive use" in good order and condition and by specifically excluding the Strata Corporation from being responsible for the maintenance and repair of the balconies and patios, the Lease and ss. 115(c) and 116(f) clearly established the respective responsibilities of the Strata Corporation and the Strata Lot Owners.

[para40] No bylaw or rules or regulations subsequently passed by the Strata Corporation could purport to affect that division of responsibilities. Accordingly, to the extent that the respondents seek to rely on bylaw 139.8 to deny the ability of Mr. and Mrs. Mott or any other owner to maintain and repair the balconies adjoining their strata lot including altering the finish or appearance of the railings, floors, or walls or ceilings of the balconies, I find that the provisions of the Lease and ss. 115(2) and 116(f) of the Act must prevail. Unless the provisions of a Lease contravene the provisions of the Condominium Act, the provisions of a Lease will prevail as against any contradictory bylaws which may be subsequently passed by a Strata Corporation.

[para41] I am satisfied that the words "maintain", "repair", "good order", and "condition" are broad enough to include the alterations and changes requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott. In the context of condominium living and in the context of the divided responsibilities between owners and the Strata Corporation, I am satisfied that these words should not be approached in a "narrow legalistic manner" but, rather, in the context of the Act, the Lease, and the specific responsibilities which have been given to the owners and which have been taken away from the Strata Corporation. I am satisfied that the changes requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott are in accordance with the respective obligations imposed upon owners such as Mr. and Mrs. Mott and upon the Strata Corporation pursuant to ss. 115(c), 116(c) and 116(f) of the Act. Bylaws 139.6 and 139.8 are contrary to the provisions of both the Lease and the noted sections of the Act and, in the circumstances, cannot be relied upon by the Strata Corporation to disentitle the petitioners from doing that which they are responsible to do under Article 8.2(a) of the Lease.

[para44] The designation of this limited common property by Millennium was a more secure form of tenure for Mr. and Mrs. Mott than a designation by special resolution would have been. The right to exclusive use may well be important to purchasers such as Mr. and Mrs. Mott and the designation by Millennium effectively made their exclusive use of this area permanent as it could only be removed by a 100% vote. Their equitable interest cannot be subsequently removed by the Strata Council or by the Strata Corporation unless by votes taken under ss. 53(1) or 58(1) of the Act. No authorities were provided which would indicate that the Strata Corporation can retroactively prohibit Mr. and Mrs. Mott from occupying all of the balcony space which was clearly designated as being for their exclusive use. I agree with the submission of Mr. and Mrs. Mott that the attempt by the Strata Corporation to prohibit them from occupying all of their balcony space is a form of expropriation or wrongful denial of equitable rights which should not be countenanced by the court. SECTION 117(h) OF THE CONDOMINIUM ACT

[para45] The respondents also rely on ss. 26 and 117(h) of the Act and the requirement of the Strata Corporation to have bylaws providing for the "control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and the common property" to justify the position taken by the Strata Council and Corporation. However it is clear that any bylaws passed must be "reasonable and consistent" with the Act: Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 v. Rochon (1987), 44 R.P.R. 228 (Ont. C.A.). Accordingly, this requirement cannot be used by it to create bylaws which are inconsistent with the remainder of the Act.

[para46] Section 117(h) of the Act requires the Strata Corporation to make rules and regulations in relation to the "enjoyment, safety and cleanliness" of the balcony space. This section of the Act could not be used by the Strata Corporation to enact a bylaw which would perpetuate unsafe conditions. Accordingly, it cannot be said that the Strata Corporation was acting pursuant to s. 117(h) of the Act when it purported to create bylaws which deny the petitioners the ability to add balcony railings. The lack of railing allows the potentially unsafe use of an area to which the owners of Strata Lot 33 have been granted the exclusive use: that part of their balcony which does not have a railing.

[para47] As well, the powers of the Strata Corporation set out under s. 117(h) could not be used to deny access to a particular limited common property. Rather, it only allows the Strata Corporation to make rules and regulations in relation to enjoyment, safety and cleanliness of all common property including limited common property only if the rules and regulations apply equally or unless it can be shown that a particular use of certain common property should be denied because the enjoyment, safety and cleanliness of other common property would be diminished as a result of the proposed use.

[para48] As the petitioners are prepared to be bound by any rules and regulations relating to enjoyment, safety and cleanliness which also bind other strata owners in their use of the limited common property specifically designated to them, s.117(h) cannot be used by the Strata Corporation to deny the petitioners the enjoyment of all parts of the limited common property which has been designated for their exclusive use.

DECISIONS RELIED UPON BY THE RESPONDENTS

[para49] The respondents rely on the decision of Gray v. Strata Plan VR840 (1994), 41 R.P.R. (2d) 79 (B.C.S.C.) where an owner had also applied under s. 42 of the Act when their request to enclose a patio area with glass was refused. The patio was limited common property and it was clear that the patios of about one-half of the approximately 100 suites in the building had already been enclosed including a patio off another ground floor suite similar to the suite of the plaintiff. After discussion "expressing concerns about the visual impact to the south side of the building, overall height and the possible increased heating costs", a motion was passed at an Annual General Meeting that the request for a patio enclosure would not be approved "at this time", that the matter would be referred to the Strata Council "for further study" and that an extraordinary meeting of the strata corporation would be called so that all owners could review further materials that it was requested by the plaintiff to produce. The additional information from the plaintiff was to include a professional engineering study to determine "the base stability and the requirement for footings and/or concrete pad" and an "architectural rendering giving the owners a better prospective of the visual impact." The plaintiff refused to undertake those additional studies and, instead, applied to the court pursuant to s. 42 of the Act.

[para50] Mr. Justice Errico described the situation as follows: "... while the petitioners have not received the permission they have requested, there has as yet been no express refusal." (At p.82.) In line with a number of other decisions which have interpreted the words "oppressive" and "unfairly prejudicial" as contained within s. 42 of the Condominium Act in the same manner as those words appear in s. 224 of the Company Act, Errico J. concluded that there would be no oppression providing the strata corporation acted "in good faith." Errico J. concluded that the activities of the strata corporation had been neither oppressive nor unfairly prejudicial.

[para51] It must be noted that Errico J. was not dealing with a final decision to deny the use requested by the petitioner. Rather, he was asked to determine whether the request for further information and the refusal of the Strata Corporation to consider the request was unreasonable or was "unfairly prejudicial." He concluded that the procedures adopted by the Strata Corporation were not unfairly prejudicial.

[para52] As well, the decision did not deal with the right of an owner to occupy all of the limited common property which had been designated to him. Rather, the decision related to the ability of an owner who already had full access to his limited common property to use it in a certain way. It is necessary to distinguish between the ability of a Strata Corporation to regulate use and enjoyment and the inability of a Strata Corporation to deny any use and enjoyment. Accordingly, while I adopt the definitions of "oppressive", "unfairly prejudicial", and "in good faith" as set out by Errico J., the decision does not otherwise deal with the situation which is faced by these parties.

[para54] Firstly, this decision relates to common property and not to limited common property. Secondly, the decision revolves around the question of whether the court will interfere with the decision of a strata corporation when it has democratically decided to administer common property for the benefit of all owners. While it is clear that the Strata Corporation must control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of all owners, it is also clear that common property which has designated as limited common property does not remain under the full control, management and administration of a Strata Corporation for all purposes and for all time.

[para55] Similarly, the decisions of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. No. 702 v. Sonshine (1989), 8 R.P.R. (2d) 183 (Ont. D.C.) which dealt with a canopy that had been erected by an owner and affixed to the exterior walls of the building and Milacek v. The Owners Strata Plan LMS0018, Unreported, Action No. S36466 (New Westminster Registry), February 4, 1997 (B.C.S.C. - In Chambers) which dealt with a decision reached by the strata council to allow radio transmitters to be installed on the roof of the building only deal with the ability of a strata corporation to regulate and manage what is done on common property not designated as limited common property.

DECISIONS RELIED UPON BY THE PETITIONERS

[para56] The petitioners rely upon two decisions to advance the proposition that they should be entitled to occupy their designated limited common property in accordance with the ability of all other owners to use similar space designated for their use and that they should be allowed to finish that space in accordance with all other balconies within the building.

[para57] In Buchbinder v. Strata Plan VR2096 (1992), 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 325 (B.C.C.A.), the court dealt with a situation where the appellant had erected an aluminium garden shed on a patio area outside her residence. It is clear that the shed was erected on limited common property and the question was whether the chambers judge had erred in finding that the garden shed did not breach the building exterior bylaw which provided in part:

"no visible changes to the building's exterior are permitted."

The trial judge held that the garden shed did not fall within the specific prohibitions of the bylaw and, accordingly, was not prohibited by the bylaw.

[para58] The respondent argued that the "principle of community" should be applied. In this regard, the court concluded:

The principle of community living has only been applied where there has been a clear infraction of a condominium by-law. The argument advanced is that when people join a condominium development they agree to abide by the declaration of community living. In the base at bar, a garden shed being placed on a patio was not specifically prohibited by the by-law. The intention may have been to maintain the integrity of the complex (the aesthetics), however, it would be unreasonable to conclude that, based on the principle of community living, condominium owners should assume they are not entitled to place any object on their patios. (at p. 328)

[para59] In this case, the principle of community living would result in the first portion bylaw 139.6 dealing with what can be placed or stored on balconies or patios being upheld. However, the principle of community living could not be relied upon to retroactively deny any use, enjoyment, and full access to designated limited common property. The designation of this limited common property for the exclusive benefit of the owners of Strata Lot 33 in the original strata plan was a vesting of the equitable interest to fully occupy, use and enjoy that space. The principle of community living would then apply after the equitable interest of full access had been assured. Even if I am wrong in that assumption, the principle of community living will apply only when there had been a "clear infraction of the condominium bylaw." Such a violation is not present in this case. What Mr. and Mrs. Mott wish to do does not clearly violate the second part of bylaw 139.6 as there is nothing to suggest that what they wish to do might affect the structure, mechanical or electrical systems. At the same time, the requirement under bylaw 139.8 that the owners are to submit proposals in writing for consideration by the Strata Council before they "alter the finish or appearance of the fencing, railing, floors, walls or ceilings of the patios or balconies adjoining any strata lot" is not broad enough to prohibit the addition of railings and floors as opposed to the alteration of the finish or appearance of them. As the additions have not been specifically prohibited, it cannot be said that there is a clear infraction of bylaws 139.6 and 139.8.

[para60] In Re Peel Condominium Corp. No. 73 v. Rogers et al (1978), 21 O.R. (2d) 521 (Ont. C.A.), the strata corporation appealed a decision dismissing their application seeking an order that Mr. Rogers take down four cedar trees which he planted on his limited common property. The strata corporation had argued that the prohibition against making "additions, alterations, improvements or renovations" to common property applied to limited common property as well. The learned trial judge had found that four trees had been planted within the limited common area and, accordingly, the provisions dealing with the common property did not apply.

[para61] On appeal, the strata corporation argued that the right to plant trees on all of the common and limited common property had been taken away by the clear language or necessary implication of Article XI(4) of the bylaws which provided:

No owner shall make any structural change in or to his unit or any change to an installation upon the common elements, maintain, decorate, alter or repair any part of the common elements ... without the prior written consent thereto of the Board.

[para62] The Court of Appeal dealt with the issue of whether, because limited common property was part of the common property, the prohibition contained within the article dealing with the common property should apply even though the limited common property had been designated to the exclusive use of Mr. Rogers. Speaking on behalf of the court, Brooke J.A. stated:

The principle cannot be doubted, but in my view it should not be used to reduce the grant of an exclusive use of the garden area to simple occupation of a piece of ground. This is, in my opinion, the effect of counsel's submission. The construction contended for is a strained one. I think that reasonable people would, as this man did, understand that if they were granted exclusive use of a garden area they could have a garden there. If it had been intended to restrict its exclusive use to a grassy area the declaration could have so provided. In my opinion, the prohibition ... against alterations without the consent of the board, contemplated some more far-reaching change than the normal planting of trees or shrubs in a garden area. (at pp.523-4)

[para63] The court also relied on s. 7(4) of the Ontario Act which provided: "Subject to this Act, the declaration and the bylaws, each owner may make reasonable use of the common elements." The court decided that the planting of the four cedar trees in question constituted a "reasonable use of the common elements" of which the respondents had been given exclusive use.

[para64] There is no equivalent in British Columbia to s. 7(4) of the Ontario Act. However, the effect of s. 115(d) has the same effect. In this case, there is no reasonable interpretation that the grant of an exclusive use of balcony space could be reduced to only the use and enjoyment of some of the space but no use and enjoyment of the rest. I am also satisfied that the occupation of all the space designated as balcony constitutes a reasonable use of the common elements or a reasonable use of the limited common property which could not be or which has not been restricted by the Strata Corporation. Accordingly, even assuming that it was necessary for the petitioners to seek the permission of the Strata Council or the Strata Corporation, I am satisfied that the decisions reached by the Strata Council and the Strata Corporation are unfairly prejudicial to these petitioners and cannot stand.

CONCLUSION

[para65] Accordingly, the Strata Corporation is ordered to provide through the Strata Council its written approval for the changes, alterations, replacements, substitutions or additions requested by Mr. and Mrs. Mott and the decision taken by the Strata Corporation at its extraordinary general meeting held August 5, 1997 is reversed. The Strata Council, acting on behalf of the Strata Corporation, is to advise UBC Properties Inc. of the approval of the Strata Corporation of the request of Mr. and Mrs. Mott so that, even though it is not required under Article 9.1 of the Lease, UBC Properties Inc. will have received the written approval of the Strata Corporation when considering any request to be forwarded by Mr. and Mrs. Mott.

[para66] The petitioners are entitled to their costs against the respondents, The Owners, Leasehold Strata Plan LMS2185 on a party and party (scale 4) basis. Those costs are to be paid by The Owners other than Mr. and Mrs. Mott. In this regard, see Strata Plan NW243 v. Hansen [1996] B.C.J. (Q.L.) No. 2201.

CBR# 311

The Owners, Strata Plan 1229, Plaintiffs, and Trivantor Investments International Ltd., Defendant

[1995] B.C.J. No. 557

Victoria Registry No. 91 2714 [912714]

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Owen-Flood J. Heard: January 30, 31, February 1, 2 & 23, 1995. Judgment: filed March 14, 1995.

Counsel for the Plaintiffs: R.C. Di Bella and Nicholas A. Mosky. Counsel for the Defendant: D.S. Milos.

[para1] 1 OWEN-FLOOD J.:-- At issue is whether or not the defendant, being an owner as opposed to an owner/developer of a strata plan, owes a duty to subsequent strata plan owners pursuant to the Condominium Act.

[para2] 2 If there is such a duty, has the defendant (hereinafter referred to as "Trivantor") violated that duty?

[para3] 3 If Trivantor has breached its duty to what extent, if at all, is Trivantor liable in damages? Facts:

[para4] 4 I make the following finds of fact:

[para5] 1. On or about August 26, 1983, Trivantor purchased Strata Plan 1229, located at 940 Inverness Road and 949 Cloverdale Avenue, Victoria, British Columbia. Trivantor purchased from Victoria & Grey Trust Company who, in turn, had obtained the property pursuant to foreclosure proceedings against the original owners of the strata title, namely, Laserena Inns Ltd. Strata Plan 1229 consists of two buildings each containing 15 condominium units. Trivantor took possession of both buildings on August 26, 1983, on the basis of a cursory inspection of the exteriors and interiors of the buildings, excluding the roofs. Trivantor did not receive any blueprints for either of the buildings.

[para6] 2. From August 26, 1983 until February, 1989, Trivantor rented out the 30 condominium units. During this time Trivantor failed to set up or function as a strata council as that term is defined in s.118 of the Condominium Act. Moreover, Trivantor failed, during this period, to perform any of the duties listed in s.122 of the Condominium Act. For example, Trivantor

(a) did not keep a copy of the Act or changes in the bylaws under Part V.

(b) did not keep a register of the members of the strata council.

(c) did not keep a register of the strata lot owners setting the strata lot number, the names of the owners, the unit entitlement, the name and address of the mortgagee who must notify the strata corporation, the name of any tenant or lessee and a notation of any assignment by the owner to the lessee.

(d) did not keep an annual general budget for each year.

(e) did not keep or cause to be kept minutes of its proceedings.

(g) did not prepare proper accounts relating to all money of the strata corporation and the income and expenditure of it of each annual general meeting.

[para7] Similarly, Trivantor did not:

... cause to be prepared an interim budget of anticipated common expenses for the first 9 month period following registration of the strata plan, ...

as required by s.128(4) of the Act.

[para8] Nor did Trivantor establish a fund as required by s.35(1)(a) of the Act:

... sufficient for the control, management and administration of the common property, for the payment of premiums on policies of insurance and for the discharge of other obligations of the corporation;

[para9] I further note that Trivantor did not take steps as required by s.35(1)(c) of the Act to determine the amounts to be raised in order to establish an administrative fund and contingency reserve fund. By the same token, it took no steps to raise the amounts required to be determined pursuant to s.35(1)(c) of the Act in order to establish an administrative fund and a contingency reserve fund as required by s.35(1)(d) of the Act. Likewise, Trivantor did not establish a contingency fund as required by s.35(1)(b) of the Act.

[para10] And, finally, I note that beyond carrying out minor repairs as requested by the tenants and performing the cosmetic painting and landscaping helpful in augmenting its sales campaign, Trivantor did not, as required by s.116 of the Act:

a) control, manage and administer the common property, common facilities or other assets of the corporation for the benefit of all owners;

b) keep in a state of good and serviceable repair and properly maintain the fixtures and fittings, including the elevators, ... and recreational facilities, if any, and other apparatus and equipment used in connection with the common property, common facilities, or other assets of the corporation; c) maintain all common areas, both internal and external, including lawns, gardens, parking and storage areas, public halls and lobbies;

d) maintain and repair, including renewal where reasonably necessary, pipes, wires, cables, chutes and ducts for the time being existing in the parcel and capable of being used in connection with the enjoyment of more than one strata lot or common property;

f) maintain and repair the exterior of the buildings, excluding windows, doors, balconies and patios included in a strata lot, including the decorating of the whole of the exterior of the buildings;

g) collect and receive all contributions toward the common expenses paid by the owners and deposit the same with a savings institution; and

h) pay all sums of money properly required to be paid on account of all services, supplies and assessments pertaining to, or for the benefit of, the corporation.

[para11] 3. Commencing February, 1989, Trivantor began selling the condominium units to third parties on an "as is" basis, with the vendor (Trivantor) agreeing to provide a contingency reserve fund to be turned over to the strata council for purposes the strata council deemed fit. Each interim agreement of purchase and sale further stipulated that "the purchasers have received and approved prospectus and disclosure statement on strata plan 1229". The disclosure statement issued by Trivantor on October 12, 1988, stipulated:

Construction and equipment warranty

There is no construction or other warranties provided by the owner.

[para12] The statement contained a further declaration by Trivantor to the effect that:

The foregoing declarations constitute full, true and plain (sic) disclosure of all facts relative to the Development referred to above, proposed to be sold or leased, as required by the Real Estate Act of the Province of British Columbia as of October 12, 1988.

[para 13] 4. The strata council was formally established at a meeting held on August 17, 1989. That meeting was attended by the owners of the six sold condominium units and Mr. William Knowles, representing Trivantor as owner of the remaining 24 units. The plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to, for convenience, as "the strata council") assumed responsibility for all the maintenance expenses as of January 1, 1990.

[para 14] 5. Upon sale of all 30 strata lots a special contingency fund of $30,000 was created by Trivantor for the strata council, by allocation of $1,000 from the sale of each strata lot. The strata council paid $12,941 out of the contingency fund to Trivantor to reimburse it for certain maintenance work, carried out by Trivantor primarily for the purpose of expediting its sales of the remaining units. This work was carried out after control of the strata council had passed from Trivantor to the new owners of some of the strata lots.

[para15] 6. Mrs. Florence Walker took over as president of the strata council in January, 1990. Mrs. Walker became aware of numerous maintenance problems in the buildings but was unable to obtain blueprints or records from Trivantor which she requested for the purpose of making arrangements for maintenance of the buildings. On the evidence it is clear that these buildings were poorly designed and poorly constructed.

[para16] 7. Of particular concern was the flooding problem in the ground floor strata lots in both buildings. In one ground floor unit in the Inverness building, for example, leaks were so bad that the water used to run through the living and dining room across the cement floor underneath the carpet. Likewise, in one of the ground floor condominiums in the Cloverdale building, due to dampness from flooding, mushrooms were growing in the fireplace. I also find that in the Cloverdale building there was water running down the wall of the lobby and of the storage locker room.

[para17] In response to these problems, Mrs. Walker, acting on behalf of the strata council, commissioned a survey from Van Isle Waterproofing & Restoration Services Ltd. That survey, at an invoiced cost of $300 was done by the general manager of Van Isle, Mr. Bill Okell. I accept his findings with respect to both buildings. Mr. Okell found as follows:

Item #1 - Deck drains, - The numerous suites I visited point towards this problem of poor drainage. It appears as this problem was created from inception. Existing structural settling has also assisted in this problem. The proper route to take would have been to provide sloped floor joists to the drains. As for the existing problem and how to rectify this, the lower balcony soffit should be removed to access the above underside of plywood. New drains should be cut into the surface with accompanying pipe to the existing rain water pipes. Costs should be in the neighbourhood of $700 per deck.

Item # 2 - Leaks in glassed areas, - This problem is again exacerbated by its initial poor construction and poor engineering. All the sundeck windows are installed to the rough cedar sundeck supports. The problem here exists that as the cedar gets wet, the caulking refuses to adhere to the glass sheet metal/cedar support transition. As time has gone on, the cedar is warping, shrinking and cracking. The exiting caulking is cracked, shrunk and un-adhered. Costs to replace these enclosures would be horrendous. I would recommend remedial extensive caulking to each glassed in enclosure. Costs per deck would be in the neighbourhood of $700 - $800.

Item # 3 - Fireplace leaks, - This problem is attributed to two problems, the stucco cased roof top chimney enclosures and the sheet metal drip ledges. The stucco is a California based stucco that allows moisture to pass through very readily. I would recommend to apply two coats of an acrylic based product called Thorolastic to the stucco chimney boxes. This problem would be more of an engineering flaw. Costs would be in the neighbourhood of $210 per chimney. The other problem here is the sheet metal drip ledges. The structural shrinkage of the building, in some places up to a 2" drop, has allowed gaps in the chimneys. The maintenance here would be to cut the existing caulking away from the chimneys, lower the sheet metal drip ledges to their new threshold and re-caulk. This problem here is more of a maintenance item and costs would be in the neighbourhood of $100 per chimney box.

Item # 4 - Around window casings, - The internal seal breakages of sliding glass doors appears to be design problems. A proper window manufacturer could assess this problem more accurately but the main problem stems from a poor gasket join at the corners and a lack of caulking at the metal joints. Costs to rectify this problem could be in the neighbourhood of $150 per door.

Item # 5 - Running water, - This problem, by far, is the most confusing and would of course be the most time consuming. The route to take to track down the problem would be to shut down the water supply in each suite and identify where the water is originating from. The running water is exiting out a copper pipe and appears to be clean potable tap water. The exit copper pipe observed in the downstairs parkade offers the impression that this installation was performed some time after initial construction.

The source would have to be tracked down in which case allow one person up to 8 hours to track the source down with access to all suites. Costs could be in the neighbourhood of $250 - $500 with the possibility of greater costs if metering devices [sic] were installed to each suite to track down the constant running water noise.

Item # 6 - Ground level perimeter, - The waterproofing to the exterior parkade slab roof/exterior structural wall is extremely poor. Our company returned once in 1985 to remedy an original building construction problem with the membrane as it was applied improperly. The structure has a tar and paper membrane trying to stand up as a below grade waterproof membrane. There are leaks in several suite balconies and upon my visit, I noticed excavation in one area to resolve additional broken membrane. There are too many deficiencies in these types of roofing membranes as contractors attempt to use an above ground roofing product for an obvious below grade membrane. The parkade walls as they meet the structural parkade roof lid are all leaking in various areas and the only way to resolve this problem would be to excavate out the perimeter soil to expose the joint and to seal the concrete crack and cold joint. Costs for this specific work would be in the area of $5,000 - $8,000. The concrete foundation wall tie rod holes are also weeping and to rectify these structural problems, excavation and sealing would have to take place. Costs could be another $3,000 - $4,000 for all this work. The front entrance slab drains to the front door and floods out quite often. Some-one has drilled holes into the underground parkade to relieve the pressure. This original design flaw should be re-worked to provide for adequate drainage and parkade hook-up to existing drains. Costs would be in the area of $2,500

Major points:

(A) Proper below grade membranes should have been used in initial construction. (B) No building paper was used on the outside of the patio balconies.

(C) The entire siding is shrinking, chipping, cracking, blistering and knot holes are falling out. Remedial caulking is a necessity or siding replacement will be imminent [sic].

(D) Extremely poor detail work at glass enclosures, new caulking is needed throughout.

(E) The structure is moving so flexible based sealants are needed at the roof top level on all flashings, cast sewer pipes and chimney boxes.

(F) There is a lack of a proper below grade foundation wall membrane. The ingress of moisture will continue to corrode the re-bar until structural cracks will open up to a greater degree.

Conclusions - This structure appears to be suffering from not only poor design but also cheap materials used. Time and time again I am subject to observing the developers [sic] cheapest, fastest and easiest products used. This structure is a typical point of claim.

[para 18] 8. An additional expense was incurred in regard to a water problem in Unit 107 of 949 Cloverdale. In this unit the sound of running water was so loud at all times that the new owners had to keep the bathroom and closet doors in the master bedroom closed because of the noise. In the result, Highland Plumbing and Heating Ltd. were retained insofar as the problem in Unit 107 was concerned. They located the cause of the problem, namely a valve that even though it required servicing was built into the wall of the bathroom under the sink in the master bedroom and walled over. The function of the valve was to relieve the pressure of the running water as required. Highland Plumbing & Heating Ltd. installed a new valve in an appropriate position at a cost of $406.35.

[para19] 9. A problem with the toilets in the ground floor suites "backing up" caused the strata council to incur the cost of employing Roto-Rooter Sewer Service (at a cost of $288) to clear away the roots that over the years had grown into and were blocking the sewer pipes.

[para20] 10. Also of serious concern was the damage that had resulted from inadequate maintenance of the grounds. The strata council found that in the years prior to its taking over control of the buildings, ivy had been allowed to grow up and penetrate under the cedar siding at the 949 Cloverdale building, thus loosening the siding. The strata council employed Scotts Gardening & Landscaping at a cost of $214.72 to remove the ivy and put in grass sod where the ivy had been, to prevent the ivy re-growing.

[para21] 11. There were, in addition to the problems enumerated above, further maintenance matters that required attention. For example, the fire protection equipment in the buildings had not been properly maintained and there was need for the installation of further fire extinguishers together with cabinets in the parking garages in both buildings. The cost incurred in this regard was $257.32 paid by the strata council to Pacific Coast Fire Equipment. Similarly, the strata council found that one of the time clocks for the garage fans was broken and that the roof fans had seized due to lack of maintenance. Invoices were incurred with Nichol Electric Co. Ltd. in the amount of $2,077.40 for repair of the fans. Finally, there was an invoice from Quadra Lamp & Heating in the amount of $131.28. I am persuaded on the evidence that this amount was paid for by Trivantor.

[para22] 12. By early 1991 what had been minor problems for the strata council were now becoming major. Accordingly, the strata council commissioned a report from Thornley/White Associates Ltd., project management and construction cost consultants. The report was done by Mr. Chris Baker. His report, which I accept, is dated February 12, 1991. In it he observed:

OVERVIEW

There are five items which are presently causing concern, these are:

1. Water is entering into the ground floor units through the exterior wall. The exterior grade level is approximately 30" above the level of the ground floor slab. Three units are involved.

Some work to correct the ingress problems has been done in the past by Van Isle Waterproofing and another unknown company.

2. Water is entering into the glazed-in portions of the patio decks on the upper three floors. The deck is full length with only the bedroom door being open and the living room glazed in. In this regard, the owner of unit 308 has re-caulked his glazing and appears to have cured the problem to his satisfaction. As a result, unit 208 is also much better but units 106 and 108 still have a steady ingress of water.

The problem appears to lie in the poor construction of the timber frame and a constant need for caulking, which itself is generally in poor repair.

3. There have been leaks through the roof. These appears to have been due to problems with the flashings around the chimney penetrations. There are many penetrations for plumbing vents, roof vents, chimneys, etc.

The roof covering appears, from preliminary inspection, to be sound, as does the flashing. We believe that the roof is composed of three layers of built up felt, with gravel on top. The usual anticipated life of this type of roof is 12 years, of which 9 years have now passed.

4. There appears to be a problem with the domestic water distribution in the units, Unit 107 in the East building has a continuous water flow noise even though everything is off. Units 207 and 07 [sic] have the residual of the noise through the pipes but not so noticeably as 107. Suite 105, adjacent to 107, is also very noisy.

Units 307 and 305 have complained that their water froze during this last winter. From the hot water tank in 307 the line appears to rise towards the ceiling. The freezing may be occurring where it passes between the roof structure, above the insulation. However, from the descriptions given, it may be only a problem with the hot water tank malfunctioning.

In the store room in the underground car park area a copper pipe runs continuously, by gravity.

Further investigation of the plumbing is difficult without opening up the building fabric. However, the names of two plumbers have been given to Ms Walker with the recommendation that a full report be prepared.

5. The front entrance concrete slab on the west building slopes towards the front door allowing water to penetrate.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Dig out the perimeter of the building to the footing level, or 1'0" below the slab, check perimeter drain, install bituthene or similar material to the units which have not been waterproofed. Check those previously repaired. 2. Re-caulk every closed-in glazed deck, open up soffit of 206 deck, as staining indicates water in side, with the possibility of wet rot being present. Check glass fixing in the 42" balusters and correct.

3. Commission a roofing inspection report and review previous work on the flashings with Heritage Roofing (Roy Corbett).

4. Retain a plumber to investigate the running water noise, the flow in the underground area and the freezing question.

5. Install a grate drain across door entrance to connect to perimeter drain. Replace damaged carpet upon completion.

[para23] 13. I find the strata council did not have the financial wherewithal to implement immediately Mr. Baker's recommendations. On or about June 6, 1992, however, the strata council received an estimate from Home Pro Contractors in the amount of $17,976 regarding the excavation and waterproofing of the parkade foundations of both buildings, the cleaning and inspection of the concrete construction joints, the installation of drain tile and rock, backfill and re-seeding, as well as site clean up. The work was carried out between June and August, 1992 for the estimated amount and there have been no further problems with water entering the ground floor suites. One further payment was made to Home Pro Contractors in the amount of $803.55. Thus the strata council has carried out recommendation #1 of the Thornley/White report dated February 12, 1991.

[para24] Recommendation #2 of the Thornley/White report has been carried out in part by some of the owners but not by all of them. The strata council obtained an estimate for the necessary work remaining to be done to implement this recommendation from Paul Desautels Construction Ltd. The estimate, dated July 4, 1991, was for $17,575.75. The strata council has submitted that the estimate of $17,575.75 if given today, with judgment interest from July 4, 1991 to February 23, 1995, would be the sum of $19,033.45.

General:

Roof hatches on both buildings are poorly constructed and poorly flashed.

There is some minor debris on the roofs.

Plumbing vents have storm collars which have not been tightened or caulked.

Victorian i [1st Building]

Strainer missing from roof drain. It appears there may be some gravel inside.

There is evidence of a previous repair at the drainage trough. Workmanship not to industry standards.

Victorian ii [2nd Building]

Hall fan housing is rusted and requires painting. Also the housing does not overlap curb flashing. There is a split in the roof membrane at the trough area.

Flashings at elevator penthouse are what is referred to as a surface reglet (different from the other building and rely on caulking for waterproofing).

There is evidence of an extensive repair at the south side.

[para27] Mr. Tuff recommended the following be done:

Aside from attention to the above defects, the roofing appears to be in reasonable condition.

The built in drainage troughs can be a problem as it is difficult to adhere gravel to a vertical surface. I recommend that the gravel be removed in these areas and an SBS modified membrane be installed.

The roof hatches should be rebuilt, stripped in with membrane and reflashed. The Owners may wish to have factory metal hatches installed. they are insulated, spring loaded and cost less than $500.00.

Flashings at elevator penthouse on Victorian ii should be brought up to standard.

All flashings should be checked for attachment and caulking at metal chimneys implemented into a regular maintenance program.

[para28] The strata council was invoiced $235.40 by Robert D. Tuff & Associates Ltd. for this report. I am satisfied that the obtaining of this report was a necessity for the strata council even though it was obtained some three years after the council took over. It was rendered a necessity because of the substandard work done in the first place, coupled with the lack of maintenance during the period before the strata council came into existence.

[para31] 16. The strata council obtained certain signs necessary to comply with the Fire Marshall's regulations for the telephone room and locker rooms from Custom Rubber Stamp Ltd. at a cost of $77.60. Those signs should have been in place before the strata council came into existence.

[para32] 17. On November 22, 1993, the strata council was invoiced by Highland Plumbing & Heating Ltd. for the work necessary to install new shut-off valves, hose bibbs and piping connections, to drain the building and cut into the laundry room wall of unit 201. The invoice was paid in respect of six of the units at $233.72 for a total of $1,522.60. A further 23 units remain to be done, for a total future expense of $5,375.56.

[para33] 18. I accept the unchallenged opinion, dated March 30, 1990, of Mr. Chris Baker of Thornley/White Associates Ltd., the construction cost consultants, when he opined that the problems in the buildings were, in large part, caused by substandard work:

In my opinion, areas of substandard construction not obscured by other work would have been readily apparent on completion of the building. A prudent owner or building manager should have recognized that this would result in increased maintenance costs over time.

[para34] 19. I further accept the uncontested opinion of Eric Spurling, the management expert, dated March 30, 1994, that the standard of care which should be taken by a prudent owner and/or prudent strata council in the management of a strata corporation is, as he put it, as follows:

1. A regular inspection of common area building components should have been done in order to determine both existing and potential maintenance problems.

2. Where a report is received of water intrusion to a suite, effort should be made to identify the source of the problem and corrective measures taken to resolve the problem.

3. If there are insufficient funds to effect a proper and complete repair at the time a water problem occurs, a prudent manager will attempt minimal repairs and will budget funds to effect more complete repairs in a subsequent fiscal year.

...

5. In a building with a history of problems, after regular inspections of the building, a prudent manager would:

(a) budget for and rectify the serious problems as they occur, and set aside the minimum requirements for the contingency reserve account, or

(b) budget to effect minimal but effective repairs for serious problems as they occur and budget for increased contributions to the contingency reserve fund in anticipation of the greater costs that would be incurred as the result of deferring the maintenance issues.

6. In the case where many deferred maintenance items were accruing, a prudent manager would prepare a longer term plan to identify a time frame and estimated costs for both the deferred maintenance items, as well as regular required maintenance. This plan should consider the amount of funds in the contingency reserve fund to determine if more or less funds would be required.

[para35] 5 The total failure to have any prudent maintenance system over the years that Trivantor managed the buildings has resulted in the strata council incurring maintenance and repair expenses in the amount of $41,802.06 with certain repairs not yet done but still outstanding in the amount of $17,574.75 as per the July 4, 1991 estimate from Paul Desautels Construction Ltd. which, by agreement of counsel now has, in terms of 1995 dollars, a present value of $19,033.45 plus the additional future expenses in the amount of $5,375.56 as noted above, totalling $66,211.07.

[para36] 6 Trivantor did give the strata council, at its inception, the sum of $30,000. Of this sum the strata council paid $12,941.00 to Trivantor for landscaping, painting and light fixtures, namely, for the cosmetic work already described as being done initially by Trivantor to augment sales. This means that the strata council was left with $17,059.00 which sum is to be credited against its claims for past and future maintenance, leaving outstanding a balance of $49,152.07.

ISSUES

[para37] 7 The issues are as follows:

1. Whether, at all material times, Trivantor owed an obligation pursuant to the Act to maintain a contingency reserve fund and maintain and repair common property belonging to the strata corporation for the protection of subsequent members of the strata corporation.

2. If the answer to that is yes, whether the defendant breached its obligations. 3. If the answer to that is yes, whether the defendant's breach of its obligations resulted in loss or damages being incurred by the plaintiff.

4. If the answer to that is yes, what is the measure of those damages?

Issue 1:

[para38] 8 Whether at all material times the defendant owed an obligation pursuant to the Act to maintain a contingency reserve fund and maintain and repair common property belonging to the strata corporation for the protection of subsequent members of the strata corporation?

[para39] 9 The plaintiffs submit that although Laserena Inns Ltd. was the owner/developer when the strata plans were filed in the Land Titles Office on November 17, 1982, the defendant became the sole owner of all strata units in Strata Plan 1229 upon purchasing each of the lots via the foreclosure proceedings on August 26, 1983. The plaintiffs submit that at that point the defendant became the de facto strata corporation for Strata Plan 1229. As such, pursuant to s.14 of the Act, Trivantor was responsible "for the enforcement of the bylaws and the control, management and administration of the common property facilities and assets of the strata corporation." The defendant, being the strata corporation, under the Act had an obligation to, amongst other things, form a strata council, maintain a contingency reserve fund and maintain and repair common property of the strata corporation for the protection of subsequent members of the strata corporation.

[para40] 10 The defendant, for its part, denies that the statute obligates an owner such as Trivantor as opposed to an owner/developer to carry out the duties and obligations of either a strata corporation or a strata council as set out in s.14 and s.116 of the Act which deal with the duties of strata corporations and section 188 pertaining the duties of a strata council.

[para41] 11 The defendant contends that the duties of an owner, such as Trivantor, are set out in s.115 of the Act. Subsections 118(1) and (2) are also relied upon. They stipulate: (1) The powers and duties of the strata corporation shall, ... be exercised and performed by the council of the strata corporation.

(2) The owner developer shall exercise the powers and duties of the strata council until a council is elected by the owners.

[para42] 12 It is contended that a strata corporation is separate and apart from its members.

[para43] 13 I find the defendant's argument is flawed. It ignores the express stipulations of s.13(1) of the Act:

Strata corporation

13(1) The owners of the strata lots included in a strata plan and their successors shall, on deposit of the strata plan in a land title office, constitute and be members of a corporation under the name "The Owners, Strata Plan No." (the registration number of the strata plan).

Therefore, the original sole owner of the strata lots, Laserena Inns Ltd., became as of the date of the deposit in the land title office, namely, November 17, 1992, constituted as a corporation under the name of "the owners, strata plan 1229".

[para44] 14 On purchasing each of the strata lots on August 26, 1983, Trivantor became the sole member of the strata corporation known as the owners, strata plan 1229. As the sole member it did not, until August 3, 1989, take any steps to have the strata corporation comply with its statutory obligations. It commenced belatedly to do so in August, 1989, but by then I find the damage had been done.

[para45] 15 During the period from February, 1989 to early 1990, the defendant proceeded to divest itself of each and every one of the strata lots so that by the Spring of 1990 it had ceased to be a member of the strata corporation.

[para46] 16 It is true that the strata corporation is a separate legal entity from its members but, nevertheless, its members have a duty to the strata corporation to take reasonable steps to see that it complies with its statutory obligations.

[para48] 18 The fact situation at bar is analogous to that before the Alberta Court of Appeal in Condominium Plan No. 752-1207 Owners v. Terrace Corporation (Construction) Ltd. (1983), 43 A.R. 386. In that case the developer of the condominium project owned all the units in the project. Acting in its capacity as a strata corporation it granted itself a long term lease in order to sub-let some of the condominium property to another party. In an action brought by the strata corporation to inter alia impugn the lease agreement the Alberta Court of Appeal held that the lease should be set aside. The Court found that there is an analogy between a strata corporation's obligations to the unit holders and a trustee's obligations to a beneficiary. At p.391, Stevenson J.A., as he then was, commented:

... The remedy of the common property owners is analogous to the proprietary remedy of the trust beneficiary, namely the restoration of the property. The beneficiaries' action is generally considered as giving rise to the right to restore the property to the trust: Waters, The Law of Trusts in Canada, at 834. I conclude therefore that the condominium corporation's action to recover the common property (with incidental relief) is a proper one.

[para49] 19 In interpreting the Condominium Act as I do I apply the dicta of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Condominium Plan No. 86-S-36901: The Owners v. Remai Construction (1981) Inc. et al (1991), 93 Sask. R. 211. There, the Court had before it a case in which upon registration of the strata plan the developer, proceeding on the basis that it was the only person entitled to vote at a meeting of the strata corporation, had the corporation pass resolutions approving the purchase of the caretaker's suite by the corporation from the developer. Later, the strata corporation, now composed of different members, brought an action to set aside the sale of the caretaker's suite on the basis that the unit was part of the common property. The strata corporation succeeded and the transaction was set aside. Speaking for the Court, Sherstobitoff J.A., in setting aside the trial judge's decision, noted, at p.217:

The Common Law And Condominiums

[19] The judge took too narrow a view of the common law and the provisions of the Act. The common law developed by adapting to new situations as they arose, and the common law must adapt to accommodate condominium regimes. Similarly, the provisions of the Act must be interpreted in light of the realities of what actually happens in relationships between developers, purchasers, and condominium corporations.

In doing so, the Court adopted the reasoning of Wilson J.A., as she then was, in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 et al v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al (1981), 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280 (Ont. C.A.) to the effect that a developer has a fiduciary duty to protect the interests of all unit owners present and prospective as well as the interests of the strata corporation when it came into existence. The developer is not permitted to put its own interest in conflict with theirs.

[para50] 20 Granted that the defendant had an obligation pursuant to the Act, to have the plaintiff maintain a contingency reserve fund and maintain and repair common property belonging to the strata corporation for the protection of subsequent members of the strata corporation, has the defendant breached that obligation?

[para51] 21 Because of the findings of fact already made I find that the evidence is clear that the defendant failed to have the strata corporation carry out its obligations under s.14, s.116 and s.118 of the Act. In the result, the strata corporation, during the time it was in the exclusive control of the defendant, failed to take any of the steps which were incumbent upon it for it to carry out its duty as a strata corporation under the Act.

Issue 3:

[para52] 22 Has the defendant's breach of its obligations to the plaintiff resulted in loss or damages being incurred by the plaintiff?

[para53] 23 Because of the findings of fact already set out, I am satisfied that the breach of the obligations has indeed resulted in damages being incurred by the plaintiff.

Issue 4:

[para54] 24 That being so, what is the measure of those damages?

[para55] 25 I find these buildings, due to no fault of the defendant, to have been poorly built. The original owner/developer incorporated design flaws which are the cause, together with the almost total lack of maintenance procedures on the defendant's part, of the damages suffered by the plaintiff. The defendant argues that defects in construction on the one hand caused by design flaws and maintenance required as a result of wear and tear should be treated as separate matters. The defendant urges that a liability to repair or maintain does not include a responsibility to correct structural defects.

[para56] 26 I am unable to accept that contention, in light of York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983) 42 O.R. (2d) 337 (C.A.). There, Cory J.A., speaking for the court, said of this proposition, at p.341:

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationships of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible. ...

... The fact that the repairs are made necessary by structural defects should not and does not on the facts of this case vary this conclusion. Nor should the possibility of a claim against the builder be a factor.

[para57] 27 I am of the same view. I find that in a condominium setting nothing turns on the fact that the repairs and replacements due by way of maintenance have their root in part or in toto in an original design flaw. A design flaw is simply a circumstance that bears upon the amount of ongoing maintenance that will be necessary.

[para58] 28 I find the measure of damages is the amount of money that is necessary to put the building in the state in which it would have been had the defendant complied with its fiduciary duty to have the strata corporation carry out its obligations under the Act. That sum is $66,211.07, less the amount that the defendant paid, which is $17,059.00, leaving as damages the sum of $49,152.07.

[para59] 29 I find additionnal support for my conclusion in Re Manton and York Condominium Corp. No. 461 (1984), 49 O.R. (2d) 83 (Co. Ct.) where it was held that the statutory obligation to "maintain" is broad enough to include an obligation to correct a structural defect (see also Proprietors of Strata Plan No. 6522 v. Furney, [1976] 1 N.S.W.L.R. 412 (Eq. Div.)).

[para60] 30 In conclusion, I am of the view that the members of the strata corporation bear a fiduciary duty to protect the interests of all unit owners, present and prospective, as well as the interests of the strata corporation. That duty remains with them at all times. It matters not whether the members are owner/developers or simply owners.

[para61] 31 The plaintiffs shall have judgment in the amount of $49,152.07 plus pre-judgment interest and costs on Scale 3.

Rockwhite Holdings Limited, and Frontwood Investment Management Limited, Petitioners, and Linda O'Shea, Registrar of the Land Title Office, New Westminster, Robert J. Hobart, Superintendent of Real Estate, City of White Rock, Respondents

[1995] B.C.J. No. 46

Vancouver Registry No. A943523

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Edwards J. Heard: December 29, 1994. Judgment: filed January 16, 1995.

Counsel for the Petitioners: Jonathan Baker. Counsel for the Respondents: Harvey Groberman.

[para1] EDWARDS J.:-- This is an application for a declaratory relief under s. 2(2)(b) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act. The declarations sought, as set out in the Petition to the Court are as follows:

The petitioner applies to this Court for the following orders:

1. A declaration that where

a. under s. 65(1) of the Condominium Act, the owners (the "Owners") of the strata lots comprised in a strata plan (the "Original Strata Plan") resolve by special resolution that the building (the "Building") delineated on the original Strata Plan shall be considered destroyed;

b. under s. 64(1) of the Condominium Act, the Strata Corporation (the "Strata Corporation") created by the deposit of the original Strata Plan lodges with the registrar a notice of the deemed destruction of the Building in the form prescribed by regulation;

c. under s. 64(3.2) of the Condominium Act, the registrar cancels the registrations of all Strata lots comprised in the Original Strata Plan, and registers a new indefeasible title to the land (the "land") included in the Original Strata Plan in the name of the Strata Council;

d. under s. 64(4) of the Condominium Act the Owners resolve by special resolution that the Strata council transfer the assets of the Strata council and all of the land, including the Strata lots, to the Owners, and the registrar registers a new indefeasible title to the land in the names of the Owners; and

e. the Owners submit to the Superintendent of Real Estate (the "Superintendent") for filing under the Real Estate Act a disclosure statement or a disclosure statement amendment (the "Disclosure Statement") relating to sales by or on behalf of the Owners of strata lots (the "New Strata Lots") intended to be created by the deposit in the Land Title Office of a new strata plan (the "New Strata Plan") for the Building and the Land, then

i. when submitting the Disclosure Statement to the Superintendent for filing, the Owners shall not be required to provide the Superintendent with evidence that the Owners have complied with:

(1) section 50(5) of the Real Estate Act; or

(2) any other provision of the Real Estate Act, the regulations under the Real Estate Act, or the policy statements issued by the Superintendent relating to the Real Estate Act which has the effect of providing that:

(a) the municipal council of the municipality in which the Building and the Land are located must approve the creation of the New Strata Lots; or

(b) the Owners must comply with the provisions of the Residential Tenancy Act respecting the conversion of residential premises to strata lots, before the Owners may submit the Disclosure Statement to the Superintendent for filing; and

(ii) upon acceptance by the Superintendent of the Disclosure Statement for filing under the Real Estate Act, and notwithstanding section 50(5) of the Real Estate Act, the Owners, or persons on behalf of the Owners, shall be entitled to sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease, the New Strata Lots to prospective purchasers or tenants.

pursuant to ss. 1, 64 and 65 of the Condominium Act and ss. 1, 30, 50.1 and 56 of the Real Estate Act.

2. A declaration that where:

a. under s. 65(1) of the Condominium Act, the owners (the "Owners") of the strata lots comprised in a strata plan (the "Original Strata Plan") resolve by special resolution that the building (the "Building") delineated on the original Strata Plan shall be considered destroyed;

b. under s. 64(1) of the Condominium Act, the Strata Corporation (the "Strata Corporation") created by the deposit of the original Strata Plan lodges with the registrar a notice of the deemed destruction of the Building in the form prescribed by regulation;

c. under s. 64(3)(2) of the Condominium Act, the registrar cancels the registrations of all Strata lots comprised in the Original Strata Plan, and registers a new indefeasible title to the land (the "land") included in the Original Strata Plan in the name of the Strata Council;

d. under s. 64(4) of the Condominium Act the Owners resolve by special resolution that the Strata council transfer the assets of the Strata council and all of the land, including the Strata lots, to the Owners, and the registrar registers a new indefeasible title to the land in the names of the Owners; and the owners make application to deposit the New Strata Plan in the Land Title Office, then

i. The registrar shall be entitled to accept the New Strata Plan for deposit without the certificate of the approving authority referred to in section 9(5) of the Condominium Act; and

ii. the Owners shall not be required to file with the registrar the certificate of a British Columbia land surveyor referred to in section 8(1) of the Condominium Act concurrently with the new Strata Plan.

pursuant to ss. 1, 7, 8, 9, 64 and 65 of the Condominium Act.

[para2] The respondent Registrar of Titles and the respondent City of White Rock take no position on the application. [para3] The petitioners propose to reconfigure and add to an existing building which is the subject of a strata plan under the Condominium Act. It is at present used for commercial purposes and present tenants will be accommodated in the reconfigured building. Some of the reconfigured building will be for residential use.

[para4] The petitioners, having obtained all other necessary approvals from the City of White Rock, take the position they need not obtain the City's approval under s. 9 of the Condominium Act, the relevant parts of which provide:

9.(1) On the conversion into strata lots of a previously occupied building by an owner developer, the approving authority may approve the strata plan, refuse to approve the strata plan or refuse to approve the strata plan until terms and conditions imposed by the approving authority are met. The decision is final. (3) The approving authority shall consider, in making its decision, (a) the priority of rental accommodation over privately owned housing in the area;

(b) the proposals of the owner developer for the relocation of persons occupying the building;

(c) the life expectancy of the building; and

(d) projected major increases in maintenance costs due to the condition of the building.

It may consider any other matters that, in its opinion, are relevant.

(4) For the purposes of this section, "approving authority" means in a municipality, the municipal council, or outside a municipality, the regional board of the regional district in which the land is situated.

(5) The approving authority shall, at the time of approval, issue a certificate in the form prescribed and the certificate shall be filed with the registrar on deposit of the strata plan.

[para5] The City, I am told, accepts the petitioners position that it need not indicate its approval by issuing a certificate of approval under s. 9(5) because the building is already subject to a strata plan.

[para6] The Superintendent of Real Estate however takes the position that the City's approval is necessary and has indicated he will not accept the petitioners disclosure statement required under ss. 50(5) and 50.1 of the Real Estate Act until it is obtained. It is that proposed exercise of his statutory power of decision which is the basis for this application for declaratory relief.

[para7] Section 50(5) provides:

50.(5) No developer, and no person on behalf of a developer, shall sell, or lease, or offer for sale or lease, strata lots or cooperative units created or intended to be created by converting existing buildings into strata lots or cooperative units, as the case may be, unless

(a) approval of the conversion to strata lots or cooperative units is first obtained,

(i) where a building is situated in a municipality, from the municipal council; or

(ii) where a building is not situated in a municipality, from the regional board of the regional district, in which the building is situated;

(b) the provisions of the Residential Tenancy Act respecting the conversion of residential premises to strata lots or cooperative units are complied with; and

(c) subsection (6) has been complied with.

[para8] The petitioners position is that since the building is presently subject to a strata plan and will be subject to another after the reconfiguration and addition it is not being converted into strata lots as contemplated by s. 9(1) of the Condominium Act but merely continuing as a building subject to a strata plan. The petitioners say the process of converting from one strata plan to another to accommodate the reconfiguration will constitute a single transaction in that all required documentation will be filed with the Registrar of Titles simultaneously.

[para9] Further, the petitioners say that the intention of s. 9(1) is to permit municipalities to review proposed conversions of occupied buildings to strata lots to protect the stock of rental accommodation and look out for the interests of present and future occupants of the building, issues which do not arise in this case, they say, because the present tenants have been accommodated in the reconfigured building.

[para10] The legislative intention behind s. 9(1) is broader than the petitioners contend in light of the final sentence in s. 9(3), It may consider any other matters that in its opinion are relevant. I need not determine the precise breadth of the s. 9 because in my view the section is intended to provide municipalities the means of reviewing creation of new strata plans in occupied buildings. That authority would be undermined by the petitioners interpretation of the section so as to preclude the municipality from doing what they concede the section intends, protect the stock of rental accommodation. The following hypothetical example illustrates the point. Suppose the owners of a building with 100 strata lots, all rented, propose to reconfigure it to 50 strata lots. The stock of rental accommodation would be reduced and there could be an issue about relocation of occupants. If the petitioners interpretation is accepted the municipality would have no authority to approve the reconfiguration under s. 9, bearing in mind the very considerations the petitioners say the section is intended to embrace.

[para11] The petitioners principal point is that there is no conversion into strata lots in this case, so s. 9 does not apply. In response to this the Superintendent points to the provisions of the Condominium Act which apply and says following the necessary steps amounts to a conversion as contemplated by s. 9.

[para12] It is common ground that s. 57 of the Condominium Act, which permits amendment of strata plans in certain circumstances, does not apply because the proposed reconfiguration will add common property to strata lots. If s. 57 did apply s. 9 would not apply. The petitioners characterized the non-applicability of s. 57 as an "anomaly" resulting from a "drafting error".

[para13] In order to accomplish what is proposed, the petitioners as owners of strata lots in the building must by special resolution under s. 65(1) of the Condominium Act deem it destroyed and lodge a notice of destruction with the Registrar under s. 64(1). Then, pursuant to ss. 64(2), (3), (3.1) and (3.2) the owners of strata lots become tenants in common of the land in the strata plan and must surrender their duplicate certificates of title to strata lots whereupon the Registrar cancels all registrations of strata lots in the strata plan and registers a new certificate of indefeasible title to the land in the name of the strata corporation. At this point the building is not subject to a strata plan, so no strata title exists. It is owned by the strata corporation as a single parcel and the corporation, with the authorization of the owners, would then file a new strata plan reflecting the reconfiguration of the building.

[para14] Although the strata corporation continues in existence throughout this process the strata plan and lots do not. Therefore there is in my opinion a "conversion into strata lots of a previously occupied building" as contemplated by s. 9 which gives the approving authority, in this case the City, authority to approve or refuse to approve the strata plan. That being so, the Superintendent is correct in insisting that City approval of the new strata plan be certified under s. 9(5) before he accepts the petitioners disclosure statement under s. 50(5) of the Real Estate Act.

[para15] The application is dismissed. Since the authority of the respondents has been determined by this application, to their benefit, I order that the parties bear their own costs.

The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 931 0520 (Park Haven Villas), petitioner (counter-respondent), and Anthony Smith and Lesley Smith, respondents (counter-petitioners)

[1999] A.J. No. 149 Action No. 9801-11042

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Hawco J. Judgment: filed February 17, 1999.

Counsel: Joan S. Saunders, for the petitioner (counter-respondent). John M. McDougall, for the respondents (counter-petitioner).

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[para1] HAWCO J.:-- The Petitioner is the condominium corporation for Park Haven Villas in the town of Okotoks ("the corporation"). The complex is comprised of 25 units and has been designated by the corporation as being restricted to being owned and occupied by people of at least 45 years of age. The Respondents are the owners of one of these units. While they themselves are over 45 years of age, they have a son living with them who is now 27 or 28 years old. At issue is whether the corporation may prohibit the Respondents' son from living with them. In my view it can.

[para2] When the condominium complex was developed in 1994, there was no restriction on age for either ownership or occupancy. In May of 1996 the owners of the units were advised through a newsletter that the Board of Managers intended to seek a resolution from the owners to place an age restriction on ownership and occupancy. At that time the Respondent Mr. Anthony Smith was a member of the Board. A special resolution was signed by a sufficient number of owners, including Mr. Smith, to permit a change in the by-laws. On June 28, 1996, a Notice of Change of By-laws was properly filed at Land Titles office changing the wording of the applicable by-laws such that the definition of "owner" was to mean: "an adult person not younger than forty-five (45) years who is registered as the owner of the fee simple estate in the unit...." The definition of "occupant" was changed to read, in part:

... a person present in a unit or in or upon the real or personal property of the Corporation or the common property with the permission of an owner and shall be a person or persons of adult years and in any event not younger than forty-five (45) years.

[para3] According to Mr. Smith, when he and his wife purchased their condominium unit from the developer, they discussed the possibility of having Mrs. Smith's son, then twenty-three years old, live with them, as he had a chronic disease. The developer indicated to Mr. Smith that he could. As a result, the Smiths' unit had its basement developed solely for the occupation of Mrs. Smith's son. Even though Mr. Smith was a member of the Board which made the recommendations for the change in the by-laws, his understanding of the amendments was that there would be circumstances where occupants could be under the age of forty-five. Mr. Smith stated that had he believed otherwise, he would not have been in favour of the amendments.

[para4] The Respondents argue:

1. the by-laws are discriminatory; 2. they are in breach of the Condominium Property Act; 3. they are void for uncertainty; 4. the corporation has breached the rules of natural justice.

1. DISCRIMINATION

[para5] Even though the by-laws do make a distinction against people under the age of forty-five years (and do therefore "discriminate"), the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("the Charter") is not applicable. It was not "intended to cover activities by non-governmental entities created by government for legally facilitating private individuals to do things of their own choosing without engaging governmental responsibility.": McKinney v. University of Guelph, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229 at 266. The Respondent argued that the Board of Managers of the corporation was sufficiently influenced and controlled by the Lieutenant Governor and Municipal Affairs to qualify as a branch or arm of government. In my respectful view, the corporation's by-laws are a contract among the owners specifying a manner in which they wish to coexist. They are entitled to make such a contract, particularly when made in good faith for a reasonable purpose, which was to protect what they undoubtedly believe is their enjoyment of their property and their quality of life. See York Condominium Corp. No. 216 v. Borsodi (1983), 42 O.R. (2nd) 99.

[para6] I am also of the view that the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, R.S.A. 1980, c.H-11.7 ("the Human Rights Act") does not apply. That portion of the Human Rights Act which the Respondents sought to invoke is Section 3(b) which says:

3 No person shall

(b) discriminate against any person or class of persons with respect to any goods, services, accommodation or facilities that are customarily available to the public, (my emphasis)

because of the race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income or family status of that person or class of persons or of any other person or class of persons.

[para7] I am satisfied that this section, insofar as it prohibits discrimination with respect to "accommodation," is not applicable in this case. Rather, it is applicable - as found in Gay Alliance v. Vancouver Sun (1979), 97 D.L.R. (3rd) 577 (S.C.C.) at 590, to such matters as accommodation in hotels, inns and motels. Even if "accommodation" can be read as including a condominium building or complex, it seems to me that Section 11.1 of the Human Rights Act covers this situation. As stated by Allen Co.Ct.J, in Borsodi: Further the declaration is in the nature of a private agreement among all of the owners of units in the condominium, including the defendants, for the joint and several benefit. The owners...are entitled to the protection of their contractual and property rights. If those rights are not protected they perceive, with cause, that their enjoyment of their property and thus their quality of life will be adversely affected.

[para8] This also appears to underlie the decision of Chief Justice Moore of this Court in Condominium Plan No. 8810455 v. Spectral Capital Corp. (1990), 14 R.P.R. (2nd) 305 at 312, where he stated:

In recent years condominium housing has been utilized to deliver specialized type of housing to seniors, handicapped and other members of society. The critical feature of all developments is a common interest and an agreement to bind themselves to by-laws acceptable to all.

2. BREACH OF CONDOMINIUM ACT [para9] The Respondents second argument was that the by-laws contravene Section 26 (4) of the Condominium Property Act, R.S.A. c-C-22, which states:

(4) No by-law operates to prohibit or restrict the devolution of units or any transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with them or to destroy or modify any easement implied or created by this Act.

[para10] The Respondents rely upon 453048 British Columbia Ltd. v. Strata Plan KAS 1079, [1994] B.C.J. No. 2741 wherein that Court held that a similar restriction on age did indeed operate to prevent an owner from selling, transferring, leasing or otherwise dealing with a condominium unit and was therefore void. That case was in turn considered by another judge of the B.C. Supreme Court in Marshall v. Strata Plan No. NW 2584, [1996], 3 R.P.R. 3rd 144. There, Henderson, J. considered whether an age restriction lessened the value of a condominium unit and thereby restricted the transfer of such unit. He came to the conclusion that simply placing an age restriction upon transfer does not mean that the demand for such a unit would be lessened. He concluded that issue could not be determined without there being expert evidence lead.

[para11] With due respect to the British Columbia authorities, I am of the view that the question is not whether the value is lessened and the transfer thereby restricted. The issue is whether the by-law itself restricts or limits the transfer of a unit. If an owner must be 45 years or older, there is a limiting condition placed on the transfer. It matters not that the value of the unit is increased or decreased. To that extent the by-law is in contravention of the Condominium Property Act. The difficulty I have with this is that it seems that this section would then have the effect of preventing a group of seniors from forming a condominium corporation and restricting ownership to a certain age. This flies in the face of a number of decisions, some of which have already been referred to, which have approved the concept of people making an agreement, in good faith and for proper reasons, to provide for and protect a certain quality of life. Having said that, while a by-law restricting ownership to any age may be contrary to the Condominium Property Act, the issue in this matter is not whether the transfer of the unit is prohibited or restricted; the issue is whether the by-laws may properly prohibit or restrict the occupancy. Section 26 (4) of the Condominium Property Act does not deal with occupancy. By-law 62(1)(a) is therefore not void.

3. UNCERTAINTY

[para12] The Respondents argue that the definition of occupant shown above would mean that any person who is not an owner but who ventures on the common property for any length of time is an occupant. If that were taken to its logical conclusion, it is argued, no one but owners or others over the age of 45 years are entitled to be on the property. With respect, "a person present" must be read in a common sense way. That would mean that it refers to a person normally residing in or occupying a unit as opposed to a visitor. The by-law is not void for uncertainty.

4. BREACH OF NATURAL JUSTICE

[para13] The Respondents' final argument is that the Petitioner has failed to enforce the disputed by-law uniformly. Specifically, there are three owners who are not forty-five years of age against whom no enforcement has been commenced. There have been other occupants under the age of 45 years in the past and no enforcement proceedings had been launched against them. The Respondents were advised by the original developer that Mrs. Smith's son could live with them, and he has done so for some time. It is argued that since the by-laws have not been strictly enforced in the past, the Petitioner should now be estopped from proceeding against the Respondents.

[para14] With respect to the agreement made between the Smiths and the developer, it is clear that private arrangements between a developer and an individual unit holder cannot be made binding against the subsequent owners of the Condominium Corporation: Carleton Condominium Corp. v. Rochon (1987), 44 R.P.R. 228.

[para15] With respect to the other three "transgressors," the Petitioner does admit that there are three owners under the age of 45 years. Two of them purchased their units before the current by-laws were changed. One of them had apparently acquired his or her unit in December of 1996 just prior to Mr. Smith becoming president of the Board. It is easy to see why it would be difficult, and perhaps somewhat unfair, to take action against the two owners who had acquired their units prior to the passing of the current by-laws. When they acquired their property, there was no restriction against age or occupancy. With respect to the owner who acquired a unit just prior to Mr. Smith becoming president of the Board, it would be unseemly for Mr. Smith to argue that because "his" Board had failed to enforce compliance, that this Board should now be estopped from doing so in this case.

[para16] I wish to stress that the issue before me is whether these by-laws are valid and whether the Petitioner is to be allowed to enforce them as against the Respondents. I am advised that since the current Board assumed responsibility for and control and management of the corporation in January, 1998, all new violations of age restrictions with respect to occupiers have been handled in the same manner. As stated by Carnwath, J. in Peel Condominium Corp. No. 449 v. Hogg (1997), 8 R.P.R. 3rd 145 at 148, "a condominium corporation has a duty to require compliance." That is what they are attempting to do here. I am not satisfied that in attempting to enforce compliance of by-laws which were passed in good faith and with the consent of the Respondents that it is unfair to now attempt to enforce them. There is no suggestion that there is a lack of good faith by the Board or that it is acting in an arbitrary or high-handed manner. There will therefore be an order that Mr. and Mrs. Smith are in breach of the by-laws and they will be directed to comply with those by-laws by having their son move out of their condominium. Mr. and Mrs. Smith shall therefore comply with the by-law on or before the 30th day of June, 1999. This should be sufficient time to allow Mrs. Smith's son to find alternate accommodation.

Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 67, plaintiff(s), and Ruth McDermott, defendant(s)

Court File No. 97-CV-132776

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Spiegel J. Heard: January 28, 1998. Judgment: April 29, 1998.

Counsel: Craig A. Lewis, for the plaintiff(s). Shamim Shivji, for the defendant(s).

[para1] SPIEGEL J:-- The applicant Simcoe Condominium Corporation No. 67 brings this application pursuant to s. 49 of the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1990 ch. C26 (the Act) for an order requiring the respondent to:

1. remove the double hung window erected in the attic level above unit 538 Cranberry Village Collingwood.
2. remove all finished materials from the attic space which is part of the common elements of S.C.C. No. 67, including all sub-flooring and finished floor, all drywall, insulation, vapour barrier, additional electric wiring and fixtures. Or, in the alternative, if the respondent fails to remove the window and restore the attic space to its original condition, the applicant seeks an order authorizing it to restore the space and recover any expense incurred by adding a lien to the common expenses on the unit.

[para2] I will refer to the subject matter of the relief sought under paragraph 1 as the double hung window and the relief sought under paragraph 2 as the alterations to the attic.

THE FACTS

[para3] The respondent is the registered owner of unit 538 of S.C.C. No. 67 in the Cranberry Village condominium complex in the Town of Collingwood. Cranberry Village consists of approximately 26 registered condominium corporations comprising about 800 condominium units. S.C.C. No. 67 comprises 34 condominium units.

[para4] The respondent is a 77 year old woman who purchased her condominium unit in September of 1986 and took occupancy in December 1987. She lives alone in the unit which is a one bedroom, one bathroom unit on a single level.

[para5] The unit is referred to as a Clarksburg in the sales brochure of the condominium developer. The livingroom of the unit has a fireplace which the applicant used on a regular basis in the winter months. While the sketch of the layout in the brochure of the Clarksburg model indicated that there was to be a window to the right of the fireplace, the unit was built without such window. The respondent found that when the fireplace was activated during the winter months her unit would often be engulfed in smoke. She determined that this was due to poor ventilation in the livingroom.

[para6] The respondent says that she made requests of various managers of the condominium corporation to install a window similar to that depicted in the brochure but without success. She says that at one point one manager informed her that a window next to the fireplace would not solve the smoke problem as it would not provide sufficient draft. He invited her to view another Clarksburg model at number 442. This unit had a similar problem which was resolved by installing a window in the unit's attic crawl space. She says that she and the manager inspected this unit and found that a staircase had been installed along the kitchen and bathroom wall leading to a platform from where one could enter through a vertical opening into the attic crawl space. A window had been installed in the attic wall opposite the fireplace. The crawl space was well insulated with drywall and had thick white carpeting on the floor. The respondent deposed that the manager advised her that the corporation would be prepared to do similar improvements for her at a price if she desired. The respondent stated that she did not have the necessary funds at the time and did not proceed with the alternations to the attic crawl space.

[para7] In early 1996 the condominium corporation permitted unit owners to install gas fireplaces in the units. The respondent attended a seminar at the Cranberry Inn respecting the installation of gas fireplaces where she heard of the importance of having proper ventilation in premises having gas fireplaces.

[para8] At this point I should mention that the applicant filed an affidavit by Williams Higgins, the applicant's property manager, which disputes many of the statements made by the respondent in her affidavit. He asserts that there is no other Clarksburg unit in S.C.C. No. 67 and that there are only four types of such units in the entire condominium complex which comprises in excess of 800 units and controlled by twenty-six different condominium corporations. The three other Clarksburg units are not part of S.C.C. No. 67 but are, in fact, in S.C.C. No. 45.

[para10] Mr. Higgins does acknowledge however, that in June 1996, he received a letter from the respondent, which was addressed to Mr. Don Watson the owner of Upper Canada Management, the property manager of S.C.C. No. 67. The letter is in the handwriting of Mrs. McDermott and attached a sketch and floor plan of the unit which includes a window to the right of the fireplace on the ground floor.

[para11] Mrs. McDermott states that the intention of the letter of June 1996 was to request approval by the condominium corporation of a window of the type that she had seen in unit 442 which was in the attic crawlspace. The second last paragraph of the letter reads as follows:

If you could please spare a moment I can take you to another Clarksburg model around the corner in the Oxbow where a window is in a place I would like mine to be too

[para12] However, in the first paragraph of that letter she makes reference to the fact that the builders forgot to put a window in her unit which is clearly marked in the attached plan. Mr. Higgins' interpretation of the letter is that the respondent was asking the

S.C.C. No. 67 to consent to a window as was originally planned in the Clarksburg model, namely, a window to the right of the fireplace on the ground floor.

[para13] It is common ground however, that there was no response made by or on behalf of the applicant to the respondent's letter until December 1996. Nor is there any satisfactory evidence to explain the applicant's failure to respond more promptly. In or about November 1996 the respondent, having received no response to her request decided to proceed with the installation of the double hung window in her attic crawlspace. She also arranged to install insulation and drywall in this space because she was concerned that the open insulation would be detrimental to her health. The respondent uses this attic crawlspace for storage and it is not inhabited by the respondent or anyone else.

[para14] On December 14, 1996, Mr. Higgins made an inspection of the respondent's unit and discovered that the respondent had installed the double hung window and made the alterations to the attic space.

[para15] On or about the 18th of December Mr. Higgins sent a letter of the same date on behalf of the applicant advising the respondent that she could install a window in her unit on certain conditions. The respondent believed, with some justification I might add, that the letter was referring to the double hung window in the attic since Mr. Higgins, the writer of the letter, had inspected the unit a few days before and had seen the window in the attic. On January 7th, 1997 the respondent wrote to Mr. Higgins substantially agreeing with the conditions contained in the letter of December 18th, 1996. Mr. Higgins states that even though he was aware that Mrs. McDermott had performed alterations to the attic space including the window he had not so advised the Board of Directors and that when the Board instructed him to send the letter of December 18th, 1996 it was on the basis of their understanding that it was intended to set out the conditions under which the respondent could install a window near her fireplace. I must say that I have some difficulty with this explanation in view of the fact that the second sentence in the letter of December 18th, 1996 reads as follows: We understand that you wish to know the specific conditions under which you may keep the window in question. [emphasis mine] This language would not make much sense if it was referring to a window which had not yet been installed.

[para16] Suffice it to say that in my view the letter is at best confusing and certainly forms a reasonable basis for the respondent's belief that the conditions set out therein related to the double hung window which she had already installed in the attic.

[para17] The next communication between the applicant and respondent was on or about the 20th January 1997 when she received a "Urgent Notice" which was sent to all unit owners at their addresses registered in the corporation's records. The notice was sent to obtain feedback from the owners on the installation of the window in the attic, which by this time had obviously come to the attention of the Board of Directors. The letter stated that if a majority of the owners approved then a by-law would be proposed to change the common elements and notices would be sent for a special meeting to approve the by-law change.

[para18] Upon receipt of the notice the respondent made a request for the mailing list of all unit owners as most of the unit owners did not reside in their units on a year round basis. She stated that she made this request in order that she could apprise the unit owners of her concerns and enable the unit holders to have sufficient information and knowledge about her position. This request was denied by the applicant which took the position that they were not obliged to release that information to the respondent to allow her to contact the owners.

[para19] The notice of January 20th requested a written response from the unit owners by February 28th, 1997. The respondent deposes that she wrote letters dated January 23rd, 1997 and February 11th, 1997 to the president of the applicant seeking his cooperation without success. None the less she was able to personally speak with some of the unit holders who were present in the complex from time to time and provided them with a letter that she had drafted explaining her position. The respondent swears that she obtained support from seventeen of the thirty-four unit holders who did not object to the double hung window in the respondents unit.

[para20] The applicant advised the respondent that the responses then received to the January 20th, 1997 notice that only nine unit owners approved the window, and four expressly responded in the negative. Twenty-one owners did not respond at all. The applicant therefore took the position that a majority of the unit holders had not approved the window. On or about the 24th March 1997, the applicant delivered a letter to the respondent dealing with the unauthorized installation of the window and the attic room. This letter was signed by the president of the applicant and was written on behalf of the directors. It referred to the consultation with the membership through the recent mailing and stated that:

The owners in the corporation are largely not in favour of such unauthorized additions.

[para21] The letter demanded that the unit be restored to its original condition, and that failure to comply with the demand by February 15th, 1997 would result in proceedings being commenced under s. 49 of the Condominium Act. The respondent did not comply with the demand as set out in this letter or in subsequent correspondence from the solicitors for the applicant and this application was launched on or about the 26th September 1997.

POSITION OF THE PARTIES

[para22] The applicant's position is that the double hung window and alterations to the attic of the respondent's unit are in breach of the provisions of Article IX, paragraph 3 (paragraph 3) of the Declaration made pursuant to the Condominium Act for S.C.C. No. 67.

[para23] The respondent concedes that the alterations to the attic were in a common element of the condominium and further concedes that the installation of the double hung window is in contravention of paragraph 3. She contends, however, that the directors of the applicant failed to exercise their powers honestly and in good faith in dealing with the respondent and their conduct was so patently unreasonable as to disentitle the applicant to the relief that they seek.

[para24] With respect to the alterations to the attic the respondent takes the position that this was not in contravention of paragraph 3.

ARGUMENT AND ANALYSIS

The Alterations to the Attic

[para25] Paragraph 3 reads as follows:

3. EXTERIOR APPEARANCE OF COMMON ELEMENTS AND UNITS

In order to maintain the architectural integrity and beauty of the buildings, improvements and grounds of the total project, it is essential that the exterior appearance of the same be maintained in accordance with the architectural concepts in the planning of the total project. The owner may not leave any articles of any description in or about any exterior portion of any unit or common elements which shall contribute to any unsightly or untidy appearance. Each owner shall keep those portions of the common elements of which he has the exclusive use at all times in a neat, clean, and orderly condition and free of any rubbish, litter, debris or other unsightly material and the Corporation shall do likewise with respect to the remainder of the common elements. No owner shall harm, mutilate, destroy or litter any of the landscaping work on or in the common elements, including grass, trees, shrubs, hedges, flowers or flower beds or permit or allow any pet or other animal owned by or in the care or control of the said owner to do any of the foregoing or to run at large. Neither any owner nor the Corporation may attach or construct any fixture, awning, shade, deck or patio enclosure or cover, fence, air-conditioning device, fan, window guard, flag, bunting, storage structure, piece of equipment or thing of any nature whatsoever to any exterior portion of the unit or the common elements or erect, locate or place any building, structure, tent or trailer of any description on or in any portion of the common elements or let any aperture or recess into any exterior portion of a unit or the common elements or close up or fill in any presently existing aperture or recess in any exterior portion of any unit or the common elements or make any change or modification to, or plant any growing thing in or on, any landscaping feature, lawn, walk, patio or garden in the common elements or erect, affix, place, post, inscribe or paint any sign, advertisement or notice on, to or in any part of the common elements, the exterior of any unit or on, to or in the interior of any unit in such position that same would be visible to a passer-by outside the said unit or cause or permit any of the same to be done, without the prior express written consent of the Corporation and without complying with the provisions of the restrictive covenants registered against the real property, whether or not such owner has the exclusive use of any portion of such common elements. No owner may carry out, or cause to be carried out, any decorating, painting, staining, art work, or similar work upon any portion of the common elements, whether or not such owner has the exclusive use of such portion of the common elements, all such work being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Corporation subject to the restrictive covenants registered against the real property. Neither any owner nor the Corporation may install, erect or maintain, or permit to be installed, erected or maintained, any drapes, covering or other materials over on, inside or outside any aperture, door, skylight or window, or balcony unless the same shall be of a buff colour only or the back thereof facing the exterior of any aperture, door, skylight or window or balcony shall be completely lined with a buff liner or covering sufficient to reflect or show only a buff exterior thereof. [underlining mine]

[para26] It is conceded that the applicant did not obtain the prior express written consent of the Corporation before making the alternations to the attic. Counsel for the applicant therefore submits that the respondent in making these alterations did "erect, locate or place" a "structure on any portion of the common elements" and thereby contravened the provisions of paragraph 3.

[para27] Respondent's counsel however, submits that the title of paragraph 3 and the first sentence thereof make it abundantly clear that the object and purpose of this paragraph is to protect the exterior appearance of the common elements and units and that all of the restrictions in this paragraph are directed to achieving that objective. She submits that all of the prohibitions relate to things being done to the "exterior portion of the unit or the common elements" and that where there is a prohibition against doing anything in the interior of any unit it is only when "same would be visible to a passer-by outside the said unit".

[para28] She submits that the words "erect or place any structure", read in the context of the object and purpose of the paragraph, should not be interpreted as prohibiting the alterations to the attic because they did not affect the exterior appearance of the common elements or units.

[para29] I have carefully read and reread the provisions of paragraph 3 and I am of the opinion that the submissions of the respondent's counsel must prevail. If one takes the literal meaning of the words "place any ... structure" they are arguably broad enough to encompass the alterations to the attic but these words are not so clear and unambiguous as to permit me to ignore the context of the paragraph in which they appear. If the intention of the drafter of the declaration was to prohibit the type of alteration done by the respondent it would have been a simple matter to have expressed that intention by such words as "no owner shall make any structural change or alteration or change any of the common elements".

[para30] In coming to this conclusion, I am guided by the words of Lord Greene in Re Bide, Bide v. General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corp. [1948] 2 All ER 995 at 998 (C.A.):

The first thing one has to do ... in construing words in a section of an Act of Parliament is not to take those words in vacuo, so to speak, and attribute to them what is sometimes called their natural or ordinary meaning. Few words in the English language have a natural or ordinary meaning in the sense that they must be so read that their meaning is entirely independent of their context. The method of construing statutes that I prefer is not to take particular words and attribute to them a sort of prima facie meaning which you may have to displace or modify ... The real question which we have to decide is: What does the word mean in the context in which we find it here, both in the immediate context of the sub-section in which the word occurs and in the general context of the Act, having regard to the declared intention of the Act and the obvious evil that it is designed to remedy?

This approach to statutory interpretation with appropriate adaptations is equally applicable to contractual interpretation. See Manulife Bank of Canada v. Conlin 1996 3 SCR 415, per L'Heureux-Dubé J. page 438.

[para31] It follows therefore that the respondent's alterations to the interior of the attic does not contravene the provisions of paragraph 3 and the applicants are therefore not entitled to the relief sought with respect thereto.

The Double Hung Window

[para32] With respect to the double hung window, the respondent submits that the conduct of the Board of Directors was so patently unreasonable, arbitrary and unfair that the court ought to exercise its discretion in favour of the respondent and refuse to grant the applicant the relief it seeks.

[para33] She submits that the board acted unreasonably in failing to respond to her handwritten request, and refers to other instances where similar kinds of requests were granted in a prompt manner. The application has not provided me with any reasonable explanation for the failure to respond in one way or the other to the respondent's request of June 25, 1996.

[para34] Mr. Higgins in his affidavit says that the applicant understood the request to be for a window beside the fireplace. In paragraph 20 of his affidavit, sworn on the 18th November 1997 he asserts that the applicant "has been steadfast in its consent and approval of a window located on the ground floor of the unit to either side of the fireplace." If this is so I find it hard to understand why there was not a reasonably prompt and favourable response to the respondent's request.

[para35] The respondent says that if the applicant had responded negatively to her request she would not have gone to the expense of installing a gas fireplace and making the alterations to the attic as a result of which she incurred an expense of $5,860.00.

[para36] The respondent says that she believed that she had complied with the conditions for keeping the window which were set out in the applicant's letter of December 18th, 1996. I have already indicated my view that the respondent's belief was reasonable in light of the events which preceded the letter and the wording of the letter.

[para37] The respondent also submits that the applicant having taken the position that it was prepared to abide by the wishes of the majority of the unit holders, acted unreasonably and unfairly in the following respects:

- a. they arbitrarily determined that the unit holders who did not respond to their letter would be deemed not to approve of the window.
- b. that the applicant, in breach of the provisions of the Act, failed to provide the respondent with the mailing addresses of the unit owners.

[para38] The respondent relies on s. 21 of the Act which provides as follows:

the corporation shall keep adequate records and any owner or agent of an owner duly authorized in writing may inspect the records on reasonable notice and at any reasonable time

[para39] In my view the refusal of the respondent's request for a mailing list of all unit holders was in contravention of this section, but even if I am wrong in that conclusion it was totally unfair to the respondent to hamper or obstruct her efforts to make her position known to the unit owners and to enlist their support for her position.

[para40] The respondent takes the position that she was quite prepared to have the issue determined on the basis of the wishes of a majority of the unit owners and in fact, she says that notwithstanding the failure of the applicant to provide her with the mailing addresses that she was able to contact a number of the unit holders and was advised by seventeen of them that they did not object to the window. The applicant, however, refused to accept the statement of the respondent and insisted that only the unit holders who responded favourably to the notice of January 20th would be considered to be in favour of the respondent's position. Those who did not respond would be considered as opposed. The vast majority of those who did respond were in support of the respondent's position.

[para41] The applicant submits that it is settled law that the declaration by-laws and rules govern the rights of the unit owners and are a vital to the integrity of the title acquired by the unit holder. It is quite clear that the courts have been zealous in enforcing compliance by owners to these terms and provisions. See Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 279 v. Rochon 44 R.P.R. 228 (C.A.).

[para42] The applicant further submits that even if the board of directors were unreasonably slow in responding to the respondent's request for consent, this did not justify the respondent in proceeding with the installation of the window prior to receiving the consent and indeed without any further notice to the Board. In like manner, the applicant argues that, even if the communication between Mr. Higgins and the respondent was confusing and led the respondent to believe that the Board had consented to the installation of the window on certain terms, the respondent cannot rely on this belief to justify the installation of the window which had been done prior to receiving the communication from Mr. Higgins. In my view, these are extremely important considerations in the determination of this issue.

[para43] S. 49(2) of the Act clearly gives the court a discretion as to whether or not to enforce compliance with the declaration but such discretion must of course be exercised judicially. I have read the very helpful decision of my brother Herold D.C.J., as he then was, in Metropolitan Toronto Condominium No. 776 v. Gifford 6 R.P.R. (2d) 218 in which is most helpful in that he sets out some of the relevant criteria to be considered in the exercise of the discretion available to the court in the application of s. 49(2) of the Act.

[para44] While I am of the view that the conduct of the Board after the respondent installed the window, was in some respects unfair and unreasonable and indeed in one respect, in breach of s. 21 of the Act, I have reluctantly concluded that in view of the clear breach of the declaration by the respondent before any of the impugned conduct of the respondent's Board of Directors, that I ought not to exercise my discretion to refuse to enforce compliance with the Declaration.

DISPOSITION

[para45] The applicant is therefore entitled to an order requiring the respondent to move the double hung window and to restore the exterior of the attic to its original condition, at her own expense and that in the alternative if the respondent fails to do so within 60 days of the date of this order, the applicant is entitled to remove the said window and restore the exterior of the unit to its original condition and add the reasonable expenses incurred in performing such work to the common expenses of the respondent's unit.

[para46] However, s. 49 also grants the court the discretion "to include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances". In the exercise of this discretion, I order that as a condition of the relief granted to the applicant, that the applicant grant consent to the respondent to install a window near her fireplace which was contemplated in the original design of her unit. I do not think that this is an unreasonable or onerous condition in view of the fact that the applicant took the position that they were prepared to allow the respondent to install a window beside her fireplace for ventilation purposes.

[para47] In view of the divided success of the parties, there will be no costs of this application.

Jose Scaroni, plaintiff, and Rosepol Holdings Ltd., defendant

No. 93-CQ-46261 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Toronto, Ontario Hoilett J. Heard: March 15 and 16, 1995. Judgment: October 26, 1995.

Counsel: Juan F. Estable, counsel for the plaintiff. Brian P. Pilley, counsel for the defendant.

[1] HOILETT J.:-- This is an action by the plaintiff for the rescission of a contract of purchase and sale and for the refund of the sum of money credited to the transaction by the plaintiff together with interest. There are alternative remedies claimed which would lead to the same result. The relevant facts may be briefly summarized.

[2] The plaintiff, a 66-year-old, immigrated from Uruguay, South America, where he claims to have completed a grade VI education. Since his arrival in Canada he has worked at a variety of jobs requiring minimum skills, as he had in Uruguay. Over the years, seemingly by thrift, he was able to accumulate $50,000.00, his life's saving. Sometime in 1983 the plaintiff met one Frank Polsinelli, and through him, one Sam Aguanno, a business partner of Polsinelli's brother. The defendant is the corporate alter ego of Frank Polsinelli. According to the plaintiff he first met Polsinelli in the sauna of a fitness club, frequented by them both. A friendship developed between the two, a friendship that later extended to the wives. The plaintiff ended up doing a number of odd jobs for Polsinelli. Visits by the plaintiffs were both frequent and casual. It was not unusual for the plaintiff to drop in as many as two or three times some weeks.

[3] On or about the 6th of October, 1989, the plaintiff loaned $50,000 to Aguanno. Aguanno failed to repay the loan and the plaintiff ultimately recovered judgment against Aguanno for the amount of the loan in February, 1991. That judgment for $52,191.25 was never satisfied by Aguanno. Between the date of the judgment and May 30, 1991, the plaintiff made several overtures to Polsinelli requesting him to use his good offices to persuade Aguanno to repay the amount of the judgment. Aguanno and Polsinelli were by this time partners through the defendant company, engaged in the development of a 14-unit condominium project in Cambridge, Ontario. According to the plaintiff, in the almost daily discussions that he had with Polsinelli about the plaintiff's anxiety to have Aguanno satisfy the judgment, they talked about Aguanno's (financial) position and Polsinelli told him that he was not going to be able to collect because Aguanno had no money and was going bankrupt. Polsinelli indicated further that the only asset Aguanno had with which to satisfy a judgment was in their joint business venture. Many of the conversations took place on trips to the Cambridge project when the plaintiff was invited to come along just for the ride or to do odd jobs for Polsinelli.

[4] Polsinelli, because of the plaintiff's importuning, agreed to speak to Aguanno in order to have Aguanno's debt to the plaintiff secured by some interest in the Cambridge project. Polsinelli later assured the plaintiff that the problem had been solved, the solution being that the amount of the judgment would go into the Cambridge project. The plaintiff was later called by Polsinelli and invited to his home re the draft of a document evidencing the plaintiff's interest and representing, what Polsinelli assured the plaintiff, was his only solution. The result was an agreement dated May 30, 1991, the circumstances of which agreement is hereafter further elaborated upon.

[5] The agreement, dated May 30, 1991, recites: i) that Aguanno presently owes the plaintiff $53,960.00, ii) that Scaroni agreed to the application of the $53,960.00 to the purchase price of a condominium unit being constructed by Rosepol and finally that Aguanno who holds an undivided 50 percent interest in Rosepol had directed Rosepol to enter into the agreement "on the terms and conditions set out". The agreement then goes on to provide, among other things, for the purchase by Scaroni from Rosepol of Unit 6 in the condominium development for a purchase price of $100,000.00, the balance of the purchase price being subscribed by a mortgage back to the vendor Rosepol. Further that:

As soon as Scaroni is given written notice that a conveyance for the said Unit #6 is prepared and available, Scaroni must close the transaction as aforesaid within 30 days after receiving such written notice ... If Scaroni does not close the transaction within 3 months of receipt of the aforesaid notice, then this whole transaction shall be deemed to be terminated and Scaroni shall be deemed to have forfeited all his right, title and interest in the said $53,960.00.

[6] Clause 4 of the agreement provides for voiding the agreement in the event of Aguanno (at his option) repaying the $53,960.00 to Scaroni before the registration of the condominium; and, further that upon a conveyance of the condominium to Scaroni Aguanno's debt to him would be extinguished.

[7] Clause 5 then provided that "Rosepol may deduct from his (Aguanno's) percentage interest in the condominium project the money credited to Scaroni upon the conveyance of the unit to him." (Exhibit 1, Tab 4).

[8] There is conflict in the evidence concerning the circumstances surrounding the execution of the agreement. According to the plaintiff he received a call from Polsinelli concerning the document that was supposed to be the solution to the problem of the debt owed by Aguanno. On his arrival at Polsinelli's home shortly after, Polsinelli and his wife, Rosemary, were in the kitchen. Mrs. Polsinelli had the document in the typewriter. The plaintiff testified that after Mrs. Polsinelli finished with the document in the typewriter he was given the document to sign. It was not explained to him and he did not take it to a lawyer because he was told it was not necessary, everything was in order. Scaroni testified that he trusted Polsinelli as a friend who by then was almost like family. The plaintiff was told to take the agreement to his wife for signature, which he did, returning later that afternoon with the executed document. It is common ground that the plaintiff had no input into the preparation of the document and although Mrs. Polsinelli purports to have witnessed Mrs. Scaroni's signature, she did not in fact witness the execution of the document by Mrs. Scaroni.

[9] Polsinelli's version of events is that he recalls the plaintiff coming to pick up the agreement on the afternoon of May 30, 1991. According to Polsinelli, his wife told the plaintiff to take the agreement to his lawyer. The plaintiff left and returned later with the agreement, executed by the plaintiff and his wife. Polsinelli presumed that the plaintiff had taken the agreement to his lawyer. Polsinelli's recollection was that copies of the agreement were couriered to his home from the office of Jack Zaldin late that morning or early in the afternoon of May 30. He cannot recall if the document had already been executed by Aguanno. Polsinelli agreed that he had earlier testified that he had phoned the plaintiff when the agreement arrived and that the plaintiff was at his (Polsinelli's) home about five minutes later.

[10] Mrs. Polsinelli confirmed that the plaintiff was at the Polsinelli's home on the afternoon of May 30, 1991 concerning the agreement. According to Mrs. Polsinelli, however, she had a couple days earlier gone to Mr. Zaldin's office to pick up copies of the agreement; they were not delivered by courier earlier that day, as her husband claims. Mrs. Polsinelli's evidence also conflicted with her husband's concerning the time of the plaintiff's return with the executed agreement. Her recollection was that it was not on that afternoon that the plaintiff returned with the agreement. Mrs. Polsinelli, too, testified that the plaintiff was advised to take the agreement to his lawyer. In any event, she had explained the terms of the agreement to the plaintiff.

[11] Concerning the circumstances of the execution of the agreement, I find the plaintiff's evidence to be a lot more credible than that of Polsinelli and his wife. Polsinelli's evidence often tended to be more convenient than credible and there were a number of inconsistencies between evidence given at the trial and at his examination for discovery.

[12] Probably one of the most important aspects of Mrs. Polsinelli's evidence was her claim that she had explained the agreement. It is not necessary for me to make a finding of credibility on that issue because even if full credit were given to her evidence, it was quite clear from her cross-examination on that issue that she did not have the vocabulary necessary to explain to the plaintiff an agreement which, by all accounts, is a technical document.

[13] The following other circumstances bear upon the issues to be determined. The plaintiff testified that apart from relying on the friendship of Polsinelli, he was influenced by Polsinelli's representations to him that Aguanno's only assets to satisfy his judgment were tied up in Rosepol and that Rosepol was then involved in certain financial negotiations and an enforcement of the claim against Rosepol would compromise those negotiations. How explicitly that point was to the plaintiff is not perfectly clear but the implications were obvious. Polsinelli admitted that the practical effect of the transaction was to inject $53,960.00 into Rosepol's offers. One may reasonably question the soundness of the plaintiff's decision not to pursue the enforcement of his judgment against Aguanno but I have no doubt, on the evidence, that his forbearance was at least in part based on representations made to him by Polsinelli, representations that were designed to enhance Rosepol's bargaining (financial) position.

[14] Scaroni testified that following the execution of the agreement he continued to discuss with Polsinelli the repayment of the $53,960.00 and Polsinelli led him to believe that they were going to get money from the bank or some finance company or that they would sell one of the units in the condominium project to repay the money. The subject of the loan and its repayment as well as the defendant's registration of the condominiums continued to be the subject of discussion between the plaintiff and Polsinelli. Polsinelli represented to him that there were potential Chinese and Japanese buyers. Those discussions reached a watershed when in a letter, dated February 19, 1993, from the solicitors for the defendant, the plaintiff was informed that the condominium unit was registered on September 23, 1992 and that the plaintiff had 30 days to close the transaction, in accordance with the terms of the May 30, 1991 agreement. The letter suggested a closing date no later than March 23, 1993 (ref. Exhibit 1, Tab 10).

[15] Scaroni testified that he went to see Polsinelli on or about March 23, 1993 and asked him if the proposal to repay the $53,690.00 was still in place and Polsinelli assured him that it was; that he should go and see his lawyer. The plaintiff did not go to see his lawyer but waited, as he put it, for Polsinelli to solve the situation. Nothing happened until on or about June 29, 1993, when the plaintiff received a letter from the defendant's solicitors informing him that because of his failure to close the transaction in the time prescribed, the deal was at an end and that the plaintiff was "... deemed to have forfeited all [his] right, title and interest in the monies owed to [him] by Aguanno". (See Exhibit 1, Tab 11). The plaintiff took the letter to his lawyer who explained to him its purport, namely, that he had lost his money. The plaintiff claims that he was betrayed by Polsinelli and that he does not wish to close the deal but wishes to hold Polsinelli to his promise to refund the money. [16] Counsel for the plaintiff argues that the transaction is governed by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. 26, which makes relevant the following undisputed facts:

1. It was not until in or about the month of April, 1994 that the remaining condominiums were marketed, for which delay there has been no reasonable explanation.
2. The plaintiff has never been supplied with a Disclosure Statement.

[17] Concerning that second fact, the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, (Exhibit 1, Tab 4), may usefully be contrasted with the prototype Agreement of purchase and Sale employed in the sale of the remaining condominium units. (Tab 12, Exhibit 1). The latter bears the earmarks of professionalism which underscores the inelegance of the former. More to the point, however, is the inclusion in the more formal agreement of the following clause which does not appear in the agreement in issue:

Article 4.00 - General Terms 4.01 The purchaser acknowledges receipt of the Disclosure Statement and the proposed Declaration, By-laws, Rules, Management Agreement, if any, and Insurance Trust Agreement, if any, and budget statement for the one-year period immediately following the registration of the Declaration and description. (Exhibit 1, Tab 12)

[18] I shall later consider those provisions of the Condominium Act which is argued has application to the circumstances of the instant case.

[19] The following circumstance makes it difficult, in my view, not to question the integrity with which Polsinelli dealt with the plaintiff. I say this having regard to the fact that the plaintiff is obviously a man of modest sophistication whose mother tongue is Spanish. Polsinelli, on the other hand, is a businessman of some experience. The condominium project was not his first business venture. In an agreement dated March 26, 1992, Polsinelli and Aguanno entered into a share purchase agreement, the effect of which was to make Polsinelli the sole shareholder of Rosepol. That single fact is, in my view, significant. Probably more significant, however, is Clause 8 of that agreement. Clause 8 recites the May 30, 1991, agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, and continues:

... The Corporation and the purchaser both agree to assume the obligations set out in the said agreement with Scaroni. If for any reason whatsoever, Scaroni does not close the condominium transaction in accordance with the terms of the agreement dated May 30, 1991 then the Corporation and the purchaser agree to save the Vendor harmless from any and all claims and debts which may be made upon him by Scaroni. If Scaroni does not close the condominium transaction, the Vendor shall also have the option of purchasing the condominium from the Corporation upon the same terms as are contained in the Scaroni agreement. (Exhibit 1, Tab 5)

[20] The terms of the share purchase agreement provided a consideration payable to Aguanno comprised of $15,000.00 cash plus a registrable conveyance of 74 Grove Street East, Barrie, Ontario, appraised at $145,000.00. Other terms of the agreement provide for the Vendor, Aguanno, assuming the lease for an automobile formerly leased by the corporation; a vehicle of which Aguanno had the use, and for the assignment by Aguanno to the corporation of a shareholders loan from Aguanno to the Corporation. There was no indication of the money value associated with either of the foregoing two terms. There is no indication, however, that they significantly altered the amount of the consideration.

[21] Concerning the agreement, dated May 30, 1991, there is no Certificate of Independent Legal Advice as far as the plaintiff is concerned and, as I indicated earlier, I find as a fact that there was no such independent legal advice. That agreement, in my view, is flawed in one other respect. The purchase price of $100,000.00 placed on the condominium was arbitrary, as indeed, it appears, was the whole agreement. There was no appraisal done for the purposes of fixing that purchase price. The best that can be said from the paucity of evidence on the subject is that Polsinelli picked a figure out of the air most favourable to the corporation.

[22] The following provisions of the Condominium Act bear upon the issues to be decided: 51.-(1) Every agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes shall be deemed to contain,

(a) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to register a declaration and description of the property in which the unit is included without delay;

(b) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units included in the property without delay other than any units mentioned in a statement under clause 54(1)(c); (not here applicable)

(c) a covenant by the vendor to take all reasonable steps to deliver to the purchaser a registrable deed or transfer of the unit without delay.

52.-(1) An agreement of purchase and sale entered into after the 1st day of June, 1979 by a declarant or proposed declarant of a unit or proposed unit for residential purposes is not binding on the purchaser until the declarant or proposed declarant has delivered to the purchaser a copy of the current disclosure statement and all material amendments thereto.

(2) The purchaser, before receiving delivery of a deed to or transfer of the unit, may rescind the agreement of purchase and sale within ten days after receiving the disclosure statement or, where there has been a material amendment thereto, within ten days after receiving the material amendment.

(3) A person may rescind an agreement of purchase and sale under subsection (2) by giving written notice of the rescission to the declarant or proposed declarant or to the solicitor of the declarant or the proposed declarant.

(4) Every declarant or proposed declarant who receives notice of rescission under subsection (3) from a person entitled to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale under subsection (2), shall forthwith refund, without penalty or charge, to the person giving notice, all money that the declarant or proposed declarant received from that person under the agreement that was credited as payment against purchase price.

[23] The letter of June 29, 1993 written on behalf of the defendant, purporting to forfeit the plaintiff's interest in the condominium unit was responded to on behalf of the plaintiff by Juan F. Estable of the law firm of Battiston & Associates in a letter dated July 15, 1993 (ref. Exhibit 2). The letter deals with the setting up of an appointment to examine Aguanno as a judgment debtor and goes on to disavow the May 30, 1991 agreement of purchase and sale. The reasons for disavowing the agreement, briefly summarized, were: (1) lack of independent legal advice, which the plaintiff was explicitly told not to seek, (2) the false representation to the plaintiff that Aguanno was, in effect, insolvent, (3) the plaintiff had a poor command of the English language and he did not fully understand the agreement. There was no reference in Mr. Estable's letter to the provisions of the Condominium Act, nor was it clear from the evidence whether he knew at the time of his letter that the transaction purported to be terminated was governed by the Act. There is no reason, however, why, in my view, the plaintiff's position ought to be prejudiced by virtue of the failure of the plaintiff's lawyer to recite in his letter of July 15, 1993 non-compliance with the Condominium Act as one reason for questioning the validity of the May 30, 1991 agreement.

[24] Having carefully considered all the circumstances in the instant case, I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiff should be relieved of his obligations under the impugned agreement for the following reasons:

1. I am satisfied that the plaintiff did not fully appreciate the document he was called upon to sign.
2. Polsinelli took advantage of the friendship that existed between him and the plaintiff in inducing him to sign a document that clearly advantaged the defendant company, and directly Polsinelli, and in so doing misrepresented the financial circumstances of Aguanno to the plaintiff.
3. The defendant acted in breach of both Sections 51 and 52 of the Condominium Act. He failed to take reasonable steps to register a declaration and description of the property as required by Section 51(1)(a), and failed to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units as required by Section 51(1)(b). The defendant failed as well to deliver a copy of the disclosure statement, as required by Section 52(1) of the Act.
4. The evidence indicates, as well, that at all material times Unit 6 was tenanted and no proper notice had been served on the tenant. The result being that the defendant in all probability would have been in no position to close the transaction.

[25] I have concluded, therefore, that the plaintiff should receive judgment for the amount claimed together with interest in accordance with the Courts of Justice Act. I am particularly fortified in that conclusion when regard is had to the indemnity clause (Clause 8) contained in the share purchase agreement entered into between the defendant and Aguanno, his erstwhile partner. In other words, the argument that the plaintiff's remedy is to seek to enforce his judgment against Aguanno is without merit, given that one obvious response would be to name the defendant a third party, reciting the above indemnity clause.

[26] The plaintiff shall have his costs of these proceedings, which costs I am prepared to fix, upon further submissions, if counsel cannot agree on what are reasonable costs.

Phyllis Israel, plaintiff, and Townsgate 1 Limited and 652 Steeles Investments Inc., defendants Court File 92-CQ- 13954 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Toronto, Ontario Hill J. Heard: September 19, 20 and 21, 1994. Judgment: December 30, 1994.

P. Polster, for the plaintiff. A. Sternberg, for the defendants Townsgate 1 Limited and 652 Steeles Investments Inc.

HILL J.:-

NATURE OF THE PROCEEDINGS

[1] The litigation between the parties centres on a dispute regarding the dimensions of a solarium in a luxury condominium. The plaintiff repudiated the contract of purchase without taking possession of the condominium unit and without paying the remaining purchase price instalment.

[2] Apart from issues regarding costs and interest, the plaintiff seeks:

1. A declaration that the plaintiff is entitled at law to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale;
2. Judgment in the liquidated sum of $95,100.00 in respect of deposits and upgrades paid to the defendant Townsgate 1 Limited;
3. In the alternative, damages for breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation in the amount of $95,100.00.

[3] The defendant, apart from interest and costs, pleads, by way of counterclaim, the following:

1. That it is entitled either to apply the plaintiff's $95,100.00 deposit to the damages incurred by the defendant, Townsgate, or to forfeit the said deposit;
2. The loss incurred by Townsgate 1 Limited on the resale of the condominium unit purchased by the plaintiff, an amount of $63,804.75;
3. Damages relating to the transaction of purchase and sale including lost occupation charges and carrying charges, an amount of $4,959.09.

OVERVIEW OF EVIDENCEThe Parties

[4] In 1989, Phyllis Israel was a 63 year old semi-retired housewife. She resided, with her husband, in a luxury condominium townhouse in Willowdale. The Israels had three children, each of whom had two children of their own for a total of six grandchildren.

[5] The defendant, 652 Steeles Investments Inc. (652), was the registered owner of the property at the intersection of Steeles Avenue and Bathurst Street in the Town of Vaughn. The defendant, 652, subsequently conveyed to the defendant, Townsgate 1 Limited (Townsgate), the property in question. Townsgate was at all material times the developer of a 226 suite luxury condominium project primarily designed for "empty nesters" - couples whose children had grown up and had left the family home.

Purchase of the Condominium Unit

[6] Since the early to mid-1980's, the Israels had actively considered acquiring a single level retirement residence with less square footage than the townhouse in which they were residing. By 1985-86, Mrs. Israel began looking at some condominiums, at times, in the company of her daughter, Ms. Linda Wax. Mrs. Israel testified that it was generally known to her children that she and her husband were seeking retirement accommodation. On the testimony of the Israels, there was no immediate urgency to purchase their retirement residence nor was the purchase of a new residence dependent on the sale of their townhouse.

[7] Mrs. Israel testified that certain prerequisites were important in her search for a new residence. As a consequence of an operation of Mr. Israel, the Israels were interested in a single level residence. The condominium was to be a luxury condominium because it was in effect to be the retirement home of the Israels. Further, the couple considered it very important to have an eat-in kitchen, large enough to comfortably seat 6 persons. The intent was to have any family dinners, in the sense of a meal with the Israels, one of their children and spouse and two grandchildren, in a room other than the dining room. The Israels had three children each with children of their own. It appears from the evidence that the Israels had little or no contact with one of their children, his spouse and two children. However, the evidence of the Israels is that, when in Canada, they would otherwise see their other children and grandchildren with a frequency of one to three times per week. The Israels had a condominium in Florida and customarily resided there from mid-November in one year to near the end of April in the, next with the possible exception of a couple of weeks in February when they would come home to Canada.

[8] The Israels journeyed to Florida in mid-November of 1988 and, on their evidence, were unaware of the Townsgate development on leaving Canada. The couple talked to their children on the phone from Florida one or two times per week. At some point, according to Mrs. Israel's evidence, she learned in a telephone conversation, or conversations, with her daughter, Linda Wax, or her son-in-law, Mr. Stan Wax, about the Townsgate development. Believing that the development would potentially be of interest to the Israels, a 49 page document was transmitted by facsimile from Toronto to the Israels in Florida during the afternoon of February 23, 1989.

[9] It was Mrs. Israel's recollection at trial that she had the plans for a couple of weeks prior to the February 24, 1989 "grand opening" promotional event undertaken by Townsgate to commence marketing of the condominium units. Mrs. Israel testified that she and her husband spent a "considerable time" going over the floor plans faxed to Florida. She considered the purchase to be a big decision requiring careful review of the plans and the ultimate decision to purchase.

[10] Linda Wax obtained the condominium plans from her husband and, on her recollection, they had to work quickly in order to discern whether her parents were interested in the project. Mr. Ian Zagdansky, a representative of Townsgate, testified that the plans were printed several days before the February 24, 1989 opening and delivered to Townsgate immediately before the opening promotional event.

[11] Mrs. Israel testified that she and her husband quickly ignored the smaller square footage units and after giving some of the others quite a bit of careful study they decided upon the Ridgeway Suite 2M model. Mrs. Israel testified that the solarium size was a "big" prerequisite to the decision to offer to purchase the Ridgeway unit as the accompanying literature described the inclusion of an "over-sized solarium/family room". The Israels testified that they saw the dimensions on the Ridgeway floor plan for the solarium and, believing the dimensions to describe a rectangular solarium of 7'2" x 12'3", they were of the view that it would comfortably seat 6 persons. In the accompanying literature, the relationship of the solarium to the kitchen was described as a "kitchen with separate glass solarium and family room". Attached as Appendix A is a copy of the floor plan of the Ridgeway suite [please see paper copy for a copy of the exhibit]. Other features of the 2M suite met the needs of the Israels.

[12] The Israels instructed their daughter to make an offer to purchase, on their behalf, for a Ridgeway Suite 2M on the 11th floor of the Townsgate 1 Limited project with a northern exposure. The purchase price was known to be $374,500.00. In the absence of the Israels from Canada, Ms. Wax was to purchase the unit in trust for her parents. On attending at the invitational promotional offering on February 24, 1989, Linda Wax observed large floor plans on the walls, including a depiction of the Ridgeway model. Mrs. Israel testified that she did not ask her daughter to confirm the dimensions of the 2M suite nor did she ever convey to Townsgate, through her daughter or otherwise, the specific purpose she had in mind for the solarium.

The Agreement of Purchase and Sale

[13] On February 24, 1989, Linda Wax purchased Unit 3 in trust for her parents, on level 11 of the condominium project. This was a Ridgeway Suite 2M unit. Ms. Wax provided deposit cheques totalling $40,000.00 to the defendants which were ultimately cashed. In turn, once the Israels returned to Canada in 1989, she was reimbursed for the deposit cheques by her parents. Ms. Wax testified that she did not read the entirety of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale (the Agreement) before signing the document, in the main relying on the assurance of her husband that there was nothing detrimental or abnormal in the document.

[14] The Agreement provided for a targeted closing date of May 10, 1991. Attached as Schedule B to the Agreement was a depiction of the floor plan of Suite 2M without any floor dimensions described thereon. As with the floor plan faxed to the Israels in Florida, Schedule B included with the floor plan the following narrative:

Room Sizes and specifications are subject to change without notice. All square footages include balcony areas where applicable. All room sizes shown are approximate. Builder may substitute materials for those provided in the plans and specifications provided such materials are of a quality equal to or better than the materials provided for in the plans and specifications. Decorative and upgraded items displayed in the furnished model suites and sales office are for display purposes only and are not included in the purchase price. E. & O.E.

The Agreement itself, in clause 24, provided:

This offer when accepted shall constitute a binding contract of purchase and sale and time shall in all respects be of the essence hereof. It is agreed that there is no representation, warranty, collateral agreement or condition affecting this agreement or the real property or supported hereby other than as expressed herein in writing whether contained in any sales brochures or alleged to have been made by any sales representative or agents.

Clause 1(e), relating to the unit purchased, provided that:

"Unit" means dwelling Unit 3 Level 11 as shown on the Sketch attached hereto as Schedule "B", and the Parking Unit(s) and the Storage Unit(s) together with an undivided interest in the common elements and the exclusive use of those parts of the common elements attaching to such Unit(s) as set out in the declaration. The Vendor reserves the right to alter the design and/or layout of the Unit(s) and such parts of the common elements pertaining thereto as may be required to facilitate changes in the structural, mechanical or electrical components of the building, as the Vendor in its sole discretion, may deem necessary or appropriate.

Developments Up to July 31, 1991

[15] Mrs. Israel testified that on returning from Florida in late April or early May 1989, she received a copy of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale and read it over. She also went to the Townsgate sales office and saw, on the wall, plans for the Ridgeway model with dimensions specified in accordance with what she had observed in the promotional literature faxed to her in Florida. The plaintiff testified that she and her husband remained very excited about the pending completion of the condominium project as she liked the area and already shopped in the vicinity. In November of 1990, amendments were made to the agreement providing for a reduction from the purchase of two parking spaces to one space and a corresponding reduction in the purchase price to $362,000.00. Further, the agreement was amended from the in-trust status to the plaintiff as purchaser.

[16] The plaintiff testified that she was anxious to get into the building, once constructed, in order to view the unit she had purchased. To this end, she visited the Townsgate sales office on a number of occasions but was informed that the building was in an incomplete state and too dangerous to be entered by purchasers. Mrs. Israel was particularly anxious to have certain measurements undertaken regarding built-in cabinets for two or three of the rooms in order to have them priced with a cabinetmaker.

[17] Largely because of a number of construction trade strikes, delays in the closing transpired with the closing being delayed until the spring of 1991, September 4, 1991 and, ultimately to October 11, 1991.

[18] In late April 1991, the plaintiff ordered and paid for a number of upgrades to be included in the purchased unit at a cost of $4,601.00. These extras were paid for by a cheque dated April 28, 1991.

[19] Mrs. Israel testified that she was aware that, in 1990, there was a slump in the real estate market. Townsgate was offering purchase incentives including charging no GST. The Israels put their townhouse up for sale in 1990 or 1991. When they did so, they were aware that prices in the real estate market were lower than what they had been. Both Mr. and Mrs. Israel testified that this however had no effect whatsoever on their decision to complete the deal to purchase the Ridgeway Suite and to move into that unit as their retirement home. Both denied that they were speculators involved in an investment purchase.

[20] In May and June of 1991, the Townsgate 1 building was still under construction. There existed no regular practice of taking people into the building itself. By the end of May 1991, air ducts had been installed and the plumbing for various appliances. On June 5, 1991, as a result of an offering by Townsgate, Mrs. Israel, as a purchaser of a condominium unit, was offered a 15% reduction in the purchase price in return for an immediate payment of $50,500.00. Mrs. Israel agreed to the proposal and made the immediate payment thereby reducing the overall purchase price to $307,700.00. Mr. Zagdansky testified that the condominium market had dropped significantly and it was the corporation's intention to help purchasers with financing. On his evidence, this was an entirely gratuitous offering by Townsgate. It would however serve to make the closings regarding the units more certain.

[21] In February, 1989, the residential condominium market was active and buoyant. By October of 1991, the market prices had dropped significantly with substantially less transactions. The Israels were unable to sell their townhouse even with a $50,000.00 reduction in the original list price.

[22] Mr. and Mrs. Israel testified that it remained their intention, in June 1991, to complete the deal and to move into the Ridgeway Suite as their retirement home. Mrs. Israel testified that she was eager to move in and to enjoy the condominium as her retirement home. Mr. Israel testified that they were happy about the decision and committed to moving in as evidenced by their purchase of upgrades and the agreement to the payment in return for the purchase price discount. Linda Wax testified that it was her view that her parents certainly intended to move into the Townsgate project. She had 30 to 40 of her parents' boxes of possessions packed and in her basement during the summer of 1991.

The July 1991 Entry to the Unit

[23] By the end of July 1991, according to Mrs. Israel's testimony, she was informed by a representative of the Townsgate sales office that she could enter the building only on the condition that she did so after hours and on being prepared to walk up the stairs for 11 storeys. On July 31, 1991, the Israels, accompanied by a carpenter of their retaining, entered the building on the conditions enunciated by the developer's representatives. In their unit, all of the cabinets were standing in the living room uninstalled. In the kitchen, the plumbing nibs were installed. Mrs. Israel testified that she was generally pleased with the unit as it appeared to be very bright. The carpenter measured areas with which he was concerned in the living room and second bedroom and washer/dryer areas of the unit, noting measurements on a floor plan. He was not concerned with the solarium. Mrs. Israel testified that she probably walked through the solarium area but its overall size was not apparent to her. This was not the focus of the brief visit to the unit which lasted approximately 1/2 hour as the cabinetmaker was in a hurry.

[24] Following their initial entry to the unit, the Israels, on their evidence, remained intent on moving into the unit. On July 31, 1991, they requested that a television cable outlet in the second bedroom be moved into the centre of the closet area where they intended to install an entertainment unit in a custom-built cabinet to be built by the carpenter.

The Second Entry Into the Unit

[25] Mrs. Israel testified that she entered the purchased unit for the second time in late August or early September of 1991. Her intention was not only to see the unit but to take a measurement regarding a space for a piano. To this end, Mrs. Israel took some measurements in areas of concern regarding fitting in existing furniture which she and her husband owned. In her quite emotional testimony, Mrs. Israel testified that on seeing the solarium her "bubble burst" and she saw the hopes and plans of her husband as dashed because of the size of the solarium. She testified that she will never forget it and that the disappointment was overpowering. It was at once evident to her that there was no way to fit a table and six chairs into the solarium. For the purposes of this judgment, I have assumed that the main solarium window faces northward. Mrs. Israel measured the distance between the solarium window and the kitchen walls and found that on the west side of the solarium the distance was approximately 4'5" to 4'7" and on the east side of the solarium the distance was about 7'1". Mrs. Israel testified that this room was not what she had agreed to purchase. Mr. Israel testified that his wife was quite sick about what they saw regarding the size and shape of the solarium. He testified that it was not at all what they had anticipated from the plans - it was a very narrow room. He testified that it disturbed the two of them terribly.

[26] Mrs. Israel testified that she made an immediate complaint to a female agent while she was still visibly upset. According to her evidence, the agent said that she had heard this story before. Mrs. Israel testified that she telephoned her son-in-law and daughter regarding what she had observed of the solarium. Linda Wax testified that her mother had called very upset regarding the size of the eating area and its inability to accommodate a table and six chairs. Mrs. Israel testified that the matter affected her sleep and that she found the situation greatly upsetting, aggravating and stressful. Her recollection was that she reported the matter to the sales office within a day or two. Mr. Zagdansky, and Mr. Kerr, another representative of Townsgate, testified that they received no complaints whatsoever from Mrs. Israel or any other purchasers, prior to October 1991, regarding the size of the solarium constructed in the various units. Linda Wax testified that her mother was sufficiently upset regarding the solarium that she had spoken of not closing the condominium deal.

The October 1991 Developments

[27] Mrs. Israel, after speaking to her son-in-law, retained counsel who wrote a letter dated October 1, 1991 to the law firm representing Townsgate. The letter stated inter alia that:

As you are aware, Mrs. Israel, through her daughter as agent, purchased the unit after reviewing the plans prepared by the builder. The plans indicated the solarium dimensions of 7'2" x 12'3". These dimensions were material to Mrs. Israel's decision to purchase the unit and she relied on them in deciding to make the purchase.

In August, 1991, Mrs. Israel was given access to the unit for the first time and, much to her surprise, found that the width of the solarium was not 7'2" as indicated on the plans, but only 4'7". The dramatic narrowing of the solarium has rendered it useless for its intended function as an eating area. For all intents and purposes, Mrs. Israel has been deprived of one of the rooms that she had contracted to purchase. We view this as a fundamental breach of the contract.

If your client is able to provide Mrs. Israel with a unit that corresponds to the measurements indicated on the plans, she is prepared to close the transaction as scheduled. In the event that this cannot be done, kindly return Mrs. Israel's deposits, with accrued interest, forthwith.

[28] On October 9, 1991, the Israels met with Mr. Zagdansky in the condominium unit purchased by the Israels. Mr. Zagdansky explained that the walls couldn't be pushed out. While he was not prepared to discuss the room size issue, he, in his evidence, indicated that he wanted to see what he could do to help. The Israels were clearly distressed about the inability, on their view of the matter, to place a table and six chairs in the solarium. Mr. Zagdansky testified that he inquired as to whether Mrs. Israel knew a decorator who could help solve the problem. He expressed his hope that the matter could be resolved without resorting to the expense of lawyers. There was some discussion of moving the cabinet, in the northwest corner of the kitchen around the corner into the solarium. Mrs. Israel found this to be an unsatisfactory solution because as it was, the kitchen was a galley kitchen which needed what little counter space it had in order to be reasonably useable.

[29] Mr. Zagdansky testified that on this date Mrs. Israel related to him that she had been into the unit many times during the various stages of construction and she was very familiar with the unit. Mrs. Israel, and her husband, testified that they had only been in the unit on two occasions prior to the October 9, 1991 meeting.

[30] Mrs. Israel, on cross-examination, testified that she saw no use to "working with the room" by way of utilization of a designer or architect to maximize the space usage. Five-chair seating would neither be comfortable nor good looking. The use of benches was undesirable and moving the table in the solarium toward the family room would effectively block the family room entrance. Mrs. Israel testified that other features of the unit were fine, including the single level, the exposure, the two bedrooms with the second over-sized bedroom, the ability to build in the other desired cabinetry, and the security of the building.

[31] Mrs. Israel testified that she gave no consideration to closing with an abatement. It was evident to her that the solarium could not seat six persons given the width of the room on its west side. The plaintiff testified that she remained very upset at the October meeting as she had been looking forward to moving into the unit for three years and had utilized the retirement savings of her and her husband for the purchase. In effect, an important pre-requisite was said to be missing. She would not have purchased the unit if she had known the "true dimensions" of the solarium. The plaintiff testified that the occasion should have been a joyous one but it proved to simply be a period of great stress. It was the plaintiff's view that she had kept "her end of the bargain". Mr. Israel, in his evidence, agreed that there was no attempt to work with any professional in order to achieve any other resolution as to how the space might be utilized.

[32] Mr. Zagdansky testified that he remained of the view that the room was not useless. He formed the view that Mr. and Mrs. Israel were entirely inflexible. They appeared to have made their minds up and although he was anxious to settle, none of his suggestions met with acceptance by the purchaser.

Professor Gilbert's Evidence

[33] Professor Gilbert, an expert in the field of interior design, retained by the plaintiff, testified that the plan of the Ridgeway model is a typical developer's promotional drawing. The plan would indicate to a lay person that the kitchen ended at a line drawn west to east from the north end of the kitchen cabinet in the northwest corner of the kitchen. In other words, a purchaser, not sophisticated in reading plans, would be of the view that the solarium was in effect a rectangular room 7'2" x 12'3" with the distance between the solarium window and the west wall of the kitchen at 7'2". The witness' report (Exhibit #6) stated inter alia that:

The floor plan drawing shows approximate sizes, proportions and relationships of the various rooms and spaces and the fixtures in them.

Overall the drawing and the dimensions are probably accurate enough for the typical buyer. The Solarium/Kitchen/Family Room area is reasonably accurately drawn. However the Solarium dimensions are quite fanciful, as the drawing clearly shows it to be an L-shaped space, both arms of which are quite narrow.

A person who was not particularly good at reading and interpreting drawings could get a highly inflated impression of the size and usefulness of the Solarium from the dimensions.

[34] The Professor testified that the solarium could, in somewhat cramped quarters, accommodate a table of about 5' x 3' plus six chairs. It would not be generous space, but would certainly accommodate a small table of this size. The witness testified that beyond the table width one needs about 2' to accommodate the placing and movement of a chair. To this end, a 7' width would be required to accommodate a 3' wide table and two chairs along each side.

[35] Professor Gilbert testified that there is no scale on the planned drawing and it is not at all easy to formulate one's own scale using an ordinary ruler. There is in effect no recognizable scale. The plan does not describe how big the kitchen itself is. Study of the plan would lead a person, untrained in reading architectural drawings, to form a highly inflated belief in the size and usefulness of the solarium. Professor Gilbert was the view that a purchaser would be easily misled and that it is difficult for an untrained person to develop a visual sense of the proportionate relationship of the rooms themselves in order to determine actual shape and size.

[36] Professor Gilbert has had an opportunity to measure the actual solarium in unit 3 on the 11th floor of the Townsgate project and, on his measurement, the distance between the solarium window and the end of the west wall of the kitchen is about 4'6". Because of this narrowness, there is no way for a reasonably sized dining room table to fit in the allotted space with six chairs. It may be that a tiny table and three or four chairs could be placed comfortably in the solarium. The placement of a 3' x 5' table and six chairs would require that the table be moved toward the family room such that the southerly two chairs would be in the kitchen space and the far east chair, at the end of the table, would in effect be in the family room. The family room entrance would be obstructed.

[37] The Professor testified that the solarium is in effect "a cut up squiggly L". The Professor testified that the plan was reasonably accurately drawn and is otherwise a fair representation of what is being offered.

Exclusivity of the Agreement

[38] Mrs. Israel testified that she could not remember reading the fine print regarding the E. & O.E. clause on the plan faxed to her in Florida. If she had digested the text she would have been concerned. On her return, in April of 1989, she received and read a copy of the Agreement. At trial, she could not remember whether she had read Schedule B, the floor plan without dimensions, which also contained the text of the E. & O.E. clause. In addition, she could not recollect having read paragraph 24 of the Agreement. Linda Wax testified that she didn't notice the E. & O.E. clause on the bottom of the plan as she paid no attention to the issue of dimensions. She did not recollect having read clause 24 of the Agreement nor was it discussed with her parents.

[39] Professor Gilbert testified that the E. & O.E. clause connotes that changes would be made as necessary having regard to the dictates of regulatory authorities and zoning. The Professor testified that ordinarily this involves deviations of a couple of inches. The witness further testified that because the purchaser is buying a product to be built in the sense that it is not real at the time of purchase such that it can be measured, necessarily the purchaser must believe what he or she is shown.

[40] Mr. Zagdansky testified that all dimensions were approximate as shown in the floor plans for the respective condominium units. The E. & O.E. disclaimer meant that measurements as shown were not to the millimetre or inch. He further testified however that once constructed, there should be no more than a 3 or 45 deviation. Mr. Zagdansky testified that Townsgate had no intent to state the dimensions in an inflated, false or misleading fashion. The witness was of the view that one could not reasonably read the plans as the Israels say they did. Mr. Zagdansky testified that simply by visually comparing the size of the solarium proportionally to the family room, with its dimensions, would lead to a view that the solarium was L-shaped. The Townsgate representative further testified that a table and four or five chairs could fit within the solarium area. If a sixth chair were required, the table could be shifted toward the family room when the meal was actually in progress. Mr. Zagdansky testified that no changes were made to the Israel's Ridgegate unit and that it was built as represented. The unit was 1528 square feet as represented. In effect, the solarium is not a separate room but a continuation of the kitchen itself.

[41] Mr. Zagdansky testified that all that was in the Agreement telling the purchaser what he or she was buying was the Schedule B floor plan which revealed size and shape. When pressed in cross-examination as to whether Townsgate would be free to build a suite of this layout, however diminutive in size, Mr. Zagdansky acknowledged that the dimensions of rooms are important to purchasers and that Townsgate was not free to build suites of any size it pleased once an agreement had been entered into. Purchasers could rely on the Townsgate brochures and the plans on the sales office walls with the suite layout dimensions. Mr. Zagdansky testified that, from Townsgate's perspective, a purchaser would have legal recourse in an instance of substantial discrepancy between the represented dimensions and the constructed layout. Mr. Zagdansky too agreed that the E. & O.E. clause would generally result in a deviation of only a few inches in the construction of a unit. Importantly, the import of Mr. Zagdansky's testimony was that a purchaser could rely on the agreement and the floor plan with the dimensions.

THE LEGAL FRAMEWORK

(1) Contract

[42] In assessing the rights and obligations of the parties, in circumstances where parties have executed a written agreement, it is essential to commence with an examination of the contract. This analysis is a matter of construction in order to discern the intentions of the parties which itself is essentially a question of fact: British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. (1993), 99 D.L.R. (4th) 577 (S.C.C.) at 581 per La Forest and McLachlin, JJ.

[43] Where the parties have elected to commit themselves to a written document one may assume, as a general rule, that all terms material to the agreement are in writing: Heard et al. v. Meltick et al. (1984), 5 D.L.R. (4th) 740 (Ont. C.A.) at 748 per Weatherston, J.A.; Andronyk v. Williams (1985), 21 D.L.R. (4th) 557 (Man. C.A.) at 569, 570 per O'Sullivan, J.A. Otherwise, it has been said, the creation of a written document amounts to a meaningless exercise.

[44] Parties to a contract owe a duty to each other to honestly perform a contract honestly made: LeMesurier et al. v. Andrus (1986), 25 D.L.R. (4th) 424 (Ont. C.A.) at 430 per Grange, J.A. Further, parties are under a duty to act in good faith and to take all reasonable steps to complete the contract: Abdool et al. v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. et al. (1992), 10 O.R. 120 (C.A.) at 136 per Robins, J.A.; Leung v. Leung et al. (1991), 75 O.R. (2d) 786 (Gen. Div.) at 797 per Yates, J.; Victorian Homes (Ontario) Inc. v. DeFreitas et al. (1991), 16 R.P.R. (2d) 55 (Ont. Ct. - Gen. Div.) at 57, 58 per Rosenberg, J.

[45] Not infrequently, disputes arise as to whether statements made in pre-contractual negotiations have become a part of the subsequent written agreement. Where a representation of existing fact is made at the pre-contract stage it may not be carried forward, expressly or by implication, into the written contract. Where such a representation was however intended by the parties to have promissory intent, as opposed to a mere representation or sales-talk, it may have the legal force of a collateral warranty or contract: B.C. Hydro and Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. et al., supra, at 617 per Iacobucci, J. (in dissent on other issues); Richview Construction Co. Ltd. v. Raspa (1976), 11 O.R. (2d) 377 (Ont. C.A.) at 385 per Arnup, I.A.; Andronyk v. Williams, supra, at 569; Carman Construction Ltd. v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. et al. (1982), 136 D.L.R. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) at 198 per Martland, J.; Hayward et al. v. Mellick et al., supra, at 743. In effect, such a warranty enters into the bargain and must be read together with the written agreement in order to identify the entirety of the parties' intentions provided of course there exists no contradictory or limiting term or condition of the subsequent contract ousting or excluding the operation of the antecedent representation: Carman Construction Ltd. v. CPR Co. et al., supra, at 199, 200. Such a collateral warranty will be rare and must be strictly proven: Hawrish v. Bank of Montreal, [1969] S.C.R. 515 at 519-521 per Judson, J. On occasion, a representation made prior to formation of the written contract, for example in a promotional brochure, will be incorporated by direct reference in the contract itself (see for example: Jervis Court Developments Ltd. v. Ricci et al. (1992), 23 R.P.R. (2d) 32 (B.C.S.C.) at 35,36 per Spencer, J.) while at times the prior oral representation maintains its status as a collateral warranty (see, for example: Sodd Coloration Inc. v. Tessis (1977), 17 O.R. (2d) 158 (C.A.) at 161 per Lacourciere, J.A.).

[46] A condition of a contract is a vital term going to the root of the agreement. Would the purchaser have gone ahead with the deal if the statement or representation turned out to be untrue or materially misleading? Suffice it to say, that a vendor can only enforce a contract where s/he substantially conveys what the terms, reflecting the parties' intentions, called for: LeMesurier et al. v. Andrus, supra, at 428. However, the measure of an alleged fundamental breach of a primary obligation under a contract, in considering the availability of a remedial response, is essentially an objective test addressing whether, from the perspective of a reasonable purchaser, it could be said that s/he has been deprived of substantially the whole benefit which it was the intention of the parties s/he should obtain from the contract: Hunter Engineering Co; Inc. et al. v. Syncrude Canada Ltd. et al. (1989), 57 D.L.R. (4th) 367 (S.C.C.) at 368, 369 per Wilson, J.; LeMesurier v. Andrus, supra, at 429; Stefanovska et al. v. Kok et al. (1990), 73 O.R. (2d) 368 (Gen. Div.) at 379, 381, 382 per Moldaver, J.

(2) The Tort of Misrepresentation

(a) Negligent Misrepresentation

[47] An action alleging the tortious conduct of negligent misrepresentation must establish the existence of the following:

- (1) There must be a duty of care or a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee.
- (2) The representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading.
- (3) The representor must have acted negligently in making said misrepresentation.
- (4) The representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent misrepresentation.
- (5) The reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

See, in this regard: The Queen v. Cognos Inc. (1993), 99 D.L.R. (4th) 626 (S.C.C.) at 643 per Iacobucci, J.; Edgeworth Construction v. N.D. Lea & Associates (1993), 17 C.C.L.T. (Sd) 101 (S.C.C.) at 107 per McLachlin, J. and at 113 per La Forest, J.; Rainbow Caterers v. C.N. Railway Co. (1991), 8 C.C.L.T. (2d) 225 (S.C.C.) at 238-9 per McLachlin, J.; Kingu et al. v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. et al. (1986), 38 C.C.L.T. 51 (B.C.C.A.) at 60 per McLachlin, J.A. (as she then was).

[48] The special relationship within which the duty of care exists is not limited to that of a contractual or fiduciary relationship in the narrow sense: Ronald Elwyn Lister Ltd. v. Dunlop Canada Ltd. (1978), 19 O.R. (2d) 380 (H.C.) at 395, 396 per Rutherford, J.; (1982), 1 S.C.R. 726 (appeal allowed on unrelated issues). Such a relationship has, depending on the circumstances of the case, included a purchaser and real estate agent: Green Acre Estates v. Carcoran et al., Ontario Court of Appeal, Sept. 23, 1994; Rotman et al. v. Spylo Realty Ltd. et al., Ontario Court of Appeal, Sept. 8, 1994; Hayward v. Mellick, supra. The standard of care required by a person making representations is an objective one - it is a duty to exercise such reasonable care as the circumstances require to ensure that the representations made are accurate and not misleading: The Queen v. Cognos Inc., supra, at 651, 654, 655. This duty extends beyond a duty of common honesty. The representor's subjective belief in the truth and accuracy of his/her representations is essentially irrelevant to the applicable standard of care. It is fair to say that an "advisor" or representor in pre-contractual negotiations does not guarantee the accuracy of the statement but is only required to exercise reasonable care with respect to it. Can it be said that the vendor must, or should, have reasonably known that the purchaser would rely on his/her representation made from a position of special knowledge?

[49] The representation, said to be inaccurate or misleading, must relate to a matter of existing fact: The Queen v. Cognos Inc., supra at 657. Would a reasonable person, in the purchaser's position, have drawn the same inference or understanding as the purchaser? Examples exist, in realty sale cases, of actionable pre-contract negligent misrepresentations relating to a sales brochure or artist's depiction of property: Rotman et al v. Spylo Realty et al., supra; and, Keen v. Alterra Developments Ltd., Ontario Court of Justice - General Division, Nov. 2, 1993 (Fedak, J.).

[50] The law of negligent misrepresentation is based on the premise that both parties are expected to act reasonably. It would not be reasonable for a purchaser, viewing the matter objectively, to rely on pre-contract statements which could be said to be no more than vague, offhand or incomplete information or a rough opinion or casual comment. It is fair to inquire in a given case whether a reasonable person, in the purchaser's position, given factors such as the nature of the transaction and the value of the investment involved, would have relied on the information at hand, as an inducement to enter into the contract, without making further inquiries: Kingu et al. v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. et al, supra, at 62, 64.

(b) Innocent Misrepresentation

[51] A pleading of innocent misrepresentation will generally be established where the following elements are proven:

- (1) A positive misrepresentation must have been made by the defendant.
- (2) The representation must have been of an existing fact.
- (3) The representation must have been made with the intention that the plaintiff should act on it.
- (4) The representation must have induced the plaintiff to enter into the contract.
- (5) The plaintiff must have acted promptly after learning of the misrepresentation to disaffirm the contract.

Kingu et al. v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. et at, supra, at 57, 58.

[52] This generic form of actionable misrepresentation shares many of the characteristics of a negligent misrepresentation. This misstatement in question must have been material to the making or inducement of a contract. The statement is in effect made by a party, often in the pre- contract period of discussion, without an awareness that what was stated was untrue - in other words, in circumstances not substantiating any fault in the sense of an allegation of negligence: The Law of Contract in Canada, G.H.L. Fridman (3rd ed.) (1994), Carswell Publishers, page 303; Hayward et al. v. Mellick et al., supra, at 743.

[53] A court may consider evidence as to what was said and the manner in which the information was presented to a purchaser. At times, what is concealed or left unsaid may amount to an innocent misrepresentation in the sense that the representee could reasonably only reach an erroneous conclusion on a matter of fact: Panzer v. Zeifman et al. (1978), 20 O.R. (2d) 502 (C.A.) at 509 per Brooke, J.A.

(3) Concurrency Considerations

[54] A question may arise as to whether the existence of a contract precludes an individual from suing in tort. As a general rule, there exists concurrency between contract and tort: The Queen v. Cognos Inc., supra, at 661, 662; B.C. Hydro and Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. et al., supra, at 584, 603. The law of contract contemplates that the parties may arrange rights and duties between themselves in a contract in such a fashion as to limit or contradict a tort duty which would otherwise exist: B.C. Hydro and Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. et al., supra, at 584. Insofar as the tort duty remains uncontradicted by the contract, it exists intact and co-extensive with obligations imposed by the contract, and may be sued upon:

Contract and Tort - Negligent Misstatement Inducing Contract - Concurrent Liability - Effect of Contractual Terms, J. Bloom (1994), 73 Can. B. Rev. 243 at 255-3.

[55] The most common means by which an intention is indicated regarding the subsistence of a tort duty obligation is the inclusion of a clause of exemption or exclusion of liability in a written contract. Such clauses are also variously described as disclaimer of liability or non-reliance clauses. In effect, such an exclusion of responsibility precludes the implication of a duty and any duty respecting a misstatement of fact which did exist, preceding the contract, does not survive the agreement. This serves in any particular case to afford a natural and true construction so that the parties' bargained agreement can be given effect.

[56] In reviewing an exclusionary term in a contract, in order to determine whether it supersedes pre-contractual conversations regarding the factual matter in issue, the clause must be strictly construed: Hayward et al. v. Mellick et al, supra, at 749. Generally, the duty imposed by the law of tort can be nullified only by clear terms: B.C. Hydro and Power Authority v. BG Checo International Ltd. et al., supra, at 585.

[57] It is necessary to interpret the exclusionary clause in each case in the context of not only the clause itself but also the totality of the circumstances including the entire text of the contract. Authority exists to suggest that overarching the natural and true construction test of the contract term may be a substantive test of reasonableness bestowing on the court a judicial discretion, in an instance of an alleged fundamental breach, not to enforce an exclusionary clause where to do so would be unfair and unreasonable: Hunter Engineering Co., Inc. et al v. Syncrude Canada Ltd. et al, supra, at 374-377; The Queen v. Cognos Inc., supra, at 665; Keen v. Alterra Developments Ltd., supra, at para. 32, 48.

(4) Remedies

[58] Where the court identifies an innocent misrepresentation, which does not constitute a term of a contract, but which was sufficiently fundamental or substantial in nature to induce the plaintiff to enter a contract, the representee is limited to an action to avoid the contract: The Law of Contract in Canada, Fridman, supra, at 304; Hayward et al. v. Mellick et al, supra, at 743; Panzer v. Zeifman et al., supra, at 508,509; Ennis v. Klassen (1990), 70 D.L.R. (4th) 321 (Man. C.A.) at 326, 327 per Huband, J.A.; Keen v. Alterra Developments Ltd., supra, at para. 24, 31; Kingu et al. v. Walmar Ventures Ltd. et al., supra, at 57, 59. The act of rescission is effectively that of the representee, not the court. In effect, the purchaser may rescind the contract thereby repudiating his/her original and apparent consent. The parties are returned to their original pre- contract positions because of the defect in the formation of the contract and a finding that the contract was void ab initio.

[59] A negligently made representation may result in tort liability for damages: The Queen v. Cognos Inc., supra, at 641, 642; The Law of Contract in Canada, Fridman, at 303.

[60] Where there is a fundamental breach going to the root of the main or collateral contract there exists performance by a party totally different from what the parties had in contemplation. Deprivation of substantially the whole benefit which it was the intention of the parties should obtain under the agreement produces an obligation to pay damages with an additional remedy to an innocent party to elect to put to an end all primary obligations of both parties remaining unperformed under the contract: Hunter Engineering Co; Inc. et al. v. Syncrude Canada Ltd. et al., supra, at 369; Abdool et al. v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., supra, at 149; Andronyk v. Williams, supra, at 563, 564. The purchaser, having proven a fundamental breach in the performance of the contract, may rescind for the breach and claim damages for the breach.

[61] The exercise of the power of rescission must not be arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable: Leung v. Leung et al., supra at 797.

FINDINGS

[62] The Israels provided their evidence in a generally straight-forward and honest fashion. From my observations of their demeanour and on a consideration of their testimony in light of the totality of the evidence, I am satisfied that:

(1) The purchase of the Ridgegate suite was not a speculative investment venture. The couple was intent on buying a retirement residence.

(2) The Israels did not have to sell their townhouse in order to complete the sale of the Townsgate condominium unit.

(3) The plaintiff relied on the description by dimension of the solarium in deciding to enter into the Agreement. Mrs. Israel honestly believed, from her analysis of the layout of the Ridgegate 2M suite, in the promotional brochure, that the solarium was a rectangular room 7'2" x 12'3".

(4) Instrumental to the plaintiff's decision to purchase the unit was her understanding of the shape and dimension of the solarium. She had no eat-in kitchen in her townhouse. She desired an eat-in kitchen. Implicit in the evidence is that the risks attendant upon meals with young children were to be accommodated in the solarium not the formal dining room. Mrs. Israel contemplated that the solarium, as she saw it represented to her, would provide a setting for six members of her family to dine.

(5) The plaintiff made her decision to purchase the expensive condominium unit in a hurried fashion. The purchase was effected by long distance through a trustee. Mrs. Israel elected to make no further inquiries, herself or by agent, regarding the solarium shape and size. Nor did the plaintiff, prior to the signing of the Agreement, communicate to Townsgate her understanding of the size and shape of the solarium or her intended use for the room.

(6) The plaintiff first became aware of the discrepancy between the suite as constructed and her perceived view of the solarium shape and size in September, 1991. On the evidence, the plaintiff thereafter acted with sufficient dispatch to disaffirm the contract.

(7) I am not persuaded that the decline in the residential condominium market was the exclusive motive or operative cause for the plaintiffs act of repudiation. This factor has been considered in a number of similar cases: Abdool et al v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., supra, at 147, 148; Stefanovska et al v. Kok et al., supra, at 378, 379; Leung v. Leung et al., supra, at 794, 795, 799; Victorian Homes (Ontario) Ltd. v. DeFreitas et al., supra, at 56. This factor however, in my view, contributed, in some measure, to the inflexible position of the purchaser regarding the materiality of the alleged defect and regarding acceptance of an abatement on account of the misrepresentation alleged. [63] Mr. Zagdansky, the principal witness for the defendants, too testified in a generally forthright manner without argument or attempts to embellish his responses. Considering the evidence led on behalf of the defendants, in the context of the totality of the evidence, I am satisfied that:

(1) There was no intention on the part of Townsgate to deceive or mislead prospective purchasers in the manner in which the solarium in the Ridgeway unit was represented in its promotional brochure and blown-up floor plans.

(2) The information derived from the brochure and floor plan depictions of the dimensional size and shape of the solarium did not amount to mere sales-talk or informal dialogue. These constituted actionable representations regarding the solarium.

(3) A purchaser of the Ridgeway suite would be unable, by reference to the Agreement, to identify the size of the solarium therein which s/he had purchased. A purchaser would only know this fact from reference to the above-described representations.

(4) Townsgate did not believe that it was at liberty to construct a condominium unit, or any room therein, not substantially in conformity with the dimensioned rendition in the pre-contractual representations.

There are a number of other facts upon which there exists little contention:

(1) A 3' x 5' table and six (6) chairs could not be accommodated in the centre of the solarium of the Ridgeway 2M unit as constructed. Such a setting could however be effected were the table shifted to the east, with the two southerly chairs placed south of the south-west solarium wall and adjacent to the kitchen cabinet, and with the easterly chair at the end of the table in the entrance of the family room.

(2) The dimensioned plan in the promotional materials did not exhibit any distortions in terms of the visually represented proportions and scale of the rooms depicted.

[64] I start from a premise that the parties should be allowed to make their own bargain. The parties did not, in the Agreement, negotiate a sale by description that included the dimensions of the rooms. This feature was absent from Schedule B. Nor was this a contract subject to inspection. The Agreement did not so provide, and, of course, the condominium unit was yet to be constructed. There was no existing model suite for the Ridgeway 2M suite as a part of the Townsgate sales office. The plaintiff could have sought an amendment to the standard form of purchase and sale utilized by Townsgate to incorporate, as a term of the contract, a commitment regarding dimensions for a rectangular solarium. Mrs. Israel did not move for this protection and indeed she did nothing to bring to the attention of the developer her expectation of a particular use for the solarium.

[65] Nevertheless, the defendant, Townsgate, in pre-contractual representations, represented to purchasers, including the plaintiff, that the solarium to be constructed in the Ridgeway 2M model would contain a 7'2" x 12'3" solarium. I accept that, taken at face value, this connotes a rectangular room not an irregularly shaped space. Although, as of the date of the Agreement, the unit was unbuilt, this representation was related to an existing fact, in the sense that the item purchased was represented as being of a set dimension. The information in this regard was peculiarly within the knowledge of Townsgate. Townsgate, in my view, stood in a special relationship vis-a-vis the purchaser in regard to the communication of information regarding the room sizes of the luxury condominium unit. A purchaser might therefore be said to be justified in relying on the promotional pre-contract representation in deciding to enter into the contract. Such a representation would operate as a representation inducing the formation of the contract or as a collateral warranty to be read together with the Agreement.

[66] What is the juridical significance, if any, of clause 24, the exclusionary clause, in the Agreement? The defendants submit that, considering the total text of the Agreement, and the unambiguous and expansive narrative of the non-reliance clause itself, it exhaustively excludes reliance on any collateral warranty or pre-contractual representation inducing the agreement. In effect, this term of the contract extinguishes any duties, rights and obligations which might otherwise arise, outside the four corners of the Agreement. On the evidence, neither the plaintiff, nor her agent, paid any attention to the implications of the limiting effect of the clause. Ordinarily, the intentions of the parties may be discerned from the wording of the exclusionary clause in light of all of the terms of the contract. In some cases, of which this is one, a broader consideration of the totality of the circumstances of the relationship assists in a just determination of the true nature of the bargain. An unusual aspect of the testimony in the instant case is that the principal witness on behalf of Townsgate, while maintaining, in large measure, the exclusionary aspect of clause 24, nevertheless appeared prepared to recognize that, a reality of the bargain, was that a purchaser must rely on the Agreement and the sales brochure for the only complete description of the property purchased.

[67] Accordingly, identification of the legal effect to be afforded clause 24, as a reflection of the true intent of the parties, is complicated by the interpretation and expression of views by the witnesses who addressed the issue. On balance, I am not satisfied that the clause excludes pre-contractual negligent misrepresentations. [68] I have considered carefully the submission that the plaintiff did not rely, in an entirely reasonable manner, on the representation of the dimensioned drawing. Visually, one can see that the solarium space is not a perfect rectangle. The kitchen space is not dimensioned, has walls of different lengths, and, in an open-space format, adjoins the solarium. Proportional comparison of the solarium space with the family room would seem to raise a question regarding the existence of a 7'2" width for the entire length of the solarium. The living/dining room, despite its shape, is attributed only a single width and a single length dimension. One cannot reasonably attribute to the plaintiff in the instant case the acumen of the purchaser in the Rotman case, supra, to read a drawing. The plaintiff did not act prudently in failing to make further inquiry and investigation considering these factors, the value of the investment at hand and the proposed usage of the solarium space. Nevertheless, on balance, the plaintiff did detrimentally, and not unreasonably, rely on the defendants' negligent representation.

[69] The promotional, precontract representations regarding the solarium, as stated, are somewhat misleading. Professor Gilbert addressed this in his testimony. The defendants should have reasonably known that a purchaser would rely on the dimensioned information given as indicative of a rectangle-shaped solarium. This was not an instance of informal information gratuitously asked for as in Shirlyn Fishing Co. v. Pumps and Power Ltd. (1980), 3 C.C.L.T. (2d) 304 (B.C.C.A.) at 316 per MacDonald, J.A.

[70] There can be no doubt that the defendant fulfilled its obligations to provide substantially what was bargained for by the purchaser. By no measure could the dimensions or non-rectangular shape of the solarium be considered, objectively, to constitute a fundamental undermining of the bargain. Indeed, the import of the plaintiff's testimony was an agreement that the unit, as constructed, substantially provided for her expectations. The exception was the size and shape of the solarium.

[71] While the floor plan, with dimensions, is undoubtedly somewhat confusing or misleading regarding the actual size and shape of the solarium, I am unable to find that the deviation of the de facto measurements and shaping of the room from the interpretation of the plan held by the plaintiff is sufficiently material or substantial to justify avoidance of the contract. The unit was purchased for a two- member family non-resident in Canada for at least five months per annum. Only where dinner was to be served to visiting children and young grandchildren would the need to set a table in the solarium arise. For the brief time corresponding to the dining period, the table could be shifted to accommodate six persons. Otherwise, a fold-down table, or table with insert leaves, would position comfortably in the solarium. Dining room space was available in the unit. The space was not "useless" as characterized by the plaintiff.

[72] However, the uncertainties promoted by the plans regarding the dimensions of each side of the solarium, or as to his actual shape, are not of a degree to allow the plaintiff to resile from the contract. Whether viewed in an objective or subjective context, it cannot be said that representations regarding the solarium shape and size were sufficiently material that the deal would not close on account of any deviation therefrom. In my view, the soft realty market provides context for the purchaser's misguided act of rescission. Certainly no reasonable purchaser would regard the somewhat misleading information to be sufficiently important to the decision to purchase that s/he would not proceed to close the deal. As noted by counsel for the defendant, in his submissions, the purchaser was minimally bound to close with an abatement or credit addressing the misrepresentation. This approach has been employed in somewhat similar instances: Rotman et al. v. Spylo Realty Ltd. et al., supra, at 8; Abdool et al v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd. et al., supra, at 154, 155; LeMesurier et al. v. Andrus, supra, at 428, 431, 432, 433; Stefanovska et al. v. Kok et al., supra, at 372.

[73] The defendant, Townsgate, resold the unit in question thereby fulfilling its duty to mitigate: LeMesurier et al v. Andrus, supra, at 431. Unfortunately, for the plaintiff, the resale transpired in a depressed market.

[74] I am not prepared to find, on the evidence before the Court, that Townsgate, prior to the plaintiff's repudiation of the agreement, had installed the "extras" ordered, and paid for, by the plaintiff. Alternatively, I am unable to determine any reason as to why the features should have been installed once the contract was repudiated. The cost of the extras is $4,601.00 which will, accordingly be backed out, or deducted from the damages due the defendant by way of its counterclaim.

[75] Considering the somewhat misleading or ambiguous nature of the planned drawing, the plaintiff would have been entitled to some credit on closing. While one must be careful not to tie any such abatement to some arbitrary standard (see Abdool et al. v. Somerset Place Developments of Georgetown Ltd., supra, at 154, 155) other cases have tied the calculation of the value of the abatement to the proportion of the defect to the property as a whole (LeMesurier et al. v. Andrus, supra, at 433) or to a denial of costs (Rotman et al. v. Spylo Realty Ltd. et al. at 8).

[76] I am not prepared to assign the real loss to the defendants against an anticipated purchase price of $362,000.00. While the plaintiff was only guaranteed the $307,700.00 purchase price on completion of the agreement, a just result, considering the abatement or equivalent entitlement, dictates that the loss to the developer be measured on the basis of what the defendants would have received had Mrs. Israel not improperly repudiated the agreement. While, superficially, the dollar amount may appear excessive in terms of an assigned credit, the reality is that the developer expected to receive $307,700.00 in a properly completed agreement with the plaintiff.

CONCLUSIONS

[77] The plaintiff's action is dismissed.

[78] The counterclaim of the defendant, Townsgate, is allowed to the following extent.

(1) Damages

purchase price reflecting $307,700.00 credit to purchaser for abatement or equivalent lost occupation and carrying 4,959.00 charges $312,659.00 less resale price $207,695.00 $104,964.00 less plaintiff's deposits 95,101.00 including deposit for "extras" damages owed by Mrs. Israel $ 9,863.00

(2) Costs

[80] The defendants are to have their costs of the litigation. The court may, if necessary, be addressed further regarding any outstanding costs issue(s).

(3) Interest

[81] The defendant is entitled to prejudgment interest assessed in accordance with s. 128 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, Chap. C.43.

Action No. C2774/91 Also reported at Action No. C2774/91 Also reported at: 18 R.P.R. (2d) 297 Ontario Court of Justice - General Division Brampton, Ontario Dunn J. June 7, 1991

Roberta McLean, appeared on her own behalf. Charlene Anderson, for the Defendant.

DUNN J.:-- These matters came before me on May 3, 1991, at which time I reserved my decision on them to better consider the law. What I have before me are two motions. The first motion is a motion by the Defendant for an order striking out the Statement of Claim on the grounds that it discloses no reasonable cause of action, and that it is frivolous or vexatious or otherwise an abuse of process. The second motion is a motion by the Plaintiff to amend her Statement of Claim as follows:

(a) by inserting in paragraph 12 the words, "negligent or wilful" failure of Defendants to perform their professional duties "as owed to the plaintiff", and (b) further in the paragraph to allege "and fraudulent" audited financial statements and that the plaintiff "through her reliance on the said statements".

The Facts The Plaintiff has issued a claim against the Defendant, an accounting firm, claiming specific and general damages. Apparently the Defendant, Lieblein & Goldhar, a firm of chartered accountants, was hired by the Board of Directors of Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 647 to prepare and audit financial statements for the Condominium Corporation. At the relevant time the Plaintiff was an owner of a unit in that Condominium Corporation. The accountants prepared their financial statements and presented them to the Condominium Corporation, who thereupon presented them in due course to the members of the Condominium Corporation.

The Plaintiff alleges that the chartered accountants failed to follow the standards set in the accounting and auditing guidelines for Ontario Condominium Corporations. In addition, apparently the chartered accountants refused to amend or withdraw their financial statements at the request of the Plaintiff.

The Issue

The issue before the court is whether or not the Plaintiff can maintain an action against the Defendant in their capacity as chartered accountants for the Condominium Corporation, and that issue includes whether or not the defendant owes a duty of care to the Plaintiff in her personal capacity.

Argument

The plaintiff argues that the Condominium Act R.S.O. 1980, chap. 84 provides among other things that the owners at their first meeting may appoint one or more auditors; that the owners at each annual meeting appoint one or more auditors; that the owners may remove auditors by resolution passed by a majority of votes cast; that the remuneration of an auditor shall be fixed by owners; that the auditor shall make a report to the owners on the financial statement, to be laid before the corporation at any annual meeting; and that the auditor, if present at any meeting, shall answer enquiries.

The Act goes on to provide further that the condominium board shall lay before each annual meeting of the owners, a financial statement etc. The Plaintiff would therefore lead us to the conclusion that there is an actual statutory duty and an actual common law duty between the Plaintiff and the Defendant, and further that an action by an individual owner against the accountants is not precluded.

The Law

I have reviewed the authorities as presented to me by the Plaintiff and by counsel for the Defendant. I find the law succinctly put in the case of Loader et al. v. Rosepark Wellesley Investments Ltd. et al., a decision of the Ontario Supreme Court (1980), 17 C.P.C. 150. In that case two unit owners of a condominium project brought an action on behalf of themselves and all other units owners against the builders of the project, alleging faulty construction of the common elements. The learned trial Judge concluded on pp 159 as follows:

"I am of the opinion that section 9(18) of the Condominium Act which permits the condominium corporation to bring an action in respect of the common elements, precludes the right of unit owners to bring a class action for themselves and all other unit owners in respect of the common elements".

In the matter before us, however, we have only one unit owner attempting to bring an action against the accountants of the Corporation. In the Loader case however, the trial Judge concludes that the Condominium Act takes precedence of the rules of practice which might allow class actions, and that the Condominium Corporation is the only proper party to bring an action with respect of the common elements.

With respect to the duty of care owed by the accountants to the individual condominium owner, I am referred to the case of McGauley et al in Regina in right of British Columbia, 1990 44 B.C.L.R. 2nd 217. There a depositor attempted to sue various defendants including the co-operative's auditors, solicitors, chief executive officer etc. The court held that the facts pleaded or proposed to be pleaded were not capable of establishing the existence of a sufficient relationship of proximity between the parties to give rise to a prima facie duty of care on the part of any of the defendants.

In the case before me, and notwithstanding the provisions of the Condominium Act cited by the Applicant, the duty of the Defendant is clearly to the Condominium Corporation, and it is to that Corporation that the Defendant must report, notwithstanding the special provisions as set out above. There may in fact be a further duty of care owed to the owners as a collective unit, but I do not find that there is one to the individual owner.

The Plaintiff here seeks to hold the Defendant responsible to her as a unit owner. Clearly she has taken the wrong road to redress any of her alleged complaints. If she wishes to complain about the financial statements and the obligation of the Defendant to the Condominium Corporation, then she must look to the Condominium Corporation, itself, to make that complaint, and if the Condominium Corporation fails to do so, then she may very well have a right of action against the Condominium Corporation for its failure in its duty to her as a unit owner.

Clearly, then, on the basis of the law, I find that the Plaintiff's Statement of Claim discloses no cause of action against the Defendants. At the same time, if I were to allow the Plaintiff's motion and permit the amendment of the Statement of Claim to show 'wilful' or 'negligent failure' of the Defendants to account to the Plaintiff or the inclusion of the allegation of 'fraudulent audited financial statements' and the "reliance" of the Plaintiff on them, would bring the Plaintiff's claim into the realm of 'frivolous and vexatious proceedings'.

On the materials filed before me, I find no real evidence of any fraudulent intent, nor do I find any evidence that the Plaintiff relied to her detriment on the statements of which she has complained.

As a consequence, I will allow the motion of the Defendant and strike out the Statement of Claim of the Plaintiff as disclosing no cause of action against the Defendant. I disallow the Plaintiff's motion to amend her Statement of Claim, as to do so, in my opinion, would render the pleadings frivolous and vexatious.

In the circumstances, the Defendant will be entitled to its costs of the motion, which costs I set at the amount of $350.00 against the Plaintiff.

26 O.R. (3d) 238

Court File No. RE-5181/95 Ontario Court (General Division), Sharpe J. October 3, 1995

APPLICATION to determine the entitlement to a fee for the use of an easement and right of way.

Robert Wright, for applicants.

Mark S. Hayes and Beth G. Beattie, for respondents.

SHARPE J.: -- This application is brought to determine the entitlement to a fee of $25,000 a year for the use of an easement and right of way (the "easement"). The easement is over lands formerly owned and developed by the respondent Camrost York Development Corporation ("Camrost") but now owned as part of the common elements of the applicant condominium corporations. The transfer by which Camrost acquired title to the lands also created the easement and provided for the payment of the annual fee. The issue to be resolved on this application is whether the right to the fee is a personal right of Camrost and its assigns or whether the right to the fee runs with the land and hence passed to the applicants upon their acquisition of title to the lands.

Facts

In May 1988 Camrost acquired from the Toronto Harbour Commissioners certain lands for the purpose of developing two condominium highrise towers. The 1988 transfer to Camrost was preceded by negotiations and dealings involving Camrost, Copthorne Holdings Ltd. ("Copthorne") and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners with respect to the use and development of other adjacent lands then owned by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. Copthorne required the construction of a passerelle and easement to serve the land immediately adjacent to that being acquired by Camrost. That easement is the subject of this application. The purpose of the easement was to permit loading and unloading and for garbage removal at the adjacent property. Camrost advised Copthorne that the construction cost of the easement would be approximately $250,000. It was agreed that Copthorne would not pay a lump sum to Camrost but rather that Copthorne would pay Camrost an annual fee of $25,000 for the use of the easement. An agreement to this effect was entered in July 1987. The 1988 transfer between the Toronto Harbour Commissioners and Camrost carried this arrangement forward by reserving the easement and providing for the payment of an annual fee. The provisions of the transfer which create the easement and provide for the annual payment are as follows (emphasis added to passages crucial to this application):

Reserving unto the Transferor, its servants, employees and assigns a non-exclusive easement and right-of-way in, over, along and upon the lands described as Part of Block D, Plan E-640 and designated as Part 1 on Plan 63R-4062 for the benefit of those lands described as Part of Blocks D, E and F, Plan E-640 and designated as Parts 3 and 4 on Plan 63R- 1166 (the "dominant tenement") for the use by the owners and occupants from time to time of the dominant tenement and that of their assigns, agents, employees and invitees including without limitation all persons requiring access from time to time to the buildings located on the dominant tenement and all vehicles necessary for all uses to which the said buildings are put, for the purpose of loading and unloading material at the adjacent loading docks and for access to garbage compactors for the purpose of removing garbage, the foregoing easement and right-of-way shall be subject to the following conditions:

1. There shall be payable to the Transferee an annual fee of Twenty-Five Thousand ($25,000.00) Dollars for the use of the easement and right-of-way, such fee to commence upon the substantial completion of the easement area such that it is sufficiently complete for its permanent use (after construction of the parking garage) by the Transferor (it being understood that this will not require the top coat of paving material to be laid) and shall be payable quarterly in arrears. The said fee shall be increased at the end of each five (5) year period by an amount equal to the percentage increase during such five (5) year period in the Consumer Price Index for all items, as determined by Statistics Canada or successor index or agency. Upon written notice to the Transferor, the Transferee shall be entitled to assign and/or direct that the said fee by [sic] payable to any other person, whether or not such person has any rights in the lands herein transferred. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the said fee shall not be payable during any period of interruption of use, after substantial completion of the easement area, due to an exercise by the Transferor of its rights pursuant to paragraph 4 herein.

2. Parking on the right-of-way shall be prohibited and the enforcement of such prohibition shall be the responsibility of and under the sole jurisdiction and authority of the occupant of the dominant tenement. The occupant of the dominant tenement shall maintain the right-of-way at all times in good repair and free from ice, snow and other obstruction and agrees to indemnify and keep indemnified the Transferee, its servants, officers, employees, agents, successors and assigns of, from and against all manner of loss, damages, expense, suits, claims, liens and demands arising out of the use of the said right-of-way. The Transferee shall be responsible for the maintenance and repair of all reinforced concrete structural elements forming part of or supporting the right-of-way. If the Transferee disposes of its interest in the right-of-way or the structural elements supporting same then the foregoing responsibility shall be those of its successors in title and the Transferee shall be forever discharged from any further obligations or liability.

3. Failure to pay the fee required pursuant to paragraph 1 herein within fifteen (15) days after notice of non- payment is delivered by the Transferee to the owner and the occupant of the dominant tenement or persistent failure of the occupant to carry out its obligations pursuant to paragraph 2 herein shall give rise to a right of termination of the easement and right-of-way. In order for an event to constitute a failure to carry out an obligation under this paragraph, the owner and the occupant must have received notice in writing from the Transferee setting out the alleged failure and the owner or the occupant must have failed to correct the same within a reasonably practicable period dependent upon the type of obligation and external factors which may prevent immediate correct. Such termination shall not render the party enjoying the same liable for payment required to be made hereunder, except for the period concluding on the date of termination. Termination may be effected by registration on title of evidence of failure to comply with the provisions of this paragraph and of such notice of non-payment or persistent failure to carry out obligations. Upon written notice to the owner of the servient tenement and assignee of the fee payable, if any, by both the owner and occupant of the dominant tenement that the right-of-way is no longer required and the delivery of an appropriate release and abandonment thereof in registrable form and payment to the effective date of release of the right-of-way to the owner of the servient tenement, there shall be no further liability for any further payment.

4. The use of the easement and right-of-way may be interrupted from time to time:

(a) To permit the Transferee or its successors to fulfill the repair obligation contained in paragraph 2 herein. The Transferee shall give the owner and occupant of the dominant tenement, no less than thirty (30) days prior notice in writing of any such repairs unless such repairs constitute an emergency.

(b) To permit the construction or reconstruction, from time to time, of a parking garage or other structures on the lands herein transferred, provided that the Transferee uses its best efforts, subject to force majeure, to complete the construction of such structures in a timely fashion giving reasonable priority, having regard to normal construction practice, to completing construction in the easement area, in establishing its sequence of operation for such construction. The Transferee shall give the owner and occupant, no less than thirty (30) days notice in writing prior to commencing such construction.

5. The easement and right-of-way shall be subject to encroachment in an area extending not more than five hundred (500mm) millimeters south and west from the northerly and easterly boundaries respectively of the easement area to the extent necessary for the purpose of constructing and maintaining supporting columns or walls for an overhead passerelle connecting the structures located on the dominant and servient tenements.

RESTRICTIONS

AND THE SAID Transferee, its successors and assigns hereby covenants to and with the Transferor, its successors and assigns, to the intent that the burden of this covenant shall run with and bind the lands transferred to the Transferee herein, and every Part thereof, and shall run with and be for the benefit of the lands owned by the Transferor and hereunder described as the Dominant Tenement, that:

1. No building or other structures shall be erected upon the lands for use other than as residential premises and ancillary facilities thereto including a public square, general retail space and parking and that such residential premises and parking shall be governed by the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, Ch. 84, and amendments thereto, or any legislation passed in substitution therefor.

2. There shall be no change in the design or appearance of the exterior of any buildings erected on the lands, without the prior written approval of the Transferor or its successor in title to the Dominant Tenement, which may affect the aesthetics of such buildings.

The easement area was completed in October 1990. The condominiums were marketed by Camrost pursuant to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, in July and October 1991. Upon registration of the declarations required by the Condominium Act the land over which the easement is exercised became the property of the applicant condominium corporations.

In October 1994 Camrost assigned its right to the annual fee to Queen's Quay, a corporation within the Camrost corporate structure. Although invoices have been rendered, the fee has not been paid due to a dispute among the various prospective payors. That dispute is not the subject of nor is it relevant to the present application.

Position of the Parties

The applicants take the position that as the fee is described as being for the use of the easement, entitlement to the fee passed to them upon acquiring title to the lands over which the easement is enjoyed.

The respondents take the position that it was intended that Camrost would retain entitlement to the fee as the fee was the payment to Camrost for the construction of the easement. They submit that the language of the transfer makes it clear that the right to claim the fee was intended as a personal right to be enjoyed by Camrost or its assignee and, moreover, that in law such an interest does not run with the land and pass to the party who acquires title to the land.

Analysis

(1) Terms of the Transfer The applicants argue that as the transfer provides for the payment of a fee "for the use of the easement", the right to the fee passes with title to the land. It is their submission that the parties owning the lands which bear the burden of the easement are entitled to the fee for its use. It is further submitted that, at the very least, the language of the transfer is ambiguous and that any doubt should be resolved against the respondent Camrost which, as a party to the transfer, must bear, or at least share, responsibility for its drafting. The contra proferentem principle is relied on. The applicants further contend that the transfer gives rise to an obligation on them to maintain and repair the easement, and that as the party responsible for repairs, they should enjoy the benefit of the annual fee.

While the terms of the transfer creating the easement and the obligation to pay an annual fee for its use are not crystal clear, it is my view that, on balance, an interpretation favouring the respondents is the appropriate one.

The first point to note is that the instrument provides that the annual fee is to be paid to "the Transferee" without any reference to the "successors and assigns" of the transferee. The omission of the words "successors and assigns" supports the contention that the right to receive the fee is a personal right rather than one which passes with title to the land over which the easement is exercised. The omission of any reference to "successors and assigns" is to be contrasted not only with standard usage in such instruments with respect to interests attaching to title in land, but also with other parts of the transfer itself where reference is made to "successors and assigns". The point is fortified by the terms of para. 1 which expressly provides that the "Transferee shall be entitled to assign and/or direct that the said fee payable by [sic] payable to any other person, whether or not such person has any rights in the lands herein transferred". This provision, in my view, indicates that the right to the fee is a right personal to the transferee. As the transferee is given the right to assign to another party having no interest in the land, clear distinction is drawn between title to the land and entitlement to the fee. It is difficult to imagine how the transferee could retain the right to assign the fee to a party who had no interest in the land if the right to the fee were an entitlement passing with title to the land.

A second indication that there is a distinction to be drawn between ownership of the land and entitlement to the fee is to be found in para. 3. There, it is provided that if the owner of the adjacent land, described as the "owner of the dominant tenement", no longer requires the right of way, "upon written notice to the owner of the servient tenement and assignee of the fee payable, if any" to that effect, the owner of the dominant tenement is discharged from further liability for the annual fee. Again, if entitlement to the fee were to pass to the owner of the land, it is difficult to see why notice to both the owner and the party entitled to receive the fee would be required.

A third point is that the concluding portion of the transfer dealing with the easement clearly provides "that the burden of this covenant shall run with and bind the lands transferred to the Transferee herein". However, nothing is said as to entitlement to the fee running with the lands and enuring to the benefit of the owner of those lands from time to time. This language is entirely consistent with the position of the respondents and, indeed, reinforces that position to the extent that it demonstrates a distinction in the minds of those drafting the instrument between the burden of the easement which does run with the land and the benefit of the annual fee which does not.

At first blush, it may seem that if a fee is to be paid for an easement, it should be paid to the owner of the lands which bears the burden of the easement. Upon analysis, however, it is apparent that there is nothing unusual in the subsequent owner of a property which is subject to an easement receiving nothing by way of compensation. Ordinarily where a previous owner sells an easement, the successor in title must bear the burden of the easement without compensation. The existence of the easement will be a factor affecting the price the successor in title pays for the property. The applicants would have no claim against Camrost if it had been paid a lump sum for the easement prior to transfer of title to the applicants. I fail to see how the fact that payment for the easement is to be made over time makes any difference.

As noted, the applicants submit that they are responsible for the maintenance and repair of the structural elements supporting the easement. This is disputed by Camrost which takes the position that it remains responsible for these matters. The language of the transfer with respect to maintenance and repair is anything but clear. Paragraph 2 provides that the owner of the dominant tenement is responsible for ordinary maintenance, including ice and snow removal, while the "transferee" is responsible "for the maintenance and repair of all reinforced concrete structural elements forming part of or supporting the right of way." Paragraph 2 goes on to deal with responsibility in the event the "transferee disposes of its interest in the right of way or the structural elements supporting same". Responsibility for maintenance and repairs shifts to the transferee's "successors in title". The language here is ambiguous. A distinction is drawn between the transferee's interest in the right of way and its interest in the structural elements. If by "interest in the right of way" it is intended to refer to the transferee's right to receive the fee, then Camrost's position is supported. On the other hand, the reference to the transferee's "successors in title" becoming responsible for repairs supports the position of the applicants. In the end, this provision is unclear and, in my view, difficult to understand. It is surely odd, however, that each party should so vigorously insist that it is responsible for what might well prove to be a significant liability. Taken alone, this element of the terms of the transfer would seem to favour the position of the applicants. However, it must be considered in light of the rest of the instrument as well as in the light of the dealings between Camrost and Copthorne, which strongly suggests that Camrost remains liable for these repairs so long as it receives the annual fee, and that if entitlement to the fee is assigned, liability for the repairs is to be assumed by the assignee. Moreover, the position taken by the respondents on this aspect of the matter would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the respondents later to insist that the applicants are responsible for repair and maintenance of the structures necessary for the right of way.

(2) Intention of the Parties

The history of dealings between Camrost and Copthorne leading up to the creation of the easement and the inclusion of the easement in the transfer from The Toronto Harbour Commissioners strongly supports the position taken by the respondents. The uncontradicted affidavit evidence filed by the respondents indicates that it was always the intention of Camrost and the other parties involved that Camrost and its assigns would retain their entitlement to the annual fee so long as the easement was used, whether or not Camrost or its assigns had any interest in the lands over which the easement was enjoyed. In effect, Camrost sold to Copthorne the right to an easement. The price for the easement was based largely on the fact that Camrost had to expend a considerable sum in structural work required for the easement. Rather than pay Camrost a lump sum for the easement, Copthorne agreed to pay Camrost an annual fee. That fee was tied to the use of the easement as a form of security to Camrost. If Copthorne, or its successor in title, did not pay the fee, the right to enjoy the easement could be denied.

Had Camrost simply sold the right of an easement to Copthorne for a lump sum payment, the applicants would clearly have no claim to that sum. In my view, it makes no difference that payment by Copthorne is structured as an annual fee rather than as a lump sum. In essence, the transaction is the same, and there is no reason in law or in equity to deny Camrost or its assigns the right to be paid for the right it sold, particularly as Camrost had to spend a considerable sum in constructing the structural elements necessary for the enjoyment of the easement.

Accordingly, it is my view that if one looks beyond the language of the transfer creating the easement to the intention of the parties, the evidence clearly supports the position of the respondents.

(3) Does the Right to an Annual Fee Run With the Land?

As there is no privity between the applicants and the owners of the dominant tenement, it is necessary to consider whether the benefit of the right to receive the annual fee for the use of the easement is an entitlement which, in law, is capable of passing with title to the successors in title of Camrost, the original "transferee" in the instrument creating the easement.

The applicants contend that the right to the fee does pass with title as it is expressly tied to the use of the easement. Counsel cites the Condominium Act, s. 2(4), which provides that "upon registration of a declaration and description, the land and the interests appurtenant to the land described in the description are governed by this Act". Reliance is also placed on the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.34, s. 15(1), which provides as follows:

15(1) Every conveyance of land, unless an exception is specially made therein, includes all houses, outhouses, edifices, barns, stables, yards, gardens, orchards, commons, trees, woods, underwoods, mounds, fences, hedges, ditches, ways, waters, watercourses, lights, liberties, privileges, easements, profits, commodities, emoluments, hereditaments and appurtenances whatsoever to such land belonging or in anywise appertaining, or with such land demised, held, used, occupied and enjoyed or taken or known as part or parcel thereof, and, if the conveyance purports to convey an estate in fee simple, also the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, yearly and other rents, issues and profits of the same land and of every part and parcel thereof, and all the estate, right, title, interest, inheritance, use, trust, property, profit, possession, claim and demand whatsoever of the grantor into, out of or upon the same land, and every part and parcel thereof, with their and every of their appurtenances.

These provisions beg the question of what interests are appurtenant to the land. The respondents argue that in law, an affirmative entitlement to future payments is not an interest which is capable of running with the land and passing to a successor in title. It is the respondents' position that as the right to the annual fee is not an interest which attaches to the land, the interest is not one to which the above-noted statutory provisions apply.

The requirements for establishing that a benefit of a covenant runs with the land are described as follows by Ziff, Principles of Property Law (1993), p. 307:

(i) the transferee obtains the same legal estate as the transferor; (ii) it was intended that the covenant would pass automatically; and, (iii) the covenant relates to the land transferred -- it must "touch and concern" the land.

The respondents contend that neither the second nor third requirements are met. The issue of the intent of the parties has already been canvassed at length, and as indicated above, it is my view that the intention of the parties was that the benefit of the covenant to pay the fee not pass with the title to the lands but only if expressly assigned by Camrost. That finding is, in my view, fatal to the claim that the applicants acquired the entitlement to the fee as it is clear there has been no assignment of that right to them by Camrost.

With respect to the third element, Prof. Ziff elaborates as follows (at p. 307):

The requirement that the covenant "touch and concern" the dominant land [here the lands of the applicants] is important throughout the law of covenants. This requirement limits the variety of restrictions that can pass from owner to owner. To touch and concern the land, the covenant must either (a) relate to the mode of occupation; or (b) directly, and not in some collateral manner, affect the value of the land. Restrictions on the use to which land is put is an example of a valid restriction.

It is to be noted that the discussion focuses on restrictions and it is clear that, in general, affirmative covenants requiring the expenditure of money or the doing of some act do not run with the land: Parkinson v. Reid, [1966] S.C.R. 162, 56 D.L.R. (2d) 315.

The proposition that covenants to pay a periodical sum do not run with the land is supported by a long line of authority. The principle was enunciated in Milnes v. Branch (1816), 5 M. & S. 411, 105 E.R. 1011 (Q.B.), and considered at length by the English Court of Appeal in Grant v. Edmondson, [1931] 1 Ch. 1, [1930] All E.R. Rep. 48. At issue in that case was an interest classified as a "rentcharge". There, it was held that the successors in title to the original beneficiary of a rentcharge were not entitled to sue for payments due unless the right to receive those payments had been specifically assigned to them. The trial judge, Clauson J., put the point as follows ([1930] 2 Ch. 245 at p. 254):

In technical language, the question is whether the benefit of the covenant runs with the rentcharge at law. For many years the general opinion of legal practitioners, as reflected in the ordinary text-books, has regarded as sound the doctrine that the benefit of a covenant (for example, for payment of the rentcharge) cannot run with a rentcharge at law, but the covenant must be treated as a covenant collateral or in gross.

(Citations omitted)

The Court of Appeal agreed after a very detailed review of the authorities. Lawrence L.J. stated (at pp. 20-21):

... it appears to me that Clauson J. was right in concluding that for many years past Milnes v. Branch has been accepted by the profession as having established the proposition that a covenant to pay a rentcharge does not run with the rent. Thus, in Burton on Real Property, 7th ed. (1850), p. 347: "In particular it seems that the covenant of the grantor runs neither with the land nor with the rent; but is merely a personal engagement between the parties. Milnes v. Branch"; in Pollock on Contracts, 8th ed. (1911), p. 249 (4): "An agreement to grant an annuity charged on land implies an agreement to give a personal covenant for payment; but by a somewhat curious distinction the burden of a covenant to pay a rentcharge does not run with the land charged, nor does the benefit of it run with the rent"; in Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. xxiv. (1912), p. 517, cl. 1021: "The due payment of a rentcharge is frequently secured by the covenant of the landowner who creates it. The burden of such a covenant does not run with the land so as to bind subsequent owners of the land; nor, it seems, does the benefit of the covenant run with the rentcharge so as to entitle subsequent owners of the rentcharge to sue," citing Milnes v. Branch and other cases; and in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 13th ed. (1929), p. 98, in the notes to Spencer's Case, Milnes v. Branch is cited at length for the proposition that a covenant to pay the rentcharge does not run with the rent.

Lawrence L.J. added (at p. 26):

Whatever may be the foundation of the rule, and whether it rests on the broader principle that (except as between lessor and lessee) no covenant can run with an incorporeal hereditament, or whether it rests on the narrower principle that a covenant to pay a rentcharge is a collateral covenant or a covenant in gross which does not touch or concern the rentcharge or whether it rests on no principle and is merely arbitrary, I am of opinion that it is too firmly established to be disturbed by this Court.

As noted, Grant v. Edmondson dealt with an interest known as a "rentcharge". The right to receive a periodic sum from land may be classified as either an annuity or a rentcharge. The distinction between the two is that a rentcharge includes the right of distress for non-payment: see Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed. (1982), vol. 39, p. 563. It is clear that the fee in the case at bar does not constitute a rentcharge, as it does not include the right of distress for non-payment. However, I see no reason why the broader principle of Parkinson v. Reid, Grant v. Edmondson and Milnes v. Branch should not apply to an interest of the type at issue in this case, particularly as no authority has been cited to me in support of the proposition that an interest of this nature is capable of running with the land.

I conclude, therefore, that even if the applicants had satisfied the requirement that there was an intention to create a covenant that would run with the land, an interest of the kind at issue in this case is not capable of running with the land and that, absent a specific assignment of the right from original party to the covenant, the applicants have no claim to the fee.

(4) Fiduciary Duty

The applicants rely on the principle established in York Condominium Corp. No. 167 v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, 122 D.L.R. (3d) 280 (C.A.), that the owner-developer of a condominium owes the unit purchasers a fiduciary duty with respect to dealings in the interests appurtenant to the condominium. In my view, that case is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. Here, the grant of the easement and agreement that the easement be paid for by way of annual fee was completed long before any units in the condominium had been marketed. The deal was struck at the same time Camrost itself acquired title to the lands on which the condominium was to be developed. At that point, Camrost was at liberty to dispose of its rights to those lands as it saw fit. The fiduciary duty enunciated in the York Condominium case arises after unit-holders have acquired an interest in the condominium to protect them from the developer dealing with the property to their detriment and for its own benefit. Here, the easement was created before any unit-holders had acquired any rights and its existence was disclosed in the required disclosure statement.

The applicants complain that the existence of the fee was not disclosed, but as the fee represented the price of the easement sold long before the condominium came into existence, I see no reason why it should have been disclosed. In any event, the fee was hardly something Camrost concealed as its existence is obvious from the title documents.

Conclusion

In my view, the claim of the applicants to entitlement to the fee for the easement fails, both in fact and in law. Although there is no cross-application by the respondents for a declaration of their entitlement, counsel submitted that as it necessarily follows from dismissal of the application that the respondents are entitled to the fee, a declaration to that effect would serve to clarify the issue in the future. I see no reason to refuse that request, and, accordingly, there shall be a declaration:

- (a) that the entitlement to the annual fee for the use of the easement does not run with the land and does not rest with the owner from time to time of the said land;
- (b) that Camrost or its assignee has all the right, title and interest to the annual fee for the use of the easement;
- (c) that the applicants have no interest in the annual fee for the use of the easement.

If the parties are unable to agree as to costs, I may be spoken to.

Order accordingly.

York Region Condominium Corp. No. 771 v. Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc.

12 O.R. (3d) 641 Action No. C13211 Court of Appeal for Ontario, Goodman, Labrosse and Austin JJ.A. April 7, 1993

APPEAL from an order of the Ontario Court (General Division) (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 670, 26 R.P.R. (2d) 164, 95 D.L.R. (4th) 327 (Rosenberg J.), requiring the owner of a commercial condominium unit to pay for excessive water consumption.

Howard W. Winkler, for appellant.

Jonathan H. Fine and Robert L. Riteman, for respondent in appeal.

BY THE COURT :-York Region Condominium Corporation No. 771, the respondent in the appeal (the "corporation"), applied to the Ontario Court (General Division) for an order declaring that Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc. (the appellant), who had purchased Unit 1 of the condominium complex from the developer for use as a restaurant, pay to the corporation all moneys on account of excess water usage in relation to the respondent's unit assessed as common expenses against the unit.

Rosenberg J., who heard the application, found that the corporation was entitled to be paid by the appellant the cost of water used by the appellant in excess of the costs for normal household requirements and for normal requirements for cooling and so ordered. The parties have apparently agreed on the amount of such excess costs but the appellant submits it should not be held responsible for the payment thereof. It is from this order that Year Full Investment (Canada) Inc. appeals.

The application was made

(1) Pursuant to the provisions of s. 49 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26), which provides that the court may, by order, direct any unit owner to perform any duty imposed on it by the Act, declaration, the by-laws or the rules of a corporation created by the Act.

The trial judge did not find that the appellant had committed any breach of such duties. We are satisfied that on the basis of the material before the court, no such breach has been proven and accordingly the corporation cannot succeed on this ground. (2) Pursuant to rule 14.05 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which authorizes an application under subrule (3)(d) to determine the rights that depend on the interpretation of, inter alia, a contract or other instrument, or on the interpretation of a statute or under subrule (3)(h), in respect of any matter where it is unlikely that there will be any material facts in dispute.

We are satisfied that Rosenberg J. was entitled to make the order in appeal pursuant to this rule and that he was correct in his conclusion for the following reasons.

Facts

(1) The corporation is a condominium corporation created by registration of its declaration and description under the Condominium Act on November 21, 1990.

(2) It is a mixed-use condominium consisting of 58 residential and 45 commercial units contained in two buildings.

(3) The appellant had purchased Unit 1 as a commercial unit to be used for the stated purpose of a Chinese food restaurant.

(4) During the period November 21, 1990 to November 30, 1991, the cost of water supplied to the corporation was $73,607.02. The cost of the water that was used specifically by the appellant was $57,293.70. This last amount was ascertained by supplying a separate meter for the restaurant for measuring purposes. The appellant's water use for its own purposes constituted 77 per cent of the total water charges incurred in respect of all 103 units and the common elements.

(5) Prior to the registration of the declaration and the closing of the purchasers' units by the eventual unit owners, the developer presented a disclosure statement containing a budget statement as required by s. 52 of the Act.

(6) The budget for a one-year period immediately following the registration of the declaration showed water usage as a common expense and budgeted the sum of $30,000 for water usage for the entire 103 units and the common elements. The appellant, by itself, during the relevant one-year period, used 190 per cent of the amount budgeted for water for the entire corporation use. The actual water usage of the remaining owners and for common elements was $34,711, an amount close to the budget estimate.

(7) The budget contained the following note in reference to the $30,000 estimate for the first year water charges:

Water

Represents the cost of water for normal household requirements and for normal requirements for cooling Condominium Corporation. Any excessive consumption by any Retail Unit will result in a back-charge being effected by the Condominium Corporation to such Retail Unit.

We are of the view that this note in the budget was a clear indication by the declarant developer to all proposed unit purchasers that excess water usage in retail premises would not be a common expense as set forth in the proposed declaration but would be, instead, the responsibility of the user of the excess amount.

(8) The declaration executed by the corporation defined the meaning of common expenses by s. 2.01 as: . . . the expenses of the performance of the objects and duties of the Corporation, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, shall include those expenses, costs and sums of money set forth in Schedule "E" attached hereto.

The declaration provided by s. 2.02 that:

Each owner shall pay to the Corporation his proportionate share of the common expenses.

(9) Schedule "E" of the declaration provides that:

Common expenses shall include the following:

(b) All sums of money levied or charged to the Condominium Corporation on account of any and all public and private supplies of insurance coverage, taxes, utilities, and services including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, levies or charges for: (iii) water and sewage, unless separately metered for each unit.

It is to be noted that the declaration contemplated a situation or situations in which the expenses for water used by a unit owner or tenant would not be included in the common expenses.

(10) Schedule "D" of the declaration provided that the owner of Unit 1, level No. 1 (the subject unit) was responsible for the payment of 6.0501 per cent of the common expenses. That percentage was, of course, vastly less than the percentage of water actually used by the appellant.

(11) Rosenberg J., in reaching his conclusion, relied upon a decision of this court in the case of York Condominium Corp. No. 59 v. York Condominium Corp. No. 87 (1983), 42 O.R. (2d) 337, 29 R.P.R. 86, which involved a dispute between two corporations with respect to liability for sharing in the payment of common expense repairs. The issue in that case was somewhat different than the issues in the present case but we agree with the principle set forth by Cory J.A. in his reasons as set forth at pp. 340-41, and quoted by Rosenberg J. at p. 7 of his reasons [now reported (1992), 10 O.R. (3d) 670 at p. 674, 26 R.P.R. (2d) 164]. In particular, we deem it appropriate to adopt his statement, at p. 340:

As far as possible and with due regard for the particular mutual covenants of the individual owners the courts should bring a broad and equitable approach to the resolution of their problems.

And further at p. 341:

The concept of repair in such a situation should not be approached in a narrow legalistic manner. Rather, the court should take into account a number of considerations. They may include the relationship of the parties, the wording of their contractual obligations, the nature of the total development, the total replacement cost of the facility to be repaired, the nature of the work required to effect the repairs, the facility to be repaired and the benefit which may be acquired by all parties if the repairs are effected compared to the detriment which might be occasioned by the failure to undertake the repairs. All pertinent factors should be taken into account to achieve as fair and equitable a result as possible.

(12) In our opinion, it is clear from the budget submitted to the appellant that it was the intention of the corporation in proposing its declaration that the expense for use of water in a retail unit in excess of normal household requirements for a unit would not be considered part of the common expenses. Furthermore, Schedule "E" of the declaration contemplates situations where water used by a unit owner will not form part of the common expenses. In most circumstances, the words in para. (b)(iii) of Schedule "E", "unless separately metered for each unit", would indicate that water use expenses would form part of the common expenses unless each and every unit was metered.

In the present case, the municipality has installed a master meter and the corporation is billed for all the water used for all of the units and common elements of the development. Unit 1 and some other retail units have had meters installed for measurement purposes only. The cost of installing a meter in each and every unit, even if the municipality were prepared to do so, would be high and would be of no advantage to the appellant. In fact, it would be a detriment because the percentage of common elements expense that it is required to pay is higher (although far below what it should be for water usage) than that of other unit owners and accordingly would be required to pay more than its proper share for meter installations.

In our view, applying the reasoning of Cory J.A., having regard to the fact that the development has substantial numbers of units of mixed uses, that the corporation contemplated that excess water use would be paid for separately by retail unit owners, that the intent of a declaration is to apportion common expenses amongst unit holders in percentages as close as possible to the percentage of use made and enjoyment received by each unit holder from the services and charges included in the common expenses, the words "unless separately metered for each unit" should be interpreted to mean "unless separately metered for any unit" rather than "unless separately metered for each and every unit". On this basis, the expense for excessive water usage by a unit owner does not form part of the common expenses.

In order to obtain a fair and equitable result, and having regard to the agreement for sale, the declaration including the proposed budget, the somewhat unusual nature of this condominium development with its mixed uses, we are of the opinion that the declaration should be interpreted to mean that excess water usage expense, to the extent involved in the present case, does not form part of the common expenses. In so finding, we are of the view that Rosenberg J. did not amend the declaration but rather interpreted it properly without amending it.

(13) Based on our conclusion, the appellant has obtained the benefit of the use of water, the expense for which does not form part of the common expenses. It has thus obtained a benefit for which it has not paid.

The corporation either has paid or will be obliged to pay to its detriment for that benefit received by the appellant.

In view of our conclusions, there is no juristic basis for the appellant to obtain such benefit without payment. We agree, therefore, with the conclusion arrived at by Rosenberg J. and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Brownstones East Limited Partnership, Brownstones East Properties Inc., Brownstones East II Limited Partnership, Brownstones East II Properties Ltd., Brownstones East III Limited Partnership, Brownstones East III Properties Ltd. and Brownstones Building Corp. v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program*

8 O.R. (3d) 545

Action No. C10924 Court of Appeal for Ontario, Dubin C.J.O., Houlden and Blair JJ.A. May 28, 1992

APPEAL from an order of the General Division (1992), 8 O.R. (3d) 547, post, 87 D.L.R. (4th) 609, dismissing an application for a declaration that the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act did not apply to three schemes to develop condominiums.

William G. Dingwall, Q.C., and Kenneth G. Hood, for appellants. Brian M. Campbell, for respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

DUBIN C.J.O.:--We are all of the view that this appeal must be allowed, and the judgment below set aside.

In our view the facts of this case are quite indistinguishable in any meaningful way from those that were before this court in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (1991), 1 O.R. (3d) 513, 15 R.P.R. (2d) 113 [leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused October 17, 1991]. In that case, this court held that parties in like position to the appellants here were not subject to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, now R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31, which is the issue before us.

Although in that case the Court of Appeal approached the matter somewhat differently than was done by the trial judge in this case, the same issues were clearly before the court, and the judgment of the court below is inconsistent with the ratio underlying the meaning and effect which our court gave to the statute in the Marchant case. In our view, reading the Act as a whole, we do not think that the Ontario New Home Warranty Program is intended to apply to the circumstances which exist here.

Therefore, for those reasons the judgment of the court below will be set aside, and an order will go:

(1) declaring that the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act does not apply to the applicants and they are not required to register pursuant to the provisions of the Act with respect to the three real estate projects referred to in the application;

(2) directing the respondent to surrender for cancellation letters of credit amounting to $2,760,000 posted with it and return the enrolment fees of $30,702.88 with interest thereon;

(3) a reference to the master at Toronto to determine the amount of the costs to the appellants to obtain the letters of credit posted with the respondent, which amount will be awarded to the appellants.

The appellants are entitled to their costs here and below on a party-and-party basis.

Appeal allowed.

The judgment appealed from of the Ontario Court (General Division), Sheard J., February 7, 1992, is as follows.

William G. Dingwall, Q.C., and Kenneth G. Hood, for applicants. Philip P. Healey, for respondent.

SHEARD J.:--The applicants seek a declaration that the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 350 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. O.31) (the Act) does not apply to three real estate projects developed by them. They also seek an order directing the respondent to return for cancellation three letters of credit, totalling $2,760,000, the refund of enrolment fees of $30,702.88 paid to the respondent, and an order directing a reference to a master to determine the damages suffered by the applicants for having to provide the letters of credit and pay the enrolment fees.

The projects are three condominiums: a 32-unit townhouse condominium, a 55-unit apartment condominium and a 51-unit apartment condominium. They are what is called a tax-driven investment scheme. Each of the three projects is delineated in a lengthy and complex offering memorandum. The essentials of the projects in each case are that the limited partnership has title to the real property; it engages the Brownstones Building Corporation (BBC) to construct the building, to be registered as a condominium when qualified under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 (now R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26), with the object of letting the units to tenants as a rental real estate investment to be managed by the general partners (who are the three applicants other than the BBC and the three limited partnerships).

The offering memorandum invites investors to purchase an interest in the limited partnership by entering into a subscription agreement. This agreement specifies one or more of the prospective condominium units, which vary in price, depending on their size and other aspects affecting their comparative quality or attractiveness. The subscriber thus makes a choice of the residential unit, which choice determines the amount subscribed for as an interest in the limited partnership, whose only asset consists of the condominium project for which it is the rais on d'etre.

Through the instrument of owning an interest in the limited partnership, the subscriber thus becomes a participant in a rental real estate investment and thereby [gains] access to certain income tax advantages. It is an arrangement which can be attractive to people with comparatively large incomes.

Although the projects are designed as rental property investments, the subscription agreement includes the right of the investor to elect to take title to the chosen condominium unit specified in the agreement. Taking title to the condominium unit would, of course, terminate the investor's participation in the limited partnership, and whatever tax advantages that might ensue therefrom.

Transfer of title of the condominium unit cannot be made, even if requested by the investor, until after the building has been constructed and registered pursuant to the requirements of the Condominium Act.

As its name implies, the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act applies to new homes. Its definition section, s. 1, includes the following:

(a) "builder" means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner;

(d) "home " means,

(i) a self-contained one-family dwelling . . .

(ii) a building composed of more than one and not more than two self-contained, one-family dwellings under one ownership,

(iii) a condominium dwelling unit, including the common elements, or

(iv) any other dwelling of a class prescribed by the regulations as a home to which this Act applies, and includes any structure or appurtenance used in conjunction therewith, but does not include a dwelling built and sold for occupancy for temporary periods or for seasonal purposes;

(g) "owner" means a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy, and his successors in title;

(l) "sell" includes entering into an agreement to sell;

(n) "vendor" means a person who sells on his own behalf a home not previously occupied to an owner and includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner . . .

Other provisions of the Act include:

6. No person shall act as a vendor or a builder unless he is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

12. A builder shall not commence to construct a home until he has notified the Corporation (administering the New Home Warranty Program) of the fact, has provided the Corporation with such particulars as the Corporation requires and has paid the prescribed fee to the Corporation.

13.(1) Every vendor of a home warrants to the owner,

(a) that the home,

(i) is constructed in a workmanlike manner and is free from defects in material,

(ii) is fit for habitation, and

(iii) is constructed in accordance with the Ontario Building Code;

(b) that the home is free of major structural defects as defined by the regulations; and

(c) such other warranties as are prescribed by the regulations.

(4) A warranty under subsection (1) applies only in respect of claims made thereunder within one year after the warranty takes effect, or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed.

14.(1) Where,

(a) a person who has entered into a contract with a vendor for the provision of a home has a cause of action in damages against the vendor for financial loss resulting from the bankruptcy of the vendor or the vendor's failure to perform the contract;

(b) an owner has a cause of action against a vendor for damages resulting from a breach of warranty; or

(c) the owner suffers damage because of a major structural defect as defined in the regulations for the purposes of section 13, and the claim is made within four years after the warranty expires or such longer time under such conditions as are prescribed, the person or owner is entitled to be paid out of the guarantee fund the amount of such damage subject to such limits as are fixed by the regulations.

15. For the purposes of sections 13 and 14, a condominium corporation shall be deemed to be the owner of the common elements of the condominium and the warranties take effect on the date of the registration of the declaration and description.

The general purposes of the Act were summarized by Judge Zalev (as he then was) in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Crown Trust Co. (1984), 50 O.R. (2d) 588, 32 R.P.R. 214 (Co. Ct.) [affd (1985), 50 O.R. (2d) 593 (note) (C.A.)], at p. 590 O.R., p. 217 R.P.R.:

In my view the object of the statute is to provide the warranties set out in s. 13 of the Act to persons who first acquire a home from its vendor for occupancy, and to protect such persons from any unscrupulous, financially irresponsible, or technically incompetent persons from whom they might purchase.

The question of whether the Act applies to tax-driven rental projects has been raised before. For instance, Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Meadows of White Oaks II Ltd. (1988), 65 O.R. (2d) 362, F50 R.P.R. 186 (H.C.J.), was an application, heard by R.E. Holland J., to obtain a ruling as to whether the subject companies (operating projects designed as tax shelters) must register pursuant to the Act.

R.E. Holland J., in the course of his reasons, mentions [at pp. 363-64 O.R., p. 188 R.P.R.] that:

For some years the director of registration for the programme had interpreted the legislation as excluding coverage where units were sold to investors who are not intended to occupy the units themselves but rather rent the units out to tenants. There has been a change of policy and the programme has now taken the position that registration is required. The companies take the position that they are not covered by the Act because the agreements of purchase and sale under which the units are sold indicate the clear intention to provide the purchaser with a tax shelter investment and under no circumstances will a purchaser ever occupy a unit on closing. Units will be rented since should a purchaser occupy his or her unit then the tax benefit would be lost and the whole intent and purpose of the agreement of purchase and sale would be nullified.

Notwithstanding that the purchasers did not intend to occupy the units themselves, but to rent them, Holland J. concluded that the Act applied. The agreements did not preclude the purchasers from occupying the units themselves.

In May 1989, the question of the applicability of the Act was put before Steele J. in Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (1989), 68 O.R. (2d) 577, 4 R.P.R. (2d) 164 (H.C.J.). This was an application by the Ontario New Home Warranty Program for a declaration that Marchant (and another, Platinum I Property Limited Partnership) is acting or has acted as a vendor or builder without being registered, contrary to s. 6 of the Act, and to direct them to comply with the Act.

Steele J., although agreeing with the conclusions reached in the White Oaks application, noted at p. 578 O.R., pp. 165-66 R.P.R., that in that case:

. . . the purchasers were directly buying an undivided interest of the beneficial ownership of the land with a clear statement that they were not to be deemed a limited partnership.

The present case involves an ingenious tax-driven investment scheme relating to the building of condominium units. This scheme provides for an investor to subscribe for one or more "interests" in a project and become a limited partner in the entire project in accordance with an offering memorandum prepared pursuant to the Securities Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 466.

The focal point of the application was whether the subscription agreement involved a sale. The investment scheme included the following elements: the number of "interests" is equal to the number of condominium units; a specific unit is allocated to each interest at a price specified; the price varies according to the size or desirability of the unit; ownership of an "interest" entitles (but does not oblige) the investor to exchange his "interest" for actual title to his allotted unit after the condominium corporation has been rejected and after such unit has been leased to tenants.

Steele J. concluded that the limited partnership was a "vendor" (as defined in s. 1(n)) and the subscriber was the "owner" (as defined in s. 1(g)), at pp. 579-80 O.R., pp. 167-68 R.P.R.:

In the present case, Marchant Building Corporation is the builder under a contract with the limited partnership.

In my opinion the investor is an "owner" under the Act if the limited partnership is a "vendor". Whether or not the unit is occupied by a tenant before he acquires title is immaterial: see the White Oaks case. He has entered into an agreement that gives him the right to acquire title and therefore the agreement itself falls within the definition of "sell". He becomes the beneficial owner the moment he signs the subscription agreement to acquire his "interest".

The limited partnership has title to the project. When the subscriber paid for his "interest" he became one of the partners owning the project. However, the agreement also provides for the transfer to him of a specified unit. In my opinion, this was a sale by a vendor. The limited partner was the "vendor" and the subscriber was the "owner" within the meaning of the Act. A partnership can "sell" a home to one of its individual partners. That is what is provided for in this case.

For these reasons it is declared that each of the respondents in the O.N.H.W.P. application is acting as a "vendor" or "builder" without being registered, contrary to s. 6 of the Act, and they are ordered to comply with the provisions of the Act, including not building until they have so complied.

The judgment of Steele J. was set aside by the Ontario Court of Appeal by its judgment delivered for the court by Carthy J.A. on February 11, 1991: Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Marchant Building Corp. (1991), 1 O.R. (3d) 513, 15 R.P.R. (2d) 113. Leave to appeal therefrom was refused by the Supreme Court of Canada, October 17, 1991.

As noted in the Ontario Reports headnote, the central issue concerned the definition of "sell" in s. 1(1) of the Act.

At pp. 519-20 O.R., p. 120 R.P.R., Carthy J.A. states his conclusions:

In my view, Steele J. was right to look to the essence of the transaction to determine if this was an agreement to sell, but was wrong in concluding that the investor "becomes the beneficial owner (of the unit) the moment he signs the subscription agreement".

The subscription is to an interest in a limited partnership. There is no unit of real estate to which the agreement could attach. It contemplates the creation of a unit at some date in the future and even the right to an interest in the unit is postponed by two conditions outside the control of the investor -- registration and rental. The option to obtain title to the unit only becomes an interest in land when the conditions are met. The interest of the investor after that time is irrelevant because, one of the conditions being previous occupancy, the Act, by its terms, would have no application.

In the application before me, one of the arguments of the respondent Program is that the facts in Marchant are significantly different in that it was a term of the subscription agreement in Marchant that transfer to an investor who exercised the right to take title to the condominium unit must be deferred until the unit had been let to a tenant, but that that constraint was not found in the Brownstones offering memoranda. Therefore, the respondent argues, the Court of Appeal judgment in Marchant does not apply.

The applicants take issue with the factual premise from which this argument proceeds, arguing that the arrangements programmed in the offering memoranda make it implicit that the tenant becomes involved in the physical completion of the unit before registration under the Condominium Act.

I think it is unnecessary for me to attempt to resolve this particular issue. It is clear that the arrangements in both Marchant and Brownstones have in common that the investor subscribes for, or agrees to buy, an interest in the limited partnership, before registration under the Condominium Act and, therefore, before the unit has come into existence as a transferable interest in land.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal, accordingly, is that signing the subscription agreement does not make the investor the beneficial owner of the subject unit. There is, therefore, not a sale, and the limited partnership is not a "vendor", until the investor has signified his intention to exercise the option to purchase which he gets as the holder of an interest in the limited partnership. In addition, the sale could not be accomplished until the two necessary conditions were met: registration of the unit and its rental.

The effect of the judgment would be no different if only one condition were required to be met, instead of two. Absence of registration is by itself sufficient to prevent a sale occurring.

On the facts in the Brownstones projects, and on the principle stated by the Court of Appeal, there was no sale resulting from the investor's acquisition of an interest in the limited partnership. The limited partnership did not thereby become a vendor.

Another argument put forward by the respondent Program is that the builder, the Brownstones Building Corporation, comes squarely within the Act, and is required to register.

In the course of his reasons for judgment, Steele J. observed that "Marchant Building Corporation is the builder under a contract with the limited partnership" (p. 579h O.R., p. 167 R.P.R. (H.C.J.)). In its factum on the appeal the respondent mentioned this as an additional issue, but the subject was not adverted to in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. This may be explained by the fact that in Marchant construction had not begun (see p. 515h O.R., p. 116 R.P.R. (C.A.)).

The subscription agreement not being a sale or an agreement to sell the unit, the limited partner was not a "vendor". Hence, Marchant Building Corporation, although a builder under a contract with the limited partnership, does not fit the Act's definition of "builder" in s. 1(a) unless, alternatively, the limited partnership fits the definition of "owner". The construction not having commenced, difficulty stands in the way of bringing the limited partnership into the s. 1(g) definition of owner: "a person who first acquires a home from its vendor". However, when the home is built, the limited partnership does fit the definition of "owner".

In each of the three Brownstones projects the respective limited partnership is the owner of the site on which the condominium building is built. The BBC, as its president, John M. Ryan confirmed on cross-examination on his affidavit, "builds . . . or contracts to build the building".

Q. Right. And it makes a profit, I take it, when it builds these projects?

A. Hopes to. It's not always the case, as I'm sure you're aware.

131.

Q. But, essentially, that's why it's involved in this project? To build and make a profit, like any other builder?

A. That's correct.

As has been mentioned the definition of "vendor" in s. 1(n) of the Act "includes a builder who constructs a home under a contract with the owner".

The Act's definition of "home" under s. 1(d) includes "a condominium dwelling unit, including the common elements".

The definition of "owner" under the Act is narrower than the ordinary meaning of "owner", in consequence of the particular purposes of the Act, directed to "new homes". As mentioned above, therefore, "owner" means a person who first acquires a home from its vendor for occupancy (s. 1(g)).

It would follow, from those definitions, that under the Act the BBC is a vendor, being the builder who constructs the home for the owner, the limited partnership, who first acquires the home from the vendor/builder for occupancy.

The words "for occupancy" in s. 1(g) were the subject of comment by R.E. Holland J. in White Oaks, supra, at p. 365 O.R., p. 190 R.P.R.:

I do not understand why the words "for occupancy" were included in the definition of "owner" since it surely would be unusual for a person to acquire a home for anything other than occupancy. These particular homes will be occupied presumably by tenants. If the term "occupancy" was intended to be limited to occupancy by the owner, then the words "by the owner" could have been added.

I would adopt the reasoning of R.E. Holland J. on that point, and I am brought to the conclusion on the facts here that the BBC is a "vendor" under the Act and, under s. 6, required to register.

Registration of builder/vendors is a mechanism by which major objectives of the Act may be achieved: examining the builder's technical competence to consistently perform the warranties under s. 13 as well as its financial responsibility, integrity and honesty. The provisions of the Act relating to deposits would have little or no application on the facts here, but the security called for would be referable to warranty matters.

Here, where the buildings have apparently been completed and occupied for some time, there would appear to be no practical need to continue to hold the full security, providing, as seems likely, the buildings will be approved on inspection.

Indeed, the applicants' material includes a letter from Carol A. Street, counsel for the Program, to Mr. Hood, June 26, 1991, suggesting that arrangements be made for a Warranty Program Inspector to carry out an inspection of the projects "to determine whether we have any concerns with respect to our warranty liability. If there are no such concerns, the Warranty program may be prepared to release a substantial portion if not all of the security". Ms. Street prefaced that suggestion with the statement: "It may be that we can deal with the release of security without finally determining, at this time at least, the question of the applicability of the Act to these projects".

Regrettably, Mr. Hood rejected Ms. Street's offer in his reply letter, July 8:

. . . our clients take the position that they are not part of the Program and are not subject to it. We will not allow any inspector to carry out an inspection. Allowing any inspection would be an acknowledgment that the Program applies and as this is clearly not the case, our client is not prepared to submit to any such inspection.

It is to be hoped that an inspection can now be made, which can reasonably be expected to have the beneficial result of freeing part or all of these security deposits from the limbo in which they have languished for so long.

The application is dismissed, with costs. In accordance with recent practice I fix the costs in the sum of $4,000, but reserving to the parties the right, to be signified within three weeks from the date of release of these reasons, to have the costs assessed, instead of accepting the figure fixed by me. If the applicants wish to avail themselves of the assessment process they shall accompany their notice thereof with payment of the $4,000 to the respondent who shall make the appropriate refund if costs are assessed at less than $4,000.

Application dismissed.

York Condominium Corporation Nos. 216 and 229 et al. and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 624 et al. v. Dudnik, Likhterman et al., Cryderman et al., Ramdial and Salmon et al.

3 O.R. (3d) 360

Action No. 753/90 Ontario Court (General Division), Divisional Court Carruthers, Watt and Davidson JJ. April 26, 1991

APPEAL from a decision of a Board of Inquiry under the Human Rights Code, 1981.

Michael A. Spears, for York Condominium Corporation Nos. 216 and 229, appellants.

Howard W. Winkler, for York Condominium Corporation No. 624, appellant.

M.D. Lepofsky, for Attorney General of Ontario.

David C. Moore and John M. Rattray, for Ontario Human Rights Commission.

Charles M. Campbell, Mary S. Truemner and Sheena S. Scott, for Lana Salmon, respondent.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

CARRUTHERS J.:-- This is an appeal pursuant to the provisions of s. 41(1) of the Human Rights Code, 1981, S.O. 1981, c. 53, as amended (the Code). The decision appealed from is one of a Board of Inquiry (the Board) appointed under the Code. The decision is dated June 20, 1990 and it followed a hearing which took place over a period of one year, ending June 15, 1989.

The Board was appointed to deal with five complaints which had been filed with the Human Rights Commission (Commission) pursuant to the provisions of the Code. It is common ground between the parties to this appeal that all of the issues raised by each of the complaints are basically concerned with the enforceability of certain restrictions or policies of the appellants. Generally speaking, during argument, these restrictions or policies were referred to as "adult only restrictions". There is no dispute that their effect or object is to prevent persons of specified ages, all under 18 years, from residing in the building or buildings which the appellants owned at the relevant times.

With the exception of the appellant York Condominium Corporation No. 229 (229) the restrictions are all found in declarations registered on title to the lands and premises in question pursuant to the provisions of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84. Insofar as York Condominium No. 216 (216) and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 624 (624) are concerned, their declarations set the age at 14 years and 16 years respectively. For 229 there was a policy in place which required all residents to sign a written declaration that no person under the age of 16 years would reside in a unit which had either been purchased or leased by the declarant. Condominium Corporation No. 551, in whose building the complainant Kogan resided, did not appeal from the Board's decision.

Prior to December 1986 the combination of s. 2 [am. 1986, c. 64, s. 18(2)] and s. 20(4) of the Code expressly permitted such restrictions or policies to be enforced without constituting, under the Code, an infringement by discrimination on the ground that accommodation in buildings of the type in question was restricted because of "family status". Section 20(4) was repealed in December 1986 [S.O. 1986, c. 64, s. 18(14)] after lengthy hearings before a committee of the legislature. This change has given rise to the events about which we are now concerned.

Of the five complaints which were before the Board, three were made by persons who, up to December 1986, had resided in one of the appellants' several buildings with children under the age designated in either the registered declaration or that executed by the adult resident. This appeal only concerns two of them, the respondent Constance Cryderman (Cryderman), and the respondent Flora Dudnik (Dudnik). The other two complaints concern two other respondents, Lana Salmon (Salmon) and George Ramdial (Ramdial).

On October 16, 1987 they entered into a written agreement of purchase and sale whereby Salmon agreed to pay Ramdial $133,000 for his condominium unit in one of the buildings owned by 624. Shortly before that transaction was to close on December 1, 1987, a representative of 624 learned of Salmon's intention to reside in that unit with her 13-year-old son Kwame. Efforts were then made on behalf of 624 to have the enforceability of its restriction determined through an application under s. 49 of the Condominium Act and as well to discourage if not prevent Salmon from moving into Ramdial's unit with her son.

The end result of all that which was done on behalf of 624 was that Salmon refused to complete her transaction with Ramdial, preferring instead, to continue to live with her sister as she had done for some short period of time before entering into her agreement with Ramdial. She obtained a release from Ramdial discharging her from any obligation to complete her transaction and Ramdial then re-sold the unit two and one-half months later for $143,000.

With respect to the other two complainants, Cryderman and Dudnik, efforts were also made to discourage them from continuing to reside in their respective buildings with their children who were under the age specified in the applicable restrictions or policy. Cryderman resisted these efforts and continued to live in her unit with her child beyond a time when the child had attained an age which did not violate the policy of 229. Dudnik eventually moved rather than to continue to resist the efforts of 216 to have her and her family leave the premises.

The Board concluded that the rights of all five complainants had been infringed by the appellants and as well certain of their respective directors, officers and employees. No appeal has been taken on behalf of these individuals. Accordingly, this appeal only concerns the finding of infringement on the part of 216, 229 and 624 and the remedies granted against them as a result. According to the written reasons, the decision of the Board that the rights of the complainants under the Code had been infringed was founded upon three different grounds. The first is that the conduct of the appellant corporations was in breach of the complainants' rights obtained under ss. 2(1) [am. 1986, c. 64, s. 18(2)], 3 [am. 1986, c. 64, s. 18(3)] and 8 of the Code. These sections read as follows:

2.(1) Every person has a right to equal treatment with respect to the occupancy of accommodation, without discrimination because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, age, marital status, family status, handicap or the receipt of public assistance.

3. Every person having legal capacity has a right to contract on equal terms without discrimination because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, age, marital status, family status or handicap.

8. No person shall infringe or do, directly or indirectly, anything that infringes a right under this Part.

The second ground is what is referred to in the Board's written reasons as "age discrimination". This is derived from the combination of the provisions of s. 9(1)(a) of the Code and ss. 1 and 15(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Those sections read respectively as follows:

Human Rights Code, 1981

9.(1) In Part I and in this Part,

(a) "age" means an age that is eighteen years or more, except in subsection 4(1) where "age" means an age that is eighteen years or more and less than sixty-five years ...

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

15.(1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

The Board concluded that the definition of "age" found in s. 9(1)(a) of the Code is unconstitutional as being contrary to s. 15(1) of the Charter and not saved by the provision of s. 1 thereof.

The third ground upon which the Board reached its conclusion that rights of the complainants had been infringed is found in s. 10 [rep. & sub. S.O. 1986, c. 64, s. 18(8)] of the Code. The provisions of this section are apparently considered to create "constructive discrimination". That section reads as follows:

10.(1) A right of a person under Part I is infringed where a requirement, qualification or factor exists that is not discrimination on a prohibited ground but that results in the exclusion, restriction or preference of a group of persons who are identified by a prohibited ground of discrimination and of whom the person is a member, except where,

(a) a requirement, qualification or factor is reasonable and bona fide in the circumstances; or,

(b) it is declared in this Act, other than in section 16, that to discriminate because of such ground is not an infringement of a right.

(2) The Commission, a board of inquiry or a court shall not find that a requirement, qualification or factor is reasonable and bona fide in the circumstances unless it is satisfied that the needs of the group of which the person is a member cannot be accommodated without undue hardship on the person responsible for accommodating those needs, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any.

(3) The Commission, a board of inquiry or a court shall consider any standards prescribed by the regulations for assessing what is undue hardship. As a result of its conclusion that there had been an infringement of rights provided under the Code, the Board, as remedies therefor, assessed what it called "damages" in favour of each of the complainants and their respective children named in the complaints. As well, the Board granted certain declaratory relief, including a requirement that the impugned restrictions be removed from those declarations registered on title.

The appellants dispute all aspects of the Board's decision but primarily the finding of infringement on any of the three grounds aforesaid. It is said on behalf of the appellants that the restrictions requiring "adult only" residents does not offend "family status" because they are only concerned with age. And while they agree that the provisions of s. 15(1) of the Charter are infringed on this basis because of age, the appellants maintain that their respective restrictions or policies are saved by the provisions of s. 1 of the Charter. It is also maintained on behalf of the appellants that the same reasoning applies to the provisions of s. 10 and therefore it is not violated by their restrictions or policies.

The term "family status" is defined s. 9(1)(d) of the Code as follows:

9.(1) In Part I and in this Part,

(d) "family status" means the status of being in a parent and child relationship ...

In denying that their restrictions or policies offend the prohibition against discrimination on the basis of family status, the appellants rely to a large extent upon the decision of the Divisional Court in Royal Insurance Co. of Canada v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission) (1985), 51 O.R. (2d) 797, 12 C.C.L.I. 297, 8 C.H.R.R. D/3908, 21 D.L.R. (4th) 764, [1985] I.L.R. Paragraph 1-1944, 12 O.A.C. 206. In that case the court was concerned with the application of ss. 3 and 8 of the Code to the manner in which the premiums payable for standard automobile policies of insurance had been set in situations where the insured motor vehicle was to be operated by an individual under the age of 25 years. The complaint which the court was there considering alleged that the insurer had violated ss. 3 and 8 of the Code by denying the complainant "the right to contract on equal terms without discrimination because of the sex and marital status of my son and because of our family status" [p. 799 O.R.]. The complainant had paid an additional premium because his 16-year-old son was intended to be an occasional driver of his motor vehicle.

The court there, in a judgment given by Montgomery J., was able to decide the appeal on the basis of a conclusion that the provisions of the Code could not be applied retroactively "to an event that occurred prior to its enactment, namely, the entering into of an automobile insurance contract" [p. 799 O.R.]. Having said that, Montgomery J. went on to deal with the second ground of appeal and in so doing, at p. 800 O.R., says:

Although my finding on the first issue is sufficient to dispose of the matter, I will briefly consider the second. Mr. Hope alleges an infringement of his right to contract on equal terms without discrimination because of his "family status". "Family status" is defined as "the status of being in a parent and child relationship". The Board found that "family status" as a ground of discrimination extends to the age, sex and marital status of a particular child. It is that portion of the judgment that the appellants in this case specifically rely upon in asking that the Board's decision be overturned insofar as it is based upon "family status" and not "age". In my view, that obiter dicta of Montgomery J. does not support this position of the appellants, particularly when the circumstances of that case are compared to those of the present.

The relationship of parent and child can be involved in a situation where a higher premium is charged for an insurance policy because of the age of a proposed driver of the insured motor vehicle. However, any discrimination which may arise from that situation is not because of that relationship. The family as a unit is not disturbed and, in fact, the motor vehicle itself remains available to be used by or on behalf of all its members. Those who are in the family and are under the specified age and who intend to operate the motor vehicle can affect the insurance coverage if the additional premium is not paid. That is the only effect of the practice.

In circumstances such as those which exist in the present case, while the restriction or policies in question can apply to individuals not in a parent/child relationship, because they are only concerned with accommodation it is bound to be otherwise in most instances. And the discrimination which follows their application, of necessity, in this situation, is directed at and does affect the "family status". Such restrictions and policies are aimed at preventing children under the specified age from residing with their parent or parents in the latter's choice of accommodation.

In my opinion, the right which Cryderman, Salmon and Dudnik each had to equal treatment with respect to the occupation of accommodation without discrimination because of "family status" as provided for in s. 2(1) of the Code was infringed. Accordingly, to the extent that it reaches this conclusion I agree with the decision of the Board. And I also agree with the position of counsel for the Ministry of the Attorney-General on this appeal. Having reached this conclusion, it is not necessary for me to deal with the position of the Board insofar as it found that the rights of the complainants had also been infringed because of either or both "age" or a violation of s. 10 of the Code.

I cannot agree with the Board that Ramdial had any right under the Code which was infringed on any of the three grounds which it found. Insofar as the Board purported to find Ramdial had been discriminated against because of family status, the Board had this to say at p. 76 of its reasons:

A common element of all the complaints is that the complainants are members of a family. (In the complainant Ramdial's case it is because the family of Ms Salmon, his prospective purchaser included a thirteen year old son that the sale was aborted). A parent and child relationship of residing together is intrinsic to the situation that triggers the differential treatment in each case. It is the fact of a child residing as a dependent with her or his parent that gives rise to the problem.

And at p. 78 the reasons continue as follows:

In our opinion, it is those people identified by "family status" who are treated unequally, being discriminated against by the "adult only" restriction and this is a prohibited ground of discrimination in contravention of the Code. Specifically, we find there is unlawful discrimination against both adult(s) and child in contravention of s. 2(1) and there is unlawful discrimination against adult(s) in contravention of s. 3.

The complaint filed on behalf of Ramdial alleges:

Discrimination because of an infringement of the right to contract on the basis of family status of another person, Lana Salmon, - without reprisal.

The Board rejected the complaint of Ramdial insofar as it concerns that allegation. It deals with a right provided by s. 7 of the Code, namely, "to refuse to infringe a right of another person under this Act, without reprisal or threat of reprisal for so doing". The Board found "no reprisal" within the meaning of s. 7. And while reaching that conclusion, the Board at p. 91 of its reasons says:

In our view, the unlawful discrimination against Ms Salmon and her son because of "family status" and "age" and the unlawful discrimination against her in respect of her right to contract because of "family status" and the "age" of her son, in breach of ss. 2(1), 3 and 8 of the Code were the source of the problem for Mr. Ramdial. Because of that unlawful discrimination, Mr. Ramdial has a complaint that is sustainable.

In my opinion the Board erred in finding an infringement of a right of Ramdial to contract because of "family status" whether that be with respect to s. 2(1) or s. 3 of the Code. There is nothing in the material or evidence adduced before the Board which warrants this conclusion. And I have the same view of the Board's conclusion that Ramdial's right to contract was infringed because of the age of Salmon's son.

I have noted above that portion of the Board's reasons found at p. 76 wherein it concludes that Ramdial's "sale was aborted" because Salmon's family included her 13-year-old son. I have some trouble with that conclusion. At least up to the time of their signing releases, it appears to me that there was an agreement which could be enforced at the insistence of either Salmon or Ramdial. As well, I think that at the time they entered into their contract, there was no restriction on the ability of either of them to do so. The fact that Ramdial may have been motivated to release Salmon from their agreement because of the difficulty she was experiencing with the representatives of 624, does not constitute a violation of any right afforded to Ramdial under ss. 2(1) or 3 of the Code.

Although the Board suggests that in upholding the complaint of Ramdial it did so on the basis of both ss. 2(1) and 3 of the Code, I think it could only have been the provisions of s. 3 that the Board had in mind. In my opinion, there is no evidence to support a conclusion that any right of Ramdial to contract on equal terms without discrimination because of "age" or "family status", as s. 3 provides, was infringed by 624 or its representatives. And it is also my view, that there is no evidence to support a conclusion that Ramdial's right to "equal treatment with respect to occupying of accommodation" because of any of the grounds specified in s. 2(1) was infringed.

As I have concluded, the right of Salmon which was infringed by 624 and its representatives is her right to have "equal treatment with respect to the occupying of accommodation". What she lost as a result of that infringement was the ability to have her son, aged 13, reside with her on the premises which she chose to purchase through her agreement with Ramdial. The decision which Hudson J. reached in the application brought by 624 under s. 49 of the Condominium Act was not in her favour and her effort to appeal that decision was quashed. I do not think she can be blamed for wanting to walk away from the situation given the attitude and outlook of 624 and its representatives. But her position does not create a right for Ramdial nor an infringement of any right of his.

In this respect, during the course of argument, and almost in passing, counsel for the Commission suggested that if Ramdial was found to have no right under either s. 2(1) or s. 3 which had been violated, perhaps one could be found in s. 11. This section reads as follows:

11. A right under Part I is infringed where the discrimination is because of relationship, association or dealings with a person or persons identified by a prohibited ground of discrimination.

This section was neither dealt with nor referred to by the Board in its reasons and, except as I have indicated above, was not raised by the parties on this appeal. Counsel for the appellants had no opportunity to deal with the suggestion of counsel for the Commission. At this time, given these circumstances, it will suffice if I simply say that in my view Ramdial's situation does not fall within the provisions of that section, because he was not the object or subject of discrimination. I have concluded that no right of his under the Code was infringed by reason of his entering into the agreement with Salmon. And I do not believe that there has been any discrimination against him by reason of that which has been found against Salmon and her son.

In my opinion then, the Board erred in finding that Ramdial had a right under the Code which had been infringed. On the other hand, as I have noted, I think that Board was correct in concluding that the rights afforded to the other complainants under s. 2(1) of the Code were violated. This leads me, then, to a consideration of the remedies which the Board granted to them as a result of this conclusion.

The Board's power to grant a remedy under the Code is found in s. 40(1)(a) and (b). It reads as follows:

40.(1) Where the board of inquiry, after a hearing, finds that a right of the complainant under Part I has been infringed and the infringement is a contravention of section 8 by a party to the proceeding, the board may, by order,

(a) direct the party to do anything that, in the opinion of the board, the party ought to do to achieve compliance with this Act, both in respect of the complaint and in respect of future practices; and

(b) direct the party to make restitution, including monetary compensation, for loss arising out of the infringement, and, where the infringement has been engaged in wilfully or recklessly, monetary compensation may include an award, not exceeding $10,000, for mental anguish.

At the outset of that portion of its reasons which deals with the matter of remedies, the Board says:

There is a presumption in favour of making an award of special and general damages in human rights cases. The principles to be applied in awarding damages under the Code have been set forth in Nel-Gor v. Cameron supra at D/2196, paras. 18525 to 18534, 18537 to 18541, and 18544 to 18561.

The Board is there referring to a previous decision of another board of inquiry, of which the chairman of the present one was involved, and in which the same statement is made. At a later point in its reasons, the board also states that it is able to grant punitive damages under the Code.

I am not at all certain that "monetary compensation, for loss arising out of the infringement" should either be characterized as special, general or punitive damages, or awarded as such. I know that Laskin C.J.C., in a decision of Seneca College of Applied Arts & Technology v. Bhaduria, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 181, 14 B.L.R. 157, 17 C.C.L.T. 106, 2 C.H.R.R. D/468, 81 C.L.L.C. Paragraph 14, 117, 22 C.P.C. 130, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 193, 37 N.R. 455, at p. 194 S.C.R., p. 203 D.L.R., parenthetically noted that compensation available as a remedy under an earlier version of the Code was "damages in effect". But in that case Laskin C.J.C. also recognized that an infringement under the Code does not give rise to a cause of action for damages in a civil proceeding. That being the law, then it seems to me only reasonable to conclude that an inquiry under the Code cannot take the place of a civil action for the purpose of obtaining an award of damages otherwise due under the common or civil law.

It has been said that in order to be proper, monetary compensation awarded under the Code must "flow directly from the denial or discriminatory act": see a decision of this court, Scott v. Foster Wheeler Ltd. (1987), 16 C.C.E.L. 251, at p. 255. As well, I think it can be said that a remedy granted under the Code must reflect its scope and intent. And I also believe that, in the event it is deemed necessary in order to arrive at a proper award under the Code to mirror an assessment of civil damages, regard should be had for all the relevant principles found in the common law.

If it is the intention of the Commission to have a board of inquiry approach the matter of remedy as an award of damages fashioned by common law principles, I think that position should be made known sufficiently far in advance of the hearing date that the parties at the hearing can govern themselves accordingly. Absent such notice or advice, it is most probable that relevant evidence will not be adduced or applicable principles not fully considered, if at all. With some reluctance I say that I think that may have happened in the present case, particularly with respect to the remedies granted in favour of both Ramdial and Salmon.

The Board purported to grant Ramdial "special damages" of $4,000. While I have now indicated that I believe the Board erred in finding that any right of Ramdial was infringed, had I thought otherwise, I would not have agreed with such an award. It appears to me that in arriving at their conclusion with respect to that grant of "special damages" to Ramdial, the Board did so on the basis of damages being awarded for breach of contract. The chairman of the Board in the present case has correctly recognized in earlier decisions of his and which he quoted in the present case, that "principles governing assessment of damages in contract cases are not applicable in human rights cases".

But whether that amount of "special damages" was reached on the basis of breach of contract or tort, I am unable to agree that all which the Board took into account as "expenses" of Ramdial incurred as a result of "the abortive sale to Mrs. Salmon". These included the legal costs which Ramdial incurred in appearing before the Honourable Judge Hudson, as he then was. Considering the nature of that application, and its place in the sequence of events, in my view, they cannot properly fit into the picture whether one regards them as "special damages" arising in contract or tort or as a "loss arising out of the infringement" which the Board found had occurred. And in this respect it is to be noted that the Board also awarded to Ramdial "general damages" of $1,000 "for loss of right of freedom of discrimination".

Ramdial's legal costs totalled some $3,800 which basically represents the amount awarded to him as special damages. The Board specifically indicated that the sum of $4,000 represented the difference between the profit he incurred as a result of re-listing the property and the expenses incurred by reason of his not completing his agreement with Salmon.

I have a similar concern for the remedy granted to Salmon. The Board's reasons in this respect are found at p. 93 of its decision and read as follows:

The Complainant, Ms. Lana Salmon, and her son, suffered considerably, because her abortive purchase came at a time of a rapidly rising market (she would have purchased her unit for $133,000 which then sold for $143,000 two and one-half months later) and she was unable to purchase another property, and continues to live with her sister. It is unfortunate that she did not pursue her position through the court proceedings initiated by the Respondent MTCC #624, but it was apparent from the evidence that she had very modest financial resources and was placed in a very difficult position of uncertainty of result and financial impact. The Respondent MTCC #624's actions toward Ms. Salmon had a severe economic impact upon her. The condominium corporation caused her a significant opportunity loss. Her intended purchase (see Exhibit #52) from Mr. Ramdial involved only a $1,000 down payment and a total cash outlay of only $13,000, the rest of the purchase price being met by a first mortgage of $97,500 and by a second mortgage back to the vendor of $22,500. This was an extremely opportune purchase for Ms. Salmon given her limited financial resources. Once the purchase was blocked she was effectively prohibited from getting another house. Ms. Salmon tried hard to purchase another house but was unable to do so.

The Board awarded Salmon "general damages" of $25,000 and there is no dispute between the parties that this amount was intended to compensate her for "significant opportunity loss" due to her failure to purchase the Ramdial unit. While I accept that courts have granted damages for "loss of opportunity", I have some difficulty accepting that such a loss should be the subject of consideration by a board of inquiry appointed under the Code. But assuming that it is an appropriate subject to be dealt with by such a board, I still have difficulty accepting the result in the present case. In arriving at the amount awarded to Salmon the Board does not appear to have considered at all the effect of Salmon retaining what otherwise was to be paid to Ramdial, or the extent of the obligation to be incurred should she have completed the contract or, generally, the matters of foreseeability and remoteness. And while touched upon in evidence, there does not appear to me to have been a full consideration of matters relevant to the issues of mitigation, the alleged impecuniosity of Salmon and the crystallization date or dates to be determined in such claims.

But in my final analysis of the Board's decision insofar as Salmon is concerned, I do not think these concerns are important for my present purposes. I say this because I believe the Board erred in concluding that whatever was to be given to Salmon by way of monetary consideration under the Code flowed directly from her failure to purchase the Ramdial unit. In my opinion her loss, and I have noted this above, only arises out of s. 2(1), that is, "the right to equal treatment with respect to the occupancy of accommodation". Thus, her entitlement to monetary compensation under s. 40 is to represent her loss arising out of the infringement of that right, due to "family status". Essentially, the conduct of 624 barred her from living in the residence of her choice with her child and it is that loss which entitles her to an award of "monetary compensation" under the Code.

If her object was profit through her purchase of the unit and subsequent sale in a rising market, then she was free to complete the transaction with Ramdial. And if she had done that, then insofar as the provisions of s. 2(1) of the Code are concerned, her right would have remained. Then, if it was found to have been breached, the object of the exercise before the Board would have been to determine her loss, economic or otherwise due to her not residing in the premises she purchased with her son, or residing there but without him.

As I have noted she chose, and I have said it was reasonable for her to have done so, to walk away from her transaction with Ramdial and continue to live with her sister. Having reached that conclusion, then the question is what amount of monetary compensation should be given to Salmon for having been effectively denied the right to have her child live with her in the accommodation of her choice. Under s. 41(3) of the Code, this court is empowered to make such an award and I will do so later. I want to first, however, deal with the remedies which the Board granted to the other complainants involved in this appeal.

With one exception, with which I shall also deal later, the balance of the remedies awarded in favour of the complainants Cryderman and Dudnik, and their respective children, consist of monetary compensation to which the Board in its reasons refers as "general damages". The Board finds that because they "suffered the loss of the right to freedom from discrimination" they were entitled to an award of "general damages". I have already noted that the Board had awarded $1,000 to Ramdial on this account.

Cryderman and Dudnik were also awarded general damages on another ground. With respect to Cryderman and her daughter, the Board in its reasons says because they "did suffer some stress for which they should be compensated by an award of general damages". And insofar as Dudnik is concerned, the Board concluded "the complainant Mrs. Dudnik moved under stress and pressure earlier than she and her husband might otherwise have done and she is entitled to an award of general damages". The amount given to Cryderman for "general damages" was $1,000 and her daughter $750. Dudnik received $1,000 on this account and each of her children $250.

To the extent that the Board purported to compensate Cryderman and Dudnik and the members of their respective families for stress, I have some concern. As can be seen from above, s. 40(1)(b) states: "where the infringement has been engaged in wilfully or recklessly, monetary compensation may include an award, not exceeding $10,000, for mental anguish". The Board concluded that those words "provide for what is, in effect, punitive damages". As support for that proposition, the Board again turns to an earlier decision of its chairman.

Given the definition of punitive damages as found in the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Vorvis v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085, 36 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273, 42 B.L.R. 111, 25 C.C.E.L. 81, 90 C.L.L.C. Paragraph 14,035, 58 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 94 N.R. 321, [1989] 4 W.W.R. 218, I cannot see how such an award is authorized by the provisions of s. 40(1)(b) of the Code. As can be seen from the judgment of McIntyre J. in Vorvis, punitive damages are not intended to be compensatory in nature. Thus, to my mind, on that ground alone they cannot be awarded under that section of the Code. And contrary to what the chairman suggested in that earlier decision, I do not think there is any room in any part of s. 40 for an award of punitive damages.

That section does permit compensation for "mental anguish", provided that the infringement is found to have been "engaged in wilfully or recklessly". There is no issue in the present case that the conduct of any of the appellants cannot be found to be reckless. But there is an issue as to whether it was "wilful" within the meaning of that word as it is used in s. 40(1)(b) of the Code. In this respect the Board concluded, "the respondents all acted intentionally in enforcing the 'adult only' restriction so that, in our view, they acted wilfully within the meaning of s. 40(1)(b)". But, notwithstanding this conclusion, the Board decided "given all the circumstances we are of the opinion that we should not award punitive damages under s. 40(1)(b)".

Accordingly, while it purported to be able to award punitive damages on the basis that the concluding lines of 40(1)(b) "provided for what is, in effect, punitive damages", it did not do so. With respect to the complainants Cryderman and Dudnik, the Board determined that each of them, and certain of their children, were entitled to an award of general damages for "stress" or "stress and pressure", both, I assume, are mental in nature.

To my mind mental stress is a form of mental anguish or, perhaps more appropriately a condition that comes within or is covered by the term "mental anguish". Accordingly, if I am correct in this assumption, in order to grant compensation for "stress", there must be a conclusion that the conduct of the appellant was "wilful". Although the Board found this to be the case, I am not certain that it considered stress to be related to "mental anguish" as I have said it is. While it is the Board's view that the concluding lines of s. 40(1)(b) provide for what is "in effect punitive damages", they also specifically allow an award for "mental anguish". It is not clear to me, then, the basis upon which the Board decided to allow compensation to Cryderman or Dudnik for "stress".

At this point I should say that during the course of argument, Watt J. allowed that it would be reasonable to consider stress as being included in "mental anguish" for the purposes of s. 40(1)(b). Otherwise, as he suggested, there would be no limit to compensation for stress but a limit of $10,000 for mental anguish. I agree with this observation. If the Board reached its decision on the basis that stress was something separate and apart from "mental anguish", then in this respect I think it erred.

Section 40(1)(b) does not allow an award of monetary compensation for mental anguish unless "the infringement has been engaged in wilfully or recklessly". The question then remains as to whether, on the basis of the material and evidence before it, the Board was able to correctly conclude that the infringement "has been engaged in wilfully" by the appellants.

For the purpose of its decision the Board concluded that "the phrase 'wilfully' as viewed in s. 40(1)(b) means 'intentionally', 'knowingly' or 'deliberately' ". And having said that, the Board went on to conclude, as I have already noted, that "the respondents all acted intentionally in enforcing the 'adult only' restrictions so that in our view they acted wilfully within the meaning of s. 40(1)(b)".

To the extent that the Board appears to treat "wilfully" and "intentionally" as being synonymous, I cannot agree. In my opinion, while the act upon which it is founded must be intentional, the infringement must be the purpose of that act in order to be wilful within the meaning of s. 40(1)(b). I do not think that the circumstances of this case permit that conclusion.

In declining to award "punitive damages" the Board said at p. 99 of its reasons:

In the instant situations, the respondents were dealing with an uncertain issue, involving new legislation, on the advice of counsel, and with some support for their position through the court applications taken. In all the circumstances, we are of the opinion that we should not award punitive damages under s. 40(1)(b).

I think what the Board said in that respect supports my conclusion that those responsible for conducting the affairs of the appellants did not have their minds directed towards discrimination against the complainants. Rather, they were completely caught up in the determination of the enforceability of their outstanding restrictions or policies. I think what the Board said above recognizes this as having been the case. And in doing so it failed to include in those circumstances the fact that the Honourable Judge Hudson, as he then was, upheld the position of the appellants.

In my opinion, therefore, none of the complainants are entitled to an award of monetary compensation on account of mental anguish or stress. But each of them is entitled to some award of monetary compensation for "loss arising out of the infringement" of their respective rights as found in s. 2(1) of the Code. Insofar as Cryderman and Dudnik and their respective children are concerned, I have outlined above what amounts the Board awarded to each of them. In that the Board appears to have allowed for an element of stress in arriving at those figures, and because I have now concluded it was not entitled to do so, strictly speaking, some reduction should be made on that account. However, given the size of the amounts in

Board made such an allowance for each of the complainants, and their respective children, I do not intend to change the amount of their respective awards.

The question and my inability to determine the extent to which Insofar as Salmon and her son are concerned I cannot conclude that their respective positions should be looked upon as being any different from the other complainants for the purpose of determining the amount of monetary compensation to which each of them is entitled by reason of their losses arising out of the infringement they suffered under s. 2(1) of the Code. Accordingly on this basis I award Salmon $1,000 and her son $500.

I have some concern as to the authority of the Board to have directed the amounts due to the children of the complainants be paid to the adults as "their respective guardians". I can see nothing from the material which warrants a different approach being taken from that which follows in civil actions where damages have been awarded to an infant. In those situations the monies which are due to an infant are paid into court pending the attainment of his or her majority, unless because of circumstances which have arisen in the interim, the court otherwise orders. Here there are no such special circumstances which have been brought to the attention of this court and in fact none of the counsel raised a concern about this matter of direct payment to the parents of the infant complainants.

The appellants challenge that part of the Board's decision which is as follows:

(1) The said Respondents shall cease and desist forthwith in discriminating because of family status and age in the occupancy of accommodation and in contracts made with adults in respect thereof pertaining to any building of the Respondent Metropolitan

Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 624 and shall cause the Respondent Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 624's corporate declaration, by- laws, rules and policies to conform, and shall administer them in conformance, with this Order ...

Counsel for the appellants suggest that the Board had either no jurisdiction to make that part of its order or, in any event, should not have done so in light of the provisions of the Condominium Act which relate to the matter of declarations. In my opinion the Board had the jurisdiction under s. 40(1)(a) to make that order and I see nothing wrong with their having done so keeping in mind the scope and intent of the Code.

Accordingly, this appeal is allowed insofar as it relates to the complaint of Ramdial, and the remedy granted to Salmon and her son. Otherwise it is dismissed. Success having been divided and because I am not able to determine whose result is more substantial, I think it appropriate that there be no order as to costs on this appeal. An order may issue accordingly.

Appeal allowed in part.

70 O.R. (2d) 151 [1989] Action No. RE770/89 [Supplementary reasons found at: 70 O.R. (2d) 221]

ONTARIO High Court of Justice Rosenberg J. September 25, 1989.

APPLICATION by purchasers of condominium units to recover overpayments of occupancy charges and interest on interest on deposits.

Jonathan H. Fine and J.J. Roy, for applicants.

Gary M. Caplan, for respondents.

ROSENBERG J.:--

NATURE OF APPLICATION

The applicants are purchasers of various units in a condominium project developed and sold by the respondents. The respondent McKeon was the solicitor for the developer and the claim against him has been settled, as have many of the other items in the original application. The remaining issues can be summarized as follows:

(1) The applicants, as purchasers, occupied the units prior to the registration of the project as a condominium. They were charged occupancy charges during the period until registration and until they closed the purchase by receiving a deed and paying the balance of the purchase moneys. They allege that the amount charged to them for occupancy was contrary to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84, and are asking for a rebate of the overcharge.

(2) As required by the Condominium Act, each purchaser received credit for interest on the amount that they paid as a deposit from time to time prior to occupancy of the unit. They did not receive the interest, however, until the statement of adjustments on closing. They allege that the interests either should have been paid at the time of taking occupancy or that this interest should be treated as a further deposit and interest should have been credited to them on account of this "further deposit" as the Condominium Act required during the interim occupancy period on all deposits held by the declarant.

(3) The applicants ask for a declaration that all moneys found to be owing to them are trust moneys. I discussed with counsel for the applicants the ramifications of such a finding and was satisfied that, as between the parties to this application, such a finding had no practical significance. The real issue would arise if any judgment obtained could not be collected because of the financial position of the respondents. In such a case, there might be an issue with regard to the directors and officers of the respondents or with regard to other creditors whether the moneys were trust moneys. I suggested to counsel for the applicants that this issue was better reserved for a time when the parties involved were known and when the circumstances could be disclosed to the court. The actual treatment of the funds whether they were deposited in a separate account or otherwise might be relevant, and there was no evidence in this regard before me. Also, it would be appropriate that the other parties involved, such as directors, officers and creditors, be notified of a proceeding on this issue and be entitled to make representations. Counsel for the applicants adopted my suggestion and that issue was not dealt with.

I Payment of a portion of the occupancy charges History

Since the first Condominium Act in Ontario, there has always been a provision that the project could not be registered until an architect certified that the project was substantially complete. This gave rise to a problem in that very often some or all of the units were fully completed and ready for occupancy for a considerable period of time prior to the registration of the declaration. The units could not be transferred until the declaration was registered. Therefore, the final closing could not take place until registration.

In order to offset some of the carrying charges of the developer for the finished units and also in order to allow the unit purchasers to move in, a practice developed whereby the unit owners were allowed to move in on payment of certain occupancy charges. Legislation was passed for the protection of the purchasers setting a limit on the amount that could be charged for this interim occupancy. Section 51(6) of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

51(6) Where an agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes permits or requires the purchaser to take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the money paid in respect of such right or obligation to the proposed declarant shall be not greater, on a monthly basis, than the total of the following amounts:

1. The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give under the agreement of purchase and sale on delivery of a deed or transfer of the unit.
2. An amount reasonably estimated on a monthly basis for municipal taxes attributable to the proposed unit.
3. The projected monthly common expense contribution for that unit.

The amounts attributable to municipal taxes or common expenses are not disputed and the issue is with regard to the interpretation of s. 51(6), para. 1 relating to the interest component of the occupancy fee. This section was discussed by DuPont J. in Re Cadillac Fairview Corp. Ltd. and Allin (1979), 25 O.R. (2d) 73, 100 D.L.R. (3d) 344, 7 R.P.R. 287 (H.C.J.). DuPont J. was asked to determine whether or not the section was retroactive and determined that it was not. However, in the discussion about the section DuPont J. said at pp. 76-7 O.R., pp. 347-8 D.L.R.:

Section 51 (6) of the Act was presumably enacted in light of a tendency on the part of some unscrupulous developers to charge occupation rent to purchasers before title had passed in excess of the actual costs associated with the condominium unit being sold. In the former Act, amended by 1974 (Ont.), c. 133, s. 14, which added s. 24a to the Act, s-s. (6) of s. 24a read as follows:

"24a(6) Where an agreement of purchase and sale entered into by a proposed declarant for a proposed unit for residential purposes permits or requires the purchaser to take possession of or occupy the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him the money paid in respect of such right or obligation to the proposed declarant shall be credited as payments of the purchase price unless the agreement states that the money or any part of it will not be so credited."

Thus the former s. 24a(6) did not place any limit upon the amount of, or specify the manner of calculation of the occupation charge. The present s. 51(6) is remedial in the sense that it restricts the occupation charge to the total of three particular amounts, as set out above. However, through possible oversight on the part of the Legislature, para. 1 of s. 51(6) speaks of: "The amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid, monthly, in respect of any mortgage or mortgages he is obligated to assume or give ..." (emphasis added) and makes no mention of sales where no mortgage is to be assumed. In such a case, the purchaser cannot obtain title to the premises until registration of the declaration is made, and the developer-vendor must go on paying mortgage interest in respect of the borrowed funds associated with the subject unit. The end result in such a case is a windfall gain to the cash purchaser if he is allowed to take possession prior to closing, and a serious and unexpected loss to the developer.

This conclusion is highlighted to an even greater degree by the present case. The parties entered into the agreement when the former Act was in effect. Although no mortgage was to be taken back, the parties agreed to an occupation charge which clearly recognizes the presence of an interest element at least equal to the difference between $836.25 and $195.

(Emphasis added.)

The inequity referred to by DuPont J. can be demonstrated if one considers as examples purchasers A, B, C and D. Assume that all four are purchasing identical units for a price of $250,000 each.

Purchaser A is paying $50,000 down and giving back to the vendor a $200,000 mortgage bearing interest at 12% per annum. He pays, and the developer receives, $2,000 per month of occupancy as the interest component of his occupancy charges.

Purchaser B is assuming a mortgage which the developer puts on at the time of closing in favour of Sun Life for $200,000 bearing interest at 12% per annum. The interest component of his occupancy charge is again $2,000 per month.

Purchaser C has arranged his own mortgage with the Great West Life which is put on at the time of closing for $200,000 at 12% per annum and he pays nothing as the interest component of his occupancy charge. The developer, who has supplied the identical unit and has the same carrying costs in connection with the unit, received nothing from this purchaser and the purchaser has a substantial windfall as a result of his being ingenious enough to arrange his own financing rather than relying on the developer.

Purchaser D is wealthy and does not wish to have a mortgage on the unit and arranges to purchase for all cash. He pays no interest component of the occupancy charge and the developer again suffers the loss of $2,000 per month revenue.

In order to avoid this loss of revenue, developers have commonly relied on a scheme of requiring what has been known in the trade as a "phantom mortgage". A typical contract using the "phantom mortgage" would require the purchaser to give back to the vendor a first mortgage bearing interest at the rate of 12% per annum for $200,000 running for a period of 60 days, during which time in order to pay off the mortgage the purchaser would have to arrange his own financing. Often the lending institution would have been arranged by the developer, but in order to comply with the wording of the section the "phantom mortgage" would cover some interim period before the lending institution mortgage went on the property.

The issue to be determined in this application is whether the particular provisions of the purchasers' contracts were such as to entitle the developer to charge the interest component of the occupation charge. Some of the facts with regard to this particular transaction are:

The respondent Opemoco prepared and used a standard form of agreement of purchase and sale in respect of all transactions. Opemoco's policy was that it would accept no amendments, nor negotiations, in respect of the terms of this standard form. Opemoco insisted that purchasers agree to give a vendor take-back (phantom) mortgage, "VTB phantom mortgage", on final closing. Purchasers who refused to give a "VTB phantom mortgage" or who challenged the validity of the "VTB phantom mortgage" were not accepted as purchasers.

The agreement of purchase and sale provided that at the final closing, as well as being required to give the "VTB phantom mortgage", all applicant/purchasers were required to deposit in escrow with the vendor's solicitor a certified cheque sufficient in amount to pay the entire principal of the "VTB phantom mortgage". In fact, at final closing, moneys in amount sufficient to pay the entire principal of the "VTB phantom mortgages" were not actually deposited in escrow with the vendor's solicitor, but were paid according to the direction of the vendor (i.e., part to Montreal Trust to discharge the construction financing loan, and the balance to Opemoco Inc. and James D. McKeon).

The provision in the agreement read as follows:

The Vendor shall be under no obligation to complete the sale of the Unit unless the Purchaser shall have first deposited in escrow with the Vendor's solicitor a certified cheque sufficient in amount to pay the entire principal balance of the VTB mortgage. It is understood that such certified cheque is to be applied by the Vendor's solicitor to discharge the VTB mortgage at any time after the closing date upon demand by the Vendor. If the Purchaser fails to deposit the certified cheque as aforesaid on or before the closing date, then he shall be deemed to be in default under this agreement.

(Emphasis added.)

The vendor's standard form of agreement was admittedly drafted specifically with s. 51(6) in mind with a view to attempt to come within the words of s. 51(6) in order to permit a mortgage interest component of the occupancy fee to be charged to purchasers. It was always the intention of both parties that the financing would not be under the agreement of purchase and sale, but from an outside source. One of the items on the check list required the sales agent at the time of selling the unit to obtain the name, address and contact of the purchaser's mortgage company. Such purchasers were told at the time of the signing of their agreement to arrange their own mortgage from a third party mortgagee prior to title closings so that the necessary funds would be available at title closing. In fact, the developer had one mortgage institution who was prepared to arrange mortgages on the units for purchasers who desired them. The standard agreement of purchase and sale also provided under the heading "VTB Mortgage":

If the Purchaser elects to give the VTB Mortgage pursuant to the Agreement then the provisions of this paragraph 2 apply.

(a) The VTB Mortgage shall be on the following terms and conditions:

(i) interest only;

(ii) the full amount of principal and accrued interest shall be payable by the Purchaser on the demand of the Vendor; ...

(Emphasis added.) This provision appears to allow the purchaser to elect whether or not to give back a mortgage, whereas s. 51(6) applies to mortgages that the purchaser is obligated to assume. Also, a mortgage that is payable on demand of the vendor is hardly a mortgage in the usual sense, and does not provide any financing for the purchaser even if it had not been necessary to deposit the certified cheque at the time of closing.

Prior to closing, the purchasers' solicitors in each case received a standard form letter from the vendor's solicitors which included the following statement:

On closing, I will be receiving payment of the mortgage in full as indicated on Statement of Adjustments from your client and accordingly will be giving back to you on closing a discharge of the above mortgage. In view of the fact that the mortgage will be paid off on the closing date, I will not be registering the mortgage and in turn there will be no necessity for you to register the discharge but merely to keep the same in your file. A discharge fee of $100.00 is payable to this office covering the preparation and execution of the discharge.

The actual documentation of the mortgage and statement of adjustments were so carelessly prepared that it was obvious that the solicitors were not prepared to do the necessary work to give any appearance of validity to the "phantom mortgage" transaction. For example:

(1) The amount of the mortgage both on the draft and in the statement of adjustments was for the full purchase price without giving any credit for the substantial down payment already paid to the vendor. (2) None of the dates were filled out, except that the year 1988 had already been inserted in a number of places, notwithstanding that closing was in 1989. Neither the payment date, nor the amount of each payment were completed.

Decision

The term "phantom mortgage" may apply to a number of different types of mortgage transactions and it is not appropriate to define the term precisely in law. The so-called mortgage in this case was not really a mortgage, and therefore, the purchaser was not obligated to give a mortgage at closing as required by s. 51(6). There is no evidence that any purchaser paid any monthly interest under the mortgage and, accordingly, there is no amount of interest that the purchaser would have paid after receiving a deed or transfer of the unit as required by s. 51(6). Further, the transaction was obviously a sham that was so blatant that the section has not been complied with.

The applicants argued that this particular transaction did not comply with the section but that not all "phantom mortgages" are necessarily in breach of the section. I agree. It is not possible to lay down strict rules to determine whether or not a mortgage complies with s. 51(6). If this were done, developers would immediately try to design a transaction to come within these rules. On the other hand, it is possible to test this particular transaction even if it were fully and properly implemented, to determine whether or not the mortgage, however motivated, fell within the spirit of the section. To comply with s. 51(6) there would have to be some legitimate reason for the mortgage, not just an attempt to charge an occupancy fee at a higher rate. For example, a vendor who arranges the first mortgages to be assumed by the purchasers will not only have the expense and trouble of arranging the mortgage but may have to give a covenant to the mortgagee. A vendor who takes back a mortgage on closing will have to find the financial resources to carry such a mortgage. The Act does not appear to limit the time of the vendor take-back mortgage. If, for example, a vendor took back a mortgage for one year in order to allow the purchaser to make his own long-term financing arrangements, that would appear to comply with the section.

A vendor who by providing for a "phantom mortgage" does not perform any service for the purchaser, nor does anything that is required by the purchaser, takes no risk and does not give any real financing, should not receive the benefit of the section.

This reasoning is consistent with the reasoning in the Court of Appeal in Re Brunott and Coolmur Properties Ltd. (1983), 22 A.C.W.S. (2d) 509. In that case the developer had delivered a document entitled "disclosure statement", together with copies of the proposed condominium documentation, in apparent compliance with the disclosure provisions of the Condominium Act and the regulations thereto. The Court of Appeal determined that notwithstanding the fact that the document was entitled "disclosure statement", and copies of what purported to be the required documentation were delivered to the purchasers, the substance of the requirements of the Condominium Act had not been met and stated that:

The appellant contends that there was no binding agreement of purchase and sale because no disclosure statement was delivered which meets the requirements of s. 52. We agree without specifying its failure that the document was no more than a statement of intention -- a proposed statement that lacked information on specific matters the statute enumerated. Clearly the purpose of s. 52 is that the purchaser be given this information.

The authorities show a consistent determination by the court to strike down attempts to circumvent what has been found to be the clear meaning and intent of ss. 53 and 61 of the Condominium Act. It is evident that over a period of years, condominium developers have employed increasingly sophisticated means to avoid the purpose and meaning as subscribed by the court to the sections of the Act in question. It is also clear that over the years, the legislature has tightened the statutory provisions respecting interest on deposits in prepayment figures in favour of the purchasers: Re Dunkelman and Neighbourhood Developments Ltd., unreported decision of Eberle J. dated August 2, 1985 [summarized 33 A.C.W.S. (2d) 288 (Ont. H.C.J.)].

Since the Condominium Act provides that the parties cannot contract out of the provisions of the Act, they similarly cannot be estopped by having closed the purchase from claiming any moneys paid in breach of the provisions of the Act.

Accordingly, there will be judgment in favour of each of the purchasers for the amounts shown at p. 65 of the applicants' factum amending the amount of the Finlay/Graham "phantom mortgage" interest to $13,368.86 and deleting the reference to Pawlik, Unit 401. Each of the applicants shall also receive interest at the prescribed rate from January 25, 1989.

II Payment of interest charges

The second issue arises out of the following clause in the agreement of purchase and sale.

INTEREST: The Vendor agrees to pay the Purchaser interest on the deposits set out in paragraphs 2(a) and 2(b) above from the date the aggregate of said deposits equals at least 10% of the purchase price at a rate equal to the 30 day interest bearing deposit account for Montreal Trust.

Section 53(3) of the Condominium Act states:

53(3) Subject to subsection (2), where a purchaser of a proposed unit under an agreement of purchase and sale referred to in subsection (1) enters into possession or occupation of the unit before a deed or transfer of the unit acceptable for registration is delivered to him, the proposed declarant shall pay interest at the prescribed rate on all money received by him on account of the purchase price from the day the purchaser enters into possession or occupation until the day a deed or transfer acceptable for registration is delivered to him.

The applicants' argument is that the interest portion as provided in the contract payable on the deposit until possession is contractual and thereafter it becomes statutory. In effect, what the applicants are asking is that there be a stop and that the interest be calculated at the time of taking possession and that that amount be treated as a further deposit which in turn should bear interest.

In my view this argument fails for a number of reasons.

(1) The contract does not so provide.

(2) All of the purchasers have closed the purchase without objecting to this calculation and, since it is not statutory but contractual, estoppel is not ruled out by the Condominium Act and therefore the closings without objection or reservation of rights bar any claim.

(3) The practice of adjusting this interest as a closing adjustment at the time of conveyance of the property is practical and consistent with the custom of the trade.

Accordingly, this portion of the claim is dismissed.

At the request of the parties, I am making no determination of costs and if the costs cannot be settled, I may be spoken to. Costs are reserved if necessary.

Judgment accordingly.

Benner et al. v. HLS York Developments Ltd.

52 O.R. (2d) 243

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE CARRUTHERS J. 3RD OCTOBER 1985.

ACTION for a declaration that an agreement to purchase a condominium unit is not binding on the plaintiff and for the return of his deposit; COUNTERCLAIM for damages.

Barry A. Percival, Q.C., for plaintiff, M. Douglas Maynard.

Jeffrey S. Leon, for defendant.

CARRUTHERS J.:-- This action proceeded to trial as a contest between the plaintiff Maynard ("Maynard") and the defendant. The claims of the other plaintiffs have either been determined or deferred for determination pending the outcome of this trial.

Maynard, in this action, seeks a declaration that an agreement of purchase and sale concerning a residential condominium unit is not binding upon him. In addition, in the event that such a declaration is made, he asks that the $35,000 deposit paid by him thereunder be returned to him by the defendant. The basis of Maynard's position is a simple one. The defendant, having failed to comply with the provisions of s. 52 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 ("s. 52"), in the preparation of a disclosure statement required thereunder with respect to the transaction of purchase and sale, cannot now enforce the agreement against Maynard. Maynard, notwithstanding his statement of claim to the contrary, does not rely upon any other basis for his claims. Specifically, his reliance upon s. 29 of the Planning Act, 1983 (Ont.), c. 1, was expressly abandoned at the outset of trial as being "so technical no court would likely relieve upon it". Likewise, he does not turn to the fact that several "closing dates" were set as providing any excuse for his non-performance of the agreement. His counsel, in argument, said that apart from the position which concerns s. 52 as aforesaid, the agreement of purchase and sale in question is enforceable against Maynard.

I conclude from the evidence that Maynard did not complete this transaction for any reason relevant to the issues raised in this action. The efforts on his part to suggest something different have had no effect upon me. The several statements he made in support of his claim I specifically reject. I find them all to have a strong ring of contrivance about them. To my mind, Maynard only turned to s. 52 for support because he was advised to after he became determined, for reasons which I can only suspect, to not go through with this deal. Needless to say, I do not suggest that he is not able to take the position he does. Late-blooming positions can be successfully available to either plaintiffs or defendants.

I have no hesitation in saying that it is my opinion that the defendant has not consciously intended to not comply with the provisions of s. 52, if any non-compliance is demonstrated. In my view of the evidence, the defendant has endeavoured to comply with s. 52. If it has not, its failure is not with respect to the spirit of those provisions of that Act, but only the letter. We are, therefore, involved here in an exercise to determine if the defendant unwittingly has not done all that which the letter of s. 52 demands of it.

We are specifically concerned with the manner in which the defendant prepared the disclosure statement. In the absence of the defendant delivering to Maynard a disclosure statement which in fact complies with the provisions of s. 52, Maynard is not bound by the terms of his agreement and it is not enforceable against him. Accordingly, any deposit paid thereunder, in those circumstances, must be returned: see Re Brunott et al. and Coolmur Properties Ltd. (1983), 22 A.C.W.S. (2d) 509, a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal.

The Condominium Act provides that a person in the position of Maynard, that is, one who has agreed to purchase a residential condominium unit, may rescind such an agreement 10 days after receiving the disclosure statement. The effect of this provision of the Act is that the agreement is not firm until this 10-day period has elapsed. As well, and of greater significance here, is that this right to rescind remains outstanding until the vendor provides a disclosure statement which complies with the provisions of the Act. Accordingly, as I have noted above, in the absence of such a disclosure statement, Maynard can elect to rescind the agreement at any time. The fact that he did not purport to do so within 10 days of his receipt of a form of disclosure statement offered by the defendant, as is the case here, is of no moment. If a disclosure statement is found wanting so that, in effect, it is not a disclosure statement as required by the provisions of the Condominium Act, then a purchaser is at no time required to complete the transaction in connection with which it has been given.

In deciding whether a proffered disclosure statement complies with the provisions of s. 52, the court is to employ an objective standard. As counsel for Maynard said in argument, that standard is what a reasonable man in an Ontario community would think about its sufficiency. The person to whom it is given has to be able to determine what are the essential elements of what he has agreed to purchase, as the Condominium Act requires them to be given. The purpose of the relevant provisions of the Condominium Act is to permit the purchaser to be able to make an informed decision as to whether to elect to rescind or affirm the outstanding agreement of purchase and sale. In my opinion, the sufficiency or otherwise of a disclosure statement must, as well, be judged on the basis of the materiality of its content. The absence of something not material should not, in itself, in my opinion, permit a purchaser to avoid the completion of an otherwise enforceable agreement of purchase and sale. The Court of Appeal in Brunott did not touch upon the matter of materiality. I have read into the reasons of that court, which are handwritten and short, that the "failures" referred to therein, but not specified, were "information on specific matters" which were material to the purchaser's position allowed for under the Act. I cannot think that the Court of Appeal in Brunott intended that a purchaser be able to avoid an otherwise enforceable agreement only because immaterial information was not provided to the purchaser. To my mind, the provisions of s. 52(5) appear to support this position.

Counsel for the defendant relies, in part, upon s. 52(5). In my opinion, it seems to apply to a purchaser who has completed a transaction of purchase and sale of a residential condominium unit and later discovers that the disclosure statement received by him in connection therewith is wanting in some material matter required by the provisions of s. 52. I think that particular subsection intends that, after closing, a purchaser is able to obtain damages due to a failure of the disclosure statement to contain some material information or statement. The fact that that situation is recognized does not, in my opinion, permit an owner who has given a disclosure statement lacking in some material information or statement to compel a purchaser, who was aware of that fact, to close.

Before turning to an examination of the disclosure statement in question and comparing its content to that which is required under the Condominium Act, I should acknowledge my understanding that, in this respect, the provisions of the Act are remedial in nature. Accordingly, the relevant provisions of the Act must be given a "fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects" [Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, s. 10]. The object, in so far as s. 52 is concerned, is, I think, that which counsel for Maynard said in argument: "a properly informed purchaser".

The disclosure statement in question has been drafted in such a way as to follow in order the provisions of s-ss. (6) and (7) of s. 52. In fact, it sets out headings which are made up of words or wording found in those subsections. I do not believe that it is necessary to do this in order to meet the requirements of the Act. Nor do I think that by doing so it is necessary to have contained in each paragraph all that which is required by the corresponding subsection. I think, in the final analysis, regard must be had for the whole disclosure statement. The manner in which it has, in fact, been formed in this case, if nothing else, facilitates a comparison with the provisions of the Act.

What counsel for Maynard suggests as deficiencies are found in two documents. One, dated March 7, 1983, is a letter in which particulars of the allegations are contained. It is by way of satisfaction of an order for particulars granted by Master Garfield. The second document is that which was used by counsel for Maynard in argument as an aide-memoire. I shall refer to both.

The first complaint concerns "parking". It is alleged generally that the disclosure statement fails to adequately describe and deal with the parking facilities at the condominium development in question. There are also three more specific complaints. They concern "visitors' parking", "additional parking spaces" and "public parking". There is nothing in any provision of the Condominium Act, including applicable regulations, which specifically requires "parking" to be dealt with in a disclosure statement. However, as the agreement of purchase and sale in question specifically states in its description of what is being purchased, "including the exclusive use of a parking space", s. 52(6)(b) would apply to require the disclosure statement to touch upon parking.

Section 52(6), in full, reads as follows:

52(6) The disclosure statement referred to in subsection (1) shall contain and fully and accurately disclose,

- (a) the name and municipal address of the declarant or proposed declarant and of the property or proposed property;
- (b) a general description of the property or proposed property including the types and number of buildings, units and recreational and other amenities together with any conditions that apply to the provision of amenities;
- (c) the portion of units or proposed units which the declarant or proposed declarant intends to market in blocks of units to investors;
- (d) a brief narrative description of the significant features of the existing or proposed declaration, by-laws and rules governing the use of common elements and units, and of any contracts or leases that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39;
- (e) a budget statement for the one year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and the description;
- (f) where construction of amenities is not completed, a schedule of the proposed commencement and completion dates; and
- (g) any other matters required by the regulations to be disclosed.

Because counsel for the defendant raised the matter, it is perhaps appropriate that I interject here to deal with what he and, I am sure, others, perceive to be a conflict between certain wording contained in that subsection. I refer specifically to the words "shall contain and fully and accurately disclose", on the one hand, and either or both "a general description" and "a brief narrative description of the significant features" on the other. To my mind, a further consideration of the provisions of s. 52(5) can serve to resolve any conflict. In my opinion, so long as "the general description" or "... brief narrative description" does not include any material statement or information that is false, deceptive or misleading, or fail to contain any material statement or information, they are acceptable. They need not otherwise be detailed to the point where they become prolix or encyclopaedic in nature.

To return to the complaints about "parking", the disclosure statement here deals with that subject in several places, as follows:

Sufficient parking will be allocated to accommodate the requirements of the residential unit owners and the remainder will be for use by the public for a charge;

The parking spaces shall be used only for parking of motor vehicles provided such motor vehicles do not exceed the physical limitations of the access ramp or parking spaces;

Subject to certain restrictions each owner has the full use, occupancy and enjoyment of the common elements.

The disclosure statement indicates that "the owners of the residential units which are described in sch. 'G' will have the exclusive use of those portions of the common elements" set out therein, and this includes "a parking space". Schedule "G" is found in the declaration which is provided with the disclosure statement, and it designates parking space P-115 as being that allocated to unit six on level two. This is the unit which Maynard agreed to purchase.

To my mind, these provisions sufficiently constitute the general description required by s. 52(6)(b) with respect to parking. The requirement to deal with parking in accordance with that subsection arises, in my view, because "parking" is included in the "property", which includes "other amenities" offered by the defendant and which Maynard agreed to purchase. With respect to "public parking" about which Maynard complains, I am prepared to look upon it, for present purposes, as being included in "other amenities". Maynard specifically complains that the statement does not disclose who is to be the owner of the area in which "public parking" will be located. From what is contained in the statement, it is clear to me that, after allowing for the parking needs of the residential unit owners, the remainder "will be for use by the public for a charge". It is further stated that, "a portion of the underground parking ... will constitute the commercial component of the project and may be registered as a separate condominium". The statement continues, "the commercial portion of the underground parking ... will be for general use by the public for a charge". In my opinion, the name of the owner, from time to time, of the area in which public parking is to be located is not material information for the purposes of s. 52(6)(b). Accordingly, assuming, as I have, that public parking must be dealt with in the disclosure statement, lack of identity of the owner of the area in which it will be located does not render the disclosure statement inadequate as it is claimed on behalf of Maynard. I say this notwithstanding that, in my view, the statement is not as clear as it might be in disclosing whether all the parking "not allocated to accommodate the requirements of the residential unit owners" is to be included in the commercial component of the development.

I can understand why Maynard or others may reasonably ask that second or third parking spaces be available for a residential unit, and if so, on what terms. However, I do not see that the defendant is required, by any provision of s. 52, to provide that information in the disclosure statement. Thus, any failing in this respect would not cause the statement to be not in conformity with that section.

With respect to "visitors' parking", I note that it is not mentioned anywhere in s. 52, or, for that matter, the agreement of purchase and sale or the disclosure statement. I am prepared to assume, again, for present purposes, that if so mentioned as being part of that which is offered to purchasers, it could be considered an "other amenity", to be dealt with as s. 52 requires. However, if what otherwise might be considered a usual or normal amenity to enhance one's ownership, use and occupation of a residential condominium unit is not specifically offered to purchasers, then, in my opinion, the fact of it not being offered is not required to be mentioned in the disclosure statement. And the failure to do so does not render the statement in contravention of that which is required by s. 52(6)(b).

The questions which counsel for Maynard raises with respect to visitors' parking are reasonably raised and might be material if visitors' parking was simply offered to purchasers without anything more being mentioned about it in the statement. However, here, as I have noted, there is no mention and, therefore, the absence of answers to those questions does not constitute a failure on the part of the defendant to provide material information in the disclosure statement. In any event, in my view, the circumstances with which we are dealing here are such as to suggest to a reasonable purchaser that visitors could park in the public parking area, and if one looked upon "visitors' parking" and "public parking" as being one and the same, the answers to most of the questions raised are contained in the statement.

I say "answers to most of the questions" because the amount of the charge for parking and the identity of the owner are not shown. I am not at all certain that it is reasonable to think that a specified charge should be contained in the material. That one year's expenses otherwise to be incurred are found in the material are there for different reasons and for different purposes. A parking charge cannot be reasonably thought to remain level indefinitely and, undoubtedly, would increase. In the absence of some workable formula, then, resort to express wording requiring that the fee be at all times reasonable in amount is all that is left. In the absence of any mention of what the charge is or is not to be, I think it would be implied that it should be reasonable. I do not think, in any event, that a purchaser should be entitled, beyond the period of 10 days from receipt of the disclosure statement, to avoid the enforcement of the agreement only on the basis of there being a lack of specific information as to proposed charges for visitors' parking contained in a disclosure statement. Subsequent unreasonable increases could be the subject of a claim for redress.

The failure of a disclosure statement to indicate the name of the owner of the area in which visitors' parking, or, for that matter, public parking, is proposed to be located, if not part of the common elements, does not, in itself, render the disclosure statement in contravention of the provisions of s. 52. The identity of the owner, under those circumstances, is not material, in my opinion. For these various reasons then, I conclude that Maynard is not entitled to the relief he claims by reason of the alleged defects in the disclosure statement relating to the subject of parking.

Maynard next raises a complaint about the sufficiency of the disclosure statement as it pertains to "recreational amenities and agreement". Section 52(6)(b), as can be seen from above, refers to "recreational and other amenities" as being included in the required general description of the property or proposed property. Section 52(6)(f) refers only to "amenities". Under the heading "General Description of Property", the disclosure statement itself contains the following:

The recreational and other amenities set out below will be located in or below the Market building but will be for the use and enjoyment of the residents of both buildings.;

The following is a list of the recreational and other amenities to be provided by the declarant in or below the Market building for the shared use, enjoyment and expense of the residents in both buildings:

1. One party room with kitchen including stove, refrigerator and dishwasher;
2. Two squash courts;
3. One exercise room -- not equipped;
4. Two change rooms for men;
5. Two change rooms for women;
6. One indoor swimming pool;
7. One whirlpool;
8. Three saunas;
9. Two roof-top sun decks.

The construction of amenities has commenced as part of the construction of the Market building. The proposed date for completion of recreational and other amenities is July, 1983.

To be noted is the fact that the disclosure statement refers only to recreational and other amenities to be provided by the defendant "in or below the Market building". The Market building is one of the two proposed buildings intended to comprise the condominium development in question. To be further noted is the fact that it is only with respect to recreational amenities in or below the Market building to which the complaints on behalf of Maynard are directed. These complaints are as follows:

(a) The said disclosure statements failed to set out the ownership of the recreational and other amenities in or below the market building. The disclosure statements all provide that after both buildings had been registered as condominiums, an agreement will be entered into dealing with the use and enjoyment of the recreational and other amenities and the expenses of operating same. The parties to the proposed agreement are not named, and involvement, if any, of the developer is not stated and no draft of the proposed agreement is provided;

(b) Schedule of Proposed Commencement and Completion Dates

-- what is the date of beginning of construction for each amenity?

-- what is the date of completion of each amenity?

(c) Ownership

-- who owns the amenities?

-- is "use and enjoyment" synonymous with ownership?

-- are the recreational amenities part of the common elements of the MARKET BUILDING?

-- is the Recreational Agreement different from the Reciprocal Building Agreement?

It seems to me, from a reading of the relevant provisions of the disclosure statement, that it relates only to amenities which can be properly described as recreational in nature and which need to be constructed as part of the building in which they are located. Both counsel appear to have approached this aspect of the case on this basis. I refer particularly to counsel for Maynard who, in his aide-memoire, specifically described these complaints in this manner. In view of this accord, it is only in passing that I suggest that a reading of s. 52 can indicate that it does not only concern itself with amenities which are recreational and to be constructed. I have already suggested that, under certain circumstances, visitors' parking or public parking may be considered an amenity for the purposes of that section. Another example, to my mind, is found in the disclosure statement here. The budget-statement portion includes, amongst the type of common expenses listed under "Staff ", one described as a "concierge". Keeping in mind the duties of such a person, I think that it is reasonable to regard a concierge as an amenity. However, needless to say, a concierge cannot be reasonably described as being recreational in nature or something to be constructed. Any question as to when, if at all, a concierge should be included in the description required by s. 52(6)(b) is something I need not decide here.

With respect to this complaint raised on behalf of Maynard concerning "the recreational amenities and agreement", I can see nothing in the Act which requires the disclosure statement to set out their ownership. However, notwithstanding, that which is in fact outlined in the proposed By-law 5, included with the disclosure statement, suggests clearly that the defendant, at least, for the purposes of the reciprocal building agreement, will be shown as the owner of the portion of the buildings in which recreational amenities will be located. There is no requirement that a draft of the proposed agreement covering "recreational and other amenities" be provided with the disclosure statement. Revised Regulations of Ontario 1980, Reg. 121, s. 32, passed under the Condominium Act, specifies the documents to be provided with the disclosure statement, and such a document is not included. Section 52(6) (d) requires "a brief narrative description of the significant features of ... any contracts ... that may be subject to termination or expiration under section 39". That does not apply to any recreational amenities agreement.

As noted above, the disclosure statement here discloses "the construction of amenities has commenced", and that "the proposed date for completion of recreational and other amenities is July 1983". In my opinion, those statements comply with the provisions of s. 52(6)(f). That section does not, in my view, require the date of commencement or completion of construction of each amenity to be shown. While I think the questions raised concerning ownership of the "recreational and other amenities" are not unreasonable, they seek information not required by the provisions of s. 52 to be contained in the disclosure statement. It might be that the agreement concerning the amenities can be combined with the reciprocal building agreement. By-law 5, attached to the disclosure agreement, as I have noted, provides for the latter agreement. That Maynard alleges that he cannot tell from the statement what is to happen in this respect does not now permit him to avoid completion of his agreement with the defendant.

With respect to the complaint concerning the reciprocal building agreement, I note again that the provisions of s. 52 do not require that anything other than "a brief narrative description of the significant features" of the proposed by-laws and agreements, caught up by s. 39, be contained in the disclosure statement. In addition, s. 32 does not require a copy of the proposed reciprocal building agreement to be provided with this statement, but only a copy of the proposed by-laws, as well as a brief narrative description of the significant features of the by-laws. In my opinion, this has been done in this case. Again, these complaints made on behalf of Maynard in this respect do not support the position he now maintains.

The next complaint made on behalf of Maynard is with respect to the budget statement. As can be seen from above, s. 52(6)(e) refers to a budget statement for the one-year period immediately following the registration of the declaration and the description, and s. 52(7) outlines the particulars to be included in the budget statement. Maynard's complaints in this respect are that the budget statement does not disclose the amount of each expense or the assumed inflation factor and, on his behalf, the following questions are raised, for which it is suggested the required answers cannot be obtained from the disclosure statement:

-- does it accurately and fully disclose a budget statement for the one year period?

-- does the "lumping together" of various payments satisfy the requirements of the Act?

-- does it accurately disclose the proposed amount of each expense?

-- are the "particulars of the type, frequency and level of services to be provided" fully and accurately set out?

-- how much of the lump sum expenses are referable to property that is owned, rented or shared with others?

-- does the statement set out an assumed inflation factor for all of the expenses quite apart from only three types of expenses?

-- how much of the budget expenses are allocated to the shared recreational amenities?

There seems to be no dispute between the parties that the budget statement here sets out common expenses and for the period of time required. Whether they are, in fact, "the common expenses" (emphasis added), I cannot say. In this respect, it appears to me that what is set out, and what is required to be set out, is what the owner thinks will be the common expenses incurred by the corporation. Furthermore, and of significance to me, the amounts which the owner is required to show in the budget statement are what he, again, thinks they are going to be. In other words, the expenses, or the nature of the expenses and the amounts thereof, are really the result of an estimate, the basis for which can differ in any given case. There is nothing in the Act which indicates or suggests what expenses are to be shown. However, there is one specific provision of the Act which, to my mind, has a bearing on how the owner fashions the budget statement. That provision is s. 52(8), and it reads as follows:

52(8) Where the total amount incurred for the common expenses provided for in the budget statement exceeds the total of the proposed amounts set out in the statement, for the period covered by the budget statement mentioned in clause (6)(e) the declarant shall forthwith pay to the corporation the amount of the excess except in respect of increased expenses attributable to the termination of an agreement under section 39.

I note that what is referred to in that subsection is, "... the total amount incurred for the common expenses provided for in the budget statement" and "... the total of the proposed amounts set out in the statement" (emphasis added). In my view, that section does not apply to the situation where a consideration is given to common expenses and the proposed amount thereof which are not set out in the budget statement. If there is a complaint in respect of them, perhaps the cause of action suggested in s. 52(5) might apply. Of interest to me at this point, as well, is the reference to "total amount" shown in that subsection. Here, there is no complaint about the description of the common expenses set out in the budget statement. Counsel for Maynard submits that the failure of the defendant to have an amount placed beside each expense shown or listed in the budget statement constitutes a contravention of s. 52(7)(b). To better understand this position, I think it is appropriate to set out here the portion of the budget statement relevant to this specific complaint:

SEE PAPER PART FOR ILLUSTRATION

It can be seen from that portion of the budget statement that it is not in every instance that the defendant has failed to do what, according to counsel for Maynard, it is required to do. It is only in certain instances, and these are where, within a heading, the defendant has given specific examples of the type of expense which it suggests can be met. In every instance, whether there be specific kinds shown under a heading or not, there is a total amount shown for the expense described by the heading. It is, therefore, this limited absence which gives rise to this aspect of the complaints raised on behalf of Maynard.

Here, if Maynard completed the purchase and, later, after one year, discovered that the total amount expended for "Service Contracts", for example, exceeded $62,500, the amount shown in the statement, s. 52(8) would apply. And this would be the case whether, with respect to "Service Contracts", "pest control", for instance, one of the kinds set out, did or did not have a specific amount beside it. We know from the evidence here that, in fact, the total of the proposed expenses for the period in question fell short of its mark by some $12,000, and that sum was paid by the owner to the condominium corporation pursuant to s. 52(8).

It is my opinion that the words "each expense", as used in s. 52(7)(b), mean "each type of expense". And this is so where, as here, some of what the owner suggests as being reasonably anticipated can as well be the subject of a more definite or specific proposed amount. I suppose, in order to comply with that which counsel for Maynard suggests the section requires, the defendant could, for example, take the figure of $20,000, the total for "Miscellaneous" under the heading "Service Contracts", and split it up in any manner just so a figure would end up opposite each of the items. How this would advance the position of Maynard or, indeed, any purchaser of a residential condominium unit, is not clear to me. In my opinion, even following the kind of construction which I am asked to give s. 52, I do not think it leads to the result sought on behalf of Maynard. To be able to avoid an otherwise enforceable contract which the defendant has entered into in good faith, because of the lack of a proposed amount for several examples or types of a proposed expense, when a total for all is shown, is not reasonable, in my view. There would be something inherently wrong if a person, striving to avoid an otherwise enforceable agreement, were permitted to do so because no proposed amount was shown for "pest control". I think my position in this respect is supported by the fact that the defendant here did not have to mention, for instance, "pest control" or the other examples of "Service Contracts" or, indeed, examples of "Repairs & Maintenance" contracts, or of "Supplies", etc. Presumably, one could consider two budget statements at the same time, each one representing two identical buildings but with different owners. In one instance the owner, not possessed of a great imagination, or knowledge, or both, could put little down by way of description of the type of common expenses to be anticipated and only totals for what is shown. The other owner, because of greater experience and knowledge, could express more information by way of description of the proposed expenses but, like the other, also show only totals. If the totals in each instance were the same, to my mind, it would not be reasonable for the purchaser in the first instance, all other factors being equal, to be required to complete the transaction while the purchaser in the second instance would not. Perhaps, with respect to the extent of the particulars, in my example at least, it could be said that one owner is more closely following the requirements of s. 52(7)(c), and specifically, the words therein, "particulars of the type ... of services to be provided". Again, the Act does not provide a yardstick by which one can measure whether what is given, in fact, meets the requirements of the section.

As I have noted above, the section seems to leave it up to the owner to provide what he suggests are anticipated expenses and the extent of particulars covering them and, as well, the proposed amount to be incurred in the period in question by reason of them. Here, Maynard's counsel asks whether the budget statement "fully and accurately" sets out the particulars of the type, frequency and level of the services to be provided. He, apparently, has incorporated the words "fully and accurately" found in s. 52(6) into s. 52(7)(c). I am not at all certain that he is entitled to do this. As I have noted above, the latter section only requires the budget statement to "set out" the particulars of those things. However, I really do not think there is much difference, from a practical point of view, what words are resorted to in determining whether the requirements of the Act in this respect have been met. In either case, the owner is compelled to provide that which he can reasonably do in order to disclose to a purchaser what is to be expected by way of type, frequency and level of the services anticipated to be provided. I have already dealt with what is shown in the budget statement here as particulars of the "type" of service. It is what this owner has chosen, and I really do not think much, if any, complaint is raised on behalf of Maynard in this respect. From what was said in argument, it is really "frequency and level" about which there is concern. In my opinion, where it has been able to provide some meaningful information about frequency and level of the services, the owner here has done so. What can a reasonable owner, possessed of a bona fide intention to comply with the spirit and letter of the Act, say about the frequency and level of most of the expenses reasonably thought likely to be incurred in connection with a residential condominium development? In turning to "pest control" again, as an example, I suggest that it would not be unreasonable to consider that there be no frequency at all. And how does one comment on the level of the hydro service to be expected? I could make similar observations about other items mentioned.

Counsel for Maynard asks how much of the "lump sum" expenses set out in the budget statement are referable to property that is owned, rented or shared with others. He also asks how much of the budget expenses are allotted to the shared recreational amenities. I assume he suggests that in both instances, if the answer cannot be found in the budget statement, the statement does not comply with the statute. I am not at all sure that the answer to either of the questions he posed must be contained in the budget statement. I see no provision contained in s. 52(6) or s. 52(7) which touches on either question. In argument, counsel for Maynard did refer me to s. 52(7)(h) as being a subject of his complaint with respect to the budget statement. My reading of that subsection does not permit me to conclude that it relates to either of the two questions I am now considering. In fact, the budget statement is silent about what is referred to in that subsection. Presumably, no such fees or charges are to be paid by the unit owners.

I now deal with the last complaint about the budget statement. Maynard's counsel asks: "[D]oes the statement set out an assumed inflation factor for all of the expenses, quite apart from only the three types of expenses?" (emphasis his). Those three types are hydro, water and gas; and it is only in connection with those expenses about which there is any statement relating to an inflation factor. In evidence, the officer called on behalf of the defendant, Cary Herbert Solomon, was referred to this fact in his direct evidence. He spoke of those three items of expense as being "major components" of the expenses outlined in the budget statement and confirmed that that statement "gives an inflation factor" for them. According to my notes, the matter was not raised in cross-examination at all. I gather it is the suggestion of counsel for Maynard that the Act requires an assumed inflation factor to be the subject of a statement with respect to all of the expenses shown in any budget statement. I do not agree with this position. To begin with, there may be and, in fact, are reasonably anticipated expenses to which an inflation factor cannot be assumed or need not be assumed. Indeed, to my mind, all the expenses listed in the budget statement here, other than the three specifically mentioned, seem of the type which I think it is reasonable to say cannot be the subject of an assumed inflation rate. In any event, it seems to me that the Act again leaves it up to the owner to make a decision as to what is to be done -- to assume or not to assume an inflation factor. If none is assumed, then apparently, it is not to be mentioned. And that, apparently, is the case here, with the exception of the three items for which an inflation factor has been assumed.

Counsel for the defendant allowed in argument that with respect to the budget statement here, any shortcomings were of an extremely minor nature and not sufficient to make the budget statement not one required under the Act. In saying what he did, I do not believe that he was intending to touch upon a consideration of whether the defendant had substantially complied with the requirements of the statute. I believe he was suggesting, in saying what he did, that anything not in the statement, or not expressed or outlined completely, is not material to the decision to be made by Maynard. He may have been suggesting that it was not "so material", and in which event, perhaps he was intending to put forward that there had been a substantial compliance with the Act. I did not discuss this subject specifically in argument, nor was it raised by counsel for Maynard. It could be that in another case this matter will have to be dealt with. Someone may think that the absence of some particular material information from all that is required to be disclosed in the disclosure statement should not permit an otherwise enforceable agreement to be avoided by a purchaser. I note here that the Court of Appeal in Re Brunott et al. and Coolmur Properties Ltd. (1983), 22 A.C.W.S. (2d) 509, did not deal with this matter.

The last of all the complaints raised on behalf of Maynard concerning the disclosure statement itself relates to the management agreement provided with it. Section 52(6)(d) requires this to be done. Specifically, it is suggested by counsel for Maynard that the disclosure statement does not disclose the term of the management agreement, or when it starts and when it ends. The question is also asked as to why the length of the term is important under the Act. In my opinion, there is no basis for the complaints made with respect to the disclosure statement in so far as the management agreement is concerned. The term is specified to be two years, beginning from the date of registration of the declaration. The importance of the term is suggested, if indeed it need be at all, in the information which specifically deals with "proposed By-law No. 3 (Management Agreement)".

For these reasons then, I cannot agree with the position taken on behalf of the plaintiff and, accordingly, his action will be dismissed. The defendant's counterclaim will succeed in so far as it relates to the claim for damages by reason of the plaintiff's breach of contract. Specific performance is not sought. By agreement of counsel, the determination of the quantum of the defendant's damages, including any prejudgment interest thereon, is to be referred to the master at Toronto for inquiry and report. I can be spoken to by counsel, if necessary, as to whether any specific instruction is to be made with respect to the deposit money paid by the plaintiff and its relation, if any, to any award of damages granted in favour of the defendant. Costs of this action and the reference to the master will be to the defendant after their assessment on a party-and-party basis following completion of the reference.

Judgment for defendant.

Ontario Mortgage Corp. v. Shoreham Apartments Ltd. et al.

48 O.R. (2d) 269

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE EBERLE J. 22ND MARCH 1984.

ACTION by a mortgagee for a deficiency after sale under power of sale; COUNTERCLAIM for loss suffered by the mortgagors.

John M. M. Roland, Q.C., and Brian G. Morgan, for plaintiff.

Ronald E. Carr, for defendants.

EBERLE J. (orally):-- All right, gentlemen, thank you for your submissions which certainly helped to put the issues in focus.

In this case, the plaintiff, by whom I mean Ontario Mortgage Corporation, sues for a deficiency resulting after the exercise by it of power of sale with respect to certain mortgaged premises.

When I refer to the plaintiff, I mean Ontario Mortgage Corporation which is the plaintiff in one of the actions being tried together at this time. It is the defendant in the other action. The plaintiff is a corporation which has acted as the lending arm of the Ontario government.

The defendants, and where I use that term I refer to Shoreham Apartments Limited, Murray Goldman and Albert Melchior, are the defendants in one action and the plaintiffs in the other. The defendant Shoreham is a developer which was responsible for the development and construction of two condominium buildings in Ajax out of which premises this lawsuit arises. The defendants Goldman and Melchior are the principal persons behind the developer company and they are, as well, the guarantors of the mortgages to be referred to.

In the latter part of 1974, the plaintiff committed itself to lend something over $15,000,000 to Shoreham for the construction of the two condominium buildings in Ajax. The arrangement between them included certain terms which will become important in these reasons later on.

Pursuant to the commitment, a mortgage was registered, the buildings were then constructed and sales of the condominium units began. For a while, sales of the units went well. Then, however, the market turned sour; sales dwindled to a trickle. A number of witnesses agreed that that is what happened to the market.

Mr. Goldman, whose evidence on this point I have no hesitation in accepting, said that the whole real estate market went bad in 1976, but it turned especially bad for condominiums in the Ajax area.

In the beginning, the mortgage given by the plaintiff on the condominium buildings was a blanket mortgage. It was later replaced at the appropriate time with individual mortgages on each condominium unit totalling the same amount as the blanket mortgage.

Shoreham and the guarantors, Goldman and Melchior, who were liable on the blanket mortgage were liable on each of the unit mortgages as well. The arrangement was that as Shoreham sold condominium units, Shoreham and Goldman and Melchior would be released from their covenants and at the same time, of course, the new owner of a condominium unit would become liable on the mortgage on that unit to the plaintiff. Some of those purchasers, after a fairly short span of time, defaulted on their mortgages and accordingly a number of those units landed back on the doorstep of Ontario Mortgage Corporation, the mortgagee, who had then to deal with them.

Although there are issues in this action concerning those units and the way they were handled by Ontario Mortgage Corporation, no claim is actually made in this action or these actions by Ontario Mortgage with respect to them.

During the period in which some of the sold condominium units were, as I have said, coming back into Ontario Mortgage Corporation's hands, Shoreham was still in the process of selling or trying to sell the other remaining units or as an alternative, as a result of a concession made to them by Ontario Mortgage Corporation, or O.M.C., renting them. From a certain point, Shoreham sought and received permission to rent units instead of selling them because of the slowness of the sales.

By late 1978, 93 units still remained unsold and on October 1st of that year Shoreham defaulted on the mortgage. With respect to them, O.M.C. took power of sale proceedings and took over those 93 units as of January 3, 1979. Those are the units with respect to which O.M.C. claims as plaintiff in these proceedings.

Unfortunately for everyone and especially for the parties to these proceedings, sales of the condominium units in the Ajax area remained poor. However, by 1982 or 1983, O.M.C. had succeeded in selling all of the 93 units and the deficiency claimed with respect to that operation consists of the following figures: $1,379,013.86 for deficiency, together with interest on that amount, calculated to January 31, 1984, of $292,699.03, together with further interest calculated on a daily basis which, I believe, calculated to today amounts to $22,848.34, plus a relatively small miscellaneous item of $10,800.99.

The defendants resist these claims vigorously on a number of grounds which I will come to shortly and in addition assert a counterclaim against O.M.C. for $891,022 representing the cash loss suffered by them on this project, making it clear that in this figure there is no component for loss of profit.

I now turn to discuss the issues that were canvassed in the course of submissions. The first one I wish to deal with is this: the defendants allege and argue that O.M.C. competed with the mortgagors Shoreham, Goldman and Melchior in the period from early 1977 until the beginning of 1979, with respect to the sale and rental of units in the two buildings. This arises out of the fact, already alluded to, that during this period O.M.C., due to default by purchasers of some of the condominium units, repossessed those units and had them for disposition in some manner during the time while Shoreham was still in the process of selling or attempting to sell or to rent the remaining, unsold condominium units.

It is said that O.M.C. was selling units that had been repossessed by it at prices lower than those at which Shoreham was selling similar units, lower than the prices that Shoreham was required to sell its units at, for part of the agreement between Shoreham and O.M.C. in the beginning was that the units must be sold at prices that were established in the agreement and set by O.M.C. This is so because the lending by O.M.C. was as part of the government programme to assist low- and moderate-income housing. In light of that policy, ceiling prices were put upon the units. Those ceiling prices were known from the very beginning of the arrangement between the parties.

At the beginning, Shoreham was not permitted to rent units. They were being built for sale as condominiums. However, during the course, because of the slowness of the sales and at the request of Shoreham, O.M.C. permitted Shoreham to rent, but limited rental to a one-year period.

As well, during the period I am dealing with now, O.M.C. relaxed a great many of the other restrictions that had been imposed upon Shoreham in the original arrangement between the parties. I do not think it necessary to detail those relaxations, but there is no question but they were carried into effect in order to help to relieve the developer from the difficult situation in which it found itself.

The defendants argue that once O.M.C. had obtained the units in question by way of repossession from individual purchasers, that its efforts to market them resulted in a conflict of interest on the part of O.M.C. and was a breach of O.M.C.'s duty as a mortgagee to its mortgagor Shoreham.

It does appear from the evidence that O.M.C. was asking for its repossessed units, prices that were somewhat lower than those at which Shoreham was required to sell roughly comparable units.

By way of discussion, it must be remembered that all the units O.M.C. had for sale in this period were used ones, all having been owned and occupied for some period of time by the respective purchasers. Some, at least, of the units which Shoreham had for sale were, of course, new ones although there were others which it had for sale and which became used ones as well because of the concession given to Shoreham in allowing it to rent when sales were difficult or impossible to achieve.

As well, it appears that the interest rate on the mortgages in connection with any units that O.M.C. had for sale during this period was somewhat lower than the interest rates charged by Shoreham in connection with its sales, those interest rates being fixed in the contractual arrangement between O.M.C. and Shoreham.

As well, part of the contractual arrangement between O.M.C. and Shoreham was that O.M.C.'s approval was required of all purchasers. These approvals related particularly to the financial responsibility of the purchaser, and O.M.C. had established and in place certain guidelines which appeared to be familiar to all the parties. The principal one was that the mortgage payment including principal, interest and taxes should not exceed a certain percentage of the family income of the purchasers and there were other similar tests and, as well, O.M.C. obtained credit reports on proposed purchasers as a part of the material it obtained in order to determine whether or not the proposed purchaser should or should not be approved.

I think it is clear from the evidence, as I have already commented on, that all the parties were familiar with these arrangements and with O.M.C. practices.

The developers, I mean particularly Mr. Goldman and Mr. Melchior, were highly experienced, highly sophisticated developers, each of them with many years in the business, experienced in wide varieties of buildings and developments of all kinds and with considerable prior experience in government assisted and financed projects.

To return now to the issue in question. It is not suggested that the prices set by O.M.C. for sales by Shoreham were themselves unreasonable. The submission is that O.M.C. acted wrongly in attempting to market its repossessed units at prices somewhat lower than those. However, I think this matter is to be resolved on the evidence in this case and it is apparent from all of the evidence in this case that during the period in question there was no serious effort to sell units on the part of O.M.C. at all. True it is that units were made available by them but it really went very little further than that. Initially, when units came back on their hands the evidence of the witnesses from O.M.C. was that they wished to rent them and not to sell them. They were pressed by real estate agents, however, to put a sale price on them, agents naturally hoping to get a bigger commission on the sale than on a mere rental, and sale prices were supplied to the agents. Indeed, for a short period of time some units were listed with an agent for sale and undoubtedly if anyone made a specific inquiry of O.M.C. about a possible purchase, the units were available for sale, but I emphasize that in my consideration of all of the evidence it is perfectly clear that there was no serious attempt by O.M.C. to sell these units.

The witnesses from O.M.C., particularly Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Henderson, made it clear in their evidence that they were quite aware of the somewhat difficult and delicate position they were in. They were well aware that it might be quite counter-productive for O.M.C. to engage in a serious sales attempt with respect to these repossessed units. They had to consider and did consider the interests of Shoreham in continuing to sell the remaining units, for if Shoreham could not sell the remaining units, it was all too evident that those units would likely end up on O.M.C.'s doorstep as well. Many units had already been sold to private purchasers who had invested some of their own money. If O.M.C. lowered prices substantially or made any serious sales attempts at lower prices, that, as they were well aware, could have the effect of eroding the equity of those purchasers who might be persuaded to abandon their units back to O.M.C. as well, and O.M.C.'s position would become even more difficult.

I have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Henderson as to their realization of the delicacy of the situation they were in and their appreciation of the factors and conflicting and different interests that were involved in the situation.

I suggest the single most important factor is that in the period of roughly two years, ending at the beginning of 1979, with which I am dealing, O.M.C. did not effect one single sale of a repossessed condominium unit, although during that time, I believe that Shoreham sold over 100 units.

On all the evidence, it is clear to me that the sales efforts of O.M.C. were so minor as to have had no effect upon sales by Shoreham.

As well as considering the interests of Shoreham and the interests of the previous condominium buyers, O.M.C. had as well to consider the interests of and their duty towards the mortgagors in the units repossessed by O.M.C. and they considered as well, in my view, quite properly, the further interests represented by O.M.C. as a public body charged with the responsibility for public funds.

During the period I am dealing with, a number of units, not a large number, were listed by O.M.C. with the real estate firm of a Mr. Ross Martin. That firm was already acting as the sales agent on behalf of Shoreham and had been, I believe, since the beginning of the sales of the units in these two buildings.

Both Mrs. Henderson, I believe it was, who initially made the approach to Martin and Martin himself were concerned as to whether there would be a conflict of interest or other difficulty if Martin were to take on any sales or rentals responsibilities on behalf of O.M.C. while at the same time being the selling agent for Shoreham. Martin said he discussed this with Mr. Melchior and obtained his approval. In fact, Mr. Melchior preferred to have Martin in charge of the whole situation rather than different and obviously competing sales agents in the building but Martin said, and I accept his evidence on this, that he recognized that he had to down-play the interest of O.M.C. and he made this clear to Mrs. Henderson that his primary responsibility was to sell on behalf of Shoreham.

As I have said, no sales were effected either through him or in any other way, of the repossessed O.M.C. units. Not only during the period in question did Shoreham sell over 100 units while none of O.M.C. units were sold, but there is no evidence in this case that Shoreham sales efforts were in any way hampered by the availability for sale on the terms on which they were available of any of the repossessed O.M.C. units. There was not a word of evidence in the case about even one purchaser or potential purchaser from Shoreham who did not purchase from Shoreham or was hampered in any way or interfered with in any way in connection with the proposed purchase from Shoreham because of the fact that the repossessed units were also on the market.

I referred earlier to the fact that the O.M.C. units were available at lower interest rates than that required of Shoreham. Shoreham's interest rate was 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ %, and O.M.C. was asking or was prepared to give mortgages on its repossessed units at 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ %. There was in place as well from the summer of 1977 onwards, a provincial government interest-reduction plan which was applicable only to the sales by Shoreham and not applicable to the sales of the repossessed units by O.M.C. The interest-reduction plan was, in effect, a loan by the provincial government to potential purchasers which reduced the first year's interest from 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ % to 8%, but in the succeeding four years the interest rate gradually worked its way back up to 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ %.

Subsequent to this, the amount of the loan was to be repaid over the next period of years. There was evidence to show that in fact the purchaser might be a few dollars better off not to take the interest-reduction plan and the O.M.C. interest rate of 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ % was slightly more advantageous to a purchaser. The difference, in my view, was so small in the number of dollars that I cannot concede that it was a factor.

As well, the nature of the calculations necessary to make any comparison between the two was so sophisticated that I cannot believe that any purchaser could make that calculation or did make that calculation.

In any event, in spite of the fact that interest rates available on mortgages in connection with any possible O.M.C. sale of a repossessed unit were lower, that factor obviously had no effect on the purchasers because not one single repossessed unit was sold.

The net result is clear on all the evidence, that the minor efforts made by O.M.C. to sell the repossessed units had no effect on Shoreham's sales.

Shoreham also complains that they were being competed with by O.M.C. with respect to rentals of these units. It must be remembered that it was only because of a concession made to Shoreham by O.M.C. that Shoreham was enabled to rent the units at all, but there is another factor in this situation, that is, that commencing I believe in 1977, but certainly by 1978, Messrs. Goldman and Melchior, either personally or as principals (the evidence was not quite clear), had built another building right across the street from the two condominium buildings in question. The other building was an apartment building at 33 Falby Ct. in Ajax. Suites there were only for rent and not for sale. They came on-stream in 1977 or early in 1978. They were brand new. There may have been other advantages to them. No description of this building or the suites in it were given in evidence, but the evidence is clear that the availability of those apartment suites was an enormous competition for the renting by anybody of any suites in the two condominium buildings which were located respectively at 44 and 66 Falby Ct.

During the period in question, the plaintiff O.M.C. succeeded in renting 49 units while Shoreham succeeded in renting 105. I may not be doing justice to the argument on behalf of the defendants, but it seems to me it comes fairly close to saying that, upon the repossession by O.M.C. of the units on which the purchasers had defaulted (and it is conceded that O.M.C. had no alternative than to repossess those units), O.M.C.'s position was that they must either do nothing to market them or must market them, whether for sale or for rental, at prices or rates which would make the renting or selling impossible. What that substantially means is that the interest of the mortgagors of those repossessed units, the interest of other previous buyers of units who still retained their units, the interest of O.M.C. as mortgagee and perhaps the interest of the public in seeing good management of its money had to be subordinated to Shoreham's interests. I can see no legal ground for that proposition.

Furthermore, I do not think there is any evidence that during the time in question, there was any complaint made by Shoreham or by Messrs. Goldman or Melchior with respect to what I have found to be the minimal marketing activities of O.M.C.

The real problem seems to have been that in 1976 the market, or at least that part of it which related to condominiums in Ajax, turned extremely bad. That was certainly the evidence of Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Henderson, and Mr. Martin and Mr. Goldman. In the result, I am unable to find that this issue has been established in the evidence and it fails for want of evidence.

On this point it was argued by way of principle that there was a special relationship between Ontario Mortgage Corporation and Shoreham arising out of the particular terms of the contractual relationship between them, including not only the mortgagor-and-mortgagee relationship but including also the power of O.M.C. to set the prices at which Shoreham could sell units, set the mortgage amounts, set the interest rates on the mortgages and approve or disapprove of buyers of the units. It seems to me that it must have been in the contemplation of all parties from the beginning that events could turn out in such a way that some, whether a small or a large number of units, might be turned back because of default to Ontario Mortgage Corporation and that in that event Ontario Mortgage Corporation would seek to market them in some way; not only would seek to but would be obliged to.

I have no doubt that Shoreham and Messrs. Goldman and Melchior with all their experience had turned their minds to this possibility in the beginning, and if they did, they would have recognized at once that that could happen and that if some units were turned back to O.M.C. that it would seek to and would be obliged to market them. In other words, this should not have been in any way an unexpected situation. As I have said, I do not think there is any evidence that during the time in question they made any complaints about it.

The defendants rely also on a quotation from 5 C.E.D. (Ont. 3rd), p. 343, Section 568, an article on contracts by Mr. W. H. O. Mueller as follows:

A defendant may not rely on the plaintiff's failure to perform what would otherwise have been a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action if such performance by the plaintiff was prevented or impeded by the defendant. Equally, the plaintiff cannot complain of the defendant's failure to perform if the plaintiff's course of action prevented or rendered more difficult performance by the defendants.

The defendants rely especially upon the words "or rendered more difficult". The cases in support of this statement were not referred to me in detail. I suspect that the cases put the test on a somewhat higher basis than that.

However, as I have found, there is simply no evidence in this case that even as the test is given by Mr. Mueller that it was offended in any way by O.M.C.'s conduct in this case.

The other authority relied upon by the defendants was Malahide Developments Ltd. v. Richard Bennett Developments (Sarnia) Ltd. et al. (1982), 35 O.R. (2d) 373, 133 D.L.R. (3d) 384, 23 R.P.R. 250, and particularly a quotation from 59 C.J.S., Section 294b, at p. 376 O.R., p. 387 D.L.R. It was sought to employ that quotation in support of the proposition that the mortgagee cannot interfere with or impair the rights of the mortgagor but the quotation actually works both ways and is as follows:

"The relationship [between mortgagor and mortgagee] is such, however, that neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee may do anything with respect to the mortgaged property which will impair the rights of the other or embarrass the enforcement of those rights."

If I am at all correct in my summation of the effect of the argument of the defendants, it would have, I think, exactly that effect on the rights of the mortgagee. It would in effect deny the mortgagee its right under the mortgage as a lender.

I turn now to the second principal submission that I want to deal with and that was the defence that the plaintiff failed to mitigate its loss. This submission arises in this way. The defendants say that in September of 1978, an oral proposal was made by Mr. Goldman on behalf of the defendants to an official at O.M.C., Mr. McAllister, to the effect that Mr. Goldman and Mr. Melchior be allowed to purchase the remaining unsold 93 units. This conversation took place, it will be seen, just before the defendants defaulted on the payments on the mortgage on those remaining 93 units.

The proposal ran further that, on such a sale to Mr. Melchior and Mr. Goldman, the interest rates on the mortgage financing further be reduced to 8% from 10 1/4%. They would then be able to rent them out or do what they wanted with them and it appears from the evidence that one of the things that may have been in their minds was the highly successful programme of renting the apartments that were then being rented across the street in their own building at 33 Falby.

A somewhat similar proposal had been made by Mr. Goldman about a year earlier and then withdrawn because of tax considerations.

In the September, 1978 proposal no more details were given nor discussed such as, for example, the terms of the mortgage with respect to the proposal that the interest rate be reduced to 8% from 10 1/4%. I believe Mr. Goldman first said that he and the other defendants were not to be released from their covenant as to the 10 1/4%. Subsequently, he said that they were to be released, and that in fact O.M.C. was to suffer the loss of two and a quarter points of interest. I think the latter evidence is correct and I accept that as the truth. Only that proposal makes any sense.

For one thing, Mr. Goldman compared the situation at 44 and 66 Falby, where the condominiums were, to the situation at 33 Falby, where he said they had obtained mortgage financing from the Ontario government, whether through O.M.C. itself or from some other source I am not clear, but it was government money and it was at 8% and at 8% financing they could break even on the rentals at 33 Falby.

It seems to me, accordingly, that it would be an essential part of his proposition to O.M.C. in September, 1978, that O.M.C. abandon the 10 1/4% interest rate and reduce it to 8% and give up the difference.

Mr. Goldman also went on to say that with respect to the 8% interest rate, he proposed that could be done by either discharging the existing mortgage on the 93 units and placing a new mortgage at 8% interest, or by an amendment to the existing mortgage, so I do find without any hesitation that reduction in the interest rate from 10 1/4% to 8% was part of the proposal made verbally by Mr. Goldman in the fall of 1978. There is no record of that proposal ever going to the board of O.M.C. and I find that it did not go to the board.

There was evidence that the board's policy is that proposals to be made to the corporation should be made in writing. It is clear from the evidence that this proposal was never made in writing but remained entirely oral and I conclude that it remained no more than the broaching by Mr. Goldman of a matter which was in the discussion stage only. It is not fleshed out with all the details and ramifications and I am confident that it was discouraged by the official to whom he spoke and that may well have been the reason why it was never put in writing.

It is, I think, significant that within a few days or at most a few weeks after the date of that discussion by Mr. Goldman with Mr. McAllister, the defendants defaulted on the remaining 93 mortgages.

However, the story continues. In February, 1979, just a few months later and about a month after O.M.C. had completed its take-over of the 93 units as a result of the default in payment by the defendants on the mortgage on those units, Mr. Goldman again spoke to an official of O.M.C., this time Mrs. Henderson, and this was by telephone although the previous discussion had, I believe, been face to face with Mr. McAllister. The point of the call was the same as the discussion with Mr. McAllister. It seems hardly likely that a man of Mr. Goldman's astuteness and familiarity with dealing with government bodies would have made the same proposal to Mrs. Henderson in February if he knew or believed that the similar proposal he had made earlier to Mr. McAllister had gone to and been turned down by the O.M.C. board.

Mrs. Henderson, in February, discouraged Mr. Goldman but as he acknowledged could not turn him down because she did not have, and he obviously knew she did not have, the authority to do that. Nevertheless, Mrs. Henderson says that a few days later on February 13, 1979, Mr. Goldman called her again and said that she should forget his previous proposal and that they, and I assume that meant Shoreham and himself and Mr. Melchior, had already invested $2,000,000 in the project and did not want to put any more money into it and O.M.C. should get on as quickly as possible with the sales of the 93 units they have just taken over. As I say, evidence of that call came from Mrs. Henderson.

Mr. Goldman when asked about it, did not deny that conversation, but said that he could not remember it.

I have no hesitation in accepting Mrs. Henderson's evidence on this point. I find that such a call did take place and on the terms as she recounted it in her evidence.

So in the end, it is apparent that all that occurred was an oral, rather informal, only partly-worked-out suggestion made several times without encouragement from anyone at O.M.C. The suggestion was not pursued by Mr. Goldman and in February, 1979, was in fact withdrawn by him.

Accordingly, apart from anything else, on the facts of this case, the proof is woefully lacking of any offer made by the defendants such that a refusal could be treated as a failure by the plaintiff to mitigate. No real offer was made at all. There was no refusal. It was never put in a form in which it could be considered by Ontario Mortgage Corporation. There was simply a lack of pursuit of it by the defendants and the ultimate withdrawal of it. On such an evidentiary basis, it is probably unnecessary to canvass the legal arguments that were made but it may be useful to refer very briefly to one or two.

Reliance was placed in connection with this submission on para. 7B of an agreement that was entered as ex. 6. It was an agreement between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Ontario as represented by the Minister of Housing of the Province of Ontario and Satterthwaite Developments Limited. That is a new name in this story but it appears that for all practical purposes in this case Satterthwaite became and may be considered in exactly the same position as Shoreham Apartments Limited. The agreement had been made in November, 1974, shortly before the mortgage commitment earlier referred to was issued by O.M.C. to Shoreham and it was an agreement with respect to development of the property in question in Ajax.

The developer who owned the land was to proceed with getting things ready to build. The agreement created a condition that the units to be built should be sold to persons who met the 30% guideline, that is, a 30% maximum of the household income of the purchaser such that the principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30% of that income, and the developer agreed to abide by resale restrictions to be imposed by Ontario Mortgage Corporation. The Minister covenanted to expedite the matter of the construction and necessary approvals so far as he could; and then we come to para. 7B by which it is agreed by the Minister that if there should be any significant or substantial change in or affecting the construction industry or a lowering of demand in the region for housing units of the nature contemplated for erection under this agreement, the Minister would, upon the application in good faith of the developer, review the obligations imposed on the developer and might make such readjustments in the minimum requirements as would be just and equitable in the circumstances.

That clause was relied upon by the defendants in connection with the issue with which I am now dealing.

First, that agreement is with the Minister and not Ontario Mortgage Corporation. Notwithstanding the fact that O.M.C. is a company which may be considered a lending arm of the Ministry of Housing for purposes of assisting certain kinds of housing, I think it is beyond question that the Minister and the corporation are different legal entities.

Secondly, it is to be observed that no application was made by the developer to the Minister. Even if the proposal made by Mr. Goldman in September, 1978, were to be considered an application within the meaning of para. 7B of the agreement, that paragraph does not impose any obligation on the Minister to accede to any proposal that might be made for an alteration by the developer. We know that O.M.C. had already made a number of concessions during the course of Shoreham's marketing efforts to make it easier for Shoreham to market their units and that in doing so, O.M.C. had relaxed many of the restrictions that had been contractually imposed upon Shoreham. The evidence does not establish that the proposal would necessarily have resulted in any mitigating or lessening of the amount of the claim of the plaintiff O.M.C. Finally, I think that in the rather vague terms in which it was made, it is very like an offer to settle a dispute. I do not think anyone is bound to accept any offer to settle.

It may be useful in this connection to refer to one of the cases mentioned in argument, Strutt v. Whitnell et al., [1975] 1 W.L.R. 870, a decision of the English Court of Appeal dealing with a rather similar situation. I refer to the short judgment of Mr. Justice MacKenna and as well to the following quotation from Lord Justice Lawton at p. 874. Referring to the facts of the Strutt case where there had been a breach of a condition by the defendant, a dispute arose, and the defendant who was a tenant of the premises, wishing to behave in a friendly way, made an offer to the plaintiff:

He could have accepted that offer and had he done so he would have got his money back. On the other hand, the law gave him a remedy. He could keep the house and sue for damages. The problem seems to me to be this: if the law gives a man remedy can he be said to have acted unreasonably in relation to mitigation of damage if he elects to keep that remedy rather than accept another remedy offered to him by the party in default?

I can find no merit in the argument that because the Minister was lending money at 8% for the project at 33 Falby, that there was any obligation whatever upon him in order to mitigate his damage to accept the suggestion made by Mr. Goldman on behalf of the defendants.

I turn now to the third main submission. It arises from the period after default by Shoreham on October 1, 1978, and the taking over of the 93 units by the plaintiff as of January 3, 1979, and it relates to the reasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct in effecting the disposition of those 93 units.

The defendants say that the plaintiff, O.M.C., asked prices which were too high, that as a result sales were delayed, and that the defendants have suffered because of that delay.

As I have earlier said, all the witnesses agreed that the market for condominiums pretty well dried up in 1976 and I accept the evidence of Mr. Martin and, I believe, of Mrs. Henderson that there was no substantial improvement in the market until nearly 1981, although it appears that some time in 1980, a turn in the market was at least signalled. What the plaintiff did after obtaining the 93 units was to hire a real estate agent to market the units and that listing was in effect, I believe, until September, 1979, but nothing could be sold, not one single unit.

In order to get some revenue, O.M.C. began to rent the units and, I believe, succeeded in renting many of them and getting some revenue in that way, but as far as sales were concerned in 1979 and throughout most of 1980, I am satisfied that there was simply no market whatever for condominium housing in that area. I accept Mrs. Henderson's evidence on this point.

A suggestion was made that prices should be lowered drastically from the $40,000 range to $35,000, for example. It is contained in a memorandum of a conversation, a memorandum made by Mrs. Henderson as a result of what was said by a real estate agent. That, of course, is nothing but hearsay. I would not be prepared to act on such a flimsy basis as that because there is no other suggestion to the same effect in the evidence.

It is significant that the same agent in the same conversation recorded in the same exhibit, which I think is ex. 8, goes on to say that he is not at all confident that sales would be effected at even $35,000.

Mrs. Henderson said, and I accept this evidence, that it would have been wrong for O.M.C. to set an entirely new price in the market of $35,000 or anything like it when sales on record for comparable properties were in the $40,000 range and slightly up from there.

If O.M.C. had reduced its price to $35,000, it would have made itself a market leader and would have changed the market. As it was, there were no comparable sales to justify such a low market price and that is so because nothing was selling. I am quite satisfied that O.M.C., through its officials, acted in an entirely reasonable and responsible way in its handling of this aspect of the matter and that the defendants have no ground of complaint.

The officials at Ontario Mortgage Corporation were concerned not to upset the market, that is, were concerned to try to get a good price. It was a difficult situation and an exceedingly difficult market. They were left in a very difficult position by the default of the mortgagors. They did not act unreasonably and in fact acted very reasonably in my opinion.

They had on their hands not just one property, but 93 separate properties to be marketed and obviously that presented a much more difficult task than simply the marketing of a single property.

I think one can readily anticipate the protests that might be raised by the defendants if the plaintiff had in January, 1979, or shortly thereafter, embarked on a programme of simply lowering prices on the 93 units until they reached a level at which someone would buy and had done so simply in order to get quick sales.

It was a situation, of course, where there were great difficulties. It would be easy to make mistakes but, in my view, it was handled in a way that cannot be criticized.

One thing that might well have happened if prices had been lowered substantially by O.M.C., would have been to undercut the equity in the units by the other owners of units in the condominiums and such an act might well have triggered further defaults from those owners, thus turning more units back on to O.M.C. hands. It seems to me that was a legitimate consideration in this situation.

Additionally, there is no evidence that lowering prices would have indeed effected any sales. In my view, on the evidence in this case, it is entirely speculative to say that if O.M.C. had lowered the prices drastically in order to achieve sales that they would have in any way reduced the claim of O.M.C. as asserted in this action.

I do not think that any useful purpose is served by referring in any detail to the numerous authorities as to the duty of a mortgagee. In my view, the evidence is perfectly clear that no complaint can be made of the conduct of O.M.C. and its officials in the considerations which they took into account in dealing with this difficult matter.

The next issue arises out of what has been referred to in the argument as the guarantee clause. In the commitment given to the defendants by O.M.C., the commitment which is to be found at Tab 3 of ex. 1 in the record, there is a provision as follows:

... the mortgagor shall pay the following (a) a fee of one percent of the mortgage amount to Ontario Housing Corporation in order that they might act as guarantor of the mortgage ...

So far as the facts are concerned, Ontario Mortgage Corporation deducted from its advance to the defendants 1%, representing that fee. That amount of money, something over $152,000 was not in fact paid by Ontario Mortgage Corporation to Ontario Housing Corporation, for it appears that just about the time that this commitment was given, perhaps only shortly before it, the guarantee fund that had been maintained up to that time by O.H.C. was transferred and its administration handed over to O.M.C. I do not think that is a difference of any substance whatever.

The fund consisted of the 1% contribution from other projects as well as the 1% contribution from this one. It appears to be a form of self-insurance in case of insufficiency of the security taken for a particular transaction. On these facts, the defendants argue, I think, that there was no guarantee at all and that it should be taken -- I think the argument is this -- that there was no guarantee at all in accordance with the terms of that clause and that $152,000 representing the 1% should be used to reduce the claim made by the plaintiff in this action against the defendants.

It seems to me that the real point in issue is this: is the 1% guarantee for the benefit of Ontario Mortgage Corporation or is it for the benefit of the defendants? It seems to me beyond argument that it is a guarantee for the benefit of Ontario Mortgage Corporation. It is a guarantee for their benefit paid for, no doubt, by the defendants without the payment of which there would simply have been no mortgage loan. The defendants, as I have already observed, were not inexperienced in dealing with a government-financed project, whether through the provincial government or the federal government, in which fees of this kind are, it appears from the evidence, not uncommon, but the real point is that that was not a guarantee for the benefit of the borrowers nor designed to relieve them of their liability in any way. It was an additional guarantee for the benefit of the lender.

That being so, it appears to me that the defendants have no ground of complaint about it at all.

It is, in my view, not at all like the example given in argument, namely, that if a person orders a blue coat from a store and the store sends him a red coat, the store is not giving him what he contracted for, and that he has not received what he paid for and is entitled to have his money back. I am afraid I am unable to see any parallel between that situation and the present one.

I turn now to the next argument. It is necessary to refer to certain additional facts. As we know, on the 93 units mortgaged between the defendants and O.M.C., the interest rate was 101/4%. After repossession of those 93 units and in the course of reselling those units in some instances, though not in all, O.M.C. took back mortgages at interest rates higher than 101/4%, ranging as high as 14%. The amount involved in the difference was calculated, although I think not accurately, as running as high as $89,791.05. That is to be found in ex. 18. The amount of the interest differential between 101/4% and the particular interest rates obtained from purchasers of the 93 units, is there calculated as requested by the defence, on the basis that no principal payments are made or have been made on those mortgages at any time up to the present, and that, I think, is not in accord with the facts. Accordingly, the amount is not a correct one.

The defendants rely on this point on the case of Sun Life Ass'ce Co. of Canada v. George Coles Ltd. et al., [1952] O.W.N. 677, in which the principle is stated that where a mortgagee has sold under a power of sale, the mortgagor is entitled to credit for what the mortgagee actually receives on the sale under the power of sale. It was applied in that case with the effect that the mortgagor was not entitled to credit for the full face value of the mortgage taken back on the sale under the power of sale but was entitled only to credit for so much of the mortgage as had in fact been paid, plus any cash paid.

In the present case, most of the sales of the 93 units involved substantial mortgages, for as much as 80% or 90% of the sale prices. If I understand the defendant's argument correctly, they only want a part of the principle laid down in the Sun Life case to be applied to this one. They wanted it applied so that they can get credit for the actual interest payments received at the higher rates than 101/4%, but they do not want to give up the credit they have been given in the plaintiff's calculation of its claim for the full face value of those substantial mortgages.

If the Sun Life case were to be applied, it seems to me it would have to be applied in whole. For example, assume on a sale of $33,000 or $34,000, and a $31,500 mortgage. What has happened, and the way the plaintiff has calculated its claim in this case, is to give credit for the full face value of the $31,500 as if it had been received by the plaintiff. If the Sun Life case were to be applied, in place of the credit of $31,500, the plaintiff would be required only to give credit for the amount of the principal already received and bearing in mind that the mortgages in question are five-year mortgages but amortized at 35 years, one can expect that very, very little of the principal has been repaid up to this time. The result would be to increase the plaintiff's claim by something in the order of $30,000 for each of the 93 units. I make that to work out to something like two and three-quarter million dollars, and that seems hardly a fair exchange for the defendants against a claim of $89,000.

It seems to me that if there were a recalculation on that basis, any judgment that the plaintiff would be entitled to would be enormously larger and I think it would have to be paid by the defendants before they would be entitled to call for payment to them of any future mortgage payments of principal or interest made by the buyers of the units. I have some difficulty in understanding why this argument was ever made.

I think that disposes of all the arguments that were made and, in my view, all of them fail.

I should perhaps note that a couple of other issues that appeared to be raised during the trial were not addressed in argument and I treat them as abandoned. One related to whether there was or was not delay by O.M.C. in approving purchasers of the units from Shoreham, that is, that in dealing with those approvals, O.M.C. was overly technical. I take it to be abandoned.

The second point related to the government interest-reduction programme which I referred to earlier. This too was not mentioned in argument.

In the result, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment as asked, subject only to the counterclaim which I now turn to briefly.

As I said earlier, the counterclaim is for $891,022. That figure is to be found in the auditor's statement which I believe was ex. 14. However, I think I need to observe that that document was put in evidence as a document received by the defendants from their auditors and, in my view, is a document that has not been proved in evidence so far as the correctness of it is concerned. No accountant was called as a witness to substantiate it.

It is true that the witness Mr. Goldman is obviously knowledgeable in financial matters, but it is quite apparent from his evidence that he could not explain how the figures were arrived at. Indeed, he thought the amount he and his co-defendants were claiming for in this action was in the order of $1,300,000 and not merely $891,000. At the end of his evidence I think it added up to this: he trusts his auditors and because the financial statement puts the figure at $891,000 then he says that must be the right figure.

While there is no reason why he should not have faith in his auditors who are well known and reliable auditors, that does not prove the content of the financial statement.

In addition to that, he said the basis for the counterclaim was this: that the Ministry of Housing through its Ontario Housing Action Plan held the view in 1974 that in Ajax there was a demand for condominiums for low- and moderate-income people, that that belief on the part of the Ministry or O.H.A.P. induced him and his co-defendants into proceeding with the development of the condominiums at 44 and 66 Falby Ct.

The development, as we know, proceeded almost entirely on government money. It then turned out in 1976 and later that whatever forecasts the government had were wrong as to the market; that as a result of that error Mr. Goldman and his co-defendants lost money and ought to be reimbursed for that loss because of the negligence of the government in its view of the market for condominiums in Ajax.

To state that proposition, I think, is to reveal its flaws. Mr. Goldman and his co-defendants were not forced in any way to proceed with the development. They were the developers of the development, they did so willingly and are extremely experienced and I am sure they know full well the risks that a developer takes. A developer is the primary risk-taker. The lender in this case, Ontario Mortgage Corporation, while it also takes a risk as most lenders do, is not the primary risk-taker. The lender puts up money so that somebody else will take the risk. The lender requires security for its loan. If it is not satisfied with the security available, it does not make the loan but, nevertheless, it is not the primary risk-taker.

If the project were profitable I do not think anyone would suggest that the lender, in the absence of specific contractual provisions to this effect, should share in the benefit. That all goes to the developer. The lender only gets his money back.

It seems to me it follows as the night the day that where, in a situation such as this, the developer loses money, that does not impair the lender's right to get its money back. It is unfortunate the way things turned out in this Ajax matter, unfortunate for everyone, but I can see no ground for the counterclaim. The amount of it fails for want of proof. The claim fails for want of merit and must be dismissed.

I think, gentlemen, at long last I have come to the end of the road. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment as asked, as I indicated at the beginning of these reasons, and the counterclaim must be dismissed.

[Discussion re costs]

I have endorsed the record in the action by Ontario Mortgage Corporation against Shoreham et al., for oral reasons, judgment for the plaintiff for $1,379,013.86 plus a further $10,800.99 and prejudgment interest of $292,699.03 and $22,848.34 together with costs on a solicitor-and-client basis: and on the other record, action dismissed with costs on a solicitor-and-client basis.

Thank you very much, gentlemen.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Re Canada Mortgage & Housing Corp. and York Condominium Corp. No. 46

31 O.R. (2d) 514 119 D.L.R. (3d) 423

ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF YORK BORINS CO. CT. J. 20TH JANUARY 1981.

APPLICATION to appoint a receiver and manager of a condominium.

W. R. Passi and J. R. Varley, for applicant.

D. A. Potts, for respondent.

BORINS CO. CT. J.:-- This is an application by Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation (referred to subsequently as CMHC) pursuant to the Condominium Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 84, s. 49(1), for an order appointing a receiver and manager of York Condominium Corporation No. 46 (referred to subsequently as the Condominium Corporation) and directing the receiver and manager to comply with certain outstanding work orders issued by the City of North York and to cause the implementation of security measures at the site of the condominium property.

The respondent has raised a preliminary objection directed to the power of the Court to grant the relief sought by the applicant. Objections have also been raised to the jurisdiction of the County Court to appoint a receiver and manager and to the procedure followed by the applicant. The application was not argued on its merits.

For the purpose of deciding the issues raised by the respondent I accept as accurate the following evidence disclosed by the affidavit material filed on behalf of CMHC, no material having been filed by the respondent. The Condominium Corporation is composed of 88 townhouses, 656 apartment units and a small commercial and recreational area. CMHC owns 92 units, holds first mortgages on approximately 600 units and has commenced foreclosure and sale proceedings with respect to 35 units. Since the summer of 1980, the board of directors of the Condominium Corporation has been deadlocked and has been unable to decide what course of action should be taken with respect to certain major difficulties and problems of the Condominium Corporation. A serious health and safety hazard to the unit holders of the Condominium Corporation exists, inter alia, as a result of many repairs required to the property and which are particularized in several work orders issued by the City of North York in September, 1980, the entry upon the property by trespassers and resulting vandalism, criminal behaviour taking place on the property and racial conflicts. Considerable difficulty exists in collecting payment from unit holders with respect to the common area expenses which has been a cause of the lack of repairs to the common areas and has also resulted in numerous foreclosure and sale proceedings being conducted by secured parties. The property manager of the Condominium Corporation, Montreal Trust Company, resigned as of December 31, 1980, because lack of direction from the board of directors and insufficient funds prevented it from carrying on any meaningful or constructive management of the Condominium Corporation. Because the board of directors has been unable or unwilling to institute appropriate means to make the necessary repairs to the common elements and to implement security measures, CMHC seeks the appointment of a receiver and manager to carry out the duties of the board.

Section 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978, pursuant to which this application is made, reads as follows:

49(1) Where a duty imposed by this Act, the declaration, the by-laws or the rules is not performed, the corporation, any owner, the bureau, or any person having a registered mortgage against a unit and common interest, may apply to the county or district court for an order directing the performance of the duty.

(2) The court may by order direct performance of the duty and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

It is the submission of counsel on behalf of CMHC that the language of s-s. (2) is sufficiently broad to empower the Court to appoint a receiver and manager. It is submitted that if the Court should find that the board of directors is in breach of a duty and order the board to perform the duty, the Court may, as ancillary to such an order and to ensure its compliance, appoint a receiver and manager who would assume the control and management of the Condominium Corporation and, in particular, see to the repairs required by the work orders and the implementation of the needed security measures.

In my view, this submission is incorrect. I base this conclusion on two related grounds. First, the procedure provided by s. 49(1) for the obtaining of an order that the appropriate person perform a duty imposed by the Act or the declaration, by-law or rules of a corporation is summary in nature and is not intended to encompass the usual full and complete inquiry that is required when proceedings are taken to appoint a receiver and manager. Second, s. 18, para. 1 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 228, which provides the remedy of the appointment of a receiver and manager, together with s. 19(1) of that Act which empowers the Court to appoint an interim receiver upon an interlocutory application, clearly contemplate a controversy between the parties which has become the subject-matter of an action between them.

Dealing with the first ground, the words "and may include in the order any provisions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances" in s. 49(2) of the Condominium Act, 1978 are not to be interpreted as importing into the Act the power to appoint some person, in the capacity of a receiver and manager, to assume the duties of the corporation. As I will explain, the appointment of a receiver and manager is a serious step and will not be made unless well-established criteria have been met. The Act creates a corporation to manage the property and any assets of the corporation through a board of directors. By s. 12(2) and (3) the duties of the corporation are declared to be the control, management and administration of the common elements and assets of the condominium corporation and the responsibility to require the unit owners to comply with the declaration, by-laws and rules of the corporation. By s. 12(4) the declaration and by-laws may impose further duties upon the corporation. Section 31(1) provides that every unit owner is bound by and shall comply with the Act and the declaration, by-laws and rules of the corporation. Section 32(1) imposes a duty on every unit holder to contribute toward the common expenses of the corporation. It is in regard to the performance of the duties of the corporation and the unit owners that s. 49(1) is directed. This legislation is analogous to the procedure contained in Part IV of the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 236, as amended, and is intended to provide a summary, expeditious and inexpensive procedure for the enforcement of the statutory and contractual duties of condominium corporations and unit holders. Were it the intention of the Legislature to empower the Court to appoint a receiver and manager to perform the duties of the board of directors, express legislation to that effect would have been enacted. Indeed, it would seem that the Legislature did consider the appropriate remedy to be applied in the situation of an ineffective board of directors in s. 46 which empowers the Court to terminate the government of the property.

The analysis of my second ground provides further support for the conclusion that s. 49(2) is not to be interpreted to include the relief sought in this application. That the appointment of a receiver and manager requires that there be a lis between parties is clear when one considers what, in law, are the duties and responsibilities of a receiver which are succinctly described by Williston and Rolls, The Law of Civil Procedure (1970), vol. 2, p. 618:

A receiver is an impartial person appointed by the court to collect and receive, pending the proceedings, the rents, issues and profits of land, or personal estate or other things in question, which it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should collect or receive, or where a party is incompetent to do so, as in the case of an infant. A receiver can only properly be granted for the purpose of getting in and holding or securing funds or other property which the court at the trial, or in the course of the action, will have the means of distributing amongst, or making over to, the persons or person entitled thereto. In essence, receivers are appointed on interlocutory application to preserve property until the rights of persons alleging an interest therein have been determined.

Where the powers of the person appointed extend to both that of receiver and manager, the appointee must carry on or superintend a trade, business or undertaking in addition to receiving rents and profits and has power to deal with the property and to appropriate the proceeds in a proper manner. "A receiver [and manager] is an officer of the court appointed to discharge the duties prescribed by the order appointing him, and thus represents neither the plaintiff nor the defendant": Williston and Rolls, supra, at p. 619. Since it is the role of a receiver to preserve property until the rights of those alleging an interest in it have been determined it follows that there is no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver upon an originating application: Re Imperial Steel Corp. Ltd.; Watson v. Imperial Steel Corp. Ltd. (1925), 28 O.W.N. 242; affirmed [1925] S.C.R. 703, [1925] 4 D.L.R. 1080. As the appointment of a receiver and manager is a special remedy with respect to which well-established procedure exists and which is available only in certain well-defined situations it was not the intention of the Legislature to empower the Court to make such an appointment pursuant to an application under s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978. I express no view, of course, whether on the materials before me the appointment of a receiver and manager would be justified.

Since I am of the view that no power exists to appoint a receiver and manager on an application brought pursuant to s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978 the respondent must succeed upon its preliminary objection. CMHC, of course, is not without a remedy. While it is prevented from seeking it by way of summary application, it may do so by commencing an appropriate action: cf. National Trust Co. Ltd. v. Yellowvest Holdings Ltd. et al. (1979), 24 O.R. (2d) 11, 98 D.L.R. (3d) 189; 80 Wellesley St. East Ltd. v. Fundy Bay Builders Ltd. et al., [1972] 2 O.R. 280, 25 D.L.R. (3d) 386.

Because of the conclusion I have reached it is unnecessary to deal with the other grounds relied upon by the respondent. However, in my opinion they merit some comment. Assuming that the Court could have appointed a receiver and manager under s. 49(1) of the Act, the respondent is incorrect in submitting that the County Court lacks jurisdiction to do so. It is clear, since the decision of the Court of Appeal in Queensway Iron Works Ltd. v. Barlin Construction Ltd. et al., June 17, 1980, unreported [since reported 29 O.R. (2d) 586, 113 D.L.R. (3d) 748], that the County Court possesses jurisdiction to grant equitable relief where the subject-matter in regard to which the relief is claimed does not exceed the monetary limit of the Court and also in cases where it does and the defendant does not dispute the Court's jurisdiction. In any event, it is my view that where a statute expressly grants jurisdiction to the County Court in regard to a particular subject-matter, such jurisdiction is in addition to the subject-matter and monetary jurisdiction vested in the Court by s. 14(1) of the County Courts Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 94: e.g., the Family Law Reform Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 2, s. 1(c), and Askin v. Askin, December 9, 1980, per Walsh J., unreported [since reported 31 O.R. (2d) 252]. If a receiver and manager could have been appointed by the County Court pursuant to s. 49(1) of the Condominium Act, 1978 jurisdiction to do so would have been provided by the statute and not by s. 14(1) of the County Courts Act.

The third ground relied upon by the respondent is well taken. Once again assuming that the Court could have appointed a receiver and manager under s. 49(1) of the Act, the respondent is correct in its submission that the application should have been commenced by way of originating notice and not by way of an ordinary notice of motion. Since s. 49(1) in providing for an application to the Court does not specify the manner of bringing the application, it follows that it should be by originating notice: Rule 11.

In the result, therefore, the application is dismissed with costs to the respondent.

Application dismissed.

Credit Valley Cable TV/FM Ltd. v. Peel Condominium Corp. #95 et al; Carbondale Holdings Ltd. et al., Third Parties

27 O.R. (2d) 433 107 D.L.R. (3d) 266

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE GRANGE, J. 29TH FEBRUARY 1980.

ACTION for damages and for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of a television cable system.

I. T. Bern and P. Israel, for plaintiff.

I. G. Scott, Q.C., D. A. Potts and M. A. Spears, Q.C., for defendant, Peel Condominium Corporation #95.

D. K. Laidlaw, Q.C., and W. J. Cornwall, for defendant, All- View Interphase Systems Inc.

J. E. Markson, for third parties, Carbondale Holdings Limited and Southdown Builders Limited.

GRANGE, J.:-- The plaintiff is the successor of Terra Communications Limited (Terra) and is a supplier of cable television service which it describes as Community Antenna Cable Television Services (CATV). The defendant Peel Condominium Corporation #95 (Peel or the Condominium Corporation) is a company incorporated under the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, to manage an apartment building at 966 Inverhouse Dr. in Mississauga. The defendant All-View Interphase Systems Inc. (All-View) supplies in the City of Mississauga and elsewhere, Master Antenna Television Systems (MATV). This action is essentially one for trespass by the defendants upon the cable and auxiliary equipment installed by or for Terra upon the premises at 966 Inverhouse Dr.

I should first describe the difference in the two systems -- CATV and MATV -- of Terra and All-View respectively. They are both designed to transmit television signals not ordinarily received by a television set. The CATV system performs the task by picking up the signals at a central point in the area and conveying them by cable to dwellings or apartment houses in the area. There is only one CATV company licensed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) in any particular area and Terra was licensee for that area required by the terms of its licence to provide cable television to anyone in the area seeking it. The MATV system which is not controlled by CRTC operates by installing a large antenna capable of receiving high frequency signals on top of the particular building and then conveying those signals by cable through the roof to the individual units.

In April, 1974, before the Condominium Corporation came into existence, Terra entered into an agreement with the developer of the project in pursuance of which it installed cable in the building which cable was connected to its master receiving station all in preparation to connecting to the unit occupiers' television sets once those units were sold and their owners subscribed for the service. In April, 1976, the declaration was registered creating the Condominium Corporation. On March 17, 1977, Peel entered into an agreement with All-View for the supply of an MATV system to the building. On June 3, 1977, Peel gave authority to All-View to hook up its system to the system installed by Terra. Thereafter Terra's system was disconnected and All-View's connected with a part of Terra's and Terra forbidden access to the building. On June 10 and 14, 1977, ex parte and interlocutory injunctions respectively were obtained providing that Terra be permitted access to the building, requiring All-View to reconnect Terra's equipment and prohibiting All-View from using the Terra system. The interlocutory injunction remains in force.

There will of necessity be further reference to the facts but that recitation is sufficient to delineate the issue. The plaintiff claims that the action of All-View with the permission and encouragement of Peel amounted to a trespass to and a conversion of its property. The defendants say the cable system became a fixture upon its installation, that there was no registration of any reservation of title and that the unit owners being, under the Condominium Act, the owners as well of the common areas became the owners of the system and could do with it as they wished.

It seems to me that the factual areas that must be considered in greater detail to resolve the case can be divided into three questions as follows:

1. What is the nature of the cable and equipment and its installation?
2. What was the contractual position between or affecting the parties?
3. What were the circumstances leading up to the defendant All- View's use of the existing cable television equipment?

Dealing with these areas in turn the facts are these:

The cable and equipment

As I have stated in a CATV system the signal is received by the cable company at a point -- in this case there is a receiving station at the mouth of the Credit River -- is processed and then passes through trunk cable carried on the poles of Hydro or Bell Telephone (or in trenches if the utility wire is underground) with amplifiers to step up the power about three in every mile. As the cable passes each street a "distribution cable" is carried off the trunk cable and as the trunk or distribution cable passes the house or building of a subscriber, a "drop off" cable is carried in a house directly to the television set or in an apartment building to the telephone utility room with a further drop cable to the individual unit. The purpose of the system is to provide reception of the higher frequency signals which cannot be received unaided by a television set. The cable can be laid outside the building or inside along the walls but it is obviously desirable in an apartment building where possible to lay it during the course of construction when it can be incorporated into the walls of the building and that as we shall see was what was done here.

The actual installation was done for Terra by North Park Electronics Limited in April, 1974. Their installer went to the basement of the building and found the plaintiff's cable where it entered the building. He believed it had come in through a Bell Canada conduit. He attached it to a cable known as "412A" (for .412 diameter), attached that cable to the wall and then carried it to the seventh floor through an aluminum conduit built into the wall by the electrical contractor. At the seventh floor the conduit led into a closet. There the wire was led out of the conduit into a metal housing box and out again up to the 17th floor (the top floor) through another conduit also installed by the electrical contractor, again into an electrical closet, and again into a metal housing

box. Associated with each of these boxes were amplifiers, "splitters" and "multi-taps" and from the boxes wires known as "59 cable" again passing through conduits installed by the electrical contractor led to the different suites of the building. In the suites the wire led to a wall plate and from there to the television set. All the conduits were installed in the concrete wall, the metal housing boxes were bolted to the wall and had a door with a lock and the wall plates were attached by screws. The keys to the housing boxes were turned over to Terra and remained in its possession at all relevant times. All service of the system was effected by Terra.

As will be seen, it was not difficult to remove the wall plates, the amplifiers, multi-taps and splitters, but the removal of the cable is much more difficult, requiring much time and patience and with considerable potential damage to the cable. I think the evidence is clear that the plaintiff expected its equipment to remain in the building once installed, subject, of course, to replacement when necessary, and to service by Terra when necessary. I think it equally clear that the plaintiff would not of its own volition leave the cable and other equipment for a competitor but in actual fact it was never put to the test. This was the only time it has lost or been threatened with the loss of all the subscribers in an apartment building.

The contract

The actual owner of the building (prior to becoming a condominium) was a company known as Southdown Builders Limited, a third party in this action, but that company appeared to use another company, Carbondale Holdings Limited, also a third party, as its instrument in dealing with the trades. The two companies were interlinked both having as shareholders and directors the brothers Arthur and Albert Levman. The evidence as to the relationship of the two companies came only from the examination for discovery of the Messrs. Levman representing one or other of the companies, so I am not sure that it is binding upon the defendants, but that evidence clearly established to me that Carbondale was the alter ego or agent of Southdown. Indeed I doubt if either of the principals knew at any given time which company they were representing and both companies were represented at the trial by the same counsel.

In any event Terra was informed in April, 1974, when it first sought permission to introduce cable into the building, then in the first stages of construction, that Carbondale was the owner of the building and was not disabused by either Carbondale or Southdown. It therefore entered into a letter agreement with Carbondale. As it is the fundamental document governing this action, it is here reproduced in full.

Terra Communications Limited 2540 Hurontario St., Mississauga, L5B 1N5 Telephone 270-2424.

April 22, 1974 Carbondale Holdings Ltd. 412 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ontario.

Gentlemen:

It is our understanding that your Company has elected to make television service available to your Inverhouse Apartment Development, by way of providing us with an exclusive right to provide cable television service to the tenants or residents on a direct basis. That is you agree not to install an antenna or MATV system at any time within the development.

On the basis of this understanding our Company will proceed to wire the buildings for cable service at our cost. We will retain ownership in the television system within the buildings and will provide the service to the residents on a direct basis at our authorized service rates.

We would appreciate you signing this letter of agreement and returning one copy at your earliest convenience so that the wiring may be completed promptly.

Sincerely,

"D.L. Morrison",

D.L. Morrison, Marketing Supervisor.

"A. Levman" Carbondale Holdings Ltd.

I should here remark that the first paragraph seems to be in restraint of trade and no doubt for that reason the plaintiff did not seek to enforce its "exclusive right to provide CATV in the building" in this action. The ownership of the system is, however, stoutly maintained and is the basis of the action. I should also point out that the reference "on a direct basis" meant that each unit owner would be approached directly by Terra and would become or not a direct subscriber. Terra would have preferred a bulk agreement wherein the whole building became a subscriber with one bill monthly (at a lower rate per unit and permitting the switching on of the current for all suites at one time) but that agreement for this building was not forthcoming.

The circumstances leading to the action

Pursuant to the agreement with Carbondale, Terra proceeded to the installation of the cable and equipment in the manner I have described. As the agreement called for individual service rather than bulk service, it then proceeded to solicit custom from the occupants as they bought and moved into the units and by October, 1976, had signed up about 130 out of a possible 198. The forms of individual contract contained a clause as follows:

It is understood that the ownership of all cable and equipment for the transmission of the television signal, up to and including the matching device connection to the Subscriber's receiver, shall be and remain in the Company [Terra].

In the meantime, as I have said, Southdown in April, 1976, registered the condominium declaration. The first directors included the Messrs. Levman and their lawyers, but in July, 1976, they were replaced by a new board composed of unit owners. In the fall of that year the directors expressed an interest in replacing the CATV system with an MATV system and the management company asked for quotations from many potential suppliers including the defendant All-View. Apparently Terra was also asked because it submitted by letter dated October 19th, its own form of bulk agreement. In the letter also it made reference to its "exclusive right" and its retention of ownership of the cable. This was the first direct notice to the Condominium Corporation of the April, 1974 agreement. The agreement itself was apparently not turned over by either Carbondale or Southdown and did not come into the hands of the Condominium Corporation until after solicitors had been consulted in May of 1977. The agreement has never been registered upon the title to the building.

In December, 1976, the management company recommended against the bulk agreement of Terra and in favour of the MATV system and in March, 1977, the shareholders by a vote of 106 to 8 approved entering into a contract with All-View and that agreement was executed the following day. Appendix A of that agreement contained, inter alia, the following clause:

It is understood that the Purchaser is engaged in resolving the ownership of the coaxial television distribution system presently installed at 966 Inverhouse Drive, Mississauga, Ontario.

All-View proceeded immediately to the installation. By letter of April 20, 1977, the management company wrote Terra terminating "the contract with your Company for cable television effective May 31, 1977". The last paragraph of the letter was as follows: "We would appreciate knowing from you at your earliest convenience, what you intend to do with your wiring on the Corporation's property."

Thereafter all parties took legal advice and I need not set out the correspondence in detail. It is sufficient to say that Terra maintained both to the Condominium Corporation and the individual subscribers its "exclusive right" and its ownership of the cable. The management company wrote to the solicitors for Terra on May 16th concluding:

It would also appear that there was never anything registered against the title of Peel Condominium Corporation No. 95 and after considering all of the above facts, it would be our opinion that if the Corporation wished [sic] to terminate your clients services and request that your client remove their apparatus and wiring from the building, then your client would have to comply with this request ...

On June 3, 1977, the President of Peel Condominium authorized All-View to hook up the MATV antenna to the existing cable television and on the same day (or perhaps the day before) Terra's service manager, Joe Bertoni, seeking to service its customers, was denied access to the building. At some time within a few days thereafter, Bertoni returned to the building, found the locks of the housing boxes removed, all the amplifiers, multi-taps and splitters on the floor and the MATV system connected to the existing cable and All-View using much of the equipment originally installed by North Park for Terra.

It appears that now as the result of the injunction and also as the result no doubt of bad feeling held by the Condominium Corporation and its individual unit owners towards Terra, the equipment of Terra is now all reconnected, Terra obtains entry to service its subscribers, but the number of its subscribers has fallen to 38. All-View's antenna is affixed to the roof of the building, but no signals are passed from it because it is not connected to any television sets in the building. It appears that All-View was willing to connect up the antenna by a wiring system external to the building but the Condominium Corporation would not permit it.

The plaintiff bases its claim upon many grounds but Mr. Bern concedes that the basic claim relates to the June, 1977 connection of the All-View antenna whether that gives rise to a claim in trespass or conversion and that the claim will fail if the cable and auxiliary equipment is found to be a fixture. The defence happily accepts this challenge. It is their position that upon the installation of the system the wire and equipment became fixtures. While there may have been an agreement between Carbondale and Terra that the latter could effect removal that right was lost with the passing of title to the unit holders combined with the failure of Terra to register the agreement against title.

I am not certain that the defendants can rely upon the failure of registration. There appears to be no doubt that the unit owners became the owners of the common elements of the building under s. 7 of the Condominium Act and certainly there was no registration on title, but there is equally no doubt that the unit holders' predecessors in title who were the first directors of the condominium were aware of Terra's title. Moreover, the unit holders themselves (or at least those who subscribed) contracted with Terra for its continued ownership of the system. I also think it clear that the defence is an afterthought. Everything up to June 3, 1977, indicates an acceptance of Terra's dominion over the cable and equipment; I note particularly the letters of the management company of April 20, 1977 and May 16, 1977. Of course, a defence can be an afterthought and still perfectly valid. I have come to the conclusion, however, that this defence is not valid because I have come to the conclusion that the cable and equipment never did become fixtures, i.e., they never did become part of the realty. The test for fixtures was set out in the judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., in the Divisional Court in Stack v. T. Eaton Co. et al. (1902), 4 O.L.R. 335. He formulated, at p. 338, five rules as follows:

(1) That articles not otherwise attached to the land than by their own weight are not to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as shew that they were intended to be part of the land.

(2) That articles affixed to the land even slightly are to be considered part of the land unless the circumstances are such as to shew that they were intended to continue chattels.

(3) That the circumstances necessary to be shewn to alter the prima facie character of the articles are circumstances which shew the degree of annexation and object of such annexation, which are patent to all to see.

(4) That the intention of the person affixing the article to the soil is material only so far as it can be presumed from the degree and object of the annexation. (5) That, even in the case of tenants' fixtures put in for the purposes of trade, they form part of the freehold, with the right, however, to the tenant, as between him and his landlord, to bring them back to the state of chattels again by severing them from the soil, and that they pass by a conveyance of the land as part of it, subject to this right of the tenant.

The last rule is, of course, not relevant to the case at bar. Rule (2) certainly applies at least to much of the equipment making it necessary to examine the circumstances to find out whether the articles were intended to be continued as chattels. Under rule (3) the only relevant circumstances are those which show the degree of annexation and object of such annexation "which are patent for all to see". Finally, under rule (4) the subjective intention of the affixer (which I suggest was manifestly to retain the articles as chattels) is immaterial.

Under the third rule in Stack v. Eaton, I must consider the degree of annexation. While it is clear that there was some affixing of the articles to the building, I think it is equally clear and more important that both equipment and cable could be readily removed with a minimum of injury to the building. Indeed that was precisely what Bertoni found to have been done by All-View to much of the equipment when he gained access to the building in early June. The removal of the cable might well cause damage to the cable but there is no evidence that the removal would cause any damage whatever to the building. The presence or absence of likelihood of damage in removal is an important factor in the determination of whether or not the article has become a fixture -- see Liscombe Falls Gold Mining Co. et al. v. James R. Bishop et al. (1905), 35 S.C.R. 539. In my view there is not evidence of potential damage upon removal sufficient to affect the matter materially. As was said by Lord Macnaghten in Leigh et al. v. Taylor et al., [1902] A.C. 157 at p. 162:

The mode of annexation is only one of the circumstances of the case and not always the most important--and its relative importance is probably not what it was in ruder or simpler times.

What is important to me is the resolution of the intention question. It has been said more than once that the determination is based upon the facts of the particular case -- see, for example, Bing Kee et al. v. Yick Chong (1910), 43 S.C.R. 334, per Davies, J., at p. 337, and Milvain, J., in Re Burtex Industries Ltd. (in Bankruptcy); Elleker v. Farmers & Merchants Trust Co. Ltd. et al. (1964), 47 W.W.R. 96 at p. 101, as follows:

I have reached the conclusion that great confusion is created by courts which slavishly follow cases rather than principles. As I understand the law it is a question of intent as to whether chattels become part of the realty, and such intent is to be found in the circumstances of each case as a finding of fact.

The test (or as Milvain, J., would have it -- the principle) that has been accepted is that found in Haggert v. Town of Brampton et al. (1897), 28 S.C.R. 174, quoted by Spence, J., in Re Davis, [1954] O.W.N. 187 at p. 190:

If the object of the affixing of chattels is to improve the freehold, then, even if the chattels are only slightly affixed to the realty, they may well become part of the realty. If, on the other hand, the object of the affixation of the chattels is the better enjoyment of the chattels, then the affixation does not make them part of the realty.

It is not an easy test to follow. In a sense every chattel affixed to a building could be said to improve the building or else it would not be affixed. The test has led to some apparently conflicting results -- see La Salle Recreations Ltd. v. Canadian Camdex Investments Ltd. (1969), 4 D.L.R. (3d) 549, 68 W.W.R. 339 (carpeting in a hotel held to be a fixture); Lichty et al. v. Voigt et al. (1977), 17 O.R. (2d) 552, 80 D.L.R. (3d) 757 (a mobile home cemented to the ground complete with septic tank and field bed held not to be a fixture). In any event, I think that applying the test here one must inevitably find the cable and equipment remained a chattel. Its installation in no way improved the building; all it did was make it possible for Terra to provide its subscribers with cable television. Its presence did not make the service cheaper; indeed the cost of service is prescribed by federal Regulation. In my view the situation is governed by such cases as Re Davis, supra (bowling alleys); General Steel Wares Ltd. v. Ford & Ottawa Gas, [1965] 2 O.R. 81, 49 D.L.R. (2d) 673 (gas dryers). In both cases although one might assume the articles were well affixed they were held to be chattels affixed for purposes of carrying on bowling or gas-drying and not for the benefit of the building.

The plaintiff alleges that Peel and All-View were engaged in a conspiracy to interfere with the plaintiff's contractual and economic relations with its subscribers. There is no direct evidence to support the allegation but I am asked to infer the conspiracy and the interference from the loss of custom. I am not prepared to do so. I suspect that the loss of business is a direct result of subscriber resentment at the frustration of their desire expressed in a vote of 106 to 8 to change to an MATV system; if so it is hardly actionable against the defendants.

The prayer for relief asks for an injunction prohibiting interference with the plaintiff's system, an injunction requiring the defendants to cease to operate an MATV system, a declaration that the agreement of April 22nd is in full force and effect and further asks damages for breach of contract, loss of goodwill, conspiracy and interference. As I see the matter, it is simply a trespass action by All-View with the encouragement and participation of Peel lasting for about seven days and terminating upon the granting of the interlocutory injunction. I have found that the system is the property of the plaintiff but I do not see why Peel should be required by injunction to respect the continued presence of the system in the building. The plaintiff is required to provide cable television to any subscriber who seeks it and obviously some of the subscribers do. It is a right, however, of the subscriber and not of the plaintiff; and the problem is one for resolution between the subscribers and the Condominium Corporation. It is no part of my judgment, but I should think Peel would hesitate to require the removal of the system until the consent of all subscribers had been obtained. While I would terminate the injunction, I do not, of course, mean that the plaintiff thereby forfeits the system.

The plaintiff will be entitled to a declaration that it is the owner of the cable system installed pursuant to the agreement of April 22, 1974, and to damages against both defendants for trespass to that system in the amount of $1,000.

It was argued that the plaintiff unduly prolonged the trial and should be penalized in costs. I do not accept the submission. The plaintiff is entitled to its costs of the action.

There was a counterclaim delivered by Peel against the plaintiff, Carbondale and Southdown seeking a declaration that the agreement of April 22, 1974, was null and void and a declaration that the cable system formed part of the common elements of the property. That counterclaim should be dismissed but without costs.

There are third party proceedings brought by each defendant against the other and by Peel also against Carbondale and Southdown. By agreement no evidence and no argument was heard upon either proceeding. If some determination of those issues is now or at some later time required, I may, of course, be spoken to.

Judgment for plaintiff.

York Condominium Corporation No. 329 v. Dazol Developments Ltd. et al.

24 O.R. (2d) 46

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE CARRUTHERS, J. 23RD MARCH 1979.

APPLICATION to set aside a lien claim under s. 13 of the Condominium Act together with an application to stay an action.

W. A. Knights, for applicant. M. Spears, for respondent.

CARRUTHERS, J. (orally):-- There are two applications here. In the first, Dazol Developments Ltd. applies for an order declaring that York Condominium Corporation No. 329 has no interest in the lands and premises which are the subject-matter of the application, and that the notice of lien registered on title by York Condominium Corporation No. 329 is not a valid encumbrance against the title to the said lands and premises. In the second application, York Condominium Corporation No. 329 asks that the action which it has commenced against Dazol Developments Ltd. and Double Z Investments Limited to recover the admitted deficiency in its first year's common expenses be stayed pending the disposition of the first application.

From what information that has been made available to me on both of these applications, I find that Dazol Developments Ltd. was the developer of the condominium project and as required by the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended, made a declaration as to what the common expenses were to be during the first year of operation of the condominium project. As it has turned out, its estimate fell short of the mark resulting in the deficiency to which I have referred.

Dazol Developments Ltd., it is agreed, has retained ownership of four of the 54 units in the condominium building. York Condominium Corporation No. 329 has registered the notice of lien in question on the basis that Dazol Developments Ltd. by remaining the owner of the four units is obliged by virtue of the provisions of s. 13 of the Condominium Act, to pay its share of the deficit and has failed to do so.

It seems to me that what is really involved here is an endeavour to join together the provisions of s. 13 in so far as it deals with the obligations of an owner to contribute its share, being a designated percentage, of common expenses within the provisions of s. 24b [enacted 1974, c. 133, s. 14] of the Act which requires the developer to make up the difference under certain circumstances between that which it declared to be the estimated common expenses and the actual amount when the latter is greater. No right of lien is provided to the condominium corporation in the event of there being a deficit under the provisions of s. 24b.

The sections in question read as follows: 13(1) The owners shall contribute towards the common expenses in the proportions specified in the declaration.

(2) The assessment and collection of contributions towards the common expenses may be regulated by the declaration or the by-laws.

(3) The obligation of an owner to contribute towards the common expenses shall not be avoided by waiver of the right to use the common elements or by abandonment.

(4) Where an owner defaults in his obligation to contribute to the corporation towards the common expenses, the corporation, upon registration of a notice of lien in the prescribed form, has a lien for the unpaid amount against the unit and common interest of that owner.

(5) The lien may be enforced in the same manner as a mortgage.

(6) Upon payment of the unpaid amount and upon demand, the corporation shall give the owner a discharge in the prescribed form.

24b(1) ...

(f) where the agreement for purchase and sale is entered into within the year immediately following the registration of the declaration and description, a budget statement prepared by the declarant for the year immediately following the registration of the declaration and description setting out the common expenses, the proposed amount of each expense, particulars of the service to be provided and the amount to be contributed by the purchaser for the year.

(4) Where the total amount incurred for the common expenses provided for in the statement mentioned in clause f of subsection 1 or clause f of subsection 2 exceeds the total of the proposed amounts set out in the statement, the declarant shall forthwith pay to the corporation the amount of the excess except in respect of increased expenses attributable to the termination of an agreement under section 15a.

At once I am struck by the fact that what York Condominium Corporation No. 329 is doing here is using the right of lien available under s. 13 to secure the cause of action which it is given under s. 24b so as to make the interest of Dazol Developments Ltd. subject to the whole amount of the deficit rather than its proportionate interest. There are some 54 units in this building. Dazol Developments Ltd. retains ownership of four, so I would think, at the most, Dazol Developments Ltd. is only obligated under s. 13 to pay 4/54ths of the amount in question. Under s. 24b, on the other hand, it is obligated or is liable to pay the total amount.

I have been advised by counsel that Dazol does not object to the amount of the deficit. In other words, it does not anticipate raising any defence that the deficit is due to mismanagement on the part of the condominium corporation as opposed to a straight failure on its part to estimate correctly.

Is then York Condominium Corporation No. 329 left only with a cause of action to recover the deficit under s. 24b, or is it entitled through the provisions of s. 13 to validly register a notice of lien against the four units owned by Dazol Developments Ltd. for the total amount of the deficit?

If the latter position is correct, I would have to think that the Legislature would have said so expressly. It has not. I cannot, therefore, come to the conclusion that the amount which is due under s. 24b can be secured through the provisions of s. 13. This may be an unanticipated gap in the Act, but it is a gap nevertheless and I do not think I can fill it by coming to a different conclusion than I have. As I have said above, in any event, if the notice of lien is valid it would be only reasonable that it would encumber the interest to the extent of 4/54ths of the deficiency and not the whole amount as York Condominium Corporation No. 329 has attempted to do.

In my opinion, therefore, the lien is not a valid lien and should be removed as an encumbrance from the title to the lands and premises in question. The costs of this application shall be to the applicant.

On the second application, an order is to go granting leave to the plaintiff to amend the endorsement on the writ of summons herein so as to set forth by way of general endorsement a claim for the amount of the deficiency due under s. 24. There shall be no costs of the second application.

Orders accordingly.

Aita et al. v. Silverstone Towers Ltd.

19 O.R. (2d) 681 ONTARIO

ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL ARNUP, MACKINNON AND LACOURCIERE, J.J.A. 2ND MAY 1978.

APPEAL from a judgment of Weatherston, J., awarding damages for breach of a contract to sell a condominium unit.

John Weingust, for appellant, defendant.

W.D. Martin, for respondents, plaintiffs.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

ARNUP, J.A.:-- This is an appeal by the defendant, the builder of a condominium, from the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Weatherston whereby the plaintiffs, the purchasers of a condominium unit, recovered from the defendant $8,410 damages for breach of contract. In 1973 the defendant commenced the construction of a condominium building on Silverstone Dr. in the Borough of Etobicoke, and as construction progressed, the defendant proceeded to enter into agreements for the purchase and sale of units within the condominium. On October 13, 1973, the plaintiffs as purchasers entered into an agreement to purchase the unit numbered 808 on the eighth floor of the building under construction, for the price of $35,990, payable $500 as a deposit, the assumption of a first mortgage in the sum of $23,230, the giving of a second mortgage for $9,760, and the balance of the purchase price on closing, subject to adjustments.

The following provisions of the agreement are material:

3. This offer shall be null and void in the event the Purchaser is not approved by the first mortgagee lending institution ...

4. The Purchaser acknowledges that the declaration and the description and the by-laws of the Condominium Corporation to be created by the registration of the declaration and the description and the rules respecting the use of the common elements as required by The Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970 and amendments thereto (hereinafter referred to as the "Act") have not as of the date of this Agreement been registered and that this Agreement is conditional upon compliance with Section 29 of The Planning Act of Ontario.

5. This Agreement and the transaction arising therefrom are conditional upon the following:

(a) the approval of the Purchaser by the first Mortgagee prior to the closing date;

(b) the registration by the Vendor of a Condominium Plan, description, and of the Declaration and By-law No. 1 on or before "to be designated". [The words in quotation marks are typed in; the balance of para. 5, and most of the agreement of purchase and sale, is on a printed form.]

In the event that either condition has not been complied with, this Agreement shall be null and void and all moneys paid by the Purchaser shall be returned without interest or deductions subject however to paragraph 7 hereof.

6. This transaction of purchase and sale is to be completed on the closing date which is to be on or before the 30 day of June 1974, except as otherwise herein provided or such other date as may be required in accordance with the provisions for postponement referred to in paragraph 7 hereof.

7. If the Unit is completed and fit for occupancy by the date fixed for closing hereunder but prior to the date of registration of the Condominium Plan, Description, Declaration and By-law Number 1 and the Purchaser has been approved by the First Mortgagee, then the Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor the balance of the purchase moneys and shall take occupancy of the Unit on the date fixed for closing hereunder on a rental basis at a rental of $338.62 per month in advance commencing on the date of occupancy and payable on the same date of the next succeeding month during the term of such occupancy until the agreement of purchase and sale can be completed in accordance with the provisions hereof. Any prepaid rent shall be adjusted on completion of sale.

If the within agreement can not be completed, the Purchaser agrees to vacate the premises within thirty (30) days of the date he receives notice to vacate and the Vendor will forthwith return the moneys held by it less the rental for the term during which the premises were occupied by the Purchaser. The parties herein agree that acceptance of possession of the premises hereunder by the Purchaser shall not be deemed or considered in any way as a Release or abandonment of any of the Purchaser's rights under this agreement of purchase and sale.

The Purchaser in occupation under this clause further agrees to complete the agreement of purchase and sale within fifteen (15) days after written notice shall have been given by the Vendor to the Purchaser or to the Purchaser's Solicitor by ordinary mail that the Condominium Plan, Description, Declaration and By-law Number 1 has been registered in the Office of Land Titles.

16. The Purchaser shall be deemed to be in default under this Agreement if he fails to fulfill any of the provisions of this Agreement and if any lien, execution or encumbrance arising from any action or default whatsoever of the Purchaser is charged against or affects the unit or the building of which the unit forms a part so as to prevent advances on the first mortgage and shall include registration on title on behalf of the Purchaser of any documents prior to closing. In the event of such default on the part of the Purchaser, the Vendor may, in addition to any other remedies it may have, declare this Agreement to be cancelled and null and void and the deposit moneys paid by the Purchasers shall thereupon be forfeited to the Vendor as liquidated damages. In addition, upon default by the Purchaser in any of the provisions of this Agreement, the Purchaser waives tender by the Vendor and all further obligations of the Vendor to the Purchaser shall cease. In addition, upon default by the Purchaser in any of the provisions of this Agreement, the Purchaser waives tender by the Vendor and all further obligations of the Vendor to the Purchaser shall cease. In the event the transaction is not completed by reason of default on the part of the Vendor, the liability of the Vendor hereunder shall be limited to the return to the Purchaser of the deposit moneys herein.

22. Time shall be of the essence of this Agreement.

We were told by counsel that before the necessary approval required for registration of the declaration and description and the rules respecting use of the common elements can be obtained, at least 60% of the units must have been sold and be occupied. It is, therefore, obvious that para. 7 quoted above was going to come into operation with respect to at least 60% of the units, i.e., the "purchasers" were going to have to move in and pay the balance of the purchase moneys, plus rent, before registration of the condominium plan was effected.

The plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, went to the premises on a fairly regular basis to see how construction was coming along. In May, 1974, they were approved as purchasers by the mortgagee, so that the first expressed condition was satisfied. By the closing date of June 30, 1974, the unit purchased by the plaintiffs was not yet completed and fit for occupancy. It was on the eighth floor. There were to be 15 or 16 floors in the building. By June, 1974, the building was up to the sixth floor. By the end of 1974 it had reached nine or ten floors.

The plaintiffs, in purchasing the unit, had dealt with a salesman named Murray Swartz, and when they returned to the premises every two or three weeks to see what progress was being made, they spoke frequently to Swartz. In February, 1975, on one of their regular visits, the plaintiffs were told by a salesman other than Swartz that the building was going to be ready in May, 1975. In the meantime the plaintiffs had chosen the carpet, tiles, cabinets and the painting for their unit.

From the middle of 1973, when the plaintiffs had made their agreement, the sale price of condominium units steadily increased, and by early 1975, units comparable to that for which the plaintiffs had agreed to pay roughly $36,000 had become worth $47,000 or $48,000.

By a letter dated February 14, 1975, without any previous warning, the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs as follows:

We notice that the closing date of the above transaction has expired some time ago and you have not since that time made any indication that you have any interest in completing the transaction.

We are therefore taking the position that that transaction is cancelled and the offer is null and void.

You will find a cheque enclosed herein in the amount of $500 representing the return of the deposit.

The plaintiffs took this letter to their solicitor, who wrote to the solicitors for the defendant, stating that the plaintiffs wished to complete the transaction, that they had spoken to the sales agent from time to time asking when the apartment would be ready, that they had last done so in mid-February and had been told that the apartment would be ready for occupancy in the middle of April, 1975. The solicitor stated that his "clients had agreed to this extension". His letter referred also to the choosing of carpets, cabinets and tiles with the sales agent. The solicitor sent back to the solicitors for the vendor the $500 cheque forwarded by them.

On April 15, 1975, the plaintiffs' present solicitors tendered upon the solicitors for the vendor a certified cheque for $2,500, and a certified cheque for $338.62, being one month's occupation rental for the unit. The letter confirming tender, written the following day by the plaintiffs' solicitors, states that the vendor's solicitors had said that they had no instructions to close, and had declined to accept the tender. On April 25, 1975, the plaintiffs issued a writ claiming specific performance or in the alternative, damages.

While the action was pending, the defendant sold the unit, and accordingly specific performance became impossible.

Weatherston, J., after quoting the foregoing facts, said that the defendant might have terminated the contract on June 30, 1974, but not having done so until the unit was ready for occupancy, the covenants in para. 7 came into force. He held that those covenants gave the plaintiffs some proprietary right in the unit pending registration of the condominium plan, description, declaration and by-law. He held it was the defendant's duty to notify the plaintiffs that the unit was ready for occupancy, and to be ready to perform its obligations under the contract; that the defendant was not entitled to arbitrarily terminate the contract, as it attempted to do, and that there continued to be a valid contract up to February 14, 1975, on which date, by its letter, the defendant wrongfully repudiated the contract.

The defendant took the position at trial that there had been no breach by it of the contract, and that in any event under para. 16 of the agreement its liability was limited to the return to the plaintiffs of the deposit money. Weatherston, J., said on this point:

On this point I refer by analogy to those cases where a defaulting party to a contract relies on an exemption clause. In those cases where there has been a fundamental breach of the contract, such clauses are not given effect to, for otherwise the seller's promises in the contract would be meaningless.

So in this case, if the defendant were able to rely on the clause which I have just read limiting its liability to the return of the deposit, its covenants and this agreement of purchase and sale would be meaningless. There is no fundamental breach of contract here but the defendant had repudiated the entire contract and with it the clause limiting its own liability.

At the date of breach specific performance was not possible because the building had not been registered in accordance with the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, and damages must, therefore, be assessed as of the date of the breach and not as of the date of this action.

The trial Judge then proceeded to fix the damages at $7,910 plus the deposit of $500, or a total of $8,410.

Two points arise for determination on this appeal: 1. Are the provisions with respect to compliance with s. 29 of the Planning Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 349, as amended, and registration of the requisite documents pursuant to the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 77, as amended, true conditions precedent, which had not been fulfilled at the date of the issue of the writ in this matter, and therefore the plaintiffs have no cause of action because the conditions precedent had to be fulfilled before the agreement of purchase and sale became effective? 2. If the plaintiffs succeed in the issues raised by the first point, is their remedy limited by the last sentence of para. 16 of the agreement to the return of their deposit?

The first point, in the form in which I have stated it, was really raised by the Court itself. We had in mind the line of cases beginning with Turney et al. v. Zhilka, [1959] S.C.R. 578, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 447, and including Queensway Construction Ltd. v. Trusteel Corp. (Canada) Ltd., [1961] S.C.R. 528, 28 D.L.R. (2d) 480; F.T. Developments Ltd. v. Sherman et al., [1969] S.C.R. 203, 70 D.L.R. (2d) 426; Barnett v. Harrison et al., [1976] 2 S.C.R. 531, 57 D.L.R. (3d) 225, 5 N.R. 131; George Wimpey Canada

On further consideration, I do not think the doctrine of "true condition precedent" applies to this case. It was necessary, in order to avoid the invalidity that s. 29 of the Planning Act might otherwise impose on the agreement, to make it conditional upon compliance with that Act: s. 29(7). The Planning Act is complied with by registration of the condominium and the Condominium Act, as amended by 1972 (Ont.), c. 7, s. 1; 1973, c. 121; 1974, c. 133, and 1977, c. 67, then takes over: see Re Crossroads Apartments Ltd. and Phillips (1974), 4 O.R. (2d) 72, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 172. (The important amendments made by the 1974 Act did not come into force until April 1, 1975. They were not the subject of any argument in this Court nor before Weatherston, J. I am not suggesting those amendments affected the agreement in this case. I simply do not propose to refer to the statute again.)

In this case, the parties themselves contemplated that the closing date might arrive before the requisite registrations of the condominium documents had been effected. They did not agree that in such event, the agreement was at an end. On the contrary, they agreed in para. 7 that if the unit was completed and fit for occupancy by the closing date, the plaintiffs would pay the balance of the purchase price, without getting title, and take occupancy of the unit on a rental basis, at the amount of rent stipulated in the agreement.

The draft agreement of purchase and sale, as an incomplete printed document, contemplated two true conditions precedent, non-compliance with either of which was to render the agreement automatically null and void, subject to para. 7 thereof. The first, approval of the purchasers by the first mortgagee, was complied with. The second, requiring registration of the condominium documents by a date to be filled in before the agreement was executed, was filled in "to be designated". It was no condition at all, with that language, let alone a "true condition precedent".

In my view, therefore, the defendant cannot rely on non-compliance with true conditions precedent as having put an end to the agreement.

It follows that I am in agreement with the trial Judge that when the closing date went by, with neither party doing anything about it, the agreement continued in force. It follows also that the defendant had no right to purport to terminate the agreement on the basis stated in its letter of February 14, 1975. The premises had just become fit for occupancy, and so para. 7 would be applicable. The defendant did not call upon the plaintiffs to pay the balance of the purchase moneys, or to pay rent, or to take occupancy. Instead, the defendant attempted to say the contract was at an end.

The plaintiffs did not accept this. They promptly sued for specific performance. Thus they relied on the contract. Did this entitle the defendant to rely on para. 16 of the agreement, which I repeat:

In the event the transaction is not completed by reason of default on the part of the Vendor, the liability of the Vendor hereunder shall be limited to the return to the Purchaser of the deposit moneys herein.

This is an extraordinary clause. On the defendant's interpretation, it can refuse, arbitrarily, capriciously, or wrongfully, to carry out the bargain it made, and the purchaser's only remedy is to get his money back. The reason for refusal may be only that property values have risen substantially, and the vendor can sell to another purchaser at a much higher price. (This is undoubtedly what happened here.)

The trial Judge held that there was "no fundamental breach of contract here but the defendant has repudiated the entire contract and with it the clause limiting its own liability". The distinction between repudiation and fundamental breach is discussed in Cheshire and Fifoot's Law of Contracts, 8th ed. (1972), at pp. 563-8, and the effect of each, at pp. 568-74. These passages make it clear that in the event of either repudiation or fundamental breach by one party, the innocent party may elect whether to treat the contract as discharged, or to treat it as still in force, and seek to enforce it. Here the plaintiffs have clearly chosen the second course. They claimed specific performance, and claimed damages only as an alternative to it. When specific performance became impossible, s. 21 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 228, enabled the Court to give damages in lieu thereof.

This election to treat the contract as continuing had the effect, in my view, of keeping all of its applicable terms effective, including para. 16. It then becomes a question of what construction is to be placed upon para. 16, in the circumstances of this particular case. I do not accept the defendant's construction of that paragraph as limiting its liability, even in the event of its arbitrary refusal to carry out the contract. In my view, the paragraph was intended to cover default by the defendant in carrying out a term of the contract that required it to do something. This is the ordinary meaning of the word "default". The paragraph was not intended to cover a complete and outright repudiation of the entire contract. As the trial Judge pointed out, the defendant's construction makes its promises meaningless. In my words, it makes the defendant's purported agreement a mere sham; it could perform or not, as it chose. This cannot have been the intention of the parties.

It is to be noted that the agreement of purchase and sale had a separate provision, in para. 18, reading:

18. If the Vendor is unable to fulfill the requirements of the Act, then the Vendor shall give written notice to the Purchaser or his solicitor and this Agreement, notwithstanding any intervening negotiations, shall be null and void and the purchase moneys paid by the Purchaser shall be returned without interest and without deductions. If para. 16 was as wide in its ambit as the defendant contends, para. 18 would be redundant. The defendant could simply repudiate the contract, in the event of its inability to fulfil the requirements of the Condominium Act, and return the deposit.

Since para. 16 does not, in my view, limit the defendant's liability on the facts of this case, the trial judgment is right, and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Swan Lake Recreation Resort Ltd. v. Registrar (Kamloops Land Title Office)

Between Swan Lake Recreation Resort Ltd., appellant, and Registrar, Kamloops Land Title Office, respondent

[1999] B.C.J. No. 1384 Victoria Registry No. 99 1660

British Columbia Supreme Court Victoria, British Columbia Cowan J. Heard: April 16, 1999. Judgment: filed May 14, 1999.

Counsel: L. John Alexander and R.K. Gandhi, for the plaintiff. Lisa Mrozinski, for the defendant.

[para1] COWAN J.:-- This is an appeal pursuant to s. 309 of the Land Title Act R.S.B.C. 1996 c. 250 from the refusal of the respondent to register a strata plan in the Kamloops Land Title Office.

[para2] The appellant proposed the development of a recreational campground in Vernon, B.C. The development was to comprise 200 resort or residential strata lots and a single commercial strata lot in Vernon, B.C. In furtherance of the development, it caused a strata plan to be prepared by a land surveyor.

[para3] The scheme of the development was to create 200 strata lots and assign to each of the strata lots as limited common property under the Condominium Act R.S.B.C. 1996 c.4, one of 200 recreational vehicle sites for the exclusive use of the owner of the strata lot to which it was assigned.

[para4] The strata plan indicates that the several strata lots are 0.07 square metres each in area and stacked in rows to a height of seven levels. Each strata lot has a total space of 0.098 cubic metres.

[para5] In his "notice declining to register" issued pursuant to section 308 of the Land Title Act the registrar characterized what was purported to be a "building" for the purposes of the Condominium Act as a "mailbox". In my view, that is an apt description of the purported "building".

[para6] The ground for the respondent's refusal was that the mailbox shown in the plan was not a "building" pursuant to the Act: section 4(a), section 7(1)(a) and section 8 of the Act, and section 5(e) and (f) of the Regulation.

[para7] Specifically, the respondent held that a mailbox does not comply with section 6(1) and section 6(2) of the Act and sections 5(j), (k) and (m) of the Regulations as it has no floors, walls or ceilings. Pursuant to section 8, the respondent found that the mailboxes were not a "building that can be occupied" because mailboxes cannot be occupied by persons.

[para8] The notice of appeal asserts that the respondent erred in refusing to accept the strata plan by:

(a) failing to find that the building comprising the several strata lots complied with the definition of "building" in the Condominium Act; and

(b) failing to accept that the strata lots shown on the strata plan complied with sections 6.1 and 6.2(a) of the Condominium Act and regulations in that they had floors, walls and ceilings as required by those sections and the regulations.

[para9] In its submissions, the appellant admits that the strata lots themselves are not habitable. Rather, they "merely allow the strata titles to be created". More precisely, the lots purport to create "building strata" titles as opposed to "bare land strata" titles. The distinction is important because the development requirements and regulations that apply to "building strata" title projects are considerably less onerous than those that apply to "bare land strata" title projects.

LAW AND ANALYSIS:1. Standard of Review*(a) General

[para10] In Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, the Supreme Court of Canada instructed that, where the statute confers a right of appeal, the Court must have regard to the nature of the problem, the applicable law in light of its purpose, and the expertise of the tribunal.

(b) The Nature of the Problem before the Registrar

[para11] At paragraph 44, the Supreme Court of Canada stated that the application of the law to the facts is a matter of mixed law and fact. At paragraph 45, the Court stated that this indicates that some measure of deference is owed to the administrative decision maker.

[para12] The decision at issue in the present case similarly involved the interpretation and application of the statutory term "building" to the particular facts, i.e. the community mailbox structure. In my view, as in Southam, the nature of the problem was one of mixed law and fact.

(c) The Words of the Appeal Provision

[para13] Section 309(1) of the Land Title Act indicates that the review of the registrar's decision is in the nature of an appeal. No privative clause is present. As in Southam, this indicates that the approach may be less deferential than if a privative clause were present.

(d) The Purpose of the Statute and Expertise of the Decision maker

[para14] The following passages from Cotterall v. Vancouver (City) (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 368 at 374 (C.A.), were applied in Morgan v. Vancouver (City) (1988), 32 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1 at 4 (C.A.):

The guiding principle for judges hearing an appeal from a decision of an approving officer was enunciated by Coady J. in 1954, when he was a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, in Re Proposed Subdivision (1954), 15 W.W.R. 143. He said at p. 143:

"There are many reasons why municipal corporations should have and are given a measure of control over proposed subdivisions and the court should not on appeal lightly interfere with the decision of the approving officer."

In Simpson v. Vancouver, a chambers judge followed this principle in dismissing the appeal from the decision of the approving officer, stating:

"Where, as here, there is direct statutory foundation for the ground given for the decision to approve or disapprove, and where it is not shown that the decision, despite its impact on an individual, was made in bad faith, or with the intention of discriminating against that individual, or on a specious or totally inadequate factual basis, there should, in my opinion, be no interference by the court with municipal officers honestly endeavouring to comply with the duties imposed on them by the Legislature in planning the coherent and logical development of their areas."

This passage was also applied to appeals from the registrar under s. 291 of the Land Title Act, which accords with and incorporates s. 289, in Mackay v. Acting Registrar of Title (1989), 5 R.P.R. (2d) 113 (B.C.S.C.).

[para15] Section 13(2) of the Land Title Act provides as follows:

13(2) A person must not be appointed a registrar unless the person

(a) is a solicitor, or

(b) is employed in a land title office in British Columbia and has been so employed for at least 12 years.

[para16] While there is therefore a requirement that the registrar have some expertise, it is an expertise in relation to property law. In this respect, deference is not as strongly indicated as in Southam. In Southam, the purpose of the statute and the expertise of the tribunal was characterized as "economics and commerce." The Court held that this was an area in which judges are competent, but in which economic and statistical skill, as well as business experience, are "more desirable and important than legal acumen."

[para17] In my view, the factors of the purpose of the statute and the expertise of the registrar indicate some deference, but are not strong indicators of deference.

(e) Conclusions with Respect to Standard of Review

[para18] In my view, considering the factors set out above, the "reasonableness" standard applies to the present review. As the Supreme Court of Canada stated in Southam at paragraph 56:

An unreasonable decision is one that, in the main, is not supported by any reasons that can stand up to a somewhat probing examination. Accordingly, a court reviewing a conclusion on the reasonableness standard must look to see whether any reasons support it.

2. Principles Governing the Construction of Statutes

(a) The Ordinary Meaning Rule

[para19] In Ruth Sullivan, Driedger on the Construction of Statutes (Toronto: Butterworths 1994), at p. 7, the author states as follows:

As understood and applied by modern courts the ordinary meaning rule consists of the following propositions:

(1) It is presumed that the ordinary meaning of a legislative text is the intended or most appropriate meaning. In the absence of a reason to reject it, the ordinary meaning prevails.

(2) Even where the ordinary meaning of a legislative text appears to be clear, the courts must consider the purpose and scheme of the legislation, and the consequences of adopting this meaning. They must take into account all relevant indicators of legislative meaning.

(3) In light of these additional considerations, the court may adopt an interpretation in which the ordinary meaning is modified or rejected. That interpretation, however, must be plausible; that is, it must be one the words are reasonably capable of bearing.

(b) The Modern Rule of Statutory Interpretation

[para20] In Driedger on the Construction of Statutes (Toronto: Butterworths 1994), at p. 131, the author states as follows:

There is only one rule in modern interpretation, namely, courts are obliged to determine the meaning of legislation in its total context, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, the consequences of proposed interpretations, the presumptions and special rules of interpretation, as well as admissible external aids. In other words, the courts must consider and take into account all relevant and admissible indicators of legislative meaning. After taking these into account, the court must then adopt an interpretation that is appropriate. An appropriate interpretation is one that can be justified in terms of (a) its plausibility, that is, its compliance with the legislative text; (b) its efficacy, that is, its promotion of the legislative purposes; and (c) its acceptability, that is, the outcome is reasonable and just.

[para21] At pp. 194-5 of Driedger, the author sets out a number of aspects to the "context" in which a particular statutory provision ought to be interpreted:

- (1) The immediate context;
- (2) The other language version (where applicable);
- (3) The Act as a whole;
- (4) Related legislation;
- (5) The common law;
- (6) Common law rules for interpreting legislation;
- (7) The external context (historical and cultural setting);
- (8) Extrinsic aids.

3. The Merits of the Appeal

(a) Overview of the Act

[para22] The Condominium Act allows creation of two types of strata. A "bare land strata" is essentially a subdivision of land. In a "building strata", on the other hand, lots are defined by floors, walls, and ceilings of a building. In building strata, the rest of the land not covered by a building is designated either common property or limited common property, i.e. limited to the use of an individual strata lot owner. Limited common property could be, for example, a yard area associated with a specified residential strata lot.

[para23] It is important to note, as stated earlier, that the regulations governing registration of a "bare land strata" are much more onerous than those for the deposit of a strata plan having a building. An indirect consequence of this is that property developers have an incentive to characterize proposals as "building strata", even if they are functionally indistinguishable from "bare land strata".

(b) The Purpose of the Legislation

[para24] The Condominium Act was originally enacted in 1966 as the "Strata Titles Act", S.B.C. 1966, c. 46. In 1974, the Act was repealed and replaced by a new Strata Titles Act, though many of the provisions remained substantially the same: S.B.C. 1974, c. 89.

[para25] The first significant change, taken in 1977, was to extend the Act to cover "bare land strata": S.B.C. 1977, c. 64. Over time it also became clear that "building strata" could be residential, commercial, or a mixture of residential and commercial.

[para26] Notwithstanding these specific expansions to the scope of the Act, in my view the underlying purpose of those Parts of the Act engaged in the present proceeding remains very similar to that of the original Strata Titles Act. The purpose and intent of those sections of the Act is also very similar to that of the Ontario Condominium Act. In Re Carleton Condominium Corp. No. 279 and Rochon (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 545 (C.A.), Finlayson J.A. described the original purpose and intent of the Ontario Act as follows at p. 549:

The Condominium Act was passed to permit individuals to be owners of the freehold estate in residential units in a building as opposed to tenants in an apartment building. This means that they have disposable real property which is an investment and not simply an expense. Its purchase can be financed by mortgage or lien in the same manner as any piece of real estate.

(c) The Immediate Context

[para27] Section 1(1) of the Act defines building as follows:

"building" means a building, or a group of buildings, shown on a strata plan.

[para28] The appellant argues that this definition means that anything shown on a strata plan as a "building" thereby becomes a building. This is an untenable argument. In my view, the definition of "building" set out above was intended merely to clarify that any "building" must be shown on the strata plan in order to qualify as a "building" under the Act, and that references to a "building" include the plural. It was not meant to mean that the only requirement to qualify as a "building" under the Act is that the structure appear on a strata plan.

[para29] That the meaning of "building" is further restricted becomes apparent upon review of the other sections of the Act.

(d) The Act as a Whole

(i) "Bare land" vs. "Building" Strata Plans

[para30] Section 1(1) of the Act defines "bare land strata plan" as follows:

"bare land strata plan" means a strata plan on which the boundaries of the strata lots are defined on a horizontal plane by reference to survey markers under section 6(2)(b), and not by reference to the floors, walls and ceilings of a building; [para31] The overall scheme of the Act is to separate all strata plans into one of two categories, "bare land strata plans" and building strata plans.

[para32] As noted above, the concept of "bare land strata plans" was added to the Act in 1977. When the Bill was given second reading, the Minister responsible stated as follows (British Columbia, Debates of the Legislative Assembly (August 23, 1977) at 4846-7):

... For approximately the past 12 months, this ministry has given considerable study to the Strata Titles Act with the primary objective of making it a more effective instrument not only for the production of multiple housing but to allow the kind of housing where occupants can live together harmoniously.

...

Last October, the B.C. Council of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada presented a comprehensive submission recommending legislation to allow what they called "automatic homeowners' associations," similar to the fairly common American concept of planned unit development. Basically, the concept is somewhat like a local improvement area, where a special tax or a levy is imposed on owners benefiting from a particular amenity.

I am happy to say that the amendments before us will permit this kind of land development without the technical problems created by the existing legislation. In effect, it allows for the subdivision of bare land so that a purchaser will own his parcel of land and a share of the common facilities and all strata owners will pay for the maintenance of such common facilities.

The Minister also expressly stated that the statute contemplated mixed developments, where residential and commercial uses would both occur within a single strata development.

[para33] In my view, then, the Act contemplates two types of strata developments. In each type of strata plan, the Legislature clearly intended that the areas designated as the "strata lots" would be the primary use areas, while common property or limited common property areas would be intended for uses ancillary to the primary use. This conclusion is supported by s. 5 of the Act, which provides as follows:

5. Garages, parking spaces, storage areas and other areas or spaces related to the use of a strata lot that are intended for residential use must not be designated as separate strata lots but must be included as part of the strata lot or as part of the common property.

[para34] It is unclear whether "intended for residential use" modifies "a strata lot" or "other areas or spaces". The use of the plural "are" before "intended for residential use" indicates that it refers to "other areas or spaces". "Garages, parking spaces, storage areas" are all areas "intended for residential use" as an ancillary function to a residence, namely the strata lot. Similarly, a mail box is an area intended for residential use as an ancillary function to a residence.

[para35] This is, in essence, a functional interpretation of the scheme of the Condominium Act. Whether the strata lot is contained within a building or is simply a measured area of bare land, the primary intended use area is to be designated the "strata lot", and areas with residential uses ancillary to the primary use "strata lot" must be either included in the strata lot or in the common property, and cannot be separate strata lots.

[para36] In the presently proposed development, the scheme contemplated by the Act is inverted. It would be absurd to suggest that owners' use of the individually designated R.V. sites will be ancillary to their primary use of the development, the mailbox. The primary use areas of the development are the R.V. sites. There are no buildings enclosing the R.V. sites. Therefore, viewed from a functional perspective, the proposed development is clearly a "bare land strata" rather than a "building strata". Consequently, the mailbox is not a "building" within the meaning of the Act.

(ii) "Buildings" vs. "Improvements"

[para37] Section 1(1) also provides as follows:

"improvements" means improvements defined in paragraph (a) of that definition in the Assessment Act

[para38] Before the definition in the Assessment Act was amended by S.B.C. 1990, c. 32, s. 1, the reference to "paragraph (a)" referred to the following, S.B.C. 1986, c. 2, s. 1:

"improvements" means

(a) buildings, fixtures, structures and similar things erected on or affixed to land or to anything referred to in paragraph (k),

[para39] The present definition of "Improvements" in the Assessment Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 20, does not include a "paragraph (a)". It states in part as follows:

"improvements" means any building, fixture, structure or similar thing constructed or placed on or in land, or water over land, or on or in another improvement ...

[para40] In my view, it is this portion of the definition of "improvements" in the Assessment Act, substantially the same as the former paragraph "(a)", that is now referentially incorporated into the Condominium Act.

[para41] In I.C.R.V. Holdings Ltd. v. Tri-Par Holdings Ltd. (1996), 3 R.P.R. (3d) 49 (B.C.S.C.), Tysoe J. considered s. 32(1) of the Property Law Act, which authorizes the court to remedy situations where a "building" encroaches on adjoining land. At issue was whether serviced R.V. pads constituted "buildings" within the meaning of the section.

[para42] Tysoe J. contrasted the relevant section of the Property Law Act with the Builders Lien Act and the Assessment Act. He emphasized that both the Builders Lien Act and Assessment Act contain definitions of the word "improvement", a much broader term than "building". At p. 61 he stated as follows:

The r.v. pads and accompanying services in the present case would clearly fall within this definition [of improvement]. However, when it enacted s. 32 of the Property Law Act, the Legislature chose not to use the term "improvement" but decided to use the narrower terms "building" and "Fence". If the Legislature had intended s. 32 to have application to improvements to land such as the r.v. pads and accompanying services, it would have employed a definition of "improvements" similar to the definitions contained in the Builders Lien Act and the Assessment Act.

[para43] In my view, the analysis employed by Tysoe J. applies a fortiori to the definition of "building" in the Condominium Act, as the Condominium Act itself employs and defines the word "improvement". By distinguishing between "buildings" and the broader category of "improvements", the legislature narrowed the concept of "buildings" to exclude constructions more accurately described as "fixtures" or "structures". In my view, a community mailbox would ordinarily be considered a "fixture", an item currently affixed to the ground but which would clearly otherwise be a chattel or personal property.

(iii) Floors, walls, and ceilings

[para44] Section 6 of the Act states as follows:

6. (1) Except in the case of a bare land strata plan and unless otherwise stated on the strata plan, the common boundary of a strata lot with any other strata lot or with common property is the centre of the floor, wall or ceiling, as the case may be.

(2) For the purposes of section 4(d), the boundaries of a strata lot must be defined,

(a) by reference to the floors, walls and ceilings,

(c) if the strata lot includes balconies, patios, private yard areas, garages, parking spaces, storage areas and other areas and spaces not enclosed by floors, walls or ceilings, in any manner approved by the registrar.

[emphasis added]

[para45] These provisions indicate that all "buildings" within the meaning of the Condominium Act have floors, walls, and ceilings. Section 6(2)(c) indicates that other spaces may be included in a strata lot, but it remains clear that a building strata lot is an area bounded by a floor, walls and ceiling.

[para46] One would ordinarily refer to the boundaries of a mailbox as its "bottom, sides, and top" rather than its "floor, walls and ceiling". For instance, "floor" is usually applied to surfaces upon which one can walk. This is particularly true of the word "ceiling", which does not appear in any other B.C. statute.

[para47] The Canadian Oxford Dictionary provides the following definition of "ceiling":

Ceiling. a. The upper interior surface of a room or other similar compartment.

Compartment. 1. A space within a larger space, separated from the rest by partitions.

[para48] A mailbox is a "compartment", but it is not, in my view, "similar to a room". A "room" is typically a place capable of entry, if not occupation, by human beings.

[para49] In my view, the use of the word "ceiling" is further evidence that a community mailbox is not a "building" within the meaning of the Condominium Act.

[para50] Section 5 of the Regulation states in part as follows:

5. Every strata plan tendered for deposit in a land title office and registration therein ... shall comply with the following requirements:

(1) (i) only the strata lots situate on the same floor of the building may be illustrated on a single sheet, and the name and number of such floor shall be shown at the top of the sheet ...

(s) the name (if any) of the building, together with its street address and the name of the municipality or assessment district in which such building is situate, shall be shown on the first sheet.

[emphasis added]

[para51] No more than limited use can be made of a Regulation in interpreting a Statute. However, in this case the registrar specifically referred to the Regulation in his reasons. As with the "floor, walls, and ceiling", the notion of "a floor of a building" is normally reserved for buildings into which humans or other animals may enter. Further, a "street address" is normally given only to lots or occupiable buildings, not a mailbox.

(iv) Capable of Occupation

[para52] Section 8 states as follows:

8. (1) If a strata plan is not a bare land strata plan, does not form part of a phased strata plan, and includes a building that has not been previously occupied, or a building to be constructed and developed, the owner developer must, on tendering a strata plan for deposit, file with the registrar a certificate of a British Columbia land surveyor, dated not more than 90 days before the date on which the strata plan is tendered for deposit, certifying that the building has not been occupied prior to the date of the certificate.

[para53] The appellants argue that this provision does not indicate that all buildings must be capable of occupation. They argue that a developer can produce a certificate certifying that a non-occupiable building has not been occupied prior to the date of the certificate. However, in my view, especially when considered in light of the scheme of the Act as a whole, section 8 clearly contemplates that all buildings will be capable of occupation, and distinguishes between those occupied prior to the date of application, and those to be occupied after the date of occupation.

[para54] In my view, this conclusion is supported by the following definition of "building", from Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Massachusetts: G & C Merriam, 1971):

Building: 1. A thing built. a: a constructed edifice designed to stand more or less permanently, covering a space of land, usu. covered by a roof and more or less completely enclosed by walls, and serving as a dwelling, storehouse, factory, shelter for animals, or other useful structure -- distinguished from structures not designed for occupancy (as fences or monuments) and from structures not intended for use in one place (as boats or trailers) even though subject to occupancy.

[emphasis added]

[para55] In my view, then, a "building" under the Condominium Act must be capable of occupancy.

(v) Postal Delivery Receptacle vs. Building

[para56] Finally, section 70(2) of the Act provides as follows: 70. (2) The strata corporation must, at a place convenient for postal delivery, have continually available a receptacle suitable for postal delivery, with the name of the corporation clearly marked on it.

[para57] The Canadian Oxford Dictionary (Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1998), provides the following definitions:

Mailbox. b. a private receptacle to which letters are delivered.

Receptacle. 1. A container or vessel in which something is stored or deposited.

This further indicates that the mailboxes are containers, not rooms, and that the structure is a cluster of receptacles, not a building.

(e) Ordinary Meaning: Dictionary Definitions

[para58] The Canadian Oxford Dictionary (Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1998), provides the following definition:

Building. 1. A permanent fixed structure forming an enclosure and providing protection from the elements etc. (e.g. an office building, school, house, etc.).

[para59] In Stevens v. Gourley (1859), [Vol. CXXI] 1859 C.P. 7 C.B.N.S. 99-100 p.397, in the absence of a definition in the statute, the Court considered whether a particular structure came within the term "building" in the statute. Erle, Ch. J. referred to the fact that the parties had stated in the building contract that the structure was to be a "house" or "shop". He found that the structure was permanent, and "reasonably calculated for the use of man" (p. 403). Crowder, J. gave weight to the "magnitude" of the structure, its intended purpose as a shop, and its permanence. At pp. 406-7, Byles, J. stated as follows:

... What is a "building?" Now, the verb "to build" is often used in a wider sense than the substantive "building." Thus, a ship or a barge builder is said to build a ship or a barge, a coach-builder to build a carriage; so birds are said to build nests: but neither of these when constructed can be called a "building." ... The imperfection of human language renders it not only difficult, but absolutely impossible, to define the word "building" with any approach to accuracy. One may say of this or that structure, this or that is not a building; but no general definition can be given; and our lexicographers do not attempt it. Without, therefore, presuming to do what others have failed to do, I may venture to suggest, that by "a building" is usually understood a structure of considerable size, and intended to be permanent, or at least to endure for a considerable time. ...On the other hand, it is equally clear that a bird-cage is not a building, neither is a wig-box, or a dog-kennel, or a hen-coop, the very value of these things being their portability.

[para60] In Morrison v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [1915] 1 K.B. 716, Rowlatt J. stated as follows with respect to the inquiry whether a structure is a "building" (p. 722):

The character of the erection and the nature of the property on which it is and its function on that property must all be looked at. And, as follows at p. 723:

I think that the word "buildings" in relation to a farm means in s. 25, sub-s. 2, of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, what one would ordinarily call farm buildings. If one were to say "this farm has very excellent buildings upon it," nobody conversant with farming language would suppose that one was talking about the stone walls which we have to consider in the present case, which run over the country to divide the fields, and also to shelter the sheep. I therefore do not think they are buildings.

[para61] In interpreting the word "buildings" in the B.C. Assessment Act, in B.C. Hydro & Power Authority v. British Columbia (Assessor of Area No. 05 - Port Alberni) [Q.L. 1990 B.C.J. No. 2714] (B.C.S.C.), Hood J. held that the word "buildings" in that Act was an ordinary English word and did not have any technical meaning. He therefore sought to give it an ordinary meaning. He applied the approach set out in Metals & Alloys Co. Ltd. v. Regional Assessment Commissioner Region No. 11 (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 289 (C.A.). That approach had been approved of by Gow J. in Galloway Lumber Co. v. Assessor of Area 22 - East Kootenay (1988), 29 B.C.L.R. 52 (S.C.), affirmed (1989), 40 B.C.L.R. (2d) 353 (C.A.). Hood J. referred to the following passage from page 306 of the Ontario decision:

"Building", however, is an ordinary English word, and in this statute should be given the meaning an ordinary person would attribute to it. What we have in this case looks like a building. It is almost identical to its neighbouring structure, which is admittedly a building. It is built like a building. It is used like a building. ...The only reasonable conclusion, in my view, is that it is a building.

[para62] In I.C.R.V. Holdings Ltd. (supra) at pp. 60-1, Tysoe J. referred to the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Dominion Fire Brick & Clay Products Ltd. v. Elmsthorpe (Rural Municipality), [1944] 2 W.W.R. 20 (Sask. C.A.). In that case, the question was whether certain assets were "buildings" or "machinery and equipment" under the Rural Municipality Act. Tysoe J. noted that the Court of Appeal had approved the following passage from the reasons of the Saskatchewan Assessment Commission: These definitions throughout suggest that a building is a structure which is designed for use as a habitation or other purposes of occupation, or for the storage of commodities. While the definition given in the Century Dictionary refers to user of the structure in general terms, it seems to the Commission that the author did not intend the scope of that definition to be extended to include machinery and equipment. In none of the judicial decisions affecting the word 'building' has it been suggested that the meaning of the word can be extended in this fashion.

Tysoe J. held that the above meaning of "building" was the same as that intended by the Legislature in s. 32 of the Property Law Act.

[para63] In my view, the word "building" ordinarily means a structure which is designed for use as a habitation or other purposes of occupation, or for the storage of commodities. Further, a "building" ordinarily is relatively permanent, and relatively large in size.

[para64] In the context of a residential or recreational subdivision or development, if one were to see a community mailbox standing next to an office building or a permanent dwelling, one would not ordinarily say that the community mailbox was "one of the buildings" in the development. Further, its function in the overall property would be an adjunct to the buildings or sites, rather than having an independent function.

(f) Related B.C. Legislation

(i) The Architects Act

[para65] The appellants refer to the Architects Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 17, s. 1, which defines "building" as follows:

"building" means a structure consisting of foundations, walls or roof, with or without other parts.

The appellants did not refer to the way in which this definition is employed in the Architects Act.

Section 59 states in part as follows:

A person is deemed to practise the profession of architecture within the meaning of this Act if the person

(a) is engaged in the planning or supervision of the erection or alteration of buildings for the use or occupancy of persons other than himself or herself ...

Section 27(2) prohibits a person from practising the profession of architecture unless the person holds a current certificate of practice. Section 60 sets out a list of exceptions, activities that are not prevented by section 27(2). In particular, s. 60(h) limits the application of s. 27(2) to eight defined types of "building".

[para66] In the Condominium Act the scope of the application of the Act depends upon the definition of "building". In the Architects Act the scope of application of the Act depends upon not the definition of "building", but the specific terms of s. 60(h). In my view, the terms serve very different functions in the overall scheme of each Act, and the definition in the Architects Act is broader than that applicable to the Condominium Act.

(ii) The Personal Property Security Act

[para67] The plaintiff also referred to the Personal Property Security Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 359, s. 1, which defines "building" as follows:

"building" means a structure, erection, mine or works built, constructed or opened on or in land.

However, the term "building" is only used in the definition of "building materials", which is itself only used to exclude "building materials" from the definition of "fixtures" for the purposes of the Act. Consequently, in my view it would be inappropriate to apply this definition to any other purpose.

(iii) The Building Safety Standards Act

[para68] The plaintiff did not refer to the Building Safety Standards Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 42, s. 1, which defines "building" as follows:

"building" means a structure that is used or intended to be used for the purpose of supporting or sheltering persons or animals or storing property, but does not include

(a) a prescribed structure, prescribed equipment, or

(b) a prescribed portion of equipment in or attached to a structure. The structure at issue in the present proceedings would not fall within the terms of this definition.

(g) Effect of Different Meanings

[para69] I agree entirely with the Respondent's brief where, at paragraph 22, it is stated:

It is also useful to consider the impact of a finding that a community mailbox could constitute a building under the Condominium Act on the legislative scheme for the filing of bare land strata plans. Bare land strata plans are filed in cases where a strata plan does not include a building but which will ultimately be used for the creation of residential subdivisions, for example. The regulations for a bare land strata title are much more onerous than the regulations for the deposit of a strata plan having a building. If one were to accept the definition of building put forth by the Appellant, it would be entirely unnecessary for any builder to attempt to register a bare land strata plan. Such an interpretation would render the entire scheme for the registration of bare land strata plans of no force or effect. At the very least, it makes a mockery of this scheme.

CONCLUSION:

[para70] The appropriate standard of review is reasonableness. In my view, the registrar acted reasonably in determining that the community mailbox is not a "building" for the purposes of the Condominium Act, and in declining to approve the plans. Nothing in the statutory language, evidence, or authorities, indicates any reason to depart from the ordinary meaning of "building". It was reasonable for the registrar to conclude that a "building" under the Condominium Act must have floors, walls, and a ceiling, and must be capable of occupation. It was reasonable for the registrar to conclude that the compartments in the community mailbox do not have "floors" or "ceilings". Accepting the appellant's interpretation would defeat the intent and operation of the "bare land strata" scheme, and its more onerous requirements.

[para71] I would accordingly dismiss the appeal, with costs to the respondent.

CBR# 180

James Marshall and Blanche May Marshall, petitioners, and The Owners, Strata Plan No. NW 2584, respondents

[1996] B.C.J. No. 1716

Vancouver Registry No. A961321

British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia Henderson J. Heard: May 28 and 30, 1996. Judgment: July 30, 1996. Filed: August 1, 1996.

Counsel: G. Grunberg, for the petitioners. P.A. Williams, for the respondents.

[para1] HENDERSON J.:-- Mr. and Mrs. Marshall own a strata lot in a condominium development where the Strata Corporation has restricted occupancy to persons 55 years of age or older. The Strata Corporation has also prohibited the owners from leasing their strata lot to others. The Marshalls say these two provisions of the by-laws are unfairly prejudicial to them and should be set aside. Issues involving the rule of stare decisis also arise.

[para2] Mr. and Mrs. Marshall purchased a strata lot at 1400 - 164th Street in Surrey, British Columbia in February, 1990. The premises are part of a condominium development and are governed by Strata Plan NW 2584.

[para4] At the time of purchase, a disclosure statement was available to the Marshalls which warned that:

The development is designed for persons of advance (sic) years. Children are not permitted to live on a permanent basis in the development.

The disclosure statement proposed a set of by-laws for the Strata Corporation which made no reference to an age restriction. The phrase "advance (sic) years" and the word "children" were not defined.

[para5] The proposed by-laws in the disclosure statement contained a provision allowing owners to rent their units as long as "reasonable screening procedures" were used to find responsible tenants and the prospective tenant was given a copy of the by-laws.

[para6] The Marshalls did not receive a copy of the disclosure statement prior to buying their unit. They told their real estate agent they wanted their son to live with them permanently.

[para7] Section 26(1) of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, C. 61, permits a strata corporation comprising the owners of the strata lots included in a strata plan to pass by-laws providing for the "control, management, administration, use and enjoyment of the strata lots and common property, common facilities and other assets" of the corporation. In 1991, a year after the Marshall's purchase of their unit, the Strata Corporation passed by-laws containing the following:

1. OCCUPANCY

a. Each strata lot is designed for persons of advancing years, 55 years or older. Children are not permitted to live on a permanent basis in the development. b. All prospective buyers are to be made aware of the By-Law and Restrictions.

2. RENTING

a. Each Strata lot shall be occupied as a single family residence. No owner shall allow the whole or any part of a strata lot to be occupied under circumstances where rent is charged. The stated number of leases or rented strata lots permitted is Zero (0)., with the following exception. b. During owner absences for an extended vacation, illness, or other cause, a Caretaker may be permitted to lease, subject to the following conditions ...

[para8] By 1993, some of the residents had complained about James Marshall (who was 48 at the time) living in the development. It was suggested he leave, but the Marshalls resisted. In a letter dated October 13, 1993, the Strata Council invited the Marshalls to apply to the Council for an exemption to the age restriction for James Marshall, implying that such an exemption would be forthcoming. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall declined to do that, saying the Corporation had no right to prevent their son living in the premises. At that point, the Strata Council relented and told the Marshalls their son could continue to live with them.

[para9] On November 29, 1995, the Strata Corporation amended its by-laws to read as follows:

1. AGE RESTRICTION

a. Each strata lot is designed for individuals of advancing years, 55 years and older. Children (meaning natural or adopted sons, daughters, family members et al) are not allowed to live on a permanent basis in the development.

b. Every strata lot is reserved for the use of individual(s) 55 years of age and older.

c. Individual(s) under the age of 55 years (with the exception of a spouse) shall not reside at Gateway Gardens. d. This By-law shall not be construed to be operating (sic) or prohibiting or restricting devolution of a strata lot as per Section 29 of the Condominium Act.

e. Individual(s) 55 years of age or older residing in a strata lot may have visitors stay with them who are under the age of 55 years, for up to one month per visitor in any twelve-month period. Visits longer than one month by individual(s) under the age of 55 years may be approved by the Strata Council, such approval not to be unreasonably withheld.

f. Any owner who has individual(s) residing in their strata lot who are under the age of 55 years and are not visitors as defined in sub-paragraph 3. of this By-law shall be liable to a fine in the amount of $250.00 per week for each week this By-law is being violated.

2. RENTING a. Each Strata lot shall be occupied as a single family residence. No Owner shall allow the whole or any part of a strata lot to be occupied under any circumstances where rent is charged. The stated number of leased or rented strata lots permitted is Zero (0), with the following exception:

b. (sic) During Owner absences for an extended vacation, illness, or other cause, a Caretaker (sic) be permitted to lease, subject to the following conditions ...

[para10] It is these two provisions of the current by-laws which Mr. and Mrs. Marshall seek to set aside. They rely upon Section 42 of the Condominium Act, which gives jurisdiction to this court to prevent or remedy acts of a strata corporation which are unfairly prejudicial to an owner. Section 43 of the Act allows this court to direct or prohibit an act of council, vary a resolution, or regulate the conduct of a corporation's future affairs.

[para11] On April 2, 1996, the Strata Council advised the Marshalls that it had rescinded its decision allowing James Marshall to live in the development because the Marshalls had declined to apply in 1993 (as they had been invited to do) for an exemption. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall responded by starting this action.

[para12] The owners have now consented to an order prohibiting the Council and the Corporation from seeking to evict James Marshall because of his age, and I make that order.

[para13] That does not dispose of this action. The Marshalls consider the continuing existence of the age restriction and the prohibition on renting to be unfairly prejudicial to them.

Age Restriction

[para14] The Marshalls say that the age restriction in the by-laws operates as a restriction on the devolution, transfer, lease or mortgage of the strata lot and is therefore contrary to Section 29 of the Condominium Act. The respondents say the age restriction was not intended to operate in that fashion and there is no evidence before the court that it does. They say the age restriction is a reasonable limit on the use and enjoyment of the strata lots which is justified by Section 26(1) of the Act.

[para15] Sections 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act provide:

Dealings in strata lots

29. Subject to section 30, the bylaws do not operate to prohibit or restrict (a) a devolution of a strata lot; or (b) a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing with a strata lot, or to destroy or modify an easement implied or created by this Act.

Restriction on leasing: general

30. (1) A strata corporation administering a strata plan that is wholly or partially residential may, by bylaw, limit the number of residential strata lots within the strata plan that may be leased by the owners. (2) A bylaw under subsection (1) shall set out the number of strata lots that may be leased and the manner in which the limitation will be enforced.

[para16] The word "by-laws" is defined in Section 1(1) of the Condominium Act to mean those by-laws set out in Part 5 of the Act itself together with any amendment to them passed by the strata corporation. By-laws prescribed by Part 5 of the Act provide a foundation upon which the corporation is invited to build its own set of by-laws suitable to its own unique situation. Section 29 contains a clear direction that nothing contained in Part 5 shall be viewed as restricting the right of alienation. A number of decisions of this court, referred to below, have confirmed that Section 29 also limits the jurisdiction conferred on a strata corporation by Section 26(1) to pass by-laws.

[para17] The Marshalls argue that the age restriction lessens the value of their strata lot because it reduces the pool of potential purchasers. Although someone under the age of 55 could buy their unit, that purchaser would not be allowed to occupy it. Since most purchasers wish to occupy what they buy, the age restriction serves to reduce demand for the unit and lower the price the Marshalls might obtain on the open market. This, they say, is an impermissible constraint on their right of alienation.

[para18] The truth of this assertion is not self-evident. It may well be that an age restriction limiting a condominium development to older people enhances its desirability amongst that age group. This may serve to increase demand for the strata unit within that age group and, therefore, add value. In my view, the question of whether a particular age restriction affects the value of a strata unit and, if so, how, can be demonstrated only through expert evidence. None was adduced here.

[para19] The Marshalls argue that the age restriction fetters their right to lease the strata lot. Only prospective tenants aged 55 or over could be considered by them. They also say that while Section 30 of the Act permits a quantitative restriction limiting the number of units that may be leased, it does not permit a restriction on any other basis. They rely upon Cowe v. Strata Plan VR 1359 and Others (1994), 92 B.C.L.R. (2d) 327 (B.C.S.C.), in which Saunders, J. set aside a by-law prohibiting an owner from renting unless he or she had first occupied the unit for 12 months. The combined operation of Sections 29 and 30 led to this result.

[para21] Section 5(1) contains a general prohibition on age discrimination with respect to tenants. It reads:

5.(1) No person shall

(a) deny to a person or class of persons the right to occupy, as a tenant, space that is represented as being available for occupancy by a tenant, or

(b) discriminate against a person or class of persons with respect to a term or condition of the tenancy of the space, because of the ... age of that person or class of persons ...

[para22] Section 5(2) provides the following exception:

Sub-section (1) does not apply ...

(b) As it relates to family status or age,

(i) if the space is a rental unit in residential premises in which every rental unit is reserved for rental to a person 55 years of age or older or to two or more persons, at least one of whom is 55 years of age or older, or

(ii) a rental unit in a prescribed class of residential premises ...

[para23] As far as rental accommodation is concerned, the Legislature has prohibited discrimination against tenants on the basis of age, but has made an express exception for premises in which every rental unit is designed for people 55 years of age or older. Clearly, the legislation recognizes the legitimacy of retirement communities where people of advancing years may live together with other members of their own generation. The Legislature has made a policy choice to permit this differentiation, based upon age, to exclude younger tenants. The benefits resulting from permitting older people to band together in retirement communities must be taken to outweigh the adverse consequence of placing some rental accommodation beyond the reach of younger people.

[para24] The Human Rights Act contains no prohibition on age discrimination in the purchase of strata lots at all. The intent of the Legislature manifested in Sections 4 and 5 of the Human Rights Act is to permit the creation of retirement communities by means of age restrictions whether the occupants rent or own the premises.

[para25] The Petitioners acknowledge this but assert that Sections 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act take precedence and have the effect of prohibiting age restrictions in strata corporation by-laws.

[para26] Sections 29 and 30 of the Condominium Act were enacted in 1977; the references to age restrictions in Section 5 of the Human Rights Act were enacted in 1992. Moreover, since human rights legislation defines public policy regarding matters of general and fundamental concern, an apparent conflict between it and other legislation must be resolved in favour of the former: Winnipeg School Division No. 1 v. Craton, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 150; R. v. Mercure, [1988] 2 W.W.R. 577, 633 (S.C.C.). In Winnipeg School Division No. 1, the Supreme Court of Canada said (at page 156):

Human rights legislation is of a special nature and declares public policy regarding matters of general concern. It is not constitutional in nature in the sense that it may not be altered, amended, or repealed by the Legislature. It is, however, of such nature that it may not be altered, amended, or repealed, nor may exceptions be created to its provisions, save by clear legislative pronouncement. To adopt and apply any theory of implied repeal by later statutory enactment to legislation of this kind would be to rob it of its special nature and give scant protection to the rights it proclaims.

[para27] That was said in the course of giving effect to an express prohibition on age discrimination in the Human Rights Act, 1974 (Man.), c. 65 s. 6(1) in preference to other applicable Provincial legislation. The present case differs somewhat because the conclusion that an age restriction in strata corporation by-laws is permissible arises only by implication from the legislation and is not express. In my view, that difference does not render the principle in Winnipeg School Division No. 1 inapplicable. The special nature of the Human Rights Act requires that its principles, even if merely implicit, must prevail (see Hsuen v. Mah (1986), 7 B.C.L.R. (2d) 21 (B.C.S.C.)).

[para28] I am satisfied that Sections 4 and 5 of the Human Rights Act must govern the situation. Not only is the Act subsequent legislation, so that no question of implied repeal can arise, but its special nature means an exception can be created only by clear legislative pronouncement. Section 29 of the Condominium Act does not accomplish that.

[para29] The Marshalls say this conclusion is not open to me as the age restriction issue has been decided conclusively in their favour by the decision of this court in 453048 British Columbia Ltd. v. The Owners, Strata Plan KAS 1079 (1994), 43 R.P.R. (2d) 293 (B.C.S.C.). There, Harvey, J. found a Strata Corporation by-law to be ultra vires which provided:

No owner shall permit any person (including himself) under the age of 50 years to occupy any strata lot by him (her) for a period in excess of 21 days aggregate in any calendar year. For the purpose of this sub-section 3, a person who uses his strata lot for overnight accommodation shall be deemed to have occupied the strata lot for one day for each occasion that he (she) uses the strata lot for his (her) overnight accommodation. Any variation is subject to approval in writing from the Strata Council.

[para30] Harvey, J. made two findings about this age restriction, both of which are equally binding upon me unless distinguishable or given per incuriam: see Behrens v. Bertram Mills Circus Ltd., [1957] 2 Q.B. 1, 25. He considered section 5 of the Human Rights Act and found the by-law in violation of that provision because it prohibited rental to tenants under 50. He noted that the by-law would not violate Section 5 if the age limit had been set at 55. Since the by-law before me sets the age at 55, this branch of Harvey, J.'s decision presents no difficulty.

[para31] He also held that the application of the by-law "is in all practical senses intended to control who owns and lives on the property." This was found to be a restriction on devolution, transfer or lease of the sort prohibited by Section 29 of the Act.

[para32] While the by-law under attack here differs in its language from that considered in 453048 British Columbia Ltd., its intent and effect is the same - to prohibit people under a particular age from living in the development for more than a short period of time. The only difference of consequence between the two by-laws is the specified age, 55 in the present case and 50 in the case before Harvey, J. Does that provide a basis for distinguishing the prior decision? In my view, it does not. The essence of this branch of the decision in 453048 British Columbia Ltd. is a finding that a by-law with an age restriction on occupancy does not merely provide for the use and enjoyment of a strata lot but amounts to a restriction on the right of alienation. Whether the age limit is set at 50 or 55 makes no difference to that finding.

[para33] I am free to depart from a prior decision of this court where binding authority or a relevant statutory provision has been overlooked: Re Hansard Spruce Mills Limited (In Bankruptcy) (1954), 13 W.W.R. (N.S.) 285. In reaching his conclusion that a by-law with an age restriction on occupancy offends Section 29, Harvey, J. makes no reference to the Human Rights Act or to the important principle in Winnipeg School Division No. 1 concerning the special nature of such legislation. Had that principle been brought to his attention, the decision on this branch of the case would have been different. The finding that an age restriction on occupancy is ultra vires because of Section 29 was per incuriam. I am not bound by it.

[para34] While Section 29 of the Condominium Act forbids the prohibition or restriction of leasing in strata by-laws, both Section 30 of that Act and Section 5 of the Human Rights Act provide exceptions whereby the right of a strata lot owner to lease the property may be restricted. [para35] For the reasons given above, I find that Section 1 of the by-law enacted November 29, 1995 is within the jurisdiction of the Strata Corporation.

Restriction on Renting

[para36] Section 30 of the Condominium Act allows a strata corporation to limit the number of residential strata lots that may be leased by the owners. The Act also contains these exceptions:

31. (3) A bylaw passed by a strata corporation under section 30 does not restrict the right

...

(b) of an owner who has leased his strata lot to a tenant pursuant to a tenancy agreement entered into before the bylaw is passed to continue the lease pursuant to the agreement or renew or extend it.

32. (1) Where

(b) an owner is prevented from leasing by a bylaw under section 30; and (c) hardship results to the ... owner, he may appeal to the strata council for permission to lease his strata lot, and the council shall not unreasonably refuse the appeal.

(3) The strata council may on an appeal authorize the lease of one or more strata lots in contravention of the bylaw, or permit alteration of a rental disclosure statement without the consent of the owners.

[para37] The Marshalls say that the complete prohibition on renting is not authorized by Section 30 and is an unlawful restriction on the right to lease, contrary to Section 29. They argue that, although a strata corporation has the undoubted right to "limit" the number of lots that may be leased, it is not entitled to prohibit leasing entirely. Use of the word "limit" coupled with the direction in Section 30(2) to "set out the number" of lots that may be leased reflects, say the Marshalls, an intention on the part of the Legislature to allow at least one owner to rent out at least one unit. The "number" must be more than zero.

[para38] Unfortunately, there are conflicting judgments of this court on the question and the conflict has yet to be resolved by the Court of Appeal. In Re The Condominium Act and Re Mattiazzo & Others (21 March 1985), Vancouver A850287, Wood J. considered a by-law which limited the number of strata lots that could be rented to six and then went on to provide that any units sold after the date of the by-law could no longer be rented. Wood, J. found that in time the by-law could have led to a situation where no owner was entitled to rent. He held that this was a contravention of Section 30 of the Act because an absolute prohibition on leasing is not a "limit".

[para39] Another judgment of this court decided about one month after Mattiazzo comes to the opposite conclusion. In Von Schottenstein v. Owners, Strata Plan 730 (1985), 64 B.C.L.R. 376 (S.C.), Hutchison, L.J.S.C., reviewed a strata corporation by-law which prohibited leasing without the express permission of the strata council. The decision in Mattiazzo was not brought to his attention. After conceding that "if one is to limit a number, there must be something more than zero remaining", Hutchison L.J.S.C. said "there is something more than zero in the sense that there is always a right of appeal." Because Section 32 of the Condominium Act permits an owner to appeal, in the case of hardship, to the Strata Council for permission to lease (a permission which shall not be unreasonably refused), the prohibition was something less than absolute - that is, a limitation.

[para40] In 453881 B.C. Ltd. and Others v. The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 508 (1994), 41 R.P.R. (2d) 318 (B.C.S.C.), Boyle J. of this court set aside a by-law containing an absolute prohibition on leasing. Both Mattiazzo and Von Schottenstein were cited to him. He decided to follow Mattiazzo, but gave no reasons for doing so.

[para41] The Respondents argue that this literal interpretation of Section 30 leads to an absurd result. No apparent legislative purpose is served by requiring a strata corporation which wishes to prohibit leasing entirely to, nevertheless, provide that the first owner (but only the first) who wishes to lease his or her unit may do so as of right.

[para42] The purchaser of a strata lot acquires an interest as a tenant in common in the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation: Section 12(1). These may be of considerable value. The continuing enjoyment by the owners of their strata lots is dependent upon the preservation and maintenance of these common assets. All owners have a clear and immediate interest in accomplishing that. Tenants, who may be living in the development for just a short time, do not necessarily share that goal. They have invested nothing. The Legislature has recognized this difference by providing that the owners, who have a real stake in the long term future of the condominium development, may limit the number of units that may be occupied by those without such an interest - tenants.

[para43] The three prior decisions of this court all recognize that a strata corporation is permitted to limit renting to the extent that only one owner in the entire development may have a tenant at any given time. Having made this policy choice, why would the Legislature nevertheless wish to prevent a strata corporation from prohibiting leasing entirely? The objective is achieved most effectively by a complete prohibition; less so, by allowing one owner to rent.

[para44] The decision in Von Schottenstein overlooks the judgment given shortly before in Mattiazzo. The former must be regarded as per incuriam. I am bound to follow Mattiazzo and the subsequent decision in 453881 B.C. Ltd., which follows it. Since Section 2 of the by-law of November 29, 1995 purports to prohibit leasing entirely, it is beyond the jurisdiction conferred by Section 30 and must be set aside.

[para45] The Marshalls also argue that the restriction on renting should be set aside as the by-law does not set out the manner in which the provision will be enforced as required by Section 30(2) of the Condominium Act. This point was not pressed. I am satisfied that Section 11 of the by-law, which provides for a letter of warning on the first infraction followed by fines in increasing amounts for subsequent infractions, satisfies the statutory requirement.

[para46] Since success in the action has been divided equally, the parties will bear their own costs.

IN THE MATTER OF Blue-Red Holdings Limited and Sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.61. Between Blue-Red Holdings Limited, Petitioner, and The Owners, Strata Plan VR 857, Respondent [1994] B.C.J. No. 2293

Vancouver Registry No. A941905 British Columbia Supreme Court Vancouver, British Columbia (In Chambers) Dorgan J. Heard: August 4, 1994. Judgment: October 3, 1994. Filed: October 5, 1994.

resolutions passed at the second meeting were also unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

Counsel for the Petitioner: David L. Miachika. Counsel for the Respondent: Jamie A. Bleay.

[para1] DORGAN J.:-- This application is brought pursuant to sections 42 and 43 of the Condominium Act, and Rules 10 and 57 of the Rules of Court, for a declaration that certain special resolutions passed by the respondent Strata Corporation, and certain special assessments levied by it against the petitioner, are void and of no effect.

Background

[para2]X.-The petitioner Blue-Red Holdings Limited ["Blue- Red"] is the registered owner of a four-storey stand-alone commercial building located at 842 Thurlow Street, in the City of Vancouver. This building and a separate eight-storey residential building located at 1045 Thurlow Street, together form a mixed residential and commercial strata property commonly known as "City View". The residential building contains 160 residential strata units or lots numbered 1 to 160. The commercial building is comprised solely of strata lot 161.

[para3] The respondent is a Strata Corporation. The 1992 Disclosure Statement for the property shows the bylaws to be those contained in Part 5 of the Condominium Act.

[para4] On March 15, 1993, a special resolution repealing the bylaws contained in Part 5 of the Condominium Act and replacing them with a new set of bylaws was filed. Those bylaws, among other things, required the owners of the residential property to form a separate residential section within the strata corporation and the owners of the commercial property to form a separate commercial section within the strata corporation [see Section 1(1) and (2)]. The duties of the separate sections of the Strata Corporation are set out in Section 4. The apportionment of the expenditures for the strata property, as between the residential and commercial sections, is set out in Section 18. The March 15, 1993 bylaws require that not less than one-third of the total members of the Strata Council be representatives from the commercial section [see Section 7(4)].

[para5] The first Annual General Meeting of the Strata Corporation was held on April 19, 1993. At that meeting seven owners of residential strata lots were nominated and elected as strata council members. No representatives of the commercial property were elected to the strata council.

[para6] Effective November 1, 1993 Vancouver Condominium Services Ltd. [VCS"] became the manager for the Strata Corporation on behalf of the respondent. Mr. Gerry Fanaken, the president of VCS, was the primary contact.

[para7] Early in 1994 Francis and Tony Yip acquired the shares of Blue-Red which then owned the commercial property. On January 4, 1994 at an Extraordinary General Meeting, a special resolution was passed regarding an assessment to pay for hiring an engineer in regard to re-piping to the residential property. This assessment applied only to the residential strata lots 1 to 160, and not to the commercial strata lot 161. The commercial owner had already incurred the cost of an engineer's inspection and had borne that cost itself without contribution from the residential owners.

[para8] About the time the Yips acquired the Blue-Red shares, their solicitor wrote to Mr. Fanaken expressing concern about the composition of the strata council and the fact that it was without representation from the commercial section in contravention of the then bylaws. In his January 6, 1994 reply, Mr. Fanaken stated the strata council felt it impractical to try to restructure the council at that stage in the Corporation's operating year, and said it was the council's intention to address the issue of its composition at the 1994 Annual General Meeting. That meeting was held April 5, 1994.

[para9] On March 11, 1994 Mr. Francis Yip, as a director and shareholder of the petitioner, met with Mr. Fanaken to discuss various issues, including fee splits between the commercial and residential sections and the re-adjustment of maintenance fees. At that meeting Mr. Fanaken told Mr. Yip that an insurance surcharge of approximately $3,800.00 would be assessed against the commercial property and not the residential property due to the increased risk from the commercial property tenants, which included two restaurants.

[para10] A notice was issued on March 18, 1994 advising the strata lot owners of the Annual General Meeting scheduled for April 5, 1994. Attached to the notice was the agenda for the meeting, the proposed budget for 1994/95, proposed bylaws to replace the existing bylaws, and a draft resolution adopting the new bylaws. The budget projected for the 1994/95 year showed the monthly maintenance fees of the commercial property would remain in the amount charged in the previous year, namely, $364.87 per month.

[para11] On March 23, 1994, VCS wrote the petitioner's representative to advise that the maintenance fees payable by the petitioner would increase to $1,027.45 per month.

[para12] Although Mr. Francis Yip, the director and representative of Blue-Red, received a copy of that notice prior to his leaving the country for a holiday, no representative of Blue-Red attended the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting.

[para13] Two special resolutions to amend the existing bylaws were approved by the respondent at the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting. A new strata council was then elected and, like its predecessor, was comprised of seven members, all owners of residential strata lots.

[para14] On May 13, 1994, VCS gave Ms. Moody of D.N.M. Management Corporation, a company managing the property for the petitioner, an account which showed the petitioner's arrears of maintenance fees and other charges then totalled $12,464.43. Mr. Francis Yip met with Mr. Fanaken on May 17, 1994 with regard to that statement of account and other matters. Ms. Moody and Mr. Tony Yip also attended. There was some discussion about the 1994/95 Budget and the increased maintenance fees. Mr.

Francis Yip and Mr. Fanaken agreed that Blue-Red could pay the existing arrears in three equal monthly instalments commencing June, 1994. The first instalment was paid subsequent to that meeting, and prior to June 7, 1994.

[para15] At the same May 17, 1994 meeting, Mr. Fanaken gave Mr. Yip a copy of a notice dated May 17, 1994 announcing an Extraordinary General Meeting scheduled for June 7, 1994. The agenda attached to the notice referred to four special resolutions. The petitioner alleges that Mr. Fanaken agreed that the first three special resolutions relating to assessments totalling $600,000 (in large part for the re-piping project) related solely to the residential property, and that any special assessments resulting from those resolutions would not be charged against Blue-Red. This was also Ms. Moody's understanding. Mr. Fanaken denies any such agreement.

[para16] Mr. Yip also says there was a further understanding reached that any costs of repair or replacement to the re-piping to the commercial property would be borne solely by Blue-Red. Mr. Yip says that Mr. Fanaken wanted this understanding to be reduced to writing, and Mr. Yip expected the Strata Corporation would prepare such an agreement.

[para17] On May 26, 1994, Mr. Fanaken wrote to Ms. Moody indicating that unless an agreement was reached between the parties, it was the strata council's position that the full amount of all special levies would be assessed against all lots, including the petitioner's strata lot 161. Mr. Yip alleges he understood an agreement had been reached and that Mr. Fanaken wanted it confirmed in writing and that he, Mr. Yip, expected the Strata Corporation would prepare the document. Mr. Fanaken and Mr. Burko (an employee of VCS with some involvement in this matter) say no agreement on these points was reached. They say this arrangement was proposed; Mr. Fanaken expected Mr. Yip, if he agreed, would reduce such an agreement to writing shortly after the May 17, 1994 meeting.

[para18] On June 6, 1994, Mr. Burko, an assistant to Mr. Fanaken at VCS, informed Ms. Moody that Blue-Red's maintenance account was still substantially in arrears and that until the arrears were fully paid the petitioner could not vote at the Extraordinary General Meeting.

[para19] Mr. Yip alleges that as a result of his understanding that the assessments arising from three of the four special resolutions would not be levied against the petitioner's strata lot, combined with the knowledge that Blue-Red was not entitled to vote, no representative of Blue-Red attended the June 7, 1994 Extraordinary General Meeting.

[para20] At the Extraordinary General Meeting, the respondent approved the four special resolutions set out in the May 19, 1994 notice, resulting in assessments being levied against all strata lots including that of the petitioner.

[para21] After the June 7, 1994 meeting, Mr. Burko told Mr. Yip that the petitioner's share of those assessments amounted to approximately $92,000.00, payable in four monthly instalments commencing July 1, 1994.

[para22] On June 8, 1994, Ms. Moody was advised by Mr. Fanaken that, as no agreement had been reached between Blue-Red and the respondent prior to the June 7, 1994 meeting that the cost of re-piping or related expenses in respect of the commercial property be borne solely by Blue-Red, the four special resolutions regarding the re-piping project to the residential property was, by these resolutions, assessed against all strata lot owners including Blue-Red.

[para23] The respondent then filed a lien against the petitioner's lot for outstanding maintenance fees and arrears and the petitioner started this action.

Relief Sought

[para24] The petitioner seeks a declaration that the two special resolutions passed at the Annual General Meeting on April 5, 1994 and the four special resolutions passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting on June 7, 1994 are ultra vires, illegal and void, or alternatively, oppressive and unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner, and seeks to set them aside as void and of no effect.

Issue 1: Were the two special resolutions passed April 5, 1994 purporting to amend the Strata Corporation's bylaws

(a) ultra vires

Was the strata council properly constituted?

[para25] The strata council elected at the first Annual General Meeting on April 19, 1993 consisted only of residential unit owners. Thus, the petitioner submits, it was not duly elected in accordance with Section 7(4) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws. It is a mandatory, not a permissive, provision. The petitioner submits that the special resolutions to amend the bylaws, passed at the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting, are therefore ultra vires.

[para26] The respondent says the failure to elect representatives of the commercial section to the strata council does not invalidate the decisions rendered by that council between April 19, 1993 and April 5, 1994. The respondent submits that the petitioner, by its actions, acquiesced to the constitution of the strata council. Indeed, more than eight months elapsed between the time the council was elected and the petitioner, through its solicitor by letter dated January 3, 1994, voiced its concern about the make-up of the council.

[para27] There is no doubt, in my view, that the strata council elected April 19, 1993 was not properly constituted. It was not elected in accordance with Section 7(4) of the bylaws then in force. The question is whether the actions taken by that council are therefore invalid. In particular, does the fact that the resolutions to amend the bylaws were proposed by an improperly constituted council invalidate those resolutions?

[para28] Counsel have not provided any case law on this point. Nor has my search revealed any. In my opinion the improper make-up of the strata council elected on April 19, 1993 is not a fatal defect. I have reached this conclusion based on two considerations: the acquiescence of the respondent; and s.122(3) of the Condominium Act. That subsection provides that all acts done in good faith by the council are valid even if it is subsequently discovered that there was some defect in the appointment or continuance in office of a member of council. S.122(3) of the Act is echoed in By-law 12(4) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws.

[para29] Although the improper constitution of the council is not truly a defect in the appointment of a particular member of council, by analogy I conclude that the acts of the improperly constituted council in this case, if they were done in good faith, and keeping in mind the acquiescence of the respondent for several months following this council's election, are valid. The question therefore is: were the actions of this strata council done "in good faith".

[para30] In Nystad v. Harcrest Apartments Ltd. (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 39 (S.C.) McEachern C.J.S.C. (as he then was) stated that "good faith" is a term used to describe a state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud and being faithful to one's duty or obligation.

[para31] There is no evidence whatsoever before me that the strata council acted dishonestly or with intention to defraud or was unfaithful to its duty or obligation. I therefore conclude that the actions of the strata council elected on April 19, 1993 in proposing the two special resolutions to amend the corporation's bylaws were done in good faith and although the council was improperly constituted, its actions were valid.

Was the March 18, 1994 notice of the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting deficient?

[para32] The petitioner says the March 18, 1994 notice regarding the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting was deficient because it:

(i) failed to advise that the resolutions to amend the bylaws could not be passed except in accordance with s.26(4) of the Act, that is, by not less than 3/4 of the votes of the residential owners and 3/4 of the votes of the commercial owners who are present at the meeting;

(ii) referred to the proposed amended bylaws as "special resolutions", not "resolutions" contrary to s.26(4) of the Act;

(iii) did not adequately specify the purpose of the meeting;

(iv) gave the petitioner less than 14 days clear notice.

[para33] The respondent submits that the March 18, 1994 notice complies with bylaw 13(6) which requires that notice of the Annual General Meeting specify the place, date and hour of the meeting, and the general nature of special business.

[para34] In my view the March 18, 1994 notice of the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting was not deficient. First, neither the Act nor the bylaws require the notice to include notification of the applicable quorum.

[para35] Second, the use of the term "special resolutions" was not improper. Section 14(1) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws, a provision which echoes s.124(1) of the Condominium Act, provides that, with certain exceptions, all business transacted at an annual general meeting shall be deemed "special".

[para36] Further, the notice adequately described the "general nature of the business to be conducted at the meeting" by enclosing complete copies of the proposed bylaws. In my view the phrase "general nature of the business" establishes a relatively low threshold test for the giving of notice. The bylaws attached to the notice were unanimously passed at the meeting. This, in my view, constituted sufficient notice of the "general nature of the business".

[para37] The notice was dated March 18, 1994. That was 16 days prior to the April 5, 1994 meeting. The notice therefore met the requirement of notice of general meetings, set out in s.13(6) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws, a provision which echoes s.123(5) of the Condominium Act. However, the business to be conducted at the meeting was "special", and was indicated in the notice to be the passage of "special resolutions".

[para38] Although "special resolution" is not defined in the bylaws, s.1 of the Condominium Act states it is "a resolution passed at a properly convened General Meeting of the Strata Corporation, of which at least 14 days notice specifying the purpose of the Special Resolution has been given ...". The notice of the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting met this 14 day requirement.

(c) Was the quorum proper?

[para39] The petitioner submits that the bylaws were improperly passed as "special resolutions" rather than "resolutions" as required by s.26(4) of the Condominium Act. This is significant, the petitioner submits, because a resolution under s.26(4) of the Act requires a quorum of 3/4 of the votes of the owners of the residential lots and 3/4 of the votes of the owners of the non-residential or commercial lots, whereas "special resolutions", as defined in s.1 of the Act, require a quorum of not less than 3/4 of the votes of all persons entitled to vote.

[para40] In addition, the petitioner says that as a quorum of persons entitled to vote on the resolutions to amend the bylaws was not present at the Annual General Meeting, the meeting ought to have been adjourned for one week in accordance with sections 14(2) to (4) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws.

[para41] The respondent submits that bylaws 13, 14 and 15 of the March 15, 1993 bylaws, being the bylaws in effect immediately prior to the April 5, 1994 Annual General Meeting, specify the procedure to be complied with where special business is conducted at an Annual General Meeting.

[para42] Bylaw 14(2) provides that business shall not be transacted unless a quorum of persons entitled to vote is present.

[para43] Bylaw 14(3) provides that "1/3 of the persons entitled to vote present in person or by proxy constitutes a quorum".

[para44] The respondent submits that the quorum necessary for the meeting to proceed, as set out in bylaw 14(3), was complied with as 69 owners were present, in person or by proxy, being 43% of the persons entitled to vote. Further, the bylaw amendments, which were presented as special resolutions, were unanimously approved by the owners present at the Annual General Meeting.

[para45] S.1 of the Condominium Act states that a "special resolution" is:

... a resolution passed at a properly convened general meeting of the strata corporation, of which at least 14 days' notice specifying the purpose of the special resolution has been given, by not less than 3/4 of the votes of all persons entitled to vote thereon under this Act or the bylaws, present at the meeting in person or by proxy at the time the resolution is passed.

[para46] I conclude that the quorum requirement in bylaw 14(3) was met, and it was proper to proceed with the business transacted at that general meeting.

[para47] I also conclude that the special resolutions amending the bylaws were properly passed as they were unanimously approved by the owners present at the meeting. Unanimous approval more than met the requirements for special resolutions as set out in s.1 of the Act.

[para48] Further, even if these amendments ought to have been passed as resolutions under s.26(4) of the Condominium Act, rather than as special resolutions, I conclude that the requirements of that section were complied with.

S.26(4) reads as follows:

(4) In the case of a strata corporation administering a strata plan that is not exclusively residential but contains more than one residential strata lot, the bylaws shall not be amended unless the changes are made as specified in the bylaws, or a strata council has been elected and the changes have been approved by a resolution passed at a properly convened meeting of the strata corporation, of which at least 14 days' notice specifying the purpose of the meeting has been given in the same manner as notice is required to be given of a special resolution, by not less than 3/4 of the votes of the owners of the residential strata lots and not less than 3/4 of the votes of the other owners of strata lots entitled in each case to vote on it under this Act or the bylaws and who are present at the meeting in person or by proxy at the time the resolution is passed.

(Emphasis added.)

[para49] The petitioner submits that for the resolutions to be properly passed, not less than 3/4 of the votes of the owners of the commercial lot were required. I do not agree with that interpretation. The key words, on my reading of this subsection, are "and who are present at the meeting ... at the time the resolution is passed". The petitioner, being the only non-residential owner, was not present at the meeting, in person or by proxy. Thus it was only necessary for the resolutions to be approved by 3/4 of the votes of the owners of the residential strata lots. That requirement was met by the unanimous approval of all 69 residential owners present at the meeting, in person or by proxy, at the time the resolutions were passed.

(b) Are the resolutions oppressive or unfairly prejudicial?

[para50] Under s.42 of the Condominium Act application may be made to the court for a remedy where an owner alleges that the affairs of the strata corporation are being conducted in a manner which is oppressive or where some act of the strata corporation or some resolution it has passed is unfairly prejudicial to him. S.43 of the Act gives the court wide authority to make the order it considers appropriate, including to direct or prohibit an act of council or to vary a transaction or resolution.

[para51] The meaning of the terms "oppressive" and "unfairly prejudicial", as they are used in s.42 of the Condominium Act, was considered by Lander J. in Esteem Investments Ltd. v. Owners, Strata Plan VR1513 (1987), 21 B.C.L.R. (2d) 352 at 355 (S.C.), appeal allowed on other grounds (1988), 32 B.C.L.R. (2d) 324 (C.A.). He referred to the case of O'Connor v. Winchester Oil & Gas Inc. (1986), 69 B.C.L.R. 330 at 336 where the learned judge defined oppressive conduct, within the meaning of s.224 of the Company Act, as conduct that is "burdensome, harsh or wrongful or which lacks probity or fair dealing" and the term "unfairly prejudicial" as acts that are unjust and inequitable. Lander J. also noted that in Nystad v. Harcrest Apts. Ltd. (1986), 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 39 (S.C.) McEachern C.J.S.C. (as he then was) equated oppressive conduct with faith.

[para52] The petitioner submits that the special resolutions to amend the bylaws were passed in a manner that was procedurally unfair and oppressive to the interests of Blue-Red. In particular, the petitioner says that the resolutions were proposed by an improperly constituted strata council, the notice regarding those resolutions was deficient, and the resolutions were passed by an improper quorum of owners. Further, the amended bylaws completely replaced the scheme of segregating expenses and responsibilities between the residential units and the commercial units as contemplated by sections 51 and 52 of the Condominium Act, and as established by sections 1(1) and (2) of the March 15, 1993 bylaws.

[para53] The respondent submits that the two special resolutions amending the bylaws were not oppressive or unfairly prejudicial, nor was the conduct of the strata council in presenting the proposed by-law amendments burdensome, harsh or wrongful, or lacking in probity or fair dealing. The respondent submits that the new bylaws continued to recognize the distinction between the commercial and residential strata lots, and in no way restricted the petitioner's right to participate in the government of the strata corporation. The respondent submits that the petitioner ought to have attended the April 5, 1994 meeting and exercised its right to nominate a representative to stand for election to the strata council, and exercised its right to vote against the special resolutions.

[para54] I have already concluded that although the special resolutions to amend the bylaws were proposed by an improperly constituted strata council, that irregularity is not fatal. I have also concluded that, as both the notice and the quorum requirements were met, the meeting was properly convened.

[para56] The new bylaws impose a substantial change in the scheme of segregating expenses and responsibilities between the residential units and the commercial units as contemplated by sections 51 and 52 of the Condominium Act, and as set out in the March 15, 1993 bylaws. The new bylaws passed on April 5, 1994 deleted the requirement, under sections 1 and 8 of the March 15, 1993 bylaws, for the owners to establish separate commercial and residential sections and executive. Further, the requirement under section 7(4) that at least 1/3 of the members of the strata council be representatives from the commercial section was deleted. Although the latter change did not prevent the petitioner from participating in the government of the corporation, it is a significant change in the nature of the petitioner's rights under the bylaws. That is, the petitioner was no longer guaranteed representation on the strata council.

[para57] In my opinion, the change in the scheme of the bylaws was detrimental to the petitioner and significantly changed its rights. The amendments did not have a similar impact on the rights of other owners. In my view these amendments were "unfairly prejudicial" to the petitioner. Accordingly, they are void and of no effect.

Issue 2: Are the four special resolutions passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting on June 7, 1994

(a) ultra vires because

(i) the resolutions were contrary to the March 19, 1993 bylaws which, the petitioner submits, were improperly deleted and replaced on April 5, 1994, or

(ii) the strata council was not constituted in accordance with the March 19, 1993 bylaws, or

(iii) the resolutions were contrary to an agreement between the parties, or

(iv) the petitioner was improperly denied its right to vote, or, alternatively,

(b) oppressive and unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner?

Were the resolutions contrary to the bylaws?

[para58] The March 15, 1993 bylaws are the applicable bylaws as I have found the two special resolutions passed on April 5, 1994, which purported to amend the March 15, 1993 bylaws, of no force and effect.

[para59] On the principle of ownership of common property, strata lot owners, as a group, are responsible for the cost of repairs to common property. However, where the strata property includes lots that are residential and non-residential, both the Condominium Act and the bylaws of this strata corporation contemplate that separate sections be formed. Indeed, section 1 of the March 15, 1993 bylaws states that the owners of all residential strata lots in this property shall form a separate "residential section", and that all owners of non-residential strata lots shall form a separate "commercial section".

[para60] S.128(2)(a) of the Condominium Act provides, in part, that where a strata plan consists of more than one type of strata lot, the common expenses attributable to one or more type of strata lot shall be allocated to that type of lot and shall be borne by the owners of that type of strata lot. "Type" is not defined in the Act, but in my view, "residential" and "commercial" are different "types" of strata lots. [para61] Section 18 of the March 15, 1993 bylaws clarifies the question of apportionment of common expenses between the residential and commercial sections. Section 18(1) defines "common expenses" as expenses incurred, among other things, in repairing, maintaining and replacing the common property, common facilities and other assets of the strata corporation. Section 18(4) sets out the manner in which common expenses are to be apportioned between the residential section and the commercial section. Subsection (4)(a) states that common expenses attributable to either separate section shall be allocated to that separate section and borne by the owners of the lots within that separate section. Section 18(8) states that an annual budget is to be prepared allocating common expenses as between the separate sections of the strata corporation.

[para63] In any event I am satisfied that the four special resolutions passed at the June 7, 1994 Extraordinary General Meeting were "unfairly prejudicial" to the petitioner.

[para64] The petitioner submits that the following acts of the respondent were oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to Blue-Red:

(1) Mr. Fanaken of VCS advised the petitioner on May 17, 1994 that the three special resolutions, totalling $600,000, related solely to the residential property and would not be assessed against Blue-Red;

(2) The comments of Mr. Fanaken in (1), and the comments made by Mr. Burko to Ms. Moody to the effect that the petitioner would not be entitled to vote at the Extraordinary General Meeting scheduled for June 7, 1994, led the petitioner to believe that there was no reason for its representative to attend that meeting;

(3) Charging assessments against the petitioner for expenses related solely to the residential units is inconsistent with the previous conduct of the respondents for Special Resolution No. 1 passed on January 4, 1994. That resolution was for the costs of an engineer's report and legal advice related solely to deficiencies in the pipes in the residential property. That assessment was charged only against the owners of the residential property and not against the petitioner. The petitioner also gives the example of an insurance surcharge which was levied only against the petitioner's commercial property and not against the residential property because the strata council determined that the additional premium related solely to the commercial property.

[para65] The respondent denies that the four special resolutions were oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

[para66] The respondent says that contrary to the claim made by the petitioner, no agreement was reached between Mr. Fanaken and Mr. Yip regarding the non-application of the first three resolutions to the commercial property. The respondent says that a written agreement was required to be entered into between the petitioner and the respondent whereby the petitioner would agree that it would be financially responsible for all future costs of repairing and replacing the water pipes in strata lot 161. The respondent submits that the petitioner was aware that if no such written agreement was entered into the special resolutions would be assessed against the owners of all strata lots, including lot 161.

[para67] The respondent further submits that Special Resolution No. 1, passed January 4, 1994, was not assessed against the petitioner because the parties had a special agreement with regard to that resolution. That is, the parties agreed that as the petitioner had previously incurred an expense for a similar inspection of the commercial building, Blue-Red would be exempted from that special resolution.

[para68] I am satisfied that at the May 17, 1994 meeting Mr. Fanaken led the petitioner to believe that the first three special resolutions, totalling some $600,000 and relating solely to the residential property, would not be assessed against strata lot 161. He then notified Ms. Moody, on May 26, 1994, that a written agreement was required whereby the petitioner would agree that it would be financially responsible for all future costs of repairing and replacing the water pipes in strata lot 161. Otherwise the special resolutions would be assessed against the owners of all strata lots, including lot 161. This was a mere eleven days prior to the Extraordinary General Meeting.

[para69] Further, it was not until June 6, 1994 that Mr. Burko notified Ms. Moody that the petitioner would not be entitled to vote at the Extraordinary General Meeting because the petitioner's maintenance fee arrears were not fully paid. Although the May 17, 1994 notice of that meeting stated that "in order to vote an owner must be paid up in all arrears of maintenance, fines or other charges owing to the strata corporation", I am satisfied that, based on the May 17, 1994 agreement between the parties for the arrears owing by the petitioner to be paid in instalments, the petitioner may not have understood that it would not be entitled to vote at the meeting until the day before or the day of that meeting.

[para70] The petitioner's proportionate share of the assessments flowing from the special resolutions is approximately $92,000. This is a significant amount and I accept the petitioner's evidence that it will create extreme financial hardship to its continued operation of the commercial property.

[para71] In light of the agreement reached on May 17, 1994 regarding the deferred payment of arrears, the resultant misunderstanding as to the impact of the arrears on the petitioner's right to vote, and the past conduct of the corporation in allocating expenses related to a particular section to that section, and the understanding reached that the plaintiff would be exempted from the special assessments levied to pay the costs of the re-piping project to the residential section, I conclude that the totality of the respondent's conduct was unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner. It was unjust and inequitable. Accordingly, the four special resolutions passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting June 7, 1994, and the special assessments flowing from those resolutions, are void and of no effect. Not only do they not comply with the March 15, 1993 bylaws, but they are unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner.

Conclusion

[para72] The petition is allowed. The two special resolutions passed at the Annual General Meeting on April 5, 1994 and the four special resolutions passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting on June 7, 1994 are void and of no effect.

[para73] As the special resolutions amending the bylaws are of no effect, the strata council now in place, comprised entirely of residential unit owners, is not constituted in accordance with the March 15, 1993 bylaws of the corporation. While the past decisions of an improperly constituted council may be valid and binding, it seems to me prudent for the strata council to now call an election so that by-law 7(4) is given its proper effect.

Costs

[para74] Although the conduct of the affairs of the strata corporation was not in accordance with the bylaws and was unfairly prejudicial to the petitioner, I find that Blue-Red was not nearly as attentive to its affairs, as an owner of a strata lot, as it ought to have been. By acquiescing to some extent to the composition of the improperly constituted strata council, by failing to attend and to exercise its right to vote at the Annual General Meeting, and by failing to attend the Extraordinary General Meeting, the petitioner was neglectful of its interests. It did not act prudently. In these circumstances I am of the view that each party should bear its own costs.

Counsel for the Appellants: J. Bleay. Counsel for the Respondents: A. Davis.

Proudfoot J. (for the Court, allowing the appeal):-- This is an appeal from a judgment dated February 6, 1990 granting relief with respect to the use of two parking stalls in a strata development. The appellant (owners) is a strata corporation established pursuant to the Condominium Act, R.S.B.C. 1979 c. 61. The respondents (Hills) owned strata lot 54, strata plan NW 2477. They purchased one of the larger, more expensive units in the complex by way of interim agreement dated February 23, 1987. At the time of the purchase the development was new and consisted of 55 strata lots (units) and 69 parking stalls.

The Hills were aware that each unit came with the exclusive use of just one parking stall. However, they negotiated with the owner developer to include in their purchase price the exclusive use of a second parking stall. The interim agreement executed on February 23, 1987, contained this clause:

Vendor guarantees two parking spots with unit.

The sale was to be completed by April 29, 1987 and the Hills would have possession of the unit on May 1, 1987. There is evidence from an appraisal filed which indicates that the value of the property was increased by $21,000 as a result of the use of a second parking stall.

The minutes of the first meeting of the owners, held April 9, 1987, contain this reference to the parking stalls: Many owners were concerned with the parking issue. One parking stall is assigned to each strata lot owner. All other parking spaces (14 spaces) are common property and its use be decided by Council. For the time being, the stalls are assigned on a temporary basis.

Owners who feel they have a binding sales agreement which states that they are to receive two parking spaces are review this matter with John McKilligan.

An affidavit filed by Eric John Whaley who had purchased a unit in the development and who was elected to the strata council at the April 9, 1987 meeting, deposes to the following concerning parking stalls:

At the First Annual General Meeting of Strata Plan Nw 2477 held on April 9, 1987, at least one of the Petitioners was present, as were representatives of the Respondents, Brothers Development Corporation and S.R.C. Realty Corporation, a representative of Crosby Property Management Ltd. and other owners of NW 2477.

During this meeting, at which there was a discussion concerning the parking spaces, Mr. McKilligan, the representative of the Respondent, S.R.C. Realty Corporation, advised myself and those in attendance that one space had been assigned to each Strata Lot owner and that the remaining spaces were common property and would be dealt with by the Strata Council.

During this discussion concerning parking spaces, Mr. McKilligan advised that he would discuss this issue with any owners whose Interim Agreement stated that they were to receive two parking spaces. Attached hereto and marked Exhibit "C" to this my Affidavit is a true copy of the minutes recorded at the meeting held on April 9, 1987.

I was advised by Mrs. Hill at this meeting of April 9, 1987, and verily believe the same to be true, that the purchase of the Hills' condominium did not complete until April 29, 1987.

The sales brochure for the development also dealt with parking and it read:

One secured underground parking stall per unit, additional spaces on a rental basis if available.

One of the Hills certainly attended the April 9, 1987 meeting and had notice that any buyers of units who had bargained for two parking stalls were faced with an issue that was unresolved.

The council did not, as it could have done, grant the Hills exclusive use of the second stall or designate the second stall as limited common property for use with the Hills' unit. What the council did was call an extraordinary general meeting on September 24, 1987 and at that meeting several bylaws were passed. Bylaw 208 is important in this appeal. It's heading is "Parking". The relevant portions are (b) and (k):

(b) Assignment of parking spaces will be made only by the Strata Corporation and only vehicles in a) above will be allowed the use thereof. ...

(k) Those strata owners or their tenants as the case may be, desiring an additional parking stall shall provide a written request for same to the Strata Council and shall pay the fee set from time to time by the Strata Council for such parking stalls as are available.

The council fixed a fee of $30 from May 1, 1987, which was increased to $35 per month on May 1, 1988, for rental of an extra parking space. Payment of this rental fee was requested of the respondents. Initially the respondents refused to pay. However, in the face of a threat that the space would be reassigned, they paid all outstanding amounts on November 23, 1988.

The respondents petitioned for relief with respect to the use of the second parking stall in the strata development and an order quashing a bylaw restricting their right to lease their premises. This appeal is concerned only with the parking stall issue. As parties to the petition the Hills named the Owners, Strata Plan NW 2477, Brothers Development Corporation, J. J.R. Developments Ltd., S. Daniele Limited, Sussex Group - S.R.C. Realty Corporation and Syd Foster. Notice of discontinuance was filed discontinuing the action against Sussex Group - S.R.C. Realty Corporation and Syd Foster.

The chambers judge came to the following conclusion: The first strata council was elected on April 9, 1987. The rights to run the strata then passed from the developer to the council. I find that the council was told at this meeting that the petitioners had the use of two parking spots.

Owners of a lot could arrange with council for the use of a second parking spot for a specified monthly fee. Later, the strata council notified Mr. and Mrs. Hill they must pay for their use of the second parking spot: I find the strata council was not justified in doing so. When the purchase was made it included not only the apartment but the use of two parking spots. The parties to that contract -- the developer and the petitioners -- both agree on this. It is confirmed in the interim agreement. Presumably the agreement with the vast majority of other purchasers was for one apartment and one parking stall.

What has happened since to deprive Mr. and Mrs. Hill of the right to use the second parking spot for which they bargained and paid for? The answer is nothing has happened. The strata council took over the running of the complex from the developer on April 9. The council was not empowered to alter the terms of the agreements executed by the developer. This contract called for the Hills to pay $210,000.00 for Strata Lot 54 and two parking stalls. The council could no more take away the use of the one parking spot than increase the purchase price.

Nothing was said about the parking stalls being limited common property nor have any of the parking spots been

There is no issue that the purchasers of strata lots here have the exclusive use of a parking spot -- in the case of the Hills, two parking spots. This, by definition, means those areas are not common property.

Further, it would be inequitable not to give the petitioners the right to use two stalls for the same reason as stated by Mr. Justice Wallace (as he then was) in Carney v. Owners Strata Plan 634 30 B.C.L.R. 324

%registered in the Land Registry Office as such. I find that Strata Lot 54 has the exclusive use of two parking stalls and that they are limited common property.

The appellant in its factum advances four errors in judgment but the issues as I propose to deal with them can be described as follows:

- i) did the owner developer have the authority to "guarantee" the Hills exclusive use of two parking stalls in the interim agreement;
- ii) were the parking stalls limited common property designated for the exclusive use of the Hills; and
- iii) would it be inequitable not to give the Hills the right to the exclusive use of two parking stalls?

I shall address the second issue first as it is most easily dealt with. The chambers judge concluded that the two parking stalls were not common property but were limited common property. There was no support for that finding, it is in error. Some definitions contained in the Condominium Act are useful: "common property" means so much of the land and buildings comprised in a strata plan that is not comprised in a strata lot shown on the strata plan, and includes pipes, wires, cables, chutes or other facilities for the passage or provision of water, sewage, drainage, gas, oil, electricity, telephone, radio, television services, garbage, heating and cooling systems and other services contained within a floor, wall or ceiling of a building shown on the strata plan, where the centre of the floor, wall or ceiling forms the common boundary of a strata lot with another strata lot or with common property.

"limited common property" means common property designated under section 53(1) and (2) for the use of one or more strata lot owners.

There is no evidence that any designation was made pursuant to s. 53 of the Act by the owner developer making any parking stalls limited common property for the use of the respondents or any other strata lot owners. The owner developer had the power under s. 53(2) to make such a designation. Section 53(2) reads as follows: (2) An owner developer may, when the strata plan is tendered for registration, designate areas on the plan as limited common property for the exclusive use of one or more strata lot owners.

The plan that was registered in the Land Titles office in November 1986 and the filings attached to that plan make it clear that the owner developer did not designate any parking stalls as limited common property. The plan that was attached to the sales material for inspection by prospective purchasers was equally clear in that respect. The parking stall in issue here was not limited common property designated for the exclusive use of the Hills.

In considering the first issue it must be borne in mind that pursuant to s. 118(2) of the Condominium Act the owner developer is required to exercise the powers and duties of the strata council until such time as a council is elected which in this case occurred April 9, 1987. Pursuant to the Condominium Act once the council of the owners (Strata Corporation) is elected at the first annual general meeting, s. 116 and s. 117 set out their powers and duties. Relevant to this appeal are s. 117(f) and (g):

The strata corporation may

- (f) grant an owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of common property, or special privileges for them, the grant to be determinable on reasonable notice, unless the strata corporation by unanimous resolution otherwise resolves;
- (g) designate an area as limited common property and specify the strata lots that are to have the use of the limited common property.

Did the owner developer act within the Condominium Act when he guaranteed the exclusive use of these parking stalls to the Hills? As I stated earlier it is clear from the material filed that all of the parking stalls remain common property. No designations were made to create any limited common property within the parking area. The owner developer could have made such designation at the time of the registration of his plan. If he desired to sell the more expensive units with additional parking stall use that was possible. Regrettably, he failed to do that.

Section 116(a) of the Condominium Act clearly states the common property, common facilities and other assets of the corporation shall be controlled, managed and administered by the corporation for the benefit of all owners. It was incumbent on the owner developer to act in the best interests of all of the unit purchasers not just the Hills. Once the first unit was sold that unit owner became entitled to use a portion of the common property (parking stalls) based on a unit entitlement formula. The owner developer was in no position to make an arrangement with the Hills or any other purchaser dealing with the common property in a way which would affect the investment of the other unit purchasers. Clearly the owner developer did not have the authority to guarantee the Hills exclusive use of two parking stalls.

Finally, the chambers judge concluded it would be "inequitable not to give the petitioners the right to use two parking stalls" and he relied on the reasons of Wallace, J. (as he then was) in Carney v. Owners Strata Plan VR 634 30 B.C.L.R. 324. In that case there were 12 units and 7 parking stalls. The first seven purchasers were assigned parking spaces for their exclusive use. The plan was registered in the Land Titles office erroneously indicating the parking spaces as common property. But there was a conflict in evidence as to whether the purchasers of the remaining 5 units were notified there would be no parking spaces for them. Wallace, J. said at pp. 329-330:

Furthermore, I find that, at the time they purchased their suites, the petitioners were aware that the original suiteholders had a prior exclusive right to use the parking spaces and that there were none available for use. Only after it came to Mr. Lapp's attention - early in 1980 - that the registered strata plan designated the parking spaces "common property" did they decide to advance a claim for shared use of the parking spaces.

In my opinion it would be inequitable, in the circumstances, for the petitioners to be permitted to take advantage of the failure of the owner-developer to designate and register the parking spaces as "limited common property" in strata plan VR634. The petitioners had actual notice of the original suiteholders' unregistered right to exclusive use of the parking stalls prior to their purchasing their suites and while they may not have been aware of the exact extent of such rights, they could readily have ascertained it.

That is not the case before us. Of more assistance is York Condominium Corporation No. 167 et al. v. Newrey Holdings Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 458, although in that case the extra parking stalls were sold prior to registration of the plan. Zuber, J.A. said at pp. 465- 466:

This building was constructed as a condominium under the Condominium Act and units were sold to the purchasers on the basis of the provisions of the Act. The Act contemplates two types of property in the condominium, "units" as defined in s. 1(1)(r) and "common elements" as defined in s. 1(1)(e). "Common elements" is stated to mean "all the property except the units". It is clear, therefore, that the additional parking spaces were part of the common elements. Schedule "F" to the declaration made pursuant to the Act is headed "Exclusive Common Elements". Paragraphs (c) and (d) provide:

(c) Each owner is entitled to the exclusive use and possession for the parking of a motor vehicle of one parking space in the underground parking garage to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;

(d) Individual unit owners shall also be entitled to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by such owner, the location of which is to be designated by the Condominium Corporation from time to time;

The additional parking spaces in issue in the litigation are, of course, the spaces referred to in para. (d).

It seems to me implicit in the decision of Galligan J. that until the declaration was registered the purchasers of units had no interest in the additional parking spaces, that those remained in the ownership of the developer who was free to deal with them as it saw fit. I do not see how this can be so in face of the provisions of the Act and the declaration. Section 7 of the Act provides that the owners of units are tenants in common of the common elements (s-s. (1)) and that subject to the Act, the declaration and the by-laws each owner may make reasonable use of them (s- s. (4)). It seems to me that as soon as a unit purchaser enters into an agreement of purchase and sale of a unit he becomes the equitable owner of the unit and the interests appurtenant thereto even although the agreement cannot be closed until registration of the declaration. By signing an agreement of purchase and sale each unit purchaser acquires in equity:

(1) the unit described in his agreement of purchase and sale;

(2) the right to the exclusive use and possession of one parking space to be designated by the condominium corporation;

(3) the right to the exclusive use and possession of such additional parking space as may be purchased by him and designated by the condominium corporation.

In my view, the respondent developer could not, either before or after the registration of the declaration, deal with any part of the common elements so as to defeat the unit purchasers' equitable interests in them.

There is no evidence to indicate how many units were sold at the time the Hills completed their sale. It is known that the first annual general meeting of the strata council was called for April 9, 1987, some twenty days prior to the closing of the sale. Sub-section 123(1) of the Act, which governs when the first annual general meeting should be called, assists in determining how many units were sold at the time the Hills' completed their sale. The section reads:

123(1) The first annual general meeting shall be called by the owner developer and the meeting shall be held on the earlier of the date on which 60% of the strata lots have been conveyed by him, or a date 9 months after registration of the strata plan.

The strata plan was deposited and registered in the Land Titles office at New Westminster on November 14, 1986. Since the first annual general meeting was held less than five months from registration of the strata plan it is reasonable to draw the inference that 60% of the strata lots had been sold when that first meeting was held. All potential unit purchasers were aware they would have the use of just one parking stall, although not designated as limited property. That fact was in the knowledge of any purchaser. The development was sold on that basis.

The Hills cannot say that they had no notice prior to their completion date that they would not have exclusive use of the second parking stall. Nor can they say that other purchasers had notice that the Hills were to have exclusive use of a second parking stall. They had a solicitor who must have searched the Land Title office and been well aware of the plan that was filed, making no provision for any designated parking stalls. More important, at least one of the respondents attended the first annual meeting on April 9, 1987. That was, as I stated earlier, about three weeks prior to their purchase being completed. At that meeting they certainly became aware that there was a problem. In my view, a prudent purchaser would have made an effort to clarify the situation and, if not successful, would be able to refuse to complete the purchase if they could not conclude it to their satisfaction.

While I have some sympathy for the Hills, particularly as the chambers judge dismissed the Petition against the owner developer and no cross appeal of that dismissal is before this Court, the Hills proceeded at their peril. In my view, to permit owner developers to make arrangements, such as those made in this case with the Hills, and not comply with the Condominium Act lends itself to no end of arrangements being made with potential purchasers. These types of arrangements could conceivably be extended to special or exclusive use by any one unit owner of other common facilities, such as a clubhouse or swimming pool, etc. The strata council, once in place, is bound to control and manage all common properties for the benefit of all owners. The owner developer is in precisely that same position until the first annual general meeting.

The Condominium Act was enacted to govern the conduct of owner developers and Strata Councils in a flourishing condominium market. With the thousands of units already built and sold and the potential of many more thousands being built some element of control is essential. The statute must be complied with so the interests of all owner developers and purchasers of units will be protected. In the case at bar the owner developer did not take advantage of the provisions of the Act. The respondents cannot now benefit at the expense of the other owners. They are not entitled to the exclusive use of both parking stalls unless they meet the requirements of the by-laws. I would allow the appeal.

Francis v. Condominium Plan No. 8222909

Between Brent Francis, Stan George Wong and Cynthia Ewanus, plaintiffs, and The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 8222909, defendant, [1999] A.J. No. 562 Action No. 9803-02960 Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Master Funduk Judgment: filed May 12, 1999.

Counsel: C.L. Plante, for the plaintiffs. L.M.H. Belzil, for the defendant.

REASONS FOR DECISION [para1] MASTER FUNDUK:--

"By its nature legislation must, to some degree, cut across individual circumstances in order to establish general rules" -- Dickson C.J.C. in Edward Books and Art Limited v. Her Majesty The Queen, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 713 at 777.

This lawsuit is the product of a developer's decisions to (a) build a condominium project in a physical way which would likely cause dissension between two groups of people who would later become owners of the individual units, and (b) changing the Defendants by-laws to entice people to buy the townhouse units.

Pleadings and application

[para2] The Plaintiffs, who are owners of townhouse units, started this lawsuit by statement of claim. In their prayer for relief they ask for this among other relief:

(d) a declaration that the Current By-laws are valid and in accordance with the terms of the Act;

(e) a declaration that the Rebate Agreement is valid and enforceable as against the Water's Edge Condominium Corporation;

(f) an Order directing the Water's Edge Condominium corporation to comply with the Current By-laws and Rebate Agreement;

[para3] The Defendant delivered a statement of defence.

[para4] Ms. Plante, for the Plaintiffs, says that she proceeds under Rule 410(e). Mr. Belzil, for the Defendant, says that this is not an originating notice lawsuit. I told counsel that I would treat it as a summary judgment application and it was argued that way.

Basic facts

[para5] A developer built the condominium project. The project consists of (a) a highrise building with 211 individual units in it, (b) ground level townhouses which are 10 individual units, and (c) a four level parkade between the highrise and the townhouses.

[para7] I turn now to the townhouses.

[para8] Each townhouse is separately metered for utilities, so each townhouse owner pays for the utilities that he uses. Second, each townhouse has its own furnace and hot water tank, which of course means that each townhouse also has its own self contained heating and water systems. Third, each townhouse has its own attached garage so the townhouse owners do not use the parkade.

[para9] The Plaintiff Francis owns eight of the townhouses. The Plaintiffs Wong and Ewanus each own one townhouse.

[para10] The statutory by-laws were replaced by by-laws passed by the Defendant. This was done when the developer owned all the units. Section 8.3(a) says that:

... Each year estimated Common Expenses shall be apportioned, levied and assessed upon the owners in proportion to the Unit Factors as shown on the Condominium Plan ...

[para11] To entice people to buy the townhouse units the developer amended the by-laws to add the following:

8.3(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of the By-laws, the Owners of Units 212 to 221 inclusive, (the "Townhouse Units") shall be entitled to a rebate of sixty-five (65%) percent of the monthly instalment or other assessments otherwise payable in accordance with 8.3(a) hereof so as to reflect the fact that the Owners of the Townhouse Units are separately metered and responsible for all utilities used therein (whereas for the other Units, certain utilities form a part of the condominium assessments) and that they do not receive a similar benefit in relation to the parking facilities as the Townhouse Units have their own parking garages, the area of which is included in their Unit Factors. The Condominium Corporation shall enter into an agreement in connection with each of the Townhouse Units to be binding upon the Condominium Corporation for an initial term of fifty (50) years and with automatic renewals of fifty (50) years each to ensure that the Owners of the Townhouse Units continue to receive the benefit of such rebate.

The developer did that when it was in the pilot's seat, so to speak.

[para12] When the developer sold a townhouse a rebate agreement was entered into between the purchaser and the Defendant. Again, in each case that was done when the developer was in the pilot's seat. Each townhouse owner would pay only 35% of monthly instalments or assessments made by the Defendant.

[para13] When the developer sold all the units in the project it bailed out of the pilot's seat, leaving the two groups of owners passengers in an airplane not of their unanimous choosing.

[para14] The Defendant sensibly decided to eliminate the sore spot about utility charges by paying them for the Townhouses, as it does for the highrise, and so treating them as part of its common expenses. But surprisingly the Plaintiff's objected to that because some of them have leased out their townhouses and the leases require the lessees to pay the utility charges. So at the end of the day the Plaintiffs complain that they must pay the utility charges for their townhouses but they also object to the Defendant paying them and treating them as common expenses.

[para15] When each Plaintiff bought their townhouse units they got an estoppel certificate as follows:

The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 822909 (the "Corporation") hereby confirms the following:

1. That the first common expense levy made against each of the above described units shall commence on October 1, 1994 for the month of October and are as set forth in Schedule "A" attached hereto.
2. That a true copy of the By-laws of the undersigned Corporation is hereto annexed as Schedule "B" and there have not been any further amendments or changes thereto, nor are there any present motions or proposals for further change thereto.
3. The Corporation has not been served with any action commenced against the Corporation.
4. There is no unsatisfied Judgment or Order for which the Corporation is liable.
5. There is no written demand made upon the Corporation for any amounts in excess of $5,000.00 that, if not met, may result in an action being brought against the Corporation.
6. That attached hereto as Schedule "C" is a Certificate of the insurance maintained by the Corporation.
7. Attached hereto annexed as Schedule "D" is a true copy of the budget of the Corporation.
8. That hereto annexed as Schedule "E" is a true copy of the Management Contract, in force October 1, 1994.

[para16] The certificate is one issued pursuant to s. 36 Condominium Property Act. The Plaintiffs say that they relied on the certificates and the by-laws as they are when they bought their townhouse units. But the certificates do not and cannot freeze the facts for all time as they are at the time that the certificates are issued. Whether the certificates made intra vires something which could be ultra vires is a questionable proposition. Of course the by-law can be amended at any time by a special resolution: s. 26(2) Condominium Property Act. S. 8.3(d) could be deleted from the by-laws at any time by a special resolution. If s. 8.3(d) is ultra vires or if it is repealed the status of the rebate agreement is arguable, at least in the case where s. 8.3(d) is ultra vires.

Issues

[para17] Ms. Plante says that the issue is not the "rebate" but instead the issue is that the Plaintiff's are paying "a disproportionate share of the common expenses". I do not understand that submission. It is an argument over which end of the weiner is the end of the weiner. The rebate goes directly to what the Plaintiffs' share of the common expenses is to be. It is one factor in the formula to determine what the Plaintiffs must pay. If the Defendant applied the by-laws and the rebate agreements would this lawsuit even exist? I think not.

[para18] In any event, the issues are those defined in the pleadings. The Plaintiffs specifically raise the by-laws and the rebate agreements and ask for a declaratory judgment that they are "valid and enforceable", among other relief. The notice of motion for this application asks for an order "directing" the Defendant to "comply with" the by-laws and the rebate agreements, so the "rebate" is in issue. In its defence the Defendant says that the amendment to add in s. 8.3(d) and the rebate agreements are invalid for various reasons. One is that the amendment was not properly passed. The second is that the amendment is contrary to s. 31(1) Condominium Property Act. It says that the contributions by owners is to be "in proportion to the unit factor for their respective units". No one argues that 35% is a "unit factor" for the townhouse units.

[para19] If the by laws and rebate agreements are valid that will be the end of the lawsuit. All that will be left is the ancillary relief that flows from a finding that the by-laws and rebate agreement are valid.

[para20] If however, the by-laws and the rebate agreements are not valid the Plaintiffs fall back to their position that they are paying a disproportionate share of common costs and so their unit factor should be adjusted in some manner so that they pay only a "fair share" of the common costs.

[para21] At the present time the unit factors are based on the square footage of each unit in the complex. No one disagrees with that concept, which is commonly used as a measuring stick.

[para22] The Plaintiffs fall back position is that if they are required to make contributions based on their unit factors they are paying a disproportionately high contribution based on the reasons Ms. Plante sets out in paragraph 19 of her written submissions. The Defendant says in response, in its defence:

3. In answer to paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of the Statement of Claim, the Defendant states and the facts are:

(a) the Board of Managers of the Defendant, in accordance with its powers pursuant to bylaw 8.2(a), agreed to assume all utility costs for the townhouses as of January 1, 1997 to equalize the services provided for the condominium fees paid by all owners. The Plaintiffs have declined payment of these utility fees on their behalf;

(b) occupants of the townhouse units have the right to enjoy all the same privileges and amenities in the condominium as the occupants of the high rise units, and in particular enjoy the right to full use of the whirlpool, saunas, steam room, indoor racquet courts, weight room, common area meeting and party room, and tennis courts (which are located on the parking structure). The maintenance costs for these amenities are included in the assessment of common area expenses;

(c) the Plaintiffs enjoy a disproportionate benefit of the landscaped common property in front of their units and in effect exclusive use of the common property comprising their driveways, the maintenance obligation for which falls on the Defendant, and therefore all owners of the condominium;

(d) the townhouse units are finished in cedar siding, asphalt shingled roofs and with gutters and downspouts all of which are common property of the Defendant and which require greatly disproportionate maintenance having regard to the unit factors of the Townhouse units;

(e) the townhouse units share a common wall with the parking structure, the maintenance of which is in the interest of the townhouse units;

(f) The Plaintiffs enjoy the benefit of insurance on the common property purchased by the corporation pursuant to its obligations under the Condominium Property Act and the bylaws.

[para23] I agree with Mr. Belzil's position that there are legal and factual issues to this lawsuit which cannot be dealt with summarily. This lawsuit must go to trial.

Decision

[para24] The application is dismissed. In the circumstances each party will bear their own costs of the application, including the cross-examinations.

The Owners: Condominium Plan 832 1384 (Grandview Ridge Condominium Corporation), plaintiff, and Wade McDonald and Marisa McDonald, defendants

[1998] A.J. No. 885

Action No. 980300937 Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Master Funduk Judgment: July 31, 1998. Filed: August 4, 1998.

Counsel: C.R. Hilborn, for the plaintiff. W.N. McKay, for the defendant.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[para1] MASTER FUNDUK:-- This is an application by the Plaintiff for an order nisi in a defended lawsuit.

[para2] The lawsuit is to collect a special assessment made against the unit.

[para3] The plaintiff's witness was cross-examined. The Defendants have not given evidence.

Basic facts

[para4] The witness testifies that there are 47 owners in the corporation. There are substantially more units than that because one owner, Karenmax Investments Ltd., owns a substantial number of units which are presently the subject of an unrelated foreclosure lawsuit: Royal Trust Corporation v. Karenmax Investments Ltd., Q.B. 9603 12754. The Karenmax units are presently listed for sale with a court appointed real estate agent. Coincidentally, Mr. McKay, who acts for the Defendants in this lawsuit, also acts for the court appointed real estate agent in the Karenmax lawsuit so he is aware of the problems that exist in the corporation.

[para5] The unit which is the subject of the present lawsuit is a townhouse. There are four townhouses to a building. The unit is not one of the Karenmax units.

[para6] The Plaintiff's witness testifies that there are two engineers' reports about the state of the building, p. 6:

Q So there is a great deal of change occurring in the Board of Directors over a period of, let's say, five years?

A That's correct.

Q Is it apparent from all of those changes that occurred that, simply put, the job was not being done as far as looking after the common property was going?

A There was an engineering report done by the Court appointed administrator and there was also an engineering report done for the Karenmax Investments corporation. Both reports from Morrison Hirshfield stipulate that buildings were deteriorated to the point there was water damage caused by ice in the wintertime and there was a large claim paid out in 1994 to the tune of close to $200,000. The engineering company found that these buildings were deteriorated to the point that the water damage had to be stopped and had to be totally renovated, the exterior.

[para7] I am told by Mr. Hilborn that the Plaintiff decided to first repair one of the buildings to get a better handle on the magnitude of the repairs required and the probable cost. It chose the building that the unit in question is in. The repairs were made to that building. At that time the Defendants were not the owners of the unit. The Plaintiff paid the cost for the repairs.

[para8] The Defendants bought the unit in late 1996. At that time they got a s. 36 Condominium Property Act certificate from the Plaintiff. Although Mr. McKay has not put the certificate in evidence it is quoted in the statement of defence and in the witness's cross-examination and Mr. Hilborn does not dispute what it supposedly says. This is what the Defendants rely on:

"C. The subject Unit is subject to the outstanding common expense levies, contribution or assessments due and payable to us in the amount of $0.00 which includes accrued interest on the unpaid balance..." and 2. No special or extraordinary condominium assessments or contribution has been levied which has not been charged to the account of the subject Unit." and,

5. No work has been done on the subject Unit at the request of the Corporation that would give rise to a Builder's Lien against the title to the subject Unit pursuant to Section 70 of The Condominium Property Act of the Province of Alberta."

[para9] On February 4, 1997 the board of managers passed a resolution for a special assessment for the probable cost of repairs for all units. A copy of that resolution is attached to this decision. It speaks for itself. The witness's evidence is that the owners then approved that, pp. 4-5:

Q MR. MCKAY: Was there ever a meeting of the owners of the condominium corporation in or about February 1997 at which the decision was indicated to proceed with the special assessment shown in the Board of Managers Resolution to which we have earlier referred? A There was an extraordinary meeting called after the Board of Managers meeting.

Q So that owners meeting followed the Board of Managers meeting?

A That's correct.

Q Did that extraordinary meeting of the owners approve the Resolution of the Board of Managers?

A Yes, they did.

Q And in what numbers? In other words, what percentage approved?

A There was no negatives.

Q Was there a quorum present at that meeting?

A Yes, there was.

Q Was there any record kept of the vote at that meeting?

A Yes, there was.

Q And how was the vote conducted?

A Conducted by unit factors.

Q What I am here referring to, was it a vote by hand or by written ballot?

A It was by hand.

Q And the secretary of the meeting recorded that it had passed without dissent?

A That's right.

[para10] The Defendants have not paid the special assessment and that is what this lawsuit is about. Mr. Hilborn tells me that the other three unit owners in the building have paid. Defences

[para11] The Defendants plead three defences:

3. The Defendants further state, in answer to paragraph 4 of the Statement of claim that the Plaintiff did, on the 12th day of December, 1996, provide to the Defendants an Estoppel Certificate stating, in part, that:

"C. The subject Unit is subject to the outstanding common expense levies, contribution or assessments due and payable to us in the amount of $0.00 which includes accrued interest on the unpaid balance..." and

"2. No special or extraordinary condominium assessments or contribution has been levied which has not be charged to the account of the subject Unit." and, on the faith of which the Defendants completed their purchase of the subject Unit, and the Defendants now allege that the Plaintiff, is by its actions, estopped from claiming the subject Unit to be subject to a special assessment as alleged.

5. No work has been done on the subject Unit at the request of the Condominium that would give rise to a Builder's Lien against the title to the subject Unit pursuant to Section 70 of The Condominium Property Act of the Province of Alberta."

4. The Defendants also state in further answer to paragraph 4 of the Statement of Claim that the resolution referred to therein cannot apply to the subject Unit since such resolution, said to have been passed on February 4, 1997, is, on its face, said to be for repairs yet to be done. No such repairs were done to the subject Unit after February 4, 1997.

6. The Defendants further state that the Plaintiff by its actions has misrepresented to the Defendants the nature and extent of any liabilities with respect to the subject Unit, and cannot now be heard to claim any of the items ((a) throughout (h) inclusive), as set forth in the prayer for relief forming part of the Statement of Claim herein.

Issues

One

[para12] The certificate is one mandated by s. 36 if a purchaser requests it. The section says:

36. On the written request of an owner, purchaser or mortgagee of a unit the corporation shall, within 20 days of receiving that request, provide to the person making the request one or more of the following as requested by that person:

(a) a statement setting forth the amount of any contributions due and payable in respect of a unit;

(b) the particulars of

(i) any action commenced against the corporation and served on the corporation,

(ii) any unsatisfied judgment or order for which the corporation is liable, and

(iii) any written demand made on the corporation for an amount in excess of $5000 that, if not met, may result in an action being brought against the corporation;

(c) the particulars of or a copy of any subsisting management agreement;

(d) the particulars of or a copy of any subsisting recreational agreement;

(e) a copy of the budget, if any, of the corporation;

(f) a copy of the financial statement, if any, of the corporation;

(g) a copy of the by-laws of the corporation; (h) a copy of any minutes of proceedings of a general meeting of the corporation or of the board.

[para13] Here the special assessment was not levied until two months after the certificate was issued, so it cannot be said that the certificate is inaccurate in that respect. Mr. McKay's position is found at pp. 11-12:

Q Can I borrow that back for a minute? Now, this one is dated December 12th, 1996 and it refers to unit 44 which is the unit that is the subject of our present problem?

A Right.

Q It shows that the unit is subject to outstanding common expense levies, contributions or assessments due and payable in the amount of zero dollars?

A That's correct.

Q So obviously at that time the February '97 levy hadn't come around?

A That's right.

Q Was there any knowledge that it was coming, this extraordinary levy in December '96?

A It definitely was.

Q And is it your philosophy or position that an Estoppel Certificate issued by the corporation shouldn't or wouldn't show the possibility of such a levy?

A No.

MR. HILBORN: That document is a statutory requirement -

MR. McKAY: Oh, I understand that.

MR. HILBORN: -- and it fulfills the requirement of the statute.

Q MR. McKAY: Do you feel that the corporation is under no obligation to advise a prospective purchaser of anything that might be coming down the road suddenly as far as extraordinary expense goes?

A Sir, you cannot put something on a Statutory Declaration that you are not sure of.

Q Well, we are not talking a Statutory Declaration here.

A But an estoppel is a Statutory Declaration to make it clear as of that date what has transpired. I can't forecast what is going to happen after that date.

[para14] But this defence misconceives the law. The Defendants admit that the Plaintiff has the authority to levy assessments. It is always possible, using that word in its correct English sense, that the Plaintiff might levy a special assessment at any time down the road. But s. 36 does not require the Plaintiff to identify that possibility merely because it is very probable in the foreseeable future. I agree with the witness's answer that the Plaintiff is to certify to what is at the time of certification, not what might be down the road.

[para15] The misconception goes even further. Here the whole condominium project is in need of repairs. The responsibility for exterior maintenance is the Plaintiffs, not individual unit owners. The cost for maintenance, regardless what maintenance, must be born by all unit owners. It would not matter whether the special assessment is two months, six months, 12 months, or whatever, down the road. All unit owners must bear their share of that special assessment regardless whose units are repaired and when the special assessment is made.

[para16] An owner cannot say that he is liable only for repairs to his unit. That is not the case for residential condominium projects. For example, if unit A only in a 50 unit complex is repaired the cost is borne by all 50 unit owners, not just the owner of unit A. A well managed project has an established reserve fund to cover all probable reasonable costs. Here extensive repairs are needed to all or at least a majority of the units and the reserve fund is insufficient. So the Plaintiff has to beef up the reserve fund in some way. Special assessments are one way of doing that.

[para17] The fundamental problem here is the lack of a sufficient reserve fund. I do not know if the Defendants had a lawyer when they bought the unit. People who buy a unit in a condominium project that does not have an adequate reserve fund must appreciate the probable consequences of that when they buy the unit. It is not the same as buying a detached single family residence in a non-condominium setting.

[para18] The problem is the lack of an adequate reserve fund which can only be overcome by sufficient assessments against units. What steps if any did the Defendants take to see if there was an adequate reserve fund?

[para19] I agree that s. 36 does not require the Plaintiff to forecast what may happen down the road, regardless of the likelihood of the happening or the shortness of the road.

[para20] Special assessments to beef up the reserve fund can be made at any time if necessary. That is a reality of owning a unit in a condominium project. If the Defendants did not know that it is unfortunate, but it is a reality.

Two

[para21] I turn now to the defence raised in para. 4 of the defence.

[para22] The building which houses the unit the Defendants own was repaired before the special assessment was made. The witness testifies that the repairs for the building were paid for before the special assessment was made.

[para23] This defence nit picks the language of the board's resolution. More important, it ignores the law that a special assessment must be borne by all unit owners regardless why the assessment is necessary. Here the board resolved to impose a special assessment of $970,000, which then has to be borne by all unit owners on a "per unit factor", i.e. pro rata. Condominium ownership is a collective financial responsibility of all unit owners, not just those owners whose units are to be repaired. The fact that the Defendant's unit was already repaired is irrelevant.

[para24] Where do the Defendants think that the money came from to pay for the repairs to their unit? It had to come from the reserve fund which all owners had to contribute to.

[para25] Owning a unit in a condominium project entails collective financial responsibility for costs incurred by the corporation in carrying out its responsibilities. The operative word is "collective".

Three

[para26] The third defence, misrepresentation, is covered by what I said under headings One and Two. The Plaintiff does not have to tell the Defendants what the law is - that it may impose special assessments down the road to beef up the reserve fund to be able to perform its obligations to repair.

[para27] The Defendants fail to appreciate the collective financial responsibility that owning a unit in a residential condominium project entails.

Decision

[para28] There will be summary judgment (order nisi) as sought.

The Owners: Condominium Plan Number 7810477, plaintiff/defendant by counterclaim, and The Owners: Condominium Plan Number 7711723, defendant/plaintiff by counterclaim

[1997] A.J. No. 1121

Action No. 8901-14983 Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Paperny J. November 14, 1997.

Counsel: J.S. Saunders, for the plaintiff/defendant by counterclaim. T.W. Kathol, for the defendant/plaintiff by counterclaim.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT PAPERNY J.:--Introduction

[para1] The parties to this action are condominium associations of industrial warehouse properties located in north-east Calgary. The plaintiff, defendant by counterclaim, Condominium Plan 7810477 ("Condo 78") is located at 1410-1420 - 40th Avenue N.E., Calgary and is situated directly to the west of the defendant, plaintiff by counterclaim, Condominium Plan 7711723 ("Condo 77") located at 1430 - 40th Avenue N.E., Calgary. This dispute revolves around the ownership and entitlement to the use of 62,000 square feet of land between the two properties, directly east of the building known as 1420 and to the west of the building known as 1430.

[para2] For many years, members of both Condominium Plans have used the area for parking, storage and vehicular access. However, the land in question is registered to Condo 77. The usage was and is ad hoc and often resulted in inconvenience for and complaint by the members of Condo 77. These ongoing difficulties between the parties eventually came to a head in 1989 shortly before this action was commenced.

[para3] The evidence is contradictory as to the circumstances leading up to the confrontation between the parties. It is clear, however, that in an effort to prevent further use of its property by Condo 78, and to facilitate the repair and paving of its yard, Condo 77 began the construction of a 3 foot wall approximately one foot from the property line. A trench was excavated approximately one foot from the property line in October 1989. On October 16, 1989, Condo 78 applied for and was granted an ex parte order from this Court directing Condo 77 to backfill the trench and prohibiting Condo 77 from constructing a wall. On October 24, 1989 that order was varied but continued to enjoin Condo 77 from trenching or constructing any wall, fence or barrier within 50 feet of building 1420 and prohibiting Condo 78 from parking or storing anything on the lands of Condo 77. That injunction has remained in place until this trial.

Relief Sought

[para4] Condo 77 seeks:

a. To have the injunction lifted to allow it to build a barrier wall; b. A declaration dismissing Condo 78's claim; c. Compensation for Condo 78's unauthorized use of the property since 1978; d. Actual costs of repair of the land between 1420 and 1430 since 1979 to date; and e. Future cost of paving the land to put it into a proper state of repair.

[para5] Condo 78 seeks:

a. A declaration that Condo 78 has acquired an interest in a portion of the land owned by Condo 77 by adverse possession; b. In the alternative, a declaration that it is entitled to an interest in land as a result of improvements made on it pursuant to s.60 of the Law of Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-8; c. In the further alternative, a declaration that Condo 78 has an easement of necessity or by implication over certain of the lands of Condo 77; d. In the further alternative, Condo 78 seeks the Court to invoke its equitable jurisdiction to impose a lasting solution to the present and future needs of these neighbours.

The Land

The land on which both condominium plans sit was originally one parcel having been subdivided in 1977. Condominium Plan 7711723 was registered on December 12, 1977. Its site is irregularly shaped, and has a combined frontage of 174.06 feet on 40th Avenue. The westerly boundary depth dimension is 524.15 feet and the easterly boundary is 538.44 feet. The site width at the rear is 312.78 feet. The total site contains 2.88 acres.

[para6] Condominium Plan 7810477 was registered on April 18, 1978 and is rectangular except for an angular cut at the south-east corner. The site has frontage of 318.09 feet on 40th Avenue, has a westerly dimension of 551.71 feet and an easterly dimension of 524.15 feet. The site width at the rear is 375.00 feet and the total site contains approximately 4.75 acres. [para7] Condo 77 has its own access to the east and as well a shared driveway with Condo 78 on the west side of 1430. Access to Condo 78 is by two driveways, one serving the westerly portion of the site and the other being the shared driveway with Condo 77.

[para8] The property line between the two buildings 1420 and 1430 is approximately 30 feet to the east of the building of 1420 and amounts to approximately 15,930 square feet. The property line is approximately 100 feet from the building on 1430 and is approximately 46,070 square feet.

[para9] On July 13, 1977, the application for subdivision approval was submitted for the construction of condominium warehouse units to be erected in two phases. Condo 77 purchased the units after the plan was registered. Individual unit holders began taking possession in December 1977 and into the early spring of 1978. It contains a single building with 15 bays.

[para10] After the majority of the units in Condo 77 were sold and occupied, construction began on Condo 78. The owners of Condo 78 purchased and took possession of units in building 1420 in or about summer or fall of 1978. The plan is composed of two buildings, 1410 and 1420, containing approximately 30 bays.

[para11] Since occupying its property, the owners of Condo 78 have had occasion to utilize the property of Condo 77 for vehicular access, parking and storage. The extent of this use and their legal entitlement to it is at the heart of this dispute.

History of Utilization

[para12] The land is zoned I-2, light industrial. Both condominium complexes are owned by individual businesses involved in a broad range of commercial ventures including light manufacturing and product distribution. The owners of Condo 77 use the yard for parking as well as shipping and receiving product, some using semi-trucks and trailers. Certain owners of Condo 77 use other portions of the yard for storage of materials and employee parking. Up until 1989, and to some extent thereafter, the owners of Condo 78 utilized the lands to the east of their property line for access to their bays by semi-trucks and trailers, for storage of equipment and materials as well as for parking. There is no written agreement between the parties for the use of the land by Condo 78 in this or any other way. There is nothing registered on title that grants an interest in Condo 77's land to Condo 78 nor reserves to it a right of use.

[para13] Mr. Dennis Dean testified that when he purchased his unit in Building 1430 in 1977, the land to the west was vacant. He was not certain as to where the property line was, but knew there was enough room for large trucks and estimated there was about 100 feet in the rear yard. He testified that Condo 77 started experiencing problems with Condo 78 parking vehicles on its property from the outset. Condo 78 members were parking vehicles on their property regularly. Condo 77 members would be obliged to go over to Condo 78 to ask that the vehicles be moved, as they were blocking traffic and access on Condo 77 property. In March 1980, efforts were made by Condo 77 to control the parking by circulating extracts of minutes of a Condo 77 Association meeting to Condo 78 members, advising that improperly parked vehicles would be moved and any expense associated therewith would be the owners' responsibility. [para14] According to Mr. Dean, the problem continued and in fact became progressively worse, prompting Condo 77 to consider putting up a fence somewhere in the yard. In November 1981, Condo 77 erected a chain link fence. This fence was not erected on the property line but approximately 20 feet east of the property line, on Condo 77's property. Mr. Dean stated that he thought the fence should be located 20 feet east of the grassed island, but his Association rejected this idea and suggested that the fence run down the centre of the yard, from the grassed island down to the middle of the lot. This fence was erected without discussion or consultation with Condo 78. The owners of Condo 77 continued to use the land to the west of the fence for storage and parking.

[para15] The erection of the chain link fence did not solve the problem. Owners of Condo 78 were still making use of the property on both sides of the fence, including loading product over the top of the fence. A member of Condo 78 continually backed into the fence and damaged it. There was further correspondence in November 1984 from Condo 77. Condo 78's response, although courteous, did not assist in dealing with the problem and shifted responsibility from the Condominium Association to the individual owner offenders. These ongoing problems were confirmed in testimony given by Mr. Greg Belanger, the production manager for Western Ventilation.

[para16] In the meantime the condition of the lot was deteriorating. The yard was accumulating ground water and gradually worsening. As well, the use of heavy vehicles was causing additional damage. This caused concern for safety. There was an incident where a forklift tipped over. Repair work was undertaken by patching, grading and gravelling but it was not a permanent solution.

[para17] In May 1989, in order to repair and maintain their yard, the owners of Condo 77 decided it would be necessary to pave the entire yard. To that end they entered into some discussions with Condo 78 for the joint repair of the yard. These discussions took place between Mr. Dean, the president of Condo 77, and Mr. Nick Novicki, the president of Condo 78 and Mr. Gregory Jorawsky, the vice-president of Condo 78. There was some suggestion that Condo 78 did not want to pave up to its property line at that time because of its heavy truck usage and a concern the paving would not last. Condo 77 wished to pave the whole area because if they only paved to a certain point, absent some type of barrier, ground water would seep in underneath and destroy the paving. There appears to have been some ongoing discussion about the extent and method of repair. Mr. Dean testified to a conversation he had with Mr. Novicki in which Mr. Novicki was advised that Condo 78 would not participate in the cost of repairing the lot beyond their property line which was only 30 feet from their building.

[para19] On July 24, 1989, the representatives of both Condominium Associations met. As Condo 78 owned only 30 feet of the lot, it did not want to pay for half of the paving. Condo 77 resolved to seek compensation from Condo 78 for the past use of their land. Condo 78 made a number of proposals. Condo 77 rejected these, but agreed to consider their position, put together a different proposal and to reconvene. Another meeting took place later that day. Condo 77 proposed a different compensation arrangement for past and future use. A counterproposal was put forward by Condo 78. It was agreed a further meeting would take place, at which time Condo 77 would provide a response and/or counterproposal.

[para22] On the following business day, October 16th, Condo 78 obtained an ex parte injunction against Condo 77 requiring backfilling of the trench and prohibiting the erection of a wall. This Order was obtained on the affidavit evidence of Mr. Jorawsky wherein he deposed:

- a. That Condo 78 had always understood the property line to run approximately from the middle of the island along the fence line erected.
- b. That until July 1989 they did not know where the actual property line was.

c. That Condo 77 had demanded a back user fee and a fee for future use. d. That the trenching rendered access difficult and impossible for some, stating they only had 14 feet of access making it impossible for trucks of any size to enter into the bay. There was insufficient room for a tractor-trailer unit to safely drive between their building and the trench and as such would cause irreparable harm to the applicant and its members.

e. That the respondent's actions were calculated to cause the most difficulty possible to the applicant, to either drive it out of business or to exert economic hardship and duress against the applicant so as to force it to pay the respondent its asking price for access.

[para23] The order requested was granted and varied in a contested application on October 24th. I have already referred to the provisions of that Order.

[para24] The evidence establishes that Condo 78 continued to park vehicles and store materials on Condo 77's land contrary to the Court Order. Mr. Claus Seidel is an owner of Bays 1 and 2 in 1430. He (with Mr. Dean and Mr. Belanger) testified that since 1989, Condo 78 has stored vehicles and other items on their lands. Mr. Seidel produced a series of photographs all evidencing this. He also admitted that a vehicle owned by his company had parked on Condo 78's property but he stated that was an isolated occurrence. Mr. Jorawsky, vice-president of Condo 78 at the time the Order was granted, confirmed the breach of the Court Order and admitted that members of Condo 78 were the worst offenders. Mr. Phillip Hickey, owner of C&H Concrete Forming Systems Ltd. ("C&H Concrete") in Bay 7 of 1420 confirmed that Condo 78 did breach the Court Order but maintained that there were only a few owners who did not comply.

[para25] I am satisfied that there was no agreement for the common use of the property. From 1979 until 1989, Condo 78 used Condo 77's property for vehicle parking, storage and access in spite of the complaints received on a regular basis. I find that the fence was erected to eliminate the problem of Condo 78 parking and blocking access to Condo 77's property and was not done with the intention of delineating the property line. I find that while the fence was erected to prevent blocking of access and parking problems for Condo 77, it may have created the impression that some parking by Condo 78 on the west side of the fence would be tolerated. Witnesses for Condo 77 could not recall telling Condo 78 not to use the lot to the west of the fence for parking. However, witnesses for Condo 78 did not testify that they thought they had permission to park to the west of the fence either. In any event, I find that this effort to control parking and Condo 78's storage of vehicles and materials on the lot was not successful. Condo 78 continued to use the land on both sides of the fence. I find as well that there were incidents of Condo 77 utilizing Condo 78's property but that this was on a more isolated basis. I find that Condo 78's utilization of Condo 77's land to the east of the fence up to 1989 was not acquiesced in, but rather, Condo 77 was attempting continually to resolve their difficulties by discussion and consultation with their neighbouring Condominium Association. I find that while the Condo 78's Association responded in a polite fashion they took no effective measures to control their owners' use of Condo 77's property and that in fact they could not effectively control their owner's improper usage before or after the Court Order.

[para26] The incidents of 1989 must be viewed within that context. The condition of the driveway between the properties had deteriorated to the point of it being hazardous. Condo 77 had been advised that to remedy it would require deep excavation, fresh pit run and paving. They were further advised that if they left an edge, only paving to their property line, that ground water would likely seep in, rendering the entire effort potentially useless. They could not get co-operation from their neighbours to pave the entire yard on a basis that they considered fair and reasonable in light of their past usage. They could not get their neighbours' agreement to undertake paving of their own property. They were faced with a threat by the president of Condo 78 that they would have their power cut off. Accordingly, they devised a method to deal both with the ongoing parking difficulties and the paving problem - the erection of a 3 foot concrete wall. The result was the injunction.

[para27] With that backdrop the Court must consider the competing legal claims to the use of the land east of 1420's property line and once determined, what if any damages flow therefrom. Adverse Possession

[para28] Condo 78 claims an interest in the land on several bases. It asserts that it has legal title to a portion of the land (approximately an additional 20 feet east of their property line), having acquired it by adverse possession and relies on s.18 of the Limitation of Actions Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-15 which provides:

18 No person shall take proceedings to recover land except

(a) within 10 years next after the right to do so first accrued to that person (hereinafter called the "claimant"), or

(b) if the right to recover first accrued to a predecessor in title, then within 10 years next after the right accrued to that predecessor.

Condo 78 submits that it has been using the 50 feet west of 1420 since 1979 and that neither Condo 77 nor Condo 78 knew where the property line was. Condo 78 further submits that Condo 77 erected a fence on what it thought was the property line. It argues that it is entitled to an order of the court giving it title as they have occupied it since 1978 and that occupation was adverse.

[para29] In Lutz v. Kawa (1980), 15 R.P.R. 40, our Court of Appeal confirmed that title by adverse possession may be obtained against a registered owner under the Land Titles Act, R.S.A. 1970, c. 198 (now R.S.A. 1980, c. L-5) and that adverse possession may be obtained by an innocent trespasser who believes that he is occupying land to which only he has title. The Court stated at 54:

The essentials to be established in a case of adverse possession are that the claimant be in possession and that the true owner be out of possession.

[para30] I am not satisfied on the evidence before me that Condo 78 intended to possess the property, that is, that Condo 78 had the requisite animus possidendi to satisfy a claim of adverse possession. Some of the owners in Condo 78 testified that they knew where the property line was (namely 30 feet from the building) while others testified that they were unaware of it. Documents produced by Condo 78, such as the Hardy Engineering Report and documents from their paving file, suggest that the officers were aware of the property line. Further, the evidence that at least some members of Condo 77 did not know where the property line was, is equivocal. The evidence falls short of establishing that Condo 78 believed that they had title to the land which they now claim. In addition, the site plans for both Condos were duly registered and the property lines clearly delineated thereon. All who testified had counsel acting on their behalf on their purchases. Even if the court were to accept that Condo 78 established the requisite intent to possess (which they have not on the balance of probabilities), it is not ultimately determinative of the issue.

[para31] In her article "Something for Nothing: The Law of Adverse Possession in Alberta" (1992) 30 Alta. L. Rev. 1291, Sandra Petersson stated at 1306:

In addition to possession over time, adverse possession requires a certain quality of possession. The classic requirement is that possession be "an actual possession, an occupation exclusive, continuous, open or visible and notorious ... [which] must not be equivocal, occasional, or for a special or temporary purpose." (Citing from Sherren v. Pearson (1887), 14 S.C.R. 581 at 585.)

[para32] There is an abundance of evidence that demonstrated that owners of Condo 77 continued to use the west side of the fence for parking, vehicle storage and materials storage throughout the ten year period. The occupation by Condo 78 was not exclusive nor was it continuous, thus there was no dispossession by Condo 78. Accordingly, the claim for adverse possession fails.

Application of s. 60 of the Law of Property Act

[para33] The plaintiff submits that s. 60 of the Law of Property Act, supra dealing with improvements made on wrong land ought to apply in this case, so as to grant them, or allow them to retain, the land in question. Section 60 provides:

60(1) When a person at any time has made lasting improvements on land under the belief that the land was his own, he or his assigns

(a) are entitled to a lien on the land to the extent of the amount by which the value of the land is enhanced by the improvements, or

(b) are entitled to or may be required to retain the land if the Court is of the opinion or requires that this should be done having regard to what is just under all circumstances of the case.

(2) The person entitled or required to retain the land shall pay any compensation that the Court may direct.

[para34] This section was considered in Sel-Rite Realty Ltd. v. Miller (1994), 39 R.P.R. (2d) 177 (Alta Q.B.) In that case, the owner of two adjoining parcels mistakenly constructed a dwelling on the boundary line of the two parcels and remained in the dwelling as the tenant. Those parcels of land were eventually sold to separate owners. When the plaintiff discovered that the dwelling straddled the boundary line, they approached the defendant owners hoping to purchase a portion of the lands to accommodate the encroachment of the residence. This offer was refused. The plaintiff sued under s. 60 of the Law of Property Act for a lien over the defendant's land to the extent necessary to accommodate the dwelling. The Court found that the evidence indicated that both parties and their successors in title believed that the dwelling was located entirely within the plaintiff's lands. The Court held that under s. 60, a person who has made a lasting improvement to land, in the belief that he or she owns the land, is given the right to a lien on the land to the extent of the amount by which the value of the land is enhanced by the improvements. Alternatively, they may get the right to retain the land if the Court believes that should be done, having regard to what is just and equitable under the circumstances. (Sel-Rite Realty, supra, at 177.) The person entitled to retain the land is required to pay any compensation that the Court may direct.

[para35] I am not satisfied that s. 60 applies in this case. I am not satisfied on the evidence before me that the "improvement" made by Condo 78 to Condo 77's land, namely some excavation and patch work can be considered "lasting improvements". My view is that while they may have assisted in some maintenance of the yard, the value of the land was not enhanced within the meaning of s. 60 so as to entitle them to a lien.

[para36] Further, s. 60 requires that the persons making the lasting improvement believe that they own the land. The evidence does not satisfy me that Condo 78 had such belief. While certain members of the Condominium Association and the Board may have been under the mistaken belief as to the location of the property line, other members of the Board, including its president, were well aware of its location. In Canada Permanent Trust Company v. Herron, (16 December 1975), (Alta Q.B.) [unreported], Milvain, J. held that an honest but mistaken belief in where the property line was, was not sufficient for the purposes of s. 60 of the Law of Property Act. Rather, he stated at 4, "The honest belief must be a belief founded upon a reasonable and adequate inquiry into the circumstances upon which the belief is based ...". Applying this test to the facts before this Court, and considering that the President of the Board of Condo 78, as well as other members, knew where the property line was, it cannot be said that the belief was founded on a "reasonable and adequate inquiry."

[para37] On the facts before me, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a lien on Condo 77's land under s. 60 of the Law of Property Act.

Easements

[para38] The plaintiff claims, in the alternative, an entitlement to an easement over Condo 77's property, either an easement of necessity or by way of implied grant.

(a) The Creation of Easements

[para39] Section 50 of the Limitation of Actions Act, supra provides as follows:

50 No right to the access and use of light or any other easement, right in gross or profit a prendre shall be acquired by a person by prescription, and it shall be deemed that no such right has ever been so acquired.

Accordingly, in Alberta an easement cannot be acquired by prescription.

[para40] There are four basic characteristics of an easement:

1. there must be a dominant and a servient tenement; 2. an easement must accommodate the dominant tenement; 3. dominant and servient owners must be different persons; 4. a right over land cannot amount to an easement unless it is capable of forming the subject matter of a grant.

(See Bruce Ziff, Principles of Property Law 2nd ed., (Toronto, Carswell 1996) at 328-332). There is no express grant of an easement in this case. The issue is: is there an easement created by implied grant or by necessity?

(b) Implied Grant

[para41] The doctrine of implied grant stems from the equity in the cases. Generally speaking, when the owner of two adjoining lots conveys one of them, he impliedly grants to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements that are necessary to the reasonable use of the property granted and which are, at the time of the grant, used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the parts granted. This doctrine is based in the principle that a person cannot derogate from his own grant. See Wheeldon v. Burrows (1879), 48 L.J. Ch. 853 at 856; Hart v. McMullin (1899), 32 N.S.R. 340, confirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, 30 S.C.R. 245; Fullerton v. Randall (1918), 44 D.L.R. 356 (N.S.S.C.A.D.).

[para42] Upon the severance of a tenement by devise into several parts, not only do rights of way of strict necessity pass, but also rights of way which are necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part devised and which had been and were up to the time of the devise used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of such parts [emphasis added]. See 11 Hals., 2nd ed., 287 cited in DuVernet v. Eisener [1951], 4 D.L.R. 406 (N.S.S.C.A.D.) at 412.

[para43] The plaintiff submits that the Court should consider the original design of the property to determine that there is an implied grant of easement over the lands in question. It relies on an architectural rendering, undated, of the property and a site drawing on which the last revision was dated 25 August 1977. The artist's rendering depicts a grass island between 1420 and 1430, large trucks backing into 1420 and a shared driveway between 1420 and 1430. The site plan pre-dates the actual condominium plan, which was registered on December 12, 1977, by several months.

[para44] There is a fire hydrant situated on the grass island which appears to be intended to service both Condo 78 and Condo 77. The electrical splitter box is located on Condo 78's property. Both parties agree that there is joint use of the driveway between the buildings and no issue is taken over this mutual use. The plaintiff submits that the early drawing and site plan, coupled with the design of certain utility features to be shared jointly, is evidence of the intention of the original owner of the entire parcel, Tomol Holdings Ltd. ("Tomol"), to create an easement, permitting Condo 78's use of the lands, to the west of the island, for access and storage.

[para45] Tomol purchased the entire parcel of land prior to June 1977. It registered both condominium plans in accordance with the approval for the plan of subdivision in December 1977 and April 1978. There is no reservation of easement on title. No evidence was called from Tomol, or anyone acting on its behalf in the design of the project, that speaks to the issue of intention. The lands to the west at the date of transfer to Condo 77 were not in use, but were vacant. At the time of transfer there were no "continuous and apparent" easements that were necessary for the reasonable use of the property granted. In fact, the property to the west was not in use at all.

[para47] Absent clear evidence to the contrary, the Court should be loathe to imply easements, as such would derogate from the grant by impliedly foisting an easement on a parcel that has been sold. In Barton v. Raine (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 685; 15 R.P.R. 287; 114 D.L.R. (3d) 702, the Court of Appeal stated that as a general rule an easement must be expressed in the clearest terms, but noted that there are a number of exceptions to the rule. They are:

1. easements of necessity; 2. reciprocal and mutual easements; 3. easements which arise by necessary inference.

In Barton, supra, the issue concerned a driveway which had been used to serve two adjoining properties over a great many years. The properties had at one time been owned by the same person. This person conveyed one of the properties to his son without reserving an easement over the property sold. Both properties later changed hands and when a dispute arose between the owners, many years later, one of the owners erected a fence and obstructed the right of way. The trial judge found that no easement by prescription had arisen and no easement of necessity had been established. He found, however, that an easement should be inferred by implication.

[para48] There is no evidence before this Court that the previous owner, Tomol, intended that the owner of Condo 78 have an easement over Condo 77. There is no evidence of an implied grant based on previous use. There is no evidence that reasonable inquiries were made to ascertain such rights. The question then remains, as asked in Jones v. Lockhart (1989), 4 R.P.R. (2d) 245 (N.B.C.A.) at 248:

If there was never a right of way, as in this case, how could one spring up after the owner clearly subdivided the property into separate lots and failed to grant an easement over any other lot?

I am unable on the evidence before me to imply a grant of easement.

(c) Easements of Necessity

[para49] Is there an easement of necessity? Counsel for the plaintiff submit that the requirements for finding an easement of necessity have become somewhat less stringent in recent years and in that regard relies on the decision of MacKinnon v. MacDonald (1988), 1 R.P.R. 185 (N.S.S.C.T.D.). She submits that the definition of an easement of necessity includes easements reasonably necessary for comfortable occupation by the party. I disagree.

A right of way may arise by implication of law where both dominant and servient tenements have been in a common ownership of one person and one or other of the tenements had been disposed of by him. Rights of way thus arising are either rights of way reasonably necessary for the comfortable occupation of the dominant tenement, which only arise upon a grant of the dominant tenement by virtue of an implied grant or words implied in the grant by statute, or rights of way of necessity. The latter are easements without which it is impossible to make any use of the dominant tenement, and can arise in favour either of the grantee on a disposition of the dominant tenement or of the grantor on a disposition of the servient tenement. [emphasis added]

A way of necessity is a right of way which the law implies in favour of a grantee of land over the land of the grantor, where there is no other way by which the grantee can get to the land so granted him, or over the land of the grantee where the land retained by the grantor is landlocked. A right of way of necessity can only exist where the implied grantee of the easement has no other means whatsoever of reaching his land. The extent and nature of the right of way:

depends upon the nature of the necessity. The purposes for which it may be used depend upon the facts existing at the time of the grant which gave rise to the necessity, and are in general controlled by the obvious intention of the grant. [11 Halsbury (2d) ed. at 326-39 cited in MacKinnon, supra at 187.]

[para51] If a way of necessity arises upon a demise and the lease contemplates the carrying on of a particular business upon the demised premises, the way of necessity is confined to a way suitable for that business. But there can be no way of necessity unless the necessity existed at the time of the grant of the dominant tenement. It is noteworthy that in MacKinnon, supra at 188, an easement of necessity was granted on the strict test because "without a right of way, the plaintiff would have no way of egress or entry to their property."

[para52] In Re Stone (1982), 38 N.B.R. (2d) 492 (N.B.Q.B.), the Court discussed when an easement of necessity is implied. It stated at 506:

Generally speaking, an easement of necessity is implied by law where access is otherwise impossible as a right. Mere inconvenience is not a sufficient reason for creating an easement of necessity (Fitchmarsh v. Royston (1899), 81 L.T. 673, Easements, Gale (14th ed.), p. 118). The Ontario Court of Appeal in St. Mary's Milling Company v. St. Mary's (1916), 32 D.L.R. 105, held that an easement of necessity means an easement without which the property retained cannot be used at all, and not one merely necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of that property. The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal in Fullerton v. Randall (1918), 44 D.L.R. 356, stated that an easement of necessity is always a strict necessity and this necessity must not be created by the party claiming the right-of-way. Necessity does not exist where one can get to his property through his own land, or merely because a road through his neighbour's would be a better road, more convenient or less expensive. Furthermore, it would appear that the easement of necessity is limited in use to the purpose for which the quasi-dominant tenement was used at the time of severance, i.e. if the dominant tenement was used as a farm, then the easement of necessity would be for agricultural purposes only (London Corporation v. Riggs (1880), 13 Ch.D 798). [emphasis added]

[para53] The plaintiff submits that an easement of necessity has been created because certain owners in Condo 78 require that semi-trailers, 50 feet long or more, be backed into the bays for their proper carrying on of business. The evidence before me establishes that Chrisanti Brothers and Meyers Sheet Metal, former owners in 1420, utilized semi-trailers in their businesses. Mr. Hickey also testified that he utilizes such semi-trailers in his business, C&H Concrete, and has since the early 1980s. He indicated that any owner in unit 1420 who required tractor-trailer service would have difficulty if they were not granted an easement of at least an additional 20 feet on Condo 77's land. He testified that while the trench was in existence, it was difficult for him to carry on business because they were unable to receive their tractor-trailer loads. If a wall were to be built on the property line, his business would require dock service to come in and unload with a forklift. He testified that not being able to use semi-trailers would make his business extremely difficult and he was uncertain as to whether they could continue to operate, particularly because operating a forklift in winter could be hazardous. He further testified that the flow of traffic on the 30 foot strip would be horrible. In cross-examination Mr. Hickey indicated that when he and his partners purchased their unit, they felt they needed at least 50 feet for trucks and that it was important to back trucks into the bay, but did not investigate where the property line was at the time. He confirmed that he and his partners were "pretty careless" when investigating the property. He admitted that it would be difficult to carry on business but not impossible without an extra 20 feet.

[para54] In my view, the plaintiff cannot establish an easement of necessity over the 20 feet on the westerly side of the Condo 77 lands. The businesses are clearly accessible within their property line and while it is inconvenient and difficult to utilize semi-trailers, the only thing they cannot do is back into the bays. While their use may cause traffic problems for the other owners, this obstacle is insufficient to create the desired easement. An easement of necessity means an easement without which the property cannot be used at all. It is not one that arises as a matter of inconvenience. Accordingly I find no easement of necessity.

(d) Other Interests

[para55] The erection of the chain link fence in November 1981 might arguably have impliedly granted a licence to Condo 78 to utilize the lands to the west of the fence. However, no evidence was led to suggest that Condo 78 thought they had permission to park on that side of the fence as opposed to the other side and no submissions or claims of such a licence were asserted on their behalf at trial. However, any such licence would have terminated some time in 1989 when Condo 77 purported to assert its full legal rights over the land in any event. (e) Equitable Relief

[para56] Condo 78 asks in the further alternative that the Court invoke its equitable jurisdiction to impose a lasting solution to the present and future needs of these neighbours. Prior to trial, the Court offered to mediate the dispute in order to arrive at a viable commercial solution to the conflict between Condos 77 and 78. This alternative was rejected by the parties. They have come to the Court to determine their respective property rights to the land between their buildings. The Court has determined these rights and is loathe to interfere with them unless a compelling reason to do so exists.

[para57] Counsel for Condo 78 has failed to provide any authority to support a claim in equity that would allow the Court to order a practical commercial solution in abrogation of the strict property rights of Condo 77. Further, in reviewing where the equities lie as between the parties, and particularly keeping in mind the persistent breach of the prior Court Order by Condo 78, it is difficult to imagine what kind of order could be fashioned that would be equitable to Condo 77. Accordingly, I am unable to fashion a solution based in the Court's equitable jurisdiction and contrary to their determined property rights.

[para58] The defendant, plaintiff by counterclaim, is entitled to the declaration it seeks lifting the injunction, which land is not subject to any other interest in the nature of easements, save and except the necessary cross easement of ingress and egress on the lands directly off 40th Avenue N.E.

Damages

[para59] Condo 77 seeks monetary compensation as a result of improper use by Condo 78 of its land since 1979 for the following:

1. The actual cost of digging the trench and backfilling it;
2. The cost of the chain link fence erected in 1981;
3. The cost of repairing and maintaining the land between 1420 and 1430 to date; 4. The cost of future repair; and
5. Compensation for 20 years of use by the plaintiff.

[para60] The defendant seeks damages based in the tort of trespass. Its largest claim is for the wrongful use of the property during this time. It seeks damages for the monies actually expended by it in maintaining that land, (apparently attributing all of the use to Condo 78), and what it calls "ground rent" of some 15,000 square feet of its property over a 20 year period.

[para61] The starting point for the assessment of damages in tort, including the tort of trespass, is the principle of restitutio in integrum, where the court seeks to place the plaintiff in the position they would have enjoyed if the defendant had not committed the wrong. See Costello v. Calgary (City), [1997] A.J. No. 888 (Q.L.) (C.A.) at para. 38 applying the principle set out in Marsan v. Grand Trunk Pacific Ry. Co. (1912), 1 W.W.R. 693 (Alta.S.C.A.D.).

(a) Diminution of Value as a Measure [para62] The usual measure of damages for trespass on real property is calculated by assessing the diminution of value of the land after the trespass. See Harvey MacGregor, MacGregor on Damages, 15th ed. (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1988) at para. 1392; S.M.Waddams, The Law of Damages, looseleaf ed. (Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 1997) at 1.1785; L.D. Rainaldi, ed., Remedies in Torts, looseleaf, vol. 3 (Toronto: Carswell, 1997) at para. 40; principle applied in Heddinger v. Calgary (City) (1992), 129 A.R. 261 (Q.B.). There is no evidence led in the case before the Court as to what the diminution in value might have been, if any. Indeed, it would be virtually impossible to assess the diminution in value of the land in question since which part of the property was utilized by Condo 78 is not clearly delineated. Further, not all damage can be attributed to Condo 78 since Condo 77 also used the land in question, subjecting it to the traffic of heavy vehicles. There is also the intervening factor of the spring thaw. Therefore, based on specific facts of this case, damages are more properly assessed under loss of use or wrongful occupation, which is set out below.

(b) Expert Evidence [para63] Both the defendant and plaintiff called experts to deal with the quantum of damages due Condo 77. The defendant called Mr. Gary Thomasson, principal of Acquest Consulting Group Inc. who was qualified as a specialist in property valuation in industrial property in Calgary. His approach was to calculate the ground rental loss of the land used by Condo 78 since January 1, 1979. Mr. Thomasson's methodology was to assume a certain amount of land was used by Condo 78. He acknowledges in his report that it is unclear how much land has been consistently utilized. In an effort to quantify the loss he estimated that approximately 15,070 square feet of Condo 77's lands were being utilized by Condo 78. This represents approximately one third of the lands owned by Condo 77 to the west of their property. He then proceeded to calculate what the estimated ground rent loss would be; ground rent being the amount paid for the right to use and occupy the land according to the terms of a ground lease. In so doing, he calculated the owner value of the land as opposed to the market value of the land, applied an overall land capitalization rate of 9 percent which produced a ground rent loss income attributable to the land. He concluded that the estimated ground rent due per year was $9,000. [para64] Mr. Thomasson chose to do an owner value calculation rather than a market value calculation because market value, in his view, presumed a competitive and open market transaction. In this case he noted the owner, Condo 77, has no interest whatsoever in disposing of or selling the property, and as such, the market value calculation would not be helpful.

[para65] The plaintiff called Mr. Alexander Navrady who was qualified to give expert evidence in the area of real estate appraisal and, in particular, industrial real estate in Calgary. His report was a rebuttal report to the Acquest report. He disagreed with the methodology adopted by Mr. Thomasson. Mr. Navrady opined that Mr. Thomasson failed to consider the highest and best use of the property which Mr. Thomasson felt would be inappropriate unless he was doing a market value analysis. In Mr. Navrady's opinion, highest and best use requires an examination as to the 15,070 square foot parcel Acquest selected, which according to him was not physically or legally developable as a separate entity. Accordingly, it formed part of the 2.88 acres of land comprising Condo 77's property and the most appropriate method to value it was to estimate "the mean market value of 2.88 acres on a unit rate basis and apply that unit rate to the 15,000 square foot segment of the 2.88 acres". In his view, considering highest and best use, a lower ground rent would result, which he calculated to be $4,408 per annum.

[para66] The Court is of the view that assessing damages for trespass in this case purely on the basis of loss of ground rental is of limited use. The assessment of loss of ground rental presumes exclusive use of the property and not joint, intermittent or sporadic utilization. I do however find the respective analyses helpful to the extent that they set some parameters for the value of the land if used on an exclusive basis.

[para67] In order to assess the appropriate damages the Court must make some findings as to the nature of the use.

[para68] On the evidence I am satisfied that up until 1989, Condo 78, on a regular basis, parked their vehicles, stored vehicles and other materials including debris on Condo 77's property as well as using it for access to their bays by large trucks and semi-trailers. The Court is unable to ascertain how much of the property they utilized and the frequency. It is clear from the evidence that Condo 78, by its utilization, has contributed to the state of disrepair currently extant on the property, although it is but one contributory factor. The defendant by counterclaim seeks damages both for the occupation of the property and the cost of the repair.

(c) Loss of Use and Wrongful Occupation

[para69] MacGregor, supra, at para. 1391 states:

It is the form of injury and not the form of tort which gives the important division in relation to damages: wrongful damage to the land on the one hand and wrongful occupation and user of the land on the other.

[para70] In Costello v. Calgary (City) (No. 2) (1995), 163 A.R. 241 (Q.B.), Rooke, J. adopted this distinction at 282 stating that "Usually damages are separated between loss of use and loss of value." He stated further: "Double compensation is to be avoided. Often compensation for total lost value will disentitle compensation, in whole or part, for loss of use." The converse can be equally true, that is, compensation for loss of use may include compensation for any damage that is visited on the land as a result of that use as part of regular repair and maintenance. In my view, the quantum of damages calculated for the use and occupation rent in this case ought to include in it the cost of regular repair and maintenance of the property.

[para71] The normal measure of damages arising from the loss of use of land is the "market rental value of the property occupied or used for the period of wrongful occupation or user," MacGregor, supra at para. 1420. That damages in the nature of a rent charge is appropriate in a case of temporary loss of use is supported by Marsan, supra at 699 citing Halsbury's, Vol. 10, p. 13. See also Remedies in Tort, supra at para. 42.

[para72] The calculation of rent can be determined by market value if the land in question is susceptible to that kind of analysis. While the expert reports calculated damages based on ground rent and while it is usually reasonable to use market rent value to assess damages in trespass for loss of use, I find that the utilization to which Condo 78 put the land of Condo 77 is not susceptible to this kind of analysis. Rental of any kind suggests that a determined parcel of land is dedicated to the sole use of the "tenant". I find that the usage of Condo 78 is more akin to a license than a lease proper. Although the expert reports are useful to the extent that they establish some basis for assessing land values, they remain a theoretical solution to a problem that does not fit comfortably with the facts. Equally theoretical, but perhaps more in keeping with the actual usage Condo 78 made of the land, I adopt the reasoning in Bracewell v. Appleby, [1975] Ch. 408 at 419D-E, a case in which the Court tried to assess the appropriate compensation for a right-of-way acquired by an easement of necessity. Graham, J. stated that the appropriate measure is "the equivalent to a proper and fair price which would be payable for the acquisition of the right in question," cited in MacGregor, supra at para. 1422. On this point, MacGregor continues:

The figure to aim at was that which, in negotiation, the plaintiffs would have accepted as adequate to compensate them for the loss of amenity and the increased use of the road, but which at the same time would not be so high as to deter the defendant from building at all. See also the discussion in Waddams, supra at paras. 9.120-9.130.

[para73] The Court is unable to ascertain with any definitiveness the extent of the use throughout the time. I do find that the deterioration in the lot was largely due to its poor construction.

[para74] In 1989 an injunction was granted limiting Condo 78's entitlement to utilize Condo 77's land by enjoining it from parking or storing vehicles or materials anywhere on Condo 77's land. In contravention of that Court Order, numerous examples of its breach were brought to the Court's attention. The evidence from the witnesses of Condo 77 suggest that the trespass did not diminish after the granting of the injunction, and I so find. Accordingly I order damages for trespass in the amount of $4,500.00 per year from 1989 to the date of trial. I find this figure represents the amount the defendant would likely have accepted as adequate compensation for the right to utilize the land and compensate for the partial loss of use and wear and tear.

[para75] The defendant would be entitled to damages for trespass from 1979 to 1981 in the amount of $4,500.00 per year. From November of 1981 to October 1989, part of the yard was fenced. I have found that Condo 77 did not acquiesce in the use of the property east of the fence, however, there is some doubt as to whether or not they advised Condo 78 that there were not entitled to use lands to the west of the fence, or whether or not they took any action to prevent such use. Accordingly, I would reduce the damages of $4,500 per year for that time period to $2,000 per year.

[para76] However, neither party addressed the Court as to the application of s. 51(f) of the Limitation of Actions Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. L-15, if any, to the case at bar. Accordingly, I invite submissions from counsel as to its applicability prior to awarding damages as they relate to trespass before October 1989.

[para77] The claim for the cost of past repairs has been included in the yearly amount. However, it should be noted that the largest cause of the deterioration is as found above, poor construction and not wear and tear, and that Condo 77 is itself responsible in part for some wear and tear. [para78] The defendant by counterclaim is also entitled to damages in the amount of $8,162.88 which represents the amount of monies expended in the design, the digging and the refilling of the trench in October 1989. Remedies in Tort, supra at para. 42 states:

Where special damages arising from the deprivation of use are pleaded and proved, and where the trespasser should have anticipated the damages as the likely result of the act, the measure of damages is not the mere rental of value of land, but rather the special damages resulting from the trespass.

[para79] Condo 78 can be held to have a reasonable means of knowing that Condo 77 would incur the cost of digging and refilling the trench when they filed their Undertaking As to Damages in support of their ex parte application for an injunction on October 16, 1989. I find that the cost of digging and backfilling the trench falls within the head of special damages in trespass. From that amount I would deduct the cost of the survey Exhibit 2 Tab 7 in the amount of $450.00. [para80] The fence was erected to protect Condo 77's property rights and should be an expense they properly bear.

[para81] Damage for future repair is not applicable, in light of my findings regarding legal entitlement to the land in the future and counsel's submission on this point. Accordingly, I award damages for loss of use after October 16, 1989, in the amount of $4,500.00 per annum and special damages in the amount of $7,712.88. I await submissions from counsel insofar as damages are concerned before that date.

Pre-judgment Interest

[para82] This action was commenced by Condo 78 in 1989. On October 24, 1989, Mr. Justice Dixon ordered that the parties complete their document production and examination for discovery on or about the end of December 1989 and that either of them might thereafter seek special leave for the expeditious trial of this action. The evidence indicates that notwithstanding this provision, virtually nothing other than negotiation took place for approximately three and a half years after discoveries in 1989. Thereafter no steps were taken for a further two and a half years until the spring of 1996.

[para83] The relevant portions of the Judgment Interest Act, S.A. 1984, c. J-0.5 provide:

2(1) Where a person obtains a judgment for the payment of money or a judgment that money is owing, the court shall award interest in accordance with this Part from the date the cause of action arose to the date of the judgment.

2(3) If it considers that it is just to do so having regard to changes in market interest rates, the circumstances of the case or the conduct of the action, the court may

(a) refuse to award interest under this Part,

(c) award interest under this Part for a period other than the period provided for in this Part.

[para84] These provisions were considered by the Alberta Court of Appeal in Aetna Insurance Co. v. Canadian Surety Co. (1994), 23 Alta.L.R. (3d) 182 at 185 where the panel cited from an earlier decision of the Court:

This court has dealt with these sections in 216927 Alberta Ltd. v. Fox Creek (Town) (1990), 72 Alta. L.R. 52 [[1990] 3 W.W.R. 321], where Foisey, J.A. stated at p. 68:

While s. 2(1) states that the court "shall" award interest, nonetheless there is an overriding discretion in subs. (3) to refuse to award any interest having regard to the "circumstances of the case". In my view before the court should exercise its discretion to refuse to award interest and thus deprive a litigant of what is prima facie entitlement to under subs. (1), the reason for doing so must be compelling.

[para85] In Aetna Insurance Co., supra at 185, the Court denied Aetna 7 years of pre-judgment interest and allowed them only five. They felt this adequately addressed the concern over delay attributable to Aetna. See also Begro Construction Ltd. v. St. Mary River Irrigation District et al (1994), 154 A.R. 1 (Q.B.) at 41 where Power, J. allowed prejudgment interest for two years on an action where prejudgment interest was claimed for twelve years. The additional ten years were specifically denied because of the delay, the Court stating that the action could have reasonably been brought to trial and resolved within a two-year period.

[para86] While there is evidence to suggest that there was some correspondence between counsel, I do not consider these to be steps in the action. I have not had any satisfactory explanation as to the delay in the prosecution of the action, although raised at trial, particularly by the defendant whose land was subject to an injunction. I find this matter took 5 1/2 years longer than necessary to get to trial. Accordingly, I am denying pre-judgment interest for the years 1990, 1991, 1992 and the first half of 1993. I will allow pre-judgment interest for the second half of 1993 but not for the years 1994 and 1995. The defendant shall have pre-judgment interest on all amounts from 1989 to the date of judgment excepting the years or portions thereof mentioned.

[para87] The issue of pre-judgment interest before 1989 may be spoken to after damages for that time, if any, have been determined.

[para88] The parties are invited to make submissions to the Court on the matters raised, as well as to costs, within 30 days of the filing of these reasons.

Wright v. Condominium Plan No. 7711582 (Alta Q.B.)

IN THE MATTER OF the Condominium Property Act, being Chapter C-22, Revised Statutes of Alberta, 1980, and amendments thereto; AND IN THE MATTER OF the Owners: Condominium Plan No. 7711582

Between Ann Margaret Wright, Kathleen Inness Morrison and Katherine Wolsky, Plaintiffs, and The Owners: Condominium Plan No. 7711582 (a.k.a. Varsity Villa, hereafter referred to as "the Corporation"), Defendants, and John E. Bruce, John Doe, John Doe I, John Doe II, John Doe III and John Doe IV (hereafter referred to as the "Defendant Owners"), Defendants, and John E. Bruce, Heather Murray, Thelma Vian, John Doe V, John Doe VI and John Doe VII (hereafter referred to as the "Defendant Board Members"), Defendants [1994] A.J. No. 568

Action No. 9201-01871 Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Calgary Dixon J. Heard July 18, 1994. Judgment: Filed July 18, 1994.

K. Richmond and M.A. Cowtan, for the Plaintiffs. J.S. Saunders, for the Defendants.

[para1] DIXON J.-- When the President of the Board of Managers of a Condominium Corporation tells a unit owner having a registered title to an undivided 115 one ten thousandth share in the common property of the Corporation, that such owner can never gain the use of an indoor parking stall, there has to be something seriously wrong with the way the common property of the Condominium Corporation is controlled, managed and administered.

[para2] This action for declaratory judgment came before me during the week of June 13, 1994 with final argument heard on Monday, June 20. At the commencement of this trial I was informed that the proceedings were stayed as against the Defendant Owners and the Defendant Board Members as listed in the style of cause.

[para3] The plaintiffs are unit owners in the Varsity Villa Condominium located in northwest Calgary near the Market Mall. The plaintiff, Ann Wright, made her unit purchase in September, 1990, the plaintiff Kathleen Morrison made her unit purchase in July, 1990 and the plaintiff, Katherine Wolsky, made her unit purchase in October, 1988. In each instance the purchaser assumed the use of the outside car parking stall occupied by her vendor. Each plaintiff was aware that her vendor did not have the use of an indoor parking stall. Varsity Villa has 93 residential units contained within three buildings, 80 indoor parking stalls within the basements of such buildings and 26 covered, outdoor parking stalls located between the buildings and along the south boundary of the development. The result of this structural configuration is that every owner of a residential unit cannot physically have the use of an indoor parking stall.

[para4] The parking stalls at Varsity Villa, whether indoor or outdoor, are clearly common property, the definition of this term in the Condominium Property Act of Alberta (the 'Act') being:

"so much of the parcel as is not comprised in a unit shown in a condominium plan..."

The term "common property" is similarly defined in the relevant by-laws of the Corporation. The Corporation was chartered in December, 1977, its initial by-laws were replaced in September, 1979 by the "second by-laws" and these in turn were replaced in May, 1991 by the "current by-laws". All the by-laws of the Corporation have been registered with the Registrar of Land Titles in Calgary as required by the Act.

[para5] Each of the purchases by the plaintiffs were concluded through the efforts of realtors and lawyers and without prior communication with, or attendances on, the Board of Management of the Corporation, or any member thereof, or on its property manager, Benchmark Management Ltd. ("Benchmark"). The Act prescribes that a corporation shall have a board of managers which shall be constituted as provided by the by-laws and prescribes that the powers and duties of the corporation shall be exercised and performed by the board (Section 23). The board is also required to convene an annual meeting of owners once a year.

[para6] Section 26(1) of the Act reads:

"The by-laws shall regulate the corporation and provide for the control, management and administration of the units, the real and personal property of the corporation and the common property."

Subsection (5) states:

"The by-laws bind the corporation and the owners to the same extent as if the by-laws had been signed and sealed by the corporation and by each owner and contained covenants on the part of each owner with every other owner and with the corporation to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws."

[para7] Section 40 of the Act contemplates a transfer or lease of the common property of a corporation, or any part of it, but only on the authority of a unanimous resolution of the unit owners. Section 41 contemplates an exception to the 100% rule as regards the leasing of common property by providing:

"Notwithstanding section 40, a corporation may, if its by-laws permit it to do so, grant a lease to an owner of a residential unit permitting that owner to exercise exclusive possession in respect of an area or areas of the common property."

[para8] Section 60 of the Act deals with applications to the Court with subsection (4) providing that the Court may direct the trial of an issue, as was done in this instance through the Orders of Mr. Justice Montgomery dated October 28, 1992, April 23, 1993 and February 22, 1994.

[para9] I wish to now recite the provisions of the by-laws that are relevant to this adjudication. While the initial by-laws have long been supplanted, it is pertinent to understand their content in regard to common property and parking, as follows:

"9. Duties of the Corporation

The Corporation shall:

(a) control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of all the owners and for the benefit of the entire project;

10. Powers of the Corporation

The Corporation may:

(f) grant to an owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of common property, or special privileges in respect thereof; but, except for the provisions hereof relating to parking privileges attached to each unit, any such grant shall be determinable on reasonable notice unless the Corporation by unanimous resolution otherwise resolves, and

(g) do all things reasonably necessary for the enforcement of the by-laws and the control, management and administration of the common property and any part of the units with which it may be concerned.

16. Powers of the Board

The Board may:

(b) employ or authorize the Manager to employ for and on behalf of the Corporation such other agents and servants as it thinks fit in connection with the control, management and administration of the common property, and the exercise and performance of the powers and duties of the Corporation;

67. Parking areas

The parking stall or stalls and parking plug-in facilities appurtenant thereto (if any) assigned to any unit by the Board are for the sole use of the owner of such unit. Each unit shall be assigned at least one parking stall by the Board, the location of which shall be selected by the Board in its sole discretion and shall be subject to change from time to time by the Board. If any parking plug-in facility is provided with or in connection with any parking stall, any person given the right to exclusive use of such stall shall be responsible for keeping such facility in good repair and condition at all times during the period of such owner's entitlement to exclusive use; and the Corporation may at its option require such owner to pay all electrical charges for and in connection with such facility and may cause such facility to be connected to such owner's electrical meters."

[para10] The second by-laws governed the affairs of the Corporation from September 18, 1979 to May 6, 1991 and were the by-laws in force at the time each of the plaintiffs purchased their respective unit. The relevant portions of these by-laws are as follows:

6. (Powers of Corporation)

The Corporation may:

(d) grant a lease to an owner under section 25.1 of the Act; (now Section 41)

(h) grant to any owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of common property, or special privileges attached to each unit, any such grant shall be determinable on reasonable notice unless the Corporation, by unanimous resolution, otherwise resolves;

(i) do all things reasonably necessary for the enforcement of the by-laws and the control, management and administration of the common property and any part of the units with which it may be concerned;

40. (Restrictions in Use)

(24) Parking Areas: The parking stall or stalls assigned to each unit by the Board are for the sole use of the owner of such unit. Each unit shall be assigned at least one parking stall which shall be secured in the form of a parking lease between the owner and Board for a period of time fixed by the Board. 41. (Provisions Governing the Use of the Common Property)

(1) Use and Enjoyment: Subject to by-law forty hereof the owner shall have the right to the exclusive use and enjoyment of such portions of the common property as may be designated by the Corporation.

(2) Exclusive Use: The owner of a unit has no right to use any portion of the common property designated by the Corporation for the exclusive use of the owner of any other unit."

[para11] I make the finding that the current by-laws were validly enacted and that they have governed the affairs of the Corporation as and from May 6, 1991 to present date. The relevant provisions thereof are as follows:

"3. (Duties of the Owners)

An owner shall:

(e) use and enjoy the common property in accordance with these by-laws and all rules and regulations prescribed by the Corporation and in such a manner as to not unreasonably interfere with the use and enjoyment thereof by other owners, their families or visitors;

4. (Duties of the Corporation)

In addition to the duties of the Corporation set forth in the Act, the Corporation, through its Board shall:

(a) control, manage, maintain, repair and administer the common property (except as hereinbefore and hereinafter set forth) and all real property, chattels, personal property or other property owned by the Corporation for the benefit of all of the owners and for the benefit of the entire condominium project;

5. (Powers of the Corporation)

In addition to the powers of the Corporation set forth in the Act, the Corporation through its Board, may and is hereby authorized to:

(g) grant to an owner the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of part of the common property (including extra parking space) or special privileges in respect thereof, and, except for the provisions of these ByLaws relating to parking privileges attached to each unit, any such grant to be determinable on reasonable notice, unless the Corporation by special resolution otherwise resolves;

(h) make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary or desirable from time to time in relation to the use, enjoyment and safety of the common property and do all things reasonably necessary for the enforcement of these by-laws and for the control, management and administration of the common property generally including the commencement of an action under Section 29 of the Act and all subsequent proceedings relating thereto;

58. (Exclusive Use Areas and Parking Areas)

(a) The Board shall assign or grant a licence of use of an area of the common property in the underground or at grade parking area for exclusive use by the owner of a unit for the sole purpose of parking one private passenger automobile thereon;

(c) The Board may, in addition to other restrictions set out in these by-laws, specify and limit the nature and extent of the use or uses of any such exclusive use area assigned or designated by it hereunder;

(d) While any such parking area or exclusive use area is not included in the condominium plan as part of a condominium unit, and shall not be deemed to be an area leased pursuant to Section 41 of the Act, any such parking or exclusive use area shall be maintained at the sole expense of the owner to whom it has been assigned PROVIDED THAT the Board shall be responsible for removing ice, slush and snow from the driveway, common walkways and outside parking areas, sweeping the underground parkade and structurally maintaining parking areas and balconies to a standard considered reasonable by the Board;

[para12] No rules or regulations have been passed by any Board in regard to the use, enjoyment and safety of the common property nor has any lease of common property been granted by any Board either under Section 41 of the Act or Section 25.1 of the predecessor statute. Since the organization and functioning of the Corporation in 1977 the Boards of Managers have informally adopted and used a licence of use document which remains unchanged in content over the years and which is partly in the following language:

"LICENCE OF USE

WHEREAS _____ (hereinafter called the "Unit Owner") is registered as owner of Unit Number _____ in Condominium Plan Number 7711582 and ___ undivided one ten thousandth shares in the Common Property therein, in the City of Calgary, in the Province of Alberta, (Reserving thereout all mines and minerals);

AND WHEREAS there is available for each Unit a patio or balcony as well as a parking stall, the actual boundaries of each being defined as the inside boundary of their enclosing fencing or their actual perimeters; Parking _____

AND WHEREAS the unit owner has requested the right to exclusive use and occupancy of such parking stall and balcony or patio and The Owners: Condominium Plan Number 7711582 (hereinafter called "the corporation") has agreed to grant a licence of use.

NOTE THEREFORE the unit owner of the Corporation do hereby covenant and agree as follows:

1. The Corporation hereby grants to 'the unit owner the exclusive licence and right to use and enjoy the said areas as a parking stall number ___ and balcony for the unit owner and occupants of and visitors to the said unit such licence and right to continue until the occurrence of the earlier of the following events:

(a) the transfer or sale of the said unit by the unit owner or anyone on behalf of or through the title of the unit owner.

(b) the termination of the licence by the Corporation as hereinafter provided, or

(c) the 35th anniversary of the date hereof.

The right to use hereunder shall be a licence only, and shall not operate as a lease, easement or other legal interest in land, but the unit owner's right to use hereunder shall be exclusive of other owners of unit within the Condominium of which the said unit is part.

2. The unit owner covenants and agrees to use the said licensed areas solely as a balcony and a parking stall in conjunction with use and occupancy of the said unit and shall in all respects regarding the use and occupancy of such balcony and parking stall observe and perform all the requirements of the bylaws of the Corporation in force from time to time.

3. Without limiting the generality of Paragraph 2 hereof, the unit owner covenants and agrees to keep and maintain and on expiry or termination of this licence to deliver up the whole of the said licenced areas in good and substantial repair and condition

6. In the event of any default of the unit owner's covenants hereunder continuing for more than 10 days after notice of the default by the Corporation to the unit owners the Corporation may at its option immediately retake possession of the said licenced areas whereupon this licence and all rights of the said owners to exclusive use hereunder shall cease and terminate.

8. The corporation may notwithstanding anything herein contained, at any time terminate the within licence upon 650 days notice to the owner.

9. This agreement is not intended to create any interest in land, and the unit owner shall not caveat or otherwise howsoever encumber any part of the common property in respect of this agreement or any rights hereunder.

[para13] The Licence of Use forms appear to bear the signature of two members of the Board of Management and in some cases appear to bear the seal of the Condominium Corporation.

[para14] In December of 1987 a general mailing was made by the Board of Managers to all unit owners enclosing a copy of the Licence of Use then considered by the Board to apply in regard to parking. The distribution was achieved under the following sample letter as signed by Mr. H.W. Cox, the then President of the Board of Managers (the "Tab 24" letter):

"VARSITY VILLA 4001 - 49 Street, N.W.

December 17, 1987

Dear Mrs. Sutherland:

Please find attached, your copy of the Licence of Use for your unit at Varsity Villa. This document may be redundant to the original licence agreement provided in your purchase of your unit. In the event that you already have a licence, you may choose to retain either or both for your records. Please be aware that should you decide to sell your unit, the new purchaser will need to obtain new documentation in their name from the Board of Managers.

It should be noted that all parking spaces are part of the common property of Varsity Villa, and your elected Board of Managers retain control of all common property.

The Board have no intent to reassign any parking stalls, but are empowered to rescind any parking licence for breach of bylaws. Please be aware that you are responsible for the maintenance of your parking stall and balcony.

If you have any questions regarding this document, please contact Dennis Anderson at 247-1014.

Yours truly,

H.W. Cox PRESIDENT BOARD OF MANAGERS"

[para15] I see no need to recite or comment on the testimony of any of the plaintiffs or of Mr. G.E. Wright, the husband of the plaintiff Ann Wright, or on their respective knowledge or conduct in regard to their purchases. This proceeding is brought as a matter of principle and as a challenge to the way the Board has administered the indoor parking stall component of the common property of the Corporation. No superior title is claimed by any plaintiff - they seek the formulation of a policy of indoor parking stall allocation that is inclusive as opposed to exclusive.

[para16] Four witnesses testified on behalf of the defendants - Mr. Gordon Meades, first President of the Board of Managers and a current Board member, Mr. Dennis Anderson, President of Benchmark Management Ltd., the Manager of the Corporation, Mrs. Bonnie Nahornick, a member of the Board of Managers and Mr. John Bruce the present President of the Board of Managers.

[para18] Mr. Anderson testified as to his function as President of the management company selected by the Board, of his attendance at Board meetings and to his receipt of, and compliance with, instructions from the Board and Board members from time to time. Mr. Anderson alluded to a meeting with the Corporation's solicitor in regard to the Board's parking policy, to his involvement in the obtainment of the required 75% support for the adoption of the current by-laws and confirmed the mailing of new Licence of Use forms to all owners in 1987. In cross-examination Mr. Anderson confirmed that he was not aware of the existence of any written resolution of the Board establishing its policy, that he first learned of the policy at an early board meeting and that there had been no change in the administration of the policy from 1986 to present date. Mr. Anderson was directly involved in the drafting of the Tab 24 letter adopted by the Board for dissemination of the 1987 Licences of Use and confirmed his understanding that a Licence of Use, by its terms, ceased on the sale of a unit. Mr. Anderson also confirmed that there have been sales of units since the date of the Wright purchase.

[para19] Mrs. Nahornick testified as to her purchase of a unit from her mother in 1985 and to her assumption of the use of outside parking stall number 7. Mrs. Nahornick applied to the Board for an indoor stall and was informed that her attainment of same was not possible. Mrs. Nahornick accepted this position and as a present Board member confirmed that there has been no change in the policy.

[para20] Mr. John Bruce has been the President of the Board of Managers since 1990 and is the owner of two units and has the use of two parking stalls. He confirmed that the Wrights attended a Board meeting in February, 1991 requesting an indoor parking stall and he informed them that their chances were "slim or never and most likely never". Mr. Bruce joined Mr. Anderson on the visit to the Corporation's solicitor for advice as to the policy. Mr. Bruce confirmed Mrs. Wright's attendance at the October, 1991 board meeting and to her reading out an appeal for change in the policy and Mr. Bruce testified as to the making of an offer on behalf of the Board to obtain a temporary licence of use from the owner of an indoor parking stall terminable on the sale of the unit or on the owner acquiring a vehicle. This offer was rejected by the Wrights. Toward the conclusion of his examination in-chief, Mr. Bruce suggested that the cost of servicing an outdoor parking stall was close to being equal to the cost of servicing an indoor parking stall.

[para21] In cross-examination, Mr. Bruce confirmed that a duty of the Board of Managers was to administer the common property for the benefit of all of the owners. Mr. Bruce confirmed that the policy is not written, is not in the by-laws or in any resolution, is not recorded in the Land Titles Office nor posted anywhere. Mr. Bruce maintains that the policy is fair and particularly so where most owners have paid extra purchase price monies to their vendor for the expectation of indoor parking and that the policy has been followed from the outset. Mr. Bruce contends that an owner has full control of his or her parking stall as long as he or she has a Licence of Use and that it was immaterial whether or not that owner makes actual use of the parking stall.

[para22] Mr. Bruce confirmed that the Board of Managers has not considered any change to its policy, that it has not considered creating any kind of a waiting list for indoor parking stalls nor considered any requirement that a waiting owner should be accorded precedence over a renter. Mr. Bruce advised that sixteen or seventeen indoor parking stalls are presently rented out by owners and that there are eight owners who do not have cars and do not rent out their indoor parking stalls.

[para23] The Court received the evidence of eight original unit owners through the receipt of the Tab 4 document entitled "Admission of Evidence Respecting Original Unit Owners Listed in Schedule "A"". Their evidence is as follows:

"ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE RESPECTING ORIGINAL UNIT OWNERS LISTED IN SCHEDULE "A"

This is the evidence of the unit owners of Varsity Villa listed in Schedule "A" attached hereto, all of whom have indoor parking. This document is an agreed statement of their evidence, entered for the purpose of this trial only, and is to be treated in the same manner as if it were presented as sworn viva voce evidence by these witnesses who may otherwise have been called as witnesses on behalf of the Defendant Corporation.

1. We are all current owners and original purchasers of units at Varsity Villa, the Defendant Corporation in this action.
2. We all purchased our units at Varsity Villa in 1988 or 1978.
3. When considering whether or not to purchase our units at Varsity Villa, indoor parking was a prime consideration. In some cases it was represented to us (by representatives of the developer or successors of the developer from whom we bought our units) that the same unit could be purchased either with or without indoor parking, but when purchased with indoor parking there would be an extra charge added to the purchase price of the unit.
4. When considering the prices we were prepared to pay for our units, the availability of indoor parking was a significant factor that caused us to pay more money for our units.
5. Upon concluding our purchases, we were further assured of receiving indoor parking; in some cases we selected and were promised a particular indoor parking stall; in all cases we did receive an indoor parking stall assignment as promised, which indoor parking stall we have since that time used, lent to others at no charge, or rented out to others, subject only to the Corporation's requirements as to general cleanliness and tidiness of the parking areas.
6. In some case we were given by representatives of the developer Licences of Use for our parking stalls in substantially the same form as that used today by the Corporation for our designated parking stalls; in other cases we do not recall a whether such a Licence of Use was delivered to us at the time of purchase.
7. As far as we know, upon the sale of a unit the Board of Managers of the Corporation has always allowed the incoming purchaser (or his designates) to use the same parking stall as had been occupied by the previous owner of his unit, and we have always believed that when we eventually sold our units we could represent to prospective purchasers that they also would receive indoor parking.
8. We state that the Plaintiffs should have known or should have been able to discover very easily which parking stalls they would receive and if they chose not to obtain such information before purchasing then they acted unwisely and the rest of the owners should not be forced to suffer.
9. Units with indoor parking have a higher market value than those with outdoor parking.
10. We would be prejudiced if there were any change in the parking system at this stage and any such change would adversely affect the market value of our units."

[para24] The Court received the evidence of 44 subsequent unit owners through the receipt of the Tab 5 document entitled "Admission of Evidence Respecting Subsequent Unit Owners Listed in Schedule "A"". Their evidence is as follows:

"ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE RESPECTING SUBSEQUENT UNIT OWNERS LISTED IN SCHEDULE "A"

This is the evidence of the unit owners of Varsity Villa listed in Schedule "A" attached hereto, all of whom have indoor parking. This document is an agreed statement of their evidence entered for the purpose of this trial only and is to be treated in the same manner as if it were presented as sworn viva voce evidence by these witnesses who may otherwise have been called as witnesses on behalf of the Defendant Corporation.

1. We are all current owners of units at Varsity Villa, the Defendant Corporation in this action.
2. We were advised by various people at the time of purchase that we would receive indoor parking.
3. When we purchased our respective units, we were advised by various people that the previous owners had Licences of Use for indoor parking stalls. In many cases, the real estate listing sheets indicated that the units had indoor parking.
4. In some cases we were not aware that there were insufficient indoor parking stalls for all owners.
5. When considering whether or not to purchase at Varsity Villa and when considering which unit to purchase, indoor parking was a prime consideration. In some cases both units with indoor parking and those with outdoor parking were available at the time when we purchased our respective units.
6. When considering the prices we were prepared to pay for our units, indoor parking was a significant factor that caused us to pay more money for our units.
7. When we took possession of our units at Varsity Villa we were given by the Corporation use of the same stalls as occupied by the previous owners of the units and understood from various people that when we eventually sold our units we could represent to the subsequent purchasers that they would also receive indoor parking.
8. As far as we know, to the best of our knowledge the system by which the Board of Mangers has allocated parking stalls has always been the same.

9. We state that the Plaintiffs should have known or should have been able to discover very easily which parking stalls they would receive and if they chose not to obtain such information before purchasing then they acted unwisely and the rest of the owners should not be forced to suffer.

10. Units with indoor parking have a higher market value than those with outdoor parking.

11. We would be prejudiced if there were any change in the parking system at this stage and any such change would adversely affect the market value of our units."

[para25] The evidence in this trial has accordingly been given by four witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs and 56 witnesses on behalf of the defendants.

[para26] May I say at this point in these Reasons for Judgment that I accept that every owner at Varsity Villa is a good person and a good neighbour with a genuine concern for, and allegiance to, the best interests of the Corporation. It is truly regrettable that a shortfall of indoor parking stalls was part of the construction picture at Varsity Villa from the very beginning, indoor parking being an obvious major consideration in our climate conditions.

[para27] I will assume that everyone involved will understand that the wishes or desires of a majority in number cannot be determinative of an issue when registered property interests are created under a statute and these interests are clothed with the protection of the Torrens System of land registration. It must also be said in regard to equally identified rights that "first in" cannot become "forever in" when the result is that someone of equal ownership interest is "forever out".

[para28] It is clear from a review of the by-laws, whether initial, second or current, that whatever the parking rights granted thereunder, they are not permanent and they are terminable. The Tab 17 form of Licence of Use was adopted by the Board of Managers of this Corporation from its early inception and has consistently been considered to be operative and governing in regard to parking rights ever since. Current By-Law 58(a) requires that "the Board shall assign or grant a licence of use of an area of the common property in the underground or at grade parking area...". By its own terms, the right of use and enjoyment, as given under the Licence of Use, is to continue until the occurrence of the earlier of three named events with the most salient being the transfer or sale of a unit. If a right is expressed to continue until a transfer or sale, the only proper interpretation is that it ceases on that transfer or sale. In fact and practice, a transfer or sale of a unit at Varsity Villa has not operated as an extinguishment of parking rights, as called for under the Licence of Use, but rather as a preservation of precisely the same rights followed by their automatic allocation to the vendor's successor.

[para29] The implementation of the policy is a matter of procedure. This procedure counters the very language adopted by the Board and has resulted in the absence of the exercise of discretion on the part of the Board in dealing with parking rights. It clearly leads to a situation of unfairness that operates directly against the rights and interests of a number of the members of the Corporation, which number includes these plaintiffs. It is not a justifying factor that most of the unit owners with indoor parking privileges have paid additional monies to a vendor for the expectation of the continuation of those privileges. The payment of monies by a number of people cannot turn a bad policy into a correct or a sustainable policy. As Mr. Bruce quite properly conceded "It is not a function or duty of a Board to manage the personal investments of unit owners."

[para30] The first agreed statement of issue, filed as Exhibit 2, is answered in the negative and the second agreed statement of issue is answered in the affirmative.

[para31] In keeping with the directive set out in the Order of Mr. Justice Montgomery of October 28th, 1992, wherein the prayer for relief in this proceeding was limited as therein expressed, I HEREBY DECLARE that all unit owners in Varsity Villa Corporation have equal rights to the use and enjoyment of the indoor parking stalls of the common property. HEREBY ORDER AND DIRECT the Board of Managers of Varsity Villa Corporation to give consideration, within 60 days of the date of this Judgment, to the allocation of the indoor : parking stalls on a new, fair and equitable basis to all unit owners. A notice of the proposed allocation is to be given to all unit owners within a further 15 days. Such consideration by the Board should include consultation with the plaintiffs and/or their counsel. Counsel for the Corporation is to report to the Court within 90 days of the date of this Judgment regarding agreement by the unit owners on the allocation of indoor parking stalls proposed by the Board of Managers and advising the Court whether or not a Court-imposed solution to the indoor parking issue will be sought.

[para32] Costs may be spoken to at any convenient time within the said 90 day period.

No. 8803 21027

Also reported at: 79 Alta. L.R. (2d) 206, 118 A.R. 210

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Judicial District of Edmonton Dea J. March 28, 1991

L.W. Hendrickson, for the Plaintiff. D.F. Pawlowski, for the Defendant.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

DEA J.:-- Two issues are raised for consideration in this foreclosure action. The first is whether the documentation evidencing the loan and security is complete and, if not, whether the parol evidence adduced completes what is incomplete or is merely an attempt to vary a written contract. The second issue considers an aspect of the relationship which exists between a condominium corporation and the owners of a condominium unit.

A statement of facts (but not the admissibility thereof) was tendered by the parties as were loan agreements, correspondence and security documents. Additionally, I heard testimony from some witnesses. Counsel requested that all evidence tendered be heard by the court with argument as to the admissibility thereof reserved to the end of the trial.

The evidence discloses that nine persons wanted to build a condominium for their personal use in Edmonton. Each was to have a unit and a tenth unit was to be constructed for the caretaker. They spoke to the plaintiff bank and indicated the funds needed for land acquisition and construction. The loan would be short term, perhaps a year or two. Each owner would be able to discharge his pro rata share of the bank loan upon payment of a pro rata amount to be computed by the bank based on square footage in the individual units compared to the square footage in the building. The owners were to be liable for their own pro rata only and were not to be jointly responsible for the liability of their fellow owners. The status of the caretaker's suite was not well considered. Some owners spoke of it as being common property, while another spoke of it as being jointly owned. The mechanics of the liability for the caretaker's suite equally lacked resolution.

The owners were much concerned to avoid joint liability between owners but only considered the various units in that context. No one thought how the "mechanics" of that concept would apply to the caretaker's suite if one of the owners were to default. A commitment letter was given with respect to the loan to the nine persons.

But later, in the summer or early fall of 1984, the bank required that the loan be reorganized.

A new commitment letter and subsequent amendments thereto were created and agreed upon. The earlier deal was cancelled. The new arrangement required that a limited company be incorporated by the nine. The bank was to lend the money to that company (Artnam Developments Ltd.). Artnam would own the land and building and would grant to the bank a debenture to be secured against the property. It would, as well, grant other documents of security. Artnam was to prepare and register a condominium plan to create the nine units desired by the individuals plus a suite for a caretaker. The nine individuals guaranteed - again pro rata and without joint liability - the bank indebtedness.

When the construction was almost complete, Artnam being by now the registered owner of the property and having registered the condominium plan, transferred the caretaker's suite to the condominium corporation created under the Condominium Property Act. That condominium corporation is, of course, the defendant in this action.

In and about this time, eight of the owners made their own arrangements to pay out their pro rata share of the bank loan. Each took title to his respective unit freed of the bank's claim. Each received partial discharges of the bank's claims restricted to his respective unit. The documents of discharge made no reference to the caretaker's suite.

One of the owners did not pay. In argument, counsel spoke of the bank foreclosing that unit. Counsel spoke as well of the bank loan not being fully paid off by a combination of the pro rate payments plus whatever was recovered from the foreclosure. That balance unpaid on the bank loan - the deficiency - is the quantum of the bank's claim in this lawsuit.

The bank's position is that the caretaker's suite was part of the security for the loan and was not protected by or included in the pro rata arrangement which applied to the individual units. The defendant's argument is that the caretaker's suite should have been discharged from the bank's charge either in whole, as common property of the condominium corporation, or at least in part as part of the total pro rata of those owners who did pay. The defendant argues that for the documents to fail to deal with the issue of the caretaker's suite is to disclose that the written agreements are not complete and that the true agreement between the parties is that it is partially in writing and partially parol.

I regret to say that I am not able to agree with that analysis. While the evidence of the loan which was set up prior to the summer of 1984 supports the idea of the caretaker's unit somehow being included in the references to unit liability that concept is not carried forward into the changed loan to Artnam. From the commitment letter of 13 November, 1984, and through subsequent amendments, it is clear that the old deal was gone and that a new arrangement had been made. It is true that many aspects of the old loan were brought forward i.e. the pro rata idea, the several but not joint liability, etc. But these ideas were brought forward and expressly provided for in the written agreement made between the bank and the proposed new corporation. Those arrangements, amendments, additions, etc., were all committed to writing and agreed upon as between the bank, Artnam and the individuals.

The parol evidence of the owners to the effect that the bank agreed that upon payment of each owner's pro rata share that the caretaker's suite would be released in like measure was denied by the bank. That applied before the use of Artnam as borrower but not after. After it is the written agreement which governs. The parol evidence does not show a separate agreement or the completion of an incomplete agreement. Instead it directs itself to a variation of the written contract. For that reason, it is inadmissible and cannot be admitted under the exception argued. In like manner, when the defendant asks that extrinsic evidence of the cancelled loan be admitted to show that the caretaker's suite was to be treated as common property of the condominium corporation, it again asks for parol evidence to be admitted for the purpose of varying a written contract. Again, the admissibility of that evidence for that purpose must be rejected.

In pursuing its remedies in this action against the caretaker's suite, the plaintiff is doing no more than executing the security it acquired when the loan was made. To admit the discussions requested is not to complete the real agreement as is argued but is as aforesaid to allow a written contract to be varied by parol evidence.

A point made by the plaintiff is that the officer of the bank most relied upon by the owners left the bank in June of 1985. In September of 1985, a curator was appointed for the bank and the bank went into liquidation in January of 1986. If ever, the bank argues, there was a call for persons with liabilities or potential liabilities to the bank to re-examine their arrangement this was it. Additionally, the defendant in his cross-examination of the owner-witnesses adduced evidence that suggests strongly that the owners did not pay adequate attention to the written commitment, amendments and agreements they signed.

A subsidiary argument advanced by the defendant was that the foreclosure of the non-paying owner's unit acted as a discharge of that person's liability vis-à-vis the other owners and vis-à-vis the caretaker's suite. Again, I must reject that argument. The documentation is too clear that the pro rata payments relate to the individual owners' units. Those payments did not purport to discharge or release other bank securities on assets of the borrower Artnam nor its successor in title, the defendant.

The second main argument of the defendant was directed to the status of the condominium corporation. The argument was that as the owners of the unit own the condominium corporation that the assets of the condominium corporation (such as the caretaker's suite) would in law be owned jointly by the owners. I am unable to find any authority for this proposition nor does it find a basis in any applicable principle of law. Indeed, the status of a condominium corporation is sufficient to allow it to acquire and to hold title to real property as it has done here. It is true that a condominium corporation is different in many respects from corporations authorized under the Business Corporations Act but the differences do not provide assistance to this defendant. An asset owned by a condominium corporation is owned by a separate legal entity. The owners qua owners have certain rights to direct the affairs of the corporation but there it ends. There is no right to claim specific assets of the condominium corporation as the property of any particular owner or any group of owners jointly or severally.

It follows then that the security pursuant to which the plaintiff brings this foreclosure action is valid and enforceable and in default. Having concluded that, the parties have asked that I refer this matter to the Master to be dealt with as an ordinary foreclosure action. The Master will determine the balance outstanding on the debenture, compute the amount of interest and provide to the parties the normal rights and remedies available to them and which are referred to in their pleadings and in the general law.

The defence to counterclaim filed by the defendant is dismissed. In accordance with the terms of the debenture, the plaintiff will be entitled to costs on a solicitor and client basis here and before the Master.

Q.B.G. No. 18 of 1995 J.C.M. Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench Judicial Centre of Melville MacLeod J. December 6, 1995.

Counsel: J.M. Williams, for the applicants hereinafter noted. N. Halford, for respondent registered owners of Condominium Plan No. 91R21990.

[para1] MacLEOD J.:-- The difficulty herein stems from a proposed consent order presented in the context of two court files arising from the construction of a condominium project in Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan.

ACTION Q.B. 115/92

[para2] The affidavit of Zelma Idelle Cairns ("Cairns") shows the following: She purchased Unit Number 10 and a 1025 ten-thousandths share in the common property of Condominium Plan No. 91R21990 in August, 1991, for $110,000.00. She held back 10% of the purchase price, or $11,000.00, and applied under s. 57 of The Builders' Lien Act, S.S. 1984-85-86, c. B-7.1 (the "Act") to pay the $11,000.00 into court and for an order for the removal of (a) four liens registered against both Unit No. 10 and her 1025 ten-thousandths share in the common property, and (b) ten liens registered against Unit No. 10 only.

[para3] No certificates of title were filed on the application. The order was granted on September 17, 1992, with the addition of paragraph 4, which reads as follows:

4. It is further ordered and adjudged that the liens as listed herein, upon payment in the sum of $11,000.00 shall cease to attach to the lands as described herein and all liens as listed herein shall become a charge against the sum of $11,000.00 paid into court to this order.

[para4] The $11,000.00 was paid into court on September 21, 1992. The liens to be discharged were:

(a) Unit 10 and 1025 ten-thousandths of common property:

Number Lien Claimant 91R52162 Walter Edward Mackin 91R56099 Westwood Distributors (1990) Ltd. 91R56659 Glenco Building Products Ltd. 91R59581 P.J. White Hardwoods Ltd.

(b) Condominium Unit 10 only:

Number Lien Claimant 91R50478 Earnshaw Enterprises Ltd. 91R52544 Parkland Flooring Ltd. 91R53487 Ultra Products Distributing Ltd. 91R56532 JLP Masonry Inc. 91R56661 Glenco Building Products Ltd. 91R56965 Supreme Kitchens & Millwork Ltd. 91R58176 Bruce's Landscaping Services Ltd. 91R59583 P.J. White Hardwoods Ltd. 92R01453 Place-Crete (Southern) Inc. 92R04235 Apex Construction Ltd.

ACTION Q.B.G. 18/95

[para5] Apex Construction Ltd. and JLP Masonry Inc. commenced action against:

(a) The persons who were registered owners of seven condominium units, each of whom also were the owners of a respective undivided share of the common property.

(b) Zelma Idelle Cairns, added pursuant to ss. 57(5) and ss. 88(2) of the Act.

(c) Nine lien claimants.

(d) Walter Edward Mackin and Westwood Distributors (1990) Ltd. whose liens were vacated by the order of Mr. Justice Osborn "and thereby became a charge on the moneys paid into the court" by Zelma Idelle Cairns.

(e) 589546 Saskatchewan Ltd., pursuant to ss. 88(2)(a).

(f) William Kupiec, a trustee under s. 84, pursuant to ss. 88(2)(d).

[para6] The plaintiffs assert specific claims against 589546 Saskatchewan Ltd. and against each unit owner. The plaintiffs say that they have no knowledge of liens filed by the lien claimants. The claim relating to Cairns is shown in paragraphs 29 and 31 of the statement of claim as follows:

29. On September 15, 1992, pursuant to the Order of Mr. Justice H.A. Osborne[sic], the Defendant Zelma Idelle Cairns paid into the Court of Queen's Bench, Judicial Centre of Melville, the sum of $11,000.00. By virtue of the said Order, the claims of lien of the Plaintiffs was vacated in so far as they applied to Unit No. 10 and they were instead made a charge on the monies paid into Court pursuant to the said Order. By the terms of the said Order, the liens of the Defendants Walter Edward Mackin, Westwood Distributors (1990) Ltd., Glenco Building Products Ltd., P.J. White Hardwoods Ltd., Earnshaw Enterprises Ltd., Parkland Flooring Ltd., Ultra Products Distributing Ltd., Supreme Kitchens & Millworks Ltd., Bruce's Landscaping Services Ltd., P.J. White Hardwoods Ltd. and Place-Crete (Southern) Inc., became a charge against the monies paid into Court pursuant to the said Order.

31. The Plaintiffs therefore claim with respect to the Defendant, Zelma Idelle Cairns:

(a) An Order pursuant to s. 96(1)(b) of The Builders' Lien Act directing the Registrar of the Melville Judicial Centre to pay to the Plaintiffs the monies paid into Court by the Defendant, Zelma Idelle Cairns, to the credit of the file styled Q.B. No. 115 of 1992, Judicial Centre of Melville, and all interest that has accrued thereon or alternatively payment of such pro rata share of the said monies as may be appropriate based on claims of lien proved in the within action;

(b) Costs of and incidental to this action.

[para7] On March 15, 1995, $5,000.00 was paid into court by Mr. Niel Halford via his letter of March 13, 1995, in these words:

I enclose my trust cheque in the amount of $5,000.00, which I am paying into court to the credit of this action pursuant to Rule 177 of the Rules of Court.

[para8] On August 9, 1995, by application pursuant to ss. 96(1)(b) of the Act, the plaintiffs sought payment out of the monies paid into court in 1992 by Cairns.

[para9] The supporting memorandum contained these representations:

Claim Against the Monies/Zelma Idelle Cairns

Under s. 57(5) of The Builder's Lien Act, when an order is made directing payment into Court of a holdback and vacating the liens, the lien claimants are entitled to proceed with an action under s. 86 to enforce their claims against the money in Court. The Plaintiffs did so by including in the Statement of Claim in Q.B. action No. 18 of 1995, a claim against these monies. The combination of sections 57(5) and 86 require a Statement of Claim to enforce a claim against the monies in Court. However, s. 88 (which outlines who will be parties to the action) does not address who should be named in lieu of the owner who paid the money into Court. (In other words, who the lien claimants name as the Defendant when issuing a claim with respect to monies in Court?) Out of an abundance of caution, Mrs. Cairns (the party paying the money into Court) was named as a Defendant. However, it is clear that she has no interest in the monies having given that up in exchange for the lien claimants' consent to her payment into Court of $11,000.00. As the Certified Copy of Title discloses, she is no longer an owner in the condominium. The Notice of Motion and Affidavit of Search was served on Mrs. Cairns by leaving it at the address for service she provided when the monies were paid into Court (the Halford Law Office). Based on discussions with Mr. Halford, we do not anticipate that Mrs. Cairns would make an appearance in this matter.

[para10] Cairns was personally served with a copy of the notice of motion and affidavit on July 28, 1995.

[para11] The consent order contained the signatures of all claimants whose liens were removed by Mr. Justice Osborn's order and, in addition, David Paisley, 589546 Saskatchewan Limited, and its trustee, William Kupiec.

[para12] The order was granted, although in light of later study and Mr. Halford's presentation, it should not have been.

SUBSEQUENT EVENTS

[para13] The Melville deputy local registrar noted that in the 1995 action $5,000.00 had been paid into court, and in the exercise of suitable caution, called Mr. Halford to confirm that $11,000.00 was to be paid out of the 1992 moneys paid into court and not those paid into court in the 1995 action.

[para14] Mr. Halford wrote on August 10, 1995, as follows:

In the 1992 action I represented the applicant, Mrs. Cairns, who paid $11,000 into court in return for an order vacating the builders' liens against her condominium unit.

In that action I acted for Mrs. Cairns only. The people who purchased the other condominium units were not parties to that action as it did not concern their condominium units.

In the 1995 action I represent Irving, Carson, Patrick, Keys, Fehrenbach, Fehrenbach, Simmonds, Simmonds, Barton, and Barton. These are people who purchased other units in the same condominium project.

I have paid money into court on their behalf in this new, 1995 action.

On 24 July 1995 Mr. Williams, solicitor for Apex Construction Ltd. and JLP Masonry Inc. served me with notice of this application. His letter to me states as follows:

"Please find enclosed for service upon you, a Notice of Motion and Affidavit of Search with respect to the above captioned matter. This is an application for distribution to the lien claimants of the money you paid into Court in 1992. We are serving you at this address since it was the address you gave for service when you paid the money into Court."

In this application in the 1995 action I was not served with notice on behalf of the people I represent in this action, Irving, Carson, Patrick, Keys, Fehrenbach, Fehrenbach, Simmonds, Simmonds, Barton and Barton.

I do not know why Mr. Williams made an application in the 1995 action for payment out of court of money from the 1992 action.

I do not know why Mr. Williams made an application in the 1995 action but served notice of that application on the parties to the 1992 action.

I have not seen the draft order that is mentioned in the notice of motion in the 1995 action, nor the applicant's memorandum for the judge in the 1995 action. To the best of my knowledge there has been no notice of the application in the 1995 action served directly on any of my clients who are parties to the 1995 action.

[para15] This was referred to the court and the clerk was directed not to issue the order. On August 18, 1995, a telephone conference was held with Mr. Williams, acting for the plaintiffs and the lawyer having carriage of the consent application, and Mr. Halford.

[para16] Before getting to the gist of the matter, it may be appropriate to deal with an ancillary problem.

[para17] Mr. Halford said, essentially, that he was served as the solicitor for Cairns in the 1992 action and was not served as solicitor for his clients, condominium owners, in the 1995 action. Since the application for the consent order was made in the 1995 action, he did not respond to it. In the end he says he is not sure what is going on.

[para18] Williams takes the view that it is not correct for Mr. Halford to say he has never been served on behalf of his other clients; the documents served on Halford's office were served there personally as the address for service of Cairns in the 1992 action, but that is also the address for service of Mr. Halford's clients in the 1995 action and that he cannot take off those hats and put on Cairns's hat.

[para19] This may be a succinct and reasonable argument but not much can now be made of it. It is obvious that documents received by Mr. Halford were treated as documents received on behalf of Cairns, and, because he no longer acted for her and she had no further interest in the matter, I presume he did nothing further, and did not notice that the matter also involved his other clients.

CONSENT ORDER

[para20] The consent order was not signed by any of the defendant registered condominium owners. Mr. Williams takes the view that Cairns was the only other party who would potentially have any interest in the payment out process. Halford says the $11,000.00 that was paid in in 1992 can be paid out to anyone, and Cairns does not care.

[para21] The problem develops from and with respect to the remaining owners. It is unclear to me whether the monies to be distributed pursuant to the consent order relate to the common property or individual condominiums, or both.

[para22] Halford represents all, or almost all, the registered owners. His view is that his clients are liable to the lienholders; there is an issue as to how much they have to pay but no doubt that they must pay something. Their position is:

(a) That some of the registered liens are invalid; the clearest example given is that of Glenco Building Products Ltd. ("Glenco"), whose lien is said to be invalid by reason that Glenco put carpets into the building, was not paid, registered a lien and then took the carpets out. Mr. Halford's clients would not consent to any money being paid to Glenco, and believe they can defeat Glenco's claim entirely, although they have less optimism about the other claimants.

(b) They would like any money that is paid to go to persons with valid liens so that the liability of his clients is reduced.

(c) If the $11,000.00 goes to lien claimants other than Glenco, the amount of the lien claims in the 1995 action will be reduced by the amount received by such lien claimants.

[para23] Mr. Williams says that the lien claims exceed the holdbacks and that even if Glenco's lien was reduced to zero, the other lien claims would still be more than the holdback. The lien claims are $88,755.86 and the holdbacks are said to be approximately $56,000.00. Glenco's claim is said to be $17,210.00.

[para24] Mr. Williams argues that even if Glenco gets payment from the Cairns unit, the liens against other units can be contested. However, it does not appear possible to subdivide the action into suitable subcomponents. The Glenco claim was with respect to both the Cairns unit and her undivided interest in the common property. The amount paid in was the holdback, not the amount of the liens, and no separate allotment was made for costs, if any, as contemplated by ss. 57(2)(d).

[para25] To protect their ownership in the condominiums the registered owners will very likely be obliged to pay the amount of the holdback, but probably not more, to the lien claimants with valid liens.

[para26] While the discussion with counsel related to the Glenco claim, that was said only to be an example. Apparently there may be others to which objection may be taken.

[para27] In short, Halford argues that the liens are not all on the condominium property, and the liability of each condominium owner is contested.

[para28] The monies were paid into court by Cairns pursuant to s. 57. Section 57(5) is as follows:

57(5) Where an order is made under subsection (2), the lien claimant whose registered claim of lien has been vacated may proceed with an action to enforce his claim against the amount paid into court or security posted in accordance with the procedures set out in Part VIII or the court may make any order to facilitate the resolution of all claims, but no certificate of action shall be registered against the land.

[para29] This section is designed to have the moneys deposited in court replace the registered owner's interest in land and so far as that owner is concerned, the lien becomes a charge against the money, not the land, but ss. 57(5) does not require an admission of the lien entitlement, it merely changes the lien security.

[para30] In the case of a condominium, at least so far as condominium property is concerned (as distinct from individual condominium units) any payment may reduce or retire a lien and, if so, the claim against all other owners with respect to that claim is reduced or discharged.

[para31] I conclude that it is not possible on the facts before me to subdivide the issues and arrange for payment in the manner set out by the proposed consent order. The proposed consent order is so closely intermingled with the issues in the 1995 action that it is not appropriate to attempt to make what amounts to interim rulings of law in that action.

[para32] The consent order shall not issue unless or until further ordered by the court.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 539 (plaintiff), and Chapters Inc. (defendant)

Docket No. 99-CV-163178 Ontario Superior Court of Justice Gans J. Heard: July 27, 1999. Judgment: July 30, 1999.

Counsel: Martin Sclisizzi, for the moving party. Timothy Pinos and Michele A. Wright, for the responding party. [para1] GANS J. (endorsement):-- The plaintiff condominium corporation ("Corporation") has commenced an action in nuisance against Chapters Inc. It seeks, among other things, an interlocutory and permanent injunction directing Chapters to remove certain signage it has erected over the portico to the entrance of the ground floor of the condominium complex located at 110 Bloor Street West in Toronto.

[para2] By agreement of the parties, consideration of the merits of the Corporation's motion for an order compelling Chapters to remove the signage is to be heard after the determination of a preliminary question on whether or not the Corporation has status to bring the action.

[para3] At the commencement of argument, counsel agreed that the sole issue for consideration was whether or not the Corporation has status to maintain the action at this moment in time or whether it was required to give prior written notice of its intention to commence suit to the building's unit holders. Putting the matter otherwise, Chapters argues that the subject matter of the action is governed by section 14(2) of the Condominium Act, and notice to the unit holders was a necessary precondition to the commencement of suit. Section 14(2) provides as follows:

(2) Idem - The corporation after giving written notice to all owners and mortgagees may sue on its own behalf and on behalf of any owner with respect to the common elements and any units, even if the corporation was not a party to the contract in respect of which the action is brought, and the legal and court costs in an action brought in whole or in part on behalf of any owners in respect of their units shall be borne by those owners in the proportion in which their interests are affected.

[para4] Section 14 has formed the subject matter of several judicial pronouncements, none of which is, regrettably, directly on point. The section in issue, as all agree, is not free of doubt and is confusing in the extreme. Would that it were written otherwise.

[para5] The starting point of the analysis is found in section 27(a) of the Interpretation Act, which provides as follows:

27. In every Act, unless the contrary intention appears, words making any association or number of persons a corporation or body politic and corporate,

(a) vest in the corporation power to sue and be sued, to contract and be contracted with its corporate name, to have a common seal, to alter or change the seal at its pleasure, to have perpetual succession, to acquire and hold personal property or movables for the purpose for which the corporation is constituted, and to alienate the same at pleasure;

[para6] Chapters argues that in order to understand the relationship of section 27(a) of the Interpretation Act and section 14 of the current Condominium Act, one must have regard to section 9(18) of the predecessor legislation which provides in part as follows: "Any action with respect to the common elements may be brought by the corporation ..." From this, it is argued that the Legislature now intends to permit condominium corporations to sue in respect to matters given to the unit holders. The only exception to this requirement arises when an action is commenced in the Small Claims Court (section 14(3)). In support of its position, Chapters relies on the decision of Griffiths J., as he then was, in York Condominium Corp. No. 420 v. Deerhaven Properties Ltd. et al. (1982), 40 O.R. (2d) 106 (H.C.J.) at 109. It further argues that any action commenced without the appropriate notice is a nullity (see York Condominium Corp. No. 46 v. Medhurst, Hogg & Associates Ltd. (1982), 39 O.R. (2d) 389 at 391, aff'd. 41 O.R. (2d) 800n (Ont. C.A.).

[para7] As I understand the argument, Chapters suggests that subsection 14(1) first mandates a condominium corporation to provide notice to the unit holders in respect to a claim for damages to the common elements. Subsection 14(2) further mandates a corporation to provide notice in all other actions "with respect to the common elements" and not merely actions founded in contract to which the corporation is not a party. In this respect, it argues that the decision of Southey J. in Beckett Elevator Limited. v. York Condominium Corp. No. 42 (1984), 45 O.R. (2d) 699 (H.C.J.) was wrongly decided, or at least, Mr. Justice Southey misconstrued the decision of Griffiths J. in Deerhaven Properties. Again, putting the matter differently, Chapters argues that unless an action involving the common elements comes within the jurisdiction of the Small Claims Court, all actions, whether in contract or otherwise, require prior notice to the unit holders.

[para8] Counsel for the Corporation argues, in a manner consistent with the decision in Beckett Elevators, that section 14(2) does not permit such a broad prohibition, but is limited to actions in contract and only where the condominium corporation is not, itself, a party to the contract. In all other manner of action, therefore, save for an action in damages as prescribed by section 14(1), a condominium corporation is at liberty to commence suit without regard to the precondition of written notice. This interpretation, counsel suggests, is consistent with the decision of Griffiths J. in Deerhaven Properties and section 27(a) of the Interpretation Act.

[para9] While I have some difficulty reconciling the cases and the wording of the sections, in the final analysis I agree with counsel for the Corporation. Section 14(2) is a limitation to the general powers provided by section 27 of the Interpretation Act and only in respect to a contract to which the condominium corporation is not, itself, a party. (Indeed, it can be said that this section merely extends a cause of action to situations where there is no privity of contract between the condominium corporation and the other party to the contract.) In my view, to hold otherwise would deny the existence and distinction between subsections 14(1) and (2) of the Act and would call into question the rationale for the amendment to section 9(18). If Chapters were right in its interpretation, the Legislature could more easily have amended the Act by grafting the notice precondition to the end of the first phrase of section 9(18). Such was not done and therefore the court is obliged to give some meaning to what, in fact, was expressed in the Act.

[para10] In the final analysis, the decision of Griffiths J. at 108 et. seq. is most instructive:

The central issue then is whether s. 14(2) should reasonably be construed as restricting the broad right to sue conferred on the plaintiff corporation by s. 26(a) of the Interpretation Act (now s. 27(a)), to a right to maintain an action for breach of contract only with respect to the common elements. To put it another way, in the light of the broad power to sue conferred on a condominium by the predecessor s. 9(18) of the Condominium Act, is it reasonable to construe the present s. 14 as expressing a legislative intention to sharply limit those powers?

In my view, s. 14(2) as remedial consumer legislation should not be rigidly or narrowly construed to the extent it confers on the condominium a right to sue. On that Principle, I conclude it is reasonable to interpret the section as conferring on the corporation an unlimited right to sue with respect to common elements, and further extending that right by providing that an action in contract may be maintained by the corporation even though it was not a party to the contract.

As I view s. 14 generally it seems to me that the obvious intention of the Legislature was not to restrict the broad power to sue previously held under s. 9(18) but rather to extend those powers by providing under s. 14(1) a right to sue and recover damages and costs in respect to not only the common elements but with respect to the assets and individual units of the corporation as well. By s. 14(2) as I have found the Legislature intended to confer a right to sue on contracts to which the corporation was a party.

[para11] The plaintiff is therefore entitled to an order that it may proceed with the action as currently constituted.

Docket No. C28512 Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Finlayson, Austin JJ.A. and Sharpe J. (ad hoc) Heard: November 17, 1998. Judgment: November 26, 1998.

Counsel: Franklin T. Richmond, for the appellants. Steven W. Pettipiere, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] FINLAYSON J.A.:-- Mildred Isabel Wallace and Laurence Cazaly appeal the decision of Speyer J. of the Ontario Court (General Division) wherein he issued a declaration that the Wellington Condominium Corporation No. 70 ("condominium corporation") has the legal authority to designate three parking spaces on the west side of the manor house in the Manor Park development as visitor parking, to be used exclusively by visitors to the condominium development.

[para2] Manor Park is a luxury condominium development that includes a large manor house surrounded by ten acres of land. The developer converted the manor house into three condominium apartments, units 13, 14 and 15. Unit 14 is owned by the appellants, who purchased it in October of 1994. Twelve other units consist of stand-alone housing units and surround the manor house. All units, including number 14, have two covered parking spaces. In addition, those occupying units 1 to 12 can park cars in their driveways. Units 13 to 15 do not have separate driveways but there is a drive that permits cars to pull up along the west side of the manor house, and there is room for three cars to park there. The aforesaid drive, including the three parking spaces, is part of the common elements available to all unit holders. The dispute in this case involves these three parking spaces.

[para3] The appellants state that when they purchased their unit they were told by the agent of the developer that they could use two of the three parking spaces for their own use in addition to the two spaces that came with unit 14. Their offer of purchase was amended to interleaf a note that they were not to be charged for this privilege. It is important to note that the appellants have never asserted that they were promised the exclusive right to park in these two spaces, merely that they, in company with all unit holders, could use the spaces from time to time if they were available.

[para4] Apparently, the appellants have used the two spaces for overnight parking and, at one time at least, had four cars parked, two in their assigned parking area and two in the common element. This caused some tension with the other unit holders, who felt that the spaces were reserved for visitor parking and should be available to their guests, delivery persons and maintenance workers.

[para5] There is some dispute between the parties as to when, if ever, these three parking spots were properly designated as "visitor parking". In November of 1995 one sign was erected showing this designation and two further signs were posted in March of 1996.

Analysis

[para6] The appellants have portrayed this dispute as being a matter between them and the rest of the unit holders. They claim that equities favour their position over the unit holders situate outside the manor house. They submit that those unit holders can park four vehicles by utilizing their driveways whereas the appellants are restricted to their two covered parking spaces. However, the fact that units 1 to 12 have separate driveways and those who purchased the units in the manor house do not, is no argument for permitting the owners of units 13 to 15 to encroach on the common elements for additional parking. As to the claim of unequal treatment, it is important to remember that the applicant in these proceedings and the respondent in this appeal is the condominium corporation, acting on the instruction of its Board of Directors with respect to a problem relating to the designation of part of the common area as visitor parking. It seeks a declaration binding all unit holders, not just the appellants. The application was intended to resolve a problem that has been discussed and voted on in at least one general meeting of the unit owners.

[para7] The declaration of the condominium corporation defines visitor parking as follows:

Each space in the common elements to be used as visitors' parking shall be used only by visitors and guests of the unit owners for the purpose of parking thereon one vehicle and shall be individually so designated by means of clearly visible signs, and such spaces shall not be assigned, leased or sold to any unit owner or otherwise.

[para8] The rules of the condominium corporation provide that:

Residents shall not be permitted to park their vehicles in visitor parking under any circumstances.

[para9] The appellants acknowledge that the declaration and rule had been passed prior to their purchase of their condominium unit, but rely upon the fact that "clearly visible signs" had not been erected designating the three parking spaces as visitor parking. Accordingly, the three parking spaces remained part of the common elements and the appellants were entitled to use them in common with all unit holders for temporary parking. Despite the suggestion that they were in fact parking two cars outside the front door on a semi-permanent basis, their counsel stressed in this court that they wanted access to the common area for temporary parking as a matter of convenience only because their unit's two covered parking spaces were not as accessible.

[para10] However, whatever the motivation of the appellants, and despite any assurances by the developer's agent as to the status of this portion of the common area at the time of purchase, in my opinion there is nothing to prevent the condominium corporation from later designating the subject property as reserved for visitor parking at any time. If it has not been done now it can be done with particularity in the future.

[para11] The appellants argue that, apart from their reliance upon the assurance of the developer's agent that they could park on the common elements, they also rely on s. 29 of the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C-26. They claim that the condominium corporation cannot designate the parking spaces as visitor parking without demonstrating that the designation is reasonable within the meaning of that section. Section 29(1) provides that the Board of Directors may make rules respecting the use of common elements "to promote the safety, security or welfare of the owners and of the property or for the purpose of preventing unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of the common elements." Section 29(2) provides that the "rules shall be reasonable and consistent with this Act, the declaration and the by-laws". I do not think there is anything unreasonable about the visitor parking rule, or in its application to the three spaces in question in this case. Indeed, I agree with Speyer J.'s finding that it would be unreasonable to allow the appellants to occupy two of three visitor parking spaces in a 15-unit development. In addition, it is clear that the visitor parking rule complies with the Condominium Act, as well as the condominium corporation's declaration and by-laws. The appellant's suggestion that a rule such as this cannot be implemented without demonstrating that the implementation is reasonable may have some legitimacy in theory, but it has no application to the facts of this case.

[para13] Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

FINLAYSON J.A. AUSTIN J.A. -- I agree. SHARPE J. (ad hoc) -- I agree.

Opening Arrangements and Expert Witnesses

[para1] At the opening of trial, the parties agreed that the plaintiff BAC withdraw its claims against all the defendants except MT and the counterclaim be also withdrawn, all without costs. In addition the defence took two issues off the table:

1. Did BAC hold a legally valid assignment of the take-out financing of MT?
2. Did BAC negligently make the misrepresentations to MT alleged in paragraph 18 of the statement of defence of MT, and would such action affect the claim of BAC?

It was further agreed that the remaining parties could use all transcripts for the purposes of the trial. I am releasing separately my ruling as to the number of expert witnesses (in total) permitted without leave of the Court; a copy is made an appendix to these reasons (Appendix A). I also note that well intentioned though it was, it was inappropriate for Mr. Newbould (and copied by Mr. McCutcheon) to advance an expert on Ontario law (such expert evidence is inadmissible); it is only foreign law which needs to be proved.

Facts and Background

[para2] In its simplest form, the case would seem to boil down to the following which I have found to be the facts. (Under the other headings I have also made various findings in my recitations of or conclusions as to the facts.) BAC lent $33 million as to a construction loan pursuant to the Construction Loan Agreement to Reemark to facilitate the building of a condominium Project (legal title to which was held by Reemark Nominee as bare trustee) which was syndicated out to investors (i) in limited partnerships, the Sterling LP and the Sterling LP2 and (ii) otherwise. By the TOC Assignment BAC took an assignment of the TOC entered into by MT for $36.5 million to be drawn down upon completion of the project. Mellon and SocGen then participated as to a third each with BAC. The condominium was registered on December 31, 1990 but MT never advanced funds pursuant to the TOC or the ATOC. In the period up to the end of 1991, MT's solicitors for this financing were the Gordon Traub firm which was named to act as the hold back funds trustee in the ATOC. However in late January 1992, MT changed solicitors to the Macaulay firm (and specifically to Shapero as the direct contact lawyer). Shapero submitted over fifty requisitions in his initial letter and reiterated them leading up to a proposed March 1, 1992 closing. A number of the requisitions were persisted in notwithstanding the acknowledgment by Cameron who was in charge of closing the transaction that they were not appropriate requisitions but (according to him) had been put forth as negotiation tools and positions. An example of this would be the $5 million hold back under the ATOC not being recognized as replacing the similar trust fund obligation under the Support Agreement; Shapero on behalf of MT and on the instructions of Cameron continued to insist that both the $5 million hold back and the $5.6 million trust fund obligation had to be honoured. There was no financing or funding of the TOC or the ATOC by MT. BAC put in PWL as a receiver (and manager) of the Project and Reemark's interest therein which would encompass Investor APSs and Investor Notes regarding their commitments to purchase units in the Project through their participation in the limited partnerships (Sterling LP and Sterling LP2) or otherwise. The building was sold for $22.5 million which left a significant shortfall of "excess" principal and accrued interest. The two major issues were (i) whether MT had the right to treat the ATOC as terminated without exposure to any liability and (ii) did BAC fail to act reasonably in mitigating its damages. In my view the answer to (i) is that MT did not have that right as it was in breach of its obligation to fund and to (ii) is that only a minor adjustment should be made for failure to mitigate (caused by allowing the vacancy rate to exceed 10% of the 300 units in the Project).

[para3] The Project had been sold by Reemark on a tax write off basis to investors in 1987-88 who were not owner occupiers. Reemark had sold a similar property (Sterling Two) adjacent to the Project financed by Confederation to owner occupiers on a non-tax driven basis.

[para4] In 1986 Mutual Life owned 75% of Trustco which in turn owned 100% of MT. As MT was experiencing asset growth, especially as to mortgage loans, it needed to increase its capital base. Dore, Steubing, Sutherland and Cameron through a holding company owned the balance of Trustco. However they were not able to participate in capital calls required to finance MT so that their position was diluted to 20%. In 1993, they sold out to Mutual Life which became the sole owner of Trustco (and directly MT). No evidence was led as to the terms in which they sold and whether or not there were any continuing warranties as to the financial condition and litigation; I draw no inference on this sale aspect. Before selling out, these individuals had a significant tangible indirect personal stake in the fortunes of MT. MT was regulated both federally and provincially pursuant to the financial institutions legislation; Trustco was not so regulated and thus did not directly have the same restrictions on it. For example, Trustco was able to take second mortgages whereas, subject to some non-applicable exceptions, MT was restricted to lending on the security of first mortgages on a 75% loan to value basis. Thus, before regulator crackdown, Trustco could loan on the security of a second mortgage for any excess to borrowers as to which MT was restricted to lending on a 75% value on a first mortgage. In addition MT could have loans out to any "connected" group of only 1% of its total assets.

[para5] The Project was conceived in the boom time of the latter 1980s. Reemark and MT entered into the TOC at the time when it seemed that financial institutions were having difficulty putting out loans fast enough. Unfortunately for many in the real estate market, this market softened especially with the recession and the uncertainties of the early 1990s. Prices dropped sharply.

[para6] Reemark approached MT in 1987 with various ideas including that Kingwell, an affiliate of MT, sell participation in the Project through limited partnerships. While it was originally contemplated that 200 units be sold by Kingwell, only 70 were. Additional units were sold through another broker (Ross Lloyd Martin). The basic deal was that the investors purchased a unit by paying a small deposit ($1,000), giving promissory notes to Reemark for 28% (less $1,000) of the price and agreeing to give a mortgage to MT on cft.). Thus the initial cash investment was minimal. MTq. entered into the TOC to provide this mortgage financing and closing; and there was no commitment by Trustco. However internally between MT and Trustco it was understood that MT would take a first mortgage for 75% of the value and Trustco would take the excess as a second mortgage (at the time of entering the Investor APSs the values then prevailing would have required there to be a reasonably small second mortgage). Investors were given a 3 year cash flow and rental guarantees by Reemark which were in turn guaranteed by Trustco. To obtain the Trustco guarantee Reemark had to give Trustco and MT certain covenants, namely (i) the Support Agreement whereby when the deals finally fully closed Reemark was to put the equivalent of $20 per sq. ft into a trust fund (approximately $5.6 million) to cover any claims against Trustco on the guarantees; and (ii) the covenants of Grilli, a Reemark partner in the deal, and of Fengar. There was in effect a contemplated two element step of closing -- the first (tax closing) when the investor executed the Investor APS and related documentation including a power of attorney granting Reemark the authority to complete the transaction (including the individual unit mortgage arrangements) and the second (transfer closing) when the investor went on the public register as the registered owner of the unit. The first element of closing would allow the investor to claim the benefit of losses (even prior to becoming the registered owner) for tax purposes. It would appear that investors would have treated themselves as tax owners from the first.

[para7] Reemark entered the TOC with MT on December 12, 1987 as to MT funding the closing mortgage commitments of approximately $36.5 million. MT understood that this TOC would be utilized by Reemark to obtain construction loan financing on December 1, 1988. Reemark obtained a $33 million construction loan from BAC pursuant to the Construction Loan Agreement. Two weeks later on December 16, 1988 Reemark, MT and BAC entered into the TOC Assignment being an assignment of the takeout financing under which MT agreed to direct the proceeds of the takeout financing made available pursuant to the TOC (as interim amended) to BAC. BAC also obtained at that time as assignment of some of the Investor Notes given Reemark.

[para8] As to the question of requisitions as to title, there would not appear to be any operative basis as to which MT could rely. The TOC merely provided that there be evidence satisfactory to MT's solicitor of each investor's legal or beneficial ownership of the individual unit; however even this condition was removed when the ATOC was executed.

[para9] With the General Agreement for individual investors and the Limited Partnership Agreements for limited partner investors being entered into (together with attendant documentation including a separate power of attorney in favour of Reemark) it was apparent that the intent of the investors and Reemark was that the transfer closing could take place without any further intervention by the investors. While various verbs may have been used in s. 7.01 of the General Agreement, it is clear that with the definition found in s. 12.01 of "Agreement", "Mortgage", "Permitted Encumbrances" and "Transfer Date" inter alia and the actions contemplated by s. 7.01(a), (b), (c) and (e) that it would not only be inappropriate but wrong to restrict s. 7.01(d) to "execute" in the sense of "sign" and not in the sense of making these unit transfers and unit mortgages available for use. To give the more restrictive meaning would be to strip the power of attorney of any real force and effect thereby rendering it redundant; it would also make a mockery out of s. 7.01(c):

cause the execution, delivery and registration of any documentation and the doing of any acts required pursuant to the Agreement ...

Under the Limited Partnership Offering Memorandum, the power of attorney was given a very expansive definition:

"Power of Attorney" means a power of attorney in the form set out in or accompanying the Subscription Form to be given by each subscriber authorizing the General Partner to execute the Limited Partnership Agreement, the Cash Flow Guarantee Agreement, the Rate Buy -- Down Agreement, Repurchase Commitment and notes evidencing the Primary Secured Loans on behalf of the Subscriber.

"Primary Secured Loan" means the loan to an investor on the security of his pledge of his unit and a charge against a Designated Suite following the Condominium Declaration Date and "Primary Secured Loans" means all such loans collectively.

The Limited Partner Investor Power of Attorney granted Reemark as General Partner the authority to execute, deliver and record inter alia. I am of the same view as to s. 7.01 of the Limited Partnership Purchase Agreement as I was as to s. 7.01 of the individual investor General Agreement.

[para10] See below as to my views as to parties being required to complete their agreements in good faith once they have entered into contractual arrangements: this would govern the relations between Reemark and the investors.

[para11] Thus it would appear to me that the transfer closing would be a purely administrative affair, not directly involving the investors, but rather allowing Reemark to act on their behalf pursuant to the powers of attorney. I note that the ATOC was careful to establish the circumstances under which the construction loan mortgage and the blanket mortgage would be discharged whenever there was a transfer closing completed on behalf of the investor. I note, but only in passing, that it was not advanced in evidence that any investor, anxious though that investor may have been to avoid a transfer closing, raised a lack of capacity of Reemark to utilize the power of attorney or the failure to transfer close within 15 days of notification of condominium registration. As to the latter aspect, it would not appear to me that anyone forced the issue as to closing within that time period; thus the result would be that the transfer closing could take place at a later time.

[para12] MT's position in this litigation was that the covenants and the side deal of the Support Agreement and the covenants of Grilli and Fengar were in essence breached and that as Reemark was not living up to its commitments then Reemark (and those claiming through it, here BAC pursuant to the assignment of the TOC) was estopped from claiming the benefit of the takeout financing commitment. However BAC's position is that it is not so bound or affected, further that the TOC was not conditioned in any way on any side deal and lastly that BAC was a lender for value without notice of any side deal when it took the assignment of the takeout financing. The same consideration prevailed as to the ATOC as well. I agree with BAC's contentions. In my view while the Mutual Group may have been able to rely on breaches of the Support Agreement to fend off any Reemark claim, the Mutual Group apparently overlooked incorporating the Support Agreement (of which BAC was unaware at the time of the Construction Loan Agreement and the TOC Assignment) into the terms of the TOC Assignment. This was a problem for the Mutual Group that it never overcame notwithstanding all the delays which must be characterized as stalling and the

Pierre Pagé, applicant, and Jan Lafleche, Nadine Levin, Mike Mooers and Carleton Condominium Corporation No. 20, respondents

Court File No. 103836/96 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Ottawa, Ontario McKinnon J. January 6, 1997.

Counsel: James Davidson, for the applicant. William G. McCarthy, for the respondents.

[para1] McKINNON J.:-- At issue in this application is whether the decision of West, D.C.J., (as he then was) in Reiners v. Mercer, (1988) 66 O.R. (2d), 641, should continue to be the law of Ontario. In my opinion it should.

[para2] The facts in this case are essentially the same as those before West, J. Pursuant to the Condominium Act, at least 15% of the owners requisitioned the board to call a meeting of owners. The meeting was held on October 16, 1996. A motion was presented for the removal of three of the five directors from the condominium board. The Chair of the meetings was one of the respondents. The Chair advised the meeting that in order for the motion to carry, 115 "yes" votes would be required, being a majority of unit owners. The solicitor for the applicant was present and brought the decision of Reiners v. Mercer to the attention of the Chair. The effect of this decision would only require a majority vote of those who owned a majority of the units. The Chair chose to ignore the decision. A vote was held. 85 owners voted in favour of the motion and 74 owners voted against the motion. The Chair declared the motion defeated. Thus, the present application.

[para3] Section 15(8) of the Condominium Act provides as follows:

Any director may be removed before the expiration of his or her term by a vote of owners who together own a majority of the units and the owners may elect, in accordance with the by-laws dealing with the election of directors, any person qualified to be a member of the board for the remainder of the term of the director removed.

[para4] Mr. McCarthy argues on behalf of the respondents that section 15(8) should be interpreted as requiring that those voting in favour of removal must constitute a majority of the owners. Mr. Davidson argues that as long as the owners voting at the meeting represent a majority of owners, actions taken at the meeting should be determined by a simple majority of votes cast. The same arguments were advanced in Reiners v. Mercer, at which time West, J. determined that:

The requirement of majority representation contained in section 15(8) relates to the constitution of the meeting in question. Once the meeting is validly constituted actions taken thereat are to be determined by a majority of votes cast.

[para5] West, J. supported his decision by referring to the definition of "vote" in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary and Black's Law Dictionary. He accepted the common dictionary definition of "vote" to mean 'a resolution or decision passed by, or carried in, an assembly as a result of voting'. In other words, a "vote" refers to the action taken and implies that an informed choice is made upon a specific proposal.

[para6] The respondents argue that "vote" for the purposes of section 15(8) means a vote in favour of the proposal, and not a choice as to the proposal presented. I disagree.

[para7] Other relevant sections of the Condominium Act which may be cited for guidance are the following:

S. 1(1) ... "special by-law" means a by-law that is not effective until it is,

(a) passed by the board, and (b) confirmed, with or without variation, by owners who own not less than two-thirds of the units at a meeting duly called for that purpose;

S.17(5) ... a director, if he or she was acting honestly and in good faith, is not accountable to the corporation or to the owners for any profit or gain realized from any such contract or transaction by reason only of holding the office of director, and the contract or transaction is not by reason only of the director's interest therein voidable,

(a) if the contract or transaction is confirmed or approved by at least two-thirds of the votes cast at a meeting of the owners duly called for that purpose;

S. 18(3) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, a quorum for the transaction of business at a meeting of owners is those owners present in person or represented by proxy owning 33 1/3 per cent of the units.

S. 22(1) All voting by owners shall be on the basis of one vote per unit and, where two or more persons entitled to vote in respect of one unit disagree on their vote, the vote in respect of that unit shall not be counted.

(2) On a show of hands or on a poll, votes may be given either personally or by proxy.

(3) An instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointer or the appointer's attorney, and may be either general or for a particular meeting. (4) A proxy need not be an owner.

(5) Except where, under this Act or the by-laws of the corporation, a unanimous vote of all the owners is required, an owner is not entitled to vote at any meeting if any contributions payable in respect of the owner's unit are in arrears for more than thirty days prior to the meeting.

(6) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, all questions proposed for the consideration of the owners at a meeting of owners at a meeting of owners shall be determined by a majority of the votes cast.

S. 28(2) Subject to subsection (5), a by-law passed under subsection (1) is not effective until it is confirmed, with or without variation, by owners who own not less than 51 per cent of the units at a meeting duly called for that purpose.

S. 38(1) The corporation may by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units make any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any substantial change in the assets of the corporation, and the corporation may by a vote of the owners make any other addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements or may make any other change in the assets of the corporation.

(4) If any substantial addition, alteration or improvement to or renovation of the common elements is made, or if any substantial change in the assets of the corporation is made, the corporation must, on demand of any owner who dissented, made within ten days after the date of the vote referred to in subsection (1), purchase the owner's unit and common interest.

S. 42(2) Where there has been a determination that there has been substantial damage to 25 per cent of the buildings, the corporation shall repair within a reasonable time, unless, within sixty days after the determination made under subsection (1), by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units, the owners vote for termination.

S. 44(1) Sale of the property or any part of the common elements may be authorized,

(a) by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units.

S. 45(1) Termination of the government of the property by this Act may be authorized,

(a) by a vote of owners who own 80 per cent of the units.

[para8] In my view, the scheme of the Act is clear. Meetings may be called. Notice of specific business must be given. If one third of the owners show up at the meeting in person or by proxy, then a majority of those owners can make decisions affecting the condominium.

[para9] Important decisions require a greater quorum, such as passing and confirming special by-laws made by the board (s. 1), confirming contracts or by-laws made by the board (ss. 17 and 28), making substantial alterations (s. 38), dealing with damage to the condominium (s. 42), selling the property (s. 44), and terminating the government of the property (s. 45). These important acts require that a quorum be greater than one-third of the owners, and at times the quorum must be 80 per cent of the owners.

[para10] The respondents argue that those sections must mean that 80 per cent of the owners (as the case may be) must vote in favour of the proposal. In my opinion, if that were the intention of the legislature, it would have been clearly set out in the provisions of the Act by employing such words as "votes in favour of" or "the affirmative votes of". No such wording has been used in the Act.

[para11] The argument of the respondents may be crystallized in this way: Surely, if a substantial alteration is to be made to a condominium, 80 per cent of the owners should approve and not 51 per cent of 80 per cent of the owners. To allow 51 per cent of 80 per cent of the owners to determine a substantial alteration effectively means that a minority of the owners can effect a substantial alteration. In addition, a minority of owners could sell the corporation (s. 44) or terminate the government of the property (s. 45). Moreover, the effect of s. 38(4) (substantial alteration) would place the condominium in the ludicrous position of permitting a majority of owners to demand that their units be re-purchased by the corporation.

[para12] With respect, I do not agree with this argument. A condominium corporation is a democratic entity. All owners are given notice of business to be conducted. Owners may be present in person or by proxy. If owners are interested enough in the business at hand, they may be present and have their vote counted. That is the democratic right of all owners. To suggest, however, that 80 per cent of owners must vote in a particular way for important business to be transacted would, in my view, be contrary to the experience of democracy.

[para13] One need only consider the manner in which our country is governed. Municipal elections provide an interesting example. In the ordinary course, only 20 to 30 per cent of those entitled to vote actually do vote. Of those who do vote, a simple majority has the effect of electing our municipal officials. Similarly, provincial and federal elections, while generally commanding a higher turnout of voters than in municipal elections, almost invariably result in candidates and governments being elected by a decided minority of those entitled to vote. This may seem unfortunate to some, but it is a common reality not just in Canada, but throughout the democratic world. Momentous decisions are made by minorities in the normal course, which profoundly affect our lives and the relative amount of our take-home pay. Experience shows that the minority frequently determines important decisions. Democratic government cannot be said to have suffered because of this reality.

[para14] With respect to corporations other than condominiums, the general rule is that all business may be conducted by a majority vote of a quorum of those entitled to vote. In the case of a substantial undertaking, as, for example, the sale of the corporation, a two thirds majority of those forming a quorum is required. A quorum is 51% of shareholders. Thus, the most significant acts of the corporation, including its sale, may be accomplished by a minority of shareholders (two-thirds of 51 per cent). To suggest that a two thirds majority of all shareholders be required would no doubt cause the average corporate secretary to seek other employment. [para15] To read the sections of the Condominium Act as requiring an 80 per cent vote by all those entitled to vote in favour of a particular proposition would, in my view, be contrary to the reality of democratic experience and would cast a burden upon managing boards of condominiums that would make it almost impossible to make important decisions.

[para16] If the intention of the legislature was in fact different, then it should have been specifically provided for in the Act. By employing the word "vote" and specifically providing that "unless otherwise provided in this Act, all questions proposed for the consideration of the owners at a meeting of the owners shall be determined by a majority of the votes cast", I am convinced that the legislature intended "vote" to mean exactly what the average person understands a vote to be, which is the exercise of an informed choice on a proposition presented for consideration. What is "otherwise provided" in the Act, relates, in my view, to quorum requirements. To decide otherwise would bind condominiums in a straightjacket that would render their business more significant and difficult to accomplish than the business of our elected officials. While the governance of condominiums is important, it cannot be said to be more important than the management of our debt, the funding of our hospitals and schools, or the arrangements whereby we bind ourselves together as a nation.

[para17] In the result, there shall be an order confirming that the respondents were removed from the board of directors at the meeting of October 16th, 1996. A new meeting of the condominium owners shall be held no later than January 22nd, 1997 for the purpose of electing new directors. In the interim, each party shall nominate an interim director to assist the remaining director to effect the day to day operation of the condominium corporation, but such interim director shall not be one of those directors who has been removed. The meeting of the owners shall be chaired by the auditor of the condominium corporation. I find that this motion was brought in the utmost good faith by both parties and as such, the solicitor/client costs for both parties shall be paid by the condominium corporation.

Michael Simanic, Ray Dodge, and Tony Zapparoli, plaintiffs, and Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., Leo Tofoli and Alceo Zuliani, defendants Court File No. 90-CQ-050420 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Toronto, Ontario Gotlib J. January 19, 1996.

Counsel: M. Simanic on his own behalf. D.R. Wingfield for Dodge and Zapparoli. L.D. Roebuck for Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and Alceo Zuliani. M.A. Davis for Leo Tofoli.

[para1] GOTLIB J. (orally):-- In the matter of Michael Simanic, Ray Dodge and Tony Zapparoli against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., Leo Tofoli and Alceo zuliani, these are my reasons for judgment.

[para2] Evidence was heard in the year 1995 on January 3, 4, 5, 6, and 9, and part of the 10th of January. In 1996, the trial was continued and evidence was heard on January 8, 10, 11, 12, and submissions were made on the 15, 16 and 17 of January.

[para3] The statement of claim issued on June 8, 1990 concerns the development of a parcel of land involving construction of 20 condominium units adjacent to Royal St. Kitts Casino and to Jack Tar Village on the island of St. Kitts in the West Indies.

[para4] An amended trial record was filed at the beginning of this trial on January 3, 1995. The previous trial record was therefore obsolete. The parties agreed to proceed with the trial with Messrs. Simanic, Zapparoli and Dodge as plaintiffs and Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., Leo Tofoli and Alceo Zuliani as defendants, notwithstanding that the amended trial record set out the pleadings in an entirely different way. All parties agreed, however, and we proceeded on that basis.

[para5] In the process of sorting out how this action was to proceed, Mr. Simanic abandoned his claims against Messrs. Dodge and Zapparoli, and Messrs. Dodge and Zapparoli abandoned their counterclaims. The latter two gentlemen joined with Mr. Simanic in his claim via their pleading of October 14, 1994. Mr. Simanic's pleadings omitted Schedule A, but it is very well understood what parcel of land is in dispute, and is as Schedule A contained in the pleadings submitted by Messrs. Zapparoli and Dodge. In effect, the initial pleading by Mr. Simanic does not state a claim against Messrs. Dodge or Zapparoli, notwithstanding that they are named as defendants. In any event, the pleadings as submitted support the claims that have been heard by this Court. The claim by the plaintiffs is against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. demanding a conveyance of the lands described in Schedule A to a certain agreement, and that Alceo Zuliani cause such a conveyance to be made to the plaintiffs.

[para6] It is asserted that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. breached its obligations as trustee, both in 1989 and 1990. The Court is asked to make that finding. Damages of $2 million are sought against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., and damages are sought also against Messrs. Tofoli and Zuliani in the sum of $2 million for conspiracy to defraud these plaintiffs and tortious interference with contractual relations.

[para8] There is also a claim for insurance proceeds paid after a fire in a storage container on the premises, the amount as the evidence discloses being $23,447.57 U.S. That amount is claimed by the plaintiffs.

[para9] There is also a prayer for prejudgment interest at prime plus 5 per cent or prejudgment interest under the Courts of Justice Acts and costs.

[para10] The defence lodged by Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and Mr. Alceo Zuliani alleges that the plaintiffs have many unpaid accounts, including one to a company known as T.D.C., because of which a company controlled by Mr. Zuliani is being sued for $167,318.60.

[para11] The defendants say that the three co-tenants have failed in their obligation to fund the project and claim setoff of insurance proceeds to pay T.D.C. and allege that construction was incomplete. A number of matters are stated as having been incomplete as of April 10, 1990: electrical services, screens for windows needed to be installed, electrical fixtures were missing, external lighting and walkways and landscaping were incomplete, only 10 out of 25 parking spaces had been constructed, and the furnishings of the units were not as per the agreement.

[para12] On April 10, 1990, the plaintiffs, or two of them, had requested a transfer to Cable Cove Limited, and the defence says that only the four co-tenants were entitled to a conveyance at that time if, indeed, construction were complete.

[para13] The defendants plead that extra land transfer tax would be payable by the imposition of an intermediary such as Cable Cove Limited between Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and the four co-tenants and further plead that the lands were abandoned by the plaintiffs for four years, notwithstanding that their caveat is still on title.

[para14] Mr. Tofoli defends on the basis that he was not involved in a conspiracy, that Mr. Simanic diverted money for his personal use from the project and inflated costs, and that completion should be defined as financial completion as well, that is, payment of all debts owing arising out of construction on the project; and furthermore, that the plaintiffs breached the contract by assigning three per cent of it to the engineers who were involved in designing the project; that the obligation to fund the project is a condition precedent. His counterclaim was abandoned.

[para15] The first three exhibits that were filed were agreed exhibits, and Exhibit 1 contains the most important document in this trial, and that is the Cotenancy agreement dated July 27, 1989 that was signed by Messrs. Simanic, Dodge and Zapparoli. That, to my mind, is the controlling document in this lawsuit, and a number of facts arise out of it. I make those findings of fact now.

[para16] First of all, Schedule A and the document itself clearly contemplate that the whole parcel was the subject of the transaction. There is a component of 14,455 square feet that was argued to be not part of the understanding among the parties because it was intended for commercial development, and the condominium development was to be constructed on 44,603 square feet, which is part of Schedule A attached to the agreement. There were documents that are before the Court which strikes out the commercial land but that does not effect the parties to this co-tenancy agreement. The defendants must bear the good with the bad, and Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. is committed under the agreement to deal as a bare trustee with all of the lands described in Schedule A, totalling something under 60,000 square feet.

[para17] The next thing that is clear from the agreement and its words is that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. is a bearer trustee and has no beneficial interest in the contents of the agreement. The purpose of the agreement and the project is set out in paragraph 2.04:

"In particular, it is the intent of the parties to build and furnish approximately 20 residential condominiums, together with such commercial component as permitted by the local government."

[para18] The reference to the commercial component again supports the view that the commercial lands north of the development itself were considered part of the agreement.

[para19] Paragraph 3.01 sets out the understanding of how this was to be done. And that says:

"The initial funding required to purchase and deal with the lands shall be advanced by the co-tenants in the following manner: A) Leo Tofoli shall contribute as his share title to the lands free and clear of all liens and encumbrances. B) Ray Dodge, Michael Simanic and Tony Zapparoli shall each contribute equally to the balance of all funds required to service, including debt service, develop, construct and furnish the proposed development, the intention being that Leo's contribution of the land represents payment in full of his 25 per cent interest in the entire finished product."

[para20] The meaning of subparagraph B has been the subject of much argument in this Court. It is the Court's finding that debt service means payment of interest charges on any borrowed money and that is where it stops. Paragraph 3.02 goes on to say:

"All further funds required to complete the proposed development shall be borne equally by Mike, Ray and Tony. And paragraph 3.03 shall be construed accordingly."

[para21] As to management and operation of the lands, part of paragraph 5.01 sets out a formula for meetings of the executive committee; a quorum is three members of the executive committee and so on. And then it goes on to describe the following:

"No meeting of the co-tenants shall be held unless and until notice of the same has been sent by pre-paid registered mail or been delivered personally, etc. or waived in writing by any of the said members."

There was no argument before this Court to suggest that a certain meeting was not held on November 15, 1989. And while there was no evidence of any service ten days ahead or waiver in writing, the parties all attended and in fact acquiesced in being present. The failure to observe the letter of the agreement as to notice does not assist the defendants. A quorum of the co-tenants consists of at least three co-tenants.

[para22] Paragraph 6.02 goes on to say that:

"None of the co-tenants shall be entitled to mortgage, pledge or otherwise encumber their beneficial interest in the lands or in the project until such time as the project is completed and each has taken title to his share of the units in the project."

[para23] Again, there was much argument before this Court because after communications and negotiations had broken down among the parties, the plaintiff, Mr. Simanic, filed a caveat on the title, not title to all the lands but just the part of the lands that was being developed for condominium residences. The defence has taken the position that represents an encumbrance of the title and is contrary and in breach of section 6.02 of the agreement. The Court disagrees entirely. A caveat was filed to protect the substantial monies that were invested in the property by the plaintiffs, at that point about $1.2 million, and nothing more. It was the only means that these plaintiffs had of protecting their investment and protecting against dealing with the lands once they had put improvements on to that value. There was no encumbrance in the sense that I understand it, that is generally understood, that is, a mortgage where the plaintiffs receive a benefit such as money, a sale where there is also money exchanging hands. And their interest is, in fact, not encumbered by the registration of the caveat in law. At worst, the caveat constitutes a cloud on the title, not an encumbrance.

[para25] Paragraph 7.01 states:

"For the ease of conveyancing, the parties acknowledge that title to the lands will continue to be registered in the name of the trustee in the manner herein above referred. The trustee acknowledges that it has held and will continue to hold the lands and any and all other assets of the co-tenancy coming into its possession, together with any funds received by it as trustee in accordance with the terms of this agreement."

[para26] That paragraph begs the question of who the owner making the application under the condominium legislation of St. Kitts ought to be. That again was a matter of some dispute.

[para27] Paragraph 7.03 states:

"The trustee shall hold title to the lands as bare trustee for and on behalf of the co-tenancy as aforesaid and, upon completion of project, shall convey the lands with all necessary approvals and/or consents as directed by the co-tenants."

[para28] The defence has strenuously put the position that completion means financial completion, that is, payment of all debts. The Court does not accept that interpretation. That paragraph refers to physical completion. Physical completion of a construction project such as this can never be perfect, and in fact, the completion can never ever be perfect in any construction project. The evidence by the expert witness, Mr. Bentley, supports that interpretation. He referred to a definition of substantial completion which is some 95 per cent complete. A useful comparison is with the question of having habitable condominiums. The defendants never inspected the property, and they are really not in a position to say whether the units were habitable. The plaintiffs say that they were. [para29] In any event, that there were debts owing to suppliers and tradespeople arising out of this project is without question. The fact is also that they could all lien this property no matter who was the owner if they chose to or sue the beneficiary of their services and deliveries. So far, at least two lawsuits have resulted, the first one being by Marsic and Ruszczak and their companies who did engineering plans even before the cotenancy agreement was entered into. That has been settled. The Court was not made aware of what the settlement is. It is not important for these reasons that it be known.

[para30] The other lawsuit is by a construction materials supplier, T.D.C., against Trans-Americainvest (St. Kitts) Ltd.. Initially, Trans-Americainvest was the nominal developer because it had permission to import construction materials duty free and made substantial acquisitions of goods in order to let the plaintiffs proceed with development of the project.

[para31] Paragraph 7.03 goes on to say:

"And upon completion of the project, the trustee shall convey the lands with all necessary approvals and/or consents as directed by the cotenants. "

[para32] Article 9 dealing with bankruptcy or other involuntary transfer or breach is worth considering because it also deals with the voluntary transfer, by any co-tenant, of his interest in breach of the agreement, either to any creditor, obligation, judgment or other liability or in the event that any co-tenant is in substantial breach of this agreement.

"The other co-tenants then have the right or option to purchase the interest in the lands of that vendor by giving written notice of their election to purchase the same within 90 days of the breach."

[para33] Paragraph 9.03 continues:

"If the purchasers elect to purchase the interest of the vendor, the purchase price shall be an amount equal to the greater of 80 per cent of the fair market value as set by the accountants of the co-tenancy and the amount advanced by the vendor to the co-tenancy and shall be satisfied in whole or in part by the assumption of the proportionate share of the liabilities in respect of lands."

[para34] Article 10.03 sets out that the agreement expresses the entire agreement and that no representations have been made that are material or warranties that are not incorporated into the agreement.

[para35] Paragraph 10.11 permits "any co-tenant may constitute and appoint any one of the other co-tenants as its true and lawful attorney to execute and do all deeds, etc., as shall be required as the attorney shall see fit."

[para36] The agreement which has just been considered at some length is attached as Schedule "A."

[para37] That Mr. Tofoli has breached his contract by assigning his interest to Mr. Zuliani, as he did in 1991, is evident because the plaintiffs did not even know anything about the transfer until much after the fact. There is a clause in the agreement, interestingly enough, that provides for arbitration, in Article 8, and that has been ignored by the all the parties.

[para38] A number of events have occurred and many exhibits have been filed. First of all, who are the parties in this matter?

[para39] The original plaintiff, and one of the plaintiffs now, is Michael Simanic. He has been a builder and developer for some 25 years. His principal residence is in Mississauga. He is presently age 56. He has been friendly with Mr. Dodge and Mr. Zapparoli for many years, possibly 20 each.

[para40] Mr. Zapparoli is a builder and contractor, and he has been in the concrete drilling and cutting business for some 20 years.

[para41] Mr. Ray Dodge is a real estate broker and has been so from 1973. He resides in Mississauga in Ontario. He tried to be the peacemaker in this matter and as every business group has a note-taker, Mr. Dodge was the note-taker and his minutes of some meetings are very much in evidence in this matter. [para42] Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the government of Saint Christopher and Nevis in the West Indies and resides there and in the province of Ontario.

[para43] Mr. Alceo Zuliani is not a shareholder of that company, but he is a director. And it is clear from the evidence that he is also the controlling mind. It is basically an inactive company, he has told the Court, and held the lands in question for future development. Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. is wholly owned by, and is a subsidiary of, Trans-Americainvest (St. Kitts) Ltd..

[para44] Mr. Alceo Zuliani is a cousin to Mr. Leo Tofoli. He is a director of Trans-Americainvest (St. Kitts) Ltd. and is a director only and has no shareholding in that company. It is clear, however, that he is the directing mind also of that company whose shares are held by European investors, who, in effect, take his advice in every way when he suggests it. He is presently 56 years of age. He is in poor health and he is to be sympathized with; he has had some 6 heart attacks since 1980 and had a difficult arrhythmia attack in 1988. Notwithstanding those very serious problems, he has operated most effectively in St. Kitts and has made an important place for himself on that small island. He was a builder and developer in the Toronto area before going to St. Kitts in 1980 as a tourist.

[para45] Mr. Leo Tofoli, being a cousin of Mr. Zuliani, is a Toronto area resident now. He resided in the island of St. Kitts for about four-and-a-half years, from 1986 to 1991, and was certainly there at the relevant time. He was corporate secretary of Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., and it was he that Mr. Zuliani wished to benefit, in effect, to give him some reason for staying on St. Kitts, which is not an attractive island socially to a number of people, although it is exquisitely beautiful in every other way and that it has a prime golf course.

[para46] Mr. Tofoli was a very credible witness as indeed was Mr. Zapparoli, and it is very clear from the evidence of Mr. Tofoli that he did what he was told to do by Mr. Zuliani. The fact is that Mr. Zuliani was conferring a great boon on him by awarding him a 25 per cent interest in a very valuable condominium development had it gone forward further than it did. And he felt that it was important for him to defer to Mr. Zuliani in every way because of this valuable gift. He relied on, and he took Mr. Zuliani's advice, and indeed Mr. Zuliani made all of the decisions for Mr. Tofoli. All that Mr. Tofoli got out of this was a lawsuit commenced against him, among others, in 1991, and he assigned his interest in the project either to Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. or

Mr. Zuliani. That was not made clear to the Court, but in any event, Mr. Tofoli divested himself and left for Dallas. In effect, the Court finds that Mr. Tofoli's acts were all the acts of Mr. Zuliani. Mr. Zuliani controlled him, told him what to do, and Mr. Tofoli did it.

[para47] There are two other companies to be dealt with as far as the actors in these events are concerned that are not parties to the lawsuit. The first is Trans-Americainvest (St. Kitts) Ltd.. That company was the developer of the very successful Jack Tar Village Resort complex. Mr. Zuliani is a director and through that company could import construction materials on a duty-free basis and, at the beginning certainly, acted as a nominal developer in order to obtain duty-free construction materials.

[para48] Jack Tar Village leased everything from Trans-Americainvest, except the casino itself which was operated through Mr. Zuliani. That company wound up holding proceeds of insurance relating to this condominium project both for hurricane Hugo, which occurred in mid-September 1989, in the sum of $34,780 U.S., and for a container fire that occurred in 1989 and damaged much construction material, the proceeds of that insurance settlement being $23,447.57 U.S. So that Trans-Americainvest holds insurance proceeds which are properly the property of the condominium development totalling $58,227.57 U.S.

[para49] The last company to deal with is Cable Cove Limited which was incorporated by the plaintiffs when they were considering dealing with the 15.5-acre site that had been made known to them. It was used by the three plaintiffs to import construction materials duty free from November, 1989.

[para50] As in all cases, much of the outcome of this case will turn on findings of fact. That there were high hopes at the beginning and dashed hopes at the end is perfectly clear.

[para51] The parties met first in 1987 when the plaintiffs went on a golfing trip to St. Kitts and stayed at Jack Tar Village, had a wonderful time, enjoyed the golf course, and were all very social and friendly. They liked it so much that they went back, by one account, 10 or 12 times and eventually got into discussions with Mr. Zuliani about development and indicated that they were interested in the 15.5-acre site that might be available for them to develop. In the course of golfing and other social associations with Mr. Zuliani, Mr. Zuliani offered this parcel of 44,000 square feet as a pilot project for the plaintiffs to get their feet wet in the business of development in St. Kitts. All of the parties understood that the lands offered by Mr. Zuliani were fully serviced.

[para52] The parties started out by envisioning a 20-unit condominium development that would be about 500 square feet each unit, and cost a total of $600,000 in cash, the other $200,000 being the land contribution by Mr. Tofoli as arranged by Mr. Zuliani. The plaintiffs, without consulting the defendants, decided, on the advice of Mr. Dodge, that bigger, better units would be better and so they made larger units which were proper condominium apartments with much larger floor area, and consequently, the price of the development virtually doubled. It turned out to be an unwise move, it was apparent, when Mr. Dodge ran out of money and could not keep up this share of the contributions.

[para53] There then arose disputes among the plaintiffs. Mr. Dodge said that Mr. Simanic agreed to carry his additional contributions and Mr. Simanic denied it. Mr. Zapparoli thought that the cash payments being made by Mike Simanic at the request of workers were not being properly recorded, that there was no proper accounting. The real issue, though, was the shortage of money, and there was a far amount of in-fighting among the plaintiffs.

[para54] Other things were going on. The problems really started when, after hurricane Hugo, Mr. Zuliani was very anxious to have the Jack Tar hotel repaired quickly. And first, Mr. Simanic requested a contract for repairs whereupon Mr. Zuliani took it personally and was extremely insulted. Everything went downhill from there. Mr. Simanic thought the cost would be about $80,000. The work was completed; the Court has no idea what the cost was. But when the co-tenants' workers went on Mr. Zuliani's payroll and that work got completed. [para55] A further source of disagreement and concern was that it was a major disappointment to the three co-tenants who expected to have fully serviced lands. They discovered, when they went to make the sewer connection, after the engineering and architectural drawings had been done, that simple connection was not possible. There was some possibility that they would have to build a new sewer treatment plant, etc., etc. Without sewer systems, there was no project, and the potential cost in their minds was $250,000. The problem was solved when Mr. Simanic got approval for a septic tank system which was installed at some extra cost because also sewer pipes had already been laid and were abandoned. The septic tank system was put on the golf course, as permitted by the government corporation which owned it, Frigate Bay Development Company. The cost was absorbed by the co-tenants, at relatively low cost, although it caused a lot of consternation at the time.

[para56] There was bickering about the promised hotel rate for the employees, that is, who would pay $20 a day for room and board. The argument by the plaintiffs is that Mr. Zuliani changed his mind afterwards so that the cost to those employees was much more expensive when they had to go to another hotel and pay for the cost of food.

[para57] On the first request for a conveyance of title, on November 1989, the plaintiffs received what they believed was a high-handed refusal without any explanation. Mr. Zuliani says it was to protect Leo Tofoli's interest, and besides, construction was not complete. But the communication was incomplete and there was more hard feeling among the parties.

[para58] Over the period of all the difficulties, Mr. Zuliani was looking for a way to end the roadblock; he offered to buy out the plaintiffs at cost plus 20 per cent, and in so doing, would do very well himself financially. At the peak of the market, which is about the time all of these events were occurring, the profit per unit could have been $100,000 each. That excludes and discounts the cost of construction. So that at the peak, the 20 units would provide $2 million profit. The plaintiffs never agreed to that kind of a buy-out, and eventually the parties wound up at serious loggerheads. By this time, the partners had put in $1.6 million and had also registered the caveat in November 1989 to protect their interest. In fact, Mr. Simanic was the one who registered it.

[para59] There was no question that in the course of all these dealings that Mr. Zuliani was "out to bury Mr. Simanic, in his pocket where it would hurt." He developed a dogged and determined attitude which was, in effect, "any way that I can stymie this project I will do."

[para60] There was no cost overrun as described by the defendants. The original plan called for one-bedroom units, 16 or 18 suites which, including the land, would have cost a total of $800,000. That was changed to one-and two-bedroom apartments with two bathrooms and, of course, the cost doubled.

[para61] It is without doubt that there were $223,000 owing to the trades, either for goods or services, and that amount has been reduced by the plaintiffs to $100,000.

[para62] And then along the way, other things occurred. Mr. Zuliani wrote some unfortunate letters that fanned the flames of the dispute. He wrote a letter in March where Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. decided it was not trustee any longer and ordered all the plaintiffs off the island. He threatened to communicate with certain authorities if they did not leave, which in fact did not happen. Then certain monies paid out by Trans-Americainvest, on behalf of the condominium developers, remained unpaid. Also, in lieu of paying Marsic and Ruszczak, the engineers, the monies, there were some arrangement that they would have three per cent of either the net profit of the completed project or the project itself. Mr. Zuliani objected to that most vehemently and considered that a breach of the agreement. It is the Court's finding that whatever that arrangement was, which has now been settled, it was not an encumbrance on the property because there was nothing registered on title, and if there had been, then that would have been a different issue.

[para63] Also, while the parties were at war over how to deal with this, Mr. Zuliani said he was out to protect Mr. Tofoli's interest in the development and therefore would not consider giving a transfer to Cable Cove. There are ways to protect the interests of a person such as Mr. Tofoli. One of the things that could have been done is a conveyance of the land with a caveat. That apparently was not thought of or dealt with. [para64] In addition, it was Mr. Zapparoli's evidence that the plaintiffs paid all the expenses to connect the water to the Frigate Bay road water supply; the partners had expected fully serviced lands and this was also a surprise to them. They had a lot of trouble with it, but they did it, and last year when the plaintiffs were attempting to refurbish the property, they found that there was a problem when they tried to use the water.

[para65] Dealing now with the claims. It is clear from the evidence that Mr. Zuliani had a notion to develop the subject lands from 1988 and, in fact, had some scheme for the construction of 60 hotel units. Then, on meeting the plaintiffs, the arrangements that finally developed grew, and the plaintiffs took over the project.

[para66] Construction on this project began in August of 1989, and the co-tenants arranged with Mr. Zuliani for Trans-Americainvest to be used as nominal importer of construction goods duty free. That arrangement was quite separate from the co-tenancy agreement and Trans-Americainvest is, of course, a third party to all these events. The financial responsibility for building and funding was that of the plaintiffs. The tensions that have been described arose and they need not be repeated.

[para67] One of the main issues is whether a proper demand for title was made in November, 1989. At that point, the parties had something like $1.2 million in the project, that is, $900,000 already spent and $300,000 in construction materials on the way. A meeting was held late in the evening of November 15, 1989. There was no proper notice given, but the parties acquiesced and cannot make of the failure of notice as set out in the agreement an issue. Initially Mr. Tofoli agreed that a request should be made for title to be conveyed by the trustee, Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd.. Mr. Tofoli consulted with Mr. Zuliani and came back later and, in effect, changed his mind. Mr Tofoli got the minutes of the meeting amended. That fact does not alter the Court's view that, in fact, there was a consent by all the four parties to request title.

[para68] We then come to the issue of whether or not the development was sufficiently complete for the co-tenants and the plaintiffs, in particular, to make that request. The request was premature as the property was not sufficiently complete. The Court heard that it was some 60 or 65 per cent complete and that does not meet the test. It was necessary to have a substantially completed development, and that did happen in April, 1990 when a further request for title was made in the name of Cable Cove.

[para69] At this point, Mr. Dodge was not part of the plan because he is in default of contributing further monies and is in a dispute with his co-tenants. The request for title came from Mr. Zapparoli and from Mr. Simanic. Mr. Tofoli, being controlled by Mr. Zuliani, was not a party to the request, and Mr. Dodge was also not a party to the request. The question becomes notwithstanding that the property was substantially complete, were those two co-tenants entitled to a conveyance to Cable Cove Limited, which in effect was owned by the three co-tenants? The answer to that question is yes. There had been an agreement among the four co-tenants, one of which was revoked by Mr. Tofoli in November. The only reason that they were not entitled to a conveyance in November was that the property was not in a sufficient state of completion, and therefore the request in April was a proper request, the property now having been completed. [para70] It was also proper to have title taken in the name of Cable Cove Limited because the units could not be sold until one of the corporations proceeded to create the condominium by filing the description and the geodetic survey which is required showing construction of the main parts of building. The survey is required in the considered opinion of Mr. Inniss; the Condominium Act of St. Kitts is remarkably like the one in Ontario. The fact is that the property need not be habitable in order to have the survey that is required for registration of a condominium. The evidence was not clear as to whether it was in that state of completion in November of 1989. But certainly by April of 1990 it was, and the conveyance ought to have been given by Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. to Cable Cove Limited because it was properly directed. If Mr. Zuliani was concerned about the protection of the interest of Mr. Tofoli, he could have arranged for the registration of a caveat immediately following the transfer.

[para71] Mr. Zuliani also took the position that there would be a great waste of tax money if Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. were not, in effect, the condominium creator because there would be one tax payable at 8 per cent on the transfer from Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. to Cable Cove Limited then a further tax of 5 per cent when Cable Cove transferred to the individual unit owners. If the co-tenants were prepared to absorb that cost, and there was some suggestion that they had a way that they could escape that additional 8 per cent tax, it really was no concern of Mr. Zuliani's. If the co-tenants wanted to waste what might have been $200,000 U.S., that is their problem. If the profits were so large and they wanted to get on with their development, then presumably it did not matter. But Mr. Zuliani took it upon himself to be the guardian of that tax money and improperly withheld the transfer of the lands in April, 1990. He did not turn his mind to the legal obligation to convey. He did not get legal advice. He was simply determined that he was not going to do it.

[para72] On November 17, 1989, the four co-tenants had even decided on unit selection. In the course of all this, Mr. Dodge, having run out of money, consulted with Mr. Zuliani and put in a buy-sell offer offering his share for sale at some $446,000 or Mr. Dodge would be prepared to buy out the other two. There is no doubt that it was Mr. Zuliani who was going to fund Mr. Dodge should he proceed with a buy-out of Messrs. Simanic and Zapparoli. After some consultation in March, Mr. Dodge abandoned the buy-sell process and that was left in limbo.

[para73] Royal St. Kitts wrote a letter on March 12, 1990, which is shown at Tab 14 of Exhibit 1, that is, the famous letter where it is stated that Mr. Tofoli is in default under an option agreement and therefore he is no longer in a position to require title to the lands and that Royal St. Kitts Casino is no longer a trustee under the co-tenancy agreement. There is an order to vacate the project within 24 hours of delivery and an offer to pay for the costs of the improvements. Mr. Zuliani said that this was a way of trying to pressure the three plaintiffs to sell out and get moving. But Royal St. Kitts is, in effect, renouncing its trust.

[para74] That there was much bluffing and many outright lies being told, particularly by Mr. Zuliani and through Mr. Tofoli by him. There is a further letter dated March 30, 1990, signed by Mr. Zuliani on the letterhead of Trans-Americainvest, complaining that Trans-Americainvest's good name was suffering because the bills have not been paid. It is, in effect, a threatening letter and it was most unwise and improper of Mr. Zuliani to authorize it. There is a threat to have the plaintiffs deported or their work permits not renewed, indications of carbon copies to government offices which were indeed never sent, and threats to get police protection.

[para75] No work was done on the project after April 10, 1990. It is clear from the failure of evidence on behalf of defendants that Messrs. Zuliani and Tofoli never made any kind of an inspection of the project. The project, however, was sufficiently completed in April 10, 1990. Mr. Dodge said it was 95 per cent complete. Mr. Simanic said 100 per cent. In any event, it was substantially complete which is all that is required for the call of title.

[para76] That a bare trustee is required to convey on a request of all the persons beneficially entitled is trite law. That is the case of Saunders v. Vautier, a very old case, still the law in this jurisdiction. The fact is that on November 15, 1989, there was a meeting of either the executive committee or the co-tenants and it does not matter for the Court's purposes how it is designated. All four parties to the co-tenancy agreement were present and agreed on the agenda. It was a formal enough meeting that Mr. Dodge took notes and minutes were kept. Mr. Dodge explained the way that he handled the minutes is that he took brief notes at the meeting and then filled them out. Mr. Roebuck fairly submits that Mr. Dodge reported his sense of the meeting and that is appropriate because not every word could possibly be written down, and most of the tenor of the meeting was. So that there were present a majority of co-tenants and a majority of the executive committee.

[para77] In much of the evidence, there was some discussion about Mr. Zuliani being in breach of his duties as a trustee. That arises out of the fact that Mr. Zuliani is the controlling mind of both Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and Trans-Americainvest, so that it becomes a blurred line as to who the parties are referring to when they talk about the trustee. In this particular case, most clearly, the corporate veil has to be lifted to reach Mr. Zuliani because he is the controlling mind. It appears from the evidence he was using his corporations in a most improper way and as if he were acting solely for himself. As the controlling mind of the trustee, he has an obligation to the co-tenants. With respect to the April 10, 1990 demand, he did nothing. If there was something incomplete, he should have told the co-tenants. Instead, he remained silent, ignored the issue, waited to be sued, and then defended appropriately, most vigorously.

[para78] He made some efforts to buy out the co-tenants, none of which met with any success. His interference with the co-tenants is virtually unpardonable. A trustee cannot buy trust assets from the beneficiary of the trust. The issue is whether Royal St. Kitts Ltd. took the conveyance from Mr. Tofoli or whether Mr. Zuliani did. In effect, they are equal in status legally. A beneficiary's remedy is to set aside a sale or complete it.

[para79] The Bentley report, Exhibit 4, is an important exhibit. Mr. Bentley himself was qualified as an expert witness and his evidence contains much valuable information. His opinion was, and there was no contrary evidence, that, as might be expected, the property had deteriorated badly from the time that the co-tenants left it until he inspected it which was in January, 1994, now some two years ago. He estimated that it would cost up to $10,000 U.S. to refurbish the units and that the market value, because of the history of the development and the bad sense that surrounds it, would not be worth more than a $110,000 each, after rehabilitation.

[para80] Mr. Dodge seeks interest expense of some $255,000 Cdn. arising out of tying up his money in the project. And Mr. Zapparoli also asks for prejudgment interest from April 10, 1990.

[para81] It is clear on the facts that the breaches of trust by Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. are caused by Mr. Zuliani as controlling mind. The real issues in this case are, of course, the interpretation of the co-tenancy agreement. The defendants say that this Court cannot make an order for specific performance of the contract because, first of all, the request for conveyance continues to be premature, and because the land is outside of this jurisdiction. The parties have, however, attorned to this Court, and they will then be bound by this Court's order.

[para82] It is clear, as the defendants submit, that the plaintiffs were not put off by Mr. Zuliani's or Royal St. Kitts Ltd's order to leave the project and continued to complete it and put in more money. In fact, the plaintiffs had continued access to the property. When Mr. Dodge went to look at it in 1992 someone was there either as a caretaker or security guard.

[para83] The defendants, and particularly Mr. Zuliani, are concerned that the trades must be paid. It is a small community and Mr. Zuliani's and Trans-Americainvest's reputation has suffered. The fact that there are trade debts owing on the condominium may be morally reprehensible because workmen, are entitled to be paid after an honest day's work. That still is not Mr. Zuliani's concern, although he is certainly entitled to be concerned about the debts owed by Trans-Americainvest to the trades and workers.

[para84] The defendants have taken the position that the completion of the project involves condominium registration and legal paperwork and survey, etc. That creates a circular line of reasoning which is a Catch-22. The agreement is silent on who is to be the applicant for condominium registration and why it should be that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., as a bare trustee, should be the applicant for condominium registration is something the Court does not accept.

[para85] Having put $1.4 million into the property, the co-tenants were entitled to have the conveyance for them to make the application for condominium registration.

[para86] Dealing with the result of all this, Mr. Tofoli's sins, if any, are sins of omission. He did not actively participate in any agreement with Mr. Zuliani to do anything. He did what he was told. It may be that he should have taken a stand. He did not. If there was any conspiracy or any plan, it was Mr. Zuliani's plan. But you cannot have a conspiracy with one person; so that Mr. Tofoli is not a co-conspirator. He was an innocent dupe or puppet and was completely controlled by Mr. Zuliani. He is an agreeable fellow. He even agreed with the Cotenants at the meeting of March 15 to request title. The conspiracy has not been proved, and therefore, that ground of complaint must be dismissed. Accordingly, Mr. Zuliani, while he may have been responsible for threatening letters, and may have been indeed particularly malicious, he cannot said to have conspired with anybody to do that. So, neither person is a conspirator.

[para87] The question of fraud as put by the cotenants also must be dealt with. Civil fraud calls for a very high degree of proof and allegations of criminal fraud are even higher. I do not think that there is any fraud on the part of any of the defendants. The fact is that things went rather well until hurricane Hugo and Mr. Simanic's request for a contract to do the repairs on the Jack Tar

Village hotel. After that, it was all downhill. The Court finds that, as Mr. Tofoli said, everyone else was caught in the cross fire of the very vicious dispute between Mr. Simanic and Mr. Zuliani. Messrs. Tofoli, Dodge and Zapparoli are the most innocent. They did what they could, but the real dispute was between the two men, Simanic and Zuliani.

[para88] In the result, there will be judgment for the plaintiffs in the following manner. There will be an order that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd., convey the lands described in Schedule A in the co-tenancy agreement of 27 July, 1989, to the co-tenants or as they may direct; the co-tenants are the remaining co-tenants, Mr. Zapparoli, Mr. Simanic and Mr. Dodge.

[para89] There will be a further order that Mr. Zuliani cause Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. to so convey the lands. The Court declines to make a declaration that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. breached its obligations as bare trustee in November, 1989, although it is clear, and the Court so declares, that Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. breached its obligations as bare trustee to the then Cotenants by failing to convey the lands in May, 1990.

[para90] The Court is not satisfied that damages against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. for breach of trust is appropriate or for breach of its fiduciary duty. In effect, the co-tenants' loss was not caused by any of the letters written by Royal St. Kitts Ltd. because the letters were ignored and the plaintiffs proceeded with the project. The claim for damages against Royal St. Kitts, Alceo Zuliani and Leo Tofoli for conspiracy to defraud and tortious interference with contractual relations is dismissed in so far as a conspiracy to defraud.

[para91] There is, however, a finding that this Court makes that Mr. Alceo Zuliani and Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. did make a tortious interference with contractual relations by Mr. Zuliani's dealings, both with Mr. Tofoli and with Mr. Dodge. There will an order appointing Messrs. Simanic, Dodge and Zapparoli as agents with power of attorney for and of Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. with power to act on behalf of Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. to convey the lands described in Schedule A to the co-tenancy agreement or to take any other steps necessary to enforce compliance with the orders herein.

[para92] The evidence disclosed the amount of insurance monies held by Trans-Americainvest, and since those monies have now been established, the need of an accounting seems to have been obviated. The fact is though that Trans-Americainvest is responsible for payment of certain debts which are attributable to the condominium development and Trans-Americainvest (St. Kitts) Limited is entitled to set off the amount it is holding for insurance proceeds, $58,227.57, against the debts owing by it to tradesmen and suppliers arising out of this project.

[para93] There will be an order for damages for tortious interference with contractual relations against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and Alceo Zuliani jointly and severally. The three plaintiff co-tenants are entitled to the units which Mr. Zuliani or Royal St. Kitts purported to receive from Mr. Tofoli in 1991. If those are valued at $110,000 currently, that is a total value of $550,000. If one divides that equally, that should be a credit of about $183,300 to each of the three plaintiffs.

[para94] The Court finds that in the circumstances, Mr. Simanic should then have a total of eight units, Mr. Zapparoli, a total of six units, and Mr. Dodge, a total of six units. That finding is based on the monies which have been contributed by each of the plaintiffs to the development of the condominium. Mr. Dodge contributed $357,000, Mr. Simanic put in $541,500, and Mr. Zapparoli put in $480,000.

[para95] The evidence discloses that Trans-Americainvest owes the trades approximately $74,000 U.S. If the $58,227.57 is set off against that amount and then Trans-Americainvest becomes responsible for payment of all those monies, the balance owing is about $25,000 on the debts of condominium construction. Since Trans-Americainvest is not a part of this lawsuit in any way, there can be no order as to the balance with which it is left liable. There was another amount that Trans-Americainvest claimed it was being sued for by Marsic and Ruszczak, but that action has now been settled and does not enter into these calculations.

[para96] With respect to the balance of monies owed by the three co-tenant plaintiffs on the project, which they have stated is about $100,000, that is not an issue that the Court should deal with simply because if they do not pay those debts, the property will be liened. So, it is up to them to deal with it.

[para97] The plaintiffs are also entitled to their loss arising out of the drop in the market value of the properties of about $50,000 per unit. That is not ordinarily an award the Court would make. However, it is the Court's finding that Mr. Zuliani, by his actions, so delayed the project that, in fact, the market was lost. The plaintiffs were proceeding at a very quick pace and, apart from the fire in the construction material and hurricane Hugo which slowed them down, could have caught the market. As to the Toronto area market, the Court takes judicial notice of it, that by the spring of 1990, it was desperate. There is no information about the resort market. There is solely Mr. Bentley's opinion to rely on. There was no contrary evidence, he was a highly credible witness, and was not shaken in his testimony. In addition, it was Mr. Bentley's evidence that it would cost about $10,000 per unit to refurbish and bring each unit up to standard by reason of the deterioration, both by vandalism and by lack of care over the now five-year period that the property has been left in effect as abandoned.

[para98] The plaintiffs were not all that quick to bring this action, and while the Court accepts Mr. Bentley's opinion that is the cost to bring the units up to standard, the defendants are required to pay the whole cost of that. The three plaintiffs are entitled to $5,000 per unit towards the cost of refurbishing, and since each of them is involved in the number of units indicated, they are entitled to that award: Mr. Simanic, eight times $5,000 is $40,000; and Mr. Zapparoli, six units times $5,000 is $30,000; and Mr. Dodge for six units, also $30,000.

[para99] It is not appropriate to deal with prejudgment interest or costs at this time. If counsel are unable to resolve those matters, the Court may be spoken to. The refurbishing award cannot bear interest, other than from today. The loss in market value at $50,000 is not something which would bear interest. The only argument left in abeyance is Mr. Dodge's claim for interest on monies which he borrowed to take part in this project. That may not be a proper head of damages but would come under the interest which is claimed by all the parties.

[para100] Mr. Wingfield: One question, when dealing with the amounts, I assume it is U.S. dollars?

Discussion on currency of amounts

[para101] The Court: Yes. Mr. Bentley's report in evidence dealt with U.S. dollars, and the award of $50,000 per unit for the drop in the market value and refurbishing is in U.S. dollars. The insurance proceeds are U.S. dollars, and the monies owing by Trans-Americainvest are U.S. dollars, as I understand it, although that wasn't clear to me either.

[para102] Mr. Wingfield: I believe it was translated into U.S. dollars for the purposes of submissions and the evidence.

[para103] The Court: Fine.

[para104] Mr. Roebuck: Your Honour, you have given what I will call generically the "Tofoli units." What I am not clear on is, my friend's submission was, give those to me, but credit any damage award that you make against them.

[para105] The Court: You are quite right, Mr. Roebuck. I meant to give Mr. Zuliani and St. Kitts a credit.

[para106] Mr. Roebuck: All right.

[para107] The Court: I had it worked out here, and I said something about it, but I didn't really finish it. Mr. Tofoli's units are worth $110,000 U.S. a piece. And since Mr. Zuliani is giving up $550,000 worth, that is 5 times $110,000, that amount should be credited against the Judgments which I have awarded. Now, that is a terrible oversight. Thank you for pointing it out, Mr. Roebuck. It was in my mind.

Discussion regarding damage and credit calculations

[para108] The Court: I am going to make that 20 times $50,000, which is $1,000,000, and it is 20 times $5,000, because all the units have to be refurbished, so that is $1,100,000. And then we deduct $550,000. So that leaves $550,000 which has to be pro-rated in some way because of the allocation of units I have made. [para109] Okay. Thank you very much gentlemen. It was a hard fought case, and I can see why. Mr. Tofoli should be a happy man. I really cannot find against him. He is just caught in all of this.

[para110] The record will say trial continued January 8, 10, 11, 12, with submissions on January 15, 16 and 17, 1996, oral judgment today. Judgment for the plaintiffs Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. to convey all the lands as shown Schedule A of the agreement of July 27, 1989 to plaintiffs Simanic, Zapparoli, and Dodge or nominee. The three plaintiffs to receive the "Tofoli units," for a total of eight units to Simanic, six units to Zapparoli, and six units to Dodge.

[para111] Damages awarded against Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. and Zuliani jointly and severally as follows. Loss of market value, that is, 20 times $50,000 U.S. equals $1,000,000 U.S., and 20 times $5,000 U.S. for refurbishing 20 units, $100,000 U.S., for a total of $1,100,000, less credit to the defendants of $550,000 for "Tofoli units," for a balance of $550,000. Court may be spoken to if counsel are unable to resolve questions of prejudgment interest, other interest, and costs. And I omitted to say that the action as against Leo Tofoli is dismissed.

[para112] Order to go as in paragraph 1-F of the statement of the claim, except that said power of attorney shall be granted to the three plaintiffs jointly.

[para113] We have come to the end of road, then, have we?

[para114] Mr. Wingfield: I think so, Your Honour.

[para115] The Court: All right. Thank you.

APPENDIX A

This Agreement made this 21th day of July, 1989,

Between:

Royal St. Kitts Casino Ltd. a corporation incorporated under the laws of the Government of St. Christopher/Nevis, (hereinafter called the "Trustee")

Of The First Part;

- and -

Leo Tofoli

of the Island of St. Kitts,

(hereinafter called "Leo")

Of The Second Part;

- and -

Ray Dodge

of the City of Mississauga, in the Regional Municipality of Peel, (hereinafter called "Ray")

Of The Third Part;

- and -

Mike Simanic

of the City of Mississauga, in the Regional Municipality of Peel,

(hereinafter called "Mike")

Of The Fourth Part;

- and -

Tony Zapparoli

of the City of Mississauga, in the Regional Municipality of Peel,

(hereinafter called "Tony")

Of The Fifth Part;

All Parties other than the Trustee, hereinafter collectively called the "Co-Tenants" and individually called a "Co-Tenant".

Recitals

WHEREAS the Trustee is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the Government of St. Christopher/Nevis;

AND WHEREAS the Trustee holds title to certain lands as set out in Schedule "A" (the "Lands");

AND WHEREAS the Trustee holds the Lands in trust as nominee and trustee for the Co-Tenants as to the undivided interest as set out in the body of this Agreement;

AND WHEREAS the Trustee does not have any beneficial interest in the Lands and agrees to be bound by the terms of this Agreement;

AND WHEREAS the Co-Tenants are desirous of setting forth herein the various covenants, terms and conditions of their tenancy in common and to provide for the management and operation of the Lands;

NOW THEREFORE THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH that in consideration of the premises and the mutual covenants and obligations herein contained, it is agreed by and between the parties hereto as follows:

Article 1.00 - Recitals Correct

The parties hereto acknowledge that the fore-going recitals are true and correct in substance and in fact

Article 2.00 - The Co-tenancy

2.01 The Co-Tenants hereby agree to hold their undivided interests in the lands upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

2.02 This Agreement shall commence as of the date hereof and shall continue and not be terminated except as hereinafter provided.

2.03 The Co-Tenants hereby agree that this Agreement shall hereafter govern and define their respective rights, powers and obligations as Co-Tenants of the Lands and their respective rights, titles, and interests as of the Lands and of all property hereafter jointly acquired and in all future leases and other agreements which may be entered into by them, in each Case, in their capacities as Co-Tenants of the lands and their respective obligations, rights and interests in and to all proceeds, profits and other benefits to be derived therefrom.

2.04 It is the intent of the Co-Tenants to cause the lands to be developed in such manner as to provide for the most efficient and economic use thereof, and to commence such development as soon as practicable having regard to prevailing and anticipated market conditions and the requirements of the governmental authorities and agencies having jurisdiction thereon. In particular, it is the intent of the parties to build and furnish approximately twenty (20) residential condominiums together with such commercial component as permitted by the local government. Each party covenants and agrees that such purposes shall only be pursued in the manner and subject to the restrictions provided for herein.

2.05 Title to all property, real and personal, including without limitation, all choses in action incident to the Co-Tenancy, now or hereafter owned by the Co-Tenants shall be held by the Co-Tenants as tenants-in-common, each to have an undivided interest in the Lands therein in the amount indicated opposite their name as follows:

Co-tenant Proportionate Share

Leo Tofoli 25%

Ray Dodge 25%

Mike Simanic 25%

such proportionate interest, being hereinafter referred to as the "Proportionate Shares".

2.06 (a) This Agreement does not and shall not be construed to create any partnership or agency whatsoever. Nothing herein shall deem the lands to be partnership property, notwithstanding that the proceeds received from the lands are divisible among the parties hereto in their Proportionate Shares.

(b) No Co-Tenant shall be and shall not by reason of any provision herein contained be deemed to be the partner, agent or legal representative of the other Co-Tenants, whether for the purposes of this agreement or otherwise, nor shall any Co-Tenant have any authority or power to act for or to undertake any obligation or responsibility on behalf of the other Co-Tenants or otherwise except as herein provided.

(c) Each Co-Tenant Covenants and agrees to indemnify and save the other Co-Tenants harmless from any and all liabilities, obligations, claims or losses resulting from any representation by such Co-Tenant that it is the partner or agent of the other Co-Tenant, whether with respect to the Lands or otherwise, except with regard to such representations an are herein provided for.

Article 3.00 - Financing

3.01 The initial funding required to purchase and deal with the Lands shall be advanced by the Co-Tenants in the following manner:

A. Leo shall contribute as his share title to the Lands free and clear of all liens or encumbrances.

B. Ray, Mike and Tony shall each contribute equally the balance of all funds required to service, including debt service, develop, construct and furnish the proposed development, the intention being that Leo's contribution of the Land represents payment in full of his 25% interest in the entire finished project.

3.02 All further funds required to complete the proposed development shall be borne equally by Mike, Ray and Tony and paragraph 3.03 shall be construed accordingly.

3.03 In the event that a Co-Tenant shall default in providing any funds as required herein and shall continue in such default for a period of ten (10) days after notice in writing has been given to such Co-Tenant (which notice may be given by any one of the non-defaulting Co-Tenants) requiring such Co-Tenant to put an end to same, such Co-Tenant shall be deemed to be a delinquent party ("Delinquent Party") and the following provisions shall apply:

(a) The other Co-Tenant(s) who have complied with Sections 3.02 and 3.03 hereof (hereinafter referred to as the "Advancing Party") shall have the right but shall not be required, to advance all or any portion of the required funds. The amounts advanced by the Advancing Party are herein called the "Deficiency". The amount of the Deficiency shall constitute an obligation of the Delinquent Party, payable on demand, and shall bear interest from the date of the advance, at an annual rate equal to the prime lending rate charged by the Co-Tenancy's banker to its most favoured commercial borrowers plus 5%. The Delinquent Party hereby agrees to grant to the Advancing Party on assignment as security of its interest in the Lands and this Co-Tenancy Agreement to secure repayment of the Deficiency with interest and to that end agrees to execute and deliver any and all documentation deemed necessary by the Advancing Party in that behalf and, for the purpose of ensuing compliance with the foregoing, the Delinquent Party does hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint the Advancing Party (or any one of them, if more than one party comprises the Advancing Party), its true and lawful attorney to execute and deliver such assignment and other documents so required by the Advancing Party.

(b) If the full amount of the Deficiency, with interest, has not been paid to the Advancing Party prior to the expiration of sixty days from the date of the advance, the Advancing Party may either, (1) institute such legal actions or take such other steps as it may deem advisable in order to enforce the obligation of the Delinquent Party to repay the amount of the Deficiency, with interest, including without limitation, the institution of action to foreclose the Delinquent Party's interest in the lands in favour of the Advancing Party; or (2) purchase the interest of the Delinquent Party at an amount equal to the greater of: a) 80% of the fair market value of such interest as determined by the accountants of the Co-Tenancy: and, b) the amount advanced by the Delinquent Party to the Co-Tenancy, which shall be satisfied in whole or in part by the assumption of the Proportionate Share of the liabilities in respect of the Lands. The completion of the sale and purchase contemplated shall take place on the date fifteen (15) days after the later of the exercise of the option to purchase the Proportionate Share of the Advancing Party or the determination of the purchase price by the accountants.

Article 4.00 - Profits - Losses - Capital

4.01 The Co-Tenants agree that all profits derived by the Co-Tenants from the lands shall be shared pro rata to their Proportionate Shared and all losses sustained by the Co-Tenants in respect of the lands shall be borne by the Co-Tenants pro rata in accordance with their Proportionate Shares.

4.02 The parties hereto agree to indemnify each other and to save each other harmless from any losses, costs, damages or liabilities which may be incurred by the other Co-Tenant(s) through the gross negligence, recklessness, dishonesty or default of any Co-Tenant herein (the "Neglecting Co-Tenant"). Until repayment to the Co-Tenants of any loss so incurred, the Neglecting Co-tenant shall be deemed to be a Delinquent Party and the provisions of Section 4.07 shall apply as if the amount of the loss were a default pursuant to Section 3.03 hereof and shall be responsible to indemnify and save harmless the other Co-Tenants by reason of its negligence, gross negligence, recklessness, dishonesty or default.

4.03 Each year during the currency of this agreement on December 31st (or at more frequent intervals if the Executive Committee so determine), a statement shall be prepared by the regularly employed accountants of the Co-Tenants, which shall show all receipts and expenditures (ordinary and capital) for the lands during the period then ended.

4.04 As determined by the accountants, if it appears:

(a) That any Co-Tenant has withdrawn on amount which is in excess of its entitlement for such period, or that any Co-Tenant has withdrawn an amount which leaves insufficient funds on hand to pay all expenses of the lands, such excess shall be repaid by such party forthwith;

(b) That if during any period, a cash loss should be sustained by the Co-Tenants, such loss shall be made good by contributions from the Co-Tenants which contributions shall be made pro rata according to their Proportionate Shares.

4.05 Cash surpluses and cash losses of the Co-Tenants shall be determined by the regularly employed accountants of the Co-Tenants in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and practices consistently applied. For clarification, in determining cash surpluses and cash losses, there shall be no deductions for depreciation of any of the buildings or improvements constructed upon the lands and owned by the Co-Tenants, or depreciation of their property, whether real, personal or intangible property, and no reserve shall be provided for same. Each of the Co-Tenants may separately with respect to its interest in the lands take such deductions for capital cost allowance of the lands and other property, whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, as it may in its sole discretion deem advisable or by law be allowed so to do. 4.06 Subject to Section 4.07 hereof, any net excess insurance proceeds received by the Co-Tenants (over the amount thereof necessary to repair the damage compensated for or payable to any mortgagee having a mortgage on the lands or any part thereof) and any net proceeds received by the Co-Tenants jointly from any and all mortgage financing and refinancing as provided for in Article 3.00, partial or total expropriations of the lands, (over the amount thereof needed for restoration and less any amount thereof paid to any mortgagee or lessee having a mortgage or lease on all or part of the lands), sales of easements, rights-of-way or similar interests; sales of any interest in or to all or part of the lands by the Co-Tenants, and any other similar items, receipts and proceeds which, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, are attributable to surplus, to the extent thereof available for distribution shall be distributed to the Co-Tenants in their Proportionate Shares pursuant to the provisions of Section 4.07 hereof.

4.07 Cash, surpluses derived from the lands shall be distributed periodically when approved by all the Co-Tenants, in the priority and manner on follows: (a) First, in payment to each of the Co-Tenants pro rata in accordance with their Proportionate Shares of any amounts advanced by them pursuant to this agreement;

(b) Secondly, in payment to the Co-Tenants pro rata in accordance with their Proportionate Shares.

Provided however, if advances are made by any Co-Tenant on behalf of any Delinquent Party as set forth in Section 3.03 hereof, no distribution of surplus shall be made to such Delinquent Party but instead all monies which would otherwise have been paid to such party hereunder had it not been in default under Section 3.03, shall be paid or assigned to the Advancing Party in repayment of the sum so advanced by it on behalf of the Delinquent Party until the Advancing Party shall have been reimbursed in full for such sums together with all accrued interest to the date of such payment.

Article 5.00 - Management and Operation of the Lands

5.01 (a) To facilitate the administration and operation of the lands and the handling of all matters and questions in connection therewith, an Executive Committee shall be established consisting of four (4) members elected by the Co-Tenants from time to time.

The initial members of the Executive Committee shall be:

Leo Tofoli Ray Dodge Mike Simanic Tony Zapparoli

(b) No Meeting of the Executive Committee shall be held unless and until notice of the same has been sent by pro-paid registered mail, or delivered personally, to the members of the Executive Committee, at least seven (7) days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and statutory Holidays) before the date set for the holding of such meeting, provided that the time for such notice may be abridged or waived in writing by any of the said members; provided that in the event that normal mail service is disrupted by reason of strikes, walk-outs or other irregularities, then so long as such disruption exists, any notice required to be given hereunder shall be delivered personally to the members of the Executive Committee or otherwise shall be deemed to be ineffective for the purposes hereof.

(c) A meeting of the Executive Committee may be called by any one (1) member thereof at any time. Such meetings may be held by conference telephone;

(d) A quorum for a meeting of the Executive Committee shall consist of three (3) members present.

(e) Any resolution to be approved by the Executive Committee shall require a majority of the votes cast at any meeting of the Executive Committee or by the Consent in writing of a majority of same;

(f) All cheques and documents of the Co-Tenancy shall be signed by any two Co-Tenants,

(g) The Rank of the Co-Tenancy shall be such bank or branch as may be decided upon by the Executive Committee, and all monies received from time to time on account of the lands shall be paid immediately into the bank account or accounts maintained by the co-tenancy in the some drafts, cheques, bills or cash in which they are received and all disbursements on account of the co-tenancy shall be by cheque drawn on such bank;

5.02 (a) Save as to the sale of all or any part of the Lands, capital expenditures, and mortgaging the Lands, all decisions, determinations, consents or approvals of the Co-tenants in respect of the Lands shall be made by the Executive Committee and any decision, determination, consent or approval so made or given shall be fully binding upon the Co-tenants for all purposes.

(b) No Meeting of the Co-Tenants shall be held unless and until notice of the same has been sent by pre-paid registered mail, or delivered personally, to the members, at least ten (10) days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and statutory Holidays) before the date set for the holding of such meeting, provided that the time for such notice may be abridged or waived in writing by any of the said members; provided that in the event that normal mail service is disrupted by reason of strikes, walk-outs or other irregularities, then so long as such disruption exists, any notice required to be given hereunder shall be delivered personally to the members or otherwise shall be deemed to be ineffective for the purposes hereof.

(c) A meeting of the Co-Tenants may be called by Co-Tenants representing at least twenty-five percent (25%) of the Proportionate Shares thereof at any time.

(d) A quorum shall consist of at least three (3) Co-Tenants;

(e) Any resolution to be approved by the Co-Tenants in accordance with this agreement, shall require a majority of the votes cast at any meeting of the Co-Tenants, provided however, that:

(i) in the event that an event of default shall have occurred and be continuing with respect to a Co-Tenant pursuant to Article 3:00; or

(ii) in the event that a Co-Tenant's representative fails to attend on two (2) consecutive occasions at a meeting of the Co-Tenants duly called in accordance with Section 5.02 hereof and his authority has not been delegated as hereinbefore set forth to another nominee, in which event a further notice shall be given to the Co-Tenant whose representative failed to attend the meeting, again calling for a meeting four (4) days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and statutory holidays) after delivery of the second notice and if such representative or the representative appointed by the said Co-Tenant fails to attend or his authority has not been delegated as aforesaid;

then the Ownership interest of such Co-Tenant shall be excluded in determining the required percentages for Sections 5.02(d) and 5.02(e) preceding and the ownership interests of each of the other Co-Tenants shall, for such purposes, be deemed to be the ratio that its interest in the lands as otherwise determined bears to the aggregate ownership interests of all Co-Tenants (as otherwise determined) other than the defaulting Co-Tenant; provided that notwithstanding the foregoing, in the event that any Co-Tenant has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any contract or transaction (other than its interest in the lands) to which the co-tenancy is to be a party, other than a contract or transaction relating to the sale of the lands or any part thereof, the member representing such Co-Tenant shall declare such interest at the meeting of the Co-Tenants and shall not vote and shall not in respect of such contract or transaction be counted in the quorum.

(f) In the event that a Proportionate Share shall be held by more than one person or jointly or in partnership with any other person, any vote in respect of that Proportionate Share may only be exercised by proxy by all of the owners of such Proportionate Share, or upon all owners of such Proportionate Share being present and voting unanimously for any such vote.

5.03 No Co-Tenant shall, without the concurrence of the Executive Committee:

(i) compromise or release any debt due to the co-tenancy, except upon receipt of full payment;

(ii) purchase or lease, or contract to purchase or lease, additional property on behalf of the Co-Tenants;

(iii) subject to the provisions of Article 6.00 hereof, sell, mortgage or otherwise encumber its interest in the Lands or any part thereof;

(iv) do any act which is detrimental to the best interest of the Co-tenants or which would make it difficult or impossible to carry out the purposes of the Co-Tenancy.

5.04 Each Co-Tenant shall have the absolute right to engage in other businesses and other ventures for its own account including, without limitation, the ownership, improvement and operation of real estate. No Co-Tenant shall be required to devote any particular amount of time or attention to the lands, save as the parties may otherwise agree, but each Co-Tenant shall devote such time and attention to the lands and shall have such duties in respect of the lands as shall be unanimously agreed upon. No Co-Tenant by reason of this agreement shall have any interest or liability in any other property owned by the other Co-Tenants or in any other business venture engaged in by the other Co-Tenants.

Article 6.00 - Restriction on Sale and Mortgage of the Undivided Interests of the Co-tenants

6.01 Except as hereinafter set forth in this Article 6.00 or as elsewhere explicitly set forth in this agreement, no Co-Tenant herein may either directly or indirectly, sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge or otherwise encumber its interest in the lands or any part thereof or interest therein or in any other property of the Co-Tenants used in conjunction with the lands,

6.02 The Co-Tenants agree that none of them shall be entitled to mortgage, pledge or otherwise encumber their beneficial interest in the Lands or in the project until such time as the project is completed and each has taken title to his share of the units in the project.

6.03 If any of the Co-Tenants (the "Selling Co-Tenant") receives an offer to purchase its entire interest in the lands (the "Offer"), which Offer to purchase shall have been received from a third Party dealing at arm's length with the Selling Co-Tenant during the term of this agreement, the following provisions shall apply:

(a) The Selling Co-Tenant shall, before accepting the Offer, give to each of the other Co-Tenants (hereinafter referred to as the "Other Co-Tenants") a certified copy thereof and each of the Other Co-Tenants shall be allowed fifteen (15) clear days from the receipt by it of the said certified copy in which to give an offer to purchase the Selling Co-Tenant's interest in the lands at the same price and upon the same terms as the Offer (the "Counter Offer"). If the Other Co-Tenant or any of them submits to the Selling Co-Tenant a Counter Offer, then the Selling Co-Tenant shall accept the Counter Offer and convey its interest in the lands to the Other Co-Tenant(s) in accordance with the Counter Offer. Provided that if more than one of the Other Co-Tenants shall submit to the Selling Co-Tenant a Counter Offer then the Selling Co-Tenant shall accept their Counter Offers and convey its interest in the lands to such Co-Tenants in the ratio of their Proportionate Shares or in such other proportions as such Other Co-Tenants shall agree upon. If the Other Co-Tenants do not submit a Counter Offer as aforesaid, then the Selling Co-Tenant shall be free to accept the Offer and proceed to convey its interest in the lands to the said third party, provided that such sale is completed within the time period stated in the Offer or within sixty (60) days from the last day upon which the last Other Co-Tenant was entitled to submit a Counter Offer as aforesaid, whichever is the first to occur.

(b) If the Selling Co-Tenant shall not complete the sale to the third party within the time limit provided for in this Section 6.03, and if the Selling Co-Tenant again wishes to accept the Offer, or if the selling Co-Tenant shall receive a different offer from the third party or an offer from a different third party which he wishes to accept then the Selling Co-Tenant shall again submit the Offer to the Other Co-Tenants and the provisions of this Section 6.03 shall again apply mutatis mutandis and so on until one of the Other Co-Tenants submits a Counter Offer or the Selling Co-Tenant sells its interest to the third party, or the Offer of the third party is withdrawn, or the Selling Co-tenant gives a final refusal to the Offer.

6.04 Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this agreement contained, no sale of the interest in the lands of any one or more of the Co-Tenants shall be effective unless and until the purchaser(s) of such interest shall have executed and delivered in favour of the Other Co-Tenants, an acknowledgment whereby the purchaser(s) agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement to the same extent and in the same manner as if it were an original party thereto. Notwithstanding anything herein to the contrary, no Co-Tenant shall be permitted to sell or otherwise transfer less than its entire interest in the co-tenancy or its entire interest in the lands.

6.05 (a) If, during, the term of this agreement, there shall be a disagreement between the Co-Tenants, any of the Co-Tenants may offer to sell to the others its entire interest in the lands, at a price and upon such terms and conditions as may be set by the said Co-Tenant (hereinafter called the "Dissatisfied Co-Tenant"). Upon receipt by the other Co-Tenants (hereinafter called the "Satisfied Co-Tenants") of the said Offer to sell, the Satisfied Co-Tenants may each within thirty (30) days after the receipt of the said Offer (the "Acceptance Period") accept the Offer to sell of the dissatisfied Co-Tenant. If none of the Satisfied Co-Tenants shall accept the Offer to sell of the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant, then the Satisfied Co-Tenants shall be obligated to sell their interests in the lands to the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant at the same price adjusted with respect to the interests held by each the Satisfied Co-Tenants, and upon the same terms and conditions as were contained in the Offer to sell received from the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant, and the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant shall be obligated to purchase such interests on the aforesaid terms, and the sale shall be completed in accordance with the provisions contained in the said Offer to sell. If any of the Satisfied Co-Tenants shall accept the Offer to sell of the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant, then the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant shall convey the whole of its interest in the lands to the Satisfied Co-Tenant. If more than one of the Satisfied Co-Tenants shall accept the Offer to sell of the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant then (except as hereinafter Provided for in this Section 6.05) the Satisfied Co-Tenants shall purchase the interest of the Dissatisfied Co-Tenant in the ratio of their Proportionate Shares unless they shall otherwise agree in writing.

(b) The closing of a sale pursuant to the foregoing provisions shall take place at a mutually convenient location on the island of St. Kitts/Nevis --- within thirty (30) days following the expiration of the Acceptance Period. If on the date of closing the Co-Tenant(s) who shall become the seller under the said Offer shall neglect or refuse to complete the transaction for the purchase of the other Co-Tenant's(s) interest in the lands, the lawyer of such Co-Tenant's interest shall have the right upon such default (without prejudice to ally other right it may have) upon payment by it of the amount payable on closing to the credit of the seller of such interest in any chartered bank on the island of St. Kitts/Nevis --- for and on behalf of and in the name of such seller, to complete the transaction and such seller does irrevocably constitute and appoint the buyer of such interest the true and lawful attorney of such seller to complete the said transaction and execute any and every document necessary in that behalf.

(c) At the closing of the purchase and sale, the Selling Co-Tenant(s) shall convey and assign to the purchasing party its interest in the lands free and clear of all claims, encumbrances and liens, except such mortgages, or other liens as may then affect one hundred per cent (100%) of the undivided interest in the lands as opposed to mortgages and liens affecting only the beneficial ownership of the Selling Co-Tenants, by a deed in customary form together with such evidence of due authorization, execution and delivery, and of the absence of any liens or competing claims as the purchasing party shall reasonably require. Subject to receipt of the foregoing and to all other terms hereof being complied with, the purchasing party shall make payment of the requisite purchase price by certified cheque or money order payable at par in St. Kitts to or to the order of the Selling Co-Tenant(s), or in such other manner as the Selling Co-Tenant(s) may in writing direct, and execute and deliver to the Selling Co-Tenant(s) all security documents, if any, in connection with the said purchase.

(d) Unless the Co-Tenants shall otherwise agree in writing, any projects and buildings then under construction shall be proceeded with until the closing of the transaction.

6.06 (a) In the event that a bona fide offer to purchase the lands or any part thereof shall be received from a person, firm or corporation dealing at arm's length with each of the Co-Tenants (herein called the "Original Offer"), a meeting of Co-Tenants shall be convened as soon as possible but in any event, not more than four (4) business days after receipt of the Original Offer. At such meeting, the Original Offer shall be tabled and discussed. In the event that the Co-Tenants shall unanimously decide to accept or reject such offer, then all acts and things shall be done and documents executed in order to proceed with such acceptance and the ensuing sale or with such rejection.

(b) In the event that the Co-Tenants representing at least sixty-five per cent (65%) of the ownership interest in the lands as set out in Section 2.05 hereof shall desire to accept such Original Offer, then the Co-Tenants shall each do all acts and things necessary and sign such documents in order to cause such Original Offer to be accepted unless any of the Co-Tenants (hereinafter called the "Substituted Purchasers") shall within four (4) business days after the close of such meeting submit to the Co-Tenants a similar offer (herein called a "Substituted Offer", and if more than one, "Substituted Offers"), to purchase the lands being the subject matter of the said Original Offer on the same terms and conditions as those contained in the Original Offer. In the event that one or more Substituted Offers shall be submitted, the Co-Tenants shall each do all Acts and things necessary and sign such documents in order to sell the lands being the subject matter of the said Original Offer and Substituted Offer or Substituted Offers, as the case may be, upon and subject to the terms and conditions of the Substituted offer or Substituted Offers, as the case may be, to the Substituted Purchasers in the proportions in which the respective ownership interests of the Substituted Purchasers in the lands as set out in Section 2.05 hereof shall bear to one another or as they shall otherwise agree upon and direct to the Co-Tenants in writing. (c) On the acceptance of either the Original Offer or any Substituted Offer or Substituted Offers, the Co-Tenants covenant and agree to do all acts and things necessary and sign any and all documents and give all assurances in order to ensure the completion of the purchase and sale contemplated thereby in accordance with the foregoing.

(d) In the event that only a part of the lands is disposed of the accordance with the provisions of this Section 6.06, then the provisions of this Section 6.06 shall continue to apply in respect of the balance of the lands remaining, or any part thereof, mutatis mutandis, and so on from time to time.

6.07 If any Co-Tenant becomes a buyer of another Co-Tenant's interest in the lands under and pursuant to the provisions of this Article 6.00, any claim or claims against such buyer relating to the lands being a liquidated demand acknowledged in writing shall be satisfied and discharged before or upon completion of the purchase of the said interest in the lands. For the purposes of this agreement, a liquidated demand shall include any amount verified by the accountants responsible for preparing statements relating to the winds, whether secured or unsecured and whether due at the time or payable sometime thereafter.

6.08 The right of any Co-Tenant to invoke the provisions of Sections 6.03, 6.05 or 6.06 hereof may not be exercised if the provisions of any such Sections have already been invoked by any of the other Co-Tenants.

Article 7.00 The Trustee

7.01 For ease of conveyancing, the parties acknowledge that title to the Lands will Continue to be registered in the name of the Trustee in the manner hereinabove referred. The Trustee acknowledges that it has held and will continue to hold the Lands and any and all other Assets of the Co-Tenancy coming into its possession, together with any funds received by it, as Trustee in accordance with the terms of this agreement.

7.02 The parties hereto hereby irrevocably authorize the Trustee to execute all deeds and other documents herein required to be executed by or on behalf of the Co-Tenancy as may from time to time be necessary or advisable and all such documents so executed shall be binding upon the parties hereto and the Co-Tenancy to the same extent and effect as if executed by them. All parties hereto acknowledge and agree that failure by the nominee signing officer of any Co-Tenant to execute whatever documents are required to be executed by the Trustee shall constitute default by the party whose nominee has failed to execute as aforesaid.

7.03 The Trustee shall hold title to the Lands as bare trustee for and on behalf of the Co-Tenancy as aforesaid, and upon completion of the project, shall convey the Lands with all necessary approvals and/or consents as directed by the Co-Tenants.

Article 8.00 - Arbitration

8.01 At any time while this Agreement and any of its provisions are in force, should any dispute, difference of opinion or question arise among the parties hereto touching on this Agreement or any part thereof, which cannot be resolved by the provisions hereof or by the agreement of the parties, then such dispute, difference of opinion or question shall be arrived at and settled by arbitration as herein provided.

Each party shall appoint one arbitrator within seven (7) days of notice by either party to the other requesting such appointment. The two arbitrators so appointed shall, within seven (7) days of the appointment of the last arbitrator so appointed, choose a third arbitrator.

The arbitrators shall proceed to arbitrate the dispute forthwith and shall within sixty (60) days render their decision to the Co-Tenants.

The cost of arbitration shall be borne by the parties equally.

Article 9.00 - Bankruptcy or Other Involuntary Transfer or Breach

9.01 In the event of the bankruptcy of any Co-Tenant or of the transfer, voluntary or involuntary, by any Co-Tenant of his interest in breach of this agreement or to any creditor in total or partial satisfaction of any debt, obligation, judgment or other liability or in the event that any Co-Tenant is in substantial breach of this agreement (other than Section 3.03 hereof) which breach continues ten (10) days after written notice of such breach is given to such Co-Tenant (such defaulting Co-Tenant being hereinafter called the "Vendor"), the other Co-Tenants (being hereinafter called the "Purchasers") shall have the option to purchase the interest in the lands of the Vendor by giving written notice of their election to purchase the same within ninety (90) days after such bankruptcy shall have been adjudicated or such transfer shall have occurred or such breach shall have occurred.

9.02 In the event that there shall be more than one Purchaser that elects to purchase the interest of the Vendor, the purchase price shall be paid by the Purchasers in the proportions which the Proportionate Shares of each of Purchasers electing to purchase the interest of the Vendor as set out in Section 2.05 hereof bears to the total Proportionate Shares of Purchasers electing to purchase the interest of the Vendor.

9.03 If the Purchasers shall elect to purchase the interest of the Vendor, the purchase price shall be an amount equal to the greater of: a) eighty per cent (80%) of the fair market value for such interest as set by the accountants of the Co-Tenancy; and, b) the amount advanced by the Vendor to the Co-Tenancy and shall be satisfied in whole or in part by the assumption of the Proportionate Share of the liabilities in respect of the Lands.

9.04 The completion of the sale and purchase contemplated herein shall take place on the date fifteen (15) days after the later of the exercise of the option to purchase the interest in question by the Purchasers or the determination of the purchase price by the accountants. At such time, the Vendor, shall, against receipt of the aforesaid consideration, execute and deliver whatever instruments of conveyance, assignment and release that shall be necessary or desirable to carry out such sale.

Article 10.00 - General Provisions

10.01 The parties hereto shall and will sign such further and other papers, cause such meetings to be held, resolutions passed, by-laws enacted, exercise their votes and influence and do and perform and cause to be done and performed such further and other acts and things as may be necessary or desirable to give full effect and force to this agreement and every part hereof.

10.02 Time shall be of the essence of this agreement and every part thereof.

10.03 This agreement expresses the entire agreement among the parties hereto with respect to all matters herein and its execution has not been induced by, nor do any of the parties rely upon or regard as material any representations or warranties whatsoever not incorporated herein and made part hereof and shall not be amended, altered or qualified except by a memorandum in writing signed by all parties hereto and any amendments, alterations or qualifications hereof shall be null and void and shall not be binding upon any party who has not given its consent as aforesaid.

10.04 All notices, demands, requests, acceptances and other communications required or permitted to be given hereunder shall be sufficiently given by one party to the other in writing by registered mail, postage prepaid, or personal service, addressed to such other party or delivered to such other party at the address shown in the records of the Trustee, or at such addresses as may be given by any of them to the other in writing from time to time, and such notices, demands, requests, acceptances and other communications shall be deemed to have been received when delivered, or if mailed, forty-eight (48) hours after mailing (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays); provided that if regular mail service shall be interrupted by strikes or other irregularities, then such notice, demand, request, acceptance and other communication shall be deemed to have been received on the fourth business day following the resumption of normal mail service.

10.05 The solicitors for the Co-Tenancy shall be determined by the Executive Committee.

10.06 The accountants for the Co-Tenancy shall be such accountants as may be determined by the Executive Committee.

10.07 Subject to the restrictions on assignment herein contained, this agreement shall enure to the benefit of and be binding upon the parties hereto and their respective successors and assigns. 10.08 All words and personal pronouns relating thereto shall be read and construed as the number and gender of the party or parties referred to in each case require, and the verb agreeing therewith shall be construed as agreeing with the required word or pronoun. Where the context so requires, the singular of any word shall import the plural and the plural shall import the singular.

10.09 No Co-Tenant shall have the right to partition nor shall any Co-Tenant make any application to or petition any court or authority having jurisdiction over the matter nor commence or prosecute any action for partition and sale; and upon any breach of the provisions of this section by a Co-Tenant, the other Co-Tenant shall, in addition to all rights and remedies in law and in equity, be entitled to a decree or order restraining and enjoining such application, petition, action or proceeding, and the offending Co-Tenant shall not plead in defence thereto that there would be an adequate remedy at law, it being recognized and agreed that the injury and damage resulting from such breach would be impossible to measure monetarily.

10.10 If any provisions of this agreement or the application thereof to my circumstances shall be held to be invalid or unenforceable, then the remaining provisions of this agreement or the application thereof to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby and shall be valid and enforceable to the fullest extent permitted by law.

10.11 Whenever in this Agreement any Co-Tenant has covenanted and agreed to execute any instrument or document or do any act to give effect to the provisions of this Agreement, such Co-Tenant does hereby irrevocably nominate, constitute and appoint any one of the other Co-Tenants as its true and lawful attorney for it and in its name and on its behalf to execute and do all such deeds, acts, assurances, conveyances, transfers, mortgages, charges, covenants, agreements, instruments, documents and things as shall be required as the said attorney shall see fit for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, and such Co-Tenant hereby covenants and agrees for its respective successor and assigns to allow, ratify and confirm whatsoever such attorney shall do or cause to be done by virtue of these presents.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the parties hereto have duly executed these presents, the 28 day of July, 1989.

Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1006, Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corporation No. 1070, and Metropolitan Toronto Condominium No. 1088, plaintiffs, and Hollywood Plaza Developments Inc., Camrost Development Corporation, David Feldman, Martin Goldfarb, Marco Muzzo, The Toronto-Dominion Bank, The Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario as represented by the Minister of Finance, defendants Court File No. 95-CU-90972 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Motions Court Brockenshire J. Heard: November 2, 1995. Oral judgment: November 3, 1995.

Counsel: A.M. Habas, counsel for the plaintiffs. C.P. Stevenson, counsel for the defendant Hollywood plaza Developments Inc. M.R. Kaplan, counsel for The Toronto-Dominion Bank.

[para1] BROCKENSHIRE J. (orally):-- I have before me two motions to lift Certificates of Litigation. A motion to in some way deal with or remove a lien under the Condominium Act. A motion to strike out or not permit the use of some affidavit evidence in relation to these motions and a motion to permit an amendment to a Statement of Claim.

[para2] Happily, the motion concerning striking or not permitting the use of affidavits was abandoned during the course of argument and also during the course of argument consent was given to the proposed amendments to the Statement of Claim.

[para3] The motion concerning the lien under the Condominium Act relates to a very small amount, some $348. The quibble is not over the amount, it is over the claim for some $3,000 in costs. The ruling sought from me is what would be a reasonable amount of costs under the section. The proposal then being that the defendants would pay the claim perhaps under protest together with the reasonable costs to remove the lien.

[para4] In my view $3,000 is a completely unreasonable amount to put forward. I am not given any guidance from decided cases by in my view the most you could regard as reasonable would be what you would find under the Construction Lien Act, namely 25 percent of the claim. My ruling on that part is that on payment of the amount of the lien plus 25 percent on account of costs a release of the lien be given.

[para5] The two motions regarding the Certificates of Litigation are brought by two of the defendants, a developer and the bank. The motion by the bank appeared in argument to have been brought with an abundance of caution on the basis that it might be possible for the court to find on the basis of equities and so on that the Certificate not be lifted in relation to the developer. But nevertheless it should be lifted in relation to the bank.

[para6] In view of my finding on the principal problem I do not think it is necessary to go further into the alleged separate position of the bank other than to note that the allegation as against the bank that in some way it would be taken to be deemed to have knowledge of inner workings between purchasers and the developers based only on the production of documents called for under the Loan Agreement seems to me to be horrendously tenuous.

[para7] On the main motion before me, the factual situation is that one developer set out to do a four-part development, putting up a high rise building, then a townhouse type development, then another high rise and also a commercial development, all on I am told what originally was one large parcel of land.

[para8] The residential developments are bit different from the usual in that the residential premises were to be described as units and parking places were also being described as units. It apparently had been open to purchasers who bought a residential unit to buy or not buy a parking unit.

[para9] The documentation relating to the two high rises and the townhouse development which in the end became the three separate condominium corporations was that parking provisions were going to be somewhat flexible with provision for instance for a purchaser of a unit in one of the buildings to acquire parking in another building.

[para10] While provision for parking for residents seems to be quite well taken care of, there was little thought or provision made for parking for visitors. The disclosure statements indicate simply that there will be approximately 7 outdoor parking spaces which will be part of the commercial component. The developer arranged to use these parking spaces as part of a sales program after which the Phase I corporation will be granted a 99 year lease subject to committee of adjustment consent for the use at a nominal yearly rent.

[para11] Although it does not specifically say so, it seems the 7 outdoor parking spaces in the commercial component of the development were intended to take care of eventual visitor parking needs. Despite what was testified to in an affidavit of Mr. Kilgore as a typical amenity, a provision of visitor parking, it seems that there is no evidence available that there was any representations being made by the developers or their sales people as to further and other visitor parking. Nor do I have any evidence before me of any specific reliance by any of the purchasers past or present on anything indicating there would be visitor parking other than what has been provided by the developers.

[para12] Probably because of the way the units and the parking units were separated and the way the development went ahead and perhaps also because the developers had retained for their own temporary use 10 parking units, there seems to have been little concern about parking arrangements here until some time after at least the first of the high rises was completed. It seems that at some time, I understand perhaps in 1994, some complaint was made to the municipality and that the municipality apparently made clear that its zoning requirements call for provision of visitor parking and that was at least temporarily satisfied by the developer marking some unused parking spaces with a vee of tape. [para13] This temporary arrangement eventually ran out. I understand there were further complaints or concerns involving the municipality and that has led the developer to enter into a further agreement for parking space in the adjacent commercial area. The adjacent commercial area has now been sold off by the developer. I do not know whether to a completely independent, or to some way related corporation but in any event there is a new corporation which has entered into an agreement calling for provision of some parking spaces in the commercial area for an apparently unlimited time but subject to this being treated as a temporary arrangement until further or better arrangements are made or until there are changes permitting a reduction in parking requirements with further upset provisions in favour of the commercial condominium corporation permitting it to cancel if it finds it has pressure relating to parking or other difficulties.

[para14] The three condominium corporations are admittedly before the court on the basis that there is no permanent solid guaranteed provision for visitor parking. The remedy taken has been to commence action against the developer and a number of other people claiming among other things a property interest in parking spaces within the three residential condominiums.

[para15] The certificate of action has been registered against I am told 22 of the remaining 25 unsold parking spaces within the three residential condominiums. Three were simply overlooked.

[para16] The moving parties come before the court with a two-branch argument. The first being that the plaintiffs simply have no claim against title to the parking areas within the three condominiums and second that the equities of the situation call for a removal of the certificate because perhaps most pressing there are six outstanding purchase agreements for residential units. There are only three freed parking spaces and a certificate of this kind is going to naturally cause some concern to all six purchasers.

[para17] Further as the bank points out, its Loan Agreement says simply any encumbrance is default and the bank can immediately demand payment. If that happened both the developer and the condominium corporations would presumably have difficulties. [para18] I am told by the developer's counsel that there is an interesting current dichotomy in the position of the municipality in that the municipal zoning requirements apparently call for visitor parking but the municipal planning calls for a reduction in vehicular traffic in the area to be supported indirectly by doing things like reducing parking spaces.

[para19] The developer has hopes that either the general bylaw will change or a minor variance will be permitted in relation to this development cutting down the municipal parking requirements.

[para20] Whether or not that might happen in the future is of course a problem for them. However, the possibility of it reduces in my view the argument of the condominium corporations that because of the bylaw situation it could be reasonably inferred by all purchasers, even though nothing was said, that substantial visitor parking be provided.

[para21] I have been referred to a great number of cases by both sides in support of the total claim by the condominium corporations. I have been referred to several of the superintendent type cases where a complaint was raised on a developer holding out there would be a superintendent suite and then later trying to sell it.

[para22] In those cases it has been made clear, perhaps most tellingly in this jurisdiction by the judgment of Zuber J. in Frontenac Condominium Corp. No. 1 v. Macciocchi and Sons Ltd. (1975), 11 O.R. (2d) 649 (Ont. C.A.) that before registration of all of the formalities and before all of the documentation and despite definitions which might be contained in legal documents, a purchaser is entitled to look to what he is being told, supported by what seems reasonable in the circumstances.

[para23] However, as was made quite clear by Flinn J. in Middlesex Condominium Corp. No. 87 v. 600 Talbot Street London Ltd. unreported other than [1993] there has to be two sides - a representation and a reliance, and to make out a sort of equitable title claim there has to be before the court evidence that there was representation at least to some of the unit purchasers and there has to be some evidence that at least some of them relied on. Here the only evidence of representation I have is what was said in the Disclosure Agreement about 7 parking spaces over in the commercial area and I have nothing indicating that any of the buyers put any reliance even in that.

[para24] On the title side I think the most that can be said for the plaintiffs is there is some documentary indication that there would be some parking areas provided in the commercial part of this development. There was for a time some admittedly temporary parking provision made within the units marked off with tape by a vee clearly intended as temporary. I do not see how the plaintiffs can transfer the reference to some parking space, in effect across the way, into an equitable title claim to units within the Condominium Corporations.

[para25] On the equitable side of whether even if there is some involvement of title, nevertheless the Certificate should be lifted, reference was made to 572383 Ontario Inc. v. Dhunna (1987), 24 C.P.C. (2d) 287 which I am told is referred to in every one of these cases, a decision of Master Donkin. In that decision, the learned Master had simply gathered together a number of other decisions and has listed them as propositions. He makes a list of eight of them each supported by court decisions except for number 4 where there is an alternative claim for damages.

[para26] Argument has been advanced that the land here is unique because there are only some 25 parking places left. If these are not saved then the equitable right of the plaintiffs may be gone forever. In my view the plaintiffs have obvious difficulties in relation to those particular 25 parking spaces and I have no indication of any difficulty in securing alternate parking space in the commercial part of the development. In fact the real concern seems to be not title but the question of whose going to pay the rent.

[para27] The intent of the parties in acquiring the land is something I have already dealt with. Whether there is an alternative claim for damages certainly one here is being advanced the argument of the developer is that this should really be a damage claim the claim seeking money in some way. Ease or difficulty in calculating damages there may some great difficulties in doing a calculation of future value and future rentals. It may become very simply indeed but there is nothing to indicate that it is impossible or even out of the realm of ordinary calculation and estimate by a court or their damages to be satisfactory. Again it appears the big difficulty is the rent for parking spaces in the commercial area and the terms of a rental agreement.

[para28] The presence or absence of another willing purchaser in this case becomes important because there are third party purchasers who are being prevented from completing their purchases because certificates are outstanding against parking spaces they would like to acquire.

[para29] The principal thing in my view is a question of harm to the defendants if the certificate is allowed to remain or to the plaintiff if it is removed. In my view the harm to the defendant developer, perhaps to the bank, certainly to the third parties who are in the process of buying their homes, far outweighs any possible harm to the Condominium Corporations who would continue with their claims for damages payment or some alternate arrangement covering party. I am not unmindful that the Condominium Corporations presently have enlisted a most powerful ally in the municipality whose making orders likely has a more immediate effect on the position of the developer than the order this court could make. [para30] It is my view that the Certificate of Litigation should be removed both because of the very tenuous alleged title claim and because the equities of the situation clearly call for its removal.

Herb Kratz, plaintiff (respondent), and Parkside Hill Limited, defendant (appellant)

No. C13503 Ontario Court of Appeal Toronto, Ontario Osborne, Weiler and Austin JJ.A. Heard: September 12, 1995. Judgment: October 5, 1995.

Counsel: Ronald B. Moldaver, Q.C., counsel for the appellant. Francine C. Sherkin, counsel for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[para1] AUSTIN J.A.:-- This is an appeal by the defendant from the decision of J. Macdonald J. dated October 1, 1992 granting summary judgment for the plaintiff and setting aside an agreement whereby the plaintiff (Kratz) purchased a condominium from Parkside Hill Limited (Parkside).

Facts

[para2] The agreement was made in the fall of 1988. The condominium was to be built in the Borough of East York and the price was $169,200. The agreement provided for an occupancy or possession closing and for a title closing. The former was to be on May 1, 1990, or sooner or later depending upon substantial completion. The occupancy closing actually took place on February 25, 1991 and by a side agreement between Kratz and Parkside, possession was taken by a tenant.

[para3] On October 23, 1991, Parkside wrote to Kratz to the effect that it expected to register the condominium documents around November 8th-11th, 1991 with the title closing on December 11, 1991. Kratz's solicitors replied on November 7, 1991 to the effect that the agreement provided for an occupancy closing date of May 1, 1990 and for extensions of the time for title closing aggregating eighteen months which period had expired on November 1, 1991, so that Kratz was entitled to abort the transaction. Parkside's solicitors responded by letter dated November 13, 1991 stating that their client had eighteen months from the actual closing date of February 25, 1991 within which to convey title, a period which had not yet elapsed.

[para4] The sale was not closed, Parkside refused to refund Kratz's payments and on January 9, 1992 Kratz commenced this action for those payments and for a declaration that the agreement had been terminated. Parkside defended the action and counterclaimed for a declaration that Kratz had defaulted, that Parkside was entitled to keep his payments and for damages which it might suffer on a re-sale as well as for occupancy fees subsequent to November 1, 1991. The parties each moved for summary judgment, the motions being supported by affidavits and cross-examinations.

[para5] At the outset of his reasons, the motions judge noted that for the purposes of the motions the parties had agreed as follows:

- (a) the agreement of purchase and sale was prepared by the defendant's solicitors in a standard form which was then proffered to the plaintiff;
- (b) the intention of the parties was to be determined entirely from the written agreement;
- (c) what the parties sought in reality was an interpretation of the agreement such as might take place pursuant to Rule 14.05(d);
- (d) the issue of the plaintiff's occupation of the unit on and after November 1, 1991 was to be left aside, pending interpretation of the agreement.

[para6] The relevant parts of the agreement are as follows:

2.

(a) The Purchaser shall occupy the unit on the first day of May, 1990, or such extended or accelerated date pursuant to the terms hereof that the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the Purchaser (the "Closing Date");

(b) The transfer of title to the Unit shall be completed on the later of the Closing Date or a date established by the Vendor in accordance with Paragraph 21 (the "Unit Transfer Date").

Paragraphs 1 through 41 and Schedules A,B,C,D,E, and F of this Agreement are an integral part hereof and are contained on subsequent pages. Purchaser acknowledges that he has read all paragraphs and Schedules of this Agreement.

3. The meaning of words and phrases used in this Agreement, its Schedules and Appendices shall have the meaning ascribed to them in the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 84 and any amendments thereto (the "Act") unless otherwise provided for as follows:

(c) "Condominium Documents" shall mean the Declaration, Description and By-laws that the Vendor intends to register which will create the Corporation and other Documents more particularly described in Schedule "F";

(e) "Interim Occupancy Period" shall mean the period of time from the Closing Date to the Unit Transfer Date;

(f) "Occupancy Licence Fee" shall mean the sum of money payable monthly in advance by the Purchaser to the Vendor and calculated in accordance with Paragraph E.3 of Schedule "E" herein;

(g) "Unit Transfer Date" shall mean the day a Transfer of the Unit for registration is delivered to the Purchaser or the Purchaser's Solicitors.

Interest on Deposits

5. The Vendor shall pay to the Purchaser interest at the prescribed rate as provided in the Act on all money received by the Vendor on account of the Purchase Price from the Closing Date until the Unit Transfer Date as may be required under the Act.

Title

7. The Vendor or its Solicitor shall notify the Purchaser or its Solicitor following registration of the Condominium Documents when the Unit and other registers comprising the registered Condominium Plan have been organized so as to permit the Purchaser or his Solicitor to examine Title to the Unit (the "Notification Date"). The Purchaser shall be allowed ten (10) days from the Notification Date to examine the title at his own expense. If within that time ...

Accelerated Closing

13. The transaction of purchase and sale shall be completed on the Closing Date or any extension thereof as may be permitted under this Agreement, at which time vacant possession of the Unit will be given to the Purchaser. The Vendor shall be entitled upon giving at least 45 days written notice to the Purchaser or his Solicitor, to accelerate the Closing Date provided the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on such earlier date.

Upon registration of the Condominium, the Vendor's Solicitor shall designate a date not less than 21 days nor more than 60 days after registration of the Condominium Documents as the Unit Transfer Date by delivery of written notice of such date to the Purchaser or his Solicitor. Delays

21. In the event substantial completion of the Unit shall be delayed for any reason other than the wilful neglect of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted reasonable extensions of time (not exceeding eighteen (18) months in the aggregate) to substantially complete the Unit and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor shall be unable to complete the Unit for occupancy within such reasonable extensions of time, all moneys to the extent provided for in paragraph 21, shall be returned to the Purchaser and this Agreement shall be null and void and the Vendor shall not be liable to the Purchaser for damages. If the Unit is substantially completed for occupancy by the Closing Date or any acceleration/extension thereof this transaction shall be completed on such date notwithstanding that the Vendor has not fully completed the Unit or the common elements and the Vendor shall complete such outstanding work required by this Agreement within a reasonable time after the Closing Date, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and materials. The Unit shall be deemed to be substantially completed when the interior work has been finished to permit occupancy. The Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements on or before the Closing Date shall not be deemed to be a failure to complete the Unit.

Occupancy

24. If the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on the Closing Date, but the condominium documents have not been registered, and the Purchaser has been approved by the Mortgagee (if required) (or in the event the Condominium is registered prior to the Closing Date and sale and mortgage documentation has yet to be prepared or registered), the Purchaser shall, pay to the Vendor the balance of the Purchase Price specified in Paragraph 1(f) without adjustment save for any prorated portion of the Occupancy Licence Fee described and calculated in Schedule "E", and the Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on the Closing Date pursuant to the Occupancy Licence attached hereto as Schedule "E".

Executions

28. The Purchaser agrees to provide to the Vendor's Solicitors on the Closing Date and Unit Transfer Date a clear Execution Certificate with respect to all owners of the Unit and further agrees to provide after closing such further clear Execution Certificates as required by the Vendor to obtain mortgage advances with respect to the Unit.

Risk

29. The Unit shall be and remain at the risk of the Vendor until the Unit Transfer Date. ...

General

37. The headings of this Agreement form no part hereof and are inserted for convenience of reference only.

38. Each of the provisions of this Agreement shall be deemed independent and severable, and the invalidity or unenforceability in whole or in part of any one or more of such provisions shall not be deemed to impair or affect in any manner the validity, enforceability or effect of the remainder of this Agreement, and in such event all the other provisions of this Agreement shall continue in full force and effect as if such invalid provision had never been included herein.

Schedule "E" of Agreement of Purchase and Sale

Terms of Occupancy Licence

E.1 The transfer of title to the Unit shall take place on the Unit Transfer Date upon which date, unless otherwise expressly provided for hereunder, the term of this licence shall be determined.

E.2 The Purchaser shall pay or have paid to the Vendor, on or before the Closing Date, by certified cheque drawn on a Canadian chartered bank the balance of the Purchase Price set forth in paragraph 1(f) of this Agreement without adjustment. Upon payment of such amount and the granting of the Vendor Take Back Mortgage, if applicable, on the Closing Date, the Vendor grants to the Purchaser a licence to occupy the Unit from the Closing Date.

E.3 The Purchaser shall pay to the Vendor an Occupancy Licence Fee calculated as follows:

E.4 The Purchaser shall be allowed to remain in occupancy of the Unit during the Interim Occupancy Period provided the terms of this Licence and the Agreement have been observed and performed by the Purchaser. In the event the Purchaser breaches the terms of occupancy the Vendor in its sole discretion and without limitation of any other rights or remedies provided for in this Agreement or at law may terminate this Agreement and revoke the Occupancy Licence of the purchaser pursuant to paragraph 25 of this Agreement whereupon the Purchaser shall be deemed a trespasser and shall give up vacant possession forthwith. The Vendor may take whatever steps it deems necessary to obtain vacant possession and the Purchaser shall reimburse the Vendor for all costs it may incur.

E.10 The Vendor covenants to proceed with all due diligence and dispatch to register the Condominium Documents. If the vendor for any reason whatsoever is unable to register the Condominium Documents and therefore is unable to deliver a registrable transfer to the Purchaser within eighteen (18) months after the Closing Date, the Purchaser or Vendor shall have the right after such eighteen (18) month period to declare, on giving sixty (60) days written notice to the other, that this Occupancy Licence and the Agreement, notwithstanding any intervening act or negotiations, will be at an end. The Purchaser shall give up vacant possession and pay the Occupancy Licence Fee to such date, after which the agreement and Occupancy Licence shall be terminated and all moneys paid to the Vendor on account of the Purchase Price shall be returned to the Purchaser subject to any repair and redecorating expenses of the Vendor necessary to restore the Unit to its original state of occupancy, reasonable wear and tear excepted. The Purchaser agrees to provide the Vendor with a release of this Agreement in the Vendor's standard form.

E.11 The Vendor and the Purchaser covenant and agree notwithstanding the taking of possession that all terms hereunder continue to be binding upon them and that the Vendor may enforce the provisions of the Occupancy Licence separate and apart from the purchase and sale provisions of this Agreement.

The Decision of the Motions Judge

[para7] The motions judge noted that para. 2(b) provided that the title closing was to be on the occupancy closing date or on a "date to be established by the vendor in accordance with Paragraph 21". Kratz's position was that s. 2(b) directed one to para. 21 and while on its face para. 21 dealt with occupancy closing delays, as it allowed delays aggregating not more than eighteen months, it must apply to delays respecting the title closing as well. If it did, then in order to make sense, the delays had to be measured from May 1, 1990, rather than from the actual occupancy closing which was on February 25, 1991. Eighteen months from May 1, 1990 brought one to October 31, 1991 and since the vendor was not ready to transfer title by that date, the agreement was at an end by virtue of para. 21.

[para8] Parkside's position was that para.21 was referable only to occupancy closing delays and that beyond that one had to look at para. E.10. That paragraph provided a further eighteen months within which to transfer title.

[para9] After considering the provisions of para. 21, the motions judge concluded that:

... nothing in paragraph 21 prevents any of those provisions from also being used to define or limit the defendant's discretion in determining when title closing will take place.

As to the word "aggregate" he said:

When imported into paragraph 2(b), it connotes collecting into one period the sum total of all delay by the vendor in setting the date of either occupancy closing or title closing.

Turning to para. E.10, the motions judge said:

To be understood correctly, paragraph E.10 must be read in context. Paragraph 24 gives rise to Schedule "E". It establishes an occupancy license if the title closing does not take place at the same time as the occupancy closing, and provides that such an occupancy license is governed by the provisions of Schedule "E", including paragraph E.10. Part of paragraph E.10 addresses occupancy issues but it goes on to address title closing issues as well. If the defendant is unable to deliver a registrable transfer to the plaintiff within eighteen months after the "closing date" (which is defined by paragraph 2(a) as the occupancy closing date, and which may be later than May 1, 1990) then a mechanism is established to end both the occupancy license and the agreement. To the extent that paragraph E.10 addresses the ending of an occupancy license, it is compatible with the rest of the agreement. However, in addressing termination of the agreement itself if the defendant is "unable to deliver a registrable transfer" within eighteen months of the occupancy closing, it appears to state that it is permissible for the defendant to delay the title closing for eighteen months after the occupancy closing. This is clearly inconsistent with the provisions of paragraphs 2 and 21. It is also inconsistent with paragraph 24, which describes Schedule "E" as containing the terms of the occupancy license, and nothing more. To the extent that ambiguity arises from this apparent dilution of the defendant's obligation to convey title within 18 months of May 1, 1990, these words must be interpreted against the interests of the defendant and in a manner favourable to the plaintiff, pursuant to the "contra proferentem" doctrine. I conclude therefore that the defendant was obliged to complete the title closing on or before October 31, 1991.

There is no inconsistency between the sixty day notice period for termination of the occupancy license in paragraph E.10 and the termination of the agreement of purchase and sale on another date. The agreement distinguishes between occupancy rights and ownership interests and in addressing occupancy rights, paragraph E.10 provides the time necessary for a person in occupation to re-establish a residence.

[para10] Accordingly the motions judge gave summary judgment in favour of the plaintiff declaring that the agreement of purchase and sale ended on November 10, 1991, the date of receipt of Kratz's lawyer's letter asserting Kratz's right to abort the agreement. Parkside was ordered to return the plaintiff's payments. Parkside's counterclaim was dismissed with the exception of its right to claim occupancy payments for the period on and after November 1, 1991. Kratz was awarded his costs of the action and counterclaim which were fixed at $3,500. Parkside's motion for summary judgment was dismissed without costs.

Analysis

[para11] I agree with the motions judge that the "substance of the dispute arises" with the reference in para. 2(b) to para. 21. With respect, I disagree with his analysis of paras. 21, 24 and E.10.

[para12] Para. 21 does three things:

- (a) it limits delays up to the time of substantial completion to an aggregate of eighteen months from May 1, 1990;
- (b) in the event of such delays aggregating more than eighteen months, it terminates the agreement and provides for the repayment of the purchase money; and
- (c) in the event such delays do not exceed eighteen months, it provides for occupancy closing on substantial completion.

Although it is entitled "delays", para.21 deals only with delays in the period up to substantial completion. It does not contemplate delays of any kind beyond that stage and makes no provision for them. Para. 21 says nothing whatever about title closing and in my respectful opinion its language cannot be made to apply to title closing by placing a particular meaning on the word "aggregate". That word is referable only to "reasonable delays" (i.e. any reason other than the wilful neglect of the vendor) during the period up to substantial completion.

[para13] Unlike many agreements for the purchase and sale of condominiums, this one expressly contemplates the possibility of two closings (see inter alia paras. 2(a) and (b), 3(e),(f) and (g), 5, 7, 13, 24, 28 and 29). Para. 24 recognizes that substantial completion may occur before the condominium documents are registered. In that event, para. 24 requires the purchaser to pay the balance of the purchase price and to occupy the premises (in this case through a tenant). The occupation is to be in accordance with a licence as set out in Schedule "E" to the Agreement.

[para14] I do not agree with the finding of the motions judge that para. 24 "describes Schedule "E" as containing the terms of the occupancy licence, and nothing more". In my view, it does a good deal more than that. First, it contains a covenant by Parkside to register the Condominium Documents with all due diligence. Having regard to the other contents of para. E.10, this covenant is necessary. Without it, in a rising market, a builder could intentionally delay registration until the deadline for title closing had passed. He could then terminate the agreement and re-sell at a higher price.

[para15] The second thing para. E.10 does is to establish that deadline at a point eighteen months after the Closing Date. If Parkside is for any reason whatever unable to register the Condominium Documents within that eighteen months (and is therefore unable to transfer title to Kratz), either party may give notice terminating the agreement. Para. E.10 also provides that such notice would terminate the Occupancy Licence. It is not necessary to deal on this occasion with the question whether the notice must terminate both the Agreement and the Occupancy Licence.

[para16] Para. E.10 goes on to deal with giving up vacant possession and the accounting as between occupant and builder and with the purchaser's obligation to provide the vendor with a release from the agreement of purchase and sale.

[para17] It must be conceded that unlike para. 21, para.E.10 does not expressly grant an extension or extensions of time to Parkside. In my opinion, however, Parkside's right to such extension is a necessary implication of para. E.10. Without that implication, the second sentence of para. E.10 becomes meaningless. The length of the extension is limited to eighteen months. The commencement of any such extension is fixed by para. E.10 at "the Closing Date". "The Closing Date" is defined by para. 2 of the agreement as May 1, 1990 "or such extended or accelerated date pursuant to the terms hereof that the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the Purchaser". The premises were actually occupied on behalf of Kratz on February 25, 1991 and for the purposes of para. E.10 it would only make sense for February 25, 1991 to be "the Closing Date". If the eighteen month deadline set by para. E.10 began on February 25, 1991, it would not expire until August 25, 1992, almost ten months after Kratz's solicitor said that the agreement had been aborted.

[para18] The motions judge held that if para. E.10 purported to give the defendant another eighteen months after the occupancy closing within which to complete, this would be inconsistent with para. 2 and 21. In my opinion that is not so, provided para. 21 is read, as I think it must be, as applying only to the period up to substantial completion.

[para19] In my view, the agreement should be read and construed as counsel for Parkside suggests. I agree that the drafting of the agreement leaves a lot to be desired. Although the motions judge said that the parties agreed that it was "a standard form", counsel for the appellant said that that meant only that it was the form used by that builder for the whole building.

[para20] This is only one in a series of cases turning on the construction of particular forms for the purchase and sale of condominiums all of which have been inadequate and confusing to one degree or another. The standard agreements for the purchase and sale of houses are difficult enough for lay people to understand. Condominium purchase agreements such as these are virtually incomprehensible.

[para21] In coming to the conclusion I do, I note the following deficiencies, among many others, in the agreement:

- (1) The reference in para.2(b) to para.21 for the date for the transfer of title is wrong, misleading and unhelpful.
- (2) Despite its heading (Accelerated Closing), para. 13 deals with both accelerated and extended occupancy closing dates.
- (3) Despite its heading (Delays), para. 21 deals only with delays up to substantial completion.
- (4) Despite its heading (Terms of Occupancy Licence), Schedule "E" contains a great deal more than the terms of occupancy.
- (5) To use eighteen month periods for both pre-substantial completion delays and any post-substantial completion extension is to invite confusion.

[para22] In reaching his conclusion, the motions judge relied on the following statement of Estey J., speaking for the majority of the Supreme Court of Canada in Consolidated - Bathurst Export Limited v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Company, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888 at p. 901:

Even apart from the doctrine of contra proferentem as it may be applied in the construction of contracts, the normal rules of construction lead a court to search for an interpretation which, from the whole of the contract, would appear to promote or advance the true intent of the parties at the time of entry into the contract. Consequently, literal meaning should not be applied where to do so would bring about an unrealistic result or a result which would not be contemplated in the commercial atmosphere in which the insurance was contracted. Where words may bear two constructions, the more reasonable one, that which produces a fair result, must certainly be taken as the interpretation which would promote the intention of the parties. Similarly, an interpretation which defeats the intentions of the parties and their objective in entering into the commercial transaction in the first place should be discarded in favour of an interpretation of the policy which promotes a sensible commercial result.

[para23] In my view, it is not necessary to resort to contra proferentem in this case. Rather, it is a question of examining the language used with a view to making the most sense possible having regard to the intentions of the parties and the purpose of that agreement. Using that approach, it is my view that having regard to the actual occupancy closing on February 25, 1991, Parkside had until August 25, 1992 to transfer the title to Kratz. The condominium documents were registered on November 21, 1991 and Parkside was in a position to transfer title to Kratz on December 17, 1991. In view of his position, Parkside re-sold the property and counterclaimed for its loss on the sale as well as for unpaid occupancy fees.

Disposition

[para24] I would allow the appeal and set aside the judgment below and in its place grant summary judgment on the counterclaim. If the parties are unable to agree on the quantum of summary judgment in favour of Parkside, that matter is referred to the Ontario Court, General Division, for assessment. As the reason for this litigation is almost certainly the poor drafting of the agreement, I would deny Parkside its costs below but award it its costs in this court. AUSTIN J.A. OSBORNE J.A. - I agree. WEILER J.A. - I agree.

National Trust Company, applicant, and Grey Condominium Corporation No. 36, Roger Altobelli, Gino Alberelli, John Fehrenbach and G. Stone and Associates Inc., respondents And between Grey Condominium Corporation No. 36, applicant by counter-application, and National Trust Company, respondent by counter-application

95-14717 Court File RE-5161/95 Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Greer J. Heard: May 10-12, 1995. Judgment: July 10, 1995.

Counsel: A.I. Schein and L. Natale, counsel for the applicant. J.A. Raimondo and W.P. Burych, for the respondents. John Fehrenbach and Roger Altobelli in person. Gino Alberelli, in person, as a Director.

[para1] GREER J.:-- National Trust Company ("National") has become the registered owner of 35 of the 44 condominium units of Grey Condominium Corporation No. 36 ("Grey") in Collingwood, not because it had sought ownership of these units, but due to the problems the condominium unit owners were left with as the result of a badly built building, for which National was the principal lender. Out of this ownership have come untold problems between National and the remaining unit owners who claim to control the Board of Directors of Grey.

[para2] National has brought on this Application for a Declaration that the members of the Board of Directors of Grey are Dhiren Pandya, Al Bond and Paul Pratt ("the New Board") as of February 3, 1995. In the alternative, it asks for a Declaration that the Respondents, Roger Altobelli ("Altobelli"), Gino Alberelli ("Alberelli") and John Fehrenbach ("Fehrenbach") ("the Old Board") be required to call a Special Meeting of the Unit Owners for Grey within 30 days of the date of this Declaration for the purposes of removing the members of the Old Board and electing new Directors. It further asks that in the event this relief is granted, that a Declaration that National, as a unit owner of Grey, be entitled to vote all of its unit votes for any purposes including the removal and election of Directors and that any funds paid by National for common expenses and special assessments may not be used by the Old Board for any purpose until after the Special Meeting is called and held.

[para3] National further asks that if the new Directors take over the Board, that the Old Board be ordered to provide the New Board with all of the records of Grey which are in their care, control or possession, or in the alternative that it be ordered to produce for inspection, all such records. In addition, National asked for an order that G. Stone and Associates Inc. provide to the New Board all of the records of Grey which are in its care, control and possession, or in the alternative that it make these available for inspection by the New Board. Finally, it asks that Altobelli, Alberelli and Fehrenbach and the Old Board provide a full and detailed accounting to all unit owners of Grey, including itself, of costs paid or incurred by Altobelli and the Old Board with respect to legal fees and professional services.

[para4] In the Counter-Application, Grey asks for a determination as to whether National is presently an "owner" and/or "declarant" as defined in the Condominium Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.26, as amended, a determination as to whether National has the right to vote as a unit owner and whether it owes any fiduciary or other duty in the exercise of such rights to vote, whether a vote by National to remove the Old Board would be a breach of duty to the owners, a determination as to the requirements for a "quorum" of owners pursuant to the Act and By-Law No.1 of Grey, a determination as to the number of votes required to remove the Old Board pursuant to the Act and the By-Law, a declaration that the February 3, 1994 held by the New Board is invalid, a declaration that the New Board was not properly elected, a determination of National's rights to inspect the records, a declaration that the special assessment passed by the Old Board on December 2, 1994 is valid and an order compelling National to pay forthwith the balance of its share together with its common monthly expenses and a determination of the appropriateness of the Board's use of the Reserve fund to pay for certain costs and repairs.

1. Background

[para5] In 1989, National provided B.M.P. Sierra Lane Inc. ("BMP") with a $8.8 million loan for the construction of Grey. This loan was secured by a mortgage registered against the title to the land on which the project was to be constructed. BMP was the developer and subsequently, the declarant of Grey. National made various advances on this loan up to February 7, 1991 after which time the mortgage went into default.

[para6] In August, 1991, National reached an agreement with BMP and its principals wherein BMP transferred to National, by way of quit claim deed, the title to all units of Grey which had not been previously sold. This transfer was made in partial satisfaction of the debt owing to National under the mortgage. On August 7, 1991, National became the owner of 36 units. Prior to this, National also had gained title to 6 of the 8 units which had been sold. It currently holds mortgages on 5 of the original 6 it purchased and later sold.

[para7] Throughout 1991 and 1992, National sold and transferred title to 21 of its 36 units acquired from BMP to bona fide purchasers for fair market value. It had entered into 13 individual agreements of purchase and sale for those of the remaining 17 units when the Township of Collingwood issued a Stop Work Order in April, 1993 and all 13 proposed sales were aborted. In November, 1994, National began to repurchase the units it had previously sold, as the Township, in October of 1994, had issued an Order Prohibiting Use of Occupancy of Unsafe Building which prohibited the owners from occupying their units until certain repairs were made. At a unit owners' meeting, National offered to each owner who had purchased his or her unit from National, the option of having National purchase it back from each of them. Between November 4, 1994 and January 30, 1995, National repurchased 18 of the 21 units it had previously sold at prices not less than the owners had paid for them. In addition, it also purchased 1 unit from an owner who had bought from BMP.

2. The Board of Directors

[para8] There is an issue as to who constitutes the Board of Directors of Grey. From September, 1991 to and including February 18, 1993, 3 employees of National served as elected members of the 3 member Board. They resigned at the annual general meeting of the unit owners on February 18, 1993 and Albert C. Bond ("Bond"), an employee of National, and Roger Altobelli ("Altobelli") and Gino Alberelli ("Alberelli"), two of the individual owners were elected. In February of 1993, National only owned 17 of the 44 units.

[para9] Bond resigned as a Director on June 22, 1993 over differences with the other two Directors. Altobelli and Alberelli appointed John Fehrenbach ("Fehrenbach") in his place. Fehrenbach was not an owner of a unit but was the husband of a unit owner. These three constituted what I have referred to as the "Old Board" and they were in place until the controversial meeting of February 3, 1995 where they were allegedly replaced by the "New Board" of 3 new National employees. On February 8, 1995, Fehrenbach provided his resignation as a Director. One of the issues therefore is whether the Old Board can replace Fehrenbach and remain in place or whether the February 3 meeting called by National was proper thereby putting the New Board in its place, or if not, whether National can call a meeting to nominate a new Board.

[para10] The February 3, 1995 meeting was called by the Old Board after National, as a unit owner of greater than 15% of the units in the building, sent a letter dated December 19, 1994 requesting that a special meeting of the unit owners be held within 30 days of the date of service of the Requisition Letter. The meeting was to address the issue of the removal of the Old Board and the election of new Board members, and to address the issue of the common element insurance of the building. National agreed to the Old Board's request for a delay of the meeting and it took place on February 3. It ought to have been called by January 18, 1995. It is Bond's evidence that Altobelli requested the additional time in order to get all the files together to prepare for a smooth transfer to the new Board.

[para11] At the time of the meeting, National owned 35 of the 44 units, thereby having a 79.5% interest in the building. This translated into 91% voting rights. The meeting was held at 2200 Lakeshore Blvd. West in Etobicoke. National delivered proxies to Altobelli authorizing Pandya, Natale and Bond to attend and vote on its behalf at the meeting. In addition, National notified the mortgagors of those units of which National was the registered mortgagee, that it intended to exercise its right under the mortgages to vote at the meeting. Bond was given a proxy in this regard.

[para12] Altobelli told the meeting that there was no quorum to hold the meeting in accordance with By-Law #1. It was the Old Board's counsel's opinion that Article IV, section 6 of the By-Law required 33 1/3% of the owners to be present in person or represented by proxy and who were entitled to vote. He had taken the position that National's proxy holders were not so entitled given that National had not paid all its fees in connection with a Special Assessment which had been levied against the owners to pay for professional fees and certain repairs. Bond, on National's behalf, while not agreeing with this interpretation, did agree to pay the amount required. Altobelli then informed Bond that the Old Board had decided not to go ahead with the meeting, a decision that had been made, on Bond's evidence, less than an hour before the meeting was scheduled to begin, on the grounds that the Old Board intended to bring an Application to the Court seeking directions regarding the calling of the meeting by National and to determine National's rights.

[para13] National took the position that the Old Board was motivated by its own self-interest and determined that its proxy holders would hold their own meeting that day and posted a notice to that effect so that the Old Board was aware of its location at the Old Mill Restaurant at 7:00 p.m. This meeting was held with only National proxy holders present. Bond delivered a cheque together with a letter of guaranty for $70,000.00 payable to the condominium corporation for the special assessment to ensure that at least 50% of the units were in good standing to allow a vote to take place. The meeting elected Pratt, Pandya and Bond, all National employees, as the New Board with such election being recorded in Minutes prepared by the new Secretary of the Board.

[para14] Was the change of Board Directors legal? National takes the position that it is not a "declarant" or the successor or assignee of the declarant pursuant to s.1(1) of the Act which reads:

s.1(1) "declarant" means the owner or owners in fee simple of the land described in the description at the time of registration of a declaration and description of the land, and includes any successor or assignee of such owner or owners but does not include a purchaser in good faith of a unit who actually pays fair market value or any successor or assignee of such purchaser.

It is National's position that the transfer of the 36 units by BMP to it pursuant to their settlement respecting National's mortgage remedies and the partial forgiveness of the debt amounted to payment of fair market value for each unit. Paragraph 7 of the Agreement dated May 22, 1991, between BMP and National governs the delivery of the transfers. It reads in part:

Sierra Lane and National acknowledge and agree that the execution and delivery of the aforesaid transfer(s) is as further security for fulfilment of Sierra Lane's obligations to National in respect of its liabilities to National relating to the Project and the Property. Notwithstanding the foregoing, as long as Sierra Lane is in default of its obligations to National under this Agreement ..., National shall be entitled to realize upon such security by the registration of such transfer(s) ...

For greater certainty, the delivery of such transfer or transfers and/or the registration thereof by National shall not operate to reduce or diminish the liabilities and obligations of Sierra Lane to National relating to the Project, and the Property, including without limitation, under the Mortgage.

When the transfers were effected, National paid the appropriate Land Transfer Tax. An examination of the Affidavits so sworn under the Land Transfer Tax Act, R.S.O., c. L.6 shows the values ranging from $179,500.00 to amounts less than that, depending on the particular unit. I am satisfied that this put National in the position of a purchaser in good faith who purchased the units at fair market value. National is therefore not a "declarant" within the meaning of the Act.

[para15] Our Court of Appeal examined this test in Carleton Corporation No. 347 v. Trendsetter Developments, (1992) 9 O.R. (3d) 481 at p. 488 where it held:

In my view, once the payment of fair market value is determined, s. 1(1) of the Act requires a further determination of whether the transaction was a true sale rather than merely a transfer to a nominee, and whether there was any underlying intent which would be inimical to the purposes of the Act.

In my view, the transfer was a true sale, as opposed to a transfer to a nominee. When the mortgage monies were advanced by National to the builder, its security, in the form of the mortgage, had value which could be realized in the event of a default under the mortgage. Rather than exercise its right of power of sale under the mortgage and sell the units to an outside purchaser, National chose to reach a settlement with the builder in order to protect its security. Given the deficiencies in the construction of the building, it appears National made a business decision to protect its security by transferring the units to itself personally under the terms of the settlement, presumably to correct the deficiencies and then resell the units. It, in fact, did re-sell some of the units prior to the Township placing the Orders against the property.

[para16] The Trendsetter case, supra, confirms the position of a mortgagee at p. 491 as follows:

Following default under the mortgage and subsequent foreclosure, it became owner, not, through its capacity as declarant, but as mortgagee; thus it would become a bona fide purchaser for value of the unit, and would have the same right to vote as any other unit owner.

Nor, in my view, are there any facts which indicate an underlying intent by National inimical to the purposes of the Act. Trendsetter, supra, also notes at p. 488, that there is nothing in the Act which prohibits any individual from owning sufficient units to put her or him or it in control of the Board.

[para17] Section 22(1) of the Act states that voting by owners shall be on the basis of one vote per unit. Therefore, National is entitled to one vote for each unit of which it is the registered owner or mortgagee, notwithstanding that it may have obtained ownership of the unit through the BMP settlement or may have purchased it back from owners to whom they were sold by National, or purchased by it from an original owner. With respect to its right to vote as a mortgagee, see: Keyes v. Metropolitan Toronto Condominium Corp. 876, (1990), 73 O.R. (2d) 586 at p. 575. and Trendsetter, supra, at p. 492.

3. The calling of a Meeting

[para18] Section 19 of the Act governs the calling of meetings. It reads in part:

19.(1) The Board shall, upon receipt of a requisition in writing made by owners who together own at least 15% of the units, call and hold a meeting of the owners and if the meeting is not called and held within thirty days of the receipt of the requisition, any of the requisitionists may call the meeting, and in such case, the meeting shall be held within sixty days of the receipt of the requisition.

(2) The requisition shall state the nature of the business to be presented at the meeting and shall be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the address for service of the corporation.

When National sent the requisition to the Old Board, National owned at least 15% of the units. The Old Board was therefore obliged to call and hold the meeting within thirty days of the requisition, that is, by January 18, 1995. When Altobelli requested more time to get prepared for the meeting, National ought to have refused the request, and when the thirty day time period had lapsed, and if no meeting was held, National could have called the meeting and the meeting to be held within sixty days of the receipt of the requisition.

[para19] When the Old Board aborted the February 3, 1995 meeting, in my view, the members failed to exercise and discharge their duties honestly and in good faith. See: s. 24(1) of the Act and paragraph 11 of Article VI of By-Law #1. National, despite that it believed it did not have to pay any additional amounts, was prepared to pay sufficient monies under the special assessment to ensure that its ability to vote was not questioned. The Old Board was prepared to take the money but not to allow National's proxy holders to vote.

4. The Quorum

[para20] Section 18(3) of the Act governs the structure of a quorum at a business meeting. It reads:

18. (3) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, a quorum for the transaction of business at a meeting of owners is those owners present in person or represented by proxy owning 33 1/3 per cent of the units.

Audrey M. Loeb in Condominium Law and Administration, 2nd ed. points out at p. 40 that there are no other provisions in the Act which specify any other quorum requirement for a condominium meeting.

[para21] Section 3(5) of the Act states that the provisions of the Act prevail where there is an inconsistency between the Act or a declaration or a by-law of the condominium. Paragraph 6 of Article IV of Grey's By-Law governs what constitutes a quorum at a meeting. It reads:

QUORUM: At any meeting of owners, a quorum shall be constituted when persons entitled to vote and owning not less than thirty-three and one-third (33-1/3%) per cent of the units are present in person, or represented by proxy at the meeting.

The difference between the By-Law's definition and that of the Act is that the By-Law states that these persons must be "entitled to vote", a qualification not contemplated by the Act. Since this added qualification is not contemplated by the Act and is inconsistent with it, the Act applies. Altobelli should therefore not have taken the position that National's proxy holders could not vote at the February 3 meeting since they had not paid their proportion of the special assessment. It had paid, prior to the meeting, the proportionate share of the assessment for 6 units. Only 8 units, in total, had paid their proportionate shares. The meeting should therefore have gone ahead as requisitioned. If it had, the Old Board would have been replaced in an orderly fashion since s. 15(8) of the Act states:

Any director may be removed before the expiration of his or her term by a vote of owners who together own a majority of the units and the owners may elect, in accordance with the by-laws dealing with the election of directors, any person qualified to be a member of the board for the remainder of the term of the director removed.

Under this provision of the Act, had the meeting gone ahead, National, holding a majority of the votes, could have elected the New Board.

5. The new February 3, 1995 meeting

[para22] National takes the position that its election of the New Board at the 7:00 p.m. meeting at the Old Mill Restaurant is valid. That is not what the Act states. The Act contemplates the scheme which I have outlined in these Reasons. The posting of the notice on the door of the location where the original meeting was scheduled to be held, that another meeting was to be held at the Old Mill Restaurant, is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Act or the By-Law. Section 19(1) of the Act states that if the meeting is not called and held within thirty days of the receipt of the requisition, any of the requisitionists may call the meeting, and in such case, the meeting shall be held within sixty days of receipt of the requisition. [emphasis added]

[para23] Section 19(2) states that the requisition shall state the nature of the business to be presented at the meeting and shall be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the address for service of the corporation. [emphasis added]

[para24] The appropriate steps were therefore not followed even though technically National had more than 50% of the owners in the room. The proxy holders did not properly requisition the new meeting by following the appropriate steps in s. 19(1) and (2). It will now have to take such steps again, and if the Old Board does not call the meeting within the thirty days and hold the meeting, National may call it. In my view, it would serve the Old Board no purpose in trying to delay the inevitable transfer of Boards any longer and as soon as it is requisitioned by National, the meeting should be expeditiously called and the transfer take place.

5. Will the New Board owe a fiduciary duty to all unit owners?

[para25] One concern of the non-National unit owners, and of the Old Board, is how they will be treated if only National nominees form the Board. From listening to what Altobelli had to say on his own behalf when the Application and Counter-Application were heard, he, as, a purchaser from National, and current President of Grey, has concerns regarding a number of substantial overdue accounts for professional Services and repairs which were authorized by the Old Board. These were mainly performed before the Special Assessment of $149,999.96 was passed in December, 1994. It is clear from the Affidavit evidence submitted on behalf of National, that it did not approve of many of these expenditures including the costs associated with the installation of the Monitoring System and the cost associated with the Visca Report. The Old Board had authorized Visca to prepare a technical audit of the condominium and it was paid an undisclosed amount for this. Altobelli has a minor interest in the company A. Visca Architects Ltd., and this National saw as a conflict of interest, and it appeared that Altobelli wanted Visca to effect certain of the deficiencies as were set out in the technical audit. Altobelli, however, did not vote when the Board authorized the hiring of Visca. There was also a differing of opinion about the 8 foot fence which was erected around the building at the request of the Old Board.

[para26] If National does not pay its proportionate share of this Assessment for each of its units, prior to the election of the New Board, where is the money going to come from?

[para27] Will National become a fiduciary? I adopt the reasoning in Trendsetter, supra, that it will not. There the Court of Appeal held at p. 490 the following:

However, even if Mr. Assaly were subject to a fiduciary duty, it would not preclude his voting at meetings of unit holders. It would merely require that, in so doing, he vote in the interest of all unit holders, since it would be to all that he owed the duty, and not to a few. It is quite possible in this case that Mr. Assaly's interests correspond to those of the unit holders as a whole. There is no evidence of the views or interests of the unit holders as a group; the evidence merely indicates the opinion of some of the directors that Mr. Assaly would not vote in the interests of all unit holders.

Two potentially conflicting considerations are of importance in dealing with condominiums - the first, that condominiums are creatures of statute, and courts should be cautious about reading into the statute rights and duties which the legislature did not see fit to include; and the second, that condominium corporations, unlike business corporations, are made up of individuals who make their homes in the premises operated by the corporation, or whose tenants do, and the fate of the corporation is of vital importance to them in their everyday lives. The efficient operation of the building is in Mr. Assaly's interests, as well as in the interests of the other owners.

Thus, it can be seen that Altobelli, Alberelli and the other individual unit owners have an interest in how National will operate the condominium and how it will correct the deficiencies to make the units, which were intended in the beginning to be luxury homes as noted in Schedule A to the promotional brochure, setting out the so-called luxury features. The building presently cannot even be occupied by the owners.

[para28] The fiduciary issue was also examined in Ceolaro v. York Humber Ltd. (1994) 37 R.P.R. (2d) 1 at p. 73 where Winkler J. states:

The amendments to the Condominium Act were introduced to address problems faced by purchasers because of the inequality of bargaining power, and to protect them from unscrupulous developers. The Act provides a comprehensive scheme designed to protect consumers. On the facts of this case, to go outside that scheme and impose a broad fiduciary duty is not justified. The courts have seen fit in limited, well defined situations, within the rights conferred by the Act, to impose such a duty. In those cases, the purchasers were seeking enforcement of rights provided by the Act. Here the purchasers seek to establish rights beyond those provided in the Act. No authority has been proffered by the purchasers to support this extension, and I decline to do so.

I adopt the wording of Trendsetter, supra, and Ceolaro, supra, and hold that no such fiduciary duty exists. I am aware of the findings in Hodgkinson v. Simms [1994] 117 D.L.R. (4th) 161 with respect to new findings of fiduciary relationships (see: p.p. 168 and 169 and 175 and 176). In my view these principles do not apply to the case at bar, given that there is a statute, namely, the Condominium Act which strictly governs the rights of the parties.

7. The right to inspect the records

[para29] Section 21 of the Act states that the corporation:

... shall keep adequate records, and any owner or agent of an owner duly authorized in writing may inspect the records on reasonable notice and at any reasonable time. National has certainly put the Old Board on notice that it wishes to inspect the records. One of the reasons for the delay of the meeting which was eventually held on February 3, 1995, was Altobelli's request for an extension to allow him time to put the records in order.

[para30] The issue has been dealt with in McKay v. Waterloo North Condominium Corp. No. 23 (1992) 11 O.R. (3d) 341 at p. 351 where Cavarzan J. held:

Accordingly, it would not be within the powers of the board to cut down by by-law or resolution the scope of the rights conferred on owners by s. 21. The board cannot adopt a narrower definition of "records" than is provided by the Act, nor can it deny the right of an owner to make photocopies at his or her own expense. Access cannot be made subject to the board's approval.

There may be instances where someone's right to privacy and confidentiality overrides the right to freedom of information embodied in s. 21. No such concern is raised by the requests made by the McKays. It may well be that the board can properly limit access to the corporation's records in the case of privileged or confidential documents, but no such claim was advanced in this case.

In my view, in the case at bar, there is no question of privacy or confidentiality in any of the corporation's records. I therefore Order the Old Board and G. Stone and Associates Inc. to produce, within 10 days of the date of this Order, all such records in their care, control and possession for inspection by National at a location to be determined by National and they shall remain in the possession of National for not more than 15 days from the date of delivery so that they may inspect and copy whatever they so choose. These records shall include all invoices and accounts with respect to professional fees and all the corporation's banking documentation. If a member of the Old Board wishes to be present during the working hours when National's representatives are inspecting the records, they may make those arrangements with National. The records shall remain in the location so designated by National during the inspection period.

8. The Special Assessment [para31] I have made reference in these Reasons to the Special Assessment of approximately $150,000.00 passed by the Old Board. It wants an Order compelling National to pay its proportionate share. I have no power under the Act or at common law to make such an Order. The Old Board has its statutory remedies and its By-Law remedies and these must be followed by it. It also has its statutory remedies with respect to the payment of the common elements fees. Nor is it within my power on a Counter-Application to comment on the appropriateness of the Board's use of the Reserve fund to pay for certain costs and repairs.

[para32] The parties are already involved in protracted litigation. Some of these issues may be dealt with during that litigation. They are not, in my view, the proper subject of the Counter-Application.

9. Costs

[para33] If the parties cannot otherwise agree on costs, I may be spoken to.

Landmark of Thornhill Limited, plaintiff, and Elham Maleki-Yazdi, defendant

Court File No. 21196/91U Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) Flinn J. Heard: February 14-17 and 21, 1995. Judgment: March 20, 1995.

Counsel: Patricia M. Conway, for the plaintiff. Jeffrey D. Puritt and Hassan Fancy, for the defendant.

[para1] FLINN J.:-- On the 16th of October, 1988 the defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiff a proposed condominium unit known as suite 806 in building C of The Landmark of Thornhill, a three building condominium development. The agreement contained a number of schedules and a disclosure statement as required by condominium legislation. [para2] Closing was to be on the 31st day of March, 1991 but earlier closing was provided for.

[para3] In September 1990 Landmark notified the defendant of a probability of accelerated closing date and subsequently gave notice for closing January 22, 1991. On that date the premises were by Landmark's admission not fit for occupancy and on January 28, 1991 Landmark purported to extend the closing date to January 31, 1991. Subsequently on January 29 Landmark again extended the time of closing until February 28, 1991. The defendant refused to close and subsequently Landmark sold the condominium at a substantial loss and now sues the defendant for damages.

[para4] Landmark's position is that it was entitled to extend the time of closing for a period up to 18 months without the specific agreement of the defendant and that at all events either party was entitled to set a time for closing after the parties were not ready on January 22, 1991.

[para5] The defendant's position is:

(a) there was a fundamental breach of the contract committed by landmark when it was not ready to close on the 22nd day of January, 1991;

(b) that landmark had no right to extend the closing without the agreement of the defendant;

(c) that at all events it was at least entitled to a further 30 days' notice to close in accordance with the agreement of purchase and sale;

(d) that landmark did not tender on the 22nd day of January, 1991 nor, indeed, on the original closing date of March 31st, 1991; and

(e) that the premises were not ready for occupancy on either the 31st day of January, 1991 or the 28th of February, 1991 and therefore the defendant was not required to complete;

(f) that there were material misrepresentations by the real estate agent giving the defendant the right to refuse to close;

(g) that the plaintiff had waived completion by not tendering on February 28th or March 1st, 1991.

[para6] The damages claimed are substantial and brought about to some degree by a very substantial downturn in the purchase price for condominium units in the vicinity of Toronto which commenced in 1990 and continued through 1991, 1992 and 1993. The court took it from the evidence that inflation had theretofore been part of the condominium market inasmuch as the first two buildings in this development of landmark were sold out in a matter of days even before any excavation. The defendant in purchasing a condominium having a value at the time of purchase of $352,600 entered into the agreement of purchase of sale on the same day that she went to the sales office of Landmark on the site. The agreement of purchase and sale on page 1 in paragraph 2 is headed "Closing Date" and reads as follows:

2. a) The Purchaser shall occupy the Unit on the 31st day of March, 1991, or such date pursuant to the terms hereof that the Unit is substantially completed by the Vendor for occupancy by the Purchaser (the "Closing Date").

b) The transfer of title to the Unit shall be completed on the later of the Closing Date or a date established by the Vendor in accordance with paragraph 13 (the "Unit Transfer Date"). Title to the Unit shall be taken in the name of N/A.

[para7] Two other paragraphs are relevant to closing. Paragraphs 9 and 10 which are set forth as follows:

EARLIER CLOSING

9. This transaction of purchase and sale shall be completed on the Closing Date or any extension thereof as may be permitted under this Agreement, at which time vacant possession of the Unit will be given to the Purchaser.

The Vendor shall be entitled, upon giving at least thirty (30) days prior written notice to the Purchaser, to accelerate the Closing date specified in paragraph 2.a) hereof PROVIDED that the Unit is substantially complete and fit for occupancy on the earlier date specified in the Vendor's notice to the Purchaser.

DELAYS

10. In the event that the substantial completion of the Unit shall be delayed for any reason other than the wilful neglect of the Vendor, the Vendor shall be permitted reasonable extensions of time (or times) to substantially complete the Unit and the Closing Date shall be extended accordingly. If the Vendor shall be unable to substantially complete the Unit for occupancy within such reasonable extensions of time (or times) not exceeding eighteen (18) months in the aggregate, the deposit monies shall be returned to the Purchaser with interest as required by the Act and without deduction and this Agreement shall be at an end, and the Vendor shall not be liable to the Purchaser for any damages whatsoever. If the Unit is substantially completed for occupancy by the Closing Date or any extension thereof, the transaction shall be completed on that date and the Vendor shall complete any outstanding details of construction required by this Agreement within a reasonable time thereafter, having regard to weather conditions and the availability of labour and supplies. The Unit shall be deemed to be substantially completed when the interior work has been finished to permit occupancy notwithstanding that there remains other work within the Unit to be completed. The Purchaser acknowledges that failure to complete the common elements before closing shall not be deemed to be failure to complete the Unit.

[para8] Paragraph 23 of the document provides that time should of the essence of the agreement and there is an acknowledgment clause in section 23 in which the purchaser acknowledges and agrees that there is no representation, warranty, guaranty, collateral agreement or condition precedent, etc. etc. other than expressed in the agreement.

[para9] The defendant was required to pay the sum of $352,600: $5,000 by deposit, $30,260 within 60 days, $17,630 within 180 days and $17,630 within 365 days. The balance of $264,450 was to be provided for "on the Closing Date" by virtue of a vendor take-back mortgage. [para10] As pointed out in paragraph 2 the transfer of title might not take place until some time after the time of occupancy which was anticipated by the agreement to be an earlier date.

[para11] The defendant is a student at the University of Toronto. She already has a Bachelor of Science in microbiology and is presently working on her Bachelor of Science in chemistry. Her husband is a medical doctor on the staff of Women's College Hospital in Toronto where he is in the Department of Medicine and is the Co-ordinator for the I.C.U. unit at that institution. He is on the staff at the University of Toronto Medical School. They have two children, one born May 1987 and one in July 1989. At the time they entered into the agreement of purchase and sale they were residing with the defendant's mother and father and her sister in a home which the defendant and her husband owned. As well, they had purchased an older home in Thor which was being used as the defendant said, for investment purposes but as her husband said as part of a 10 year plan by virtue of which it would keep itself until they were in a position to raze the home and build their own. There was a desire on their part to establish accommodation for themselves in a condominium unit. The defendant says she was attracted to this unit by advertising and information at the site.

[para12] In the spring of 1990 they sold their home and thus were looking for a place to move pending the completion of their condominium unit. They applied to Landmark who after some negotiation rented them a unit in building A of the development.

[para13] The defendant and her husband both testified to the effect that they relied on the representations made by the realtor who was on site at the development. They both testified that they did not read any of the documents which they received save the first page of the agreement of purchase and sale. They claimed that there was misrepresentation by the real estate agent with respect to the building in that:

a) there was no wall protecting the project from the railway tracks running along the south boundary of the project as promised by the real estate agent and therefore no attempt to reduce the noise of the trains; b) that a representation was made by the real estate agent and by a building located on the model of the development to the effect that there would be a fitness or recreation club on Bayview Avenue in a location subsequently turned into a firehall;

c) that there was no internal security for building C as represented by the real estate agent;

d) that it was represented that in building C the standards would be substantially upgraded and that the premises would generally be owner occupied and not tenant occupied;

[para14] The defendant and her husband both said these were material misrepresentations which were untrue and were grounds for them not completing.

[para15] The real estate agent who was called did not remember the defendant nor her husband but testified that the only representations that he would make in selling a project such as this would be found in the disclosure statement because under the Condominium Act the purchaser had 10 days to revoke the offer. Presuming that the real estate agent made representation contrary to those found in the disclosure statement, they would expect the person to cancel the agreement. At all events he stated that the project was selling itself and that there was no reason to make any representations that were not in the disclosure statement and that it certainly was his practice not to do so. I preferred his evidence to that of the defendant and her husband.

[para16] It seems to the court that it is just not sufficient for persons with the education of the defendant and her husband to say that they did not read the documents which they received and acknowledged. The noise abatement proceedings taken by the developer are well documented in the disclosure statement. So is the position of the firehall and the description of the recreational and other amenities. The security system may not have been fully effective on the date of occupancy but it was and is operational. The fact that the market turned against condominium purchases and the premises may have had a greater number of tenants than originally anticipated is not a misrepresentation on the part of the plaintiff at the time of occupancy. I dismiss the defendant's claim that they are entitled to walk away from this agreement on account of misrepresentations as I find that there was no material misrepresentation either by the agent, or the plaintiff nor in the disclosure statement.

[para17] From the time of the agreement of purchase and sale the matter progressed in that all of the deposits required were paid. On November 30, 1989 the defendant made her choices of colour and material selection and subsequently on the 9th of October, 1990 she purchased an additional parking space for the sum of $12,000 upon which a deposit of $3,000 was made. The defendant testified that as well in December 1990 she purchased a special refrigerator which was to be held by the dealer pending closing.

[para18] On the 4th of August, 1990 the defendant entered into the tenancy agreement by virtue of which she rented suite PH10 at 7805 Bayview Avenue which was building A of the development in which she was to reside and she moved into these rental premises sometime near the 27th of August, 1990.

[para19] On September 6th, 1990 Landmark advised the defendant that construction was ahead of schedule and that occupancies would take place in the fall and early winter. An update of that notice was given on the 25th of September, 1990 indicating that interim occupancy was to commence on November 15th, 1990 on a floor-by-floor basis. This notice encouraged parties to communicate with their lawyer in order that matters would proceed.

[para20] On November 12th, 1990 an interim certificate of occupancy was given by the Town of Markham indicating that floors 6 to 10 had been completed for occupancy. The defendant's condominium was on the 8th floor.

[para21] On December 14th, 1990 solicitors nominated by the defendant were notified of the accelerated closing date of January 22nd, 1991. The solicitors submitted a number of documents to be completed by the defendant as well as a statement of adjustments.
